Subject: Giuliani op-ed on Estrada -- today's NY Post

AN UGLY STALL

By RUDOLPH GIULIANI

February 10, 2003 -- LET me share with you a great American success story.

A 17-year-old named Miguel Estrada immigrates to this country from Honduras, speaking only a few words of English. He attends Columbia College, making Phi Beta Kappa and graduating magna cum laude, then Harvard Law School, becoming editor of the Law Review.

Next, he serves as a clerk first to U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Amalya L. Kearse (a President Carter appointee), and then to Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. From there, he joins the Solicitor General's Office, serving as assistant to the solicitor general of the United States for a year under President George H.W. Bush and for four years under President Clinton.

Then Estrada becomes a partner in a prestigious private law practice - yet finds the time to perform significant pro bono service, including some four hundred hours representing a death row inmate before the Supreme Court.

In recognition of his special abilities and achievements, President Bush nominates Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. He is supported by no fewer than 16 Hispanic groups, who express enormous pride at the prospect of the first Hispanic joining one of America's most prestigious courts. Also supporting him are numerous prominent Democrats, including President Clinton's solicitor general and Vice President Gore's counselor and chief of Staff.

Sounds pretty good? Well, here's where this story runs the risk of a most unhappy - and unfair - ending.

For nearly two years, Senate Democrats have delayed action on the nomination of Miguel Estrada.

Citing no specific issues, Democratic senators vaguely alluded to Estrada being "way out of the mainstream." Others raised equally hollow charges - all of which have not only kept Estrada from getting the vote he deserves, but denied the American people of a talented and effective jurist.

Obviously, the fact that the Judiciary Committee was controlled by the Democrats until this year helped delay action. Last week, the committee finally voted to approve Estrada's nomination, hewing strictly to party lines. But now a few Democratic senators want to prevent a vote before the full Senate by way of a filibuster.

Despite all the racket, the knocks against Estrada are so easily dismissed that it is difficult to see them as anything other than a thin veil disguising his detractors' true motives. Let's take a look at them:

S*ome note that Estrada lacks judicial experience.* Yet five of the eight judges now on the D.C. circuit had no previous judicial experience - including Chief Judge Harry Edwards, who when President Carter appointed him in 1979 was even younger than Estrada is now. Indeed, several Supreme Court justices - including Byron White and Chief Justice William Rehnquist - had never been judges when they were named to the land's highest court.

Estrada no rookie. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court and was a highly respected Assistant U.S. Attorney in my old office, the Southern District of New York. And the American Bar Association unanimously gave him its highest rating - "well qualified," a designation that some of the very senators who now oppose him have called the "gold standard."

Some object that the Bush administration won't produce memoranda from Estrada in the Solicitor General's Office. Bear in mind the Solicitor General's function: His office represents the United States in court - in other words, the government is his client. Why would a client or his attorney choose to reveal their private and privileged communications?

The zeal to read a nominee's private memoranda seems to apply only to this nominee. Seven past nominees to the Courts of Appeals had worked in the Solicitor General's office - yet not one was asked to disclose attorney-client memoranda. And every living former Solicitor General - including Democrats Archibald Cox, Seth Waxman and Walter Dellinger - signed a letter to the Judiciary Committee stating that sharing these confidential memos would damage the Justice Department's ability to represent the United States before the Supreme Court.

Some civil-rights groups complain that in private practice, Estrada defended anti-loitering laws. In truth, he was retained by the Democratic City Solicitor of Chicago to defend the constitutionality of the anti-gang ordinances of Democratic Mayor Richard M. Daley.

Miguel Estrada brings a proven ability to work with others in a fair and constructive way, and his appeal is not limited to any set of ideological backers. President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, called his former colleague a "model of professionalism and "competence" and described his "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his "integrity." Ronald Klain, former Counselor to Vice President Gore, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent."

The Senate must fulfill its duty to consider the appropriateness of judicial nominees. But that "advice and consent" was never meant to empower special-interest groups to hijack the appointments of abundantly qualified, eminently decent nominees.

If senators who feel it's their right to let special-interest agendas derail Estrada, the judiciary will lose a wonderful opportunity. Far worse, the entire system will have fallen victim to narrow and misguided attempts to thwart the Constitution.

The stalling of Miguel Estrada's confirmation has been not only unseemly and demeaning, but a perversion of the system of judicial selection. It is also the escalation of a dangerous trend. In their first two years in office, Presidents Bill Clinton, George H.W. Bush and Ronald Reagan saw more than 90 percent of their nominees to federal appeals courts confirmed. In the first two years of this administration, the figure is barely 50 percent.

Some say that's because President Bush isn't nominating qualified individuals. But Miguel Estrada clearly puts the lie to that suggestion.

I urge the Senate to allow this worthy man a vote. I urge the Senate not to underestimate what a fair vote will mean to Hispanic all across America.

I feel certain the result will be a confirmation - another wonderful chapter in a true American success story.

Estrada worthy of appellate seat

Atlanta Journal Constitution

February 10, 2003

Miguel Estrada, a Harvard-educated lawyer who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, is well qualified for the federal appellate bench. Democrats, who are threatening to stall a vote on this confirmation, are choosing the wrong target.

In recent years, unfortunately, leaders in both parties have treated nominations to the federal judiciary as an extension of partisan politics rather than a serious constitutional responsibility. Nominations and confirmation debates should center on meritorious legal qualifications and performance.

President Bush himself has often failed to meet that standard. He sent a string of conservative ideologues to the Senate Judiciary Committee, and then used legitimate questions about their suitability for the bench as an inflammatory partisan theme during the last election.

Still, that is no reason for Democratic senators to play the same game. Estrada is no right-wing nut. The scholarly Latino lawyer, who came to this country at age 17 from Honduras, has earned respect for his intellect and his legal acumen.

While its true his lack of judicial experience has left no record for the Senate to examine, he would not be the first nominee to a high court in that position.

U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist had never served as a judge, either, though he had been an assistant U.S. attorney general during the Nixon administration. Estrada was an assistant U.S. solicitor general during the Clinton years.

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) and other members of the Judiciary Committee asked Estrada to submit nonconfidential legal memos from his days in the solicitor's office, which could shed light on his judicial philosophy; Estrada made a mistake in not producing those.

Still, the 41-year-old lawyer, whose confirmation is scheduled for debate on the Senate floor this week, should be approved for a post on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. There are some scary ideologues among the nominees that Bush has sent forward, but Estrada is not one of them.

Filibuster Threat On Estrada Does The Democrats No Honor

Published: Feb 8, 2003

Tampa Tribune

N ow that the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee cannot cynically distort the record of President Bush's appointments to federal appeals courts in an effort to block the nominations, they are threatening another maneuver - the filibuster.

Leading the charge are committee members picked by the Democratic leadership precisely because of their ideological bent. Until the new Congress was seated, they thought nothing of thwarting the constitutional mandate that gives the Senate - the full Senate - the advise and consent power over judicial nominations.

These are senators who have maliciously maligned Bush's nominees to cater to the left-wing base of their party, never mind that the lawyers and judges they have discredited and rejected or delayed have received the highest recommendation of the American Bar Association, the party's so-called gold standard.

Never mind that they have distorted the records of some nominees beyond recognition.

The Democrats claim they are concerned about protecting civil rights and liberties, about defending the right to abortion, about making sure there will not be another Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas on the court.

Currently their fangs are out for Miguel Estrada, a 41-year-old lawyer whose biography would thrill most champions of diversity. The native of Honduras moved to the United States as a teenager, learned English, succeeded in school, wound up at Harvard, clerked for Justice Anthony Kennedy and worked in Bill Clinton's Justice Department.

He has the enthusiastic support of, among others, Ron Klain, who helped run Al Gore's campaign in 2000.

Yet the Democrats claim they don't know enough about Estrada. They have demanded to see copies of his work in the Justice Department, intentionally seeking papers they knew to be confidential. Because Estrada did not turn them over, they have attempted to crucify him, this despite letters from former solicitors general complaining that their demand amounted to legislative overreach and that acceding to it would set a dangerous precedent.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, who occasionally shows some modicum of fair-mindedness, calls Estrada a cipher, and now committee members, because they didn't have the votes to deny him full consideration by the Senate, threaten to use the filibuster.

We suspect they will fail because some sane Democrats in the Senate, such as Louisiana's John Breaux, have said they would not support a filibuster. We hope that other moderates, like Florida's Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, come around.

Estrada needs only 50 votes for confirmation, but to stop a filibuster, the Republicans would need 60. So let the Democrats try if they dare. The judiciary was a major theme in the last election. Let's see how they will explain to voters how subverting the confirmation process with a months-long delay is in the public good.

JUDICIARY: Blocking Hispanics

If the system were functioning as the founders intended, Miguel Estrada would be confirmed quickly to the federal D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

He is extremely qualified in both education and experience -- and the American Bar Association unanimously awarded him its highest possible rating. Democrats have called the ABA rating their "gold standard" for evaluating judicial nominees. Estrada has been endorsed by previous administration legal officials and numerous Hispanic groups that normally support Democrats.

Estrada also has a compelling personal story, as an immigrant who arrived speaking virtually no English and a few years later graduated from Harvard law school.

Nevertheless, Democrats kept Estrada's nomination bottled up in committee until they lost the Senate -- and now may filibuster, hoping to prevent a floor vote they would lose.

Far-left interest groups don't question Estrada's qualifications. However, Rep. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., says Estrada isn't Hispanic enough. By that, he means Estrada is suspected of being insufficiently liberal. But, under his rules, Menendez wouldn't recognize most residents of Miami's "Little Havana" area as Hispanic.

Liberals worry that Estrada will prove himself worthy of someday becoming the first Hispanic on the U.S. Supreme Court -- a position that would make him, and perhaps his moderate philosophy, a role model for young Hispanics nationwide. They fear that might hurt them politically. The founders, however, tried to isolate the courts from politics.

Fanaticism will serve only to alienate the party further from the public.

A feckless threat to filibuster

Feb. 9, 2003 Orange County Register Editorial

Senate Democrats and liberal interest groups have adopted a despicable strategy of character assassination against some Bush administration judicial selections. The latest victim is Miguel Estrada, a well-qualified nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and potential Supreme Court nominee in the future. He is facing a possible filibuster from Democrats who do not even want his nomination brought to a vote.

In a less partisan atmosphere, Mr. Estrada would be a noncontroversial nominee to the appeals court. The Honduran-born attorney is, in the view of the generally liberal Washington Post, "well qualified for the bench" and someone who "should not be a tough case for confirmation." As the Post sees it, senators who disagree with his views should vote against him, but "should not deny him a vote."

So why the efforts to put together the rarely used filibuster? Why portray a man with a long, distinguished background as some sort of ideological radical? It's simply not so, and should be no surprise that a president would appoint federal judicial nominees who tend to reflect his own judicial views.

"Certain Washington interest groups," a senior White House official told us, want to oppose nominees with "a lack of stated support for certain positions." In other words, Mr. Estrada will not do what the left wants him to do: commit in advance to support the political positions they support. These "interest groups see judges as a means to an end," the official said, rather than as people who will rule based on the law and court precedents.

Consider the shallow arguments against Mr. Estrada. The National Organization for Women, a liberal interest group urging senators to "defeat the nomination of Miguel Estrada by any means necessary," could mainly come up with this issue from his background: "His troublesome record entering the hearing included having defended anti-loitering laws which have been shown to have a disproportionately negative effect on minorities."

This is an indictment? That he argued on behalf of an anti-gang ordinance supported by the Democratic mayor of Chicago?

Another point of contention by Democrats: Mr. Estrada didn't answer direct questions about his positions at a hearing. But the Democrats were playing a game of "gotcha," asking broad questions (Were there any Supreme Court cases with which you disagreed over the last 40 years?) designed to entrap the nominee into expressing a non-politically correct opinion. Then that opinion could be used as a rallying cry by Democrats who are looking for any excuse to stop the nomination with cries of "extremism." We don't blame Mr. Estrada for not falling into that trap.

As the White House official explained, Mr. Estrada is being held to a double standard. He answered the questions in the appropriate way that judicial nominees are supposed to answer questions - by talking about his qualifications rather than committing to certain positions.

Unfortunately, some liberal activists are playing the ethnicity card. Mr. Estrada has the backing of mainstream Hispanic groups, but some of the more liberal ones argue that he is not a "real" Hispanic because his views don't conform to their political views. This race-baiting is unseemly, and Democratic senators should rebuke it rather than tolerate it.

Mr. Estrada does not have a long record of political positions, but appears to hold a traditional, constitutional view of his role - that the judiciary should rule based on the law and not take "activist" positions to advance any particular political agenda, of the left or the right.

Regardless of one's leanings, a president deserves to have his nominees voted on before the full Senate, and not filibustered away.

Democrats should drop the filibuster idea, and let their colleagues vote on Miguel Estrada.

The Estrada Trap
Democrats talk themselves into a corner over Miguel Estrada.

ere's the latest on the battle over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a place on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals: When debate restarts in the Senate today, there will be a filibuster. If Democrats don't do it, Republicans will * sort of.

Debate began last week. On Wednesday, Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch talked and talked and talked about Estrada. Then ranking Democrat Patrick Leahy talked and talked and talked about Estrada. More debate was set for the next day.
But when Thursday came, Democrat Byron Dorgan went to the floor and asked for unanimous consent to talk about hydrogen-powered cars. Republicans graciously gave it to him. Then Democrat Patty Murray asked for unanimous consent to talk about asbestos. Republicans graciously gave it to her. Then Democrat Joseph Biden asked for unanimous consent to talk about North Korea. Republicans graciously gave it to him. It seemed like Democrats wanted to talk about everything except Miguel Estrada. (The only one who discussed the nomination was Minority Whip Harry Reid, and that was just for a few minutes.)

At the end of the day, the Republican leadership said to Democrats, We'll offer you six more hours of debate on Estrada, and then we'll have a vote. Democrats refused. No, no, no, they said, we need more time to talk about Estrada. So there was no agreement to limit debate * and no schedule for a vote.

Now, debate is starting up again. But this time, Republicans say, things will be different. If Democrats want to change the subject to hydrogen cars or asbestos or North Korea * or anything else to delay the matter at hand * Republicans will likely say no. You wanted more time to debate Estrada, they'll say, so we're going to debate Estrada. As one Republican puts it, "It's going to be all Estrada, all the time. We're not going to turn to anything else. We're just going to talk about Estrada."

At some point, Republicans will again ask for a vote. And if Democrats again say, No, no, no, we need more time to talk about Estrada, Republicans will answer: OK, you want to talk, let's keep talking. Let's keep talking through the afternoon. And into the night. And into the morning. And into the next afternoon. At some point, Republicans will again demand a vote. If Democrats do not agree, Republicans will suggest more talking.

What the GOP strategy amounts to is, in effect, a preemptive filibuster. Democrats have threatened a real filibuster to block the nomination, but some Republicans believe that threat is mostly bluff * that Democrats will not be able to muster the 41 votes they need to stop Estrada. So Republicans plan to force the issue this week.

If any GOP senators are wavering, they heard words of encouragement over the weekend from President Bush. Speaking at the Republican retreat in West Virginia, Bush thanked senators for "standing strong for this good nominee" and said: "I expect that [Estrada] will be given a fair hearing on the floor of the Senate. I expect the people of the Senate not to hold him up, not to try to talk his nomination into the ground, because Miguel Estrada not only represents the American dream, but will do us proud on the bench....And when the vote comes up, this guy is going to be confirmed."

AN UGLY STALL

By RUDOLPH GIULIANI

February 10, 2003 -- LET me share with you a great American success story.

A 17-year-old named Miguel Estrada immigrates to this country from Honduras, speaking only a few words of English. He attends Columbia College, making Phi Beta Kappa and graduating magna cum laude, then Harvard Law School, becoming editor of the Law Review.

Next, he serves as a clerk first to U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Amalya L. Kearse (a President Carter appointee), and then to Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. From there, he joins the Solicitor General's Office, serving as assistant to the solicitor general of the United States for a year under President George H.W. Bush and for four years under President Clinton.

Then Estrada becomes a partner in a prestigious private law practice - yet finds the time to perform significant pro bono service, including some four hundred hours representing a death row inmate before the Supreme Court.

In recognition of his special abilities and achievements, President Bush nominates Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. He is supported by no fewer than 16 Hispanic groups, who express enormous pride at the prospect of the first Hispanic joining one of America's most prestigious courts. Also supporting him are numerous prominent Democrats, including President Clinton's solicitor general and Vice President Gore's counselor and chief of Staff.

Sounds pretty good? Well, here's where this story runs the risk of a most unhappy - and unfair - ending.

For nearly two years, Senate Democrats have delayed action on the nomination of Miguel Estrada.

Citing no specific issues, Democratic senators vaguely alluded to Estrada being "way out of the mainstream."

Others raised equally hollow charges - all of which have not only kept Estrada from getting the vote he deserves, but denied the American people of a talented and effective jurist.

Obviously, the fact that the Judiciary Committee was controlled by the Democrats until this year helped delay action. Last week, the committee finally voted to approve Estrada's nomination, hewing strictly to party lines. But now a few Democratic senators want to prevent a vote before the full Senate by way of a filibuster.

Despite all the racket, the knocks against Estrada are so easily dismissed that it is difficult to see them as anything other than a thin veil disguising his detractors' true motives. Let's take a look at them:

S*ome note that Estrada lacks judicial experience.* Yet five of the eight judges now on the D.C. circuit had no previous judicial experience - including Chief Judge Harry Edwards, who when President Carter appointed him in 1979 was even younger than Estrada is now. Indeed, several Supreme Court justices - including Byron White and Chief Justice William Rehnquist - had never been judges when they were named to the land's highest court.

Estrada no rookie. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court and was a highly respected Assistant U.S. Attorney in my old office, the Southern District of New York. And the American Bar Association unanimously gave him its highest rating - "well qualified," a designation that some of the very senators who now oppose him have called the "gold standard."

Some object that the Bush administration won't produce memoranda from Estrada in the Solicitor General's Office. Bear in mind the Solicitor General's function: His office represents the United States in court - in other words, the government is his client. Why would a client or his attorney choose to reveal their private and privileged communications?

The zeal to read a nominee's private memoranda seems to apply only to this nominee. Seven past nominees to the Courts of Appeals had worked in the Solicitor General's office - yet not one was asked to disclose attorney-client memoranda. And every living former Solicitor General - including Democrats Archibald Cox, Seth Waxman and Walter Dellinger - signed a letter to the Judiciary Committee stating that sharing these confidential memos would damage the Justice Department's ability to represent the United States before the Supreme Court.

Some civil-rights groups complain that in private practice, Estrada defended anti-loitering laws. In truth, he was retained by the Democratic City Solicitor of Chicago to defend the constitutionality of the anti-gang ordinances of Democratic Mayor Richard M. Daley.

Miguel Estrada brings a proven ability to work with others in a fair and constructive way, and his appeal is not limited to any set of ideological backers. President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, called his former colleague a "model of professionalism and "competence" and described his "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his "integrity." Ronald Klain, former Counselor to Vice President Gore, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent."

The Senate must fulfill its duty to consider the appropriateness of judicial nominees. But that "advice and consent" was never meant to empower special-interest groups to hijack the appointments of abundantly qualified, eminently decent nominees.

If senators who feel it's their right to let special-interest agendas derail Estrada, the judiciary will lose a wonderful opportunity. Far worse, the entire system will have fallen victim to narrow and misguided attempts to thwart the Constitution.

The stalling of Miguel Estrada's confirmation has been not only unseemly and demeaning, but a perversion of the system of judicial selection. It is also the escalation of a dangerous trend. In their first two years in office, Presidents Bill Clinton, George H.W. Bush and Ronald Reagan saw more than 90 percent of their nominees to federal appeals courts confirmed. In the first two years of this administration, the figure is barely 50 percent.

Some say that's because President Bush isn't nominating qualified individuals. But Miguel Estrada clearly puts the lie to that suggestion.

I urge the Senate to allow this worthy man a vote. I urge the Senate not to underestimate what a fair vote will mean to Hispanic all across America.

I feel certain the result will be a confirmation - another wonderful chapter in a true American success story.

Hi Brett,

As part of the overall and continuous process of ethics training, we are in the process of creating crib sheets, along with corresponding wallet size cards, on various topics. If a crib sheet is double sided the corresponding wallet size card is a summary of the material, as opposed to a reprint of the crib sheet, due to the size constraints of the card.

Emory Rounds (a fellow detailee) and I have roughed out a draft Hatch Act crib sheet using some of your previous guidance along with other general material. Since the Hatch Act is in your portfolio and expertise, Nanette, Emory and I would appreciate your input and comments. As you know, it is difficult to cover a lot of points in limited space so we wanted to hit some key points that would be applicable to all White House staff while sending a clear message of the importance of the Hatch Act.

A particular point that we would greatly appreciate your comment on is in the third bullet from the bottom. We are thinking of replacing the words " pending White House matters" with " matters pending before the Administration." As always, your guidance and input is greatly appreciated. The wallet size cards allow for 21 lines per side so there is still room to add a short bullet point or two. Thank you.

Bryant

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (HATCH ACT) GUIDANCE

- An activity or event is "political" if it is conducted for a partisan election or campaign, or for a political party. Classify an event as "political" or "official" objectively, not based on any possible political ramifications. If speaking at an official event, you may not expressly advocate a candidate's election.
- Subject to prohibitions such as those on improper use of an official title and solicitation of contributions, you may vote, participate in political organizations and campaigns, make political contributions and attend fundraisers, and serve as a political party officer or as a political convention delegate.
- You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions; host a political fundraiser; or, regardless of your government position, conduct political fundraising on government property.
- However, if (and only if) you are a staff member whose government duties are "24/7", i.e., continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post, you may engage in political activity—such as party or campaign related meetings or telephone calls—while on duty, or in a government building or vehicle, so long as it does not interfere with official duties. But, the political entity must pay any non-incidental costs associated with such activity.

- You may speak at a political fundraiser, and be listed on the event invitation as a speaker or guest, but your official government title may not be used either on the invitation or during your introduction.
- You may not use your official authority to interfere with or affect the result of an election, or to coerce any person to engage in political activity.
- You may not travel on corporate or private aircraft for political trips, but you may travel on a charter aircraft leased by a political entity.
- You may not promise government employment or any other benefit in exchange for political activity; threaten employment loss for political activity; or solicit or accept anything of value to obtain public office for another.
- You may not solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from a subordinate employee or from a company with pending White House matters.
- Beware of the government e-mail system; a widely circulated message seeking support for a candidate may violate the Hatch Act. Each case depends on its own facts, but act with caution and discretion when using government property.
- Penalties for violations include suspension or removal from office, and possible criminal penalties under various statues (depending on the violation).

Subject: Adios Mis Amigos

Friends,

My time here is coming to an end. Friday, February 14th is my last day and I didn't want to miss the opportunity to say goodbye to each and every one of you. This has been the most memorable two years of my professional life for many reasons, one of which is the chance to work alongside such wonderful people. Many of you were incredibly kind to me during my recuperation from surgery and I will never forget your prayers, support and friendship.

I'm just hopping over to HHS, and for a short time, will temporarily head up the President's HIV and AIDS council, but look forward to some form of communication with you all as I continue working on the President's healthcare agenda.

I haven't confirmed my direct phone number at HHS yet, but can be reached on my cell (202/246-6384) if there are White House issues that need my assistance or you just want to drop a line. My home info remains the same and I truly look forward to the occasional call. Please don't be strangers.

Continue to take care of yourself and the President. I have never met and worked with a better group of people.

Blessings to all,

Josephine

What they,re saying about:

Judicial Nominees

Atlanta Journal-Constitution (02/10/03): &Miguel Estrada, a Harvard-educated lawyer who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, is well qualified for the federal appellate bench. Democrats, who are threatening to stall a vote on this confirmation, are choosing the wrong target.8

Detroit News, editorial (02/10/03): &The level of obstruction his nomination has faced has been truly extraordinary. Michigan Sens. Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow -- who are running their own vendetta in blocking four Bush nominees to the Court of Appeals in Cincinnati -- shouldn't be a part of it. That would be an insult to their Hispanic constituents. Estrada should have his nomination put up for an ordinary vote, as have all of his predecessors. If he loses, fair enough. But a filibuster would signal an unreasonable posture by Democratic senators that could have long-term -- and damaging -- consequences for how business is conducted in the U.S. Senate.8

SFGate.com, op-ed by Adam Sparks (02/10/03): &A cabal of the usual suspects -- abortion rights advocates, enviro-activists, civil rights groups and organized labor -- is attacking President Bush's nomination choices for the federal bench. Do these groups all share the same board of directors? They all march in lockstep. What they have in common is that they don't like independent judges who won't toe the Democratic Party line.8 SFGate.com is the website run by the San Francisco Chronicle.

Orange County Register, editorial (02/09/03): &Senate Democrats and liberal interest groups have adopted a despicable strategy of character assassination against some Bush administration judicial selections. The latest victim is Miguel Estrada, a well-qualified nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and potential Supreme Court nominee in the future. He is facing a possible filibuster from Democrats who do not even want his nomination brought to a vote. In a less partisan atmosphere, Mr. Estrada would be a noncontroversial nominee to the appeals court.8

Tampa Tribune, editorial (02/08/03): &We suspect [that Democrats threatening to filibuster Estrada] will fail because some sane Democrats in the Senate, such as Louisiana's John Breaux, have said they would not support a filibuster. We hope that other moderates, like Florida's Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, come around. Estrada needs only 50 votes for confirmation, but to stop a filibuster, the Republicans would need 60. So let the Democrats try if they dare. The judiciary was a major theme in the last election. Let's see how they will explain to voters how subverting the confirmation process with a months-long delay is in the public good.8

Florida Times-Union (02/08/03): &Liberals worry that Estrada will prove himself worthy of someday becoming the first Hispanic on the U.S. Supreme Court -- a position that would make him, and perhaps his moderate philosophy, a role model for young Hispanics nationwide. They fear that might hurt them politically. The founders, however, tried to isolate the courts from politics. Fanaticism will serve only to alienate the party further from the public.8

St. Louis Post-Dispatch, editorial (02/07/03): &In short, the Democratic position doesn't justify a filibuster. Instead, Democrats should reach out to Republicans and try to develop a bipartisan truce that gives judges prompt, but thorough, hearings that will speed the important process of filling the many vacancies on the federal bench.8

Pittsburgh Post-Dispatch, editorial (02/07/03): &This tit-for-tat is bad for the courts, including the Supreme Court. And it's risky for both parties. By using judicial appointments to shore up its base, the White House gives credence to Democratic claims that all Bush nominees are extremists. And by seeming to oppose every Bush appointment, Democrats risk being accused of crying wolf when a truly extreme nominee is proposed. A truce is in everyone's interest.8

Rochester (NY) Democrat and Chronicle, editorial (02/07/03): &The Democrats know Estrada's legal record, and it's a good one. To suggest that he needed to answer the questions to establish his credentials is disingenuous. There's more than enough known about Estrada for an up-or-down floor vote. A filibuster could make partisanship history - never before has the Senate prevented a lower-court confirmation via filibuster. The Democrats have a duty to ask tough questions and to base their votes on the answers, or lack of them. But they also have a duty to live by the final tally - not delay its taking with divisive filibuster.8

War with Iraq

Fresno Bee, editorial (02/10/03): &Reports that the Bush administration is developing plans for the possible use of low-yield nuclear weapons in pre-emptive strikes against underground targets in Iraq are raising concerns in Washington. (Understandably, the administration believes it must adapt national security strategy to new circumstances in which those who threaten this country have no compunctions about using the most terrible means in pursuit of their aims. But if Bush expands a dubious pre-emptive strike policy to include the use of nuclear weapons, he would increase the likelihood that the nuclear anarchy the world has avoided for a half-century would flourish.8

The Budget

Springfield (MA) Union-News & Sunday Republican, editorial (02/10/03): &A White House plan to make it easier for workers to save more of their money without incurring taxes was unveiled several days before the delivery of the fiscal 2004 budget, in part, so that the proposal would not be buried beneath the avalanche of documents that make up the new spending plan. (Those who are thinking ahead to retirement or are worried about funding their children's college education or families simply planning for a rainy day would all have reason to cheer the set of plans to increase tax-free savings. (The plan could well increase savings by simplifying what is currently a complex web of plans. That's indisputably good. But it is focusing on only a part of the picture: those with money to save in the first place. The administration, especially in the current economy, needs to take a serious look at proposals that would have an impact on everyone else, as well.8

Savannah Morning News, editorial (02/10/03): &When the White House released the president's fiscal 2004 budget proposal last week, it included a record projected deficit of $307 billion -- a steep reversal of the budget surpluses the country briefly enjoyed around the turn of the century. The reasons for the deficits are largely the inverse of how we achieved the surpluses. A booming economy and a nation at relative peace in the mid-1990s fueled a massive increase in federal revenues. The economic slump and 9/11 combined to turn the black ink into a sea of red. (The economy and war are by no means the only reasons for the bigger budget. The White House proposes increasing non-defense, discretionary (non-entitlement) spending by 4 percent, a figure likely to jump after congressional appropriators get their hands on it. In a time of impending war with Iraq (and an ongoing war on terrorism), Mr. Bush clearly has refused to concede much in domestic spending. He has made defense a (worthy) priority but failed to make cuts elsewhere to offset war-related spending.8

Iowa State Daily, editorial (02/10/03): &On Feb. 3 President Bush laid out a $2.23 trillion budget for the coming fiscal year. The proposed budget outline is set to plunge the United States in to the deepest debt it has ever seen, bottoming out at a $307 billion deficit. This even tops former President Bush's record of $290 billion, set back in 1992. The new budget calls for roughly $500 million for NASA spending, a rise set prior to the Columbia tragedy. Also included in the bill is a 7.6 percent increase in non-defense-related homeland security, a $15 billion increase in military spending and hundreds of billions in tax cuts. (All in all, Bush's budget is fundamentally flawed. Forcing the country deeper in to debt, without even factoring in action in Iraq, could cause the worst economic downturn this country has seen since the sock market crash of 1929 and the ensuing Great Depression. Hundreds of billions in tax cuts are not the answer to the country's current recession, especially when the cuts benefit those who do not even really need the money.8

AIDS

New Haven Register, editorial (02/10/03): &The president,s proposal offers the first real hope for saving millions in sub-Sahara Africa. About 28.5 million people are infected with the AIDS virus, but only 20,000 to 30,000 Africans are receiving anti-viral drug treatment. It is estimated more than 4 million need immediate treatment if their lives are to be saved or prolonged. (America,s obligation to help the world,s needy is an important and long-standing element of U.S. foreign policy. It deserves recognition as antiwar protesters denounce what they consider an ugly America.8

Environment

St. Paul Pioneer Press, editorial (02/10/03): &When President Bush says he wants to put your money on development of hydrogen-fueled cars as a key environmental initiative for years far down the road, he diverted attention from here-and-now options to reduce pollution, dependence of foreign oil and build jobs in corn and soybean states like Minnesota and Wisconsin. (The administration could actively back moving American hybrid cars to market more quickly and supporting local programs like the hOurCars initiative here that will bring hybrids for hourly rental into urban neighborhoods. Hybrids, propelled by a combination of gasoline and electricity, are poised to reach critical mass in the American market. (The administration has resisted reasonable increases for average fuel economy standards in vehicles * the single most effective tool for reducing foreign oil dependency. The administration should support higher average fuel economy standards.8

Medicaid

Boston Herald, editorial (02/10/03): &The costly Medicaid program is busting federal and state budgets alike and having a former governor in the big office down at the federal Department of Health and Human Services trumpeting reform can be a real plus when states are facing huge budget shortfalls and have to grapple with burdensome federal mandates. (Bush promises an additional $13 billion over seven years, but whether this is a net benefit to Massachusetts depends on which states get the bulk of the new money and that will be determined by a formula which in turn will be determined by the legislative process in Congress. Inevitably, a congressional formula fight means regional politics - and power - will come into play. New England, traditionally a generous, but high-cost, provider of health care to the poor could lose out in a formula fight dominated by more powerful regional interests in Congress.8

What they're saying about:

Judicial Nominees

Atlanta Journal-Constitution (02/10/03): "Miguel Estrada, a Harvard-educated lawyer who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, is well qualified for the federal appellate bench. Democrats, who are threatening to stall a vote on this confirmation, are choosing the wrong target."

Detroit News, editorial (02/10/03): "The level of obstruction his nomination has faced has been truly extraordinary. Michigan Sens. Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow -- who are running their own vendetta in blocking four Bush nominees to the Court of Appeals in Cincinnati -- shouldn't be a part of it. That would be an insult to their Hispanic constituents. Estrada should have his nomination put up for an ordinary vote, as have all of his predecessors. If he loses, fair enough. DRAFT
4:00 P.M.

May 21, 2002

Dear Chairman Lieberman:

When we first spoke about the request of the Committee, I told you that the White House would cooperate to make appropriate information available to the Committee. I confirmed our cooperative approach in my letter to you of April 19, stating that we &support the Committee,s objective8 and would &assist the Committee by taking reasonable steps to gather certain information for the Committee.8

Since then, we have done so. As I wrote you on May 16, we already have taken numerous steps to gather information requested by the Committee. We are gathering and reviewing documents. We are gathering and reviewing e-mails. We are gathering and reviewing visitor entry records. We are interviewing individuals with relevant information. And we are preparing to respond soon to assist the Committee,s inquiry in a time frame we had originally discussed with your staff.

We respectfully believe, therefore, that the Committee would be acting precipitously -- and in a manner inconsistent with the traditional inter-Branch accommodation process -- by issuing a subpoena at this juncture in the inquiry.

The Committee,s approach also is in tension with the case law. The D.C. Circuit has held that Congress seldom needs a &precise reconstruction of past events8 in order to legislate. Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 732 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc). And even when Congress has authority to inquire, it may not intrude unduly on presidential prerogatives or demand all information within the scope of a presidential privilege. Rather, a committee must establish that &the subpoenaed evidence is demonstrably critical to the responsible fulfillment of the Committee,s functions.8 Id. at 731.

Most important for present purposes, the case law recognizes that, as here, there may be inter-Branch disputes about whether Congress has a sufficient predicate and, if so, whether it is unduly intruding on Executive Branch prerogatives. The case law recognizes, in particular, that the respective interests of the two Branches may conflict when Congress seeks to inquire into the activities of the Executive Branch -- especially when it seeks to inquire into activities of the Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President. As the D.C. Circuit has stated:

The framers . . . expect[ed] that where conflicts in scope of authority arose between the coordinate branches, a spirit of dynamic compromise would promote resolution of the dispute in the manner most likely to result in efficient and effective functioning of our governmental system. . . . [E]ach branch should take cognizance of an implicit constitutional mandate to seek optimal accommodation through a realistic evaluation of the needs of the conflicting branches in the particular fact situation. . . . The Constitution contemplates such accommodation. Negotiation between the two branches should thus be viewed as a dynamic process affirmatively furthering the constitutional scheme.

United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 567 F.2d 121, 127, 130 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (emphasis added).

Consistent with this case law, we have taken extensive steps to accommodate the Committee,s request, as detailed above and in my letter of May 16. We have done so notwithstanding our doubts whether certain aspects of the Committee,s request are within the proper scope of its legislative authority and our further concerns that the Committee may be seeking to intrude inappropriately into the deliberative processes of the President and his advisors, particularly with respect to Presidential appointments and development of policy.

We respectfully do not believe that the Committee has similarly engaged in the process of dynamic compromise and optimal accommodation. In our meetings with you and your staff, the Committee has not attempted reasonably to clarify, define, prioritize, or otherwise accommodate our attempts to seek reasonable clarifications of the Committee,s request. The Committee,s failure to reasonably define its request is a factor that has affected the timing of the Committee,s receipt of information. We nonetheless have gathered substantial information and would be prepared soon to submit appropriate information to the Committee.

Your May 16 letter states that you would not seek a subpoena this week if I can assure you:

(1) [we] will promptly take steps to broaden the search along the lines discussed above and in the Committee,s May 3 letter in order to obtain all information sought in the Committee,s March 27 letter, and (2) [we] will provide the Committee all information sought in the Committee,s March 27 letter by the end of May.

As to your first condition, we believe we can satisfy you by submitting the Enron surveys to all employees of the Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President. We contacted your staff on May 17 to offer the accommodation of circulating the survey to all such employees if you would withdraw the threat to seek a subpoena. We have yet to hear your response.

As to your second request, we think your demand premature. It would be irresponsible, in my judgment, for my Office to commit in advance to provide information to Congress before we have reviewed it to assess whether disclosure would be inconsistent with the effective operation and long-term institutional prerogatives of the Presidency. Let me emphasize, however, that we have no intention of unnecessarily provoking a confrontation with the Committee. We simply believe it unusual and inappropriate for a congressional committee to threaten a subpoena simply because the President,s counsel has not committed in advance to provide the Committee every shred of information -- no matter how sensitive to the Presidency, no matter how extraneous to the Committee,s inquiry.

In sum, I respectfully suggest that you reconsider and withdraw the threat of a subpoena until, at a minimum, you can review the information we intend to provide soon to the Committee.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Miguel Estrada Nomination

Denying Mr. Estrada an Up-or-Down Vote Would Set a Dangerous Precedent

> "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would . . . object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported . . ."
> — Senator Leahy, Congressional Record, June 18, 1998

> "I do not want to get [to] having to invoke cloture on judicial nominations. I think it is a bad precedent."
> — Senator Leahy, Congressional Record, September 16, 1999

If press reports are to be believed, some Senators are contemplating a dramatic change to the Senate's treatment of the President's judicial nominees — a new requirement that nominees to the nation's courts must receive at least 60 votes in order to be confirmed. If Senators do filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, and if that filibuster results in the nomination being rejected, Democrats will have forced a permanent change to the political and constitutional landscape. Never again could a President fairly expect a judicial nominee whose nomination reaches the Senate floor to receive an up-or-down vote, and never again would the Senate minority party fear that blocking a judicial nominee by partisan filibuster was unprecedented. If the Estrada nomination is permanently blocked by filibuster, the political baseline shifts forever.

To understand just how stunningly extraordinary this state of affairs is, one needs to examine the Senate's record of confirming judicial nominations. The first filibuster of a judicial nominee that resulted in a cloture vote was in 1968. Since then, the Senate has confirmed approximately 1,600 judicial nominations — the vast majority (nearly 1,500) without even a roll call vote, as most are confirmed by unanimous consent.[1] Indeed, of those some 1,600 judicial nominations confirmed by the Senate since 1968, only fourteen underwent a cloture vote. And with the exception of the bipartisan 1968 filibuster of Abe Fortas's nomination to be Chief Justice of the United States, the Senate has never blocked by filibuster a judicial nominee to any court.

What follows is an account of all past debates over judicial nominees which required cloture votes. The history establishes a consistent, bipartisan resistance to taking the step that some Democrats are contemplating today.

The Bipartisan Fortas Filibuster

Judicial nominations have been especially contentious since the days of the Warren Court (1954-1969). Nowhere has that controversy been more pronounced than for nominees to the nation's highest court. In particular, Supreme Court nominees such as Abe Fortas, William Rehnquist, and Clarence Thomas all faced considerable opposition in the Senate during their confirmations. Yet despite this controversy, only Justice Fortas's nomination to be Chief Justice in the tumultuous summer of 1968 caused the Senate to filibuster and block confirmation.

President Lyndon Johnson nominated Associate Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice in June 1968. A bipartisan coalition of Senators soon formed to oppose Justice Fortas's elevation. The reasons were varied. Some opposed the nomination because Justice Fortas often joined the "progressive" Earl Warren wing of the activist Supreme Court. Other Senators opposed Fortas because of his admission before the Judiciary Committee that he remained involved in White House political affairs even while serving on the Supreme Court, including advising the President regarding the Vietnam War and recent race-riots in Detroit. When it was discovered that Justice Fortas had accepted $15,000 (more than $75,000 in 2001 dollars) from controversial sources to teach a nine-week academic course, support further deteriorated. Yet as the heated 1968 election season continued, some Democrats were wary of defeating Fortas if that meant leaving the nomination to soon-to-be-President-elect Richard Nixon.

Nevertheless, bipartisan opposition to Fortas's elevation was substantial, and a filibuster ensued. The filibuster itself was controversial, as some Republicans such as Nixon himself believed that Fortas should receive an up-or-down vote as a matter of principle. Senators persisted, and an October 1 cloture vote failed by a margin of 45-43. Twenty-four Republicans and nineteen Democrats voted against the cloture motion – with ten Republicans and thirty-five Democrats in favor of cutting off debate. President Johnson then withdrew the nomination.[2]

The Effect of the Fortas Filibuster on Future Supreme Court Battles

After the Fortas filibuster, the Senate rejected outright two of President Nixon's nominees to the Supreme Court, Clement Haynsworth (45-55) and G. Harold Carswell (48-51). But neither nominee faced a filibuster attempt despite the close votes. The Fortas affair is, therefore, especially important for what it did not lead to: a pattern of blocking by filibuster controversial judicial nominees.

That refusal to block nominees by filibuster is most dramatic and important in the context of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court nominations that most divided the Senate since the Haynsworth and Carswell defeats were those of William Rehnquist (1972 and 1986) and Clarence Thomas (1991). Rehnquist's nomination to be Associate Justice provoked considerable controversy and division within the Senate, but he nonetheless received a full Senate vote after but a few days' debate.[3] The same was true in 1986 when he was nominated to become Chief Justice.[4]

During Clarence Thomas's hard-fought nomination battle of 1991, outside activist groups urged Justice Thomas's Senate opponents to filibuster the nomination, but Senate Democrats such as then-Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden and leading Thomas opponent Senator Howard Metzenbaum balked.[5] Future Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy publicly "declared himself 'totally opposed to a filibuster,' adding, 'We should vote for or against [Thomas].'"[6] No filibuster was attempted, and Justice Thomas was confirmed, 52-48.[7]

As is well known, President Clinton's nominations of both Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen Breyer sailed through the Senate with minimal debate and no filibusters. Justice Ginsburg was confirmed 96-3 and Justice Breyer was confirmed 87-9.[8]

Lower Court Nominees Have Never Been Blocked by Filibusters

Given the Senate's general unwillingness to filibuster nominees – even Supreme Court nominees – it is unsurprising that the Senate has never blocked by filibuster a nominee to any lower court. Furthermore, the Senate has never blocked — by a partisan filibuster — any judicial nominee. (Recall, the only successful rejection-by-filibuster was the aforementioned case of Justice Fortas, which was bipartisan.). Thus, there is no historical example of a filibuster conducted solely by one party that denied the President his judicial nominee.

During Democrat control of the Senate during 2001-2002, only 17 Bush circuit court nominees reached the floor for votes. In three of the cases where they did — the nominations of Julia Smith Gibbons, Richard B. Clifton, and Lavenski R. Smith — cloture petitions were filed and the motions easily carried. However, none of those cloture votes was responding to a genuine effort to filibuster a nominee. Rather, cloture petitions were filed as a Senate time-management device (Gibbons, Clifton) or in response to a small number of Senators who wished to force the cloture vote to draw attention to another issue unrelated to the nominee (Smith).[9]

Floor Debates for President Clinton's Judicial Nominees

Despite a Republican majority during six years of President Clinton's term, no judicial nominee was ever deprived of a vote on the Senate floor due to a floor filibuster of the nomination.

Many Senators may recall the controversy over President Clinton's nominations of Martha Berzon and Richard Paez to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Although most Republican Senators opposed their confirmations, the majority of Republican Senators also opposed any effort to prevent the full Senate from voting on their nominations. Debate on each nomination lasted only one day, and a majority of Republicans joined all Democrats in supporting cloture petitions for debate on each nomination — including over 20 Republicans who would eventually vote against confirmation, and a majority of the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee.[10] In neither case did Republicans mount a party-line filibuster effort to prevent voting on a nominee. Indeed, Majority Leader Lott filed the cloture petitions for the above debates.

The situation was similar in 1994 when some Republicans voiced objections to President Clinton's nomination of H. Lee Sarokin to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. A majority of Republicans supported a cloture petition after a relatively brief period of debate, and cloture was invoked by a vote of 85-12.[11] Judge Sarokin was then confirmed by a vote of only 63-35.[12]

The only judge nominated by President Clinton who faced a partisan filibuster was that of Brian Theadore Stewart, a nominee to the federal district court in Utah. However, it was Senate Democrats who filibustered the nominee in protest over purported delays in bringing other judicial nominees to the floor. A cloture petition was voted upon on September 21, 1999 and failed (by falling short of 60 votes) by a vote of 55-44, with all Democrats except Senator Moynihan opposing cloture.[13] But once again, Democrats' objection was not to Judge Stewart himself, and on October 5, 1999, the Senate confirmed him by a vote of 93-5.[14]

In the case of Judge Smith, Senator Feingold stated on the floor that he opposed cloture in order to slow down the confirmation of nominees whom Republicans supported until a nominee to the Federal Election Committee was confirmed. Congressional Record (July 15, 2002).

Those opposing cloture for the Berzon debate were Senators Allard, Brownback, Bunning, Craig, DeWine, Enzi, Gramm, Helms, T. Hutchinson, Inhofe, Murkowski, Shelby, and B. Smith. Senator Frist joined the same group in opposing cloture for Paez.

For all the hand-wringing about the "treatment" of President Clinton's nominees, one thing is clear: every nomination taken up for debate on the floor received an up-or-down vote.

Democrats' Failed Filibusters of Reagan and Bush Judges

Even when Democrats attempted to filibuster Republican Presidents' judicial nominees, those efforts were still unsuccessful, as a substantial majority of Senators resisted using the partisan filibuster as a means to block judicial nominations.

When President Bush nominated Edward Carnes to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit in 1992, many Democrats opposed the nomination on the merits, in particular because of his past prosecution of death penalty cases. Aware of this opposition, the Senate agreed by unanimous consent to two days of debate with a cloture vote to follow.[15] The debate proceeded, the cloture motion carried by a vote of 66-30, with 24 Democrats joining 42 Republicans to close the debate.[16] The Senate proceeded immediately to confirm Judge Carnes by a vote of 62-36.[17]

A similarly close cloture vote occurred in March of 1986 when the Senate considered President Reagan's nomination of Sidney Fitzwater to be a federal district court judge in Texas. Many Democrats opposed Judge Fitzwater on the merits and after a few days' debate, Majority Leader Dole filed a cloture motion which, by unanimous consent, was to be voted on the next day the Senate was in session.[18] That cloture petition prevailed, 64-33, with the support of 12 Democrats.[19] The Senate proceeded immediately to confirm Judge Fitzwater by a vote of 52-42.[20]

The only other judicial nominee of President Reagan's to face a cloture vote was J. Harvie Wilkinson to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Many Democrats opposed the nominee and filibustered the nomination. An initial cloture motion failed on July 31, 1984

(57-39) because some Senators argued that additional information had arisen since Judge Wilkinson's original Judiciary Committee hearings and that further investigation was necessary. Judge Wilkinson returned to the Judiciary Committee on August 7, his nomination was returned to the floor of the Senate, and a second cloture motion prevailed on August 9 by a vote of 65-32. The Senate then proceeded immediately to confirm Judge Wilkinson by a vote of 58-39.[21]

It is apparent that Democrats historically have been more willing than Republicans to vote against cloture petitions and to attempt to prevent votes on Republican judicial nominees. However, it is important to note that even in the cases above, many Democrats found the filibuster process inappropriate in the judicial nominee context and insisted upon full Senate votes.

Stephen Breyer's 1980 Nomination

Senators, led by Republican Gordon Humphrey and Democrat Robert Morgan of North Carolina, filibustered the nomination of Stephen Breyer to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in late 1980. Their objection was not to Mr. Breyer's qualifications — indeed, this is the same Stephen Breyer currently serving as a Supreme Court Justice — but to the process by which he was nominated and reported to the full Senate. The Senators argued that the Judiciary Committee had improperly reported out Mr. Breyer's nomination without proper committee approval and without regard to many other earlier-nominated persons waiting for hearings. After forcing the Judiciary Committee to reconvene and approve the nominee through proper procedures, the Senate invoked cloture, 68-28, and confirmed Mr. Breyer, 80-10.[22]

This history demonstrates that while some nominees have been filibustered and cloture petitions filed in those and other situations, the only nominee ever to have been defeated or withdrawn after a filibuster was Abe Fortas in 1968. Even key Democrats who opposed Republican nominees voted for cloture. So, if a partisan filibuster of Miguel Estrada resulted in his nomination being defeated, it would be unprecedented.

Senate Democrats Voice Opposition to Filibusters of Judicial Nominees

A partisan attempt to block Mr. Estrada's nomination by filibuster would contradict the repeated and emphatic statements of Democrats who have served for a long time in positions of special responsibility. Consider the past comments by Senators regarding judicial and executive nominees:

- Senator Leahy (past Judiciary Chairman and current Ranking Member): "If we want to vote against somebody, vote against them. I respect that. State your reasons. I respect that.

[22] Votes 512 and 513, 96th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1980). This controversy was complicated by the fact that Mr. Breyer was Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee at the time.

But don't hold up a qualified judicial nominee. . . . I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would . . . object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty." (Congressional Record, June 18, 1998.)

· Senator Leahy: "I have said on the floor, although we are different parties, I have agreed with Gov. George Bush, who has said that in the Senate a nominee ought to get a [floor] vote, up or down, within 60 days." (Congressional Record, October 11, 2000.)

· Senator Daschle (Minority Leader): "As Chief Justice Rehnquist has recognized: 'The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' An up-or-down vote, that is all we ask for [Clinton judicial nominees] Berzon and Paez." (Congressional Record, October 5, 1999.)

· Senator Biden (past Judiciary Chairman): "But I also respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated ought to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor. . . . It is totally appropriate for Republicans to reject every single nominee if they want to. That is within their right. But it is not, I will respectfully request, Madam President, appropriate not to have hearings on them, not to bring them to the floor and not to allow a vote . . . ." (Congressional Record, March 19, 1997.)

· Senator Kennedy (past Judiciary Chairman): "The Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court said: 'The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' Which is exactly what I would like." (Congressional Record, March 7, 2000.)

· Senator Kennedy: "We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote. If our Republican colleagues don't like them, vote against them. But give them a vote." (Congressional Record, February 3, 1998.)

· Senator Feinstein (Judiciary Committee member): "A nominee is entitled to a vote. Vote them up; vote them down." (Congressional Record, September 16, 1999.)

Absent from any of the current debate over Miguel Estrada is any explanation as to why he should be denied the floor vote that every one of President Clinton's judicial nominees who reached the floor received.

This Nomination Does Not Justify Escalating the Nomination Conflict

The rejection of Abe Fortas to serve as Chief Justice of the United States marked the first and only time the Senate has rejected a President's judicial nominee by way of a filibuster. Yet, Miguel Estrada presents none of the concerns that caused a bipartisan coalition of Senators to block Justice Fortas's elevation to Chief Justice. Mr. Estrada is an outstanding nominee fully qualified for this judgeship who has committed to enforce the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, not to interpose his personal political views into his jurisprudence. The American Bar Association unanimously gave him its highest rating of "well-qualified;" and Democrats such as President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, and Vice President Gore's attorney, Ron Klain, have praised his intellect, judgment, and integrity.

But the stakes here are much greater than the fate of a single judicial nominee. At issue is whether the Senate should reinterpret its constitutional advise and consent obligation to require 60 rather than 51 votes to confirm a judicial nominee. This is a position that the Senate has never taken in the context of lower court nominees, and Republicans especially have eschewed. To adopt this new standard would fundamentally alter the balance of power between the Executive and the Senate in the judicial confirmation process and would seriously erode the comity that generally has existed between the two branches in the past.

The Loyalist

With devotion to the president and the office, Alberto Gonzales '82 tackles the complications and controversies of the White House counsel's job

by Lewis Rice

Alberto Gonzales

Alberto Gonzales '82 (in his West Wing office) advises President Bush on all legal issues concerning the president and the White House.

Alberto Gonzales '82 was back in Texas not long after he left for his first job outside his home state. He stood at the front of a lecture hall at Rice University, where as a youngster he had sold soft drinks in the football stadium. Now it was his alma mater, and he was a local boy made good, made famous even. And he spoke about who had made him good, who had made him famous. He was answering a question he gets a lot, about who his heroes are, and he answered it--at least at first--in a way a lot of people do. Though he had more reason than most to choose as heroes his parents: natives of Mexico with little education or money, who raised eight children in a two-bedroom house and, he noted, not once asked for help from the government. But he also called his boss a hero. It may sound self-serving, he said, but that doesn't make it untrue. For he has seen his boss, who happens to be the president of the United States, not only as an employer, but as a statesman, a father, a friend, a mentor.

That admiration and respect for George W. Bush infuse everything Gonzales does in a job that is as unpredictable as it is demanding: the White House counsel, the lawyer for the president and for the presidency, a person with an imprint on almost everything that originates from the seat of executive power. The job has catapulted Gonzales to the center of attention and contention on such issues as judicial nominations, Iraq and executive privilege. It is the fourth time he has taken a job at the behest of Bush, his fourth once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, he says. And the Washington chatter indicates that it may not be the last: Gonzales, many say, is a leading contender to fill the next vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court. Such talk is flattering, Gonzales says, but he has enough to worry about now.

He painstakingly outlines those concerns in his speech, listing nine responsibilities of the job, including vetting people appointed to work in the White House, drafting legislation, monitoring litigation in the Department of Justice, developing policy, offering legal advice on national security matters and chairing the White House judicial selection committee. Then there are the responsibilities that can't be anticipated, of which he's had many.

Sometimes the job seems to entail, more than anything, responding to the crisis of the moment, he says in an interview with the Bulletin. He's there in the meetings that drive the White House operation, answering legal questions when they come up. And there are times when he practices very little law. But his most crucial function, he says, is simply to be there for the person at whose pleasure he serves.

"For me, the most important part of this job is being able to work for this president based upon my relationship with him, and that is what makes this job so special for me--being able to help him in an extraordinarily difficult time," said Gonzales. "It is a tremendously burdensome position. Everything that I say, everything that I do publicly, is monitored, is analyzed, is cataloged away for future reference."

Put another way, the job can be "one damn thing after another," as a White House counsel for Ronald Reagan once described it. But that's not the kind of language or tone Gonzales would use; during a visit to his West Wing office, he shows why people who work with him call him "the judge," a formal title from his stint as a Texas Supreme Court justice but also an affectionate description of a courtly manner: polite, soft-spoken, reflective. He describes himself as mild-mannered, as do those who know him. But that mildness should not be mistaken for weakness, nor should his lack of wordiness be taken as lack of conviction, says Viet Dinh '93, who has worked closely with Gonzales as head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy.

"He is a very effective leader because he has a quiet resolve--he provides leadership and does it through consensus rather than steamrolling," said Dinh. "Any fear that his consensus is not backed by leadership is misplaced because behind the congenial operating manner is a very clear vision and very good leadership style."

That style has helped him negotiate the many shared responsibilities of the Justice Department and the counsel's office, says Dinh, who crafted the USA Patriot Act and credits Gonzales as "critical to its passage." Just as they did to everyone else in the administration, the attacks of 9/11 turned Gonzales' focus to anti-terror measures and thrust him into the debate over a possible war with Iraq. Over the summer, the counsel reportedly advised the president that congressional approval was not required to take action against Iraq. But on the same day in October that the president would sign the joint congressional resolution authorizing him to use force against Iraq if necessary, Gonzales would rather talk about the drafting of the language in the counsel's office and the series of meetings with staff and leadership in Congress that led to agreement. The point, said Gonzales, is that the president decided to go to Congress to get authorization. And he got it done.

President Bush followed byKaren Hughes and Gonzales

President Bush returns to the White House on Sept. 11, 2001, followed by Karen Hughes, then White House counselor, and Gonzales.

Gonzales will always credit the president first, not least for leading him to the place he is today. Many people with much more privileged backgrounds don't get the same opportunities, but he has, he says, because one person believed in him.

"I owe all that, really, to the president," said Gonzales. "Sometimes life works out that way; there is really no good explanation. All you can do is prepare yourself, get a good education, get good training, and the next time the next George W. Bush comes along, you're there and you're ready, and that person could turn the tables for you."

Gonzales began the training for his career after serving in the U.S. Air Force, attending the Air Force Academy and getting his bachelor's degree from Rice. He had never seen Harvard Law School before arriving as a student in the summer of 1979. That first day, he remembers riding a 10-speed bike and parking in front of Langdell Hall, and feeling joy and pride and even awe at being a part of such a place. But soon enough came another feeling, one not as often associated with students at HLS. He felt comfortable. It helped that he was older than many other students, and it helped to realize that it wouldn't be the end of the world if he didn't make straight A's (which was a good thing because he didn't). He hung around with a group of students who shared his feeling of calm and feeling of good fortune, people who knew they would get great jobs, were there to learn but also to enjoy themselves. They knew the world, eventually, would come to them.

It did to Gonzales in the form of an offer from Vinson & Elkins in Houston. He worked there on corporate transactions, aiming for partnership. He even declined a job offer from George H.W. Bush to serve in his administration in Washington. It was a low-level position, and Gonzales saw better opportunities ahead if he stayed and made partner.

He proved himself on a public offering that took half a year and involved local counsels in more than a dozen states, according to Robert Baird '69, a partner at Vinson & Elkins. Gonzales was a "get-the-job-done kind of guy," said Baird, working hard and showing sound judgment. Just as important, however, was the way he did it.

"Being the kind of gentleman that Al is," he said, "is probably the most effective way to approach the situation, because most corporate transaction projects are projects where different constituencies with different interests are working together toward a common end, and there is a lot of persuasion involved. So if you get everybody on your team and you get everyone working in parallel, the transaction goes so much more smoothly. I think Al, with his personality, is superb at that. And I would guess that quality is extremely important in the kind of arena that he is playing in now."

Gonzales eventually did make partner and made a good living at it. So some people questioned whether it really was a better opportunity when Texas Gov. George W. Bush, then a political newcomer, asked him to serve as his general counsel at the recommendation of local attorneys. But he wanted to do something different, wanted to go into public service and, though he didn't know Bush well then, saw his chance to do something important. After three years in the counsel job, he went on to serve as Texas secretary of state and a justice on the Supreme Court of Texas. Over the years, Gonzales says, he and Bush have built a good relationship. The president, he says, is comfortable with his style of providing advice. One of the first things Bush did after he became president-elect was ask Gonzales, with his wife and three boys, to come with him to Washington. Gonzales didn't really need to think about it. "I am not sure that there will ever be a job that I would say 'no' to, if he asked me to do it," he said.

The words "first" and "Hispanic" cling to Gonzales in life and on the page. They are used in the typical summary of him: the first Hispanic White House counsel, the first Hispanic partner at his firm, a leading candidate to become the first Hispanic justice on the Supreme Court (though, depending on how one defines the term, Benjamin Cardozo, a Sephardic Jew of Portuguese descent who served on the high court from 1932 to 1938, may actually have been the first Hispanic justice). Throughout Gonzales' career, he has belonged to Hispanic organizations, serving as president of the Houston Hispanic Bar Association and chairman of the Republican National Hispanic Assembly of Harris County, Texas. In 1999, the Hispanic National Bar Association gave him the Latino Lawyer of the Year award.

His heritage is important to him and also important to a president who has emphasized including people of all backgrounds and ethnicities in his administration, Gonzales says. When the White House counsel wrote an op-ed in the Washington Post in September advocating for Miguel Estrada's ('86) confirmation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit (the confirmation was stalled in committee last year), he noted that Estrada "is an inspiration to Hispanics and to all Americans." Many people do feel special pride in seeing someone who looks like them in positions of prominence, he says.

"It is true that, for some Americans, they couldn't care less that I am Hispanic, doing this job. What they care about is that the job gets done right," he said. "But I am always very mindful that for another segment of the population, there is a special pride that someone named Gonzales is advising the president of the United States on legal issues."

But he also is quick to note that there is no Hispanic way to judge a case or to do a job, and that, while it pleases Bush when a well-qualified person may also happen to be Hispanic or another minority, merit will always be the priority for the president. Gonzales agrees, and that's why he says he doesn't concern himself with debates on whether he got this far because of his heritage. It's what he has done with the opportunities that matters, he says.

Judging that, of course, may depend largely on what you think of what President Bush has done in office. Gonzales doesn't like to talk about the advice he's given to the president, but he has helped guide Bush through legal questions surrounding the war on terrorism, such as military tribunals and detaining suspects without counsel. Tribunals, Gonzales said, "would provide basic rights to terrorists, but they would be structured in a way which would ensure the continued protection of the national security of this country." And in every war this country has fought, he says, people have been detained without access to a lawyer, even if they are American citizens. "I think legally we are right, and that will be confirmed in the courts," said Gonzales. "[But] maybe we need to do a better job of educating the American public about what we are doing here and the need for that course of action."

Though his office tries to find ways to allow the president to do what he believes needs to be done to protect the country, there are times, Gonzales says, when he has to tell the president what he doesn't want to hear. An effective White House counsel is one who can say "no" to his boss. That has happened occasionally, particularly on questions of executive privilege. People have criticized the secrecy of this White House, but that charge is leveled against most administrations, he says. The White House has released most documents that Congress has requested, Gonzales says, and has reached agreement on releasing some disputed records, such as those detailing the administration's contacts with Enron. In addition, the president may want to turn over communications that, in the opinion of his counsel, should be privileged, and his counsel doesn't hesitate to advise him that he shouldn't. "My job is to protect the institution of the presidency, and so, in that case, my job is to make the president understand that 'by doing this, Mr. President, you'll weaken the institution of the presidency,'" said Gonzales. "This president has great respect for that institution, so when someone tells him that it weakens it, he considers that very, very seriously."

Gonzales also advises the president on the judiciary, an institution of government that he fears has been weakened by the Senate's failure to fill a number of vacancies. Indeed, by the end of November the Senate had confirmed only about half of Bush's circuit court nominees, while it confirmed a much higher percentage for recent presidents in their first two years in office. The dearth of confirmations and the long delays in hearings for many nominees are frustrating, he acknowledges. Particularly unfortunate, he says, was the failed 5th Circuit nomination last year of Priscilla Owen, with whom he served on the Supreme Court of Texas. (In January, she was renominated to the appeals court.) Her critics cited Gonzales' own words in an abortion case, in which he characterized Owen's interpretation of a statute as an "unconscionable act of judicial activism," as evidence of her unfitness for the court of appeals. But disagreement, he notes, should not mean disqualification, a point he made in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Earlier last year, he cited the judicial issue as one key reason that the Republicans needed to take back the Senate in the fall elections. Before the Republican victory, in fact, came to pass, Bush and his counsel unveiled a proposal that would streamline the judicial confirmation process. The initiative calls for the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination and for the full Senate to vote on each nominee within 180 days after the nomination is submitted. "All Americans would see a more dignified process and have their federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and their liberties," Bush said. "And the vacancy crisis would be resolved once and for all."

At its core, the wrangling over judicial nominees exemplifies a fundamental disagreement on what makes a person qualified for the job, according to Gonzales. "That person should come to the bench with no personal agenda to follow," he said. "Certain Democrats on the Judiciary Committee believe that judges do come with a personal agenda. . . . [They] ask, 'What are your personal beliefs about an issue?' because they believe that that is going to impact your decision making as a judge. I think that that is wholly inappropriate; I think it is wrong for a judge to pursue a personal agenda, and their own personal beliefs, in my judgment, are wholly irrelevant to how they should do their job as a judge."

He believed the same when he was a judge. And he has been criticized for it by people in his own party, as in the abortion case in which he differed from Owen. In that opinion, he ruled with the majority to overturn a lower court ruling, thereby allowing a minor to have an abortion without parental consent. In doing so, he was following the law, not his own values, he wrote: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the Court's decision may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the Legislature."

That deference to legislative intent pervaded Gonzales' time on the bench, according to Supreme Court of Texas Chief Justice Thomas Phillips ' 74. For example, Gonzales' opinion in another case, Fitzgerald v. Advanced Spine Fixation Systems, reads as a "paean to strict statutory construction," he said.

Gonzales' decisions "show an equal disdain for activism, regardless of what side of the political spectrum it comes from," Phillips said. "I never saw anything inconsistent on that, and I never had any sense that he was casting any votes based on whether somebody--a former employee, a contributor, a friend who was governor or anybody else--would approve or disapprove."

On the court, Gonzales was soft-spoken, not confrontational, said Phillips: "He tried to prevail through reason rather than intimidation." Perhaps it is a testimony to that style that the case Phillips cites to praise his former colleague is one in which he took the opposite side.

Kenneth Starr's book about the Rehnquist court, "First Among Equals," lies on a shelf outside Gonzales' office on the day of the interview. Whether Gonzales will be a member of that court is a topic of much speculation. But of course no one who has any say in the matter, least of all Gonzales himself, is talking about it. Viet Dinh, who helps recommend judges to the president, was asked what he would think of a candidate for the Supreme Court with Judge Gonzales' credentials. He laughed and laughed at the question, and he didn't stop laughing until he said goodbye.

Such talk is not a distraction to Gonzales at all, he says. There is nothing he can do about it, and he is a person who focuses on what he can do. But he does worry about something, on top of the worries inherent in his current role. He wonders what he will do next after his job in the White House is done, what will be as exciting and satisfying. After all, how many once-in-a-lifetime opportunities can one person have?

I like the idea, but think we can condense and clarify some. Although clear to us, people will read only if very simple. Organizationally, I think the bullets should be re-ordered as #2, #4 (and re-phrased accordingly), #1, #5, #3 and then the rest. I would delete last two bullets. We need to add that all political activity of commissioned officers should be cleared with OPA and WHC.

Subject: Hatch Act Crib Sheet

Hi Brett,

As part of the overall and continuous process of ethics training, we are in the process of creating crib sheets, along with corresponding wallet size cards, on various topics. If a crib sheet is double sided the corresponding wallet size card is a summary of the material, as opposed to a reprint of the crib sheet, due to the size constraints of the card.

Emory Rounds (a fellow detailee) and I have roughed out a draft Hatch Act crib sheet using some of your previous guidance along with other general material. Since the Hatch Act is in your portfolio and expertise, Nanette, Emory and I would appreciate your input and comments. As you know, it is difficult to cover a lot of points in limited space so we wanted to hit some key points that would be applicable to all White House staff while sending a clear message of the importance of the Hatch Act.

A particular point that we would greatly appreciate your comment on is in the third bullet from the bottom. We are thinking of replacing the words " pending White House matters" with " matters pending before the Administration." As always, your guidance and input is greatly appreciated. The wallet size cards allow for 21 lines per side so there is still room to add a short bullet point or two. Thank you.

Bryant

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (HATCH ACT) GUIDANCE

- An activity or event is "political" if it is conducted for a partisan election or campaign, or for a political party. Classify an event as "political" or "official" objectively, not based on any possible political ramifications. If speaking at an official event, you may not expressly advocate a candidate's election.
- Subject to prohibitions such as those on improper use of an official title and solicitation of contributions, you may vote, participate in political organizations and campaigns, make political contributions and attend fundraisers, and serve as a political party officer or as a political convention delegate.
- You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions; host a political fundraiser; or, regardless of your government position, conduct political fundraising on government property.
- However, if (and only if) you are a staff member whose government duties are "24/7", i.e., continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post, you may engage in political activity—such as party or campaign related meetings or telephone calls—while on duty, or in a government building or vehicle, so long as it does not interfere with official duties. But, the political entity must pay any non-incidental costs associated with such activity.

- You may speak at a political fundraiser, and be listed on the event invitation as a speaker or guest, but your official government title may not be used either on the invitation or during your introduction.
- You may not use your official authority to interfere with or affect the result of an election, or to coerce any person to engage in political activity.
- You may not travel on corporate or private aircraft for political trips, but you may travel on a charter aircraft leased by a political entity.
- You may not promise government employment or any other benefit in exchange for political activity; threaten employment loss for political activity; or solicit or accept anything of value to obtain public office for another.
- You may not solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from a subordinate employee or from a company with pending White House matters.
- Beware of the government e-mail system; a widely circulated message seeking support for a candidate may violate the Hatch Act. Each case depends on its own facts, but act with caution and discretion when using government property.
- Penalties for violations include suspension or removal from office, and possible criminal penalties under various statues (depending on the violation).

Laurie -- Thanks your quick clarification earlier. Looking at the original request more closely, I note that what Steve Cooper was actually requesting was extensions for TPO accounts (see bolded portion below), which are of course exclusively within OMB. We defer to OMB entirely as to all aspects of OMB e-mail & etc. I think Kimberly has the action on that in Phil Perry's office.

given our delay in getting an approved process to transfer data, and additionally that we have many people who have not completed the detail process from their home agencies to dhs, i would like to request an extension of the time needed to migrate tpo accounts...

we have begun transfer/copy and i anticipate that we will need an additional two weeks...can we extend to feb 28th just to be safe? thank you for your consideration of this request on behalf of the new department...steve

Subject: Request for EOP account extensions

Mr. Cooper,
I'm working with the S&T Directorate as a liason to your group to help S&T with their connectivity (and general IT) requirements. As part of this I've been trying to get the group onto the DHS network, but so far we haven't been able to wend our way completely through this process. At this point it doesn't appear we will be able to have DHS systems for the staff before the Feb 10 date that was set as the time our EOP accounts would be removed. As you might imagine, should this occur it will cause considerable problems for S&T. Is there a way to request an extension for the EOP accounts until the migration to DHS is completed? Please let me know if there is anything I can do to help with this issue.

Thank you for your time and help with this.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

Tuesday, February 11, 2003

KEY POINTS***

- The Iraqi regime's violations of Security Council resolutions are evident, and they continue. The regime has never accounted for a vast arsenal of deadly biological and chemical weapons, and is pursuing an elaborate campaign to conceal its weapons materials, and to hide or intimidate key experts and scientists.

- This deception is directed from the highest levels of the Iraqi regime, including Saddam Hussein, his son, the Vice President, and the very official responsible for cooperating with inspectors.

- Sources tell us Saddam Hussein recently authorized Iraqi field commanders to use chemical weapons - the very weapons the dictator tells the world he does not have.

- The same terrorist network operating out of Iraq is responsible for the recent murder of an American diplomat. This network has plotted terrorism against France, Spain, Italy, Germany, the Republic of Georgia, Russia, and was caught producing poisons in London. The danger of weapons of mass destruction reaches across the world.

- Saddam Hussein was given a final chance; he is throwing that chance away. The Security Council must show whether its words have any meaning. Having made its demands, the Security Council must not back down, when those demands are defied and mocked by a dictator.

- The United States would welcome and support a new resolution which makes clear that the Security Council stands behind its previous demands. Yet resolutions mean little without resolve. The United States, along with a growing coalition of nations, is will take whatever action is necessary to defend ourselves and disarm the Iraqi regime.

- On September 11, 2001, America saw what terrorists could do by turning four airplanes into weapons. We will not wait to see what terrorists or terrorist states could do with chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear weapons.

- The people of Iraq are not our enemies. The true enemy of the Iraqi people is Saddam Hussein, and they have suffered long enough under this tyrant. And the Iraqi people can be certain the United States is committed to helping them build a better future. If conflict occurs, America will bring Iraq food, medicine,
supplies and, most importantly, freedom.

IN CASE YOU MISSED IT...***

"...[O]ur founders were not pacifists. They knew there would be times when force must be met with force. And therefore they wrote into the United Nations Charter strong enforcement provisions, to enable the world community to unite against aggression and defeat it.... If Iraq fails to make use of this last chance, and continues its defiance...the council will have to make another grim choice. When that time comes, the council must face up to its responsibilities."

KEY QUOTES***

"In violation of the Geneva Conventions, Saddam Hussein is positioning his military forces within civilian populations in order to shield his military and blame coalition forces for civilian casualties that he has caused. Saddam Hussein regards the Iraqi people as human shields, entirely expendable when their suffering serves his purposes. America views the Iraqi people as human beings who have suffered long enough under this tyrant."
President Bush, in Nashville, TN, 2-10-03

"With respect to a second resolution, why don't we all start calling it the 18th resolution, which is in fact what it [would be], if there is to be one."

KARL ROVE TO HEADLINE LOCAL REPUBLICAN EVENT

President's Senior Advisor to Keynote Annual Lincoln Day Dinner

HOUSTON – Harris County Republican Party Chairman Jared Woodfill announced that Karl Rove, long time advisor and chief campaign strategist to President George W. Bush, will be the keynote speaker at the Party's annual Lincoln Day Dinner. The annual fundraising event will be held on Thursday, April 17, 2003.

"We are very excited to have Karl Rove as our keynote speaker at our annual Lincoln Day celebration," Chairman Jared Woodfill said. "Mr. Rove's inside knowledge of international events, Washington happenings and national politics will serve as a special briefing for those that attend this unique event," Chairman Woodfill added.

In the Sunday, January 5 edition of the Washington Times Mr. Rove touted the successes in Harris County where Republicans registered 55,000 new or lapsed voters, all in Republican-friendly areas.

"We were excited to hear that the White House was applauding our successes this election cycle. Harris County is Republican country. We helped elect a Republican US Senator, Governor, Lt. Governor and every other statewide elected official. We helped increase the Republican majorities in the Texas Senate and won the Texas House for the first time since Reconstruction. And locally every countywide elected official is a Republican," Chairman Woodfill announced.

Karl Rove is the long time advisor and chief campaign strategist to President George W. Bush. Mr. Rove oversees the strategic planning, political affairs, public liaison, and intergovernmental affairs efforts of the White House. He served as chief strategist for the Bush for President Campaign and for 18 years prior to that, he served as president of Karl Rove & Company, an Austin, Texas-based public affairs firm that worked for Republican candidates, non-partisan causes, and non-profit groups. His clients have included over 75 Republican U.S. Senate, Congressional and gubernatorial candidates in 24 states.

The 2003 Harris County Republican Party's Lincoln Day Dinner will be held on Thursday, April 17, 2003. For more information or to purchase individual tickets or tables please contact the Harris County Republican Party at 713-838-7900.

just a few years ago, Senator Leahy expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said. You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Than, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don,t leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no) not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting +maybe,, but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

HEADLINE: Judging Gonzales

BYLINE: By Ramesh Ponnuru; NR Senior Editor

BODY:
Is White House counsel Alberto Gonzales on the short list to fill the next Supreme Court vacancy? That's been the subject of speculation since even before President Bush took office. That speculation had declined in recent months, and a recent Washington Post story suggested he was out of the running. But the rumor mill is up and running again. Some social conservatives are reporting that the White House is trying to sell them on Gonzales's merits. They're worried that a Justice Gonzales could be in our future.

In the Senate, Republican staffers who share this alarm have taken to saying that "Gonzales is Spanish for Souter." The reference is to Justice David Souter, a nominee of the first President Bush. Souter was picked because he lacked a paper trail and could thus easily be confirmed. Souter got 90 votes in the Senate. But on the bench he turned out to be a fairly reliable liberal vote. In the latest issue of NR, my colleagues editorialize that it is unfair to compare Gonzales to Souter: "When Souter was nominated, we didn't know anything about his views. We do know something about Gonzales's views, and what we know is not encouraging."

Gonzales opponents say there are two strikes against him. The first is that he weakened the administration's brief to the Supreme Court in the University of Michigan racial-preference cases. Solicitor General Ted Olson wanted the administration to say that the use of racial preferences to achieve diversity is constitutionally impermissible. Gonzales overruled him.

The second strike is Gonzales's record on abortion as a justice of the Texas supreme court. The state had passed a law requiring parents to be notified before a minor could get an abortion. That law, like most parental-notification laws, allowed judges to waive the requirement if observing it could be expected to lead to the abuse of the girl in question. In its first cases dealing with the law, the court read this judicial-bypass provision broadly - so broadly that one dissenter furiously charged that the law had been gutted.

Priscilla Owen, whom Bush has nominated to a federal court of appeals, sat on the Texas supreme court with Gonzales during the notification cases. She was a dissenter, and last year her opponents seized on a remark Gonzales made in the cases to cast her as an extremist. Gonzales had supposedly tagged Owen as a right-wing activist. Some conservatives believe that Gonzales made this remark, and hold it against him. It appears, however, that Gonzales was referring not to Owen but to one of their colleagues on the Texas supreme court.

I reviewed Gonzales's opinions (and those of his colleagues) for a profile of him in NR two years ago. My conclusion was that while the dissenters had the better argument about how to construe the statute, the cases do not prove Gonzales to be a lawless judge, a supporter of Roe v. Wade, or even a proponent of a right to abortion. On the other hand, nothing in Gonzales's jurisprudence in that case or others would lead people to believe that he would be a Supreme Court justice in the mold of Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas - which is what Bush said he wanted on the campaign trail.

So far, the White House campaign for Gonzales has found few takers among social conservatives or legal conservatives generally. Some of the former are regularly discussing what to do if Bush nominates Gonzales.

The short answer is that there's not much they would be able to do to stop Gonzales's confirmation. Social conservatives would feel betrayed - the rank-and-filers, that is, not just the leaders of the Washington groups - since the chief reason they were given to vote for Bush was that he would nominate "strict constructionists" like Scalia and Thomas. But Republican senators are not going to vote against a Bush nominee who's also the first Hispanic nominee to the Supreme Court, whatever conservatives say. Conservative opponents of Gonzales will have to be careful not to threaten more than they can deliver.

Two months ago, Jeff Bell, an influential social-conservative activist, told me how he thought a Gonzales nomination would play out. "Every article would say that the pro-life movement is over," he said. "[Gonzales would] make [his non-conservatism] obvious as early as the hearings. Leahy would whisk him through, a handful would vote against him. It'd be 90-10. It would be seen as a complete victory for the other side on every difficult liberal-conservative issue before the Supreme Court. . . . Gonzales is not going to resist the zeitgeist on anything for any length of time and everybody knows that. I think it's a major risk for Bush to make a nomination like that and I think he won't. It might not hurt short-run but in the medium-run and long-run it is very dangerous to his base."

Bell could be wrong about the danger. Everyone can understand the political point of nominating the first Hispanic Supreme Court justice and avoiding a confirmation fight with the Democrats. Says one opponent, "If I was just a Machiavellian Republican, without any desire to do the right thing, I'd try to make this thing work." If Gonzales is nominated, however, it will be hard to see what the point of all the pro-life positions that Bush has taken was.

The president has run real political risks in standing with pro-lifers on stem cells, cloning, and international family-planning funding. He has gained their enthusiastic support as a result - and that's all he has gained. Nominating Gonzales this year would instantly wipe out that enthusiasm. Gonzales's nomination would also raise another question: What was the point of Bush's nominating Scalia-Thomas-style conservatives to the federal courts of appeal? If Bush thought it was worth fighting with liberals over those courts, why not over the court to whose precedents they are bound?

Perhaps the point of all these moves was to build up Bush's credibility among pro-lifers to the point that they would give Gonzales the benefit of the doubt as Bush's friend. But pro-lifers have several reasons not to give Supreme Court nominees the benefit of the doubt. They have been burned before. Pro-lifers were bitterly disappointed with Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony Kennedy, and Souter, all of whom were nominated by political allies and expected to vote against Roe, but didn't. Another such disappointment would leave the court split 7-2 for Roe. That's the same as the original vote for it. We'd be right back to 1973.

Some people believe that it would be easier to sell conservatives on Gonzales as a replacement for Justice O'Connor than as a replacement for Chief Justice William Rehnquist. The White House could tell conservatives that trading O'Connor for Gonzales was a step up, even if Gonzales is not conservatives' ideal justice. That won't work for everyone: Bush's promise was to appoint "strict constructionists," not to improve the Supreme Court incrementally. It might, however, work for a lot of conservatives - especially if Bush had already gotten a conservative justice confirmed and Gonzales were his second nominee.

Brett,

Attached is the 2d draft of the Hatch Ac t Crib Sheet. Per your suggestion we have reorganized and consolidated the bullet points. We have revised the bullet point on the use of e-mails and ask that you consider retaining this in the document in light of the recent OSC Advisory on the use of e-mails for political purposes. If you can incorporate any further changes into the document while keeping it to one page we can save a lot of back and forth e-mails. Our goal is to insure that you are completely satisfied with the final version. (I am working on solving the indent problem with the first two bullet points).
Thanks again for your assistance.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES (HATCH ACT) GUIDANCE

- While off duty and subject to the prohibitions on the improper use of an official title and solicitation of contributions, you may vote, participate in political organizations and campaigns, make political contributions and attend fundraisers, serve as a political party officer or as a political convention delegate; you may endorse, oppose or canvass for votes in support of a candidate or party and organize political groups;
- If (and only if) you are a staff member whose government duties are "24/7", i.e., continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post, you may engage in political activity—such as party or campaign related meetings or telephone calls—while on duty, or in a government building or vehicle, so long as it does not interfere with official duties. But, the political entity must pay any non-incidental costs associated with such activity.
- An activity or event is "political" if it is conducted for a partisan election or campaign, or for a political party. Classify an event as "political" or "official" objectively, not based on any possible political ramifications. (A good starting point is determining who is organizing the event). If speaking at an official event, you may not expressly advocate a candidate's election.
- You may speak at a political fundraiser, and be listed on the event invitation as a speaker or guest, but your official government title may not be used either on the invitation or during your introduction.
- Regardless of your government position or if your "24/7", you may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, host a political fundraiser, or conduct political fundraising on government property,
- You may not use your official authority to interfere with or affect the result of an election, to coerce any person to engage in political activity, promise government employment or any other benefit in exchange for political activity, threaten employment loss for political activity, solicit or accept anything of value to obtain public office for another, or solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from a subordinate employee or from a company with matters pending before the Administration.
- You may not travel on corporate or private aircraft for political trips, but you may travel on a charter aircraft leased by a political entity.
- E-mail messages that solicit support for political candidates or parties, may, depending on the circumstances, violate the Hatch Act.
- All political activity of commissioned officers need to be cleared through the Office of Political Affairs and the White House Counsel's Office.

My understanding has always been that the use of "Democrat" as an adjective is viewed or used as something of a slight (other than the obvious) and that those on the other side of the aisle prefer "Democratic" -- as in "Democratic Solicitors General," for example, rather than "Democrat Solicitors General." Check me on this, but if it's an issue I think we should be on the deferential side.

Can you give me transcript citations for the Garland and Rogers hearings (that you cited in the letter). Mark, can you pull the transcript for both of these hearings and also the Tatel hearing? I need these pretty quickly, early this afternoon. Brett--this is for our friend, who is writing a "double standard" for the DC Circuit piece. thanks,

White House E-Mail Slows to a Crawl
By Edwin Chen
(c) 2003, Los Angeles Times
WASHINGTON --The Bush White House is having trouble communicating with the outside world-literally.
Its electronic mail system has slowed to a crawl, causing delays of incoming and outgoing mail ranging from a few hours to overnight.
White House officials said Wednesday that the glitches have not affected the affairs of state. They blamed the slowdown, which began about two weeks ago, on the high volume of e-mail and online traffic, including activity associated with the White House Web site, www.whitehouse.gov.
But some information technology experts say the explanation may not be quite that simple, especially considering several tantalizing recent developments at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.
Last month the White House converted its e-mail system from Lotus Notes to Microsoft Outlook. At the same time, the White House is moving to a new e-mail server to better accommodate the volume of traffic it must handle.
But several West Wing staffers, speaking on condition of anonymity, offered another theory: that the slowdown can be traced to the system's "firewall," which is designed to protect it from hackers by filtering out unwanted incoming missives.
"Something happened with our firewall, and things really got jammed up," one aide said Wednesday. "Tech support had to shut down the whole thing, and just barely got it up and running this morning."
The problem has hampered the e-mail capabilities of most, if not all, White House staffers ? but not President Bush, who no longer sends e-mails due to security concerns.
One senior aide who works just steps from the Oval Office did not receive an e-mail sent Tuesday morning until the end of the day. And a press aide did not get an e-mail sent at 7:53 p.m. Tuesday until the next morning.
Officials said the internal White House e-mail communications have not been disrupted, nor has a separate, classified e-mail system used by the National Security Council.
In any case, not everyone at the White House is unhappy about the slowdown.
Noelia Rodriguez, a top aide to Laura Bush, is among those who has experienced the problem. It took one e-mail more than three hours to reach her on Tuesday afternoon.
But she isn't complaining.
"Problems in getting e-mail? I'd like to have that problem. Where do I sign up?" she quipped.
Reporters assigned to cover President Bush were among the first outsiders to notice the delays, as routine media advisories and official announcements from the White House abruptly began arriving very late or not at all.
The routine distribution, by mass e-mail, of the president's schedule for the following day stopped. Official transcripts of Bush's remarks were slow in coming, sometimes not available until after deadline.

Instant theories sprouted among the press corps.
Could it be related to the recent departure of a press aide who processed such e-mails? Was her replacement not quite up to snuff, technologically speaking? Was this another downturn in the uneasy co-existence between the White House and the Fourth Estate?
Not at all, said deputy press secretary Scott McClellan.
"This has nothing to do with changing e-mail systems," he said Wednesday. "The issue here is the large quantities of e-mail coming into and going out of the White House."
Avi Rubin, an author and professor of computer science at Johns Hopkins University, downplayed the firewall theory.
"There are multiple reasons why mail slows down," added Alan Pallen, another information technology expert. He also considered volume to be low on the list of likely culprits.
Rather, Pallen suggested, the cause may be settings in the e-mail filter system that cause mail to be "queued up" for prolonged periods.
Rubin agreed. "More likely is some kind of configuration error during the conversion," he said.
Whatever the reason, White House officials said, the problem should be ephemeral. Indeed, there were signs late Wednesday that the e-mail flow was starting to return to normal.
"There definitely were some glitches. But the situation seems to be improving," reported one West Wing staffer.
But even if normalcy is not immediately restored, no one was reaching for the panic button.
"We do have other means of communicating at our disposal," said one aide.

Subject:	RUSH LIMBAUGH ON ESTRADA

Rush Limbaugh yesterday dedicated a good deal of his time to the Estrada nomination. Below is the story he posted on his web site. You can also cut and paste the link and scroll down to hear audio bites.

Estrada Betrayed By Landrieu; Bashed By Schumer & Menendez; Frist & GOP Fight for Historic Hispanic Nominee

February 12, 2003

On Wednesday, I broke down the truth behind this Senate confirmation battle over President Bush's nominee for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals: Miguel Estrada. You can hear me touch on all the points of this hot issue - from Mary Landrieu's flip-flop to Democratic "weapons of mass obstruction" - in the audio links below.

Judgeships matter, folks, so listen up. Liberals want activists on the bench who will write instead of just interpret law, because that's the only way they can advance their unpopular agenda. Mr. Estrada will be a good judge; the Democrats are opposing him because he doesn't match their litmus test for judicial activism. They always complain that Republicans have these tests, but they think they're just fine on their side. They don't want a man like this on the bench - where he'll be, it's said, on the fast track to the Supreme Court.

This will be a big test for Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-TN), because the Democrats are threatening a filibuster. Frist made a good start by calling the Democrats' bluff. Usually the mere threat of a filibuster is enough to derail a vote. But Frist is challenging the Democrats to go out on the Senate floor, in full view of the C-Span2 cameras, and use this trick to prevent the first Hispanic from sitting on this court.

There aren't enough Democrats willing to do that, and Frist needs 60 votes to break the filibuster. With my audio comments on Mr. Estrada, you'll hear some funny bites of Judiciary Committee Chairman Senator Orrin Hatch (R-UT) hammering away at Senator Harry Reid (D-NV). Reid either wasn't paying attention, or pulled the tactic of deliberately misunderstanding when Republicans said that these rabid leftists are deploying "weapons of mass obstruction" on Estrada. The truth really gets to these guys when the GOP has the grapes to point it out.

Landrieu Claims Hispanic Supporters Too Dumb to Understand Estrada Ad

If Democratic senators thought Estrada wasn't being forthcoming, they could've asked him any question they wanted last September when he appeared before the judiciary committee they then controlled. Chuck Schumer (D-NY) didn't submit a single question - yet he's the one whining, "We don't know where Estrada stands." Similarly hypocritical: newly re-elected Mary Landrieu (D-LA), who claims that her Hispanic supporters "misunderstood" a campaign ad in which she said she'd vote YES on Estrada.

Charging these guys with using "weapons of mass obstruction" is 100% accurate. No circuit court judge has even been filibustered. That's why guys like millionaire trial lawyer John Edwards (D-NC) tried to trip Mr. Estrada up before he got to a vote. He pulled this trick of asking the nominee how he'd rule in a generic case, knowing full way that no judge worth his or her robe will ever commit to a ruling before the case appears before him.

Nor should you discount that Estrada faces much of the same liberal bigotry as Justice Clarence Thomas. Estrada would be the first Hispanic on either the U.S. Circuit or the Supreme Court - at least, depending on what the meaning of "Hispanic" is. To liberals, Miguel Estrada is the Hispanic version of an Uncle Tom. Congressman Bob Menendez (D-NJ) charged that Estrada is Hispanic, but he's not really Hispanic because his family in Honduras was somewhat successful.

The achievers in minority groups are never the ones liberals want people to emulate. Liberalism is not about achievement; it's about remaining dependent and in need. It's the same old tired, worn out argument: you're not really a minority if you're not in poverty - and certainly not if you vote Republican. If you become a Miguel Estrada, you have forsaken your heritage. It's just sick to tell minority kids or any kids that garbage. They can all make it. They all have the right stuff.

Listen to Rush...

(...listen to Rush break down the fight over Miguel Estrada)

(...roll Orrin Hatch challenging Democrats to stop using "weapons of mass obstruction")

(...ask why Democrats think all true Hispanics have to be poor and dumb)

(...expose Sen. Schumer, who didn't bother to submit a single question to Estrada)

(...discuss Sen. Landrieu's claim that Hispanics mistook her Estrada ad)

Bush nominates Palo Alto Latina for appeals court bench
By Howard Mintz
Mercury News

In a move that could bolster Latino representation on the nation's largest federal appeals court, President George W. Bush today nominated a Latina state appeals court justice to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Consuelo Maria Callahan, who currently serves on the Sacramento-based Third District Court of Appeal, would become the second Latino judge on the 28-member 9th Circuit if she is confirmed by the U.S. Senate. Bush nominated Callahan to fill one of four vacancies on the San Francisco-based appeals court, which interprets law for California and eight other western states.

A native of Palo Alto and a Stanford University graduate, Callahan, 52, has been a state appeals court justice since 1996, when she was named to the court by former Gov. Pete Wilson. Callahan was previously a San Joaquin County Superior Court judge and a longtime prosecutor in Stockton.

The Bush administration is also close to nominating San Francisco Superior Court Judge Carlos Bea to the 9th Circuit, according to Republican lawyers and judges familiar with the process. Bea and Callahan, if eventually confirmed, would join Judge Richard Paez of Los Angeles as the court's Latino members.

The White House has named two other 9th Circuit nominees, Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl and Nevada lawyer Jay Bybee, who are currently encountering opposition from Democrats in the Senate. If the Bush appointees are confirmed to the 9th Circuit, they would join a court that is heavily dominated by judges appointed by Democrats and which is widely considered the country's most liberal.

Bush nominates Palo Alto Latina for appeals court bench
By Howard Mintz
Mercury News

In a move that could bolster Latino representation on the nation's largest federal appeals court, President George W. Bush today nominated a Latina state appeals court justice to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Consuelo Maria Callahan, who currently serves on the Sacramento-based Third District Court of Appeal, would become the second Latino judge on the 28-member 9th Circuit if she is confirmed by the U.S.
Senate. Bush nominated Callahan to fill one of four vacancies on the San Francisco-based appeals court, which interprets law for California and eight other western states.

A native of Palo Alto and a Stanford University graduate, Callahan, 52, has been a state appeals court justice since 1996, when she was named to the court by former Gov. Pete Wilson. Callahan was previously a San Joaquin County Superior Court judge and a longtime prosecutor in Stockton.

The Bush administration is also close to nominating San Francisco Superior Court Judge Carlos Bea to the 9th Circuit, according to Republican lawyers and judges familiar with the process. Bea and Callahan, if eventually confirmed, would join Judge Richard Paez of Los Angeles as the court's Latino members.

The White House has named two other 9th Circuit nominees, Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl and Nevada lawyer Jay Bybee, who are currently encountering opposition from Democrats in the Senate. If the Bush appointees are confirmed to the 9th Circuit, they would join a court that is heavily dominated by judges appointed by Democrats and which is widely considered the country's most liberal.

Estrada's Omerta

By Michael Kinsley
Friday, February 14, 2003; Page A31

Add Michael Kinsley to your personal home page.

Like gangsters taking the Fifth, nominees for federal judgeships have reduced their reason for not talking to a mantra. Repeat after me: "My view of the judicial function, Senator, does not allow me to answer that question." Miguel Estrada, President Bush's nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, used variations on that one many times in refusing to express any opinion on any important legal topic during Judiciary Committee hearings last fall. Democrats are now trying to block the Estrada nomination with a filibuster.

Estrada's "view of the judicial function" is shared by President Bush, congressional Republicans and conservative media voices hoarse with rage that Democratic senators want to know what someone thinks before making him or her a judge. The Estrada view is that judges should not prejudge the issues that will come before them. As Estrada amplified in his testimony, "I'm very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the job of a judge is to subconsciously put that aside and look at each case . . . with an open mind."

Obviously, Estrada's real reason for evasiveness is the fear that if some senators knew what his views are, they would vote against him. However, this kind of high-minded bluster is a powerful weapon in the ongoing judicial wars. Over the past couple of decades, talk like this has intimidated many a senator who aspires to a reputation for thoughtfulness. And it does sound swell. Until you think about it.

Potential judges should not reveal their views on legal issues because a judge should have an open mind? Hiding your views doesn't make them go away. If the problem is judges having views on judicial topics, rather than judges expressing those views, then allowing people to become judges without revealing their views is a solution that doesn't address the problem. And if the problem is judges who fail to put their previous views aside, rather than judges having such views to begin with, then allowing judicial nominees to hide those views until it's too late is still a solution that is logically unrelated to the problem.

So Estrada's Rule of Silence does not solve the problem. And the supposed problem -- of "prejudging" -- makes no sense either. To see why, consider -- or reconsider -- Justice Clarence Thomas. In his 1991 confirmation hearings, Thomas testified that he had no "personal opinion" about Roe v. Wade, probably the most controversial Supreme Court decision of the 20th century. In 1992 Justice Thomas joined in a minority opinion calling for Roe to be overturned. By 2000 he was writing that the Roe decision was "grievously wrong" and "illegitimate" and part of "a particularly virulent strain of constitutional exegesis" and generally not something he cared for the least little bit.

This does not prove that Thomas was lying under oath in claiming that he hadn't prejudged Roe in 1991 (though no reasonable person could doubt that). It does prove that Thomas had prejudged Roe in 1992. But this is a point that Justice Thomas needn't bother to lie about, because no one objects. It's perfectly okay for a sitting judge to have and express views about an issue that comes before his or her court. That is his job.

In fact it's inevitable that anyone who has been an appellate judge for a while will have published opinions that touch on many of the issues he or she must decide in the future. There is not even an expectation of open-mindedness. Although a willingness to reconsider your own assumptions is regarded as admirable, no one is accused of prejudging a case just for ruling the same way this year as last year. Quite the opposite: Intellectual consistency is the hallmark of a fine legal mind. And following precedent is a sign of judicial professionalism.

Most legal rulings come from judges who have been on the bench for a while. If that is not a problem, why is it a problem if they have thought and reached conclusions on some important legal issues before they join the bench? The answer is that it is not a problem. It ought to be a problem if a potential judge has not thought about important legal issues and has no views on them. But instead, the problem is how to keep a judgeship candidate's opinions hidden until he or she is safely confirmed for a lifetime appointment, and the phony issue of "prejudging" is a strategy for doing that.

Judgeship nominations bring out the hypocrite in politicians of both parties, but the Republican hypocrisy here is especially impressive. When Bill Clinton was appointing judges, the senior Judiciary Committee Republican, Sen. Orrin Hatch, called for "more diligent and extensive . . . questioning of nominees' jurisprudential views." Now Hatch says Democrats have no right to demand any such thing. President Bush fired the American Bar Association as official auditor of judicial nominations because the ABA gave some Republican nominees a lousy grade. Now Hatch cites the ABA's judgment as "the gold standard" because it unofficially gave Estrada a high grade.

The seat Republicans want to give Estrada is open only because Republicans successfully blocked a Clinton nominee. Two Clinton nominations to the D.C. Circuit were blocked because Republicans said the circuit had too many judges already. Now Bush has sent nominations for both those seats. Hatch and others accuse Democrats of being anti-Hispanic for opposing Estrada. With 42 circuit court vacancies to fill, Estrada is the only Hispanic Bush has nominated. Clinton nominated 11, three of whom the Republicans blocked.

I could go on and on. Which is just what Senate Democrats are doing.

Secretary Powell Delivers Remarks In Response To Blix And Elbaradei'S Presentation To The U.N. Security Council 02/14/03

POWELL: Thank you very much, Mr. President.

Mr. President, Mr. Secretary General, distinguished members of the council, it's a great pleasure to be here with you again to consider this very important matter, and I'm very pleased to be here as the secretary of state of a relatively new country on the face of the Earth.

But I think I can take some credit sitting here as being the representative of the oldest democracy that is assembled here around this table. Proud of that. A democracy that believes in peace, a nation that has tried in the course of its history to show how people can live in peace with one another, but a democracy that has not been afraid to meet its responsibilities on the world stage when it has been challenged; more importantly, when others in the world have been challenged, or when the international order has been challenged, or when the international institutions of which we are a part have been challenged.

That's why we have joined and been active members of institutions such as the United Nations and a number of other institutions that have come together for the purpose of peace and for the purpose of mutual security and for the purpose of letting other nations which pursue a path of destruction, which pursue paths of developing weapons of mass destruction which threaten their neighbors, to let them know that we will stand tall, we will stand together to meet these kinds of challenges.

I want to express my appreciation to Dr. Blix and Dr. ElBaradei for their presentation this morning. They took up a difficult challenge when they went back into Iraq last fall in pursuit of disarmament as required by Resolution 1441. And I listened very attentively to all they said this morning, and I am pleased that there have been improvements with respect to process. I'm pleased that there have been improvements with respect to not having five minders with each inspector down to something less than five minders with each inspector.

But I think they still are being minded, they are still being watched, they are still being bugged, they still do not have the freedom of access around Iraq that they need to do their job well.

I'm pleased that a few people have come forward for interviews, but not all the people who should be coming forward for interviews, and with the freedom to interview them in a manner that their safety can be protected and the safety of their families can be protected as required by U.N. Resolution 1441.

I am glad that access has been relatively good. But that is all process, it is not substance.

I am pleased to hear that decrees have now been issued that should have been issued years and years ago, but does anybody really think a decree from Saddam Hussein--directed to whom--is going to fundamentally change the situation? And it comes out on a morning when we are moving forward down the path laid out by Resolution 1441. These are all process issues. These are all tricks that are being played on us.

And to say that new commissions are being formed that will go find materials that they claim are not there in the first place--can anybody honestly believe that either one of these two new commissions will actively seek out information that they have been actively trying to deny to the world community, to the inspectors for the last 11-plus years?

I commend the inspectors. I thank they for what they are doing. But at the same time, I have to keep coming back to the point that the inspectors have repeatedly made, and they've made it again here this morning, they've been making it for the last 11-plus years: What we need is not more inspections, what we need is not more immediate access, what we need is immediate, active, unconditional, full cooperation on the part of Iraq. What we need is for Iraq to disarm.

Resolution 1441 was not about inspections. Let me say that again. Resolution 1441 was not about inspections. Resolution 1441 was about the disarmament of Iraq.

POWELL: We worked on that resolution for seven weeks, from the time of President Bush's powerful speech here at the United Nations General Assembly on the 12th of September until the resolution was passed on the 8th of November.

We had intense discussions. All of you are familiar with it. You participated in these discussions. And it was about disarmament. And the resolution began with the clear statement that Iraq was in material breach of its obligations for the past 11 years and remains to that day, the day the resolution was passed, in material breach. And the resolution said Iraq must now come into compliance, it must disarm.

The resolution went on to say that we want to see a declaration from Iraq within 30 days of all of its activities, put it all on the table. ``Let's see what you have been doing. Give us a declaration that we can believe and that is full, complete and accurate.'' That's what we said to Iraq on the 8th of November. And some 29 days later, we got 12,000 pages. Nobody in this Council can say that that was a full, complete or accurate declaration.

And now it is several months after that declaration was submitted. And I have heard nothing to suggest that they have filled in the gaps that were in that declaration or they have added new evidence that should give us any comfort that we have a full, complete and accurate declaration.

You will recall we put that declaration requirement into the resolution as an early test of Iraq's seriousness. Are they serious? Are they going to disarm? Are they going to comply? Are they going to cooperate?

And the answer with that declaration was no, we're going to see what we can get away with. We can see how much we can slip under your nose and everybody will clap and say, isn't that wonderful? They provided a declaration. That was of not any particular use.

We then had some level of acceptance of the fact that inspectors were going back in. We called that. Iraq tried to use this gambit right after the president's speech in September to try to keep Resolution 1441 from ever coming down the pipe. Suddenly in the following Monday after the president's speech, ``Oh, we'll let inspectors back in.''

Why? Because when the president spoke and when Iraq saw that the international community was now coming together with seriousness and with determination, it knew it better do something. It didn't do it out of the goodness of its heart or it suddenly discovered that it's been in violation for all of those years. They did it because the pressure. They did it because this Council stood firm. They did it because the international community said, ``Enough, we will not tolerate Iraq continuing to have weapons of mass destruction to be used against its own people, to be used against its neighbors, or worse, if we find a post-9/11 nexus between Iraq and terrorist organizations that are looking for just such weapons.''

And I would submit and will provide more evidence that such connections are now emerging, and we can establish that they exist.

We cannot wait for one of these terrible weapons to show up in one of our cities and wonder where it came from after it's been detonated by Al Qaida or somebody else. This is the time to go after this source of this kind of weaponry.

And that's what 1441 was all about.

And to this day, we have not seen the level of cooperation that was expected, anticipated, hoped for. I hoped for it. No one worked harder than the United States. And I submit to you, no on worked harder, if I may humbly say, I did, to try to put forward a resolution that would show the determination of the international community to the leadership in Iraq so that they would now meet their obligations and come clean and comply. And they did not.

Notwithstanding all of the discussion we have heard so far this morning about give inspections more time, let's have more airplanes flying over, let's have more inspectors added to the inspection process--Dr. Blix noted earlier this week that it's not more inspectors that it needed. What's needed is what both Dr. Blix and Dr. ElBaradei have said what's been needed since 1991: immediate, active, unconditional compliance and cooperation.

I'm pleased that Iraq is now discussing this matter with South Africa. But it isn't brain surgery. South Africa knows how to do it. Anybody knows how to do it. If we were getting the kind of cooperation that we expected when 1441 was passed and we hoped when 1441 was passed, these documents would be flooding out of homes, flooding out of factories. There would be no question about access. There would be no question about interviews.

If Iraq was serious in this matter, interviewees would be standing outside of UNMOVIC and IAEA offices in Baghdad and elsewhere waiting to be interviewed, because they are determined to prove to the world, to give the world all the evidence needed that these weapons of mass destruction are gone.

POWELL: But the questions, notwithstanding all of the level of letter, the questions remain, and some of my colleagues have talked about them. We haven't accounted for the anthrax, we haven't accounted for the botulinum, VX, both biological agents, growth media, 30,000 chemical and biological munitions.

These are not trivial matters one can just ignore and walk away from and say, ``Well, maybe the inspectors will find them, maybe they won't.''

We have not had a complete, accurate declaration.

We have seen the reconstitution of casting chambers for missiles. Why? Because they are still trying to develop these weapons. We have seen the kind of cooperation that was anticipated, expected and demanded of this body.

And we must continue to demand it. We must continue to put pressure on Iraq, put force upon Iraq to make sure that the threat of force is not removed, because 1441 was all about compliance, not inspections. The inspections were put in as a way, of course, to assist Iraq in coming forward and complying, in order to verify, in order to monitor, as the chief inspector noted.

But we so got an incomplete answer from Iraq, we are facing a difficult situation. More inspectors, sorry, not the answer. What we need is immediate cooperation. Time? How much time does it take to say, ``I understand the will of the international community, and I and my regime are laying it all out for you and not playing guess--not forming commissions, not issuing decrees, not getting laws that should've been passed years ago suddenly passed on the day when we are meeting''?

These are not responsible actions on the part of Iraq. These are contingent efforts to deceive, to deny, to divert, to throw us off the trail, to throw us off the path.

The resolution anticipated this kind of response from Iraq. And that's why in all our discussions about that resolution we said they're in material breach. If they come into new material breach with a false declaration or not a willingness to cooperate and comply, as OP4 (ph) says, then the matter has to be referred to the Council for serious consequences.

I submit to you that, notwithstanding the improvements in process that we have noted and I welcome--and I thank the inspectors for their hard work--these improvements in process do not move us away from the central problem that we continue to have. And more inspections and a longer inspection period will not move us away from the central issue, the central problem we are facing. And that central problem is that Iraq has failed to comply with 1441.

The threat of force must remain. Force should always be a last resort. I have preached this for most of my professional life as a soldier and as a diplomat. But it must be a resort.

We cannot allow this process to be endlessly strung out, as Iraq is trying to do right now: ``String it out long enough, and the world will start looking in other directions, the Security Council will move on, we'll get away with it again.'' My friends, they cannot be allowed to get away with it again.

We now are in a situation where Iraq's continued noncompliance and failure to cooperate, it seems to me, in the clearest terms requires this Council to begin to think through the consequences of walking away from this problem, or the reality that we have to face this problem, and that in the very near future, we will have to consider whether or not we've reached this Council, as distasteful as it may be, as reluctant as we may be, as many as--there are so many of you who would rather not to face this issue, but it's an issue that must be faced, and that is whether or not it is time to consider serious consequences of the kind intended by 1441.

The reason we must not look away from it is because these are terrible weapons. We are talking about weapons that will kill not a few people, not a hundred people, not a thousand people, but could kill tens of thousands of people, if these weapons got into the wrong hands.

And the security of the region, the hopes for the people of Iraq themselves, and our security rests upon us meeting our responsibilities and, if it comes to it, invoking the serious consequences called for in 1441.

1441 is about disarmament and compliance, and not merely a process of inspections that goes on forever without ever resolving the basic problem.

Thank you.

Here is a draft letter to Scott Nelson, responding to his FOIA request for the 1654, in anticipation of Brett okaying the release, at least in part, early next week. Any comments are welcome.

Brett, let me know if you end up resolving the privileged records at the same time, in which case I would make this a final response.

Thanks.

Jack Straw Delivers Remarks In Response To Blix And Elbaradei'S Presentation To The U.N. Security Council 02/14/03

STRAW: Mr. President, I speak on behalf of a very old country founded...

(LAUGHTER)

... founded in 1066 by the French.

(LAUGHTER)

I'd like, in opening, Mr. President, to thank Dr. Blix and Dr. ElBaradei for their reports and to express my very great appreciation to them and to their inspection teams for their great efforts in the face of what I think is still very clear, Iraq's failure, fully and actively, to comply with Resolution 1441.

Mr. President, the issue before us could not be graver. It is about the authority of the United Nations and about the responsibility of the Security Council for international peace and security.

Just three months ago, on the 8th of November, we unanimously agreed Resolution 1441, tabled by the United States and ourselves. We said then that Iraq's proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, of long-range missiles and its noncompliance with Council resolutions was a threat to international peace and security.

Now, we all know that they've had these weapons. That's why we said that Iraq had them, why all five permanent members, all 10 elected members, said the same thing. We knew that the issue was not whether Iraq had them, but whether Iraq was actively cooperating to get rid of them.

And we emphasized that Iraq had been found guilty 12 years ago by the world community. This was just reminding ourselves that Iraq is the only country in the world which has launched missile attacks on five of its neighbors, invaded two of its neighbors, both Muslim, and killed, without any justification, hundreds of thousands of innocent people in Iran, in Kuwait and in Iraq itself.

Dr. Blix, in his report, refers to the decisions which were made in 1991, and he said regrettably the high degree of cooperation required by this Council of Iraq for disarmament through inspection was not forthcoming in 1991.

And it is worth reminding ourselves when we discuss this issue of time scales that on the 3rd of April 1991, this Council gave Iraq 90 days to disarm, by the 2nd of July 1991. And in the 11 years, 7 months and 12 days, quite a long of time, since the Council's deadline to Iraq ran out, what is it that they've done? Well, they've lied, they've concealed, they've played games. A game of catcher's catch can, as Dr. Blix told us on the 27th of January.

Saddam said for four years that he had no biological weapons program, no anthrax bacillus, no smallpox virus, no VX nerve agent. And indeed, the inspectors found absolutely nothing. It took the defection of Saddam's own son-in-law to uncover Saddam's biological weapons program, more terrible than anybody had thought.

And to bring us up to date, as Dr. Blix and Dr. ElBaradei spelled out in their report on the 27th of January, Iraq has failed to account for thousands of tons of chemical weapons and precursor chemicals, of shells and bombs for anthrax, for mustard gas, for VX nerve agent. They have failed to make a full and complete disclousre as required of them on the 7th of December, failed to cooperate fully and actively on substance, as well as on process with the inspectors, and failed substantively to meet the obligations imposed on them.

STRAW: Now, I've listened with very great care to the colleagues who've spoken so far. And we all agreed on the importance of 1441, and it was striking that nobody who's spoken so far--and I warrant that nobody who speaks after me--that nobody has spoken so far has suggested for a second that Iraq is fully and actively complying with the obligations that we imposed on him and on them on the 8th of November of last year. So Iraq's material breaches, which we spelled out on the 8th of November, are still there.

Now, in that regard, I'd be glad to put these questions to the inspectors. Why did Dr. Blix think that Iraq has refurbished equipment, like the engine casting chambers at Al Mahmoun (ph) and the chemical processing equipment at Fallujah, both of which were destroyed by UNSCOM because they were prohibited?

Since the last report, how many interviews have taken place with the officials which the inspectors have asked to interview? How many in places which the two inspectors are sure have not subject to electronic interception and bugging by Iraq?

Has any of the outstanding material identified by UNSCOM in early 1999--the missing 8,500 liters of anthrax, the one and a half tons of VX nerve agent, the 6,500 chemical bombs--been satisfactorily dealt with by Iraq? Do recent documents provided by Iraq give any serious evidence for this?

As for the nuclear dossier, how many of the IAEA's open issues has it been able to close through Iraq's cooperation?

Mr. President, I thought that the most significant point made by Dr. Blix in his report, which has subsequently been echoed by everyone who has spoken so far, was his closing remarks when he said, ``Three months after the adoption of Resolution 1441, the period of disarmament through inspection could still be short if the immediate, active and unconditional cooperation with UNMOVIC and the IAEA were to be forthcoming.'' I take those words to mean that Iraq has yet to be forthcoming with that immediate, active and unconditional cooperation.

And I'd like to ask Dr. Blix, picking up a phrase from his report of the 27th of January, whether he believes that Iraq has yet come to a genuine acceptance of the disarmament which has been demanded of it.

Mr. President, the issue before us is of the authority of the U.N. and of the defiance of the United Nations resolutions. On the 8th of November, we said unanimously that Saddam was to have a final opportunity. Can anyone say, does anyone truly believe here that he has yet taken that final opportunity?

Like every other member of this Council and, I believe, of the international community, I hope and believe that a peaceful solution to this crisis may still be possible. But this will require a dramatic and immediate change by Saddam.

And this will only be achieved if we, the Security Council, hold our nerve in the face of this tyrant, give meaning to our words and to the decisions which we've already collectively taken, and make ourselves ready to ensure that Iraq will face the serious consequences which we all decided would have to happen if Iraq's defiance did not end.

And, Mr. President, I want to close by saying this. This period of 12 years since 687 was passed on the 3rd of April 1991 has frankly been a period of humiliation for this body, for this Security Council and for the United Nations, as games have been played with the Security Council's authority.

And the period after the inspectors were kicked out effectively by Iraq at the end of 1998 until the 8th of November will hardly be described as the best in the Security Council's history, because Iraq was in open defiance of the United Nations and nothing effectively was being done about its weapons of mass destruction.

I am proud that with the United States, the United Kingdom took the initiative on this issue and tabled what became 1441. And I'm glad to note the progress on process that has been made. I'm glad to note that, notwithstanding a clear statement by the government of Iraq on the 10th of September last year that the inspectors would never go back into Iraq, inspectors have now gone back into Iraq, and we note the progress on process that has been made.

But I also say this, that in securing a peaceful conclusion to this crisis, as all we must, I know and I think everybody else here knows that we have only got to this stage by doing what the United Nations charter requires of us, which is to back a diplomatic process with a credible threat of force and also, if necessary, to be ready to use that threat of force.

And if we back away from that, if we decide to give unlimited time for little or no cooperation on substance, then the disarmament of Iraq and the peace and security of the international community, for which we are responsible, will not get any easier, but very much harder.

And this issue is not just about Iraq, it's how we deal with proliferators elsewhere across the globe. And if we send out the message to proliferators the world over that the defiance of the United Nations pays, then it will not be peace that we will have secured.

Thank you.

Democrats turn ugly on Estrada
February 14, 2003
Miguel Estrada is - uh oh - a conservative, and if that makes your heart pound with fear you may very well be a U.S. Senate Democrat. Then you may also be among those trying to thwart the Senate's majoritarian decision-making with a filibuster.
It's irresponsible, this hysteria being acted out to keep Estrada from serving on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. But Democratic senators do have their excuses, each more petty than the next. One excuse is that they don't know enough about Estrada - implausible because there's a well-known and rather amazing life history here: Estrada immigrated to this country from Honduras, graduated with honors at Columbia College, was editor of the Law Review at Harvard Law School, a clerk to a Supreme Court justice, argued before the Supreme Court 15 times, and received the highest possible recommendation of the American Bar Association.
Opponents of Estrada are piqued because he stayed true to a widely endorsed tradition of refusing to indicate how as a judge he might decide cases that could come before him. Instead, Estrada merely said he would be an impartial judge loyal to the law.
The Democrats have no excuse (although it's clear they fear Estrada would be in line for a Supreme Court nomination if he gets this other judgeship first). If liberals in the Senate think conservatives will spell the end of civilization if they become judges, they can vote against Estrada. But keeping others from voting their consciences on this particular matter is simply out of line.

Democrats Say Bush Caters to Insurers

ÿPresident Bush's hope of placing a $250,000 cap on pain-and-suffering awards for medical malpractice victims rests largely on his ability to convince lawmakers and the public that the plan is meant to help average Americans -- not cater to the doctors and insurance companies pouring millions of dollars into GOP campaigns.

Is there any chance JSC can be postponed, perhaps to Friday, since there's no POTUS meeting this week? I probably won't get a flight back to DC until Thursday.

Thanks. Delaware should be added as a tier 1 target, I believe.

As to tier 2, I think those targets break down into several sub-categories and we should think about each: (i) old bull states [WV, SC, HI]; (ii) states with large Hispanic populations [NM, IL]; and states with other individualized reasons [ND, SD, VT]. Do those purposes make sense? Should we delete any? Should we add NC [Edwards] and/or NJ [large Hispanic population/Menendez]?

This should not change our previous decision to proceed, but I told Alicia that I am confirming with relevant office that provides advisory guidance on these issues just to make sure they agree and back us up. That confirmation should happen this morning. I will let you know as soon as I know. (Btw, the consequences described in the news article are dramatically overstated.)

HEADLINE: (UNDER THE STATE HOUSE DOME) Labor committee expected to favor right-to-work bill

BYLINE: By TOM FAHEY

BODY:

Going to the Reagan-Lincoln Day Dinner on Friday at Yoken's in Portsmouth? Check your ticket. If it identifies guest speaker Andrew Card as the White House chief of staff, trade it in quick.

State Republican Committee Chairwoman Jayne Millerick said the Strafford and Belknap county Republicans printed the tickets without knowing the latest campaign finance laws. Now-departed state GOP Executive Director Chuck McGee warned event organizers that using Card's title on the tickets or advertising fliers could be construed as a felony.

About 500 of the tickets were printed up, so 500 new tickets were printed up with the instructions to distributors to exchange old tickets for new. The new ones just describe Card as "Honorable."

Most people willing to pay $40 to hear him speak know the rest anyway.

Millerick, meanwhile, is seeking a replacement for McGee, who resigned right after word came out that a Republican-hired company jammed get-out-the-vote phone lines in four New Hampshire cities. She has about a dozen resumes on her desk.

"We want to make sure that our next executive director is the best candidate," she said. "We're looking forward to hiring a very qualified and hard-working person."

This should not change our previous decision to proceed, but I told Alicia that I am confirming with relevant office that provides advisory guidance on these issues just to make sure they agree and back us up. That confirmation should happen this morning. I will let you know as soon as I know. (Btw, the consequences described in the news article are dramatically overstated.)

HEADLINE: (UNDER THE STATE HOUSE DOME) Labor committee expected to favor right-to-work bill

BODY:

Going to the Reagan-Lincoln Day Dinner on Friday at Yoken's in Portsmouth? Check your ticket. If it identifies guest speaker Andrew Card as the White House chief of staff, trade it in quick.

State Republican Committee Chairwoman Jayne Millerick said the Strafford and Belknap county Republicans printed the tickets without knowing the latest campaign finance laws. Now-departed state GOP Executive Director Chuck McGee warned event organizers that using Card's title on the tickets or advertising fliers could be construed as a felony.

About 500 of the tickets were printed up, so 500 new tickets were printed up with the instructions to distributors to exchange old tickets for new. The new ones just describe Card as "Honorable."

Most people willing to pay $40 to hear him speak know the rest anyway.

Millerick, meanwhile, is seeking a replacement for McGee, who resigned right after word came out that a Republican-hired company jammed get-out-the-vote phone lines in four New Hampshire cities. She has about a dozen resumes on her desk.

"We want to make sure that our next executive director is the best candidate," she said. "We're looking forward to hiring a very qualified and hard-working person."

Dear Mr. Greenstone:

Thank you for your letter of January 8, 2003, concerning the effect of the new software products on the record/non-record function of the EOP email system. We understand that the technological complexities concerning the interface of Microsoft Office with the current email electronic recordkeeping system, known as the Automated Records Management System (ARMS), make it infeasible to continue this function at present.

However, as we have discussed, NARA believes that the EOP should make every effort to install a new electronic recordkeeping system for email as soon as possible that would accommodate this function and would also facilitate other important records management functions. As you know, the Presidential Records Act (PRA) requires that, to the extent practicable, personal records (i.e., non-records) be filed separately from Presidential records. Similarly, the records disposition schedule that governs the email records of federal agency components of the EOP requires that temporary records be separated from permanent records; implicit in the handling of federal records is that non-records will also be separated, as was accomplished under the existing system.

In the interim, you have indicated your support of a partial solution to this problem, by instructing all EOP staff to mark explicitly all non-record or personal emails as such within the subject line of the email. Such a practice will greatly facilitate NARA's future ability to protect from inappropriate disclosure personal non-record emails under both the PRA and the Freedom of Information Act.

Sincerely,

GARY M. STERN

However, as we have discussed, NARA believes that the EOP should make every effort to install a new electronic recordkeeping system for email as soon as possible that would accommodate this function and would also facilitate other important records management functions. As you know, the Presidential Records Act (PRA) requires that, to the extent practicable, personal records (i.e., non-records) be filed separately from Presidential records. Similarly, the records disposition schedule that governs the email records of federal agency components of the EOP requires that temporary records be separated from permanent records; implicit in the handling of federal records is that non-records will also be separated, as was accomplished under the existing system.

In the interim, you have indicated your support of a partial solution to this problem, by instructing all EOP staff to mark explicitly all non-record or personal emails as such within the subject line of the email. Such a practice will greatly facilitate NARA's future ability to protect from inappropriate disclosure personal non-record emails under both the PRA and the Freedom of Information Act.

Dear Mr. Greenstone:

Thank you for your letter of January 8, 2003, concerning the effect of the new software products on the record/non-record function of the EOP email system. We understand that the technological complexities concerning the interface of Microsoft Office with the current email electronic recordkeeping system, known as the Automated Records Management System (ARMS), make it infeasible to continue this function at present.

However, as we have discussed, NARA believes that the EOP should make every effort to install a new electronic recordkeeping system for email as soon as possible that would accommodate this function and would also facilitate other important records management functions. As you know, the Presidential Records Act (PRA) requires that, to the extent practicable, personal records (i.e., non-records) be filed separately from Presidential records. Similarly, the records disposition schedule that governs the email records of federal agency components of the EOP requires that temporary records be separated from permanent records; implicit in the handling of federal records is that non-records will also be separated, as was accomplished under the existing system.

In the interim, you have indicated your support of a partial solution to this problem, by instructing all EOP staff to mark explicitly all non-record or personal emails as such within the subject line of the email. Such a practice will greatly facilitate NARA's future ability to protect from inappropriate disclosure personal non-record emails under both the PRA and the Freedom of Information Act.

INTERVIEW OF THE PRESIDENT
BY TELEMUNDO

The Library

3:10 P.M. EST

Q Thank you for the opportunity. My first question is about Mr. Miguel Estrada and the whole controversy around him. What do you think, how do you feel about that?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I am -- I'm upset, because Miguel Estrada is a very good man, and I believe he is being treated unfairly. Miguel Estrada es una persona que -- he symbolizes el sueno Americano. He came to this country at age 17, de Honduras. He studied -- he could barely speak English. He studied hard, he went to Harvard Law School. He's a brilliant lawyer. He's practiced in front of the Supreme Court.

So I named him to a high court. And instead of people looking at his qualifications, they're playing shameful politics. And I'm going to fight for his nomination, because he's not only brilliant, but he speaks to the greatness of America. But it's not just me that feels that way about Miguel. I mean, LULAC and organizations -- mainstream organizations that represent the Hispanic voice believe strongly that Miguel should be on the court.

Q Why do you think there's such a bitterness against Estrada? You were talking about shameful politics. Why do you think something like that is happening?

THE PRESIDENT: I think it's causas politicas. It's simple politics. It's certainly not -- the fight is not over his qualifications, because he's plenty qualified. Many Democrats say he's qualified. The fight isn't over his capacity to think. He's brilliant, he's a brilliant lawyer. Republicans and Democrats say that. It's got to be politics. And that's sad. Esso es muy triste, porque Miguel Estrada es un hombre inteligente, muy bueno, porque ser una juez grande.

Q Is there an anti-Hispanic feeling in some of the people that are opposing Estrada?

THE PRESIDENT: Espero que no, espero que no. No se, pero -- I think it's -- I would hope it's simply politics, and not anti-Hispanic. That would be the opposite of what Miguel represents. Miguel represents the greatness of America. To oppose him for racial reasons would be -- that would be anti the greatness of -- I don't think so. I think people -- I think it's just pure politics.

Q In a filibuster they can talk until they basically lose their voices, no?

THE PRESIDENT: Si. (Laughter.)

Q So the Republican side is ready to have the patience to wait for --

THE PRESIDENT: Si, espero que si. That's what I've told the Senate. I said, let's fight for Miguel. If we believe he's a good man, if we believe he represents the story of America, stand strong. And I expect the Senate to stand strong, because I'm going to.

Q What do you want to tell the Hispanic community who is looking at this interview?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, I'm going to tell them, first of all, Miguel Estrada is an important symbol, and he's a good man, and we expect him to be confirmed. And they've got a -- when I name somebody, George Bush is going to stand by his side. But that I will continue to reach out to the Hispanic community and find people from the Hispanic community to serve not only as judges, but in my administration. It's important for people to feel a part of this -- the people in this country to feel like they're going to be included in the governance of this country, whether it be on the executive branch or the judiciary.

Q If you allow me, I'm going to change the subject.

THE PRESIDENT: Si.

Q There's a very bad dictator in another part of the world. He doesn't like you, you don't like him. But I want to talk first about another dictator than maybe you're thinking about, I'm talking about Kim in North Korea.

THE PRESIDENT: Si, si.

Q He looks as dangerous as Saddam Hussein. He sounds maybe even more dangerous as Saddam Hussein. And why not maybe the symmetry in terms of going against that position, us against Saddam?

THE PRESIDENT: Si. Well, first of all, Saddam is, in my judgment, more dangerous because he lives in a part of the world where he can create tremendous havoc. He's richer; he's got $20 billion a year of cash flow; he's got the capacity to buy weapons. Plus, he's linked with terrorist groups, groups that have hurt America in the past.

The key -- the thing that people must understand is, we must not allow Saddam to develop weapons to the point where North Korea perhaps has developed a weapon. In other words, the North Korean example should serve as what we ought not to let happen in Iraq, because we would be in real problems then.

But we'll deal with North Korea, too. It's -- this is -- unlike Iraq, the North Korean issue has just been placed to the United Nations. The Iraq issue has been in the United Nations now for 12 years. We will deal with North Korea. I believe we can solve this diplomatically. I don't -- I hope we can solve the Iraq issue diplomatically. But if you look at past behavior, it's pretty clear that he is not interested in disarming.

Q It doesn't look like Saddam will change his tune, according to what he's doing and saying. With things like they are right now, are we going to be at war with Iraq by middle of March?

THE PRESIDENT: Well, that's very hard for me to tell. Of course, war is my last option. I would hope that the U.N. Security Council resolutions will be effective. We're trying to make sure they are effective by showing some muscle. But if he won't disarm, we will disarm him. And even if I knew the date, I wouldn't share it with my friend because I don't want to share it with him -- he's probably watching this interview right now. But he must know that we are serious about keeping the peace by disarming Saddam.

Q Is it correct to say that at some point you would establish a deadline?

THE PRESIDENT: It is clear to say at some point in time it will be evident that Saddam has defied the U.N. one more time. He's defying it now, and at some point in time, obviously, this must come to an end.

Q And it's a matter of weeks?

THE PRESIDENT: Yes, it's sooner, rather than later, I think is the best way to describe it.

Q There is a situation with terrorist groups in Colombia.

THE PRESIDENT: Si.

Q They executed an American, they kidnapped -- now they have three Americans. The President -- President Uribe is asking for help against terrorism. When is the United States is going to -- are you going to send more troops? Now we have some special ops there.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, we made a commitment to the Uribe government that we will help him in narco-terrorism, and we are. The first commitment was made by Uribe, himself, who is a very strong leader. I'm impressed by my fellow leader. He's got a clear vision about how to deal with terror. He has asked us for help and we are providing help. Congress has been very forthcoming. But there are limitations as to the nature of the help we provide, and we will uphold the limitations placed on us by Congress. President Uribe understands that.

In terms of this incident, we are working very closely with the Colombian President. We are sharing intelligence. He is coordinating his troops in the jungle to try to rescue the three that still remain -- one man had bullet holes in the back of his head, clearly an execution. So we're dealing with cold-blooded killers that need to be treated as cold-blooded killers.

Q A personal question.

THE PRESIDENT: Si.

Q You are the most powerful man in the world and, at the same time, you have a gigantic responsibility. At some point in the next few weeks, maybe 150,000 people are going to be put in harm's way defending a cause. How do you sleep? How do you feel? Are you at peace with your soul?

THE PRESIDENT: Si. I'm at peace with my soul because I trust in the Lord. I'm at peace in my soul because I believe strongly in peace. I have a responsibility to protect American lives. And I'm at peace knowing I'm doing everything in my power to do that.

I am honored to be in the position I am in. It does have responsibilities, but I've got a great team with me. More importantly, I'm the President of a great country and I feel that -- feel the strength of the country and I feel the prayers of the people. I'm confident in the future, confident in a peaceful future because I'm confident in the American people and the American values.

Q Something about the immigrants. You were working with the Mexican government.

THE PRESIDENT: Yes.

Q And you were very close to have something in the process before September 2001. Now things are on basically a stalemate. But a couple of weeks ago, the Foreign Minister of Mexico said something that sounded very pessimistic -- maybe 25 years or something?

THE PRESIDENT: No, that's not true.

Q What --

THE PRESIDENT: Well, first of all, we are modernizing our border. I mean, like for example, in the Texas border -- I know a lot about it -- there's a lot of traffic back and forth and we're making it easier for people to travel back and forth on a daily basis. That's positive. And at the same time, by the way, making the border more secure -- neither Mexico, nor the United States wants contraband flowing either way. So we're making good progress there.

In terms of how you deal with people living in the United States, we'll work with Mexico to develop a plan that makes sense. But the problem is, I couldn't even get 245I, the family reunification bill, through the Congress. I pushed it. I thought it was a good idea. I worked with both Republicans and Democrats, and it got defeated.

And so what I tell my friend, Vicente Fox -- and he's a very good friend and a good man -- I said, look, there's a reality that we're dealing with now, so let's see if we can't work some other things to get to the point where eventually we can get Congress to come around to the point of view where we must treat -- figure out how the treat the Mexicans living here in the United States in a different way.

But we'll make progress on it. Obviously, right after September the 11th, it became impossible to, because the mood of the Congress switched. And that's -- as I say, 245I seemed like a simple gesture to me, which is, allow for families to be reunified quickly. I couldn't get the Congress to budge. So it's the reality I deal with. But, nevertheless, I do believe there's reasonable immigration policy.

But we ought to match a willing worker with a willing employer. It's in America's interest to do that. There are people who want to work and people who need jobs, who need workers -- have jobs and need workers. And we ought to match that, facilitate that match. And to me, that makes good immigration policy.

Q Thank you very much for the opportunity. Muchas gracias.

THE PRESIDENT: Si.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

Friday, February 21, 2003

KEY POINTS***

- The UN Security Council and all nations in the world have a responsibility to see that Saddam Hussein's regime is disarmed, and that the will of the international community is enforced.

- We must decide to confront the gravest security challenge of our time: the nexus between outlaw regimes, the proliferation of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons, and spread of global terror.

- The United Nations is the most important international and multilateral institution in the world. We all have a responsibility to strengthen, and not weaken, it.

- Twelve years of sanctions and inspections have not stopped Saddam's quest for chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

- The outlaw Iraqi regime's chemical and biological weapons stockpiles, its continued pursuit of nuclear weapons and its ties to global terrorists are a threat to the US, our allies and friends and to the Iraqi people.

- The Iraqi regime has not decided to disarm. What we heard from the inspectors on Friday was that the Iraqis have taken some superficial steps. But these do not amount to a strategic decision to disarm.

- More inspections, or more inspectors, will do no good unless Iraq makes the decision to disarm. Dr. Blix himself has said that lack of inspectors is not the problem, lack of Iraqi compliance is the problem.

- The UNSC must rise to the challenge posed by Saddam Hussein's regime. The UNSC must choose to be relevant - it must act to enforce not just 1441, but all 17 resolutions that the Iraqi regime continues to defy.

- Freedom-loving nations are determined that Iraq will be disarmed -- one way or another, sooner rather than later.

- The President will continue to consult members of Congress, our allies and friends and the UNSC during this final, diplomatic phase.

BYRON YORK
This is how the filibuster will fall to pieces

Right now the Senate debate over the appeals court nomination of Miguel Estrada seems hopelessly deadlocked. When Democrat Harry Reid of Nevada says, &It doesn't matter if there is one cloture vote or 50 cloture votes, we will all be together,8 and when Republican Orrin Hatch or Utah says, & I'll stay here +til hell freezes over8 -- well, things don't look good.

But beneath all the tough rhetoric -- and the lobbying campaigns of interest groups on both sides -- there's a relatively simple solution to the standoff. And it might emerge soon after lawmakers come back from the Presidents, Day recess.

The two main Democratic objections to Estrada are that he has not fully answered questions about his legal views and that the Bush administration has refused to release internal Justice Department memos he wrote while he served in the Solicitor General,s office -- memos that Democrats contend might contain insights into Estrada's legal thinking.

&For the Senate to make an informed decision about Mr. Estrada's nomination, it is essential that we receive the information requested and answers to these basic legal questions,8 Minority Leader Tom Daschle (S.D.) and ranking Judiciary Committee Democrat Patrick Leahy (Vt.) wrote in a Feb. 11 letter to the president.

The White House responded the next day with a 15-page, single-spaced letter from counsel Alberto Gonzales. Most news reports characterized it as a refusal of Daschle and Leahy's request * which it was * but missed the letter's between-the-lines suggestions for compromise.

On the issue of questions for Estrada, Gonzales noted that Daschle and Leahy cited just one inquiry that Estrada did not answer -- a question about his judicial role models. Gonzales wrote that Estrada in fact discussed that very issue in response to a written question from Sen. Richard Durbin (Ill.).

& Beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to [Estrada],8 Gonzales said. &Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day committee hearing.8

In that sentence is what appears to be a White House message to Democrats: You can ask more questions. There,s nothing in Gonzales,s letter to suggest that Estrada would not answer them.

On the second issue, the White House is standing firm against giving the internal Justice Department papers to the Senate. But Gonzales went out of his way to point out that some high-level Democrats have already seen the documents. The papers were, after all, written by Estrada during his time in the Clinton Justice Department. &It also is important to recognize that [Clinton] political appointees have read virtually all of the memoranda in question,8 Gonzales wrote, &namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman.8

Gonzales also points out that none of those former officials have objected to Estrada's nomination. That,s another unspoken suggestion to Democrats: If you want to know more about the memos, ask the Democrats who have seen them. Days, Dellinger, and Waxman would most likely cite the same confidentiality concerns that led them to join other former Solicitors General in declaring release of the memos to be a bad idea, but they might be able say there was nothing in the papers that they found disturbing.

Republicans know there are some moderate Democrats who do not passionately oppose Estrada but who have so far stuck with the party in upholding the filibuster. Republicans also realize that, since hard-line Democratic leaders have made specific demands and vowed Estrada would not be confirmed unless the White House met those demands, those moderate Democrats will need some sort of Republican gesture they can use as cover to change their minds and stop supporting the filibuster.

That might already be happening. It has not been widely reported, but while the filibuster has been going on, Estrada has met with several Democratic senators, among them Mary Landrieu (La.), Blanche Lincoln (Ark.), Bill Nelson (Neb.), Herb Kohl (Wis.), and Thomas Carper (Del.). Presumably he has been answering some questions.

A few more such meetings, along with some reassuring words about the content of the Justice Department memos, and some moderate Democratic minds might change.

And in the end, there won't be 50 cloture votes, as Harry Reid suggested. There might not even be one. With four or five more moderate Democrats on board, Republicans will request, as they have several times already, that the Senate unanimously agree to end debate and give Estrada an up-or-down vote. So far, Democrats have refused every such request. But that might change soon.

Will talk to judge and wittes of post about judge doing taking exception piece in response to dionne piece today. Dionne does explain a root cause of D objections but he fails to note that bush 41 noms received same treatment and fails to note that president has prescribed a way out of the cycle of revenge and bitterness. He also assumes that judging is an inherently political policymaking task, which it is not. Any objection/concern to drafting something like this which we would of course shoot to you monday before submitting to post?

Rove/Mehlman have signed off. Judge, are you ok with submitting this?

February 21, 2003

Dear Editor:

I write in response to two points in Al Hunt's column of February 20.

First, Mr. Hunt writes that President Bush has nominated only one Hispanic to the U.S. Courts of Appeals. In fact, three of President Bush,s 34 appeals court nominees (9%) have been Hispanic: Miguel Estrada (D.C. Circuit), Ed Prado (Texas, 5th Circuit), and Consuelo Callahan (California, 9th Circuit).
Second, Mr. Hunt contends that the appointment of judges has been a non-issue in recent elections. In campaigning for Republican Senate candidates last fall, however, President Bush repeatedly discussed the Democrat Senate's mistreatment of his judicial nominees. The President emphasized that the voters should elect Senators who would treat the President's judicial nominees fairly and who would vote to confirm them. While a number of issues obviously may influence voters, many observers believe that the judges issue was important in the 2002 Senate elections in Texas, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Colorado, Missouri, and Minnesota, among other states. And the Republicans regained majority-party status in the Senate.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

With Ben and Ted being cleared for off site duty on Tuesday (the 25th), the question is when they should be thrown into the pool. I think it would make sense to insert them in the line up after Noel's Feb. 24-26 rotation and then bump the schedule back a week for the rest of us.

I am open to suggestions.

Here is the current schedule:

Feb. 24-26: Noel
Feb. 26-28: Kyle
Mar. 3-5: Helgi
Mar. 5-7: Brett
Mar. 10-12: Bart
Mar. 12-14: Noel

Leonard,

Thank you and Congrats to you on the new chapter. I would love to oblige, but because it is on the Hill, I want input from DoJ and WH leg shops before I commit. Looks like I am pretty open in March, though.

Best,

viet

Viet-

I hope this email finds you well. I was so happy to hear about your marriage plans. Best wishes to you both!

I am writing in the hopes that you'd be willing to do a brief talk on the Hill regarding the judicial confirmations crisis, probably for some time in March. As you may have heard, the Federalist Society now has a Capitol Hill chapter that has received status as a CSO (Congressional Staff Organization). This would be the group's third meeting (Congressman John Shadegg and Boyden were the first two).

You would expect a lunch crowd of 50-70 staff and members. We probably would hold the meeting on the Senate side given the topic.

What do you think? Are there any dates in March where the 12-1 pm hour would not work?

Memorandum to all Department of Homeland Security Career Employees (Other than Career Senior Executive Service, Secret Service or Certain Employees of the Customs Service)

Subject: Rules on Political Activities

The Hatch Act restricts the political activity of executive branch employees of the federal government. Employees who violate the Hatch Act face removal from their position or suspension of not less than 30 days. Federal employees also should be aware that certain political activities also may be criminal offenses under various provisions of title 18 of the U.S. Code. This memorandum outlines the restrictions on political activities that apply to career employees at the Department of Homeland Security, other than employees of the Senior Executive Service ("SES"), the Secret Service, or the Office of Investigative Programs of the United States Customs. This guidance reflects amendments made in 1993 to the Hatch Act. The Hatch Act amendments made it possible for you to take an active part in political campaigns and other political activities when not on duty. Under the amendments, however, you are prohibited from personally soliciting, accepting, or receiving partisan political contributions, running for partisan political office, and engaging in otherwise permissible political activities while on duty. If you have any questions regarding whether an activity is permissible, contact the Designated Agency Ethics Official.

Permissible Activities

NOTE:

- Time, place and manner restrictions: you may NOT engage in the otherwise permissible partisan political activities listed below while on duty, or in a government office or building, or wearing a uniform, badge, insignia or other item identifying you as a federal employee, or using a government owned or leased vehicle, or using a privately owned vehicle that is used on a recurrent basis for official business or that is clearly identified as being on government business.

- "On duty" includes the time period during which you are either (1) in a pay status other than paid leave, compensatory time off, credit hours, time off as an incentive award, or excused or authorized absence (including leave without pay), or (2) representing any agency or instrumentality of the United States in an official capacity.

- Registration and Voting: You may register and vote.

- Freedom of Expression: You may:

- Express personal opinions on partisan political subjects and candidates, subject to the prohibition on misuse of official position described below;

- Sign a partisan political petition as an individual;

- Display partisan pictures, signs, stickers, badges or buttons as an individual expression of opinion;

- Place a partisan bumper sticker on your privately owned vehicle and park it in a federal lot. If the car is used for official business on a recurrent basis or is clearly identified as being used on official business, however, you must cover the sticker while the car is being used for official business; and

- Place a sign or banner supporting a partisan political candidate at your home.

- Political Contributions: You may make financial contributions to partisan political candidates, parties, or organizations, including to campaign committees or party committees, subject to state and federal limitations.

- Political Party Participation: You may:

  - Give a speech or keynote address at a partisan political fundraiser, as long as you do not solicit political contributions;

- Allow your name (but not your official title) to appear on an invitation to a partisan political fundraiser as a guest speaker, as long as the reference in no way suggests that you solicit or encourage contributions;

- Organize mail or phone solicitations, or stuff envelopes with requests for partisan political contributions (including funds, in-kind contributions, paid and unpaid services from businesses, and paid and unpaid services from individuals), as long as you do not personally solicit, accept or receive contributions;

- Help organize a partisan fundraiser including supplying names for the invitation list, as long as you do not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions;

- Donate an item to be auctioned off in a fundraising raffle for the benefit of a partisan candidate's campaign;

- Solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services related to partisan fundraising from an individual other than a subordinate; and

- Attend a partisan political convention or rally, fundraising function, election party, or meet-the candidate event.

- Endorsements: You may endorse or oppose a candidate for partisan political office in a political advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material, provided you do not reference your title or official position.

- Sign a nonpartisan political petition as an individual;

- Campaign for or against nonpartisan issues, such as referendum questions, constitutional amendments, or municipal reforms;

- Participate actively as a candidate or in support of a candidate in a nonpartisan election; and

- Serve as an election judge or clerk, or in a similar position, performing nonpartisan duties as prescribed by state or local law.

- Authorized Statements of Administration Policy: You may defend or debate current Administration policy in an appropriate forum in your official capacity, when properly authorized.

- Support for a Candidate who is a Family Member: If your spouse or other family member is a candidate for partisan political office, you may:

  - Attend a fundraiser or rally supporting him or her, stand in the receiving line, sit at the head table, distribute flyers and urge others to vote for him or her, provided that you do not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions of money or paid or unpaid services or sell or collect money for tickets to the fundraiser or rally.

  - Appear with your candidate family member in a political advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material and urge others to vote for your spouse or family member, as long as you do not personally solicit political contributions.

- Fundraising: You may not personally solicit, accept, or receive a partisan political contribution (except in certain circumstances involving a federal labor union), including by allowing your name to be listed on a fundraising invitation as a point of contact for the fundraiser or as part of the host committee for such an event, or by personally hosting a fundraiser at your residence. A "political contribution" includes funds, in-kind goods, and paid or unpaid personal services.

  - Exception: you may solicit, accept and receive uncompensated volunteer services from individuals who are not your subordinates (e.g., you may work in a phone bank asking individuals to volunteer).

- Misuse of Official Position: You may not:

  - Use your official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election (for example, you may not use your official authority to coerce any person to participate in partisan political activity, or solicit, accept, or receive partisan political contributions from anyone, with the exception for uncompensated voluntary services from individuals noted above);

  - Knowingly solicit or discourage the participation in any partisan political activity of any employee or person regulated by or doing business with the Department (for example, someone who has a matter pending before the Department); or

  - Use your official title while participating in otherwise permissible political activities.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: February 17, 2003

TO: Career Senior Executive Service,
Secret Service, and Certain Employees of the Customs Service

FROM: Secretary Tom Ridge
Deputy Secretary Gordon England

Subject: Rules on Political Activities

The Hatch Act restricts the political activity of executive branch employees of the federal government. Employees who violate the Hatch Act face removal from their position or suspension of not less than 30 days. Federal employees also should be aware that certain political activities also may be criminal offenses under various provisions of title 18 of the U.S. Code. This memorandum outlines the restrictions on political activities that apply to career Senior Executive Service ("SES"), Secret Service, and employees of the Office of Investigative Programs of the United States Customs Service.

Under the Hatch Act, you are prohibited from soliciting, accepting or receiving partisan political contributions, from running for partisan political office, and from pursuing otherwise permissible political activities while on duty. Although the amendments to the Act in 1993 liberalized the statutory restrictions on taking an active part in partisan political campaigns for most career employees, it did NOT do so for the career Senior Executive Service, Secret Service personnel, or employees of the Office of Investigative Programs of the United States Customs Service. You remain subject to the previous Hatch Act restrictions prohibiting you from taking an active part in such campaigns. If you have any questions about whether an activity is permissible, contact the Designated Agency Ethics Official.

Permissible Activities

NOTE:

- Time, place and manner restrictions: you may NOT engage in the otherwise permissible partisan activities listed below while on duty, or in a government office or building, or wearing a uniform, badge, insignia or other item identifying you as a federal employee, or using a government owned or leased vehicle, or using a privately owned vehicle that is used on a recurrent basis for official business or that is clearly identified as being on government business.

- Freedom of Expression: You may:

  - Sign a partisan political petition as an individual;

  - Display partisan pictures, signs, stickers, badges or buttons as an individual expression of opinion;

  - Place a partisan bumper sticker on your privately owned vehicle and park it in a federal parking facility. - Attendance at Political Events. ■ Fundraising: You may not:

- Personally solicit, accept, or receive a partisan political contribution (except in certain circumstances involving a federal labor union), including by allowing your name to be listed on a fundraising invitation as a point of contact for the fundraiser or as part of the host committee for such an event or by personally hosting a fundraiser at your residence; or

The Deputy Secretary

FROM: Clark Kent Ervin – Acting Inspector General

SUBJECT: Permitted and Prohibited Political Activity

Per the Chief of Staff's request, my office provides herewith suggested memoranda that you may consider issuing to applicable department employees regarding what political activity they may and may not engage in. We have modeled these memoranda on the guidance issued by the Secretaries of State and Defense, reasoning that this department and its employees likewise should be as apolitical and nonpartisan as possible.

The Judge did great on the Fox News and ABC interviews.; (ABC was a little stronger) Both are scheduled to air tomorrow during the Sunday Shows.; Both George and Tony asked about strategy for moving forward - if we'd compromise.; He said that we are not going to compromise and that we would defer to Sen leaders on the strategy, but that we are not going to compromise on the SG documents and went into why.; Overall really good - this coupled with the radio address should be a great way to kick off the week.;

I thought the transcript from Fox actually read very strong. And I saw ABC and agree with your assessment. ABC kind of set us up by letting Schumer take pot shots at the Judge's comments. But no real surprise that they did that, I suppose.

The post-Sept. 11 John Ashcroft: an unfamiliar grimness, an unusual chance to make his mark

By RON KAMPEAS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) ? Descending into National Airport aboard the last plane to fly on Sept. 11, 2001, the attorney general kept his counsel. John Ashcroft watched the Pentagon smolder black that afternoon and mourned Barbara Olsen, a beloved friend among its ashes.
His silence ended when he landed. He ordered his offices moved from the Justice Department, with its broad rooms and stunning views of the Capitol, to a windowless bunker across the street at FBI headquarters.
The somber directive was a harbinger of decisions Ashcroft cast in the pall of Sept. 11.
Some decisions are grounded in the age of terrorism; others are wholly unrelated but no less dramatic.
A short list includes broadly enhancing search powers, puncturing attorney-client privilege, clamping down on public information access, rolling back pollution enforcement and terminating some anti-discrimination settlements in the work place.
Such sweeping powers were once unimaginable for a public figure who lost his Senate seat in Missouri to a dead man and went through a fiery confirmation that made him attorney general by the narrowest vote ever for that position.
Aides acknowledge Ashcroft's agenda derived momentum from the worst single crime ever committed on American soil.
"Sept. 11 gave us an opportunity to do what should have been done long ago," said Ralph Boyd, who heads the Justice Department's civil rights division. Boyd meant that Ashcroft now had a better chance to correct what he saw as a bias for affirmative action in the government.
It's a view consistent with Ashcroft's description in his autobiography of his bumpy political career ? "for every crucifixion, a resurrection is waiting to follow." But critics are unnerved by changes made under cover of a national tragedy.
Even some of Ashcroft's personal beliefs seem to have evolved. The senator who crusaded against Big Government is now its toughest enforcer.
The separation-of-powers enthusiast now says he is too busy or worried about leaks to testify often to Congress. The opponent of secret recordings now wants to grant police the right to eavesdrop for up to two weeks before getting a judge's sanction.
"John Ashcroft as attorney general is not who I thought I knew as Senator Ashcroft," Dick Armey, an old Ashcroft pal and the just-retired Republican house majority leader, told the National Journal. Armey was especially demoralized by the new powers Ashcroft sought through the USA Patriot Act.
But Viet Dinh, the assistant attorney general who was the lead drafter of the Patriot Act, says Ashcroft's new purpose is wrapped with caution. "We don't shoot from the hip just because our sleeves are rolled up," he said in an interview. "We have to be methodical, precise and careful about all our actions."

???

Ashcroft's deliberate Midwestern tones evoke a slightly caffeinated John Wayne. He peppers his speech with equal parts hellfire and high tech. "The terrorists have an interest in very serious weapons of chemistry, evil biology and even radiological consequences," Ashcroft said recently.

Since the terrorist attacks, he's rarely been home to his beloved Missouri farm and has suspended his morning prayer meetings.

He commands loyalty: His favorite admonishment, "Think outside the box, think inside the Constitution," is repeated over and over by aides in interviews. Ashcroft tends to speak in rehearsed lines and in the most formal settings ? a speech, a news conference ? rather than mixing it up on the TV talk shows.

He is resilient and almost seems to enjoy bouncing back from defeat. His most significant loss was his Senate seat ? in 2000 to Missouri Gov. Mel Carnahan, three weeks after Carnahan died in a plane crash.

But while the public rarely sees his lighter side, he can be a cutup. "We're already reading all your e-mail anyway," he once teased Armey, "and it's not that interesting." In less weighty days, he was part of a quartet of singing senators.

Flying back from a Milwaukee trip on the day of the terrorist attacks, Ashcroft learned that his friend Barbara ? wife of Solicitor General Theodore Olsen ? had been on the hijacked plane that crashed into the Pentagon. He'd had dinner with her the weekend before.

Adam Ciongoli, a senior adviser who has known Ashcroft for years, saw Ashcroft's self-deprecating humor vanish that Sept. 11, at least for a while. "There was a clear sense, it's a whole new ballgame, the entire world had changed ? and it had," Ciongoli said.

Defenders and detractors agree that Ashcroft's changes will reverberate long after the war on terrorism has subsided. They differ on whether Ashcroft is exploiting Sept. 11 or whether the attacks in New York and Washington permanently changed how Americans live.

"We cannot sit still and think that all of the laws we had to prevent previous threats will work," Ashcroft says.

Civil libertarians don't agree.

When it comes to civil rights, said Laura Murphy, the congressional liaison for ACLU, "They can't say, 'Oh, it's war ? never mind!"'

At the center of the debate is the USA Patriot Act, drafted by Ashcroft's top lawyers and passed after Sept. 11 with bipartisan support. The act extended authorization for "roving" wiretaps ? tapping someone at whatever phone he uses, not just those he owns ? to the secretive Foreign Intelligence and Surveillance Court. Since then, Ashcroft has sought unprecedented "John Doe" taps of individuals who exist in theory only ? a license, civil libertarians say, for fishing expeditions.

The act also allows "sneak and peek" warrants for searches without notifying the homeowner, erodes a decades-old wall aimed at preventing domestic spying and quashes the ancient tradition of attorney-client privilege in terrorist cases.

In November 2001, Ashcroft ended the practice of cooperating with Freedom of Information Act requests, saying he would back refusals to consider requests. "There certainly is a climate of restriction in this administration, an about-face," said Will Ferroggiaro of the National Security Archive, a nongovernment research institute and library at George Washington University.

Ashcroft pledged before Sept. 11 to remove race as a factor in police stops and searches. He now encourages law enforcement to profile people from countries with ties to terror, a strategy aides defend.

"Country-of-origin profiling is not racial profiling ? any country may include multiple races," his deputy chief of staff, David Israelite, said in an interview.

On the environment, Ashcroft has virtually ended his department's periodic checks on older factories to make sure they are not abusing pollution laws.

"It's like he's given the polluters get-out-of-jail-free cards," said

Mike Casey of the activist Environmental Working Group.
Ashcroft aides say actions against racial profiling and environmental abuses are important but for now must give way to national security.
"His focus has changed dramatically," Israelite said. "Since Sept. 11, he probably spends 90 percent of each day on terrorism matters."
Even so, activism has accelerated in many areas.
He's overruled U.S. attorneys who forgo the death penalty and insisted on capital charges 28 times ? a rate many times that of his predecessors.
His civil rights division has terminated a variety of discrimination enforcement cases, some dating back to the Reagan administration.
Ashcroft has invoked federal powers to override state laws decriminalizing some forms of marijuana use and euthanasia.
In 1997 Ashcroft called a Clinton administration attempt to launch international e-mail monitoring as a means of tracking terror "paranoid and prurient ... wholly unhealthy." In November, his department persuaded a panel of judges to endorse just such monitoring.

Changes at Justice
Eds: With BC-Ashcroft Arisen, Adv27
By The Associated Press
A look at some of the policy changes achieved by Attorney General John Ashcroft since the Sept. 11 attacks:
?Enhanced search powers, including "sneak and peek" searches without the homeowner's knowledge and extending roving wiretap authority to the secretive Foreign Intelligence and Surveillance court.
?More cooperation between the CIA and domestic law enforcement despite provisions added in the 1970s to prevent domestic spying.
?Discouraged staff from cooperating with Freedom of Information Act requests.
?Virtually ended checks on whether older factories are being used to bypass Environmental Protection Agency restrictions.
?Terminated a number of "consent decrees" that enforce increased hiring of women and minorities and sensitivity training in workplaces that his predecessors found to be discriminating against women, blacks and Hispanics.
?Waived some attorney-client privileges in terror cases despite a custom that dates back 500 years in British common law.

Rena Comisac has asked for a PDF version (or if not that - faxed copy) of the Gonzales letter - signed and on letterhead. It's for George Will (at his request) - and she would prefer to provide him an actual copy of the official letter. Thanks! (Let me know if you need her e-mail or fax number)

February 12, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter to the President dated February 11, 2003. In the letter, you renew your previous request for confidential Department of Justice memoranda in which Mr. Estrada provided appeal, certiorari, and amicus recommendations while he was a career attorney in the Office of Solicitor General for four years in the Clinton Administration and one year in the George H.W. Bush Administration. You also request that Mr. Estrada answer certain questions beyond the extensive questions that he already answered appropriately and forthrightly during his Committee hearing and in follow-up written responses.

We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate must make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. However, your requests have no persuasive support in the history and precedent of judicial appointments. Indeed, the relevant history and precedent convincingly demonstrate that a new and shifting standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

First, as the Department of Justice explained in its letters of June 5, 2002, October 8, 2002, and January 23, 2003, all living former Solicitors General (four Democrats and three Republicans) have strongly opposed your request for Solicitor General memoranda and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. Even more telling, we are informed that the Senate has not requested memos such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department (including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office). The few isolated examples you have cited – in which targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues were accommodated for nominees to positions other than the U.S. Courts of Appeals – similarly do not support your request here.

Second, as explained more fully below with respect to your request that Mr. Estrada answer additional questions, the only specific question identified in your letter refers to his judicial role models. You claim that Mr. Estrada refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in his written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject that Mr. Estrada submitted three months ago, he cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires (he clerked for Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse), and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question." Your letter to the President ignores Mr. Estrada's answer to this question. In any event, beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to him. Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day Committee hearing. Since the hearing, Mr. Estrada also has met (and continues to meet) with numerous Democrat Senators interested in learning more about his record. Finally, as I will explain below, Mr. Estrada forthrightly answered numerous questions about his judicial approach and views in a manner that matches or greatly exceeds answers demanded of previous appeals court nominees.

With respect, it appears that a double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. That is highly unfair and inappropriate, particularly for this well-qualified and well-respected nominee.

I will turn now in more detail to the various issues raised by your letter. I will address them at some length given the importance of this issue and the nature of your requests.

I. Miguel Estrada's Qualifications and Bipartisan Support

Miguel Estrada is an extraordinarily qualified judicial nominee. The American Bar Association, which Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. The ABA rating was entirely appropriate in light of Mr. Estrada's superb record as Assistant to the Solicitor General in the Clinton and George H.W. Bush Administrations, as a federal prosecutor in New York, as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and in performing significant pro bono work.

Some who are misinformed have seized on Mr. Estrada's lack of prior judicial experience, but five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial experience, including two appointees of President Clinton and one appointee of President Carter. Miguel Estrada has tried numerous cases before federal juries, argued many cases in the federal appeals courts, and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. That is a record that few judicial nominees can match. And few lawyers, whatever their ideology or philosophy, have volunteered to represent a death row inmate pro bono before the Supreme Court as did Miguel Estrada.

Mr. Estrada's excellent legal qualifications are all the more extraordinary given his personal history. Simply put, Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country at age 17 from Honduras speaking little English. Through hard work and dedicated service to the United States, Miguel Estrada has risen to the very pinnacle of the legal profession. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic judge to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Given his record, his background, and his integrity, it is no surprise that Miguel Estrada is strongly supported by the vast majority of national Hispanic organizations. The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), for example, wrote to Senator Leahy to urge Mr. Estrada's confirmation and explain that he "is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth." A group of 19 Hispanic organizations, including LULAC and the Hispanic National Bar Association, recently wrote to the Senate urging "on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country" that "both parties in the U.S. Senate . . . put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land."

The current effort to filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination is particularly unjustified given that those who have worked with Miguel -- including prominent Democrat lawyers whom you know well -- strongly support his confirmation. For example, Ron Klain, who served as a high-ranking adviser to former Vice President Gore and former Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent. . . . [T]he challenges that he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need."

President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, wrote: "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. . . . In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity."

A bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice wrote: "We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." One former colleague, Richard Seamon, wrote that he is a pro-choice, lifelong Democrat with self-described "liberal views on most issues" who said he would "consider it a disgrace" if Mr. Estrada is not confirmed.

Similarly, Leonard Joy, head of the Federal Defender Division of the Legal Aid Society of New York, wrote that "Miguel would make an excellent Circuit Court Judge. He is as fine a lawyer as I have met and, on top of all his intellectual abilities and judgment he would bring to bear, he would bring a desirable diversity to the Court. I heartily recommend him."

Beyond the extensive personal testimony from those who worked side-by-side with him for many years, the performance reviews of Miguel for the years that he worked in the Office of Solicitor General gave him the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. The reviews stated that Miguel:

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

REV_00158436

In the two years that Miguel Estrada and Paul Bender worked together, Mr. Bender signed those reviews. These employment reviews thus call into serious question some press reports containing a negative comment from Mr. Bender about Mr. Estrada's temperament (which is the only negative comment made by anyone who actually knows Mr. Estrada). Just as important, President Clinton's Solicitor General Seth Waxman expressly refuted Mr. Bender's statement.

In sum, based on his experience, his intellect, his integrity, and his bipartisan support, Miguel Estrada should be confirmed promptly.

II. The Senate's Role

President Bush nominated Miguel Estrada nearly two years ago on May 9, 2001. As explained above, he is well-qualified and well-respected. By any traditional measure that the Senate has used to evaluate appeals court nominees, Miguel Estrada should have been confirmed long ago. Your letter and public statements indicate, however, that you are applying both a new standard and new tactics to this particular nominee.

As to the standard, the Senate has a very important role in the process, but the Senate's traditional approach to appeals court nominees, and the approach envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, is far different from the standard that you now seek to apply. Senator Biden stated the traditional approach in 1997: "Any person who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life, and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court." Congressional Record, March 19, 1997. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist No. 76. It was anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." No. 76.

As to tactics, you have indicated that some Senate Democrats intend to filibuster to prevent a vote on this nominee. As you know, there has never been a successful filibuster of a court of appeals nominee. Only a few years ago, Senator Leahy and other Democrat Senators expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

> Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

Senator Daschle similarly stated on October 5, 1999, that "[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much."

In his East Room speech of October 30, 2002, President Bush reiterated that every judicial nominee deserves a timely up-or-down floor vote in the Senate, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. Contrary to President Bush's attempts at permanent reform to bring order to the process, your current effort to employ a filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on the Estrada nomination may significantly exacerbate the cycle of bitterness and recrimination that President Bush has sought to resolve on a bipartisan basis. We fear that the damage caused by a filibuster could take many years to undo. To continue on this path would also be, in Senator Leahy's words, "a terrible disservice" to Mr. Estrada. We urge you to reconsider this extraordinary action, to end the filibuster of Mr. Estrada's nomination, and to allow the full Senate to vote up or down.

III. Request for Confidential Solicitor General Memos

You have suggested that Mr. Estrada's background, experience, and support are insufficient to assess his suitability for the D.C. Circuit. You have renewed your request for Solicitor General memos authored by Mr. Estrada. But every living former Solicitor General signed a joint letter to the Senate opposing your request. The letter was signed by Democrats Archibald Cox, Walter Dellinger, Drew Days, and Seth Waxman. They stated: "Any attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests – a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself. . . . Although we profoundly respect the Senate's duty to evaluate Mr. Estrada's fitness for the federal judiciary, we do not think that the confidentiality and integrity of internal deliberations should be sacrificed in the process."

It bears mention that the interest asserted here is that of the United States, not the personal interest of Mr. Estrada. Indeed, Mr. Estrada himself testified that "I have not opposed the release of those records. . . . I am exceptionally proud of every piece of legal work that I have done in my life. If it were up to me as a private citizen, I would be more than proud to have you look at everything that I have done for the government or for a private client."

The history of Senate confirmations of nominees who had previously worked in the Department of Justice makes clear that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada's nomination. Since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Of those 67 nominees, 38 had no prior judicial experience, like Miguel Estrada. The Department of Justice's review of those nomination records disclosed that in none of those cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the Department. In fact, the Department's review disclosed that the Senate did not even request such materials for a single one of these 67 nominees.

Of this group of 67 nominees, seven were nominees who had worked as a Deputy Solicitor General or Assistant to the Solicitor General. These seven nominees, nominated by Presidents of each party and confirmed by Senates controlled by each party, included Samuel Alito, Danny Boggs, William Bryson, Frank Easterbrook, Daniel Friedman, Richard Posner, and Raymond Randolph.

The five isolated historical examples you have cited do not support your current request. In each of those five cases, the Committee made a targeted request for specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Even in those isolated cases, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda written by those nominees were neither requested nor produced. With respect to Judge Bork's nomination, for example, the Committee received access to certain particular memoranda (many related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues). The vast majority of memoranda authored by Judge Bork were never received. With respect to Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents unrelated to Judge Trott's service to the Department. So, too, in the three other examples you cite, the Committee requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Of course, no such allegations have been made in the case of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the examples you have cited only highlight the lack of precedent for the current request. As the Justice Department has explained to you previously, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memos from the Office of Solicitor General – and deliberative Department of Justice memoranda more broadly – must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process. That is a fundamental principle that has been followed irrespective of the party that controls the White House and the Senate.

Your continued requests for these memoranda have provoked a foreseeable and inevitable conflict that, in turn, has been cited as a basis for obstructing a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination. Respectfully, the conflict is unnecessary because your desire to assess the nominee can be readily accommodated in many ways other than intruding into and severely damaging the deliberative process of the Office of Solicitor General. For example, you can review Mr. Estrada's written briefs and oral arguments both as an attorney for the United States and in private practice. As you know, those documents are publicly available and easily accessible; that said, we would be pleased to facilitate your access to them. (Mr. Estrada's hearing transcript suggests that no Democrat Member of the Committee had read Mr. Estrada's many dozens of Solicitor General merits briefs, certiorari petitions, and opposition briefs or the transcripts of his 14 oral arguments when he represented the United States.) You also may consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time (discussed above) and examine the nominee's written performance reviews (also discussed above). There is more than ample information for you to assess Mr. Estrada's qualifications and suitability for the D.C. Circuit based on the traditional standards the Senate has employed.

It also is important to recognize that political appointees of President Clinton have read virtually all of the memoranda in question – namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman. None of those three highly respected Democrat lawyers has expressed any concern whatever about Mr. Estrada's nomination. Indeed, Mr. Waxman wrote a letter of strong support, and Mr. Days made public statements in support of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the historical record and past precedent convincingly demonstrate that this request creates and applies an unfair double standard to Miguel Estrada.

IV. Request that Miguel Estrada Answer Additional Questions

Your letter also suggests that Miguel Estrada should answer certain questions that he allegedly did not answer in his hearing. To begin with, we do not know what your specific questions are. In addition, this request frankly comes as a surprise given that (i) Senator Schumer chaired the hearing on Mr. Estrada, (ii) the hearing lasted an entire day, (iii) Senators at the all-day hearing asked numerous far-reaching questions that Mr. Estrada answered forthrightly and appropriately, and (iv) only two of the 10 Democrat Senators then on the Committee even submitted any follow-up written questions, and they submitted only a few questions (in marked contrast to other nominees who received voluminous follow-up questions).

It also bears mention that Mr. Estrada has personally met with a large number of Democrat Senators, including Senators Landrieu, Lincoln, Bill Nelson, Ben Nelson, Leahy, Feinstein, Kohl, and Breaux; is scheduled to meet with Senator Carper; and would be pleased to meet with additional Senators.

The only specific question your letter identifies refers to Mr. Estrada's judicial role models, and you claim that he refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in Mr. Estrada's written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject, Mr. Estrada cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires, and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question."

In our judgment, moreover, Mr. Estrada answered the Committee's questions in a manner that was both entirely appropriate and entirely consistent with the approach that judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have taken for many years. Your suggestions to the contrary do not square with the hearing record or traditional practice.

A. Judicial Ethics and Traditional Practice

In assessing your request that Miguel Estrada did not answer appropriate questions, we begin with rules of judicial ethics that govern prospective nominees. Canon 5A(3)(d) provides that prospective judges "shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court"

(emphasis added). Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point well in 1967 when asked about the Fifth Amendment: "I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself." Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to President Carter and President Clinton, has stated that "candidates should decline to reply when efforts are made to find out how they would decide a particular case."

In 1968, in the context of the Justice Abe Fortas' nomination to be Chief Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee similarly stated: "Although recognizing the constitutional dilemma which appears to exist when the Senate is asked to advise and consent on a judicial nominee without examining him on legal questions, the Committee is of the view that Justice Fortas wisely and correctly declined to answer questions in this area. To require a Justice to state his views on legal questions or to discuss his past decisions before the Committee would threaten the independence of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system itself. It would also impinge on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the three branches of Government as required by the Constitution." S. Exec. Rep. No. 8, 90th Cong. 2d Sess. 5 (1968).

Even in the context of a Supreme Court confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion: "It is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group." Nomination of Sandra O'Connor: Hearings Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Judge Sandra Day O'Connor of Arizona to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 97th Cong. 6 (1981) (statement of Sen. Kennedy).

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likewise declined to answer certain questions: "Because I am and hope to continue to be a judge, it would be wrong for me to say or to preview in this legislative chamber how I would cast my vote on questions the Supreme Court may be called upon to decide. Were I to rehearse here what I would say and how I would reason on such questions, I would act injudiciously." Similarly, Justice John Paul Stevens stated in his hearing: "I really don't think I should discuss this subject generally, Senator. I don't mean to be unresponsive but in all candor I must say that there have been many times in my experience in the last five years where I found that my first reaction to a problem was not the same as the reaction I had when I had the responsibility of decisions and I think that if I were to make comments that were not carefully thought through they might be given significance that they really did not merit."

Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice in a case decided last year: "In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be 'on interest' to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Court declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well." Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 122 S. Ct. 2528, 2552 n.1 (2002) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Ginsburg added that this adherence to this "longstanding norm" was "crucial to the health of the Federal Judiciary." Id. In his majority opinion, Justice Scalia did not take issue with that description and added: "Nor do we assert that candidates for judicial office should be compelled to announce their views on disputed legal issues." Id. at 2539 n.11 (emphasis in original).

In some recent hearings, including Mr. Estrada's, Senator Schumer has asked that nominees identify particular Supreme Court cases of the last few decades with which they disagree. But the problems with such a question and answer were well stated by Justice Stephen Breyer. As Justice Breyer put it, "Until [an issue] comes up, I don't really think it through with the depth that it would require. . . . So often, when you decide a matter for real, in a court or elsewhere, it turns out to be very different after you've become informed and think it through for real than what you would have said at a cocktail party answering a question." 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 425, 462.

Senator Schumer also has asked nominees how they would have ruled in particular Supreme Court cases. Again, a double standard is being applied. The nominees of President Clinton did not answer such questions. For example, Richard Tallman, a nominee with no prior judicial service who would now serves on the Ninth Circuit, not only would not answer how he would have ruled as a judge in Roe v. Wade – but even how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson, the infamous case that upheld the discredited and shameful "separate but equal" doctrine. So, too, in the hearing on President Clinton's nomination of Judges Barry and Fisher, Senator Smith asked whether the nominees would have voted for a constitutional right to abortion before Roe v. Wade. Chairman Hatch interrupted Senator Smith to say "that is not a fair question to these two nominees because regardless of what happened pre-1973, they have to abide by what has happened post-1973 and the current precedents that the Supreme Court has."

B. Answers by Miguel Estrada

Miguel Estrada answered the Committee's questions forthrightly and appropriately. Indeed, Miguel Estrada was more expansive than many judicial nominees traditionally have been in Senate hearings, and he was asked a far broader range of questions than many previous appeals court nominees were asked. We will catalogue here a select sample of his answers.

Unenumerated rights, privacy, and abortion

When asked by Senator Edwards about the Constitution's protection for rights not enumerated in the Constitution, Mr. Estrada replied: "I recognize that the Supreme Court has said [on] numerous occasions in the area of privacy and elsewhere that there are unenumerated rights in the Constitution, and I have no view of any sort, whether legal or personal, that would hinder me from applying those rulings by the court. But I think the court has been quite clear that there are a number of unenumerated rights in the Constitution. In the main, the court has recognized them as being inherent in the right of substantive due process and the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

When asked by Senator Feinstein whether the Constitution encompasses a right to privacy and abortion, Mr. Estrada responded, "The Supreme Court has so held, and I have no view of any nature whatsoever, whether it be legal, philosophical, moral, or any other type of view that would keep me from applying that case law faithfully." When asked whether Roe v. Wade was "settled law," Mr. Estrada replied, "I believe so."

General Approach to Judging

When asked by Senator Edwards about judicial review, Mr. Estrada explained: "Courts take the laws that have been passed by you and give you the benefit of understanding that you take the same oath that they do to uphold the Constitution, and therefore they take the laws with the presumption that they are constitutional. It is the affirmative burden of the plaintiff to show that you have gone beyond your oath. If they come into court, then it is appropriate for courts to undertake to listen to the legal arguments – why it is that the legislature went beyond [its] role as a legislat[ure] and invaded the Constitution."

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Edwards that there are 200 years of Supreme Court precedent and that it is not the case that "the appropriate conduct for courts is to be guided solely by the bare text of the Constitution because that is not the legal system that we have."

When asked by Senator Edwards whether he was a strict constructionist, Mr. Estrada replied that he was "a fair constructionist" – meaning that "I don't think that it should be the goal of courts to be strict or lax. The goal of courts is to get it right. . . . It is not necessarily the case in my mind that, for example, all parts of the Constitution are suitable for the same type of interpretative analysis. . . . [T]he Constitution says, for example, that you must be 35 years old to be our chief executive. . . . There are areas of the Constitution that are more open-ended. And you adverted to one, like the substantive component of the due process clauses, where there are other methods of interpretation that are not quite so obvious that the court has brought to bear to try to bring forth what the appropriate answer should be."

When Senator Kohl asked him about environmental statutes, for example, Mr. Estrada explained that those statutes come to court "with a strong presumption of constitutionality."

In response to Senator Leahy, Mr. Estrada described the most important attributes of a judge: "The most important quality for a judge, in my view Senator Leahy, is to have an appropriate process for decisionmaking. That entails having an open mind. It entails listening to the parties, reading their briefs, going back beyond those briefs and doing all of the legwork needed to ascertain who is right in his or her claims as to what the law says and what the facts [are]. In a court of appeals court, where judges sit in panels of three, it is important to engage in deliberation and give ear to the views of colleagues who may have come to different conclusions. And in sum, to be committed to judging as a process that is intended to give us the right answer, not to a result. And I can give you my level best solemn assurance that I firmly think I do have those qualities or else I would not have accepted the nomination."

In response to Senator Durbin, Miguel Estrada stated that "the Constitution, like other legal texts, should be construed reasonably and fairly, to give effect to all that its text contains."

Mr. Estrada indicated to Senator Durbin that he admired the judges for whom he clerked, Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse, as well as Justice Lewis Powell.

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Durbin that "I can absolutely assure the Committee that I will follow binding Supreme Court precedent until and unless such precedent has been displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court itself."

In response to Senator Grassley, Mr. Estrada stated: "When facing a problems for which there is a not a decisive precedent from a higher court, my cardinal rule would be to seize aid from anyplace where I could get it. Depending on the nature of the problem, that would include related case law in other areas that higher courts had dealt with that had had some insights to teach with respect to the problem at hand. It could include the history of the enactment, including in the case of a statute legislative history. It could include the custom and practice under any predecessor statute or document. It could include the views of academics to the extent that they purport to analyze what the law is instead of – instead of prescribing what it should be. And in sum, as Chief Justice Marshall once said, to attempt not to overlook anything from which aid might be derived."

In response to Senator Sessions, Estrada stated: "I am very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the first duty of a judge is to self-consciously put that aside and look at each case by starting withholding judgment with an open mind and listen to the parties. So I think that the job of a judge is to put all of that aside, and to the best of his human capacity to give a judgment based solely on the arguments and the law."

In response to Senator Sessions, Mr. Estrada stated that "I will follow binding case law in every case. . . . I may have a personal, moral, philosophical view on the subject matter. But I undertake to you that I would put all that aside and decide cases in accordance with binding case law and even in accordance with the case law that is not binding but seems constructive on the area, without any influence whatsoever from any personal view I may have about the subject matter."

Miranda/Stare Decisis

Mr. Estrada stated that United States v. Dickerson – a case raising the question whether Miranda should be overruled – reflected a "reasonable application of the doctrine of stare decisis. In my view, it is rarely appropriate for the Supreme Court to overturn one of its own precedents."

Affirmative Action

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Estrada responded to Senator Kennedy that "any policy views I might have as a private citizen on the subject of affirmative action would not enter into how I would approach any case that comes before me as a judge. Under controlling Supreme Court authority, particularly Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995), if a government program creates a racial classification, it will be subject to strict scrutiny. Whether the program survives that sort of scrutiny will often involve a highly contextual and fact-specific inquiry into the nature of the justifications asserted by the government and the fit between those justifications and the classification at issue. Adarand and similar cases provide the framework that I would be required to apply, and would apply, in considering these issues as a judge."

Asked by Senator Leahy about the strict scrutiny test, Mr. Estrada replied, "the Supreme Court in the Adarand case stated, as a general rule, that the consideration of race is subject to strict scrutiny. That means that though it may be used in some cases, it has to be justified by a compelling state interest. And with respect to the particular context, there must be a fairly fact-bound individual assessment of the fit between the interest that is being asserted and the category being used. That is just another way of saying that it is a very fact-intensive analysis in the context of a specific program and in the context of the justifications that are being offered in support of the program."

Congressional Authority

With respect to the outer limits of Congress' power to confer authority on other governmental bodies, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that the Supreme Court has said that "particular factual context is significant in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular delegation. . . . Of course, the fact that the Supreme Court only rarely has struck down statutes on this ground suggests that the Court has been quite deferential to congressional judgments about the types of delegations that reasonably might be needed to carry on the business of government."

When Senator Kohl asked Mr. Estrada about the 1995 Lopez case concerning the scope of Congress' power to regulate, Mr. Estrada pointed out that he had argued in a companion case "for a very expansive view of the power to Congress to pass statutes under the Commerce Clause and have them be upheld by the court. . . . Lopez has given us guidance on when it is appropriate for the court to exercise the commerce power. It is binding law and I would follow it."

Ethnicity

With respect to the fact that the President had noted Miguel's ethnicity, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy: "The President is the leader of a large and diverse country, and it is accordingly appropriate for him, in exercising his constitutional nomination and appointment powers, to select qualified individuals who reflect the breadth and diversity of our Nation."

With respect to the Democrat Congressional Hispanic Caucus's criticism of him, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that "I strongly disagree, however, with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus' view that I lack an understanding of the role and importance of courts in protecting the legal rights of minorities, of the values and mores of Latino culture, or the significance of role models for minority communities."

Racial Discrimination

With respect to race discrimination, Mr. Estrada stated in response to Senator Kennedy: "I take a backseat to no one in my abhorrence of race discrimination in law enforcement or anything else."

Senator Feingold asked Mr. Estrada whether he believed that racial profiling and racially motivated law enforcement misconduct are problems in this country today. Mr. Estrada replied, "I am – I will once again emphasize I'm unalterably opposed to any sort of race discrimination in law enforcement, Senator, whether it's called racial profiling or anything else. . . . I know full well that we have real problems with discrimination in our day and age."

Senator Leahy asked Mr. Estrada about whether statistical evidence of discriminatory impact is relevant in establishing discrimination. Mr. Estrada replied: "I am not a specialist in this area of the law, Senator Leahy, but I am aware that there is a line of cases, beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Griggs, that suggests that in appropriate cases that [such evidence] may be appropriate. . . . I do understand that there is a major area of law that deals with how you prove and try disparate-impact cases."

Congressional Authority to Regulate Firearms

Senator Feinstein asked whether Congress may legislate in the area of dangerous firearms, and Mr. Estrada responded that the Supreme Court had ruled that "if the government were to prove that the firearm had at any time in its lifetime been in interstate commerce even if that had nothing to do with the crime at issue, that that would be an adequate basis for the exercise of Congress' power."

Right to Counsel

Senator Edwards asked about Gideon v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court case guaranteeing the right to counsel for poor defendants who could not afford counsel. Although Senator Edwards appeared to question the reasoning in that landmark case, Mr. Estrada responded that "I frankly have always taken it as a given that that's – the ruling in the case."

C. Answers by President Clinton's Nominees

Your criticism of Miguel Estrada's testimony creates a double standard. You did not require nominees of President Clinton to answer questions of this sort (keeping in mind that you have not identified what your additional questions to Mr. Estrada are). President Clinton's appeals court nominees routinely testified without discussing their views of specific issues or cases. A few select examples, including of several nominees who had no prior judicial experience, illustrate the point. (Please note that these are isolated examples; there are many more we can provide if necessary.)

Merrick Garland (no prior judicial experience). In the nomination of Merrick Garland to the D.C. Circuit, Senator Specter asked him: "Do you favor, as a personal matter, capital punishment?" Judge Garland replied only that he would follow Supreme Court precedent: "This is really a matter of settled law now. The Court has held that capital punishment is constitutional and lower courts are to follow that rule." Senator Specter also asked him about his views of the independent counsel statute's constitutionality, and Judge Garland responded: "Well, that, too, the Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson upheld as constitutional, and, of course, I would follow that ruling." Judge Garland did not provide his personal view of either subject.

Judith Rogers. In the hearing on Judge Judith Rogers' nomination to the D.C. Circuit, Judge Rogers was asked by Senator Cohen about the debate over an evolving Constitution. Judge Rogers responded: "My obligation as an appellate judge is to apply precedent. Some of the debates which I have heard and to which I think you may be alluding are interesting, but as an appellate judge, my obligation is to apply precedent. And so the interpretations of the Constitution by the U.S. Supreme Court would be binding on me." She then was asked how she would rule in the absence of precedent and responded: "When I was taking my master's in judicial process at the University of Virginia Law School, one of the points emphasized was the growth of our common law system based on the English common law judge system. And my opinions, I think if you look at them, reflect that where I am presented with a question of first impression, that I look to the language of whatever provision we are addressing, that I look to whatever debates are available, that I look to the interpretations by other Federal courts, that I look to the interpretations of other State courts, and it may be necessary, as well, to look at the interpretations suggested by commentators. And within that framework, which I consider to be a discipline, that I would reach a view in a case of first impression." Finally, Judge Rogers was asked her view of the three-strikes law and stated: "As an appellate judge, my obligation is to enforce the laws that Congress passes or, where I am now, that the District of Columbia Council passes." Judge Rogers did not provide her personal view of these subjects.

Marsha Berzon (no prior judicial experience). Senator Smith asked her views on Roe v. Wade and whether "an unborn child is a human being." Judge Berzon stated: "[M]y role as a judge is not to further anything that I personally believe or don't believe, and I think that is the strength of our system and the strength of our appellate system. The Supreme Court has been quite definitive quite recently about the applicable standard, and I absolutely pledge to you that I will follow that standard as it exists now, and if it is changed, I will follow that standard. And my personal views in this area, as in any other, will have absolutely no effect." When Senator Smith probed about their personal views on abortion and Roe v. Wade, Chairman Hatch interrupted: "I don't know how they can say much more than that at this point in this meeting."

Richard Tallman (no prior judicial experience). In response to written questions, Judge Tallman explained that "[j]udicial nominees are limited by judicial ethical considerations from answering any question in a manner that would call for an 'advisory opinion' as the courts have defined it or that in effect ask a nominee to suggest how he or she would rule on an issue that could foreseeably require his or her attention in a future case or controversy after confirmation." He was asked how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson. He stated: "It is entirely conjectural as to what I would have done without having the opportunity to thoroughly review the record presented on appeal, the briefs and arguments of counsel, and supporting legal authorities that were applicable at that time." He gave the same response when asked how he would have ruled on Roe v. Wade. When asked his personal view on abortion, he wrote: "I hold no personal views that would prevent me from doing my judicial duty to follow the precedent set down by the Supreme Court." He gave the same answer about the death penalty.

Kim Wardlaw. In the hearing on Judge Kim Wardlaw's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Judge Wardlaw was asked about the constitutionality of affirmative action. She stated (in an answer similar to Miguel Estrada's answer to the same question): "The Supreme Court has held that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are narrowly tailored to meet a compelling governmental interest."

Maryanne Trump Barry. In the hearing on Judge Maryanne Trump Barry's nomination to the Third Circuit, Senator Smith asked for her personal opinion on whether "an unborn child at any stage of the pregnancy is a human being." Judge Barry responded: "Casey is the law that I would look at. If I had a personal opinion – and I am not suggesting that I do – it is irrelevant because I must look to the law which binds me."

Raymond Fisher. In the hearing on Judge Raymond Fisher's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Senator Sessions asked Judge Fisher's own personal views on whether the death penalty was constitutional. Judge Fisher responded that "My view, Senator, is that, as you indicated, the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty is constitutional. As a lower appellate court judge, that is the law that I am governed by. I don't want in my judicial career, should I be fortunate enough to have one, to inject my personal opinions into whether or not I follow the law. I believe that the precedent of the Supreme Court is binding and that is what my function is."

V. Conclusion

Miguel Estrada is a well-qualified and well-respected judicial nominee who has very strong bipartisan support. Based on our reading of history, we believe that you have ample information about this nominee and have had more than enough time to consider questions about his qualifications and suitability. We urge you to stop the unfair treatment, end the filibuster, allow an up-or-down vote, and vote to confirm Mr. Estrada.

Sincerely,

/s/

Senator Joseph R. Biden, Jr.
Questions for Jay Bybee
February 14, 2003

Question One

As you know, the Justice Department recently announced its intention to maintain the Violence Against Women Office within the Office of Justice Programs, requiring its Director to report to the Assistant Attorney General, rather than creating a separate and distinct office within the Department, with its Director reporting directly to the Attorney General, as required by the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act, Pub. L. 107-273, 116 Stat. 1758 (Nov. 2, 2002) ("DOJ Authorization Act"). The Department has represented to me that its decision rested solely on a legal interpretation supplied by the Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC"). That legal opinion was contained, in part or in whole, in a February 7, 2003 letter to me from Acting Assistant Attorney General Jamie E. Brown.

Question (a). Did you author the OLC legal opinion contained, in part or in whole, in the February 7th letter?

Answer: As head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. I therefore cannot comment on whether or not my Office provided any of the legal analysis reflected in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter or on what role, if any, I may have played in such advice.

I understand that the Department has explained to your staff the policy reasons underlying the decision to keep the Violence Against Women Office within the Office of Justice Programs ("OJP"). Indeed, upon review, I do not think that Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's February 7th letter offers any legal argument as to where the Violence Against Women Office should be located within the Department.

Question (b). If you did not directly author the legal opinion, did you approve it in your capacity as Assistant Attorney General?

Answer: See my response to Question 1(a).

Question Two

The February 7th letter states that "[t]he sparse legislative history [of the DOJ Authorization Act] is consistent with our conclusions." It then cites to a floor statement from a House subcommittee chairman. Significantly, the letter contains no citations to the Conference Report or the floor statements of other Members of Congress. I assume that OLC attorneys thoroughly reviewed the legislative history before making the previous statement.

REV_00158478

A review of the legislative history includes a number of other statements, beyond the sole statement cited by the Department's letter. For example, the letter fails to cite to the Conference Report for the DOJ Authorization Act issued by House Judiciary Committee Chairman James Sensenbrenner and signed by all the Conferees. The Sensenbrenner Conference Report states:

> Section 2002 creates a separate and independent Violence Against Women Office (hereinafter the "Office") in the Department of Justice, under the general authority of the Attorney General. The Office shall be headed by a Director who reports directly to the Attorney General and has final authority over all grants, cooperative agreements and contracts awarded by the Office.

Conf. Rep. 107-685 (Sept. 25, 2002), at 180 (emphasis added).

In addition, the February 7 letter fails to cite to a number of other statements by House members made the same day as the sole statement included in the Department's letter. For example, Representative Henry Hyde -- the former Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and a member of the Conference Committee on H.R. 2215 -- stated that "[t]he Office will be headed by a Director who reports directly to the Attorney General. . . ." H6748 (Sept. 26, 2002) (emphasis added). See also Statement of Representative Conyers ("important compromises were reached between the House and Senate . . . to establish an independent Violence Against Women Office within the Department of Justice. This provision raises the profile of the Office by having its Director report directly to the Attorney General instead of through other subordinates.") H6750 (Sept. 26, 2002); Statement of Representative Slaughter ("The conference report creates an independent Violence Against Women Office within the Department of Justice, rather than making the office simply a subsidiary part of the office of the Office of Justice Programs.") H6746 (Sept. 26, 2002); Statement of Representative Nadler (The legislation "enhance[s] the Violence Against Women Office") H6748 (Sept. 26, 2002).

The Department's letter also fails to include any mention of legislative history in the Senate. Significantly, while citing to a statement from the House Crime subcommittee chairman, the letter omits my floor statement, made in my capacity as Chairman of the Senate subcommittee with jurisdiction over the Violence Against Women Office. I explained that the DOJ Authorization Act created > [a] permanent and independent Violence Against Women Office, a proposal I first introduced in the Senate in March, 2001, and is now established in the Conference Report. This provision means that the Office will be removed from its current location inside the Office of Justice Programs, and become its own free-standing entity. . . . It also requires that the Director be nominated by the President, confirmed by the Senate and report directly to the Attorney General.

S9701 (Oct. 1, 2002). My remarks were echoed in a colloquy I entered into with Senator Patrick Leahy, then Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee with jurisdiction over the DOJ Reauthorization Act:

> [T]he pending Justice reauthorization conference report establishes an independent Violence Against Women Office [which] will be an autonomous and separate office within the Department of Justice and no longer underneath the jurisdiction of the Office of Justice Programs. . . . [T]he statute is unequivocal. The director shall report directly to the Attorney General -- do not pass go, do not get out of jail free. The law is clear that the director is not to report to various deputies or assistants, but rather straight to the Attorney General.

Id.

Question (a). Did the OLC opinion on this issue consider the discussion of the Violence Against Women Office contained in the Sensenbrenner Conference Report or any of statements contained above?

Answer: As the head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. I cannot comment on whether or not I have provided any advice on this matter and, if so, the substance of that advice. I can say, however, that ideally all OLC advice would be based on a review of all relevant legal resources, including pertinent legislative history. In addition, I agree with you that insofar as legislative history is concerned, the statements that you cite would merit full consideration along with the statement included in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter.

Question (b). Why did the Department's February 7th letter omit any mention of the Sensenbrenner Conference Report or these other statements?

Answer: As the head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. Upon reviewing Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter, however, I will note that it sets forth the legal analysis and conclusion before addressing any legislative history. The structure of the letter would thus indicate that legislative history had no significant bearing on its analysis or conclusion. I do agree with you, though, that if the letter is to cite legislative history on one side of the question, it would have been better for the letter to cite legislative history on the other side as well.

Question (c). Did you personally review the February 7th letter? If so, were you aware that the letter contained these significant omissions? If not, who in your office did review the

February 7th letter?

Answer: As the head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. I cannot comment on whether or not my Office provided assistance in the preparation of Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter or on what role, if any, I may have played.

Question (d). To the extent that you were not aware – prior to the issuance of the OLC opinion and/or the February 7th letter – of the Sensenbrenner Conference Report and the other statements cited above, do you still agree that the legislative history is "sparse" and "is consistent with [DOJ's] conclusions?"

Answer: As the head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. I therefore cannot comment on whether or not my Office provided any of the legal analysis reflected in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter or on what I was aware of, or not aware of, in connection with rendering any such advice. I can say, however, that the legislative history that you cite, together with the legislative history cited in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter, indicates that there was legislative history on both sides of the question.

Question (e). To the extent that you were aware – prior to the issuance of the OLC opinion and/or the February 7th letter – of the Sensenbrenner Conference Report and the other statements cited above, is it still your view that the legislative history is "sparse" and "is consistent with [DOJ's] conclusions?"

Answer: As the head of the Department's Office of Legal Counsel, I am obligated to keep confidential the legal advice that my Office provides to others in the executive branch. I therefore cannot comment on whether or not my Office provided any of the legal analysis reflected in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter or on what I was aware of, or not aware of, in connection with rendering any such advice. I can say, however, that the legislative history that you cite, together with the legislative history cited in Acting Assistant Attorney General Brown's letter, indicates that there was legislative history on both sides of the question.

Question Three

(a). Do you agree that on occasion, when called upon to construe a statute, federal judges may resort to an examination of the legislative history to assist them?

Answer: Yes.

(b). Do you agree that a federal judge should consider the legislative history as a whole, rather than relying on, for example, a single statement of an individual legislator?

REV_00158481

Answer: Yes.

(c). In construing an act of Congress, would you give more weight to, for example, analysis contained in the Conference Report than to statements by individual members of Congress?

Answer: Yes.

Revised DRAFT, 20 Feb 2003,

DEPOSIT INSURANCE REFORM

Testimony of Peter R. Fisher
Under Secretary for Domestic Finance
U.S. Department of the Treasury

Before the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs
United States Senate

February 26, 2003

Mr. Chairman, Senator Sarbanes, and Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to provide the Administration's views on deposit insurance reform.

The Administration strongly supports reforms to our deposit insurance system that would, first, merge the bank and thrift insurance funds, second, allow more flexibility in the management of fund reserves while maintaining adequate reserve levels and, third, ensure that all participating institutions fairly share in the maintenance of FDIC resources in accordance with the insurance fund's loss exposure from each institution. The Administration strongly opposes any changes in deposit insurance coverage limits.

Our current deposit insurance system managed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) serves to protect insured depositors from exposure to bank losses and, as a result, helps to promote public confidence in the U.S. banking system. I am concerned today that our deposit insurance system has structural weaknesses that, in the absence of reform, could deepen over time. I want to emphasize that there is no crisis in the FDIC; both of its funds are strong, well managed, with adequate reserves. This is the right time to act – when we do not face a crisis – and the Administration supports legislation focused on the repair of these structural weaknesses.

Increases in FDIC benefits, however, including any increases in the level of insurance coverage, are not part of the solution to these problems and should be avoided. When I testified before this Committee last April, I argued that an increase in deposit insurance coverage limits would serve no sound public policy purpose. Nothing has occurred since to change that view. The Administration continues to oppose higher coverage limits in any form. Indeed, we feel that the entire issue of coverage limits regrettably diverts attention from the important reforms that are needed.

Merging the Bank and Thrift Insurance Funds

We support a merger of the Bank Insurance Fund (BIF) and Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) as soon as practicable. A larger, combined insurance fund would be better able to diversify risks, and thus withstand losses, than would either fund separately. Merging the funds while the industry is strong and both funds adequately capitalized would not burden either BIF or SAIF members. A merged fund would also end the possibility that similar institutions could pay significantly different premiums for the same product, as was the case in the recent past and could occur again in the near future without this change. A merger would also recognize what has taken place in practice. As a result of mergers and consolidations, each fund now insures deposits of both commercial banks and thrifts. Indeed, commercial banks now account for 45 percent of all SAIF-insured deposits.

Flexibility in the Management of FDIC Reserves

Current law generally requires each insurance fund to maintain reserves equal to 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits, the "designated reserve ratio." When the designated reserve ratio falls below this threshold, the FDIC must charge either a premium sufficient to restore the reserve ratio to 1.25 percent within one year, or a minimum of 23 basis points if the reserve ratio would remain below 1.25 percent for a longer period. Since that latter likelihood would be expected when the banking system, and probably the economy as well, were under stress, such a sharp increase in industry assessments could have an undesirable pro-cyclical effect, further reducing liquidity precisely when liquidity is needed. Were FDIC fund contributions to come from resources that otherwise might be part of capital, every dollar paid would mean a reduction of 10 or 12 dollars in lending, or as much as $12 billion in reduced lending for a $1 billion FDIC replenishment.

Reserves should be allowed to grow when conditions are good. This would enable the fund to absorb losses under adverse conditions without sharp increases in premiums. In order to achieve this objective and also account for changing risks to the insurance fund over time, we support greater latitude for the FDIC to alter the designated reserve ratio within statutorily prescribed upper and lower bounds. The FDIC should have discretion in determining how quickly the fund meets its targeted designated reserve ratio as long as the actual reserve ratio is within these bounds. If the reserve ratio were to fall below the lower bound, the FDIC should restore it to within the statutory range promptly, over a reasonable but limited timeframe. We would also support some reduction in the prescribed minimum premium rate – currently 23 basis points – that would be in effect when it would take more than one year to restore reserves.

Nevertheless, as we learned from the deposit insurance experience of the 1980s, flexibility must be tempered by a clear requirement for prudent and timely fund replenishment. The statutory range for the designated reserve ratio should strike an appropriate balance between the burden of pre-funding future losses and the avoidance of pro-cyclical costs of replenishing the insurance fund in a downturn. A key benefit to giving the FDIC greater flexibility in managing the reserve ratio within statutorily prescribed bounds is the ability to achieve low, stable premiums over time, adequate to FDIC needs in bad times, with the least burden on financial institutions and on the economy. We also believe that with this reform, the possibility of recourse to taxpayer resources is even further removed.

Full Risk-Based Shared Funding

Every day that they operate, banks and thrifts benefit from their access to federal deposit insurance. For several years, however, the FDIC has been allowed to obtain premiums for deposit insurance from only a few institutions. Currently, over 90 percent of banks and thrifts pay nothing to the FDIC. This is an untenable formula for the long-term stability of the FDIC.

Moreover, current rules frustrate one of the most important reforms enacted in the wake of the collapse of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) and the depletion of FDIC reserves: the requirement for risk-based premiums. When 90 percent of the industry pays no premiums, there is little opportunity to do what any prudent insurer would do, adjust premiums for risk. Nearly all banks are treated the same, and lately they have been treated to free service.

For example, today a bank can rapidly increase its insured deposits without paying anything into the insurance fund. As is now well known, some large financial companies have greatly augmented their insured deposits in the past few years by sweeping uninsured funds into their affiliated depository institutions – without compensating the FDIC at all. Other major financial companies might be expected to do the same in the future. In addition, most of the over 1,100 banks and thrifts chartered after 1996 have never paid a penny in insurance premiums. Yet if insured deposit growth by a relatively few institutions were to cause the reserve ratio to decline below the designated reserve ratio, all banks would be required to pay premiums to raise reserves.

To rectify this "free rider" problem and ensure that institutions appropriately compensate the FDIC commensurate with their risk, Congress should remove the current restrictions on FDIC premium-setting. In order to recognize past payments to build up current reserves, we support the proposal to apply temporary transition credits against future premiums that would be distributed based on a measure of each institution's contribution to the build-up of insurance fund reserves in the early-to-mid 1990s. In addition to transition credits, allowing the FDIC to provide assessment credits on an on-going basis would permit the FDIC to collect payments from institutions more closely in relation to their deposit growth.

We strongly oppose rebates, which would drain the insurance fund of cash. Over much of its history, the FDIC insurance fund reserve ratio remained well above the current target, only to drop into deficit conditions by the beginning of the 1990s. Therefore, it is vital that funds collected in good times, and the earnings on those collections, be available for times when they will be needed.

There are other important structural issues that need to be addressed sooner than later. It would be appropriate to evaluate whether there are changes to the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund (NCUSIF) that would be suitable in light of the proposed reforms made to FDIC insurance so as to avoid unintended disparities between the two programs. Perhaps even more important is the need to address the long-term funding of supervision by the National Credit Union Administration, particularly in view of recent trends toward conversions from federal to state charters and growing consolidation of credit unions. Similarly, there are structural problems in the funding of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Office of Thrift Supervision, the resolution of which should not be delayed.

Deposit Insurance Coverage Limits

The improvements to the deposit insurance system that I have just outlined are vital to the system's long-term health. Other proposals, however, would not contribute to the strength of the taxpayer-backed deposit insurance system any may actually weaken it.

Increasing the general coverage limit up front or through indexation, or raising coverage limits for particular categories of deposits, is unneeded and harmful. Savers do not need an increase in coverage limits and would receive no real financial benefit. Higher coverage limits would not predictably advantage any particular size of banks, but could increase all banks' insurance premium costs. Higher coverage limits would mean greater taxpayer exposure by adding to the contingent liabilities of the government and by weakening market discipline. An increase in coverage limits would reduce – not enhance – competition among banks in general as the efficient and inefficient offer the same investment risk to depositors; in fact, perversely, investors would be drawn at no risk to the worst banks, which usually offer the highest interest rates.

Higher Coverage Limits Not Sought by Savers

First of all, the clamor for raising coverage limits does not come from savers. The evidence that current coverage limits constitute a burden to savers is scant; there has been little demand from depositors for higher maximum levels. The recent consumer finance survey data released by the Federal Reserve confirm what we found in the previous survey, namely that raising the coverage limit would do little, if anything, for most savers. Median family deposit balances are only $4,000 for transaction account deposits and $15,000 for certificates of deposit, far below the current $100,000 ceiling. The same holds true even when considering only older Americans, a segment of the population with higher bank account usage: median transaction account balances and certificates of deposit total $8,000 and $20,000, respectively, for those households headed by individuals between the ages of 65 and 74.

Examining the Federal Reserve data for retirement accounts shows present maximum deposit insurance coverage to be more than adequate. The median balance across age groups held in IRA/Keogh accounts at insured depository institutions is only $15,000. For the 65 to 69 age group, median household IRA/Keogh deposits total $30,000.

A small group of relatively affluent savers might find greater convenience from increased maximum coverage levels. But it is a tiny group. Only 3.4 percent of households with bank accounts held any uninsured deposits, and the median income of these households was more than double the median income of all depositors in the survey.

Under current rules, these savers have plenty of options, with the market place presenting new options for unlimited deposit insurance coverage without changing federal coverage limits. At little inconvenience, savers with substantial bank deposits – including retirees and those with large bank savings for retirement – may place deposits at any number of banks to obtain as much FDIC coverage as desired. They may also establish accounts within the same bank under different legal capacities, qualifying for several multiples of current maximum coverage limits. Firms are now developing programs for exchanging depositor accounts that could offer seamless means of providing unlimited coverage for depositors without any change in current limits, and in a manner that strengthens market discipline on banks.

One of the fundamental rules of prudent retirement planning is to diversify investment vehicles. Many individuals, including those who are retired or planning for retirement, feel comfortable putting substantial amounts into uninsured mutual funds, money market accounts, and a variety of other investment instruments. Just 21 percent of all IRA/Keogh funds are in insured depository institutions. There is simply no widespread consumer concern about existing coverage limits that would justify extending taxpayer exposure by creating a new government-insured retirement program under the FDIC.

Coverage Limits and Bank Competition

Banks, regardless of size, continue to have little trouble attracting deposits under the existing coverage limits. Federal Reserve data have shown that smaller banks have grown more rapidly and experienced higher rates of growth in both insured and uninsured deposits than have larger banks over the past several years. After adjusting for the effects of mergers, domestic assets of the largest 1,000 commercial banks grew 5.5 percent per year on average from 1994 to 2002; all other banks grew 13.8 percent per year on average. Nor are smaller banks losing the competition for uninsured deposits. Uninsured deposits of the top 1,000 grew 9.9 percent annually on average over this period, while such deposits at smaller banks on average grew 21.4 percent annually.

Higher Coverage Limits for Municipal Funds Erode Discipline

Proposals for substantially higher levels of protection of municipal deposits than of other classes of deposits would exacerbate the inherent moral hazard problems of deposit insurance. Rather than keep funds in local institutions, state and municipal treasurers would have powerful incentives to seek out not the safest institutions in which to place taxpayer funds but rather those offering the highest interest rates. Since these are usually riskier institutions, state and municipal treasurers would be drawn into funding the more troubled banks. Local, well run, healthy banks might have to pay a premium in increased deposit rates to retain municipal business. Today there are incentives for state and local government treasurers to monitor risks taken with large volumes of public sector deposits. Should the FDIC largely protect these funds, an important source of credit judgment on the lending and investment decisions of local banks would be lost.

Conclusion

In conclusion, I reaffirm the Administration's support for the three-part general framework that I have outlined to correct the structural flaws in the deposit insurance system. I encourage Congress to pursue these improvements with a steady focus on the important work that needs to be done. The Administration cannot support legislation that raises deposit insurance coverage limits in any form, and we urge that Congress avoid such an unneeded and counterproductive diversion from real and necessary reform.

Lucy, I have proposed a redrafted single memo on political activities for the Secretary's signature. The IG drafts had some substantive problems; more importantly, my advice would be that the Secretary not issue such detailed guidance on almost any topic, especially not this one. Four memos on political activity is overkill in my mind. Even with this single memo, I would suggest that this not be among the first policy statements that he issue--for example, has he issued civil rights or EEO statements, a general ethics statement? I know that the NAC transition packages included policy statements on these topics; the package I received did not have signatures of anyone on these documents. There is a concern about the message if the political activities memo goes out first, especially given that we are not really in a campaign season.

From: The Secretary

Subject: Political Activities of Federal Employees

Below is a brief summary of the rules imposed on DHS employees with respect to political activities; that is, activities directed towards the success or failure of a candidate for partisan political office, a political party, or a partisan political group. The Hatch Act, as amended (5 U.S.C. §§ 7321-7326), generally permits most Federal employees to actively participate in political management and political campaigns. However, some employees continue to be prohibited from engaging in partisan political activity, and all employees face at least some restrictions on their conduct. These rules do not apply to members of the uniformed services; members should look to their parent service for guidance on political activities.

General Schedule and Non-Career Employees

Most employees may participate in most types of political activity on their own time. This category includes General Schedule, Senior Level, Schedule C, and non-career Senior Executive Service (SES) employees. Specifically, these employees may:

- Be candidates for public office in nonpartisan elections
- Assist in voter registration drives
- Express opinions about candidates and issues
- Contribute money to political organizations
- Attend political fundraisers
- Join or attend political rallies, meetings, parties, and clubs
- Sign nominating petitions
- Campaign for or against candidates or questions
- Make campaign speeches for candidates in partisan elections
- Distribute campaign literature.

However, some activities remain prohibited. Specifically, employees may not:

- Use official position to interfere with an election
- Solicit or receive political contributions, except in very limited circumstances
- Knowingly solicit or discourage political activity of someone who has business with the Government
- Engage in political activity while on duty, while wearing a uniform or official insignia, in a Government office, or while using a Government vehicle.

The restriction on conduct of political activities while on duty prohibits, among other things, the wearing of campaign buttons and the placement of political posters in work areas. It does not prohibit bumper stickers on privately-owned vehicles parked on Government property.

Career SES, the Secret Service, Employees of the Office of Investigative Programs of the Customs Service, and Administrative Law Judges (ALJs)

Career SES members, Secret Service personnel, certain Customs Service employees, and ALJs still may not engage in partisan political activity. This is a significant restriction on permissible political activities. This category of employees may:

- Assist in voter registration drives
- Express opinions about candidates and issues
- Contribute money to political organizations or attend political fundraising functions
- Attend political rallies and meetings
- Join political clubs or parties
- Sign nominating petitions
- Campaign for or against referendum questions, constitutional amendments, and municipal ordinances
- Participate in campaigns where none of the candidates represent a political party.

However, most political activities are prohibited for this group. Specifically, in addition to activities which General Schedule and non-career employees may not engage in, personnel in this category may not:

- Campaign for or against candidates or slates of candidates in partisan elections
- Make campaign speeches for candidates in partisan elections
- Collect contributions for, or sell tickets to, political fundraising functions
- Distribute campaign material in partisan elections
- Organize or manage partisan political rallies or meetings
- Hold office in partisan political clubs or parties
- Circulate nominating petitions in partisan elections
- Be candidates for public office in partisan elections
- Register voters on behalf of a particular political party.

Presidential Appointees Subject to Senate Confirmation (PAS)

PAS, with the exception of the Inspector General, may engage in political activity while on duty, while wearing a uniform or other insignia, while in a Government office, or while using a Government vehicle. Funds from the Treasury may not be used to support these activities so any additional costs incurred by the Government must be reimbursed.

This brief summary of Hatch Act restrictions is not intended as a substitute for individualized advice. Special rules apply to local elections in certain designated municipalities in Maryland, Virginia, and several other states and more detailed guidance on political activities may be found at 5 CFR Part 734. In the event of any uncertainty on the application of the Hatch Act, employees may contact the Office of the General Counsel. Employees may also obtain advice directly from the Office of the Special Counsel (www.osc.gov) which has exclusive authority to provide advisory opinions on this subject.

Brett,

Attached is the 2d draft of the Hatch Ac t Crib Sheet. Per your suggestion we have reorganized and consolidated the bullet points. We have revised the bullet point on the use of e-mails and ask that you consider retaining this in the document in light of the recent OSC Advisory on the use of e-mails for political purposes. If you can incorporate any further changes into the document while keeping it to one page we can save a lot of back and forth e-mails. Our goal is to insure that you are completely satisfied with the final version. (I am working on solving the indent problem with the first two bullet points).
Thanks again for your assistance.

But, the political entity must pay any non-incidental costs associated with such activity.
- An activity or event is "political" if it is conducted for a partisan election or campaign, or for a political party. - You may not travel on corporate or private aircraft for political trips, but you may travel on a charter aircraft leased by a political entity.
- E-mail messages that solicit support for political candidates or parties, may, depending on the circumstances, violate the Hatch Act.

JUSTICE COLLOTON? Steve Colloton, U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Iowa, has been nominated for the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Lots of Republican insiders say the 40-year-old Colloton, who caught the eye of conservatives when he worked on Whitewater probes for Ken Starr in 1994-96, might make a good Supreme Court nominee someday.
Colloton also clerked for Chief Justice William Rehnquist in 1989. The Iowa City native is young, conservative and doesn't have a big paper trail for liberals to use against him.
But Colloton's confirmation is far from a sure thing. The word from Tom Harkin's camp is the senator is not inclined to go along with Colloton if the Bush administration makes state Senator Chuck Larson of Cedar Rapids his replacement as U.S. attorney.
Larson is angling for the governorship, and Harkin folks worry the new job with enable Larson to get favorable attention as a crime-busting lawman.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

Wednesday, February 26, 2003

KEY POINTS***

- The future of peace depends on the disarmament of Iraq. Saddam Hussein continues to be in violation of UN Security Council Resolution 1441 and the terms of that resolution must be fully respected.

- The Security Council has taken a clear stand, and it now faces a clear choice.
With all the world watching, the Council will now show whether it means what it says.

- The US, the UK, and Spain introduced a new Security Council resolution that says in clear and simple terms that Iraq is not complying with Resolution 1441.
This is not a second resolution on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, it is the 18th in a long series of resolutions going back 12 years.

- During these final deliberations, there is but one question for the Council to address: is Saddam Hussein complying with Resolution 1441? That resolution did not call for hints of progress or minor concessions, but demanded full and immediate disarmament.

- We will not allow the Iraqi dictator, with a history of aggression and close ties to terrorist groups, to continue to possess or produce weapons of mass destruction.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE***
All Times Eastern Standard Time Unless Noted
Subject to Change

11:15 am President Bush meets with President Aliyev of Azerbaijan

1:15 pm White House Briefing by Ari Fleischer

7:00 pm President Bush delivers remarks to the American Enterprise Institute

PREDICTABLE BEHAVIOR***
Administration officials' forewarning against Saddam's last-minute evasions

"I can absolutely predict...that Saddam Hussein will do what he's done over the last 12 years. Whenever he's under tremendous pressure, he puts forward a little cooperation in hopes he can release the pressure, and then he goes back to cheating and retreating and deceiving again."
NSA Rice, in briefing, 2-24-03

"The Iraqis are playing a game here. They do this every time they see a little bit of pressure. What they're trying to do is to create a little bit of a sense that they're moving forward, so that they can release the pressure on themselves, but they have one thing to do and one thing only and that is to disarm."
NSA Rice, CNN
's Late Edition, 2-9-03

"We have had ample time now to see that the tricks of the past -- he's employing the tricks of the past today. He's giving people the run-around."
President Bush, to reporters, 1-21-03

"[Saddam] has a way of finding half-truths that try to get him off the hook with the world?the history of Saddam Hussein is he will do everything in his power to lie and deceive, to deny and hide."
Ari Fleischer, press briefing, 12-2-02

"For 11 long years, Saddam Hussein has sidestepped, crawfished, wheedled out of any agreement he had made. I am going to call upon the world to recognize that he is stiffing the world."
President Bush, to reporters, 9-4-02

KEY QUOTES***

"Fifteen weeks have now passed since Resolution 1441 was adopted and in that period of time it has been made clear on a number of occasions that Iraq is stubbornly unwilling... to take advantage of the final opportunity...this is an acid test for the Security Council...if it does not give genuine effect to what it said so solemnly through Resolution 1441, then it does risk doing long-term damage to its own credibility."
Australian Prime Minister Howard, to reporters, 2-25-03

"Resolution 1441 called for full, unconditional and immediate compliance. Not 10 per cent, not 20 per cent, not even 50 per cent, but 100 per cent compliance.
Anything less will not do."
British Prime Minister Blair, in remarks, 2-25-03

Thanks Kirsten. By way of add'l follow up, our understanding of the action items from tonight's conf. call is as follows:

Baruch to cont. drafting his alternative option, and then send it to George Wolfe, Lucy, you, Asa, us;

Lucy's tweaking Treas' orig. draft from a week ago, and also circulating it (and this is the likely plan A?);

Asa to call Thomas to tell him a proposed option is coming;

Your crew to meet w/ Angela and deliver the option that gets blessed by Asa; and DHS/Treas to continue to ID a true Plan B to turn to, in the event the clock runs out on us Friday.

Shelley to set up conf. call for tomorrow following Kirsten's 4:00 on the Hill.

Pls feel free to add, revise, improve. Thanks all.

Subject: RE: CTR Delegation

Talked to Angela - we are scheduled to meet in her office at 400p tomorrow - I think we should go with same team as before - Baruch, Chris, Michael and me. Baruch does this work on your schedule? So with the plan discussed, it sounds like after we have paper, Mr Hutchinson will call Thomas and lay the ground work and then we will go up and see what we can do.

I talked to her further about concurrence and it sounds like she wants more specifics included - they have a list of statutes - but they will only give us the list if we agree to include them all. Not saying we should do that but I think where we are headed with our paper tomorrow will be in the ball park.

Matt - you will share with Sen Finance at the same time, right - I think we need to try to box ways and means in a bit with them.

Thx

Kirsten: sorry but I didn't get your call. I'm in LA now returning tonight.

Two questions

What odds to you give a technical correction amdt, given that we would strongly oppose and that it wouldn't just be "techical"?

If Treasury did something just short of full delegation (ie, a modest concession like we discussed at mtg), would thomas still try to change the law?

I called Rich on Friday to say that we need to come to agreement among ourselves as to what our offer is and present to W&M tomorrow.

We met with W&M a week ago Friday and had a good mtg - then Angela talked with Thomas and he blew up and she was back to being hard line. They won't put an offer on the table - they want us to.

If we do a full delegation on March 1st, Thomas' general counsel told me this AM that they will file a Homeland Security Technical Corrections bill and specifically state what would stay at Treasury so I would strongly recommend we figure out an offer and get it up there.

Here's what we are sending to Treasury this am. We are still pushing this in our back pocket if need be.

Kirsten - Could you drop me a note today, letting me know where we stand with Thomas getting back in town and us getting to see him? With our leg affairs shop a bit in disarray, I'm not sure where we stand on that.

Thanks.

President Calls for Action on Judicial Nominee

Presidential Hall

10:30 A.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Bienvenidos. I want to thank mi abogado and my close friend for his leadership and his participation in our government. Everybody has got to have a good lawyer. (Laughter.) Especially in my line of work. (Laughter.) And I've got a great one with Al Gonzales. I'm proud to call him friend.

I also want to thank the members of the Latino Coalition who are here today. I want to thank for your work in -- obviously, on political issues. But really I want to thank you for what you're doing in your own community, showing people that through hard work there's opportunity and hope; that if you're an entrepreneur, thanks for setting such a great example. Truly, one of the greatest things about the nation is that somebody who has got a dream and who works hard can own their own business, realize their own potential. So thanks for setting the example for a lot of our fellow citizens.

I'm honored that Mel Martinez is here with us, and Hector Barreto, serving my administration. Both men are doing a fine job in important positions. I want to thank Ambassador Hans Hertell, from the Dominican Republic for coming. (Applause.) I see your brought an entourage with you. (Laughter.) Rosario Marin, who's the Treasurer, is here. Rosario, great to see you. Josefina Carbonell, who is the Assistant Secretary for Aging, Health and Human Services, is with us.

I want to thank very much the -- Robert Deposada, who is the President of the Latino Coalition. I also want to thank Jane Delgado, as well, for your leadership and for working for what you think is right for the country. (Applause.) El gobernador del estado de Hidalgo is with us today. Gobernador, bienvenidos. Glad you're here. (Applause.)

I see my friend Alfredo Phillips. One of the great honors when I was the governor of Texas was to work closely with our Mexican counterparts. Senor Phillips was a man who came to Austin quite frequently to talk about NADBANK and mutual development programs. I'm honored you're here. I appreciate your delegation coming.

This nation is committed to making sure we've got great relations with Mexico. The cornerstone of good foreign policy starts with making sure the neighborhood is prosperous and peaceful. I look forward to continuing to work with Vicente Fox on advancing a common agenda for the good of both nations.

And so I welcome you all here. You come to America today during times of great challenges. There are some challenges which face us. But there's no hurdle big enough for the American people not to cross. This is -- we've got some mighty challenges -- to make sure the country is more prosperous and more hopeful, and the world more peaceful. But sin duda, we're going to achieve what we need to achieve, porque este pais es un gran pais, with great values and great hope and great strength.

The first challenge we have is to make sure people can find work. We want everybody working who wants to find a job. The challenge was created, really, because of a recession, and an attack on America, and the fact that some of our fellow citizens didn't realize that they needed to tell the truth all
the time when it came to the numbers on their balance sheets. All three of those circumstances has created a challenge for the country. And the challenge is how to make sure the entrepreneurial environment is strong and steady, so that people are confident in taking risk; that small businesses are willing to take risks to expand.

And so I put out an economic plan that addresses the challenges that we face.
First, I want to remind you we responded to the recession by tax relief.
We believe that if a person has more money in their pockets, they're likely to demand a good or a service. And when they do so, in the marketplace, somebody is likely to produce the good or a service. And when that happens, somebody is more likely to find work. That's the premise of the economic policy we laid out in '01. I worked with the Republicans and Democrats to get the tax plan through.

We responded to the attacks on September the 11th, 2001. We had a terrorism insurance bill passed to encourage construction programs to go forward. We dealt with the airline issue. We got the stock market opened up quickly.
And, of course, then we liberated Afghanistan as we sought to bring justice to the killers of the thousands of Americans and others.

We dealt with the corporate scandals by passing the law that clearly says that if you lie, cheat or steal, that if you defraud a shareholder or an employee,
there is going to be certain consequences.

And so we made progress. But the economy still needs more work as far as we're concerned. And so I've gone to Congress, and I want to share with you quite quickly, quite briefly what I am asking Congress to do.

First of all, I think it's very important for us to focus on small business growth. We're interested in job creation. The first thing -- the first fact that Congress has got to understand is most small -- most jobs are created by small businesses, most new jobs. And so, therefore, any package ought to be focused on small business in America. And this package is. It basically says, we're -- we've asked Congress to cut rates; they did. But they phased in the tax rate cuts over three, five or seven years. Well, if the economy is not doing as well as it should today, and if Congress has one time seen the wisdom of letting people keep more of their own money, then step one is they ought to accelerate the tax relief plan to this year. All tax cuts in the future ought to be accelerated to this year. If they're good enough five years from now, they're good enough today. (Applause.)

Most small businesses are sole proprietorships, or limited partnerships, or sub-chapter S corporations, which means that they pay tax at the individual income tax rate. And so, therefore, when you accelerate rate cuts, you're really accelerating capital to be invested by small businesses. And that's what Congress must understand. The rate reduction package is good for the small business sector of the American economy. (Applause.)

As well, we believe we ought to increase the amount of expensing available to small businesses from the current limitation of $25,000 to $75,000 a year. This will encourage capital expenditure. (Applause.) It will provide incentive for people to expand their businesses. Capital expenditure equals jobs, and the more capital accumulation and capital expenditure we can encourage, the more likely it is somebody is going to find work.

And so this plan focuses on boosting the amount of money consumers have to spend, strengthening demand for products. But it also focuses on capital accumulation, capital formation, particularly at the small business sector of the American economy.

Furthermore, I believe we ought to eliminate the double taxation on dividends, and I will tell you why. If capital equals jobs, the double taxation of dividends means there is less capital in the private markets for investment. It's fair to tax a company's profits. It is unfair to tax that profit again when it's distributed to one of the shareholders. (Applause.) And so our plan encourages capital formation. Our plan addresses the needs of the 10 million seniors who have dividend income; it is beneficial for those seniors not have to pay a tax on their dividends -- as a matter of fact, it will help them in the later years of their lives.

The dividend plan also is going to have a positive effect on our accounting process. I mean, after all, we went through a period of time when people said, invest in my company even though I may not have any earnings, I've got a good idea, so let's invest -- let's invest in something that may or may not happen.

A society which is focused on dividends says, you know, cash is really what matters. You can't -- you say, invest in my company, I'm going to pay a dividend -- is not based upon some pie-in-the-sky protection; it's based on the reality of cash. The dividend policy, if more companies pay dividends, will have a positive effect when it comes to the balance sheets of America. It will have a reform effect, because you can't project what may be. When you're promising dividends, you've got to project what is. And that's going to be good for investors, and it's going to be good for accountability when it comes to the corporate sector of America.

So this is the plan I'm asking Congress to look at. It's a reasonable plan, it's a stimulative plan, it's a plan that makes sense. And I'm asking for your help. I'd like for you to contact your congressman or your senator and let him know that this plan makes sense for the economic vitality of this country.

We continue to face a hurdle with our schools. If you want America to be a hopeful place, we better make sure the public school system of America works.
And so I want to continue -- (applause.) I say we face a problem because not every school is working the way we want it to. I proposed reform which the Senate and the House passed in my first year as the President. The reform said, if you spend money, then it makes sense to demand results. We spend money at the federal level; therefore, we ought to ask, what are the results.
We're asking the simple question, if you receive money, can the children read and write and add and subtract. That's what we want to know. It's really important for Latino parents to have that question asked.

It's essential to ask that question if you want to future of this country to be bright. Because, oftentimes, the Latino child just gets passed through the system, without asking the fundamental question of whether or not that child can read and write and add and subtract.

You see, it's oftentimes easy to walk into a classroom full of the so-called
"hard to educate" and say, we're moving you through. It's what I call the soft bigotry of low expectations. I told the American people when I was running for office, I will challenge the soft bigotry of low expectations, because I believe every child can learn, regardless of the status of their parents.

(Applause.) And we have done that. We have done that. We've increased federal education spending by 50 percent from the time I got here. But more importantly, we're demanding accountability, because we believe in the value of every child, and we don't want one child left behind here in America.
(Applause.)

We look forward to working with you on health care matters. We want the Medicare system to function well. We want to make sure that there is a capacity for people to get primary care through community health centers.
It's an initiative which I strongly support and I'm pushing Congress to fund to its fullest.

We want to make sure that there is a -- health tax credits to help the working uninsured. And we want to make sure there's medical liability reform to make sure that health care is not only affordable, but available. In other words, we don't want our docs sued to the point where they're leaving the profession,
where people can't find good medical care.

There's a lot we can work with you on, and intend to do -- associated health care plans, incredibly important part of making sure small business owners can provide affordable health care to their employees.

I also want to work with -- continue to work with you all in America on making sure that our welfare system is complete. I say complete because the best welfare programs oftentimes are those found in our iglesias, our churches, and synagogues, and mosques. And our government must not fear the power of faith in our society, but must welcome faith-based programs, which exist to heal hearts and provide hope for broken lives.

The great strength of this country lies in the hearts of our fellow citizens.
The great power of transformation in neighborhoods can take place because thousands of citizens have heard the universal call to love a neighbor like they would like to be loved themself. And so you'll see us continue to work with our neighborhood helpers and healers at the federal level to encourage faith-based programs to flourish and exist.

I recognize that one person can't solve all of our society's problems, but one person can help save one life. And it's that accumulative effect, what I call the gathering momentum of millions of acts of kindness which take place on a daily basis, which literally can transform this country, one heart and one soul at a time.

I also want to talk to you about how to make sure our judiciary works well -- historically, with me naming good people to serve on the bench -- good, solid, honest, decent Americans who are willing to forego the private practice of law, the comforts of private life and serve on the federal bench. And that's exactly what I've done. I've named some incredibly fine Americans to serve in this important part of our government. And no finer American is Miguel Estrada. (Applause.)

He is a man I have named, nominated for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.
When confirmed he'll be the first Hispanic to serve on what they call "the second most important court in America". (Applause.) His story is the American story. His story -- it's what makes this country so profound and so hopeful and so promising. After all, he came to the country from Honduras. He could barely speak English. He came as a teenage boy, had trouble with our native language and, yet, ends up shortly thereafter in Harvard Law School as one of the top students.

It speaks about a man who has a dream and works hard to achieve that dream; understands the value of education; overcame difficulties and became one of the top law students out of Harvard. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court. He has taken his knowledge and capacity and argued before the highest court of our land. He has served in the Justice Department under Presidents from both political parties. He is a incredibly bright mind.

Yet, his nomination is being delayed and stalled by Democratic senators. His nomination has been stalled for two years. They're blocking the vote on this good man for purely political reasons. The senators are applying a double standard to Miguel Estrada by requiring him to answer questions that other judicial nominees, over time, have not been forced to answer. And that is not right, and that is not fair.

By blocking a vote on Miguel Estrada, some Democrats in the Senate are flaunting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate, itself. Alexander Hamilton wrote that, the purpose of the Senate confirmation was to prevent the appointment of unfit characters.
No one can possibly call Miguel Estrada "unfit." (Applause.)

The American Bar Association has given him its highest ratings -- highest ratings. And he has the qualifications and the experience and the temperament to make an outstanding judge. The partisans in the Senate are subjecting Miguel Estrada to an unfair double standard. Failing to allow an up or down vote -- a vote which will pass -- on Miguel Estrada's nomination is a travesty, an injustice being carried out by those responsible for helping to uphold justice in this country.

I want to thank you for your work on Miguel's nomination. I will stand by that man's side until he is sworn in as a judge. (Applause.)

And, finally, we have been called to defend America and to keep the peace. We face a significant challenge, and that is to protect the homeland of the American people. Prior to September 11, 2001, we thought oceans would protect the homeland of the American people. We thought that history would continue to repeat itself, that this nation was safe and secure; that if there was a gathering threat overseas, we could deal with it if we felt like dealing with it, but it was not a problem for the home people. Yet, on September the 11th, the world changed; it changed dramatically and sadly for thousands of citizens. It also changed for how this country must view our position in the world. The strategic vision of the country shifted.

We're doing everything we can here at home to secure the homeland. We've got agencies working overtime, people sharing information. Our borders are becoming more efficient. We want people, commerce to move freely, but we don't want terrorists to move freely. So we're doing as good a job as we possibly can to protect you. But the best way to secure the homeland is to find killers before they kill us and bring them to justice. And that's what we're going to do. (Applause.)

So we're on the hunt, on al Qaeda. This is a different kind of war. It's a war which requires a good intelligence-sharing, and it requires cutting off money. It requires specially skilled troops to smoke these people out of their caves and to bring them to justice. And that's what we're doing -- one by one. Sometimes you'll see success and sometimes you won't. You just got to know the mighty United States, along with 89 other countries in our coalition for Enduring Freedom, are doing everything we can to protect you and protect other people who love freedom.

There's also a threat gathering in Iraq. It's been gathering for a long period of time. The danger with Iraq is that he can strike in the neighborhood. And the danger with Iraq is that he has got the willingness and capacity to train al Qaeda-type organizations and provide them with equipment to hurt America.

The world has waited a long time for Mr. Saddam Hussein to disarm. They've waited a long time. He is a master of disguise and delay. He'll say, oh, I'm disarming -- after he said he has no arms. (Laughter.)

We will continue to work with our friends, people who understand the value of freedom. We will insist that the United Nation Resolution 1441 be adhered to in its fullest. After all, we want the United Nations to be a legitimate, effective body. But for the safety of the American people and for peace in the world, Saddam Hussein will be disarmed, one way or the other. And this nation does so for the sake of peace.

The use of our military is the absolute last option. It is the last alternative for the -- for the President. But the risk of doing nothing, the risk of assuming that Saddam Hussein will change, the risk of thinking and hoping for the best for the American people far outweighs the risk of committing troops, if we have to. The choice is Saddam Hussein's to make. It's been his to make all along. He gets to choose between peace and war.

And the other thing that is an inherent part of our view of Iraq is how I started the discussion here. See, we believe everybody matters, everybody counts. It doesn't matter your background, where you're from, everybody has worth. As I said in my State of the Union address, liberty is not America's gift to the world; liberty is God's gift to human -- to the human -- mankind.
And that's what we believe. (Applause.)

So in the days ahead, as we deal with this challenge facing our country, you need to know that the value of freedom and liberty will be at the forefront of a policy designed to make the world more peaceful, and a policy designed to protect the American people.

Thank you for your interest. May God bless you all, and may God bless America.
(Applause.)

President Bush meets today with Afghanistan President Hamid Karzai. The US commitment to this war-torn nation is demonstrated in the Administration's policies -- and in the President's words.

IN THE PRESIDENT'S WORDS...

THE RIGHTS AND THE ASPIRATIONS OF THE PEOPLE OF AFGHANISTAN

"In Afghanistan, we helped to liberate an oppressed people. And we will continue helping them secure their country, rebuild their society, and educate all their children, boys and girls."
State of the Union, January 28, 2003

"We've seen in Afghanistan that the road to freedom can be hard; it's a hard struggle. We've also seen in Afghanistan that the road to freedom is the only one worth traveling. Any nation that sacrifices to build a future of liberty will have the respect, the support, and the friendship of the United States of America."
Remarks on Humanitarian Efforts in Afghanistan, October 11, 2002

"Our commitment to a stable and free and peaceful Afghanistan is a long-term commitment."
Statement with Afghanistan's President Karzai, September 12, 2002

"Our governments have acted as leaders in the international community to address the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, including repatriation and resettlement of refugees and the internally displaced. While these challenges continue, it is now time for the international community to take strong, visible steps to begin Afghanistan's physical reconstruction."

Joint Statement with Japan's Prime Minister and Saudi Arabia's Foreign Minister, September 12, 2002

"In Afghanistan, the Taliban used violence and fear to deny Afghan women access to education, health care, mobility, and the right to vote. Our coalition has liberated Afghanistan and restored fundamental human rights and freedoms to Afghan women, and all the people of Afghanistan. Young girls in Afghanistan are able to attend schools for the first time."
Proclamation 7584,Women's Equality Day, 2002, August 23, 2002

"And thanks to our United States military and thanks to a coalition we put together -- and thanks to the coalition we have put together, we have freed the people of Afghanistan from one of the most repressive regimes in the history of mankind. Not only are we steadfast in our desire to defend that which we believe, we also are willing to commit resources to free a nation."
Remarks at the Knoxville, Tennessee, Civic Center, April 8, 2002

"[T]hat cause was to liberate the Afghan people from terrorist occupation, and we did so. Next week, the schools reopen in Afghanistan. They will be open to all -- and many young girls will go to school for the first time in their young lives. Afghanistan has many difficult challenges ahead -- and, yet, we've averted mass starvation, begun clearing mine fields, rebuilding roads and improving health care. In Kabul, a friendly government is now an essential member of the coalition against terror."
Remarks on the World Coalition for Anti-Terrorism Efforts, March 11, 2002

"All fathers and mothers, in all societies, want their children to be educated, and live free from poverty and violence. No people on Earth yearn to be oppressed, or aspire to servitude, or eagerly await the midnight knock of the secret police. If anyone doubts this, let them look to Afghanistan, where the Islamic 'street' greeted the fall of tyranny with song and celebration."

Proclamation 7584,Women's Equality Day, 2002, August 23, 2002

"And thanks to our United States military and thanks to a coalition we put together -- and thanks to the coalition we have put together, we have freed the people of Afghanistan from one of the most repressive regimes in the history of mankind. Not only are we steadfast in our desire to defend that which we believe, we also are willing to commit resources to free a nation."
Remarks at the Knoxville, Tennessee, Civic Center, April 8, 2002

"[T]hat cause was to liberate the Afghan people from terrorist occupation, and we did so. Next week, the schools reopen in Afghanistan. They will be open to all -- and many young girls will go to school for the first time in their young lives. Afghanistan has many difficult challenges ahead -- and, yet, we've averted mass starvation, begun clearing mine fields, rebuilding roads and improving health care. In Kabul, a friendly government is now an essential member of the coalition against terror."
Remarks on the World Coalition for Anti-Terrorism Efforts, March 11, 2002

"All fathers and mothers, in all societies, want their children to be educated, and live free from poverty and violence. No people on Earth yearn to be oppressed, or aspire to servitude, or eagerly await the midnight knock of the secret police. If anyone doubts this, let them look to Afghanistan, where the Islamic 'street' greeted the fall of tyranny with song and celebration."
State of the Union, January 29, 2002

EDITORIAL: First, Help the Sick

February 27, 2003

The continuing flood of asbestos injury lawsuits clogging courts around the country now represents the longest-running legal saga in American history. That unhappy distinction should prod Congress to step in at last.

In recent decades, more than half a million men and women, most of them blue-collar workers, have sued companies that made or used products containing asbestos. Many are desperately sick with respiratory cancers or other conditions causing severe breathing difficulties, but most who say they were exposed to asbestos aren't currently ill.

Lawyers for the earliest asbestos victims were heroes. In the 1970s, they exposed corporate bosses who for decades had told their employees to mine asbestos or insulate ships with it even though company officials knew the material was deadly. When workers fell ill, many coughing up blood, their bosses refused to tell them that asbestos might be the reason. In trial after trial, executives swore that something else must have caused the plaintiffs' diseases -- though juries increasingly refused to buy that line.

At this point, there's plenty of dishonor to be shared. By the labor unions that have shamelessly trolled their ranks for plaintiffs, many of them likely never to fall ill with asbestos-caused disease. By lawyers who have grown rich off these cases but still charge 30% contingency fees to process plaintiffs in impersonal batches of 1,000 or more. And certainly by the corporate defendants.

Asbestos litigation has already cost the U.S. economy $54 billion, according to a Rand Corp. estimate. Plaintiffs have sued some 6,000 companies. Legal fees and payouts have bankrupted dozens of corporations, with more failures to come. Desperately sick plaintiffs can still wait years before they get to court; many have died before

By clumping cases into huge groups, lawyers haggle with the corporations and their insurers over the value of workers' injuries, often shaking them down on behalf of clients who were merely exposed to asbestos while underpaying people who are acutely ill.

For years, policymakers have tried to devise a speedier, fairer way to resolve this mess. The continuing bankruptcies and estimates of half a million or more asbestos lawsuits to come may have created momentum for reform.

The most thoughtful proposal, which Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.) introduced as legislation this month, would make sure that payouts go where they are most needed, to people who are already ill. Those who fall ill in the future would be able to seek compensation then. This approach won important support in recent weeks from the American Bar Assn. Congress should pass Nickles' legislation.

Cook and the law
The demonization of Deborah Cook has reached full froth. So much for assessing a judicial nominee on her record

The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote this morning on the nomination of Deborah Cook to sit on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati. Almost two years have passed since she was first tapped by President Bush to join the federal bench. The delay reflects understandable payback from Democrats who watched strong nominees of Bill Clinton linger for longer as Republicans played political games. Unfortunately, part of the game played by both parties and their allies involves the crude caricature (and worse) of judicial nominees.

A fresh example of the distortion and even recklessness can be found on today's Commentary page. Adam Cohen, an editorial writer for the New York Times, delivers a slashing critique of the Cook record as a justice on the Ohio Supreme Court the past eight years Too bad his assessment lacks the necessary context, let alone a full grasp of the issues at work in the cases he discusses.

Cohen notes ``the predominantly Republican court'' and later adds that Cook ``frequently breaks with her Republican colleagues.'' The objective is to portray the justice, ``the court's most prolific dissenter,'' as extreme, even for a Republican court. Those who pay cursory attention to the Ohio Supreme Court know that party labels do not tell the story of recent years.

Two of the Republicans have been among the most liberal members, siding regularly with the two Democrats to form a majority in such areas as employment and tort liability law. To say the court is predominantly Republican may be convenient. It doesn't add to an understanding of Cook.

We have noted in the past our sharp disagreements with Cook, especially in the landmark school-funding case. What offends in the current confirmation process is the attempt to demonize the Akron resident, arguing (as Cohen does) that ``often she reaches for a harsh legal technicality to send a hapless victim home empty-handed,'' that she shills for ``big business and insurance companies.''

Actually, the description is funny, in view of the mish-mash the ``bipartisan'' majority made of insurance law in the state. Cook has been a frequent dissenter. That doesn't mean she stands alone. Cohen addresses a half-dozen cases. In four, Cook sided with the rulings of both the trial court and the state appeals court. In the remaining two, she would have upheld the trial court or the appeals court.

Were these courts reaching for ``a harsh legal technicality''? Is there a vast right-wing conspiracy? Sorry, not in Ohio. If anything, Cook and two Republican colleagues (Chief Justice Thomas Moyer, ideologue?) often objected to the majority departing from precedent, hardly a radical position.

Cook critics overlook the majority opinion she wrote rejecting the claims of employers and concluding that punitive damages are available to workers who have suffered discrimination in the workplace. The opinion reveals much about the Cook judicial philosophy. She precisely examined legislative intent in crafting the law.

That is the Cook familiar to many Ohioans. She gives great deference to the legislature. She reflects the principle that this is a nation of laws, not of men or women.

Who doesn't sympathize with David Norgard, a worker exposed to beryllium on the job who has been ailing for two decades? The issue before the Ohio Supreme Court was whether Norgard filed suit within the statute of limitations. The majority ruled he had. Cook dissented.

Cohen suggests Norgard knew little about his illness because the company stonewalled. In truth, Norgard knew for years. He sought advice about hiring an attorney. The trial court dismissed his case on summary judgment. The appeals court unanimously upheld the lower court. Cook objected to the majority casting aside settled law on the statute of limitations. Her interpretation followed the practice of courts across the country.

The ruling of the Ohio Supreme Court in the case of Phyllis Ruth Mauzy provoked cries of amazement in courthouses. Cook dissented from the majority's far-flung and poorly reasoned departure from the way Ohio and almost every other state applied federal civil-rights law. Again, Cook wasn't by herself. She argued the mainstream interpretation.

The impression promoted by Cohen is that Cook is results-oriented, serving corporate masters, denying the little guy his due. Read the cases cited in the Cohen column and many others, and the conclusion is plain: Cook criticizes the majority for bending the law to fit its desired result.

We share concerns about Bush nominees who ``will radically reshape the federal judiciary for a generation'' (as Cohen puts it). Jeffrey Sutton, another selected to sit on the federal appeals court in Cincinnati, may give too little deference to legislative intent. Is the argument that Cook gives too much? A silly argument? It is almost as silly as surveying the many Bush nominees and concluding that Cook offers reason for Americans to be ``very worried.''

In this crowd, she is reassuring.

Other nominees deserve harsh words. Yet, in seeking to demonize Cook, critics risk their credibility. When trouble really enters the committee room, the howls will be dismissed as the usual fare. That ill serves the federal judiciary. The Adam Cohens could learn something from Deborah Cook. They could argue their case more carefully.

Those Republicans who have been critical in the past of the party's pre-Bush communications efforts can't help but be pleased at the coordinated effort between the White House and the party on the Hill to coalition-build and Hispanic-media-outreach on this, but, as (belated) birthday boy Bob Novak says and writes regularly, it still isn't clear what the Republican end game on this shall be.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 12, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter to the President dated February 11, 2003. In the letter, you renew your previous request for confidential Department of Justice memoranda in which Mr. Estrada provided appeal, certiorari, and amicus recommendations while he was a career attorney in the Office of Solicitor General for four years in the Clinton Administration and one year in the George H.W. Bush Administration. You also request that Mr. Estrada answer certain questions beyond the extensive questions that he already answered appropriately and forthrightly during his Committee hearing and in follow-up written responses.

We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate must make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. However, your requests have no persuasive support in the history and precedent of judicial appointments. Indeed, the relevant history and precedent convincingly demonstrate that a new and shifting standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

First, as the Department of Justice explained in its letters of June 5, 2002, October 8, 2002, and January 23, 2003, all living former Solicitors General (four Democrats and three Republicans) have strongly opposed your request for Solicitor General memoranda and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. Even more telling, we are informed that the Senate has not requested memos such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department (including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office). The few isolated examples you have cited – in which targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues were accommodated for nominees to positions other than the U.S. Courts of Appeals – similarly do not support your request here.

Second, as explained more fully below with respect to your request that Mr. Estrada answer additional questions, the only specific question identified in your letter refers to his judicial role models. You claim that Mr. Estrada refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in his written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject that Mr. Estrada submitted three months ago, he cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires (he clerked for Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse), and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question." Your letter to the President ignores Mr. Estrada's answer to this question. In any event, beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to him. Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day Committee hearing. Since the hearing, Mr. Estrada also has met (and continues to meet) with numerous Democrat Senators interested in learning more about his record. Finally, as I will explain below, Mr. Estrada forthrightly answered numerous questions about his judicial approach and views in a manner that matches or greatly exceeds answers demanded of previous appeals court nominees.

With respect, it appears that a double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. That is highly unfair and inappropriate, particularly for this well-qualified and well-respected nominee.

I will turn now in more detail to the various issues raised by your letter. I will address them at some length given the importance of this issue and the nature of your requests.

I. Miguel Estrada's Qualifications and Bipartisan Support

Miguel Estrada is an extraordinarily qualified judicial nominee. The American Bar Association, which Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. The ABA rating was entirely appropriate in light of Mr. Estrada's superb record as Assistant to the Solicitor General in the Clinton and George H.W. Bush Administrations, as a federal prosecutor in New York, as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and in performing significant pro bono work.

Some who are misinformed have seized on Mr. Estrada's lack of prior judicial experience, but five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial experience, including two appointees of President Clinton and one appointee of President Carter. Miguel Estrada has tried numerous cases before federal juries, argued many cases in the federal appeals courts, and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. That is a record that few judicial nominees can match. And few lawyers, whatever their ideology or philosophy, have volunteered to represent a death row inmate pro bono before the Supreme Court as did Miguel Estrada.

Mr. Estrada's excellent legal qualifications are all the more extraordinary given his personal history. Simply put, Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country at age 17 from Honduras speaking little English. Through hard work and dedicated service to the United States, Miguel Estrada has risen to the very pinnacle of the legal profession. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic judge to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Given his record, his background, and his integrity, it is no surprise that Miguel Estrada is strongly supported by the vast majority of national Hispanic organizations. The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), for example, wrote to Senator Leahy to urge Mr. Estrada's confirmation and explain that he "is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth." A group of 19 Hispanic organizations, including LULAC and the Hispanic National Bar Association, recently wrote to the Senate urging "on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country" that "both parties in the U.S. Senate . . . put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land."

The current effort to filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination is particularly unjustified given that those who have worked with Miguel -- including prominent Democrat lawyers whom you know well -- strongly support his confirmation. For example, Ron Klain, who served as a high-ranking adviser to former Vice President Gore and former Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent. . . . [T]he challenges that he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need."

President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, wrote: "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. . . . In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity."

A bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice wrote: "We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." One former colleague, Richard Seamon, wrote that he is a pro-choice, lifelong Democrat with self-described "liberal views on most issues" who said he would "consider it a disgrace" if Mr. Estrada is not confirmed.

Similarly, Leonard Joy, head of the Federal Defender Division of the Legal Aid Society of New York, wrote that "Miguel would make an excellent Circuit Court Judge. He is as fine a lawyer as I have met and, on top of all his intellectual abilities and judgment he would bring to bear, he would bring a desirable diversity to the Court. I heartily recommend him."

Beyond the extensive personal testimony from those who worked side-by-side with him for many years, the performance reviews of Miguel for the years that he worked in the Office of Solicitor General gave him the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. The reviews stated that Miguel:

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

REV_00158959

In the two years that Miguel Estrada and Paul Bender worked together, Mr. Bender signed those reviews. These employment reviews thus call into serious question some press reports containing a negative comment from Mr. Bender about Mr. Estrada's temperament (which is the only negative comment made by anyone who actually knows Mr. Estrada). Just as important, President Clinton's Solicitor General Seth Waxman expressly refuted Mr. Bender's statement.

In sum, based on his experience, his intellect, his integrity, and his bipartisan support, Miguel Estrada should be confirmed promptly.

II. The Senate's Role

President Bush nominated Miguel Estrada nearly two years ago on May 9, 2001. As explained above, he is well-qualified and well-respected. By any traditional measure that the Senate has used to evaluate appeals court nominees, Miguel Estrada should have been confirmed long ago. Your letter and public statements indicate, however, that you are applying both a new standard and new tactics to this particular nominee.

As to the standard, the Senate has a very important role in the process, but the Senate's traditional approach to appeals court nominees, and the approach envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, is far different from the standard that you now seek to apply. Senator Biden stated the traditional approach in 1997: "Any person who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life, and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court." Congressional Record, March 19, 1997. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist No. 76. It was anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." No. 76.

As to tactics, you have indicated that some Senate Democrats intend to filibuster to prevent a vote on this nominee. As you know, there has never been a successful filibuster of a court of appeals nominee. Only a few years ago, Senator Leahy and other Democrat Senators expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

> Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

Senator Daschle similarly stated on October 5, 1999, that "[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much."

In his East Room speech of October 30, 2002, President Bush reiterated that every judicial nominee deserves a timely up-or-down floor vote in the Senate, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. Contrary to President Bush's attempts at permanent reform to bring order to the process, your current effort to employ a filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on the Estrada nomination may significantly exacerbate the cycle of bitterness and recrimination that President Bush has sought to resolve on a bipartisan basis. We fear that the damage caused by a filibuster could take many years to undo. To continue on this path would also be, in Senator Leahy's words, "a terrible disservice" to Mr. Estrada. We urge you to reconsider this extraordinary action, to end the filibuster of Mr. Estrada's nomination, and to allow the full Senate to vote up or down.

III. Request for Confidential Solicitor General Memos

You have suggested that Mr. Estrada's background, experience, and support are insufficient to assess his suitability for the D.C. Circuit. You have renewed your request for Solicitor General memos authored by Mr. Estrada. But every living former Solicitor General signed a joint letter to the Senate opposing your request. The letter was signed by Democrats Archibald Cox, Walter Dellinger, Drew Days, and Seth Waxman. They stated: "Any attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests – a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself. . . . Although we profoundly respect the Senate's duty to evaluate Mr. Estrada's fitness for the federal judiciary, we do not think that the confidentiality and integrity of internal deliberations should be sacrificed in the process."

It bears mention that the interest asserted here is that of the United States, not the personal interest of Mr. Estrada. Indeed, Mr. Estrada himself testified that "I have not opposed the release of those records. . . . I am exceptionally proud of every piece of legal work that I have done in my life. If it were up to me as a private citizen, I would be more than proud to have you look at everything that I have done for the government or for a private client."

The history of Senate confirmations of nominees who had previously worked in the Department of Justice makes clear that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada's nomination. Since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Of those 67 nominees, 38 had no prior judicial experience, like Miguel Estrada. The Department of Justice's review of those nomination records disclosed that in none of those cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the Department. In fact, the Department's review disclosed that the Senate did not even request such materials for a single one of these 67 nominees.

Of this group of 67 nominees, seven were nominees who had worked as a Deputy Solicitor General or Assistant to the Solicitor General. These seven nominees, nominated by Presidents of each party and confirmed by Senates controlled by each party, included Samuel Alito, Danny Boggs, William Bryson, Frank Easterbrook, Daniel Friedman, Richard Posner, and Raymond Randolph.

The five isolated historical examples you have cited do not support your current request. In each of those five cases, the Committee made a targeted request for specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Even in those isolated cases, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda written by those nominees were neither requested nor produced. With respect to Judge Bork's nomination, for example, the Committee received access to certain particular memoranda (many related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues). The vast majority of memoranda authored by Judge Bork were never received. With respect to Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents unrelated to Judge Trott's service to the Department. So, too, in the three other examples you cite, the Committee requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Of course, no such allegations have been made in the case of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the examples you have cited only highlight the lack of precedent for the current request. As the Justice Department has explained to you previously, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memos from the Office of Solicitor General – and deliberative Department of Justice memoranda more broadly – must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process. That is a fundamental principle that has been followed irrespective of the party that controls the White House and the Senate.

Your continued requests for these memoranda have provoked a foreseeable and inevitable conflict that, in turn, has been cited as a basis for obstructing a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination. Respectfully, the conflict is unnecessary because your desire to assess the nominee can be readily accommodated in many ways other than intruding into and severely damaging the deliberative process of the Office of Solicitor General. For example, you can review Mr. Estrada's written briefs and oral arguments both as an attorney for the United States and in private practice. As you know, those documents are publicly available and easily accessible; that said, we would be pleased to facilitate your access to them. (Mr. Estrada's hearing transcript suggests that no Democrat Member of the Committee had read Mr. Estrada's many dozens of Solicitor General merits briefs, certiorari petitions, and opposition briefs or the transcripts of his 14 oral arguments when he represented the United States.) You also may consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time (discussed above) and examine the nominee's written performance reviews (also discussed above). There is more than ample information for you to assess Mr. Estrada's qualifications and suitability for the D.C. Circuit based on the traditional standards the Senate has employed.

It also is important to recognize that political appointees of President Clinton have read virtually all of the memoranda in question – namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman. None of those three highly respected Democrat lawyers has expressed any concern whatever about Mr. Estrada's nomination. Indeed, Mr. Waxman wrote a letter of strong support, and Mr. Days made public statements in support of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the historical record and past precedent convincingly demonstrate that this request creates and applies an unfair double standard to Miguel Estrada.

IV. Request that Miguel Estrada Answer Additional Questions

Your letter also suggests that Miguel Estrada should answer certain questions that he allegedly did not answer in his hearing. To begin with, we do not know what your specific questions are. In addition, this request frankly comes as a surprise given that (i) Senator Schumer chaired the hearing on Mr. Estrada, (ii) the hearing lasted an entire day, (iii) Senators at the all-day hearing asked numerous far-reaching questions that Mr. Estrada answered forthrightly and appropriately, and (iv) only two of the 10 Democrat Senators then on the Committee even submitted any follow-up written questions, and they submitted only a few questions (in marked contrast to other nominees who received voluminous follow-up questions).

It also bears mention that Mr. Estrada has personally met with a large number of Democrat Senators, including Senators Landrieu, Lincoln, Bill Nelson, Ben Nelson, Leahy, Feinstein, Kohl, and Breaux; is scheduled to meet with Senator Carper; and would be pleased to meet with additional Senators.

The only specific question your letter identifies refers to Mr. Estrada's judicial role models, and you claim that he refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in Mr. Estrada's written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject, Mr. Estrada cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires, and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question."

In our judgment, moreover, Mr. Estrada answered the Committee's questions in a manner that was both entirely appropriate and entirely consistent with the approach that judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have taken for many years. Your suggestions to the contrary do not square with the hearing record or traditional practice.

A. Judicial Ethics and Traditional Practice

In assessing your request that Miguel Estrada did not answer appropriate questions, we begin with rules of judicial ethics that govern prospective nominees. Canon 5A(3)(d) provides that prospective judges "shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court"

REV_00158963

(emphasis added). Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point well in 1967 when asked about the Fifth Amendment: "I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself." Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to President Carter and President Clinton, has stated that "candidates should decline to reply when efforts are made to find out how they would decide a particular case."

In 1968, in the context of the Justice Abe Fortas' nomination to be Chief Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee similarly stated: "Although recognizing the constitutional dilemma which appears to exist when the Senate is asked to advise and consent on a judicial nominee without examining him on legal questions, the Committee is of the view that Justice Fortas wisely and correctly declined to answer questions in this area. To require a Justice to state his views on legal questions or to discuss his past decisions before the Committee would threaten the independence of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system itself. It would also impinge on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the three branches of Government as required by the Constitution." S. Exec. Rep. No. 8, 90th Cong. 2d Sess. 5 (1968).

Even in the context of a Supreme Court confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion: "It is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group." Nomination of Sandra O'Connor: Hearings Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Judge Sandra Day O'Connor of Arizona to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 97th Cong. 6 (1981) (statement of Sen. Kennedy).

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likewise declined to answer certain questions: "Because I am and hope to continue to be a judge, it would be wrong for me to say or to preview in this legislative chamber how I would cast my vote on questions the Supreme Court may be called upon to decide. Were I to rehearse here what I would say and how I would reason on such questions, I would act injudiciously." Similarly, Justice John Paul Stevens stated in his hearing: "I really don't think I should discuss this subject generally, Senator. I don't mean to be unresponsive but in all candor I must say that there have been many times in my experience in the last five years where I found that my first reaction to a problem was not the same as the reaction I had when I had the responsibility of decisions and I think that if I were to make comments that were not carefully thought through they might be given significance that they really did not merit."

Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice in a case decided last year: "In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be 'on interest' to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Court declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well." Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 122 S. Ct. 2528, 2552 n.1 (2002) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Ginsburg added that this adherence to this "longstanding norm" was "crucial to the health of the Federal Judiciary." Id. In his majority opinion, Justice Scalia did not take issue with that description and added: "Nor do we assert that candidates for judicial office should be compelled to announce their views on disputed legal issues." Id. at 2539 n.11 (emphasis in original).

In some recent hearings, including Mr. Estrada's, Senator Schumer has asked that nominees identify particular Supreme Court cases of the last few decades with which they disagree. But the problems with such a question and answer were well stated by Justice Stephen Breyer. As Justice Breyer put it, "Until [an issue] comes up, I don't really think it through with the depth that it would require. . . . So often, when you decide a matter for real, in a court or elsewhere, it turns out to be very different after you've become informed and think it through for real than what you would have said at a cocktail party answering a question." 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 425, 462.

Senator Schumer also has asked nominees how they would have ruled in particular Supreme Court cases. Again, a double standard is being applied. The nominees of President Clinton did not answer such questions. For example, Richard Tallman, a nominee with no prior judicial service who would now serves on the Ninth Circuit, not only would not answer how he would have ruled as a judge in Roe v. Wade – but even how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson, the infamous case that upheld the discredited and shameful "separate but equal" doctrine. So, too, in the hearing on President Clinton's nomination of Judges Barry and Fisher, Senator Smith asked whether the nominees would have voted for a constitutional right to abortion before Roe v. Wade. Chairman Hatch interrupted Senator Smith to say "that is not a fair question to these two nominees because regardless of what happened pre-1973, they have to abide by what has happened post-1973 and the current precedents that the Supreme Court has."

B. Answers by Miguel Estrada

Miguel Estrada answered the Committee's questions forthrightly and appropriately. Indeed, Miguel Estrada was more expansive than many judicial nominees traditionally have been in Senate hearings, and he was asked a far broader range of questions than many previous appeals court nominees were asked. We will catalogue here a select sample of his answers.

Unenumerated rights, privacy, and abortion

When asked by Senator Edwards about the Constitution's protection for rights not enumerated in the Constitution, Mr. Estrada replied: "I recognize that the Supreme Court has said [on] numerous occasions in the area of privacy and elsewhere that there are unenumerated rights in the Constitution, and I have no view of any sort, whether legal or personal, that would hinder me from applying those rulings by the court. But I think the court has been quite clear that there are a number of unenumerated rights in the Constitution. In the main, the court has recognized them as being inherent in the right of substantive due process and the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

When asked by Senator Feinstein whether the Constitution encompasses a right to privacy and abortion, Mr. Estrada responded, "The Supreme Court has so held, and I have no view of any nature whatsoever, whether it be legal, philosophical, moral, or any other type of view that would keep me from applying that case law faithfully." When asked whether Roe v. Wade was "settled law," Mr. Estrada replied, "I believe so."

General Approach to Judging

When asked by Senator Edwards about judicial review, Mr. Estrada explained: "Courts take the laws that have been passed by you and give you the benefit of understanding that you take the same oath that they do to uphold the Constitution, and therefore they take the laws with the presumption that they are constitutional. It is the affirmative burden of the plaintiff to show that you have gone beyond your oath. If they come into court, then it is appropriate for courts to undertake to listen to the legal arguments – why it is that the legislature went beyond [its] role as a legislat[ure] and invaded the Constitution."

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Edwards that there are 200 years of Supreme Court precedent and that it is not the case that "the appropriate conduct for courts is to be guided solely by the bare text of the Constitution because that is not the legal system that we have."

When asked by Senator Edwards whether he was a strict constructionist, Mr. Estrada replied that he was "a fair constructionist" – meaning that "I don't think that it should be the goal of courts to be strict or lax. The goal of courts is to get it right. . . . It is not necessarily the case in my mind that, for example, all parts of the Constitution are suitable for the same type of interpretative analysis. . . . [T]he Constitution says, for example, that you must be 35 years old to be our chief executive. . . . There are areas of the Constitution that are more open-ended. And you adverted to one, like the substantive component of the due process clauses, where there are other methods of interpretation that are not quite so obvious that the court has brought to bear to try to bring forth what the appropriate answer should be."

When Senator Kohl asked him about environmental statutes, for example, Mr. Estrada explained that those statutes come to court "with a strong presumption of constitutionality."

In response to Senator Leahy, Mr. Estrada described the most important attributes of a judge: "The most important quality for a judge, in my view Senator Leahy, is to have an appropriate process for decisionmaking. That entails having an open mind. It entails listening to the parties, reading their briefs, going back beyond those briefs and doing all of the legwork needed to ascertain who is right in his or her claims as to what the law says and what the facts [are]. In a court of appeals court, where judges sit in panels of three, it is important to engage in deliberation and give ear to the views of colleagues who may have come to different conclusions. And in sum, to be committed to judging as a process that is intended to give us the right answer, not to a result. And I can give you my level best solemn assurance that I firmly think I do have those qualities or else I would not have accepted the nomination."

In response to Senator Durbin, Miguel Estrada stated that "the Constitution, like other legal texts, should be construed reasonably and fairly, to give effect to all that its text contains."

Mr. Estrada indicated to Senator Durbin that he admired the judges for whom he clerked, Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse, as well as Justice Lewis Powell.

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Durbin that "I can absolutely assure the Committee that I will follow binding Supreme Court precedent until and unless such precedent has been displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court itself."

In response to Senator Grassley, Mr. Estrada stated: "When facing a problems for which there is a not a decisive precedent from a higher court, my cardinal rule would be to seize aid from anyplace where I could get it. Depending on the nature of the problem, that would include related case law in other areas that higher courts had dealt with that had had some insights to teach with respect to the problem at hand. It could include the history of the enactment, including in the case of a statute legislative history. It could include the custom and practice under any predecessor statute or document. It could include the views of academics to the extent that they purport to analyze what the law is instead of – instead of prescribing what it should be. And in sum, as Chief Justice Marshall once said, to attempt not to overlook anything from which aid might be derived."

In response to Senator Sessions, Estrada stated: "I am very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the first duty of a judge is to self-consciously put that aside and look at each case by starting withholding judgment with an open mind and listen to the parties. So I think that the job of a judge is to put all of that aside, and to the best of his human capacity to give a judgment based solely on the arguments and the law."

In response to Senator Sessions, Mr. Estrada stated that "I will follow binding case law in every case. . . . I may have a personal, moral, philosophical view on the subject matter. But I undertake to you that I would put all that aside and decide cases in accordance with binding case law and even in accordance with the case law that is not binding but seems constructive on the area, without any influence whatsoever from any personal view I may have about the subject matter."

Miranda/Stare Decisis

Mr. Estrada stated that United States v. Dickerson – a case raising the question whether Miranda should be overruled – reflected a "reasonable application of the doctrine of stare decisis. In my view, it is rarely appropriate for the Supreme Court to overturn one of its own precedents."

Affirmative Action

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Estrada responded to Senator Kennedy that "any policy views I might have as a private citizen on the subject of affirmative action would not enter into how I would approach any case that comes before me as a judge. Under controlling Supreme Court authority, particularly Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995), if a government program creates a racial classification, it will be subject to strict scrutiny. Whether the program survives that sort of scrutiny will often involve a highly contextual and fact-specific inquiry into the nature of the justifications asserted by the government and the fit between those justifications and the classification at issue. Adarand and similar cases provide the framework that I would be required to apply, and would apply, in considering these issues as a judge."

Asked by Senator Leahy about the strict scrutiny test, Mr. Estrada replied, "the Supreme Court in the Adarand case stated, as a general rule, that the consideration of race is subject to strict scrutiny. That means that though it may be used in some cases, it has to be justified by a compelling state interest. And with respect to the particular context, there must be a fairly fact-bound individual assessment of the fit between the interest that is being asserted and the category being used. That is just another way of saying that it is a very fact-intensive analysis in the context of a specific program and in the context of the justifications that are being offered in support of the program."

Congressional Authority

With respect to the outer limits of Congress' power to confer authority on other governmental bodies, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that the Supreme Court has said that "particular factual context is significant in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular delegation. . . . Of course, the fact that the Supreme Court only rarely has struck down statutes on this ground suggests that the Court has been quite deferential to congressional judgments about the types of delegations that reasonably might be needed to carry on the business of government."

When Senator Kohl asked Mr. Estrada about the 1995 Lopez case concerning the scope of Congress' power to regulate, Mr. Estrada pointed out that he had argued in a companion case "for a very expansive view of the power to Congress to pass statutes under the Commerce Clause and have them be upheld by the court. . . . Lopez has given us guidance on when it is appropriate for the court to exercise the commerce power. It is binding law and I would follow it."

Ethnicity

With respect to the fact that the President had noted Miguel's ethnicity, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy: "The President is the leader of a large and diverse country, and it is accordingly appropriate for him, in exercising his constitutional nomination and appointment powers, to select qualified individuals who reflect the breadth and diversity of our Nation."

With respect to the Democrat Congressional Hispanic Caucus's criticism of him, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that "I strongly disagree, however, with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus' view that I lack an understanding of the role and importance of courts in protecting the legal rights of minorities, of the values and mores of Latino culture, or the significance of role models for minority communities."

Racial Discrimination

With respect to race discrimination, Mr. Estrada stated in response to Senator Kennedy: "I take a backseat to no one in my abhorrence of race discrimination in law enforcement or anything else."

Senator Feingold asked Mr. Estrada whether he believed that racial profiling and racially motivated law enforcement misconduct are problems in this country today. Mr. Estrada replied, "I am – I will once again emphasize I'm unalterably opposed to any sort of race discrimination in law enforcement, Senator, whether it's called racial profiling or anything else. . . . I know full well that we have real problems with discrimination in our day and age."

Senator Leahy asked Mr. Estrada about whether statistical evidence of discriminatory impact is relevant in establishing discrimination. Mr. Estrada replied: "I am not a specialist in this area of the law, Senator Leahy, but I am aware that there is a line of cases, beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Griggs, that suggests that in appropriate cases that [such evidence] may be appropriate. . . . I do understand that there is a major area of law that deals with how you prove and try disparate-impact cases."

Congressional Authority to Regulate Firearms

Senator Feinstein asked whether Congress may legislate in the area of dangerous firearms, and Mr. Estrada responded that the Supreme Court had ruled that "if the government were to prove that the firearm had at any time in its lifetime been in interstate commerce even if that had nothing to do with the crime at issue, that that would be an adequate basis for the exercise of Congress' power."

Right to Counsel

Senator Edwards asked about Gideon v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court case guaranteeing the right to counsel for poor defendants who could not afford counsel. Although Senator Edwards appeared to question the reasoning in that landmark case, Mr. Estrada responded that "I frankly have always taken it as a given that that's – the ruling in the case."

C. Answers by President Clinton's Nominees

Your criticism of Miguel Estrada's testimony creates a double standard. You did not require nominees of President Clinton to answer questions of this sort (keeping in mind that you have not identified what your additional questions to Mr. Estrada are). President Clinton's appeals court nominees routinely testified without discussing their views of specific issues or cases. A few select examples, including of several nominees who had no prior judicial experience, illustrate the point. (Please note that these are isolated examples; there are many more we can provide if necessary.)

Merrick Garland (no prior judicial experience). In the nomination of Merrick Garland to the D.C. Circuit, Senator Specter asked him: "Do you favor, as a personal matter, capital punishment?" Judge Garland replied only that he would follow Supreme Court precedent: "This is really a matter of settled law now. The Court has held that capital punishment is constitutional and lower courts are to follow that rule." Senator Specter also asked him about his views of the independent counsel statute's constitutionality, and Judge Garland responded: "Well, that, too, the Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson upheld as constitutional, and, of course, I would follow that ruling." Judge Garland did not provide his personal view of either subject.

Judith Rogers. In the hearing on Judge Judith Rogers' nomination to the D.C. Circuit, Judge Rogers was asked by Senator Cohen about the debate over an evolving Constitution. Judge Rogers responded: "My obligation as an appellate judge is to apply precedent. Some of the debates which I have heard and to which I think you may be alluding are interesting, but as an appellate judge, my obligation is to apply precedent. And so the interpretations of the Constitution by the U.S. Supreme Court would be binding on me." She then was asked how she would rule in the absence of precedent and responded: "When I was taking my master's in judicial process at the University of Virginia Law School, one of the points emphasized was the growth of our common law system based on the English common law judge system. And my opinions, I think if you look at them, reflect that where I am presented with a question of first impression, that I look to the language of whatever provision we are addressing, that I look to whatever debates are available, that I look to the interpretations by other Federal courts, that I look to the interpretations of other State courts, and it may be necessary, as well, to look at the interpretations suggested by commentators. And within that framework, which I consider to be a discipline, that I would reach a view in a case of first impression." Finally, Judge Rogers was asked her view of the three-strikes law and stated: "As an appellate judge, my obligation is to enforce the laws that Congress passes or, where I am now, that the District of Columbia Council passes." Judge Rogers did not provide her personal view of these subjects.

Marsha Berzon (no prior judicial experience). Senator Smith asked her views on Roe v. Wade and whether "an unborn child is a human being." Judge Berzon stated: "[M]y role as a judge is not to further anything that I personally believe or don't believe, and I think that is the strength of our system and the strength of our appellate system. The Supreme Court has been quite definitive quite recently about the applicable standard, and I absolutely pledge to you that I will follow that standard as it exists now, and if it is changed, I will follow that standard. And my personal views in this area, as in any other, will have absolutely no effect." When Senator Smith probed about their personal views on abortion and Roe v. Wade, Chairman Hatch interrupted: "I don't know how they can say much more than that at this point in this meeting."

Richard Tallman (no prior judicial experience). In response to written questions, Judge Tallman explained that "[j]udicial nominees are limited by judicial ethical considerations from answering any question in a manner that would call for an 'advisory opinion' as the courts have defined it or that in effect ask a nominee to suggest how he or she would rule on an issue that could foreseeably require his or her attention in a future case or controversy after confirmation." He was asked how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson. He stated: "It is entirely conjectural as to what I would have done without having the opportunity to thoroughly review the record presented on appeal, the briefs and arguments of counsel, and supporting legal authorities that were applicable at that time." He gave the same response when asked how he would have ruled on Roe v. Wade. When asked his personal view on abortion, he wrote: "I hold no personal views that would prevent me from doing my judicial duty to follow the precedent set down by the Supreme Court." He gave the same answer about the death penalty.

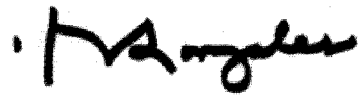
Kim Wardlaw. In the hearing on Judge Kim Wardlaw's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Judge Wardlaw was asked about the constitutionality of affirmative action. She stated (in an answer similar to Miguel Estrada's answer to the same question): "The Supreme Court has held that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are narrowly tailored to meet a compelling governmental interest."



Maryanne Trump Barry. In the hearing on Judge Maryanne Trump Barry's nomination to the Third Circuit, Senator Smith asked for her personal opinion on whether "an unborn child at any stage of the pregnancy is a human being." Judge Barry responded: "Casey is the law that I would look at. If I had a personal opinion – and I am not suggesting that I do – it is irrelevant because I must look to the law which binds me."

Raymond Fisher. In the hearing on Judge Raymond Fisher's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Senator Sessions asked Judge Fisher's own personal views on whether the death penalty was constitutional. Judge Fisher responded that "My view, Senator, is that, as you indicated, the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty is constitutional. As a lower appellate court judge, that is the law that I am governed by. I don't want in my judicial career, should I be fortunate enough to have one, to inject my personal opinions into whether or not I follow the law. I believe that the precedent of the Supreme Court is binding and that is what my function is."

V. Conclusion

Miguel Estrada is a well-qualified and well-respected judicial nominee who has very strong bipartisan support. Based on our reading of history, we believe that you have ample information about this nominee and have had more than enough time to consider questions about his qualifications and suitability. We urge you to stop the unfair treatment, end the filibuster, allow an up-or-down vote, and vote to confirm Mr. Estrada.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 24, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

Based on your public comments yesterday, I am concerned that you may have inaccurate and incomplete information about Miguel Estrada's qualifications and about the historical practice with respect to judicial confirmations. Therefore, I write to respectfully reiterate and explain our conclusion that you and certain other Senators are applying an unfair double standard -- indeed, a series of unfair double standards -- to Miguel Estrada.

First, your request for confidential attorney-client memoranda Mr. Estrada wrote in the Office of Solicitor General seeks information that, based on our review, has not been demanded from past nominees to the federal courts of appeals. We are informed that the Senate has not requested memoranda such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department -- including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office. Nor have such memoranda been demanded from nominees in similar attorney-client situations: The Senate has not demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as Senate lawyers, such as memoranda written by Stephen Breyer as a Senate counsel before Justice Breyer was confirmed to the First Circuit in 1980. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as law clerks to Supreme Court Justices or other federal or state judges. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had worked for private clients.

The very few isolated examples you have cited were not nominees for federal appeals courts. Moreover, those situations involved Executive Branch accommodations of targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues that were primarily related to allegations of malfeasance or misconduct in a federal office. We respectfully do not believe these examples support your request. Our conclusion about the general lack of support and precedent for your position is buttressed by the fact that every living former Solicitor General (four Democrats and three Republicans) has strongly opposed your request and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. In short, the traditional practice of the Senate and the Executive Branch with respect to federal appeals court nominations stands in contrast to your request here and supports our conclusion that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. (Also, contrary to your suggestion yesterday, please note that no one in the Executive Branch has reviewed these memoranda since President Bush took office in January 2001.)

Second, you suggested that "no judicial nominee that I'm aware of, for such a high court, has ever had so little of a record." I respectfully disagree. Miguel Estrada has been a very accomplished lawyer, trying cases before federal juries, briefing and arguing numerous appeals before federal and state appeals courts, and arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, among his other significant work. His record and breadth of experience exceeds that of many judicial nominees, which is no doubt why the American Bar Association -- which you have labeled the "gold standard" -- unanimously rated him "well-qualified." In noting yesterday that Mr. Estrada's career had been devoted to "arguing for a client," you appeared to imply that only those with prior judicial service (or perhaps "a lot of [law review] articles") may serve on the federal appeals courts. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial service at the time of their appointments. Indeed, Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist, White, and Powell -- to name three of the most recent -- had not served as judges before being confirmed to the Supreme Court. And like Mr. Estrada, two appointees of President Clinton to the D.C. Circuit (Judge David Tatel and Judge Merrick Garland) had similarly spent their careers "arguing for a client," but were nonetheless confirmed.

As the Chief Justice noted in his 2001 Year-End Report, moreover, "[t]he federal Judiciary has traditionally drawn from a wide diversity of professional backgrounds." The Chief Justice cited Justice Louis Brandeis, Justice John Harlan, Justice Byron White, Judge Thurgood Marshall (as nominee to the Second Circuit), Judge Learned Hand, and Judge John Minor Wisdom as just a few examples of great judges who had spent virtually their entire careers "arguing for a client" before becoming Supreme Court Justices or federal appeals court judges. As these examples show, had the "arguing for a client" standard been applied in the past, it would have deprived the American people of many of our most notable appellate judges. Based on our understanding, this standard has not been applied in the past. This further explains why we have concluded that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

Third, you stated that "when you went to those hearings, Mr. Estrada answered no questions." The record demonstrates otherwise. Mr. Estrada answered more than 100 questions at his hearing (and another 25 in follow-up written answers). He explained in some detail his approach to judging on many issues, and did so appropriately without providing his personal views on specific legal or policy questions that could come before him – which is how previous judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have appropriately answered questions. Indeed, at his hearing, Mr. Estrada was asked and answered more questions, and did so more fully, than did President Clinton's appointees to this same court. Judge David Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Judith Rogers and Merrick Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions. The three appointees of President Clinton – combined – thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, like Mr. Estrada, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions at the hearing. Judge Rogers refused to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Mr. Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty, stating that he would follow precedent. In short, we believe that your criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing reveals that another unfair double standard is being applied to Mr. Estrada.

Fourth, you stated that the Founding Fathers "came to the conclusion that the Senate ought to ask a whole lot of questions" of judicial nominees. We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate should make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. But your characterization of the Senate's role with respect to judicial nominations is not consistent with our reading of historical or traditional practice. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." The Federalist 76. The Framers anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." Id. Moreover, the Senate did not hold hearings on judicial nominees for much of American history, and the hearings for lower-court nominees in modern times traditionally have not included the examination of personal views that you have advocated. (My letter of February 12, 2003, to Senators Daschle and Leahy contains more detail on this point.) Indeed, just a few years ago, Senator Biden made clear, consistent with the traditional practice, that he would vote to confirm an appeals court judge if he were convinced that the nominee would follow precedent and otherwise was of high ability and integrity.

In short, it appears that you are seeking to change the Senate's traditional standard for assessing judicial nominees. We respect your right to advocate a change, but we do not believe that the standard you seek to apply is consistent with the Framers' vision, the traditional Senate practice, or the Senate's treatment of President Clinton's nominees. Rather, we believe a new standard is being devised and applied to Miguel Estrada.

Fifth, you stated yesterday that a "filibuster" is not an appropriate term to describe what has been occurring in the Senate. We respectfully disagree. Democrat Senators have objected to unanimous consent motions to schedule a vote, and they have indicated that they will continue to do so. That tactic is historically and commonly known as a filibuster, and is a dramatic escalation of the tactics used to oppose judicial nominees. Indeed, in 1998, Senator Leahy stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators." 144 Cong. Rec. S6522 (June 18, 1998). In our judgment, the tactics now being employed again show that Miguel Estrada is receiving differential treatment.

Sincerely,

/s/

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

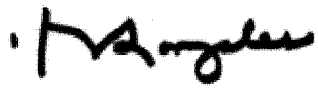
I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."



Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 12, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter to the President dated February 11, 2003. In the letter, you renew your previous request for confidential Department of Justice memoranda in which Mr. Estrada provided appeal, certiorari, and amicus recommendations while he was a career attorney in the Office of Solicitor General for four years in the Clinton Administration and one year in the George H.W. Bush Administration. You also request that Mr. Estrada answer certain questions beyond the extensive questions that he already answered appropriately and forthrightly during his Committee hearing and in follow-up written responses.

We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate must make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. However, your requests have no persuasive support in the history and precedent of judicial appointments. Indeed, the relevant history and precedent convincingly demonstrate that a new and shifting standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

First, as the Department of Justice explained in its letters of June 5, 2002, October 8, 2002, and January 23, 2003, all living former Solicitors General (four Democrats and three Republicans) have strongly opposed your request for Solicitor General memoranda and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. Even more telling, we are informed that the Senate has not requested memos such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department (including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office). The few isolated examples you have cited – in which targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues were accommodated for nominees to positions other than the U.S. Courts of Appeals – similarly do not support your request here.

Second, as explained more fully below with respect to your request that Mr. Estrada answer additional questions, the only specific question identified in your letter refers to his judicial role models. You claim that Mr. Estrada refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in his written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject that Mr. Estrada submitted three months ago, he cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires (he clerked for Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse), and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question." Your letter to the President ignores Mr. Estrada's answer to this question. In any event, beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to him. Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day Committee hearing. Since the hearing, Mr. Estrada also has met (and continues to meet) with numerous Democrat Senators interested in learning more about his record. Finally, as I will explain below, Mr. Estrada forthrightly answered numerous questions about his judicial approach and views in a manner that matches or greatly exceeds answers demanded of previous appeals court nominees.

With respect, it appears that a double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. That is highly unfair and inappropriate, particularly for this well-qualified and well-respected nominee.

I will turn now in more detail to the various issues raised by your letter. I will address them at some length given the importance of this issue and the nature of your requests.

I. Miguel Estrada's Qualifications and Bipartisan Support

Miguel Estrada is an extraordinarily qualified judicial nominee. The American Bar Association, which Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. The ABA rating was entirely appropriate in light of Mr. Estrada's superb record as Assistant to the Solicitor General in the Clinton and George H.W. Bush Administrations, as a federal prosecutor in New York, as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and in performing significant pro bono work.

Some who are misinformed have seized on Mr. Estrada's lack of prior judicial experience, but five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial experience, including two appointees of President Clinton and one appointee of President Carter. Miguel Estrada has tried numerous cases before federal juries, argued many cases in the federal appeals courts, and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. That is a record that few judicial nominees can match. And few lawyers, whatever their ideology or philosophy, have volunteered to represent a death row inmate pro bono before the Supreme Court as did Miguel Estrada.

Mr. Estrada's excellent legal qualifications are all the more extraordinary given his personal history. Simply put, Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country at age 17 from Honduras speaking little English. Through hard work and dedicated service to the United States, Miguel Estrada has risen to the very pinnacle of the legal profession. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic judge to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Given his record, his background, and his integrity, it is no surprise that Miguel Estrada is strongly supported by the vast majority of national Hispanic organizations. The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), for example, wrote to Senator Leahy to urge Mr. Estrada's confirmation and explain that he "is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth." A group of 19 Hispanic organizations, including LULAC and the Hispanic National Bar Association, recently wrote to the Senate urging "on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country" that "both parties in the U.S. Senate . . . put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land."

The current effort to filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination is particularly unjustified given that those who have worked with Miguel -- including prominent Democrat lawyers whom you know well -- strongly support his confirmation. For example, Ron Klain, who served as a high-ranking adviser to former Vice President Gore and former Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent. . . . [T]he challenges that he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need."

President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, wrote: "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. . . . In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity."

A bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice wrote: "We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." One former colleague, Richard Seamon, wrote that he is a pro-choice, lifelong Democrat with self-described "liberal views on most issues" who said he would "consider it a disgrace" if Mr. Estrada is not confirmed.

Similarly, Leonard Joy, head of the Federal Defender Division of the Legal Aid Society of New York, wrote that "Miguel would make an excellent Circuit Court Judge. He is as fine a lawyer as I have met and, on top of all his intellectual abilities and judgment he would bring to bear, he would bring a desirable diversity to the Court. I heartily recommend him."

Beyond the extensive personal testimony from those who worked side-by-side with him for many years, the performance reviews of Miguel for the years that he worked in the Office of Solicitor General gave him the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. The reviews stated that Miguel:

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

REV_00158982

In the two years that Miguel Estrada and Paul Bender worked together, Mr. Bender signed those reviews. These employment reviews thus call into serious question some press reports containing a negative comment from Mr. Bender about Mr. Estrada's temperament (which is the only negative comment made by anyone who actually knows Mr. Estrada). Just as important, President Clinton's Solicitor General Seth Waxman expressly refuted Mr. Bender's statement.

In sum, based on his experience, his intellect, his integrity, and his bipartisan support, Miguel Estrada should be confirmed promptly.

II. The Senate's Role

President Bush nominated Miguel Estrada nearly two years ago on May 9, 2001. As explained above, he is well-qualified and well-respected. By any traditional measure that the Senate has used to evaluate appeals court nominees, Miguel Estrada should have been confirmed long ago. Your letter and public statements indicate, however, that you are applying both a new standard and new tactics to this particular nominee.

As to the standard, the Senate has a very important role in the process, but the Senate's traditional approach to appeals court nominees, and the approach envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, is far different from the standard that you now seek to apply. Senator Biden stated the traditional approach in 1997: "Any person who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life, and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court." Congressional Record, March 19, 1997. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist No. 76. It was anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." No. 76.

As to tactics, you have indicated that some Senate Democrats intend to filibuster to prevent a vote on this nominee. As you know, there has never been a successful filibuster of a court of appeals nominee. Only a few years ago, Senator Leahy and other Democrat Senators expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

> Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

Senator Daschle similarly stated on October 5, 1999, that "[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much."

In his East Room speech of October 30, 2002, President Bush reiterated that every judicial nominee deserves a timely up-or-down floor vote in the Senate, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. Contrary to President Bush's attempts at permanent reform to bring order to the process, your current effort to employ a filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on the Estrada nomination may significantly exacerbate the cycle of bitterness and recrimination that President Bush has sought to resolve on a bipartisan basis. We fear that the damage caused by a filibuster could take many years to undo. To continue on this path would also be, in Senator Leahy's words, "a terrible disservice" to Mr. Estrada. We urge you to reconsider this extraordinary action, to end the filibuster of Mr. Estrada's nomination, and to allow the full Senate to vote up or down.

III. Request for Confidential Solicitor General Memos

You have suggested that Mr. Estrada's background, experience, and support are insufficient to assess his suitability for the D.C. Circuit. You have renewed your request for Solicitor General memos authored by Mr. Estrada. But every living former Solicitor General signed a joint letter to the Senate opposing your request. The letter was signed by Democrats Archibald Cox, Walter Dellinger, Drew Days, and Seth Waxman. They stated: "Any attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests – a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself. . . . Although we profoundly respect the Senate's duty to evaluate Mr. Estrada's fitness for the federal judiciary, we do not think that the confidentiality and integrity of internal deliberations should be sacrificed in the process."

It bears mention that the interest asserted here is that of the United States, not the personal interest of Mr. Estrada. Indeed, Mr. Estrada himself testified that "I have not opposed the release of those records. . . . I am exceptionally proud of every piece of legal work that I have done in my life. If it were up to me as a private citizen, I would be more than proud to have you look at everything that I have done for the government or for a private client."

The history of Senate confirmations of nominees who had previously worked in the Department of Justice makes clear that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada's nomination. Since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Of those 67 nominees, 38 had no prior judicial experience, like Miguel Estrada. The Department of Justice's review of those nomination records disclosed that in none of those cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the Department. In fact, the Department's review disclosed that the Senate did not even request such materials for a single one of these 67 nominees.

Of this group of 67 nominees, seven were nominees who had worked as a Deputy Solicitor General or Assistant to the Solicitor General. These seven nominees, nominated by Presidents of each party and confirmed by Senates controlled by each party, included Samuel Alito, Danny Boggs, William Bryson, Frank Easterbrook, Daniel Friedman, Richard Posner, and Raymond Randolph.

The five isolated historical examples you have cited do not support your current request. In each of those five cases, the Committee made a targeted request for specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Even in those isolated cases, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda written by those nominees were neither requested nor produced. With respect to Judge Bork's nomination, for example, the Committee received access to certain particular memoranda (many related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues). The vast majority of memoranda authored by Judge Bork were never received. With respect to Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents unrelated to Judge Trott's service to the Department. So, too, in the three other examples you cite, the Committee requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Of course, no such allegations have been made in the case of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the examples you have cited only highlight the lack of precedent for the current request. As the Justice Department has explained to you previously, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memos from the Office of Solicitor General – and deliberative Department of Justice memoranda more broadly – must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process. That is a fundamental principle that has been followed irrespective of the party that controls the White House and the Senate.

Your continued requests for these memoranda have provoked a foreseeable and inevitable conflict that, in turn, has been cited as a basis for obstructing a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination. Respectfully, the conflict is unnecessary because your desire to assess the nominee can be readily accommodated in many ways other than intruding into and severely damaging the deliberative process of the Office of Solicitor General. For example, you can review Mr. Estrada's written briefs and oral arguments both as an attorney for the United States and in private practice. As you know, those documents are publicly available and easily accessible; that said, we would be pleased to facilitate your access to them. (Mr. Estrada's hearing transcript suggests that no Democrat Member of the Committee had read Mr. Estrada's many dozens of Solicitor General merits briefs, certiorari petitions, and opposition briefs or the transcripts of his 14 oral arguments when he represented the United States.) You also may consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time (discussed above) and examine the nominee's written performance reviews (also discussed above). There is more than ample information for you to assess Mr. Estrada's qualifications and suitability for the D.C. Circuit based on the traditional standards the Senate has employed.

It also is important to recognize that political appointees of President Clinton have read virtually all of the memoranda in question – namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman. None of those three highly respected Democrat lawyers has expressed any concern whatever about Mr. Estrada's nomination. Indeed, Mr. Waxman wrote a letter of strong support, and Mr. Days made public statements in support of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the historical record and past precedent convincingly demonstrate that this request creates and applies an unfair double standard to Miguel Estrada.

IV. Request that Miguel Estrada Answer Additional Questions

Your letter also suggests that Miguel Estrada should answer certain questions that he allegedly did not answer in his hearing. To begin with, we do not know what your specific questions are. In addition, this request frankly comes as a surprise given that (i) Senator Schumer chaired the hearing on Mr. Estrada, (ii) the hearing lasted an entire day, (iii) Senators at the all-day hearing asked numerous far-reaching questions that Mr. Estrada answered forthrightly and appropriately, and (iv) only two of the 10 Democrat Senators then on the Committee even submitted any follow-up written questions, and they submitted only a few questions (in marked contrast to other nominees who received voluminous follow-up questions).

It also bears mention that Mr. Estrada has personally met with a large number of Democrat Senators, including Senators Landrieu, Lincoln, Bill Nelson, Ben Nelson, Leahy, Feinstein, Kohl, and Breaux; is scheduled to meet with Senator Carper; and would be pleased to meet with additional Senators.

The only specific question your letter identifies refers to Mr. Estrada's judicial role models, and you claim that he refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in Mr. Estrada's written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject, Mr. Estrada cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires, and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question."

In our judgment, moreover, Mr. Estrada answered the Committee's questions in a manner that was both entirely appropriate and entirely consistent with the approach that judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have taken for many years. Your suggestions to the contrary do not square with the hearing record or traditional practice.

A. Judicial Ethics and Traditional Practice

In assessing your request that Miguel Estrada did not answer appropriate questions, we begin with rules of judicial ethics that govern prospective nominees. Canon 5A(3)(d) provides that prospective judges "shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court"

REV_00158986

(emphasis added). Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point well in 1967 when asked about the Fifth Amendment: "I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself." Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to President Carter and President Clinton, has stated that "candidates should decline to reply when efforts are made to find out how they would decide a particular case."

In 1968, in the context of the Justice Abe Fortas' nomination to be Chief Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee similarly stated: "Although recognizing the constitutional dilemma which appears to exist when the Senate is asked to advise and consent on a judicial nominee without examining him on legal questions, the Committee is of the view that Justice Fortas wisely and correctly declined to answer questions in this area. To require a Justice to state his views on legal questions or to discuss his past decisions before the Committee would threaten the independence of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system itself. It would also impinge on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the three branches of Government as required by the Constitution." S. Exec. Rep. No. 8, 90th Cong. 2d Sess. 5 (1968).

Even in the context of a Supreme Court confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion: "It is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group." Nomination of Sandra O'Connor: Hearings Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Judge Sandra Day O'Connor of Arizona to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 97th Cong. 6 (1981) (statement of Sen. Kennedy).

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likewise declined to answer certain questions: "Because I am and hope to continue to be a judge, it would be wrong for me to say or to preview in this legislative chamber how I would cast my vote on questions the Supreme Court may be called upon to decide. Were I to rehearse here what I would say and how I would reason on such questions, I would act injudiciously." Similarly, Justice John Paul Stevens stated in his hearing: "I really don't think I should discuss this subject generally, Senator. I don't mean to be unresponsive but in all candor I must say that there have been many times in my experience in the last five years where I found that my first reaction to a problem was not the same as the reaction I had when I had the responsibility of decisions and I think that if I were to make comments that were not carefully thought through they might be given significance that they really did not merit."

Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice in a case decided last year: "In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be 'on interest' to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Court declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well." Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 122 S. Ct. 2528, 2552 n.1 (2002) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Ginsburg added that this adherence to this "longstanding norm" was "crucial to the health of the Federal Judiciary." Id. In his majority opinion, Justice Scalia did not take issue with that description and added: "Nor do we assert that candidates for judicial office should be compelled to announce their views on disputed legal issues." Id. at 2539 n.11 (emphasis in original).

In some recent hearings, including Mr. Estrada's, Senator Schumer has asked that nominees identify particular Supreme Court cases of the last few decades with which they disagree. But the problems with such a question and answer were well stated by Justice Stephen Breyer. As Justice Breyer put it, "Until [an issue] comes up, I don't really think it through with the depth that it would require. . . . So often, when you decide a matter for real, in a court or elsewhere, it turns out to be very different after you've become informed and think it through for real than what you would have said at a cocktail party answering a question." 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 425, 462.

Senator Schumer also has asked nominees how they would have ruled in particular Supreme Court cases. Again, a double standard is being applied. The nominees of President Clinton did not answer such questions. For example, Richard Tallman, a nominee with no prior judicial service who would now serves on the Ninth Circuit, not only would not answer how he would have ruled as a judge in Roe v. Wade – but even how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson, the infamous case that upheld the discredited and shameful "separate but equal" doctrine. So, too, in the hearing on President Clinton's nomination of Judges Barry and Fisher, Senator Smith asked whether the nominees would have voted for a constitutional right to abortion before Roe v. Wade. Chairman Hatch interrupted Senator Smith to say "that is not a fair question to these two nominees because regardless of what happened pre-1973, they have to abide by what has happened post-1973 and the current precedents that the Supreme Court has."

B. Answers by Miguel Estrada

Miguel Estrada answered the Committee's questions forthrightly and appropriately. Indeed, Miguel Estrada was more expansive than many judicial nominees traditionally have been in Senate hearings, and he was asked a far broader range of questions than many previous appeals court nominees were asked. We will catalogue here a select sample of his answers.

Unenumerated rights, privacy, and abortion

When asked by Senator Edwards about the Constitution's protection for rights not enumerated in the Constitution, Mr. Estrada replied: "I recognize that the Supreme Court has said [on] numerous occasions in the area of privacy and elsewhere that there are unenumerated rights in the Constitution, and I have no view of any sort, whether legal or personal, that would hinder me from applying those rulings by the court. But I think the court has been quite clear that there are a number of unenumerated rights in the Constitution. In the main, the court has recognized them as being inherent in the right of substantive due process and the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

When asked by Senator Feinstein whether the Constitution encompasses a right to privacy and abortion, Mr. Estrada responded, "The Supreme Court has so held, and I have no view of any nature whatsoever, whether it be legal, philosophical, moral, or any other type of

General Approach to Judging

When asked by Senator Edwards about judicial review, Mr. Estrada explained: "Courts take the laws that have been passed by you and give you the benefit of understanding that you take the same oath that they do to uphold the Constitution, and therefore they take the laws with the presumption that they are constitutional. It is the affirmative burden of the plaintiff to show that you have gone beyond your oath. If they come into court, then it is appropriate for courts to undertake to listen to the legal arguments – why it is that the legislature went beyond [its] role as a legislat[ure] and invaded the Constitution."

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Edwards that there are 200 years of Supreme Court precedent and that it is not the case that "the appropriate conduct for courts is to be guided solely by the bare text of the Constitution because that is not the legal system that we have."

When asked by Senator Edwards whether he was a strict constructionist, Mr. Estrada replied that he was "a fair constructionist" – meaning that "I don't think that it should be the goal of courts to be strict or lax. The goal of courts is to get it right. . . . It is not necessarily the case in my mind that, for example, all parts of the Constitution are suitable for the same type of interpretative analysis. . . . [T]he Constitution says, for example, that you must be 35 years old to be our chief executive. . . . There are areas of the Constitution that are more open-ended. And you adverted to one, like the substantive component of the due process clauses, where there are other methods of interpretation that are not quite so obvious that the court has brought to bear to try to bring forth what the appropriate answer should be."

When Senator Kohl asked him about environmental statutes, for example, Mr. Estrada explained that those statutes come to court "with a strong presumption of constitutionality."

In response to Senator Leahy, Mr. Estrada described the most important attributes of a judge: "The most important quality for a judge, in my view Senator Leahy, is to have an appropriate process for decisionmaking. That entails having an open mind. It entails listening to the parties, reading their briefs, going back beyond those briefs and doing all of the legwork needed to ascertain who is right in his or her claims as to what the law says and what the facts [are]. In a court of appeals court, where judges sit in panels of three, it is important to engage in deliberation and give ear to the views of colleagues who may have come to different conclusions. And in sum, to be committed to judging as a process that is intended to give us the right answer, not to a result. And I can give you my level best solemn assurance that I firmly think I do have those qualities or else I would not have accepted the nomination."

In response to Senator Durbin, Miguel Estrada stated that "the Constitution, like other legal texts, should be construed reasonably and fairly, to give effect to all that its text contains."

Mr. Estrada indicated to Senator Durbin that he admired the judges for whom he clerked, Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse, as well as Justice Lewis Powell.

REV_00158989

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Durbin that "I can absolutely assure the Committee that I will follow binding Supreme Court precedent until and unless such precedent has been displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court itself."

In response to Senator Grassley, Mr. Estrada stated: "When facing a problems for which there is a not a decisive precedent from a higher court, my cardinal rule would be to seize aid from anyplace where I could get it. Depending on the nature of the problem, that would include related case law in other areas that higher courts had dealt with that had had some insights to teach with respect to the problem at hand. It could include the history of the enactment, including in the case of a statute legislative history. It could include the custom and practice under any predecessor statute or document. It could include the views of academics to the extent that they purport to analyze what the law is instead of – instead of prescribing what it should be. And in sum, as Chief Justice Marshall once said, to attempt not to overlook anything from which aid might be derived."

In response to Senator Sessions, Estrada stated: "I am very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the first duty of a judge is to self-consciously put that aside and look at each case by starting withholding judgment with an open mind and listen to the parties. So I think that the job of a judge is to put all of that aside, and to the best of his human capacity to give a judgment based solely on the arguments and the law."

In response to Senator Sessions, Mr. Estrada stated that "I will follow binding case law in every case. . . . I may have a personal, moral, philosophical view on the subject matter. But I undertake to you that I would put all that aside and decide cases in accordance with binding case law and even in accordance with the case law that is not binding but seems constructive on the area, without any influence whatsoever from any personal view I may have about the subject matter."

Miranda/Stare Decisis

Mr. Estrada stated that United States v. Dickerson – a case raising the question whether Miranda should be overruled – reflected a "reasonable application of the doctrine of stare decisis. In my view, it is rarely appropriate for the Supreme Court to overturn one of its own precedents."

Affirmative Action

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Estrada responded to Senator Kennedy that "any policy views I might have as a private citizen on the subject of affirmative action would not enter into how I would approach any case that comes before me as a judge. Under controlling Supreme Court authority, particularly Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995), if a government program creates a racial classification, it will be subject to strict scrutiny. Whether the program survives that sort of scrutiny will often involve a highly contextual and fact-specific inquiry into the nature of the justifications asserted by the government and the fit between those justifications and the classification at issue. Adarand and similar cases provide the framework that I would be required to apply, and would apply, in considering these issues as a judge."

Asked by Senator Leahy about the strict scrutiny test, Mr. Estrada replied, "the Supreme Court in the Adarand case stated, as a general rule, that the consideration of race is subject to strict scrutiny. That means that though it may be used in some cases, it has to be justified by a compelling state interest. And with respect to the particular context, there must be a fairly fact-bound individual assessment of the fit between the interest that is being asserted and the category being used. That is just another way of saying that it is a very fact-intensive analysis in the context of a specific program and in the context of the justifications that are being offered in support of the program."

Congressional Authority

With respect to the outer limits of Congress' power to confer authority on other governmental bodies, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that the Supreme Court has said that "particular factual context is significant in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular delegation. . . . Of course, the fact that the Supreme Court only rarely has struck down statutes on this ground suggests that the Court has been quite deferential to congressional judgments about the types of delegations that reasonably might be needed to carry on the business of government."

When Senator Kohl asked Mr. Estrada about the 1995 Lopez case concerning the scope of Congress' power to regulate, Mr. Estrada pointed out that he had argued in a companion case "for a very expansive view of the power to Congress to pass statutes under the Commerce Clause and have them be upheld by the court. . . . Lopez has given us guidance on when it is appropriate for the court to exercise the commerce power. It is binding law and I would follow it."

Ethnicity

With respect to the fact that the President had noted Miguel's ethnicity, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy: "The President is the leader of a large and diverse country, and it is accordingly appropriate for him, in exercising his constitutional nomination and appointment powers, to select qualified individuals who reflect the breadth and diversity of our Nation."

With respect to the Democrat Congressional Hispanic Caucus's criticism of him, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that "I strongly disagree, however, with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus' view that I lack an understanding of the role and importance of courts in protecting the legal rights of minorities, of the values and mores of Latino culture, or the significance of role models for minority communities."

REV_00158991

Racial Discrimination

With respect to race discrimination, Mr. Estrada stated in response to Senator Kennedy: "I take a backseat to no one in my abhorrence of race discrimination in law enforcement or anything else."

Senator Feingold asked Mr. Estrada whether he believed that racial profiling and racially motivated law enforcement misconduct are problems in this country today. Mr. Estrada replied, "I am – I will once again emphasize I'm unalterably opposed to any sort of race discrimination in law enforcement, Senator, whether it's called racial profiling or anything else. . . . I know full well that we have real problems with discrimination in our day and age."

Senator Leahy asked Mr. Estrada about whether statistical evidence of discriminatory impact is relevant in establishing discrimination. Mr. Estrada replied: "I am not a specialist in this area of the law, Senator Leahy, but I am aware that there is a line of cases, beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Griggs, that suggests that in appropriate cases that [such evidence] may be appropriate. . . . I do understand that there is a major area of law that deals with how you prove and try disparate-impact cases."

Congressional Authority to Regulate Firearms

Senator Feinstein asked whether Congress may legislate in the area of dangerous firearms, and Mr. Estrada responded that the Supreme Court had ruled that "if the government were to prove that the firearm had at any time in its lifetime been in interstate commerce even if that had nothing to do with the crime at issue, that that would be an adequate basis for the exercise of Congress' power."

Right to Counsel

Senator Edwards asked about Gideon v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court case guaranteeing the right to counsel for poor defendants who could not afford counsel. Although Senator Edwards appeared to question the reasoning in that landmark case, Mr. Estrada responded that "I frankly have always taken it as a given that that's – the ruling in the case."

C. Answers by President Clinton's Nominees

Your criticism of Miguel Estrada's testimony creates a double standard. You did not require nominees of President Clinton to answer questions of this sort (keeping in mind that you have not identified what your additional questions to Mr. Estrada are). President Clinton's appeals court nominees routinely testified without discussing their views of specific issues or cases. A few select examples, including of several nominees who had no prior judicial experience, illustrate the point. (Please note that these are isolated examples; there are many more we can provide if necessary.)

Merrick Garland (no prior judicial experience). In the nomination of Merrick Garland to the D.C. Circuit, Senator Specter asked him: "Do you favor, as a personal matter, capital punishment?" Judge Garland replied only that he would follow Supreme Court precedent: "This is really a matter of settled law now. The Court has held that capital punishment is constitutional and lower courts are to follow that rule." Senator Specter also asked him about his views of the independent counsel statute's constitutionality, and Judge Garland responded: "Well, that, too, the Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson upheld as constitutional, and, of course, I would follow that ruling." Judge Garland did not provide his personal view of either subject.

Judith Rogers. In the hearing on Judge Judith Rogers' nomination to the D.C. Circuit, Judge Rogers was asked by Senator Cohen about the debate over an evolving Constitution. Judge Rogers responded: "My obligation as an appellate judge is to apply precedent. Some of the debates which I have heard and to which I think you may be alluding are interesting, but as an appellate judge, my obligation is to apply precedent. And so the interpretations of the Constitution by the U.S. Supreme Court would be binding on me." She then was asked how she would rule in the absence of precedent and responded: "When I was taking my master's in judicial process at the University of Virginia Law School, one of the points emphasized was the growth of our common law system based on the English common law judge system. And my opinions, I think if you look at them, reflect that where I am presented with a question of first impression, that I look to the language of whatever provision we are addressing, that I look to whatever debates are available, that I look to the interpretations by other Federal courts, that I look to the interpretations of other State courts, and it may be necessary, as well, to look at the interpretations suggested by commentators. And within that framework, which I consider to be a discipline, that I would reach a view in a case of first impression." Finally, Judge Rogers was asked her view of the three-strikes law and stated: "As an appellate judge, my obligation is to enforce the laws that Congress passes or, where I am now, that the District of Columbia Council passes." Judge Rogers did not provide her personal view of these subjects.

Marsha Berzon (no prior judicial experience). Senator Smith asked her views on Roe v. Wade and whether "an unborn child is a human being." Judge Berzon stated: "[M]y role as a judge is not to further anything that I personally believe or don't believe, and I think that is the strength of our system and the strength of our appellate system. The Supreme Court has been quite definitive quite recently about the applicable standard, and I absolutely pledge to you that I will follow that standard as it exists now, and if it is changed, I will follow that standard. And my personal views in this area, as in any other, will have absolutely no effect." When Senator Smith probed about their personal views on abortion and Roe v. Wade, Chairman Hatch interrupted: "I don't know how they can say much more than that at this point in this meeting."

Richard Tallman (no prior judicial experience). In response to written questions, Judge Tallman explained that "[j]udicial nominees are limited by judicial ethical considerations from answering any question in a manner that would call for an 'advisory opinion' as the courts have defined it or that in effect ask a nominee to suggest how he or she would rule on an issue that could foreseeably require his or her attention in a future case or controversy after confirmation." He was asked how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson. He stated: "It is entirely conjectural as to what I would have done without having the opportunity to thoroughly review the record presented on appeal, the briefs and arguments of counsel, and supporting legal authorities that were applicable at that time." He gave the same response when asked how he would have ruled on Roe v. Wade. When asked his personal view on abortion, he wrote: "I hold no personal views that would prevent me from doing my judicial duty to follow the precedent set down by the Supreme Court." He gave the same answer about the death penalty.

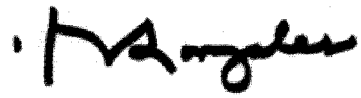
Kim Wardlaw. In the hearing on Judge Kim Wardlaw's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Judge Wardlaw was asked about the constitutionality of affirmative action. She stated (in an answer similar to Miguel Estrada's answer to the same question): "The Supreme Court has held that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are narrowly tailored to meet a compelling governmental interest."



Maryanne Trump Barry. In the hearing on Judge Maryanne Trump Barry's nomination to the Third Circuit, Senator Smith asked for her personal opinion on whether "an unborn child at any stage of the pregnancy is a human being." Judge Barry responded: "Casey is the law that I would look at. If I had a personal opinion – and I am not suggesting that I do – it is irrelevant because I must look to the law which binds me."

Raymond Fisher. In the hearing on Judge Raymond Fisher's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Senator Sessions asked Judge Fisher's own personal views on whether the death penalty was constitutional. Judge Fisher responded that "My view, Senator, is that, as you indicated, the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty is constitutional. As a lower appellate court judge, that is the law that I am governed by. I don't want in my judicial career, should I be fortunate enough to have one, to inject my personal opinions into whether or not I follow the law. I believe that the precedent of the Supreme Court is binding and that is what my function is."

V. Conclusion

Miguel Estrada is a well-qualified and well-respected judicial nominee who has very strong bipartisan support. Based on our reading of history, we believe that you have ample information about this nominee and have had more than enough time to consider questions about his qualifications and suitability. We urge you to stop the unfair treatment, end the filibuster, allow an up-or-down vote, and vote to confirm Mr. Estrada.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 24, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

Based on your public comments yesterday, I am concerned that you may have inaccurate and incomplete information about Miguel Estrada's qualifications and about the historical practice with respect to judicial confirmations. Therefore, I write to respectfully reiterate and explain our conclusion that you and certain other Senators are applying an unfair double standard -- indeed, a series of unfair double standards -- to Miguel Estrada.

First, your request for confidential attorney-client memoranda Mr. Estrada wrote in the Office of Solicitor General seeks information that, based on our review, has not been demanded from past nominees to the federal courts of appeals. We are informed that the Senate has not requested memoranda such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department -- including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office. Nor have such memoranda been demanded from nominees in similar attorney-client situations: The Senate has not demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as Senate lawyers, such as memoranda written by Stephen Breyer as a Senate counsel before Justice Breyer was confirmed to the First Circuit in 1980. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as law clerks to Supreme Court Justices or other federal or state judges. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had worked for private clients.

The very few isolated examples you have cited were not nominees for federal appeals courts. Moreover, those situations involved Executive Branch accommodations of targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues that were primarily related to allegations of malfeasance or misconduct in a federal office. We respectfully do not believe these examples support your request. Our conclusion about the general lack of support and precedent for your position is buttressed by the fact that every living former Solicitor General (four Democrats and three Republicans) has strongly opposed your request and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. In short, the traditional practice of the Senate and the Executive Branch with respect to federal appeals court nominations stands in contrast to your request here and supports our conclusion that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. (Also, contrary to your suggestion yesterday, please note that no one in the Executive Branch has reviewed these memoranda since President Bush took office in January 2001.)

Second, you suggested that "no judicial nominee that I'm aware of, for such a high court, has ever had so little of a record." I respectfully disagree. Miguel Estrada has been a very accomplished lawyer, trying cases before federal juries, briefing and arguing numerous appeals before federal and state appeals courts, and arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, among his other significant work. His record and breadth of experience exceeds that of many judicial nominees, which is no doubt why the American Bar Association -- which you have labeled the

"gold standard" -- unanimously rated him "well-qualified." In noting yesterday that Mr. Estrada's career had been devoted to "arguing for a client," you appeared to imply that only those with prior judicial service (or perhaps "a lot of [law review] articles") may serve on the federal appeals courts. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial service at the time of their appointments. Indeed, Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist, White, and Powell -- to name three of the most recent -- had not served as judges before being confirmed to the Supreme Court. And like Mr. Estrada, two appointees of President Clinton to the D.C. Circuit (Judge David Tatel and Judge Merrick Garland) had similarly spent their careers "arguing for a client," but were nonetheless confirmed.

As the Chief Justice noted in his 2001 Year-End Report, moreover, "[t]he federal Judiciary has traditionally drawn from a wide diversity of professional backgrounds." The Chief Justice cited Justice Louis Brandeis, Justice John Harlan, Justice Byron White, Judge Thurgood Marshall (as nominee to the Second Circuit), Judge Learned Hand, and Judge John Minor Wisdom as just a few examples of great judges who had spent virtually their entire careers "arguing for a client" before becoming Supreme Court Justices or federal appeals court judges. As these examples show, had the "arguing for a client" standard been applied in the past, it would have deprived the American people of many of our most notable appellate judges. Based on our understanding, this standard has not been applied in the past. This further explains why we have concluded that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

Third, you stated that "when you went to those hearings, Mr. Estrada answered no questions." The record demonstrates otherwise. Mr. Estrada answered more than 100 questions at his hearing (and another 25 in follow-up written answers). He explained in some detail his approach to judging on many issues, and did so appropriately without providing his personal views on specific legal or policy questions that could come before him – which is how previous judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have appropriately answered questions. Indeed, at his hearing, Mr. Estrada was asked and answered more questions, and did so more fully, than did President Clinton's appointees to this same court. Judge David Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Judith Rogers and Merrick Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions. The three appointees of President Clinton – combined – thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, like Mr. Estrada, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions at the hearing. Judge Rogers refused to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Mr. Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty, stating that he would follow precedent. In short, we believe that your criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing reveals that another unfair double standard is being applied to Mr. Estrada.

Fourth, you stated that the Founding Fathers "came to the conclusion that the Senate ought to ask a whole lot of questions" of judicial nominees. We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate should make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. But your characterization of the Senate's role with respect to judicial nominations is not consistent with our reading of historical or traditional practice. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." The Federalist 76. The Framers anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." Id. Moreover, the Senate did not hold hearings on judicial nominees for much of American history, and the hearings for lower-court nominees in modern times traditionally have not included the examination of personal views that you have advocated. (My letter of February 12, 2003, to Senators Daschle and Leahy contains more detail on this point.) Indeed, just a few years ago, Senator Biden made clear, consistent with the traditional practice, that he would vote to confirm an appeals court judge if he were convinced that the nominee would follow precedent and otherwise was of high ability and integrity.

In short, it appears that you are seeking to change the Senate's traditional standard for assessing judicial nominees. We respect your right to advocate a change, but we do not believe that the standard you seek to apply is consistent with the Framers' vision, the traditional Senate practice, or the Senate's treatment of President Clinton's nominees. Rather, we believe a new standard is being devised and applied to Miguel Estrada.

Fifth, you stated yesterday that a "filibuster" is not an appropriate term to describe what has been occurring in the Senate. We respectfully disagree. Democrat Senators have objected to unanimous consent motions to schedule a vote, and they have indicated that they will continue to do so. That tactic is historically and commonly known as a filibuster, and is a dramatic escalation of the tactics used to oppose judicial nominees. Indeed, in 1998, Senator Leahy stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators." 144 Cong. Rec. S6522 (June 18, 1998). In our judgment, the tactics now being employed again show that Miguel Estrada is receiving differential treatment.

Sincerely,

/s/

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

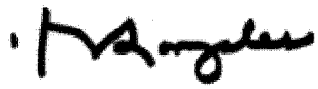
I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."



Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

But Democrats now are likely at least to ask for an extended Senate floor debate on Roberts and Cook to protest Hatch's action, even though both got votes from Judiciary Democrats.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the lead Judiciary Democrat, said Hatch is ignoring committee rules that require a Democrat to agree to end a committee filibuster. Hatch said Senate parliamentarians informed him that as chairman he could force a vote on the president's nominees.

Cook, an Ohio Supreme Court justice, was approved by the committee by a 12-2 vote, with the rest of the Democrats passing or voting "present" to reserve their right to bring the issue up on the Senate floor. Roberts, a Washington appellate lawyer, was approved by the 19-member committee by a 14-3 vote with the rest of the Democrats passing or voting present.

The committee also sent the appellate court nomination of Justice Department lawyer Jay Bybee of Nevada to the Senate for confirmation by a 12-6, with Leahy again voting "present." Democrats had agreed earlier to allow his nomination through regardless of what happened with Cook and Roberts.

Democrats say they didn't have enough time to question Cook and Roberts during their original confirmation hearing because Hatch had three federal appellate candidates at the same hearing, instead of considering them one at a time. Liberals have accused Cook of ruling with business interests too much as a judges, and Roberts of opposing abortion rights, affirmative action and environmental protection laws.

Democrats blocked a committee vote on Roberts and Cook last week in hopes of getting additional questions, but White House counsel Alberto Gonzales said Wednesday the White House would resist additional hearings on the two, who were first nominated in May 2001.

Democrats are now likely to at least force a debate on Hatch's decision on the Senate floor, and could even filibuster Cook and Roberts' nomination. "I don't expect it but I wouldn't put it past them," Hatch said.

Senate GOP Forces Approval of 3 Nominees

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

The Associated Press

Thursday, February 27, 2003; 3:13 PM

Senate Republicans forced committee approval of three of President Bush's judicial nominees Thursday, despite Democrats' efforts to delay action as they have delayed the high-profile nomination of Miguel Estrada to the federal appellate bench.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, overrode committee rules to send U.S. Appeals Court nominees Deborah Cook and John Roberts to the Republican-controlled Senate, despite Democratic objections that they had the right to continue hold the nominees in committee.

"We're not going to have filibusters in committee," said an often-angry Hatch at the end of a three-hour hearing in which sharp words were exchanged between himself and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

The three-hour hearing was heated at times, with Democrats at one point walking out to prevent Hatch from having enough committee members present to vote and Hatch and Kennedy exchanging sharp words. "You may bully some but you're not going to bully me," Kennedy told Hatch.

"You're not going to bully me either," Hatch replied later.

For three weeks, Democrats have held up a confirmation vote on Estrada's nomination by threatening a full-blown filibuster to force him to answer more of their questions.

But Democrats now are likely at least to ask for an extended Senate floor debate on Roberts and Cook to protest Hatch's action, even though both got votes from Judiciary Democrats.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the lead Judiciary Democrat, said Hatch is ignoring committee rules that require a Democrat to agree to end a committee filibuster. Hatch said Senate parliamentarians informed him that as chairman he could force a vote on the president's nominees.

Cook, an Ohio Supreme Court justice, was approved by the committee by a 12-2 vote, with the rest of the Democrats passing or voting "present" to reserve their right to bring the issue up on the Senate floor. Roberts, a Washington appellate lawyer, was approved by the 19-member committee by a 14-3 vote with the rest of the Democrats passing or voting present.

The committee also sent the appellate court nomination of Justice Department lawyer Jay Bybee of Nevada to the Senate for confirmation by a 12-6, with Leahy again voting "present." Democrats had agreed earlier to allow his nomination through regardless of what happened with Cook and Roberts.

Democrats say they didn't have enough time to question Cook and Roberts during their original confirmation hearing because Hatch had three federal appellate candidates at the same hearing, instead of considering them one at a time. Liberals have accused Cook of ruling with business interests too much as a judges, and Roberts of opposing abortion rights, affirmative action and environmental protection laws.

Democrats blocked a committee vote on Roberts and Cook last week in hopes of getting additional questions, but White House counsel Alberto Gonzales said Wednesday the White House would resist additional hearings on the two, who were first nominated in May 2001.

Democrats are now likely to at least force a debate on Hatch's decision on the Senate floor, and could even filibuster Cook and Roberts' nomination. "I don't expect it but I wouldn't put it past them," Hatch said.

Bush has called it a "travesty" that Democratic senators have refuse to allow a full Senate vote on Estrada's nomination.

"They're blocking the vote on this good man for purely political reasons," Bush said.

Democrats have refused to let Estrada's nomination for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia come up for a final Senate vote for three weeks because they say the Washington lawyer was not forthcoming about his legal opinions during his confirmation hearing last year.

Republicans lack the 60 votes in the 100-member Senate to force Democrats to allow a vote on Estrada.

I do not where we are on this with respect to the Judge's participation, but should the Judge brief the committee members, we need to be aware that anything the Judge says could be leaked to the press by Charles Garcia.

This is a concern that has been brought to my attention by a few

Yes. I spoke to Margaret last night (who said she'd also spoken to John), and she said the strategy would be to have the Judge and RP do a call with the Hispanic Init board. We at ED will then work to fashion language for the board's report that will indicate the board's support for diversity without arguing that it is a compelling state interest - essentially language that tracks that used by POTUS in the Roosevelt Room.

Margaret also indicated that the Judge and RP would do a similar call with the HBCU board, and that perhaps Larry Thompson could be added to the call as well, if we thought it useful.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

Monday, March 3, 2003

KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS ON IRAQ AND THE MIDDLE EAST, 2-26-03***

- The danger posed by Saddam Hussein and his weapons cannot be ignored or wished away. We hope the Iraqi regime will meet the demands of the UN and disarm, fully and peacefully. If it does not, we are prepared to disarm Iraq by force.

- Acting against this danger will also contribute greatly to the long term safety and stability of the Middle East and the world.

- The first to benefit from a free Iraq would be the Iraqi people themselves. Their lives and freedom matter little to Saddam Hussein, but matter greatly to us. If we must use force, the United States and our allies stand ready to help the citizens of a liberated Iraq.

- Rebuilding Iraq will require a sustained commitment from many nations, including our own: We will remain in Iraq as long as necessary, and not a day more. The nation of Iraq -- with its proud heritage, abundant resources, and skilled, educated people -- is fully capable of achieving democracy and living in freedom.

- The United States and other countries continue to work on a roadmap for peace. Success in Iraq could begin a new stage for Middle East peace, and set in motion progress towards a truly democratic Palestine. A Palestinian state must be reformed, peaceful and abandon forever the use of terror.

- For its part, the new government of Israel - as security improves - will be expected to support the creation of a Palestinian state and work toward a final status agreement, and settlement activity must end.

- And the Arab states will be expected to meet their responsibilities to oppose terrorism, support the emergence of a peaceful and democratic Palestine, and state clearly that they will live in peace with Israel.

- In confronting Iraq, the US is also showing our commitment to effective international institutions. If the UN Security Council responds to Iraq's defiance with more excuses and delays, the UN will be severely weakened as a source of stability and order. If the members rise to this moment, the Council will fulfill its founding purpose.

"I am not, you can imagine, a man of war. I have seen war and I know that war is a malediction... but I am for intervention.

"I believe it is the moral duty to intervene when evil has power and uses it....
If Europe were to apply as much pressure on Saddam Hussein as [it] does on the United States and Britain, I think we could prevent war."

KEY QUOTES***

"You can't leave a country with chemical and biological weapons with the track record of Iraq. There is a risk other countries will do the same thing and there is an even greater risk that those weapons will one day get into the hands of international terrorists, and God knows how they will be used if that happens."
Australian Prime Minister Howard, radio interview, 2-28-03

"Saddam Hussein is trying to string it out... trying to pretend he is cooperating when he is not cooperating, trying to use process as an excuse for not cooperating, and not complying with the will of the international community.
It is just further chaff that he is throwing into the system to try to divert attention."

REV_00159088

The Honorable Richard Cheney
President of the Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. President:

Enclosed is a draft bill that would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to produce currency, postage stamps, and other security documents for foreign governments on a reimbursable basis. Also enclosed is an analysis of the draft bill.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP) in the Department of the Treasury is the security printer for the United States, producing a number of products that require special printing processes to protect documents from counterfeiting and fraudulent alteration. Currently, BEP is authorized to produce currency and postage stamps on behalf of the Federal Reserve System and United States Postal Service, respectively, and other security documents at the request of other Federal agencies.

The draft bill would authorize BEP to print securities and other documents for foreign governments. Although BEP has specialized expertise that can be made available to foreign governments, current statutory limitations preclude BEP from providing actual production support. The authority in the draft bill would be limited to times when demand for U.S. currency, postage stamps, and other Federal government products is below BEP's production capacity. In addition, any production on behalf of a foreign government would be subject to a determination by the Secretary of State that it is consistent with the foreign policy of the United States.

Treasury submitted a similar bill to the Congress during 2001. That bill, introduced as H.R. 2509, received bipartisan support when it passed the House of Representatives on March 19, 2002, but it was not acted on by the Senate prior to adjournment.

The prompt and favorable consideration of this proposal would be appreciated. An identical draft bill has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

David D. Aufhauser

General Counsel

Enclosures

A BILL

To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to produce, on a reimbursable basis, currency, postage stamps, and other security documents at the request of foreign governments.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Section 5114(a) of title 31, United States Code (relating to engraving and printing currency and security documents), is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary of the Treasury may, if the Secretary determines that it will not interfere with engraving and printing needs of the United States, produce currency, postage stamps, and other security documents for foreign governments, subject to a determination by the Secretary of State that such production would be consistent with the foreign policy of the United States.".

SEC. 2. REIMBURSEMENT.

Section 5143 of title 31, United States Code (relating to payment for services of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing), is amended by inserting "or foreign government" after "agency" each place it appears.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSISSECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS{tc \l1 "SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS}

Section 1 amends section 5114(a) of title 31, United States Code, by designating the current text as paragraph (1) and by adding a new paragraph (2) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to produce currency, stamps, and other security documents for foreign governments.

Paragraph (2) specifically requires that any production for foreign governments not interfere with the ability of the Treasury to satisfy the engraving and printing needs of the United States, and makes such production contingent on a determination by the Secretary of State that it is consistent with the foreign policy of the United States.

Section 2 amends section 5143 of title 31, United States Code, to provide the Secretary of the Treasury with the authority to charge fees and receive reimbursement for engraving and printing services provided under new section 5114(a)(2).

Civil Justice Reform and New Freedom Initiative

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Tort Reform

- Teacher Protection Act: As part of the No Child Left Behind Act, the President signed into law the Teacher Protection Act, which provides civil immunity from state and Federal actions to teachers, principals, and other education professionals for actions taken to maintain discipline, order, or control in the classroom or school. The President promised to support the Teacher Protection Act during the campaign.

Campaign Finance Reform

- In March 2002, the President signed into law H.R. 2356, the Campaign Finance Reform Act. The Act contains various provisions the President supported, including a ban on unregulated, "soft" money contributions from unions and corporations, increased limits on individual giving, and new and more expedited disclosure requirements. However, it also includes provisions that raise constitutional concerns, such as the broad ban on issue advertising.
- The bill contains reforms the President promised to support during the campaign, including: "banning 'soft money' contributions from labor unions and corporations" and "raising individual contribution limits." As enacted, it did not include provisions advocated by the President such as "enforcement of the Beck decision and enactment of effective 'Paycheck Protection'" legislation or "instant disclosure of contributions" (although it did further lessen the amount of time before disclosure was required).*

Election Reform

- The President endorsed four guiding principles embodied in the May 2001 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Election Reform: (1) primacy of state, county and local governments in elections; (2) a limited but responsible role for the federal government in assisting states and localities with election administration so that voting technology and practices respect the value of every eligible vote; (3) need for active and vigorous enforcement of voting rights laws; and (4) need to uphold the voting rights of members of the armed services and of Americans living abroad.
- The legislation signed by the President largely follows these principles.
- The Administration has proposed to spend $1.2 billion in matching grants to fund a state revolving fund to be used in election administration. The first of three $400 million installments was included in the President's FY 2003 budget.

Affirmative Action

- The President stated during the campaign that he "supports 'affirmative access' to open the doors of opportunity" to all Americans, and "opposes quotas and racial preferences."* The goal is to provide greater opportunity and access without creating race-conscious remedies that only benefit particular racial or ethnic groups. Policies advocated during the campaign in the context of affirmative access have been implemented, as discussed below. However, the Administration has not proactively modified existing race-conscious programs from the prior Administration, such as government contracting programs.

    - Education: The No Child Left Behind Bill establishes high standards and accountability for all public schools. Educating every American to his or her full potential was part of the campaign's affirmative access goals.

    - Contracting: The President announced a Small Business Agenda earlier this year, which included promoting the unbundling of contracts so that small businesses that are not capable of bidding for entire projects are not disadvantaged. This is consistent with the campaign promise to advocate "breaking down government contracts to smaller sizes to encourage entrepreneurship in all communities" as a way to promote affirmative access.* Also, the President instructed the OMB Director to review contracting practices at relevant agencies to make sure their practices reflect a commitment to full and open competition.

    - Housing: The President announced a homeownership initiative targeted at increasing homeownership for minority families. It includes proposals to increase the supply of affordable homes for low and moderate income families, provide downpayment assistance and more educational assistance, and a "Homeownership Challenge" to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to help increase the number of minority homeowners by 5.5 million families by the end of the decade.

New Freedom Initiative

Community Living

- Olmstead: The President issued an Executive Order in June 2001 requiring Federal agencies to assist states and localities to implement the Supreme Court's Olmstead decision. Olmstead requires states to place qualified individuals with disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions, whenever treatment professionals determine that such placement is appropriate, the affected persons do not oppose such placement, and the state can reasonably accommodate the placement, taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with disabilities.
    - In response, key Federal agencies conducted the first comprehensive Federal review of barriers that prevent people with disabilities from living in the community and identified over 400 potential solutions to remove impediments to community-based living, which agencies have begun to implement.

REV_00159115

- Medicare Homebound Rules: During the ADA Anniversary event on July 26, the President announced a clarification with respect to Medicare recipients with disabilities who are considered "homebound." This change makes it clear that people with significant disabilities may leave their homes for occasional activities without losing their Medicare homebound services.

Education

- IDEA: The President requested the largest increases of any President in history for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) Part B State Grants program in his FY 2002 and FY 2003 budgets. The President signed legislation increasing by $1.2 billion in FY 2002 budget for the IDEA Part B State Grants program.

- Special Education Commission: The President issued Executive Order 13227 in October 2001 creating the Presidential Commission on Excellence in Special Education. The Commission issued its report to the President on July 1, 2002.

Technology

- Section 508: In June 2001, the President promised full enforcement of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act, which requires that all Federal government electronic and information technologies be accessible to individuals with disabilities. In response, the Administration collaborated to expedite Section 508 implementation, and produced extensive technical guidance and training materials that will be helpful to Federal agencies and others interested in accessible technologies.

Homeownership

- HUD Section 8: The President in June 2001 committed to revising the HUD Section 8 rent subsidy program to permit people with disabilities to use up to one year's worth of Section 8 rent subsidy vouchers to finance a down payment and purchase a home. HUD later implemented this pilot program.

Employment Integration

- Ticket to Work: The President promoted swift implementation of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act, which provides incentives for more than 7.5 million Americans receiving benefits under Federal disability programs to return to work.

Other

- Commission on Mental Health: In April 2002, the President announced the formation of the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health to conduct a comprehensive study of the Nation's mental health service delivery system.

- DisabilityInfo.gov: In August 2002, the President signed an Executive Memorandum creating a single source Federal web site dedicated to providing information that facilitates access to all the Federal web sites important to people with disabilities. This web site will be launched in October 2002.

- NFI Budget: The President secured funding for the vast majority of NFI programs in FY 2002 and requested a higher overall level of NFI-related funding in FY 2003. In the FY 2002 budget, the President requested $10.781 billion and received $10.872 billion. In the FY 2003 budget, he is seeking $1.39 billion over 2002 appropriations.

B. Outstanding Commitments

Civil Justice

Tort Reform

- The President promised during the campaign to "support meaningful, broad-based tort reform" to discourage frivolous lawsuits. Specific reforms on which no action has yet been taken are listed below.
  The following would require Congressional action:
  - "Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a 'Three Strikes, You're Out' rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims."
  - "Limit 'fishing expeditions' by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of 'junk science' by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony."
  - "Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute."
  - "Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity."
  - "Enact a 'Fair Settlement Rule,' requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees."
  - "Enact a 'Client's Bill of Rights' to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees."
  - "Require private lawyers who contract to represent states or municipalities to return any excessive fees to their government clients."

  The following could be accomplished administratively:
  - "Issue an Executive Order prohibiting Federal agencies from paying contingency fees."*

- Class Action Reform: The Administration sent a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) supporting the Class Action Fairness Act (H.R. 2341), which passed the House and is pending in the Senate. The bill would allow removal of cases to Federal court when the amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity. This is consistent with the campaign promise to "allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only minimal diversity exists."* Also, the bill establishes a consumer class action bill of rights, including notice of lawsuits in "plain English" and required judicial review of non-cash benefits like coupons.

- Medical Liability Reform: In July 2002, President proposed national minimum standards in healthcare cases, including limits on non-economic damages and punitive damages, proportional liability, and informing juries of other sources of reimbursement. He also supports legislation that would protect from use in lawsuits reports and information about efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care.

New Freedom Initiative

- Transportation Grants: The President requested $145 million in his 2002 and 2003 budgets for competitive grants through the Department of Transportation to provide alternative transportation services to give people with disabilities increased access to the job market, and to fund a pilot program to demonstrate innovative solutions for overcoming transportation barriers. This is the major NFI program that was not funded in FY 2002. The reason appears to be lack of available resources rather than any problem with the program itself. The President specifically referenced the need to fund this program during his ADA Anniversary White House event in July.

II. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Civil Justice

- Tort reform, including class action reform and medical malpractice liability reform, will not likely be resolved this year and will be an issue in the 108th Congress.

- Election reform will remain an issue for the 108th Congress if not resolved in conference this year.

C. Regulatory

Civil Justice

SBA Women Owned Small Business Program

- SBA Women Owned Small Business Program: Congress authorized (but did not mandate) the creation of a new set-aside program for women-owned small businesses to restrict certain federal contracts to bidding by women-owned businesses, which would be the first newly-created set-aside program in this Administration.
- The SBA proposed regulations to implement the program, but they were of questionable constitutionality and withdrawn in the OMB process. Currently, SBA is reevaluating a Congressionally-mandated draft study it had developed to justify the program. After the revised study is complete next year, the Administration will have to determine whether to implement the program.

LABOR POLICY

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

- Issuance of Executive Orders on Project Labor Agreements and Notification of "Beck" Rights.
- Creation of Office of 21st Century Workforce and appearance by President at 21st Century Workforce Summit (May 2001) to address challenges facing our workforce in the new economy, such as changing workplace demographics and technology.
- Issuance of DOL's ergonomics plan, which features issuance by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) of industry-specific guidelines for ergonomic workplace safety, instead of a far-reaching, onerous, one-size-fits all federal mandate. This action was consistent with the President's campaign statement: "As for OSHA's proposed ergonomics standards, I believe the federal government should provide workers and businesses with information about ergonomic-related injuries, but it should not impose far-reaching federal regulations that are neither clear nor rooted in strong science."
- Participation in record number of Health and Safety Partnerships. Health and Safety Partnerships between labor unions and the Department of Labor are at an all time high. In 2001, labor unions participated in 465 safety partnerships with DOL, including a partnership with the Laborers Union to address the anthrax threat.
- Proposal of "Back to Work Relief" package shortly after September 11, which culminated in the signing into law (early 2002) of a major element of that package -- extended unemployment benefits for thirteen weeks for all dislocated workers.
- Signing into law major expansion and reauthorization of Trade Adjustment Assistance program to provide for assistance for workers impacted by trade, including job training, financial assistance, and, for the first time, assistance with health insurance. Reauthorization of TAA was crucial to passage of Trade Promotion Authority, one of the President's major legislative priorities.
- Pennsylvania Mine Rescue – Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) played a major role in the rescue of the miners at Quecreek Mine in Pennsylvania.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Propose "Compensatory Time" amendment. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose to amend the FLSA to provide private sector employees the option . . . of taking comp time instead of overtime pay." President Bush has twice spoken in favor of comp time since taking office, but has not proposed actual legislation or pushed for enactment of existing legislation.
- Propose amendment to Occupational Safety and Health Act to ensure that private, residential homes will not be subject to OSHA regulations. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose legislation to amend the Occupational Safety and Health Act to prohibit the Act from being applied to employees who work at home." President Bush has not spoken about this proposal since taking office, but the Department of Labor issued a directive during the Clinton Administration committing to keep OSHA out of home offices, and the directive is still in effect.

- Seek to enact "Paycheck Protection" legislation as part of campaign finance reform legislation. The campaign finance reform fact sheet produced by Governor Bush's campaign pledged that "Governor Bush will accompany the ban on union and corporate soft money with legislation to enact "Paycheck Protection" preventing union bosses from directly spending roughly $300 million in union dues annually -- without members' permission – to support candidates of the bosses' choosing." A campaign finance reform bill was signed into law by the President earlier this year, and efforts to include a "Paycheck Protection" provision were defeated.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative (active legislative issues)

- Davis Bacon in the Homeland Security bill – The current Senate version of the bill creating the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) contains a provision applying Davis-Bacon to construction projects funded with assistance from the DHS. The House bill has no such provision. Some Senate Republicans plan to fight the provision in the Senate, but do not have the votes to win an up-or-down vote. Certain House Republican conferees will vigorously fight in conference to keep the provision out of the final bill.
- Workforce Investment Act Reauthorization – The legislation that authorizes the federally-funded, state-run job training system expires on September 30, 2003 and must be reauthorized before that date. DOL plans to have a legislative proposal ready to send to Congress by January 2003.
- Minimum Wage increase – Democrats will likely continue to try to increase the minimum wage by $1.50 over 18 months.
- Extended Unemployment Insurance Benefits – workers who lost their jobs right after September 11 have already exhausted even the additional 13 weeks of benefits granted by the economic stimulus bill, and the entire extended benefit program ends at the end of Calendar Year 2002. Democrats in both the House and the Senate are already pushing legislation to extend the program and create another 13-week extension. Another extension could cost as much as $11 billion.
- Genetic Discrimination Legislation – The President has endorsed legislation prohibiting employment discrimination based on genetic information, but there is competing legislation in both the House and the Senate. Congress, with technical assistance and encouragement from the Administration, is working on a compromise bill that both Houses could pass. The bills differ mainly over private rights of action and damages levels.
- Unemployment Insurance/Employment Services (UI/ES) Reform – The President's FY '03 budget proposed a comprehensive reform of the UI/ES system to cut employer taxes, return trust fund money to the states and gradually shift responsibility for all administrative costs to the states. The proposal is stalled in Congress.

B. Regulatory

- Revision of Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) Regulations -- The Clinton Administration issued several regulations implementing the FMLA that have made it extremely difficult and onerous to implement. The Supreme Court recently struck down one such regulation as an improper interpretation of the statute. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) Regulations -- Certain "white-collar" professions are exempt from FLSA requirements, but the regulations defining these exemptions are vague, out-dated, and extremely difficult to administer. Employers and employees alike agree that these regulations need to be updated. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Regulations Governing Union Financial Disclosures – DOL plans to seek comment on proposed revisions in late November-December 2002. See discussion in new policy recommendation #2 below.

REV_00159122

Drug Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

1. Presidential Events: Announcement of Director of National Drug Control Policy, May 10, 2001 ("announcement"); Signing Drug-Free Communities Act Reauthorization Bill, December 14, 2001 ("signing"); Remarks on the 2002 National Drug Control Strategy, February 12, 2002 ("strategy").
2. Stopping Use Before it Starts: Education and Community Action—Implementing the first priority of the National Drug Control Strategy has produced accomplishments across all sectors relevant to drug prevention: communities, schools, parents, and work places.
   a. Empower Community and Faith-Based Groups to Fight Drugs (campaign, announcement, signing, strategy)—On track to meet President's commitment to double community coalitions in five years. The Drug-Free Communities Act has been successfully reauthorized and appropriations are on track for FY02 and FY03. The program includes expansion in rural and under-served areas and the continued involvement of faith leaders.
   b. Ensure Students have Access to Drug-Free Schools (campaign, strategy)—No Child Left Behind reauthorized the Safe and Drug-Free Schools program, requiring accountability for grant recipients pursuant to the President's commitment. Department of Education has begun work on implementation of the new accountability with OMB and ONDCP. Additionally, ONDCP and Education have produced and are distributing a guide to drug testing for schools.
   c. Mobilize Parents in the War on Drugs (campaign, announcement, strategy)—ONDCP has used the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign to reach parents and increase their efficacy in dealing with their kids on drug abuse. Additionally, we have worked to develop a parent drug corps. Although the Appropriations Committees appear poised to deny our request for a second year, we have provided grants from existing authority at SAMHSA to support the efforts of non-profits to develop a parent drug corps in several states.
   d. Promote Drug-Free Workplaces (campaign)—The Administration continues to implement a small business drug-free workplace program, although at a lower funding level than the President originally committed ($3M per year v. $5M per year). Additionally, the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has launched the @Work program, which enrolls corporations in a program to provide drug-free workplace materials through existing corporate infrastructure (e.g., intranets, company newsletters).
3. Healing America's Drug Users: Getting Treatment Resources Where They Are Needed—Health and Human Services is on track to meet the budgetary commitment of an additional $1.6B in treatment resources and doubling the budget for the National Institute on Drug Abuse over five years. Department of Justice has met the President's commitment to drug-free federal prisons with an outstanding array of anti-drug programs that provide a great example for state correctional systems. Additionally, in the Residential Substance Abuse Treatment (RSAT) program, which provides funds for treatment to States for use in correctional settings, we requested a $10M increase in FY02, and received $7M, for a total of $70M. In FY03, we requested an additional $7M.

4. Disrupting the Market: Attacking the Economic Basis of the Drug Trade
   a. Secure and Defend our Borders (campaign)—The Administration has provided $100M over the first two years of a $250M over 5 year commitment to reimburse local governments for prosecuting drug cases on the southwest border.
   b. Clean up Meth labs (campaign)—The campaign paper committed $100M over 5 years at DEA for Meth lab clean up, and the funds were provided through the retooled COPS program.
5. Fighting the War on Terror (signing, strategy)—The President has effectively linked the issues of drugs and terror in his public statements, demonstrating that the purchase of illegal drugs funds terrorist activity and violence. The National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has used this theme in a group of ads released at the Super Bowl and a second group to be released in September.
6. Oppose legalization (announcement)—The President came out strongly against drug legalization and Director Walters has visited and will continue to visit the three states that have legalization ballot initiatives this fall—Arizona, Ohio, and Nevada.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Healing America's Drug Users—While the Administration has made substantial progress on providing treatment, particularly in the budget, some of the President's policy commitments have not yet been met.
   a. Treatment—While we have met the funding commitment, we are still working to fully implement three policy changes: (1) making state grant awards performance-based, and (2) ensuring that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups, (3) targeting resources to the greatest need. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Federal funds will be provided to support drug treatment programs that prove demonstrated results. And faith-based and community-based organizations will be fully eligible as well, provided they can demonstrate the same effectiveness.")
   b. Drug Courts—We have not fully met our funding commitment to the drug courts program, increasing funding by $50M over five years, nor have we made policy changes to improve drug courts. We did not request an increase in FY02 maintaining the request at the base $50M. In the FY03 budget, we requested an increase of $2M. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Drug Courts: Increase funding by $50 million over five years for drug courts, share best practices, and hold them accountable for results. Under a Bush Administration, the Department of Justice will support local drug courts that combine drug testing with effective monitoring.")
2. Stopping Use Before It Starts—Although we have made progress in ensuring that students have access to drug-free schools, there remains important implementation work to do on No Child Left Behind and we have not increased funding for Safe and Drug Free Schools, despite a campaign commitment to add $20M/year for five years. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Work to make all schools drug-free: Increase funding for the Safe and Drug-Free Schools program by $100 million over five years, but require that states and districts measure and report drug use and demonstrate effective use of federal funds.")

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. ONDCP Reauthorization—ONDCP's organic statute, including authorizations for several of its programmatic responsibilities.
2. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) Reauthorization—HHS prevention and treatment programs, including the principle drug-related block grant.
3. Coverdell Drug-Free Workplace Reauthorization—Grants to support technical assistance and services for small business drug-free workplace programs.
4. Faith Bill (if not completed in '02)—Provisions allowing faith-based organizations to receive federal assistance for treatment and prevention services.
5. Department of Homeland Security Authorization (if not completed in '02)—Many counter-drug law enforcement functions are responsibilities of the new DHS.
6. Department of Justice Reauthorization (if not completed in '02)—includes most drug enforcement agencies, drug courts program.

C. Regulatory—None.

Environment and Natural Resource Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

The first 18 months of this Administration has been marked by the fulfillment of a wide range of commitments in the environmental and natural resource areas, as outlined below. Two Presidential Initiatives – Clear Skies and Healthy Forests – represent priority, "signature," policies that will require strong and coordinated, multi-agency efforts to achieve Congressional approval and subsequent implementation.

1. Brownfields Cleanup and Restoration (campaign commitment): On January 11, 2002, President Bush signed historic legislation that will facilitate cleanup and redevelopment of contaminated industrial sites – "brownfields" – improving the environment, protecting public health, creating jobs, and revitalizing communities. The President's '03 budget proposal provides $200 million – twice the '02 level of funding – for EPA's brownfields program, $171 million of which is for grants for states and local communities.
2. Clear Skies Initiative (campaign commitment): On February 14, 2002, President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced by Senator Smith and Congressmen Tauzin and Barton. The Initiative, contrary to the campaign commitment, does not include carbon dioxide which is now addressed in the President's climate change policy.
3. Global Climate Change (campaign commitment): The Administration is partially on track to meet this commitment through the announcement of three initiatives focused on science, technology, and mitigation. On June 11, 2001, the President announced a new commitment to develop a science-based climate change policy (Climate Change Research Initiative), and a new commitment to funding research on "breakthrough technologies" (National Climate Change Technology Initiative) that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. On February 14, 2002, the President announced a new approach to climate change that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. A range of domestic and international initiatives accompanied the February 14 announcement. The National Climate Change Technology Initiative has not evolved sufficiently, (see Outstanding Issues Section).
   a. Created the Climate Change Research Initiative (1st-year commitment): The objective of this initiative is to promote a vision focused on the effective use of scientific knowledge in policy and management decisions, and continued evaluation of management strategies and choices. To meet this commitment to climate research, the U.S. will spend $1.7 billion in FY'03 for basic research on climate change, $40 million of which is dedicated to leverage other funding to address major gaps in scientific understanding including the carbon cycle and the role of black soot, aerosols, and clouds.

b. Climate Change Mitigation Policy (2nd-year commitment): The President announced a new strategy that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. To help meet this commitment, the President directed the Secretary of Energy to substantially improve the registry to enhance measurement accuracy, reliability and verifiability of voluntary emissions reductions and to give transferable credits to companies that can show real emissions reductions. Numerous other domestic and international initiatives will help meet this goal.

4. Energy Project Streamlining (1st-year commitment): Executive Order #13212 was signed on May 18, 2001. The White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining was charged with conducting a top-to-bottom review of federal procedures in order to find ways to expedite the review of permits for projects that will increase the production, transmission, and conservation of energy, while maintaining safety, public health, and environmental protections.
5. Restoring the Everglades (campaign commitment): To fulfill a campaign pledge, President Bush and Florida Governor Jeb Bush, in January 2002, signed an agreement that ensures adequate water supplies are available to support the 30-year Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan (CERP). This agreement further bolsters the Bush Administration's strong support for the 30-year, $7.8 billion CERP, the most comprehensive and ambitious ecosystem restoration project ever undertaken in the United States. The President's FY'03 budget proposal includes $245 million for Everglades restoration.
6. Protecting our National Wildlife Refuges: The President's FY'03 budget proposes a record $376 million, up $57 million from FY'02, for our National Wildlife Refuges as we prepare to celebrate the system's 100-year anniversary on March 14, 2003. Opportunity for White House participation and profile in this celebration. The Department of the Interior's Centennial Campaign will improve resource conservation, visitor programs, and facilities on wildlife refuges nationwide and increase visibility for wildlife refuges by strengthening and expanding partnerships.
7. Landowner Incentive Program (campaign commitment): Fulfilling a campaign pledge, President Bush has created new landowner incentives and private stewardship grant programs, which Congress funded at $50 million. The President's FY'03 Budget includes an additional $10 million – for a total of $60 million – for these programs. The Department of Interior also is seeking $100 million for a new Cooperative Conservation Initiative to protect and conserve the environment through partnerships that will tap the ingenuity, imagination, and innovative spirit of American citizens. Challenge grants will be awarded competitively to landowners, environmental groups, land-user groups, communities and local and state governments. In addition, the President signed legislation temporarily ending the estate tax, which will allow more lands to stay in family ownership and prevent habitat fragmentation.
8. Oppose Breaching Dams in the Pacific Northwest (campaign commitment): The Administration continues to uphold this position. The Administration has supported local efforts to restore salmon runs and provided $20 million in funding for local salmon recovery projects.
9. Conservation Title of the Farm Bill: The Administration worked with the Congressional conference committee to ensure a forward-looking farm policy that more than doubles the funding to enhance conservation and environmental stewardship on private lands. On May 13, 2002, President Bush signed the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act into law, which will add $17.1 billion over the next ten years to existing programs.

10. Klamath Basin Cabinet-level Panel (1st-year commitment): On March 1, 2002, the President established a Cabinet-level panel to recommend within 18 months ways to enhance water quality and quantity in Oregon's Klamath River Basin. President Bush named Secretaries Norton, Veneman, Evans, and Chairman Connaughton to head the panel.
11. Tropical Forest Conservation Act (campaign commitment): On track to meet the President's TFCA commitments. Agreements with Belize, El Salvador, and Bangladesh, and the Philippines have been completed. The President's FY '03 budget request of $40 million for "debt for nature" agreements with developing countries nearly triples funding for this successful program, which preserves species habitat and sequesters greenhouse gases.
12. Offshore Drilling (campaign commitment): On track to support position on a moratorium against offshore drilling in Florida. The Administration has taken active steps to ensure no drilling will occur off the coast of Florida, in two distinct actions announced in May, 2002, (lease buy back at Destin Dome and purchase of drilling rights in the Everglades). The Administration also adjusted Lease Sale 181 to further ensure there would be no drilling offshore in Florida. Resolving controversial leases along California coastline could present opportunity; complex litigation, however, is now in process.
13. Fully Fund the Global Environment Facility (2nd-year commitment): The 2002 U.S. pledge includes $107.5 million per year for each of the four years of the replenishment period, plus another $70 million in the fourth year if the GEF meets a set of performance measurements agreed to by donors. In addition, the Administration is requesting $70.3 million annually for the next three years to pay off U.S. arrears accumulated during the previous Administration. The GEF is the primary international institution for transferring energy and sequestration technologies to the developing world under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC).
14. Eliminating Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs): To protect the American people and the world from the dangers of 12 chemicals that persist in the environment long after their use, President Bush announced the United States' support for the Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants. Governor Whitman signed the treaty, which bans or restricts the production, use, and/or release of 12 chemicals that have been linked to numerous adverse effects in humans and animals, including cancer, central nervous system damage, reproductive disorders, and immune system disruption. The Administration sent the treaty to the U.S. Senate for ratification in April 2002.
15. Forest Health Initiative (2nd-year commitments): On August 22, 2002, the President announced a new initiative that will significantly reduce the damage caused by catastrophic wildfires, by removing unnecessary regulatory obstacles that hinder active forest management to improve forest health. He called upon Congress to work with his Administration to pass legislation that addresses the unhealthy forest crisis by expediting procedures for forest thinning and restoration projects.

16. Northwest Forest Plan: On August 22, 2002 the President also emphasized the promise of the 1994 Northwest Forest Plan to ensure sustainable forest management and appropriate timber production. On September 12, 2002, a House bill was introduced to implement the Administration's strategy.
17. World Summit on Sustainable Development (WSSD): The WSSD was successful in four major areas. First, the Plan of Action and Head of State Declaration reaffirmed the importance of good national governance, national investment in sound economic and social policies and the shared responsibilities between developed and developing countries as a basis for development. As such, the WSSD reinforced the new "compact for development" launched at the Monterrey Financing for Development Conference. Second, the WSSD acknowledged the importance of partnerships among governments, private sector and non-government organizations as an importance new means of implementing the WSSD action Plan. Over 220 partnerships (with $235 million in resources) were identified in advance off the Summit, and around 60 partnerships were announced during the Summit by a variety of countries. Third, the Action Plan focused on obtaining concrete results, many with specific timetables and achievable targets. Fourth, the US led and announced partnerships in four major areas: $970 million in investments over 3 years on water and sanitation projects, largely in Africa; $43 million in 2003 to leverage an estimated $400 million in clean energy for rural and poor communities; $90 million in 2003 for sustainable agricultural programs; $53 million for forest protection in the Congo Basin. The U.S. also reaffirmed its commitment of $2.3 billion through 2003 on health and combating HIV/AIDS and infectious diseases.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Fully Fund the Land and Water Conservation Fund (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to fully fund DOI's Land and Water Conservation Fund at $900m. In our FY'02 and 03 budgets, the Administration significantly increased LWCF funding. The FY'03 budget proposed for LWCF was fully funded at $900m, although it did so by combining existing non-LWCF grant programs with LWCF grant programs. The Interior appropriation bills in Congress are not adhering to that budgeted amount, however, because certain programs, such as a new $100 million Cooperative Conservation Initiative, are not funded in the pending legislation. The Administration faces two challenges in FY04. First, we must devise a better strategy to fully fund the Cooperative Conservation Initiative. Second, certain environmental groups will be disappointed unless there is a large increase in funding for federal land acquisition. Thus, we should devise an outreach approach with groups supportive of the state grant programs that are being increased.
2. Protecting National Parks (campaign commitment): In a campaign pledge, then-Governor Bush committed to seek funds for National Parks to eliminate within five years—by 2006—a $4.9 billion maintenance backlog identified in a rough 1996 National Park Service estimate. Although the 1996 survey was not a true survey of the actual maintenance backlog—because it also included some cyclic maintenance needs and "wish-list" items—the Administration's budgets have attempted to meet that $4.9b goal. Facilities maintenance constitutes $2.2 billion of the $4.9b total, and, if current funding commitments continue, the Administration will meet that goal. Road maintenance and construction constitutes $2.7billion of the $4.9b goal. That portion will be reauthorized and started but not completed by 2006 because the funding stream will be derived from the next transportation bill over the FY04-09 timeframe. Moreover, to meet the road construction goal, the Administration will need to prioritize that funding choice over certain other choices in the transportation bill such as funding for National Forest roads and highway safety.

3. National Climate Change Technology Initiative (1st-year commitment): Promotes funding research on "breakthrough technologies" that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. This program has not evolved sufficiently in interagency deliberations. While the Administration has made substantial budgetary commitments, some of the related programmatic commitments have not been adequately agreed upon or articulated.
4. President's Award for Private Stewardship (campaign commitment): Establish this award to fulfill the President's campaign promise. A draft Executive Order is currently being reviewed.
5. Missouri River (campaign commitment): The President committed the Corps of Engineers to consult with the Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) under the Endangered Species Act to develop a change in the Master Manual that governs the Corps' operation of the Missouri River. Its release is anticipated in 2003.
6. Environmental Compliance at Federal Facilities (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to require all federal facilities to meet all environmental standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Clear Skies: President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced in Congress.
2. EPA Cabinet Elevation: A Bill has been introduced and the President has expressed his support.
3. Energy Bill: The Energy Bill includes tax incentives for renewable energy, cogeneration, and new technology. Also included in the Bill is a significant climate change title that the Administration opposes. While it will not likely survive the conference, legislative activity on this issue is very likely in 2003-2004.
4. Forest Health Initiative: The Administration is pursuing administrative and legislative reforms to implement the President's August 2002 initiative.
5. Commission on Oceans Policy: The Commission will be issuing its final report and recommendations to the President and Congress in March 2003, at which time implementing action will likely be required of the Administration, in close consultation with Congress. CEQ and other agencies are providing ongoing support to the Commission, the President, and Congress in this important policy issue.

C. Regulatory

a. New Source Review: EPA and DOE forwarded a report to the President, in accordance with the National Energy Plan, recommending changes to the Clean Air Act New Source Review program. On June 13, EPA released a policy which outlined the proposed changes to the rules. The changes are in two parts: (1) rules that we will finalize that were originally proposed by the Clinton Administration. These deal with regulatory flexibility incentives for pollution control equipment and two accounting changes. The first will provide a more rigorous baseline calculation against which potential emission increases are measured. The second will require emission levels to be determined on an 'actual emissions compared to future actual emissions' basis. And (2) a proposed rule that will clarify what projects will be excluded from the New Source Review permitting process because they are routine maintenance, repair or replacement. OMB is currently reviewing both of these rule packages and intends to publish them in the near future.
b. Total Maximum Daily Load (TMDL): In response to concerns expressed by Congress, the National Academy of Sciences, and others, EPA Administrator Whitman extended the effective date for the controversial TMDL rule through April 2003. The TMDL program will continue to operate under rules issued in 1985 and 1991, while the Administrator develops a more flexible and effective approach to TMDLs. The Administration will adopt rules to restore polluted waterbodies that are based on sound science and which will better integrate the several tools in the Clean Water Act to encourage clean-up actions even in advance of TMDLs.
c. Combined Animal Feeding Operation (CAFO): EPA is currently working with State agencies to determine whether drinking water sources are impacted by upstream agricultural sources, and then advising on development and implementation of programs to address CAFO's and other sources.
d. Wetlands guidance and rulemaking: This fall EPA and the Corps of Engineers will initiate advance notice of proposed rulemaking to solicit public comment on issues relating to the extent of federal jurisdiction over waters of the United States, including tributaries and adjacent wetlands, for purposes of regulation under the Clean Water Act and related federal laws. The rulemaking is in response to a 2001 United States Supreme Court decision which limited federal jurisdiction over certain isolated intrastate isolated waters but which raised questions regarding jurisdiction over other waters as well.
e. DOE regulations for voluntary greenhouse gas reduction registry: As a part of the Climate Change Strategy, the Administration is committed to substantially improving the current voluntary emission reduction registration program under section 1605(b) of the 1992 Energy Policy Act and provide transferable credits. Secretaries Evans, Abraham, Veneman, and EPA Administrator Whitman made recommendations in a letter to the President in July 2002, to start a stakeholder process in the next six months; finalization of new standards by January 2004.
f. Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE): A key recommendation of the President's National Energy Policy directed the Secretary to undertake an immediate review of vehicle fuel efficiency standards. The Administration is dedicated to a responsibly crafted CAFE standard that is based on sound science, and takes into account passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleet of automobiles. New standards should extend to include light trucks, vans, and SUV's.

g. Renewable fuels regulations: The energy bill will likely contain language that will require regulatory changes in the federal reformulated gasoline program. The final conference report may very likely repeal the current 2% oxygenate requirement, ban MTBE (a widely used additive to bring down toxics and criteria pollutants), and impose an ethanol mandate. There may be new opt in/opt out language for states as well, with related regulatory activities checked by legislation.

h. Transportation Streamlining: DOT is chairing a "Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force" that will report to the President through the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality. The task force will formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms that enable each agency required by law to conduct environmental reviews with respect to high - priority infrastructure projects to ensure completion in a timely and environmentally responsible manner. The task force will complete a report to the President once a year.

i. Improving the implementation of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA): The NEPA Task Force is examining how federal agencies can improve NEPA implementation and is currently gathering and assessing public comments. The Task Force plans to submit its report on making NEPA more effective and efficient to CEQ by the end of the calendar year. Until the Task Force reviews all of the comments, it is premature to conclude whether the report will include recommendations to update or revise sections of the CEQ Regulations for Implementing the Procedural Provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act (40 CFR Parts 1500-1508).

j. Endangered Species Act: The Department of the Interior is improving incentive and Section 7 consultation tools available under the Endangered Species Act. Scheduled to be completed in 2003, these changes include greater private landowner protections under safe harbor agreements, extension of safe-harbor-like protections to the Fish & Wildlife Service's Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program, and advancement of conservation banking as an incentive-based tool for listed species mitigation.

k. Grazing: The Department of the Interior is developing options for greater citizen involvement in the administration of BLM grazing permits and the building and sustaining of working landscapes on public lands.

l. National Monuments: The Department of the Interior is developing a range of options for expanded citizen involvement in the stewardship of BLM National Monuments. Those options include collaborative and citizen-based participation in development of monument land-use plans.

m. Dioxin Reassessment: EPA will soon send a reassessment of the health effects of dioxin exposure. It will reconfirm EPA's position that dioxin is a toxic chemical that can cause both cancer and non-cancer adverse health effects. The reassessment also identifies animal fats in the commercial food supply (beef, pork, poultry, dairy, eggs, and fish) as the primary route of human exposure. The IWG will review the reassessment and determine whether the substantial questions about the health effects warrant a review by the National Academy of Sciences. The IWG, through the Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, have already engaged the National Academy of Sciences to examine the potential trade-offs between the benefits of a balanced diet and the potential risk of dioxin exposure. The Academy is also examining potential opportunities for reducing dioxin input into the food supply.

II. Looking Back: Review of 2002

A. Achievements.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps (1/30/02): During his State of the Union, the President announced his creation by Executive Order of the USA Freedom Corps as a Coordinating Council and office to be housed at the White House. The Mission of the USA Freedom Corps is to foster a culture of service, citizenship and responsibility.

- Launched Citizen Corps Effort (2/1/02): More than 50,000 individuals have signed up online to participate in the newly created Citizen Corps. They join hundreds of thousands of individuals already volunteering at the local level with Citizen Corps-supported programs including CERT, Neighborhood Watch, and Volunteers in Police Service. More than 160 communities around the country have officially registered Citizen Corps Councils to coordinate local emergency prevention, preparation and response volunteer activity.
  - ✓ Launched Citizen Corps Citizens Preparedness Guidebook (2/1/02): The guidebook produced by the National Crime Prevention Council with support from the Department of Justice and the USA Freedom Corps, gives Americans guidance on how to prepare for disasters and prevent crime in our homes, in our neighborhoods, at work, at the airport, in places of worship, and in public spaces.
  - ✓ Launched Neighborhood Watch Expansion (3/6/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the expansion of Neighborhood Watch with the National Sheriffs Association. The launch included a new website, how-to materials for local communities and a public service ad campaign.
  - ✓ Launched Volunteers in Police Service (5/30/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the Volunteers in Police Service (VIPS) program with the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP). The goal of VIPS is to provide support for resource-constrained law enforcement agencies by tapping civilian volunteers to supplement their community's law enforcement professionals in order to free up officers for frontline duty. The number of registered VIPS programs has doubled since the launch.
  - ✓ Launched First Medical Reserve Corps Grants (9/02): On July 19, 2002, HHS announced the availability of $2 million in grants, during FY02, to help local officials develop volunteer Medical Reserve corps units. The MRC will strengthen local communities' capacities to respond to disasters and emergencies in the community, as well as strengthen the local public health infrastructure.
  - ✓ Launched Community Emergency Response Team Initiative (2/1/02): The Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) program helps train people to be better prepared to respond to emergency situations in their communities. CERT members support first responders in emergencies, provide assistance to victims, organize spontaneous volunteers at a disaster site, and collect disaster intelligence for first responders. Over the next two years, CERT aims to double the number of participants, with over 400,000 individuals completing the 18 plus hours of training and funding was secured in the supplemental budget to achieve goals.

- ✓ Appointed State Citizen Corps Contacts (6/02): 50 governors have assigned a state point of contact for Citizen Corps. From 7/31-8/1 these state contacts participated in a FEMA conference with select federal agencies, local governments and experts from volunteer agencies.

- Launched Business Strengthening America (6/13/02): In June, President Bush met with business leaders who are working on a self-directed effort to get businesses involved in supporting and promoting volunteer service by their employees and customers. Financial services companies, grocers, hospitality companies and entertainment and media businesses are among those who have already made major commitments to support volunteer service in response to the President's "Call to Service." These companies have announced new policies, including paid leave time for employees to participate in volunteer service, sponsorship of volunteer projects involving employees, and the creation of resources to engage customers in volunteer service, and working to make a person's Record of Service relevant to getting a job.

- Launched Public Service Announcement Campaign (7/30/02): The advertising campaign includes television, print, radio, and web products. President Bush appears in each of the ads, saying, "When you help your neighbors, you help your Nation. Everyone can do something. "New York Yankee Mariano Rivera appears in English and Spanish language versions of a radio and television ad, actress Angie Harmon appears in a second television and radio ad, and former Senators Robert Dole and John Glenn appear together in a third radio and television ad.

  The USA Freedom Corps worked with the Corporation for National and Community Service and the Ad Council, with the support of the Walt Disney Company and Department of Justice, to develop the campaign featuring usafreedomcorps.gov as a way to get involved. In addition the USA Freedom Corps is the fulfillment mechanism at the end of three Entertainment Council television commercials and movie trailers that have been running nationwide since May.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network and Redesigned USA Freedom Corps Website (7/30/02): The USA Freedom Corp website is the concrete representation of the USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network – a massive public-private enterprise on the web that enables volunteers to search according to their interests and their geographic location from the largest clearinghouse of volunteer service opportunities ever assembled – 50,000 organizations around the country and the world, with millions of service opportunities

  The search function draws upon well established non-profit organizations, including America's Promise, the National Mentoring Partnership, the Points of Light Foundation, SERVEnet, the United Way, and VolunteerMatch, as well as the federal government agencies that are a part of the USA Freedom Corps Coordinating Council – AmeriCorps, Senior Corps, Peace Corps and Citizen Corps. The Department of the Interior's one-stop registration center for federal, state and local government agencies that need and use volunteers can also be accessed through the new search function.

- Launched American History, Civics and Service Initiative (9/17/02):
  - ✓ Launched NEH "We the People" initiative and President announced significant, ongoing investment in the program through the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), including competitive grant programs and other public programs to support the teaching of American History and Civics.
  - ✓ Launched "Our Documents" initiative of the National Archives and Records Administration, in collaboration with National History Day, the Corporation for National and Community Service and the USA Freedom Corps. Through web materials, a lesson plan sourcebook, and teacher workshops, 100 American milestone documents from the holdings of the National Archives will be made available to teachers and students.
  - ✓ Announced that the "We the People" Forum on American History, Civics, and Service, to be cosponsored by the NEH, the Corporation for National and Community Service, and the U.S. Department of Education, will be held in February 2003. The purpose of the forum is to call public attention to the need for more and better American history, civics, and service and draw attention to promising practices in history, civics, and student service, as well as innovative initiatives.

- Launch of Students in Service to America Initiative (8/31/02): The President encouraged America's students to begin a service activity or project this school year and introduced the new Students in Service to America guidebook for educators to help them enlist America's young people in service to their communities and develop the habits of civic participation, responsibility, and service. More than 130,000 public and private elementary and secondary schools, homeschools, and after-school programs around the country received copies of the Students in Service to America guidebook, a CD-ROM, posters and other teaching and community resources. In addition, CNCS dedicated the time and talents of 25,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps volunteers to support student service activities and service-learning programs.

- Release of new Americorps Regulations (6/02): In June, CNCS issued final AmeriCorps regulations implementing a portion of the reforms called for in the President's principles, including: greater flexibility in the use of AmeriCorps members by nonprofit organizations; an explicit statement of the eligibility of religious organizations for AmeriCorps grants; reductions in administrative burdens on grantees; strengthening the prohibition on political activities; and making the education award more flexible for use by seniors and others.

- Awarding of CNCS Homeland Security Grants (7/02): In July, CNCS in concert with the USA Freedom Corps and the Homeland Security Council, awarded its first homeland security grants totaling $10.3 million to support more than 37,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps and other volunteers in 43 non-profit and public agencies in 26 states and the District of Columbia to:

- ✓ use volunteers to develop and carry out emergency response plans;
- ✓ expand Citizen Corps programs related to crime and health; and
- ✓ develop public health strategies for responding to emergencies.

- Freedom Corps Greeters (ongoing): On more than 60 trips around the country, President Bush has met with volunteers who are answering his "Call to Service" to highlight their volunteer service as an example of the dedication he is hoping to instill in all Americans through the USA Freedom Corps.

- Response to President's Call to Service (ongoing):
  - ✓ VolunteerMatch, one of the groups matching volunteers with opportunities through the USA Freedom Corps website, reports that more people are serving. The group measured a 72 percent increase in matching during the first six months of 2002 after USA Freedom Corps was launched, compared to the same period in 2001.
  - ✓ The number of potential AmeriCorps members is growing, with a 95 percent increase in online applications compared with pre-State of the Union levels.
  - ✓ Potential volunteers with Senior Corps, another CNCS program, have contributed to a 60 percent jump in web visitors since January.
  - ✓ More than 76,000 potential Peace Corps Volunteers have requested applications since the President's State of the Union address - a 40 percent increase over the same period in 2001. 34 countries have requested Peace Corps volunteers since State of the Union.
  - ✓ More than 160 Citizen Corps Councils have been created around the country.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Federal Program Service Opportunities: Continue to expand and strengthen federal service programs, including the Peace Corps, Citizen Corps, AmeriCorps, and Senior Corps, including official launch of Medical Reserve Corps and Terrorism Information and Prevention System programs.

- Citizen Service Act: The President sent his "Principles and Reforms for a Citizen Service Act" to Congress on April 9, 2002. HR 4854, the Citizen Service Act of 2002, was introduced by Rep. Pete Hoekstra (R-MI) and Rep. Tim Roemer (D-IN) on May 24, 2002 and was reported by voice vote by the full House Education and the Workforce Committee on June 20, 2002. The bill awaits House Floor action. Senators Gregg and Kennedy are expected to introduce a companion bill shortly. The bill would reauthorize for five years the programs administered by CNCS and implement the following reforms, consistent with the President's policies:
  - ✓ Support and encourage greater engagement of citizens in volunteering;
  - ✓ Make Federal funds more responsive to state and local needs;
  - ✓ Make Federal support more accountable and effective; and
  - ✓ Provide greater assistance to community organizations, both secular and faith-based.
- Corporation for National and Community Service Appropriations: CNCS and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the $296 million increase from appropriated levels the President requested for AmeriCorps, Senior Corps and Learn and Serve America for FY 2003.

REV_00159137

- Peace Corps Reauthorization: Even though Peace Corps is fully authorized through FY 2003, because of heightened interest in the Peace Corps as a result of the President's new policy, Senator Dodd and Representative Kirk have already introduced bipartisan bills in the Senate and House, respectively, to reauthorize the Peace Corps and to meet the President's commitment to double the number of Peace Corps Volunteers over the next five years.

- Peace Corps Appropriations: Peace Corps and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the Presidents full funding request of $320 million for FY 2003. This is the amount requested in the President's budget to expand the number of volunteers from less than 7,000 today to 8,200 in FY 2003, on the path to nearly doubling the number of volunteers by FY 2007.

- Citizen Corps Appropriations: The Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Department of Justice, the Department of Health and Human Services and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the President's funding request of $195 million for FY 2003 to support Citizen Corps initiatives, including Citizen Corps Councils, CERT, Neighborhood Watch and Medical Reserve Corps.

- Civics: Commitment made on September 17 for "significant ongoing" investment in American History and civics education. Internal discussions have revolved around $100 million over three years starting in the 2004 budget. There has not been consensus reached in the Administration on total or mix of new vs. redirected funds.

B. Legislative

- See Citizen Service Act, Peace Corps reauthorization and appropriations request descriptions above. In addition, funding for the American History and Civics initiative through the National Endowment for the Humanities will need to be requested.

Health Care Policy

II. LOOKING BACK: REVIEW OF '01 AND '02

A. Achievements (See also NEC Health Care Policy)..

1. Presidential Events:

- March 21, 2001-- Patients' Bill of Rights (strategy). The President addressed the American College of Cardiology to announce his principles for patients' rights legislation as Congress began debating the issue.
- May 21, 2001 –Global Fund to Fight AIDS (announcement). The President announced the United States' commitment to supporting the new Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria.
- August 9, 2001--Stem Cell Research Policy (announcement). Speaking from the Crawford Ranch during a nation-wide television broadcast, the President announced his decision to prohibit federal funding of research on stem cells derived from live human embryos.
- December 6, 2001--Director of the National Cancer Institute (announcement). The President announced the appointment of Dr. von Eschenbach to head the NCI and discussed four principles that will guide research efforts there.
- February 11, 2002-- Health Care Agenda (strategy). Speaking at the University of Wisconsin Medical School, the President enumerated his entire health care agenda as part of a vision of a patient controlled quality health care system.
- March 26, 2002-- Director of the National Institutes of Health and the Surgeon General (announcement). The President announced the nominees to be two major health care officials. As NIH Director, Dr. Zerhouni was tasked with the issues of the human genome, stem cell research, and biodefense. Dr. Carmona was nominated to use the post of Surgeon General to promote preventive health and to reduce the incidence of diabetes and obesity.
- April 10, 2002-- Cloning Ban (strategy). In response to Senate debate, the President defined the need for a comprehensive ban on human cloning and announced his support of legislation sponsored by Senators Brownback and Landrieu.
- April 29, 2002-- Improving Mental Health Care (strategy). The President participated in a local mental health round table with Senator Domenici and then addressed health care providers at the University of New Mexico Medical Campus. The President signed an EO establishing the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, and announced that he would work with Congress to pass federal mental health parity legislation in 2002.
- June 19, 2002-- New Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative (announcement). The President announced a new $500 million International Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative that seeks to prevent the transmission of HIV/AIDS from mothers to infants and to improve health care delivery in Africa and the Caribbean.
- June 20, 2002-- HealthierUS Initiative (announcement). The President launched a new initiative to draw upon the resources of the federal government to promote the value of fitness in reducing the incidence and severity of chronic health conditions.

- July 25, 2002-- Proposal to Address Medical Liability Crisis (strategy). In response to a new HHS study highlighting the higher costs and lower quality of care resulting from the broken liability system, President Bush proposed major legislative reforms to address the medical liability crisis.

2. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – The President negotiated House-passed legislation that fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights that would "provide patient protections, like those passed in Texas, to ensure quality of care from health providers. Texas is recognized as having one of the strongest patients' bill of rights in the country."* It has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. The bill puts medical decisions in the hands of physicians, instead of insurance companies; provides independent, binding external medical review for denials of care, and gives patients meaningful legal remedies who have been harmed by an HMO's denial of medical care.

3. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:
   - Community Health Centers (CHCs) - The Administration's FY 2002 and 2003 budgets follow through on the President's campaign promise to double the number of people served in CHCs by creating 1,200 new and expanded CHC sites over a five-year period. CHCs provide critical primary health care services to uninsured individuals regardless of their ability to pay. There are areas in the country that still do not have access to basic health care services and these new resources will help new and existing CHCs to serve a greater number of people.

4. Supporting Medical Research:
   - National Institutes of Health (NIH) – The President promised to support medical research by working with Congress to enact a record increase for the NIH, and he will have fulfilled his campaign promise to double the NIH budget from the 1998 level of $13.6 billion when the proposed 2003 budget of $27.3 billion is enacted. The NIH is the world's preeminent and largest medical research organization. NIH research has already led to many medical breakthroughs, including lifesaving vaccines, new cancer therapies, human genome sequencing and effective drugs for the treatment of mental illness. Completing this historic increase furthers NIH's efforts to improve the prevention, detection, and treatment of the diseases and conditions that affect the lives of all Americans.
   - Stem Cell Research – The President announced his decision to allow medical research using embryonic stem cells while still preserving the value and sanctity of human life. This policy permits federal funding of research using certain existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but does not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional live human embryos. Scientists will explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying illnesses. As part of the decision, the President created a new President's Council on Bioethics, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

5. Combating HIV/AIDS
   - Global HIV/AIDS: Between the Global Fund and the MTCT Initiative, the 2003 budget for global HIV/AIDS activities will be 82% higher than the amount provided by Congress in 2001.
   - Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – The President became the first world leader to accept a new challenge to combat global AIDS by committing the U.S. to financially supporting the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria. The U.S. remains the single largest donor to this multilateral fund – contributing $500 million through FY '03. The United States continues to be actively involved in influencing the structure, development and implementation of the Global Fund. By October of 2002, over $600 million worth of grants in over thirty countries will have been awarded, and disbursement of these funds is imminent pending the finalization of management and evaluation controls. Continued support by the U.S. is key to the long-term success of the Global Fund.
   - Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative – The President announced a major initiative to help stop the spread of HIV from mothers to their children. This long-term program of providing treatment and improving basic health infrastructure in the hardest hit countries will be initially funded at $500 million. The initiative is being implemented through a unique partnership between the Department of Health and Human Services and the Agency for International Development and will provide a new model for foreign assistance generally, and, in particular, global health assistance.

6. Other:
   - Medical Records Privacy – The President ushered in unprecedented protections for every American relating to their private medical information. The federal privacy regulation, which will be in effect by April 2003, protects medical records and other personal health information maintained by certain health care providers, hospitals, health plans, health insurers, and health care clearinghouses. The rule guarantees patients access to their medical records, gives them more control over how their protected health information is used and disclosed, and provides a clear avenue of recourse if their medical privacy is compromised. The Administration's actions were criticized by consumer advocates and Congressional Democrats, but praised by other stakeholders in the health care system.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – While the President's negotiated House-passed legislation fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights; the bill has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.

2. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:

REV_00159141

- National Health Service Corps (NHSC) – The President promised during the campaign to refocus this scholarship and loan repayment program that places "Corps physicians in the neediest areas," and to "coordinate the Corps program with the J-1 visa waiver program to avoid overlap." The President also promised to "encourage physicians to participate in the NHSC by making scholarship funds tax free." HHS recently assumed responsibility over much of the J-1 Visa program, but coordinating this program with the NHSC has not been proposed.

3. Long Term Care:

- Affordability – The President promised to "make long-term care available and affordable, instead of a path to financial ruin." This was to include making the "cost of long-term care insurance fully deductible" and establishing an "additional personal exemption for home caregivers." The FY '03 budget proposal included both full deductibility for long-term care insurance, and a caregiver personal exemption. While the House has acted on similar legislation, additional action on these proposals is not expected. See also NEC Health Care Policy.

III. LOOKING FORWARD: '03 AGENDA

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Patients' Bill of Rights ('03) – The President negotiated a historic compromise with Rep. Norwood to give every American a meaningful Patient Bill of Rights. Legislation is not likely to be active again in the remaining days of 107th Congress, but Democrats will likely reintroduce the bill in the next session of Congress. Support for Democrat-backed patient protection bills—by its most vocal advocate the AMA—has waned since the President announced his commitment to legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The President should support the principles set forth in the compromise legislation. However, he should seek to emphasize his priority is making sure families and individuals have access to affordable health care.
2. Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.
3. Mental Health Parity Legislation (fall '02) – Last December, the President agreed to work with Senator Domenici to pass a mental health parity bill in the 107th Congress. While Speaker Hastert is strongly opposed to any parity legislation, the White House is working to facilitate a compromise that would prohibit health plans that provide medical and surgical benefits, from placing higher financial requirements or different treatment limitations on mental health benefits. Action is needed this year, because the current federal mental health parity law expires in December of 2002.

4. Medical Liability Reform – The Administration endorsed legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The proposal creates a more timely, predictable, and fair liability system that improves access to quality health care while reducing health care costs. The bill passed the House, but is being blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
5. Patient Safety/Medical Errors Legislation (if not completed in '02) —The Administration has endorsed legislation to authorize patient safety organizations to collect confidential data on medical mistakes from hospitals, doctors, and other health care providers, and develop programs to address particular needs identified by data. While the proposals enjoy strong bipartisan support in both the House and Senate, several key Senate Democrats continue to block progress and ask for additional funding for patient safety and medical information grants. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
6. Genetic Non-Discrimination Legislation (if not completed in '02) –Earlier this year, the President endorsed legislation introduced by Senators Snowe, Frist, Gregg and Jeffords to prohibit discrimination by employers and health insurers based on genetic information. Democratic legislation introduced by Sen. Daschle is similar but would also encourage lawsuits by creating new private rights of action with unlimited damages. Congressional negotiators have not been able to resolve the liability issue, and the bill supported by the President has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.
7. Cloning Ban (if not completed in '02) --The President strongly supports House passed legislation that would prohibit all forms of human cloning. A current proposal in the Senate would allow the cloning of embryos for research purposes.
8. Cancer Care Quality Legislation (if not completed in '02)– Led by the American Cancer Society and the Lance Armstrong Foundation, bipartisan Congressional members are pushing legislation authorizing development and collection of information on quality of cancer care, mandating specific dollars for cancer survivorship research, and creating other programs to address end-of-life care. As the legislation is currently drafted, it takes power to set research priorities away from scientists, duplicates existing programs, and expands bureaucracy.
9. Early Treatment for HIV Act – Legislation is being developed that would allow State Medicaid programs the option to expand Medicaid coverage to individuals with an HIV diagnosis as an early preventive treatment measure in a budget neutral way.
10. United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – This proposal authorizes the Executive branch to develop a 5-year strategic plan for addressing the international HIV/AIDS pandemic, provide increased resources for multilateral and bilateral efforts, and expand HHS's authority to provide international assistance. This amendment would require several reports back to Congress by the Executive branch.

C. Regulatory (key regulatory issues)

1. HIPAA Security Standards for Health Information Regulation (Fall '02) — Highly visible regulation to protect identifiable health information/medical records; affects all health care stakeholders subject to the HIPAA Privacy regulation.
2. HIPAA Electronic Medicare Claims Submission (Fall '02) —Highly visible regulation to require all Medicare claims be submitted electronically.
3. Bar Code Labeling on Human Drug Products —(Fall '02) Highly visible regulation that uses bar coding technology to identify potential medical errors.
4. Bioterrorism Regulations for Food Safety and Security —(Fall '02) Regulation to enhance the inspection and oversight of imported food.
5. Bioterrorism Regulations for Tracking Dangerous Biological Pathogens (Fall '02) —Regulation to enhance surveillance and security over dangerous agents and toxins that pose a public health threat; applies to all public and private entities that use, possess and transfer these dangerous pathogens.

Immigration

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Restructuring the Immigration and Naturalization Service
The President promised to "restructure the INS, splitting it into two agencies: one to deal with enforcement, and one to deal with service."* In November 2001, the Attorney General announced an administrative restructuring plan for the agency and began its implementation. The President's proposal to create the Department of Homeland Security contemplates preserving the separation between service and enforcement when the INS moves to that department.

Provide increased funding for INS personnel
The President promised to "propose an additional $500 million over 5 years to fund new INS personnel and increased employee incentives to provide quality service to legal immigrants."* The Administration has sought $100 million each fiscal year for this purpose.

Reduce INS benefit processing times
The President promised to "improve INS service by proposing that every INS immigration application be processed within 180 days of submission."* The INS has a backlog elimination plan in place to achieve that goal by FY 2004. It is on track to meet that goal for 9 of 12 classes of applications. Increased security checks have caused delays in some categories.

A. Outstanding Commitments

None.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- INS reorganization will be a significant issue next year if it is not dealt with in Homeland Security Department legislation or otherwise this year.
- Extension of Section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, which the President supports, is unlikely to occur during the 107th Congress. Section 245(i) permits aliens residing illegally in the U.S., but who are otherwise entitled to obtain permanent legal status, to do so without first leaving the country. As a result they can avoid being barred from reentering the U.S. for 3 or 10 years.

A. Regulatory
None.

Ground Transportation

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Finalized a number of regulations to ensure the safe opening of the U.S.-Mexico border to commercial truck traffic. White House is reviewing Secretary Mineta's recommendation to the President that opening the border will not present a significant safety risk.
- Issued an Executive Order establishing the Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force. DOT will chair an interagency task force to help move high-priority transportation projects through the environmental permitting process. Members of Congress, roadbuilding associations, state representatives and environmental groups have praised this approach. The construction trade unions will support this as well.
- Granted $100 million loan to Amtrak to prevent total shutdown of Amtrak and several key commuter rail systems.

B. Outstanding Commitments

None

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative:

- TEA 21 reauthorization: TEA 21, which funds highway and urban transit projects, covers fiscal years 1998-2003, so a new bill must be in place ahead of the fiscal year 2004 appropriations cycle.

- Amtrak reauthorization: See discussion above.

B. Regulatory:

- Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE)– NHTSA is required by law to propose new fuel economy standards for light trucks for the 2005 model year by October 2002 and finalize the regulation by April 2003. If NHTSA chooses not to initiate a rulemaking on passenger cars, the current standard will remain in effect.

  The Administration is currently pushing a CAFE reform proposal in the Energy bill Conference. The proposal requires NHTSA to set a new light truck standard that will save 5 billion gallons of fuel between 2006 and 2012. It also gives the Secretary of Transportation greater authority to amend passenger car fuel economy standards while taking into account safety and economic burden.

- Open the Mexican border to cross-border commercial trucking. The White House is currently reviewing DOT's recommendation.

REV_00159147

Welfare, Child Welfare, Adoption

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Abstinence Education. Both as part of the welfare reform reauthorization legislation and the normal appropriations process, the Administration is trying to increase funding for abstinence education by $126 million per year. The House supports the additional funding; the position of the Senate is not clear. If successful, this effort will fulfill the President's campaign promise to fund abstinence education programs at the same level as family planning and condom distribution programs, although some conservatives are already arguing that more money for abstinence will be needed to achieve parity with family planning.

- Compassion Capital Fund. In June 2002, HHS announced the implementation of the Compassion Capital Fund. In response to the President's fiscal 2002 budget request, Congress appropriated funds that are specifically designed to assist grassroots organizations as part of the President's faith-based and community initiative. $30 million is being used to help level the playing field for faith and community-based organizations as they compete for federal grants. It is too early to determine whether these funds will have an impact.

- Child Support Enforcement. HHS's Office of the Inspector General (OIG), in cooperation with HHS's Office of Child Support Enforcement, have implemented strong measures, including a three-day national sweep, to locate the Nation's most wanted "deadbeat parents". So far, 70 of the biggest offenders have been arrested, in part through cooperation between OIG, the U.S. Marshals Service, and state and local police. Arrests have been made in 29 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Due to this effort, as well as continued aggressive implementation of the child support program by the Office of Child Support Enforcement, both child support collections and paternity establishments are at an all-time high.

- Good Start, Grow Smart. In April 2002, President Bush presented Good Start, Grow Smart, the Administration's Initiative to address standards of learning in early literacy, language, and numeracy skills. To ensure that the President's Initiative is implemented boldly and effectively, the Head Start and Child Care Bureaus are completing a joint strategic plan, and Head Start programs are being required to fully implement new requirements for charting the progress of each child. In addition, HHS has implemented a plan to train Head Start administrators and teachers in research-based teaching techniques that will lead to improved school readiness (50,000 Head Start teachers will receive this training). HHS is also conducting a variety of activities to ensure that rigorous, cutting-edge research is developed, carried out, and translated into practices that enhance children's progress toward school readiness.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Reauthorize the 1996 Welfare Reform Legislation that Expires on September 30, 2002. In February of this year, the Administration submitted to Congress a plan to reauthorize and strengthen the 1996 welfare reform legislation. By May, the House had developed and passed a bill that was nearly identical to the Administration plan. However, at this writing the bill is mired in the Senate and seems unlikely to pass this year, especially because the bill being pushed by the Senate Democratic leadership is deeply flawed. If a bill cannot be enacted in 2002, Congress will probably enact a 1-year extension of funding authority, which would mean that welfare reform reauthorization would be on the agenda for the 108th Congress. Because of this failure to act on reauthorization, the Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG) has not been reauthorized either. If the Senate fails to reauthorize the CCDBG in the 107th Congress, we would be provided with a good opportunity to seek measures to coordinate the CCDBG with Head Start during next year's reauthorization debate.

- Head Start. The Administration promised during the campaign to move the Head Start program from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Department of Education.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- The 1996 welfare reform law expires on September 30, 2002 and must be reauthorized. The House has enacted legislation but the Senate has not. If this is not completed by the 107th Congress, the 108th Congress would take up reauthorization.

C. Regulatory

- HHS is using its statutory authority to administer the Head Start program to aggressively implement significant improvements in Head Start teaching, administration, and research. These initiatives are grouped together under the rubric "Good Start, Grow Smart".

REV_00159149

Education

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- The No Child Left Behind Act was signed into law by President Bush on January 8, 2002. By turning federal spending on schools into a federal investment in improved student performance, this law provides the most sweeping reform of the Elementary & Secondary Education Act since it was enacted in 1965. The law ensures that States and school districts will develop strong systems of accountability based on student performance, provides increased local control and flexibility by putting decision-making in the hands of those at the State and local levels, increases parental options, and encourages the use of effective programs and solid research to drive instruction.
- The Department of Education has been working to implement the NCLBA by releasing regulations and guidance for programs under the Act. The 2002-2003 school year is the first year that many of these reforms are going into effect.
- One of the most important reforms in the Act is the development of state accountability systems that hold schools accountable for student progress. The Department is currently reviewing the first round of state accountability plans, and will be approving these state plans in the coming months.
- The Act also launched a comprehensive effort called Reading First, a five-year, $5 billion state grant program. Reading First provides assistance to state and local education agencies to apply scientifically-based research—and the proven instructional and assessment tools consistent with this research—to improve reading instruction for K-3 students and to ensure that all children learn to read well by the end of the third grade.

Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001

- Commitment: Supports expanding education savings accounts for parents to increase their annual contributions from $500 per student to $5,000 and withdraw funds tax free to pay for education expenses from Kindergarten to college
- The tax relief bill that President Bush signed last year provides $22.7 billion in education savings for American families over the next five years: eliminates the 60-month limitation on student loan interest deductions and increases the income levels of individuals able to claim the deduction, increases the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts from $500 to $2,000, and allows savings to be used for elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education expenses, adds a new above-the-line deduction for qualified higher education expenses, allows tax-free distributions from Qualified Tuition Plans (Section 529 plans) to be used to pay educational expenses and permits private institutions to offer such plans, makes the income exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance permanent and extends the benefit of the exclusion to graduate level courses.

- President Bush had proposed during his campaign to increase the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts to $5,000.

Teacher Tax Deduction

- Commitment: Establish a teacher tax deduction to help defray out-of-pocket classroom expenses
- The Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act provided an above-the-line tax deduction for up to $250 in classroom expenses incurred by teachers and other educators. Effective only in 2002 and 2003.
- The President proposed a $400 teacher tax deduction for out-of-pocket classroom expenses.

Special Education Funding

- Commitment: Work with Congress to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act
- The President is on the way to fulfilling his campaign promise to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under IDEA.
- The President's 2003 budget provides an increase of $1 billion for Special Education Grants to States (following an increase of $1.2 billion in FY 2002), to $8.5 billion, and an increase of $20 million for states to identify and serve infants and toddlers with disabilities, to $437 million.

Character Education

- Commitment: Triple character education funding and incorporate character-building lessons into federal youth programs
- The President proposed and has fulfilled his promise to triple character education grant funding, from $8 million to $25 million. The Character Education program received $25 million in 2002, and the same amount is proposed for 2003. More emphasis could be put on research into character education and its effect on student outcomes.

State Scholars Initiative

- The Department of Education awarded a $2.4 million grant to the Center for State Scholars to create a pilot program in five states to encourage students to take a more demanding curriculum in high school in preparation for entry into a technical school, community college, university or work. States that participate will have to encourage the business community, school districts, and higher education institutions in each state to work together to encourage a more rigorous curriculum in high schools nationwide.

C. Outstanding Commitments

Pell Grants

- Commitment: Provide $1 billion over five years for enhanced Pell Grants to students who take college-level math and science courses in high school, allowing them an additional $1,000 to pay for college tuition
- To fulfill this commitment, the President would need to propose this initiative in a future budget submission or in the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act.
- While this initiative has not been proposed, the President has provided significant increases in funding for Pell Grants.
- The Pell Grant maximum award increased from $3,750 in 2001 to $4,000 in 2002.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10.9 billion for the Pell Grant program, maintaining a maximum award of $4000 for Fiscal Year 2003-2004. This is an increase of $2.1 billion over 2001 Pell Grant funding.
- The recently enacted supplemental appropriations bill provided an additional $1 billion in Pell Grant funding to eliminate the shortfall in 2002.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Several key pieces of legislation are up for reauthorization in 2003, and several pieces of legislation will be held over from 2002.

1. Individuals with Disabilities Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2002)—Special Education programs for children, provided mostly in K-12 education.
2. Office of Educational Research and Improvement Reauthorization (authorization expired end of FY 1998, but has continued under that authorization)—Department of Education research initiatives.
3. Higher Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Postsecondary education programs, including all federal student financial aid.
4. Perkins Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Vocational and Adult Education programs
5. Rehabilitation Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Employment programs for adults with disabilities
6. Head Start Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—HHS early education programs, but significant coordination with Department of Education

REV_00159152

C. Regulatory

The Department of Education will continue to regulate on and develop and revise guidance for the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act.

In addition, the Secretary's Commission on Opportunity in Athletics must submit its report on findings and recommendations on Title IX to Secretary Paige by January 31, 2003. The Administration will review regulations on Title IX at this time.

REV_00159153

Faith-Based

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

Office Establishment

- An Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives and five Cabinet Centers at HUD, HHS, Education, Labor, and Justice have been established. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.

New Resources and Programs for Faith-Based Groups

- The President's 2003 budget provides $25 million in competitive grants for mentoring programs for children of prisoners. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to launch a new program to address the needs of children of prisoners, offering grants on a competitive basis to faith-based and community groups.
- H.R. 1 opens the 21st Century after-school program's funding (maintained at $1 billion in FY 2003) to competitive bidding by faith-based and community groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- On June 4, the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) at the Department of Health and Human Services announced the rollout of the $30 million Compassion Capital Fund. Nearly $25 million will be made available to 15-25 intermediary organizations that will provide technical assistance to help faith-based and community organizations expand the reach of their programs. The remaining $5 million will be used to conduct research and establish a National Resource Center that will provide tools to faith-based and community organizations. More than 350 groups applied for the intermediary grants and nearly 70 applied for the field research grants. In addition, the President's 2003 budget provides $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund, a public-private partnership to identify and invest in charitable "best practices." These each fulfill the President's campaign promise to create a Compassion Capital Fund.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10 million in competitive grants to fund pilot Second Chance maternity homes. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- Two faith-based prison pre-release programs have been established, one designed for federal prisoners (a religion specific, multi-faith, and social responsibility program) and one for state prisoners (faith-based organizations will provide mentoring and role modeling during incarceration, transition and stabilization phases). This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to initiate and fund same
- The Department of Labor awarded a total of $17.5 million in grants specifically designed to link faith-based and grassroots community organizations to the nation's One-Stop Career System. Twelve states and 29 organizations around the country will receive funds that they will use to create partnerships between faith-based and community groups and the One-Stop career centers.

Administrative Reforms and Outreach Programs

- OFBCI has created a database of more than 100 social service programs open to faith-based groups worth more than $50 billion, organized for the first time by groups of people served, not by program names.
- In the past three months, all of the agencies have established websites for the initiative. These websites provide detailed information about the initiative generally, as well as information about applicable funding opportunities.
- To date, the Department of Education Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives has held a total of six very successful outreach conferences attended by more than 4000 people. These conferences are designed to make local organizations aware of the initiative and Department of Education funding opportunities in which they might be interested.
- The Department of Education has issued appropriate guidance to states concerning the involvement of faith-based and community organizations in all formula grant programs that are amenable to participation by these groups.
- The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration at HHS has planned six technical assistance conferences throughout the country to provide technical assistance to faith-based and community organizations that wish to apply for substance abuse prevention/treatment funds.
- The DOJ Center is working with the Office of Justice Programs to simplify the grants and administrative process to make it friendlier to smaller faith-based and community organizations.
- The DOJ Center is also working with OJP to establish a Community Capacity Development Office. This office will focus on capacity development issues for faith-based organizations, small communities, and other entities identified.

Legislation

- H.R. 7, The Community Solutions Act, passed the House in July, 2001 and helped meet a number of the President's Faith-Based commitments including: non-itemizer tax deduction, charity IRA rollover, raising the cap on corporate charity contributions, civil liability protection for corporate donations and an expansion of Charitable Choice.
- Authorization for the Mentoring of Prisoner's Children pilot project.
- $30 million appropriation for the Compassion Capital Fund.
- Introduction and Senate Finance passage of the bi-partisan CARE Act (27 co-sponsors including 10 Democrats).

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Hold a corporate and philanthropic summit to examine private-sector discrimination against funding faith-based organizations. (Notre Dame Commencement Speech, May 2001)
- Promote a Charitable State Tax Credit of up to 50% of the first $500 for individuals or $1000 for married couples for contributions to charities addressing poverty; extend the tax credit—up to 50% of the first $1000—to corporations. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

- Provide federal matching funds for the establishment of state Offices of Faith-Based Action. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Promote alternative licensing regimes that recognize religious training as an alternative form of qualification for delivery of non-medical social services. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Fund certificates to help 500,000 lower-income parents pay for after-school activities of their choosing, with funding of $400 million. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Provide performance-based drug treatment grants to states; ensure that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative

Depending on activity in the final month of the 107th Congress, the President's faith-based bill may or may not have been passed and signed into law. If passed, it would fulfill a majority of the commitments the President has made on faith-based issues. If not, all of those issues would remain outstanding including: 1) the expansion of Charitable Choice; 2) a non-itemizer tax deduction; 3) tax-free IRA charitable rollover; 4) raising the cap on corporate contributions; and 5) civil liability protection for corporate charity donations.

If this package fails to pass, however, OFBCI strongly recommends a different legislative approach for the 108th Congress. Specifically, OFBCI recommends using an amendment strategy to expand Charitable Choice to all Federal social service programs along with a free-standing charitable tax incentives bill. We do not recommend a strategy that marries the two efforts together.

B. Regulatory:

The Office's main issues will be administrative and regulatory in nature, and may be somewhat controversial. Specifically:

- Provide clear guidance to faith-based organizations on the 'Do's and Don'ts' of interacting with the Federal government.
- Announce new FEMA policy that treats all non-profit organizations equally in its emergency assistance programs.
- Provide official guidance on Charitable Choice for TANF, SAMHSA, CSBG and other programs covered by Federal statute, either through executive order or department regulation.
- Issue a user-friendly booklet identifying Federal funding opportunities that may interest faith-based organizations, with instructions about how to apply.

REV_00159156

- Update its website with the guidance materials and grants information, as well as other information about the Initiative.
- Oversee Agencies issuing internal guidance to peer review panels and grants management staff on the participation of FBOs in grants programs.
- Agency Centers will begin to work within their agencies on innovative pilot and demonstration projects targeting elders, at-risk youth and prisoners, addicts, the homeless, and those making the transition from welfare to work.
- Remove regulations that prohibit faith-based organizations' participation in many programs, beginning at HUD.
- Remove regulations that limit the right of faith-based organizations to maintain religious identity through hiring autonomy unless there is a statutory basis for them.
- Improve data collection so that accurate information on faith-based organizations is available.
- Expand the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives by executive order to include new Faith-Based Centers at Departments of State and Agriculture because both work extensively with faith-based organizations to feed the hungry and provide relief for those in desperate need.
- Fight to maintain religious organizations' rights to hire and fire on the basis of religion.

REV_00159157

Housing and Community Development

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

- The President issued America's Homeownership Challenge, mobilizing the private real estate and mortgage finance sector to eliminate barriers to homeownership through increased financial and organizational commitments to increase minority homeownership by at least 5.5 million families by 2010. As a result, additional private capital of $440 billion has been pledged by the government-sponsored enterprises to increase minority homeownership. Private entities have committed resources to assist in the effort. Sears Roebuck recently announced a $100 million, five-year program to reduce barriers to minority homeownership, specifically responding to President Bush's challenge.

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed $200 million for the American Dream Downpayment Initiative, which would provide state and local agencies with matching grants to assist an estimated 40,000 first-time homebuyer families with downpayment funds. Legislation has been introduced in the House (Mike Rogers) and the Senate (Allard).

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed a $2.4 billion, five-year Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit of up to 50% of the project costs of rehabilitation and construction of low-income housing, provided that eligible homebuyers have incomes of not more than 80% of area median income. The tax credit will eventually result in an additional 200,000 affordable single-family homes becoming available through construction or rehabilitation. Legislation very close to the President's proposal has been introduced in the House (Portman/Cardin) and is expected to be introduced in the Senate this month (Santorum/Gordon Smith).

- The Section 8 Homeownership Program has been implemented in part by HUD. The program allows local housing agencies flexibility to provide either mortgage assistance in lieu of a rental subsidy. A downpayment grant equaling up to one-year's worth of a family's Section 8 rental assistance is also envisioned, but Congress has not made a specific appropriation allowing the use of Section 8 funds for this activity. HUD has also implemented a Section 8 Disability Initiative -- a three-year pilot program authorized in 1999 which allows recipients with disabilities to use rental assistance toward mortgage payments.

- The Administration has issued for public comment a proposed regulation to simplify and modernize the current homebuying process, which is governed by the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) and the regulation implementing the act. Secretary Martinez expects that legislation amending RESPA may also be needed to strengthen enforcement.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- End Chronic Homelessness: Secretary Martinez's speech before the National Alliance to End Homelessness committed to ending chronic homelessness by the end of the decade, and the FY 03 budget cites this as an explicit Administration goal. The Interagency Council on the Homeless held its first meeting in six years and announced a $35 million initiative (using recaptured funds) in furtherance of the Administration's goal.

- Convene a White House Conference on Increasing Minority Homeownership: In his June 17th Atlanta rollout of his homeownership initiative, the President committed to holding a White House Conference on minority homeownership this fall. The conference, currently scheduled for October 15th, will highlight barriers to minority homeownership and develop proposed solutions.

- Modernize and simplify the homebuying process. Secretary Martinez has made reform of the homebuying process a top HUD priority, with the goal of benefiting consumers with cost savings and ensuring that they receive timely, accurate information that is reflected at closing. Reform of the homebuying process was a component of the President's homeownership initiative announced in Atlanta in June. HUD has issued proposed changes to the RESPA regulation for public comment. The comment period closes in October.

- Promote financial education through housing counseling. The Administration has proposed increasing funding for housing counseling grants by $15 million in FY 2003, to $35 million. In his June 17th Atlanta speech, the President cited the importance of housing counseling in reducing barriers to minority homeownership. Faith-based groups will be key partners in HUD's housing counseling efforts.

- Triple funding for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity Program (SHOP). In his May 20, 2001 Notre Dame speech, the President promised to request a tripling of funds for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunities Program (SHOP), which provides grants for land acquisition and infrastructure improvement to non-profit organizations that offer homeownership opportunities to families willing to contribute their own "sweat equity" (such as Habitat for Humanity). The President's FY 03 budget request tripled funding for SHOP (from approximately $22 million to nearly $66 million). These requested increases were not been included in the Senate VA/HUD Appropriations bill.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislation:

Enactment of existing proposals (American Dream Downpayment Initiative; Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit) should be the Administration's top priorities in the next session of Congress if these are not enacted this year. At this point, the downpayment initiative is the only legislative proposal with a chance of enactment this session of Congress.

Much press attention has been focused on what housing advocates have termed "the housing crisis." This has galvanized a wide array of groups in support of the creation of a dedicated source of federal funding for housing expenditures (a housing trust fund similar to the highway trust fund). In this session of Congress, H.R. 3995, an Oxley-Roukema housing bill containing the President's downpayment initiative, has been reported out of the Financial Services Committee. The bill now contains a number of new program authorizations which we oppose. In the Senate, Christopher (Kit) Bond, the Ranking Minority Member on the VA/HUD Appropriations Committee introduced a bill (S. 2967) on September 19th authorizing a major new housing production program. Rather than creating new and possibly duplicative housing programs, increased funding for the existing HOME program, targeted to the very low-income, is the Secretary's preferred approach to dealing with the increased housing needs.

C. Regulatory:

The key regulatory issue facing the Department will be reform of the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, which Secretary Martinez advocates as part of his effort to reduce closing costs and make the homebuying process easier. Because of the varied economic interests involved in the homebuying industry affected by these changes, this will be highly contentious. HUD has proposed changes to the RESPA rule and is currently receiving comments on its draft rule. While HUD believes it has the authority to adopt the rule it has proposed, the Secretary has stated that further changes (especially in the enforcement arena) may also be desirable and would require legislation.

Veterans

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Established the Task Force to Improve Health Care Delivery For Our Nation's Veterans (Veterans Healthcare Task Force – Executive Order 13214): The fifteen member Veterans Healthcare Task Force, co-chaired by Dr. Gail Wilensky, former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, and former Congressman John Paul Hammerschmidt, will recommend specific actions to improve coordination between VA and the Department of Defense (DoD) on health care for those who have served in uniform and who are eligible for VA benefits. The Task Force issued an interim report on the issues to be addressed on July 31, 2002. A final report is due in March 2003.

- Reduced Veterans Claims Backlog: Conducted a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement, as the President had promised in the campaign ("The veterans health care system and the claims process need an overhauling from top to bottom. It needs to be modernized, so that claims are handled in a fair and timely fashion." Honoring our Commitment to Veterans, November 11, 1999). Reduced the claims pending backlog by almost 40% in the first year.

- Reduced Longest-Pending Veterans Claims for Older Veterans: Established a "Tiger Team" of experienced employees and managers to focus on the longest-pending claims from older veterans. By August 2002 VA, had completed 47,000 cases that had been pending for more than one year.

- Reinstated VA's "Duty to Assist" Policy: VA had traditionally pursued a "duty to assist" policy of helping claimants in gathering evidence to support their claims, including compiling medical and service records. A court decision, however, had overturned the holding it was not authorized by law. During the campaign, Governor Bush promised to reinstate the policy (August 2000). The President implemented provisions of the Veterans Claims Assistance Act reinstating the policy.

- World War II Memorial Legislation: Signed bipartisan legislation that ended ending delays and ensured that the planned World War II Memorial is located on the National Mall, between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Although VA has made improvements in claims processing and in addressing the backlog of claims, the current delays remain unacceptable by President Bush's and Secretary's Principi's standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Priority Level 7 (PL 7) Vets: Veterans who choose to enroll in the VA health care system are placed in a priority group based on their specific eligibility status. The priority groups range from 1-7, with 1 being the highest priority for enrollment. The numbers of PL 7[1] veterans (those in least need of services) has increased dramatically since 1996, when they were accepted on a space-available basis and averaged two percent of all patients. This influx strains VA's capacity and hinders delivery of care to higher priority veterans.

VA medical care is not an entitlement offered to all veterans irrespective of geographic location. It is a service limited primarily to VA's geographic infrastructure and the size of the appropriation in any one year. Federal law requires that the VA Secretary announce, in conjunction with the appropriations process, what categories of veterans VA will be able to serve for that fiscal year. The issue, therefore, must be faced each year. For FY 2002, VA originally had determined that the budget would not permit it to serve all PL 7 veterans, and had proposed suspending new enrollment by PL 7 veterans who were not then enrolled. The final decision, however, was not to suspend PL 7 enrollment but to add $200 million to the President's budget request to address the issue. VA has proposed a regulation (See Section C, Regulatory, below) allowing it to provide services to higher priority veterans before providing services to lower priority veterans.

Concurrent Receipts: Currently, in order to receive VA disability payments, a military retiree must waive an equivalent amount of military retirement pay. Many in Congress have supported attempts to allow military retirees to concurrently receive VA disability and military retirement benefits. Every Administration has opposed these attempts based on the long-standing principle that no one should be able to receive concurrent retirement benefits and disability benefits based upon the same service. All Federal compensation systems aim for an equitable percentage of income replacement in the case of either work-related injury or retirement. Such a change in policy would cost approximately $58 billion dollars over ten years.

Most recently, the President threatened to veto the Department of Defense authorization bill because it contained a provision allowing concurrent receipts. Veterans groups, as expected, have been heated in their criticism of the Administration over this issue, and will continue to press their supporters to change policy and allow concurrent receipts.

[1] PL 7 veterans are veterans who (i) do not have a service-connected disability serious enough to qualify for disability compensation; (ii) have an annual income exceeding $24,000 ($27,000 with one dependent) or who have a substantial net worth; and (iii) do not qualify for care under other special provisions (e.g. World War I veteran, care for conditions associated with herbicide or radiation exposure, etc.)

REV_00159162

POW Legislation: American ex-POWs held by the Japanese have been active in trying to pass legislation that would allow them to sue Japanese corporations that used POW slave labor. The latest iteration in this effort is legislation sponsored by Republican Dana Rohrbacher (HR 1189). State Department believes the Rohrbacher bill would contravene our peace treaty with the Japanese, which shielded Japanese nationals from liability. A bill introduced by Michael Simpson, (HR 5235) would provide a pension benefit for former POWs.

VA had submitted a legislative proposal establishing a POW benefit, and supported the Simpson effort. In order to pay for the benefit, VA's proposal contained language overturning a recent court ruling that expanded the definition of service-connected disability to include alcoholism and drug-use. The POW benefit would have cost nearly $1.7 billion over ten years, while the offset would result in $4.6 billion in savings over the same period. However, the Administration chose not to send POW benefit legislation or publicly endorse the Simpson legislation because we would be creating an new entitlement without a guarantee that offset portion would survive.

C. Regulatory

Secretary Principi recently issued a regulation allowing VA to ensure priority care for veterans with severe service-connected disabilities. Priority for treatment for service-connected veterans does not reduce the number of veterans VA treats, but does reduce the amount of time veterans seeking treatment for a service-connected disability must wait before receiving care. Predictably, the regulation was criticized as a "cut" in veterans benefits (most particularly by Senator Rockefeller).

Criminal Justice

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Tort Reform

- Teacher Protection Act: As part of No Child Left Behind Act, the President signed into law the Teacher Protection Act, which provides civil immunity from state and Federal actions to teachers, principals, and other education professionals for actions taken to maintain discipline, order, or control in the classroom or school. The President promised to support the Teacher Protection Act during the campaign.
- Class Action Reform: The Administration sent a Statement of Administration Position (SAP) supporting the Class Action Fairness Act (H.R. 2341), which passed the House and is pending in the Senate. The bill would allow removal of cases to Federal court when the amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity. This is consistent with the campaign promise to "allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only minimal diversity exists."* Also, the bill establishes a consumer class action bill of rights, including notice of lawsuits in "plain English" and requires judicial review of non-cash benefits like coupons.
- Medical Liability Reform: In July 2002, President proposed national minimum standards in healthcare cases, including limits on non-economic damages and punitive damages, proportional liability, and informing juries of other sources of reimbursement. It would also protect from use in lawsuits reports and information about efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care. The House approved this legislation.

Campaign Finance Reform

- In March 2002, the President signed H.R. 2356, the Campaign Finance Reform Act. The Act contains various provisions the President supported, including a ban on unregulated, "soft" money contributions from unions and corporations, increased limits on individual giving, and new and more expedited disclosure requirements. However, it also includes provisions that raise constitutional concerns, such as the broad ban on issue advertising.
- The bill contains reforms the President promised to support during the campaign, including: "banning 'soft money' contributions from labor unions and corporations" and "raising individual contribution limits." As enacted, it did not include provisions advocated by the President such as "enforcement of the Beck decision and enactment of effective 'Paycheck Protection'" legislation or "instant disclosure of contributions" (although it did further lessen the amount of time before disclosure was required).*

Election Reform

- The President endorsed four guiding principles embodied in the May 2001 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Election Reform: (1) primacy of state, county and local governments in elections; (2) a limited but responsible role for the federal government in assisting states and localities with election administration so that voting technology and practices respect the value of every eligible vote; (3) need for active and vigorous enforcement of voting rights laws; and (4) need to uphold the voting rights of members of the armed services and of Americans living abroad.

- The President signed legislation consistent with these principles. It also contains important tools to decrease fraud in our voting systems.
- The bill authorizes $3.9 billion over four years for a variety of grant programs, including general improvement of the election administration system, and improved access to the voting process for individuals with disabilities. The Administration has proposed to spend $1.2 billion in matching grants to fund a state revolving fund to be used in election administration. The first of three $400 million installments was included in the President's FY 2003 budget.

Affirmative Action

- The President stated during the campaign that he "supports 'affirmative access' to open the doors of opportunity" to all Americans, and "opposes quotas and racial preferences."* The goal is to provide greater opportunity and access without creating race-conscious remedies that only benefit particular racial or ethnic groups. His Administration has done so in the following contexts:

    - Education: The No Child Left Behind Act establishes high standards and accountability for all public schools. Educating every American to his or her full potential was part of the campaign's affirmative access goals.
    - Contracting: The President's Small Business Agenda includes promoting the unbundling of contracts so that small businesses that are not capable of bidding for entire projects are not disadvantaged. This meets his campaign promise to advocate "breaking down government contracts to smaller sizes to encourage entrepreneurship in all communities" as a way to promote affirmative access.* Also, the President instructed the OMB Director to review contracting practices at relevant agencies to make sure their practices reflect a commitment to full and open competition.
    - Housing: The President announced a homeownership initiative targeted at increasing homeownership for minority families. It includes proposals to increase the supply of affordable homes for low and moderate income families, provide downpayment assistance, more educational assistance, and a "Homeownership Challenge" to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to help increase the number of minority homeowners by 5.5 million families by the end of the decade. This initiative does not rely on racial classifications.

New Freedom Initiative

Community Living

- Olmstead: By Executive Order, the President required Federal agencies to assist states and localities to implement the Supreme Court's Olmstead decision. Olmstead requires states to place qualified individuals with disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions, whenever treatment professionals determine that such placement is appropriate, the affected persons do not oppose such placement, and the state can reasonably accommodate the placement, taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with disabilities.

REV_00159166

- In response, key Federal agencies conducted the first comprehensive Federal review of barriers that prevent people with disabilities from living in the community and identified over 400 potential solutions to remove impediments to community-based living, which agencies have begun to implement.
- Medicare Homebound Rules: The President announced a clarification with respect to Medicare recipients with disabilities who are considered "homebound." This change makes it clear that people with significant disabilities may leave their homes for occasional activities without losing their Medicare homebound services.

Education

- IDEA: The President requested the largest increases of any President in history for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) Part B State Grants program in his FY 2002 and FY 2003 budgets. The President signed legislation increasing by $1.2 billion in FY 2002 budget for the IDEA Part B State Grants program.
- Special Education Commission: The President issued Executive Order 13227 in October 2001 creating the Presidential Commission on Excellence in Special Education. The Commission issued its report to the President on July 1, 2002.

Technology

- Section 508: The President promised full enforcement of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act, which requires that all Federal government electronic and information technologies be accessible to individuals with disabilities. In response, the Administration collaborated to expedite Section 508 implementation, and produced extensive technical guidance and training materials that will be helpful to Federal agencies and others interested in accessible technologies.

Homeownership

- HUD Section 8: The President committed to revising the HUD Section 8 rent subsidy program to permit people with disabilities to use up to one year's worth of Section 8 rent subsidy vouchers to finance a down payment and purchase a home. HUD has implemented this pilot program.

Employment Integration

- Ticket to Work: The President promoted swift implementation of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act, which provides incentives for more than 7.5 million Americans receiving benefits under Federal disability programs to return to work.

Other

- Commission on Mental Health: The President formed the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health to conduct a comprehensive study of the Nation's mental health service delivery system.
- Access to Voting Places: The President will sign legislation mandating increased access to polling places by individuals with disabilities.

REV_00159167

- DisabilityInfo.gov: By Executive Memorandum, the President created a single source Federal web site providing access to all the Federal web sites important to people with disabilities. This web site was launched in October 2002.
- NFI Budget: The President secured funding for the vast majority of NFI programs in FY 2002 and requested a higher overall level of NFI-related funding in FY 2003. In the FY 2002 budget, the President requested $10.781 billion and received $10.872 billion. In the FY 2003 budget, he is seeking $1.39 billion over 2002 appropriations.

B. Outstanding Commitments

Civil Justice
Tort Reform
The President promised during the campaign to "support meaningful, broad-based tort reform" to discourage frivolous lawsuits. Congress has not acted on the following items the President pledged to support:

- "Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a 'Three Strikes, You're Out' rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims."
- "Limit 'fishing expeditions' by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of 'junk science' by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony."
- "Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute."
- "Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity."
- "Enact a 'Fair Settlement Rule,' requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees."
- "Enact a 'Client's Bill of Rights' to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees."

The President's remaining campaign civil justice system reform pledge was to "Issue an Executive Order prohibiting Federal agencies from paying contingency fees."* This executive order is currently being drafted.

New Freedom Initiative

- Transportation Grants: The President requested $145 million in his 2002 and 2003 budgets for competitive grants through the Department of Transportation to provide alternative transportation services to give people with disabilities increased access to the job market, and to fund a pilot program to demonstrate innovative solutions for overcoming transportation barriers. This is the major NFI program that was not funded in FY 2002. The reason appears to be lack of available resources rather than any problem with the program itself.

B. Legislative

Civil Justice

Civil Justice Reform. Tort reform, including class action reform and medical malpractice liability reform, will not likely be resolved this year and will be an issue in the 108th Congress.

- Class Action Jurisdiction Act – This legislation has passed the House twice but has never been considered in the Senate. The President has endorsed it as a reform that will reduce inefficiency, waste and unfairness in the existing class action system, without curtailing plaintiff's rights or remedies.
  Other related legislation might involve anticipated changes to Rule 23 (governing class actions) that the Supreme Court is expected to propose on or before May 1, 2003. Some of these changes are to allow class members to opt out of the class once the terms of a proposed settlement are known; to allow the court to select class counsel; and to establish procedures for approval of attorney's fee awards. If Congress takes no action they would go into effect as proposed. However, there may be opportunities to strengthen the rule changes by legislation.
- Medical Malpractice Liability -- The House passed the HEALTH Act by vote of 217 – 203. The Senate is unlikely to consider the bill this Congress. However, as the public continues to suffer from increased medical insurance costs, watches doctors withdraw from practices where their insurance costs are prohibitive, and notes the absence of facilities such as trauma centers, there will be increasing pressure on the Senate to move next year.

Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.

C. Regulatory

Civil Justice

FDA Drug Labeling Safe Harbor. The FDA reviews and approves every word on the label of any prescription drug product, and it requires manufacturers to obtain approval before modifying a drug label. Yet many courts permit lawsuits based on a claim that a drug manufacturer's label did not warn of a certain risk – even though the label fully complied with all federal safety requirements. Such lawsuits essentially allow a jury to second-guess the FDA's judgment regarding a product's label and develop labeling policy without considering all the consequences. Empirical evidence shows that these decisions actually jeopardize the public health, since labels that are too complicated or long lead to consumers' ignoring all warnings.

FDA intends to promulgate a regulation expressly preempting tort failure-to-warn and other claims based on alleged deficiencies in a drug's label, as part of a new rule that will extensively revise drug-labeling requirements. These revised labeling requirements will result in simpler, more focused labels that will better protect the general public health.

This initiative could be unveiled at the Presidential level if desired.

SBA Women Owned Small Business Program

- SBA Women Owned Small Business Program: Congress authorized (but did not mandate) the creation of a new set-aside program for women-owned small businesses to restrict certain federal contracts to bidding by women-owned businesses, which would be the first newly-created set-aside program in this Administration.
- The SBA proposed regulations to implement the program, but they were of questionable constitutionality and withdrawn in the OMB process. Currently, SBA is reevaluating a Congressionally-mandated draft study it had developed to justify the program. After the revised study is complete next year, the Administration will have to determine whether to implement the program.

New Freedom Initiative

OPM Regulations

- The Office of Personnel Management regulations limit which entities can certify that an applicant has a disability. They are the state vocational rehabilitation agencies and the Department of Veterans Affairs. OPM is actively considering a change in regulation to add SSA as a certifying agency. This could streamline the process in allowing Ticket to Work candidates to apply for Federal jobs. This is expected to change in 2003.

Civil Justice Reform and New Freedom Initiative

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Tort Reform

- Teacher Protection Act: As part of the No Child Left Behind Act, the President signed into law the Teacher Protection Act, which provides civil immunity from state and Federal actions to teachers, principals, and other education professionals for actions taken to maintain discipline, order, or control in the classroom or school. The President promised to support the Teacher Protection Act during the campaign.

Campaign Finance Reform

- In March 2002, the President signed into law H.R. 2356, the Campaign Finance Reform Act. The Act contains various provisions the President supported, including a ban on unregulated, "soft" money contributions from unions and corporations, increased limits on individual giving, and new and more expedited disclosure requirements. However, it also includes provisions that raise constitutional concerns, such as the broad ban on issue advertising.
- The bill contains reforms the President promised to support during the campaign, including: "banning 'soft money' contributions from labor unions and corporations" and "raising individual contribution limits." As enacted, it did not include provisions advocated by the President such as "enforcement of the Beck decision and enactment of effective 'Paycheck Protection'" legislation or "instant disclosure of contributions" (although it did further lessen the amount of time before disclosure was required).*

Election Reform

- The President endorsed four guiding principles embodied in the May 2001 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Election Reform: (1) primacy of state, county and local governments in elections; (2) a limited but responsible role for the federal government in assisting states and localities with election administration so that voting technology and practices respect the value of every eligible vote; (3) need for active and vigorous enforcement of voting rights laws; and (4) need to uphold the voting rights of members of the armed services and of Americans living abroad.
- The legislation signed by the President largely follows these principles.
- The Administration has proposed to spend $1.2 billion in matching grants to fund a state revolving fund to be used in election administration. The first of three $400 million installments was included in the President's FY 2003 budget.

Affirmative Action

- The President stated during the campaign that he "supports 'affirmative access' to open the doors of opportunity" to all Americans, and "opposes quotas and racial preferences."* The goal is to provide greater opportunity and access without creating race-conscious remedies that only benefit particular racial or ethnic groups. Policies advocated during the campaign in the context of affirmative access have been implemented, as discussed below. However, the Administration has not proactively modified existing race-conscious programs from the prior Administration, such as government contracting programs.

    - Education: The No Child Left Behind Bill establishes high standards and accountability for all public schools. Educating every American to his or her full potential was part of the campaign's affirmative access goals.

    - Contracting: The President announced a Small Business Agenda earlier this year, which included promoting the unbundling of contracts so that small businesses that are not capable of bidding for entire projects are not disadvantaged. This is consistent with the campaign promise to advocate "breaking down government contracts to smaller sizes to encourage entrepreneurship in all communities" as a way to promote affirmative access.* Also, the President instructed the OMB Director to review contracting practices at relevant agencies to make sure their practices reflect a commitment to full and open competition.

    - Housing: The President announced a homeownership initiative targeted at increasing homeownership for minority families. It includes proposals to increase the supply of affordable homes for low and moderate income families, provide downpayment assistance and more educational assistance, and a "Homeownership Challenge" to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to help increase the number of minority homeowners by 5.5 million families by the end of the decade.

New Freedom Initiative

Community Living

- Olmstead: The President issued an Executive Order in June 2001 requiring Federal agencies to assist states and localities to implement the Supreme Court's Olmstead decision. Olmstead requires states to place qualified individuals with disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions, whenever treatment professionals determine that such placement is appropriate, the affected persons do not oppose such placement, and the state can reasonably accommodate the placement, taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with disabilities.
    - In response, key Federal agencies conducted the first comprehensive Federal review of barriers that prevent people with disabilities from living in the community and identified over 400 potential solutions to remove impediments to community-based living, which agencies have begun to implement.

REV_00159174

- Medicare Homebound Rules: During the ADA Anniversary event on July 26, the President announced a clarification with respect to Medicare recipients with disabilities who are considered "homebound." This change makes it clear that people with significant disabilities may leave their homes for occasional activities without losing their Medicare homebound services.

Education

- IDEA: The President requested the largest increases of any President in history for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) Part B State Grants program in his FY 2002 and FY 2003 budgets. The President signed legislation increasing by $1.2 billion in FY 2002 budget for the IDEA Part B State Grants program.

- Special Education Commission: The President issued Executive Order 13227 in October 2001 creating the Presidential Commission on Excellence in Special Education. The Commission issued its report to the President on July 1, 2002.

Technology

- Section 508: In June 2001, the President promised full enforcement of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act, which requires that all Federal government electronic and information technologies be accessible to individuals with disabilities. In response, the Administration collaborated to expedite Section 508 implementation, and produced extensive technical guidance and training materials that will be helpful to Federal agencies and others interested in accessible technologies.

Homeownership

- HUD Section 8: The President in June 2001 committed to revising the HUD Section 8 rent subsidy program to permit people with disabilities to use up to one year's worth of Section 8 rent subsidy vouchers to finance a down payment and purchase a home. HUD later implemented this pilot program.

Employment Integration

- Ticket to Work: The President promoted swift implementation of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act, which provides incentives for more than 7.5 million Americans receiving benefits under Federal disability programs to return to work.

Other

- Commission on Mental Health: In April 2002, the President announced the formation of the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health to conduct a comprehensive study of the Nation's mental health service delivery system.

- DisabilityInfo.gov: In August 2002, the President signed an Executive Memorandum creating a single source Federal web site dedicated to providing information that facilitates access to all the Federal web sites important to people with disabilities. This web site will be launched in October 2002.

- NFI Budget: The President secured funding for the vast majority of NFI programs in FY 2002 and requested a higher overall level of NFI-related funding in FY 2003. In the FY 2002 budget, the President requested $10.781 billion and received $10.872 billion. In the FY 2003 budget, he is seeking $1.39 billion over 2002 appropriations.

B. Outstanding Commitments

Civil Justice

Tort Reform

- The President promised during the campaign to "support meaningful, broad-based tort reform" to discourage frivolous lawsuits. Specific reforms on which no action has yet been taken are listed below.
  The following would require Congressional action:
  - "Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a 'Three Strikes, You're Out' rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims."
  - "Limit 'fishing expeditions' by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of 'junk science' by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony."
  - "Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute."
  - "Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity."
  - "Enact a 'Fair Settlement Rule,' requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees."
  - "Enact a 'Client's Bill of Rights' to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees."
  - "Require private lawyers who contract to represent states or municipalities to return any excessive fees to their government clients."

  The following could be accomplished administratively:
  - "Issue an Executive Order prohibiting Federal agencies from paying contingency fees."*

- Class Action Reform: The Administration sent a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) supporting the Class Action Fairness Act (H.R. 2341), which passed the House and is pending in the Senate. The bill would allow removal of cases to Federal court when the amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity. This is consistent with the campaign promise to "allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only minimal diversity exists."* Also, the bill establishes a consumer class action bill of rights, including notice of lawsuits in "plain English" and required judicial review of non-cash benefits like coupons.

- Medical Liability Reform: In July 2002, President proposed national minimum standards in healthcare cases, including limits on non-economic damages and punitive damages, proportional liability, and informing juries of other sources of reimbursement. He also supports legislation that would protect from use in lawsuits reports and information about efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care.

New Freedom Initiative

- Transportation Grants: The President requested $145 million in his 2002 and 2003 budgets for competitive grants through the Department of Transportation to provide alternative transportation services to give people with disabilities increased access to the job market, and to fund a pilot program to demonstrate innovative solutions for overcoming transportation barriers. This is the major NFI program that was not funded in FY 2002. The reason appears to be lack of available resources rather than any problem with the program itself. The President specifically referenced the need to fund this program during his ADA Anniversary White House event in July.

II. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Civil Justice

- Tort reform, including class action reform and medical malpractice liability reform, will not likely be resolved this year and will be an issue in the 108th Congress.

- Election reform will remain an issue for the 108th Congress if not resolved in conference this year.

C. Regulatory

Civil Justice

SBA Women Owned Small Business Program

- SBA Women Owned Small Business Program: Congress authorized (but did not mandate) the creation of a new set-aside program for women-owned small businesses to restrict certain federal contracts to bidding by women-owned businesses, which would be the first newly-created set-aside program in this Administration.
- The SBA proposed regulations to implement the program, but they were of questionable constitutionality and withdrawn in the OMB process. Currently, SBA is reevaluating a Congressionally-mandated draft study it had developed to justify the program. After the revised study is complete next year, the Administration will have to determine whether to implement the program.

LABOR POLICY

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

- Issuance of Executive Orders on Project Labor Agreements and Notification of "Beck" Rights.
- Creation of Office of 21st Century Workforce and appearance by President at 21st Century Workforce Summit (May 2001) to address challenges facing our workforce in the new economy, such as changing workplace demographics and technology.
- Issuance of DOL's ergonomics plan, which features issuance by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) of industry-specific guidelines for ergonomic workplace safety, instead of a far-reaching, onerous, one-size-fits all federal mandate. This action was consistent with the President's campaign statement: "As for OSHA's proposed ergonomics standards, I believe the federal government should provide workers and businesses with information about ergonomic-related injuries, but it should not impose far-reaching federal regulations that are neither clear nor rooted in strong science."
- Participation in record number of Health and Safety Partnerships. Health and Safety Partnerships between labor unions and the Department of Labor are at an all time high. In 2001, labor unions participated in 465 safety partnerships with DOL, including a partnership with the Laborers Union to address the anthrax threat.
- Proposal of "Back to Work Relief" package shortly after September 11, which culminated in the signing into law (early 2002) of a major element of that package -- extended unemployment benefits for thirteen weeks for all dislocated workers.
- Signing into law major expansion and reauthorization of Trade Adjustment Assistance program to provide for assistance for workers impacted by trade, including job training, financial assistance, and, for the first time, assistance with health insurance. Reauthorization of TAA was crucial to passage of Trade Promotion Authority, one of the President's major legislative priorities.
- Pennsylvania Mine Rescue – Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) played a major role in the rescue of the miners at Quecreek Mine in Pennsylvania.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Propose "Compensatory Time" amendment. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose to amend the FLSA to provide private sector employees the option . . . of taking comp time instead of overtime pay." President Bush has twice spoken in favor of comp time since taking office, but has not proposed actual legislation or pushed for enactment of existing legislation.
- Propose amendment to Occupational Safety and Health Act to ensure that private, residential homes will not be subject to OSHA regulations. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose legislation to amend the Occupational Safety and Health Act to prohibit the Act from being applied to employees who work at home." President Bush has not spoken about this proposal since taking office, but the Department of Labor issued a directive during the Clinton Administration committing to keep OSHA out of home offices, and the directive is still in effect.

- Seek to enact "Paycheck Protection" legislation as part of campaign finance reform legislation. The campaign finance reform fact sheet produced by Governor Bush's campaign pledged that "Governor Bush will accompany the ban on union and corporate soft money with legislation to enact "Paycheck Protection" preventing union bosses from directly spending roughly $300 million in union dues annually -- without members' permission – to support candidates of the bosses' choosing." A campaign finance reform bill was signed into law by the President earlier this year, and efforts to include a "Paycheck Protection" provision were defeated.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative (active legislative issues)

- Davis Bacon in the Homeland Security bill – The current Senate version of the bill creating the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) contains a provision applying Davis-Bacon to construction projects funded with assistance from the DHS. The House bill has no such provision. Some Senate Republicans plan to fight the provision in the Senate, but do not have the votes to win an up-or-down vote. Certain House Republican conferees will vigorously fight in conference to keep the provision out of the final bill.
- Workforce Investment Act Reauthorization – The legislation that authorizes the federally-funded, state-run job training system expires on September 30, 2003 and must be reauthorized before that date. DOL plans to have a legislative proposal ready to send to Congress by January 2003.
- Minimum Wage increase – Democrats will likely continue to try to increase the minimum wage by $1.50 over 18 months.
- Extended Unemployment Insurance Benefits – workers who lost their jobs right after September 11 have already exhausted even the additional 13 weeks of benefits granted by the economic stimulus bill, and the entire extended benefit program ends at the end of Calendar Year 2002. Democrats in both the House and the Senate are already pushing legislation to extend the program and create another 13-week extension. Another extension could cost as much as $11 billion.
- Genetic Discrimination Legislation – The President has endorsed legislation prohibiting employment discrimination based on genetic information, but there is competing legislation in both the House and the Senate. Congress, with technical assistance and encouragement from the Administration, is working on a compromise bill that both Houses could pass. The bills differ mainly over private rights of action and damages levels.
- Unemployment Insurance/Employment Services (UI/ES) Reform – The President's FY '03 budget proposed a comprehensive reform of the UI/ES system to cut employer taxes, return trust fund money to the states and gradually shift responsibility for all administrative costs to the states. The proposal is stalled in Congress.

REV_00159180

B. Regulatory

- Revision of Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) Regulations -- The Clinton Administration issued several regulations implementing the FMLA that have made it extremely difficult and onerous to implement. The Supreme Court recently struck down one such regulation as an improper interpretation of the statute. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) Regulations -- Certain "white-collar" professions are exempt from FLSA requirements, but the regulations defining these exemptions are vague, out-dated, and extremely difficult to administer. Employers and employees alike agree that these regulations need to be updated. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Regulations Governing Union Financial Disclosures – DOL plans to seek comment on proposed revisions in late November-December 2002. See discussion in new policy recommendation #2 below.

Drug Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

1. Presidential Events: Announcement of Director of National Drug Control Policy, May 10, 2001 ("announcement"); Signing Drug-Free Communities Act Reauthorization Bill, December 14, 2001 ("signing"); Remarks on the 2002 National Drug Control Strategy, February 12, 2002 ("strategy").
2. Stopping Use Before it Starts: Education and Community Action—Implementing the first priority of the National Drug Control Strategy has produced accomplishments across all sectors relevant to drug prevention: communities, schools, parents, and work places.
   a. Empower Community and Faith-Based Groups to Fight Drugs (campaign, announcement, signing, strategy)—On track to meet President's commitment to double community coalitions in five years. The Drug-Free Communities Act has been successfully reauthorized and appropriations are on track for FY02 and FY03. The program includes expansion in rural and under-served areas and the continued involvement of faith leaders.
   b. Ensure Students have Access to Drug-Free Schools (campaign, strategy)—No Child Left Behind reauthorized the Safe and Drug-Free Schools program, requiring accountability for grant recipients pursuant to the President's commitment. Department of Education has begun work on implementation of the new accountability with OMB and ONDCP. Additionally, ONDCP and Education have produced and are distributing a guide to drug testing for schools.
   c. Mobilize Parents in the War on Drugs (campaign, announcement, strategy)—ONDCP has used the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign to reach parents and increase their efficacy in dealing with their kids on drug abuse. Additionally, we have worked to develop a parent drug corps. Although the Appropriations Committees appear poised to deny our request for a second year, we have provided grants from existing authority at SAMHSA to support the efforts of non-profits to develop a parent drug corps in several states.
   d. Promote Drug-Free Workplaces (campaign)—The Administration continues to implement a small business drug-free workplace program, although at a lower funding level than the President originally committed ($3M per year v. $5M per year). Additionally, the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has launched the @Work program, which enrolls corporations in a program to provide drug-free workplace materials through existing corporate infrastructure (e.g., intranets, company newsletters).
3. Healing America's Drug Users: Getting Treatment Resources Where They Are Needed—Health and Human Services is on track to meet the budgetary commitment of an additional $1.6B in treatment resources and doubling the budget for the National Institute on Drug Abuse over five years. Department of Justice has met the President's commitment to drug-free federal prisons with an outstanding array of anti-drug programs that provide a great example for state correctional systems. Additionally, in the Residential Substance Abuse Treatment (RSAT) program, which provides funds for treatment to States for use in correctional settings, we requested a $10M increase in FY02, and received $7M, for a total of $70M. In FY03, we requested an additional $7M.

4. Disrupting the Market: Attacking the Economic Basis of the Drug Trade
   a. Secure and Defend our Borders (campaign)—The Administration has provided $100M over the first two years of a $250M over 5 year commitment to reimburse local governments for prosecuting drug cases on the southwest border.
   b. Clean up Meth labs (campaign)—The campaign paper committed $100M over 5 years at DEA for Meth lab clean up, and the funds were provided through the retooled COPS program.
5. Fighting the War on Terror (signing, strategy)—The President has effectively linked the issues of drugs and terror in his public statements, demonstrating that the purchase of illegal drugs funds terrorist activity and violence. The National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has used this theme in a group of ads released at the Super Bowl and a second group to be released in September.
6. Oppose legalization (announcement)—The President came out strongly against drug legalization and Director Walters has visited and will continue to visit the three states that have legalization ballot initiatives this fall—Arizona, Ohio, and Nevada.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Healing America's Drug Users—While the Administration has made substantial progress on providing treatment, particularly in the budget, some of the President's policy commitments have not yet been met.
   a. Treatment—While we have met the funding commitment, we are still working to fully implement three policy changes: (1) making state grant awards performance-based, and (2) ensuring that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups, (3) targeting resources to the greatest need. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Federal funds will be provided to support drug treatment programs that prove demonstrated results. And faith-based and community-based organizations will be fully eligible as well, provided they can demonstrate the same effectiveness.")
   b. Drug Courts—We have not fully met our funding commitment to the drug courts program, increasing funding by $50M over five years, nor have we made policy changes to improve drug courts. We did not request an increase in FY02 maintaining the request at the base $50M. In the FY03 budget, we requested an increase of $2M. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Drug Courts: Increase funding by $50 million over five years for drug courts, share best practices, and hold them accountable for results. Under a Bush Administration, the Department of Justice will support local drug courts that combine drug testing with effective monitoring.")
2. Stopping Use Before It Starts—Although we have made progress in ensuring that students have access to drug-free schools, there remains important implementation work to do on No Child Left Behind and we have not increased funding for Safe and Drug Free Schools, despite a campaign commitment to add $20M/year for five years. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Work to make all schools

drug-free: Increase funding for the Safe and Drug-Free Schools program by $100 million over five years, but require that states and districts measure and report drug use and demonstrate effective use of federal funds.")

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. ONDCP Reauthorization—ONDCP's organic statute, including authorizations for several of its programmatic responsibilities.
2. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) Reauthorization—HHS prevention and treatment programs, including the principle drug-related block grant.
3. Coverdell Drug-Free Workplace Reauthorization—Grants to support technical assistance and services for small business drug-free workplace programs.
4. Faith Bill (if not completed in '02)—Provisions allowing faith-based organizations to receive federal assistance for treatment and prevention services.
5. Department of Homeland Security Authorization (if not completed in '02)—Many counter-drug law enforcement functions are responsibilities of the new DHS.
6. Department of Justice Reauthorization (if not completed in '02)—includes most drug enforcement agencies, drug courts program.

C. Regulatory—None.

Environment and Natural Resource Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

The first 18 months of this Administration has been marked by the fulfillment of a wide range of commitments in the environmental and natural resource areas, as outlined below. Two Presidential Initiatives – Clear Skies and Healthy Forests – represent priority, "signature," policies that will require strong and coordinated, multi-agency efforts to achieve Congressional approval and subsequent implementation.

1. Brownfields Cleanup and Restoration (campaign commitment): On January 11, 2002, President Bush signed historic legislation that will facilitate cleanup and redevelopment of contaminated industrial sites – "brownfields" – improving the environment, protecting public health, creating jobs, and revitalizing communities. The President's '03 budget proposal provides $200 million – twice the '02 level of funding – for EPA's brownfields program, $171 million of which is for grants for states and local communities.
2. Clear Skies Initiative (campaign commitment): On February 14, 2002, President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced by Senator Smith and Congressmen Tauzin and Barton. The Initiative, contrary to the campaign commitment, does not include carbon dioxide which is now addressed in the President's climate change policy.
3. Global Climate Change (campaign commitment): The Administration is partially on track to meet this commitment through the announcement of three initiatives focused on science, technology, and mitigation. On June 11, 2001, the President announced a new commitment to develop a science-based climate change policy (Climate Change Research Initiative), and a new commitment to funding research on "breakthrough technologies" (National Climate Change Technology Initiative) that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. On February 14, 2002, the President announced a new approach to climate change that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. A range of domestic and international initiatives accompanied the February 14 announcement. The National Climate Change Technology Initiative has not evolved sufficiently, (see Outstanding Issues Section).
   a. Created the Climate Change Research Initiative (1st-year commitment): The objective of this initiative is to promote a vision focused on the effective use of scientific knowledge in policy and management decisions, and continued evaluation of management strategies and choices. To meet this commitment to climate research, the U.S. will spend $1.7 billion in FY'03 for basic research on climate change, $40 million of which is dedicated to leverage other funding to address major gaps in scientific understanding including the carbon cycle and the role of black soot, aerosols, and clouds.

b. Climate Change Mitigation Policy (2nd-year commitment): The President announced a new strategy that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. To help meet this commitment, the President directed the Secretary of Energy to substantially improve the registry to enhance measurement accuracy, reliability and verifiability of voluntary emissions reductions and to give transferable credits to companies that can show real emissions reductions. Numerous other domestic and international initiatives will help meet this goal.

4. Energy Project Streamlining (1st-year commitment): Executive Order #13212 was signed on May 18, 2001. The White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining was charged with conducting a top-to-bottom review of federal procedures in order to find ways to expedite the review of permits for projects that will increase the production, transmission, and conservation of energy, while maintaining safety, public health, and environmental protections.
5. Restoring the Everglades (campaign commitment): To fulfill a campaign pledge, President Bush and Florida Governor Jeb Bush, in January 2002, signed an agreement that ensures adequate water supplies are available to support the 30-year Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan (CERP). This agreement further bolsters the Bush Administration's strong support for the 30-year, $7.8 billion CERP, the most comprehensive and ambitious ecosystem restoration project ever undertaken in the United States. The President's FY'03 budget proposal includes $245 million for Everglades restoration.
6. Protecting our National Wildlife Refuges: The President's FY'03 budget proposes a record $376 million, up $57 million from FY'02, for our National Wildlife Refuges as we prepare to celebrate the system's 100-year anniversary on March 14, 2003. Opportunity for White House participation and profile in this celebration. The Department of the Interior's Centennial Campaign will improve resource conservation, visitor programs, and facilities on wildlife refuges nationwide and increase visibility for wildlife refuges by strengthening and expanding partnerships.
7. Landowner Incentive Program (campaign commitment): Fulfilling a campaign pledge, President Bush has created new landowner incentives and private stewardship grant programs, which Congress funded at $50 million. The President's FY'03 Budget includes an additional $10 million – for a total of $60 million – for these programs. The Department of Interior also is seeking $100 million for a new Cooperative Conservation Initiative to protect and conserve the environment through partnerships that will tap the ingenuity, imagination, and innovative spirit of American citizens. Challenge grants will be awarded competitively to landowners, environmental groups, land-user groups, communities and local and state governments. In addition, the President signed legislation temporarily ending the estate tax, which will allow more lands to stay in family ownership and prevent habitat fragmentation.
8. Oppose Breaching Dams in the Pacific Northwest (campaign commitment): The Administration continues to uphold this position. The Administration has supported local efforts to restore salmon runs and provided $20 million in funding for local salmon recovery projects.
9. Conservation Title of the Farm Bill: The Administration worked with the Congressional conference committee to ensure a forward-looking farm policy that more than doubles the funding to enhance conservation and environmental stewardship on private lands. On May 13, 2002, President Bush signed the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act into law, which will add $17.1 billion over the next ten years to existing programs.

10. Klamath Basin Cabinet-level Panel (1st-year commitment): On March 1, 2002, the President established a Cabinet-level panel to recommend within 18 months ways to enhance water quality and quantity in Oregon's Klamath River Basin. President Bush named Secretaries Norton, Veneman, Evans, and Chairman Connaughton to head the panel.
11. Tropical Forest Conservation Act (campaign commitment): On track to meet the President's TFCA commitments. Agreements with Belize, El Salvador, and Bangladesh, and the Philippines have been completed. The President's FY '03 budget request of $40 million for "debt for nature" agreements with developing countries nearly triples funding for this successful program, which preserves species habitat and sequesters greenhouse gases.
12. Offshore Drilling (campaign commitment): On track to support position on a moratorium against offshore drilling in Florida. The Administration has taken active steps to ensure no drilling will occur off the coast of Florida, in two distinct actions announced in May, 2002, (lease buy back at Destin Dome and purchase of drilling rights in the Everglades). The Administration also adjusted Lease Sale 181 to further ensure there would be no drilling offshore in Florida. Resolving controversial leases along California coastline could present opportunity; complex litigation, however, is now in process.
13. Fully Fund the Global Environment Facility (2nd-year commitment): The 2002 U.S. pledge includes $107.5 million per year for each of the four years of the replenishment period, plus another $70 million in the fourth year if the GEF meets a set of performance measurements agreed to by donors. In addition, the Administration is requesting $70.3 million annually for the next three years to pay off U.S. arrears accumulated during the previous Administration. The GEF is the primary international institution for transferring energy and sequestration technologies to the developing world under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC).
14. Eliminating Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs): To protect the American people and the world from the dangers of 12 chemicals that persist in the environment long after their use, President Bush announced the United States' support for the Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants. Governor Whitman signed the treaty, which bans or restricts the production, use, and/or release of 12 chemicals that have been linked to numerous adverse effects in humans and animals, including cancer, central nervous system damage, reproductive disorders, and immune system disruption. The Administration sent the treaty to the U.S. Senate for ratification in April 2002.
15. Forest Health Initiative (2nd-year commitments): On August 22, 2002, the President announced a new initiative that will significantly reduce the damage caused by catastrophic wildfires, by removing unnecessary regulatory obstacles that hinder active forest management to improve forest health. He called upon Congress to work with his Administration to pass legislation that addresses the unhealthy forest crisis by expediting procedures for forest thinning and restoration projects.

16. Northwest Forest Plan: On August 22, 2002 the President also emphasized the promise of the 1994 Northwest Forest Plan to ensure sustainable forest management and appropriate timber production. On September 12, 2002, a House bill was introduced to implement the Administration's strategy.
17. World Summit on Sustainable Development (WSSD): The WSSD was successful in four major areas. First, the Plan of Action and Head of State Declaration reaffirmed the importance of good national governance, national investment in sound economic and social policies and the shared responsibilities between developed and developing countries as a basis for development. As such, the WSSD reinforced the new "compact for development" launched at the Monterrey Financing for Development Conference. Second, the WSSD acknowledged the importance of partnerships among governments, private sector and non-government organizations as an importance new means of implementing the WSSD action Plan. Over 220 partnerships (with $235 million in resources) were identified in advance off the Summit, and around 60 partnerships were announced during the Summit by a variety of countries. Third, the Action Plan focused on obtaining concrete results, many with specific timetables and achievable targets. Fourth, the US led and announced partnerships in four major areas: $970 million in investments over 3 years on water and sanitation projects, largely in Africa; $43 million in 2003 to leverage an estimated $400 million in clean energy for rural and poor communities; $90 million in 2003 for sustainable agricultural programs; $53 million for forest protection in the Congo Basin. The U.S. also reaffirmed its commitment of $2.3 billion through 2003 on health and combating HIV/AIDS and infectious diseases.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Fully Fund the Land and Water Conservation Fund (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to fully fund DOI's Land and Water Conservation Fund at $900m. In our FY'02 and 03 budgets, the Administration significantly increased LWCF funding. The FY'03 budget proposed for LWCF was fully funded at $900m, although it did so by combining existing non-LWCF grant programs with LWCF grant programs. The Interior appropriation bills in Congress are not adhering to that budgeted amount, however, because certain programs, such as a new $100 million Cooperative Conservation Initiative, are not funded in the pending legislation. The Administration faces two challenges in FY04. First, we must devise a better strategy to fully fund the Cooperative Conservation Initiative. Second, certain environmental groups will be disappointed unless there is a large increase in funding for federal land acquisition. Thus, we should devise an outreach approach with groups supportive of the state grant programs that are being increased.
2. Protecting National Parks (campaign commitment): In a campaign pledge, then-Governor Bush committed to seek funds for National Parks to eliminate within five years—by 2006—a $4.9 billion maintenance backlog identified in a rough 1996 National Park Service estimate. Although the 1996 survey was not a true survey of the actual maintenance backlog—because it also included some cyclic maintenance needs and "wish-list" items—the Administration's budgets have attempted to meet that $4.9b goal. Facilities maintenance constitutes $2.2 billion of the $4.9b total, and, if current funding commitments continue, the Administration will meet that goal. Road maintenance and construction constitutes $2.7billion of the $4.9b goal. That portion will be reauthorized and started but not completed by 2006 because the funding stream will be derived from the next transportation bill over the FY04-09 timeframe. Moreover, to meet the road construction goal, the Administration will need to prioritize that funding choice over certain other choices in the transportation bill such as funding for National Forest roads and highway safety.

3. National Climate Change Technology Initiative (1st-year commitment): Promotes funding research on "breakthrough technologies" that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. This program has not evolved sufficiently in interagency deliberations. While the Administration has made substantial budgetary commitments, some of the related programmatic commitments have not been adequately agreed upon or articulated.
4. President's Award for Private Stewardship (campaign commitment): Establish this award to fulfill the President's campaign promise. A draft Executive Order is currently being reviewed.
5. Missouri River (campaign commitment): The President committed the Corps of Engineers to consult with the Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) under the Endangered Species Act to develop a change in the Master Manual that governs the Corps' operation of the Missouri River. Its release is anticipated in 2003.
6. Environmental Compliance at Federal Facilities (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to require all federal facilities to meet all environmental standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Clear Skies: President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced in Congress.
2. EPA Cabinet Elevation: A Bill has been introduced and the President has expressed his support.
3. Energy Bill: The Energy Bill includes tax incentives for renewable energy, cogeneration, and new technology. Also included in the Bill is a significant climate change title that the Administration opposes. While it will not likely survive the conference, legislative activity on this issue is very likely in 2003-2004.
4. Forest Health Initiative: The Administration is pursuing administrative and legislative reforms to implement the President's August 2002 initiative.
5. Commission on Oceans Policy: The Commission will be issuing its final report and recommendations to the President and Congress in March 2003, at which time implementing action will likely be required of the Administration, in close consultation with Congress. CEQ and other agencies are providing ongoing support to the Commission, the President, and Congress in this important policy issue.

C. Regulatory

a. New Source Review: EPA and DOE forwarded a report to the President, in accordance with the National Energy Plan, recommending changes to the Clean Air Act New Source Review program. On June 13, EPA released a policy which outlined the proposed changes to the rules. The changes are in two parts: (1) rules that we will finalize that were originally proposed by the Clinton Administration. These deal with regulatory flexibility incentives for pollution control equipment and two accounting changes. The first will provide a more rigorous baseline calculation against which potential emission increases are measured. The second will require emission levels to be determined on an 'actual emissions compared to future actual emissions' basis. And (2) a proposed rule that will clarify what projects will be excluded from the New Source Review permitting process because they are routine maintenance, repair or replacement. OMB is currently reviewing both of these rule packages and intends to publish them in the near future.
b. Total Maximum Daily Load (TMDL): In response to concerns expressed by Congress, the National Academy of Sciences, and others, EPA Administrator Whitman extended the effective date for the controversial TMDL rule through April 2003. The TMDL program will continue to operate under rules issued in 1985 and 1991, while the Administrator develops a more flexible and effective approach to TMDLs. The Administration will adopt rules to restore polluted waterbodies that are based on sound science and which will better integrate the several tools in the Clean Water Act to encourage clean-up actions even in advance of TMDLs.
c. Combined Animal Feeding Operation (CAFO): EPA is currently working with State agencies to determine whether drinking water sources are impacted by upstream agricultural sources, and then advising on development and implementation of programs to address CAFO's and other sources.
d. Wetlands guidance and rulemaking: This fall EPA and the Corps of Engineers will initiate advance notice of proposed rulemaking to solicit public comment on issues relating to the extent of federal jurisdiction over waters of the United States, including tributaries and adjacent wetlands, for purposes of regulation under the Clean Water Act and related federal laws. The rulemaking is in response to a 2001 United States Supreme Court decision which limited federal jurisdiction over certain isolated intrastate isolated waters but which raised questions regarding jurisdiction over other waters as well.
e. DOE regulations for voluntary greenhouse gas reduction registry: As a part of the Climate Change Strategy, the Administration is committed to substantially improving the current voluntary emission reduction registration program under section 1605(b) of the 1992 Energy Policy Act and provide transferable credits. Secretaries Evans, Abraham, Veneman, and EPA Administrator Whitman made recommendations in a letter to the President in July 2002, to start a stakeholder process in the next six months; finalization of new standards by January 2004.
f. Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE): A key recommendation of the President's National Energy Policy directed the Secretary to undertake an immediate review of vehicle fuel efficiency standards. The Administration is dedicated to a responsibly crafted CAFE standard that is based on sound science, and takes into account passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleet of automobiles. New standards should extend to include light trucks, vans, and SUV's.

g. Renewable fuels regulations: The energy bill will likely contain language that will require regulatory changes in the federal reformulated gasoline program. The final conference report may very likely repeal the current 2% oxygenate requirement, ban MTBE (a widely used additive to bring down toxics and criteria pollutants), and impose an ethanol mandate. There may be new opt in/opt out language for states as well, with related regulatory activities checked by legislation.

h. Transportation Streamlining: DOT is chairing a "Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force" that will report to the President through the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality. The task force will formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms that enable each agency required by law to conduct environmental reviews with respect to high - priority infrastructure projects to ensure completion in a timely and environmentally responsible manner. The task force will complete a report to the President once a year.

i. Improving the implementation of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA): The NEPA Task Force is examining how federal agencies can improve NEPA implementation and is currently gathering and assessing public comments. The Task Force plans to submit its report on making NEPA more effective and efficient to CEQ by the end of the calendar year. Until the Task Force reviews all of the comments, it is premature to conclude whether the report will include recommendations to update or revise sections of the CEQ Regulations for Implementing the Procedural Provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act (40 CFR Parts 1500-1508).

j. Endangered Species Act: The Department of the Interior is improving incentive and Section 7 consultation tools available under the Endangered Species Act. Scheduled to be completed in 2003, these changes include greater private landowner protections under safe harbor agreements, extension of safe-harbor-like protections to the Fish & Wildlife Service's Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program, and advancement of conservation banking as an incentive-based tool for listed species mitigation.

k. Grazing: The Department of the Interior is developing options for greater citizen involvement in the administration of BLM grazing permits and the building and sustaining of working landscapes on public lands.

l. National Monuments: The Department of the Interior is developing a range of options for expanded citizen involvement in the stewardship of BLM National Monuments. Those options include collaborative and citizen-based participation in development of monument land-use plans.

m. Dioxin Reassessment: EPA will soon send a reassessment of the health effects of dioxin exposure. It will reconfirm EPA's position that dioxin is a toxic chemical that can cause both cancer and non-cancer adverse health effects. The reassessment also identifies animal fats in the commercial food supply (beef, pork, poultry, dairy, eggs, and fish) as the primary route of human exposure. The IWG will review the reassessment and determine whether the substantial questions about the health effects warrant a review by the National Academy of Sciences. The IWG, through the Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, have already engaged the National Academy of Sciences to examine the potential trade-offs between the benefits of a balanced diet and the potential risk of dioxin exposure. The Academy is also examining potential opportunities for reducing dioxin input into the food supply.

II. Looking Back: Review of 2002

A. Achievements.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps (1/30/02): During his State of the Union, the President announced his creation by Executive Order of the USA Freedom Corps as a Coordinating Council and office to be housed at the White House. The Mission of the USA Freedom Corps is to foster a culture of service, citizenship and responsibility.

- Launched Citizen Corps Effort (2/1/02): More than 50,000 individuals have signed up online to participate in the newly created Citizen Corps. They join hundreds of thousands of individuals already volunteering at the local level with Citizen Corps-supported programs including CERT, Neighborhood Watch, and Volunteers in Police Service. More than 160 communities around the country have officially registered Citizen Corps Councils to coordinate local emergency prevention, preparation and response volunteer activity.
  - ✓ Launched Citizen Corps Citizens Preparedness Guidebook (2/1/02): The guidebook produced by the National Crime Prevention Council with support from the Department of Justice and the USA Freedom Corps, gives Americans guidance on how to prepare for disasters and prevent crime in our homes, in our neighborhoods, at work, at the airport, in places of worship, and in public spaces.
  - ✓ Launched Neighborhood Watch Expansion (3/6/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the expansion of Neighborhood Watch with the National Sheriffs Association. The launch included a new website, how-to materials for local communities and a public service ad campaign.
  - ✓ Launched Volunteers in Police Service (5/30/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the Volunteers in Police Service (VIPS) program with the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP). The goal of VIPS is to provide support for resource-constrained law enforcement agencies by tapping civilian volunteers to supplement their community's law enforcement professionals in order to free up officers for frontline duty. The number of registered VIPS programs has doubled since the launch.
  - ✓ Launched First Medical Reserve Corps Grants (9/02): On July 19, 2002, HHS announced the availability of $2 million in grants, during FY02, to help local officials develop volunteer Medical Reserve corps units. The MRC will strengthen local communities' capacities to respond to disasters and emergencies in the community, as well as strengthen the local public health infrastructure.
  - ✓ Launched Community Emergency Response Team Initiative (2/1/02): The Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) program helps train people to be better prepared to respond to emergency situations in their communities. CERT members support first responders in emergencies, provide assistance to victims, organize spontaneous volunteers at a disaster site, and collect disaster intelligence for first responders. Over the next two years, CERT aims to double the number of participants, with over 400,000 individuals completing the 18 plus hours of training and funding was secured in the supplemental budget to achieve goals.

- ✓ Appointed State Citizen Corps Contacts (6/02): 50 governors have assigned a state point of contact for Citizen Corps. From 7/31-8/1 these state contacts participated in a FEMA conference with select federal agencies, local governments and experts from volunteer agencies.

- Launched Business Strengthening America (6/13/02): In June, President Bush met with business leaders who are working on a self-directed effort to get businesses involved in supporting and promoting volunteer service by their employees and customers. Financial services companies, grocers, hospitality companies and entertainment and media businesses are among those who have already made major commitments to support volunteer service in response to the President's "Call to Service." These companies have announced new policies, including paid leave time for employees to participate in volunteer service, sponsorship of volunteer projects involving employees, and the creation of resources to engage customers in volunteer service, and working to make a person's Record of Service relevant to getting a job.

- Launched Public Service Announcement Campaign (7/30/02): The advertising campaign includes television, print, radio, and web products. President Bush appears in each of the ads, saying, "When you help your neighbors, you help your Nation. Everyone can do something. "New York Yankee Mariano Rivera appears in English and Spanish language versions of a radio and television ad, actress Angie Harmon appears in a second television and radio ad, and former Senators Robert Dole and John Glenn appear together in a third radio and television ad.

  The USA Freedom Corps worked with the Corporation for National and Community Service and the Ad Council, with the support of the Walt Disney Company and Department of Justice, to develop the campaign featuring usafreedomcorps.gov as a way to get involved. In addition the USA Freedom Corps is the fulfillment mechanism at the end of three Entertainment Council television commercials and movie trailers that have been running nationwide since May.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network and Redesigned USA Freedom Corps Website (7/30/02): The USA Freedom Corp website is the concrete representation of the USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network – a massive public-private enterprise on the web that enables volunteers to search according to their interests and their geographic location from the largest clearinghouse of volunteer service opportunities ever assembled – 50,000 organizations around the country and the world, with millions of service opportunities

  The search function draws upon well established non-profit organizations, including America's Promise, the National Mentoring Partnership, the Points of Light Foundation, SERVEnet, the United Way, and VolunteerMatch, as well as the federal government agencies that are a part of the USA Freedom Corps Coordinating Council – AmeriCorps, Senior Corps, Peace Corps and Citizen Corps. The Department of the Interior's one-stop registration center for federal, state and local government agencies that need and use volunteers can also be accessed through the new search function.

- Launched American History, Civics and Service Initiative (9/17/02):
  - ✓ Launched NEH "We the People" initiative and President announced significant, ongoing investment in the program through the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), including competitive grant programs and other public programs to support the teaching of American History and Civics.
  - ✓ Launched "Our Documents" initiative of the National Archives and Records Administration, in collaboration with National History Day, the Corporation for National and Community Service and the USA Freedom Corps. Through web materials, a lesson plan sourcebook, and teacher workshops, 100 American milestone documents from the holdings of the National Archives will be made available to teachers and students.
  - ✓ Announced that the "We the People" Forum on American History, Civics, and Service, to be cosponsored by the NEH, the Corporation for National and Community Service, and the U.S. Department of Education, will be held in February 2003. The purpose of the forum is to call public attention to the need for more and better American history, civics, and service and draw attention to promising practices in history, civics, and student service, as well as innovative initiatives.

- Launch of Students in Service to America Initiative (8/31/02): The President encouraged America's students to begin a service activity or project this school year and introduced the new Students in Service to America guidebook for educators to help them enlist America's young people in service to their communities and develop the habits of civic participation, responsibility, and service. More than 130,000 public and private elementary and secondary schools, homeschools, and after-school programs around the country received copies of the Students in Service to America guidebook, a CD-ROM, posters and other teaching and community resources. In addition, CNCS dedicated the time and talents of 25,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps volunteers to support student service activities and service-learning programs.

- Release of new Americorps Regulations (6/02): In June, CNCS issued final AmeriCorps regulations implementing a portion of the reforms called for in the President's principles, including: greater flexibility in the use of AmeriCorps members by nonprofit organizations; an explicit statement of the eligibility of religious organizations for AmeriCorps grants; reductions in administrative burdens on grantees; strengthening the prohibition on political activities; and making the education award more flexible for use by seniors and others.

- Awarding of CNCS Homeland Security Grants (7/02): In July, CNCS in concert with the USA Freedom Corps and the Homeland Security Council, awarded its first homeland security grants totaling $10.3 million to support more than 37,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps and other volunteers in 43 non-profit and public agencies in 26 states and the District of Columbia to:

- ✓ use volunteers to develop and carry out emergency response plans;
- ✓ expand Citizen Corps programs related to crime and health; and
- ✓ develop public health strategies for responding to emergencies.

- Freedom Corps Greeters (ongoing): On more than 60 trips around the country, President Bush has met with volunteers who are answering his "Call to Service" to highlight their volunteer service as an example of the dedication he is hoping to instill in all Americans through the USA Freedom Corps.

- Response to President's Call to Service (ongoing):
  - ✓ VolunteerMatch, one of the groups matching volunteers with opportunities through the USA Freedom Corps website, reports that more people are serving. The group measured a 72 percent increase in matching during the first six months of 2002 after USA Freedom Corps was launched, compared to the same period in 2001.
  - ✓ The number of potential AmeriCorps members is growing, with a 95 percent increase in online applications compared with pre-State of the Union levels.
  - ✓ Potential volunteers with Senior Corps, another CNCS program, have contributed to a 60 percent jump in web visitors since January.
  - ✓ More than 76,000 potential Peace Corps Volunteers have requested applications since the President's State of the Union address - a 40 percent increase over the same period in 2001. 34 countries have requested Peace Corps volunteers since State of the Union.
  - ✓ More than 160 Citizen Corps Councils have been created around the country.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Federal Program Service Opportunities: Continue to expand and strengthen federal service programs, including the Peace Corps, Citizen Corps, AmeriCorps, and Senior Corps, including official launch of Medical Reserve Corps and Terrorism Information and Prevention System programs.

- Citizen Service Act: The President sent his "Principles and Reforms for a Citizen Service Act" to Congress on April 9, 2002. HR 4854, the Citizen Service Act of 2002, was introduced by Rep. Pete Hoekstra (R-MI) and Rep. Tim Roemer (D-IN) on May 24, 2002 and was reported by voice vote by the full House Education and the Workforce Committee on June 20, 2002. The bill awaits House Floor action. Senators Gregg and Kennedy are expected to introduce a companion bill shortly. The bill would reauthorize for five years the programs administered by CNCS and implement the following reforms, consistent with the President's policies:
  - ✓ Support and encourage greater engagement of citizens in volunteering;
  - ✓ Make Federal funds more responsive to state and local needs;
  - ✓ Make Federal support more accountable and effective; and
  - ✓ Provide greater assistance to community organizations, both secular and faith-based.
- Corporation for National and Community Service Appropriations: CNCS and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the $296 million increase from appropriated levels the President requested for AmeriCorps, Senior Corps and Learn and Serve America for FY 2003.

REV_00159196

- Peace Corps Reauthorization: Even though Peace Corps is fully authorized through FY 2003, because of heightened interest in the Peace Corps as a result of the President's new policy, Senator Dodd and Representative Kirk have already introduced bipartisan bills in the Senate and House, respectively, to reauthorize the Peace Corps and to meet the President's commitment to double the number of Peace Corps Volunteers over the next five years.

- Peace Corps Appropriations: Peace Corps and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the Presidents full funding request of $320 million for FY 2003. This is the amount requested in the President's budget to expand the number of volunteers from less than 7,000 today to 8,200 in FY 2003, on the path to nearly doubling the number of volunteers by FY 2007.

- Citizen Corps Appropriations: The Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Department of Justice, the Department of Health and Human Services and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the President's funding request of $195 million for FY 2003 to support Citizen Corps initiatives, including Citizen Corps Councils, CERT, Neighborhood Watch and Medical Reserve Corps.

- Civics: Commitment made on September 17 for "significant ongoing" investment in American History and civics education. Internal discussions have revolved around $100 million over three years starting in the 2004 budget. There has not been consensus reached in the Administration on total or mix of new vs. redirected funds.

B. Legislative

Health Care Policy

II. LOOKING BACK: REVIEW OF '01 AND '02

A. Achievements (See also NEC Health Care Policy)..

1. Presidential Events:

- March 21, 2001-- Patients' Bill of Rights (strategy). The President addressed the American College of Cardiology to announce his principles for patients' rights legislation as Congress began debating the issue.
- May 21, 2001 –Global Fund to Fight AIDS (announcement). The President announced the United States' commitment to supporting the new Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria.
- August 9, 2001--Stem Cell Research Policy (announcement). Speaking from the Crawford Ranch during a nation-wide television broadcast, the President announced his decision to prohibit federal funding of research on stem cells derived from live human embryos.
- December 6, 2001--Director of the National Cancer Institute (announcement). The President announced the appointment of Dr. von Eschenbach to head the NCI and discussed four principles that will guide research efforts there.
- February 11, 2002-- Health Care Agenda (strategy). Speaking at the University of Wisconsin Medical School, the President enumerated his entire health care agenda as part of a vision of a patient controlled quality health care system.
- March 26, 2002-- Director of the National Institutes of Health and the Surgeon General (announcement). The President announced the nominees to be two major health care officials. As NIH Director, Dr. Zerhouni was tasked with the issues of the human genome, stem cell research, and biodefense. Dr. Carmona was nominated to use the post of Surgeon General to promote preventive health and to reduce the incidence of diabetes and obesity.
- April 10, 2002-- Cloning Ban (strategy). In response to Senate debate, the President defined the need for a comprehensive ban on human cloning and announced his support of legislation sponsored by Senators Brownback and Landrieu.
- April 29, 2002-- Improving Mental Health Care (strategy). The President participated in a local mental health round table with Senator Domenici and then addressed health care providers at the University of New Mexico Medical Campus. The President signed an EO establishing the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, and announced that he would work with Congress to pass federal mental health parity legislation in 2002.
- June 19, 2002-- New Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative (announcement). The President announced a new $500 million International Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative that seeks to prevent the transmission of HIV/AIDS from mothers to infants and to improve health care delivery in Africa and the Caribbean.
- June 20, 2002-- HealthierUS Initiative (announcement). The President launched a new initiative to draw upon the resources of the federal government to promote the value of fitness in reducing the incidence and severity of chronic health conditions.

- July 25, 2002-- Proposal to Address Medical Liability Crisis (strategy). In response to a new HHS study highlighting the higher costs and lower quality of care resulting from the broken liability system, President Bush proposed major legislative reforms to address the medical liability crisis.

2. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – The President negotiated House-passed legislation that fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights that would "provide patient protections, like those passed in Texas, to ensure quality of care from health providers. Texas is recognized as having one of the strongest patients' bill of rights in the country."* It has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. The bill puts medical decisions in the hands of physicians, instead of insurance companies; provides independent, binding external medical review for denials of care, and gives patients meaningful legal remedies who have been harmed by an HMO's denial of medical care.

3. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:
   - Community Health Centers (CHCs) - The Administration's FY 2002 and 2003 budgets follow through on the President's campaign promise to double the number of people served in CHCs by creating 1,200 new and expanded CHC sites over a five-year period. CHCs provide critical primary health care services to uninsured individuals regardless of their ability to pay. There are areas in the country that still do not have access to basic health care services and these new resources will help new and existing CHCs to serve a greater number of people.

4. Supporting Medical Research:
   - National Institutes of Health (NIH) – The President promised to support medical research by working with Congress to enact a record increase for the NIH, and he will have fulfilled his campaign promise to double the NIH budget from the 1998 level of $13.6 billion when the proposed 2003 budget of $27.3 billion is enacted. The NIH is the world's preeminent and largest medical research organization. NIH research has already led to many medical breakthroughs, including lifesaving vaccines, new cancer therapies, human genome sequencing and effective drugs for the treatment of mental illness. Completing this historic increase furthers NIH's efforts to improve the prevention, detection, and treatment of the diseases and conditions that affect the lives of all Americans.
   - Stem Cell Research – The President announced his decision to allow medical research using embryonic stem cells while still preserving the value and sanctity of human life. This policy permits federal funding of research using certain existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but does not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional live human embryos. Scientists will explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying illnesses. As part of the decision, the President created a new President's Council on Bioethics, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

5. Combating HIV/AIDS
   - Global HIV/AIDS: Between the Global Fund and the MTCT Initiative, the 2003 budget for global HIV/AIDS activities will be 82% higher than the amount provided by Congress in 2001.
   - Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – The President became the first world leader to accept a new challenge to combat global AIDS by committing the U.S. to financially supporting the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria. The U.S. remains the single largest donor to this multilateral fund – contributing $500 million through FY '03. The United States continues to be actively involved in influencing the structure, development and implementation of the Global Fund. By October of 2002, over $600 million worth of grants in over thirty countries will have been awarded, and disbursement of these funds is imminent pending the finalization of management and evaluation controls. Continued support by the U.S. is key to the long-term success of the Global Fund.
   - Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative – The President announced a major initiative to help stop the spread of HIV from mothers to their children. This long-term program of providing treatment and improving basic health infrastructure in the hardest hit countries will be initially funded at $500 million. The initiative is being implemented through a unique partnership between the Department of Health and Human Services and the Agency for International Development and will provide a new model for foreign assistance generally, and, in particular, global health assistance.

6. Other:
   - Medical Records Privacy – The President ushered in unprecedented protections for every American relating to their private medical information. The federal privacy regulation, which will be in effect by April 2003, protects medical records and other personal health information maintained by certain health care providers, hospitals, health plans, health insurers, and health care clearinghouses. The rule guarantees patients access to their medical records, gives them more control over how their protected health information is used and disclosed, and provides a clear avenue of recourse if their medical privacy is compromised. The Administration's actions were criticized by consumer advocates and Congressional Democrats, but praised by other stakeholders in the health care system.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – While the President's negotiated House-passed legislation fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights; the bill has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.

2. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:

REV_00159200

- National Health Service Corps (NHSC) – The President promised during the campaign to refocus this scholarship and loan repayment program that places "Corps physicians in the neediest areas," and to "coordinate the Corps program with the J-1 visa waiver program to avoid overlap." The President also promised to "encourage physicians to participate in the NHSC by making scholarship funds tax free." HHS recently assumed responsibility over much of the J-1 Visa program, but coordinating this program with the NHSC has not been proposed.

3. Long Term Care:

- Affordability – The President promised to "make long-term care available and affordable, instead of a path to financial ruin." This was to include making the "cost of long-term care insurance fully deductible" and establishing an "additional personal exemption for home caregivers." The FY '03 budget proposal included both full deductibility for long-term care insurance, and a caregiver personal exemption. While the House has acted on similar legislation, additional action on these proposals is not expected. See also NEC Health Care Policy.

III. LOOKING FORWARD: '03 AGENDA

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Patients' Bill of Rights ('03) – The President negotiated a historic compromise with Rep. Norwood to give every American a meaningful Patient Bill of Rights. Legislation is not likely to be active again in the remaining days of 107th Congress, but Democrats will likely reintroduce the bill in the next session of Congress. Support for Democrat-backed patient protection bills—by its most vocal advocate the AMA—has waned since the President announced his commitment to legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The President should support the principles set forth in the compromise legislation. However, he should seek to emphasize his priority is making sure families and individuals have access to affordable health care.
2. Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.
3. Mental Health Parity Legislation (fall '02) – Last December, the President agreed to work with Senator Domenici to pass a mental health parity bill in the 107th Congress. While Speaker Hastert is strongly opposed to any parity legislation, the White House is working to facilitate a compromise that would prohibit health plans that provide medical and surgical benefits, from placing higher financial requirements or different treatment limitations on mental health benefits. Action is needed this year, because the current federal mental health parity law expires in December of 2002.

4. Medical Liability Reform – The Administration endorsed legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The proposal creates a more timely, predictable, and fair liability system that improves access to quality health care while reducing health care costs. The bill passed the House, but is being blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
5. Patient Safety/Medical Errors Legislation (if not completed in '02) —The Administration has endorsed legislation to authorize patient safety organizations to collect confidential data on medical mistakes from hospitals, doctors, and other health care providers, and develop programs to address particular needs identified by data. While the proposals enjoy strong bipartisan support in both the House and Senate, several key Senate Democrats continue to block progress and ask for additional funding for patient safety and medical information grants. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
6. Genetic Non-Discrimination Legislation (if not completed in '02) –Earlier this year, the President endorsed legislation introduced by Senators Snowe, Frist, Gregg and Jeffords to prohibit discrimination by employers and health insurers based on genetic information. Democratic legislation introduced by Sen. Daschle is similar but would also encourage lawsuits by creating new private rights of action with unlimited damages. Congressional negotiators have not been able to resolve the liability issue, and the bill supported by the President has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.
7. Cloning Ban (if not completed in '02) --The President strongly supports House passed legislation that would prohibit all forms of human cloning. A current proposal in the Senate would allow the cloning of embryos for research purposes.
8. Cancer Care Quality Legislation (if not completed in '02)– Led by the American Cancer Society and the Lance Armstrong Foundation, bipartisan Congressional members are pushing legislation authorizing development and collection of information on quality of cancer care, mandating specific dollars for cancer survivorship research, and creating other programs to address end-of-life care. As the legislation is currently drafted, it takes power to set research priorities away from scientists, duplicates existing programs, and expands bureaucracy.
9. Early Treatment for HIV Act – Legislation is being developed that would allow State Medicaid programs the option to expand Medicaid coverage to individuals with an HIV diagnosis as an early preventive treatment measure in a budget neutral way.
10. United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – This proposal authorizes the Executive branch to develop a 5-year strategic plan for addressing the international HIV/AIDS pandemic, provide increased resources for multilateral and bilateral efforts, and expand HHS's authority to provide international assistance. This amendment would require several reports back to Congress by the Executive branch.

C. Regulatory (key regulatory issues)

1. HIPAA Security Standards for Health Information Regulation (Fall '02) — Highly visible regulation to protect identifiable health information/medical records; affects all health care stakeholders subject to the HIPAA Privacy regulation.
2. HIPAA Electronic Medicare Claims Submission (Fall '02) —Highly visible regulation to require all Medicare claims be submitted electronically.
3. Bar Code Labeling on Human Drug Products —(Fall '02) Highly visible regulation that uses bar coding technology to identify potential medical errors.
4. Bioterrorism Regulations for Food Safety and Security —(Fall '02) Regulation to enhance the inspection and oversight of imported food.
5. Bioterrorism Regulations for Tracking Dangerous Biological Pathogens (Fall '02) —Regulation to enhance surveillance and security over dangerous agents and toxins that pose a public health threat; applies to all public and private entities that use, possess and transfer these dangerous pathogens.

Immigration

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Restructuring the Immigration and Naturalization Service
The President promised to "restructure the INS, splitting it into two agencies: one to deal with enforcement, and one to deal with service."* In November 2001, the Attorney General announced an administrative restructuring plan for the agency and began its implementation. The President's proposal to create the Department of Homeland Security contemplates preserving the separation between service and enforcement when the INS moves to that department.

Provide increased funding for INS personnel
The President promised to "propose an additional $500 million over 5 years to fund new INS personnel and increased employee incentives to provide quality service to legal immigrants."* The Administration has sought $100 million each fiscal year for this purpose.

Reduce INS benefit processing times
The President promised to "improve INS service by proposing that every INS immigration application be processed within 180 days of submission."* The INS has a backlog elimination plan in place to achieve that goal by FY 2004. It is on track to meet that goal for 9 of 12 classes of applications. Increased security checks have caused delays in some categories.

A. Outstanding Commitments

None.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- INS reorganization will be a significant issue next year if it is not dealt with in Homeland Security Department legislation or otherwise this year.
- Extension of Section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, which the President supports, is unlikely to occur during the 107th Congress. Section 245(i) permits aliens residing illegally in the U.S., but who are otherwise entitled to obtain permanent legal status, to do so without first leaving the country. As a result they can avoid being barred from reentering the U.S. for 3 or 10 years.

A. Regulatory

None.

Ground Transportation

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Finalized a number of regulations to ensure the safe opening of the U.S.-Mexico border to commercial truck traffic. White House is reviewing Secretary Mineta's recommendation to the President that opening the border will not present a significant safety risk.
- Issued an Executive Order establishing the Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force. DOT will chair an interagency task force to help move high-priority transportation projects through the environmental permitting process. Members of Congress, roadbuilding associations, state representatives and environmental groups have praised this approach. The construction trade unions will support this as well.
- Granted $100 million loan to Amtrak to prevent total shutdown of Amtrak and several key commuter rail systems.

B. Outstanding Commitments

None

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative:

- TEA 21 reauthorization: TEA 21, which funds highway and urban transit projects, covers fiscal years 1998-2003, so a new bill must be in place ahead of the fiscal year 2004 appropriations cycle.

- Amtrak reauthorization: See discussion above.

B. Regulatory:

- Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE)– NHTSA is required by law to propose new fuel economy standards for light trucks for the 2005 model year by October 2002 and finalize the regulation by April 2003. If NHTSA chooses not to initiate a rulemaking on passenger cars, the current standard will remain in effect.

  The Administration is currently pushing a CAFE reform proposal in the Energy bill Conference. The proposal requires NHTSA to set a new light truck standard that will save 5 billion gallons of fuel between 2006 and 2012. It also gives the Secretary of Transportation greater authority to amend passenger car fuel economy standards while taking into account safety and economic burden.

- Open the Mexican border to cross-border commercial trucking. The White House is currently reviewing DOT's recommendation.

REV_00159206

Welfare, Child Welfare, Adoption

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Abstinence Education. Both as part of the welfare reform reauthorization legislation and the normal appropriations process, the Administration is trying to increase funding for abstinence education by $126 million per year. The House supports the additional funding; the position of the Senate is not clear. If successful, this effort will fulfill the President's campaign promise to fund abstinence education programs at the same level as family planning and condom distribution programs, although some conservatives are already arguing that more money for abstinence will be needed to achieve parity with family planning.

- Compassion Capital Fund. In June 2002, HHS announced the implementation of the Compassion Capital Fund. In response to the President's fiscal 2002 budget request, Congress appropriated funds that are specifically designed to assist grassroots organizations as part of the President's faith-based and community initiative. $30 million is being used to help level the playing field for faith and community-based organizations as they compete for federal grants. It is too early to determine whether these funds will have an impact.

- Child Support Enforcement. HHS's Office of the Inspector General (OIG), in cooperation with HHS's Office of Child Support Enforcement, have implemented strong measures, including a three-day national sweep, to locate the Nation's most wanted "deadbeat parents". So far, 70 of the biggest offenders have been arrested, in part through cooperation between OIG, the U.S. Marshals Service, and state and local police. Arrests have been made in 29 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Due to this effort, as well as continued aggressive implementation of the child support program by the Office of Child Support Enforcement, both child support collections and paternity establishments are at an all-time high.

- Good Start, Grow Smart. In April 2002, President Bush presented Good Start, Grow Smart, the Administration's Initiative to address standards of learning in early literacy, language, and numeracy skills. To ensure that the President's Initiative is implemented boldly and effectively, the Head Start and Child Care Bureaus are completing a joint strategic plan, and Head Start programs are being required to fully implement new requirements for charting the progress of each child. In addition, HHS has implemented a plan to train Head Start administrators and teachers in research-based teaching techniques that will lead to improved school readiness (50,000 Head Start teachers will receive this training). HHS is also conducting a variety of activities to ensure that rigorous, cutting-edge research is developed, carried out, and translated into practices that enhance children's progress toward school readiness.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Reauthorize the 1996 Welfare Reform Legislation that Expires on September 30, 2002. In February of this year, the Administration submitted to Congress a plan to reauthorize and strengthen the 1996 welfare reform legislation. By May, the House had developed and passed a bill that was nearly identical to the Administration plan. However, at this writing the bill is mired in the Senate and seems unlikely to pass this year, especially because the bill being pushed by the Senate Democratic leadership is deeply flawed. If a bill cannot be enacted in 2002, Congress will probably enact a 1-year extension of funding authority, which would mean that welfare reform reauthorization would be on the agenda for the 108th Congress. Because of this failure to act on reauthorization, the Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG) has not been reauthorized either. If the Senate fails to reauthorize the CCDBG in the 107th Congress, we would be provided with a good opportunity to seek measures to coordinate the CCDBG with Head Start during next year's reauthorization debate.

- Head Start. The Administration promised during the campaign to move the Head Start program from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Department of Education.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- The 1996 welfare reform law expires on September 30, 2002 and must be reauthorized. The House has enacted legislation but the Senate has not. If this is not completed by the 107th Congress, the 108th Congress would take up reauthorization.

C. Regulatory

- HHS is using its statutory authority to administer the Head Start program to aggressively implement significant improvements in Head Start teaching, administration, and research. These initiatives are grouped together under the rubric "Good Start, Grow Smart".

REV_00159208

Education

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- The No Child Left Behind Act was signed into law by President Bush on January 8, 2002. By turning federal spending on schools into a federal investment in improved student performance, this law provides the most sweeping reform of the Elementary & Secondary Education Act since it was enacted in 1965. The law ensures that States and school districts will develop strong systems of accountability based on student performance, provides increased local control and flexibility by putting decision-making in the hands of those at the State and local levels, increases parental options, and encourages the use of effective programs and solid research to drive instruction.
- The Department of Education has been working to implement the NCLBA by releasing regulations and guidance for programs under the Act. The 2002-2003 school year is the first year that many of these reforms are going into effect.
- One of the most important reforms in the Act is the development of state accountability systems that hold schools accountable for student progress. The Department is currently reviewing the first round of state accountability plans, and will be approving these state plans in the coming months.
- The Act also launched a comprehensive effort called Reading First, a five-year, $5 billion state grant program. Reading First provides assistance to state and local education agencies to apply scientifically-based research—and the proven instructional and assessment tools consistent with this research—to improve reading instruction for K-3 students and to ensure that all children learn to read well by the end of the third grade.

Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001

- Commitment: Supports expanding education savings accounts for parents to increase their annual contributions from $500 per student to $5,000 and withdraw funds tax free to pay for education expenses from Kindergarten to college
- The tax relief bill that President Bush signed last year provides $22.7 billion in education savings for American families over the next five years: eliminates the 60-month limitation on student loan interest deductions and increases the income levels of individuals able to claim the deduction, increases the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts from $500 to $2,000, and allows savings to be used for elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education expenses, adds a new above-the-line deduction for qualified higher education expenses, allows tax-free distributions from Qualified Tuition Plans (Section 529 plans) to be used to pay educational expenses and permits private institutions to offer such plans, makes the income exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance permanent and extends the benefit of the exclusion to graduate level courses.

- President Bush had proposed during his campaign to increase the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts to $5,000.

Teacher Tax Deduction

- Commitment: Establish a teacher tax deduction to help defray out-of-pocket classroom expenses
- The Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act provided an above-the-line tax deduction for up to $250 in classroom expenses incurred by teachers and other educators. Effective only in 2002 and 2003.
- The President proposed a $400 teacher tax deduction for out-of-pocket classroom expenses.

Special Education Funding

- Commitment: Work with Congress to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act
- The President is on the way to fulfilling his campaign promise to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under IDEA.
- The President's 2003 budget provides an increase of $1 billion for Special Education Grants to States (following an increase of $1.2 billion in FY 2002), to $8.5 billion, and an increase of $20 million for states to identify and serve infants and toddlers with disabilities, to $437 million.

Character Education

- Commitment: Triple character education funding and incorporate character-building lessons into federal youth programs
- The President proposed and has fulfilled his promise to triple character education grant funding, from $8 million to $25 million. The Character Education program received $25 million in 2002, and the same amount is proposed for 2003. More emphasis could be put on research into character education and its effect on student outcomes.

State Scholars Initiative

- The Department of Education awarded a $2.4 million grant to the Center for State Scholars to create a pilot program in five states to encourage students to take a more demanding curriculum in high school in preparation for entry into a technical school, community college, university or work. States that participate will have to encourage the business community, school districts, and higher education institutions in each state to work together to encourage a more rigorous curriculum in high schools nationwide.

C. Outstanding Commitments

Pell Grants

- Commitment: Provide $1 billion over five years for enhanced Pell Grants to students who take college-level math and science courses in high school, allowing them an additional $1,000 to pay for college tuition
- To fulfill this commitment, the President would need to propose this initiative in a future budget submission or in the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act.
- While this initiative has not been proposed, the President has provided significant increases in funding for Pell Grants.
- The Pell Grant maximum award increased from $3,750 in 2001 to $4,000 in 2002.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10.9 billion for the Pell Grant program, maintaining a maximum award of $4000 for Fiscal Year 2003-2004. This is an increase of $2.1 billion over 2001 Pell Grant funding.
- The recently enacted supplemental appropriations bill provided an additional $1 billion in Pell Grant funding to eliminate the shortfall in 2002.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Several key pieces of legislation are up for reauthorization in 2003, and several pieces of legislation will be held over from 2002.

1. Individuals with Disabilities Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2002)—Special Education programs for children, provided mostly in K-12 education.
2. Office of Educational Research and Improvement Reauthorization (authorization expired end of FY 1998, but has continued under that authorization)—Department of Education research initiatives.
3. Higher Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Postsecondary education programs, including all federal student financial aid.
4. Perkins Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Vocational and Adult Education programs
5. Rehabilitation Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Employment programs for adults with disabilities
6. Head Start Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—HHS early education programs, but significant coordination with Department of Education

REV_00159211

C. Regulatory

The Department of Education will continue to regulate on and develop and revise guidance for the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act.

In addition, the Secretary's Commission on Opportunity in Athletics must submit its report on findings and recommendations on Title IX to Secretary Paige by January 31, 2003. The Administration will review regulations on Title IX at this time.

Faith-Based

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

Office Establishment

- An Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives and five Cabinet Centers at HUD, HHS, Education, Labor, and Justice have been established. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.

New Resources and Programs for Faith-Based Groups

- The President's 2003 budget provides $25 million in competitive grants for mentoring programs for children of prisoners. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to launch a new program to address the needs of children of prisoners, offering grants on a competitive basis to faith-based and community groups.
- H.R. 1 opens the 21st Century after-school program's funding (maintained at $1 billion in FY 2003) to competitive bidding by faith-based and community groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- On June 4, the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) at the Department of Health and Human Services announced the rollout of the $30 million Compassion Capital Fund. Nearly $25 million will be made available to 15-25 intermediary organizations that will provide technical assistance to help faith-based and community organizations expand the reach of their programs. The remaining $5 million will be used to conduct research and establish a National Resource Center that will provide tools to faith-based and community organizations. More than 350 groups applied for the intermediary grants and nearly 70 applied for the field research grants. In addition, the President's 2003 budget provides $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund, a public-private partnership to identify and invest in charitable "best practices." These each fulfill the President's campaign promise to create a Compassion Capital Fund.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10 million in competitive grants to fund pilot Second Chance maternity homes. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- Two faith-based prison pre-release programs have been established, one designed for federal prisoners (a religion specific, multi-faith, and social responsibility program) and one for state prisoners (faith-based organizations will provide mentoring and role modeling during incarceration, transition and stabilization phases). This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to initiate and fund same
- The Department of Labor awarded a total of $17.5 million in grants specifically designed to link faith-based and grassroots community organizations to the nation's One-Stop Career System. Twelve states and 29 organizations around the country will receive funds that they will use to create partnerships between faith-based and community groups and the One-Stop career centers.

Administrative Reforms and Outreach Programs

- OFBCI has created a database of more than 100 social service programs open to faith-based groups worth more than $50 billion, organized for the first time by groups of people served, not by program names.
- In the past three months, all of the agencies have established websites for the initiative. These websites provide detailed information about the initiative generally, as well as information about applicable funding opportunities.
- To date, the Department of Education Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives has held a total of six very successful outreach conferences attended by more than 4000 people. These conferences are designed to make local organizations aware of the initiative and Department of Education funding opportunities in which they might be interested.
- The Department of Education has issued appropriate guidance to states concerning the involvement of faith-based and community organizations in all formula grant programs that are amenable to participation by these groups.
- The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration at HHS has planned six technical assistance conferences throughout the country to provide technical assistance to faith-based and community organizations that wish to apply for substance abuse prevention/treatment funds.
- The DOJ Center is working with the Office of Justice Programs to simplify the grants and administrative process to make it friendlier to smaller faith-based and community organizations.
- The DOJ Center is also working with OJP to establish a Community Capacity Development Office. This office will focus on capacity development issues for faith-based organizations, small communities, and other entities identified.

Legislation

- H.R. 7, The Community Solutions Act, passed the House in July, 2001 and helped meet a number of the President's Faith-Based commitments including: non-itemizer tax deduction, charity IRA rollover, raising the cap on corporate charity contributions, civil liability protection for corporate donations and an expansion of Charitable Choice.
- Authorization for the Mentoring of Prisoner's Children pilot project.
- $30 million appropriation for the Compassion Capital Fund.
- Introduction and Senate Finance passage of the bi-partisan CARE Act (27 co-sponsors including 10 Democrats).

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Hold a corporate and philanthropic summit to examine private-sector discrimination against funding faith-based organizations. (Notre Dame Commencement Speech, May 2001)
- Promote a Charitable State Tax Credit of up to 50% of the first $500 for individuals or $1000 for married couples for contributions to charities addressing poverty; extend the tax credit—up to 50% of the first $1000—to corporations. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

- Provide federal matching funds for the establishment of state Offices of Faith-Based Action. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Promote alternative licensing regimes that recognize religious training as an alternative form of qualification for delivery of non-medical social services. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Fund certificates to help 500,000 lower-income parents pay for after-school activities of their choosing, with funding of $400 million. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Provide performance-based drug treatment grants to states; ensure that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative

Depending on activity in the final month of the 107th Congress, the President's faith-based bill may or may not have been passed and signed into law. If passed, it would fulfill a majority of the commitments the President has made on faith-based issues. If not, all of those issues would remain outstanding including: 1) the expansion of Charitable Choice; 2) a non-itemizer tax deduction; 3) tax-free IRA charitable rollover; 4) raising the cap on corporate contributions; and 5) civil liability protection for corporate charity donations.

If this package fails to pass, however, OFBCI strongly recommends a different legislative approach for the 108th Congress. Specifically, OFBCI recommends using an amendment strategy to expand Charitable Choice to all Federal social service programs along with a free-standing charitable tax incentives bill. We do not recommend a strategy that marries the two efforts together.

B. Regulatory:

The Office's main issues will be administrative and regulatory in nature, and may be somewhat controversial. Specifically:

- Provide clear guidance to faith-based organizations on the 'Do's and Don'ts' of interacting with the Federal government.
- Announce new FEMA policy that treats all non-profit organizations equally in its emergency assistance programs.
- Provide official guidance on Charitable Choice for TANF, SAMHSA, CSBG and other programs covered by Federal statute, either through executive order or department regulation.
- Issue a user-friendly booklet identifying Federal funding opportunities that may interest faith-based organizations, with instructions about how to apply.

REV_00159215

- Update its website with the guidance materials and grants information, as well as other information about the Initiative.
- Oversee Agencies issuing internal guidance to peer review panels and grants management staff on the participation of FBOs in grants programs.
- Agency Centers will begin to work within their agencies on innovative pilot and demonstration projects targeting elders, at-risk youth and prisoners, addicts, the homeless, and those making the transition from welfare to work.
- Remove regulations that prohibit faith-based organizations' participation in many programs, beginning at HUD.
- Remove regulations that limit the right of faith-based organizations to maintain religious identity through hiring autonomy unless there is a statutory basis for them.
- Improve data collection so that accurate information on faith-based organizations is available.
- Expand the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives by executive order to include new Faith-Based Centers at Departments of State and Agriculture because both work extensively with faith-based organizations to feed the hungry and provide relief for those in desperate need.
- Fight to maintain religious organizations' rights to hire and fire on the basis of religion.

REV_00159216

Housing and Community Development

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

- The President issued America's Homeownership Challenge, mobilizing the private real estate and mortgage finance sector to eliminate barriers to homeownership through increased financial and organizational commitments to increase minority homeownership by at least 5.5 million families by 2010. As a result, additional private capital of $440 billion has been pledged by the government-sponsored enterprises to increase minority homeownership. Private entities have committed resources to assist in the effort. Sears Roebuck recently announced a $100 million, five-year program to reduce barriers to minority homeownership, specifically responding to President Bush's challenge.

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed $200 million for the American Dream Downpayment Initiative, which would provide state and local agencies with matching grants to assist an estimated 40,000 first-time homebuyer families with downpayment funds. Legislation has been introduced in the House (Mike Rogers) and the Senate (Allard).

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed a $2.4 billion, five-year Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit of up to 50% of the project costs of rehabilitation and construction of low-income housing, provided that eligible homebuyers have incomes of not more than 80% of area median income. The tax credit will eventually result in an additional 200,000 affordable single-family homes becoming available through construction or rehabilitation. Legislation very close to the President's proposal has been introduced in the House (Portman/Cardin) and is expected to be introduced in the Senate this month (Santorum/Gordon Smith).

- The Section 8 Homeownership Program has been implemented in part by HUD. The program allows local housing agencies flexibility to provide either mortgage assistance in lieu of a rental subsidy. A downpayment grant equaling up to one-year's worth of a family's Section 8 rental assistance is also envisioned, but Congress has not made a specific appropriation allowing the use of Section 8 funds for this activity. HUD has also implemented a Section 8 Disability Initiative -- a three-year pilot program authorized in 1999 which allows recipients with disabilities to use rental assistance toward mortgage payments.

- The Administration has issued for public comment a proposed regulation to simplify and modernize the current homebuying process, which is governed by the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) and the regulation implementing the act. Secretary Martinez expects that legislation amending RESPA may also be needed to strengthen enforcement.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- End Chronic Homelessness: Secretary Martinez's speech before the National Alliance to End Homelessness committed to ending chronic homelessness by the end of the decade, and the FY 03 budget cites this as an explicit Administration goal. The Interagency Council on the Homeless held its first meeting in six years and announced a $35 million initiative (using recaptured funds) in furtherance of the Administration's goal.

- Convene a White House Conference on Increasing Minority Homeownership: In his June 17th Atlanta rollout of his homeownership initiative, the President committed to holding a White House Conference on minority homeownership this fall. The conference, currently scheduled for October 15th, will highlight barriers to minority homeownership and develop proposed solutions.

- Modernize and simplify the homebuying process. Secretary Martinez has made reform of the homebuying process a top HUD priority, with the goal of benefiting consumers with cost savings and ensuring that they receive timely, accurate information that is reflected at closing. Reform of the homebuying process was a component of the President's homeownership initiative announced in Atlanta in June. HUD has issued proposed changes to the RESPA regulation for public comment. The comment period closes in October.

- Promote financial education through housing counseling. The Administration has proposed increasing funding for housing counseling grants by $15 million in FY 2003, to $35 million. In his June 17th Atlanta speech, the President cited the importance of housing counseling in reducing barriers to minority homeownership. Faith-based groups will be key partners in HUD's housing counseling efforts.

- Triple funding for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity Program (SHOP). In his May 20, 2001 Notre Dame speech, the President promised to request a tripling of funds for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunities Program (SHOP), which provides grants for land acquisition and infrastructure improvement to non-profit organizations that offer homeownership opportunities to families willing to contribute their own "sweat equity" (such as Habitat for Humanity). The President's FY 03 budget request tripled funding for SHOP (from approximately $22 million to nearly $66 million). These requested increases were not been included in the Senate VA/HUD Appropriations bill.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislation:

Enactment of existing proposals (American Dream Downpayment Initiative; Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit) should be the Administration's top priorities in the next session of Congress if these are not enacted this year. At this point, the downpayment initiative is the only legislative proposal with a chance of enactment this session of Congress.

Much press attention has been focused on what housing advocates have termed "the housing crisis." This has galvanized a wide array of groups in support of the creation of a dedicated source of federal funding for housing expenditures (a housing trust fund similar to the highway trust fund). In this session of Congress, H.R. 3995, an Oxley-Roukema housing bill containing the President's downpayment initiative, has been reported out of the Financial Services Committee. The bill now contains a number of new program authorizations which we oppose. In the Senate, Christopher (Kit) Bond, the Ranking Minority Member on the VA/HUD Appropriations Committee introduced a bill (S. 2967) on September 19th authorizing a major new housing production program. Rather than creating new and possibly duplicative housing programs, increased funding for the existing HOME program, targeted to the very low-income, is the Secretary's preferred approach to dealing with the increased housing needs.

C. Regulatory:

The key regulatory issue facing the Department will be reform of the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, which Secretary Martinez advocates as part of his effort to reduce closing costs and make the homebuying process easier. Because of the varied economic interests involved in the homebuying industry affected by these changes, this will be highly contentious. HUD has proposed changes to the RESPA rule and is currently receiving comments on its draft rule. While HUD believes it has the authority to adopt the rule it has proposed, the Secretary has stated that further changes (especially in the enforcement arena) may also be desirable and would require legislation.

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Established the Task Force to Improve Health Care Delivery For Our Nation's Veterans (Veterans Healthcare Task Force – Executive Order 13214): The fifteen member Veterans Healthcare Task Force, co-chaired by Dr. Gail Wilensky, former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, and former Congressman John Paul Hammerschmidt, will recommend specific actions to improve coordination between VA and the Department of Defense (DoD) on health care for those who have served in uniform and who are eligible for VA benefits. The Task Force issued an interim report on the issues to be addressed on July 31, 2002. A final report is due in March 2003.

- Reduced Veterans Claims Backlog: Conducted a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement, as the President had promised in the campaign ("The veterans health care system and the claims process need an overhauling from top to bottom. It needs to be modernized, so that claims are handled in a fair and timely fashion." Honoring our Commitment to Veterans, November 11, 1999). Reduced the claims pending backlog by almost 40% in the first year.

- Reduced Longest-Pending Veterans Claims for Older Veterans: Established a "Tiger Team" of experienced employees and managers to focus on the longest-pending claims from older veterans. By August 2002 VA, had completed 47,000 cases that had been pending for more than one year.

- Reinstated VA's "Duty to Assist" Policy: VA had traditionally pursued a "duty to assist" policy of helping claimants in gathering evidence to support their claims, including compiling medical and service records. A court decision, however, had overturned the holding it was not authorized by law. During the campaign, Governor Bush promised to reinstate the policy (August 2000). The President implemented provisions of the Veterans Claims Assistance Act reinstating the policy.

- World War II Memorial Legislation: Signed bipartisan legislation that ended ending delays and ensured that the planned World War II Memorial is located on the National Mall, between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Although VA has made improvements in claims processing and in addressing the backlog of claims, the current delays remain unacceptable by President Bush's and Secretary's Principi's standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Priority Level 7 (PL 7) Vets: Veterans who choose to enroll in the VA health care system are placed in a priority group based on their specific eligibility status. The priority groups range from 1-7, with 1 being the highest priority for enrollment. The numbers of PL 7[1] veterans (those in least need of services) has increased dramatically since 1996, when they were accepted on a space-available basis and averaged two percent of all patients. This influx strains VA's capacity and hinders delivery of care to higher priority veterans.

VA medical care is not an entitlement offered to all veterans irrespective of geographic location. It is a service limited primarily to VA's geographic infrastructure and the size of the appropriation in any one year. Federal law requires that the VA Secretary announce, in conjunction with the appropriations process, what categories of veterans VA will be able to serve for that fiscal year. The issue, therefore, must be faced each year. For FY 2002, VA originally had determined that the budget would not permit it to serve all PL 7 veterans, and had proposed suspending new enrollment by PL 7 veterans who were not then enrolled. The final decision, however, was not to suspend PL 7 enrollment but to add $200 million to the President's budget request to address the issue. VA has proposed a regulation (See Section C, Regulatory, below) allowing it to provide services to higher priority veterans before providing services to lower priority veterans.

Concurrent Receipts: Currently, in order to receive VA disability payments, a military retiree must waive an equivalent amount of military retirement pay. Many in Congress have supported attempts to allow military retirees to concurrently receive VA disability and military retirement benefits. Every Administration has opposed these attempts based on the long-standing principle that no one should be able to receive concurrent retirement benefits and disability benefits based upon the same service. All Federal compensation systems aim for an equitable percentage of income replacement in the case of either work-related injury or retirement. Such a change in policy would cost approximately $58 billion dollars over ten years.

Most recently, the President threatened to veto the Department of Defense authorization bill because it contained a provision allowing concurrent receipts. Veterans groups, as expected, have been heated in their criticism of the Administration over this issue, and will continue to press their supporters to change policy and allow concurrent receipts.

[1] PL 7 veterans are veterans who (i) do not have a service-connected disability serious enough to qualify for disability compensation; (ii) have an annual income exceeding $24,000 ($27,000 with one dependent) or who have a substantial net worth; and (iii) do not qualify for care under other special provisions (e.g. World War I veteran, care for conditions associated with herbicide or radiation exposure, etc.)

REV_00159221

POW Legislation: American ex-POWs held by the Japanese have been active in trying to pass legislation that would allow them to sue Japanese corporations that used POW slave labor. The latest iteration in this effort is legislation sponsored by Republican Dana Rohrbacher (HR 1189). State Department believes the Rohrbacher bill would contravene our peace treaty with the Japanese, which shielded Japanese nationals from liability. A bill introduced by Michael Simpson, (HR 5235) would provide a pension benefit for former POWs.

VA had submitted a legislative proposal establishing a POW benefit, and supported the Simpson effort. In order to pay for the benefit, VA's proposal contained language overturning a recent court ruling that expanded the definition of service-connected disability to include alcoholism and drug-use. The POW benefit would have cost nearly $1.7 billion over ten years, while the offset would result in $4.6 billion in savings over the same period. However, the Administration chose not to send POW benefit legislation or publicly endorse the Simpson legislation because we would be creating an new entitlement without a guarantee that offset portion would survive.

C. Regulatory

Secretary Principi recently issued a regulation allowing VA to ensure priority care for veterans with severe service-connected disabilities. Priority for treatment for service-connected veterans does not reduce the number of veterans VA treats, but does reduce the amount of time veterans seeking treatment for a service-connected disability must wait before receiving care. Predictably, the regulation was criticized as a "cut" in veterans benefits (most particularly by Senator Rockefeller).

Criminal Justice

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Tort Reform

- Teacher Protection Act: As part of No Child Left Behind Act, the President signed into law the Teacher Protection Act, which provides civil immunity from state and Federal actions to teachers, principals, and other education professionals for actions taken to maintain discipline, order, or control in the classroom or school. The President promised to support the Teacher Protection Act during the campaign.
- Class Action Reform: The Administration sent a Statement of Administration Position (SAP) supporting the Class Action Fairness Act (H.R. 2341), which passed the House and is pending in the Senate. The bill would allow removal of cases to Federal court when the amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity. This is consistent with the campaign promise to "allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only minimal diversity exists."* Also, the bill establishes a consumer class action bill of rights, including notice of lawsuits in "plain English" and requires judicial review of non-cash benefits like coupons.
- Medical Liability Reform: In July 2002, President proposed national minimum standards in healthcare cases, including limits on non-economic damages and punitive damages, proportional liability, and informing juries of other sources of reimbursement. It would also protect from use in lawsuits reports and information about efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care. The House approved this legislation.

Campaign Finance Reform

- In March 2002, the President signed H.R. 2356, the Campaign Finance Reform Act. The Act contains various provisions the President supported, including a ban on unregulated, "soft" money contributions from unions and corporations, increased limits on individual giving, and new and more expedited disclosure requirements. However, it also includes provisions that raise constitutional concerns, such as the broad ban on issue advertising.
- The bill contains reforms the President promised to support during the campaign, including: "banning 'soft money' contributions from labor unions and corporations" and "raising individual contribution limits." As enacted, it did not include provisions advocated by the President such as "enforcement of the Beck decision and enactment of effective 'Paycheck Protection'" legislation or "instant disclosure of contributions" (although it did further lessen the amount of time before disclosure was required).*

Election Reform

- The President endorsed four guiding principles embodied in the May 2001 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Election Reform: (1) primacy of state, county and local governments in elections; (2) a limited but responsible role for the federal government in assisting states and localities with election administration so that voting technology and practices respect the value of every eligible vote; (3) need for active and vigorous enforcement of voting rights laws; and (4) need to uphold the voting rights of members of the armed services and of Americans living abroad.

- The President signed legislation consistent with these principles. It also contains important tools to decrease fraud in our voting systems.
- The bill authorizes $3.9 billion over four years for a variety of grant programs, including general improvement of the election administration system, and improved access to the voting process for individuals with disabilities. The Administration has proposed to spend $1.2 billion in matching grants to fund a state revolving fund to be used in election administration. The first of three $400 million installments was included in the President's FY 2003 budget.

Affirmative Action

- The President stated during the campaign that he "supports 'affirmative access' to open the doors of opportunity" to all Americans, and "opposes quotas and racial preferences."* The goal is to provide greater opportunity and access without creating race-conscious remedies that only benefit particular racial or ethnic groups. His Administration has done so in the following contexts:

    - Education: The No Child Left Behind Act establishes high standards and accountability for all public schools. Educating every American to his or her full potential was part of the campaign's affirmative access goals.
    - Contracting: The President's Small Business Agenda includes promoting the unbundling of contracts so that small businesses that are not capable of bidding for entire projects are not disadvantaged. This meets his campaign promise to advocate "breaking down government contracts to smaller sizes to encourage entrepreneurship in all communities" as a way to promote affirmative access.* Also, the President instructed the OMB Director to review contracting practices at relevant agencies to make sure their practices reflect a commitment to full and open competition.
    - Housing: The President announced a homeownership initiative targeted at increasing homeownership for minority families. It includes proposals to increase the supply of affordable homes for low and moderate income families, provide downpayment assistance, more educational assistance, and a "Homeownership Challenge" to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to help increase the number of minority homeowners by 5.5 million families by the end of the decade. This initiative does not rely on racial classifications.

New Freedom Initiative

Community Living

- Olmstead: By Executive Order, the President required Federal agencies to assist states and localities to implement the Supreme Court's Olmstead decision. Olmstead requires states to place qualified individuals with disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions, whenever treatment professionals determine that such placement is appropriate, the affected persons do not oppose such placement, and the state can reasonably accommodate the placement, taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with disabilities.

REV_00159225

- In response, key Federal agencies conducted the first comprehensive Federal review of barriers that prevent people with disabilities from living in the community and identified over 400 potential solutions to remove impediments to community-based living, which agencies have begun to implement.
- Medicare Homebound Rules: The President announced a clarification with respect to Medicare recipients with disabilities who are considered "homebound." This change makes it clear that people with significant disabilities may leave their homes for occasional activities without losing their Medicare homebound services.

Education

- IDEA: The President requested the largest increases of any President in history for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) Part B State Grants program in his FY 2002 and FY 2003 budgets. The President signed legislation increasing by $1.2 billion in FY 2002 budget for the IDEA Part B State Grants program.
- Special Education Commission: The President issued Executive Order 13227 in October 2001 creating the Presidential Commission on Excellence in Special Education. The Commission issued its report to the President on July 1, 2002.

Technology

- Section 508: The President promised full enforcement of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act, which requires that all Federal government electronic and information technologies be accessible to individuals with disabilities. In response, the Administration collaborated to expedite Section 508 implementation, and produced extensive technical guidance and training materials that will be helpful to Federal agencies and others interested in accessible technologies.

Homeownership

- HUD Section 8: The President committed to revising the HUD Section 8 rent subsidy program to permit people with disabilities to use up to one year's worth of Section 8 rent subsidy vouchers to finance a down payment and purchase a home. HUD has implemented this pilot program.

Employment Integration

- Ticket to Work: The President promoted swift implementation of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act, which provides incentives for more than 7.5 million Americans receiving benefits under Federal disability programs to return to work.

Other

- Commission on Mental Health: The President formed the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health to conduct a comprehensive study of the Nation's mental health service delivery system.
- Access to Voting Places: The President will sign legislation mandating increased access to polling places by individuals with disabilities.

REV_00159226

- DisabilityInfo.gov: By Executive Memorandum, the President created a single source Federal web site providing access to all the Federal web sites important to people with disabilities. This web site was launched in October 2002.
- NFI Budget: The President secured funding for the vast majority of NFI programs in FY 2002 and requested a higher overall level of NFI-related funding in FY 2003. In the FY 2002 budget, the President requested $10.781 billion and received $10.872 billion. In the FY 2003 budget, he is seeking $1.39 billion over 2002 appropriations.

B. Outstanding Commitments

Civil Justice
Tort Reform
The President promised during the campaign to "support meaningful, broad-based tort reform" to discourage frivolous lawsuits. Congress has not acted on the following items the President pledged to support:

- "Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a 'Three Strikes, You're Out' rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims."
- "Limit 'fishing expeditions' by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of 'junk science' by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony."
- "Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute."
- "Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity."
- "Enact a 'Fair Settlement Rule,' requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees."
- "Enact a 'Client's Bill of Rights' to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees."

The President's remaining campaign civil justice system reform pledge was to "Issue an Executive Order prohibiting Federal agencies from paying contingency fees."* This executive order is currently being drafted.

New Freedom Initiative

- Transportation Grants: The President requested $145 million in his 2002 and 2003 budgets for competitive grants through the Department of Transportation to provide alternative transportation services to give people with disabilities increased access to the job market, and to fund a pilot program to demonstrate innovative solutions for overcoming transportation barriers. This is the major NFI program that was not funded in FY 2002. The reason appears to be lack of available resources rather than any problem with the program itself.

II. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Civil Justice

Civil Justice Reform. Tort reform, including class action reform and medical malpractice liability reform, will not likely be resolved this year and will be an issue in the 108th Congress.

- Class Action Jurisdiction Act – This legislation has passed the House twice but has never been considered in the Senate. The President has endorsed it as a reform that will reduce inefficiency, waste and unfairness in the existing class action system, without curtailing plaintiff's rights or remedies.
  Other related legislation might involve anticipated changes to Rule 23 (governing class actions) that the Supreme Court is expected to propose on or before May 1, 2003. Some of these changes are to allow class members to opt out of the class once the terms of a proposed settlement are known; to allow the court to select class counsel; and to establish procedures for approval of attorney's fee awards. If Congress takes no action they would go into effect as proposed. However, there may be opportunities to strengthen the rule changes by legislation.
- Medical Malpractice Liability -- The House passed the HEALTH Act by vote of 217 – 203. The Senate is unlikely to consider the bill this Congress. However, as the public continues to suffer from increased medical insurance costs, watches doctors withdraw from practices where their insurance costs are prohibitive, and notes the absence of facilities such as trauma centers, there will be increasing pressure on the Senate to move next year.

Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.

C. Regulatory

Civil Justice

FDA Drug Labeling Safe Harbor. The FDA reviews and approves every word on the label of any prescription drug product, and it requires manufacturers to obtain approval before modifying a drug label. Yet many courts permit lawsuits based on a claim that a drug manufacturer's label did not warn of a certain risk – even though the label fully complied with all federal safety requirements. Such lawsuits essentially allow a jury to second-guess the FDA's judgment regarding a product's label and develop labeling policy without considering all the consequences. Empirical evidence shows that these decisions actually jeopardize the public health, since labels that are too complicated or long lead to consumers' ignoring all warnings.

REV_00159228

FDA intends to promulgate a regulation expressly preempting tort failure-to-warn and other claims based on alleged deficiencies in a drug's label, as part of a new rule that will extensively revise drug-labeling requirements. These revised labeling requirements will result in simpler, more focused labels that will better protect the general public health.

This initiative could be unveiled at the Presidential level if desired.

SBA Women Owned Small Business Program

- SBA Women Owned Small Business Program: Congress authorized (but did not mandate) the creation of a new set-aside program for women-owned small businesses to restrict certain federal contracts to bidding by women-owned businesses, which would be the first newly-created set-aside program in this Administration.
- The SBA proposed regulations to implement the program, but they were of questionable constitutionality and withdrawn in the OMB process. Currently, SBA is reevaluating a Congressionally-mandated draft study it had developed to justify the program. After the revised study is complete next year, the Administration will have to determine whether to implement the program.

New Freedom Initiative

OPM Regulations

- The Office of Personnel Management regulations limit which entities can certify that an applicant has a disability. They are the state vocational rehabilitation agencies and the Department of Veterans Affairs. OPM is actively considering a change in regulation to add SSA as a certifying agency. This could streamline the process in allowing Ticket to Work candidates to apply for Federal jobs. This is expected to change in 2003.

A. Achievements.

- Issuance of Executive Orders on Project Labor Agreements and Notification of "Beck" Rights.
- Creation of Office of 21st Century Workforce and appearance by President at 21st Century Workforce Summit (May 2001) to address challenges facing our workforce in the new economy, such as changing workplace demographics and technology.
- Issuance of DOL's ergonomics plan, which features issuance by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) of industry-specific guidelines for ergonomic workplace safety, instead of a far-reaching, onerous, one-size-fits all federal mandate. This action was consistent with the President's campaign statement: "As for OSHA's proposed ergonomics standards, I believe the federal government should provide workers and businesses with information about ergonomic-related injuries, but it should not impose far-reaching federal regulations that are neither clear nor rooted in strong science."
- Participation in record number of Health and Safety Partnerships. Health and Safety Partnerships between labor unions and the Department of Labor are at an all time high. In 2001, labor unions participated in 465 safety partnerships with DOL, including a partnership with the Laborers Union to address the anthrax threat.
- Proposal of "Back to Work Relief" package shortly after September 11, which culminated in the signing into law (early 2002) of a major element of that package -- extended unemployment benefits for thirteen weeks for all dislocated workers.
- Signing into law major expansion and reauthorization of Trade Adjustment Assistance program to provide for assistance for workers impacted by trade, including job training, financial assistance, and, for the first time, assistance with health insurance. Reauthorization of TAA was crucial to passage of Trade Promotion Authority, one of the President's major legislative priorities.
- Pennsylvania Mine Rescue – Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) played a major role in the rescue of the miners at Quecreek Mine in Pennsylvania.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Propose "Compensatory Time" amendment. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose to amend the FLSA to provide private sector employees the option . . . of taking comp time instead of overtime pay." President Bush has twice spoken in favor of comp time since taking office, but has not proposed actual legislation or pushed for enactment of existing legislation.
- Propose amendment to Occupational Safety and Health Act to ensure that private, residential homes will not be subject to OSHA regulations. The "Tools for Parents" document produced during the campaign stated "Governor Bush will propose legislation to amend the Occupational Safety and Health Act to prohibit the Act from being applied to employees who work at home." President Bush has not spoken about this proposal since taking office, but the Department of Labor issued a directive during the Clinton Administration committing to keep OSHA out of home offices, and the directive is still in effect.

- Seek to enact "Paycheck Protection" legislation as part of campaign finance reform legislation. The campaign finance reform fact sheet produced by Governor Bush's campaign pledged that "Governor Bush will accompany the ban on union and corporate soft money with legislation to enact "Paycheck Protection" preventing union bosses from directly spending roughly $300 million in union dues annually -- without members' permission – to support candidates of the bosses' choosing." A campaign finance reform bill was signed into law by the President earlier this year, and efforts to include a "Paycheck Protection" provision were defeated.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative (active legislative issues)

- Davis Bacon in the Homeland Security bill – The current Senate version of the bill creating the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) contains a provision applying Davis-Bacon to construction projects funded with assistance from the DHS. The House bill has no such provision. Some Senate Republicans plan to fight the provision in the Senate, but do not have the votes to win an up-or-down vote. Certain House Republican conferees will vigorously fight in conference to keep the provision out of the final bill.
- Workforce Investment Act Reauthorization – The legislation that authorizes the federally-funded, state-run job training system expires on September 30, 2003 and must be reauthorized before that date. DOL plans to have a legislative proposal ready to send to Congress by January 2003.
- Minimum Wage increase – Democrats will likely continue to try to increase the minimum wage by $1.50 over 18 months.
- Extended Unemployment Insurance Benefits – workers who lost their jobs right after September 11 have already exhausted even the additional 13 weeks of benefits granted by the economic stimulus bill, and the entire extended benefit program ends at the end of Calendar Year 2002. Democrats in both the House and the Senate are already pushing legislation to extend the program and create another 13-week extension. Another extension could cost as much as $11 billion.
- Genetic Discrimination Legislation – The President has endorsed legislation prohibiting employment discrimination based on genetic information, but there is competing legislation in both the House and the Senate. Congress, with technical assistance and encouragement from the Administration, is working on a compromise bill that both Houses could pass. The bills differ mainly over private rights of action and damages levels.
- Unemployment Insurance/Employment Services (UI/ES) Reform – The President's FY '03 budget proposed a comprehensive reform of the UI/ES system to cut employer taxes, return trust fund money to the states and gradually shift responsibility for all administrative costs to the states. The proposal is stalled in Congress.

B. Regulatory

- Revision of Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) Regulations -- The Clinton Administration issued several regulations implementing the FMLA that have made it extremely difficult and onerous to implement. The Supreme Court recently struck down one such regulation as an improper interpretation of the statute. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) Regulations -- Certain "white-collar" professions are exempt from FLSA requirements, but the regulations defining these exemptions are vague, out-dated, and extremely difficult to administer. Employers and employees alike agree that these regulations need to be updated. DOL plans to seek comment on and propose changes to these regulations.
- Revision of Regulations Governing Union Financial Disclosures – DOL plans to seek comment on proposed revisions in late November-December 2002. See discussion in new policy recommendation #2 below.

Drug Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

1. Presidential Events: Announcement of Director of National Drug Control Policy, May 10, 2001 ("announcement"); Signing Drug-Free Communities Act Reauthorization Bill, December 14, 2001 ("signing"); Remarks on the 2002 National Drug Control Strategy, February 12, 2002 ("strategy").
2. Stopping Use Before it Starts: Education and Community Action—Implementing the first priority of the National Drug Control Strategy has produced accomplishments across all sectors relevant to drug prevention: communities, schools, parents, and work places.
   a. Empower Community and Faith-Based Groups to Fight Drugs (campaign, announcement, signing, strategy)—On track to meet President's commitment to double community coalitions in five years. The Drug-Free Communities Act has been successfully reauthorized and appropriations are on track for FY02 and FY03. The program includes expansion in rural and under-served areas and the continued involvement of faith leaders.
   b. Ensure Students have Access to Drug-Free Schools (campaign, strategy)—No Child Left Behind reauthorized the Safe and Drug-Free Schools program, requiring accountability for grant recipients pursuant to the President's commitment. Department of Education has begun work on implementation of the new accountability with OMB and ONDCP. Additionally, ONDCP and Education have produced and are distributing a guide to drug testing for schools.
   c. Mobilize Parents in the War on Drugs (campaign, announcement, strategy)—ONDCP has used the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign to reach parents and increase their efficacy in dealing with their kids on drug abuse. Additionally, we have worked to develop a parent drug corps. Although the Appropriations Committees appear poised to deny our request for a second year, we have provided grants from existing authority at SAMHSA to support the efforts of non-profits to develop a parent drug corps in several states.
   d. Promote Drug-Free Workplaces (campaign)—The Administration continues to implement a small business drug-free workplace program, although at a lower funding level than the President originally committed ($3M per year v. $5M per year). Additionally, the National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has launched the @Work program, which enrolls corporations in a program to provide drug-free workplace materials through existing corporate infrastructure (e.g., intranets, company newsletters).
3. Healing America's Drug Users: Getting Treatment Resources Where They Are Needed—Health and Human Services is on track to meet the budgetary commitment of an additional $1.6B in treatment resources and doubling the budget for the National Institute on Drug Abuse over five years. Department of Justice has met the President's commitment to drug-free federal prisons with an outstanding array of anti-drug programs that provide a great example for state correctional systems. Additionally, in the Residential Substance Abuse Treatment (RSAT) program, which provides funds for treatment to States for use in correctional settings, we requested a $10M increase in FY02, and received $7M, for a total of $70M. In FY03, we requested an additional $7M.

4. Disrupting the Market: Attacking the Economic Basis of the Drug Trade
   a. Secure and Defend our Borders (campaign)—The Administration has provided $100M over the first two years of a $250M over 5 year commitment to reimburse local governments for prosecuting drug cases on the southwest border.
   b. Clean up Meth labs (campaign)—The campaign paper committed $100M over 5 years at DEA for Meth lab clean up, and the funds were provided through the retooled COPS program.
5. Fighting the War on Terror (signing, strategy)—The President has effectively linked the issues of drugs and terror in his public statements, demonstrating that the purchase of illegal drugs funds terrorist activity and violence. The National Youth Anti-Drug Media Campaign has used this theme in a group of ads released at the Super Bowl and a second group to be released in September.
6. Oppose legalization (announcement)—The President came out strongly against drug legalization and Director Walters has visited and will continue to visit the three states that have legalization ballot initiatives this fall—Arizona, Ohio, and Nevada.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Healing America's Drug Users—While the Administration has made substantial progress on providing treatment, particularly in the budget, some of the President's policy commitments have not yet been met.
   a. Treatment—While we have met the funding commitment, we are still working to fully implement three policy changes: (1) making state grant awards performance-based, and (2) ensuring that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups, (3) targeting resources to the greatest need. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Federal funds will be provided to support drug treatment programs that prove demonstrated results. And faith-based and community-based organizations will be fully eligible as well, provided they can demonstrate the same effectiveness.")
   b. Drug Courts—We have not fully met our funding commitment to the drug courts program, increasing funding by $50M over five years, nor have we made policy changes to improve drug courts. We did not request an increase in FY02 maintaining the request at the base $50M. In the FY03 budget, we requested an increase of $2M. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Drug Courts: Increase funding by $50 million over five years for drug courts, share best practices, and hold them accountable for results. Under a Bush Administration, the Department of Justice will support local drug courts that combine drug testing with effective monitoring.")
2. Stopping Use Before It Starts—Although we have made progress in ensuring that students have access to drug-free schools, there remains important implementation work to do on No Child Left Behind and we have not increased funding for Safe and Drug Free Schools, despite a campaign commitment to add $20M/year for five years. (See "Turning Back the Tide of Drugs," October 6, 2000: "Work to make all schools

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. ONDCP Reauthorization—ONDCP's organic statute, including authorizations for several of its programmatic responsibilities.
2. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) Reauthorization—HHS prevention and treatment programs, including the principle drug-related block grant.
3. Coverdell Drug-Free Workplace Reauthorization—Grants to support technical assistance and services for small business drug-free workplace programs.
4. Faith Bill (if not completed in '02)—Provisions allowing faith-based organizations to receive federal assistance for treatment and prevention services.
5. Department of Homeland Security Authorization (if not completed in '02)—Many counter-drug law enforcement functions are responsibilities of the new DHS.
6. Department of Justice Reauthorization (if not completed in '02)—includes most drug enforcement agencies, drug courts program.

C. Regulatory—None.

Environment and Natural Resource Policy

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

The first 18 months of this Administration has been marked by the fulfillment of a wide range of commitments in the environmental and natural resource areas, as outlined below. Two Presidential Initiatives – Clear Skies and Healthy Forests – represent priority, "signature," policies that will require strong and coordinated, multi-agency efforts to achieve Congressional approval and subsequent implementation.

1. Brownfields Cleanup and Restoration (campaign commitment): On January 11, 2002, President Bush signed historic legislation that will facilitate cleanup and redevelopment of contaminated industrial sites – "brownfields" – improving the environment, protecting public health, creating jobs, and revitalizing communities. The President's '03 budget proposal provides $200 million – twice the '02 level of funding – for EPA's brownfields program, $171 million of which is for grants for states and local communities.
2. Clear Skies Initiative (campaign commitment): On February 14, 2002, President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced by Senator Smith and Congressmen Tauzin and Barton. The Initiative, contrary to the campaign commitment, does not include carbon dioxide which is now addressed in the President's climate change policy.
3. Global Climate Change (campaign commitment): The Administration is partially on track to meet this commitment through the announcement of three initiatives focused on science, technology, and mitigation. On June 11, 2001, the President announced a new commitment to develop a science-based climate change policy (Climate Change Research Initiative), and a new commitment to funding research on "breakthrough technologies" (National Climate Change Technology Initiative) that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. On February 14, 2002, the President announced a new approach to climate change that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. A range of domestic and international initiatives accompanied the February 14 announcement. The National Climate Change Technology Initiative has not evolved sufficiently, (see Outstanding Issues Section).
   a. Created the Climate Change Research Initiative (1st-year commitment): The objective of this initiative is to promote a vision focused on the effective use of scientific knowledge in policy and management decisions, and continued evaluation of management strategies and choices. To meet this commitment to climate research, the U.S. will spend $1.7 billion in FY'03 for basic research on climate change, $40 million of which is dedicated to leverage other funding to address major gaps in scientific understanding including the carbon cycle and the role of black soot, aerosols, and clouds.

b. Climate Change Mitigation Policy (2nd-year commitment): The President announced a new strategy that commits America to cut greenhouse gas intensity by 18% over the next 10 years. To help meet this commitment, the President directed the Secretary of Energy to substantially improve the registry to enhance measurement accuracy, reliability and verifiability of voluntary emissions reductions and to give transferable credits to companies that can show real emissions reductions. Numerous other domestic and international initiatives will help meet this goal.

4. Energy Project Streamlining (1st-year commitment): Executive Order #13212 was signed on May 18, 2001. The White House Task Force on Energy Project Streamlining was charged with conducting a top-to-bottom review of federal procedures in order to find ways to expedite the review of permits for projects that will increase the production, transmission, and conservation of energy, while maintaining safety, public health, and environmental protections.
5. Restoring the Everglades (campaign commitment): To fulfill a campaign pledge, President Bush and Florida Governor Jeb Bush, in January 2002, signed an agreement that ensures adequate water supplies are available to support the 30-year Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan (CERP). This agreement further bolsters the Bush Administration's strong support for the 30-year, $7.8 billion CERP, the most comprehensive and ambitious ecosystem restoration project ever undertaken in the United States. The President's FY'03 budget proposal includes $245 million for Everglades restoration.
6. Protecting our National Wildlife Refuges: The President's FY'03 budget proposes a record $376 million, up $57 million from FY'02, for our National Wildlife Refuges as we prepare to celebrate the system's 100-year anniversary on March 14, 2003. Opportunity for White House participation and profile in this celebration. The Department of the Interior's Centennial Campaign will improve resource conservation, visitor programs, and facilities on wildlife refuges nationwide and increase visibility for wildlife refuges by strengthening and expanding partnerships.
7. Landowner Incentive Program (campaign commitment): Fulfilling a campaign pledge, President Bush has created new landowner incentives and private stewardship grant programs, which Congress funded at $50 million. The President's FY'03 Budget includes an additional $10 million – for a total of $60 million – for these programs. The Department of Interior also is seeking $100 million for a new Cooperative Conservation Initiative to protect and conserve the environment through partnerships that will tap the ingenuity, imagination, and innovative spirit of American citizens. Challenge grants will be awarded competitively to landowners, environmental groups, land-user groups, communities and local and state governments. In addition, the President signed legislation temporarily ending the estate tax, which will allow more lands to stay in family ownership and prevent habitat fragmentation.
8. Oppose Breaching Dams in the Pacific Northwest (campaign commitment): The Administration continues to uphold this position. The Administration has supported local efforts to restore salmon runs and provided $20 million in funding for local salmon recovery projects.
9. Conservation Title of the Farm Bill: The Administration worked with the Congressional conference committee to ensure a forward-looking farm policy that more than doubles the funding to enhance conservation and environmental stewardship on private lands. On May 13, 2002, President Bush signed the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act into law, which will add $17.1 billion over the next ten years to existing programs.

10. Klamath Basin Cabinet-level Panel (1st-year commitment): On March 1, 2002, the President established a Cabinet-level panel to recommend within 18 months ways to enhance water quality and quantity in Oregon's Klamath River Basin. President Bush named Secretaries Norton, Veneman, Evans, and Chairman Connaughton to head the panel.
11. Tropical Forest Conservation Act (campaign commitment): On track to meet the President's TFCA commitments. Agreements with Belize, El Salvador, and Bangladesh, and the Philippines have been completed. The President's FY '03 budget request of $40 million for "debt for nature" agreements with developing countries nearly triples funding for this successful program, which preserves species habitat and sequesters greenhouse gases.
12. Offshore Drilling (campaign commitment): On track to support position on a moratorium against offshore drilling in Florida. The Administration has taken active steps to ensure no drilling will occur off the coast of Florida, in two distinct actions announced in May, 2002, (lease buy back at Destin Dome and purchase of drilling rights in the Everglades). The Administration also adjusted Lease Sale 181 to further ensure there would be no drilling offshore in Florida. Resolving controversial leases along California coastline could present opportunity; complex litigation, however, is now in process.
13. Fully Fund the Global Environment Facility (2nd-year commitment): The 2002 U.S. pledge includes $107.5 million per year for each of the four years of the replenishment period, plus another $70 million in the fourth year if the GEF meets a set of performance measurements agreed to by donors. In addition, the Administration is requesting $70.3 million annually for the next three years to pay off U.S. arrears accumulated during the previous Administration. The GEF is the primary international institution for transferring energy and sequestration technologies to the developing world under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC).
14. Eliminating Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs): To protect the American people and the world from the dangers of 12 chemicals that persist in the environment long after their use, President Bush announced the United States' support for the Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants. Governor Whitman signed the treaty, which bans or restricts the production, use, and/or release of 12 chemicals that have been linked to numerous adverse effects in humans and animals, including cancer, central nervous system damage, reproductive disorders, and immune system disruption. The Administration sent the treaty to the U.S. Senate for ratification in April 2002.
15. Forest Health Initiative (2nd-year commitments): On August 22, 2002, the President announced a new initiative that will significantly reduce the damage caused by catastrophic wildfires, by removing unnecessary regulatory obstacles that hinder active forest management to improve forest health. He called upon Congress to work with his Administration to pass legislation that addresses the unhealthy forest crisis by expediting procedures for forest thinning and restoration projects.

16. Northwest Forest Plan: On August 22, 2002 the President also emphasized the promise of the 1994 Northwest Forest Plan to ensure sustainable forest management and appropriate timber production. On September 12, 2002, a House bill was introduced to implement the Administration's strategy.
17. World Summit on Sustainable Development (WSSD): The WSSD was successful in four major areas. First, the Plan of Action and Head of State Declaration reaffirmed the importance of good national governance, national investment in sound economic and social policies and the shared responsibilities between developed and developing countries as a basis for development. As such, the WSSD reinforced the new "compact for development" launched at the Monterrey Financing for Development Conference. Second, the WSSD acknowledged the importance of partnerships among governments, private sector and non-government organizations as an importance new means of implementing the WSSD action Plan. Over 220 partnerships (with $235 million in resources) were identified in advance off the Summit, and around 60 partnerships were announced during the Summit by a variety of countries. Third, the Action Plan focused on obtaining concrete results, many with specific timetables and achievable targets. Fourth, the US led and announced partnerships in four major areas: $970 million in investments over 3 years on water and sanitation projects, largely in Africa; $43 million in 2003 to leverage an estimated $400 million in clean energy for rural and poor communities; $90 million in 2003 for sustainable agricultural programs; $53 million for forest protection in the Congo Basin. The U.S. also reaffirmed its commitment of $2.3 billion through 2003 on health and combating HIV/AIDS and infectious diseases.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Fully Fund the Land and Water Conservation Fund (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to fully fund DOI's Land and Water Conservation Fund at $900m. In our FY'02 and 03 budgets, the Administration significantly increased LWCF funding. The FY'03 budget proposed for LWCF was fully funded at $900m, although it did so by combining existing non-LWCF grant programs with LWCF grant programs. The Interior appropriation bills in Congress are not adhering to that budgeted amount, however, because certain programs, such as a new $100 million Cooperative Conservation Initiative, are not funded in the pending legislation. The Administration faces two challenges in FY04. First, we must devise a better strategy to fully fund the Cooperative Conservation Initiative. Second, certain environmental groups will be disappointed unless there is a large increase in funding for federal land acquisition. Thus, we should devise an outreach approach with groups supportive of the state grant programs that are being increased.
2. Protecting National Parks (campaign commitment): In a campaign pledge, then-Governor Bush committed to seek funds for National Parks to eliminate within five years—by 2006—a $4.9 billion maintenance backlog identified in a rough 1996 National Park Service estimate. Although the 1996 survey was not a true survey of the actual maintenance backlog—because it also included some cyclic maintenance needs and "wish-list" items—the Administration's budgets have attempted to meet that $4.9b goal. Facilities maintenance constitutes $2.2 billion of the $4.9b total, and, if current funding commitments continue, the Administration will meet that goal. Road maintenance and construction constitutes $2.7billion of the $4.9b goal. That portion will be reauthorized and started but not completed by 2006 because the funding stream will be derived from the next transportation bill over the FY04-09 timeframe. Moreover, to meet the road construction goal, the Administration will need to prioritize that funding choice over certain other choices in the transportation bill such as funding for National Forest roads and highway safety.

3. National Climate Change Technology Initiative (1st-year commitment): Promotes funding research on "breakthrough technologies" that will help meet the long-run climate change challenge. This program has not evolved sufficiently in interagency deliberations. While the Administration has made substantial budgetary commitments, some of the related programmatic commitments have not been adequately agreed upon or articulated.
4. President's Award for Private Stewardship (campaign commitment): Establish this award to fulfill the President's campaign promise. A draft Executive Order is currently being reviewed.
5. Missouri River (campaign commitment): The President committed the Corps of Engineers to consult with the Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) under the Endangered Species Act to develop a change in the Master Manual that governs the Corps' operation of the Missouri River. Its release is anticipated in 2003.
6. Environmental Compliance at Federal Facilities (campaign commitment): The President committed during the campaign to require all federal facilities to meet all environmental standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Clear Skies: President Bush announced an initiative that will cut power plant emissions of the three major air pollutants – nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and mercury – by 70 percent by 2018. In late July 2002, the President's Clear Skies legislation was introduced in Congress.
2. EPA Cabinet Elevation: A Bill has been introduced and the President has expressed his support.
3. Energy Bill: The Energy Bill includes tax incentives for renewable energy, cogeneration, and new technology. Also included in the Bill is a significant climate change title that the Administration opposes. While it will not likely survive the conference, legislative activity on this issue is very likely in 2003-2004.
4. Forest Health Initiative: The Administration is pursuing administrative and legislative reforms to implement the President's August 2002 initiative.
5. Commission on Oceans Policy: The Commission will be issuing its final report and recommendations to the President and Congress in March 2003, at which time implementing action will likely be required of the Administration, in close consultation with Congress. CEQ and other agencies are providing ongoing support to the Commission, the President, and Congress in this important policy issue.

C. Regulatory

a. New Source Review: EPA and DOE forwarded a report to the President, in accordance with the National Energy Plan, recommending changes to the Clean Air Act New Source Review program. On June 13, EPA released a policy which outlined the proposed changes to the rules. The changes are in two parts: (1) rules that we will finalize that were originally proposed by the Clinton Administration. These deal with regulatory flexibility incentives for pollution control equipment and two accounting changes. The first will provide a more rigorous baseline calculation against which potential emission increases are measured. The second will require emission levels to be determined on an 'actual emissions compared to future actual emissions' basis. And (2) a proposed rule that will clarify what projects will be excluded from the New Source Review permitting process because they are routine maintenance, repair or replacement. OMB is currently reviewing both of these rule packages and intends to publish them in the near future.
b. Total Maximum Daily Load (TMDL): In response to concerns expressed by Congress, the National Academy of Sciences, and others, EPA Administrator Whitman extended the effective date for the controversial TMDL rule through April 2003. The TMDL program will continue to operate under rules issued in 1985 and 1991, while the Administrator develops a more flexible and effective approach to TMDLs. The Administration will adopt rules to restore polluted waterbodies that are based on sound science and which will better integrate the several tools in the Clean Water Act to encourage clean-up actions even in advance of TMDLs.
c. Combined Animal Feeding Operation (CAFO): EPA is currently working with State agencies to determine whether drinking water sources are impacted by upstream agricultural sources, and then advising on development and implementation of programs to address CAFO's and other sources.
d. Wetlands guidance and rulemaking: This fall EPA and the Corps of Engineers will initiate advance notice of proposed rulemaking to solicit public comment on issues relating to the extent of federal jurisdiction over waters of the United States, including tributaries and adjacent wetlands, for purposes of regulation under the Clean Water Act and related federal laws. The rulemaking is in response to a 2001 United States Supreme Court decision which limited federal jurisdiction over certain isolated intrastate isolated waters but which raised questions regarding jurisdiction over other waters as well.
e. DOE regulations for voluntary greenhouse gas reduction registry: As a part of the Climate Change Strategy, the Administration is committed to substantially improving the current voluntary emission reduction registration program under section 1605(b) of the 1992 Energy Policy Act and provide transferable credits. Secretaries Evans, Abraham, Veneman, and EPA Administrator Whitman made recommendations in a letter to the President in July 2002, to start a stakeholder process in the next six months; finalization of new standards by January 2004.
f. Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE): A key recommendation of the President's National Energy Policy directed the Secretary to undertake an immediate review of vehicle fuel efficiency standards. The Administration is dedicated to a responsibly crafted CAFE standard that is based on sound science, and takes into account passenger safety, economic concerns, and disparate impact on the U.S. versus foreign fleet of automobiles. New standards should extend to include light trucks, vans, and SUV's.

g. Renewable fuels regulations: The energy bill will likely contain language that will require regulatory changes in the federal reformulated gasoline program. The final conference report may very likely repeal the current 2% oxygenate requirement, ban MTBE (a widely used additive to bring down toxics and criteria pollutants), and impose an ethanol mandate. There may be new opt in/opt out language for states as well, with related regulatory activities checked by legislation.

h. Transportation Streamlining: DOT is chairing a "Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force" that will report to the President through the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality. The task force will formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms that enable each agency required by law to conduct environmental reviews with respect to high - priority infrastructure projects to ensure completion in a timely and environmentally responsible manner. The task force will complete a report to the President once a year.

i. Improving the implementation of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA): The NEPA Task Force is examining how federal agencies can improve NEPA implementation and is currently gathering and assessing public comments. The Task Force plans to submit its report on making NEPA more effective and efficient to CEQ by the end of the calendar year. Until the Task Force reviews all of the comments, it is premature to conclude whether the report will include recommendations to update or revise sections of the CEQ Regulations for Implementing the Procedural Provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act (40 CFR Parts 1500-1508).

j. Endangered Species Act: The Department of the Interior is improving incentive and Section 7 consultation tools available under the Endangered Species Act. Scheduled to be completed in 2003, these changes include greater private landowner protections under safe harbor agreements, extension of safe-harbor-like protections to the Fish & Wildlife Service's Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program, and advancement of conservation banking as an incentive-based tool for listed species mitigation.

k. Grazing: The Department of the Interior is developing options for greater citizen involvement in the administration of BLM grazing permits and the building and sustaining of working landscapes on public lands.

l. National Monuments: The Department of the Interior is developing a range of options for expanded citizen involvement in the stewardship of BLM National Monuments. Those options include collaborative and citizen-based participation in development of monument land-use plans.

m. Dioxin Reassessment: EPA will soon send a reassessment of the health effects of dioxin exposure. It will reconfirm EPA's position that dioxin is a toxic chemical that can cause both cancer and non-cancer adverse health effects. The reassessment also identifies animal fats in the commercial food supply (beef, pork, poultry, dairy, eggs, and fish) as the primary route of human exposure. The IWG will review the reassessment and determine whether the substantial questions about the health effects warrant a review by the National Academy of Sciences. The IWG, through the Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, have already engaged the National Academy of Sciences to examine the potential trade-offs between the benefits of a balanced diet and the potential risk of dioxin exposure. The Academy is also examining potential opportunities for reducing dioxin input into the food supply.

II. Looking Back: Review of 2002

A. Achievements.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps (1/30/02): During his State of the Union, the President announced his creation by Executive Order of the USA Freedom Corps as a Coordinating Council and office to be housed at the White House. The Mission of the USA Freedom Corps is to foster a culture of service, citizenship and responsibility.

- Launched Citizen Corps Effort (2/1/02): More than 50,000 individuals have signed up online to participate in the newly created Citizen Corps. They join hundreds of thousands of individuals already volunteering at the local level with Citizen Corps-supported programs including CERT, Neighborhood Watch, and Volunteers in Police Service. More than 160 communities around the country have officially registered Citizen Corps Councils to coordinate local emergency prevention, preparation and response volunteer activity.
  - ✓ Launched Citizen Corps Citizens Preparedness Guidebook (2/1/02): The guidebook produced by the National Crime Prevention Council with support from the Department of Justice and the USA Freedom Corps, gives Americans guidance on how to prepare for disasters and prevent crime in our homes, in our neighborhoods, at work, at the airport, in places of worship, and in public spaces.
  - ✓ Launched Neighborhood Watch Expansion (3/6/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the expansion of Neighborhood Watch with the National Sheriffs Association. The launch included a new website, how-to materials for local communities and a public service ad campaign.
  - ✓ Launched Volunteers in Police Service (5/30/02): General John Ashcroft and the USA Freedom Corps launched the Volunteers in Police Service (VIPS) program with the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP). The goal of VIPS is to provide support for resource-constrained law enforcement agencies by tapping civilian volunteers to supplement their community's law enforcement professionals in order to free up officers for frontline duty. The number of registered VIPS programs has doubled since the launch.
  - ✓ Launched First Medical Reserve Corps Grants (9/02): On July 19, 2002, HHS announced the availability of $2 million in grants, during FY02, to help local officials develop volunteer Medical Reserve corps units. The MRC will strengthen local communities' capacities to respond to disasters and emergencies in the community, as well as strengthen the local public health infrastructure.
  - ✓ Launched Community Emergency Response Team Initiative (2/1/02): The Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) program helps train people to be better prepared to respond to emergency situations in their communities. CERT members support first responders in emergencies, provide assistance to victims, organize spontaneous volunteers at a disaster site, and collect disaster intelligence for first responders. Over the next two years, CERT aims to double the number of participants, with over 400,000 individuals completing the 18 plus hours of training and funding was secured in the supplemental budget to achieve goals.

- ✓ Appointed State Citizen Corps Contacts (6/02): 50 governors have assigned a state point of contact for Citizen Corps. From 7/31-8/1 these state contacts participated in a FEMA conference with select federal agencies, local governments and experts from volunteer agencies.

- Launched Business Strengthening America (6/13/02): In June, President Bush met with business leaders who are working on a self-directed effort to get businesses involved in supporting and promoting volunteer service by their employees and customers. Financial services companies, grocers, hospitality companies and entertainment and media businesses are among those who have already made major commitments to support volunteer service in response to the President's "Call to Service." These companies have announced new policies, including paid leave time for employees to participate in volunteer service, sponsorship of volunteer projects involving employees, and the creation of resources to engage customers in volunteer service, and working to make a person's Record of Service relevant to getting a job.

- Launched Public Service Announcement Campaign (7/30/02): The advertising campaign includes television, print, radio, and web products. President Bush appears in each of the ads, saying, "When you help your neighbors, you help your Nation. Everyone can do something. "New York Yankee Mariano Rivera appears in English and Spanish language versions of a radio and television ad, actress Angie Harmon appears in a second television and radio ad, and former Senators Robert Dole and John Glenn appear together in a third radio and television ad.

  The USA Freedom Corps worked with the Corporation for National and Community Service and the Ad Council, with the support of the Walt Disney Company and Department of Justice, to develop the campaign featuring usafreedomcorps.gov as a way to get involved. In addition the USA Freedom Corps is the fulfillment mechanism at the end of three Entertainment Council television commercials and movie trailers that have been running nationwide since May.

- Launched USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network and Redesigned USA Freedom Corps Website (7/30/02): The USA Freedom Corp website is the concrete representation of the USA Freedom Corps Volunteer Network – a massive public-private enterprise on the web that enables volunteers to search according to their interests and their geographic location from the largest clearinghouse of volunteer service opportunities ever assembled – 50,000 organizations around the country and the world, with millions of service opportunities

  The search function draws upon well established non-profit organizations, including America's Promise, the National Mentoring Partnership, the Points of Light Foundation, SERVEnet, the United Way, and VolunteerMatch, as well as the federal government agencies that are a part of the USA Freedom Corps Coordinating Council – AmeriCorps, Senior Corps, Peace Corps and Citizen Corps. The Department of the Interior's one-stop registration center for federal, state and local government agencies that need and use volunteers can also be accessed through the new search function.

- Launched American History, Civics and Service Initiative (9/17/02):
  - ✓ Launched NEH "We the People" initiative and President announced significant, ongoing investment in the program through the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), including competitive grant programs and other public programs to support the teaching of American History and Civics.
  - ✓ Launched "Our Documents" initiative of the National Archives and Records Administration, in collaboration with National History Day, the Corporation for National and Community Service and the USA Freedom Corps. Through web materials, a lesson plan sourcebook, and teacher workshops, 100 American milestone documents from the holdings of the National Archives will be made available to teachers and students.
  - ✓ Announced that the "We the People" Forum on American History, Civics, and Service, to be cosponsored by the NEH, the Corporation for National and Community Service, and the U.S. Department of Education, will be held in February 2003. The purpose of the forum is to call public attention to the need for more and better American history, civics, and service and draw attention to promising practices in history, civics, and student service, as well as innovative initiatives.

- Launch of Students in Service to America Initiative (8/31/02): The President encouraged America's students to begin a service activity or project this school year and introduced the new Students in Service to America guidebook for educators to help them enlist America's young people in service to their communities and develop the habits of civic participation, responsibility, and service. More than 130,000 public and private elementary and secondary schools, homeschools, and after-school programs around the country received copies of the Students in Service to America guidebook, a CD-ROM, posters and other teaching and community resources. In addition, CNCS dedicated the time and talents of 25,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps volunteers to support student service activities and service-learning programs.

- Release of new Americorps Regulations (6/02): In June, CNCS issued final AmeriCorps regulations implementing a portion of the reforms called for in the President's principles, including: greater flexibility in the use of AmeriCorps members by nonprofit organizations; an explicit statement of the eligibility of religious organizations for AmeriCorps grants; reductions in administrative burdens on grantees; strengthening the prohibition on political activities; and making the education award more flexible for use by seniors and others.

- Awarding of CNCS Homeland Security Grants (7/02): In July, CNCS in concert with the USA Freedom Corps and the Homeland Security Council, awarded its first homeland security grants totaling $10.3 million to support more than 37,000 AmeriCorps members and Senior Corps and other volunteers in 43 non-profit and public agencies in 26 states and the District of Columbia to:

- ✓ use volunteers to develop and carry out emergency response plans;
- ✓ expand Citizen Corps programs related to crime and health; and
- ✓ develop public health strategies for responding to emergencies.

- Freedom Corps Greeters (ongoing): On more than 60 trips around the country, President Bush has met with volunteers who are answering his "Call to Service" to highlight their volunteer service as an example of the dedication he is hoping to instill in all Americans through the USA Freedom Corps.

- Response to President's Call to Service (ongoing):
  - ✓ VolunteerMatch, one of the groups matching volunteers with opportunities through the USA Freedom Corps website, reports that more people are serving. The group measured a 72 percent increase in matching during the first six months of 2002 after USA Freedom Corps was launched, compared to the same period in 2001.
  - ✓ The number of potential AmeriCorps members is growing, with a 95 percent increase in online applications compared with pre-State of the Union levels.
  - ✓ Potential volunteers with Senior Corps, another CNCS program, have contributed to a 60 percent jump in web visitors since January.
  - ✓ More than 76,000 potential Peace Corps Volunteers have requested applications since the President's State of the Union address - a 40 percent increase over the same period in 2001. 34 countries have requested Peace Corps volunteers since State of the Union.
  - ✓ More than 160 Citizen Corps Councils have been created around the country.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Federal Program Service Opportunities: Continue to expand and strengthen federal service programs, including the Peace Corps, Citizen Corps, AmeriCorps, and Senior Corps, including official launch of Medical Reserve Corps and Terrorism Information and Prevention System programs.

- Citizen Service Act: The President sent his "Principles and Reforms for a Citizen Service Act" to Congress on April 9, 2002. HR 4854, the Citizen Service Act of 2002, was introduced by Rep. Pete Hoekstra (R-MI) and Rep. Tim Roemer (D-IN) on May 24, 2002 and was reported by voice vote by the full House Education and the Workforce Committee on June 20, 2002. The bill awaits House Floor action. Senators Gregg and Kennedy are expected to introduce a companion bill shortly. The bill would reauthorize for five years the programs administered by CNCS and implement the following reforms, consistent with the President's policies:
  - ✓ Support and encourage greater engagement of citizens in volunteering;
  - ✓ Make Federal funds more responsive to state and local needs;
  - ✓ Make Federal support more accountable and effective; and
  - ✓ Provide greater assistance to community organizations, both secular and faith-based.
- Corporation for National and Community Service Appropriations: CNCS and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the $296 million increase from appropriated levels the President requested for AmeriCorps, Senior Corps and Learn and Serve America for FY 2003.

REV_00159257

- Peace Corps Reauthorization: Even though Peace Corps is fully authorized through FY 2003, because of heightened interest in the Peace Corps as a result of the President's new policy, Senator Dodd and Representative Kirk have already introduced bipartisan bills in the Senate and House, respectively, to reauthorize the Peace Corps and to meet the President's commitment to double the number of Peace Corps Volunteers over the next five years.

- Peace Corps Appropriations: Peace Corps and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the Presidents full funding request of $320 million for FY 2003. This is the amount requested in the President's budget to expand the number of volunteers from less than 7,000 today to 8,200 in FY 2003, on the path to nearly doubling the number of volunteers by FY 2007.

- Citizen Corps Appropriations: The Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Department of Justice, the Department of Health and Human Services and the USA Freedom Corps are working closely with appropriators to secure the President's funding request of $195 million for FY 2003 to support Citizen Corps initiatives, including Citizen Corps Councils, CERT, Neighborhood Watch and Medical Reserve Corps.

- Civics: Commitment made on September 17 for "significant ongoing" investment in American History and civics education. Internal discussions have revolved around $100 million over three years starting in the 2004 budget. There has not been consensus reached in the Administration on total or mix of new vs. redirected funds.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- See Citizen Service Act, Peace Corps reauthorization and appropriations request descriptions above. In addition, funding for the American History and Civics initiative through the National Endowment for the Humanities will need to be requested.

Health Care Policy

II. LOOKING BACK: REVIEW OF '01 AND '02

A. Achievements (See also NEC Health Care Policy)..

1. Presidential Events:

- March 21, 2001-- Patients' Bill of Rights (strategy). The President addressed the American College of Cardiology to announce his principles for patients' rights legislation as Congress began debating the issue.
- May 21, 2001 –Global Fund to Fight AIDS (announcement). The President announced the United States' commitment to supporting the new Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria.
- August 9, 2001--Stem Cell Research Policy (announcement). Speaking from the Crawford Ranch during a nation-wide television broadcast, the President announced his decision to prohibit federal funding of research on stem cells derived from live human embryos.
- December 6, 2001--Director of the National Cancer Institute (announcement). The President announced the appointment of Dr. von Eschenbach to head the NCI and discussed four principles that will guide research efforts there.
- February 11, 2002-- Health Care Agenda (strategy). Speaking at the University of Wisconsin Medical School, the President enumerated his entire health care agenda as part of a vision of a patient controlled quality health care system.
- March 26, 2002-- Director of the National Institutes of Health and the Surgeon General (announcement). The President announced the nominees to be two major health care officials. As NIH Director, Dr. Zerhouni was tasked with the issues of the human genome, stem cell research, and biodefense. Dr. Carmona was nominated to use the post of Surgeon General to promote preventive health and to reduce the incidence of diabetes and obesity.
- April 10, 2002-- Cloning Ban (strategy). In response to Senate debate, the President defined the need for a comprehensive ban on human cloning and announced his support of legislation sponsored by Senators Brownback and Landrieu.
- April 29, 2002-- Improving Mental Health Care (strategy). The President participated in a local mental health round table with Senator Domenici and then addressed health care providers at the University of New Mexico Medical Campus. The President signed an EO establishing the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, and announced that he would work with Congress to pass federal mental health parity legislation in 2002.
- June 19, 2002-- New Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative (announcement). The President announced a new $500 million International Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative that seeks to prevent the transmission of HIV/AIDS from mothers to infants and to improve health care delivery in Africa and the Caribbean.
- June 20, 2002-- HealthierUS Initiative (announcement). The President launched a new initiative to draw upon the resources of the federal government to promote the value of fitness in reducing the incidence and severity of chronic health conditions.

- July 25, 2002-- Proposal to Address Medical Liability Crisis (strategy). In response to a new HHS study highlighting the higher costs and lower quality of care resulting from the broken liability system, President Bush proposed major legislative reforms to address the medical liability crisis.

2. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – The President negotiated House-passed legislation that fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights that would "provide patient protections, like those passed in Texas, to ensure quality of care from health providers. Texas is recognized as having one of the strongest patients' bill of rights in the country."* It has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. The bill puts medical decisions in the hands of physicians, instead of insurance companies; provides independent, binding external medical review for denials of care, and gives patients meaningful legal remedies who have been harmed by an HMO's denial of medical care.

3. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:
   - Community Health Centers (CHCs) - The Administration's FY 2002 and 2003 budgets follow through on the President's campaign promise to double the number of people served in CHCs by creating 1,200 new and expanded CHC sites over a five-year period. CHCs provide critical primary health care services to uninsured individuals regardless of their ability to pay. There are areas in the country that still do not have access to basic health care services and these new resources will help new and existing CHCs to serve a greater number of people.

4. Supporting Medical Research:
   - National Institutes of Health (NIH) – The President promised to support medical research by working with Congress to enact a record increase for the NIH, and he will have fulfilled his campaign promise to double the NIH budget from the 1998 level of $13.6 billion when the proposed 2003 budget of $27.3 billion is enacted. The NIH is the world's preeminent and largest medical research organization. NIH research has already led to many medical breakthroughs, including lifesaving vaccines, new cancer therapies, human genome sequencing and effective drugs for the treatment of mental illness. Completing this historic increase furthers NIH's efforts to improve the prevention, detection, and treatment of the diseases and conditions that affect the lives of all Americans.
   - Stem Cell Research – The President announced his decision to allow medical research using embryonic stem cells while still preserving the value and sanctity of human life. This policy permits federal funding of research using certain existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but does not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional live human embryos. Scientists will explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying illnesses. As part of the decision, the President created a new President's Council on Bioethics, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

REV_00159260

5. Combating HIV/AIDS
   - Global HIV/AIDS: Between the Global Fund and the MTCT Initiative, the 2003 budget for global HIV/AIDS activities will be 82% higher than the amount provided by Congress in 2001.
   - Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – The President became the first world leader to accept a new challenge to combat global AIDS by committing the U.S. to financially supporting the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria. The U.S. remains the single largest donor to this multilateral fund – contributing $500 million through FY '03. The United States continues to be actively involved in influencing the structure, development and implementation of the Global Fund. By October of 2002, over $600 million worth of grants in over thirty countries will have been awarded, and disbursement of these funds is imminent pending the finalization of management and evaluation controls. Continued support by the U.S. is key to the long-term success of the Global Fund.
   - Mother and Child HIV Prevention Initiative – The President announced a major initiative to help stop the spread of HIV from mothers to their children. This long-term program of providing treatment and improving basic health infrastructure in the hardest hit countries will be initially funded at $500 million. The initiative is being implemented through a unique partnership between the Department of Health and Human Services and the Agency for International Development and will provide a new model for foreign assistance generally, and, in particular, global health assistance.

6. Other:
   - Medical Records Privacy – The President ushered in unprecedented protections for every American relating to their private medical information. The federal privacy regulation, which will be in effect by April 2003, protects medical records and other personal health information maintained by certain health care providers, hospitals, health plans, health insurers, and health care clearinghouses. The rule guarantees patients access to their medical records, gives them more control over how their protected health information is used and disclosed, and provides a clear avenue of recourse if their medical privacy is compromised. The Administration's actions were criticized by consumer advocates and Congressional Democrats, but praised by other stakeholders in the health care system.

B. Outstanding Commitments

1. Patient Protections:
   - Patients' Bill of Rights – While the President's negotiated House-passed legislation fulfills his campaign commitment to pass a Patients' Bill of Rights; the bill has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.

2. Strengthening the Health Care Safety Net:

REV_00159261

- National Health Service Corps (NHSC) – The President promised during the campaign to refocus this scholarship and loan repayment program that places "Corps physicians in the neediest areas," and to "coordinate the Corps program with the J-1 visa waiver program to avoid overlap." The President also promised to "encourage physicians to participate in the NHSC by making scholarship funds tax free." HHS recently assumed responsibility over much of the J-1 Visa program, but coordinating this program with the NHSC has not been proposed.

3. Long Term Care:

- Affordability – The President promised to "make long-term care available and affordable, instead of a path to financial ruin." This was to include making the "cost of long-term care insurance fully deductible" and establishing an "additional personal exemption for home caregivers." The FY '03 budget proposal included both full deductibility for long-term care insurance, and a caregiver personal exemption. While the House has acted on similar legislation, additional action on these proposals is not expected. See also NEC Health Care Policy.

III. LOOKING FORWARD: '03 AGENDA

B. Legislative (active legislative issues)

1. Patients' Bill of Rights ('03) – The President negotiated a historic compromise with Rep. Norwood to give every American a meaningful Patient Bill of Rights. Legislation is not likely to be active again in the remaining days of 107th Congress, but Democrats will likely reintroduce the bill in the next session of Congress. Support for Democrat-backed patient protection bills—by its most vocal advocate the AMA—has waned since the President announced his commitment to legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The President should support the principles set forth in the compromise legislation. However, he should seek to emphasize his priority is making sure families and individuals have access to affordable health care.
2. Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.
3. Mental Health Parity Legislation (fall '02) – Last December, the President agreed to work with Senator Domenici to pass a mental health parity bill in the 107th Congress. While Speaker Hastert is strongly opposed to any parity legislation, the White House is working to facilitate a compromise that would prohibit health plans that provide medical and surgical benefits, from placing higher financial requirements or different treatment limitations on mental health benefits. Action is needed this year, because the current federal mental health parity law expires in December of 2002.

4. Medical Liability Reform – The Administration endorsed legislation to address the nation's badly broken medical liability system. The proposal creates a more timely, predictable, and fair liability system that improves access to quality health care while reducing health care costs. The bill passed the House, but is being blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
5. Patient Safety/Medical Errors Legislation (if not completed in '02) —The Administration has endorsed legislation to authorize patient safety organizations to collect confidential data on medical mistakes from hospitals, doctors, and other health care providers, and develop programs to address particular needs identified by data. While the proposals enjoy strong bipartisan support in both the House and Senate, several key Senate Democrats continue to block progress and ask for additional funding for patient safety and medical information grants. See also NEC Health Care Policy.
6. Genetic Non-Discrimination Legislation (if not completed in '02) –Earlier this year, the President endorsed legislation introduced by Senators Snowe, Frist, Gregg and Jeffords to prohibit discrimination by employers and health insurers based on genetic information. Democratic legislation introduced by Sen. Daschle is similar but would also encourage lawsuits by creating new private rights of action with unlimited damages. Congressional negotiators have not been able to resolve the liability issue, and the bill supported by the President has been blocked by the Democrat-controlled Senate.
7. Cloning Ban (if not completed in '02) --The President strongly supports House passed legislation that would prohibit all forms of human cloning. A current proposal in the Senate would allow the cloning of embryos for research purposes.
8. Cancer Care Quality Legislation (if not completed in '02)– Led by the American Cancer Society and the Lance Armstrong Foundation, bipartisan Congressional members are pushing legislation authorizing development and collection of information on quality of cancer care, mandating specific dollars for cancer survivorship research, and creating other programs to address end-of-life care. As the legislation is currently drafted, it takes power to set research priorities away from scientists, duplicates existing programs, and expands bureaucracy.
9. Early Treatment for HIV Act – Legislation is being developed that would allow State Medicaid programs the option to expand Medicaid coverage to individuals with an HIV diagnosis as an early preventive treatment measure in a budget neutral way.
10. United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, TB, and Malaria – This proposal authorizes the Executive branch to develop a 5-year strategic plan for addressing the international HIV/AIDS pandemic, provide increased resources for multilateral and bilateral efforts, and expand HHS's authority to provide international assistance. This amendment would require several reports back to Congress by the Executive branch.

C. Regulatory (key regulatory issues)

1. HIPAA Security Standards for Health Information Regulation (Fall '02) — Highly visible regulation to protect identifiable health information/medical records; affects all health care stakeholders subject to the HIPAA Privacy regulation.
2. HIPAA Electronic Medicare Claims Submission (Fall '02) —Highly visible regulation to require all Medicare claims be submitted electronically.
3. Bar Code Labeling on Human Drug Products —(Fall '02) Highly visible regulation that uses bar coding technology to identify potential medical errors.
4. Bioterrorism Regulations for Food Safety and Security —(Fall '02) Regulation to enhance the inspection and oversight of imported food.
5. Bioterrorism Regulations for Tracking Dangerous Biological Pathogens (Fall '02) —Regulation to enhance surveillance and security over dangerous agents and toxins that pose a public health threat; applies to all public and private entities that use, possess and transfer these dangerous pathogens.

REV_00159264

Immigration

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Restructuring the Immigration and Naturalization Service
The President promised to "restructure the INS, splitting it into two agencies: one to deal with enforcement, and one to deal with service."* In November 2001, the Attorney General announced an administrative restructuring plan for the agency and began its implementation. The President's proposal to create the Department of Homeland Security contemplates preserving the separation between service and enforcement when the INS moves to that department.

Provide increased funding for INS personnel
The President promised to "propose an additional $500 million over 5 years to fund new INS personnel and increased employee incentives to provide quality service to legal immigrants."* The Administration has sought $100 million each fiscal year for this purpose.

Reduce INS benefit processing times
The President promised to "improve INS service by proposing that every INS immigration application be processed within 180 days of submission."* The INS has a backlog elimination plan in place to achieve that goal by FY 2004. It is on track to meet that goal for 9 of 12 classes of applications. Increased security checks have caused delays in some categories.

A. Outstanding Commitments

None.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- INS reorganization will be a significant issue next year if it is not dealt with in Homeland Security Department legislation or otherwise this year.
- Extension of Section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, which the President supports, is unlikely to occur during the 107th Congress. Section 245(i) permits aliens residing illegally in the U.S., but who are otherwise entitled to obtain permanent legal status, to do so without first leaving the country. As a result they can avoid being barred from reentering the U.S. for 3 or 10 years.

A. Regulatory

None.

Ground Transportation

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Finalized a number of regulations to ensure the safe opening of the U.S.-Mexico border to commercial truck traffic. White House is reviewing Secretary Mineta's recommendation to the President that opening the border will not present a significant safety risk.
- Issued an Executive Order establishing the Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force. DOT will chair an interagency task force to help move high-priority transportation projects through the environmental permitting process. Members of Congress, roadbuilding associations, state representatives and environmental groups have praised this approach. The construction trade unions will support this as well.
- Granted $100 million loan to Amtrak to prevent total shutdown of Amtrak and several key commuter rail systems.

B. Outstanding Commitments

None

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative:

- TEA 21 reauthorization: TEA 21, which funds highway and urban transit projects, covers fiscal years 1998-2003, so a new bill must be in place ahead of the fiscal year 2004 appropriations cycle.

- Amtrak reauthorization: See discussion above.

B. Regulatory:

- Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE)– NHTSA is required by law to propose new fuel economy standards for light trucks for the 2005 model year by October 2002 and finalize the regulation by April 2003. If NHTSA chooses not to initiate a rulemaking on passenger cars, the current standard will remain in effect.

  The Administration is currently pushing a CAFE reform proposal in the Energy bill Conference. The proposal requires NHTSA to set a new light truck standard that will save 5 billion gallons of fuel between 2006 and 2012. It also gives the Secretary of Transportation greater authority to amend passenger car fuel economy standards while taking into account safety and economic burden.

- Open the Mexican border to cross-border commercial trucking. The White House is currently reviewing DOT's recommendation.

REV_00159267

Welfare, Child Welfare, Adoption

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Abstinence Education. Both as part of the welfare reform reauthorization legislation and the normal appropriations process, the Administration is trying to increase funding for abstinence education by $126 million per year. The House supports the additional funding; the position of the Senate is not clear. If successful, this effort will fulfill the President's campaign promise to fund abstinence education programs at the same level as family planning and condom distribution programs, although some conservatives are already arguing that more money for abstinence will be needed to achieve parity with family planning.

- Compassion Capital Fund. In June 2002, HHS announced the implementation of the Compassion Capital Fund. In response to the President's fiscal 2002 budget request, Congress appropriated funds that are specifically designed to assist grassroots organizations as part of the President's faith-based and community initiative. $30 million is being used to help level the playing field for faith and community-based organizations as they compete for federal grants. It is too early to determine whether these funds will have an impact.

- Child Support Enforcement. HHS's Office of the Inspector General (OIG), in cooperation with HHS's Office of Child Support Enforcement, have implemented strong measures, including a three-day national sweep, to locate the Nation's most wanted "deadbeat parents". So far, 70 of the biggest offenders have been arrested, in part through cooperation between OIG, the U.S. Marshals Service, and state and local police. Arrests have been made in 29 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Due to this effort, as well as continued aggressive implementation of the child support program by the Office of Child Support Enforcement, both child support collections and paternity establishments are at an all-time high.

- Good Start, Grow Smart. In April 2002, President Bush presented Good Start, Grow Smart, the Administration's Initiative to address standards of learning in early literacy, language, and numeracy skills. To ensure that the President's Initiative is implemented boldly and effectively, the Head Start and Child Care Bureaus are completing a joint strategic plan, and Head Start programs are being required to fully implement new requirements for charting the progress of each child. In addition, HHS has implemented a plan to train Head Start administrators and teachers in research-based teaching techniques that will lead to improved school readiness (50,000 Head Start teachers will receive this training). HHS is also conducting a variety of activities to ensure that rigorous, cutting-edge research is developed, carried out, and translated into practices that enhance children's progress toward school readiness.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Reauthorize the 1996 Welfare Reform Legislation that Expires on September 30, 2002. In February of this year, the Administration submitted to Congress a plan to reauthorize and strengthen the 1996 welfare reform legislation. By May, the House had developed and passed a bill that was nearly identical to the Administration plan. However, at this writing the bill is mired in the Senate and seems unlikely to pass this year, especially because the bill being pushed by the Senate Democratic leadership is deeply flawed. If a bill cannot be enacted in 2002, Congress will probably enact a 1-year extension of funding authority, which would mean that welfare reform reauthorization would be on the agenda for the 108th Congress. Because of this failure to act on reauthorization, the Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG) has not been reauthorized either. If the Senate fails to reauthorize the CCDBG in the 107th Congress, we would be provided with a good opportunity to seek measures to coordinate the CCDBG with Head Start during next year's reauthorization debate.

- Head Start. The Administration promised during the campaign to move the Head Start program from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Department of Education.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

- The 1996 welfare reform law expires on September 30, 2002 and must be reauthorized. The House has enacted legislation but the Senate has not. If this is not completed by the 107th Congress, the 108th Congress would take up reauthorization.

C. Regulatory

- HHS is using its statutory authority to administer the Head Start program to aggressively implement significant improvements in Head Start teaching, administration, and research. These initiatives are grouped together under the rubric "Good Start, Grow Smart".

Education

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- The No Child Left Behind Act was signed into law by President Bush on January 8, 2002. By turning federal spending on schools into a federal investment in improved student performance, this law provides the most sweeping reform of the Elementary & Secondary Education Act since it was enacted in 1965. The law ensures that States and school districts will develop strong systems of accountability based on student performance, provides increased local control and flexibility by putting decision-making in the hands of those at the State and local levels, increases parental options, and encourages the use of effective programs and solid research to drive instruction.
- The Department of Education has been working to implement the NCLBA by releasing regulations and guidance for programs under the Act. The 2002-2003 school year is the first year that many of these reforms are going into effect.
- One of the most important reforms in the Act is the development of state accountability systems that hold schools accountable for student progress. The Department is currently reviewing the first round of state accountability plans, and will be approving these state plans in the coming months.
- The Act also launched a comprehensive effort called Reading First, a five-year, $5 billion state grant program. Reading First provides assistance to state and local education agencies to apply scientifically-based research—and the proven instructional and assessment tools consistent with this research—to improve reading instruction for K-3 students and to ensure that all children learn to read well by the end of the third grade.

Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001

- Commitment: Supports expanding education savings accounts for parents to increase their annual contributions from $500 per student to $5,000 and withdraw funds tax free to pay for education expenses from Kindergarten to college
- The tax relief bill that President Bush signed last year provides $22.7 billion in education savings for American families over the next five years: eliminates the 60-month limitation on student loan interest deductions and increases the income levels of individuals able to claim the deduction, increases the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts from $500 to $2,000, and allows savings to be used for elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education expenses, adds a new above-the-line deduction for qualified higher education expenses, allows tax-free distributions from Qualified Tuition Plans (Section 529 plans) to be used to pay educational expenses and permits private institutions to offer such plans, makes the income exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance permanent and extends the benefit of the exclusion to graduate level courses.

- President Bush had proposed during his campaign to increase the annual limit on contributions to education savings accounts to $5,000.

Teacher Tax Deduction

- Commitment: Establish a teacher tax deduction to help defray out-of-pocket classroom expenses
- The Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act provided an above-the-line tax deduction for up to $250 in classroom expenses incurred by teachers and other educators. Effective only in 2002 and 2003.
- The President proposed a $400 teacher tax deduction for out-of-pocket classroom expenses.

Special Education Funding

- Commitment: Work with Congress to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act
- The President is on the way to fulfilling his campaign promise to increase funding for special education with the goal of meeting the federal obligation under IDEA.
- The President's 2003 budget provides an increase of $1 billion for Special Education Grants to States (following an increase of $1.2 billion in FY 2002), to $8.5 billion, and an increase of $20 million for states to identify and serve infants and toddlers with disabilities, to $437 million.

Character Education

- Commitment: Triple character education funding and incorporate character-building lessons into federal youth programs
- The President proposed and has fulfilled his promise to triple character education grant funding, from $8 million to $25 million. The Character Education program received $25 million in 2002, and the same amount is proposed for 2003. More emphasis could be put on research into character education and its effect on student outcomes.

State Scholars Initiative

- The Department of Education awarded a $2.4 million grant to the Center for State Scholars to create a pilot program in five states to encourage students to take a more demanding curriculum in high school in preparation for entry into a technical school, community college, university or work. States that participate will have to encourage the business community, school districts, and higher education institutions in each state to work together to encourage a more rigorous curriculum in high schools nationwide.

C. Outstanding Commitments

Pell Grants

- Commitment: Provide $1 billion over five years for enhanced Pell Grants to students who take college-level math and science courses in high school, allowing them an additional $1,000 to pay for college tuition
- To fulfill this commitment, the President would need to propose this initiative in a future budget submission or in the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act.
- While this initiative has not been proposed, the President has provided significant increases in funding for Pell Grants.
- The Pell Grant maximum award increased from $3,750 in 2001 to $4,000 in 2002.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10.9 billion for the Pell Grant program, maintaining a maximum award of $4000 for Fiscal Year 2003-2004. This is an increase of $2.1 billion over 2001 Pell Grant funding.
- The recently enacted supplemental appropriations bill provided an additional $1 billion in Pell Grant funding to eliminate the shortfall in 2002.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Several key pieces of legislation are up for reauthorization in 2003, and several pieces of legislation will be held over from 2002.

1. Individuals with Disabilities Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2002)—Special Education programs for children, provided mostly in K-12 education.
2. Office of Educational Research and Improvement Reauthorization (authorization expired end of FY 1998, but has continued under that authorization)—Department of Education research initiatives.
3. Higher Education Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Postsecondary education programs, including all federal student financial aid.
4. Perkins Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Vocational and Adult Education programs
5. Rehabilitation Act Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—Employment programs for adults with disabilities
6. Head Start Reauthorization (authorization ends September 30, 2003)—HHS early education programs, but significant coordination with Department of Education

REV_00159272

C. Regulatory

The Department of Education will continue to regulate on and develop and revise guidance for the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act.

In addition, the Secretary's Commission on Opportunity in Athletics must submit its report on findings and recommendations on Title IX to Secretary Paige by January 31, 2003. The Administration will review regulations on Title IX at this time.

Faith-Based

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

Office Establishment

- An Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives and five Cabinet Centers at HUD, HHS, Education, Labor, and Justice have been established. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.

New Resources and Programs for Faith-Based Groups

- The President's 2003 budget provides $25 million in competitive grants for mentoring programs for children of prisoners. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to launch a new program to address the needs of children of prisoners, offering grants on a competitive basis to faith-based and community groups.
- H.R. 1 opens the 21st Century after-school program's funding (maintained at $1 billion in FY 2003) to competitive bidding by faith-based and community groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- On June 4, the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) at the Department of Health and Human Services announced the rollout of the $30 million Compassion Capital Fund. Nearly $25 million will be made available to 15-25 intermediary organizations that will provide technical assistance to help faith-based and community organizations expand the reach of their programs. The remaining $5 million will be used to conduct research and establish a National Resource Center that will provide tools to faith-based and community organizations. More than 350 groups applied for the intermediary grants and nearly 70 applied for the field research grants. In addition, the President's 2003 budget provides $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund, a public-private partnership to identify and invest in charitable "best practices." These each fulfill the President's campaign promise to create a Compassion Capital Fund.
- The President's 2003 budget provides $10 million in competitive grants to fund pilot Second Chance maternity homes. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same.
- Two faith-based prison pre-release programs have been established, one designed for federal prisoners (a religion specific, multi-faith, and social responsibility program) and one for state prisoners (faith-based organizations will provide mentoring and role modeling during incarceration, transition and stabilization phases). This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise to initiate and fund same
- The Department of Labor awarded a total of $17.5 million in grants specifically designed to link faith-based and grassroots community organizations to the nation's One-Stop Career System. Twelve states and 29 organizations around the country will receive funds that they will use to create partnerships between faith-based and community groups and the One-Stop career centers.

Administrative Reforms and Outreach Programs

- OFBCI has created a database of more than 100 social service programs open to faith-based groups worth more than $50 billion, organized for the first time by groups of people served, not by program names.
- In the past three months, all of the agencies have established websites for the initiative. These websites provide detailed information about the initiative generally, as well as information about applicable funding opportunities.
- To date, the Department of Education Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives has held a total of six very successful outreach conferences attended by more than 4000 people. These conferences are designed to make local organizations aware of the initiative and Department of Education funding opportunities in which they might be interested.
- The Department of Education has issued appropriate guidance to states concerning the involvement of faith-based and community organizations in all formula grant programs that are amenable to participation by these groups.
- The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration at HHS has planned six technical assistance conferences throughout the country to provide technical assistance to faith-based and community organizations that wish to apply for substance abuse prevention/treatment funds.
- The DOJ Center is working with the Office of Justice Programs to simplify the grants and administrative process to make it friendlier to smaller faith-based and community organizations.
- The DOJ Center is also working with OJP to establish a Community Capacity Development Office. This office will focus on capacity development issues for faith-based organizations, small communities, and other entities identified.

Legislation

- H.R. 7, The Community Solutions Act, passed the House in July, 2001 and helped meet a number of the President's Faith-Based commitments including: non-itemizer tax deduction, charity IRA rollover, raising the cap on corporate charity contributions, civil liability protection for corporate donations and an expansion of Charitable Choice.
- Authorization for the Mentoring of Prisoner's Children pilot project.
- $30 million appropriation for the Compassion Capital Fund.
- Introduction and Senate Finance passage of the bi-partisan CARE Act (27 co-sponsors including 10 Democrats).

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Hold a corporate and philanthropic summit to examine private-sector discrimination against funding faith-based organizations. (Notre Dame Commencement Speech, May 2001)
- Promote a Charitable State Tax Credit of up to 50% of the first $500 for individuals or $1000 for married couples for contributions to charities addressing poverty; extend the tax credit—up to 50% of the first $1000—to corporations. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

- Provide federal matching funds for the establishment of state Offices of Faith-Based Action. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Promote alternative licensing regimes that recognize religious training as an alternative form of qualification for delivery of non-medical social services. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Fund certificates to help 500,000 lower-income parents pay for after-school activities of their choosing, with funding of $400 million. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)
- Provide performance-based drug treatment grants to states; ensure that non-medical faith-based and community providers are eligible for funds on the same basis as other groups. This is to fulfill the President's campaign promise of same. (Rallying the Armies of Compassion, January 2001)

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

A. Legislative

Depending on activity in the final month of the 107th Congress, the President's faith-based bill may or may not have been passed and signed into law. If passed, it would fulfill a majority of the commitments the President has made on faith-based issues. If not, all of those issues would remain outstanding including: 1) the expansion of Charitable Choice; 2) a non-itemizer tax deduction; 3) tax-free IRA charitable rollover; 4) raising the cap on corporate contributions; and 5) civil liability protection for corporate charity donations.

If this package fails to pass, however, OFBCI strongly recommends a different legislative approach for the 108th Congress. Specifically, OFBCI recommends using an amendment strategy to expand Charitable Choice to all Federal social service programs along with a free-standing charitable tax incentives bill. We do not recommend a strategy that marries the two efforts together.

B. Regulatory:

The Office's main issues will be administrative and regulatory in nature, and may be somewhat controversial. Specifically:

- Provide clear guidance to faith-based organizations on the 'Do's and Don'ts' of interacting with the Federal government.
- Announce new FEMA policy that treats all non-profit organizations equally in its emergency assistance programs.
- Provide official guidance on Charitable Choice for TANF, SAMHSA, CSBG and other programs covered by Federal statute, either through executive order or department regulation.
- Issue a user-friendly booklet identifying Federal funding opportunities that may interest faith-based organizations, with instructions about how to apply.

REV_00159276

- Update its website with the guidance materials and grants information, as well as other information about the Initiative.
- Oversee Agencies issuing internal guidance to peer review panels and grants management staff on the participation of FBOs in grants programs.
- Agency Centers will begin to work within their agencies on innovative pilot and demonstration projects targeting elders, at-risk youth and prisoners, addicts, the homeless, and those making the transition from welfare to work.
- Remove regulations that prohibit faith-based organizations' participation in many programs, beginning at HUD.
- Remove regulations that limit the right of faith-based organizations to maintain religious identity through hiring autonomy unless there is a statutory basis for them.
- Improve data collection so that accurate information on faith-based organizations is available.
- Expand the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives by executive order to include new Faith-Based Centers at Departments of State and Agriculture because both work extensively with faith-based organizations to feed the hungry and provide relief for those in desperate need.
- Fight to maintain religious organizations' rights to hire and fire on the basis of religion.

Housing and Community Development

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements.

- The President issued America's Homeownership Challenge, mobilizing the private real estate and mortgage finance sector to eliminate barriers to homeownership through increased financial and organizational commitments to increase minority homeownership by at least 5.5 million families by 2010. As a result, additional private capital of $440 billion has been pledged by the government-sponsored enterprises to increase minority homeownership. Private entities have committed resources to assist in the effort. Sears Roebuck recently announced a $100 million, five-year program to reduce barriers to minority homeownership, specifically responding to President Bush's challenge.

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed $200 million for the American Dream Downpayment Initiative, which would provide state and local agencies with matching grants to assist an estimated 40,000 first-time homebuyer families with downpayment funds. Legislation has been introduced in the House (Mike Rogers) and the Senate (Allard).

- The President's FY 03 budget proposed a $2.4 billion, five-year Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit of up to 50% of the project costs of rehabilitation and construction of low-income housing, provided that eligible homebuyers have incomes of not more than 80% of area median income. The tax credit will eventually result in an additional 200,000 affordable single-family homes becoming available through construction or rehabilitation. Legislation very close to the President's proposal has been introduced in the House (Portman/Cardin) and is expected to be introduced in the Senate this month (Santorum/Gordon Smith).

- The Section 8 Homeownership Program has been implemented in part by HUD. The program allows local housing agencies flexibility to provide either mortgage assistance in lieu of a rental subsidy. A downpayment grant equaling up to one-year's worth of a family's Section 8 rental assistance is also envisioned, but Congress has not made a specific appropriation allowing the use of Section 8 funds for this activity. HUD has also implemented a Section 8 Disability Initiative -- a three-year pilot program authorized in 1999 which allows recipients with disabilities to use rental assistance toward mortgage payments.

- The Administration has issued for public comment a proposed regulation to simplify and modernize the current homebuying process, which is governed by the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) and the regulation implementing the act. Secretary Martinez expects that legislation amending RESPA may also be needed to strengthen enforcement.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- End Chronic Homelessness: Secretary Martinez's speech before the National Alliance to End Homelessness committed to ending chronic homelessness by the end of the decade, and the FY 03 budget cites this as an explicit Administration goal. The Interagency Council on the Homeless held its first meeting in six years and announced a $35 million initiative (using recaptured funds) in furtherance of the Administration's goal.

- Convene a White House Conference on Increasing Minority Homeownership: In his June 17th Atlanta rollout of his homeownership initiative, the President committed to holding a White House Conference on minority homeownership this fall. The conference, currently scheduled for October 15th, will highlight barriers to minority homeownership and develop proposed solutions.

- Modernize and simplify the homebuying process. Secretary Martinez has made reform of the homebuying process a top HUD priority, with the goal of benefiting consumers with cost savings and ensuring that they receive timely, accurate information that is reflected at closing. Reform of the homebuying process was a component of the President's homeownership initiative announced in Atlanta in June. HUD has issued proposed changes to the RESPA regulation for public comment. The comment period closes in October.

- Promote financial education through housing counseling. The Administration has proposed increasing funding for housing counseling grants by $15 million in FY 2003, to $35 million. In his June 17th Atlanta speech, the President cited the importance of housing counseling in reducing barriers to minority homeownership. Faith-based groups will be key partners in HUD's housing counseling efforts.

- Triple funding for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity Program (SHOP). In his May 20, 2001 Notre Dame speech, the President promised to request a tripling of funds for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunities Program (SHOP), which provides grants for land acquisition and infrastructure improvement to non-profit organizations that offer homeownership opportunities to families willing to contribute their own "sweat equity" (such as Habitat for Humanity). The President's FY 03 budget request tripled funding for SHOP (from approximately $22 million to nearly $66 million). These requested increases were not been included in the Senate VA/HUD Appropriations bill.

REV_00159279

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislation:

Enactment of existing proposals (American Dream Downpayment Initiative; Single-Family Affordable Housing Tax Credit) should be the Administration's top priorities in the next session of Congress if these are not enacted this year. At this point, the downpayment initiative is the only legislative proposal with a chance of enactment this session of Congress.

Much press attention has been focused on what housing advocates have termed "the housing crisis." This has galvanized a wide array of groups in support of the creation of a dedicated source of federal funding for housing expenditures (a housing trust fund similar to the highway trust fund). In this session of Congress, H.R. 3995, an Oxley-Roukema housing bill containing the President's downpayment initiative, has been reported out of the Financial Services Committee. The bill now contains a number of new program authorizations which we oppose. In the Senate, Christopher (Kit) Bond, the Ranking Minority Member on the VA/HUD Appropriations Committee introduced a bill (S. 2967) on September 19th authorizing a major new housing production program. Rather than creating new and possibly duplicative housing programs, increased funding for the existing HOME program, targeted to the very low-income, is the Secretary's preferred approach to dealing with the increased housing needs.

C. Regulatory:

The key regulatory issue facing the Department will be reform of the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, which Secretary Martinez advocates as part of his effort to reduce closing costs and make the homebuying process easier. Because of the varied economic interests involved in the homebuying industry affected by these changes, this will be highly contentious. HUD has proposed changes to the RESPA rule and is currently receiving comments on its draft rule. While HUD believes it has the authority to adopt the rule it has proposed, the Secretary has stated that further changes (especially in the enforcement arena) may also be desirable and would require legislation.

Veterans

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

- Established the Task Force to Improve Health Care Delivery For Our Nation's Veterans (Veterans Healthcare Task Force – Executive Order 13214): The fifteen member Veterans Healthcare Task Force, co-chaired by Dr. Gail Wilensky, former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, and former Congressman John Paul Hammerschmidt, will recommend specific actions to improve coordination between VA and the Department of Defense (DoD) on health care for those who have served in uniform and who are eligible for VA benefits. The Task Force issued an interim report on the issues to be addressed on July 31, 2002. A final report is due in March 2003.

- Reduced Veterans Claims Backlog: Conducted a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement, as the President had promised in the campaign ("The veterans health care system and the claims process need an overhauling from top to bottom. It needs to be modernized, so that claims are handled in a fair and timely fashion." Honoring our Commitment to Veterans, November 11, 1999). Reduced the claims pending backlog by almost 40% in the first year.

- Reduced Longest-Pending Veterans Claims for Older Veterans: Established a "Tiger Team" of experienced employees and managers to focus on the longest-pending claims from older veterans. By August 2002 VA, had completed 47,000 cases that had been pending for more than one year.

- Reinstated VA's "Duty to Assist" Policy: VA had traditionally pursued a "duty to assist" policy of helping claimants in gathering evidence to support their claims, including compiling medical and service records. A court decision, however, had overturned the holding it was not authorized by law. During the campaign, Governor Bush promised to reinstate the policy (August 2000). The President implemented provisions of the Veterans Claims Assistance Act reinstating the policy.

- World War II Memorial Legislation: Signed bipartisan legislation that ended ending delays and ensured that the planned World War II Memorial is located on the National Mall, between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial.

B. Outstanding Commitments

- Although VA has made improvements in claims processing and in addressing the backlog of claims, the current delays remain unacceptable by President Bush's and Secretary's Principi's standards.

III. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Priority Level 7 (PL 7) Vets: Veterans who choose to enroll in the VA health care system are placed in a priority group based on their specific eligibility status. The priority groups range from 1-7, with 1 being the highest priority for enrollment. The numbers of PL 7[1] veterans (those in least need of services) has increased dramatically since 1996, when they were accepted on a space-available basis and averaged two percent of all patients. This influx strains VA's capacity and hinders delivery of care to higher priority veterans.

VA medical care is not an entitlement offered to all veterans irrespective of geographic location. It is a service limited primarily to VA's geographic infrastructure and the size of the appropriation in any one year. Federal law requires that the VA Secretary announce, in conjunction with the appropriations process, what categories of veterans VA will be able to serve for that fiscal year. The issue, therefore, must be faced each year. For FY 2002, VA originally had determined that the budget would not permit it to serve all PL 7 veterans, and had proposed suspending new enrollment by PL 7 veterans who were not then enrolled. The final decision, however, was not to suspend PL 7 enrollment but to add $200 million to the President's budget request to address the issue. VA has proposed a regulation (See Section C, Regulatory, below) allowing it to provide services to higher priority veterans before providing services to lower priority veterans.

Concurrent Receipts: Currently, in order to receive VA disability payments, a military retiree must waive an equivalent amount of military retirement pay. Many in Congress have supported attempts to allow military retirees to concurrently receive VA disability and military retirement benefits. Every Administration has opposed these attempts based on the long-standing principle that no one should be able to receive concurrent retirement benefits and disability benefits based upon the same service. All Federal compensation systems aim for an equitable percentage of income replacement in the case of either work-related injury or retirement. Such a change in policy would cost approximately $58 billion dollars over ten years.

Most recently, the President threatened to veto the Department of Defense authorization bill because it contained a provision allowing concurrent receipts. Veterans groups, as expected, have been heated in their criticism of the Administration over this issue, and will continue to press their supporters to change policy and allow concurrent receipts.

[1] PL 7 veterans are veterans who (i) do not have a service-connected disability serious enough to qualify for disability compensation; (ii) have an annual income exceeding $24,000 ($27,000 with one dependent) or who have a substantial net worth; and (iii) do not qualify for care under other special provisions (e.g. World War I veteran, care for conditions associated with herbicide or radiation exposure, etc.)

REV_00159282

POW Legislation: American ex-POWs held by the Japanese have been active in trying to pass legislation that would allow them to sue Japanese corporations that used POW slave labor. The latest iteration in this effort is legislation sponsored by Republican Dana Rohrbacher (HR 1189). State Department believes the Rohrbacher bill would contravene our peace treaty with the Japanese, which shielded Japanese nationals from liability. A bill introduced by Michael Simpson, (HR 5235) would provide a pension benefit for former POWs.

VA had submitted a legislative proposal establishing a POW benefit, and supported the Simpson effort. In order to pay for the benefit, VA's proposal contained language overturning a recent court ruling that expanded the definition of service-connected disability to include alcoholism and drug-use. The POW benefit would have cost nearly $1.7 billion over ten years, while the offset would result in $4.6 billion in savings over the same period. However, the Administration chose not to send POW benefit legislation or publicly endorse the Simpson legislation because we would be creating an new entitlement without a guarantee that offset portion would survive.

C. Regulatory

Secretary Principi recently issued a regulation allowing VA to ensure priority care for veterans with severe service-connected disabilities. Priority for treatment for service-connected veterans does not reduce the number of veterans VA treats, but does reduce the amount of time veterans seeking treatment for a service-connected disability must wait before receiving care. Predictably, the regulation was criticized as a "cut" in veterans benefits (most particularly by Senator Rockefeller).

Criminal Justice

II. Looking Back: Review of '01 and '02

A. Achievements

Tort Reform

- Teacher Protection Act: As part of No Child Left Behind Act, the President signed into law the Teacher Protection Act, which provides civil immunity from state and Federal actions to teachers, principals, and other education professionals for actions taken to maintain discipline, order, or control in the classroom or school. The President promised to support the Teacher Protection Act during the campaign.
- Class Action Reform: The Administration sent a Statement of Administration Position (SAP) supporting the Class Action Fairness Act (H.R. 2341), which passed the House and is pending in the Senate. The bill would allow removal of cases to Federal court when the amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity. This is consistent with the campaign promise to "allow large cases to be removed from state to federal court where only minimal diversity exists."* Also, the bill establishes a consumer class action bill of rights, including notice of lawsuits in "plain English" and requires judicial review of non-cash benefits like coupons.
- Medical Liability Reform: In July 2002, President proposed national minimum standards in healthcare cases, including limits on non-economic damages and punitive damages, proportional liability, and informing juries of other sources of reimbursement. It would also protect from use in lawsuits reports and information about efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care. The House approved this legislation.

Campaign Finance Reform

- In March 2002, the President signed H.R. 2356, the Campaign Finance Reform Act. The Act contains various provisions the President supported, including a ban on unregulated, "soft" money contributions from unions and corporations, increased limits on individual giving, and new and more expedited disclosure requirements. However, it also includes provisions that raise constitutional concerns, such as the broad ban on issue advertising.
- The bill contains reforms the President promised to support during the campaign, including: "banning 'soft money' contributions from labor unions and corporations" and "raising individual contribution limits." As enacted, it did not include provisions advocated by the President such as "enforcement of the Beck decision and enactment of effective 'Paycheck Protection'" legislation or "instant disclosure of contributions" (although it did further lessen the amount of time before disclosure was required).*

Election Reform

- The President endorsed four guiding principles embodied in the May 2001 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Election Reform: (1) primacy of state, county and local governments in elections; (2) a limited but responsible role for the federal government in assisting states and localities with election administration so that voting technology and practices respect the value of every eligible vote; (3) need for active and vigorous enforcement of voting rights laws; and (4) need to uphold the voting rights of members of the armed services and of Americans living abroad.

- The President signed legislation consistent with these principles. It also contains important tools to decrease fraud in our voting systems.
- The bill authorizes $3.9 billion over four years for a variety of grant programs, including general improvement of the election administration system, and improved access to the voting process for individuals with disabilities. The Administration has proposed to spend $1.2 billion in matching grants to fund a state revolving fund to be used in election administration. The first of three $400 million installments was included in the President's FY 2003 budget.

Affirmative Action

- The President stated during the campaign that he "supports 'affirmative access' to open the doors of opportunity" to all Americans, and "opposes quotas and racial preferences."* The goal is to provide greater opportunity and access without creating race-conscious remedies that only benefit particular racial or ethnic groups. His Administration has done so in the following contexts:

    - Education: The No Child Left Behind Act establishes high standards and accountability for all public schools. Educating every American to his or her full potential was part of the campaign's affirmative access goals.
    - Contracting: The President's Small Business Agenda includes promoting the unbundling of contracts so that small businesses that are not capable of bidding for entire projects are not disadvantaged. This meets his campaign promise to advocate "breaking down government contracts to smaller sizes to encourage entrepreneurship in all communities" as a way to promote affirmative access.* Also, the President instructed the OMB Director to review contracting practices at relevant agencies to make sure their practices reflect a commitment to full and open competition.
    - Housing: The President announced a homeownership initiative targeted at increasing homeownership for minority families. It includes proposals to increase the supply of affordable homes for low and moderate income families, provide downpayment assistance, more educational assistance, and a "Homeownership Challenge" to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to help increase the number of minority homeowners by 5.5 million families by the end of the decade. This initiative does not rely on racial classifications.

New Freedom Initiative

Community Living

- Olmstead: By Executive Order, the President required Federal agencies to assist states and localities to implement the Supreme Court's Olmstead decision. Olmstead requires states to place qualified individuals with disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions, whenever treatment professionals determine that such placement is appropriate, the affected persons do not oppose such placement, and the state can reasonably accommodate the placement, taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with disabilities.

REV_00159286

- In response, key Federal agencies conducted the first comprehensive Federal review of barriers that prevent people with disabilities from living in the community and identified over 400 potential solutions to remove impediments to community-based living, which agencies have begun to implement.
- Medicare Homebound Rules: The President announced a clarification with respect to Medicare recipients with disabilities who are considered "homebound." This change makes it clear that people with significant disabilities may leave their homes for occasional activities without losing their Medicare homebound services.

Education

- IDEA: The President requested the largest increases of any President in history for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) Part B State Grants program in his FY 2002 and FY 2003 budgets. The President signed legislation increasing by $1.2 billion in FY 2002 budget for the IDEA Part B State Grants program.
- Special Education Commission: The President issued Executive Order 13227 in October 2001 creating the Presidential Commission on Excellence in Special Education. The Commission issued its report to the President on July 1, 2002.

Technology

- Section 508: The President promised full enforcement of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act, which requires that all Federal government electronic and information technologies be accessible to individuals with disabilities. In response, the Administration collaborated to expedite Section 508 implementation, and produced extensive technical guidance and training materials that will be helpful to Federal agencies and others interested in accessible technologies.

Homeownership

- HUD Section 8: The President committed to revising the HUD Section 8 rent subsidy program to permit people with disabilities to use up to one year's worth of Section 8 rent subsidy vouchers to finance a down payment and purchase a home. HUD has implemented this pilot program.

Employment Integration

- Ticket to Work: The President promoted swift implementation of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act, which provides incentives for more than 7.5 million Americans receiving benefits under Federal disability programs to return to work.

Other

- Commission on Mental Health: The President formed the New Freedom Commission on Mental Health to conduct a comprehensive study of the Nation's mental health service delivery system.
- Access to Voting Places: The President will sign legislation mandating increased access to polling places by individuals with disabilities.

REV_00159287

- DisabilityInfo.gov: By Executive Memorandum, the President created a single source Federal web site providing access to all the Federal web sites important to people with disabilities. This web site was launched in October 2002.
- NFI Budget: The President secured funding for the vast majority of NFI programs in FY 2002 and requested a higher overall level of NFI-related funding in FY 2003. In the FY 2002 budget, the President requested $10.781 billion and received $10.872 billion. In the FY 2003 budget, he is seeking $1.39 billion over 2002 appropriations.

B. Outstanding Commitments

Civil Justice
Tort Reform
The President promised during the campaign to "support meaningful, broad-based tort reform" to discourage frivolous lawsuits. Congress has not acted on the following items the President pledged to support:

- "Strengthen Federal Rule 11 to require stiffer penalties for frivolous suits, and impose a 'Three Strikes, You're Out' rule on attorneys who repeatedly file frivolous claims."
- "Limit 'fishing expeditions' by amending federal discovery rules, and curb the use of 'junk science' by raising the federal standard for admission of scientific testimony."
- "Eliminate the much-abused private cause of action under the RICO statute."
- "Raise the amount in controversy for removal where there is complete diversity."
- "Enact a 'Fair Settlement Rule,' requiring parties who reject a pre-trial settlement offer, and who ultimately lose their case or receive substantially less at trial, to pay the other party's costs, including legal fees."
- "Enact a 'Client's Bill of Rights' to allow federal courts to hear challenges to attorneys' fees, and require attorneys to disclose their ethical obligation to charge reasonable fees."

The President's remaining campaign civil justice system reform pledge was to "Issue an Executive Order prohibiting Federal agencies from paying contingency fees."* This executive order is currently being drafted.

New Freedom Initiative

- Transportation Grants: The President requested $145 million in his 2002 and 2003 budgets for competitive grants through the Department of Transportation to provide alternative transportation services to give people with disabilities increased access to the job market, and to fund a pilot program to demonstrate innovative solutions for overcoming transportation barriers. This is the major NFI program that was not funded in FY 2002. The reason appears to be lack of available resources rather than any problem with the program itself.

II. Looking Forward: '03 Agenda

B. Legislative

Civil Justice

Civil Justice Reform. Tort reform, including class action reform and medical malpractice liability reform, will not likely be resolved this year and will be an issue in the 108th Congress.

- Class Action Jurisdiction Act – This legislation has passed the House twice but has never been considered in the Senate. The President has endorsed it as a reform that will reduce inefficiency, waste and unfairness in the existing class action system, without curtailing plaintiff's rights or remedies.
  Other related legislation might involve anticipated changes to Rule 23 (governing class actions) that the Supreme Court is expected to propose on or before May 1, 2003. Some of these changes are to allow class members to opt out of the class once the terms of a proposed settlement are known; to allow the court to select class counsel; and to establish procedures for approval of attorney's fee awards. If Congress takes no action they would go into effect as proposed. However, there may be opportunities to strengthen the rule changes by legislation.
- Medical Malpractice Liability -- The House passed the HEALTH Act by vote of 217 – 203. The Senate is unlikely to consider the bill this Congress. However, as the public continues to suffer from increased medical insurance costs, watches doctors withdraw from practices where their insurance costs are prohibitive, and notes the absence of facilities such as trauma centers, there will be increasing pressure on the Senate to move next year.

Tobacco Control Legislation ('03)– Bipartisan legislation in Congress has been introduced to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco products. While the issue has not been highly visible in the 107th Congress, Democrats and some Republicans plan to raise its profile in the 108th Congress. The Administration may be required to take a position on the regulation of tobacco products, and should prepare a strategy to address this issue for early next year.

C. Regulatory

Civil Justice

FDA Drug Labeling Safe Harbor. The FDA reviews and approves every word on the label of any prescription drug product, and it requires manufacturers to obtain approval before modifying a drug label. Yet many courts permit lawsuits based on a claim that a drug manufacturer's label did not warn of a certain risk – even though the label fully complied with all federal safety requirements. Such lawsuits essentially allow a jury to second-guess the FDA's judgment regarding a product's label and develop labeling policy without considering all the consequences. Empirical evidence shows that these decisions actually jeopardize the public health, since labels that are too complicated or long lead to consumers' ignoring all warnings.

REV_00159289

FDA intends to promulgate a regulation expressly preempting tort failure-to-warn and other claims based on alleged deficiencies in a drug's label, as part of a new rule that will extensively revise drug-labeling requirements. These revised labeling requirements will result in simpler, more focused labels that will better protect the general public health.

This initiative could be unveiled at the Presidential level if desired.

SBA Women Owned Small Business Program

- SBA Women Owned Small Business Program: Congress authorized (but did not mandate) the creation of a new set-aside program for women-owned small businesses to restrict certain federal contracts to bidding by women-owned businesses, which would be the first newly-created set-aside program in this Administration.
- The SBA proposed regulations to implement the program, but they were of questionable constitutionality and withdrawn in the OMB process. Currently, SBA is reevaluating a Congressionally-mandated draft study it had developed to justify the program. After the revised study is complete next year, the Administration will have to determine whether to implement the program.

New Freedom Initiative

OPM Regulations

- The Office of Personnel Management regulations limit which entities can certify that an applicant has a disability. They are the state vocational rehabilitation agencies and the Department of Veterans Affairs. OPM is actively considering a change in regulation to add SSA as a certifying agency. This could streamline the process in allowing Ticket to Work candidates to apply for Federal jobs. This is expected to change in 2003.

GCL DRAFT 3/2/03

A BILL

To provide for compensation for certain individuals with injuries resulting from administration of smallpox countermeasures within the scope of the Declaration Regarding Administration of Smallpox Countermeasures issued by the Secretary of Health and Human Services on January 24, 2003, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that this Act may be cited as the "Smallpox First Responders Protection Act of 2003".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act, terms have the following meanings:

(1) DECLARATION.—The term "Declaration" means the Declaration Regarding Administration of Smallpox Countermeasures issued by the Secretary of Health and Human Services on January 24, 2003 and published in the Federal Register on _____, including any subsequent amendment.

(2) COVERED COUNTERMEASURE.—The term "covered countermeasure" means a covered countermeasure specified in article III of the Declaration.

(3) COVERED FIRST RESPONDER.—The term "covered first responder" means an individual—

(A) who is within a category of individuals specified in article IV of the Declaration; and

(B) to whom a covered countermeasure is administered during the effective period of the Declaration and not later than—

(i) 60 days after the effective date of this Act, or, if later

(ii) 60 days after becoming an individual within a category specified in such article IV.

(3) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—The term "eligible individual" means an individual who is (as determined in accordance with section 3)—

(A) a covered first responder who sustains a covered injury as a result of administration of a covered countermeasure; or

(B) any other individual who contracts vaccinia during the effective period of the Declaration or within 30 days after the end of such period—

(i) to whom vaccinia vaccine was not administered; and

(ii) who has resided with, or has been in close contact with, a covered first responder. [NOTE: A parallel amendment should be considered for the amendments to sec. 304 of PL 107-296, adding bolded language to sec. 224(p)(2)(C)(ii)(II) of PHSA.]

(4) COVERED INJURY.—The term "covered injury" means an injury, disability, illness, condition, or death determined, pursuant to the procedures established under section 3, to have been sustained by an eligible individual as the direct or indirect result of administration of a covered countermeasure during the effective period of the Declaration, including—

(A) contact vaccinia; and

(B) complications and secondary adverse health effects of such injury, including aggravation of other or preexisting injuries, disabilities, illnesses, or conditions.

[QUERY: Need to consider whether to include some severity threshold or equivalent, to prevent claims for de minimis injuries. E.g., HR 865 (Waxman) provides no benefits for "minor scarring or minor local reactions".]

SEC. 3. DETERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The [Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services,] shall establish administrative procedures for determining, as applicable with respect to an individual—

(1) whether the individual is an eligible individual;

(2) whether an eligible individual has sustained covered injuries for which medical benefits and employment income-loss compensation may be available under sections 5 and 6;

(3) whether the covered injuries of an eligible individual constitute a compensable disability, or caused the individual's death, for purposes of benefits under section 8.

(b) COVERED FIRST RESPONDERS.—The Attorney General may accept a certification, by a Federal, State, or local government entity or private health care entity participating in the administration of covered countermeasures under the Declaration, that an individual is a first responder to whom such a countermeasure has been administered by the applicable deadline specified in section 2(3)(B), as establishing that the individual is a covered first responder.

(b) DETERMINATION OF CAUSATION.—

(1) INJURIES SPECIFIED IN INJURY TABLE.—In any case where an injury or other adverse effect specified in the injury table established under section 4 as a known effect of a countermeasure manifests in an individual within the time period specified in such table, such injury or other effect shall be [conclusively?] presumed to have resulted from administration of such countermeasure.

(2) OTHER DETERMINATIONS.—In making determinations other than those described in paragraph (1) as to the causation or severity of an injury, the [Attorney General] shall take into consideration all relevant medical and scientific evidence presented for consideration, and may obtain and consider the views of qualified medical experts.

SEC. 4. COUNTERMEASURE INJURY TABLE.

(a) SMALLPOX COUNTERMEASURE INJURY TABLE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish by interim final regulation, and may amend by regulation, a table identifying adverse effects (including injuries, disabilities, illnesses, conditions, and deaths) that shall be presumed to result from the administration of (or exposure to) a covered countermeasure, and the time period in which the first symptom or indication of each such adverse effect must manifest in order for such presumption to apply.

SEC. 5. MEDICAL BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, an eligible individual shall be entitled to provision of or payment for medical items and services as reasonable and necessary to treat a covered injury, to the extent and in the manner that would apply under section ____ of the Federal Employees Compensation Act (5 U.S.C. 8103) to a Federal employee injured in the performance of duty.

(b) BENEFITS SECONDARY TO OTHER COVERAGE.—The obligation of the United States to pay for or provide any services or benefits under subsection (a) shall be secondary to the obligation of the United States or any third party, under any other provision of law or contractual agreement, to pay for or provide such services or benefits.

(c) OPTION TO RECEIVE MEDICAL SERVICES THROUGH DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OR VETERANS AFFAIRS FACILITIES.—

(1) INDIVIDUAL OPTION.—An eligible individual may elect to receive some or all medical services covered under this section at medical facilities operated by the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

(2) RESPONSIBILITY OF DOD.—The Secretary of Defense shall furnish medical items and services necessary to treat covered injuries of an eligible individual to the same extent that the Secretary furnishes such care and services to any member of the armed services under [cite?].

(3) RESPONSIBILITY OF DVA.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall furnish medical items and services necessary to treat covered injuries of an eligible individual to the same extent that the Secretary furnishes such care and services to any veteran for a service-connected disability under 38 U.S.C. 1710(a)(1).

SEC. 6. COMPENSATION FOR LOST EMPLOYMENT INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, an eligible individual shall be entitled to payment of compensation for loss of employment income incurred as a result of a covered injury, at the rate specified in subsection (b).

(b) AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Compensation under this section shall be at the rate of 66 2/3 percent of monthly pay, as determined in accordance with sections ____ and ____ of the Federal Employees Compensation Act (5 U.S.C. 8114 and 8115).

(2) TREATMENT OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—For purposes of this section—

(i) the term "employment income" includes income from self-employment; and

(ii) for purposes of computation of pay and determination of wage-earning capacity under paragraph (1), self-employment income shall be treated as wages.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) BENEFITS SECONDARY TO OTHER COVERAGE.—The obligation of the United States to pay compensation under subsection (a) shall be secondary to the obligation of the United States or any third party, under any other law or contractual agreement, to pay compensation for loss of employment income.

(2) NO BENEFITS FOR DEATH OR PERMANENT AND TOTAL DISABILITY.—No payment shall be made under this section in compensation for loss of employment income due to the death or permanent and total disability of an eligible individual.

(3) LIMIT ON TOTAL BENEFITS.—Total benefits paid to an individual under this section shall not exceed $50,000.

(4) WAITING PERIOD.—An eligible individual is not entitled to compensation under this section for the first 5 days of disability.

SEC. 8. PAYMENT FOR DEATH AND DISABILITY.

(a) BENEFIT FOR PERMANENT AND TOTAL DISABILITY.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, an eligible individual who is determined, in accordance with the procedures established under section 3, to have a covered injury or injuries meeting the definition of disability in section 216(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 416(i)) shall be entitled to a payment by the United States of an amount determined under subsection (c), in the same manner as payment may be made pursuant to the Public Safety Officers' Benefits Program (PSOB) to a public safety officer permanently and totally disabled as the direct result of a catastrophic injury sustained in the line of duty.

(b) DEATH BENEFIT.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, in the case of an eligible individual whose death is determined, in accordance with the procedures established under section 3, to have resulted from a covered injury or injuries a death benefit in the amount determined under subsection (c) shall be payable to the survivor or survivors in the same manner as a death benefit under the PSOB is payable to the survivor or survivors of a public safety officer who has died as the result of a personal injury sustained in the line of duty.

(c) BENEFIT AMOUNT.—The amount of the disability or death benefit under subsection (a) or (b) in a fiscal year shall equal the amount of the comparable benefit calculated under the PSOB in such fiscal year, without regard to any reduction attributable to a limitation on appropriations.

SEC. 11. RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS.

(a) NO PREEMPTION OF INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to override or limit any rights an individual may have to seek compensation, benefits, or redress under any other provision of Federal or State law, specifically including section 224(p) of the Public Health Service Act (providing a cause of action under the Federal Tort Claims Act for injuries resulting from administration of smallpox countermeasures under such section 224(p)).

[(b) PREEMPTION OF STATE LAWS PROVIDING EXCLUSIVE REMEDY FOR WORK-RELATED INJURIES.—No provision of a State workers' compensation

KEY POINTS***

If Saddam Hussein were serious about complying with the latest UN resolution, in the 15 weeks since 1441 passed on November 8th Iraq would have:
- Submitted a full, accurate, and complete declaration, and destroyed all prohibited materials;
- Accounted for all unaccounted-for weapons;
- Turned over and destroyed the mobile bio-weapons labs, all illegal missiles, missile parts, testing equipment, and unmanned aerial vehicles with ranges greater than 150 km;
- Encouraged scientists to be interviewed without minders, inside or outside of Iraq;
- Allowed unimpeded aerial reconnaissance; and
- Turned over all documents requested by inspectors.

Nothing less that full and immediate disarmament is required of the regime by UNSCR 1441. Yet Saddam continues to resist full and immediate cooperation -- even with respect to the missiles.

The missiles are just the tip of the iceberg of Iraq's illegal arsenal. Iraq has not accounted for:
- Raw materials sufficient to produce:
26,000 liters of anthrax
38,000 liters of botulinum toxin; and 5500 liters of aflatoxin, a carcinogen.
- 1.5 tons of VX, a powerful nerve agent.
- Nearly 30,000 empty munitions that could be filled with chemical agents.
- 550 artillery shells filled with mustard agent;

It is not surprising that Saddam Hussein is willing to sacrifice a few illegal weapons to save many other illegal weapons.

Saddam Hussein has a long history of complying with inspectors on small, technical issues, only to continue to cheat inspectors on a large scale. His tactical concessions are designed to buy time, ease the pressure on his regime, split the international community, and erode its resolve.

The danger posed by Saddam Hussein and his weapons cannot be ignored or wished away. We hope the Iraqi regime will meet the demands of the UN and disarm, fully and peacefully. If it does not, we are prepared to disarm Iraq by force.

ANN CLWYD: A VOICE FOR FREEDOM***

"The humanitarian crisis in Iraq is not something we will create. It is there. Listen to the testimony of Ann Clwyd, a brave and tireless campaigner against the barbarism of the Iraqi regime and the suffering of the Iraqi people when the world's attention was turned away."
- British Prime Minister Tony Blair, 2-28-03

Excerpts from a speech by Ann Clwyd, a British Labour MP and human rights activist, who recently traveled to Iraq and met with former prisoners, 2-26-03

"...[One prisoner] said that almost every day, people were executed... not one person, but hundreds. When there was an attack on Uday Hussein's life some time ago, 2,000 prisoners in the prison were executed on the same day. That is the reality of Saddam's Iraq. When I hear people calling for more time, I say 'Who will speak up for those victims? Who is to help the victims of Saddam Hussein's regime unless we do?"

KEY QUOTES***

"Saddam Hussein has a long history of brutal crimes, especially in time of war -- even against his own citizens. If conflict comes, he could target civilians or place them inside military facilities. He could encourage ethnic violence. He could destroy natural resources. Or, worst of all, he could use his weapons of mass destruction."

ANN CLWYD: A VOICE FOR FREEDOM

"The humanitarian crisis in Iraq is not something we will create. It is there. Listen to the testimony of Ann Clwyd, a brave and tireless campaigner against the barbarism of the Iraqi regime and the suffering of the Iraqi people when the world's attention was turned away."
- British Prime Minister Tony Blair, 2-28-03

Excerpts from a speech by Ann Clwyd, a British Labour MP and human rights activist, who recently traveled to Iraq and met with former prisoners, 2-26-03

"….[One prisoner] said that almost every day, people were executed…not one person, but hundreds. When there was an attack on Uday Hussein's life some time ago, 2,000 prisoners in the prison were executed on the same day. That is the reality of Saddam's Iraq. When I hear people calling for more time, I say 'Who will speak up for those victims? Who is to help the victims of Saddam Hussein's regime unless we do?"

KEY QUOTES

"Saddam Hussein has a long history of brutal crimes, especially in time of war -- even against his own citizens. If conflict comes, he could target civilians or place them inside military facilities. He could encourage ethnic violence. He could destroy natural resources. Or, worst of all, he could use his weapons of mass destruction."
President Bush, in radio address, 3-1-03

KEY POINTS

- If Saddam Hussein were serious about complying with the latest UN resolution, in the 15 weeks since 1441 passed on November 8th Iraq would have:
  - Submitted a full, accurate, and complete declaration, and destroyed all prohibited materials;
  - Accounted for all unaccounted-for weapons;
  - Turned over and destroyed the mobile bio-weapons labs, all illegal missiles, missile parts, testing equipment, and unmanned aerial vehicles with ranges greater than 150 km;
  - Encouraged scientists to be interviewed without minders, inside or outside of Iraq;
  - Allowed unimpeded aerial reconnaissance; and
  - Turned over all documents requested by inspectors.
- Nothing less that full and immediate disarmament is required of the regime by UNSCR 1441. Yet Saddam continues to resist full and immediate cooperation--even with respect to the missiles.
- The missiles are just the tip of the iceberg of Iraq's illegal arsenal. Iraq has not accounted for:
  - Raw materials sufficient to produce:
    -26,000 liters of anthrax
    -38,000 liters of botulinum toxin; and
    -5500 liters of aflatoxin, a carcinogen.
  - 1.5 tons of VX, a powerful nerve agent.
  - Nearly 30,000 empty munitions that could be filled with chemical agents.
  - 550 artillery shells filled with mustard agent;
- It is not surprising that Saddam Hussein is willing to sacrifice a few illegal weapons to save many other illegal weapons.
- Saddam Hussein has a long history of complying with inspectors on small, technical issues, only to continue to cheat inspectors on a large scale. His tactical concessions are designed to buy time, ease the pressure on his regime, split the international community, and erode its resolve.
- The danger posed by Saddam Hussein and his weapons cannot be ignored or wished away. We hope the Iraqi regime will meet the demands of the UN and disarm, fully and peacefully. If it does not, we are prepared to disarm Iraq by force.

Samuel Alito Jr.: The Mild-Mannered Scalia

There's a nickname for federal appeals Judge Samuel Alito Jr. that captures two things at once -- his particular brand of legal conservatism and a recognition that his credentials are strong enough to put him on any Republican president's short-list for the U.S. Supreme Court.

Some lawyers call the judge "Scalito."

Roughly translated, the nickname means "Little Scalia," suggesting that Alito, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit, has modeled himself after Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia.

With Alito in President George W. Bush's sights as a possible high court nominee, the question is whether he can both overcome the nickname and somehow live up to it.

In some ways, the Scalito moniker hits the mark. In his 13 years on the 3rd Circuit, Alito has earned his stripes as a strong and intelligent voice on the growing conservative wing of a court once considered among the country's most liberal.

As with Scalia, lawyers say that Alito's vote is easy to predict in highly charged cases.

But where the nickname misses is temperament, or what some might call personality. Personality-wise, on the bench and in person, Alito is no Scalia.

Though he's a frequent dissenter and not at all afraid to disagree with his colleagues, Alito's opinions are usually devoid of passion. And his tone during oral arguments is probing but always polite.

For that reason, the 52-year-old Alito might be exactly what Bush is looking for to fill the first or, more likely, a second vacancy on the Supreme Court if the opportunity arises. Alito declined to comment for this article.

Alito's r?sum? reads like a recipe for high court consideration -- beginning with undergrad studies at Princeton, perhaps the Ivy League's most welcoming home for conservatives seeking elite educations, and a law degree from Yale, the Bush family's sentimental favorite.

After a clerkship with a 3rd Circuit judge, Alito worked as a front-line federal prosecutor in New Jersey for four years.

But soon after President Ronald Reagan was elected, Alito joined the Office of the Solicitor General, staying for four years and helping to decide what position the administration would take in cases up for review by the Supreme Court.

That was followed by a three-year stint at Main Justice as a deputy assistant attorney general.

In 1987, at the age of 37, Alito was appointed U.S. attorney for the District of New Jersey, a post he held until he was tapped in 1990 by the first President Bush to join the 3rd Circuit.

On the hot-button issues, Alito has been consistently conservative.

In ACLU v. Schundler, Alito wrote the majority opinion holding that a city's holiday display that included a cr?che and a menorah did not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment because it also included secular symbols such as Frosty the Snowman and a banner promoting racial diversity.

On abortion, Alito was the lone dissenter in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, in which the 3rd Circuit struck down a Pennsylvania law that required women seeking abortions to inform their husbands.

Alito argued that the Pennsylvania law's restrictions should have been upheld.

"The Pennsylvania Legislature could have rationally believed," Alito wrote, "that some married women are initially inclined to obtain an abortion without their husbands' knowledge because of perceived problems -- such as economic constraints, future plans, or the husbands' previously expressed opposition -- that may be obviated by discussion prior to the abortion."

The case went on to the Supreme Court, resulting in a 6-3 decision that reaffirmed Roe v. Wade and struck down the spousal notification provision of the law. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, in his dissent, quoted Alito's underlying dissent and said he agreed with his reasoning.

In fact, over the years, Alito has been a frequent dissenter. And, unlike in Casey, he has sometimes been vindicated, when the Supreme Court reversed his colleagues and made his view the law.

In Homar v. Gilbert, Alito dissented from a ruling that a state university had violated a campus police officer's due process rights by suspending him without pay immediately after he was arrested on drug charges. The Supreme Court later agreed with Alito's view that no hearing was required because the criminal charges showed that the suspension was not baseless.

Perhaps Alito's most memorable dissent came in 1996 in Sheridan v. Dupont, a sex discrimination suit that forced the 3rd Circuit to tackle fundamental questions about the plaintiff's burden of proof.

The issue in Sheridan was whether a plaintiff in a sex discrimination case can survive summary judgment simply by casting doubt on the employer's proffer of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for the adverse employment decision.

More specifically, the question was how the 3rd Circuit should interpret the 1993 Supreme Court decision in St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, which held that once an employer offers legitimate reasons for its conduct, the presumption of discrimination is "rebutted" and "drops from the case."

After Hicks, the federal circuits split, with a few creating what came to be known as the "pretext-plus" standard, meaning plaintiffs must do more than merely cast doubt on an employer's explanation to have the case go forward.

In Sheridan, a 12-judge en banc panel rejected the pretext-plus theory, saying it was "within the province of the jury" to decide when discrimination had occurred.

Alito, the lone dissenter, argued that his colleagues were going too far by allowing plaintiffs to get their case to a jury whenever they managed to cast any doubt on the employer's version.

"If the majority had merely said that . . . a defense motion for summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law must generally be denied, I would agree," Alito wrote.

But, he said, his colleagues had established a "blanket rule" against summary judgment that was legally "unsound."

Janice Rogers Brown: As Sharp as They Come

When the California Supreme Court limited the use of stun belts on criminal defendants in courtrooms, it wasn't the decision that raised eyebrows -- it was the lone dissent by Justice Janice Rogers Brown.

The 53-year-old Republican appointee lashed out at her fellow jurists, accusing them of "rushing to judgment after conducting an embarrassing Google.com search for information outside the record," and criticizing them for citing a student law review article and a story from a left-wing magazine.

"A high school student who turned in a research paper like that," Brown wrote last year, "would be unlikely to get high marks for either the distinction or balance of the authorities cited."

Harsh comments, but Brown, the first African-American woman to sit on the California Supreme Court, isn't known to mince words, especially when she's on the losing side.

She once alluded to the majority justices as "philosopher kings" when they voided a law requiring minors to obtain parental consent for abortions. In another case she accused them of being "wimps" for letting the legislative and executive branches appoint some of the judges to the state's lawyer-discipline court.

While some lawyers love Brown's directness, others say her tart dissents could pose problems if, as many believe, she's under consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court.

"They're very acerbic," says court watcher Gerald Uelmen, a professor at Santa Clara University School of Law, "and raise the question of her basic collegiality."

Others say that's nonsense.

"If a justice strongly believes in her position, I think she should strongly state it," says Anthony Caso, senior vice president and general counsel of the conservative Pacific Legal Foundation in Sacramento. "It should be stated in no uncertain terms."

Brown, who declined an interview request, was born in 1949 in rural Alabama, the daughter of a sharecropper. After her family moved to California, she went on to graduate from UCLA School of Law, work for California's legislative counsel, and then serve eight years in the state attorney general's office. In 1991, she became Republican Gov. Pete Wilson's legal affairs secretary.

Two years later, Wilson nominated Brown to the California Supreme Court, but the state's Judicial Nominees Evaluation Commission rated her not qualified, presumably because she had no judicial experience. When she was nominated for an intermediate appellate court position in 1995, she got rave reviews and took the bench.

Brown joined the high court in 1996 after once again being rated not qualified. At that time the state nominations commission said she lacked sufficient legal and judicial experience for the high court and that she improperly injected her political philosophy into her judicial opinions.

As a child of the Deep South, Brown experienced firsthand the rampant racism of the era, but, she's said in previous interviews, she also witnessed changing times, beginning most prominently when the U.S. Supreme Court desegregated public schools with Brown v. Board of Education on May 17, 1954 -- six days after her fifth birthday.

Brown has had high praise for that ruling, even though it represents the kind of judicial activism she doesn't advocate. "How could anybody of my background not think that Brown was an extremely good idea whose time had come?" she said in a 1996 interview. "Let's face it."

But in 2000, Brown shocked civil rights lawyers and black bar groups by writing the opinion that basically affirmed California's controversial Proposition 209, which banned racial and gender preferences in state contracting and hiring. That ruling, Hi-Voltage Wire Works Inc. v. City of San Jose, struck down a San Jose program that required contractors to attempt to recruit female- and minority-owned subcontractors.

"With the approval of Proposition 209," Brown wrote, "the electorate chose to reassert the principle of equality of individual opportunity as a constitutional imperative."

The ruling horrified civil rights lawyers.

Eva Paterson, executive director of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights of the San Francisco Bay Area, says that, as a black woman herself, she hates to criticize another black woman.

"That having been said," Paterson says, "if Janice Brown were a white man, I would vigorously oppose her elevation to the Supreme Court if for no other reason than her opinion in Hi-Voltage, which was very disturbing and had a view of civil rights which does not comport with the civil rights that I hold dear.

"It is very painful for me to say this," she adds, "but if I don't speak out, other people may feel that it's racist to speak out, and it's not."

Still, it's rulings such as Hi-Voltage that many expect will catch President George W. Bush's eye. "She's clearly qualified for the Supreme Court," says J. Clark Kelso, a professor at Sacramento's McGeorge School of Law.

Kelso also says too much is made of Brown's dissents. "[Experts] don't talk about the hundred other cases where everybody is agreeing and getting along," he says. "[They] tend to focus on those isolated instances where real fundamental disagreement flares up."

Of the 115 rulings issued by the California Supreme Court last year, 73 were unanimous. Brown was the most prolific of the court's seven justices, the author of 23 opinions while also writing or participating in 16 dissents.

Cases that Kelso and others believe are among Brown's most prominent include 1998's People v. Reyes, in which she wrote the majority ruling that held that reasonable suspicion is not required for a parole search if it is based on a properly imposed condition.

They also point to Brown's dissent last year in Kasky v. Nike Inc. In that case, now pending before the U.S. Supreme Court, Brown argued that statements by Nike defending itself against charges that it runs sweatshops overseas should have been protected as commercial speech. She also called on the nation's highest court to re-examine its 60-year-old policies on commercial speech, saying the current doctrine "fails to account for the realities of a modern world."

Brown's opinion in the Prop. 209 case drew a rebuke from California Chief Justice Ronald George -- a fellow Republican and Wilson appointee. George accused Brown of distorting history by including a long rendition of court rulings on race.

"In view of the limited issue before us," the chief justice wrote, "it is unnecessary and inappropriate to use this case as an occasion in which to attack the analysis and conclusions of pre-Proposition 209 decisions."

It wasn't the first time Brown and George have clashed. Reportedly, early in her tenure, George advised Brown to tone down her dissents, and to this day it is said they communicate only by memorandum.

While that friction will likely be no factor in Bush's decision, lawyers say Brown's penchant to issue rulings that range from conservative to liberal could.

"There's something for everyone to pick at on her record," Uelmen says. "The National Rifle Association will be unhappy with the opinion she wrote upholding our assault weapons law, and a lot of law-and-order people will be unhappy about how liberal she is in criminal cases."

One California judge, who requested anonymity, says that, ironically, Brown could be in trouble for having issued such a strong dissent in the parental consent case -- 1997's American Academy of Pediatrics v. Lungren, in which the majority struck down a law that would have required minors to get permission before having abortions.

"Bush is going to appoint somebody that has exactly zero record on the 'A' word -- abortion," the judge says. "He's looking for someone who's conservative but not particularly controversial."

Emilio Garza: The Careful Conservative

George W. Bush's desire to be the first president to nominate a Hispanic to the U.S. Supreme Court could lead him to Emilio Garza, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit whose judicial philosophy makes him attractive to conservatives but an anathema to pro-abortion groups.

"You don't have to dig very deep to find that Emilio Garza is opposed to Roe v. Wade," says Kae McLaughlin, executive director of the Texas Abortion Rights League. "We would definitely oppose his nomination."

While Roe remains a touchstone for any judicial nominee 30 years after it was decided, it is the only obvious hurdle for Garza to overcome. Practitioners describe Garza, who rose quickly through the judicial ranks to reach the 5th Circuit in 1991, as an affable, extremely analytical, and solidly conservative judge.

But a handful of rulings are likely to raise trouble, even though Garza sided with a majority in each case that upheld abortion rights.

In 1992, Garza was a member of a panel that struck down a Louisiana law criminalizing abortions except in limited circumstances. But his concurrence in Sojourner T. v. Edwards articulated his displeasure about having to do it.

"Because the decision to permit or proscribe abortion is a political choice," he wrote, "I would allow the people of the state of Louisiana to decide this issue for themselves."

In 1997, Garza again criticized the Supreme Court's abortion jurisprudence in a concurring opinion. In Causeway Medical Suite v. Ieyoub, Garza voted with the majority to strike down parts of a Louisiana law requiring parental notification when a minor seeks an abortion. But he suggested in his concurrence that Roe is flawed and that subsequent Supreme Court rulings upheld it not because of its sound basis, but in part because of "the primacy of settled expectations about constitutional law."

David Garrow, a court observer and professor at Emory University School of Law in Atlanta, says he doesn't believe Garza is confirmable because of his reasoning in Causeway Medical. "This is a judge who believes Griswold v. Connecticut [the 1965 Supreme Court decision that laid the framework for a constitutionally guaranteed right to privacy] was incorrect and Bowers v. Hardwick [a 1986 decision that refused to extend the privacy right in a case about a sodomy statute] was correct," Garrow says. "Judge Garza would be Teddy Kennedy's dream nominee."

Garza could not be reached for comment. A spokeswoman in his office says Garza generally does not give interviews.

Despite the opposition Garza would generate, practitioners give him high praise.

Lino Graglia, a University of Texas School of Law professor who teaches constitutional law, describes Garza as a "soundly reasonable and basically conservative" judge who engages in self-restraint on the bench.

"He's not anxious to enact conservative philosophy," Graglia says. "I would guess he's not as conservative as Edith Jones," another 5th Circuit judge and perennial name on conservative lists for the high court.

While people often assume that Garza is not as conservative as Jones, David Schenck, an appellate litigator and partner in the Dallas office of Hughes & Luce, says, "I think you'll find it very rare the cases on which they differ."

A native of San Antonio, the 55-year-old Garza is a devout Roman Catholic who has never married. He received undergraduate and master's degrees from the University of Notre Dame and served on active duty as a captain in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1970 to 1973. Following graduation from the University of Texas School of Law in 1976, Garza established his private practice and joined a small firm in San Antonio, now known as Clemens & Spencer, before beginning his rise through the judicial ranks.

In 1987, then-Gov. Bill Clements of Texas appointed Garza to the state trial court in San Antonio, but his tenure on the state bench was very brief. President Ronald Reagan nominated Garza to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas the following year, and in 1991, the first President Bush named him to the 5th Circuit.

On the circuit, Garza has shown a penchant for a careful reading of the law. King & Spalding associate Tracey Robertson of Houston served as a law clerk for Garza during the court's 1994-95 term. "It's really important to him to get it right," Robertson says.

In a concurring opinion to 2000's Flores v. Johnson, Garza criticized the basis on which a trial court allowed psychiatric testimony to help condemn Mexican national Miguel Angel Flores for rape and murder. Garza noted in the opinion that a psychiatric expert testified unequivocally that Flores would be a "future danger" without ever evaluating him, and that the expert's opinion was based on the facts of the crime and the defendant's conduct during the trial rather than on an independent assessment.

Garza wrote, "What separates the executioner from the murderer is the legal process by which the state ascertains and condemns those guilty of heinous crimes. If that process is flawed because it allows evidence without any scientific validity to push the jury toward condemning the accused, the legitimacy of our legal process is threatened."

In 1997, Garza wrote the 5th Circuit's en banc opinion in Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, upholding a lower court decision to grant immunity to officers sued by a woman who was arrested and jailed for violating a seat belt law. The Supreme Court voted 5-4 to affirm the ruling.

Greg Coleman, a former Texas solicitor general who heads the Austin office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges, says Garza always focuses on the pressure points in a case and typically doesn't accept answers that he feels misrepresent the 5th Circuit's previous rulings.

"I've seen him cut people short -- not in an unpleasant way -- if they're misrepresenting," Coleman says. "I've seen him stop a guy midway [in an argument] and say, 'That's not really what we meant in that case.' "

Alberto Gonzales: A Washington Education

It seems to be a no-brainer for President George W. Bush to nominate White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales to the Supreme Court. After all, Bush has already appointed Gonzales to four different legal positions in less than a decade.

In 1995, then-Texas Gov. Bush named Gonzales, a partner at Houston's Vinson & Elkins, as his gubernatorial counsel. In 1997, Bush made him Texas secretary of state, and the following year he appointed Gonzales to his first judicial post -- a seat on the Texas Supreme Court. Finally, in 2001, Gonzales became White House counsel.

Gonzales came to Washington before Bush's inauguration as part of the administration's transition team, and he is one of the few people who sees the president just about every working day.

In an administration in which loyalty and closeness to the president are highly valued, Gonzales, 47, scores well on just about every count.

In addition to enjoying the president's confidence, Gonzales has gotten good reviews within the administration for his work as presidential counsel in two very challenging years. And it's no secret that Bush would like to make history by naming the nation's first Hispanic Supreme Court justice.

Gonzales, who declined comment for this story, has said in the past that he is not interested in a Supreme Court appointment. And some conservatives close to the administration are expressing serious concerns about his possible nomination, fearing that Gonzales would not line up with the Court's conservative bloc on issues like abortion and affirmative action.

Still, Gonzales, the Harvard-educated son of Mexican-American migrant workers, is widely considered to be among the front-runners for the first high court vacancy that arises during Bush's years in office.

"He is very able, very common-sensical, level-headed, and unflappable," says C. Boyden Gray, who was White House counsel under the first President Bush and who spearheads a group that lobbies for the current president's judicial nominees. "He has everything that a good Supreme Court justice should have."

Gonzales' personal story is compelling. The second of eight children, he grew up in a home without hot running water or a telephone. He joined the Air Force out of high school, then switched from the Air Force Academy to Rice University in Houston. He graduated from Harvard Law School in 1982 and became the first Hispanic partner at Vinson & Elkins, where he spent 13 years.

There's no doubt that, as White House counsel, Gonzales has established plenty of conservative credentials.

He has carved out a strong niche in favor of executive and attorney-client privilege. He led the administration's successful effort to withhold from Congress documents concerning Vice President Dick Cheney's energy task force, as well as the decision not to hand over D.C. Circuit nominee Miguel Estrada's working papers from the Office of the Solicitor General.

Gonzales has had a key role in crafting the administration's anti-terrorism strategy. He wrote the president's executive order authorizing the use of military tribunals to try alleged terrorists and was the point man in the White House in setting up the Department of Homeland Security and interpreting the USA Patriot Act.

Early on, Gonzales cheered conservatives and irked liberals by reducing the role of the American Bar Association in federal judicial selection and by advising the president to nominate a roster of largely conservative appeals court nominees.

But the irony of a possible Gonzales appointment is that he would probably draw more flak from the right than from the left. Liberals are quietly saying that although Gonzales is far from their ideal nominee, other possible appointees are more troubling.

To conservatives who care about affirmative action and abortion, Gonzales is widely viewed as a compromiser, or worse.

Conservative activists, who generally have been very pleased with Bush's appeals court nominees, are skittish about Gonzales' opinions in several cases on the Texas court in 2000 involving teen-age girls seeking abortions. In those cases, Gonzales gave a broad interpretation to exceptions to a parental-notification requirement in a recently passed and ambiguous state law.

Conservatives were also unhappy to read in recent newspaper accounts that Gonzales was among administration officials who advocated a moderate approach to the University of Michigan affirmative action case. This approach rejects the racial preferences granted by the university, but does not rule out all efforts to take race into account in admissions.

The amicus curiae brief filed by the administration in January was widely seen as just such a compromise.

"The reports are that the Department of Justice sent a brief to the White House that was much better than the brief that was filed, and the reports are that this was partly due to the influence of Judge Gonzales," says Roger Clegg, general counsel of the D.C.-based Center for Equal Opportunity and a foe of affirmative action. "That certainly makes me nervous."

Another conservative legal thinker says, "It's very unlikely that social conservatives will actively support a Gonzales nomination. He may in fact draw opposition from conservatives, based both on questions about his role in the Jane Doe [abortion notification] cases and on the reports that he weakened the administration's position in the Michigan case. There's a lot of concern out there about his judicial philosophy."

In a Los Angeles Times interview two years ago, Gonzales said that, in hiring decisions, "[p]ersonally, I'm not offended that race is a factor. But it should never be the overriding factor or the most important factor."

Gonzales' record in his less than two years on the Texas Supreme Court is generally viewed as moderate. In addition to the parental-notification cases, he wrote an opinion in 2000 that held that the Texas Department of Transportation could be sued by the survivors of a man killed in an automobile accident, even though the department itself was not found to be negligent.

Gonzales' opinion in Texas Department of Transportation v. Able found the department subject to suit because it had entered a joint enterprise with another state agency that was found negligent. Justice Priscilla Owen, a conservative who is a current nominee for the 5th Circuit, dissented.

Gray, the former White House counsel, dismisses the objections of his fellow conservatives.

"I don't regard him as an unreliable conservative," says Gray. "You can never precisely predict one's degree of conservatism, but I am confident that Gonzales is not a liberal. He will probably tend to look more at the facts of each case rather than try to define some sweeping principle, but over the long haul, the result is going to be much the same."

Gray says one can tell a great deal about a potential nominee from the associates that he hires. Here he gives Gonzales very high marks.

"He has picked a crackerjack conservative staff [for the White House counsel's office]," says Gray. "To me, that's probative of his inclinations."

J. Michael Luttig: Putting the Courts In Restraints

If J. Michael Luttig is nominated to the Supreme Court, Senate investigators and journalists will search in vain for his speeches or law review articles.

The last public talk the 4th Circuit appeals judge gave was a eulogy in 2001 for Barbara Olson, the wife of Solicitor General Theodore Olson who was killed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Luttig had presided over their wedding.

Before that, friends say, Luttig's previous off-the-bench remarks were in 1995 at another funeral, this time eulogizing his mentor, Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger.

It is no accident that Luttig's public appearances since being appointed by the first President Bush in 1991 have been so rare -- and so indicative of his ties to the conservative Washington legal scene. Luttig, 48, strongly believes that judges should stick to their cases and speak only through their opinions. Policy pronouncements are the business of others, Luttig says, and his job -- his only job -- is to analyze the cases and precedents before him in a disciplined way to come to the most logical and defensible result. He rarely, if ever, cites law review articles or other secondary sources.

"At the end of the day, other than conscience, it is only analytical rigor, and the accountability that such renders possible, that can restrain a judiciary that serves for life and at the pleasure of no one," Luttig wrote in an obscure 2001 decision, Safety-Kleen v. Wyche.

That rigor has earned Luttig a reputation as a meticulous taskmaster whose law clerks gain an intense, unparalleled education in judicial craftsmanship. It is no wonder that almost all his law clerks go on to clerk for Supreme Court justices.

"There is no one in the federal judiciary who works longer or harder than he does," says a lawyer who has worked with him. "He pours more into getting the details right than anyone." This lawyer, who requested anonymity, says Luttig's passion for detail and discipline leads to his main flaw: "He is not as aware as he might be that not everyone is as smart or persevering as he is. He expects a lot of himself and others." Luttig declined to be interviewed for this article.

Luttig's analytical approach also leads him, at times, to veer sharply from conservative orthodoxy.

In the partial-birth abortion case Richmond Medical Center v. Gilmore in 2000, Luttig said that because of Supreme Court precedent, the abortion right deserved "super-stare decisis" status -- a precedent that cannot be disturbed -- and as a result, the Virginia partial-birth law could not be upheld. "Our responsibility is to follow faithfully its opinions," Luttig wrote -- a stance that could change once Luttig is writing, rather than following, precedent.

Last March, in Harvey v. Horan, Luttig said high court precedent also compelled the conclusion that those convicted of serious crimes possess a limited constitutional right of access to DNA evidence for testing.

And in a dissent in Robles v. Prince George's County last October, Luttig said police who tied a suspect to a pole in an isolated parking lot and left him unattended at 3 a.m. were not entitled to qualified immunity from a Section 1983 civil rights suit. The majority had granted the immunity, and Luttig said the majority's effort to strike a "just balance" had blinded it to the obvious conclusion that the police should have no such immunity.

"I confess ignorance as to where the justice of the case lies," Luttig wrote. "But under the law, it is quite clear that these officers are not entitled to immunity for their conduct."

In Robles and other decisions, Luttig's forceful analysis has brought him into direct conflict with natural conservative allies such as Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III -- public disagreements that a more flexible or collegial judge might avoid.

In the en banc ruling for Urofsky v. Gilmore in 2000, both Wilkinson and Luttig agreed with the judgment of the court that Virginia could restrict state employees' access to sexually explicit materials when they use state computers. But when Wilkinson wrote separately to voice concern about the impact of the ruling on academic freedom for state university professors, Luttig wrote a withering concurrence that picked apart Wilkinson's analysis, almost line by line.

"Although Judge Wilkinson trumpets judicial restraint," Luttig said, "his fanfare can hardly be heard over the clashing from his own unabashed creation of new constitutional rights out of whole cloth -- an unabashedness that forces his surrender of the high ground that he has assumed in the debate over judicial activism."

Luttig's unflinching readiness to criticize his allies invites comparison to Justice Antonin Scalia, for whom Luttig clerked on the D.C. Circuit 20 years ago. Scalia often seems happier in his decision-making when he is jabbing his colleagues for lack of doctrinal purity than he would be if he tempered his words in the interest of collegiality and coalition-building.

Luttig himself has voiced disdain for the "false collegiality" of papering over differences, preferring instead the collegiality that he says comes with the airing of "high-spirited differences of opinion." But if he is named to the high court, the challenge for Luttig may be whether that brand of collegiality can be counted on to build and hold majorities on a divided bench.

University of Virginia law professor A.E. Dick Howard says the comparison between Luttig and Scalia, while tempting, is not precise. "Judge Luttig is not nearly as theatrical as Justice Scalia," says Howard, a longtime observer of the 4th Circuit. "Luttig shuns publicity, and he is very pleasant and steady, with no rough edges -- none of the flashes of lightning you get with Scalia."

Indeed, in person, Luttig seems the opposite of Scalia, with a boyish face, an unassuming manner, teetotaling ways, and a friendly Texas drawl. He has a sense of humor: A few years ago, he "applied" for a first-year associate's job at Hogan & Hartson, which, he suspected, would pay more than the salary of a federal appeals judge. Responding in kind, Hogan partner John Roberts Jr. turned Luttig down, informing him that first-year associates normally lack life tenure, are not assigned a battery of law clerks to assist them, and don't wear black robes -- even on casual Fridays.

Luttig has also known tragedy in his life. His father, John, was murdered in a 1994 carjacking in Tyler, Texas, in front of his mother, Bobbie. Luttig went to the trial of Napoleon Beazley, his father's murderer, who was 17 at the time of the crime. When Beazley's case went to the U.S. Supreme Court on appeal, it became evident how close Luttig is to several justices. His one-time boss Scalia, as well as Justices Clarence Thomas and David Souter, recused. While in the Bush Justice Department before joining the bench, Luttig helped shepherd Thomas and Souter through confirmation. Beazley was executed last May.

Since the murder of Luttig's father, defense lawyers have tried occasionally to get Luttig to recuse himself in capital cases, but he has refused. Friends have noted that the late Chief Justice Earl Warren's father was murdered before he joined the Supreme Court, and Warren did not recuse from murder cases.

It was the late Chief Justice Burger who guided Luttig into a legal career. Luttig, whose first initial stands for John, began working for Burger as an intern at the high court even before becoming a lawyer. And his Justice Department job was in the Office of Legal Counsel, where his predecessors included Scalia and William Rehnquist. "Mike has been on a fast track toward the Supreme Court since the Burger days," says someone who has worked with Luttig.

When Luttig's law clerks celebrated his 10th anniversary as a federal appeals judge in 2001, they presented him with an American flag that had flown over the Supreme Court. He displays it in his chambers in Alexandria, Va.

The clerks knew that to Luttig, anything having to do with the Supreme Court has special meaning. And a seat on the Supreme Court would be the best gift of all.

Says another friend of Luttig: "I really think that if he was given the choice between being president and being a justice or chief justice, the presidency would lose out."

J. Harvie Wilkinson III: A Soft Face On the Hard Line

The title of the speech that 4th Circuit Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III gave on Feb. 19 said it all: "Why Conservative Jurisprudence Is Compassionate."

Speaking to a student audience at his alma mater, the University of Virginia Law School, Wilkinson spoke almost defensively about the ways in which conservative judges have heart. Favoring the individual over business or government, he said, is not always compassionate. Compassion is sometimes best left to legislators, and can be either inappropriate, hard to define, or insufficient in a judicial setting. Modesty, not compassion, is the highest virtue for a judge, said Wilkinson, whose chambers are in Charlottesville.

Wilkinson's thesis was soon put to the test. A black law student approached him during a post-speech reception. Judicial modesty and deference to the elected branches are all well and good, the student told Wilkinson, but "what if the legislature is dragging its feet?"

With a friendly smile, Wilkinson responded, "Well, saying that the legislature is dragging its feet sounds to me like, 'The legislature isn't doing what I'd like it to be doing.' I'm very uneasy with that."

The student retorted, "So you are saying there are no absolutes? What if the legislature approves slavery?"

Without missing a beat, Wilkinson replied, "Then, the judiciary must step in. Brown v. Board of Education and Marbury v. Madison were the best decisions the Supreme Court ever made."

The student was disarmed. And then he was charmed when Wilkinson told him, with characteristic full-body enthusiasm, how much he appreciated the student's attendance and his comments.

It was a classic Wilkinson moment: putting a friendly face on conservative jurisprudence, and trying to bring everyone under its tent with collegiality and consensus. It is these qualities, matched by respected opinion writing, that lead some inside and outside the White House to place the 58-year-old Wilkinson high on the list for nomination as chief justice. Like the late Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell Jr., the man after whom he has modeled his life and jurisprudence, Wilkinson exudes a courtly civility that could be a unifying force on the Court.

"The person in the center chair is expected to have a certain gravitas. So someone like Wilkinson, who is older, would be an appealing candidate," says Florida International University law professor Thomas Baker. But age could also work against Wilkinson, says the University of Connecticut's David Yalof. "If [the Bush administration is] using the Reagan playbook, where youth and longevity are key, then Wilkinson is in the danger zone." Wilkinson declined to be interviewed for this article.

Wilkinson's eagerness for consensus may also frustrate some in the White House who would prefer a harder-edged conservative. Though a Judicature magazine tally of the rulings of several potential Bush nominees last year placed Wilkinson farthest to the right, those who know Wilkinson dismissed the study and place him closer to the Powellesque right-leaning middle.

The Bush administration has little to object to in Wilkinson's handling of the post-Sept. 11 national security cases that have gone before the 4th Circuit. In three separate rulings on different aspects of the government's case against enemy combatant Yaser Esam Hamdi, Wilkinson expressed little doubt about the executive branch's primacy over the judiciary in times of war -- even undeclared war.

"Our Constitution's commitment of the conduct of war to the political branches of American government requires the court's respect at every step," Wilkinson wrote last July. "The deference that flows from the explicit enumeration of powers protects liberty as much as the explicit enumeration of rights," Wilkinson said in another ruling this January.

But in the January ruling, Wilkinson added that especially in the context of a habeas corpus petition such as the one filed by Hamdi, courts do have a responsibility to serve as a check on the other branches. "The duty of the judicial branch to protect our individual freedoms does not simply cease whenever our military forces are committed by the political branches to armed conflict."

Wilkinson, who recently rotated out of a seven-year term as chief judge of the 4th Circuit, has also distanced himself somewhat from the Rehnquist Court's trademark series of federalism-based rulings striking down acts of Congress.

In 1999, Wilkinson joined the 4th Circuit majority in Brzonkala v. Virginia Polytechnic Institute, rejecting a provision of the Violence Against Women Act as an excessive intrusion by Congress into state sovereignty -- a position later ratified by the Supreme Court.

But in a concurrence tinged with doubt, Wilkinson said the ruling, like others by the Supreme Court that rejected acts of Congress, could be labeled judicial activism. In the end it was justifiable as fulfilling the judiciary's role of "structural referee," Wilkinson wrote, but he cautioned against going too far, too fast. "The values of federalism must be tempered by the maxims of prudence and restraint," Wilkinson wrote.

Taking his own advice, Wilkinson ruled the next year in Gibbs v. Babbitt that the Endangered Species Act was a valid exercise of Congress' power over interstate commerce when applied to the protection of red wolves. "The courts may not simply tear through the considered judgments of Congress," Wilkinson wrote.

On the issue of affirmative action, a 1987 ruling by Wilkinson struck down Richmond's minority set-aside program in Croson v. City of Richmond. The Supreme Court affirmed Wilkinson's view in a 1989 ruling that made clear its growing disenchantment with affirmative action.

A decade later in his book One Nation Indivisible, Wilkinson reaffirmed his opposition to affirmative action as "the most dangerous of policy prescriptions for a multiethnic nation." But the rest of the book, which called for an end to ethnic and racial separatism in America, is a celebration of multiculturalism and diversity. Wilkinson wrote that at times he rues the all-white milieu of his own upbringing in upper-crust Richmond, which he said was "as distant from multicultural America as any childhood could possibly be."

Wilkinson's father was a prominent Richmond banker who was introduced to his wife by the young Lewis Powell. Powell gave the young Wilkinson -- known to friends as Jay, short for James -- his first summer job in high school, as a messenger at Powell's law firm, Hunton & Williams. "One day you may make a good lawyer," Powell told Wilkinson, and he kept in contact with Wilkinson through college and law school. When lightning struck and Powell was named to the high court in 1971, Wilkinson was the first clerk he hired.

"Clerking for Justice Powell was clearly one of the centerpieces of Jay's career," says longtime friend Russell Palmore Jr., a partner in the Richmond office of the Atlanta firm Troutman Sanders. Wilkinson wrote about his experience as a Powell clerk in the 1974 book Serving Justice. Wilkinson also dabbled in teaching law and in journalism, writing editorials for a Norfolk newspaper. Before he went with Powell, he even ran for Congress -- and lost. He has said that winning only 30 percent of the vote left him with a "profound respect" for those who achieve a majority and are elected. President Ronald Reagan named Wilkinson to the 4th Circuit in 1984.

Even Wilkinson's friends remark that he sounds and even looks somewhat like the late Justice Powell. Wilkinson's thin frame -- he runs daily, according to friends -- and the inflections and cadence of his reedy Southern voice match Powell's. Wilkinson does not object when the comparison is made.

In addition to explaining and popularizing conservative jurisprudence, Wilkinson has devoted much of his public speaking and off-the-bench writing to spreading the word about Powell's legacy.

In a 1992 Washington and Lee Law Review article, Wilkinson praised Powell for regarding the role of the judiciary as "that of a mediator and facilitator, not as dictator." As for his jurisprudence, Wilkinson said Powell "sought to craft decisions that gave something to both sides." Admiringly, Wilkinson also said Powell avoided establishing bright-line rules or issuing sweeping decisions -- characteristics of Powell's approach that partisans sometimes found frustrating. "The Powell approach sought to ensure that the most volatile issues in our society did not quickly achieve definitive outcomes in the courts," Wilkinson wrote.

After Powell retired from the high court in 1987, he occasionally sat on the 4th Circuit by designation, sometimes finding himself on the same panel with his younger friend Wilkinson.

In a 1992 trademark case, Anheuser-Busch v. L&L Wings Inc., Wilkinson wrote the majority opinion and Powell filed a dissent -- a rare, if not unique, instance when the two disagreed. Wilkinson, joined by Judge J. Michael Luttig, held that T-shirts displaying humorous images that looked like Budweiser beer cans did not confuse consumers and did not infringe the Budweiser trademark. Powell disagreed, though he gently remarked that in one aspect of the case "the court is correct in the abstract."

Wilkinson, for his part, gently chided Powell: "Our dissenting brother's standard is so broad that it would banish virtually all attempts at humorous takeoffs on trademarks as a matter of law." The disagreement was clear, but Wilkinson's tone, as always, was respectful.

Samuel Alito Jr.: The Mild-Mannered Scalia

There's a nickname for federal appeals Judge Samuel Alito Jr. that captures two things at once -- his particular brand of legal conservatism and a recognition that his credentials are strong enough to put him on any Republican president's short-list for the U.S. Supreme Court.

Some lawyers call the judge "Scalito."

Roughly translated, the nickname means "Little Scalia," suggesting that Alito, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit, has modeled himself after Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia.

With Alito in President George W. Bush's sights as a possible high court nominee, the question is whether he can both overcome the nickname and somehow live up to it.

In some ways, the Scalito moniker hits the mark. In his 13 years on the 3rd Circuit, Alito has earned his stripes as a strong and intelligent voice on the growing conservative wing of a court once considered among the country's most liberal.

As with Scalia, lawyers say that Alito's vote is easy to predict in highly charged cases.

But where the nickname misses is temperament, or what some might call personality. Personality-wise, on the bench and in person, Alito is no Scalia.

Though he's a frequent dissenter and not at all afraid to disagree with his colleagues, Alito's opinions are usually devoid of passion. And his tone during oral arguments is probing but always polite.

For that reason, the 52-year-old Alito might be exactly what Bush is looking for to fill the first or, more likely, a second vacancy on the Supreme Court if the opportunity arises. Alito declined to comment for this article.

Alito's résumé reads like a recipe for high court consideration -- beginning with undergrad studies at Princeton, perhaps the Ivy League's most welcoming home for conservatives seeking elite educations, and a law degree from Yale, the Bush family's sentimental favorite.

After a clerkship with a 3rd Circuit judge, Alito worked as a front-line federal prosecutor in New Jersey for four years.

But soon after President Ronald Reagan was elected, Alito joined the Office of the Solicitor General, staying for four years and helping to decide what position the administration would take in cases up for review by the Supreme Court.

That was followed by a three-year stint at Main Justice as a deputy assistant attorney general.

In 1987, at the age of 37, Alito was appointed U.S. attorney for the District of New Jersey, a post he held until he was tapped in 1990 by the first President Bush to join the 3rd Circuit.

On the hot-button issues, Alito has been consistently conservative.

In ACLU v. Schundler, Alito wrote the majority opinion holding that a city's holiday display that included a crèche and a menorah did not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment because it also included secular symbols such as Frosty the Snowman and a banner promoting racial diversity.

On abortion, Alito was the lone dissenter in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, in which the 3rd Circuit struck down a Pennsylvania law that required women seeking abortions to inform their husbands.

Alito argued that the Pennsylvania law's restrictions should have been upheld.

"The Pennsylvania Legislature could have rationally believed," Alito wrote, "that some married women are initially inclined to obtain an abortion without their husbands' knowledge because of perceived problems -- such as economic constraints, future plans, or the husbands' previously expressed opposition -- that may be obviated by discussion prior to the abortion."

The case went on to the Supreme Court, resulting in a 6-3 decision that reaffirmed Roe v. Wade and struck down the spousal notification provision of the law. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, in his dissent, quoted Alito's underlying dissent and said he agreed with his reasoning.

In fact, over the years, Alito has been a frequent dissenter. And, unlike in Casey, he has sometimes been vindicated, when the Supreme Court reversed his colleagues and made his view the law.

In Homar v. Gilbert, Alito dissented from a ruling that a state university had violated a campus police officer's due process rights by suspending him without pay immediately after he was arrested on drug charges. The Supreme Court later agreed with Alito's view that no hearing was required because the criminal charges showed that the suspension was not baseless.

Perhaps Alito's most memorable dissent came in 1996 in Sheridan v. Dupont, a sex discrimination suit that forced the 3rd Circuit to tackle fundamental questions about the plaintiff's burden of proof.

The issue in Sheridan was whether a plaintiff in a sex discrimination case can survive summary judgment simply by casting doubt on the employer's proffer of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons for the adverse employment decision.

More specifically, the question was how the 3rd Circuit should interpret the 1993 Supreme Court decision in St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, which held that once an employer offers legitimate reasons for its conduct, the presumption of discrimination is "rebutted" and "drops from the case."

After Hicks, the federal circuits split, with a few creating what came to be known as the "pretext-plus" standard, meaning plaintiffs must do more than merely cast doubt on an employer's explanation to have the case go forward.

In Sheridan, a 12-judge en banc panel rejected the pretext-plus theory, saying it was "within the province of the jury" to decide when discrimination had occurred.

Alito, the lone dissenter, argued that his colleagues were going too far by allowing plaintiffs to get their case to a jury whenever they managed to cast any doubt on the employer's version.

"If the majority had merely said that . . . a defense motion for summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law must generally be denied, I would agree," Alito wrote.

But, he said, his colleagues had established a "blanket rule" against summary judgment that was legally "unsound."

Janice Rogers Brown: As Sharp as They Come

When the California Supreme Court limited the use of stun belts on criminal defendants in courtrooms, it wasn't the decision that raised eyebrows -- it was the lone dissent by Justice Janice Rogers Brown.

The 53-year-old Republican appointee lashed out at her fellow jurists, accusing them of "rushing to judgment after conducting an embarrassing Google.com search for information outside the record," and criticizing them for citing a student law review article and a story from a left-wing magazine.

"A high school student who turned in a research paper like that," Brown wrote last year, "would be unlikely to get high marks for either the distinction or balance of the authorities cited."

Harsh comments, but Brown, the first African-American woman to sit on the California Supreme Court, isn't known to mince words, especially when she's on the losing side.

She once alluded to the majority justices as "philosopher kings" when they voided a law requiring minors to obtain parental consent for abortions. In another case she accused them of being "wimps" for letting the legislative and executive branches appoint some of the judges to the state's lawyer-discipline court.

While some lawyers love Brown's directness, others say her tart dissents could pose problems if, as many believe, she's under consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court.

"They're very acerbic," says court watcher Gerald Uelmen, a professor at Santa Clara University School of Law, "and raise the question of her basic collegiality."

Others say that's nonsense.

"If a justice strongly believes in her position, I think she should strongly state it," says Anthony Caso, senior vice president and general counsel of the conservative Pacific Legal Foundation in Sacramento. "It should be stated in no uncertain terms."

Brown, who declined an interview request, was born in 1949 in rural Alabama, the daughter of a sharecropper. After her family moved to California, she went on to graduate from UCLA School of Law, work for California's legislative counsel, and then serve eight years in the state attorney general's office. In 1991, she became Republican Gov. Pete Wilson's legal affairs secretary.

Two years later, Wilson nominated Brown to the California Supreme Court, but the state's Judicial Nominees Evaluation Commission rated her not qualified, presumably because she had no judicial experience. When she was nominated for an intermediate appellate court position in 1995, she got rave reviews and took the bench.

Brown joined the high court in 1996 after once again being rated not qualified. At that time the state nominations commission said she lacked sufficient legal and judicial experience for the high court and that she improperly injected her political philosophy into her judicial opinions.

As a child of the Deep South, Brown experienced firsthand the rampant racism of the era, but, she's said in previous interviews, she also witnessed changing times, beginning most prominently when the U.S. Supreme Court desegregated public schools with Brown v. Board of Education on May 17, 1954 -- six days after her fifth birthday.

Brown has had high praise for that ruling, even though it represents the kind of judicial activism she doesn't advocate. "How could anybody of my background not think that Brown was an extremely good idea whose time had come?" she said in a 1996 interview. "Let's face it."

But in 2000, Brown shocked civil rights lawyers and black bar groups by writing the opinion that basically affirmed California's controversial Proposition 209, which banned racial and gender preferences in state contracting and hiring. That ruling, Hi-Voltage Wire Works Inc. v. City of San Jose, struck down a San Jose program that required contractors to attempt to recruit female- and minority-owned subcontractors.

"With the approval of Proposition 209," Brown wrote, "the electorate chose to reassert the principle of equality of individual opportunity as a constitutional imperative."

The ruling horrified civil rights lawyers.

Eva Paterson, executive director of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights of the San Francisco Bay Area, says that, as a black woman herself, she hates to criticize another black woman.

"That having been said," Paterson says, "if Janice Brown were a white man, I would vigorously oppose her elevation to the Supreme Court if for no other reason than her opinion in Hi-Voltage, which was very disturbing and had a view of civil rights which does not comport with the civil rights that I hold dear.

"It is very painful for me to say this," she adds, "but if I don't speak out, other people may feel that it's racist to speak out, and it's not."

Still, it's rulings such as Hi-Voltage that many expect will catch President George W. Bush's eye. "She's clearly qualified for the Supreme Court," says J. Clark Kelso, a professor at Sacramento's McGeorge School of Law.

Kelso also says too much is made of Brown's dissents. "[Experts] don't talk about the hundred other cases where everybody is agreeing and getting along," he says. "[They] tend to focus on those isolated instances where real fundamental disagreement flares up."

Of the 115 rulings issued by the California Supreme Court last year, 73 were unanimous. Brown was the most prolific of the court's seven justices, the author of 23 opinions while also writing or participating in 16 dissents.

Cases that Kelso and others believe are among Brown's most prominent include 1998's People v. Reyes, in which she wrote the majority ruling that held that reasonable suspicion is not required for a parole search if it is based on a properly imposed condition.

They also point to Brown's dissent last year in Kasky v. Nike Inc. In that case, now pending before the U.S. Supreme Court, Brown argued that statements by Nike defending itself against charges that it runs sweatshops overseas should have been protected as commercial speech. She also called on the nation's highest court to re-examine its 60-year-old policies on commercial speech, saying the current doctrine "fails to account for the realities of a modern world."

Brown's opinion in the Prop. 209 case drew a rebuke from California Chief Justice Ronald George -- a fellow Republican and Wilson appointee. George accused Brown of distorting history by including a long rendition of court rulings on race.

"In view of the limited issue before us," the chief justice wrote, "it is unnecessary and inappropriate to use this case as an occasion in which to attack the analysis and conclusions of pre-Proposition 209 decisions."

It wasn't the first time Brown and George have clashed. Reportedly, early in her tenure, George advised Brown to tone down her dissents, and to this day it is said they communicate only by memorandum.

While that friction will likely be no factor in Bush's decision, lawyers say Brown's penchant to issue rulings that range from conservative to liberal could.

"There's something for everyone to pick at on her record," Uelmen says. "The National Rifle Association will be unhappy with the opinion she wrote upholding our assault weapons law, and a lot of law-and-order people will be unhappy about how liberal she is in criminal cases."

One California judge, who requested anonymity, says that, ironically, Brown could be in trouble for having issued such a strong dissent in the parental consent case -- 1997's American Academy of Pediatrics v. Lungren, in which the majority struck down a law that would have required minors to get permission before having abortions.

"Bush is going to appoint somebody that has exactly zero record on the 'A' word -- abortion," the judge says. "He's looking for someone who's conservative but not particularly controversial."

Emilio Garza: The Careful Conservative

George W. Bush's desire to be the first president to nominate a Hispanic to the U.S. Supreme Court could lead him to Emilio Garza, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit whose judicial philosophy makes him attractive to conservatives but an anathema to pro-abortion groups.

"You don't have to dig very deep to find that Emilio Garza is opposed to Roe v. Wade," says Kae McLaughlin, executive director of the Texas Abortion Rights League. "We would definitely oppose his nomination."

While Roe remains a touchstone for any judicial nominee 30 years after it was decided, it is the only obvious hurdle for Garza to overcome. Practitioners describe Garza, who rose quickly through the judicial ranks to reach the 5th Circuit in 1991, as an affable, extremely analytical, and solidly conservative judge.

But a handful of rulings are likely to raise trouble, even though Garza sided with a majority in each case that upheld abortion rights.

In 1992, Garza was a member of a panel that struck down a Louisiana law criminalizing abortions except in limited circumstances. But his concurrence in Sojourner T. v. Edwards articulated his displeasure about having to do it.

"Because the decision to permit or proscribe abortion is a political choice," he wrote, "I would allow the people of the state of Louisiana to decide this issue for themselves."

In 1997, Garza again criticized the Supreme Court's abortion jurisprudence in a concurring opinion. In Causeway Medical Suite v. Ieyoub, Garza voted with the majority to strike down parts of a Louisiana law requiring parental notification when a minor seeks an abortion. But he suggested in his concurrence that Roe is flawed and that subsequent Supreme Court rulings upheld it not because of its sound basis, but in part because of "the primacy of settled expectations about constitutional law."

David Garrow, a court observer and professor at Emory University School of Law in Atlanta, says he doesn't believe Garza is confirmable because of his reasoning in Causeway Medical. "This is a judge who believes Griswold v. Connecticut [the 1965 Supreme Court decision that laid the framework for a constitutionally guaranteed right to privacy] was incorrect and Bowers v. Hardwick [a 1986 decision that refused to extend the privacy right in a case about a sodomy statute] was correct," Garrow says. "Judge Garza would be Teddy Kennedy's dream nominee."

Garza could not be reached for comment. A spokeswoman in his office says Garza generally does not give interviews.

Despite the opposition Garza would generate, practitioners give him high praise.

Lino Graglia, a University of Texas School of Law professor who teaches constitutional law, describes Garza as a "soundly reasonable and basically conservative" judge who engages in self-restraint on the bench.

"He's not anxious to enact conservative philosophy," Graglia says. "I would guess he's not as conservative as Edith Jones," another 5th Circuit judge and perennial name on conservative lists for the high court.

While people often assume that Garza is not as conservative as Jones, David Schenck, an appellate litigator and partner in the Dallas office of Hughes & Luce, says, "I think you'll find it very rare the cases on which they differ."

A native of San Antonio, the 55-year-old Garza is a devout Roman Catholic who has never married. He received undergraduate and master's degrees from the University of Notre Dame and served on active duty as a captain in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1970 to 1973. Following graduation from the University of Texas School of Law in 1976, Garza established his private practice and joined a small firm in San Antonio, now known as Clemens & Spencer, before beginning his rise through the judicial ranks.

In 1987, then-Gov. Bill Clements of Texas appointed Garza to the state trial court in San Antonio, but his tenure on the state bench was very brief. President Ronald Reagan nominated Garza to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas the following year, and in 1991, the first President Bush named him to the 5th Circuit.

On the circuit, Garza has shown a penchant for a careful reading of the law. King & Spalding associate Tracey Robertson of Houston served as a law clerk for Garza during the court's 1994-95 term. "It's really important to him to get it right," Robertson says.

In a concurring opinion to 2000's Flores v. Johnson, Garza criticized the basis on which a trial court allowed psychiatric testimony to help condemn Mexican national Miguel Angel Flores for rape and murder. Garza noted in the opinion that a psychiatric expert testified unequivocally that Flores would be a "future danger" without ever evaluating him, and that the expert's opinion was based on the facts of the crime and the defendant's conduct during the trial rather than on an independent assessment.

Garza wrote, "What separates the executioner from the murderer is the legal process by which the state ascertains and condemns those guilty of heinous crimes. If that process is flawed because it allows evidence without any scientific validity to push the jury toward condemning the accused, the legitimacy of our legal process is threatened."

In 1997, Garza wrote the 5th Circuit's en banc opinion in Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, upholding a lower court decision to grant immunity to officers sued by a woman who was arrested and jailed for violating a seat belt law. The Supreme Court voted 5-4 to affirm the ruling.

Greg Coleman, a former Texas solicitor general who heads the Austin office of Weil, Gotshal & Manges, says Garza always focuses on the pressure points in a case and typically doesn't accept answers that he feels misrepresent the 5th Circuit's previous rulings.

"I've seen him cut people short -- not in an unpleasant way -- if they're misrepresenting," Coleman says. "I've seen him stop a guy midway [in an argument] and say, 'That's not really what we meant in that case.' "

Alberto Gonzales: A Washington Education

It seems to be a no-brainer for President George W. Bush to nominate White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales to the Supreme Court. After all, Bush has already appointed Gonzales to four different legal positions in less than a decade.

In 1995, then-Texas Gov. Bush named Gonzales, a partner at Houston's Vinson & Elkins, as his gubernatorial counsel. In 1997, Bush made him Texas secretary of state, and the following year he appointed Gonzales to his first judicial post -- a seat on the Texas Supreme Court. Finally, in 2001, Gonzales became White House counsel.

Gonzales came to Washington before Bush's inauguration as part of the administration's transition team, and he is one of the few people who sees the president just about every working day.

In an administration in which loyalty and closeness to the president are highly valued, Gonzales, 47, scores well on just about every count.

In addition to enjoying the president's confidence, Gonzales has gotten good reviews within the administration for his work as presidential counsel in two very challenging years. And it's no secret that Bush would like to make history by naming the nation's first Hispanic Supreme Court justice.

Gonzales, who declined comment for this story, has said in the past that he is not interested in a Supreme Court appointment. And some conservatives close to the administration are expressing serious concerns about his possible nomination, fearing that Gonzales would not line up with the Court's conservative bloc on issues like abortion and affirmative action.

Still, Gonzales, the Harvard-educated son of Mexican-American migrant workers, is widely considered to be among the front-runners for the first high court vacancy that arises during Bush's years in office.

"He is very able, very common-sensical, level-headed, and unflappable," says C. Boyden Gray, who was White House counsel under the first President Bush and who spearheads a group that lobbies for the current president's judicial nominees. "He has everything that a good Supreme Court justice should have."

Gonzales' personal story is compelling. The second of eight children, he grew up in a home without hot running water or a telephone. He joined the Air Force out of high school, then switched from the Air Force Academy to

Rice University in Houston. He graduated from Harvard Law School in 1982 and became the first Hispanic partner at Vinson & Elkins, where he spent 13 years.

There's no doubt that, as White House counsel, Gonzales has established plenty of conservative credentials.

He has carved out a strong niche in favor of executive and attorney-client privilege. He led the administration's successful effort to withhold from Congress documents concerning Vice President Dick Cheney's energy task force, as well as the decision not to hand over D.C. Circuit nominee Miguel Estrada's working papers from the Office of the Solicitor General.

Gonzales has had a key role in crafting the administration's anti-terrorism strategy. He wrote the president's executive order authorizing the use of military tribunals to try alleged terrorists and was the point man in the White House in setting up the Department of Homeland Security and interpreting the USA Patriot Act.

Early on, Gonzales cheered conservatives and irked liberals by reducing the role of the American Bar Association in federal judicial selection and by advising the president to nominate a roster of largely conservative appeals court nominees.

But the irony of a possible Gonzales appointment is that he would probably draw more flak from the right than from the left. Liberals are quietly saying that although Gonzales is far from their ideal nominee, other possible appointees are more troubling.

To conservatives who care about affirmative action and abortion, Gonzales is widely viewed as a compromiser, or worse.

Conservative activists, who generally have been very pleased with Bush's appeals court nominees, are skittish about Gonzales' opinions in several cases on the Texas court in 2000 involving teen-age girls seeking abortions. In those cases, Gonzales gave a broad interpretation to exceptions to a parental-notification requirement in a recently passed and ambiguous state law.

Conservatives were also unhappy to read in recent newspaper accounts that Gonzales was among administration officials who advocated a moderate approach to the University of Michigan affirmative action case. This approach rejects the racial preferences granted by the university, but does not rule out all efforts to take race into account in admissions.

The amicus curiae brief filed by the administration in January was widely seen as just such a compromise.

"The reports are that the Department of Justice sent a brief to the White House that was much better than the brief that was filed, and the reports are that this was partly due to the influence of Judge Gonzales," says Roger Clegg, general counsel of the D.C.-based Center for Equal Opportunity and a foe of affirmative action. "That certainly makes me nervous."

Another conservative legal thinker says, "It's very unlikely that social conservatives will actively support a Gonzales nomination. He may in fact draw opposition from conservatives, based both on questions about his role in the Jane Doe [abortion notification] cases and on the reports that he weakened the administration's position in the Michigan case. There's a lot of concern out there about his judicial philosophy."

In a Los Angeles Times interview two years ago, Gonzales said that, in hiring decisions, "[p]ersonally, I'm not offended that race is a factor. But it should never be the overriding factor or the most important factor."

Gonzales' record in his less than two years on the Texas Supreme Court is generally viewed as moderate. In addition to the parental-notification cases, he wrote an opinion in 2000 that held that the Texas Department of Transportation could be sued by the survivors of a man killed in an automobile accident, even though the department itself was not found to be negligent.

Gonzales' opinion in Texas Department of Transportation v. Able found the department subject to suit because it had entered a joint enterprise with another state agency that was found negligent. Justice Priscilla Owen, a conservative who is a current nominee for the 5th Circuit, dissented.

Gray, the former White House counsel, dismisses the objections of his fellow conservatives.

"I don't regard him as an unreliable conservative," says Gray. "You can never precisely predict one's degree of conservatism, but I am confident that Gonzales is not a liberal. He will probably tend to look more at the facts of each case rather than try to define some sweeping principle, but over the long haul, the result is going to be much the same."

Gray says one can tell a great deal about a potential nominee from the associates that he hires. Here he gives Gonzales very high marks.

"He has picked a crackerjack conservative staff [for the White House counsel's office]," says Gray. "To me, that's probative of his inclinations."

J. Michael Luttig: Putting the Courts In Restraints

If J. Michael Luttig is nominated to the Supreme Court, Senate investigators and journalists will search in vain for his speeches or law review articles.

The last public talk the 4th Circuit appeals judge gave was a eulogy in 2001 for Barbara Olson, the wife of Solicitor General Theodore Olson who was killed in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Luttig had presided over their wedding.

Before that, friends say, Luttig's previous off-the-bench remarks were in 1995 at another funeral, this time eulogizing his mentor, Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger.

It is no accident that Luttig's public appearances since being appointed by the first President Bush in 1991 have been so rare -- and so indicative of his ties to the conservative Washington legal scene. Luttig, 48, strongly believes that judges should stick to their cases and speak only through their opinions. Policy pronouncements are the business of others, Luttig says, and his job -- his only job -- is to analyze the cases and precedents before him in a disciplined way to come to the most logical and defensible result. He rarely, if ever, cites law review articles or other secondary sources.

"At the end of the day, other than conscience, it is only analytical rigor, and the accountability that such renders possible, that can restrain a judiciary that serves for life and at the pleasure of no one," Luttig wrote in an obscure 2001 decision, Safety-Kleen v. Wyche.

That rigor has earned Luttig a reputation as a meticulous taskmaster whose law clerks gain an intense, unparalleled education in judicial craftsmanship. It is no wonder that almost all his law clerks go on to clerk for Supreme Court justices.

"There is no one in the federal judiciary who works longer or harder than he does," says a lawyer who has worked with him. "He pours more into getting the details right than anyone." This lawyer, who requested anonymity, says Luttig's passion for detail and discipline leads to his main flaw: "He is not as aware as he might be that not everyone is as smart or persevering as he is. He expects a lot of himself and others." Luttig declined to be interviewed for this article.

Luttig's analytical approach also leads him, at times, to veer sharply from conservative orthodoxy.

In the partial-birth abortion case Richmond Medical Center v. Gilmore in 2000, Luttig said that because of

Supreme Court precedent, the abortion right deserved "super-stare decisis" status -- a precedent that cannot be disturbed -- and as a result, the Virginia partial-birth law could not be upheld. "Our responsibility is to follow faithfully its opinions," Luttig wrote -- a stance that could change once Luttig is writing, rather than following, precedent.

Last March, in Harvey v. Horan, Luttig said high court precedent also compelled the conclusion that those convicted of serious crimes possess a limited constitutional right of access to DNA evidence for testing.

And in a dissent in Robles v. Prince George's County last October, Luttig said police who tied a suspect to a pole in an isolated parking lot and left him unattended at 3 a.m. were not entitled to qualified immunity from a Section 1983 civil rights suit. The majority had granted the immunity, and Luttig said the majority's effort to strike a "just balance" had blinded it to the obvious conclusion that the police should have no such immunity.

"I confess ignorance as to where the justice of the case lies," Luttig wrote. "But under the law, it is quite clear that these officers are not entitled to immunity for their conduct."

In Robles and other decisions, Luttig's forceful analysis has brought him into direct conflict with natural conservative allies such as Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III -- public disagreements that a more flexible or collegial judge might avoid.

In the en banc ruling for Urofsky v. Gilmore in 2000, both Wilkinson and Luttig agreed with the judgment of the court that Virginia could restrict state employees' access to sexually explicit materials when they use state computers. But when Wilkinson wrote separately to voice concern about the impact of the ruling on academic freedom for state university professors, Luttig wrote a withering concurrence that picked apart Wilkinson's analysis, almost line by line.

"Although Judge Wilkinson trumpets judicial restraint," Luttig said, "his fanfare can hardly be heard over the clashing from his own unabashed creation of new constitutional rights out of whole cloth -- an unabashedness that forces his surrender of the high ground that he has assumed in the debate over judicial activism."

Luttig's unflinching readiness to criticize his allies invites comparison to Justice Antonin Scalia, for whom Luttig clerked on the D.C. Circuit 20 years ago. Scalia often seems happier in his decision-making when he is jabbing his colleagues for lack of doctrinal purity than he would be if he tempered his words in the interest of collegiality and coalition-building.

Luttig himself has voiced disdain for the "false collegiality" of papering over differences, preferring instead the collegiality that he says comes with the airing of "high-spirited differences of opinion." But if he is named to the high court, the challenge for Luttig may be whether that brand of collegiality can be counted on to build and hold majorities on a divided bench.

University of Virginia law professor A.E. Dick Howard says the comparison between Luttig and Scalia, while tempting, is not precise. "Judge Luttig is not nearly as theatrical as Justice Scalia," says Howard, a longtime observer of the 4th Circuit. "Luttig shuns publicity, and he is very pleasant and steady, with no rough edges -- none of the flashes of lightning you get with Scalia."

Indeed, in person, Luttig seems the opposite of Scalia, with a boyish face, an unassuming manner, teetotaling ways, and a friendly Texas drawl. He has a sense of humor: A few years ago, he "applied" for a first-year associate's job at Hogan & Hartson, which, he suspected, would pay more than the salary of a federal appeals judge. Responding in kind, Hogan partner John Roberts Jr. turned Luttig down, informing him that first-year associates normally lack life tenure, are not assigned a battery of law clerks to assist them, and don't wear black robes -- even on casual Fridays.

Luttig has also known tragedy in his life. His father, John, was murdered in a 1994 carjacking in Tyler, Texas, in front of his mother, Bobbie. Luttig went to the trial of Napoleon Beazley, his father's murderer, who was 17 at the time of the crime. When Beazley's case went to the U.S. Supreme Court on appeal, it became evident how close Luttig is to several justices. His one-time boss Scalia, as well as Justices Clarence Thomas and David Souter, recused. While in the Bush Justice Department before joining the bench, Luttig helped shepherd Thomas and Souter through confirmation. Beazley was executed last May.

Since the murder of Luttig's father, defense lawyers have tried occasionally to get Luttig to recuse himself in capital cases, but he has refused. Friends have noted that the late Chief Justice Earl Warren's father was murdered before he joined the Supreme Court, and Warren did not recuse from murder cases.

It was the late Chief Justice Burger who guided Luttig into a legal career. Luttig, whose first initial stands for John, began working for Burger as an intern at the high court even before becoming a lawyer. And his Justice Department job was in the Office of Legal Counsel, where his predecessors included Scalia and William Rehnquist. "Mike has been on a fast track toward the Supreme Court since the Burger days," says someone who has worked with Luttig.

When Luttig's law clerks celebrated his 10th anniversary as a federal appeals judge in 2001, they presented him with an American flag that had flown over the Supreme Court. He displays it in his chambers in Alexandria, Va.

The clerks knew that to Luttig, anything having to do with the Supreme Court has special meaning. And a seat on the Supreme Court would be the best gift of all.

Says another friend of Luttig: "I really think that if he was given the choice between being president and being a justice or chief justice, the presidency would lose out."

J. Harvie Wilkinson III: A Soft Face On the Hard Line

The title of the speech that 4th Circuit Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III gave on Feb. 19 said it all: "Why Conservative Jurisprudence Is Compassionate."

Speaking to a student audience at his alma mater, the University of Virginia Law School, Wilkinson spoke almost defensively about the ways in which conservative judges have heart. Favoring the individual over business or government, he said, is not always compassionate. Compassion is sometimes best left to legislators, and can be either inappropriate, hard to define, or insufficient in a judicial setting. Modesty, not compassion, is the highest virtue for a judge, said Wilkinson, whose chambers are in Charlottesville.

Wilkinson's thesis was soon put to the test. A black law student approached him during a post-speech reception. Judicial modesty and deference to the elected branches are all well and good, the student told Wilkinson, but "what if the legislature is dragging its feet?"

With a friendly smile, Wilkinson responded, "Well, saying that the legislature is dragging its feet sounds to me like, 'The legislature isn't doing what I'd like it to be doing.' I'm very uneasy with that."

The student retorted, "So you are saying there are no absolutes? What if the legislature approves slavery?"

Without missing a beat, Wilkinson replied, "Then, the judiciary must step in. Brown v. Board of Education and Marbury v. Madison were the best decisions the Supreme Court ever made."

The student was disarmed. And then he was charmed when Wilkinson told him, with characteristic full-body enthusiasm, how much he appreciated the student's attendance and his comments.

It was a classic Wilkinson moment: putting a friendly face on conservative jurisprudence, and trying to bring everyone under its tent with collegiality and consensus. It is these qualities, matched by respected opinion writing, that lead some inside and outside the White House to place the 58-year-old Wilkinson high on the list for nomination as chief justice. Like the late Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell Jr., the man after whom he has modeled his life and jurisprudence, Wilkinson exudes a courtly civility that could be a unifying force on the Court.

"The person in the center chair is expected to have a certain gravitas. So someone like Wilkinson, who is older, would be an appealing candidate," says Florida International University law professor Thomas Baker. But age could also work against Wilkinson, says the University of Connecticut's David Yalof. "If [the Bush administration is] using the Reagan playbook, where youth and longevity are key, then Wilkinson is in the danger zone." Wilkinson declined to be interviewed for this article.

Wilkinson's eagerness for consensus may also frustrate some in the White House who would prefer a harder-edged conservative. Though a Judicature magazine tally of the rulings of several potential Bush nominees last year placed Wilkinson farthest to the right, those who know Wilkinson dismissed the study and place him closer to the Powellesque right-leaning middle.

The Bush administration has little to object to in Wilkinson's handling of the post-Sept. 11 national security cases that have gone before the 4th Circuit. In three separate rulings on different aspects of the government's case against enemy combatant Yaser Esam Hamdi, Wilkinson expressed little doubt about the executive branch's primacy over the judiciary in times of war -- even undeclared war.

"Our Constitution's commitment of the conduct of war to the political branches of American government requires the court's respect at every step," Wilkinson wrote last July. "The deference that flows from the explicit enumeration of powers protects liberty as much as the explicit enumeration of rights," Wilkinson said in another ruling this January.

But in the January ruling, Wilkinson added that especially in the context of a habeas corpus petition such as the one filed by Hamdi, courts do have a responsibility to serve as a check on the other branches. "The duty of the judicial branch to protect our individual freedoms does not simply cease whenever our military forces are committed by the political branches to armed conflict."

Wilkinson, who recently rotated out of a seven-year term as chief judge of the 4th Circuit, has also distanced himself somewhat from the Rehnquist Court's trademark series of federalism-based rulings striking down acts of Congress.

In 1999, Wilkinson joined the 4th Circuit majority in Brzonkala v. Virginia Polytechnic Institute, rejecting a provision of the Violence Against Women Act as an excessive intrusion by Congress into state sovereignty -- a position later ratified by the Supreme Court.

But in a concurrence tinged with doubt, Wilkinson said the ruling, like others by the Supreme Court that rejected acts of Congress, could be labeled judicial activism. In the end it was justifiable as fulfilling the judiciary's role of "structural referee," Wilkinson wrote, but he cautioned against going too far, too fast. "The values of federalism must be tempered by the maxims of prudence and restraint," Wilkinson wrote.

Taking his own advice, Wilkinson ruled the next year in Gibbs v. Babbitt that the Endangered Species Act was a valid exercise of Congress' power over interstate commerce when applied to the protection of red wolves. "The courts may not simply tear through the considered judgments of Congress," Wilkinson wrote.

On the issue of affirmative action, a 1987 ruling by Wilkinson struck down Richmond's minority set-aside program in Croson v. City of Richmond. The Supreme Court affirmed Wilkinson's view in a 1989 ruling that made clear its growing disenchantment with affirmative action.

A decade later in his book One Nation Indivisible, Wilkinson reaffirmed his opposition to affirmative action as "the most dangerous of policy prescriptions for a multiethnic nation." But the rest of the book, which called for an end to ethnic and racial separatism in America, is a celebration of multiculturalism and diversity. Wilkinson wrote that at times he rues the all-white milieu of his own upbringing in upper-crust Richmond, which he said was

"as distant from multicultural America as any childhood could possibly be."

Wilkinson's father was a prominent Richmond banker who was introduced to his wife by the young Lewis Powell. Powell gave the young Wilkinson -- known to friends as Jay, short for James -- his first summer job in high school, as a messenger at Powell's law firm, Hunton & Williams. "One day you may make a good lawyer," Powell told Wilkinson, and he kept in contact with Wilkinson through college and law school. When lightning struck and Powell was named to the high court in 1971, Wilkinson was the first clerk he hired.

"Clerking for Justice Powell was clearly one of the centerpieces of Jay's career," says longtime friend Russell Palmore Jr., a partner in the Richmond office of the Atlanta firm Troutman Sanders. Wilkinson wrote about his experience as a Powell clerk in the 1974 book Serving Justice. Wilkinson also dabbled in teaching law and in journalism, writing editorials for a Norfolk newspaper. Before he went with Powell, he even ran for Congress -- and lost. He has said that winning only 30 percent of the vote left him with a "profound respect" for those who achieve a majority and are elected. President Ronald Reagan named Wilkinson to the 4th Circuit in 1984.

Even Wilkinson's friends remark that he sounds and even looks somewhat like the late Justice Powell. Wilkinson's thin frame -- he runs daily, according to friends -- and the inflections and cadence of his reedy Southern voice match Powell's. Wilkinson does not object when the comparison is made.

In addition to explaining and popularizing conservative jurisprudence, Wilkinson has devoted much of his public speaking and off-the-bench writing to spreading the word about Powell's legacy.

In a 1992 Washington and Lee Law Review article, Wilkinson praised Powell for regarding the role of the judiciary as "that of a mediator and facilitator, not as dictator." As for his jurisprudence, Wilkinson said Powell "sought to craft decisions that gave something to both sides." Admiringly, Wilkinson also said Powell avoided establishing bright-line rules or issuing sweeping decisions -- characteristics of Powell's approach that partisans sometimes found frustrating. "The Powell approach sought to ensure that the most volatile issues in our society did not quickly achieve definitive outcomes in the courts," Wilkinson wrote.

After Powell retired from the high court in 1987, he occasionally sat on the 4th Circuit by designation, sometimes finding himself on the same panel with his younger friend Wilkinson.

In a 1992 trademark case, Anheuser-Busch v. L&L Wings Inc., Wilkinson wrote the majority opinion and Powell filed a dissent -- a rare, if not unique, instance when the two disagreed. Wilkinson, joined by Judge J. Michael Luttig, held that T-shirts displaying humorous images that looked like Budweiser beer cans did not confuse consumers and did not infringe the Budweiser trademark. Powell disagreed, though he gently remarked that in one aspect of the case "the court is correct in the abstract."

Wilkinson, for his part, gently chided Powell: "Our dissenting brother's standard is so broad that it would banish virtually all attempts at humorous takeoffs on trademarks as a matter of law." The disagreement was clear, but Wilkinson's tone, as always, was respectful.

SPEECH BY THE RT.HON. DAVID DAVIS, MP, SHADOW DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER TO REPUBLICANS ABROAD AT THE LONDON CHANCERY COURT HOTEL, LONDON, ON THURSDAY 13TH FEBRUARY 2003

Extract:

Labour's Policy of Tax-and-Spend

President Bush's recent inspiring State of the Union did not just point out the path to security: equally important, it signalled the road to prosperity – through low taxes. That, too, is a message we in Britain have every reason to take to heart.

I understand that in the last few days more than 350 economists have attacked President Bush's tax plans. Well, I have to tell you, we've been there before. In the early days of Lady Thatcher's tenure, she was attacked in the pages of the Times by 364 economists for her economic policy. When asked about this she replied "if they were right, one would be enough."

The next ten years demonstrated unequivocally that she was right and they were wrong, as her policies galvanised the British economy. Just as the next ten years will demonstrate that President Bush is right and his critics wrong.

But while President Bush is pursuing an enlightened low tax, high growth policy, under this Government, Britain has been lumbering remorselessly in the opposite direction.

The Chancellor's very first budget revealed the new governing philosophy: for it contained a brutal tax hike, which is now at the root of a pensions crisis that has shattered the hopes of a generation. ***

This wasn't a mere one-off deviation: it was an expression of the Labour Party's whole approach to government. That approach can be summed up as follows. It holds, essentially, that government alone has the virtue, the knowledge and the means to take key economic decisions. The unspoken assumptions are that the state, not business, ultimately generates wealth; that public spending is good and private spending suspect; and that government's coffers must be continually replenished, even if it requires that the savings accounts and pockets of the people are repeatedly raided.

And this is what has been happening. The government has imposed successive batches of new and costly regulations on business. It has reinforced trade union power, and so encouraged a return to militancy. Above all, it has embarked upon a highly damaging programme of tax-and-spend.

The consequences for business are fearful. Since 1997 the London stock exchange has declined in value by 30% more than New York. Some #300 billion of value has been destroyed, causing or exacerbating the pensions crisis and the savings crisis that now afflict Britain, and creating agonising financial problems for small savers and pensioners who cannot escape the damage.

The most important advantages Britain once enjoyed over mainland European economies are now being lost – as a matter of government policy. The Chancellor openly plans to increase the tax burden as a share of national income every year until 2007/8. This April, National Insurance Contributions – income tax by another name - will rise sharply.

Day by day, fresh doubts are raised about the Government's figures for growth, and so tax receipts; and expectations of bloated public borrowing and further tax increases have multiplied. But even taking the published figures at face value, it is already clear that Britain is reverting to a high tax economy at precisely the time when most European countries are cutting their public spending so as to become more competitive. In fact, on present trends Britain's public spending, as a share of GDP, will converge with Europe's in a decade.

This isn't some technicality. It means that we are turning our backs on those changes made in the Conservative years that turned Britain from being the Also Ran into the Pace-Setter of Europe. It means that we are rapidly abandoning the free enterprise model which has made America the greatest economic success story that the world has seen. And it means as well that the British people as a whole will be poorer than they would otherwise have been – while other nations forge ahead. Nothing less than this is at stake in the debate about levels of taxation that has opened up in the country today.

Low Taxes Lead to Prosperity

Whatever the views of those left wing economists I mentioned earlier, some parts of the dismal science have caught up with commonsense. The empirical data shows that low taxes motivate individuals, companies and nations to succeed. To take just one example: a widely-quoted OECD study covering more than twenty countries suggests that a one per cent increase in the tax ratio leads to a fall in output of over a half a per cent of GDP.

What this means is that whatever gain is achieved by increasing government spending can be lost within 4 or 5 years, and certainly within two parliamentary or presidential terms. And an equivalent amount of money disappears from the pockets of the private citizens in lower incomes and lost jobs.

The classic example of low spending and low taxes generating high growth and new jobs is, of course, America. The US has its cyclical problems at present. But its productivity continues to soar. Above all, the US attachment to low taxes and light regulation has helped generate incomes and employment. During the last three decades of the twentieth century, America created almost ten times as many jobs as over-taxed, over-regulated Europe.

But we needn't look across the Atlantic, we can just cast a glance over to Ireland. There, large cuts in the tax burden during the 1990s led to much higher rates of economic growth.

It's a sad fact that in Britain today too many politicians and pressure groups still speak as if economic policy were a zero-sum game. One person's gain is assumed to be another person's loss. But that isn't the case at all – particularly with tax-cuts.

Securing lower taxes doesn't mean worse public services – any more than bumping up taxes means better services, as this Labour government's policy failures show.

Low tax (along with low regulation) is the only durable way of getting public services – because it makes them affordable. The case of Ireland shows that better services and lower taxes can complement, not contradict, each other. While those Irish taxes were being cut, spending on health was actually being doubled. In Canada more recently something similar has occurred – taxes down and health spending up.

Nor do low taxes involve short-changing the less well-off. Again, quite the contrary. Over time, the effect of lower taxes is to increase the national income. That yields positive results for everyone. It provides more well-paid employment so that people can climb out of poverty and begin to save. It also generates the extra wealth required to look after those who truly can't cope for themselves. And yes: some people will do better than others. But that's merely the difference between equity and equality. As Abraham Lincoln himself once said: "You cannot make the weak strong by making the strong weak."

Furthermore, as the passage continues: "You cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence". Yet this sort of demoralisation is exactly what flows from the high spending/high taxing system beloved of Messrs Blair and Brown, where the only way disadvantaged people can cope is by relying on means-tested benefits. This undermines dignity: it reduces the will to work, earn and save; it therefore creates a vicious circle of poverty and dependency.

The truth which the Left, now as in the past, can't or won't grasp is that when government leaves more of what they earn in the pockets of citizens they will themselves by their own efforts increase the national kitty. That's in the end how capitalism works – always and everywhere.

As Iain Duncan Smith has reaffirmed, we remain a Party which passionately believes in low taxes – and which does so as a matter of principle. That principle, let me say at once, is moral. It is morally right that people should keep as much of what they earn as is compatible with Government doing those few things which it alone can do. [PAC joke]

The state generates no wealth and it has no money of its own. It has only what it can gain by coercion. Keeping that coercion to a minimum is, along with adherence to the law of the land, the most important condition for a free society to flourish.

The principle of keeping taxes low is also founded upon an understanding of economics. As I have shown, low taxes help make a nation richer. And with that wealth all our citizens have brighter and better prospects.

And then, of course, having made that argument we must act on it in government. For there is another – perhaps still more sobering – reflection which emerges from the experience of Britain and America in the 1990s. It is that conservative governments which raise taxes go on to lose elections.

Britain today faces a deepening domestic crisis which overseas events have only temporarily obscured. This crisis is inevitably overtaking a government which, having abandoned caution and dissipated its legacy, simply has no answers left to excuse or mitigate its failures. As a result, we now approach one of those rare, defining moments when it becomes not just possible but imperative to advance a completely new approach. One in line with the mood of the times and the manifest needs of the nation. This is the Conservative opportunity - and we shall not miss it.

Gentlemen:

Any interest in trying to pull together a weekly White House/Bush Administration basketball game? I have talked with the Interior Department about getting access to their gym -- it is just a few blocks from here, on F Street -- and they have given a preliminary OK. Here are the conditions:

ú If we played in the evening, we could come at any time, but would need to be finished by 7:30. I know this is early, and maybe we could work something out with them, but in the meantime let me know if a mid-day game would be your preference.
ú We could play any weekday night. I would recommend Mondays, as there,s less time for work to pile up, but I,m open to other suggestions. (The gym is not open on weekends.)
ú The fee would be small -- maybe $10 a month -- and according to Interior this would also entitle you to use the Interior weight room.
ú Those who play need not be government employees.

Let me know if you are interested in this, and feel free to forward this e-mail to others. If we can get enough people so that there,s some likelihood of regularly getting at least 6 people, and hopefully 10 or more, I can talk further with Interior about setting it up.

And if you,re looking to rationalize to yourself, or others, leaving the office early one night a week, consider this: We had a weekly game during Bush 41, and everyone found it invigorating, and useful for building morale and camaraderie. (Didn,t help with the re-elect, of course, but that,s another story.)

TESTIMONY OF
BARBARA ANGUS, INTERNATIONAL TAX COUNSEL,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS
ON PENDING INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS

MARCH 5, 2003

Mr. Chairman and distinguished Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing to recommend, on behalf of the Administration, favorable action on three income tax agreements that are pending before this Committee.

This Administration is dedicated to eliminating unnecessary barriers to cross-border trade and investment. The primary means for eliminating tax barriers to trade and investment are bilateral tax treaties. Tax treaties eliminate barriers by providing greater certainty to taxpayers regarding their potential liability to tax; allocating taxing rights between jurisdictions so that the taxpayer is not subject to double taxation; by reducing the risk of excessive taxation that may arise because of high gross-basis withholding taxes; and by ensuring that taxpayers will not be subject to discriminatory taxation in other countries. The international network of over 2000 bilateral tax treaties has established a stable framework that allows international trade and investment to flourish. The success of this framework is evidenced by the fact that the millions of cross-border transactions that take place each year give rise to relatively few disputes regarding the allocation of tax revenues between governments.

The Administration believes that these three agreements, which update important treaty relationships with the United Kingdom, Australia and Mexico, would provide significant benefits to the United States and to our treaty partners, as well as our respective business communities. We look forward to receiving the views of the Committee regarding these agreements.

Purposes and Benefits of Tax Treaties

Tax treaties provide benefits to both taxpayers and governments by setting out clear ground rules that will govern the tax matters relating to trade and investment between the two countries. The goal of the treaty is to mesh the tax systems of the two countries in such a way that there is little potential for dispute regarding the amount of tax that should be paid to each country, so that the taxpayer does not end up caught in the middle between two governments, each of which would like to tax the same income. Once a treaty relationship is in place and working as it should, governments need expend little additional resources negotiating to resolve individual cases because the general principles for taxation will have been agreed by the treaty negotiators.

One of the primary functions of tax treaties is to provide certainty to taxpayers with respect to the "threshold" question – that is, whether the taxpayer's cross-border activities will subject it to taxation by two or more countries. Treaties answer this question by establishing the minimum level of economic activity that a resident of one country must engage in within the other country before the latter country may tax any resulting business profits. In general terms, treaties provide that if the branch operations have sufficient substance and continuity, the country where the activities occur will have primary (but not exclusive) jurisdiction to tax. In other cases, where the operations are relatively minor, the home country retains the sole jurisdiction to tax its residents. In the absence of a treaty, a U.S. company operating a branch or division or providing services in another country might be subject to income tax in both the United States and the other country on the income generated by such operations. Although the United States provides a foreign tax credit, there remains potential for resulting double taxation that could make an otherwise attractive investment opportunity unprofitable, depriving both countries of the benefits of increased cross-border investment.

Tax treaties protect taxpayers from double taxation through the allocation of taxing rights between the two countries. This allocation takes several forms. First, the treaty has a mechanism for determining the residence of a taxpayer that otherwise would be a resident of both countries. Second, with respect to each category of income, the treaty assigns the "primary" right to tax to one country, usually (but not always) the country in which the income arises (the "source" country), and the "residual" right to tax to the other country, usually (but not always) the country of residence of the taxpayer. Third, the treaty provides rules for determining which country will be treated as the source country for each category of income. Finally, the treaty establishes both limitations on the amount of tax that the source country can impose on each category of income and the obligation of the residence country to eliminate double taxation that otherwise would arise from the exercise of concurrent taxing jurisdiction by the two countries.

As a complement to these substantive rules regarding allocation of taxing rights, treaties provide a mechanism for dealing with disputes or questions of application that arise after the treaty enters into force. In such cases, designated tax authorities of the two governments – known as the Acompetent authorities@ in tax treaty parlance – are to consult and reach an agreement under which the taxpayer's income is allocated between the two taxing jurisdictions on a consistent basis, thereby preventing the double taxation that might otherwise result. The U.S. competent authority under our tax treaties is the Secretary of the Treasury. That function has been delegated to the Director, International (LMSB) of the Internal Revenue Service.

In addition to reducing potential double taxation, treaties also reduce "excessive" taxation by reducing withholding taxes that are imposed at source. Under U.S. domestic law, all payments to non-U.S. persons of dividends and royalties as well as certain payments of interest are subject to withholding tax equal to 30 percent of the gross amount paid. Most of our trading partners impose similar levels of withholding tax on these types of income. This tax is imposed on a gross, rather than net, amount. Because the withholding tax does not take into account the expenses incurred in generating the income, the taxpayer frequently will be subject to an effective rate of tax that is significantly higher than the tax rate that would be applicable in either the source or the residence country with respect to net income. The taxpayer may be viewed, therefore, as having suffered "excessive" taxation.

Tax treaties alleviate this burden by providing maximum levels of withholding tax that the treaty partners may impose on these types of income. In general, U.S. tax treaty policy is to reduce the rate of withholding tax on interest and royalties to zero, so that such payments are taxed exclusively in the country of residence, and not in the country of source. In contrast, U.S. tax treaty policy has been to allow some source-country taxation of dividends and many U.S. treaties provide for a maximum source-country withholding tax of 5 percent on dividends paid to direct corporate investors and a maximum source-country withholding tax of 15 percent on dividends paid to all other shareholders. Over the years, U.S. treaty negotiators have considered proposals to treat intercompany dividends in the same manner as these other categories of income and provide for exclusive residence-country taxation of intercompany dividends in some cases. The three treaties before the Committee are the first U.S. tax treaties to do so.

Our treaties also include provisions intended to ensure that cross-border investors do not suffer discrimination in the application of the tax laws of the other country. While this is similar to a basic investor protection provided in several types of agreements, the non-discrimination provisions of tax treaties are more effective because they are specifically tailored to tax concerns. They provide guidance about what "national treatment" means in the tax context by specifically prohibiting types of discriminatory measures that once were common in some tax systems. At the same time, they clarify the manner in which discrimination is to be tested in the tax context. Particular rules are needed here because, for example, foreign persons that are subject to tax in the host country only on certain income may not be in the same position as domestic taxpayers that may be subject to tax in such country on all their income.

Treaties also include provisions dealing with more specialized situations. Some of these provisions are becoming increasingly important as the number of individuals engaged in cross-border activities increases. For example, in many treaty negotiations, significant time is spent on the pension provisions of the treaty, in order to ensure that individuals who are expecting to be subject to a certain manner and level of taxation do not find their pensions disappearing because of unexpected taxation by another country. Other quite specific rules deal with Social Security benefits, alimony and child support and employee stock options in the cross-border context. While these subjects may not involve a lot of revenue from the perspective of the two governments, getting the provision right can be very important to each of the individual taxpayers who are affected.

Other provisions deal with the administration of the treaty and, to a certain extent, the domestic tax law of the two countries. One of the most important of these is the provision addressing the exchange of information between the tax authorities. Under the tax treaties, the competent authorities may exchange such information as may be necessary for the proper administration of the countries' tax laws, subject to strict protections on the confidentiality of taxpayer information. Access to information from other countries is critically important to the full and fair enforcement of the U.S. tax laws. Information exchange is a priority for the United States in its tax treaty program. If a country has bank secrecy rules that prevent or seriously inhibit the exchange of information under the tax treaty, we will not conclude a treaty with that country. In fact, information exchange is a matter we raise with the other country before beginning formal negotiations because it is one of a very few issues that we consider non-negotiable.

Treaty Program and Negotiation Priorities

Given all of these benefits to taxpayers and the government, an obvious question is why we do not have a tax treaty with every country. The answer is slightly different for each potential treaty partner, but there are some general patterns.

The United States has a network of 54 bilateral income tax treaties, the oldest of which now dates from 1950. This network includes all 29 of our fellow members of the OECD and covers the vast majority of foreign trade and investment of U.S. companies.

For the past decade, the Treasury Department has given priority to renegotiating older treaties to ensure that they reflect current U.S. treaty policy. The treaties before you are evidence of how even good treaty relationships can be made better. At the same time, we are actively working to establish new treaty relationships that will fill gaps in our treaty network.

In establishing priorities, our primary objective is the conclusion of treaties or protocols that will provide the greatest benefits to the United States and to U.S. taxpayers. We communicate regularly with the U.S. business community, seeking input regarding the areas in which treaty network expansion and improvement efforts should be focused and information regarding practical problems they face with respect to particular countries.

The U.S. commitment to including comprehensive provisions designed to prevent "treaty-shopping" in all of our tax treaties is one of the keys to improving our overall treaty network. Treaty-shopping can take a number of forms, but it generally involves a resident of a third state that either has no treaty with the United States or has a treaty that offers relatively less benefit. The third-state resident establishes an entity in a treaty partner that has a relatively more favorable treaty with the United States in order to hold title to the person's investments in the United States, which could range from portfolio stock investments to substantial operating subsidiaries. By interposing the new entity so that the U.S. investment appears to be made through the treaty partner, the third-country person is able to withdraw the returns from the U.S. investment subject to the favorable rates of tax provided in the tax treaty, rather than the higher rates that would be imposed on such returns if the person had held the U.S. investments directly.

If treaty-shopping is allowed to occur, then there is less incentive for the third country with which the United States has no treaty to negotiate a tax treaty with the United States. The third country could maintain inappropriate barriers to investment and trade from the

United States and yet its companies could obtain the benefits of lower U.S. tax by organizing their investment and trade in the United States so that they flow through a country with a favorable tax treaty with the United States.

For these reasons, all recent U.S. tax treaties contain comprehensive "limitation on benefits" provisions that limit the benefits of the treaty to bona fide residents of the treaty partner. These provisions are not uniform, as each country has particular characteristics that affect both its attractiveness as a country through which to treaty shop and the mechanisms through which treaty shopping may be attempted. Consequently, the specific limitation on benefits provision in each treaty must to some extent be tailored to fit the facts and circumstances of the treaty partner's internal laws and practices. Moreover, the provisions need to strike a balance that prevents the inappropriate exploitation of treaty benefits while ensuring that the treaty benefits flow smoothly to the legitimate and desirable economic activity for which the benefits were intended.

Despite the protections of the limitation on benefits provisions, there may be countries with which we choose not to have a tax treaty because of the possibility of abuse. With other countries there may not be the type of cross-border tax issues that are best resolved by treaty. For example, we generally do not conclude tax treaties with jurisdictions that do not impose significant income taxes, because there is little possibility of double taxation of income in such a case. In such cases, we seek to enter into an agreement limited to the exchange of tax information, which furthers the goal of reducing tax avoidance and evasion.

However, the situation can become more complex when a country adopts a special preferential regime for certain parts of the economy that is different from the rules generally applicable to the country's residents. In those cases, the residents benefiting from the preferential regime do not face potential double taxation, and so should not be entitled to reductions in U.S. withholding taxes, while a treaty relationship might be useful and appropriate in order to avoid double taxation in the case of the residents who do not receive the benefit of the preferential regime. Accordingly, in some cases we have developed treaties that carve out from the benefits of the treaties certain residents and activities. In other cases, we have determined that economic relations with the relevant country were such that the potential gains from a treaty were not sufficient to outweigh the risk of abuse, and have therefore decided against entering into a tax treaty relationship (or have terminated an existing relationship).

Prospective treaty partners also must indicate that they understand their obligations under the treaty, including those with respect to information exchange, and must demonstrate that they are able to comply with those obligations. Sometimes a potential treaty partner is unable to do so. In other cases we may feel that a treaty is inappropriate because a treaty partner may be unwilling to address in the treaty real tax problems identified by U.S. businesses operating there. Lesser developed and newly emerging economies, for which capital and trade flows with the United States are often disproportionate or virtually one-way, may not be willing to reduce withholding taxes to a level acceptable to the United States because they feel that they cannot give up scarce tax revenues.

The primary constraint on the size of our treaty network, however, may be the complexity of the negotiations themselves. The various functions performed by tax treaties, and particularly the goal of meshing two different tax systems, make the negotiation process exacting and time-consuming.

A country's tax policy, as reflected in its domestic tax legislation as well as its tax treaty positions, reflects the sovereign choices made by that country in the fulfillment of its obligation to fund the government. Numerous features of the treaty partner's unique tax legislation and its interaction with U.S. domestic tax rules must be considered in negotiating an appropriate treaty. Examples include whether the country eliminates double taxation through an exemption or a credit system, the country's treatment of partnerships and other transparent entities, and how the country taxes contributions to pension funds, the funds themselves and distributions from the funds. A treaty negotiation must take into account all of these and many other aspects of the treaty partner's tax system in order to arrive at an acceptable treaty from the perspective of the United States. Accordingly, a simple side-by-side comparison of two treaties, or of a proposed treaty against a model treaty, will not enable meaningful conclusions to be drawn as to whether a proposed treaty reflects an appropriate balance. Moreover, there may be differences that are of little substantive importance, reflecting language issues, cultural obstacles or other impediments to the use of particular U.S. or other model text.

Each treaty is the result of a negotiated bargain between two countries that often have conflicting objectives. Each country has certain positions that it considers non-negotiable. The United States, which insists on effective anti-treaty-shopping and exchange of information provisions, and which must accommodate its uniquely complex tax laws, probably has more non-negotiable positions than most countries. For example, every U.S. treaty must contain the Asaving clause@, which permits the United States to tax its citizens and residents as if the treaty had not come into effect, and allow the United States to apply its rules applicable to former citizens and long-term residents. Other U.S. tax law provisions that may complicate negotiations are the branch profits tax and the branch level interest tax, rules regarding contingent interest, real estate mortgage investment conduits, real estate investment trusts and regulated investment companies, and the Foreign Investors in Real Property Tax Act rules.

Obtaining the agreement of our treaty partners on provisions of importance to the United States sometimes requires other concessions on our part. Similarly, other countries sometimes must make concessions to obtain our agreement on matters that are critical to them. In most cases, the process of give-and-take produces a document that is the best treaty that is possible with that other country. In others, we may agree with the other country that it will not be possible to reach an acceptable agreement. In those cases, we simply stop negotiating with the understanding that negotiations might restart if circumstances change. Accordingly, each treaty that we present here represents not only the best deal that we believe we can achieve with the particular country at this time, but also constitutes an agreement that we believe is in the best interests of the United States.

Discussion of Treaties and Protocols

I would now like to discuss the importance and purposes of each agreement that has been transmitted for your consideration. We have submitted Technical Explanations of each agreement that contain detailed discussions of the provisions of each treaty and protocol. These Technical Explanations serve as an official guide to each agreement. Before discussing the individual treaties, however, I would like to discuss a development common to all three agreements.

Elimination of Source Country Tax on Certain Intercompany Dividends

As discussed above, U.S. tax treaty policy for many years has been to eliminate (or when that is not possible, substantially reduce) source-country withholding taxes on interest and royalties. By contrast, the United States regularly reduces by treaty the withholding tax on intercompany dividends but has never agreed in a treaty to eliminate source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. These three agreements each include provisions for the elimination of source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends if certain conditions are satisfied. The major policy question presented by these three agreements, therefore, is whether the United States should agree with any country to eliminate, on a reciprocal basis, source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. If the answer to this question is "yes, in appropriate circumstances", as the Treasury Department believes, then the additional question, addressed in the discussion of the individual treaties below, is whether the circumstances are appropriate in the three treaties before the Committee.

In general, reductions in withholding taxes increase tax revenues for the United States because U.S. companies that will pay less in foreign withholding taxes will therefore claim less in foreign tax credits to offset their U.S. tax. Of course, the revenue gain for the U.S. fisc will be offset by any reductions in U.S. withholding taxes. However, when U.S. companies receive more in payments from their foreign subsidiaries than U.S. subsidiaries make in payments to their foreign parents, the reduction in foreign tax credit claims will offset the reduction in withholding tax collections. This should hold true with respect to dividends, as U.S. companies receive significantly more direct dividends from abroad than foreign companies receive from the United States.

Reductions in foreign withholding taxes borne by U.S. taxpayers result in a direct benefit to the U.S. fisc to the extent that the U.S. taxpayer otherwise would have been able to use the foreign tax credits associated with such withholding taxes to offset its U.S. tax liability. Reductions in foreign withholding taxes result in a direct benefit to the U.S. taxpayer to the extent that it could not have used the foreign tax credits to offset its U.s. tax liability. In cases where the U.S. taxpayer has excess foreign tax credits, reductions in foreign withholding taxes represent a dollar-for-dollar reduction in its overall tax burden. This reduction in foreign withholding taxes represents a reduction in costs that may increase their competitiveness in connection with international business opportunities.

For example, if a U.S. company is considering an investment in a foreign country, it of course must consider the after-tax cost of that investment. If the potential investment is the purchase of an existing business in a foreign country, the U.S. company likely will compete against bidders from other countries. If the U.S. company is in an excess foreign tax credit position, any withholding tax paid to the host country will decrease the U.S company's expected return on the foreign investment. If another bidder is not subject to the host country withholding tax (perhaps because of its home country's treaty relationship with the host country), it may be willing to pay a higher price for the target.

Similarly, a foreign company that is in an excess foreign tax credit position in its own country might be discouraged from investing in the United States because of the five percent withholding tax that the United States is permitted to impose on direct investment dividends under most of its tax treaties. The same is true of a company that is based in a country that relieves double taxation by exempting direct investment dividends from taxation. In either case, the imposition of a five percent U.S. withholding tax reduces the return on the investment in the United States dollar-for-dollar. Eliminating the withholding tax by treaty therefore may encourage inbound investment. Increased investment in the United States means more jobs, greater productivity and higher wage rates.

The U.S. position of imposing a withholding tax on direct investment dividends was consistent with general treaty practice throughout the world. When most major trading partners imposed such a tax, then the tax would not create the competitive advantages and disadvantages described above, since every company would be subject to it. In addition, many of our treaties were negotiated at a time when corporate tax rates in Europe tended to be higher than those in the United States, making it less likely for foreign companies to be in an excess foreign tax credit position. As a result, a five percent U.S. withholding tax on direct investment may not have been seen as a significant cost of doing business here. However, more and more countries are eliminating their withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. In this regard, it should be noted that the Parent-Subsidiary Directive adopted by the European Union in [ ] eliminated all withholding taxes on dividends paid by a subsidiary in one EU member country to a parent in another of the fifteen (soon to be 25) members of the European Union. Moreover, corporate tax rates have been falling around the world, In this climate, it was appropriate for the United States to begin to consider agreeing by treaty to eliminate source-country withholding taxes on certain intercompany dividends.

We believe that it is in the interest of the United States to take a flexible approach, agreeing to eliminate the withholding tax on intercompany dividends in appropriate cases. This would not be a blanket change in policy, and the Treasury Department does not recommend a change to the U.S. negotiating position in this respect, because it may not be appropriate to agree to such reductions in every treaty with every country. Therefore, we would approach each case individually.

Some of the parameters are relevant across the board. We do not believe that it is appropriate to eliminate source-country taxation of intercompany dividends by treaty unless the treaty partner is willing to adopt anti-treaty-shopping rules that meet the highest standards and the information exchange provision of the treaty are sufficient to allow us to confirm that the requirements for entitlement to this benefit. Strict protections against treaty shopping are particularly important when the elimination of withholding taxes on intercompany dividends is included in only relatively few U.S. treaties.

In addition to these conditions, we must be satisfied with the overall balance of the treaty. The balance assessment will be relatively simple in cases where the other country imposes a withholding tax on dividends comparable to the U.S. withholding tax and the dividend flows are roughly equal (or favor the United States). In other cases, eliminating the withholding tax on intercompany dividends nevertheless may be appropriate if the United States benefits from concessions made by the other country with respect to other provisions of the treaty. Finally, there may be other cases where the elimination of withholding taxes may be appropriate in order to establish certainty and stability with respect to the tax treatment of investments in a particular country.

We cannot now set the outer limits of the policy, but need to develop them through careful consideration of the question as it presents itself in other contexts. What we need now is Senate approval of our decision to explore this approach in the context of the three treaties before the Committee.

United Kingdom

The proposed new Convention with the United Kingdom was signed in London on July 24, 2001, and was amended by a Protocol, signed in Washington on July 19, 2002. The Convention is accompanied by an exchange of diplomatic notes, also dated July 24, 2001. The Convention, Protocol and notes replace the existing Convention, which was signed in London in 1975 and modified by subsequent notes and protocols. The proposed Convention generally follows the pattern of other recent U.S. treaties and the U.S. Model treaty.

The main impetus for the re-negotiation of the U.S.-U.K. tax treaty was the changes made by the United Kingdom to its domestic laws regarding the treatment of dividends. The dividend article of the current treaty (along with corresponding provisions of the article regarding foreign tax credits) contained unusual rules intended to extend to U.S. shareholders the benefit of the United Kingdom's imputation system for the taxation of dividends, while dividing the cost of that benefit between the United States and the United Kingdom. Changes in the United Kingdom's domestic system for taxing dividends meant that the provisions no longer worked as intended. As a result, the two countries agreed that the treaty would have to be changed.

For the United States, the start of negotiations provided an opportunity to bring the treaty into greater conformity with U.S. treaty policy. The current treaty does not include an effective anti-treaty-shopping provision, and it grants a waiver of the insurance excise tax without the anti-abuse protection that has become standard in other U.S. tax treaties.

There were substantial problems under the information exchange provisions of the current treaty because the United Kingdom could not provide information to the United States unless it too needed the information for its own domestic tax purposes. Because the treaty was negotiated in the late 1970's, it did not include any of the provisions found in modern treaties to reflect the changes in U.S. domestic law made over the last 20 years.

The maximum withholding tax rates on investment income in the proposed Convention are the same or lower than those in the existing Convention. Although the Convention continues the rule under which the country of source may tax direct investment dividends and portfolio dividends at a maximum rate of 5 and 15 percent, respectively, the new Convention provides for a withholding rate of zero percent on certain qualifying dividends. Qualifying dividends include those from certain 80-percent-owned corporate subsidiaries and those derived by pension plans. The new Convention was the first income tax treaty signed by the United States that contains this limit on source-country taxation for intercompany dividends.

Dividends paid by non-taxable conduit entities, such as U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts, and any comparable investment vehicles in the United Kingdom, are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income.

Interest and royalties generally may not be taxed by the source country, as in the present treaty as well as in the U.S. Model Convention and in recent U.S. treaties with OECD countries. However, excess inclusions with respect to residual interests in U.S. real estate mortgage investment conduits may be taxed under U.S. domestic rules, without regard to the rest of the provisions relating to interest, and contingent interest may be taxed by the source country at a maximum rate of 15 percent rate.

The new Convention confirms that the United States generally will not impose the excise tax on insurance policies issued by foreign insurers if the premiums on such policies are derived by a U.K. enterprise. This rule is a continuation of the waiver of the excise tax that applies under the existing Convention, with the addition of an anti-abuse rule that will prevent companies in third countries that do not benefit from a waiver of the insurance excise tax from using a U.K. insurance company as a conduit to avoid imposition of the tax.

The new Convention provides for exclusive residence-country taxation of profits from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft, including profits from the rental of ships and aircraft on a full basis, or on a bareboat basis if the rental income is incidental to profits from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic. All income from the use, maintenance or rental of containers used in international traffic is likewise exempt from source-country taxation under the proposed Convention.

The new Convention carries over from the existing Convention special rules regarding offshore exploration and exploitation activities. These rules were included at the request of the United Kingdom. We were successful in making some technical changes to avoid some unintended consequences of the old rules and in providing a slightly higher threshold for taxation of employees working in the offshore oil sector.

The new Convention contains rules for the taxation of private pensions that differ from those in recent U.S. treaties and the existing Convention. Under the new Convention, the U.S. and the U.K. each will treat pension plans established in the other State the same way as comparable domestic plans are treated. A similar rule applies to earnings and accretions of pension plans and to employer contributions. For instance, if a U.S. citizen contributes to a qualified plan while working in the United States and then establishes residence in the United Kingdom, the new Convention prevents the United Kingdom from taxing the earnings and accretions of the pension plan with respect to that individual. Finally, the new Convention provides for the exclusive residence-based taxation of Social Security payments, which is different from the U.S. Model but consistent with the existing Convention.

The new Convention also deals with income earned by entertainers and sportsmen, corporate directors, government employees and students in a manner consistent with the rules of the U.S. Model. The Convention continues a host-country exemption for income earned by teachers that is found in the existing Convention, although not in the U.S. Model.

The new Convention contains comprehensive rules in its "Limitation on Benefits" article, designed to deny "treaty-shoppers" the benefits of the Convention. This article is essentially the same as the limitation on benefits articles contained in recent U.S. treaties.

At the request of the United Kingdom, the new Convention includes an additional limit on the availability of certain treaty benefits obtained in connection with "conduit arrangements." The conduit arrangement test may apply to deny treaty benefits in certain tax avoidance cases involving the payment of insurance premiums, dividends, interest, royalties, or other income. The conduit test is not contained in the U.S. Model. The test is designed primarily to allow the United Kingdom to combat treaty shopping transactions that would not be caught by the limitation on benefits article of the new Convention. U.K. domestic law does not provide sufficient protection against such abusive transactions, but U.S. domestic law does. Accordingly, the Treasury Department will interpret the term "conduit arrangement" in a manner consistent and co-extensive with existing tax avoidance doctrines and measures under U.S. law.

The new Convention provides relief from double taxation in a manner consistent with the U.S. Model. The new Convention also contains a re-sourcing rule to ensure that a U.S. resident can obtain a U.S. foreign tax credit for U.K. taxes paid when the Convention assigns to the United Kingdom primary taxing rights over an item of gross income. A comparable rule applies for purposes of the U.K. foreign tax credit. Although the U.S. Model does not contain a re-sourcing rule, the existing Convention contains a similar rule.

REV_00159392

Like the existing Convention, the new Convention provides a credit for the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax, limited to the amount of the tax attributable to sources within the United Kingdom. The credit allowed by the new Convention, however, is somewhat broader than that allowed under the existing Convention to account for intervening changes in U.S. domestic law.

In addition, the proposed Convention provides for non-discriminatory treatment (i.e., national treatment) by one country to residents and nationals of the other. Also included in the proposed treaty are rules necessary for administering the treaty, including rules for the resolution of disputes under the Convention. The information exchange provisions generally follow the U.S. Model and make clear that the United Kingdom will provide U.S. tax officials such information as is relevant to carry out the provisions of the Convention and the domestic tax laws of the United States. This provision is authorized by a recent change in U.K. law.

Australia

The proposed Protocol to the income tax Convention with Australia was signed in Canberra on September 27, 2001. It was negotiated to bring the current Convention, concluded in 1982, up to date and into closer conformity with current U.S. tax treaty practice, while also incorporating some provisions found in the Australian Model income tax convention.

The most important aspects of the proposed Protocol deal with the taxation of cross-border dividend, royalty and interest payments. The current treaty provides for levels of source-country taxation that are consistent with Australian treaty practice but substantially higher than provided by the U.S. Model. We were able to negotiate substantial reductions with respect to all three categories of payments.

Whereas the existing Convention allows for taxation at source of 15 percent on all dividends, the proposed Protocol provides for a maximum withholding rate of 5 percent on direct dividends meeting a 10 percent ownership threshold, and the elimination of the source-country withholding tax with respect to dividends from certain 80 percent owned corporate subsidiaries. Portfolio dividends will continue to be subject to a 15 percent rate of withholding. Australia imposes a withholding tax on dividends paid out of earnings that have not been subject to full corporate tax ("unfranked dividends"). Therefore, the elimination of the Australian withholding tax on intercompany dividends will provide a direct and immediate benefit to U.S. businesses operating there, and to the U.S. fisc.

Dividends paid by U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income. The U.S. Model provision was adapted to recognize the special investment structure of Australian unit trusts and their participation in the U.S. REIT industry.

The proposed Protocol eliminates withholding on interest payments in two key cases. Interest that is derived by a financial institution which is unrelated to the payor and interest paid to governmental entities are exempt from withholding tax at source. All other types of interest (including interest received by financial institutions in back-to-back loans or their economic equivalent) continue to be subject to withholding at the 10 percent rate prescribed in the existing Convention.

The proposed Protocol also reduces the level of withholding on royalty payments from the 10 percent limit prescribed in the existing Convention to a general 5 percent. Consistent with the U.S. Model, the proposed Protocol also provides that payments for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment shall be taxed as business profits. The existing Convention treats this type of income as a royalty that may be taxed by the source country at a maximum rate of 10 percent. The treatment of royalties was a major concession by Australia, which has never agreed in a treaty to lower its withholding tax on royalties below 10 percent.

The proposed Protocol brings the existing Convention's treatment of income from the operation of ships, aircraft and containers in international traffic closer to that of the U.S. Model convention. The proposed Protocol provides for exclusive residence-country taxation of profits from the rental of ships and aircraft on a bareboat basis when the ship or aircraft is operated by the lessee in international traffic and the rental activity is incidental to the operation of ships or aircraft by the lessor. All income from the use, maintenance or rental of containers used in international traffic is likewise exempt from source-country taxation under the proposed Protocol.

The proposed Protocol clarifies that Australia's tax on capital gains will be a covered tax for purposes of the existing Convention. This closes a gap in the existing Convention and increases the likelihood that U.S. taxpayers subject to capital gains tax in Australia will be able to claim a foreign tax credit with respect to that tax. Generally, the proposed Protocol preserves the existing Convention's tax treatment of capital gains, while incorporating some aspects of Australia's domestic law regarding expatriation. The proposed Protocol also provides rules that coordinate both countries' tax systems with respect to these expatriation rules.

An important modernization that the proposed Protocol brings to the existing Convention is a comprehensive "Limitation on Benefits" Article based closely on the latest U.S. Model. This updated provision is designed to deny "treaty-shoppers" the benefits of the Convention.

The current treaty preserves the U.S. right to tax former citizens whose loss of citizenship had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of tax. The proposed Protocol expands this right to include former long-term residents whose loss of such status had, as one of its principal purposes, the avoidance of tax. Therefore, the United States may fully apply section 877 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Mexico

The proposed Protocol to the income tax Convention with Mexico was signed in Mexico City on November 26, 2002. It was negotiated to bring the existing Convention, concluded in 1992, into closer conformity with current U.S. tax treaty policy. The proposed Protocol was concluded in recognition of the importance of the United States' economic relations with Mexico.

The major feature of the proposed Protocol is its treatment of dividends. As in the agreements with the United Kingdom and Australia, the proposed Protocol reduces to zero the maximum level of withholding tax on certain types of cross-border direct dividends. Under the existing Convention, dividends may be taxed by the country of source at a maximum rate of 5 percent on direct dividends (where the recipient of the dividends owns at least 10 percent of the company paying the dividends) and 10 percent with respect to all other dividends. Pursuant to the proposed Protocol, the withholding tax will be eliminated entirely with respect to dividends from certain 80-percent owned corporate subsidiaries. The other rules will, however, remain in place with respect to those dividends that do not qualify for the elimination of the source-country withholding tax. Dividends paid to qualified pension funds also will be exempt from withholding tax at source.

While Mexico does not currently impose a withholding tax on dividends, it has enacted such a tax and then repealed it since the existing treaty was negotiated in the early 1990's. As a result, locking in the source-country exemption will provide greater certainty to taxpayers regarding the long-term tax environments for their investments in Mexico.

Dividends paid by U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income. The U.S. Model provision was adapted to recognize the special investment structure of Australian unit trusts and their participation in the U.S. REIT industry.

The current treaty preserves the U.S. right to tax former citizens whose loss of citizenship had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of tax. The proposed Protocol expands this right to include former long-term residents whose loss of such status had, as one of its principal purposes, the avoidance of tax. Therefore, the United States may fully apply section 877 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The proposed Protocol incorporates a modernized provision regarding the source of income that will be more effective in eliminating double taxation. Under the new rule, income that may be taxed by one of the parties to the Convention will generally be treated as arising in that country. Thus, the other country generally will exempt that income or provide a credit for the taxes paid with respect to such income.

Treaties under Negotiation

We continue to maintain an active calendar of tax treaty negotiations. We are in active negotiations with Japan, the Netherlands, Iceland, Hungary, Barbados, France, Bangladesh, Canada, and Korea. We have also signed an agreement with Sri Lanka which we expect will be ready for transmittal to the Senate soon. In accordance with the treaty program priorities noted earlier, we continue to seek appropriate opportunities for tax treaty discussions and negotiations with several countries in Latin America and in the developing world generally.

Conclusion

Let me conclude by again thanking the Committee for its continuing interest in the tax treaty program, and the Members and staff for devoting the time and attention to the review of the agreements that are pending before you. We also appreciate the assistance and cooperation of the staffs of this Committee and of the Joint Committee on Taxation in the tax treaty process.

We urge the Committee to take prompt and favorable action on all of the agreements before you today. Such action will strengthen and expand our economic relations with countries that have been significant economic and political partners for many years. As a result, we will improve the climate for cross-border investment, which brings jobs and prosperity to countries that are wise enough to reduce barriers to investment.

Draft

TESTIMONY OF
BARBARA ANGUS, INTERNATIONAL TAX COUNSEL,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS
ON PENDING INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS

MARCH 5, 2003

Mr. Chairman and distinguished Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing to recommend, on behalf of the Administration, favorable action on three income tax agreements that are pending before this Committee.

This Administration is dedicated to eliminating unnecessary barriers to cross-border trade and investment. The primary means for eliminating tax barriers to trade and investment are bilateral tax treaties. Tax treaties eliminate barriers by providing greater certainty to taxpayers regarding their potential liability to tax; allocating taxing rights between jurisdictions so that the taxpayer is not subject to double taxation; by reducing the risk of excessive taxation that may arise because of high gross-basis withholding taxes; and by ensuring that taxpayers will not be subject to discriminatory taxation in other countries. The international network of over 2000 bilateral tax treaties has established a stable framework that allows international trade and investment to flourish. The success of this framework is evidenced by the fact that the millions of cross-border transactions that take place each year give rise to relatively few disputes regarding the allocation of tax revenues between governments.

The Administration believes that these three agreements, which update important treaty relationships with the United Kingdom, Australia and Mexico, would provide significant benefits to the United States and to our treaty partners, as well as our respective business communities. We look forward to receiving the views of the Committee regarding these agreements.

Purposes and Benefits of Tax Treaties

Tax treaties provide benefits to both taxpayers and governments by setting out clear ground rules that will govern the tax matters relating to trade and investment between the two countries. The goal of the treaty is to mesh the tax systems of the two countries in such a way that there is little potential for dispute regarding the amount of tax that should be paid to each country, so that the taxpayer does not end up caught in the middle between two governments, each of which would like to tax the same income. Once a treaty relationship is in place and working as it should, governments need expend little additional resources negotiating to resolve individual cases because the general principles for taxation will have been agreed by the treaty negotiators.

One of the primary functions of tax treaties is to provide certainty to taxpayers with respect to the "threshold" question – that is, whether the taxpayer's cross-border activities will subject it to taxation by two or more countries. Treaties answer this question by establishing the minimum level of economic activity that a resident of one country must engage in within the other country before the latter country may tax any resulting business profits. In general terms, treaties provide that if the branch operations have sufficient substance and continuity, the country where the activities occur will have primary (but not exclusive) jurisdiction to tax. In other cases, where the operations are relatively minor, the home country retains the sole jurisdiction to tax its residents. In the absence of a treaty, a U.S. company operating a branch or division or providing services in another country might be subject to income tax in both the United States and the other country on the income generated by such operations. Although the United States provides a foreign tax credit, there remains potential for resulting double taxation that could make an otherwise attractive investment opportunity unprofitable, depriving both countries of the benefits of increased cross-border investment.

Tax treaties protect taxpayers from double taxation through the allocation of taxing rights between the two countries. This allocation takes several forms. First, the treaty has a mechanism for determining the residence of a taxpayer that otherwise would be a resident of both countries. Second, with respect to each category of income, the treaty assigns the "primary" right to tax to one country, usually (but not always) the country in which the income arises (the "source" country), and the "residual" right to tax to the other country, usually (but not always) the country of residence of the taxpayer. Third, the treaty provides rules for determining which country will be treated as the source country for each category of income. Finally, the treaty establishes both limitations on the amount of tax that the source country can impose on each category of income and the obligation of the residence country to eliminate double taxation that otherwise would arise from the exercise of concurrent taxing jurisdiction by the two countries.

As a complement to these substantive rules regarding allocation of taxing rights, treaties provide a mechanism for dealing with disputes or questions of application that arise after the treaty enters into force. In such cases, designated tax authorities of the two governments – known as the Acompetent authorities@ in tax treaty parlance – are to consult and reach an agreement under which the taxpayer's income is allocated between the two taxing jurisdictions on a consistent basis, thereby preventing the double taxation that might otherwise result. The U.S. competent authority under our tax treaties is the Secretary of the Treasury. That function has been delegated to the Director, International (LMSB) of the Internal Revenue Service.

In addition to reducing potential double taxation, treaties also reduce "excessive" taxation by reducing withholding taxes that are imposed at source. Under U.S. domestic law, all payments to non-U.S. persons of dividends and royalties as well as certain payments of interest are subject to withholding tax equal to 30 percent of the gross amount paid. Most of our trading partners impose similar levels of withholding tax on these types of income. This tax is imposed on a gross, rather than net, amount. Because the withholding tax does not take into account the expenses incurred in generating the income, the taxpayer frequently will be subject to an effective rate of tax that is significantly higher than the tax rate that would be applicable in either the source or the residence country with respect to net income. The taxpayer may be viewed, therefore, as having suffered "excessive" taxation.

Tax treaties alleviate this burden by providing maximum levels of withholding tax that the treaty partners may impose on these types of income. In general, U.S. tax treaty policy is to reduce the rate of withholding tax on interest and royalties to zero, so that such payments are taxed exclusively in the country of residence, and not in the country of source. In contrast, U.S. tax treaty policy has been to allow some source-country taxation of dividends and many U.S. treaties provide for a maximum source-country withholding tax of 5 percent on dividends paid to direct corporate investors and a maximum source-country withholding tax of 15 percent on dividends paid to all other shareholders. Over the years, U.S. treaty negotiators have considered proposals to treat intercompany dividends in the same manner as these other categories of income and provide for exclusive residence-country taxation of intercompany dividends in some cases. The three treaties before the Committee are the first U.S. tax treaties to do so.

Our treaties also include provisions intended to ensure that cross-border investors do not suffer discrimination in the application of the tax laws of the other country. While this is similar to a basic investor protection provided in several types of agreements, the non-discrimination provisions of tax treaties are more effective because they are specifically tailored to tax concerns. They provide guidance about what "national treatment" means in the tax context by specifically prohibiting types of discriminatory measures that once were common in some tax systems. At the same time, they clarify the manner in which discrimination is to be tested in the tax context. Particular rules are needed here because, for example, foreign persons that are subject to tax in the host country only on certain income may not be in the same position as domestic taxpayers that may be subject to tax in such country on all their income.

Treaties also include provisions dealing with more specialized situations. Some of these provisions are becoming increasingly important as the number of individuals engaged in cross-border activities increases. For example, in many treaty negotiations, significant time is spent on the pension provisions of the treaty, in order to ensure that individuals who are expecting to be subject to a certain manner and level of taxation do not find their pensions disappearing because of unexpected taxation by another country. Other quite specific rules deal with Social Security benefits, alimony and child support and employee stock options in the cross-border context. While these subjects may not involve a lot of revenue from the perspective of the two governments, getting the provision right can be very important to each of the individual taxpayers who are affected.

Other provisions deal with the administration of the treaty and, to a certain extent, the domestic tax law of the two countries. One of the most important of these is the provision addressing the exchange of information between the tax authorities. Under the tax treaties, the competent authorities may exchange such information as may be necessary for the proper administration of the countries' tax laws, subject to strict protections on the confidentiality of taxpayer information. Access to information from other countries is critically important to the full and fair enforcement of the U.S. tax laws. Information exchange is a priority for the United States in its tax treaty program. If a country has bank secrecy rules that prevent or seriously inhibit the exchange of information under the tax treaty, we will not conclude a treaty with that country. In fact, information exchange is a matter we raise with the other country before beginning formal negotiations because it is one of a very few issues that we consider non-negotiable.

Treaty Program and Negotiation Priorities

Given all of these benefits to taxpayers and the government, an obvious question is why we do not have a tax treaty with every country. The answer is slightly different for each potential treaty partner, but there are some general patterns.

The United States has a network of 54 bilateral income tax treaties, the oldest of which now dates from 1950. This network includes all 29 of our fellow members of the OECD and covers the vast majority of foreign trade and investment of U.S. companies.

For the past decade, the Treasury Department has given priority to renegotiating older treaties to ensure that they reflect current U.S. treaty policy. The treaties before you are evidence of how even good treaty relationships can be made better. At the same time, we are actively working to establish new treaty relationships that will fill gaps in our treaty network.

In establishing priorities, our primary objective is the conclusion of treaties or protocols that will provide the greatest benefits to the United States and to U.S. taxpayers. We communicate regularly with the U.S. business community, seeking input regarding the areas in which treaty network expansion and improvement efforts should be focused and information regarding practical problems they face with respect to particular countries.

The U.S. commitment to including comprehensive provisions designed to prevent "treaty-shopping" in all of our tax treaties is one of the keys to improving our overall treaty network. Treaty-shopping can take a number of forms, but it generally involves a resident of a third state that either has no treaty with the United States or has a treaty that offers relatively less benefit. The third-state resident establishes an entity in a treaty partner that has a relatively more favorable treaty with the United States in order to hold title to the person's investments in the United States, which could range from portfolio stock investments to substantial operating subsidiaries. By interposing the new entity so that the U.S. investment appears to be made through the treaty partner, the third-country person is able to withdraw the returns from the U.S. investment subject to the favorable rates of tax provided in the tax treaty, rather than the higher rates that would be imposed on such returns if the person had held the U.S. investments directly.

If treaty-shopping is allowed to occur, then there is less incentive for the third country with which the United States has no treaty to negotiate a tax treaty with the United States. The third country could maintain inappropriate barriers to investment and trade from the

United States and yet its companies could obtain the benefits of lower U.S. tax by organizing their investment and trade in the United States so that they flow through a country with a favorable tax treaty with the United States.

For these reasons, all recent U.S. tax treaties contain comprehensive "limitation on benefits" provisions that limit the benefits of the treaty to bona fide residents of the treaty partner. These provisions are not uniform, as each country has particular characteristics that affect both its attractiveness as a country through which to treaty shop and the mechanisms through which treaty shopping may be attempted. Consequently, the specific limitation on benefits provision in each treaty must to some extent be tailored to fit the facts and circumstances of the treaty partner's internal laws and practices. Moreover, the provisions need to strike a balance that prevents the inappropriate exploitation of treaty benefits while ensuring that the treaty benefits flow smoothly to the legitimate and desirable economic activity for which the benefits were intended.

Despite the protections of the limitation on benefits provisions, there may be countries with which we choose not to have a tax treaty because of the possibility of abuse. With other countries there may not be the type of cross-border tax issues that are best resolved by treaty. For example, we generally do not conclude tax treaties with jurisdictions that do not impose significant income taxes, because there is little possibility of double taxation of income in such a case. In such cases, we seek to enter into an agreement limited to the exchange of tax information, which furthers the goal of reducing tax avoidance and evasion.

However, the situation can become more complex when a country adopts a special preferential regime for certain parts of the economy that is different from the rules generally applicable to the country's residents. In those cases, the residents benefiting from the preferential regime do not face potential double taxation, and so should not be entitled to reductions in U.S. withholding taxes, while a treaty relationship might be useful and appropriate in order to avoid double taxation in the case of the residents who do not receive the benefit of the preferential regime. Accordingly, in some cases we have developed treaties that carve out from the benefits of the treaties certain residents and activities. In other cases, we have determined that economic relations with the relevant country were such that the potential gains from a treaty were not sufficient to outweigh the risk of abuse, and have therefore decided against entering into a tax treaty relationship (or have terminated an existing relationship).

Prospective treaty partners also must indicate that they understand their obligations under the treaty, including those with respect to information exchange, and must demonstrate that they are able to comply with those obligations. Sometimes a potential treaty partner is unable to do so. In other cases we may feel that a treaty is inappropriate because a treaty partner may be unwilling to address in the treaty real tax problems identified by U.S. businesses operating there. Lesser developed and newly emerging economies, for which capital and trade flows with the United States are often disproportionate or virtually one-way, may not be willing to reduce withholding taxes to a level acceptable to the United States because they feel that they cannot give up scarce tax revenues.

The primary constraint on the size of our treaty network, however, may be the complexity of the negotiations themselves. The various functions performed by tax treaties, and particularly the goal of meshing two different tax systems, make the negotiation process exacting and time-consuming.

A country's tax policy, as reflected in its domestic tax legislation as well as its tax treaty positions, reflects the sovereign choices made by that country in the fulfillment of its obligation to fund the government. Numerous features of the treaty partner's unique tax legislation and its interaction with U.S. domestic tax rules must be considered in negotiating an appropriate treaty. Examples include whether the country eliminates double taxation through an exemption or a credit system, the country's treatment of partnerships and other transparent entities, and how the country taxes contributions to pension funds, the funds themselves and distributions from the funds. A treaty negotiation must take into account all of these and many other aspects of the treaty partner's tax system in order to arrive at an acceptable treaty from the perspective of the United States. Accordingly, a simple side-by-side comparison of two treaties, or of a proposed treaty against a model treaty, will not enable meaningful conclusions to be drawn as to whether a proposed treaty reflects an appropriate balance. Moreover, there may be differences that are of little substantive importance, reflecting language issues, cultural obstacles or other impediments to the use of particular U.S. or other model text.

Each treaty is the result of a negotiated bargain between two countries that often have conflicting objectives. Each country has certain positions that it considers non-negotiable. The United States, which insists on effective anti-treaty-shopping and exchange of information provisions, and which must accommodate its uniquely complex tax laws, probably has more non-negotiable positions than most countries. For example, every U.S. treaty must contain the Asaving clause@, which permits the United States to tax its citizens and residents as if the treaty had not come into effect, and allow the United States to apply its rules applicable to former citizens and long-term residents. Other U.S. tax law provisions that may complicate negotiations are the branch profits tax and the branch level interest tax, rules regarding contingent interest, real estate mortgage investment conduits, real estate investment trusts and regulated investment companies, and the Foreign Investors in Real Property Tax Act rules.

Obtaining the agreement of our treaty partners on provisions of importance to the United States sometimes requires other concessions on our part. Similarly, other countries sometimes must make concessions to obtain our agreement on matters that are critical to them. In most cases, the process of give-and-take produces a document that is the best treaty that is possible with that other country. In others, we may agree with the other country that it will not be possible to reach an acceptable agreement. In those cases, we simply stop negotiating with the understanding that negotiations might restart if circumstances change. Accordingly, each treaty that we present here represents not only the best deal that we believe we can achieve with the particular country at this time, but also constitutes an agreement that we believe is in the best interests of the United States.

REV_00159413

Discussion of Treaties and Protocols

I would now like to discuss the importance and purposes of each agreement that has been transmitted for your consideration. We have submitted Technical Explanations of each agreement that contain detailed discussions of the provisions of each treaty and protocol. These Technical Explanations serve as an official guide to each agreement. Before discussing the individual treaties, however, I would like to discuss a development common to all three agreements.

Elimination of Source Country Tax on Certain Intercompany Dividends

As discussed above, U.S. tax treaty policy for many years has been to eliminate (or when that is not possible, substantially reduce) source-country withholding taxes on interest and royalties. By contrast, the United States regularly reduces by treaty the withholding tax on intercompany dividends but has never agreed in a treaty to eliminate source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. These three agreements each include provisions for the elimination of source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends if certain conditions are satisfied. The major policy question presented by these three agreements, therefore, is whether the United States should agree with any country to eliminate, on a reciprocal basis, source-country withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. If the answer to this question is "yes, in appropriate circumstances", as the Treasury Department believes, then the additional question, addressed in the discussion of the individual treaties below, is whether the circumstances are appropriate in the three treaties before the Committee.

In general, reductions in withholding taxes increase tax revenues for the United States because U.S. companies that will pay less in foreign withholding taxes will therefore claim less in foreign tax credits to offset their U.S. tax. Of course, the revenue gain for the U.S. fisc will be offset by any reductions in U.S. withholding taxes. However, when U.S. companies receive more in payments from their foreign subsidiaries than U.S. subsidiaries make in payments to their foreign parents, the reduction in foreign tax credit claims will offset the reduction in withholding tax collections. This should hold true with respect to dividends, as U.S. companies receive significantly more direct dividends from abroad than foreign companies receive from the United States.

Reductions in foreign withholding taxes borne by U.S. taxpayers result in a direct benefit to the U.S. fisc to the extent that the U.S. taxpayer otherwise would have been able to use the foreign tax credits associated with such withholding taxes to offset its U.S. tax liability. Reductions in foreign withholding taxes result in a direct benefit to the U.S. taxpayer to the extent that it could not have used the foreign tax credits to offset its U.s. tax liability. In cases where the U.S. taxpayer has excess foreign tax credits, reductions in foreign withholding taxes represent a dollar-for-dollar reduction in its overall tax burden. This reduction in foreign withholding taxes represents a reduction in costs that may increase their competitiveness in connection with international business opportunities.

For example, if a U.S. company is considering an investment in a foreign country, it of course must consider the after-tax cost of that investment. If the potential investment is the purchase of an existing business in a foreign country, the U.S. company likely will compete against bidders from other countries. If the U.S. company is in an excess foreign tax credit position, any withholding tax paid to the host country will decrease the U.S company's expected return on the foreign investment. If another bidder is not subject to the host country withholding tax (perhaps because of its home country's treaty relationship with the host country), it may be willing to pay a higher price for the target.

Similarly, a foreign company that is in an excess foreign tax credit position in its own country might be discouraged from investing in the United States because of the five percent withholding tax that the United States is permitted to impose on direct investment dividends under most of its tax treaties. The same is true of a company that is based in a country that relieves double taxation by exempting direct investment dividends from taxation. In either case, the imposition of a five percent U.S. withholding tax reduces the return on the investment in the United States dollar-for-dollar. Eliminating the withholding tax by treaty therefore may encourage inbound investment. Increased investment in the United States means more jobs, greater productivity and higher wage rates.

The U.S. position of imposing a withholding tax on direct investment dividends was consistent with general treaty practice throughout the world. When most major trading partners imposed such a tax, then the tax would not create the competitive advantages and disadvantages described above, since every company would be subject to it. In addition, many of our treaties were negotiated at a time when corporate tax rates in Europe tended to be higher than those in the United States, making it less likely for foreign companies to be in an excess foreign tax credit position. As a result, a five percent U.S. withholding tax on direct investment may not have been seen as a significant cost of doing business here. However, more and more countries are eliminating their withholding taxes on intercompany dividends. In this regard, it should be noted that the Parent-Subsidiary Directive adopted by the European Union in [ ] eliminated all withholding taxes on dividends paid by a subsidiary in one EU member country to a parent in another of the fifteen (soon to be 25) members of the European Union. Moreover, corporate tax rates have been falling around the world, In this climate, it was appropriate for the United States to begin to consider agreeing by treaty to eliminate source-country withholding taxes on certain intercompany dividends.

We believe that it is in the interest of the United States to take a flexible approach, agreeing to eliminate the withholding tax on intercompany dividends in appropriate cases. This would not be a blanket change in policy, and the Treasury Department does not recommend a change to the U.S. negotiating position in this respect, because it may not be appropriate to agree to such reductions in every treaty with every country. Therefore, we would approach each case individually.

Some of the parameters are relevant across the board. We do not believe that it is appropriate to eliminate source-country taxation of intercompany dividends by treaty unless the treaty partner is willing to adopt anti-treaty-shopping rules that meet the highest standards and the information exchange provision of the treaty are sufficient to allow us to confirm that the requirements for entitlement to this benefit. Strict protections against treaty shopping are particularly important when the elimination of withholding taxes on intercompany dividends is included in only relatively few U.S. treaties.

In addition to these conditions, we must be satisfied with the overall balance of the treaty. The balance assessment will be relatively simple in cases where the other country imposes a withholding tax on dividends comparable to the U.S. withholding tax and the dividend flows are roughly equal (or favor the United States). In other cases, eliminating the withholding tax on intercompany dividends nevertheless may be appropriate if the United States benefits from concessions made by the other country with respect to other provisions of the treaty. Finally, there may be other cases where the elimination of withholding taxes may be appropriate in order to establish certainty and stability with respect to the tax treatment of investments in a particular country.

We cannot now set the outer limits of the policy, but need to develop them through careful consideration of the question as it presents itself in other contexts. What we need now is Senate approval of our decision to explore this approach in the context of the three treaties before the Committee.

United Kingdom

The proposed new Convention with the United Kingdom was signed in London on July 24, 2001, and was amended by a Protocol, signed in Washington on July 19, 2002. The Convention is accompanied by an exchange of diplomatic notes, also dated July 24, 2001. The Convention, Protocol and notes replace the existing Convention, which was signed in London in 1975 and modified by subsequent notes and protocols. The proposed Convention generally follows the pattern of other recent U.S. treaties and the U.S. Model treaty.

The main impetus for the re-negotiation of the U.S.-U.K. tax treaty was the changes made by the United Kingdom to its domestic laws regarding the treatment of dividends. The dividend article of the current treaty (along with corresponding provisions of the article regarding foreign tax credits) contained unusual rules intended to extend to U.S. shareholders the benefit of the United Kingdom's imputation system for the taxation of dividends, while dividing the cost of that benefit between the United States and the United Kingdom. Changes in the United Kingdom's domestic system for taxing dividends meant that the provisions no longer worked as intended. As a result, the two countries agreed that the treaty would have to be changed.

For the United States, the start of negotiations provided an opportunity to bring the treaty into greater conformity with U.S. treaty policy. The current treaty does not include an effective anti-treaty-shopping provision, and it grants a waiver of the insurance excise tax without the anti-abuse protection that has become standard in other U.S. tax treaties.

There were substantial problems under the information exchange provisions of the current treaty because the United Kingdom could not provide information to the United States unless it too needed the information for its own domestic tax purposes. Because the treaty was negotiated in the late 1970's, it did not include any of the provisions found in modern treaties to reflect the changes in U.S. domestic law made over the last 20 years.

The maximum withholding tax rates on investment income in the proposed Convention are the same or lower than those in the existing Convention. Although the Convention continues the rule under which the country of source may tax direct investment dividends and portfolio dividends at a maximum rate of 5 and 15 percent, respectively, the new Convention provides for a withholding rate of zero percent on certain qualifying dividends. Qualifying dividends include those from certain 80-percent-owned corporate subsidiaries and those derived by pension plans. The new Convention was the first income tax treaty signed by the United States that contains this limit on source-country taxation for intercompany dividends.

Dividends paid by non-taxable conduit entities, such as U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts, and any comparable investment vehicles in the United Kingdom, are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income.

Interest and royalties generally may not be taxed by the source country, as in the present treaty as well as in the U.S. Model Convention and in recent U.S. treaties with OECD countries. However, excess inclusions with respect to residual interests in U.S. real estate mortgage investment conduits may be taxed under U.S. domestic rules, without regard to the rest of the provisions relating to interest, and contingent interest may be taxed by the source country at a maximum rate of 15 percent rate.

The new Convention confirms that the United States generally will not impose the excise tax on insurance policies issued by foreign insurers if the premiums on such policies are derived by a U.K. enterprise. This rule is a continuation of the waiver of the excise tax that applies under the existing Convention, with the addition of an anti-abuse rule that will prevent companies in third countries that do not benefit from a waiver of the insurance excise tax from using a U.K. insurance company as a conduit to avoid imposition of the tax.

The new Convention provides for exclusive residence-country taxation of profits from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft, including profits from the rental of ships and aircraft on a full basis, or on a bareboat basis if the rental income is incidental to profits from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic. All income from the use, maintenance or rental of containers used in international traffic is likewise exempt from source-country taxation under the proposed Convention.

The new Convention carries over from the existing Convention special rules regarding offshore exploration and exploitation activities. These rules were included at the request of the United Kingdom. We were successful in making some technical changes to avoid some unintended consequences of the old rules and in providing a slightly higher threshold for taxation of employees working in the offshore oil sector.

The new Convention contains rules for the taxation of private pensions that differ from those in recent U.S. treaties and the existing Convention. Under the new Convention, the U.S. and the U.K. each will treat pension plans established in the other State the same way as comparable domestic plans are treated. A similar rule applies to earnings and accretions of pension plans and to employer contributions. For instance, if a U.S. citizen contributes to a qualified plan while working in the United States and then establishes residence in the United Kingdom, the new Convention prevents the United Kingdom from taxing the earnings and accretions of the pension plan with respect to that individual. Finally, the new Convention provides for the exclusive residence-based taxation of Social Security payments, which is different from the U.S. Model but consistent with the existing Convention.

The new Convention also deals with income earned by entertainers and sportsmen, corporate directors, government employees and students in a manner consistent with the rules of the U.S. Model. The Convention continues a host-country exemption for income earned by teachers that is found in the existing Convention, although not in the U.S. Model.

The new Convention contains comprehensive rules in its "Limitation on Benefits" article, designed to deny "treaty-shoppers" the benefits of the Convention. This article is essentially the same as the limitation on benefits articles contained in recent U.S. treaties.

At the request of the United Kingdom, the new Convention includes an additional limit on the availability of certain treaty benefits obtained in connection with "conduit arrangements." The conduit arrangement test may apply to deny treaty benefits in certain tax avoidance cases involving the payment of insurance premiums, dividends, interest, royalties, or other income. The conduit test is not contained in the U.S. Model. The test is designed primarily to allow the United Kingdom to combat treaty shopping transactions that would not be caught by the limitation on benefits article of the new Convention. U.K. domestic law does not provide sufficient protection against such abusive transactions, but U.S. domestic law does. Accordingly, the Treasury Department will interpret the term "conduit arrangement" in a manner consistent and co-extensive with existing tax avoidance doctrines and measures under U.S. law.

The new Convention provides relief from double taxation in a manner consistent with the U.S. Model. The new Convention also contains a re-sourcing rule to ensure that a U.S. resident can obtain a U.S. foreign tax credit for U.K. taxes paid when the Convention assigns to the United Kingdom primary taxing rights over an item of gross income. A comparable rule applies for purposes of the U.K. foreign tax credit. Although the U.S. Model does not contain a re-sourcing rule, the existing Convention contains a similar rule.

Like the existing Convention, the new Convention provides a credit for the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax, limited to the amount of the tax attributable to sources within the United Kingdom. The credit allowed by the new Convention, however, is somewhat broader than that allowed under the existing Convention to account for intervening changes in U.S. domestic law.

In addition, the proposed Convention provides for non-discriminatory treatment (i.e., national treatment) by one country to residents and nationals of the other. Also included in the proposed treaty are rules necessary for administering the treaty, including rules for the resolution of disputes under the Convention. The information exchange provisions generally follow the U.S. Model and make clear that the United Kingdom will provide U.S. tax officials such information as is relevant to carry out the provisions of the Convention and the domestic tax laws of the United States. This provision is authorized by a recent change in U.K. law.

Australia

The proposed Protocol to the income tax Convention with Australia was signed in Canberra on September 27, 2001. It was negotiated to bring the current Convention, concluded in 1982, up to date and into closer conformity with current U.S. tax treaty practice, while also incorporating some provisions found in the Australian Model income tax convention.

The most important aspects of the proposed Protocol deal with the taxation of cross-border dividend, royalty and interest payments. The current treaty provides for levels of source-country taxation that are consistent with Australian treaty practice but substantially higher than provided by the U.S. Model. We were able to negotiate substantial reductions with respect to all three categories of payments.

Whereas the existing Convention allows for taxation at source of 15 percent on all dividends, the proposed Protocol provides for a maximum withholding rate of 5 percent on direct dividends meeting a 10 percent ownership threshold, and the elimination of the source-country withholding tax with respect to dividends from certain 80 percent owned corporate subsidiaries. Portfolio dividends will continue to be subject to a 15 percent rate of withholding. Australia imposes a withholding tax on dividends paid out of earnings that have not been subject to full corporate tax ("unfranked dividends"). Therefore, the elimination of the Australian withholding tax on intercompany dividends will provide a direct and immediate benefit to U.S. businesses operating there, and to the U.S. fisc.

Dividends paid by U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income. The U.S. Model provision was adapted to recognize the special investment structure of Australian unit trusts and their participation in the U.S. REIT industry.

The proposed Protocol eliminates withholding on interest payments in two key cases. Interest that is derived by a financial institution which is unrelated to the payor and interest paid to governmental entities are exempt from withholding tax at source. All other types of interest (including interest received by financial institutions in back-to-back loans or their economic equivalent) continue to be subject to withholding at the 10 percent rate prescribed in the existing Convention.

The proposed Protocol also reduces the level of withholding on royalty payments from the 10 percent limit prescribed in the existing Convention to a general 5 percent. Consistent with the U.S. Model, the proposed Protocol also provides that payments for the use of or the right to use any industrial, commercial or scientific equipment shall be taxed as business profits. The existing Convention treats this type of income as a royalty that may be taxed by the source country at a maximum rate of 10 percent. The treatment of royalties was a major concession by Australia, which has never agreed in a treaty to lower its withholding tax on royalties below 10 percent.

The proposed Protocol brings the existing Convention's treatment of income from the operation of ships, aircraft and containers in international traffic closer to that of the U.S. Model convention. The proposed Protocol provides for exclusive residence-country taxation of profits from the rental of ships and aircraft on a bareboat basis when the ship or aircraft is operated by the lessee in international traffic and the rental activity is incidental to the operation of ships or aircraft by the lessor. All income from the use, maintenance or rental of containers used in international traffic is likewise exempt from source-country taxation under the proposed Protocol.

The proposed Protocol clarifies that Australia's tax on capital gains will be a covered tax for purposes of the existing Convention. This closes a gap in the existing Convention and increases the likelihood that U.S. taxpayers subject to capital gains tax in Australia will be able to claim a foreign tax credit with respect to that tax. Generally, the proposed Protocol preserves the existing Convention's tax treatment of capital gains, while incorporating some aspects of Australia's domestic law regarding expatriation. The proposed Protocol also provides rules that coordinate both countries' tax systems with respect to these expatriation rules.

An important modernization that the proposed Protocol brings to the existing Convention is a comprehensive "Limitation on Benefits" Article based closely on the latest U.S. Model. This updated provision is designed to deny "treaty-shoppers" the benefits of the Convention.

The current treaty preserves the U.S. right to tax former citizens whose loss of citizenship had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of tax. The proposed Protocol expands this right to include former long-term residents whose loss of such status had, as one of its principal purposes, the avoidance of tax. Therefore, the United States may fully apply section 877 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Mexico

The proposed Protocol to the income tax Convention with Mexico was signed in Mexico City on November 26, 2002. It was negotiated to bring the existing Convention, concluded in 1992, into closer conformity with current U.S. tax treaty policy. The proposed Protocol was concluded in recognition of the importance of the United States' economic relations with Mexico.

The major feature of the proposed Protocol is its treatment of dividends. As in the agreements with the United Kingdom and Australia, the proposed Protocol reduces to zero the maximum level of withholding tax on certain types of cross-border direct dividends. Under the existing Convention, dividends may be taxed by the country of source at a maximum rate of 5 percent on direct dividends (where the recipient of the dividends owns at least 10 percent of the company paying the dividends) and 10 percent with respect to all other dividends. Pursuant to the proposed Protocol, the withholding tax will be eliminated entirely with respect to dividends from certain 80-percent owned corporate subsidiaries. The other rules will, however, remain in place with respect to those dividends that do not qualify for the elimination of the source-country withholding tax. Dividends paid to qualified pension funds also will be exempt from withholding tax at source.

While Mexico does not currently impose a withholding tax on dividends, it has enacted such a tax and then repealed it since the existing treaty was negotiated in the early 1990's. As a result, locking in the source-country exemption will provide greater certainty to taxpayers regarding the long-term tax environments for their investments in Mexico.

Dividends paid by U.S. regulated investment companies and real estate investment trusts are subject to special rules to prevent the use of these entities to transform what is otherwise high-taxed income into lower-taxed income. The U.S. Model provision was adapted to recognize the special investment structure of Australian unit trusts and their participation in the U.S. REIT industry.

The current treaty preserves the U.S. right to tax former citizens whose loss of citizenship had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of tax. The proposed Protocol expands this right to include former long-term residents whose loss of such status had, as one of its principal purposes, the avoidance of tax. Therefore, the United States may fully apply section 877 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The proposed Protocol incorporates a modernized provision regarding the source of income that will be more effective in eliminating double taxation. Under the new rule, income that may be taxed by one of the parties to the Convention will generally be treated as arising in that country. Thus, the other country generally will exempt that income or provide a credit for the taxes paid with respect to such income.

Treaties under Negotiation

We continue to maintain an active calendar of tax treaty negotiations. We are in active negotiations with Japan, the Netherlands, Iceland, Hungary, Barbados, France, Bangladesh, Canada, and Korea. We have also signed an agreement with Sri Lanka which we expect will be ready for transmittal to the Senate soon. In accordance with the treaty program priorities noted earlier, we continue to seek appropriate opportunities for tax treaty discussions and negotiations with several countries in Latin America and in the developing world generally.

Conclusion

Let me conclude by again thanking the Committee for its continuing interest in the tax treaty program, and the Members and staff for devoting the time and attention to the review of the agreements that are pending before you. We also appreciate the assistance and cooperation of the staffs of this Committee and of the Joint Committee on Taxation in the tax treaty process.

We urge the Committee to take prompt and favorable action on all of the agreements before you today. Such action will strengthen and expand our economic relations with countries that have been significant economic and political partners for many years. As a result, we will improve the climate for cross-border investment, which brings jobs and prosperity to countries that are wise enough to reduce barriers to investment.

KEY POINTS***

If Saddam Hussein were serious about complying with the latest UN resolution, in the 15 weeks since 1441 passed on November 8th Iraq would have:
- Submitted a full, accurate, and complete declaration, and destroyed all prohibited materials;
- Accounted for all unaccounted-for weapons;
- Turned over and destroyed the mobile bio-weapons labs, all illegal missiles, missile parts, testing equipment, and unmanned aerial vehicles with ranges greater than 150 km;
- Encouraged scientists to be interviewed without minders, inside or outside of Iraq;
- Allowed unimpeded aerial reconnaissance; and
- Turned over all documents requested by inspectors.

Nothing less that full and immediate disarmament is required of the regime by UNSCR 1441. Yet Saddam continues to resist full and immediate cooperation - even with respect to the missiles.

The missiles are just the tip of the iceberg of Iraq's illegal arsenal. Iraq has not accounted for:
- Raw materials sufficient to produce:
26,000 liters of anthrax
38,000 liters of botulinum toxin; and 5500 liters of aflatoxin, a carcinogen.
- 1.5 tons of VX, a powerful nerve agent.
- Nearly 30,000 empty munitions that could be filled with chemical agents.
- 550 artillery shells filled with mustard agent;

It is not surprising that Saddam Hussein is willing to sacrifice a few illegal weapons to save many other illegal weapons.Saddam Hussein has a long history of complying with inspectors on small, technical issues, only to continue to cheat inspectors on a large scale. His tactical concessions are designed to buy time, ease the pressure on his regime, split the international community, and erode fully and peacefully. If it does not, we are prepared to disarm Iraq by force.

Vote Set On Ending Filibuster On Judge (NYTimes)

By THE NEW YORK TIMES

The New York Times, March 05, 2003

WASHINGTON, March 4 - Senate Republicans today set a vote for Thursday on whether to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked consideration of President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court seat.

No one expects the effort to end the filibuster to succeed. But calling for the vote represents an escalation in tactics as Republicans say they believe they are gaining political support among Hispanic voters.

"This will make it more clear that the Democrats are blocking the Estrada nomination," said a senior Republican strategist.

The Senate majority leader, Bill Frist, Republican of Tennessee, said that he was filing a motion to end what he called a "cavalier filibuster" by the Democrats. But Dr. Frist acknowledged the unlikelihood that the Republicans would be able to win Thursday's vote.

"I want to make it very clear that that is the beginning of the battle," Dr. Frist told reporters.

While the 51 Republicans in the Senate are a majority, enough to confirm Mr. Estrada in a straight up-or-down vote, they would need 60 votes to end the filibuster. Currently, only four Democrats have indicated they will vote with the Republicans, leaving them five votes short.

GOP To Force An Estrada Filibuster Vote (AP)

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

The Associated Press, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON - After more than three weeks of debate, Republicans decided Tuesday to try to break the Democratic filibuster of Miguel Estrada's nomination to a federal appeals court before moving the Senate on to other legislative business.

Democrats say the GOP will lose the Thursday vote to end the filibuster, but Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., promised to keep demanding such votes until Estrada gets a confirmation vote on his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said. "I'm going to use everything I possibly can, every tool I possibly can. This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote."

If Republicans don't gain the 60 votes they need on Thursday and in other Estrada votes, the Senate will likely move on to other business instead of debating Estrada every day, although the nomination will not be withdrawn, GOP senators said.

"That is the beginning of the battle," Frist said. "This is not going to go away not until we get an up or down vote."

Democrats insist they will not allow a final vote on Estrada until the Washington appellate lawyer answers more of their questions in a public hearing, or the White House releases Estrada's working papers from his time at the Justice Department solicitor general's office. Republicans have refused those requests.

Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said Democrats can hold out as long as Republicans can.

"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," Daschle said. "That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate."

Only four Democrats have said publicly that they would vote against continuing a filibuster - Sens. Zell Miller of Georgia, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and John Breaux of Louisiana - leaving Republicans short of the 60 votes they need to close off debate and get a final confirmation vote.

The GOP strategy is to make Democratic senators go on the record in supporting the Estrada filibuster, said GOP caucus chairman Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania.

"It give us and the folks across America a picture of where the problem is," Santorum said. "Maybe the reaction after this vote will elicit some sort of change in their understanding."

Democrats have been getting pressure from conservative Hispanic groups to confirm Estrada, who would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"There's no question, once we do so many cloture votes, we'll have to double track it to get the work of the Senate done," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said.

Democrats say their votes against an Estrada confirmation are solid and have been calling on Republicans to end the debate. "We've got to move on to these other issues and I think it's time to do that," Daschle said.

There are 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent in the Senate.

Senate Republicans Set Showdown Vote On Estrada (Reuters)

Reuters, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Senate Republicans on Tuesday scheduled what may be the first of many showdown votes on President Bush's stalled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

;Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.

Republicans said they would hold as many "cloture votes" as needed in coming weeks to end debate and clear the way for a confirmation vote on the 41-year-old Estrada.

To succeed on cloture, Republicans would need the support of 60 of the chamber's 100 senators. A top Democratic aide said Republicans would fall at least three short on Thursday.

Republicans said they believed cloture votes would crank up pressure on Democrats to eventually break ranks and permit confirmation.

"It may be five weeks, it may be eight weeks, it may be two months, it may be three or four months," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, a Tennessee Republican.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, a South Dakota Democrat, said: "We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes. I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position."

Democrats oppose Estrada, complaining that he refused to answer a number of questions at a confirmation hearing last year, making him a "stealth candidate."

They also charge that Estrada, whose nomination has drawn a split response from the Hispanic community, is part of Bush's effort to pack the court with right-wing ideologues.

Bush and fellow Republicans contend that the Honduran-born, Harvard-educated Estrada deserves to be confirmed, noting the American Bar Association gave him its highest rating.

The battle is seen as a possible dress rehearsal for Bush's first U.S. Supreme Court nominee, who could be Estrada, if he wins the appeals court seat.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit is considered the nation's second most powerful court since it often resolves disputes between the executive and legislative branches of government and rules on the constitutionality of federal laws and regulations.

Republicans To File Cloture On Estrada Nomination Tuesday Afternoon (Roll Call)

By Paul Kane

Roll Call, March 05, 2003

Ending weeks of internal debate, Senate Republican leaders have decided to file cloture on the stalled judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada, setting up the first in a series of votes Thursday in their effort to break the Democratic filibuster.

Aides said the full Republican Conference was expected to sign off on the strategy at its weekly policy luncheon Tuesday unless there was a "dramatic reversal" in the tide of opinion.

Another Republican source, however, cautioned that there was a large contingent within the Conference opposed to filling cloture, a bloc that could provide that dramatic sway and reverse the movement toward cloture.

Emerging from a meeting of GOP chairmen and leaders Monday night, Conference Chairman Rick Santorum (Pa.) declined to specify what decisions had been made, but indicated that an announcement of their strategy was expected after the luncheon.

One GOP aide indicated that the new tactic calls for Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) to file cloture Tuesday afternoon, leading to the Thursday vote. The aide said there is no expectation of winning the 60 votes needed to break the filibuster, but that Frist would continue to force "as many cloture votes as is necessary to win confirmation."

"They'll be frequent and they'll be prominent," the aide said.

With 45 Democrats dug in on their opposition to Estrada, Republicans had been divided over how to proceed with the battle over President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Santorum and Majority Whip Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) had been the leading opponents of filing cloture, warning that it would set a bad institutional precedent of requiring 60 votes for nominees and could doom Estrada's hopes for confirmation by locking in Democrats in conservative-leaning states.

But others, including Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.) and Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), had been pushing for cloture, arguing that putting Democrats officially on the record in support of the filibuster would allow outside conservative interest groups to heighten the pressure on them.

The Democrats' top vote counter, Minority Whip Harry Reid (Nev.), said there may be a couple of Democrats who are wavering on Estrada, but there was no doubt he had the minimum of 41 votes needed to block a vote, no matter how many cloture votes Republicans call.

"We have 41, that's all we care about," Reid said.

So far, Democratic Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) have announced their support for Estrada.

GOP Files For Vote On Estrada (WTimes)

By Amy Fagan

The Washington Times, March 5, 2003

Senate Republican leaders yesterday made the first move to cut off debate on federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada by filing for "cloture" to force a final vote on his nomination.

"We're just beginning the fight," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, Tennessee Republican. "This is not going to go away - not until we get an up-or-down vote."

Senators will vote tomorrow on the cloture motion, which will limit debate and force a vote on the nomination.

Republicans now have 55 of the needed 60 votes on cloture, including those of four Democrats, but have targeted a handful of other Democrats, hoping to get them to break ranks with their party and end the filibuster.

Republicans say it is time for the Democrats to go on record either for or against the 41-year-old Honduran-born lawyer, who was nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Democrats have been preventing a vote on the nomination as debate continued since Feb 5.

"We've had a debate now; now it's time to see who's going to vote where," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican. "Then the American people are going to have to speak to those senators."

Democrats are confident they have the 41 votes needed to continue a filibuster by defeating this cloture motion, as well as any others Republicans may file later.

"We are more than ready to have one or more votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat.

If the cloture motion fails, Republicans plan to keep the Estrada nomination on the floor for as long as it takes to get a vote, setting it aside occasionally to go to other Senate business. They also plan additional cloture votes.

Mr. Frist said he will use "every tool that I possibly can" to get a final vote.

A Senate Republican leadership aide said Republicans are hopeful that Democratic Sens. Blanche Lincoln of Arkansas and Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia will join them in stopping a filibuster tomorrow.

Mr. Byrd has said he would vote with the Democrats against cloture on Mr. Estrada's nomination. But Republican aides say they are making progress with Mr. Byrd, who is set to meet the lawyer on Friday.

Mrs. Lincoln did not say yesterday how she would vote on cloture, repeating only that she would like more information from Mr. Estrada. But a Democratic aide has said his party is not counting on Mrs. Lincoln to support the filibuster.

Sen. Bob Graham, Florida Democrat, also is undecided - both on a cloture vote and ultimate support for Mr. Estrada's nomination. His office said late yesterday that no decision had been made.

Several Democrats who have been on Republicans' target list said yesterday that they plan to support the filibuster. Those include Sens. Evan Bayh of Indiana; Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico; Daniel K. Inouye and Daniel K. Akaka, both of Hawaii; Thomas R. Carper of Delaware; Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina and Mark Pryor of Arkansas.

Mr. Hollings would not say whether he would vote for subsequent cloture votes to keep the filibuster going.

"Let's see what they do," he said, referring to Republicans.

Others such as Mr. Carper and Mr. Pryor said they would continue to vote against cloture.

The Democrats who have said they will vote with the 51 Republicans in favor of cloture are John B. Breaux of Louisiana, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and Zell Miller of Georgia.

The White House has repeatedly invited Democrats seeking more information to meet with Mr. Estrada, and several have done so. The latest letter from the White House, sent Feb. 27, also encouraged them to submit written questions to Mr. Estrada and talk to his former employers.

As of yesterday, only Mr. Byrd had requested a meeting with Mr. Estrada and no senators had submitted more questions.

"The Senate Democrats have repeatedly said they need more information, yet they have repeatedly ignored or declined these offers," White House spokesman Ashley Snee said.

The Senate Republican leadership aide said that if Democrats continue to stick together to support the filibuster, they "will hear about Miguel Estrada for the next 18 months until November 2004."

Mr. Daschle said yesterday that the cloture vote tomorrow "doesn't change anything," because "the only thing that would change the circumstances we currently face is if Mr. Estrada becomes more cooperative."

Democratic leaders are demanding that the administration release memos Mr. Estrada wrote while working in the solicitor general's office - a request the administration has denied, with the backing of every living solicitor-general of both parties.

But Mr. Hatch said the cloture vote will establish on record that for the first time there is a "true filibuster against a circuit court nominee" - an accusation many Democrats have rejected.

Mr. Frist noted that Republicans have tried 17 times to get unanimous consent to have a vote, but Democrats have objected. He also noted that 72 newspaper editorials across the country support Mr. Estrada and/or oppose the Democratic filibuster, while just 10 support the filibuster.

The Senate is set to consider an arms control treaty with Russia today, setting aside the Estrada nomination temporarily.

Frist Invokes Cloture Vote Over Estrada (The Hill)

By Hans Nichols

The Hill, March 5, 2003

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) sought a showdown yesterday over President Bush's embattled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

But the Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.

" We are just beginning to fight," Frist vowed in filing what could well prove to be several cloture petitions aimed at cutting off a three-week-old Democratic filibuster.

" The only response from the other side of the aisle has been a cavalier filibuster. That's unacceptable," said Frist. "This is not going to go away, until we get an up and down vote."

" We have had over 85 hours of active debate, 17 unanimous consent requests," he added.

The Republicans leader promised to keep up the fight no matter how long it might take. "Estrada will not go away," he said.

Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Pa.), the GOP conference chairman, acknowledged that the cloture petition, which calls for a vote on Thursday, represents a new line of attack.

" Correct. We are changing strategies," he said.

For their part, the Democrats braced for an extended battle, voicing confidence that they have the votes to sustain their filibuster. A minimum of 60 votes - three-fifths of the Senate- is needed to cut off debate.

" We'll hold enough of our guys," said Sen. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.) "We've told our people they need to be ready for the long haul. It's a matter of principle," he added.

Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.), the minority leader, reiterated, "nobody should be above the law."

" We have to find out who is going to vote which way," said Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) promising to put Democrats on record for denying the first Hispanic nominee to the federal circuit a straight up or down vote.

Republicans observed that only one Democrat has taken the White House's offer to meet with the embattled nominee. Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W. Virginia) is scheduled to meet with him on Friday, a GOP leadership aide said.

" I will vote against Estrada unless he answers questions about the broad views of the Constitution...," said Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.).

" I am an odd man out as a Democrat. I don't think they should have to provide the memorandum," said Biden claiming that he's been too busy with his duties on the Foreign Relations Committee in regards to Iraq to meet with the nominee. Some Democrats had been pressing the nominee to provide a memo on his opinions while serving in the solicitor general's office during the Clinton years.

" Looking at Estrada and what he's told or won't tell, there's no way I would vote for him," said Sen. Jim Jeffords (I-Vt.). However, he conceded that he had not acted on the administration's offer to meet with the nominee because "it would just be a waste of time... Estrada is going to have to find another job."

Despite the apparent setback, Republicans exuded confidence about their new line of attack, with Frist referring to the "mounds of editorial support" claiming that 72 out of a total of 82 editorials favored confirmation.

With both sides ratcheting up their rhetoric, the number of possible outcomes dwindled, as did chances of a compromise.

Santorum said: "We are trying to listen to the better angels of the some of the natures of our Democrat colleagues who can hopefully see if this tactic being waged against us and Miguel Estrada today sets a precedent that could be dangerous in future Congresses."

"We're really in danger of a constitutional crisis," said Hatch as he and other senior Republicans spoke to reporters after emerging from their Tuesday lunch

Hatch added: "There has never been a judicial nominee stopped except for Abe Fortas to the Supreme Court and I'll say again that was a bi-partisan filibuster."

"Fighting and losing less is desirable than fighting and winning but not fighting at all and losing is not acceptable," said Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), adding: "Some of our base has said over the years that we didn't go the extra mile to fight the fight. It would be difficult for them to argue that we haven't on this one."

GOP Senators Move To Force Vote On Estrada (WPost)

By Helen Dewar

The Washington Post, March 05, 2003

Senate Republicans moved yesterday to force a showdown they were likely to lose on ending the month-long Democratic filibuster against the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada -- a step enabling them to start scheduling other business.

While Republicans vowed to continue pressing for a vote to approve the highly contested nomination, their decision to combine the debate with action on other matters appeared likely to take some of the spotlight off the struggle over Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

GOP leaders said the Senate will take up a U.S.-Russia treaty on arms reduction today and may schedule debate and votes next week on a bill that would ban a late-term procedure opponents call "partial birth" abortion. Action would be scheduled for the following week on the budget for fiscal 2004. They said the Senate may also soon take up legislation to help faith-based charities, one of President Bush's priorities.

Republicans said they will return repeatedly to the Estrada nomination and predicted they would eventually prevail. But Democrats showed no signs of relenting and predicted the Republicans would ultimately fail.

Democrats said they will have more than enough votes to prevail in Thursday's "cloture" vote to end the filibuster. Republicans need 60 votes to shut off debate and force a vote on Estrada. They have picked up the votes of four Democrats -- Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) -- but remain at least three or four votes short of 60, according to Democratic nose-counters.

While conceding they are likely to lose Thursday, Republicans contended the vote will be useful in targeting persuadable senators and building pressure for action by making the case that Democrats are obstructing action.

Republicans said they will keep holding cloture votes "for as long as it takes," said Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.). "This is not going to go away until we get an up-or-down vote," he added.

But Democrats, who had been pushing unsuccessfully to get the Republicans to end the Estrada debate and move to other business, claimed that their votes to continue the filibuster are solid.

"I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position," said Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.).

Democrats say they will allow a simple-majority vote -- which presumably would confirm Estrada's nomination -- only if he would answer questions more fully about his legal views before the Judiciary Committee, and if the administration would release copies of memos he wrote while working for the solicitor general's office in the Justice Department during the 1990s. Without this information, Democrats say, the Senate cannot adequately carry out its advise-and-consent duties under the Constitution.

Republicans defend the 41-year-old Honduran-born, Harvard-educated lawyer as highly qualified. They say he has answered questions as fully as many other nominees who have moved easily through the Senate. They accuse the Democrats of trying to scuttle the nomination because Estrada is a conservative.

GOP Senators Want Vote On Judge Choice (AJC)

By JASON EMBRY

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON -- Seeking to end a standoff with Democrats, Republicans will call for a vote Thursday to end debate over nominating Miguel Estrada to a federal judgeship.

President Bush has tapped Estrada to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, a powerful court that often rules on federal disputes. The vote on a parliamentary procedure called "cloture" would force Democrats to confirm whether they oppose or favor the nomination, which is supported by some Latino groups.

Estrada has enough support to get 51 votes for the nomination. But his backers do not appear to have the 60 votes needed to stop what has amounted to a filibuster of his nomination by Democrats who say he has not been forthcoming about his views.

Approval of a motion for cloture would end debate and bring the issue to a vote, but it must receive at least 60 votes to pass. So far, those declaring they favor Estrada's nomination are the 51 Republicans in the 100-member Senate and four Democrats, among them Georgia's Zell Miller.

Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) said a cloture vote will show who's blocking the nomination.

"Some [Democrats] are sitting back in their offices saying, 'I'm not filibustering, I'm not preventing this nomination from going forward,'" said Cornyn, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "Now senators are going to be held accountable."

Republicans could hold more cloture votes if, as expected, Thursday's fails.

"We ought to have a cloture vote every day from now on," said Sen. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.).

GOP Poll: Estrada Opposition Could Cost Dems (The Hill)

By Sarita Chourey

The Hill, March 5, 2003

The Democratic Party could pay a price for Senate Democrats' effort to block President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada for a federal judgeship, according to an internal GOP poll.

The poll, which questioned 1,000 registered voters about the impact of the nomination on Senate Democratic candidates, found that 42 percent of respondents have a less favorable view of Democratic candidates while only 32 percent had a favorable view.

Further evidence of the negative effect of the Democratic filibuster on its own party came from the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), a traditionally Democratic organization, which has become an ally of Republican Hispanic groups backing Estrada.

But LULAC is in a quandary. Last week, several members of the all-Democratic Congressional Hispanic Caucus expressed their irritation with the organization's pro-Estrada stance and requested that LULAC's board address their concerns.

"LULAC came out fairly early in support of Mr. Estrada," said Rep. Charlie Gonzalez (D-Texas). "We respect that, but we disagree. The problem is that LULAC has allowed itself to be used to legitimize the illegitimate."

He added, "LULAC needs to look carefully and deeply as to whether or not they're being used as tools. We've worked with them, of course. I can't believe they've allowed themselves to be aligned with certain organizations."

LULAC has held two joint press conferences with GOP groups like the Latino Coalition, which criticized the Hispanic Caucus for not supporting Estrada.

Even though LULAC did not directly criticize the Hispanic Caucus, some Senate Republicans such as Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Trent Lott (R-Miss.) accused members of the Hispanic Caucus of being anti-Hispanic, and turning their backs on their own community.

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, compared the Hispanic Caucus to a "lioness eating its cub."

Gonzalez dismissed such criticism. "Trent Lott? I mean, please," he remarked.

Brian Wilkes, LULAC's national executive director, played down speculation that his organization is shifting its allegiance to the Democratic Party, and said he plans to issue a release this week criticizing Senate Republicans for their statements against the Hispanic Caucus.

" We may have been unwittingly caught up in a play for the Republican vote," Wilkes said. He expressed regret at attending briefings where the Hispanic Caucus was criticized.

" Unfortunately, Republicans have taken the qualifications away from Miguel Estrada and tried to push a wedge between the Hispanic community and the Democratic Party," he said. "We never signed up for that."

Despite the organization's apparent flip-flop, Wilkes praised President Bush for his outreach to Hispanic voters. He said Hispanic Democrats do have reason to worry about their base gravitating toward the GOP.

Asked about his views on Bush, Wilkes replied: "There is a sense that Bush, unlike his predecessor, has been reaching out to Hispanics. [But] we definitely disagree with his stance on affirmative action. We are concerned about his tax package. He seems to be tilting his economic program toward the more affluent, and that doesn't help our community."

While LULAC is going to some length to avoid an open breach with the Democrats, it is not budging from its position that Estrada should be confirmed.

" We've evaluated his record, he's got a very strong academic record," said Wilkes, who remarked that Estrada worked in the solicitor general's office under President Clinton and was once editor of the Columbia Law Review.

Hispanic Democrats say their constituents do not necessarily favor Estrada. Rep. Gonzalez added that his local LULAC chapter does not support Estrada.

The Democrats continue to hammer the message that Estrada is wrong for the job. "I was there when he came before the caucus and refused to answer a question," said Rep. Jose Serrano (D-N.Y.). "I don't expect George Bush to nominate a liberal, but I expect [the nomination] to be some kind of sensible person."

The Political Life (The Hill)

Column by Dick Morris

The Hill, March 5, 2003

The whole (Hispanic) world is watching

The Democrats are talking themselves to death in their filibuster against the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the federal bench. The more they talk, the more it is clear that they have nothing to say and no reason to block the nomination of one of the few Hispanics to be nominated to the senior levels of our judiciary.

There is no ethical problem here. No rash statements. No imputed bias. Not even any clear indication of a strong right wing or left wing political philosophy. The burden of the Democratic argument seems to be that Estrada has not ruled, in advance, on all the cases that will come before him. What many would take as a refreshing lack of prejudice and the indication of an open mind, the Democrats assume is evidence of a great conspiracy of silence.

Liberals see the Estrada filibuster as providing a precedent for a new level of disclosure for all nominees to the federal bench. Rather than nominate and confirm good people and let them decide cases, the Democrats are now asking for clear commitments on each area of judicial decision-making that a new judge is likely to confront. The independence of the judiciary is at stake in this new assertion of legislative prerogative.

But the Democrats should realize that they have chosen a terrible target for their new level of scrutiny. By filibustering an Hispanic nominee and going to such lengths to block his confirmation, even when there is no clear reason to do so, they are asking the Hispanic voters to turn against them in droves.

For his part, Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) is skillfully calling the Democratic bluff by requiring them to talk out the filibuster. No gentleman filibuster this time. Lengthy sessions and constant talk animate this effort to block Estrada. Frist should keep the Senate in session around the clock and on weekends to make the Democrats carry their opposition to a Hispanic judge to absurd lengths.

If Frist continues his policy of making the Democrats act out their filibusters by actually talking on the floor endlessly, he may well succeed in breaking the filibuster as a weapon. He may accomplish the ultimate goal of a majority leader - empower the majority and end the 60-vote requirement to pass a bill in the Senate.

How long could the South have filibustered civil rights if the talk-a-thon were covered by cable TV as this filibuster is? Frist is making the Democrats look like anti-Hispanic bigots, all the more because they have no real basis for dissing Estrada.

Remember the stakes, folks. The Hispanic population grew by 4.7 percent last year, while blacks expanded by 1.5 percent and whites by a paltry 0.3 percent. Hispanics cast 6 percent of the vote in 1990 and 12 percent in 2000. If their numbers expand at the current pace, they will be up to 18 percent in 2010 and 24 percent in 2020. With one-third of Hispanics voting Republican, they are the jump ball in American politics. As this vote goes, so goes the future.

Republicans got off on the wrong foot by listening to the likes of Pat Buchanan and other Nativists. Their English-only and anti-immigration initiatives stopped them from appealing to newly arrived Hispanic voters. But President Bush has changed all that. Estrada symbolizes the transition. If Bush takes it the next step and embraces some of Mexican President Vicente Fox's ideas about earned amnesty for Mexican-Americans, he can truly bring Hispanics into the Republican fold for decades to come.

Estrada is no Clarence Thomas, so clearly out of step with his voters as to make his nomination suspect. And Hispanics are not blacks, so committed to the Democratic Party that it would take an act of genocide to breach their amity. Hispanics are up for grabs and each day of the filibuster drives them further toward the GOP.

HEADLINE: US-JUDGE REPUBLICANS MOVE TO BREAK FILIBUSTER ON ESTRADA VOTE
BODY:
Washington, Mar 4 (EFE).- Senate Republicans on Tuesday announced plans to overcome the filibuster on President George W. Bush's nomination of Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada to a federal court before moving forward.

The vote to confirm Estrada to a federal appeals court in the District of Columbia has been blocked for nearly a month, after Democrats made good on a threat to carry out a filibuster unless the Honduran-born lawyer responded to more of their questions. In a press conference Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Rep.-Tenn.) and Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (Rep.-Utah) said Republicans plan to vote Thursday to end the filibuster, a lengthy speechmaking tactic traditionally employed by the minority party to extend a debate.

Republicans need 60 votes to end the debate and vote on Estrada's confirmation. The Senate is currently made up of 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent, who votes with the Democrats.

"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said

"This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote," he said, adding that Republicans have been "reasonable and patient" but are eager to end the debate.

Bush nominated Estrada in May 2001 to the U.S. District of Columbia Court of Appeals, the second-highest tribunal after the Supreme Court, along with some 30 other candidates to serve as judges in different federal courts.

For their part, Democrats have pledged to continue pressuring Estrada to speak on issues he refused to touch during his interview with congressional leaders before voting on his confirmation, maintaining Republicans do not have the votes needed to break the filibuster.

"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (Dem.-S.D.)

"That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate," he added.

Estrada has never served as a judge and, despite being Latino, is opposed by most Hispanic organizations for what they say is his extreme conservatism.

Vote Set On Ending Filibuster On Judge (NYTimes)

By THE NEW YORK TIMES

The New York Times, March 05, 2003

WASHINGTON, March 4 - Senate Republicans today set a vote for Thursday on whether to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked consideration of President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court seat.

No one expects the effort to end the filibuster to succeed. But calling for the vote represents an escalation in tactics as Republicans say they believe they are gaining political support among Hispanic voters.

"This will make it more clear that the Democrats are blocking the Estrada nomination," said a senior Republican strategist.

The Senate majority leader, Bill Frist, Republican of Tennessee, said that he was filing a motion to end what he called a "cavalier filibuster" by the Democrats. But Dr. Frist acknowledged the unlikelihood that the Republicans would be able to win Thursday's vote.

"I want to make it very clear that that is the beginning of the battle," Dr. Frist told reporters.

While the 51 Republicans in the Senate are a majority, enough to confirm Mr. Estrada in a straight up-or-down vote, they would need 60 votes to end the filibuster. Currently, only four Democrats have indicated they will vote with the Republicans, leaving them five votes short.

GOP To Force An Estrada Filibuster Vote (AP)

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

The Associated Press, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON - After more than three weeks of debate, Republicans decided Tuesday to try to break the Democratic filibuster of Miguel Estrada's nomination to a federal appeals court before moving the Senate on to other legislative business.

Democrats say the GOP will lose the Thursday vote to end the filibuster, but Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., promised to keep demanding such votes until Estrada gets a confirmation vote on his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said. "I'm going to use everything I possibly can, every tool I possibly can. This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote."

If Republicans don't gain the 60 votes they need on Thursday and in other Estrada votes, the Senate will likely move on to other business instead of debating Estrada every day, although the nomination will not be withdrawn, GOP senators said.

"That is the beginning of the battle," Frist said. "This is not going to go away not until we get an up or down vote."

Democrats insist they will not allow a final vote on Estrada until the Washington appellate lawyer answers more of their questions in a public hearing, or the White House releases Estrada's working papers from his time at the Justice Department solicitor general's office. Republicans have refused those requests.

Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said Democrats can hold out as long as Republicans can.

"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," Daschle said. "That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate."

Only four Democrats have said publicly that they would vote against continuing a filibuster - Sens. Zell Miller of Georgia, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and John Breaux of Louisiana - leaving Republicans short of the 60 votes they need to close off debate and get a final confirmation vote.

The GOP strategy is to make Democratic senators go on the record in supporting the Estrada filibuster, said GOP caucus chairman Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania.

"It give us and the folks across America a picture of where the problem is," Santorum said. "Maybe the reaction after this vote will elicit some sort of change in their understanding."

Democrats have been getting pressure from conservative Hispanic groups to confirm Estrada, who would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"There's no question, once we do so many cloture votes, we'll have to double track it to get the work of the Senate done," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said.

Democrats say their votes against an Estrada confirmation are solid and have been calling on Republicans to end the debate. "We've got to move on to these other issues and I think it's time to do that," Daschle said.

There are 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent in the Senate.

Senate Republicans Set Showdown Vote On Estrada (Reuters)

Reuters, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Senate Republicans on Tuesday scheduled what may be the first of many showdown votes on President Bush's stalled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.

Republicans said they would hold as many "cloture votes" as needed in coming weeks to end debate and clear the way for a confirmation vote on the 41-year-old Estrada.

To succeed on cloture, Republicans would need the support of 60 of the chamber's 100 senators. A top Democratic aide said Republicans would fall at least three short on Thursday.

Republicans said they believed cloture votes would crank up pressure on Democrats to eventually break ranks and permit confirmation.

"It may be five weeks, it may be eight weeks, it may be two months, it may be three or four months," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, a Tennessee Republican.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, a South Dakota Democrat, said: "We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes. I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position."

Democrats oppose Estrada, complaining that he refused to answer a number of questions at a confirmation hearing last year, making him a "stealth candidate."

They also charge that Estrada, whose nomination has drawn a split response from the Hispanic community, is part of Bush's effort to pack the court with right-wing ideologues.

Bush and fellow Republicans contend that the Honduran-born, Harvard-educated Estrada deserves to be confirmed, noting the American Bar Association gave him its highest rating.

The battle is seen as a possible dress rehearsal for Bush's first U.S. Supreme Court nominee, who could be Estrada, if he wins the appeals court seat.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit is considered the nation's second most powerful court since it often resolves disputes between the executive and legislative branches of government and rules on the constitutionality of federal laws and regulations.

Republicans To File Cloture On Estrada Nomination Tuesday Afternoon (Roll Call)

By Paul Kane

Roll Call, March 05, 2003

Ending weeks of internal debate, Senate Republican leaders have decided to file cloture on the stalled judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada, setting up the first in a series of votes Thursday in their effort to break the Democratic filibuster.

Aides said the full Republican Conference was expected to sign off on the strategy at its weekly policy luncheon Tuesday unless there was a "dramatic reversal" in the tide of opinion.

Another Republican source, however, cautioned that there was a large contingent within the Conference opposed to filling cloture, a bloc that could provide that dramatic sway and reverse the movement toward cloture.

Emerging from a meeting of GOP chairmen and leaders Monday night, Conference Chairman Rick Santorum (Pa.) declined to specify what decisions had been made, but indicated that an announcement of their strategy was expected after the luncheon.

One GOP aide indicated that the new tactic calls for Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) to file cloture Tuesday afternoon, leading to the Thursday vote. The aide said there is no expectation of winning the 60 votes needed to break the filibuster, but that Frist would continue to force "as many cloture votes as is necessary to win confirmation."

"They'll be frequent and they'll be prominent," the aide said.

With 45 Democrats dug in on their opposition to Estrada, Republicans had been divided over how to proceed with the battle over President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Santorum and Majority Whip Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) had been the leading opponents of filing cloture, warning that it would set a bad institutional precedent of requiring 60 votes for nominees and could doom Estrada's hopes for confirmation by locking in Democrats in conservative-leaning states.

But others, including Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.) and Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), had been pushing for cloture, arguing that putting Democrats officially on the record in support of the filibuster would allow outside conservative interest groups to heighten the pressure on them.

The Democrats' top vote counter, Minority Whip Harry Reid (Nev.), said there may be a couple of Democrats who are wavering on Estrada, but there was no doubt he had the minimum of 41 votes needed to block a vote, no matter how many cloture votes Republicans call.

"We have 41, that's all we care about," Reid said.

So far, Democratic Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) have announced their support for Estrada.

GOP Files For Vote On Estrada (WTimes)

By Amy Fagan

The Washington Times, March 5, 2003

Senate Republican leaders yesterday made the first move to cut off debate on federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada by filing for "cloture" to force a final vote on his nomination.

"We're just beginning the fight," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, Tennessee Republican. "This is not going to go away - not until we get an up-or-down vote."

Senators will vote tomorrow on the cloture motion, which will limit debate and force a vote on the nomination.

Republicans now have 55 of the needed 60 votes on cloture, including those of four Democrats, but have targeted a handful of other Democrats, hoping to get them to break ranks with their party and end the filibuster.

Republicans say it is time for the Democrats to go on record either for or against the 41-year-old Honduran-born lawyer, who was nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Democrats have been preventing a vote on the nomination as debate continued since Feb 5.

"We've had a debate now; now it's time to see who's going to vote where," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican. "Then the American people are going to have to speak to those senators."

Democrats are confident they have the 41 votes needed to continue a filibuster by defeating this cloture motion, as well as any others Republicans may file later.

"We are more than ready to have one or more votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat.

If the cloture motion fails, Republicans plan to keep the Estrada nomination on the floor for as long as it takes to get a vote, setting it aside occasionally to go to other Senate business. They also plan additional cloture votes.

Mr. Frist said he will use "every tool that I possibly can" to get a final vote.

A Senate Republican leadership aide said Republicans are hopeful that Democratic Sens. Blanche Lincoln of Arkansas and Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia will join them in stopping a filibuster tomorrow.

Mr. Byrd has said he would vote with the Democrats against cloture on Mr. Estrada's nomination. But Republican aides say they are making progress with Mr. Byrd, who is set to meet the lawyer on Friday.

Mrs. Lincoln did not say yesterday how she would vote on cloture, repeating only that she would like more information from Mr. Estrada. But a Democratic aide has said his party is not counting on Mrs. Lincoln to support the filibuster.

Sen. Bob Graham, Florida Democrat, also is undecided - both on a cloture vote and ultimate support for Mr. Estrada's nomination. His office said late yesterday that no decision had been made.

Several Democrats who have been on Republicans' target list said yesterday that they plan to support the filibuster. Those include Sens. Evan Bayh of Indiana; Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico; Daniel K. Inouye and Daniel K. Akaka, both of Hawaii; Thomas R. Carper of Delaware; Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina and Mark Pryor of Arkansas.

Mr. Hollings would not say whether he would vote for subsequent cloture votes to keep the filibuster going.

"Let's see what they do," he said, referring to Republicans.

Others such as Mr. Carper and Mr. Pryor said they would continue to vote against cloture.

The Democrats who have said they will vote with the 51 Republicans in favor of cloture are John B. Breaux of Louisiana, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and Zell Miller of Georgia.

The White House has repeatedly invited Democrats seeking more information to meet with Mr. Estrada, and several have done so. The latest letter from the White House, sent Feb. 27, also encouraged them to submit written questions to Mr. Estrada and talk to his former employers.

As of yesterday, only Mr. Byrd had requested a meeting with Mr. Estrada and no senators had submitted more questions.

"The Senate Democrats have repeatedly said they need more information, yet they have repeatedly ignored or declined these offers," White House spokesman Ashley Snee said.

The Senate Republican leadership aide said that if Democrats continue to stick together to support the filibuster, they "will hear about Miguel Estrada for the next 18 months until November 2004."

Mr. Daschle said yesterday that the cloture vote tomorrow "doesn't change anything," because "the only thing that would change the circumstances we currently face is if Mr. Estrada becomes more cooperative."

Democratic leaders are demanding that the administration release memos Mr. Estrada wrote while working in the solicitor general's office - a request the administration has denied, with the backing of every living solicitor-general of both parties.

But Mr. Hatch said the cloture vote will establish on record that for the first time there is a "true filibuster against a circuit court nominee" - an accusation many Democrats have rejected.

Mr. Frist noted that Republicans have tried 17 times to get unanimous consent to have a vote, but Democrats have objected. He also noted that 72 newspaper editorials across the country support Mr. Estrada and/or oppose the Democratic filibuster, while just 10 support the filibuster.

The Senate is set to consider an arms control treaty with Russia today, setting aside the Estrada nomination temporarily.

Frist Invokes Cloture Vote Over Estrada (The Hill)

By Hans Nichols

The Hill, March 5, 2003

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) sought a showdown yesterday over President Bush's embattled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

But the Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.

" We are just beginning to fight," Frist vowed in filing what could well prove to be several cloture petitions aimed at cutting off a three-week-old Democratic filibuster.

" The only response from the other side of the aisle has been a cavalier filibuster. That's unacceptable," said Frist. "This is not going to go away, until we get an up and down vote."

" We have had over 85 hours of active debate, 17 unanimous consent requests," he added.

The Republicans leader promised to keep up the fight no matter how long it might take. "Estrada will not go away," he said.

Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Pa.), the GOP conference chairman, acknowledged that the cloture petition, which calls for a vote on Thursday, represents a new line of attack.

" Correct. We are changing strategies," he said.

For their part, the Democrats braced for an extended battle, voicing confidence that they have the votes to sustain their filibuster. A minimum of 60 votes - three-fifths of the Senate- is needed to cut off debate.

" We'll hold enough of our guys," said Sen. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.) "We've told our people they need to be ready for the long haul. It's a matter of principle," he added.

Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.), the minority leader, reiterated, "nobody should be above the law."

" We have to find out who is going to vote which way," said Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) promising to put Democrats on record for denying the first Hispanic nominee to the federal circuit a straight up or down vote.

Republicans observed that only one Democrat has taken the White House's offer to meet with the embattled nominee. Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W. Virginia) is scheduled to meet with him on Friday, a GOP leadership aide said.

" I will vote against Estrada unless he answers questions about the broad views of the Constitution...," said Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.).

" I am an odd man out as a Democrat. I don't think they should have to provide the memorandum," said Biden claiming that he's been too busy with his duties on the Foreign Relations Committee in regards to Iraq to meet with the nominee. Some Democrats had been pressing the nominee to provide a memo on his opinions while serving in the solicitor general's office during the Clinton years.

" Looking at Estrada and what he's told or won't tell, there's no way I would vote for him," said Sen. Jim Jeffords (I-Vt.). However, he conceded that he had not acted on the administration's offer to meet with the nominee because "it would just be a waste of time... Estrada is going to have to find another job."

Despite the apparent setback, Republicans exuded confidence about their new line of attack, with Frist referring to the "mounds of editorial support" claiming that 72 out of a total of 82 editorials favored confirmation.

With both sides ratcheting up their rhetoric, the number of possible outcomes dwindled, as did chances of a compromise.

Santorum said: "We are trying to listen to the better angels of the some of the natures of our Democrat colleagues who can hopefully see if this tactic being waged against us and Miguel Estrada today sets a precedent that could be dangerous in future Congresses."

"We're really in danger of a constitutional crisis," said Hatch as he and other senior Republicans spoke to reporters after emerging from their Tuesday lunch

Hatch added: "There has never been a judicial nominee stopped except for Abe Fortas to the Supreme Court and I'll say again that was a bi-partisan filibuster."

"Fighting and losing less is desirable than fighting and winning but not fighting at all and losing is not acceptable," said Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), adding: "Some of our base has said over the years that we didn't go the extra mile to fight the fight. It would be difficult for them to argue that we haven't on this one."

GOP Senators Move To Force Vote On Estrada (WPost)

By Helen Dewar

The Washington Post, March 05, 2003

Senate Republicans moved yesterday to force a showdown they were likely to lose on ending the month-long Democratic filibuster against the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada -- a step enabling them to start scheduling other business.

While Republicans vowed to continue pressing for a vote to approve the highly contested nomination, their decision to combine the debate with action on other matters appeared likely to take some of the spotlight off the struggle over Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

GOP leaders said the Senate will take up a U.S.-Russia treaty on arms reduction today and may schedule debate and votes next week on a bill that would ban a late-term procedure opponents call "partial birth" abortion. Action would be scheduled for the following week on the budget for fiscal 2004. They said the Senate may also soon take up legislation to help faith-based charities, one of President Bush's priorities.

Republicans said they will return repeatedly to the Estrada nomination and predicted they would eventually prevail. But Democrats showed no signs of relenting and predicted the Republicans would ultimately fail.

Democrats said they will have more than enough votes to prevail in Thursday's "cloture" vote to end the filibuster. Republicans need 60 votes to shut off debate and force a vote on Estrada. They have picked up the votes of four Democrats -- Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) -- but remain at least three or four votes short of 60, according to Democratic nose-counters.

While conceding they are likely to lose Thursday, Republicans contended the vote will be useful in targeting persuadable senators and building pressure for action by making the case that Democrats are obstructing action.

Republicans said they will keep holding cloture votes "for as long as it takes," said Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.). "This is not going to go away until we get an up-or-down vote," he added.

But Democrats, who had been pushing unsuccessfully to get the Republicans to end the Estrada debate and move to other business, claimed that their votes to continue the filibuster are solid.

"I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position," said Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.).

Democrats say they will allow a simple-majority vote -- which presumably would confirm Estrada's nomination -- only if he would answer questions more fully about his legal views before the Judiciary Committee, and if the administration would release copies of memos he wrote while working for the solicitor general's office in the Justice Department during the 1990s. Without this information, Democrats say, the Senate cannot adequately carry out its advise-and-consent duties under the Constitution.

Republicans defend the 41-year-old Honduran-born, Harvard-educated lawyer as highly qualified. They say he has answered questions as fully as many other nominees who have moved easily through the Senate. They accuse the Democrats of trying to scuttle the nomination because Estrada is a conservative.

GOP Senators Want Vote On Judge Choice (AJC)

By JASON EMBRY

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON -- Seeking to end a standoff with Democrats, Republicans will call for a vote Thursday to end debate over nominating Miguel Estrada to a federal judgeship.

President Bush has tapped Estrada to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, a powerful court that often rules on federal disputes. The vote on a parliamentary procedure called "cloture" would force Democrats to confirm whether they oppose or favor the nomination, which is supported by some Latino groups.

Estrada has enough support to get 51 votes for the nomination. But his backers do not appear to have the 60 votes needed to stop what has amounted to a filibuster of his nomination by Democrats who say he has not been forthcoming about his views.

Approval of a motion for cloture would end debate and bring the issue to a vote, but it must receive at least 60 votes to pass. So far, those declaring they favor Estrada's nomination are the 51 Republicans in the 100-member Senate and four Democrats, among them Georgia's Zell Miller.

Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) said a cloture vote will show who's blocking the nomination.

"Some [Democrats] are sitting back in their offices saying, 'I'm not filibustering, I'm not preventing this nomination from going forward,'" said Cornyn, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "Now senators are going to be held accountable."

Republicans could hold more cloture votes if, as expected, Thursday's fails.

"We ought to have a cloture vote every day from now on," said Sen. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.).

GOP Poll: Estrada Opposition Could Cost Dems (The Hill)

By Sarita Chourey

The Hill, March 5, 2003

The Democratic Party could pay a price for Senate Democrats' effort to block President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada for a federal judgeship, according to an internal GOP poll.

The poll, which questioned 1,000 registered voters about the impact of the nomination on Senate Democratic candidates, found that 42 percent of respondents have a less favorable view of Democratic candidates while only 32 percent had a favorable view.

Further evidence of the negative effect of the Democratic filibuster on its own party came from the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), a traditionally Democratic organization, which has become an ally of Republican Hispanic groups backing Estrada.

But LULAC is in a quandary. Last week, several members of the all-Democratic Congressional Hispanic Caucus expressed their irritation with the organization's pro-Estrada stance and requested that LULAC's board address their concerns.

"LULAC came out fairly early in support of Mr. Estrada," said Rep. Charlie Gonzalez (D-Texas). "We respect that, but we disagree. The problem is that LULAC has allowed itself to be used to legitimize the illegitimate."

He added, "LULAC needs to look carefully and deeply as to whether or not they're being used as tools. We've worked with them, of course. I can't believe they've allowed themselves to be aligned with certain organizations."

LULAC has held two joint press conferences with GOP groups like the Latino Coalition, which criticized the Hispanic Caucus for not supporting Estrada.

Even though LULAC did not directly criticize the Hispanic Caucus, some Senate Republicans such as Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Trent Lott (R-Miss.) accused members of the Hispanic Caucus of being anti-Hispanic, and turning their backs on their own community.

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, compared the Hispanic Caucus to a "lioness eating its cub."

Gonzalez dismissed such criticism. "Trent Lott? I mean, please," he remarked.

Brian Wilkes, LULAC's national executive director, played down speculation that his organization is shifting its allegiance to the Democratic Party, and said he plans to issue a release this week criticizing Senate Republicans for their statements against the Hispanic Caucus.

" We may have been unwittingly caught up in a play for the Republican vote," Wilkes said. He expressed regret at attending briefings where the Hispanic Caucus was criticized.

" Unfortunately, Republicans have taken the qualifications away from Miguel Estrada and tried to push a wedge between the Hispanic community and the Democratic Party," he said. "We never signed up for that."

Despite the organization's apparent flip-flop, Wilkes praised President Bush for his outreach to Hispanic voters. He said Hispanic Democrats do have reason to worry about their base gravitating toward the GOP.

Asked about his views on Bush, Wilkes replied: "There is a sense that Bush, unlike his predecessor, has been reaching out to Hispanics. [But] we definitely disagree with his stance on affirmative action. We are concerned about his tax package. He seems to be tilting his economic program toward the more affluent, and that doesn't help our community."

While LULAC is going to some length to avoid an open breach with the Democrats, it is not budging from its position that Estrada should be confirmed.

" We've evaluated his record, he's got a very strong academic record," said Wilkes, who remarked that Estrada worked in the solicitor general's office under President Clinton and was once editor of the Columbia Law Review.

Hispanic Democrats say their constituents do not necessarily favor Estrada. Rep. Gonzalez added that his local LULAC chapter does not support Estrada.

The Democrats continue to hammer the message that Estrada is wrong for the job. "I was there when he came before the caucus and refused to answer a question," said Rep. Jose Serrano (D-N.Y.). "I don't expect George Bush to nominate a liberal, but I expect [the nomination] to be some kind of sensible person."

Column by Dick Morris

The Hill, March 5, 2003

The whole (Hispanic) world is watching

The Democrats are talking themselves to death in their filibuster against the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the federal bench. The more they talk, the more it is clear that they have nothing to say and no reason to block the nomination of one of the few Hispanics to be nominated to the senior levels of our judiciary.

There is no ethical problem here. No rash statements. No imputed bias. Not even any clear indication of a strong right wing or left wing political philosophy. The burden of the Democratic argument seems to be that Estrada has not ruled, in advance, on all the cases that will come before him. What many would take as a refreshing lack of prejudice and the indication of an open mind, the Democrats assume is evidence of a great conspiracy of silence.

Liberals see the Estrada filibuster as providing a precedent for a new level of disclosure for all nominees to the federal bench. Rather than nominate and confirm good people and let them decide cases, the Democrats are now asking for clear commitments on each area of judicial decision-making that a new judge is likely to confront. The independence of the judiciary is at stake in this new assertion of legislative prerogative.

But the Democrats should realize that they have chosen a terrible target for their new level of scrutiny. By filibustering an Hispanic nominee and going to such lengths to block his confirmation, even when there is no clear reason to do so, they are asking the Hispanic voters to turn against them in droves.

For his part, Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) is skillfully calling the Democratic bluff by requiring them to talk out the filibuster. No gentleman filibuster this time. Lengthy sessions and constant talk animate this effort to block Estrada. Frist should keep the Senate in session around the clock and on weekends to make the Democrats carry their opposition to a Hispanic judge to absurd lengths.

If Frist continues his policy of making the Democrats act out their filibusters by actually talking on the floor endlessly, he may well succeed in breaking the filibuster as a weapon. He may accomplish the ultimate goal of a majority leader - empower the majority and end the 60-vote requirement to pass a bill in the Senate.

How long could the South have filibustered civil rights if the talk-a-thon were covered by cable TV as this filibuster is? Frist is making the Democrats look like anti-Hispanic bigots, all the more because they have no real basis for dissing Estrada.

Remember the stakes, folks. The Hispanic population grew by 4.7 percent last year, while blacks expanded by 1.5 percent and whites by a paltry 0.3 percent. Hispanics cast 6 percent of the vote in 1990 and 12 percent in 2000. If their numbers expand at the current pace, they will be up to 18 percent in 2010 and 24 percent in 2020. With one-third of Hispanics voting Republican, they are the jump ball in American politics. As this vote goes, so goes the future.

Republicans got off on the wrong foot by listening to the likes of Pat Buchanan and other Nativists. Their English-only and anti-immigration initiatives stopped them from appealing to newly arrived Hispanic voters. But President Bush has changed all that. Estrada symbolizes the transition. If Bush takes it the next step and embraces some of Mexican President Vicente Fox's ideas about earned amnesty for Mexican-Americans, he can truly bring Hispanics into the Republican fold for decades to come.

Estrada is no Clarence Thomas, so clearly out of step with his voters as to make his nomination suspect. And Hispanics are not blacks, so committed to the Democratic Party that it would take an act of genocide to breach their amity. Hispanics are up for grabs and each day of the filibuster drives them further toward the GOP.

HEADLINE: US-JUDGE REPUBLICANS MOVE TO BREAK FILIBUSTER ON ESTRADA VOTE

BODY:

Washington, Mar 4 (EFE).- Senate Republicans on Tuesday announced plans to overcome the filibuster on President George W. Bush's nomination of Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada to a federal court before moving forward.

The vote to confirm Estrada to a federal appeals court in the District of Columbia has been blocked for nearly a month, after Democrats made good on a threat to carry out a filibuster unless the Honduran-born lawyer responded to more of their questions. In a press conference Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Rep.-Tenn.) and Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (Rep.-Utah) said Republicans plan to vote Thursday to end the filibuster, a lengthy speechmaking tactic traditionally employed by the minority party to extend a debate.

Republicans need 60 votes to end the debate and vote on Estrada's confirmation. The Senate is currently made up of 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent, who votes with the Democrats.

"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said

"This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote," he said, adding that Republicans have been "reasonable and patient" but are eager to end the debate.

Bush nominated Estrada in May 2001 to the U.S. District of Columbia Court of Appeals, the second-highest tribunal after the Supreme Court, along with some 30 other candidates to serve as judges in different federal courts.

For their part, Democrats have pledged to continue pressuring Estrada to speak on issues he refused to touch during his interview with congressional leaders before voting on his confirmation, maintaining Republicans do not have the votes needed to break the filibuster.

"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (Dem.-S.D.)

"That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate," he added.

Estrada has never served as a judge and, despite being Latino, is opposed by most Hispanic organizations for what they say is his extreme conservatism.

Vote Set On Ending Filibuster On Judge (NYTimes)

By THE NEW YORK TIMES
The New York Times, March 05, 2003
WASHINGTON, March 4 - Senate Republicans today set a vote for Thursday on whether to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked consideration of President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court seat.
No one expects the effort to end the filibuster to succeed. But calling for the vote represents an escalation in tactics as Republicans say they believe they are gaining political support among Hispanic voters.
"This will make it more clear that the Democrats are blocking the Estrada nomination," said a senior Republican strategist.
The Senate majority leader, Bill Frist, Republican of Tennessee, said that he was filing a motion to end what he called a "cavalier filibuster" by the Democrats. But Dr. Frist acknowledged the unlikelihood that the Republicans would be able to win Thursday's vote.
"I want to make it very clear that that is the beginning of the battle," Dr. Frist told reporters.
While the 51 Republicans in the Senate are a majority, enough to confirm Mr. Estrada in a straight up-or-down vote, they would need 60 votes to end the filibuster. Currently, only four Democrats have indicated they will vote with the Republicans, leaving them five votes short.

GOP To Force An Estrada Filibuster Vote (AP)

By JESSE J. HOLLAND
The Associated Press, March 5, 2003
WASHINGTON - After more than three weeks of debate, Republicans decided Tuesday to try to break the Democratic filibuster of Miguel Estrada's nomination to a federal appeals court before moving the Senate on to other legislative business.
Democrats say the GOP will lose the Thursday vote to end the filibuster, but Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., promised to keep demanding such votes until Estrada gets a confirmation vote on his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.
"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said. "I'm going to use everything I possibly can, every tool I possibly can. This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote."
If Republicans don't gain the 60 votes they need on Thursday and in other Estrada votes, the Senate will likely move on to other business instead of debating Estrada every day, although the nomination will not be withdrawn, GOP senators said.
"That is the beginning of the battle," Frist said. "This is not going to go away not until we get an up or down vote."
Democrats insist they will not allow a final vote on Estrada until the Washington appellate lawyer answers more of their questions in a public hearing, or the White House releases Estrada's working papers from his time at the Justice Department solicitor general's office. Republicans have refused those requests.
Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said Democrats can hold out as long as Republicans can.
"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," Daschle said. "That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate."
Only four Democrats have said publicly that they would vote against continuing a filibuster - Sens. Zell Miller of Georgia, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and John Breaux of Louisiana - leaving Republicans short of the 60 votes they need to close off debate and get a final confirmation vote.
The GOP strategy is to make Democratic senators go on the record in supporting the Estrada filibuster, said GOP caucus chairman Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania.
"It give us and the folks across America a picture of where the problem is," Santorum said. "Maybe the reaction after this vote will elicit some sort of change in their understanding."
Democrats have been getting pressure from conservative Hispanic groups to confirm Estrada, who would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"There's no question, once we do so many cloture votes, we'll have to double track it to get the work of the Senate done," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said.
Democrats say their votes against an Estrada confirmation are solid and have been calling on Republicans to end the debate.
"We've got to move on to these other issues and I think it's time to do that," Daschle said.
There are 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent in the Senate.

Senate Republicans Set Showdown Vote On Estrada (Reuters)

Reuters, March 5, 2003
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Senate Republicans on Tuesday scheduled what may be the first of many showdown votes on President Bush's stalled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.
Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.
Republicans said they would hold as many "cloture votes" as needed in coming weeks to end debate and clear the way for a confirmation vote on the 41-year-old Estrada.
To succeed on cloture, Republicans would need the support of 60 of the chamber's 100 senators. A top Democratic aide said Republicans would fall at least three short on Thursday.
Republicans said they believed cloture votes would crank up pressure on Democrats to eventually break ranks and permit confirmation.
"It may be five weeks, it may be eight weeks, it may be two months, it may be three or four months," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, a Tennessee Republican.
Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, a South Dakota Democrat, said: "We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes. I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position."
Democrats oppose Estrada, complaining that he refused to answer a number of questions at a confirmation hearing last year, making him a "stealth candidate."
They also charge that Estrada, whose nomination has drawn a split response from the Hispanic community, is part of Bush's effort to pack the court with right-wing ideologues.
Bush and fellow Republicans contend that the Honduran-born, Harvard-educated Estrada deserves to be confirmed, noting the American Bar Association gave him its highest rating.
The battle is seen as a possible dress rehearsal for Bush's first U.S. Supreme Court nominee, who could be Estrada, if he wins the appeals court seat.
The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit is considered the nation's second most powerful court since it often resolves disputes between the executive and legislative branches of government and rules on the constitutionality of federal laws and regulations.

Republicans To File Cloture On Estrada Nomination Tuesday Afternoon (Roll Call)

By Paul Kane
Roll Call, March 05, 2003
Ending weeks of internal debate, Senate Republican leaders have decided to file cloture on the stalled judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada, setting up the first in a series of votes Thursday in their effort to break the Democratic filibuster.
Aides said the full Republican Conference was expected to sign off on the strategy at its weekly policy luncheon Tuesday unless there was a "dramatic reversal" in the tide of opinion.
Another Republican source, however, cautioned that there was a large contingent within the Conference opposed to filling cloture, a bloc that could provide that dramatic sway and reverse the movement toward cloture.
Emerging from a meeting of GOP chairmen and leaders Monday night, Conference Chairman Rick Santorum (Pa.) declined to specify what decisions had been made, but indicated that an announcement of their strategy was expected after the luncheon.
One GOP aide indicated that the new tactic calls for Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) to file cloture Tuesday afternoon, leading to the Thursday vote. The aide said there is no expectation of winning the 60 votes needed to break the filibuster, but that Frist would continue to force "as many cloture votes as is necessary to win confirmation."
"They'll be frequent and they'll be prominent," the aide said.
With 45 Democrats dug in on their opposition to Estrada, Republicans had been divided over how to proceed with the battle over President Bush's nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Santorum and Majority Whip Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) had been the leading opponents of filing cloture, warning that it would set a bad institutional precedent of requiring 60 votes for nominees and could doom Estrada's hopes for confirmation by locking in Democrats in conservative-leaning states.
But others, including Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.) and Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), had been pushing for cloture, arguing that putting Democrats officially on the record in support of the filibuster would allow outside conservative interest groups to heighten the pressure on them.
The Democrats' top vote counter, Minority Whip Harry Reid (Nev.), said there may be a couple of Democrats who are wavering on Estrada, but there was no doubt he had the minimum of 41 votes needed to block a vote, no matter how many cloture votes Republicans call.
"We have 41, that's all we care about," Reid said.
So far, Democratic Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) have announced their support for Estrada.

GOP Files For Vote On Estrada (WTimes)

By Amy Fagan
The Washington Times, March 5, 2003
Senate Republican leaders yesterday made the first move to cut off debate on federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada by filing for "cloture" to force a final vote on his nomination.
"We're just beginning the fight," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, Tennessee Republican. "This is not going to go away - not until we get an up-or-down vote."
Senators will vote tomorrow on the cloture motion, which will limit debate and force a vote on the nomination.
Republicans now have 55 of the needed 60 votes on cloture, including those of four Democrats, but have targeted a handful of other Democrats, hoping to get them to break ranks with their party and end the filibuster.
Republicans say it is time for the Democrats to go on record either for or against the 41-year-old Honduran-born lawyer, who was nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Democrats have been preventing a vote on the nomination as debate continued since Feb 5.
"We've had a debate now; now it's time to see who's going to vote where," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican. "Then the American people are going to have to speak to those senators."
Democrats are confident they have the 41 votes needed to continue a filibuster by defeating this cloture motion, as well as any others Republicans may file later.
"We are more than ready to have one or more votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat.
If the cloture motion fails, Republicans plan to keep the Estrada nomination on the floor for as long as it takes to get a vote, setting it aside occasionally to go to other Senate business. They also plan additional cloture votes.
Mr. Frist said he will use "every tool that I possibly can" to get a final vote.
A Senate Republican leadership aide said Republicans are hopeful that Democratic Sens. Blanche Lincoln of Arkansas and Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia will join them in stopping a filibuster tomorrow.
Mr. Byrd has said he would vote with the Democrats against cloture on Mr. Estrada's nomination. But Republican aides say they are making progress with Mr. Byrd, who is set to meet the lawyer on Friday.
Mrs. Lincoln did not say yesterday how she would vote on cloture, repeating only that she would like more information from Mr. Estrada. But a Democratic aide has said his party is not counting on Mrs. Lincoln to support the filibuster.
Sen. Bob Graham, Florida Democrat, also is undecided - both on a cloture vote and ultimate support for Mr. Estrada's nomination. His office said late yesterday that no decision had been made.
Several Democrats who have been on Republicans' target list said yesterday that they plan to support the filibuster. Those include Sens. Evan Bayh of Indiana; Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico; Daniel K. Inouye and Daniel K. Akaka, both of Hawaii; Thomas R. Carper of Delaware; Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina and Mark Pryor of Arkansas.
Mr. Hollings would not say whether he would vote for subsequent cloture votes to keep the filibuster going.
"Let's see what they do," he said, referring to Republicans.
Others such as Mr. Carper and Mr. Pryor said they would continue to vote against cloture.
The Democrats who have said they will vote with the 51 Republicans in favor of cloture are John B. Breaux of Louisiana, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and Zell Miller of Georgia.
The White House has repeatedly invited Democrats seeking more information to meet with Mr. Estrada, and several have done so. The latest letter from the White House, sent Feb. 27, also encouraged them to submit written questions to Mr. Estrada and talk to his former employers.

As of yesterday, only Mr. Byrd had requested a meeting with Mr. Estrada and no senators had submitted more questions.
"The Senate Democrats have repeatedly said they need more information, yet they have repeatedly ignored or declined these offers," White House spokesman Ashley Snee said.
The Senate Republican leadership aide said that if Democrats continue to stick together to support the filibuster, they "will hear about Miguel Estrada for the next 18 months until November 2004."
Mr. Daschle said yesterday that the cloture vote tomorrow "doesn't change anything," because "the only thing that would change the circumstances we currently face is if Mr. Estrada becomes more cooperative."
Democratic leaders are demanding that the administration release memos Mr. Estrada wrote while working in the solicitor general's office - a request the administration has denied, with the backing of every living solicitor-general of both parties.
But Mr. Hatch said the cloture vote will establish on record that for the first time there is a "true filibuster against a circuit court nominee" - an accusation many Democrats have rejected.
Mr. Frist noted that Republicans have tried 17 times to get unanimous consent to have a vote, but Democrats have objected.
He also noted that 72 newspaper editorials across the country support Mr. Estrada and/or oppose the Democratic filibuster, while just 10 support the filibuster.
The Senate is set to consider an arms control treaty with Russia today, setting aside the Estrada nomination temporarily.

Frist Invokes Cloture Vote Over Estrada (The Hill)

By Hans Nichols
The Hill, March 5, 2003
Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) sought a showdown yesterday over President Bush's embattled bid to make conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.
But the Democrats promptly predicted they would prevail in Thursday's vote and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.
" We are just beginning to fight," Frist vowed in filing what could well prove to be several cloture petitions aimed at cutting off a three-week-old Democratic filibuster.
" The only response from the other side of the aisle has been a cavalier filibuster. That's unacceptable," said Frist. "This is not going to go away, until we get an up and down vote."
" We have had over 85 hours of active debate, 17 unanimous consent requests," he added.
The Republicans leader promised to keep up the fight no matter how long it might take. "Estrada will not go away," he said.
Sen. Rick Santorum (R-Pa.), the GOP conference chairman, acknowledged that the cloture petition, which calls for a vote on Thursday, represents a new line of attack.
" Correct. We are changing strategies," he said.
For their part, the Democrats braced for an extended battle, voicing confidence that they have the votes to sustain their filibuster. A minimum of 60 votes - three-fifths of the Senate- is needed to cut off debate.
" We'll hold enough of our guys," said Sen. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.) "We've told our people they need to be ready for the long haul. It's a matter of principle," he added.
Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.), the minority leader, reiterated, "nobody should be above the law."
" We have to find out who is going to vote which way," said Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) promising to put Democrats on record for denying the first Hispanic nominee to the federal circuit a straight up or down vote.
Republicans observed that only one Democrat has taken the White House's offer to meet with the embattled nominee. Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W. Virginia) is scheduled to meet with him on Friday, a GOP leadership aide said.
" I will vote against Estrada unless he answers questions about the broad views of the Constitution...," said Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.).
" I am an odd man out as a Democrat. I don't think they should have to provide the memorandum," said Biden claiming that he's been too busy with his duties on the Foreign Relations Committee in regards to Iraq to meet with the nominee. Some Democrats had been pressing the nominee to provide a memo on his opinions while serving in the solicitor general's office during the Clinton years.
" Looking at Estrada and what he's told or won't tell, there's no way I would vote for him," said Sen. Jim Jeffords (I-Vt.).
However, he conceded that he had not acted on the administration's offer to meet with the nominee because "it would just be a waste of time... Estrada is going to have to find another job."

Despite the apparent setback, Republicans exuded confidence about their new line of attack, with Frist referring to the "mounds of editorial support" claiming that 72 out of a total of 82 editorials favored confirmation.
With both sides ratcheting up their rhetoric, the number of possible outcomes dwindled, as did chances of a compromise.
Santorum said: "We are trying to listen to the better angels of the some of the natures of our Democrat colleagues who can hopefully see if this tactic being waged against us and Miguel Estrada today sets a precedent that could be dangerous in future Congresses."
"We're really in danger of a constitutional crisis," said Hatch as he and other senior Republicans spoke to reporters after emerging from their Tuesday lunch
Hatch added: "There has never been a judicial nominee stopped except for Abe Fortas to the Supreme Court and I'll say again that was a bi-partisan filibuster."
"Fighting and losing less is desirable than fighting and winning but not fighting at all and losing is not acceptable," said Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), adding: "Some of our base has said over the years that we didn't go the extra mile to fight the fight. It would be difficult for them to argue that we haven't on this one."

GOP Senators Move To Force Vote On Estrada (WPost)

By Helen Dewar
The Washington Post, March 05, 2003
Senate Republicans moved yesterday to force a showdown they were likely to lose on ending the month-long Democratic filibuster against the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada -- a step enabling them to start scheduling other business.
While Republicans vowed to continue pressing for a vote to approve the highly contested nomination, their decision to combine the debate with action on other matters appeared likely to take some of the spotlight off the struggle over Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.
GOP leaders said the Senate will take up a U.S.-Russia treaty on arms reduction today and may schedule debate and votes next week on a bill that would ban a late-term procedure opponents call "partial birth" abortion. Action would be scheduled for the following week on the budget for fiscal 2004. They said the Senate may also soon take up legislation to help faith-based charities, one of President Bush's priorities.
Republicans said they will return repeatedly to the Estrada nomination and predicted they would eventually prevail. But Democrats showed no signs of relenting and predicted the Republicans would ultimately fail.
Democrats said they will have more than enough votes to prevail in Thursday's "cloture" vote to end the filibuster. Republicans need 60 votes to shut off debate and force a vote on Estrada. They have picked up the votes of four Democrats -- Sens. John Breaux (La.), Zell Miller (Ga.), Ben Nelson (Neb.) and Bill Nelson (Fla.) -- but remain at least three or four votes short of 60, according to Democratic nose-counters.
While conceding they are likely to lose Thursday, Republicans contended the vote will be useful in targeting persuadable senators and building pressure for action by making the case that Democrats are obstructing action.
Republicans said they will keep holding cloture votes "for as long as it takes," said Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.). "This is not going to go away until we get an up-or-down vote," he added.
But Democrats, who had been pushing unsuccessfully to get the Republicans to end the Estrada debate and move to other business, claimed that their votes to continue the filibuster are solid.
"I am confident that, regardless of how many votes are taken, our caucus is going to hold its position," said Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.).
Democrats say they will allow a simple-majority vote -- which presumably would confirm Estrada's nomination -- only if he would answer questions more fully about his legal views before the Judiciary Committee, and if the administration would release copies of memos he wrote while working for the solicitor general's office in the Justice Department during the 1990s. Without this information, Democrats say, the Senate cannot adequately carry out its advise-and-consent duties under the Constitution.
Republicans defend the 41-year-old Honduran-born, Harvard-educated lawyer as highly qualified. They say he has answered questions as fully as many other nominees who have moved easily through the Senate. They accuse the Democrats of trying to scuttle the nomination because Estrada is a conservative.

GOP Senators Want Vote On Judge Choice (AJC)

By JASON EMBRY
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, March 5, 2003

WASHINGTON -- Seeking to end a standoff with Democrats, Republicans will call for a vote Thursday to end debate over nominating Miguel Estrada to a federal judgeship.
President Bush has tapped Estrada to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, a powerful court that often rules on federal disputes. The vote on a parliamentary procedure called "cloture" would force Democrats to confirm whether they oppose or favor the nomination, which is supported by some Latino groups.
Estrada has enough support to get 51 votes for the nomination. But his backers do not appear to have the 60 votes needed to stop what has amounted to a filibuster of his nomination by Democrats who say he has not been forthcoming about his views.
Approval of a motion for cloture would end debate and bring the issue to a vote, but it must receive at least 60 votes to pass. So far, those declaring they favor Estrada's nomination are the 51 Republicans in the 100-member Senate and four Democrats, among them Georgia's Zell Miller.
Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) said a cloture vote will show who's blocking the nomination.
"Some [Democrats] are sitting back in their offices saying, 'I'm not filibustering, I'm not preventing this nomination from going forward,'" said Cornyn, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "Now senators are going to be held accountable."
Republicans could hold more cloture votes if, as expected, Thursday's fails.
"We ought to have a cloture vote every day from now on," said Sen. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.).

GOP Poll: Estrada Opposition Could Cost Dems (The Hill)

By Sarita Chourey
The Hill, March 5, 2003
The Democratic Party could pay a price for Senate Democrats' effort to block President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada for a federal judgeship, according to an internal GOP poll.
The poll, which questioned 1,000 registered voters about the impact of the nomination on Senate Democratic candidates, found that 42 percent of respondents have a less favorable view of Democratic candidates while only 32 percent had a favorable view.
Further evidence of the negative effect of the Democratic filibuster on its own party came from the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), a traditionally Democratic organization, which has become an ally of Republican Hispanic groups backing Estrada.
But LULAC is in a quandary. Last week, several members of the all-Democratic Congressional Hispanic Caucus expressed their irritation with the organization's pro-Estrada stance and requested that LULAC's board address their concerns.
"LULAC came out fairly early in support of Mr. Estrada," said Rep. Charlie Gonzalez (D-Texas). "We respect that, but we disagree. The problem is that LULAC has allowed itself to be used to legitimize the illegitimate."
He added, "LULAC needs to look carefully and deeply as to whether or not they're being used as tools. We've worked with them, of course. I can't believe they've allowed themselves to be aligned with certain organizations."
LULAC has held two joint press conferences with GOP groups like the Latino Coalition, which criticized the Hispanic Caucus for not supporting Estrada.
Even though LULAC did not directly criticize the Hispanic Caucus, some Senate Republicans such as Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Trent Lott (R-Miss.) accused members of the Hispanic Caucus of being anti-Hispanic, and turning their backs on their own community.
Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, compared the Hispanic Caucus to a "lioness eating its cub."
Gonzalez dismissed such criticism. "Trent Lott? I mean, please," he remarked.
Brian Wilkes, LULAC's national executive director, played down speculation that his organization is shifting its allegiance to the Democratic Party, and said he plans to issue a release this week criticizing Senate Republicans for their statements against the Hispanic Caucus.
" We may have been unwittingly caught up in a play for the Republican vote," Wilkes said. He expressed regret at attending briefings where the Hispanic Caucus was criticized.
" Unfortunately, Republicans have taken the qualifications away from Miguel Estrada and tried to push a wedge between the Hispanic community and the Democratic Party," he said. "We never signed up for that."
Despite the organization's apparent flip-flop, Wilkes praised President Bush for his outreach to Hispanic voters. He said Hispanic Democrats do have reason to worry about their base gravitating toward the GOP.
Asked about his views on Bush, Wilkes replied: "There is a sense that Bush, unlike his predecessor, has been reaching out to Hispanics. [But] we definitely disagree with his stance on affirmative action. We are concerned about his tax package. He seems to be tilting his economic program toward the more affluent, and that doesn't help our community."

While LULAC is going to some length to avoid an open breach with the Democrats, it is not budging from its position that Estrada should be confirmed.
" We've evaluated his record, he's got a very strong academic record," said Wilkes, who remarked that Estrada worked in the solicitor general's office under President Clinton and was once editor of the Columbia Law Review.
Hispanic Democrats say their constituents do not necessarily favor Estrada. Rep. Gonzalez added that his local LULAC chapter does not support Estrada.
The Democrats continue to hammer the message that Estrada is wrong for the job. "I was there when he came before the caucus and refused to answer a question," said Rep. Jose Serrano (D-N.Y.). "I don't expect George Bush to nominate a liberal, but I expect [the nomination] to be some kind of sensible person."

The Political Life (The Hill)

Column by Dick Morris
The Hill, March 5, 2003
The whole (Hispanic) world is watching
The Democrats are talking themselves to death in their filibuster against the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the federal bench. The more they talk, the more it is clear that they have nothing to say and no reason to block the nomination of one of the few Hispanics to be nominated to the senior levels of our judiciary.
There is no ethical problem here. No rash statements. No imputed bias. Not even any clear indication of a strong right wing or left wing political philosophy. The burden of the Democratic argument seems to be that Estrada has not ruled, in advance, on all the cases that will come before him. What many would take as a refreshing lack of prejudice and the indication of an open mind, the Democrats assume is evidence of a great conspiracy of silence.
Liberals see the Estrada filibuster as providing a precedent for a new level of disclosure for all nominees to the federal bench. Rather than nominate and confirm good people and let them decide cases, the Democrats are now asking for clear commitments on each area of judicial decision-making that a new judge is likely to confront. The independence of the judiciary is at stake in this new assertion of legislative prerogative.
But the Democrats should realize that they have chosen a terrible target for their new level of scrutiny. By filibustering an Hispanic nominee and going to such lengths to block his confirmation, even when there is no clear reason to do so, they are asking the Hispanic voters to turn against them in droves.
For his part, Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) is skillfully calling the Democratic bluff by requiring them to talk out the filibuster. No gentleman filibuster this time. Lengthy sessions and constant talk animate this effort to block Estrada. Frist should keep the Senate in session around the clock and on weekends to make the Democrats carry their opposition to a Hispanic judge to absurd lengths.
If Frist continues his policy of making the Democrats act out their filibusters by actually talking on the floor endlessly, he may well succeed in breaking the filibuster as a weapon. He may accomplish the ultimate goal of a majority leader - empower the majority and end the 60-vote requirement to pass a bill in the Senate.
How long could the South have filibustered civil rights if the talk-a-thon were covered by cable TV as this filibuster is? Frist is making the Democrats look like anti-Hispanic bigots, all the more because they have no real basis for dissing Estrada.
Remember the stakes, folks. The Hispanic population grew by 4.7 percent last year, while blacks expanded by 1.5 percent and whites by a paltry 0.3 percent. Hispanics cast 6 percent of the vote in 1990 and 12 percent in 2000. If their numbers expand at the current pace, they will be up to 18 percent in 2010 and 24 percent in 2020. With one-third of Hispanics voting Republican, they are the jump ball in American politics. As this vote goes, so goes the future.
Republicans got off on the wrong foot by listening to the likes of Pat Buchanan and other Nativists. Their English-only and anti-immigration initiatives stopped them from appealing to newly arrived Hispanic voters. But President Bush has changed all that. Estrada symbolizes the transition. If Bush takes it the next step and embraces some of Mexican President Vicente Fox's ideas about earned amnesty for Mexican-Americans, he can truly bring Hispanics into the Republican fold for decades to come.
Estrada is no Clarence Thomas, so clearly out of step with his voters as to make his nomination suspect. And Hispanics are not blacks, so committed to the Democratic Party that it would take an act of genocide to breach their amity. Hispanics are up for grabs and each day of the filibuster drives them further toward the GOP.

HEADLINE: US-JUDGE REPUBLICANS MOVE TO BREAK FILIBUSTER ON ESTRADA VOTE
BODY:
Washington, Mar 4 (EFE).- Senate Republicans on Tuesday announced plans to overcome the filibuster on President George W. Bush's nomination of Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada to a federal court before moving forward.

The vote to confirm Estrada to a federal appeals court in the District of Columbia has been blocked for nearly a month, after Democrats made good on a threat to carry out a filibuster unless the Honduran-born lawyer responded to more of their questions. In a press conference Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Rep.-Tenn.) and Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (Rep.-Utah) said Republicans plan to vote Thursday to end the filibuster, a lengthy speechmaking tactic traditionally employed by the minority party to extend a debate.

Republicans need 60 votes to end the debate and vote on Estrada's confirmation. The Senate is currently made up of 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent, who votes with the Democrats.

"It may take five weeks, it may take eight weeks, it may take two months, it may take three or four months," Frist said

"This battle is just beginning. We are going to see that this nominee has an up or down vote," he said, adding that Republicans have been "reasonable and patient" but are eager to end the debate.

Bush nominated Estrada in May 2001 to the U.S. District of Columbia Court of Appeals, the second-highest tribunal after the Supreme Court, along with some 30 other candidates to serve as judges in different federal courts.

For their part, Democrats have pledged to continue pressuring Estrada to speak on issues he refused to touch during his interview with congressional leaders before voting on his confirmation, maintaining Republicans do not have the votes needed to break the filibuster.

"We have sufficient support to sustain a series of cloture votes," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (Dem.-S.D.)

"That was confirmed again today and I would expect it to remain that way for whatever length of time they choose to continue this debate," he added.

Estrada has never served as a judge and, despite being Latino, is opposed by most Hispanic organizations for what they say is his extreme conservatism.

Make 'em talk

The fight over federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada is now entering a new phase. According to GOP caucus leader Sen. Rick Santorum, the Republicans will attempt to force the issue this week by filing a cloture motion on the Democrat's gentleman's filibuster against Mr. Estrada's nomination.

Republicans hope that putting their Democratic colleagues officially on the record against Mr. Estrada, the first Hispanic to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and a likely candidate for the Supreme Court, may be enough to change a few minds. Only five votes would be enough to end the debate, and it's hoped that those Democrats up for re-election next year, such as Sens. Barbara Boxer, Blanche Lincoln, Ernest Hollings, Ron Wyden and Bob Graham, might be particularly pliable.

However, such a demonstration is, at best, a consolation prize, since the cloture vote could have been taken at any time since Feb. 5, when Mr. Estrada's nomination was taken up on the Senate floor. There's also the possibility that a series of cloture votes (Mr. Santorum promised that, if the Thursday vote failed, there would be at least one more) could have the opposite effect, hardening the minds of those Democrats anxious to placate their party's special interests. Besides, if they wish to really put their colleagues on the spot, Republicans have a more dramatic means to such a demonstration — a real filibuster.

Such a filibuster forces Democrats to talk about anything they want to, so long as they are willing to continue to be seen by their constituents as obstructing the Senate's business and blocking an amply qualified candidate who has put himself at their disposal for almost two years.

Despite a few late-night sessions since Mr. Estrada's nomination hit the floor, Republicans have not forced their filibustering fellows to talk all night, allowing a gentleman's measure to serve in this less-than-genteel debate. Even a series of cloture votes won't have the same effect, since Senate business will still go on.

Republicans' reluctance seems to be based in the simple fact that filibusters are so inconvenient. Democrats would only need a few members to hold their place on the floor, while all 51 Republicans would have to be present, awaiting the first opportunity to force the vote. Unfortunately, during a lengthy filibuster, it's more likely that a few Republicans will take breaks than a few Democrats will break ranks.

Thus, the anticipated cloture vote represents not so much a failure of Republican Senate leadership as of followership. While some Republican leaders have expressed a desire to force a full-fledged filibuster, they really have rather small cudgels to hold their rank and file in place, much less penalize them if they break ranks. Besides, senators are notoriously independent, preferring to lead a glorious but doomed calvary charge than march along with their fellow foot soldiers in a crushing phalanx. The cloture vote is a tacit admission that Republicans have failed to coalesce into the disciplined fighting force needed to overcome obstructionism on judgeships.

As worrisome is the fact that the nomination fight appears to be approaching a critical juncture. The war in Iraq will undoubtedly sweep other matters aside, and the Senate has other legislation it should take up soon, including the president's tax-cut plan and a ban on partial-birth abortion.

This weekend would seem to be an opportune time for Republicans to put up a full-fledged floor flight against a filibuster on Mr. Estrada. It's time for Republicans to go to the mattresses — figuratively and literally. It's time for Republicans to march like the majority they are. It's time for Republicans to make 'em talk.

THE WHITE HOUSE

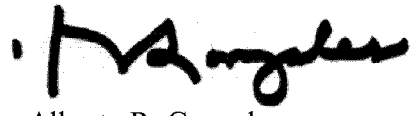
WASHINGTON

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.



My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

KEY POINTS FROM SECRETARY POWELL'S SPEECH ON IRAQ, 3-5-03***

*Continuing to deceive
*Inspections not working
*Concessions are not compliance

-United Nations Resolution 1441 was meant to end 12 years of lies and manipulation. Nothing we have seen since the passage of 1441 indicates that Iraq has decided to disarm or decided to actively,unconditionally, and immediately cooperate with the inspectors.

-Intelligence from multiple sources shows that Iraq is continuing efforts to deceive inspectors by moving weapons of mass destruction material around the country to avoid detection. Baghdad is also working to discredit intelligence information being provided to the inspection teams by the United States and our allies.

-The inspections are not working. Dribbling out of a warhead here, a missile there, may give the appearance of disarmament, but it is not reducing Saddam's capabilities. It is not eliminating the threat. He gives a little to save a lot, but we
've caught on to this game.

-Iraq has had more than a decade to decide to disarm. Iraq could havemade the decision on November 8 when 1441 was passed. It could make the decision today.
-Process is not performance. Concessions are not compliance. Destroyinga handful of missiles is not disarmament. Saddam Hussein is betting that his contempt for the will of the Security Council is stronger than our collective resolve. Division among us will only convince Saddam that he is right.

-If Saddam leaves us no choice but to disarm him by force, the UnitedStates and our coalition partners will do our utmost to minimize the loss of civilian life, meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people, and take responsibility for the post-war stabilization of the country.

-We want an Iraq whose people are free from fear and can look to thefuture with hope. The hard work of rehabilitation and reconstruction will begin at the first possible moment, but our collective, long-term commitment to Iraq will be our efforts to help the Iraqi people build a unified Iraq that does not pose a threat to international peace and a welcome presence among nations.

"We view the Americans and British as liberators. The people in the rest of Iraq are envious of these freedoms and the standard of living outside of the authority of the Iraqi central government."

KEY QUOTES***

"Iraq's too-little, too-late gestures are meant not just to deceive and delay action by the international community, [Saddam] has as one of his major goals to divide the international community, to split us into arguing factions. That effort must fail."

John,
As you are probably aware, we just submitted our FY 2004 budget request to Congress for the White House . We have a new staffer on the House Appropriations Committee (Rich Efford) who is interested in getting some information on the USA Freedom Corps. His email request is provided below:

"Are you familiar with a program called USA Freedom Corps? It isapparently related to Americorps. Another subcommittee asked me about it today, they heard it was being funded by EOP. I have not yet noticed it in the justifications."

While we did break out the request of $2.6 million in FY 2003 (because it was a new program), our FY 2004 budget justification does not mention USA Freedom Corps specifically. Rather, it is part of the total White House budget.

Could you please have someone one your staff prepare a paper addressing the background of the initiative, major accomplishments to date and a funding profile for FY 2002-2004? Attached is a draft that we started but we are missing some key elements and would appreciate your help. You may have some other ideas as well in terms of what to include.

We would like to get this information back to Rich Efford today, if possible. This is his first request and we would like to be as responsive as possible. Thanks for your help.

Liz

Issue

Information paper, briefing on USA Freedom Corps for Rich Efford.

Background

The USA Freedom Corps is an interagency initiative bringing together executive branch departments, agencies, and offices that have public service programs and components to promote, expand, and enhance volunteer service opportunities for all Americans. The USA Freedom Corps Council and Office were established per the Executive Order attached, as components of the White House Office and tasked with coordinating the USA Freedom Corps initiative.

The formation of the USA Freedom Corps was announced at President Bush's January 29, 2002 State of the Union Address. In an effort to build on the generous spirit of the American people, President Bush is challenging all Americans to a two-year call to service—that over their lifetimes every American devotes at least 4,000 hours of volunteer service to their community, our country or the world.

The USA Freedom Corps initiative is coordinated by a Council and a supporting Office within the Executive Office of the President. The Council is chaired by the President and includes the heads of key departments and agencies with public service programs and components. The Office is headed by an Assistant to the President, reporting directly to the President, and includes a staff to help coordinate the service initiative.

The Council makes policy recommendations to the President on additional service opportunities and ways in which Federal and community-based programs can provide incentives and information to foster better citizenship and more service to the Nation and to communities.

The USA Freedom Corps works with appropriate Federal departments and agencies to establish baseline data for measuring participation in service programs, identifying serious needs, and tracking progress resulting from additional resources and opportunities made possible through the USA Freedom Corps.

The USA Freedom Corps Council and Office coordinates this interagency service initiative with appropriate federal departments and agencies, and helped work with the Congress to secure more than [redacted] million in Fiscal Year 2003 across all government agencies to support this initiative.

Budget

The President's FY03 Congressional budget submission included, as a part of the EOP submission, the following White House Office funding requests specifically associated with the USA Freedom Corps Office:

Total: $2,600,000
To be used for personnel, travel, publications (procured through other services), and other contracted services. The specifics for these areas are as follows:

Personnel: $800,000
The staff of the USA Freedom Corps office is composed of 6 FTE and is lead by an Assistant to the President who is Director of the USA Freedom Corps and includes a Special Assistant for administrative duties, a Director of Communications to coordinate the communications efforts of the agencies associated with the USA Freedom Corps effort, a Director of Policy Development, a Director of Policy Initiatives and Government Relations and a Director of Management who measures the statistical effects that the activities undertaken by the USA Freedom Corps are actually having across the country. In addition, other appropriate White House support staff will be utilized as needed.

Travel: $600,000
The USA Freedom Corps office staff are frequent travelers particularly this year, its first full year of existence. The creation of the USA Freedom Corps requires work at the local level with organizations, especially organizing the Citizen Corps across the country. Much of this work has to be done in person. In addition, the Director of the USA Freedom Corps or the appropriate staff is required to address gatherings of state and local officials in order to disseminate information about the USA Freedom Corps and answer questions relating to the organization of USA Freedom Corps activities at the local level. This level of funding is sufficient for approximately 500 staff member trips.

Other services: $1,200,000
The final category includes funds for the hiring of contractors to measure the nationwide effects of the USA Freedom Corps efforts through surveys and other measurement tools, funds for the creation and printing of documents outlining the USA Freedom Corps mission and specific programs, and other activities that will further the mission of the USA Freedom Corps.

IRAQ: STILL FAILING TO DISARM
SECRETARY POWELL OUTLINES FURTHER DECEPTION BY IRAQI REGIME***

"Iraq's too little, too late gestures are meant not just to deceive and delay action by the international community, he has as one of his major goals to divide the international community, to split us into arguing factions. That effort must fail."
-Secretary of State Colin Powell

Summary of Secretary Powell's Remarks to the Center for Strategic and International Studies, March 5, 2003***

Saddam Hussein Has Not Made the Fundamental Decision to Disarm***

-Resolution 1441 reaffirmed Saddam Hussein's guilt over the preceding 11 years of possessing and developing with the intention of having and potentially using weapons of mass destruction, and gave him one last chance to come clean and disarm.

-When Saddam Hussein recognized that something might come out of 1441, he started to respond. Was he doing so because he suddenly made a decision to comply or disarm? No. He was doing it because he began to feel the pressure. And once again, he started to play the game that he had been playing for the last 12 years: to divert attention, to distract, to throw chaff up, to confuse, to cause us to lose our way in applying our will.

-The question is not how much more time should be allowed for inspections or how many more inspectors should be sent in. The question simply is: Has Saddam Hussein made a strategic, political decision that he will give up these horrible weapons of mass destruction. It's an issue that's been on the table for 12 years.

Process is not Performance***

-No one has seriously claimed that Iraq provided a currently accurate, full and complete declaration on December 8th as required by Resolution 1441. The 12,000-page document that they tried to pass off as the whole truth was nothing but a rehash of old and discredited material, with some new lies thrown in for good measure.

-Intelligence from multiple sources shows that Iraq is continuing efforts to deceive inspectors by moving weapons of mass destruction material around the country to avoid detection.

-The inspections are not working. Dribbling out of a warhead here, a missile there, may give the appearance of disarmament, but it is not reducing Saddam's capabilities. It is not eliminating the threat. He gives a little to save a lot, but we 've caught on to this game.

War is the Last Option***

-The international community declared Saddam Hussein a threat. He wasgiven one last chance to avoid war. If Iraq complies and disarms, even at this late hour, it is possible to avoid war.

-We should do everything possible to avoid war. We have done that, andno one believes that more deeply than President Bush. That's why he went to the United Nations. That's why he persuaded all 15 of us on the Security Council to give Saddam Hussein one last chance.

-Consider what could happen if Saddam Hussein, a tyrant who has noscruples and no mercies, concludes that the governments of the world will not condone military action under any circumstances, even as a last resort. Under those circumstances, he will never comply with his obligations.

-Saddam Hussein has used war and weapons of mass destruction againsthis neighbors and against thousands of his own citizens. And in this post-September 11th world, getting those appalling weapons out of his hands is the only way to guarantee he won't use them again, or make common cause and pass them through his terrorist connections for use practically anywhere in the world.

Commitment to Rebuilding Iraq***

-If Saddam leaves us no choice but to disarm him by force, the UnitedStates and our coalition partners will do our utmost to do it quickly, and in a way that minimizes the loss of civilian life or destruction of property.

-We will meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people and takeresponsibility for the post-war stabilization of that country, establishing and maintaining order, dismantling terrorist networks with nodes in Iraq, and destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction once and for all.

-Working with many coalition partners, as soon as internal security isestablished, we would want to move as quickly as possible to civilian oversight of the next stages in the transformation of Iraq. Then, legitimate Iraqi institutions representing all Iraqis, representing the people, can be created and a formal government put in place.

-The United States has a superb record over the past 50 or 60 years ofhelping countries that we found it necessary to do battle with or in, put themselves on a better footing for a brighter future.

-The work of reconciliation and rehabilitation and reconstruction willbe a long and hard one, but we are up to the task. But the true test of our collective commitment to Iraq will be our efforts to help the Iraqi people build a unified Iraq that does not threaten international peace, one that is a welcome presence among the nations of the world, not an international pariah.

IRAQ: STILL FAILING TO DISARM

SECRETARY POWELL OUTLINES FURTHER DECEPTION BY IRAQI REGIME

Summary of Secretary Powell's Remarks to the Center for Strategic and International Studies March 5, 2003

Saddam Hussein Has Not Made the Fundamental Decision to Disarm

- Resolution 1441 reaffirmed Saddam Hussein's guilt over the preceding 11 years of possessing and developing with the intention of having and potentially using weapons of mass destruction, and gave him one last chance to come clean and disarm.

- When Saddam Hussein recognized that something might come out of 1441, he started to respond. Was he doing so because he suddenly made a decision to comply or disarm? No. He was doing it because he began to feel the pressure. And once again, he started to play the game that he had been playing for the last 12 years: to divert attention, to distract, to throw chaff up, to confuse, to cause us to lose our way in applying our will.

- The question is not how much more time should be allowed for inspections or how many more inspectors should be sent in. The question simply is: Has Saddam Hussein made a strategic, political decision that he will give up these horrible weapons of mass destruction. It's an issue that's been on the table for 12 years.

Process is not Performance

- No one has seriously claimed that Iraq provided a currently accurate, full and complete declaration on December 8th as required by Resolution 1441. The 12,000-page document that they tried to pass off as the whole truth was nothing but a rehash of old and discredited material, with some new lies thrown in for good measure.

- Intelligence from multiple sources shows that Iraq is continuing efforts to deceive inspectors by moving weapons of mass destruction material around the country to avoid detection.

- The inspections are not working. Dribbling out of a warhead here, a missile there, may give the appearance of disarmament, but it is not reducing Saddam's capabilities. It is not eliminating the threat. He gives a little to save a lot, but we've caught on to this game.

War is the Last Option

- The international community declared Saddam Hussein a threat. He was given one last chance to avoid war. If Iraq complies and disarms, even at this late hour, it is possible to avoid war.

- We should do everything possible to avoid war. We have done that, and no one believes that more deeply than President Bush. That's why he went to the United Nations. That's why he persuaded all 15 of us on the Security Council to give Saddam Hussein one last chance.

And in this post-September 11th world, getting those appalling weapons out of his hands is the only way to guarantee he won't use them again, or make common cause and pass them through his terrorist connections for use practically anywhere in the world.

Commitment to Rebuilding Iraq

- If Saddam leaves us no choice but to disarm him by force, the United States and our coalition partners will do our utmost to do it quickly, and in a way that minimizes the loss of civilian life or destruction of property.

- We will meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people and take responsibility for the post-war stabilization of that country, establishing and maintaining order, dismantling terrorist networks with nodes in Iraq, and destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction once and for all.

- Working with many coalition partners, as soon as internal security is established, we would want to move as quickly as possible to civilian oversight of the next stages in the transformation of Iraq. Then, legitimate Iraqi institutions representing all Iraqis, representing the people, can be created and a formal government put in place.

On the clothing/equipment question, we should pay out of WH appropriation (or DOD if we can) as we would for other equipment that employees need. On the travel cost issue, Ben is handling with Tucker. My understanding is that, as of now, WH may have to pay for travel out of WH money, but Ben and Tucker are working on that and will let you know.

The National Archives general counsel advised that, from their perspective as guardian of the Presidential Libraries, this was an appropriate official purchase. He thought it made sense to purchase out of WH funds. I can see a minor appearance issue, I suppose, but there is no legal problem.

Blake/Tim,

It wasn't so much that I was nervous, I was simply skeptical as to whether that was an appropriate use of WHO funds.

I spoke with Eric Lanman who is the Political Accounts team Accountant/Financial Analyst from OA and agreed that the books were not an appropriate use of WH funds and that the RNC or some other outside entity (GWB Library?) needed to provide payment for the books.

If Counsel's office believes that it is an acceptable use of funds, and Linda is fine with the expenditure, I'll be happy to order the books and use my WH credit card to pay for them.

Sorry if this has created unnecessary confusion.

Thanks,

Chad

I spoke to Chad Babin about the appropriate purchasing procedure for this project (the books published since the President's been in office). Here's the deal... Linda would have sign off on the purchasing of the books in a memo- have it approved through Mehlman- and then we'd send the bill to the RNC.

Joe said earlier today that this definitely isn't a federal issue, and should NOT be funded through RNC (even if they're reimbursed at a later date). So, until there is a GWB Library Fund set aside, I'll keep track of these books and hold off on the purchase.

Please let me know if you have any concerns. Thanks,

Tim

Hans Blix And Mohamed Elbaradei Deliver Report To The U.N. Security Council 03/07/03

BLIX: Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, for nearly three years, I've been coming to the Security Council presenting the quarterly reports of UNMOVIC. They have described our many preparations for the resumption of inspections in Iraq.

The 12th quarterly report is the first that describes three months of inspection. They come after four years without inspections. The report was finalized 10 days ago, and a number of relevant events have taken place since then. Today's statement will supplement the circulated report on these points to bring the council up to date.

Inspections in Iraq resumed on the 27th of November, 2002. In matters relating to process, notably prompt access to sites, we have faced relatively few difficulties, and certainly much less than those that were faced by UNSCOM in the period 1991 to 1998. This may well be due to the strong outside pressure.

Some practical matters which were not settled by the talks Dr. ElBaradei and I had with Iraqi side in Vienna prior to inspections or in Resolution 1441 have been resolved at meetings which we have had in Baghdad.

BLIX: Initial difficulties raised by the Iraqi side about helicopters and aerial surveillance planes operating in the no-fly zones were overcome.

This is not to say that the operation of inspections is free from frictions, but at this juncture we are able to perform professional, no-notice inspections all over Iraq and to increase aerial surveillance.

American U-2 and French Mirage surveillance aircraft already give us valuable imagery, supplementing satellite pictures, and we would expect soon to be able to add night-vision capability through an aircraft offered to us by the Russian Federation. We also expect to add low-level, close-area surveillance through drones provided by Germany.

We are grateful not only to the countries which place these valuable tools at our disposal, but also the states, most recently Cyprus, which has agreed to the stationing of aircraft on their territory.

Mr. President, Iraq, with a highly developed administrative system, should be able to provide more documentary evidence about its proscribed weapons programs. Only a few new such documents have come to light so far and been handed over since we began inspections. It was a disappointment that Iraq's declaration of the 7th of December did not bring new documentary evidence.

I hope that efforts in this respect, including the appointment of a governmental commission, will give significant results.

When proscribed items are deemed unaccounted for, it is, above all, credible accounts that is needed, or the proscribed items if they exist.

Where authentic documents do not become available, interviews with persons who may have relevant knowledge and experience may be another way of obtaining evidence. UNMOVIC has names of such persons in its records, and they are among the people whom we seek to interview.

BLIX: In the last month, Iraq has provided us with names of many persons who may be irrelevant sources of information, in particular persons who took part in various places of the unilateral destruction of biological and chemical weapons and proscribed missiles in 1991.

This provision of names prompts two reflections. The first is that with such detailed information existing regarding those who took part in the unilateral destruction, surely there must also remain records regarding the quantities and other data concerning the various items destroyed.

The second reflection is that, with relevant witnesses available, it becomes even more important to be able to conduct interviews in modes and locations which allow us to be confident that the testimony given is given without outside influence.

While the Iraqi side seems to have encouraged interviewees not to request the presence of Iraqi officials, local minders or the taping of the interviews, conditions ensuring the absence of undue influences are difficult to attain inside Iraq. Interviews outside the country might provide such assurance. It is our intention to request such interviews shortly.

Nevertheless, despite remaining shortcomings, interviews are useful. Since we started requesting interviews, 38 individuals were asked for private interviews, of which 10 accepted under our terms, seven of these during the last week.

As I noted on the 14th of February, intelligence authorities have claimed that weapons of mass destruction are moved around Iraq by trucks, in particular that there are mobile production units for biological weapons. The Iraqi side states that such activities do not exist.

Several inspections have taken place at declared and undeclared sites in relation to mobile production facilities. Food-testing mobile laboratories and mobile workshops have been seen, as well as large containers with seed-processing equipment. No evidence of proscribed activities have so far been found.

BLIX: Iraq is expected to assist in the development of credible ways to conduct random checks of ground transportation.

Inspectors are also engaged in examining Iraq's programs for remotely piloted vehicles. A number of sites have been inspected with data being collected to assess their range and other capabilities of the various models found, and inspections are continuing in this area.

There have been reports, denied from the Iraqi side, that proscribed activities are conducted underground. Iraq should provide information on any underground structure suitable for the production or storage of weapons of mass destruction.

During inspections of declared our undeclared facilities, inspection teams have examined building structures for any possible underground facilities. In addition, ground-penetrating radar equipment was used in several specific locations. No underground facilities for chemical or biological production or storage were found so far.

I should add that, both for the monitoring of ground transportation and for the inspection of underground facilities, we would need to increase our staff in Iraq. I'm not talking about a doubling of the staff. I would rather have twice the amount of high-quality information about sites to inspect than twice the number of expert inspectors to send.

On 14 February, I reported to the council that the Iraqi side had become more active in taking and proposing steps which potentially might shed new light on unresolved disarmament issues. Even a week ago, when the current quarterly report was finalized, there were still relatively little tangible progress to note. Hence, the cautious formulations in the report before you. As of today, there is more.

While during our meetings in Baghdad, the Iraqi side tried to persuade us that the Al-Samoud 2 missiles they have declared fall within the permissible range set by the Security Council. The calculations of an international panel of experts led us to the opposite conclusion. Iraq has since accepted that these missiles and associated items be destroyed, and has started the process of destruction under our supervision.

The destruction undertaken constitutes a substantial measure of disarmament, indeed the first since the middle of the 1990s. We are not watching the breaking of toothpicks; lethal weapons are being destroyed.

However, I must add that the report I have today tells me that no destruction work has continued today. I hope this is a temporary break.

Until today, 34 Al-Samoud 2 missiles, including four training missiles, two combat warheads, one launcher and five engines, have been destroyed under UNMOVIC's supervision. Work is continuing to identify and inventory the parts and equipment associated with the Al-Samoud 2 program.

BLIX: Two reconstituted casting chambers used in the production of solid propellant missiles have been destroyed and the remnants melted or encased in concrete.

The legality of the Al-Fatah missile is still under review, pending further investigation and measurement of various parameters of that missile.

More papers on anthrax, VX and missiles have recently been provided. Many have been found to restate what Iraq already has declared, and some will require further study and discussion.

There is a significant Iraqi effort under way to clarify a major source of uncertainty as to the quantities of biological and chemical weapons which were unilaterally destroyed in 1991. A part of this effort concerns a disposal site which was deemed too dangerous for full investigation in the past. It is now being re-excavated.

To date, Iraq has unearthed eight complete bombs, comprising two liquid-filled intact R-400 (ph) bombs and six other complete bombs. Bomb fragments are also found. Samples have been taken.

The investigation of the destruction site could, in the best case, allow the determination of the number of bombs destroyed at that site. It should be followed by serious and credible effort to determine the separate issue of how many R-400-type (ph) bombs were produced.

In this, as in other matters, the inspection work is moving on and may yield results.

Iraq proposed an investigation using advanced technology to quantify the amount of unilaterally destroyed anthrax dumped at a site. However, even if the use of advanced technology could quantify the amount of anthrax said to be dumped at the site, the results will still be open to interpretation. Defining the quantity of anthrax destroyed must of course be followed by efforts to establish what quantity was actually produced.

With respect to VX, Iraq has recently suggested a similar method to quantify VX precursors stated to have been unilaterally destroyed in the summer of 1991.

BLIX: Iraq has also recently informed us that following the adoption of the presidential decree prohibiting private individuals and mixed companies from engaging in work relating to weapons of mass destruction, further legislation on the subject is to be enacted. This appears to be in response to a letter from UNMOVIC requesting clarification of the issue.

Mr. President, what are we to make of these activities?

One can hardly avoid the impression that after a period of somewhat reluctant cooperation, there's been an acceleration of initiatives from the Iraqi side since the end of January. This is welcome. But the value of these measures must be soberly judged by how many question marks they actually succeed in straightening out. This is not yet clear.

Against this background, the question is now asked whether Iraq has cooperated, quote, ``immediately, unconditionally and actively,'' unquote, with UNMOVIC, as is required under Paragraph 9 of Resolution 1441. The answers can be seen from the factor (ph) descriptions that I have provided.

However, if more direct answers are desired, I would say the following: The Iraqi side has tried on occasion to attach conditions, as it did regarding helicopters and U-2 planes. It has not, however, so far persisted in this or other conditions for the exercise of any of our inspection rights. If it did, we would report it.

It is obvious that while the numerous initiatives which are now taken by the Iraqi side with a view to resolving some longstanding, open disarmament issues can be seen as active or even proactive, these initiatives three to four months into the new resolution cannot be said to constitute immediate cooperation. Nor do they necessarily cover all areas of relevance. They are, nevertheless, welcome. And UNMOVIC is responding to them in the hope of solving presently unresolved disarmament issues.

Mr. President, members of the council may relate most of what I have said to Resolution 1441, but UNMOVIC is performing work under several resolutions of the Security Council. The quarterly report before you is submitted in accordance with Resolution 1284, which not only created UNMOVIC but also continues to guide much of our work.

BLIX: Under the time lines set by that resolution, the results of some of this work is reported to the council before the end of this month.

Let me be more specific. Resolution 1284 instructs UNMOVIC to, I quote, ``address unresolved disarmament issues,'' unquote, and to identify, quote, ``key remaining disarmament tasks,'' unquote. And the latter are to be submitted for approval by the council in the context of a work program. UNMOVIC will be ready to submit a draft work program this month as required.

UNMOVIC, UNSCOM and the Amorin Panel did valuable work to identify the disarmament issues which were still open at the end of 1998. UNMOVIC has used this material as starting points, but analyzed the data behind it and data and document post-1998 up to the present time to compile its own list of unresolved disarmament issues, or rather clustered issues.

It is the answers to these issues which we seek through our inspection activities. And it is also from the list of these clustered issues that UNMOVIC will identify the key remaining disarmament tasks. As noted in the report before you, this list of clustered issues is ready.

UNMOVIC is only required to submit the work program with the key remaining (inaudible) to the council. As I understand, several council members are interested in the working document with a complete cluster of disarmament issues. And we have declassified it and are ready to make it available to members of the council on request.

In this working document, which may still be adjusted in the light of new information, members will get a more up-to-date review of the outstanding issues than in the documents of 1999, which members usually refer to.

Each cluster in the working document ends with a number of points indicating what Iraq could do to solve the issue. Hence, Iraq's cooperation could be measured against a successful resolution of issues.

I should note that the working document contains much information and discussion about the issues which existed at the end of 1998, including information which has come to light after '98. It contains much less information and discussion about the period after 1998, primarily because of paucity of information.

Nevertheless, intelligence agencies have expressed the view that proscribed programs have continued or restarted in this period. It is further contended that proscribed programs and items are located in underground facilities, as I mentioned, and that proscribed items are being moved around Iraq. The working document does contain suggestions on how these concerns may be tackled.

Mr. President, let me conclude by telling you that UNMOVIC is currently drafting the work program which Resolution 1284 requires us to submit this month.

BLIX: It will obviously contain our proposed list of key remaining disarmament tasks. It will describe the reinforced system of ongoing monitoring and verification that the council has asked us to implement.

It will also describe the various subsystems which constitute the program; for instance, for aerial surveillance, for information from governments and suppliers, for sampling, for the checking of road traffic, et cetera.

How much time would it take to resolve the key remaining disarmament tasks? While cooperation can--cooperation can and is to be immediate, disarmament, and at any rate verification of it, cannot be instant. Even with a proactive Iraqi attitude induced by continued outside pressure, it will still take some time to verify sites and items, analyze documents, interview relevant persons and draw conclusions. It will not take years, nor weeks, but months.

Neither governments nor inspectors would want disarmament inspection to go on forever. However, it must be remembered that in accordance with the governing resolutions, a sustained inspection and monitoring system is to remain in place after verified disarmament to give confidence and to strike an alarm if signs were seen of the revival of any proscribed weapons programs.

Thank you, Mr. President.

SECURITY COUNCIL PRESIDENT (THROUGH TRANSLATOR): I thank Dr. Blix for his briefing.

I now give the floor to Dr. Mohamed ElBaradei, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Baradei, you have the floor.

ELBARADEI: Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, my report to the council today is an update on the status of the International Atomic Energy Agency's nuclear verification activities in Iraq pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1441 and other relevant resolutions.

When I reported last to the council on 14 February, I explained that the agency's inspection activities has moved well beyond the reconnaissance phase--that is, reestablishing our knowledge base regarding Iraq nuclear capabilities--into the investigative phase, which focuses on the central question before the IAEA relevant to disarmament: whether Iraq has revived, or attempted to revive, its defunct nuclear weapons program over the last four years.

At the outset, let me state on general observation, namely that during the past four years at the majority of Iraqi sites industrial capacity has deteriorated substantially due to the departure of the foreign support that was often present in the late '80s, the departure of large numbers of skilled Iraqi personnel in the past decade, and the lack of consistent maintenance by Iraq of sophisticated equipment.

At only a few inspected sites involved in industrial research, development and manufacturing have the facilities been improved and new personnel been taken on.

This overall deterioration in industrial capacity is naturally of direct relevance to Iraq's capability for resuming a nuclear weapon program.

ELBARADEI: The IAEA has now conducted a total of 218 nuclear inspections at 141 sites, including 21 that have not been inspected before. In addition, the agency experts have taken part in many joint UNMOVIC-IAEA inspections.

Technical support for nuclear inspections has continued to expand. The three operational air samplers have collected from key locations in Iraq weekly air particulate samples that are being sent to laboratories for analysis. Additional results of water, sediment, vegetation and material sample analysis have been received from the relevant laboratories.

Our vehicle-borne radiation survey team has covered some 2,000 kilometers over the past three weeks. Survey access has been gained to over 75 facilities, including military garrisons and camps, weapons factories, truck parks, and manufacturing facilities and residential areas.

Interviews have continued with relevant Iraqi personnel, at times with individuals and groups in the workplace during the course of unannounced inspections, and on other occasions in pre-arranged meetings with key scientists and other specialists known to have been involved with Iraq's past nuclear program.

The IAEA has continued to conduct interviews, even when the conditions were not in accordance with the IAEA-preferred modalities, with a view to gaining as much information as possible, information that could be cross-checked for validity with other sources and which could be helpful in our assessment of areas under investigation.

As you may recall, when we first began to request private, unescorted interviews, the Iraqi interviewees insisted on taping the interviews and keeping the recorded tapes. Recently, upon our insistence, individuals have been consenting to being interviewed without escort and without a taped record. The IAEA has conducted two such private interviews in the last 10 days, and hope that its ability to conduct private interviews will continue unhindered, including possibly interviews outside Iraq.

I should add that we are looking into further refining the modalities for conducting interviews to ensure that they are conducted freely and to alleviate concerns that interviews are being listened to by other Iraqi parties. In our view, interviews outside Iraq may be the best way to ensure that interviews are free, and we intend, therefore, to request such interviews shortly.

ELBARADEI: We are also asking other states to enable us to conduct interviews with former Iraqi scientists that now reside in those states.

Mr. President, in the last few weeks, Iraq has provided a considerable volume of documentation relevant to the issues I reported earlier as being of particular concern, including Iraq's efforts to procure aluminum tubes, its attempted procurement of magnets and magnets-production capabilities, and its reported attempt to import uranium.

I will touch briefly on the progress made on each of these issues.

Since my last update to the council, the primary technical focus of IAEA field activities in Iraq has been on resolving several outstanding issues related to the possible resumption of efforts by Iraq to enrich uranium through the use of centrifuge. For that purpose, the IAEA assembled a specially qualified team of international centrifuge manufacturing experts.

With regard to the aluminum tubes, the IAEA has conducted a thorough investigation of Iraq's attempt to purchase large quantities of high-strength aluminum tubes. As previously reported, Iraq has maintained that these aluminum tubes were sold for rocket production. Extensive field investigation and document analysis have failed to uncover any evidence that Iraq intended to use these 81-millimeter tubes for any project other than the reverse engineering of rockets.

The Iraqi decision-making process with regard to the design of these rockets was well-documented. Iraq has provided copies of design documents, procurement records, minutes of committee meetings and supporting data and samples.

A thorough analysis of this information, together with information gathered from interviews with Iraqi personnel, has allowed the IAEA to develop a coherent picture of attempted purchase and intended usage of the 81-millimeter aluminum tubes, as well as the rationale behind the changes in the tolerance.

Drawing on this information, the IAEA has learned that the original tolerance for the 81-millimeter tubes were set prior to 1987 and were based on physical measurements taken from a small number of imported rockets in Iraq's possession.

Initial attempts to reverse-engineer the rockets met with little success. Tolerance were adjusted during the following years as part of ongoing efforts to revitalize a project and improve operational efficiency. The project language for a long period during this time and became the subject of several committees which resulted in the specification and tolerance changes on each occasion.

Based on available evidence, the IAEA team has concluded that Iraq efforts to import these aluminum tubes were not likely to have been related to the manufacture of centrifuge, and moreover that it was highly unlikely that Iraq could have achieved the considerable redesign needed to use them in a revived centrifuge program.

ELBARADEI: However, this issue will continue to be scrutinized and investigated.

With respect to reports about Iraq efforts to import high-strength permanent magnets or to achieve the capability for producing such magnets for use in a centrifuge enrichment program, I should note that since 1998 Iraq has purchased high-strength magnets for various uses. Iraq has declared inventories of magnets of 12 different designs. The IAEA has verified that previously acquired magnets have been used for missile guidance systems, industrial machinery, electricity meters and field telephones.

Through visit to research and production sites, review of engineering drawings and analysis of sample magnets, the IAEA expert familiar with the use of such magnets in centrifuge enrichment have verified that none of the magnets that Iraq has declared could be used directly for centrifuge magnetic bearings.

In June 2001, Iraq signed a contract for a new magnet production line for delivery and installation in 2003. The delivery has not yet occurred, and Iraqi documentations and interviews of Iraqi personnel indicate that this contract will not be executed.

However, they have concluded that the replacement of foreign procurement with domestic magnet production seems reasonable from an economic point of view.

In addition, the training and experience acquired by Iraq in pre-1991 period make it likely that Iraq possesses the expertise to manufacture high-strength permanent magnets suitable for use in enrichment centrifuges. The IAEA will continue, therefore, to monitor and inspect equipment and materials that could be used to make magnets for enrichment centrifuges.

ELBARADEI: With regard to uranium acquisition, the IAEA has made progress in its investigation ito reports that Iraq sought to buy uranium from Niger in recent years. The investigation was centered on documents provided by a number of states that pointed to an agreement between Niger and Iraq for the sale of uranium between 1999 and 2001. The IAEA has discussed these reports with the governments of Iraq and Israel, both of which have denied that any such activity took place.

For its part, Iraq has provided the IAEA with a comprehensive explanation of its relations with Niger and has described a visit by an Iraqi official to a number of African countries including Niger in February 1999, which Iraq thought might have given rise to the reports. The IAEA was able to review correspondence coming from various bodies of the government of Niger and to compare the form, format, contents and signature of that correspondence with those of the alleged procurement-related documentation.

Based on thorough analysis, the IAEA has concluded with the concurrence of outside experts that these documents which formed the basis for the report of recent uranium transaction between Iraq and Niger are in fact not authentic. We have therefore concluded that these specific allegations are unfounded. However, we will continue to follow up any additional evidence if it emerges relevant to efforts by Iraq to illicitly import nuclear materials.

Many concerns regarding Iraq's possible intention to resume its nuclear program have arisen from Iraq's procurement efforts reported by a number of states. In addition, many of Iraq's efforts to procure commodities and products, including magnets and aluminum tubes, have been conducted in contravention of the sanctions controlled specified under Security Council Resolution 661 and other relevant resolutions.

The issue of procurement efforts remains under thorough investigation, and further verification will be forthcoming. In fact, an IAEA team of technical experts is currently in Iraq, composed of custom investigators and computer forensics specialists, to conduct a--which is conducting a series (ph) of investigations so (ph) inspection of trading (ph) companies and commercial organizations aimed at understanding Iraq's pattern of procurement.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I am able to report today that in the area of nuclear weapons, the most lethal weapons of mass destruction, inspection in Iraq are moving forward.

ELBARADEI: Since the resumption of inspection a little over three months ago, and particularly during the three weeks since my last ordered (ph) report to the council, the IAEA has made important progress in identifying what nuclear-related capabilities remain in Iraq and in its assessment of whether Iraq has made any effort to revive its past nuclear program during the intervening four years since inspections were brought to a halt.

At this stage, the following can be stated:

One, there is no indication of resumed nuclear activities in those buildings that were identified through the use of satellite imagery as being reconstructed or newly erected since 1998, nor any indication of nuclear-related prohibited activities at any inspected sites.

Second, there is no indication that Iraq has attempted to import uranium since 1990.

Three, there is no indication that Iraq has attempted to import aluminum tubes for use in centrifuge enrichment. Moreover, even had Iraq pursued such a plan, it would have encountered practical difficulties in manufacturing centrifuge out of the aluminum tubes in question.

Fourth, although we are still reviewing issues related to magnets and magnet-production, there is no indication to date that Iraq imported magnets for use in centrifuge enrichment program.

As I stated above, the IAEA will naturally continue further to scrutinize and investigate all of the above issues.

After three months of intrusive inspections, we have to date found no evidence or plausible indication of the revival of a nuclear weapon program in Iraq.

We intend to continue our inspection activities, making use of all additional rights granted to us by Resolution 1441 and all additional tools that might be available to us, including reconnaissance platforms and all relevant technologies.

We also hope to continue to receive from states actionable information relevant to our mandate.

I should note that in the past three weeks, possibly as a result of ever-increasing pressure by the international community, Iraq has been forthcoming in its cooperation, particularly with regard to the conduct of private interviews and in making available evidence that could contribute to the resolution of matters of IAEA concern. I do hope that Iraq will continue to expand the scope and accelerate the pace of its cooperation.

ELBARADEI: The detailed knowledge of Iraq capabilities that IAEA experts have accumulated since 1991, combined with the extended rights provided by Resolution 1441, the active commitment by all states to help us fulfill our mandate, and the recently increased level of Iraqi cooperation should enable us in the near future to provide the Security Council with an objective and thorough assessment of Iraq's nuclear-related capabilities.

However, however credible this assessment may be, we will endeavor, in view of the inherent uncertainties associated with any verification process, and particularly in the light of Iraq past record of cooperation, to evaluate Iraq capabilities on a continuous basis as part of our long-term monitoring and verification program in order to provide the international community with ongoing and real-time assurances.

Thank you, Mr. President.

A Last Chance to Stop Iraq
By KENNETH M. POLLACK

WASHINGTON -- With the Bush administration set to put a resolution on Iraq before the United Nations Security Council next week, those opposed to war will rally around the notion that Saddam Hussein can be deterred from aggression. They will continue to say that the mere presence of United Nations inspectors will prevent him from building nuclear weapons, and that even if he were to acquire them he could still be contained.

Unfortunately, these claims fly in the face of 12 years -- and in truth more like 30 years -- of history.

Observers have a very poor track record in predicting the progress of the Iraqi nuclear weapons program. In the late 1980's, the nuclear experts of the American intelligence services were convinced that the Iraqis were at least 5 and probably 10 years away from having a nuclear weapon. For its part, the International Atomic Energy Agency did not even believe that Iraq had a nuclear weapons program. After the 1991 Persian Gulf war, United Nations inspectors found that not only did Iraq have a program far more extensive than anyone had realized, but it was also less than two years away from producing a weapon.

Four years later, the international agency was so certain that it had eradicated the Iraqi nuclear program that it wanted to end aggressive inspections in favor of passive "monitoring." Then a slew of defectors came out of Iraq -- including Hussein Kamel al-Majid, the son-in-law of Saddam Hussein who led the Iraqi program to build weapons of mass destruction; Wafiq al-Samarrai, one of Saddam Hussein's intelligence chiefs; and Khidhir Hamza, a leading scientist with the nuclear weapons program. These defectors reported that outside pressure had not only failed to eradicate the nuclear program, it was bigger and more cleverly spread out and concealed than anyone had imagined it to be.

In the late 1990's, American and international nuclear experts again concluded that the Iraqi nuclear program was dormant: yes, the scientists were still working in teams; yes, they still had all of the plans; and yes, they probably were hiding some machinery -- but they were not making any progress. Then another batch of important defectors escaped to Europe and told Western intelligence services that after the inspectors left Iraq in 1998, Saddam Hussein had started a crash program to build a nuclear weapon and that the Iraqis had devised methods to hide the effort.

The reports of these defectors prompted the German intelligence service in 2001 to conclude that Iraq was only three to six years away from having one or more nuclear weapons. Today, the American, British and Israeli intelligence services believe that unless he is stopped, Saddam Hussein is likely to acquire a nuclear weapon in the second half of this decade.

Even this estimate may be overly optimistic. While it's true that the presence of weapons inspectors does hamper the Iraqis, there are some critical caveats. We simply do not know how close Iraq is to acquiring a nuclear weapon, nor do we know to what extent the inspectors' presence is slowing the Iraqi program. What we do know is that for more than a decade we have consistently overestimated the ability of inspectors to impede the Iraqi efforts and we have consistently underestimated how far along Iraq has been toward acquiring a nuclear weapon.

For all of these reasons the assurances from Mohamed ElBaradei, the head of the International Atomic Energy Agency, that he has Iraq's nuclear program well in hand should be less than comforting.

Nor is there reason to be confident about how Saddam Hussein will behave once he has acquired a nuclear weapon.

He has been anything but circumspect about his aspirations: He has stated that he wants to turn Iraq into a "superpower" that will dominate the Middle East, to liberate Jerusalem and to drive the United States out of the region. He has said he believes the only way he can achieve his goals is through the use of force. Indeed, his half-brother and former chief of intelligence, Barzan al-Tikriti, was reported to say that Iraq needs nuclear weapons because it wants "a strong hand in order to redraw the map of the Middle East."

It is probably true that fear of retaliation kept Iraq from using chemical weapons against coalition forces during the gulf war. However, this should give us little comfort that he will be similarly deterred in the future. Before the 1991 war, Secretary of State James Baker warned his Iraqi counterpart, Tariq Aziz, that Iraq faced "terrible consequences" if it used weapons of mass destruction, mounted terrorist attacks or destroyed Kuwaiti oil fields.

Yet despite this warning, Saddam Hussein tried to send terrorist teams to America and did blow up the Kuwaiti oil fields -- he simply gambled on which two of the three things Mr. Baker mentioned were unlikely to result in America ending the regime. (Many officials from that Bush administration have suggested, in fact, that Saddam Hussein didn't even make the right calculation.)

Proponents of deterrence also argue that since nobody has ever actually tried to deter Saddam Hussein from attacking another country, how can we claim that doing so will be difficult in the future? The example most often cited is the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, where the common wisdom holds that because of the botched messages he received from the American ambassador, April Glaspie, Iraq had no reason to believe we would fight.

In fact, all the evidence indicates the opposite: Saddam Hussein believed it was highly likely that the United States would try to liberate Kuwait, but convinced himself that we would send only lightly armed, rapidly deployable forces that would be quickly destroyed by his 120,000-man Republican Guard. After this, he assumed, Washington would acquiesce to his conquest.

Much of the evidence for this remains classified, but at least two points can be made using public material: Tariq Aziz has told reporters that this was what Saddam Hussein thought at the time; and we know that when the Republican Guards invaded Kuwait they moved quickly -- even before they had consolidated control over the country -- to set up defenses along Kuwait's borders and against amphibious and airborne landings.

In other words, Saddam Hussein thinks we tried to deter him, and that we failed. He was ready and willing to fight the United States for Kuwait.

Even that crushing defeat, however, didn't dim his adventurism. Just two years later he attempted to assassinate the emir of Kuwait and former President Bush. This was not a rational act but a meaningless bid for revenge. And he is lucky that the attempts failed. If they had succeeded, there is no question that the United States would have obliterated his regime.

Then, in October 2000, he dispatched five divisions to western Iraq. All of the evidence available to the American government indicated that, with the acquiescence of Damascus, he intended to move them through Syria and into the Golan Heights. In response, Washington began preparing a military strike far greater than Desert Fox of 1999 (which itself prompted revolts throughout Iraq for six months), and the Israeli military planned its own crushing response. Only American and Saudi diplomatic intervention with Syria, combined with the Iraqi military's logistical problems, quashed the adventure.

Most ominous today, we have heard from many intelligence sources -- including some of the highest-level defectors now in America and abroad -- that Saddam Hussein believes that once he has acquired nuclear weapons it is the United States that will be deterred. He apparently believes that America will be so terrified of getting into a nuclear confrontation that it would not dare to stop him should he decide to invade, threaten or blackmail his neighbors.

America has never encountered a country that saw nuclear weapons as a tool for aggression. During the cold war we feared that the Russians thought this way, but we eventually learned that they were far more conservative. Our experts may be split on how to handle North Korea, but they agree that the Pyongyang regime wants nuclear weapons for defensive purposes -- to stave off the perceived threat of an American attack. The worst that anyone can suggest is that North Korea might blackmail us for economic aid or sell such weapons to someone else (with Iraq being near the top of that list). Only Saddam Hussein sees these weapons as offensive -- as enabling aggression.

Finally, we cannot forget that all evidence has shown Saddam Hussein to be an incorrigible optimist who willfully ignores signs of danger. Consider that on at least five occasions over the last three decades, he has embarked on foreign policy adventures that nearly destroyed him: his attack on Iraq's Kurds in 1974 (which might have ended in an Iranian assault on Baghdad if the shah of Iran had not unexpectedly decided to double-cross the Kurds instead); his invasion of Iran in 1980; his invasion of Kuwait in 1990; his assassination attempt against former President Bush in 1993; and his threatened attack on Kuwait in 1994. In each case, he took a course of action that we know even his closest advisers considered extremely dangerous.

This is the problem with Saddam Hussein. The assertion that he is not intentionally suicidal may be true, but it is irrelevant. In the end, he has frequently proven inadvertently suicidal.

And he seems to be doing it again. With more than 150,000 American soldiers taking positions on his borders he continues to run the international inspectors in circles, foolishly confident that his minor concessions will stave off an invasion. Is there any other person on earth who wouldn't turn his country inside out to prove that he did not have more weapons of mass destruction?

Once again, he seems to be betting his life that the game is not as dangerous as everyone else thinks it is.

Given Saddam Hussein's current behavior, his track record, his aspirations and his terrifying beliefs about the utility of nuclear weapons, it would be reckless for us to assume that he can be deterred. Yes, we must weigh the costs of a war with Iraq today, but on the other side of the balance we must place the cost of a war with a nuclear-armed Iraq tomorrow.

Forum editorial: Put an end to Estrada filibuster
The Forum - 03/09/2003

Notably absent among senators who voted to break a filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the nation?s most important federal circuit court were North Dakota Democrats Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Minnesota
Democrat Mark Dayton.

Their opposition to the highly qualified Estrada might make political sense as the nation moves toward a presidential campaign, but it makes no judicial sense. Playing politics with a president?s judicial appointments is nothing new, but doing so with Estrada is a disservice to the judiciary and an insult to an eminently qualified, Harvard-educated, Hispanic American..

Fact is, most Democrats in the Senate don?t like Estrada because (horrors!) he might be a conservative. But really, who knows? That much- reviled liberal Earl Warren was a conservative from California who was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court by President Eisenhower in 1953. Justice David Souter, allegedly a New Hampshire conservative, was appointed to the high court by George Bush (Sr.), and promply took his place on the court as a reliable liberal.

If Democrats can block Estrada from a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, they effectively eliminate him from consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court when a vacancy occurs. It?s a foolish strategy that is sure to backfire next time a Democrat occupies the White House.

The rap against the nominee is that he has not been forthcoming enough about his judicial philosophy. That?s nonsense that was blown away a few days ago when Sen. Lamar Alexander, R-Tenn., cited a long litany of questions from members of the Senate Judiciary Committee that were answered in eyes-glazed-over detail by Estrada. Yet, facts did not matter. All but four Democratic senators took their marching orders from Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., whose only priority these days seems to be to embarrass the president. The vote Thursday to continue the filibuster was 55-44. Sixty votes were needed to end it. Estrada received the highest rating the American Bar Association can give. He?s been praised by Democrats and Republicans for his work in the Solicitor General?s office in Democratic and Republican administrations.

He certainly is as qualified or more qualified than many judges in the federal judiciary. And more is known about him than was known about many nominees, including nominees who were confirmed for the Supreme Court, and most certainly for the circuit courts.

The Democratic obstructionism is blatant politics poorly disguised as cluck-clucking about Estrada?s ?qualifications.? It?s misuse of the filibuster and abuse of the public trust. Democratic senators ? including those from North Dakota and Minnesota ? should abandon the filibuster and allow a Senate vote on the Estrada nomination.

Forum editorial: Put an end to Estrada filibuster

The Forum - 03/09/2003

Notably absent amon g senators who voted to break a filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the nation's most important federal circuit court were North Dakota De mocrats Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Minnesota Democrat Mark Dayton.

Their opposition to the highly qualified Estrada might make political sense as the nation moves toward a presidential campaign, but it makes no judicial sense. Playing politic s with a president's judicial appointments is nothing new, but doing so wit h Estrada is a disservice to the judiciary and an insult to an eminently qualified, Harvard-educated, Hispanic American.

Fact is, most Democrats in the Senate don't like Estrada because (horrors!) he might be a conservative. But really, who knows? That much- reviled liberal Earl Warren was a conservative from California who was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court by President Eisenhower in 1953. Justice David Souter , allegedly a New Hampshire conservative, was appointed to the high court by George Bush (Sr.), and promply took his place on the court as a reliable liberal.

If Democrats can block Estrada from a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, they effectively eliminate him from consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court when a vacancy occurs. It's a foolish strategy that is sure to backfire next tim e a Democrat occupies the White House.

The rap against the nominee is that he has not been forthcoming enough about his judicial philosophy. That's nonsense that was blown away a few days ago when Sen. Lamar Alexander, R-Tenn., cited a long litany of questions from members of the Senate Judiciary Committee that were answered in eyes-glazed-over detail by Estrada. Yet, facts did not matter. All but four Democratic senators took their marching orders from Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., whose only priority these days seems to be to embarrass the president. The vote Thursday to continue the filibuster was 55-44. Sixty votes were needed to end it. Estrada received the highest rating the American Bar Association can give. He's been praised b y Democrats and Republicans for his work in the Solicitor General's office in Democratic and Republican administrations.

He certainly is as qualified or more qualified than many judges in the federal judiciary.. And mor e is known about him than was known about many nominees, including nominees who were confirmed for the Supreme Court, and most certainly for the circuit courts .

The Democratic obstructionism is blatant politics poorly disguised as cluck-clucking about Estrada's "qualifications." It's misuse of the filibust er and abuse of the public trust. Democratic senators – including those from North Dakota and Minnesota – should aba ndon the filibuster and allow a Senate vote on the Estrada nomination.

Judging Estrada: Democrats' gamble could help Bush
Published March 9, 2003

Having lost control of the Senate in 2002 elections, the Democrats have turned sour grapes into a bitter fight over President George W. Bush's historic nomination of a Latino immigrant to the appellate bench in Washington.

Democrats vow to continue to filibuster Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Fight it based on "principle." Fight it to the bitter end.

The end will be bitter, but there's little principle in the Democrats' cause. It's all political posturing, a trial run for the 2004 presidential election that serves to put Bush on notice about the battles ahead over any Supreme Court nominee.

Republicans are hoping that Democrats' obstreperousness will help Bush secure re-election with the help of the Latino vote in two years. For sure, the backlash against the Senate Democrats' blockade is growing. At least four Democrats, including Florida's Bill Nelson, have broken with party ranks to support a vote on Estrada.

Conspicuously absent from this debate is Sen. Bob Graham, who's running for president and, at last count, remains undecided. If Graham were to vote to end the filibuster, would he jeopardize his party's nomination? Or does he tow the liberal party line and write off Florida's substantial Cuban-American vote -- backing he has secured in past Senate bids -- figuring it would be a no-win in a national contest against the exiles' favorite anti-Castro hard-line son, George W. Bush?

I know. Graham's recovering from open-heart surgery. Good reason not to have voted last week to end the filibuster. But what's Graham's excuse for not publicly stating, at least, his opinion on Estrada?

It's not just conservatives who are bothered. Many Hispanic moderates and independents are appalled that Senate Democrats would try to stop a vote. Estrada is no Clarence Thomas, though Democratic leaders are treating him as if he hadn't a clue about the law or the ethical backbone to serve as judge.

Estrada has been ranked as "most qualified" by the American Bar Association. He's a Harvard grad with vast experience, arguing 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court for the U.S. Solicitor General's Office during the Bush (the elder) and Clinton administrations. He even took on a pro-bono death penalty case, which should be a plus for the liberals.

But no. Some Democrats blame Estrada's "silence" on such constitutional issues as privacy (aka abortion rights). Odd because Estrada answered the Senate Judiciary panel's questions with the same type of measured response that other confirmed judges have used. On the right to privacy, Estrada said, "The Supreme Court has so held" that right, and added he has "no view of any nature whatsoever that would keep me from applying that case law faithfully."

About Roe v. Wade, he said, "It is the law." And later, "I will follow it."

What more do Democrats want? They want to know Estrada's personal beliefs on abortion, but that's not ethically appropriate. Judicial candidates should be asked about their philosophy -- do they believe in judicial precedent, for instance? Do they adhere to or abhor judicial activism? They shouldn't be asked about specific legal issues that may come before the court.

There's another intriguing political puzzle to Estrada's nomination: his heritage. Were Estrada of Mexican or Puerto Rican heritage his historic nomination might have a very different trajectory even if it did come from a conservative president. But, alas, Estrada was born in Honduras. So Hispanic Democrats in Congress -- most of them of Puerto Rican or Mexican ancestry -- may feel their constituents don't much care about a Honduran-American getting on the bench.

All voters should care about the democratic process and simple fairness, though. Estrada deserves a vote, up or down. Graham, who's made tough calls before, should give Estrada that courtesy.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, March 11, 2003

KEY POINTS***

*Chief Weapons Inspector Hans Blix filed a document with the UN detailing 29 "clusters" of unresolved disarmament issues, covering chemical and biological weapons and the means to deliver them, including:

-Undeclared UAV: Blix revealed the recent discovery of an undeclared Unmanned Aerial Vehicle.

-Lists of WMD Personnel: According to Blix's report, "Iraq lists less than 132 'experts, specialists, and technicians'...as having worked in the entire chemical weapons program. UNMOVIC databases, on the other hand, indicate that over 325 individuals were engaged in chemical weapons related research or had responsible positions associated with agent production at [one facility] alone."

-Anthrax: Blix's report states "UNMOVIC has credible information that the total quantity of BW agent in bombs, warheads, and in bulk at the time of the Gulf War was 7,000 liters more than declared by Iraq. This additional agent was most likely all anthrax. Based on all the available evidence the strong presumption is that about 10,000 liters of anthrax was not destroyed and may still exist."

*16 weeks after the passage of 1441, the Iraqi regime has not complied and has not cooperated "immediately, unconditionally, and actively," as required by UN Resolution 1441. Iraq's recent gestures are nothing more than attempts to game the inspectors, split the international community, and sap its resolve.

*Saddam Hussein possesses weapons of terror, and provides funding, training, and safe haven to terrorists who would willingly use weapons of mass destruction. If the world fails to confront the threat posed by the Iraqi regime, free nations would assume immense and unacceptable risks.

*Saddam has had 12 years to disarm. The diplomatic window is closing. Security Council members must stand and be counted, and sometime this week we will call for a vote on the resolution. We are hopeful the members of the Security Council will live up to their obligations and vote to affirm and enforce UN Resolution 1441.

The imperative to create a just, effective international order requires us to push for results, not rhetoric....I have hope the Security Council and the UN can act decisively [in Iraq] and not act in the same way they acted in Rwanda...because the Security Council can be wrong. "This information on the drones...should be of concern to everyone. Iraq continues to demonstrate that it has not really changed its strategic intent, which is the case we've been making all along."
Secretary Powell, to reporters, 3-10-03

"The Security Council needs to show that its resolutions mean something. We have a lot of difficult problems out there in which we need a strong, vital Security Council - not one that is still reeling from a history of having been unable to act in Kosovo...unable to act in Rwanda. How long are we going to wait for Saddam Hussein, who is a murderer and homicidal - not just against the neighborhood but also against his own people? How long are we going to allow him to defy the United Nations?"

INTERNATIONAL VOICES

Excerpt from a speech by Paul Kagame, President of Rwanda, 3-8-03

"A world in which terrorism, human death and genocide exists is a dangerous world to live in. The imperative to create a just, effective international order requires us to push for results, not rhetoric….I have hope the Security Council and the UN can act decisively [in Iraq] and not act in the same way they acted in Rwanda…because the Security Council can be wrong. It was wrong in Rwanda about the genocide, and we lost one million people."

KEY POINTS

- Chief Weapons Inspector Hans Blix filed a document with the UN detailing 29 "clusters" of unresolved disarmament issues, covering chemical and biological weapons and the means to deliver them, including:
  - Undeclared UAV: Blix revealed the recent discovery of an undeclared Unmanned Aerial Vehicle.
  - Lists of WMD Personnel: According to Blix's report, "Iraq lists less than 132 'experts, specialists, and technicians'…as having worked in the entire chemical weapons program. UNMOVIC databases, on the other hand, indicate that over 325 individuals were engaged in chemical weapons related research or had responsible positions associated with agent production at [one facility] alone."
  - Anthrax: Blix's report states "UNMOVIC has credible information that the total quantity of BW agent in bombs, warheads, and in bulk at the time of the Gulf War was 7,000 liters more than declared by Iraq. This additional agent was most likely all anthrax. Based on all the available evidence the strong presumption is that about 10,000 liters of anthrax was not destroyed and may still exist."
- 16 weeks after the passage of 1441, the Iraqi regime has not complied and has not cooperated "immediately, unconditionally, and actively," as required by UN Resolution 1441. Iraq's recent gestures are nothing more than attempts to game the inspectors, split the international community, and sap its resolve.
- Saddam Hussein possesses weapons of terror, and provides funding, training, and safe haven to terrorists who would willingly use weapons of mass destruction. If the world fails to confront the threat posed by the Iraqi regime, free nations would assume immense and unacceptable risks.
- Saddam has had 12 years to disarm. The diplomatic window is closing. Security Council members must stand and be counted, and sometime this week we will call for a vote on the resolution. We are hopeful the members of the Security Council will live up to their obligations and vote to affirm and enforce UN Resolution 1441.

Thursday March 13, 2003

Thank you very much, Chairman Specter, Senator Harkin, distinguished committee members, for calling this very important hearing, and for inviting me here to discuss the Bush Administration and Department of Health and Human Service's strong support for legislation that increases access to care for Americans by fixing the broken litigation system.

Before I begin, let me start out by thanking this committee for its leadership and vision on this important issue. (Insert something related from committee's efforts in last session on tort or quality care). (Insert any specific member compliment-does Claude have any history testifying before this committee before?)

On behalf of our President, I must report that there is today a threat to the health care quality of all Americans because of a litigation system that does more to reward trial lawyers than to help injured patients. This system is impairing access to care for all Americans. This Administration strongly believes that the role of government is to protect the freedom of all people to take steps to improve their own health. We must renew our commitment to this principle by harnessing, not undermining, the market-based system that has made American health care an example of quality and innovation to the whole world.

The medical litigation crisis isn't about doctors or hospitals or insurance companies or even lawyers; it's about patients. This crisis is threatening quality of care; it's threatening access to care for all Americans. The Administration is calling upon this committee, and the full Senate, to act, and enact legislation this session that will reform the medical litigation system, and improve patient safety by providing confidential protections necessary for reporting and collaborative efforts.

Our Department issued a report earlier this month entitled: "Addressing the New Health Care Crisis: Reforming the Medical Litigation System to Improve the Quality of Health Care," which shows how problems associated with medical litigation have significantly worsened in this past year. Premiums charged to specialists in 18 states without reasonable limits on non-economic damages increased by 39% between 2000 and 2001. Premiums in these states have now gone up an additional 51%. In other words, they have almost doubled in two years. The report documents the spiraling cost of insurance for health care providers, which is impairing patients' access to care, as well as the cost and quality of care.

We have found that more doctors, hospitals, and nursing homes are finding it increasingly difficult to obtain insurance against lawsuits, and as a result more patients in more states are facing greater difficulty in obtaining access to quality care and physicians.

Pregnant women in states like Nevada, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Florida have to drive hours to find an obstetrician who can care for them. Several states, like Vermont, Mississippi, Nevada, and Massachusetts have witnessed an exodus of obstetricians from their state.

Trauma centers in several states have had to close because insurance carriers were not willing to offer malpractice liability insurance to doctors staffing it, or surgeons could no longer afford the malpractice insurance. Some doctors' premiums have increased from $40,000 to $200,000.

In several states, physicians are leaving their practices, because of the skyrocketing rise in insurance premiums. In Mississippi, doctors have moved across the river to Louisiana to serve the same patients from Mississippi because they can no longer afford to practice there. Washington State has reported a thirty-one percent (31%) increase in the number of physicians moving out of state since 1998. The Massachusetts Medical Society reported that rising premiums in their state have forced many obstetricians out of delivering babies. The Florida Medical Directors Association has reported that attending physicians have stopped following patients in nursing homes in the last 12 months because of difficulty obtaining liability coverage.

Six of the largest nursing home companies have filed for bankruptcy in the past two years, largely because of the uncontrolled costs of medical liability premiums and tort related expenses. One-third of hospitals saw an increase of 100% or more in liability premiums in 2002, and over one-fourth of all hospitals have reported either a curtailment or complete discontinuation of services as a result of growing liability premium expenses.

One of the main reasons we are faced this litigation crisis is the fact that too many lawsuits are filed against doctors that have no merit. The unpredictability of our liability system means that plaintiffs' attorneys are encouraged to file frivolous cases, so called "junk lawsuits", in the hope of winning the lottery and receiving a very large verdict. Mega-million dollar "jackpot" jury awards for non-economic damages are a very real problem to our health care system in themselves, and because they influence settlements. ~~The President and the Secretary strongly believe that the role of government is to protect the freedom of all people to take steps to improve their own health. We must renew our commitment to this principle by harnessing, not undermining, the market-based system that has made American health care an example of quality and innovation to the whole world.~~

~~Reform of the medical litigation system is a critical part of this effort. The system as it stands is a horrible mess.~~ Between 1991 and 2001, the maximum payment reported to the National Practitioner Data Bank escalated from $5,300,000 to $20,700,000. The number of payments of $1 million or more reported to the National Practitioner Data Bank exploded in the past 7 years nationwide, from 298 in 1991 to 806 in 2002.

Physicians are reacting to the threat of litigation by avoiding the specialties that present the greatest risk of a lawsuit. A recent survey of physicians revealed that one-third shied away from going into a particular specialty because they feared the liability exposure. Fear of liability also forces physicians to engage in the practice of defensive medicine. The practice of defensive medicine, performing tests and providing treatments to protect themselves from the risk of possible litigation, is astounding. Seventy-nine percent (79%) of physicians admit that fear of litigation caused them to order more tests; Seventy-four percent (74%) refer more patients to specialists than they otherwise would. Fifty percent (50%) have recommended what they consider to be not-medically necessary procedures to confirm diagnoses because of litigation fears.

The litigation system attacks the wallets of every American. We have calculated that each American household is taxed over $1,200 to pay the costs of associated with defending frivolous lawsuits, jackpot jury awards, and the costs associated with defensive medicine.

At the same time, this crisis is being caused by a medical liability system that does not serve the interests of patients. Up to 70% of medical liability claims result in no payments to patients, but it costs an average of over $40,000 to defend each claim. And less than 2% of cases result in trial victories for plaintiffs. Of the small number of claimants that achieve a large judgment, it is not as attractive as it may seem at first blush. A plaintiff who wins a judgment must pay the lawyer 30-40% of it, and sometimes even more. Successful plaintiffs do not recover anything on average until five years after the injury, longer if the case goes to trail. For most injured patients, the litigation process, while offering the remote change of a jackpot judgment, provides little real benefit.

I know there are those that will argue that this is an insurance industry problem, that is caused somehow by the poor management practices of the insurance industry or a result of an "insurance cycle." These arguments have no validity.

There is an attempt to shift the blame to insurers by asserting that they have engaged in anti-competitive practices. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners has reviewed this assertion and reported that "insurance regulators have not seen evidence that suggests medical malpractice insurers have engaged or are engaging in price fixing, bid rigging, or market allocation." Rather, the NAIC also says, "the preliminary evidences points to rising loss costs and defense costs associated with litigation as the principal drivers of medical malpractice [insurance] prices."

But the fact is that the insurers are being forced to increase their premiums more rapidly and more steeply in the non-reform states than in states that have placed reasonable limits on non-economic damages. In 2001, the average loss ratio, which is the ratio of claims paid to premiums collected by insurers, in states without caps was 100.86 compared to 68.98 in states with reasonable limits on non-economic damages. Simply put, claims have outstripped premiums in states without such reforms.

This crisis has also not been caused by losses from investment income. In fact, investments by medical malpractice companies have been conservative. Most states have laws that specifically limit the percentage of assets an insurance company can put in stocks. Over the last five years, the industry wide allocation of assets into equities has been relatively constant. Medical malpractice insurers' investments in equities as a percentage of total assets, as shown below, has been 11% or less. Neither asset allocation nor investment income correlates to, much less causes, the current medical malpractice crisis. Brown Brothers Harriman & Company analyzed the relationship between premiums and the change in investment yields among malpractice insurers. The results showed that the performance of the economy and interest rates do not determine medical malpractice premiums.

The President and the Administration look forward to working with Congress, and members of this committee, as it considers ways to address the broken medical litigation system.

In February of last year President Bush outlined a framework for addressing this national crisis. First, the President believes all those who are truly injured by negligent medical care should receive swift, certain recovery of their economic injuries. They should be made whole financially. But we need reasonable limits on non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering.

Reasonable caps on non-economic damages result in lower medical liability costs and lower premiums—and thus greater access to care. We have estimated that if this reform were adopted nationally, it would save as much as $126 billion in health care costs this year. Of that amount, over $28 billion is taxpayers' money the Federal Government spends. ~~Premium increases in 2001 averaged 12% in states with caps, and 44% in states without.~~ The research is compelling that this type of reform works. Over the last two years, states with limits of $250,000 or $350,000 on non-economic damages have seen increases in premium quotes for specialists increase only 18%, but states without reasonable limits on non-economic damages, in states representing almost half of the entire United States population, have seen average increases of 45%. Since California instituted a reasonable cap on non-economic damages and other critical procedural reforms 25 years ago, liability premiums have increased by less than 1/3 as much as in the rest of the country.

The President has also called for reserving punitive damages in health care cases that justify them such as instances where they is clear and convincing proof that the defendant acted with malicious intent or deliberately failed to avoid unnecessary injury to the patient. And he's called for several other key procedural reforms that would ensure that defendants pay their fair share— prohibitions on double dipping on compensation, ensuring that cases are brought before they become stale, and taking steps to make future payments are available when patients need them.

The House of Representatives passed these reforms last September. We believe that was an important step in the right direction – and are encouraged that the Judiciary and Energy and Commerce Committees have forwarded H.R. 5 for full vote in the House. We are committed to working with this committee, and other members of the Senate to join us in bringing these common sense reforms to all Americans.

We are also encouraging states to consider other innovative ways to deal with the broken medical liability system. The Department of Health and Human Services is implementing a demonstration program, an "Early Offer Program", for rapid and fair settlement of claims made against the Department for claims of negligence by Indian Health Service and Community Health Center patients.

But we need more than just judicial system changes. If we truly want a healthcare system where quality is valued, we should spend less time seeking to assess blame and more time finding out how to change health care systems to reduce or avoid real medical errors. We need a change from a culture of blame to a culture of quality.

Seminal studies have established that one of the best ways to improve health care quality is to provide better opportunities for health professionals to work together to identify errors, or practices that may lead to errors, and correct them. Many preventable errors and complications arise not from failures by individual doctors, but from systemic problems in our increasingly complex medical delivery system. In its report, To Err is Human, The Institute of Medicine acknowledged, "the common initial reaction when an error occurs is to find and blame someone… Preventing errors and improving safety for patients require a systems approach in order to modify the conditions that contribute to errors. The problem is not bad people; the problem is that the system needs to be made safer."

Providers need to be able to study how mistakes occur and how to prevent them. When they do, the results can be incredible. The doctors and hospitals of the Pittsburgh Regional Healthcare Initiative reduced blood infections in ICUs by 20% through collaborative work to identify safer ways to treat ICU patients. Anesthesiologists dramatically reduced the patient death rate from anesthesia administered during surgery, from two deaths per 10,000 anesthetics in the mid-1980s to about one death for every 200-300,000 anesthetics administered today.

How did the anesthesiologists do it? First, they acknowledged that a problem existed, and they shared information. They standardized anesthesia machines to ensure consistency in the delivery of drugs and also addressed issues of fatigue and sleep deprivation and changes in training. To give one example: an engineering researcher observed a number of anesthesiologists in operating rooms. The researcher noted that anesthesia machines were not standardized: Turning a dial clockwise on one machine decreased the concentration of anesthesia in some machines. In others, turning the dial clockwise increased the concentration of anesthesia. The research was publicized and manufacturers standardized anesthesia machines so that dials turned in a uniform direction.

You would think that we would do everything in our power to encourage this kind of critical self-analysis and systems evaluation. Instead, our tort system has set up roadblocks that discourage health care providers from participating in quality improvement efforts. Providers are understandably reluctant to report information about adverse events or near misses and are reluctant to collaborate for fear of drawing up a road map for lawsuits.

Doctors, nurses, and hospitals that participate in good faith in peer review and research activities shouldn't be afraid that their quality efforts would get them caught up in lawsuits. The peer review laws in most states, however, do not protect the information collected and studies done by external patient safety organizations. Most laws protect only the internal peer review discussions at particular committees within a hospital. The knowledge and insights from a researcher looking at dozens or hundreds of hospitals cannot currently be adequately protected.

The President and the Secretary congratulate and support the exceptional tri-partisan efforts of members on this committee, and other members of the Senate, such as Senators Jeffords, Gregg, Frist and Breaux, who sponsored legislation in the last session that would give health professionals the ability to engage in quality and safety evaluation without fear of having it used against them in court. The House has recently reported similar bills (H.R. 663 —The Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act and H.R. 877— The Patient Safety Improvement Act of 2003). We look forward to working with this committee and members of Congress to secure passage of a similar bill and other Administration proposals to help fix the medical liability system and improve access to care for all Americans.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to represent the Administration here today. In closing, let me stress that the Administration believes that doctors who practice bad medicine ought to be held accountable for their actions. But, a system that puts good doctors out of business is a broken system, a system that restricts patient access to physicians is a broken system, a system that encourages physicians to order excessive tests and procedures that places patients at great risk is a broken system. Needless litigation does incredible harm to our health care system. It destroys the bond of trust between physicians and patients, it discourages employers from offering health care coverage, it undermines quality improvement efforts among health care systems, and it encourages lawyers to sue. Our goal is to improve the quality of care, increase access to care, and reduce the costs. The litigation system is imperiling this effort. We should rely on doctors, not lawyers to improve our health care system. We need to fix this broken medical liability system now, and the reforms I just discussed are just the first step. With good ideas, strong leadership through this committee, and much-needed reform, we can truly restore common sense to medical liability in America.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and Members of the Committee, for your commitment to this issue.

Subject:	a story no doubt not far from Sen. Graham's calculations . . .

By Sandra Fleishman

Tuesday, March 11, 2003; Page A05

President Bush's political architect, Karl Rove, is trying to talk Housing and Urban Development Secretary Mel R. Martinez into running for the Senate against veteran Democratic Sen. Bob Graham of Florida.

Word is that Rove has been urging Martinez to run, and the two men are due to sit down to discuss the matter on Wednesday. Yesterday, when a reporter asked Martinez about the matter, he congratulated her on her sources and said "good scoop." As for a Senate run, Martinez said: "I'm thinking about it but not inclined."

The White House is eager to have a strong Senate candidate on the ticket with Bush in 2004 in Florida, which gave new meaning to the term "swing state" in the 2000 election. And Martinez, who has served as an envoy for Bush to the Hispanic community and is close to Florida's Cuban American voters, could be a strong candidate. Martinez also is rumored as a Florida gubernatorial candidate in 2006 to succeed Jeb Bush. The Cuban-born Martinez was the elected chief executive of Orange County, Fla.

The news came as a surprise to Graham's office. The third-term senator, recuperating from heart surgery, is himself a presidential candidate. Though Florida law would require Graham to give up his Senate reelection campaign, he has until the spring of 2004 -- after the presidential primaries -- to decide.

Diane Leneghan Tomb, HUD's assistant secretary for public affairs, called yesterday to soften her boss's admission. "He goes to the White House for lots of meetings and lots of different topics come up," she said. "Secretary Martinez plans to continue to serve at the pleasure of the president as HUD secretary."

Dear Mr. Prezocki,

Thank you for your postcard concerning your Second Amendment rights. I appreciate you sharing your thoughts with me on this important issue.

The Republican Party proudly defends our Bill of Rights including the Second Amendment. Our platform also specifically endorses a law-abiding individual's right to own firearms.

Within the National debate over gun control measures, the need to pursue gun-crime prosecutions often is lost. That is why this Republican Administration supports strict enforcement of existing gun laws which keeps guns out of the hands of felons and other prohibited persons, while not infringing on Constitutional Rights.

I would welcome any further comments you may have on this or any other issue.

Thanks.; This follow up summary is helpful.; I also think your tradeoff risk is probably right.; We just wanted to make it clear that there will be some form of Congressional response supported by heavy majorities in both Chambers to whatever action we choose to do with the Iraqi assets and that the response will come even if they agree with the action from a foreign policy standpoint.; Our "fight/risk" with the Hill will primarily be on how to channel this response in a direction that leads to the most responsible policy and budget outcome possible.; Perhaps that is a variation of the Hagel proposal, but it very well maybe something else, like additional appropriations either for reconstruction purposes for Iraq or to some new fund to offer legitimate releief to affected victims.

Thanks.

In case our argument wasn't clear yesterday ...

* We think that this is a different fight;than last year's frozen assets battle.; Last year, we were debating whether to keep frozen assets sitting in a bank or whether to make them available for victims.; It was easy for Congress to vote to make them available because it was free money .; And even so,;Hagel, Lugar and Biden apparently agree with us that Iraqi; assets should not be available to victims.;
* This year, we'll have a different debate.; If we use our Patriot Act authority, Congress will respond by trying to compensate victims through extra appropriations in the war supp or by adding something in the '04 approps process.; They will have to vote explicitly to stick taxpayers with this expense.; We may lose, but we'll have a much stronger;case.
* And, even if Congress eventually votes to;compensate Iraqi victims,;we're better off than we would be by;setting aside;the;frozen

Iraqi assets.;

* If we reserve money for victims, we probably have to reserve the entire $1.7 billion because anything less will be grossly inadequate to compensate the human shields and the 9/11 victims.; Of the $1.7, attorneys will take between 500 and 700m.; The remaining amounts will be divided up among only a few plaintiffs.; We will have to ask for an additional $1.6b or so in the war supp. to make up for this money, and we'll;still have sympathetic;plaintiffs asking Congress to come up with more money to make up for the fact that they missed out on the $1.7.;
* If Congress passes a compensation program, they;are not likely to compensate the 9/11 victims because they are already eligible for a compensation program.; If Congress passes a fund only for the other Iraqi victims, it's highly likely it will cost less than $200m.; Even if they pass a program for all past or future;victims of any terrorist group or state, we'll have to fight hard over the terms of the program but;will at least have taken this issue off the table for future cases.
* In other words, if we don't use this money we;will be giving up; over; $1.6 billion to avoid a risk that we get stuck with $200m.;

The St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation received three Freedom of Information requests. One was for records pertaining to marine safety incidents including releases of oil into the environment as well as personal injuries for a charter barge company. The second was from an Overland, KS business for any invoices regarding that business. The final request was from a University for records concerning the March 19, 2002 memo issued by White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card regarding weapons of mass destruction.

Brett, Kristen, Diana and Kevin,

I am enclosing copies of recent letters that have been exchanged on the Asbestos Issue. The first letter from above was sent from Bob Vagley, the head of the American Insurance Association, to the Asbestos Study Group CEOs on Monday of this week with the Insurance Companies Legislative Summary attached. The second letter is from the Asbestos Study Group to Senator Hatch with the outline of their proposal – the first we have seen.

I set up a time with Diana next week to discuss where I believe we are and would encourage each of you to sit in if you have time. I believe we are meeting Wednesday at 2pm. I am also bringing Leigh Ann Pusey from AIA with me to the meeting.

Thanks.

Address

Dear <>:

On behalf of the property/casualty insurance industry, I am writing to you and other members of the Asbestos Study Group to request a CEO-to-CEO meeting between our industry and members of your group. There is growing, bipartisan agreement on the urgent need for federal asbestos litigation reform, and both of our organizations are working hard to achieve it. Yet, we have been unable to reach a consensus as to the best way to move forward, either substantively or politically.

At last Wednesday's hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Chairman Hatch charged the business and insurance industries, as well as other interest groups, to reach consensus within two weeks, so that he can introduce and move a bill before the Judiciary Committee turns its attention to other matters (including highly contentious judicial nominations). We believe that a CEO-to-CEO meeting is essential if we are to reach such a consensus. We ask that this meeting take place as quickly as possible, and hopefully within the next week.

I believe that our organizations share the same goals regarding asbestos litigation reform: fair compensation to sick plaintiffs; elimination of litigation abuse; and greater financial certainty for corporate defendants and their insurers. Our disagreements seem to involve the most workable way of achieving these goals, from both a substantive and a political perspective. Our CEOs would like the opportunity to share their perspectives with you, and to learn about yours. We already have had such a meeting with members of the Asbestos Alliance, where we had a candid and salutary discussion of the importance of venue and consolidation reform.

To start the requested dialogue, I am enclosing a short paper which we prepared outlining a reform proposal that goes beyond the medical criteria, consolidation, and limited venue reform in the Asbestos Alliance bill. We will be happy to send you legislative language incorporating these concepts, should you desire to receive it. We are open to suggestions about the exact parameters of the proposal, but believe it addresses many concerns that members of the Asbestos Study Group have expressed about the current system and the more limited Asbestos Alliance approach. We also would welcome a dialogue with you on any proposals you wish to discuss, including the trust fund approach. If the Study Group has a written legislative proposal, we request that you provide us with a copy.

The insurance industry and the broader business community are partners on countless private sector and public policy initiatives, and we hope to stand with you in advancing meaningful, viable asbestos litigation reform. As an important step in that process, I hope you will agree to join in a meeting of Asbestos Study Group and insurance industry CEOs in finding a way to respond to Chairman Hatch's challenge and move a consensus bill forward.

We will be in touch with you shortly to discuss your availability for this meeting, and the logistics.

Sincerely,

Robert E. Vagley
President

CONFIDENTIAL DRAFT

American Insurance Association
Overview of Federal Asbestos Reform Proposal

Asbestos is the most significant, difficult mass tort issue facing the property-casualty insurance industry, and corporate America at large. Actuarial experts estimate that payments to individuals exposed to asbestos in the U.S., along with related expenses, ultimately could total $200 billion or more. The current estimates are nearly two thirds higher than those developed only a few years ago, and recent claim filings and litigation outcomes suggest further deterioration. Thus, asbestos reform has become a top public policy priority for the insurance industry and the business community.

For the past two years, the American Insurance Association (AIA) and a broader insurance industry coalition have been involved in an ambitious campaign to enact federal asbestos reform legislation. The legislation we are seeking would create a judicial mechanism to screen out medical claims from people who are not sick, liberalize the statute of limitations, eliminate huge consolidation actions that lead to shotgun settlements, and prevent venue selection abuse. In addition, we have developed additional reforms to address other serious legal abuses, some of which have emerged or worsened since our legislative proposal was first developed.

Medical Criteria: A critical element of today's asbestos litigation problem is the massive filing of lawsuits by plaintiffs who claim to have been harmed by asbestos (i.e., alleging asbestosis or pleural injury) but who have no discernable impairment and may never have one. Approximately 90% of all claims filed today are for non-malignant conditions, and the vast majority of these are made by unimpaired individuals. These claims are draining resources that could be used to compensate other plaintiffs who are sick as a result of exposure to asbestos. To address this problem, the proposal sets the minimum requirements for an "injury" in asbestos lawsuits. The medical criteria would be derived primarily from the AMA Guides for the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment, which Congress adopted by reference in the Longshore Act and which already serves a similar function under that Act. Some elements of the asbestos medical standard recently approved by the American Bar Association also would be included.

Statute of Limitations Extended: At the same time, the proposal preserves the legal rights of claimants who were exposed to asbestos and may become ill in the future. To do so, it liberalizes the statute of limitations to provide that the statute will not begin to run until the exposed person discovers that he or she is physically impaired due to exposure to asbestos. No longer would claimants be forced to file a lawsuit before they become ill in order to prevent the statute of limitations from running on a potential claim.

Venue Reform: There is a clear pattern for asbestos lawsuits to be filed in a few states that have the most favorable laws or have returned the most favorable verdicts. According RAND, five states (MS, NY, WV, OH, TX) accounted for 66% of filings between 1998 and 2000, and more recently, a single small county in Illinois (Madison County) has attracted hundreds of asbestos lawsuits. To address this problem, our proposal seeks to end the practice of "forum shopping"—i.e., filing claims in jurisdictions known to return more favorable results, rather than those with a real connection to the plaintiff or his injury—by requiring asbestos claims to be brought either in the state where the plaintiff resides, or where he or she was exposed to asbestos.

Elimination of Mass Consolidations: Asbestos claims are often consolidated for trial, sometimes with thousands of claims brought together in one action. This makes it difficult, if not impossible, for each individual claim to be fairly assessed on its merits and often leads to unimpaired individuals, or those whose illnesses were not caused by asbestos, being overcompensated. To address this problem, our proposal allows claims to be consolidated only with the consent of all parties.

Other Reforms: As we advance the aforementioned proposals, AIA has developed additional reforms that are needed to address other serious abuses in the asbestos litigation system. These include:

Lung cancer criteria: Over the past several years, there has been an increase in the number of lung cancer cases against asbestos defendants. There is growing concern among medical experts that many of these cancers, while representing real illness, were not caused by exposure to asbestos. Accordingly, Congress should enact exposure criteria for lung and other cancer based on medical findings and epidemiological data about relative risk in various industries.

Joint and several liability: Asbestos claims are also increasingly being extended to a wider array of firms. In 1983, RAND found that 300 firms had been listed as defendants in asbestos cases; by 2002, that estimate grew to more than 6,000. These defendants represent 75 of the 83 different types of industries in the U.S. Many defendants had little or no connection to asbestos but represent the "deepest pockets" available, particularly as more and more of the primary defendants file for bankruptcy. To address this concern, we suggest joint and several liability reform that limits the liability of defendants who are less than 50% responsible to their proportionate share.

Caps on damages: For some disease categories, there is a ten-fold difference in average settlement values across states. Asbestos is a national problem, and Congress should consider reasonable damage caps to provide greater equity. Using President Bush's medical malpractice proposals as a model, we would put forth a $250,000 cap on non-economic damages, except in the case of mesothelioma, where there would be a $500,000 cap on non-economic damages.

A ban on punitive damages also would be beneficial. The rationale for such a ban is the absence of deterrence value (asbestos has been largely eliminated from the workplace for more than twenty years) and the need to conserve resources for future claimants.

Protections for retailers: As the number of asbestos defendants grows ever larger, there is increasing concern about lawsuits against retailers who did not manufacture any asbestos products, such as hardware stores, home improvement centers, and auto parts outlets. As was the case with product and small business liability reform legislation that has been considered in Congress, it would be appropriate to take these peripheral defendants, many of them small businesses, out of the liability system, provided they did not fail to exercise reasonable care.

Collateral Source Payments: Many asbestos suits involve claims against hundreds of defendants. At the time of evaluating these suits, there often is no way for a defendant to know how much the plaintiff already has received through settlements with other defendants. Therefore, the legislation should require that, at the time of filing a complaint or other initial pleading in a case alleging an asbestos injury, the plaintiff must file a statement listing all asbestos settlements or judgments which have been received or to be received as a result of the claim; furthermore, these statements should be regularly updated to include asbestos settlements or judgments that subsequently are received.

Bankruptcy cases: According to a recent report prepared by Dr. Joseph Stigletz for AIA, more than 60 firms have filed for bankruptcy in order to address their asbestos liabilities. These bankruptcies have pernicious effects on workers and communities. They also create new legal rules for adjudicating asbestos claims. In order to assure a level playing field among all defendants regardless of whether they have filed for bankruptcy, the reforms outlined above should apply to all asbestos claims, including those against bankrupt defendants.

Via Hand Delivery

The Honorable Orrin Hatch
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
224 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Hatch:

Thank you for requesting that the Asbestos Study Group (ASG) provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with a detailed explanation of our proposal to address the asbestos litigation crisis. We appreciate the opportunity to present the attached more complete explanation of a privately funded claims facility that will pay victims fair compensation quickly, on a no-fault basis, for a range of asbestos-related diseases. This proposal is based on ongoing discussions with members of the ASG as well as outside experts, other asbestos defendants, insurance companies, and organized labor, in addition to Members of Congress from both parties and their staffs. We believe that a resolution based upon a claims facility instead of continued reliance on the tort system will be the best way to bring fairness, certainty, and finality for all stakeholders, including, most importantly, the victims of asbestos-related disease. Moreover, we believe such an approach will have the best chance of enactment.

The attached description lays out in detail legislation to create an Asbestos Injury Compensation Program. The key issues of who is eligible, how they would be compensated, and how the program would be funded are also described. The ASG has also reviewed possible approaches to solving the asbestos litigation crisis other than the one outlined in this submission. We believe this solution is best because it will (a) assure prompt and fair compensation for those with asbestos related diseases; (b) it will do so without delay and with minimum transaction costs; (c) it can solve the problem with certainty and finality for all, including the Congress; and (d) it has the best chances of garnering bipartisan support which we all agree is essential to enacting a solution to this terrible problem. We note that no other proposed solution has achieved consensus among the relevant constituencies.

Obviously, several components of our proposal must still be resolved. We have been working for months with representatives of many of the stakeholders to address the key issues and have made substantial progress, but we have not yet been able to reach consensus on all issues among all the parties. To meet the time frame established at the hearing, we believe the Committee will have to become more directly involved in the negotiations. However, prior to such discussion, we would appreciate an opportunity to explain to you in greater detail our proposal and our analysis of the options that remain outstanding.

The ultimate merits of a claim facility, if it can be enacted, are beyond dispute. We believe it is the best path to the bipartisan consensus that the Chairman and Ranking Member indicated they desired at last week's hearing, and we look forward to working with you and the Committee to solve this national crisis.

Sincerely,

Barry B. Direnfeld
On behalf of the Asbestos Study Group

CONFIDENTIAL BRIEFING MATERIALS

ADDITIONAL SUBMISSION OF THE ASBESTOS STUDY GROUP to the

United States Senate

Committee on the Judiciary

The Asbestos Study Group (ASG) appreciates the opportunity to provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with a more complete explanation of our proposal to address the asbestos litigation crisis. The ASG proposal would establish a privately funded claims facility that will pay victims fair compensation quickly, on a no-fault basis, for a range of asbestos-related diseases. Our proposal is based on ongoing discussions with members of the ASG, as well as outside experts, other asbestos defendants, insurance companies, and organized labor, in addition to Members of Congress from both parties and their staffs. We believe that a resolution based upon a claims facility instead of continued reliance on the tort system will be the only way to bring fairness, certainty, and finality for all stakeholders, including, most importantly, the victims of asbestos-related disease. Moreover, we believe such an approach will have the best chance of securing bipartisan support and thus enactment.

Under the ASG proposal, victims of asbestos-related disease would be compensated on a no-fault basis, upon showing that they were exposed to asbestos and that they satisfy the other eligibility standards for compensation. Victim compensation would no longer be held hostage to bankruptcies or to years of expensive litigation over product identification, causation, and other difficult issues. Victims of asbestos-related diseases would be assured prompt and fair compensation with the minimum amount of paperwork and delay. The tort system would be replaced, reducing the heavy burden of transaction costs and saving money so that funds can be targeted much more directly to compensate those suffering from asbestos. Defendants and insurance companies currently caught in the litigation crisis would no longer face the uncertainty and the risk premium Wall Street imposes in order to deal with the unpredictable nature of asbestos litigation. Instead, they would accept somewhat "rough justice" in providing the private funding for the compensation system in exchange for financial predictability and relief from the uncertainties of the tort system. We believe that the certainty provided by this proposal would be welcomed by the financial markets.

In reviewing and analyzing our proposal from a public policy and a political standpoint, we ask that one critical factor be kept in mind. Our proposal represents a structure that can accommodate the decisions that Congress will reach on the issues of eligibility, compensation, and the overall size of the program. We fully recognize that several key issues must still be resolved, and we believe these will require the active participation of Congress. We have been working for months with representatives of many of the stakeholders to address these key issues, but we have not yet been able to reach consensus among all the parties. (This, of course, is also true with respect other legislative options proposed by other stakeholders.) Consequently, no matter which structure the Senate Judiciary Committee adopts, Congress clearly must engage actively in the debate to develop a consensus on any proposal.

The following reflects in greater detail our proposal for establishing a no-fault, privately funded claims facility. The description below is organized to reflect (I) the Asbestos Injury Compensation Program, (II) Eligibility, (III) Compensation, and (IV) Program Funding.

I. The Asbestos Injury Compensation Program

A. Legislative Findings: Asbestos claims have become a national crisis characterized by erratic and delayed compensation of asbestos-related diseases, over-compensation for the non-impaired, bankruptcy of major companies with more threatened, widespread unemployment and distress to local communities, high legal costs and court congestion, remedial demands on governments at all levels, and widespread economic uncertainties. This crisis, and its significant effect on the welfare of the people of the United States and on interstate commerce, compels Congress to create this national Asbestos Injury Compensation Program (the "Program") to supersede all existing methods to compensate those injured by asbestos.
