retary of the Treasury shall consult with the Secretary regarding the exercise of any such authority not delegated to the Secretary.

(2) STATUTES.—The provisions of law referred to in paragraph (1) are the following: the Tariff Act of 1930; section 249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3); section 2 of the Act of March 4, 1923 (19 U.S.C. 6); section 13031 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c); section 251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 66); section 1 of the Act of June 26, 1930 (19 U.S.C. 68); the Foreign Trade Zones Act (19 U.S.C. 81a et seq.); section 1 of the Act of March 2, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 198); the Trade Act of 1974; the Trade Agreements Act of 1979; the North American Free Trade Area Implementation Act; the Uruguay Round Agreements Act; the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act; the Andean Trade Preference Act; the African Growth and Opportunity Act; and any other provision of law vesting customs revenue functions in the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) MAINTENANCE OF CUSTOMS REVENUE FUNCTIONS.—

(1) MAINTENANCE OF FUNCTIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary may not consolidate, alter, discontinue, or diminish those functions described in paragraph (2) performed by the United States Customs Service (as established under section 451) on or after the effective date of this Act, reduce the staffing level, or the compensation or benefits under title 5, United States Code, of personnel attributable to such functions, or reduce the resources attributable to such functions, and the Secretary shall ensure that an appropriate management structure is implemented to carry out such functions.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The functions referred to in paragraph (1) are those functions performed by the following personnel, and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: Import Specialists, Entry Specialists, Drawback Specialists, National Import Specialist, Fines and Penalties Specialists, attorneys of the Office of Regulations and Rulings, Customs Auditors, International Trade Specialists, Financial Systems Specialists.

(c) NEW PERSONNEL.—The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint up to 20 new personnel to work with personnel of the Department in performing customs revenue functions.

SEC. 453. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF COST ACCOUNTING SYSTEM; REPORTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than September 30, 2003, the Commissioner of Customs shall, in accordance with the audit of the Customs Service's fiscal years 2000 and 1999 financial statements (as contained in the report of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury issued on February 23, 2001), establish and implement a cost accounting system for expenses incurred in the operation of the Customs Service.

(2) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of expenses based on the type of operation, the port at which the operation took place, the amount of time spent on the operation by personnel of the Customs Service, and an identification of expenses based on any other appropriate classification necessary to provide for an accurate and complete accounting of the expenses.

(3) USE OF MERCHANDISE PROCESSING FEES.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of all amounts expended pursuant to section 13031(f)(2) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985.

(b) REPORTS.—Beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the date on which the cost accounting system described in subsection (a) is fully implemented, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on a quarterly basis a report on the progress of implementing the cost accounting system pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 454. PRESERVATION OF CUSTOMS FUNDS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds available to the United States Customs Service or collected under paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985 may be transferred for use by any other agency or office in the Department.

SEC. 455. SEPARATE BUDGET REQUEST FOR CUSTOMS.

The President shall include in each budget transmitted to the Congress under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, a separate budget request for the United States Customs Service.

SEC. 456. PAYMENT OF DUTIES AND FEES.

Section 505(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1505(a)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence—

(A) by striking ''Unless the merchandise'' and inserting ''Unless the entry of merchandise is covered by an import activity summary statement, or the merchandise''; and

(B) by inserting after ''by regulation'' the following: ''(but not to exceed 10 working days after entry or release, whichever occurs first)''; and

(2) by striking the second and third sentences and inserting the following: ''If an import activity summary statement is filed, the importer or record shall deposit estimated duties and fees for entries of merchandise covered by the import activity summary statement no later than the 15th day of the month following the month in which the merchandise is entered or released, whichever occurs first.''.

SEC. 457. DEFINITION.

In this subtitle, the term ''customs revenue function'' means the following:

(1) Assessing and collecting customs duties (including antidumping and countervailing duties and duties imposed under safeguard provisions), excise taxes, fees, and penalties due on imported merchandise, including classifying and valuing merchandise for purposes of such assessment.

(2) Processing and denial of entry of persons, baggage, cargo, and mail, with respect to the assessment and collection of import duties.

(3) Detecting and apprehending persons engaged in fraudulent practices designed to circumvent the customs laws of the United States.

(4) Enforcing section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and provisions relating to import quotas and the marking of imported merchandise, and providing Customs Recordations for copyrights, patents, and trademarks.

(5) Collecting accurate import data for compilation of international trade statistics.

(6) Enforcing reciprocal trade agreements.

(7) Functions performed by the following personnel, and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: Import Specialists, Entry Specialists, Drawback Specialists, National Import Specialist, Fines and Penalties Specialists, attorneys of the Office of Regulations and Rulings, Customs

Auditors, International Trade Specialists, Financial Systems Specialists.

(8) Functions performed by the following offices, with respect to any function described in any of paragraphs (1) through (7), and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: the Office of Information and Technology, the Office of Laboratory Services, the Office of the Chief Counsel, the Office of Congressional Affairs, the Office of International Affairs, and the Office of Training and Development.

SEC. 458. GAO REPORT TO CONGRESS.

Not later than 3 months after the effective date of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Congress a report that sets forth all trade functions performed by the executive branch, specifying each agency that performs each such function.

TITLE V—EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE

SEC. 501. UNDER SECRETARY FOR EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Emergency Preparedness and Response, shall be responsible for the following:

(1) Helping to ensure the preparedness of emergency response providers for terrorist attacks, major disasters, and other emergencies.

(2) With respect to the Nuclear Incident Response Team (regardless of whether it is operating as an organizational unit of the Department pursuant to this title)—

(A) establishing standards and certifying when those standards have been met;

(B) conducting joint and other exercises and training and evaluating performance; and

(C) providing funds to the Department of Energy and the Environmental Protection Agency, as appropriate, for homeland security planning, exercises and training, and equipment.

(3) Providing the Federal Government's response to terrorist attacks and major disasters, including—

(A) managing such response;

(B) directing the Domestic Emergency Support Team, the Strategic National Stockpile, the National Disaster Medical System, and (when operating as an organizational unit of the Department pursuant to this title) the Nuclear Incident Response Team;

(C) overseeing the Metropolitan Medical Response System; and

(D) coordinating other Federal response resources in the event of a terrorist attack or major disaster.

(4) Aiding the recovery from terrorist attacks and major disasters.

(5) Building a comprehensive national incident management system with Federal, State, and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, to respond to such attacks and disasters.

(6) Consolidating existing Federal Government emergency response plans into a single, coordinated national response plan.

(7) Developing comprehensive programs for developing interoperative communications technology, and helping to ensure that emergency response providers acquire such technology.

SEC. 502. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the following:

(1) Except as provided in section 402, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, including the functions of the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency relating thereto, and the Integrated Hazard Information System of the Department of Defense.

(2) The Office for Domestic Preparedness of the Office of Justice Programs, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(3) The National Domestic Preparedness Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(4) The Domestic Emergency Support Teams of the Department of Justice, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(5) The Office of Emergency Preparedness, the National Disaster Medical System, and the Metropolitan Medical Response System of the Department of Health and Human Services, including the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness relating thereto.

(6) The Strategic National Stockpile of the Department of Health and Human Services, including

the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services relating thereto.

SEC. 503. NUCLEAR INCIDENT RESPONSE.

(a) HOMELAND SECURITY CENTER.—(1) Notwithstanding section 307, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall establish at a national security laboratory of the National Nuclear Security Administration, a center to serve as the primary location for carrying out research, development, test, and evaluation activities of the Department related to the goals described in section 301(6)(A) and (B). The Secretary shall establish, in concurrence with the Secretary of Energy, such additional centers at one or more national laboratories of the Department of Energy as the Secretary considers appropriate to serve as secondary locations for carrying out such activities.

(2) Each center established under paragraph (1) shall be composed of such facilities and assets as are required for the performance of such activities. The particular facilities and assets shall be designated by the Secretary of Energy with the concurrence of the Secretary.

operate as an organizational unit of the Department. While so operating, the Nuclear Incident Response Team shall be subject to the direction, authority, and control of the Secretary.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this title shall be understood to limit the ordinary responsibility of the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency for organizing, training, equipping, and utilizing their respective entities in the Nuclear Incident Response Team, or (subject to the provisions of this title) from exercising direction, authority, and control over them when they are not operating as a unit of the Department.

(d) INDEMNIFICATION OF CONTRACTORS DURING TRANSITION PERIOD.—(1) To the extent the Department of Energy has a duty under a covered contract to indemnify an element of the Nuclear Incident Response Team, the Department and the Department of Energy shall each have that duty, whether or not the Nuclear Incident Response Team is operating as an organizational element of the Department.

(2) Paragraph (1) applies only to a contract in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, and not to any extension or renewal of such contract carried out after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) DELIVERY OF POTASSIUM IODIDE.—In the event of a terrorist attack, major disaster, or other emergency, the Secretary shall devise a plan to deliver Potassium Iodide (KI) to the people for whom it is intended within 4 hours after exposure to radioactive iodines from a nuclear power plant, and as expeditiously as possible to persons beyond the immediate 20-mile radius of protection.

SEC. 504. DEFINITION.

For purposes of this title, ''nuclear incident response team'' means a resource that includes—

(1) those entities of the Department of Energy that perform nuclear or radiological emergency support functions (including accident response, search response, advisory, and technical operations functions), radiation exposure functions at the medical assistance facility known as Oak Ridge National Laboratory, radiological assistance functions, and related functions;

(2) those entities of the Environmental Protection Agency that perform radiological emergency response and support functions; and

(3) those entities of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission that perform such support and related functions.

TITLE VI—MANAGEMENT

SEC. 601. UNDER SECRETARY FOR MANAGEMENT.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Management, shall be responsible for the management and administration of the Department, including the following:

(1) The budget, appropriations, expenditures of funds, accounting, and finance.

(2) Procurement.

(3) Human resources and personnel.

(4) Information technology and communications systems.

(5) Facilities, property, equipment, and other material resources.

(6) Security for personnel, information technology and communications systems, facilities, property, equipment, and other material resources.

(7) Identification and tracking of performance measures relating to the responsibilities of the Department.

(8) Grants and other assistance management programs.

(9) The transition and reorganization process, to ensure an efficient and orderly transfer of functions and personnel to the Department, including the development of a transition plan.

(10) The conduct of internal audits and management analyses of the programs and activities of the Department.

(11) Any other management duties that the Secretary may designate.

SEC. 602. CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER.

Notwithstanding section 902(a)(1) of title 31, United States Code, the Chief Financial Officer shall report to the Secretary, or to another official of the Department, as the Secretary may direct.

SEC. 603. CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER.

Notwithstanding section 3506(a)(2) of title 44, United States Code, the Chief Information Officer shall report to the Secretary, or to another official of the Department, as the Secretary may direct.

TITLE VII—MISCELANEOUS

Subtitle A—Inspector General

SEC. 701. AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the last two sentences of section 3(a) of the Inspector General Act of 1978, the Inspector General shall be under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary with respect to audits or investigations, or the issuance of subpoenas, that require access to sensitive information concerning—

(1) intelligence, counterintelligence, or counterterrorism matters;

(2) ongoing criminal investigations or proceedings;

(3) undercover operations;

(4) the identity of confidential sources, including protected witnesses;

(5) other matters the disclosure of which would, in the Secretary's judgment, constitute a serious threat to the protection of any person or property authorized protection by section 3056 of title 18, United States Code, section 202 of title 3 of such Code, or any provision of the Presidential Protection Assistance Act of 1976; or

(6) other matters the disclosure of which would, in the Secretary's judgment, constitute a serious threat to national security.

(b) PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN INVESTIGATIONS.—With respect to the information described in subsection (a), the Secretary may prohibit the Inspector General from carrying out or completing any audit or investigation, or from issuing any subpoena, after such Inspector General has decided to initiate, carry out, or complete such audit or investigation or to issue such subpoena, if the Secretary determines that such prohibition is necessary to prevent the disclosure of any information described in subsection (a), to preserve the national security, or to prevent a significant impairment to the interests of the United States.

(c) NOTIFICATION REQUIRED.—If the Secretary exercises any power under subsection (a) or (b), the Secretary shall notify the Inspector General of the Department in writing stating the reasons for such exercise. Within 30 days after receipt of any such notice, the Inspector General shall transmit a copy of such notice and a written response thereto that includes (1) a statement as to whether the Inspector General agrees or disagrees with such exercise and (2) the reasons for any disagreement, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to appropriate committees and subcommittees of the Congress.

(d) ACCESS TO INFORMATION BY CONGRESS.—The exercise of authority by the Secretary described in subsection (b) should not be construed as limiting the right of Congress or any committee of Congress to access any information it seeks.

(e) OVERSIGHT RESPONSIBILITY—The Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.) is further amended by inserting after section 8I the following:

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

"SEC. 8J. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in carrying out the duties and responsibilities specified in this Act, the Inspector General of the Department of Homeland Security shall have oversight responsibility for the internal investigations performed by the Office of Internal Affairs of the United States Customs Service and the Office of Inspections of the United States Secret Service. The head of each such office shall promptly report to the Inspector General the significant activities being carried out by such office.".

SEC. 711. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the United States Secret Service, which shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department, including the functions of the Secretary of the Treasury relating thereto.

Subtitle C—Critical Infrastructure Information

SEC. 721. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Critical Infrastructure Information Act of 2002".

SEC. 722. DEFINITIONS.

In this subtitle:

(1) AGENCY.—The term "agency" has the meaning given it in section 551 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) COVERED FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term "covered Federal agency" means the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—The term "critical infrastructure information" means information not customarily in the public domain and related to the security of critical infrastructure or protected systems—

(A) actual, potential, or threatened interference with, attack on, compromise of, or incapacitation of critical infrastructure or protected systems by either physical or computer-based attack or other similar conduct (including the misuse of or unauthorized access to all types of communications and data transmission systems)

that violates Federal, State, or local law, harms interstate commerce of the United States, or threatens public health or safety;

(B) the ability of any critical infrastructure or protected system to resist such interference, compromise, or incapacitation, including any planned or past assessment, projection, or estimate of the vulnerability of critical infrastructure or a protected system, including security testing, risk evaluation thereto, risk management planning, or risk audit; or

(C) any planned or past operational problem or solution regarding critical infrastructure or protected systems, including repair, recovery, reconstruction, insurance, or continuity, to the extent it is related to such interference, compromise, or incapacitation.

(4) CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION PROGRAM.—The term ''critical infrastructure protection program'' means any component or bureau of a covered Federal agency that has been designated by the President or any agency head to receive critical infrastructure information.

(5) INFORMATION SHARING AND ANALYSIS ORGANIZATION.—The term ''Information Sharing and

Analysis Organization'' means any formal or informal entity or collaboration created or employed by public or private sector organizations, for purposes of—

(A) gathering and analyzing critical infrastructure information in order to better understand security problems and interdependencies related to critical infrastructure and protected systems, so as to ensure the availability, integrity, and reliability thereof;

(B) communicating or disclosing critical infrastructure information to help prevent, detect, mitigate, or recover from the effects of a interference, compromise, or a incapacitation problem related to critical infrastructure or protected systems; and

(C) voluntarily disseminating critical infrastructure information to its members, State, local, and Federal Governments, or any other entities that may be of assistance in carrying out the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

(6) PROTECTED SYSTEM.—The term ''protected system''—

(A) means any service, physical or computer-based system, process, or procedure that directly or indirectly affects the viability of a facility of critical infrastructure; and

(B) includes any physical or computer-based system, including a computer, computer system, computer or communications network, or any component hardware or element thereof, software program, processing instructions, or information or data in transmission or storage therein, irrespective of the medium of transmission or storage.

(7) VOLUNTARY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''voluntary'', in the case of any submittal of critical infrastructure information to a covered Federal agency, means the submittal thereof in the absence of such agency's exercise of legal authority to compel access to or submission of such information and may be accomplished by a single entity or an Information Sharing and Analysis Organization on behalf of itself or its members.

(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term ''voluntary''—

(i) in the case of any action brought under the securities laws as is defined in section 3(a)(47) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(47))—

(I) does not include information or statements contained in any documents or materials filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, or with Federal banking regulators, pursuant to section 12(i) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 781(I)); and

(II) with respect to the submittal of critical infrastructure information, does not include any disclosure or writing that when made accompanied the solicitation of an offer or a sale of securities; and

(ii) does not include information or statements submitted or relied upon as a basis for making licensing or permitting determinations, or during regulatory proceedings.

SEC. 723. DESIGNATION OF CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION PROGRAM.

A critical infrastructure protection program may be designated as such by one of the following:

(1) The President.

(2) The Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) The head of a covered Federal agency by notice published in the Federal Register. This duty may not be delegated.

SEC. 724. PROTECTION OF VOLUNTARILY SHARED CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.

(a) PROTECTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, critical infrastructure information (including the identity of the submitting person or entity) that is voluntarily submitted to a covered Federal agency for use by that agency regarding the security of critical infrastructure and protected systems, if analysis, warning, interdependency study, recovery, reconstitution, or other informational purpose, when accompanied by an express statement specified in paragraph (2)—

(A) shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Freedom of Information Act);

(B) shall not be subject to any agency rules or judicial doctrine regarding ex parte communications with a decision making official;

(C) shall not, without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information, be used directly by such agency, any other Federal, State, or local authority, or any third party, in any civil action arising under Federal or State law if such information is submitted in good faith;

(D) shall not, without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information, be used or disclosed by any officer or employee of the United States for purposes other than the purposes of this subtitle, except—

(i) in furtherance of an investigation or the prosecution of a criminal act; or

(ii) when disclosure of the information would be—

(I) to either House of Congress, or to the extent of matter within its jurisdiction, any committee or subcommittee thereof, any joint committee thereof or subcommittee of any such joint committee; or

(II) to the Comptroller General, or any authorized representative of the Comptroller General, in the course of the performance of the duties of the General Accounting Office.

(E) shall not, if provided to a State or local government or government agency—

(i) be made available pursuant to any State or local law requiring disclosure of information or records;

(ii) otherwise be disclosed or distributed to any party by said State or local government or government agency without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information; or

(iii) be used other than for the purpose of protecting critical infrastructure or protected systems, or in furtherance of an investigation or the prosecution of a criminal act; and

(F) does not constitute a waiver of any applicable privilege or protection provided under law, such as trade secret protection.

(2) EXPRESS STATEMENT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "express statement", with respect to information or records, means—

(A) in the case of written information or records, a written marking on the information or records substantially similar to the following: "This information is voluntarily submitted to the Federal Government in expectation of protection from disclosure as provided by the provisions of the Critical Infrastructure Information Act of 2002."; or

(B) in the case of oral information, a similar written statement submitted within a reasonable period following the oral communication.

(b) LIMITATION.—No communication of critical infrastructure information to a covered Federal agency made pursuant to this subtitle shall be considered to be an action subject to the requirements of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. 2).

(c) INDEPENDENTLY OBTAINED INFORMATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or otherwise affect the ability of a State, local, or Federal Government entity, agency, or authority, or any third party, under applicable law, to obtain critical infrastructure information in a manner not covered by subsection (a), including any information lawfully and properly disclosed generally or broadly to the public and to use such information in any manner permitted by law.

(d) TREATMENT OF VOLUNTARY SUBMITTAL OF INFORMATION.—The voluntary submittal to the Government of information or records that are protected from disclosure by this subtitle shall not be construed to constitute compliance with any requirement to submit such information to a Federal agency under any other provision of law.

(e) PROCEDURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security shall, in consultation with appropriate representatives of the National Security Council and the Office of Science and Technology Policy, establish uniform procedures for the receipt, care, and storage by Federal agencies of critical infrastructure information that is voluntarily submitted to the Government. The procedures shall be established not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this subtitle.

(2) ELEMENTS.—The procedures established under paragraph (1) shall include mechanisms regarding—

(A) the acknowledgement of receipt by Federal agencies of critical infrastructure information that is voluntarily submitted to the Government;

(B) the maintenance of the identification of such information as voluntarily submitted to the Government for purposes of and subject to the provisions of this subtitle;

(C) the care and storage of such information; and

(D) the protection and maintenance of the confidentiality of such information so as to permit the sharing of such information within the Federal Government and with State and local governments, and the issuance of notices and warnings related to the protection of critical infrastructure and protected systems, in such manner as to protect from public disclosure the identity of the submitting person or entity, or information that is proprietary, business sensitive, relates specifically to the submitting person or entity, and is otherwise not appropriately in the public domain.

(f) PENALTIES.—Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or of any department or agency thereof, publishes, divulges, discloses, or makes known in any manner or to any extent not authorized by law, any critical infrastructure information protected from disclosure by this subtitle coming to him in the course of this employment or official duties or by reason of any examination or investigation made by, or return, report, or record made to or filed with, such department or agency or officer or employee thereof, shall be fined under title 18 of the United States Code, imprisoned not more that one year, or both, and shall be removed from office or employment.

(g) AUTHORITY TO ISSUE WARNINGS.—The Federal Government may provide advisories, alerts, and warnings to relevant companies, targeted sectors, other governmental entities, or the general public regarding potential threats to critical infrastructure as appropriate. In issuing a warning, the Federal Government shall take appropriate actions to protect from disclosure—

(1) the source of any voluntarily submitted critical infrastructure information that forms the basis for the warning; or

(2) information that is proprietary, business sensitive, relates specifically to the submitting person or entity, or is otherwise not appropriately in the public domain.

(h) AUTHORITY TO DELEGATE.—The President may delegate authority to a critical infrastructure protection program, designated under subsection (e), to enter into a voluntary agreement to promote critical infrastructure security, including with any Information Sharing and Analysis Organization, or a plan of action as otherwise defined in section 708 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2158).

SEC. 725. NO PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.

Nothing in this subtitle may be construed to create a private right of action for enforcement of any provision of this Act.

Subtitle D—Acquisitions

SEC. 731. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—During the five-year period following the effective date of this Act, the Secretary may carry out a pilot program under which the Secretary may exercise the following authorities:

(1)(A) In carrying out basic, applied, and advanced research and development projects for response to existing or emerging terrorist threats, the

Secretary may exercise the same authority (subject to the same limitations and conditions) with respect to such research and projects as the Secretary of Defense may exercise under section 2371 of title 10, United States Code (except for subsections (b) and (f) of such section), after making a determination that—

(i) the use of a contract, grant, or cooperative agreement for such projects is not feasible or appropriate; and

(ii) use of other authority to waive Federal procurement laws or regulations would not be feasible or appropriate to accomplish such projects.

(B) The annual report required under subsection (h) of such section 2371, as applied to the Secretary by this paragraph, shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(2)(A) Under the authority of paragraph (1) and subject to the limitations of such paragraph, the Secretary may carry out prototype projects, in accordance with the requirements and conditions provided for carrying out prototype projects under section 845 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 10 U.S.C. 2371 note).

(B) In applying the authorities of such section 845—

(i) subsection (c) thereof shall apply with respect to prototype projects under this paragraph, except that in applying such subsection any reference in such subsection to the Comptroller General shall be deemed to refer to the Comptroller General and the Inspector General of the Department; and

(ii) the Secretary shall perform the functions of the Secretary of Defense under subsection (d) thereof.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than one year after the effective date of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Comptroller General shall report to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on—

(1) whether use of the authorities described in subsection (a) attracts nontraditional Government contractors and results in the acquisition of needed technologies; and

(2) if such authorities were to be made permanent, whether additional safeguards are needed with respect to the use of such authorities.

SEC. 732. PERSONAL SERVICES.

The Secretary—

(1) may procure the temporary or intermittent services of experts or consultants (or organizations thereof) in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code; and

(2) may, whenever necessary due to an urgent homeland security need, procure temporary (not to exceed 1 year) or intermittent personal services, including the services of experts or consultants (or organizations thereof), without regard to the pay limitations of such section 3109.

SEC. 733. SPECIAL STREAMLINED ACQUISITION AUTHORITY.

(a) AUTHORITY.—(1) The Secretary may use the authorities set forth in this section with respect to any procurement made during the period beginning on the effective date of this Act and ending September 30, 2007, if the Secretary determines in writing that the mission of the Department (as described in section 101) would be seriously impaired without the use of such authorities.

(2) The authority to make the determination described in paragraph (1) may not be delegated by the Secretary to an officer of the Department who is not appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(3) Not later than the date that is seven days after the date of any determination under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate—

(A) notification of such determination; and

(B) the justification for such determination.

(b) INCREASED MICRO-PURCHASE THRESHOLD FOR CERTAIN PROCUREMENTS.—(1) The Secretary may designate certain employees of the Department to make procurements described in subsection (a) for which in the administration of section 32 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 428) the amount specified in subsections (c), (d), and (f) of such section 32 shall be deemed to be $5,000.

(2) The number of employees designated under paragraph (1) shall be—

(A) fewer than the number of employees of the Department who are authorized to make purchases without obtaining competitive quotations, pursuant to section 32(c) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 428(c));

(B) sufficient to ensure the geographic dispersal of the availability of the use of the procurement authority under such paragraph at locations reasonably considered to be potential terrorist targets; and

(C) sufficiently limited to allow for the careful monitoring of employees designated under such paragraph.

(3) Procurements made under the authority of this subsection shall be subject to review by a designated supervisor on not less than a monthly basis. The supervisor responsible for the review shall be responsible for no more than 7 employees making procurements under this subsection.

(c) SIMPLIFIED ACQUISITION PROCEDURES.—(1) With respect to a procurement described in subsection (a),

the Secretary may deem the simplified acquisition threshold referred to in section 4(11) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(11)) to be $175,000.

(2) Section 18(c)(1) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) the procurement is by the Secretary of Homeland Security pursuant to the special procedures provided in section 733(c) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002.".

(d) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN COMMERCIAL ITEMS AUTHORITIES.—(1) With respect to a procurement described in subsection (a), the Secretary may deem any item or service to be a commercial item for the purpose of Federal procurement laws.

(2) The $5,000,000 limitation provided in section 31(a)(2) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 427(a)(2)) and section 303(g)(1)(B) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253(g)(1)(B)) shall be deemed to be $7,500,000 for purposes of property or services under the authority of this subsection.

(3) Authority under a provision of law referred to in paragraph (2) that expires under section 4202(e) of the

Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996 (divisions D and E of Public Law 104–106; 10 U.S.C. 2304 note) shall, notwithstanding such section, continue to apply for a procurement described in subsection (a).

(e) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the end of fiscal year 2005, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives a report on the use of the authorities provided in this section. The report shall contain the following:

(1) An assessment of the extent to which property and services acquired using authorities provided under this section contributed to the capacity of the Federal workforce to facilitate the mission of the Department as described in section 101.

(2) An assessment of the extent to which prices for property and services acquired using authorities provided under this section reflected the best value.

(3) The number of employees designated by each executive agency under subsection (b)(1).

(4) An assessment of the extent to which the Department has implemented subsections (b)(2) and (b)(3) to monitor the use of procurement authority by employees designated under subsection (b)(1).

(5) Any recommendations of the Comptroller General for improving the effectiveness of the implementation of the provisions of this section.

Subtitle E—Property

SEC. 741. REAL PROPERTY MANAGEMENT.

The Secretary, in accordance with this title and regulations prescribed jointly by the Secretary, the Administrator of General Services, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget—

(1) may acquire replacement real property (including interests therein)—

(A) by transfer or exchange of real property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Department with other executive agencies; or

(B) by sale to or exchange of such property with non-Federal entities, if—

(i) the transaction does not conflict with other applicable laws governing the acquisition of interests in real property by Federal agencies;

(ii) following consultation with the Administrator, the agency first made the property available for transfer or exchange to other Federal agencies; and

(iii) the transaction results in the agency receiving fair market value, which shall be based upon an appraisal;

(2) by lease, permit, license, or other similar instrument, may make available to other executive agencies and to non-Federal entities, on a fair market rental value basis, the unexpired portion of any Government lease for real property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Director;

(3) may make available by outlease agreements with other executive agencies or with non-Federal entities, any unused or underused portion of or interest in any real property and related personal property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Department; and

(4) obligate or expend amounts received by the United States as a result of any exercise of the authority granted by paragraph (2) or (3) without regard to fiscal year limitations, for the capital asset expenditures of the Department.

SEC. 742. CRITERIA FOR USING AUTHORITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the requirements of subsection (b), the Secretary may apply authority under section 741 to a real property interest only if—

(1) the Secretary has determined that such real property interest is not excess property, and includes as part of the documentation required under subsection (b)(3) a description of the need and mission requirement fulfilled by the Federal property;

(2) the real property interest is used to fulfill or support a continuing mission requirement of the Department; and

(3) the real property interest can, by the application of the authority, improve the support of such mission.

(b) CRITERIA FOR APPLICATION.—Before applying authority under section 741 to a real property interest, the Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of General Services, must determine that such application meets all of the following criteria:

(1) The application supports the goals and objectives set forth in the Department's strategic plan under section 306 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Use of the real property is economical, cost effective, and in the best interests of the United States.

(3) The application is documented in a business plan that, commensurate with the nature of the authority applied—

(A) analyzes all reasonable options for using the property;

(B) describes how the application will be in compliance with applicable provisions of law, including such provisions of—

(i) the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.); and

(ii) the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11301 et seq.), including by—

(I) describing the result of the determination under that Act by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development of the suitability of the property for use to assist the homeless; and

(II) explaining the rationale for the Department's decision not to make the property available for use to assist the homeless; and

(C) establishes effective procedures for soliciting, assessing, and taking into account input from the local community.

SEC. 743. OUTLEASES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make property available by an outlease agreement authorized by section 741 only if—

(1) the Secretary finds that—

(A) there is no long-term mission requirement for the property, but the Federal Government is not permitted to dispose of it; or

(B)(i) there is a continuing, long-term mission requirement of the Department for the property to remain in Government ownership; and

(ii) the use of the real property by the lessee will not be inconsistent with such mission;

(2) in the case of an outlease to a non-Federal entity, the outlease is conducted competitively; and

(3) the agreement—

(A) is for a term no longer than 50 years; and

(B) will result in the Department receiving fair market value which, in the case of an exchange or sale of Federal real property, shall be based upon an appraisal.

(b) CONSTRUCTION ON OUTLEASED PROPERTY; APPLICABLE LAW.—

(1) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO RETAINED AUTHORITY.—If the Secretary retains authority over any decision to construct or alter buildings on property outleased to a non-Federal entity under section 741, then any such construction or alteration shall comply with section 21 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 619).

(2) PROPERTY NOT SUBJECT TO RETAINED AUTHORITY.—(A) If the Secretary does not retain authority over any decision to construct or alter buildings on property outleased to a non-Federal entity under section 741, then any such construction or alteration shall comply with all laws described in subparagraph (B) that would apply to such construction or alteration if the property were not Federal property.

(B) The laws referred to in subparagraph (A) are all laws of a State, and of a political subdivision of a State, relating to zoning, landscaping, open space, minimum distance of a building from a property line, maximum building height, historic preservation, esthetic qualities of a building, building codes, and similar matters, and any other State or local laws relating to construction or alteration of a building, respectively, by the non-Federal entity on non-Federal lands.

(C) The Secretary may waive the application of subparagraph (A) if the Secretary determines that application of that subparagraph would hinder fulfillment of the mission of the Department under section 101(b).

(c) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall submit biennial reports to the Congress, including to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, on the effectiveness of the use of outlease authority under section 741.

SEC. 744. REVIEW AND REVISION OF TRANSACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATOR.

The Administrator of General Services may, in the sole discretion of the Administrator, review any transaction of the Department undertaken utilizing authority under section 741. After such review, the Administrator may disapprove such transaction if the Administrator determines the transaction does not reflect due diligence by the Department, is not in the best interest of the United States, or does not comply with the requirements of this title.

SEC. 745. TRANSACTIONAL REPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For those transactions authorized under section 741 involving the sale, exchange, or outlease to a non-Federal entity of any asset valued in excess of $700,000 at the time of the transaction, the Secretary shall submit the business plan required by section 742(b)(3) to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives at least 30 calendar days before the final execution of such transaction.

(b) DISPOSAL OF REAL PROPERTY BY NEGOTIATION.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, a statement explaining the circumstances of each disposal by negotiation, under section 741, of any real property that has an estimated fair market value in excess of $700,000.

(c) ADJUSTMENT OF THRESHOLD.—The Administrator of General Services may increase or decrease the dollar amounts in subsections (a) and (b) to reflect a percentage increase or decrease in the Department of Commerce Consumer Price Index.

Subtitle F—Other Provisions

SEC. 752. ADVISORY COMMITTEES.

The Secretary may establish, appoint members of, and use the services of, advisory committees, as the Secretary may deem necessary. An advisory committee established under this section may be exempted by the Secretary from Public Law 92–463, but the Secretary shall publish notice in the Federal Register announcing the establishment of such a committee and identifying its purpose and membership. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, members of an advisory committee that is exempted by the Secretary under the preceding sentence who are special Government employees (as that term is defined in section 202 of title 18, United States Code) shall be eligible for certifications under subsection (b)(3) of section 208 of title 18, United States Code, for official actions taken as a member of such advisory committee.

SEC. 753. REORGANIZATION; TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) REORGANIZATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may allocate or reallocate functions among the officers of the Department, and may establish, consolidate, alter, or discontinue organizational units within the Department, but only—

(A) pursuant to section 802; or

(B) after the expiration of 60 days after providing notice of such action to the appropriate congressional committees, which shall include an explanation of the rationale for the action.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—(A) Authority under paragraph (1)(A) does not extend to the abolition of any agency, entity, organizational unit, program, or function established or required to be maintained by this Act.

(B) Authority under paragraph (1)(B) does not extend to the abolition of any agency, entity, organizational unit, program, or function established or required to be maintained by statute.

(b) TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, not to exceed two percent of any appropriation available to the Secretary in any fiscal year may be transferred between such appropriations, except that not less than 15 days' notice shall be given to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives before any such transfer is made.

(2) EXPIRATION OF AUTHORITY.—The authority under paragraph (1) shall expire two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 754. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) SEAL.—The Department shall have a seal, whose design is subject to the approval of the President.

(b) GIFTS, DEVISES, AND BEQUESTS.—With respect to the Department, the Secretary shall have the same authorities that the Attorney General has with respect to the Department of Justice under section 524(d) of title 28, United States Code.

(c) PARTICIPATION OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES.—With respect to the Department, the Secretary shall have the same authorities that the Secretary of Transportation has with respect to the Department of Transportation under section 324 of title 49, United States Code.

(d) REDELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS.—Unless otherwise provided in the delegation or by law, any function delegated under this Act may be redelegated to any subordinate.

SEC. 755. MILITARY ACTIVITIES.

Nothing in this Act shall confer upon the Secretary any authority to engage in warfighting, the military defense of the United States, or other military activities, nor shall anything in this Act limit the existing authority of the Department of Defense or the Armed Forces to engage in warfighting, the military defense of the United States, or other military activities.

SEC. 756. REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

This Act vests no new regulatory authority in the Secretary or any other Federal official, and transfers to the Secretary or another Federal official only such regulatory authority as exists on the date of enactment of this Act within any agency, program, or function transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act, or that on such date of enactment is exercised by another official of the executive branch with respect to such agency, program, or function. Any such transferred authority may not be exercised by an official from whom it is transferred upon transfer of such agency, program, or function to the Secretary or another Federal official pursuant to this Act.

SEC. 757. PROVISIONS REGARDING TRANSFERS FROM DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

(a) SEPARATE CONTRACTING.—To the extent that programs or activities transferred by this Act from the Department of Energy to the Department of Homeland Security are being carried out through contracts with the operator of a national laboratory of the Department of Energy, the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Secretary of Energy shall ensure that contracts for such programs and activities between the Department of Homeland Security and such operator are separate from the contracts of the Department of Energy with such operator.

(b) REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS.—In the case of an activity carried out by the operator of a national laboratory of the Department of Energy but under contract with the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Homeland Security shall reimburse the Department of Energy for costs of such activity through a method under which the Secretary of Energy waives any requirement for the Department of Homeland Security to pay administrative charges or personnel costs of the Department of Energy or its contractors in excess of the amount that the Secretary of Energy pays for an activity carried out by such contractor and paid for by the Department of Energy.

(c) LABORATORY DIRECTED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.—No funds authorized to be appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department in any fiscal year may be obligated or expended for laboratory directed research and development activities carried out by the Department of Energy unless such activities support the mission of the Department described in section 101.

(d) DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY COORDINATION ON HOMELAND SECURITY RELATED RESEARCH.—The Secretary of Energy shall ensure that any research, development, test, and evaluation activities conducted within the Department of Energy that are directly or indirectly related to homeland security are fully coordinated with the Secretary to minimize duplication of effort and maximize the effective application of Federal budget resources.

SEC. 758. COUNTERNARCOTICS OFFICER.

The Secretary shall appoint a senior official in the Department to assume primary responsibility for coordinating policy and operations within the Department and between the the Department and other Federal departments and agencies with respect to interdicting the entry of illegal drugs into the United States, and tracking and severing connections between illegal drug trafficking and terrorism.

SEC. 759. OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Office of the Secretary an Office of International Affairs. The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be a senior official appointed by the Secretary.

(b) DUTIES OF THE DIRECTOR.—The Director shall have the following duties:

(1) To promote information and education exchange with nations friendly to the United States in order to promote sharing of best practices and technologies relating to homeland security. Such information exchange shall include the following:

(A) Joint research and development on countermeasures.

(B) Joint training exercises of first responders.

(C) Exchange of expertise on terrorism prevention, response, and crisis management.

(2) To identify areas for homeland security information and training exchange where the United States has a demonstrated weakness and another friendly nation or nations have a demonstrated expertise.

(3) To plan and undertake international conferences, exchange programs, and training activities.

(4) To manage international activities within the Department in coordination with other Federal officials with responsibility for counter-terrorism matters.

SEC. 760. PROHIBITION OF THE TERRORISM INFORMATION AND PREVENTION SYSTEM.

Any and all activities of the Federal Government to implement the proposed component program of the Citizen Corps known as Operation TIPS (Terrorism Information and Prevention System) are hereby prohibited.

SEC. 771. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002" or the "SAFETY Act".

SEC. 772. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) In General.—The Secretary shall be responsible for the administration of this subtitle.

(b) DESIGNATION OF QUALIFIED ANTI-TERRORISM TECHNOLOGIES.—The Secretary may designate anti-terrorism technologies that qualify for protection under the system of risk management set forth in this subtitle in accordance with criteria that shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(1) Prior and extensive United States government use and demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness.

(2) Availability of the technology for immediate deployment in public and private settings.

(3) Existence of extraordinarily large or extraordinarily unquantifiable potential third party liability risk exposure to the Seller or other provider of such anti-terrorism technology.

(4) Substantial likelihood that such anti-terrorism technology will not be deployed unless protections under the system of risk management provided under this subtitle are extended.

(5) Magnitude of risk exposure to the public if such anti-terrorism technology is not deployed.

(6) evaluation of all scientific studies that can be feasibly conducted in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may issue such regulations, after notice and comment in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States, Code, as may be necessary to carry out this subtitle.

SEC. 773. LITIGATION MANAGEMENT.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—(1)There shall exist a Federal cause of action for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller. The substantive law for decision in any such action shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which such acts of terrorism occurred, unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law.

(2) Such appropriate district court of the United States shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller.

(b) SPECIAL RULES.—In an action brought under this section for damages the following provisions apply:

(1) No punitive damages intended to punish or deter, exemplary damages, or other damages not intended to compensate a plaintiff for actual losses may be awarded, nor shall any party be liable for interest prior to the judgment.

(2)(A) Noneconomic damages may be awarded against a defendant only in an amount directly proportional to the percentage of responsibility of such defendant for the harm to the plaintiff, and no plaintiff may recover noneconomic damages unless the plaintiff suffered physical harm.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ''noneconomic damages'' means damages for losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium, hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and any other nonpecuniary losses.

(c) COLLATERAL SOURCES.—Any recovery by a plaintiff in an action under this section shall be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of such acts of terrorism that result or may result in loss to the Seller.

(d) GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR DEFENSE.—(1) Should a product liability lawsuit be filed for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies approved by the Secretary, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller, there shall be a rebuttable presumption that the government contractor defense applies in such lawsuit. This presumption shall only be overcome by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology under this subsection. This presumption of the government contractor defense shall apply regardless of whether the claim against the Seller arises from a sale of the product to federal government or non-federal government customers.

(2) The Secretary will be exclusively responsible for the review and approval of anti-terrorism technology for purposes of establishing a government contractor defense in any product liability lawsuit for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies approved by the Secretary, as provided in this paragraph and paragraph (3), have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller. Upon the Seller's submission to the Secretary for approval of anti-terrorism technology, the Secretary will conduct a comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended. The Seller will conduct safety and hazard analyses on such technology and will supply the Secretary with all such information.

(3) For those products reviewed and approved by the Secretary, the Secretary will issue a certificate of conformance to the Seller and place the product on an Approved Product List for Homeland Security.

(d) EXCLUSION.—Nothing in this section shall in any way limit the ability of any person to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that—

(1) attempts to commit, knowingly participates in, aids and abets, or commits any act of terrorism, or any criminal act related to or resulting from such act of terrorism; or

(2) participates in a conspiracy to commit any such act of terrorism or any such criminal act.

SEC. 774. RISK MANAGEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to non-federal government customers (''Seller'') shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act.

(2) For the total claims related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller's anti-terrorism technologies.

(3) Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the following, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against an act of terrorism:

(A) contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller.

(B) contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer.

(4) Such liability insurance under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the sale or use of anti-terrorism technologies.

(b) RECIPROCAL WAIVER OF CLAIMS.—The Seller shall enter into a reciprocal waiver of claims with its contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers, and contractors and subcontractors of the customers, involved in the manufacture, sale, use or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies, under which each party to the waiver agrees to be responsible for losses, including business interruption losses, that it sustains, or for losses sustained by its own employees resulting from an activity resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act.

(c) EXTENT OF LIABILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, liability for all claims against a Seller arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller, whether for compensatory or punitive damages or for contribution or indemnity, shall not be in an amount greater than the limits of liability insurance coverage required to be maintained by the Seller under this section.

SEC. 775. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this subtitle, the following definitions apply:

(1) QUALIFIED ANTI-TERRORISM TECHNOLOGY.—For purposes of this subtitle, the term

"qualified anti-terrorism technology" means any product, device, or technology designed, developed, or modified for the specific purpose of preventing, detecting, identifying, or deterring acts of terrorism and limiting the harm such acts might otherwise cause, that is designated as such by the Secretary.

(2) ACT OF TERRORISM.—(A) The term "act of terrorism" means any act that the Secretary determines meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), as such requirements are further defined and specified by the Secretary.

(B) REQUIREMENTS.—An act meets the requirements of this subparagraph if the act—

(i) is unlawful;

(ii) causes harm to a person, property, or entity, in the United States, or in the case of a domestic United States air carrier or a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), in or outside the United States; and

(iii) uses or attempts to use instrumentalities, weapons or other methods designed or intended to cause mass destruction, injury or other loss to citizens or institutions of the United States.

(3) INSURANCE CARRIER.—The term ''insurance carrier'' means any corporation, association, society, order, firm, company, mutual, partnership, individual aggregation of individuals, or any other legal entity that provides commercial property and casualty insurance. Such term includes any affiliates of a commercial insurance carrier.

(4) LIABILITY INSURANCE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''liability insurance'' means insurance for legal liabilities incurred by the insured resulting from—

(i) loss of or damage to property of others;

(ii) ensuing loss of income or extra expense incurred because of loss of or damage to property of others;

(iii) bodily injury (including) to persons other than the insured or its employees; or

(iv) loss resulting from debt or default of another.

(5) LOSS.—The term ''loss'' means death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, including business interruption loss.

(6) NON-FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CUSTOMERS.—The term ''non-Federal Government customers'' means any customer of a Seller that is not an agency or instrumentality of the United States Government with authority under Public Law 85-804 to provide for indemnification under certain circumstances for third-party claims against its contractors, including but not limited to State and local authorities and commercial entities.

TITLE VIII—TRANSITION

Subtitle A—Reorganization Plan

SEC. 801. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title:

(1) The term ''agency'' includes any entity, organizational unit, program, or function.

(2) The term ''transition period'' means the 12-month period beginning on the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 802. REORGANIZATION PLAN.

(a) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a reorganization plan regarding the following:

(1) The transfer of agencies, personnel, assets, and obligations to the Department pursuant to this Act.

(2) Any consolidation, reorganization, or streamlining of agencies transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act.

(b) PLAN ELEMENTS.—The plan transmitted under subsection (a) shall contain, consistent with this Act, such elements as the President deems appropriate, including the following:

(1) Identification of any functions of agencies transferred to the Department pursuant tothis Act that will not be transferred to the Department under the plan.

(2) Specification of the steps to be taken by the Secretary to organize the Department, including the delegation or assignment of functions transferred to the Department among officers of the Department in order to permit the Department to carry out the functions transferred under the plan.

(3) Specification of the funds available to each agency that will be transferred to the Department as a result of transfers under the plan.

(4) Specification of the proposed allocations within the Department of unexpended funds transferred in connection with transfers under the plan.

(5) Specification of any proposed disposition of property, facilities, contracts, records, and other assets and obligations of agencies transferred under the plan.

(c) MODIFICATION OF PLAN.—The President may, on the basis of consultations with the appropriate congressional committees, modify or revise any part of the plan until that part of the plan becomes effective in accordance with subsection (d).

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The reorganization plan described in this section, including any modifications or revisions of the plan under subsection (d), shall become effective for an agency on the earlier of—

(A) the date specified in the plan (or the plan as modified pursuant to subsection (d)), except that such date may not be earlier than 90 days after the date the President has transmitted the reorganization plan to the appropriate congressional committees pursuant to subsection (a); or

(B) the end of the transition period.

(2) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection may be construed to require the transfer of functions, personnel, records, balances of appropriations, or other assets of an agency on a single date.

(3) SUPERSEDES EXISTING LAW.—Paragraph (1) shall apply notwithstanding section 905(b) of title 5, United States Code.

Subtitle B—Transitional Provisions

SEC. 811. TRANSITIONAL AUTHORITIES.

(a) PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE BY OFFICIALS.—Until the transfer of an agency to the Department, any official having authority over or functions relating to the agency immediately before the effective date of this Act shall provide to the Secretary such assistance, including the use of personnel and assets, as the Secretary may request in preparing for the transfer and integration of the agency into the Department.

(b) SERVICES AND PERSONNEL.—During the transition period, upon the request of the Secretary, the head of any executive agency may, on a reimbursable or non-reimbursable basis, provide services or detail personnel to assist with the transition.

(c) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Until the transfer of an agency to the Department, the President is authorized to transfer to the Secretary to fund the purposes authorized in this Act—

(1) for administrative expenses related to the establishment of the Department of Homeland Security, not to exceed two percent of the unobligated balance of any appropriation available to such agency; and

(2) for purposes for which the funds were appropriated, not to exceed three percent of the unobligated balance of any appropriation available to such agency;

except that not less than 15 days' notice shall be given to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate before any such funds transfer is made.

(d) ACTING OFFICIALS.—(1) During the transition period, pending the advice and consent of the Senate to the appointment of an officer required by this Act to be appointed by and with such advice and consent, the President may designate any officer whose appointment was required to be made by and with such advice and consent and who was such an officer immediately before the effective date of this Act (and who continues in office) or immediately before such designation, to act in such office until the same is filled as provided in this Act. While so

(A) the rates provided by this Act for the respective offices in which they act; or

(B) the rates provided for the offices held at the time of designation.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be understood to require the advice and consent of the Senate to the appointment by the President to a position in the Department of any officer whose agency is transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act and whose duties following such transfer are germane to those performed before such transfer.

(e) TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL, ASSETS, OBLIGATIONS, AND FUNCTIONS.—Upon the transfer of an agency to the Department—

(1) the personnel, assets, and obligations held by or available in connection with the agency shall be transferred to the Secretary for appropriate allocation, subject to the approval of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and notwithstanding the provisions of section 1531(a)(2) of title 31, United States Code; and

(2) the Secretary shall have all functions relating to the agency that any other official could by law

exercise in relation to the agency immediately before such transfer, and shall have in addition all functions vested in the Secretary by this Act or other law.

(f) PROHIBITION ON USE OF TRANSPORTATION TRUST FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds derived from the Highway Trust Fund, Airport and Airway Trust Fund, Inland Waterway Trust Fund, Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund, or Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund may be transferred to, made available to, or obligated by the Secretary or any other official in the Department.

(2) LIMITATION.—This subsection shall not apply to security-related funds provided to the Federal Aviation Administration for fiscal years preceding fiscal year 2003 for (A) operations, (B) facilities and equipment, or (C) research, engineering, and development.

SEC. 812. SAVINGS PROVISIONS.

(a) COMPLETED ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS.—(1) Completed administrative actions of an agency shall not be affected by the enactment of this Act or the transfer of such agency to the Department, but shall continue in effect according to their terms until amended, modified, superseded, terminated, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by an officer of the United States or a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ''completed administrative action'' includes orders, determinations, rules, regulations, personnel actions, permits, agreements, grants, contracts, certificates, licenses, registrations, and privileges.

(b) PENDING PROCEEDINGS.—Subject to the authority of the Secretary under this Act—

(1) pending proceedings in an agency, including notices of proposed rulemaking, and applications for licenses, permits, certificates, grants, and financial assistance, shall continue notwithstanding the enactment of this Act or the transfer of the agency to the Department, unless discontinued or modified under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such discontinuance could have occurred if such enactment or transfer had not occurred; and

(2) orders issued in such proceedings, and appeals therefrom, and payments made pursuant to such orders, shall issue in the same manner and on the same terms as if this Act had not been enacted or the agency had not been transferred, and any such orders shall continue in effect until amended, modified, superseded, terminated, set aside, or revoked by an officer of the United States or a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(c) PENDING CIVIL ACTIONS.—Subject to the authority of the Secretary under this Act, pending civil actions shall continue notwithstanding the enactment of this Act or the transfer of an agency to the Department, and in such civil actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered and enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if such enactment or transfer had not occurred.

(d) REFERENCES.—References relating to an agency that is transferred to the Department in statutes, Executive orders, rules, regulations, directives, or delegations of authority that precede such transfer or the effective date of this Act shall be deemed to refer, as appropriate, to the Department, to its officers, employees, or agents, or to its corresponding organizational units or functions. Statutory reporting requirements that applied in relation to such an agency immediately before the effective date of this Act shall continue to apply following such transfer if they refer to the agency by name.

(e) EMPLOYMENT PROVISIONS.—(1) Notwithstanding the generality of the foregoing (including sub-sections (a) and (d)), in and for the Department the Secretary may, in regulations prescribed jointly with the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, adopt the rules, procedures, terms, and conditions, established by statute, rule, or regulation before the effective date of this Act, relating to employment in any agency transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act; and

(2) except as otherwise provided in this Act, or under authority granted by this Act, the transfer pursuant to this Act of personnel shall not alter the terms and conditions of employment, including compensation, of any employee so transferred.

SEC. 813. TERMINATIONS.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, whenever all the functions vested by law in any agency have been transferred pursuant to this Act, each position and office the incumbent of which was authorized to receive compensation at the rates prescribed for an office or position at level II, III, IV, or V, of the Executive Schedule, shall terminate.

SEC. 814. INCIDENTAL TRANSFERS.

The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Secretary, is authorized and directed to make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, and obligations held, used, arising from, available, or to be made available, in connection with the functions transferred by this Act, as the Director may deem necessary to accomplish the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 815. NATIONAL IDENTIFICATION SYSTEM NOT AUTHORIZED.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize the development of a national identification system or card.

SEC. 816. CONTINUITY OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OVERSIGHT.

Notwithstanding the transfer of an agency to the Department pursuant to this Act, the Inspector General that exercised oversight of such agency prior to such transfer shall continue to exercise oversight of such agency during the period of time, if any, between the transfer of such agency to the Department pursuant to this Act and the appointment of the Inspector General of the Department of Homeland Security in accordance with section 103(b) of this Act.

SEC. 817. REFERENCE.

With respect to any function transferred by or under this Act (including under a reorganization plan that becomes effective under section 802) and exercised on or after the effective date of this Act, reference in any other Federal law to any department, commission, or agency or any officer or office the functions of which are so transferred shall be deemed to refer to the Secretary, other official, or component of the Department to which such function is so transferred.

Subject: Provisions on liability in Department of Homeland Security legislation

Brett, thanks for taking a look at these. I think for present purposes a 1-2 page summary and analysis of these provisions, focusing on what's wrong with them and how they fit or conflict with positions the Administration has taken on other similar proposals, would be ideal. If you shoot that to me, I'll take care of making sure the homeland security cast of thousands gets it. Thanks again.

(B) appears to be intended—

(i) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(ii) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(iii) to affect the conduct of a government by mass destruction, assassination, or kidnapping.

(15) The term ''United States'', when used in a geographic sense, means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, any possession of the United States, and any waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 3. CONSTRUCTION; SEVERABILITY.

Any provision of this Act held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to give it the maximum effect permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event such provision shall be deemed severable from this Act and shall not affect the remainder thereof, or the application of such provision to other persons not similarly situated or to other, dissimilar circumstances.

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect thirty days after the date of enactment or, if enacted within thirty days before January 1, 2003, on January 1, 2003.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

SEC. 101. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT; MISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a Department of Homeland Security, as an executive department of the United States within the meaning of title 5, United States Code.

(b) MISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The primary mission of the Department is to—

(A) prevent terrorist attacks within the United States;

(B) reduce the vulnerability of the United States to terrorism;

(C) minimize the damage, and assist in the recovery, from terrorist attacks that do occur within the United States; and

(D) carry out all functions of entities transferred to the Department, including by acting as a focal point regarding natural and manmade crises and emergency planning.

(2) RESPONSIBILITY FOR INVESTIGATING AND PROSECUTING TERRORISM.—Except as specifically provided by law with respect to entities transferred to the Department under this Act, primary responsibility for investigating and prosecuting acts of terrorism shall be vested not in the Department, but rather in Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies with jurisdiction over the acts in question.

SEC. 102. SECRETARY; FUNCTIONS.

(a) SECRETARY.—(1) There is a Secretary of Homeland Security, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) The Secretary is the head of the Department and shall have direction, authority, and control over it.

(3) All functions of all officers, employees, and organizational units of the Department are vested in the Secretary.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Secretary—

(1) except as otherwise provided by this Act, may delegate any of the Secretary's functions to any officer, employee, or organizational unit of the Department;

(2) shall have the authority to make contracts, grants, and cooperative agreements, and to enter into agreements with other executive agencies, as may be necessary and proper to carry out the Secretary's responsibilities under this Act or otherwise provided by law; and

(3) shall take reasonable steps to ensure that information systems and databases of the Department are compatible with each other.

(c) COORDINATION WITH NON-FEDERAL ENTITIES.—The Secretary shall coordinate (including the provision of training and equipment) with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, with the private sector, and with other entities, including by—

(1) coordinating with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, and with the private sector, to ensure adequate planning, equipment, training, and exercise activities;

(2) coordinating and, as appropriate, consolidating, the Federal Government's communications and systems of communications relating to homeland security with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, the private sector, other entities, and the public;

(3) directing and supervising grant programs of the Federal Government for State and local government emergency response providers; and

(4) distributing or, as appropriate, coordinating the distribution of, warnings and information to State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities and to the public.

(d) MEETINGS OF NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL.—The Secretary may, subject to the direction of the President, attend and participate in meetings of the National Security Council.

(e) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS.—The issuance of regulations by the Secretary shall be governed by the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, except as specifically provided in this Act, in laws granting regulatory authorities that are transferred by this Act, and in laws enacted after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 103. OTHER OFFICERS.

(a) DEPUTY SECRETARY; UNDER SECRETARIES.—There are the following officers, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate:

(1) A Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security, who shall be the Secretary's first assistant for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 33 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) An Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection.

(3) An Under Secretary for Science and Technology.

(4) An Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security.

(5) An Under Secretary for Emergency Preparedness and Response.

(6) An Under Secretary for Management.

(7) Not more than four Assistant Secretaries.

(b) INSPECTOR GENERAL.—There is an Inspector General, who shall be appointed as provided in section 3(a) of the Inspector General Act of 1978.

(c) COMMANDANT OF THE COAST GUARD.—To assist the Secretary in the performance of the Secretary's functions, there is a Commandant of the Coast Guard, who shall be appointed as provided in section 44 of title 14, United States Code.

(d) OTHER OFFICERS.—To assist the Secretary in the performance of the Secretary's functions, there are the following officers, appointed by the President:

(1) A General Counsel, who shall be the chief legal officer of the Department.

(2) Not more than eight Assistant Secretaries.

(3) A Director of the Secret Service.

(4) A Chief Financial Officer.

(5) A Chief Information Officer.

(e) PERFORMANCE OF SPECIFIC FUNCTIONS.—Subject to the provisions of this Act, every officer of the Department shall perform the functions specified by law for the official's office or prescribed by the Secretary.

TITLE II—INFORMATION ANALYSIS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION

Subtitle A—Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection

SEC. 201. UNDER SECRETARY FOR INFORMATION ANALYSIS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection, shall be responsible for the following:

(1) Conducting analysis of information, including foreign intelligence and open source information, lawfully collected by Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies and by elements of the intelligence community with respect to threats of terrorist acts against the United States.

(2) Integrating information, intelligence, and intelligence analyses to produce and disseminate infrastructure vulnerability assessments with respect to such threats.

(3) Identifying priorities for protective and support measures by the Department, by other executive agencies, by State and local governments, by the private sector, and by other entities.

(4) Reviewing, analyzing, and recommending improvements in law, policy, and procedure for the sharing of intelligence and other information with respect to threats against the United States within the Federal Government and between the Federal Government and State and local governments.

(5) Under the direction of the Secretary, developing a comprehensive national plan to provide for the security of key resources and critical infrastructures.

(6) Coordinating with other executive agencies, State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, and the private sector, to provide advice on implementation of such comprehensive national plan.

(7) Supporting the intelligence and information requirements of the Department.

(8) Performing such other functions as the Secretary may direct.

(9) Administering the Homeland Security Advisory System, exercising primary responsibility for public advisories relating to terrorist threats, and (in coordination with other executive agencies) providing specific warning information to State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, the private sector, other entities, and the public, as well as advice about appropriate protective actions and countermeasures.

SEC. 202. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the following:

(1) The National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section), including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(2) The National Communications System of the Department of Defense, including the functions of the Secretary of Defense relating thereto.

(3) The Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce, including the functions of the Secretary of Commerce relating thereto.

(4) The Energy Security and Assurance Program of the Department of Energy, including the National Infrastructure Simulation and Analysis Center and the functions of the Secretary of Energy relating thereto.

(5) The Federal Computer Incident Response Center of the General Services Administration, including the functions of the Administrator of General Services relating thereto.

SEC. 203. ACCESS TO INFORMATION.

The Secretary shall have access to all reports, assessments, and analytical information relating to threats of terrorism in the United States and to other areas of responsibility described in section 101(b), and to all information concerning infrastructure or other vulnerabilities of the United States to terrorism, whether or not such information has been analyzed, that may be collected, possessed, or prepared by any executive agency, except as otherwise directed by the President. The Secretary shall also have access to other information relating to the foregoing matters that may be collected, possessed, or prepared by an executive agency, as the President may further provide. With respect to the material to which the Secretary has access under this section—

(1) the Secretary may obtain such material by request, and may enter into cooperative arrangements with other executive agencies to share such material on a regular or routine basis, including requests or arrangements involving broad categories of material;

(2) regardless of whether the Secretary has made any request or entered into any cooperative arrangement pursuant to paragraph (1), all executive agencies promptly shall provide to the Secretary—

(A) all reports, assessments, and analytical information relating to threats of terrorism in the United States and to other areas of responsibility described in section 101(b);

(B) all information concerning infrastructure or other vulnerabilities of the United States to terrorism, whether or not such information has been analyzed;

(C) all information relating to significant and credible threats of terrorism in the United States, whether or not such information has been analyzed, if the President has provided that the Secretary shall have access to such information; and

(D) such other material as the President may further provide;

(3) the Secretary shall have full access and input with respect to information from any national collaborative information analysis capability (as referred to in section 924 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107–107; 115 Stat. 1199)) established jointly by the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence; and

(4) the Secretary shall ensure that any material received pursuant to this section is protected from unauthorized disclosure and handled and used only for the performance of official duties, and that any intelligence information shared under this section shall be transmitted, retained, and disseminated consistent with the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence to protect intelligence sources and methods under the National Security Act and related procedures or, as appropriate, similar authorities of the Attorney General concerning sensitive law enforcement information.

SEC. 204. PROCEDURES FOR SHARING INFORMATION.

The Secretary shall establish procedures on the use of information shared under this title that—

(1) limit the redissemination of such information to ensure that it is not used for an unauthorized purpose;

(2) ensure the security and confidentiality of such information;

(3) protect the constitutional and statutory rights of any individuals who are subjects of such information; and

(4) provide data integrity through the timely removal and destruction of obsolete or erroneous names and information.

SEC. 205. PRIVACY OFFICER.

The Secretary shall appoint a senior official in the Department to assume primary responsibility for privacy policy, including—

(1) assuring that the use of information technologies sustain, and do not erode, privacy protections relating to the use, collection, and disclosure of personal information;

(2) assuring that personal information contained in Privacy Act systems of records is handled in full compliance with fair information practices as set out in the Privacy Act of 1974;

(3) evaluating legislative proposals involving collection, use, and disclosure of personal information by the Federal Government;

(4) conducting a privacy impact assessment of proposed rules on the privacy of personal information, including the type of personal information collected and the number of people affected; and

(5) preparing a report to Congress on an annual basis on activities of the Department that affect privacy, including complaints of privacy violations, implementation of the Privacy Act of 1974, internal controls, and other matters.

SEC. 206. FEDERAL CYBERSECURITY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection, shall establish and manage a program to improve the security of Federal critical information systems, including carrying out responsibilities under paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 201 that relate to such systems.

(b) DUTIES.—The duties of the Secretary under subsection (a) are—

(1) to evaluate the increased use by civilian executive agencies of techniques and tools to enhance the security of Federal critical information systems, including, as appropriate, consideration of cryptography;

(2) to provide assistance to civilian executive agencies in protecting the security of Federal critical information systems, including identification of significant risks to such systems; and

(3) to coordinate research and development for critical information systems relating to supervisory control and data acquisition systems, including, as appropriate, the establishment of a test bed.

(c) FEDERAL INFORMATION SYSTEM SECURITY TEAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out subsection (b)(2), the Secretary shall establish, manage, and support a Federal information system security team whose purpose is to provide technical expertise to civilian executive agencies to assist such agencies in securing Federal critical information systems by conducting information security audits of such systems, including conducting tests of the effectiveness of information security control techniques and performing logical access control tests of interconnected computer systems and networks, and related vulnerability assessment techniques.

(2) TEAM MEMBERS.—The Secretary shall ensure that the team under paragraph (1) includes technical experts and auditors, computer scientists, and computer forensics analysts whose technical competence enables the team to conduct audits under such paragraph.

(3) AGENCY AGREEMENTS REGARDING AUDITS.—Each civilian executive agency may enter into an agreement with the team under paragraph (1) for the conduct of audits under such paragraph of the Federal critical information systems of the agency. Such agreement shall establish the terms of the audit and shall include provisions to minimize the extent to which the audit disrupts the operations of the agency.

(4) REPORTS.—Promptly after completing an audit under paragraph (1) of a civilian executive agency, the team under such paragraph shall prepare a report summarizing the findings of the audit and making recommendations for corrective action. Such report shall be submitted to the Secretary, the head of such agency, and the Inspector General of the agency (if any), and upon request of any congressional committee with jurisdiction over such agency, to such committee.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term ''Federal critical information system'' means an ''information system'' as defined in section 3502 of title 44, United States Code, that—

(1) is, or is a component of, a key resource or critical infrastructure;

(2) is used or operated by a civilian executive agency or by a contractor of such an agency; and

(3) does not include any national security system as defined in section 5142 of the Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996.

Subtitle B—Intelligence Analysis Center

SEC. 211. INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER

(a) ESTABLISHMENT; NFIP AGENCY.—(1) There is established within the Department the Intelligence Analysis Center. The Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection shall be the head of the Intelligence Analysis Center.

(2) The Intelligence Analysis Center is a program of the intelligence community for purposes of the National Foreign Intelligence Program (as defined in section 3(6) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(6))).

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection, through the Intelligence Analysis Center, shall carry out the duties specified in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (6), and (7) of section 201(b).

(c) DETAIL OF CERTAIN PERSONNEL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the Director of Central Intelligence, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, or the head of another agency or department as the case may be, shall enter into cooperative arrangements to provide for an appropriate number of individuals to be detailed to the Under Secretary to perform analytical functions and duties with respect to the mission of the Department from the following agencies:

(A) The Central Intelligence Agency.

(B) The Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(C) The National Security Agency.

(D) The National Imagery and Mapping Agency.

(E) The Department of State.

(F) The Defense Intelligence Agency.

(G) Any other agency or department that the President determines appropriate.

(2) TERMS OF DETAIL.—Any officer or employee of the United States or a member of the Armed Forces who is detailed to the Under Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be detailed on a reimbursable basis for a period of less than two years for the performance of temporary functions as required by the Under Secretary.

(d) INCLUSION OF OFFICE OF INTELLIGENCE AS AN ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY.—Section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' at the end of subparagraph (I);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (J) as subparagraph (K); and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (I) the following new subparagraph:

''(J) the Intelligence Analysis Center of the Department of Homeland Security; and''.

SEC. 212. MISSION OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The mission of the Intelligence Analysis Center is as follows:

(1) ANALYSIS AND PRODUCTION.—

(A) Correlating and evaluating information and intelligence related to the mission of the Department collected from all sources available.

(B) Producing all-source collaborative intelligence analysis, warnings, tactical assessments, and strategic assessments of the terrorist threat and infrastructure vulnerabilities of the United States.

(C) Providing approporiate dissemination of such assessments.

(D) Improving the lines of communication with respect to homeland security between the Federal Government and State and local public safety agencies and the private sector through the timely dissemination of information pertaining to threats of acts of terrorism against the United States.

(2) COORDINATION OF INFORMATION.—Coordinating with elements of the intelligence community and with Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, and the private sector as appropriate.

(3) ADDITIONAL DUTIES.—Performing such other functions as the Secretary may direct.

(b) STRATEGIC AND TACTICAL MISSIONS OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.—The Under Secretary shall conduct strategic and tactical assessments and warnings through the Intelligence Analysis Center, including research, analysis, and the production of assessments on the following as they relate to the mission of the Department:

(1) Domestic terrorism.

(2) International terrorism.

(3) Counterintelligence.

(4) Transnational crime.

(5) Proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

(6) Illicit financing of terrorist activities.

(7) Cybersecurity and cybercrime.

(8) Key resources and critical infrastructures.

(c) STAFFING OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.—

(1) FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.—In accordance with title VIII, for purposes of carrying out this title, there is transferred to the Under Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and liabilities of the following entities:

(A) The National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section).

(B) The Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce.

(C) The Computer Security Division of the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

(D) The Federal Computer Incident Response Center of the General Services Administration.

(E) The National Infrastructure Simulation and Analysis Center of the Department of Energy.

(F) The National Communications System of the Department of Defense.

(G) The intelligence element of the Coast Guard.

(H) The intelligence element of the United States Customs Service.

(I) The intelligence element of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

(J) The intelligence element of the Transportation Security Administration.

(K) The intelligence element of the Federal Protective Service.

(L) The El Paso Intelligence Center of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

(2) STRUCTURE.—It is the sense of Congress that the Under Secretary should model the Intelligence Analysis Center on the technical, analytic approach of the Information Dominance Center of the Department of the Army to the maximum extent feasible and appropriate.

TITLE III—UNDER SECRETARY FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SEC. 301. UNDER SECRETARY FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall have responsibility for—

(1) establishing and administering the primary research and development activities of the Department, including the long-term research and development needs and capabilities for all elements of the Department;

(2) conducting basic and applied research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities that are relevant to any or all elements of the Department, through both intramural and extramural programs; provided that such responsibility does not extend to human health-related research and development activities;

(3) coordinating and integrating all research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department;

(4) coordinating with other appropriate executive agencies in developing and carrying out the science and technology agenda of the Department to reduce duplication and identify unmet needs;

(5) in consultation with other appropriate executive agencies, developing a national policy and strategic plan for, identifying priorities for, and coordinating the Federal Government's civilian efforts to identify and develop countermeasures to chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear, andother emerging terrorist threats;

(6) establishing Federal priorities for research, development, demonstration, testing, and, as appropriate, procurement and transitional operation of technology and systems—

(A) for preventing the importation of chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons and related materials;

(B) for detecting, preventing, and protecting against terrorist attacks that involve such weapons or related materials; and

(C) for interoperability of communications systems for emergency response providers;

(7) ensuring that the research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department are aligned with the Department's procurement needs;

(8) facilitating the deployment of technology that will serve to enhance homeland security, including through the establishment of a centralized Federal repository for information relating to technologies described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (6) for dissemination to Federal, State, and local government and private sector entities, and for information for persons seeking guidance on how to pursue proposals to develop or deploy technologies that would contribute to homeland security;

(9) providing guidance, recommendations, and technical assistance as appropriate to assist Federal, State, and local government and private sector efforts to evaluate and implement the use of technologies described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (6); and

(10) developing and overseeing the administration of guidelines for merit review of research and development projects throughout the Department, and for the dissemination of research conducted or sponsored by the Department.

SEC. 302. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with Title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and liabilities of the following:

(1) The program under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, and functions thereof, including the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services relating thereto, subject to the amendments made by section 906(3), except that such transfer shall not occur unless the program under section 212 of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002 (subtitle B of title II of Public Law 107–188), and functions thereof, including the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating thereto, subject to the amendments made by section 907, is transferred to the Department.

(2) Programs and activities of the Department of Energy, including the functions of the Secretary of Energy relating thereto (but not including programs and activities relating to the strategic nuclear defense posture of the United States), as follows:

(A) the programs and activities relating to chemical and biological national security, and supporting programs and activities directly related to homeland security, of the non-proliferation and verification research and development program;

(B) the programs and activities relating to nuclear smuggling, and other programs and activities directly related to homeland security, within the proliferation detection program of the non-proliferation and verification research and development program;

(C) those aspects of the nuclear assessment program and activities of the assessment, detection, and cooperation program of the international materials protection and cooperation program that are directly related to homeland security;

(D) such life sciences activities of the biological and environmental research program related to microbial pathogens as may be designated by the President for transfer to the Department and that are directly related to homeland security;

(E) the Environmental Measurements Laboratory; and

(F) the advanced scientific computing research program and activities at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory; and

(3) the homeland security projects within the Chemical Biological Defense Program of the Department of Defense known as the Biological Defense Homeland Security Support Program and the Biological Counter-Terrorism Research Program.

SEC. 303. CONDUCT OF CERTAIN PUBLIC HEALTH-RELATED ACTIVITIES.

With respect to civilian human health-related research and development activities relating to countermeasures for chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear and other emerging terrorist threats carried out by the Department of Health and Human Services (including the Public Health Service), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall set priorities for such activities in collaboration with the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

SEC. 304. FEDERALLY FUNDED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CENTER.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall have the authority to establish or contract with one or more federally funded research and development centers to provide independent analysis of homeland security issues, or to carry out other responsibilities under this Act.

SEC. 305. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) CLASSIFICATION.—To the greatest extent practicable, research conducted or supported by the Department shall be unclassified.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to preclude any Under Secretary of the Department from carrying out research, development, demonstration, or deployment activities, as long as such activities are coordinated through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may issue necessary regulations with respect to research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department, including the conducting, funding, and reviewing of such activities.

(d) NOTIFICATION OF PRESIDENTIAL LIFE SCIENCES DESIGNATIONS.—Not later than 60 days before effecting any transfer of Department of Energy life sciences activities pursuant to section 302(2)(D) of this Act, the President shall notify the Congress of the proposed transfer and shall include the reasons for the transfer and a description of the effect of the transfer on the activities of the Department of Energy.

SEC. 306. HOMELAND SECURITY SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COORDINATION COUNCIL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND COMPOSITION.—There is established within the Department a Homeland Security Science and Technology Coordination Council (in this section referred to as the ''Coordination Council''). The Coordination Council shall be composed of all the Under Secretaries of the Department and any other Department officials designated by the Secretary, and shall be chaired by the Undersecretary for Science and Technology. The Coordination Council shall meet at the call of the chair.

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Coordination Council shall—

(1) establish priorities for research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities conducted or supported by the Department;

(2) ensure that the priorities established under paragraph (1) reflect the acquisition needs of the Department; and

(3) assist the Under Secretary for Science and Technology in carrying out his responsibilities under section 301(3).

SEC. 307. CONDUCT OF RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, DEMONSTRATION, TESTING AND EVALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall carry out the responsibilities under section 301(2) through both extramural and intramural programs.

(b) EXTRAMURAL PROGRAMS.—(1) The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall operate extramural research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation programs so as to—

(A) ensure that colleges, universities, private research institutes and companies (and consortia thereof) from as many areas of the United States as practicable participate; and

(B) distribute funds through grants, cooperative agreements and contracts through competitions that are as open as possible.

(2) In carrying out the duties under section 301, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may establish university centers of excellence to perform research in support of the mission of the Department. Such centers may be consortia, which may include one or more colleges or universities, private research institutes, or companies.

(c) INTRAMURAL PROGRAMS.—(1) In carrying out the duties under section 301, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may draw upon the expertise of any laboratory of the Federal government, whether operated by a contractor or the Government.

(2) The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science ant Technology, may establish a headquarters laboratory for the Department at any national laboratory and may establish additional laboratory units at other national laboratories.

(3) If the Secretary chooses to establish a headquarters laboratory pursuant to paragraph (2), then the Secretary shall do the following:

(A) Establish criteria for the selection of the headquarters laboratory in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences, appropriate Federal agencies, and other experts.

(B) Publish the criteria in the Federal Register.

(C) Evaluate all appropriate national laboratories against the criteria.

(D) Select a national laboratory on the basis of the criteria.

(E) Report to the appropriate committees of the Congress on which laboratory was selected, how the selected laboratory meets the published criteria, and what duties the headquarters laboratory shall perform.

(4) No laboratory shall begin operating as the headquarters laboratory of the Department until at least 30 days after the transmittal of the report required by paragraph (3)(E).

SEC. 308. TRANSFER OF PLUM ISLAND ANIMAL DISEASE CENTER, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) TRANSFER REQUIRED.—In accordance with title VIII, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Secretary of Homeland Security the Plum Island Animal Disease Center of the Department of Agriculture, including the assets and liabilities of the Center.

(b) CONTINUED DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCESS.—Upon the transfer of the Plum Island Animal Disease Center, the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Secretary of Agriculture shall enter into an agreement to ensure Department of Agriculture access to the center for research, diagnostic, and other activities of the Department of Agriculture.

TITLE IV—BORDER AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 401. UNDER SECRETARY FOR BORDER AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security, shall be responsible for the following:

(1) Preventing the entry of terrorists and the instruments of terrorism into the United States.

(2) Securing the borders, territorial waters, ports, terminals, waterways, and air, land, and sea transportation systems of the United States, including managing and coordinating governmental activities at ports of entry.

(3) Carrying out the immigration enforcement functions vested by statute in, or performed by, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization (or any officer, employee, or component of the Immigration and Naturalization Service) immediately before the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

(4) Establishing and administering rules, in accordance with section 403, governing the granting of visas or other forms of permission, including parole, to enter the United States to individuals who are not a citizen or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

(5) Except as provided in subtitle C, administering the customs laws of the United States.

(6) Conducting the inspection and related administrative functions of the Department of Agriculture transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security under section 404.

(7) In carrying out the foregoing responsibilities, ensuring the speedy, orderly, and efficient flow of lawful traffic and commerce.

SEC. 402. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the following:

(1) The United States Customs Service, except as provided in subtitle C.

(2) The Coast Guard of the Department of Transportation, which shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department, including the functions of the Secretary of Transportation relating thereto.

(3) The Transportation Security Administration of the Department of Transportation, including the functions of the Secretary of Transportation, and of the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security, relating thereto.

(4) The Federal Protective Service of the General Services Administration, including the functions of the Administrator of General Services relating thereto.

SEC. 403. VISA ISSUANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 104(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1104(a)) or any other provision of law, and except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary—

(1) shall be vested exclusively with all authorities to issue regulations with respect to, administer, and enforce the provisions of such Act, and of all other immigration and nationality laws, relating to the functions of consular officers of the United States in connection with the granting or refusal of visas, and shall have the authority to refuse visas in accordance with law and to develop programs of homeland security training for consular officers (in addition to consular training provided by the Secretary of State), which authorities shall be exercised through the Secretary of State, except that the Secretary shall not have authority to alter or reverse the decision of a consular officer to refuse a visa to an alien; and

(2) shall have authority to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the United States, with the consent of the head of the executive agency under whose jurisdiction such officer or employee is serving, any of the functions specified in paragraph (1).

(b) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), the Secretary of State may direct a consular officer to refuse a visa to an alien if the Secretary of State deems such refusal necessary or advisable in the foreign policy or security interests of the United States.

(2) CONSTRUCTION REGARDING AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the authorities of the Secretary of State under the following provisions of law:

(A) Section 101(a)(15)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(A)).

(B) Section 204(d)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) (as it will take effect upon the entry into force of the Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in Respect to Inter-Country Adoption).

(C) Section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(D) Section 212(a)(3)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(3)(C)).

(E) Section 212(a)(10)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(10)(C)).

(F) Section 219(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1189(a)).

(G) Section 237(a)(4)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(C)).

(H) Section 401 of the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996 (22 U.S.C. 6034; Public Law 104–114).

(I) Section 613 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999 (as contained in section 101(b) of division A of Public Law 105–277) (Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999; 112 Stat. 2681; H.R. 4328 (originally H.R. 4276) as amended by section 617 of Public Law 106–553).

(J) Section 801 of H.R. 3427, the Admiral James W. Nance and Meg Donovan Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2000 and 2001, as enacted by reference in Public Law 106–113.

(K) Section 568 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107–115).

(3) CONSTRUCTION REGARDING DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any delegation of authority to the Secretary of State by the President pursuant to any proclamation issued under section 212(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(f)).

(c) ASSIGNMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY EMPLOYEES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR POSTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to assign employees of the Department of Homeland Security to any diplomatic and consular posts abroad to perform the following functions:

(A) Provide expert advice and training to consular officers regarding specific security threats relating to individual visa applications or classes of applications.

(B) Review any or all such applications prior to their adjudication, either on the initiative of the employee of the Department of Homeland Security or upon request by a consular officer or other person charged with adjudicating such applications.

(C) Conduct investigations with respect to matters under the jurisdiction of the Secretary.

(2) PERMANENT ASSIGNMENT; PARTICIPATION IN TERRORIST LOOKOUT COMMITTEE.—When appropriate, employees of the Department of Homeland Security assigned to perform functions described in paragraph (1) may be assigned permanently to overseas diplomatic or consular posts with country-specific or regional responsibility. If the Secretary so directs, any such employee, when present at an overseas post, shall participate in the terrorist lookout committee established under section 304 of the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act of 2002 (8 U.S.C. 1733).

(3) TRAINING AND HIRING.—

(A) The Secretary shall ensure that any employees of the Department of Homeland Security assigned to perform functions described in paragraph (1) shall be provided all necessary training to enable them to carry out such functions, including training in foreign languages, interview techniques, fraud detection techniques, and other skills required by such employees, in conditions in the particular country where each employee is assigned, and in other appropriate areas of study.

(B) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations within 60 days of the enactment of this Act establishing foreign language proficiency requirements for employees of the Department performing the functions described in paragraph (1) and providing that preference shall be given to individuals who meet such requirements in hiring employees for the performance of such functions.

(C) The Secretary is authorized to use the National Foreign Affairs Training Center, on a reimbursable basis, to obtain the training described in subparagraph (A).

(d) NO CREATION OF PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to create or authorize a private right of action to challenge a decision of a consular officer or other United States official or employee to grant or deny a visa.

(e) STUDY REGARDING USE OF FOREIGN NATIONALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Homeland Security shall conduct a study of the role of foreign nationals in the granting or refusal of visas and other documents authorizing entry of aliens into the United States. The study shall address the following:

(A) The proper role, if any, of foreign nationals in the process of rendering decisions on such grants and refusals.

REV_00148616

(B) Any security concerns involving the employment of foreign nationals.

(C) Whether there are cost-effective alternatives to the use of foreign nationals.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report containing the findings of the study conducted under paragraph (1) to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on International Relations, and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Government Affairs of the Senate.

(f) VISA ISSUANCE PROGRAM FOR SAUDI ARABIA.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, after the date of the enactment of this Act all third party screening, interview waiver, or other non-interview visa issuance programs in Saudi Arabia shall be terminated. On-site personnel of the Department of Homeland Security shall review all visa applications prior to adjudication. All visa applicants in Saudi Arabia shall be interviewed unless on-site personnel of the Department of Homeland Security determine, in writing and pursuant to written guidelines issued by the Secretary of Homeland Security, that the alien is unlikely to present a risk to homeland security. The Secretary of Homeland Security shall promulgate such guidelines not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 404. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL INSPECTION FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) TRANSFER OF AGRICULTURAL IMPORT AND ENTRY INSPECTION FUNCTIONS.—There shall be transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating to agricultural import and entry inspection activities under the laws specified in subsection (b).

(b) COVERED ANIMAL AND PLANT PROTECTION LAWS.—The laws referred to in subsection (a) are the following:

(1) The Act commonly known as the Virus-Serum-Toxin Act (the eighth paragraph under the heading ''Bureau of Animal Industry'' in the Act of March 4, 1913; 21 U.S.C. 151 et seq.).

(2) Section 1 of the Act of August 31, 1922 (commonly known as the Honeybee Act; 7 U.S.C. 281).

(3) Title III of the Federal Seed Act (7 U.S.C. 1581 et seq.).

(4) The Plant Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 7701 et seq.).

(5) The Animal Protection Act (subtitle E of title X of Public Law 107–171; 7 U.S.C. 8301 et seq.).

(6) The Lacey Act Amendments of 1981 (16 U.S.C. 3371 et seq.).

(c) EXCLUSION OF QUARANTINE ACTIVITIES.—For purposes of this section, the term ''functions'' does not include any quarantine activities carried out under the laws specified in subsection (b).

(d) EFFECT OF TRANSFER.—

(1) COMPLIANCE WITH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE REGULATIONS.—The authority transferred pursuant to subsection (a) shall be exercised by the Secretary of Homeland Security in accordance with the regulations, policies, and procedures issued by the Secretary of Agriculture regarding the administration of the laws specified in subsection (b).

(2) RULEMAKING COORDINATION.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall coordinate with the Secretary of Homeland Security whenever the Secretary of Agriculture prescribes regulations, policies, or procedures for administering the laws specified in subsection (b) at the locations referred to in subsection (a).

(3) EFFECTIVE ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, may issue such directives and guidelines as are necessary to ensure the effective use of personnel of the Department of Homeland Security to carry out the functions transferred pursuant to subsection (a).

(e) TRANSFER AGREEMENT.—

(1) AGREEMENT REQUIRED; REVISION.—Before the end of the transition period, as defined in section 801(2), the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security shall enter into an agreement to effectuate the transfer of functions required by subsection (a). The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security may jointly revise the agreement as necessary thereafter.

(2) REQUIRED TERMS.—The agreement required by this subsection shall specifically address the following:

(A) The supervision by the Secretary of Agriculture of the training of employees of the Secretary of Homeland Security to carry out the functions transferred pursuant to subsection (a).

(B) The transfer of funds to the Secretary of Homeland Security under subsection (f).

(3) COOPERATION AND RECIPROCITY.—The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security may include as part of the agreement the following:

(A) Authority for the Secretary of Homeland Security to perform functions delegated to the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture regarding the protection of domestic livestock and plants, but not transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security pursuant to subsection (a).

(B) Authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to use employees of the Department of Homeland Security to carry out authorities delegated to the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service regarding the protection of domestic livestock and plants.

(f) PERIODIC TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY.—

(1) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Out of funds collected by fees authorized under sections 2508 and 2509 of the Food, Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act of 1990 (21 U.S.C. 136, 136a), the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer, from time to time in accordance with the agreement under subsection (e), to the Secretary of Homeland Security funds for activities carried out by the Secretary of Homeland Security for which such fees were collected.

(2) LIMITATION.—The proportion of fees collected pursuant to such sections that are transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security under this subsection may not exceed the proportion of the costs incurred by the Secretary of Homeland Security to all costs incurred to carry out activities funded by such fees.

(g) TRANSFER OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EMPLOYEES.—During the transition period, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Secretary of Homeland Security not more than 3,200 full-time equivalent positions of the Department of Agriculture.

(h) PROTECTION OF INSPECTION ANIMALS.—Title V of the Agricultural Risk Protection Act of 2000 (7 U.S.C. 2279e, 2279f) is amended—

(1) in section 501(a)—

(A) by inserting ''or the Department of Homeland Security'' after ''Department of Agriculture''; and

(B) by inserting ''or the Secretary of Homeland Security'' after ''Secretary of Agriculture'';

(2) by striking ''Secretary'' each place it appears (other than in sections 501(a) and 501(e)) and inserting ''Secretary concerned''; and

(3) by adding at the end of section 501 the following new subsection:

''(e) SECRETARY CONCERNED DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'Secretary concerned' means—

''(1) the Secretary of Agriculture, with respect to an animal used for purposes of official inspections by the Department of Agriculture; and

''(2) the Secretary of Homeland Security, with respect to an animal used for purposes of official inspections by the Department of Homeland Security.''.

SEC. 405. FUNCTIONS OF ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES.

(a) OPERATION, MAINTENANCE, AND PROTECTION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to affect the functions or authorities of the Administrator of General Services with respect to the operation, maintenance, and protection of buildings and grounds owned or occupied by the Federal Government and under the jurisdiction, custody, or control of the Administrator. Except for the law enforcement and related security functions transferred under section 402(4), the Administrator shall retain all powers, functions, and authorities vested in the Administrator under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.) and other provisions of law that are necessary for the operation, maintenance, and protection of such buildings and grounds.

(b) COLLECTION OF RENTS AND FEES; FEDERAL BUILDINGS FUND.—

(1) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this Act may be construed—

(A) to direct the transfer of, or affect, the authority of the Administrator of General Services to collect, rents and fees, including fees collected for protective services; or

(B) to authorize the Secretary or any other official in the Department to obligate amounts in the Federal Buildings Fund established by section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(f)).

(2) USE OF TRANSFERRED AMOUNTS.—Any amounts transferred by the Administrator of General Services to the Secretary out of rents and fees collected by the Administrator shall be used by the Secretary solely for the protection of buildings or grounds owned or occupied by the Federal Government.

SEC. 406. FUNCTIONS OF TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

(a) CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary and other officials in the Department shall consult with the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration before taking any action that might affect aviation safety, air carrier operations, aircraft airworthiness, or the use of airspace. The Secretary shall establish a liaison office within the Department for the purpose of consulting with the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall transmit to Congress a report containing a plan for complying with the requirements of section 44901(d) of title 49, United States Code.

(c) LIMITATIONS ON STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—

(1) GRANT OF AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to vest in the Secretary or any other official in the Department any authority over transportation security that is not vested in the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security, or in the Secretary of Transportation under chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) OBLIGATION OF AIP FUNDS.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to authorize the Secretary or any other official in the Department to obligate amounts made available under section 48103 of title 49, United States Code.

SEC. 407. PRESERVATION OF TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION AS A DISTINCT ENTITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, and subject to subsection (b), the Transportation Security Admnistration shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department under the Under Secretary for Border Transportation and Security.

(b) SUNSET.—Subsection (a) shall cease to apply two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 408. ANNUAL ASSESSMENT OF TERRORIST-RELATED THREATS TO PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION.

On an annual basis, the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of other appropriate Federal departments and agencies, shall conduct an assessment of terrorist-related threats to all forms of public transportation, including public gathering areas related to public transportation.

SEC. 409. EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS; MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.

(a) INSTALLATION OF SYSTEMS.—Section 44901(d) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(2) MODIFICATION OF AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS TO ACCOMMODATE EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS.—

"(A) NOTIFICATION OF AIRPORTS.—Not later than October 1, 2002, the Under Secretary shall notify the owner or operator of each United States airport described in section 44903(c) of the number and type of explosive detection systems that will be required to be deployed at the airport in order to screen all checked baggage by explosive detection systems without imposing unreasonable delays on the passengers using the airport.

"(B) ASSESSMENTS OF AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS.—If the owner or operator of a United States airport described in section 44903(c) determines that the airport will not be able to make the modifications to the airport's terminal buildings that are necessary to accommodate the explosive detection systems required under subparagraph (A) in a cost-effective manner on or before December 31, 2002, the owner or operator shall provide notice of that determination to the Under Secretary not later than November 1, 2002.

"(C) PLANS FOR MAKING MODIFICATIONS TO AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If the owner or operator of an airport provides notice to the Under Secretary under subparagraph (B), the Under Secretary and the owner or operator, acting jointly, shall develop, not later than December 1, 2002, a plan for making necessary modifications to the airport's terminal buildings so as to deploy and fully utilize explosive detection systems to screen all checked baggage.

"(ii) DEADLINE.—A plan developed under this subparagraph shall include a date for completing the plan. All such plans shall be completed as expeditiously as practicable.

"(iii) TRANSMISSION OF PLANS TO CONGRESS.—On the date of completion of a plan under this subparagraph, the Under Secretary shall transmit a copy of the plan to Congress. For security purposes, information contained in the plan shall not be disclosed to the public.

"(D) REQUIREMENTS FOR PLANS.—A plan developed and published under subparagraph (C), shall provide for, to the maximum extent practicable—

"(i) the deployment of explosive detection systems in the baggage sorting area or other non-public area rather than the lobby of an airport terminal building; and

"(ii) the deployment of state of the art explosive detection systems that have high throughput, low false alarm rates, and high reliability without reducing detection rates.

"(E) USE OF SCREENING METHODS OTHER THAN EDS.—Notwithstanding the deadline in paragraph (1)(A), after December 31, 2002, if explosive detection systems are not screening all checked baggage at a United States airport described in section 44903(c), such baggage shall be screened by the methods described in subsection (e) until such time as all checked baggage is screened by explosive detection systems at the airport.

"(3) PURCHASE OF EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS.—Any explosive detection system required to be purchased under paragraph (2)(A) shall be purchased by the Under Secretary.

"(4) EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEM DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term 'explosive detection system' means a device, or combination of devices, that can detect different types of explosives.".

(b) NEW AVIATION SECURITY TECHNOLOGIES.—

(1) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than January 31, 2003, the Under Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the plans of the Under Secretary for implementation of new aviation security technologies.

(2) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Under Secretary should expand testing of new aviation security technologies by increasing the number of airports at which such testing is conducted.

(c) CORRECTION OF REFERENCE.—Section 44901(e) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "(b)(1)(A)" and inserting "(d)(1)(A)".

(d) MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.—Section 110(c) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (115 Stat. 616) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—After November 19, 2002, the number of screeners deployed at an airport described in paragraph (1) shall not be less than the total number of screeners deployed at that airport on September 11, 2001, or on the date of enactment of this paragraph, whichever is greater.

"(B) ACTION OF UNDER SECRETARY.—If on November 20, 2002, the number of Federal employees screening passengers and carry-on baggage at an airport described in paragraph

(1) is less than the number required by this paragraph, the Under Secretary shall—

"(i) continue to contract with private screening companies to supplement the Federal screeners at that airport in order to comply with this paragraph; or

"(ii) not later December 20, 2002, publish a notice in the Federal Register certifying that the fewer number of Federal screeners will not result in additional or unreasonable delays for passengers at that airport.".

SEC. 410. TRANSPORTATION SECURITY.

(a) TRANSPORTATION SECURITY OVERSIGHT BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 115(a) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Department of Transportation" and inserting "Department of Homeland Security".

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—Section 115(b)(1) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking subparagraph (G);

(B) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (F) as subparagraphs (B) through (G), respectively; and

(C) by inserting before subparagraph (B) (as so redesignated) the following:

"(A) The Secretary of Homeland Security, or the Secretary's designee.".

(3) CHAIRPERSON.—Section 115(b)(2) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Secretary of Transportation" and inserting "Secretary of Homeland Security".

(b) APPROVAL OF AIP GRANT APPLICATIONS FOR SECURITY ACTIVITIES.—Section 47106 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g) CONSULTATION WITH SECRETARY OF HOMELAND SECURITY.—The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Homeland Security before approving an application under this subchapter for an airport development project grant for activities described in section 47102(3)(B)(ii) (relating to security equipment) or section 47102(3)(B)(x) (relating to installation of bulk explosive detection systems).".

Subtitle B—Immigration and Nationality Functions

CHAPTER 1—IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 411. TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS TO UNDER SECRETARY FOR BORDER AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security all functions performed under the following programs, and all personnel, assets, and liabilities pertaining to such programs, immediately before such transfer occurs:

(1) The Border Patrol program.

(2) The detention and removal program.

(3) The intelligence program.

(4) The investigations program.

(5) The inspections program.

SEC. 412. ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Department of Homeland Security a bureau to be known as the "Bureau of Immigration Enforcement".

(2) DIRECTOR.—The head of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement shall be the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, who—

(A) shall report directly to the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security; and

(B) shall have a minimum of 10 years professional experience in law enforcement, at least 5 of which shall have been years of service in a managerial capacity.

(3) FUNCTIONS.—The Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement—

(A) shall establish the policies for performing such functions as are—

(i) transferred to the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security by section 411 and delegated to the Director by the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security; or

(ii) otherwise vested in the Director by law;

(B) shall oversee the administration of such policies; and

(C) shall advise the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security with respect to any policy or operation of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement that may affect the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice established under chapter 2, including potentially conflicting policies or operations.

(4) PROGRAM TO COLLECT INFORMATION RELATING TO FOREIGN STUDENTS.—The Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement shall be responsible for administering the program to collect information relating to nonimmigrant foreign students and other exchange program participants described in section 641 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (8 U.S.C. 1372), including the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System established under that section, and shall use such information to carry out the enforcement functions of the Bureau.

(5) MANAGERIAL ROTATION PROGRAM.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement shall design and implement a managerial rotation program under which employees of such bureau holding positions involving supervisory or managerial responsibility and classified, in accordance with chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, as a GS–14 or above, shall, as a condition on further promotion—

(i) gain some experience in all the major functions performed by such bureau; and

(ii) work in at least one local office of such bureau.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the implementation of such program.

(b) CHIEF OF POLICY AND STRATEGY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—In consultation with Bureau of Immigration Enforcement personnel in local offices, the Chief of Policy and Strategy shall be responsible for—

(A) establishing national immigration enforcement policies and priorities;

(B) performing policy research and analysis on immigration enforcement issues; and

(C) coordinating immigration policy issues with the Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice (established under chapter 2), and the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, as appropriate.

(c) GENERAL COUNSEL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of General Counsel for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The General Counsel shall serve as the principal legal advisor to the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement. The General Counsel shall be responsible for—

(A) providing specialized legal advice, opinions, determinations, regulations, and any other assistance to the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement with respect to legal matters affecting the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement; and

(B) representing the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement in all exclusion, deportation, or removal proceedings before the Executive Office for Immigration Review, including in proceedings to adjudicate relief from exclusion, deportation, or removal, and in other legal or administrative proceedings involving immigration enforcement issues.

(d) CHIEF BUDGET OFFICER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief Budget Officer for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Chief Budget Officer shall be responsible for—

(i) formulating and executing the budget of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement;

(ii) financial management of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement; and

(iii) collecting all payments, fines, and other debts for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(3) AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS OF AGENCY CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICERS.—The Chief Budget

Officer for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement shall have the authorities and functions described in section 902 of title 31, United States Code, in relation to financial activities of such bureau.

(e) CHIEF OF CONGRESSIONAL, INTERGOVERNMENTAL, AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs shall be responsible for—

(A) providing information relating to immigration enforcement to the Congress, including information on specific cases relating to immigration enforcement;

(B) serving as a liaison with other Federal agencies on immigration enforcement issues; and

(C) responding to inquiries from the media and the general public on immigration enforcement issues.

(f) CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES LIAISON.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Citizenship and Immigration Services Liaison for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Citizenship and Immigration Services Liaison shall be responsible for the appropriate allocation and coordination of resources involved in supporting shared support functions for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice (established under chapter 2) and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, including—

(A) information resources management, including computer databases and information technology;

(B) records and file management; and

(C) forms management.

SEC. 413. PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND QUALITY REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security shall be responsible for—

(1) conducting investigations of noncriminal allegations of misconduct, corruption, and fraud involving any employee of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement that are not subject to investigation by the Inspector General for the Department;

(2) inspecting the operations of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement and providing assessments of the quality of the operations of such bureau as a whole and each of its components; and

(3) providing an analysis of the management of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(b) SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS.—In providing assessments in accordance with subsection (a)(2) with respect to a decision of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, or any of its components, consideration shall be given to—

(1) the accuracy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law used in rendering the decision;

(2) any fraud or misrepresentation associated with the decision; and

(3) the efficiency with which the decision was rendered.

SEC. 414. EMPLOYEE DISCIPLINE.

The Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, impose disciplinary action, including termination of employment, pursuant to policies and procedures applicable to employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on any employee of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement who willfully deceives the Congress or agency leadership on any matter.

SEC. 415. REPORT ON IMPROVING ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, shall submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report with a plan detailing how the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, after the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, will enforce comprehensively, effectively, and fairly all the enforcement provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) relating to such functions.

(b) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary of Homeland Security shall consult with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner of Social Security, the Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review, and the heads of State and local law enforcement agencies to determine how to most effectively conduct enforcement operations.

SEC. 416. REPORT ON INTERIOR CHECKPOINTS.

Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit to the Congress a report on whether all permanent interior checkpoints operated by the Immigration and Naturalization Service ought to be closed, and the funds that otherwise would be expended for the operation of such checkpoints ought to be reallocated for protecting and maintaining the integrity of the borders of the United States and increasing enforcement at other points of entry into the United States.

CHAPTER 2—CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES

Subchapter A—Transfers of Functions

SEC. 421. ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Department of Justice a bureau to be known as the ''Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services''.

(2) ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The head of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, who—

(A) shall report directly to the Deputy Attorney General; and

(B) shall have a minimum of 10 years professional experience in the rendering of adjudications on the provision of government benefits or services, at least 5 of which shall have been years of service in a managerial capacity or in a position affording comparable management experience.

(3) FUNCTIONS.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services—

(A) shall establish the policies for performing such functions as are transferred to the Assistant Attorney General by this section or this Act or otherwise vested in the Assistant Attorney General by law;

(B) shall oversee the administration of such policies;

(C) shall advise the Deputy Attorney General with respect to any policy or operation of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services that may affect the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, including potentially conflicting policies or operations;

(D) shall meet regularly with the Ombudsman described in section 422 to correct serious service problems identified by the Ombudsman; and

(E) shall establish procedures requiring a formal response to any recommendations submitted in the Ombudsman's annual report to the Congress within 3 months after its submission to the Congress.

(4) MANAGERIAL ROTATION PROGRAM.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the effective date specified in section 427, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall design and implement a managerial rotation program under which employees of such bureau holding positions involving supervisory or managerial responsibility and classified, in accordance with chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, as a GS–14 or above, shall, as a condition on further promotion—

(i) gain some experience in all the major functions performed by such bureau; and

(ii) work in at least one field office and one service center of such bureau.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the effective date specified in section 427, the Attorney General shall submit a report to the Congress on the implementation of such program.

(5) PILOT INITIATIVES FOR BACKLOG ELIMINATION.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services is authorized to implement innovative pilot initiatives to eliminate any remaining backlog in the processing of immigration benefit applications, and to prevent any backlog in the processing of such applications from recurring, in accordance with section 204(a) of the Immigration Services and Infrastructure Improvements Act of 2000 (8 U.S.C. 1573(a)). Such initiatives may include measures such as increasing personnel, transferring personnel to focus on areas with the largest potential for backlog, and streamlining paperwork.

(b) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS FROM COMMISSIONER.—There are transferred from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services the following functions, and all personnel, infrastructure, and funding provided to the Commissioner in support of such functions immediately before the effective date specified in section 427:

(1) Adjudications of immigrant visa petitions.

(2) Adjudications of naturalization petitions.

(3) Adjudications of asylum and refugee applications.

(4) Adjudications performed at service centers.

(5) All other adjudications performed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service immediately before the effective date specified in section 427.

(c) CHIEF OF POLICY AND STRATEGY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—In consultation with Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services personnel in field offices, the Chief of Policy and Strategy shall be responsible for—

(A) establishing national immigration services policies and priorities;

(B) performing policy research and analysis on immigration services issues; and

(C) coordinating immigration policy issues with the Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security.

(d) GENERAL COUNSEL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of General Counsel for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The General Counsel shall serve as the principal legal advisor to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services. The General Counsel shall be responsible for—

(A) providing specialized legal advice, opinions, determinations, regulations, and any other assistance to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services with respect to legal matters affecting the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services; and

(B) representing the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services in visa petition appeal proceedings before the Executive Office for Immigration Review and in other legal or administrative proceedings involving immigration services issues.

(e) CHIEF BUDGET OFFICER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief Budget Officer for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Chief Budget Officer shall be responsible for—

(i) formulating and executing the budget of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(ii) financial management of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services; and

(iii) collecting all payments, fines, and other debts for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(3) AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS OF AGENCY CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICERS.—The Chief Budget Officer for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall have the authorities and functions described in section 902 of title 31, United States Code, in relation to financial activities of such bureau.

(f) CHIEF OF CONGRESSIONAL, INTERGOVERNMENTAL, AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs shall be responsible for—

(A) providing information relating to immigration services to the Congress, including information on specific cases relating to immigration services issues;

(B) serving as a liaison with other Federal agencies on immigration services issues; and

(C) responding to inquiries from the media and the general public on immigration services issues.

(g) IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT LIAISON.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Immigration Enforcement Liaison for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Immigration Enforcement Liaison shall be responsible for the appropriate allocation and coordination of resources involved in supporting shared support functions for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security and the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, including—

(A) information resources management, including computer databases and information technology;

(B) records and file management; and

(C) forms management.

(h) CHIEF OF OFFICE OF CITIZENSHIP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of the Office of Citizenship for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of the Office of Citizenship for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be responsible for promoting instruction and training on citizenship responsibilities for aliens interested in becoming naturalized citizens of the United States, including the development of educational materials.

SEC. 422. CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES OMBUDSMAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within the Department of Justice, there shall be a position of Citizenship and Immigration Services Ombudsman (in this section referred to as the ''Ombudsman''). The Ombudsman shall report directly to the Deputy Attorney General. The Ombudsman shall have a background in customer service as well as immigration law.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—It shall be the function of the Ombudsman—

(1) to assist individuals and employers in resolving problems with the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(2) to identify areas in which individuals and employers have problems in dealing with the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(3) to the extent possible, to propose changes in the administrative practices of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services to mitigate problems identified under paragraph (2); and

(4) to identify potential legislative changes that may be appropriate to mitigate such problems.

(c) ANNUAL REPORTS.—

(1) OBJECTIVES.—Not later than June 30 of each calendar year, the Ombudsman shall report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate on the objectives of the Office of the Ombudsman for the fiscal year beginning in such calendar year. Any such report shall contain full and substantive analysis, in addition to statistical information, and—

(A) shall identify the initiatives the Office of the Ombudsman has taken on improving services and responsiveness of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(B) shall contain a summary of the most pervasive and serious problems encountered by individuals and employers, including a description of the nature of such problems;

(C) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which action has been taken and the result of such action;

(D) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which action remains to be completed and the period during which each item has remained on such inventory;

(E) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which no action has been taken, the period during which each item has remained on such inventory, the reasons for the inaction, and shall identify any official of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services who is responsible for such inaction;

(F) shall contain recommendations for such administrative and legislative action as may be appropriate to resolve problems encountered by individuals and employers, including problems created by excessive backlogs in the adjudication and processing of immigration benefit petitions and applications; and

(G) shall include such other information as the Ombudsman may deem advisable.

(2) REPORT TO BE SUBMITTED DIRECTLY.—Each report required under this subsection shall be provided directly to the committees described in paragraph (1) without any prior review or comment from the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any other officer or employee of the Department of Justice or the Office of Management and Budget.

(d) OTHER RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Ombudsman—

(1) shall monitor the coverage and geographic allocation of local offices of the Ombudsman;

(2) shall develop guidance to be distributed to all officers and employees of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services outlining the criteria for referral of inquiries to local offices of the Ombudsman;

(3) shall ensure that the local telephone number for each local office of the Ombudsman is published and available to individuals and employers served by the office; and

(4) shall meet regularly with the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services to identify serious service problems and to present recommendations for such administrative action as may be appropriate to resolve problems encountered by individuals and employers.

(e) PERSONNEL ACTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Ombudsman shall have the responsibility and authority—

(A) to appoint local ombudsmen and make available at least 1 such ombudsman for each State; and

(B) to evaluate and take personnel actions (including dismissal) with respect to any employee of any local office of the Ombudsman.

(2) CONSULTATION.—The Ombudsman may consult with the appropriate supervisory personnel of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services in carrying out the Ombudsman's responsibilities under this subsection.

(f) RESPONSIBILITIES OF BUREAU OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall establish procedures requiring a formal response to all recommendations submitted to such Assistant Attorney General by the Ombudsman within 3 months after submission to such director.

(g) OPERATION OF LOCAL OFFICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each local ombudsman—

(A) shall report to the Ombudsman or the delegate thereof;

(B) may consult with the appropriate supervisory personnel of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services regarding the daily operation of the local office of such ombudsman;

(C) shall, at the initial meeting with any individual or employer seeking the assistance of such local office, notify such individual or employer that the local offices of the Ombudsman operate independently of any other component of the Department of Justice and report directly to the Congress through the Ombudsman; and

(D) at the local ombudsman's discretion, may determine not to disclose to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services contact with, or information provided by, such individual or employer.

(2) MAINTENANCE OF INDEPENDENT COMMUNICATIONS.—Each local office of the Ombudsman shall maintain a phone, facsimile, and other means of electronic communication access, and a post office address, that is separate from those maintained by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any component of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

SEC. 423. PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND QUALITY REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be responsible for—

(1) conducting investigations of noncriminal allegations of misconduct, corruption, and fraud involving any employee of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services that are not subject to investigation by the Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General;

(2) inspecting the operations of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and providing assessments of the quality of the operations of such bureau as a whole and each of its components; and

(3) providing an analysis of the management of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(b) SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS.—In providing assessments in accordance with subsection (a)(2) with respect to a decision of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any of its components, consideration shall be given to—

(1) the accuracy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law used in rendering the decision;

(2) any fraud or misrepresentation associated with the decision; and

(3) the efficiency with which the decision was rendered.

SEC. 424. EMPLOYEE DISCIPLINE.

The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Enforcement may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, impose disciplinary action, including termination of employment, pursuant to policies and procedures applicable to employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on any employee of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services who willfully deceives the Congress or agency leadership on any matter.

SEC. 425. OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS WITHIN BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part C of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3731 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

"SEC. 305. (a) There is established within the Bureau of Justice Statistics of the Department of Justice an Office of Immigration Statistics (in this section referred to as the 'Office'), which shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the Attorney General and who shall report to the Director of Justice Statistics.

"(b) The Director of the Office shall be responsible for the following:

"(1) Maintenance of all immigration statistical information of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review. Such statistical information shall include information and statistics of the type contained in the publication entitled 'Statistical Yearbook of the Immigration and Naturalization Service' prepared by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (as in effect on the day prior to the effective date specified in section 427 of the Homeland Security Act of 2002), including region-by-region statistics on the aggregate number of applications and petitions filed by an alien (or filed on behalf of an alien) and denied by such offices and bureaus, and the reasons for such denials, disaggregated by category of denial and application or petition type.

"(2) Establishment of standards of reliability and validity for immigration statistics collected by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review.

"(c) The Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review shall provide statistical information to the Office of Immigration Statistics from the operational data systems controlled by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review, respectively, for the purpose of meeting the responsibilities of the Director.".

(b) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS.—There are transferred to the Office of Immigration Statistics established under section 305 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as added by subsection (a), the functions performed immediately before such transfer occurs by the Statistics Branch of the Office of Policy and Planning of the Immigration and Naturalization Service with respect to the following:

(1) Adjudications of immigrant visa petitions.

(2) Adjudications of naturalization petitions.

(3) Adjudications of asylum and refugee applications.

(4) Adjudications performed at service centers.

(5) All other adjudications performed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 302(c) of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3732(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' at the end of paragraph (22);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (23) and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(24) collect, maintain, compile, analyze, publish, and disseminate information and statistics involving the functions of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review.''.

SEC. 426. PRESERVATION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL'S AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any function for which this subchapter vests responsibility in an official other than the Attorney General, or which is transferred by this subchapter to such an official, may, notwithstanding any provision of this subchapter, be performed by the Attorney General, or the Attorney General's delegate, in lieu of such official.

(b) REFERENCES.—In a case in which the Attorney General performs a function described in subsection (a), any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, document, or delegation of authority to the official otherwise responsible for the function is deemed to refer to the Attorney General.

SEC. 427. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Notwithstanding section 4, this subchapter, and the amendments made by this subchapter, shall take effect on the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

SEC. 428. TRANSITION.

(a) REFERENCES.—With respect to any function transferred by this subchapter to, and exercised on or after the effective date specified in section 427 by, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, or delegation of authority, or any document of or pertaining to a component of government from which such function is transferred—

(1) to the head of such component is deemed to refer to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services; or

(2) to such component is deemed to refer to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(b) OTHER TRANSITION ISSUES.—

(1) EXERCISE OF AUTHORITIES.—Except as otherwise provided by law, a Federal official to whom a function is transferred by this subchapter may, for purposes of performing the function, exercise all authorities under any other provision of law that were available with respect to the performance of that function to the official responsible for the performance of the function immediately before the effective date specified in section 427.

(2) SAVINGS PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 812 shall apply to a transfer of functions under this subchapter in the same manner as such provisions apply to a transfer of functions under this Act to the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) TRANSFER AND ALLOCATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND PERSONNEL.—The personnel of the Department of Justice employed in connection with the functions transferred by this subchapter (and functions that the Attorney General determines are properly related to the functions of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services), and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available to, the Immigration and Naturalization Service in connection with the functions transferred by this subchapter, subject to section 202 of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, shall be transferred to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services for allocation to the appropriate component of the Department of Justice. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this paragraph shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated. The Attorney General shall have the right to adjust or realign transfers of funds and personnel effected pursuant to this subchapter for a period of 2 years after the effective date specified in section 427.

(4) AUTHORITIES OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General (or a delegate of the Attorney General), at such time or times as the Attorney General (or the delegate) shall provide, may make such determinations as may be necessary with regard to the functions transferred by this subchapter, and may make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, liabilities, grants, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available in connection with such functions, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter. The Attorney General shall provide for such further measures and dispositions as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this subchapter.

Subchapter B—Other Provisions

SEC. 431. FUNDING FOR CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF FEES FOR ADJUDICATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICES.—Section 286(m) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1356(m)) is amended by striking ''services, including the costs of similar services provided without charge to asylum applicants or other immigrants.'' and inserting ''services.''.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR REFUGEE AND ASYLUM ADJUDICATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 207 through 209 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1157–1159). All funds appropriated under this subsection shall be deposited into the Immigration Examinations Fee Account established under section 286(m) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1356(m)) and shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 432. BACKLOG ELIMINATION.

Section 204(a) of the Immigration Services and Infrastructure Improvements Act of 2000 (8 U.S.C. 1573(a)) is amended by striking ''October 17, 2000;'' and inserting ''1 year after the date of the enactment of the Homeland Security Act of 2002;''.

SEC. 433. REPORT ON IMPROVING IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, shall submit to the Committees on the Judiciary and Appropriations of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report with a plan detailing how the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, after the transfer of functions specified in subchapter 1 takes effect, will complete efficiently, fairly, and within a reasonable time, the adjudications described in paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 421(b).

(b) CONTENTS.—For each type of adjudication to be undertaken by the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, the report shall include the following:

(1) Any potential savings of resources that may be implemented without affecting the quality of the adjudication.

(2) The goal for processing time with respect to the application.

(3) Any statutory modifications with respect to the adjudication that the Attorney General considers advisable.

(c) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Attorney General shall consult with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Labor, the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, and the Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review to determine how to streamline and improve the process for applying for and making adjudications described in section 421(b) and related processes.

SEC. 434. REPORT ON RESPONDING TO FLUCTUATING NEEDS.

Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit to the Congress a report on changes in law, including changes in authorizations of appropriations and in appropriations, that are needed to permit the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and, after the transfer of functions specified in subchapter 1 takes effect, the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, to ensure a prompt and timely response to emergent, unforeseen, or impending changes in the number of applications for immigration benefits, and otherwise to ensure the accommodation of changing immigration service needs.

SEC. 435. APPLICATION OF INTERNET-BASED TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF TRACKING SYSTEM.—The Attorney General, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, in consultation with the Technology Advisory Committee established under subsection (c), shall establish an Internet-based system, that will permit a person, employer, immigrant, or nonimmigrant who has filings with the Attorney General for any benefit under the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), access to online information about the processing status of the filing involved.

(b) FEASIBILITY STUDY FOR ONLINE FILING AND IMPROVED PROCESSING.—

(1) ONLINE FILING.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Technology Advisory Committee established under subsection (c), shall conduct a feasibility study on the online filing of the filings described in subsection (a). The study shall include a review of computerization and technology of the Immigration and Naturalization Service relating to the immigration services and processing of filings related to immigrant services. The study shall also include an estimate of the timeframe and cost and shall consider other factors in implementing such a filing system, including the feasibility of fee payment online.

(2) REPORT.—A report on the study under this subsection shall be submitted to the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act.

(c) TECHNOLOGY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Attorney General shall establish, not later than 60 days after the effective date of this Act, an advisory committee (in this section referred to as the "Technology Advisory Committee") to assist the Attorney General in—

(A) establishing the tracking system under subsection (a); and

(B) conducting the study under subsection (b).

The Technology Advisory Committee shall be established after consultation with the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate.

(2) COMPOSITION.—The Technology Advisory Committee shall be composed of representatives from high technology companies capable of establishing and implementing the system in an expeditious manner, and representatives of persons who may use the tracking system described in subsection (a) and the online filing system described in subsection (b)(1).

SEC. 436. CHILDREN'S AFFAIRS.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS.—There are transferred to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement of the Department of Health and Human Services functions under the immigration laws of the United States with respect to the care of unaccompanied alien children that were vested by statute in, or performed by, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization (or any officer, employee, or component of the Immigration and Naturalization Service) immediately before the effective date specified in subsection (d).

(b) FUNCTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Pursuant to the transfer made by subsection (a), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement shall be responsible for—

(A) coordinating and implementing the care and placement of unaccompanied alien children who are in Federal custody by reason of their immigration status, including developing a plan to be submitted to the Congress on how to ensure that qualified and independent legal counsel is timely appointed to represent the interests of each such child;

(B) ensuring that the interests of the child are considered in decisions and actions relating to the care and custody of an unaccompanied alien child;

(C) making placement determinations for all unaccompanied alien children who are in Federal custody by reason of their immigration status;

(D) implementing the placement determinations;

(E) implementing policies with respect to the care and placement of unaccompanied alien children;

(F) identifying a sufficient number of qualified individuals, entities, and facilities to house unaccompanied alien children;

(G) overseeing the infrastructure and personnel of facilities in which unaccompanied alien children reside;

(H) reuniting unaccompanied alien children with a parent abroad in appropriate cases;

(I) compiling, updating, and publishing at least annually a state-by-state list of professionals or other entities qualified to provide guardian and attorney representation services for unaccompanied alien children;

(J) maintaining statistical information and other data on unaccompanied alien children for whose care and placement the Director is responsible, which shall include—

(i) biographical information, such as a child's name, gender, date of birth, country of birth, and country of habitual residence;

(ii) the date on which the child came into Federal custody by reason of his or her immigration status;

(iii) information relating to the child's placement, removal, or release from each facility in which the child has resided;

(iv) in any case in which the child is placed in detention or released, an explanation relating to the detention or release; and

(v) the disposition of any actions in which the child is the subject;

(K) collecting and compiling statistical information from the Department of Justice, the Department of Homeland Security, and the Department of State on each department's actions relating to unaccompanied alien children; and

(L) conducting investigations and inspections of facilities and other entities in which unaccompanied alien children reside.

(2) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ENTITIES; NO RELEASE ON OWN RECOGNIZANCE.—In making determinations described in paragraph (1)(C), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement—

(A) shall consult with appropriate juvenile justice professionals, the Director of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice, and the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security to ensure that such determinations ensure that unaccompanied alien children described in such subparagraph—

(i) are likely to appear for all hearings or proceedings in which they are involved;

(ii) are protected from smugglers, traffickers, or others who might seek to victimize or otherwise engage them in criminal, harmful, or exploitive activity; and

(iii) are placed in a setting in which they not likely to pose a danger to themselves or others; and

(B) shall not release such children upon their own recognizance.

(3) DUTIES WITH RESPECT TO FOSTER CARE.—In carrying out the duties described in paragraph (1)(G), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement is encouraged to use the refugee children foster care system established pursuant to section

412(d) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1522(d)) for the placement of unaccompanied alien children.

(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section may be construed to transfer the responsibility for adjudicating benefit determinations under the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) from the authority of any official of the Department of Justice, the Department of Homeland Security, or the Department of State.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Notwithstanding section 4, this section shall take effect on the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

(e) REFERENCES.—With respect to any function transferred by this section, any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, or delegation of authority, or any document of or pertaining to a component of government from which such function is transferred—

(1) to the head of such component is deemed to refer to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement; or

(2) to such component is deemed to refer to the Office of Refugee Resettlement of the Department of Health and Human Services.

(f) OTHER TRANSITION ISSUES.—

(1) EXERCISE OF AUTHORITIES.—Except as otherwise provided by law, a Federal official to whom a function is transferred by this section may, for purposes of performing the function, exercise all authorities under any other provision of law that were available with respect to the performance of that function to the official responsible for the performance of the function immediately before the effective date specified in subsection (d).

(2) SAVINGS PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 812 shall apply to a transfer of functions under this section in the same manner as such provisions apply to a transfer of functions under this Act to the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) TRANSFER AND ALLOCATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND PERSONNEL.—The personnel of the Department of Justice employed in connection with the functions transferred by this section, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available to, the Immigration and Naturalization Service in connection with the functions transferred by this section, subject to section 202 of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, shall be transferred to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement for allocation to the appropriate component of the Department of Health and Human Services. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this paragraph shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(g) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) the term ''placement'' means the placement of an unaccompanied alien child in either a detention facility or an alternative to such a facility; and

(2) the term ''unaccompanied alien child'' means a child who—

(A) has no lawful immigration status in the United States;

(B) has not attained 18 years of age; and

(C) with respect to whom—

(i) there is no parent or legal guardian in the United States; or

(ii) no parent or legal guardian in the United States is available to provide care and physical custody.

CHAPTER 3—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 441. ABOLISHMENT OF INS.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice is abolished.

SEC. 442. VOLUNTARY SEPARATION INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term ''employee'' means an employee (as defined by section 2105 of title 5, United States Code) who—

(A) has completed at least 3 years of current continuous service with 1 or more covered entities; and

(B) is serving under an appointment without time limitation;

but does not include any person under subparagraphs (A)–(G) of section 663(a)(2) of Public Law 104–208 (5 U.S.C. 5597 note);

(2) the term ''covered entity'' means—

(A) the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

(B) the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security; and

(C) the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice; and

(3) the term ''transfer date'' means the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

(b) STRATEGIC RESTRUCTURING PLAN.—Before the Attorney General or the Secretary obligates any resources for voluntary separation incentive payments under this section, such official shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a strategic restructuring plan, which shall include—

(1) an organizational chart depicting the covered entities after their restructuring pursuant to this Act;

(2) a summary description of how the authority under this section will be used to help carry out that restructuring; and

(3) the information specified in section 663(b)(2) of Public Law 104–208 (5 U.S.C. 5597 note).

As used in the preceding sentence, the "appropriate committees of Congress" are the Committees on Appropriations, Government Reform, and the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on Appropriations, Governmental Affairs, and the Judiciary of the Senate.

(c) AUTHORITY.—The Attorney General and the Secretary may, to the extent necessary to help carry out their respective strategic restructuring plan described in subsection (b), make voluntary separation incentive payments to employees. Any such payment—

(1) shall be paid to the employee, in a lump sum, after the employee has separated from service;

(2) shall be paid from appropriations or funds available for the payment of basic pay of the employee;

(3) shall be equal to the lesser of—

(A) the amount the employee would be entitled to receive under section 5595(c) of title 5, United States Code; or

(B) an amount not to exceed $25,000, as determined by the Attorney General or the Secretary;

(4) may not be made except in the case of any qualifying employee who voluntarily separates

(whether by retirement or resignation) before the end of—

(A) the 3-month period beginning on the date on which such payment is offered or made available to such employee; or

(B) the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs first;

(5) shall not be a basis for payment, and shall not be included in the computation, of any other type of Government benefit; and

(6) shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of any severance pay to which the employee may be entitled under section 5595 of title 5, United States Code, based on any other separation.

(d) ADDITIONAL AGENCY CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE RETIREMENT FUND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any payments which it is otherwise required to make, the Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security shall, for each fiscal year with respect to which it makes any voluntary separation incentive payments under this section, remit to the Office of Personnel Management for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund the amount required under paragraph (2).

(2) AMOUNT REQUIRED.—The amount required under this paragraph shall, for any fiscal year, be the amount under subparagraph (A) or (B), whichever is greater.

(A) FIRST METHOD.—The amount under this subparagraph shall, for any fiscal year, be equal to the minimum amount necessary to offset the additional costs to the retirement systems under title 5, United States Code (payable out of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund) resulting from the voluntary separation of the employees described in paragraph (3), as determined under regulations of the Office of Personnel Management.

(B) SECOND METHOD.—The amount under this subparagraph shall, for any fiscal year, be equal to 45 percent of the sum total of the final basic pay of the employees described in paragraph (3).

(3) COMPUTATIONS TO BE BASED ON SEPARATIONS OCCURRING IN THE FISCAL YEAR INVOLVED.—The employees described in this paragraph are those employees who receive a voluntary separation incentive payment under this section based on their separating from service during the fiscal year with respect to which the payment under this subsection relates.

(4) FINAL BASIC PAY DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term ''final basic pay'' means, with respect to an employee, the total amount of basic pay which would be payable for a year of service by such employee, computed using the employee's final rate of basic pay, and, if last serving on other than a full-time basis, with appropriate adjustment therefor.

(e) EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT EMPLOYMENT WITH THE GOVERNMENT.—An individual who receives a voluntary separation incentive payment under this section and who, within 5 years after the date of the separation on which the payment is based, accepts any compensated employment with the Government or works for any agency of the Government through a personal services contract, shall be required to pay, prior to the individual's first day of employment, the entire amount of the incentive payment. Such payment shall be made to the covered entity from which the individual separated or, if made on or after the transfer date, to the Deputy Attorney General (for transfer to the appropriate component of the Department of Justice, if necessary) or the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security (for transfer to the appropriate component of the Department of Homeland Security, if necessary).

(f) EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT LEVELS.—

(1) INTENDED EFFECT.—Voluntary separations under this section are not intended to necessarily reduce the total number of full-time equivalent positions in any covered entity.

(2) USE OF VOLUNTARY SEPARATIONS.—A covered entity may redeploy or use the full-time equivalent positions vacated by voluntary separations under this section to make other positions available to more critical locations or more critical occupations.

SEC. 443. AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT A DEMONSTRATION PROJECT RELATING TO DISCIPLINARY ACTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary may each, during a period ending not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, conduct a demonstration project for the purpose of determining whether one or more changes in the policies or procedures relating to methods for disciplining employees would result in improved personnel management.

(b) SCOPE.—A demonstration project under this section—

(1) may not cover any employees apart from those employed in or under a covered entity; and

(2) shall not be limited by any provision of chapter 43, 75, or 77 of title 5, United States Code.

(c) PROCEDURES.—Under the demonstration project—

(1) the use of alternative means of dispute resolution (as defined in section 571 of title 5, United States Code) shall be encouraged, whenever appropriate; and

(2) each covered entity under the jurisdiction of the official conducting the project shall be required to provide for the expeditious, fair, and independent review of any action to which section 4303 or subchapter II of chapter 75 of such title 5 would otherwise apply (except an action described in section 7512(5) thereof).

(d) ACTIONS INVOLVING DISCRIMINATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, if, in the case of any matter described in section 7702(a)(1)(B) of title 5, United States Code, there is no judicially review-able action under the demonstration project within 120 days after the filing of an appeal or other formal request for review (referred to in subsection (c)(2)), an employee shall be entitled to file a civil action to the same extent and in the same manner as provided in section 7702(e)(1) of such title 5 (in the matter following subparagraph (C) thereof).

(e) CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.—Employees shall not be included within any project under this section if such employees are—

(1) neither managers nor supervisors; and

(2) within a unit with respect to which a labor organization is accorded exclusive recognition under chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code.

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, an aggrieved employee within a unit (referred to in paragraph (2)) may elect to participate in a complaint procedure developed under the demonstration project in lieu of any negotiated grievance procedure and any statutory procedure (as such term is used in section 7121 of such title 5).

(f) REPORTS.—The General Accounting Office shall prepare and submit to the Committees on Government Reform and the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Governmental Affairs and the Judiciary of the Senate periodic reports on any demonstration project conducted under this section, such reports to be submitted after the second and fourth years of its operation. Upon request, the Attorney General or the Secretary shall furnish such information as the General Accounting Office may require to carry out this subsection.

(g) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "covered entity" has the meaning given such term in section 442(a)(2).

SEC. 444. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the missions of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security and the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice are equally important and, accordingly, they each should be adequately funded; and

(2) the functions transferred under this subtitle should not, after such transfers take effect, operate at levels below those in effect prior to the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 445. REPORTS AND IMPLEMENTATION PLANS.

(a) DIVISION OF FUNDS.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States

House of Representatives and of the Senate a report on the proposed division and transfer of funds, including unexpended funds, appropriations, and fees, between the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(b) DIVISION OF PERSONNEL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report on the proposed division of personnel between the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(c) IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter until the termination of fiscal year 2005, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate an implementation plan to carry out this Act.

(2) CONTENTS.—The implementation plan should include details concerning the separation of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, including the following:

(A) Organizational structure, including the field structure.

(B) Chain of command.

(C) Procedures for interaction among such bureaus.

(D) Fraud detection and investigation.

(E) The processing and handling of removal proceedings, including expedited removal and applications for relief from removal.

(F) Recommendations for conforming amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.).

(G) Establishment of a transition team.

(H) Methods to phase in the costs of separating the administrative support systems of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in order to provide for separate administrative support systems for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(d) COMPTROLLER GENERAL STUDIES AND REPORTS.—

(1) STATUS REPORTS ON TRANSITION.—Not later than 18 months after the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, and every 6 months thereafter, until full implementation of this subtitle has been completed, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Committees on Appropriations and on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate a report containing the following:

(A) A determination of whether the transfers of functions made by chapters 1 and 2 have been completed, and if a transfer of functions has not taken place, identifying the reasons why the transfer has not taken place.

(B) If the transfers of functions made by chapters 1 and 2 have been completed, an identification of any issues that have arisen due to the completed transfers.

(C) An identification of any issues that may arise due to any future transfer of functions.

(2) REPORT ON MANAGEMENT.—Not later than 4 years after the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Committees on Appropriations and on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate a report, following a study, containing the following:

(A) Determinations of whether the transfer of functions from the Immigration and Naturalization Service to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement have improved, with respect to each function transferred, the following:

(i) Operations.

(ii) Management, including accountability and communication.

(iii) Financial administration.

(iv) Recordkeeping, including information management and technology.

(B) A statement of the reasons for the determinations under subparagraph (A).

(C) Any recommendations for further improvements to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(3) REPORT ON FEES.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and of the Senate a report examining whether the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services is likely to derive sufficient funds from fees to carry out its functions in the absence of appropriated funds.

Subtitle C—United States Customs Service

SEC. 451. ESTABLISHMENT; COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Department the United States Customs Service, under the authority of the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security, which shall be vested with those functions set forth in section 457(7), and the personnel, assets, and liabilities attributable to those functions.

(b) COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be at the head of the Customs Service a Commissioner of Customs, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) COMPENSATION.—Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking "Commissioner of Customs, Department of the Treasury" and inserting

"Commissioner of Customs, Department of Homeland Security.".

(3) CONTINUATION IN OFFICE.—The individual serving as the Commissioner of Customs on the day before the effective date of this Act may serve as the Commissioner of Customs on and after such effective date until a Commissioner of Customs is appointed under paragraph (1).

SEC. 452. RETENTION OF CUSTOMS REVENUE FUNCTIONS BY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

(a) RETENTION BY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—

(1) RETENTION OF AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding sections 401(6), 402(1), and 803(e)(2), authority that was vested in the Secretary of the Treasury by law before the effective date of this Act under those provisions of law set forth in paragraph (2) shall not be transferred to the Secretary by reason of this Act, and on and after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury may delegate any such authority to the Secretary at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall consult with the Secretary regarding the exercise of any such authority not delegated to the Secretary.

(2) STATUTES.—The provisions of law referred to in paragraph (1) are the following: the Tariff Act of 1930; section 249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3); section 2 of the Act of March 4, 1923 (19 U.S.C. 6); section 13031 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c); section 251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 66); section 1 of the Act of June 26, 1930 (19 U.S.C. 68); the Foreign Trade Zones Act (19 U.S.C. 81a et seq.); section 1 of the Act of March 2, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 198); the Trade Act of 1974; the Trade Agreements Act of 1979; the North American Free Trade Area Implementation Act; the Uruguay Round Agreements Act; the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act; the Andean Trade Preference Act; the African Growth and Opportunity Act; and any other provision of law vesting customs revenue functions in the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) MAINTENANCE OF CUSTOMS REVENUE FUNCTIONS.—

(1) MAINTENANCE OF FUNCTIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary may not consolidate, alter, discontinue, or diminish those functions described in paragraph (2) performed by the United States Customs Service (as established under section 451) on or after the effective date of this Act, reduce the staffing level, or the compensation or benefits under title 5, United States Code, of personnel attributable to such functions, or reduce the resources attributable to such functions, and the Secretary shall ensure that an appropriate management structure is implemented to carry out such functions.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The functions referred to in paragraph (1) are those functions performed by the following personnel, and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: Import Specialists, Entry Specialists, Drawback Specialists, National Import Specialist, Fines and Penalties Specialists, attorneys of the Office of Regulations and Rulings, Customs Auditors, International Trade Specialists, Financial Systems Specialists.

(c) NEW PERSONNEL.—The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint up to 20 new personnel to work with personnel of the Department in performing customs revenue functions.

SEC. 453. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF COST ACCOUNTING SYSTEM; REPORTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than September 30, 2003, the Commissioner of Customs shall, in accordance with the audit of the Customs Service's fiscal years 2000 and 1999 financial statements (as contained in the report of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury issued on February 23, 2001), establish and implement a cost accounting system for expenses incurred in the operation of the Customs Service.

(2) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of expenses based on the type of operation, the port at which the operation took place, the amount of time spent on the operation by personnel of the Customs Service, and an identification of expenses based on any other appropriate classification necessary to provide for an accurate and complete accounting of the expenses.

(3) USE OF MERCHANDISE PROCESSING FEES.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of all amounts expended pursuant to section 13031(f)(2) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985.

(b) REPORTS.—Beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the date on which the cost accounting system described in subsection (a) is fully implemented, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on a quarterly basis a report on the progress of implementing the cost accounting system pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 454. PRESERVATION OF CUSTOMS FUNDS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds available to the United States Customs Service or collected under paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985 may be transferred for use by any other agency or office in the Department.

SEC. 455. SEPARATE BUDGET REQUEST FOR CUSTOMS.

The President shall include in each budget transmitted to the Congress under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, a separate budget request for the United States Customs Service.

SEC. 456. PAYMENT OF DUTIES AND FEES.

Section 505(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1505(a)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence—

(A) by striking "Unless the merchandise" and inserting "Unless the entry of merchandise is covered by an import activity summary statement, or the merchandise"; and

(B) by inserting after "by regulation" the following: "(but not to exceed 10 working days after entry or release, whichever occurs first)"; and

SEC. 457. DEFINITION.

In this subtitle, the term "customs revenue function" means the following:

(1) Assessing and collecting customs duties (including antidumping and countervailing duties and duties imposed under safeguard provisions), excise taxes, fees, and penalties due on imported merchandise, including classifying and valuing merchandise for purposes of such assessment.

(2) Processing and denial of entry of persons, baggage, cargo, and mail, with respect to the assessment and collection of import duties.

(3) Detecting and apprehending persons engaged in fraudulent practices designed to circumvent the customs laws of the United States.

(4) Enforcing section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and provisions relating to import quotas and the marking of imported merchandise, and providing Customs Recordations for copyrights, patents, and trademarks.

(5) Collecting accurate import data for compilation of international trade statistics.

(6) Enforcing reciprocal trade agreements.

(7) Functions performed by the following personnel, and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: Import Specialists, Entry Specialists, Drawback Specialists, National Import Specialist, Fines and Penalties Specialists, attorneys of the Office of Regulations and Rulings, Customs

Auditors, International Trade Specialists, Financial Systems Specialists.

(8) Functions performed by the following offices, with respect to any function described in any of paragraphs (1) through (7), and associated support staff, of the United States Customs Service on the day before the effective date of this Act: the Office of Information and Technology, the Office of Laboratory Services, the Office of the Chief Counsel, the Office of Congressional Affairs, the Office of International Affairs, and the Office of Training and Development.

SEC. 458. GAO REPORT TO CONGRESS.

Not later than 3 months after the effective date of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Congress a report that sets forth all trade functions performed by the executive branch, specifying each agency that performs each such function.

TITLE V—EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE

SEC. 501. UNDER SECRETARY FOR EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Emergency Preparedness and Response, shall be responsible for the following:

(1) Helping to ensure the preparedness of emergency response providers for terrorist attacks, major disasters, and other emergencies.

(2) With respect to the Nuclear Incident Response Team (regardless of whether it is operating as an organizational unit of the Department pursuant to this title)—

(A) establishing standards and certifying when those standards have been met;

(B) conducting joint and other exercises and training and evaluating performance; and

(C) providing funds to the Department of Energy and the Environmental Protection Agency, as appropriate, for homeland security planning, exercises and training, and equipment.

(3) Providing the Federal Government's response to terrorist attacks and major disasters, including—

(A) managing such response;

(B) directing the Domestic Emergency Support Team, the Strategic National Stockpile, the National Disaster Medical System, and (when operating as an organizational unit of the Department pursuant to this title) the Nuclear Incident Response Team;

(C) overseeing the Metropolitan Medical Response System; and

(D) coordinating other Federal response resources in the event of a terrorist attack or major disaster.

(4) Aiding the recovery from terrorist attacks and major disasters.

(5) Building a comprehensive national incident management system with Federal, State, and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, to respond to such attacks and disasters.

(6) Consolidating existing Federal Government emergency response plans into a single, coordinated national response plan.

(7) Developing comprehensive programs for developing interoperative communications technology, and helping to ensure that emergency response providers acquire such technology.

SEC. 502. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the following:

(1) Except as provided in section 402, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, including the functions of the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency relating thereto, and the Integrated Hazard Information System of the Department of Defense.

(2) The Office for Domestic Preparedness of the Office of Justice Programs, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(3) The National Domestic Preparedness Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(4) The Domestic Emergency Support Teams of the Department of Justice, including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(5) The Office of Emergency Preparedness, the National Disaster Medical System, and the Metropolitan Medical Response System of the Department of Health and Human Services, including the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness relating thereto.

(6) The Strategic National Stockpile of the Department of Health and Human Services, including the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services relating thereto.

SEC. 503. NUCLEAR INCIDENT RESPONSE.

(a) HOMELAND SECURITY CENTER.—(1) Notwithstanding section 307, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall establish at a national security laboratory of the National Nuclear Security Administration, a center to serve as the primary location for carrying out research, development, test, and evaluation activities of the Department related to the goals described in section 301(6)(A) and (B). The Secretary shall establish, in concurrence with the Secretary of Energy, such additional centers at one or more national laboratories of the Department of Energy as the Secretary considers appropriate to serve as secondary locations for carrying out such activities.

(2) Each center established under paragraph (1) shall be composed of such facilities and assets as are required for the performance of such activities. The particular facilities and assets shall be designated by the Secretary of Energy with the concurrence of the Secretary.

(b) NUCLEAR INCIDENT RESPONSE TEAM.—At the direction of the Secretary (in connection with an actual or threatened terrorist attack, major disaster, or other emergency), the Nuclear Incident Response Team shall operate as an organizational unit of the Department. While so operating, the Nuclear Incident Response Team shall be subject to the direction, authority, and control of the Secretary.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this title shall be understood to limit the ordinary responsibility of the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency for organizing, training, equipping, and utilizing their respective entities in the Nuclear Incident Response Team, or (subject to the provisions of this title) from exercising direction, authority, and control over them when they are not operating as a unit of the Department.

(d) INDEMNIFICATION OF CONTRACTORS DURING TRANSITION PERIOD.—(1) To the extent the Department of Energy has a duty under a covered contract to indemnify an element of the Nuclear Incident Response Team, the Department and the Department of Energy shall each have that duty, whether or not the Nuclear Incident Response Team is operating as an organizational element of the Department.

(2) Paragraph (1) applies only to a contract in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, and not to any extension or renewal of such contract carried out after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) DELIVERY OF POTASSIUM IODIDE.—In the event of a terrorist attack, major disaster, or other emergency, the Secretary shall devise a plan to deliver Potassium Iodide (KI) to the people for whom it is intended within 4 hours after exposure to radioactive iodines from a nuclear power plant, and as expeditiously as possible to persons beyond the immediate 20-mile radius of protection.

SEC. 504. DEFINITION.

For purposes of this title, ''nuclear incident response team'' means a resource that includes—

(1) those entities of the Department of Energy that perform nuclear or radiological emergency support functions (including accident response, search response, advisory, and technical operations functions), radiation exposure functions at the medical assistance facility known as Oak Ridge National Laboratory, radiological assistance functions, and related functions;

(2) those entities of the Environmental Protection Agency that perform radiological emergency response and support functions; and

(3) those entities of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission that perform such support and related functions.

TITLE VI—MANAGEMENT

SEC. 601. UNDER SECRETARY FOR MANAGEMENT.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Management, shall be responsible for the management and administration of the Department, including the following:

(1) The budget, appropriations, expenditures of funds, accounting, and finance.

(2) Procurement.

(3) Human resources and personnel.

(4) Information technology and communications systems.

(5) Facilities, property, equipment, and other material resources.

(6) Security for personnel, information technology and communications systems, facilities, property, equipment, and other material resources.

(7) Identification and tracking of performance measures relating to the responsibilities of the Department.

(8) Grants and other assistance management programs.

(9) The transition and reorganization process, to ensure an efficient and orderly transfer of functions and personnel to the Department, including the development of a transition plan.

(10) The conduct of internal audits and management analyses of the programs and activities of the Department.

(11) Any other management duties that the Secretary may designate.

SEC. 602. CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER.

Notwithstanding section 902(a)(1) of title 31, United States Code, the Chief Financial Officer shall report to the Secretary, or to another official of the Department, as the Secretary may direct.

SEC. 603. CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER.

Notwithstanding section 3506(a)(2) of title 44, United States Code, the Chief Information Officer shall report to the Secretary, or to another official of the Department, as the Secretary may direct.

TITLE VII—MISCELANEOUS

SEC. 701. AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the last two sentences of section 3(a) of the Inspector General Act of 1978, the Inspector General shall be under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary with respect to audits or investigations, or the issuance of subpoenas, that require access to sensitive information concerning—

(1) intelligence, counterintelligence, or counterterrorism matters;

(2) ongoing criminal investigations or proceedings;

(3) undercover operations;

(4) the identity of confidential sources, including protected witnesses;

(5) other matters the disclosure of which would, in the Secretary's judgment, constitute a serious threat to the protection of any person or property authorized protection by section 3056 of title 18, United States Code, section 202 of title 3 of such Code, or any provision of the Presidential Protection Assistance Act of 1976; or

(6) other matters the disclosure of which would, in the Secretary's judgment, constitute a serious threat to national security.

(b) PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN INVESTIGATIONS.—With respect to the information described in subsection (a), the Secretary may prohibit the Inspector General from carrying out or completing any audit or investigation, or from issuing any subpoena, after such Inspector General has decided to initiate, carry out, or complete such audit or investigation or to issue such subpoena, if the Secretary determines that such prohibition is necessary to prevent the disclosure of any information described in subsection (a), to preserve the national security, or to prevent a significant impairment to the interests of the United States.

(c) NOTIFICATION REQUIRED.—If the Secretary exercises any power under subsection (a) or (b), the Secretary shall notify the Inspector General of the Department in writing stating the reasons for such exercise. Within 30 days after receipt of any such notice, the Inspector General shall transmit a copy of such notice and a written response thereto that includes (1) a statement as to whether the Inspector General agrees or disagrees with such exercise and (2) the reasons for any disagreement, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to appropriate committees and subcommittees of the Congress.

(d) ACCESS TO INFORMATION BY CONGRESS.—The exercise of authority by the Secretary described in subsection (b) should not be construed as limiting the right of Congress or any committee of Congress to access any information it seeks.

(e) OVERSIGHT RESPONSIBILITY—The Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.) is further amended by inserting after section 8I the following:

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

"SEC. 8J. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in carrying out the duties and responsibilities specified in this Act, the Inspector General of the Department of Homeland Security shall have oversight responsibility for the internal investigations performed by the Office of Internal Affairs of the United States Customs Service and the Office of Inspections of the United States Secret Service. The head of each such office shall promptly report to the Inspector General the significant activities being carried out by such office.".

SEC. 711. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the United States Secret Service, which shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department, including the functions of the Secretary of the Treasury relating thereto.

Subtitle C—Critical Infrastructure Information

SEC. 721. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Critical Infrastructure Information Act of 2002".

SEC. 722. DEFINITIONS.

In this subtitle:

(1) AGENCY.—The term "agency" has the meaning given it in section 551 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) COVERED FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term "covered Federal agency" means the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—The term "critical infrastructure information" means information not customarily in the public domain and related to the security of critical infrastructure or protected systems—

(A) actual, potential, or threatened interference with, attack on, compromise of, or incapacitation of critical infrastructure or protected systems by either physical or computer-based attack or other similar conduct (including the misuse of or unauthorized access to all types of communications and data transmission systems)

that violates Federal, State, or local law, harms interstate commerce of the United States, or threatens public health or safety;

(B) the ability of any critical infrastructure or protected system to resist such interference, compromise, or incapacitation, including any planned or past assessment, projection, or estimate of the vulnerability of critical infrastructure or a protected system, including security testing, risk evaluation thereto, risk management planning, or risk audit; or

(C) any planned or past operational problem or solution regarding critical infrastructure or protected systems, including repair, recovery, reconstruction, insurance, or continuity, to the extent it is related to such interference, compromise, or incapacitation.

(4) CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION PROGRAM.—The term ''critical infrastructure protection program'' means any component or bureau of a covered Federal agency that has been designated by the President or any agency head to receive critical infrastructure information.

(5) INFORMATION SHARING AND ANALYSIS ORGANIZATION.—The term ''Information Sharing and

Analysis Organization'' means any formal or informal entity or collaboration created or employed by public or private sector organizations, for purposes of—

(A) gathering and analyzing critical infrastructure information in order to better understand security problems and interdependencies related to critical infrastructure and protected systems, so as to ensure the availability, integrity, and reliability thereof;

(B) communicating or disclosing critical infrastructure information to help prevent, detect, mitigate, or recover from the effects of a interference, compromise, or a incapacitation problem related to critical infrastructure or protected systems; and

(C) voluntarily disseminating critical infrastructure information to its members, State, local, and Federal Governments, or any other entities that may be of assistance in carrying out the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

(6) PROTECTED SYSTEM.—The term ''protected system''—

(A) means any service, physical or computer-based system, process, or procedure that directly or indirectly affects the viability of a facility of critical infrastructure; and

(B) includes any physical or computer-based system, including a computer, computer system, computer or communications network, or any component hardware or element thereof, software program, processing instructions, or information or data in transmission or storage therein, irrespective of the medium of transmission or storage.

(7) VOLUNTARY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''voluntary'', in the case of any submittal of critical infrastructure information to a covered Federal agency, means the submittal thereof in the absence of such agency's exercise of legal authority to compel access to or submission of such information and may be accomplished by a single entity or an Information Sharing and Analysis Organization on behalf of itself or its members.

(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term ''voluntary''—

(i) in the case of any action brought under the securities laws as is defined in section 3(a)(47) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(47))—

(I) does not include information or statements contained in any documents or materials filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, or with Federal banking regulators, pursuant to section 12(i) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 781(I)); and

(II) with respect to the submittal of critical infrastructure information, does not include any disclosure or writing that when made accompanied the solicitation of an offer or a sale of securities; and

(ii) does not include information or statements submitted or relied upon as a basis for making licensing or permitting determinations, or during regulatory proceedings.

SEC. 723. DESIGNATION OF CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION PROGRAM.

A critical infrastructure protection program may be designated as such by one of the following:

(1) The President.

(2) The Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) The head of a covered Federal agency by notice published in the Federal Register. This duty may not be delegated.

SEC. 724. PROTECTION OF VOLUNTARILY SHARED CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.

(a) PROTECTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, critical infrastructure information (including the identity of the submitting person or entity) that is voluntarily submitted to a covered Federal agency for use by that agency regarding the security of critical infrastructure and protected systems, if analysis, warning, interdependency study, recovery, reconstitution, or other informational purpose, when accompanied by an express statement specified in paragraph (2)—

(A) shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Freedom of Information Act);

(B) shall not be subject to any agency rules or judicial doctrine regarding ex parte communications with a decision making official;

(C) shall not, without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information, be used directly by such agency, any other Federal, State, or local authority, or any third party, in any civil action arising under Federal or State law if such information is submitted in good faith;

(D) shall not, without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information, be used or disclosed by any officer or employee of the United States for purposes other than the purposes of this subtitle, except—

(i) in furtherance of an investigation or the prosecution of a criminal act; or

(ii) when disclosure of the information would be—

(I) to either House of Congress, or to the extent of matter within its jurisdiction, any committee or subcommittee thereof, any joint committee thereof or subcommittee of any such joint committee; or

(II) to the Comptroller General, or any authorized representative of the Comptroller General, in the course of the performance of the duties of the General Accounting Office.

(E) shall not, if provided to a State or local government or government agency—

(i) be made available pursuant to any State or local law requiring disclosure of information or records;

(ii) otherwise be disclosed or distributed to any party by said State or local government or government agency without the written consent of the person or entity submitting such information; or

(iii) be used other than for the purpose of protecting critical infrastructure or protected systems, or in furtherance of an investigation or the prosecution of a criminal act; and

(F) does not constitute a waiver of any applicable privilege or protection provided under law, such as trade secret protection.

(2) EXPRESS STATEMENT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "express statement", with respect to information or records, means—

(A) in the case of written information or records, a written marking on the information or records substantially similar to the following: "This information is voluntarily submitted to the Federal Government in expectation of protection from disclosure as provided by the provisions of the Critical Infrastructure Information Act of 2002."; or

(B) in the case of oral information, a similar written statement submitted within a reasonable period following the oral communication.

(b) LIMITATION.—No communication of critical infrastructure information to a covered Federal agency made pursuant to this subtitle shall be considered to be an action subject to the requirements of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. 2).

(c) INDEPENDENTLY OBTAINED INFORMATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or otherwise affect the ability of a State, local, or Federal Government entity, agency, or authority, or any third party, under applicable law, to obtain critical infrastructure information in a manner not covered by subsection (a), including any information lawfully and properly disclosed generally or broadly to the public and to use such information in any manner permitted by law.

(d) TREATMENT OF VOLUNTARY SUBMITTAL OF INFORMATION.—The voluntary submittal to the Government of information or records that are protected from disclosure by this subtitle shall not be construed to constitute compliance with any requirement to submit such information to a Federal agency under any other provision of law.

(e) PROCEDURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security shall, in consultation with appropriate representatives of the National Security Council and the Office of Science and Technology Policy, establish uniform procedures for the receipt, care, and storage by Federal agencies of critical infrastructure information that is voluntarily submitted to the Government. The procedures shall be established not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this subtitle.

(2) ELEMENTS.—The procedures established under paragraph (1) shall include mechanisms regarding—

(A) the acknowledgement of receipt by Federal agencies of critical infrastructure information that is voluntarily submitted to the Government;

(B) the maintenance of the identification of such information as voluntarily submitted to the Government for purposes of and subject to the provisions of this subtitle;

(C) the care and storage of such information; and

(D) the protection and maintenance of the confidentiality of such information so as to permit the sharing of such information within the Federal Government and with State and local governments, and the issuance of notices and warnings related to the protection of critical infrastructure and protected systems, in such manner as to protect from public disclosure the identity of the submitting person or entity, or information that is proprietary, business sensitive, relates specifically to the submitting person or entity, and is otherwise not appropriately in the public domain.

(f) PENALTIES.—Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or of any department or agency thereof, publishes, divulges, discloses, or makes known in any manner or to any extent not authorized by law, any critical infrastructure information protected from disclosure by this subtitle coming to him in the course of this employment or official duties or by reason of any examination or investigation made by, or return, report, or record made to or filed with, such department or agency or officer or employee thereof, shall be fined under title 18 of the United States Code, imprisoned not more that one year, or both, and shall be removed from office or employment.

(g) AUTHORITY TO ISSUE WARNINGS.—The Federal Government may provide advisories, alerts, and warnings to relevant companies, targeted sectors, other governmental entities, or the general public regarding potential threats to critical infrastructure as appropriate. In issuing a warning, the Federal Government shall take appropriate actions to protect from disclosure—

(1) the source of any voluntarily submitted critical infrastructure information that forms the basis for the warning; or

(2) information that is proprietary, business sensitive, relates specifically to the submitting person or entity, or is otherwise not appropriately in the public domain.

(h) AUTHORITY TO DELEGATE.—The President may delegate authority to a critical infrastructure protection program, designated under subsection (e), to enter into a voluntary agreement to promote critical infrastructure security, including with any Information Sharing and Analysis Organization, or a plan of action as otherwise defined in section 708 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2158).

SEC. 725. NO PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.

Nothing in this subtitle may be construed to create a private right of action for enforcement of any provision of this Act.

Subtitle D—Acquisitions

SEC. 731. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—During the five-year period following the effective date of this Act, the Secretary may carry out a pilot program under which the Secretary may exercise the following authorities:

(1)(A) In carrying out basic, applied, and advanced research and development projects for response to existing or emerging terrorist threats, the

Secretary may exercise the same authority (subject to the same limitations and conditions) with respect to such research and projects as the Secretary of Defense may exercise under section 2371 of title 10, United States Code (except for subsections (b) and (f) of such section), after making a determination that—

(i) the use of a contract, grant, or cooperative agreement for such projects is not feasible or appropriate; and

(ii) use of other authority to waive Federal procurement laws or regulations would not be feasible or appropriate to accomplish such projects.

(B) The annual report required under subsection (h) of such section 2371, as applied to the Secretary by this paragraph, shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(2)(A) Under the authority of paragraph (1) and subject to the limitations of such paragraph, the Secretary may carry out prototype projects, in accordance with the requirements and conditions provided for carrying out prototype projects under section 845 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 10 U.S.C. 2371 note).

(B) In applying the authorities of such section 845—

(i) subsection (c) thereof shall apply with respect to prototype projects under this paragraph, except that in applying such subsection any reference in such subsection to the Comptroller General shall be deemed to refer to the Comptroller General and the Inspector General of the Department; and

(ii) the Secretary shall perform the functions of the Secretary of Defense under subsection (d) thereof.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than one year after the effective date of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Comptroller General shall report to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on—

(1) whether use of the authorities described in subsection (a) attracts nontraditional Government contractors and results in the acquisition of needed technologies; and

(2) if such authorities were to be made permanent, whether additional safeguards are needed with respect to the use of such authorities.

SEC. 732. PERSONAL SERVICES.

The Secretary—

(1) may procure the temporary or intermittent services of experts or consultants (or organizations thereof) in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code; and

(2) may, whenever necessary due to an urgent homeland security need, procure temporary (not to exceed 1 year) or intermittent personal services, including the services of experts or consultants (or organizations thereof), without regard to the pay limitations of such section 3109.

SEC. 733. SPECIAL STREAMLINED ACQUISITION AUTHORITY.

(a) AUTHORITY.—(1) The Secretary may use the authorities set forth in this section with respect to any procurement made during the period beginning on the effective date of this Act and ending September 30, 2007, if the Secretary determines in writing that the mission of the Department (as described in section 101) would be seriously impaired without the use of such authorities.

(2) The authority to make the determination described in paragraph (1) may not be delegated by the Secretary to an officer of the Department who is not appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(3) Not later than the date that is seven days after the date of any determination under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate—

(A) notification of such determination; and

(B) the justification for such determination.

(b) INCREASED MICRO-PURCHASE THRESHOLD FOR CERTAIN PROCUREMENTS.—(1) The Secretary may designate certain employees of the Department to make procurements described in subsection (a) for which in the administration of section 32 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 428) the amount specified in subsections (c), (d), and (f) of such section 32 shall be deemed to be $5,000.

(2) The number of employees designated under paragraph (1) shall be—

(A) fewer than the number of employees of the Department who are authorized to make purchases without obtaining competitive quotations, pursuant to section 32(c) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 428(c));

(B) sufficient to ensure the geographic dispersal of the availability of the use of the procurement authority under such paragraph at locations reasonably considered to be potential terrorist targets; and

(C) sufficiently limited to allow for the careful monitoring of employees designated under such paragraph.

(3) Procurements made under the authority of this subsection shall be subject to review by a designated supervisor on not less than a monthly basis. The supervisor responsible for the review shall be responsible for no more than 7 employees making procurements under this subsection.

(c) SIMPLIFIED ACQUISITION PROCEDURES.—(1) With respect to a procurement described in subsection (a),

the Secretary may deem the simplified acquisition threshold referred to in section 4(11) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(11)) to be $175,000.

(2) Section 18(c)(1) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) the procurement is by the Secretary of Homeland Security pursuant to the special procedures provided in section 733(c) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002.".

(d) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN COMMERCIAL ITEMS AUTHORITIES.—(1) With respect to a procurement described in subsection (a), the Secretary may deem any item or service to be a commercial item for the purpose of Federal procurement laws.

(2) The $5,000,000 limitation provided in section 31(a)(2) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 427(a)(2)) and section 303(g)(1)(B) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253(g)(1)(B)) shall be deemed to be $7,500,000 for purposes of property or services under the authority of this subsection.

(3) Authority under a provision of law referred to in paragraph (2) that expires under section 4202(e) of the

Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996 (divisions D and E of Public Law 104–106; 10 U.S.C. 2304 note) shall, notwithstanding such section, continue to apply for a procurement described in subsection (a).

(e) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the end of fiscal year 2005, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives a report on the use of the authorities provided in this section. The report shall contain the following:

(1) An assessment of the extent to which property and services acquired using authorities provided under this section contributed to the capacity of the Federal workforce to facilitate the mission of the Department as described in section 101.

(2) An assessment of the extent to which prices for property and services acquired using authorities provided under this section reflected the best value.

(3) The number of employees designated by each executive agency under subsection (b)(1).

(4) An assessment of the extent to which the Department has implemented subsections (b)(2) and (b)(3) to monitor the use of procurement authority by employees designated under subsection (b)(1).

(5) Any recommendations of the Comptroller General for improving the effectiveness of the implementation of the provisions of this section.

Subtitle E—Property

SEC. 741. REAL PROPERTY MANAGEMENT.

The Secretary, in accordance with this title and regulations prescribed jointly by the Secretary, the Administrator of General Services, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget—

(1) may acquire replacement real property (including interests therein)—

(A) by transfer or exchange of real property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Department with other executive agencies; or

(B) by sale to or exchange of such property with non-Federal entities, if—

(i) the transaction does not conflict with other applicable laws governing the acquisition of interests in real property by Federal agencies;

(ii) following consultation with the Administrator, the agency first made the property available for transfer or exchange to other Federal agencies; and

(iii) the transaction results in the agency receiving fair market value, which shall be based upon an appraisal;

(2) by lease, permit, license, or other similar instrument, may make available to other executive agencies and to non-Federal entities, on a fair market rental value basis, the unexpired portion of any Government lease for real property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Director;

(3) may make available by outlease agreements with other executive agencies or with non-Federal entities, any unused or underused portion of or interest in any real property and related personal property under the jurisdiction, custody, and control of the Department; and

(4) obligate or expend amounts received by the United States as a result of any exercise of the authority granted by paragraph (2) or (3) without regard to fiscal year limitations, for the capital asset expenditures of the Department.

SEC. 742. CRITERIA FOR USING AUTHORITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the requirements of subsection (b), the Secretary may apply authority under section 741 to a real property interest only if—

(1) the Secretary has determined that such real property interest is not excess property, and includes as part of the documentation required under subsection (b)(3) a description of the need and mission requirement fulfilled by the Federal property;

(2) the real property interest is used to fulfill or support a continuing mission requirement of the Department; and

(3) the real property interest can, by the application of the authority, improve the support of such mission.

(b) CRITERIA FOR APPLICATION.—Before applying authority under section 741 to a real property interest, the Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of General Services, must determine that such application meets all of the following criteria:

(1) The application supports the goals and objectives set forth in the Department's strategic plan under section 306 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Use of the real property is economical, cost effective, and in the best interests of the United States.

(3) The application is documented in a business plan that, commensurate with the nature of the authority applied—

(A) analyzes all reasonable options for using the property;

(B) describes how the application will be in compliance with applicable provisions of law, including such provisions of—

(i) the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.); and

(ii) the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11301 et seq.), including by—

(I) describing the result of the determination under that Act by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development of the suitability of the property for use to assist the homeless; and

(II) explaining the rationale for the Department's decision not to make the property available for use to assist the homeless; and

(C) establishes effective procedures for soliciting, assessing, and taking into account input from the local community.

SEC. 743. OUTLEASES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make property available by an outlease agreement authorized by section 741 only if—

(1) the Secretary finds that—

(A) there is no long-term mission requirement for the property, but the Federal Government is not permitted to dispose of it; or

(B)(i) there is a continuing, long-term mission requirement of the Department for the property to remain in Government ownership; and

(ii) the use of the real property by the lessee will not be inconsistent with such mission;

(2) in the case of an outlease to a non-Federal entity, the outlease is conducted competitively; and

(3) the agreement—

(A) is for a term no longer than 50 years; and

(B) will result in the Department receiving fair market value which, in the case of an exchange or sale of Federal real property, shall be based upon an appraisal.

(b) CONSTRUCTION ON OUTLEASED PROPERTY; APPLICABLE LAW.—

(1) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO RETAINED AUTHORITY.—If the Secretary retains authority over any decision to construct or alter buildings on property outleased to a non-Federal entity under section 741, then any such construction or alteration shall comply with section 21 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 619).

(2) PROPERTY NOT SUBJECT TO RETAINED AUTHORITY.—(A) If the Secretary does not retain authority over any decision to construct or alter buildings on property outleased to a non-Federal entity under section 741, then any such construction or alteration shall comply with all laws described in subparagraph (B) that would apply to such construction or alteration if the property were not Federal property.

(B) The laws referred to in subparagraph (A) are all laws of a State, and of a political subdivision of a State, relating to zoning, landscaping, open space, minimum distance of a building from a property line, maximum building height, historic preservation, esthetic qualities of a building, building codes, and similar matters, and any other State or local laws relating to construction or alteration of a building, respectively, by the non-Federal entity on non-Federal lands.

(C) The Secretary may waive the application of subparagraph (A) if the Secretary determines that application of that subparagraph would hinder fulfillment of the mission of the Department under section 101(b).

(c) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall submit biennial reports to the Congress, including to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, on the effectiveness of the use of outlease authority under section 741.

SEC. 744. REVIEW AND REVISION OF TRANSACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATOR.

The Administrator of General Services may, in the sole discretion of the Administrator, review any transaction of the Department undertaken utilizing authority under section 741. After such review, the Administrator may disapprove such transaction if the Administrator determines the transaction does not reflect due diligence by the Department, is not in the best interest of the United States, or does not comply with the requirements of this title.

SEC. 745. TRANSACTIONAL REPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For those transactions authorized under section 741 involving the sale, exchange, or outlease to a non-Federal entity of any asset valued in excess of $700,000 at the time of the transaction, the Secretary shall submit the business plan required by section 742(b)(3) to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives at least 30 calendar days before the final execution of such transaction.

(b) DISPOSAL OF REAL PROPERTY BY NEGOTIATION.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, a statement explaining the circumstances of each disposal by negotiation, under section 741, of any real property that has an estimated fair market value in excess of $700,000.

(c) ADJUSTMENT OF THRESHOLD.—The Administrator of General Services may increase or decrease the dollar amounts in subsections (a) and (b) to reflect a percentage increase or decrease in the Department of Commerce Consumer Price Index.

Subtitle F—Other Provisions

SEC. 752. ADVISORY COMMITTEES.

The Secretary may establish, appoint members of, and use the services of, advisory committees, as the Secretary may deem necessary. An advisory committee established under this section may be exempted by the Secretary from Public Law 92–463, but the Secretary shall publish notice in the Federal Register announcing the establishment of such a committee and identifying its purpose and membership. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, members of an advisory committee that is exempted by the Secretary under the preceding sentence who are special Government employees (as that term is defined in section 202 of title 18, United States Code) shall be eligible for certifications under subsection (b)(3) of section 208 of title 18, United States Code, for official actions taken as a member of such advisory committee.

SEC. 753. REORGANIZATION; TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) REORGANIZATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may allocate or reallocate functions among the officers of the Department, and may establish, consolidate, alter, or discontinue organizational units within the Department, but only—

(A) pursuant to section 802; or

(B) after the expiration of 60 days after providing notice of such action to the appropriate congressional committees, which shall include an explanation of the rationale for the action.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—(A) Authority under paragraph (1)(A) does not extend to the abolition of any agency, entity, organizational unit, program, or function established or required to be maintained by this Act.

(B) Authority under paragraph (1)(B) does not extend to the abolition of any agency, entity, organizational unit, program, or function established or required to be maintained by statute.

(b) TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, not to exceed two percent of any appropriation available to the Secretary in any fiscal year may be transferred between such appropriations, except that not less than 15 days' notice shall be given to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives before any such transfer is made.

(2) EXPIRATION OF AUTHORITY.—The authority under paragraph (1) shall expire two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 754. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) SEAL.—The Department shall have a seal, whose design is subject to the approval of the President.

(b) GIFTS, DEVISES, AND BEQUESTS.—With respect to the Department, the Secretary shall have the same authorities that the Attorney General has with respect to the Department of Justice under section 524(d) of title 28, United States Code.

(c) PARTICIPATION OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES.—With respect to the Department, the Secretary shall have the same authorities that the Secretary of Transportation has with respect to the Department of Transportation under section 324 of title 49, United States Code.

(d) REDELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS.—Unless otherwise provided in the delegation or by law, any function delegated under this Act may be redelegated to any subordinate.

SEC. 755. MILITARY ACTIVITIES.

Nothing in this Act shall confer upon the Secretary any authority to engage in warfighting, the military defense of the United States, or other military activities, nor shall anything in this Act limit the existing authority of the Department of Defense or the Armed Forces to engage in warfighting, the military defense of the United States, or other military activities.

SEC. 756. REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

This Act vests no new regulatory authority in the Secretary or any other Federal official, and transfers to the Secretary or another Federal official only such regulatory authority as exists on the date of enactment of this Act within any agency, program, or function transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act, or that on such date of enactment is exercised by another official of the executive branch with respect to such agency, program, or function. Any such transferred authority may not be exercised by an official from whom it is transferred upon transfer of such agency, program, or function to the Secretary or another Federal official pursuant to this Act.

SEC. 757. PROVISIONS REGARDING TRANSFERS FROM DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

(a) SEPARATE CONTRACTING.—To the extent that programs or activities transferred by this Act from the Department of Energy to the Department of Homeland Security are being carried out through contracts with the operator of a national laboratory of the Department of Energy, the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Secretary of Energy shall ensure that contracts for such programs and activities between the Department of Homeland Security and such operator are separate from the contracts of the Department of Energy with such operator.

(b) REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS.—In the case of an activity carried out by the operator of a national laboratory of the Department of Energy but under contract with the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Homeland Security shall reimburse the Department of Energy for costs of such activity through a method under which the Secretary of Energy waives any requirement for the Department of Homeland Security to pay administrative charges or personnel costs of the Department of Energy or its contractors in excess of the amount that the Secretary of Energy pays for an activity carried out by such contractor and paid for by the Department of Energy.

(c) LABORATORY DIRECTED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.—No funds authorized to be appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department in any fiscal year may be obligated or expended for laboratory directed research and development activities carried out by the Department of Energy unless such activities support the mission of the Department described in section 101.

(d) DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY COORDINATION ON HOMELAND SECURITY RELATED RESEARCH.—The Secretary of Energy shall ensure that any research, development, test, and evaluation activities conducted within the Department of Energy that are directly or indirectly related to homeland security are fully coordinated with the Secretary to minimize duplication of effort and maximize the effective application of Federal budget resources.

SEC. 758. COUNTERNARCOTICS OFFICER.

The Secretary shall appoint a senior official in the Department to assume primary responsibility for coordinating policy and operations within the Department and between the the Department and other Federal departments and agencies with respect to interdicting the entry of illegal drugs into the United States, and tracking and severing connections between illegal drug trafficking and terrorism.

SEC. 759. OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Office of the Secretary an Office of International Affairs. The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be a senior official appointed by the Secretary.

(b) DUTIES OF THE DIRECTOR.—The Director shall have the following duties:

(1) To promote information and education exchange with nations friendly to the United States in order to promote sharing of best practices and technologies relating to homeland security. Such information exchange shall include the following:

(A) Joint research and development on countermeasures.

(B) Joint training exercises of first responders.

(C) Exchange of expertise on terrorism prevention, response, and crisis management.

(2) To identify areas for homeland security information and training exchange where the United States has a demonstrated weakness and another friendly nation or nations have a demonstrated expertise.

(3) To plan and undertake international conferences, exchange programs, and training activities.

(4) To manage international activities within the Department in coordination with other Federal officials with responsibility for counter-terrorism matters.

SEC. 760. PROHIBITION OF THE TERRORISM INFORMATION AND PREVENTION SYSTEM.

Any and all activities of the Federal Government to implement the proposed component program of the Citizen Corps known as Operation TIPS (Terrorism Information and Prevention System) are hereby prohibited.

Subtitle G—Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002 (the SAFETY Act)

SEC. 771. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002" or the "SAFETY Act".

SEC. 772. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) In General.—The Secretary shall be responsible for the administration of this subtitle.

(b) DESIGNATION OF QUALIFIED ANTI-TERRORISM TECHNOLOGIES.—The Secretary may designate anti-terrorism technologies that qualify for protection under the system of risk management set forth in this subtitle in accordance with criteria that shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(1) Prior and extensive United States government use and demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness.

(2) Availability of the technology for immediate deployment in public and private settings.

(3) Existence of extraordinarily large or extraordinarily unquantifiable potential third party liability risk exposure to the Seller or other provider of such anti-terrorism technology.

(4) Substantial likelihood that such anti-terrorism technology will not be deployed unless protections under the system of risk management provided under this subtitle are extended.

(5) Magnitude of risk exposure to the public if such anti-terrorism technology is not deployed.

(6) evaluation of all scientific studies that can be feasibly conducted in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may issue such regulations, after notice and comment in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States, Code, as may be necessary to carry out this subtitle.

SEC. 773. LITIGATION MANAGEMENT.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—(1)There shall exist a Federal cause of action for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller. The substantive law for decision in any such action shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which such acts of terrorism occurred, unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law.

(2) Such appropriate district court of the United States shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller.

(b) SPECIAL RULES.—In an action brought under this section for damages the following provisions apply:

(1) No punitive damages intended to punish or deter, exemplary damages, or other damages not intended to compensate a plaintiff for actual losses may be awarded, nor shall any party be liable for interest prior to the judgment.

(2)(A) Noneconomic damages may be awarded against a defendant only in an amount directly proportional to the percentage of responsibility of such defendant for the harm to the plaintiff, and no plaintiff may recover noneconomic damages unless the plaintiff suffered physical harm.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ''noneconomic damages'' means damages for losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium, hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and any other nonpecuniary losses.

(c) COLLATERAL SOURCES.—Any recovery by a plaintiff in an action under this section shall be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of such acts of terrorism that result or may result in loss to the Seller.

(d) GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR DEFENSE.—(1) Should a product liability lawsuit be filed for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies approved by the Secretary, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller, there shall be a rebuttable presumption that the government contractor defense applies in such lawsuit. This presumption shall only be overcome by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology under this subsection. This presumption of the government contractor defense shall apply regardless of whether the claim against the Seller arises from a sale of the product to federal government or non-federal government customers.

(2) The Secretary will be exclusively responsible for the review and approval of anti-terrorism technology for purposes of establishing a government contractor defense in any product liability lawsuit for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies approved by the Secretary, as provided in this paragraph and paragraph (3), have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller. Upon the Seller's submission to the Secretary for approval of anti-terrorism technology, the Secretary will conduct a comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended. The Seller will conduct safety and hazard analyses on such technology and will supply the Secretary with all such information.

(3) For those products reviewed and approved by the Secretary, the Secretary will issue a certificate of conformance to the Seller and place the product on an Approved Product List for Homeland Security.

(d) EXCLUSION.—Nothing in this section shall in any way limit the ability of any person to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that—

(1) attempts to commit, knowingly participates in, aids and abets, or commits any act of terrorism, or any criminal act related to or resulting from such act of terrorism; or

(2) participates in a conspiracy to commit any such act of terrorism or any such criminal act.

SEC. 774. RISK MANAGEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to non-federal government customers (''Seller'') shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act.

(2) For the total claims related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller's anti-terrorism technologies.

(3) Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the following, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against an act of terrorism:

(A) contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller.

(B) contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer.

(4) Such liability insurance under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the sale or use of anti-terrorism technologies.

(b) RECIPROCAL WAIVER OF CLAIMS.—The Seller shall enter into a reciprocal waiver of claims with its contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers, and contractors and subcontractors of the customers, involved in the manufacture, sale, use or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies, under which each party to the waiver agrees to be responsible for losses, including business interruption losses, that it sustains, or for losses sustained by its own employees resulting from an activity resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act.

(c) EXTENT OF LIABILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, liability for all claims against a Seller arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller, whether for compensatory or punitive damages or for contribution or indemnity, shall not be in an amount greater than the limits of liability insurance coverage required to be maintained by the Seller under this section.

SEC. 775. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this subtitle, the following definitions apply:

(1) QUALIFIED ANTI-TERRORISM TECHNOLOGY.—For purposes of this subtitle, the term

"qualified anti-terrorism technology" means any product, device, or technology designed, developed, or modified for the specific purpose of preventing, detecting, identifying, or deterring acts of terrorism and limiting the harm such acts might otherwise cause, that is designated as such by the Secretary.

(2) ACT OF TERRORISM.—(A) The term "act of terrorism" means any act that the Secretary determines meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), as such requirements are further defined and specified by the Secretary.

(B) REQUIREMENTS.—An act meets the requirements of this subparagraph if the act—

(i) is unlawful;

(ii) causes harm to a person, property, or entity, in the United States, or in the case of a domestic United States air carrier or a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), in or outside the United States; and

(iii) uses or attempts to use instrumentalities, weapons or other methods designed or intended to cause mass destruction, injury or other loss to citizens or institutions of the United States.

(3) INSURANCE CARRIER.—The term ''insurance carrier'' means any corporation, association, society, order, firm, company, mutual, partnership, individual aggregation of individuals, or any other legal entity that provides commercial property and casualty insurance. Such term includes any affiliates of a commercial insurance carrier.

(4) LIABILITY INSURANCE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''liability insurance'' means insurance for legal liabilities incurred by the insured resulting from—

(i) loss of or damage to property of others;

(ii) ensuing loss of income or extra expense incurred because of loss of or damage to property of others;

(iii) bodily injury (including) to persons other than the insured or its employees; or

(iv) loss resulting from debt or default of another.

(5) LOSS.—The term ''loss'' means death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, including business interruption loss.

(6) NON-FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CUSTOMERS.—The term ''non-Federal Government customers'' means any customer of a Seller that is not an agency or instrumentality of the United States Government with authority under Public Law 85-804 to provide for indemnification under certain circumstances for third-party claims against its contractors, including but not limited to State and local authorities and commercial entities.

TITLE VIII—TRANSITION

Subtitle A—Reorganization Plan

SEC. 801. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title:

(1) The term ''agency'' includes any entity, organizational unit, program, or function.

(2) The term ''transition period'' means the 12-month period beginning on the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 802. REORGANIZATION PLAN.

(a) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a reorganization plan regarding the following:

(1) The transfer of agencies, personnel, assets, and obligations to the Department pursuant to this Act.

(2) Any consolidation, reorganization, or streamlining of agencies transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act.

(b) PLAN ELEMENTS.—The plan transmitted under subsection (a) shall contain, consistent with this Act, such elements as the President deems appropriate, including the following:

(1) Identification of any functions of agencies transferred to the Department pursuant tothis Act that will not be transferred to the Department under the plan.

(2) Specification of the steps to be taken by the Secretary to organize the Department, including the delegation or assignment of functions transferred to the Department among officers of the Department in order to permit the Department to carry out the functions transferred under the plan.

(3) Specification of the funds available to each agency that will be transferred to the Department as a result of transfers under the plan.

(4) Specification of the proposed allocations within the Department of unexpended funds transferred in connection with transfers under the plan.

(5) Specification of any proposed disposition of property, facilities, contracts, records, and other assets and obligations of agencies transferred under the plan.

(c) MODIFICATION OF PLAN.—The President may, on the basis of consultations with the appropriate congressional committees, modify or revise any part of the plan until that part of the plan becomes effective in accordance with subsection (d).

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The reorganization plan described in this section, including any modifications or revisions of the plan under subsection (d), shall become effective for an agency on the earlier of—

(A) the date specified in the plan (or the plan as modified pursuant to subsection (d)), except that such date may not be earlier than 90 days after the date the President has transmitted the reorganization plan to the appropriate congressional committees pursuant to subsection (a); or

(B) the end of the transition period.

(2) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection may be construed to require the transfer of functions, personnel, records, balances of appropriations, or other assets of an agency on a single date.

(3) SUPERSEDES EXISTING LAW.—Paragraph (1) shall apply notwithstanding section 905(b) of title 5, United States Code.

Subtitle B—Transitional Provisions

SEC. 811. TRANSITIONAL AUTHORITIES.

(a) PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE BY OFFICIALS.—Until the transfer of an agency to the Department, any official having authority over or functions relating to the agency immediately before the effective date of this Act shall provide to the Secretary such assistance, including the use of personnel and assets, as the Secretary may request in preparing for the transfer and integration of the agency into the Department.

(b) SERVICES AND PERSONNEL.—During the transition period, upon the request of the Secretary, the head of any executive agency may, on a reimbursable or non-reimbursable basis, provide services or detail personnel to assist with the transition.

(c) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Until the transfer of an agency to the Department, the President is authorized to transfer to the Secretary to fund the purposes authorized in this Act—

(1) for administrative expenses related to the establishment of the Department of Homeland Security, not to exceed two percent of the unobligated balance of any appropriation available to such agency; and

except that not less than 15 days' notice shall be given to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate before any such funds transfer is made.

(d) ACTING OFFICIALS.—(1) During the transition period, pending the advice and consent of the Senate to the appointment of an officer required by this Act to be appointed by and with such advice and consent, the President may designate any officer whose appointment was required to be made by and with such advice and consent and who was such an officer immediately before the effective date of this Act (and who continues in office) or immediately before such designation, to act in such office until the same is filled as provided in this Act. While so

(A) the rates provided by this Act for the respective offices in which they act; or

(B) the rates provided for the offices held at the time of designation.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be understood to require the advice and consent of the Senate to the appointment by the President to a position in the Department of any officer whose agency is transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act and whose duties following such transfer are germane to those performed before such transfer.

(e) TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL, ASSETS, OBLIGATIONS, AND FUNCTIONS.—Upon the transfer of an agency to the Department—

(1) the personnel, assets, and obligations held by or available in connection with the agency shall be transferred to the Secretary for appropriate allocation, subject to the approval of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and notwithstanding the provisions of section 1531(a)(2) of title 31, United States Code; and

exercise in relation to the agency immediately before such transfer, and shall have in addition all functions vested in the Secretary by this Act or other law.

(f) PROHIBITION ON USE OF TRANSPORTATION TRUST FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds derived from the Highway Trust Fund, Airport and Airway Trust Fund, Inland Waterway Trust Fund, Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund, or Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund may be transferred to, made available to, or obligated by the Secretary or any other official in the Department.

(2) LIMITATION.—This subsection shall not apply to security-related funds provided to the Federal Aviation Administration for fiscal years preceding fiscal year 2003 for (A) operations, (B) facilities and equipment, or (C) research, engineering, and development.

SEC. 812. SAVINGS PROVISIONS.

(a) COMPLETED ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS.—(1) Completed administrative actions of an agency shall not be affected by the enactment of this Act or the transfer of such agency to the Department, but shall continue in effect according to their terms until amended, modified, superseded, terminated, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by an officer of the United States or a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ''completed administrative action'' includes orders, determinations, rules, regulations, personnel actions, permits, agreements, grants, contracts, certificates, licenses, registrations, and privileges.

(b) PENDING PROCEEDINGS.—Subject to the authority of the Secretary under this Act—

(1) pending proceedings in an agency, including notices of proposed rulemaking, and applications for licenses, permits, certificates, grants, and financial assistance, shall continue notwithstanding the enactment of this Act or the transfer of the agency to the Department, unless discontinued or modified under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such discontinuance could have occurred if such enactment or transfer had not occurred; and

(2) orders issued in such proceedings, and appeals therefrom, and payments made pursuant to such orders, shall issue in the same manner and on the same terms as if this Act had not been enacted or the agency had not been transferred, and any

such orders shall continue in effect until amended, modified, superseded, terminated, set aside, or revoked by an officer of the United States or a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(c) PENDING CIVIL ACTIONS.—Subject to the authority of the Secretary under this Act, pending civil actions shall continue notwithstanding the enactment of this Act or the transfer of an agency to the Department, and in such civil actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered and enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if such enactment or transfer had not occurred.

(d) REFERENCES.—References relating to an agency that is transferred to the Department in statutes, Executive orders, rules, regulations, directives, or delegations of authority that precede such transfer or the effective date of this Act shall be deemed to refer, as appropriate, to the Department, to its officers, employees, or agents, or to its corresponding organizational units or functions. Statutory reporting requirements that applied in relation to such an agency immediately before the effective date of this Act shall continue to apply following such transfer if they refer to the agency by name.

(e) EMPLOYMENT PROVISIONS.—(1) Notwithstanding the generality of the foregoing (including sub-sections (a) and (d)), in and for the Department the Secretary may, in regulations prescribed jointly with the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, adopt the rules, procedures, terms, and conditions, established by statute, rule, or regulation before the effective date of this Act, relating to employment in any agency transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act; and

(2) except as otherwise provided in this Act, or under authority granted by this Act, the transfer pursuant to this Act of personnel shall not alter the terms and conditions of employment, including compensation, of any employee so transferred.

SEC. 813. TERMINATIONS.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, whenever all the functions vested by law in any agency have been transferred pursuant to this Act, each position and office the incumbent of which was authorized to receive compensation at the rates prescribed for an office or position at level II, III, IV, or V, of the Executive Schedule, shall terminate.

SEC. 814. INCIDENTAL TRANSFERS.

The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Secretary, is authorized and directed to make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, and obligations held, used, arising from,

available, or to be made available, in connection with the functions transferred by this Act, as the Director may deem necessary to accomplish the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 815. NATIONAL IDENTIFICATION SYSTEM NOT AUTHORIZED.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize the development of a national identification system or card.

SEC. 816. CONTINUITY OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OVERSIGHT.

Notwithstanding the transfer of an agency to the Department pursuant to this Act, the Inspector General that exercised oversight of such agency prior to such transfer shall continue to exercise oversight of such agency during the period of time, if any, between the transfer of such agency to the Department pursuant to this Act and the appointment of the Inspector General of the Department of Homeland Security in accordance with section 103(b) of this Act.

SEC. 817. REFERENCE.

With respect to any function transferred by or under this Act (including under a reorganization plan that becomes effective under section 802) and exercised on or after the effective date of this Act, reference in any other Federal law to any department, commission, or agency or any officer or office the functions of which are so transferred shall be deemed to refer to the Secretary, other official, or component of the Department to which such function is so transferred.

(b) LAW ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY.—The Act of June 1, 1948 (40 U.S.C. 318–318d; chapter 359; 62 Stat. 281) is amended to read as follows:

''SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

''This Act may be cited as the 'Protection of Public Property Act'.

''SEC. 2. LAW ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF HOMELAND SECURITY FOR PROTECTION OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Homeland Security (in this Act referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall protect the buildings, grounds, and property that are owned, occupied, or secured by the Federal Government (including any agency, instrumentality, or wholly owned or mixed-ownership corporation thereof) and the persons on the property.

"(b) OFFICERS AND AGENTS.—

"(1) DESIGNATION.—The Secretary may designate employees of the Department of Homeland Security, including employees transferred to the Department from the Office of the Federal Protective Service of the General Services Administration pursuant to the Homeland Security Act of 2002, as officers and agents for duty in connection with the protection of property owned or occupied by the Federal Government and persons on the property, including duty in areas outside the property to the extent necessary to protect the property and persons on the property.

"(2) POWERS.—While engaged in the performance of official duties, an officer or agent designated under this subsection may—

"(A) enforce Federal laws and regulations for the protection of persons and property;

"(B) carry firearms;

"(C) make arrests without a warrant for any offense against the United States committed in the presence of the officer or agent or for any felony cognizable under the laws of the United States if the officer or agent has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing a felony;

"(D) serve warrants and subpoenas issued under the authority of the United States; and

"(E) conduct investigations, on and off the property in question, of offenses that may have been committed against property owned or occupied by the Federal Government or persons on the property.

"(F) carry out such other activities for the promotion of homeland security as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(c) REGULATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of General Services, may prescribe regulations necessary for the protection and administration of property owned or occupied by the Federal Government and persons on the property. The regulations may include reasonable penalties, within the limits prescribed in paragraph (2), for violations of the regulations. The regulations shall be posted and remain posted in a conspicuous place on the property.

"(2) PENALTIES.—A person violating a regulation prescribed under this subsection shall be fined under title 18, United States Code, imprisoned for not more than 30 days, or both.

"(d) DETAILS.—

"(1) REQUESTS OF AGENCIES.—On the request of the head of a Federal agency having charge or control of property owned or occupied by the Federal Government, the Secretary may detail officers and agents designated under this section for the protection of the property and persons on the property.

"(2) APPLICABILITY OF REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may—

"(A) extend to property referred to in paragraph (1) the applicability of regulations prescribed under this section and enforce the regulations as provided in this section; or

"(B) utilize the authority and regulations of the requesting agency if agreed to in writing by the agencies.

"(3) FACILITIES AND SERVICES OF OTHER AGENCIES.—When the Secretary determines it to be economical and in the public interest, the Secretary may utilize the facilities and services of Federal,

State, and local law enforcement agencies, with the consent of the agencies.

"(e) AUTHORITY OUTSIDE FEDERAL PROPERTY.—For the protection of property owned or occupied by the Federal Government and persons on the property, the Secretary may enter into agreements with Federal agencies and with State and local governments to obtain authority for officers and agents designated under this section to enforce Federal laws and State and local laws concurrently with other Federal law enforcement officers and with State and local law enforcement officers.

"(f) SECRETARY AND ATTORNEY GENERAL APPROVAL.—The powers granted to officers and agents designated under this section shall be exercised in accordance with guidelines approved by the Secretary and the Attorney General.

"(g) LIMITATION ON STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to—

"(1) preclude or limit the authority of any Federal law enforcement agency; or

"(2) restrict the authority of the Administrator of General Services to promulgate regulations affecting property under the Administrator's custody and control.".

SEC. 908. TRANSPORTATION SECURITY REGULATIONS.

Title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 114(l)(2)(B), by inserting "for a period not to exceed 30 days" after "effective"; and

(2) in section 114(l)(2)(B), by inserting "ratified or" after "unless".

TITLE X—TRANSFERS TO THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

SEC. 1001. TRANSFER OF THE FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING CENTER.

There shall be transferred to the Attorney General the functions, personel, assets, and liabilities of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, including any functions of the Secretary of the Treasury relating thereto.

COMPARISON BETWEEN HEALTH ACT AND TEXAS LAW

Rep. Greenwood's bipartisan Health Act (H.R. 4600), which you will be endorsing on Thursday, includes the following medical malpractice reforms:

- Allows patients to recover unlimited economic damages, such as medical expenses and lost wages, but caps non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering, at $250,000;
- Makes punitive damages available only when there is "clear and convincing" evidence of egregious conduct;
- Limits punitive damages to the greater of two times economic damages or $250,000; and
- Allocates damages in proportion to a defendant's degree of fault

Reforms similar to these provisions were enacted in Texas, in some cases as part of legislation you signed.

I. TEXAS CAP ON COMPENSATORY DAMAGES

Since 1977, Texas law has limited total damages in medical malpractice cases, excluding medical costs, to $500,000 adjusted annually against CPI. Today, the inflation-adjusted medical malpractice cap is almost $1.5 million. The Texas Supreme Court has held that, under the "open courts" provision of the Texas Constitution, this cap may not apply to common law actions (meaning those that exist without statutory authority). In practice, this means that the Texas medical malpractice cap applies only in wrongful death cases, which are statutory.

II. TEXAS LAW ON PUNITIVE DAMAGES

In 1995, you signed a bill that would allow punitive damage awards in Texas only if the plaintiff presents "clear and convincing" evidence of fraud, malice, or a willful or grossly negligent act resulting in death.

In addition, the legislation limited punitive damage awards to the greater of:

a) $200,000; or
b) Two times economic damages plus non-economic damages. For purposes of the formula, the amount of non-economic damages included in the calculation may not exceed $750,000.

The punitives cap is subject to limited exceptions for certain criminal conduct.

Examples of punitives cap:

The jury awards $0 in economic damages, $500,000 in non-economic damages, and $1.5 million in punitives. The judge will reduce the punitives award as follows:

	Two times economic damages	$0
+	Non-economic damages	$500,000
=	Punitives cap	$500,000

The jury awards $2 million in economic damages, $1 million in non-economic damages, and $20 million in punitives. The judge will reduce the punitives award as follows

	Two times economic damages	$4,000,000
+	Non-economic damages	$750,000 (maximum included in formula)
=	Punitives cap	$4,750,000

III. TEXAS LAW ON JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY

When two or more defendants contribute to a single injury to the plaintiff, the common law principle of "joint and several liability" may allow the plaintiff to hold any single defendant liable for the full amount of damages. For example, if a jury finds that two physicians and an HMO each contributed to the plaintiff's medical injuries, joint and several liability principles may allow the plaintiff to collect the full amount of his damages from one of the physicians, even if he was only marginally responsible.

In Texas, you signed a bill that would require juries to determine each defendant's percentage of responsibility. Unless the defendant's percentage of responsibility is greater than 50%, he is responsible only for his proportionate share of damages.

Spoke to Ellen. Fact that the Administration opposes this language is new to her. She was told by an Industry representative that, according to a conversation with someone in the Admin. a few days ago, the Administration didn't have an opinion/was neutral on this. I assured her that we oppose (that the issue was imp., we would continue to monitor, but that the case hadn't been made yet). She will take that information to Thompson.

Does anyone know the history of the Thompson indemnification amendment? Generally the administration has been against this type of proposal.

FINANCE
Senate To Name Insurance Conferees; Republicans Vie For Spots
The Senate is expected to name conferees on terrorism reinsurance legislation as early as today, despite some political gamesmanship behind the scenes over the selection, sources said Tuesday.
Senate Democratic and Republican sources blamed senators on opposite sides of the aisle of backing a delay in naming conferees, a task that has been pending since before the July Fourth recess.
Democrats blamed the delay on Republican competition for spots at the conference table, which the majority wants split between four Democrats and three Republicans.
But a Senate Republican leadership source blamed Democratic leaders for failing to respond to the GOP for a new ratio of 5-4, so they can accommodate each of four Republicans seeking a seat.
Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, will lead
```

Republican conferees. But a runoff is developing among Sens. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., Robert Bennett, R-Utah, and Mitch
McConnell, R-Ky., for the two remaining seats.
Shelby, who sources said is the latest to request a seat, had shown little interest in the legislation. However, the GOP leadership aide said Shelby is eager to show leadership on the high- profile issue, since he will assume the top Republican spot on the Banking panel next year when Gramm retires.
The Banking Committee will oversee implementation of the new law.
On the Democratic side, Senate Banking Chairman Sarbanes and Sens.
Christopher Dodd,
D-Conn., Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., and Jack Reed, D-R.I., are slated to be conferees, sources said. By Pamela Barnett

MEMORANDUM TO OHS STAFF

FROM: EDWARD McNALLY

SUBJECT: SEPARATION OF OHS AND TRANSITION PLANNING OFFICE DOCUMENTS

Attached is a copy of Judge Gonzales' memorandum to all WHO and certain other employees concerning the general rules on White House materials (which includes any OHS materials) which you might make available to Transition Planning Office (TPO) staff. In addition to complying with this guidance, OHS staff are also obliged to maintain certain files separately. The background is as follows.

As has been discussed at staff meetings, some OHS staff may become involved in preparing materials related to the transition for the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Most of these materials will be OHS materials. But some, such as copies of Governor Ridge's testimony before Congress, may be created for the Governor in his capacity as Director of the TPO at OMB (established by Executive Order 13267, also attached), and not in his capacity at OHS. Furthermore, as the TPO begins to be staffed, you may be receiving written materials created by TPO. E.O. 13267 directs that the "records" of OHS "shall be kept separate" from the records of TPO. In order to ensure compliance with the E.O., please observe the following procedures:

- Hard Copies – You should keep separate files for records which are:

(a) prepared specifically for the use of TPO (including documents prepared for the Governor in his capacity as Director of TPO), and which

(b) have in fact been transmitted to TPO.

For example, copies of testimony and briefing materials used by Governor Ridge in testifying before Congress (as you know he's appearing in his capacity as TPO Director) should be kept separate. Please maintain any such materials in file folders labeled "TPO", and store them separately, e.g., in a separate drawer in a file cabinet.

- E-mail – OMB is making arrangements via OMB and OA IT personnel to handle e-mail appropriately.

If you have any questions please contract Robert Delahunty, Kate Anderson or myself.

This memorandum is for internal purposes only and is not intended to, and does not, create any right, benefit, trust, or responsibility, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or equity by a party against the United States, its departments, agencies or entities, its officers or employees, or any person.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL WHO, OVP, NSC, CEA AND OPD EMPLOYEES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: MANAGEMENT OF WHITE HOUSE MATERIALS MADE AVAILABLE TO TRANSITION PLANNING OFFICE (TPO) STAFF FOR THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

White House materials may be made available from time to time to the staff of the Transition Planning Office (TPO) that was formed in expectation of the creation of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Because of the sensitivity and confidentiality of such materials, the White House Office (or, as appropriate, other White House entities[1]) will maintain control over such materials even after they have been made available to TPO staff. The attached Memorandum of Understanding sets forth procedures intended to ensure that the relevant White House entities maintain control over any such House materials. This cover memorandum is intended to provide you with a guide to follow when you make White House materials available to TPO staff.

"White House materials" means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter of any nature whatsoever, regardless of how recorded and whether an original or copy, including information therein, that is originated or received by a White House entity.

The general rules on White House materials made available to TPO staff are as follows:

- You must not make White House materials available to TPO staff other than for TPO's internal purposes.

- All White House materials that are made available to TPO staff (other than e-mail or e-mail attachments) must first be routed to TPO via Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor. They will ensure that those materials are stamped: "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure."

- OMB is making arrangements with IT personnel so that the same text "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure" will be placed automatically on e-mail sent from White House entity e-mail addresses to TPO e-mail addresses.

1 "White House entities" means the White House Office, the Office of Policy Development, the National Security Council, all other entities in the Executive Office of the President to whom section 552 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code does not apply, and (with respect to executive materials) the Office of the Vice President.

Here are my comments. Globally -- I'm not sure we can describe these as "minimum" standards b/c the states can't have tighter standards. Also -- list of policies had early offer on it. I would also delete lump sum line. If we list everything from Greenwood, it highlights the things we aren't listing, which will irritate people. In the list, I would always use "doctors and other health care professionals" instead of "defendants." Also, I think that the reference to $250K should say "such as" or something like that.

President Proposes Minimum Standards for Medical Liability
New HHS Study Highlights Higher Costs, Lower Quality Care Resulting from Badly Broken Liability System

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- In a speech at the Highpoint University, President Bush proposed major legislative reforms to address the medical liability crisis. To make health care more affordable, more available, and better and safer for patients, the President proposed national minimum standards for medical liability reforms and new protections for good-faith efforts by health professionals to improve health care quality and safety through new Patient Safety Organizations.

- The President was accompanied by HHS Secretary Tommy Thompson, who released a new HHS report on Confronting the New Health Care Crisis: Improving Health Care Quality and Lowering Costs by Fixing Our Medical Liability System. The report presents a comprehensive review of how excessive litigation is threatening access to care, threatening patient safety and the quality of health care, raising health care costs for all Americans, adding billions to Federal health expenditures. The report also highlights the proven success of the national medical liability reforms proposed by the President in reducing medical costs and improving health care access and quality.

THE PRESIDENT'S FRAMEWORK FOR IMPROVING THE MEDICAL LIABILITY SYSTEM

In his speech today, the President proposed a framework for urgent Federal action to address the medical liability crisis.

- National adoption of proven minimum standards to make the medical liability system more fair, predictable, and timely. Experience in many states has demonstrated that these standards can reduce Federal government costs by $30 billion per year or more, freeing up needed funds for making health care more affordable. These standards can reduce health care costs for all Americans by $60 billion or more, and improve access to quality health care as well.
  - Secure the ability of injured patients to get quicker, unlimited compensation for their "economic losses," including the loss of ability to provide unpaid services like care for children or parents.
  - Ensure that recoveries for non-economic damages do not exceed a reasonable amount ($250,000).
  - Reserve punitive damages for cases where they are justified, and limit punitive damages to reasonable amounts (i.e., up to the greater of two times economic damages or $250,000).
  - Provide for payments of judgments over time rather than in a single lump sum, to ensure that appropriate payments are there when patients need them.
  - Ensure that old cases cannot be brought years after an event.
  - Ensure that juries are informed if a plaintiff has other sources of reimbursement for an injury.
  - Provide that defendants pay judgments in proportion to their fault.

- Improvements in health care quality and patient safety through litigation reform. Patients deserve high-quality health care without avoidable medical errors and complications, and the Administration is supporting many efforts to achieve this goal, through better information and other steps to improve quality. One proven approach to reducing errors and complications is patient safety and quality improvement programs implemented by doctors and health care organizations working together. By sharing information on quality problems, errors, and near-misses, health professionals can determine ways to avoid errors and complications in the first place. But these efforts are blocked by fear of litigation – good-faith efforts to improve quality and safety result in lawsuits based on the new information about opportunities to improve care that these efforts create.
  - Earlier this year, the President called for legislation to give health professionals the limited liability protections necessary to implement new programs to improve quality and safety.

- Bipartisan legislation is now pending in both the House and the Senate that will provide protection from use in lawsuits of new reports and efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care.
- This protection will make it possible for health professionals to work together more effectively to provide the best possible care for all patients.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE NEW HHS REPORT, CONFRONTING THE NEW HEALTH CARE CRISIS: IMPROVING HEALTH CARE QUALITY AND LOWERING COSTS BY FIXING OUR MEDICAL LIABILITY SYSTEM, RELEASED TODAY BY HHS SECRETARY TOMMY THOMPSON

The HHS report includes a detailed review of recent studies on the consequences of out-of-control medical liability, and new evidence on the magnitude and consequences of the medical liability crisis that is threatening health care in many parts of America.

- The medical liability crisis is threatening access to care in many states.
  - In Las Vegas, Nevada, the only Level 1 Trauma Center had to close temporarily because its surgeons could no longer afford malpractice insurance – and it may have to close again. Overall, 10% or more of Las Vegas doctors may leave their practice as a result of the crisis, and many patients including expectant mothers cannot find a physician.
  - In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, dozens of physicians are ending their practices, depriving patients of long-term, trusted relationships and sometimes leaving them without a physician altogether.
  - In Mississippi, no doctors are available to deliver babies in many communities.
  - As a result, in many of these states, patients must travel to a different state in order to get care.
  - Many doctors cannot volunteer their services for patients who cannot pay, and the proportion of physicians who provide any charity care at all has declined, because doctors cannot afford the required liability coverage.

- The medical liability crisis is threatening patient safety and quality of care.
  - Many preventable errors and complications in the health care system do not result from failures by individual doctors, but from problems in how health professionals work together to provide increasingly complex medical services. For this reason, health care organizations have been able to reduce errors and complications through better information systems and careful studies of how mistakes occur, and how to prevent them. For example, the doctors and hospitals of the Pittsburgh Regional Healthcare Initiative has reduced blood infections in intensive care units by 20 percent through collaborative work to identify safer ways to treat intensive care patients.
  - But these efforts are impeded by litigation fears: good-faith efforts by medical professionals to generate new information and insights to improve care should not be rewarded by lawsuits based on this new information.

- The medical liability crisis is raising health care costs, including adding billions to Federal spending.
  - Doctors alone had to pay over $6 billion in medical liability premiums last year, and premiums this year in many states have increased by more than 20% on average and more than 75% for specialties in some states.
  - In addition, the costs of "defensive" medicine – additional, unnecessary tests and treatments that help avoid frivolous lawsuits but do not improve patient health – add many billions more to American health expenditures.
  - Altogether, medical liability adds $60 to 110 billion to the costs of health care each year – higher health insurance premiums and higher medical costs for all Americans.
  - Excessive medical liability also adds $30 to $60 billion annually to Federal government payments for Medicare, Medicaid, the State Children's Health Insurance Program, Veterans' Administration health care, health care for Federal employees, and other government programs. It also accounts for billions in additional tax deductions for the added costs of liability of employer health insurance coverage.

- The cause of the medical liability crisis is a badly broken system of litigation that serves the interest of specialized trial lawyers, not patients.

- The vast majority of medical liability claims (up to 70%) do not result in any payments to patients. Less than 2% of cases result in trial victories for plaintiffs. But each of these claims costs almost $25,000 on average to defend.
- Within the very small proportion of jury cases that find for the plaintiff, "mega-verdicts" with large awards of noneconomic damages have been increasing in states that do not have reasonable limits on non-economic damages. For example, there have been over 20 verdicts of $9 million or more in Mississippi since 1995, and individual cases in Pennsylvania and Mississippi have reached the $100 million level.
- Yet even patients who are lucky enough to get awards don't get most of the money. Lawyers' fees account for 40% or more of the multimillion-dollar payouts. And less than 30% of all the money that doctors pay in liability insurance fees goes to patients. And patients must wait five years on average for these payouts (longer in cases that go to trial).
- This system rewards personal injury lawyers who adopt a "lottery" strategy: seek out patients and encourage them to file lots of claims, even though the vast majority will have no merit and the patient will get nothing; and then encourage patients to wait it out through years of litigation for a small chance of a big win. If exaggerated awards are possible, even if very unlikely, a personal injury lawyer only needs to win one out of hundreds of cases to make it all worthwhile – from the standpoint of the lawyer. But the vast majority of patients get nothing for their troubles, doctors lose billions in insurance costs and time and may have to leave their practice altogether, and all patients pay higher prices and get worse care as a result.

- The HHS report also shows that there is a proven solution: liability reforms including reasonable limits on non-economic damages ($250,000-350,000) are working in many states to reduce health care costs and improve access and quality of care.
  - Reasonable caps on noneconomic damages result in lower medical liability costs, resulting in much lower medical liability premiums and stable availability of liability insurance, so that access to doctors is not threatened. Liability premium increases last year averaged 12% in states with caps, and 44% in states without. Liability premiums for OB/Gyns in Florida (no cap) are $100,000-$200,000 but in California (reasonable cap) are $46,000-$57,000. Over the past 25 years since California instituted a reasonable cap on noneconomic damages, liability premiums have increased by less than one third as much as in the rest of the country.
  - If applied nationally, studies based on the experience of these states indicate that: over $60 billion per year in health care costs could be redirected from lawsuits and unnecessary care toward paying for valuable drugs and other treatments; over $30 billion in Federal payments could be redirected toward improving Medicare, Medicaid, and other Federal programs for reducing health care costs; and over 2 million more Americans would be able to afford health insurance.
  - Studies also show no adverse effects on patient care associated with these caps. In fact, quality of care improves because of greater access to physicians.

President Proposes ~~Minimum~~ Federal Standards for Medical Liability
New HHS Study Highlights Higher Costs, Lower Quality Care Resulting from Badly Broken Liability System

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- In a speech at ~~the~~ Highpoint University, President Bush proposed major legislative reforms to address the medical liability crisis. To make health care more affordable, more available, and better and safer for patients, the President proposed national ~~minimum standards for~~ medical liability reforms and new protections for good-faith efforts by health professionals to improve health care quality and safety ~~through new Patient Safety Organizations~~. [too long]

- The President was accompanied by HHS Secretary Tommy Thompson, who released a new HHS report on Confronting the New Health Care Crisis: Improving Health Care Quality and Lowering Costs by Fixing Our Medical Liability System. The report presents a comprehensive review of how excessive litigation is threatening access to care, threatening patient safety and the quality of health care, raising health care costs for all Americans, adding billions to Federal health expenditures. The report also highlights the proven success of the national medical liability reforms proposed by the President in reducing medical costs and improving health care access and quality.

In his speech today, the President proposed a framework for urgent Federal action to address the medical liability crisis.

- National adoption of proven ~~minimum~~ standards to make the medical liability system more fair, predictable, and timely. Experience in many states has demonstrated that these standards can reduce Federal government costs by $30 billion per year or more, freeing up needed funds for making health care more affordable. These standards can reduce health care costs for all Americans by $60 billion or more, and improve access to quality health care as well.
  - ~~Secure the ability of injured patients to get quicker, unlimited compensation for their "economic losses," including the loss of ability to provide unpaid services like care for children or parents.~~ [we aren't doing this]
  - Ensure that recoveries for non-economic damages do not exceed a reasonable amount, such as the ~~(~~$250,000 limit supported by a bipartisan group in Congress~~)~~.
  - Reserve punitive damages against doctors and other health care professional for cases where they are justified, and limit punitive damages to reasonable amounts (e.g.~~i.~~e., up to the greater of two times economic damages or $250,000).
  - ~~Provide for payments of judgments over time rather than in a single lump sum, to ensure that appropriate payments are there when patients need them.~~
  - Ensure that old cases cannot be brought against doctors years after an event.
  - Ensure that juries are informed if a plaintiff has other sources of reimbursement for an injury.
  - Provide that doctors and other health care professionals ~~defendants~~ pay judgments in proportion to their fault.

- Improvements in health care quality and patient safety through litigation reform. Patients deserve high-quality health care without avoidable medical errors and complications, and the Administration is supporting many efforts to achieve this goal, through better information and other steps to improve quality. One proven approach to reducing errors and complications is patient safety and quality improvement programs implemented by doctors and health care organizations working together. By sharing information on quality problems, errors, and near-misses, health professionals can determine ways to avoid errors and complications in the first place. But these efforts are blocked by fear of litigation – good-faith efforts to improve quality and safety result in lawsuits based on the new information about opportunities to improve care that these efforts create.

- Earlier this year, the President called for legislation to give health professionals the limited liability protections necessary to implement new programs to improve quality and safety.
- Bipartisan legislation is now pending in both the House and the Senate that will provide protection from use in lawsuits of new reports and efforts of Patient Safety Organizations to improve patient care.
- This protection will make it possible for health professionals to work together more effectively to provide the best possible care for all patients.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE NEW HHS REPORT, CONFRONTING THE NEW HEALTH CARE CRISIS: IMPROVING HEALTH CARE QUALITY AND LOWERING COSTS BY FIXING OUR MEDICAL LIABILITY SYSTEM, RELEASED TODAY BY HHS SECRETARY TOMMY THOMPSON

The HHS report includes a detailed review of recent studies on the consequences of out-of-control medical liability, and new evidence on the magnitude and consequences of the medical liability crisis that is threatening health care in many parts of America.

- The medical liability crisis is threatening access to care in many states.
  - In Las Vegas, Nevada, the only Level 1 Trauma Center had to close temporarily because its surgeons could no longer afford malpractice insurance – and it may have to close again. Overall, 10% or more of Las Vegas doctors may leave their practice as a result of the crisis, and many patients including expectant mothers cannot find a physician.
  - In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, dozens of physicians are ending their practices, depriving patients of long-term, trusted relationships and sometimes leaving them without a physician altogether.
  - In Mississippi, no doctors are available to deliver babies in many communities.
  - As a result, in many of these states, patients must travel to a different state in order to get care.
  - Many doctors cannot volunteer their services for patients who cannot pay, and the proportion of physicians who provide any charity care at all has declined, because doctors cannot afford the required liability coverage.

- The medical liability crisis is threatening patient safety and quality of care.
  - Many preventable errors and complications in the health care system do not result from failures by individual doctors, but from problems in how health professionals work together to provide increasingly complex medical services. For this reason, health care organizations have been able to reduce errors and complications through better information systems and careful studies of how mistakes occur, and how to prevent them. For example, the doctors and hospitals of the Pittsburgh Regional Healthcare Initiative has reduced blood infections in intensive care units by 20 percent through collaborative work to identify safer ways to treat intensive care patients.
  - But these efforts are impeded by litigation fears: good-faith efforts by medical professionals to generate new information and insights to improve care should not be rewarded by lawsuits based on this new information.

- The medical liability crisis is raising health care costs, including adding billions to Federal spending.
  - Doctors alone had to pay over $6 billion in medical liability premiums last year, and premiums this year in many states have increased by more than 20% on average and more than 75% for specialties in some states.
  - In addition, the costs of "defensive" medicine – additional, unnecessary tests and treatments that help avoid frivolous lawsuits but do not improve patient health – add many billions more to American health expenditures.
  - Altogether, medical liability adds $60 to 110 billion to the costs of health care each year – higher health insurance premiums and higher medical costs for all Americans.
  - Excessive medical liability also adds $30 to $60 billion annually to Federal government payments for Medicare, Medicaid, the State Children's Health Insurance Program, Veterans' Administration health care, health care for Federal employees, and other government programs. It also accounts for billions in additional tax deductions for the added costs of liability of employer health insurance coverage.

- The cause of the medical liability crisis is a badly broken system of litigation that serves the interest of specialized trial lawyers, not patients.
  - The vast majority of medical liability claims (up to 70%) do not result in any payments to patients. Less than 2% of cases result in trial victories for plaintiffs. But each of these claims costs almost $25,000 on average to defend.
  - Within the very small proportion of jury cases that find for the plaintiff, "mega-verdicts" with large awards of noneconomic damages have been increasing in states that do not have reasonable limits on non-economic damages. For example, there have been over 20 verdicts of $9 million or more in Mississippi since 1995, and individual cases in Pennsylvania and Mississippi have reached the $100 million level.
  - Yet even patients who are lucky enough to get awards don't get most of the money. Lawyers' fees account for 40% or more of the multimillion-dollar payouts. [always??[And less than 30% of all the money that doctors pay in liability insurance fees goes to patients. And patients must wait five years on average for these payouts (longer in cases that go to trial).
  - This system rewards personal injury lawyers who adopt a "lottery" strategy: seek out patients and encourage them to file lots of claims, even though the vast majority will have no merit and the patient will get nothing; and then encourage patients to wait it out through years of litigation for a small chance of a big win. If exaggerated awards are possible, even if very unlikely, a personal injury lawyer only needs to win one out of hundreds of cases to make it all worthwhile – from the standpoint of the lawyer. But the vast majority of patients get nothing for their troubles, doctors lose billions in insurance costs and time and may have to leave their practice altogether, and all patients pay higher prices and get worse care as a result.

- The HHS report also shows that there is a proven solution: liability reforms including reasonable limits on non-economic damages ($250,000-350,000) are working in many states to reduce health care costs and improve access and quality of care.
  - Reasonable caps on noneconomic damages result in lower medical liability costs, resulting in much lower medical liability premiums and stable availability of liability insurance, so that access to doctors is not threatened. Liability premium increases last year averaged 12% in states with caps, and 44% in states without. Liability premiums for OB/Gyns in Florida (no cap) are $100,000-$200,000 but in California (reasonable cap) are $46,000-$57,000. Over the past 25 years since California instituted a reasonable cap on noneconomic damages, liability premiums have increased by less than one third as much as in the rest of the country.
  - If applied nationally, studies based on the experience of these states indicate that: over $60 billion per year in health care costs could be redirected from lawsuits and unnecessary care toward paying for valuable drugs and other treatments; over $30 billion in Federal payments could be redirected toward improving Medicare, Medicaid, and other Federal programs for reducing health care costs; and over 2 million more Americans would be able to afford health insurance.
  - Studies also show no adverse effects on patient care associated with these caps. In fact, quality of care improves because of greater access to physicians.

Subject: Update on Bush #41 Exhibit Items

FYI:

The Fathers/Sons Exhibit at the Bush Library will be dismantled next week. I have confirmed with the Library that our items on loan will be returned as follows:

The Bush Family Bible, the Sept. 11 and Sept. 20 speeches, and the President's cufflinks will return to DC with Patricia Burchfield. She is the curator for the Library and will be in DC on Archives business the first week of September. Patricia will hand carry these items when she travels here.

All remaining items loaned to the Library will return to DC on the Archives' exclusive use, satellite truck, which will arrive in DC September 13 or 14. The Bullhorn, which the Smithsonian would like to borrow for its exhibit, will be on this truck.

The Smithsonian wants the Bullhorn around the middle of August, so this plan should work out fine. Let me know if you have any questions. Thanks.

Draft 7/26/02

TESTIMONY OF KENNETH W. DAM
DEPUTY SECRETARY
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE
REGARDING THE WTO DECISION ON THE EXTRATERRITORIAL INCOME EXCLUSION PROVISIONS AND INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVENESS

Introduction

Mr. Chairman, Senator Grassley, and distinguished Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision with respect to the extraterritorial income exclusion (ETI) provisions of U.S. tax law and the implications for international competitiveness. I commend the Committee for holding this hearing on this matter of vital importance to U.S. businesses that operate in the global marketplace and to the U.S. workers that are employed in those businesses.

On January 29, 2002, the WTO Dispute Settlement Body adopted a final report finding that the ETI provisions are inconsistent with the United States' obligations under the WTO. That decision is the culmination of a challenge brought by the European Union in late 1997 against the foreign sales corporation (FSC) provisions then contained in the U.S. tax law. However, the origins of this dispute go back almost 30 years, predating the World Trade Organization itself. The United States has vigorously pursued this matter and defended its laws because of the importance of the provisions and principles at stake.

A WTO arbitration panel currently is considering the European Union's request for authority from the WTO to impose trade sanctions on $4.043 billion worth of U.S. exports. The arbitration panel is expected to issue its report on the appropriate level of trade sanctions imminently. Following adoption of that report, the European Union will be authorized to begin imposing trade sanctions on U.S. exports up to the level set by the arbitrators and the authority for such sanctions will continue until the United States rectifies the WTO violation.

This is an urgent matter that requires our immediate attention. The threat of substantial retaliatory sanctions against U.S. exports is not something that any of us takes lightly. Such sanctions, if imposed, would do real damage to U.S. businesses and American workers. And the imposition of such sanctions would have serious adverse consequences for the overall trade relationship between the United States and the European Union beyond those sectors directly targeted with sanctions, which would have a direct and detrimental effect on U.S. consumers. Of course the urgency is not just about the critical need to avert costly retaliation. The WTO has issued its final decision in this case, and we must comply with that decision. That is a matter of principle.

The President has spoken on this and his message was clear. The United States will honor its WTO obligations and will come into compliance with the recent WTO decision. To do so will require legislation to change our tax law. The Administration is committed to working closely with the Congress to develop and enact the legislation necessary to bring the United States into compliance with WTO rules.

Given the analysis of the current WTO rules reflected in the decision in the FSC/ETI case, we do not believe legislation that simply replicates FSC or ETI benefits will pass muster in the WTO. It will not be possible to satisfy our WTO obligations and comply with WTO rules through minor "tweaks" to the ETI provisions. The WTO Appellate Body has made clear that a benefit such as is provided through the ETI provisions that is tied to export activity is not permitted. Therefore, it will not be fruitful to pursue another similar replacement of the ETI provisions. Rather, addressing the WTO decision through the tax law will require real and meaningful changes to our current international tax laws. And we must ensure that those changes do not adversely affect the competitive position of U.S.-based businesses in the global marketplace

In stating his commitment to compliance in this case, the President also has made clear that, in making the necessary changes to our tax laws, we must focus on enhancing the competitiveness of U.S. businesses that operate in the global marketplace because that is the key to protecting American jobs. At its core, this case raises fundamental questions regarding a level global playing field with respect to tax policy. The ETI provisions, like the FSC provisions that preceded them, represent an integral part of our larger system of international tax rules. These provisions were designed to help level the global playing field for U.S.-based businesses that are subject to those international tax rules. In making the modifications to our tax law needed to comply with this decision, we must not lose sight of that objective which is about American jobs.

There is much that we can, and must do to rationalize our international tax rules through reforms both small and large. The U.S. international tax rules can operate to impose a burden on U.S.-based companies with foreign operations that is disproportionate to the tax burden imposed by our trading partners on the foreign operations of their companies. The U.S. rules for the taxation of foreign-source income are unique in their breadth of reach and degree of complexity. Both the recent activity involving so-called corporate inversion transactions and the increase in foreign acquisitions of U.S. multinationals are evidence that the competitive disadvantage caused by our international tax rules is a serious issue with significant consequences for U.S. businesses and the U.S. economy. We must address these tax disadvantages in order to level the playing field for U.S.-based companies that do business abroad relative to their counterparts in our major trading partners. As we consider appropriate reform of our system of international tax rules, we should not underestimate the benefits to be gained from reducing the complexity of the current rules. The bottom line is clear and simple: our system of international tax rules should not disadvantage U.S.-based companies competing in the global marketplace. If we allow that to happen, the cost will be measured in lost jobs here at home.

While we work toward the needed changes to our international tax rules, we also must continue to maintain a dialogue with the European Union. Given the importance of this matter, we must pursue a multi-faceted approach to resolving it, including both tax and trade approaches. It is essential that we achieve a resolution of this matter that is clear, fair and final. We must take every step needed to ensure that this does not further escalate to the detriment of the global trading environment, and must pursue all available avenues to achieving an appropriate final resolution – a resolution that protects America's interests and satisfies our obligations under the WTO.

As I said in opening, resolving this case is an urgent matter that requires our immediate attention. We must work toward enactment of legislation that will bring us into compliance with the international WTO rules and protect the interests of American workers and businesses. On this there can be no delay – we must make real progress now.

However, this case highlights significant issues that will require further consideration as the discussions regarding WTO matters continue in the new round. As I said in my opening statement in the WTO appellate proceeding in this case in Geneva last November, "few things are as central to a country's sovereignty as how it raises revenue." The WTO Appellate Body in its report in the FSC case stated that that the WTO rules do not "compel Members to choose a particular kind of tax system." That is a critically important point.

Compliance with the WTO decision in this case will require that we make meaningful changes to our tax law. We believe that we have an obligation to U.S. workers and businesses not simply to eliminate the ETI provisions. Our commitment to the American worker requires that we protect the competitive position of our businesses. We believe that we must couple the changes needed to address the WTO decision with needed reforms of our tax rules that will help level the playing field for U.S.-based businesses that compete in the global marketplace. The reforms that are needed address basic inequities in our international tax rules, rules that are out of step with those of our major trading partners. Such reform to the U.S. system for taxing income earned abroad is not a matter in which there is any role for the WTO to play.

This case has been about the application of WTO rules to a particular aspect of the U.S. income tax system. However, there is a much more fundamental question regarding the treatment of taxes under the WTO rules that demands our careful consideration. The WTO rules on prohibited export subsidies make a distinction between direct taxes, such as income taxes, and indirect taxes, such as value added taxes. Under the WTO agreements, direct taxes are not permitted to be border adjustable. Therefore, the U.S. income tax is not rebatable on export under these rules. In contrast, indirect taxes are permitted to be border adjustable under the WTO rules. Accordingly, the European value added taxes may be, and are, rebated at the border consistent with WTO rules.

This disparity in treatment between direct and indirect taxes dates back formally to a 1960 GATT working party and its informal origins date back even farther.

Notwithstanding this long history, there is no economic rationale for disparate treatment of direct and indirect taxes. The perceived difference in incidence between taxes borne by the producer and taxes borne by the consumer does not have any real relevance to whether the tax should be border adjustable. However, this disparity in treatment is imbedded in WTO rules. And it is a disparity that disproportionately burdens the United States, given that we rely almost exclusively on income taxes while our European trading partners make much greater use of consumption taxes. Reconsideration of this distinction in the treatment of direct and indirect taxes under the WTO rules will be appropriate as we continue the ongoing discussion of WTO matters in the new round.

I would like to turn now to a brief history of the WTO case and our tax provisions that have been the subject of this protracted litigation. I will conclude with a discussion of the international competitiveness issues that must be a central focus in formulating the tax law changes needed to satisfy our WTO obligations and protect the interests of U.S. businesses and workers.

Overview of the History of the WTO Case

The FSC provisions were enacted in 1984. They provided an exemption from U.S. tax for a portion of the income earned from export transactions. This partial exemption from tax was intended to provide U.S. exporters with tax treatment that was more comparable to the treatment provided to exporters under the tax systems common in other countries.

The FSC provisions were enacted to resolve a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) dispute involving a prior U.S. tax regime – the domestic international sales corporation (DISC) provisions enacted in 1971. Following a challenge to the DISC provisions brought by the European Union and a counter-challenge to several European tax regimes brought by the United States, a GATT panel in 1976 ruled against all the contested tax measures. This decision led to a stalemate that was resolved with a GATT Council Understanding adopted in 1981 (the "1981 Understanding"). Pursuant to this 1981 Understanding regarding the treatment of tax measures under the trade agreements, the United States repealed the DISC provisions and enacted the FSC provisions.

The European Union formally challenged the FSC provisions in the WTO in November 1997, thirteen years after their enactment. Consultations to resolve the matter were unsuccessful, and the EU challenge was referred to a WTO dispute resolution panel. In October 1999, the WTO panel issued a report finding that the FSC provisions constituted a violation of WTO rules. The United States appealed the panel report; the European Union also appealed the report. In February 2000, the WTO Appellate Body issued its report substantially upholding the findings of the panel.

Although the United States believed that the FSC provisions were blessed by the 1981 Understanding, the WTO panel completely dismissed this argument, concluding that the 1981 Understanding had no continuing relevance in the interpretation of current WTO rules. The panel's analysis focused mainly on the application of the WTO Agreement on

Subsidies and Countervailing Measures. The panel found that the FSC provisions constituted a prohibited export subsidy under the Subsidies Agreement.

In response to the WTO decision against the FSC provisions, the FSC Repeal and Extraterritorial Income Exclusion Act was enacted on November 15, 2000. The legislation repealed the FSC provisions and adopted in their place the ETI provisions. The legislation was intended to bring the United States into compliance with WTO rules by addressing the analysis reflected in the WTO decision. The new regime addressed the subsidy issue by establishing a new general rule of taxation under which extraterritorial income is excluded from gross income; the new regime addressed the export-contingency issue by applying to income from all foreign sales and leases of property, without regard to where the property is manufactured. At the same time, the legislation also was intended to ensure that U.S. businesses not be foreclosed from opportunities abroad because of differences in the U.S. tax laws as compared to the laws of other countries.

Immediately following the enactment of the ETI Act, the European Union brought a challenge in the WTO. In August 2001, a WTO panel issued a report finding that the ETI provisions also violate WTO rules. The panel report contained sweeping language and conclusory statements that had broad implications beyond the case at hand. Because of the importance of the issues involved and the troubling implications of the panel's analysis, the United States appealed the panel report. The WTO Appellate Body generally affirmed the panel's findings, although it modified and narrowed the panel's analysis in some respects. The Dispute Settlement Body adopted the report as modified by the Appellate Body on January 29, 2002.

The Appellate Body report makes four main findings with respect to the ETI provisions: (1) the ETI provisions constitute a prohibited export subsidy under the WTO Subsidies Agreement; (2) the ETI provisions constitute a prohibited export subsidy under the WTO Agriculture Agreement; (3) the limitation on foreign content contained in the ETI provisions violate the national treatment provisions of Article III:4 of GATT; and (4) the transition rules contained in the ETI Act violate the WTO's prior recommendation that the FSC subsidy be withdrawn with effect from November 1, 2000.

When it challenged the ETI Act in November 2000, the European Union simultaneously requested authority from the WTO to impose trade sanctions on $4.043 billion worth of U.S. exports. The United States responded by initiating a WTO arbitration proceeding on the grounds that the amount of trade sanctions requested by the European Union was excessive under WTO standards. This arbitration was suspended pending the outcome of the European Union's challenge to the WTO-consistency of the ETI Act, and resumed on January 29th with the Dispute Settlement Body's adoption of its final report. As I noted at the outset, the arbitration panel is expected to issue its report on the appropriate level of trade sanctions imminently and, following adoption of that report, the European Union will be authorized to begin imposing trade sanctions on U.S. exports up to the level set by the arbitrators.

Competitiveness and U.S. Tax Policy

The U.S. international tax rules have developed in a patchwork fashion, beginning during the 1950s and 1960s. It reflects tax policy principles developed during a time when America's foreign direct investment was preeminent abroad, and competition from imports to the United States was scant. Today, we have a truly global economy, in terms of both trade and investment. The value of goods traded to and from the United States increased more than three times faster than GDP between 1960 and 2000, rising to more than 20 percent of GDP. The flow of cross-border investment, both inflows and outflows, rose from a scant 1.1 percent of GDP in 1960 to 15.9 percent of GDP in 2000.

Multinational corporations are a vital part of the United States economy. They employ over 20 million people in the United States, or about one in every six American workers. Approximately one fourth of U.S. Gross National Product is produced by U.S. non-bank multinationals. Multinationals in the manufacturing sector produce over half of all U.S. gross manufactured product.

U.S. multinationals also contribute substantially to international trade. Their merchandise exports account for about two-thirds of overall U.S. merchandise exports. Their merchandise imports account for about 40 percent of all U.S. merchandise imports. On balance, the operations of these companies showed a net trade surplus of $64 billion in 1999.

Multinational companies compete abroad in order to increase their shares of foreign markets. Much of their foreign activities are aimed at providing services that can not be exported, obtaining access to natural resources abroad, and to selling goods that are costly to export due to transportation costs, tariffs, and local content requirements. About one third of the gross product of foreign affiliates of U.S. multinationals is produced by affiliates the service sector, including distribution, marketing, and servicing U.S. exports.

Among the most important assets of U.S. multinationals is their technical and scientific expertise. Their foreign investments broaden the opportunities to benefit from such expertise and thus encourage them to spend more on research and development. Spending on research and development allows the United States to maintain its competitive advantage in business and be unrivaled as the world leader in scientific and technological know-how. In 1999, non-financial U.S. multinationals performed $142 billion of research and development. Nearly 90 percent of this activity was located in the United States. It accounted for more than two thirds of all research and development conducted by companies in the United States.

At one time, the strength of America's economy was thought to be tied to its abundant natural resources. Today, America's strength is its ability to innovate: to create new technologies and to react faster and smarter to the commercialization of these technologies. America's preeminent resource today is its knowledge base.

A feature of a knowledge-driven economy is that unlike physical capital, technological know-how can be applied across the world without reducing the productive capacity of the United States. For example, computer software designed to enhance the efficiency of a manufacturing process may require substantial investment, but once developed it can be employed around the world without diminishing the benefits of the know-how within the United States. Foreign direct investment by companies in a knowledge-driven economy provides opportunities to export this know-how at low cost and incentives to undertake greater domestic investment in developing these sources of competitive advantage.

There are many reasons to believe that the principles that guided U.S. international tax policy adequately in the past should be reconsidered in today's highly competitive, knowledge-driven economy. In this regard, it is significant that the U.S. tax system differs in fundamental ways from those of our major trading partners. In order to ensure the ability of U.S. workers to achieve higher living standards, we must ensure that the U.S. tax law does not hinder the ability of the U.S. businesses that employ those workers to compete on a global scale. If U.S. businesses are to succeed in the global economy, the U.S. tax system must not generate a bias against their ability to compete effectively against foreign-based companies – especially in foreign markets.

To understand the effect of U.S. tax policy on the competitiveness of U.S. business, we must consider how U.S. businesses compete in today's global marketplace. A U.S. business operating at home and abroad must compete in several ways for capital and customers. Competition may be among:

- U.S.-managed firms that produce within the United States;
- U.S.-managed firms that produce abroad;
- Foreign-managed firms that produce within the United States;
- Foreign-managed firms that produce abroad within the foreign country in which they are headquartered; and
- Foreign-managed firms that produce abroad within a foreign country different from the one in which they are headquartered.

These entities may be simultaneously competing for sales within the United States, within a foreign country against local foreign production (either U.S., local, or other foreign managed), or within a foreign country against non-local production. Globalization requires that U.S. companies be competitive both in foreign markets and at home.

Other elements of competition among firms exist at the investor level: U.S.-managed firms may have foreign investors and foreign-managed firms may have U.S. investors. Portfolio investment accounts for approximately two-thirds of U.S. investment abroad and a similar fraction of foreign investment in the United States. Firms compete in global capital markets as well as global consumer markets.

In a world without taxes, competition among these different firms and different markets would be determined by production costs. In a world with taxes, however, where countries make different determinations with respect to tax rates and tax bases, these competitive decisions inevitably are affected by taxes. Assuming other countries make sovereign decisions on how to establish their own tax systems and tax rates, it simply is not possible for the United States to establish a tax system that restores the same competitive decisions that would have existed in a world without taxes.

The United States can, for example, attempt to equalize the taxation of income earned by U.S. companies from their U.S. exports to that of U.S. companies producing abroad for the same foreign market. However, in equalizing this tax burden, it may be the case that the U.S. tax imposed results in neither type of U.S. company being competitive against a foreign-based multinational producing for sale in this foreign market.

The manner in which balance is achieved among these competitive concerns changes over time as circumstances change. For example, as foreign multinationals have increased in their worldwide position, the likelihood of a U.S. multinational company competing against a foreign multinational in a foreign market has increased relative to the likelihood of U.S. export sales competing against sales from a U.S. multinational producing abroad. The desire to restore competitive decisions to those that would occur in the absence of taxation therefore may place greater weight today on U.S. taxes not impeding the competitive position of U.S. multinationals vis-à-vis foreign multinationals in the global marketplace. Similarly, while at one time U.S. foreign production may have been thought to be largely substitutable with U.S. domestic production for export, today it is understood that foreign production may provide the opportunity for the export of firm-specific know-how and domestic exports may be enhanced by the establishment of foreign production facilities through supply linkages and service arrangements.

Given the significance today of competitiveness concerns, it is important to understand the major features of the U.S. tax system and how they differ from those of our major trading partners. The primary features of the U.S. tax system considered here are: (i) the taxation of worldwide income; (ii) the current taxation of certain types of active foreign-source income; (iii) the limitations placed on the use of foreign tax credits; and (iv) the unintegrated taxation of corporate income at both the entity level and the individual level.

U.S. Worldwide Tax System

The United States, like about half of the OECD countries, including the United Kingdom and Japan, operates a worldwide system of income taxation. Under this worldwide approach, U.S. citizens and residents, including U.S. corporations, are taxed on all their income, regardless of where it is earned. Income earned from foreign sources potentially is subject to taxation both by the country where the income is earned, the country of source, and by the United States, the country of residence. To provide relief from this potential double taxation, the United States allows taxpayers a foreign tax credit that reduces the U.S. tax on foreign-source income by the amount of foreign income and withholding taxes paid on such income.

The U.S. worldwide system of taxation is in contrast to the territorial tax systems operated by the other half of the OECD countries, including Canada, Germany, France, and the Netherlands. Under these territorial tax systems, domestic residents and corporations generally are subject to tax only on their income from domestic sources. A domestic business is not subject to domestic taxation on the active income earned abroad by a foreign branch or on dividends paid from active income earned by a foreign subsidiary. A domestic corporation generally is subject to tax on other investment-type income, such as royalties, rent, interest, and portfolio dividends, without regard to where such income is earned; because this passive income is taxed on a worldwide basis, relief from double taxation generally is provided through either a foreign tax credit or a deduction allowed for foreign taxes imposed on such income. This type of territorial tax system sometimes is referred to as a "dividend exemption" system because active foreign business income repatriated in the form of a dividend is exempt from taxation. By contrast, a pure territorial system would provide an exemption for all income received from foreign sources, including passive income such as royalties, rent, interest, and portfolio dividends. Such pure territorial systems have existed only in a few developing countries.

Differences between a worldwide tax system and a territorial system can affect the ability of U.S.-based multinationals to compete for sales in foreign markets against foreign-based multinationals. Under a worldwide tax system, repatriated foreign income is taxed at the higher of the source country rate or the residence country rate. In contrast, foreign income under a territorial tax system is subject to tax at the source country rate.

Moreover, it is important to note that both worldwide and territorial systems involve the taxation of income. The complexities present in taxing income generally are heightened in determining the taxation of income from multinational activities, where in addition to measuring the income one must determine its source (foreign or domestic). This complexity affects both tax administrators and taxpayers. Indeed, the U.S. international tax rules have been identified as one of the largest sources of complexity facing U.S. corporate taxpayers.

Given the complexity of the task of taxing multinational income under a worldwide or territorial system on top of the general complexity of the income tax system, some consideration might be given to alternative tax bases other than income. Other OECD countries typically rely on taxes on goods and services, such as under a value added tax, for a substantial share of tax revenues. In the European OECD countries, for example, these taxes raise nearly five times the amount of revenue as does the U.S. corporate income tax as a share of GDP.

Other Worldwide Tax Systems

As described above, about half of the OECD countries employ a worldwide tax system as does the United States. However, the details of our system are such that U.S. multinationals may be disadvantaged when competing abroad against multinational companies established in other countries using a worldwide tax system. This is because the United States employs a worldwide tax system that, unlike other worldwide systems, may tax active forms of business income earned abroad before it has been repatriated and may more strictly limit the use of the foreign tax credits that prevent double taxation of income earned abroad.

Limitations on Deferral

Under the U.S. international tax rules, income earned abroad by a foreign subsidiary generally is subject to U.S. tax at the U.S. parent corporation level only when such income is distributed by the foreign subsidiary to the U.S. parent in the form of a dividend. An exception to this general rule is provided with the rules of subpart F of the Code, under which a U.S. parent is subject to current U.S. tax on certain income of its foreign subsidiaries, without regard to whether that income is actually distributed to the U.S. parent. The focus of the subpart F rules is on passive, investment-type income that is earned abroad through a foreign subsidiary. However, the reach of the subpart F rules extends well beyond passive income to encompass some forms of income from active foreign business operations. No other country has rules for the immediate taxation of foreign-source income that are comparable to the U.S. rules in terms of breadth and complexity.

Several categories of active business income are covered by the subpart F rules. Under subpart F, a U.S. parent company is subject to current U.S. tax on income earned by a foreign subsidiary from certain sales transactions. Accordingly, a U.S. company that uses a centralized foreign distribution company to handle sales of its products in foreign markets is subject to current U.S. tax on the income earned abroad by that foreign distribution subsidiary. In contrast, a local competitor making sales in that market is subject only to the tax imposed by that country. Moreover, a foreign competitor that similarly uses a centralized distribution company to make sales into the same markets also generally will be subject only to the tax imposed by the local country. While this subpart F rule may operate in part as a "backstop" to the transfer pricing rules that require arms' length prices for intercompany sales, this rule has the effect of imposing current U.S. tax on income from active marketing operations abroad. U.S. companies that centralize their foreign distribution facilities therefore face a tax penalty not imposed on their foreign competitors.

The subpart F rules also impose current U.S. taxation on income from certain services transactions performed abroad. In addition, a U.S. company with a foreign subsidiary engaged in shipping activities or in certain oil-related activities, such as transportation of oil from the source to the consumer, will be subject to current U.S. tax on the income earned abroad from such activities. In contrast, a foreign competitor engaged in the same activities generally will not be subject to current home-country tax on its income from these activities. While the purpose of these rules is to differentiate passive or mobile income from active business income, they operate to subject to current tax some classes of income arising from active business operations structured and located in a particular country for business reasons wholly unrelated to tax considerations.

Limitations on Foreign Tax Credits

Under the worldwide system of taxation, income earned abroad potentially is subject to tax in two countries – the taxpayer's country of residence and the country where the income was earned. Relief from this potential double taxation is provided through the mechanism of a foreign tax credit, under which the tax that otherwise would be imposed by the country of residence may be offset by tax imposed by the source country. The United States allows U.S. taxpayers a foreign tax credit for taxes paid on income earned outside the United States.

The foreign tax credit may be used only to offset U.S. tax on foreign-source income and not to offset U.S. tax on U.S.-source income. The rules for determining and applying this limitation are detailed and complex and can have the effect of subjecting U.S.-based companies to double taxation on their income earned abroad. The current U.S. foreign tax credit regime also requires that the rules be applied separately to separate categories or "baskets" of income. Foreign taxes paid with respect to income in a particular category may be used only to offset the U.S. tax on income from that same category. Computations of foreign and domestic source income, allocable expenses, and foreign taxes paid must be made separately for each of these separate foreign tax credit baskets, further adding to the complexity of the system. Moreover, the U.S. foreign tax credit regime requires the allocation of U.S. interest expense against foreign-source income in a manner that reduces the foreign tax credit limitation by understating foreign income.

These rules can have the effect of denying U.S.-based companies the full ability to credit foreign taxes paid on income earned abroad against the U.S. tax liability with respect to that income and therefore can result in the imposition of the double taxation that the foreign tax credit rules are intended to eliminate.

U.S. Corporate Taxation

While concern about the effects of the U.S. tax system on international competitiveness may focus on the tax treatment of foreign-source income, competitiveness issues arise in very much the same way in terms of the general manner in which corporate income is subject to tax in the United States.

One aspect of the U.S. tax system is that the income from an equity-financed investment in the corporate sector is taxed twice. Equity income, or profit, is taxed first under the corporate income tax. Profit is taxed again under the individual income tax when received by the shareholder as a dividend or as a capital gain on the appreciation of corporate shares. In contrast, most other OECD countries offer some form of integration, under which corporate tax payments are either partially or fully taken into consideration when assessing shareholder taxes on this income, eliminating or reducing the double tax on corporate profits.

The non-integration of corporate and individual tax payments on corporate income applies equally to domestically earned income or foreign-source income of a U.S.

company. This double tax increases the "hurdle" rate, or the minimum rate of return required on a prospective investment. In order to yield a given after-tax return to an individual investor, the pre-tax return must be sufficiently high to offset both the corporate level and individual level taxes paid on this return.

Whether competing at home against foreign imports or competing abroad through exports from the United States or through foreign production, the double tax makes it less likely that the U.S. company can compete successfully against a foreign competitor.

As noted above, most OECD countries offer some form of tax relief for corporate profits. This integration typically is provided by reducing personal income tax payments on corporate distributions rather than by reducing corporate level tax payments. International comparisons of corporate tax burdens, however, sometimes fail to account for differences in integration across countries and consider only corporate level tax payments. To be meaningful, comparisons between the total tax burden faced on corporate investments by U.S. companies and those of foreign multinational companies must take into account the total tax burden on corporate profits at both the corporate and individual levels.

Closing Thoughts

U.S. businesses that compete in the global marketplace are an integral part of the U.S. economy, and their global activities are part of their domestic success. Accordingly, we must ensure that U.S. tax rules do not adversely impact the ability of U.S. businesses to compete successfully around the world. Relative to the tax systems of our major trading partners, the U.S. tax rules can impose significantly heavier burdens on the foreign operations of domestically based companies. As we make the changes to our tax law that are needed to comply with WTO rules, we must keep our focus on the objectives served by the FSC and ETI provisions and look to removing biases against the ability of U.S. businesses to compete globally. Such reforms will allow the United States to retain its world economic leadership. Such reforms will protect American jobs.

The Administration is committed to working with Congress to satisfy the twin objectives of meeting our WTO obligations and ensuring that we protect the competitive position of American businesses and workers.

Draft 7/26/02

TESTIMONY OF KENNETH W. DAM
DEPUTY SECRETARY
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE
REGARDING THE WTO DECISION ON THE EXTRATERRITORIAL INCOME EXCLUSION PROVISIONS AND INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVENESS

Introduction

Mr. Chairman, Senator Grassley, and distinguished Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today at this hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision with respect to the extraterritorial income exclusion (ETI) provisions of U.S. tax law and the implications for international competitiveness. I commend the Committee for holding this hearing on this matter of vital importance to U.S. businesses that operate in the global marketplace and to the U.S. workers that are employed in those businesses.

On January 29, 2002, the WTO Dispute Settlement Body adopted a final report finding that the ETI provisions are inconsistent with the United States' obligations under the WTO. That decision is the culmination of a challenge brought by the European Union in late 1997 against the foreign sales corporation (FSC) provisions then contained in the U.S. tax law. However, the origins of this dispute go back almost 30 years, predating the World Trade Organization itself. The United States has vigorously pursued this matter and defended its laws because of the importance of the provisions and principles at stake.

A WTO arbitration panel currently is considering the European Union's request for authority from the WTO to impose trade sanctions on $4.043 billion worth of U.S. exports. The arbitration panel is expected to issue its report on the appropriate level of trade sanctions imminently. Following adoption of that report, the European Union will be authorized to begin imposing trade sanctions on U.S. exports up to the level set by the arbitrators and the authority for such sanctions will continue until the United States rectifies the WTO violation.

This is an urgent matter that requires our immediate attention. The threat of substantial retaliatory sanctions against U.S. exports is not something that any of us takes lightly. Such sanctions, if imposed, would do real damage to U.S. businesses and American workers. And the imposition of such sanctions would have serious adverse consequences for the overall trade relationship between the United States and the European Union beyond those sectors directly targeted with sanctions, which would have a direct and detrimental effect on U.S. consumers. Of course the urgency is not just about the critical need to avert costly retaliation. The WTO has issued its final decision in this case, and we must comply with that decision. That is a matter of principle.

The President has spoken on this and his message was clear. The United States will honor its WTO obligations and will come into compliance with the recent WTO decision. To do so will require legislation to change our tax law. The Administration is committed to working closely with the Congress to develop and enact the legislation necessary to bring the United States into compliance with WTO rules.

Given the analysis of the current WTO rules reflected in the decision in the FSC/ETI case, we do not believe legislation that simply replicates FSC or ETI benefits will pass muster in the WTO. It will not be possible to satisfy our WTO obligations and comply with WTO rules through minor "tweaks" to the ETI provisions. The WTO Appellate Body has made clear that a benefit such as is provided through the ETI provisions that is tied to export activity is not permitted. Therefore, it will not be fruitful to pursue another similar replacement of the ETI provisions. Rather, addressing the WTO decision through the tax law will require real and meaningful changes to our current international tax laws. And we must ensure that those changes do not adversely affect the competitive position of U.S.-based businesses in the global marketplace

In stating his commitment to compliance in this case, the President also has made clear that, in making the necessary changes to our tax laws, we must focus on enhancing the competitiveness of U.S. businesses that operate in the global marketplace because that is the key to protecting American jobs. At its core, this case raises fundamental questions regarding a level global playing field with respect to tax policy. The ETI provisions, like the FSC provisions that preceded them, represent an integral part of our larger system of international tax rules. These provisions were designed to help level the global playing field for U.S.-based businesses that are subject to those international tax rules. In making the modifications to our tax law needed to comply with this decision, we must not lose sight of that objective which is about American jobs.

There is much that we can, and must do to rationalize our international tax rules through reforms both small and large. The U.S. international tax rules can operate to impose a burden on U.S.-based companies with foreign operations that is disproportionate to the tax burden imposed by our trading partners on the foreign operations of their companies. The U.S. rules for the taxation of foreign-source income are unique in their breadth of reach and degree of complexity. Both the recent activity involving so-called corporate inversion transactions and the increase in foreign acquisitions of U.S. multinationals are evidence that the competitive disadvantage caused by our international tax rules is a serious issue with significant consequences for U.S. businesses and the U.S. economy. We must address these tax disadvantages in order to level the playing field for U.S.-based companies that do business abroad relative to their counterparts in our major trading partners. As we consider appropriate reform of our system of international tax rules, we should not underestimate the benefits to be gained from reducing the complexity of the current rules. The bottom line is clear and simple: our system of international tax rules should not disadvantage U.S.-based companies competing in the global marketplace. If we allow that to happen, the cost will be measured in lost jobs here at home.

While we work toward the needed changes to our international tax rules, we also must continue to maintain a dialogue with the European Union. Given the importance of this matter, we must pursue a multi-faceted approach to resolving it, including both tax and trade approaches. It is essential that we achieve a resolution of this matter that is clear, fair and final. We must take every step needed to ensure that this does not further escalate to the detriment of the global trading environment, and must pursue all available avenues to achieving an appropriate final resolution – a resolution that protects America's interests and satisfies our obligations under the WTO.

As I said in opening, resolving this case is an urgent matter that requires our immediate attention. We must work toward enactment of legislation that will bring us into compliance with the international WTO rules and protect the interests of American workers and businesses. On this there can be no delay – we must make real progress now.

However, this case highlights significant issues that will require further consideration as the discussions regarding WTO matters continue in the new round. As I said in my opening statement in the WTO appellate proceeding in this case in Geneva last November, "few things are as central to a country's sovereignty as how it raises revenue." The WTO Appellate Body in its report in the FSC case stated that that the WTO rules do not "compel Members to choose a particular kind of tax system." That is a critically important point.

Compliance with the WTO decision in this case will require that we make meaningful changes to our tax law. We believe that we have an obligation to U.S. workers and businesses not simply to eliminate the ETI provisions. Our commitment to the American worker requires that we protect the competitive position of our businesses. We believe that we must couple the changes needed to address the WTO decision with needed reforms of our tax rules that will help level the playing field for U.S.-based businesses that compete in the global marketplace. The reforms that are needed address basic inequities in our international tax rules, rules that are out of step with those of our major trading partners. Such reform to the U.S. system for taxing income earned abroad is not a matter in which there is any role for the WTO to play.

This case has been about the application of WTO rules to a particular aspect of the U.S. income tax system. However, there is a much more fundamental question regarding the treatment of taxes under the WTO rules that demands our careful consideration. The WTO rules on prohibited export subsidies make a distinction between direct taxes, such as income taxes, and indirect taxes, such as value added taxes. Under the WTO agreements, direct taxes are not permitted to be border adjustable. Therefore, the U.S. income tax is not rebatable on export under these rules. In contrast, indirect taxes are permitted to be border adjustable under the WTO rules. Accordingly, the European value added taxes may be, and are, rebated at the border consistent with WTO rules.

This disparity in treatment between direct and indirect taxes dates back formally to a 1960 GATT working party and its informal origins date back even farther.

Notwithstanding this long history, there is no economic rationale for disparate treatment of direct and indirect taxes. The perceived difference in incidence between taxes borne by the producer and taxes borne by the consumer does not have any real relevance to whether the tax should be border adjustable. However, this disparity in treatment is imbedded in WTO rules. And it is a disparity that disproportionately burdens the United States, given that we rely almost exclusively on income taxes while our European trading partners make much greater use of consumption taxes. Reconsideration of this distinction in the treatment of direct and indirect taxes under the WTO rules will be appropriate as we continue the ongoing discussion of WTO matters in the new round.

I would like to turn now to a brief history of the WTO case and our tax provisions that have been the subject of this protracted litigation. I will conclude with a discussion of the international competitiveness issues that must be a central focus in formulating the tax law changes needed to satisfy our WTO obligations and protect the interests of U.S. businesses and workers.

Overview of the History of the WTO Case

The FSC provisions were enacted in 1984. They provided an exemption from U.S. tax for a portion of the income earned from export transactions. This partial exemption from tax was intended to provide U.S. exporters with tax treatment that was more comparable to the treatment provided to exporters under the tax systems common in other countries.

The FSC provisions were enacted to resolve a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) dispute involving a prior U.S. tax regime – the domestic international sales corporation (DISC) provisions enacted in 1971. Following a challenge to the DISC provisions brought by the European Union and a counter-challenge to several European tax regimes brought by the United States, a GATT panel in 1976 ruled against all the contested tax measures. This decision led to a stalemate that was resolved with a GATT Council Understanding adopted in 1981 (the "1981 Understanding"). Pursuant to this 1981 Understanding regarding the treatment of tax measures under the trade agreements, the United States repealed the DISC provisions and enacted the FSC provisions.

The European Union formally challenged the FSC provisions in the WTO in November 1997, thirteen years after their enactment. Consultations to resolve the matter were unsuccessful, and the EU challenge was referred to a WTO dispute resolution panel. In October 1999, the WTO panel issued a report finding that the FSC provisions constituted a violation of WTO rules. The United States appealed the panel report; the European Union also appealed the report. In February 2000, the WTO Appellate Body issued its report substantially upholding the findings of the panel.

Although the United States believed that the FSC provisions were blessed by the 1981 Understanding, the WTO panel completely dismissed this argument, concluding that the 1981 Understanding had no continuing relevance in the interpretation of current WTO rules. The panel's analysis focused mainly on the application of the WTO Agreement on

Subsidies and Countervailing Measures. The panel found that the FSC provisions constituted a prohibited export subsidy under the Subsidies Agreement.

In response to the WTO decision against the FSC provisions, the FSC Repeal and Extraterritorial Income Exclusion Act was enacted on November 15, 2000. The legislation repealed the FSC provisions and adopted in their place the ETI provisions. The legislation was intended to bring the United States into compliance with WTO rules by addressing the analysis reflected in the WTO decision. The new regime addressed the subsidy issue by establishing a new general rule of taxation under which extraterritorial income is excluded from gross income; the new regime addressed the export-contingency issue by applying to income from all foreign sales and leases of property, without regard to where the property is manufactured. At the same time, the legislation also was intended to ensure that U.S. businesses not be foreclosed from opportunities abroad because of differences in the U.S. tax laws as compared to the laws of other countries.

Immediately following the enactment of the ETI Act, the European Union brought a challenge in the WTO. In August 2001, a WTO panel issued a report finding that the ETI provisions also violate WTO rules. The panel report contained sweeping language and conclusory statements that had broad implications beyond the case at hand. Because of the importance of the issues involved and the troubling implications of the panel's analysis, the United States appealed the panel report. The WTO Appellate Body generally affirmed the panel's findings, although it modified and narrowed the panel's analysis in some respects. The Dispute Settlement Body adopted the report as modified by the Appellate Body on January 29, 2002.

The Appellate Body report makes four main findings with respect to the ETI provisions: (1) the ETI provisions constitute a prohibited export subsidy under the WTO Subsidies Agreement; (2) the ETI provisions constitute a prohibited export subsidy under the WTO Agriculture Agreement; (3) the limitation on foreign content contained in the ETI provisions violate the national treatment provisions of Article III:4 of GATT; and (4) the transition rules contained in the ETI Act violate the WTO's prior recommendation that the FSC subsidy be withdrawn with effect from November 1, 2000.

When it challenged the ETI Act in November 2000, the European Union simultaneously requested authority from the WTO to impose trade sanctions on $4.043 billion worth of U.S. exports. The United States responded by initiating a WTO arbitration proceeding on the grounds that the amount of trade sanctions requested by the European Union was excessive under WTO standards. This arbitration was suspended pending the outcome of the European Union's challenge to the WTO-consistency of the ETI Act, and resumed on January 29th with the Dispute Settlement Body's adoption of its final report. As I noted at the outset, the arbitration panel is expected to issue its report on the appropriate level of trade sanctions imminently and, following adoption of that report, the European Union will be authorized to begin imposing trade sanctions on U.S. exports up to the level set by the arbitrators.

Competitiveness and U.S. Tax Policy

The U.S. international tax rules have developed in a patchwork fashion, beginning during the 1950s and 1960s. It reflects tax policy principles developed during a time when America's foreign direct investment was preeminent abroad, and competition from imports to the United States was scant. Today, we have a truly global economy, in terms of both trade and investment. The value of goods traded to and from the United States increased more than three times faster than GDP between 1960 and 2000, rising to more than 20 percent of GDP. The flow of cross-border investment, both inflows and outflows, rose from a scant 1.1 percent of GDP in 1960 to 15.9 percent of GDP in 2000.

Multinational corporations are a vital part of the United States economy. They employ over 20 million people in the United States, or about one in every six American workers. Approximately one fourth of U.S. Gross National Product is produced by U.S. non-bank multinationals. Multinationals in the manufacturing sector produce over half of all U.S. gross manufactured product.

U.S. multinationals also contribute substantially to international trade. Their merchandise exports account for about two-thirds of overall U.S. merchandise exports. Their merchandise imports account for about 40 percent of all U.S. merchandise imports. On balance, the operations of these companies showed a net trade surplus of $64 billion in 1999.

Multinational companies compete abroad in order to increase their shares of foreign markets. Much of their foreign activities are aimed at providing services that can not be exported, obtaining access to natural resources abroad, and to selling goods that are costly to export due to transportation costs, tariffs, and local content requirements. About one third of the gross product of foreign affiliates of U.S. multinationals is produced by affiliates the service sector, including distribution, marketing, and servicing U.S. exports.

Among the most important assets of U.S. multinationals is their technical and scientific expertise. Their foreign investments broaden the opportunities to benefit from such expertise and thus encourage them to spend more on research and development. Spending on research and development allows the United States to maintain its competitive advantage in business and be unrivaled as the world leader in scientific and technological know-how. In 1999, non-financial U.S. multinationals performed $142 billion of research and development. Nearly 90 percent of this activity was located in the United States. It accounted for more than two thirds of all research and development conducted by companies in the United States.

At one time, the strength of America's economy was thought to be tied to its abundant natural resources. Today, America's strength is its ability to innovate: to create new technologies and to react faster and smarter to the commercialization of these technologies. America's preeminent resource today is its knowledge base.

A feature of a knowledge-driven economy is that unlike physical capital, technological know-how can be applied across the world without reducing the productive capacity of the United States. For example, computer software designed to enhance the efficiency of a manufacturing process may require substantial investment, but once developed it can be employed around the world without diminishing the benefits of the know-how within the United States. Foreign direct investment by companies in a knowledge-driven economy provides opportunities to export this know-how at low cost and incentives to undertake greater domestic investment in developing these sources of competitive advantage.

There are many reasons to believe that the principles that guided U.S. international tax policy adequately in the past should be reconsidered in today's highly competitive, knowledge-driven economy. In this regard, it is significant that the U.S. tax system differs in fundamental ways from those of our major trading partners. In order to ensure the ability of U.S. workers to achieve higher living standards, we must ensure that the U.S. tax law does not hinder the ability of the U.S. businesses that employ those workers to compete on a global scale. If U.S. businesses are to succeed in the global economy, the U.S. tax system must not generate a bias against their ability to compete effectively against foreign-based companies – especially in foreign markets.

To understand the effect of U.S. tax policy on the competitiveness of U.S. business, we must consider how U.S. businesses compete in today's global marketplace. A U.S. business operating at home and abroad must compete in several ways for capital and customers. Competition may be among:

- U.S.-managed firms that produce within the United States;
- U.S.-managed firms that produce abroad;
- Foreign-managed firms that produce within the United States;
- Foreign-managed firms that produce abroad within the foreign country in which they are headquartered; and
- Foreign-managed firms that produce abroad within a foreign country different from the one in which they are headquartered.

These entities may be simultaneously competing for sales within the United States, within a foreign country against local foreign production (either U.S., local, or other foreign managed), or within a foreign country against non-local production. Globalization requires that U.S. companies be competitive both in foreign markets and at home.

Other elements of competition among firms exist at the investor level: U.S.-managed firms may have foreign investors and foreign-managed firms may have U.S. investors. Portfolio investment accounts for approximately two-thirds of U.S. investment abroad and a similar fraction of foreign investment in the United States. Firms compete in global capital markets as well as global consumer markets.

In a world without taxes, competition among these different firms and different markets would be determined by production costs. In a world with taxes, however, where countries make different determinations with respect to tax rates and tax bases, these competitive decisions inevitably are affected by taxes. Assuming other countries make sovereign decisions on how to establish their own tax systems and tax rates, it simply is not possible for the United States to establish a tax system that restores the same competitive decisions that would have existed in a world without taxes.

The United States can, for example, attempt to equalize the taxation of income earned by U.S. companies from their U.S. exports to that of U.S. companies producing abroad for the same foreign market. However, in equalizing this tax burden, it may be the case that the U.S. tax imposed results in neither type of U.S. company being competitive against a foreign-based multinational producing for sale in this foreign market.

The manner in which balance is achieved among these competitive concerns changes over time as circumstances change. For example, as foreign multinationals have increased in their worldwide position, the likelihood of a U.S. multinational company competing against a foreign multinational in a foreign market has increased relative to the likelihood of U.S. export sales competing against sales from a U.S. multinational producing abroad. The desire to restore competitive decisions to those that would occur in the absence of taxation therefore may place greater weight today on U.S. taxes not impeding the competitive position of U.S. multinationals vis-à-vis foreign multinationals in the global marketplace. Similarly, while at one time U.S. foreign production may have been thought to be largely substitutable with U.S. domestic production for export, today it is understood that foreign production may provide the opportunity for the export of firm-specific know-how and domestic exports may be enhanced by the establishment of foreign production facilities through supply linkages and service arrangements.

Given the significance today of competitiveness concerns, it is important to understand the major features of the U.S. tax system and how they differ from those of our major trading partners. The primary features of the U.S. tax system considered here are: (i) the taxation of worldwide income; (ii) the current taxation of certain types of active foreign-source income; (iii) the limitations placed on the use of foreign tax credits; and (iv) the unintegrated taxation of corporate income at both the entity level and the individual level.

U.S. Worldwide Tax System

The United States, like about half of the OECD countries, including the United Kingdom and Japan, operates a worldwide system of income taxation. Under this worldwide approach, U.S. citizens and residents, including U.S. corporations, are taxed on all their income, regardless of where it is earned. Income earned from foreign sources potentially is subject to taxation both by the country where the income is earned, the country of source, and by the United States, the country of residence. To provide relief from this potential double taxation, the United States allows taxpayers a foreign tax credit that reduces the U.S. tax on foreign-source income by the amount of foreign income and withholding taxes paid on such income.

The U.S. worldwide system of taxation is in contrast to the territorial tax systems operated by the other half of the OECD countries, including Canada, Germany, France, and the Netherlands. Under these territorial tax systems, domestic residents and corporations generally are subject to tax only on their income from domestic sources. A domestic business is not subject to domestic taxation on the active income earned abroad by a foreign branch or on dividends paid from active income earned by a foreign subsidiary. A domestic corporation generally is subject to tax on other investment-type income, such as royalties, rent, interest, and portfolio dividends, without regard to where such income is earned; because this passive income is taxed on a worldwide basis, relief from double taxation generally is provided through either a foreign tax credit or a deduction allowed for foreign taxes imposed on such income. This type of territorial tax system sometimes is referred to as a "dividend exemption" system because active foreign business income repatriated in the form of a dividend is exempt from taxation. By contrast, a pure territorial system would provide an exemption for all income received from foreign sources, including passive income such as royalties, rent, interest, and portfolio dividends. Such pure territorial systems have existed only in a few developing countries.

Differences between a worldwide tax system and a territorial system can affect the ability of U.S.-based multinationals to compete for sales in foreign markets against foreign-based multinationals. Under a worldwide tax system, repatriated foreign income is taxed at the higher of the source country rate or the residence country rate. In contrast, foreign income under a territorial tax system is subject to tax at the source country rate.

Moreover, it is important to note that both worldwide and territorial systems involve the taxation of income. The complexities present in taxing income generally are heightened in determining the taxation of income from multinational activities, where in addition to measuring the income one must determine its source (foreign or domestic). This complexity affects both tax administrators and taxpayers. Indeed, the U.S. international tax rules have been identified as one of the largest sources of complexity facing U.S. corporate taxpayers.

Given the complexity of the task of taxing multinational income under a worldwide or territorial system on top of the general complexity of the income tax system, some consideration might be given to alternative tax bases other than income. Other OECD countries typically rely on taxes on goods and services, such as under a value added tax, for a substantial share of tax revenues. In the European OECD countries, for example, these taxes raise nearly five times the amount of revenue as does the U.S. corporate income tax as a share of GDP.

Other Worldwide Tax Systems

As described above, about half of the OECD countries employ a worldwide tax system as does the United States. However, the details of our system are such that U.S. multinationals may be disadvantaged when competing abroad against multinational companies established in other countries using a worldwide tax system. This is because the United States employs a worldwide tax system that, unlike other worldwide systems, may tax active forms of business income earned abroad before it has been repatriated and may more strictly limit the use of the foreign tax credits that prevent double taxation of income earned abroad.

Limitations on Deferral

Under the U.S. international tax rules, income earned abroad by a foreign subsidiary generally is subject to U.S. tax at the U.S. parent corporation level only when such income is distributed by the foreign subsidiary to the U.S. parent in the form of a dividend. An exception to this general rule is provided with the rules of subpart F of the Code, under which a U.S. parent is subject to current U.S. tax on certain income of its foreign subsidiaries, without regard to whether that income is actually distributed to the U.S. parent. The focus of the subpart F rules is on passive, investment-type income that is earned abroad through a foreign subsidiary. However, the reach of the subpart F rules extends well beyond passive income to encompass some forms of income from active foreign business operations. No other country has rules for the immediate taxation of foreign-source income that are comparable to the U.S. rules in terms of breadth and complexity.

Several categories of active business income are covered by the subpart F rules. Under subpart F, a U.S. parent company is subject to current U.S. tax on income earned by a foreign subsidiary from certain sales transactions. Accordingly, a U.S. company that uses a centralized foreign distribution company to handle sales of its products in foreign markets is subject to current U.S. tax on the income earned abroad by that foreign distribution subsidiary. In contrast, a local competitor making sales in that market is subject only to the tax imposed by that country. Moreover, a foreign competitor that similarly uses a centralized distribution company to make sales into the same markets also generally will be subject only to the tax imposed by the local country. While this subpart F rule may operate in part as a "backstop" to the transfer pricing rules that require arms' length prices for intercompany sales, this rule has the effect of imposing current U.S. tax on income from active marketing operations abroad. U.S. companies that centralize their foreign distribution facilities therefore face a tax penalty not imposed on their foreign competitors.

The subpart F rules also impose current U.S. taxation on income from certain services transactions performed abroad. In addition, a U.S. company with a foreign subsidiary engaged in shipping activities or in certain oil-related activities, such as transportation of oil from the source to the consumer, will be subject to current U.S. tax on the income earned abroad from such activities. In contrast, a foreign competitor engaged in the same activities generally will not be subject to current home-country tax on its income from these activities. While the purpose of these rules is to differentiate passive or mobile income from active business income, they operate to subject to current tax some classes of income arising from active business operations structured and located in a particular country for business reasons wholly unrelated to tax considerations.

Limitations on Foreign Tax Credits

Under the worldwide system of taxation, income earned abroad potentially is subject to tax in two countries – the taxpayer's country of residence and the country where the income was earned. Relief from this potential double taxation is provided through the mechanism of a foreign tax credit, under which the tax that otherwise would be imposed by the country of residence may be offset by tax imposed by the source country. The United States allows U.S. taxpayers a foreign tax credit for taxes paid on income earned outside the United States.

The foreign tax credit may be used only to offset U.S. tax on foreign-source income and not to offset U.S. tax on U.S.-source income. The rules for determining and applying this limitation are detailed and complex and can have the effect of subjecting U.S.-based companies to double taxation on their income earned abroad. The current U.S. foreign tax credit regime also requires that the rules be applied separately to separate categories or "baskets" of income. Foreign taxes paid with respect to income in a particular category may be used only to offset the U.S. tax on income from that same category. Computations of foreign and domestic source income, allocable expenses, and foreign taxes paid must be made separately for each of these separate foreign tax credit baskets, further adding to the complexity of the system. Moreover, the U.S. foreign tax credit regime requires the allocation of U.S. interest expense against foreign-source income in a manner that reduces the foreign tax credit limitation by understating foreign income.

These rules can have the effect of denying U.S.-based companies the full ability to credit foreign taxes paid on income earned abroad against the U.S. tax liability with respect to that income and therefore can result in the imposition of the double taxation that the foreign tax credit rules are intended to eliminate.

U.S. Corporate Taxation

While concern about the effects of the U.S. tax system on international competitiveness may focus on the tax treatment of foreign-source income, competitiveness issues arise in very much the same way in terms of the general manner in which corporate income is subject to tax in the United States.

One aspect of the U.S. tax system is that the income from an equity-financed investment in the corporate sector is taxed twice. Equity income, or profit, is taxed first under the corporate income tax. Profit is taxed again under the individual income tax when received by the shareholder as a dividend or as a capital gain on the appreciation of corporate shares. In contrast, most other OECD countries offer some form of integration, under which corporate tax payments are either partially or fully taken into consideration when assessing shareholder taxes on this income, eliminating or reducing the double tax on corporate profits.

The non-integration of corporate and individual tax payments on corporate income applies equally to domestically earned income or foreign-source income of a U.S.

company. This double tax increases the "hurdle" rate, or the minimum rate of return required on a prospective investment. In order to yield a given after-tax return to an individual investor, the pre-tax return must be sufficiently high to offset both the corporate level and individual level taxes paid on this return.

Whether competing at home against foreign imports or competing abroad through exports from the United States or through foreign production, the double tax makes it less likely that the U.S. company can compete successfully against a foreign competitor.

As noted above, most OECD countries offer some form of tax relief for corporate profits. This integration typically is provided by reducing personal income tax payments on corporate distributions rather than by reducing corporate level tax payments. International comparisons of corporate tax burdens, however, sometimes fail to account for differences in integration across countries and consider only corporate level tax payments. To be meaningful, comparisons between the total tax burden faced on corporate investments by U.S. companies and those of foreign multinational companies must take into account the total tax burden on corporate profits at both the corporate and individual levels.

Closing Thoughts

U.S. businesses that compete in the global marketplace are an integral part of the U.S. economy, and their global activities are part of their domestic success. Accordingly, we must ensure that U.S. tax rules do not adversely impact the ability of U.S. businesses to compete successfully around the world. Relative to the tax systems of our major trading partners, the U.S. tax rules can impose significantly heavier burdens on the foreign operations of domestically based companies. As we make the changes to our tax law that are needed to comply with WTO rules, we must keep our focus on the objectives served by the FSC and ETI provisions and look to removing biases against the ability of U.S. businesses to compete globally. Such reforms will allow the United States to retain its world economic leadership. Such reforms will protect American jobs.

The Administration is committed to working with Congress to satisfy the twin objectives of meeting our WTO obligations and ensuring that we protect the competitive position of American businesses and workers.

Affirmative action benchscars

Paul Greenberg
Here's another example of the problem * well, one of the problems * with what has happened to affirmative action, which used to be a respectable term.
It used to mean just casting the net wide enough to make sure all those eligible for some consideration were indeed considered * whether for a job, a political appointment, or a place in medical school.
Unfortunately, affirmative action is now little more than a euphemism for the use of quotas, though they often go under the cover of "goals" or "diversity" or some other verbal disguise. One result of all this doublespeak is that almost anyone black (or female, or Hispanic) gets tagged a quota kid, or a token appointment. No matter how great their merit or promise or deserts.
The latest example has been the deplorable campaign waged against Lavenski Smith's appointment to the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. To quote Kevin Freking's story in last Sunday's Arkansas Democrat-Gazette:
"To [his] supporters, the 43-year-old's ascent is a testament to what can happen when you're bright, work hard, and treat others with respect. To critics, it is a story of just how far you can go in life when you are the beneficiary of affirmative action. "
One of the most mean-spirited statements in opposition to Judge Smith's elevation to the appellate bunch came from another black judge here in Arkansas, Wendell Griffen: "I do not want to be associated to the slightest favorable degree with a campaign to promote someone for this historic appointment whose background and inexperience would be a reason for outright protest by our society if he were white."
Actually, Lavenski Smith's record is impressive: He has had to deal with a number of complex legal questions on his brief but busy legal career. To cite a few examples: the Resolution Trust Corp.'s clean-up of the mess left when savings-and-loans were falling like dominoes back in the 1980s; telecom deregulation legislation; and public utility regulation here in Arkansas. He has served not just on the state's Supreme Court but still serves on its Public Services Commission.

Yet the man is accused of lacking experience * as if experience were a matter of years rather than, well, experience. Vince Smith has actually packed a lot of experience in his 15 years in the law, which can happen with the talented and determined. And yet he never seems driven. Maybe it's his roots in faith, roots he keeps well tended.
Yes, there are a lot of lawyers who have been practicing much longer than Lavenski Smith Esq., but it's always useful to remember that there's a difference between, say, 20 years of experience and the same year's experience 20 times.
Lavenski Smith is one of those individuals who has grown by his trials * and not just trials in the legal sense. That much is clear to anyone who's ever talked with the man for more than a few minutes * or it should be clear if they can sense the unmistakable air of someone whose life exemplifies a quiet but constantly active faith.
One suspects that Vince Smith's real sin isn't his meteoric rise in the law or his spiritual gift, both of which have been known to offend lesser talents, but his guilt by association with Republicans * a long suspect breed in these latitudes. But since he's black, his critics have been given a prejudice they can use against him. They can fasten on his color to claim his appointment was race-based. Just as affirmative action is. This is a familiar sneer by now, thanks to the stigma that the current system of racial quotas places on those it is ostensibly designed to help. Which is another reason why affirmative action needs to go the way of Jim Crow.
Lavenski Smith's case is only the latest example of the injustice that all systems of racial discrimination foster, even those that were supposed to counteract it.
Despite the slurs he's been subjected to, Judge Smith is well qualified by education, experience and judicial temperament for an appellate appointment, as he is about to demonstrate now that his appointment has been confirmed by the U.S. Senate. Congratulations.

Can those number be right? Do they include people who never received a hearing during the Clinton administration? Can you send me lists of the people who make up the figures?

In the 8 years of the Clinton Administration, 13 circuit nominees were forced to wait more than a year for a hearing (3 of whom were subsequently confirmed). In the 4 years of George H.W. Bush Administration, the number was
2. In the 8 years of Reagan Administration, the number was 3.

In only 1.5 years of the Bush Administration, 11 circuit nominees already have been forced to wait more than a year for a hearing and the number will rise to 15 by November 8 (with Steele and 3 Michigan CA6 nominees).

REV_00149062

TITLE I—MEDICAL EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS

SEC. 101. MEDICAL EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS CENTERS IN VETERANS HEALTH ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 73 is amended by inserting after section 7320 the following new section:

"§ 7320A. Medical emergency preparedness centers

"(a) The Secretary shall establish and maintain within the Veterans Health Administration four centers for research and activities on medical emergency preparedness.

"(b) The purposes of each center established under subsection (a) shall be as follows:

"(1) To carry out research on the detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses arising from the use of chemical, biological, radiological, or incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices, including the development of methods for the detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of such injuries, diseases, and illnesses.

"(2) To provide to health-care professionals in the Veterans Health Administration education, training, and advice on the treatment of the medical consequences of the use of chemical, biological, radiological, or incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices.

"(3) Upon the direction of the Secretary, to provide education, training, and advice described in paragraph (2) to health-care professionals outside the Department through the National Disaster Medical System or through interagency agreements entered into by the Secretary for that purpose.

"(4) In the event of a national emergency, to provide such laboratory, epidemiological, medical, or other assistance as the Secretary considers appropriate to Federal, State, and local health care agencies and personnel involved in or responding to the national emergency.

"(c)(1) Each center established under subsection (a) shall be established at an existing Department medical center, whether at the Department medical center alone or at a Department medical center acting as part of a consortium of Department medical centers for purposes of this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall select the sites for the centers from among competitive proposals that are submitted by Department medical centers seeking to be sites for such centers.

REV_00149064

"(3) The Secretary may not select a Department medical center as the site of a center unless the proposal of the Department medical center under paragraph (2) provides for—

"(A) an arrangement with an accredited affiliated medical school and an accredited affiliated school of public health (or a consortium of such schools) under which physicians and other health care personnel of such schools receive education and training through the Department medical center;

"(B) an arrangement with an accredited graduate program of epidemiology under which students of the program receive education and training in epidemiology through the Department medical center; and

"(C) the capability to attract scientists who have made significant contributions to innovative approaches to the detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses arising from the use of chemical, biological, radiological, or incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices.

"(4) In selecting sites for the centers, the Secretary shall—

"(A) utilize a peer review panel (consisting of members with appropriate scientific and clinical expertise) to evaluate proposals submitted under paragraph (2) for scientific and clinical merit; and

"(B) to the maximum extent practicable, ensure the geographic dispersal of the sites throughout the United States.

"(d)(1) Each center established under subsection (a) shall be administered jointly by the offices within the Department that are responsible for directing research and for directing medical emergency preparedness.

"(2) The Secretary and the heads of the agencies concerned shall take appropriate actions to ensure that the work of each center is carried out—

"(A) in close coordination with the Department of Defense, Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Homeland Security, and other departments, agencies, and elements of the Federal Government charged with coordination of plans for United States homeland security; and

"(B) in accordance with any applicable recommendations of the Working Group on Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergencies, or any other joint interagency advisory groups or committees designated to coordinate Federal research on weapons of mass destruction.

"(e)(1) Each center established under subsection (a) shall be staffed by officers and employees of the Department.

"(2) Subject to the approval of the head of the department or agency concerned and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, an officer or employee of another department or agency of the Federal Government may be detailed to a center if the detail will assist the center in carrying out activities under this section. Any detail under this paragraph shall be on a non-reimbursable basis.

"(f) In addition to any other activities under this section, a center established under subsection (a) may, upon the request of the agency concerned and with the approval of the Secretary, provide assistance to Federal, State, and local agencies (including criminal and civil investigative agencies) engaged in investigations or inquiries intended to protect the public safety or health or otherwise obviate threats of the use of a chemical, biological, radiological, or incendiary or other explosive weapon or device.

"(g) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, each center established under subsection (a) may, with the approval of the Secretary, solicit and accept contributions of funds and other resources, including grants, for purposes of the activities of such center under this section.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7320 the following new item:

"7320A. Medical emergency preparedness centers.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs amounts for the centers established under section 7320A of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

(2) The amount authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1) is not authorized to be appropriated for the Veterans Health Administration for Medical Care, but is authorized to be appropriated for the Administration separately and solely for purposes of the centers referred to in that paragraph.

(3) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1) for a fiscal year, $5,000,000 shall be available for such fiscal year for each center referred to in that paragraph.

TITLE II—DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 201. ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS AND FUNCTIONS FOR ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) INCREASE IN MAXIMUM AUTHORIZED NUMBER OF ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.—Section 308(a) is amended by striking "six" and inserting "seven".

(b) ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZED FUNCTIONS.—Section 308(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(11) Operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking the item relating to Assistant Secretaries, Department of Veterans Affairs and inserting the following new item:

"Assistant Secretaries, Department of Veterans Affairs (7)".

REV_00149069

SEC. 202. ADDITIONAL DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

Section 308(d)(1) is amended by striking "18" and inserting "20".

TITLE III—HEALTH CARE MATTERS

SEC. 301. AUTHORITY TO FURNISH HEALTH CARE DURING MAJOR DISASTERS AND MEDICAL EMERGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter VII of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after section 1784 the following new section:

"§ 1785. Care and services during major disasters and medical emergencies

"(a) During and immediately following a disaster or emergency referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary may furnish hospital care and medical services to individuals responding to, involved in, or otherwise affected by such disaster or emergency, as the case may be.

"(b) A disaster or emergency referred to in this subsection is any disaster or emergency as follows:

"(1) A major disaster or emergency declared by the President under the Robert B. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.).

REV_00149070

"(2) A disaster or emergency in which the National Disaster Medical System is activated.

"(c) The Secretary may furnish care and services under this section to veterans without regard to their enrollment in the system of annual patient enrollment under section 1705 of this title.

"(d) The Secretary may give a higher priority to the furnishing of care and services under this section than to the furnishing of care and services to any other group of persons eligible for care and services in medical facilities of the Department with the exception of—

"(1) veterans with service-connected disabilities; and

"(2) members of the Armed Forces on active duty who are furnished health-care services under section 8111A of this title.

"(e)(1) The cost of any care or services furnished under this section to an officer or employee of a department or agency of the Federal Government other than the Department shall be reimbursed at such rates as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the head of such department or agency based on the cost of the care or service furnished.

"(2) Amounts received by the Department under this subsection shall be credited to the funds allotted to the

REV_00149071

Department facility that furnished the care or services concerned.

"(f) Within 60 days of the commencement of a disaster or emergency referred to in subsection (b) in which the Secretary furnishes care and services under this section (or as soon thereafter as is practicable), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the Secretary's allocation of facilities and personnel in order to furnish such care and services.

"(g) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations governing the exercise of the authority of the Secretary under this section.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of that chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1784 the following new item:

"1785. Care and services during major disasters and medical emergencies.".

(b) EXCEPTION FROM REQUIREMENT FOR CHARGES FOR EMERGENCY CARE.—Section 1784 is amended by inserting ", except as provided in section 1785 of this title with respect to a disaster or emergency covered by that section," after "but".

(c) MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES.—Subsection (a) of section 8111A is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) During and immediately following a period of war, or a period of national emergency declared by the

REV_00149072

President or Congress that involves the use of the Armed Forces in armed conflict, the Secretary may furnish hospital care, nursing home care, and medical services to members of the Armed Forces on active duty.

"(2)(A) During and immediately following a disaster or emergency referred to in subparagraph (B), the Secretary may furnish hospital care and medical services to members of the Armed Forces on active duty responding to or involved in such disaster or emergency, as the case may be.

"(B) A disaster or emergency referred to in this subparagraph is any disaster or emergency follows:

"(i) A major disaster or emergency declared by the President under the Robert B. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.).

"(ii) A disaster or emergency in which the National Disaster Medical System is activated.

"(3) The Secretary may give a higher priority to the furnishing of care and services under this section than to the furnishing of care and services to any other group of persons eligible for care and services in medical facilities of the Department with the exception of veterans with service-connected disabilities.

REV_00149073

"(4) In this section, the terms 'hospital care', 'nursing home care', and 'medical services' have the meanings given such terms by sections 1701(5), 101(28), and 1701(6) of this title, respectively.".

TITLE IV—RESEARCH CORPORATIONS

SEC. 401. MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN AUTHORITIES ON RESEARCH CORPORATIONS.

(a) RESTATEMENT AND ENHANCEMENT OF AUTHORITY ON AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Section 7362 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c);

(2) by striking the second sentence of subsection (a); and

(3) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection (b):

"(b)(1) Any funds, other than funds appropriated for the Department, that are received by the Secretary for the conduct of research or education and training may be transferred to and administered by a corporation established under this subchapter for the purposes set forth in subsection (a).

"(2) Funds appropriated for the Department are available for the conduct of research or education and training by a corporation, but only pursuant to the terms of a contract or other agreement between the Department and such corporation that is entered into in accordance with applicable law and regulations.

"(3) A contract or agreement executed pursuant to paragraph (2) or section 8153 of this title may facilitate only research or education and training described in subsection (a). Such contract or agreement may not be executed for the provision of a health-care resource unless such health-care resource is related to such research or education and training.".

(b) TREATMENT OF CORPORATIONS AS AFFILIATED INSTITUTIONS FOR SHARING OF HEALTH-CARE RESOURCES.—Section 8153(a)(3) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E) as subsections (D), (E), and (F), respectively;

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph (C):

"(C) If the resource required is research or education and training (as that term is defined in section 7362(c) of this title) and is to be acquired from a corporation established under subchapter IV of chapter 73 of this title, the Secretary may make arrangements for acquisition of the resource without regard to any law or regulation (including any Executive order, circular, or other administrative policy) that would otherwise require the use of competitive procedures for acquiring the resource.";

(3) in subparagraph (D), as so redesignated, by striking "(A) or (B)" and inserting "(A), (B), or (C)"; and

(4) in subparagraph (E), as so redesignated, by striking "(A)" and inserting "(A) or (B)".

SEC. 402. COVERAGE OF RESEARCH CORPORATION PERSONNEL UNDER FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT AND OTHER TORT CLAIMS LAWS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter IV of chapter 73 is amended by inserting after section 7364 the following new section:

"§ 7364A. Coverage of employees under certain Federal tort claims laws

"(a) An employee of a corporation established under this subchapter who is described by subsection (b) shall be considered an employee of the government, or a medical care employee of the Veterans Health Administration, for purposes of the following provisions of law:

"(1) Section 1346(b) of title 28.

"(2) Chapter 171 of title 28.

"(3) Section 7316 of this title.

REV_00149076

"(b) An employee described in this subsection is an employee who—

"(1) has an appointment with the Department, whether with or without compensation;

"(2) is directly or indirectly involved or engaged in research or education and training that is approved in accordance with procedures established by the Under Secretary for Health for research or education and training; and

"(3) performs such duties under the supervision of Department personnel.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7364 the following new item:

"7364A. Coverage of employees under certain Federal tort claims laws.".

SEC. 403. PERMANENT AUTHORITY FOR RESEARCH CORPORATIONS.

(a) REPEAL OF SUNSET.—Section 7368 is repealed.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 is amended by striking the item relating to section 7368.

REV_00149077

Amend the title to read: "A Bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to enhance the emergency preparedness of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and for other purposes.".

Note that some depts and agencies appear to have policies about out-of-town OFFICIAL events within 30-60 days of an election when a PAS official appears with a candidate (including an incumbent candidate). I am tracking these down as these are not government-wide or WH-dictated policies. Note that such a policy would not affect participation in out-of-town POLITICAL events in any way.

Peter Dugas from Hector Barreto's office. He was checking with his legal counsel as well, but I am glad to hear that. Maybe he was looking at an rule.

Annie,
The below information is not correct. I confirmed with Brett Kavanaugh in the White House Counsel's Office that there is no such rule. Who told you
the below information?

Due to the events that I had hope to organized with Hispanic 50 years for the music.

In 1988, compact disc sales officially surpassed LP sales, leaving cassettes and CDs as the two dominant forms of selling music to consumers.

off the charts

This week gives us a huge #1 debut by The Dave Matthews Band as their "Busted Stuff" (RCA Records) album sold more than 620,000 copies its first week.

"Highly Evolved," (Capitol Records) the eagerly anticipated debut by Australian rock trio The Vines also posted very strong sales with a #11 debut and more than 64,000 copies sold. "Incredible," (Columbia) the second album by R&B/gospel duo Mary Mary makes a strong showing as well, with a #20 debut.

"Dreamland," (Universal Records) the first solo album by Led Zeppelin frontman Robert Plant in more than eight years enters the charts at #40 this week, with first week sales of more than 25,000 copies.

Two other notable debuts this week were Darryl Worley's "I Miss My Friend" (DreamWorks) at #21 and The Flaming Lips' "Yoshimi Battles The Pink Robots" (Warner Bros.) at #50.

Following up his debut at #1, St. Louis born rapper Nelly saw his latest effort, "Nellyville," reach triple Platinum status for the sale of more than three million copies just one month after being released. Combined with his 2000 debut, "Country Grammar," he has sold more than 11 million albums.

As they cross the country on yet another blockbuster summer tour, the Dave Matthews Band saw their debut album, "Remember Two Things" reach Platinum status. Each of the band's recordings has been certified at least Platinum. Their best selling album is 1996's "Crash" which has sold more than seven million copies.

Industry success story Jack Johnson received the first Gold record of what is sure to be a long career as his debut, "Brushfire Fairytales" climbed past the 500,000 sales mark.

R&B superstar Usher added another million to the already triple Platinum "8701," moving it past the four million mark. In addition, his breakthrough album, "My Way" has sold more than six million copies.

Subject: LRM IKK251 - - TREASURY Draft Bill on Coin Design Advisory Committtee

Attached is a Treasury draft amendment to section 4 of H.R. 4903. Section 4 of H.R. 4903 would create a new Coin Design Advisory Committee to advise the Secretary of the Treasury on any design proposals relating to circulating coinage and numismatic items. Treasury amendment would amend the current Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee under 31 U.S.C. 5135 and convert it into a Citizens Coin Advisory Committee. Treasury advises that they will submit this informally. Please review and provide comments by 12:00 PM, Thursday, August 1st.

Also, attached for your convenience are: (1) a bill text of H.R. 4903, and (2) two charts for comparison purposes. The first chart compares Treasury amendment with section 4 of H.R. 4903. The second chart compares current law with section 4 of H.R. 4903.

Section 5135 of Title 31, United States Code is amended to read as follows:

Sec. 5135. Citizens Coinage Advisory Committee

(a) Establishment Required. –

(1) In general. – The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a Citizens Coinage Advisory Committee (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Advisory Committee") to advise the Secretary on the selection of subjects and designs for coins.

(2) Oversight of Advisory Committee. – The Advisory Committee shall be subject to the direction and oversight of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(3) Membership. –

(A) Voting members. - The Advisory Committee shall consist of 7 voting members appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury –

(i) 1 of whom shall be appointed for a term of 4 years from among individuals who are specially qualified to serve on the Advisory Committee by virtue of his or her education, training, or experience as a nationally or internationally recognized curator in the United States of a numismatic collection;

(ii) 1 of whom shall be appointed for a term of 4 years from among individuals who are specially qualified to serve on the Advisory Committee by virtue of his or her experience in the medallic arts, or sculpture;

(iii) 1 of whom shall be appointed for a term of 3 years from among individuals who are specially qualified to serve on the Advisory Committee by virtue of his or her education, training, or experience in American history;

(iv) 1 of whom shall be appointed for a term of 2 years from among individuals who are specially qualified to serve on the Advisory Committee by virtue of his or her education, training, or experience in numismatics; and

(v) 3 of whom shall be appointed for a term of 3 years from among individuals who will represent the interest of the general public.

(B) Nonvoting members. –

(i) One member of the Commission of Fine Arts may participate in the proceedings of the Advisory Committee as a nonvoting member.

(ii) The Director of the Mint, or his or her designee, shall participate in the proceedings of the Advisory Committee as a nonvoting member.

(C) Legal Advisor. – The Chief Counsel of the Mint, or his or her designee, shall provide a legal advisor to the Advisory Committee to afford counsel on issues pertaining to intellectual property rights and on other matters that may arise in the Advisory Committee's proceedings.

(D) Transition from the Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee. – Any person who is a member on the Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee on the effective date of this section, except for the member appointed from among the officers or employees of the United States Mint, may continue to serve on the Advisory Committee until his or her appointment expires, provided that—

(i) Any member selected by reason of his or her education, training, or experience in art, art history, museum or numismatic collection curation, or numismatics, shall serve the remainder of his or her current term in one of the positions provided for under subsection (a)(3)(A)(i), (ii), (iii), or (iv), as the Secretary may determine.

(ii) Any member selected to represent the interests of the general public shall serve the remainder of his or her term in a position provided for under subsection (a)(3)(A)(v).

(4) Nominations, Vacancies, and Service. –

(A) Whenever a vacancy exists in a position provided for under subsections (a)(3)(A)(i)-(iv), the Director of the Mint shall nominate one or more individuals to serve as a member in that position.

(B) Whenever a vacancy exists in a position provided for in subsection (a)(3)(A)(v), the following officials shall make nominations, by rotation, in the following order:

(i) The Speaker of the House of Representatives shall nominate a Member of the House of Representatives;

(ii) The President Pro Tempore of the Senate shall nominate a Member of the Senate; and

(iii) The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall nominate a Member of the Judiciary.

(C) Notwithstanding subsection (B), if the Secretary fills a vacancy by appointing someone other than the nominee provided for in subsection (B), the official who nominated that nominee will make the next nomination.

(D) Continuation of service. – Each member appointed may continue to serve for up to 6 months after the expiration of the term to which such member was appointed until a successor has been appointed.

(E) Removal. - The Secretary shall notify any voting member of the Committee who has been personally absent from 3 consecutive meetings of the Advisory Committee that his or her membership shall terminate should that member fail to personally attend the next meeting. Should that member be personally absent from the meeting of the Committee following such notification, his or her appointment shall terminate and that member shall be removed by operation of this subsection.

(5) Compensation; travel expenses. –

(A) No compensation. – Members of the Advisory Committee shall serve without pay.

(B) Travel expenses. – Members of the Advisory Committee shall be entitled to receive reimbursement for their travel, lodging, meals and incidental expenses related to their duties as Advisory Committee members in the same amounts and under the same conditions as employees of the United States Mint who engage in official travel.

(6) Funding. – The expenses of the Advisory Committee that the Secretary of the Treasury determines to be reasonable and appropriate shall be paid by the Secretary in the manner provided in section 5134(a)(4).

(7) Chairperson. – The Chairperson of the Advisory Committee shall be elected by the members of the Advisory Committee from among such members, provided that: a member's election as Chairperson shall not alter the length of the term to which he or she was appointed.

(8) Meetings. – The Advisory Committee shall meet at the call of the Secretary of the Treasury, or his or her designee.

(b) Duties. –

(1) Preparation of proposals for commemorative coins for 5-year period. - The Advisory Committee shall -

(A) Designate annually the events, persons, or places that the Advisory Committee recommends be commemorated by the issuance of commemorative coins in each of the 5 calendar years succeeding the year in which such designation is made;

(B) Make recommendations with respect to the mintage level for any commemorative coin recommended under subparagraph (A);

(C) Review proposed designs for commemorative coins and provide recommendations to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such proposals.

(2) Preparation of proposals for coin and medal themes and designs. – The Advisory Committee shall advise the Secretary of the Treasury on any theme or design proposals relating to circulating coinage, bullion coinage, Congressional gold medals, national and other medals.

(c) Bylaws. – The Advisory Committee shall adopt bylaws or operating procedures, to be approved by the Secretary, for voting, the conduct of its meetings, administration, and other matters pertaining to its proceedings.

(d) Annual Report-

(1) Required. – Not later than January 30 of each year, the Advisory Committee shall submit a report to Congress.

(2) Contents. – The report required by subparagraph (1) shall—

(A) Describe generally the activities of the Advisory Committee during the preceding year and the reports and recommendations made by the Advisory Committee to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(B) Describe, in particular—

(i) Its recommendations on the events, persons, or places to be commemorated by a coin and the mintage level for any such commemorative coin, and its reasons for such recommendations;

(ii) Its recommendations on design proposals relating to circulating coinage, and national and other medals, and its reasons for such recommendations; and

(iii) Its response to Secretary requests for review and comment on any proposals for numismatic items produced under the authority of the United States Mint.

(e) Federal Advisory Committee Act Not Applicable. – The Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Advisory Committee.

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 4903

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 23, 2002

Received; read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs

AN ACT

To ensure continuity for the design of the 5-cent coin, establish the Coin Design Advisory Committee, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "American 5-Cent Coin Design Continuity Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. DESIGNS ON THE 5–CENT COIN COMMEMORATING THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b) and after consulting with the Coin Design Advisory Committee and the Commission of Fine Arts, the Secretary of the Treasury may change the design on the obverse and the reverse of the 5-cent coin for coins issued in 2003, 2004, and 2005 in commemoration of the bicentennial of the Louisiana Purchase.

(b) DESIGN SPECIFICATIONS.—

(1) OBVERSE.—If the Secretary of the Treasury elects to change the obverse of 5-cent coins issued during 2003, 2004, and 2005, the design shall include an image of President Thomas Jefferson in commemoration of his role with respect to the Louisiana Purchase and the commissioning of the Louis and Clark Expedition to explore the newly acquired territory.

(2) REVERSE.—If the Secretary of the Treasury elects to change the reverse of the 5-cent coins issued during 2003, 2004, and 2005, the design selected shall commemorate the Louisiana Purchase.

(3) OTHER INSCRIPTIONS.—5-cent coins issued during 2003, 2004, and 2005 shall continue to meet all other requirements for inscriptions and designations applicable to circulating coins under section 5112(d)(1) of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 3. DESIGNS ON THE 5-CENT COIN SUBSEQUENT TO THE COMMEMORATION OF THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5112(d)(1) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the 4th sentence the following new sentences: ''The obverse of any 5-cent coin issued after December 31, 2005, shall bear an image of Thomas Jefferson. The reverse of any 5-cent coin issued after December 31, 2005, shall bear an image of the home of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello.''.

(b) DESIGN CONSULTATION.— The 2d sentence of section 5112(d)(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting '', after consulting with the Coin Design Advisory Committee and the Commission of Fine Arts,'' after ''The Secretary may''.

SEC. 4. COIN DESIGN ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter III of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 5136 (as amended by section 5 of this Act) the following new section:

DEADLINE: 5:00 p.m. Wednesday, August 7, 2002
In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: Attached for your review, please find a draft copy of a VA views letter opposing H.R. 3733. A copy of the bill text, as introduced in the House, is included for your convenience.

H.R. 3733, introduced by Mr. Evans (D-IL) would allow for a substitution of parties for a claim of veterans benefits, when the claimant for such benefit has died on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Please provide your comments by 5:00 p.m., Wednesday August 7th. If we do not receive your comments by that time, we will assume you have no objection to the document as drafted.

If you experience difficulty with this LRM, or its attachment, please contact us immediately. To ensure receipt by Agency addressees, the electronic copy of this LRM will be followed by a duplicate copy via facsimile.

Thank you.

The Honorable Lane Evans
Ranking Democratic Member Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Congressman Evans:

This is in response to your request for the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 3733, 107th Congress, the "Veterans' Claims Continuation Act," a bill "[t]o amend title 38, United States Code, to allow for substitution of parties in the case of a claim for benefits provided by [VA] when the applicant for such benefits dies while the claim is pending." VA opposes this bill.

Sections 2 and 4 of H.R. 3733 would add new sections 5127 and 7270 to title 38, United States Code. These sections would provide that, in the event a claimant for monetary veterans benefits dies on or after the date of enactment of this legislation and before a decision on the claim becomes final, an "eligible person" may submit an application to VA or a motion to a court within one year after the claimant's death to be substituted as the claimant. Section 3 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 5121, the statute authorizing payment of accrued benefits upon the death of a claimant, by limiting its application to claims of individuals who die prior to enactment of H.R. 3733 and by providing that, if there is no person in the specified classes to claim accrued benefits, such benefits would be payable to the decedent's estate, unless it would escheat.

VA opposes this legislation primarily because it would represent a significant departure from established principles governing provision of veterans benefits. Traditionally, VA monetary benefits have been provided to meet subsistence needs of veterans and their dependents and survivors. By making such benefits subject to claim by the veteran's estate, the benefits would be transformed into property to be inherited by estate beneficiaries or claimed by creditors. Further, benefits could pass from the estate to individuals who had little or no contact with the veteran. We do not believe the limited funds available for payment of veterans benefits should be expended in this manner.

In addition, unlike current 38 U.S.C. § 5121, H.R. 3733 is not limited in its application to claims for benefits in which benefits are due and unpaid under existing ratings and decisions or where evidence sufficient to decide the claim has already been developed. Under section 5121, the findings necessary to support an award of accrued benefits are made by reference to a factual record established during the veteran's lifetime. In contrast, section 5127(g) contemplates that a substitute claimant may submit evidence to substantiate the deceased's claim. Section 5127(d) would require VA to assist the substituted claimant in developing the claim pursuant to the Veterans Claims Assistance Act (VCAA) in essentially the same manner as if the veteran had survived.

As a result, the legislation would impose significant additional burdens by requiring evidentiary development after the death of the veteran, at a time when the veteran is unavailable to provide critical information necessary to properly develop and adjudicate the claim. Inasmuch as VA would be unable to rely upon the veteran's participation in providing information concerning events in service, treatment during and subsequent to service, and the nature and extent of his or her condition, as the VCAA contemplates, it would be unusually difficult and burdensome for VA to develop those claims to the extent required by the VCAA. Indeed, in many cases, it simply may be impossible for VA to obtain sufficient information for proper resolution of the claim. Claims for disability compensation often cannot be resolved without conducting an examination of the veteran for the purpose of discerning the nature and extent of the claimed disability and determining whether the disability may be related to events or injuries that occurred in service. In requiring VA to conduct medical examinations when necessary to a decision, the VCAA recognizes that, absent a medical examination of the veteran, there often will not be sufficient evidence for VA to make a reasoned decision on the claim. Even if the issue of service connection can be resolved, there may be no basis on which to establish a degree of disability. Accordingly, where a veteran is deceased, VA's inability to contact or examine the veteran may be an insurmountable obstacle to the proper development and adjudication of a claim for benefits or to accurate rating of a disability.

Moreover, the notification requirements in H.R. 3733 would impose an enormous additional burden on VA's already over-taxed adjudication system. Under section 5127(c), VA would be required to notify a decedent's estate and the authorized representative of the estate that the claim will be dismissed unless an application for substitution is received within one year of the claimant's death. VA would also have to notify any surviving spouse, child, parent, or legal representative of the decedent's estate, if it has actual knowledge of such a person's name and last known address. It appears that this provision would require VA to send multiple notices if VA has actual knowledge of the last known addresses of surviving spouses, children, and parents, and of the address of the estate representative. Not only would this provision require multiple mailings, it would require a burdensome search of the deceased's complete file to see if it contained addresses of any individuals in the listed classes. In addition, other VA records, such as hospital records, would apparently have to be searched. Further, if VA records were found to contain addresses of (adult) children or parents, VA would have to send notices to all such persons, even if the information identifying them was many years old and VA had no way of knowing whether they were surviving.

H.R. 3733 would not afford VA or a court sufficient discretion in carrying out its provisions. Sections 5127(a) and 7270(b) would require VA or a court to approve a timely application for substitution submitted by an eligible person. Compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 25(a)(1) and Fed. R. App. P. 43(a)(1) (party "may" be substituted). Thus, if, for example, an incompetent person submitted an application for substitution, VA or a court would be required to approve the substitution.

H.R. 3733 would also provide no guidance on several critical matters. Under section 5127(a), VA or the court would be required to approve "any" application for substitution submitted by an eligible person. Section 5127(b)(2) would provide that, where more than one eligible person applies for substitution, the eligible person shall be determined in order of priority based on the list in section 5127(b)(1). However, that list contains categories in which there could be more than one eligible person, i.e., surviving children, surviving parents, next of kin. H.R. 3733 does not state what is to be done if two persons from the same class apply for substitution.

Finally, it appears that section 5127(f) is intended to carry forward the requirement currently found in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(b) that accrued benefits may not be used to reimburse a political subdivision of the United States for expenses incurred in the last sickness or burial of any beneficiary. Inclusion of subsection (b) in 38 U.S.C. § 5121 makes sense in light of section 5121(a)(5), which provides for payment of accrued benefits to reimburse the person who bore the expense of the veteran's last sickness and burial. Under that statute, in the absence of current subsection (b), a state that expended funds with regard to a veteran's last sickness or burial might seek to claim accrued benefits under subsection (a)(5). However, section 5127, as included in H.R. 3733, contains no provision regarding reimbursement of the bearer of the veteran's last sickness and burial expenses. Rather, benefits would be paid to the veteran's estate, if there were no one in the designated classes of relatives who could claim the funds. If a state sought reimbursement for sickness or burial costs it incurred, its recourse would be against the estate, which under section 5127(f), would apparently be prohibited from paying. Viewed in this light, section 5127(f) appears to place a restriction on what an "eligible person" can do with the funds he or she receives as a substituted claimant. The veterans benefit laws generally do not attempt to regulate the conduct of beneficiaries with respect to expenditure of benefit funds after they receive them. Further, it is not clear how this provision would be enforced, that is, whether VA would be expected to attempt to recover funds from the eligible person or a political subdivision if funds were paid by the eligible person in violation of section 5127(f).

The Honorable Lane Evans

It is our understanding that H.R. 3733 is intended to provide veterans' families with benefits in the same manner as is currently done with regard to survivors of Social Security claimants. 148 Cong. Rec. E176 (daily ed. Feb. 15, 2002) (statement of Rep. Evans). The Social Security Act provides for adjustment of underpayments of Supplemental Security Income by payment to the underpaid individual's surviving spouse or, if the underpaid individual is a disabled or blind child, by payment to the child's surviving parents. 42 U.S.C. § 1383(b)(1)(A). That Act also provides for adjustment of underpayments of Old-Age and Survivors Benefits by payment to survivors of the underpaid individual or to the individual's estate. 42 U.S.C. § 404(d). Thus, the current differences between treatment of Social Security benefits and veterans benefits upon the death of an unpaid individual are the two-year limitation on retroactive payment under 38 U.S.C. § 5121 and the parties to whom the unpaid benefits can be paid. We believe that such differences can best be addressed by deleting the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) and by expanding that provision to authorize payment to adult children.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 3733 would result in benefit costs of $4.2 million in fiscal year (FY) 2003 and $14.7 million over the five-year period FY 2003-2007. We also estimate that enactment of H.R. 3733 would result in administrative costs of $1.6 million in FY 2003 and $8.5 million for FY 2003-2007.

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Chairman
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is in response to the request of Congressman Lane Evans for the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 3733, 107th Congress, the "Veterans' Claims Continuation Act," a bill "[t]o amend title 38, United States Code, to allow for substitution of parties in the case of a claim for benefits provided by [VA] when the applicant for such benefits dies while the claim is pending." VA opposes this bill.

Sections 2 and 4 of H.R. 3733 would add new sections 5127 and 7270 to title 38, United States Code. These sections would provide that, in the event a claimant for monetary veterans benefits dies on or after the date of enactment of this legislation and before a decision on the claim becomes final, an "eligible person" may submit an application to VA or a motion to a court within one year after the claimant's death to be substituted as the claimant. Section 3 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 5121, the statute authorizing payment of accrued benefits upon the death of a claimant, by limiting its application to claims of individuals who die prior to enactment of H.R. 3733 and by providing that, if there is no person in the specified classes to claim accrued benefits, such benefits would be payable to the decedent's estate, unless it would escheat.

VA opposes this legislation primarily because it would represent a significant departure from established principles governing provision of veterans benefits. Traditionally, VA monetary benefits have been provided to meet subsistence needs of veterans and their dependents and survivors. By making such benefits subject to claim by the veteran's estate, the benefits would be transformed into property to be inherited by estate beneficiaries or claimed by creditors. Further, benefits could pass from the estate to individuals who had little or no contact with the veteran. We do not believe the limited funds available for payment of veterans benefits should be expended in this manner.

In addition, unlike current 38 U.S.C. § 5121, H.R. 3733 is not limited in its application to claims for benefits in which benefits are due and unpaid under existing ratings and decisions or where evidence sufficient to decide the claim has already been developed. Under section 5121, the findings necessary to support an award of accrued benefits are made by reference to a factual record established during the veteran's lifetime. In contrast, section 5127(g) contemplates that a substitute claimant may submit evidence to substantiate the deceased's claim. Section 5127(d) would require VA to assist the substituted claimant in developing the claim pursuant to the Veterans Claims Assistance Act (VCAA) in essentially the same manner as if the veteran had survived.

As a result, the legislation would impose significant additional burdens by requiring evidentiary development after the death of the veteran, at a time when the veteran is unavailable to provide critical information necessary to properly develop and adjudicate the claim. Inasmuch as VA would be unable to rely upon the veteran's participation in providing information concerning events in service, treatment during and subsequent to service, and the nature and extent of his or her condition, as the VCAA contemplates, it would be unusually difficult and burdensome for VA to develop those claims to the extent required by the VCAA. Indeed, in many cases, it simply may be impossible for VA to obtain sufficient information for proper resolution of the claim. Claims for disability compensation often cannot be resolved without conducting an examination of the veteran for the purpose of discerning the nature and extent of the claimed disability and determining whether the disability may be related to events or injuries that occurred in service. In requiring VA to conduct medical examinations when necessary to a decision, the VCAA recognizes that, absent a medical examination of the veteran, there often will not be sufficient evidence for VA to make a reasoned decision on the claim. Even if the issue of service connection can be resolved, there may be no basis on which to establish a degree of disability. Accordingly, where a veteran is deceased, VA's inability to contact or examine the veteran may be an insurmountable obstacle to the proper development and adjudication of a claim for benefits or to accurate rating of a disability.

Moreover, the notification requirements in H.R. 3733 would impose an enormous additional burden on VA's already over-taxed adjudication system. Under section 5127(c), VA would be required to notify a decedent's estate and the authorized representative of the estate that the claim will be dismissed unless an application for substitution is received within one year of the claimant's death. VA would also have to notify any surviving spouse, child, parent, or legal representative of the decedent's estate, if it has actual knowledge of such a person's name and last known address. It appears that this provision would require VA to send multiple notices if VA has actual knowledge of the last known addresses of surviving spouses, children, and parents, and of the address of the estate representative. Not only would this provision require multiple mailings, it would require a burdensome search of the deceased's complete file to see if it contained addresses of any individuals in the listed classes. In addition, other VA records, such as hospital records, would apparently have to be searched. Further, if VA records were found to contain addresses of (adult) children or parents, VA would have to send notices to all such persons, even if the information identifying them was many years old and VA had no way of knowing whether they were surviving.

H.R. 3733 would not afford VA or a court sufficient discretion in carrying out its provisions. Sections 5127(a) and 7270(b) would require VA or a court to approve a timely application for substitution submitted by an eligible person. Compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 25(a)(1) and Fed. R. App. P. 43(a)(1) (party "may" be substituted). Thus, if, for example, an incompetent person submitted an application for substitution, VA or a court would be required to approve the substitution.

H.R. 3733 would also provide no guidance on several critical matters. Under section 5127(a), VA or the court would be required to approve "any" application for substitution submitted by an eligible person. Section 5127(b)(2) would provide that, where more than one eligible person applies for substitution, the eligible person shall be determined in order of priority based on the list in section 5127(b)(1). However, that list contains categories in which there could be more than one eligible person, i.e., surviving children, surviving parents, next of kin. H.R. 3733 does not state what is to be done if two persons from the same class apply for substitution.

Finally, it appears that section 5127(f) is intended to carry forward the requirement currently found in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(b) that accrued benefits may not be used to reimburse a political subdivision of the United States for expenses incurred in the last sickness or burial of any beneficiary. Inclusion of subsection (b) in 38 U.S.C. § 5121 makes sense in light of section 5121(a)(5), which provides for payment of accrued benefits to reimburse the person who bore the expense of the veteran's last sickness and burial. Under that statute, in the absence of current subsection (b), a state that expended funds with regard to a veteran's last sickness or burial might seek to claim accrued benefits under subsection (a)(5). However, section 5127, as included in H.R. 3733, contains no provision regarding reimbursement of the bearer of the veteran's last sickness and burial expenses. Rather, benefits would be paid to the veteran's estate, if there were no one in the designated classes of relatives who could claim the funds. If a state sought reimbursement for sickness or burial costs it incurred, its recourse would be against the estate, which under section 5127(f), would apparently be prohibited from paying. Viewed in this light, section 5127(f) appears to place a restriction on what an "eligible person" can do with the funds he or she receives as a substituted claimant. The veterans benefit laws generally do not attempt to regulate the conduct of beneficiaries with respect to expenditure of benefit funds after they receive them. Further, it is not clear how this provision would be enforced, that is, whether VA would be expected to attempt to recover funds from the eligible person or a political subdivision if funds were paid by the eligible person in violation of section 5127(f).

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith

It is our understanding that H.R. 3733 is intended to provide veterans' families with benefits in the same manner as is currently done with regard to survivors of Social Security claimants. 148 Cong. Rec. E176 (daily ed. Feb. 15, 2002) (statement of Rep. Evans). The Social Security Act provides for adjustment of underpayments of Supplemental Security Income by payment to the underpaid individual's surviving spouse or, if the underpaid individual is a disabled or blind child, by payment to the child's surviving parents. 42 U.S.C. § 1383(b)(1)(A). That Act also provides for adjustment of underpayments of Old-Age and Survivors Benefits by payment to survivors of the underpaid individual or to the individual's estate. 42 U.S.C. § 404(d). Thus, the current differences between treatment of Social Security benefits and veterans benefits upon the death of an unpaid individual are the two-year limitation on retroactive payment under 38 U.S.C. § 5121 and the parties to whom the unpaid benefits can be paid. We believe that such differences can best be addressed by deleting the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) and by expanding that provision to authorize payment to adult children.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 3733 would result in benefit costs of $4.2 million in fiscal year (FY) 2003 and $14.7 million over the five-year period FY 2003-2007. We also estimate that enactment of H.R. 3733 would result in administrative costs of $1.6 million in FY 2003 and $8.5 million for FY 2003-2007.

HR3733
VERSION: INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 3733

To amend title 38, United States Code, to allow for substitution of parties in the case of a claim for benefits provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs when the applicant for such benefits dies while the claim is pending, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2002

Mr. EVANS (for himself and Mr. REYES) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans´ Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to allow for substitution of parties in the case of a claim for benefits provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs when the applicant for such benefits dies while the claim is pending, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans´ Claims Continuation Act".

SEC. 2. CONTINUATION OF CLAIM AND SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES UPON DEATH OF APPLICANT FOR BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.-Chapter 51 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 5127. Deaths of applicants for benefits: continuation of claims and substitution of parties

"(a) In the case of a claim for monetary benefits (other than insurance and servicemember´s indemnity) under laws administered by the Secretary that was submitted to the Secretary by a claimant who dies on or after the date of the enactment of the Veterans´ Claims Continuation Act and before a decision on that claim becomes final in accordance with section 7291 of this title, the claim shall not be extinguished if, within one year of the claimant´s death, an eligible person submits an application to the Secretary, or submits a motion to a court with jurisdiction over the claim, to be substituted as the claimant in order to continue prosecution of that claim. The Secretary or the court, as the case may be, shall approve any such application submitted by an eligible person.

"(b)(1) For purposes of this section and section 7270 of this title, subject to paragraph (2), the term `eligible person´ means any of the following individuals:

"(A) The surviving spouse.

"(B) Surviving children who have attained the age of 21.

"(C) A surviving parent.

"(D) The executor, administrator or other legal representative of the deceased claimant´s estate.

"(E) The next of kin of the veteran.

"(2) In a case where more than one individual referred to in paragraph (1) submits an application or motion under subsection (a) to be substituted as a claimant, the eligible person shall be determined in the order listed in subparagraphs (A) through (E) of paragraph (1).

"(c) Upon being notified of the death of a claimant, the Secretary shall send a notice to the estate of the decedent at the decedent´s last know address and to the authorized representative of the decedent, if any, informing the estate and the representative that the claim will be dismissed unless an application for substitution as the claimant is received by the Secretary within one year of the claimant´s death. If the Secretary has actual knowledge of the name and last known address of the surviving spouse, surviving children, surviving parent, or the legal representative of the decedent´s estate, a copy of such notice shall be mailed or delivered to each such person. An application under this section for substitution as the claimant on a claim must be filed within one year after the date of the claimant´s death.

"(d) A person named as a substitute claimant under section (a) shall be accorded all the rights and responsibilities of the original claimant.

"(e) If benefits are payable as a result of a decision on a claim by a substituted claimant named under this section, such benefits shall be paid as follows:

"(1) If the deceased claimant was claiming benefits as a veteran, to the living person first listed below:

"(A) The veteran´s spouse.

"(B) The veteran´s children (in equal shares).

"(C) The veteran´s dependent parents (in equal shares).

"(2) If the deceased claimant was claiming benefits as the surviving spouse of a veteran, to the surviving children of the deceased veteran (in equal shares).

"(3) If the deceased claimant was claiming benefits under chapter 18 of this title as the child of a veteran, to the surviving parents of the child (in equal shares).

"(4) If there is no beneficiary who meets the criteria of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and in all other cases, to the decedent´s estate, unless the estate will escheat.

"(f) No part of any benefit payable to a person as a result of being substituted as the claimant on a claim under this section shall be used to reimburse any political subdivision of the United States for expenses incurred in the last sickness or burial of the deceased claimant.

"(g) Upon the appointment of a substitute claimant, the Secretary shall notify the person substituted as the claimant as to the evidence or information necessary to substantiate the pending claim. If such information or evidence is not received within one year from the date of such notification, no benefits may be paid on the claim.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.-The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"5127. Deaths of applicants for benefits: continuation of claims and substitution of parties.".

SEC. 3. PAYMENT OF ACCRUED BENEFITS APPLICABLE TO DEATHS BEFORE DATE OF ENACTMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.-Subsection (a) of section 5121 of title 38, United States Code, is amended-

(1) in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking "periodic monetary benefits" and all that follows through "be paid" and inserting "accrued benefits of a deceased individual who died before the date of the enactment of the Veterans´ Claims Continuation Act that are due and unpaid for a period not to exceed two years shall be paid"; and

(2) in paragraph (5), by striking "only so much" and all that follows through "burial" and inserting "to the decedent´s estate, unless the estate will escheat".

(b) DEFINITION OF ACCRUED BENEFITS.-Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) For purposes of this section and section 5122 of this title, the term `accrued benefits´, with respect to a deceased individual, means periodic monetary benefits (other than insurance and servicemember´s indemnity) under laws administered by the Secretary to which the deceased individual was entitled at death under existing ratings or decisions or based on evidence in the file at date of death.".

SEC. 4. SUBSTITUTION OF SURVIVOR IN CASES PENDING BEFORE A COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.-(1) Subchapter II of chapter 72 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 7270. Cases pending on death of claimant: substitution of parties

"(a) If a claimant dies before filing an appeal under section 7266 of this title, an eligible person may file an appeal as a substituted claimant for the decedent within the time period specified under section 7266 of this title. If an appellant or respondent dies while a claim is pending before a court and before a final decision is rendered under section 7291 of this title, an eligible person may move the court for substitution of claimant in the pending action. Any such appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims or to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit must be filed within the time period prescribed by sections 7266 and 7292 of this title, respectively, or within one year of the claimant´s death, whichever is earlier.

"(b) In any case in which a final decision under section 7291 of this title has not been made, an eligible person may move a court to be substituted as the appellant (or respondent as the case may be) for an appellant or respondent who dies while an appeal is pending. The court shall, upon filing of a timely motion, appoint an eligible person to substitute as the claimant to continue prosecution or defense of that claim.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall require or authorize substitution for a deceased claimant if a final decision under section 7291 of this title has been entered before the filing of a motion for substitution.

"(d) In this section, the term `eligible person´ has the meaning given that term in section 5127(b) of this title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such subchapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"7270. Cases pending on death of claimant: substitution of parties.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.-Section 7270 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall apply with respect to deaths of claimants on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

AGENCY FOIA REQUESTS

DOT

National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) received a request from the Center for Auto Safety, seeking information on reports of safety-related defects.

DOJ

Cedric Laurant, of the Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), has requested all "records pertaining to the United States' efforts to promote data retention in foreign countries, and especially, the European Union . . . between January 2001 and July 2002." EPIC defines "data retention" as "the preventive storage by telephone companies and Internet service providers of the traffic and location data of their subscribers' electronic communications for various law enforcement purposes."

Jessica L. Mainard, in her personal capacity, has requested a copy of the Attorney General's November 9, 2001, memorandum to the United States Attorneys regarding the Second Amendment.

Mathew S. Nosanchuk, of the Violence Policy Center, has requested all records concerning : 1) the November 9, 2001, memorandum to the United States Attorneys; 2) the Department of Justice's brief filed in the U.S. Supreme Court in Emerson v. United States; and, 3) the Department of Justice's brief filed in the Supreme Court in Haney v. United States.

Leslie Oberhaus, of FOI Services, Inc., has submitted four separate requests for records pertaining to 1) all correspondence between the Office of the Attorney General and Worldcom from January 1, 2001, to the present; 2) all correspondence between the Office of the Attorney General and Davita between January 1, 2001, and the present; 3) all correspondence between the Office of the Attorney General and PG & E between January 1, 2001, and the present; and, 4) all correspondence between the Office of the Attorney General and Qwest between January 1, 2001, and the present.

EDUCATION

Patrick Butler, Vice President, The Washington Post Company, has requested a list of the 8,652 Title I-funded schools identified for improvement.

Mark Waner has requested copies of all correspondence for Representative Anne Northup from January 1, 1994 to the present.

Michael Ravnitzky, of American Lawyer Media, has requested documents to or from the U.S. Supreme Court, Administrative Office of U.S. Courts, and the Judicial Conference of the U.S. since 1990.

COMMERCE

Received 7/25/02 from Mark Waner (Washington, DC), requesting records of communications between the Department of Commerce and Representative Anne Northup from January 1, 1994 to the present; and records of any complaints, investigations, or violations involving Representative Anne Northup from January 1, 1994 to the present.

Received on 07/25/02, from Michael Senatore & Jonathan Zisser, Defenders of Wildlife, requesting all documents relating to the United States' agreement at the June 2-7, 2002, North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organization (NASCO) meeting in the Faroe Islands, for a West Greenland harvest of endangered North Atlantic wild salmon.

Received 7/23/02 from Alec C. Zacaroli, Wallace, King, Marraro & Branson (Washington, DC), requesting documents related to settlements between the United States government and any private party involving liability or alleged liability on the part of the government under the Comprehensive Enforcement Response Compensation and Liability Act for environmental clean-up costs or other relief related to properties allegedly owned or operated by the government during World War II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War.

Received 7/22/02 from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission five referred documents related to a request from David DeKok (Philadelphia, PA) for all records from 1957 through 1962 pertaining to the criteria used to evaluate sites for nuclear plants and test reactors.

DOL

- Kevin Maurer, *Inside OSHA, requested a list of individuals and organizations that have contacted OSHA through the A/S office between 10-24 Jul 02.

- Patricia Scarcelli, International Vice President Director, Legislative and Political Affairs Department, United Food & Commercial Workers International Union (UFCW), AFL-CIO, CLC, is seeking:

  any and all documents, memoranda, letters, notes, correspondence or any other written materials, including those contained on a diskette or database since July 2001, that were relied on by the Department of Labor (DOL) in changing its position regarding the application of 3(o) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), as demonstrated by the Department of Labor's opinion letter of June 8, 2002. Ms. Scarcelli is specifically seeking any documents that comprise the administrative record for the issuance of the opinion letter.

- Michael Ravnitzky, Director of Database & Computer-Assisted Reporting, American Lawyer Media, is seeking:

  a copy of any correspondence to or from the United States Supreme Court, also known as the Supreme Court of the United States or the U.S. Supreme Court, or from any of the current Supreme Court Justices. He also seeks a copy of any correspondence to or from the Administrative Office of the United States Court (AOUSC) or the Judicial Conference of the United States. Mr. Ravnitzky limited his request to the Office of the Secretary and the Office of General Counsel.

- Susan J. Lynch, Charlestown, Massachusetts, is seeking:

  a list of all personal service/independent contracts, including advising or consulting contracts, with the Office of the Secretary of Labor and Secretary Reich. Ms. Lynch is not specifically seeking the actual contracts themselves, but rather a list including the names of individuals and companies, dollar amount and terms of contracts, contract numbers, any correspondence and all other public documents from, to, or about said contractors.

  a list of all official travel by Secretary Reich outside of Washington, D.C., including records of food and lodging expenditures for any travel done in the performance of duties associated with the Office of the Secretary, but excluding any of the Secretary's trips home to the Boston, MA area.

  a list of all employees in the Office of the Secretary, including names, dates of tenure with the Department of Labor, official titles and annual salaries, during the tenure of Secretary Reich.

  a list of all lobbyist or other official gifts received by Secretary Reich, including date of receipt, a description of the gift, the approximate value of the gift, and the name, address and employer of the given (if known).

  any correspondence and related documents between Secretary Reich or any agent of the Office of the Secretary and any agent of the Democratic National Committee (DNC).

- Mark Waner, Washington, D.C., is seeking:

  any and all records of communication (including but not limited to letters, written requests, reports, telephone conversations, and memos) between the Department (and all divisions and agencies under our jurisdiction) and Congresswoman Ann Northup from January 1, 1994 to the present.

  any and all records of complaint, investigation or violation held or conducted by the Department (and all divisions and agencies under our jurisdiction), concerning Congresswoman Ann Northup from January 1, 1994 to the present.

- Kevin Maurer, Associate Editor, Inside OSHA, Arlington, Virginia, is seeking:

  a list of all individuals, organizations and corporations that have contacted OSHA through the Assistant Secretary's office (John Henshaw) from

REV_00149230

July 10, 2002 to July 24, 2002. Mr. Maurer is also requesting a list of all responses to correspondence from the Assistant Secretary within the same time frame.

David, just to clear up any ambiguity I've included the final text for the pop ups and footers below, in large bold type. The only change is restoring the words
"under any circumstances" to the footer. It was deleted fro a time (and replaced with "without appropriate authorization"), but then put back in as per Phil/OMB. The history of the edits is in the string below, if you're interested in the rationales that were debated back and forth. But in any event, the final language is noted right her in bold text. If I'm reading the early (bottom) part of these strings correctly, then the action office is OA (Office of Administration), which has an IS office within OA. Please let us know if we can help. And hope you can enjoy a peice of this summer weekend -- Ed

Pop-Up:

The system recognizes you as a White House employee who may be sending an e-mail to the Transition Planning Office in OMB. Do you want to continue?

Footer:

White House-controlled Materials/Protected from Disclosure. TPO staff (or others receiving this e-mail in error) may not, under any circumstances, disseminate these materials outside TPO or the White House.

Phil -- Is Austin coordinating this via OMB IT -- or is there anything further you need from us either as to the text itself, or as to coordinating with OA? 1. The pop-up and footer should say whatever WH Counsel prefers. I don't care which version is used.

2. I wouldn't bother with the "authorization" concept. P.S. Neither Mitch nor Clay Johnson are TPO staff; Gov. Ridge is TPO Director.

3. Can anybody tell me when the actual transition personnel are planning to move into TPO? It's time to get this thing going.

Brett and Phil -- As I understand it the question Phil Larsen was posing to Joe and Tim was whether the proposed OA language was correct. Attached above is a black-line version of the OA draft text with a number of suggested changes.

Pop-up changes:
(1) The word "attempt" was deleted and replaced, just due to semantics and the way the word "attempt" is sometimes used in other contexts.
(2) In place of "Do you still want to send this?" which could sound a bit coercive, we've offered "Do you want to continue?" which is a fairly common, standard prompt seen on many e-mail and internet systems.

Footer changes:
(1) Judge Gonzales' cover memo (still in draft/not yet executed) says that the following words will appear on WHO e-mails sent to TPO: "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure". Thus the footer was edited to reflect the Judge's label.
(2) "White House entities" is a defined term in the MOU, but would not have any automatic meaning here. Should it just be "White House" in the final line of this header?

The final question is a POLICY question. The footer -- reflecting the MOU itself (which would also have to be changed) -- says that TPO staff "may not, UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, disseminate these materials outside TPO or the White House entities." Is that realistic? Won't there be a practical, functional need for dissemination in some situations? (E.g.: OMB Director ... or Clay Johnson ... or Gov. Ridge ... need to send something to an official at one of the affected Departments?) Also, wouldn't violations of this rule be so numerous and often inadvertent or unintentional (someone adding a non-WHO address to a forwarded e-mail, e.g.) that the result of the absolute ban would be a rule that is often violated -- and thus we would just be setting out a standard that would hurt us in litigation? Thus, finally: Wouldn't a better standard -- for both the MOU and the e-mail footer -- be: "TPO staff may not, WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION, disseminate these materials outside ..." ??

(The idea would be that what constitutes "authorization" should NOT be stated, an ambiguity that may have its own value. If Mitch Daniels is forwarding an e-mail the only authorization required would presumably be his own judgment. For staffers at the OTHER end of the chart, maybe in some cases authorization would come from their supervisor at OMB, or in some cases maybe it would come from the WHO person who sent it in the first place, or maybe in some context authorization would be understood or implied?)

So Tim, Phil, Brett -- the question is: are we better advantaged by an absolute ban, or by a more flexible but still strict rule?

TPO e-mail – Draft Text for Pop-ups and Footers

The original text proposed below was contained in Phil Larsen's e-mail to Joe Hagin and Tim Flanigan. The pop up would appear whenever a WHO computer user typed a TPO address as an e-mail destination. The footer would appear at the bottom of any WHO e-mails sent to a TPO address.

Pop-Up:

The system recognizes you as a White House employee who may be sending an e-mail ~~attempting to send information~~ to the Transition Planning Office in OMB. Do you ~~still~~ want to ~~send this~~ continue?

David, just to clear up any ambiguity I've included the final text for the pop ups and footers below, in large bold type. The only change is restoring the words
"under any circumstances" to the footer. It was deleted fro a time (and replaced with "without appropriate authorization"), but then put back in as per Phil/OMB. The history of the edits is in the string below, if you're interested in the rationales that were debated back and forth. But in any event, the final language is noted right her in bold text. If I'm reading the early (bottom) part of these strings correctly, then the action office is OA (Office of Administration), which has an IS office within OA. Please let us know if we can help. And hope you can enjoy a peice of this summer weekend -- Ed

1. The pop-up and footer should say whatever WH Counsel prefers. I don't care which version is used.

2. I wouldn't bother with the "authorization" concept. P.S. Neither Mitch nor Clay Johnson are TPO staff; Gov. Ridge is TPO Director.

3. Can anybody tell me when the actual transition personnel are planning to move into TPO? It's time to get this thing going.

Subject: Draft Text for WHO-to-TPO e-mail

Brett and Phil -- As I understand it the question Phil Larsen was posing to Joe and Tim was whether the proposed OA language was correct. Attached above is a black-line version of the OA draft text with a number of suggested changes.

Pop-up changes:
(1) The word "attempt" was deleted and replaced, just due to semantics and the way the word "attempt" is sometimes used in other contexts.
(2) In place of "Do you still want to send this?" which could sound a bit coercive, we've offered "Do you want to continue?" which is a fairly common, standard prompt seen on many e-mail and internet systems.

Footer changes:
(1) Judge Gonzales' cover memo (still in draft/not yet executed) says that the following words will appear on WHO e-mails sent to TPO: "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure". Thus the footer was edited to reflect the Judge's label.
(2) "White House entities" is a defined term in the MOU, but would not have any automatic meaning here. Should it just be "White House" in the final line of this header?

The final question is a POLICY question. The footer -- reflecting the MOU itself (which would also have to be changed) -- says that TPO staff "may not, UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, disseminate these materials outside TPO or the White House entities." Is that realistic? Won't there be a practical, functional need for dissemination in some situations? (E.g.: OMB Director ... or Clay Johnson ... or Gov. Ridge ... need to send something to an official at one of the affected Departments?) Also, wouldn't violations of this rule be so numerous and often inadvertent or unintentional (someone adding a non-WHO address to a forwarded e-mail, e.g.) that the result of the absolute ban would be a rule that is often violated -- and thus we would just be setting out a standard that would hurt us in litigation? Thus, finally: Wouldn't a better standard -- for both the MOU and the e-mail footer -- be: "TPO staff may not, WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION, disseminate these materials outside ..." ??

(The idea would be that what constitutes "authorization" should NOT be stated, an ambiguity that may have its own value. If Mitch Daniels is forwarding an e-mail the only authorization required would presumably be his own judgment. For staffers at the OTHER end of the chart, maybe in some cases authorization would come from their supervisor at OMB, or in some cases maybe it would come from the WHO person who sent it in the first place, or maybe in some context authorization would be understood or implied?)

So Tim, Phil, Brett -- the question is: are we better advantaged by an absolute ban, or by a more flexible but still strict rule?

David -- Robert Delahunty prepared the attached initial draft cover sheet based on his discussions with Phil Perry just before you started. It's intended to be attached to WH docs that are routed from WHO to TPO via WHO staffers Brook and Distie on the 9th floor at 18th & G. We would be interested in any edits, comments, improvements you would like to offer (John and Brett, you should also feel free to jump in).
Also interested in your view on whether or not the cover sheet should include a return date. In any future litigation, the return date would have at least one advantage (as evidence of WHO intent to maintain continuous control), and at least one disadvantage -- b/c as a practical matter we can expect that a substantial number of WHO docs would NOT end up being returned on the date indicated, so failing to enforce this (potentially cumbersome) practice could, obviously, hurt us. The return date mechanism will have an impact on docs management in your office, so we wanted to be sure you and OMB were apprised of the options.
Please let us know your thoughts. Thanks -- E.

Phil: Following through on your thoughts of this morning, I've drafted a cover (attached) that could be stapled on incoming WH documents for TPO. Let me know what edits/changes you'd like. I have Distie's and Brooks' fax/telephone numbers if we want them added. They don't have rooms, only cubicles, but they said the materials will reach them if they're addressed to 1800 G on the 9th floor.
On the procedures, I told them to fill in the blanks on the covers, staple them to the incoming, copy that package and file the copy, and then send on the package to the intended TPO recipients(s). Since we've asked Room One to create a stamp for them, I suggested that they stamp the front page of the incoming material as well as stapling the cover. They seem to have adequate filing space for storing the copies. They understand that ordinary newsclips aren't to be considered WH materials, and that we'll check after a week or so to see what the incoming looks like.
They asked what to do if they got classified documents (because their clearances may not be high enough). This is something I'll need to discuss with Ed. I doubt that there will be much if any classified matter. Robert

This looks fine to me. The question of whether to have a return date seems largely to turn on whether we can enforce the discipline of having people fill in the blank (or have a default of x days for Distie and Brook to provide if one is not given) and then enforce the requirement. I'll consult with Ken Hill --- Exec. Sec. for TPO -- on these questions. If we can work them out -- and I'd like to think we can -- I think we'd be well advised to have a return date. Brett may have particular views from the WH perspective on the utility of this procedure.

David -- Robert Delahunty prepared the attached initial draft cover sheet based on his discussions with Phil Perry just before you started. It's intended to be attached to WH docs that are routed from WHO to TPO via WHO staffers Brook and Distie on the 9th floor at 18th & G. We would be interested in any edits, comments, improvements you would like to offer (John and Brett, you should also feel free to jump in).
Also interested in your view on whether or not the cover sheet should include a return date. In any future litigation, the return date would have at least one advantage (as evidence of WHO intent to maintain continuous control), and at least one disadvantage -- b/c as a practical matter we can expect that a substantial number of WHO docs would NOT end up being returned on the date indicated, so failing to enforce this (potentially cumbersome) practice could, obviously, hurt us. The return date mechanism will have an impact on docs management in your office, so we wanted to be sure you and OMB were apprised of the options.
Please let us know your thoughts. Thanks -- E.

Phil:

Phil: Following through on your thoughts of this morning, I've drafted a cover (attached) that could be stapled on incoming WH documents for TPO. Let me know what edits/changes you'd like. I have Distie's and Brooks' fax/telephone numbers if we want them added. They don't have rooms, only cubicles, but they said the materials will reach them if they're addressed to 1800 G on the 9th floor.
On the procedures, I told them to fill in the blanks on the covers, staple them to the incoming, copy that package and file the copy, and then send on the package to the intended TPO recipients(s). Since we've asked Room One to create a stamp for them, I suggested that they stamp the front page of the incoming material as well as stapling the cover. They seem to have adequate filing space for storing the copies. They understand that ordinary newsclips aren't to be considered WH materials, and that we'll check after a week or so to see what the incoming looks like.
They asked what to do if they got classified documents (because their clearances may not be high enough). This is something I'll need to discuss with Ed. I doubt that there will be much if any classified matter. Robert

Lib -- Att'd is a copy of the notice I sent to all OHS staff re: the fax number they should use for faxes sent to TPO. Consistent with the Judge's memo, this same fax number will need to be sent around to all WHO staff. Brad and I can raise it with the Judge today at 3:00, and we'd also welcome your thoughts on the easiest/best way to get this done. In the meantime, I wanted your office to have the new fax number, too. Thanks -- Ed

Subject: Fax # for OHS docs sent to TPO = 456-6208

All OHS Staff:

The new fax number for any WHO (which includes OHS) documents which you may make available to TPO (the DHS Transition Planning Office) is 6-6208.

As you know from Judge Gonzales' previously transmitted memo, "all White House materials that are made available to TPO staff (other than e-mail or e-mail attachments) must first be routed to TPO via Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor."

The fax number listed above goes directly to Brook and Distie and therefore complies with this provision.

As with any documents you may make available to TPO staff, please ensure that any such faxes you may send to TPO include the notation: "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure."

This is the ONLY fax number you should use for OHS documents that are made available to TPO.

A copy of Judge Gonzales' previously transmitted memorandum to all White House Staff is attached for your reference and use.
Please do not hesitate to contact me, Robert Delahunty or Kate Anderson if you have any questions.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: MANAGEMENT OF WHITE HOUSE MATERIALS MADE AVAILABLE TO TRANSITION PLANNING OFFICE FOR THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

White House materials may be made available from time to time to the Transition Planning Office (TPO) that was formed within the Office of Management and Budget in expectation of the creation of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Because of the sensitivity and confidentiality of such materials, the White House Office (or, as appropriate, other White House entities) will maintain control over such materials even after they have been made available to TPO staff. The attached Memorandum of Understanding sets forth procedures intended to ensure that the relevant White House entities maintain control over any such White House materials. This memorandum is intended to provide you with a guide to follow when you make White House materials available to TPO staff, summarizing the attached Memorandum of Understanding.

"White House materials" means, for purposes of this memorandum, any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter of any nature whatsoever, regardless of how recorded and whether an original or copy, including information therein, that is originated or received by a White House entity.

The general rules on White House materials made available to TPO staff are as follows:

- You must not make White House materials available to TPO staff other than for TPO's internal purposes.

- All White House materials that are made available to TPO staff (other than e-mail or e-mail attachments) must first be routed to TPO via Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor. They will ensure that those materials are stamped: "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure."

- OMB is making arrangements with Information Technology personnel so that the same text "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure" will be placed automatically on e-mail sent from White House entity e-mail addresses to TPO e-mail addresses.

"White House entities" means, for purposes of this memorandum, the White House Office, the Office of Policy Development, the National Security Council, all other entities in the Executive Office of the President to whom section 552 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code does not apply, and (with respect to executive materials) the Office of the Vice President.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING:
Certain White House Materials Made Available to the Staff of the OMB Transition Planning Office for the Department of Homeland Security

This Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) sets forth our mutual understanding regarding the possession, custody, access, use, ownership, and control of White House materials made available temporarily to the staff of the Transition Planning Office (TPO) within the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) pursuant to Executive Order 13267 (June 20, 2002).

The White House entities (defined below) intend to and do retain control over White House materials (defined below) and are making such materials available to TPO on a temporary basis only for limited purposes and on condition of confidentiality.

I. Ownership, Custody and Control: It is understood and agreed that each White House entity retains exclusive ownership, custody and control of White House materials that it makes available to TPO staff, and that TPO shall not have any proprietary or other interest in White House materials, nor custody or control thereof. White House entities are strongly encouraged whenever practicable to mark White House materials made available to TPO staff "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure" to aid in compliance with this MOU, but White House materials shall be subject to this MOU whether so marked or not.

II. Return of White House Materials: It is understood and agreed that the White House entities will be making such documents available to TPO on a temporary basis for the limited purpose of transition planning and related activities and on condition of confidentiality, and that TPO staff shall have an obligation to return such documents to the originating White House entity in a prompt and timely manner.

III. Restrictions on Dissemination of White House Materials: It is understood and agreed that White House materials are to be made available by TPO to TPO staff for internal purposes only. White House materials made available to TPO staff may not, in any circumstances, be disseminated by TPO staff outside the White House entities or TPO.

IV. Definitions:

For purposes of this MOU--

(1) the term "White House entities" means the White House Office, the Office of Policy Development, the National Security Council, all other entities in the Executive Office of the President to whom Section 552 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code does not apply, and (with respect to executive materials) the Office of the Vice President.

(2) the term "White House materials" means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter of any nature whatsoever, regardless of how recorded and whether an original or copy, including information therein, that is originated or received by a White House entity.

V. Other: This MOU shall be implemented in a manner consistent with the Presidential Records Act and other applicable law. OMB will promptly issue internal guidelines for TPO consistent with the provisions of this MOU.

This MOU addresses certain issues relating to the TPO, and nothing in this MOU shall be construed to imply that any White House entity lacks control or lacks the intent to exercise control over any White House materials in the possession or use of any other entity of the United States Government.

This MOU is intended only to improve the internal management of the executive branch and it is not intended to, and does not, create any right, benefit, trust, or responsibility, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or equity by a party against the United States, its departments, agencies or entities, its officers or employees, or any person.

White House Mess Hours

Beginning Saturday, August 10, 2002, the White House Mess will be closed on Saturdays. There will be no other changes to the current Mess hours. The Mess will re-open for Saturday hours on September 7, 2002. In the event it is deemed necessary to change these arrangements, all Mess members will be notified.

Thank you.

Legal Group Files Suit on Behalf of Pledge

The American Center for Law and Justice (ACLJ), a pro-family legal organization, has filed a legal brief with the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on behalf of members of Congress, asking the appeals court to reconsider a recent decision in which a three-judge panel declared the phrase "One Nation under God" unconstitutional in the Pledge of Allegiance.

According to Jay Sekulow, chief counsel of the ACLJ, the decision is not only flawed in a legal sense, but it ignores Supreme Court precedent protecting such language.

"It is critical that a larger panel of the 9th Circuit re-hear this case and correct the faulty conclusions reached by the three-judge panel," Sekulow said. "Not only is there tremendous public support for reversing this damaging decision, but there is ample legal precedent to do so as well. At the end of the day, we're confident the Pledge of Allegiance that includes the phrase 'One nation under God' will be upheld as constitutional."

The ACLJ filed its brief on behalf of 17 Republican members of the U.S. House of Representatives: Reps. Robert Aderholt (Ala.); Todd Akin (Mo.); Chris Cannon (Utah); Michael Collins (Ga.); Jo Ann Davis (Va.); John Doolittle (Calif.); Jeff Flake (Ariz.); Virgil Goode, Jr. (Va.); Lindsey Graham (S.C.); Duncan Hunter, (Calif.); Ernest Istook, Jr. (Okla.); Donald Manzullo (Ill.), Charles Pickering, Jr. (Miss.); Bob Riley (Ala.); Jim Ryun (Kan.); J.C. Watts, Jr. (Okla.); and Dave Weldon, M.D. (Fla.).

Sekulow said the ACLJ is also sending letters to state school superintendents outside of the 9th Circuit to make sure that students will continue to have the opportunity to voluntarily recite the Pledge.

Showdown Over Owen Nomination Soon
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: One of the president's judicial nominees will soon face the Democrat-led Senate Judiciary Committee.

One of the biggest battles in Congress predicted for September will take place in the Senate Judiciary Committee, where the fate of Judge Priscilla Owen will be decided.

Owen is a controversial judicial nominee, because, her critics claim, she's a judicial activist when it comes to her rulings on abortion. In fact, as a justice on the Texas Supreme Court, Owen voted with the minority to uphold a parental notification provision for minors seeking abortions -- a provision which was nonetheless struck down, 4-3.

Liberal special interest groups are out in force to stop her nomination.

Tom Jipping, a legal affairs analyst with Concerned Women for America, said it will be a sad day if Owen doesn't get past the committee.

"It does not look good at this point," Jipping said. "There have only been six nominees in the last 60 years that the Judiciary Committee has not permitted the full Senate to even consider. And if Priscilla Owen is the second one of this Congress -- the first one being Charles Pickering -- it will signal an unprecedented partisan shutdown of the confirmation process."

Does the nominee have enough votes? At this point, it looks like her supporters are one vote short. Ten Democrats are expected to vote against her, with nine Republicans voting for her, according to John Nowacki, with the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Monitoring Project.

"It's going to be a very, very tight vote and the Democrats apparently feel they have the votes right now (to sink the nomination)," Nowacki said. "What conservatives need to be doing is contacting some of these Senators who might be more willing to look at her record for themselves, like Joe Biden (of Delaware), Herb Kohl (of Wisconsin), maybe even Russ Feingold (of Wisconsin)."

But Nowacki admits that convincing a Democrat will be a tall order, given the positions the Senate majority has already taken on some nominees.

"The Democrats have demonstrated that they're willing to do pretty much anything to block otherwise qualified nominations just simply because they want judges that are going to have their own political views," Nowacki said.

The vote is expected the first week of September.

TAKE ACTION: Please contact the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee -- especially if they represent your state -- and ask them to support Priscilla Owen's judicial nomination.

ABA Poised to Endorse Cloning
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: The American Bar Association may take the unusual step of endorsing therapeutic cloning.

The American Bar Association (ABA) is expected to vote on the issue of research -- or "therapeutic" -- cloning this week at their annual meeting in Washington.

At first glance, it may seem strange that a bunch of lawyers would even take up an issue such as cloning human embryos so that scientific experiments may be performed. But the ABA is a very powerful lobbying organization and, since the cloning issue is still undecided by Congress, an endorsement could mean key support for those who favor therapeutic cloning.

Michael Manganiello, with the Coalition for the Advancement of Medical Research, said his group supports this type of cloning and would welcome ABA support.

"There are still senators out there that haven't made up their minds on it and I think (the opinion) of an organization like the ABA, with its hundreds of thousands of members and (influence) on Capitol Hill, would matter," Manganiello said.

Paige Cunningham, with the Center for Bioethics and Human Dignity, said the ABA has a clear agenda.

"What we need senators to realize is that the ABA has become a political organization," Cunningham said. "(It is) not really a professional organization anymore. It tends to be controlled by a handful of (extreme liberals)."

Cunningham said if lawyers endorse cloning, they are missing the bigger picture: "It just means another professional organization has chosen expediency and a utilitarian argument over the issue of what's really involved and that is: Who is part of the human community? Who are we going to recognize as human and who are going to exclude?"

In the Senate, California Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein's bill on therapeutic cloning would allow the creation of human embryos in order to harvest their stem cells for medical purposes. The embryos are then killed. Another bill in the Senate, however, sponsored by Kansas Republican Sen. Sam Brownback, would ban all forms of cloning.

TAKE ACTION
Please contact your senators and ask them to support only Sen. Sam Brownback's total ban on all forms of cloning, S. 1899, and to oppose all other cloning bills -- especially Sen. Dianne Feinstein's bill allowing so-called "therapeutic" cloning , S. 2439.

The Capitol switchboard number is 202-224-3121. For additional help in contacting your senators, please see our Legislative Action Center:

Who handles issues relating to detailing federal employees to the WH?
Brad, I think it's you, but I am not sure. Whoever it is, pls call Steve Poizner of USAFC -- 6-3882 - to discuss their desire to have a detailee run a task force on disadvantaged youth. Thanks!

INTRODUCTION

This report is the second on complexity called for by the Internal Revenue Service Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (RRA98).[1] The Act requires that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue report on areas of complexity in the Tax Code (Code) and to make recommendations for reducing complexity.[2]

Complexity is well entrenched in the Federal tax system. Complicated provisions create confusing calculations and instructions that frustrate taxpayers and make it difficult for them to file accurate tax returns. Many circumstances contribute to the Code being complex. Complexity is added both knowingly and inadvertently as (1) tax laws are changed, (2) legislative tradeoffs are made, and (3) the economy and society as a whole become more complex.[3] Complexity is also introduced through the interactions among the varying code provisions that affect the same taxpayers.

Changes in individuals' circumstances also can introduce complexity. For example, marriage, having children, changing jobs, and relocating can all have significant effects on income tax liability that a taxpayer must work through. When taxpayers attempt to comply with the tax law in the face of changing circumstances, they often must deal with tax system complexity.

In a complex economy and social structure such as exists in the United States, many tax goals can only be achieved with tax provisions that reflect the underlying complexity of the financial transaction or goal. Complexity is frequently introduced as policymakers make trade-offs between simple tax designs and the desire to make the tax system fair and equitable in a fashion that supports social and economic as well as tax policy goals.

[3] Legislative tradeoffs include equity, fairness, economic growth, revenue targets, compliance and social policy goals.

REV_00149505

Tax system simplification may occur either through legislation or administrative change. For example, the new Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) rules and definitions, effective after tax year 2001, will simplify claiming EITC for many filers. IRS' administrative change increasing the accrual accounting requirement to $5 million of gross receipts may simplify return preparation for those taxpayers who now can use the cash accounting method. However, change, in itself, generally adds complexity, and in 2001, there were 107 new provisions in tax legislation, including 87 in the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA).[4] Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.
Consistent with the requirements of RRA'98, the objectives of this report are to:

- Provide an analysis of selected code provisions that impact large numbers of Wage and Investment and Small Business/Self-Employed taxpayers to determine the types of complexity present and the impact on taxpayers and IRS; and

- Develop options for reducing the complexity of those provisions.

This report is a companion piece to two recent reports on complexity. The December 2001 report of the National Taxpayer Advocate identified 23 issues considered the most serious problems encountered and identified by front-line employees, practitioners, and taxpayers. The Joint Committee on Taxation report of April 2001 is a comprehensive review of the Federal tax system, including both personal and corporate taxes, and many recommendations for tax simplification are put forth. This report, on the other hand, concentrates on three burdensome provisions of the Tax Code. In addition to the analysis, some options for reducing their complexity are discussed.

In the report we analyze the tax law complexity associated with (1) personal credits, (2) personal deductions and exemptions, and (3) capital gains associated with depreciable business assets. Each section is presented from a taxpayer's point of view and is organized in the same way—description of the area of complexity, taxpayer burden associated with each area of complexity, complexity issues requiring attention, and suggested options for alleviating the complexity. The illustrative data in this report are for various years, depending on the data availability when the report was written.

COMPLEXITY ROUNDTABLE

Many of the issues developed in this report first surfaced during a complexity roundtable co-sponsored by the IRS, Office of Program Evaluation and Risk Analysis (OPERA) and the National Society of Tax Professionals (NSTP) held in July 2000 at Georgetown [4] EGTRRA modifies several tax credits, including the adoption credit, child and dependent care tax credit, child tax credit, additional child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit.

University. Companies and organizations represented at the roundtable, included H&R Block, Padgett Business Services Foundation, National Association of Enrolled Agents, National Society of Tax Professionals, American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, National Society of Accountants, American Association of Attorney Certified Public Accountants, U.S. General Accounting Office, U.S. Department of the Treasury, and, various offices within IRS.

COMPLEXITY AND THE MISSION OF THE IRS

The mission of the Service is to Provide America's taxpayers top quality service by helping them understand and meet their tax responsibilities and by applying the tax law with integrity and fairness to all.

Three strategic goals and five principles guide the modernization of the Service and the accomplishment of its mission. The strategic goals are (1) service to each taxpayer, (2) service to all taxpayers, and (3) productivity through a quality work environment. The five guiding principles provide insights into how IRS will achieve its mission. The principles are (1) understand and solve problems from the taxpayer's point of view, (2) expect managers to be accountable, (3) use balanced measures of performance, (4) foster open and honest communication, and (5) insist on total integrity.

Reducing complexity will aid the Service in achieving all of its strategic goals. Reduced complexity can lead to reduced burden. By reducing burden, IRS better serves each taxpayer. Reduced complexity also can lead to a better understanding of the law, leading to increased compliance. By increasing compliance, IRS better serves all taxpayers. Finally, when the Code becomes less complex, the working environment for IRS employees becomes more productive.

THE IMPACT OF STATUTORY CHANGE

Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.

When tax laws change, individuals often face uncertainty as to how to comply with the changes, especially if they are frequent or if the individuals and IRS are given little time to prepare before the changes are effective. In 1986, the Code was rewritten for the first time in about 30 years. In the next fifteen years, there have been about 84 tax laws enacted. Just one of these, the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998, contained 25 sections of tax changes. Of these, 11 were effective retroactively and 4 were effective within 90 days of the end of the calendar year. The inability to stay current has been cited by small business owners and individuals as a primary reason for their use of paid preparers.

Both the Service and taxpayers are challenged in these situations. The Service needs to issue clear guidance and forms covering the changes in time for the next filing season. Taxpayers face the uncertainty that late changes introduce around their current and future tax obligations. With short lead times, both the Service and taxpayers have little time to become knowledgeable about the changes. This creates additional opportunities for error as well as heightened frustration and conflict

The Service faces its own challenges in making sure its systems, training, and other employee tools are current and reflect the most recent legislation. In addition, because the time between when a return is filed and when it is audited may be 1-2 years, taxpayers and Service employees must also accommodate circumstances where the Code has changed, sometimes significantly, in the intervening time period.
The enactment of provisions with retroactive or short effective lead times also increases complexity. Both taxpayers and the Service frequently must act quickly to accommodate these changes. For the Service, especially problematic are changes that come late in the calendar year when the forms and publications for the next filing season are ready to go or have gone to the printers. Short timeframes frequently do not allow the Service to consult with taxpayers and other stakeholders in developing new forms. This can result in the forms being more difficult for taxpayers to understand or complete than they would be under normal circumstances.

Time limitations also may affect our ability to make the systems changes necessary to support statutory change. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 and RRA98 are good examples of Acts with many tax-related changes and short effective date lead times. Table 2 details the changes made by recent acts.

SCOPE AND METHODOLOGY

For this report, we limited our analysis to provisions that affect individual taxpayers, both Wage and Investment (W&I) and the Self-Employed. In this way, we focused on provisions that affect large numbers of taxpayers who are less likely to have the resources necessary to deal with complex tax issues.

RRA98 suggests that certain information that reflects complexity and taxpayer burden be included in this report.[5] Using these criteria as a guide we developed and refined the list of areas of complexity we selected for this year's report by:

- Conducting interviews with senior managers from Jackson Hewitt, H&R Block, Padgett Business Services, Padgett Business Services Foundations who work with individual taxpayers regularly and can identify areas in the Code that create the most complexity for their clients.

- Conducting interviews with various Department of the Treasury and IRS employees who interact with taxpayers and can articulate how various areas of the Code cause confusion and frustration not only for taxpayers but for IRS employees as well.

- Co-sponsoring with the National Society of Tax Professionals a complexity roundtable held in July 2000, at Georgetown University. More than twenty public and private organizations and companies were represented during the roundtable discussion.

- Interviewing tax practitioners, by telephone and in person, willing to share their knowledge and experiences with us about areas of the tax law they considered unduly complex.

- Reviewing a wide range of literature in legal theory addressing complexity and its legal manifestations.

Based on the results of these activities we selected three specific provisions for in-depth analysis. These provisions are (1) personal credits, (2) personal exemptions and itemized deductions, and (3) capital gains.

It is important to note how we addressed two specific items contained in the statutory requirement to which this report responds. They are "administrative complexity" and "undue and unnecessary complexity." For administrative complexity, we found it was difficult to isolate the impact of a specific provision on IRS without also looking at its impact on taxpayers. Looking only at administrative complexity could also lead to options that would reduce the burden on IRS but significantly increase it on taxpayers. Accordingly, we looked at overall complexity.

[5] Information suggested was: questions frequently asked by taxpayers when filing their return, common taxpayer errors, areas of law that frequently result in disagreement between taxpayers and IRS, areas of the law where there is no or incomplete guidance or where the law is uncertain, areas of the law where revenue officers make frequent mistakes, the impact of recent legislation on complexity, and the time required for taxpayers to complete forms.

We did not specifically address "undue and unnecessary" complexity. To do so would have required a series of value judgments regarding the goals of a particular provision and the complexity the provision introduces. Instead, we attempted to provide the analysis necessary for the reader to determine if the complexity is warranted.

In addition, because any recommendations for changing the Code must consider the full range of tax policy considerations including the impact of the changes on (1) budgetary costs or how the cost of these changes might compare with other important policy priorities; (2) economic efficiency, (3) which taxpayers are affected; (4) the degree to which the changes would affect the policy goals the provision was intended to meet; (5) the impact of the changes on the degree to which the affected tax provisions accomplish the purposes for which they were enacted; and (6) other related provisions, the report does not contain recommendations. The report only addresses complexity as it relates to administration of the Code and taxpayer's ability to comply with the Code. The options therefore are not policy recommendations. For example, one of the options presented in the report is to coordinate the income phaseout ranges for at least some credits and, hence, affect the overall distribution of the individual income tax burden. It also could lead to fairly high marginal tax rates within the phaseout range as multiple tax benefits are phased out simultaneously. Depending on the specifications of the new phaseout ranges, there could be significant revenue implications. And there may be complicated interactions of the proposal with other provisions of the tax law (such as the Alternative Minimum Tax). For all these reasons, the proposals listed would need substantial analysis before they could be evaluated in making tax policy decisions.

OVERVIEW OF APPENDICES

The appendices to this report were developed based on the requirements established in RRA98. Appendix A focuses on questions posed to IRS by taxpayers. Appendix B provides a summary of the common errors taxpayers make on their returns. Appendix C highlights areas of law, which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS. Appendix D covers areas of law in which there is no or incomplete guidance or in which the law is uncertain. Appendix E describes areas in which tax examiners make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law. Appendix F summarizes the impact of recent legislation on complexity. And finally, Appendix G relates tax forms to taxpayer burden.

REV_00149511

CHAPTER I
CREDIT ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

A variety of definitions is used to determine a taxpayer's eligibility to claim the dependency exemptions and certain tax credits. Understanding these definitions and how to apply them is necessary for the taxpayer to file a correct return. In addition to the filing status designation required on individual tax returns, separate but sometimes related, determinations must be made regarding dependents and qualifying individuals for personal tax credits. The definitions associated with filing status and dependents and qualifying individuals are some of the more complex issues faced by over 124 million individual taxpayers. While on the surface this may appear to be a rather straightforward determination, for many taxpayers the correct answer depends on their economic and/or other relationships to other members of their family or household. For this reason, any complexity in the Code around credit eligibility that emanates from filing status definitions can result in substantial overall burden.

Tax credits provide policymakers with a channel for easily delivering tax incentives to specific groups. While tax credits can provide special incentives or relief for specific groups of taxpayers, the burden associated with understanding and applying various eligibility requirements, income phaseouts and thresholds, and many other special considerations significantly add to the complexity of the tax laws and the difficulty taxpayers have in understanding and complying with them

While personal credits have resulted in lower income taxes for many taxpayers, they also have greatly increased the complexity faced by those taxpayers. Legislative tradeoffs have been made based on equity, fairness, economic efficiency, revenue targets, compliance and social policy goals with a resulting increase in complexity. In addition, in some cases complexity has inadvertently crept into the Code as credits were added and modified over time. Unfortunately, items that appear simple or innocuous in isolation can create great complexity when considered in total. For example, specific definitions, phaseout ranges, and age limitations associated with various credits are implemented to ensure relief reaches a targeted group of taxpayers. But, the calculations and form completion requirements that flow from these limitations create enormous burden and complexity for taxpayers.

Credit complexity has also been created by frequent changes. The EITC, for example, has been changed almost annually since 1986. Changes are even more frequently proposed than enacted. For example, in the 106th Congress over 339 bills were introduced proposing new tax credits or modifying existing ones.[6] Most of the credits would have required detailed guidance from Treasury and IRS to define precisely the items and activities that were eligible for a particular credit, thereby adding complexity to the tax system.

[6] Tax Notes, December 15, 2000.

In addition to creating additional compliance burden for taxpayers and administrative burden for the Service, the complexities present within the personal credits also increase noncompliance by making it more difficult for taxpayers to file an accurate return.

The personal credits we analyzed for this report were the ones most commonly taken by individual taxpayers. They are the Adoption Credit, Child Tax Credit, Child and Dependent Care Credit, Earned Income Tax Credit, Education Credits (Hope and Lifetime Learning), and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.[7] The EGTRRA legislation modified several of the credits effective in 2002 and after. These changes are noted as appropriate later in the report. Table 1.1 illustrates some of the differences in eligibility rules, income thresholds and phaseouts, and other features of these credits. We have simplified some exceptions and special conditions.

[7] EITC was enacted in 1975 (P.L. 94-12, Tax Reduction Act of 1975). The Child and Dependent Care Credit was enacted in 1976 (P.L. 94-455, Tax Reform Act of 1976). The Child Tax Credit and the Hope Scholarship Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit (Education credit) were enacted in 1997 (P.L. 105-34, Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997). The Adoption Expense Credit was enacted by The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-188).

Table 1.1: Personal Credit Characteristics (Tax Year 2000)

Item	Income Basis	Phaseouts/Thresholds	Maximum Credit	Qualifying Individuals	Other Characteristics
Adoption Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Between $75,000 - $115,000 credit is phased out ratably	$5,000 per adoption ($6,000 for special needs child)	Child under age 18 or an incapacitated person	Nonrefundable - May be carried over 5 years. Phaseout is determined in initial year and does not apply in carryover years.[f,+]
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	AGI	Between $10,000 - $28,000 credit phases down from 30% to 20% of qualifying expenses	$480 -$720 for one child $960 - $1,440 for two or more children	Dependent under age 13, a disabled spouse, or a dependent of any age	Must have earned income; Married Filing Jointly both parties generally must have earned income; Nonrefundable
Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Credit reduced by 5% for each $1,000 of Modified AGI over $55,000 - $110,000[d,e]	$500 per child	Dependent under age 17	Nonrefundable
Additional Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Same as Child Tax Credit	Refundable extension of $500 Child Tax Credit	Taxpayer must have at least three qualifying children under age 17	Constitutes a refund of withheld Social Security and Medicare taxes.
Elderly or Disabled Credit	AGI	$12,500 - 25,000[d]	15% of credit base	Must be at least 65 years old or permanently and totally disabled and under mandatory retirement age	Credit base is AGI reduced by nontaxable retirement benefits and excess AGI over $5000-10,000; Nonrefundable
Earned Income Tax Credit	Earned Income and Modified AGI[b]	1 child between $12,700 and $27,413; 2 or more children - $12,700 - $31,152; no children $5,800 - $10,380. (A variety of rates apply to each group.)	One child - $2,353 Two or more children - $3,888 No children - $353	Child under age 19, students under age 24 or a disabled person of any age	Credit has phase-in, plateau and phase-out ranges that depend on the number of qualifying children; Refundable
Education (Hope and Lifetime Learning) Tax Credits	Modified AGI[c]	Between $40,000 - $50,000 or $80,000 – 100,000[d] the amount of the credit is reduced ratably.	Hope - $1,500 Lifetime Learning - $1,000	Taxpayers and dependents	Cannot take both credits for the same taxpayer in one year; Nonrefundable

Note: The adoption credit, child and dependent care credit, EITC, and education credits were modified by EGTRRA for future years.

[a] From Form 1040

[b] Taxpayer can have no more than $2,400 disqualified income.

[c] Modified AGI includes certain income from Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and certain other foreign earned income.

[d] Depending on Filing status

[e] For married filing separately, the credit reduction begins at $55,000 Modified AGI; for single, head of household, or qualifying widow(er), at $75,000; and for married filing jointly, at $110,000.

REV_00149514

[f] The amount of the credit, including adjustments, if any, due to phaseouts, is determined in the initial year. Thus, no additional phaseout calculations are required in the year carryover credits are used.

WHO FILES

All filers must make certain determinations regarding their filing status, dependents, and qualifying individuals for the personal credits. The number of taxpayers making each of these determinations is shown in Table 1.2.

Table 1.2: Filing Determinations (Tax Year 1998)

Type of Determination	Number of Taxpayer Returns
Filing Status (all 1040 Forms)	124,770,662
Married Filing Jointly	49,706,101
Married Filing Separately	2,531,742
Single	55,104,964
Head of Household	17,427,855
Claim Dependents	45,887,973
Married Filing Jointly	27,246,285
Married Filing Separately	660,936
Single	1,835,291
Head of Household	16,145,460
Personal Credits (total all returns)[1]	41,916,863
Adoption Tax Credit	40,668
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	6,128,155
Child Tax Credit	24,810,781
Additional Child Tax Credit	754,363
Earned Income Tax Credit[2]	19,704,707
Elderly or Disabled Credit	180,473
Education Tax Credit	4,652,596

[1] Individual components do not add to total because taxpayers can claim more than one of these credits.
[2] Includes taxpayers who have qualifying children and those who do not.

Table 1.3 shows the number of tax returns that claim various credits and combinations of credits.

REV_00149515

Table 1.3: Number of Returns with Various Credits and Credit Combinations (Tax Year 1999)

Credit/Combinations	Estimated Number of Returns (000's)	Percent of Total Returns
Child Tax Only	13,350.0	10.5%
Earned Income Only	12,208.3	9.6%
Child Tax, Earned Income	5,632.9	4.4%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care	3,930.7	3.1%
Education Only	4,269.6	3.4%
Child Tax, Education	1,308.8	1.0%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care, Earned Income	855.3	0.7%
Child and Dependent Care Only	567.1	0.4%
All Other Combinations	4,899.1	3.9%
Total Number of Returns with Credits or Credit Combinations	47,021.9	37.0%

As the tables illustrate, about one-third of all individual taxpayers claim one or more personal credits; in fact, more than that must determine their filing status and whether they have dependents in order to claim the credits. For taxpayers with AGI between $50,000 and $100,000, 43 percent claim at least one personal credit. In addition, almost 10 percent of all individual taxpayers claim multiple credits. This includes more than six million taxpayers with AGI of $25,000 or less.

TAXPAYER AND IRS BURDEN

Taxpayer

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific credit, calculate the amount of the credit, and claim it on their tax return. Table 1.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each credit as well as the estimated time involved. The fact that each of the credits has its own publication explaining who is eligible and how to claim the credit is an indicator of the complexity each involves. Table 1.6 shows that many taxpayer inquiries relate to these tax credits. More striking, however, is that a large number of taxpayers make errors in claiming these tax benefits.

IRS

Frontline IRS employees dealing with taxpayers in either office or field audits cite definitions of eligibility for credits as one of the more persistently complex aspects of their job. Their comments pinpoint a lack of consistency across a number of tax provisions and credits.

As a further indication of burden, Table 1.7 below summarizes data from an H&R Block analysis of the type and number of questions its preparers asked the corporate tax research department about various complex tax issues. Of the 577 questions received relating to personal tax credits, over three-quarters related to EITC and the Education credits.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed six areas of complexity related to personal credits. The selection was based on the number of tax credits claimed on 1999 tax returns, the number of questions taxpayers asked IRS about credits, the questions tax practitioners had about credits, and information received in interviews with tax professionals. The areas of complexity we identified are definitional complexity, inconsistency in phaseout thresholds and calculations, differences in the Education credits, calculating the income basis for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, when qualifying expenses can be taken for the Adoption Credit, and the rules for determining the order in which tax credits are applied to income tax liability (stacking rules).

REV_00149518

Complexity Issue: Definitions can create confusion about eligibility.

One of the most apparent areas of complexity associated with personal credits is the dissimilarity in how terms are defined. The identifying titles of some of the credits appear to overlap, but the tax law governing the credits is markedly different. For example, the definition of a "qualifying child" or "qualifying individual," used to determine eligibility to claim the child and dependent care tax credit, the child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit, is different for each credit. Therefore, taxpayers must fill out different worksheets or schedules and look to different instructions each time they claim similar-sounding credits to determine which definition applies and if their circumstances meet the requirements.

Prior attempts at simplification have not eliminated the confusion. For instance, the definition of a qualifying foster child for purposes of the child tax credit and earned income tax credit has been greatly simplified. An unmarried qualifying foster child need not be claimed as a dependent on the taxpayer's return for purposes of the earned income tax credit, but must be claimed as a dependent for the child tax credit. Table 1.8 summarizes the different tests that taxpayers must meet to qualify for the personal tax credits.

[a]Varies depending on filing status.
[b]There are certain exceptions which are discussed later.
[c]There are certain exceptions where credit can be claimed if dependency is waived to other parent.
[d] For the Adoption Credit, except for married taxpayers filing separate returns, the income limits for phasing out benefits are independent of filing status. The EGTRRA legislation changed the income limit to $150,000 beginning in 2002.

REV_00149520

In addition to having varying qualification tests, the specific requirements for the tests also vary among the credits. For example, as discussed below the relationship test is different for dependents than for qualifying children under the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Relationship or Member of Household Test

To qualify a taxpayer for a dependency exemption the individual in question must be the taxpayer's child, stepchild, sibling, niece, nephew, grandchild or foster child. In 2000, other family members or persons who resided with the taxpayer for the entire year may also be claimed as dependents.[8] This definition is also generally used for the Head of Household filing status and the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax and Education credit purposes. [9]

The relationship test for a qualifying child for the EITC and Adoption credit are different in that the qualifying child does not have to, and may not, qualify as a dependent. The qualifying child under the EITC does not have to be a dependent unless the child is married. But if the qualifying child is a foster child not related to the taxpayer, they must be placed in the home by an authorized placement agency, not simply live with the taxpayer for the entire year. Before Tax Year 2002, a qualifying child under the Adoption credit (e.g., an unrelated individual living with the taxpayer) may not qualify as a dependent if they do not live in the taxpayer's home for the entire year. This residency requirement was changed by EGTRRA, and beginning in 2002, a foster child must reside with the taxpayer for more than six months.

The over 16 million taxpayers with qualifying children who claim the EITC must make two subtle but important differentiations in correctly filing their return. The first is to recognize that not all of the children in the household may qualify the taxpayer for EITC even if the taxpayer provides all of their support, and the taxpayer maintains the household. The second is that a child may qualify the taxpayer for the EITC and not qualify as a dependent.

Support Test

To meet the support test for the dependency exemption, the taxpayer generally must provide more than half of the qualifying individual's support during the calendar year covered by the return.[10] Because the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax, and Education credits require the qualifying individual to be a dependent, this support test also applies to these credits. There is no support test for the EITC or under most circumstances for the adoption credit.

[8] Cousins are eligible only if they live with the taxpayer as a family member for the entire year.
[9] Under certain limited conditions non-dependents may also be covered such as disabled spouses for the Child and Dependent Care credit.
[10] There are different rules for multiple support agreements and for children of divorced or separated parents.

REV_00149522

Residency or Keeping Up a Home Test

To qualify for HOH and the Child and Dependent Care credit the taxpayer must meet the "Keep Up a Home" test. This test requires the taxpayer to pay more than half the cost of running the home for the year.[11] The EITC, on the other hand, has a residency test that simply requires the qualifying child to live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half of the year.[12] There is no residency test for dependents or the Child Tax credit except for qualifying foster children. Foster children must live with the taxpayer for the entire year to qualify for the credit. A residency test applies to the adoption credit only if the taxpayer uses the filing status Married Filing Separately (MFS).

Age Test

Recognizing that many of the personal credits are targeted to a "qualifying child" there is no consistent age definition for a child. The Child and Dependent Care credit is limited to qualifying individuals under 13 or who cannot care for themselves. The Child Tax credit is limited to those under 17. The EITC applies to qualifying children under 19 (24 if the child is a full-time student).[13] The adoption credit age test is under 18. While there is no age test for dependents or the Education credits, a taxpayer must be at least 25 but under 65 to claim the EITC with no qualifying children and 65 or over or fully disabled to qualify for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.

Qualifying Income

Currently, taxpayers must calculate their qualifying income different ways to determine whether they qualify for specific personal credits. The Child and Dependent Care Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled both use AGI (line 34 on Form 1040). The Adoption, Child Tax, and Education credits use a modified definition of AGI that adds to the income considered in determining credit eligibility certain foreign source income excluded when calculating AGI. For the EITC, taxpayers must calculate their earned income and a modified AGI that includes certain losses deducted and income excluded when calculating AGI.[14]

Filing Status

Taxpayers who are Married Filing Separately face additional limitations and complications in qualifying for the personal credits. These are illustrated in Table 1.9.

[11] The household maintenance test for the Child and Dependent Care credit can be prorated over the course of the year if the taxpayer and child did not reside together for the full year.
[12] For foster children, the residency was one year in 2000 but was changed to 'more than six months' in 2002.
[13] There is no age limit if the individual is permanently and totally disabled.
[14] In 2002, the income used to determine EITC eligibility changes to AGI and taxable earned income.

Options for Reducing Definitional Complexity

- Standardize the definitions of "qualified child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.

This option would obviously require tradeoffs. For example, there are two relationship tests, one for dependency and one for the EITC/Child Tax Credit. One obvious option for reducing complexity would be to use one or the other. If the dependency exemption test were used, more children would potentially be qualifying children for EITC and Child Tax credit purposes. Specifically, this would include siblings, nieces and nephews, who lived with the taxpayer more than half the year but not the entire year, and certain other family members and other individuals, who lived with the taxpayer for the entire year. How many additional individuals would be covered is difficult to estimate. The number would be limited, however, by other tests and provisions, specifically the age limits, and the EITC requirement that the qualifying child live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half the year. The EGTRRA legislation reduced definitional complexity in 2002 by modifying the residency test for foster children from one year to more than six months. This is a first step in reducing definitional complexity.

Extending the more limited EITC/Child Tax credit relationship definition to dependents would have more dramatic effects. Taxpayers would no longer be able to claim as dependents many older family members or other individuals who lived in their household for the entire year. Fewer taxpayers would qualify as Head of Household or be eligible for other credits that require the qualifying individual to be a dependent.

Making the residency, support, and relationship tests the same would reduce the time and money taxpayers spend on compliance. It could also make for more accurate returns.

- Use one age for defining a child.

Currently, there are four different criteria in the provisions analyzed. Recognizing there are potential revenue and other policy implications of choosing one age to define a child, consistency would make it much easier for taxpayers to determine whether a child qualifies them for credits. For example, it would simplify the Child and Dependent Care and the Adoption credits if the age of the qualifying child were determined at the end of the year like the other credits rather than when the care was provided, but this could affect the number of children receiving benefits.

- Consistently define qualifying income.

While few taxpayers may have to calculate their Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI), all must figure out what the difference is and whether they have any income to include. The use of MAGI instead of AGI for phasing out some of the personal tax credits may be intended to deny credits to persons with considerable incomes only a small portion of which is subject to federal tax.[15] Eliminating this provision would possibly make additional taxpayers eligible for the credits. By the same token, it would save a lot of time for other taxpayers.

- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately (MFS) filing status.

MFS taxpayers are subject to four different treatments in the credits analyzed. They

- are unable to claim the EITC and the Education credits,
- can take advantage of the Child Tax Credit without restrictions,
- can take advantage of the Child and Dependent Care and Adoption credits only if they lived apart from the spouse for the last 6 months of the year, and
- can take advantage of the Credit for Elderly or Disabled only if they lived apart from the spouse for the entire year.

Whether or not there is any rationale for the differences, treating MFS taxpayers consistently would simplify tax compliance for them.

[15] The EGTRRA legislation changed the basis for calculating the EITC from the Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI) to Adjusted Gross Income (AGI).

REV_00149525

Complexity Issue: Credits differ in how they are calculated and their phaseouts, both in terms of the income level at which the phaseout begins/ends and how the credit is phased out.

As illustrated in Table 1.10, the personal credits begin phasing out at different income levels. With the exception of the Child and Dependent Care credit, all of the credits also completely phase out at different levels. As a result, taxpayers must determine for each credit whether they are eligible to claim the credit based on their income.

Table 1.10 Credit Income Limits/Phaseout Thresholds[a] (Tax Year 2000)

Credit	Single/HOH	MFJ	MFS
Adoption	$75,000	$75,000	$75,000
Child Tax	75,000	110,000	55,000
Child and Dependent Care	10,000	10,000	10,000
Education	40,000	80,000	N/A
EITC – 1 qualifying child	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC – 2 or more qualifying children	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC -- No qualifying children	5,770	5,770	N/A
Elderly or Disabled	17,500	20,000-25,000[b]	12,500

Note: The phaseout thresholds for the adoption credit, the dependent care tax credit, and an education credit (HOPE) were changed by EGTRRA effective in future years.
[a]Income level at which phaseouts begin. The credits completely phase out at different amounts.
[b]Depends on whether one or both taxpayers are eligible.

In addition, the credits phase out in different ways. The Child and Dependent Care credit is available to taxpayers with all levels of income, but the percentage of eligible expenses declines from 30 percent to 20 percent at higher incomes. The other personal credits phase out entirely at set income levels but use different calculations to determine the actual amount of the credit.

An example may help make this clear. Mr. and Mrs. Cleaver have four children. They file a joint return. Their combined AGI is $110,150, with Mrs. and Mr. Cleaver having $4,000 and $96,150 in earned income respectively. Mr. Cleaver earned $15,000 of his income from foreign sources. The Cleavers had $7,000 in childcare expenses for two children and $6,000 in qualified adoption expenses during the tax year. The Cleavers also had $8,000 in education expenses; $2,000 for Mrs. Cleaver and $6,000 in college tuition for their son Wally. The Cleavers would determine the amount of credits they are eligible for as follows.

REV_00149526

Adoption

The maximum Adoption credit of $5,000 is reduced by the ratio to $40,000 of the amount by which the taxpayer's MAGI exceeds $75,000. This is illustrated in the following calculations:

1. $110,150 – 75,000 = $35,150
2. $35,150/$40,000 = 88%
3. $5,000 X 88% = $4,393.
4. $5,000 - $4,393 = $607

The Cleavers are able to take an adoption credit of $607. If their total personal credits exceed their precredit tax liability, they can carry forward the adoption credit for up to five years.

Child and Dependent Care

Because their AGI exceeds $28,000, the percentage of qualifying child care expenses that the Cleavers can claim is 20 percent. In calculating their credit the Cleavers apply this percentage to the smaller of

- their qualified expenses ($7,000), or
- the yearly dollar limit for two or more children ($4,800) or
- the lesser of their earned incomes ($4,000).

For the Cleavers, their Child and Dependent Care credit would be $800 (20 percent of $4,000). It is interesting to note that if Mr. Cleaver was a single parent filing as Head of Household, his Child and Dependent Care credit would be $160 more because it would not be constrained by the lower earned income of Mrs. Cleaver.

Child Tax Credit

Computing the Child Tax credit is even more complicated. In this example, the Cleavers have 3 children under 17. This potentially makes them eligible for a $1,500 Child Tax Credit. However, this amount must be reduced because their MAGI exceeds the Married Filing Jointly threshold of $110,000. The credit amount is reduced by 5% of each $1000 (or any part thereof) of MAGI over the $110,000 threshold.[16] Accordingly the Cleavers have a Child Tax credit of $700 calculated as follows.

- $125,150 - $110,000 = $15,150 ($110,000 is the threshold for MFJ)
- $15,150 X .05 = $800 (The $15,150 is rounded up to $16,000)
- $1,500 - $800 = $700.

[16] In calculating their MAGI for this credit, the Cleavers must add back the foreign source income they had previously excluded in calculating their AGI.

REV_00149527

Because of their income level, the Cleavers are not eligible for the Additional Child Tax credit, the Education credits, or the EITC.

Other Personal Credits

The other personal credits also have complex phaseout rules. Education credits involve numerous steps and calculations such as determining the MAGI to see if the credit is phased out partially or completely. The EITC involves a recalculation of income as well as application of phase-in and phase-out rules.[17] Few of the steps or calculations for any of the credits are the same. To calculate the Additional Child Tax credit, the taxpayer must complete a two page worksheet that involves information not entered elsewhere on the return and 10 additional steps including four separate calculations.

The Additional Child Tax Credit is for certain individuals who get less than the full amount of the child tax credit. It is available only to the extent the taxpayers' Social Security and Medicare taxes exceed any refundable EITC. This not only makes it more complex to calculate, but low-income taxpayers whose EITC exceeds the amount of Social Security taxes they paid get no benefit from this provision. In fact, a married couple with three children with earned income of less than $22,850 receives no additional child tax credit. If the same family earned $26,000, their additional child tax credit would be $799.

Reducing Phaseout Complexity

- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.

Complexity for taxpayers could be reduced if phaseouts began and ended at the same income levels for all credits. Doing this would require that phaseouts also be calculated in the same way. This would also reduce complexity and taxpayer burden. The biggest changes under this option would be to the Child and Dependent Care Credit that does not currently phase out but is available to eligible taxpayers at all income levels.

An exception to this might be the EITC which is refundable and intended to provide income support to some of the lowest income workers. The other credits are designed to have a broader reach. Therefore, the income limits for the EITC would need to remain lower than those of the other credits, and the EITC would not be folded into this option. Other issues that would need to be resolved under this option are the start of the phaseout range and the amount of income over which the benefits would be phased out. Generally, a narrower phaseout range will increase the marginal tax rate on taxpayers whose incomes are, or potentially could be, within the range.

[17] Effective for tax year 2002, EGTRRA legislation changed the EITC so that taxpayers use the adjusted gross income, rather than the modified adjusted gross income for calculating the credit. Other changes include simplifying the eligibility rules by excluding nontaxable employee compensation from the earned income definition and eliminating the AMT as a factor.

Complexity Issue: Hope and Lifetime Learning education credits differ in amount and whether they can be claimed by more than one taxpayer or dependent on the return.

The Hope Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit have the same qualifying expenses but differ in that the Hope Credit can be used for each of the eligible individuals—taxpayers and dependents—on a tax return, while the Lifetime Learning Credit amount is on a per family basis. In addition the Hope Credit can be as large as $1,500 per eligible student, while the Lifetime Learning Credit is limited to $1,000 per return.

As the two credits cannot be taken for the same student on the same return, having different amounts and availability requires the taxpayer to do additional calculations in order to determine which credit is most advantageous in their particular situation. And unless the taxpayer reads the instructions and associated publication closely, he or she may assume both credits apply to all individuals on the return. The complexity is increased by the inability of taxpayers to take a tax free distribution from an Education IRA and also claim an Education Tax Credit.

Reducing Education Credit Complexity

- Make education credit amounts and constraints on use consistent.

Making the amounts of the credits consistent, and either making both credits available to be taken on either a per student or per family basis would reduce the burden and complexity associated with these credits.

Complexity Issue: Determining when to claim eligible expenses under the Adoption Credit is difficult.

Qualifying adoption expenses are reasonable and necessary adoption fees, court costs, attorney fees, and other expenses directly related to, and whose principal purpose is for, the legal adoption of an eligible child. The maximum amount of the credit is $5,000 ($6,000 for a child with special needs). The credit is phased out ratably for those with modified adjusted gross income between $75,000 and $115,000.[18]

When claiming an Adoption Credit for a child who is a U.S. citizen or resident, qualifying expenses paid in the year before the adoption becomes final may be claimed in the year after the year of payment. Qualifying expenses paid in the year the adoption becomes final are claimed in that year. Qualifying expenses paid in the year after the adoption becomes final are claimed in the year of payment.

[18] The adoption credit and the beginning of the phase-out range were changed by EGTRRA legislation to a credit of $10,000 per year per child (TY2002), including special needs children (TY2003), and a beginning phase-out range of $150,000 of MAGI (TY2002).

If a taxpayer adopts a child who is not a U.S. citizen or resident at the time the adoption effort began, a credit may not be claimed until the year the adoption becomes final. If adoption expenses are paid after the tax year in which the adoption becomes final, a credit for such expenses is allowed for the tax year of payment.

The fact that the credit is per adoption, and adoptions can involve costs over several years can make these provisions very burdensome. The rules about timing are quite different for other provisions affecting individual taxpayers, most of which are included in the tax return in the year in which the expense is paid.

In addition, in calculating tax liability with the Adoption Credit the taxpayer must first consider other personal credits. If the remaining tax liability is less than the amount of the adoption credit, any remaining Adoption Credit amount can be carried forward for the next five years. In future years, there is no recalculation of the phaseout. The Adoption Credit is the only personal credit we analyzed with the carry forward option.

Reducing Adoption Credit Complexity

- Allow credit for adoption expenses to be taken in the year the qualifying expenses are paid regardless of whether it is a domestic or foreign adoption.

In most parts of the Code that affect non-business taxpayers, expenses are taken into account in the tax year in which they are paid. Using this rule for adoption expenses would eliminate much of the complexity associated when expenses can be claimed. It would also eliminate the differential between domestic and foreign adoptions.

Complexity Issue: Income basis of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled difficult to calculate.

The credit for the Elderly or Disabled is a nonrefundable credit available to low-income taxpayers. A qualified individual is one who is age 65 or older; or, if under age 65, (1) is retired because of permanent and total disability, (2) had not reached the mandatory retirement age for his employer's retirement program at the beginning of the tax year, and (3) has received taxable disability benefits during the year.

The average credit received by the 159,270 taxpayers who claimed the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled in 1999 was $208. Complexity in the credit includes calculating the correct base amount to start from and calculating the ensuing reduction in that base amount as a function of nontaxable Social Security and pension payments and AGI.

The credit is figured starting with an initial amount that is set by statute. See Table 1.11 for the initial amounts.

REV_00149530

[a] The lesser of this amount or taxable disability income.

After determining their initial amount (above), the taxpayer's next step is to subtract from this amount certain nontaxable pensions and benefits such as nontaxable social security payments, certain railroad retirement pension payments, and other nontaxable pension benefits.

Next taxpayers must determine their excess AGI by subtracting from their AGI $7500 if single, HOH, or qualifying widow(er), $10,000 if MFJ, and $5,000 MFS. This amount is then divided by two. If the final income amount is smaller than the initial amount, taxpayers may qualify for a credit that is limited by their tax after adjusting for the Foreign tax credit and the Child and Dependent Care Credit.

All of these calculations are required for a credit that averages about $200, in part because of the low income thresholds and the fact that the credit has not been adjusted for inflation since 1983. This means that as Social Security benefits are raised to keep pace with increases in the cost of living, eligibility thresholds erode the benefit. Even those taxpayers that are eligible for the credit do not receive much benefit. A married couple with one qualifying taxpayer who had $9,425 in taxable disability income, $5,196 of nontaxable disability, and an AGI of $14,004 gets a credit of $45.
The likelihood that a taxpayer will qualify for this credit is so small that one tax professional noted that there is a saying in her office: "If it worked, you did it wrong." This is borne out by the high number of contacts taxpayers make with IRS on the credit and the number of error notices that are sent in response to problems on the taxpayers' returns.

The credit also differs from other personal credits in that it requires MFS taxpayers to live apart for the entire year rather than the last six months of the year. This also increases the burden on a group of taxpayers that may be in a poor position to correctly determine their tax liability and corresponding eligibility for the credit.

Reducing the Complexity of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled

- Base credit on qualifying individual's AGI.

The credit's complexity could be significantly reduced if eligibility for and the amount of the credit were based on the qualifying individual's AGI adjusted to reflect income from nontaxable sources such as Social Security benefits. This would eliminate the difficulties taxpayers face in determining eligibility based on a recalculated income base and allow the credit to be calculated from information on the return or otherwise readily available.

- Require MFS taxpayers to live apart only for the last six months of the year to make this credit consistent with the other personal credits.

Complexity Issue: In some instances certain personal credits must be taken before others in determining final income tax liability.

When claiming the Adoption Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, taxpayers must first adjust their tax liability to reflect any other personal credits they are eligible for. For the Adoption Credit, it appears the reason is to allow the taxpayer to carry forward into future tax years any credit amount in excess of their tax liability. The reasoning is not clear for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled. This credit "stacking" requires taxpayers taking the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled to determine if they can take the Child and Dependent Care Credit for which few are eligible.

Reducing Complexity Associated with Credit Stacking

- Eliminate order in which certain personal credits are taken.

By eliminating the stacking order for certain credits and simply limiting the availability of credits by the taxpayer's liability, taxpayers will have to undertake fewer unproductive steps in completing their tax returns. However, refundable tax credits, such as the Additional Child Tax Credit and the EITC, would have to be considered last to maintain their refundable nature.

REV_00149532

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

Complexity within the personal credits analyzed could be reduced by making the credits as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, phaseouts, and filing status eligibility. As currently enacted, each of the credits requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations, often for little financial benefit. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service.

Specifically, the personal credits could be less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Standardize the definitions of "qualifying child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.
- Use one age for defining a child.
- Consistently define qualifying income.
- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately filing status.
- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.
- Make education credit amounts and constraints on usage consistent.
- Base amount of and eligibility for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled on qualifying individual's AGI.
- Allow certain personal credits to be taken in any order (refundable credits would need to be considered after the others).

CHAPTER II
PERSONAL DEDUCTIONS AND EXEMPTIONS

Tax deductions and personal exemptions are the principal vehicles individual taxpayers use to reduce taxable income. Many personal deductions, such as those for charitable contributions and mortgage interest, are allowed only if the taxpayer itemizes deductions on Form 1040, Schedule A, rather than taking the standard deduction. About 30 percent of taxpayers itemize deductions. Taxpayers who itemize struggle with many of the same complexity issues as taxpayers that claim credits (See Chapter I). For example, like credits, various deductions and exemptions include definitional issues, differing value limits (floors and caps) and reductions (phaseouts), and differing income bases for determining their eligibility for and value of the deduction or exemption. For the 10 percent of individual taxpayers that itemize and claim at least one credit the impact of this complexity is compounded. In general, because itemized deductions and exemptions are claimed on over 30 million tax returns, even relatively minimal complexity can have a huge impact on the overall system.

Because of the strong links between personal exemptions and itemized deductions, we analyzed personal exemptions as well as the deductions for medical and dental expenses, home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, personal casualty loss, job and most other miscellaneous expenses and other miscellaneous deductions in light of these issues. Table 2.1 presents whether the exemption/deduction has a floor (minimum amount of expense before a deduction can be taken), cap (maximum amount that can be deducted), and whether there are other limitations or if the item is phased out at higher income levels.

The various limits on exemptions/deductions have been put into the code over time generally to limit the revenue impact of the exemption/deduction. In addition to the limitations discussed below, the personal exemption and certain deductions also interact with the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT). In the case of personal exemptions, a high number compared to AGI can trigger the AMT. Some deductions, such as medical and dental expenses, are treated differently than in the regular tax system in calculating the AMT adding further complexity. The EGTRRA legislation gradually eliminates the limitation on itemized deductions and phases out the restrictions on personal exemptions between Tax Year 2006 and Tax Year 2010.

[a] Certain itemized deductions are uniformly subject to the overall limit on deductions based on AGI. There is a single phaseout for all affected itemized deductions. This limitation will be reduced beginning in TY 2006 and eliminated after TY 2009.

WHO CLAIMS DEDUCTIONS

Generally, taxpayers are entitled to claim two types of deductions: (1) personal exemptions for themselves, their spouses, and any dependents; and (2) either a standard deduction or the total of their itemized deductions. For 1998, 38 million taxpayers chose to itemize deductions rather than take the standard deduction. Generally, taxpayers itemize deductions when the total of their itemized deductions exceeds the amount of the standard deduction to which they are otherwise entitled. However, some taxpayers may itemize even if their itemized deductions are less than their standard deduction.[19] The top 10 deductions claimed on returns in 1998 are listed in Table 2.2 below.

[19] One reason that some taxpayers may itemize deductions even when that does not appear to be tax-minimizing behavior is due to interactions with state income taxes. Some states do not permit a taxpayer to itemize on a state income tax return unless they do so on a federal income tax return. As a result, itemizing may reduce a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.

Many taxpayers that itemize claim more than one deduction. Table 2.3 shows the number of deductions claimed by taxpayers.

Information on the number of returns having various combinations of deductions is shown in Table 2.4. The categories of itemized deductions included in the table are real estate taxes, charitable contributions, state and local taxes, home mortgage interest, and a combination of miscellaneous expenses. Real estate taxes with charitable contributions is the most frequently used combination of deductions, and the other

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific deduction, calculate the amount of the deduction, and claim it on their tax return. The amount of resulting burden varies according to the individual taxpayer's situation. For example, taxpayers who contribute money or appreciable property to charities will experience more burden than those taxpayers who give a similar amount weekly through employer deductions to a United Fund campaign. Table 2.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each deduction we analyzed. All itemized deductions must be reported on Schedule A (Form 1040).

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

There are many issues associated with complexity of personal exemptions and itemized deductions. This report focuses on the many different approaches used to limit the value of certain deductions in some situations and on the recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions.

Complexity Issue: Itemized deductions and the personal exemption have different limits and their value to taxpayers differs.

As illustrated in Table 2.6 a variety of limitations are imposed on a taxpayer's ability to take itemized deductions and personal exemptions. These include floors, caps, and other limits. In many cases these limitations are applied differently for different deductions. Specifically,

- some itemized deductions are limited based on AGI,
- some itemized deductions can only be taken after the amount of the expense has exceeded a set percentage of the taxpayer's AGI,
- some are limited by the value of the underlying financial transaction, and
- almost all are subject to a different combination of the above.

Limits on Itemized Deductions

Currently, the total amount a taxpayer can deduct of home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, taxes, job expenses, and most other miscellaneous deductions is limited for higher income taxpayers. For tax year 2000, taxpayers with an AGI above $128,950 ($64,475 if married filing separately) must reduce the total amount that they can deduct by the smaller of

- three percent of the amount by which their AGI exceeds the above thresholds or
- 80 percent of the itemized deductions that are subject to the limit.

REV_00149539

To figure the limit, taxpayers must complete a 10-step worksheet that includes five separate calculations. The EGTRRA legislation reduces the limitation on itemized deductions by one-third beginning in 2006 and eliminates it entirely beginning in 2010.

Floors on Deductions

Some items such as medical and dental expenses, job expenses, and other miscellaneous expenses can only be deducted if the amount of the expense exceeds a certain percentage of AGI. After that floor is reached, qualified expenses can be deducted subject to other limits in some cases. The floors are

- Medical and dental expenses - 7.5 percent of AGI (10 percent when calculating AMT),
- Job expenses and other miscellaneous expenses -- two percent of AGI, and
- Personal casualty loss - $100 per casualty plus the excess of all casualty losses for the year subject to a 10 percent of AGI floor.

Caps

Five deductions are capped; each in a different way. Specifically,

- The home mortgage interest deduction is limited to the interest on a loan amount of $ 1 million or $500,000 (MFS) unless grandfather rules apply,
- The home equity loan interest deduction is limited to a loan amount of $100,000 or $50,000 (MFS),
- The investment interest deduction cannot exceed net investment income,
- Gambling losses deducted cannot exceed winnings, and
- Charitable contributions are limited to 20, 30, or 50 percent of AGI depending on the type of contribution and type of qualifying organization.

Carry Forwards

Two deductions—charitable contributions and investment interest expenses—can be carried forward to the next year's tax returns[20].

Other Limits on Charitable Contributions

Charitable deductions may be the most complex in terms of calculating how much can be deducted. In part this is due to the many types of contributions that can be made and the different types of organizations involved. If the taxpayer's charitable contributions do not exceed 20 percent of income, there are no other limits on charitable contributions except the overall limit on certain deductions.[21] If the value of the contributions is between 20 and 50 percent of AGI, a variety of conditions affect the amount that can be deducted. The amount deducted for charitable contributions cannot be more than 50 percent of the taxpayer's AGI for the year.

[20] A casualty loss of a business which becomes part of a net operating loss can be carried forward.

Depending on the nature of the organization and the donated property, a deduction cap of 50 percent, 30 percent, or 20 percent of adjusted gross income applies. Also, carry forward provisions and overall deduction limits apply. The box below summarizes this complex process.

[21] Ninety-seven percent of taxpayer returns with charitable contributions have charitable contributions that are less than 20 percent of AGI.

REV_00149541

Charitable Donation Deduction Rules:

The deduction caps identified below are applied in a specific order with a total deduction for the year limited to 50 percent of adjusted gross income.

1. 50 percent deduction caps for 50 percent limit organizations.[22]
2. 30 percent of adjusted gross income caps for contributions to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations, except for contributions of capital gain property subject to the 20 percent cap under "4" below. (Also, if any contributions to 50 percent limit organizations were made, including donations of capital gain property that are subject to the 30 percent cap under "3" below, this cap is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions to the 50 percent limit organizations.)
3. 30 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap (step 1) were made, the allowable deduction for these 30 percent limit contributions is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap.)
4. 20 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions are deductible under any of the other caps (steps 1-3) the taxpayer may deduct contributions subject to the 20 percent cap only to the extent that there is any adjusted gross income remaining under the overall adjusted gross limit.)

Further, even if none of the charitable contributions are subject to the caps, a taxpayer's overall charitable deduction is subject to the three percent reduction in itemized deductions if his or her 2000 adjusted gross income exceeds $128,950 ($64,475 for married filing separately).

If a taxpayer's deduction is limited by any of the caps, a five-year carry forward is allowed for the excess.

[22] Certain charitable organizations are designated as 50 percent limit organizations, because the amount of deduction that may be taken for contributions to them is 50 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. Some examples are churches, educational organizations, and hospitals. Other organizations are limited to 30 percent or 20 percent, depending on the type of property given and the type of organization.

REV_00149542

Personal Exemption Phaseout

The amount taxpayers can deduct in Tax year 2000 for personal exemptions begins to be phased out for taxpayers with AGI between $96,700 and $193,400 for tax year 2000 depending on filing status. It is completely phased out between $157,950 and $315,900 (for tax year 2000) again depending on filing status.

Reducing the Complexity of Itemized Deductions and Personal Exemptions

The many different limits on when and how many taxpayers can claim itemized deductions create multiple layers of complexity and burden. Except for casualty or theft loss from income producing property all itemized deductions are subject to some limit. Taxpayers must not only determine what limit or limits the deduction(s) are subject to, but also what the limit is, and how it is calculated. Personal exemptions are phased out in yet a different way. Many taxpayers must consult a number of publications, fill out multiple forms and make many calculations to determine whether it is advantageous to itemize and their ultimate tax liability.

One straightforward way to reduce this complexity and associated taxpayer burden would be to subject all itemized deductions to the same overall limit or limits. For example

- Itemized deductions could be limited to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total. Currently, this is the limitation most frequently imposed.
- Taxpayers could be allowed to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of AGI, a common floor.
- Itemized deductions could be phased out at higher income levels.

What limit is imposed is less important than using a single limit. The impact of the limitations on lower income taxpayers could be eliminated or reduced by setting an AGI threshold only above which the limits apply as is currently done. Complexity could be further reduced if any AGI thresholds or phaseouts for itemized deductions and personal exemptions are the same as those for personal credits.

Complexity Issue: The recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions are cumbersome.

Recordkeeping creates a large burden for taxpayers completing and filing Form 1040 and Schedule A. The rules related to recordkeeping for charitable donations and contributions can be extremely cumbersome. Different forms of proof are required for different types and amounts of contributions. These are explained in the box below.

REV_00149543

Recordkeeping Requirements For Charitable Contributions:

Donations made by cash or check for less than $250 require only a statement, receipt, or cancelled check. Donations of goods, clothing or other property also require a receipt from the organization to which the items were donated.

If the value of the donation is $250 or more, the taxpayer needs to get a letter or other written acknowledgement of their donation from the charity. This letter must show the name and address of the organization, the date and location of the donation, the amount of cash or a description of the items donated and whether or not the organization gave the taxpayer anything in return for their donation. If so, a description of the goods received and an estimate of their value is required.

Form 8283 must be completed if the amount of the deduction is more than $500, or donates less than the entire interest in property (e.g., charitable remainder trusts).

If the total deduction for the property is more than $5,000, the taxpayer must complete Section B of Form 8283 and may be required to attach an appraisal of the item(s) they donated. Form 8283, Section B also includes a section for the appraiser and donee organization to complete.

Many of the recordkeeping requirements are necessary because IRS does not receive any information from the charitable organizations on the contributions that they receive from taxpayers. If the charitable organization were allowed to provide the taxpayer and the IRS with this information then the recordkeeping requirements for individuals could be reduced. This could be done on a voluntary basis. Those charitable organizations who chose to do this type of third party reporting to IRS could market the reduced recordkeeping as a benefit to their contributors.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

As with the personal credits, complexity within itemized deductions and personal exemptions could best be reduced by making the specific deductions as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, and phaseouts. To the extent the rules surrounding deductions and exemptions mirror those applicable to personal tax credits, more simplification and reduced taxpayer burden would be achieved. Under current law, each of the deductions requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service. In addition, if voluntary information reporting was allowed to substitute for other charitable contributions, recordkeeping requirements for individual taxpayers (and some amount of complexity) would also be reduced.

Specifically, itemized deductions and the personal exemption could be made less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Limit itemized deductions to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total.
- Allow taxpayers to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of their AGI
- Change phaseouts for personal exemptions to be consistent with the income thresholds for itemized deductions.
- Allow charitable organizations to file information returns with taxpayers and the IRS.

CHAPTER III
CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

Taxpayers are subjected to significant burden and complexity when reporting capital gains and losses from the sale of assets. They also do tax planning to offset the impact of capital gains tax provisions. This burden and complexity result from the need for the taxpayer to determine asset holding periods, figure cost basis, determine if capital losses can be used to offset capital gains or other income, distinguish among asset classes, and determine what tax rate to apply.

No need to differentiate. All taxpayers are subject to the burden.

The accuracy and completeness of reported capital gains/losses is negatively affected by the amount of recordkeeping and time needed to make calculations and understand rules and instructions for completing special forms and worksheets. This chapter identifies several areas of complexity relating to the treatment of capital gains and losses as well as options for reducing complexity and taxpayer burden. While both individual and corporate taxpayers have capital gains income, this discussion is limited to individual taxpayers.

TAXATION OF CAPITAL GAINS

In their simplest form, capital gains are profits from the sale or exchange of capital assets. Assets may include stocks, mutual funds and other financial instruments, real estate, collectibles and other property whether or not the property is used in a business or acquired for investment. Both Wage and Investment and Self-Employed taxpayers may have capital gains. Determining whether a taxpayer has a capital gain (or loss) is a multi-step process. The steps involved include determining:

- the amount of capital gain/loss,
- the holding period,
- the source of the gain/loss,
- whether the gain/loss can be offset against other capital gains/losses, and
- the tax rate to apply.

These types of complexity include maintaining records (potentially over long periods of time), Making multiple or complicated calculations to compute basis and the amount of tax, having to make judgements about complicated technical legal issues, and tax from issues (long forms, interactions between different forms).

Is there a gain or loss?

After selling assets, taxpayers must determine whether they sold their property for more than their "cost basis". In the simplest terms, cost basis, or basis, is what the taxpayer paid for the asset. However, in many cases this amount must be adjusted. For example, previous depreciation amounts and all nontaxable distributions must be subtracted from the taxpayer's basis. Purchase commissions, qualified improvements, and state and local transfer taxes paid by the taxpayer all increase the asset's basis. In addition, specific types of assets may be subject to other basis adjustments. After any adjustments to basis, taxpayers calculate the difference between the sales price and the basis to determine their capital gain or loss.

To determine their basis, taxpayers must keep adequate records for capital assets to be able to determine if, at the time of sale, they incurred a capital gain or loss. In many cases this can be a burdensome task, depending on the length of time the asset is held, the way the asset was acquired, the type of asset, the number of assets the taxpayer has, and other considerations.

What is the holding period?

A taxpayer's holding period is generally determined by the amount of time that elapses between the purchase date and the date of sale. In general the holding period begins on the day after an asset is acquired. But if the taxpayer acquired the property through means other than by purchase (e.g., through a like-kind exchange or gift), the computation of its holding period may begin at an earlier date. Wash sale and short sale rules may require a taxpayer to use a date other than the acquisition date.[23]

Inherited assets are always considered held long term.

Historically there have been two holding period categories for capital gains/losses. These are short term for assets generally held one year or less and long term for assets held longer than one year. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, as amended by RRA '98, created a third category for assets held for more than five years.

There are exceptions to the general definition of short-term gain. For instance:

- When a taxpayer disposes of stock acquired in the exercise of an incentive stock option, the sale results in a long-term capital gain or loss if the stock was held at least one year. As such the holding period for this asset begins on the day of acquisition---not the day after.
- A short-term loss on the sale or exchange of shares in a mutual fund held six months or less could incorporate a long-term loss if a capital gain dividend is distributed before the shares are sold. For example, assume a taxpayer purchases shares in a regulated investment company for $3,000 on July 30, 2000 and sells them on December 18, 2000 for $2,500. Also assume that the company distributes a $50 capital gain dividend to the taxpayer. Disregarding sales commissions, the $500 loss ($2,500 sales price - $3,000 basis) is reported as a $450 short-term loss and a $50 long-term loss.
- A gain or loss on the sale of cattle and horses that were held by the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 24 months is short term. However, a gain or loss on the sale of other livestock (not including poultry), held by [23] A "wash sale" is a financial transaction that involves selling a security at a loss and then buying the same security back within thirty days. A "short sale" refers to a financial transaction in which an investor borrows and sells a security they do not own with the hope of buying it back at a later date at a lower price.

the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 12 months is short term.

- Gain or loss with respect to a section 1256 contract[24] is treated as 40 percent short-term capital gain or loss, and 60 percent long-term capital gain or loss regardless of the taxpayer's holding period.

What is the source of the gain/loss?

The type of asset that is the source of the capital gain/loss also may have an impact on how it is taxed. For example, $250,000 of the gain ($500,000 for Married Filing Jointly) generated from the sale of a primary residence is in many circumstances excluded from income and therefore exempt from taxation. Other special rules apply to sales of stock in certain small businesses, exchanges of similar property, and collectibles such as art and jewelry.

Can the gain/loss be offset against other gains/losses?

Depending on the type of asset, the gain/loss may be offset against other gains or losses. In addition, under certain circumstances a capital loss that exceeds any potentially offsetting gain may be carried forward.

Gains from the sale of property used for personal use only, rather than for investment are taxed. However, any loss from the sale of personal use property cannot be deducted. Only losses from investment or business use property can be deducted.

In general, short-term capital gains can be offset by short-term losses. The same is true for long-term gains and losses. In addition, any long-term loss in excess of long-term gain can be used to reduce short-term gain. And, a net loss in excess of a net gain is deductible up to the $3,000 capital loss limit.

If a taxpayer's capital losses exceed the amount of capital gain, up to $3,000 annually ($1,500 if MFS) is deductible against other income.[25] Any capital loss not used is carried forward to the next tax year. Unused capital losses are carried over until they are used or the taxpayer dies.

What rate is applied?

Capital gains are taxed at a variety of rates depending on the holding period, when the assets are/were purchased/sold, the source of the gain, and the amount of the other [24] A section 1256 contract is defined as any regulated futures contract, any foreign currency contract, any nonequity option, dealer equity option, or any dealer securities futures contract.

[a] Assets may be marked to market as of January 1, 2001, by paying tax on accrued capital gains. These assets are then taxed at the lower rate if held until 2006.
[b] Lower rate only applies to the portion of the capital gain that would be taxed at 15% if there were no capital gains rates.

There are additional sub-categories of long-term gains and losses (e.g., long-term gains or losses resulting from the sale of collectibles) that are taxed at special rates. Table 3.2 summarizes the rates at which long-term capital gains from sales of some special assets are taxed.

Table 3.2: Special Long-Term Capital Gain Tax Rates

If your net long-term capital gain is from…	Then your capital gain rate is…
Collectibles	28%[a]
Unrecaptured Section 1250 gain[b]	25%[a]
Gain eligible for the 50% exclusion under Section 1202[c]	28%

[a] 15% if taxpayer's marginal tax rate is 15%.
[b] Section 1250 refers to real property that has been depreciated. Determination of unrecaptured section 1250 gain requires completion of a 17-line IRS worksheet.
[c] A 10% rate applies to the part of the net capital gain that would be taxed at 15% if there were no capital gains rates.

Where Capital Gains / Losses are Reported

Table 3.3 below categorizes various capital assets, identifies allowable gains and losses, and notes where such gains and losses are reported on IRS forms.

[26] The tax rate in the table is that applying to gains on sales of assets other than collectibles and depreciable assets subject to recapture.

Example

The following example illustrates the process for calculating capital gains.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson and their two children live in Springfield. Mrs. Nelson is the sole proprietor of a company that makes special tires for Sport Utility Vehicles. The Nelsons own their primary residence and a rental property at the beach. They jointly own a variety of securities including 1,000 shares of common stock in New Emerging Development Technology, Inc. (NEDTECH). Mr. Nelson collects coins.

The Nelsons have decided to liquidate several of their holdings. They decide to sell 100 shares of NEDTECH, Mr. Nelson's coin collection, and their rental property at the beach. What steps do they have to take to calculate their gains or losses and any tax they owe from the transactions?

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their shares in NEDTECH?

Determine the cost basis of the stock. The Nelsons would need to retrieve and review brokerage statements to determine the price of the stock when it was purchased, the price when the stock was sold, and the amount of commission paid on the purchase and sale. If the Nelsons participated in NEDTECH's Dividend Reinvestment Plan, they would also need to determine how many shares were purchased, on what dates, and at what price.

Determine the holding period. The Nelsons would need to review brokerage statements to determine exactly how many years and months they owned the stock.

A short-term gain or loss (shares held one year or less) is reported in Part I of Schedule D. A long-term gain or loss (shares held more than one year) is reported in Part II of Schedule D. A short-term gain would be taxed at ordinary income rates while a long-term gain would be taxed at a maximum rate of 20%.

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of the coin collection?

Determine the cost basis of the collectibles. The Nelsons would need to find invoices that show how much they paid for each coin in the collection.

Determine the holding period. Calculate the number of years and months the Nelsons owned the collection before they sold it.

Losses on the sale of personal assets, such as personal coin collections, are not deductible although profits on the sale of collectibles meeting the holding requirement for long term gains are taxable at the same rates as ordinary income, but not to exceed a 28% rate. Any capital gain would be reported in Part II of Schedule D.

REV_00149551

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property?

As the Nelsons did with their securities and coin collection, in order to report the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property they must first determine the asset's cost basis and holding period. The basis may have been reduced over time due to depreciation deductions claimed by the Nelsons or increased over time if the Nelsons made significant improvements to the property. Depreciable property used in a business, such as rental property held for more than one year, is referred to as a Section 1231 asset. A short-term gain or loss is reported on Form 4797, Part II and carried to Form 1040, page 1 as ordinary income. A long-term net loss is carried from Form 4797, Part 1 to Form 4797, Part II and then carried to Form 1040, page 1 and reported as an ordinary loss. A long-term net section 1231 gain is carried to Schedule D and reported as a long-term capital gain. This gain is taxed at a maximum rate of 25% to the extent of unrecaptured section 1250 gain. The remaining gain is taxed at 20%, 10%, or 8% rate, whichever applies.

WHO CLAIMS CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

During their lifetime, most taxpayers will incur a capital gain or loss. For many taxpayers this will be limited to the sale of their primary residence and any gain may be wholly or partially excluded. But an increasing number of taxpayers are investing in capital assets such as mutual funds, stocks, and bonds. For 1999, 21 percent of all individual tax returns claimed capital gains or losses. Nineteen percent filed a Schedule D, and two percent either a form 4797 or both a Schedule D and form 4797. In 1996, 14 percent of taxpayers claimed a capital gain or loss, with 12 percent filing a Schedule D and 2 percent a form 4797 or both. Table 3.4 breaks down these taxpayers for 1999 by AGI.[27]

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

The two primary forms used by individual taxpayers to report capital gains and losses are Schedule D and Form 4797. The following publications are also available:

- 523 – Selling Your Home
- 537 – Installment Sales
- 544 – Sales and other Dispositions of Assets
- 550 - Investment Income and Expenses
- 551 – Basis of Assets

A recent survey of taxpayers shows that an average of 6 hours is spent completing Schedule D, for a total of 154 million hours. IRS currently estimates that the average time it takes a taxpayer to prepare, complete, and file Form 4797 is 49 hours. The 1.7 million taxpayers that filed this form are estimated to have spent 84 million hours completing it. Of the 49 hours taxpayers spend completing and filing Form 4797, two thirds of that time (33 hours) is spent creating and maintaining records. Additionally, 8.5 hours is spent preparing, copying and assembling the form, while another 7.5 hours is needed for learning the law and/or the form. Sixty-nine percent of Schedule D filers use a paid preparer. This increases to 84 percent for Form 4797 filers.

From an IRS perspective, Schedule D was one of the top 10 reasons taxpayers called or e-mailed for assistance.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed two complexity issues related to capital gains. They are multiple long-term capital gains rates, and differences in the tax treatment of gains and losses.

Complexity Issue: Multiple long-term capital gains tax rates can create confusion.

Historically, there have been two capital gains rates based on the holding period for the asset—short term and long term. In recent years however, additional long-term rate categories have been added. These are based on holding period as well as type of asset or gain. There are now six different long-term rates ranging from 8 percent to 28 percent.

Reducing Tax Rate Complexity

Replacing the existing rate structure for long-term gains with two rates (one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets and another for higher brackets) would greatly simplify what is required of taxpayers in determining their tax liability for capital gains. Building on the current rate structure that has one rate for taxpayers in the 10 and 15 percent tax brackets and another rate for taxpayers in all higher brackets and applying these rates to the gains from all types of assets would result in a two-thirds reduction in the number of long-term rates.

REV_00149553

Complexity Issue: Gains and losses from the same sale can have different tax treatments.

Whether the sale of an asset results in a gain or loss affects its tax treatment. For example, gains from personal assets (e.g., collectibles) are taxed, but losses from the sale of personal assets cannot be deducted. Losses from the sale of depreciable property that is used in a business are treated as ordinary losses, where as those that are sold at a gain are taxed as capital gains.

Reducing Complexity

Treating the gain/loss from the sale of capital assets consistently would help simplify this issue. This could involve allowing taxpayers to deduct losses from the sale of personal property or eliminating taxes on capital gains from personal property. For depreciable property used in a business this would include treating all losses and gains as either ordinary income/loss or capital income/loss.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

The complexity associated with capital gains could be reduced if

- The number of long-term capital gains rates were reduced to two, one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets for ordinary income and one for all other tax brackets.
- The gain/loss from the sale of capital assets were consistently determined to be either capital or ordinary.

APPENDICES

Introduction

The Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 provides a list of topics which may be included in IRS' analysis of the sources of complexity in administration of the Federal tax laws. Each of the Appendices in the report addresses one of these topics. The seven topics listed in Sec. 4022(a)(1) are:

(A)- questions frequently asked by taxpayers with respect to return filing,
(B)- common errors made by taxpayers in filling out their returns,
(C)- areas of law which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS,
(D)- major areas of law in which there is no (or incomplete) published guidance or in which the law is uncertain,
(E)- areas in which revenue agents make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law,
(F)- the impact of recent legislation on complexity,
(G)- forms supplied by the IRS, including the time it takes for taxpayers to complete, and review forms, the number of taxpayers who use each form, and how recent legislation has affected the time it takes to complete and review forms.

Several concerns arose as we examined IRS data systems to obtain current data relevant to each of these topics. First, the data were developed by various functions for their own purposes, and were not designed to answer tax policy questions such as these. We chose the data to use by how closely they would respond to the specific topics of interest. Nevertheless, the fact remains that these analyses are based on data sources that were not designed for this purpose. A second concern is that the data do not necessarily relate well to each other. Therefore, although we sometimes combined more than one data source for a specific issue, we must caveat the results. In the future, as IRS develops its new data systems, we expect they will be more comparable across business units and functions.

The Appendices of this report present the data which formed one piece of the decision-making process when choosing issues for this report from complex provisions. In each Appendix, we give an overview of each of the seven topics suggested by Congress.

Taxpayer Questions

Overview

IRS receives taxpayer questions on return filing via three communication channels: (1) customer service calls, (2) TeleTax calls, and (3) Internet e-mail correspondence. The IRS records the subject of each question asked and tracks the frequency with which a specific subject is received by each channel and reports them in the Customer Service Calls Report, the TeleTax Report, and the Internet E-mail Report. Each report is based on a different source and each categorizes questions uniquely for its own purposes and so are not directly comparable. Nevertheless, these are some of the best IRS data for analyzing specific taxpayer stumbling points.

Customer Service Calls Report

The Customer Service Calls report is compiled from data tracked via the IRS Telephone Routing and Interactive System (TRIS). When calling IRS on a Customer Service line, taxpayers access a "live" person. TRIS records the frequency of these incoming calls to IRS through its toll free lines and tabulates taxpayer questions by subject. In 2000, about 5 million of the 68 million calls received were inquiries relating to tax provisions.[28] These taxpayer questions were tracked among 40 subject categories related to tax law. The call descriptions of the ten most frequently asked questions of IRS by taxpayers using TRIS are shown in Table A.1.

[28]An example of questions not related to tax provisions would be, for example, refund inquiries which accounted for more than 22 million calls.

Internet E-mail Report

The IRS Internet site, at www.irs.gov, contains a Web page that allows taxpayers to submit questions by e-mail to Agency customer service representatives. Currently, questions relating to any of 18 tax categories can be submitted and answered. Based on the tax category selected, questions asked through the Web site are routed to one of five IRS locations to the representative best able to respond to it. Prepared answers to frequently asked questions are used to reply to routine questions but most questions require individual responses. Even though IRS historically has not advertised this service, other than in some IRS publications, and the Web page is not located in a prominent part of the site, IRS received and answered approximately 295,000 e-mail questions in FY00.

Data describing the subject and frequency of questions asked through the Web site are recorded in the Internet E-mail report. The ten most frequently asked questions of IRS though its Web site in FY00 as reported in the Internet E-mail report are listed in Table A.2.

Appendix B
Common Errors Taxpayers Make on Their Returns

Overview

Errors can occur at any stage of tax return processing—from the very beginning when taxpayers complete their returns through a three-year period in which adjustments to the returns can be made. IRS tracks the number of errors made by taxpayers during these various stages in two reports—the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Customer Service Adjustments Report. Together, these reports identify routine errors, including both math and clerical errors, made by taxpayers on their returns. A high number of errors may reflect difficulties taxpayers encounter due to complex provisions

The Math Error Notice Code Report

Errors in returns are found at different stages of processing. During the initial input processing of a return, a series of automated checks for errors is performed, and all returns are reviewed by an automated system for over 230 different types of errors. When errors are found, notices are generated and sent to taxpayers either alerting them to corrective actions already taken by the Agency or requesting their review of an apparent problem in their return. The Math Error Notice Code Report, produced by Forms and Submission Processing, records reasons for notices having been sent to taxpayers and where on a form or schedule the error appeared. Although the report is titled the Math Error Notice Code Report, it includes many non-computational errors, such as the reporting of an incorrect Social Security Number or errors in transferring numbers from supporting schedules and forms. The ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 2000 are shown in Table B.1.a. Similarly, the ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 1999 are shown in Table B.1.b. Together these ten errors account for 54 percent of all math errors recorded in the report. Together these ten math errors account for over half of the math errors recorded in the both years.

Taxpayer Errors and Complexity

The large number of errors made may reflect that a large number of people complete the form (e.g., for Earned Income Credit) and not necessarily that a large percentage of the taxpayers make errors. The percentage of taxpayers making errors, however, is a better indication of the complexity. Using data from the 1999 Math Error report, OPERA staff calculated the percentage of errors made by taxpayers completing a line on their tax return that related to an issue identified in the body of this report as complex. In constructing Table B.2, staff reviewed the 230 math error categories identified in the Math Error report and combined and sorted these categories according to a corresponding area of complexity. The results of this analysis show that the highest taxpayer error rate (9.3 percent) occurs in the process of calculating the Earned Income Tax Credit.

The data shown in Table B.3 are based on a separate review of data from the 1999 Math Error report. Grouping the errors by complexity category shows that in 1999, 45.6 percent of the total 8.9 million math errors made by taxpayers related to filing definitional issues. As a separate category, Earned Income Tax Credit errors accounted for the highest percentage (51.5 percent) of math errors related to categories of complexity.

The Adjustments Report

An adjustment is defined as a modification to a taxpayer's account. Adjustments can be initiated by the taxpayer or the IRS and can relate to any of five categories:

1) Taxpayer requested changes [e.g., amended return, claim],
2) Taxpayer response to an IRS Math Error Notice,
3) Change in legislation late in the year or a retroactive change,
4) IRS error, or
5) Taxpayer requested carryback.

The number and type of dollar adjustments (increase or decrease) made to taxpayers' accounts are listed in the Adjustments Report produced by Customer Service. This report consists of 45 adjustment categories. Unlike the Math Error Notice Code report which records errors during report processing, adjustments to taxpayer accounts can occur any time during the three years after a return is processed. Therefore, complete data for a specific tax year is not available from the Adjustments report for three years after the end of a tax year.

The ten most frequent adjustments based on taxpayer-requested adjustments and taxpayer responses to an IRS notice for tax year 1997 are shown in Table B.4.a. Together these ten adjustments account for about 73 percent of all adjustments reported in the 2000 Adjustment Report. According to the data from both the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Adjustment Report, the highest percentage of taxpayer errors occurred at some point in the process of calculating and reporting an Earned Income Tax Credit.

Appendix C
Areas of Law Which Frequently Result in Disagreements Between Taxpayers and the Internal Revenue Service

Overview

Provisions of federal tax law that, when implemented, result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS may result in litigation. The National Taxpayer Advocate's Annual Report to Congress identifies the top ten tax issues most litigated by taxpayers. Issues related to tax complexity discussed in this report are prominent in the lists of litigated issues.

Findings from Taxpayer Advocate Report

The following list identifies the ten most common areas in which court opinions were rendered. It should be noted that virtually all cases involved a penalty issue along with at least one of the other issues. In the absence of a penalty most taxpayers have no financial incentive to incur the high costs of litigation. Penalties, as an issue by itself, is probably not a top issue comparable to the other, non-penalty issues identified in the table below.

Table C.1. Areas in Which Court Opinions Were Rendered

Rank	Description
1	Penalty issues
2	Court Procedures
3	Deductible vs Not Deductible trade or business expenses
4	Earned income credit
5	Gross Income Inclusions and Exclusions)
6	Accounting Methods
7	Statute of Limitations
8	Abatements
9	Self Employed, Independent Contractor vs Employee
10	Last Known Address and Notice of Deficiency

Note: The data collection methodology for issues that are ranked as the most common represents a review of tax cases for a three month period, October 1, 1999 – December 31, 1999. This sample of 302 opinions comprised 22 percent of the nearly 1400 opinions for 1999. Opinions are from the U.S. Tax Court, U.S. Court of Federal claims, and U.S. District Court.

Appendix D
Major Areas of Law in Which There is No (or Incomplete) Guidance or in Which the Law is Uncertain

The Internal Revenue Service issues regulations and other published guidance to interpret and explain the Internal Revenue Code. The Office of Chief Counsel in IRS is the primary drafter of guidance published by the IRS and is responsible for coordinating its development with Treasury and other IRS offices. Through the published guidance process, the Office seeks to develop rules that are consistent with the language of the Code and the intent of Congress, that are reasonably administrable by the IRS, and that help taxpayers comply with the law.

The Role of Published Guidance in Tax Administration

Published guidance helps taxpayers better understand and meet their tax obligations. By providing interpretation and explanation of the law, published guidance also helps taxpayers plan their transactions to avoid controversy. This is increasingly important at a time when the complexity of tax law is often identified as both a burden on taxpayers and an impediment to compliance with the tax law. Published guidance also promotes the consistent interpretation and application of the tax law by the IRS.

How the Published Guidance Process Works

Published guidance can be issued in the form of proposed, temporary, or final regulations; revenue rulings; revenue procedures; notices; or announcements.

Annually, the IRS and Treasury publish a list of guidance priorities to identify the guidance projects scheduled for completion during the year. In 2000, the IRS and Treasury implemented a more formalized system for developing the Priority Guidance Plan (PGP). Each year, IRS and Treasury directly solicit suggestions from all interested parties, including taxpayers, tax practitioners and industry groups. All the proposals for guidance are then reviewed by the newly formed Published Guidance Advisory Committee (PGAC), which includes senior officials from the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury's Office of Tax Policy. The projects on the PGP (Exhibit D-1) are in response to newly enacted legislation, court opinions, changes in the market, changes in taxpayer behavior, and comments from taxpayers or their representatives. Accordingly, the projects are representative of areas of the tax law in which there is no (or incomplete) guidance or in which the tax law is uncertain. The PGP ensures that resources for published guidance focus on the highest priority projects. The PGP also serves as a means of communicating IRS guidance priorities to taxpayers. Publication of the PGP early in the year informs taxpayers and their representatives of IRS guidance priorities so that they have an opportunity to participate as the guidance is developed.

REV_00149567

The guidance process is open to public participation in a number of ways. Regulations are generally issued in proposed form, with the public invited to submit written comments and to testify at public hearings. In the past several years, the IRS has posted guidance on the Internet and accepted comments submitted though the Internet. The Service has also added a teleconferencing capability so taxpayers outside the Washington, D.C. area can participate in regulation hearings from alternate sites. In 2001, the plan year was changed to end on June 30, due, in part, to taxpayer concerns about a deluge of guidance at the end of the calendar year. Accordingly, the 2002 plan year will end on June 30, 2002.

Areas in Which Tax Examiners Make Frequent Errors Interpreting or Applying the Law

Overview

The IRS Examination Quality Measurement System (EQMS) provides quality review data from a nationwide sample of closed examination cases conducted in the field (field audits) or at the Service's thirty-three district offices (office audits). Most of the quality elements identified by EQMS cover various work processes and procedures. However, the number of errors made by Tax Examiners in interpreting or applying the law is tracked via EQMS Quality Element 6B.

EQMS Quality Element 6B Results

A sample of 8780 closed field audits and 4868 closed office audits were examined during FY 2000. A summary of these examinations contained 116 (1.3 percent) identifiable UIL code misinterpretations or misapplications of law made during field examinations and another 50 (1 percent) misinterpretations or misapplications made during office audits.

Top Misapplications and Misinterpretations of Law

The most frequent misapplications or misinterpretations of law by UIL description during a field examination for FY2000 are identified in Table E.1 below.

The Impact of Recent Legislation on Complexity

The implementation of new tax laws, or even the modification of current tax laws, that impact issues related to a taxpayer's filing status or affect procedures for calculating estimated and alternative minimum taxes has a direct bearing on complexity. To assess the impact of recent congressional initiatives on complexity each piece of legislation must be assessed independently. While Congress has enacted tax law legislation recently that has added to complexity, they have also enacted other legislation that had minimal (if any) impact on complexity.

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (1997 Act) is an example of tax legislation that resulted in many new tax complexities. The 1997 Act contained many new tax credits that are beneficial to certain categories of taxpayers. These new tax credits required significant tax changes to the tax forms, schedules, and instructions for individuals. Because the credits were targeted to certain types of taxpayers or to certain types of activities, specific qualifications had to be met in order to qualify for the credits. In many cases taxpayers had to decipher complex rules in order to determine whether they qualified for the credits. Several of the credits phased in their maximum benefit over two years. In addition all of the new credits phased out at certain levels of adjusted gross income. These phase-ins and phase-outs lead to increased complexity in the tax law. In some cases taxpayers were given choices (for example, with respect to which of various educational tax incentives to claim), which created the complexity and the possibility of increased errors.

One of the most complex provisions of the 1997 Act was the reduction in the maximum capital gains rates. This provision presents many difficulties for tax payers largely because of the different maximum rates (10, 20, 25, or 28 percent) that apply depending on the nature of the capital asset sold and the taxpayers's marginal tax rate bracket. Part IV of 1999 Schedule D, which provides the tax computation reflecting these reduced rates, contains thirty-five line entries. New complexities are introduced after the year 2000 when the 10 and 20 percent rates dropped to 8 and 18 percent, respectively, for gain from property held for more than five years.

Examples of legislation that did not impact complexity include three new tax laws enacted in 1998: The Surface Revenue Transportation Act of 1998, The Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, and the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998. None of these Acts imposed significant new complexities on taxpayers as these pieces of legislation focused on changes within IRS.

Appendix G
Tax Forms and Burden on the Taxpayer

Overview

One of the indicators of complexity of the tax system is the burden encountered by taxpayers in completing tax forms and filing their returns. Estimates of the time to complete forms have been made based on a mathematical model, the Arthur D. Little model, developed in the 1980s. There are several weaknesses in the model. First, it relies on the number of forms, instructions, and words to be read or lines necessary to complete to comply with the tax code. Second, the model is out of date, and recent modifications to the tax system are not reflected in it. Third, the model contains certain peculiarities, such as counting lines added to instructions or forms for the purpose of clarification and simplification for the taxpayer as additional burden. However, the model is still relied on, because it is the only available current estimate of burden.

The estimates of the time to complete tax forms and the quantity of forms distributed are made by the Operations Division. Estimates of the number of taxpayers filing the forms are provided by the Statistics of Income Division.

Forms Supplied by the IRS

Taxpayers obtain tax forms from a variety of sources. These sources include tax form packages mailed to individual taxpayers; IRS distributed forms available, for example, at libraries, post offices, and IRS walk-in offices; IRS-approved computer software and electronic tax forms; and Internet web sites. Tax year 1999 is the latest year with the most complete information on mailings, distribution and filings of forms. The number and method for distributing selected tax forms is identified in Table G.1.

In general, mailing of tax forms to taxpayers continues to decline as electronic return filing increases. Mailings of tax packages containing a 1040 series form plus one or more other forms to targeted taxpayers have declined from approximately 77 million in 1995 to approximately 54 million in 1999. Approximately xx.x million returns were filed electronically in 1999. IRS expects to receive over 33 million electronically filed returns in TY00.

As you may already know, National Review is now e-mailing to a selected list an advance e-copy of highlights from the magazine. Here is how it works: You will get an e-mail from us once every two weeks that highlights various pieces in NR. If you want to read more, you can click a link to an exclusive web page with the full text of the pieces. You will receive this e-mail a few days before copies of the print magazine are distributed. If you wish to be taken off this list, please let us know. The link follows the excerpts:

America's Best Governor
By John J. Miller

At the Empower America event, Bill Bennett delivered an impromptu tribute: "Governor Owens, you're the best. We really mean it. You've led the way on so many things." A growing number of talent-spotters on the right agree: Owens is America's best governor. His instinctive conservatism on everything from taxes and education to guns and abortion has served him well during his first term, and also has set him apart from an older wave of Republican governors whose reformist impulses have waned. When the Cato Institute's fiscal report card on governors comes out in September, Owens will rank at or near the top--one of just two or three chief executives to earn an A grade. The 51-year-old Owens is one of the few governors this summer not sweating out their budgets.

Out of the Doldrums
By John O'Sullivan

No one in the Bush administration seems to have grasped the concept of intellectual "investment"--namely the acceptance that a political leader may have to spend some years propagating an argument before the public accepts it. Polls direct politicians to satisfy the current tastes of the voters; they tell them nothing about what the public might be persuaded to accept. Yet almost all major political changes occur when events suddenly confirm what a political leader has been preaching, perhaps in the wilderness, for a decade or two. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan confirmed the wisdom of Reagan's anti-Communism; Hitler's seizure of Czechoslovakia converted appeasers into supporters of Winston Churchill. A political leader who outlines a clear argument will at a minimum give voters a reason for rallying to him and resisting the policies of his opponents. Daschle's "obstructionism" has, paradoxically, gained more political ground for his party than the president's positive thinking has gained for the GOP.

Clinton the Anti-Terrorist
By Byron York

Saxby Chambliss is a little perplexed. The Republican congressman from Georgia is chairman of the House Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security and a key player in the investigation into the September 11 attacks. He knows a lot about the subject. Yet it was not until he read a recent issue of <I>Time</I> magazine that he learned that in late 2000 the Clinton administration came up with a new, aggressive, wide-ranging plan to topple al-Qaeda. In an article headlined "Could 9/11 Have Been Prevented?"
Time reported that top Clinton officials handed the plan to the incoming administration, but, tragically, the Bush team chose not to act. The story's heroes were Richard Clarke, a top anti-terrorism aide, and Samuel Berger, Clinton's national security adviser. And that's what has Chambliss perplexed. "I've had Dick Clarke testify before our committee several times, and we've invited Samuel Berger several times," Chambliss says. If the plan was such a big deal, Chambliss wonders, why didn't anyone mention it?

A Time for Kings?
By David Pryce-Jones

Washington is searching for a successor regime to Saddam Hussein. It is an exercise in political science. Can an even passably democratic government be devised to take the place of a dictator who has stripped his people of decency and trust in others? Iraqis of all sorts are putting themselves forward: dissidents and exiles, former army officers who fled from Saddam in fear of their lives, men of substance certainly. But how representative are they? Why should Iraqis have confidence in self-selected and evidently ambitious leaders whose legitimacy is questionable? This is where the Hashemite family comes in. The last ruler in Baghdad to enjoy legitimacy was a Hashemite, King Faisal II, grandson of the man appointed--imposed, if you will--by the British after World War I to rule Iraq. The legitimacy was admittedly tenuous, but better than none at all. A return to a constitutional monarchy might provide the framework for law and order and national unity.

Smith vs. Sununu
By Bernadette Malone

Rep. Sununu is both solid on policy and very electable. His image fits well with New Hampshire's growing high-tech population: a 38-year-old suburban husband and father with a degree in engineering and an MBA. Methodical but affable, Sununu has the kind of personality that promises no surprises or embarrassments. (Smith's blustering presence suggests that at any moment he might break into a floor speech about the need for retirement homes for monkeys. Yes, he has.) Certainly, there's a difference in emphasis between the two Republicans: Smith leads with social issues, Sununu with economic ones. Implementing a flat tax, privatizing Social Security, and expanding free trade are this MIT and Harvard graduate's goals for the next decade. The Club for Growth gave Sununu a $1,000 contribution, though many of its members are still fond of Smith. But, says co-founder Steve Moore, "With Phil Gramm retiring, it will be healthy for the Senate to have John Sununu as a member."

What Juan Diego Saw
By Rod Dreher

In the Catholic view, the Guadalupe image is a sign to the Aztecs that Christianity, the religion of the Spanish, had come to defeat their bloodthirsty paganism. But Guadalupe cannot be reduced to crude triumphalism: The Mother of Christ appears as an Indian queen and mother, representing the benevolent universality of Christianity, and prophesying the unity of the New World Spanish and Indians to create a new culture. Within a few years of the image's being made known to the Aztecs, millions abandoned the old religion and were baptized. If Guadalupe is fake, it is one of the greatest pieces of religious and political propaganda of all time. And that, indeed, is what some Mexican social critics say, calling Guadalupe a conquistador ruse to subdue the Indians. Others claim that John Paul is continuing in that tradition, canonizing Juan Diego for essentially propagandistic reasons--chiefly to halt the conversion of modern-day Mexican Indians to Protestantism, renewed paganism, or political radicalism.

The Stock Market Without Tears
Kevin A. Hassett

Dow 36,000 rests upon solid conservative foundations: Its premise is that free markets deliver prosperity over time. While fluctuations are inevitable, they are spurred principally by the hard economic news that rationally should affect prices. (The recent decline in the Dow, for example, is about the same size as the drop in corporate earnings.) Over time, bear markets are reversed not because the free market is always perfect, but rather because it corrects itself when it makes mistakes. The Left proposes an alternative view: Markets are prone to manias. Their wild swings drive economies into deep depressions, and a large government is therefore necessary to protect us. Historically, the economy itself has only rarely posted years of negative growth, but it is quite common for the stock market to drop. And whenever it does, we hear yet again about the dangers of unfettered capitalism.

Fallout
By Robert Elegant

The pioneer medical investigator Viktor Moshkevich wrote that "no territory in the world has suffered from radioactive, chemical, and bacteriological weapons as much as Kazakhstan"; he added that the Semey Polygon is "the most heavily contaminated place on earth." When Field Marshal Grigori Zhukov ordered 45,000 troops to engage in war games less than an hour after a nuclear explosion overhead, he watched the maneuvers from a lead-lined tank.
The Soviets deliberately exposed soldiers and civilians to unchecked radiation--in part because the apparatchiks running the show could not be bothered with precautions, but primarily because they were curious as to the effects of prolonged exposure on human beings. They were not concerned to treat the consequent maladies; they merely wanted to record them.

Salem in Newcastle
By Theodore Dalrymple

It started nine years ago, when a mother allegedly heard her two-year-old child say that Lillie had hurt him. Only a few days before, another nurse had been sentenced for abuse of the children in his care. Before the episode was over, the parents of 350 children claimed that their children had been abused. Had the parents not found a compliant pediatrician to substantiate their claims, the lack of physical injuries to any of the children might have caused the police to retain a decent skepticism; but Dr. Camille San Lazaro of Newcastle University, on the basis of cursory, poorly-performed, and worse-documented examinations, confirmed that the children had indeed been abused as claimed. The police, responding to local pressure, arrested the two nurses. The subsequent court case exonerated them completely, with the judge ruling that the evidence against them was so poor that he was not prepared even to put it to a jury. And that should have been that: but it wasn't.

'Soli Deo Gloria'
By Jay Nordlinger

MasterWorks attracts both top students and top faculty. Some of the most notable performers and teachers in the world participate in the camp, "outing" themselves as earnest Christians, in a way, and giving young people examples to follow. Midori, the violinist, has been there. Christopher Parkening, the guitarist, is a favorite. And then you have John Nelson, the conductor, Philip Smith, principal trumpet for the New York Philharmonic, and Lawrence Dutton, violist for the Emerson String Quartet. As Delta David Gier, assistant conductor for the New York Philharmonic, puts it, "The fusion of our two great concerns, music and faith, finds full expression [at the camp]." Over and over, campers give some variation of, "I wasn't quite sure that real musicians could be real Christians, or that real Christians could be true musicians. But now I see it all around me."

Speech to FDR Conference

August 20, 2002

[Acknowledgements]

Thank you all for inviting me here today. I would like to talk to you this morning about my job as Counsel to the President and also about the Administration's approach to civil justice reform issues. And then I would be happy to answer questions that you may have about any subject.

I. Role of Counsel to the President

I have been President Bush's counsel in the White House for over 18 months. And a lot has happened. Thinking back over the last year and a half, what has really struck me is how important the integrity and honesty of the President are to the proper functioning of the Administration in general and the Counsel's office in particular. During the campaign, President Bush pledged repeatedly that he would uphold not just the laws of the land, but also the honor and dignity of the Presidency. And I think we all can be grateful that President Bush is as advertised: a man of integrity and of his word whom all Americans can respect and look to for principled leadership in times of peace and, as now, in times of war.

As Counsel to President Bush, much of my day-to-day job is necessarily reactive, responding to the crisis or issue at hand. But that said, standing here with the benefit of over a year of service, I can say that two core principles guide me in serving the Presidency and this President.

The first is fidelity to the rule of law. Several prior Counsels to the President have been criticized -- or worse -- for disserving the Presidency: for subordinating the rule of law to the political and personal interests. Knowing this history, the lawyers on my staff and I fully understand that the first principle that must influence and determine everything we do is fidelity to the rule of law.

The second principle is preservation and defense of the constitutional prerogatives of the Presidency. Those prerogatives are constantly tested and challenged: Congressional requests for documents of internal policy debates, Senatorial demands regarding nomination of judges, congressional attempts to ensure that certain Executive Branch agencies, or at least certain Executive Branch officers, operate independently of the President. One of the most important jobs we have in the Counsel's office is to preserve the powers and prerogatives of the Presidency against inappropriate congressional incursions.

II. Civil Justice Reform

Another aspect of my job is to participate, in conjunction with the President's domestic policy advisors and the relevant departments and agencies, in the development of legal policy. Civil justice reform is one part of that. So let me turn to that subject.

A. Background

We cannot begin to achieve meaningful civil justice reform without first convincing the American people and the Congress that there is a problem that needs fixing. When the issue of civil justice reform is described -- as is often is -- as big business against consumer or big business against labor, we have seen that meaningful reform is not likely to get very far.

So the first imperative continues to be educational -- to educate the Congress and the public on the problem and to show that proposals for reform will benefit consumers, labor, and shareholders.

The civil justice system must strongly protect consumers by ensuring that legitimate victims of corporate malfeasance can obtain justice and receive fair and just compensation. The issue is one of balance. We do not want a tort system that unduly sacrifices product development and innovation -- new drugs and new vaccines, for example. But we also do not want a legal system that unduly sacrifices safety -- allowing new drugs that have deadly side effects, for example. Finding the right balance so as to ensure appropriate standards of liability and appropriate damages awards is therefore a critical function of the tort system.

Apart from substance, we also want sensible and efficient litigation procedures to ensure that shareholders, employees, and plaintiffs are not penalized by waste and undue inefficiency in the litigation process.

On both substance and procedure, there is surely room for improvement. The existing tort regime is often characterized by excessive payouts, lottery-style awards, and an inequitable division of the spoils among claimants and counsel. It not only fails properly to deter unsafe conduct, but also often fails to compensate victims fully for their losses.

Escalating lawsuit abuse imposes enormous and varied costs on our economy. Consumers pay higher prices for fewer products. Shareholders lose value when stock prices drop as a result of a spurious lawsuit. Employees lose their jobs or receive reduced compensation as the companies for which they work are forced to cover excess litigation expense.

America's civil justice system is the most expensive in the industrialized world. The overall cost of our system is conservatively estimated at nearly $180 billion annually, or about 2 percent of GDP. And costs have grown steadily over time, up from only 1.3% of GDP in 1970, and approximately 0.6% in 1950.

Americans understand that the current system is broken. The better they understand the inequities of the system, the more inclined they will be to view civil justice reform favorably.

REV_00149641

Of course, when we talk about the civil justice "system" in the singular, we ignore one major issue -- federalism. Lawsuits to recover damages for injuries are traditionally governed by state substantive law. And many in my party are appropriately cautious about the federal government stepping in to override substantive state law. To justify federal tort reform measures that would alter state tort law, therefore, one must convincingly show the relationship and effect of state tort law on the national economy and interstate markets.

B. Administration's Approach to Congress

Let me turn to the Administration's views on the civil justice reform outlook in Congress. The President has spoken on this issue and stated that "a society that is so kind of litigious-oriented is one that is bad for jobs, bad for the creation of jobs. And . . . I will support reforms which reduce lawsuits and at the same time provide -- give people the opportunity to take their case to court."

On civil justice reform, as with any matter requiring legislation, we work very closely with Congress and must be aware of the views of Congress. It appears that meaningful civil justice reform in Congress is most likely to be accomplished not through one massive tort reform bill covering a slew of often controversial issues, but rather through targeted measures on specific bills related to specific issues -- whether that be a class action bill, a terrorism insurance bill, a patients bill of rights, a medical malpractice reform bill.

With that in mind, I want to focus on two pieces of proposed legislation that the Administration strongly supports and that are now before the Congress.

1. Class Action Legislation

The first relates to class action reform. As you know, one of today's major civil justice problems is class-action litigation. In many cases, defending on the merits is a bet-the-company strategy, as Judge Richard Posner noted some years ago. The threat of class certification inevitably leads to settlement because every good lawyer or savvy client knows that markets will respond to certification with a major drop in the stock price.

Right now, moreover, a handful of State courts, through their certification and settlement of large-scale class action lawsuits, are effectively making law and dictating corporate behavior for 49 other States. A class action lawsuit brought in State court may be removed to federal court only if there is full diversity among the defendants and the named plaintiffs. In addition, each class member's claim alone must exceed $75,000, even if the aggregate amount in controversy far exceeds this amount. These requirements make it easy for plaintiffs' lawyers to bring large class actions in favorable state forums, even where these lawsuits have significant interstate commerce implications and involve the residents and laws of multiple states.

The individual consumers on whose behalf these suits are brought often receive only a few dollars each from a class action settlement. Frequently, they do not even get cash, but instead receive a "coupon" for a noncash discount on one of the defendant's products. By contrast, the lawyers who bring the suits often negotiate very large fees.

To address these problems, the Administration strongly supports the Class Action Fairness Bill, H.R. 2341, that has passed the House but is awaiting action by the Senate. The commonsense provisions in that bill include (1) notice of a lawsuit to class members in "plain English"; (2) judicial review of "coupon" settlements; and (3) prohibitions against court approval of proposed settlements providing for preferential payments to certain designated members of the class.

In addition, this bill calls for modification of diversity requirements for federal jurisdiction over class actions, such that cases would be removable if the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2,000,000 and there is minimal diversity. Federal jurisdiction for major class actions of this kind would help protect out-of-state defendants, as well as out-of-State plaintiff class members, from local biases in cases that affect their substantial interests and therefore is consistent with and fulfills the Constitution's original design.

2. Procedures for mass tort terrorism cases.

I also want to talk briefly about one other important issue currently being debated in Congress -- the legal system's handing of mass terrorism incidents. Congress has been debating for months how the legal system and the insurance industry will cope with additional terrorist attacks.

As to insurance, the Administration and most in Congress agree that some level of government backstop is necessary so that the insurance industry can manage the risk of future terrorism incidents and continue to provide coverage for major building projects, stadiums, air carriers, and the like.

A sticking point in passing any bill has concerned the appropriate litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents. The Administration has proposed that sensible litigation procedures for mass terrorism incidents be part of any terrorism insurance bill.

Sensible litigation procedures for mass tort terrorism incidents are necessary for several reasons.

First, sensible litigation procedures will help reduce the substantial uncertainty faced by the insurance industry in pricing terrorism risk. The largest piece of the terrorism risk to insurers is likely to be the liability component of property and casualty insurance.

REV_00149644

Second, absent sensible litigation procedures, the resources of liable defendants, including resources from their liability insurance policies, will not suffice to compensate the class of successful plaintiff-victims in mass tort terrorism incidents.

Third, the number and variety of cases, plaintiffs, defendants, causes of action, liability standards, and damages rules in mass tort terrorism cases will overwhelm the ordinary legal system and cause extraordinary delays.

The Administration advanced four proposals to respond to these issues.

First, tort cases arising out of a mass tort terrorism incident should be consolidated in a single federal court. This is a common procedure in mass tort cases and was a central feature of the legislation recently enacted by Congress for the tort cases arising out of the September 11 attacks.

Second, there should be no punitive damage awards in mass tort terrorism cases. In mass tort cases, only a limited pool of resources will be available to plaintiffs who prove liability (whether because of bankruptcy or settlement). Because of the limited pool of resources, it would be grossly inequitable and unfair to allow one plaintiff or class of plaintiffs to receive an excessive award -- including a punitive component entirely unrelated to the plaintiff's injuries and unnecessary to compensate the plaintiff -- that could greatly limit or outright preclude recovery by other plaintiffs.

Third, there should be no joint and several liability for non-economic damages in mass tort terrorism cases, but rather should be proportional fault for recovery of non-economic damages. Without such a provision, a court could hold any defendant "jointly and severally" liable for the full amount of the plaintiff's non-economic damages, even for those damages attributable to the terrorists' acts and unrelated to the defendant's actions.

Fourth, the plaintiff's recovery in mass terrorism cases should be offset by the amount of first-party insurance received by the plaintiff. This will ensure that injured parties receive appropriate compensation, but also preserve the pool of defendant assets and thereby allow equitable recovery for all injured parties.

I am pleased to report that the House of Representatives agreed with the Administration's four proposals (and even added a fifth proposal to limit attorneys' fees) and passed a strong bill at the end of last year.

That leaves the Senate.

In negotiations with the Senate, we thought we had achieved a good bipartisan agreement. The Administration -- along with key members of the Banking Committee, Democrat Senators Sarbanes and Dodd and Republican Senators Gramm and Enzi -- agreed that some sensible litigation procedures should be part of any terrorism insurance bill. In particular, there was a bipartisan agreement for two provisions: consolidation of claims in a single court and the elimination of punitive damages.

But just when we thought there was agreement, Senator Daschle intervened at the 11th hour and overrode his Senators, Sarbanes and Dodd, and prevented the bill from coming to the Senate floor. The sole ground on which Senator Daschle took this action were the liability procedures, modest and limited as they are.

The Administration remains deeply disappointed that Senate leadership took this extraordinary step and prevented the Senate from considering a bill that had wide bipartisan agreement. We are continuing to support a terrorism insurance bill with sensible litigation management procedures. But what happened in the Senate shows us all that any civil justice reform, no matter how sensible the proposal in question, will be a real fight in the Senate.

REV_00149646

III. Conclusion

[. . .]

With that, I would be happy to answer questions.

They were being delivered early this afternoon; you should have them any time now. The volume of these records from the previous Administration proved to be much greater than we had anticipated (largely because of PCAST records, as you will see), which in turn required more time. There are approximately 1750 pages you will be receiving today.

Subject: FAA Briefing

I just got word that the Administrator of the FAA will be here on Monday at 10am to do a briefing re "social security enumeration." I am not sure what the means, but I suspect is has to do with security matters. DPC would like somebody from WHCO to attend but I will be on vacation. Can anybody cover this meeting? If so, please let Emily Winland know at 6-6534. Thanks.

You should have an additional production from NARA today or tomorrow.
Also, you should have the relevant 1992-2001 non-PRA EOP e-mails by tomorrow morning.

The basic answer to 1. is yes, WHCO request was that this should cover all White House offices that are non-FOIA entities.
Obviously, I defer entirely to David and John as to OVP or NSC.
But Adam, keep in mind, this should not be delayed further in order to make the "who's covered" list absolutely perfect. It would be better to put it into effect immediately, using the initial list that was in the yellow folder. The IT programs can always be expanded to include add'l covered offices and individuals. But I believe it was the Judge's expectation that this would be activated by Monday. Please let us know if your anticipated timetable for activation is different from that. And please let us know if we can assist you or Cathy or anyone else in helping to get this done.

Subject: Status of TPO Pop-up

Ed wrote a note on the package with which I concur. If the intention is to cover everyone in the White House Office, we should do it automatically (i.e. anyone with a WHO.EOP.GOV address) if possible. I've asked CIO if there are any technical issues--they are working on a new e-mail system which may have some differences; note how Tim Campen's address appears on the cc: line above.

Some related questions:

1. Ed/John--Should we do this for all OPD, NSC and CEA accounts as well?

2. David--Should we do the same for all OVP accounts?

Status: Cathy Alix is sending the package, which was approved by Judge Gonzales, to Joe Hagin for approval. On my advice, she is also sending David a copy since this involves OVP accounts.

BG,
MAH is on vacation this week. However, Patricia Burchfield will be here sometime today to return items from the Fathers and Sons Exhibit which we wanted hand carried back .... i.e. the Bush Family Bible, etc. I can ask her at that time. I think we may also need to check w/Counsel's office (Brett) to make sure they don't have a problem with doing so.
Thanks.

Subject: saddle - gift for 43

let's talk early next week about a very nice custom-made saddle the president received at the mt. rushmore event. when the president suggested that it would be great to display it in his future presidential library, the presenters / donors suggested that they would like to have the saddle displayed in 41's library until 43's is avail. president agreed and asked me to look into it.

i can't imagine any reason why we couldn't at least send it to 41's library to hold. the question is whether they have an exhibit that could incorporate the saddle for display?

mah - do you know?

(cb - i've got the completed gift forms for you - and we're handling the ty's from here).

Space Station 3D on Wednesday, August 28, 2002

NASA Administrator Sean O,Keefe would like to invite members of the White House staff and their families to a private showing of the IMAX© movie Space Station 3D at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, August 28 at the National Air and Space Museum's IMAX© Theater.

The first three-dimensional movie filmed in orbit, Space Station 3D documents the development of the International Space Station, which has been under construction since 1998. This movie, directed and photographed in space by 25 NASA astronauts and Russian cosmonauts, spotlights the extensive international cooperation in putting together the greatest engineering feat in the history of human exploration. Space Station 3D runs 47 minutes.

Those staff members interested in attending this showing should RSVP to Ali Tulbah at x62764 by close of business on Monday, August 26th. Attendees should enter through the Independence Avenue entrance at 7:00 p.m., and the movie will begin at approximately 7:15 p.m.

The Heritage Foundation

You are Cordially Invited to a Luncheon lecture for Administration and Congressional Staff

"Corporate Scandals: How Politicians Can Restore Corporate Ethics"

Featuring:

Larry Kudlow
Co-Host of CNBC's "Kudlow & Cramer"

Larry Kudlow is CEO of Kudlow & Co., LLC, an economic and investment research firm in New York City. Each night he co-hosts a popular business-oriented public affairs show. He is a syndicated columnist and frequently appears on the McLaughlin Group. He has served as a chief economist for a number of Wall Street firms. He served in the Reagan Administration at OMB where he helped develop economic and budget policy. Since then he has been a policy advisor to many, a member of the board of directors of Empower America, a contributing editor of National Review, as well as a columnist and economics editor for National Review Online. He also authored a book, "American Abundance: The New Economic and Moral Prosperity." In this speech, Larry Kudlow will focus on Washington's value added to the corporate scandals in the news. He will provide practical tips including: Growth wins, austerity loses; Rising stocks win, falling stocks lose; Outside-the-box thinking wins, conventional political thought loses; Sticking to a clear compass wins, wobbling loses.

Space Station 3D on Wednesday, August 28, 2002

NASA Administrator Sean O,Keefe would like to invite members of the White House staff and their families to a private showing of the IMAX© movie Space Station 3D at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, August 28 at the National Air and Space Museum's IMAX© Theater.

The first three-dimensional movie filmed in orbit, Space Station 3D documents the development of the International Space Station, which has been under construction since 1998. This movie, directed and photographed in space by 25 NASA astronauts and Russian cosmonauts, spotlights the extensive international cooperation in putting together the greatest engineering feat in the history of human exploration. Space Station 3D runs 47 minutes.

Those staff members interested in attending this showing should RSVP to Ali Tulbah at x62764 by close of business on Monday, August 26th. Attendees should enter through the Independence Avenue entrance at 7:00 p.m., and the movie will begin at approximately 7:15 p.m.

Space Station 3D on Wednesday, August 28, 2002

NASA Administrator Sean O,Keefe would like to invite members of the White House staff and their families to a private showing of the IMAX© movie Space Station 3D at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, August 28 at the National Air and Space Museum's IMAX© Theater.

The first three-dimensional movie filmed in orbit, Space Station 3D documents the development of the International Space Station, which has been under construction since 1998. This movie, directed and photographed in space by 25 NASA astronauts and Russian cosmonauts, spotlights the extensive international cooperation in putting together the greatest engineering feat in the history of human exploration. Space Station 3D runs 47 minutes.

Those staff members interested in attending this showing should RSVP to Ali Tulbah at x62764 by close of business on Monday, August 26th. Attendees should enter through the Independence Avenue entrance at 7:00 p.m., and the movie will begin at approximately 7:15 p.m.

Subject: Contractor Indemnification & homeland security -- Draft Response to Lieberman

Attached is a draft response OFPP has prepared to the recent Lieberman letter seeking OMB's views and various pieces of information regarding contractor indemnification. (If you need another copy of the incoming, let me know and I'll fax it to you.) I have prepared a cover letter giving our overall response and then attached more detailed responses as an enclosure. The draft is still under review within OMB, including in OGC, but we wanted to make sure you had sufficient time to review the document and provide your policy guidance.

Given the time constraints, I limited agency input to the following agencies: DOT and HHS (given their recent experiences with indemnification related specifically to the defense against terrorism), DoD (which has indemnified contractors against unusually hazardous or nuclear risks), and DOE (which, pursuant to the Price-Anderson Act, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident). Each of these agencies is reviewing the factual statements in the response (the policy discussion has not been shared with them). We should have their input by no later than noon on Tuesday.

Lee-Ann Bracket from Lieberman's staff left a voice-mail for me (228-3533) which I passed on to Christine and Danielle for followup. I'm sure she is anxious to have the responses before the Senate resumes its deliberations next week.

We are also hearing that the House Technology and Procurement Policy Subcommittee may hold a hearing on this subject sometime in September.

FYI, Angela is out of town but will be checking emails. (We discussed the basic responses late last week.)

To assist in your review, you might note the following points (any and all of which can obviously be revised/reworked as may be necessary):

The draft strongly opposes the Govt Reform Committee (GROC) indemnification proposal, consistent with the House SAP language. (The letter states that the current indemnification scheme under Public Law 85-804 is sufficient. There is not an extensive comparison made between 85-804 and the GROC proposal other than to point out that the GROC proposal would drastically increase exposure to liability through potential coverage of state and local contractors. It is possible that, at some point, we may be asked why we think the GROC proposal will result in greater indemnification of federal contractors than may occur under 85-804.)

The draft expresses support for the SAFETY Act. This should help to clarify some confusion that apparently has arisen regarding what was intended by the House SAP. FYI, I wasn't sure whether we wanted to support the Act outright or just the "types of protections" it provides -- the latter being a hedge in case we want to work with Congress to fine-tune the mechanics

Although there is limited discussion on the SAFETY Act, there is no specific discussion of the government contractor defense. The government contractor defense (which already exists today through case law) shields contractors from unbounded liability when: (a) the government provides reasonably specific specifications, (b) the contractor follows the specifications, and (c) the contractor makes known risks uniquely known to the contractor. Our initial review of case law suggests that courts traditionally have appeared to overwhelmingly rule in favor of contractors -- and we haven't yet come across a case where the government has been held liable (which comes as little surprise because there appears to be no waiver of sovereign immunity). We might undercut our concern about indemnification if we emphasize that the government contractor defense generally has worked well.

Although the letter asks for parameters for reaching a compromise, the draft does not expressly indicate support for a compromise. There are places in the response where the door theoretically is left open. For example, the last sentence of the second paragraph of the cover letter states that it would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to unbounded liability -- which arguably leaves the door open for bounded liability). The response to the first question includes reference to an FAA example where one key consideration of indemnification apparently centered around the fact that the item was highly customized (as opposed to commercial off-the-shelf). If I recall correctly, Brett drew this type of distinction at our meeting with industry several weeks ago.

The specific responses to the questions focus primarily on Public Law 85-804. However, there is also brief discussion on both the Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA) and the Price-Anderson Act, since the questions asked us to discuss other authorities in addition to 85-804. It is probably beneficial to discuss CSLA, since its model for limiting liability (e.g., requiring approval of a compensation plan and congressional appropriation of funds) is fiscally responsible. On the other hand, Price-Anderson (which mandates indemnification for contracts that involve the risk of a nuclear incident) is probably not a desirable model to emulate. (As I assume you know, Price-Anderson expired and I understand discussions are ongoing regarding an extension of the authority.)

The responses do not attempt to address every question in explicit detail. For example, it is difficult to gauge how often indemnification is provided when a contract is eligible for such because (1) there is no government-wide database of such information and (2) agencies probably determine there is no unusually hazardous risk as opposed to finding such and then telling the contractor no indemnification will be provided.

The cover letter expresses support for a terrorism insurance program. The language should basically mirror SAP discussion for S. 2600. I wasn't sure if you wanted to address this in the letter; hence, the language is bracketed.

The draft indicates that we are not aware of the federal government having previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments. It is possible that there may have been legislation in the 1960s related to the riots in Washington that involved payment from federal to local govt related to indemnification. We're checking into this.

D R A F T

The Honorable Joseph I. Lieberman
Chairman
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your August 7, 2002 correspondence requesting our views regarding the indemnification of contractors who provide products and services to aid in our Nation's homeland security efforts. Your letter indicates that when the Senate considers its version of the Homeland Security legislation in September, an amendment may be offered to authorize indemnification.

We understand that the amendment the Senate may consider is similar to what was proposed by the House Government Reform Committee for the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (H.R. 5005). The Government Reform Committee's proposal, which was not part of the House-passed bill, would have authorized the federal government to provide unlimited indemnification to companies that sell counterterrorism technology to federal, state, and local government agencies. These actions would not be subject to the availability of appropriations. The Administration would strongly oppose such an amendment, given the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. It would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to this unbounded liability.

Catastrophic business risks associated with selling antiterrorism technology to the government which cannot otherwise be covered through private insurance can generally be addressed, as may be appropriate, under indemnification authorities already provided to agencies. Most notable among these authorities is Public Law 85-804. Under this law, the President may empower the heads of agencies to indemnify contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks associated with activities facilitating the national defense. While the types of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 are limited, covered agencies still have considerable discretion to determine if an activity qualifies as unusually hazardous or nuclear.

Following the events of September 11th, agencies have found certain activities associated with defending the homeland to involve unusually hazardous risks and have negotiated indemnification clauses using the existing authorities of Public Law 85-804. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) indemnified a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine. The Secretary of HHS concluded that the steps the contractor has been asked to take to assure adequate availability of vaccine, including dilution of the vaccine, will materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability for which adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable cost. As another example, the Secretary of Transportation recently determined that certain contracts for the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems involve unusually hazardous risk and warrant indemnification.

To the extent the Senate intends to consider new options for handling risks associated with the sale of anti-terrorism technologies, it should give careful consideration to the protections that would be afforded by the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, which was passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005. The SAFETY Act would bolster government access to needed suppliers of anti-terrorism technology in a fiscally sound manner. It would require a contractor selling anti-terrorism technologies to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims for injuries associated with a terrorist attack in which the contractor's technology was deployed to protect the public from harm. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties but, at the same time, shield the Treasury and contractors from predatory lawsuits by generally capping recovery. Because its protections would apply to both federal and non-federal customers, the SAFETY Act would promote marketplace participation with all levels of government.

[In addition, the Senate should move promptly to create a terrorism risk insurance program. The backstop insurance program that would be established by the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (S. 2600) is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts and will add much needed stability to our economy. As the Administration has previously noted, the program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning insurance market. [Although this measure is short-term, insurers should, as a general matter, have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country continues to acclimate to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th.] **]

The Administration is committed to ensuring that the Department of Homeland Security and other agencies engaged in the war on terrorism have timely and cost-effective access to the expertise and ingenuity of the private sector, upon whom we will rely heavily for the quality goods and services needed to ensure the safety of the American people. We recognize that threats posed by terrorism may present new business risks for sellers of anti-terrorism technologies. When considering this risk, we urge the Committee to reject any proposal that will expose the Treasury to unbounded and unfunded contingent liabilities and look instead to more fiscally sound approaches, such as that proposed by the SAFETY Act [and a terrorism insurance, program].

Additional information responding to your questions[, which was prepared by OMB's Office of Federal Procurement Policy], is set forth in the attached enclosure.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

Responses to Questions on Contractor Indemnification Posed by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

Note: Information on agency use of indemnification is not collected in a centralized manner. Due to the limited time frame available for responding to this inquiry, OMB informally sought information from the following agencies: the Departments of Transportation (DOT) and Health and Human Services (HHS), which have had recent experiences with indemnification under acquisitions to address needs for the defense against terrorism; the Department of Defense (DoD) which has indemnified contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks; and the Department of Energy (DOE), which, pursuant to statute, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident.

Question 1: The government currently has authority to offer indemnification in a narrow set of contracts. What has the government's experience been in using this existing authority, whether under Public Law 85-804 or otherwise? For example, how often are indemnification clauses included in government contracts? Are they included in all cases in which they are authorized? If not, in what portion are they included, and what criteria are used to determine whether to use them? Do they usually carry limits on the government's liability or imposed specific requirements on the indemnified party? Has the use of these provisions resulted in actual costs to the government? If so, what has been the cost of these provisions to the government? What lessons has the government learned from the use of these provisions?

The main authorities used by the government to indemnify its contractors against catastrophic risk are: (1) Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435), (2) 49 U.S.C. Subtitle IX, Chapter 701 (popularly known as the Commercial Space Launch Act), and (3) the Price-Anderson Act. A short summary of the government's experiences with each of these authorities is discussed below.

Public Law 85-804

Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435) vests the President with authority to empower agencies to grant various forms of extraordinary contractual relief, where the relief would facilitate the national defense. As implemented by Executive Order 10789, as amended, and the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR, 48 CFR Part 50), Public Law 85-804 has enabled agencies (including the major procuring agencies) to secure private sector performance of activities involving unusually hazardous or nuclear risks by indemnifying them against third-party claims.[1]

Criteria.

Guidance emphasizes the need for all due deliberations, reflective of the extraordinary nature of the relief that can be granted -- which is not subject to the availability of appropriated funds. FAR 50.102(b) states that actions "shall be accomplished as expeditiously as practicable, consistent with the care, restraint, and exercise of sound judgment appropriate to the use of such extraordinary authority."

Three important safeguards were incorporated into the exercise of Public Law 85-804 when Executive Order 10789 was amended in 1971. Executive Order 11610 added requirements that: (1) indemnification provisions be approved in advance by an official at a level not below that of the secretary, (2) indemnification could apply only to claims or losses arising out of or resulting from risks that the contract defines as unusually hazardous or nuclear in nature, and (3) the approving official, in determining whether and to what extent indemnification should be authorized, must take into account the availability, cost, and terms of private insurance, self-insurance, other proof of financial responsibility, and workers' compensation insurance. These safeguards help to ensure that agencies, as stewards of the public fisc, fully consider whether indemnification and the potential financial liability it imposes on the government is in the taxpayers' best interest.

Usage in general.

Comprehensive government-wide data is not readily available regarding the use of Public Law 85-804. However, it appears from the limited data reviewed and discussions with several agencies that indemnification under Public Law 85-804 is used sparingly. Typically, indemnification for unusually hazardous or nuclear activities is provided when there is no other way for an agency to accomplish its mission. For example, in 1996, the Defense Logistics Agency indemnified a manufacturer of Pyridostigmine Bromide Tablets (PBT), which is used as a nerve agent pre-treatment to enhance the efficacy of post-exposure antidote therapy. Critical to DoD's decision was the fact that the contractor was the sole manufacturer of the item and had indicated its refusal to deliver PBT without an indemnification provision. In reaching its decision, DoD also took into account that acquisition of PBT could impose liability upon the contractor in excess of financial protection reasonably available.[2]

[1] Relief may also include an increase of contract price without consideration.

[2] Allegations had been made that PBT caused Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As a result, the contractor, as manufacturer was threatened by unknown liability for which insurance coverage was not available.

In FY 1998, the last year that DoD compiled a department-wide report on its use of Public Law 85-804,[3] indemnification clauses were included in 30 of DoD's contracts. Contractors were indemnified against claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractors' insurance program.[4]

While the universe of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 is appropriately limited, the law, as implemented, gives agencies a fair amount of discretion to determine if a given activity poses an unusually hazardous or nuclear risk. Not surprisingly, agencies have justified use of indemnification under Public Law 85-804 for the production of items which are themselves inherently dangerous (e.g., high energy propellants or nuclear submarines). But agencies have also justified indemnification under other circumstances, such as where the government was procuring highly customized items whose use by the government could pose risk of very large claims. In 1981, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation authorized indemnification for contractors engaged in the upgrading the en route air traffic control system for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Of particular note, the Secretary found that the equipment to be purchased would possess technical characteristics "which far exceeded the technical requirements for hardware and software utilized in most commercial applications." In addition, claims from an accident could be far in excess of the insurance coverage that reliably and reasonably could be obtained by the manufacturers in the marketplace for the life of the system.[5]

Usage in the context of protecting the homeland.

Following the events of September 11th, several agencies have exercised their discretion to indemnify selected contractors for certain activities associated with protection of our homeland where they have determined that such activities qualify as unusually hazardous. In this regard, HHS found solid grounds to indemnify a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine.[6] HHS has been working with the contractor to assure that the available stockpile of smallpox vaccine can be released promptly if and when directed by HHS. HHS is seeking to have the contractor perform various tasks critical to having vaccine available. These tasks include, among others, delivering vaccine whose original expiration date has passed for possible dilution. Because HHS has concluded that these and other tasks materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability and adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable

[3] Section 901(r)(1) of the Federal Reports Elimination Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-362) repealed 50 U.S.C. 1434, which required preparation of annual reports to Congress regarding actions taken on contractor requests for relief under Public Law 85-804.

[4] In addition to Public Law 85-804, DoD may indemnify a research and development contractor pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2354 for claims by third persons for death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, from a risk that the contract defines as unusually hazardous.

[5] See 46 Fed. Reg. 62596 (December 24, 1981) and 47 Fed. Reg. 1229 (January 11, 1982).

[6] The President added the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the list of agencies authorized to use Public Law 85-804 on October 20, 2001. See Executive Order 13232, 66 Fed. Reg. 53941.

cost, HHS has indemnified the contractor for: (a) adverse events associated with the vaccine, (b) failure of the vaccine to immunize, and (c) transmission of the vaccinia virus.

DOT has determined that certain contracts providing services and products related to the screening of airport passengers and baggage for the presence of dangerous items constitute an unusually hazardous risk for which indemnification is appropriate. DOT further concluded that there is an unusually hazardous risk associated with the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems. A table briefly describing indemnification actions taken by DOT's Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is provided at Attachment A.

Limitations on liability.

Both HHS and DOT have taken steps to limit the government's liability. For instance, indemnification for the smallpox vaccine manufacturer is limited to liability that might arise if the vaccine were to be used in a national emergency. With one exception, the indemnification agreements with the airport screening contractors provides for a monetary cap, and all of the agreements will expire when the government screeners are deployed.

Payments under indemnification clauses.

To OFPP's knowledge, there have been no payments made under indemnification clauses entered into pursuant to Public Law 85-804.

The Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA)

CLSA requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish insurance (or other financial responsibility) requirements in amounts sufficient to address certain risks associated with the conduct of licensed launch activities. The CSLA provides detailed requirements for allocating risk among the various launch participants, including federal agencies involved in launch services. First enacted in 1988, this comprehensive scheme was intended to facilitate the development of the U.S. commercial launch industry by allowing it to compete effectively in the international marketplace and by providing to launch participants certain protections against the risk of catastrophic losses that could result from hazardous launch activities.

Under the CSLA, the government accepts responsibility for successful third-party claims that exceed the limits of liability insurance (obtained by licensees in amounts established by the agency) up to $1.5 billion (as adjusted for inflation occurring after January 1, 1989). The licensee remains liable for amounts above this cap. FAA sets insurance requirements based on its determination of the maximum probable loss (MPL) that would result from licensed launch or reentry activities, within statutory ceilings, not to exceed the lesser of $500 million or the maximum available on the world market at reasonable cost.[7] The government may cover claims from the first dollar of loss in the event of an insurance policy exclusion that is determined to be "usual." However, payment -- in all cases -- is subject both to the approval of a compensation plan prepared by the agency and congressional appropriation of funds. In addition, indemnification will not be provided for a party's willful misconduct.[8]

The Commercial Space Transportation Competitiveness Act of 2000, Public Law 106-405, directed the Secretary of Transportation to review the liability risk-sharing regime for U.S. commercial space transportation. The report, which was submitted to Congress earlier this year, concluded that the current regime is adequate, appropriate, and effective.[9] The report found that CSLA's liability structure facilitates the competitiveness of the U.S. launch industry in the international space transportation market, while effectively limiting the government's liability. According to the report, there have been no claims for third-party liability resulting form a U.S.-licensed commercial launch. In fact, DOT is aware of no claims of third-party liability having been presented against the required coverage.

The Price-Anderson Act

The Price-Anderson Act established a system of financial protection for persons who may be liable for, and persons who may be injured by, a nuclear incident. The Act requires DOE to include an indemnification in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident. The indemnification: (1) provides omnibus coverage of all persons who might be legally liable; (2) indemnifies fully all legal liability up to the statutory limit on such liability (currently $9.43 billion for a nuclear incident in the United States); (3) covers all DOE contractual activity that might result in a nuclear incident in the United States; (4) is not subject to the usual limitation on the availability of appropriated funds; and (5) is mandatory and exclusive. The Department of Energy Acquisition Regulation (DEAR) sets forth standard nuclear indemnification clauses that are incorporated into all DOE contracts and subcontracts involving source, special nuclear, or by-product material (nuclear material).[10]

According to DOE, a number of claims have been filed in federal district courts seeking recovery under the Price-Anderson Act. Within the past 15 years, settlements have been paid in two cases, totaling just under $100 million.

[7] According to DOT, the MPL is structured so that the risk estimate of government indemnification obligations is no greater than 1 in 10 million. The current MPL values range up to $261 million for third-party losses resulting from launch vehicle flight.

[8] Regulations setting forth financial responsibility requirements may be found at 14 CFR Part 440.

Question 2: The request to expand indemnification authority rests on the premise that the government is having, or will have, difficulty in obtaining the technology and products it needs to protect the homeland in the war on terrorism. What is the executive branch's experience in this regard? Has it been difficult or impossible to get the needed products? If so, how extensive has the difficulty been? Has it been government-wide or limited to just a few Departments or agencies? To what do you attribute any difficulty that exists? Is it due to the absence of indemnification authority? Would greater indemnification authority resolve the problem? If so, what should the scope of statutory authority for such provisions be?

To date, OFPP has not been advised by federal agencies of significant or widespread difficulties in obtaining access to the marketplace for products and services needed for homeland security. We are aware of limited difficulties in accessing the marketplace due to contractor concerns with catastrophic liability. Some of these concerms have been dealt with through, or are being considered for, indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

According to DOT, screening companies made clear after September 11th that they would refuse to enter into contractual agreements with the federal government unless indemnification was provided. In January 2002, the Secretary authorized FAA to negotiate indemnification agreements with airport security screening companies to secure contract screening services during the transition to federal airport screening by employees of TSA. Manufacturers of vaccine and related products have advised HHS that such products carry safety and efficacy risks that prevent them from meeting the government's needs at fair and reasonable prices without indemnification. As noted in the response to Question no. 1, the Secretary granted indemnification to one contractor and currently is considering requests from other manufacturers.

Expanding indemnification authority is neither necessary nor appropriate. Most homeland security-related needs will not warrant indemnification. DOT points out, as just one example, that procurement assistance, general services or other management support services would not merit indemnification, if sought, among other reasons because they do not constitute unusually hazardous risks. As a general matter, insurers should have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country acclimates to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th. However, protections of the type set forth in the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005, are worthy of consideration. The SAFETY Act would establish a federal cause of action to recognize claims of parties injured in terrorist attacks where anti-terrorism technology was deployed but, at the same time, limit potential contractor and government liability in a fiscally responsible manner.

Question 3: The amendment before the House would have allowed the Secretary of Homeland Security to indemnify contractors with State and local governments. Has the Federal government ever before entered into agreements indemnifying contractors with State or local governments? Does the Administration believe there is a need to do so? Should Congress consider different factors when evaluating this part of the proposal than when reviewing the expansion of authority for federal government contracts?

We appreciate that state and local governments, like the federal government, need effective access to the innovation and expertise of the private sector. In this regard, we understand, for example, that New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority and Policy Department have faced difficulties obtaining chemical-biological detection systems. While these difficulties should be addressed, unbounded federal indemnification is not the answer. Indemnification of this nature would be fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. To our knowledge, the federal government has not previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments.

Rather than increasing indemnification, state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies could be enhanced through the types of protections proposed by the SAFETY Act (sections 751-755 of H.R. 5005). The SAFETY Act, which would cover sales of products to both federal and non-federal government customers, would require a contractor to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when anti-terrorism technologies that have been approved by the Department of Homeland Security have been deployed in defense against such act. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties, and, at the same time, protect contractors from predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. This type of framework should facilitate state and local government access to contractors that can assist them in carrying out their critical role in the fight against terrorism.

Question 4: I understand that the Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the House indemnification proposal, but that this view may be evolving. What is the Administration's current view? Even if the Administration still opposes the specific proposal offered in the House, is that opposition a blanket one to any expansion of indemnification authority, or do you believe a narrower authorization would be appropriate? If so, I would appreciate your providing guidance on the parameters of a proposal you believe would be appropriate.

The opposition expressed by the Administration in its SAP on H.R. 5005 was directed at the indemnification proposal recommended by the House Government Reform Committee. That proposal is highly objectionable because it would subject the Treasury to unlimited unfunded contingent liabilities. By contrast, the provisions that the House ultimately adopted (i.e., the SAFETY Act) offer a disciplined and fiscally sound approach to addressing the potential liabilities that sellers of anti-terrorism technology could face.

Subject: Contractor Indemnification & homeland security -- Draft Response to Lieberman

Attached is a draft response OFPP has prepared to the recent Lieberman letter seeking OMB's views and various pieces of information regarding contractor indemnification. (If you need another copy of the incoming, let me know and I'll fax it to you.) I have prepared a cover letter giving our overall response and then attached more detailed responses as an enclosure. The draft is still under review within OMB, including in OGC, but we wanted to make sure you had sufficient time to review the document and provide your policy guidance.

Given the time constraints, I limited agency input to the following agencies: DOT and HHS (given their recent experiences with indemnification related specifically to the defense against terrorism), DoD (which has indemnified contractors against unusually hazardous or nuclear risks), and DOE (which, pursuant to the Price-Anderson Act, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident). Each of these agencies is reviewing the factual statements in the response (the policy discussion has not been shared with them). We should have their input by no later than noon on Tuesday.

Lee-Ann Bracket from Lieberman's staff left a voice-mail for me (228-3533) which I passed on to Christine and Danielle for followup. I'm sure she is anxious to have the responses before the Senate resumes its deliberations next week.

We are also hearing that the House Technology and Procurement Policy Subcommittee may hold a hearing on this subject sometime in September.

FYI, Angela is out of town but will be checking emails. (We discussed the basic responses late last week.)

To assist in your review, you might note the following points (any and all of which can obviously be revised/reworked as may be necessary):

The draft strongly opposes the Govt Reform Committee (GROC) indemnification proposal, consistent with the House SAP language. (The letter states that the current indemnification scheme under Public Law 85-804 is sufficient. There is not an extensive comparison made between 85-804 and the GROC proposal other than to point out that the GROC proposal would drastically increase exposure to liability through potential coverage of state and local contractors. It is possible that, at some point, we may be asked why we think the GROC proposal will result in greater indemnification of federal contractors than may occur under 85-804.)

The draft expresses support for the SAFETY Act. This should help to clarify some confusion that apparently has arisen regarding what was intended by the House SAP. FYI, I wasn't sure whether we wanted to support the Act outright or just the "types of protections" it provides -- the latter being a hedge in case we want to work with Congress to fine-tune the mechanics

Although there is limited discussion on the SAFETY Act, there is no specific discussion of the government contractor defense. The government contractor defense (which already exists today through case law) shields contractors from unbounded liability when: (a) the government provides reasonably specific specifications, (b) the contractor follows the specifications, and (c) the contractor makes known risks uniquely known to the contractor. Our initial review of case law suggests that courts traditionally have appeared to overwhelmingly rule in favor of contractors -- and we haven't yet come across a case where the government has been held liable (which comes as little surprise because there appears to be no waiver of sovereign immunity). We might undercut our concern about indemnification if we emphasize that the government contractor defense generally has worked well.

Although the letter asks for parameters for reaching a compromise, the draft does not expressly indicate support for a compromise. There are places in the response where the door theoretically is left open. For example, the last sentence of the second paragraph of the cover letter states that it would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to unbounded liability -- which arguably leaves the door open for bounded liability). The response to the first question includes reference to an FAA example where one key consideration of indemnification apparently centered around the fact that the item was highly customized (as opposed to commercial off-the-shelf). If I recall correctly, Brett drew this type of distinction at our meeting with industry several weeks ago.

The specific responses to the questions focus primarily on Public Law 85-804. However, there is also brief discussion on both the Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA) and the Price-Anderson Act, since the questions asked us to discuss other authorities in addition to 85-804. It is probably beneficial to discuss CSLA, since its model for limiting liability (e.g., requiring approval of a compensation plan and congressional appropriation of funds) is fiscally responsible. On the other hand, Price-Anderson (which mandates indemnification for contracts that involve the risk of a nuclear incident) is probably not a desirable model to emulate. (As I assume you know, Price-Anderson expired and I understand discussions are ongoing regarding an extension of the authority.)

The responses do not attempt to address every question in explicit detail.

For example, it is difficult to gauge how often indemnification is provided when a contract is eligible for such because (1) there is no government-wide database of such information and (2) agencies probably determine there is no unusually hazardous risk as opposed to finding such and then telling the contractor no indemnification will be provided.

The cover letter expresses support for a terrorism insurance program. The language should basically mirror SAP discussion for S. 2600. I wasn't sure if you wanted to address this in the letter; hence, the language is bracketed.

The draft indicates that we are not aware of the federal government having previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments. It is possible that there may have been legislation in the 1960s related to the riots in Washington that involved payment from federal to local govt related to indemnification. We're checking into this.

D R A F T

The Honorable Joseph I. Lieberman
Chairman
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your August 7, 2002 correspondence requesting our views regarding the indemnification of contractors who provide products and services to aid in our Nation's homeland security efforts. Your letter indicates that when the Senate considers its version of the Homeland Security legislation in September, an amendment may be offered to authorize indemnification.

We understand that the amendment the Senate may consider is similar to what was proposed by the House Government Reform Committee for the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (H.R. 5005). The Government Reform Committee's proposal, which was not part of the House-passed bill, would have authorized the federal government to provide unlimited indemnification to companies that sell counterterrorism technology to federal, state, and local government agencies. These actions would not be subject to the availability of appropriations. The Administration would strongly oppose such an amendment, given the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. It would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to this unbounded liability.

Catastrophic business risks associated with selling antiterrorism technology to the government which cannot otherwise be covered through private insurance can generally be addressed, as may be appropriate, under indemnification authorities already provided to agencies. Most notable among these authorities is Public Law 85-804. Under this law, the President may empower the heads of agencies to indemnify contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks associated with activities facilitating the national defense. While the types of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 are limited, covered agencies still have considerable discretion to determine if an activity qualifies as unusually hazardous or nuclear.

Following the events of September 11th, agencies have found certain activities associated with defending the homeland to involve unusually hazardous risks and have negotiated indemnification clauses using the existing authorities of Public Law 85-804. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) indemnified a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine. The Secretary of HHS concluded that the steps the contractor has been asked to take to assure adequate availability of vaccine, including dilution of the vaccine, will materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability for which adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable cost. As another example, the Secretary of Transportation recently determined that certain contracts for the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems involve unusually hazardous risk and warrant indemnification.

To the extent the Senate intends to consider new options for handling risks associated with the sale of anti-terrorism technologies, it should give careful consideration to the protections that would be afforded by the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, which was passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005. The SAFETY Act would bolster government access to needed suppliers of anti-terrorism technology in a fiscally sound manner. It would require a contractor selling anti-terrorism technologies to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims for injuries associated with a terrorist attack in which the contractor's technology was deployed to protect the public from harm. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties but, at the same time, shield the Treasury and contractors from predatory lawsuits by generally capping recovery. Because its protections would apply to both federal and non-federal customers, the SAFETY Act would promote marketplace participation with all levels of government.

[In addition, the Senate should move promptly to create a terrorism risk insurance program. The backstop insurance program that would be established by the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (S. 2600) is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts and will add much needed stability to our economy. As the Administration has previously noted, the program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning insurance market. [Although this measure is short-term, insurers should, as a general matter, have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country continues to acclimate to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th.] **]

The Administration is committed to ensuring that the Department of Homeland Security and other agencies engaged in the war on terrorism have timely and cost-effective access to the expertise and ingenuity of the private sector, upon whom we will rely heavily for the quality goods and services needed to ensure the safety of the American people. We recognize that threats posed by terrorism may present new business risks for sellers of anti-terrorism technologies. When considering this risk, we urge the Committee to reject any proposal that will expose the Treasury to unbounded and unfunded contingent liabilities and look instead to more fiscally sound approaches, such as that proposed by the SAFETY Act [and a terrorism insurance, program].

Additional information responding to your questions[, which was prepared by OMB's Office of Federal Procurement Policy], is set forth in the attached enclosure.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

Responses to Questions on Contractor Indemnification Posed by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

Note: Information on agency use of indemnification is not collected in a centralized manner. Due to the limited time frame available for responding to this inquiry, OMB informally sought information from the following agencies: the Departments of Transportation (DOT) and Health and Human Services (HHS), which have had recent experiences with indemnification under acquisitions to address needs for the defense against terrorism; the Department of Defense (DoD) which has indemnified contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks; and the Department of Energy (DOE), which, pursuant to statute, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident.

Question 1: The government currently has authority to offer indemnification in a narrow set of contracts. What has the government's experience been in using this existing authority, whether under Public Law 85-804 or otherwise? For example, how often are indemnification clauses included in government contracts? Are they included in all cases in which they are authorized? If not, in what portion are they included, and what criteria are used to determine whether to use them? Do they usually carry limits on the government's liability or imposed specific requirements on the indemnified party? Has the use of these provisions resulted in actual costs to the government? If so, what has been the cost of these provisions to the government? What lessons has the government learned from the use of these provisions?

The main authorities used by the government to indemnify its contractors against catastrophic risk are: (1) Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435), (2) 49 U.S.C. Subtitle IX, Chapter 701 (popularly known as the Commercial Space Launch Act), and (3) the Price-Anderson Act. A short summary of the government's experiences with each of these authorities is discussed below.

Public Law 85-804

Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435) vests the President with authority to empower agencies to grant various forms of extraordinary contractual relief, where the relief would facilitate the national defense. As implemented by Executive Order 10789, as amended, and the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR, 48 CFR Part 50), Public Law 85-804 has enabled agencies (including the major procuring agencies) to secure private sector performance of activities involving unusually hazardous or nuclear risks by indemnifying them against third-party claims.[1]

Criteria.

Guidance emphasizes the need for all due deliberations, reflective of the extraordinary nature of the relief that can be granted -- which is not subject to the availability of appropriated funds. FAR 50.102(b) states that actions "shall be accomplished as expeditiously as practicable, consistent with the care, restraint, and exercise of sound judgment appropriate to the use of such extraordinary authority."

Three important safeguards were incorporated into the exercise of Public Law 85-804 when Executive Order 10789 was amended in 1971. Executive Order 11610 added requirements that: (1) indemnification provisions be approved in advance by an official at a level not below that of the secretary, (2) indemnification could apply only to claims or losses arising out of or resulting from risks that the contract defines as unusually hazardous or nuclear in nature, and (3) the approving official, in determining whether and to what extent indemnification should be authorized, must take into account the availability, cost, and terms of private insurance, self-insurance, other proof of financial responsibility, and workers' compensation insurance. These safeguards help to ensure that agencies, as stewards of the public fisc, fully consider whether indemnification and the potential financial liability it imposes on the government is in the taxpayers' best interest.

Usage in general.

Comprehensive government-wide data is not readily available regarding the use of Public Law 85-804. However, it appears from the limited data reviewed and discussions with several agencies that indemnification under Public Law 85-804 is used sparingly. Typically, indemnification for unusually hazardous or nuclear activities is provided when there is no other way for an agency to accomplish its mission. For example, in 1996, the Defense Logistics Agency indemnified a manufacturer of Pyridostigmine Bromide Tablets (PBT), which is used as a nerve agent pre-treatment to enhance the efficacy of post-exposure antidote therapy. Critical to DoD's decision was the fact that the contractor was the sole manufacturer of the item and had indicated its refusal to deliver PBT without an indemnification provision. In reaching its decision, DoD also took into account that acquisition of PBT could impose liability upon the contractor in excess of financial protection reasonably available.[2]

[1] Relief may also include an increase of contract price without consideration.

[2] Allegations had been made that PBT caused Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As a result, the contractor, as manufacturer was threatened by unknown liability for which insurance coverage was not available.

In FY 1998, the last year that DoD compiled a department-wide report on its use of Public Law 85-804,[3] indemnification clauses were included in 30 of DoD's contracts. Contractors were indemnified against claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractors' insurance program.[4]

While the universe of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 is appropriately limited, the law, as implemented, gives agencies a fair amount of discretion to determine if a given activity poses an unusually hazardous or nuclear risk. Not surprisingly, agencies have justified use of indemnification under Public Law 85-804 for the production of items which are themselves inherently dangerous (e.g., high energy propellants or nuclear submarines). But agencies have also justified indemnification under other circumstances, such as where the government was procuring highly customized items whose use by the government could pose risk of very large claims. In 1981, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation authorized indemnification for contractors engaged in the upgrading the en route air traffic control system for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Of particular note, the Secretary found that the equipment to be purchased would possess technical characteristics "which far exceeded the technical requirements for hardware and software utilized in most commercial applications." In addition, claims from an accident could be far in excess of the insurance coverage that reliably and reasonably could be obtained by the manufacturers in the marketplace for the life of the system.[5]

Usage in the context of protecting the homeland.

Following the events of September 11th, several agencies have exercised their discretion to indemnify selected contractors for certain activities associated with protection of our homeland where they have determined that such activities qualify as unusually hazardous. In this regard, HHS found solid grounds to indemnify a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine.[6] HHS has been working with the contractor to assure that the available stockpile of smallpox vaccine can be released promptly if and when directed by HHS. HHS is seeking to have the contractor perform various tasks critical to having vaccine available. These tasks include, among others, delivering vaccine whose original expiration date has passed for possible dilution. Because HHS has concluded that these and other tasks materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability and adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable

[3] Section 901(r)(1) of the Federal Reports Elimination Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-362) repealed 50 U.S.C. 1434, which required preparation of annual reports to Congress regarding actions taken on contractor requests for relief under Public Law 85-804.

[4] In addition to Public Law 85-804, DoD may indemnify a research and development contractor pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2354 for claims by third persons for death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, from a risk that the contract defines as unusually hazardous.

[5] See 46 Fed. Reg. 62596 (December 24, 1981) and 47 Fed. Reg. 1229 (January 11, 1982).

[6] The President added the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the list of agencies authorized to use Public Law 85-804 on October 20, 2001. See Executive Order 13232, 66 Fed. Reg. 53941.

cost, HHS has indemnified the contractor for: (a) adverse events associated with the vaccine, (b) failure of the vaccine to immunize, and (c) transmission of the vaccinia virus.

DOT has determined that certain contracts providing services and products related to the screening of airport passengers and baggage for the presence of dangerous items constitute an unusually hazardous risk for which indemnification is appropriate. DOT further concluded that there is an unusually hazardous risk associated with the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems. A table briefly describing indemnification actions taken by DOT's Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is provided at Attachment A.

Limitations on liability.

Both HHS and DOT have taken steps to limit the government's liability. For instance, indemnification for the smallpox vaccine manufacturer is limited to liability that might arise if the vaccine were to be used in a national emergency. With one exception, the indemnification agreements with the airport screening contractors provides for a monetary cap, and all of the agreements will expire when the government screeners are deployed.

Payments under indemnification clauses.

To OFPP's knowledge, there have been no payments made under indemnification clauses entered into pursuant to Public Law 85-804.

The Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA)

CLSA requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish insurance (or other financial responsibility) requirements in amounts sufficient to address certain risks associated with the conduct of licensed launch activities. The CSLA provides detailed requirements for allocating risk among the various launch participants, including federal agencies involved in launch services. First enacted in 1988, this comprehensive scheme was intended to facilitate the development of the U.S. commercial launch industry by allowing it to compete effectively in the international marketplace and by providing to launch participants certain protections against the risk of catastrophic losses that could result from hazardous launch activities.

Under the CSLA, the government accepts responsibility for successful third-party claims that exceed the limits of liability insurance (obtained by licensees in amounts established by the agency) up to $1.5 billion (as adjusted for inflation occurring after January 1, 1989). The licensee remains liable for amounts above this cap. FAA sets insurance requirements based on its determination of the maximum probable loss (MPL) that would result from licensed launch or reentry activities, within statutory ceilings, not to exceed the lesser of $500 million or the maximum available on the world market at reasonable cost.[7] The government may cover claims from the first dollar of loss in the event of an insurance policy exclusion that is determined to be "usual." However, payment -- in all cases -- is subject both to the approval of a compensation plan prepared by the agency and congressional appropriation of funds. In addition, indemnification will not be provided for a party's willful misconduct.[8]

The Commercial Space Transportation Competitiveness Act of 2000, Public Law 106-405, directed the Secretary of Transportation to review the liability risk-sharing regime for U.S. commercial space transportation. The report, which was submitted to Congress earlier this year, concluded that the current regime is adequate, appropriate, and effective.[9] The report found that CSLA's liability structure facilitates the competitiveness of the U.S. launch industry in the international space transportation market, while effectively limiting the government's liability. According to the report, there have been no claims for third-party liability resulting form a U.S.-licensed commercial launch. In fact, DOT is aware of no claims of third-party liability having been presented against the required coverage.

The Price-Anderson Act

The Price-Anderson Act established a system of financial protection for persons who may be liable for, and persons who may be injured by, a nuclear incident. The Act requires DOE to include an indemnification in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident. The indemnification: (1) provides omnibus coverage of all persons who might be legally liable; (2) indemnifies fully all legal liability up to the statutory limit on such liability (currently $9.43 billion for a nuclear incident in the United States); (3) covers all DOE contractual activity that might result in a nuclear incident in the United States; (4) is not subject to the usual limitation on the availability of appropriated funds; and (5) is mandatory and exclusive. The Department of Energy Acquisition Regulation (DEAR) sets forth standard nuclear indemnification clauses that are incorporated into all DOE contracts and subcontracts involving source, special nuclear, or by-product material (nuclear material).[10]

According to DOE, a number of claims have been filed in federal district courts seeking recovery under the Price-Anderson Act. Within the past 15 years, settlements have been paid in two cases, totaling just under $100 million.

[7] According to DOT, the MPL is structured so that the risk estimate of government indemnification obligations is no greater than 1 in 10 million. The current MPL values range up to $261 million for third-party losses resulting from launch vehicle flight.

[8] Regulations setting forth financial responsibility requirements may be found at 14 CFR Part 440.

Question 2: The request to expand indemnification authority rests on the premise that the government is having, or will have, difficulty in obtaining the technology and products it needs to protect the homeland in the war on terrorism. What is the executive branch's experience in this regard? Has it been difficult or impossible to get the needed products? If so, how extensive has the difficulty been? Has it been government-wide or limited to just a few Departments or agencies? To what do you attribute any difficulty that exists? Is it due to the absence of indemnification authority? Would greater indemnification authority resolve the problem? If so, what should the scope of statutory authority for such provisions be?

To date, OFPP has not been advised by federal agencies of significant or widespread difficulties in obtaining access to the marketplace for products and services needed for homeland security. We are aware of limited difficulties in accessing the marketplace due to contractor concerns with catastrophic liability. Some of these concerms have been dealt with through, or are being considered for, indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

According to DOT, screening companies made clear after September 11th that they would refuse to enter into contractual agreements with the federal government unless indemnification was provided. In January 2002, the Secretary authorized FAA to negotiate indemnification agreements with airport security screening companies to secure contract screening services during the transition to federal airport screening by employees of TSA. Manufacturers of vaccine and related products have advised HHS that such products carry safety and efficacy risks that prevent them from meeting the government's needs at fair and reasonable prices without indemnification. As noted in the response to Question no. 1, the Secretary granted indemnification to one contractor and currently is considering requests from other manufacturers.

Expanding indemnification authority is neither necessary nor appropriate. Most homeland security-related needs will not warrant indemnification. DOT points out, as just one example, that procurement assistance, general services or other management support services would not merit indemnification, if sought, among other reasons because they do not constitute unusually hazardous risks. As a general matter, insurers should have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country acclimates to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th. However, protections of the type set forth in the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005, are worthy of consideration. The SAFETY Act would establish a federal cause of action to recognize claims of parties injured in terrorist attacks where anti-terrorism technology was deployed but, at the same time, limit potential contractor and government liability in a fiscally responsible manner.

Question 3: The amendment before the House would have allowed the Secretary of Homeland Security to indemnify contractors with State and local governments. Has the Federal government ever before entered into agreements indemnifying contractors with State or local governments? Does the Administration believe there is a need to do so? Should Congress consider different factors when evaluating this part of the proposal than when reviewing the expansion of authority for federal government contracts?

We appreciate that state and local governments, like the federal government, need effective access to the innovation and expertise of the private sector. In this regard, we understand, for example, that New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority and Policy Department have faced difficulties obtaining chemical-biological detection systems. While these difficulties should be addressed, unbounded federal indemnification is not the answer. Indemnification of this nature would be fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. To our knowledge, the federal government has not previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments.

Rather than increasing indemnification, state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies could be enhanced through the types of protections proposed by the SAFETY Act (sections 751-755 of H.R. 5005). The SAFETY Act, which would cover sales of products to both federal and non-federal government customers, would require a contractor to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when anti-terrorism technologies that have been approved by the Department of Homeland Security have been deployed in defense against such act. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties, and, at the same time, protect contractors from predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. This type of framework should facilitate state and local government access to contractors that can assist them in carrying out their critical role in the fight against terrorism.

Question 4: I understand that the Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the House indemnification proposal, but that this view may be evolving. What is the Administration's current view? Even if the Administration still opposes the specific proposal offered in the House, is that opposition a blanket one to any expansion of indemnification authority, or do you believe a narrower authorization would be appropriate? If so, I would appreciate your providing guidance on the parameters of a proposal you believe would be appropriate.

The opposition expressed by the Administration in its SAP on H.R. 5005 was directed at the indemnification proposal recommended by the House Government Reform Committee. That proposal is highly objectionable because it would subject the Treasury to unlimited unfunded contingent liabilities. By contrast, the provisions that the House ultimately adopted (i.e., the SAFETY Act) offer a disciplined and fiscally sound approach to addressing the potential liabilities that sellers of anti-terrorism technology could face.

Subject: Contractor Indemnification & homeland security -- Draft Response
to Lieberman

Attached is a draft response OFPP has prepared to the recent Lieberman letter seeking OMB's views and various pieces of information regarding contractor indemnification. (If you need another copy of the incoming, let me know and I'll fax it to you.) I have prepared a cover letter giving our overall response and then attached more detailed responses as an enclosure. The draft is still under review within OMB, including in OGC, but we wanted to make sure you had sufficient time to review the document and provide your policy guidance.

Given the time constraints, I limited agency input to the following agencies: DOT and HHS (given their recent experiences with indemnification related specifically to the defense against terrorism), DoD (which has indemnified contractors against unusually hazardous or nuclear risks), and DOE (which, pursuant to the Price-Anderson Act, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident). Each of these agencies is reviewing the factual statements in the response (the policy discussion has not been shared with them). We should have their input by no later than noon on Tuesday.

Lee-Ann Bracket from Lieberman's staff left a voice-mail for me (228-3533) which I passed on to Christine and Danielle for followup. I'm sure she is anxious to have the responses before the Senate resumes its deliberations next week.

We are also hearing that the House Technology and Procurement Policy Subcommittee may hold a hearing on this subject sometime in September.

FYI, Angela is out of town but will be checking emails. (We discussed the basic responses late last week.)

To assist in your review, you might note the following points (any and all of which can obviously be revised/reworked as may be necessary):

The draft strongly opposes the Govt Reform Committee (GROC) indemnification proposal, consistent with the House SAP language. (The letter states that the current indemnification scheme under Public Law 85-804 is sufficient. There is not an extensive comparison made between 85-804 and the GROC proposal other than to point out that the GROC proposal would drastically increase exposure to liability through potential coverage of state and local contractors. It is possible that, at some point, we may be asked why we think the GROC proposal will result in greater indemnification of federal contractors than may occur under 85-804.)

The draft expresses support for the SAFETY Act. This should help to clarify some confusion that apparently has arisen regarding what was intended by the House SAP. FYI, I wasn't sure whether we wanted to support the Act outright or just the "types of protections" it provides -- the latter being a hedge in case we want to work with Congress to fine-tune the mechanics

Although there is limited discussion on the SAFETY Act, there is no specific discussion of the government contractor defense. The government contractor defense (which already exists today through case law) shields contractors from unbounded liability when: (a) the government provides reasonably specific specifications, (b) the contractor follows the specifications, and (c) the contractor makes known risks uniquely known to the contractor. Our initial review of case law suggests that courts traditionally have appeared to overwhelmingly rule in favor of contractors -- and we haven't yet come across a case where the government has been held liable (which comes as little surprise because there appears to be no waiver of sovereign immunity). We might undercut our concern about indemnification if we emphasize that the government contractor defense generally has worked well.

Although the letter asks for parameters for reaching a compromise, the draft does not expressly indicate support for a compromise. There are places in the response where the door theoretically is left open. For example, the last sentence of the second paragraph of the cover letter states that it would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to unbounded liability -- which arguably leaves the door open for bounded liability). The response to the first question includes reference to an FAA example where one key consideration of indemnification apparently centered around the fact that the item was highly customized (as opposed to commercial off-the-shelf). If I recall correctly, Brett drew this type of distinction at our meeting with industry several weeks ago.

The specific responses to the questions focus primarily on Public Law 85-804. However, there is also brief discussion on both the Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA) and the Price-Anderson Act, since the questions asked us to discuss other authorities in addition to 85-804. It is probably beneficial to discuss CSLA, since its model for limiting liability (e.g., requiring approval of a compensation plan and congressional appropriation of funds) is fiscally responsible. On the other hand, Price-Anderson (which mandates indemnification for contracts that involve the risk of a nuclear incident) is probably not a desirable model to emulate. (As I assume you know, Price-Anderson expired and I understand discussions are ongoing regarding an extension of the authority.)

The responses do not attempt to address every question in explicit detail.

For example, it is difficult to gauge how often indemnification is provided when a contract is eligible for such because (1) there is no government-wide database of such information and (2) agencies probably determine there is no unusually hazardous risk as opposed to finding such and then telling the contractor no indemnification will be provided.

The cover letter expresses support for a terrorism insurance program. The language should basically mirror SAP discussion for S. 2600. I wasn't sure if you wanted to address this in the letter; hence, the language is bracketed.

The draft indicates that we are not aware of the federal government having previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments. It is possible that there may have been legislation in the 1960s related to the riots in Washington that involved payment from federal to local govt related to indemnification. We're checking into this.

D R A F T

The Honorable Joseph I. Lieberman
Chairman
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your August 7, 2002 correspondence requesting our views regarding the indemnification of contractors who provide products and services to aid in our Nation's homeland security efforts. Your letter indicates that when the Senate considers its version of the Homeland Security legislation in September, an amendment may be offered to authorize indemnification.

We understand that the amendment the Senate may consider is similar to what was proposed by the House Government Reform Committee for the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (H.R. 5005). The Government Reform Committee's proposal, which was not part of the House-passed bill, would have authorized the federal government to provide unlimited indemnification to companies that sell counterterrorism technology to federal, state, and local government agencies. These actions would not be subject to the availability of appropriations. The Administration would strongly oppose such an amendment, given the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. It would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to this unbounded liability.

Catastrophic business risks associated with selling antiterrorism technology to the government which cannot otherwise be covered through private insurance can generally be addressed, as may be appropriate, under indemnification authorities already provided to agencies. Most notable among these authorities is Public Law 85-804. Under this law, the President may empower the heads of agencies to indemnify contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks associated with activities facilitating the national defense. While the types of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 are limited, covered agencies still have considerable discretion to determine if an activity qualifies as unusually hazardous or nuclear.

Following the events of September 11th, agencies have found certain activities associated with defending the homeland to involve unusually hazardous risks and have negotiated indemnification clauses using the existing authorities of Public Law 85-804. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) indemnified a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine. The Secretary of HHS concluded that the steps the contractor has been asked to take to assure adequate availability of vaccine, including dilution of the vaccine, will materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability for which adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable cost. As another example, the Secretary of Transportation recently determined that certain contracts for the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems involve unusually hazardous risk and warrant indemnification.

To the extent the Senate intends to consider new options for handling risks associated with the sale of anti-terrorism technologies, it should give careful consideration to the protections that would be afforded by the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, which was passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005. The SAFETY Act would bolster government access to needed suppliers of anti-terrorism technology in a fiscally sound manner. It would require a contractor selling anti-terrorism technologies to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims for injuries associated with a terrorist attack in which the contractor's technology was deployed to protect the public from harm. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties but, at the same time, shield the Treasury and contractors from predatory lawsuits by generally capping recovery. Because its protections would apply to both federal and non-federal customers, the SAFETY Act would promote marketplace participation with all levels of government.

[In addition, the Senate should move promptly to create a terrorism risk insurance program. The backstop insurance program that would be established by the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (S. 2600) is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts and will add much needed stability to our economy. As the Administration has previously noted, the program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning insurance market. [Although this measure is short-term, insurers should, as a general matter, have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country continues to acclimate to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th.] **]

The Administration is committed to ensuring that the Department of Homeland Security and other agencies engaged in the war on terrorism have timely and cost-effective access to the expertise and ingenuity of the private sector, upon whom we will rely heavily for the quality goods and services needed to ensure the safety of the American people. We recognize that threats posed by terrorism may present new business risks for sellers of anti-terrorism technologies. When considering this risk, we urge the Committee to reject any proposal that will expose the Treasury to unbounded and unfunded contingent liabilities and look instead to more fiscally sound approaches, such as that proposed by the SAFETY Act [and a terrorism insurance, program].

Additional information responding to your questions[, which was prepared by OMB's Office of Federal Procurement Policy], is set forth in the attached enclosure.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

Responses to Questions on Contractor Indemnification Posed by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

Note: Information on agency use of indemnification is not collected in a centralized manner. Due to the limited time frame available for responding to this inquiry, OMB informally sought information from the following agencies: the Departments of Transportation (DOT) and Health and Human Services (HHS), which have had recent experiences with indemnification under acquisitions to address needs for the defense against terrorism; the Department of Defense (DoD) which has indemnified contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks; and the Department of Energy (DOE), which, pursuant to statute, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident.

Question 1: The government currently has authority to offer indemnification in a narrow set of contracts. What has the government's experience been in using this existing authority, whether under Public Law 85-804 or otherwise? For example, how often are indemnification clauses included in government contracts? Are they included in all cases in which they are authorized? If not, in what portion are they included, and what criteria are used to determine whether to use them? Do they usually carry limits on the government's liability or imposed specific requirements on the indemnified party? Has the use of these provisions resulted in actual costs to the government? If so, what has been the cost of these provisions to the government? What lessons has the government learned from the use of these provisions?

The main authorities used by the government to indemnify its contractors against catastrophic risk are: (1) Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435), (2) 49 U.S.C. Subtitle IX, Chapter 701 (popularly known as the Commercial Space Launch Act), and (3) the Price-Anderson Act. A short summary of the government's experiences with each of these authorities is discussed below.

Public Law 85-804

Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435) vests the President with authority to empower agencies to grant various forms of extraordinary contractual relief, where the relief would facilitate the national defense. As implemented by Executive Order 10789, as amended, and the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR, 48 CFR Part 50), Public Law 85-804 has enabled agencies (including the major procuring agencies) to secure private sector performance of activities involving unusually hazardous or nuclear risks by indemnifying them against third-party claims.[1]

Criteria.

Guidance emphasizes the need for all due deliberations, reflective of the extraordinary nature of the relief that can be granted -- which is not subject to the availability of appropriated funds. FAR 50.102(b) states that actions "shall be accomplished as expeditiously as practicable, consistent with the care, restraint, and exercise of sound judgment appropriate to the use of such extraordinary authority."

Three important safeguards were incorporated into the exercise of Public Law 85-804 when Executive Order 10789 was amended in 1971. Executive Order 11610 added requirements that: (1) indemnification provisions be approved in advance by an official at a level not below that of the secretary, (2) indemnification could apply only to claims or losses arising out of or resulting from risks that the contract defines as unusually hazardous or nuclear in nature, and (3) the approving official, in determining whether and to what extent indemnification should be authorized, must take into account the availability, cost, and terms of private insurance, self-insurance, other proof of financial responsibility, and workers' compensation insurance. These safeguards help to ensure that agencies, as stewards of the public fisc, fully consider whether indemnification and the potential financial liability it imposes on the government is in the taxpayers' best interest.

Usage in general.

Comprehensive government-wide data is not readily available regarding the use of Public Law 85-804. However, it appears from the limited data reviewed and discussions with several agencies that indemnification under Public Law 85-804 is used sparingly. Typically, indemnification for unusually hazardous or nuclear activities is provided when there is no other way for an agency to accomplish its mission. For example, in 1996, the Defense Logistics Agency indemnified a manufacturer of Pyridostigmine Bromide Tablets (PBT), which is used as a nerve agent pre-treatment to enhance the efficacy of post-exposure antidote therapy. Critical to DoD's decision was the fact that the contractor was the sole manufacturer of the item and had indicated its refusal to deliver PBT without an indemnification provision. In reaching its decision, DoD also took into account that acquisition of PBT could impose liability upon the contractor in excess of financial protection reasonably available.[2]

[1] Relief may also include an increase of contract price without consideration.

[2] Allegations had been made that PBT caused Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As a result, the contractor, as manufacturer was threatened by unknown liability for which insurance coverage was not available.

In FY 1998, the last year that DoD compiled a department-wide report on its use of Public Law 85-804,[3] indemnification clauses were included in 30 of DoD's contracts. Contractors were indemnified against claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractors' insurance program.[4]

While the universe of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 is appropriately limited, the law, as implemented, gives agencies a fair amount of discretion to determine if a given activity poses an unusually hazardous or nuclear risk. Not surprisingly, agencies have justified use of indemnification under Public Law 85-804 for the production of items which are themselves inherently dangerous (e.g., high energy propellants or nuclear submarines). But agencies have also justified indemnification under other circumstances, such as where the government was procuring highly customized items whose use by the government could pose risk of very large claims. In 1981, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation authorized indemnification for contractors engaged in the upgrading the en route air traffic control system for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Of particular note, the Secretary found that the equipment to be purchased would possess technical characteristics "which far exceeded the technical requirements for hardware and software utilized in most commercial applications." In addition, claims from an accident could be far in excess of the insurance coverage that reliably and reasonably could be obtained by the manufacturers in the marketplace for the life of the system.[5]

Usage in the context of protecting the homeland.

Following the events of September 11th, several agencies have exercised their discretion to indemnify selected contractors for certain activities associated with protection of our homeland where they have determined that such activities qualify as unusually hazardous. In this regard, HHS found solid grounds to indemnify a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine.[6] HHS has been working with the contractor to assure that the available stockpile of smallpox vaccine can be released promptly if and when directed by HHS. HHS is seeking to have the contractor perform various tasks critical to having vaccine available. These tasks include, among others, delivering vaccine whose original expiration date has passed for possible dilution. Because HHS has concluded that these and other tasks materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability and adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable

[3] Section 901(r)(1) of the Federal Reports Elimination Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-362) repealed 50 U.S.C. 1434, which required preparation of annual reports to Congress regarding actions taken on contractor requests for relief under Public Law 85-804.

[4] In addition to Public Law 85-804, DoD may indemnify a research and development contractor pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2354 for claims by third persons for death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, from a risk that the contract defines as unusually hazardous.

[5] See 46 Fed. Reg. 62596 (December 24, 1981) and 47 Fed. Reg. 1229 (January 11, 1982).

[6] The President added the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the list of agencies authorized to use Public Law 85-804 on October 20, 2001. See Executive Order 13232, 66 Fed. Reg. 53941.

cost, HHS has indemnified the contractor for: (a) adverse events associated with the vaccine, (b) failure of the vaccine to immunize, and (c) transmission of the vaccinia virus.

DOT has determined that certain contracts providing services and products related to the screening of airport passengers and baggage for the presence of dangerous items constitute an unusually hazardous risk for which indemnification is appropriate. DOT further concluded that there is an unusually hazardous risk associated with the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems. A table briefly describing indemnification actions taken by DOT's Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is provided at Attachment A.

Limitations on liability.

Both HHS and DOT have taken steps to limit the government's liability. For instance, indemnification for the smallpox vaccine manufacturer is limited to liability that might arise if the vaccine were to be used in a national emergency. With one exception, the indemnification agreements with the airport screening contractors provides for a monetary cap, and all of the agreements will expire when the government screeners are deployed.

Payments under indemnification clauses.

To OFPP's knowledge, there have been no payments made under indemnification clauses entered into pursuant to Public Law 85-804.

The Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA)

CLSA requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish insurance (or other financial responsibility) requirements in amounts sufficient to address certain risks associated with the conduct of licensed launch activities. The CSLA provides detailed requirements for allocating risk among the various launch participants, including federal agencies involved in launch services. First enacted in 1988, this comprehensive scheme was intended to facilitate the development of the U.S. commercial launch industry by allowing it to compete effectively in the international marketplace and by providing to launch participants certain protections against the risk of catastrophic losses that could result from hazardous launch activities.

Under the CSLA, the government accepts responsibility for successful third-party claims that exceed the limits of liability insurance (obtained by licensees in amounts established by the agency) up to $1.5 billion (as adjusted for inflation occurring after January 1, 1989). The licensee remains liable for amounts above this cap. FAA sets insurance requirements based on its determination of the maximum probable loss (MPL) that would result from licensed launch or reentry activities, within statutory ceilings, not to exceed the lesser of $500 million or the maximum available on the world market at reasonable cost.[7] The government may cover claims from the first dollar of loss in the event of an insurance policy exclusion that is determined to be "usual." However, payment -- in all cases -- is subject both to the approval of a compensation plan prepared by the agency and congressional appropriation of funds. In addition, indemnification will not be provided for a party's willful misconduct.[8]

The Commercial Space Transportation Competitiveness Act of 2000, Public Law 106-405, directed the Secretary of Transportation to review the liability risk-sharing regime for U.S. commercial space transportation. The report, which was submitted to Congress earlier this year, concluded that the current regime is adequate, appropriate, and effective.[9] The report found that CSLA's liability structure facilitates the competitiveness of the U.S. launch industry in the international space transportation market, while effectively limiting the government's liability. According to the report, there have been no claims for third-party liability resulting form a U.S.-licensed commercial launch. In fact, DOT is aware of no claims of third-party liability having been presented against the required coverage.

The Price-Anderson Act

The Price-Anderson Act established a system of financial protection for persons who may be liable for, and persons who may be injured by, a nuclear incident. The Act requires DOE to include an indemnification in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident. The indemnification: (1) provides omnibus coverage of all persons who might be legally liable; (2) indemnifies fully all legal liability up to the statutory limit on such liability (currently $9.43 billion for a nuclear incident in the United States); (3) covers all DOE contractual activity that might result in a nuclear incident in the United States; (4) is not subject to the usual limitation on the availability of appropriated funds; and (5) is mandatory and exclusive. The Department of Energy Acquisition Regulation (DEAR) sets forth standard nuclear indemnification clauses that are incorporated into all DOE contracts and subcontracts involving source, special nuclear, or by-product material (nuclear material).[10]

According to DOE, a number of claims have been filed in federal district courts seeking recovery under the Price-Anderson Act. Within the past 15 years, settlements have been paid in two cases, totaling just under $100 million.

[7] According to DOT, the MPL is structured so that the risk estimate of government indemnification obligations is no greater than 1 in 10 million. The current MPL values range up to $261 million for third-party losses resulting from launch vehicle flight.

[8] Regulations setting forth financial responsibility requirements may be found at 14 CFR Part 440.

[9] The report is available at http://www.ast.faa.gov.

[10] See 48 CFR Parts 950, 952, and 970.

Question 2: The request to expand indemnification authority rests on the premise that the government is having, or will have, difficulty in obtaining the technology and products it needs to protect the homeland in the war on terrorism. What is the executive branch's experience in this regard? Has it been difficult or impossible to get the needed products? If so, how extensive has the difficulty been? Has it been government-wide or limited to just a few Departments or agencies? To what do you attribute any difficulty that exists? Is it due to the absence of indemnification authority? Would greater indemnification authority resolve the problem? If so, what should the scope of statutory authority for such provisions be?

To date, OFPP has not been advised by federal agencies of significant or widespread difficulties in obtaining access to the marketplace for products and services needed for homeland security. We are aware of limited difficulties in accessing the marketplace due to contractor concerns with catastrophic liability. Some of these concerms have been dealt with through, or are being considered for, indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

According to DOT, screening companies made clear after September 11th that they would refuse to enter into contractual agreements with the federal government unless indemnification was provided. In January 2002, the Secretary authorized FAA to negotiate indemnification agreements with airport security screening companies to secure contract screening services during the transition to federal airport screening by employees of TSA. Manufacturers of vaccine and related products have advised HHS that such products carry safety and efficacy risks that prevent them from meeting the government's needs at fair and reasonable prices without indemnification. As noted in the response to Question no. 1, the Secretary granted indemnification to one contractor and currently is considering requests from other manufacturers.

Expanding indemnification authority is neither necessary nor appropriate. Most homeland security-related needs will not warrant indemnification. DOT points out, as just one example, that procurement assistance, general services or other management support services would not merit indemnification, if sought, among other reasons because they do not constitute unusually hazardous risks. As a general matter, insurers should have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country acclimates to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th. However, protections of the type set forth in the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005, are worthy of consideration. The SAFETY Act would establish a federal cause of action to recognize claims of parties injured in terrorist attacks where anti-terrorism technology was deployed but, at the same time, limit potential contractor and government liability in a fiscally responsible manner.

Question 3: The amendment before the House would have allowed the Secretary of Homeland Security to indemnify contractors with State and local governments. Has the Federal government ever before entered into agreements indemnifying contractors with State or local governments? Does the Administration believe there is a need to do so? Should Congress consider different factors when evaluating this part of the proposal than when reviewing the expansion of authority for federal government contracts?

We appreciate that state and local governments, like the federal government, need effective access to the innovation and expertise of the private sector. In this regard, we understand, for example, that New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority and Policy Department have faced difficulties obtaining chemical-biological detection systems. While these difficulties should be addressed, unbounded federal indemnification is not the answer. Indemnification of this nature would be fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. To our knowledge, the federal government has not previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments.

Rather than increasing indemnification, state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies could be enhanced through the types of protections proposed by the SAFETY Act (sections 751-755 of H.R. 5005). The SAFETY Act, which would cover sales of products to both federal and non-federal government customers, would require a contractor to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when anti-terrorism technologies that have been approved by the Department of Homeland Security have been deployed in defense against such act. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties, and, at the same time, protect contractors from predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. This type of framework should facilitate state and local government access to contractors that can assist them in carrying out their critical role in the fight against terrorism.

Question 4: I understand that the Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the House indemnification proposal, but that this view may be evolving. What is the Administration's current view? Even if the Administration still opposes the specific proposal offered in the House, is that opposition a blanket one to any expansion of indemnification authority, or do you believe a narrower authorization would be appropriate? If so, I would appreciate your providing guidance on the parameters of a proposal you believe would be appropriate.

The opposition expressed by the Administration in its SAP on H.R. 5005 was directed at the indemnification proposal recommended by the House Government Reform Committee. That proposal is highly objectionable because it would subject the Treasury to unlimited unfunded contingent liabilities. By contrast, the provisions that the House ultimately adopted (i.e., the SAFETY Act) offer a disciplined and fiscally sound approach to addressing the potential liabilities that sellers of anti-terrorism technology could face.

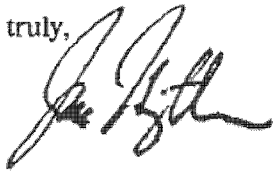
Dear Senator Feingold:

It was my privilege to serve as a member of the Supreme Court of Texas with Justice Priscilla Owen for two years prior to my retirement from the bench January 1, 1996. I had not known her personally prior to that time. I knew that she had graduated from my alma mater with honor and was a valued member of the Andrews & Kurth law firm in Houston.



When Justice Owen joined the court she impressed me as being a very quick study because although she had no previous judicial experience she seemed to be able to quickly grasp the issues and frame them into judicial questions with great clarity.

In my opinion she was unbiased and wanted to find the core legal issue in each case.

When she joined the court I knew, of course, that Priscilla was a Republican. She ran and was elected on the Republican ticket. I am convinced that he political philosophy is honestly Republican. That is as it should be. I am a Democrat and my political philosophy is Democratic, but I tried very hard not to let preconceived philosophy influence my decision on matters before the court. I believe that Justice Owen has done the same.

I am also of the opinion that the people are not well served by the partisan election of judges. I have not always been of this opinion, but after two statewide elections for the court, and after raising and spending millions of dollars, I believe that there must be a better way.

Yours truly,

The Honorable Patrick Leahy
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
224 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C. 20510

Dear Chairman:

President Bush honored impeccable integrity, character, and scholarship when he nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit a leading voice for reform in the Texas judiciary: Priscilla Owen.

I came to know Justice Owen several years ago during her service on the Texas Supreme Court, where I had previously served as Chief Justice. Then and now, Justice Owen has distinguished herself as a forceful advocate for reforming Texas's system for selecting judges. Under the state Constitution, for more than 125 years, Texas has selected its judges through contested elections, and the law therefore permits judicial candidates to receive campaign contributions. The system has positive aspects, but one of the downsides is that it invites speculation about whether judges should preside in cases where their contributors appear as attorneys or parties. That's why Justice Owen tirelessly has fought to minimize the influence of campaign contributions in judicial elections.

Reflecting her early commitment to the integrity of the courts, Justice Owen signed a judicial reform pledge during her first campaign in 1994. She has championed several proposed constitutional amendments, including an option for judges to run in non-partisan retention elections. She has written to members of the bench and bar, urging them to back reform. She has argued that the judiciary should be above the influence of partisan politics. And in a unique combination of symbolism and substance, Justice Owen returned over a third of her campaign contributions after not drawing a Democrat or Republican opponent during her 2000 re-election campaign.

Justice Owen and I would be the first to admit that the Texas judicial-selection system is in need of reform. But some special interest groups confuse flaws in our system with flaws in our judges. These groups insist on denouncing individual members of the judiciary, when reform of the laws they dislike can only come from amending the Texas Constitution, which Justice Owen strongly supports.

Their attacks on Justice Owen in particular are breathtakingly dishonest, ignoring her long-held commitment to reform and grossly distorting her rulings. Tellingly, the groups make no effort to assess whether her decisions are legally sound, and instead are content to fall back on the canard of an "appearance of impropriety." Nor have they so much as acknowledged Justice Owen's unswerving leadership in seeking reform—reforms of which they presumably approve. The groups lack credibility when they attack Justice Owen for participating in a system that has been in place longer than a century, is mandated by the Texas Constitution, and is not within her ability to change by herself. I know Texas politics and can clearly say that these assaults on Justice Owen's record are false, misleading, and deliberate distortions.

After years of closely observing Justice Owen's work, I can assert with confidence that her approach to judicial decision-making is restrained, that her opinions are fair and well reasoned, and that her integrity is beyond reproach. I echo the American Bar Association's unanimous conclusion that she is "well qualified" for the federal bench—the highest rating possible. United States Senators from both sides of the aisle have called the ABA's rating the "gold standard" of a nominee's fitness for the federal bench, and I agree with them. I know personally just how impeccable Justice Owen's credentials are.

After graduating in 1977 from Baylor Law School with honors at the top of her class, Justice Owen earned the highest score on the Texas bar exam. Her academic excellence foreshadowed the exceptional career to follow. Elected twice by the people of Texas, Justice Owen has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court for more than seven years. In 2000, every major Texas newspaper endorsed Justice Owen during her successful re-election bid.

President Bush and both Senators from Texas strongly support Justice Owen. I join them and many, many others – of all political stripes – in calling on the U.S. Senate to give this intelligent, ethical, and gifted woman a fair hearing and swift Senate confirmation.

Very truly yours,

John L. Hill

The Honorable Patrick Leahy
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary
224 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Leahy:

As past presidents of the State Bar of Texas, we join in this letter to strongly recommend an affirmative vote by the Judiciary Committee and confirmation by the full Senate for Justice Priscilla Owen, nominee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Although we profess different party affiliations and span the spectrum of views of legal and policy issues, we stand united in affirming that Justice Owen is a truly unique and outstanding candidate for appointment to the Fifth Circuit. Based on her superb integrity, competence and judicial temperament, Justice Owen earned her Well Qualified rating unanimously from the American Bar Association Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary – the highest rating possible. A fair and bipartisan review of Justice Owen's qualifications by the Judiciary Committee certainly would reach the same conclusion.

Justice Owen's stellar academic achievements include graduating cum laude from both Baylor University and Baylor Law School, thereafter earning the highest score on the Texas Bar Exam in November 1977. Her career accomplishments are also remarkable. Prior to her election to the Supreme Court of Texas in 1994, for 17 years she practiced law specializing in commercial litigation in both the federal and state courts. Since January 1995, Justice Owen has delivered exemplary service on the Texas Supreme Court, as reflected by her receiving endorsements from every major newspaper in Texas during her successful re-election bid in 2000.

The status of our profession in Texas has been significantly enhanced by Justice Owen's advocacy of pro bono service and leadership for the membership of the State Bar of Texas. Justice Owen has served on committees regarding legal services to the poor and diligently worked with others to obtain legislation that provides substantial resources for those delivering legal services to the poor.

REV_00149857

Justice Owen also has been a long-time advocate for an updated and reformed system of judicial selection in Texas. Seeking to remove any perception of a threat to judicial impartiality, Justice Owen has encouraged the reform debate and suggested positive changes that would enhance and improve our state judicial branch of government.

While the Fifth Circuit has one of the highest per judge caseloads of any circuit in the country, there are presently two vacancies on the Fifth Circuit bench. Both vacancies have been declared "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U. S. Courts. Justice Owen's service on the Fifth Circuit is critically important to the administration of justice.

Given her extraordinary legal skills and record of service in Texas, Justice Owen deserves prompt and favorable consideration by the Judiciary Committee. We thank you and look forward to Justice Owen's swift approval.

Sincerely,

Darrell E. Jordan

And finally, we need to get him back up there so he'll support some judges that I nominated. (Applause.) I found fine people to serve on our bench; good, honorable, honest people. We named one, Priscilla Owen, recently. She's smart, she's capable, one of the top students when she was in law school at Baylor. She got elected twice -- I think twice, but I know she got elected at least twice statewide in Texas, with overwhelming numbers. She's a very, very smart and capable woman. But somehow, some of them up there don't like her. I guess maybe they don't like the fact that I nominated her. But this isn't right for the judicial system, for them to be playing politics with a fine, smart, capable woman. And we need people like Jim Inhofe up there to defend my judicial nominees in Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

The Senate Judiciary Committee's vote on Priscilla Owen's appeals court nomination will reveal the health of the judicial confirmation process.

Qualifications really mattered once. On ~~Jonc~~June 24, 1986, Judiciary Committee member Joseph Biden (D-DE) explained that he would vote for judicial nominees with "the earmarks of excellence, intellectual capability, high achievement, and demonstrated excellence in the law and the requisite judicial temperament." A member of the Texas Supreme Court since 1994, Justice Owen received a unanimous "Well Qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, once praised by Democrats as the "gold standard."

Democrats once opposed partisanship. On March 19, 1997, Judiciary Committee member Edward Kennedy (D-MA) said it is "time to end the excessive partisanship over judicial nominations." On June 16, 1997, Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-VT) said that "if there is one area where partisan politics should not be allowed, it is in the area of the federal judiciary."

Democrats once opposed litmus tests. On April 14, 1994, then-Chairman Biden condemned as "inappropriate" the fact that some critics of a female appeals court nominee "object to some of her decisions and therefore her confirmation on ideological grounds." On March 19, 1997, he said if judicial nominees "will be [persons] of their word and follow [precedent], it does not matter to me what their ideology is." On July 10, 1997, Sen. Leahy said he hoped "that no senator is imposing an ideological litmus test on judicial nominations." On March 17, 1998, he warned the Senate not to head "down a road toward an ideological litmus test."

Democrats once said that judicial nominees deserve a vote by the full Senate. On March 19, 1997, Sen. Biden said that "everyone who is nominated is entitled to … have a hearing and to have … a vote on the [Senate] floor.... We in the Judiciary Committee have the right to give advice to the Senate, but it is the Senate that gives its advice and consent on judicial nominations." On September 28, 1998, Judiciary Committee member Richard Durbin (D-IL) said that 150 days was too long for a nominee to wait without a full Senate vote (Justice Owen was nominated 476 days ago). In fact, in the past 60 years, the Senate Judiciary Committee has voted to prevent a judicial nominee from reaching the full Senate just five times.

That was then, this is now. Despite Justice Owen's qualifications, community service, and widespread support in Texas, far-left political interest groups have ordered Democrat senators to oppose her on purely ideological grounds. Abortion extremists, for example, say Justice Owen has a "strong personal bias against the right to choose" based on a few votes in parental notification cases. Yet Justice Owen was in the majority in nine of those 12 cases, dissenting only three times to uphold the decision of two lower courts requiring notification. The liberal Washington Post said on July 24 that these three votes were not "beyond the range of reasonable judicial disagreement." Will senators once opposed to litmus tests vote against a qualified nominee because of three votes that even a liberal editorial page says are reasonable?

Sen. Biden has outlined the better course. On April 19, 1994, he said he would support nominees who have "the capacity, competence, and temperament," who are "of good character" and "free of conflict of interest," and who will "faithfully apply the Constitution and the precedents of the Supreme Court." According to the ABA, its "well qualified" rating means that Justice Owen is "at the top of the legal profession" and has "outstanding legal ability, breadth of experience," and "the highest reputation for integrity."

As if he were speaking today about the Owen nomination, Sen. Biden said on June 24, 1986, that a judicial confirmation "is not about right to life, it is not about conservative or liberal, it is not about Democrat or Republican. It is about intellectual and professional competence to serve as a member of the third coequal branch of the government." And so it should be today.

Will senators capitulate to the far-left groups that want them to ignore qualifications and impose ideological litmus tests? Will they vote against Justice Owen because they disagree about the outcome of some cases? Or will they instead use the standard Sen. Biden outlined on September 17, 1986: "[T]he fact that I may disagree with the nominee about the outcome of one or another matter within the legitimate parameters of debate is not enough" to oppose a nominee?

The Judiciary Committee's vote will speak volumes.

Brett signed off on these so long as we don not use Ken's name in any of them - if we do want to use Ken's name, we cannot need use the title, and we need to talk about the consequences - since it will definitely make news.

Hoelscher is back in town, so he is taking the lead on pushing these through -
I imagine we are okay without using Ken's name and that these can go out asap.

Doug and Blaise - thoughts?

Brett:

Attached are three letters for your approval.

Each will be sent out as recruitment tools on behalf of RNC's 72 Hour Task Force program, where recipients will be encouraged to take 1-3 weeks and volunteer for key targeted campaigns.

Please note these these three separate letters are designated by the universe to which they will be sent, i.e.L
- "72 Hour Letter volunteer (sched c)": will go to sched. c's thru the approved process of WH Liaison hand-delivery (note that Ken does NOT sign this letter).
- "72 Hour Letter volunteer (non-sched c)": will go to Hill staffers and K street workers whom the RNC believes willing to volunteer (note that Ken does sign this letter).
- "72 Hour Letter Elected Officals": will go to GOP elected officials across the country who do not face competitive elections this cycle.

Your guidance when you have a moment... thank you sir (!)

The President's victory in the 2000 Election was due in large part to the extraordinary way in which our Republican team came together. Thank you for the important role you played – and continue to play - in making that team so successful.

Perhaps most critical was our turnout effort on Election Day – an effort that, while strong in 2000, can almost certainly be improved and expanded in 2002. To that end the RNC is recruiting talented and capable leaders to join the "72 Hour Task Force": an elite group of volunteers who will help direct turnout efforts in targeted states and districts across the country.

We invite you to join this Task Force.

Please contact Jason Huntsberry at your earliest possible convenience at 202-863-8823 or jhuntsberry@rnchq.org to sign up.

Thank you again for your support and dedication – and onward to success this November!

"...In the Senate, the switch of a single seat would swing control to the Bush's agenda hinges on midterm election Results of Nov. 5 vote could shape his -- and the country's -- future

By Susan Page
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON -- President Bush isn't on the ballot this fall, but much of his presidency will be at stake.

The results of Senate, House and gubernatorial races in November will determine what compromises the president will have to strike over the next two years to enact his legislative priorities, whether he'll be able to force confirmation votes on his judicial nominees, how much he can count on big-state governors to boost his re-election campaign in 2004 -- even how many congressional subpoenas his administration is likely to face.

''What it means to the president is how much he gets accomplished during his watch,'' Republican National Committee Chairman Marc Racicot says of the election returns.

''It can slam the brakes on any agenda that you may have as a president, depending on the kind of Congress you're confronting,'' says Leon Panetta, White House chief of staff during the election that came midway through President Clinton's first term in 1994. That year, Democrats lost control of the House of Representatives and Senate.

''The reality is you may control the bully pulpit, but Capitol Hill basically controls the purse and what ultimately gets done in terms of legislation,'' Panetta says. ''It can be very significant in terms of the legacy of any administration.''

Little wonder, then, that White House strategists have watched with concern while an election landscape that lacked much national drama has been shaken through the summer by growing economic unease and reports of corporate misdeeds. The administration's economic forum in Waco, Texas, last month couldn't do anything to affect the economy, organizers knew, but at least it would demonstrate presidential concern about its course.

Likewise, Bush has embarked on a record-breaking round of campaign appearances for GOP candidates even though his strategists acknowledge he'll have a marginal effect on the outcome of their races. A top White House political adviser says that's one thing the economy and the election have in common: They are critical to Bush's fortunes but outside his control.

Republican strategists who were reasonably confident in the spring that the GOP could maintain its slim margin of control in the House this year are no longer so sure as fall campaigning begins in earnest. ''We honestly believe that we can hold on to the majority in the House . . . and we honestly believe that we can regain control of the Senate,'' Racicot says. ''But we certainly wouldn't guarantee that's going to happen.''

The election halfway through Bush's term also will be seen as a sort of referendum on him and his first two years on the job. That may be the case more so than for most presidents because of the way Bush took office last year -- after a disputed election in which he lost the popular vote. The first big Election Day since then will test whether he has coattails and the Republican message has legs.

Of special concern: the Senate contest in Bush's home state of Texas, where an upset victory by Democrat Ron Kirk over Republican John Cornyn would be particularly embarrassing. Karen Hughes, a member of Bush's inner circle who recently moved back to Austin, is keeping an eye on that race. She is his former counselor.

''It is a straw in the wind,'' Ross Baker, a political scientist at Rutgers University in New Jersey, says of the November election. ''If it's adverse, if the Democrats really score big, it would probably tell a prudent president that he's got to make a midcourse correction.''

Shaping the 2004 field

If the Democrats score big, that's also likely to energize those who are testing the waters for the 2004 presidential campaign. Within weeks after the election, former vice president Al Gore, Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts and others will be forced by the early Democratic primary schedule to decide whether Bush seems vulnerable enough to make a grueling presidential campaign look worthwhile.

The results will shape the presidential field in other ways. If Democrats lose control of the Senate, Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota may be more likely to run for president. In the House, Democratic leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri has told friends he will run for president if his party stays in the minority. If Democrats regain control, making him speaker, it's not clear what he'll decide.

Even so, history says midterm elections don't signal whether a president will win re-election two years later. If anything, damaging midterms can be a political blessing in disguise, forcing changes at the White House and giving the president an easy foil in an opposition Congress. Since World War II, the presidents whose political parties had the most disastrous midterms -- Harry Truman in 1946, Dwight Eisenhower in 1954 and Bill Clinton in 1994 -- were re-elected two years later.

Consider this: In that time, no opposition party that has gained control of the House or Senate in the election midway through a president's first term has managed to win back the White House two years later.

The two presidents who were defeated for second terms -- Jimmy Carter and the elder George Bush -- had better-than-average showings in their midterm elections in 1978 and 1990, respectively.

''In 1982, we lost 26 seats in Congress before Reagan romped to re-election in '84,'' recalls Ron Kaufman, a Republican consultant who was then national political director for the Republican National Committee. In 1990, Kaufman was a senior White House aide for the first President Bush when the GOP lost just eight House seats -- only to see Bush lose re-election two years later.

One election has nothing to do with the next, Kaufman says. The impact of midterms are ''overstated and overreported'' by strategists and journalists, he says.

Getting things done

But he acknowledges that the election does affect the following two years of the president's term. The substantive impact on Bush's legislative agenda could be especially powerful this year, when control of both houses of Congress is up for grabs.

''In terms of personal survival, sometimes a president is better off with an opposition party'' scoring gains, says Rep. Tom Davis of Virginia, chairman of the Republicans' congressional campaign committee. ''But if you talk about doing things for the country, you want to control at least one house.''

In the House, a switch of just six seats would swing control to Democrats from the Republicans. That would upend the strategy the White House has used on almost every major legislative priority: Push the president's proposal through the House and use that as a lever to pressure the Democratic-controlled Senate.

Now, GOP leaders in the House often protect the White House's political interests. Democrats complain the Republicans have blocked votes on measures that Bush might find awkward, including the Democratic version of a prescription drug benefit for seniors and a measure to endorse -- or reject -- the recommendations of Bush's Social Security commission. The panel proposed adding private investment accounts to the retirement system, a suggestion that many officeholders see as politically radioactive.

''You'd have a different agenda if Democrats controlled the House,'' says Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, who would be in line to take over the powerful Rules Committee. He also will run for majority leader if the election elevates Gephardt to speaker. ''They'll be more legitimate contests and philosophical contests in terms of the content of legislation.''

Before a bill could be passed, Frost says, the White House would be forced to negotiate and compromise with Democrats.

Davis sees another important consequence if the GOP loses control of the House: Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., would become chairman of the Government Reform Committee.

Republican Chairman Dan Burton of Indiana used the committee to launch debilitating investigations of the Clinton White House. Waxman has been a fierce critic of the Bush White House on issues such as the secrecy of its energy task force. But without control of the committee, Democrats have been unable to schedule hearings or issue subpoenas.

''You'd have one hearing after another,'' Davis predicts. ''I don't think they realize what's in store for them if that happens.''

As chairman, Waxman would call hearings on issues he felt were important, says Phil Schiliro, his chief of staff -- issues such as what industry leaders met with Vice President Cheney's energy task force. ''The public has a right to know,'' he says. ''There needs to be accountability.''

A single Senate seat

In the Senate, the switch of a single seat would swing control to the Republicans from the Democrats. That presumably would speed consideration of 50 backlogged judicial nominations. If Republicans had control, they probably could have forced the full Senate to vote on the nomination of Mississippi federal Judge Charles Pickering for the Appeals Court. Instead, the Judiciary Committee voted along party lines in March to reject it.

To the frustration of Republicans, Daschle has refused to bring up for quick consideration a series of administration-backed bills that have cleared the House, among them proposals to make the tax cuts in last year's legislation permanent and to change pension laws. The measures probably would have been debated on the Senate floor, though not necessarily enacted, if Republicans were in charge.

''We'd be in a different situation if we still controlled the Senate,'' says a senior White House official who helps formulate strategy. ''Being able to set the calendar and being able to control committee action is critical. And to state the obvious, having House Republicans -- particularly with their discipline and ability to get things done -- is critical.''

In the statehouses, Democrats are favored to gain control of a half-dozen governorships now held by Republicans, including in such key electoral states as Illinois, Michigan and Pennsylvania. Governors can provide a ready-made political infrastructure for the party's presidential candidate. ''Clearly the governor's office is crucial in fundraising in a state, message development, political organization -- all the things presidential campaigns like,'' says Connecticut Gov. John Rowland, chairman of the Republican Governors Association. ''It's worth a couple of points.''

Think of the natural advantages for Bush in having a fellow Republican, not to mention a brother, as Florida governor in 2000.

Defying history

Aides say Bush can help Republican candidates most this fall by headlining fundraisers -- he has already broken presidential records by raising about $115 million so far this year -- and maintaining his approval rating. An internal White House analysis notes the relationship between presidential approval and midterm elections. If a president's approval rating is above 60%, an average of five House seats has been lost. If it's below 50%, the average is 41.

What the White House hopes to do this year is defy a historic pattern. Since World War II, the president's party has lost an average of 24 House seats and two to three Senate seats in his first midterm. (Losses midway through a second term tend to be much higher.)

Holding control of the House will mean losing no more than five Republican House seats -- a better showing for the president's party than that in any first-term midterm in four decades. The White House also hopes to gain at least the single Senate seat needed for control.

''When you have a House and Senate that share his vision and his priorities, the president will be able to move swiftly to implement his positive agenda,'' White House spokesman Anne Womack says. She calls the Nov. 5 election ''one of the president's priorities.''

Even so, there can be unexpected consequences from the election returns. The Republican takeover of Congress in 1946 gave Harry Truman a fat target. Railing against ''the do-nothing 80th Congress'' helped lead to his upset victory in 1948. The Republican takeover of Congress in 1994 so unnerved Bill Clinton that ''it took a few months to really be able to move beyond the shock of what happened in that election,'' Panetta recalls.

But those losses prompted Clinton to move to more centrist policies, pre-empt some Republican issues and gain credit for welfare reform and balancing the budget. One result: He won another term two years later.

Bush's agenda hinges on midterm election Results of Nov. 5 vote could shape his -- and the country's -- future

By Susan Page
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON -- President Bush isn't on the ballot this fall, but much of his presidency will be at stake.

The results of Senate, House and gubernatorial races in November will determine what compromises the president will have to strike over the next two years to enact his legislative priorities, whether he'll be able to force confirmation votes on his judicial nominees, how much he can count on big-state governors to boost his re-election campaign in 2004 -- even how many congressional subpoenas his administration is likely to face.

"What it means to the president is how much he gets accomplished during his watch," Republican National Committee Chairman Marc Racicot says of the election returns.

"It can slam the brakes on any agenda that you may have as a president, depending on the kind of Congress you're confronting," says Leon Panetta, Whit e House chief of staff during the election that came midway through President Clinton's first term in 1994. That year, Democrats lost control of the House of Representatives and Senate.

"The reality is you may control the bully pulpit, but Capitol Hill basicall y controls the purse and what ultimately gets done in terms of legislation," Panetta says. "It can be very significant in terms of the legacy of any administration."

Little wonder, then, that White House strategists have watched with concern while an election landscape that lacked much national drama has been shaken through the summer by growing economic unease and reports of corporate misdeeds . The administration's economic forum in Waco, Texas, last month couldn't do anything to affect the economy, organizers knew, but at least it would demonstrate presidential concern about its course.

Likewise, Bush has embarked on a record-breaking round of campaign appearances for GOP candidates even though his strategists acknowledge he'll have a marginal effect on the outcome of their races. A top White House political adviser says that's one thing the economy and the election have in common: They are critical to Bush's fortunes but outside his control.

Republican strategists who were reasonably confident in the spring that the GOP could maintain its slim margin of control in the House this year are no longer so sure as fall campaigning begins in earnest. "We honestly believe tha t we can hold on to the majority in the House . . . and we honestly believ e that we can regain control of the Senate," Racicot says. "But we certainly wouldn't guarantee that's going to happen."

The election halfway through Bush's term also will be seen as a sort of referendum on him and his first two years on the job. That may be the case more so than for most presidents because of the way Bush took office last year -- after a disputed election in which he lost the popular vote. The first big Election Day since then will test whether he has coattails and the Republican message has legs.

Of special concern: the Senate contest in Bush's home state of Texas, where an upset victory by Democrat Ron Kirk over Republican John Cornyn would be particularly embarrassing. Karen Hughes, a member of Bush's inner circle who recently moved back to Austin, is keeping an eye on that race. She is his forme r counselor.

"It is a straw in the wind," Ross Baker, a political scientist at Rutgers University in New Jersey, says of the November election. "If it's adverse, if the Democrats really score big, it would probably tell a prudent president that he's got to make a midcourse correction."

Shaping the 2004 field

If the Democrats score big, that's also likely to energize those who are testing the waters for the 2004 presidential campaign. Within weeks after the election, former vice president Al Gore, Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts and others will be forced by the early Democratic primary schedule to decide whether Bush seems vulnerable enough to make a grueling presidential campaign look worthwhile.

The results will shape the presidential field in other ways. If Democrats lose control of the Senate, Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota may b e more likely to run for president. In the House, Democratic leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri has told friends he will run for president if his party stays in the minority. If Democrats regain control, making him speaker, it's no t clear what he'll decide.

Even so, history says midterm elections don't signal whether a president wil l win re-election two years later. If anything, damaging midterms can be a political blessing in disguise, forcing changes at the White House and giving the president an easy foil in an opposition Congress. Since World War II, the presidents whose political parties had the most disastrous midterms -- Harry Truman in 1946, Dwight Eisenhower in 1954 and Bill Clinton in 1994 -- were re-elected two years later.

Consider this: In that time, no opposition party that has gained control of the House or Senate in the election midway through a president's first term has managed to win back the White House two years later.

The two presidents who were defeated for second terms -- Jimmy Carter and th e elder George Bush -- had better-than-average showings in their midterm election s in 1978 and 1990, respectively.

"In 1982, we lost 26 seats in Congress before Reagan romped to re-election in '84," recalls Ron Kaufman, a Republican consultant who was then national political director for the Republican National Committee. In 1990, Kaufman was a senior White House aide for the first President Bush when the GOP lost just eight House seats -- only to see Bush lose re-election two years later.

One election has nothing to do with the next, Kaufman says. The impact of midterms are "overstated and overreported" by strategists and journalists, he says.

Getting things done

But he acknowledges that the election does affect the following two year s of the president's term. The substantive impact on Bush's legislative agenda could be especially powerful this year, when control of both houses of Congress is up for grabs.

"In terms of personal survival, sometimes a president is better off with an opposition party" scoring gains, says Rep. Tom Davis of Virginia, chairman of the Republicans' congressional campaign committee. "But if you talk about doin g things for the country, you want to control at least one house."

In the House, a switch of just six seats would swing control to Democrats from the Republicans. That would upend the strategy the White House has used on almost every major legislative priority: Push the president's proposal through the House and use that as a lever to pressure the Democratic-controlled Senate.

Now, GOP leaders in the House often protect the White House's political interests. Two questions regarding this meeting:
1. Is it okay to solicite money at this event to help drive this DED public awareness campaign.
Secretary Martinez will pitch the ask for corporate sponsors and it is being held on WHO grounds.

2. Are we okay that is Sec Martinez driving this and not Sec. Paige?

4 September 2002 2
Corporate Leaders Asked to Join Yes I Can/Yo Si Puedo! Partnership

WHAT: Yes, I Can! Partnership Initial Meeting

WHO: HUD Secretary Mel Martinez, U.S. Treasurer Rosario Marin, Deputy Assistant to the President Ruben Barrales, White House Initiative on Education Excellence for Hispanic Americans, Hispanic Scholarship Fund CEO Sara Martinez Tucker, and Corporate Leaders

WHEN: Tuesday, September 17, 3:00 p.m.

WHERE: The White House Conference Center, Eisenhower Room

WHY: Raising the educational attainment of Hispanic students is imperative for the Nation,s short and long term economic viability. Currently, 57 percent of Hispanics have a high school degree, and only 10 percent go on to earn a college degree. Research shows that bringing Hispanics (and African Americans) on educational par with the rest of society would mean that for every dollar spent on their education, $4.90 would be realized from gains in consumer spending, tax revenues, savings, and social revenues.

Recently, President Bush announced several initiatives designed to take the next step in overcoming the educational barriers faced by many in the Hispanic community, including the launching an interactive, informative bilingual website: www.YesICan.gov/www.YoSiPuedo.gov. The President directed parents, students, and others to this revolutionary bilingual website, emphasizing that individuals who want to change the state of Hispanic education now have relevant information and tools at their disposal.

Building upon this momentum, HUD Secretary Martinez and the White House Initiative on Education Excellence for Hispanic Americans are inviting an influential group of corporate leaders to join the Yes I Can/Yo Si Puedo Partnership. The purpose of the partnership will be to develop and implement the Yes I Can/Yo Si Puedo Public Awareness Campaign. The goal of the Campaign will be to &reframe the possible8 among young Hispanics, thereby raising the &educational ceiling8 and breaking the generational cycle of underachievement.

Breaking the cycle requires a long term, widespread, and sustainable effort. To reach this goal, the Yes I Can/Yo Si Puedo Partnership will provide for a one-year public awareness Campaign pilot that will research, test, measure, and assess the effectiveness of a heightened public awareness initiative. The message Campaign is designed to raise expectations among Hispanic parents/youth and provide basic tools for what families need to do to ensure their children are prepared for a post secondary education. The pilot will launch in three targeted markets (Las Vegas, Albuquerque, and Orlando) and include research and assessment, public relations strategies, creative strategies and a media plan. The Campaign will also include plans for a national mainstream media buy to reach various Hispanic audiences. After measuring the success of the initial pilot, recommendations will be made regarding the feasibility of a nationally sustained effort.

The primary audience for this initiative is Hispanic parents/caregivers. Secondary audiences include students, educators, community leaders, public and private sector organizations, and faith-based organizations. Coordinated mass media, public and private sector partnerships, and grassroots efforts are core strategies.

TARGETED AUDIENCE CAMPAIGN OBJECTIVES

HISPANIC PARENTS/CAREGIVERS

ú To heighten awareness of public awareness Campaign,s messages among Hispanics ú To raise expectations for Hispanic youth and attainability of higher education ú To increase the involvement of Hispanics in the Campaign,s activities ú To maximize Hispanic awareness of public-private partnerships
ú To increase the time Hispanics devote to positive educational activities or planning

ú To increase the number of students interested in higher academic achievement
ú To raise awareness on the attainability of higher education
ú To raise awareness of resources available and steps required to prepare for post-secondary education

EDUCATORS

ú To increase awareness of cultural aspects of the Hispanic community and how to develop outreach plans to support parents
ú To heighten awareness of Campaign,s messages among Hispanic communities

PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNER ORGANIZATIONS

ú To establish media, corporate, community and state/local government agency partnerships to reinforce Campaign messages, strategies and tools that promote higher expectations and increased awareness among Hispanic families
ú To support, reinforce, and expand current government and other organizational activities designed to strengthen parent-child relationships and desire for higher academic success

US funds can't heal the losses of 9/11

By Jeff Jacoby, 8/29/2002

LAST WEEK the federal Victims Compensation Fund announced its first 25
awards to the families of those killed on Sept. 11. The amounts offered were not uniform,
but after taking into account the mandatory deductions for life insurance policies and pensions, the average award came to $1.36 million. That much income
would ordinarily be taxable at the highest rate - currently, 38.6 percent.
Thanks to legislation passed in January, however, the victims' families will receive their awards tax-free. The same law also exempted Sept. 11 victims retroactively from income tax liability for 2000 and 2001. Any taxes they already paid will be refunded.

Last week's awards were actually on the low side. According to Kenneth Feinberg,
the special master overseeing the fund, the average net payout will ultimately be around $1.5 million. That is roughly 36 times the median US household income and is considerably more money than the vast majority of American families
will ever see. No amount of money, of course, could ever replace a murdered loved
one. But as an expression of sympathy and support for those who suffered a devastating loss in the terrorist attacks, the federal victims fund was munificent in the extreme.

It was also a mistake.

The American people didn't need the government's help to demonstrate their compassion for the families of the Sept. 11 victims. Well before the law creating the federal compensation fund was passed, tens of millions of Americans had donated hundreds of millions of dollars for the benefit of those affected by the attacks. By now, the total raised by private charities is estimated at a mind-boggling $2.7 billion, more than half of which has already been distributed.

This torrent of private relief has not merely ensured that survivors can meet their mortgage payments and put food on the table. It has turned many of them into millionaires. USA Today reports that relatives of the New York police officers who died on Sept. 11 are receiving an average of $929,000 in charitable funds. The families of firefighters and ambulance crews are getting $1,037,000. All of these gifts are tax-free. (Surviving spouses of most rescue workers also receive a lifetime pension equal to the victim's salary, plus a federal death benefit of $259,000 for public safety officers killed in the line of duty.)

To be sure, not every victim's family has been enriched as lavishly as those of the emergency workers killed at Ground Zero. The charitable gifts received by other families have averaged only $146,000. But ''only'' $146,000 is hardly trivial, especially when it comes with no strings attached, when it is not taxed, and when it is in addition to any insurance, pension, or Social Security benefits the family is entitled to.

Add to all this the billions of dollars' worth of goods and services that have been donated to the victims' families - from free financial planning for life by top Wall Street firms to the hundreds of free slots at children's summer camps nationwide.

Never has the extraordinary generosity of ordinary Americans been more evident than in the months since Sept. 11. It wasn't necessary for the government to get in on the act, let alone to shower the victims' families with seven-figure jackpots. Those who lost a child, parent, or spouse in the attacks last fall suffered a terrible tragedy, and the hearts of decent people everywhere went out to them. But tragedy strikes American families every day, and their grief is not eased with million-dollar fortunes from the Treasury. Why should the families of Sept. 11 have been treated differently?

The Victims Compensation Fund was created in part to protect the airlines from being bankrupted by wrongful death litigation; survivors who accept money from the fund are barred from filing suit. But the airlines were not to blame for the horrors of Sept. 11. Their losses that day, both human and financial, were staggering. If Congress wanted to shield them from catastrophic lawsuits, the way to do it was to cap their liability at $0.00, not to bribe the victims' families with million-dollar awards.

With huge sums of money at stake, the congressional fund has predictably led to feuds and ill will as relatives of the dead fight over the federal

largesse. It has inflamed greed, too. Many families now insist that the planned awards are not lucrative enough; others gripe that after insurance and pension proceeds are deducted, they will get nothing. (''Nothing,'' in this case, means a quarter of a million dollars, which Feinberg says is the minimum payment guaranteed to virtually every victim's family.)

Meanwhile, the precedent has been set for the future. The next time innocent
victims die in a terrorist attack, their relatives will expect a handsome government payment. The next time any catastrophe strikes - terrorist or otherwise - there will be a clamor for federal compensation. But the worst consequence of all is that after the next disaster, fewer Americans will give willingly to private charity. After all, why donate to help the survivors when
Uncle Sam is going to make them rich anyway?

A Pandora's box has been opened. It will not easily be closed.

US funds can't heal the losses of 9/11

By Jeff Jacoby, 8/29/2002

LAST WEEK the federal Victims Compensation Fund announced its first 25
awards to the families of those killed on Sept. 11. The amounts offered were not uniform,
but after taking into account the mandatory deductions for life insurance policies and pensions, the average award came to $1.36 million. That much income
would ordinarily be taxable at the highest rate - currently, 38.6 percent.
Thanks to legislation passed in January, however, the victims' families
will receive their awards tax-free. The same law also exempted Sept. 11 victims retroactively from income tax liability for 2000 and 2001. Any taxes they already paid will be refunded.

Last week's awards were actually on the low side. According to Kenneth Feinberg,
the special master overseeing the fund, the average net payout will ultimately be around $1.5 million. That is roughly 36 times the median US household income
and is considerably more money than the vast majority of American families
will ever see. No amount of money, of course, could ever replace a murdered loved
one. But as an expression of sympathy and support for those who suffered a devastating loss in the terrorist attacks, the federal victims fund was munificent in the extreme.

It was also a mistake.

The American people didn't need the government's help to demonstrate their compassion for the families of the Sept. 11 victims. Well before the law creating the federal compensation fund was passed, tens of millions of Americans had donated hundreds of millions of dollars for the benefit of those affected by the attacks. By now, the total raised by private charities is estimated at a mind-boggling $2.7 billion, more than half of which has already been distributed.

This torrent of private relief has not merely ensured that survivors can meet their mortgage payments and put food on the table. It has turned many of them into millionaires. USA Today reports that relatives of the New York police officers who died on Sept. 11 are receiving an average of $929,000 in charitable funds. The families of firefighters and ambulance crews are getting $1,037,000. All of these gifts are tax-free. (Surviving spouses of most rescue workers also receive a lifetime pension equal to the victim's salary, plus a federal death benefit of $259,000 for public safety officers killed in the line of duty.)

To be sure, not every victim's family has been enriched as lavishly as those of the emergency workers killed at Ground Zero. The charitable gifts received by other families have averaged only $146,000. But ''only'' $146,000 is hardly trivial, especially when it comes with no strings attached, when it is not taxed, and when it is in addition to any insurance, pension, or Social Security benefits the family is entitled to.

Add to all this the billions of dollars' worth of goods and services that have been donated to the victims' families - from free financial planning for life by top Wall Street firms to the hundreds of free slots at children's summer camps nationwide.

Never has the extraordinary generosity of ordinary Americans been more evident than in the months since Sept. 11. It wasn't necessary for the government to get in on the act, let alone to shower the victims' families with seven-figure jackpots. Those who lost a child, parent, or spouse in the attacks last fall suffered a terrible tragedy, and the hearts of decent people everywhere went out to them. But tragedy strikes American families every day, and their grief is not eased with million-dollar fortunes from the Treasury. Why should the families of Sept. 11 have been treated differently?

The Victims Compensation Fund was created in part to protect the airlines from being bankrupted by wrongful death litigation; survivors who accept money from the fund are barred from filing suit. But the airlines were not to blame for the horrors of Sept. 11. Their losses that day, both human and financial, were staggering. If Congress wanted to shield them from catastrophic lawsuits, the way to do it was to cap their liability at $0.00, not to bribe the victims'

families with million-dollar awards.

With huge sums of money at stake, the congressional fund has predictably led to feuds and ill will as relatives of the dead fight over the federal largesse. It has inflamed greed, too. Many families now insist that the planned awards
are not lucrative enough; others gripe that after insurance and pension proceeds are deducted, they will get nothing. (''Nothing,'' in this case, means a quarter of a million dollars, which Feinberg says is the minimum payment guaranteed to virtually every victim's family.)

Meanwhile, the precedent has been set for the future. The next time innocent
victims die in a terrorist attack, their relatives will expect a handsome government payment. The next time any catastrophe strikes - terrorist or otherwise - there will be a clamor for federal compensation. But the worst consequence of all is that after the next disaster, fewer Americans will give willingly to private charity. After all, why donate to help the survivors
when
Uncle Sam is going to make them rich anyway?

A Pandora's box has been opened. It will not easily be closed.

We have just put our an op ed, similar in message to the George Shultz one in the Post today on Iraq, that should play in papers around the nation. See text by Jim Phillips below. Take a look at our daily updated appropriations watch too. Hope springs eternal.

Space is filling up for the Larry Kudlow event - which we predict will be a good one; please rsvp if you are still interested and have not yet responded. Have a nice weekend! Ginni Appropriations Watch: A new Heritage product lets users track the 2003 Appropriations Bill. Pork-barrel spending continues to grow when defense needs are a priority, and lawmakers ignore the best way to create short-term and long-term stimulus for the economy -- accelerating President Bush's tax cuts, and returning more money to the taxpayers. Sarah,

I am requesting permission from the White House to republish President George W. Bush's New Freedom Initiative that was originally published in February 2001. I would also like the White House's permission to republish his Progress Report, May, 2002.

I can get the reports republished here at HHS. However, the Public Affairs Office said I do need the permission.

The New Freedom Document is the publication that outlines President George W. Bush's disability policy for his administration.

I want to send both documents to my new committee members and for distribution to the public.

Troy Justensen in White House Domestic Policy needs 50 copies.

Time is important as I want to get the mailing out by September 6, 2002.
Thanks! Sally

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff,

v.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, et al.,
Defendants.

C.A. No. 01-1530(EGS)
Consolidated Cases

SIERRA CLUB,
Plaintiff,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al,
Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN REPLY TO PLAINTIFFS' PRELIMINARY OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER

Preliminary Statement

Notwithstanding Sierra Club's assertion that defendants have made "no effort" to comply with discovery (Sierra Club Resp. at 7), defendants have provided plaintiffs in this case with thousands of pages of documents and detailed answers to interrogatories from the defendant agency heads. Defendants have further provided significant information on relevant factual issues regarding the operations of the National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG") in a declaration from its former Deputy Director. Without even reviewing the mass of information already provided or offering any claim of need beyond generalities, plaintiffs assert an entitlement to the disclosure of information concerning the manner in which the President's most senior advisers carried out a specific charge from the President to enable him to discharge his core constitutional responsibilities. In response to the moving defendants' opening brief ("Def. Mem."), which outlined in detail why the challenged discovery raises serious constitutional concerns and proposed a recognized procedural alternative to narrow or eliminate entirely these disputes, plaintiff Sierra Club has filed a response that largely ignores or mischaracterizes defendants' arguments.[1]

The Court has previously expressed a desire to avoid the unnecessary adjudication of constitutional issues. Defendants submit that their proposed course of action offers the only opportunity for the Court to do so at this stage.

Argument

I. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment Is An Appropriate Basis To Assess The Need For Further Discovery

In opposition to defendants' motion for a protective order, plaintiffs assert nothing less than the proposition that summary judgment is never appropriate until the completion of full-scale discovery. This is decidedly incorrect. While both Rule 56 and cases like Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317 (1986), acknowledge that discovery may precede summary judgment and that a district court "may refuse the application for judgment or order a continuance to permit . . . discovery," Rule 56(f), there is no per se rule precluding a motion for summary judgment until all discovery has concluded. Indeed, courts routinely stay discovery pending the resolution of a pending dispositive motion to prevent the needless expenditure of resources by courts and litigants. See, e.g., United States Catholic Conference v. Abortion Rights Mobilization, Inc., 487

[1] Plaintiff Judicial Watch's filing contains no substantive argument and defendants will respond to any future filing which Judicial Watch may make.

REV_00150163

U.S. 72, 79-80 (1988); Patterson v. United States, 901 F.2d 927, 929 (11th Cir. 1990); Brennan v. Local Union No. 639, Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Chauffers, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America, 494 F.2d 1092, 1100 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Defendants' motion for a protective order simply seeks the same relief in anticipation of their soon-to-be-filed motion for summary judgment.[2]

Given that defendants' summary judgment motion is proper at this point, the manner in which plaintiffs must respond to that motion is dictated by Rule 56. That is, plaintiffs "need[] to respond with . . . 'affirmative evidence,'" Doe v. Gates, 981 F.2d 1316, 1323 (D.C. Cir.) (quoting Frito Lay, Inc. v. Willoughby, 863 F.2d 1029, 1034 (D.C. Cir. 1988)), cert. denied sub nom. Doe v. Woolsey, 510 U.S. 928 (1993), showing that "a reasonable jury could return a verdict" in their favor. Laningham v. United States Navy, 813 F.2d 1236, 1241 (D.C. Cir. 1987). See also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252 (1986).

Here, plaintiffs have repeatedly represented that energy industry personnel "participated in the activities" of the NEPDG, Sierra Club Resp. at 1, thus suggesting that they possess a factual basis for such representations. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Plaintiffs have also received substantial information concerning the operations of the NEPDG and the agencies supporting its activities through the discovery provided to date and the Knutson declaration. In light of those disclosures, plaintiffs cannot simply claim that they possess no information and that all of the [2] Plaintiffs' suggestion that defendants' summary judgment motion is somehow inappropriate because discovery is not finished is further contradicted by the plain language of Rule 56. Under Rule 56(b), a defendant is expressly authorized to move for summary judgment "at any time." The only limit on when summary judgment may be sought is the 20-day period following the filing of a complaint during which a plaintiff may not seek summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

REV_00150164

relevant information is in the exclusive control of the moving defendants. Cf. Sierra Club Resp. at 4. Indeed, it is quite likely that, if any evidence existed to prove plaintiffs' case, it would be available from the agencies that were represented on the NEPDG, thus obviating any need for discovery against the moving defendants. Given the serious constitutional issues arising from discovery against the moving defendants, discussed infra at Section II, plaintiffs have an obligation to exhaust all available resources of information, including discovery from the agencies, before seeking any discovery from the moving defendants.[3]

Applying the procedures of Rule 56 will allow the Court to assess the specific facts (allegedly) in contention and to assess concretely the need for further discovery (if any). As shown in the next section, however, in the context of this constitutional dispute, it is unlikely that plaintiffs will be able to make the threshold showing of strong need necessary to seek the discovery at issue.

II. Separation-of-Powers Considerations Mandate A Strong Showing Of Need Prior To The Discovery Sought By Plaintiffs

Plaintiff Sierra Club spends the bulk of its brief responding to arguments which defendants have not made, incorrectly suggesting that defendants have asserted an overbroad theory of executive privilege. But plaintiffs have not made the strong threshold showing necessary under the separation-of-powers doctrine to entitle them even to test whether they can [3] Alternatively, as plaintiff Sierra Club acknowledges (Sierra Club Resp. at 4), plaintiffs may seek relief under Rule 56(f), specifying the discovery necessary to oppose defendants' motion. Under Rule 56(f), plaintiffs cannot, however, rest on generalities (as they do now) but must state "concretely" why discovery is necessary. Stang v. United States Arms Control & Disarmament Agency, 864 F.2d 859, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1989). Moreover, as discussed infra at Section II, plaintiffs must demonstrate substantial need for the particular discovery that is the subject of this motion.

---

REV_00150165

obtain discovery from the moving defendants, let alone put defendants in a position where they must invoke executive privilege for specific documents or information. Indeed, requiring defendants to assert executive privilege at this stage of the litigation would be premature and would itself raise constitutional questions under the circumstances of this case. Instead, defendants assert two key constitutional points as the basis for their protective order:

- First, to the extent they are directed at the moving defendants and their activities, plaintiffs' discovery requests seek disclosures of information even beyond that which they could obtain if the FACA were applied to the NEPDG. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court and the D.C. Circuit have acknowledged that applying FACA to an entity like the NEPDG would itself raise serious constitutional concerns, Public Citizen v. United States Dep' t of Justice, 491 U.S. 440 (1989); Association of American Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS"), imposing even greater burdens through discovery should not be undertaken lightly.

- Second, because the core purpose of plaintiffs' discovery requests, to the extent directed to the moving defendants, is to seek information regarding the process by which the President's closest advisers – including the Vice President and two Presidential assistants – gathered information and advised the President at his request, the Court should not burden the Executive with unnecessary and invasive demands that intrude heavily on the functioning of the Executive, particularly when plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate the requisite substantial need for the information at issue in the requests.

Consequently, as a result of these related constitutional concerns at the heart of this motion, plaintiffs must make a strong threshold showing of need before they seek to place any discovery burden – whether searching for documents or asserting privilege as to particular documents or communications – on the moving defendants.[4]

Plaintiff Sierra Club does not, and cannot, question that the executive branch possesses

---

[4] As noted above, the procedures of Rule 56 provide a useful and familiar mechanism for that assessment by requiring both sides to proffer their evidence and by requiring plaintiffs to articulate their need for further discovery, in light of all the information currently available to them, with specificity. The Court, however, can just as readily require that assessment upon defendants' motion for a protective order.

REV_00150166

constitutionally-based interests both with respect to confidentiality and to independence. According to Sierra Club, however, those interests begin and end with the executive privilege for confidential communications. But as defendants have pointed out (see Def. Mem. at 9-11), in arguments Sierra Club ignores, the executive branch's need for confidentiality and independence from intrusion has been acknowledged in a variety of contexts.

It is no doubt true that the evidentiary privilege for communications among the President and his close advisers is the most familiar and most frequently encountered litigation context where these types of constitutional concerns are presented. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974); Senate Select Comm. on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725 (D. C. Cir. 1974). Even within that context, however, courts have not permitted routine inquiry. For example, in criminal cases, the Supreme Court has cautioned lower courts to employ a "particularly meticulous" application of procedural rules "in deference to a coordinate branch of Government" before matters of privilege are even addressed. United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 702. An assertion of the privilege itself can be overcome in that context only by a "demonstrated, specific need." Id. at 713.

In the context of civil litigation, moreover, the D.C. Circuit has required a showing that a discovery request was supported by "sufficient evidentiary substantiation" before proceeding with disclosure of presumptively privileged Presidential communications. Dellums v. Powell, 561 F.2d 242, 247 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 880 (1977) (discussed in Def. Mem. at 10-11).[5] And, in other contexts as well (see Def. Mem. at 11), the courts have protected the [5]Even there, the court cautioned that it was doing so only because the underlying dispute involved substantiated allegations that the defendants conspired to violate the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs. See 561 F.2d at 247. Tellingly, the court did not suggest constitutional prerogatives of the Executive from the intrusion caused by discovery. See United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456 (1996) (requiring threshold showing for discovery into selective prosecution claim); Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800 (1982) (requiring threshold showing for discovery into qualified immunity defense); Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731 (1982) (President may not be sued civilly for damages in claims arising out of his official acts).

Sierra Club simply ignores the first three of these cases (Dellums, Armstrong and Harlow) and dismisses the last one (Nixon v. Fitzgerald) as merely a damages case. This approach misses the point of those cases. Each acknowledges the underlying constitutional concerns presented here, albeit in different contexts, and supports the proposition that the area of executive confidentiality may not be the subject of unjustified interference through civil discovery. As the Supreme Court said in Fitzgerald, before a court may permit any exercise of judicial authority over the Executive, it "must balance the constitutional weight of the interest to be served against the dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch." 457 U.S. at 754. Moreover, as the Armstrong Court suggested, the constitutional concerns inherent in such discovery, coupled with the presumption of regularity afforded government conduct, dictate that "the showing necessary to obtain discovery should itself be a significant barrier to the litigation of insubstantial claims." Armstrong, 517 U.S. at 463-64.[6] that such discovery was appropriate in every civil case.

[6]As defendants have argued (Def. Mem. at 12), the presumption of regularity is itself a strong argument against the need for discovery, particularly in light of the record now presented and defendants' expected summary judgment motion. Sierra Club largely ignores this argument, citing Citizens to Preserve Overton Park v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 415 (1971), an Administrative Procedure Act ("APA") case, for the proposition that the presumption does not preclude a thorough review. See Sierra Club Resp. at 6 n.3. Such review, however, in an APA claim like that presented here, is confined to "the full administrative record," 401 U.S. at 420, and provides

REV_00150168

Here, plaintiffs' interests in enforcing FACA have no constitutional weight and, indeed, as noted in Public Citizen and AAPS, are themselves constitutionally suspect. Moreover, plaintiffs have placed nothing else on the scale to substantiate their claim for discovery beyond generalized and unsubstantiated assertions of need. If, at the end of the day, the only purpose in discovery against the moving defendants is to find out whom the President's closest advisers met with in formulating their advice to the President – separate and apart from the meetings of the NEPDG that have been fully disclosed in discovery – then the separation-of-powers considerations discussed in Public Citizen and AAPS would preclude that discovery in its entirety.

Thus, based solely on plaintiffs' ability to plead facts "on information and belief" and with no showing that the information and discovery already provided to them are inadequate, Sierra Club's position is that plaintiffs, with no showing of need, should be permitted, through civil discovery, to invade an area which the Supreme Court has determined enjoys a "presumptive privilege." See, e.g., Sierra Club Resp. at 8-9. The normal effect of a presumption, however, is to require the opposing party to meet a burden to justify overcoming it in some way. See Fed. R. Evid. 301. That is especially true where, as here, the very nature of the plaintiffs' request is to delve into communications and processes at the highest level of the executive branch.

no basis for discovery absent some showing of bad faith or improper behavior. Moreover, plaintiff misconstrues the significance of the presumption of regularity. While that presumption does not serve as an absolute bar to inquiry, it does require plaintiffs to "dispel the presumption" through a threshold showing of wrongdoing or lack of regularity by the government before discovery may be permitted. See Armstrong, 517 U.S. at 465. Indeed, in Armstrong, the Court held that the presumption of regularity shielded prosecutorial decisions from any discovery "'in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary,'" i.e., that the government had acted unlawfully. See 517 U.S. at 464 (citation omitted).

REV_00150169

Sierra Club's view, however, is that defendants' only remedy is to assert privilege for each and every document and piece of responsive information. Sierra Club. Resp. at 10. But Sierra Club fails to recognize that, borrowing from Judge Gesell's reasoning in Nader v. Baroody, "constitutional questions" are raised by the fact that a statute such as FACA and discovery related to that statute "might impinge on the effective discharge of the President's powers, the interest necessitating the [executive] privilege." See 396 F.Supp. 1231, 1234 n.5 (D.D.C. 1975).[7] As defendants noted in their opening brief (see Def. Mem. at 15-17), constitutional separation-of-powers concerns are, in this instance, broader than specific executive privilege concerns. See Common Cause v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 674 F.2d 921, 935 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Thus, particularly in the absence of any preliminary showing of need or any evaluation of the vast amounts of discovery already provided, plaintiffs should not be permitted to pursue their discovery of the moving defendants.[8]

III. Limits Against Discovery Of The Moving Defendants Are Appropriate

Asserting that the Vice President, two Assistants to the President, and the Executive Director of the NEPDG are "lower-level staff" (Sierra Club Resp. at 7), Sierra Club claims the activities of these officials lack a sufficient connection to the President to warrant constitutional [7]The mere burden of being required to assert individualized privileges in this case could be particularly high, given the breadth of plaintiffs' discovery requests. For instance, plaintiffs' interrogatories seek information regarding any "meeting" relating to the NEPDG's mission, defining "meeting" to include virtually every form of communication between any two persons, within or without the government.

[8] Even under Sierra Club's view of executive privilege, plaintiffs would bear the burden of showing that the evidence sought "is not available with due diligence elsewhere." Sierra Club Resp. at 8 (quoting In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 754 (D.C. Cir. 1997)). As In re Sealed Case noted, the basis for this requirement is that Presidential communications "should not be treated as just another source of information." 121 F.3d at 754.

protection. This argument is plainly mistaken.[9]

Compelling the Vice President, a constitutionally unique officer, and senior advisers to the President to disclose the details of the processes by which a President obtains information and advice raises separation-of-powers problems of the first order. The principles that generally raise a presumptive privilege for executive branch communications apply with special force to communications among the President, the Vice President, and their close advisers relating to the President's exercise of his core powers. Here, the moving parties were tasked by the President to perform a specific mission on his behalf and in execution of his constitutional powers under the Recommendations and Opinion Clauses of the Constitution. As such, they were expressly acting "in the course of preparing advice for the President," In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d at 752, and their activities enjoy constitutional protection from intrusion by plaintiffs' requested discovery. In particular, the Vice President has respectfully but resolutely maintained that, especially where, as here, plaintiffs are incapable of demonstrating any need for the information, extending the legislative and judicial powers to compel a Vice President to disclose to private persons the details of the process by which a President obtains information and advice from, among others, the Vice President would constitute an unconstitutional intrusion into the effective functioning of [9] In trying to cast defendants' arguments as overbroad, Sierra Club attempts to infer significance from the fact that Andrew Lundquist, the Executive Director of the NEDPG, was an employee of the Department of Energy formally assigned to the Office of the Vice President. See Sierra Club Resp. at 1. But to the extent any of Mr. Lundquist's documents were within the control of the Department of Energy, they have been produced (or withheld as privileged) by the Department of Energy. Thus, objections regarding Mr. Lundquist's documents concern those documents within the control of the Vice President, on whose staff Mr. Lundquist was an assignee. Moreover, as Ms. Knutson's Declaration demonstrates, Mr. Lundquist is no longer a federal employee and his position as Executive Director of the now-defunct NEPDG was not refilled. Knutson Dec. ¶ 3. Accordingly, Mr. Lundquist is no longer a proper defendant in this lawsuit, and defendants' motion for summary judgment will request relief on that basis.

REV_00150171

the Presidency and Vice Presidency.[10]

Conclusion

For all of the foregoing reasons, and those set forth in defendants' opening brief, defendants' motion for a protective order should be granted.[11]

[10] In its final argument, Sierra Club maintains that defendants' alternative motion for reconsideration is somehow inappropriate. Plaintiff is wrong. Defendants responded to plaintiffs' discovery requests with substantive answers and a motion for a protective order limited to the discovery that posed the constitutional concerns defendants have outlined above and in their opening brief. Such a motion is appropriate, if not required, under Rule 37(d). Defendants' alternative motion acknowledges that, in general terms, these issues have already been addressed by the Court and requests reconsideration. Plaintiff Sierra Club acknowledges that a motion for reconsideration is appropriate to cite new case law and that defendants have cited new law in support of their position that the FACA cannot be enforced though mandamus (the only remaining claim against the Vice President). See Def. Mem. at 20 (citing Gonzaga Univ. v. Doe, 122 S. Ct. 2268 (2002)). The sum total of Sierra Club's response (Resp. at 11) is simply to say that this new case "has no bearing" and merits no response.

[11] Without substantial discussion, plaintiff Sierra Club asks for discovery sanctions under Rule 37(a)(4), while plaintiff Judicial Watch indicates that it will move for contempt. As demonstrated above and in defendants' opening brief, defendants have complied with plaintiffs' discovery demands to the extent possible, consistent with defendants' underlying constitutional concerns. Defendants submit that their discussion of the constitutional issues presented here and in their opening brief provides substantial justification under Rule 37(a)(4) and Sierra Club's request for sanctions should be denied. Should the Court deny this motion, defendants may seek interlocutory review. In that circumstance, and in light of the abbreviated schedule ordered by the Court, defendants submit that, at a minimum, further consideration of these requests is premature and should await the opportunity for fuller briefing and argument.

Brett,
Until we have a better process in place, is it ok to send the volunteer request letter that you saw a week or so ago to the political appointees through the same process you outlined to deliver the invites for last week's reception?

Sept. 10, 2002 - The House voted 373-0 on Tuesday to endorse Senate language that would allow terrorists% frozen assets to be used to pay compensatory damages.

;;;;The House adopted a motion to instruct its conferees on legislation (HR;3210) that would create a federal backstop for commercial property and casualty insurers for terrorist acts. The motion was offered by Vito J. Fossella, R-N.Y., and Melvin Watt, D-N.C.

;;;;House and Senate conferees on the terrorism insurance bill have not met publicly, despite President Bush%s repeated calls in recent weeks for action on the legislation. One of the main sticking points is whether to ban punitive damage awards in civil lawsuits arising from terrorist acts.

;;;;Senate Minority Whip Don Nickles, Okla., blasted Senate Democratic leaders who have complained that Republican objections are stalling the conference.

;;;;"I think the Democrats are saying you can%t get terrorism insurance unless you get a blank check for the trial lawyers," Nickles said.

Important story about the many issues created by Ring v. Arizona, which was decided last year (over the dissent of O'Connor and Rehnquist and over the concurrence of Kennedy explaining that the decision undergirding Ring -- namely, Apprendi -- was still wrong).
```

A Supreme Court Ruling Roils Death Penalty Cases
By ADAM LIPTAK

ot long after the United States Supreme Court invalidated Arizona's death penalty statute in June and only a week before the Arizona Legislature enacted emergency legislation to reinstate it, two men accused of murder tried a bold legal maneuver that may save their lives. They pleaded guilty.

The prosecutor was surprised but candid: he said the men could plead guilty without fear of execution. He has since changed his mind. The judge, in Holbrook, Ariz., will hear arguments Thursday on the prosecutor's motion to undo the pleas.

He will not be alone in trying to untangle the consequences of the Supreme Court's decision in Ring v. Arizona, which said juries rather than judges must make the crucial factual determinations that support the death penalty. Courts and legislatures in the nine states where juries do not make such findings, or render only advisory verdicts, have had a busy summer doing the same thing.

"It's a can of worms," said Richard C. Dieter, the executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center, a Washington advocacy group critical of capital punishment.

Immediately after the decision, even prosecutors said that at least some of the 800 people already on death row in those states would be entitled to new sentences. But prosecutors in Arizona, the state most directly affected by the decision, have retreated from that position. In pending cases like the one in Holbrook, the Ring decision has created intense procedural confusion in several states.

In its ruling, the Supreme Court answered one question and created half a dozen others, including how the new rule affects defendants at various stages in the cases against them; whether the decision requires actions in states where juries render advisory verdicts; what new laws are required to fix the problem the court identified; and what happens in cases like the one in Arizona.

The Ring decision effectively declared the death penalty statutes in five states unconstitutional, and it called into question statutes in four other states where juries render advisory verdicts but judges make the ultimate decision.

The five states in which judges made all of the relevant decisions are Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Nebraska. The four so-called hybrid states are Alabama, Delaware, Florida and Indiana. About 630 death row prisoners are in the hybrid states, most of them in Florida and Alabama.

Several legislatures have acted quickly, sometimes by convening special sessions, to fix their statutes by giving juries a larger role. The supreme courts in a handful of states are considering Ring-related issues.

People on death row who have exhausted their direct appeals face daunting obstacles in arguing that the decision should apply to them retroactively. Courts have not been receptive to similar arguments.

People with pending appeals are in a much stronger position. But they, too, are facing vigorous arguments from prosecutors.

On the day Ring was decided, for instance, Kent Cattani, chief counsel of the death penalty appeals unit in the Arizona attorney general's office, said the 30 people on death row in Arizona who had not exhausted their direct appeals would be entitled to resentencings involving juries. But in August, Mr. Cattani's office filed papers in the Arizona Supreme Court arguing that the original death penalties should stand.

In a recent interview, Mr. Cattani said the revised position was the result of case-by-case analysis. He said all the Ring-related errors in these cases were harmless because factors supporting the death penalty were found implicitly by juries in an earlier phase of the trial, and because the Arizona Supreme Court rigorously reviewed death sentences. That leaves people whose cases were pending at the trial court level when Ring was decided.

Nicholas S. Sizemore and Scott B. Brian, the two Arizona men who pleaded guilty, were already serving time for murder when they fatally stabbed Carlos R. Ceniceros, a fellow inmate, in November 2000. Mr. Sizemore, 21, was in the fourth year of a 30-year sentence. Mr. Brian, 38, was serving a life sentence.

They were charged with first-degree murder, and the prosecution sought the death penalty. The case proceeded fitfully until a routine hearing on July 24, when the men announced they were pleading guilty.

The pleas startled the prosecutor, Joseph Duarte. Serious criminal cases generally end in plea bargains and occasionally result in trials. They almost never end in simple acknowledgments of guilt, and the defendant who simply pleads is rarely better off as a consequence.

But in court that day, Mr. Duarte acknowledged that this case was the exception. "There does not appear to be a viable death penalty sentence to which Mr. Sizemore would be exposed," he told the judge. He added a similar comment about Mr. Brian.

The judge, Dale P. Neilson, agreed, telling the defendants that life in prison was the maximum sentence and accepting their pleas. He scheduled a sentencing hearing for September. In Mr. Brian's case, as everyone in the courtroom that day understood it, the hearing would be pointless. He had gotten a free pass for the killing and would face no additional time or other consequences for it.

A week later, the Arizona Legislature enacted emergency legislation, saying it wanted "no hiatus in the imposition of the death penalty."

A month after that, and just days before the sentencing, Mr. Duarte had his own surprise for the court. He said in court papers that he had been wrong about the death penalty and that the sentencing could proceed under the new law. He suggested that the defendants should be allowed to withdraw their pleas.

This drew a strong reaction from one of Mr. Sizemore's lawyers in a court filing.

"Why, in the name of God, would Mr. Sizemore want to withdraw?" the lawyer, Thomas J. Phalen, asked. "So that the state can kill him?"

Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Indiana and Montana have all enacted laws to address the Ring decision. Some of the statutes became effective after the decision but were drafted in anticipation of it.

Defense lawyers have complained about aspects of the new statutes. In Arizona, for instance, the Legislature limited the ability of both the trial and supreme courts to review a jury's verdict and allowed victims a larger role in proceedings than Supreme Court precedent allows, said John Stookey, an Arizona lawyer who represents capital defendants.

Before Arizona acted, lawyers for Mr. Sizemore and Mr. Brian sweated about their tactical decision, nervous that they were missing something. In the end, they advised their clients to plead guilty.

"It was like a window open," Mr. Phalen concluded, "and it was clear as a matter of law that there was no death penalty statute."

Mr. Brian's lawyer, Patrick McGillicuddy, said his client followed Mr. Sizemore's "bold move."

Mr. Duarte, the prosecutor, did not return a telephone call.

Mr. Cattani, of the attorney general's office, said Mr. Duarte had misspoken. "The prosecutor was wrong in terms of saying there's no statute under which they can be sentenced," he said. "They could even have been sentenced under the old statute."

That analysis is at odds with a statement in a letter Attorney General Janet Napolitano sent to Arizona judges the day Ring was decided. Ms. Napolitano argued the Ring case in the Supreme Court and is now a candidate for governor.

"It would now be unconstitutional to conduct a capital sentencing under the present version" of the death penalty statute, she wrote in June, urging judges not to proceed "until the statute is amended to conform to the law." She did not say what should happen to defendants who pleaded guilty in the meantime.

DRAFT

Statement of
The Honorable Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
Under Secretary for Health Department of Veterans Affairs
On Various Research Issues
before the
Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives

September 19, 2002

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you to discuss various research and development issues that we understand you are interested in. Specifically, my testimony focuses on the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) technology transfer program, non-profit research corporations and educational foundations, human subject protections, and the recovery of indirect costs associated with conducting National Institutes of Health funded research at VA facilities. With me today are Dr. James F. Burris, Chief Research and Development Officer; Dr. John H. Mather, Chief Officer, Office of Research Compliance and Assurance; Dr. Mindy L. Aisen, Director, Rehabilitation Research and Development Service; and Mr. John A. Bradley, Director of Finance, Office of Research and Development.

1. VA Technology Transfer Program (TTP)

The history of the VA research program is a history of discoveries that have benefited not only veterans but also all American citizens. VA researchers have played key roles in developing the cardiac pacemaker, the CAT Scanner, the Seattle Foot, magnetic resonance imaging, and the nicotine patch. The first liver transplant in the United States was performed at a VA medical facility, and VA researchers pioneered the first successful drug treatments for high blood pressure and schizophrenia.

For many years, VA did not claim ownership rights to the new technologies its researchers developed. As a result, VA facilities and laboratories lost the opportunity to benefit financially from the discoveries they brought to life. Some important VA discoveries that did not capture the interest of private industry were never offered to the general public, despite their benefits to veterans and others. Today, VA takes credit for both the past and the future work of its researchers. If that work results in financial gain, VA uses that gain on behalf of veterans.

To facilitate this vision, the TTP requires that VA assert an ownership interest whenever appropriate, so that VA can build upon its discoveries and ensure access to technologies by veterans. The TTP is committed to supporting the highest quality intramural research program. This means not only moving discovery from the laboratory to clinical practice in a timely manner, but also assuring that inventors and their host VA medical centers (VAMC) receive optimal advice and support so that they may realize equitable compensation and recognition.

VA operates a substantial research program in connection with the research programs at many of the medical institutions with whom it is affiliated. As a result, many VA researchers also hold academic appointments with VA affiliates. Some of VA's best and most beneficial inventions have come out of this setting, and VA continues to promote this research relationship, as it benefits our veterans and the public generally.

Although VA can assert an ownership right in inventions made by its employees under Executive Order 10096, it cannot, and does not, do so to the exclusion of our university partners or the inventors. Since many of VA's researchers hold dual appointments with VA and a university, VA recognizes that, in such cases, the universities often have an interest in an invention made at a VA facility, leading to joint ownership.

To further enhance cooperation between VA and its research affiliates, and to facilitate the technology transfer process, VA's TTP developed a Cooperative Technology Administration Agreement (CTAA). The first such agreement, developed in collaboration with the University of California, was signed in May 2000 and included all 10 campuses of the University system. This CTAA served as the template for future agreements with other affiliates, but has evolved with input from other research partners. To date, over 50 percent of our major university partners have executed a CTAA with VA. In the absence of a CTAA, VA and an affiliated university would have to negotiate jointly developed technology on a case-by-case basis, a time consuming and expensive process. With a CTAA, an affiliated university will generally take the lead on patenting and commercializing jointly owned inventions.

VA understands that the Bayh-Dole Act has imposed certain requirements and responsibilities on its university research affiliates. VA believes that its own rights, responsibilities, and interests in the operation of a research program are not in conflict with those requirements.

VA has been meeting with members of the Association of American Medical Colleges and the Council on Governmental Relations to discuss VA technology transfer issues. Both organizations expressed general support of the use of the CTAA but also requested that VA consider authorizing variations from the model CTAA as circumstances at individual research universities dictate. VA has provided an updated model CTAA on the Research web site that allows potential partners to select specific language that best suits their particular needs for certain sections of the CTAA. Feedback on this has been very positive. The website also contains other information to assist partners in understanding this program.

When VA is the sole owner or the university partner does not wish to take the lead in developing an invention, VA may choose to patent and commercialize the intellectual property. In the last two years, nine patent applications have been submitted to the US Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) for action. An additional five applications are in preparation with contract patent counsel for submission to USPTO. VA has recently concluded its first commercial licensing agreement and will finalize a second agreement this autumn.

VA's intellectual property portfolio has grown steadily from FY 1999 to date, as shown below.

- In FY 1999, VA received 48 invention disclosures and asserted ownership rights on 20. Of those 20 inventions, 12 involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. In the remaining eight, VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency. VA retained a government use license in 13 inventions.
- In FY 2000, VA received 85 invention disclosures and VA asserted ownership rights on 51. Thirty-nine (39) involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency in the remaining 12. VA retained a government use license in 18 inventions.
- In FY 2001, VA received 132 invention disclosures and asserted ownership rights on 91. Sixty-eight involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. In 20, VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency. Three are being handled under public domain processing. VA retained a government use license in 15 inventions.
- In FY 2002 to date, VA has received 115 invention disclosures. VA has asserted ownership rights on 62, 55 of which involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency in 7, and none were handled under public domain processing. VA retained a government use license in 7 inventions.

2. Non-profit Research Corporations and Educational Foundations

In 1988, Congress authorized the creation of non-profit research corporations at VAMCs to support the VA research mission. Public Law 106-117 (1999), the Veterans Millennium Health Care and Benefits Act, expanded the authority to create new VA non-profit corporations to support research or education or both. It also authorized existing VA non-profit corporations to expand their mission to include support of education activities as well as research. Education activities supported by the non-profits may be directed at patients or employees. Such activities include broad instructional learning experiences for veterans and their families that focus on improving and maintaining patient health as well as work-related instruction and training for VA staff.

There are 85 active VA non-profit research corporations and educational foundations (non-profits). These non-profits enable the Department to spend optimally the funds it receives from non-VA sources. The non-profits have greater procurement flexibility than the General Post Fund and are not subject to Federal employment regulations or ceilings. Further, the non-profits are not subject to the restriction under current National Institute of Health (NIH) policy that limits reimbursements for indirect costs if the research is conducted at VA. Several non-profits have successfully negotiated with NIH to include an indirect cost reimbursement rate for NIH grants administered by the corporations.

In 2001, non-profits received $179.5 million in donations, grants, and interest for both research and education activities. Non-profits supported almost 4,700 VA-approved projects. Many are medical research clinical trials that focus on conditions prevalent in the veteran population and thus provide a direct benefit to VA patients. Non-profits also provide salary support for clinical research personnel to monitor veteran patients enrolled in clinical trials. These services enable the research participants to receive additional care and attention. In addition, the general public benefits from approval of new treatments that are developed through this research.

Non-profits also enable many facilities to fund essential services. For example, some non-profits, such as the McGuire Research Institute in Richmond, Virginia, are helping facilities meet increasingly complex and stringent human research requirements by hiring research compliance and institutional review board (IRB) staff. Others, such as the Atlanta Research and Education Foundation, have paid for numerous renovation and repair projects, which include the design and remodeling of laboratories. The Indiana Institute for Medical Research has purchased confocal microscopes and other equipment for the Indianapolis VAMC.

In 2001, non-profits managed funds very efficiently, as evidenced by a low administrative overhead rate whose mean and median equaled 11 percent. As a result, 90 percent of all non-profit expenditures directly supported approved research and education. This reflects the sound oversight and management of each board of directors and the dedicated efforts of the non-profit staffs.

VA assigns primary oversight of non-profits to the local facility leadership. The facility director approves all board members and, as required by statute, serves on the board with the facility chief of staff and the associate chief of staff for research/education. A certified public accountant and an external auditor assist each corporation board of directors in their oversight function. In addition, facility directors have at their disposal the same measures to prevent waste, fraud, and abuse in the operations of the VA non-profits as they do for other organizations within their purview. This would include, for example, a request that the Chief Financial Officer at the facility review certain corporation documents or investigations conducted by the Office of the Inspector General. Non-profits also are subject to audit and inspection by the Internal Revenue Service. They also receive periodic scrutiny by state, city, and other local government agencies.

3. Human Subject Protections

VA is fully committed to protecting those who participate in clinical trials and other research projects. At the previous hearing, I described many of the initiatives that VA has undertaken to ensure that its scientists and research staff fully understand and comply with the stringent ethical principles and rigorous regulatory requirements of our human research protection program. The role of the Office of Research Compliance and Assurance (ORCA) was discussed at the previous hearing. In this statement I will update information previously provided and focus more on the activities of VA's Office of Research and Development (ORD).

During the past three years VA facilities received more than $85 million to support research administrative functions including human subject protections. This funding has permitted facilities to increase staffing, education, resources (such as computers and computer software to allow better tracking and more complete record keeping), and networking among facilities to disseminate best practices and model documents.

This year, ORD is providing over $30 million per year in administrative support funding, and it will make up to an additional $10 million in non-recurring funds available over two years for Institutional Review Board-related proposals.

An important educational tool is the Research and Development Accreditation Consultation Team, or ReDACT. ReDACT offers consultation, coaching and counseling for local IRBs and research personnel. The team consists of experts in human subjects protection and NCQA standards, and we expect it to be a key part of VA's effort to protect research participants.

Participants in clinical trials will also benefit from several other initiatives. ORD has collaborated with veterans service organizations to convene focus groups that review informed consent documents and procedures to make the process more understandable and meaningful to potential research participants. Trial investigators must receive formal training in human research protections before submitting research proposals to their IRB for review and approval. In addition, investigators in our Cooperative Studies Program, a program that conducts very large multi-site studies, must attend training in Good Clinical Practices, the international "gold standard" for conducting clinical trials. A Site Monitoring and Review Team (SMART) provides site monitoring and Good Clinical Practices reviews in an effort to improve the conduct of clinical trials. SMART conducts approximately 125 random and requested site visits per year.

The Handbook on Human Subjects Protection is awaiting final review before being disseminated to the field. The handbook combines the concerted effort of both VA and non-VA experts in the field of human subjects protection to enhance VA policies. Facilities will need virtually no additional time and effort to implement the handbook. The draft handbook has been available on VA's web site throughout its development and many of the new requirements are good clinical practices that the field has begun to adopt. ORD is also developing a Web-based instruction/guidance document on writing informed consent documents. Educational efforts will also be provided through national and regional conferences, programs in conjunction with the ReDACT effort, and national conference calls.

Indicative of the success of these efforts is a recent quality improvement survey that ORD conducted. Ninety-seven percent of responding research subjects agreed with the statement "The Informed Consent process including discussion with study staff gave me the information needed to make an informed decision about whether or not to participate in the study."

At the previous hearing, I discussed at length VA's efforts to accredit its human research protection programs through the National Committee on Quality Assurance (NCQA). As of September 18, 2002, eight additional final reports have been issued, with seven facilities being "Accredited with Conditions," and one site receiving "Not Accredited" status. Cumulatively, 15 facilities have been "Accredited with Conditions," two have received a final result of "Not Accredited," two have received a preliminary result of "Not Accredited," and four sites still await final reports. ORCA is continuing to conduct reviews at these sites.

I also noted that this first-of-its-kind program had temporarily suspended accreditation reviews in order to conduct quality improvement activities, based on the experiences of the first 23 inspections. VA and NCQA have both agreed that the standards needed modification to help streamline the review process and to clarify selected requirements. As a result, NCQA released revised standards for public comment on September 5.

The revised standards reflect Institute of Medicine recommendations encouraging institutions to involve participants in human research programs. NCQA has proposed broadening standards requiring research centers to conduct surveys of participants and potential participants and to use their input to help improve their research and their human subject protection programs. The standards also promote self-evaluation, through which VA medical centers can analyze and rate their own performance, and continuously improve their research programs.

REV_00150991

For the program's second year, NCQA and VA have agreed on an approach to coordinate oversight requirements for VAMCs that use the IRBs of affiliated academic institutions. Under this process, sites that use the IRBs of an academic affiliate accredited by the Association for the Accreditation of Human Research Protection Programs (AAHRPP) will be permitted to undergo a more limited NCQA survey. Upon completion of the survey, NCQA will issue an accreditation decision that combines the results of the NCQA and AAHRPP surveys. NCQA, AAHRPP, and VA will be developing detailed plans to implement the new process in the coming weeks.

4. Recovery of Indirect Costs for National Institutes for Health (NIH) Funded Research

The strength of VA's medical research program can be assessed not only through its discoveries and Nobel Prize winners but also by the success of its investigators in winning research grants from the NIH. In FY 2001, VA researchers received almost $400 million in NIH grants, a sum greater than VA's own Medical and Prosthetic Research budget.

Although the VA/NIH partnership has grown to both institutions' benefit, the facilities and administration (F&A) or indirect costs of supporting NIH funded research has strained VA resources and infrastructure. Unlike universities and even some foreign facilities, VA sites do not receive NIH reimbursement for indirect costs incurred in supporting that research. VA has had to absorb this cost. The inability to recoup the F&A costs associated with the NIH-sponsored research threatens to limit artificially the amount of NIH funded research conducted at VA sites.

VA estimates that its F&A costs for NIH-supported research are almost 24 percent of the direct grant amounts, a rate that is lower than those negotiated with most universities and non-profit organizations. These lower costs reflect the significant contribution that VA will continue to make toward supporting NIH funded research conducted in VA facilities.

Since the May hearing, NIH officials have acknowledged the need for VA to be properly reimbursed for indirect research costs. However, in recent meetings with NIH, VA was informed that NIH would limit VA reimbursement to a rate based on incremental costs above the current level of indirect support for research that VA provides. This methodology would present tremendous difficulty for VA and is different from that applied to determine the reimbursement rate for other sites that conduct NIH funded research. At this time, we are considering what our next steps should be, but will meet again in October in a further attempt to resolve this issue.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. My colleagues and I will now be happy to answer any questions that you and other members of the Subcommittee might have.

So, legally, if we made it available to GOP-TV, we'd have to make it available to DNC-TV as well. Right?

Where does this stand? Bottom line is that we should not make video available on a preferential basis to political entities. If available to them, should be available to others on same terms and conditions.

On a routine basis, no. But at times, when appropriate, we make tapes available free of charge. For example, the Oklahoma City Museum wanted a copy of the President's Speech on Sept. 14 at the National Cathedral -- we provided it. Does that count?

Do we allow other outside entities to purchase the footage? If so, the footage may be made available to GOP-TV on the same terms and conditions as it is made available to those other entities (with the caveat that we should always approve the GOP-TV usage in advance). Keep me posted.

Brett --

We talked a while back about finding a way to let RNC's GOP-TV use White House TV footage. Any movement on that? They need footage from the PA ceremony today and cannot get it commercially. Can we do anything to help?

HR 3210 EH

107th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 3210

AN ACT< /b>

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Terrorism Risk Protection Act'.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. < span class=GramE>Short title and table of contents.
Sec. 2. < span class=GramE>Congressional findings.
Sec. 3. < span class=GramE>Authority of Secretary of the Treasury.
Sec. 4. < span class=GramE>Submission of premium information to Secretary.
Sec. 5. < span class=GramE>Initial and subsequent triggering determinations.
Sec. 6. < span class=GramE>Federal cost-sharing for commercial insurers.
Sec. 7. < span class=GramE>Assessments.
Sec. 8. < span class=GramE>Terrorism loss repayment surcharge.
Sec. 9. < span class=GramE>Administration of assessments and surcharges.
Sec. 10. Application to self-insurance arrangements and offshore insurers and reinsurers.
Sec. 11. Study of reserves for property and casualty insurance for terrorist or other catastrophic events.
Sec. 12. State preemption.
Sec. 13. Consistent State guidelines for coverage for acts of terrorism.
Sec. 14. Consultation with State insurance regulators and NAIC.
Sec. 15. Litigation management.
Sec. 16. Study of potential effects of terrorism on life insurance industry.
Sec. 17. Railroad and trucking insurance study.
Sec. 18. Study of reinsurance pool system for future acts of terrorism.
Sec. 19. Definitions.
Sec. 20. Covered period and extension of program.

Sec. 21. Regulations.

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.< /span>

The Congress finds that--

(1) the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon of September 11, 2001, resulted in a large number of deaths and injuries, the destruction and damage to buildings, and interruption of business operations;

(2) the attacks have inflicted possibly the largest losses ever incurred by insurers an d reinsurers in a single day;

(3) while the insurance and reinsurance industries have committed to pay the losses arising from the September 11 attacks, the resulting disruption has created widespread market uncertainties with regard to the risk of losses arising from possible future terrorist attacks;

(4) such uncertainty threatens the continued availability of United States commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk at meaningful coverage levels;

(5) the unavailability of affordable commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorist acts threatens the growth and stability of the United States economy, including impeding the ability of financial services providers to finance commercial property acquisitions and new construction;

(6) in the past, the private insurance and reinsurance markets have shown a remarkable resiliency in adapting to changed circumstances;

(7) given time, the private markets will diversify and develop risk spreading mechanisms to increase capacity and guard against possible future losses incurred by terrorist attacks;

(8) it is necessary to create a temporary industry risk sharing program to ensure the continued availability of commercial property and casualty insurance and reinsurance for terrorism-related risks;

(9) such action is necessary to limit immediate market disruptions, encourage economic stabilization, and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance;

(10) in addition, it is necessary promptly to conduct a study of whether there is a need for reserves for property and casualty insurance for terrorist or other catastrophic events; and

(11) terrorism insurance plays an important role in the efficient functioning of the economy and the financing of commercial property acquisitions and new construction and, therefore, the Congress intends to continue to monitor, review, and evaluate the private terrorism insurance and reinsurance marketplace to determine whether additional action is necessary to maintain the long-term stability of the real estate and capital markets.

SEC. 3. AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall be responsible for carrying out a program for financial assistance for commercial property and casualty insurers, as provided in this Act.

SEC. 4. SUBMISSION OF PREMIUM INFORMATION TO SECRETARY.

To the extent such information is not otherwise available to the Secretary, the Secretary may require each insurer to submit, to the Secretary or to the NAIC, a statement specifying the net premium amount of coverage written by such insurer under each line of commercial property and casualty insurance sold by such insurer during such periods as the Secretary may provide.

SEC. 5. INITIAL AND SUBSEQUENT TRIGGERING DETERMINATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this Act, a `triggering determination' is a determination by the Secretary that an act of terrorism has occurred during the covered period and that the aggregate insured losses resulting from such occurrence or from multiple occurrences of acts of terrorism all occurring during the covered period, meet the requirements under either of the following paragraphs:

(1) INDUSTRY-WIDE TRIGGER- Such industry-wide losses exceed $1,000,000,000.

(2) INDIVIDUAL INSURER TRIGGER- Such industry-wide losses exceed $100,000,000 and some portion of such losses for any single commercial insurer exceed--

(A) 10 percent of the capital surplus of such commercial insurer (as such term is defined by the Secretary); and

(B) 10 percent of the net premium written by such commercial insurer that is in force at the time the insured losses occurred;

except that this paragraph shall not apply to any commercial insurer that was not providing commercial property and casualty insurance coverage prior to September 11, 2001, unless such insurer incurs such losses under commercial property and casualty insurance providing coverage for acts of terrorism through a pool of reserves for terrorism risks that is not under the control of any commercial insurer.

(b) DETERMINATIONS REGARDING OCCURRENCES- The Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General of the United States and the Secretary of State, shall have the sole authority which may not be delegated or designated to any other officer, employee, or position, for determining whether--

(1) an occurrence was caused by an act of terrorism; and

(2) an act of terrorism occurred during the covered period.

SEC. 6. FEDERAL COST-SHARING FOR COMMERCIAL INSURERS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary shall provide financial assistance to commercial insurers in accordance with this section to cover insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, which shall be repaid in accordance with subsection (e).

(b) AMOUNT-

(1) INDUSTRY-WIDE TRIGGER- Subject to subsections (c) and (d), with respect to a triggering determination under section 5(a)(1), financial assistance shall be made available under this section to each commercial insurer in an amount equal to the difference between--

(A) 90 percent of the amount of the insured losses of the insurer as a result of the triggering event involved; and

(B) $5,000,000.< /span>

(2) INDIVIDUAL INSURER TRIGGER- Subject to subsections (c) and (d), with respect to a triggering determination under section 5(a)(2), financial assistance shall be made available under this section, to each commercial insurer incurring insured losses as a result of the triggering event involved that exceed the amounts under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of such section, in an amount equal to the difference between--

(A) 90 percent of the amount of the insured losses of the insurer as a result of such triggering event; and

(B) the amount under subparagraph (B) of section 5(a)(2).

(3) ADDITIONAL AMOUNTS- Subject to subsection (c), if the Secretary has provided financial assistance to a commercial insurer pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsequently makes a triggering determination pursuant to section 5(a)(1), the Secretary shall provide financial assistance to such insurer in connection with such subsequent triggering determination (in addition to the amount of financial assistance provided to such insurer pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection) in the amount under section 5(a)(2)(B).

(c) AGGREGATE LIMITATION-

(1) IN GENERAL- The aggregate amount of financial assistance provided pursuant to this section may not exceed $100,000,000,000.

(2) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING SEVERE LOSSES- It is the sense of the Congress that acts of terrorism resulting in insured losses greater than $100,000,000,000 would necessitate further action by the Congress to address such additional losses.

(d) LIMITATIONS- The Secretary may establish such limitations as may be necessary to ensure that payments under this section in connection with a triggering determination are made only to commercial insurers that are not in default of any obligation under section 7 to pay assessments or under section 8 to collect surcharges.

(e) REPAYMENT- Financial assistance made available under this section shall be repaid through assessments under section 7 collected by the Secretary and surcharges remitted to the Secretary under section 8. Any such amounts collected or remitted shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury.

(f) EMERGENCY DESIGNATION- Congress designates the amount of new budget authority and outlays in all fiscal years resulting from this section as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(e)). Such amount shall be available only to the extent that a request, that includes designation of such amount as an emergency requirement as defined in such Act, is transmitted by the President to Congress.

SEC. 7. ASSESSMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL- In the case of a triggering determination, each commercial insurer shall be subject to assessments under this section for the purpose of repaying a portion of the financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with such determination.

(b) AGGREGATE ASSESSMENT- Pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary shall determine the aggregate amount to be assessed under this section among all commercial insurers, which shall be equal to the lesser of--

(1) $20,000,000,000; and

(2) the amount of financial assistance paid under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination.

The aggregate assessment amount under this subsection shall be assessed to commercial insurers through an industry obligation assessment under subsection (c) and, if necessary, the remainder shall be assessed through one or more financing assessments under subsection (d).

(c) INDUSTRY OBLIGATION ASSESSMENTS-

(1) IN GENERAL- Immediately upon the occurrence of a triggering determination, the Secretary shall impose an industry obligation assessment under this subsection on all commercial insurers, subject to paragraph (3).

(2) AMOUNT- The aggregate amount of an industry obligation assessment in connection with a triggering determinat ion shall be equal to--

(A) in the case of a triggering determination occurring during the covered period specified in section 20(a), the lesser of--

(i) the difference between (I) $5,000,000,000, and (II) the aggregate amount of any assessments made by the Secretary pursuant to this section during the portion of such covered period preceding the triggering determination; and

(ii) the amount of financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination; or

(B) such other aggregate industry obligation amount as may apply pursuant to subsection (g).

(3) TIMING OF MULTIPLE ASSESSMENTS-

(A) DELAYED IMPOSITION AND AGGREGATION OF ASSESSMENTS- In the case of any triggering determination occurring within 12 months of the occurrence of a previous triggering determination, any industry obligation assessments under this subsection resulting from such subsequent determination shall be imposed upon the conclusion of the quarterly assessment period under subparagraph (B) during which such determination occurs.

(B) QUARTERLY ASSESSMENT PERIOD- With respect to a subsequent triggering determination referred to in subparagraph (A), the quarterly assessment periods under this subparagraph are--

(i) the 3-month period that begins upon the imposition of the industry obligation assessment resulting from the triggering determination that--

(I) occurred most recently before such subsequent triggering determination; and

(II) did not occur within 12 months of the occurrence of any previous triggering determination; and

(ii) each successive 3-month period thereafter that begins during the covered period.

(d) FINANCING ASSESSMENTS-

(1) IN GENERAL- If the aggregate assessment amount in connection with a triggering determination exceeds the aggregate amount of the industry obligation assessment under subsection (c) in connection with the determination, the remaining amount shall be assessed through one or more, as may be necessary pursuant to paragraph (3), financing assessments under this subsection.

(2) TIMING- A financing assessment under this subsection in connection with a triggering determination shall be imposed only upon the expiration of any 12-month period beginning after such determination during which no assessments under this section have been imposed.

(3) LIMITATION- The aggregate amount of any financing assessments imposed under this subsection on any single commercial insurer during any 12-month period shall not exceed the amount that is equal to 3 percent of the net premium for such insurer for such period.

(e) ALLOCATION OF ASSESSMENT- The portion of the aggregate amount of any industry obligation assessment or financing assessment under this section that is allocated to each commercial insurer shall be based on the ratio that the net premium written by such commercial insurer during the year during which the assessment is imposed bears to the aggregate written premium for such year, subject to section 9 and the limitation under subsection (d)(3) of this section.

(f) NOTICE AND OBLIGATION TO PAY-

(1) NOTICE- As soon as practicable after any triggering determination, the Secretary shall notify each commercial insurer in writing of an assessment under this section, which notice shall include the amount of the assessment allocated to such insurer.

(2) EFFECT OF NOTICE- Upon notice to a commercial insurer, the commercial insurer shall be obligated to pay to the Secretary, not later than 60 days after receipt of such notice, the amount of the assessment on such commercial insurer.

(3) FAILURE TO MAKE TIMELY PAYMENT- If any commercial insurer fails to pay an assessment under this section before the deadline established under paragraph (2) for the assessment, the Secretary may take either or both of the following actions:

(A) CIVIL MONETARY PENALTY- Assess a civil monetary penalty pursuant to section 9(d) upon such insurer.

(B) INTEREST- Require such insurer to pay interest, at such rate as the Secretary considers appropriate, on the amount of the assessment that was not paid before the deadline established under paragraph (2).

(g) AGGREGATE INDUSTRY OBLIGATION AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM EXTENSION YEARS- If the Secretary exercises the authority under section 20(b) to extend the covered period, the aggregate industry obligation amount for purposes of subsection (c)(2)(B) shall, in the case of a triggering determination occurring during the portion of the covered period beginning on the date referred to in section 20(a), be equal to the lesser of--

(1) the difference between (A) $10,000,000,000, and (B) the aggregate amount of any assessments made by the Secretary pursuant to this section during the 12-month period preceding the triggering determination; and

(2) the amount of financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination.

(h) ADMINISTRATIVE FLEXIBILITY-

(1) ADJUSTMENT OF ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary may provide for or require estimations of amounts under this section and may provide for subsequent refunds or require ad ditional payments to correct such estimations, as appropriate.

(2) DEFERRAL OF CONTRIBUTIONS- The Secretary may defer the payment of part or all of an assessment required under this section to be paid by a commercial insurer, but only to the extent that the Secretary determines that such deferral is necessary to avoid the likely insolvency of the commercial insurer.

(3) TIMING OF ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary shall make adjustments regarding the timing and imposition of assessments (including the calculation of net premiums and aggregate written premium) as appropriate for commercial insurers that provide commercial property and casualty insurance on a non-calendar year basis.

SEC. 8. TERRORISM LOSS REPAYMENT SURCHARGE.

(a) DETERMINATION OF IMPOSITION AND COLLECTION-

(1) IN GENERAL- If, pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary determines that the aggregate amount of financial assistance provided pursuant to section 6 exceeds $20,000,000,000, the Secretary shall consider and weigh the factors under paragraph (2) to determine the extent to which a surcharge under this section should be established.

(2) FACTORS- The factors under this paragraph are--

(A) the ultimate costs to taxpayers if a surcharge under this section is not established;

(B) the economic conditions in the commercial marketplace;

(C) the affordability of commercial insurance for small- and medium-sized business; and

(D) such other factors as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(3) POLICYHOLDER PREMIUM- The amount established by the Secretary as a surcharge under this section shall be established and imposed as a policyholder premium surcharge on commercial property and casualty insurance written after such determination, for the purpose of repaying financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with such triggering determination.

(4) COLLECTION- The Secretary shall provide for commercial insurers to collect surcharge amounts established under this section and remit such amounts collected to the Secretary.

(b) AMOUNT AND DURATION- Subject to subsection (c), the surcharge under this section shall be established in such amount, and shall apply to commercial property and casualty insurance written during such period, as the Secretary determines is necessary to recover the aggregate amount of financial assistance provided under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination that exceeds $20,000,000,000.

(c) PERCENTAGE LIMITATION- The surcharge under this section applicable to commercial property and casualty insurance coverage may not exceed, on an annual basis, the amount equal to 3 percent of the premium charged for such coverage.

(d) OTHER TERMS- The surcharge under this section shall--

(1) be based on a percentage of the premium amount charged for commercial property and casualty insurance coverage that a policy provides; and

(2) be imposed with respect to all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during the period referred to in subsection (b).

(e) EXCLUSIONS- For purposes of thi s section, commercial property and casualty insurance does not include any reinsurance provided to primary insurance companies.

SEC. 9. ADMINISTRATION OF ASSESSMENTS AND SURCHARGES.

(a) MANNER AND METHOD-

(1) IN GENERAL- Except to the extent specified in such sections, the Secretary shall provide for the manner and method of carrying out assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8, including the timing and procedures of making assessments and surcharges, notifying commercial insurers of assessments and surcharge requirements, collecting payments from and surcharges through commercial insurers, and refunding of any excess amounts paid or crediting such amounts against future assessments.

(2) EFFECT OF ASSESSMENTS AND SURCHARGES ON URBAN AND SMALLER COMMERCIAL AND RURAL AREAS AND DIFFERENT LINES OF INSURANCE- In determining the method and manner of imposing assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8, including the amount of such assessments and surcharges, the Secretary shall take into consideration--

(A) the economic impact of any such assessments and surcharges on commercial centers of urban areas, including the effect on commercial rents and commercial insurance premiums, particularly rents and premiums charged to small businesses, and the availability of lease space and commercial insurance within urban areas;

(B) the risk factors related to rural areas and smaller commercial centers, including the potential exposure to loss and the likely magnitude of such loss, as well as any resulting cross-subsidization that might result; and

(C) the various exposures to terrorism risk for different lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(b) TIMING OF COVERAGES AND ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary may adjust the timing of coverages and assessments provided under this Act to provide for equivalent application of the provisions of this Act to commercial insurers and policies that are not based on a calendar year.

(c) ADJUSTMENT- The Secretary may adjust the assessments charged under section 7 or the percentage imposed under the surcharge under section 8 at any time, as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the national interest, which may include avoiding unreasonable economic disruption or excessive market instability and avoiding undue burdens on small businesses.

(d) CIVIL MONETARY PENALTY-

(1) IN GENERAL- The Secretary may assess a civil monetary penalty in an amount not exceeding the amount under paragraph (2) against any commercial insurer that the Secretary determines, on the record after opportunity for a hearing--

(A) has failed to pay an assessment under section 7 in accordance with the requirements of, or regulations issued, under this Act;

(B) has failed to charge, collect, or remit surcharges under section 8 in accordance with the requirements of, or regulations issued under, this Act;

(C) has intentionally provided to the Secretary erroneous information regarding premium or loss amounts; or

(D) has otherwise failed to comply with the provisions of, or the regulations issued under, this Act.

(2) AMOUNT- The amount under this paragraph is the greater of $1,000,000 and, in the case of any failure to pay, charge, collect, or remit amounts in accordance with this Act or the regulations issued under this Act, such amount in dispute.

SEC. 10. APPLICATION TO SELF-INSURANCE ARRANGEMENTS AND OFFSHORE INSURERS AND REINSURERS.

(a) SELF-INSURANCE ARRANGEMENTS- The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, apply the provisions of this Act, as appropriate, to self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities, but only if such application is determined before the occurrence of a triggering event and all of the provisions of this Act are applied uniformly to such entities.

(b) OFFSHORE INSURERS AND REINSURERS- The Secretary shall ensure that the provisions of this Act are applied as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property and casualty insurance.

SEC. 11. STUDY OF RESERVES FOR PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE FOR TERRORIST OR OTHER CATASTROPHIC EVENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study of issues relating to permitting property and casualty insurance companies to establish deductible reserves against losses for future acts of terrorism, including--

(1) whether such tax-favored reserves would promote (A) insurance coverage of risks of terrorism, and (B) the accumulation of additional resources needed to satisfy potential claims resulting from such risks,

(2) the lines of business for whic h such reserves would be appropriate, including whether such reserves should be applied to personal or commercial lines of business,
(3) how the amount of such reserves would be determined,
(4) how such reserves would be administered,
(5) a comparison of the Federal tax treatment of such reserves with other insurance reserves permitted under Federal tax laws,
(6) an analysis of the use of tax-favored reserves for catastrophic events, including acts of terrorism, under the tax laws of foreign countries, and
(7) whether it would be appropriate to permit similar reserves for other future catastrophic events, such as natural disasters, taking into account the factors under the preceding paragraphs.

(b) REPORT- Not later than 4 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to Congress on the results of the study under subsection (a), together with recommendations for amending the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or other appropriate action.

SEC. 12. STATE PREEMPTION.

(a) COVERED PERILS- A commercial insurer shall be considered to have complied with any State law that requires or regulates the provision of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism if the insurer provides coverage in accordance with the definitions regarding acts of terrorism under this Act or under any regulations issued by the Secretary.

(b) RATE LAWS- If any provision of any State law prevents an insurer from increasing its premium rates in an amount necessary to recover any assessments pursuant to section 7, such provision is preempted only to the extent necessary to provide for such insurer to recover such losses.

(c) FILE AND USE-

(1) IN GENERAL- With respect only to commercial property and casualty insurance covering acts of terrorism, any provision of State law that requires, as a condition precedent to the effectiveness of rates or policies for such insurance that is made available by an insurer licensed to transact such business in the State, any action (including prior approval by the State insurance regulator for such State) other than filing of such rates and policies and related information with such State insurance regulator is preempted to the extent such law requires such additional actions for such insurance coverage.

(2) SUBSEQUENT REVIEW AUTHORITY- Paragraph (1) shall not be considered to preempt a provision of State law solely because the law provides that rates and policies for such insurance coverage are, upon such filing, subject to subsequent review and action, which may include actions to disapprove or discontinue use of such rates or policies, by the State insurance regulator.

(3) TREATMENT OF PRIOR REVIEW PROVISIONS- Any authority for prior review and action by a State regulator preempted under paragraph (1) shall be deemed to be authority to conduct a subsequent review and action on such filings.

SEC. 13. CONSISTENT STATE GUIDELINES FOR COVERAGE FOR ACTS OF TERRORISM.

(a) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING COVERED PERILS- It is the sense of the Congress that--

(1) the NAIC, in consultation with the Secretary, should develop appropriate definitions for acts of terrorism that are consistent with this Act and appropriate standards for making determinations regarding occurrences of acts of terrorism;

(2) each State should adopt the definitions and standards developed by the NAIC for purposes of regulating insurance coverage made available in that State;

(3) in consulting with the NAIC, the Secretary should advocate and promote the development of definitions and standards that are appropriate for purposes of this Act; and

(4) after consultation with the NAIC, the Secretary should adopt further definitions for acts of terrorism and standards for determinations that are appropriate for this Act.

(b) INSURANCE RESERVE GUIDELINES-

(1) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING ADOPTION BY STATES- It is the sense of the Congress that--

(A) the NAIC should develop appropriate guidelines for commercial insurers and pools regarding maintenance of reserves against the risks of acts of terrorism; and

(B) each State should adopt such guidelines for purposes of regulating commercial insurers doing business in that State.

(2) CONSIDERATION OF ADOPTION OF NATIONAL GUIDELINES- Upon the expiration of the 6-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall make a determination of whether the guidelines referred to in paragraph (1) have, by such time, been developed and adopted by nearly all States in a uniform manner. If the Secretary determines that such guidelines have not been so developed and adopted, the Secretary shall consider adopting, and may adopt, such guidelines on a national basis in a manner that supersedes any State law regarding maintenance of reserves against such risks.

(c) GUIDELINES REGARDING DISCLOSURE OF PRICING AND TERMS OF COVERAGE-

(1) SENSE OF CONGRESS- It is the sense of the Congress that the States should require, by laws or regulations governing the provision of commercial property and casualty insurance that includes coverage for acts of terrorism, that the price of any such terrorism coverage, including the costs of any terrorism related assessments or surcharges under this Act, be separately disclosed.

(2) ADOPTION OF NATIONAL GUIDELINES- If the Secretary determines that the States have not enacted laws or adopted regulations adequately providing for the disclosures described in paragraph (1) within a reasonable period of time after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall, after consultation with the NAIC, adopt guidelines on a national basis requiring such disclosure in a manner that supersedes any State law regarding such disclosure.

SEC. 14. CONSULTATION WITH STATE INSURANCE REGULATORS AND NAIC.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Secretary shall consult with the State insurance regulators and the NAIC in carrying out this Act.

(b) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE, ASSESSMENTS, AND SURCHARGES- The Secretary may take such actions, including entering into such agreements and providing such technical and organizational assistance to insurers and State insurance regulators, as may be necessary to provide for the distribution of financial assistance under section 6 and the collection of assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8.

(c) INVESTIGATING AND AUDITING CLAIMS- The Secretary may, in consultation with the State insurance regulators and the NAIC, investigate and audit claims of insured losses by commercial insurers and otherwise require verification of amounts of premiums or losses, as appropriate.

SEC. 15. LITIGATION MANAGEMENT.< /span>

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION-

(1) IN GENERAL- There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS- All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).

(3) SUBSTANTIVE LAW- The substantive law for decision in any such action shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which such acts of terrorism occurred, unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law.

(4) JURISDICTION- For each determination under paragraph (1), the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall designate one or more district courts of the United States which shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim (including any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death) brought pursuant to this subsection. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall select and assign the district court or courts based on the convenience of the parties and the just and efficient conduct of the proceedings. For purposes of personal jurisdiction, the district court or courts designated by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall be deemed to sit in all judicial districts in the U nited States.

(5) LIMITS ON DAMAGES- In an action brought under this subsection for damages:

(A) No punitive damages intended to punish or deter, exemplary damages, or other damages not intended to compensate a plaintiff for actual losses may be awarded, nor shall any party be liable for interest prior to the judgment.

(B)(i) Each defendant in such an action shall be liable only for the amount of noneconomic damages allocated to the defendant in direct proportion to the percentage of responsibility of the defendant for the harm to the plaintiff, and no plaintiff may recover noneconomic damages unless the plaintiff suffered physical harm.

(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the term `noneconomic damages' means damages for losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium, hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and any other nonpecu niary losses.

(6) COLLATERAL SOURCES- Any recovery by a plaintiff in an action under this subsection shall be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the acts of terrorism with respect to which the determination under paragraph (1) was made.

(7) ATTORNEY FEES- Reasonable attorneys fees for work performed shall be subject to the discretion of the court, but in no event shall any attorney charge, demand, receive, or collect for services rendered, fees or compensation in an amount in excess of 20 percent of the damages ordered by the court to be paid pursuant to this section, or in excess of 20 percent of any court-approved settlement made of any claim cognizable under this section. Any attorney who charges, demands, receives, or collects for services rendered in connection with such claim any amount in excess of that allowed under this section, if recovery be had, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) EXCLUSION- Nothing in this section shall in any way limit the liability of any person who--

(1) attempts to commit, knowingly participates in, aids and abets, or commits any act of terrorism with respect to which a determination under subsection (a)(1) was made, or any criminal act related to or resulting from such act of terrorism; or

(2) participates in a conspiracy to commit any such act of terrorism or any such criminal act.

(c) RIGHT OF SUBROGATION- The United States shall have the right of subrogation with resp ect to any claim paid by the United States under this Act.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW- Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect--

(1) any party's contractual right to arbitrate a dispute; or

(2) any provision of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107-42; 49 U.S.C. 40101 note).

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD- This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

(f) SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS FROM FROZEN ASSETS OF TERRORISTS, TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS, AND STATE SPONSORS OF TERRORISM-

(1) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in paragraph (2), in every case in which a person obtains a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim for compensatory damages for an act of terrorism, or a claim for money damages brought pursuant to section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the frozen assets of that terrorist party, or any agency or instrumentality of that terrorist party, shall be available for satisfaction of the judgment, to the extent of any compensatory damages awarded in the judgment for which the terrorist party is liable.

(2) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER-

(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of this subsection in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment in aid of execution or execution against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(B) A waiver under this paragraph shall not apply to--

(i) property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that has been used for any nondiplomatic purpose (including use as rental property), the proceeds of such use; or

(ii) any asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that is sold or otherwise transferred for value to a third party, the proceeds of such sale or transfer.

(3) DEFINITIONS- In this subsection:

(A) The term `terrorist party' means a terrorist, a terrorist organization, or a foreign state designated as a state sponsor of terrorism under section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)) or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371).

(B) The term `frozen assets' means assets seized or frozen by the United States in accordance with law.

(C) The term `property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' and the term `asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' mean any property or asset, respectively, the attachment in aid of execution or execution of which would result in a violation of an obligation of the United States under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, as the case may be.

SEC. 16. STUDY OF POTENTIAL EFFECTS OF TERRORISM ON LIFE INSURANCE INDUSTRY.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT- Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall establish a commission (in this section referred to as the `Commission') to study and report on the potential effects of an act or acts of terrorism on the life insurance industry in the United States and the markets served by such industry.

(b) MEMBERSHIP AND OPERATIONS-

(1) APPOINTMENT- The Commission shall consist of 7 members, as follows:

(A) The Secretary of the Treasury or the designee of the Secretary.

(B) The Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or the designee of the Chairman.

(C) The Assistant to the President for Homeland Security.

(D) 4 members appointed by the President, who shall be--

(i) a representative of direct underwriters of life insurance within the United States;

(ii) a representative of reinsurers of life insurance within the United States;

(iii) an officer of the NAIC; and

(iv) a representative of insurance agents for life underwriters.

(2) OPERATIONS- The chairperson of the Commission shall determine the manner in which the Commission shall operate, including funding, staffing, and coordination with other governmental entities.

(c) STUDY- The Commission shall conduct a study of the life insurance industry in the United States, which shall identify and make recommendations regarding--

(1) possible actions to encourage, facilitate, and sustain the provision, by the life insurance industry in the United States, of coverage for losses due to death or disability resulting from an act or acts of terrorism, including in the face of threats of such acts; and

(2) possible actions or mechanisms to sustain or supplement the ability of the life insurance industry in the United States to cover losses due to death or disability resulting from an act or acts of terrorism in the event that--

(A) such acts significantly affect mortality experience of the population of the United States over any period of time;

(B) such losses jeopardize the capital and surplus of the life insurance industry in the United States as a whole; or

(C) other consequences from such acts occur, as determined by the Commission, that may significantly affect the ability of the life insurance industry in the United States to independently cover such losses.

(d) RECOMMENDATIONS- The Commission may make a recommendation pursuant to subsection (c) only upon the concurrence of a majority of the members of the Commission.

(e) REPORT- Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to the House of Representatives and the Senate a report describing the results of the study and any recommendations developed under subsection (c).

(f) TERMINATION- The Commission shall terminate 60 days after submission of the report pursuant to subsection (e).

SEC. 17. RAILROAD AND TRUCKING INSURANCE STUDY.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study to determine how the Federal Government can address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report regarding the results and conclusions of the study.

SEC. 18. STUDY OF REINSURANCE POOL SYSTEM FOR FUTURE ACTS OF TERRORISM.

(a) STUDY- The Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General of the United States shall jointly conduct a study on the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under this Act.
(b) CONSULTATION- In conducting the study under subsection (a), the Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General shall consult with (1) academic experts, (2) the United Nations Secretariat for Trade and Development, (3) representatives from the property and casualty insurance industry, (4) representatives from the reinsurance industry, (5) the NAIC, and (6) such consumer organizations as the Secretary considers appropriate.
(c) REPORT- Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General shall jointly submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study under subsection (a).

SEC. 19. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act, the following definitions shall apply:
(1) ACT OF TERRORISM-
(A) IN GENERAL- The term `act of terrorism' means any act that the Secretary determines meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), as such requirements are further defined and specified by the Secretary in consultation with the NAIC.
(B) REQUIREMENTS- An act meets the requirements of this subparagraph if the act--
(i) is unlawful;
(ii) causes harm to a person, property, or entity, in the United States, or in the case of a domestic United States air carrier or a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), in or outside the United States;
(iii) is committed by a person or group of persons or associations who are recognized, either before or after such act, by the Department of State or the Secretary as an international terrorist group or have conspired with such a group or the group's agents or surrogates;
(iv) has as its purpose to overthrow or destabilize the government of any country, or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the government of the United States or any segment of the economy of United States, by coercion; and

(v) is not considered an act of war, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to any coverage for workers compensation.

(2) AFFILIATE- The term `affiliate' means, with respect to an insurer, any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the insurer.

(3) AGGREGATE WRITTEN PREMIUM- The term `aggregate written premium' means, with respect to a year, the aggregate premium amount of all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during such year under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(4) COMMERCIAL INSURER- The term `commercial insurer' means any corporation, association, society, order, firm, company, mutual, partnership, individual, aggregation of individuals, or any other legal entity that provides commercial property and casualty insurance. Such term includes any affiliates of a commercial insurer.

(5) COMMERCIAL PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE-

(A) IN GENERAL- The term `commercial property and casualty insurance' means insurance or reinsurance, or retrocessional reinsurance, for persons or properties in the United States against--

(i) loss of or damage to property;

(ii) loss of income or extra expense incurred because of loss of or damage to property;

(iii) third party liability claims caused by negligence or imposed by statute or contract, including workers compensation; or

(iv) loss resulting from debt or default of another.

(B) EXCLUSIONS- Such term does not include--

(i) insurance for homeowners, tenants, private passenger nonfleet automobiles, mobile homes, or other insurance for personal, family, or household needs;

(ii) insurance for professional liability, including medical malpractice, errors and omissions, or directors' and officers' liability; or

(iii) health or life insurance.

(6) CONTROL- A company has control over another company if--

(A) the company directly or indirectly or acting through one or more other persons owns, controls, or has power to vote 25 percent or more of any class of voting securities of the other company;

(B) the company controls in any manner the election of a majority of the directors or trustees of the other company; or

(C) the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that the company directly or indirectly exercises a controlling influence over the manag ement or policies of the other company.

(7) COVERED PERIOD- The term `covered period' has the meaning given such term in section 20.

(8) INDUSTRY-WIDE LOSSES- The term `industry-wide losses' means the aggregate insured losses sustained by all insurers from coverage written under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(9) INSURED LOSS- The term `insured loss' means any loss, net of reinsurance and retroc essional reinsurance, covered by commercial property and casualty insurance.

(10) NAIC- The term `NAIC' means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(11) NET PREMIUM- The term `net premium' means, with respect a commercial insurer and a year, the aggregate premium amount collected by such commercial insurer for all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during such year under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance by such commercial insurer, less any premium paid by such commercial insurer to other commercial insurers to insure or reinsure those risks.

(12) SECRETARY- The term `Secretary' means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(13) STATE- The term `State' means the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa , and any other territory or possession of the Uni ted States.

(14) STATE INSURANCE REGULATOR- The term `State insurance regulator' means, with respect to a State, the principal insurance regulatory authority of the State.

(15) TRIGGERING DETERMINATION- The term `triggering determination' has the meaning given such term in section 5(a).

(16) TRIGGERING EVENT- The term `triggering event' means, with respect to a triggering determination, the occurrence of an act of terrorism, or the occurrence of such acts, that caused the insured losses resulting in such triggering determination.

(17) UNITED STATES- The term `United States' means, collectively, the States (as such term is defined in this section).

SEC. 20. COVERED PERIOD AND EXTENSION OF PROGRAM.

(a) COVERED PERIOD- Except to the extent provided otherwise under subsection (b), for purposes of this Act, the term `covered period' means the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on January 1, 2003.

(b) EXTENSION OF PROGRAM- If the Secretary determines that extending the covered period is necessary to ensure the adequate availability in the United States of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage for acts of terrorism, the Secretary may, subject to subsection (c), extend the covered period by not more than two years.
(c) REPORT- The Secretary may exercise the authority under subsection (b) to extend the covered period only if the Secretary submits a report to the Congress providing notice of and setting forth the reasons for such extension.

SEC. 21. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue any regulations necessary to carry out this Act.

Passed the House of Representatives November 29, 2001.

Attest:

Clerk.

"Democrats have already mapped out a strategy to defend against a quick takeover by the GOP during a lame duck if former Rep. Jim Talent (R-Mo.)
defeats Carnahan in the midterm elections, several sources said."
"Republicans said they would move for Talent's immediate swearing-in if he wins and the Senate is still in session mopping up the unfinished business of the 107th Congress. His victory would give Republicans 50 votes and the majority, while Democrats could have no more than 49 votes."
"Even if Independent Senator Jim Jeffords (Vt.), who caucuses with Democrats, officially joined the party, Vice President Cheney * in his role as President of the Senate * would cast the tie-breaking vote for Senator Trent Lott (R-Miss.) to be Majority Leader."
"But Republicans would not have full operating control of the chamber under such a scenario. Democrats plan to prevent the GOP from passing a new organizing resolution to give Republicans control of the committees if they seize power in a lame duck."
"While Lott would be recognized as the Majority Leader on the floor, his committee chairmen would consist of liberal Democrats such as Sens. Edward Kennedy (Mass.), Patrick Leahy (Vt.) and Jay Rockefeller (W.Va.), who would still retain their one-seat majorities on the panels."

PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH

Dear Friend,

Thank you for taking the time to vote Republican this election year. The Republican Party has a strong record of achievement over the last two years, and by participating in the election process and voting Republican – you can help our progress.

Despite our successes, much work remains. Our Republican Team is fighting to:

- Strengthen Medicare and Social Security for future generations
- Teach every child to read
- Lower taxes and control the growth of government
- Reform welfare to end dependency on government
- Secure our nation's borders
- Win the war on terrorism

That is why your support is so critical to our success – EVERY VOTE COUNTS! To keep building on our success we must elect more Republicans to all levels of government. Please complete and mail the enclosed Absentee Ballot Application to ensure that your vote is counted on Election Day!

Sincerely,

George W. Bush

Gregg and Brett - Because of the limited number of flights and limited space on the flights leaving Sakhalin, Eric Knox may have to take an additional charter flight from Yuzhno-Sakahlin, Russia to Hakodate, Japan.

Currently,
Eric is flying standby for the same commercial flight that Bob Card is taking to Seoul, Korea then Japan then DC. However, we have no guarantee that there will be room for him on this flight.

ExxonMobil runs a charter plane on a regular schedule to several points
in Japan and Russia. The cost of the flight to Hakodate, which DOE would pay, is $275 per person. This would allow Eric to get to Hakodate, Japan and catch a flight to Tokyo, then DC. The other option is to have Eric stay
in Sakahlin until the next commercial flight leaves, approximately 1 week later.

Please let me know if you need further information for approval of Eric Knox
flying on an ExxonMobil chartered aircraft.

Thanks-
Logan

Subject: Approval of use of corporate aircraft

This is to request approval from the White House for the Under Secretary of Energy, Robert G. Card, to travel on aircraft chartered by ExxonNeftegas Ltd., a subsidiary of ExxonMobil, on September 24-26, 2002, in relation to his official travel to Sakhalin Island, Russia. The Under Secretary is interested in meeting with Larry Smith of Exxon Sakhalin Neftegas, Sakhalin Governor Igor Farkhundinov, Dinty Miller of BP, Steve McVeigh of Sakhalin Energy, Kent Hill of USAID and Dr. Galina Pavlova of

the Sakhalin Oil and Gas Complex and conducting a site visit of the oil and gas projects at the extended reach drilling site.

Sakhalin is a remote location with infrequent and unreliable commercial air service that would accommodate the schedule. I have been advised that, after attempting to work out commercial flights that would accommodate the Under Secretary's schedule and objectives of the trip,
the only viable option is to travel via ExxonNeftegas Limited air transport, a charter service managed by ExxonMobil. The DOE Moscow office also recommends this as the best means of transport for this trip. Further,
a helicopter is necessary to visit the remote drilling site.

The Department of Energy will reimburse ExxonMobil for our share of the charter costs, which I am told will be $675 per person for the charter flights and $540 per person for the use of the helicopter.

White House policy requires that Cabinet members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primarily for company
use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Because ExxonMobil has a lease agreement for pipeline facilities in Alaska, it is our understanding that
White House approval is necessary for the Under Secretary to travel on this aircraft chartered by ExxonMobil, even though the Department will reimburse
ExxonMobil for its share of the flight costs.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require anything further.

on the flights leaving Sakhalin, Eric Knox may have to take an additional charter flight from Yuzhno-Sakahlin, Russia to Hakodate, Japan . Currently, Eric is flying standby for the same commercial flight that Bob Card is taking to Seoul, Korea then Japan then DC. However, we h ave no guarantee that there will be room for him on this flight.

ExxonMobil runs a charter plane on a regular schedule to severa l points in Japan and Russia. The cost of the flight to Hakodate, wh ich DOE would pay, is $275 per person. This would allow Eric to get to Hako date, Japan and catch a flight to Tokyo, then DC. The other option is to have Eric stay in Sakahlin until the next commercial flight leaves, approximatel y 1 week later.

Please let me know if you need further information for approval of Eric Knox flying on an ExxonMobil chartered aircraft.

Thanks-
Logan

Subject: Approval of use of corporate aircraft

This is to request approval from the W hite House for the Under Secretary of Energy, Robert G. Card, to travel on aircraft cha rtered by ExxonNeftegas Ltd., a subsidiary of ExxonMobil, on September 2 4-26, 2002, in relation to his official travel to Sakhalin Island, Russia.&nb sp; The Under Secretary is interested in meeting with Larry Smith of Exxon S akhalin Neftegas, Sakhalin Governor Igor Farkhundinov, Dinty Miller of BP, Steve McVeigh of Sakhalin Energy, Kent Hill of USAID and Dr. Galina Pavlova of the Sakhalin Oil and Gas Complex and conducting a site visit of th e oil and gas projects at the extended reach drilling site.

Sakhalin is a remote location with inf requent and unreliable commercial air service that would accommodate the schedule.&nb sp; I have been advised that, after attempting to work out commercial flights that would accommodate the Under Secretary's schedule and objectives of t he trip, the only viable option is to travel via ExxonNeftegas Limited air transport, a charter service managed by ExxonMobil. The DOE Moscow of fice also recommends this as the best means of transport for this trip.& nbsp; Further, a helicopter is necessary to visit the remote drilling site.

The Department of Energy will reimburs e ExxonMobil for our share of the charter costs, which I am told will be $675 per person for the charter flights and $540 per person for the use of the helicopter.

White House policy requires that Cabin et members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primaril y for company use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Because ExxonMobil has a lease agreement for pipeline facilities in Alaska, it is our underst anding that White House approval is necessary for the Under Secretary to t ravel on this aircraft chartered by ExxonMobil, even though the Department w ill reimburse ExxonMobil for its share of the flight costs.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require anything further.

Subject: Ganske Tape stories

I assume maybe you've seen these, but here three stories that came out of the suspiciously recorded Ganske strategy meeting.

Des Moines Register

Ganske camp says rivals taped strategy session
It's not true, Sen. Tom Harkin's campaign chief says. The GOP challenger's campaign wants a probe.
By THOMAS BEAUMONT
Register Staff Writer
09/23/2002 There's a new controversy in Iowa's U.S. Senate race involving what one campaign is calling a secretly taped strategy session.
U.S. Rep. Greg Ganske is accusing U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin's campaign of taping a meeting involving Ganske, some strategists and supporters in a Hotel Savery conference room in Des Moines on Sept. 3.
Ken Mehlman, director of political affairs for the White House, also participated in the conversation, according to a transcript of the meeting.
The Harkin campaign said it had no knowledge of the taped conversation or the source of the transcript. The Ganske campaign distributed copies of the transcript to reporters over the weekend.
The transcript reveals a discussion of media strategy and quotes Republican Ganske repeating a theme he's brought up frequently on the campaign trail: that he wants to campaign hard against Harkin without becoming mean-spirited.
"You've never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him like we're going to," Ganske said, according to the transcript. "With a smile on our face, not angry, not growling or scowling."
Harkin, a Democrat, and Ganske have been locked in a bitter campaign that has included attack ads from both sides.

Ganske campaign manager Bill Armistead said the campaign received the 11-page transcript from Kathie Obradovich, a political and state government reporter for Lee Enterprises, which publishes the Quad-City Times.
Obradovich could not be reached for comment Sunday.
Armistead said he could not vouch for the word-by-word authenticity of the transcript, but he said its existence breached campaign ethics at a minimum.
"This is way, way over the line of any kind of campaigning," Armistead said.
Armistead said the Ganske campaign planned to seek an outside investigation.
Harkin campaign manager Jeff Link described the allegations as a tactic to distract voters from real issues. He said neither the recording nor the transcript was the work of a Harkin operative.
"I don't know where (Obradovich) got it," Link said of the transcript. He suggested that the Ganske campaign had taped the meeting and leaked the tape and transcript, or that it was the work of a former Ganske supporter who had turned against the Republican's campaign.
Armistead said he did not suspect that a Ganske supporter had turned against the campaign. He said the notion that the campaign had manufactured the story to taint Harkin was "laughable."
State GOP Chairman Charles Larson Jr. said the party was reviewing its options in regard to the incident.

New York Times

http://www.nytimes.com/2002/09/19/politics/19FLOR.html

A Tale of a Tape in Iowa's Senate Race
Three weeks ago, Greg Ganske, the Republican who is challenging Senator Tom Harkin, the Iowa Democrat, held a private meeting with financial supporters at a Des Moines hotel. The gathering featured a briefing and pep talk, by telephone, from Ken Mehlman, the White House political director, and a somewhat bellicose speech by Mr. Ganske. Somehow, a tape and transcript of that meeting turned up in Iowa political and journalistic circles yesterday and Republicans were yelling "Watergate."
"The candidate is shocked that this would occur in Iowa: that someone would record a private meeting for political purposes," Mr. Ganske's campaign manager, William S. Armistead, said. "We definitely need to get to the bottom of this."
Mr. Ganske's campaign issued a statement referring to "Tom Harkin's revelation that he has secretly taped a Ganske for Senate meeting and phone call." Mr. Harkin's press secretary, Sarah Leonard, denied that. Mr. Armistead said the notion that Mr. Harkin was the source of the tape had been suggested to him by Iowa reporters who came to him looking for comment.
There really was not too much to the tape itself, in the smoking-gun department, other than some pretty tough words from Mr. Ganske about the attacks he planned on Mr. Harkin. "It will be mind-blowing," he said, according to the transcript. "You're never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him like we're going to. With a smile on our face."
ABC News "The Note"

Iowa
For about 27 people in the media and politics, this weekend had a serious subplot involving allegations of political trickery in one of the nation's biggest Senate races.

On September 3 of this year, a group of GOP Senate nominee Greg Ganske's supporters gathered in the legendary Hotel Savory in Des Moines to hear a speakerphone briefing from White House Political Director Ken Mehlman on Ganske's run against Senator Tom Harkin (D).

Ganske was at the event (although he arrived late) and briefed his supporters as well.

This was a typical meeting in which financial supporters are given an "insider" briefing to encourage them to continue to help raise money and build political support.

Somehow, a recording of the meeting, and then a transcript, were made.

This transcript has been floating around in Iowa since Friday, and anyone who is anyone now has a copy.

The Ganske campaign and the Iowa Republican Party are claiming that they know from reporters that the Harkin campaign is responsible for this, and they are calling for an investigation into how the transcript was made.

At 11:30 am ET this morning, the Iowa Republican Party chairman is planning to bring his lawyer with him to call for state and federal investigations.

Whoever produced the transcript seemed to put it out for one main reason: at the top of the 12-page document is a pull quote from Ganske in which he says "You've never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him (Harkin) like we're going to."

Pretty thin gruel, in terms of a "smoking gun," but the point seems to be: Ganske plans to run a negative campaign.

For political junkies, probably most interesting is the reminder that these secret, private, donor-only briefings tend to have almost nothing secret or interesting in them.

That having been said, there IS some stuff that junkies will like:

1. A little bit from Mehlman (akin to his famous slipped-disk slide show) about which Senate races he thinks are in play, although there are no big surprises here. No sign yet that any of this has made a splash in the states with Senate races that Mehlman chooses to include or leave out.

2. Mehlman's formula for analyzing states Republican-trending by looking at how 41 did in '88 compared to 43 in the two-party popular vote. Can someone send us those numbers?

3. Mehlman comparing Iowa '02 to Florida '00, as kind of the "ground zero" of American politics

4. A Ganske hard shot at Iowa's longtime lead political reporter for the AP, Mike Glover, whose daughter used to work for Harkin. Ganske's accusation of bias just might be reverberating around the state's political and media circles as we type this.

The New York Times had a brief item about all this on Sunday, and the Des Moines Register finally today has a "he said, he said" version. LINK

"Ganske campaign manager Bill Armistead said the campaign received the 11-page transcript from Kathie Obradovich, a political and state government reporter for Lee Enterprises, which publishes the Quad-City Times."

"Obradovich could not be reached for comment Sunday ("

"Harkin campaign manager Jeff Link described the allegations as a tactic to distract voters from real issues. He said neither the recording nor the transcript was the work of a Harkin operative."

"'I don't know where [Obradovich] got it,' Link said of the transcript. He suggested that the Ganske campaign had taped the meeting and leaked the tape and transcript, or that it was the work of a former Ganske supporter who had turned against the Republican's campaign."

"Armistead said he did not suspect that a Ganske supporter had turned against the campaign. He said the notion that the campaign had manufactured the story to taint Harkin was 'laughable.'"

Sounds to us like Chicago Tribune ace and ex DMR reporter Jeff Zeleny should parachute back in to solve the caper (

Battle Brews Over a Hispanic Nominee to Appeals Court
By NEIL A. LEWIS

ASHINGTON, Sept. 23 * The nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court, which the Senate Judiciary Committee takes up this week, may produce the most contentious judicial fight yet in the Bush administration.

President Bush has nominated Mr. Estrada, a young conservative lawyer of undisputed intellectual prowess, to a seat on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, widely viewed as second in importance to the Supreme Court. The circuit court has served as a bullpen for the Supreme Court, and its alumni include three of the nine current justices. If confirmed, Mr. Estrada would be a strong candidate to become the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court.

The questioning by Democrats at a hearing on Thursday will be intended to demonstrate their contention that Mr. Estrada is the latest example of an effort to pack the courts with right-wing ideologues.

But a less visible element will be the White House's political calculation in putting forward a Hispanic candidate for an appeals court post. Supporters and opponents of the nomination agree that Mr. Bush's selection of a Hispanic candidate is a master stroke, putting a greater burden on any Democrat opposed to the nomination.

At the same time, administration officials had hoped that the Estrada nomination would cause consternation among some liberal Hispanic groups that would like to see a Hispanic lawyer appointed to the court but are uncomfortable with Mr. Estrada's conservative philosophy. This predicament could be reminiscent of the way the 1991 nomination of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court by President Bush's father delayed and splintered opposition from black groups that applauded the notion of a black justice but did not agree with Mr. Thomas's views.

The president has promoted Mr. Estrada, citing not only his heritage but also his personal story, as a model of self-reliance and hard work.

When Mr. Estrada came to the United States from his native Honduras at 17, he spoke little English. But he soon graduated with honors from Columbia University and Harvard Law School, became a law clerk to Justice Anthony M. Kennedy and later argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

At the White House last month, Mr. Bush told Hispanic community leaders: "Here's a kid who comes to our country, works hard, learns the language. He's a brilliant jurist. I want this man to serve as a bright example of what is possible in America."

But Democrats said they were deeply concerned about Mr. Estrada's views. "This is an important and momentous nomination," said Senator Charles E. Schumer, a New York Democrat who is on the Judiciary Committee. "This court serves as a feeder to the Supreme Court and the administration has made no secret Estrada would be a prime candidate if there's a Supreme Court vacancy."

Alberto R. Gonzales, the White House counsel, said Mr. Estrada would be an excellent judge because "he's exceptionally bright" and "has outstanding judgment."

Mr. Gonzales, who has himself been mentioned for the Supreme Court, added that "the president was delighted at the opportunity to name someone who happens to be Hispanic."

The Congressional Hispanic Caucus, composed mostly of liberal Democrats, met with Mr. Estrada in June and most members came away troubled by his responses to their questions.

Officials at the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund said they had misgivings about his candidacy, and the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund has said it will oppose the nomination, asserting that Mr. Estrada does not have the experience or temperament to be a judge.

The Hispanic Bar Association endorsed the nomination last year, but several former presidents of that group have disagreed with the action.

The White House has distributed letters of support for Mr. Estrada from several groups including the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the Mexican-American Growers Association.

Mr. Estrada's conservative views are largely presumed rather than known because there is no paper trail of his stands. He even worked in the Clinton administration, and his supporters are quick to note that he handled a case involving the death penalty and a poor defendant before the Supreme Court.

Ralph Neas, the president of People for the American Way, a liberal advocacy group that opposes the Estrada nomination, said, "We certainly have heard from many different sources that he is the favored candidate of the right wing, that he would be a jurist in the mold of Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia."

Mr. Neas acknowledged, however, that few writings or statements demonstrated Mr. Estrada's ideology.

The one signpost has been criticism by a colleague in the Clinton administration that Mr. Estrada has a narrow view of the law.

Paul Bender, who supervised Mr. Estrada as the deputy solicitor general in the Clinton administration, made critical comments after the nomination months ago.

"Miguel is too much of an ideologue to be an appellate judge," Mr. Bender said. "You could not count on him to be fair or neutral."

In a recent interview, Mr. Bender, now a professor at Arizona State University law school, said that while he would not withdraw his criticisms, he would not repeat them, saying he did not wish to be seen as campaigning against the nomination.

Seth P. Waxman, solicitor general in the Clinton administration who worked with Mr. Estrada, said in a letter to the committee that he disagreed with Mr. Bender's comments.

"I do not share those criticisms at all," Mr. Waxman wrote. "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together he was a model of professionalism and competence." Mr. Estrada's analyses were never colored by his views, Mr. Waxman said.

Still, Senate Democrats have requested copies of Mr. Estrada's internal memorandums when he was an assistant solicitor general, from 1992 to 1997. The White House has refused to supply them and has pointed to a letter from several former solicitors general, Democrats and Republicans, saying that complying with the request would inhibit lawyers from giving candid advice.

The Honorable
Chairman
Committee on United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter provides the views of the Department of Transportation concerning H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Protection Act, as passed by the House of Representatives on November 29, 2001, and S. 2600, the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, as passed by the U. S. Senate on June 18, 2002. The Department commends the Committees for their leadership in addressing the vital issue of commercial terrorism insurance, and looks forward to working with the conferees as differences between the House and Senate bills are resolved.

The Department supports the goals of H.R. 3210 and S. 2600. Catastrophic losses were incurred by commercial insurance underwriters as a result of the events of September 11th, and there has been an across-the-board reduction/elimination of terrorism insurance coverage. The Departments comments and recommendations regarding marine insurance industry matters are intended to assist the conferees in developing final legislation to provide the Department of Transportation and the Federal Government with the a comprehensive terrorism insurance program to respond to the new, post-September 11th threat environment.

Participating insurer

S. 2600 includes within its definition of "participating insurers" only insurers that are state-licensed and foreign surplus lines insurers listed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC). However, insurance for most maritime (and offshore energy production units) is exempt from state regulation, and therefore a state license or a NAIC listing is neither available or necessary for many of the insurers of these activities. The same is true for commercial aviation, yet the acceptability of insurers of these activities is often subject to active oversight by federal agencies regulating the underlying maritime, energy or aviation activity. MARAD, for example, has a formal approval process to qualify foreign underwriters to insure vessels receiving loan guarantees under Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, which takes into account a number of factors, including their financial condition. While insurer eligibility rules or practices vary with each federal agency, the Department believes that federal agency approval should be accorded equivalent status to State agency approval or NAIC listing. Therefore, if the S. 2600 structure is adopted in conference, a provision should be made to incorporate federal agency approval of insurers as a basis for eligibility.

H.R. 3210 includes a broad definition of "commercial insurer" and also expressly directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ensure that the act is applied "as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property and casualty insurance." This definition presumably makes certain that the insurers who cover activities in the United States territorial waters (and continental shelf) are eligible. If the conferees structure the final bill in a manner similar to H.R. 3210, they should retain the provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the act to offshore and non-admitted insurers, as appropriate.

Geographic Scope of Coverage

In S. 2600, the definitions of "act of terrorism" and "insured losses" are primarily limited to acts and harm occurring "within the United States." In H.R. 3210, the definition of "act of terrorism" refers to acts or harm occurring "in the United States." How these definitions would apply to activities conducted in the jurisdictional waters of the United States is unclear. Such activities include both coastwise and international shipping, bound to or from the United States, which carries the preponderance of U.S. exports and imports. Another critical activity is energy production on the United States continental shelf, which is an increasing share of the country's hydrocarbon production.

Congress specifically foresaw the possibility of terrorist acts against shipping in the U.S. territorial sea (the 12-mile limit) and against fixed platforms on the U.S. continental shelf when it passed the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Pub. L. 103-322). Section 60019 of that Act ("Offenses of Violence against Maritime Navigation or Fixed Platforms") made such terrorist acts a federal crime and confirmed U.S. territorial jurisdiction over such criminal activities. These provisions, codified at 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280-2281, define U.S. jurisdiction with respect to "acts to compel the United States to do or abstain from doing any act" to include the "territorial sea of the United States" meaning all waters seaward to 12 nautical miles from the baseline on the United States (generally the shoreline); and the "continental shelf of the United States," meaning the seabed or subsoil of the submarine areas that extend beyond the territorial sea to the limits provided by the customary international law as reflected in Article 76 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Shipping and other maritime activity proximate to U.S. ports, including deepwater ports, and U.S. offshore energy facilities are potential targets of foreign terrorists. The conferees should ensure that such key economic activities are protected by the program. S. 2600 addresses this by including the territorial sea in its definition of "United States." However, the conferees should further clarify the definition of the United States by incorporating the jurisdictional lines set forth in 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280 and 2281 respectively for the "territorial sea of the United States" (12-mile nautical limit) and the "continental shelf of the United States." This will ensure that all shipping in U.S. waters, and all oil and gas activities on the United States continental shelf, fall within the geographic scope of the bill since these activities are equally as vital to the U.S. economy as other domestic activities covered under the bill.

Coverage of Title XI Guaranteed Vessels

Section 19 of H.R. 3210, which delineates the property eligible for terrorism insurance, includes United States flag vessels or vessels based prnicipally in the United states on which United States income tax is paid and who insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States. If the H.R. 3210 structure is adopted by the conferees, Subsection (1)(B)(ii) should be amended to also include foreign-flag vessels which are subject to a Title XI ship financing mortgage. MARAD has financed a number of vessels under the export provisions of Title XI of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act. Although those vessels are registered under non-U.S. flags, they carry a mortgage in favor of the United States. These vessels should be included under the provisions of this insurance to protect the government's security interest.

Railroad and Trucking Insurance Study

Section 17 of H.R. 3210 requires the Secretary of Treasury to conduct a study to determine how the Federal government should address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance, by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. The study would also address the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under H.R. 3210.

If such a study is included in final legislation, the Department believes that it should be expanded to include all critical transportation systems and infrastructure, and not just the trucking and railroad industries. Therefore, Section 17 should be amended to also include ports, intermodal terminals, airports and pipelines. In addition, since most of the expertise on these transportation industry segments rests with DOT, the study should be co-chaired by the Secretary of Transportation.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, to the submission of this letter to Congress.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

When the Senate Judiciary Committee convenes Thursday for a hearing on President Bush's choice to sit on the powerful U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, the nominee will bring with him not only a glittering legal r?sum? but also a story of immigrant success.

Forty-year-old Washington lawyer Miguel Estrada earned academic honors at Columbia and Harvard and served as a law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. He has worked both as a federal prosecutor and as an assistant solicitor general of the United States. He has won two-thirds of the 15 cases he has argued before the Supreme Court, and he played a key supporting role on Bush's team of conservative legal all-stars who won the 2000 presidential election case. Supporters say these achievements are especially remarkable for someone who, at 17, arrived in the United States from his native Honduras speaking limited English.

If confirmed for the D.C. Circuit, Estrada would become the first Hispanic judge in the court's history, and, as such, perhaps the most influential Hispanic jurist of his generation.

Yet far from looking like a triumphal moment for Estrada, Thursday's hearing is shaping up as possibly the most contentious public event yet in a long, tense struggle over his nomination.

To veterans of the increasingly rancorous judicial nomination process, the fight over Estrada's appointment has a familiar ring. Senate Democrats and liberal interest groups say Estrada represents the latest Bush administration attempt to "pack the courts with people who will roll back critical rights and protections," in the words of Nan Aron, president of the liberal Alliance for Justice. Republicans accuse Estrada's opponents of trying to block a well-qualified lawyer because he does not conform to their ideology.

But the added element of ethnic politics makes the Estrada nomination more than just another skirmish in the battle for control of the lower courts: If confirmed, Estrada would immediately become a leading candidate to be named the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court. Such a historic appointment could help Bush not only tilt the high court to the right, but also make political gains among the fast-growing ranks of Hispanic voters.

Leading Republicans are blunt about their view of the political stakes. Democrats "are afraid Bush will nominate him to the Supreme Court where he won't toe their left-of-center line," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee.

The nomination has divided not only the Senate but also leading Hispanic organizations. Some hail the appointment as a breakthrough for a group that is underrepresented on the federal bench. Others portray Estrada as an acid-tongued conservative who is out of touch with the major concerns of Hispanics and other minorities.

In a real sense, the argument is a dispute over the meaning of Estrada's life story.

Privilege and Obstacles

Just as the first Bush administration praised Clarence Thomas for his rise from humble origins in Pin Point, Ga., the current Bush administration presents Estrada as the epitome of the self-made Latino immigrant.

"Miguel Estrada is an extremely bright person of strong convictions, and he has a great story," White House counsel Alberto Gonzales said. "He shows what is possible in this great country."

But to Estrada's critics, especially some of those in Hispanic civil rights organizations, his is the career of a successful minority who has put down only shallow roots in his ethnic community; he belongs to no Latino organizations.

In a blistering six-page statement opposing the Estrada nomination, the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund (PRLDEF) said recently that Estrada "has lived a very different life from that of most Latinos -- a life isolated from their experience and concerns."

Neither side's case is free of overstatement.

Estrada's success in the United States could be seen as the extension of his upbringing amid relative comfort and high academic expectations in Honduras, one of the poorest countries in Latin America. His father, Jesus Maria Estrada, who died in 1997, was a prominent and politically conservative lawyer who helped found the country's first private university. Estrada's mother, Clara Argentina Castaneda Batres, a successful accountant, is the daughter of a teacher-diplomat.

Estrada could read and write by the age of 5. He used to stand by the window of a school near his home, shouting out answers to the first-grade teacher's questions until she relented and asked Estrada's father to enroll him, according to a profile of Estrada published recently in the Honduran newspaper El Heraldo.

Later, at the San Francisco Institute, an elite Catholic academy in a residential area of Tegucigalpa known as Country Club, Estrada was an academic standout remembered by friends and teachers for winning a poetry reading contest and the 1976 Honduran national science fair -- his project was a homemade seismograph.

Arturo Corrales, a high school friend of Estrada's who later became the presidential candidate of Honduras's small left-of-center Christian Democratic Party, said Estrada's conservative views were already evident in their teenage debates. Estrada would praise the United States for its strong local government and free market system, and needle his friend when he defended the idea of a more European-style "social market economy," Corrales said.

Their only point of agreement, was abortion: He and Estrada agreed that it was morally "wrong," Corrales recalled. But the two Catholic school students never talked about whether abortion should be illegal, Corrales said.

Yet if Estrada was relatively privileged economically and socially, he faced personal obstacles. Estrada's mother left for the United States in 1969 amid a bitter divorce and child custody battle with his father -- she took Estrada's sister; Estrada, then only 8, stayed with his father.

Estrada would not see his mother and sister again until 1974, when he visited her for the first time in the United States. He saw her only two more times before he immigrated to the United States in 1978 against his father's wishes.

Though some backers have suggested Estrada spoke no English when he came to the United States, he actually possessed a rudimentary grasp of the language. Upon his arrival, Estrada's mother and sister conducted a crash course for him, and soon, his skills were adequate to earn a B- in English composition at the State University of New York at Old Westbury, where he spent his freshman year before transferring to Columbia.

He has attained excellent oral advocacy abilities in his second language despite a lifelong struggle with a speech impediment.

Friends say the experience of adjusting to life in the United States reinforced the conservative tendencies Estrada brought with him. In discussing such issues as affirmative action, they say, Estrada appeared influenced by the feeling that he and, before him, his mother had succeeded on their own in the United States, and that others should be able to follow suit.

In a 1998 remark quoted in a USA Today article about the lack of minority Supreme Court clerks, Estrada said, "If there were some reason for the underrepresentation, it would be something to look into . . . but I don't have any reason to think it's anything other than a reflection of trends in society."

An irony of the Bush administration's use of Estrada's appointment to score points with Hispanic voters, Estrada's friends and former colleagues say, is that the Estrada they know would be uncomfortable with the idea. "He's an extremely proud person who would be offended by any of us thinking of him in a certain category," says Paul Capuccio, a Harvard Law School classmate who is now executive vice president and general counsel of AOL Time Warner.

No Paper Trail

Unlike previous Bush nominees who have had to answer tough questions about their writings as legal scholars or lower-court judges, Estrada's career binds him to no particular paper trail. Most of his work consisted of helping to formulate or advocate the legal positions of others: judges, the federal executive branch or private clients.

Those who have known him during his decade and a half in the law offer conflicting views of his open-mindedness, temperament and other more intangible qualifications for the federal appellate bench. They agree that Estrada is politically conservative but are divided over just what kind of conservative he would be on the court: an activist who infuses rulings with his ideology or a restrained jurist who heeds the role of precedent.

The American Bar Association has pronounced Estrada "well-qualified," and several distinguished lawyers, including a number of Democrats, have written letters of endorsement.

One of his most avid supporters is Ron Klain, former chief of staff to Vice President Al Gore, who knew Estrada when both were Supreme Court law clerks.

"I think Miguel Estrada takes the law very seriously. He's a very independent thinker and confident enough to come to his own conclusions, and won't just follow along with the Republican herd," Klain said.

As evidence of Estrada's flexibility, supporters note that, despite his career on the government's side of criminal cases, he took on a Virginia death row inmate's case pro bono in 1999, arguing unsuccessfully before the Supreme Court that the man should get a new trial because he had been denied access to information that would have cast doubt on key evidence against him.

However, privately, many of those who have known Estrada over the years, describe him as an acerbic ideologue who likes to pick fights at the office over political issues and does not suffer fools gladly.

"He has a very intellectual kind of snideness of the kind you see on the Wall Street Journal editorial page," a former colleague says. "I don't think I ever heard him utter a compassionate phrase about someone he was prosecuting."

As evidence of Estrada's reflexive pro-prosecution views, they cite his membership on the board of the Center for the Community Interest, a New York-based nonprofit that advocates tough anti-crime measures, such as anti-loitering ordinances, that Latino civil rights groups have opposed as unfair to minorities.

At the solicitor general's office, Estrada clashed with Paul Bender, a liberal Clinton administration political appointee who served as principal deputy solicitor general.

"I think he lacks the judgment and is too much of an ideologue to be an appeals court judge," Bender told The Washington Post last year. Bender declined to comment for this article.

Meanwhile, though, other former Clinton administration officials, including the respected former solicitor general Seth A. Waxman have stepped forward to say they disagreed with Bender's assessment of Estrada. Last week the White House released excerpts from performance reviews of Estrada's work at the solicitor general's office, signed by Bender, that described Estrada as "outstanding."

Political Crossfire

Estrada was originally nominated in May 2001. But after control of the Senate switched to the Democrats, some Hispanic organizations skeptical of the nomination prevailed upon Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) to delay Estrada's hearing to permit interest groups and Democratic staffers more time to comb his background.

Some of those involved in the effort say their concerns about Estrada's temperament and ideology have been confirmed, but concede that they have turned up no bombshells.

Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are still seething over what they regard as the Republicans' unfair blocking of President Bill Clinton's nominees for the D.C. Circuit -- as well as several of his Hispanic nominees for other courts -- when the GOP controlled the Senate.

"If the White House had looked a little harder and were not so focused on packing the circuit court bench with a narrow ideology, it could have found many qualified nominees," Leahy said, citing the names of three Clinton appointees whose nominations died in the GOP-controlled Senate.

With Republicans gearing up to use the hearing to emphasize Estrada's immigrant success story, Democrats are expected to turn the session into an examination of his ideology and temperament.

But Democrats must proceed gingerly with Estrada to avoid the risk of offending Hispanic voters themselves. For the Democrats to vote him down on ideological grounds, absent solid evidence he is unfit for the court, "would be a huge mistake -- it'll backfire on them," says Brent Wilkes, executive director of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), which has endorsed Estrada.

LULAC is one of several Hispanic groups, including the Hispanic National Bar Association and the Cuban-American National Foundation, to argue that Estrada is a qualified Latino and that he can serve as a role model for others.

"I definitely think he's not supportive of affirmative action, but I don't think any Bush nominee would be," Wilkes said. "We don't want to shoot down their only Hispanic nominee, just to get a white conservative in his place."

The Vermont Judge's ruling yesterday on the federal death penalty was far narrower than the earlier ruling in SDNY. This ruling yesterday essentially was about the procedures at the sentencing hearings, not the broad-based assault on the death penalty found in the earlier case.

I would add a point that appropriate litigation management procedures are necessary for tort cases arising out of terrorism incidents, including consolidation of cases and appropriate limits on punitive and non-economic damages so as both to ensure fair and equitable compensation for victims and to maintain economic stability in the aftermath of a terrorism incident. I realize that is not necessarily on point, but important for the target audience.

Warner Amendment on Contractor Indemnification

Talking Points

The Warner amendment on risk sharing clarifies the ability of federal agencies to indemnify providers of anti-terrorism technologies and services under Public Law 85-804.

The amendment is crafted to avoid interfering with the President's broad discretion to ensure agencies act in a fiscally responsible manner when considering and negotiating indemnification. Preservation of this discretion will enable the Executive Branch to apply the principles of indemnification and tort reform in harmony to effectively address the liabilities associated with deploying anti-terrorism products and services.

- The provisions preserve the President's ability to bound liability and avoid excessive costs that cannot otherwise be reasonably estimated or controlled.

- Agencies would be required to notify Congress within 30 days after they execute a contract clause to provide indemnification.

In contrast to the Warner amendment, the Turner/Davis provisions on risk sharing would create a new and expansive framework for contractor indemnification that significantly increases the potential for excessive liability.

- By authorizing indemnification for acquisitions that arguably go beyond those that are clearly needed to prevent mass disasters, the Turner/Davis provisions encourage contractors to withhold needed anti-terrorism technologies from agencies until they are given broad indemnification.

- The Turner/Davis provisions could also encourage contractors to withhold anti-terrorism technologies from states and localities until broad indemnification is provided, thereby making the federal government the underwriter of Homeland initiatives going well beyond the federal mission. The Warner amendment recognizes the need for state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies and services but also recognizes that this access can be accomplished with a more limited authorization where the government fully controls both the acquisition and the terms of indemnification.

HEADLINE: Judge Altonaga getting Bush nod

BYLINE: by Dan Christensen

BODY:
Fulfilling predictions made even before a citizens panel forwarded her name to Washington in May, the White House has tapped Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Cecilia Maria Altonaga to be the newest U.S. District Court judge in Miami.

A public announcement from the White House finalizing the nomination won't be made until Altonaga passes an FBI background check.

Several sources familiar with the nomination said they were recently notified that Altonaga would be nominated. Attorney Michael Hanzman, whose name was submitted to the White House along with Altonaga's and four others, said he was informed of her selection about 10 days ago in a phone call from an aide to White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales. News of Altonaga's selection comes days after two new judges finally took their places on South Florida's federal bench. By an 82-0 vote, the Senate confirmed Kenneth A. Marra as a U.S. district judge in Fort Lauderdale. Marra had been a Palm Beach Circuit judge. And in a voice vote, it confirmed Miami attorney Jose E. Martinez to a federal judgeship in Miami.

Timothy J. Corrigan was confirmed to a federal district court seat in Jacksonville that same week. Corrigan had been a U.S. magistrate there.

Altonaga, however, appears to face a political fight in the Senate. Through aides, Florida's two senators, Democrats Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, previously have expressed concern about the process that led to the White House's selection of Altonaga. The seat she's up for became vacant when Judge Shelby Highsmith took senior status in March. Neither senator's office returned calls for comment.

Altonaga was not among the original three finalists forwarded to the White House by the Republican-dominated Florida Federal Judicial Nominating Commission. The JNC's recommendations were then-U.S. Attorney Guy Lewis, Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Jerald Bagley and Broward Circuit Judge James I. Cohn.

But the White House rebuffed them all in April and asked the JNC for three new names.

The move stunned the South Florida legal community. It quickly sparked speculation that the White House wanted a Cuban-American candidate to help the president's brother, Gov. Jeb Bush, strengthen his support for re-election in the powerful Cuban-American community.

The JNC then sent three more names to the White House - Altonaga, Broward Circuit Judge Robert A. Rosenberg and Hanzman, a partner at Hanzman & Criden in Miami.

Yet even before that, observers predicted that Altonaga, would be the White House's ultimate choice. That was so even though she wasn't the only Hispanic - or even the only Hispanic woman - on the JNC's list of a dozen finalists for the job.

Altonaga did not return a phone message before deadline on Monday. Of the other potential nominees, only Hanzman and Lewis could be reached. Lewis declined comment.

"Of course, I'm disappointed," Hanzman said. "But I have no doubt that Cecilia is well-qualified and will make an outstanding district judge."

Bill Simon: En Route to Sacramento
By William F. Buckley Jr.
Last weekend there was much brightness in the Simon camp. The lead by Democrat Davis is usually reported at 7 percent. There are Simon sources who say it is reduced to 4 percent. And Bill will remind you, driving back from the fundraiser, that at the equivalent point in Reagan's campaign for governor, His Greatness was behind even further, and ended by winning with 1 million votes. It is late, after a full day, but he talks with enthusiasm, and his finance chairman, Frank Baxter, in the back seat, echoes it, but acknowledges that a great deal depends on cranking up the fundraising.

Leviathan to the Rescue
By Paul Johnson
Imagine a world in which the United States was stricken by a successful series of nuclear, biological, and chemical attacks. Putting aside the appalling loss of American lives this would involve, the global consequences would be horrifying. The world would be plunged into the deepest depression in its history. There would be no power-of-last-resort to uphold international order. Wolf and jackal states would quickly emerge to prey on their neighbors. It would be a world as described by Thomas Hobbes in his Leviathan (1651), in which, deprived of a giant authority figure "to keep them all in awe," civilization would break down, and life, for most of mankind, would be "nasty, brutish and short."

Going with a Winner
By David Pryce-Jones
Arabs are in a bind. Like everybody else, they know that Saddam is indefensible, and puts the whole Arab world to shame. But to say so out loud seems to be another equally painful way of shaming the whole Arab world. They'd like to be rid of Saddam without anyone noticing. So the press is full of anonymous "senior Arab diplomats" maintaining, "There's no support for regime change," while colleagues are furtively preparing for that very eventuality. Double standards are the order of the day. Jordanian parliamentary deputies, for example, have called on "all Arab countries to move collectively and seriously, and to adopt a united stand to confront any aggression against Iraq and to find ways to bring it out of the ordeal." At the same time, Jordan has allowed American military preparations at the base at Mafraq, and is arranging for cheap American-supplied oil to replace subsidized Iraqi oil.

A Duty of Government?
By Ramesh Ponnuru
The libertarians are thinking about foreign policy anew. Libertarians have generally been hostile to intervention abroad; the dominant position has been that military action is permissible only when the United States itself is physically attacked. All sensible people would like to avoid war when possible, of course, but libertarians had additional reasons to oppose it. War is both a vast and horrible government enterprise and a catalyst for expansions of government that, in many cases, outlast the war that occasioned them. Many libertarians therefore defined themselves in opposition to what they styled the "welfare-warfare state."

Worse Than a Farce
By Kate O'Beirne
Having spent years in Iraq at precisely such an endless task, Dr. David A. Kay says that it would take "tremendous resources, actually . . . resources beyond anything I can imagine," to prevent Saddam from thwarting inspections. The totalitarian Iraqi regime did a far better job of keeping track of the inspectors than the inspectors were able to do of keeping track of weapons. A recent analysis of the 280 inspections of facilities and sites that UNSCOM conducted from 1991 to 1998 found that fewer than a half dozen were surprise visits, catching the Iraqi minders off guard. Kay points out that Saddam has spent 20 years and an estimated $40 billion on a weapons-of-mass-destruction program that involves 40,000 Iraqis. To counter these enormous resources, any effective inspection force would be, in Kay's words, "very much like an occupation."

Blix-krieg
By Byron York
Hans Blix, a 74-year-old former Swedish diplomat, is preparing to take on perhaps the most important arms inspections ever. His critics point to the Iraqi nuclear fiasco and ask why a man who missed one of the most extensive illegal arms programs in recent years has been selected to conduct inspections in Iraq today. "He has a history of not being terribly aggressive," says Gary Milhollin, of the Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control. "The Iraqis were given stars for good behavior, when in fact they were making bombs in the rooms next door to the ones the inspectors were going into." Two other nuclear-arms experts, Paul Leventhal and Steven Dolley of the Nuclear Control Institute, have written that while the best arms inspectors are "confrontational, refusing to accept Iraqi obfuscations and demanding evidence of destroyed weapons . . . IAEA was more accommodating, giving Iraqi nuclear officials the benefit of the doubt when they failed to provide evidence that all nuclear weapons components had been destroyed and all prohibited activities terminated."

The Hispanic Republic of Texas
By John J. Miller
No Democrat running for a major statewide office in Texas has won a majority of Anglo votes in 20 years-the last was Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, in 1982. "Back then, everybody was talking about 'Republican realignment,'" says David Hill, Cornyn's pollster. "We did a study looking at the birthrates and migration patterns of different groups. Our conclusion was that the realignment would be undone by the first decade of the 21st century, and now we're here."

Making the World Safe-Period
By John O'Sullivan
Common sense suggests that an Iraqi democracy would therefore need to undergo a longish period of Western tutelage as its various ethnic groups, religions, and social elites learned to cooperate with one another in running a constitutional-democratic government. But the emphasis would be on the "constitutional" rather than the "democratic." In this, it would resemble the Western protectorates in Kosovo and Bosnia, where NATO or the U.N. simply removes from office those elected politicians who affront their liberal sensibilities by running nationalist radio stations or refusing to cooperate in multi-ethnic institutions.

European Communities
By Jay Nordlinger
Albania is struggling to rejoin the world, and the country is as good a friend as America has in Europe, if an unfortunately powerless one. Albanian fondness for America is longstanding, going back to at least 1913, when Woodrow Wilson declared that the country should go its own way, have its independence, instead of being carved up by its neighbors. Albanians speak of Wilson as if he had been president yesterday.

Being Lee Bollinger
By Matthew Continetti
Columbia University's new president, the 56-year-old Lee Bollinger, has a history of associating the good of his students with whatever leftish cause is currently garnering national attention. The typical result of this campus crusade for political correctness is a diminution of the idea of liberal education. Nicholas Lemann has it wrong: By any traditional standard, Lee Bollinger is the worst college president in America.

Stop, Thief!
By Melissa Seckora
In recent times, conservative publications on campus have suffered an unprecedented amount of what might be called censorship by theft. And hardly anyone appears to be bothered. Most irritating is the lack of response from college administrators who apparently care more about political correctness than about the freedom and dignity of students. All over the country, an ugly illiberalism is showing its face.

Plucking on My Mbira
By Jason Steorts
Imagine a college music department and all the familiar images come to mind:
practice rooms containing Steinway pianos, orchestras playing Mozart and Beethoven, harmonic analyses of Bach chorales scrawled across chalkboards. What will not come to mind, unless you spend time in such places, is students discussing topics like "Music and Globalization," "Cultural Studies, Feminist Theory, and the 'New Musicology,'" "Performance and Popular Culture in South Africa," or "The Music of Bebop."

Leagues of Their Own
By Kathryn Jean Lopez
That lesbians play softball is a terribly old stereotype, but few outside of college athletics have heard what it's like for a non-gay girl who wants to play the sport. If you're not crazy about your daughter showering in a very-far-away-from-don't-ask-don't-tell gym shower, high-school and college softball might not be for her.

The libertarians are thinking about foreign policy anew. Libertarians have generally been hostile to intervention abroad; the dominant position has been that military action is permissible only when the United States itself is physically attacked. All sensible people would like to avoid war when possible, of course, but libertarians had additional reasons to oppose it. War is both a vast and horrible government enterprise and a catalyst for expansions of government that, in many cases, outlast the war that occasioned them. Many libertarians therefore defined themselves in opposition to what they styled the "welfare-warfare state."

Worse Than a Farce
By Kate O'Beirne
Having spent years in Iraq at precisely such an endless task, Dr. David A. Kay says that it would take "tremendous resources, actually . . . resources beyond anything I can imagine," to prevent Saddam from thwarting inspections. The totalitarian Iraqi regime did a far better job of keeping track of the inspectors than the inspectors were able to do of keeping track of weapons. A recent analysis of the 280 inspections of facilities and sites that UNSCOM conducted from 1991 to 1998 found that fewer than a half dozen were surprise visits, catching the Iraqi minders off guard. Kay points out that Saddam has spent 20 years and an estimated $40 billion on a weapons-of-mass-destruction program that involves 40,000 Iraqis. To counter these enormous resources, any effective inspection force would be, in Kay's words, "very much like an occupation."

Blix-krieg
By Byron York
Hans Blix, a 74-year-old former Swedish diplomat, is preparing to take on perhaps the most important arms inspections ever. His critics point to the Iraqi nuclear fiasco and ask why a man who missed one of the most extensive illegal arms programs in recent years has been selected to conduct inspections in Iraq today. "He has a history of not being terribly aggressive," says Gary Milhollin, of the Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control. "The Iraqis were given stars for good behavior, when in fact they were making bombs in the rooms next door to the ones the inspectors were going into." Two other nuclear-arms experts, Paul Leventhal and Steven Dolley of the Nuclear Control Institute, have written that while the best arms inspectors are "confrontational, refusing to accept Iraqi obfuscations and demanding evidence of destroyed weapons . . . IAEA was more accommodating, giving Iraqi nuclear officials the benefit of the doubt when they failed to provide evidence that all nuclear weapons components had been destroyed and all prohibited activities terminated."

The Hispanic Republic of Texas
By John J. Miller
No Democrat running for a major statewide office in Texas has won a majority of Anglo votes in 20 years-the last was Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, in 1982. "Back then, everybody was talking about 'Republican realignment,'" says David Hill, Cornyn's pollster. "We did a study looking at the birthrates and migration patterns of different groups. Our conclusion was that the realignment would be undone by the first decade of the 21st century, and now we're here."

Making the World Safe-Period
By John O'Sullivan
Common sense suggests that an Iraqi democracy would therefore need to undergo a longish period of Western tutelage as its various ethnic groups, religions, and social elites learned to cooperate with one another in running a constitutional-democratic government. But the emphasis would be on the "constitutional" rather than the "democratic." In this, it would resemble the Western protectorates in Kosovo and Bosnia, where NATO or the U.N. simply removes from office those elected politicians who affront their liberal sensibilities by running nationalist radio stations or refusing to cooperate in multi-ethnic institutions.

European Communities
By Jay Nordlinger
Albania is struggling to rejoin the world, and the country is as good a friend as America has in Europe , if an unfortunately powerless one. Albanian fondness for America is longstanding, going back to at least 1913, when Woodrow Wilson declared that the country should go its own way, have its independence, instead of being carved up by its neighbors. Albanians speak of Wilson as if he had been president yesterday.

Being Lee Bollinger
By Matthew Continetti
Columbia University's new president, the 56-year-old Lee Bollinger, has a history of associating the good of his students with whatever leftish cause is currently garnering national attention. The typical result of this campus crusade for political correctness is a diminution of the idea of liberal education. Nicholas Lemann has it wrong: By any traditional standard, Lee Bollinger is the worst college president in America.

Stop, Thief!
By Melissa Seckora
In recent times, conservative publications on campus have suffered an unprecedented amount of what might be called censorship by theft. And hardly anyone appears to be bothered. Most irritating is the lack of response from college administrators who apparently care more about political correctness than about the freedom and dignity of students. All over the country, an ugly illiberalism is showing its face.

Plucking on My Mbira
By Jason Steorts
Imagine a college music department and all the familiar images come to mind: practice rooms containing Steinway pianos, orchestras playing Mozart and Beethoven, harmonic analyses of Bach chorales scrawled across chalkboards. What will not come to mind, unless you spend time in such places, is students discussing topics like "Music and Globalization," "Cultural Studies, Feminist Theory, and the 'New Musicology,'" "Performance and Popular Culture in South Africa," or "The Music of Bebop."

Leagues of Their Own

By Kathryn Jean Lopez

That lesbians play softball is a terribly old stereotype, but few outside of college athletics have heard what it's like for a non-gay girl who wants to play the sport. If you're not crazy about your daughter showering in a very-far-away-from-don't-ask-don't-tell gym shower, high-school and college softball might not be for her.

HEADLINE: Judging Michael McConnell

BODY:
When the president and Congress select federal judges, they are deciding, in a sense, what kind of nation this will be. With lifetime tenure and sweeping powers, federal judges are in a unique position to determine the rules by which we live. At their worst, the federal courts have endorsed separate-but-equal racial classifications and the wartime internment of Japanese-Americans. At their best, they dismantled the Jim Crow regime in the South and ended back-alley abortions.

Senators should keep in mind the critical role federal judges play when they consider Michael McConnell, whose nomination for a seat on the United States Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit is now pending, with other Bush administration nominees to come. The Bush administration has ceded its Justice Department to the extreme conservative wing of the Republican Party and has made ideology the primary consideration in picking judges. Its goal is simple: to turn the federal courts into a force for a reactionary shift in society. Senators are no doubt getting weary of asking tough questions at confirmation hearings and of voting "no" on nominees. But they are shirking their responsibility if they vote for nominees who have not demonstrated two things: that they have the personal qualifications necessary to be good judges, and that their judicial philosophies will take the country in the right direction.

On the first point, Mr. McConnell, a law professor at the University of Utah, is clearly qualified.

The second inquiry the Senate must make, however, is whether the nominee's views on substantive legal matters are consistent with the nation's needs. There is no single litmus test to apply, but a constellation of positions to consider on key issues: racial and other kinds of equality, a woman's right to a safe and legal abortion, civil liberties, and federalism.

No judicial nominee could be confirmed today if he or she attacked Brown v. Board of Education, the 1954 ruling striking down racial segregation in schools. But segregation and discrimination can be more oblique. Mr. McConnell disapproves of the Supreme Court's decision in the 1983 Bob Jones University case in which the justices rightly decided that banning interracial dating among the college's students was racial discrimination. He would require the government to subsidize, through tax deductions, schools like Bob Jones. He has also spoken out against the Supreme Court's one-person, one-vote decisions, which overhauled the nation's discriminatory legislative districting.

The Senate must also be highly skeptical of nominees who do not acknowledge a woman's right to abortion. Mr. McConnell has not merely expressed abstract reservations about the Roe v. Wade ruling, but has also actively crusaded against it. He signed a statement arguing that fetuses deserved constitutional protection. Mr. McConnell has promised to follow established precedents in the area, and that is worth something. But that will not help in the many cases appellate courts decide in which there is no binding authority and a judge must seek his own counsel.

Mr. McConnell is no friend of civil liberties. He would tear down the long-established wall separating church and state by allowing direct subsidies to religious schools. He also has an extremely narrow view of the constitutional right to privacy, an important basis for resisting government incursions on the rights of individuals.

On the critical issue of federalism, Mr. McConnell wants to cut back the power of Congress to protect people from things like discrimination, pollution and unsafe working conditions and to insulate state government from lawsuits when they engage in wrongs of that kind.

Professors must be free to take controversial stands. But Mr. McConnell's musings nearly all point in one direction, and that is the reason the administration nominated him. It is the reason the Senate should reject him. ÿhttp://www.nytimes.com

Brett,
Yes. The June 12 Armitage letter closed with the following:

"Importantly, this approach would preserve the President's ability to conduct foreign policy. The Administration opposes the use of blocked assets to fund victim compensation or to satisfy judgments. Using blocked assets would preclude their use to pressure regimes to improve their policies on terroism, risk taxpayer liability for third-party claims against the assets, eliminate their availibility to satisfy current U.S.
Government cliams (currntly more than $2billion), and put at risk diplomatic property." (emphasis added)

We have since learned that we substantially understated the taxpayer liability concerns.

A. VAGUENESS OF STANDARDS

One source of tort law's enduring vitality and resilience is the use of terminology possessing great elasticity. Ineffably vague terms such as negligence, duty, and the reasonable person, serve to minimize or at least to mask the inevitable tension between the often conflicting objectives the law seeks to further. The punitive damages area, as a number of commentators have observed, 149 exhibits this characteristic to a heightened degree. Malice, for example, not only carries the meaning attributed to it in the preceding Section (a meaning that at least is close to the lay understanding), sometimes distinguished as "express" or "actual" malice, 150 but also carries the Pickwickian meaning of "implied" or "legal" malice. 151 Implied malice may be either "implied in fact" or "implied in law." The former is similar to express or actual malice. Malice "implied in fact" assumes that "the devil himself knoweth not the thought of man," 152 and hence, allows inferences drawn from the ÿ[*35]ÿ actor's conduct as proof of a requisite state of mind. 153 Malice "implied in law," on the other hand, has nothing to do with the actor's mental state. It is synonymous with "legal malice" and is simply a legal characterization of the conduct itself. 154 That the defendant's thoughts may have been as innocent as those of the aboriginal parents before the fall provides no defense to the doctrine of legal malice.

Terms such as "willful," "wanton," "conscious indifference," "reckless disregard," and "recklessness" are overlapping and to a substantial extent redundant. Accordingly, they will be referred to collectively as the recklessness group. They may denote a mental state accompanying a defendant's act, but that mental state is different from that of actual malice. They do not suggest that the actor was motivated by a desire to harm anyone; in the usual case falling within the recklessness group, it is not the actor's objective that is questioned, but the means of achieving it. Moreover, in contrast with most cases involving express malice, the identity of the actual victim often will have been unknown to the defendant in advance of the injury. At times the notion conveyed by the recklessness group is similar to that attributed to reckless conduct in Section III: the actor knew or should have known that the contemplated conduct endangered a class of persons that included the actual victim and the burden of avoiding the harm was slight in comparison to the expected loss. On the other hand, some of the terms in the recklessness group may carry subtly different connotations regarding the actor's state of mind. For example, "conscious indifference" suggests actual knowledge of the risk at the time the act was committed. "Reckless disregard" connotes the existence of facts that should have alerted the actor to the risks the act entailed, whether or not the actor was consciously aware of the risks. It suggests that an act was committed by a person who was oblivious to the risks. "Recklessness" subsumes both reckless disregard and conscious indifference, while "wantonness" seems to connote extreme recklessness. 155 To compound ÿ[*36]ÿ the confusion further, the combination of "willful and wanton" in a single category is not uncommon, and the terms "malice" or "aggravated circumstances" frequently are used to encompass this entire set of connotations. 156

Conventionally, courts have viewed negligence, or "mere negligence," as an insufficient basis for awarding punitive damages. 157 But in some states, if a defendant's conduct can be characterized as "gross negligence," punitive damages may be assessed. 158 If this "unhappy term of ill-defined content" 159 represents something other than negligence "with the addition of a vituperative epithet," 160 it suggests that the foreseeable risk of harm exceeded the cost of avoidance by a greater margin than that which defines negligence, but by less than that which defines recklessness. 161 Alternatively, some courts use gross negligence, at least in the context of punitive damages, as a synonym for terms in the recklessness group. 162 Gross negligence thus embodies two sources ÿ[*37]ÿ of uncertainty: whether it is synonomous with other terms in the recklessness group; and, if not, whether it can be distinguished from ordinary negligence.

Finally, the recklessness group also may be used to denote only the actor's state of mind or awareness, without regard to any disproportion-ality that may exist between the expected harm and the cost of avoidance. Conduct that otherwise might be negligent at worst, may be characterized as reckless, grossly negligent, or as accompanied by malice, based solely upon a finding that the actor was or ought to have been aware of the resulting risk of harm. 163 "Recklessness," defined as an awareness that there is some risk of harm, appears with increasing frequency as a standard for punitive damage liability in cases where the defendant would not necessarily have been found negligent in the absence of such awareness. This is particularly true of products liability cases 164 where liability for compensatory damages is based on a theory of strict liability for defective products. 165 This single-dimension interpretation of the recklessness group may be encompassed within the terms "legal malice" 166 or "aggravated circumstances."

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF MEL MARTINEZ
SECRETARY
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

BEFORE THE
UNITED STATES HOUSE COMMITTEE ON FINANCIAL SERVICES

OCTOBER 3, 2002

Chairman Oxley, Ranking Member LaFalce, Distinguished Members of the Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to join you this morning to discuss a major initiative of the Bush Administration: our unprecedented effort to increase homeownership by making the home financing process more transparent, simpler, and less costly.

We are committed to eliminating the homeownership gap that exists today between the minority population and the rest of the country. The President has set a national goal of creating 5.5 million new minority homeowners by the end of this decade. Our comprehensive plan for achieving this combines new initiatives and expanded programs with public/private partnerships focused on making affordable homeownership an option for more families.

The mortgage finance process and the costs of closing are major impediments to homeownership. Every day, Americans enter into mortgage loans – the largest financial obligation most families will undertake – without the clear and useful information they receive with most any other major purchase.

After agreeing to the price of a house, too many families sit down at the settlement table and discover unexpected fees that can add hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars to the cost of their loan. And at that point, they have no viable options. On the spot, the borrower is forced to make an impossible choice: either hand over the extra cash and sign, or lose the house.

Americans spend approximately $50 billion each year on settlement costs. I would guess that most of them do not know precisely how much their mortgage loan will cost them until the eleventh hour, and have little or no opportunity to shop for settlement services. As a result, many homebuyers find the settlement process to be filled with mystery and frustration.

It is time to take the uncertainty out of mortgage financing. This Administration is committed to streamlining the process, so consumers can shop for mortgages and better understand what will happen at the closing table. It is for these reasons that HUD has proposed a major overhaul of the regulations governing the Real Estate Settlement and Procedures Act (RESPA).

RESPA REFORM

RESPA has been a priority of mine since I came to HUD. Shortly after taking office, I was faced with a major RESPA issue: the legality of yield spread premiums, the rate-based lender payments to mortgage brokers. This issue came to a head following an Eleventh Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals decision in Culpepper v. Irwin Mortgage that called into question the legality of these payments under RESPA.

Because the decision potentially jeopardized the legitimate use of these payments to lower upfront settlement costs, HUD issued a further clarification. What became RESPA Policy Statement 2001-1 reiterated our view that as long as the broker's compensation is for goods, facilities, or services, and the total compensation is reasonable, yield spread premiums to the mortgage broker are legal under RESPA.

At the same time, the Department recognized that there were serious disclosure problems involving yield spread premiums. We noted that less-scrupulous brokers often used yield spread premiums to generate additional profits, placing unsuspecting borrowers in higher-rate loans without their knowledge.

In the process of issuing the policy statement, I committed HUD to establishing clearer disclosure rules for mortgage broker fees, and to simplifying and improving the mortgage origination process for everyone involved.

BASIS OF THE REFORM EFFORT

While RESPA, as adopted in 1974, was appropriate for the time, it has not evolved and has not accounted for the many dramatic changes in the lending and housing industries in the past 28 years. The disclosure requirements under RESPA have not been substantially revised in a decade.

And RESPA's promise of reduced settlement costs has yet to be fulfilled.

Reforming RESPA now is the right thing to do. Too many Americans seeking to buy or refinance a home are not as well informed as they need to be. The mortgage origination process is too complicated, too costly, and too much of a mystery for many borrowers. The experts told me that fixing this would be too difficult and too controversial, and our efforts would probably not succeed. But this problem is too important to ignore.

In June, the Administration unveiled a set of principles called the Homebuyer Bill of Rights that will from now on guide the home settlement process. These principles are consumer driven and rooted in the homebuyer's right to know. They stand as the centerpiece of our efforts to empower would-be homeowners – and existing homeowners looking to refinance – through access to mortgage finance information.

The Homebuyer Bill of Rights specifies that:

- Homebuyers have the right to receive settlement cost information early in the process, allowing them to shop for the mortgage product and settlement services that best meet their needs;

- Homebuyers have the right to have the disclosed costs be as firm as possible, to avoid surprises at settlement;

- Homebuyers have the right to benefit from new products, competition, and technological innovations that could lower settlement costs;

- Homebuyers have the right to simplified disclosure and access to better borrower education;

- Homebuyers have the right to know they are protected through vigorous RESPA enforcement and a level playing field for all industry providers.

REV_00151754

With these principles to guide us, we undertook a major reform of the regulatory requirements under RESPA.

After months of consultations with industry groups, consumer advocates, and federal agencies, including an initial review by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), HUD published its reform proposal for public comment on July 29. The comment period is open until October 28, 2002. After a second review by OMB, the final rule will be published.

We believe that this proposal can reduce closing costs by an average of $700 per closing. That kind of savings will allow many more Americans currently priced out of the homebuying market to buy a home. The aggregate could result in a savings to consumers of as much as $8 billion. We also expect our proposal to promote innovation in the marketplace and inspire greater public confidence in the mortgage lending industry.

ELEMENTS OF THE PROPOSED RULE

The Proposed Rule addresses the inadequacies of the existing regulatory scheme by:

- Fundamentally changing the way in which compensation to mortgage brokers is disclosed to borrowers;
- Significantly improving HUD's Good Faith Estimate (GFE) settlement cost disclosure; and
- Removing regulatory barriers to allow the industry the option of offering guaranteed packages of settlement services and mortgage loans to borrowers.

Broker Fees

Specifically, the Proposed Rule significantly improves the disclosure of mortgage broker fees from lenders.

Under current rules, such a payment is frequently reported on the GFE – and later at closing on the HUD-1 – with abbreviations that most consumers are not well informed enough to understand. In addition, the payment is not included in the calculation of broker compensation, nor is it listed as an expense to the borrower. As a result, many borrowers have no idea that they are paying for this in the form of a higher interest rate.

The Proposed Rule would require that all such payments be reported on both the GFE and the HUD-1 as a credit to the borrower toward his or her closing costs.

This means that, when a broker intends to receive any compensation from a lender payment based on the borrower's interest rate, the broker must report it as part of the total origination charge. This preserves the use of rate-based lender payments as a means of paying closing costs while ensuring that brokers cannot use these payments to increase their income without the borrower's knowledge.

REV_00151755

The Good Faith Estimate

The Proposed Rule would revise the GFE to better achieve the law's basic purposes. Current GFE requirements arguably lessen consumer understanding and increase costs by requiring that every charge, however creative, be itemized on the form.

The new GFE would require that the charges of settlement service providers – the lender, broker, title agent/insurer, and other third parties – be combined and disclosed as a single dollar figure for each major category. The Rule would also establish limits or tolerances to provide clearer standards for good faith estimates of most of these charges. Specifically, the Rule establishes a zero tolerance for the loan origination fee and other services provided by the loan originator, and a 10 percent tolerance for services provided by third parties. Some costs are not subject to a tolerance – such items as per diem interest, hazard insurance, and buyer's title insurance, which are outside the control of the loan originator.

These changes to the GFE and the regulatory scheme hold great promise for eliminating duplicative or unnecessary charges, or "junk fees," and will lead to lower settlement costs. We also believe that the new GFE requirements will empower consumers to shop for the best loan to meet their needs; consumers will get the GFE before they have to make a commitment to the lender, giving them time to shop, and the GFE will emphasize the total cost of the loan – the bottom line for the consumer.

Packaging

The Rule permits loan providers to offer guaranteed mortgage packages. This might provide an even better means of encouraging shopping and lowering costs.

Under our packaging proposal, the settlement costs cannot vary for 30 days from the time the offer is made, and the rate can only vary in accordance with an observable index or yardstick. The fact that these packages will consist of two or three numbers at most will permit true price comparison.

Any entity offering such a package may qualify for a safe harbor from RESPA Section 8 scrutiny if it offers the following – at no charge – to a borrower who submits an application:

- A guaranteed package price for all lender-required settlement services;
- A mortgage loan with an interest rate guarantee; and
- A contract for the transaction in the form of a Guaranteed Mortgage Package Agreement.

The key point with our packaging proposal is that the Rule in no way mandates packaging; it simply makes it available as an option. It is not our intention to pick winners or losers in the industry but rather to unleash the creativity of the marketplace.

Injecting greater competition into the mortgage lending process and among settlement services is an important reason for reforming RESPA. When consumers are empowered to shop for the best loan to meet their needs, the market will respond to the competition by lowering closing costs. When closing costs are reduced, home loans will become less expensive and more families will become homeowners.

RESPONSE TO THE RULE

Since publication of the Proposed Rule, we have been heartened by the strong support it has received from numerous industry and consumer groups, and governmental agencies. But, some criticisms about the Rule and its possible impacts have been brought to our attention. Some of these criticisms are based on misconceptions that we are attempting to correct. Others are differences that I think can be bridged. In some cases, we may simply have to agree to disagree.

RESPA ENFORCEMENT

Another feature of the Department's reform effort is stepped-up enforcement.

I have committed new resources toward enforcing RESPA – to address current violations and to make certain that the benefits of the proposed reforms are achieved.

This summer, the Department announced five major settlement agreements with mortgage lenders and service providers, with payments of nearly $2.3 million. HUD has budgeted $1.5 million that is available to investigate RESPA violations. And we are beefing up our investigative staff to further strengthen our RESPA enforcement efforts.

HUD continues to work with other federal and state regulatory agencies, as we did recently with the Federal Trade Commission in the Mercantile Mortgage Case, to complement and leverage our enforcement efforts.

You should also know that the Department will continue to defend its position that one settlement service provider's markup of another provider's fee is a RESPA violation. The Department of Justice has recently filed amicus briefs in three federal circuit courts of appeal taking this position. Markups add to settlement costs and are inconsistent with our goal of assuring transparency in disclosures to consumers.

PREDATORY LENDING

Finally, I would like to say a few words about predatory lending, an issue this Administration – and the Committee Members as well – are deeply concerned about.

REV_00151757

Elderly and minority homeowners are particularly vulnerable to predatory lending practices. These practices include loan "flipping," home improvement scams, unaffordable mortgage loans, repeated refinancings with no borrower benefit, and "packing" life insurance and other products into the loan amount.

We believe that our proposed reforms, and the greater transparency they ensure, will make it more difficult for unscrupulous lenders to abuse borrowers. But I want to be very clear that we do not consider RESPA reform to be a "silver bullet" solution to predatory lending. More must be done to address predatory lending while preserving a source of credit for those with less-than-perfect credit histories.

Consumer education and enhanced financial literacy are potent weapons in combating predatory lending. For this reason, the Department is currently providing $20 million for consumer education and housing counseling, and has requested an additional $15 million for this fiscal year, which we hope you will include in our appropriation this fall.

In addition, HUD has undertaken a number of other initiatives to fight predatory lending. These include:

- Strengthening oversight of FHA-approved mortgage lenders through the "Credit Watch" program, with the goal of identifying problem loans and lenders earlier on;

- Expanding protection of homeowners by proposing performance standards for appraisers of FHA single-family homes under the Department's "Appraiser Watch Initiative"; and

- Developing a rule to stop "flipping" of FHA-insured properties.

HUD has played a key role in the Baltimore predatory lending task force. The combined efforts of federal, state, and local authorities, as well as profit and nonprofit organizations, has led to increased consumer education, restructured loans, and a large number of indictments. We believe that this approach can and will serve as a model for other areas targeted by predatory lenders.

CONCLUSION

We believe that the Department has developed a well-crafted Rule. We look forward to reviewing the comments offered by the mortgage lending industry, consumers, and others that might provide the basis for further changes. To be truly effective, the final Rule will require the full participation of each of these interests; therefore, we need to know whether the approaches we have proposed are the right ones – and if not, what alternatives may work better.

I am committed to creating a homebuying and mortgage finance process grounded in transparency and simplicity. By reforming the rules governing the purchase and financing of a home, we will create new opportunities for first-time homebuyers, keep the American dream of homeownership alive for more families, and inspire greater public confidence in the mortgage lending industry.

I would again like to thank the Committee for the opportunity to meet with you today. I appreciate your continued support of the Department's efforts, and I welcome your continued counsel as we work together on behalf of the American people.

FINANCE
Bush Asks Terrorism Insurance Conferees To Finish Fri.
President Bush today asked conferees working on terrorism reinsurance legislation to conclude a deal by Friday. Several participants at today's meeting, which included key conferees such as Senate
Banking Chairman Sarbanes, Banking ranking member Phil Gramm,R-Texas, Sen.
Christopher Dodd,
D-Conn., and House Financial Services Chairman Oxley, indicated the conference might be energized by the prodding from Bush. Sarbanes reported after the session that White House officials appeared more committed to working with conferees, and Dodd said he was optimistic a deal could be reached

as early as Thursday. The senior conferees will meet again later today with senior White House staff to try to build momentum. "We had a very good discussion," Bush said afterward. He asserted there are "over $15.5 billion worth of construction projects" held up because of a lack of insurance and "300,000 people whose jobs aren't going forward." Nevertheless, participants indicated today's meeting featured lots of good will but little substantive progress. And Gramm, while saying he thought agreement could be reached by Friday, nevertheless insisted that the course for action was limited. He said conferees must accept previous language on legal liability * the thorniest outstanding issue * agreed to last year by Gramm, Sarbanes and Dodd. The draft measure containing that language was never introduced, because Senate Majority Leader Daschle objected to it. The language would have insulated companies and businesses from having to pay punitive damages associated with future terrorist acts. After concurrence on that, other areas of discord could be bridged, Gramm suggested. Although conferees have never officially met, the lawmakers suggested they could close in on a deal this week without a formal session. White House Press Secretary Ari Fleischer said a deal is "within reach, and the president want to make it happen." * by Keith Koffler

Here are the states where we have Bush letters:

Texas
Minnesota
South Dakota
Georgia
Iowa
Missouri
Arkansas
Colorado

Do you agree these are the states we should suppress?

Hey. In an NEC principals' meeting this morning, we decided it made sense to ask for an additional 5 minutes of pre-brief time for tomorrow before the terrorism insurance event. Karl, Josh, and Larry were all involved in the decision to ask for it. So I guess we're asking for pre-brief to start at 10:55 AM, rather than 11 AM.

Is there anything more you need from me for this request?

Subject: LRM PTM160 - - VETERANS AFFAIRS Qs and As on HR4939 - Veterans Medicare Payment Act of 2002

Good afternoon,

Could you please consider Question 8 (reprinted below) today or Thursday, and let me know (a) if you agree it's not really mandatory, and (b) the prospects for this moving this year.

Thanks,
Thad

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

Post-Hearing Questions for
Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
From the Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Regarding the July 16, 2002, Hearing
On H.R. 4939

Question 1. The Committee received a report dated July 12, 2002, from Secretary Principi revealing that about 300,000 veterans are now waiting for VA primary care appointments for six months or more. If H.R. 4939 were to become law and begin to move funds into VA care, to what extent would these funds enable VA to reduce the current backlog of veterans waiting for VA health care services?

Response: The Administration feels that H.R. 4939 may not actually increase VA resources or veterans' access to care. When the Department acquires new funding streams, those increased funds are typically offset against the appropriations that VA would otherwise receive. In that event, VA would not gain permanent increased funding from the measure. In addition, if more veterans were encouraged to use VA as a result of this bill, the cost to VA would possibly be significantly more than the transfer from the Medicare Trust Funds, since the Part B premium finances only a portion of Part B costs.

Question 2. We understand that one of the options for the Priority 7 Medicare eligible veteran might be for VA to cease providing pharmaceutical services, but continue providing other necessary care. What would be the policy basis for this view, and what would its intended result be in your estimation?

Response: VHA is not currently considering this option. Presumably, the policy basis to support a change in law to allow this would be cost savings and to place these veterans on an equal footing with other Medicare-eligible individuals who are not veterans.

Question 3. Last year, our Health Subcommittee Chairman introduced H.R. 2792, a bill that would have established a pilot program to coordinate benefits involving veterans who are eligible for both VA and Medicare benefits. With that pilot, participating veterans would have received inpatient care under Medicare, with coordination by VA for continuing and follow-up services. VA opposed this idea at that time. Now, considering that VA is nearly overwhelmed with Medicare-eligible veterans, has the VA's view of this proposal changed?

Response: VA still opposes this proposal. The proposal would create a disparate eligibility status based on a veteran's third party coverage and priority group. We remain concerned that the program would undermine our ability to maintain existing services, especially specialized medical services and programs for veterans. Limiting care to VA general medical and surgical services would mean that veterans needing specialty health services would still need to come to VA for such care, but they would not have access to VA's comprehensive continuum of care, needed for their complex care needs. The health care covered by this proposal would be inpatient care for non-service-connected conditions. A veteran currently receiving care for a service-connected condition, for which VA does not or cannot contract locally, would also be forced to receive care in multiple locations. These types of disparities are not consistent with our goals and strategies of improving access, convenience, and timeliness of VA health care to all eligible veterans.

Question 4. Please give the Committee a general description of the pilot plan that was authorized by a prior Appropriations Acts and implemented in the Viera clinic in Representative Dave Weldon's district? How did that pilot project differ from the proposal made in H.R. 2792?

Response: Please see the Attachment to this set of responses.

Question 5. With all the pressure now on VA, with thousands of veterans waiting for outpatient appointments in Florida, and with nearly 300,000 nationwide who are waiting, according to your own report, have VA's views on this coordination idea changed any in the last year, and if so, what do you support?

Response: We have not changed our view with respect to the coordination idea proposed in H.R. 2792. We do not believe that improvements to coordination of care can be achieved by the approach presented within the bill.

Question 6. If the bill, H.R. 4939, were enacted, and Part B eligible veterans enrolled in VA became more aware that their personal funds were supporting the system they had chosen to deliver their care, do you believe that these veterans might stay with VA and reduce their joint reliance on VA and private providers under Medicare, or would their joint use of both public and private systems continue as under the current system?

Response: H.R. 4939 would require a transfer to VA from Medicare of twelve times the monthly Medicare Part B premium for each veteran enrolled in Medicare Part B who receives any outpatient care from VA. These veterans do not lose eligibility to receive care under Part B from any non-VA private-sector provider. This bill would simply establish a mechanism whereby VA would receive from Medicare limited reimbursement for care provided to Medicare-eligible veterans. We do not believe that H.R. 4939 would provide sufficient incentive for veterans to change their current arrangements for receiving health care, whether from VA or from non-VA providers, which would be based on numerous other factors in addition to third-party reimbursement considerations.

Question 7. The Disabled American Veterans (DAV) has recommended to the Committee that, for Congress to more fully address VA's funding problems, the VA should shift VA health care from a discretionary funding program to a mandatory program. The Ranking Member and I introduced H.R. 5250 on July 26, 2002, that would achieve this goal (bill attached).

Response: Not a question, but rather a lead-in to question 8.

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

Question 9. DAV testified that Medicare eligible veterans should retain the option under H.R. 4939 to choose VA health care and continue their private sector Medicare coverage as well. What, if any, problems might occur from an open-choice option such as this?

Response: The largest problem that may occur from an open-choice option would be negative outcomes from a lack of coordinated care. If veterans choose to receive some of their care from non-VA providers and the rest from VA providers, the current problems of duplicated care and the provision of unnecessary services may be exacerbated.

Question 10. In order to decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939, DAV suggested that only Priority Group 7 veterans be subjected to any Medicare participation plan with VA. Do you generally agree with this view, and why or why not?

Response: We do not believe that subjecting only priority group 7 veterans to a Medicare participation plan with VA would decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939. Medical care appropriations are available for the care of priority group 7 veterans. So, should Medicare funds become available for their care, we would expect Congress to propose an appropriation offset.

Question 11. The American Legion suggested that VA use the Indian Health Service (IHS) as a model for becoming a Medicare provider. IHS does not receive a transfer of the monthly Part B premium, but instead bills Medicare directly on a case-by-case basis for services rendered, or works within current Medicare managed-care plan. Would the IHS model work better for VA than my proposal under H.R. 4939, and why?

Response: The IHS Medicare reimbursement model would allow for a higher level of reimbursement for covered services, and, for that reason, we believe it is preferable to the system of reimbursement proposed in H.R. 4939.

Question 12. How many veterans enrolled in VA health care are currently Medicare eligible? If these veterans received all of their care from Medicare, what would the cost be to the Medicare program to provide the same level of health care to them?

Response: For FY 2002, VA is projecting approximately 3 million Medicare-eligible veteran enrollees (proxy = age 65 and over). Assuming VA service utilization rates and applying Medicare allowable charges, we estimate VA expenditures of $7 billion for Medicare covered services. By 2012, this group is estimated to increase to 4.35 million enrollees with estimated VA expenditures of $12.7 billion for Medicare covered services. We are unable to estimate costs to Medicare if these veterans were to receive all their health care under Medicare rather than receiving some or all through the VA health care system.

Question 13. Given the aging of the veteran population, within another few years, a likely majority of VA's patients will be eligible for Medicare. As time goes by, do you believe that VA-Medicare coordination will be seen as a more realistic possibility, or do you see VA and CMS maintaining separate programs for the foreseeable future?

Response: The mission of the Veterans Health Administration is to provide high quality, accessible healthcare to eligible veterans. In order to maximize the medical care benefits and services provided to veterans, VA strongly supports coordination of benefits with other federal programs, including Medicare. The reality is, however, that Medicare is not sufficient by itself to meet all veterans' needs. A substantial number of veterans are under 65 years old or have service-connected and special disabilities requiring services not readily available outside VHA. Moreover, VA's pharmacy benefits program has played a crucial role in driving the recent increased demand for access to VA health care. Medicare, of course, has no prescription benefit coverage, and this makes the VA health care system particularly attractive to veterans over age 65. Therefore, there will be a continued need for a separate veterans healthcare system in the foreseeable future. Over time, I believe that opportunities for health care coordination with the Department of Health and Human Services will emerge. To this end, VA has established the position of Deputy Under Secretary for Health Policy Coordination, who will explore and oversee such opportunities for coordination.

Question 14. Have you consulted with the President's Task Force on Veterans Health Care on Medicare-VA relationships? What was the nature of any consultations?

Response: In informal talks between the co-chairs of the President's Task Force (PTF) and myself, we preliminarily discussed the concept of a Medicare collaboration project along the lines of a capitation program. Under such a program as discussed, VA would receive a fixed rate of reimbursement in return for providing an eligible veteran's health care. This would allow veterans to use their earned Medicare eligibility in receiving care from VA. Payment by Medicare of a fixed, capitated rate would limit liability against the Medicare trust fund. Chapter 4 of the PTF's interim report contains discussion of possible Medicare reimbursement programs.

Question 15. VA has been working on various planning scenarios this year to deal with the burgeoning demands on the system. Can you review for the Committee some of the options VA may be considering in respect to dealing with this growth in demand, including their expected advantages to the system?

Response: VA is currently reviewing several different scenarios as we develop the FY 2004 budget and the FY 2003 VERA allocation methodology. However, all of these scenarios are pre-decisional and it would be premature to release them at this time.

Question 16. The VFW alluded to several primary factors in its testimony that the VHA believes may have undermined the success of DoD's Medicare Subvention pilot program, authorized under the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. VFW proposes that there be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA; that the level of effort requirement be eliminated; and that VA in effect be treated no differently than any other Medicare health care provider. Should we consider some of these points as we develop future legislation to authorize a Medicare subvention pilot program?

Response:

In their testimony, the VFW mentioned several points that were crucial to a successful Medicare subvention program.

- Subvention must be implemented uniformly nation-wide.
- There must be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA.
- The Level of Effort (LOE) requirement must be eliminated.
- The CMS capitation or payment formula must be adjusted to accommodate medical services actually provided by VA as opposed to only those currently covered under Medicare.

- Full appropriation support must be maintained with absolutely no reduction in funding as a consequence of subvention funding.

These points, as well as all lessons learned from the DoD Medicare subvention demonstration, must be considered in considering a VA Medicare initiative. There are significant differences between the VA and DoD health care delivery systems and the populations they serve that could mitigate against some of the problems reported by DoD. Therefore, it is not clear that some of the problems DoD encountered would affect VA to the same degree.

Question 17. Beyond the specifics of H.R. 4939 or of other Medicare subvention measures now before Congress, should a relationship between VA and CMS regarding dual eligible veterans be stimulated between these institutions, and why or why not?

Response: Coordination of the federal health care benefits provided by VA, DoD and HHS programs should be aggressively pursued. Coordination of benefits will allow maximal delivery of healthcare services with the minimum federal budget appropriations. Furthermore, coordination of benefits for dual eligible beneficiaries could potentially maximize efficiency and reduce duplication of services, and improve healthcare quality and safety.

Question 18. Title 38, United States Code, Section 111 authorizes some veterans to be reimbursed for travel costs, but the mileage allowance is inadequate at only 11 cents per mile. What are your views on the role of VA's beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care?

Response: The Beneficiary travel program serves as a means to assist in defraying the cost of travel expenses for veterans with special eligibility or those with low incomes when the travel is in conjunction with scheduled appointments. Currently, demand for VA health care is at an all time high. The number of veterans enrolled in the VA health care system currently exceeds the Department's available resources to provide timely access to quality health care. Due to the current demand for VA health care benefits, the Department cannot endorse any proposal that would divert funding away from medical care for veterans. Therefore, utilizing the beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care would create a false impression of system capacity and further compound VA's access problem.

Question 19. Would VA support increased beneficiary travel mileage allowance for service-disabled veterans in rural areas, or for those who are poor?

Response: The current VA beneficiary travel policy provides travel reimbursement benefits for service-disabled veterans and those with low incomes, regardless of geographic residence. The increase in demand for VA health care benefits and subsequent pressures on the medical care appropriation preclude the Department from endorsing any additional health care benefit expenditures at this time.

Attachment: Response to Question 4

Issue: Question #4 from the subject post hearing questions asks for a general description of the East Central Florida contracting pilot program and for a comparison of that pilot to the one in current legislation.

Discussion: In the VA's 2000 Appropriations Act, Congress directed VA to continue an inpatient hospitalization program (ECF Pilot Program), which had been piloted between June 1998 and September 1998. The pilot program participants consisted of a small group of veterans determined not to have specialty needs who were enrolled and actively receiving their primary care from the VA interim clinic in Palm Bay (Brevard County), Florida. Findings from the pilot program concluded that contracting with the private sector could be cost-effective under appropriate conditions.

On August 1, 2000, the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II was initiated. A large multi-specialty outpatient clinic (Viera OPC) was activated in July 1999 to replace the small interim Palm Bay primary care clinic. The Viera OPC activation significantly increased clinic capacity and, therefore, the number of veterans accessing VA outpatient health care services in ECF, as well as those potentially eligible for hospitalization. During the pilot program veterans who were enrolled to receive primary care at the Palm Bay clinic were eligible to receive inpatient services in the community via contract. When Phase II was initiated, veterans enrolled and actively receiving care at the Viera OPC were given options of where they could receive needed hospitalization (as determined by their VA primary care physician) as part of the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II.

Veterans seeking care for their service-connected conditions could elect inpatient hospitalization either at a VA hospital or through VA contracts with local non-VA hospitals at VA expense. In addition, veterans with no other form of health coverage (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) were eligible to receive care with VA contract hospitals in the community. Veterans with other inpatient hospitalization options (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) could select care at a VA facility, or could elect to use their other health coverage and self refer to hospitals in the community.

For both the original ECF Pilot and the Phase II Hospitalization Programs, patient demographics, unit costs, patient satisfaction, and program utilization were compared with patients receiving equivalent care at the parent VA facility at Tampa.

Results: Costs to operate the ECF Phase II Hospitalization Program were significantly higher than the costs reported for the ECF Pilot Program. While contracted hospital costs in the ECF Pilot Program were only approximately 85.5 percent of what might have been expended for hospitalization at existing VA facilities, contract costs during the Phase II program were approximately 33 percent higher than the cost of equivalent VA care. A number of factors are believed to have contributed to these differences.

Demographics and the health status between the two eligible populations were significantly different. During the Pilot Program, only primary care patients treated at the interim Palm Bay Clinic were included in the pilot. This likely excluded the more complex patients with multiple diagnoses. With the opening of the Viera multi-specialty clinic, access to a range of specialty care services greatly expanded. This increased the total of number of veterans seeking care in the ECF area as well as the complexity of the patient care base. A 'case mix' comparison was performed to evaluate the complexity/ degree of sickness between those admitted under the Pilot Program and those that were admitted as part of the Phase II Program. The patients admitted during the Pilot Program had a case mix of 1.10. Those admitted during the Phase II Program had a case mix of 1.29, i.e., were more complex. Another very significant difference was age. During the Pilot Program, the average patient admitted was 65 years. In contrast, during the Phase II Program, the age of the veterans admitted to a private sector contract hospital was 57 years of age. This leads us to conclude that the patients that were admitted during the Phase II program, although younger, represented a sicker/ more complex population.

Other factors contributing to the increase in contracted costs in the Phase II program might be attributed to private sector billing practices as well as methods used to determine VA inpatient costs for comparable care. Lessons learned from the ECF Pilot Program (phase I) resulted in an improved cost accounting methodology for the Phase II program. For instance, it was not unusual to receive bills from private sector hospitals six (6) months to one year after the results of the pilot program report had been published. For costing purposes during the ECF Phase II reporting period, we elected to include only the costs of patients that had been admitted through June 2001 and that we felt represented a 'completed' bill. In this way, we hoped to represent a truer cost than during the pilot.

In addition, the methodology used to calculate VA inpatients costs changed between the Pilot program and the Phase II Program. During the pilot program, we had no VA method for comparing VA inpatient costs with private sector costs using Diagnostic Related Grouping (DRG). DRG costs were approximated using a detailed mathematical formula based on Medicare Costs. Between the Pilot Program and the Phase II Program, VA implemented the Decisions Support System (DSS). This enabled us to extract the specific VA costs of treating patients by DRG category.

SUMMARY OF KEY FINDINGS: Results of the ECF Phase II Program did not support the premise that contracting with hospitals in the private sector was more cost-effective than admitting the veteran to an available VA facility. While the ECF Pilot Program experienced private sector costs that were 85.5 percent of VA costs, the cost of an inpatient admission during the ECF Phase II Program was approximately 33 percent higher than admission to an existing VA facility. While this conclusion is inconsistent with previous findings of the ECF Pilot Program, we believe there are specific instances where contracting for private sector care would be a more cost-effective alternative. For example, this would be the case when the capital investment costs to renovate existing facilities or to build new facilities are factored into the equation. VHA has been cited by GAO studies and others for expending millions of dollars maintaining old, under-used facilities that do not meet basic life safety requirements. In making decisions about whether to continue to maintain these facilities and invest the capital required to bring them up to current standards, the cost-effectiveness of contracting should be thoroughly analyzed especially in light of an overall declining veteran population. The cost of contracting out the inpatient portion of care may well be more cost-effective in instances when VA construction or a major renovation is required to accommodate inpatient care.

NEXT STEPS: Effective December 1, 2001, modifications were made to the inpatient hospitalization program, ECF Phase III due to budget constraints. Changes will help offset the increasing total costs of operating the program. Contracts were awarded to one medical/surgical provider and one mental health care provider in Brevard County for non-emergent inpatient care only. Veterans without alternate health care coverage (i.e., Medicare, Insurance, HMO) will be referred by primary care providers at the Viera OPC to these facilities for non-emergent hospitalization. Emergency admissions for service connected conditions will be covered by the existing fee basis program, or through emergency care provisions as outlined in the Millennium Bill for veterans with no other form of health care. Although the Phase III Program was only recently initiated, we believe the number of veterans using this program will be significantly reduced and, therefore, the total cost of operating the program will be manageable.

Comparison of the ECF Pilot to H.R. 2792.

Comparisons with the ECF pilot are noted in bold.

SEC. 5. PILOT PROGRAM FOR COORDINATION OF AMBULATORY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1725 the following new section:

`Sec. 1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program

`(a) PILOT PROGRAM- Subject to the availability of funds specified in subsection (g), the Secretary shall carry out a pilot program in not more than four geographic areas of the United States to improve access to, and coordination of, inpatient care of eligible veterans. Under the pilot program, the Secretary, subject to subsection (b), shall pay certain costs described in subsection (b) for which an eligible veteran would otherwise be personally liable. The authority to carry out the pilot program shall expire on September 30, 2006.

`(b) PAYMENT OF COSTS- In carrying out the program described in subsection (a), the Secretary may pay the costs authorized under this section for hospital care and medical services furnished on an inpatient basis in a non-Department hospital to an eligible veteran participating in the program. Such payment may cover the costs for applicable plan deductibles and coinsurance and the reasonable costs of such inpatient care and medical services not covered by any applicable health-care plan of the veteran, but only to the extent such care and services are of the kind authorized under this chapter.

East Central Florida Hospitalization Program (ECF) pays cost of care for eligible patients at contract facilities. Contract is based on discounted Medicare rate. VA does not pay any patient co-payments or deductibles. Non service connected and service connected veterans treated for non-service connected conditions who have health plans (i.e. HMO , Medicare and/or private insurance) are not eligible under the program.

Eligible patients*: those veterans enrolled and receiving care at the Brevard/Viera OPC during the past 24 months who

- are not covered by a health care plan and need admission for a non-emergent condition or
- service -connected veterans being treated for a non-emergent service connected conditions

The Secretary shall limit the care and services for which payment may be made under the program to general medical and surgical services and shall require that such services may be provided only upon preauthorization by the Secretary.

ECF covers medical, surgical and psychiatric non-emergent admissions. Emergent admissions are covered under provisions of Millenium Bill or fee basis authority

`(c) ELIGIBLE VETERANS- (1) A veteran described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1710(a) of this title is eligible to participate in the pilot program if the veteran--

`(A) is enrolled to receive medical services from an outpatient clinic operated by the Secretary which is (i) within reasonable proximity to the principal residence of the veteran, and (ii) located within the geographic area in which the Secretary is carrying out the program described in subsection (a);

`(B) has received care under this chapter within the 24-month period preceding the veteran's application for enrollment in the pilot program;

ECF same

`(C) as determined by the Secretary before the hospitalization of the veteran (i) requires such hospital care and services for a non-service-connected condition, and (ii) could not receive such services from a clinic operated by the Secretary; and

`(D) elects to receive such care under a health-care plan (other than under this title) under which the veteran is entitled to receive such care.

`(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to reduce the authority of the Secretary to contract with non-Department facilities for care of a service-connected disability of a veteran.

ECF –Service Connected veterans are included in ECF program and can elect hospitalization at either a VA hospital or contract non-VA facility for a non-emergent service connected condition

`(3) Notwithstanding subparagraph (D) of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall ensure that not less than 15 percent of the veterans participating in the program are veterans who do not have a health-care plan.

ECF- approximately 80 % of veterans currently participating in program have no health plan.

`(d) CASE MANAGEMENT- As part of the program under this section, the Secretary shall, through provision of case-management, coordinate the care being furnished directly by the Secretary and care furnished under the program in non-Department hospitals to veterans participating in the program.

ECF – has a full time RN who case manages every patient approved for hospitalization at a contract non-VA facility

`(e) DESIGNATION OF PARTICIPATING SITES- (1) In designating geographic areas in which to establish the program under subsection (a), the Secretary shall ensure that--

`(A) the areas designated are geographically dispersed;

`(B) at least 70 percent of the veterans who reside in a designated area reside at least two hours driving distance from the closest medical center operated by the Secretary which provides medical and surgical hospital care; and

ECF – Brevard/Viera Clinic is located 115 miles (2.25 hours) from West Palm Beach VA, 131 miles (2.5 hours) from Tampa VA and 169 miles (3 hours) from Gainesville VA. At least 70% of current patients reside 2 or more hours from a VA inpatient facility

`(C) the establishment of the program in any such area would not result in jeopardizing the critical mass of patients needed to maintain a Department medical center that serves that area.

`(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B), the Secretary may designate for participation in the program at least one area which is in proximity to a Department medical center which, as a result of a change in mission of that center, does not provide hospital care.

`(f) REPORTS- (1) Not later than September 30, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience in implementing the pilot program under subsection (a).

`(2) Not later than September 30, 2005, the Secretary shall submit to those committees a report on the experience in operating the pilot program during the first two full fiscal years during which the pilot program is conducted. That report shall include--

`(A) a comparison of the costs incurred by the Secretary under the program and the cost experience for the calendar year preceding establishment of the program at each site at which the program is operated;

The methodology for this should be determined well before the pilot programs begin. This process is much more complex than it may seem. ECF admissions for FY 2001 reflected inpatient costs at contract facilities to be approximately 33% higher than at a VA facility.

`(B) an assessment of the satisfaction of the participants in the program; and

ECF-92% of participants rate overall satisfaction with ECF program as good or excellent .

`(C) an analysis of the effect of the program on access and quality of care for veterans.

`(g) FUNDING LIMITATIONS- (1) The total amount expended for the pilot program in any fiscal year (including amounts for administrative costs) may not exceed $50,000,000.

`(2) Any expenditure of funds for the pilot program shall be made from amounts in the Medical Care Collections Fund attributable to collections under section 1729 of this title. No funds may be expended to support the purposes of this section from any other funds available to the Secretary for the delivery of health care services to veterans, including funds appropriated or otherwise available for the care and treatment of veterans who require specialized care and resources.

`(h) HEALTH-CARE PLAN DEFINED- For purposes of this section, the term `health-care plan' has the meaning given that term in section 1725(f)(3) of this title.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1725 the following new item:

`1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program.'.

9/30/02 DRAFT

Tort Reform and Federalism: the Supreme Court Talks, Bush Listens
By Allison H. Eid

After a six-decade hiatus, the U.S. Supreme Court has reentered the federalism debate with a bang. The Court's "New Federalism" decisions have reinvigorated federalism norms in constitutional jurisprudence across a broad array of doctrinal categories, including the Tenth Amendment, the Eleventh Amendment, and the Interstate Commerce Clause. Where this movement will end is anyone's guess, but its beginnings are clear. The Court's message appears to be that the federal government should think twice before it injects federal regulations into a state's business.

While the Court's audience appears primarily to be Congress, there is no question that the Bush Administration is listening as well. As it should. The President is not constitutionally empowered to pass legislation, of course, so his authority is not directly implicated by the New Federalism decisions. But in many ways he is the legislator-in-chief. His position at the national bully pulpit, coupled with his power of the veto, make him a major player in federal policymaking. His legislative agenda needs to be sensitive to the Court's "New Federalism" jurisprudence. Otherwise, he risks sacrificing some of his key legislative priorities on the New Federalism alter.

Take the President's position on tort reform. This issue has the President in something of a bind. On the one had, tort reform at the federal level is an important issue to Republicans; in fact, it is one of the few unfinished pieces of business left in the 1994 Contract With America. The President used his support for federal tort reform measures to distinguish himself from Al Gore during the 2000 campaign. On the other hand, the President is a former governor who says he is committed to principles of federalism, and tort law is an area of regulation that has traditionally been left to the states. The critical question is whether the President can deliver on his campaign commitments on federal tort reform while remaining loyal to his federalism principles – principles that seem to mirror the Court's recent New Federalism decisions.

The President has not shied away from this balancing act. Last summer, he delivered a major speech in North Carolina in which he outlined his plan to reform medical malpractice law – a plan essentially identical to the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low-cost, Timely Healthcare (HEALTH) Act of 2002, which passed by a 217-203 vote in the Republican-controlled U.S. House of Representatives in late September (the legislation faces a much stiffer hurdle in the Democratic-controlled Senate). The HEALTH Act would, among other things, 1) limit non-economic damages to $250,000 while leaving economic damages unlimited (section 4(a) & (b)); 2) abolish joint and several liability (section 4(d)); 3) place a variable cap on contingency fees (section 5); 4) limit punitive damages to twice economic damages or $250,000, whichever is greater (section 7(b)(2)); and 5) require a suit to be brought within three years of the date of injury or one year after the claimant discovers or should have discovered the injury, which comes first (section 3).

The HEALTH Act would apply to any "health care lawsuit" – defined as "any health care liability claim concerning the provision of health care goods or serves affecting interstate commerce" filed against a health care provider or other health organization – filed in state or federal court (section 9(7)). It would largely preempt state law on the subject (section 11), but – in an obvious bow to federalism concerns – it would preserve any state statute that caps the amount of compensatory or punitive damages, regardless of the amount of the cap (section 11(c)(1)).

What is significant about the President's support of the HEALTH Act is not the fact that he gave it but how he gave it. In his North Carolina speech, the President clearly anticipated that there would be objections to his plan based on federalism concerns. He stated: "People say, well, is [medical malpractice] a federal responsibility?" Not surprisingly, the President answered "yes." "It's a national problem," he declared, "that requires a national solution. The federal government ought to set a minimum federal standard to reform the medical liability system."

He then went on to lay out the case for such federal intervention, essentially summarizing a report issued that same day by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services entitled "Confronting the New Health Care Crisis: Improving Health Care Quality and Lowering Costs by Fixing Our Medical Liability System" (http://aspe.hhs.gov/daltcp/reports/litrefm.htm). The HHS report could easily be mistaken for a brief in support of the legislation filed with the U.S. Supreme Court, with President Bush taking the lead at oral argument.

The Administration's strategy in defense of federal intervention is two-fold. First, it argues that the federal limitations on medical malpractice suits are justified by the expenditure of federal funds on health care. The Administration points to the fact that the federal government provides direct care to members of the armed forces, veterans, and patients served by the Indian Health Service, in addition to funding Medicare and Medicaid. It also points to the fact that the federal government provides tax breaks to workers who obtain health insurance through their employers. The Administration estimates that the federal government would save at least $25 billion a year in taxpayers' money if its proposed medical malpractice reforms were put in place. "[A]ny time a malpractice lawsuit drives up the cost of health care, it affects taxpayers. It is a federal issue," the President declared.

In essence, the Administration is making a Spending Clause argument – i.e., since we put up the funds, we can put some strings on how those funds are spent. The Court has already said such strings, if reasonably related to the aim of the expenditure, are just fine (South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203 (1987)).

Secondly, the Administration makes an Interstate Commerce Clause argument. The HHS report and the President's speech are chalked full of examples of physicians who have been forced to move to other states – or to close up shop altogether – due to hikes in malpractice premiums, forcing patients to drive hundreds of miles across state lines to find health care. The Administration is making the argument, in essence, that excessive malpractice litigation increases in malpractice premiums, which in turn force physicians and patients to cross state lines. The Administration hopes that all of this adds up to a "substantial effect" on interstate commerce – the test expounded upon by the Court in United States v. Lopez (514 U.S. 549 (1995)) and United v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2002)).

There are several rejoinders to the Administration's case. The Spending Clause argument would appear to go only so far as federal funds are spent. The scope of the HEALTH Act, however, extends to all "health care lawsuits" – not just those brought by or against recipients of federal funds, either direct or indirect.

Along these same lines, the Court made it clear in the Lopez and Morrison cases that the regulated activity must be "economic" in nature to qualify for regulation under the Interstate Commerce Clause – a test that gun possession near a school (Lopez) and violence directed toward women (Morrison) both flunked. The success or failure of the Administration's argument depends on how one defines the regulated activity in the HEALTH Act. If the regulated activity is characterized as the infliction of personal injury, that activity would not seem particularly "economic" in nature. On the other hand, the physician is receiving compensation for his or her services – a characterization much closer to the "economic" realm.

The significance of the Administration's approach is not that it is presenting a bullet-proof legal defense of the legislation, because it is not. Any time the federal government regulates in an area traditionally governed by the states, a significant federalism challenge can and will almost certainly be mounted. The point is that the Administration is crafting a legal strategy that it hopes will bear fruit if the legislation is eventually passed and challenged. It is listening to the Court and thinking twice before diving into the federal tort reform debate.

Moreover, the President's respect for federalism concerns runs contrary to all of the institutional pressures of his job. Indeed, prior to the New Federalism decisions, the prevailing wisdom in the legal academy (and echoed in the Court's opinions at the time) was that there was no need for judicial intervention in federalism matters because the Constitution's "procedural safeguards of federalism" would protect states' interests. For example, the procedural safeguards theory pointed to the fact that Congress was composed of individual members elected from states. Naturally, the theory went, members of Congress would look out for their own states' best interests and block any legislation that would unduly interfere with those interests.

The "political safeguards" theory came under criticism for putting the fox in charge of the henhouse. In other words, the critique claimed that – contrary to the political safeguards theory -- it is actually in the inherent nature of Congress to "eat" the states. The cycle of federal regulation starts when an issue rises to national prominence, and the clarion call for federal action – "Congress has to do something about this problem" -- inevitably follows. It is just too difficult, the critique concluded, for Congress to pass up an opportunity to regulate, even when the "problem" has traditionally been (and perhaps should be) left to states to fix. When an opponent runs a television ad attacking an incumbent for failing to regulate, the incumbent doesn't win many votes by responding "I did it all in the name of federalism." The New Federalism decisions implicitly reject the political safeguards theory on these grounds.

To continue the analogy, the President is even a hungrier "fox" than Congress. He is, after all, the President of the United States. He is the only politician in the country who is elected by the entire United States. His position is inherently nationalistic, even more so than membership in Congress. Governor Bush is now President Bush. When an issue like health care reform garners the national spotlight – and when survey after survey shows that it is at the top of many voters' list – the President is expected to do something, and that usually means pushing for federal regulation on the subject. The important difference is that President Bush appears to be taking legitimate state interests, as articulated by the Court's New Federalism decisions, into account. The fact that he issued what amounts to a "Federalism Impact Statement" in connection with his endorsement of the HEALTH Act shows that the Court's "think twice" message is coming through loud and clear.

HR 163 IH

107th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 163

To amend the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act to exempt mortgage servicers from certain requirements of the Act with respect to federally related mortgage loans secured by a first lien, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

January 3, 2001

Mr. ROYCE (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. MEEKS of New York, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. KANJORSKI, and Mrs. JONES of Ohio) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

A BILL

To amend the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act to exempt mortgage servicers from certain requirements of the Act with respect to federally related mortgage loans secured by a first lien, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Mortgage Servicing Clarification Act'.

SEC. 2. MORTGAGE SERVICING CLARIFICATION.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692 et seq.) is amended--

(1) by redesignating section 818 as section 819; and

(2) by inserting after section 817 the following new section:

`Sec. 818. Mortgage servicer exemption

`(a) EXEMPTION- Any servicer of federally related mortgage loans secured by first liens--

`(1) who is a debt collector; and

`(2) for whom the collection of delinquent debts is incidental to the servicer's primary function of servicing current federally related mortgage loans, shall be exempt from the requirements of section 807(11) in connection with the collection of any debt which is a federally related mortgage loan secured by a first lien.

`(b) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

`(1) FEDERALLY RELATED MORTGAGE LOAN- The term `federally related mortgage loan' has the meaning given to such term in section 3(1) of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974.

`(2) SERVICER; SERVICING- The terms `servicer' and `servicing' have the meanings given to such terms in section 6(i) of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections for the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692 et seq.) is amended--

(1) by redesignating the item relating to section 818 as section 819; and

(2) by inserting after the item relating to section 817 the following new item:

`818. Mortgage servicer exemption.'.

Critical Provisions

- Federal cause of action
- Consolidation of both pre-trial and trial proceedings
- Judge determines punitive damages
- No multiple imposition of punitive damages

Standard for Punitive Damages

- Intent Standard

Punitive damages, exemplary damages, or other damages not intended to compensate a plaintiff for actual losses may be awarded if the plaintiff proves by clear and convincing evidence that the harm to the plaintiff was proximately caused by an act for which the defendant was convicted under Federal or State criminal law or an act that was intended by the defendant to cause physical injury to the plaintiff [or an act that the defendant believed was substantially certain to result in physical injury to the plaintiff].

- Recklessness Standard

Punitive damages may be awarded if the claimant establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm was proximately caused either by an act for which the defendant was convicted under Federal or State criminal law or by an act that constituted intentional, flagrant indifference to [disregard for] the safety of the individual harmed [under circumstances manifesting the defendant's extreme callousness to the value of human life].

FYI: This is a brief summary of the liability provisions of the Air Transportation Act.

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <P_I73NA003_OPD.TXT_1>
```

Procedures for Civil Actions in Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act

No-Fault Victims Compensation Process

- The Act establishes a no-fault claims process as an alternative to litigation. This Victims Compensation Fund provides economic and non-economic damages to the victim (with a deduction for collateral source payments), and does not require the plaintiff to prove negligence. The government pays the amounts awarded to the victims from the fund. (Note: This is a very expensive program.)

Tort Suits

- Federal Cause of Action and Consolidation
  - For those who choose to file tort suits instead of proceeding through the claims process, the Act establishes an exclusive federal cause of action and consolidates all cases arising out of the September 11 attacks in a single federal court in New York.

- Limits on Recovery Against Air Carriers and Others
  - The original Act limited recovery against air carriers to the limits of their liability policies (and provided protection against punitive damages awards against air carriers for events occurring for 180 days after enactment). The provision limiting liability to the extent of insurance coverage was later extended to the World Trade Center, aircraft manufacturers and sponsors, and the City of New York.
  - The Act does not otherwise limit damages available in tort suits.

Crime Victims Award Plaques

Then our practice has been for the signature to be released pursuant to a counsel-drafted letter that specifically and limitedly authorizes the use of the signature. By copy of this email, I will ask Brett and Patrick if we could get one from counsel's office. Brett, I assume Libby or someone has the last of these we did and can provide the text for which we can insert the new vendor. I will copy Patrick also. Thanks to everyone.

Mr. Chip Forbes
President
C. Forbes, Inc.
420 North Ridge Road, Suite 200
Richmond, VA 23229

Dear Mr. Forbes:

As you know, the White House has commissioned you to manufacture a bronze plaque to be used by President George W. Bush for September 11 memorial activities in New York City on September 11, 2002 (hereinafter referred to as the "bronze plaque"). The purpose of this letter is to memorialize the terms and conditions pursuant to which the White House is retaining your services and providing you with a copy of the signature of the President and pursuant to which the White House will permit you to reproduce this copy solely upon the bronze plaque. These terms and conditions are as follows:

1. You may use this copy or any other copy of President Bush's signature solely to reproduce a copy of President Bush's signature on the bronze plaque and for no other purpose whatsoever.

2. The Staff Secretary for President Bush shall approve the form of the bronze plaque prior to the printing of President Bush's signature on it. The bronze plaque shall be produced in appropriate fashion with a professional appearance.

3. You will stop using this and any other copy of President Bush's signature, and destroy any and all remaining copies thereof, whether in electronic, written, or other format, immediately upon either the request of the Staff Secretary or completion of the bronze plaque, whichever occurs first.

4. You agree that the plaque, and all materials produced in the process of producing the plaque, including but not limited to written drafts, models, castings (used or not used), mock-ups, drawings, and any other related materials, belong to the White House and the President, and all such items and materials shall be delivered to the White House upon the completion of your efforts, but in no event later than September 10, 2002, 6:00 p.m.

Your signature below will confirm that you are properly authorized to enter into this agreement on behalf of C. Forbes, Inc. and that you agree to abide by the terms and conditions set out herein. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Harriet Miers

Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary

I, and C. Forbes, Inc., agree to abide by the terms and conditions set forth in this letter.

HR 1 LIABILITY LIMITS

`SEC. 2363. DEFINITIONS.

`For purposes of this subpart:

`(1) ECONOMIC LOSS- The term `economic loss' means any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law.

`(2) HARM- The term `harm' includes physical, nonphysical, economic, and noneconomic losses.

`(3) NONECONOMIC LOSS- The term `noneconomic loss' means loss for physical or emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society or companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), hedonic damages, injury to reputation, or any other nonpecuniary loss of any kind or nature.

`(4) SCHOOL- The term `school' means a public or private kindergarten, a public or private elementary school or secondary school, or a home school.

`(5) STATE- The term `State' means each of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, any other territory or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision of any such State, territory, or possession.

`(6) TEACHER- The term `teacher' means--

`(A) a teacher, instructor, principal, or administrator;

`(B) another educational professional who works in a school;

`(C) a professional or nonprofessional employee who--

`(i) works in a school; and

`(ii)(I) in the employee's job, maintains discipline or ensures safety; or

`(II) in an emergency, is called on to maintain discipline or ensure safety; or `(D) an individual member of a school board (as distinct from the board).

`SEC. 2364. APPLICABILITY.

`This subpart shall only apply to States that receive funds under this Act, and shall apply to such a State as a condition of receiving such funds.

`SEC. 2365. PREEMPTION AND ELECTION OF STATE NONAPPLICABILITY.

`(a) PREEMPTION- This subpart preempts the laws of any State to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with this subpart, except that this subpart shall not preempt any State law that provides additional protection from liability relating to teachers.

`(b) ELECTION OF STATE REGARDING NONAPPLICABILITY- This subpart shall not apply to any civil action in a State court against a teacher with respect to claims arising within that State if such State enacts a statute in accordance with State requirements for enacting legislation--

`(1) citing the authority of this subsection;

`(2) declaring the election of such State that this subpart shall not apply, as of a date certain, to such civil action in the State; and

`(3) containing no other provisions.

`SEC. 2366. LIMITATION ON LIABILITY FOR TEACHERS.

`(a) LIABILITY PROTECTION FOR TEACHERS- Except as provided in subsection (b), no teacher in a school shall be liable for harm caused by an act or omission of the teacher on behalf of the school if--

`(1) the teacher was acting within the scope of the teacher's employment or responsibilities to a school or governmental entity;

`(2) the actions of the teacher were carried out in conformity with Federal, State, and local laws (including rules and regulations) in furtherance of efforts to control, discipline, expel, or suspend a student or maintain order or control in the classroom or school;

`(3) if appropriate or required, the teacher was properly licensed, certified, or authorized by the appropriate authorities for the activities or practice involved in the State in which the harm occurred, where the activities were or practice was undertaken within the scope of the teacher's responsibilities;

`(4) the harm was not caused by willful or criminal misconduct, gross negligence, reckless misconduct, or a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of the individual harmed by the teacher; and

`(5) the harm was not caused by the teacher operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or other vehicle for which the State requires the operator or the owner of the vehicle, craft, or vessel to--

`(A) possess an operator's license; or

`(B) maintain insurance.

`(b) EXCEPTIONS TO TEACHER LIABILITY PROTECTION- If the laws of a State limit teacher liability subject to one or more of the following conditions, such conditions shall not be construed as inconsistent with this section:

`(1) A State law that requires a school or governmental entity to adhere to risk management procedures, including mandatory training of teachers.

`(2) A State law that makes the school or governmental entity liable for the acts or omissions of its teachers to the same extent as an employer is liable for the acts or omissions of its employees.

ate law that makes a limitation of liability inapplicable if the civil action was brought by an officer of a State or local government pursuant to State or local law.

`(c) LIMITATION ON PUNITIVE DAMAGES BASED ON THE ACTIONS OF TEACHERS-

`(1) GENERAL RULE- Punitive damages may not be awarded against a teacher in an action brought for harm based on the act or omission of a teacher acting within the scope of the teacher's employment or responsibilities to a school or governmental entity unless the claimant establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm was proximately caused by an act or omission of such teacher that constitutes willful or criminal misconduct, or a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of the individual harmed.

`(2) CONSTRUCTION- Paragraph (1) does not create a cause of action for punitive damages and does not preempt or supersede any Federal or State law to the extent that such law would further limit the award of punitive damages.

`(d) EXCEPTIONS TO LIMITATIONS ON LIABILITY-

`(1) IN GENERAL- The limitations on the liability of a teacher under this subpart shall not apply to any misconduct that--

`(A) constitutes a crime of violence (as that term is defined in section 16 of title 18, United States Code) or act of international terrorism (as that term is defined in section 2331 of title 18, United States Code) for which the defendant has been convicted in any court;

`(B) involves a sexual offense, as defined by applicable State law, for which the defendant has been convicted in any court;

`(C) involves misconduct for which the defendant has been found to have violated a Federal or State civil rights law; or

`(D) where the defendant was under the influence (as determined pursuant to applicable State law) of intoxicating alcohol or any drug at the time of the misconduct.

`(2) HIRING- The limitations on the liability of a teacher under this subpart shall not apply to misconduct during background investigations, or during other actions, involved in the hiring of a teacher.

`(e) RULES OF CONSTRUCTION-

`(1) CONCERNING RESPONSIBILITY OF TEACHERS TO SCHOOLS AND GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES- Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any civil action brought by any school or any governmental entity against any teacher of such school.

`(2) CONCERNING CORPORAL PUNISHMENT- Nothing in this subpart shall be construed to affect any State or local law (including a rule or regulation) or policy pertaining to the use of corporal punishment.

`SEC. 2367. ALLOCATION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR NONECONOMIC LOSS.

`(a) GENERAL RULE- In any civil action against a teacher, based on an act or omission of a teacher acting within the scope of the teacher's employment or responsibilities to a school or governmental entity, the liability of the teacher for noneconomic loss shall be determined in accordance with subsection (b).

`(b) AMOUNT OF LIABILITY-

`(1) IN GENERAL-

`(A) LIABILITY- Each defendant who is a teacher shall be liable only for the amount of noneconomic loss allocated to that defendant in direct proportion to the percentage of responsibility of that defendant (determined in accordance with paragraph (2)) for the harm to the claimant with respect to which that defendant is liable.

`(B) SEPARATE JUDGMENT- The court shall render a separate judgment against each defendant in an amount determined pursuant to subparagraph (A).

`(2) PERCENTAGE OF RESPONSIBILITY- For purposes of determining the amount of noneconomic loss allocated to a defendant who is a teacher under this section, the trier of fact shall determine the percentage of responsibility of each person responsible for the claimant's harm, whether or not such person is a party to the action.

`(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- Nothing in this section shall be construed to preempt or supersede any Federal or State law that further limits the application of joint liability in a civil action described in subsection (a), beyond the limitations established in this section.

`SEC. 2368. EFFECTIVE DATE.

`(a) IN GENERAL- This subpart shall take effect 90 days after the date of enactment of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001.

`(b) APPLICATION- This subpart applies to any claim for harm caused by an act or omission of a teacher if that claim is filed on or after the effective date of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 without regard to whether the harm that is the subject of the claim or the conduct that caused the harm occurred before such effective date.

Hey -- So if the trip is entirely political, are any of the notes ok on official stationery or do all need to be generated on political stationery?
IE: yesterday's visit to Houston -- can we do the FreedomCorps greeter on official stationery? What about the Airport Greeters and motorcade drivers? The event greeters clearly need political stationery IF they receive notes, but generally the motorcade drivers are ok on official stationery b/c they're driving for the entire visit...

I can call Brett Kavanaugh, but thought I'd check with you first. Pls advise.

Regarding your first question, we believe HR5250 does provide mandatory funding for veterans health care, because mandatory funding has been provided in the past without specifically stating that an appropriation is made.

Good afternoon,

Could you please consider Question 8 (reprinted below) today or Thursday, and let me know (a) if you agree it's not really mandatory, and (b) the prospects for this moving this year.

Thanks,
Thad

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

DRAFT

Post-Hearing Questions for
Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
From the Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Regarding the July 16, 2002, Hearing
On H.R. 4939

Question 1. The Committee received a report dated July 12, 2002, from Secretary Principi revealing that about 300,000 veterans are now waiting for VA primary care appointments for six months or more. If H.R. 4939 were to become law and begin to move funds into VA care, to what extent would these funds enable VA to reduce the current backlog of veterans waiting for VA health care services?

Response: The Administration feels that H.R. 4939 may not actually increase VA resources or veterans' access to care. When the Department acquires new funding streams, those increased funds are typically offset against the appropriations that VA would otherwise receive. In that event, VA would not gain permanent increased funding from the measure. In addition, if more veterans were encouraged to use VA as a result of this bill, the cost to VA would possibly be significantly more than the transfer from the Medicare Trust Funds, since the Part B premium finances only a portion of Part B costs.

Question 2. We understand that one of the options for the Priority 7 Medicare eligible veteran might be for VA to cease providing pharmaceutical services, but continue providing other necessary care. What would be the policy basis for this view, and what would its intended result be in your estimation?

Response: VHA is not currently considering this option. Presumably, the policy basis to support a change in law to allow this would be cost savings and to place these veterans on an equal footing with other Medicare-eligible individuals who are not veterans.

Question 3. Last year, our Health Subcommittee Chairman introduced H.R. 2792, a bill that would have established a pilot program to coordinate benefits involving veterans who are eligible for both VA and Medicare benefits. With that pilot, participating veterans would have received inpatient care under Medicare, with coordination by VA for continuing and follow-up services. VA opposed this idea at that time. Now, considering that VA is nearly overwhelmed with Medicare-eligible veterans, has the VA's view of this proposal changed?

Response: VA still opposes this proposal. The proposal would create a disparate eligibility status based on a veteran's third party coverage and priority group. We remain concerned that the program would undermine our ability to maintain existing services, especially specialized medical services and programs for veterans. Limiting care to VA general medical and surgical services would mean that veterans needing specialty health services would still need to come to VA for such care, but they would not have access to VA's comprehensive continuum of care, needed for their complex care needs. The health care covered by this proposal would be inpatient care for non-service-connected conditions. A veteran currently receiving care for a service-connected condition, for which VA does not or cannot contract locally, would also be forced to receive care in multiple locations. These types of disparities are not consistent with our goals and strategies of improving access, convenience, and timeliness of VA health care to all eligible veterans.

Question 4. Please give the Committee a general description of the pilot plan that was authorized by a prior Appropriations Acts and implemented in the Viera clinic in Representative Dave Weldon's district? How did that pilot project differ from the proposal made in H.R. 2792?

Response: Please see the Attachment to this set of responses.

Question 5. With all the pressure now on VA, with thousands of veterans waiting for outpatient appointments in Florida, and with nearly 300,000 nationwide who are waiting, according to your own report, have VA's views on this coordination idea changed any in the last year, and if so, what do you support?

Response: We have not changed our view with respect to the coordination idea proposed in H.R. 2792. We do not believe that improvements to coordination of care can be achieved by the approach presented within the bill.

Question 6. If the bill, H.R. 4939, were enacted, and Part B eligible veterans enrolled in VA became more aware that their personal funds were supporting the system they had chosen to deliver their care, do you believe that these veterans might stay with VA and reduce their joint reliance on VA and private providers under Medicare, or would their joint use of both public and private systems continue as under the current system?

Response: H.R. 4939 would require a transfer to VA from Medicare of twelve times the monthly Medicare Part B premium for each veteran enrolled in Medicare Part B who receives any outpatient care from VA. These veterans do not lose eligibility to receive care under Part B from any non-VA private-sector provider. This bill would simply establish a mechanism whereby VA would receive from Medicare limited reimbursement for care provided to Medicare-eligible veterans. We do not believe that H.R. 4939 would provide sufficient incentive for veterans to change their current arrangements for receiving health care, whether from VA or from non-VA providers, which would be based on numerous other factors in addition to third-party reimbursement considerations.

Question 7. The Disabled American Veterans (DAV) has recommended to the Committee that, for Congress to more fully address VA's funding problems, the VA should shift VA health care from a discretionary funding program to a mandatory program. The Ranking Member and I introduced H.R. 5250 on July 26, 2002, that would achieve this goal (bill attached).

Response: Not a question, but rather a lead-in to question 8.

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

Question 9. DAV testified that Medicare eligible veterans should retain the option under H.R. 4939 to choose VA health care and continue their private sector Medicare coverage as well. What, if any, problems might occur from an open-choice option such as this?

Response: The largest problem that may occur from an open-choice option would be negative outcomes from a lack of coordinated care. If veterans choose to receive some of their care from non-VA providers and the rest from VA providers, the current problems of duplicated care and the provision of unnecessary services may be exacerbated.

Question 10. In order to decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939, DAV suggested that only Priority Group 7 veterans be subjected to any Medicare participation plan with VA. Do you generally agree with this view, and why or why not?

Response: We do not believe that subjecting only priority group 7 veterans to a Medicare participation plan with VA would decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939. Medical care appropriations are available for the care of priority group 7 veterans. So, should Medicare funds become available for their care, we would expect Congress to propose an appropriation offset.

Question 11. The American Legion suggested that VA use the Indian Health Service (IHS) as a model for becoming a Medicare provider. IHS does not receive a transfer of the monthly Part B premium, but instead bills Medicare directly on a case-by-case basis for services rendered, or works within current Medicare managed-care plan. Would the IHS model work better for VA than my proposal under H.R. 4939, and why?

Response: The IHS Medicare reimbursement model would allow for a higher level of reimbursement for covered services, and, for that reason, we believe it is preferable to the system of reimbursement proposed in H.R. 4939.

Question 12. How many veterans enrolled in VA health care are currently Medicare eligible? If these veterans received all of their care from Medicare, what would the cost be to the Medicare program to provide the same level of health care to them?

Response: For FY 2002, VA is projecting approximately 3 million Medicare-eligible veteran enrollees (proxy = age 65 and over). Assuming VA service utilization rates and applying Medicare allowable charges, we estimate VA expenditures of $7 billion for Medicare covered services. By 2012, this group is estimated to increase to 4.35 million enrollees with estimated VA expenditures of $12.7 billion for Medicare covered services. We are unable to estimate costs to Medicare if these veterans were to receive all their health care under Medicare rather than receiving some or all through the VA health care system.

Question 13. Given the aging of the veteran population, within another few years, a likely majority of VA's patients will be eligible for Medicare. As time goes by, do you believe that VA-Medicare coordination will be seen as a more realistic possibility, or do you see VA and CMS maintaining separate programs for the foreseeable future?

Response: The mission of the Veterans Health Administration is to provide high quality, accessible healthcare to eligible veterans. In order to maximize the medical care benefits and services provided to veterans, VA strongly supports coordination of benefits with other federal programs, including Medicare. The reality is, however, that Medicare is not sufficient by itself to meet all veterans' needs. A substantial number of veterans are under 65 years old or have service-connected and special disabilities requiring services not readily available outside VHA. Moreover, VA's pharmacy benefits program has played a crucial role in driving the recent increased demand for access to VA health care. Medicare, of course, has no prescription benefit coverage, and this makes the VA health care system particularly attractive to veterans over age 65. Therefore, there will be a continued need for a separate veterans healthcare system in the foreseeable future. Over time, I believe that opportunities for health care coordination with the Department of Health and Human Services will emerge. To this end, VA has established the position of Deputy Under Secretary for Health Policy Coordination, who will explore and oversee such opportunities for coordination.

Question 14. Have you consulted with the President's Task Force on Veterans Health Care on Medicare-VA relationships? What was the nature of any consultations?

Response: In informal talks between the co-chairs of the President's Task Force (PTF) and myself, we preliminarily discussed the concept of a Medicare collaboration project along the lines of a capitation program. Under such a program as discussed, VA would receive a fixed rate of reimbursement in return for providing an eligible veteran's health care. This would allow veterans to use their earned Medicare eligibility in receiving care from VA. Payment by Medicare of a fixed, capitated rate would limit liability against the Medicare trust fund. Chapter 4 of the PTF's interim report contains discussion of possible Medicare reimbursement programs.

Question 15. VA has been working on various planning scenarios this year to deal with the burgeoning demands on the system. Can you review for the Committee some of the options VA may be considering in respect to dealing with this growth in demand, including their expected advantages to the system?

Response: VA is currently reviewing several different scenarios as we develop the FY 2004 budget and the FY 2003 VERA allocation methodology. However, all of these scenarios are pre-decisional and it would be premature to release them at this time.

Question 16. The VFW alluded to several primary factors in its testimony that the VHA believes may have undermined the success of DoD's Medicare Subvention pilot program, authorized under the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. VFW proposes that there be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA; that the level of effort requirement be eliminated; and that VA in effect be treated no differently than any other Medicare health care provider. Should we consider some of these points as we develop future legislation to authorize a Medicare subvention pilot program?

Response:

In their testimony, the VFW mentioned several points that were crucial to a successful Medicare subvention program.

- Subvention must be implemented uniformly nation-wide.
- There must be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA.
- The Level of Effort (LOE) requirement must be eliminated.
- The CMS capitation or payment formula must be adjusted to accommodate medical services actually provided by VA as opposed to only those currently covered under Medicare.

- Full appropriation support must be maintained with absolutely no reduction in funding as a consequence of subvention funding.

These points, as well as all lessons learned from the DoD Medicare subvention demonstration, must be considered in considering a VA Medicare initiative. There are significant differences between the VA and DoD health care delivery systems and the populations they serve that could mitigate against some of the problems reported by DoD. Therefore, it is not clear that some of the problems DoD encountered would affect VA to the same degree.

Question 17. Beyond the specifics of H.R. 4939 or of other Medicare subvention measures now before Congress, should a relationship between VA and CMS regarding dual eligible veterans be stimulated between these institutions, and why or why not?

Response: Coordination of the federal health care benefits provided by VA, DoD and HHS programs should be aggressively pursued. Coordination of benefits will allow maximal delivery of healthcare services with the minimum federal budget appropriations. Furthermore, coordination of benefits for dual eligible beneficiaries could potentially maximize efficiency and reduce duplication of services, and improve healthcare quality and safety.

Question 18. Title 38, United States Code, Section 111 authorizes some veterans to be reimbursed for travel costs, but the mileage allowance is inadequate at only 11 cents per mile. What are your views on the role of VA's beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care?

Response: The Beneficiary travel program serves as a means to assist in defraying the cost of travel expenses for veterans with special eligibility or those with low incomes when the travel is in conjunction with scheduled appointments. Currently, demand for VA health care is at an all time high. The number of veterans enrolled in the VA health care system currently exceeds the Department's available resources to provide timely access to quality health care. Due to the current demand for VA health care benefits, the Department cannot endorse any proposal that would divert funding away from medical care for veterans. Therefore, utilizing the beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care would create a false impression of system capacity and further compound VA's access problem.

Question 19. Would VA support increased beneficiary travel mileage allowance for service-disabled veterans in rural areas, or for those who are poor?

Response: The current VA beneficiary travel policy provides travel reimbursement benefits for service-disabled veterans and those with low incomes, regardless of geographic residence. The increase in demand for VA health care benefits and subsequent pressures on the medical care appropriation preclude the Department from endorsing any additional health care benefit expenditures at this time.

Attachment: Response to Question 4

Issue: Question #4 from the subject post hearing questions asks for a general description of the East Central Florida contracting pilot program and for a comparison of that pilot to the one in current legislation.

Discussion: In the VA's 2000 Appropriations Act, Congress directed VA to continue an inpatient hospitalization program (ECF Pilot Program), which had been piloted between June 1998 and September 1998. The pilot program participants consisted of a small group of veterans determined not to have specialty needs who were enrolled and actively receiving their primary care from the VA interim clinic in Palm Bay (Brevard County), Florida. Findings from the pilot program concluded that contracting with the private sector could be cost-effective under appropriate conditions.

On August 1, 2000, the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II was initiated. A large multi-specialty outpatient clinic (Viera OPC) was activated in July 1999 to replace the small interim Palm Bay primary care clinic. The Viera OPC activation significantly increased clinic capacity and, therefore, the number of veterans accessing VA outpatient health care services in ECF, as well as those potentially eligible for hospitalization. During the pilot program veterans who were enrolled to receive primary care at the Palm Bay clinic were eligible to receive inpatient services in the community via contract. When Phase II was initiated, veterans enrolled and actively receiving care at the Viera OPC were given options of where they could receive needed hospitalization (as determined by their VA primary care physician) as part of the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II.

Veterans seeking care for their service-connected conditions could elect inpatient hospitalization either at a VA hospital or through VA contracts with local non-VA hospitals at VA expense. In addition, veterans with no other form of health coverage (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) were eligible to receive care with VA contract hospitals in the community. Veterans with other inpatient hospitalization options (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) could select care at a VA facility, or could elect to use their other health coverage and self refer to hospitals in the community.

For both the original ECF Pilot and the Phase II Hospitalization Programs, patient demographics, unit costs, patient satisfaction, and program utilization were compared with patients receiving equivalent care at the parent VA facility at Tampa.

Results: Costs to operate the ECF Phase II Hospitalization Program were significantly higher than the costs reported for the ECF Pilot Program. While contracted hospital costs in the ECF Pilot Program were only approximately 85.5 percent of what might have been expended for hospitalization at existing VA facilities, contract costs during the Phase II program were approximately 33 percent higher than the cost of equivalent VA care. A number of factors are believed to have contributed to these differences.

Demographics and the health status between the two eligible populations were significantly different. During the Pilot Program, only primary care patients treated at the interim Palm Bay Clinic were included in the pilot. This likely excluded the more complex patients with multiple diagnoses. With the opening of the Viera multi-specialty clinic, access to a range of specialty care services greatly expanded. This increased the total of number of veterans seeking care in the ECF area as well as the complexity of the patient care base. A 'case mix' comparison was performed to evaluate the complexity/ degree of sickness between those admitted under the Pilot Program and those that were admitted as part of the Phase II Program. The patients admitted during the Pilot Program had a case mix of 1.10. Those admitted during the Phase II Program had a case mix of 1.29, i.e., were more complex. Another very significant difference was age. During the Pilot Program, the average patient admitted was 65 years. In contrast, during the Phase II Program, the age of the veterans admitted to a private sector contract hospital was 57 years of age. This leads us to conclude that the patients that were admitted during the Phase II program, although younger, represented a sicker/ more complex population.

Other factors contributing to the increase in contracted costs in the Phase II program might be attributed to private sector billing practices as well as methods used to determine VA inpatient costs for comparable care. Lessons learned from the ECF Pilot Program (phase I) resulted in an improved cost accounting methodology for the Phase II program. For instance, it was not unusual to receive bills from private sector hospitals six (6) months to one year after the results of the pilot program report had been published. For costing purposes during the ECF Phase II reporting period, we elected to include only the costs of patients that had been admitted through June 2001 and that we felt represented a 'completed' bill. In this way, we hoped to represent a truer cost than during the pilot.

In addition, the methodology used to calculate VA inpatients costs changed between the Pilot program and the Phase II Program. During the pilot program, we had no VA method for comparing VA inpatient costs with private sector costs using Diagnostic Related Grouping (DRG). DRG costs were approximated using a detailed mathematical formula based on Medicare Costs. Between the Pilot Program and the Phase II Program, VA implemented the Decisions Support System (DSS). This enabled us to extract the specific VA costs of treating patients by DRG category.

SUMMARY OF KEY FINDINGS: Results of the ECF Phase II Program did not support the premise that contracting with hospitals in the private sector was more cost-effective than admitting the veteran to an available VA facility. While the ECF Pilot Program experienced private sector costs that were 85.5 percent of VA

costs, the cost of an inpatient admission during the ECF Phase II Program was approximately 33 percent higher than admission to an existing VA facility. While this conclusion is inconsistent with previous findings of the ECF Pilot Program, we believe there are specific instances where contracting for private sector care would be a more cost-effective alternative. For example, this would be the case when the capital investment costs to renovate existing facilities or to build new facilities are factored into the equation. VHA has been cited by GAO studies and others for expending millions of dollars maintaining old, under-used facilities that do not meet basic life safety requirements. In making decisions about whether to continue to maintain these facilities and invest the capital required to bring them up to current standards, the cost-effectiveness of contracting should be thoroughly analyzed especially in light of an overall declining veteran population. The cost of contracting out the inpatient portion of care may well be more cost-effective in instances when VA construction or a major renovation is required to accommodate inpatient care.

NEXT STEPS: Effective December 1, 2001, modifications were made to the inpatient hospitalization program, ECF Phase III due to budget constraints. Changes will help offset the increasing total costs of operating the program. Contracts were awarded to one medical/surgical provider and one mental health care provider in Brevard County for non-emergent inpatient care only. Veterans without alternate health care coverage (i.e., Medicare, Insurance, HMO) will be referred by primary care providers at the Viera OPC to these facilities for non-emergent hospitalization. Emergency admissions for service connected conditions will be covered by the existing fee basis program, or through emergency care provisions as outlined in the Millennium Bill for veterans with no other form of health care. Although the Phase III Program was only recently initiated, we believe the number of veterans using this program will be significantly reduced and, therefore, the total cost of operating the program will be manageable.

Comparison of the ECF Pilot to H.R. 2792.

Comparisons with the ECF pilot are noted in bold.

SEC. 5. PILOT PROGRAM FOR COORDINATION OF AMBULATORY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1725 the following new section:

`Sec. 1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program

`(a) PILOT PROGRAM- Subject to the availability of funds specified in subsection (g), the Secretary shall carry out a pilot program in not more than four geographic areas of the United States to improve access to, and coordination of, inpatient care of eligible veterans. Under the pilot program, the Secretary, subject to subsection (b), shall pay certain costs described in subsection (b) for which an eligible veteran would otherwise be personally liable. The authority to carry out the pilot program shall expire on September 30, 2006.

`(b) PAYMENT OF COSTS- In carrying out the program described in subsection (a), the Secretary may pay the costs authorized under this section for hospital care and medical services furnished on an inpatient basis in a non-Department hospital to an eligible veteran participating in the program. Such payment may cover the costs for applicable plan deductibles and coinsurance and the reasonable costs of such inpatient care and medical services not covered by any applicable health-care plan of the veteran, but only to the extent such care and services are of the kind authorized under this chapter.

East Central Florida Hospitalization Program (ECF) pays cost of care for eligible patients at contract facilities. Contract is based on discounted Medicare rate. VA does not pay any patient co-payments or deductibles. Non service connected and service connected veterans treated for non-service connected conditions who have health plans (i.e. HMO , Medicare and/or private insurance) are not eligible under the program.

Eligible patients*: those veterans enrolled and receiving care at the Brevard/Viera OPC during the past 24 months who

- are not covered by a health care plan and need admission for a non-emergent condition or
- service -connected veterans being treated for a non-emergent service connected conditions

The Secretary shall limit the care and services for which payment may be made under the program to general medical and surgical services and shall require that such services may be provided only upon preauthorization by the Secretary.

ECF covers medical, surgical and psychiatric non-emergent admissions. Emergent admissions are covered under provisions of Millenium Bill or fee basis authority

`(c) ELIGIBLE VETERANS- (1) A veteran described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1710(a) of this title is eligible to participate in the pilot program if the veteran--

`(A) is enrolled to receive medical services from an outpatient clinic operated by the Secretary which is (i) within reasonable proximity to the principal residence of the veteran, and (ii) located within the geographic area in which the Secretary is carrying out the program described in subsection (a);

`(B) has received care under this chapter within the 24-month period preceding the veteran's application for enrollment in the pilot program;

ECF same

`(C) as determined by the Secretary before the hospitalization of the veteran (i) requires such hospital care and services for a non-service-connected condition, and (ii) could not receive such services from a clinic operated by the Secretary; and

`(D) elects to receive such care under a health-care plan (other than under this title) under which the veteran is entitled to receive such care.

`(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to reduce the authority of the Secretary to contract with non-Department facilities for care of a service-connected disability of a veteran.

ECF –Service Connected veterans are included in ECF program and can elect hospitalization at either a VA hospital or contract non-VA facility for a non-emergent service connected condition

`(3) Notwithstanding subparagraph (D) of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall ensure that not less than 15 percent of the veterans participating in the program are veterans who do not have a health-care plan.

ECF- approximately 80 % of veterans currently participating in program have no health plan.

`(d) CASE MANAGEMENT- As part of the program under this section, the Secretary shall, through provision of case-management, coordinate the care being furnished directly by the Secretary and care furnished under the program in non-Department hospitals to veterans participating in the program.

ECF – has a full time RN who case manages every patient approved for hospitalization at a contract non-VA facility

`(e) DESIGNATION OF PARTICIPATING SITES- (1) In designating geographic areas in which to establish the program under subsection (a), the Secretary shall ensure that--

`(A) the areas designated are geographically dispersed;

`(B) at least 70 percent of the veterans who reside in a designated area reside at least two hours driving distance from the closest medical center operated by the Secretary which provides medical and surgical hospital care; and

ECF – Brevard/Viera Clinic is located 115 miles (2.25 hours) from West Palm Beach VA, 131 miles (2.5 hours) from Tampa VA and 169 miles (3 hours) from Gainesville VA. At least 70% of current patients reside 2 or more hours from a VA inpatient facility

`(C) the establishment of the program in any such area would not result in jeopardizing the critical mass of patients needed to maintain a Department medical center that serves that area.

`(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B), the Secretary may designate for participation in the program at least one area which is in proximity to a Department medical center which, as a result of a change in mission of that center, does not provide hospital care.

`(f) REPORTS- (1) Not later than September 30, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience in implementing the pilot program under subsection (a).

`(2) Not later than September 30, 2005, the Secretary shall submit to those committees a report on the experience in operating the pilot program during the first two full fiscal years during which the pilot program is conducted. That report shall include--

`(A) a comparison of the costs incurred by the Secretary under the program and the cost experience for the calendar year preceding establishment of the program at each site at which the program is operated;

The methodology for this should be determined well before the pilot programs begin. This process is much more complex than it may seem. ECF admissions for FY 2001 reflected inpatient costs at contract facilities to be approximately 33% higher than at a VA facility.

`(B) an assessment of the satisfaction of the participants in the program; and

ECF-92% of participants rate overall satisfaction with ECF program as good or excellent .

`(C) an analysis of the effect of the program on access and quality of care for veterans.

`(g) FUNDING LIMITATIONS- (1) The total amount expended for the pilot program in any fiscal year (including amounts for administrative costs) may not exceed $50,000,000.

`(2) Any expenditure of funds for the pilot program shall be made from amounts in the Medical Care Collections Fund attributable to collections under section 1729 of this title. No funds may be expended to support the purposes of this section from any other funds available to the Secretary for the delivery of health care services to veterans, including funds appropriated or otherwise available for the care and treatment of veterans who require specialized care and resources.

`(h) HEALTH-CARE PLAN DEFINED- For purposes of this section, the term `health-care plan' has the meaning given that term in section 1725(f)(3) of this title.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1725 the following new item:

`1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program.'.

Hey -- So if the trip is entirely political, are any of the notes ok on official stationery or do all need to be generated on political stationery?
IE: yesterday's visit to Houston -- can we do the FreedomCorps greeter on official stationery? What about the Airport Greeters and motorcade drivers? The event greeters clearly need political stationery IF they receive notes, but generally the motorcade drivers are ok on official stationery b/c they're driving for the entire visit...

I can call Brett Kavanaugh, but thought I'd check with you first. Pls advise.

Hi, Rebecca. I spoke w/Andrew Saul today. I also have a call into Sanchez. I need your guidance on something: It appears that at least Saul and Whiting don't know how to answer their policy questions that the Committee has sent to them. Saul told me that PPO told him not to talk to anyone at the Board b/c there's some litigation going on or something. The bottom line is that this guy needs to talk with someone who knows something about the board and the issues it deals with. These are policy questions that we are not equipped here in Leg affairs to give him guidance on. So, should we connect him with someone in WH Counsel's office or is there a political appointee person at the Thrift Bd that we could connect him with?

Please let me know. Thanks!

Lawmakers say there's still hope on getting terrorism insurance

despite impasse

By JESSE J. HOLLAND=
Associated Press Writer=
WASHINGTON (AP) _ Lawmakers are not giving up hope that Congress can pass a terrorism insurance bill this year despite a four-month impasse over whether the government should pay for punitive damages in the lawsuits that follow terrorist attacks.
``It's not over,'' said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., one day after President Bush urged the Senate again to pass the legislation before going home for the year.
Bush several times has criticized Congress for failing to enact the bill lawmakers say will help stimulate the economy. But Thursday marked the second day this week that the White House organized an event dedicated solely to the issue. On Tuesday, Bush met with deadlocked House-Senate negotiators and issued a Friday deadline for agreement.
The president and the GOP say as much as $15 billion in construction and real estate transactions and 300,000 jobs are on hold because Congress has not passed a bill.
In addition, the downgrading of bond ratings of commercial mortgage-backed securities due to insufficient coverage for terrorist attacks can cause an overall drop in bond prices that harm investors.
Dodd said lawmakers were meeting Friday trying to get something done. ``I've already had meetings this morning,'' he said. ``I don't quit until we quit.''
Dodd refused to discuss the negotiations. White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said the parties are close but there is no deal yet.
``I do think there is a glimmer of hope on terrorism insurance, to a large degree because the president will not give up on this,''
```

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said. ``He has continued to push the Congress. Since they wouldn't meet on their own, the president brought down the conferees to meet with him. And so maybe there is some hope there.''

The GOP-controlled House and the Democrat-controlled Senate have passed different versions of legislation, which would protect the insurance industry from calamitous losses in the event of another terrorist attack by requiring the government to pick up some of the losses.

After Sept. 11, many insurers limited or dropped coverage for casualty and property losses due to terrorism because insurance companies faced record payouts. But with most lenders requiring insurance to finance real estate, plant expansion and other construction projects, industry representatives have warned of damage to the economy.

The search for a compromise is hung up primarily over the Senate's opposition to a House provision that would ban punitive damage awards in civil lawsuits.

The Senate-passed version of the bill, which passed in June, does not shield companies from punitive damages. The House passed legislation last November that limits lawsuits and bans punitive damages.

Republicans in Congress accused Democrats of trying to protect trial lawyers, while Democrats charged Republicans were looking out for businesses that are major GOP donors.

Dodd and Sen. Charles Schumer of New York said they gave the White House a proposal on Wednesday that would make punitive damage awards difficult to win and impossible against governments and insurers.

Republicans said Friday it wasn't enough.

``I hope we can all agree that it is outrageous, unwise, and unfair to hold American businesses financially responsible for damages caused by terrorists,'' said House Judiciary Chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., in a joint statement with Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

We hope and believe that the offer made yesterday by Senator Dodd and Senator Schumer on the liability provisions of terrorism insurance legislation will bring us closer to an agreement on this important issue and help us quickly pass legislation that will solve the problem of potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks. American businesses cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward on new projects that will create jobs when the risks ahead B including the liability risks B are unknown and potentially infinite. The interests of a single interest group, including trial lawyers, should never trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

With respect to the issue of punitive damages, the proposal of Senator Dodd and Senator Schumer draws on standards for the award of punitive damages against teachers in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act. However, the Senators, proposal fails to incorporate the related and important provision of H.R. 1 on non-economic damages, which provides that defendants will pay only their fair share of non-economic damages and will not be jointly and severally liable for such damages. The Senate, in agreeing to H.R. 1, agreed that any noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering should be allocated against a teacher only in proportion to the teacher=s percentage of fault. This provision in H.R. 1 mirrors the House-passed terrorism risk insurance bill,s provision for noneconomic damages. That commonsense provision would ensure that American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks pay no more than their fair share of liability for non-economic damages. In short, if H.R. 1 is to be the model here, as the two Senators have suggested, it is an appropriate model for both the punitive damages and non-economic damages issues. We also believe that any settlement of cases under the program should be subject to approval by the Secretary of Treasury so as to place a reasonable check on settlement costs borne by the taxpayers.

The Senators= proposal does not include other provisions the House of Representatives passed as part of its terrorism risk insurance legislation, including a limit on attorneys fees and a deduction of collateral source payments.

Senator Dodd and Senator Schumer have acknowledged that we must work to make sure that Americans and American businesses do not become victims of terrorists twice: first during the initial wave of death and destruction caused by terrorists, and second by legal aftershocks caused by the threat of unquantifiable, unpredictable, and potentially infinite damage claims for damage caused by terrorists. For that reason, Democratic Senator conferees, in the recent past, supported a complete ban on punitive damages in lawsuits caused by terrorists. Further, in the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, the Senate agreed on a bipartisan basis to temporarily ban punitive damages against air carriers in cases arising out of terrorism events so as to stabilize the aviation industry.

We look forward to continuing to work with the Senate and hope to pass legislation that will solve the problem of potentially unlimited exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks.

Subject: Terrorism Insurance Press Release

I am making edits to this.

We are hopeful that the offer made yesterday by Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd will get us closer to solving the many problems the terrorism risk insurance legislation seeks to address: namely the problem of potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks. Both American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks ahead B including the liability risks B are unknown and potentially infinite. No single interest group, including trial lawyers, should trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

However, Senators Schumer and Senator Dodd=s proposal B which draws on the model of standards for the award of punitive damages against teachers in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act B fails to incorporate the other essential provisions of H.R. 1, including its joint and several liability reforms. Indeed, the House-passed terrorism risk insurance bill apportions inherently unquantifiable awards for noneconomic damages in direct proportion to fault. This allows American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks to rely, at the very least, on their own innocence to protect them from liability. It also avoids a race to the bottom of the deepest pockets B including those of the American taxpayer B regardless of fault. The Senate, in agreeing to subpart 5 of the Conference Report for H.R. 1 has already agreed that any noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering should be allocated against a teacher only in proportion to the teacher=s percentage of fault. The same protections should apply to victims of terrorist attacks.

The Senators= proposal also fails to address the many other provisions the House of Representatives passed as part of its terrorism risk insurance legislation. These include reasonable limits on attorneys fees, which is simply a continuation of long-standing federal policy behind the Federal Tort Claims Act: namely, that lawyers should not profit excessively when they are paid by the American taxpayer, and lawyers should get less and victims should get more when taxpayer funds are used. Especially today, in a time of war, excessive lawyer fees drawn from the U.S. Treasury could result in egregious war profiteering at the expense of American jobs and businesses. The House-passed bill also provides that in a lawsuit caused by a terrorist attack, any recovery must be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of acts of terrorism. That provision is designed to make sure as much of our Nation=s limited resources as possible go to those who are most in need. [ADD PIECE ABOUT NEED FOR DEPT. OF TREASURY INVOLVEMENT IN SETTLEMENT APPROVAL.]

We are hopeful now that Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd have acknowledged that we must work to make sure that Americans and American businesses do not become victims of terrorists twice: first during the initial wave of death and destruction caused by terrorists, and second by legal aftershocks caused by the triple threat of unquantifiable, unpredictable, and potentially infinite damage claims B brought by trial lawyers against readily available American targets B that related to damages caused by terrorists. Democratic Senator conferees, in the recent past, have supported a complete ban on punitive damages in lawsuits caused by terrorists. Further, in the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, the Senate agreed on a bipartisan basis to ban punitive damages against air carriers and the federal government under causes of action arising out of future acts of terrorism in situations precisely analogous to those presented here, namely legislation involving a federal indemnification component.

With all these concerns in mind, we look forward to continuing to work with the Senate toward solutions to the many and varied threats terrorists pose to our Nation, its citizens, and its economy

We are hopeful that the offer made yesterday by Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd will get us closer to solving the many problems the terrorism risk insurance legislation seeks to address: namely the problem of potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks. Both American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks ahead – including the liability risks – are unknown and potentially infinite. No single interest group, including trial lawyers, should trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

However, Senators Schumer and Senator Dodd's proposal – which draws on the model of standards for the award of punitive damages against teachers in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act – fails to incorporate the other essential provisions of H.R. 1, including its joint and several liability reforms. Indeed, the House-passed terrorism risk insurance bill apportions inherently unquantifiable awards for noneconomic damages in direct proportion to fault. This allows American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks to rely, at the very least, on their own innocence to protect them from liability. It also avoids a race to the bottom of the deepest pockets – including those of the American taxpayer – regardless of fault. I just got off the phone with Dodd's staff, and they weree very DIScouraged by the Sensenbrenner "offer," caling it a "joke" among other choice words. They believe thst they already took proportionate liability off of the table,and they used all of their political capital with the Democratic caucus to get them to accept in effect a ban on punitive damages. My contact said that this offer indicates that the Republicans are not "serious," and that they are ready to walk away from getting a bill.

I explained that we viewed this as a POSITIVE development, and to our reading this looks like the WH is willing to accept H R 1 as the compromise on punitives, and that it is hard to believe that if the Dem's raise H R 1 as a compromise position that the Republicans would not seek to incorporate other provisions of that bill into the compromise.

He reiterated that the Senate Dems would not accept proportionate liability, and that he thinks they are near the end, but that they would keep working.

I continue to think that Dodd wants a bill, and that he will keep trying to work it, and that the "walk away" threat is still bluff. I also think that this is a POSITIVE step, and that that message needs to be reiterated to Dodd

I would suggest that the opening we not shy away from making the point that the Dems need to give on their position and have not before this. What do you think about opening this way?:

The offer made by Senators Schumer and Dodd appears to finally acknowledge
that in order to [negotiate an agreement / reach a compromise] on a piece of legislation intended to ensure that insurance against terrorist attacks continues to remain available, so that the jobs and construction projects
that are currently in limbo can go forward, both sides of the negotiation have
to give. Consequently, inherent in any compromise is an arrival at middle ground.
The Schumer /Dodd proposal falls far short of the middle on the issues in dispute.

Potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks from the mass litigation that would likely result in the [context / aftermath] of terrorist attacks are untenable in a legislative scheme that [exposes/ makes unreasonably vulnerable] both the American taxpayer, and the businesses who are themselves also victims of the terrorist attack. No single interest group should dictate policy to the detriment of the well being of all Americans, including taxpayers and businesses whose viability is essential to the provision of jobs and economic stability.

Paul's great (as always) effort, but maybe we can make the rest shorter.
I will my suggestion for the opening salvo out there for you all to consider and

Here is the statement with our recommended changes:

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <P_04GOA003_WHO.TXT_1>

Taxpayers and Victims of Terrorism Still Vulnerable

We appreciate the offer made yesterday by Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd and hope that agreement can be reached that will get us closer to enacting this needed legislation. Both American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks ahead – including the liability risks – are unknown. No single interest group, including trial lawyers, should take first place ahead of the well-being of all Americans, including American taxpayers and the victims of terrorism.

However, the proposal from Senators Dodd and Schumer – which includes some of the elements from the model of standards for the award of punitive damages against teachers in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act – fails to incorporate several other essential provisions of H.R. 1. One of these key provisions from H.R. 1 involves joint and several liability reforms. The House-passed terrorism risk insurance bill apportions inherently unquantifiable awards for noneconomic damages in direct proportion to fault. This provision means that American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks will not be victimized yet again by having to pay for the damages caused by the terrorists. It also avoids a race to the bottom of the deepest pockets – including those of the American taxpayer – regardless of fault. When the Senate agreed to subpart 5 of the Conference Report for H.R. 1, it already agreed that any noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering should be allocated against a teacher only in proportion to the teacher's percentage of fault. If Senators Dodd and Schumer want to follow this model, then the same protections should apply to victims of terrorist attacks.

The Dodd-Schumer proposal also fails to address the many other provisions the House of Representatives passed as part of its terrorism risk insurance legislation. These include a reasonable limit on attorneys fees, which is simply a continuation of long-standing federal policy behind the Federal Tort Claims Act: namely, that lawyers should not profit excessively when they are paid by the American taxpayer, and lawyers should get less and victims should get more when taxpayer funds are used. Especially today, in a time of war, excessive lawyer fees drawn from the U.S. Treasury could result in egregious war profiteering at the expense of American jobs and businesses. The House-passed bill also provides that in a lawsuit caused by a terrorist attack, any recovery must be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of acts of terrorism. That provision is designed to make sure as much of our Nation's limited resources as possible go to those who are most in need.

In fact, the Dodd-Schumer proposal does not even come up to the standard proposed by Senator Sarbanes and agreed to by Senators Gramm, Dodd, and Enzi and announced to the public on November 1 last year. There is no provision for consolidation of cases in one court, and there is no requirement that the party writing the biggest check to compensate for damages under this program – the U.S. Treasury – be at the table to sign off on any out of court settlement. It is easy to settle any dispute – meritorious or not – if someone else is picking up the tab. The taxpayer must not be left holding the bag.

With all these concerns in mind, we look forward to continuing to work with all conferees to enact solutions to the many and varied threats terrorists pose to our Nation, its citizens, and its economy. The Dodd-Schumer proposal we hope opens the door to resolving these important issues, but in its current form, it still leaves the taxpayer and the victims of terrorism vulnerable to predatory lawsuits.

you might also consider sending it as a letter to Schumer/Dodd, so it does not look like we are playing it in the Press and not seriously negotiating.
obviously, can do a press release on the "letter" and release the letter, but it would take away a possible attack on Rs from the Dems.

I would suggest that the opening we not shy away from making the point that the Dems need to give on their position and have not before this. What do you think about opening this way?:

The offer made by Senators Schumer and Dodd appears to finally acknowledge
that in order to [negotiate an agreement / reach a compromise] on a piece of legislation intended to ensure that insurance against terrorist attacks continues to remain available, so that the jobs and construction projects
that are currently in limbo can go forward, both sides of the negotiation have
to

ground.
The Schumer /Dodd proposal falls far short of the middle on the issues in dispute.

Potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks from the mass litigation that would likely result in the [context / aftermath] of terrorist attacks are untenable in a legislative scheme that [exposes/ makes unreasonably vulnerable] both the American taxpayer, and the businesses who are themselves also victims of the terrorist attack. No single interest group should dictate policy to the detriment of the well being of all Americans, including taxpayers and businesses whose viability is essential to the provision of jobs and economic stability.

* and then go into the education effort laid out by Paul - not to detract from Paul's great (as always) effort, but maybe we can make the rest shorter. I will forward additional suggestion on the rest if I have them - just wanted to toss my suggestion for the opening salvo out there for you all to consider and provide input.

In the interests of time, attached please find a draft for discussion. One issue it does not address is the issue of Department of the Treasury involvement in settlement approval. I'm less familiar with that aspect, so at this point I will leave it to other to add material in that regard. (I've flagged that issued in brackets in the file attached here.)

We are hopeful that the offer made yesterday by Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd will get us closer to solving the many problems the terrorism risk insurance legislation seeks to address: namely the problem of potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks. Both American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks ahead – including the liability risks – are unknown and potentially infinite. No single interest group, including trial lawyers, should trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

However, Senators Schumer and Senator Dodd's proposal – which draws on the model of standards for the award of punitive damages against teachers in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act – fails to incorporate the other essential provisions of H.R. 1, including its joint and several liability reforms. Indeed, the House-passed terrorism risk insurance bill apportions inherently unquantifiable awards for noneconomic damages in direct proportion to fault. This allows American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks to rely, at the very least, on their own innocence to protect them from liability. It also avoids a race to the bottom of the deepest pockets – including those of the American taxpayer – regardless of fault. The Senate, in agreeing to subpart 5 of the Conference Report for H.R. 1 has already agreed that any noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering should be allocated against a teacher only in proportion to the teacher's percentage of fault. The same protections should apply to victims of terrorist attacks.

The Senators' proposal also fails to address the many other provisions the House of Representatives passed as part of its terrorism risk insurance legislation. These include reasonable limits on attorneys fees, which is simply a continuation of long-standing federal policy behind the Federal Tort Claims Act: namely, that lawyers should not profit excessively when they are paid by the American taxpayer, and lawyers should get less and victims should get more when taxpayer funds are used. Especially today, in a time of war, excessive lawyer fees drawn from the U.S. Treasury could result in egregious war profiteering at the expense of American jobs and businesses. The House-passed bill also provides that in a lawsuit caused by a terrorist attack, any recovery must be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of acts of terrorism. That provision is designed to make sure as much of our Nation's limited resources as possible go to those who are most in need. [ADD PIECE ABOUT NEED FOR DEPT. OF TREASURY INVOLVEMENT IN SETTLEMENT APPROVAL.]

We are hopeful now that Senator Schumer and Senator Dodd have acknowledged that we must work to make sure that Americans and American businesses do not become victims of terrorists twice: first during the initial wave of death and destruction caused by terrorists, and second by legal aftershocks caused by the triple threat of unquantifiable, unpredictable, and potentially infinite damage claims – brought by trial lawyers against readily available American targets – that related to damages caused by terrorists. Democratic Senator conferees, in the recent past, have supported a complete ban on punitive damages in lawsuits caused by terrorists. Further, in the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, the Senate agreed on a bipartisan basis to ban punitive damages against air carriers and the federal government under causes of action arising out of future acts of terrorism in situations precisely analogous to those presented here, namely legislation involving a federal indemnification component.

With all these concerns in mind, we look forward to continuing to work with the Senate toward solutions to the many and varied threats terrorists pose to our Nation, its citizens, and its economy.

Lawmakers say there's still hope on getting terrorism insurance

despite impasse

By JESSE J. HOLLAND=
Associated Press Writer=
WASHINGTON (AP) _ Lawmakers are not giving up hope that Congress can pass a terrorism insurance bill this year despite a four-month impasse over whether the government should pay for punitive damages in the lawsuits that follow terrorist attacks.
``It's not over,'' said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., one day after President Bush urged the Senate again to pass the legislation before going home for the year.
Bush several times has criticized Congress for failing to enact the bill lawmakers say will help stimulate the economy. But Thursday marked the second day this week that the White House organized an event dedicated solely to the issue. On Tuesday, Bush met with deadlocked House-Senate negotiators and issued a Friday deadline for agreement.
The president and the GOP say as much as $15 billion in construction and real estate transactions and 300,000 jobs are on hold because Congress has not passed a bill.
In addition, the downgrading of bond ratings of commercial mortgage-backed securities due to insufficient coverage for terrorist attacks can cause an overall drop in bond prices that harm investors.
Dodd said lawmakers were meeting Friday trying to get something done. ``I've already had meetings this morning,'' he said. ``I don't quit until we quit.''
Dodd refused to discuss the negotiations. White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said the parties are close but there is no deal yet.
``I do think there is a glimmer of hope on terrorism insurance, to a large degree because the president will not give up on this,'' Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said. ``He has continued to push the Congress. Since they wouldn't meet on their own, the president brought down the conferees to meet with him. And so maybe there is some hope there.''
The GOP-controlled House and the Democrat-controlled Senate have passed different versions of legislation, which would protect the insurance industry from calamitous losses in the event of another terrorist attack by requiring the government to pick up some of the losses.

After Sept. 11, many insurers limited or dropped coverage for casualty and property losses due to terrorism because insurance companies faced record payouts. But with most lenders requiring insurance to finance real estate, plant expansion and other construction projects, industry representatives have warned of damage to the economy.
The search for a compromise is hung up primarily over the Senate's opposition to a House provision that would ban punitive damage awards in civil lawsuits.
The Senate-passed version of the bill, which passed in June, does not shield companies from punitive damages. The House passed legislation last November that limits lawsuits and bans punitive damages.
Republicans in Congress accused Democrats of trying to protect trial lawyers, while Democrats charged Republicans were looking out for businesses that are major GOP donors.
Dodd and Sen. Charles Schumer of New York said they gave the White House a proposal on Wednesday that would make punitive damage awards difficult to win and impossible against governments and insurers.
Republicans said Friday it wasn't enough.
``I hope we can all agree that it is outrageous, unwise, and unfair to hold American businesses financially responsible for damages caused by terrorists,'' said House Judiciary Chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., in a joint statement with Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

If the letter tack is agreed to, FYI, the attached might be used as a base draft text. It's essentially the longer piece I sent around earlier today, with Wayne's additions.

We are hopeful that House and Senate conferees can work together and get us closer to solving the many problems the terrorism risk insurance legislation seeks to address: namely the problem of potentially unlimited liability exposure and unmanageable risks in the context of terrorist attacks. Both American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks ahead B including the liability risks B are unknown and potentially infinite. Also, the most recent proposal of Senators Schumer and Dodd does not even come up to the standard proposed by Senator Sarbanes and agreed to by Senators Gramm, Dodd, and Enzi and announced to the public on November 1 of last year because it does not provide that settlement of cases under the program should be subject to approval by the Secretary of Treasury in order to place a reasonable check on settlement costs borne by the taxpayers. I assume they have no credibility with dems? So not much to do now except support whatever final deal (if any) that we cut next week, which will be better than legal status quo even if not everything we want.

President's remarks on judges on October 5, 2002, at New Hampshire event

. . . Another way to make sure we've got a strong country is to make sure that our federal bench is a bench full of judges that don't use their position from which to legislate. We've got plenty of legislators. We don't need our judges legislating, we need them strictly interpreting the Constitution. (Applause.)

That's an issue in this campaign -- the bench is an issue in this campaign. I named a fabulous lady from Texas, named Priscilla Owen. She'd been running statewide in our state several times, got elected overwhelmingly, had strong Republican support, strong Democrat support. Number one in her law school class, or tops of her law school class. She's ranked the highest rating possible by the American Bar Association. She is a -- you know, she'll interpret the Constitution, she's not going to try to rewrite it.

And I sent her name up there and they -- they weren't fair with her record. They totally politicized the issue. They made this a huge political deal. For the sake of a solid judiciary, I need John Sununu in the United States Senate. (Applause.)

I named a new man, named Michael Estrada, to one of our higher benches. It's a great American success story. He couldn't speak English when he came here -- he's now being nominated by the President to one of the highest benches because he's a brilliant lawyer. He's got fantastic support from Democrats and Republicans. John Sununu will cast his vote with Michael. Judd Gregg would. I wonder if the other candidate in this race will stand up and support the judicial nominees of a President George W. Bush. For the sake of a strong judiciary, we need John Sununu in the United States Senate. (Applause.) . . .

Regarding your first question, we believe HR5250 does provide mandatory funding for veterans health care, because mandatory funding has been provided in the past without specifically stating that an appropriation is made.

Good afternoon,

Could you please consider Question 8 (reprinted below) today or Thursday, and let me know (a) if you agree it's not really mandatory, and (b) the prospects for this moving this year.

Thanks,
Thad

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

DRAFT

Post-Hearing Questions for
Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
From the Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Regarding the July 16, 2002, Hearing
On H.R. 4939

Question 1. The Committee received a report dated July 12, 2002, from Secretary Principi revealing that about 300,000 veterans are now waiting for VA primary care appointments for six months or more. If H.R. 4939 were to become law and begin to move funds into VA care, to what extent would these funds enable VA to reduce the current backlog of veterans waiting for VA health care services?

Response: The Administration feels that H.R. 4939 may not actually increase VA resources or veterans' access to care. When the Department acquires new funding streams, those increased funds are typically offset against the appropriations that VA would otherwise receive. In that event, VA would not gain permanent increased funding from the measure. In addition, if more veterans were encouraged to use VA as a result of this bill, the cost to VA would possibly be significantly more than the transfer from the Medicare Trust Funds, since the Part B premium finances only a portion of Part B costs.

Question 2. We understand that one of the options for the Priority 7 Medicare eligible veteran might be for VA to cease providing pharmaceutical services, but continue providing other necessary care. What would be the policy basis for this view, and what would its intended result be in your estimation?

Response: VHA is not currently considering this option. Presumably, the policy basis to support a change in law to allow this would be cost savings and to place these veterans on an equal footing with other Medicare-eligible individuals who are not veterans.

Question 3. Last year, our Health Subcommittee Chairman introduced H.R. 2792, a bill that would have established a pilot program to coordinate benefits involving veterans who are eligible for both VA and Medicare benefits. With that pilot, participating veterans would have received inpatient care under Medicare, with coordination by VA for continuing and follow-up services. VA opposed this idea at that time. Now, considering that VA is nearly overwhelmed with Medicare-eligible veterans, has the VA's view of this proposal changed?

Response: VA still opposes this proposal. The proposal would create a disparate eligibility status based on a veteran's third party coverage and priority group. We remain concerned that the program would undermine our ability to maintain existing services, especially specialized medical services and programs for veterans. Limiting care to VA general medical and surgical services would mean that veterans needing specialty health services would still need to come to VA for such care, but they would not have access to VA's comprehensive continuum of care, needed for their complex care needs. The health care covered by this proposal would be inpatient care for non-service-connected conditions. A veteran currently receiving care for a service-connected condition, for which VA does not or cannot contract locally, would also be forced to receive care in multiple locations. These types of disparities are not consistent with our goals and strategies of improving access, convenience, and timeliness of VA health care to all eligible veterans.

Question 4. Please give the Committee a general description of the pilot plan that was authorized by a prior Appropriations Acts and implemented in the Viera clinic in Representative Dave Weldon's district? How did that pilot project differ from the proposal made in H.R. 2792?

Response: Please see the Attachment to this set of responses.

Question 5. With all the pressure now on VA, with thousands of veterans waiting for outpatient appointments in Florida, and with nearly 300,000 nationwide who are waiting, according to your own report, have VA's views on this coordination idea changed any in the last year, and if so, what do you support?

Response: We have not changed our view with respect to the coordination idea proposed in H.R. 2792. We do not believe that improvements to coordination of care can be achieved by the approach presented within the bill.

Question 6. If the bill, H.R. 4939, were enacted, and Part B eligible veterans enrolled in VA became more aware that their personal funds were supporting the system they had chosen to deliver their care, do you believe that these veterans might stay with VA and reduce their joint reliance on VA and private providers under Medicare, or would their joint use of both public and private systems continue as under the current system?

Response: H.R. 4939 would require a transfer to VA from Medicare of twelve times the monthly Medicare Part B premium for each veteran enrolled in Medicare Part B who receives any outpatient care from VA. These veterans do not lose eligibility to receive care under Part B from any non-VA private-sector provider. This bill would simply establish a mechanism whereby VA would receive from Medicare limited reimbursement for care provided to Medicare-eligible veterans. We do not believe that H.R. 4939 would provide sufficient incentive for veterans to change their current arrangements for receiving health care, whether from VA or from non-VA providers, which would be based on numerous other factors in addition to third-party reimbursement considerations.

Question 7. The Disabled American Veterans (DAV) has recommended to the Committee that, for Congress to more fully address VA's funding problems, the VA should shift VA health care from a discretionary funding program to a mandatory program. The Ranking Member and I introduced H.R. 5250 on July 26, 2002, that would achieve this goal (bill attached).

Response: Not a question, but rather a lead-in to question 8.

Question 8. What would be the effect of a mandatory funding formula on the VA health care system?

Response: Depending upon its construction and methodology, a mandatory funding formula would provide predictable, but not necessarily adequate, funding for VA health care. The specific formula proposed in H.R. 5250 might have little impact on the VA health care system. We question whether the proposed formula would be considered an appropriation from the Treasury. Section 1301(d) of title 31, United States Code, provides that a law may be construed to make an appropriation out of the Treasury only if the law specifically states that an appropriation is made. Even if it were considered an appropriation, the next appropriation for VA medical care would probably supersede it.

Question 9. DAV testified that Medicare eligible veterans should retain the option under H.R. 4939 to choose VA health care and continue their private sector Medicare coverage as well. What, if any, problems might occur from an open-choice option such as this?

Response: The largest problem that may occur from an open-choice option would be negative outcomes from a lack of coordinated care. If veterans choose to receive some of their care from non-VA providers and the rest from VA providers, the current problems of duplicated care and the provision of unnecessary services may be exacerbated.

Question 10. In order to decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939, DAV suggested that only Priority Group 7 veterans be subjected to any Medicare participation plan with VA. Do you generally agree with this view, and why or why not?

Response: We do not believe that subjecting only priority group 7 veterans to a Medicare participation plan with VA would decrease the likelihood of appropriations offsets for H.R. 4939. Medical care appropriations are available for the care of priority group 7 veterans. So, should Medicare funds become available for their care, we would expect Congress to propose an appropriation offset.

Question 11. The American Legion suggested that VA use the Indian Health Service (IHS) as a model for becoming a Medicare provider. IHS does not receive a transfer of the monthly Part B premium, but instead bills Medicare directly on a case-by-case basis for services rendered, or works within current Medicare managed-care plan. Would the IHS model work better for VA than my proposal under H.R. 4939, and why?

Response: The IHS Medicare reimbursement model would allow for a higher level of reimbursement for covered services, and, for that reason, we believe it is preferable to the system of reimbursement proposed in H.R. 4939.

Question 12. How many veterans enrolled in VA health care are currently Medicare eligible? If these veterans received all of their care from Medicare, what would the cost be to the Medicare program to provide the same level of health care to them?

Response: For FY 2002, VA is projecting approximately 3 million Medicare-eligible veteran enrollees (proxy = age 65 and over). Assuming VA service utilization rates and applying Medicare allowable charges, we estimate VA expenditures of $7 billion for Medicare covered services. By 2012, this group is estimated to increase to 4.35 million enrollees with estimated VA expenditures of $12.7 billion for Medicare covered services. We are unable to estimate costs to Medicare if these veterans were to receive all their health care under Medicare rather than receiving some or all through the VA health care system.

Question 13. Given the aging of the veteran population, within another few years, a likely majority of VA's patients will be eligible for Medicare. As time goes by, do you believe that VA-Medicare coordination will be seen as a more realistic possibility, or do you see VA and CMS maintaining separate programs for the foreseeable future?

Response: The mission of the Veterans Health Administration is to provide high quality, accessible healthcare to eligible veterans. In order to maximize the medical care benefits and services provided to veterans, VA strongly supports coordination of benefits with other federal programs, including Medicare. The reality is, however, that Medicare is not sufficient by itself to meet all veterans' needs. A substantial number of veterans are under 65 years old or have service-connected and special disabilities requiring services not readily available outside VHA. Moreover, VA's pharmacy benefits program has played a crucial role in driving the recent increased demand for access to VA health care. Medicare, of course, has no prescription benefit coverage, and this makes the VA health care system particularly attractive to veterans over age 65. Therefore, there will be a continued need for a separate veterans healthcare system in the foreseeable future. Over time, I believe that opportunities for health care coordination with the Department of Health and Human Services will emerge. To this end, VA has established the position of Deputy Under Secretary for Health Policy Coordination, who will explore and oversee such opportunities for coordination.

Question 14. Have you consulted with the President's Task Force on Veterans Health Care on Medicare-VA relationships? What was the nature of any consultations?

Response: In informal talks between the co-chairs of the President's Task Force (PTF) and myself, we preliminarily discussed the concept of a Medicare collaboration project along the lines of a capitation program. Under such a program as discussed, VA would receive a fixed rate of reimbursement in return for providing an eligible veteran's health care. This would allow veterans to use their earned Medicare eligibility in receiving care from VA. Payment by Medicare of a fixed, capitated rate would limit liability against the Medicare trust fund. Chapter 4 of the PTF's interim report contains discussion of possible Medicare reimbursement programs.

Question 15. VA has been working on various planning scenarios this year to deal with the burgeoning demands on the system. Can you review for the Committee some of the options VA may be considering in respect to dealing with this growth in demand, including their expected advantages to the system?

Response: VA is currently reviewing several different scenarios as we develop the FY 2004 budget and the FY 2003 VERA allocation methodology. However, all of these scenarios are pre-decisional and it would be premature to release them at this time.

Question 16. The VFW alluded to several primary factors in its testimony that the VHA believes may have undermined the success of DoD's Medicare Subvention pilot program, authorized under the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. VFW proposes that there be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA; that the level of effort requirement be eliminated; and that VA in effect be treated no differently than any other Medicare health care provider. Should we consider some of these points as we develop future legislation to authorize a Medicare subvention pilot program?

Response:

In their testimony, the VFW mentioned several points that were crucial to a successful Medicare subvention program.

- Subvention must be implemented uniformly nation-wide.
- There must be no annual cap on Medicare payments to VA.
- The Level of Effort (LOE) requirement must be eliminated.
- The CMS capitation or payment formula must be adjusted to accommodate medical services actually provided by VA as opposed to only those currently covered under Medicare.

- Full appropriation support must be maintained with absolutely no reduction in funding as a consequence of subvention funding.

These points, as well as all lessons learned from the DoD Medicare subvention demonstration, must be considered in considering a VA Medicare initiative. There are significant differences between the VA and DoD health care delivery systems and the populations they serve that could mitigate against some of the problems reported by DoD. Therefore, it is not clear that some of the problems DoD encountered would affect VA to the same degree.

Question 17. Beyond the specifics of H.R. 4939 or of other Medicare subvention measures now before Congress, should a relationship between VA and CMS regarding dual eligible veterans be stimulated between these institutions, and why or why not?

Response: Coordination of the federal health care benefits provided by VA, DoD and HHS programs should be aggressively pursued. Coordination of benefits will allow maximal delivery of healthcare services with the minimum federal budget appropriations. Furthermore, coordination of benefits for dual eligible beneficiaries could potentially maximize efficiency and reduce duplication of services, and improve healthcare quality and safety.

Question 18. Title 38, United States Code, Section 111 authorizes some veterans to be reimbursed for travel costs, but the mileage allowance is inadequate at only 11 cents per mile. What are your views on the role of VA's beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care?

Response: The Beneficiary travel program serves as a means to assist in defraying the cost of travel expenses for veterans with special eligibility or those with low incomes when the travel is in conjunction with scheduled appointments. Currently, demand for VA health care is at an all time high. The number of veterans enrolled in the VA health care system currently exceeds the Department's available resources to provide timely access to quality health care. Due to the current demand for VA health care benefits, the Department cannot endorse any proposal that would divert funding away from medical care for veterans. Therefore, utilizing the beneficiary travel program as a means of promoting access to VA health care would create a false impression of system capacity and further compound VA's access problem.

Question 19. Would VA support increased beneficiary travel mileage allowance for service-disabled veterans in rural areas, or for those who are poor?

Response: The current VA beneficiary travel policy provides travel reimbursement benefits for service-disabled veterans and those with low incomes, regardless of geographic residence. The increase in demand for VA health care benefits and subsequent pressures on the medical care appropriation preclude the Department from endorsing any additional health care benefit expenditures at this time.

Attachment: Response to Question 4

Issue: Question #4 from the subject post hearing questions asks for a general description of the East Central Florida contracting pilot program and for a comparison of that pilot to the one in current legislation.

Discussion: In the VA's 2000 Appropriations Act, Congress directed VA to continue an inpatient hospitalization program (ECF Pilot Program), which had been piloted between June 1998 and September 1998. The pilot program participants consisted of a small group of veterans determined not to have specialty needs who were enrolled and actively receiving their primary care from the VA interim clinic in Palm Bay (Brevard County), Florida. Findings from the pilot program concluded that contracting with the private sector could be cost-effective under appropriate conditions.

On August 1, 2000, the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II was initiated. A large multi-specialty outpatient clinic (Viera OPC) was activated in July 1999 to replace the small interim Palm Bay primary care clinic. The Viera OPC activation significantly increased clinic capacity and, therefore, the number of veterans accessing VA outpatient health care services in ECF, as well as those potentially eligible for hospitalization. During the pilot program veterans who were enrolled to receive primary care at the Palm Bay clinic were eligible to receive inpatient services in the community via contract. When Phase II was initiated, veterans enrolled and actively receiving care at the Viera OPC were given options of where they could receive needed hospitalization (as determined by their VA primary care physician) as part of the ECF Hospitalization Program, Phase II.

Veterans seeking care for their service-connected conditions could elect inpatient hospitalization either at a VA hospital or through VA contracts with local non-VA hospitals at VA expense. In addition, veterans with no other form of health coverage (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) were eligible to receive care with VA contract hospitals in the community. Veterans with other inpatient hospitalization options (Medicare, Insurance, HMO) could select care at a VA facility, or could elect to use their other health coverage and self refer to hospitals in the community.

For both the original ECF Pilot and the Phase II Hospitalization Programs, patient demographics, unit costs, patient satisfaction, and program utilization were compared with patients receiving equivalent care at the parent VA facility at Tampa.

Results: Costs to operate the ECF Phase II Hospitalization Program were significantly higher than the costs reported for the ECF Pilot Program. While contracted hospital costs in the ECF Pilot Program were only approximately 85.5 percent of what might have been expended for hospitalization at existing VA facilities, contract costs during the Phase II program were approximately 33 percent higher than the cost of equivalent VA care. A number of factors are believed to have contributed to these differences.

Demographics and the health status between the two eligible populations were significantly different. During the Pilot Program, only primary care patients treated at the interim Palm Bay Clinic were included in the pilot. This likely excluded the more complex patients with multiple diagnoses. With the opening of the Viera multi-specialty clinic, access to a range of specialty care services greatly expanded. This increased the total of number of veterans seeking care in the ECF area as well as the complexity of the patient care base. A 'case mix' comparison was performed to evaluate the complexity/ degree of sickness between those admitted under the Pilot Program and those that were admitted as part of the Phase II Program. The patients admitted during the Pilot Program had a case mix of 1.10. Those admitted during the Phase II Program had a case mix of 1.29, i.e., were more complex. Another very significant difference was age. During the Pilot Program, the average patient admitted was 65 years. In contrast, during the Phase II Program, the age of the veterans admitted to a private sector contract hospital was 57 years of age. This leads us to conclude that the patients that were admitted during the Phase II program, although younger, represented a sicker/ more complex population.

Other factors contributing to the increase in contracted costs in the Phase II program might be attributed to private sector billing practices as well as methods used to determine VA inpatient costs for comparable care. Lessons learned from the ECF Pilot Program (phase I) resulted in an improved cost accounting methodology for the Phase II program. For instance, it was not unusual to receive bills from private sector hospitals six (6) months to one year after the results of the pilot program report had been published. For costing purposes during the ECF Phase II reporting period, we elected to include only the costs of patients that had been admitted through June 2001 and that we felt represented a 'completed' bill. In this way, we hoped to represent a truer cost than during the pilot.

In addition, the methodology used to calculate VA inpatients costs changed between the Pilot program and the Phase II Program. During the pilot program, we had no VA method for comparing VA inpatient costs with private sector costs using Diagnostic Related Grouping (DRG). DRG costs were approximated using a detailed mathematical formula based on Medicare Costs. Between the Pilot Program and the Phase II Program, VA implemented the Decisions Support System (DSS). This enabled us to extract the specific VA costs of treating patients by DRG category.

SUMMARY OF KEY FINDINGS: Results of the ECF Phase II Program did not support the premise that contracting with hospitals in the private sector was more cost-effective than admitting the veteran to an available VA facility. While the ECF Pilot Program experienced private sector costs that were 85.5 percent of VA

costs, the cost of an inpatient admission during the ECF Phase II Program was approximately 33 percent higher than admission to an existing VA facility. While this conclusion is inconsistent with previous findings of the ECF Pilot Program, we believe there are specific instances where contracting for private sector care would be a more cost-effective alternative. For example, this would be the case when the capital investment costs to renovate existing facilities or to build new facilities are factored into the equation. VHA has been cited by GAO studies and others for expending millions of dollars maintaining old, under-used facilities that do not meet basic life safety requirements. In making decisions about whether to continue to maintain these facilities and invest the capital required to bring them up to current standards, the cost-effectiveness of contracting should be thoroughly analyzed especially in light of an overall declining veteran population. The cost of contracting out the inpatient portion of care may well be more cost-effective in instances when VA construction or a major renovation is required to accommodate inpatient care.

NEXT STEPS: Effective December 1, 2001, modifications were made to the inpatient hospitalization program, ECF Phase III due to budget constraints. Changes will help offset the increasing total costs of operating the program. Contracts were awarded to one medical/surgical provider and one mental health care provider in Brevard County for non-emergent inpatient care only. Veterans without alternate health care coverage (i.e., Medicare, Insurance, HMO) will be referred by primary care providers at the Viera OPC to these facilities for non-emergent hospitalization. Emergency admissions for service connected conditions will be covered by the existing fee basis program, or through emergency care provisions as outlined in the Millennium Bill for veterans with no other form of health care. Although the Phase III Program was only recently initiated, we believe the number of veterans using this program will be significantly reduced and, therefore, the total cost of operating the program will be manageable.

Comparisons with the ECF pilot are noted in bold.

SEC. 5. PILOT PROGRAM FOR COORDINATION OF AMBULATORY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1725 the following new section:

`Sec. 1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program

`(a) PILOT PROGRAM- Subject to the availability of funds specified in subsection (g), the Secretary shall carry out a pilot program in not more than four geographic areas of the United States to improve access to, and coordination of, inpatient care of eligible veterans. Under the pilot program, the Secretary, subject to subsection (b), shall pay certain costs described in subsection (b) for which an eligible veteran would otherwise be personally liable. The authority to carry out the pilot program shall expire on September 30, 2006.

`(b) PAYMENT OF COSTS- In carrying out the program described in subsection (a), the Secretary may pay the costs authorized under this section for hospital care and medical services furnished on an inpatient basis in a non-Department hospital to an eligible veteran participating in the program. Such payment may cover the costs for applicable plan deductibles and coinsurance and the reasonable costs of such inpatient care and medical services not covered by any applicable health-care plan of the veteran, but only to the extent such care and services are of the kind authorized under this chapter.

East Central Florida Hospitalization Program (ECF) pays cost of care for eligible patients at contract facilities. Contract is based on discounted Medicare rate. VA does not pay any patient co-payments or deductibles. Non service connected and service connected veterans treated for non-service connected conditions who have health plans (i.e. HMO , Medicare and/or private insurance) are not eligible under the program.

Eligible patients*: those veterans enrolled and receiving care at the Brevard/Viera OPC during the past 24 months who

- are not covered by a health care plan and need admission for a non-emergent condition or
- service -connected veterans being treated for a non-emergent service connected conditions

The Secretary shall limit the care and services for which payment may be made under the program to general medical and surgical services and shall require that such services may be provided only upon preauthorization by the Secretary.

ECF covers medical, surgical and psychiatric non-emergent admissions. Emergent admissions are covered under provisions of Millenium Bill or fee basis authority

`(c) ELIGIBLE VETERANS- (1) A veteran described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1710(a) of this title is eligible to participate in the pilot program if the veteran--

`(A) is enrolled to receive medical services from an outpatient clinic operated by the Secretary which is (i) within reasonable proximity to the principal residence of the veteran, and (ii) located within the geographic area in which the Secretary is carrying out the program described in subsection (a);

`(B) has received care under this chapter within the 24-month period preceding the veteran's application for enrollment in the pilot program;

ECF same

`(C) as determined by the Secretary before the hospitalization of the veteran (i) requires such hospital care and services for a non-service-connected condition, and (ii) could not receive such services from a clinic operated by the Secretary; and

`(D) elects to receive such care under a health-care plan (other than under this title) under which the veteran is entitled to receive such care.

`(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to reduce the authority of the Secretary to contract with non-Department facilities for care of a service-connected disability of a veteran.

ECF –Service Connected veterans are included in ECF program and can elect hospitalization at either a VA hospital or contract non-VA facility for a non-emergent service connected condition

`(3) Notwithstanding subparagraph (D) of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall ensure that not less than 15 percent of the veterans participating in the program are veterans who do not have a health-care plan.

ECF- approximately 80 % of veterans currently participating in program have no health plan.

`(d) CASE MANAGEMENT- As part of the program under this section, the Secretary shall, through provision of case-management, coordinate the care being furnished directly by the Secretary and care furnished under the program in non-Department hospitals to veterans participating in the program.

ECF – has a full time RN who case manages every patient approved for hospitalization at a contract non-VA facility

`(e) DESIGNATION OF PARTICIPATING SITES- (1) In designating geographic areas in which to establish the program under subsection (a), the Secretary shall ensure that--

`(A) the areas designated are geographically dispersed;

`(B) at least 70 percent of the veterans who reside in a designated area reside at least two hours driving distance from the closest medical center operated by the Secretary which provides medical and surgical hospital care; and

ECF – Brevard/Viera Clinic is located 115 miles (2.25 hours) from West Palm Beach VA, 131 miles (2.5 hours) from Tampa VA and 169 miles (3 hours) from Gainesville VA. At least 70% of current patients reside 2 or more hours from a VA inpatient facility

`(C) the establishment of the program in any such area would not result in jeopardizing the critical mass of patients needed to maintain a Department medical center that serves that area.

`(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B), the Secretary may designate for participation in the program at least one area which is in proximity to a Department medical center which, as a result of a change in mission of that center, does not provide hospital care.

`(f) REPORTS- (1) Not later than September 30, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience in implementing the pilot program under subsection (a).

`(2) Not later than September 30, 2005, the Secretary shall submit to those committees a report on the experience in operating the pilot program during the first two full fiscal years during which the pilot program is conducted. That report shall include--

`(A) a comparison of the costs incurred by the Secretary under the program and the cost experience for the calendar year preceding establishment of the program at each site at which the program is operated;

The methodology for this should be determined well before the pilot programs begin. This process is much more complex than it may seem. ECF admissions for FY 2001 reflected inpatient costs at contract facilities to be approximately 33% higher than at a VA facility.

`(B) an assessment of the satisfaction of the participants in the program; and

ECF-92% of participants rate overall satisfaction with ECF program as good or excellent .

`(C) an analysis of the effect of the program on access and quality of care for veterans.

`(g) FUNDING LIMITATIONS- (1) The total amount expended for the pilot program in any fiscal year (including amounts for administrative costs) may not exceed $50,000,000.

`(2) Any expenditure of funds for the pilot program shall be made from amounts in the Medical Care Collections Fund attributable to collections under section 1729 of this title. No funds may be expended to support the purposes of this section from any other funds available to the Secretary for the delivery of health care services to veterans, including funds appropriated or otherwise available for the care and treatment of veterans who require specialized care and resources.

`(h) HEALTH-CARE PLAN DEFINED- For purposes of this section, the term `health-care plan' has the meaning given that term in section 1725(f)(3) of this title.'.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1725 the following new item:

`1725A. Coordination of hospital benefits: pilot program.'.

Thank you for your proposal of last Thursday regarding the liability provisions of terrorism insurance legislation. We understand your proposal to include a federal cause of action and consolidation of all cases in federal court, both at pre-trial and trial proceedings, arising out of a terrorist event, and to include the standard for award of punitive damages contained in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act.

In response to that offer, we propose the following:

Federal Cause of Action and Consolidation of Cases. We agree with you on the need for a federal cause of action and consolidation of cases at the pre-trial and trial stages.

Punitive Damages. The standard for award of punitive damages would be as set out in H.R. 1, as you have proposed.

Non-economic Damages. The standard for award of non-economic damages also would be as set out in H.R. 1.

Attorneys' Fees. We propose a compromise on this issue. We would narrow the limit on attorneys fees contained in the House bill to apply only to damages drawn from the United States Treasury. This narrowed provision would simply continue the long-standing rule with respect to attorneys' fees contained in the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2678.

Procedures. We propose the following procedural protections: (i) settlement of cases under the program would be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Treasury; and (ii) the federal district judge would determine whether punitive damages were warranted and, if so, the amount of the award. Any final bill also should address secondary issues such as subrogation and arbitration as to which we would not anticipate any disagreement.

We are hopeful that our proposal will bring us closer to an agreement on this important issue. We look forward to your prompt response to this proposal.

Dear Mr. Charnes:

We at the RAND Institute for Civil Justice are examining policy options for compensating individual and business losses from terrorist attacks (see attached project description). As part of the study, we are interviewing people who are thinking about this issue from different perspectives. We would like to talk to Mr. Dinh or someone in your office about perspectives of the DoJ. We will be talking directly with Mr. Feinberg, so will not need to discuss the details of the Victim Compensation Fund. Rather, we would like to have a more general disucssion of what has worked well, what has worked poorly, in the response to 9/11 and the advantages and disadvantages of differnt approaches moving forward (e.g. liability limitations, a federal insurance backstop, etc.).

We will be in Washington DC October 9, 10, and 11. Would you or someone in your office be able to meet with us then? The discussion will be confidential and should last one hour or so. The results of our investigation will be written up in a publicly available report.

Good times for us would be
Wed Oct 9 at 11:15
Wed Oct 9 at 4:00 (or later)
Friday Oct 11 at 11:00

Designing Systems for Compensating Losses from Terrorist Attacks

A Study Conducted by the Institute for Civil Justice at RAND

The terrorist attacks on September 11 caused staggering losses to life and property. Early estimates are that the insurance industry will pay out between $35 billion and $75 billion, by far the largest single-event insurance loss in U.S. history. Congress has stepped in with the September 11th Compensation Act of 2001 to limit liability and provide assistance to airlines and individuals injured in the attacks.

How we as a society compensate the individuals and businesses harmed by terrorist attacks has significant implications both for the individuals injured as well as the economy as a whole. It not only determines the amount and speed of payments to individuals and businesses, but it also creates important incentives for risk-avoiding behavior and economic activity.

The purpose of this study is to assess the strengths and weaknesses of the current set of programs for compensating losses due to the terrorist attacks and the advantages and disadvantages of possible modifications. The study will assess policy responses to the September 11 attacks and examine precedents for government intervention both at home and abroad. This research will inform debates by discussing the advantages and disadvantages of various government responses including government involvement in insurance markets, limitations on liability, and government-run compensation programs.

This research is being conducting by the Institute for Civil Justice (ICJ) at the RAND Corporation. RAND is a non-profit organization headquartered in Santa Monica, CA. For over 20 years, the ICJ has informed the policy debate on compensation, liability, and legal process issues through independent, objective analysis. This research is part of a larger effort at RAND to develop responses to the terrorism threat. The project is funded both by RAND and the Institute for Civil Justice. The results will be released in a publicly available report in the first part of 2003.

Just to make sure we are on same page, the attorneys' fee provision in the House offer would, if actually written into law, require some kind of additional formula to apply it in a sensible way given overall financial structure of bill. My understanding is that House phrased this in these general terms in the offer today so that it would be a good talker/negotiating point, but that it will not be part of final package (and again, if it miraculously became part of the final package, would require further explication in bill language).

DRAFT

Dear X:

I am writing regarding S. 2798, in particular the amendment in the nature of a complete substitute intended to be proposed by Senator Durbin.

The bill would make significant revisions to the complex bankruptcy statute. Changes of this magnitude deserve careful study to ensure that they do not create unintended, even potentially destructive incentives for corporate debtors. Such incentives would hurt workers and creditors, and help no one. Given the sweep of the changes contemplated in S. 2798, the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold hearings before concluding consideration of the bill.

These are several of the questions a hearing could address:

(a) Section 2 would create a new "excess benefit test," requiring business leaders to hand back benefits beyond a statutory ceiling received up to four years before. While this provision is grouped with fraudulent transfers, the "excess benefit test" would not make fraud a requirement. Should it be, given the potentially massive liability that this provision would impose unexpectedly on a business leader, when his or her business failed? And should the business leader have to hand back the whole benefit – including the non-excess portion below the "excess" ceiling?

(b) Section 3 would create new restrictions on a debtor's ability to retain key employees and hire advisors. The provision seeks to protect the debtor's assets. Yet the bankruptcy statute must also give a debtor the means to hire talented leaders and professionals when the company's survival is at stake. Does this provision properly balance these two goals?

(c) Section 4 would take the apparently unprecedented step of converting equity interests in the firm in employees' pension plans into high-priority claims, even higher than Federal tax claims. In addition, the provision would value the equity interest as of the time of grant, which amounts to a quasi-guarantee on equity. Is privileging this type of compensation over wages and creditors' claims good policy? Part of the provision's goal seems to be to encourage diversification in employees' pension plans; is the bankruptcy code the right place to do so? And would the provision chill employers' willingness to grant matching stock?

(d) The bill would apply effective immediately, at the risk of throwing existing bankruptcy cases into disarray and re-ordering legal rights without notice to any claimants. Should the bill be prospective?

Hearings with bankruptcy experts would help resolve fundamental questions of this type. In light of the importance of the efficient workings of bankruptcy to our economy, I urge you to take such expertise into your deliberations.

Yours sincerely,

Subject: Final letter

Attached is the final version of the letter plus the attachments. The new Trott-related discussion is in footnotes 1 and 3. The number of days the nomination has been pending still needs to be added to the final paragraph, as of tomorrow.

No. I was going to add it at the top of page two. I will also add something to page 5 to take this info into account. Other changes to the letter have been made, and I will circulate a new version along with the charts to be attached shortly.

I assume this footnote is inserted after "Judge Steven Trott to the Ninth Circuit" on page 4.

The most recent version of the letter and attachments that I have is from Brett's e-mail of last Friday, sent at 3:28 pm. Unless I hear otherwise, and after people have had a chance to sign off on this footnote, this is the version to which we will add the footnote and prepare for Dan's signature.

Subject: New Footnote to Estrada letter

The last remaining item in the letter is the insertion of the following footnote:

"The nomination of Stephen S. Trott to the Ninth Circuit was delayed by a dispute between the Committee and the Deparment with respect to access to internal documents wholly unrelated to Judge Trott. See Ruth Marcus, "Impasse
Over Justice Documents Ends; Papers Turned Over; Senate Confirms Trott to Court of Appeals," Wash. Post., Mar. 25, 1998, at A23. The Committee never requested that the Department provide it with documents created by Judge Trott as a Department lawyer."

Please advise asap whether this looks OK to you. If so, the letter is ready to go.
