B. Structure: The Program will consist of a privately funded, publicly administered fund that will provide the resources necessary for operation of the Program and payment of compensation to asbestos victims. The statute will establish within the Department of Justice an Asbestos Injury Compensation Board (the "Board"), whose members will be inferior officers of the United States, to implement and administer the Program.

1. Administrative Board: The Board created by the Act to administer the Program will be within the United States Department of Justice. The Attorney General shall exercise oversight of the Board, and shall require and publish periodic reports concerning the Program's performance.

2. Appointment of Board Members: The Board will have seven members, who will be appointed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

   a. The appointing Court will initiate the appointment process by soliciting comments and suggestions for appointees from defendant companies, victims' groups, organized labor, insurers and other interested members of the public during a 60-day period, after which the Court will appoint the Board members.

3. Board Rulemaking: Within 90 days of the appointment of its members, the Board will promulgate a list and brief discussion of the various issues that the Board must address in order to draft the Program's governing regulations, and invite public comment over a subsequent 60-day period.

   a. Thirty days after the close of the comment period, the Board will promulgate interim regulations. This will enable the Board to begin to process claims and make awards, so that the most seriously injured claimants are not subject to further delay while the Board considers further public comment. The Board will also invite public comment for a further 30-day period. Within 30 days after the close of the final comment period, the Board will issue its final regulations.

Note: The Board serves a narrowly circumscribed function with relatively little discretion.

(i) First, the Board is authorized to process individual asbestos personal injury and death claims associated with Major Compensable Illnesses (as defined below), but only pursuant to explicit statutory criteria governing eligibility and compensation amounts over which the Board can exercise no discretion (except in certain narrowly defined extraordinary circumstances set forth in the Act).

(ii) The Board has the responsibility, delegated to it by Congress, for establishing rules and procedures for determining eligibility.

(iii) The Board is responsible for issuing regulations regarding the documentation of claims, the conduct of hearings, and the other ministerial functions necessary to implement and carry out the process of receiving and processing claims.

(iv) The Board would have broad audit authority over claimants and other entities submitting information or diagnoses under the Program. The statute would provide substantial civil and criminal penalties for knowingly filing false information and for fraud.

(v) The Board will be authorized to retain private claims payment facilities to administer the claims payment aspects of the Program under the relevant statutory and regulatory standards. (See Section I.C.4. on Processing Units below).

C. Procedure - Claim Processing

1. Award Calculation: To the extent a formulaic approach to compensation is used (discussed below), the Board will develop a precise and detailed methodology for applying the statutory formula for the calculation of individual claimant awards based on information submitted by each claimant. There will be three considerations in determining a claimant's award: (1) lost wages, (2) medical expenses, and (3) pain and suffering.

Note: No such methodology is necessary if the statute prescribes scheduled amounts for all claimants for each compensable disease, which aggregate those elements into a single number.

2. Processing Method: Compensation will be awarded to eligible claimants upon the receipt and evaluation of applications and supporting evidence submitted in writing to the Board pursuant to its regulations.

3. Burden of Proof: Claimants shall bear the burden of proving the eligibility criteria and award amounts through the introduction of competent and persuasive evidence.

4. Processing Unit: After proposals have been solicited, received, and evaluated, a private entity will be engaged by the Board to receive and process claims on the Board's behalf. This is similar to the process now used for processing Medicare claims. The entity's responsibilities will include:

   a. setting up a claimant assistance program to respond to claimant inquiries and to assist claimants and counsel in preparing and submitting claim applications;

   b. confirming that all necessary documentation and other material has been submitted by each claimant;

   c. applying the eligibility criteria (exposure, medical, and diagnostic) to determine a claimant's eligibility to receive compensation under the Program;

   d. applying the award calculation methodology with respect to each eligible claim to calculate a claim award or applying a scheduled value for each disease category; and

   e. advising the claimant of the eligibility determination and amount of the award, if any, and responding to inquiries about the eligibility determination and award calculus.

   Note: The resources necessary for operation of the Processing Unit could be accommodated by existing claims resolution facilities and private companies that will no longer be utilized in the tort system for asbestos bodily injury claims. These entities already have the expertise needed for administration of such an operation.

D. Administrative Appeals and Judicial Review

1. Administrative Review: A claimant may request an administrative review of the Board's claim decision.

   a. Review Panel: The Board shall create a Review Panel to hear and decide administrative appeals by claimants dissatisfied with any eligibility or compensation decision of the Board. The Review

REV_00160156

Panel will consider only the materials considered by the Board in its claim decision, plus a written statement setting out the claimant's reasons for challenging the Board's decision.

b. Standard of Review: The Review Panel will affirm the Board's claim decision unless it finds that the decision is arbitrary and capricious.

c. Submission of Additional Material: A claimant may petition the Review Panel in writing for an opportunity to submit supporting evidence not available to the claimant at the time of application to the Program. The Review Panel will grant permission to submit additional material in extraordinary circumstances.

2. Judicial Review: Aggrieved parties may seek judicial review of the Program, of a funding participant's allocation, and of an individual eligibility determination as follows.

a. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit will have exclusive jurisdiction to hear challenges to the statute and the regulations implementing the Program. Not later than 30 days following promulgation of the final rules implementing the Program, any aggrieved party may seek judicial review of (1) the constitutionality of the Act or of the regulations promulgated by the Board, and (2) whether any of the regulations promulgated by the Board are arbitrary, capricious, or otherwise not in accordance with law, exceed statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitation, or are short of statutory right. The court will not have authority to issue a stay pending review. Issues that were or could have been raised in any such challenge may not be raised in subsequent challenges to individual eligibility determinations. The statute may also provide for immediate review of any constitutional action for declaratory or injunctive relief with expedited appellate review by the Supreme Court.

b. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit will have exclusive jurisdiction to hear challenges by individual funding participants to the funding assessments for that participant. The legislation will establish the allocation principles which may be challenged once under paragraph a. above. This provision allows individual entities to challenge only the application of those principles to their particular circumstance. Any such challenges must be filed within 30 days following the assessments of funding participants. The court will not have authority to stay the funding obligations of any party pending review.

c. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Circuit of the claimant's residence will have jurisdiction to hear challenges to individual eligibility decisions, but only after the claimant has received a final decision of the Review Panel. The reviewing court will set aside an individual eligibility decision only if, upon consideration of the record before the Review Panel, the court concludes the decision is arbitrary and capricious. The scope of judicial review does not include compensation awards; compensation will be determined solely under the standards of the Program.

Note: There is no constitutional requirement that claimants be afforded the opportunity to seek judicial review of the Board's individual claim decisions. If the legislative goal is to preclude such review, however, the statute must expressly include a provision such as the following: "Individual claim decisions by the Board are (1) final and conclusive for all purposes and with respect to all questions of law and fact other than constitutionality; and (2) not subject to review by another official of the United States or by a court by mandamus or otherwise."

E. Payment of Awards

1. Priority of Payment: The Program will allow for a substantial down payment of full claim value to all living mesothelioma victims on an accelerated basis. For exigent circumstances and in cases of extreme hardship caused by asbestos-related disease, the Program will allow for expediting payments made to such claimants.

2. Scheduled Payment of Awards: Individual claimants will receive structured payments.

II. Eligibility

Subject to the eligibility criteria set forth below, the statute will establish a no-fault compensation system under the Program. Claimants would not be required to show that the injury for which the claim is made resulted from the negligence or other fault of any other person. Under this provision, the Program avoids the time-consuming and expensive process of litigating product identification and fault. In this respect, the Program will operate in the same manner as a worker's compensation program, in which rapid and certain recovery is substituted for the uncertain, time-consuming, and expensive process of obtaining recoveries under the tort system.

A. Eligibility Standards: In order to be eligible for compensation under the Program, a claimant must (1) demonstrate significant occupational exposure to asbestos, and (2) suffer from a compensable medical condition, as (3) diagnosed pursuant to the standards in the Program.

1. Exposure Criteria: To be eligible for compensation under the Program, a claimant must establish sufficient exposure to asbestos to qualify for compensation.

   a. For mesothelioma claims, claimants must demonstrate medically sufficient levels of exposure. Mesothelioma victims with take-home exposures will qualify under the Program. The Program is expected to provide prompt compensation to mesothelioma victims that satisfy the criteria.

   b. For all other claims, claimants must demonstrate medically sufficient levels of "significant occupational exposure" appropriate for each disease category. The term "significant occupational exposure" means employment for a cumulative period of at least five years, in an industry and an occupation in which the claimant (i) handled raw asbestos fibers on a regular basis, (ii) fabricated asbestos-containing products so that the claimant in the fabrication process was exposed on a regular basis to raw asbestos fibers, (iii) altered, repaired or otherwise worked with an asbestos-containing product such that the claimant was exposed on a regular basis to raw asbestos fibers, or (iv) worked on a regular basis in close proximity to workers engaged in the activities described in (i), (ii), and/or (iii).

   c. Claimants will also be required to show that the delay between exposure and illness is consistent with Board-endorsed medical criteria concerning the latency periods typically associated with that disease category.

2. Medical Criteria:

   a. Major Compensable Illnesses: Claimants will be eligible for compensation under the Program for the following enumerated Major Compensable Illnesses:

      i. Mesothelioma
      ii. Lung cancer
      iii. Other compensable cancers
      iv. Qualifying non-malignant asbestos-related diseases.

Note: Like other legislative options, a national claims facility will need to establish medical criteria, but can have more flexibility to compensate victims among a variety of disease categories. Importantly, a facility can assure quick payment to these victims by avoiding the necessity for protracted and expensive litigation to establish product identification, causation and fault. We have worked for many months to establish appropriate criteria and standards with medical experts and those representing victims of asbestos exposure. We have been working with a variety of criteria from other contexts, including those of the Manville Trust, the Georgine settlement, the American Bar Association (ABA) standards, the standards in S.413 (Nickles), as well as those proposed by doctors representing organized labor and victims. The difficulty in resolving these issues is not unique to the ASG proposal as, for example, was demonstrated when Dennis Archer agreed at the recent hearing to reconsider some of the language in the ABA proposal. Resolution of this issue will require Congress to determine the appropriate policy choice after assessing various stakeholder positions.

3. Diagnostic Criteria: Claims must meet diagnostic criteria for a medical diagnosis to be accepted for purposes of Program eligibility. The Board must have reasonable confidence that the medical evidence provided in support of the claim is credible and consistent with recognized medical standards. Claimants would have to demonstrate the existence of a compensable disease by a treating physician diagnosed as part of an in-person medical exam by that physician. A claimant's complete work history, exposure pattern, and smoking history, among other factors, would be reviewed by the physician as part of the diagnosis. Other more likely causes of a claimant's condition would also have to be excluded by the physician submitting the diagnosis to the Program. The statute will instruct the Board to require the submission of x-rays, detailed results of pulmonary function tests, laboratory tests, tissue samples, results of medical examination or reviews of other medical evidence, and require that medical evidence submitted comply with recognized medical standards regarding equipment, testing methods, and procedure to assure that such evidence is reliable.

Note: There has been widespread criticism of the quality of medical evidence utilized to sustain awards for asbestos exposure in the tort system. This provision gives the Board authority to formulate standards insuring use of high quality medical evidence as a basis for awards of compensation. The Board may utilize existing standards when appropriate. For example, the statute could provide that pulmonary function testing must meet the quality criteria established by the American Thoracic Society and to be performed on equipment in material compliance with the Society's standards for technical quality and calibration. Other diagnostic criteria must also be included in the statute for individual compensable diseases, for example, to exclude other more likely causes of a claimant's medical condition.

B. Limitations Period:

1. Future Illness: In order to be eligible under the Program, a claimant must submit a claim to the Program within two years of having received a medical diagnosis of a Major Compensable Illness or of having discovered facts that would have led a reasonable person to obtain a medical diagnosis of a Major Compensable Illness.

2. Current Illness: A claimant who, at the commencement of the Program, has a pending timely-filed claim in state or federal court, must submit a claim to the Program within two years of the Program's commencement date. Claims that are already time-barred would not be revived by the legislation.

3. Separate Disease Rule: Victims that receive compensation for one asbestos-related disease, but who later develop another disease, will be eligible for additional compensation under the program (subject to setoff for prior, duplicative recoveries).

III. Compensation

Note: We have evaluated two possible schemes to determine the compensation level for each eligible claimant. The first is a standardized benefit, which would award statutory values for each scheduled disease independent of a claimant's individual circumstances. The second is an individualized program, which would utilize a formula to compensate victims based upon actual lost wages, medical expenses, and statutorily set values for pain and suffering. Pursuant to either approach, the fund can be managed to pay a single stated value for each disease category, or to pay a specified average for each disease category. Either can be included in the Program after Congress determines its preferred policy option. Provided below is an outline of each approach.

A. Standardized Benefit – Scheduled Values

1. The Board shall compensate claims for Major Compensable Illnesses according to the following schedule:

Mesothelioma	----------
Lung Cancer (Level 2)	----------
Lung Cancer (Level 1)	----------
Other Cancers	----------
Qualifying Non-Malignant Asbestosis
Level 3	----------
Level 1	----------

Note: The success of a national claims facility will depend on its ability to pay fair values for compensable diseases on an expedited basis. We have been working to determine the range of compensation that could be paid to claimants at a magnitude we believe can be funded. Necessarily, the exact value will depend on resolving both overall funding and compensable disease issues. For example, incidence levels for mesothelioma are predictable to a high degree; it is most clearly associated with asbestos, and is typically fatal. For these reasons, the primary policy goal of the Program is to compensate mesothelioma victims expeditiously. Once these claims values are set, the values of other disease categories (and the ultimate size of the fund) can be established. Whether a claims facility can be enacted will ultimately depend on the political process to determine how much money must go to how many people.

2. The statute will reduce compensation amounts to reflect recovery from collateral sources for the claimant's Major Compensable Illness. This adjustment will account for all collateral sources, including life and disability insurance, pension funds, and death benefit programs. Collateral sources will also be defined to include amounts received from defendants or their insurers, because compensation awards under this Program should not duplicate amounts already received through suit or settlement. This provision is intended prevent the funds from the Program from being used to provide double recoveries.

3. The statute will not preclude recovery for smokers but would provide significant discounts for smokers unless an individual claimant can demonstrate that the medical cause of the disease is not the result of smoking. In those cases, claimants will be eligible for standard levels of compensation.

B. Individualized Program -- Formulaic Approach

1. Elements of Victim Compensation:

a. Lost Earnings: Claimants suffering from a Major Compensable Illness will be eligible for compensation for past and future lost earnings caused by the Major Compensable Illness.

i. Past and future lost earnings will be based on actual employment history.

ii. Total past and future earnings loss will equal the number of work-months lost by the claimant as a result of the Major Compensable Illness, multiplied by the degree of work-related disability caused by the illness, multiplied by the per month value of the lost earnings.

(a) The number of work-months lost by the claimant will be based upon the average age of retirement for an American of the claimant's gender, less the age at which the claimant ceased working as the result of the Major Compensable Illness.

(b) If the claimant is deceased, the estate will receive 100% of the lost earnings up to the average age of retirement for an American of the claimant's gender in the relevant employment classification.

b. Medical Expenses: Eligible claimants suffering from a Major Compensable Illness will be compensated for reasonable medical expenses (past and future) related to the claimant's Major Compensable Illness and unreimbursed by third parties.

i. Past Expenses: Past medical expenses will be based on out-of-pocket, reasonable unreimbursed medical expenses related to the diagnosis and treatment of the claimant's Major Compensable Illness.

ii. Future Expenses: Future reasonable, unreimbursed medical expenses will be reimbursed to claimants under the Program.

c. Pain and Suffering:

Note: Award amounts for pain and suffering remain to be determined.

i. Mesothelioma: Eligible claimants suffering from mesothelioma will be compensated a lump sum amount of $_____.

ii. Other Major Compensable Illnesses: Eligible Claimants suffering from all other Major Compensable Illnesses will be compensated for pain and suffering as follows based on the listed disease categories:

Lung Cancer (Level 2) ----------
Lung Cancer (Level 1) ----------
Other Cancers ----------
Qualifying Non-Malignant Asbestosis
Level 3 ----------
Level 2 ----------
Level 1 ----------

(a) Past pain and suffering will be based on the number of months between the date the claimant's Major Compensable Injury was diagnosed and the date the claimant applied to the Program.

(b) Future pain and suffering will be based on the number of months between the claimant's age at application to the Program and the average life expectancy for an American of the claimant's age and gender suffering from the claimant's Major Compensable Illness.

(c) If the claimant is deceased, the estate will receive the applicable monthly amount multiplied by the number of months between the date the claimant's Major Compensable Illness was diagnosed and the claimant's date of death.

Note: The amount of compensation for pain and suffering awarded to claimants suffering from mesothelioma will not vary by duration of the illness because of the unique nature of mesothelioma. Currently, mesothelioma is considered incurable and causes death rapidly after diagnosis (usually within 24 months, often within a year). Cancer and other non-malignant asbestos-related diseases are unlike mesothelioma in that in some cases the illnesses are curable and/or the illnesses can often be managed for much longer periods of time. The injuries suffered by different persons with the same non-mesothelioma Major Compensable Illness may vary greatly depending on the age of diagnosis and course of the illness. Therefore, the Program compensates claimants with the same non-mesothelioma Major Compensable Illnesses according to the duration of the disease.

IV. Program Funding

Funding raised under the Program will be distributed to eligible claimants by the Board pursuant to the Program. The Board will also be responsible for establishing a financial reserve and for managing assets of the Program to ensure sufficient resources to compensate victims in the future. The statute would include the following funding provisions.

A. Mandatory Participants: Funding needed for the Program would be raised primarily from current defendants in asbestos litigation that have paid a threshold amount of total defense and indemnity costs in asbestos tort litigation and from their insurance carriers. The threshold spending amount will be calculated on a gross basis, rather than net of insurance.

1. Claims: After the commencement date of the Program, and except for claims already reduced to final judgment, no personal injury or death claims arising out of exposure to asbestos nor any related claims for contribution or indemnification may be asserted or prosecuted in any state or federal court against any participant in the program.

2. Funding Levels: Based on extensive discussions with most of the insurers providing the bulk of the coverage for asbestos claims, we have little doubt that insurers can provide tens of billions of dollars of funding over the life of the Program while remaining financially stable. We believe that we have a reasonable, equitable approach to the allocation between insureds and insurers and to the allocation within the universe of insureds. We would be pleased to share our ideas with you, but this is an issue where the Committee will need to aid the affected parties to achieve a just solution.

3. Feasibility: Obviously, Congress will ultimately need to decide the appropriate level of funding for and duration of the Program, but, based on negotiations to date, it appears that there is sufficient funding available to create a fair and just compensation program outside the tort system. We would welcome the opportunity to update the Committee on the current framework of our negotiations.

4. Annual Assessments: Participants in the Program will pay annual assessments over the duration of the Program. Projections indicate that the funding required during the early years will taper off as the projected incidence levels of asbestos-related disease decline. The Program is expected to last until 2049, when projections of excess mesothelioma incidence (and lung cancer) caused by asbestos decline to zero, but the bulk of the payments will be made over the next 30 years.

5. Congressional Authority: Congress has ample authority under the Commerce Clause to require defendant companies and their insurers to fund an administrative compensation system, particularly where, in exchange for such funding, the companies and their insurers are relieved from the expense of liabilities under the tort system.

B. Voluntary Participation: Current defendants that have not spent the minimum or threshold amount in the system and possible future defendants would not be forced into the program, but could elect to participate voluntarily.

1. Assessments: Voluntary participants would be assessed annual payments less than those assessed for mandatory participants, and would make annual payments to the fund over the life of the Program. In exchange, they will obtain the liability protections afforded to mandatory participants. We recognize that voluntary assessments will take into account the size of the participants so as not to unduly burden small businesses.

2. Non-Participants: Those that do not participate voluntarily will remain subject to litigation in the tort system. If any of these defendants later exceed the threshold spending amount triggering mandatory participation in the Program, they would then be legally obligated to participate in the Program at levels comparable to mandatory participants.

C. Bankruptcies: Because the Program is expected to provide full and fair compensation for all victims of asbestos-related disease, it is expected that the current bankruptcies would be incorporated into the Program. In other words, by creating a program to fully compensate victims, it would be duplicative to leave existing trusts outside that system, so the Program will provide for incorporating them into the structure.

1. Confirmed Plans/Existing Trusts: Subject to constitutional limits, the statute would provide for incorporating assets of existing trusts into the Program. 524(g)

2. Pending Bankruptcies: For defendants that have filed for bankruptcy protection but have not received confirmed plans as of the date of enactment, the Program will assess financial contributions and annual funding requirements under the statute. Some defendants may elect to terminate their bankruptcy proceedings and emerge from Chapter 11 with their funding contribution determined under the statute; others may elect to continue with their bankruptcy and emerge with a confirmed plan, in which case they will be incorporated into the Program pursuant to the provisions for confirmed plans (above). Non 524(g)

D. Insurance and Reinsurance. Defendant companies have tens of billions of dollars in insurance coverage for asbestos-related liabilities pursuant to insurance contracts they have bought and paid for with substantial premiums. Similarly, the insurers who issued those contracts have in many instances ceded their risks, in whole or in part, to reinsurers in exchange for substantial consideration. Neither the defendants' insurance rights nor the reinsurance rights of the direct insurers should be prejudiced by the fact that the payments for which coverage is sought arise from this legislation rather than from continued operation of the dysfunctional asbestos tort system. The benefits of a no-fault claims facility are more likely to be realized if: (1) the policyholders have comfort that their insurers will contribute a fair share to the fund in accordance with their existing contractual obligations either to pay directly, or to indemnify the policyholders against, liabilities to asbestos victims; and (2) insurers have comfort that their reinsurance rights will not be prejudiced.

Note: We believe that properly constructed federal legislation altering rights under existing insurance contracts can successfully be defended against challenges under the Contracts, Due Process or Takings Clauses.

1. Structure: We envision that the legislation would prohibit defendants from seeking recovery of their payments to the trust directly from their insurers. In return for protection from such claims, the legislation would require that the insurers contribute directly to the trust. The insurance industry contribution might be structured in several ways: (1) as a fixed amount; (2) as a fixed share of the annual total funding assessment for the fund as a whole; or (3) by providing the defendants with the statutory ability to offset their annual assessments with the exercise of insurance credits, with the insurers' collective required contribution established by the exercise of these credits. We believe that option (2) is the most equitable and least likely to cause insurance companies financial issues or to create unneeded complexity in the claims facility system.

2. Allocation and Exhaustion: Under any funding method, the insurers will need to develop an appropriate method of allocating the insurance industry payment, similar to the effort among the defendants to allocate their required assessments. Similarly, under any funding method, the legislation should provide a method by which the insurers can apply their payments to the fund toward the exhaustion of any applicable aggregate limits remaining on policies issued to participating defendants. The manner in which these credits would be calculated and applied would depend on the ultimate structure of the fund.

3. Reinsurance: The legislation would address reinsurance issues, with a view toward ensuring that insurers' payments to the trust would be recoverable under reinsurance treaties and policies to the same extent as an indemnity payment on the underlying asbestos claims would be.

4. Claims for Past Expenses: Notwithstanding the provisions above, nothing in the statute is expected to bar claims against insurance policies for reimbursement for expenses incurred prior to enactment.

E. Structural Considerations:

1. Optional v. Mandatory: We have analyzed whether the fund could be created as a voluntary "opt in." We believe for a variety of reasons that it is far preferable to create a fund in which a sufficient number of asbestos defendants and their insurance carriers must participate. Otherwise, the sufficiency of the fund will be difficult to assess because we cannot know in advance how many defendants would choose to stay in the tort system. A mandatory fund, on the other hand, can raise substantial funding.

2. Caps (Annual and Aggregate): The overall size of the Program, as well as annual funding requirements, would be set by statute.

Note: The ASG recognizes that many traditional defendants have gone bankrupt and some of the trusts established on their behalf have experienced an unanticipated flood of claims, resulting in reductions in compensation levels – some to as little as pennies on the dollar – thus increasing the unfairness to victims. The ASG is actively engaged in efforts to avoid that risk even as we develop a program providing the requisite affordability, predictability and certainty for the financial obligations of those funding the Program.

3. Borrowing Authority: The Program will have limited borrowing authority to provide financial flexibility and to ensure compensation to eligible claimants in light of steady and predictable funding sources from Program participants.

F. Finality and Certainty for Funding Participants: Funding participants may elect to enter into a contract with the Board that will include at least the following terms:

1. The contracting funding participants, in the amounts allocated among them, will pay to the Board the funds that the Board will distribute to eligible claimants in the amounts and under the schedules specified in the statute.

Note: The final formula allocating Program costs among contracting funding participants will be incorporated in the statute and into the contract with the Board. We are working on funding formulas for differently situated defendants and are happy to share our current structure with you.

2. These payments will constitute the full and final extent of the contracting funding participants' liabilities for pending and future asbestos-related claims in the Program and, once made, the payments will fully and finally extinguish these liabilities.

3. If the contracting funding participants must sue the Board to enforce provisions of their contract, the Board will not assert any defenses based on its sovereign immunity or sovereign authority.

Note: In order to make secure the annual limitation on the funding participants' financial obligations, it is necessary to bind the government, insofar as that is possible, to the amounts and allocations specified by the statute. The general rule is that no Congress can bind its successors, but the Supreme Court recently held in the Winstar case that when Congress indicates in "unmistakable" terms that it intends a federal agency to relinquish its sovereign regulatory authority and bind itself by its contractual undertakings, it may do so. A number of lower courts have implemented Winstar's "unmistakability doctrine." A contractual device of the kind presented above appears to be the safest way to trigger this doctrine.

V. Federal Role

Despite the federal government's role with respect to asbestos exposure, the Program could be funded privately, without any direct government funding. We believe it is appropriate for the federal government to allow for tax-free accretion of the corpus of the fund, as proposed by Senators DeWine and Leahy in S. 1048 (107th Congress). Payments made to the fund should be construed as ordinary business expenses. Others have proposed additional roles for the federal government, which the Committee may wish to consider.

VI. Conclusion

There is broad agreement that asbestos litigation reform is urgently needed. The consequences of failing to act fall heavily on asbestos victims, the ever-increasing number of companies now defending asbestos actions even as the original producers of asbestos are bankrupt and gone, the insurance industry, which is weighed down by huge asbestos-related obligations, and all Americans who suffer the economic consequences of a system that is out of control.

The ASG has also reviewed possible approaches to solving the asbestos litigation crisis other than the one outlined in this submission. Many of them have aspects that are worthy of study and possibly may represent compromises that this Committee should consider if the approach outlined here is not feasible. We nonetheless believe that this approach is the best because (a) it assures prompt and full compensation for all the sick with the minimum amount of paperwork and delay, (b) other solutions inevitably involve more and higher wasteful transaction costs than a system that completely replaces the tort system, (c) other solutions are more difficult to price (and therefore provide less certainty for the defendants and insurers that would fund the system) due to the uncertainties inherent in litigation, and (d) more certain cost levels make it easier to assure that the funding mechanism will be sufficient to provide sufficient funds for victims and to avoid situations like the Manville Trust and the black lung program that have not been able to provide all of their promised benefits.

No public policy problem of this magnitude has ever been solved by private parties negotiating among themselves. Congress must be actively involved in any resolution as the only forum to resolve difficult political and policy questions. Of course, Congress cannot do it alone. Our efforts to explore workable solutions with key stakeholders has borne fruit. The issues that remain unresolved, while perhaps politically difficult, are by no means insurmountable unless stakeholders choose to make them so. There may yet be other issues we have not considered, and we look forward to meeting with the Judiciary Committee staff to discuss your thoughts as to this submission and other issues that you choose to raise. The ultimate merits of a claims facility, if it can be achieved, seems to be beyond dispute. We believe it is the best path to the bipartisan consensus to which the Chairman and Ranking Member committed at last week's hearing. We welcome further discussion.

Background on Annual Talk Show Conference:

Since 1997, Salem Communications has hosted an annual talk show conference for all their local and national hosts and producers. They also include their editorial board and commentators, Salem's senior management, key station mangers and corporate news and public affairs staff.

The Talk Show Conference is designed to provide direction and guidance to the many voices of our talk and news platform, and to provide a forum for discussion on the most relevant issues of the day. Past speakers have included John Ashcroft and Chuck Colson.

Background on Salem Communications:

Salem Communications is a publicly held corporation providing religious & family themes programming distributed through four different platforms - Salem Radio, Salem Radio Network, Salem Web Network, Salem Publishing.

Salem Radio owns and operates 89 radio stations, including 55 stations in the top 25 markets. Salem is the 3rd largest radio operator in top 25 markets. Salem's focus is on Christian teaching and talk, music and general market (conservative) talk which is our fastest growing format. In addition to its radio properties, Salem owns the Salem Radio Network (SRN), which syndicates talk, news and music programming to over 1,600 affiliated radio stations throughout the United States.

On the non-broadcast side, Salem owns OnePlace.com and Crosswalk.com, leading Internet providers of Christian focused content (over 3 million unique visitors per month); and Salem Publishing, a leading producer of contemporary Christian music trade and consumer publications such as Faith Talk magazine.

Ernie Fletcher
Restoring hope.
Kentucky Governor

A child born in Kentucky was once so fortunate, so filled with hope. Kentucky can be that way again.

Ernie Fletcher and his running mate for Lt. Governor, Hunter Bates, will rebuild Frankfort with people of rock solid values. They'll cut needless spending and attract business and good jobs again.

Ernie is a physician who knows how to heal healthcare and lower costs. He will improve education.

Ernie Fletcher will make our lives better. So that a child born in Kentucky can once again learn here, love here and prosper here.

REV_00160195

Ernie Fletcher and Hunter Bates will make our lives better. The jobs will come back, then our kids can come back and make a good living here.

A robust economy with good, new jobs
- Make Kentucky business-friendly again
- Improve roads and infrastructure
- Eliminate wasteful spending
- Balance the budget without raising taxes
- Preserve our family farms Strong, moral leadership we can be proud of

- Ernie's a doctor, a family man
- Married to his high school sweetheart from Lexington, Glenna
- He was a jet fighter pilot
- A Kentucky State Representative
- A United States Congressman
- Wrote the bill that helped put character education back in our schools
- He's led with distinction, brings honor to Kentucky

Affordable healthcare
- This doctor knows how to cure healthcare
- Make healthcare affordable and available
- Keep doctors in Kentucky
- Help Seniors afford prescription drugs

Restoring the hope that once was Kentucky
- Protect Kentucky's time-honored values
- Return us to honor and greatness
- A leader in Frankfort our kids can look up to

Statement of
The Honorable Anthony J. Principi
Secretary of Veterans Affairs
Before The Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives

March 19, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

I am pleased to be here this morning to discuss whether VA should provide veterans with pharmaceuticals prescribed by physicians or other health-care professionals who have no affiliation with VA. The subcommittee is considering five different bills concerned with this issue. I would like to generally provide the Department's views on the subject and the specific bills under consideration, and answer any questions you may have.

Mr. Chairman, VA has in recent years faced an extraordinary demand for services. Many veterans enrolling in the VA system are seeking only pharmacy benefits. This has put unprecedented demand on VA for prescription drugs since open enrollment became effective in 1998. The growth in VA enrollment is due, at least in part, to the lack of a meaningful drug benefit for many seniors. I expect this demand to continue unless action is taken to address this federal health care issue. As more and more veterans have enrolled in the VA system seeking affordable prescription drugs, VA has been unable to provide all enrolled veterans with services in a timely manner, and we have been forced to place many veterans on waiting lists for primary care. This difficult situation has generated great interest in having VA begin to fill prescriptions from outside providers.

Let me begin by saying that I plan to work closely with this committee as well as the Senate to find a solution to the vexing problem of waiting lists. A limited program under which we would fill prescriptions written for veterans by non-VA physicians may be part of that solution. We are particularly interested in exploring an effort that might allow us to fill prescriptions of enrollees who are unable to obtain timely services from VA until such time that we are able to eliminate waiting lists and fully serve all veterans who seek care. In addition to meeting an urgent need, such a program would provide us with valuable data upon which to make policy decisions in this area.

We have also had an opportunity to review the five bills currently being considered by the subcommittee. I want to explain why we are unable to support those specific bills, particularly those that would provide the Department with broad-based authority to routinely fill prescriptions written by non-VA physicians. I will first briefly describe each bill.

Discussion Draft

Mr. Evans, the Ranking Minority Member on the full committee, has prepared a detailed draft bill to authorize VA to furnish drugs and medicines ordered by non-VA physicians and other care providers to veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at least 50 percent (enrollment priority category 1 veterans) and to other veterans eligible for Medicare benefits. Medicare-eligible veterans would have to choose the new drug benefit in lieu of all regular VA health-care benefits available to enrollees today, and do so during an annual open season. Veterans in enrollment priority category 1 would receive the benefit in addition to the benefits of regular enrollment. VA would have broad authority to establish copayments and annual premiums, and all amounts collected from the Medicare eligible veterans would be deposited in the Medicare Trust Fund. In turn, HHS would have to transfer from the Medicare Trust Fund, to VA, sufficient funds to cover VA costs. Finally, the bill would permit VA, during the first five years, to limit participation in the program for administrative or fiscal reasons. However, by the end of five years, VA must provide the benefit to all those who seek benefits during the first year.

H. R. 709

H. R. 709 would direct the Secretary to furnish any veteran with drugs and medicines prescribed by any licensed physician if needed for the treatment of an illness or injury of the veteran. The provision of such pharmaceuticals would be subject to the same copayment requirements applicable to drugs and medicines furnished to veterans when prescribed by a VA physician. (The copayment is currently $7 for each 30-day supply of medication.) The bill would require the Secretary to furnish the pharmaceuticals without regard to whether the veteran was enrolled in the VA health care system.

REV_00160217

H. R. 5286

This measure is very similar to H.R. 709, except that it would direct the Secretary to fill prescriptions written by non-VA physicians only for enrolled veterans and only for medications on VA's formulary. It too would utilize the same copayment requirements that currently exist.

H. R. 372

H. R. 372 would do virtually the same thing as H. R. 709, the first bill I described, but on a very limited pilot basis. Thus, it would direct the Secretary to furnish veterans with drugs and medicines prescribed by any licensed physician if needed for the treatment of an illness or injury of the veteran, subject to the same copayment requirements applicable to drugs and medicines furnished to veterans when prescribed by a VA physician. However, VA would have to exercise the authority on a pilot basis in VISN I in New England. The pilot would last for two years, and the stated purpose for it would be to assess the advantages and disadvantages of having VA furnish these drugs and medications. The bill would require that VA report to Congress regarding the pilot.

H. R. 240

H. R. 240 would direct the Secretary to furnish any veteran with drugs and medicines prescribed by any licensed physician, or other health-care professional not affiliated with VA, subject to two conditions. First, as with the first two bills, the provision of pharmaceuticals would be subject to the same copayment requirements applicable to drugs and medicines furnished to veterans when prescribed by a VA physician or health-care professional. Second, the veteran would have to initially make an appointment with a licensed VA physician or other VA health-care professional for the sole purpose of obtaining the prescription and having it filled by VA. VA would have a 30-day period to provide such an appointment and to fill the desired prescription. VA would be required to fill the prescription written by the non-VA health-care professional only if it was unable to furnish the drugs or medicines, through a VA prescription, within 30 days. As we interpret the bill, only veterans enrolled in the VA health care system could have prescriptions filled under this authority.

Mr. Chairman, I said earlier that the Department does not support broad-based legislation like the first three bills I described. As you know, the Department now provides enrolled veterans with a complete spectrum of health-care services on both an inpatient and outpatient basis. With very limited exceptions, we furnish drugs and medications to those veterans only in the course of providing them with medical care. Our prescription benefit is only one component of the continuum of care that we furnish veterans. It is not an "add-on" or "carved-out" benefit.

To provide veterans with a so-called "add-on" pharmacy benefit would constitute an expanded service that, without additional new funding, would tend to erode the comprehensive medical care benefits that veteran users of the VA health care system now enjoy. VA estimates that on average, it cost VA $664 per veteran in FY2002 for outpatient prescriptions and we expect that amount to increase this fiscal year. Those costs assume that VA would fill prescriptions in accordance with VA's national formulary. Without that limitation, the cost of filling prescriptions would be significantly higher.

As you also know, we currently fill many prescriptions from veterans through our Consolidated Mail Outpatient Pharmacies (CMOPs). At the present time, our CMOPS are operating at near capacity. A recent study suggested VA would need to expand CMOPs significantly by 2005 just to keep up with workload being generated by prescriptions written by VA providers. VA would need new capital infrastructure, and lead-time, to assume any significantly increased workload from prescriptions written by private physicians. It is also unreasonable to expect that VA could quickly and easily expand capacity in local medical center pharmacies. VA pharmacies are often constrained by space, but more importantly, recruiting and hiring pharmacy personnel is very difficult. The marketplace for pharmacists is currently extremely competitive. In short, we would want to make certain that adding new workload from privately written prescriptions would not simply result in degradation of services currently available to veterans.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the bills you are considering today, H.R. 709 is the most far-reaching, and would be prohibitively costly. Under that measure, every Medicare-eligible veteran in America would be eligible for pharmacy benefits from VA. For all the reasons discussed above, we must oppose enactment of that bill. Similarly, H.R. 5286 is very broad-based and would also be very costly. H.R. 372 would also provide a virtually unlimited benefit, but in only one geographic area. We think it is very difficult to justify providing benefits to veterans in only one location, even on a pilot basis. That is particularly the case with this bill because the veteran seeking benefits would not be required to forego other VA healthcare benefits if he or she chooses to take advantage of the new benefit. Thus, we also oppose that measure.

The draft bill prepared by Mr. Evans would, in short, provide a comprehensive pharmaceutical benefit to all Medicare-eligible veterans in America. As such, it is potentially very expensive. Moreover, this administration currently has a proposal before the Congress to provide a pharmaceutical benefit to Medicare beneficiaries and believes that is the appropriate way to provide for that population.

H.R. 240 is a somewhat more limited measure in that veterans could obtain benefits only if they are unable to obtain them from VA within 30 days. In our view, H.R. 240 appears to be aimed at addressing the problem VA has with being unable to provide all enrolled veterans with timely access to a primary care visit during which they could receive appropriate medications. However, we believe the bill would need some revision to actually solve that problem.

Now that we have our appropriation for the current fiscal year, we expect to quickly make significant headway toward reducing the time it takes for enrollees to obtain an appointment with a VA primary care provider. When enrolled veterans are able to receive timely primary care, there is no need for them to seek care, including prescriptions, in the private sector. However, we all know that there will always be situations when care cannot be provided as quickly as we would like. Let me give you just one example. We may have a small community based outpatient clinic staffed by a physician and a nurse practitioner. If one of those providers leaves, it sometimes takes a considerable length of time to recruit and hire a replacement. During that period, it may be very difficult to provide primary care in as timely a manner as we would like and expect. That is the type of situation in which I would like to have the authority to fill prescriptions written by non-VA providers. I want to be able to provide enrolled veterans with assurances that they will always be able to receive medications when they need them and to reduce the financial burden of out-of-pocket drug expenses that they will incur while waiting for VA medical care. I look forward to working with you to take care of that kind of problem.

While we will continue to work with the Congress on this issue, I have also directed VA staff to explore and provide me recommendations for administrative approaches to initiate a limited program for filling prescriptions written by non-VA providers for enrolled veterans who are on waiting lists for VA care. Any approach we take to address this critical issue, whether through legislation or administrative action, must be a measured approach. I believe a solution must be carefully designed to ensure that no veteran enrolled in the VA system is required to wait an unreasonable length of time for health care. We must also take care to ensure that the actions we take have no unintended consequences that could adversely affect VA's ability to provide timely, quality health care to enrolled veterans.

This concludes my prepared statement. I would be happy to respond to your questions.

Attached is the final version of the brief, which was served and filed tonight. This version does not have the Table of Contents and Table of Authorities, since I don't have those on my system. If you would like the TOC/TOA as well, just let me know and I'll ask my secretary send you one on Monday.

If anyone would like a copy of the signed, bound version of the brief, just send me the address and I will have one sent out to you promptly.

We have already received a fax copy of the 2 briefs submitted by plaintiffs (the Colaio plaintiffs submitted one brief (63 pages), and the Smith and Schneider plaintiffs submitted a separate, joint brief (32 pages). I have sent a copy of each brief to Craig, who will circulate in DC.

Have a good weekend.

DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM OF LAW
IN SUPPORT OF THEIR MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendants Kenneth R. Feinberg, Special Master of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, John Ashcroft, Attorney General of the United States, and the United States Department of Justice ("Department") (collectively, "Defendants") respectfully submit this memorandum of law in support of their motion to dismiss.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In the immediate aftermath of the September 11th terrorist attacks, Congress created the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 ("the Fund"), enacted as Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act ("Act"). See note following 49 U.S.C. § 40101. Recognizing that victims and their families had suffered horrific and grievous harm, and realizing that ordinary tort litigation would subject victims and their families to a wrenching and protracted adversarial process that ultimately could leave most with little or no recovery, the Act created a taxpayer-funded no-fault claims fund to provide immediate, fair, consistent, and predictable compensation to eligible claimants through non-adversarial proceedings. The Fund is voluntary. Victims and their families seeking a different remedy – with greater risk, expense, and delay – may file a tort suit for damages sustained as a result of the attacks. To date, more than 1000 claimants have filed claims with the program, far exceeding the 60 or so victims who have elected the alternative of filing wrongful death tort suits for damages. The average award after the statutorilyrequired collateral source deductions is approximately $1.5 million. Awards thus far have been as high as $6.7 million dollars for physically injured victims and $5.7 million dollars for deceased victims.

Plaintiffs – most of whom are beneficiaries or representatives of specific decedents who earned extraordinarily high incomes (beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States) – bring this broad-ranging Administrative Procedure Act (APA) challenge to the regulations and methodology for determining awards administered by the Special Master to the Fund, Kenneth R. Feinberg. While plaintiffs have not submitted claims to the Fund, and thus do not (and cannot) know the amount of compensation they ultimately would receive under it, they nevertheless argue that, if they elected to submit claims, as a result of the regulations and methodology, they would be undercompensated when compared to a tort claim adjudicated in court. Certain plaintiffs go so far as to claim an entitlement to Fund awards as high as $28 to $40 million dollars. See Schneider Compl. ¶ 54.

Reduced to its essence, plaintiffs' argument that the Fund undercompensates high-end earners rests on two faulty assumptions: (i) that the "amount of compensation" awarded under the Fund must be based solely on the sum of a claimant's "economic and noneconomic losses," minus any collateral offsets; and (ii) that their "economic loss" under the Fund is required to be no more or less than the amount that would theoretically have been calculated if, instead of entering the Fund, they had filed wrongful death suits; New York law had been held to apply to those suits; they had prevailed; and they received the maximum possible damages permissible under New York law.

Wholly apart from ignoring the obvious point that there is no predictable way to determine what a jury award would be if plaintiffs were to sue in court, plaintiffs' claims are legally erroneous. They result from a fundamental misunderstanding of the plain language of the Act and its implementing regulations. Equally important, if accepted by this Court, plaintiffs' arguments – which, at bottom, challenge the Special Master's substantial statutory discretion in determining the amount of an award – would have a potentially devastating impact on hundreds of claimants or potential claimants who, in the absence of that discretion, would receive little, no, or substantially lower awards from the Fund. Indeed, plaintiffs' argument that claims previously awarded would have to be re-opened might well require the Special Master to reduce many awards that have already been issued. See Colaio Compl. at 32, ¶ 4 (seeking an injunction requiring that "any previously granted compensation awards . . . be deemed interim and subject to revision").

First, plaintiffs' suggestion that the Act requires awards based solely upon mechanistic calculations of the decedents' economic and non-economic losses, like many of plaintiffs' other challenges, stems from their wholesale disregard of one of the principal provisions of the Act, which governs the Special Master's award determinations. Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestions, the Act expressly requires the Special Master to determine compensation not only in light of the economic and noneconomic harm to the claimant, but also in light of claimants' "individual circumstances." See Act § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii). Consequently, Congress expressly rejected the notion that the determination of the award should be confined to a mechanical addition of economic and noneconomic losses, and plaintiffs can argue otherwise only by attempting to read out of the statute the additional factors Congress required the Special Master to consider. Moreover, the implementing regulations, which permit the Special Master to consider "the financial needs or financial resources" of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries in determining "individual circumstances" under the Act, see 28 C.F.R. § 104.41, are eminently reasonable and entitled to deference by this Court. Taken together, these provisions reject the mechanistic formula for determination of awards suggested by plaintiffs and permit considerable discretion to the Special Master in calculating awards.

Exercising that discretion, the Special Master has sought to guarantee that all victims and their families receive at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives. Thus, the Special Master has determined that families of deceased victims will rarely receive less than $250,000 after statutorily-prescribed collateral offsets. That is the case even when the amount of their collateral offsets approximates or even exceeds their combined economic and non-economic loss, and – if their award were determined through the strict mathematical calculation advocated by the plaintiffs – they would otherwise receive little or nothing from the Fund. Similar provisions of the regulations provide minimum awards for single decedents of $300,000, or $500,000 for those with families, regardless of economic loss. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.41. Beyond these regulatory provisions, the Special Master can use his discretion to address the financial needs of the full range of claimants, such as families with lower incomes or children left parentless where an economic formula alone would be insufficient. By challenging the Special Master's consideration of "individual circumstances" as part of the award calculation, a consideration required by statute, plaintiffs necessarily assert that the Special Master does not have discretion to provide appropriate awards for these families and the families of other decedents – including the firefighters, police officers, members of the military, secretaries, and janitors who also died that day.

Plaintiffs' second assumption – that the purpose of the Fund is to mirror what could be obtained through state tort law under a best case scenario – also is inconsistent with the Act, which requires a potential claimant to elect between the Fund and a tort suit, and which explicitly provides for Fund awards that could deviate in specific respects from damages which might be recovered in a tort suit. See Act §§ 405(c)(3)(B), 405(b)(5), 405(b)(6). Plaintiffs' claim that the Fund must provide the maximum award theoretically possible in a state law tort suit without the litigation risk, collection uncertainty, expense, attorney's fees, and delay inherent in any tort case (much less a suit for damages arising out of the September 11th attacks) simply makes no sense. Indeed, were that the case, there would have been no reason for Congress to have made the Fund voluntary, and no economic reason for a plaintiff ever to elect to sue in tort.

Plaintiffs' related challenges to the Fund must also be dismissed as a matter of law. First, plaintiffs' argument that the Act requires the Special Master to apply the specifics of New York law when calculating economic loss is simply wrong. The Act's definition of "economic loss" was drawn verbatim from other statutes that manifestly do not require such specific incorporation of state law. The Department, by regulation, has construed that definition here in a manner that is consistent with those statutory precursors and that does not require the Special Master to calculate economic loss in accordance with the specifics of every potentially applicable state law. This interpretation not only is reasonable, but it accords with Congress's desire that the Special Master review claims expeditiously (i.e., within 120 days of submission), prevents claimants from being treated differently based on where they lived or died, and gives the Special Master flexibility to calculate economic loss in a manner that, for certain claimants, may be more favorable than applicable state law.

Second, and contrary to plaintiffs' repeated claims, the Special Master has not imposed any "cap" on awards of compensation. Plaintiffs note that the regulations require the Special Master to develop a methodology for calculating presumed economic loss "up to but not beyond" the 98th percentile of average incomes in the United States, but that is a recognition that a rigid matrix calculation of economic loss on extraordinarily high incomes is inherently more speculative than at lower income levels. Extraordinarily high income normally depends upon the peculiar individual circumstances of the claimant, and the application of generous assumptions for lower income levels (work life, income stability/growth, consumption rate, etc.) are much more conjectural at extraordinarily high income levels. Variations in assumptions necessarily have an exponentially magnified impact in a formulaic calculation of economic loss at extraordinarily high income levels, which makes the credibility of the result more suspect than at lower income levels. Importantly, no high income claimant is required to accept a "presumed" award; to the contrary, every claimant has the right to request an individualized hearing where he or she can attempt to demonstrate "extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award." Although the Special Master has stated that awards in excess of $3 to $4 million will be rare, he has also stated that awards lower than $250,000 will be rare. This reasonable prediction is not a "cap" on awards, but merely a public acknowledgment that the regulations are designed to ensure a) that every claimant receives reasonable and fair compensation which reflects not only their economic loss from this tragedy but also their financial needs and resources and b) that, while differences in economic loss will exist from claimant to claimant, all lives lost in this attack have significant and comparable value regardless of income level.

In the end, the regulations governing the Fund not only are reasonable and "permissible" – they work. The regulations and methodology plaintiffs challenge have, for the most part, been in place since December 21, 2001, when the Department and the Special Master issued interim final rules, and numerous claimants have benefitted from those rules. While Defendants recognize that this case involves the most difficult and horrific of factual circumstances for each of the plaintiffs, it involves simple and well-established principles of administrative law that must be followed. Under these well-settled principles, the Department of Justice and the Special Master are entitled to broad deference in promulgating regulations to carry out the purposes of the Act. Each of the challenged regulations (as well as the challenged methodology) represents the most natural construction of the statute, and certainly a permissible one. Accordingly, plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed.[1]

---

[1] While this brief addresses at length plaintiffs' claims on the merits, their claims should be dismissed on the additional ground that this Court is statutorily precluded from reaching the merits. As set forth in greater detail herein, plaintiffs' claims are not reviewable under the Act's preclusion provision, which expressly precludes courts from reviewing "the matters that were the subject of the claim under review," see Act § 405(b)(3), including, of course, the amount of compensation awarded.

BACKGROUND[2]

A. Statutory and Regulatory Framework

1. The Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act

In the immediate days following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, Congress enacted the Air Transportation and Safety and System Stabilization Act. That legislation, signed by the President on September 22, 2001, provided financial aid to an air transportation industry threatened with collapse as a result of the terrorist attacks and sought to protect the American economy against the consequences of that collapse.[3] See note following 49 U.S.C. § 40101.

As part of that legislation, Congress also sought to address the grievous harms suffered by the thousands of victims of the terrorist attacks and their survivors. Title IV of the Act created the "September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001," see Act § 401, to address "the issue of legal liability for the tragic events of [September 11th]." See 147 Cong. Rec. S9594 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. McCain). As Senator McCain noted, while Congress wanted to ensure that the victims of this national tragedy received needed compensation, the "vast uncertainty of our litigation system posed significant challenges" towards achieving that goal. See id.

For example, Congress recognized that "some or all" of the victims could "receive no compensation from the courts" if the airlines were found not liable, see 147 Cong. Rec. S9594

[2] The administrative record in this case consists of six bound volumes, the last of which includes two CD ROMs containing the public comments related to the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund rulemaking. Each record document bears an identification consisting of the prefix "VCF" followed by a seven digit number (e.g., VCF101-0001).

[3] See, e.g., 147 Cong. Rec. S9599 (statement of Sen. Leahy) ("the airline industry of this country is in grave danger of collapse"; "[i]f Congress does not pass this legislation today, it is likely that all of our Nation's air carriers would cease service next Wednesday"); see also 147 Cong. Rec. S9600 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Byrd) ("[t]he Federal Government cannot allow this industry to fold without seriously disrupting the United States economy").

(Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. McCain) (emphasis added),[4] or could receive limited compensation if the airlines were bankrupted by massive judgments for both personal injury and property damage and victims and their families were forced to compete for a limited pool of funds and pay contingent attorney's fees. See id.; cf. id. at S9595 (statement of Sen. Hatch); id. at S9597 (statement of Sen. Clinton); id. at H5888 (statement of Rep. Shadegg). Congress also recognized that, even if the airlines ultimately were found liable, the litigation process would be lengthy, unlikely to relieve victims' urgent needs, and potentially "arbitrary" in its awards.[5] See id. at S9594 (statement of Sen. McCain); see also id. at S9595 (statement of Sen. Hatch) (noting the need for "consistency in the judgments awarded" in any tort suits).

Weighing all of these (sometimes competing) factors, noting the need to act, and recognizing it had no perfect solution, Congress concluded the national interest would best be served by giving victims and their families a choice of mutually exclusive remedies. For persons choosing the "litigation route," see 147 Cong. Rec. S9595 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Hatch), Title IV established a federal cause of action as the exclusive remedy "for damages arising out of the hijacking and subsequent crashes" of aircraft on September 11.[6] See Act §

[4] See also 147 Cong. Rec. H5892 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Rep. Spratt) ("in this case . . . the liability of the airlines is unsettled"); id. at H5913 (statement of Rep. Delahunt) (noting the "uncertainty . . . of protracted litigation" against the airlines).

[5] See 147 Cong. Rec. S9594 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. McCain) (noting "the tangle of lawsuits that will ensue" and "the unity that . . . will devolve in the courts to massive legal wrangling"); id. (statement of Sen. Hatch) (victims in the Fund will receive compensation "faster than they otherwise would if left to pursue claims through litigation"); id. at S9599 (statement of Sen. Specter) (Fund provides an alternative to "the long litigation process"); id. at H5913 (statement of Rep. Delahunt) (Fund provides an alternative to the "expense, uncertainty, and pain of protracted litigation"). See also 147 Cong. Rec. S9599 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Leahy) (describing children coming home to find "that they were orphans, and the mortgage is due in 2 weeks"); id. at H5906 (statement of Rep. Menendez) (describing families "who have been directly affected by this tragedy and who are in desperate need right now").

[6] In such an action, the Act provides that the "substantive law for decision . . . shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which the crash occurred unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law." See Act §

408(b)(1). Congress vested jurisdiction exclusively in this Court, see id. § 408(b)(3), and capped air carrier liability for compensatory and punitive damages at the "amount . . . [of] the limits of liability insurance coverage maintained by [the] air carrier." See id. § 408(a)(1). By amendment, Congress extended certain liability limitations to suits against aircraft manufacturers, airport sponsors, persons with a property interest in the World Trade Center, and the City of New York. See Aviation and Transportation Security Act at section 201 (Public Law 107-71).

The Act established the Fund as the alternative to litigation for victims of the terrorist attacks.[7] As Senator McCain noted, the Fund was not intended to "duplicate the arbitrary, wildly divergent awards that sometimes come from" the tort litigation process. See 147 Cong. Rec. S9594 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. McCain); see also id. at H5913 (statement of Rep. Bentsen) (noting that Congress preserved "the right [of families] to seek higher compensation through a legal case"). Rather, while the Fund was intended to provide a "generous administrative remedy," see id. at S9594 (statement of Sen. Hatch), most Members of Congress who addressed the issue described the Fund as a means to provide expedited "assistance" and "relief" to victims and their families. See, e.g.,147 Cong. Rec. S9599 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Leahy) ("[t]his program is targeted to help the neediest victims and their families"); id. at S9594 (statement of Sen. McCain) ("[t]he intent of the fund is to ensure that the victims of this unprecedented, unforeseeable, and horrific event, and their families, do not suffer financial hardship in addition to the terrible hardships they already have been forced to endure"). The text of the statute bears this purpose out.

The Fund is intended "to provide compensation to any individual (or relatives of a

408(b)(2).

[7] Although the remedies are generally mutually exclusive, persons electing the Fund do not waive their right to file either an action to recover collateral source obligations or an action to recover damages against any "knowing participant in any conspiracy to hijack any aircraft or commit any terrorist act." See id. § 405(c)(3)(B)(i).

deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of [the September 11th attacks]." Act § 403. Towards this end, Title IV authorizes the Attorney General, acting through a Special Master appointed by him, to administer the Fund, promulgate any necessary "procedural and substantive rules," and "employ and supervise" hearing officers and other administrative personnel. See id. § 404(a)(1)-(3). The Act further required the Attorney General (in conjunction with the Special Master) to promulgate regulations within 90 days of enactment, including with respect to procedures for hearing and presenting evidence and "other matters determined appropriate by the Attorney General." See id. § 407(3), (5).

Section 405(b) establishes the substantive guidelines for the Fund. Under Section 405(b)(1), the Special Master must "review" each claim and make certain "determinations." See Act § 405(b)(1). First, he must "determine" whether the claimant is "eligible" to receive compensation, i.e., meets statutory criteria establishing who was a victim of the terrorist attacks. See id. § 405(b)(1)(A). Second, if the claimant is deemed eligible, the Special Master must "determine . . . (i) the extent of the harm to the claimant, including any economic and noneconomic losses"; id. § 405(b)(1)(B)(i); and "(ii) the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled." Id. § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii). In determining the amount of compensation, the Special Master is given discretion to consider three broad factors: the "harm to the claimant," the "facts of the claim," and "the individual circumstances of the claimant." See id.

The first factor – "harm to the claimant" – includes "economic loss," which the Act defines as "any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law."[8] See Act § 402(7). The Act does not expressly define the other two factors for determining "the amount of compensation" (i.e., the "facts of the claim" and "the individual circumstances of the claimant"). See Act § 405(2).

[8] The "harm to the claimant" also includes "noneconomic losses," which the Act defines as "losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and

The Fund is a no fault compensation program, and the Act expressly precludes the Special Master from "consider[ing] negligence or any other theory of liability." See Act § 405(b)(2). The Act also bars the Special Master from awarding punitive damages, see id. § 405(b)(5), and requires him to reduce "the amount of compensation" by "the amount of the collateral source compensation the claimant has received or is entitled to receive as a result of [the attacks]." See id. § 405(b)(6). "Collateral source" is defined as "all collateral sources, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by Federal, State, or local governments related to the [terrorist attacks]." Id. § 402(6).

To expedite processing of claims, the Act provides that "[n]ot later than 120 days [after a claim is filed], the Special Master shall complete a review, make a determination, and provide written notice to the claimant, with respect to the matters that were the subject of the claim under review." See Act § 405(b)(3). The Special Master's determination of "the matters that were the subject of the claim" is "final and not subject to judicial review." Id. Payment must be authorized within 20 days of the date of a "determination . . . regarding the amount of compensation due." See id. § 406(a). No claim may be filed "after the date that is 2 years after the date on which regulations are promulgated under section 407." See id. § 405(a)(3).

2. Rulemaking History

The rulemaking required by the Act proceeded in three steps. On November 5, 2001, the Department published a "Notice of Inquiry and Advance Notice of Rulemaking" ("Notice"). See 66 Fed. Reg. 55,901 (2001). On December 21, 2001, the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, published an interim final rule. See 66 Fed. Reg. 66,274 (2001). On March 13, companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and all other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature." Act § 402(9).

REV_00160262

2002, the Department, again in consultation with the Special Master, published its final rule. See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,233 (2002). We discuss each step in the process below.

a. Notice of inquiry

The Department issued an "advance notice of rulemaking" to "obtain as much public comment as feasible" before issuing the required regulations. See 66 Fed. Reg. 55,901.[9] In describing its "general approach" to the regulations, the Department recognized the strong interest of potential claimants in obtaining information about how the program "is likely to operate in their circumstances." See id. at 55,902. Echoing statements during the congressional debates, the Notice stated:

> Litigation to obtain damages, particularly in a mass tort context, can be a lengthy, uncertain, and complex process, filled with substantial risk and expense. The purpose of this compensation program is to offer all potential claimants a more expeditious, predictable, and less complex alternative to that process. The Department recognizes that unless and until it can provide some certainty as to how the compensation award program will work, some claimants may be reluctant to commit themselves to the Fund as an alternative to tort awards.

66 Fed. Reg. 55,902-03.

The Notice solicited public comment on each of the topics Congress expressly required the Department to address by regulation. See 66 Fed. Reg. 55,902-04. In addition, the Notice solicited comment on "the nature and amount of compensation." See id. at 55,904. After summarizing the standard for determining the "amount" of compensation -- i.e., "based on the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant" -- the Notice stated:

> [E]ach of the perhaps thousands of determinations must be made in a very short period of time. Moreover, such determinations should be founded on consistent > and clear principles that treat each claimant fairly. The Department invites comments that identify the practical means to achieve these results all within the very short time period that Congress has permitted. Among other topics, the Department would welcome comment on whether and how schedules or statistical methodologies should be developed and used in reaching a determination for each claimant within the mandated time period.

Id. at 55,904.

b. Interim final rule

The interim final rule was published on December 21, 2001, within the 90-day statutory deadline. See Act § 407. In a statement accompanying the interim regulations, the Special Master explained the twin objectives of the regulations:

> (1) [t]o provide fair, predictable and consistent compensation to the victims of September 11 and their families throughout the life of the program; and (2) to do so in an expedited, efficient manner without unnecessary bureaucracy and needless demands on the victims.

66 Fed. Reg. 66,274.

Amplifying these objectives, the Special Master explained that the Fund offers "an alternative to litigation," a "fast track administrative compensation program . . . [without] the red tape, time and expense of a traditional lawsuit." 66 Fed. Reg. 66,274. And without the risk. A victim pursuing a tort claim, the Special Master noted, would be "compelled to litigate, probably for many years at excessive cost, and with all the uncertainty of result which is part of the litigation process." Id. As one commenter stated:

> As I am sure you are aware, this fund is a major undertaking not only because of the multitude of victims for whom it is intended to provide relief and tremendous cost to the American taxpayer, but also because these victims very likely will receive relief that they would not recover if they choose to go to court as per the normal course. This is because the fund was created to compensate without requiring proof of fault or liability -- which relieves the victims of the normal legal burden they will have difficulty overcoming in court with regard to this particular tragedy.

See VCF110-0072 (comment of Sen. Hatch) (Nov. 21, 2001).[10] For these reasons, the Special

Master noted, "[t]rade-offs are required in developing Fund procedures that are different than those in the more conventional lawsuit." 66 Fed. Reg. 66,274.

The interim regulations addressed a range of issues relating to the Fund, from the Special Master's decision to provide advance benefits to "needy" claimants, to his much-anticipated decision to generally exclude charitable donations from the definition of collateral offset compensation. For purposes of these lawsuits, the most important provisions relate to the claims evaluation process and the process for determining economic loss.

1. Procedure for claims evaluation

Although Congress required the Attorney General to promulgate regulations governing "procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence," Act § 407(3), it offered little guidance on what those procedures should be. While the Act permits the Special Master to decide each claim individually without giving any guidance to potential claimants, the Department and the Special Master created a "presumed award" process to give potential claimants some indication of the general range of their likely awards and to allow claimants to select, at their option, a quick, easy procedure without an individualized hearing.[11] Recognizing, however, that "one size and one system will not fit all," 67 Fed. Reg. 11,234, the regulations provide claimants an opportunity to seek individualized review of their "presumed awards" or to bypass the presumed award stage altogether. The interim regulations thus provided two procedural tracks: Track A and Track B.

Track A. Under Track A, a Claims Evaluator determines whether the claimant is "eligible" and, if so, the claimant's "presumed award." See 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(1). A claimant Nickles) (Dec. 17, 2001) ("I urge you to keep in mind that the Fund was created by Congress as a unique federal response to a situation where normal litigation may have left victims without recovery"); cf. VCF110-0107 (comment of Rep. Holt) (Nov. 19, 2001) (describing Fund as a "settle[ment] in lieu of litigating").

[11] The concept of a "presumed award" is discussed in more detail infra at pages 16-20.

deemed eligible may accept the presumed determination as final and request payment. Id. This offers a "simple and direct route," with "payment within a matter of weeks." See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,234. Alternatively, a claimant deemed eligible may request review and a hearing before the Special Master. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(1).

At a Track A hearing, the claimant may "present information or evidence that the claimant believes is necessary to a full understanding of the claim." See 28 C.F.R. § 104.33(b). The hearing is "conducted in a nonadversarial manner," 66 Fed. Reg. 66,280, and the claimant is entitled to be represented by counsel. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.33(d). Upon review, the Special Master "shall . . . determin[e]" whether (1) there was an error in calculating the presumed award (either because the claimant's individual criteria were misapplied or for another reason), or (2) the claimant presents "extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award." 28 C.F.R. § 104.33(f)(1), (2). This determination is final and not subject to further review. See id. § 104.33(g).

Track B. Track B provides an option for victims seeking an "opportunity to present their cases personally in greater detail." 67 Fed. Reg. 11,234. Under Track B, the Claims Evaluator determines whether the claimant is eligible, but does not determine the claimant's presumed award. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(2). Instead, eligible claimants proceed directly to a hearing. See id. At a Track B hearing (which is conducted pursuant to the same regulations governing a Track A hearing), the Special Master "shall utilize the presumptive award methodology . . . but may modify or vary the award if the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology." 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(2). The Special Master's determination is final and not subject to further review. See id.

2. The amount of compensation

Recognizing his broad discretion to determine compensation under § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii),[12]

[12] A number of commenters noted the discretion vested in the Special Master. See the Special Master explained that, after "careful consideration" of "the language of the Act, the varying public comments, evidence and data about the many victims of the [attacks], and economic and demographic studies," he and the Department had concluded that compensation decisions should be guided by certain overarching objectives. See 66 Fed. Reg. 66,277.

First, the Special Master explained, while not required by the Act, the Fund should provide claimants "some understanding of how their award will be calculated and how much they would receive from the Fund should they decide to file a claim." 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278. Second, he continued, "each claimant should, to the greatest extent possible, be treated fairly based on the claimant's own individual circumstances and relative to other claimants." Id. Third, the Special Master noted that, in light of Congress's requirement that compensation be determined in part based on claimants' individual circumstances, "[w]e have . . . concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of the claimants."[13] 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278. This interpretation of the statute is reflected in a Nickles) (Dec. 17, 2001) ("while Congress provided some specifics as to who is entitled to receive an award and the extent of the award, the details are to be decided by the Department of Justice and specifically by the Special Master . . . . [T]he Special Master, Kenneth Feinberg, has enormous responsibility to balance the needs of the victims and their families with the knowledge that American taxpayers may end up footing the bill for his decisions"); VCF110-0089 (comment signed by 45 representatives) (Nov. 15, 2001) ("[b]ecause it was important for Congress to act speedily, the legislation of necessity sets out broad guidelines and leaves to [the Attorney General] and [his] department the job of providing specificity so that these funds can be distributed fairly and expeditiously").

[13] See, e.g., VCF110-0073 (comment of Sen. Hatch) (dated Nov. 21, 2001) ("[a]s we all know, the fund was not created to give a windfall to these tragic victims, but rather to assist them in their time of need to get through the loss suffered at the hands of these terrorists"); VCF111-1333 (comment of Sen. Nickles) (Dec. 17, 2001) ("[t]he Fund should be administered with both the needs of the victims and the taxpayers in mind and with recognition of the impressive charitable reaction of the American people"); VCF118-0035 (comment of Rep. DeGette) (Dec. 21, 2001) ("[a]lthough there is no way to truly compensate for their loss the funds will bring help to those in need"); VCF101-0982 (comment of Consumer's Union) (Nov. 20, 2001) (noting the victims at the "lower end of the economic scale have likely suffered more severely in terms of relative economic harm than those at the top end, and to the extent that the regulation. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.41 ("[t]he individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries").

To achieve these objectives, the interim regulations require the Special Master to develop methodologies for calculating "presumed economic loss" and "presumed noneconomic losses" for decedents and claimants who suffered physical harm. See 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278. In determining presumed economic loss for decedents, the regulations require the Special Master to:

> develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim, including: The age of the decedent as of September 11, 2001; the number of dependents who survive the decedent; whether the decedent is survived by a spouse; and the amount and nature of the decedent's income for recent years. The decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for each of those three years.

28 C.F.R. § 104.43(a).[14] (As explained below, these last two sentences were amended in the final rule.)

The regulation further provides that "[t]he Special Master's methodology . . . shall yield presumed determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment for annual incomes up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000." 28 C.F.R. § 104.43(a). As the Special Master explained, the determination to provide presumed determinations "up to but not beyond the 98th percentile" was based on a government must balance the equities in making its determinations, compensation provided under the fund should reflect that economic disparity").

[14] With respect to noneconomic loss, the final rule established a presumed non-economic loss compensation of $250,000 for decedents and $100,000 for the spouse and each dependent of a deceased victim. See 28 C.F.R. § 104.44.

number of factors, including the Special Master's and the Department's interpretation of the "individual circumstances" requirement:

> The Department recognizes that projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets, and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization. We have also concluded that the purpose of the Act is not simply to examine economic and noneconomic harm, but also to provide compensation that is just and appropriate in light of the financial needs and resources of the claimants. Any methodology that does nothing more than attempt to replicate a theoretically possible future income stream would lead to awards that would be insufficient relative to the needs of some victims' families, and excessive relative to the needs of others. . . . [T]he Act's requirement that the Special Master consider "the individual circumstances of the claimant" indicates that the Special Master may consider a particular claimant's financial needs and resources.

66 Fed. Reg. 66,278 (emphasis added).

For example, the Special Master and the Department considered the "needs of the claimants" in establishing a policy with respect to minimum awards. See 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278. The Act does not establish a minimum level of compensation for claimants. But based on Congress's requirement to consider the "individual circumstances of the claimant," the Department and the Special Master wanted to "ensure that victims' families are receiving at least a minimum level of resources to help meet their needs and rebuild their lives." Id. at 66,274. Accordingly, the interim regulations provided that no claimant bringing a claim on behalf of a deceased victim should receive less than $500,000 (for a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent) or $300,000 (for a claim on behalf of a deceased victim with no dependents) before collateral source offsets. See id. at 66,278.

The Special Master emphasized that the methodology could not "take into account all of the individual facts and circumstances for every claimant," and that a claimant under either Track A or Track B could seek a departure from a presumed award based upon "a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances that the presumed award methodology does not adequately address." 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278 (emphasis in original).

3. Applicability of State Law

Finally, the interim regulation addressed the applicability of state law in determining a claimant's economic loss. As explained above, see supra p.12, the Act defines "economic loss" as "any pecuniary loss resulting from harm . . . to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law." Act § 402(7). By way of example, the Act lists several categories or types of "harm," including "the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment," "medical expense loss," replacement services loss," "loss due to death," "burial costs," and "loss of business or employment opportunities." Id.

Recognizing the ambiguity of the phrase "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law," the regulations interpreted the phrase as a limiting provision, to mean "that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim." 28 C.F.R. § 104.42. Each category or type of harm listed in the statute is factored into the determination of presumed economic loss for decedents. See id. at §§ 104.43(a)-(e).

c. Final rule

On March 13, 2002, the Department promulgated the final rule. As with the interim final rule, the final rule addressed a range of issues relating to the Fund, from collateral source offsets, to the Special Master's policy toward "minimum" awards. As before, these issues generally were resolved in a manner advantageous to claimants. See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,233-34; see also id. at 11,238. Moreover, while the Special Master also "announce[d] his intention" to meet with potential claimants to give "some indication" of how "broad categories of benefits" might be treated under the Fund, he cautioned that he "cannot, and will not, give a precise computation of an award before a claim is filed." Id. at 11,241.

With respect to the methodologies for calculating awards, the Special Master noted the comments were "starkly divided," 67 Fed. Reg. 11,233, and that the presumed award charts, while not part of the rulemaking, received more public comment than any other subject.[15] See id. at 11,236. Noting that he and the Department had "modif[ied] presumed economic loss in a manner that will further increase presumed awards," 67 Fed. Reg. 11,237; see also id. at 11,238, the Special Master turned to specific comments relating to the methodology for determining presumed economic loss and the claims evaluation process. We address the issues relevant to plaintiffs' claims below. Average income. The Special Master noted that several commenters raised issues "with respect to deriving a victim's average annual income from the years 1998-2000 in determining the foundation for calculating economic loss." 67 Fed. Reg. 11,237. Specifically, some commenters suggested that 2001 "is more indicative of a victim's actual earning potential." Id. In response to these suggestions, the interim final rule was amended to allow the Special Master "discretion to consider on a prorated basis a victim's income from 2001." Id.

The 98th percentile. The comments were divided over whether presumed awards should be calculated beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States. Although the Special Master did not change the provision in the interim rule setting the 98th percentile, he explained, in response to comments from high-end earners, that the provision was not a "cap" on economic loss recovery:

> To be absolutely clear: The fact that the 'presumed awards' address incomes only up to the 98th percentile does not indicate that awards from the Fund are 'capped' at that level. In extending the presumed awards only up to the 98th percentile, we merely recognized that calculation of awards for many victims with extraordinary incomes beyond the 98th percentile could be a highly speculative exercise and that, moreover, providing compensation above that level would rarely be > necessary to ensure that the financial needs of a claimant are met. Calculation of an award beyond that point using the presumed award methodology without a detailed record could very well produce inappropriate results. Accordingly, we permitted applicants with extraordinary prior earnings to accept awards at the 98th percentile or seek calculation of an award based upon a more detailed record.

67 Fed. Reg. 11,237 (emphasis added); see also id. ("it bears repeating that the Special Master's 'presumed award charts' are estimates and do not determine the final award for claimants who request individualized hearings").

Deduction for personal consumption. Noting that a "few" commenters were "oppos[ed] to consumption factors being used," 67 Fed. Reg. 11,238, the Special Master explained that a deduction for personal consumption – i.e., for the victim's share of household expenditures -- is "standard." Id. The Special Master noted, however, that his methodology was more favorable to claimants than the methodology "that would typically apply in an economic loss calculation" in tort litigation. 67 Fed. Reg. 11,238. For example, for claimants whose total expenditures exceed income, "expenditures were scaled to income, so as not to reduce income for expenses potentially met by other forms of support." See Explanation of Process at 3 (VCF100-0231). This was intended to avoid a "penalty" to lower income claimants. See id.

Taxes. Awards from the Fund are not subject to federal taxation. See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,235. The Special Master rejected one commenter's suggestion "that taxes should not be deducted from future lost earnings" when calculating economic loss. Id. at 11,238. He did, however, elect to use a "blended after-tax discount rate[]" to compute the present value of awards, and to "adjust[] the discount rate to reflect current yields on mid- to long-term U.S. Treasury securities." See id. (noting these decisions will create a "more complex computational process," but one that will "better reflect the different ages of the victims and the fact that the survivors will receive awards reflecting different assumed future years of work life").

Claims evaluation. Finally, the Special Master addressed comments relating to the Track A/Track B procedure for claims evaluation. See 67 Fed. Reg. at 11,243. Addressing the argument by some commenters that "the 'extraordinary circumstances' burden was too high to have any practical effect on increasing awards" (67 Fed. Reg. 11,243), the Special Master noted:

> [I]t is important that the Special Master have an opportunity to consider circumstances that are not accounted for in the presumed award charts. The term 'extraordinary circumstances' is not intended to signal that there is an unsustainable burden to justify departure from the presumed award. Instead, it reflects the Special Master's sense that the presumed award methodology should be fair and appropriate for a substantial majority of claims. A number of factors could support a determination to depart from the presumed award methodology. For victims who had extremely high earnings (beyond the 98th percentile of individuals in the United States), the Special Master may consider any relevant individual circumstances, including whether the financial needs of those victims' families are being met.

Id. at 11,243-44 (emphasis added).

3. Methodology

The day after the final rule was promulgated, the revised methodology (or "Explanation of Process") was posted on the Fund's website. See VCF100-0229 to VCF100-0242. The Explanation of Process is a step-by-step analysis of how the Special Master calculates presumed economic loss for decedents.[16] It explains the methodology's underlying economic assumptions, provides citations to the economic data and sources on which it relies, and contains explanatory tables and charts. See id. The Explanation makes clear that the economic assumptions underlying the methodology "are designed to benefit the claimants and are more favorable than the standard assumptions typically applied in litigation." Id. at 4 (VCF100-0232).

B. Plaintiffs' Complaints

[16] We note that the methodology was not part of the rulemaking. See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,238. On December 20, 2001, when the Special Master publicly announced the interim regulations, he disclosed several charts reflecting "presumed awards" for eligible claimants filing on behalf of decedents, as well as an explanation of how the awards were calculated. See id. at 11,233. The charts and the Special Master's explanation are in the administrative record at VCF100-1875 to VCF100-1881. The presumptive awards ranged from several hundred thousand dollars to more than $3 million. See 67 Fed. Reg. at 11,233.

Three complaints have been filed challenging the Fund: Colaio v. Feinberg, et al., 03 Civ. 558 (AKH) (filed Jan. 24, 2003), Smith v. Ashcroft, et al., 03 Civ. 1040 (AKH) (filed Feb. 14, 2003), and Schneider v. Feinberg, et al., 03 Civ. 1129 (AKH) (filed Feb. 20, 2003). None of the complaints challenges any provision of Title IV of the Act. None of the complaints challenges the regulations for determining eligibility, noneconomic losses, or collateral offsets. Rather, each complaint mounts a broad facial challenge under the Administrative Procedure Act to one or more aspects of the regulatory framework by which the Special Master determines "economic loss," the "amount of compensation," and a claimant's "individual circumstances."

Colaio v. Feinberg. The seven plaintiffs administer the estates of close relatives killed at the World Trade Center. See Colaio Compl. ¶¶ 11-17. Each plaintiff represents a decedent who worked at Cantor Fitzgerald L.P. or eSpeed, Inc. See id.[17] Plaintiffs have not submitted claims with the Fund. Nevertheless, several plaintiffs submitted affidavits to the Court providing information about their "economic losses," and explaining why, in their view, they would not receive "appropriate compensation" under the Fund. One such plaintiff alleges she discussed her claim informally with the Special Master and was dissatisfied with the non-binding award estimate -- $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 -- she received. See Declaration of June Colaio ¶ 8.

Plaintiffs contend the "regulations" and "methodologies" governing the Fund are unlawful to the extent they calculate presumed economic loss "in contravention of applicable New York state law." See Colaio Compl. ¶ 27. Specifically, plaintiffs contend the Fund violates New York law (and thus, in their view, the Act) by: (i) calculating presumed economic loss based on after-tax earnings; (ii) applying a higher consumption rate for single versus married [17] Plaintiffs also seek to represent a class of "similarly situated 'eligible individuals'" who (a) "are eligible for compensation from the Fund"; (b) "have filed, or wish to and are prepared to file, formal applications for such compensation"; and (c) "wish to, and are prepared to, waive their rights to file a civil action [under the Act § 408]." Colaio Compl. ¶ 21. The Court has deferred proceedings involving class certification pending ruling on the parties' cross dispositive motions.

decedents; (iii) calculating presumed economic loss based on a 1998-2000 three-year income average; and (iv) failing to calculate presumed awards beyond the 98th percentile. See id.

Smith v. Ashcroft. Plaintiffs are administrators of their husbands' estates. See Smith Compl. ¶¶ 1-2. Plaintiffs' husbands, who were killed at the World Trade Center, see id., each had annual earnings that "substantially exceed[ed]" the 98th percentile. See id. ¶¶ 25, 27. Neither plaintiff has submitted a claim with the Fund.

Plaintiffs challenge two regulations governing the Fund: (i) Section 104.41, which authorizes the Special Master to consider the "financial needs or financial resources of the claimant" in determining the amount of compensation; see Smith Compl. ¶¶ 35-36; and (ii) Section 104.33(f), which permits the Special Master to modify a presumed award if a claimant shows "extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award." See id. ¶¶ 43-44. Plaintiffs also challenge the Special Master's decision to compute presumed economic loss based on after-tax income. See id. ¶¶ 45-46.

Schneider v. Feinberg. Plaintiff is the executrix of her husband's estate. See Schneider Compl. ¶ 2. Her husband, who worked at Cantor Fitzgerald and was killed at the World Trade Center, see id. ¶ 3, earned an average of $2,592,183 for the years 1998-2000. See id. ¶ 54. Plaintiff has not submitted a claim to the Fund. She alleges, however, that she made a "preliminary submission" to the Special Master and was dissatisfied with the non-binding award estimate -- $4,500,000 to $6,000,000 -- the Special Master gave her. See Schneider Compl. ¶¶ 54, 75. Plaintiff claims, instead, that she is entitled to an award between $28,553,513 and $40,092,883. See id. ¶ 54. Plaintiff raises claims similar to those raised in Smith. That is, she challenges Section 104.41; see Schneider Compl. pp. 20-21, ¶¶ 3-4, 6; Section 104.33(f); see id. p. 21, ¶ 5; and the Special Master's decision to calculate presumed economic loss based on post-tax earnings. See id. p. 22, ¶ 8.

Read together, then, plaintiffs' complaints essentially challenge the facial validity of four regulations governing the Fund:

(i) Section 104.41, which interprets the statutory term "individual circumstances of the claimant" and provides that it "may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries"; see 28 C.F.R. § 104.41;

(ii) Section 104.42, which embodies the Department's and the Special Master's interpretation of the statutory phrase "to the extent recovery . . . is allowed under applicable state law"; see id. § 104.42;

(iii) Section 104.43, which requires the Special Master to develop a methodology for determining presumed economic loss for decedents that yields determinations "up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000" and requires the Special Master to use "[t]he Decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 (or for other years the Special Master deems relevant)"; see id. § 104.43(a); and

(iv) Sections 104.31(b)(2) & 104.33(f)(2), which authorize the Special Master to adjust a presumed award if "the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award." See id. §§ 104.31(b)(2), 104.33(f)(2).

Plaintiffs also raise challenges to other aspects of the Special Master's methodology, including the use of post-tax income for determining lost earnings and the consumption rate for single decedents.

ARGUMENT

Plaintiffs purport to challenge the regulations promulgated by the Department and the Special Master as well as the Special Master's specific methodology for calculating economic loss. All of plaintiffs' challenges have one thing in common: they arise under the APA and are governed by an extremely deferential standard of review.[18] In short, the Court must defer to the Special Master's permissible and reasonable construction of the Act.

In determining "whether the agency's interpretation of the statute is lawful," Barnhart v. Walton, 122 S. Ct. 1265, 1269 (2002), this Court applies the deferential standard set forth in the familiar, two-step Chevron analysis. See Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842 (1984). The Court first examines whether Congress "has directly spoken to the precise question at issue" in the text of the statute. If so, the text governs. Chevron, 467 U.S. at 842. When "Congress has not directly addressed the precise question at issue," that is, if the statute is "silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue," then the only question for the Court to decide is "whether the agency's answer is based on a permissible construction of the statute." Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843; see Yellow Transportation, Inc. v. Michigan, 123 S. Ct. 371, 377 (2002). The agency's construction is permissible "if it reflects a plausible construction of the plain language of the statute and does not otherwise conflict with Congress' expressed intent." Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 184 (1991). In other words, the Special Master's reasonable interpretation of the Act binds this Court unless the Act "unambiguously forbids the Agency's interpretation." Barnhart v. Walton, 122 S. Ct. 1265 (2002); accord United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218, 227 (2001). Moreover, this customary deference to the agency's interpretation is heightened where, as here, a court is reviewing "the construction of a new statute by its implementing agency." Natural Resources Defense Council v. Train, 510 F.2d 692, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1975); see American Farm Lines, Inc. v. United States, 684 F.2d 697, 700 (10th Cir. 1982); accord Verizon Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 535 U.S. 467, 122 S. Ct. 1646, 1668 n.20 (2002) (deferring to FCC's "first interpretation of a new statute").

Plaintiffs' claims challenging the Special Master's methodology for calculating economic loss are similarly constrained by the APA. Specifically, section 706(2) of the APA provides that final agency action may be set aside only if "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). "The scope of review under this provision of the APA is a 'narrow one.'" City of New York v. Shalala, 34 F.3d 1161, 1167 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 416 (1971)); accord Natural Resources Defense Council v. Muszynski, 268 F.3d 91 (2d Cir. 2001). "This 'arbitrary and capricious' standard of review is a highly deferential one which presumes the agency's action to be valid." Environmental Defense Fund, Inc. v. Costle, 657 F.2d 275, 283 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (emphasis added) (citations omitted). In other words, the highly deferential APA standard of review "mandates judicial affirmance if a rational basis for the agency's decision is presented." Id. The burden of overcoming the presumption of validity rests upon plaintiffs. See Costle, 657 F.2d at 283.

Finally, in conducting an APA review of administrative action, the court is limited to examining the administrative record compiled by the agency. The Supreme Court has explained that "the focal point for judicial review should be the administrative record already in existence, not some new record made initially in the reviewing court." Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 142 (1973); accord Florida Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 743-44 (1985); 5 U.S.C. § 706 ("In making the foregoing determination[ ] [that, among other things, agency action was arbitrary or capricious], the court shall review the whole record or those parts of it cited by a party"). Although the Colaio and Schneider plaintiffs have submitted voluminous extra-record materials to the Court,[19] this information is entirely irrelevant to resolving plaintiffs' APA-based claims, the merits of which must be resolved on the basis of the administrative record filed by Defendants. See Camp, 411 U.S. at 132; Florida Power, 470 U.S. at 743-44. With these principles in mind, we turn to plaintiffs' claims.

POINT I

THE SPECIAL MASTER IS ENTITLED TO CONSIDER

[19] At a status conference held in this action on February 6, 2003, the Government objected to any attempt by plaintiffs to take discovery or to supplement the administrative record in this case.

REV_00160278

THE INDIVIDUAL CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE CLAIMANTS

Plaintiffs' principal legal argument is that 28 C.F.R. § 104.41, which interprets the term "individual circumstances" to authorize the Special Master to take the financial needs of victims' families into account in determining awards of compensation, is inconsistent with the Act. Plaintiffs contend, instead, that the Act requires the Special Master to award compensation based solely on a mechanical addition of economic and non-economic losses, less amounts received from collateral sources. See Colaio Compl. ¶ 67 ("The Act mandates compensation for economic and non-economic losses, deducting only 'collateral source' compensation."); accord Smith Compl. ¶ 12 (claimants should receive "full compensatory damages for their 'economic loss' plus 'noneconomic loss,' offset by 'collateral sources'"); Schneider Compl. ¶ 24 ("The Act requires the Special Master to award the amount of economic loss provided for under the express terms of the Act to an eligible claimant, reduced by the amount of the collateral source compensation"). Thus, where a strict mathematical calculation for a high-earning victim yields a figure in excess of $50 million (applying all of plaintiffs' untested assumptions),[20] plaintiffs would have the Court declare that the Act requires the Special Master to mechanistically award that entire sum (minus only collateral source compensation), regardless of the financial needs or resources of the victim's family. In the same way, where that same calculation for a retiree or low-wage earner yields an award of zero, plaintiffs effectively ask this Court to declare that the Act unambiguously forbids the Special Master from awarding that victim's family any money at all, regardless of their demonstrated financial needs. This argument is flatly inconsistent with the terms of the Act.

Section 405(b) establishes the requirements for determining the "amount of compensation." Paragraph (1)(B)(i) requires the Special Master to determine "the extent of the [20] See Schneider Compl. 54; Ex. A at 2 (claiming that plaintiff Schneider's economic loss was $52.4 million).

harm to the claimant." That "harm" to the claimant expressly includes "any economic and noneconomic losses." Paragraph (1)(B)(ii) requires the Special Master to determine "the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled." Paragraph (1)(B)(ii) directs the Special Master to "base[]" that determination upon a consideration of three factors: "[1] the harm to the claimant, [2] the facts of the claim, and [3] the individual circumstances of the claimant." Finally, paragraph 6 requires the Special Master to reduce "the amount of compensation determined under paragraph (1)(B)(ii)" by the amount of "collateral source compensation."

Congress thus expressly rejected the notion that the determination of the award should be confined to a mechanical addition of economic and noneconomic losses. Instead, the Act requires the Special Master to base the "amount of compensation" in part on the "harm to the claimant" (including the claimant's "economic and noneconomic losses") and the claimants' "individual circumstances." The phrase "individual circumstances" thus plainly refers to circumstances other than "economic and noneconomic losses." Plaintiffs' argument to the contrary contradicts the most basic principles of statutory construction. See Potter v. United States, 155 U.S. 438, 446 (1894) (statutory term "cannot be regarded as mere surplusage; it means something."); Bell v. Reno, 218 F.3d 86, 91 (2d Cir. 2000) ("It is a well-known canon of statutory construction that, in general, a statute should not be construed so as to render a word or clause inoperative."); Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 146 (1995) ("We assume that Congress used two terms because it intended each term to have a particular, nonsuperfluous meaning.").

The Act, of course, does not define the critical term "individual circumstances." Nor does it define the term "compensation" or specify precisely how an award of compensation should be calculated; it simply identifies three factors upon which the determination of compensation should be "based." The Department, by regulation, has construed the phrase "individual circumstances of the claimant" to include "the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries." 28 C.F.R. § 104.41. This interpretation not only is fully consistent with the Act, but it is the most natural reading of the "individual circumstances" provision.

It is hard to see how the term "individual circumstances" could be defined to exclude consideration of "'need." The Fund is a no-fault compensation program, designed to assist those most devastated by the September 11th attacks. During debate on the Act, Members of Congress repeatedly referred to the Fund as a means to provide expedited "assistance" and "relief" to victims and their families. See, e.g.,147 Cong. Rec. S9599 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Leahy) ("[t]his program is targeted to help the neediest victims and their families"); id. at S9594 (statement of Sen. McCain) ("[t]he intent of the fund is to ensure that the victims of this unprecedented, unforeseeable, and horrific event, and their families do not suffer financial hardship in addition to the terrible hardships they already have been forced to endure").[21]

One commenter, noting the Special Master's policy with respect to minimum awards, observed: "[t]he Special Master's correct decision to include a minimum compensatory amount eliminates the concern that a strict analysis of economic harm would leave the families of low-earning individuals out in the cold." VCF105-0967. But the Special Master has the authority to award compensation to a person who would receive nothing "under a strict analysis of economic harm" only because the regulations interpret the phrase "individual circumstances" to include the financial needs of the claimant. Without that authority to consider financial need of all claimants in addition to harm, the families of low-earning individuals might indeed be, in the commenter's words, "out in the cold." Id.

[21] See also VCF101-0982 ("among the victims of the September 11 attacks, those at the lower end of the economic scale have likely suffered more severely in terms of relative economic harm than those at the top end, and to the extent the government must balance the equities in making its determinations, compensation provided under the fund should reflect that economic disparity"). Some commenters noted that consideration of financial need is particularly appropriate for this no-fault compensation fund because the purposes of the fund differ from the purposes of the civil tort system: "While both share the goal of adequate compensation, the civil justice system is designed to punish wrongdoers, ensure that the full cost to individuals and society for harm caused by those who inflict the harm are paid by the wrongdoer, and create incentives to promote safety and reasonable care in the future[.]" VCF101-0982. See also VCF104-2416 ("[F]or every vice-president who died, a security guard died with him. For every bond trader who died, a cook died as well . . . . REV_00160281

Indeed, reading the Act (as plaintiffs do) to preclude any consideration of the financial needs and resources of the claimant could result in families receiving no compensation at all for decedents who died without substantial resources. That result occurs in traditional tort litigation even when liability can be established,[22] and it could happen even more frequently under plaintiffs' approach to the Fund because of the Act's requirement that awards be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation received.

Under the Fund, however, because the Special Master may consider financial need in determining compensation, the regulations assure claimants that "[i]n no event shall an award (before collateral source compensation has been deducted) be less than $500,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim with a spouse or dependent, or $300,000 in any case brought on behalf of a deceased victim who was single with no dependents." 28 C.F.R. § 104.41 (emphasis added). See also 67 Fed. Reg. 11242 (stating that, "when the total needs of deceased victims' families are considered, it will be very rare that a claimant will receive less than $250,000, except in unusual circumstances where a claimant has already received very

Accordingly, plaintiffs challenge to the Department's reasonable regulations should be rejected.[23]

POINT II
THE SPECIAL MASTER IS NOT REQUIRED TO CONSIDER ALL ASPECTS OF STATE LAW IN CALCULATING ECONOMIC LOSS

Plaintiffs also contend that the Act obligates the Special Master to calculate an award of compensation in precisely the same way that damages for pecuniary loss would be calculated under whichever state's law would be deemed "applicable" to the particular claimant. Plaintiffs thus argue that each subsidiary calculation that relates to the determination of a claimant's "economic loss" – the consumption rate, the treatment of taxes, and every other element of the loss determination – must replicate the calculation that would be made by a jury applying the law of the state that would have governed a hypothetical tort suit by that claimant.[24] For example, [23] Although plaintiffs contend that reducing compensation awards based on a claimant's financial resources is inconsistent with New York law, as we demonstrate below, nothing in the Act requires the Special Master to consider or apply state law when determining the ultimate award. In any event, we note that, in fact, compensation under the Act proves far more generous in this regard than compensation under New York State's own statutory scheme for compensating victims of crime. Under the New York Crime Victims Board, the "financial resources" of the claimants are not only considered, but claimants may not receive any award of compensation unless the claimant will suffer "financial difficulty" without an award. N.Y. Exec. Law § 631(6). In this case, there is no allegation that any plaintiff will be denied "compensation" because of their financial resources. Plaintiff Schneider, for example, alleges only that an award in the range of $4.5 to $6 million would be inadequate. Plaintiff Colaio, whose decedent had earned approximately $4 million per year from 1998 to 2000, alleges only that an award in the range of $5-6 million would be inadequate. See Declaration of June Colaio, Ex. A at 2. Cf. Regan v. Crime Victims Compensation Board, 455 N.Y.S.2d 552, 554 (1982) (holding that award of $594 to 66-year-old mugging victim was excessive since victim had savings, property, and earnings valued at $58,275).

[24] Although plaintiffs apparently assume that New York law would apply to any tort claim made by a victim of the World Trade Center attack, there is no way to know whether that is the case and no reason to presume it would be. Those victims were domiciled in many different States and even countries, and the choice-of-law analysis could vary from claimant to since New York law generally uses pre-tax earnings to calculate a wrongful death award (see Johnson v. Manhattan & Bronx Surface Transit Operating Auth., 524 N.Y.S.2d 415, 420 (1988)), plaintiffs reason that Section 402(7) of the Act requires the Special Master to calculate awards of compensation in precisely the same way. Plaintiffs assert that this result is compelled by the Act's definition of "economic loss" as "any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement service loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law." Act § 402(7) (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs' interpretation, were it adopted, would present enormous difficulties in the administration of the Fund -- difficulties that Congress could not have intended to impose. A process that was designed to be expeditious and non-adversarial would be required repeatedly to resolve potentially complex choice-of-law issues and the particulars of damages laws of various states before determining an award. The awards themselves, even if the claimants presented identical facts, could reflect significant variances depending solely on where the claimant resided or died -- notwithstanding the fact that all were victims of the same attack, and that all are covered by a single, uniform, federal compensation scheme. Congress expressly rejected numerous aspects of state wrongful death regimes in crafting this federal compensation program -- see, e.g., § 405(b)(6) (requiring deductions for life insurance proceeds) -- and there is no basis for concluding that it believed that calculations of "economic loss," by contrast, uniquely warranted the wholesale incorporation of varying state laws.

For these and other reasons, the Department did not adopt plaintiffs' interpretation. It instead interpreted the pertinent language in Section 402(7) to mean "that the Special Master is not permitted to compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would not be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claim brought by or on behalf of the victim." 28 C.F.R. § 104.42 (emphasis added). In other words, the statutory phrase "to the extent . . . law" is a limiting provision, limiting the "categories" or "types" of losses allowed under the Fund to those allowed under state law -- rather than a provision that addresses how those losses must be calculated and mandates the use of various states' laws at that highly specific level of detail. The regulation thus construes the Act to prohibit the Special Master from compensating claimants for those "categories" or "types" of economic loss that are not available under applicable state laws.[25]

REV_00160284

The Department's construction is by far the more natural reading of the statute, and is supported by the Act's text, its structure, and its purposes.

First, the text of Section 402(7), on its face, refers to the types or categories of losses available under State law. It says nothing about the calculation of those damages. It defines "economic loss" by reference to a non-exhaustive list of six particular categories of losses. The phrase "such loss" as used in the limiting phrase that immediately follows that enumeration of categories -- i.e., "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable state law" -- then clearly refers back to the categories of losses just enumerated (and to any other, unspecified

[25] The Department's construction found support in the comments submitted by the State of New York and the City of New York, among others. See, e.g., VCF109-0013-14 ("New York law allows all the types of economic loss enumerated in the ATSSSA. . . . As ATSSSA 402(5) provides that economic loss includes 'any pecuniary loss . . . allowed under applicable State law,' the regulations should specify that 'economic loss' includes any pecuniary losses which may not be specifically identified in ATSSSA but which are compensable under New York law.") (emphasis added). See also VCF106-1430 (proposing regulation that would include the following limitation on economic loss: "provided, however, that claimants will receive compensation only for those categories or types of economic losses that would be compensable under the state law that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.") (emphasis added); VCF105-1889 (proposing regulation that would interpret statutory phrase "to the extent . . . applicable State law" to mean "that the Special Master shall compensate claimants for those categories or types of economic losses that would be compensable under the law of the state that would be applicable to any tort claims brought by or on behalf of the victim.") (emphasis added).

categories of "economic loss") and requires an inquiry into whether those categories are "allowed" under applicable state law.

Construing Section 402(7) as addressing the kinds of losses permitted under state law, rather than the methods for calculating them, is further supported by the text of the Act's parallel definition of "noneconomic loss." Like Section 402(7)'s definition of "economic loss," Section 402(9) defines "noneconomic loss" by enumerating specific categories of losses. After enumerating those categories, Section 402(9) expands the definition to encompass all other nonpecuniary losses "of any kind or nature." Since the phrase that follows the enumeration of categories of noneconomic losses in Section 402(9) references "kinds" of losses, the phrase that follows the similar enumeration of categories of economic losses in Section 402(7) should most logically be construed as referencing "kinds" of economic losses as well.

Moreover, the Department's construction is the only plausible one in every instance in which this precise statutory language has elsewhere been employed by Congress. See Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum. L. Rev. 527, 537 (1947) ("[I]f a word is obviously transplanted from another legal source, whether the common law or other legislation, it brings the old soil with it."); United States v. Slevin, 106 F.3d 1086, 1088 (2d Cir. 1996) ("Because these [two federal] statutes use the same relevant language, they are analyzed in the same way."). The definition of "economic loss" in the Act was lifted verbatim from the "definitions" sections of three other acts of Congress which have nothing to do with calculation of compensation, and in which Congress plainly was utilizing "state law" to govern only which categories of losses would be included within the term "economic loss." See 20 U.S.C. § 6733(1) (defining "economic loss" for purposes of the Teacher Protection Act); 42 U.S.C. § 238q(e)(2)(b)(ii) (defining "economic loss" for purposes of protecting "Good Samaritans"); 42 U.S.C. § 14505(1) (defining "economic loss" for purposes of the Volunteer Protection Act). Each of these statutes provides immunity from liability under state law to groups of individuals -- specifically, to teachers, Good Samaritans, and volunteers -- for all categories of economic loss that would otherwise be available under State law. Because these groups were granted immunity from damages, the "to the extent . . . law" phrase was clearly understood to determine only which categories of damages would be included within the term "economic loss," and not to address any issue of how damages are calculated. The Department has simply interpreted "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law" with respect to the Fund in the same way that identical language has previously been applied in other statutes.

Second, the structure of the Act weighs heavily in favor of the Department's interpretation and against that advanced by plaintiffs. The guidance provided by the Act to the Special Master on the calculation of compensation awarded under the Fund is provided in Section 405(b), not in Section 402. Section 405(b) specifically addresses the manner in which the Special Master must determine an award of compensation: Paragraph (1)(B) identifies the steps the Special Master must take to determine the award; paragraph (5) precludes the Special Master from including punitive damages in the computation of the award; and paragraph (6) directs the Special Master to deduct collateral source compensation from the amount determined under paragraph (1)(B)(ii). Section 402, in contrast, is the "definitions" section of the statute. The Department's construction of that section as further defining the categories or types of economic loss recoverable is consistent with the purpose of that section in explaining the meaning of terms used in the statute. In contrast, plaintiffs' reading of Section 402 as addressing not the definition of economic loss recoverable but rather the precise calculation of compensation is at odds with the overall structure of the Act, which addresses the calculation of compensation exclusively within Section 405(b).

Third, plaintiffs' proposed construction would frustrate the purposes of the Act. Contrary to plaintiffs' claims (see Colaio Compl. ¶ 36), Congress's purpose was not to ensure that the Special Master's determination of compensation would replicate a jury's potential calculation of damages recoverable under a state "wrongful death" law. The Act's provisions repeatedly make this clear. For example, while the Act expressly precludes the Special Master from including "amounts for punitive damages" in the compensation paid under the Fund (§ 405(b)(5)), New York law permits recovery of punitive damages (N.Y. EPTL § 5-4.3(b)). Similarly, while the Act does not include interest as an element of compensation recoverable under the Fund, New York law requires that interest "from the date of decedent's death" be "added to and be a part of the total sum awarded" in a wrongful death lawsuit. N.Y. EPTL § 5-4.3(a). And while the Act expressly requires the Special Master to deduct life insurance proceeds from an award of compensation under the Fund (Act § 405(b)(6)), New York law expressly precludes any reduction of life insurance proceeds from the amount of damages recoverable in a wrongful death lawsuit (N.Y. CPLR § 4545). Thus, Congress expressly prohibited the Special Master from calculating compensation in a manner consistent with the calculation of damages under state law in many respects.

Plaintiffs' argument must therefore be that, while Congress deviated from state law recoveries in all these other respects, it sought to replicate precisely a particular state law in terms of the method of calculating "economic loss." That interpretation attributes a wholly unreasonable intent to Congress, because it would mean that Congress had imposed an enormous burden on the Fund – one which would impede its speedy and efficient operation – without any consistent or rational purpose in doing so.

Different states calculate damages differently, and for different reasons. For example, while New Jersey discounts wrongful death damages to present value, see, Tenore v. Nu Car Carriers, Inc., 67 N.J. 466, 81, 341 A.2d 613 (N.J. 1975), Pennsylvania does not discount to present value, see Kaczkowski v. Bolubasz, 491 Pa. 561, 583, 421 A.2d 1027, 1039-40 (Pa. 1980). While New Jersey and Pennsylvania both consider the effect of future inflation,

Pennsylvania has adopted a presumption that future inflation is totally offset by future interest. See Kaczkowski, 421 A.2d at 1039-40. And while Pennsylvania requires a deduction for the decedent's personal consumption, see id. at 1030 n.7, Kentucky does not permit such a deduction at all, see Charlton v. Jacobs, 619 S.W.2d 498, 500 (Ky. Ct. App. 1981).

The varying (and at times flatly inconsistent) rules applied by states to calculate wrongful death damages -- to the extent they are well developed in the case law at all -- reflect different state's public policy choices. See, e.g., Johnson, 524 N.Y.S.2d at 418. On some points, they will be less favorable to claimants than the Fund's methodology, and on other points more favorable. Nothing in the Act suggests that Congress intended for state public policy choices to tie the hands of the Special Master when determining an award of compensation under this federal compensation program. See Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Pfeifer, 462 U.S. 523, 547 (1983) ("[T]he reasons which may support the adoption of a rule for a State's entire judicial system -- for a broad class of cases encompassing a variety of claims affecting a number of different industries and occupations -- are not necessarily applicable to the special class of workers covered by the Act."); see also McNerney v. Secretary, HHS, 1992 WL 120345 (Cl. Ct. May 5, 1992) (state law evidentiary privileges of "doubtful significance" to federal compensation program).[26]

Indeed, since the thousands of victims of September 11th came from all over the United States (and from around the world), requiring the Special Master to discern and apply state public policy choices on the calculation of damages would create great uncertainty and confusion, and would threaten, if not preclude, his ability to comply with the highly expedited time frames which the Act requires for compensation decisions. See Act § 405(b)(3) (requiring award determination 120 days after claim is filed). The interests of consistency and uniformity would likewise certainly suffer, as families of similarly situated victims receive vastly different awards based solely on factors (such as the residency of the decedents, the location of the crashes, the origins and destination of the planes, etc.) that might be deemed relevant to the choice-of-law determination. As one Special Master observed in connection with a different federal compensation program, "it would be too much to expect special masters dealing with cases from all 50 States -- plus the District of Columbia and U.S. territories -- to make appropriate determinations concerning the public policies of these jurisdictions; and it would be counter-productive and impractical to apply different rules to different cases." McNerney, 1992 WL 120345, at * 4. See Jelly v. Secretary, HHS, 1998 WL 211913, at * 1-2 (Fed. Cl. Apr. 6, 1998) (rejecting state cases that rely on pre-tax earnings to calculate awards under federal compensation program). This burden would be particularly irrational here in light of the fact that the calculation of economic loss is only one factor in the Special Master's compensation decision, and does not alone determine the ultimate amount of the award. See Point I, supra (discussing role of "individual circumstances"). Congress should not lightly be presumed to have intended to impose such a burden, and to cause such potential disparities among claimants, absent compelling evidence of such a purpose – and no such evidence exists.

POINT III

CALCULATION OF PRESUMED ECONOMIC LOSS UP TO, BUT NOT BEYOND, THE 98TH PERCENTILE OF AVERAGE ANNUAL EARNINGS IS PERMISSIBLE AND REASONABLE

Plaintiffs' challenge to the regulations' "98th percentile" rule is based upon a fundamental misconception – that high-end earners (those earning above the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States) – are somehow prevented by the regulations (and the Special Master's implementing methodology) from having their substantial incomes considered by the Special Master in determining a final award. Specifically, plaintiffs contend that the regulations are invalid to the extent they do not require the Special Master to calculate presumed awards for those decedents having income in the top two percent of individual income in the United States. See Colaio Compl. ¶¶ 67-77. They also contend that, by requiring such claimants to demonstrate "extraordinary circumstances" to justify a departure from the highest presumed award, the regulations and methodology effectively "cap" compensation awards in violation of the Act. See Smith Compl. ¶ 43-44; Schneider Compl. ¶ 48.

At the outset, plaintiffs' claims that the regulations "cap" compensation at the 98th percentile of individual incomes fundamentally misconstrues those regulations. The regulations simply provide that the Special Master's methodology may not yield "presumed determinations for loss of earnings or other benefits of employment" in excess of "the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States for the year 2000." 28 C.F.R. § 104.43 (emphasis added). Nothing in the regulations prohibits final determinations in excess of that threshold. Thus, under the Fund's two-track system for determining awards, the survivors of individuals with incomes in excess of the 98th percentile have a choice: While they may, of course, choose to accept a presumed award at the 98th percentile level, they may just as easily opt for an individual hearing, at which they would be permitted to present evidence of their higher earnings (and any other evidence they believe relevant to the Special Master's determination). 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(1) & (2). The Special Master may then modify or vary the presumed award if he determines that "the claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award methodology." 28 C.F.R. § 104.31(b)(2); 28 C.F.R. § 104.33(f)(2).

Thus, far from capping the awards available to high-end earners, the methodology expressly permits such claims to be heard and awarded. As the Preamble to the final rule explains:

> To be absolutely clear: The fact that the 'presumed awards' address incomes only up to the 98th percentile does not indicate that awards from the Fund are 'capped' at that level. In extending the presumed awards only up to the 98th percentile, we merely recognized that calculation of awards for many victims with extraordinary incomes beyond the 98th percentile could be a highly speculative exercise and > that, moreover, providing compensation above that level would rarely be necessary to ensure that the financial needs of a claimant are met. Calculation of an award beyond that point using the presumed award methodology without a detailed record could very well produce inappropriate results. Accordingly, we permitted applicants with extraordinary prior earnings to accept awards at the 98th percentile or seek calculation of an award based upon a more detailed record.

67 Fed. Reg. 11,237.

A. The Maximum Presumed Award Methodology is a Reasonable Interpretation of the Act Entitled to Substantial Deference

Nevertheless, to the extent plaintiffs challenge the use of maximum presumed awards, those challenges are meritless. The use of the methodology – including the 98th-percentile presumption – is perfectly consistent with the Act and eminently reasonable. It thus easily satisfies Chevron's extraordinarily deferential standard.

The determination to limit presumed award calculations to the 98th percentile of individual incomes was merely one part of a broader presumed award methodology, in which claimants are given the option of having an initial determination of their award made. That broader methodology was not only permitted by the Act; it was fully consistent with it. In addition to expressly authorizing the Special Master to "promulgate all procedural and substantive rules for the administration" of the Fund, Act § 404(a)(1) & (2); see also § 407, the Act provides the Special Master with the authority to "determine" the amount of compensation in an individual award. Act § 405(b). This express statutory delegation to a special master of the authority to "determine" compensation necessarily includes the authority to decide how to determine compensation. See United States v. Fior D'Italia, 122 S. Ct. 2117, 2122 (2002) (provision granting IRS assessment authority "must simultaneously grant the IRS power to decide how to make that assessment").

Exercising the broad discretion granted by these provisions and dictated by the short claims process required by statute,[27] the Department and the Special Master determined that publishing a presumed award methodology and presumed award charts would best serve the purposes of the Act by ensuring that the process for determining compensation is efficient, straightforward, and understandable to claimants, and would allow claimants to make an informed decision about whether to submit a claim to the Fund. See 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278.

[27] The Act requires the Special Master to make determinations of compensation no later

Defendants' determination to establish in the regulations a maximum presumed award is also fully consistent with the Act and eminently reasonable. It is well established that damages for wrongful death may not be recovered when they are based on contingencies that are inherently speculative. See Farrar v. Brooklyn Union Gas Co., 537 N.Y.S.2d 802 (1988); Mono v. Peter Pan Bus Lines, Inc., 13 F. Supp. 2d 471, 478 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). But determining presumed economic loss requires the Special Master to make a prediction about each claimant's likely future income – a prediction that necessarily involves some degree of speculation. See, e.g., Norfolk & Western Railway Co. v. Liepelt, 444 U.S. 490 (1980) ("[F]uture employment itself, future health, future personal expenditures, future interest rates, and future inflation are also matters of estimate and prediction."); Feldman v. Allegheny Airlines, Inc., 524 F.2d 384, 386 (2d Cir. 1975) ("Damages in a wrongful death action must necessity represent a crude monetary forecast of how the decedent's life would have evolved."); Kaczkowski v. Bolubasz, 491 Pa. 561, 575, 421 A.2d 1027, 1034 (Pa. 1980) ("[P]redicting lost future earnings entails some degree of speculation.").

The ability to project likely future earnings becomes increasingly speculative with respect to high earning decedents. While the future income stream of low- and middle-income employees can often be predicted with some degree of certainty, courts have found that projecting the future earnings of decedents with extraordinarily high incomes involves a level of speculation and uncertainty not present in ordinary cases. As Judge Friendly has explained, "in sharp contrast to the great mass of litigation at the lower and middle reach of the income scale, than "120 days after the date on which a claim is filed." Act § 405(b)(3).

where future income is fairly predictable," the "projection of future income at [higher] levels" of earnings is "itself extremely conjectural." McWeeney v. New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., 282 F.2d 34, 39 (2d Cir. 1960) (en banc) (Friendly, J.) (addressing incomes in excess of $100,000 in 1960), overruled on other grounds, Norfolk & Western Railway Co. v. Liepelt, 444 U.S. 490, 494 (1980); see also Machine v. National Helicopter Corp., 1997 WL 786937, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (noting "scarcity of apposite cases" that provide guidance to "difficult task" of calculating future lost earnings for entrepreneur with "unusual wealth"). The Special Master's methodology merely follows this legally recognized principle, concluding that "projecting earnings over worklife for people with extraordinary annual incomes is a very complex exercise, often requiring a detailed evaluation of variable and often complex formulae for nonvariable income, differing work life expectations, often highly volatile industries or markets and other factors that are not often subject to easy generalization." 66 Fed. Reg. 66,278. As a result, any attempt to apply the "presumed award" methodology to extraordinary incomes might necessitate that the methodology itself be reconsidered, because it presently incorporates numerous assumptions about growth, consumption, and other factors that might be wholly inappropriate if mechanically applied to the highest level incomes.

Indeed, even if a particularly wealthy decedent's future income could be projected with reasonable certainty, the likelihood that the decedent would have contributed to the support of surviving family members also becomes increasingly speculative, particularly when those family members are themselves financially secure. See N.Y. Jur2d: Damages § 357 (2d Ed. 2003) ("In assessing the value of the contributions that a decedent might be expected to make to such decedent's nondependent beneficiaries, the financial circumstances of the beneficiaries, and the likelihood that because of their financial position they would not need or want financial assistance from the decedent, have a bearing on the pecuniary loss caused by the death."); see, e.g., Breckir v. Lewis, 251 N.Y.S.2d 77 (1st Dep't 1964) (damage award for wrongful death of daughter was excessive considering surviving parents' "comfortable circumstances," since daughter may not have contributed to her parents after marriage), aff'd, 260 N.Y.2d 178 (1965); Franchell v. Sims, 424 N.Y.S.2d 959, 963 (4th Dep't 1980) (extent of financial dependency of beneficiaries is relevant in determining amount of damages). Given the inherently speculative nature of predicting both future income and economic loss for victims whose incomes are extraordinarily high, the Department's regulations are reasonable to the extent that they decline to calculate presumed economic loss for incomes beyond the 98th percentile.[28]

B. "Extraordinary Circumstances" Review of Presumed Awards is Permissible and Reasonable

Because the use of maximum presumed awards is permissible, plaintiffs' claim that the regulations would necessarily undercompensate them depends upon their allegation that they must demonstrate "extraordinary circumstances" in order to deviate from the maximum presumed award. This argument is without merit.

At the outset, plaintiffs badly mischaracterize the nature and role of the "extraordinary circumstances" burden as posing an insurmountable obstacle to an award in excess of the [28] To the extent plaintiffs challenge the particular percentage selected (i.e., 98%) as arbitrary and capricious, it is well established that agencies enjoy particularly "wide discretion" when the exercise of their discretion involves the selection of a numerical or percentage standard. AT&T Corp. v. FCC, 220 F.3d 607, 627(D.C. Cir. 2000). Accordingly, this Court may not set aside the percentile selected unless plaintiffs demonstrate that the agency's numerical choice was "patently unreasonable" or irrational. See Worldcom, Inc. v. FCC, 238 F.3d 449 (2d Cir. 2001) (citing WJG Telephone Co. v. FCC, 675 F.2d 386, 388-89 (D.C. Cir. 1982)); see, e.g., AT&T Corp., 220 F.3d at 627 ("[T]he Commission has wide discretion to determine where to draw administrative lines, and appellants point to nothing suggesting that the agency abused its discretion in drawing the line at ninety as opposed to ninety-five percent."); NRDC v. Muszynski, 268 F.3d 91, 102 (2d Cir. 2001) (where statute did not provide "mathematical basis" to determine adequate "margin of safety," agency entitled to use "best professional judgment" to select 15% margin of safety over any other percentage).

presumed awards. Nothing could be further from the truth. Rather, the "extraordinary circumstances" review of presumed awards is an acknowledgment that, while the presumed award methodology will adequately address most of any claimant's circumstances, some claimants may have some circumstances that are not adequately addressed by a simple mathematical formula. Thus the Special Master may address "extraordinary" circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumed award methodology.

The Special Master and the Department have repeatedly made clear that the "extraordinary circumstances" standard does not prevent consideration of circumstances beyond those in the presumed award methodology. The Special Master emphasized that "[t]he term 'extraordinary circumstances' is not intended to signal that there is an unsustainable burden to justify departure from the presumed award. Instead, it reflects the Special Master's sense that the presumed award methodology should be fair and appropriate for a substantial majority of claims." 67 Fed. Reg. 11,244. In fact, the Preamble to the Final Rule expressly recognizes that evidence of income beyond the 98th percentile may be considered as part of an "extraordinary circumstances" determination, noting that the regulations permit "applicants with extraordinary prior earnings to accept awards at the 98th percentile or seek calculation of an award based upon a more detailed record." 67 Fed. Reg. 11,237 (emphasis added).

In any event, the "extraordinary circumstances" standard is a valid exercise of the Special Master's statutory discretion to establish substantive and procedural rules to govern the determination of compensation. The Act expressly authorizes the Department, in consultation with the Special Master, to promulgate regulations with respect to "procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence" on claims and "procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims." Act § 407. It is well settled, in such circumstances, that federal agencies granted authority to establish rules of procedure to make those individualized decisions may establish and rely upon "reasonable presumptions and generic rules." Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S.

292 (1993); see Heckler v. Campbell, 461 U.S. 458, 467 (1983); see also Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. NRDC, 435 U.S. 519 (1978) (recognizing "the very basic tenet of administrative law that agencies should be free to fashion their own rules of procedure.").

Consequently, under this express grant of authority, the Department had wide discretion to establish substantive evidentiary burdens for claimants to satisfy to qualify for an award of compensation. See Heckler, 461 U.S. at 466-67 (where statute authorized agency to adopt regulations "for the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing same" in disability cases, agency permitted to establish vocational guidelines); see also Mobil Oil Exploration & Producing Southeast Inc. v. United Distribution Cos., 498 U.S. 211, 228 (1991) ("Time and again, the [Supreme] Court has recognized that even where an agency's enabling statute expressly requires it to hold a hearing, the agency may rely on its rulemaking authority to determine issues that do not require case-by-case consideration.") (internal citations and quotation omitted).

Under similar circumstances, the Supreme Court has found that the general authority to establish procedures for agency proceedings is broad enough to encompass not only rules but also exceptions to those rules, including, in particular, an "extraordinary circumstances" exception. See American Hospital Ass'n v. NLRB, 499 U.S. 606, 609-610 (1991) (statutory authority to establish regulations "necessary to carry out the provisions" of NLRA "unquestionably sufficient" to authorize "extraordinary circumstances" exception); see also Flores, 507 U.S. at 313 (upholding INS regulations establishing "presumptively appropriate" custodians for juveniles in INS custody and granting INS directors discretion to depart from presumptive rule in "unusual and compelling circumstances").

The requirement here that a claimant demonstrate extraordinary circumstances to depart from a presumed award appropriately reflects the "conjectural" nature of a claim of a sustained extraordinary income over an entire life expectancy. McWeeney, 282 F.2d at 38. It recognizes that the higher the reported income for a one- or three-year period, the less reliable it may be simply to presume the same level of income through an entire life expectancy. It further is consistent with the Act's requirement that the Special Master consider claimants' "individual circumstances," which, as explained above, the Department and the Special Master have interpreted to include a claimant's financial needs and resources. The regulations enable a child who lost a parent, for example, to present evidence at a hearing relating to the continuing needs of that child – which could be an "extraordinary circumstance" and is not covered by the more streamlined "presumed award" methodology. More generally, the Special Master has concluded that, for a substantial majority of claimants, matrix determinations of economic loss up to the 98th percentile will be sufficient to address issues of financial needs and resources. While a number of factors may support a determination to depart from that presumption and the presumed award methodology, it is appropriate that claimants must justify the departure. Accordingly, the requirement of demonstrating "extraordinary circumstances" is both permissible and reasonable.[29]

POINT IV

PLAINTIFFS' MISCELLANEOUS APA CHALLENGES TO THE REGULATIONS AND METHODOLOGY ARE MISPLACED

A. The Regulations Permissibly Authorize the Use of Average Earnings

The Colaio plaintiffs misconstrue the applicable regulations in their challenge to Section 104.43, which allows the Special Master to consider "average earnings" in calculating economic loss. 28 C.F.R. § 104.43; see Colaio Compl. ¶ 64. Plaintiffs argue that the regulations violate the Act by providing for the calculation of a decedent's economic loss on the basis of average earnings for the three-year period 1998-2000. Id. ¶¶ 61-66. But the regulations do no such thing.

As an initial matter, plaintiffs' suggestion that the Special Master would disregard annualized 2001 earnings in determining economic loss is expressly belied by the regulations, which provide:

[29] Although New York law does not govern the determination of compensation, we note that New York wrongful death law itself uses presumptive methodologies when distributing the proceeds of a wrongful death judgment or settlement among the distributees. See Matter of Kaiser, 100 N.Y.S.2d 218 (Surr. Ct. Kings Cty. 1950) (establishing mathematical formula for distributing proceeds). Indeed, quite similar to the Special Master's methodology, New York courts have noted that this presumptive "formula should be followed except where there are compelling circumstances shown for an alternate method of distribution." Estate of Muccini, 460 N.Y.S.2d 680, 682 (Surr. Ct. Queens Cty. 1983)

REV_00160298

> The Decedent's salary/income in 1998-2000 (or for other years the Special Master deems relevant) shall be evaluated in a manner that the Special Master deems appropriate. The Special Master may, if he deems appropriate, take an average of income figures for 1998-2000, and may also consider other periods that he deems appropriate, including the published pay scales for victims who were government or military employees.

28 C.F.R. § 104.43 (emphasis added).[30] Thus, the regulations expressly allow the Special Master the "discretion to consider on a prorated basis a victim's income from 2001." Id. Since the Final Rule expressly permits the Special Master to consider 2001 income in determining compensation if that is more indicative of the decedent's actual earning potential, the Colaio plaintiffs' facial challenge to the regulation necessarily fails.

To the extent plaintiffs complain that the regulations permit the use of average income from 1998-2000 as the "presumptive" measure of annual income, that authority is reasonable. First, three-year income averaging accounts for income disparities and fluctuations from year to year, providing a more accurate projection of a person's future income.[31] Second, since the attacks occurred in the year 2001, the use of the three-year period from 1998-2000 permits the determination of average annual earnings on the basis of objective evidence (such as full-year earnings statements) without the need to project, extrapolate or speculate.

[30] The emphasized language was added to the final regulations in response to comments that 2001 income should be allowed in the calculation of economic loss. 67 Fed. Reg. 11237. Like the Colaio plaintiffs, several commenters argued that 2001 is more indicative of a victim's actual earning potential. Id.

[31] While the Special Master has no obligation to consider New York law, see Point II, supra, in fact, New York courts routinely use a decedent's average earnings for the years preceding death to compute future lost earnings. See, e.g., Ritter v. New York, 344 N.Y.S.2d 257, 270 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1972) (using "average weekly earnings as a carpenter for the three years before [decedent's] death"); Bankers Trust Co. v. R & Z Television of N.Y., Inc., 164 N.Y.S.2d 488, 488-89 (2d Dep't 1957) (using average annual income for seven years). Thus, plaintiffs' claim that the use of average earnings is inconsistent with New York law is incorrect as a matter of law.

earnings and thus under-compensates "many" claimants, Colaio Compl. ¶ 61, is simply incorrect. For those who would benefit from the use of a different year or period of years, the regulations expressly provide the opportunity for the claimant to demonstrate at a hearing that the use of a different year or years is more appropriate. Accordingly, even if some claimants would benefit from the use of a different year or years to determine average earnings, plaintiffs provide no basis to set aside the regulations' authorization of the use of 1998-2000 earnings to calculate presumed economic loss.

B. The Special Master May Permissibly Use Net, After-Tax Earnings to Calculate Economic Loss

Plaintiffs also contend that the Special Master's methodology violates the Act by calculating presumed economic loss on the basis of net, after-tax earnings rather than gross, pre-tax earnings.[32] But the Special Master's decision to use net, after-tax income to calculate a claimant's presumed loss of earnings is not only plainly reasonable, it has been specifically approved by the Supreme Court. Indeed, as the Court reasoned in the context of a wrongful death claim:

> The amount of money that a wage earner is able to contribute to the support of his family is unquestionably affected by the amount of the tax he must pay to the Federal Government. It is his after-tax income, rather than his gross income before taxes, that provides the only realistic measure of his ability to support his family. It follows inexorably that the wage earner's income tax is a relevant factor in calculating the monetary loss suffered by his dependents when he dies.

Liepelt, 444 U.S. at 493-94. Given the Supreme Court's endorsement of this rationale, it can hardly be debated that the decision to use net income after taxes is a reasonable one.

C. The Consumption Rates Applicable to Single Decedents Represent Rational Decisionmaking by the Special Master and Must Be Upheld

[32] To the extent plaintiffs challenge the Special Master's methodology, those claims plainly are precluded by the Act's provision barring judicial review of the Special Master's determinations. See Act § 405(b)(3). The entire purpose of the methodology is to produce a presumed compensation amount, which a claimant may then accept (or not accept) as a "final" award. We discuss preclusion at length in Point VI, infra.

Finally, the Colaio plaintiffs challenge the rates that the Special Master used in his presumed economic loss methodology to calculate the personal consumption of single decedents. See Colaio Compl. ¶¶ 57-60. Specifically, they contend that the consumption rates selected by the Special Master to calculate presumed economic loss for single victims are "discriminatory" when compared to the consumption rates used for married victims. Colaio Compl. ¶ 58, 60.

Plaintiffs' argument again runs counter to the broad discretion granted to the Special Master and must therefore be rejected. Because both the Act and the regulations are silent on the specific question of consumption rates the Special Master must use in determining awards, his choice of consumption rates rests entirely within the discretion Congress granted by Section 405(b) of the Act. Act § 405(b) (authorizing Special Master to determine amount of compensation in individual award). Under the APA, the Special Master's methodology is presumed valid, and this Court asks only whether a rational basis exists to support that methodology. That standard is more than met here.

As the Colaio plaintiffs themselves recognize, "consumption rates are ordinarily and necessarily applied in computing wrongful death awards under state law[.]" Coliao Compl. ¶ 59. A percentage deduction from lost earnings to account for personal consumption by the decedent is generally appropriate in wrongful death cases because "[a] certain portion of the earnings in such cases would have been devoted to the purchase of goods and services that would have been used exclusively for the benefit of the deceased person. These personal consumption items include such things as food, clothing, transportation, medical care, personal care items, hobbies, entertainment, and any other item that would not benefit the survivors or give rise to asset accumulation in the estate." R. Patton, & D. Nelson, Estimating Personal Consumption Costs in Wrongful Death Cases, Journal of Forensic Economics, at 283 (1991). Accordingly, in calculating presumed economic loss, the Special Master appropriately subtracted from projected income the victim's share of household expenditures as a percentage of income. As the Special

Master explained, this subtraction for personal consumption is a standard adjustment in evaluating loss of earnings in wrongful death claims because some amount of the income the victim would have contributed to the household would have been consumed by the victim himself and therefore not available to other household members. See Explanation of Process at 3 (VCF100-0231).

Plaintiffs' only complaint is that the Special Master "discriminates" against the families of single decedents by using consumption rates that are substantially higher than the rates applied to married decedents. It is generally recognized, however, that consumption rates depend not only on the decedent's income but also on the size of the decedent's household. See VCF100-0371-72 (M. Rubel, R. Patton, & D. Nelson, Patton-Nelson Personal Consumption Tables 1997-98 Update, Journal of Forensic Economics, at 306-07 (2000)). While experts calculate the consumption rate of a decedent who is single and living alone based upon the decedent's own expenditures, experts calculate the consumption rate differently when the decedent is a member of a family because the decedent consumed only a percentage of all goods consumed by the family:

> In the case of a death of a single person assumed to be residing in a family unit of one person, the range of expenditures shown in Table 1 as a percent of income before taxes will, in fact, bracket the proper consumption deduction which should be taken out of income when computing the economic loss to the estate. However, in family units of two or more persons, the death of one adult family member will only reduce total household expenditures by the amount of direct personal consumption of the deceased person. Therefore, it is this figure which should be deducted as the personal consumption adjustment when the deceased person is residing in a family comprised of two or more persons. In order to determine the amount of direct personal consumption of one adult person in a family these costs must be separated out of the total family expenditures.

Patton & Nelson, supra, at 236. Thus, a rational basis exists to treat single and married decedents differently for purposes of calculating consumption rates.

Moreover, plaintiffs fail to appreciate that the consumption rates used by the Special Master are actually more favorable to claimants than the rates that likely would apply in tort litigation. For example, a family living at or near the poverty level may easily consume all of its income; in such a case, the consumption rate would equal or even exceed 100%. See T. Depperschmidt, A Law and Economics Perspective on the Personal Consumption Deduction in Wrongful Death Litigation, 7 J. Legal Econ. 1, 4 (Winter 1998) (observing that "use of a personal consumption deduction might lead to zero dollars as a net award for plaintiffs in a wrongful death action"). To avoid this result, the Special Master scaled expenditures to income. See Explanation of Process at 3. As a result, while the Special Master would have been justified in applying a consumption rate of over 100% to offset the earnings of a single victim who earned $10,000 per year (see VCF100-0371 (calculating consumption rate for single decedent earning $10,000 at range of 128.1% to 140.8%)), the highest consumption rate used by the Special Master is only 76.4%. See id. Table 3 (for single decedent earning $10,000 per year).[33] Accordingly, the Special Master's rates actually benefit claimants more than the rates that may be found to apply in tort litigation. Indeed, as with plaintiffs' challenge to the "financial needs" criterion, displacing the Special Master's approach to consumption rates with the approach applied in traditional tort litigation under State law might well result in altogether eliminating any recovery for claimants without significant resources.

Finally, plaintiffs' challenge to the consumption rates fails because, once again, the challenged rates apply only when calculating presumed economic loss. If a claimant believes that the assumptions that underlie the consumption rates do not apply in his or her particular case, the regulations permit the claimant to demonstrate at an individual hearing that the [33] In addition, while consumption rates that are based upon from data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics typically represent household expenditures as a percent of before-tax household income (see VCF100-0371), the actual consumption rates used by the Special Master to determine the victim's personal expenditures were calculated as a percent of (lower) after-tax income, which significantly reduced the consumption offset. See Explanation of Process at 3. Furthermore, while consumption rates used in litigation typically include expenditures for items such as alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, the Special Master's calculations excluded those categories, which also reduces the consumption deduction. Id.

presumed rates should not be applied.[34] For all of these reasons, the Special Master's use of consumption rates is valid and should be upheld.[35]

POINT V

PLAINTIFFS' CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENTS ARE MERITLESS

Two sets of plaintiffs raise meritless constitutional claims. The Smith plaintiffs mistakenly contend that the "exceptional circumstances" burden is imposed solely upon the families of decedents who earned more than $231,000 per year. As such, they argue that this violates the Equal Protection Clause. See Smith Compl. ¶ 44. In the same vein, plaintiff in Schneider alleges that the Special Master violates the Equal Protection Clause by awarding her a "fraction" of her economic loss when other claimants receive "full compensation." Schneider Compl. ¶ 84. Schneider also contends that, if the Act grants the Special Master the discretion to "limit" awards to claimants based on the decedent's wealth, the Act unconstitutionally delegates legislative power to the Special Master. Id. ¶ 49. Neither of these arguments has any basis in law.

A. The Special Master's Methodology is Consistent with the Equal Protection Clause

[34] Indeed, plaintiffs appear to recognize that the Special Master will consider challenges to the consumption rate on a case-by-case basis at the hearing. See Colaio Compl. ¶ 60 (challenging consumption rates "even if the Special Master is willing to vary presumptive awards for single decedents where their personal representatives demonstrate a level of dependency or other special circumstance").

[35] To the extent plaintiffs claim that New York law requires the use of different consumption rates, New York law provides no guidance in determining appropriate consumption rates in particular cases. Under New York law, the particular consumption rate applicable to a decedent is a matter of fact to be determined by a trier of fact, not a matter of law. See Connecticut National Bank v. OMI Corp., 928 F.2d 39, 47 (2d Cir. 1991) (consumption rate "is not a rule of law" but a "finding of fact"); McDougald v. Garber, 404 N.Y.S.2d 383, 384-85 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 1986) (consumption deduction was for jury to decide based on evidence presented).

The Special Master's methodology does not violate the Equal Protection Clause. Potential fund claimants enjoy no fundamental right to an award of compensation from the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, much less an award in any particular amount. As the Supreme Court has stated, "a noncontractual claim to receive funds from the public treasury enjoys no constitutionally protected status." Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749 (1975); accord Supreme Oil Co. v. Metropolitan Trans. Auth., 157 F.3d 148, 153 (2d Cir. 1998) (due process rights not infringed by denial of federal relocation benefits). Furthermore, it is well-settled that government classifications based upon wealth alone are not suspect. See Harris v. McRae, 448 U.S. 297, 322 (1980); Maher v. Roe, 432 U.S. 464 (1977); Woe v. Cuomo, 729 F.2d 96, 103-04 (2d Cir. 1984); accord San Antonio Ind. School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 24 (1973) ("[A]t least where wealth is involved, the Equal Protection Clause does not require absolute equality or precisely equal advantages."); United States v. Hirschberg, 988 F.2d 1509, 1515 (7th Cir. 1993) ("Try as we might, we find no cases in the defendant's brief or in our research that identify the wealthy as a suspect class.").

The Federal Circuit has rejected a similar attempt by claimants to another congressionally enacted compensation program to make an Equal Protection challenge. See Black v. Secretary of Health & Human Services, 93 F.3d 781, 787-89 (Fed. Cir. 1996). In the context of the National Child Vaccine Injury Act, 33 U.S.C. § 300aa-1 to 300aa-34, which established a federal program to compensate individuals who suffer a vaccine-related injury, claimants must file a petition demonstrating (among other things) unreimbursed expenses resulting from a vaccine-related injury "in an amount greater than $1,000" to be eligible for compensation. 42 U.S.C. § 300aa-

11(c)(1)(D)(i). The claimants in Black challenged the $1,000 threshold requirement on Equal Protection grounds, arguing that the denial of compensation to persons who did not incur $1,000 in unreimbursed expenses disadvantaged poor persons by precluding compensation to persons whose medical expenses are often defrayed by government programs such as Medicaid. Black, 93 F.3d at 787.

The Federal Circuit flatly rejected the claimant's constitutional argument. First, the court held that claimants enjoyed no fundamental right to receive benefits from the compensation program. Black, 93 F.3d at 787. Next, it reasoned that, because poverty is not a suspect classification, distinctions based upon wealth are not subject to "strict scrutiny" review; rather, distinctions based upon wealth in a federal program are constitutional so long as they are supported by a "rational basis." Id. at 788. Because the Court found that the $1,000 threshold requirement served a rational purpose, the Court upheld the statute. Id. Indeed, the Court observed that "[a]n eligibility test may be rational even if it does not do a perfect job of selecting those cases that appear to be appropriate subjects of congressional concern." Id.

Plaintiffs' Equal Protection challenge here implicates neither a fundamental right, since plaintiffs enjoy no "right" to any award, nor a suspect class, since plaintiffs' claim is based upon their relative wealth. Accordingly, as in Blake, the Act, the regulations, and the Special Master's methodology are presumed constitutional, and need only be supported by a rational basis. As set forth above, calculating awards up to, but not beyond, the 98th percentile is rationally based. See Point III, supra. Furthermore, even if a constitutional claim could possibly lie to challenge the amount of one claimant's award vis-a-vis another's (or could possibly be ripe, since there is as yet no award to challenge), Schneider's Equal Protection challenge is baseless since it wrongly assumes that all Fund claimants are similarly situated. They are not. Congress required the Special Master to "base" compensation on the "harm" to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the "individual" circumstances of the claimant. As a result, awards of compensation cannot be uniform across-the-board, but will necessarily vary based on, among other factors, the earnings of the decedent and the needs and resources of the claimant.

Contrary to Schneider's complaint, the Special Master's methodology does not result in "full compensation" to some claimants and "partial compensation" to others. The consideration of need and resources may result in greater compensation for lower income claimants than a strict economic analysis of earnings might arbitrarily dictate; however, the awards to high income claimants do not then become "partial compensation" by virtue of some comparison to lower income claimants with different individual circumstances. While there is a general consistency in awards for similarly situated claimants, the Special Master's methodology is designed to provide appropriate compensation for every claimant in accordance with their harm, the facts, and their individual circumstances, all of which vary from claim to claim.

B. The Act Does Not Result in an Unconstitutional Delegation of Legislative Authority

The Act is not, as Schneider argues, an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. "In a delegation challenge, the constitutional question is whether the statute has delegated legislative power to the agency." Whitman v. American Trucking Associations, Inc., 531 U.S. 457, 472 (2001); see also Touby v. United States, 500 U.S. 160, 163 (1991). It is well established, however, that "Congress does not violate the Constitution merely because it legislates in broad terms, leaving a degree of discretion to executive and judicial actors." Touby, 500 U.S. at 165. Rather, if Congress establishes "an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to [act] is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power." J.W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. United States, 276 U.S. 394, 409 (1928) (emphasis added). The Supreme Court, having found the requisite "intelligible principle" lacking in only two statutes in its entire history, has "almost never felt qualified to second-guess Congress regarding the permissible degree of policy judgment that can be left to those executing or applying the law." Whitman, 531 U.S. at 475 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

REV_00160307

Here, the Act plainly provides an "intelligible principle" to guide the Department and the Special Master. Section 403 states that the Act's purpose is to "provide compensation," and Section 405(b) provides the standard for determining the amount of the award – i.e., it provides that compensation should be based on the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant. The Act further defines the harm to the claimant as including economic and noneconomic losses, and provides definitions of those terms. Although Congress established factors for the Special Master to consider rather than an exact mathematical calculation, "[i]t is not necessary that Congress prescribe a standard that can be applied with mathematical certainty." Allegheny Airlines, Inc. v. Village of Cedarhurst, 238 F.2d 812 (2d Cir. 1956). Nor is it necessary "that Congress supply administrative officials with a specific formula for guidance in a field where flexibility and the adaption of congressional policy to infinitely variable conditions constitute the essence of the program." Lichter v. United States, 334 U.S. 742, 785 (1948). To effectuate the congressional policy of providing compensation to thousands of victims of September 11th, Congress granted the Special Master nothing more than the degree of discretion necessary and appropriate to consider and evaluate their claims on an individualized basis, ensuring that no claimant was undercompensated or overcompensated. Although plaintiffs may not be satisfied with the choices made by the Special Master, those choices unquestionably were made in accordance with an "intelligible principle" set down by Congress.

POINT VI

PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS ARE NOT REVIEWABLE

While this brief addresses at length plaintiffs' claims on the merits, to explain fully that the Fund, as operated and implemented by the Department and the Special Master, is legally permissible, the Court need not reach these merits issues. That is because, as set forth in greater detail below, plaintiffs' claims are barred by the Act's express preclusion of review provision.

REV_00160308

A. Plaintiffs' Claims are Precluded.

Congress is "free to establish a compensation scheme that operates without court participation." Gutierrez de Martinez v. Lamagno, 515 U.S. 417, 430 (1995). See, e.g., Walters v. Nat'l Ass'n of Radiation Survivors, 473 U.S. 305, 307 (1985) (no judicial review of administrative decisions regarding veterans benefits); Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. 361, 367 (1974) (same); Rhodes v. United States, 760 F.2d 1180 (11th Cir. 1985) (no judicial review of administrative decisions regarding Army National Guard tort claims); Mattes v. Chairman Vietnamese Commandos Compensation Comm'n, 173 F.3d 817 (11th Cir. 1999) (no judicial review of compensation awards to Vietnamese commandos and survivors, and related attorneys' fees decisions). That is precisely what Congress has done here. The Act's text and structure show Congress's clear intent to bar judicial review of the Special Master's compensation awards, and plaintiffs' attempted end-run around this provision must be rejected.

Under the Act, the Special Master must, within 120 days after a claim is filed, "complete a review, make a determination, and provide written notice to the claimant, with respect to the matters that were the subject of the claim under review. Such a determination shall be final and not subject to judicial review." Act § 405(b)(3) (emphasis added). The "matters" that the Special Master is required to "review" and "determine" are set out in Section 405(b)(1): whether a claimant is "eligible"; the "extent of the harm to the claimant, including any economic and noneconomic losses"; and, finally, the "amount of compensation." Id. § 405(b)(1)(A), (B)(i) &(B)(ii). The "amount of compensation," in turn, is determined based on the "harm to the claimant," the "facts of the claim," and the "individual circumstances of the claimant." Id. § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii).

If the Special Master simply applied on a case-by-case basis the substantive standards and guidelines that plaintiffs challenge, a dissatisfied claimant could not challenge those standards and guidelines in federal court. As underlying components of the Special Master's determination regarding the proper "amount of compensation," they would fall within the plain language of Section 405(b)(3)'s preclusion provision and be exempt from judicial review.

No different result should attain merely because the Special Master has voluntarily disclosed the substantive standards and guidelines that he intends to apply to calculate the "amount of compensation" for each claimant.[36] In asserting that the challenged statements and regulations violate the substantive provisions of the Act, plaintiffs essentially seek a judicial determination as to the "amount of compensation" to which they are entitled under the statute. They ask this Court to grant declaratory and injunctive relief that would control the Special Master's determination of the "extent of the harm" to individual claimants, claimants' "individual circumstances," and the "amount of compensation" to be awarded. Indeed, the Colaio plaintiffs, as part of their prayer for relief, request that "any previously granted compensation awards from the [Fund] be deemed interim and subject to revision based on a final judgment herein," Colaio Compl. p. 34 -- precisely the same compensation awards that the Act makes unreviewable. This type of judicial intervention would be flatly at odds with Congress's intent to immunize from judicial review the Special Master's "determination" of claimants' "amount of compensation" and related statutory factors. See, e.g., American Society of Cataract and Refractive Surgery v. Thompson, 279 F.3d 447, 452-454 (7th Cir. 2002) (preclusion provision barring judicial challenge to administrator's determination of value also barred challenge to regulation setting forth formula for calculating value); Painter v. Shalala, 97 F.3d 1351, 1355-1356 (10th Cir. 1996) (same).[37] That is especially clear with respect to the Special Master's methodology for [36] Congress did not require the Special Master to promulgate regulations or otherwise give guidance with respect to the substantive standards and guidelines for determining the amount of compensation. See Act § 407. To the contrary, as the Special Master has noted, he could have determined the amount of awards on a discretionary, "case-by-case" basis, without providing "any guidance to potential claimants regarding the awards that they would likely receive if they waived their rights to litigation and opted into the Fund." 67 Fed. Reg. 11,236.

[37] The fact that plaintiffs challenge the substantive criteria under which the Special Master makes award calculations distinguishes this case from cases in which collateral determining loss of earnings and other benefits, which the regulations explicitly identify as "part of the process for reaching a 'determination' pursuant to section 405(b) of the Act." 28 C.F.R. § 104.43(a).

To hold that this Court has jurisdiction over plaintiffs' claims "would create the absurd result of permitting a court to strike down a policy statement of the [administrator], notwithstanding the court's inability to review any subsequent individual adjudications for conformance with its policy decision." Paluca v. Secretary of Labor, 813 F.2d 524, 527 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 943 (1987). It would also have the anomalous result of giving greater rights of judicial review to potential applicants who had not yet filed a claim for compensation than the rights of review given to dissatisfied claimants -- despite the fact that individuals "'have traditionally been accorded more rather than less judicial protection against agency error than generally applicable rules.'" Id. (quoting Gott v. Walters, 756 F.2d 902, 915 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (Scalia, J.), vacated and reh'g granted, 791 F.2d 172, remanded with instructions to dismiss as moot, 791 F.2d 172 (D.C. Cir. 1985)). Plaintiffs should not be permitted to thwart Congress's intent to bar judicial review of the Special Master's determinations "by simply bringing declaratory judgment actions in federal court before they" file a claim for compensation. Heckler v. Ringer, 466 U.S. 602, 621 (1984). See, e.g., Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99, 108 (1977). This Court should dismiss their claims for lack of jurisdiction under Section 405(b)(3).[38] challenges to agency action -- which did not seek to establish the plaintiff's entitlement to a particular outcome or a particular relief in the administrative process -- have been permitted to go forward notwithstanding statutory preclusion provisions. E.g., McNary v. Haitian Refugee Ctr., Inc., 498 U.S. 479, 498-494 (1991); Abdullah v. INS, 184 F.3d 158, 163-164 (2d Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1066 (2000). Nor do plaintiffs raise a colorable constitutional challenge to the Special Master's regulations and guidelines, which might require a heightened showing of intent before preclusion could be found. See, e.g., Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 603-604 (1988); Czerkies v. Department of Labor, 73 F.3d 1435, 1439 (7th Cir. 1996) (en banc).

B.Plaintiffs Cannot Seek Review of the

Special Master's Actions in Individual Cases

As noted above, plaintiffs in the Colaio and Schneider cases have submitted affidavits (or otherwise alleged facts) relating to statements the Special Master purportedly made during the course of providing informal "estimates" of what certain plaintiffs might receive upon submission of a claim to the Fund. See, e.g., Declaration of Stephen Merkel ¶ 1; Schneider Compl. ¶ 53. It is not clear whether, and if so, how, these allegations relate to plaintiffs' claim that the regulations and the methodology are facially invalid.

Nevertheless, to the extent plaintiffs seek review of the Special Master's statements and conduct during such informal, "pre-filing" meetings, review is barred for two reasons. First, the APA permits judicial review of only "final agency action[s]." See 5 U.S.C. § 704. For agency action to be "final," it must (among other things) "'mark the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process -- it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature.'" Air Espana v. Brien, 165 F.3d 148, 152 (2d Cir. 1999) (internal quotation and citation omitted); see also Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177-78 (1997). The alleged "estimates" of compensation are, by definition, preliminary; they do not reflect the "consummation" of the Special Master's "decisionmaking process." To the contrary, the Special Master emphatically has stated that he "cannot, and will not, give a precise computation of an award before a claim is filed." See 67 Fed. Reg. 11,241.

Second, as noted above, the Act expressly bars review of the Special Master's determinations with respect to "the matters that [are] the subject of [a] claim under review." See Act § 405(b)(3). This bar would mean little if a claimant could seek review of the Special monitor the Fund and to "step in" if needed. See, e.g., 147 Cong. Rec. S9594 (Sept. 21, 2001) (statement of Sen. Grassley) ("As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I will monitor these provisions continually and closely as to their propriety and proper functioning. I will not hesitate to step in as I see necessary should the situation call for further action."); see also Immigration and Naturalization Serv. v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 955 n.19 (1983) ("[t]he Constitution provides Congress with abundant means to oversee and control its administrative creatures").

REV_00160312

Master's deliberations at every stage of the process;[39] it would mean even less (and next to nothing) if a potential claimant could seek review of the Special Master's pre-filing "estimate" of what he or she might receive upon filing a claim. Judicial review in these circumstances would frustrate Congress's basic desire that the Fund provide a quick and sure administrative remedy. See, e.g., Block v. Community Nutrition Institute, 467 U.S. 340, 345 (1984) (whether and to what extent a particular statute precludes judicial review is determined in part by "the structure of the statutory scheme [and] its objectives"). Moreover, it would permit claimants to obtain greater judicial review by not formally submitting claims to the Fund. For all of these reasons, it would be inappropriate to consider plaintiffs' factual allegations relating to informal "estimates" of their claims.

[39] Plaintiffs appear to acknowledge they could not, for example, submit a claim, obtain a presumed award, and then file suit challenging that presumed award. See Colaio Compl. ¶ 6; Schneider Compl. ¶ 30.

"I am writing to invite you to a private dinner with honoring President Bush on May 21st here in Washington, D.C."

"More importantly, The President's Dinner is the kick-off event of the critical 2004 election campaign and a symbol of the President's commitment to maintain and expand our very slim Republican majorities in Congress and particularly in the U.S. Senate in the critical 2004 election campaign."

"If you cannot renew at this time, then I hope you will continue your support of President Bush and help him get the 2004 campaign off to a great start by making make a special contribution of $1000, $500, $250, or even $150."

Draft testimony for Peter R. Fisher House Financial Services Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee
Tuesday, March 18, 3 pm

Madame Chairman Kelly, Ranking Member Gutierrez, and distinguished members of the Oversight Subcommittee, thank you for your invitation to testify on the President's Jobs and Growth package. I will emphasize two critical features of the President's plan to create and secure jobs, accelerate and sustain our recovery, and increase workers' standards of living and the economic performance of our nation for many years to come.

First, the President's package is the right prescription for the macroeconomic circumstances we face today. We face more than the ups and downs of the regular economic cycle. A pure consumption-oriented, short-term stimulus is not the right response. We are recovering from the events of the 1990s, culminating in the stock market bubble and its aftermath, as well as the attacks of September 11th. We should support consumption and promote investment on a balanced, enduring basis. The President's package would do this.

Second is the promise of sharpening capital allocation in the United States. The President has proposed reducing the distortion in taxation of equity capital vs. debt capital by taxing corporate income just once and not twice. By enacting this proposal, this Congress has the opportunity to make the single biggest improvement in the efficiency of capital investment that Congress has taken in decades.

It may be helpful to identify our macroeconomic challenge before we discuss a solution. The United States, in my judgment, is not facing just another swing of the business cycle, but the aftermath of the extraordinary events of the 1990s. Federal Reserve monetary policy successes, global economic integration, and telecommunications advances combined to fuel real prosperity but also a stock market bubble. We continue to live with the dis-inflationary consequences and the destruction of wealth as the bubble burst.

Under these circumstances, using fiscal policy only to deliver a "short-term stimulus" would be a mistake. The American people are smart enough to distinguish between a one-off injection of cash and an enduring improvement in their disposable income. When consumers re-finance their mortgages at lower rates, they gain the true wealth effect of an enduring improvement in household cash flow.

The same would be true of bringing forward to this year the tax rate reductions that Congress has already approved, of ending the marriage penalty, of increasing the child credit from $400 to $1000 per child, of reducing the taxation of equity capital (the dividend tax). The President's plan would put cash in people's pockets right away and in the future. The plan would spur small businesses to invest as their marginal rates fall. Higher incomes stretching into the future will stimulate consumer demand and business investment – policy for the long-term, beginning today.

The scale of the package is central to accelerating growth and job creation. Over the next decade, U.S. economic output is projected to total $142 trillion, generating $27 to $28 trillion in federal revenues. The President's package would reduce taxes by $670 billion over that period (scored with static modeling). Fiscal action cannot be timid or tiny if it is to influence such a massive economy. It must have some heft.

Let's not make the mistake of opting for unbalanced, short-term consumption stimulus. We should choose policies that will promote consumer and business confidence, sustained consumption and investment, real economic growth and job creation, both now and over the coming decade.

Keener incentives for more efficient capital allocation

In the past year, Congress under Chairman Oxley's and Senator Sarbanes' leadership took a major step toward improving our capital markets' performance. While implementation is still underway, corporate executives, directors, auditors, and lawyers are already feeling the tighter accountability. Better run, better-disclosing corporations make for better capital markets.

But there is more to be done in setting the right incentives for corporate executives. By double-taxing profits but not interest, our tax code encourages executives to retain earnings instead of paying them to shareholders; to favor debt over equity finance; and to dedicate some of America's leading minds to tax alchemy instead of value creation. By imposing a high marginal rate on profit, our tax code thins the vital blood of economic growth, risk capital. No other major industrial nation taxes profits at such a punitive effective rate.

The President's proposal would reduce these biases against equity capital. Individuals would no longer pay taxes on dividends based on income for which the corporation has already paid tax. To avoid forcing companies to pay dividends, a shareholder's basis in his or her stock would rise by a commensurate amount if a company chose to retain earnings for re-investment.

Shareholders would be tax-neutral between re-investing profits in the best projects a company could offer versus the best projects the market could offer. Today's tax code cordons off that choice inside the company.

The President's proposal would raise the burden of proof on corporate executives for retaining profits instead of sending them to shareholders. Some executives may prefer today's tax code, which places a less onerous burden for justifying a decision to retain earnings with clear and attractive re-investment plans. Yet corporations exist to serve shareholders, not corporate employees, and our tax code would be the better for recognizing such.

The impact on capital efficiency may be huge. Each year American firms invest over $1 trillion in fresh capital and generate $700-800 billion in corporate profits. Think of the gains in capital utilization and job creation if we accelerate and re-target the investment process.

The economy and financial markets would reap collateral benefits. With companies issuing less debt and more equity, balance sheets would become sturdier over time, and companies less prone to job-destroying bankruptcy. Eliminating this distortion would diminish the tax code's overall bias against savings and investment and lower the cost of capital – meaning higher capital investment, a higher-long-term growth rate, higher productivity, and higher wages for everyone. And the proposal would slash the incentives for corporate tax engineering because the exclusion only applies to fully taxed profits. Net tax complexity and compliance costs would fall, freeing some of our keenest minds for more productive work.

Corporate executives would also face cleaner incentives for their own conduct. If dividends are no longer a tax-inefficient way of paying shareholders, executives will have fewer arguments to justify cash mountains and share buy-backs – which, a critic may note, offer the insider benefit of boosting the value of executives' stock options. And, because the President believes that profits should be taxed once – not twice, but also not never – a company's paying tax actually accrues as an asset to shareholders. "Corporate inversions" won't make sense any more.

Impact of anticipated borrowing on fiscal sustainability

Growth has been slower and unemployment higher than we would like. Prudent fiscal policy leans against the economic cycle – exactly as the President has proposed with cutting taxes for the long-term and increasing deficits for the near-term. The deficits projected are very manageable in historical context, in comparison to other G-7 countries, and in proportion to the scale of the domestic and global credit markets.

In February 2003, the Treasury announced its most recent refunding needs and related financing changes. We are confident that the Treasury will have no difficulty financing the federal government's needs under all projected fiscal scenarios. There were no changes in the issuance calendar for this quarter. Looking ahead, the Treasury announced plans to re-introduce a 3-year note in May, to be part of future quarterly financing packages, primarily to diversify issuance away from Treasury bills and the 2-year note. The Treasury instituted a regular re-opening policy for 5-year notes, beginning in May, and outlined additional steps in case more borrowing capacity proves needed.

[But how can we bridge the gap from the budget deficits that it is wise to incur now to the fiscal balance that we need to achieve in the long run? The first step is diagnosing the real problem. I suggest that we re-focus our attention from annual deficits and total debt, which understate our long-term challenge, and instead look to the future – to our total future obligations.]

[According to the Treasury's annual Financial Report of the United States Government, these future obligations, chiefly Social Security, Medicare, and government employee and retirement benefits, are twenty-odd trillion dollars – over six times greater than the national debt held by the public. Yet our fiscal discourse seems oddly unfocused on this fact. Once we have the government's total financial position in mind, and only then, can we start real discussion about closing the gap between future revenues and outlays.]

[From 1961 to 2001, through five Democratic and five Republican administrations, as tax debates have come and gone, total federal revenues have ranged from 17 to 21 percent of GDP. The average has been 18.6 percent. We are now operating a bit below this long-run average, as we would both hope and expect given the state of our economy. The prudent way to plan for the government's finances over the coming decades is to project that federal revenues remain around the average of the last forty years. When we plan in this cautious way, we will of course realize that federal revenues can only grow with growth in the economy.]

[Real fiscal discipline will only come about if we consider a forward-looking measure of the federal government's fiscal position. When we grapple with the fiscal gap that matters - between the current value of future outlays and future revenues - we will recognize the force of the President's insistence that only by growing the economy and controlling future spending will we control future deficits.]

Attached is a copy of a letter from Secretary Powell to Director Daniels on State's legislative proposal to compensate US victims of international terrorism. The letter urges completion of interagency review of the proposal. This proposal was submitted as part of State's Foreign Relations Authorization bill. Per guidance within EXOP, we advised State that the proposal was on hold and that State's Legal Advisor should pursue with Jay Lefkowitz.

We are close to final clearance of State's Authorization bill in anticipation of a House International Relations Committee markup possibly next week.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON

March 13, 2003

Dear Mr. Daniels:

We have corresponded with your office since December 2001 regarding the State Department's legislative proposal to establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate U.S. victims of international terrorism. We submitted our plan in November 2001 in connection with a provision in the FY 2002 Commerce, Justice, State (CJS) Appropriations Act (P.L. 107-77), requiring the President to submit such a proposal not later than submission of the 2003 budget. This proposal has yet to be approved by your office despite subsequent revisions addressing initial OMB concerns.

Deputy Secretary Armitage had several conversations with Deputy Director Dorn in May and June of 2002 regarding legislation to provide compensation for victims of international terrorism. Since we have not submitted a proposal to Congress, Senator Hollings has attempted to add language to the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations bill, as well as to the FY 2003 CJS Appropriations bill, that seeks to abrogate the 1981 Algiers Accords and permit the 1979 Tehran hostages to sue Iran for damages in U.S. court in violation of U.S. international obligations to the Accords. Each time, we successfully worked to get the language dropped, arguing that an Administration proposal on this matter would be forthcoming.

In June of 2002, Deputy Secretary Armitage sent a letter to key members, with OMB concurrence, outlining the Administration's principles for such a proposal. Senator Hollings and other members, however, are still awaiting the Administration proposal, in response to the FY 2002 directive. Just recently, at a hearing on March 6 before the Senate CJS Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator Hollings asked me about the status of our proposal.

The Honorable
Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.,
Director,
Office of Management and Budget.

In February, we again provided draft legislation to OMB as part of our proposed FY 2004/2005 Foreign Relations Authorization bill. On March 3, OMB advised us of its staff recommendation to defer a decision for further consideration.

Our failure to submit a proposal is increasingly problematic. I strongly urge you to complete your inter-agency review of this matter as soon as possible so that our proposed legislation can remain in the State Authorization bill. I am concerned that if the Administration is not more responsive to the FY 2002 CJS bill, we will not be able to deter more objectionable legislation during this year's appropriations process. Moreover, the current ad hoc approach favors large payments to a few victims who find assets, and large fees to their trial lawyers, with a high risk that the U.S. treasury will ultimately have to pay any amounts taken from blocked assets. The current approach also creates serious foreign policy difficulties, particularly since U.S. assets abroad risk similar treatment. I believe it is urgent that we change from that approach to a system without the foreign policy difficulties that provides a limited but equitable recovery to all victims of terrorism.

Sincerely,

Colin L. Powell

This looks basically fine. We will probably not table a separate UNSCR on return of assets but rather include that as a provision in our mega

Five Republican House Members Announce Formation Of "Congressional Hispanic Conference."

Reps. Henry Bonilla, Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, Lincoln Diaz-Balart, Devin Nunes and Mario Diaz-Balart scheduled an afternoon news conference today where they were expected to announce the formation of the Congressional Hispanic Conference. The statement prepared for the news conference lists the group's priorities, including: "support of President Bush and American troops in the war against terrorism, the Free Trade Agreement of the Americas (FTAA), tax relief to families, through eliminating the death tax and the marriage penalty," and backing "faith based initiatives and educational choice for all."

Ros-Lehtinen, who will serve as Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Conference, says in a statement prepared for delivery, "The newly formed Congressional Hispanic Conference...will let all Hispanics know that their issues and concerns are being listened to and acted upon in the US Congress. Lower taxes, affordable health care and the education of our youth are all issues which are dear to the Republican Party and to Hispanics as well and we will fight our hardest to assure that the largest minority group in the United States have a loud and powerful voice in Congress."

Bonilla adds in his statement, "Many Americans think the Congressional Hispanic Caucus represents Hispanics -- that is not the case. Today we make clear that there is another voice. Today we introduce a group who will look out for the best interests of all Hispanics -- not just those with liberal politics. I am proud to serve as a founding member of this group and look forward to great progress."

DATE: WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 2003

OFF THE WIRES:

- Arafat Appoints Longtime Deputy Abbas Prime Minister. Palestinian President Yasser Arafat appointed his longtime deputy Mahmoud Abbas prime minister today, a senior Palestinian official said. According to legislation creating the new post, Abbas has the authority to appoint the Cabinet and call it into session, and he is responsible for overseeing its functions. Legislator Hanan Ashrawi said, "It's the beginning of a transition -- it is certainly a turning point and a qualitative shift in the political culture. Now we have power-sharing that is clearly spelled out." Arafat remains overall commander of Palestinian security forces, and also has final say in negotiations with Israel.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE AND AROUND TOWN:

- Bush Aides Say Timing Of Attack On Iraq Is Up To Military. President Bush was meeting today with his foreign policy and military advisors as Bush's deadline for Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to depart the country approached. Bush aides said the White House has no plans to mark the deadline and that war will not necessarily begin at 8 p.m. tonight. They said Bush would decide on the timing of military action based on the advice of military leaders.

  White House Press Secretary Ari Fleischer said this morning, "On the brink of war with Iraq, Americans should be prepared for what we hope will be as precise and short a conflict as possible, but there are many unknowns. It could be a matter of some duration; we do not know. Americans have to be prepared for loss of life. Americans have to be prepared for the importance of disarming Saddam Hussein to protect the peace."

  Turkey Moving Toward Allowing Fly-Overs But Not Base Access. Turkish Prime Minister Tayyip Erdogan said today his country is moving toward opening its airspace to US military planes but not allowing them access to air bases. A parliamentary vote on the proposal is expected tomorrow. Such a decision would result in Turkey forfeiting a US aid package of up to $30 billion in grants and loans.

  Germany Allows Fly-Over Rights. Germany today guaranteed the US fly-over rights. Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder also rejected calls for a parliamentary votes on whether to allow German troops on NATO reconnaissance flights over Turkey and on keeping nuclear and chemical contamination detection units in Kuwait. Several members of Schroeder's coalition of Social Democrats and Greens have expressed reservations about allowing Germans to join NATO AWACS radar plane crews in flights over Turkish airspace, arguing the flights could assist the US-led attack on Iraq.

  US Bombs More Iraqi Positions In Southern No-Fly Zone. US planes bombed Iraqi positions after coalition planes patrolling the southern no-fly zone were fired on, Admiral John Kelly told reporters aboard the USS Abraham Lincoln today. Kelly said "a series of targets" which he described as command and control positions were hit. Kelly added, "We're seeing some fortifications that were built over the last month or two months being occupied. Mostly we're seeing high-value targets, surface-to-air missiles, moving in an effort by them to increase their survivability." Kelly said Saddam Hussein "continues to reposition his forces. We continue to use our intelligence gathering abilities to adjust to this and to be prepared."

Almost 2 Million Leaflets Dropped In Southern Iraq. The US military said today coalition planes dropped almost 2 million more leaflets into Iraq today, targeting 29 military and civilian sites in the southeastern part of the country. The leaflets carried various messages. A US military statement said, "Some stressed that Coalition forces do not wish to harm innocent Iraqis. One message informed Iraqi citizens that they could be the victims if Saddam Hussein uses chemical weapons. Another message encouraged the Iraqi military to refrain from using weapons of mass destruction or burning oil fields." Officials in Washington said one of the main purposes of the leaflets is to persuade Iraqi forces in the south to step aside when coalition forces move in from Kuwait.

General Warns Response To Iraqi Chemical Attack Would Be "Dramatic." Gen. David McKiernan, the top US commander in Kuwait, warned Iraq today, "It would be a hugely bad choice on the part of any Iraqi leader or commander to employ chemical weapons." He promised that the allied response to such an attack would be "dramatic."

Iraqi Parliament Pledges Loyalty To Saddam. In an emergency session today, deputies in Iraq's parliament issued a letter pledging their loyalty to President Saddam Hussein. Several chanted, "We'll sacrifice our blood and souls for Saddam." Speaker Saadoun Hammadi told reporters afterward that "it is unthinkable for Saddam Hussein to leave" the country.

Italian Prime Minister Backs Use Of Force, Faults France. Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi today backed military action in Iraq and said France had derailed diplomatic efforts. As the Italian parliament prepared to vote on opening the country's air space to US fly-overs, Berlusconi said, "The game is in play between those who historically have been committed to the liberty of men and those who have transformed their country into a chamber of torture. It seems to me that France made a mistake, saying it would have used its veto against another resolution. Resolution 1441…still applies and thus the conditions to authorize the use of force." Though Berlusconi was heckled repeatedly during his speech, the parliament is expected to approve the measure later today. Berlusconi repeated that Italian troops would not participate in the war, however.

Sharon Says Little Risk Of Iraqi Missile Strike; $2 Billion Defense In Place. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon told his Cabinet today there is little risk of Iraq hitting Israel with missiles but that the armed forces are ready for the worst. Since the 1991 Gulf War, when Israel was hit by 39 Scud missiles, Israel has installed a $2 billion-plus missile defense system. US forces man three of at least eight Patriot anti-missile batteries now in Israel. Sharon also praised the US for its determination to strip Iraq of weapons of mass destruction. Said Sharon, "The war being waged, which will be waged, is not a war in which we are involved. We hope their efforts will be successful." Though Israel stayed on the sidelines of the 1991 conflict, this time it has reserved the right to retaliate. A government spokesman said counterattack options were not discussed at today's Cabinet session, however.

US Officials Deny Aziz Rumors. US officials denied this morning that Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz had either defected to US authorities or was shot trying to flee Baghdad. "These rumors are just not true," one official told Reuters.

- Ridge Says Al Qaeda Still Principal Terror Threat. Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge told ABC television this morning that Al Qaeda remains "the principle threat" to commit an act of terrorism against the US. Ridge said that "between what our allies have acquired and what we've learned over the past couple of weeks, it has reached the point that we are at a higher level of risk at this time. Bin Laden has also said that if we move military into Iraq, he will use this as a rallying cry. Again, it's very much about bin Laden and Al Qaeda primarily." Asked whether there is a specific threat, Ridge said, "The traffic discusses targeting US and coalition interests around the world, US interests domestically and internationally. And again, the general references to different sectors, the general references to soft targets, again I think if you took a look at the litany of generic references that we pick up from our sources, you'd find that they've, in one manner, shape or form, talked about a lot of things in this country, but not with the kind of specificity that we would like to see and, frankly, not with the specificity that a lot of people think we get."

  $3 Billion Coming To States, Cities To Shore Up Security Efforts. In an earlier interview with NBC, Ridge was asked about states and cities which are saying they cannot afford to take the anti-terror measures Ridge has suggested and that they have not received money promised by Washington. Ridge answered, "First of all, when I spoke with the governors a couple of nights ago, they all understood that we have to improve security and I think they've all undertaken a very robust and broad-ranging group of security precautions. Secondly, the President has said that he would ask for a supplemental. There will be a homeland security piece of that supplemental." Asked when states and cities can expect to get more money, Ridge responded, "Well, I think it really depends on when the decision is made to ask for the supplemental and it'll be forthcoming. But I must tell you...that we now have out applications far in excess of $1 billion to the states and the locals, for law enforcement and first-responders. We'll put another $1 billion out that was appropriated by the Congress. So in due time there will be about $3 billion available to the governors and the mayors to help them shore up their efforts to make America more secure."

Color-Coded Terror Alert Levels Meant For Government Professionals. Appearing on CBS, Ridge was asked how he plans to "avoid the sort of hysterical duct-tape buying and the run on water that we saw the last time the threat level was raised." Said Ridge, "I think Americans over the past couple of months, since we've raised the threat level -- this is the third occasion -- have begun to understand that when we raise the threat, when we go from yellow to orange or when we engage additional security measures with Liberty Shield, that this is really our work with government, with security personnel, with law enforcement, and I think they understand that the national threat warning is really for the professionals, not for them. Hopefully, as we've seen with over 100 million hits on the ready.gov website, that people are learning more about what they can do to be prepared. But by and large, I think Americans understand the reality of the 21st century and trust the professionals to keep them safe."

Bloomberg Makes Case To White House For NYC Security Aid. President Bush and Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge met with New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg this morning, after which Bloomberg called it a "great meeting." Bloomberg told reporters New Yorkers "are behind the President and our prayers are with him and with our troops overseas." He added, "We do have, in New York, some special needs in the sense that we represent to the whole world a lot of things that terrorists find very threatening. And we obviously can use every bit of help that we can get from Washington and also from Governor Pataki in Albany, who've been very helpful, in terms of providing resources." Bloomberg also thanked Ridge, saying, "He's got a very difficult job. Pulling together disparate groups, coordinating our resources to meet a changing world is perhaps the hardest job in government. And my hat's off to him."

Asked what he requested in terms of dollars, Bloomberg said, "We didn't talk specifics, but our great interest is that the monies that are distributed and made available are based on where the risks are and on need." He added, "Clearly, New York City was ground zero before, and because it is such a diverse city where people can express their views, where all of the world's religions are practiced, it's the target."

Ridge indicated he was on the same wavelength. In remarks to reporters preceding Bloomberg's, Ridge said, "We understand the primacy that the terrorists place on densely populated area. We know they go after economic targets. And the city of New York obviously remains a part of this national infrastructure that is a target." He also said "no final determinations have been made" regarding the supplemental budget request.

- House Leaders Looking To "Wall Off" Medicare As They Grow Vote On Budget Resolution. Lacking the votes to pass their budget resolution, House GOP leaders have been engaging in a series of meetings to tweak the bill in an effort to get to a majority. While some are claiming the leadership is dozens of votes short, a House GOP leadership source told the Bulletin the number is not that high, but a scheduled 11:00 Rules Committee meeting today on the budget resolution will likely be pushed back to later in the day.

  According to knowledgeable sources, there are "competing" alternatives the House GOP leaders are weighing right now. One is a funding boost for both Medicare and Medicaid, but that is said to be "not the frontrunner." Instead, House GOP leaders are looking at "walling off" the Medicare program from cuts. The budget resolution passed by the Committee called for the underlying program to be cut even as $400 billion is set aside for a prescription drug benefit to be integrated into the program. That has resurrected memories for some of the 1996 budget battle in which Democrats blasted Republicans for supporting tax cuts for the rich while "cutting" Medicare to pay for it – a battle many Republicans are not eager to replay. And while Republican leaders appear to be focusing on Medicare, apparently believing that Medicaid is not a potent political issue, others are dusting off the MMEE – Medicare, Medicaid, Environment and Education – to remind colleagues of the mantra and agenda used by Democrats in the 90s to eat into the House GOP majority.

- Senate GOP Leaders Seek To Force Issue On Budget Resolution. The Senate's stalemate over tax cuts continues, but the Senate GOP leadership intends to force the issue by bringing the budget resolution to a vote this week. Currently there are three floating coalitions in the Senate, none of which can muster a majority right now. There is one group which backs the President's plan to provide $700 billion+ in tax relief over ten years, a second group which seeks a smaller number, and a third group which wants no tax cuts. While an extended debate today on ANWR threatens to delay final consideration of the budget resolution, a Senate Budget Committee source tells the Bulletin that GOP leaders still plan on voting this week.

  The current nose counting suggests that GOP leaders are a handful of votes shy of 51. However, a Senate Budget Committee source said that GOP leaders are committed to "moving forward," and they will force members to demonstrate where they stand on the President's plan via a vote. According to the committee source, no Senator has yet come forward with an actual amendment to change the tax cut number in the budget resolution.

- House Approves Tax Bill. The House approved by voice vote today the Tax Relief, Simplification and Equity Act of 2003, designed to simplify and make more equitable 14 provisions in the tax code. Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Thomas, the bill's sponsor, said, "The provisions in this bill exemplify areas of the tax code that do not make sense and should not remain in the tax code one day longer."

  According to a Ways and Means press release, "HR 1308 adjusts areas of the Tax Code that penalize farmers who are stricken by drought, flood or other weather-related conditions. The legislation also helps small businesses to flourish rather than face possible bankruptcy by closing loopholes that place an unfair tax burden on their products. In addition, the bill provides for assistance to families whose children have been injured as a result of the Hepatitis A vaccination, as well as expands the orphan drug tax credit to help speed the accessibility of cures for diseases to those who need them. Other provisions grant tax relief to astronauts who perish in a space shuttle mission, including those who lost their lives in the space shuttle Columbia disaster, and extends the special capital gain exclusion for home sales for members of the military to members of the Foreign Service."

- Democrats Poised To Defeat Artic National Wildlife Refuge Drilling Provision. Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle and Senators Barbara Boxer, Dick Durbin, Joe Lieberman and Ron Wyden held what one Senate aide described as a "rally" on Capitol Hill this morning in anticipation of passing an amendment to the FY2004 Budget Resolution that would strike a provision from the resolution that "could lead to the opening of the Arctic National." Supporters and opponents of the amendment agreed this morning that the amendment, sponsored by Boxer and Republican Sen. Lincoln Chafee is likely to pass. The vote is expected to be taken today.

  A Senate aide, whose boss backs the Boxer-Chafee amendment, said, "It ain't over 'til it's over, but things are looking very good for us this morning." Other Senate sources on both sides of the issue told the Bulletin the Administration's bid to open the refuge to oil drilling, as one source said, "is poised for defeat." The source said head counts by both sides found "at least 52 senators would oppose drilling in the refuge."

- Commerce Secretary Evans Unveils Plan To Reduce Trade Barriers, Increase Global Competition. Commerce Secretary Don Evans this morning released an eight-point "Standards Initiative" he said was designed "to help break down trade barriers." Evans added, "The initiative is in response to industry concerns that foreign standards and technical regulation issues are becoming among of the greatest challenges to expanding exports."

  At a news conference held to release the plan, Evans said, "The Bush Administration remains committed to promoting competition and opening new markets for US goods. Standards and testing are key to our international competitiveness. But more and more we are hearing that foreign standards and testing requirements are keeping our products out of foreign markets. This is the wrong approach that reduces efficiencies, limits competition and increases prices for the consumer goods. This eight-point initiative is an effort to create a more level playing field around the world."

  The Standards Initiative includes:

  - "Developing a Commerce Global Standards Activity Assessment: The Technology Administration, through the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), will take the lead in conducting a standards activity assessment of all existing Commerce Department programs and efforts to reduce standards-related barriers in foreign markets. Following consultations with industry and other stakeholders, recommendations will be made to the Secretary for future action."

- "Reinforcing Expertise in Key Markets: NIST and the International Trade Administration (ITA) have developed a new, redesigned, intensive training program for standards liaisons posted abroad."
- "Devising an Effective Training and Outreach Program: NIST and ITA, in cooperation with US standards development organizations, will develop a standards training program for all Commerce Department Foreign Commercial Service Officers."
- "Creating a 'Best Practices' Database: Working with its offices abroad, other government agencies, and industry, the Commerce Department will develop a database of 'best practices' in addressing standards issues in foreign markets."
- "Expanding the Early Warning System: The Commerce Department will strengthen and expand 'Export Alert!', a free, web-based service to disseminate market intelligence and information on standards developments in key priority foreign markets in Europe, Asia, and Latin America."
- "Partnering with the President's Export Council on Standards Leadership: The Commerce Department will support the development of a dialogue on standards within the proposed President's Export Council subcommittee on technology and competitiveness."
- "Reaching out to US Industry: The Commerce Department will host a series of industry-specific roundtables to gather input from US industry on the most pressing standards issues and priority foreign markets."
- "Appointing a Liaison at the International Trade Administration: A senior official will be named to act as ITA's Standards Liaison with US industry to ensure that industry's priorities on standards are promoted through the Commerce Department's international policies and programs, and will also work closely with other US government agencies."

- SEC Charges HealthSouth, CEO, With $1.4 Billion In Accounting Fraud. The SEC announced today it has charged HealthSouth Corporation and CEO Richard M. Scrushy with $1.4 billion in accounting fraud. HealthSouth is the country's largest provider of outpatient surgery, diagnostic and rehabilitative health care services. According to an SEC news release issued this morning, the commission charges that in 1999, at Scrushy's insistence, HealthSouth "systematically overstated its earnings by at least $1.4 billion in order to meet or exceed Wall Street earnings expectations. The false increases in earnings were matched by false increases in HealthSouth's assets. By the third quarter of 2002, HealthSouth's assets were overstated by at least $800 million, or approximately 10 percent." The SEC suspended trading in HealthSouth securities for two days. SEC Enforcement Director Stephen Cutler said, "HealthSouth's fraud represents an appalling betrayal of investors." The SEC said it is seeking civil penalties, surrender "of all ill-gotten gains or losses avoided by both defendants, and an order prohibiting Scrushy from ever serving as an officer or director of a public company."

  Also today, the Justice Department said former HealthSouth Chief Financial Officer Weston Smith has agreed to plead guilty to securities fraud, conspiracy, wire fraud and false certification of financial records. The department said Smith has agreed to cooperate with the government's ongoing investigation.

- Stabenow Says "Special Interest Thimerosal Provision Has Been Dropped From Bio-terrorism Legislation." Sen. Debbie Stabenow told a rally of families of autism victims on Capitol Hill today that a "special interest Thimerosal provision has been dropped from bio-terrorism legislation." Stabenow said, "I was surprised and disappointed to learn last week that this provision, identical to one which the House and Senate recently voted to remove from the Homeland Security bill, was attached to new legislation -- in this case, legislation dealing with smallpox and bio-terrorism. I was pleased to learn today that this provision has now been pulled from the draft of the bill, even before the bill goes to its first committee markup."

- Frost Says Rules Committee Is "Stifling Democracy" By Blocking Democratic Amendments To Bankruptcy Bill. Rep. Martin Frost this morning charges that in approving the rule it did for House consideration of the bankruptcy bill, the Rules Committee "continued its strategy to stifle democracy by blocking serious and substantive Democratic amendments." Frost continued, "The rule made in order a substitute amendment offered by Rep. Conyers, the Ranking Member of the Judiciary Committee, as well as an amendment offered by Rep. Sherman and a technical amendment offered by Rep. Gutierrez. Unfortunately, the Committee refused to allow the House to consider six amendments that our Democratic colleagues brought to the Committee. While the Chairman of the Rules Committee contends that making in order the substitute and the two Democratic amendments makes for a fair rule, Democratic Members should know what was not made in order in order to judge for themselves the fairness of this rule." He added, "These six were serious, substantive amendments that should have been given the opportunity to be debated and voted on by the full House."

Frost listed the amendments that the committee refused to allow:

- "An amendment by Rep. Schakowsky that would protect against the bill's means test the following groups: unemployed people who have exhausted their benefits, active duty members of the armed forces, and victims of terrorism."
- "An amendment by Rep. Waters that would prohibit credit card companies from issuing cards to people under 21 years of age."
- "An amendment from Reps. Conyers, Slaughter, and Jackson Lee that would give courts the discretion to provide extra protection for people entitled to alimony or child support."
- "An amendment by Rep. Delahunt that would place a $125,000 national cap on the homestead exemption, without any of the exceptions allowed in the underlying bill."
- "Another amendment by Rep. Delahunt that would place reasonable limits on exorbitant 'retention bonuses', severance packages, and other payments to corporate insiders of companies that are bankrupt or facing bankruptcy."
- "An amendment by Rep. Jackson Lee that would crack down on the predatory lending practice known as 'payday lending.'"

- China Releases US Resident Teng Chunyan After 3 Years. Chinese-born former New York City resident Teng Chunyan was released from a Beijing prison today after serving almost three years for publicizing details of China's crackdown on the dissident Falun Gong group. Teng told reporters, "Falun Gong is purely an evil cult. It has a definite political aspect." Teng has made similar comments in prison interviews, and Falun Gong activists have suggested she may have been brainwashed or tortured. Teng, who is married to an American, has permanent US resident status.

- Five Republican House Members Announce Formation Of "Congressional Hispanic Conference." Reps. Henry Bonilla, Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, Lincoln Diaz-Balart, Devin Nunes and Mario Diaz-Balart scheduled an afternoon news conference today where they were expected to announce the formation of the Congressional Hispanic Conference. The statement prepared for the news conference lists the group's priorities, including: "support of President Bush and American troops in the war against terrorism, the Free Trade Agreement of the Americas (FTAA), tax relief to families, through eliminating the death tax and the marriage penalty," and backing "faith based initiatives and educational choice for all."

  Ros-Lehtinen, who will serve as Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Conference, says in a statement prepared for delivery, "The newly formed Congressional Hispanic Conference...will let all Hispanics know that their issues and concerns are being listened to and acted upon in the US Congress. Lower taxes, affordable health care and the education of our youth are all issues which are dear to the Republican Party and to Hispanics as well and we will fight our hardest to assure that the largest minority group in the United States have a loud and powerful voice in Congress."

  Bonilla adds in his statement, "Many Americans think the Congressional Hispanic Caucus represents Hispanics -- that is not the case. Today we make clear that there is another voice. Today we introduce a group who will look out for the best interests of all Hispanics -- not just those with liberal politics. I am proud to serve as a founding member of this group and look forward to great progress."

- Club For Growth Endorses Isset In Texas Special Election. The "Reaganite" Club for Growth has endorsed Carl Isset in the May 3 special election in TX 19, being held to fill the upcoming vacancy being created by Rep. Larry Combest's retirement.

- Political Notes. Presidential. As the New York Times was reporting on the split in the Democratic Party on Iraq, Sen. Joseph Lieberman said on Fox News's "O'Reilly Factor" that he "wouldn't have done anything differently" from the way President Bush has. Lieberman also said on the show that the Democratic Party will not elect a president until "the American people trust us to be tough on security questions when you've got to be tough." ... The Washington Post writes that "as long as Iraq looms, [Howard] Dean has a sheen." In fact, House Majority Leader Tom DeLay "is drawing as much attention as possible" to Dean in an effort to push other Democratic prospects "go out on a limb and match his anti-war rhetoric," the Hill reports. ... The Washington Post profiles Gary Hart, who, at a speaking engagement warned of "possible nuclear catastrophes in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles" and said the battle for Baghdad could resemble the film "Black Hawk Down" played out in the "streets of a city the size of Paris."

Governors. The New York Times reports that Connecticut GOP Gov. John Rowland will pay up to $50,000 to a Hartford law firm to represent several of his administration officials testifying in a federal grand jury corruption investigation tomorrow. ... Alabama Gov. Bob Riley (R) has agreed to accept a five percent pay cut, the Mobile Register reports.

Senate. Rumors are circulating that Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell (R) might not seek a third term in Colorado if he is offered the leadership of the US Olympic Committee, the Washington Post reports. ... The "news around Washington" is that US HUD Secretary Mel Martinez (R) is still mulling a Florida run, UPI reports. In a letter to the Orlando Sentinel, Martinez expressed his disappointment at incumbent Democratic Sen. Bob Graham's "vote last week to impede the nomination of Miguel Estrada." ...The White House is trying to get ex-Gov. Ed Schafer to challenge Democratic Sen. Byron Dorgan in North Dakota, the Hill reports. ... White House political adviser Karl Rove will speak at a fundraiser for GOP Rep. Richard Burr's North Carolina Senate campaign next month, the Raleigh News and Observer reports. ... Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle (D) has "revamped his political operation, putting a stronger emphasis on fundraising for his own re-election but also working numerous party events into his national travels" as he gets ready for another South Dakota run, Roll Call reports.

House. The New York Post's Page Six reports that "hundreds of well-heeled Washingtonians paid $1,000 to $5,000 per ticket to attend Rep. Patrick Kennedy's St. Patrick's Day fund-raiser on Capitol Hill -- but Kennedy was a no-show." ... Democratic IL4 Rep. Luis Gutierrez has endorsed a Republican for Town President in Cicero, the Chicago Tribune reports.

Subject: We have blue slips for Michigan nominees!

Both Levin and Stabenow have returned negative blue slips for all five pending Michigan nominees - the 4 circuits and 1 district. The blue slips are accompanied by a letter to Senator Hatch explaining that the WH has rejected their proposals for bipartisan solution to the situation, which has "left us in this position." They also attach all of their correspondence to the White House and Leahy on this issue since 2001 (but none of the WH responses, or Abraham's letter explaining the source of his opposition to White and Lewis).

Jamie, Wendy - I'll fax over a copy of the letter to Senator Hatch.

Text of 3/11/03 Letter from the President to Senator Frist and Senator Daschle
ÿDear Senator Frist: (Dear Senator Daschle:)
The Senate is debating the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to be a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Miguel Estrada's life is an example of the American Dream. He came to this country from Honduras as a teenager barely speaking English and went on to graduate with honors from Harvard Law School. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States and served in the United States Department of Justice under Presidents of both political parties. The American Bar Association has given him its highest rating. When appointed, he will be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit.
I submitted Mr. Estrada's nomination to the Senate on May 9, 2001. But his nomination has been stalled for partisan reasons for nearly 2 years in which the Senate has not held a vote either to confirm or to reject the nomination.
The Senate has a solemn responsibility to exercise its constitutional advice and consent function and hold up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination. Senators who are filibustering a vote on Miguel Estrada are flouting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate. The filibuster is the culmination of an escalating series of back-and-forth tactics that have marred the judicial confirmation process for years, as many judicial nominees have never received up or down Senate votes. And now, a minority of Senators are threatening for the first time to use ideological filibusters as a standard tool to indefinitely block confirmation of well-qualified nominees with strong bipartisan support. This has to end.
The judicial confirmation process is broken, and the consequences for the American people are real. Because of the Senate's failure to hold timely votes, the number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high during my Presidency and those of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush. The Chief Justice has warned that the high number of judicial vacancies, when combined with the ever-increasing caseloads, leads to crowded courts and threatens the administration of justice. When understaffed, the Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to resolve disputes that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans. The courts cannot decide constitutional cases promptly, which harms people seeking to vindicate and protect their rights, and the courts cannot rule on commercial cases efficiently, which hurts the economy, businesses, and workers. Our system of equal justice under law administered fairly and efficiently is at risk. The American Bar Association in 2002 accurately described the situation as an "emergency."
My concern about the state of the judicial confirmation process is not new. In June 2000, I proposed timely votes for all nominees, stating that the confirmation process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation."

In May 2001, when I announced my first judicial nominations, I urged the Senate to rise above the bitterness of the past and again asked that every judicial nominee receive a timely up or down vote. In October 2002, after nearly two additional years in which too many nominees did not receive votes, I proposed a specific, commonsense plan involving all three Branches that, among other steps, would ensure that all judicial nominees receive an up or down Senate vote within 180 days of nomination.
Over the years, many Senators of both political parties have publicly agreed with the principle that every judicial nominee should receive a timely up or down Senate vote. Similarly, the Federal Judiciary, speaking through the Chief Justice in his 2001 Year-End Report, has stated that the Senate should "schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."
I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up or down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our Judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the Federal bench.
All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up or down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All Judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the Federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.
As I stated last October, the current state of affairs in the United States Senate is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet a responsibility under the Constitution. Our country deserves better, the process can work better, and we can make it better. The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.
Sincerely,
GEORGE W. BUSH

Media Plan
For Roll-Out of Order to Vest Iraqi Assets Abroad

Goals:

1. Emphasize that the US action will preserve assets for the benefit of the Iraqi people.
2. Mitigate misperceptions of this action in the Arab and Muslim world.
3. Assure U.S. victims of foreign terror who already have final judgments against Iraqi assets that the those judgments will be honored.

Themes:

1. Iraqi assets are the rightful property of the Iraqi people.
2. Iraqi assets will be used to assist the Iraqi people and to assist in the reconstruction of Iraq.
3. The US will work to locate and seize other assets removed from Iraq by Saddam Hussein and his confederates.

Strategy:

1. Treasury takes the public lead

Tactics:

- Release Statement by the President
- Treasury Secretary Snow reads a statement on camera
- Background briefing by Treasury General Counsel Aufhauser
- Background briefing at the Foreign Press Center by Treasury official TBD
- Talking points and Qs & As circulated to public affairs personnel at all relevant agencies.

Points on Vesting of Iraqi Assets

Thursday, March 20, 2003

- Today, the President vested more than $1 billion in non-diplomatic Iraqi accounts currently frozen in U.S. banks.
- The purpose of this action is to ensure that these Iraqi funds will be used to assist the Iraqi people and assist in the reconstruction of Iraq, such as by funding humanitarian relief or payment of government workers in Iraq.

- The action targets the frozen accounts of the Government of Iraq and four Iraqi state entities:
  - The Central Bank of Iraq;
  - Rafidain Bank;
  - Rasheed Bank; and
  - The State Organization for Marketing Oil
- These accounts currently hold approximately $1.74 billion in frozen assets in the United States.
- The President's action did NOT vest approximately $250 million in assets that are subject to judicial writs on behalf of victims of terrorism.

- The assets being vested were frozen after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990.
- Once vested, the assets will be administered by the Treasury Department, until such time as they can be returned to Iraq.
- Today the President also directed Secretaries Snow and Powell to work with other countries to identify other Iraqi state assets that they may control that can also be dedicated to the benefit of the Iraqi people.
- He also directed the State Department to begin work on a UN resolution that would direct member states to identify and return Saddam Hussein's ill-gotten gains over the past 12 years from the illicit trade in oil or other goods, held in accounts around the world.

Questions and Answers

How does vesting work?

- Pursuant to Executive Order, the President is technically confiscating these accounts and their title is being vested in the Department of the Treasury. The Order also delegates implementation authority to Treasury.

- Legally, the accounts immediately become U.S. property.
- The Treasury Department will have an account at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York into which the vested monies will be consolidated.
- The Secretary of the Treasury will immediately contact the CEOs of the banks known to hold virtually all of the frozen Iraqi accounts.
- Simultaneously, Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control will issue a Directive License to each of the banks instructing them to transfer the vested accounts to the FRBNY account within three business days.

Why are you vesting these assets, rather than turning them over to Iraq, just as you turned over frozen Taliban assets to Afghanistan?

- In 2002, the United States returned frozen assets of the Central Bank of Afghanistan directly to the post-Taliban Afghan government.
- It could be some time before Iraqi authorities will be in place after the conflict to receive and use the Iraqi assets, and there is an immediate need to have this money available to assist the Iraqi people and to assist in reconstruction of Iraq.

Does this action take money away from U.S. victims of foreign terror?

- No. The executive order does not vest the assets that have been attached by victims of terrorism.
- The President believes that victims of terrorism and their survivors should be compensated for the harm they suffer at the hands of terrorists and terrorist states, and is prepared to work with Congress to ensure that those terrorist victims who may have legitimate claims against the Iraqi government receive appropriate compensation.
- We believe the best model for such compensation is the federal benefit provided to families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty (see 42 U.S.C. 3796). This model would provide all victims equal awards, regardless of income. The claims process would also by quick, streamlined, and simple, and awards would be on a par with that paid to the families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty.

- The principles of the Administration's legislative proposal for compensating victims of terrorism were laid out in a letter from the State Department to the Congress last year.

Brett

I have been after my librarian to find the exact wording of the Senate "organizing resolution." So far we are out of luck -- see messages below. If what has been reported to us is correct, then I believe the constitutional argument against the "continuing" language in Rule V is even more forceful. If you have better intelligence on an organizing resolution than the librarians of the Senate, I would be delighted to have a copy. Thanks.

Best,
Doug

TESTIMONY OF
PAMELA F. OLSON
ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (TAX POLICY)
FOR THE
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE
UNITED STATES SENATE
MARCH 25, 2003

Mr. Chairman, Senator Baucus, and distinguished Members of the Finance Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify regarding the Administration's legislative and regulatory proposals on executive compensation. The recent report by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, prepared at the request of this Committee, reveals Enron Corporation's excessive and questionable executive compensation practices. The details of the report underscore the importance and timeliness of this hearing.

The practices of Enron make clear that executive pay is about more than just tax policy. Executive pay is an issue of corporate governance and accountability. Many investors have watched corporate leaders receive increasing paychecks while producing deteriorating returns. Executive pay is an issue of fiscal responsibility – as the markets worry about the integrity of companies' financial statements. And executive pay is an issue of fairness – the same set of rules should govern all. The issues raised by the Enron report deserve the immediate attention of legislators and regulators. However, we think it is important to distinguish tax policy issues from corporate governance and accountability issues. We have specific recommendations for addressing tax policy matters through tax legislation, but we recommend against addressing corporate governance and accountability concerns by amending the tax code.

In reviewing the report, we noted three general points about Enron's executive compensation. First, several of the executive pay practices at Enron pushed the envelope of current law. The company permitted its executives to defer staggering amounts of income but took measures to insulate them from the risk of non-payment that the law requires as a trade-off for tax deferral. Enron was helped in this effort by out-dated rules on executive compensation – rules that the Treasury Department and the IRS have been statutorily prohibited from updating since 1978. Second, we were pleased to note that several of the pay practices at Enron have been addressed through legislation signed by President Bush last year and by recent Treasury and IRS regulations. Third, the largest category of executive pay at Enron was the massive stock option gains realized by Enron's executives. Enron's heavy use of stock options, which parallels the use of options by other large companies, may in fact be the unintended result of legislation from past Congresses and of current financial accounting standards.

The Enron report raises another important issue, one extending beyond executive compensation. The sheer complexity of Enron's tax-motivated transactions made it very difficult for the IRS to find out and then understand what the company was up to. In many cases, it appears that Enron intended the complexity of the transactions to frustrate detection by the IRS. In other words, Enron was deliberately hiding the ball, and that is cause for concern.

Tax Rules for Executive Compensation

It is important to understand the current tax rules for executive compensation and how those rules factored into Enron's compensation practices. The tax law does not specifically encourage executive compensation arrangements. In contrast to qualified retirement plans and employer-provided health insurance, Congress has never enacted incentives for companies to maintain or enhance executive pay arrangements. In certain cases, Congress has taken the opposite approach by imposing a tax penalty on practices considered inappropriate.

The rules on executive compensation generally have focused on three policy goals: first, to prevent tax avoidance; second, to protect the qualified-plan system; and, third, to promote good corporate governance. I want to say a few words about each of these goals before turning in detail to the applicable tax rules.

First, many of the rules on executive compensation aim to prevent tax avoidance. General tax principles allow an executive to defer tax on compensation only if the executive accepts the risk that the compensation may never be paid if the company becomes insolvent or bankrupt. Executives, naturally, do not like this risk and so push for greater security and control in their deferred compensation arrangements. Many of the current rules are intended to prevent tax deferral where the executive has minimized the risk of non-payment or has realized current economic value from deferred amounts.

Second, certain executive compensation rules protect the integrity of the qualified plan system. To ensure the retirement security of millions of American workers and their families, the tax code provides substantial tax incentives for companies to establish and maintain qualified plans. These tax benefits are most valuable to high-paid employees, but they are available to those employees only if the qualified plans give proportional benefits to a broad cross-section of rank-and-file workers. Allowing executive pay plans to provide the same tax benefits that qualified plans can provide would undermine the qualified plan system. That, in turn, would put the retirement security of rank-and-file workers at risk. Thus, the tax code must continue to ensure that executive pay arrangements do not inappropriately compete with qualified plans.

Third, certain tax rules for executive compensation are intended to promote good corporate governance and accountability. In certain cases, Congress has determined that particular types of executive compensation arrangements harm shareholders – either because of the type of payment involved or the size of the payment involved. In response, Congress has enacted rules that impose tax penalties unless the company meets certain shareholder-protection standards.

Let me now discuss the tax rules for executive compensation, focusing on how the rules apply to common types of executive pay and the compensation practices at Enron. Instead of setting out comprehensive rules, the tax law addresses executive pay through a combination of general tax principles and particular rules aimed at very specific situations. These principles and rules are found in the tax code, IRS rulings and regulations, and federal court decisions.

In discussing these rules, I want to stress the role of the Treasury Department and the IRS in executive compensation matters. Our job is to interpret and administer tax rules – in particular, to ensure that companies and executives adhere to the long-standing tax rules about how much control an executive can have over deferred compensation payouts (the "constructive receipt" rules) and how much protection the company can give the executive against non-payment if the company becomes bankrupt or insolvent (the "funding" rules). We do not believe that we are well-served by assigning to the IRS the role of enforcing rules intended to promote good corporate governance and corporate accountability. We recognize that corporate governance and accountability are legitimate policy goals for executive compensation, and we understand that Congress in particular cases may conclude that legislation is needed to promote those goals. However, experience shows that addressing corporate governance and accountability issues through the tax code is ineffective. Moreover, logic dictates that the issues should be dealt with directly and not through the tax code.

Nonqualified Deferred Compensation – Tax Policy Issues. Nonqualified deferred compensation arrangements – including both executive bonus plans and executive pension plans – constitute one of the most common elements of executive pay. The terms of these arrangements vary widely, but their common objective is to provide tax deferral for a specified period on either an elective or non-elective basis. The compensation compounds during the deferral period at a fixed or variable rate of return, and the executive typically receives distributions of the accumulated amounts at or after retirement (with provisions for distributions under certain other circumstances, as discussed below). Many plans provide the executive with some measure of actual or hypothetical investment control over deferred amounts.

If structured correctly, the tax treatment of a nonqualified deferred compensation arrangement is as follows. The executive does not include the deferred amount in gross income until it is actually paid out to the executive. The company cannot claim a deduction for the deferred amount until the executive includes it in gross income. During the deferral period, earnings on the deferred amount generally remain taxable to the company. Thus, the law imposes a "tax tension" between the executive and the company because every dollar for which the executive defers income is a dollar for which the company must defer its deduction.

However, that tax tension only works if the executive and the company are both representing their own interests; it does not work if the company structures the pay with the sole aim of maximizing value for the executive without regard to the interests of shareholders. For example, an arrangement under which a company commits substantial assets to an irrevocable trust for the executive's benefit results in the company having less capital to re-invest in its business and may result in lower returns for shareholders – without an offsetting tax deduction for the compensation the company has set aside.

Deferred compensation arrangements must meet certain legal requirements. First, the executive cannot be in "constructive receipt" of any deferred amount. This means that an executive can defer an amount only as long as there is a "substantial limitation or restriction" on the executive's right to receive the amount. The principle of constructive receipt ensures that an executive cannot manipulate the timing of when taxes are due by turning his or her back on income that would be paid right away if the executive simply asked for it. If an executive can choose to receive deferred compensation at any time, the executive is in constructive receipt and is taxed immediately.

The IRS has applied the constructive-receipt doctrine by refusing to approve any decision to defer income and any decision about when and how that income will be paid unless the decision is made in the taxable year before the income is earned. For this reason, deferred compensation plans often provide for deferral elections to be made before the start of the taxable year. The plans often state the time when amounts will be paid out and the form of the distribution. Payout usually is made in a lump sum or in annuity or installment form at retirement or other termination of employment, death, disability, financial hardship, or after a fixed number of years.

Many plans allow an executive to make a subsequent election to defer payouts that are coming due or to change the form of the payout (or both). The plans typically require that the subsequent election be made a fixed number of months (usually twelve) before the payout is due. Some plans also allow for accelerated payouts. For example, a plan may provide for an early distribution with a "haircut" – such as a forfeiture of 10 percent of the deferred amount – or a suspension from further participation.

The IRS has had difficulty enforcing the constructive-receipt rules in disputes with taxpayers. The federal courts generally have followed an expansive interpretation of these rules, which were first written decades ago. Each court loss for the IRS has made companies and executives bolder in pushing out the line of common practice, with Treasury and the IRS prevented by Congress from updating the rules in response. The treatment by the courts of this issue has been a major factor in the expansion of deferred compensation.

Second, the tax law treats an unfunded promise to pay differently from a funded promise. Thus, the "economic benefit" doctrine and the rules governing transfers of property require that assets related to nonqualified deferred compensation remain subject to the claims of the company's general creditors along with the other general assets of the company. These rules are intended to put the executive at risk of non-payment if the company becomes bankrupt or insolvent. If a company insulates deferred compensation assets from the claims of its creditors – for example, by placing the deferred compensation in a trust or an escrow account for the exclusive benefit of the executive – the executive has a taxable economic benefit and must include the deferred compensation in gross income. Special rules, intended to backstop the qualified plan rules, provide a harsher result for discriminatory trusts by requiring the executive to pay tax currently on earnings as well.

The IRS has allowed very limited funding arrangements – commonly known as "rabbi trusts" – without triggering current tax to executives. Assets held by a rabbi trust are treated as belonging to the company, and the company continues to pay tax on any income they produce. More importantly, assets in a rabbi trust must be reachable by the general creditors of the company in the event of bankruptcy or insolvency. However, certain executive pay arrangements have increasingly stretched the limits on rabbi trusts and deferred compensation funding. In general, these arrangements – which include offshore rabbi trusts and hybrid (rabbi and non-rabbi) arrangements – are meant to keep assets away from creditors without triggering current tax to the executives.

Finally, the cash-equivalence and assignment-of-income doctrines require that an executive's interest in deferred compensation be non-assignable. This ensures that the executive cannot sell, transfer, pledge, or borrow against the deferred compensation and thereby realize economic value from it before it is paid.

The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation found that Enron, like many large companies, provided very significant deferred compensation to its executives. It appears that Enron's deferred compensation arrangements generally complied with current law. However, Enron's arrangements also demonstrate the limitations of current law. As the company rapidly approached bankruptcy, many Enron executives were able to invoke accelerated distribution clauses. Although those accelerated distributions required a "haircut" – the executives had to forfeit 10 percent of the deferred compensation – the choice between receiving most of their deferred compensation and receiving none of their deferred compensation was surely an easy one. The practical effect of the accelerated distributions was to put these Enron executives in line ahead of the company's general creditors, allowing an end-run around the legal requirement that deferred compensation remain at risk of non-payment.

As discussed in more detail below, current law prevents Treasury and the IRS from restricting haircuts and other accelerated distribution clauses. Because of legislation passed by Congress in 1978, Treasury and IRS only have the authority to make haircut provisions less restrictive for executives. This is precisely the opposite of the authority we need when confronting arrangements that present potential for inappropriate tax avoidance or that undermine the qualified plan system. We strongly recommend that Congress repeal that limitation and give us the authority necessary to address both appropriate and inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements.

Nonqualified Deferred Compensation – Corporate Governance Issues. Let me emphasize again that interpretation and administration of the constructive receipt and funding rules are proper roles for Treasury and the IRS, but the tax code is not the most effective means of promoting good corporate governance and corporate accountability. Practices that pass muster under the constructive receipt and funding rules may still present corporate governance or accountability concerns that Congress should address through legislation. If so, we recommend that Congress legislate directly rather than indirectly through the tax code.

Recent history provides examples of what happens when Congress does or does not legislate directly on corporate governance and accountability. Last summer, Congress passed and President Bush signed the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, which includes important new rules about executive compensation. Sarbanes-Oxley enacts one of the President's retirement-security proposals by prohibiting corporate insiders from trading company stock during a "blackout" period of the company's 401(k) or other defined contribution retirement plan; it prohibits public companies from making virtually any loan to executives or directors; and it requires the chief executive officer and the chief financial officer to forfeit incentive and equity-based compensation if the company restates its financial statements. In all these cases, Sarbanes-Oxley directly addresses the problem; it does not attempt to ban or curb a practice indirectly by amending the tax code and then asking the IRS to take on the role of enforcing shareholder protections.

Compare the Sarbanes-Oxley approach with two situations where Congress has used the tax code to address shareholder-protection concerns – the $1 million cap on deductible compensation and the "golden parachute" payments. Both these sets of rules show the unintended consequences that follow from legislating corporate governance through the tax laws.

Section 162(m) provides that a public company cannot deduct compensation in excess of $1 million for any of its top five executives. The provision contains a key exception for certain "performance-based" compensation that has been approved by shareholders after full disclosure. Stock option grants ordinarily fall within this exception. Congress enacted section 162(m) on the rationale that taking away a deduction for "excessive" compensation to top executives would protect investors in public companies by instilling greater discipline in executive pay packages.

But section 162(m) has had the opposite of its intended effect. At many companies, the $1 million "cap" has effectively become a $1 million "floor" for base salary and non-performance bonuses. Additionally, the "performance-based" exception has encouraged many companies, like Enron, to shift compensation above the $1 million amount into stock options and other forms of compensation tied to the company's stock price. As the Committee is well aware, much of the recent concern about the accuracy of companies' financial statements has focused on whether tying executive pay to the company's stock price gives the executive too much incentive to manipulate earnings statements in order to affect the stock price. Finally, many companies facing the choice between losing the deduction for compensation above $1 million or trimming executive pay simply do not claim the deduction. In those cases, the loss to shareholders simply compounds – the executive still receives the same pay, and the company loses its tax deduction. What was intended as a shield for investors instead becomes a sword against them.

The golden parachute rules provide a similar example. Congress enacted these tax penalties in the mid-1980s to prevent executives from draining value out of companies in connection with corporate takeovers. Section 280G prevents the company from deducting an excess golden parachute payment, and section 4999 imposes a 20 percent excise tax on an executive who receives such a parachute payment. Again, however, the tax penalties intended to protect shareholders have had the opposite effect. In many situations, companies and executives respond to the tax penalties by agreeing that the company will "gross up" the executive – that is, pay for any penalty tax that the executive incurs on a golden parachute payment. The law treats the gross up as a parachute payment, meaning that the cost of making the executive whole spirals upward – and of course, the company cannot deduct the underlying parachute payment or the gross up payment. Thus, the golden parachute penalties have resulted in many companies paying executives larger parachute payments and losing their tax deductions – all to the detriment of shareholders.

Congress must consider corporate governance and accountability issues when crafting legislation on executive compensation, but we strongly recommend that Congress not use the tax code for those issues. Experience has demonstrated that trying to implement shareholder protections through the tax laws likely will compound the harm to shareholders. Additionally, legislating corporate governance through the tax code puts the IRS in a position of being the primary defender of shareholder interests – a position for which the IRS simply is not well-suited. Shareholder interests are best protected by shareholders themselves and appropriate federal regulatory agencies, such as the SEC. Congress should look to the tax code to promote sound tax policy and, on executive compensation, should enable Treasury and the IRS to administer the long-standing rules concerning constructive receipt and funding of deferred compensation.

Restricted Stock and Stock Options. Restricted stock has long been a component of executive pay packages. Section 83 sets out rules for taxing restricted stock and stock options. An executive must include the fair market value of restricted stock at the time the restricted stock becomes "substantially vested" – that is, when it becomes transferable or not subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture. A special rule allows the executive to make an election to include the restricted stock in gross income prior to its becoming substantially vested. The company's deduction for the restricted stock matches the timing and amount of the executive's income.

In recent years, companies have made extensive use of stock options to compensate executives. An executive is not taxed on the receipt of a stock option (except in the highly unusual case where the option has a "readily ascertainable fair market value" when granted). Instead, the executive is taxed upon exercise of the option. At that time, the executive includes in gross income the "spread" on the option – that is, the difference between the fair market value of the stock and the amount the executive pays to exercise the option (plus any amount the executive paid to acquire the option). The company's deduction for the spread matches the timing and the amount of the executive's income.

A major consideration in the use of stock options for executive pay has been the current accounting rules for options. Under those rules, a company must account for stock-based executive compensation plans under the "fair value" method or the "intrinsic value" method. Under the fair value method (set out in FAS 123), a company expenses an option under Black-Scholes or a binomial model. This creates a charge to earnings at grant or on vesting. Under the intrinsic value method (set out in APB Opinion No. 25) an option granted at fair market value does not have any intrinsic value and results in no charge to earnings. However, a company using the intrinsic value method must disclose in a footnote to its financial statements the effect on earnings, including earnings per share, of using the fair value method to account for option grants.

Most companies, Enron included, have used the intrinsic value method for stock options, thereby avoiding any charge to earnings for this element of executive compensation. It is important to note that the tide may be changing. More companies are beginning to use the fair value method, and FASB currently has this issue under review.

Enron compensated its executives primarily with stock options. According to the Enron report, total compensation for the 200 highest-paid executives was $1.4 billion, and over $1 billion of that amount was attributable to stock options. For the years 1998 to 2000, Enron's deduction for stock-option compensation increased by 1,000 percent. Still, it appears from the Enron report that the company treated the option grants and exercises properly under the tax law and that Enron accounted for these options in conformity with FASB accounting rules.

It is important that the Committee's review of executive compensation consider the working of the current rules with regard to stock options and whether these rules caused the concentration of stock options in the Enron executives' pay packages.

Administration's Proposals on Executive Compensation

This Administration has a strong commitment to ensuring that the tax rules apply fairly to everyone. Those who play by the rules rightly expect that all will play by the rules. The law cannot allow executives to end-run existing rules for paying tax on amounts that are currently available to them or that have been insulated from creditors. Unfortunately, Congress in 1978 tied the hands of the Treasury Department and the IRS. The Administration proposes that Congress lift the restrictions on new regulation of executive compensation and give Treasury and the IRS full authority to address appropriate and inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements.

Section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978. In 1978, Treasury and the IRS proposed Treasury Regulations section 1.61-16, providing for current inclusion of compensation deferred "at the taxpayer's individual option." The proposed regulation alarmed companies because the scope of the regulation was vague, and it was not clear whether all deferred compensation might be taxed currently. Companies also made strong arguments that they needed deferred compensation as part of their executive pay packages.

In response, Congress enacted section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 to prevent finalization of section 1.61-16. Section 132 provides that the taxable year of inclusion of any amount under a private deferred compensation plan "shall be determined in accordance with the principles set forth in regulations, rulings, and judicial decisions relating to deferred compensation which were in effect on February 1, 1978." The broad rule-making moratorium imposed by section 132 currently prohibits Treasury and the IRS from issuing new regulations or other guidance on many aspects of nonqualified deferred compensation arrangements.

Since the enactment of section 132, Treasury and the IRS have been unable to provide new guidance about core elements of deferred compensation arrangements. New guidance is needed to ensure that the tax rules keep pace with the constant changes in deferred compensation practices and to address federal court decisions that have undercut the rules on constructive receipt. The guidance also is needed simply to update IRS ruling guidelines that were issued in 1971 and that, despite minor changes in 1992, are considered out of step with the case law.

Budget Proposal to Repeal Section 132. The Administration's budget for fiscal year 2004 proposes the repeal of section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 and a grant of new authority to write regulations on inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements. Last year this Committee reported legislation that would have repealed section 132, and the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation also recommended repeal of section 132 in the Enron report.

Repeal of section 132 would greatly enhance the ability of Treasury and the IRS to write regulations addressing deferred compensation practices. In some situations, section 132 directly constrains issuing new rules. In others, repeal of section 132 along with new statutory authority to address inappropriate arrangements would make the rules more likely to survive court challenge. Treasury and the IRS would not implement proposed section 1.61-16 as part of this authority.

The new regulations would address the following topics, among others: benefit distribution elections; initial and subsequent deferral elections; executive control over deferred amounts; shielding deferred compensation from creditors; and constructive receipt of property. Let me describe these briefly:

- Regarding benefit distribution elections, the regulations could address circumstances under which executives control the timing of their benefit payouts to the detriment of general creditors – for example, "haircuts" and other acceleration clauses.

- Regarding initial and subsequent deferral elections, the regulations could provide clearer rules to require that an executive's choice to defer income be made before the income is actually available – eliminating the executive's ability to defer tax on amounts under the executive's immediate control; the regulations also could state whether and when subsequent deferral elections are permitted.

- Regarding executive control over deferred amounts, the regulations could address questions about how much control an executive may have over deferred amounts – for example, whether and to what extent an executive may control the investment of deferred compensation or "swap" deferred compensation rights for stock options or life insurance arrangements.

- Regarding shielding deferred compensation from creditors, the new regulations could address techniques that attempt to shield assets from creditors while making it appear that the assets are reachable by creditors – for example, offshore rabbi trusts, secured trusts that "spring" into existence as a company approaches insolvency, trigger clauses that provide for automatic payouts as a company approaches insolvency, and third-party guarantees of deferred benefits.

- Regarding constructive receipt of property, the regulations could address when an executive is taxable on property (such as company stock) that is made available to the executive but is not actually transferred; this would give Treasury and the IRS clearer authority to address the taxation of deeply discounted stock options, resolving uncertainty about how certain old federal court decisions apply to current practices of issuing discounted options in lieu of deferred compensation.

One of the key points of the Administration's legislative proposal is the on-going flexibility that it will provide. Companies and executives regularly restructure executive pay packages, and the tax laws need to keep pace with these changes. The status quo is unacceptable as a matter of tax policy – Treasury and the IRS are actually forbidden from shaping or updating the law to address new practices. Moreover, legislation targeted at specific transactions or practices would be an incomplete response. It may not reach the new transactions or practices companies and executives develop in the future.

Furthermore, it is important that Treasury and the IRS have the authority to determine not only what types of arrangements cross the line but also to say what types of arrangements are permissible. The market pressures for executive compensation are significant, and limiting one particular inappropriate practice inevitably will lead companies and executives to develop new practices, some troublesome and some not. Effective regulation in this area requires a comprehensive approach and continual updating of the rules to respond to new developments so that companies and executives are guided to appropriate arrangements.

We need also to shape the rules for nonqualified deferred compensation to keep pace with changes in the rules for qualified plans. One of the policy goals of the nonqualified plan rules is to protect the viability and the integrity of the qualified plan system. Because of the important role that qualified plans play in providing retirement income security for millions of American workers and their families, Congress regularly reviews and updates the rules for those plans through new legislation, and Treasury and the IRS regularly issue new regulations and rulings to implement that legislation. In fact, this Committee last year reported legislation, first proposed by the President, to protect the retirement security of workers whose plans invest in employer stock. Just as the Administration urges you to take up the retirement security legislation again this year, so too we urge you to give us the tools needed to make sure that this and future legislation will maintain the balance between qualified and nonqualified plans.

To meet the policy challenges of this dynamic area, we strongly recommend that Congress repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 and give Treasury and the IRS lasting and meaningful authority to write proper rules for taxing executive pay. Untying our hands is the only way to ensure that Treasury and the IRS can respond quickly and effectively to developments in executive compensation.

Other Recent Legislative and Regulatory Developments

Certain of the executive compensation practices discussed by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation in its report have been addressed either through legislation signed into law by President Bush or through regulations issued by Treasury and the IRS. Additionally, Treasury and the IRS are continually reviewing new transactions to determine whether they are appropriate.

Sarbanes-Oxley Act. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act signed by President Bush last summer addresses outside the tax code certain executive compensation issues. Sarbanes-Oxley prohibits insider trading during "blackout" periods, prohibits almost all loans from public companies to executives and directors, and requires certain executives to forfeit incentive and equity-based compensation if the company restates its financial statements. All these changes would have had a material impact on Enron's executive compensation practices, and we believe they will help curb inappropriate executive pay practices in the future.

Split-Dollar Life Insurance Arrangements. Also last summer, Treasury and the IRS proposed new regulations for taxing split-dollar life insurance arrangements. A split-dollar life insurance arrangement is a contract to allocate the benefits and, in some cases, the costs of a life insurance policy. Under a typical equity split-dollar arrangement, an executive receives an interest in the policy cash value disproportionate to the executive's share of premiums. The new regulations ended many years of uncertainty about how these arrangements are taxed and remove the tax advantage of split-dollar life insurance arrangements. Under the regulations, an executive will be taxed as receiving below-market loans from the company (if the executive owns the life insurance policy) or as receiving taxable economic benefits from the company (if the company owns the policy). Treasury and the IRS intend to finalize these regulations in the near future.

Other Arrangements. We are aware of other executive pay arrangements that raise tax policy concerns, and in some cases we anticipate publishing regulations or other guidance. For example, some executives who own stock options purport to sell those options to a family limited partnership, a family trust, or another entity in which they or their family members have a direct financial stake. This transaction is intended to defer the gain the executive would otherwise recognize on exercise of the options. We have reviewed these transactions, and we have serious concerns with them. We expect to issue a notice in the near future indicating how and why we intend to challenge them.

Of course, our review of certain transactions would potentially be different if Congress enacted our budget proposal to repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978. Section 132 ties our hands. To challenge a transaction, we have to conclude that it violates the law as in effect back in 1978. Executive compensation has changed a lot since 1978, and we need to be able to issue new rules and regulations to keep pace with changes in the market.

Finally, once we have identified a type of transaction and have determined that it fails under current law, we are able to list the transaction type and require taxpayers to disclose their participation in it. As with other types of abusive tax avoidance, we believe that listing is an important tool in tax administration and enforcement.

Summary and Closing

I thank the Committee for holding a hearing on this important topic, and I appreciate the opportunity to discuss these critical issues with you. We urge the Committee to do this year what it did last year – report legislation to repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 to give us new authority to address deferred compensation, as proposed in the Administration's budget. We further urge the Committee to address the corporate governance and accountability issues raised by executive compensation, but to do so directly rather than through the tax code. Mr. Chairman and Senator Baucus, the Office of Tax Policy would be happy to offer any assistance to you and your staff as you continue your review of this critical issue.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my formal statement. I will be pleased to answer any questions that you or any other member may wish to ask.

On the sub-question you raised, Nick and I are both of the view that the 2/3 rule is unconstitutional ab initio, so that even if the Senate adopted it this session, it can still by simple majority amend its rules.

TESTIMONY OF
PAMELA F. OLSON
ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (TAX POLICY)
FOR THE
UNITED STATES SENATE
MARCH 25, 2003

Mr. Chairman, Senator Baucus, and distinguished Members of the Finance Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify regarding the Administration's legislative and regulatory proposals on executive compensation. The recent report by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, prepared at the request of this Committee, reveals Enron Corporation's excessive and questionable executive compensation practices. The details of the report underscore the importance and timeliness of this hearing.

The practices of Enron make clear that executive pay is about more than just tax policy. Executive pay is an issue of corporate governance and accountability. Many investors have watched corporate leaders receive increasing paychecks while producing deteriorating returns. Executive pay is an issue of fiscal responsibility – as the markets worry about the integrity of companies' financial statements. And executive pay is an issue of fairness – the same set of rules should govern all. The issues raised by the Enron report deserve the immediate attention of legislators and regulators. However, we think it is important to distinguish tax policy issues from corporate governance and accountability issues. We have specific recommendations for addressing tax policy matters through tax legislation, but we recommend against addressing corporate governance and accountability concerns by amending the tax code.

In reviewing the report, we noted three general points about Enron's executive compensation. First, several of the executive pay practices at Enron pushed the envelope of current law. The company permitted its executives to defer staggering amounts of income but took measures to insulate them from the risk of non-payment that the law requires as a trade-off for tax deferral. Enron was helped in this effort by out-dated rules on executive compensation – rules that the Treasury Department and the IRS have been statutorily prohibited from updating since 1978. Second, we were pleased to note that several of the pay practices at Enron have been addressed through legislation signed by President Bush last year and by recent Treasury and IRS regulations. Third, the largest category of executive pay at Enron was the massive stock option gains realized by Enron's executives. Enron's heavy use of stock options, which parallels the use of options by other large companies, may in fact be the unintended result of legislation from past Congresses and of current financial accounting standards.

The Enron report raises another important issue, one extending beyond executive compensation. The sheer complexity of Enron's tax-motivated transactions made it very difficult for the IRS to find out and then understand what the company was up to. In many cases, it appears that Enron intended the complexity of the transactions to frustrate detection by the IRS. In other words, Enron was deliberately hiding the ball, and that is cause for concern.

It is important to understand the current tax rules for executive compensation and how those rules factored into Enron's compensation practices. The tax law does not specifically encourage executive compensation arrangements. In contrast to qualified retirement plans and employer-provided health insurance, Congress has never enacted incentives for companies to maintain or enhance executive pay arrangements. In certain cases, Congress has taken the opposite approach by imposing a tax penalty on practices considered inappropriate.

The rules on executive compensation generally have focused on three policy goals: first, to prevent tax avoidance; second, to protect the qualified-plan system; and, third, to promote good corporate governance. I want to say a few words about each of these goals before turning in detail to the applicable tax rules.

First, many of the rules on executive compensation aim to prevent tax avoidance. General tax principles allow an executive to defer tax on compensation only if the executive accepts the risk that the compensation may never be paid if the company becomes insolvent or bankrupt. Executives, naturally, do not like this risk and so push for greater security and control in their deferred compensation arrangements. Many of the current rules are intended to prevent tax deferral where the executive has minimized the risk of non-payment or has realized current economic value from deferred amounts.

Second, certain executive compensation rules protect the integrity of the qualified plan system. To ensure the retirement security of millions of American workers and their families, the tax code provides substantial tax incentives for companies to establish and maintain qualified plans. These tax benefits are most valuable to high-paid employees, but they are available to those employees only if the qualified plans give proportional benefits to a broad cross-section of rank-and-file workers. Allowing executive pay plans to provide the same tax benefits that qualified plans can provide would undermine the qualified plan system. That, in turn, would put the retirement security of rank-and-file workers at risk. Thus, the tax code must continue to ensure that executive pay arrangements do not inappropriately compete with qualified plans.

Third, certain tax rules for executive compensation are intended to promote good corporate governance and accountability. In certain cases, Congress has determined that particular types of executive compensation arrangements harm shareholders – either because of the type of payment involved or the size of the payment involved. In response, Congress has enacted rules that impose tax penalties unless the company meets certain shareholder-protection standards.

Let me now discuss the tax rules for executive compensation, focusing on how the rules apply to common types of executive pay and the compensation practices at Enron. Instead of setting out comprehensive rules, the tax law addresses executive pay through a combination of general tax principles and particular rules aimed at very specific situations. These principles and rules are found in the tax code, IRS rulings and regulations, and federal court decisions.

In discussing these rules, I want to stress the role of the Treasury Department and the IRS in executive compensation matters. Our job is to interpret and administer tax rules – in particular, to ensure that companies and executives adhere to the long-standing tax rules about how much control an executive can have over deferred compensation payouts (the "constructive receipt" rules) and how much protection the company can give the executive against non-payment if the company becomes bankrupt or insolvent (the "funding" rules). We do not believe that we are well-served by assigning to the IRS the role of enforcing rules intended to promote good corporate governance and corporate accountability. We recognize that corporate governance and accountability are legitimate policy goals for executive compensation, and we understand that Congress in particular cases may conclude that legislation is needed to promote those goals. However, experience shows that addressing corporate governance and accountability issues through the tax code is ineffective. Moreover, logic dictates that the issues should be dealt with directly and not through the tax code.

Nonqualified Deferred Compensation – Tax Policy Issues. Nonqualified deferred compensation arrangements – including both executive bonus plans and executive pension plans – constitute one of the most common elements of executive pay. The terms of these arrangements vary widely, but their common objective is to provide tax deferral for a specified period on either an elective or non-elective basis. The compensation compounds during the deferral period at a fixed or variable rate of return, and the executive typically receives distributions of the accumulated amounts at or after retirement (with provisions for distributions under certain other circumstances, as discussed below). Many plans provide the executive with some measure of actual or hypothetical investment control over deferred amounts.

If structured correctly, the tax treatment of a nonqualified deferred compensation arrangement is as follows. The executive does not include the deferred amount in gross income until it is actually paid out to the executive. The company cannot claim a deduction for the deferred amount until the executive includes it in gross income. During the deferral period, earnings on the deferred amount generally remain taxable to the company. Thus, the law imposes a "tax tension" between the executive and the company because every dollar for which the executive defers income is a dollar for which the company must defer its deduction.

However, that tax tension only works if the executive and the company are both representing their own interests; it does not work if the company structures the pay with the sole aim of maximizing value for the executive without regard to the interests of shareholders. For example, an arrangement under which a company commits substantial assets to an irrevocable trust for the executive's benefit results in the company having less capital to re-invest in its business and may result in lower returns for shareholders – without an offsetting tax deduction for the compensation the company has set aside.

Deferred compensation arrangements must meet certain legal requirements. First, the executive cannot be in "constructive receipt" of any deferred amount. This means that an executive can defer an amount only as long as there is a "substantial limitation or restriction" on the executive's right to receive the amount. The principle of constructive receipt ensures that an executive cannot manipulate the timing of when taxes are due by turning his or her back on income that would be paid right away if the executive simply asked for it. If an executive can choose to receive deferred compensation at any time, the executive is in constructive receipt and is taxed immediately.

The IRS has applied the constructive-receipt doctrine by refusing to approve any decision to defer income and any decision about when and how that income will be paid unless the decision is made in the taxable year before the income is earned. For this reason, deferred compensation plans often provide for deferral elections to be made before the start of the taxable year. The plans often state the time when amounts will be paid out and the form of the distribution. Payout usually is made in a lump sum or in annuity or installment form at retirement or other termination of employment, death, disability, financial hardship, or after a fixed number of years.

Many plans allow an executive to make a subsequent election to defer payouts that are coming due or to change the form of the payout (or both). The plans typically require that the subsequent election be made a fixed number of months (usually twelve) before the payout is due. Some plans also allow for accelerated payouts. For example, a plan may provide for an early distribution with a "haircut" – such as a forfeiture of 10 percent of the deferred amount – or a suspension from further participation.

The IRS has had difficulty enforcing the constructive-receipt rules in disputes with taxpayers. The federal courts generally have followed an expansive interpretation of these rules, which were first written decades ago. Each court loss for the IRS has made companies and executives bolder in pushing out the line of common practice, with Treasury and the IRS prevented by Congress from updating the rules in response. The treatment by the courts of this issue has been a major factor in the expansion of deferred compensation.

Second, the tax law treats an unfunded promise to pay differently from a funded promise. Thus, the "economic benefit" doctrine and the rules governing transfers of property require that assets related to nonqualified deferred compensation remain subject to the claims of the company's general creditors along with the other general assets of the company. These rules are intended to put the executive at risk of non-payment if the company becomes bankrupt or insolvent. If a company insulates deferred compensation assets from the claims of its creditors – for example, by placing the deferred compensation in a trust or an escrow account for the exclusive benefit of the executive – the executive has a taxable economic benefit and must include the deferred compensation in gross income. Special rules, intended to backstop the qualified plan rules, provide a harsher result for discriminatory trusts by requiring the executive to pay tax currently on earnings as well.

The IRS has allowed very limited funding arrangements – commonly known as "rabbi trusts" – without triggering current tax to executives. Assets held by a rabbi trust are treated as belonging to the company, and the company continues to pay tax on any income they produce. More importantly, assets in a rabbi trust must be reachable by the general creditors of the company in the event of bankruptcy or insolvency. However, certain executive pay arrangements have increasingly stretched the limits on rabbi trusts and deferred compensation funding. In general, these arrangements – which include offshore rabbi trusts and hybrid (rabbi and non-rabbi) arrangements – are meant to keep assets away from creditors without triggering current tax to the executives.

Finally, the cash-equivalence and assignment-of-income doctrines require that an executive's interest in deferred compensation be non-assignable. This ensures that the executive cannot sell, transfer, pledge, or borrow against the deferred compensation and thereby realize economic value from it before it is paid.

The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation found that Enron, like many large companies, provided very significant deferred compensation to its executives. It appears that Enron's deferred compensation arrangements generally complied with current law. However, Enron's arrangements also demonstrate the limitations of current law. As the company rapidly approached bankruptcy, many Enron executives were able to invoke accelerated distribution clauses. Although those accelerated distributions required a "haircut" – the executives had to forfeit 10 percent of the deferred compensation – the choice between receiving most of their deferred compensation and receiving none of their deferred compensation was surely an easy one. The practical effect of the accelerated distributions was to put these Enron executives in line ahead of the company's general creditors, allowing an end-run around the legal requirement that deferred compensation remain at risk of non-payment.

As discussed in more detail below, current law prevents Treasury and the IRS from restricting haircuts and other accelerated distribution clauses. Because of legislation passed by Congress in 1978, Treasury and IRS only have the authority to make haircut provisions less restrictive for executives. This is precisely the opposite of the authority we need when confronting arrangements that present potential for inappropriate tax avoidance or that undermine the qualified plan system. We strongly recommend that Congress repeal that limitation and give us the authority necessary to address both appropriate and inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements.

Nonqualified Deferred Compensation – Corporate Governance Issues. Let me emphasize again that interpretation and administration of the constructive receipt and funding rules are proper roles for Treasury and the IRS, but the tax code is not the most effective means of promoting good corporate governance and corporate accountability. Practices that pass muster under the constructive receipt and funding rules may still present corporate governance or accountability concerns that Congress should address through legislation. If so, we recommend that Congress legislate directly rather than indirectly through the tax code.

Recent history provides examples of what happens when Congress does or does not legislate directly on corporate governance and accountability. Last summer, Congress passed and President Bush signed the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, which includes important new rules about executive compensation. Sarbanes-Oxley enacts one of the President's retirement-security proposals by prohibiting corporate insiders from trading company stock during a "blackout" period of the company's 401(k) or other defined contribution retirement plan; it prohibits public companies from making virtually any loan to executives or directors; and it requires the chief executive officer and the chief financial officer to forfeit incentive and equity-based compensation if the company restates its financial statements. In all these cases, Sarbanes-Oxley directly addresses the problem; it does not attempt to ban or curb a practice indirectly by amending the tax code and then asking the IRS to take on the role of enforcing shareholder protections.

Compare the Sarbanes-Oxley approach with two situations where Congress has used the tax code to address shareholder-protection concerns – the $1 million cap on deductible compensation and the "golden parachute" payments. Both these sets of rules show the unintended consequences that follow from legislating corporate governance through the tax laws.

Section 162(m) provides that a public company cannot deduct compensation in excess of $1 million for any of its top five executives. The provision contains a key exception for certain "performance-based" compensation that has been approved by shareholders after full disclosure. Stock option grants ordinarily fall within this exception. Congress enacted section 162(m) on the rationale that taking away a deduction for "excessive" compensation to top executives would protect investors in public companies by instilling greater discipline in executive pay packages.

But section 162(m) has had the opposite of its intended effect. At many companies, the $1 million "cap" has effectively become a $1 million "floor" for base salary and non-performance bonuses. Additionally, the "performance-based" exception has encouraged many companies, like Enron, to shift compensation above the $1 million amount into stock options and other forms of compensation tied to the company's stock price. As the Committee is well aware, much of the recent concern about the accuracy of companies' financial statements has focused on whether tying executive pay to the company's stock price gives the executive too much incentive to manipulate earnings statements in order to affect the stock price. Finally, many companies facing the choice between losing the deduction for compensation above $1 million or trimming executive pay simply do not claim the deduction. In those cases, the loss to shareholders simply compounds – the executive still receives the same pay, and the company loses its tax deduction. What was intended as a shield for investors instead becomes a sword against them.

The golden parachute rules provide a similar example. Congress enacted these tax penalties in the mid-1980s to prevent executives from draining value out of companies in connection with corporate takeovers. Section 280G prevents the company from deducting an excess golden parachute payment, and section 4999 imposes a 20 percent excise tax on an executive who receives such a parachute payment. Again, however, the tax penalties intended to protect shareholders have had the opposite effect. In many situations, companies and executives respond to the tax penalties by agreeing that the company will "gross up" the executive – that is, pay for any penalty tax that the executive incurs on a golden parachute payment. The law treats the gross up as a parachute payment, meaning that the cost of making the executive whole spirals upward – and of course, the company cannot deduct the underlying parachute payment or the gross up payment. Thus, the golden parachute penalties have resulted in many companies paying executives larger parachute payments and losing their tax deductions – all to the detriment of shareholders.

Congress must consider corporate governance and accountability issues when crafting legislation on executive compensation, but we strongly recommend that Congress not use the tax code for those issues. Experience has demonstrated that trying to implement shareholder protections through the tax laws likely will compound the harm to shareholders. Additionally, legislating corporate governance through the tax code puts the IRS in a position of being the primary defender of shareholder interests – a position for which the IRS simply is not well-suited. Shareholder interests are best protected by shareholders themselves and appropriate federal regulatory agencies, such as the SEC. Congress should look to the tax code to promote sound tax policy and, on executive compensation, should enable Treasury and the IRS to administer the long-standing rules concerning constructive receipt and funding of deferred compensation.

Restricted Stock and Stock Options. Restricted stock has long been a component of executive pay packages. Section 83 sets out rules for taxing restricted stock and stock options. An executive must include the fair market value of restricted stock at the time the restricted stock becomes "substantially vested" – that is, when it becomes transferable or not subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture. A special rule allows the executive to make an election to include the restricted stock in gross income prior to its becoming substantially vested. The company's deduction for the restricted stock matches the timing and amount of the executive's income.

In recent years, companies have made extensive use of stock options to compensate executives. An executive is not taxed on the receipt of a stock option (except in the highly unusual case where the option has a "readily ascertainable fair market value" when granted). Instead, the executive is taxed upon exercise of the option. At that time, the executive includes in gross income the "spread" on the option – that is, the difference between the fair market value of the stock and the amount the executive pays to exercise the option (plus any amount the executive paid to acquire the option). The company's deduction for the spread matches the timing and the amount of the executive's income.

A major consideration in the use of stock options for executive pay has been the current accounting rules for options. Under those rules, a company must account for stock-based executive compensation plans under the "fair value" method or the "intrinsic value" method. Under the fair value method (set out in FAS 123), a company expenses an option under Black-Scholes or a binomial model. This creates a charge to earnings at grant or on vesting. Under the intrinsic value method (set out in APB Opinion No. 25) an option granted at fair market value does not have any intrinsic value and results in no charge to earnings. However, a company using the intrinsic value method must disclose in a footnote to its financial statements the effect on earnings, including earnings per share, of using the fair value method to account for option grants.

Most companies, Enron included, have used the intrinsic value method for stock options, thereby avoiding any charge to earnings for this element of executive compensation. It is important to note that the tide may be changing. More companies are beginning to use the fair value method, and FASB currently has this issue under review.

Enron compensated its executives primarily with stock options. According to the Enron report, total compensation for the 200 highest-paid executives was $1.4 billion, and over $1 billion of that amount was attributable to stock options. For the years 1998 to 2000, Enron's deduction for stock-option compensation increased by 1,000 percent. Still, it appears from the Enron report that the company treated the option grants and exercises properly under the tax law and that Enron accounted for these options in conformity with FASB accounting rules.

It is important that the Committee's review of executive compensation consider the working of the current rules with regard to stock options and whether these rules caused the concentration of stock options in the Enron executives' pay packages.

Administration's Proposals on Executive Compensation

This Administration has a strong commitment to ensuring that the tax rules apply fairly to everyone. Those who play by the rules rightly expect that all will play by the rules. The law cannot allow executives to end-run existing rules for paying tax on amounts that are currently available to them or that have been insulated from creditors. Unfortunately, Congress in 1978 tied the hands of the Treasury Department and the IRS. The Administration proposes that Congress lift the restrictions on new regulation of executive compensation and give Treasury and the IRS full authority to address appropriate and inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements.

Section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978. In 1978, Treasury and the IRS proposed Treasury Regulations section 1.61-16, providing for current inclusion of compensation deferred "at the taxpayer's individual option." The proposed regulation alarmed companies because the scope of the regulation was vague, and it was not clear whether all deferred compensation might be taxed currently. Companies also made strong arguments that they needed deferred compensation as part of their executive pay packages.

In response, Congress enacted section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 to prevent finalization of section 1.61-16. Section 132 provides that the taxable year of inclusion of any amount under a private deferred compensation plan "shall be determined in accordance with the principles set forth in regulations, rulings, and judicial decisions relating to deferred compensation which were in effect on February 1, 1978." The broad rule-making moratorium imposed by section 132 currently prohibits Treasury and the IRS from issuing new regulations or other guidance on many aspects of nonqualified deferred compensation arrangements.

Since the enactment of section 132, Treasury and the IRS have been unable to provide new guidance about core elements of deferred compensation arrangements. New guidance is needed to ensure that the tax rules keep pace with the constant changes in deferred compensation practices and to address federal court decisions that have undercut the rules on constructive receipt. The guidance also is needed simply to update IRS ruling guidelines that were issued in 1971 and that, despite minor changes in 1992, are considered out of step with the case law.

Budget Proposal to Repeal Section 132. The Administration's budget for fiscal year 2004 proposes the repeal of section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 and a grant of new authority to write regulations on inappropriate deferred compensation arrangements. Last year this Committee reported legislation that would have repealed section 132, and the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation also recommended repeal of section 132 in the Enron report.

Repeal of section 132 would greatly enhance the ability of Treasury and the IRS to write regulations addressing deferred compensation practices. In some situations, section 132 directly constrains issuing new rules. In others, repeal of section 132 along with new statutory authority to address inappropriate arrangements would make the rules more likely to survive court challenge. Treasury and the IRS would not implement proposed section 1.61-16 as part of this authority.

The new regulations would address the following topics, among others: benefit distribution elections; initial and subsequent deferral elections; executive control over deferred amounts; shielding deferred compensation from creditors; and constructive receipt of property. Let me describe these briefly:

- Regarding benefit distribution elections, the regulations could address circumstances under which executives control the timing of their benefit payouts to the detriment of general creditors – for example, "haircuts" and other acceleration clauses.

- Regarding initial and subsequent deferral elections, the regulations could provide clearer rules to require that an executive's choice to defer income be made before the income is actually available – eliminating the executive's ability to defer tax on amounts under the executive's immediate control; the regulations also could state whether and when subsequent deferral elections are permitted.

- Regarding executive control over deferred amounts, the regulations could address questions about how much control an executive may have over deferred amounts – for example, whether and to what extent an executive may control the investment of deferred compensation or "swap" deferred compensation rights for stock options or life insurance arrangements.

- Regarding shielding deferred compensation from creditors, the new regulations could address techniques that attempt to shield assets from creditors while making it appear that the assets are reachable by creditors – for example, offshore rabbi trusts, secured trusts that "spring" into existence as a company approaches insolvency, trigger clauses that provide for automatic payouts as a company approaches insolvency, and third-party guarantees of deferred benefits.

- Regarding constructive receipt of property, the regulations could address when an executive is taxable on property (such as company stock) that is made available to the executive but is not actually transferred; this would give Treasury and the IRS clearer authority to address the taxation of deeply discounted stock options, resolving uncertainty about how certain old federal court decisions apply to current practices of issuing discounted options in lieu of deferred compensation.

One of the key points of the Administration's legislative proposal is the on-going flexibility that it will provide. Companies and executives regularly restructure executive pay packages, and the tax laws need to keep pace with these changes. The status quo is unacceptable as a matter of tax policy – Treasury and the IRS are actually forbidden from shaping or updating the law to address new practices. Moreover, legislation targeted at specific transactions or practices would be an incomplete response. It may not reach the new transactions or practices companies and executives develop in the future.

Furthermore, it is important that Treasury and the IRS have the authority to determine not only what types of arrangements cross the line but also to say what types of arrangements are permissible. The market pressures for executive compensation are significant, and limiting one particular inappropriate practice inevitably will lead companies and executives to develop new practices, some troublesome and some not. Effective regulation in this area requires a comprehensive approach and continual updating of the rules to respond to new developments so that companies and executives are guided to appropriate arrangements.

We need also to shape the rules for nonqualified deferred compensation to keep pace with changes in the rules for qualified plans. One of the policy goals of the nonqualified plan rules is to protect the viability and the integrity of the qualified plan system. Because of the important role that qualified plans play in providing retirement income security for millions of American workers and their families, Congress regularly reviews and updates the rules for those plans through new legislation, and Treasury and the IRS regularly issue new regulations and rulings to implement that legislation. In fact, this Committee last year reported legislation, first proposed by the President, to protect the retirement security of workers whose plans invest in employer stock. Just as the Administration urges you to take up the retirement security legislation again this year, so too we urge you to give us the tools needed to make sure that this and future legislation will maintain the balance between qualified and nonqualified plans.

To meet the policy challenges of this dynamic area, we strongly recommend that Congress repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 and give Treasury and the IRS lasting and meaningful authority to write proper rules for taxing executive pay. Untying our hands is the only way to ensure that Treasury and the IRS can respond quickly and effectively to developments in executive compensation.

Other Recent Legislative and Regulatory Developments

Certain of the executive compensation practices discussed by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation in its report have been addressed either through legislation signed into law by President Bush or through regulations issued by Treasury and the IRS. Additionally, Treasury and the IRS are continually reviewing new transactions to determine whether they are appropriate.

Sarbanes-Oxley Act. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act signed by President Bush last summer addresses outside the tax code certain executive compensation issues. Sarbanes-Oxley prohibits insider trading during "blackout" periods, prohibits almost all loans from public companies to executives and directors, and requires certain executives to forfeit incentive and equity-based compensation if the company restates its financial statements. All these changes would have had a material impact on Enron's executive compensation practices, and we believe they will help curb inappropriate executive pay practices in the future.

Split-Dollar Life Insurance Arrangements. Also last summer, Treasury and the IRS proposed new regulations for taxing split-dollar life insurance arrangements. A split-dollar life insurance arrangement is a contract to allocate the benefits and, in some cases, the costs of a life insurance policy. Under a typical equity split-dollar arrangement, an executive receives an interest in the policy cash value disproportionate to the executive's share of premiums. The new regulations ended many years of uncertainty about how these arrangements are taxed and remove the tax advantage of split-dollar life insurance arrangements. Under the regulations, an executive will be taxed as receiving below-market loans from the company (if the executive owns the life insurance policy) or as receiving taxable economic benefits from the company (if the company owns the policy). Treasury and the IRS intend to finalize these regulations in the near future.

Other Arrangements. We are aware of other executive pay arrangements that raise tax policy concerns, and in some cases we anticipate publishing regulations or other guidance. For example, some executives who own stock options purport to sell those options to a family limited partnership, a family trust, or another entity in which they or their family members have a direct financial stake. This transaction is intended to defer the gain the executive would otherwise recognize on exercise of the options. We have reviewed these transactions, and we have serious concerns with them. We expect to issue a notice in the near future indicating how and why we intend to challenge them.

Of course, our review of certain transactions would potentially be different if Congress enacted our budget proposal to repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978. Section 132 ties our hands. To challenge a transaction, we have to conclude that it violates the law as in effect back in 1978. Executive compensation has changed a lot since 1978, and we need to be able to issue new rules and regulations to keep pace with changes in the market.

Finally, once we have identified a type of transaction and have determined that it fails under current law, we are able to list the transaction type and require taxpayers to disclose their participation in it. As with other types of abusive tax avoidance, we believe that listing is an important tool in tax administration and enforcement.

Summary and Closing

I thank the Committee for holding a hearing on this important topic, and I appreciate the opportunity to discuss these critical issues with you. We urge the Committee to do this year what it did last year – report legislation to repeal section 132 of the Revenue Act of 1978 to give us new authority to address deferred compensation, as proposed in the Administration's budget. We further urge the Committee to address the corporate governance and accountability issues raised by executive compensation, but to do so directly rather than through the tax code. Mr. Chairman and Senator Baucus, the Office of Tax Policy would be happy to offer any assistance to you and your staff as you continue your review of this critical issue.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my formal statement. I will be pleased to answer any questions that you or any other member may wish to ask.

FYI: The attached law-review article by Mcginnis and Rappaport argues (in part) that the Constitution prohibits a House from requiring a supermajority to repeal a rule. See Part II.B & nn. 103-117. (The broader thesis of the article defends legislative supermajority requirements.)

*483 THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LEGISLATIVE SUPERMAJORITY REQUIREMENTS: A DEFENSE

INTRODUCTION

On the first day of the 104th Congress, the House of Representatives adopted a rule that requires a three-fifths majority of those voting to pass an increase in income tax rates. [FN1] This three-fifths rule had been publicized during the 1994 congressional elections as part of the House Republicans' Contract with America. [FN2] In a recent Open Letter to Congressman Gingrich, seventeen well-known law professors assert that the rule is unconstitutional. [FN3] They argue that requiring a legislative supermajority to enact bills conflicts with the intent of the Framers. They also contend that the rule conflicts with the Constitution's text, because they believe that the Constitution's specific supermajority requirements, such as the requirement for approval of treaties, indicate that simple majority voting is required for the passage of ordinary legislation. 2[FN4]

484 Despite the prominence of its signers, we believe that the Open Letter seriously misconstrues the Constitution. Under the Rules of Proceedings Clause, the House may enact a rule governing its internal operations so long as the rule does not violate another provision of the Constitution. The Open Letter fails to identify a constitutional clause that prohibits the three- fifths rule. The Open Letter's attempt to establish a constitutional requirement of majority rule fails because the only inference that can be drawn from the provisions requiring supermajorities in certain instances is that the Constitution itself does not require a supermajority for the passage of legislation. Thus, the Constitution's silence on the proportion of legislators necessary to pass bills is not the result of inattention to the issue. Rather, it reflects the Framers' intent to permit the houses of the legislature to decide the question. When the Constitution mandates a legislative majority, as it does for quorums, or a supermajority, as it does for treaties, it does so explicitly.

The Open Letter's arguments based on the intent of the Framers fare no better. The Framers' discussions cited in the Open Letter address only the issue of whether the Constitution imposes a supermajority rule rather than whether the Rules of Proceedings Clause authorizes a house to pass a supermajority rule. Far better evidence of the Framers' intent regarding that clause is the unbroken tradition, stretching from the early Republic to the present day, of rules,

such as those sustaining the filibuster and the committee system, whose objective has been the same as the three-fifths rule -- to frustrate legislative majorities and promote other values. Invalidating the three-fifths rule would also require use of a subjective standard that could create chaos because legislators and citizens would not be sure what rules were valid and thus which enactments were law.

In contrast, the appropriate standard -- that standing rules of the legislature are valid so long as the rules are themselves subject to repeal or emendation by majority vote-- is easily applied and best comports with the text of the Constitution and our legislative traditions. The Open Letter argues that the three-fifths rule would run afoul of even this standard because the rule cannot be waived or amended by a majority of the House. The Open Letter, however, seriously misunderstands the mechanisms by which the House of Representatives passes legislation: A simple majority of the House can waive or amend the three-fifths rule.

In addition to being wholly constitutional, the three-fifths rule for income tax increases is also good policy. For the last fifty years the Republic has been beset by a difficult problem: Concentrated interest groups can successfully obtain benefits for themselves and place the costs on a diffuse, and therefore legislatively ineffective, popular majority. Rather than being criticized, the ruleshould 485 be celebrated because it is a modest attempt to restore the effective power of popular majorities without taking the more radical step of amending the Constitution.

I. THE CONSTITUTION AUTHORIZES THE THREE-FIFTHS RULE

The Constitution grants each house the authority to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings." [FN5] Rules of proceedings are rules that govern the operations of a house of the legislature. eld [FN6] On its face, the three- fifths rule is a rule of proceeding. The rule provides that "[n]o bill . . . carrying a Federal income tax rate increase shall be considered as passed . . . unless so determined by a vote of not less than three-fifths of the Members voting." [FN7] f1 The rule governs how the House may pass an increase in income tax rates. The passage of bills and other measures is one of the most important functions that legislatures perform. A legislature must be able to issue rules that determine whether a bill will be deemed to have passed the legislature, including rules on permissible voting methods and the number of votes required. It is difficult to imagine that the Framers would have deprived the houses of the authority to pass rules of this kind. Although legislative rules usually require only a majority to pass a bill, nothing in the Rules of Proceedings Clause prevents the houses from using nonmajority rules. ield 2 [FN8] Thus, just as the text of the Rules of Proceedings Clause authorizes the House to issue a rule providing that bills pass by majority vote, it also authorizes the issuance of a rule providing for a supermajority. A supermajority rule would be illegal only if it conflicted with some other clause of the Constitution or some implicit constitutional principle.
cf2 [FN9] In this part, we show that nothing in the Constitution requires majority voting for alllegislation486
fs20 and that the Rules of Proceedings Clause does not distinguish between rules that promote debate and those that do not. [FN10]

A. The Constitution Does Not Mandate Majority Voting for Bills

Although the Open Letter asserts that the Constitution forbids the House from requiring a supermajority to pass a bill, the Constitution simply does not contain such a prohibition. The Open Letter tries to derive the prohibition on the basis of arguments drawn from the text of the Constitution, the intent of the Framers, and Supreme Court precedent, but none of these claims are persuasive.

1. Text

The Constitution addresses the power of each house to pass bills principally in the Presentment Clause, which provides that "[e]very Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States."
fldinst HYPERLINK \l Document0zzFN_F11 [FN11] Additionally, the Orders Presentment Clause states that "[e]very Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary . . . shall be presented to the President."

row
f1 t [FN12]

Neither clause specifies the proportion of a chamber necessary to pass a bill. Rather, the clauses simply refer to a bill's passage by a house or an order's receipt of the concurrence of a house. The Constitution's failure to specify a proportion necessary to pass a bill, combined with the delegation of authority to each house under the Rules of Proceedings Clause, suggests that the Constitution permits each house to decide how many members are necessary to pass a bill.

The Constitution's silence on the number necessary to pass a bill stands in stark contrast to other provisions that specify the requisite number to undertake particular actions. Most significantly, the Quorum Clause states that"487 a Majority of each [house] shall constitute a Quorum to do Business." 1 [FN13]
bkmkstart Document0zzFN_B14

Other provisions of the Constitution similarly undermine the claim that there is an implicit requirement of majority voting. Their language reveals that the Framers did not leave constitutional voting requirements to speculation, but made them explicit where there would otherwise be doubt about their content. For instance, the Constitution is clear when it requires less than a majority, as when it states that "one fifth of those Present" in either house may insist that there be a roll call vote recorded in the journal. [FN15] Likewise, the Constitution is explicit in the many places where it requires a supermajority. kmkend Document0zzFN_B16 [FN16] Indeed, the Presentment Clause itself states that two-thirds of each house are necessary to override the President's veto. s20 [FN17]f1

Oddly enough, the Open Letter relies principally on these supermajority requirements as the textual basis for its conclusion that the three-fifths rule isunconstitutional. 488[FN18] cf1 According to the Open Letter, it is f1 telling that the Constitution specifically imposes supermajority requirements in seven places, but not as to ordinary bills. Thus, the argument goes, because the Constitution "never places any special obstacles in the way of the enactment of ordinary legislation," the House may not do so. [FN19]r

This argument is wholly misdirected. That the Constitution elsewhere expressly imposes supermajority requirements would be a strong argument against the claim, if anyone made it, that the Presentment Clause implicitly requires a supermajority to pass a bill. The existence of seven supermajority requirements in the Constitution, however, provides no support for the conclusion that the Constitution forbids the houses from passing other supermajority rules. There is nothing strange about the Framers refusing to impose a supermajority requirement but permitting the legislature to do so. [FN20]1 The problem with the Open Letter's argument is that it assumes a prohibition on legislative supermajority rules simply because they are not constitutionally prescribed.

The weakness in the structure of the Open Letter's position may be made even more obvious by a review of analogousarguments. The Constitution requires each house to keep a journal, [FN21] but no one would argue that this provision disables each house from directing under its Rules of Proceedings Clause that other kinds of records of its proceedings also be printed. The Constitution requires the President to report on the "State of the Union," fldrslt [FN22] but no one would argue that he is constitutionally disabled from sending messages to Congress on other subjects.

Surprisingly, the Open Letter argument with the most surface appeal is in a footnote. The Open Letter suggests that the constitutional provision giving the Vice President a vote only when the Senate is equally divided indicates that the Framers required the houses to use majority voting. [FN23] The Vice President Voting Clause, however, does not begin to support a majority rule requirement. The clause simply reflects the Framers' reasonable assumption that the houses would often choose to use majority rule and that majority rule would be the default rule applied when no other procedure was adopted. [FN24] The Constitution itself shows that the Framers could not possibly have thought that the Vice President would have the potential to cast a vote on every rollcall 489 because it requires a two-thirds majority rather than a simple majority for the Senate to pass a treaty, [FN25]
fs20 propose a constitutional amendment, [FN26] fs20 expel a member, [FN27] or impeach an officer of the United States. [FN28] Thus, the Vice President has no power to cast a vote in a wide variety of important situations, demonstrating that the Framers could not have thought that the Vice President Voting Clause had to be given effect whenever the Senate votes.

Moreover, as we argue below, the rules of each house are subject to repeal by majority vote. [FN29] Thus, even if the Senate exercised its authority under the Rules of Proceedings Clause to require all legislation to pass by supermajority vote, votes on the repeal of such rules would always provide opportunities for the Vice President to cast a vote. Thus, under our construction of the Rules of Proceeding Clause, the Vice President Voting Clause would never become superfluous.

The Open Letter also finds problematic that the three-fifths supermajority required for income tax increases is different from the various two-thirds majorities required by the Constitution. [FN30] The Open Letter worries about the "proliferation of supermajority" rules with incongruous requirements of 55r 73%. But such quibbles do not supply a constitutional argument. In delegating to the houses the authority to pass voting rules, the Constitution permits them to choose unusual or odd proportions. Moreover, for a variety of reasons, the houses are likely to choose simple proportions. 2[FN31] In fact, the houses have often in the past chosen a simple three-fifths requirement, [FN32] presumably because they believe a two-thirds requirements is too strict.

2. Framers' Intent

The Open Letter supplements its textual argument with an argument concerning the intent of the Framers. The Open Letter argues that the Framerswanted 490 to prohibit supermajority voting rules.
fs20 [FN33] The Open Letter relies on a passage from The Federalist No. 58 in which James 1 Madison defends the Philadelphia Convention's decision not to constitutionally require a supermajority for a quorum or for particular types of legislation. Although Madison did not entirely agree with the Convention's decision, [FN34]
f1 he argues in The Federalist that a supermajority requirement would reverse the "fundamental principle of free government." [FN35] He also states that a constitutionally required supermajority would permit a minority to take advantage of the public. ld [FN36]

At first glance, Madison's remarks appear to create a puzzle. If the Framers really intended to prohibit supermajority voting rules, why does the text show so little evidence of the prohibition? The puzzle soon vanishes as further inspection reveals that Madison was addressing an entirely different question than that raised by the Open Letter. Madison was explaining why the Framers did not establish a constitutional supermajority requirement. [FN37] The present issue concerns the validity of a legislative supermajority requirement.

Legislative supermajority requirements also do not raise the problems that Madison identified with constitutional supermajority rules.
*[FN38] Permitting houses to pass supermajority requirements would not allow a minority to take advantage of the public.
fldinst HYPERLINK \l Document0zzFN_F39 [FN39] A supermajority rule would only be passed if amajority 1 491 believed it was appropriate, and it could be repealed if the majority believed that a minority was using its powers improperly. rslt [FN40]

That the Framers opposed many constitutional supermajority requirements does not suggest that they also opposed legislative supermajority requirements, because the policies underlying the two types of requirements differ. slt [FN41] While constitutional supermajority requirements conflict with majority rule, legislative supermajority requirements do not. A legislative supermajority rule simply involves a majority imposing a supermajority requirement upon itself until the majority decides to eliminate it.
fldrslt [FN42] Permitting the legislature to adopt a supermajority requirement respects majority rule in more important ways than does a prohibition on legislative supermajority rules. Allowing the legislature to adopt supermajority requirements permits the majority to make crucial decisions -- to adopt supermajority rules and possibly to eliminate them -- that a prohibition would deny.

492 3. Judicial Precedent

The Open Letter also argues that the three-fifths rule conflicts with the Chadha decision. [FN44] It contends that requiring a legislative supermajority is inconsistent with Chadha's holding that Congress can change the constitutional requirements for the passage of legislation only by constitutional amendment. If the Constitution contained a majority-voting requirement for legislation, Chadha would, of course, support the conclusion that Congress could not depart from the requirement. But the question here is whether the Constitution contains such a requirement, and Chadha provides no guidance on this point. [FN45]

The Open Letter also claims support from United States v. Ballin. [FN46] In Ballin, the Supreme Court reviewed a House rule that counted toward a quorum members who were present in the hall but did not vote. The Court held that the rule was a rule of proceeding that reasonably determined whether a quorum existed and therefore was constitutional. The Open Letter quotes language from the decision that, at first glance, might be thought to suggest that the Supreme Court implied that supermajority rules are unconstitutional: [FN47]

> The other branch of the question is, whether, a quorum being present, the bill received a sufficient number of votes; and here the general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that, when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribedspecific > fl 493 limitations. . . . No such limitation is found in the Federal Constitution, and therefore the general law of such bodies obtains.
> fldrslt [FN48]

Despite first appearances, however, the Court's statement is not addressing the issue of whether the legislature can require a supermajority to take action. That issue is neither discussed in the opinion nor raised by the facts of the case.

Interpreting the Court as addressing whether the legislature can pass supermajority rules is mistaken for additional reasons. It would mean that the Court made an erroneous historical claim because, as we show below, it was understood in the nineteenth century that legislatures could enact supermajority rules. [FN49] Moreover, that interpretation would suggest that all legislative supermajority rules are unconstitutional, even though the Open Letter acknowledges that supermajority rules addressed to procedural issues are neither unconstitutional nor unusual.

The better interpretation is that the Ballin Court is discussing the rule that applies when neither the Constitution nor the legislature imposes a specific rule, such as a supermajority rule. Under this interpretation, the Court correctly states that the universal default rule is that a majority of the quorum may take action. The Court is also addressing an issue that the case raises, because the House had not displaced the default rule. [FN50] Nothing in the Court's discussion, however, indicates that the Rules of Proceedings Clause found in the Constitution -- "the organic act under which [Congress] is assembled" [FN51] -- fails to authorize the House to pass a supermajority rule if it chooses to supersede the default rule.

While the Open Letter's argument is not supported by Supreme Court precedent, our position on supermajority rules comports with venerable authority. fl A century and a half ago, Luther Cushing, who was clerk of the Massachusetts House of Representatives for twelve years, published a thousand- page treatise on legislative procedure that "was received with universal approval." [FN53]s20 Cushing recognized that legislative majorities sometimes chose to depart from simple-majority voting rules, but argued thatthis494 deviation was consistent with majoritarian principles. He concluded that a nonmajoritarian rule may be > prescribed, by some paramount authority, or . . . agreed upon beforehand and established by the assembly itself, by which a smaller number is permitted, or a larger number is required, to do some particular act. But even in these cases, it is the will of the majority that governs; because it is by a major [sic] vote, in the first instance, that the rule itself is established. [FN54]

B. The Rules of Proceedings Clause Is Not Limited to Rules that Promote Debate

In addition to arguing that the Constitution directly prohibits rules that require supermajority votes to pass bills, the Open Letter also argues that the three-fifths rule is not even a rule of proceeding within the authority of each house

row
to pass. The Open Letter contends that rules of proceedings are confined to rules that contribute to "informed discussion" and are procedural rather than substantive. [FN55] This interpretation is mistaken.

1. Text

The text of the Rules of Proceedings Clause does not suggest that it should be limited to rules that are procedural or that advance deliberation. The distinction to be drawn is not between procedure and substance, but between acts that govern the operations of a house of the legislature and those that alter the rights and duties of citizens outside the legislative branch. The former are within the ambit of the Clause, and the latter are exercises of legislative power that fall outside the Clause. Permitting each house to govern its operations accords with the text and purposes of the Rules of Proceedings Clause, prior judicial precedent, and the rules of proceedings that Congress has adopted for two hundred years. In contrast, the Open Letter's interpretation of the Clause conflicts with Supreme Court precedent and would cast doubt on our most venerable legislative practices, including those patterned after practices of the British Parliament.

495 The Rules of Proceedings Clause grants to each house authority over its own proceedings -- that is, its operations or business. [FN56] This interpretation conforms to the ordinary meaning of "proceedings." [FN57] It also serves the evident purpose of the Clause in that it gives each house authority to run its own business. In the absence of a grant of authority to each house, Congress would have to rely on its legislative authority under the Necessary and Proper Clause to pass rules of proceedings.
fldrslt [FN58] But this would have the troubling consequence of requiring each house to submit its rules to the other house and the President for approval. If the Clause were limited to procedural aspects, this would unduly limit each house's authority to regulate its own affairs. t [FN59] This interpretation is in keeping with general separation of powers principles by which the Constitution gives each governmental institution sufficient autonomy to act as a counterweight to others.

2. Precedent

Our interpretation is also supported by Chadha, the case upon which the Open Letter itself relies. In Chadha, the Court expressly contrasts legislative power, described as the power "of altering the legal rights [and] duties . . . outside the Legislative Branch," with Congress's rulemaking authority, interpreted as the power "to bind itself." kmkend Document0zzFN_B60[FN60] Permitting Congress wide latitude with respect to rules relating to its proceedings is also consistent with the broad interpretation of Congress's authority under the Rules of Proceedings Clause in the Supreme Court's most extensive discussion of the subject. In United States v. Ballin, the Court states:

> The Constitution empowers each house to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints orviolate496 fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the ... f1 [FN61]

The three-fifths rule is a method of proceeding in that it regulates the operations of the House, and a reasonable relation exists between the rule and the need to determine whether an increase in tax rates passed the House. Thus, the reasoning of Ballin supports the constitutionality of the three-fifths rule. [FN62]

3. Historical Practice

The history of the rules of proceedings from the First Congress to the present day also confirms that Congress has the power to make rules that have substantive effects, so long as they also regulate the operations of a chamber. kmkstart Document0zzFN_B63
cf1 .. Indeed, many of the most significant congressional rules frustrate the enactment of majority-supported legislation in order to advance other values. For instance, the rules of the Senate have allowed for filibusters since the early republic. In fact, the first filibuster was attempted in the First Congress. [FN64] Indeed, until 1917, the Senate did not have a cloture rule at all; the ability of members to hold up majoritarian *legislation was limited only by their endurance. [FN65] Even the House of Representatives did not use effective

row
mechanisms to limit debate until Speaker Reed's reforms of the late-nineteenth century. [FN66] While the Open Letter declines to endorse the rules permittingfilibusters, 497[FN67] the continuous use of filibusters since the early Republic provides compelling support for their constitutionality.
*[FN68]ar
No plausible constitutional distinction exists between the rules that have permitted filibusters and the three-fifths rule; if the former is within the historical meaning of the Rules of Proceedings Clause, so is the latter. The filibuster and the three-fifths rule both have the procedural effect of sometimes encouraging deliberation and the substantive effect of giving more power to a minority of legislators. The three-fifths rule, like any supermajority rule, may often promote informed discussion; since a legislator's vote in favor of a tax bill becomes more valuable, individuals may invest more time in persuading the legislator of the bill's merits. kmkend Document0zzFN_B69[FN69] Similarly, permitting unlimited debate leads simultaneously to more deliberation and to greater power for legislative minorities vis-'a-vis legislative majorities. [FN70] Indeed, whenever the merits of the rules relating to filibusters have been discussed, the central issue in the debate over their wisdom has always been substantive: How much influence should a legislative minority have over the content of legislation? [FN71] The exercise of the filibuster is further proof of its substantive nature. Surely, the authors of the Open Letter do not believe that those Southern legislators who filibustered civil rights legislation by, among other things, reading the telephone book were merely promoting deliberation rather than exercising a minority veto.

Like the filibuster, the congressional committee system is an institutional mechanism maintained through legislative rules that temper the power of a chamber's numerical majority. Legislative committees are even more venerable than the filibuster. They were used in the English Parliament from the fourteenth century and thus were part of parliamentary practice well known tothe 498 Framers. [FN72] The House of Representatives of the early Republic established both select and standing committees with important powers. 1 [FN73]_____[FN74]

Legislative rules in both the House and Senate allow committees to act as gatekeepers over legislative initiatives within their jurisdictions, a power which provides them with disproportionate influence over the final content of legislation. slt [FN75] Even if the members of committees were randomly chosen, some committees would be unrepresentative of the preferences of the entire body, and the power afforded these committees would increase the chance that, on some issues, the majority will of the legislative body would be thwarted. Moreover, substantial evidence exists that the preferences of committee members are likely to differ from those of the average member of Congress on issues within the committee's jurisdiction, because members choose committees that are the most useful for aiding their constituents and most conducive for promoting their own reelection. [FN76] In addition, on key House committees, such as the Ways and Means and the Rules Committees, the majority party gives itself a more favorable partisan ratio than it enjoys in the entire chamber. [FN77] This imbalance also potentially skews the kind of legislation that is enacted. Finally, committee chairmen have substantial power over what legislation is considered in committee, thus providing further nonmajoritarian influence over legislation.
*[FN78]ar
499 Thus, like the three-fifths rule, the committee system both promotes deliberation and impedes majoritarian legislative control. For instance, the committee system aids concentrated interest groups, since they are likely to be better represented on committees of importance to them than in the House as a whole. The system also advances the institutional interests of the majority party rather than a majority of legislators, particularly in the House of Representatives. In fact, legislation supported by a majority of the House is regularly bottled up in committee when such an obstruction preserves the cohesion of the majority party. Most notoriously, for instance, civil rights legislation was long delayed by senior Democratic members of the Rules Committee even though the legislation commanded majority support in the House. [FN79] Many of the items in the recent Contract with America had been prevented from reaching the floor in past Congresses by the Democratic leadership working through the committee system, although those issues commanded majority support of the entire body even before the last election. D [FN80]f1 We are not aware that any of the signers of the Open Letter have protested the frustration of majority will in Congresses of the last decade. [FN81]

4. Jurisprudential Considerations

The foregoing discussion demonstrates that besides its lack of historical support, the kind of standard that the Open Letter seeks to require of rules that frustrate majoritarian control -- for instance, that such rules contribute to

deliberative democracy -- is hopelessly indeterminate and subjective.
ul [FN82] The Open Letter believes that the courts should employ such a standard to invalidate the three-fifths rule. Given the Framers' understanding of judicial review, however, indeterminacy and subjectivity are substantial defects of aconstitutional 500f1 rule to be applied by the judiciary.
fs20 [FN83] Such defects are even more serious than usual when assessing the constitutionality of rules that determine whether congressional legislation is law. Here formal and determinate rules like the one we suggest are particularly 1 necessary; legislators (and citizens) must be able to know in advance whether their actions will be deemed legallybinding in order to avoid the very substantial social costs that would result from uncertainty as to which bills become law. Jefferson's statement about parliamentary rules of procedure applies as well to the constitutional tests for assessing the constitutionality of these rules: "It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is . . . ." [FN84] The Open Letter's vague standard for assessing the constitutionality of legislative rules would subject legislative proceedings to the "caprice" of judges and the "captiousness" of constitutional commentators. [FN85]s20

II. REPEALING AND WAIVING SUPERMAJORITY REQUIREMENTS

Although our argument has assumed that a majority of the House could eliminate the three-fifths rule, the Open Letter appears to argue that a two- thirds vote would be needed. In this part, we argue that the Open Letter's reading of the House Rules is mistaken. We then argue, more fundamentally, that even if the House sought to prevent a majority from repealing a supermajority requirement, it could not constitutionally do so.

A. The House Rules Permit a Majority to Waive or Repeal the Three-Fifths Rule

The Open Letter mistakenly asserts that a standing rule of the House of Representatives may be modified only through suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority of those voting. [FN86] In reality, a simple majoritymay 501 waive any standing rule of the House, including the three- fifths rule, by passing a measure called a "special rule." A simple majority of the House may also amend or repeal any standing rule of the House.

To understand the relation between suspension of the rules and passage of special rules, one needs only a basic understanding of the different mechanisms by which the House considers legislation. In the nineteenth century, the House of Representatives considered legislation through a mechanism that permitted each committee to call up the bills of its choice. This mechanism was not successful because it did not provide a means for prioritizing bills or limiting debate.
f1 [FN87] After the reforms of Speaker Reed in the late- nineteenth century, the House developed two major routes to obtain floor votes on bills. [FN88] The most important route is through the enactment of a special rule. In this procedure, the Rules Committee votes out a rule that will structure the procedures for considering a specific piece of legislation (hence the name special rule, which contrasts with the standing rules of the House of Representatives). [FN89] The special rule must be passed by a simple majority of members voting. [FN90] The House then considers the bill under the procedures established under the special rule. Those procedures may include the waiver of any standing rule of the House. [FN91] In fact, the House has waived one or more standing rules numerous times in every session. eld 2 [FN92]

Suspension of the rules is a different mechanism for passing a bill. Under this mechanism, a two-thirds majority of the members voting suspends all the rules and passes specific legislation. [FN93] Unlike the special-rule procedure,502 which requires two votes -- one on the rule and one on the legislation itself -- suspension of the rules requires only a single vote. [FN94] The House generally uses this mechanism to pass relatively uncontroversial and minor legislation, although on occasion an important bill is passed under suspension. [FN95] When a bill fails to get a two-thirds vote under suspension, the House has at times then passed it through use of a special rule, thus underscoring in fact that suspension of the rules and special rules are two distinct mechanisms for passing legislation. lt [FN96]

In addition to waiving its standing rules, the House may also amend or repeal them. The Rules Committee has continuing jurisdiction over the rules of the House and, pursuant to that jurisdiction, may recommend amendments

to those rules. [FN97] Such amendments may then be passed by a majority vote of a quorum of the House. [FN98]s20

The Open Letter's failure to understand the mechanisms for passing legislation in the House leads it into a major legal error. The three-fifths rule can be temporarily waived or permanently repealed at any time to raise income tax rates if a majority so determines. It is true that such changes would normally require the Rules Committee to recommend either waiving or repealing the three-fifths rule, [FN99] but all proposed legislation similarly requirescommittee 503 recommendation. [FN100] Rules changed are thus subject to the same procedures as any legislative proposal and may be blocked by a committee unless they are brought to the House floor in a discharge petition. [FN101] Accordingly, the three-fifths rule can be changed as easily as can any existing rule or law. rslt [FN102]

B. The Constitution Prohibits the House from Requiring a Supermajority to Repeal a Rule

Because the House rules permit a majority to repeal the three-fifths rule, we do not strictly need to address the issues that would arise if the House attempted to prevent a majority from repealing the three-fifths rule. These issues, however, are the most difficult and interesting ones raised by the Open Letter, so we believe it is appropriate to discuss them briefly. We believe that the best view is that, even if the House did attempt to prevent a majority from repealing the three-fifths rule, it could not constitutionally do so. Thus, a simple majority would still be able to repeal the three-fifths rule.

The issue may be addressed with a hypothetical. Suppose that, instead of passing a three-fifths rule that a majority could repeal, the House had passed the three-fifths rule and a special repeal rule that required a supermajority vote to repeal the three-fifths rule. This simple repeal rule would not prevent a majority from repealing the three-fifths rule. To repeal the three-fifths rule, a majority could simply pass resolutions that repealed the repeal rule and thethree-504 fifths rule. [FN103] In this way, a majority that chose to do so would have the power to circumvent the repeal rule.

To prevent this maneuver, the House might attempt to insulate the repeal rule from repeal by a majority. Thus, the House might pass a stronger repeal rule -- call it the insulated repeal rule -- providing that both it (the insulated repeal rule) and the three-fifths rule could only be repealed by a supermajority vote. We believe, however, that the Constitution does not allow such an insulated repeal rule to be given effect. In other words, as a constitutional matter the authority of a majority of the House to repeal a rule cannot be extirpated.

The view that a majority can repeal the insulated repeal rule is rooted in the history and structure of the Constitution. Before we explain our argument, it is important to emphasize that the constitutional issue raised here is not limited to the narrow question that we have asked about the insulated repeal rule. Rather, the constitutional issue is broader in two ways. First, although we are attempting to determine whether the House may require that a rule be repealed by a supermajority, it seems clear that, if the House had this power, it would also have the power simply to prevent repeal of a rule or, in fact, the passage of a rule. If the House had the power to require, for example, a two-thirds vote to repeal a rule, there is no principled reason why it could not also require a 99% vote or entirely prohibit repeal of the rule. (With this power, the House could also pass a rule that would prevent it from passing particular kinds of rules in the future.) Second, although we are addressing the power of the House to insulate rules from repeal, the answer to this question would almost certainly apply to the analogous question raised with respect to legislation: Whether Congress can pass a law that will prevent it from repealing or passing a law in the future. [FN104] cfl

Returning to the insulated repeal rule, our analysis begins with the constitutional text. Unfortunately, the text does not clearly resolve the issue. The Rules of Proceedings Clause merely provides that each house has the authority to pass the rules of its proceedings. It does not specify whether rules of proceedings may be insulated from repeal by a majority. Similarly, the Presentment Clause is silent on whether Congress may insulate a law from repeal by a future Congress.505 Although the text does not answer the question, the history and structure of the Constitution do. When the Framers drafted the Constitution, they did so against a traditional understanding of the limits of legislative power. The Framers were clearly aware of the traditional understanding, and absent evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that they followed it. Blackstone states the traditional view in Book I of his Commentaries:

> Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not . . . . Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if it's [sic] ordinances could bind the present parliament. s20 [FN105]

Because each legislature is equal, one legislature cannot prevent a successor from taking action. [FN106] Although Blackstone links this point about the equality of legislatures over time with the British notion of the sovereignty of Parliament, the equality of legislatures is a distinct point. While American law abandoned the principle of legislative sovereignty, it retained that of legislative equality. [FN107]

The structure of the Constitution also indicates that one legislature cannot bind another. If a legislature could pass a measure that would prevent a successor from taking action, then that measure would function as a constitutional restraint on the future legislature. For example, if the Senate passed a rule prohibiting tax increases, that would function exactly as if it were a constitutional prohibition on tax increases. As Thomas Cooley stated:

> To say that the legislature may pass irrepealable laws, is to say that it may alter the very constitution from which it derives its authority;506 since e e in so far as one legislature could bind a subsequent one by its enactments, it could in the same degree reduce the legislative power of its successors, and the process might be repeated until, one by one, the subjects of legislation would be excluded altogether from their control, and the constitutional provision, that the legislative power shall be vested in two houses, would be to a greater or less degree rendered ineffectual. d _ [FN108]

Because the Constitution permits amendments only under the procedures in Article V, and not simply through legislative enactments, the legislature does not have the power to bind itself in the future. [FN109]

It is true that the text of the Constitution has been interpreted to permit legislatures to enter into binding contracts and to create vested rights in contract and property that a subsequent legislature cannot impair.
field [FN110] But this authority specifically derives from the constitutional provisions protecting such rights, such as the Contracts Clause and the Takings Clause. [FN111] The legislature, however, lacks the authority to prevent subsequent legislatures from changing the law when it passes ordinary statutes or rules of proceedings.

507 The view that the Constitution does not permit the House to require a supermajority to repeal a rule is also consistent with the Senate's long practice of requiring a supermajority to end debate on legislation. It might be thought that a simple majority of the Senate could not repeal the cloture rule, but that is mistaken. If the Senate voted on whether to change the cloture rule, only a simple majority would be needed to change it. [FN113] It is true that an attempt to change the cloture rule might be filibustered, bkmkstart Document0zzFN_B114 [FN114] but that is another matter. The historical and structural argument presented above does not demonstrate that a majority must at all times be able to obtain a vote on all measures that it desires.
f1 t [FN115] Indeed, as discussed above, several longstanding legislative rules, including the rules governing the filibuster and the committee system, sometimes burden the ability of a majority to vote on bills and rules. [FN116] Here we can state with some confidence only that when a house votes, the Constitution requires that a majority be able to repeal an existing rule. [FN117]

508 III. THE THREE-FIFTHS RULE IS GOOD POLICY THAT ACCORDS WITH THE SPIRIT OF THE CONSTITUTION

We believe that the three-fifths rule not only passes muster as a matter of positive constitutional law but also advances important policy goals, including the cause of democratic self-governance. The Open Letter unwisely seeks to cut off legitimate policy debates about how best to structure the legislative process in light of the current political landscape. By arguing that nonmajoritarian legislative rules are presumptively unconstitutional, for instance, the Open Letter attempts to dictate the proper balance between majority and minority legislative influence over legislation when the Constitution itself does not resolve this complicated issue of political science.

ul [FN118] In this respect, the Constitution is more flexible than the signers of the Open Letter believe.

In drafting the Constitution, the Framers' objective was to establish a well- functioning republic -- a concept that is not necessarily synonymous with government by legislative majority. First, the Framers understood that legislative majorities were but an imperfect reflection of the majoritarian will of the people as a whole. [FN119] Second, the Constitution was designed to protect individual rights as well as political rights. 1 [FN120] The Constitution's limitations on legislative and even popular majorities are apparent not only in the Bill of Rights but also in the entire structure of government. Bicameralism and the separation of powers make it difficult for mere majorities to pass legislation.The 509 original Constitution further restrained the power of a majority of the national legislature by dividing powers between the federal government and the states.

Thus, in passing the three-fifths rule, the Republican Congress not only acted in accord with the formal rule that can be derived from the text and structure of the Constitution but also with the overall architecture of the Constitution, because the rule will simultaneously protect the interests of popular, rather than legislative, majorities and protect the exercise of individual rights. One of the fundamental problems of democratic politics is that concentrated interest groups have more influence with legislators than diffuse groups, even if the diffuse groups represent a numerical majority. fl [FN121] Public choice theory suggests, and observations confirm, that political entrepreneurs will therefore favor a legislative agenda that provides benefits to cohesive and organized interest groups while imposing costs on the electorate as a whole. [FN122]1 Our present budget crisis is in large measure a reflection of repeated instances of this dynamic. Legislators will trade votes to provide entitlements and other expenditure programs to numerous concentrated interest groups. 1 [FN123] The taxes (or debt) required to pay for expenditures do not impose a substantial constraint on such activity because the incidence of the taxes (or debt) can be diffused over the entire population (and future generations, if possible). [FN124] fl Thus, a three- fifths rule for taxes can be understood as a roughattempt 510 to restore a more, rather than less, democratic balance between those adversely affected by taxes and those advantaged by expenditures. [FN125] Moreover, because taxes encroach on individual rights, the rule also directly attempts to facilitate the protection of liberties.

The rule thus functions as a modest precommitment by the majority not to go down a road that will make everyone worse off in the end as concentrated interest groups demand expenditures that beggar the nation as a whole. drslt [FN126] While the Open Letter views the three-fifths rule as an imprudent incursion on our constitutional tradition, slt [FN127] the House can easily change the rule in response to popular opposition. In fact, the Gramm-Rudman Act, which represented another kind of precommitment by the legislative branches toeliminate 511 the budget deficit, was changed by a legislative majority. [FN128] If anything, one might argue that the three-fifths rule is too easily changed. While a constitutional amendment, such as the proposed balanced budget amendment that would require a sixty-percent majority to pass tax increases, would be less easily avoided, the three-fifths rule may be defended as a prudent experiment in addressing the problem of interest-group power. Thus, the three-fifths rule is appropriately viewed not as the reckless endeavor that the Open Letter portrays, but rather as a cautious exercise of statesmanship.

The Open Letter also complains that this precommitment was established on the first day of the congressional session without the benefit of further deliberation. But the public choice analysis outlined above suggests that there are public benefits of a party running on a platform, such as the Contract with America, containing such a rule and implementing it while the public's attention remains focused on its promises. This is one way of restraining the natural process by which concentrated interest groups gain undue leverage with legislators.ar

CONCLUSION

The three-fifths rule is entirely constitutional. The best textual reading of the Constitution demonstrates that Congress, acting by majority vote under its explicit rulemaking authority, may require supermajorities for votes on specific legislation. The rule is also in keeping with our constitutional history, because the history of legislative procedure, whether of the filibuster or of the committee system, is a history of tempering the power of legislative majorities in order to promote values other than majoritarian rule. The values advanced by this rule -- deliberation among the legislators, diminution of the influence of rent-seeking interest groups, and protection of individual rights -- are not simply legitimate constitutional values. They are values central to the original Constitution.

[FN9]. For instance, the House of Representatives could not use the authority of the Rules of Proceedings Clause to adopt a rule permitting individuals other than members of the House to vote on legislation, because such a rule would violate the provision of Article I, Section 2, Clause 1 that states that "[t]he House of Representatives shall be composed of Members...." See Michel v. Anderson, 14 F.3d 623, 630 (D.C. fs20 [FN10] cfl . In addition to the three-fifths rule, the House also passed a rule prohibiting a retroactive income tax rate increase. See Rules , supra note 1, House Rule XXI(5)(d). This rule is also a rule of proceeding. The rule governs what measures may be considered and voted upon by the House. Rules governing the agenda of a chamber are common, including the rules that prevent the House in the ordinary course from considering bills that have not been reported out of committee. Because the retroactivity rule is a rule of proceeding, the Constitution grants the House authority to pass it as well. As with the three- fifths rule, the rule will be constitutional unless it violates another constitutional provision.

cfl . It might be argued that it would be incongruous for the Framers to have required a majority for a quorum, but not for the passage of legislation. But there is nothing strange about requiring a majority for a quorum but permitting a chamber to require a supermajority to pass legislation. The Framers had reason to treat the two situations differently, because preventing a minority from defeating a quorum may be understood as far more important than preventing a majority from impeding legislation. A minority that attempts to block legislation must confront the many political pressures that induce legislatures to behave reasonably, such as debate, deliberation, and publicity. By contrast, a minority that defeats a quorum will be much less vulnerable to these pressures because the failure to establish the quorum will prevent the operation of the legislature and simultaneously frustrate the political dynamics that constrain the legislators' behavior. Indeed, the majority needed for a quorum is clearly not the same as the majority needed to pass legislation: The majority needed for a quorum is a majority of the entire house, but the number ordinarily required to pass legislation is a majority of the quorum. That no one argues that a majority of the entire house is needed to pass legislation suggests a recognition that the rule for a quorum and the rule for passing legislation have different functions. It is thus perfectly logical that the rule for a quorum be constitutionally mandated, but the rule for passage of legislation be left to the discretion of the legislative majority.

cfl . See Open Letter, supra note 3, at 1541. Considered by itself, this is a strange argument to make. Do the authors of the Open Letter really believe that the three-fifths rule would be on surer constitutional footing if it required a two-thirds vote?

cfl . One would expect a chamber to choose round numbers to avoid suspicion that a rule with odd proportions was selected by counting heads in advance. Roundness thus provides a greater assurance of neutrality. A house might also choose round numbers to avoid the ridicule that odd proportions might provoke.

not believe that the argument expressed in The Federalist should be discounted simply because Madison may not have agreed with it. After all, he defended the Constitution on this ground, and the Convention disagreed with his original position. We do believe, however, that Madison's belief significantly undermines the Open Letter's attempt to rely on his authority. We also believe that Madison's original view shows, as do the other supermajority requirements in the Constitution, that there was no consensus that supermajority requirements were generally inappropriate.

cf1 . The Federalist No. 58, at 361 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

fs20 [FN36]
cf1 . Such a requirement might enable a minority to use its voting power to screen itself from equitable obligations or to extort special benefits during an emergency.

fs20 [FN37]
cf1 . Similarly, Alexander Hamilton's discussion in The Federalist No. 22 also addresses the question of the extent to which the Constitution should impose requirements that restrain majorities. See The Federalist No. 22, at 147-48 (Alexander Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

fs20 [FN38]
cf1 . It follows from the logic of our position that the Rules of Proceedings Clause also authorizes a house to pass a rule allowing for the passage of bills by less than a majority vote. Minority voting rules, however, sometimes create practical difficulties, because one minority could repeal provisions that another minority had passed. A useless cycle of passage and repeal could result. More narrowly drawn minority voting rules can avoid these problems and have been used successfully by various government institutions. For example, the Constitution permits a minority in a house to require a roll call vote, and the Supreme Court permits four Justices to grant certiorari from a lower court decision. See Lawrence C. Marshall, "Let Congress Do It": The Case for an Absolute Rule of Statutory Stare Decisis, 88 Mich. L. Rev . 177, 235 n.279 (1989).

fs20 [FN39]
cf1 . Even Madison's brief remarks criticizing constitutional supermajority requirements contain evidence that he might have approved of certain legislative supermajority rules. Madison acknowledged that there are advantages in supermajority requirements -- they protect vulnerable groups and impede bad legislation -- but he believed that they were outweighed by disadvantages. See The Federalist No. 58, supra note 35, at 361. But Madison may simply have believed that constitutional supermajority requirements were too broad and undiscriminating. He may have believed that legislatures could determine when supermajority rules would be beneficial and therefore might have approved of the particular supermajority rules that legislatures might pass. Indeed, it is quite possible that Madison might have approved of the three- fifths rule, given the large increases in taxes and frequent changes in tax rates in recent decades.

fs20 [FN40]
cf1 . If the rules governing how a bill or rule may be passed are rules of proceedings that each house has the power to enact, under what rules does a house act before any rules have been enacted? For example, because the rules of the 103d Congress are deemed tohave terminated with that Congress, under what rules did the House of Representatives of the 104th Congress act when it passed by a majority vote its new rules, including the three-fifths rule? The House of Representatives has historically followed the view that, prior to the passage of the House rules, the House is governed by legislative common law. 1 Deschler's Precedents of the United States House of Representatives 55, 308-09 (1976). There is a strong argument for recognizing this legislative common law. The common law has its strongest appeal in areas where there are traditional rules and the legislature is not able to be the exclusive promulgator of the rules. These conditions certainly hold for legislative rules during the period before the legislature has had the opportunity to make these rules itself. In addition, the British Parliament's use of legislative common law, 2 Redlich , supra note 6, at 3-9, suggests that the Framers considered it a valid means of governing the legislature. One would expect that the common law legislative rules would incorporate majority voting, because that is traditionally the most common voting rule. The common law, however, would not prevent the House from enacting a supermajority rule.

row

cfl . As Madison's discussion indicates, the Philadelphia Convention fs20 considered and rejected certain constitutional supermajority requirements (although it did, of course, adopt several others). See, e.g., 2 Max Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 , at 449-51 (1911) (discussing proposed constitutional supermajority requirement to pass regulations of commerce); id. at 631 (discussing proposed constitutional supermajority requirement to pass navigation acts). Our analysis of Madison's statement also applies here: The Framers' rejection of certain constitutional supermajority requirements does not indicate that they also prohibited legislative supermajority requirements.

fs20 [FN42]
cfl . Contrary to the assertions of the Open Letter, a majority can eliminate the supermajority requirement. See infra Section II.A.

fs20 [FN43]
cfl . Because it is easy to confuse constitutional and legislative supermajority requirements, care must be taken when interpreting statements about this subject. For example, some opponents of ratification criticized the Constitution because it did not require supermajorities in certain instances but instead permitted Congress to enact laws based on majority rule. See George Mason, Objections to the Constitution of Government Formed by the Convention (1787), reprinted in 2 Herbert J. Storing , The Complete Anti-Federalist 9, 12 (1981) (criticizing fact that Constitution permits "only a Majority" to pass certain laws); A Letter of His Excellency Edmund Randolph Esquire, on the Federal Constitution (Oct. 10, 1787), reprinted in 2 Storing, supra, at 86, 97 (criticizing "submission of commerce to a mere majority in the legislature"). These statements, however, do not suggest that the Constitution prohibits the legislature from passing supermajority requirements. Instead, the statements merely indicate that these opponents understood that the Constitution permits a majority to pass legislation in this area and assumed that Congress would employ the usual majority voting rule.

fs20 [FN44]
cfl . INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983).

fs20 [FN45]
cfl . Chadha also contains some language that might be misinterpreted as suggesting that the Constitution mandates a majority vote to pass legislation. One example arises in a section of the opinion where the Court explains that, when the Constitution does not mandate bicameralism and presentment, it sometimes imposes a supermajority requirement. The Court gives as an example that "Art. II, s 2 requires that two-thirds of the Senators present concur in the Senate's consent to a treaty, rather than the simple majority required for passage of legislation." Id. at 956 n.21. This language should not be understood to suggest that the Constitution requires that legislation be passed by majority vote; rather, it should be interpreted as a shorthand reference to the fact that the Constitution does not require a supermajority to pass bills and that the usual legislative rule permits bills to be passed by a majority. Under our interpretation, the Court's argument that a supermajority would be needed instead of bicameralism and presentment makes perfect sense. Any other interpretation would be extraordinary because it would view the Court as taking a controversial position in a footnote on an issue that is not raised in the case and offering no analysis in support of its position. For another example of language that might similarly be misinterpreted to require a majority vote, see id. at 958.

row

fs20 [FN58]
cfl . See U.S. Const. art. I, s 8, cl. 18.

fs20 [FN59]
cfl . It might be argued that the term "proceedings" suggests "procedure." But if the Framers intended to narrow the rule in this way, they could have provided for "rules of procedure." The term "proceedings" is broader than the Open Letter's narrow use of "procedure." Of course, one might interpret "procedure" broadly to include all procedures or actions of a house, but then the three-fifths rule would be procedural in this sense.

[FN60]. INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 952, 955-56 n.21 (1983) (emphasis added). Of course, when the Court stated that the Rules of Proceedings Clause gave Congress the power to "bind itself," it meant simply that the rules were binding on members of Congress as opposed to individuals or institutions outside Congress. There is no suggestion that the Court meant to disturb the longstanding view that one Congress could not bind another.

cfl . United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 5 (1891).

cfl . The three-fifths rule, of course, applies to a particular subject -- increases in the rate of taxation -- and not to all legislation. However, nothing in the Rules of Proceedings Clause or judicial precedent suggests that Congress is

row
disabled from passing subject-specific rules of proceeding. A requirement that every rule of proceeding apply to all legislation would unaccountably prevent Congress from taking into account relevant differences among legislative subject matters. (For a discussion of the public policy reasons supporting the three-fifths rule, see infra notes 118-28 and accompanying text.) Surely, the House would not be acting unconstitutionally if it abolished a committee with jurisdiction over a particular subject matter and initiated legislation on that subject through the entire House. Yet such action would also create subject-specific rules of proceeding.

cfl . It might seem odd that the Open Letter argues for this doubtful distinction between procedure and substance because the distinction appears unnecessary to its argument. After all, even if the three-fifths rule is a rule of proceeding, it would still be unconstitutional if the Presentment Clause required majority votes. It would appear that the Open Letter needs this distinction to buttress its interpretation of the Presentment Clause.

cf1 . While the Open Letter describes the three-fifths rule as "unprecedented," it acknowledges that rules that it regards as constitutionally indistinguishable were enacted in 1985. See Open Letter, supra note 3, at 1539- 43.

fs20 [FN82]
cf1 . The Open Letter itself provides no less than four different formulations for assessing which rules issued under the Rules of Proceedings Clause should be deemed constitutional: rules that allow the House to "organize itself for informed and efficient debate and decision," id. at 1541; rules aimed at "efficient decisionmaking," id.; rules of "general procedure aimed at 1 inducing deliberative decisionmaking," id. at 1542; and rules not based on "substantive and selective judgments," id. at 1543. Some of the elements of these standards are themselves in substantial tension with one another. For example, rules that promote efficient decisionmaking tend to limit debate and frustrate attempts to encourage more fully informed discussion.

cf1 . It is a premise of judicial review that rules of constitutional decision be capable of fairly determinate and objective application. See The Federalist No. 78, at 469 (Alexander Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961) (distinguishing judicial from political behavior because it represents "judgment" according to rules rather than mere exercise of political "will").

cf1 . Open Letter, supra note 3, at 1542. Although we interpret the Open Letter to deny that the three-fifths rule can be temporarily waived or permanently repealed by a majority vote, we acknowledge some uncertainty on this point. The Open Letter may instead be asserting that the three-fifths rule can be temporarily waived only by a two-thirds vote, but can be permanently repealed by a majority. We hesitate to impute to the Open Letter the view that a majority of the House may repeal permanently the three-fifths rule, because it would be hard to reconcile this view with the Open Letter's claim that the three-fifths rule "erod[es]... our central constitutional commitments to majority rule and deliberative democracy." Id. at 1539. In any event, the ambiguity in the Open Letter's argument need not detain us too long because, under either interpretation, the Open Letter's position is mistaken.

cf1 . Id. at 314.

fs20 [FN97]
cf1 . See Rules , supra note 1, House Rule X(1)(m).

fs20 [FN98]
cf1 . The majority requirement for amending or repealing the rules is implicit in the House rules. The rules treat the requirement of a majority of those voting as a default position that applies in the absence of something expressly to the contrary in the rules. For example, the rules do not explicitly state that ordinary bills require a majority vote to pass. See id. House Rule XXI (bill passage); cf. id. House Rule X(1)(m) (giving Rules Committee jurisdiction over House rules); id. House Rule XI(4)(d) (requiring Rules Committee to issue reports of rule changes). Thus, the fact that the House rules do not specify a supermajority vote for an amendment to the rules indicates that a majority may do so.

The structure of the rules also indicates that they may be amended by majority vote. The House rules provide the Rules Committee with jurisdiction over the rules, see id. House Rule X(1)(m), as they provide other committees with jurisdiction over their substantive areas, see id. House Rule X(1)(a)- (s). The rules also clearly provide the Rules Committee with authority to recommend amendments to, or repeals of, the rules. See id. House Rule XI(4)(d). Just as bills that other legislative committees recommend must be passed by the entire House, so must amendments and repeals of rules that are recommended by the Rules Committee. For examples of amendments to the House rules that passed by less than a two-thirds vote, see 135 Cong. Rec. 8775 (1989) (59% of House passing amendment to rules as part of Government Ethics Reform Act of 1989); 123 Cong. Rec. 22,949 (1977) (57% of House passing amendment to House rules).

cf1 . It might be argued that, because the Rules Committee tends to be composed of a greater percentage of members of the majority party than are other committees, it will be more difficult to amend the three-fifths rule than other legislation, and this raises constitutional concerns. This argument, however, fails for two reasons. First, bills normally must be approved by the

row
cf1 committee that has jurisdiction and the Rules Committee. Floor consideration of bills usually requires that the Rules Committee pass a special rule. Thus, amending the three-fifths rule is easier in this respect than passing a bill. Second, even if one focuses only on the Rules Committee, it is no less representative of the entire House than other House committees. The membership of the committee on Ways and Means, for example, also comes disproportionately from the majority party. More importantly, committees are typically unrepresentative of the entire House in other ways. For example, committees with jurisdiction over agriculture will tend to have members from farm states, which may make it more difficult to pass or repeal certain types of bills. See supra notes 75-78 and accompanying text.

[FN101]

[FN102]
bkmkstart Document0zzSDUNumber64would be to assert that the committee system was unconstitutional. The Open Letter, however, does not make that argument. In any event, the Open Letter argues that a majority could not discharge the three-fifths rule from the Rules Committee because a discharge petition requires a majority of the entire House rather than a mere quorum. Open Letter, supra note 3, at 1542. This argument is disputable. A discharge petition may be signed over an extended period of time. Thus, it is not clear what the relevant quorum is for the discharge petition. Indeed, there is a strong argument that the relevant quorum comprises all members who were present in the House at any time during the entire period the discharge petition could have been signed. After all, a quorum is a measure of the number of members who could vote for a bill or rule, and, given a sufficiently long period, practically all members have the opportunity to sign the discharge petition. Under this analysis, the membership of the entire House would be nearly identical to the quorum for the discharge rule. The quorum for the discharge rule would diverge only to the extent there are members who are absent for extended periods, which should occur only rarely. Thus, a majority of the quorum would normally be able to discharge the three-fifths rule from the Rules Committee.

[FN108]

[FN109] time. We are not aware of any evidence that British or American law has permitted one legislature to bind itself. More importantly, Blackstone's argument that each legislature is equal does not mean merely that the 103d Congress is the equal of the 104th Congress, but also that the 103d Congress on one day is the equal to the 103d Congress on a subsequent day. The structural argument that permitting one house to bind another would in effect permit a house to amend the Constitution also supports our interpretation. The Senate has traditionally been understood to be a continuous legislative body because two-thirds of the Senate of every new Congress has not stood for reelection. Julian Eule, Temporal Limits on the Legislative Mandate: Entrenchment and Retroactivity, 1987 Am. B. Found. Res. J. 379, 408 (Senate has repeatedly endorsed view that it is a continuous body). Thus, under the traditional view of the Senate rules, if one legislature could bind itself, that would permit the Senate to bind itself permanently, which would effectively enable the Senate to amend the Constitution by passing unrepealable rules.

[FN111] (Takings Clause).

[FN112]
The executive branch, through the Office of Legal Counsel, has also held that one Congress cannot bind a subsequent one:
Clearly, Congress cannot by legislation prevent itself from enacting future legislation pursuant to whatever procedures it chooses to follow at that future time. A future Congress can always legislatively change what a previous Congress has done. In a legally enforceable sense, therefore, such future lawmaking would be regulated only by the requirements of the Constitution.OLC Opinion, supra note 52, at 45.

[FN113]
*bills and rules be passed by a majority is implicit rather than explicit. The factors that indicate that a majority of the House may amend the rules apply with equal force to the Senate. The Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, like the House Rules Committee, has jurisdiction over the rules of its chambers, see Senate Manual , supra note 32, Senate Rule XXV(1)(n), and its recommendations, like those of any Senate legislative committee when reported to the floor, are passed with a majority vote. Thus, the fact that there is no explicit supermajority requirement for amending the filibuster rule indicates that a majority may do so. See id. Senate Rule XXII (cloture rule). For an example of an amendment to the Senate rules that passed by less than a two-thirds or three-fifths vote, see 128 Cong. Rec. 30,640-45 (1982) (approximately 59% of Senators repealing Senate Rule XXXVI).

[FN114]

[FN115] all questions, this does not render the three-fifths rule unconstitutional. Rather, it simply means that certain other rules of the house that prevent a majority from obtaining a vote would be unconstitutional. See infra note 117.

[FN117] able to obtain a vote on all measures. Under this view, the committee system would be unconstitutional to the extent that it prevented a majority from voting on a measure. The committee system will not prevent the majority from voting on measures so long as a majority can waive or amend the rule preventing floor consideration of measures not reported by a committee. Thus, this position would prohibit the committee system from being used only to prevent votes on waivers or amendments to the rule barring floor consideration of measures not reported by a committee. For similar reasons, this position would prohibit the filibuster from being used only to prevent votes amending or waiving the rules governing the filibuster. One major problem for this position is that it would render part of the rules governing the committee system and the filibuster unconstitutional, even though such rules have venerable origins.

A second position is that each chamber should have broad discretion to establish rules that govern the scheduling of votes on measures. Under this view, each chamber's discretion must be broad enough to encompass at least the filibuster and the committee system. A problem for this view is that the chambers cannot have unlimited discretion to pass rules that regulate the opportunity to hold votes, because some versions of such rules function like extreme insulated repeal rules. For example, imagine that the Senate, after enacting the three-fifths rule, passed a second rule forbidding itself from ever taking a vote on whether to waive or amend the three-fifths rule or this second rule. While this rule appears unconstitutional, it may be a complex matter to fashion a principled distinction between it and the original filibuster (which was not subject to cloture).

[FN118]

[FN119] See Akhil Reed Amar, The Bill of Rights as a Constitution, 100 Yale L.J. 1131, 1147-52 (1991) (suggesting that original purpose of First Amendment was to permit popular majorities to bring pressure to bear on potentially unrepresentative national legislative majorities).

[FN120] See John O. McGinnis, The Partial Republican, 35 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 1751, 1760 (1994) (outlining manner in which Constitution is designed to protect individual rights).

Rev. 1479, 1507 (1994) (arguing that a member of Congress "concerned with maximizing her potential to be reelected to Congress will want, ideally, to try to tax the nation as a whole, while steering a disproportionate share of the proceeds back to her district").

[FN122] See E. Donald Elliott, Constitutional Conventions and the Deficit, 1985 Duke L.J. 1077, 1090s20 (noting that government spending programs provide concentrated benefits while spreading costs of programs over large and diffuse groups).

[FN124]

This theoretical argument is confirmed by political observation. Large deficits are now cited, particularly by the new Republican majority, as the primary reason to cut spending. See Kenneth J. Cooper, House Panel Softens Defense Measure, Wash. Post , Feb. 1, 1995, at A1 (noting that Republicans had to reduce their own planned defense expenditures because of pressure to reduce deficit). Indeed, supporters and critics of the Reagan tax cuts of the early 1980s have, respectively, celebrated and deplored the curtailment of government expenditures that the resulting deficits appeared to cause. See Daniel P. Moynihan, Sick of Stockman and LaRouche, New Republic , May 26, 1986, at 16 (observing that both Friedrich Hayek, who approved of the strategy, and Moynihan, who did not, believed that deficits were "deliberately created to force a great reduction in the size and activities of the federal government").

Although the three-fifths rule should therefore pressure Congress to reduce spending, we recognize that spending might be reduced more effectively if the rule applied not merely to increases in income tax rates, but also to increases in taxes generally and to the public debt. Indeed, a more direct way to limit spending would be to apply the three-fifths rule to spending increases. Unfortunately, these versions of the rule may not have been politically feasible.

[FN125] supermajority rules because they might confer undue power on certain groups). The effects of supermajority rules on special interests will depend on the circumstances. While supermajority rules in some areas could give special interests even greater power, this is not true of the three-fifths rule for income tax increases. It has been our argument, which public choice theory supports, that special interests have generally exercised their power to secure benefits that have required increases in government spending and taxes. Because the three-fifths rule makes it more difficult for special interests to increase spending and taxes, it impedes the power of special interests.

*Donald J. Boudreaux & A.C. Pritchard, Rewriting the Constitution: An Economic Analysis of the Constitutional Amendment Process, 62 Fordham L. Rev. 111, 123 (1993). The precommitment of the three-fifths rule is much less dramatic than a constitutional precommitment because it can be changed by a majoritarian legislative process rather than a constitutional amendment. Nevertheless, the codification of the precommitment in a legislative rule generates political pressures that militate against its abandonment. Party officials and the public can monitor a member's voting behavior with respect to a clear rule of the House prominently adopted as a formal party position more easily than they can monitor voting behavior with respect to quotidian legislation. Put bluntly, because of the clarity and prominence of the rule, a Republican member of Congress would pay a much higher political price in waiving it than in voting for a tax increase, particularly when such increases can come disguised in many forms -- for instance, as "revenue enhancers."

Even when supported by political considerations other than party discipline, rule-based precommitments in other areas have been kept and are believed to have had beneficial social effects. See, e.g., Harold Hongju Koh, The Fast Track and United States Trade Policy, 18 Brook. J. Int'l L. 143, 163-66 (1992) (discussing manner in which precommitment represented by fast track procedures in international trade has facilitated negotiation of trade treaties).

He wants our goals, how often we've met, when we will meet, etc., etc. He'll also want, I'm sure, a copy of the first report. Now, since this is a White House Task Force, and there are all kinds of issues related to that in terms of information released. Before we go down that path, I thought we should really have you all as well as maybe someone from the WH Counsel's office make some decisions about the level of information that should be released. I don't want to get in the middle of other issues (think the Energy Task Force, for example). Can you check on this?

Tevi,
The communications person here at the Corporation has talked to the guy from Youth Today, so now we know what he is asking for. He wants all kinds of information, among many other things, is a list of the members of the Task Force. The Honorable Tim Johnson
United States Senate
324 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510-4104

Dear Senator Johnson:

I am pleased to present the Department's views on S.50, the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003." The legislation would establish, by formula, the annual level of funding for all programs, activities, and functions (except for grants to states for the construction or acquisition of state homes for veterans) of the Veterans Health Administration (VHA). More specifically, funding for FY 2005 (the first fiscal year covered by the bill) would be automatically established at 120 percent of the amounts obligated by VHA (for all its activities, programs, and functions) for FY 2003. Thereafter, VHA funding would be automatically determined by a fixed formula, which is based on the number of enrollees each year multiplied by a fixed per capita amount. The per capita amount would be adjusted annually in accordance with increases in the Consumer Price Index.

VA does not support the concept of using a fixed formula to determine VHA funding. Although VA recognizes the appeal of such an approach, particularly in these times when the Department finds it is unable to provide care to all veterans who seek enrollment in the system, we believe the approach taken in this and other similar bills would prove to be unworkable and is inappropriate for funding a dynamic health care system, like VA's.

The provision of care evolves continually to reflect advances in state of the art technologies (including pharmaceuticals) and medical practices. It is very difficult to estimate both the costs and savings that may result from such changes. Moreover, patients' health status, demographics, and usage rates are each subject to distinct trends that are difficult to predict. The proposed formula in S. 50 would not take into account any changes in these and other important trends. As such, there is no certainty that the amount of funding dictated by the proposed formula would be adequate to meet the demands that will be placed on VA's health care system in the upcoming years.

Perhaps more importantly, use of an automatic funding mechanism would also diminish the valuable opportunity that members of the Congress and the Executive Branch now have to carry out their responsibility to identify and directly address the health care needs of veterans through the funding process. It might also tend to depress the Department's incentive to improve its operations and be more efficient.

Finally, VA does not believe this proposal would ensure open enrollment. The Department would still be required to make an annual enrollment decision, and that decision would directly affect the number of enrolled veterans and thus the amount of funding calculated under the formula. Indeed, references to "guaranteed funding" may give the public the false impression that this bill would give VA full funding to enroll all veterans and to furnish care for all their needs, which would not be the case.

We share the desire by many in Congress to ensure stable funding for the Department's health care system, and we look forward to working closely with the Congress to achieve that goal. However, for the many important reasons discussed, the approach taken in S. 50 is not the answer.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's programs.

Sincerely yours,

Anthony J. Principi

3.

The Honorable Tim Johnson

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 50

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 7, 2003

Mr. JOHNSON (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. REID, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BAUCUS) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003".

REV_00160832

SEC. 2. GUARANTEED ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR VETERANS HEALTH CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care

"(a) For each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make available to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs the amount determined under subsection (b) with respect to that fiscal year. Each such amount is available, without fiscal year limitation, for the programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration, as specified in subsection (c).

"(b)(1) The amount applicable to fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to 120 percent of the amount obligated by the Department during fiscal year 2003 for the purposes specified in subsection (c).

"(2) The amount applicable to any fiscal year after fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to the product of the following:

"(A) The sum of—

"(i) the number of veterans enrolled in the Department health care system under section 1705 of this title as of July 1 preceding the beginning of such fiscal year; and

"(ii) the number of persons eligible for health care under chapter 17 of this title who are not covered by clause (i) and who were provided hospital care or medical services under such chapter at any time during the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) The per capita baseline amount, as increased from time to time pursuant to paragraph (3)(B).

"(3)(A) For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the term 'per capita baseline amount' means the amount equal to—

"(i) the amount specified in paragraph (1), divided by

"(ii) the number of veterans enrolled in the Department health care system under section 1705 of this title as of September 30, 2003.

"(B) With respect to any fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide a percentage increase (rounded to the nearest dollar) in the per capita baseline amount equal to the percentage by which—

"(i) the Consumer Price Index (all Urban Consumers, United States city Average, Medical Care, Not Seasonally Adjusted), published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor for the 12-month period ending on the June 30 preceding the beginning of the fiscal year for which the increase is made, exceeds

"(ii) such Consumer Price Index for the 12-month period preceding the 12-month period described in clause (i).

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the purposes for which amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) shall be all programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration.

"(2) Amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) are not available for grants under subchapter III of chapter 81 of this title.".

(b) REPEAL OF CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATION REQUIREMENT.—Section 8104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 8104. Additional authorities and limitations

"(a) The Secretary may accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes of this subchapter.

"(b)(1) The Secretary may not obligate funds in an amount in excess of $500,000 from the Advance Planning Fund of the Department toward the design or development of a major medical facility project until—

"(A) the Secretary submits to the committees a report on the proposed obligation; and

"(B) a period of 30 days has passed after the date on which the report is received by the committees.

"(2) In this subsection, the term 'major medical facility project' means a project for the construction, alteration, or acquisition of a medical facility involving a total expenditure of more than $4,000,000, but such term does not include an acquisition by exchange.".

"117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 81 of such title is amended by striking the item relating to section 8104 and inserting the following new item:

"8104. Additional authorities and limitations.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c)(1) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by subsections (b) and (c)(2) shall take effect on October 1, 2004.

The Honorable Tim Johnson
United States Senate
324 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510-4104

Dear Senator Johnson:

I am pleased to present the Department's views on S.50, the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003." The legislation would establish, by formula, the annual level of funding for all programs, activities, and functions (except for grants to states for the construction or acquisition of state homes for veterans) of the Veterans Health Administration (VHA). More specifically, funding for FY 2005 (the first fiscal year covered by the bill) would be automatically established at 120 percent of the amounts obligated by VHA (for all its activities, programs, and functions) for FY 2003. Thereafter, VHA funding would be automatically determined by a fixed formula, which is based on the number of enrollees each year multiplied by a fixed per capita amount. The per capita amount would be adjusted annually in accordance with increases in the Consumer Price Index.

VA does not support the concept of using a fixed formula to determine VHA funding. Although VA recognizes the appeal of such an approach, particularly in these times when the Department finds it is unable to provide care to all veterans who seek enrollment in the system, we believe the approach taken in this and other similar bills would prove to be unworkable and is inappropriate for funding a dynamic health care system, like VA's.

The provision of care evolves continually to reflect advances in state of the art technologies (including pharmaceuticals) and medical practices. It is very difficult to estimate both the costs and savings that may result from such changes. Moreover, patients' health status, demographics, and usage rates are each subject to distinct trends that are difficult to predict. The proposed formula in S. 50 would not take into account any changes in these and other important trends. As such, there is no certainty that the amount of funding dictated by the proposed formula would be adequate to meet the demands that will be placed on VA's health care system in the upcoming years.

Perhaps more importantly, use of an automatic funding mechanism would also diminish the valuable opportunity that members of the Congress and the Executive Branch now have to carry out their responsibility to identify and directly address the health care needs of veterans through the funding process. It might also tend to depress the Department's incentive to improve its operations and be more efficient.

Finally, VA does not believe this proposal would ensure open enrollment. The Department would still be required to make an annual enrollment decision, and that decision would directly affect the number of enrolled veterans and thus the amount of funding calculated under the formula. Indeed, references to "guaranteed funding" may give the public the false impression that this bill would give VA full funding to enroll all veterans and to furnish care for all their needs, which would not be the case.

We share the desire by many in Congress to ensure stable funding for the Department's health care system, and we look forward to working closely with the Congress to achieve that goal. However, for the many important reasons discussed, the approach taken in S. 50 is not the answer.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's programs.

Sincerely yours,

Anthony J. Principi

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 50

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 7, 2003

Mr. JOHNSON (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. REID, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BAUCUS) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003".

REV_00160844

SEC. 2. GUARANTEED ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR VETERANS HEALTH CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care

"(a) For each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make available to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs the amount determined under subsection (b) with respect to that fiscal year. Each such amount is available, without fiscal year limitation, for the programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration, as specified in subsection (c).

"(b)(1) The amount applicable to fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to 120 percent of the amount obligated by the Department during fiscal year 2003 for the purposes specified in subsection (c).

"(2) The amount applicable to any fiscal year after fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to the product of the following:

"(A) The sum of—

"(i) the number of veterans enrolled in the Department health care system under section 1705 of this title as of July 1 preceding the beginning of such fiscal year; and

"(ii) the number of persons eligible for health care under chapter 17 of this title who are not covered by clause (i) and who were provided hospital care or medical services under such chapter at any time during the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) The per capita baseline amount, as increased from time to time pursuant to paragraph (3)(B).

"(3)(A) For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the term 'per capita baseline amount' means the amount equal to—

"(i) the amount specified in paragraph (1), divided by

"(B) With respect to any fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide a percentage increase (rounded to the nearest dollar) in the per capita baseline amount equal to the percentage by which—

"(i) the Consumer Price Index (all Urban Consumers, United States city Average, Medical Care, Not Seasonally Adjusted), published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor for the 12-month period ending on the June 30 pre-

ceding the beginning of the fiscal year for which the increase is made, exceeds

"(ii) such Consumer Price Index for the 12-month period preceding the 12-month period described in clause (i).

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the purposes for which amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) shall be all programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration.

"(2) Amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) are not available for grants under subchapter III of chapter 81 of this title.".

(b) REPEAL OF CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATION REQUIREMENT.—Section 8104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 8104. Additional authorities and limitations

"(a) The Secretary may accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes of this subchapter.

"(b)(1) The Secretary may not obligate funds in an amount in excess of $500,000 from the Advance Planning Fund of the Department toward the design or development of a major medical facility project until—

"(A) the Secretary submits to the committees a report on the proposed obligation; and

"(B) a period of 30 days has passed after the date on which the report is received by the committees.

"(2) In this subsection, the term 'major medical facility project' means a project for the construction, alteration, or acquisition of a medical facility involving a total expenditure of more than $4,000,000, but such term does not include an acquisition by exchange.".

"117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 81 of such title is amended by striking the item relating to section 8104 and inserting the following new item:

"8104. Additional authorities and limitations.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c)(1) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by subsections (b) and (c)(2) shall take effect on October 1, 2004.

Jim,

The House Small Business Committee has indicated they may try to bring the attached two SBDC bills to the House floor as soon as this week. Basically, these are the same bills (H.R. 2358 and H.R. 202) that were introduced last year. Hearings were held and you will recall that SBA sent letters expressing serious concerns with the bills. Could you circulate these bills for agency comments requesting a deadline of no later than noon Thursday, March 20. We are trying to pinpoint the exact day this may occur and I will let you know. Thanks in advance for your assistance.

The party wants to give Karl a pair of boots from Rocky Carrol (famous Houston boot maker). First of all can we? The value of the boots will be around $1000 (in my days in the Senate we were limited to gifts of $50 or less).

Secondly would he want them? And thirdly, if he can and if he does what is his boot size?

The Honorable Richard B. Cheney
President of the Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. President:

Enclosed is a draft bill which would establish a permanent, indefinite appropriation to allow the Department of the Treasury's (Treasury) Financial Management Service (FMS) to reimburse financial institutions directly for services they provide as depositaries and financial agents of the United States. An analysis of the draft bill is also included. This proposal is included in the President's Fiscal Year 2004 Budget, and the pertinent pages are enclosed.

Financial institutions provide various critical services to the United States in their capacity as depositaries and financial agents of the United States, as designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. These services are authorized under numerous statutes including, but not limited to, 12 U.S.C. §§ 90 and 265. The services include the accepting and processing of deposits of public monies, and essential services relating to the disbursement of, and accounting for, those monies. The services support programs which are vital to the government's critical infrastructure and the President's emphasis on expanding E-Government.

The draft bill would allow FMS to change the method of compensating financial institutions for performing services as depositaries and financial agents of the United States from depositing non-interest bearing amounts ("compensating balances") with those financial institutions. The draft bill would establish a permanent, indefinite appropriation, beginning in fiscal year 2004, to allow Treasury to reimburse financial institutions directly for their services as depositaries and financial agents of the United States. Additionally, the bill would permit Treasury to reimburse financial institutions for services rendered prior to fiscal year 2004, thus allowing for a transition to the revised compensation method.

Reimbursement of financial institutions for critical services they perform using a permanent, indefinite appropriation would provide needed permanency for paying financial institutions, improved management of the nation's cash, and greater transparency. Use of a permanent, indefinite appropriation would strengthen Treasury's cash and debt management responsibilities. This is because Treasury would no longer have to dramatically increase or decrease the level of compensating balances when interest rates rise or decline sharply or when the public debt outstanding reaches the statutory debt limit.

The concept of permanent, indefinite appropriations of this type is well established. In fiscal year 1998, a similar provision was enacted establishing a permanent, indefinite appropriation to permit FMS to reimburse Federal Reserve Banks directly for the services they provide as fiscal agents of the United States. (See Public Law 105-61, Title I, 111 Stat. 1276) Enactment of the attached draft bill would provide FMS with the same flexibility in managing the compensation of financial institutions providing services as financial agents of the United States.

It would be appreciated if you would lay the draft bill before the Senate. An identical draft bill has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. We respectfully urge its prompt consideration.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that this legislative proposal is in accord with the President's program.

Sincerely,

David D. Aufhauser

A BILL

To establish a permanent, indefinite appropriation to allow the Department of the Treasury to reimburse financial institutions directly for services they provide as depositaries and financial agents of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Beginning in fiscal year 2004 and thereafter, there are appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury such sums as may be necessary to reimburse financial institutions in their capacity as depositaries and financial agents of the United States for all services required or directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or his designee, to be performed by such financial institutions on behalf of the Treasury or other Federal agencies, including services rendered prior to fiscal year 2004.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTION DEPOSITARY AND FINANCIAL AGENT SERVICES REIMBURSEMENT FUND

Analysis

The draft legislation would establish a permanent, indefinite appropriation to reimburse financial institutions for the services they provide as depositaries and financial agents of the Federal government. The services are provided at the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, or his designee, and are authorized under numerous statutes, including, but not limited to, 12 U.S.C. §§ 90 and 265. The services include the acceptance and processing of deposits of public monies, as well as services essential to the disbursement of, and accounting for, public monies.

The overall budget effect of this legislative proposal is neutral because the reduction in the interest on the public debt resulting from reduced borrowing needs to fund the compensating balances will be at least equal to the amount that will be expended to pay the financial institutions for their services using a permanent, indefinite appropriation.

The services include the acceptance and processing of deposits of public monies, as well as services essential to the disbursement of, and accounting for, public monies.

The overall budget effect of this legislative proposal is neutral because the reduction in the interest on the public debt resulting from reduced borrowing needs to fund the compensating balances will be at least equal to the amount that will be expended to pay the financial institutions for their services using a permanent, indefinite appropriation.

JUDICIARY
Tort Reform Splits House Asbestos Fix
A rift over tort reform between two House members working to craft a bipartisan asbestos litigation bill could be a harbinger of things to come in the closely divided Senate, where negotiations on similar legislation continue to percolate.
Much of the recent focus regarding asbestos reform has been on the Senate, where Judiciary Committee leaders are attempting to forge a legislative consensus, and where Senate Budget Chairman Nickles already has introduced legislation.
However, legislation to address the asbestos litigation crisis gained its earliest traction in the House, where the Asbestos Alliance last year found its legislative champions in Reps. Chris Cannon, R-Utah, and Calvin Dooley, D-Calif.
The Alliance, which is being led by the National Association of Manufacturers, includes the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, a cross-section of America's leading insurance companies and industry groups, as well as some prominent plaintiffs' attorneys.
Cannon and Dooley advocated the Alliance's proposal for a bill that uses medical criteria to restrict the right of plaintiffs that are ill from asbestos exposure to sue, and, up until several weeks ago, the two were expected to introduce a unified, bipartisan bill in the House.
They also had agreed conceptually that the bill should prevent the consolidation of cases and the practice of court shopping -- both elements backed by the Alliance, NAM Executive Vice President Michael Baroody said in an interview Monday.
More recently, however, Cannon and Dooley have been pursuing separate legislative tracks over a split in opinion about "how far" to take the bill in the area of tort reform.
So while the two legislative offices are still working and communicating with one another, "right now, we're looking at a two-bill approach in the House," one source said.

While Dooley's preference is to keep the bill as clean as possible, sources said that Cannon, after consultation with GOP leadership both in the House and Senate, is exploring whether to include provisions dealing with such hot buttons as damage awards and the doctrine of joint and several liability.
Cannon chairs the House Judiciary Commercial and Administrative Subcommittee, which has been the venue for other tort reforms that have come through the committee. Tinkering with tort reforms is a perennial favorite of conservative Republicans and often used as a goad in their negotiations with Democrats on any issue that touches on legal reform.
Conventional wisdom is that it makes for a better bargaining position for the GOP, which knows Democrats are loathe to give on those areas so closely watched by their constituents in the trial bar.
However, the strategy sometimes has backfired, as in the case of the 107th Congress' debate over terrorism reinsurance, which pitted Senate Democrats against House and Senate Republicans over the GOP's ultimately unsuccessful and self-wounding drive to limit punitive damages for businesses.
In last year's informal conference on terrorism insurance, Democrats ultimately succeeded in blocking more Draconian tort reforms, primarily because the Bush administration reneged on an earlier pledge to stick by congressional Republicans in the fight.
However, House Majority Leader DeLay at the time was said to have secured a commitment that the president would champion certain tort reform legislation this year.
"We're staying in very close contact with Mr. Cannon -- but we made it very clear, too, that I and the Democrats I'm working with are going to be very reluctant to be support for a bill that encompass broader tort reform issues," Dooley said in an interview last week.
Dooley and Cannon also have not yet reached agreement on the specific language dealing with venue and mass-consolidated trials, which defendants believe facilitate a litigation system that awards the unimpaired at the expense of the truly ill.
Democrats in the past have sought to preserve the right of asbestos trial courts to consolidate cases for judicial economy.
"I think we're in the same ballpark," Dooley said. "We're fine with addressing venue and consolidation in a responsible manner, but we'd be reluctant to deal with anything to do with joint and several and any caps on fees and damages."
He added, "We're continuing to work with Chris Cannon in the hopes that we can introduce a bill together." But, "at this point, its also clear that if that bill goes beyond dealing with asbestos litigation reform, Democratic support will be significantly reduced."
House Judiciary Committee sources said Cannon has made no definitive decisions, but noted that he has submitted legislative language for review by legislative counsel.
The sort of proposal Cannon is envisioning -- which adopts medical criteria for claims, but also seeks to eliminate joint and several liability for asbestos claims and cap non-economic damages -- has been dubbed "Alliance-plus" by insiders.
Although those tort reforms are not formal goals of the Alliance, they are said to be priorities of its insurance contingent.

A spokeswoman for the American Insurance Association, a key Alliance member, declined to say whether the insurance industry is pushing for these reforms in the context of the asbestos litigation bill.
"Insurers are for as much reform in terms of certainty and finality -- and fixing the system as can be achieved this year," she said.
NAM's Baroody said he believes that the diverse legislative goals within the business community have been over-hyped.
"To the extent there is a disagreement -- I have always believed that it is less over policy than it is over the political question of how much is achievable," he said.
Baroody, also chairman of the Asbestos Alliance added, "Finally, that's going to be decided by people who have the votes."
Nevertheless, the breach between Cannon and Dooley signals that the asbestos debate will go beyond asbestos claims to a broader political fight over tort reform, which could foreshadow a partisan standoff in a House-Senate conference committee setting.
It is a debate that also is likely to surface in the Senate even before the bill goes to conference, sources said.
Nickles, who was the first lawmaker this year to unveil a bill on asbestos litigation reform, did include provisions to curb forum shopping and effectively bar consolidations.
However, Nickles, no fan of the trial bar, did not include any of the other more-loaded tort reforms -- something that critics dubious of the 'Alliance-plus' strategy said should be a red flag for proponents of the plan.
Other sources who favor the track Cannon is pursuing noted that labor and the trial bar rejected Nickles' bill, which was supposed to represent a compromise in their direction, causing the industry to rethink whether an even tougher approach is warranted.
Baroody insisted he is not concerned about the split between Cannon and Dooley, or about the looming legal reform debate.
"What it will demonstrate -- is that there is, on both sides of the aisle, a willingness to move on this issue this year," he said.
Moreover, the starting place for both bills will be "from the Alliance perspective of medical criteria and some litigation reform," Baroody asserted.
Chief executives for companies represented by the Alliance, the Asbestos Study Group and the AIA, were planning to meet privately with Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch this week in what could prove a pivotal gathering, sources said.
A more-inclusive asbestos "summit" hosted by the Senate Judiciary panel is in the works, but has not yet been scheduled. By Pamela Barnett

Hi Brett,

You responded to this LRM yesterday afternoon.

I bring this to your attention in case you had thought in either response you were responding to a different LRM, to which you would still need to respond. For instance, I know I still have not received a WHCO reply to another of my VA LRM's (RJP30), so I wonder if one of these responses was intended to answer that LRM.

Please advise,

The Honorable Tim Johnson
United States Senate
324 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510-4104

Dear Senator Johnson:

I am pleased to present the Department's views on S.50, the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003." The legislation would establish, by formula, the annual level of funding for all programs, activities, and functions (except for grants to states for the construction or acquisition of state homes for veterans) of the Veterans Health Administration (VHA). More specifically, funding for FY 2005 (the first fiscal year covered by the bill) would be automatically established at 120 percent of the amounts obligated by VHA (for all its activities, programs, and functions) for FY 2003. Thereafter, VHA funding would be automatically determined by a fixed formula, which is based on the number of enrollees each year multiplied by a fixed per capita amount. The per capita amount would be adjusted annually in accordance with increases in the Consumer Price Index.

VA does not support the concept of using a fixed formula to determine VHA funding. Although VA recognizes the appeal of such an approach, particularly in these times when the Department finds it is unable to provide care to all veterans who seek enrollment in the system, we believe the approach taken in this and other similar bills would prove to be unworkable and is inappropriate for funding a dynamic health care system, like VA's.

The provision of care evolves continually to reflect advances in state of the art technologies (including pharmaceuticals) and medical practices. It is very difficult to estimate both the costs and savings that may result from such changes. Moreover, patients' health status, demographics, and usage rates are each subject to distinct trends that are difficult to predict. The proposed formula in S. 50 would not take into account any changes in these and other important trends. As such, there is no certainty that the amount of funding dictated by the proposed formula would be adequate to meet the demands that will be placed on VA's health care system in the upcoming years.

Perhaps more importantly, use of an automatic funding mechanism would also diminish the valuable opportunity that members of the Congress and the Executive Branch now have to carry out their responsibility to identify and directly address the health care needs of veterans through the funding process. It might also tend to depress the Department's incentive to improve its operations and be more efficient.

Finally, VA does not believe this proposal would ensure open enrollment. The Department would still be required to make an annual enrollment decision, and that decision would directly affect the number of enrolled veterans and thus the amount of funding calculated under the formula. Indeed, references to "guaranteed funding" may give the public the false impression that this bill would give VA full funding to enroll all veterans and to furnish care for all their needs, which would not be the case.

We share the desire by many in Congress to ensure stable funding for the Department's health care system, and we look forward to working closely with the Congress to achieve that goal. However, for the many important reasons discussed, the approach taken in S. 50 is not the answer.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's programs.

Sincerely yours,

Anthony J. Principi

The Honorable Tim Johnson

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 50

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 7, 2003

Mr. JOHNSON (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. REID, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BAUCUS) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for a guaranteed adequate level of funding for veterans health care, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Health Care Funding Guarantee Act of 2003".

REV_00160976

SEC. 2. GUARANTEED ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR VETERANS HEALTH CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care

"(a) For each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make available to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs the amount determined under subsection (b) with respect to that fiscal year. Each such amount is available, without fiscal year limitation, for the programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration, as specified in subsection (c).

"(b)(1) The amount applicable to fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to 120 percent of the amount obligated by the Department during fiscal year 2003 for the purposes specified in subsection (c).

"(2) The amount applicable to any fiscal year after fiscal year 2005 under this subsection is the amount equal to the product of the following:

"(A) The sum of—

"(i) the number of veterans enrolled in the Department health care system under section 1705 of this title as of July 1 preceding the beginning of such fiscal year; and

"(ii) the number of persons eligible for health care under chapter 17 of this title who are not covered by clause (i) and who were provided hospital care or medical services under such chapter at any time during the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) The per capita baseline amount, as increased from time to time pursuant to paragraph (3)(B).

"(3)(A) For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the term 'per capita baseline amount' means the amount equal to—

"(i) the amount specified in paragraph (1), divided by

"(B) With respect to any fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide a percentage increase (rounded to the nearest dollar) in the per capita baseline amount equal to the percentage by which—

"(i) the Consumer Price Index (all Urban Consumers, United States city Average, Medical Care, Not Seasonally Adjusted), published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor for the 12-month period ending on the June 30 preceding the beginning of the fiscal year for which the increase is made, exceeds

"(ii) such Consumer Price Index for the 12-month period preceding the 12-month period described in clause (i).

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the purposes for which amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) shall be all programs, functions, and activities of the Veterans Health Administration.

"(2) Amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) are not available for grants under subchapter III of chapter 81 of this title.".

(b) REPEAL OF CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATION REQUIREMENT.—Section 8104 of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 8104. Additional authorities and limitations

"(a) The Secretary may accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes of this subchapter.

"(b)(1) The Secretary may not obligate funds in an amount in excess of $500,000 from the Advance Planning Fund of the Department toward the design or development of a major medical facility project until—

"(A) the Secretary submits to the committees a report on the proposed obligation; and

"(B) a period of 30 days has passed after the date on which the report is received by the committees.

"(2) In this subsection, the term 'major medical facility project' means a project for the construction, alteration, or acquisition of a medical facility involving a total expenditure of more than $4,000,000, but such term does not include an acquisition by exchange.".

"117. Guaranteed funding for veterans health care.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 81 of such title is amended by striking the item relating to section 8104 and inserting the following new item:

"8104. Additional authorities and limitations.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c)(1) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by subsections (b) and (c)(2) shall take effect on October 1, 2004.

Paul Colborn informed me about your decision to establish, in effect, a 30 year rule for the DOJ pardon records, in light of the FOIA lawsuit and the pending questions from the Pardon Attorney regarding their Federal Records Act schedule (which currently authorizes transfer to NARA after 25 years). We will work with DOJ to revise the schedule to 30 years to comport with your decision.

However, as we have discussed, I do not understand your decision with respect to federal records necessarily to effect how we process pardon records at pre-PRA Presidential Libraries, i.e., Ford and Carter, which are governed by a donor's deed of gift. Feel free to call if you would like to discuss. Thanks.

It is appropriate to let the Senator know our Administration position on this and other policy issues and to let him know that that we also have heard from outside groups who are concerned about it.

Ken:

Per our conversation, I have attached a brief background on the issue at the Pascagoula Shipyard. Any support you could give us with Senator Lott would be greatly appreciated.

If you, or the staff, have questions, you know how to reach me.

Northrup
Pascagoula Shipyard

The Issue:

AFL-CIO is putting pressure on Northrup, to put the Asbestos Workers back into the contracts at the Pascagoula Shipyard. This is a direct play by Sweeney to "hurt" the Carpenters. He sent Ron Alt of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades down to pressure Northrup to reinstate the AFL-CIO Metal Trades, and thus the Asbestos workers union, back into the contract at the Northrup yard. This would shift work that has been done by the Carpenters for over a decade, back to the Asbestos workers.

History:

In '91-92, the Navy had a subcontractor performing the asbestos-related work at the shipyard. The Navy wanted to audit the contractor's books. The contractor refused, and ultimately the Navy brought the work "inside," that is, it was performed directly by the shipyard workers rather than a subcontractor. The Asbestos Workers (formally known has the Heat, Frost, Insulators and Asbestos Workers had an agreement with the subcontractor, but when the work came inside it went to the Carpenters.

For over 10 years we've been doing the work for Northrup and by all accounts doing it well.

Now, John Sweeney is trying to medal in the contract in order to squeeze the Carpenters. He's pushing Northrup to "include" the Metal Trades Dept. of the AFL-CIO in the contract. If that happens, then the Asbestos Workers will "grieve" the assignment of work to the Carpenters, through AFL-CIO processes. A board, appointed by Sweeney, will award the work to the Asbestos Workers (total membership 16,000 - 18,000) and show the Building Trades, especially the smaller building trades unions, how he can squeeze the carpenters (total membership 550,000).

In the long run, Sweeney would squeeze the Carpenters in Pascagoula, but also begin building support among the large number of smaller-sized building trades unions to support Sweeney. There's a showdown coming in the Building Trades over whether they will defy Sweeney's attempt to force the Carpenters back into the AFL-CIO.

Follow Up:

Carpenters, through Rich Bond, are reaching out to Senator Lott. It would be great if the administration could support that effort. It would be helpful if they could make it clear to Senator Lott and his staff that from their first-hand experience we're a reasonable, trustworthy union to do business with and that UBC President Doug McCarron takes a very direct and business-like approach to his dealings.

We're asking Senator Lott to call Phil Dur, President of Northrup Pascagoula, phone: 228/935-8034 and/or Den Knectch, Director of Industrial Relations for Northrup Pascagoula, phone: 228/935-1493. Senator Lott knows Mr. Dur, and the shipyard is, of course, not only in his district but where his father worked.

We need as much support as we can muster encouraging Northrup not to let Sweeney subvert a process that has been working well for a decade. We hope Senator Lott will encourage top Northrup leadership to recognize Carpenters as a union they can do business with and encourage management to stick with the process that has served them well and not get caught up in this.

By Dana Milbank and Mike Allen
Washington Post Staff Writers
The Bush administration last night issued an order delaying the release of millions of government documents and giving the government new powers to reclassify information that is already in the public domain.
The order, rewriting a Clinton administration directive, allows the government to delay until the end of 2006 documents that otherwise would have been released April 17 under a program of automatic declassification after 25 years. The government now has more discretion to keep information classified indefinitely if it falls within a broad definition of national security.
A key component of the new order removes a Clinton administration provision, from a 1995 order, saying that information should not be classified if there was "significant doubt" that its release would compromise national security. The Bush order removes the "significant doubt" provision, meaning that there will be more of a presumption that material should be classified unless proven harmless.
In addition to the three-year delay in the release of information already scheduled for release under the 25-year automatic declassification, the order exempts various pieces of information from future automatic declassification, including: "information that would assist in the development or use of weapons of mass destruction"; information that would harm "national security emergency preparedness plans or reveal current vulnerabilites"; information "that would impair the applicaiton of state of the art technology within a U.S. weapon system"; and information that would "impair relations between the United States and a foreign government."
A senior administration officials who told reporters about the order in a conference call last night said the three-year postponment of automatic declassification was needed to complete a revew of records or sensitive information; documents will be released as they are cleared, the official said. "The agencies haven't been able to complete the review of everything, which is obviously necessary for national security," the official said. The order gives the government more authority to reclassify information that had been "inappropriately declassified."
The White House released the 10,000 word order at 6:40 p.m. last night, making it difficult for experts in disclosure and government secrets to review the order. Steven Aftergood, director of the Project on Government Secrecy at the Federation of American Scientists, said the order "will slow the declassification process" and "signals a greater affinity for secrecy."
Aftergood, who had seen a draft of the new order, said he was pleased that some of the Clinton order's mechanisms have been ratified by a Republican president. But Aftergood said he was disturbed by provisions that make it easier to reclassify documents that have been declassified, and by the presumptive secrecy for information provided in confidence by a foreign government. "It makes secrecy reflexive rather than intelligent," he said.
In a statement introducing the order, Bush described it as a balance between national security and open government. "Our nation's progress depends on the free flow of information," he wrote. "Nevertheless, throughout our history, the national defense has required that certain information be maintained in confidence in order to protect our citizens, our democratic institiutions, our homeland security, and our interactions with foreign nations."

The Bush administration has acted to expand executive power and secrecy in a large number of areas, particularly since the 2001 terrorist attacks. For example, it won new protections from congressional oversight in a lawsuit against Congress's General Accounting Office, and it has worked to tighten the release of historical presidential records and documents under the Freedom of Information Act. Bush also has won passage of legislation expanding government surveillance power.

Thomas Blanton, executive director of the private National Security Archive, said the order keeps key parts but of the Clinton reform but sends "one more signal from one high to the bureaucracy to slow down, stall, withhold, stonewall."

"This is an administration that was already tending toward greater secrecy before 9/11," he said. "Now we have a war, which is the ultimate leverage." Blanton said he does not believe the administration's motive is covering up. "This is a matter of theology for them," he said. "They really do believe in their hearts that we the people have made the White House too open and too accountable."

In 1995, President Bill Clinton signed an executive order that removed classified protections from millions of national security documents older than 25 years unless they fell into a narrow category of sensitive information needing continued protection. Before that, documents remained classified indefinitely.

The Bush official who briefed reporters said the order represents a "continuation of automatic declassification...with appropriate modifications." Some civil liberties experts had feared Bush would revoke the automatic declassification authority entirely, rather than modify it to allow more thorough reviews and easier reclassification of information.

As is tradition in this office, whenever an Associate Counsel leaves, everyone tries to ditch the bad parts of their portfolio on the incoming Counsel. We already have some trading going on, but we will entertain any other requests - subject to David Leitch's approval, of course.

Please let me know if you had any requests.

Subject: 3/21/03 Special Access Notice

Last week, we sent you an initial notice regarding a court order that was issued on March 5 for access to Clinton Presidential records, from a Presidential Commission on Holocaust Assets, concerning Nazi era related records on the "Hungarian Gold Train," which is in response to a lawsuit filed by Hungarians seeking compensation from the U.S. for taking the gold, et al. This case is being defended by Federal Programs, Civil Division, Main Justice.

We are about to send the 21 day notice to the Clinton representative for him to review the approximately 5000 pages that are potentially responsive to this request. When his review is complete, it will be your turn.

Our question for you, however, is whether you want to have the DOJ attorney review them first and/or for you, since she is familiar with the case? Or do you want to review for constitutional privilege before letting DOJ have access?

Please let us know how you want us to proceed. And add this to your list of the several pending questions I have before you that I would like to discuss. On this particular question, you can contact me or Jeff Landou on my staff, who's at 301-837-1899.

Thanks.

Hatch Lays Out Drafting Plan For Asbestos Litigation Bill
ÿÿÿÿÿSenate Judiciary Chairman Hatch said he plans to begin drafting an asbestos litigation reform bill April 10 and complete it over the Easter recess, with the aim of marking up a bill shortly after the recess, according to sources who met privately with Hatch Wednesday at the Capitol.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch confirmed in an interview afterwards that he would mark up a bill shortly upon the senators' return from recess.
ÿÿÿÿÿOne source at the meeting, which was comprised of numerous executives of asbestos litigation defendant companies and their insurers, said Hatch made it clear he intends to draft a bill "with or without" the participation of the industry players.
ÿÿÿÿÿEmerging from the meeting, Hatch appeared a bit drained, but upbeat.
ÿÿÿÿÿHe responded to a reporter's question about how he was feeling by saying, "I'm so busy."
ÿÿÿÿÿBut he concurred with other meeting participants that the gathering had proven productive. "We made a lot of progress," he said.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch is trying to forge consensus among the defendant companies -- which several lawmakers have acknowledged is a necessary precursor to crafting a bill that sweeps in numerous other interest groups with competing priorities.
ÿÿÿÿÿWednesday's gathering brought together executives for companies belonging to the Asbestos Alliance, the Asbestos Study Group and the American Insurance Association -- all of which share the broad goal for more "certainty" in the claims process, but have differing strategies for achieving it.
ÿÿÿÿÿSen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., who plans to help broker a deal, is expected to hold a "summit" next week, which will bring in labor, legal and consumer stakeholders, as well as other Senate Democrats, including Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.
ÿÿÿÿÿIn the interview, Hatch numbered Dodd among the Democrats that he said was going to "work with us" to reach an agreement.

ÿÿÿÿÿHe also named Sens. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Leahy, Thomas Carper of Delaware and Zell Miller of Georgia.
ÿÿÿÿÿMeeting up with Dodd in a hallway of the Capitol, Hatch added with a grin, "We're gonna work together."
ÿÿÿÿÿThe meeting attendee said Hatch had directed the industry representatives to "really get together" and report back to him in the next few days on their progress. "He really took control," the source added.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch also emphasized the need for any legislation to contain a "strong medical criteria" for the bill, a spokeswoman for the American Insurance Association said.
ÿÿÿÿÿAIA is a key member of the Asbestos Alliance, which is in favor of using medical criteria to screen litigants seeking to file asbestos-related claims in court.
ÿÿÿÿÿShe said that Hatch and other meeting participants appeared to agree that there is a need "to get as much finality and certainty as is achievable, this year." She added extra emphasis to "this year."
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch emphasized in the interview that bipartisan cooperation would be necessary for success -- something Leahy concurred with in an interview earlier Wednesday.
ÿÿÿÿÿIf that is present, a bill can pass. If it is not, "It won't," Leahy said bluntly. By Pamela Barnett ---------- Forwarded by Lisa J. Macecevic/OMB/EOP on 03/28/2003 05:50 PM ----------

We have one observation about S. 274, Class Action Fairness Act of 2003. The bill apparently governs both plaintiff and defendant class actions (since it defines "class action" and "plaintiff class action" as distinct terms), but at various points, it seems to contemplate only plaintiff class actions without so specifying. For example, by their terms, proposed new sections 1713, 1717(b), and 1717(e) of title 28 appear to apply to defendant class actions as well as plaintiff class actions. Is this the intent?

Although plaintiffs represented to Judge Hellerstein that they would endeavor to submit only one brief this time, we have received 3 briefs in opposition ot our motion to dismiss: a Joint Brief; a Supplemental Brief submitted on behalf of the Colaio plaintiffs; and a Supplemental Brief submitted on behalf of the Schneider plaintiffs. Attached is the Joint Brief and the Supplemental Colaio Brief. Notwithstanding our agreement among counsel to e-mail the briefs, the Schneider brief was faxed to us (they claimed a technical problem with their e-mail). Accordingly, I am sending a hard copy of that brief to Craig and Shannen by overnight delivery. I will also fax a copy of the Schneider Supplemental brief to anyone else who requests it.

Our papers were served and filed tonight without incident. I am sending hard copies of our final brief to Craig and Shannen (and, of course, to anyone else who requests a copy).

Have a great weekend.

CONCLUSION....65

June Colaio, Victor J. Colaio, Frank John Aquilino, Geraldine Davie, JoAnne Lovett, Nancy N. Pedicini, and Maria A. Waring, Plaintiffs in the action entitled Colaio et al. v. Feinberg et al., 03 Civ. 0558 (AKH), by their attorneys, Salans; Donna M. Smith and Jill I. Rosenblum, Plaintiffs in the action entitled Smith et ano. v. Ashcroft et al., No. 03 Civ. 1040 (AKH), by their attorneys, Kreindler & Kreindler; and Cheryl Schneider, Plaintiff in the action entitled Schneider v. Feinberg et al., 03 Civ. 1129 (AKH), by her attorneys, the Law Firm of Broder & Reiter (collectively, "Plaintiffs") respectfully submit this joint memorandum of law in opposition to the FRCP Rule 12(c) motion to dismiss of the Defendants Kenneth R. Feinberg, Special Master of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 (the "Fund"), John Ashcroft, Attorney General of the United States, and the United States Department of Justice (collectively, "Defendants").[1]

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants have conceded, as they must, that the vast majority of "eligible individuals" under Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, 49 U.S.C. § 40104 (the "Act"), have neither filed claims with the Fund nor filed private tort lawsuits in this Court. The fact that so many September 11 victims have remained on the sidelines with the September 10, 2003 New York wrongful death statute of limitations and the December 21, 2003 Fund deadline looming is striking evidence of the widespread uncertainty and disenchantment with certain aspects of the Defendants' administration of the Fund. September 11 victims are today in a legal no man's land while wanting to initiate the process of receiving compensation for their economic and non-economic losses. The [1] Plaintiffs in the aforementioned Colaio action (the "Colaio Plaintiffs") are separately serving and filing a supplemental memorandum of law, which addresses those portions of Defendants' motion addressed to certain allegations found solely in the Amended Class Action Complaint in the Colaio action.

Defendants' response to the victims is a legal diatribe parading as a motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' complaints.

Defendants' motion has a number of recurring themes upon which the Government's and the Special Master's positions are premised. Each such theme is legally unsupportable and demonstrably false, based on the record already compiled before this Court. Defendants seem to be troubled by neither the law nor the facts, since their view of the Act and the Fund stems from the predicate rationale that it is the Government's money, and the Government and the Special Master alone will decide who gets what and why. Because of (i) the plain and unambiguous language of the statute; (ii) the clearly expressed intent of Congress; and (iii) the well-pleaded allegations of the complaints, the Defendants' motion must be denied, and this Court should not be swayed by their misplaced themes.

First, the Defendants engage in a transparent "class warfare" approach which seeks to pit the Plaintiffs against lower-income claimants; the Defendants literally argue that the relief sought in the complaints would somehow be at the expense of deserving lower-income Fund claimants. Not only is the Defendants' attempt to paint the Plaintiffs as greedy and seeking some manner of undeserved windfall from the public coffers shameful, but it is literally not true since the Plaintiffs in the Colaio action span the entire gamut of income levels, marital status, and number of dependents in terms of the decedents represented by those seven Plaintiffs – and the broad-based class on whose behalf they seek to sue under FRCP Rule 23. More fundamentally, there is nothing in the three complaints or in the positions advocated by the Plaintiffs before this Court that could fairly be construed as limiting or coming at the expense of Fund compensation for claimants whose decedents had lower incomes.[2]

Second, and equally distorting, is the Defendants' effort to portray the Plaintiffs' position as mandating a "mechanistic" approach that would require that "the Fund must provide the maximum award theoretically possible in a state law tort suit . . ." (Def. Mem. at 5.) Again, there is nothing in the three complaints or in the positions advocated by the Plaintiffs seeking to require that the Special Master award individual compensation on the precise basis that is "theoretically possible" in a private civil suit. The Plaintiffs do not take the view that the Fund is some manner of Lotto jackpot which they have the right to win. The Plaintiffs and their attorneys have made it crystal clear that they believe in the important work of the Fund, and that the time has come for the process envisioned in the Act to unfold without pre-rigged rules, regulations and methodologies that are contrary to the letter and spirit of the Act, and which would ordain the outcome of the process for many claimants even before they had the opportunity to present proof of "economic loss" or otherwise advocate their "individual circumstances."

Third, another leitmotif of the motion to dismiss is that the plain and simple statutory language adopted by Congress somehow, and by some convoluted reasoning, does not really mean what it says. Defendants doggedly persist in maintaining that what was really intended by Congress was something separate and apart from what the Act actually says. However, as is self-evident, Congress was entirely capable of drafting and adopting a statute that contained provisions of the sort advanced by the Defendants in the challenged rules and regulations, and it did not do so. Moreover, it is abundantly clear that the key issues in dispute were in fact vetted in the halls of Congress, and the legislative branch turned aside several efforts to impose the preordained limitations that the Special Master seeks to visit on the shoulders of the victims of September 11.

[2] Indeed, the relief sought in the Colaio action would, if granted, virtually guarantee that most lower-income Fund claimants would receive more from the Fund than currently projected in the Special Master's presumptive award charts.

Fourth, and remarkably, the Defendants ignore in wholesale fashion the applicable law and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to their own Rule 12(c) motion to dismiss. This tactic is similar to the Defendants' answers, which were, and are, a studied exercise in circumlocution and evasiveness. Ignoring hornbook law, the Defendants simply pretend that the well-pleaded allegations of the complaints, which must be deemed true, do not exist and need not be addressed. In fact, where it suits their convenience, Defendants seek to rebut some of the Plaintiffs' allegations, and their brief reads like proposed findings of fact following full discovery, rather than as a motion to dismiss.

In order to accomplish their sleight-of-hand, the Defendants seize upon, literally, two words in the Act ("individual circumstances") while largely ignoring the rest of the statute and the Special Master's clear obligation to calculate "the extent of the harm, including any economic and noneconomic loss . . . " Act § 405(b)(1)(B). Although Plaintiffs have alleged in each of their complaints that the Special Master has refused to abide by his statutory obligation to "review" and "determine" the harm to the claimant,[3] the Defendants blithely ignore Congress' straightforward

[3] And, there is abundant and irrefutable evidence to this effect that has been submitted by Plaintiffs in support of their simultaneous summary judgment motions.

directive and seek to replace it with the alleged ability of the Special Master to implement an entirely subjective "needs" test for a substantial percentage of the eligible Fund claimants under the Act.

It is, by this point, equally clear that this "needs" test is little more than a euphemism by which to claim unbridled discretion and thus cloud the imposition of a de facto cap on Fund awards for so-called "high earners" – while portraying himself as the champion of the needy. Defendants are simply wrong. Congress did not instruct the Special Master to employ a "needs" test, and it most certainly rejected any and all "caps"; it did require the Special Master to calculate the harm to the claimant and "the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled." To contend, as Defendants do, that the last few words of Section 405(b)(B)(ii) ("individual circumstances of the claimant") trump virtually everything that precedes them is to engage in sophistry.

Defendants similarly seek to read the Act's reference to state law out of the statute. Defendants first construe the provision that economic loss is to be calculated "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law" (Act § 402(5)) as simply defining the general categories of compensation to those state law would recognize. This is ridiculous since the statutory definition itself contains a long parenthetical that lists the general categories quite thoroughly. Defendants simultaneously argue, however, that they cannot be expected to consider state law at all because it would be too burdensome.[4] Defendants' argument thus nullifies Congress' plainly stated intent that state law be the touchstone of economic loss calculations. That intent is undeniable when one compares the statutory definitions of "economic loss" (which explicitly refers to state law) to "noneconomic loss" (which does not).

[4] Defendants assert that if Plaintiffs' challenges are sustained, the ruling will vastly multiply the Special Master's tasks, creating an intolerable burden that will inordinately prolong the Fund process, depriving claimants of expeditious awards. (Defendants' Memorandum of Law in Support of Their Motion to Dismiss ("Def. Mem.") at 5.) No support is given for this argument, and it is no basis for dismissal under Rule 12(c).

Lastly, the Defendants make much of their argument that the Fund is voluntary, and that there is supposedly a "choice" to be made if claimants desire to maximize their awards. Apart from the fact that, as evidence adduced on Plaintiffs' own motions makes clear, the "choice" is largely illusory, Defendants again ignore that the Act itself provided the limitations that would exist in seeking compensation from the Fund – such as deduction of collateral offsets, the inability to obtain punitive damages, the lack of judicial review, and (as subsequently imposed by the Special Master's regulations) the substantial limitation on recoveries for non-economic losses.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Plaintiffs have described the Act and the promulgation of rules, regulations and methodologies pursuant to the Act in detail in their memoranda of law in support of their simultaneous motions for summary judgment. (See Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for Summary Judgment ("Colaio Summ. J. Mem.") at 7-28; Plaintiffs' Joint Memorandum of Law in Support of Rule 56 Motions for Summary Judgment ("Joint Summ. J. Mem.") at 3-7.) In the interest of brevity, the Plaintiffs respectfully refer the Court to the statements of fact contained in those previously submitted memoranda of law and incorporate the same herein by reference.

Although Defendants have denominated their motion a "motion to dismiss" pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, they devote precious little attention to Plaintiffs' complaints in these actions, the allegations of which must, of course, be deemed true for purposes of Defendants' motion. It is, in fact, the three complaints that necessarily frame the factual background of this motion. The complaints in these three actions, while all challenging certain of the Defendants' rules, regulations and methodologies in implementing the Act, differ in certain material respects. As detailed below, the individual Plaintiffs themselves have different socioeconomic backgrounds, and some Plaintiffs are suing solely on behalf of themselves, while others are suing on behalf of a putative class. Although all three complaints allege and challenge the Special Master's imposition of a "needs" test and a de facto cap on awards to claimants, and the absence of any meaningful administrative guidance as to awards for so-called "high earners," two of the complaints challenge other aspects of the charts, methodologies and criteria used by the Defendants to calculate Fund awards.

The Colaio Complaint

On January 25, 2003, the Colaio Plaintiffs commenced the first action by filing their initial Class Action Complaint. On February 21, 2003, the Colaio Plaintiffs, in accordance with the Court's February 7, 2003 Scheduling Order, filed their Amended Class Action Complaint (the "Colaio Complaint"). The Colaio Complaint sets forth two causes of action: first, that the Defendants' promulgation and adoption of certain rules, regulations and methodologies governing the Special Master's administration of the Fund violate the terms of the Act; and second, that the same rules, regulations and methodologies and administration of the Fund have been arbitrary and capricious, entitling Plaintiffs to relief under the Administrative Procedure Act. (Colaio Complaint ¶¶ 78-88.)

The Colaio Plaintiffs span a broad range of socioeconomic backgrounds. (See id., ¶¶ 11-17.) Two were married to victims who perished at the World Trade Center on September 11th, while five were parents of single victims. Three of the Plaintiffs' decedents earned in excess of $231,000 annually, but the remaining four Colaio Plaintiffs are personal representatives of decedents who earned less than, and in some instances considerably less than, $100,000.[5]

As detailed in the Colaio Complaint, Plaintiffs seek to represent a class that consists of virtually all "eligible individuals" under the Act who are the personal representatives of decedents who died at the World Trade Center site on September 11. Excluded from the defined class are those victims who were injured but survived at the New York City site and those who were injured or killed at the sites in Arlington, Virginia and Shanksville, Pennsylvania. (Id., ¶¶ 21, 28.)

After describing the Act and the relevant regulatory background, the Colaio Complaint identifies four areas in which the Defendants' rules, regulations, methodologies and administration of the Fund are unlawful: 1) undercompensating for economic loss by basing calculations on after-tax earnings; 2) undercompensating for economic loss for single decedents by application of arbitrary and unreasonable consumption rates; 3) undercompensating for economic loss by using a base level earnings formula that does not reflect economic or financial reality; and 4) failing to develop methodologies and schedules for economic loss compensation for decedents whose average earnings exceeded the United States 2000 98th percentile for individual income, and imposing a de facto, arbitrary, unreasonable cap on individual awards in this category by adopting an unauthorized and undefined "needs" test. (Id., ¶¶ 52-77.)

Contrary to the impression left by Defendants' characterization of the facts, the Colaio Complaint challenges not only regulations formally promulgated pursuant to notice and comment

rulemaking but also informal rules, criteria, and methodologies adopted and implemented by the Special Master. The Colaio Plaintiffs' first area of challenge is to the Special Master's methodology for calculating awards of economic losses on the basis of after-tax, instead of pre-tax, compensation. (See id., ¶¶ 53-56.) As the Colaio Plaintiffs have alleged, this methodology appears not in the Regulations,[6] but rather in the Special Master's Explanation of Process, published on the Fund website. (Id., ¶ 53.) As further alleged by the Colaio Plaintiffs, the Special Master's use of after-tax earnings to compute awards conflicts with New York law and results in lower awards to virtually all Fund claimants. (Id., ¶¶ 54-55.)

The Colaio Plaintiffs next challenge the Special Master's methodology for computing the consumption rate to be applied to awards to survivors of single victims. (See id., ¶¶ 57-60.) The Colaio Plaintiffs have alleged that the Special Master's published methodology (which does not appear in the Regulations) "reveals a shocking disparity between the consumption rate of a single decedent versus a decedent who was married." (Id., ¶ 57.) This disparity finds no support under state law and results in markedly lower awards to families of single victims. (Id., ¶¶ 58-59.)

The Colaio Complaint further alleges that the Special Master has adopted several methodologies that reduce awards to claimants by disregarding victims' actual earnings histories. The Colaio Plaintiffs allege that the Regulations and the Special Master's informal pronouncements adopt a presumptive policy of using a three-year average of 1998-2000 income data, resulting in lower awards than if data for 1999 to 2000, or 2001 data, were used. (Id., ¶¶ 61-63.) The Colaio Plaintiffs also allege that, in computing awards, the Special Master has adopted a policy of relying on 2000 census data for earnings growth rate data, even when an individual victim's own earnings' history data is available. (Id., ¶ 64.) The Colaio Plaintiffs have also alleged that, in making awards, the Special Master has refused to consider a victim's compensation other than salary and bonus. (Id., ¶ 65.)

The final area in which the Colaio Plaintiffs challenge the Special Master's actions is his failure to develop presumed loss charts for victims whose income exceeded the 98th percentile of wage earners and his imposition of a de facto cap on awards. (See id., ¶¶ 67-77.) The Colaio Complaint includes allegations that the Regulations impose an unlawful burden of proving "extraordinary circumstances" to obtain an award in excess of that for the so-called "high earners" (id., ¶ 67), and that the Special Master has interposed a "needs" test that finds no support in the statute (id., ¶¶ 68, 69, 73-76.) The Colaio Plaintiffs have also alleged that the Special Master has unfairly refused to develop any criteria or guidelines governing awards to victims above the 98th percentile or delineating the operation of the Special Master's novel "needs" test. (Id., ¶¶ 70-72.) The Colaio Plaintiffs challenge not only the Regulations' 98th percentile cut-off, but also the Special Master's de facto cap on awards. (Id., ¶ 70.) Specifically, the Colaio Plaintiffs have alleged that the Special Master's de facto cap is in the range of $5 million to $7 million, regardless of the actual economic harm suffered by the claimant. (Id., ¶ 71.) As Plaintiffs have alleged, the Special Master's cap flaunts the will of Congress, which expressly considered and rejected a cap on awards. (Id., ¶ 74.)

The Colaio Complaint seeks a judgment declaring the four challenged rules, regulations, and methodologies unlawful, and an injunction rescinding the same and requiring Defendants to adopt substitutes that are consistent with the Act. (Id. at pp. 31-32.) The Colaio Complaint also requests certain relief intended to preserve the rights of the class members during the pendency of the litigation, including a declaration that Fund awards rendered prior to the final resolution of the case be deemed interim and subject to possible revision. (Id. at p. 32.) Again, contrary to the mischaracterization advanced by Defendants, the Colaio Complaint does not suggest, let alone mandate, that all prior Fund awards be revised.

The Smith Complaint

Notwithstanding Defendants' sweeping and erroneous assertions that the Special Master has authority to "limit" claimants' awards to amounts less than their proven economic loss, the Smith action ("Smith Complaint") alleges that the following facts are not in dispute:

Plaintiff Donna M. Smith resides in New York and is the widow of James Gregory Smith who was killed in the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001. Plaintiff Jill I. Rosenblum resides in New York and is the widow of Andrew I. Rosenblum who was killed in the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001. (Smith Complaint ¶¶ 1-2.)

Plaintiffs are entitled to receive compensation from the Fund pursuant to the Act for the "economic loss" they and their children have suffered "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable [New York] law." (Act § 402(5); Smith Complaint ¶¶ 24, 26.)

James Gregory Smith was 44 years old when he was killed; Andrew I. Rosenblum was 45 years old when he was killed. Each of their annual earnings for each of the three years preceding their deaths substantially exceeded $231,000 per year; each was reasonably likely to receive substantial increases in annual earnings in the future; and each had a work expectancy that would extend well beyond the age of 62. (Smith Complaint ¶¶ 25, 27.)

Under Act § 402(5), Congress defined the "economic loss" recoverable by eligible Fund claimants to mean "any pecuniary loss . . . to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law." (Id., ¶ 13.)

After the enactment of the Act, the Attorney General and Special Master promulgated the Regulations by which the Special Master will determine the amount of individual claimants' Fund awards, including the amount of Plaintiffs' Fund awards. (Id., ¶¶ 18, 19.)

According to the Regulations, the Special Master has concluded that he has the discretion not to award Plaintiffs their full "economic loss . . . to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable [New York] law." (Id., ¶¶ 35-42.)

The Special Master has concluded that he has the discretion to limit the amount of economic loss recoverable by Fund claimants to such an amount as he decides is appropriate in light of the financial needs and financial circumstances of Fund claimants such as Plaintiffs. (Id., ¶¶ 35-42.)

The Special Master will limit and cap the amount of economic damages he awards Plaintiffs based on what the Special Master determines Plaintiffs need in light of their resources. (Id., ¶¶ 35-42.)

In computing the economic loss of individual Fund claimants, the Special Master will determine the lost future income stream of a decedent based upon the decedent's net after-tax income rather than upon the decedent's gross pre-tax income. (Id., ¶¶ 45-46.)

The Schneider Complaint

The Schneider complaint is an action for a declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 et seq., and for further necessary and proper relief, arising from Defendants' stated intention to interpret and apply the Act in a manner inconsistent with the Act's express terms and purposes, creating substantial doubt that Plaintiff's statutory right to receive all compensation to which she is entitled from the Fund will be recognized and vindicated by Defendants. Plaintiff Schneider specifically alleges that Defendant Special Master Kenneth R. Feinberg has clearly indicated that he will not award Plaintiff the amount of her net economic losses, even as determined, though substantially understated, by his own retained firm of accountants, PriceWaterhouse, indicating that such computations, as well as those of Plaintiff's retained economist, are "moot" or "irrelevant", because, in the Special Master's words, "the numbers are far north of anything that I will pay." Such statements by the Special Master and others, confirm his intention to disregard and effectively nullify the express terms of the Act in determining economic loss and awarding compensation under the Act. Plaintiff Schneider specifically alleges that Defendants have imposed a de facto cap on compensation awards from the Fund.

Plaintiff Cheryl Schneider is the widow and Executrix of the Estate of Ian Schneider, and brings the action in such capacity, as well as individually and on behalf of the next of kin, their three minor children, Rachel, Jacob and Sophie, whose ages on September 11, 2001 were 10, 9 and 7 respectively. Ian Schneider was killed on September 11, 2001 when Tower One of the World Trade Center collapsed. Ian Schneider was employed at Cantor Fitzgerald L.P., where he had spent his entire business career of some 23 years, during which he had risen to the position of Senior Managing Director of the Money Market Instruments Division, and a Partner in Cantor Fitzgerald, L.P. Decedent was 45 years old, in excellent health and had been married to Cheryl Schneider, then age 44, for over 16 years.

The Schneider Complaint further alleges that pursuant to the express invitation of the Special Master, and pursuant to procedures established by him, a detailed preliminary submission of facts and law was made to the Special Master on or about October 9, 2002, including the Report of an expert economist, Michael Keane, Ph.D., and three volumes of exhibits including tax returns and other pertinent financial data and that the economic loss to the Schneider family computed by said economist in strict compliance with the improperly restrictive methodology set out in the Rules, was in the range of $28,553,513 (utilizing 1998-2000 average annual earnings computed to retirement age 62) to $40,092,833 (utilizing 1998-2000 average annual earnings computed to retirement age 70).

The Schneider Complaint further alleges that the Special Master's own retained firm of economists, PriceWaterhouse LLC, computed plaintiff's net economic loss (after collateral source deductions) to be $14.5-15 million – a fact unique to the Schneider case, and of critical importance in demonstrating that the Special Master intends to nullify crucial portions of the Act.[7] The complaint further alleges that the Special Master has stated that he will not award Plaintiff Schneider her economic losses, even as computed by his own experts, and has characterized his own expert's computations as "moot" and "irrelevant," because the numbers are "far north of anything I will pay." The Special Master has stated that he will award Plaintiff Schneider no more than $4.5-6 million, a mere fraction of her actual, proven, economic losses, despite raising no issue as to the validity of his own expert's computations, or even those of plaintiff's economist, and despite acknowledging that the "individual circumstances of the claimant" were that "no family circumstances were more worthy than this one," that "there are only a handful of cases at Cantor Fitzgerald like this" and "that whatever I do, this case will be at the top."

Based on the Special Master's award of $4.5-6 million, the portion of that amount computed for economic loss, after deducting $650,000 for non-economic loss ($250,000 for pain and suffering of the decedent, $100,000 for Mrs. Schneider and $100,000 for each of the children), is $3.85 million to $5.35 million. Under either the Plaintiff or the Defendant expert's determinations, the economic loss to the claimant and her 3 children is multiples of the $3.85 - 5.35 million that the Special Master intends to compensate claimant for her economic loss.

Since the minimum economic loss in this case as calculated by PriceWaterhouse, the Defendants' own expert, is $14-$15 million net, after deducting collateral sources, it is perfectly clear that the Special Master's award is in no way related to a determination of economic loss. At $10 million less than the $14-$15 million, it clearly demonstrates a cap or, equally bad, an arbitrary and capricious number out of the blue.

As Plaintiff Schneider has alleged, there is no way -- by any sleight of hand -- with the decedent's $2.5 million average annual earnings under the Special Master's own 3 year averaging formula (1998, 1999 and 2000), that a $3.85 to $5.35 million economic award can be explained. The only explanation for it is what the Special Master himself has stated, that the economic loss computed by the plaintiff's expert and by the Special Master's own expert, were "moot and irrelevant" to him (Affidavit of Cheryl Schneider dated February 21, 2003 ("Schneider Aff."), at ¶ 12) and that "the numbers are far north of anything that I will pay" (Schneider Complaint, at ¶ 65; Schneider Aff., at ¶ 12.)

The Schneider complaint further alleges that the foregoing facts, and others pleaded, indicate that the Special Master intends to nullify the "Victim Compensation" portions of the Act. To fully appreciate that, we bring together here those protions of the Act in pertinent part on a single page. We do this so that the simple and clear meaning of the Act is not missed, as follows:

TITLE IV – VICTIM COMPENSATION

402(5) ECONOMIC LOSS.-

> The term "economic loss" means any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State Law.

405(b) REVIEW AND DETERMINATION.-

(1) REVIEW.-The Special Master shall review a claim submitted under subsection (a) and determine-

> (B) with respect to a claimant determined to be an eligible individual -
>
> (i) the extent of the harm to the claimant, including any economic and noneconomic losses; and
> (ii) the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled based on the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

Plaintiff Schneider asks the Court to declare her rights, and those of all other eligible claimants to the Fund to be afforded "compensation" in accordance with the Act's express terms, that the de facto cap upon awards imposed by the Special Master be declared invalid, and for other similar relief.

As the foregoing descriptions make clear, contrary to Defendants' suggestion, the Plaintiffs' complaints do not simply challenge four regulations promulgated pursuant to notice-and-comment rulemaking. (See Def. Mem. at 27.) Although the regulations are implicated in the Plaintiffs' complaints, the complaints are also directed at a host of informal charts, methodologies and policy pronouncements made by the Special Master, which are not found in the regulations. (See, e.g., Pl. Fact. Rec., Vol. 1, Final Rule, Statement by Special Master, JC 0091 ("[T]he Special Master's presumed award charts are not part of the Departmen[t] [of Justice's] rulemaking . . . .").)

When consideration is given to the well-pleaded allegations, it is clear beyond peradventure that the Plaintiffs have pleaded sustainable and meritorious claims, and that accordingly, Defendants' motion must be denied.

ARGUMENT

THE APPLICABLE LEGAL STANDARDS

A court deciding a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure must accept as true the allegations of the party opposing the motion. Rivera v. Heyman, 157 F.3d 101, 103 (2d Cir. 1998). The court must view the facts, as alleged in the pleadings, in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and must draw all inferences in favor of that party. Id. at 103. Allegations in the pleadings "should be construed liberally in favor of the plaintiffs." Ad-Hoc Comm. of Baruch Black & Hispanic Alumni Ass'n v. Bernard M. Baruch College, 835 F.2d 980, 982 (2d Cir. 1987).

Indeed, the same standards that are employed under Rule 12(b)(6) for a motion to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim are applicable here. See Sheppard v. Beerman, 18 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 1994). Under these standards, as set forth by the United States Supreme Court, such a motion should not be granted "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of [its] claim which would entitle [plaintiff] to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957); Rivera, 157 F.3d at 103. Throughout their brief, Defendants attempt to ignore the Rule 12 standard, arguing their version of the facts and disputing the allegations of Plaintiffs' complaints. (See, e.g., Def. Mem. at 6 ("[C]ontrary to plaintiffs' repeated claims, the Special Master has not imposed any "cap" on awards of compensation."); id. at 49 (accusing Plaintiffs of "mischaracteriz[ing]" the Special Master's "extraordinary circumstances" test).) Defendants cannot prevail on a motion to dismiss by arguing that Plaintiffs' factual allegations are untrue.

Furthermore, in light of the allegations of the complaints in these cases, the Defendants cannot invoke the deferential standard of review articulated in Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837 (1984). As an initial matter, even under Chevron, it is clear that no deference applies when a court reviews agency conduct to determine whether the regulator has violated the enabling legislation. Id. at 842-43; see also Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208 (1988); Atlantic City Elec. Co. v. FERC, 295 F.3d 1, 8 (D.C. Cir. 2002). Accordingly, the Court cannot simply defer to the Defendants' interpretation of the statute when evaluating Plaintiffs' allegations that Defendants' rules, regulations, criteria and methodologies violate the Act's clear terms.

As well, a court may defer to a regulator's interpretation of a statute only if the court has determined that the statute at issue is vague or does not speak to the precise question at issue. Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843. Manifestly, the complaints here all allege that the challenged rules, regulations, criteria and methodologies violate plain and unambiguous provisions of the Act. It is equally clear, as a matter of law, that Chevron deference generally applies only when the plaintiff challenges a regulation promulgated pursuant to notice-and-comment rulemaking. See United States v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218, 230 (2001) ("[T]he overwhelming number of cases applying Chevron deference have reviewed the fruits of notice-and-comment rulemaking or formal adjudication."). Plaintiffs do not simply challenge the Defendant Department of Justice's notice-and-comment rulemaking; they also challenge the Defendant Special Master's informal charts and methodologies as well as his de facto cap on awards to certain September 11 victims, all of which fall outside the Department of Justice Regulations and therefore do not enjoy automatic Chevron deference. (See, e.g., Pl. Fact. Rec., Vol. 1, Final Rule, Statement by Special Master, JC 0091 ("[T]he Special Master's presumed award charts are not part of the Departmen[t] [of Justice's] rulemaking . . . .").)

Although informal agency conduct other than notice-and-comment rulemaking has on rare occasion been accorded Chevron deference, such deference is warranted only where Congress intended the regulator to take "action with the effect of law." Mead Corp., 533 U.S. at 230. Plainly, the informal policy pronouncements at issue cases do not enjoy such a presumption of legality. To the contrary, the Special Master's charts and methodologies are similar to regulator guidelines and policy statements that have routinely been denied Chevron-style deference. See Christensen v. Harris Cty., 529 U.S. 576, 587 (2000) ("Interpretations such as those in opinion letters – like interpretations contained in policy statements, agency manuals, and enforcement guidelines, all of which lack the force of law – do not warrant Chevron-style deference."); Reno v. Koray, 515 U.S. 50, 61 (1995) (holding that Bureau of Prisons internal guideline not "subject to the rigors of the Administrative Procedur[e] Act, including public notice and comment" is entitled to only limited, not Chevron, deference) (citation omitted); EEOC v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 256 (1991) (treating EEOC guidelines as not subject to Chevron); Catskill Mountains Chapter of Trout Unlimited, Inc. v. City of New York, 273 F.3d 481, 491 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that EPA's policy statements, opinion letters, and reports to Congress do not "come close to the sort of formal, binding articulation of an agency's views that would justify Chevron deference"). In this regard, it is also telling that one of the complaints clearly alleges that the offending rules and regulations are, in reality, essentially the work product of the Special Master alone, and that his methodologies and policy pronouncements are what really do violence to the Act since he has been careful to avoid promulgating black-and-white rules that are so evidently inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. (Colaio Complaint ¶¶ 44, 67-68.) Thus, Defendants' invocation of Chevron deference is unavailing.

Nor is the standard of review under the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA") as toothless as Defendants suggest. It is obvious, in the first instance, that the Special Master – who is both enfranchised and mandated by the Act – is rather distinct from the commonplace "regulator." In addition, even if the "regulator" is acting within the scope of his authority, the APA comes into play and the court must review whether the substance of the action was arbitrary and capricious. See Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843-44. In determining whether a regulator has acted arbitrarily and capriciously under APA Section 706(2)(A),[8] the court must consider whether the action "was based on a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment." Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983) (citations omitted). Moreover, the court's "inquiry into the facts is to be searching and careful." Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 416 (1971). On this motion to dismiss, where the allegations of the Plaintiffs' complaints must be accepted as true, Defendants cannot sustain their burden of showing that Plaintiffs have failed to state an APA claim.

[8] Section 706(2)(A) of the APA provides in relevant part that a court reviewing an agency's actions shall "hold unlawful and set aside agency action . . . found to be [ ] arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law."

I. THE SPECIAL MASTER MAY NOT IMPOSE A "NEEDS" TEST TO LIMIT OR IMPOSE A CAP ON COMPENSATION FROM THE FUND

The Act specifically provides that "[t]he Special Master shall review a claim submitted under subsection (a) and determine . . . with respect to a claimant determined to be an eligible individual – (i) the extent of the harm to the claimant, including any economic and noneconomic losses; and (ii) the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled based on [1] the harm to the claimant, [2] the facts of the claim, and [3] the individual circumstances of the claimant." Act § 405(b)(1)(B) (emphasis added). Defendants argue that, by construing "individual circumstances" to mean the "needs" of a claimant, they have the authority to limit awards to an amount (i) less than what the application of the other two criteria compel, and (ii) regardless of what the required initial calculation of loss reveals. In short, the Defendants' construction of "individual circumstances" eviscerates the economic and non-economic loss criteria, does away with the required computation of losses, and is nothing more than a shroud for the de facto cap on awards that Plaintiffs have alleged in their complaints. (See Colaio Complaint ¶¶ 67-77; Smith Complaint ¶ 42; Schneider Complaint ¶ 13.)

Plaintiffs have clearly alleged that the Special Master has ignored the statute's mandate. In particular, for a significant number of claimants, the Special Master has simply refused to "review" or "determine" the "harm to the claimant," even though Section 405(b) plainly compels him to do so. The Special Master has refused to consider evidence of the claimant's economic loss (one of the components of the "harm to the claimant"), even when that evidence was compiled by his own consultants. (See, e.g., Schneider Complaint ¶¶ 54-78.)

Defendants' focus on "individual circumstances" (and their creation of a "needs" test) cannot save the Special Master's methodology. The Defendants' analysis of "individual circumstances"

subsumes the entire analysis. Whatever discretion the Special Master has to factor individual circumstances into compensation awards, it cannot be the only factor he considers. To permit him to do so would be to allow the "individual circumstances" criterion to swallow and eviscerate the other two criteria specifically enumerated in the statute.

The Special Master's focus on "individual circumstances" and his substitution of a "needs" test lead to absurd results that are contrary to Section 405(b) of the Act. By limiting awards to what the Special Master deems to be a survivor's "needs," the Special Master has imposed a cap on awards. Indeed, he has gone so far as to admit that awards to survivors whose decedents earned over $231,000 shall presumptively be awarded the same amount. (Pl. Fact. Rec., Vol. 1, FAQ 5.7, JC 0242.) Such an outcome plainly reveals that the Special Master's methodology nullifies the Act's mandate that economic harm be reviewed and determined, and then factored into the compensation award. Act § 405(b)(1)(B).

As demonstrated below, the Defendants have improperly construed "individual circumstances" to permit the Special Master to determine the "needs" of the surviving family and limit awards to that amount. Contrary to Defendants' contention, Plaintiffs do not contend that "individual circumstances" should be ignored. Indeed, Plaintiffs have never contended, as Defendants suggest, that the Special Master cannot use the "individual circumstances" criterion to increase an award to permit a survivor to rebuild his/her life after the Special Master has properly reviewed and determined the harm to the survivor and determined that an award based on the economic and noneconomic losses alone is insufficient. By using a "needs" test that is nothing more than a cap on awards, the Special Master has turned the word "individual" in "individual circumstances" on its head, such that awards are made without regard to facts specific and unique to the individual claim.

However, the Special Master construes the term "individual circumstances" Even if the Special Master's "needs" test were lawful (which it is not), it does not support imposition of an arbitrary and subjective cap, and Plaintiffs still state valid claims based on the Special Master's cap. Finally, the hollowness of the "needs" test is revealed by the Special Master's own complete refusal to issue any rules, guidelines, policies, criteria or methodologies as to what such a test consists of or how it is to be applied. Therefore, the "needs" test – at least as currently constituted, i.e., out of thin air – violates the Act and the Defendants' own policies (with which Plaintiffs agree and as Congress intended) that, in the main, Fund compensation awards should be reasonably predictable, consistent, and achievable without placing undue burden of proof on claimants. (Pl. Fact. Rec., Vol. 1, Interim Final Rule, Statement by Special Master, JC 0049.) (See also Def. Mem. at 14.)

A. Defendants Cannot Limit Compensation to September 11 Victims Under the Guise of A Subjective and Arbitrary "Needs" Test.

1. Section 104.41 of the Regulations[9] and the Special Master's needs test cannot be reconciled with the text or purpose of the Act.

The text of the Act reveals that Congress specified the limitations on compensation – the deduction of collateral source payments and the preclusion of punitive damages. See Act § 405(b)(5) and (6). Here too, as with the provisions for the calculation and rendering of awards, the statutory direction is clear and obligatory, viz., the Special Master "may not include amounts for punitive damages" and he "shall reduce the amount of compensation" for collateral source amounts. Id. But for these provisions, the Act contains no limits on compensation. It did not escape Congress' notice that many of the victims of September 11 were highly paid professionals. (Colaio Complaint ¶ 42.) If Congress had wanted to appropriate only a limited amount of money to compensate September 11 victims and their families through the Fund, it would have done so, as has been done in other statutes. See, e.g., 1998 Crop Loss Disaster Assistance Program, 1999 Appropriations Act § 1102(b), 112 Stat. 2681-42, P.L. 106-31 (1999) (appropriating a limited budget of $1.5 billion to "producers on a farm who have incurred losses in the 1998 crop due to disasters"); Global AIDS and Tuberculosis Relief Act, 22 U.S.C.A. § 6841 (2001) (appropriating $200 million for fiscal years 2001 and 2002 for the fund); Mississippi Flood Act, 18 Stan. 45 (1874) (appropriating $ 190,000 to property owners who incurred property damages due to flood).[10]

Defendants' creation of a limitation based upon needs is also inconsistent with purpose of the Act. Section 403 of the Act provides that: "It is the purpose of this title to provide compensation to any individual (or relatives of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed . . . ." Act §

[9] Section 104.41 of the Regulations provides, in relevant part: "The individual circumstances of the claimant may include the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries." (Pl. Fact. Rec., Vol. 1, Interim Final Rule, JC 0073.)

[10] As set forth in Plaintiffs' memoranda of law in support of their motions for summary judgment, Congress expressly considered and rejected imposing a cap on individual awards. (Joint Mem. at 13-15; Colaio Mem. at 11-12.) Congress plainly could have imposed caps on individual awards had it seen fit to do so. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(3)(A) (2002) (Federal anti-discrimination statute caps damages in employment discrimination action to fixed amount based on number of employees in workplace, such as capped at $50,000 if less than 101 employees, capped at $100,000 if less than 201 employees, etc.); Alaska Stat. § 09.17.010 (2002) (capping noneconomic damages at $400,000 in negligence action); Cal. Civ. Code § 3333.2(b) (2003) (capping noneconomic damages at $250,000 in medical malpractice action); Burns Ind. Code Ann. § 34-18-14-3(b) (2002) (capping damages at $250,000 in health care provider malpractice action); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-1903(a) (2001) (capping noneconomic damages at $250,000 in personal injury action); La. Rev. Stat. § 40:1299.42(B)(1) (2002) (capping damages at $500,000 in medical malpractice action); Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 11-108(b)(2)(i) (2002) (capping noneconomic damages at $500,000 in personal injury action); Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rm. Code Ann. § 104.003(a)(1) (capping damages at $100,000 in personal injury action against State); W. Va. Code § 55-7B-8 (2003) (capping noneconomic damages at $1,000,000 in medical malpractice action); Wis. Stat. Ann. § 893.80(3) (2002) (capping damages recoverable against volunteer fire company at $50,000).

403 (emphasis added). This is the "dominating general purpose" of the Act, and the Court must construe the Act in conformity with this purpose.[11] Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 387 n. 23 (1983); see also Manhattan General Equipment Co. v. Commissioner, 297 U.S. 129, 134 (1936) ("A regulation which . . . operates to create a rule out of harmony with the statut[e] is a mere nullity."); SmithKline Beecham Consumer Healthcare, L.P. v. Watson Pharms. Inc., 211 F.3d 21, 28 (2d Cir. 2000) (basic canon of statutory interpretation requires courts "to interpret and apply [statutes and regulations] in a way that preserves the purposes of both and fosters harmony between them").

Congress' choice of the term "compensation" in the Act is significant. "Compensation" means "making whole" – paying "that which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position." Black's Law Dictionary 283 (6th ed. 1990). To "compensate" is to make "equivalent return to, to recompense, or to pay." Id. Similarly, Webster defines "compensation" as: (1) "the act or principal of compensating"; (2) "that which constitutes, or is regarded as, an equivalent; that which makes good the lack or variation of something else; that which compensates for loss or privation; amends; remuneration; recompense." Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary (1998).

In the context of recovery for personal injury or wrongful death, "compensation" is universally held to mean that sum which will make the plaintiff "whole." See Nussbaum v. Gibstein, 138 A.D.2d 193, 205, 531 N.Y.S.2d 276 (2d Dep't. 1988), appeal granted, 72 N.Y.2d 810 (1988), rev'd on other grounds, 73 N.Y.2d 912 (1989) (stating "the underlying purpose of tort damages [is] to compensate for each injury suffered so as to make the injured party whole") (citing McDougald v.

[11] Defendants concede, as they must, that the Act's purpose is to provide "compensation" to the September 11 victims and their families. (Def. Mem. at 1.)

Garber, 132 Misc. 2d 457, 462, 504 N.Y.S.2d 383 (Sup. Ct. 1986) aff'd, 135 A.D.2d 80 (1988), appeal granted on other grounds, 18 F.3d 147 (1994).

Similarly, the word "compensation" appears in the Fifth Amendment, which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. "Just compensation" in this context means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. Under the Fifth Amendment, the owner is to be put in the same position monetarily as he would have occupied if his property had not been taken. See United States v. Reynolds, 397 U.S. 14 (1970); see also Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 327 (1893) (compensation to which the owner is entitled is the full and perfect equivalent of the property taken); United States v. Rogers, 257 F. 397, 400, 1919 U.S. App. LEXIS 2214 at *5-6 (8th Cir. 1919), aff'd, 255 U.S. 163 (1921) (the owner shall be put in as good position peculiarly as he would have been if his property had not been taken). The use of a needs test to limit, and in many cases to grossly limit, the recovery of individual claimants thus contravenes the Act's purpose of providing "compensation."[12] Finally, when "compensation" is coupled with the statutory definition of "economic loss" contained in Section 402(5), it is crystal clear what the Act requires and what Congress intended.[13]

[12] Notably, Defendants have not cited (and Plaintiffs are not aware of) a single case which construes "individual circumstances of the claimant" to mean that an award of "compensation" can be reduced based upon a claimant's wealth or resources.

[13] Importantly, victim compensation was, in part, the quid pro quo for the federal government's aid to the airline industry and limiting the financial exposure of the airlines (and ultimately others) to their insurance coverage in the aftermath of the attacks. See Act Titles I-II passim; Title IV § 408 at VCF100-0013. The Act retroactively took away substantial state law remedies available to September 11 victims and survivors by restricting their recovery to limited insurance coverage. See Act § 408. Defendants have no right to revise the delicate balance Congress struck by imposing an arbitrary needs test to limit awards. Indeed, such an imposition constitutes an "unauthorized assumption by [the] agency of [a] major policy decision[] properly made by Congress." Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 464 U.S. 89, 108 (1983) (quoting American Ship Building Co. v. NLRB, 380 U.S. 300, 318 (1965)).

The Special Master's needs test also cannot be reconciled with the Fund's conceded purpose of providing awards to victims that are "fair, consistent and predictable." (See Def. Mem. at 14.) As noted above, Defendants have articulated no standards or criteria for this amorphous test. This leaves potential claimants with no way of knowing what information to submit in connection with their claims in order to prove their "need." More egregiously, the Special Master's self-proclaimed discretion in applying the undefined needs test is unbounded, and the Special Master is free to apply the needs test arbitrarily; and as the complaints clearly allege, he already has and fully intends to continue to do so. The complete absence of criteria to guide and structure the downward adjustments the Special Master seeks to make using his "needs" test contrasts sharply with the clear and objective criteria articulated by Congress in the Act for reducing awards based on specified collateral sources. See Act §§ 402(4) and 405(b)(6) (identifying specific types of collateral sources to be deducted from awards). Under the Special Master's test, potential claimants have no way to predict the award to which they may be entitled, and there is no guarantee that any individual award will be fair.

Defendants' construction of the Act also leads to illogical results. Section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act authorizes the Special Master to determine the "individual circumstances of the claimant." Act § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) (emphasis added). "Claimant," in turn, is defined to include the "personal representative" of a deceased victim, such as the executor of a decedent's estate. Act § 405(c)(2)(C). In Section 104.41 of the Regulations, Defendants have authorized the Special Master to treat "individual circumstances" as meaning "needs." The "needs" of the "claimant" are patently irrelevant, however, where the claimant is an executor who is unrelated to the deceased victim.

Application of the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius further demonstrates that Congress did not intend reductions or limits based on what the Special Master decides the claimants' need. See, e.g., Duke v. University of Texas, 663 F.2d 522, 526 (5th Cir. 1981) ("The maxim embodies a sensible insight into the customary manner in which language is used to communicate ideas. Simply stated, it expresses the learning of common experience that generally when people say one thing they do not mean something else."). Because Congress did provide for reductions based upon collateral source payments (Act § 405 (b)(6)), did invalidate any punitive damages (Act § 405(b)(5)), and did limit air carrier liability (Act § 408), it would have included limits based on "need" or "individual circumstances" if Congress intended those factors to be applied so as to further reduce compensation awards. Mukaddam v. Permanent Mission of Saudi Arabia, 111 F. Supp. 2d 457, 470 n.103 (S.D.N.Y. 2000).

The Act's structure is also proof that Congress did not intend for claimants' "needs" to be used by the Special Master to limit compensation. In drafting the Act, Congress placed the elements that combine to make up claimants' "loss," i.e., all the elements that together add up to the total or gross loss, in Section 405(b)(1)(B). The only offsets to the total loss, i.e., the collateral deductions, are set forth in Section 405(b)(6). Indeed, Section 405(b)(6) is the only place in the statute where the Special Master is authorized to "reduce the amount of compensation determined under paragraph 1(B)(ii)." Act § 405(6). "Individual circumstances" is one of the elements added into the total award in Section 405(b)(1)(B), not one of Section 405(b)(6)'s collateral reductions. If Congress had intended that "individual circumstances" be used to create a "needs" test to "reduce" awards, it would have included "individual circumstances" as a reduction in Section 405(b)(6), not as an addition in Section 405(b)(1)(B).

Limiting awards based upon "need" is also inconsistent with the information claimants are required to submit to secure their awards, namely "information from the claimant concerning any possible economic and non-economic losses that the claimant suffered" and "information regarding collateral sources." See Act § 405. Congress certainly would have required the Special Master to elicit information concerning claimants' "needs" if Congress intended for a "needs" test to limit compensation.

2. Section 104.41 of the Regulations and the Special Master's needs test are also inconsistent with legislative history of the Act.

The debate leading to the Act's passage further proves that Congress considered and rejected the very same arbitrary limitations that the Special Master seeks to impose via the needs test and the de facto cap. The essentials of the legislative history are set forth in some detail in the Colaio Complaint. The Act "does not cap the damages these families who have lost so much can possibly get." (Admin. Rec., Vol. 1, 147 Cong. Rec. H5899 (Sept. 21, 2001), VCF 100-0065 (Representative Richard Gephardt)). The Act provides "full recovery" without limitation, as "[t]he Treasury of the United States has been opened by the Members of this Congress to ensure that every family will receive just recovery." (Admin. Rec., Vol. 1, 147 Cong. Rec. H5906 (Sept. 21, 2001) (emphasis added), VCF 100-0072 (Representative James Turner).) Congress expected and intended the federal government to "provide compensation above and beyond carrier liability." (147 Cong. Rec. H5908 (Sept. 21, 2001), VCF 100-0074 (Representative Sheila Jackson-Lee).)

Not a single Senator or Representative referred to a "needs" analysis to limit awards. And not a single Senator or Representative suggested during the debates leading up to the Act's passage that the "individual circumstances" language was a license to be employed by the Special Master to reduce drastically the proven value of claimants' "economic loss" or to otherwise excuse him from the obligations squarely placed on him by the Act. Indeed, Defendants' reference to a statement by Senator Hatch is curious, as Senator Hatch was concerned that without the Fund, September 11 victims would receive only limited compensation in litigation. (Admin. Rec., Vol. 1, 147 Cong. Rec. S9595 (Sept. 21, 2001) (Senator Orrin Hatch); see also Def. Mem. at 9.) Such concerns that claimants receive full and complete compensation cannot be reconciled with Defendants' imposition of an arbitrary "needs" test or the Special Master's de facto cap. In establishing the Fund – while simultaneously seeking to protect the airline industry and others from financial ruin – Congress struck a balance, and an essential component thereof was full and fair compensation for the victims.

B. The Special Master's Cap on Awards Violates the Statute and Is Arbitrary and Capricious.

In their memoranda of law in support of their motions for summary judgment, Plaintiffs have demonstrated conclusively that the Special Master's cap on awards violates the Act and is arbitrary and capricious. (See Joint Mem. at 15-19; Colaio Mem. at 29-41, 47-49, 56-60.) Plaintiffs incorporate these arguments by reference, as they show that the Special Master has no authority to impose an arbitrary and unspecified cap on awards.

However the Special Master construes "individual circumstances," the Act forbids him to use a "needs" test to limit awards to claimants below their proven losses. Plaintiffs have alleged, and Plaintiffs' allegations must be accepted as true for purposes of this motion, that Defendants have imposed an arbitrary cap on awards. (See Colaio Complaint ¶¶ 67-77; Smith Complaint ¶ 42; Schneider Complaint ¶ 13.) The Court must accept as true, for purposes of this motion, that the Special Master has arbitrarily fixed a limit on any individual award in an approximate range of $5 million to $7 million. (See Colaio Complaint ¶ 71 (alleging that cap is a range of $5 million to $7 million); Schneider Complaint ¶ 66 (alleging that the Special Master has admitted he will award no claimant more that $6 million).) Limiting awards to an amount less than claimants' proven losses imposes a "cap." As Plaintiffs have also alleged, the Special Master has invoked Section 104.41 of the Regulations and the "needs" test to justify the cap he has imposed. (See, e.g., Smith Complaint ¶¶ 36, 41 (alleging that the Special Master has used needs test to limit awards); Schneider Complaint ¶¶ 33-42 (same).) Defendants do not, and cannot, dispute that they have interposed the needs test to limit awards to claimants.

The Defendants' needs test cannot justify the arbitrary cap imposed on awards because the cap is just that: an arbitrary limit imposed across-the-board on all awards, without regard to the individual claimant's circumstances or needs. (See, e.g., Schneider Complaint ¶ 76 (alleging that cap on award was unrelated to evidence submitted to show claimant's individual circumstances).) The Defendants' purported interpretation of "individual circumstances of the claimant" is thus actually a pretext to disregard the individual circumstances of the victim and substitute in its place an arbitrary line in the sand beyond which the Special Master will not go. As if we had gone through the looking glass into wonderland, the meaning of the words "individual circumstances" is thus transformed into its exact opposite.[14] Accordingly, even if the "needs" test could survive scrutiny, the Special Master's cap is entirely divorced from that test and must still fail.

[14] The use of the "needs" test to cap awards and therefore bypass consideration of the victim's circumstances violates Defendants' own regulations. Section 104.43(a) of the Regulations states that the Special Master "shall develop a methodology and publish schedules, tables, or charts that will permit prospective claimants to estimate determinations of loss of earnings or other benefits . . . based upon individual circumstances of the deceased victim." 28 C.F.R. § 104.43(a) (emphasis added). By imposing an arbitrary cap on awards, the Special Master has rendered his own regulation nugatory.

C. Defendants' Suggestion that Plaintiffs Are Seeking to Increase Awards to High Earner Claimants at the Expense of Low Earner Claimants is Inaccurate and Inappropriate.

Defendants wrongly attempt to prejudice the Court's analysis by suggesting that the Court's ruling will prevent the Special Master from fairly compensating lower-income claimants. (See Def. Mem. at 31, 34-35.) Nothing could be further from the truth. Plaintiffs seek a ruling that the Special Master does not have the power to arbitrarily limit compensation in the way in which the challenged rules, regulations and methodologies do. The Special Master's discretion to increase compensation via the "individual circumstances" route is not at issue and will not be affected by the ruling Plaintiffs seek. Defendants' argument – or perhaps more accurately, their scare tactic – fails immediately because (although the Defendants are cleverly silent on the issue) it is necessarily based on the "logic" that the Fund is a zero-sum game. Thus, Defendants "reason" that giving justified compensation to high earners will prevent the Special Master from addressing the legitimate needs of claimants whose decedents were "cook[s]." (Def. Mem. at n.21.) This is nonsense because, as is admitted, there is no limit on the overall amount of either the Fund or the aggregate of compensation awards ultimately paid out.[15]

Equally specious is Defendants' repeated assertion that Plaintiffs seek to use this Court to require Special Master to compute "mechanical" or "formulaic" calculations and award the "theoretical maximum" that might be achievable in a tort suite under state law. (See Def. Mem. at 3, 5-[15] Defendants' brief is peppered with references to the "needy" victims who will be robbed of their awards due to the purported relief Plaintiffs seek. For example, Defendants state, "Indeed, plaintiffs' argument that claims previously awarded would have to be re-opened might well require the Special Master to reduce many awards that have already been issued" and "reading the Act (as plaintiffs do) . . . could result in families receiving no compensation at all for decedents who died without substantial resources." (Def. Mem. at 3, 34.)

6, 31, 32, 40.) Plaintiffs recognize that the Special Master has the authority to evaluate the evidence submitted, make assessments about credibility and reliability of such evidence, and consider uncertainties and other relevant factors in determining decedents' lost income streams and the consequent value of their "economic loss." Everyone understands both that this is an awesome responsibility, and that neither the Act nor the Special Master's mandate is about valuing human life. Plaintiffs trust that all parties to these litigations readily agree that the life of an immigrant dishwasher at the Windows on the World is just as precious, and meant just as much to his or her remaining, grieving family, as did that of a senior, highly paid executive at Aon or Marsh & McClennan or a very successful broker at Cantor Fitzgerald with consistent annual earnings of $1,000,000 or more. The Act is about providing compensation based on clearly delineated criteria that have been applied at common law and in state and federal courts for many generations in the American constraint of civil jurisprudence. Therefore, and for example, while the Special Master can and must make reasoned "fact finding" judgments, he cannot impose across-the-board, undifferentiated value judgments such as: evaluating extraordinary high incomes involves a prohibitary level of speculation (Def. Mem. at 47; high earner decedents would not have continued to contribute to the support of their family (Def. Mem. at 47); and high-earners necessarily retire early because they supposedly have so much money (Def. Mem. at 47.)

In any event, the Defendants' professed concern that basing awards solely on a strict calculation of economic and non-economic losses would result in certain claimants receiving no award from the Fund is a red herring. Any such alleged "inadequacy" of the Fund (and there is no allegation of any such problem in any of the complaints) stems not from the Act, but rather from the Special Master's own arbitrary cap on non-economic losses ($250,000, plus $100,000 for each child), which cap is exclusively his own creation and is nowhere mandated by the Act. The Special Master cannot justify the use of a needs test by raising the specter that certain claimants will not receive adequate compensation to "rebuild their lives" when that phenomenon, if it exists at all, is a fiction of the Special Master's own creation.

Moreover, assuming arguendo that a literal application of the Act (as distinguished from the Defendants' distorted interpretation of it) necessarily "undercompensated" some claimants, from which the Special Master could derive the power to remedy the situation, it is still an obvious non sequitur to contend that the same translates into an altogether different "authority" to deprive hundreds of other claimants of the compensation to which they are entitled under the Act. This can only be viewed as bootstrapping argument of the highest degree.

D. Defendants' Interpretation of the Act, Not Plaintiffs', Improperly Renders Portions of the Act Superfluous.

Defendants wrongly suggest that Plaintiffs' construction of the Act would render the statute's reference to "individual circumstances" superfluous. (See Def. Mem. at 32.) As noted above, Plaintiffs do not allege that the Special Master cannot consider individual circumstances. Because, as shown above, the individual circumstances of the "claimant" cannot properly be construed to refer to the circumstances of the individual filing the Fund claim where that person is unrelated to the victim (e.g., an executor), consideration of individual circumstances is entirely appropriate where reference is made to the decedent.[16] For example, it is entirely consistent with the text and purpose of the Act for the Special Master to consider any imminent plans that the decedent had to change careers at the time of death when calculating the amount of the award. Such a construction of the phrase "individual [16] Importantly, the Act defines "claimant" as either the decedent or the person filing a claim on behalf of the decedent. See Act § 405(c)(2). Accordingly, the statute's reference to the individual circumstances" is not redundant of the "harm to the claimant" criterion, which ordinarily might not include consideration of such special circumstances.

Moreover, construing the phrase "individual circumstances of the claimant" to refer to the victim's circumstances, and not to impose an unprecedented "needs" test, is consistent with the "legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice." Molzof v. United States, 502 U.S. 301, 307 (1992) (quoting Morrisette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 264 (1952)). In the context of wrongful death claims, "individual circumstances," such as the age of the decedent, the decedent's earnings history and so forth, have always been considered in determining compensation, and the term "individual circumstances" should not be tailored, shaped or twisted into something which is utterly foreign to legal tradition and centuries of practice. ("'[W]here Congress borrows terms of art in which are accumulated the legal tradition and meaning of centuries of practice, it presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas that were attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken and the meaning its use will convey to the judicial mind unless otherwise instructed.'") Molzof, 502 U.S. at 307 (quoting Morrisette, 342 U.S. at 263). The addition of a novel "needs" criterion, which plays no part in the traditional understanding of individual circumstances, is violative of the principle of statutory construction the Supreme Court enunciated in Molzof.

In fact, it is the Special Master's own construction of the "individual circumstances" criterion to set a ceiling on awards based on an arbitrary assessment of the claimant's "need" that renders the other two criteria Congress articulated, the harm to the claimant and the facts of the claim, circumstances of the "claimant" can be, and obviously must be, construed to mean the circumstances of the deceased victim.

irrelevant. See Act § 405(b)(1)(B). If, as Plaintiffs have alleged, Defendants are using the "needs" test to impose an arbitrary cap on awards, the consideration of harm to the claimant and the facts of the claim criteria become meaningless. In effect, Congress' mandate that the Special Master review and determine the harm to the claimant (including economic and non-economic losses) and all of the facts of the claim, are simply collapsed into the abyss of an arbitrary limit that bears no relation to the actual elements of compensation and deductions specifically enumerated in the Act. It is thus Defendants, not Plaintiffs, who advocate a construction of the Act that renders certain portions of the statute superfluous, in contravention of the very authorities cited in their brief. See Bell v. Reno, 218 F.3d 86, 91 (2d Cir. 2000) ("It is a well-known canon of statutory construction that, in general, a statute should not be construed so as to render a word or clause inoperative."); Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 146 (1995) (same); Potter v. United States, 155 U.S. 438, 446 (1894) (same).[17]

In the end, Defendants' proclivity, in "interpreting" the Act, to tear statutory language from its context and the legislative purpose impermissibly invites the Court to allow the Special Master "to use [the statute's] words as 'empty vessels into which he can pour anything he will' – his caprices, fixed notions, even statesmanlike beliefs in a particular policy." Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum. L. Rev. 527, at 529 (1947) (cited in Def. Mem. at 38.)

[17] Defendants suggest (Def. Mem. at 35 n.23) that reference to the "needs" of the claimant is appropriate because the New York Crime Victims Board permits awards only where the claimant will suffer "financial difficulty" absent an award. That legislation, however, supplements a victim's common law rights and therefore does not trump a victim's right to recovery of all economic losses, without regard to "need." See N.Y. Exec. Law § 631(4) (providing for offset for any payments received by victim from person who committed the crime); Sillato v. Powell, 249 A.D.2d 997, 672 N.Y.S.2d 547 (4th Dep't 1998) (victim recovered compensation from New York Crime Victims Board and damages in litigation against perpetrator of crime).

II. THE ACT REQUIRES THE SPECIAL MASTER TO REVIEW CLAIMANTS' PROOF AND DETERMINE "ECONOMIC LOSS" IN ACCORDANCE WITH APPLICABLE STATE LAW

A. The Plain Text of the Act Mandates That the Special Master Compute Economic Loss Under Applicable State Law and Render an Award Based on the Same.

Despite the Act's crystal-clear definition of "economic loss" as "any pecuniary loss resulting from harm . . . to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law,"[18] Defendants audaciously contend that "nothing in the Act requires the Special Master to consider or apply state law when determining the ultimate award." (Def. Mem. at 35 n.23.) Defendants further admit that New York law requires the use of pre-tax earnings in calculating a wrongful death award (Def. Mem. at 36),[19] but they deny it has any relevance to the Fund. Defendants purposely skew the Act's definition of economic loss by asserting that the "to the extent" language merely refers to "categories" or "types" of economic loss, and means the Special Master is not permitted to compensate for such types of loss that the applicable state law excludes. (Def. Mem. at 37, citing 28 C.F.R.§ 104.42.)

Once again, the plain, unadultered words of the statute belie Defendants' position. It is just silly to argue that the subject language was simply Congress' subliminal direction to seek out state law(s) simply for the purposes of defining general "categories" when the very definition of economic loss in Section 402(5) contains a long parenthetical delineating those very general "categories." What is also pellucid from reading the statutory definition is that Congress went to considerable length to draft a definition that was about as broad and expansive as one could imagine. This, of course, further undercuts the Defendants' argument that they are free to trump what New York law allows, and to substitute less favorable benchmarks because of some unfound and unauthorized need for complete uniformity.

> The term "economic loss" means any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law. (Emphasis added.)

By defining "economic loss" as "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law" in Section 402(5), Congress established objective criteria by which the Special Master must determine claimants' awards. Objective legal standards create predictability and consistency, the admitted objectives of the Fund required so that claimants can elect how to proceed. In passing the Act, Congress had the choice of incorporating State law or creating a special federal law to control economic loss determinations. It purposefully chose State law that provided a well established and tested framework for the analysis.[20] Furthermore, by incorporating the "applicable State law" to each claim, Congress selected the law of the State that would be foreseeable from a legal point of view, just as it provided – notwithstanding the creation of a federal claim and an exclusive federal venue (i.e., this Court) for what would ordinarily be a slew of cases that could and would be filed in various state and federal courts – that private tort actions arising out of the September 11 [20] Each of the 50 states has some statutory system under which damages may be awarded for wrongful death, continuing or actually creating a cause of action, and providing a remedy for deaths occurring within the jurisdiction of that state. See generally S. Speiser, C. Krause and J. Madole, Recovery for Wrongful Death 1:13 (CBC 1992). Indeed, it is well known that such a cause of action is a creature of statute. See, e.g., Berner v. British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 240, 245-46 (S.D.N.Y. 1964).

crashes would be the law "of the State in which the crash occurred." See Act § 408(b)(2). And presumably, Congress knew that the crashes into the World Trade Center site occurred in the City and State of New York.

Analysis of the Act must begin with its plain meaning. The plain meaning of "to the extent recovery is allowed under applicable State law" is not ambiguous. "Extent" does not mean the exclusion of categories; it means inclusion of amount and/or value. Black's Law Dictionary defines "extent" as "amount; scope, range; magnitude." Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed.) at 583. "Extent" is similarly defined as "a. The range, magnitude or distance over which a thing exceeds . . . . b. The degree to which a thing extends; prosecuted to the full extent of the law." The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (3d ed.) (emphasis added). The Random House Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged Edition (1966) gives the etymology of the word "extent" as deriving from the Latin "extendere," meaning to "stretch out; draw out to the full length." (Emphasis added.)

Significantly, passage of the Act was not the first time Congress incorporated State law into a Federal statutory scheme. "In enacting the [Federal] Tort Claims Act, Congress had the choice of incorporating the tort law of the various states or creating a federal tort law for the sole purpose of deciding claims against the Government. . . . In choosing the former, the simpler expedient was adopted." Winston v. United States, 305 F.2d 253, 271 (2d Cir. 1962). Moreover, the Act's use of the phrase "to the extent" is virtually identical to the language in Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA"), under which the Government may be held liable for tortious acts committed by its employees acting within the scope of their employment, "under circumstances where the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred." 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(b)(1), 2674. The FTCA provides that the "United States shall be liable . . . to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances." 28 U.S.C. § 2674 (emphasis added).

In Richards v. United States, 369 U.S. 1 (1962), a wrongful death case, the Court held that the FTCA incorporates the "whole law" of the State in which the act or omission occurred. Id. at 11. Richards should likewise control the meaning of Section 402(5) of the Act. The "to the extent" language of the Act incorporates State law on economic loss, just as does the virtually identical language in the FTCA. See Richards, 369 U.S. at 11.[21] Section 405(b)(5) of the Act, however, precludes the Special Master from awarding punitive damages, which are recoverable under New York law. See N.Y. EPTL § 5-4.3(B). If Congress did not incorporate State law, it would not have had to preclude punitive damages. Congress precluded punitive damages in the Act because it had incorporated State law on recoverable economic loss (but not on recoverable noneconomic loss) and wanted to make clear that it was not incorporating State law on punitive damages. The Act is similar to the Federal Tort Claims Act in this regard. Like the Act, the FTCA incorporates State law remedies, but precludes the recovery of punitive damages. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(B), 2674.

[21] See also Negonsott v. Samuels, 507 U.S. 99, 105 (1993) (statutory provision that extends jurisdiction to Kansas courts over offenses committed by or against Native America (WC) reservations "to the same extent as its courts have jurisdiction over offenses committed elsewhere . . . unambiguously confers jurisdiction on Kansas to prosecute all offenses . . . committed against Indians on Indian reservations in accordance with State law."); Reconstruction Finance Corp. v. Beaver County, 328 U.S. 204, 210 (1946) ("The fact that Congress subjected Defense Plant Corporation's properties to local taxes to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed' indicated intent to integrate Congressional permission to tax with established local tax assessment and collection machinery"); Independent Ins. Agents v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, 890 F.2d 1275 (2d Cir. 1989), (in dicta, "Bank subsidiaries may engage in non-bank activities to the extent permitted by their chartering authorities" is unambiguous and would allow the bank to engage in non-banking activities if allowed by their chartering authorities). Other examples exist as well. For instance, in bankruptcy practice, the "extent" of a lien means the scope of the property encompassed by the lien. In re Snow, 270 B.R. 38 (D. Md. 2001).

Defendants argue that using State law standards to calculate economic loss would "present enormous difficulties" and require "complex choice-of-law issues and the particulars of damages of various states." (Def. Mem. at 36.) Defendants offer nothing more than this bare assertion as if it were a self-evident fact. However, nothing indicates it would be more difficult for the Special Master to comply with the Act by determining economic loss in accordance with State law, and once again, such arguments – especially being, as they are, unburdened with any attempt to adduce supporting evidence – are simply not permitted in support of a motion to dismiss. This is, however, typical of the Defendants' "it is because we say it is" position.

But Defendants' argument is a ruse, because even under their interpretation of Section 402(5), the Special Master would have to perform a choice-of-law analysis; he would have to determine the applicable State law governing each claim and also the "particulars of damages" of that law. There is no indication that the Special Master is making any choice of law determinations. In fact, what the complaints allege is that the Special Master completely ignores even Defendants' own tortured reading of Section 402(5) – he is not applying the "economic loss" definition even in the way Defendants interpret it, but rather, making his own extra-legal, "philosophic" decisions. He is imposing his own law and ignoring certain categories of economic loss clearly recognized under state law.[22] Defendants' strained interpretation of Section 402(5) is a sham, an attempt to permit the Special Master to limit damages in direct contravention of the Act.

[22] For example, there is no indication that the Special Master will provide compensation to children for the loss of their parents' nurture, care and guidance, a recognized category of pecuniary loss under New York law. Keneavan v. New York, 120 A.D.2d 24, 507 N.Y.S.2d 193 (2d Dep't 1986), aff'd, 70 N.Y.2d 558, 523 N.Y.S.2d 60 (1987).

The fact that "[d]ifferent states calculate damages differently, and for different reasons" (Def. Mem. at 41)[23] is no reason to ignore the Act's incorporation of State law to determine claimants' proven economic loss "to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law." Act § 402(5) (emphasis added). While Defendants complain about the "burden" this will place on the Special Master, surely "burden" is not a valid excuse to ignore the plain language of the Act and deny the Congressionally mandated full compensation. Similarly, that the tort laws of different States "reflect different state's [sic] public policy choices" (Def. Mem. at 41) does not support the conclusion that Congress could not have intended to have Fund claimants be awarded their proven economic damages under New York law. Defendants suggest that it is presumptively "irrational" for any federal statute to incorporate state law to determine damages. (See Def. Mem. at 43.) In enacting the FTCA, however, "Congress selected a law which had a rational relation to the incident and which the district courts were skilled in applying." Winston v. United States, 305 F.2d at 271. It was likewise "rational" for Congress to intend the incorporation of New York law to determine the World Trade Center claimants' recoverable economic loss under the Fund.

Furthermore, Defendants purposely overstate the choice-of-law complexity. In truth, the Special Master may apply New York law as the "applicable State law" governing the economic loss claims concerning all decedents killed in New York. Section 408(b)(3) of the Act designates New York as the forum state for any civil suit, and Section 408(b)(2) provides that the substantive law to be applied therein "shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which the crash occurred unless such law is inconsistent with or pre-empted by Federal law." New York's choice-of-law principles dictate use of the "significant contacts" test. Neumeier v. Kuehner 31 N.Y.2d 121, 335 N.Y.S. 2d 64 (1972); Schultz v. Boy Scouts of America, 65 N.Y.2d 189, 491 N.Y.S. 2d 90 (1985); Padula v. Lilarn Props. Corp., 84 N.Y.2d 519, 620 N.Y.S. 2d 310 (1994); Bodea v. Trans Nat'l Express, Inc., 286 A.D.2d 5, 731 N.Y.S. 2d 113 (4th Dep't 2001). Use of that test points indisputably to New York law for all the World Trade Center claims because New York is the lex locus delicti (i.e., the deaths occurred there), all decedents (with the exception of some airline passengers) were employed in New York and paid New York State income taxes, and several of the protected defendants under the Act are domiciled and/or subject to jurisdiction in New York, and regularly engaged in business in New York, e.g., the City of New York, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and the airlines. Accordingly, the Special Master can easily comply with Congress' mandate of determining economic loss in accordance with "applicable State law" by applying New York law.

B. No Other Federal Statute Supports Defendants' Position That the Special Master Has the Authority to Award Less Than Full Economic Damages Under Applicable State Law.

Defendants mistakenly point to three protection statutes that immunize teachers, volunteers, and good samaritans from liability as demonstrating that the Special Master is authorized to limit "economic loss."[24] (Def. Mem. at 38-39.) The three statutes to which Defendants call attention, [24] 20 U.S.C. § 6733(1) (same definition as Section 402(5) of "economic loss" in Liability Protection Act for Teachers), 42 U.S.C. § 238q(e)(2)(b)(ii) (same definition of "economic loss" in

however, differ from the Act in a significant way. The use by those statutes of the same definition of economic loss actually cuts against Defendants' argument, because the definition of "economic loss" in the those statutes is not a "limiting provision," but rather broadly defines the losses "to the extent allowed under applicable State law" from which the three protected groups enjoy immunity. The plain text of those statutes defines economic loss broadly as "any pecuniary loss . . . allowed under applicable State law" to establish that the beneficiaries of the statutes enjoy complete immunity from all State damages. Contrary to what Defendants suggest, those provisions do not provide limited categories of damages, and Defendants have cited no case law supporting that theory. Unlike the three liability protection statutes Defendants cite, the Act provides for "compensation," and thus, the overriding purpose of the Act would have to be ignored to accept the reading of defined "economic loss" and "applicable state law" advanced by the Defendants. Quite clearly, the three immunity statutes are both different and provide no support for the "thin air" argument that the Act's definition has nothing at all to do with calculations by the Special Master.

Defendants also rely on United States v. Slevin, 106 F.3d 1086 (2d Cir. 1996), which states that when two statutes use the same language they are "analyzed in the same way." (Def. Mem. at 39, quoting 106 F.3d at 1088.) All the statutes in Slevin dealt with criminal fraud; the common language was "any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises." Id. In short, Slevin deals with a cohesive body of related criminal law on fraud, and it is completely inapposite to the varying statutes Defendants seek to portray as related in this case.

C. The Structure of the Act Refutes Defendants' Position That the Special Master May Impose a Cap.

Defendants' "structure of the Act" argument (Def. Mem. at 39-40) is equally unpersuasive. They contend that the definition of economic loss is essentially immaterial because it is found in the Act's "definitions" section (Act § 402). This ignores the well established rule that statutory definitions of words used elsewhere in the same statute furnish authoritative evidence of legislative intent and therefore are given controlling effect. Benjamin v. Jacobson, 172 F.3d 144, 155 (2d Cir. 1999) ("If the statute includes an explicit statutory definition, we accord that definition controlling weight") (emphasis added); Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484 (1987) (same); Sierra Club v. Clark, 755 F.2d 608, 613 (8th Cir. 1985) ("[S]tatutory definitions of words used elsewhere in same statute furnish such authoritative evidence of legislative intent and meaning that they are usually given controlling effect"); Walling v. Portland Terminal Co., 330 U.S. 148 (1947). The Act's definition thus trumps Defendants' strained misreading of economic loss.

Defendants cite Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Pfeifer, 462 U.S. 523 (1983), and McNerney v. Secretary, HHS, No. 90-1689V, 1992 WL 120345 (Cl. Ct. May 5, 1992), as somehow undermining the idea that Congress intended to incorporate state law in the operation of the Fund, notwithstanding what the Act explicitly states. These cases too are inapposite, but they initially do underscore the uniqueness of the Act. In Jones & Laughlin, the Supreme Court stated: "[W]e will do no more than is necessary to resolve the case before us. We limit our attention to suits under § 5(b) of the [Workers' Compensation] Act, noting that Congress has provided generally for an award of damages but has not given specific guidance regarding how they are to be calculated." 462 U.S. at 547 (emphasis added). In the instant case, of course, Congress has stated how Fund awards are to be calculated. In McNerney, arising under the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act, there had been ex parte contacts between the government and several treating physicians before one physician raised the state-based physician-patient privilege; the federal statute did not address the matter. The McNerney court decided not to recognize that evidentiary privilege, but that decision is certainly no support for ignoring state law in the Act, which expressly makes state law "applicable." Buxkemper v. Secretary, HHS, 32 Fed. Cl. 213 (1994), Van Epps v. Secretary, HHS, 26 Cl. Ct. 650, 652 (1992), and Jelly v. Secretary, HHS, No. 94-646v, 1998 WL 211913 (Ct. Cl. April 6, 1998), also cited by Defendants (Def. Mem. at 42 n.26, 43), also deal with national vaccine programs and are readily distinguishable. First, they are not based on statutes that tie "economic loss" to state law. Second, and equally significantly, all of those cases – cited by Defendants as supposedly proving the Special Master should have license to do as he pleases – have involved federal review. The point Plaintiffs have made and continue to make is that because the Act deprives them of judicial review of the Special Master's decisions, this Court must review the Act and require Defendants to implement it consistent with the text and purpose of the statute.

One reason for Defendants' tortured reading of the definition is that its natural meaning would prevent the Special Master from limiting compensation by a "needs" test. No State's law allows for such an arbitrary limit on compensation, and Defendants have cited none. There is no State law supporting the "needs" test and therefore, it may not be used to limit compensation. The Court should not allow the Special Master's perception of a claimant's (whether that be a third-party executor, a spouse, or another family member) "needs" to trump a traditional economic loss analysis based on State law.

III. PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS ARE REVIEWABLE

A. Plaintiffs' Claims Are not Precluded

Defendants argue that, because Act § 405(b)(3) provides that individual awards "shall be final and not subject to judicial review," Plaintiffs cannot challenge the methodologies and procedures promulgated by the Special Master. As their complaints make clear, however, Plaintiffs do not seek to challenge individual award determinations made by the Special Master; indeed, none of the named Plaintiffs have actually filed a claim with the Fund. Rather, the complaints attack the Defendants' rules, regulations, methodologies and administration of the Fund as unlawful and violative of the APA. Defendants do not, and clearly cannot, point to anything in the Act itself or in its legislative history that indicates that judicial review of agency action, the rules, and the regulations was foreclosed to any degree. Thus, they are forced to rely upon the provision – not uncommon in entitlement statutes – precluding judicial review of individual award determinations and to bootstrap that into an argument that this Court is without jurisdictional purview.

At the outset, in cases involving the review of administrative regulations, courts begin "with the strong presumption that Congress intends review of administrative action." Bowen v. Michigan Academy of Family Physicians, 476 U.S. 667, 670 (1986); see also McNary v. Haitian Refugee Ctr., Inc., 498 U.S. 479 (1991); Bartlett v. Bowen, 816 F.2d 695, 699 (D.C. Cir. 1987). "[O]nly upon a showing of 'clear and convincing evidence' of a contrary intent should the courts restrict access to judicial review." Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 141 (1967). "The party seeking to preclude review bears the burden of demonstrating Congress' intent to do so." Block v. Community Nutrition Inst., 467 U.S. 340, 351 (1984). Defendants have pointed to no evidence from the Act (other than § 405(b)(3) itself) that Congress intended to foreclose all review of the statute in question, and therefore cannot carry their burden.

It is well-settled that judicial review of the methods used by an agency is permitted despite the existence of statutory language prohibiting the review of agency decisions on individual cases. See McNary, 498 U.S. 479 (upholding jurisdiction because the complaint at issue "does not challenge any individual determination of any application . . . but rather attacks the manner in which the entire program is being implemented") (quoting Haitian Refugee Ctr., Inc. v. Nelson, 694 F. Supp. 864, 873 (S.D. Fla. 1988)); see also Abdullah v. INS, 184 F.3d 158, 164 (2d Cir. 1999) (construing McNary as holding that "a district court may exercise jurisdiction to adjudicate pattern-or-practice claims against the INS, as opposed to individual denials of status adjustment").

Because Plaintiffs properly challenge the rules, regulations, methodologies, and administration of the Fund, not individual awards, the Act does not foreclose Plaintiffs' challenge. Rather than challenging individual awards made by the Special Master, Plaintiffs challenge the "method, practice, and policy employed in the decision making process," which is permitted even where individual awards cannot be reviewed. See Sierra-Nevada Memorial Miners Hospitals, Inc. v. Sullivan, No. Civ. A. 91-2198, 1993 WL 841091 at *5 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1993) (denying defendants' motion to dismiss where plaintiffs challenged the procedures for submitting data to Medicare Board even though statute prohibited review of individual awards). As such, Plaintiffs' claims are not precluded by Act § 405(b)(3)'s mandate that an individual "determination shall be final and not subject to judicial review." The same "preclusive" language has already been construed to allow judicial review of the methodology employed by an agency. In Universal Health Services of McAllen, Inc. v. Sullivan, 770 F.

Supp. 704 (D.D.C. 1991) aff'd, 978 F.2d 745 (D.C. Cir. 1992), the District Court interpreted language of the Medicare Act providing that "[d]ecisions of the Secretary [of Health and Human Services] are final and shall not be subject to judicial review," as permitting judicial review of the Secretary's promulgation of guidelines. Id. at 707. The McAllen court found that the statutory language in question (which is nearly identical to that of the case at bar) referred to "individual . . . determinations," and did not "imply a congressional intent to preclude review of the underlying guidelines." Id. at 710. See also Sierra Nevada, 1993 WL 841091, at *13 ("in light of the "statutory scheme . . . Congress did not intend to preclude judicial review of procedures for submission of corrected wage data . . ."). Accordingly, the language of the Act does not foreclose Plaintiffs' challenge.

The cases upon which Defendants rely offer them no support. In Gutierrez de Martinez v. Lamagno, the Court actually holds that "[n]o persuasive reason for restricting access to judicial review is discernible from the statutory fog we confront here." Gutierrez de Martinez v. Lamagno, 515 U.S. 417, 424 (1995). Defendants cite to three cases in which the courts construe the Veterans Administration ("VA") Act, cases that are distinguishable because that statute is considerably broader than the Act here. Under the VA Act, "Decisions of the Administrator on any question of law or fact concerning a claim for benefits or payments under any law . . . administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be final and conclusive and no other official or any court of the United States shall have power or jurisdiction to review any such decisions." (emphasis added) 38 U.S.C. §211(a), quoted in Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. 361, 370 (1974); Walters v. National Ass'n of Radiation Survivors, 473 U.S. 305, 307 (1985) (same); Gott v. Walters, 756 F.2d 902, 915 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (same). Similarly, Paluca v. Secretary of Labor, 813 F.2d 524, 527 (1st Cir. 1987) involved a statute where judicial review was more broadly foreclosed than under the Act: "The action of the Secretary or his designee in allowing or denying a payment under this subchapter is – (1) final and conclusive for all purposes and with respect to all questions of law and fact; and (2) not subject to review by another official of the United States or by a Court by mandamus or otherwise." 5 U.S.C. § 8128(b) (emphasis added). The narrow language of Act § 405(b)(3) is a far cry from the sweeping, preclusive language in those cases.

Defendants also misplace reliance on cases involving statutes where Congress specifically prohibited review of an agency's methodology, as opposed to individual awards. See American Society of Cataract & Refractive Surgery v. Thompson, 279 F.3d 447, 451-52 (7th Cir. 2002) (holding that the provision of Medicare Act providing "there shall be no administrative or judicial review . . . of . . . the determination of relative values and relative value units," contained a "clear and explicit indication of Congress' intent to prohibit administrative and judicial review" of said methodology); see also Painter v. Shalala, 97 F.3d 1351, 1355 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding that because Medicare Act contained an explicit provision forbidding the review of the "determination of conversion factors," the court had no jurisdiction to review the manner in which the conversion factor was calculated). Notably, the Act does not contain any provision forbidding the review of the Special Master's methodology; instead, it simply (and again, quite clearly) states that a final Fund award is not subject to judicial review.

Likewise, Defendants mistakenly rely on cases involving challenges to specific awards where review of individual awards is prohibited. See Mattes v. Chairman Vietnamese Commandos Compensation Comm'n, 173 F.3d 817 (11th Cir. 1999) (court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review attorney's claim that he was entitled to a specific fee under the Commandos Compensation Act);

Rhodes v. United States, 760 F.2d 1180 (11th Cir. 1985) (court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review decision of Secretary of the Army denying motorist's claim); Heckler v. Ringer, 466 U.S. 602, 621 (1984) (Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to review decisions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services regarding individual claims under the Medicare Act); Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99, 108 (1977) (Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to review the final decision of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare on an individual claim for social security benefits).

In sum, the statutory reality that individual awards are not reviewable cuts against Defendants' argument seeking to forestall review of rules, regulations, criteria, and methodologies which make a mockery of the Act they are supposed to implement.

B. Plaintiffs Do Not Seek Judicial Review of Individual Awards, and the Special Master's Promulgation of Rules and Methodologies is Ripe for Review.

Defendants also contend that the Special Master's methodologies and policy pronouncements should not be subject to review because they do not constitute "final agency actions." (Def. Mem. at 67). This is also without merit.

Under the APA, a case is ripe for judicial review only if an agency's conduct constitutes a "final agency action." 5 U.S.C. § 704; see Top Choice Distribs., Inc. v. United States Postal Service, 138 F.3d 463, 466 (2d Cir. 1998). The Supreme Court has set forth a two-part test for identifying a final agency action, and the rulemaking and offending methodologies at issue fall well within that two-part definition. "First, the action must mark the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process – it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature. And second, the action must be one by which 'rights or obligations have been determined' or from which 'legal consequences will flow.'" Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 178 (1997) (citations omitted); see also Air Espana v. Brien, 165 F.3d 148, 152 (2d Cir. 1999) ("The problem is best seen in a twofold aspect, requiring us to evaluate both the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration"). More recently, the Court has articulated the standard in this manner: "the finality requirement is concerned with whether the initial decisionmaker has arrived at a definitive position on the issue that inflicts an actual, concrete injury." Darby v. Cisneros, 509 U.S. 137, 144 (1993).

Both elements of the Supreme Court's test are met here. First, the Special Master's methodologies and policies clearly constitute "definitive positions" on each of the issues raised by Plaintiffs. The explicit language of statements published on the Fund Website, combined with his statements both in public forums and in meetings with "test case" claimants, reflect a consistent determination to adhere to his announced policies pertaining to the use of after-tax earnings, the consumption rates of single victims, the calculation of average earnings and growth rates, and caps on victim awards. Nothing about the Special Master's promulgation of these policies casts them as "tentative" or "interlocutory"; rather, they are binding on all claimants to the Fund. See Bennett, 520 U.S. at 178 (unlike "recommendations" which were "purely advisory" and "in no way binding," regulatory opinion at issue had "direct and appreciable legal consequences" and therefore satisfied the first, "consummation of decisionmaking" element of the finality requirement). In fact, as the Colaio Complaint specifically alleges, the Special Master has engaged in a pattern of gamesmanship with respect to promised guidelines governing Fund awards for so-called "high earners," and has deliberately avoided publishing anything which would meet his own criteria for efficiency, predictability and consistency for Fund claimants above the 98th percentile. (Colaio Complaint ¶¶ 71-77.) Not surprisingly, there is not a hint of things yet to come on this subject from the Defendants' moving papers.

Second, the Special Master's methodologies and policy pronouncements undeniably inflict "an actual, concrete injury." The Special Master's actions establish the limits within which eligible individuals will be compensated, limits that Plaintiffs contend deprive them of the economic compensation to which the Act entitles them.[25] It is undisputed that the Act and private civil suits are mutually exclusive; it is also true the Plaintiffs are rapidly running out of time to make that choice. Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs' case is premature for lack of final agency action would leave Plaintiffs no way out of this Catch-22, by which Defendants would seek to evade judicial scrutiny altogether. Since Plaintiffs have brought this action prior to submitting individual claims and receiving awards, Defendants (wrongly) claim unripeness. Yet, if Plaintiffs brought suit after submitting individual claims and receiving awards, Defendants would surely invoke Section 405(b)(3) of the Act to argue that no judicial review is available once an individual award has been determined.

That the Special Master's conduct subjects Plaintiffs to the daunting choice described above is sufficient to constitute an actual, concrete injury, in satisfaction of the second element of final agency action. See Able v. United States, 88 F.3d 1280, 1290 (2d Cir. 1996) (for purposes of "final agency action" inquiry, plaintiff suffered actual injury from the mere existence of a Department of Defense policy that subjected her to an "impossible choice" even though it had never been applied in her individual case; the "don't ask, don't tell" policy on gays and lesbians in the military would force plaintiff either to reveal her sexual orientation and incur discharge or to conceal her orientation and forego judicial review although she alleged that such concealment violated her constitutional rights). As [25] Importantly, Plaintiffs have alleged, and Defendants cannot dispute on this motion to dismiss, that the Special Master's offer to consider "extraordinary circumstances" is meaningless and does not provide claimants with the complete compensation to which the Act entitles them. Plaintiffs have further the Second Circuit concluded in Able, the Plaintiffs "would suffer greater hardship if judicial review is withheld than would the government if it is not," and accordingly, the requirement of final agency action "has been met." Able, 88 F.3d at 1290.

alleged the gargantuan difference between their "economic loss" as defined in the Act and the Special Master's de facto cap.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motion to dismiss should be denied in all respects.

M. RUBEL, R. PATTON & D. NELSON, PATTON-NELSON PERSONAL CONSUMPTION TABLES 1997-98 UPDATE, JOURNAL OF FORENSIC ECONOMICS (2000) 13

Plaintiffs June Colaio, Victor J. Colaio, Frank John Aquilino, Geraldine Davie, JoAnne Lovett, Nancy N. Pedicini and Maria A. Waring ("Plaintiffs" or the "Colaio Plaintiffs") respectfully submit this Supplemental Memorandum of Law in opposition to Defendants' motion to dismiss the Complaint.[1]

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In moving to dismiss the Colaio Complaint, Defendants misstate, misconstrue and outright dodge Plaintiffs' allegations. Almost without exception, Defendants simply recite, in ritualistic fashion, "deference" the judiciary ordinarily gives to a regulator or agency in a run-of-the-mill administrative law case. To the extent Defendants attempt to insulate their actions with such incantations, they fail because none of the authorities cited supports what Defendants have done in ignoring the plain meaning of this unique Act,[2] which incorporates "applicable State law," eliminates judicial review of awards, and imposes severe limitations on the only alternative to the Fund, disproportionately low recovery for World Trade Center victims in litigation.[3] To the extent Defendants attempt to justify their actions as somehow "consistent" with New York law, they fail again, because the cases cited do not support the arguments advanced.

Although Defendants spend an inordinate amount of their brief trying to justify their calculation of presumed economic loss up to but not beyond the 98th percentile of U.S. income and denying the existence of any "cap" on Fund awards, it is important to note that the failure to publish presumed awards beyond that point and the imposition of a de facto "cap" was only one of the Colaio

[1] The "Complaint" or "Colaio Complaint" referred to herein is the Amended Class Action Complaint in Colaio et al. v. Feinberg et al., No. 03 CV 0558 (AKH), filed February 21, 2003.

[2] Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act of 2001 (the "Act").

Plaintiffs' four challenges.[4] By making that single point the centerpiece of their brief, Defendants strive to portray the Colaio class action as a lawsuit on behalf of a few wealthy individuals. The Complaint speaks for itself: although all of the decedents named in the Complaint were employed by Cantor Fitzgerald or a related company, only a couple of them were "high earners," and the Complaint makes clear that the action is brought on behalf of a class that includes virtually all personal representatives of individuals who perished in the World Trade Center tragedy. (Complaint ¶¶ 21-29.) Every one of those potential claimants is subject to Defendants' same disregard of the wording and intent of the Act.

The Joint Memorandum of Law submitted by the Colaio Plaintiffs together with the plaintiffs in the related Smith and Schneider actions[5] responds to Points I, II, and VI of Defendants' brief. This Supplemental Memorandum of Law addresses Points III and IV of Defendants' brief as it relates to the allegations of the Colaio Complaint. First, we demonstrate that wrongful death awards

[4] As the Court is aware from prior briefing submitted by Plaintiffs, the Complaint challenges Defendants' implementation and administration of the Fund in four separate respects, as follows: (a) calculating, limiting and awarding compensation for economic loss on the basis of after-tax earnings in contravention of applicable New York state law; (b) calculating, limiting and awarding compensation for economic loss for decedents who were not married at the time of their deaths by applying arbitrary and unreasonable consumption rates in contravention of applicable New York state law; (c) calculating, limiting and awarding compensation for economic loss for decedents by utilizing as "average earnings" a 1998-2000 three-year income average and disregarding annualized earnings for 2001 and relevant earnings growth rates, and refusing to consider any elements of compensation other than salary and bonus in contravention of applicable New York state law; and (d) failing to calculate, or to promulgate rules and regulations, or to develop methodologies and schedules for awarding compensation for economic loss for decedents whose "average earnings" exceeded the 98th percentile of individual income in the United States in 2000, and by instituting a de facto, arbitrary, and unreasonable cap on any individual Fund award, in contravention of applicable New York state law. (Complaint ¶ 27.)

always involve a certain amount of "prediction" and "speculation," and that this has been, and is, is acceptable to courts. Accordingly, Defendants' assertion that the uncertainty of economic loss compels their rigid "presumptive award methodology" and "extraordinary circumstances" test is infirm. Second, we address each of Defendants' arguments opposing the Colaio Plaintiffs' four specific challenges to the implementation and administration of the Fund, as alleged in the Complaint, and show that, as a matter of law, Plaintiffs have alleged sustainable causes of action.

Plaintiffs incorporate herein the Statements of Facts contained in both the Joint Memorandum of Law on this motion to dismiss and in their memorandum of law, dated March 14, 2003, previously submitted in support of their own simultaneous motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs further adopt and incorporate herein the applicable legal standards described in detail at the opening of the Argument section of the Joint Memorandum of Law.

ARGUMENT

I. THE REALITY THAT WRONGFUL DEATH AWARDS INVOLVE "PREDICTION" DOES NOT EXCUSE CONDUCT ON THE PART OF THE DEFENDANTS THAT IS ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS.

Two main points are implicated here. First is the Defendants' transparent, and shameless, attempt to distort the relief sought by Plaintiffs and their position in terms of Fund awards that would be consistent with the Act. Second is the illogical "rationale" advanced by the Defendants in a vain attempt to defend the Special Master's arbitrary 98th percentile only pre-emptive award charts.

Plaintiffs in the Colaio action challenge certain rules, regulations and methodologies adopted by the Defendants and sought to be implemented by them in the administration of the Fund and in the process of determining individual compensation awards therefrom made by Special Master Feinberg. They seek to have the same rescinded and replaced with rules that carry out the purposes of the Act. Plaintiffs challenge a tiny fraction of the rules, regulations and methodologies of the Fund and the actions of the Special Master even though there are innumerable areas where challenges could be made. As we have stated time and again, Plaintiffs believe in the Fund, appreciate the complexities of the tasks facing the Special Master, and want the process of application and ultimate compensation awards to begin without being hampered by arbitrary and unfair rules which preordain the outcome before a claimant even has the opportunity to adduce proof of loss.[6] Moreover, Plaintiffs – who are and who represent a broad spectrum of income levels and personal/family situations – have never advocated the viewpoint that the Special Master must, in mechanistic fashion, simply calculate and award Fund compensation that is equivalent to the maximum possible compensatory award a claimant might obtain from a court or jury in a successfully prosecuted wrongful death tort action governed by New York law.[7]

In short, the Defendants – seeking vainly to paint the Plaintiffs as desirous of windfall awards at the expense of the U.S. Treasury (as if it were the Special Master's job to balance the federal budget) – have distorted and mischaracterized Plaintiffs' position. It is the Special Master's job to implement regulations that carry out the Act, and that, by his own pronouncement, provide claimants with predictable and consistent awards without imposing undue burdens upon them.

[6] As detailed in our summary judgment record and brief, this collective desire is, in any event, mandated by the simple fact that the "choice" of private tort litigation is, for the World Trade Center site victims, entirely illusory.

[7] This, of course, could not be possible in any event since the Act prevents any consideration of punitive damages, and since the rules and regulations thereunder cap non-economic loss and all hedonic damages at $250,000 and limit recovery for dependents to $100,000 per child. Moreover, this gossamer thin argument by the government also goes too far since it seems to be based on the specious thinking that the proof of loss adduced by a wrongful death plaintiff at trial will (assuming liability is proved) automatically be translated to verdict/judgment. A New York wrongful death plaintiff's proof at trial is frequently the subject of countervailing evidence, and courts and juries frequently render verdicts/judgments that are considerably less than the amounts sought.

As to the second point pertaining to so-called "high earners," the position advanced by the Defendants, without citation or authority and seemingly decreed deus ex machina by Mr. Feinberg, is itself nothing more than rank speculation. (See Def. Mem. at 48-52.) Initially, while national census percentages and the talismanic 98th percentile may mean something as raw statistics, this Court can take judicial notice of the fact (especially true in New York City) that it is absurd to contend that anything above a $231,000 per annum earnings level is "extraordinary high" income and "involves a level of speculation and uncertainty not present in ordinary cases." There is simply nothing unusual, or any less predictable, about the many thousands and thousands of business people, professionals, brokers, analysts, shop and small business owners (etc., etc., etc.) who have earnings well into the mid- and even upper six figures levels even if, comparatively speaking, they represent a small percentage of the statistical population. Moreover, here again, the Complaint's allegations must be accepted, and it is clear why presumptive award charts have not been promulgated beyond the 98th percentile level: because the Defendants know that the same would readily show awards that extend well beyond the de facto cap the Special Master seeks to impose. (Complaint ¶¶ 70, 71.)

Plaintiffs do not deny that the Special Master's task in every Fund claim involves "prediction" and "a certain amount of speculation," as Defendants suggest. (Def. Mem. at 46.) It is tautological to assert that wrongful death awards involve estimation and prognostication. However, the cases Defendants cite do nothing to detract from the fact that reasonably acceptable prediction is possible. For instance, in Farrar v. Brooklyn Union Gas Co., 73 N.Y.2d 802, 537 N.Y.S.2d 26 (1988) (Def. Mem. at 46),[8] the administrator bringing a wrongful death action claimed that, had the deceased lived five years longer, the estate would have been entitled to a federal estate tax credit and no federal estate tax would have been owed; that contention assumed, among other things, that the deceased's tax status would not change and that the tax law itself would not change. New York's highest court held that the non-earned, non-fixed tax credit the administrator was proposing was based on too many future, changeable events. Farrar, 73 N.Y.2d at 803. Nothing in Plaintiffs' Complaint even remotely resembles such a flimsy claim.

Feldman v. Allegheny Airlines, Inc., 524 F.2d 384 (2d Cir. 1975) (Def. Mem. at 46), decided under Connecticut law, found error in calculating a young woman's lost earnings without lowering the calculated salary element for the 8-year period during which, the evidence showed, she had intended to work part-time while raising children. 524 F.2d at 388. In Kaczkowski v. Bolubasz, 421 A.2d 1027 (Pa. 1980) (Def. Mem. at 46), the court overruled prior Pennsylvania law that had prevented the introduction of evidence of lost potential productivity, stating that "the assertion that productivity factors are too speculative to consider in computing lost future earnings" is "fallacious." 421 A.2d at 1033. Indeed, the Kaczkowski court expressly acknowledged that wrongful death damages involve some speculation, but that the rule is probability, and the law does not require that proof of damages conform to a standard of "mathematical exactness." Id. at 1030.

Mono v. Peter Pan Bus Lines, Inc., 13 F. Supp. 2d 471 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), also cited by Defendants (Def. Mem. at 46), actually proves Plaintiffs' point. The court there stated that under New York law, "pecuniary injuries" – equivalent to "economic loss" in the instant case – is "broadly construed." Id. at 477. The court also recognized that in a wrongful death action, there can never be "certainty" of proof, but "the evidence may be received if there is a sufficient probability of [the] decedent's future earnings," and "expected changes in the decedent's future earnings" are properly considered "where it is probable that such changes were forthcoming." Id. at 478. At issue in Mono was evidence regarding the decedent's future earnings as a full-time bookkeeper, where although she had been not been working full-time prior to death, the evidence showed her intent to do so in the future, and the predictions of future earnings were "grounded in historical data" about her earning capacity. Id. at 479-80. To the extent this case is relevant to Plaintiffs' claims, it simply shows that what they have offered and can offer as proof of future earnings is of vastly more probative value than the Mono court required.

Plaintiffs understand that they bear some level of evidentiary burden in order to file a claim with the Fund. They further understand that the Special Master is the arbiter of that evidence, and that he is empowered to make decisions on issues presented by the proof. He is not, however, allowed to simply ignore such proof (he "shall review"), and he cannot evade the statutory obligation (he "shall. . . determine. . . the extent of the harm to the claimant. . .").

Defendants also point to the Act's direction to the Special Master to promulgate "procedural and substantive rules" for administering the Act as justifying their methodologies. Ignoring the Act's express incorporation of "applicable State law" in the calculation of "economic loss," Defendants argue that express authority to "determine compensation" "includes" the authority to decide "how to determine compensation." (Def. Mem. at 45.) Defendants' reliance on United States v. Fior D'Italia, Inc., 536 U.S. 238, 122 S. Ct. 2117 (2002), for this proposition is curiously misplaced. It is difficult to imagine how Defendants could seriously propose that this Court look for guidance to Fior D'Italia – neither a wrongful death case nor even a government benefits case – which does not involve a determination of "compensation" at all. Fior D'Italia is a federal tax case in which a restaurant sought a refund on unreported tips, challenging the IRS's use of an average tip percentage from credit card receipts. 122 S. Ct. at 2117. In other words, the case dealt with financial facts that were unknown because employees had deliberately failed to report or had under-reported their tip income; this is light years away from Plaintiffs' case, in which the decedents' financial information is known and readily available to the Special Master. In fact, the Special Master's forms call for the reporting of that information, and all such information could and would be supplied in applications to the Fund. In any event, the statutory provision on which the Fior D'Italia Court based its initial deference to the IRS – before evaluating the reasonableness of the methodology employed – is a far cry from the unambiguous language of the Act upon which Plaintiffs rest their claims here.[9]

Defendants assert that "[a]lthough New York law does not govern the determination of compensation" – a contention Plaintiffs adamantly dispute – New York wrongful death law "uses presumptive methodologies." (Def. Mem. at 52, n.29, citing In re Kaiser, 198 Misc. 582, 100 N.Y.S.2d 218 (Surr. Ct. 1950), and In re Muccini, 118 Misc. 2d 38, 460 N.Y.S.2d 680 (Surr. Ct. 1983).) Kaiser involved a negotiated settlement of a wrongful death action resulting from a car accident, and the issue was not, as here, the total award, but rather, how the net amount of the settlement should be divided among the decedent's distributees. The court held that the settlement should be distributed to the spouse and next of kin based on the period they might reasonably have looked to the decedent for support; thus, by using the decedent's life expectancy as the denominator and each dependent's respective years of anticipated support as numerators, the court developed a formula for "dividing the pie," as it were. In the instant case, of course, the Fund is an unlimited fund

[9] The Supreme Court relied on 26 U.S.C. § 6201(a), under which the IRS, as delegate of the Secretary of the Treasury, "is authorized and required to make the inquiries, determinations, and assessments of all taxes . . . which have not been duly paid . . . . " See United States v. Fior D'Italia, 122 S. Ct. at 2122.

(Complaint ¶ 31) – not a negotiated settlement fund, and the issue before this Court has nothing to do with internal family splits of any Fund awards. Muccini, also a wrongful death case, likewise involved the seeking of approval for a particular intra-family distribution of a negotiated settlement. In short, neither case has any application here.

Defendants also incant the defense that their presumptive award methodology "easily satisfies" the "extraordinarily deferential standard" of Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837 (1984). (Def. Mem. at 45.) However, as discussed in the Joint Memorandum of Law, Defendants cannot use Chevron to insulate actions not promulgated pursuant to notice-and-comment rulemaking, such as the de facto cap on awards and the use of an average of three-years' prior income discussed below at Points II.C and II.D. The law is well-settled that informal agency action does not enjoy Chevron deference.[10] Even if Chevron deference were appropriate, the Court would still be required to analyze whether the regulation is substantively arbitrary and capricious. See Chevron, 467 U.S. at 844 (even where deference to notice-and-comment rulemaking is appropriate, reviewing court cannot uphold regulation if it is "arbitrary, capricious, or manifestly contrary to the statute"). Each and every one of the challenges Plaintiffs make are to rules, regulations or methodologies – or just plain fiat – that are contrary to the Act.

[10] See, e.g., Christensen v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576, 587 (2000) ("Interpretations such as those in opinion letters – like interpretations contained in policy statements agency manuals, and enforcement guidelines, all of which lack the force of law – do not warrant Chevron-style deference"); Reno v. Koray, 515 U.S. 50, 61 (1995) (Bureau of Prisons internal guideline not "subject to the rigors of the 'Administrative Procedur[e] Act, including public notice and comment" entitled to only limited, not Chevron, deference) (internal quotation and citation omitted); EEOC v. Arabian American Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 256 (1991) (EEOC guidelines not subject to Chevron); Catskill Mountains Chapter of Trout Unlimited, Inc. v. City of New York, 273 F.3d 481, 491 (2d Cir. 2001) (EPA's policy statements, opinion letters and reports to Congress do not "come close to the sort of formal, binding articulation of an agency's views that would justify Chevron deference").

II. IN FOUR WAYS CHALLENGED BY PLAINTIFFS, THE IMPLEMENTATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE FUND IS IN VIOLATION OF THE ACT, CONTRARY TO NEW YORK LAW, AND ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS.

A. Undervaluation of Fund Awards By Calculating Economic Loss On The Basis of After-Tax Earnings.

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that New York law requires the use of before-tax earnings in calculating economic loss in a wrongful death action, and that Defendants have consistently violated New York law (and thus, the Act that incorporates it) by using after-tax earnings of a decedent, resulting in significantly lower awards to Fund claimants. (Complaint ¶¶ 53-56.) As an example, Plaintiffs allege that for a claimant whose decedent had average earnings of $225,000, the Special Master's award computed on an after-tax basis is approximately $3,350,000, whereas an award calculated before-tax is approximately $4,475,000. (Complaint ¶ 55.)

Nowhere in their memorandum of law do Defendants cite a single New York case or New York statute supporting their after-tax approach. In fact, Defendants tacitly admit that Plaintiffs' interpretation of New York law is correct, by citing Farrar, 73 N.Y.2d 802. In that case, the New York Court of Appeals expressly stated the well-settled New York law that "future tax liability is not considered when determining pecuniary loss" in a wrongful death action. Id. at 804.

Ignoring New York law, however, Defendants maintain that their after-tax approach is "reasonable" because it has been "specifically approved" by the United States Supreme Court. (Def. Mem. at 54.) Defendants' reliance on Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Liepelt, 444 U.S. 490 (1980), is decidedly off center. Liepelt was a wrongful death action brought in Illinois state court under the Federal Employers' Liability Act ("FELA"), 45 U.S.C. § 51 et seq., which – unlike the Act involved here – does not contain a definition of "economic loss" tied to "applicable State law."[11] The Supreme Court in Liepelt held that in a FELA action, a state court may not exclude evidence of tax liability. 444 U.S. at 490-91. In the Act under which Plaintiffs assert their claims, not only did Congress incorporate "applicable State law," it also created an exclusive federal cause of action for which this Court will have exclusive jurisdiction and will apply state law unless preempted by or inconsistent with federal law.[12] Act § 408(b)(3). As a matter of law, the provisions of the Act on which Plaintiffs here rely are not inconsistent with or preemptive of New York law. Defendants' weak allusion to Supreme Court authority in an entirely different context is tantamount to an admission of Plaintiffs' allegations.

Instead of using "applicable State law," i.e., New York's law on use of pre-tax earnings in calculating economic loss for wrongful death, the Special Master "elect[ed] to use a 'blended after-tax discount rate[ ]' to compute the present value of awards, and to 'adjust[ ] the discount rate to reflect current yields on mid- to long-term U.S. Treasury securities." (Def. Mem. at 23-24, citing 67 Fed. Reg. at 11,238.) Defendants contend that this approach will involve "more complex computation" but will "better reflect the different ages of the victims the fact that the survivors will receive awards reflecting different assumed future years of life." (Def. Mem. at 24, citing 67 Fed. Reg. at 11, 238.) Given Defendants' blunderbuss attack on Plaintiffs' challenges as necessitating more complex computation (Def. Mem. at 5), the Special Master 's "election" – as if the Act presents him with two or more options from which to choose, which it does not – of this methodology is somewhat [11] Indeed, the Supreme Court has held that FELA supersedes inconsistent state wrongful death laws, so that if a person is killed while employed under the circumstances FELA provides, an action will lie only under FELA. See St. Louis, Iron Mountain & S. Ry. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U.S. 702 (1913).

[12] The law to be applied in such a civil action will be the law of the State where the crash occurred – i.e., for World Trade Center victim cases, the law of the State of New York.

baffling. And, (again) apart from the fact that such disputation of facts is beyond a motion to dismiss, it is telling that Defendants do not even attempt to argue (let alone prove) that the Special Master's "better" method equals or exceeds the before-tax approval mandated by New York law.

B. Use of Arbitrary and Unreasonable Consumption Rates For Persons Not Married at the Time of Their Deaths.

A number of the Plaintiffs' decedents (and many decedents of the putative class members) were single when they died on September 11, 2001. (Complaint ¶ 59.) In their Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' methodology for calculating the consumption rate of the decedent, which in turn is used as a factor to calculate "economic loss" (stated by the Act to be governed by "applicable State law") reveals a shocking disparity between the consumption rate of a single decedent versus that of a decedent who was married. (Complaint ¶ 57.) As an example, Plaintiffs allege that under Defendants' methodology, a single decedent with an annual income of $70,000 has a consumption rate of 60.8 percent, whereas a married decedent has a consumption rate of only 17.4 percent, and that Defendants' tabular dichotomy between single and married decedents leads to grossly disproportionate and discriminatory awards from the Fund. (Complaint ¶ 58.)

Defendants appear not to dispute the Complaint's allegations regarding discrimination between single and married decedents.[13] Their brief merely refers to three articles in economics journals. (See Def. Mem. at 55-58.) Only one of these articles, M. Rubel, R. Patton, & D. Nelson, Patton-Nelson Personal Consumption Tables 1997-98 Update, Journal of Forensic Economics, is even mentioned in Defendants' Explanation of Process – and in a footnote, at that.[14] The other two economics articles cited in the text of Defendants' brief are not included in or referenced in any manner in the Explanation of Process (and again, are beyond the pale of a motion to dismiss).

Buried in a footnote, however, Defendants make the assertion that New York law "provides no guidance" in connection with consumption rates. (Def. Mem. at 58 n.35.) Nevertheless, the cases in that footnote prove the very point Plaintiffs have made in their Complaint: that consumption rates cannot be set in an across-the-board fashion, but must depend on the circumstances of each case. Connecticut Nat'l Bank v. OMI Corp., 928 F.2d 39 (2d Cir. 1991), cited by Defendants, was an admiralty action brought in this court for wrongful death. In determining the proper consumption rate for a married individual, Judge Carter considered a fifty-percent rate that had been used in certain other cases but concluded that the facts of the case, including the amount of time the decedent spent away from home, warranted use of a personal consumption rate of twenty-five percent. The Second Circuit affirmed that finding, holding that a consumption rate "is not a rule of law" but a finding of fact. Connecticut Nat'l Bank, 928 F.2d at 47. Nor does McDougald v. Garber, 132 Misc. 2d 457, 504 N.Y.S.2d 383 (Sup. Ct. 1986), aff'd, 135 A.D.2d 80, 524 N.Y.S.2d 192 (1988), aff'd as modified on other grounds, 73 N.Y.2d 246, 538 N.Y.S.2d 937 (1989)[15] support Defendants' use of blind, across-the-board consumption rates. McDougald was not a wrongful death case, but one involving a patient rendered comatose by medical malpractice. In an effort to reduce the jury's award for lost earnings, a defendant argued that the award should have been reduced by a certain consumption rate, but the court held that the trier of fact was free to decide that rate based on the facts adduced, and not necessarily to accept the rate advocated by the defendant. In other words, both of these cases reject the use of rigid presumptions of consumption rate in favor of a more flexible approach based on the facts.

Defendants' fall-back position is that the high consumption rates challenged by Plaintiffs are merely presumed, and could be altered if the claimant could demonstrate in an individual hearing that the presumed rates should not apply. This is the "Catch-22" Defendants have used throughout the history of the Fund. They turn a blind eye to the statutory fact that once a claim to the Fund is substantially complete, a claimant must waive all civil litigation rights and will have no judicial review of the Special Master's award. Act §§ 405(b)(3), 405(c)(3)(B).

Finally, since the Act and the Special Master's own criteria emphasize that proof burdens for Fund claimants should be minimized, the challenged methodology which discriminates against single claimants has it exactly backwards. If there is to be any across-the-board presumptive consumption rate, it must be on the low end of the range of possibilities, and if the evidence adduced (or not adduced) were to justify a higher rate, the Special Master would be well within his "individual circumstances" discretion to increase the rate and thereby lower the resulting award. The Act, and incorporated New York law, simply do not permit an arbitrarily low starting point and presumption against which a claimant must struggle to receive compensation for economic loss.

c. Undervaluation of Awards By Using "Average Earnings" for Three Years Prior to Death, Disregarding 2001 Annualized Earnings and Excluding Compensation Other Than Salary and Bonus in Awards.

Many decedents who were victims at the World Trade Center site worked in the financial services, securities, and related industries, in which forms of compensation other than salary and bonus are commonplace, and many of them were young and died during the first few years of their professional careers, just after beginning to see significant salary increases in the year 2001. (Complaint ¶¶ 64-65.) Plaintiffs allege that the Special Master has ignored comprehensive and irrefutable earnings and growth rate data provided to him on behalf of certain claimants, insisting instead on adhering to national 2000 census data which does not reflect the true experience of earnings growth for many class members. (Complaint ¶ 64.) Plaintiffs have also alleged that the Special Master has refused to include forms of compensation other than salary and bonus in calculating "economic loss." (Complaint ¶ 65.)

Defendants assert, first, that a three-year average gives a "more accurate prediction" of a person's future income. (Def. Mem. at 53.) That bald assertion is followed by only a footnote in which they claim that the Special Master has no obligation to consider New York law, but that in fact New York courts "routinely use a decedent's average earnings preceding death to compute future lost earnings." (Def. Mem. at 53 n.31 (emphasis added), citing Ritter v. State, 74 Misc. 2d 80, 344 N.Y.S.2d 257 (Ct. Cl. 1972), and Bankers Trust Co. v. R & Z Television of N.Y., Inc., 4 A.D.2d 690, 164 N.Y.S.2d 488 (2d Dep't 1957), aff'd, 4 N.Y.2d 947, 175 N.Y.S.2d 821 (1958).) The parentheticals attached to these citations suggest that Ritter permits the use of "average weekly earnings" for "three years before" death, and that Bankers Trust permits the use of "average annual income for seven years." In actuality, Bankers Trust contains no such statement, and Defendants have apparently lifted it from a commercial "keynote" that finds no support in the court's written opinion.

Moreover, Bankers Trust, decided in 1957, has never been cited again in the past 46 years. Ritter, decided in 1972, has been cited four times in the past 31 years, but never for the proposition that use of average income from years prior to death is proper under New York law. The numerous, cohesive, more recent and higher-court authorities Plaintiffs have cited in their own summary judgment motion plainly demonstrate that Ritter and Bankers Trust do not reflect the current law of New York. It goes without saying that given these two cases' lack of subsequent citation, Defendants' statement that New York courts "routinely" "average" past income is wrong and deliberately misleading.

In any event, this Court is required to accept the allegations of the Complaint, and those allegations are clear that incomes for many young decedents were on the rise, so that the three-year average of past years' earnings is not a true reflection of economic loss. Moreover, in responding to the particularized allegations under this heading, Defendants have failed to address Plaintiffs' claims that the Special Master has refused to consider forms of compensation other than salary and bonus. (Complaint ¶ 65.) Accordingly, this Court must accept them as true.

Here again, the Special Master's challenged methodology establishes a presumption that is not consonant with the Act, and then places the burden on the claimant to prove otherwise. Thus, it is hardly an answer to contend, as Defendants do (Def. Mem. at 52-53), that the regulations provide that alternatives to a three-year average not including the most recent year (2001) will be considered if the Special Master deems them to be "appropriate."

D. Failure to Calculate Or Promulgate Rules For Economic Loss Where Decedents' Income Exceeded the 98th Percentile; Imposing a De Facto, Arbitrary and Unreasonable Cap on Individual Awards.

The Complaint alleges that a de facto "cap" has been placed on Fund awards and that the Special Master has failed even to compute or calculate economic loss. (Complaint ¶¶ 70, 77.) These allegations must be accepted as true.

Defendants misstate Plaintiffs' attack on the de facto "cap" imposed by the Special Master by suggesting that what Plaintiffs are challenging is the particular percentile at which their rigid "presumed awards" were cut off. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have challenged "the particular percentage selected (i.e., 98%)" as arbitrary and capricious, but that agencies enjoy "wide discretion" in selecting a numerical or percentage "standard." (Def. Mem. at 48 n.28.) Defendants are wrong in several respects.

First, what Plaintiffs have challenged is the Special Master's failure and refusal to publish presumed award charts for annual incomes that are not extraordinarily high, particularly in the financial and securities industries in New York City. The results of the Special Master's actions are that (a) he has prevented potential claimants from making informed decisions as to whether they should file Fund applications or pursue judicial remedies, and (b) by not publishing such presumed awards, he has clothed the operation of the Fund in secrecy and deception, publicly stating that there is "no cap" on Fund awards, but privately capping awards for so-called "high earners." (Complaint ¶¶ 70, 73.)

Second, as discussed above at Point I, Defendants are not entitled to Chevron deference on this point. Although informal agency conduct other than notice and comment rulemaking can sometimes be subject to Chevron deference, such deference is only warranted where Congress intended for the regulator to take "action with the effect of law." United States v. Mead Corp., 533

U.S. 218, 230 (2001). The Special Master's application of an arbitrary cap on awards cannot reflect the proper exercise of authority granted by Congress, particularly since Congress itself considered and rejected a cap on awards. (Complaint ¶ 42.) Even if Plaintiffs were challenging only the regulation and Chevron-style deference were appropriate, the Court would still be required to analyze whether the regulation is substantively arbitrary and capricious. See Chevron, 467 U.S. at 844 (even where deference to notice-and-comment rulemaking is appropriate, reviewing court cannot uphold regulation if it is "arbitrary, capricious, or manifestly contrary to the statute"). Defendants' 98th percentile presumption and cap on awards fails even under that standard.

At any rate, the case law Defendants cite for their strawman argument that Plaintiffs' attack is on the choice of the 98th percentile as a cut-off point for presumed awards is irrelevant. In AT&T Corp. v. FCC, 220 F.3d 607 (D.C. Cir. 2000), the communications giant attacked the FCC's approval of an application by Bell Atlantic to provide certain services, Bell Atlantic already having received the approval of New York State regulators. AT&T asserted that the FCC had not provided reasoned support for its conclusion that Bell Atlantic had met the required "on-time performance rate." New York's state regulators had advocated 95% as the standard but had also said 90% was acceptable in permitting a competitor to enter the market, and the D.C. Circuit thus did not find the FCC's approval "arbitrary and capricious." 220 F.3d at 627. In Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. v. Muszynski, 268 F.3d 91 (2d Cir. 2001), a citizens' group challenged the EPA's determination that the amount of phosphorous in New York reservoirs was within a "margin of safety." Id. at 102-03. In WorldCom, Inc. v. FCC, 238 F.3d 449 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (erroneously cited by Defendants as Second Circuit law), long distance providers challenged an FCC order granting local exchange carriers pricing flexibility to guard against the possibility of anticompetitive conduct. The court affirmed the FCC's determination but, significantly for Plaintiffs' case here, stated that "an agency may not pluck a number out of thin air . . . . " Id. at 461. The Complaint alleges that the Special Master believes he can do just that – and that he has without specifying a precise dollars-and-cents figure. (Complaint ¶ 49.)

Defendants argue that the Special Master is simply "following" a supposed "legally recognized principle" that calculating economic loss for high earners is too "difficult," and therefore, any attempt to employ his "presumed award" methodology "might be wholly inappropriate if mechanically applied to the highest level incomes." (Def. Mem. at 47.) Thus, Defendants leap from the easily understandable proposition that prediction and some level of informed "speculation" are involved in all wrongful death awards into their defensive bunker that where "extraordinarily high incomes" of decedents are at issue, the projection involves a "level of uncertainty" not present in "ordinary" cases. (Def. Mem. at 47.) In support of this contention, Defendants offer isolated sound bytes from two cases, McWeeney v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R.R. Co., 282 F.2d 34 (2d Cir. 1960), overruled on other grounds, Norfolk & W. Ry. v. Liepelt, 444 U.S. 490 (1980), and Machline v. National Helicopter Corp., No. 94 Civ. 8456, 1997 WL 786937 (S.D.N.Y. June 17, 1997). Neither case supports the view that, even in the cases of the highest-earning decedents, facts may be ignored in favor of unsupported "presumed" methodologies.

Significantly, McWeeney was a disability case brought by a railway worker under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. §§ 51-60 (FELA) – not a wrongful death action under New York law. The issue in McWeeney was whether the jury should have been instructed to deduct from any recovery for lost earning power the amount in taxes the injured party would have been required to pay on such earnings. The Second Circuit held such an instruction should not have been given. McWeeney, 282 F.2d at 39. Strictly in dicta, the court speculated that there might be cases in which "some adjustment" for income taxes should and would be made by a jury even without an instruction, citing incomes in excess of $100,000 (in 1960), where as the income levels rise, the projection of future income is "more conjectural."[16] 282 F.2d at 38-39. Not a word in McWeeney authorizes or even suggests that a judge (or Special Master) should simply throw up his hands and refuse to calculate economic loss for high-earning individuals, and particularly not under New York law.

Similarly, Machline, 1997 WL 786937, does not advance Defendants' argument one iota. In Machline, the decedent had been a rags-to-riches entrepreneur who had created several companies, but most of the "unusual wealth" he had generated was tied up in corporate ventures. Id. at *1. He was not a "conventional wage-earner" and his holdings had a "complex structure." Id. at *1. The decedent drew a very small salary from his wealthy corporate enterprises, and the plaintiff offered only speculation as to whether, at some point in his lifetime, the decedent would have decided to draw a higher salary for himself in lieu of investing further in his corporate enterprises. Id. at *1. The court held that what the decedent could have drawn, as distinguished from what he did draw, was not the basis for calculating pecuniary loss. Id. at *5. Nothing in Machline suggests that, had the deceased drawn a high salary, the court would have had any difficulty calculating pecuniary loss under the New York wrongful death statute. By the same token, nothing in Plaintiffs' Complaint implies that any of their decedents could be compared to Mr. Machline. Indeed, quite the opposite is true for those individuals who were "conventional wage earners" in the financial/securities industry and earned conventionally high salaries.

[16] McWeeney is, of course, completely at odds with New York's current wrongful death law, which prohibits the deduction of deduction of tax liability in computing future earnings. Query, as well, what 1960's $100,000 income level would translate into today.

Defendants disingenuously contend that the presumed award methodology does not suggest a "cap" on awards. (Def. Mem. at 43-45.) They do not concede – nor could they – that any "cap" on awards from the Fund could be consistent with New York law. Indeed, by citing Machline, Defendants implicitly admit that such a contention would be specious. The wealthy decedent in Machline was a Brazilian executive who boarded a helicopter in New York and died when it crashed in New Jersey. The parties to the wrongful death action agreed that the applicable law was that of either New York or New Jersey. Id. at *1. Relying solely on the language of the New York wrongful death statute, Judge Sand approved of the parties' choice of-law agreement, pointing out that Brazil had "a ceiling on allowable recovery in wrongful death cases" which would arguably be against the public policy of New York. Id.

Defendants proceed defensively to add that "even if" a wealthy decedent's future income could be projected with reasonable certainty, "the likelihood that the decedent would have contributed to the support of surviving family members also becomes increasingly speculative . . . ." (Def. Mem. at 48.) Defendants' case law "support" for this consists of Breckir v. Lewis, 21 A.D.2d 546, 251 N.Y.S.2d 77 (1st Dep't 1964), aff'd, 15 N.Y.2d 1027, 260 N.Y.2d 178 (1965), and Franchell v. Sims, 73 A.D.2d 1, 7, 424 N.Y.S.2d 959, 963 (4th Dep't 1980). Breckir is a wrongful death case involving a college student, not yet employed – unlike any of the Colaio Plaintiffs' decedents. The court's decision that the jury's award to her parents for economic loss was too high rests on the absence of evidence of her intent to benefit her well-off parents, the court holding that "[f]ollowing normal developments, there is every reason to believe that before they would want to benefit from her financially she would be married and contributing to her own family." 251 N.Y.S.2d at 80. In Franchell, the court set aside as inadequate a jury verdict to the parents of a 22 year-old high school graduate who worked as an inspector at a factory. The evidence showed that he worked steadily, that his hourly pay rate was increasing, that he maintained a close relationship with his parents, and that he performed valuable services for them and made generous financial contributions to them. 424 N.Y.S.2d at 961-62. The court stated that although determination of wrongful death loss is "complex" because the loss tends to be "uncertain and problematical," fair compensation to a parent for an adult child's life may properly include probable, or even possible, benefits which might inure to the parents from their child's entire life," and that the decedent's earnings potential to support his parents if they should be in need are among the factors to be considered. Id. at 962.

As their catch-all, fall-back argument, Defendants claim that the presumed awards are not final awards, and to the extent claimants have evidence to present that is contrary to the presumptions, they are free to do so and have the presumed award adjusted accordingly. (Def. Mem. at 45, 49.) This is particularly unpersuasive because Defendants' carefully worded brief states that if claimants "can attempt to demonstrate extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed" and that the Special Master "may" (not will) modify the award if they actually prove such circumstances. (Def. Mem. at 6, 17.) Defendants' shallow argument cannot surmount the Complaint, in which the Colaio Plaintiffs allege that even when presented with facts contradicting the presumptions, the Special Master ignores the evidence. (Complaint ¶¶ 71.) It also repeats the "Catch-22" trap discussed above.

Defendants' "extraordinary circumstances" test is unsupported and unsupportable. It states that the Special Master, in determining presumptive awards, shall determine whether "[t]he claimant presents extraordinary circumstances not adequately addressed by the presumptive award." 28 C.F.R. § 104.33(f)(2). Under this provision, the burden is on the claimant to present such "extraordinary circumstances." The Complaint alleges that there is no basis in the Act for requiring a demonstration of extraordinary circumstances by the claimant; and no basis in the Act for placing upon them such a high burden of proof. (Complaint ¶ 67.) Indeed, the Complaint alleges that in passing the Act, Congress understood that there were great disparities in the World Trade Center victims' incomes, and that the recovery on some of their deaths would be far beyond that of others. (Complaint ¶ 42.) Finally, it is, as noted above, simply nonsensical – in light of the New York City class which Plaintiffs seek to represent – to contend that earning more than $231,000 per year is, in and of itself, an "extraordinary circumstance."

In their brief, Defendants contend that "evidence of income beyond the 98th percentile may be considered as part of an 'extraordinary circumstances' determination" (Def. Mem. at 49 (emphasis added)). It is clear beyond cavil that Congress did not seek to punish, nor place extraordinary burdens of proof, on those who dared to be successful in terms of their earnings capacity and history. Regardless of how much higher than $231,000 a decedent's income was, the Special Master's methodology presumes the correct award to be equal to that for $231,000 and places the burden on the claimant to prove otherwise by showing "extraordinary circumstances."[17] The wording, Defendants contend, simply means that some claimants' circumstances may not be "adequately addressed by a simple mathematical formula." (Def. Mem. at 49.) The Complaint, however, alleges that when shown unmistakable evidence of high or extraordinarily high incomes, the Special Master has failed to compute or even to calculate the value of "economic loss" as the Act requires. (Complaint ¶ 70.) The Complaint further alleges a pattern of formal, informal, and publicly reported admissions by the Special Master, all to the effect that he has made a political judgment that there is a cap number beyond which no Fund award will extend. (Complaint §§ 71-77.) And, apart from the well-pleaded allegations, there can be little doubt (as Plaintiffs' record evidence on their own motion demonstrates) by this point that the Special Master's refusal to publish charts for high earners and all the fog about "needs" and "extraordinary circumstances" exist to enforce the arbitrary limitations even as he continues to pronounce that there is no cap.

Defendants rely on American Hospital Ass'n v. NLRB, 499 U.S. 606 (1991) (Def. Mem. at 51), which is easily distinguished. Under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), the NLRB is to decide the appropriate bargaining unit "in each case," but the Board issued a rule on hospitals that said that with exceptions, including presentation of "extraordinary circumstances," eight defined employee units were appropriate for acute care hospitals. The Supreme Court compared the rule with the statutory provision and concluded that the natural meaning of "in each case" was in each case where the employer and employees disagreed. 499 U.S. at 606. In the case at bar, the Act directs the Special Master to review each claim and make an award determination based on the factors set forth in Section 405(b)(1)(B), including "economic loss" as defined by "applicable State law." While Plaintiffs recognize that for agencies such as the NLRB some across-the-board rules are helpful in providing guidance to employers and employees, the fact that the NLRB chose the term "extraordinary circumstances" as one instance in which exceptions to its rules for bargaining units could occur hardly justifies the imposition of an "extraordinary circumstances" burden on Fund claimants. Indeed, Defendants' stretching for such citation and authority only underscores the uniqueness of the Fund.

Defendants also assert that under Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292 (1993), federal agencies granted authority to make individualized decisions may establish and rely upon "reasonable presumptions and generic rules." (Def. Mem. at 50.) The Flores decision – which simply said the Immigration and Naturalization Service "need not forswear" the use of reasonable presumptions and generic rules – dealt with an INS regulation regarding custodians for juvenile aliens, and the Court upheld the regulation because it was constitutional and in accord with the language of the statute at issue. Flores, 507 U.S. at 313-315.[18]

In sum, Defendants have failed to provide any cogent argument suporting their deviation from the Act's text and intent.

[18] There is a similar disconnect with the other cases relied on by Defendants: Heckler v. Campbell, 461 U.S. 458 (1983), and Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. NRDC, 435 U.S. 519 (1978). For instance, Vermont Yankee involved the granting of a license to operate a nuclear power plant, and it stands for the proposition that an administrative agency is free to fashion rules of procedure and to "pursue methods of inquiry capable of permitting them to discharge their [ ] duties." 435 U.S. at 543, quoting FCC v. Schreiber, 381 U.S. 279, 290 (1965). In contrast, the instant case involves an agency substituting presumptions for inquiry. Heckler, involving disability under the Social Security Act, simply held that the agency could promulgate medical-vocational guidelines because the determination of the types and numbers of jobs a person with a certain disability could handle was not unique to each claimant and did not require a case-by-case determination. 461 U.S. at 467. Again, this seems very different from the issues raised in the Colaio Complaint.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motion to dismiss the Colaio Complaint should be denied in its entirety.

I PRELIMINARY STATEMENT 1

II DISCUSSION

POINT I: THE ACT CONTAINS NO DELEGATION OF DISCRETION TO DEFENDANTS OF THE KIND THEY CLAIM, AND SUCH A DELEGATION WOULD PRESENT GRAVE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS IF IT DID 1

A. No principle of "administrative law" shields defendants from the necessity that they demonstrate a proper delegation of the discretion that they claim under the Act, or shields the factual record in this declaratory-judgment action from full, unrestricted use and scrutiny by this Court 9

B. If Defendants' Claim of "Discretion" Were Even Arguably Supportable under the Terms of the Act, and It Is Not, Any Such Attempted Delegation of Power by Congress to These Defendants, or Any of Them, Would Violate Fundamental Principles Governing the Permissibility of Such Delegations of Power 13

C. Well established principles Require this Court to Avoid Defendants' Radical Interpretation of the Act by Instead Interpreting it So as to Exclude Such Claimed Discretion - a Discretion Which, If it Had Been Granted by Congress, Would Inevitably Raise Grave Constitutional Issues 19

III CONCLUSION 24

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiff Schneider submits the following supplemental memorandum of law, addressing the Constitutional issues raised by the defendants' claim that Congress delegated to them the discretion to impose caps or limitations on compensation under the Act. Plaintiff Schneider also adopts and jointly submits, along with plaintiffs Colaio and Smith, the joint memorandum of law in opposition to defendants' motion to dismiss under F.R.C.P. Rule 12c.

POINT I

THE ACT CONTAINS NO DELEGATION OF DISCRETION TO DEFENDANTS OF THE KIND THEY CLAIM, AND SUCH A DELEGATION WOULD PRESENT GRAVE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS IF IT DID.

In this Point, we respond to defendants' contention that plaintiff Schneider's "constitutional claims" are "meritless" (Def. Mem., Point V, pp. 58-63). To do so properly, however, we must place such constitutional issues in proper perspective and context, so that they are seen and considered not as abstractions disconnected from the concrete facts and issues of this case, but rather as vital aspects and dimensions of what is at stake in this declaratory-judgment action.

Caps on damages are so clearly and self-evidently political issues as to make them exclusively legislative prerogatives which cannot be delegated to an administrator without violating the Constitutional principle of separation of powers. Moreover, the creation of different categories of claimants, whether they are based upon wealth or any other classification, is similarly a strictly legislative prerogative, and not the province of an administrator. It should be self evident that the function of an administrator is to implement the Act as written and to apply it uniformly and consistently to all eligible claimants.

Preliminarily, it should be re-emphasized that the allegations in all three complaints that the defendants have imposed a de facto cap are deemed admitted upon the defendants' motion under Rule 12c. Since defendants admit that they have no legal authority to impose a cap, all of the defendants' arguments upon their Rule 12c motion are immaterial, since the only possible defense to the case is to contest, as an issue of fact, whether they are imposing a cap, which they cannot do under Rule 12c. If defendants are, on the contrary, asking the Court to hold that the awarding of a small fraction of proven economic losses is not a cap, (as a matter of law), but rather a novel, previously unheard of concept of "excessiveness", that preposterous legal position is easily disposed of. As we have pointed out above, a limitation upon actual proven economic losses is the very definition of a cap. Conversely, the awarding of an amount significantly below proven, actual economic losses corresponds to the definition of "inadequacy". Certainly, if, as a matter of fact, the defendants have imposed a cap (which we claim they have), the Court cannot give any "deference" to this action, because defendants themselves admit that the Act does not permit a cap and such action by them is manifestly illegal.

It can be stated beyond peradventure of doubt, that the issue of whether compensation under the Act would be capped or limited was a controversial political issue which was in fact considered by Congress. Indeed, caps on various categories of damages, when explicitly imposed by state legislatures are always highly charged political issues, and have been challenged in court upon a variety of State and Federal Constitutional grounds. Where caps have been sustained, it has been upon the basis that their imposition was a matter of legislative prerogative.

Until now, no one had ever had the temerity to suggest (much less argue in Court) that an administrator or Special Master possessed, or could be delegated the power to impose a cap. This is the truly novel position urged upon the Court by defendants. We will demonstrate below that there is nothing in the Act to support such a delegation, and moreover, that such a delegation, even if it could conceivably be found in Section 405(b)(1)(B)(ii), would be impermissible under fundamental constitutional doctrine.

As a part of defendants' "discretion" claim, they attempt to justify their cookie-cutter methodologies utilized for the "wealthy" income earners by reliance upon such legal authorities as United States v. Fior D'Italia, 122 S.Ct. 2117 (2002), holding that a statutory provision granting the IRS assessment authority "must simultaneously grant the IRS power to decide how to make that assessment." Further, defendants state that the express statutory delegation to the Special Master of the authority to "determine" compensation necessarily includes the authority to decide how to determine compensation - a contention which is little more than a play on words and which overlooks that the Congress, in § 402(5) of the Act and other provisions, told the Special Master just what is to be included and how he is to make his determinations of award amounts. The Act specifies in exquisite detail not only the elements of damage but the precise methodology for making the award, ie. to compute the "harm" and then make a mathematical deduction of specific collateral sources in arriving at the final award. These definitions of economic loss, the incorporation by reference of state law, the statutory mandate to "review and determine" and the mathematical deduction of collateral sources, are, to utilize Justice Cardozo's phrase, the " essential features of the plan, its very bone and sinew" . (See A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v U.S., 295 US 495, 554

(1935).[1] Defendants' claim that they can make an inadequate award, which ignores the actual computed economic losses, and then make a precise mathematical deduction of collateral source compensation is simply unintelligible. It is tantamount to saying that Congress authorized defendants to make a precise mathematical deduction from any number they choose out of the air.

Defendants also attempt to support their claim of "discretion" by relying on authorities sustaining adoption of general rules and methodologies by administrative agencies under appropriate circumstances. For example, they argue that their imposition upon plaintiff Schneider and others in the top two percentile of income earners of an additional burden of proof, requiring them to show "extraordinary circumstances" in order to recover more than the reduced amount otherwise available to them under the defendants' procedures, even though those below that threshold will recover the full amount of their economic loss (less the reduction for collateral source compensation) without having to assume such greater burden. Putting aside for the argument that defendants' imposition of this greater burden of proof enables them to arbitrarily determine the amount of awards to "wealthy" claimants, and

[1] At page 62 of defendants' brief, by selective quotation from Whitman v. American Trucking Associations, Inc., 531 US 457 at 475 (2001), defendants imply that the separation of powers principle and its associated doctrines requiring an "intelligible principle" as well as an express and specific delegation of authority in the first place are somehow outdated. Constitutional scholars and practitioners knowledgeable in this area know otherwise. See, e.g. Rotunda & Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law – Substance and Procedure, Section 4.8 (3rd Edition 1999), stating as follows: "Today the Supreme Court will allow Congress to share its legislative power with the executive branch by delegating aspects of that power to executive agencies. Such legislative delegations will be upheld unless Congress abdicates one of its powers to the executive agency or fails to give legislative definition of the scope of the agency's power. (Citations omitted)". See also Tribe, American Constitutional Law, §5-17, at p. 367 (2d Edition 1988) stating: "This is not to say that judicial scrutiny of administrative action has lessened. Indeed, it is at least arguable that the contrary is the case. As Professor Richard Stewart has noted (citation omitted), "Once courts acknowledged the inevitability of broad congressional delegations of power, they had to acknowledge also that administrative and legislative action so to utilize their claimed discretion without being held to explicit, known standards of any kind, there is another even more fundamental defect in defendants' resort to general rules and methodologies of this nature. Under Title IV of the Act, the Special Master's primary function is to determine individual claims submitted to him based upon their content and conformity with such statutory requirements as section 402(5) defining "economic loss". No generalized rules, methodologies or assumptions are required in order to make that evaluation and determination regarding each individual claim submitted, and in fact utilization of such procedures can only interfere with the thorough analysis of submitted information concerning each individual claim. Closely related, nothing in the Act authorizes resort to any such generalized, cookie-cutter approaches to the determination of awards. Plaintiff respectfully submits that while defendants may rely on rule-making to resolve certain classes of issues "that do not require case-by-case consideration", they must provide just such case-by-case consideration of those issues that do require it -- first and foremost among them, the determination of individual claims. See, e.g., Heckler v. Campbell, 461 U.S. 458, at 467 (1983) (Defendants Mem., p. 50)

Defendants' assertion of discretion challenged by plaintiff Schneider stands or falls upon these indisputable propositions: First, defendants grudgingly and only tacitly acknowledge – but they do acknowledge and cannot dispute - that there is absolutely no reference anywhere in the Act to the factors central to defendants' claimed discretion, namely, claimants' "needs" or "resources". Second, in the same fashion, defendants also acknowledge – and cannot deny - that defendants' intended use of those factors, or either of them, in exercising such purported discretion to reduce the "economic loss" component of awards to certain "wealthy" could not be equated, and that the legitimacy of administrative actions thus could not be presumed in quite the same way that the legitimacy of electorally-checked legislative could be."

claimants below the amount calculated in accordance with § 402(5) – and only to those claimants - would contradict and undercut the very definition of "economic loss" in § 402(5).[2] Third, notwithstanding the foregoing, defendants argue vigorously that the Act must be construed to contain a delegation by Congress of the discretion they claim, and they tell this Court that the statutory "evidence" of such delegation is to be found in only one place – the concluding phrase of § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the Act ("the individual circumstances of the claimant").

According to the defendants, they need not prove their contention by such statutory "evidence" alone. Rather, the purportedly probative words of the Congress that defendants strain to rely on from § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) are to be supplemented, for the purpose of proving what Congress intended, by the defendants' own words, in their own regulation. Thus, now rejecting what the Special Master himself once described as the proper approach to determining compensation under the Act[3], the defendants now say this:

> ". . . [P]laintiffs' suggestion that the Act requires awards based solely upon mechanistic calculations of the decedents' economic and non-economic losses, like many of plaintiffs' other challenges, stems from their wholesale disregard of one of

[2] Anticipating, from our experience thus far, that defendants may try to deflect this statement by misstating it, we emphasize that we are speaking here only about what § 402(5) actually says – and not what defendants undoubtedly will claim Congress meant to say or, by the inference they urge from the concluding phrase of § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) ("the individual circumstances of the claimant"), at least implied.

[3] "[H]ow do we determine compensation under the statute? The statute makes very clear how compensation is to be computed. Take the economic loss suffered by the victim and the surviving family, add to that non-economic loss pain and suffering and emotional distress and then after you get that number, deduct collateral sources of income, life insurance primarily pension social security death benefit worker's comp etc. . . . . That is the award. That is the award." (Colaio Exh. 2, p. 6; this transcript of a New York City Bar Association Meeting, "Conversation with the Special Master – Mr. Feinberg", dated October 1, 2002, is filed in Colaio v. Feinberg, 03 CV 0558 (AKH) the principal provisions of the Act, which governs the Special Master's award determinations. Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestion, the Act expressly requires the Special Master to determine compensation not only in light of the economic and noneconomic harm to the claimant, but also in light of claimants' 'individual circumstances.' See Act § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii). Consequently, Congress expressly rejected the notion that the determination of the award should be confined to a mechanical addition of economic and noneconomic losses, and plaintiffs can argue otherwise only by attempting to read out of the statute the additional factors Congress required the Special Master to consider. Moreover, the implementing regulations, which permit the Special Master to 'the financial needs or financial resources of the claimant or the victim's dependents and beneficiaries in determining 'individual circumstances' under the Act, see 28 C.F.R. § 104.41, are eminently reasonable and entitled to deference by this Court. Taken together, these provisions reject the mechanistic formula for determination of awards suggested by plaintiffs and permit considerable discretion to the Special Master in calculating awards." (Def. Mem., pp. 3-4; emphasis added)

What we have just quoted from defendants' brief is, of course, classic "bootstrapping". Recognizing that the inference they would have this Court draw from the concluding phrase in § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the statute is less than compelling, yet by their own admission having nothing else to rely on in the Act itself, these aspiring legislators-cum-administrators have come forward with their own regulation as some sort of support – beyond the statute itself – for their present claim of "discretion", suggesting essentially that what they have put in their regulation is what they somehow know the Congress intended to delegate to them but omitted to include in any explicit, specific or recognizable delegation in the statute itself. While this would normally go without saying, it behooves us, in light of the radical and groundless arguments proffered by the defendants, to emphasize that not only as a matter of common sense, but also under the fundamental constitutional principle of separation of powers, which is the foundation of the plaintiff's principal constitutional argument characterized by defendants as "meritless" (Def. Mem., pp. 58-63), an administrator's regulation cannot serve as evidence of the intent of Congress to convey a power to the administrator to adopt that regulation.

Before turning to the merits of the separation-of-powers question as well as the other constitutional issues, there is a preliminary matter to be considered. One example of the subject involved is defendants' assertion, toward the end of the paragraph we have just quoted from defendants' memorandum, that the Court owes defendants a "deference" in evaluating their regulations purportedly implementing the Act. Another example is defendants' contention that the only "record" to be considered in this action is what they refer to as the "administrative record", as distinct from the full factual record concerning plaintiff's allegations of fact in her complaint, including, without limitation, her allegations of the defendant Special Master's admissions of plainly material facts. What these examples represent in common is a fall-back resort to rules, principles and concepts of administrative law as, basically, the defendants' next line of defense, invoking "administrative law" as a device to fend off and otherwise thwart or restrict the full consideration and scrutiny of defendants' assorted claims, including their "discretion" claim, in this action. It is through the prism of such claimed prerogatives and protections accorded to "administrators" - including the "deference" owing to administrative agencies by the courts under appropriate circumstances, though certainly not those here, as will be shown – that defendants would have the Court evaluate their interpretation of the Act and the far-reaching "discretion" they claim to find in the Act for themselves. As now demonstrated, contrary to defendants' contentions, their arguments on the merits on both constitutional and other issues presented in this case are not insulated from the full and thorough scrutiny they warrant by any genuine rule, principle or concept of administrative law.

A. No principle of "administrative law" shields defendants from the necessity that they demonstrate a proper delegation of the discretion that they claim under the Act, or shields the factual record in this declaratory-judgment action from full, unrestricted use and scrutiny by this Court

It is a constant refrain in defendants' memorandum that a "deferential" standard must be applied by the Court in evaluating defendants' interpretation of the Act. Although the degree of deference defendants demand ranges from "extreme . . . ." (Def. Mem., p. 28) to "heightened" (Def. Mem., p. 29)[4] to "high . . . ." (Def. Mem., p. 29), and seemingly,

[4] On page 29, defendants cite Natural Resources Defense Council v. Train, 510 F.2d 692 (D.C. Cir. 1975), American Farm Lines, Inc. v. United States, 684 F.2d 697 (10th Cir. 1982), and, as an "accord", Verizon Communications, Inc. v. FCC, 535 U.S. 467, 122 S. Ct. 1646 (2002), all for the proposition that "this customary deference to the agency's interpretation is heightened where, as here, a court is reviewing 'the construction of a new statute by its implementing agency.'" However, defendants fail to point out vital distinctions between those cases (as well as the numerous other administrative-law cases they rely on) and this one, distinctions which militate against any deference being given to defendants regarding the issue of statutory interpretation presented here. Thus, each of those other "implementing agencies" was a major administrative agency of long standing and accumulated administrative and regulatory experience in the area regulated long before enactment of the "new statute". In stark contrast, the defendant Special Master's position was created by the "new statute" and, with all due respect, he has neither on occasion, to just plain "deference" (Def. Mem., p. 29) The claim is emphasized for obvious reasons, since defendants' interpretation, without extreme deference amounting to unquestioning acceptance, is otherwise so tenuous, dubious and baseless that no court could responsibly sustain it. Yet defendants overplay even this hand, failing to recognize certain obvious limitations even upon the deferential standard they advocate, and asserting its applicability even where, as in this case, there is no occasion for such deference by the Court at all, but only adherence to and enforcement of a clear and unambiguous statutory mandate. See Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842-43 (1984) and Barnhart v. Walton, 535 U.S. 212, 122 S.Ct. 1265, 1268, 1270 (2002), both cited at Def. Mem., pp. 28, 29. Notably, in marked contrast to defendants' interpretation of the phrase "the individual circumstances of the claimant" in § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) in relation to the statutory definition of "economic loss" in § 402(5), Barnhart approved the Social Security Administration's interpretation of the statutory definition of "disability" partly because the Social Security Administration's interpretation was in complete harmony, in terms of duration, with the express, closely related statutory definition of "impairment" (12 months).

As already noted, even defendants' own argument in support of the delegation of "discretion" that they claim depends on acceptance of their "bootstrap" contention that the regulations they themselves adopted should be "[t]aken together" with their tortured interpretation of the only statutory provision on which they rely (§ 405(b)(1)(B)(ii)) - a expertise nor administrative experience providing him with any unique insight into the task before him. Moreover, each of those other major "implementing agencies" had been established as a permanent, ongoing institution in the regulatory field involved, not, as here, as a temporary administrative appointment selected to administer a single Fund devoted to victims and family members of specific terrorist events occurring only on September 11, 2001.

contention that should not be accepted for reasons already stated. In any event, their "discretion" claim fails under any deferential standard, because under such authorities as Chevron and Barnhart, defendants cannot establish an ambiguity in the Act on the specific issue of statutory construction presented, namely, whether the "economic loss" component of the awards to certain claimants may be reduced by the defendant Special Master, in his discretion, below amounts calculated in accordance with § 402(5).

Here, to reiterate, the question is whether the phrase "the individual circumstances of the claimant" (§ 405(b)(1)(B)(ii)) is ambiguous as to defendants' specific discretion claim, justifying the importation into the calculation of awards of factors, unmentioned anywhere in the statute, of claimants' "financial need" and "financial resources". Plainly, the Act is not ambiguous in this regard, for it cannot suffice to create an ambiguity that the phrase in § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) may be said not to exclude the possibility of defendants' interpretation. Rather, the question is whether there is an ambiguity in the statute that would be affirmatively compatible with defendants' interpretation, and here there is none due to the statute's complete silence concerning any factor of "financial need" or "financial resources" central to defendants' interpretation. In other words, the solitary statutory phrase in § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii) on which defendants rely is not, in the words of Justice Frankfurter, an "'empty vessel . . . into which [a judge, or an administrator] . . . can pour anything he will' – his caprices, fixed notions, even statesmanlike beliefs in a particular policy." Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum.L.Rev. 527, at 529 (1947)

In addition to the argument of "deference", the defendant legislators-cum-administrators also seek to rely upon their status as "administrators" in order to support their argument that this Court should shut its eyes to the full evidentiary record in this declaratory-judgment action - including to all those facts, among them repeated admissions and inconsistencies on the part of the defendant Special Master, which are alleged by plaintiff Schneider's complaint. According to this prong of defendants' argument as "administrators", neither the plaintiff nor the Court has any right to present or to consider all the relevant facts alleged by plaintiff's complaint, but instead should confine themselves to what defendants characterize as the "administrative record" (Def. Mem., p. 30; see also defendants' Notice of Motion, purporting to rest defendants' present dismissal motion "upon the administrative record filed in this action on February 28, 2003").

Yet in reality, there is no such "administrative record" in this case - unlike the cases cited at page 30 of defendants' memorandum. What defendants filed on February 28 is not an "administrative record" of any "administrative proceeding" at all, there being no administrative proceeding before the defendant Special Master that has been filed or initiated by plaintiff Schneider or, indeed, any of the plaintiffs in these cases. Nor does this Court sit in some appellate capacity here, restricted to what defendants urge to be a limited review of defendants' supposed "administrative record". Plaintiff's challenge is not to any appealable administrative action taken against her by defendants, for she has submitted no claim to the Special Master. Rather, she seeks relief in this Court so that she may decide whether to make such a submission of her claims – a decision that depends largely upon the outcome of her challenge in this action to defendants' publicly-stated intention to disregard the explicit terms and mandate of the Act in the case of those claimants whom defendants deem to be not "in need" of the compensation for "economic loss" granted by Congress to the full extent of that grant.

B. If Defendants' Claim of "Discretion" Were Even Arguably Supportable under the Terms of the Act, and It Is Not, Any Such Attempted Delegation of Power by Congress to These Defendants, or Any of Them, Would Violate Fundamental Principles Governing the Permissibility of Such Delegations of Power

At page 62 of their memorandum, defendants seriously misstate plaintiff Schneider's contention regarding their delegation-of-discretion claim. Contrary to what they say there, plaintiff has never argued that "[t]he Act is . . . an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power."[5] Rather, plaintiff's position is that there is no delegation of discretion of the kind claimed by defendants, but that if defendants' contrary argument were sustained, and the "discretion" they claim could be implied from § 405(b)(1)(B)(ii), such "delegation" would inevitably present serious separation-of-powers issues. The reasons for that conclusion are made clear below.

Plainly, for such a significant legislative delegation of discretion to be found, there would have to be not only unambiguous and reliable proof in the statute of the delegation

5 Nor, contrary to defendants' implication commencing at p. 62, has plaintiff contended that Congress failed to provide an "intelligible principle" in the Act. In this connection, she has contended only that the failure of Congress to provide such an intelligible principle with respect to the "discretion" that defendants claim to have been impliedly delegated to them by the Congress - a requisite of such delegations of power by the Congress under fundamental separation-of-powers principles being the articulation of such an intelligible principle regarding the authority or discretion granted - is of course highly revealing of the actual fact, which is that Congress provided no such "intelligible principle" because it delegated no such discretion; and that if somehow such a delegation could be found in defendants' favor, but lacking such an intelligible principle, it would be constitutionally infirm.

itself, but also explicit and specific guidance by the Congress, also in the statute, as to how, and according to what specific standards, any such discretion is to be reconciled with and applied in satisfying the mandate of Section 402(5)'s definition of "economic loss". Of course, there is nothing of the kind to be found anywhere in this statute – a fact which further belies defendants' claim that they have been delegated such a far-reaching discretion.

Here, accordingly, there is not only a complete failure of proof as to any such delegation. There is a like failure by defendants to identify any statutory "intelligible principle" articulated by the Congress in order to guide and restrain the exercise of the purported discretion these defendants assert. Illustrating the "intelligible principle" requirement is the decision in Mistretta v. U.S., 488 U.S. 361, 371-73, 109 S.Ct. 647, 654-55 (1989), holding in part as follows:

> The nondelegation doctrine is rooted in the principle of separation of powers that underlies our tripartite system of Government. The Constitution provides that "[a]ll legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States," U.S. Const., Art. I, § 1, and we long have insisted that "the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution" mandate that Congress generally cannot delegate its legislative power to another Branch. Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649, 692, 12 S.Ct. 495, 504 (1892). We also have recognized, however, that the separation-of-powers principle, and the nondelegation doctrine in particular, do not prevent Congress from obtaining the assistance of its coordinate Branches. In a passage now enshrined in our jurisprudence, Chief Justice Taft, writing for the Court, explained our approach to such cooperative ventures: "In determining what [Congress] may do in seeking assistance from another branch, the extent and character 655 of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of the government co-ordination." J.W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. U.S., 276 U.S. 394, 406, 48 S.Ct. 348, 351 (1928). So long as Congress "shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to [exercise the delegated authority] is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power." Id., at 409, 48 S.Ct., at 352.

Applying this "intelligible principle" test to congressional delegations, our jurisprudence has been driven by a practical understanding that in our increasingly complex society, replete with ever changing and more technical problems, Congress simply cannot do its job absent an ability to delegate power under broad general directives. See Opp Cotton Mills, Inc. v. Administrator, Wage and Hour Div. of Dept. of Labor, 312 U.S. 126, 145, 61 S.Ct. 524, 533 (1941) ("In an increasingly complex society Congress obviously could not perform its functions if it were obliged to find all the facts subsidiary to the basic conclusions which support the defined legislative policy"); see also U.S. v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 274, 88 S.Ct. 419, 429 (1967) (opinion concurring in result). "The Constitution has never been regarded as denying to the Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality, which will enable it to perform its function." Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 421, 55 S.Ct. 241, 248 (1935). Accordingly, this Court has deemed it "constitutionally sufficient if Congress clearly delineates the general policy, the public agency which is to apply it, and the boundaries of this delegated authority." American Power & Light Co. v. SEC, 329 U.S. 90, 105, 67 S.Ct. 133, 142 (1946). (Emphasis added)

In this connection, see also Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum.L.Rev. 527, at 533 (1947), stating:

"[Courts] . . . are confined by the nature and scope of the judicial function in its particular exercise in the field of interpretation. They are under the constraints imposed by the judicial function in our democratic society. As a matter of verbal recognition certainly, no one will gainsay that the function in construing a statute is to ascertain the meaning of words used by the legislature. To go beyond it is to usurp a power which our democracy has lodged in its elected legislature. The great judges have constantly admonished their brethren of the need for discipline in observing the limitations. A judge must not rewrite a statute, neither to enlarge nor to contract it. Whatever temptations the statesmanship of policy-making might wisely suggest, construction must eschew interpretation and evisceration. He must not read in by way of creation. He must not read out except to avoid patent nonsense or internal contradiction."

REV_00161300

The complete absence from the statute itself of any such "intelligible principle" with respect to the "discretion" that defendants claim to have been delegated to them by Congress - a requisite of such delegations of power by the Congress under fundamental separation-of-powers principles - is itself confirmation that of course highly revealing of the actual fact. There is no such "intelligible principle" in the statute elaborating any such "discretion" because there is no delegation of any such "discretion" in the statute either.

Nor is there any external circumstance present in these cases that would warrant any inference of a delegation of such discretion by Congress to any of these defendants. We are not dealing here with a more typical claim of inadequate Congressional delegation of discretion to an established administrative agency which, over time, has developed a substantial and unique regulatory expertise concerning the ongoing matters constantly coming before it and which, therefore, might not require great specificity in Congress's statement of the "intelligible principle" intended to guide the exercise of such challenged delegation. See, e.g., J.W. Hampton, Jr., and Co. v. U.S., 276 U.S. 394, 407-09, 48 S.Ct. 348, 351-52 (1928), a ruling also making clear, we emphasize, that no purported delegation of "discretion" as indefinite as the delegation claimed by defendants in the present actions could pass muster even if defendants were "experts" having some unique and specialized knowledge and experience:

> Again, one of the great functions conferred on Congress by the Federal Constitution is the regulation of interstate commerce and rates to be exacted by interstate carriers for the passenger and merchandise traffic. The rates to be fixed are myriad. If Congress were to be required to fix every rate, it would be impossible to exercise the power at all. Therefore, common sense requires that in the fixing of such rates Congress may provide a Commission, as it does, called the Interstate Commerce Commission, to fix those rates, after hearing evidence and argument > concerning them from interested parties, all in accord with a general rule that Congress first lays down that rates shall be just and reasonable considering the service given and not discriminatory. As said by this Court in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co., 224 U.S. 194, 214, 32 S.Ct. 436, 441 (1912):

> > 'The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress.'

The principle upon which such a power is upheld in state legislation as to fixing railway rates is admirably stated by Judge Mitchell in the case of State v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., 38 Minn. 281, 298 to 302, 37 N.W. 782 (1888). The learned judge says on page 301 (37 N.W. 788):

> 'If such a power is to be exercised at all, it can only be satisfactorily done by a board or commission, constantly in session, whose time is exclusively given to the subject, and who, after investigation of the facts, can fix rates with reference to the peculiar circumstances of each road, and each particular kind of business, and who can change or modify these rates to suit the ever- varying conditions of traffic. * * * Our Legislature has gone a step further than most others, and vested our commission with full power to determine what rates are equal and reasonable in each particular case. Whether this was wise or not is not for us to say: but in doing so we cannot see that they have transcended their constitutional authority. They have not delegated to the commission any authority or discretion as to what the law shall be- which would not be allowable-but have merely conferred upon it an authority and discretion, to be exercised in the execution of the law, and under and in pursuance of it, which is entirely permissible. The Legislature itself has passed upon the expediency of the law, and what it shall be. The commission is entrusted with no authority or discretion upon these questions.' (Emphasis added)

Thus, in contrast to actions such as J.W. Hampton, Jr., and Co., there is absolutely no reason why, in the actions before this Court, the Congress of the United States could or would have considered any of these defendants to be any more "expert" than members of Congress in determining the applicability, if any, of the extra-statutory factors of "needs" and

"resources" now divined by these defendants. Moreover, of course, no such delegation would have been permissible in any event without both an express and specific delegation of such "discretion" and a clear and definite statement of the "intelligible principle" of the Congress concerning the power so delegated.

Nor is the question here one of a claimed delegation to an executive officer who has independent constitutional authority concerning the subject matter. Compare Loving v. US, 517 U.S. 748, 771-73, 116 S.Ct. 1737, 1750-51 (1996), stating as follows:

> It does not suffice to say that Congress announced its will to delegate certain authority. Congress as a general rule must also "lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to [act] is directed to conform." . . . . [Citations omitted] The intelligible- principle rule seeks to enforce the understanding that Congress may not delegate the power to make laws and so may delegate no more than the authority to make policies and rules that implement its statutes. . . . [Citation omitted] Though in 1935 we struck down two delegations for lack of an intelligible principle, A.L.A. Schecter Poultry Corp. v. U.S., 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837 (1935), and Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 55 S.Ct. 241 (1935), we have since upheld, without exception, delegations under standards phrased in sweeping terms. See, e.g., National Broadcasting Co. v. U.S., 319 U.S. 190, 216-217, 225-226, 63 S.Ct 997, 1009-1010 (1943) (upholding delegation to the Federal Communications Commission to regulate radio broadcasting according to "public interest, convenience, or necessity"). Had the delegations here called for the exercise of judgment or discretion that lies beyond the traditional authority of the President, Loving's last argument that Congress failed to provide guiding principles to the President might have more weight. We find no fault, however, with the delegation in this case.
> In United States v. Curtis, [32 M.J. 252 (CMA), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 952, 112 S.Ct. 406 (1991)], the Court of Military Appeals discerned a principle limiting the President's discretion to define aggravating factors for capital crimes in Article 36: namely, the directive that regulations the President prescribes must "apply the principles of law ... generally recognized in the trial of criminal cases in the United States district courts, but which may not be contrary to or inconsistent with this chapter," 10 U.S.C. § 836(a). We think, however, that the question to be asked is not whether there was any explicit principle telling the President how to select aggravating factors, but whether any such guidance was needed, given the > nature of the delegation and the officer who is to exercise the delegated authority. First, the delegation is set within boundaries the President may not exceed. Second, the delegation here was to the President in his role as Commander in Chief. Perhaps more explicit guidance as to how to select aggravating factors would be necessary if delegation were made to a newly created entity without independent authority in the area. Cf. Mistretta v. U.S., 488 U.S. [361,] at 374-379, 109 S.Ct. [647,] at 656-659 [(1989)] (upholding delegation to the United States Sentencing Commission because of detailed congressional directives channeling agency discretion). The President's duties as Commander in Chief, however, require him to take responsible and continuing action to superintend the military, including the courts-martial. The delegated duty, then, is interlinked with duties already assigned to the President by express terms of the Constitution, and the same limitations on delegation do not apply "where the entity exercising the delegated authority itself possesses independent authority over the subject matter" United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 556-557, 95 S.Ct 710, 717-718 (1975). [Additional citations omitted] (Emphasis added).

Thus, in contrast to actions such as Loving, there can be no suggestion in the actions before this Court that the defendants, or any of them, have any power concerning the matters at issue beyond the power delegated to them by the Congress of the United States. None has independent authority – or as shown above, expertise – concerning any such matters.

Accordingly, no delegation of the far-reaching "discretion" defendants claim in these actions can be found at all, much less one conforming to constitutional requirements.

C. Well established principles Require this Court to Avoid Defendants' Radical Interpretation of the Act by Instead Interpreting it So as to Exclude Such Claimed Discretion - a Discretion Which, If it Had Been Granted by Congress, Would Inevitably Raise Grave Constitutional Issues.

Plainly, even if there were a basis to conclude that the Act does contain an otherwise sufficient and proper delegation of discretion to the defendants of the kind they claim, several grave issues of a constitutional nature would then arise.

Among them would be issues concerning the clear denial to such claimants of the due process of law, and the assurance of equal justice under the law, guaranteed to them under the Fifth Amendment. See generally, Hampton v. Mow Sun Wong, 426 U.S. 88, 100, 96 S.Ct. 1895, 1903-04 (1976) ("The federal sovereign, like the States, must govern impartially. The concept of equal justice under law is served by the Fifth Amendment's guarantee of due process, as well as by the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment").

Before addressing the cases cited by defendant, it must be emphasized that we are not dealing in this case with a legislatively determined class. On the contrary, we are dealing here with a class of persons concocted by an administrator without legislative authority or guidance. This distinction is a crucial one, since there is no indication in the Act that Congress intended any such classifications among victims. So for example, in Harris v. McRae, 448, U.S. 297(1980) cited by defendant, the Court considered the constitutionality of the "Hyde" amendment which imposed restrictions upon Medicaid reimbursement of abortions. Here, the issue was the validity of explicit and considered Congressional action, not that of an administrator. Similarly in Woe v. Cuomo, 729 F2d 96, (2d Cir. 1984), the issue was the constitutionality of New York' civil commitment law - again a legislative act. In San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 US 1 (1973), the issue concerned the constitutionality of Texas' property tax based education system, not the action of any administrator. In United States v. Hirschberg, 988 F2d 1509 (7th Cir. 1993), the Court held that a prosecutor's rebuttal closing argument that defendant's wealth did not mean he was innocent and that the law should apply equally to all people at all economic levels was not plain error. The relevance of this case entirely escapes us. In Black v. Secretary of Health and Human Services, 93 F3d 781 (Fed. Cir. 1996), the Court considered the Constitutionality of a $1000 medical expense threshold in the National Vaccine Injury Act-again specific legislation by Congress. Indeed, the quotation in defendant's memorandum at page 60 to the effect that "an eligibility test may be rational even if it does not do a perfect job of selecting those cases that appear to be appropriate subjects of congressional concern" (emphasis added), makes plaintiff's point eloquently. It is for the Congress in the exercise of its legislative capacity to make these kinds of choices and classifications. The concoction of a special class of persons by an administrator, whether they be based upon economic status, or any other factor must be greeted with the utmost skepticism, and the highest degree of judicial scrutiny. Indeed the absence of cases in which an administrator has attempted to define such a class (as defendants have here) is testament to the extraordinary nature of their claimed discretion. While it is true that cases invalidating such delegations are not common, this too speaks volumes about the novel, extraordinary claims made here by the defendants.

In addition, if there were such basis, other due-process issues would arise as well, due to defendants' interpretation of the Act in purported exercise of a discretion claimed to have been granted by Congress, under which defendants would retroactively deprive potential claimants upon the Fund of the no-fault alternative which Congress granted them when it effectively denied them their common-law rights to be compensated by all defendants found responsible for the losses they suffered, including airlines. See Section 408(a). These facts, without more, serve to distinguish the situation in this case from those presented in Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749 (1975)(Social Security Benefits) and Supreme Oil Co. v. Metropolitan Trans. Auth., 157 F. 3d 148 (2d Cir. 1998)(Federal Relocation Benefits)-each involving government benefit programs, and not such legislation as the Act, which is designed to compensate victims and their families for deprivation by the Statute itself of fundamental litigation rights. Under defendants' present expansive interpretation of their purported discretion, the "wealthier" of those claimants now would be denied not only those common-law rights, as Congress provided, but also the level of compensation expressly granted by the Congress, without restrictions or caps upon any claimant's award based upon his or her "needs" or "resources" - even though, unquestionably, such no-fault compensation was the legislative quid pro quo for Congress's own, itself extraordinary retroactive alteration and diminution of claimants' fundamental rights. See generally, Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208-09, 109 S.Ct. 468, 471-72 (1988):

> Retroactivity is not favored in the law. Thus, congressional enactments and administrative rules will not be construed to have retroactive effect unless their language requires this result. . . . [Citations omitted] By the same principle, a statutory grant of legislative rulemaking authority will not, as a general matter, be understood to encompass the power to promulgate retroactive rules unless that power is conveyed by Congress in express terms. See Brimstone R. Co. v. U.S., 276 U.S. 104, 122, 48 S.Ct. 282, 287 (1928)("The power to require readjustments for the past is drastic. It ... ought not to be extended so as to permit unreasonably harsh action without very plain words"). Even where some substantial justification for retroactive rulemaking is presented, courts should be reluctant to find such authority absent an express statutory grant.

When, as here, such potential constitutional issues are present, the federal courts have consistently applied the sound principle and practice of avoiding interpretations of statutes which raise constitutional issues wherever possible, instead construing those statutes more narrowly so as not to present such constitutional questions. See, e.g., Solid Waste Agency v. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 531 U.S. 159, 121 S.Ct. 675 (2001); National Cable Television Ass'n v. U.S., 415 U.S. 336, 342, 94 S.Ct. 1146, 1150 (1974); Kent v. Dulles, 357 U.S. 116, 129, 78 S.Ct. 1113, 1120 (1958).

And finally, where, as here, defendants have no substantial statutory basis at all for their claim of a far-reaching discretion to fundamentally alter the statutory scheme in the cases of certain "wealthy" individuals, the application of that principle and practice of prudence and restraint is, we respectfully submit, particularly warranted.

REV_00161308

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, and those stated in the joint memorandum of law, Defendants' motion to dismiss should be denied in all respects.

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:

In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.

In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115.

S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.

H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.

The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP: http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

Class Action Lawsuit Measure Aims to Send More Cases to Federal Court

By Keith Perine, CQ Staff

The Republican effort to overhaul tort laws will be on display Thursday when the Senate Judiciary Committee marks up legislation to send more class action lawsuits to federal rather than state courts.

The bill (S 274) would make it easier to try the cases in federal courts if more than $2 million is at stake and at least one member of the class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a different state than the defendant.

Some exceptions are possible, such as if a "substantial majority" of the plaintiffs and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the lawsuit was filed.

Supporters say the bill is needed to curb civil litigation abuses by plaintiffs' attorneys who file cases in state courts that are perceived as sympathetic to plaintiffs. Opponents say the bill would unfairly raise the bar for defendants seeking damages from corporations.

The committee is expected to approve the measure. Chairman Orrin G. Hatch , R-Utah, and other bill proponents are trying to line up Democratic support, with an eye toward garnering a filibuster-proof 60-vote majority.

Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., has been in negotiations with Republicans to narrow the criteria by which civil cases could be transferred to federal courts.

Feinstein, who opposes the bill in its current form, wants to specify that a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs would be defined as two-thirds of the class members. She also is interested in increasing the $2 million threshold.

Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., who also opposes the bill, said he plans to offer an amendment that would exempt tobacco-related lawsuits. Durbin pointed to a recent Illinois court decision requiring tobacco giant Philip Morris USA to pay $10.1 billion in damages in a civil case.

The measure contains a "consumer class action bill of rights," which includes a provision that would require notices to class members to be detailed and clearly written.

Also on the committee's agenda is a bill (S 731) by Joseph R. Biden Jr. , D-Del., that would make it illegal to possess or use authentication features, such as holograms or watermarks, to fake identification documents.

The Judiciary Committee markup is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. in Dirksen 226.

04/02 Congress Daily

Environmentalists are opposed to class action reform legislation that is on tap for markup Thursday by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Clean Water Action, Earthjustice, Environmental Working Group, Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, Mineral Policy Center, Natural Resources Defense Council, Sierra Club and the U.S. Public Interest Research Group today sent a letter to Judiciary Chairman Hatch and ranking member Patrick Leahy , D-Vt., saying the pending bill "would not be fair to citizens bringing class action cases based on state environmental or public health protection laws who wish to have their cases heard by their state's courts." They added, "The bill would allow corporate defendants in pollution class actions to remove virtually any type of state environmental law case from state court to federal court, placing such cases in a forum that could be more costly, less timely and disadvantageous to the citizen plaintiffs." A number of civil rights attorneys and organizations issued similar criticisms against the bill last week, saying it would make it more difficult to have federal civil rights cases heard.

Senate Judiciary Readies To Mark Up Class Action Reform

Class action reform legislation is slated to be marked up Thursday by the Senate Judiciary Committee, a committee spokeswoman confirmed.

A class action markup will add to a Judiciary Committee agenda already occupied with another -- and some observers would say competing -- legal reform bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee: asbestos litigation case management.

This evening, some committee members are slated to meet informally and privately with stakeholders to explore whether a consensus on asbestos litigation reform legislation can be reached this year.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch has said he wants to draft such a bill over the April recess, in preparation for a markup shortly after senators return from the break.

A private meeting last week between Hatch and a number of defendant company executives and their insurers was characterized by some attendants as a rally for unity and action among the executives, who differ on whether to seek streamlined court consideration of asbestos cases, or to move them into a private system like a trust fund.

Tonight's asbestos "summit" organized by Sen. Christopher Dodd , D-Conn., which will include senators from both sides of the aisle, is expected to focus more on the substantive differences within the interested parties among industry, labor and the legal sectors.

Hatch in an interview early last month conceded that it would be "difficult" to complete action both on asbestos and class action reform this session, though he suggested it was not impossible.

The Judiciary panel appears poised to report out class action reform legislation Thursday, albeit mostly along party lines.

Judiciary member Herb Kohl, D-Wis., along with Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, and Hatch are cosponsors of the pending bill, which sources indicated has been little changed since its introduction.

Senate Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., at a July hearing on that class action bill said he would oppose it as drafted.

A number of civil rights attorneys and organizations also have come out against the bill, saying that its key provision to remove most state-law class actions to federal court would make it more difficult to have federal civil rights cases heard.

In an attempt to shore up Democratic support for the bill in the larger Senate, Kohl has been seeking to broker a deal with Judiciary member Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., who indicated she was receptive to trying to reach a compromise.

However, sources recently said that such an agreement remained elusive, but speculated that the committee's action Thursday could prompt a fresh round of negotiations. Other Senate Democrats not on the committee have indicated a desire to be cooperative with Republican leaders both on class action and asbestos reform bills.

Among those is Sen. Thomas Carper, D-Del., who is an original cosponsor of the pending class action bill. And although he will not participate in today's asbestos summit, he remains in "close contact" with Hatch on the issue, his spokeswoman said.

In remarks Monday to a conference for investors hosted by Deutsche Bank in New York City, Carper asserted that, "The best way to get the economy moving again -- is to invest in solutions for asbestos litigation, class action reform and bankruptcy reform." By Pamela Barnett

Class Action Bill Latest Salvo in Lawyer-GOP Battle

By Keith Perine, CQ Staff

Legislation seeking to send more class action lawsuits to federal rather than state courts and impose new requirements on that kind of litigation has marched up the priority list as majority Republicans continue a years-long effort to change the rules of civil tort law.

The class action measure (S 274 << javascript:simplePopup('loadbillcard.do?billNumber=S274&congress=108','billCard',680,430); >>), which the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to approve April 3, is one of the centerpiece bills for a conservative tort overhaul movement in the 108th Congress being championed by Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah.

Rather than provoke a single big fight with the well-heeled trial lawyers' lobby, the strategy of majority Republicans has been to pursue their goal incrementally. They are acting on a series of bills that, if passed and signed into law, would make it more difficult for a wide range of would-be plaintiffs to ask juries to redress alleged wrongdoings by doctors, corporations, asbestos manufacturers and the firearms industry.

Separate measures are moving through Congress that propose limiting civil claims related to medical malpractice (HR 5); establishing national criteria for claims of asbestos exposure (S 413 << javascript:simplePopup('loadbillcard.do?billNumber=S413&congress=108','billCard',680,430); >>); and shielding gun manufacturers and sellers from some liability lawsuits (HR 1036 << javascript:simplePopup('loadbillcard.do?billNumber=HR1036&congress=108','billCard',680,430); >>).

Joe Manero of the Alliance of American Insurers, which favors changes to tort rules, said the strategy makes sense in this year's legislative climate.

"With the current crisis in the Middle East, we're fighting for attention," he said. "We will take progress where we can get it, and if it means doing it one at a time, that's what it means."

The bipartisan class action bill, sponsored by Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, would set criteria intended to steer some class action cases into federal courts.

It also would impose a long list of new rules on civil litigation regarding notices, settlements and attorneys' fees.

Preventing Venue Shopping

Supporters of the legislation say it is needed to prevent venue shopping and other abuses of the civil process by plaintiffs' attorneys. Opponents say it would unfairly raise the bar for defendants seeking damages from deep-pocketed corporations.

"Its advocates basically want to tell every state judge in America, 'We don't trust you . . . the federal government does not trust you to do your job,' " said Association of Trial Lawyers of America spokesman Carlton Carl. He added that wealthy defendants prefer federal courts because cases tend to take longer to wend their way through them.

Backers of the bill say that plaintiffs' attorneys like to take cases to "judicial hellhole" state courts that are overly sympathetic toward plaintiffs' arguments.

"There are a few county courts around the country that are setting national policy," said Matthew Webb, director of legal policy for the U.S. Chamber Institute for Legal Reform.

The legislation would make civil cases eligible to be pushed into federal courts when the amount in dispute exceeded $2 million and any member of the class of plaintiffs was a citizen of a different state than the defendant.

Currently, plaintiff's lawyers can avoid such "removal" to a federal court if individual claims within a class are less than $75,000, or if even one class member lives in the same state as the defendant.

Under the legislation, some exceptions would be made, such as for cases where states themselves, or state officials, are primary defendants, or if the defendant and a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs are citizens of the state in which the case originally was filed.

Also in the bill is a "consumer class action bill of rights" that seems designed to garner Democratic support for the measure.

Under those provisions, courts would only be able to approve some settlements under certain conditions.

Bounties Would Be Banned

For example, courts would not be able to approve proposed settlements if they would result in disproportionate payments to class members based solely on how close to the court they live.

Also, courts could not approve settlements that contain "bounties" for one member of the class.

The measure also would require that written notices to class members be plainly written and include descriptions of the case, the amount of plaintiffs' attorneys' fees, and details of any proposed settlement. The notices also would have to feature a prominent warning about their legal importance.

A similar bill (HR 1115 << javascript:simplePopup('loadbillcard.do?billNumber=HR1115&congress=108','billCard',680,430); >>) is pending before the House Judiciary Committee. A committee spokesman said that panel probably would not take up that bill before the two-week spring recess scheduled to begin April 11.

Any bill that the 108th Congress might pass probably will be strongly backed by President Bush.

As a condition for allowing terrorism insurance legislation (PL 107-297 << javascript:simplePopup('loadlawcard.do?lawNumber=297&congress=107','billCard',680,430); >>) to move last year, House Speaker J. Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., extracted a promise from Bush that he would champion tort overhaul.

Federal District Court Jurisdiction for Interstate Class Actions (Sec. 4)	Provide that Federal district courts would have original jurisdiction over any class-action lawsuits where the total claims exceed $2 million if any of the plaintiffs is a citizen of different State from any of the defendants, or either a plaintiff or a defendant resides in a foreign country. However, original jurisdiction would not apply in any action in which: (a) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed and the claims will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed; (b) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the Federal district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (c) the number of plaintiff class members in the aggregate is less than 100. In addition, original jurisdiction would not apply to a class action that solely involves a claim related to certain securities or to the internal affairs or	Minor changes: • Definition of "class certification order" in H.R. 1115 means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action. Removal of Interstate Class Actions to Federal District Court (Sec. 5)	Provide that a class action could be removed from a State court to a Federal district court by any defendant without the consent of any other defendants; or by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of any other members of the class. However, this authority for removal would not apply to a class action that solely involves a claim related to certain securities or to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation that arises under the laws of the State in which the corporation is incorporated. The Federal courts of appeals would have jurisdiction of appeals from orders of the Federal district courts granting or denying class certification, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order. To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants~~, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions~~, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

"§ 1711 ~~1716~~. Definitions

"In this chapter:
"(1) CLASS.—The term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action.
"(2)~~(1)~~ CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed under a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representatives ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action.
"(3) ~~(2)~~ CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(4)~~(3)~~ CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(5)~~(4)~~ PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(6)~~(5)~~ PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement ~~that resolves claims in a class action,~~ regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on some or all ~~the~~ class members.

"§ 1712~~1711~~. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§ 1713~~1712~~. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

"§ 1714~~1713~~. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§ 1715 ~~1714~~. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

"§ 1716~~1715~~. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point or ~~Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type~~ greater bold type, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; ~~and~~

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and

"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

"(E) any other material matter.

"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from a ~~the~~ class action or a proposed settlement ~~of the class action~~, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action ~~or settlement~~.

"§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate Federal official' means—

"(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

"(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate State official' means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

"(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

"(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

"(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

"(A)(i) the members' rights to request exclusion from the class action; or

"(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

"(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

"(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

"(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

"(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

"(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State's appropriate State official; or

"(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

"(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

"(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

"(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

"(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

"(e) NONCOMPLIANCE IF NOTICE NOT PROVIDED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

"(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

"(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member's behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member's participation in the settlement.

"(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to expand the authority of, or impose any obligations, duties, or responsibilities upon, Federal or State officials.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—
(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and
(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:
"(d)(1) In this subsection—
"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;
"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action;
"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and
"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—
"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;
"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or
"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.
"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—
"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and
"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;
"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or
"(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class~~ members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~ prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves a claim ~~that relates to —~~

"(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(i) ~~"(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(ii) ~~"(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

"(B)(i) In any ~~such case,~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

"(ii) ~~The provisions of~~ Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)~~(i).~~

"(iii) ~~The provisions of~~ Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(ii). ~~(B).~~".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' shall have the meanings given such ~~these~~ terms under ~~in~~ section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action~~, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.~~

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.— ~~The provisions of~~ Section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.— ~~The provisions of~~ Section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that notwithstanding section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:
"1453. Removal of class actions.".

SEC. 6. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements.

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorneys' fees.

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".~~

~~(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.~~

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003~~2~~".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction for ~~of~~ interstate class actions.

Sec. 6~~7~~. Report on class action settlements.
Sec. 7~~8~~. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"CHAPTER 114—CLASS ACTIONS

"§1711~~1718~~. Definitions

"In this chapter:
"(1) CLASS.—The term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action.
"(2)~~(1)~~ CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed under ~~pursuant to~~ a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representatives ~~on behalf of~~ as a class action.
"(3)~~(2)~~ CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(4)~~(3)~~ CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(5)~~(4)~~ PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(6)~~(5)~~ PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement ~~that resolves claims in~~ regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on ~~the~~ some or all class members

"§1712~~1711~~. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§1713~~1712~~. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

"§1714~~1713~~. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§1715~~1714~~. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

"§1716~~1715~~. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point ~~Times New Roman~~ or greater bold type ~~or other functionally similar type~~, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.';

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and

"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

"(E) any other material matter.

"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from ~~the~~ a class action or a proposed settlement ~~of the class action~~, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action ~~or settlement~~.

"§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate Federal official' means—

"(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

"(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate State official' means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

"(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

"(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

"(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

"(A)(i) the members' rights to request exclusion from the class action; or

"(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

"(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

"(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

"(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

"(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

"(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State's appropriate State official; or

"(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

"(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

"(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

"(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

"(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

"(e) NONCOMPLIANCE IF NOTICE NOT PROVIDED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

"(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

"(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member's behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member's participation in the settlement.

~~"§ 1716. Disclosure of attorney's fees~~

~~"Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~
~~"(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement of judgment, or~~
~~"(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff,~~
~~the full amount of the attorney's fees charged by the attorneys for services rendered in the action.~~

~~"§ 1717. Sunshine in court records~~

~~"No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~
~~"(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~
~~"(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711". SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—
(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and
(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:
"(d)(1) In this subsection—
"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;
"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action;
"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class~~ members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~ prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves a claim ~~that relates to —~~

"(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(i) ~~"(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(ii) ~~"(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

"(B)(i) In any ~~such case~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

"(ii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil action~~s~~ described under subparagraph (A)(i).

"(iii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil action~~s~~ described under subparagraph (A)(ii) ~~(B)~~.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' shall have the meanings given ~~these~~ such terms ~~in~~ under section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action~~, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered~~.

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.— ~~The provisions of s~~Section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.— ~~The provisions of s~~Section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that~~,~~ notwithstanding ~~the provisions of~~ section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following: "1453. Removal of class actions.".

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".~~

~~(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.~~

SEC. 6~~7~~. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements ~~in the Federal courts~~.

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members ~~whom~~ that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney~~'~~s' fees.

SEC. 7~~8~~. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act.

HR 2341 107th Congress-Passed House ~~(red, strikethrough text)~~

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003~~2~~".
(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.
(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7~~8~~. Effective date.
~~Sec. 7. Report on class action settlements~~.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:
(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—
(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;
(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and
(C) undermined public respect for the ~~our~~ judicial system in the United States.
(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—
(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;
(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.
(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—
(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;
(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and
(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.
(5) These abuses undermine the ~~our~~ Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—
(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;
(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and
(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.
(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—
(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;
(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;
(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and
(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:
"CHAPTER 114—CLASS ACTIONS
"Sec.
"1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.
"1712. Protection against loss by class members.
"1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.
"1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.
"1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.
"1716~~1718~~. Definitions.
~~"1716. Disclosure of attorney's fees.~~
~~"1717. Sunshine in court records.~~

"§ 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§ 1712. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

"§ 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§ 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

"§ 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—
"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;
"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and
"(E) any other material matter.
"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—
"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.
"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—
"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

"§ 1716~~1718~~. Definitions

"In this chapter—
"(1) CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.
"(2) CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(3) CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.".

~~"§ 1716. Disclosure of attorney's fees~~

~~"Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a~~

~~settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~

~~"(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement of judgment, or~~

~~"(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff,~~

~~the full amount of the attorney's fees charged by the attorneys for services rendered in the action.~~

~~"§ 1717. Sunshine in court records~~

~~"No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~

~~"(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~

~~"(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d)(1) In this subsection—

"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;

"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—

"(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.—The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:
"1453. Removal of class actions.".

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".

(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 7~~8~~. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

~~SEC.7. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this~~

~~Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on class action settlements in the Federal courts.~~

~~(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—~~

~~(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members whom the settlements are supposed to benefit;~~

~~(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—~~

~~(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and~~

~~(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and~~

~~(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney's fees.~~

Subject: Asbestos - Hatch proposal components from last weeks meeting/House process/etc.

As you know, Hatch met with the Biz groups from all camps last Wednesday, and proposed a basis for his bill which is as follows (I don't make it up, I just report it):

- creation of a specialized "court" or federally-established resolution body
- apply agreed upon medical criteria to defer frivolous claims. hold jurisdiction on the claim so that those who become impaired are able to easily go to this court and get compensation.
- I think the way to address how the compensation will be paid the legislation would create 2 blue-ribbon Commissions (one for defendants, and one for insurers) to determine upfront and annual allocations among various contributors, to include current defendants, insurance companies, etc. Concerns about disclosing financial and sensitive information . . We would make the financial and all other information provided to the commission confidential and non-disclosable to anyone outside this Commission. I want to make sure that the Insurance companies are only required to pay in an equitable manner. Also, I want to be sure that those defendant companies who have already been targets and paid are not required to pay twice while others get a free-ride.
- Contributions would be flexible based on funding need, but in any case would be subject to an annual cap. So you would all have the necessary certainty you need.
- Qualifying claimants would be paid according to a schedule, either fixed in the legislation, or deferred to an expert appointed body, who shall make the determination and we abide by them. This way, there will be little transaction costs and it limits the ability of the so-called administrative law judges within this "court" to get out of hand.
- we don't need to require companies, whether insurance or otherwise, to give in to a trust fund and hold their reserves there. this approach will allow the insurance companies to hold most of their reserves until the money is need per the allocations. That addresses a major concern some had with the trust fund approach.
- There would be limited judicial review of funding allocation and claimant compensation.
- We would also make provisions for the insurance companies to address concerns of state laws relating to ability to discount.
- Moreover, we will have to ensure that any payments required to be made by this court will be viewed as ordinary income for tax purposes and also as a loss so that the insurance companies will be able to address their reinsurance requirements. will need your help to make sure we effectuate this properly.

As you can see from the outlined points, this system will be very hard to create and seems as if it will have substantial federal involvement. We (insurance companies) are working through the Hatch process to see if we can come to an agreement on his proposal. I believe that Hatch Judiciary Staff (Makun and Rebecca) will be working on writing legislation in the very near future. We have companies all over the map.

In addition, Dodd will convene a mini-summit of sorts tomorrow at 4:30 pm with all sides present (ie. Insurance, manufacturing, trial bar, labor, consumer, financial, etc).

On the House side Cong. Dooley is soon to introduce the NAM/Alliance Medical Criteria Bill and Cong. Cannon is soon to introduce the AIA enhanced Medical Criteria Bill – both straight Medical Criteria Bills that would utilize the current legal system.

Stay tuned.

From April 2003 ABA Journal:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

MORE AND FASTER—NOW

The Crisis in the Federal Judiciary

BY ALFRED P. CARLTON JR.

Over the years, several partners and friends of mine have been considered for the federal bench. Some became federal judges, and some did not. All faced a conscious decision to limit their income for life and put their practices on hold during almost always protracted and invasive nomination and confirmation proceedings. All had to consider the reality of donning a somewhat monastic lifestyle along with judicial robes.

All had to consider the likelihood of a public life, punctuated by controversy and "no win" judicial decision-making opportunities. As I have matured as a lawyer, the decision-making has gotten closer and closer to home, and I often find myself thinking, "If it were me, what would I do?"

I never really have answered the question but, instead, find myself admiring those who say yes to the sacrifice. And admiring those who say no to the toughest career decision they will ever make. What would you do?

The decision isn't getting any easier. And for those who say yes, life is not getting any easier. In fact, it has become a life that starts with a searing political process, followed by a lifetime of hard work for less pay.

DANGER TO DEMOCRACY

As Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist has said in no uncertain terms to the last three Congresses: There is a crisis in our federal judiciary, constituting a clear and present danger to the uniquely American foundation of our tripartite democracy—an independent judiciary.

The crisis has a dual modality to it, and as the chief has noted in very explicit language, it can only be remedied if the accountable parties—the other two branches —cooperatively and responsibly respond to twin imperatives: expeditious nomination and confirmation, and adequate judicial pay.

As this page is being written, the spectacle of the Miguel Estrada "filibuster" grinds on—a living testament to the inability of both sides to cooperatively fulfill the grave constitutional duty entrusted to them. But it is illustrative of what can happen to a judicial nominee who gets caught in bare-knuckled partisan kickboxing. This is to say nothing of the secondary effect current intramural disputes will have on a legion of other nominees—all awaiting hearings or confirmation, many for months or even years at a time, having all put professional careers and private lives on hold.

For those who have made it through the process—who put on their robes every day, and go competently and quietly about the business of dispensing American justice—paydays provide a constant reminder of an empty promise made by the American people in Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution: That their pay "shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." cf: Williams v. U.S., 240 F.3d 1019 (D.C. 2001), petition for cert. denied, 535 U.S. 911 (2002) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

THE FACTS ARE PLAIN

It is a fact that the purchasing power of judicial pay has diminished by 25 percent during the past three decades. It is a fact that more federal judges have quit the bench before qualifying for retirement in the last decade than in the preceding 40 years. It is a fact that the National Commission on the Public Service, headed by former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, cited federal judicial pay as "the most egregious example of the failure of federal compensation policies." The facts are that the members of the new national accounting industry oversight board will be paid $450,000 per year—and that U.S. district judges make $154,700 a year. Facts aside, it is an outrage.

I have great admiration and sympathy for my friends, each of whom I am sure made the right decision in saying yes or no. But under similar circumstances, I am almost sure that I would have said to myself, "All of that—for what?"

We have told Chief Justice Rehnquist that, at the very least, we at the ABA are listening to him and will do everything we can to rectify this outrageous state of affairs. We lawyers must speak up for our brothers and sisters at the bar who have accepted the challenge. They sacrifice daily to make our third branch the envy of the world. They earn our respect and admiration every day. They deserve our unswerving loyalty and support.

They need to be nominated and confirmed faster. They need to be paid more. And they need more and they need faster—now.

Confirmation treachery

Bruce Fein

Judicial confirmation treachery is afoot among a fringe of Senate Democrats. It demands an equally bold Senate Republican answer: a Senate vote irrespective of the non-constitutional cloture rule of the Senate and judicial commissions for nominees who attract simple Senate majorities as prescribed by the Constitution. Turn the other cheek is canonical in the New Testament, but it would be foolhardy before the witch's brew of Democrats currently abusing the right of Senate debate. A cynical filibuster has been launched against a vote on President George W. Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The nominee is a Stradivarius within the professional community: unexcelled academic credentials; celebrated service as a Supreme Court clerk and assistant solicitor general; impressive arguments before the high court in private practice; and, a deluxe rating from the American Bar Association's Committee on the Federal Judiciary, which Senate Democrats themselves have acclaimed as the gold standard for judicial qualifications.
Article II of the Constitution contemplates confirmation of the president's judicial nominees by simple Senate majorities. That threshold of consensus, the Founding Fathers believed, would thwart misuse of the president's appointment power to favor cronies or incompetents; and, check undue executive branch influence over the character of the third branch. The idea of Senate supermajorities for confirmations was rejected for reasons that are threefold: appointing a single federal judge was far less politically momentous than treaty ratifications for which a supermajority requirement was thought proper; the judiciary could become understaffed if a Senate minority were empowered to block nominees; and, a popular consensus over judicial philosophy that found expression in the election of the president and a Senate representing the entire nation should not be frustrated by a minority Senate fringe.
Article I, section 5, clause 2 of the Constitution authorizes,

"Each House [to] determine rules of its proceedings." But those rules cannot defeat companion constitutional provisions. For instance, a rule that refused to count the votes of black or Hispanic-American Members would run afoul of the equal protection component of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

For long years, Senate rules have tolerated unlimited debate as a tactic to shipwreck full Senate consideration of matters within its jurisdiction absent a supermajority vote to close further filibustering. At present, the rule requires a supermajority of 60 senators to invoke cloture. An unwritten rule of the Senate for two centuries, however, was that filibustering was taboo for judicial nominees, at least below the United States Supreme Court, in contrast to legislation or treaties. That filibustering custom recognized that a Senate rule as applied to frustrate the enactment of legislation within its constitutional domain is less constitutionally troublesome than the identical rule as applied to thwart the appointment of judges who operate outside the Senate's jurisdiction and are tasked to check legislative abuses.

The Founding Fathers worried over an excess of legislation. Thus, laws were required to attract majorities in both the House and Senate; and, the president was endowed with a veto that could be overridden only by two-thirds majorities in both chambers.

When the Senate's 60-vote cloture rule torpedoes legislation that would have commanded a simple Senate majority, it generally advances the Constitution's disfavor of new laws. But even filibusters to oppose legislation can be clearly wrongful, as with the morally compelling 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Furthermore, there are self-evident constitutional limits on Senate cloture rules. Suppose the upper chamber emulated the discredited single-member veto of early Polish parliaments with a rule requiring Senate unanimity either to pass legislation or to ratify treaties. That rule would run roughshod over the constitutionally specified majorities needed for laws or treaties enshrined in Article I, section 7, and Article II, section 2, respectively.

The constitutional cloud over cloture rules darkens considerably when extended to judicial nominees. In contrast to legislation, our constitutional architects voiced no concern over either an excess of judgeships or too much judging. Indeed, they generally celebrated independent federal courts and the power of judges to pronounce on the constitutionality of government action - the jewel in our Constitution's crown as acclaimed by both conservative Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and liberal Associate Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

Thus, filibustering judicial nominees who would be confirmed by a Senate majority works against the constitutional grain. No exception has been recognized for Senate minority opposition turning on judicial philosophy. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, for instance, packed both the lower federal courts and the Supreme Court with hard-core New Dealers without provoking filibusters.

In sum, neither in Senate traditions nor in constitutional law is there a crumb of justification for the fringe Senate Democrat filibustering of the impeccably qualified Mr. Estrada. Sen. Charles Schumer, New York Democrat, exemplifies their duplicity. In one sentence, he maligns Mr. Estrada as a stealth candidate who confounds the Senate duty to make an informed confirmation vote. In the next, he insists that overwhelming evidence proves the nominee is a far-right conservative outside the judicial mainstream who would create a dangerous imbalance on the court of appeals. And in the third, he accuses President Bush of conservative machinations by following the strong advice of former Democrat Solicitors General Archibald Cox and Walter Dellinger in declining to provide the Senate with confidential and legally privileged memoranda authored by then Assistant Solicitor Miguel Estrada. As F. Scott Fitzgerald bemoaned, the mark of a first-rate intelligence in modern times is the ability to keep two opposite ideas in the mind simultaneously yet retain the capability of functioning.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, Tennessee Republican, should arrange for a Senate vote on Mr. Estrada irrespective of the cloture rule. His confirmation would be certain. The Constitution would be honored. And the federal judiciary would no longer be held hostage by a fringe Democrat minority.

Turnabout Is Not Fair Play

By Vilma Martinez

[Vilma Martinez is a California lawyer and former President of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.]

As a member of Senator Barbara Boxer's committee for screening federal judicial candidates in California during the Clinton Administration, I was proud to recommend Judge Richard Paez for the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. President Clinton nominated Judge Paez, but his nomination languished for four years in the Senate, as he was subjected to a campaign of half-truths and cruel caricatures. At the time, California Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, characteristic of her sense of fairness and respect for an independent judiciary, stepped up to the plate: She wrote letters, made phone calls, and exhorted her fellow Republicans to confirm Judge Paez and other Clinton judicial nominees. Eventually, Judge Paez received an up or down vote and was confirmed.

In June 2001, President Bush nominated Judge Kuhl to the Ninth Circuit. After nearly two years of delay, she finally receives a hearing this week. But some of the groups that supported Judge Paez ironically have turned their fire on Judge Kuhl, apparently to exact payback against Senate Republicans. This turnabout is not fair play. It is the continuation of a vicious cycle that punishes worthy judicial candidates in a misguided effort to use the judiciary to further narrow political ends.

I generally identify myself as a Democrat, am a veteran of civil rights battles, and testified against Judge Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court on the basis of Judge Bork's inadequate judicial temperament for service on the Court. Like others dedicated to the independence of the judiciary, I certainly do not want ideologues serving as judges on our federal courts. That is why I think Judge Kuhl would make a great addition to the Ninth Circuit.

Judge Kuhl is what I think of as an old-fashioned judge. She cares about due process for everyone. In her seven years on the California Superior Court, she has shown that she is careful to hear both sides. She does not try to influence the outcome of a case to favor one side or the other. She is serious about her oath to follow the law, whatever the result. Judge Kuhl takes as her guide the words of Justice Felix Frankfurter that the highest calling of a judge is to subordinate one's personal views to the law.

Judge Kuhl is in the mainstream of the Los Angeles legal community. She is the first woman to serve as the Supervising Judge of the Civil Department of the Los Angeles Superior Court, a court system that is larger than the entire federal trial court system nationwide. She served as the Supervising Judge of that court's very successful Complex Litigation Program in its experimental phase.

Judge Kuhl is actively supported by both the plaintiffs' and defense bars in Los Angeles. Over a dozen Justices of the California Court of Appeal and approximately 100 judges on the California Superior Court have signed letters in support of Judge Kuhl. Twenty-three women judges signed a letter of support, noting Judge Kuhl's role as a mentor to young woman lawyers and new women judges. Many of these supporters are active Democrats. They know Judge Kuhl and like me they know that she has been and would be a fair judge dedicated to neutrally following the law.

I call on fellow Democrats and our elected leaders to step up to the plate to support Judge Kuhl, just like she went to bat for Judge Paez and other Clinton nominees. It is shameful that her generosity and dedication to an independent judiciary are being repaid by subjecting her to the same sort of calumny that Judge Paez suffered. Until the politicians decide to play fair with judicial candidates, our system of justice will continue to suffer.

Subject: Airlines Working Group Meeting

I would like to have an Airlines Working Group meeting Tuesday April 1 at 2:00 pm. Please let me know by email ASAP if you are unable to make this time. An alternative time would be Tuesday at 4:00 pm so it would also be helpful to know whether you are able to make this time. Layton will send a confirming email on Monday with the exact time and location. I may not have copied everyone's assistants on this email, so please forward it if I didn't.

The purpose of the meeting is to follow-up on the meeting with the President last week and discuss competition issues in the industry. I would like to ask you to bring to the meeting your best and boldest ideas about:

1. What, if anything, the Administration could do to improve competition in the industry; and
2. What, if anything the government could/should stop doing to improve competition in the industry.

When you think about competition, you should think not only about the consumer, but also about barriers to new carriers entering the market generally or specific markets.

I do not expect fully formed, vetted proposals, just rough ideas.

Thanks,

Liz Dougherty

Judge -- To the extent Ari is asked about this, I'd advise the following talking points:

The Administration made its position clear in the briefs that it filed and at oral argument. The case is now before the Supreme Court. We will await the Court's guidance.

Thanks,
Noel

Hatch Drafting New Asbestos Litigation Reform Legislation
ÿÿÿÿÿAides to Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch were drafting and vetting new concepts for asbestos litigation reform legislation Tuesday, the rough outlines of which Hatch sketched at a private meeting last week with insurance and other business executives.
ÿÿÿÿÿIndustry lobbyists were chewing over Hatch's proposals Tuesday at various meetings and conference calls around town, as they and other stakeholders were poised to meet privately with senators that evening to continue the legislative conversation.
ÿÿÿÿÿThat meeting was organized by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and included a larger circle of interested players from the insurance industry, from defendant companies and also from labor, the trial bar and from the broader legal community.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch and Senate Democrats publicly and privately have emphasized the importance of keeping the legislation bipartisan, and sources asserted that Dodd, Hatch, Senate Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, already are working closely together.
ÿÿÿÿÿSources said that the Dodd "summit," as it was billed, included some heated exchanges, including one between representatives for the American Bar Association and the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, but that it ended on a positive note.
ÿÿÿÿÿAspects of the Hatch proposal were alluded to, but not directly discussed during the meeting, several attendees said. One source described the tenor of the entire discussion as more "philosophical" than legislative in nature.
ÿÿÿÿÿMany sources agreed that the summit had been somewhat overtaken by events -- namely Hatch's meeting last week in which he established a new set of parameters for legislation, which his aides have since been
"furiously" trying to flesh out, one source said.
ÿÿÿÿÿStill, participants welcomed yet another opportunity at Tuesday's forum to "open up" the process, another source added.
ÿÿÿÿÿReform proponents were even more heartened to see the bipartisan nature of the meeting, which in addition to Dodd, included Hatch, Leahy and Sens. Thomas Carper, D-Del., DeWine and Patty Murray, D-Wash. ÿÿÿÿÿMurray made a pitch for a litigation reform bill to include legislation she authored last year banning the use of asbestos-containing products.

ÿÿÿÿÿAttendees said each of the senators and most summit participants agreed that the current asbestos litigation system is in need of repair and that a legislative solution is required this year -- before the Senate's agenda gives way to the political vagaries of the 2004 election cycle.

ÿÿÿÿÿThe new legislative direction being tested by Hatch encompasses elements of proposals earlier suggested by others, but is meant to provide a way through the stalemate that had hindered consensus.

ÿÿÿÿÿAccording to several sources, the cornerstone of Hatch's plan is the creation of a "specialized court" of federal claims, or a federally established resolution body for dealing with asbestos claims, which in turn could include an administrative component, such as a trust fund.

ÿÿÿÿÿSources said Hatch envisions two "blue-ribbon" commissions, one for defendant companies and one for their insurers, being created to determine annual allocations among the various contributors to a fund that would be used to compensate victims.

ÿÿÿÿÿHatch's plan also calls for limited judicial review of the funding allocation and claimant compensation as determined by that expert body, sources familiar with the plan said.

ÿÿÿÿÿHatch apparently also agrees that some sort of medical criteria would need to be applied to deter frivolous claims and to ensure that the sickest of victims can quickly and easily get compensation; however, sources said the specifics of that criteria remained up in the air.

ÿÿÿÿÿSources said Hatch also is adamant that companies that have been targeted in the past "aren't required to pay twice" and that insurers pay in an "equitable" manner. Contributions would be flexible, based on funding needs and also would be subject to an annual cap, sources said.

ÿÿÿÿÿA Hatch spokeswoman was not available at presstime Tuesday evening to confirm these points.

ÿÿÿÿÿHatch is soliciting interest group input during this exploratory portion of the legislative process, which sources said is a precursor to more formal drafting efforts Hatch has indicated would take place in earnest over the April recess.

ÿÿÿÿÿHatch, who has repeatedly challenged the interested parties to put aside their preconceived notions and disputes over what the legislation ought to look like, is aiming for a May markup.

ÿÿÿÿÿSaid Julie Rochman of the American Insurance Association as she left Tuesday's packed meeting: "The Hill owns this process now, they're driving it. And everybody downtown should be doing everything they can to respond to that." By Pamela Barnett

There are 2 types of records in the Executive Branch: federal records (at all the departments and agencies) and Presidential records (mostly at White House).

As to federal records from old Administrations, the current Administration asserts exemptions under FOIA to protect them as appropriate. That was the situation in the pardon record case referenced below. The former President has no voice in that process.

By contrast, Presidential records are shipped off to Presidential libraries and are subject to the Presidential Records Act, which is similar but not identical to FOIA. As to those records, former Presidents do have significant say under the Presidential Records Act and President Bush's executive order. The current President, to be sure, does consider and/or review "Presidential records" proposed for release by former Presidents at the time they are proposed for release, but that has not occurred yet for Clinton "Presidential records," which are being archived and filed at the Clinton Library in Little Rock. (That is a massive project.)

In response to the bolded sentence below, therefore, we can reiterate that former President Clinton will have significant discretion under the statute and President Bush's executive order either (i) to withhold his "Presidential records" consistent with the Constitution and law OR (ii) to release Presidential records as he deems appropriate.

Brett -- where are we on this issue?; the obvious question is why won't;we release them if Clinton waives his right?
Clinton recently waived his right to restrict access to most of the confidential advice he received during his administration. The step will allow historians, scholars and others to have access to the documents within a few years unless Bush, or any successor, vetoes their release.

The 177 pardons and commutations Clinton approved on his last day in office produced an uproar, especially over the clemency he bestowed on fugitive financier Marc Rich.

The Bush White House has not said whether it would object to the release of the Clinton records as soon as the minimum five-year waiting period prescribed by the Presidential Records Act expires, but lawyers there and at the Justice Department have taken an uncompromising stand in the Judicial Watch litigation. According to their pleadings, the pardon authority is "a core presidential power exclusively entrusted to, and exercised by, the president himself, and the documents generated in the process of developing and providing advice to him are squarely subject to the privilege."

Why the secrecy?

Wednesday, April 02, 2003 - So, what's the secret, Mr. President?
Citing a need to review "sensitive information," President Bush last week denied public access to millions of documents from the Carter administration for another three years. Originally the files were scheduled to be released later this month.
The president also stripped a Clinton executive order that said, basically, when in doubt, documents should be disclosed to the public. Now the government will err on the side of secrecy.
The administration says withholding the documents is partly a matter of national security.
In times of war, Americans are usually more than willing to oblige. But this doesn't make sense. Existing rules already allowed the Bush administration to keep secret any documents that could jeopardize national security.
So why change the 1995 executive order that automatically declassifies most government documents after 25 years? Count us among the skeptics who wonder if delaying the Carter documents is merely an attempt to create a logjam of paperwork to hold off release of Reagan-era documents.
Many advisers now serving in the Bush administration were regulars in the Reagan years. The delay will keep their words and deeds from the 1980s silent well into what would be Bush's second term and possibly beyond that.
His order, which also allows agencies to reclassify documents they have already declassified, came at 6:40 p.m. Handing out a press release that late - on something that's obviously been discussed for weeks, if not months - is a popular PR ploy to bury the story.
At that late hour, reporters would be forced to scramble for analysis, a savvy White House staff figures. The subsequent report, lacking substance and perspective, likely would be relegated to deep in the paper or newscast, especially when the nation's attention is diverted to the Middle East.
It's just another troubling move deeper into the shadows of democracy. The administration is fond of secrecy, and it's been even more so since the 9/11 terrorist attacks.
Bush has attempted to expand presidential power; has won new protection from congressional oversight; has expanded government surveillance powers; and has worked to tighten the release of historical presidential records.
We understand some documents must remain confidential. The United States cannot expose military secrets to the world to satisfy our open-records laws.
But the laws exist for a reason. The Presidential Records Act of 1978, which says executive documents belong to the government and not the president, was enacted in the dark days that followed the Watergate scandal. President Nixon had argued those papers belonged to him, not the government.
The law was passed because we had learned from our mistakes and didn't want to repeat them. Let's not make another by shuttering the windows of government and keeping the sunlight out.

Democracy only works when government is open and accountable to the people.

Why the secrecy?

Wednesday, April 02, 2003 - So, what's the secret, Mr. President?

Citing a need to review "sensitive information," President Bush last week denied public access to millions of documents from the Carter administration for another three years. Originally the files were scheduled to be released later this month.

The president also stripped a Clinton executive order that said, basically, when in doubt, documents should be disclosed to the public. Now the government will err on the side of secrecy.

The administration says withholding the documents is partly a matter of national security.

In times of war, Americans are usually more than willing to oblige. But this doesn't make sense. Existing rules already allowed the Bush administration to keep secret any documents that could jeopardize national security.

So why change the 1995 executive order that automatically declassifies most government documents after 25 years? Count us among the skeptics who wonder if delaying the Carter documents is merely an attempt to create a logjam of paperwork to hold off release of Reagan-era documents.

Many advisers now serving in the Bush administration were regulars in the Reagan years. The delay will keep their words and deeds from the 1980s silent well into what would be Bush's second term and possibly beyond that.

His order, which also allows agencies to reclassify documents they have already declassified, came at 6:40 p.m. Handing out a press release that late - on something that's obviously been discussed for weeks, if not months - is a popular PR ploy to bury the story.

At that late hour, reporters would be forced to scramble for analysis, a savvy White House staff figures. The subsequent report, lacking substance and perspective, likely would be relegated to deep in the paper or newscast, especially when the nation's attention is diverted to the Middle East.

It's just another troubling move deeper into the shadows of democracy. The administration is fond of secrecy, and it's been even more so since the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

Bush has attempted to expand presidential power; has won new protection from congressional oversight; has expanded government surveillance powers; and has worked to tighten the release of historical presidential records.

We understand some documents must remain confidential. The United States cannot expose military secrets to the world to satisfy our open-records laws.

But the laws exist for a reason. The Presidential Records Act of 1978, which says executive documents belong to the government and not the president, was enacted in the dark days that followed the Watergate scandal. President Nixon had argued those papers belonged to him, not the government.

The law was passed because we had learned from our mistakes and didn't want to repeat them. Let's not make another by shuttering the windows of government and keeping the sunlight out.

Democracy only works when government is open and accountable to the people.

Hatch Drafting New Asbestos Litigation Reform Legislation
ÿÿÿÿÿAides to Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch were drafting and vetting
new concepts for asbestos litigation reform legislation Tuesday, the rough outlines of which Hatch sketched at a private meeting last week with insurance and other business executives.
ÿÿÿÿÿIndustry lobbyists were chewing over Hatch's proposals Tuesday at various meetings and conference calls around town, as they and other stakeholders were poised to meet privately with senators that evening to continue the legislative conversation.
ÿÿÿÿÿThat meeting was organized by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and included a larger circle of interested players from the insurance industry, from defendant companies and also from labor, the trial bar and from the broader legal community.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch and Senate Democrats publicly and privately have emphasized the importance of keeping the legislation bipartisan, and sources asserted that Dodd, Hatch, Senate Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, already are working closely together.
ÿÿÿÿÿSources said that the Dodd "summit," as it was billed, included some heated exchanges, including one between representatives for the American Bar Association and the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, but that it ended on a positive note.
ÿÿÿÿÿAspects of the Hatch proposal were alluded to, but not directly discussed during the meeting, several attendees said. One source described the tenor of the entire discussion as more "philosophical" than legislative in nature.
ÿÿÿÿÿMany sources agreed that the summit had been somewhat overtaken by events -- namely Hatch's meeting last week in which he established a new set of parameters for legislation, which his aides have since been
"furiously" trying to flesh out, one source said.
ÿÿÿÿÿStill, participants welcomed yet another opportunity at Tuesday's forum to "open up" the process, another source added.
ÿÿÿÿÿReform proponents were even more heartened to see the bipartisan nature of the meeting, which in addition to Dodd, included Hatch, Leahy and Sens. Thomas Carper, D-Del., DeWine and Patty Murray, D-Wash. ÿÿÿÿÿMurray made a pitch for a litigation reform bill to include

legislation she authored last year banning the use of asbestos-containing products.
ÿÿÿÿÿAttendees said each of the senators and most summit participants agreed that the current asbestos litigation system is in need of repair and that a legislative solution is required this year -- before the Senate's agenda gives way to the political vagaries of the 2004 election cycle.
ÿÿÿÿÿThe new legislative direction being tested by Hatch encompasses elements of proposals earlier suggested by others, but is meant to provide a way through the stalemate that had hindered consensus.
ÿÿÿÿÿAccording to several sources, the cornerstone of Hatch's plan is the creation of a "specialized court" of federal claims, or a federally established resolution body for dealing with asbestos claims, which in turn could include an administrative component, such as a trust fund.
ÿÿÿÿÿSources said Hatch envisions two "blue-ribbon" commissions, one for defendant companies and one for their insurers, being created to determine annual allocations among the various contributors to a fund that would be used to compensate victims.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch's plan also calls for limited judicial review of the funding allocation and claimant compensation as determined by that expert body, sources familiar with the plan said.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch apparently also agrees that some sort of medical criteria would need to be applied to deter frivolous claims and to ensure that the sickest of victims can quickly and easily get compensation; however, sources said the specifics of that criteria remained up in the air.
ÿÿÿÿÿSources said Hatch also is adamant that companies that have been targeted in the past "aren't required to pay twice" and that insurers pay in an "equitable" manner. Contributions would be flexible, based on funding needs and also would be subject to an annual cap, sources said.
ÿÿÿÿÿA Hatch spokeswoman was not available at presstime Tuesday evening to confirm these points.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch is soliciting interest group input during this exploratory portion of the legislative process, which sources said is a precursor to more formal drafting efforts Hatch has indicated would take place in earnest over the April recess.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch, who has repeatedly challenged the interested parties to put aside their preconceived notions and disputes over what the legislation ought to look like, is aiming for a May markup.
ÿÿÿÿÿSaid Julie Rochman of the American Insurance Association as she left Tuesday's packed meeting: "The Hill owns this process now, they're driving it. And everybody downtown should be doing everything they can to respond to that." By Pamela Barnett

TESTIMONY OF GREGORY F. JENNER,
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY (TAX POLICY),
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON TAX, FINANCE AND EXPORTS OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS ON SMALL BUSINESS EXPENSING

April 3, 2003

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Pascrell, and members of the Subcommittee:

On behalf of the Administration, I would like to thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today regarding the President's proposal to expand and simplify expensing for small business. As you know, the proposed amendment to section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code is a key component of the President's Jobs and Growth package.

Current Law

Under current law, section 179 provides that, for taxable years beginning in 2003, in lieu of depreciation a taxpayer with annual investment below a certain level may elect to deduct up to $25,000 of the cost of qualifying property placed in service for the taxable year. In general, qualifying property includes tangible personal property, purchased for use in the active conduct of a trade or business, which is subject to an allowance for depreciation. Off-the-shelf computer software, however, is excluded from current expensing under section 179 due to its classification as intangible property for purposes of federal income taxation.

The $25,000 amount is reduced (but not below zero) by the amount by which the cost of qualifying property placed in service during the taxable year exceeds $200,000. Neither the $25,000 nor the $200,000 amounts are indexed for inflation.

An election under section 179 must be made for each taxable year the expense deduction is claimed for qualifying property. The election must provide certain specific information as required by the statute and the corresponding income tax regulations, and the election must generally be attached to the taxpayer's tax return for the taxable year to which the election applies. Once made, the election can only be revoked with the consent of the Commissioner and current regulations provide that such revocation will only be granted in extraordinary circumstances.

Section 179 is generally viewed as a simplification measure for small business to obtain a current deduction for property used in their trade or business. Current expensing of depreciable assets significantly reduces the administrative complexity that would otherwise exist if such assets were recovered over a number of years under the general depreciation rules. Section 179 also provides small businesses with a lower cost of capital for their depreciable assets.

Administration's Proposal

In an attempt to increase the tax benefits available to small businesses, simplify tax compliance requirements, reduce record-keeping burdens, and encourage and stimulate investment by small businesses, the Administration has proposed significant modifications to section 179 specifically designed to meet these important policy goals. The Administration's proposal under section 179 would do the following:

(1) triple the maximum dollar amount that may be expensed to $75,000 (from $25,000) for qualifying property placed in service in 2003 and thereafter;
(2) index annually for inflation the amount that can be expensed each year (beginning in 2004);
(3) increase to $325,000 from $200,000 the point at which the benefits of section 179 begin to phase out, effective for qualifying property placed in service in 2003 and thereafter (and index such amount annually for inflation);
(4) include off-the-shelf computer software as qualifying property; and
(5) permit taxpayers to make or revoke expensing elections on amended returns without the consent of the Commissioner.

As you can see Mr. Chairman, this proposal has significance far beyond increasing the amount that can be expensed each year.

The benefits of the Administration's proposal on small business taxpayers as well as the overall economy are many. For example, expensing encourages investment by lowering the after-tax cost of capital purchases compared to claiming annual depreciation deductions. We estimate that for a typical 7-year asset, expensing would reduce its cost of capital from 0.056 (excluding the benefits of the temporary 30 percent partial expensing provision) to 0.041. This benefit is equivalent to an investment tax credit rate of 8.5%, assuming a full basis adjustment. In addition, the Administration's proposal to increase the annual deduction limitation will encourage small businesses to increase their capital investment as a result of the reduced after-tax cost while simultaneously stimulating the economy vis-à-vis an increase in the manufacture of capital goods.

Second, expensing is far simpler than claiming regular depreciation deductions. This is particularly helpful for small taxpayers less able to afford sophisticated tax planning advice. Economic data indicate that of all taxpayers that claimed a section 179 deduction in 1999, 69% of those taxpayers were sole proprietorships or individual farmers. The proposal will further simplify tax compliance requirements by eliminating the often tedious task of depreciating fixed assets over a number of years. The current $25,000 threshold is low enough that taxpayers often are able to expense only a portion of an asset's purchase price. The taxpayer is required to depreciate the balance, which eliminates any simplification benefits. Capital investment for small businesses in particular is likely to be sporadic, varying substantially year by year. One year a business may make no capital purchases and in the next buy a $50,000 piece of equipment. Under current law, they would receive none of the simplification benefits of expensing. By raising the limit to $75,000, the President's proposal will allow many more taxpayers to avoid the complexity inherent in depreciation.

Third, raising the amount of total investment at which the phase-out begins increases the number of taxpayers eligible for Section 179 expensing, thus simplifying the tax compliance and record keeping burden for a significant number of small business taxpayers. Without this change, the benefits from the proposed increase in the amount that can be expensed from $25,000 to $75,000 would be much more limited.

Fourth, current section 179 precludes off-the-shelf computer software from being expensed. This is confusing and inconvenient to many taxpayers who buy a computer, expense it, but then have to depreciate (amortize) the software they bought to run on the computer. The simplification gains of expensing the computer are largely lost if the software has to be depreciated. Current law also places purchased software at a disadvantage relative to software developed specifically for the taxpayer. Under current law, the cost of packaged software that is purchased "off-the-shelf" is amortized over 36 months whereas costs to develop software are generally permitted to be expensed as incurred. The Administration's proposal to include computer software as qualifying property eligible for immediate expensing will increase the scope of property eligible for current expensing, provide similar treatment relative to developed software, and further simplify the tax compliance burdens of small business.

Finally, current law section 179 does not permit taxpayers to revoke their 179 election on an amended return. While the tax code does not generally allow elections to be made on amended returns, the Administration believes an exception is justified in this instance. Taxpayers, such as small businesses, without the resources to hire experienced tax advisors, are often unaware of the advantages or disadvantages of the increased deduction. Therefore, to permit elections to be made or revoked on an amended return will provide flexibility to these smaller businesses in determining whether the election is to their advantage and will permit the less-advised taxpayers to avail themselves of the benefits offered under section 179.

Usage of Section 179 Under Current Law and Under the Administration's Proposal

Table 1 provides data on the usage of section 179 in 1999 (the most recent year for which data is available) by type of business. It shows that 4.2 million small businesses claimed $26.1 billion in section 179 deductions.[1] Most of these businesses – 61 percent – were sole proprietorships. Twenty-seven percent were corporations (11 percent C corporations and 16 percent subchapter S corporations), 8 percent were farms, and 4 percent were partnerships. Sole proprietorships also claimed the largest amount of section 179 deductions -- $11.2 billion -- followed by corporations with $10.5 billion, farms with $2.9 billion, and partnerships with $1.5 billion.

[1] The limit on section 179 deductions was $19,000 in 1999.

While sole proprietorships were the most numerous users of the section 179 deduction, they claimed the smallest amount on average -- $4,400 compared to over $8,000 for all other types of businesses. (Table 1, column 5.) Also, sole proprietorships claiming some expensing had on average the smallest amounts of investment in section 179 property that they did not claim for the deduction. (Table 1, column 7.) This is not surprising because sole proprietors are more likely to be providing services and operating in less capital-intensive industries than are other forms of business organization.

Table 2 shows the amount of section 179 deductions claimed broken out by the amount of total investment in section 179 property. It shows that the vast majority of businesses using section 179 make only small amounts of investment, whether or not it is expensed.[2] In 1999, when the maximum deduction allowed under section 179 was $19,000, businesses with an investment of less than $25,000 in property that would qualify for section 179 treatment represented 85 percent of all businesses claiming section 179 and 61 percent of the investment expensed. Businesses investing more than $75,000 in the types of property that could qualify for section 179, on the other hand, represented only 4 percent of all claimants but 10 percent of the section 179 deductions claimed. Not surprisingly, businesses with less than $25,000 of investment in qualifying section 179 property had little investment that they were not already expensing (on average $1,400) and would be less likely to benefit as much from an expansion in section 179 eligibility as would firms already making larger investments in qualifying section 179 property. (See column 7.)

There are at least two ways to examine which businesses would benefit from the Administration's proposal. One way would be to look at businesses who would qualify for larger section 179 deductions under the proposal than under current law, without any changes in their behavior. Another way would be to look at businesses for which the proposal provides an incentive to change their behavior and increase their investment in order to receive more generous treatment than they would under current law. Table 3 takes the former no-change-in behavior approach to benefits, and Table 4 looks at businesses that the proposal might encourage to make larger investments.

At 1999 levels of investment, about one-half million small businesses would have directly benefited if the Administration's proposed deduction and phase-out limits had been in effect rather than current 2003 law. (Table 3) This figure represents businesses that had enough business income and who made enough investment that they could have claimed a larger section 179 deduction under the higher limits of the proposal, with no change in behavior on their part. Interestingly, more of these beneficiaries were S corporations than any other type of business, followed by C corporations. Although a majority of current users of section 179 are sole proprietorships, they represent only 23 percent of the direct beneficiaries.

Businesses who could have claimed higher section 179 deductions under the more generous limits are only one group who would benefit from the Administration's proposal. The more generous provisions also provide incentives for a number of businesses to increase their investment in property qualifying for section 179 expensing. As Table 4 shows, the Administration's proposal provides an incentive for 1.8 million small businesses, or 42 percent of all businesses claiming section 179 deductions, to increase their investment in qualifying section 179 property. (Column 2) These were businesses that had expensed some but less than $75,000 in section 179 property in 1999 and that had adequate business income to qualify for a larger deduction. The proposal would provide an incentive to increase investment to approximately two-thirds of all S corporations and partnerships who currently claim section 179. Because sole proprietorships make up such a large share of the current users of section 179, sole proprietors represent over half of the businesses that would be encouraged to increase their investment. (Column 3)

These measures of the number of small businesses that would benefit from the Administration's proposal – either directly with no change in behavior or by responding to new incentives to increase investment -- are a lower bound on the number of businesses that would be helped by the proposal. These counts do not include firms that will now be able to expense software purchases, which would make or revoke section 179 elections on amended returns, or might for the first time be encouraged by the more generous expensing previsions to purchase qualifying section 179 property. In addition, these figures don't capture the total number of small businesses that in a 5-year period would at some point be able to benefit from expanded eligibility for section 179.

Conclusion

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, the Administration believes that this proposal presents a winning combination of benefits: powerful incentives for small businesses to invest and grow, important simplification, and reduced recordkeeping. With the other components of the President's jobs and growth package, the proposal will improve the climate for small businesses to lead the way to a stronger economy.

 High Priority **

Brett:
Nancy Smith received a call and e-mail from Catherine Lotrionte, the PFIAB counsel, asking for access to PFIAB records (that are in NARA's legal and custody and are currently maintained by Nancy's staff at Archives 1) per the attached request from General Scowcroft. This report may be in Reagan or Bush Presidential records, and, if so, we would need your approval for this request under ongoing business of the incumbent, 44 USC 2205(2)(B).

To faciliate in the future these requests by PFIAB to its records from former administrations, you might want to write a letter similiar to the one that NARA received from Timothy Flanigan at the beginning of the Bush Administration establishing a routine procedure for NSC asking NARA for NSC Presidential records from former administrations. I can fax you a copy of that letter if you would like.

All we need right now to begin the search for this particular report, and to proceed with a notification of the former President's representative once we have located it, is your authorization, which you can do in response to this e-mail.

Please let either Nancy or me know if you have any questions or concerns.
Thanks.

Nancy,
As I mentioned to you on the phone I am presently working on an assignment from General Scowcroft related to unauthorized leaks of classified information.
Specifically, relating to proposals for leaks legislation in this area.
I am under the impression that PFIAB has a report on the subject matter.
Could you assist me in getting any prior reports that might have been done by PFIAB or the IOB on the subject.
Thank you,
Catherine Lotrionte

I'd appreciate any thoughts you might have on my speech. I haven't even fully reviewed it yet, but I wanted to get it to you sooner rather than later for any suggestions you might have.

Remarks of David G. Leitch
Deputy Counsel to the President
April 3, 2002
University of Chicago Federalist Society

It's a pleasure to be with you this afternoon. Before coming out to Chicago, I had the opportunity to scan your web page and to review the impressive list of speakers the Federalist Society has brought to the University during this academic year. I must say it's a rather impressive list; I'm not sure who cancelled on you that you ended up with me, but they definitely owe you. But here I am, so let's see if I can provide you with some insights from the Nation's capital, and to leave ample time for your questions and discussion.

Before I turn to those thoughts, however, I did want to note that this law school has been particularly good to the White House Counsel's office under President Bush and his Counsel Alberto Gonzales. From the earliest days of this Administration, Noel Francisco – a 1996 graduate of this institution – has faithfully served as an Associate Counsel to the President with great skill and dedication. Kyle Sampson, also from the class of 1996, began his service to the Administration in Presidential Personnel, and oversaw much of the selection of lawyers in the early days of the Bush term before moving to Counsel's office. And we recently added to our ranks Ted Ullyot, class of 1994, as another Associate Counsel, fresh from a stint as General Counsel of AOL Time Warner – Europe. Many thanks to this institution for training up these three fine lawyers.

Our office is also grateful to the Federalist Society for its contributions to the legal culture over the past 20 years. In earlier years, a note of thanks to the Society would have been very natural; now that the Society has become something of a bogeyman for attacks from the left, however, one approaches such a courtesy with some trepidation. Given what has been written about the Federalist Society in the past two years, one unfamiliar with its true purpose and contribution would probably be reluctant to venture anywhere near a meeting of such a dangerous organization bent on subverting our Constitutional system.

Fortunately, my experience with this organization is not limited to what I read in recent press, but comes first-hand from attending some of its meetings in DC, personal interaction with its leadership, and working with members of the Society in our office and elsewhere. In light of that experience, I'm happy to say thank you for continuing to contribute to and conduct the important debates concerning our legal system. While the views of individual members of the Federalist Society are always open to debate, it's hard for me to argue with the Society's stated goals – which place a premium on individual liberty, traditional values, and the rule of law.

Perhaps it will seem obvious, but I have to tell you what a thrill and a privilege it is to serve in the White House on a daily basis. Each day brings a wide variety of activity, accomplishments, pride, and emotion. I remain as awed by it today as the first day I entered the White House as a tourist -- and particularly more awed and humbled by being one of the fortunate few who actually work in the White House's West Wing. Because I know that even among this distinguished crowd many of you will never have the privilege of experiencing a visit to the White House first hand, I thought it would be worth taking some of my time today to share with you in some detail what it's like to have the West Wing as your place of employment.

In the Counsel's office, our day begins very early. I usually pass through the three gates necessary to reach my parking spot by around 6:30 each morning. At the first gate, I shut off my engine and open my trunk so that a bomb-sniffing dog can do its work. That activity, while somewhat routine by now, always serves as a reminder of the times in which we live, and the significance of the building in which I go to work each day.

While I was not at the White House on September 11, it doesn't take much of an imagination to picture the fear and horror that gripped that building on a day when terrorists targeted some of our most visible landmarks and centers of power. I can tell you that those who were in the building on that day forever changed their perspective on life and death, good and evil, and the war on terror. While Churchill famously described the experience of being shot at without result as exhilarating, it also has a way of focusing one's mind and effort. Certainly our President has demonstrated such focus and resolve against those who would target our nation. Having a dog sniff my car for bombs each morning is simply a small reminder of all that's changed in the last two years.

By the time I pass through the third gate each morning to park my car just a few yards from the entrance to the West Wing, however, I am routinely filled not with fear or caution but with awe and inspiration. The West Wing celebrated its 100th anniversary last year, and it boggles the mind to think that I go to work to serve the President each day in the place where so many of the defining moments of our history occurred – including those that gave rise to a resignation and an impeachment of two Presidents in the last three decades. Long before it was a popular TV show, the West Wing was emblazoned on the American mind as the symbolic and actual nerve center of Executive Power under our Constitutional system.

After parking my car, I enter the small ground floor lobby of the West Wing, passing by the latest photos of the President in action at the White House. These "jumbos" are produced as a result of the nearly constant presence of a photographer with the President. As if it weren't obvious enough that working in the White House is a matter of history, one has little opportunity to forget that fact when every meeting in the Oval Office begins with a photographer snapping pictures. The best and most historic of these pictures are hung around the West Wing on a fairly current basis. For example, the first picture inside the door this week and last is a picture of the President, the Vice President, Chief of Staff Andy Card, and CIA Director George Tenet discussing the plans to conduct the first bombing raids on Iraq two weeks ago.

After moving through the lobby, one passes the White House Situation Room on the right. I've only attended a few meetings in that room, but again, one need only think for a moment to imagine the historic events that have occurred in that piece of real estate. Most recently, on the morning of March 19th, the President sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks, and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each area commander gave a short briefing and announced his troops fit and ready to go.

The President asked each whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, "Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom."

Pausing, the President said with emotion, "Tommy, may God bless the troops." General Franks replied, "Mr. President, May God Bless America." Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room. And so began the latest effort to enforce disarm Saddam Hussein and to enforce the terms of the cease fire embodied in UN Resolution 687 – which coincidentally was passed by the Security Council 12 years ago today. That's only the latest of the many historic events that have occurred in the highly secure situation room.

REV_00161721

From the situation room, the next floor up is the nerve center of the White House -- the Oval Office, the Roosevelt Room, the Cabinet Room, the Press Room, the Chief of Staff's Office, and the National Security Advisor's Office. I proceed to my office on the second floor – usually by taking the stairs, which these days seems to be my only form of exercise. On the second floor, where I work, office space is occupied by Assistants and Deputy Assistants to the President responsible for Economic Policy, Domestic Policy, Communications, Presidential Personnel, and Legislative Affairs.

The White House Counsel's office has a small suite of three rooms in the West Wing, where Judge Gonzales and I work along with three assistants. The remainder of our attorneys and staff work in the Eisenhower Executive Office Building next door to the White House. Although the position of White House Counsel is not nearly as old as the West Wing itself, the office in which Judge Gonzales sits has been occupied by some leading luminaries of the Washington bar – Fred Fielding, Abner Mikva, Lloyd Cutler, and Chuck Ruff – and perhaps most famously, John Dean, President Nixon's lawyer during the Watergate era.

My office – a compact 12 x 15 piece of prime real estate – is just next door to that of the White House Counsel himself. While its occupants have for better or worse not gained the notoriety of their immediate superiors, the office was formerly occupied by Vince Foster, President Clinton's old friend from Arkansas who tragically took his own life after a short stint as Deputy White House Counsel.

It was as he departed from the very office in which I now work that Mr. Foster was last seen alive, and it was in that office that his now-famous suicide note was found. It was in that note he penned the bitter sentiment that summed up his six months in the Clinton Administration: "In this town ruining people is considered a sport." That chilling assessment – written ten years ago in my office – is a sobering reminder of the pressures and demands of the job; it's certainly not all excitement and glamour. Knowing the very real costs that some have paid to hold this position, I pray each day as I enter the office for God's grace, wisdom, and humility.

My commute usually finds me in my office just before 7 am. Invariably, I find Judge Gonzales already there looking through five morning newspapers. The White House in general – including our office – is keenly aware of each day's news stories both because of the need to respond to charges and allegations and to know the upcoming issues of the day.

On many days, Judge Gonzales heads down to the Oval Office just after 7 am to discuss issues and decisions with the President. As press reports have indicated, Judge Gonzales is remarkably close to the President, and the President places high value on the wise counsel he receives from his long-time friend and counselor. These two men have a long history together. In Texas, Gonzales served as General Counsel to Governor Bush for three years. He then served as Texas' 100th Secretary of State from December 2, 1997 to January 10, 1999. Among his many duties as Secretary of State, Gonzales was a senior advisor to then Governor Bush, chief elections officer, and the Governor's lead liaison on Mexico and border issues. After serving as Secretary of State, he was appointed to the Texas Supreme Court in 1999. Upon his election in 2000, President Bush quickly tapped to Judge Gonzales come to Washington and serve as Counsel to the President, and Gonzales readily agreed to this exciting challenge.

By no means a Washington insider at the time of his appointment, Judge Gonzales has certainly proven to be the right man for the job. I did not know Judge Gonzales well when he asked me to come to the White House to serve as his deputy. Based on four months of working closely with him on a daily basis, however, I can say that it has indeed been a high privilege of my legal career to date. He is a phenomenal lawyer, a dedicated public servant, a wise counselor, and an incredibly decent man. He has been a staunch but fair defender of the President's prerogatives, a steady hand on difficult legal issues arising after the events of September 11, 2001, a fierce enforcer of ethical standards in the White House and among presidential appointees, and a wise overseer of the judicial selection process. Under Judge Gonzales' direction, our office is guided by two unwavering principles – strict adherence to the rule of law, and constant attention within the bounds of the law to the question: "What best serves the President?"

Under the direction of White House Chief of Staff Andy Card, senior staff of the White House gathers every morning at 7:30 in the Roosevelt Room, located across the hall from the Oval Office. I am privileged to attend those meetings when Judge Gonzales is unable for one reason or another to attend. Each meeting begins with Brad Blakeman, the President's scheduler, announcing the President's public schedule for that day.

Ari Fleischer then ticks off the headlines from newspapers around the country. Often he solicits guidance on how he should respond to a particular story if asked at his daily press briefings. We frequently follow up with Ari following the meeting to discuss particular questions he might receive concerning the legal basis for actions the Administration is taking, or legal positions it might be taking in court.

David Hobbs, the Legislative Director, reports on pending legislation and raises other issues of interest involving the Congress. Following David, we go around the table, reporting as necessary. Dr. Rice, for example, might discuss the latest issue involving events in Iraq. Admiral Abbot, the Acting Homeland Security Advisor might explain the latest homeland threat assessment.

Immediately afterwards, Judge Gonzales and I gather in his office with our staff of 12 lawyers. As you might imagine, the President of the United States is often able to attract the cream of legal talent, and this President is no exception. A reporter for the Washington Post once described the current collection of talent in the Counsel's Office as the best law firm in the country.

One of our lawyers is the designated ethics expert; she handles questions about the appropriate acceptance of gifts, financial disclosures, and conflicts of interest; another lawyer is a national security law expert who reports jointly to Dr. Rice and Judge Gonzales on all National Security legal issues, and yet another lawyer reports jointly to Admiral Abbott and the Judge on all legal matters related to Homeland Security.

Another lawyer on our staff serves as Clearance Counsel. He works with the FBI, IRS and other agencies doing the background checks on all White House employees and presidential appointees. No one is employed within the Executive Office of the President or is appointed by the President unless our office clears them for suitability.

The remaining eight lawyers on our staff handle all of the many other legal issues that we have to deal with in the White House, ranging from judicial selection to judicial interpretation of Administration policies, from presidential pardons to protection of presidential power.

After our 8:15 meetings, we begin the real work of the day. As you can imagine, this is quite an interesting time to be serving in the White House, to say the least. Since I was named Deputy Counsel to the President in early December, I've been involved in matters as noteworthy as the University of Michigan affirmative action case – argued earlier this week – treatment and confinement of enemy combatants in the war on terror, the legal basis for the war on Iraq, and the continuing battle over confirmation of the President's judicial nominees.

It is on this last issue that I'd like to share with you a few more detailed thoughts – particularly in light of the fact that your Professor Cass Sunstein, who is kind enough to join us here today, has recently written a rather provocative article in The American Prospect entitled "The Right Wing Assault." The title – reminiscent of the former First Lady's charge that claims her husband had an affair with an intern were fabricated by a "vast right wing conspiracy" – hints at the premise of the article that there has been afoot for the last quarter century (but only from the right) "a disciplined, carefully orchestrated and quite self-conscious effort . . . [to] radically transform[ ] the federal judiciary."

I would submit respectfully that, like most conspiracy theories, this is quite an overstatement. As one who has participated in the process by which this President selects judges, I can tell you with certainty that it's anything but a carefully-orchestrated or self-conscious effort to transform the federal judiciary. Instead, the process for selecting nominees is one designed to put excellent men and women from diverse backgrounds on the federal bench. And the men and women this President has nominated are a remarkably distinguished group of professionals committed to the rule of law and to our system of justice – not right-wing hacks or ideologues.

Working closely with Senators from both parties, for each vacancy on the federal judiciary, the Administration gathers suggestions of accomplished candidates who might fit the bill for a district or circuit court nomination. After engaging in some due diligence about the personal and professional qualifications of those suggested to us, our office – together with the Department of Justice – generally interviews three nominees for each vacancy. From my perspective, these interviews are surprisingly generalized and abstract. We do not ask nominees their views on particular legal or political issues; we do not ask nominees how they would rule on particular cases that might come before them; we do not ask nominees their views on cases that have been decided by the Supreme Court or other federal courts; we do not ask nominees to share with us advice they have given their clients; we do not ask nominees to name cases with which they disagree.

Instead, in our interviews, we seek to gather information about the legal qualifications and personal attributes of the person before us. We ask candidates about their experience as litigators, law professors, prosecutors, and the like; we ask them to describe for us what they think is important in a judge, and to tell us what attributes they possess that they believe would make them a good judge; we ask them whether they would feel obligated to follow controlling precedent; and we ask them what kind of person they are. For each nominee, we also ask a traditional series of probing and personal questions, about their background and personal conduct – including questions about past drug use, arrests, payment of taxes, and the like.

Collectively, these questions give us a good idea of the kind of person we have before us, and of what kind of judge they would be. But the interviews are neither designed nor likely to lead to the type of information that would allow us to orchestrate Professor Sunstein's so-called Right Wing Assault.

Nor do the results of our process – the men and women the President has actually nominated – provide evidence of a Right Wing Assault on the judiciary. The President announced his first nominations on May 9, 2001, sending to the Senate a diverse group of 11 court of appeals nominees. The group included three women, two African American nominees, and an Hispanic. Two of the 11 were Democrats. And for the first time in history, a President nominated someone who had previously been nominated by a President of a different party but not confirmed. And Judge Roger Gregory today sits with life tenure as the first African American member of the Fourth Circuit.

But I'm not here today to defend every action taken by Republicans in the White House or the Senate with respect to the judicial nominees over the past quarter century. As both the President and Judge Gonzales have said, we fully recognize that some of President Clinton's nominees to the Circuit Courts received unfortunate treatment at the hands of the Senate. And, I'm quick to add, it's also true that some of the first President Bush's nominees were equally mistreated by the Senate in the early 1990s.

I've seen examples of each first hand. Indeed, among my fellow Rehnquist clerks and partners in practice were Allen Snyder – nominated by President Clinton to the DC Circuit yet never receiving a committee vote – and John Roberts – a preeminent appellate lawyer first nominated to the DC Circuit in 1992, and re-nominated in 2001 and again in 2003, who only this year received his first hearing and committee vote, and whose nomination still has not been brought up on the floor of the Senate.

REV_00161729

And of course, anyone who follows these matters is well aware by now of the ongoing filibuster by some Senate Democrats against Miguel Estrada's nomination to the D.C. Circuit. It's really difficult to dispute, by any historical measure, that Estrada is well-qualified to serve on the Court. He is a distinguished appellate practitioner, having argued 15 cases in the US Supreme Court. He is a partner at Gibson Dunn & Crutcher. He served for 4 years in the Solicitor General's office, under both Republican and Democrat SG's. He has been a federal prosecutor, in the Southern District of New York, and clerked in both the Second Circuit and the Supreme Court. On the basis of all of this, the ABA's judicial review committee unanimously gave him its highest ranking – "well qualified."

Were a vote taken today on Estrada's nomination, he would receive at least 55 votes and would be confirmed. But those who oppose his nomination – arguing with little basis that they don't have enough information about him – have succeeded in blocking an up-or-down vote by using the Senate's procedural rules. Knowing they cannot win on the merits, they have opted to block the Senate's ability to fulfill its constitutional advice and consent responsibility.

As a graduate of Duke University and a college basketball fan, the actions of the Senate minority in this matter remind me – during this week of the Final Four – of a game I attended while a student at Duke. In February 1979, our arch-rival the University of North Carolina came to play at Cameron Indoor Stadium. Duke was ranked #1 in the country at the time, and Carolina had a team that was not up to its usual high standards.

After winning the opening tip, Carolina chose immediately to enter its fabled "four corners" offense – which was essentially a stall. Clearly, the UNC coaching staff had concluded that it could not win if it competed straight up with Duke on that day. Refusing even to take a shot, UNC simply passed the ball around from corner to corner on its offensive end of the court. Duke managed several steals during the 20 minutes of inaction, and the score at halftime was 7-0 Duke.

For long stretches during UNC's first-half stall, the fans in the stands at Cameron shouted "we want basketball." We recognized that Carolina's actions – while well within the rules – were in effect a perversion of the game itself. And not long after this extreme example of the misuse of the rules to pervert the game, the NCAA introduced a shot clock, which prohibits teams that cannot compete from simply stalling the action.

The parallels to the Estrada confirmation are, I hope, obvious. Some Senate Democrats, like the UNC coaching staff, have determined that they cannot win the contest on the merits. Indeed, this much is certain – there is no doubt in anyone's mind that Miguel Estrada would be confirmed if the Senate would hold an up-or-down vote on his nomination. Taking advantage of current rules that permit them to avoid the contest, these members of the Senate have, like the Carolina basketball team, chosen to do just that.

The question then, is whether there is a way out of this conundrum. Those that governed college basketball responded to stalling tactics by adopting rules that force the action.

REV_00161731

And in the context of judicial confirmations, there is a ready rule-based solution that all should find fair and acceptable.

Last year, in fact, the President proposed a series of procedures that we believe would permit fair debate – and resolution – of judicial nominations. These procedures would apply no matter which party controls the White House or the Senate.

In brief, the President proposed that: (1) upon receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days; (2) the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination; and (3) the full Senate should hold an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of receiving a judicial nomination. Adoption of these common sense rules would permit ample time for consideration of nominees and would ensure that both the President and the Senate fulfill their constitutional responsibilities to fill vacancies in our judiciary rather than engage in extended debates about whether or not to have a vote on a particular nominee.

Both the White House and the Senators will win some and lose some under these proposals, but there will be resolution and progress. In the President's view, both the process and the American people – not to mention the judiciary itself – would come out as winners if these fair procedures were adopted. The current system is obviously broken, and the President has proposed a fair and workable solution. And he is living up to his part of the proposed bargain by nominating candidates to the bench within 180 days of the vacancy or of learning of the vacancy. It would be a vast improvement for all concerned if the Senate would follow suit and agree to hold hearings and votes in timely fashion.

What's more, predicting the outcome of any competition – if that's what this is – is always a dicey proposition. After stalling for the first half of its game with Duke back in 1979, UNC emerged from the locker room and played straight up in the second half, without stalling. Scoring in the second half was 40-40, giving Duke a 7 point margin of victory based on the cushion it had built up in the first half. Perhaps Carolina returned to Chapel Hill that night wondering if it could have prevailed by simply playing basketball.

And just maybe Senators of both parties should wonder if, in the long run, they'd be better off regularizing the procedures and permitting hearings and up or down votes on all judicial nominees within a reasonable period of time. While we recognize that the Senate is of course fully empowered under Article I to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings," I respectfully submit that the Senate itself, the judiciary, the executive, and the nation itself would be well served to adopt the President's proposal.

Subject: FYI - Class Action Bills

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:
In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.
In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115. S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.
H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.
The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP:
http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

Class Action Lawsuit Measure Aims to Send More Cases to Federal Court
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
The Republican effort to overhaul tort laws will be on display Thursday when the Senate Judiciary Committee marks up legislation to send more class action lawsuits to federal rather than state courts.
The bill (Sÿ274) would make it easier to try the cases in federal courts if more than $2 million is at stake and at least one member of the class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a different state than the defendant.

Some exceptions are possible, such as if a "substantial majority" of the plaintiffs and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the lawsuit was filed.
Supporters say the bill is needed to curb civil litigation abuses by plaintiffs' attorneys who file cases in state courts that are perceived as sympathetic to plaintiffs. Opponents say the bill would unfairly raise the bar for defendants seeking damages from corporations.
The committee is expected to approve the measure. Chairman Orrin G. Hatch , R-Utah, and other bill proponents are trying to line up Democratic support, with an eye toward garnering a filibuster-proof 60-vote majority.
Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., has been in negotiations with Republicans to narrow the criteria by which civil cases could be transferred to federal courts.
Feinstein, who opposes the bill in its current form, wants to specify that a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs would be defined as two-thirds of the class members. She also is interested in increasing the $2 million threshold.
Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., who also opposes the bill, said he plans to offer an amendment that would exempt tobacco-related lawsuits. Durbin pointed to a recent Illinois court decision requiring tobacco giant Philip Morris USA to pay $10.1 billion in damages in a civil case.
The measure contains a "consumer class action bill of rights," which includes a provision that would require notices to class members to be detailed and clearly written.
Also on the committee's agenda is a bill (Sÿ731) by Joseph R. Biden Jr. , D-Del., that would make it illegal to possess or use authentication features, such as holograms or watermarks, to fake identification documents.
The Judiciary Committee markup is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. in Dirksen 226.

04/02 Congress Daily
Environmentalists are opposed to class action reform legislation that is on tap for markup Thursday by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Clean Water Action, Earthjustice, Environmental Working Group, Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, Mineral Policy Center, Natural Resources Defense Council, Sierra Club and the U.S. Public Interest Research Group today sent a letter to Judiciary Chairman Hatch and ranking member Patrick Leahy , D-Vt., saying the pending bill "would not be fair to citizens bringing class action cases based on state environmental or public health protection laws who wish to have their cases heard by their state's courts." They added, "The bill would allow corporate defendants in pollution class actions to remove virtually any type of state environmental law case from state court to federal court, placing such cases in a forum that could be more costly, less timely and disadvantageous to the citizen plaintiffs." A number of civil rights attorneys and organizations issued similar criticisms against the bill last week, saying it would make it more difficult to have federal civil rights cases heard.

04/01 CongressDaily
Senate Judiciary Readies To Mark Up Class Action Reform
ÿÿÿÿÿClass action reform legislation is slated to be marked up Thursday by the Senate Judiciary Committee, a committee spokeswoman confirmed.
ÿÿÿÿÿA class action markup will add to a Judiciary Committee agenda already occupied with another -- and some observers would say competing -- legal reform bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee: asbestos litigation case management.
ÿÿÿÿÿThis evening, some committee members are slated to meet informally and privately with stakeholders to explore whether a consensus on asbestos litigation reform legislation can be reached this year.
ÿÿÿÿÿSenate Judiciary Chairman Hatch has said he wants to draft such a bill over the April recess, in preparation for a markup shortly after senators return from the break.
ÿÿÿÿÿA private meeting last week between Hatch and a number of defendant company executives and their insurers was characterized by some attendants as a rally for unity and action among the executives, who differ on whether to seek streamlined court consideration of asbestos cases, or to move them into a private system like a trust fund.

ÿÿÿÿÿTonight's asbestos "summit" organized by Sen. Christopher Dodd , D-Conn., which will include senators from both sides of the aisle, is expected to focus more on the substantive differences within the interested parties among industry, labor and the legal sectors.
ÿÿÿÿÿHatch in an interview early last month conceded that it would be "difficult" to complete action both on asbestos and class action reform this session, though he suggested it was not impossible.
ÿÿÿÿÿThe Judiciary panel appears poised to report out class action reform legislation Thursday, albeit mostly along party lines.
ÿÿÿÿÿJudiciary member Herb Kohl, D-Wis., along with Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, and Hatch are cosponsors of the pending bill, which sources indicated has been little changed since its introduction.
ÿÿÿÿÿSenate Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., at a July hearing on that class action bill said he would oppose it as drafted.
ÿÿÿÿÿA number of civil rights attorneys and organizations also have come out against the bill, saying that its key provision to remove most state-law class actions to federal court would make it more difficult to have federal civil rights cases heard.
ÿÿÿÿÿIn an attempt to shore up Democratic support for the bill in the larger Senate, Kohl has been seeking to broker a deal with Judiciary member Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., who indicated she was receptive to trying to reach a compromise.
ÿÿÿÿÿHowever, sources recently said that such an agreement remained elusive, but speculated that the committee's action Thursday could prompt a fresh round of negotiations. Other Senate Democrats not on the committee have indicated a desire to be cooperative with Republican leaders both on class action and asbestos reform bills.
ÿÿÿÿÿAmong those is Sen. Thomas Carper, D-Del., who is an original cosponsor of the pending class action bill. And although he will not participate in today's asbestos summit, he remains in "close contact" with Hatch on the issue, his spokeswoman said.
ÿÿÿÿÿIn remarks Monday to a conference for investors hosted by Deutsche Bank in New York City, Carper asserted that, "The best way to get the economy moving again -- is to invest in solutions for asbestos litigation, class action reform and bankruptcy reform." By Pamela Barnett

CQ TODAY - March 28, 2003.
Class Action Bill Latest Salvo in Lawyer-GOP Battle
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
Legislation seeking to send more class action lawsuits to federal rather than state courts and impose new requirements on that kind of litigation has marched up the priority list as majority Republicans continue a years-long effort to change the rules of civil tort law.
The class action measure (Sÿ274), which the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to approve April 3, is one of the centerpiece bills for a conservative tort overhaul movement in the 108th Congress being championed by Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah.
Rather than provoke a single big fight with the well-heeled trial lawyers' lobby, the strategy of majority Republicans has been to pursue their goal incrementally. They are acting on a series of bills that, if passed and signed into law, would make it more difficult for a wide range of would-be plaintiffs to ask juries to redress alleged wrongdoings by doctors, corporations, asbestos manufacturers and the firearms industry.
Separate measures are moving through Congress that propose limiting civil claims related to medical malpractice (HRÿ5); establishing national criteria for claims of asbestos exposure (Sÿ413); and shielding gun manufacturers and sellers from some liability lawsuits (HRÿ1036).
Joe Manero of the Alliance of American Insurers, which favors changes to tort rules, said the strategy makes sense in this year's legislative climate.
"With the current crisis in the Middle East, we're fighting for attention," he said. "We will take progress where we can get it, and if it means doing it one at a time, that's what it means."
The bipartisan class action bill, sponsored by Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, would set criteria intended to steer some class action cases into federal courts.
It also would impose a long list of new rules on civil litigation regarding notices, settlements and attorneys' fees.

Preventing Venue Shopping
Supporters of the legislation say it is needed to prevent venue shopping and other abuses of the civil process by plaintiffs' attorneys. Opponents say it would unfairly raise the bar for defendants seeking damages from deep-pocketed corporations.
"Its advocates basically want to tell every state judge in America, 'We don't trust you . . . the federal government does not trust you to do your job,' " said Association of Trial Lawyers of America spokesman Carlton Carl. He added that wealthy defendants prefer federal courts because cases tend to take longer to wend their way through them.
Backers of the bill say that plaintiffs' attorneys like to take cases to "judicial hellhole" state courts that are overly sympathetic toward plaintiffs' arguments.
"There are a few county courts around the country that are setting national policy," said Matthew Webb, director of legal policy for the U.S. Chamber Institute for Legal Reform.
The legislation would make civil cases eligible to be pushed into federal courts when the amount in dispute exceeded $2 million and any member of the class of plaintiffs was a citizen of a different state than the defendant.
Currently, plaintiff's lawyers can avoid such "removal" to a federal court if individual claims within a class are less than $75,000, or if even one class member lives in the same state as the defendant.
Under the legislation, some exceptions would be made, such as for cases where states themselves, or state officials, are primary defendants, or if the defendant and a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs are citizens of the state in which the case originally was filed.
Also in the bill is a "consumer class action bill of rights" that seems designed to garner Democratic support for the measure.
Under those provisions, courts would only be able to approve some settlements under certain conditions.
Bounties Would Be Banned
For example, courts would not be able to approve proposed settlements if they would result in disproportionate payments to class members based solely on how close to the court they live.
Also, courts could not approve settlements that contain "bounties" for one member of the class.
The measure also would require that written notices to class members be plainly written and include descriptions of the case, the amount of plaintiffs' attorneys' fees, and details of any proposed settlement. The notices also would have to feature a prominent warning about their legal importance.
A similar bill (HRÿ1115) is pending before the House Judiciary Committee. A committee spokesman said that panel probably would not take up that bill before the two-week spring recess scheduled to begin April 11.
Any bill that the 108th Congress might pass probably will be strongly backed by President Bush.
As a condition for allowing terrorism insurance legislation (PLÿ107-297) to move last year, House Speaker J. Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., extracted a promise from Bush that he would champion tort overhaul.

Federal District Court Jurisdiction for Interstate Class Actions (Sec. 4)	Provide that Federal district courts would have original jurisdiction over any class-action lawsuits where the total claims exceed $2 million if any of the plaintiffs is a citizen of different State from any of the defendants, or either a plaintiff or a defendant resides in a foreign country. However, original jurisdiction would not apply in any action in which: (a) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed and the claims will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed; (b) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the Federal district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (c) the number of plaintiff class members in the aggregate is less than 100. In addition, original jurisdiction would not apply to a class action that solely involves a claim related to certain securities or to the internal affairs or	Minor changes: • Definition of "class certification order" in H.R. 1115 means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action. Removal of Interstate Class Actions to Federal District Court (Sec. 5)	Provide that a class action could be removed from a State court to a Federal district court by any defendant without the consent of any other defendants; or by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of any other members of the class. However, this authority for removal would not apply to a class action that solely involves a claim related to certain securities or to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation that arises under the laws of the State in which the corporation is incorporated. The Federal courts of appeals would have jurisdiction of appeals from orders of the Federal district courts granting or denying class certification, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order. To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants~~, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions~~, and for other purposes.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds ~~as follows~~ the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States~~.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees~~, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published ~~the publication of confusing notices~~ that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where —~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are —~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) ~~(3)~~ to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(3) ~~(4)~~ to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"§ 1711 ~~1716~~. Definitions

"In this chapter:
"(1) CLASS.—The term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action.
"(2)~~(1)~~ CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed under a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representatives ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action.
"(3) ~~(2)~~ CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(4)~~(3)~~ CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(5)~~(4)~~ PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(6)~~(5)~~ PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement ~~that resolves claims in a class action,~~ regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on some or all ~~the~~ class members.

"§ 1712~~1711~~. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§ 1713~~1712~~. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

"§ 1714~~1713~~. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§ 1715 ~~1714~~. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

"§ 1716~~1715~~. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point or ~~Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type~~ greater bold type, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; ~~and~~

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and

"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

"(E) any other material matter.

"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from a ~~the~~ class action or a proposed settlement ~~of the class action~~, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action ~~or settlement~~.

"§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate Federal official' means—

"(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

"(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate State official' means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

"(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

"(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

"(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

"(A)(i) the members' rights to request exclusion from the class action; or

"(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

"(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

"(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

"(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

"(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

"(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State's appropriate State official; or

"(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

"(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

"(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

"(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

"(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

"(e) NONCOMPLIANCE IF NOTICE NOT PROVIDED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

"(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

"(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member's behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member's participation in the settlement.

"(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to expand the authority of, or impose any obligations, duties, or responsibilities upon, Federal or State officials.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—
(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and
(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:
"(d)(1) In this subsection—
"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;
"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action;
"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and
"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—
"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;
"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or
"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.
"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—
"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and
"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;
"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or
"(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class~~ members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~ prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves a claim ~~that relates to —~~

"(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(i) ~~"(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(ii) ~~"(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

"(B)(i) In any ~~such case,~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

"(ii) ~~The provisions of~~ Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)~~(i).~~

"(iii) ~~The provisions of~~ Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(ii). ~~(B).~~".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' shall have the meanings given such ~~these~~ terms under ~~in~~ section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action~~, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.~~

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.— ~~The provisions of~~ Section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.— ~~The provisions of~~ Section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that notwithstanding section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:
"1453. Removal of class actions.".

SEC. 6. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements.

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorneys' fees.

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".~~

~~(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.~~

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act.

HR 2341 107th Congress-Passed House ~~(red, strikethrough text)~~

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003~~2~~".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction for ~~of~~ interstate class actions.
of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
~~Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.~~
Sec. 6~~7~~. Report on class action settlements.
Sec. 7~~8~~. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The~~ Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly~~, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system~~;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) ~~that have thereby~~ undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including —~~

(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members ~~plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members~~ are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified awards are ~~being~~ made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members ~~the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members~~ from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—

(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) ~~to~~ assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

(2)~~(3)~~ ~~to~~ restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and

(3)~~(4)~~ ~~to~~ benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

"§1711~~1718~~. Definitions

"In this chapter:
"(1) CLASS.—The term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action.
"(2)~~(1)~~ CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed under ~~pursuant to~~ a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representatives ~~on behalf of~~ as a class action.
"(3)~~(2)~~ CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(4)~~(3)~~ CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(5)~~(4)~~ PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(6)~~(5)~~ PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement ~~that resolves claims in~~ regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on ~~the~~ some or all class members

"§1712~~1711~~. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§1713~~1712~~. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

"§1714~~1713~~. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§1715~~1714~~. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

"§1716~~1715~~. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point ~~Times New Roman~~ or greater bold type ~~or other functionally similar type~~, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.';

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and

"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

"(E) any other material matter.

"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from ~~the~~ a class action or a proposed settlement ~~of the class action~~, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action ~~or settlement~~.

"§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate Federal official' means—

"(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

"(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term 'appropriate State official' means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

"(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

"(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

"(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

"(A)(i) the members' rights to request exclusion from the class action; or

"(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

"(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

"(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

"(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

"(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

"(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State's appropriate State official; or

"(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

"(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

"(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

"(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

"(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

"(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

"(e) NONCOMPLIANCE IF NOTICE NOT PROVIDED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

"(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

"(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member's behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member's participation in the settlement.

"(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to expand the authority of, or impose any obligations, duties, or responsibilities upon, Federal or State officials.".

~~"§ 1716. Disclosure of attorney's fees~~

~~"Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~
~~"(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement of judgment, or~~
~~"(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff,~~
~~the full amount of the attorney's fees charged by the attorneys for services rendered in the action.~~

~~"§ 1717. Sunshine in court records~~

~~"No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~
~~"(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~
~~"(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711". SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—
(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and
(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:
"(d)(1) In this subsection—
"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;
"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class~~ as a class action;
"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class~~ members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~ prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves a claim ~~that relates to —~~

"(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and that arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(i) ~~"(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(ii) ~~"(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

"(B)(i) In any ~~such case~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

"(ii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil action~~s~~ described under subparagraph (A)(i).

"(iii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil action~~s~~ described under subparagraph (A)(ii) ~~(B)~~.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' shall have the meanings given ~~these~~ such terms ~~in~~ under section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action~~, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered~~.

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.— ~~The provisions of s~~Section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.— ~~The provisions of s~~Section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that~~,~~ notwithstanding ~~the provisions of~~ section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:
"1453. Removal of class actions.".

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".~~

~~(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.~~

SEC. 6~~7~~. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements ~~in the Federal courts~~.

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members ~~whom~~ that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney's' fees.

SEC. 7~~8~~. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act.

HR 1115 108th Congress-Introduced House (blue, underlined text) as compared to
HR 2341 107th Congress-Passed House ~~(red, strikethrough text)~~

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003~~2~~".
(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.
(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
Sec. 7~~8~~. Effective date.
~~Sec. 7. Report on class action settlements~~.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:
(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—
(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;
(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and
(C) undermined public respect for the ~~our~~ judicial system in the United States.
(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—
(A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;
(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.
(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—
(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;
(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and
(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.
(5) These abuses undermine the ~~our~~ Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—
(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;
(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and
(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.
(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—
(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;
(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;
(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and
(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

"§ 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

"§ 1712. Protection against loss by class members

"The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

"§ 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

"The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

"§ 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

"§ 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

"(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

"(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating 'LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and

"(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

"(A) the subject matter of the class action;

"(B) the members of the class;

"(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

"(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—
"(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;
"(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
"(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
"(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
"(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and
"(E) any other material matter.
"(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—
"(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
"(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
"(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.
"(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—
"(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
"(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

"§ 1716~~1718~~. Definitions

"In this chapter—
"(1) CLASS ACTION.—The term 'class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.
"(2) CLASS COUNSEL.—The term 'class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
"(3) CLASS MEMBERS.—The term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
"(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term 'plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
"(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term 'proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.".

~~"§ 1716. Disclosure of attorney's fees~~

~~"Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a~~

~~settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~

~~"(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement of judgment, or~~

~~"(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff,~~

~~"§ 1717. Sunshine in court records~~

~~"No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~

~~"(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~

~~"(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
"114. Class Actions
1711".

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d)(1) In this subsection—

"(A) the term 'class' means all of the class members in a class action;

"(B) the term 'class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

"(C) the term 'class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

"(D) the term 'class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

"(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

"(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

"(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

"(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

"(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

"(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

"(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

"(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

"(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

"(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

"(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

"(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

"(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—

"(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

"(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

"(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

"(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

"(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(a) or (d)" after "1332".

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking "(d)" and inserting "(e)".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

"§ 1453. Removal of class actions

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

"(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

"(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

"(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

"(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

"(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.—The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

"(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves—

"(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

"(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).".

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting "(a)" after "section 1332".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following: "1453. Removal of class actions.".

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.".

(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 7~~8~~. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

~~SEC.7. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this~~

~~Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on class action settlements in the Federal courts.~~

~~(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—~~

~~(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members whom the settlements are supposed to benefit;~~

~~(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—~~

~~(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and~~

~~(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and~~

~~(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.~~

~~(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney's fees.~~

JUDICIARY
Fresh Efforts Launched To Reach Asbestos Litigation Agreement
Disparate industry stakeholders in the asbestos litigation debate were poised to meet privately today to try and reach consensus on the ceiling for liability to be borne by defendant companies and insurers under a reform bill being contemplated in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The meeting was to take place at the headquarters of the National Association of Manufacturers, which leads the Asbestos Alliance of defendant companies.

Although there is currently basic unanimity among senators and key stakeholders in the debate -- including labor, industry and insurers -- that the bill will be based on a trust fund concept, the Alliance has distinguished itself as an advocate for a pure medical criteria bill, which would screen sick from non-sick litigants out of the court system.

Representatives for the trial bar said this week they would not oppose a compensation fund that is "adequately and fairly" funded.

Meanwhile, House Judiciary Commercial and Administrative Law Subcommittee Chairman Chris Cannon, R-Utah, who has been working closely with the Alliance, late Thursday introduced asbestos reform legislation that relies on medical criteria to screen sick from non-sick litigants.

Cannon's bill also contains certain tort reforms, designed to provide the "certainty and finality" that advocates for a private trust argue cannot be had while keeping asbestos claims entrenched in the litigation system.

"Tort reform needs to have a significant place in the discussions," Cannon declared.
"It does not make sense to bankrupt every company in America because somebody might get sick from asbestos," he added.

In an interview Thursday, Cannon said his bill also would contain venue changes designed to cut down on so-called forum shopping. Cannon said he is not seeking to cap damages, however.

Cannon had been working since last year with Rep. Calvin Dooley,

D-Calif., on a bipartisan asbestos litigation reform bill, but the two lawmakers recently parted ways over the inclusion of those tort reforms.

Cannon now is working with fellow Utahan, Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch, on the legislation, and the two have been keeping each other closely apprised of their efforts, Cannon said.

Dooley intends to offer his own reform proposal, Cannon added. Asked if he thought his more narrow medical criteria bill had been overtaken by the Senate's new focus on a trust fund, Cannon was confident: "Whatever happens, we want to have some pretty clear medical criteria," he said.

Cannon reiterated House Republican leaders' admonition that they will need to see evidence of progress in the Senate before they agree to take up the asbestos legislation.

With respect to a private trust fund, settling on the allocation formula for paying claims, as was expected, has proven to be a challenge for the business community, where defendant companies number in the thousands.

Today's industry meeting was supposed to serve, in part, as a kind of briefing for Alliance members, many of whom were not present at a series of intensive meetings hosted this week in New York City by the Asbestos Study Group, which consist of peripheral defendant companies who have long championed the trust fund concept.

Attendees at those meetings, which included defendant company, insurance and reinsurance representatives, had settled on an upper-most figure for the industry's overall liability, according to sources. It is an amount that labor officials have rejected as insufficient, however.

Sources said the forum also will give officials not represented at earlier meetings a chance to offer input on an allocation formula before it is nailed down and offered up to Hatch, who has said he wants to begin formally drafting a bill beginning mid-April.

One source described the meeting as being part of the industry's response to Hatch's stern directive that "everybody should be talking to everybody. It's an ever-expanding meeting," this source added.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., one of the point men the industry is looking to help shepherd the complex legislation through the Senate, Thursday said the ball was in the industry's court at this point and said he understood they would be reaching some decision this week.

And he emphasized the need for the legislation to be wrapped this year, before the 2004 election season gets under way. Not just this year, but "in the next several months," he said. By Pamela Barnett Confirmed.

We are starting up with just the President and may give the Vice President the option of joining the system later, and would provide David Addington full review prior to the addition of the Vice President. This is from prior discussions with Desiree and of course this prior plan may be overruled by Desiree.

Hi Ben, Bob Blake from OA here. I was with Desiree Sayle as part of the PERS demonstration. As part of my check list, I need approval from you (email is sufficient) that from a GC stand point, we are approved to go forward with putting PERS on-line following senior staff approval.

Also, the question came up on if the White House is exempt from the Privacy Act. This is in regards to our gathering of the DOB for Birthday and Baby's Birth greetings.

Thanks.

1ST SESSION

H. R. 850

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162137

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§ 1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162138

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162139

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

1ST SESSION

H. R. 996

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 27, 2003

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (for himself, Mr. ROSS, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

A BILL

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act".

REV_00162141

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) The rental-purchase industry provides a service that meets and satisfies the demands of many consumers.

(2) Each year, approximately 2,300,000 United States households enter into rental-purchase transactions and over a 5-year period approximately 4,900,000 United States households will do so.

(3) Competition among the various firms engaged in the extension of rental-purchase transactions would be strengthened by informed use of rental-purchase transactions.

(4) The informed use of rental-purchase transactions results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to assure the availability of rental-purchase transactions and to assure simple, meaningful, and consistent disclosure of rental-purchase terms so that consumers will be able to more readily compare the available rental-purchase terms and avoid uninformed use of rental-purchase transactions, and to protect consumers against unfair rental-purchase practices.

REV_00162142

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.

The Consumer Credit Protection Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE X—RENTAL-PURCHASE TRANSACTIONS

"Sec. 1001. Definitions.
"Sec. 1002. Exempted transactions.
"Sec. 1003. General disclosure requirements.
"Sec. 1004. Rental-purchase disclosures.
"Sec. 1005. Other agreement provisions.
"Sec. 1006. Right to acquire ownership.
"Sec. 1007. Prohibited provisions.
"Sec. 1008. Statement of accounts.
"Sec. 1009. Renegotiations and extensions.
"Sec. 1010. Point-of-rental disclosures.
"Sec. 1011. Rental-purchase advertising.
"Sec. 1012. Civil liability.
"Sec. 1013. Additional grounds for civil liability.
"Sec. 1014. Liability of assignees.
"Sec. 1015. Regulations.
"Sec. 1016. Enforcement.
"Sec. 1017. Criminal liability for willful and knowing violation.
"Sec. 1018. Relation to other laws.
"Sec. 1019. Effect on government agencies.
"Sec. 1020. Compliance date.

"SEC. 1001. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) ADVERTISEMENT.—The term 'advertisement' means a commercial message in any medium that promotes, directly or indirectly, a rental-purchase agreement but does not include price tags, window signs, or other in-store merchandising aids.

"(2) AGRICULTURAL PURPOSE.—The term 'agricultural purpose' includes—

REV_00162143

"(A) the production, harvest, exhibition, marketing, transformation, processing, or manufacture of agricultural products by a natural person who cultivates plants or propagates or nurtures agricultural products; and

"(B) the acquisition of farmlands, real property with a farm residence, or personal property and services used primarily in farming.

"(3) BOARD.—The term 'Board' means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"(4) CASH PRICE.—The term 'cash price' means the price at which a merchant, in the ordinary course of business, offers to sell for cash the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase transaction.

"(5) CONSUMER.—The term 'consumer' means a natural person who is offered or enters into a rental-purchase agreement.

"(6) DATE OF CONSUMMATION.—The term 'date of consummation' means the date on which a consumer becomes contractually obligated under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(7) INITIAL PAYMENT.—The term 'initial payment' means the amount to be paid before or at the consummation of the agreement or the delivery of the property if delivery occurs after consummation, including the rental payment; service, processing, or administrative charges; delivery fee; refundable security deposit; taxes; mandatory fees or charges; and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

"(8) MERCHANT.—The term 'merchant' means a person who provides the use of property through a rental-purchase agreement in the ordinary course of business and to whom a consumer's initial payment under the agreement is payable.

"(9) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—The term 'payment schedule' means the amount and timing of the periodic payments and the total number of all periodic payments that the consumer will make if the consumer acquires ownership of the property by making all periodic payments.

"(10) PERIODIC PAYMENT.—The term 'periodic payment' means the total payment a consumer will make for a specific rental period after the initial payment, including the rental payment, taxes, mandatory fees or charges, and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

REV_00162145

"(11) PROPERTY.—The term 'property' means property that is not real property under the laws of the State where the property is located when it is made available under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(12) RENTAL PAYMENT.—The term 'rental payment' means rent required to be paid by a consumer for the possession and use of property for a specific rental period, but does not include taxes or any fees or charges.

"(13) RENTAL PERIOD.—The term 'rental period' means a week, month, or other specific period of time, during which the consumer has a right to possess and use property that is the subject of a rental-purchase agreement after paying the rental payment and any applicable taxes for such period.

"(14) RENTAL-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' means a contract in the form of a bailment or lease for the use of property by a consumer for an initial period of 4 months or less, that is renewable with each payment by the consumer, and that permits but does not obligate the consumer to become the owner of the property.

REV_00162146

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' does not include—

"(i) a credit sale (as defined in section 103(g) of the Truth in Lending Act);

"(ii) a consumer lease (as defined in section 181(1) of such Act); or

"(iii) a transaction giving rise to a debt incurred in connection with the business of lending money or a thing of value.

"(15) RENTAL-PURCHASE COST.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of sections 1010 and 1011, the term 'rental-purchase cost' means the sum of all rental payments and mandatory fees or charges imposed by the merchant as a condition of entering into a rental-purchase agreement or acquiring ownership of property under a rental-purchase agreement, such as the following:

"(i) Service, processing, or administrative charge.

"(ii) Fee for an investigation or credit report.

"(iii) Charge for delivery required by the merchant.

REV_00162147

"(B) EXCLUDED ITEMS.—The following fees or charges shall not be taken into account in determining the rental-purchase cost with respect to a rental-purchase transaction:

"(i) Fees and charges prescribed by law, which actually are or will be paid to public officials or government entities, such as sales tax.

"(ii) Fees and charges for optional products and services offered in connection with a rental-purchase agreement.

"(16) STATE.—The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, any territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(17) TOTAL COST.—The term 'total cost' means the sum of the initial payment and all periodic payments in the payment schedule to be paid by the consumer to acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement.

"SEC. 1002. EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS.

"This title shall not apply to rental-purchase agreements primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes, or those made with Government agencies or instrumentalities.

"SEC. 1003. GENERAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) RECIPIENT OF DISCLOSURE.—A merchant shall disclose to any person who will be a signatory to a rental-purchase agreement the information required by sections 1004 and 1005.

"(b) TIMING OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required under sections 1004 and 1005 shall be made before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement and clearly and conspicuously in writing as part of the rental-purchase agreement to be signed by the consumer.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall be worded plainly and simply, and appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be readily noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1004. RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For each rental-purchase agreement, the merchant shall disclose to the consumer the following, to the extent applicable:

"(1) The date of the consummation of the rental-purchase transaction and the identities of the merchant and the consumer.

REV_00162149

"(2) A brief description of the rental property, which shall be sufficient to identify the property to the consumer, including an identification or serial number, if applicable, and a statement indicating whether the property is new or used.

"(3) A description of any fee, charge or penalty, in addition to the periodic payment, that the consumer may be required to pay under the agreement, which shall be separately identified by type and amount.

"(4) A clear and conspicuous statement that the transaction is a rental-purchase agreement and that the consumer will not obtain ownership of the property until the consumer has paid the total dollar amount necessary to acquire ownership.

"(5) The amount of any initial payment, which includes the first periodic payment, and the total amount of any fees, taxes, or other charges, required to be paid by the consumer.

"(6) The amount of the cash price of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and, if the agreement involves the rental of 2 or more items as a set (as may be defined by the Board in regulation) a statement of the aggregate cash price of all items shall satisfy this requirement.

REV_00162150

"(7) The amount and timing of periodic payments, and the total number of periodic payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(8) The total cost, using that term, and a brief description, such as 'This is the amount you will pay the merchant if you make all periodic payments to acquire ownership of the property.'.

"(9) A statement of the consumer's right to terminate the agreement without paying any fee or charge not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property in good repair upon expiration of any lease term.

"(10) Substantially the following statement: 'OTHER IMPORTANT TERMS: See your rental-purchase agreement for additional important information on early termination procedures, purchase option rights, responsibilities for loss, damage or destruction of the property, warranties, maintenance responsibilities, and other charges or penalties you may incur.'.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required by paragraphs (4) through (10) of subsection (a) shall be segregated from other information at the beginning of the rental-purchase agreement and shall contain only directly related information, and shall be identified in boldface, upper-case letters as follows: 'IMPORTANT RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES'.

"(c) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO INSURANCE PREMIUMS AND LIABILITY WAIVERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant shall clearly and conspicuously disclose in writing to the consumer before the consummation of a rental-purchase agreement that the purchase of leased property insurance or liability waiver coverage is not required as a condition for entering into the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) AFFIRMATIVE WRITTEN REQUEST AFTER COST DISCLOSURE.—A merchant may provide insurance or liability waiver coverage, directly or indirectly, in connection with a rental-purchase transaction only if—

"(A) the merchant clearly and conspicuously discloses to the consumer the cost of each component of such coverage before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(B) the consumer signs an affirmative written request for such coverage after receiving the disclosures required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph and paragraph (1).

REV_00162152

"(d) ACCURACY OF DISCLOSURE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The disclosures required to be made under subsection (a) shall be accurate as of the date the disclosures are made, based on the information available to the merchant.

"(2) INFORMATION SUBSEQUENTLY RENDERED INACCURATE.—If information required to be disclosed under subsection (a) is subsequently rendered inaccurate as a result of any agreement between the merchant and the consumer subsequent to the delivery of the required disclosures, the resulting inaccuracy shall not constitute a violation of this title.

"SEC. 1005. OTHER AGREEMENT PROVISIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each rental-purchase agreement shall—

"(1) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for loss, theft, damage, or destruction of the property;

"(2) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for maintaining or servicing the property, together with a brief description of the responsibility;

REV_00162153

"(3) provide that the consumer may terminate the agreement without paying any charges not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property that is the subject of the agreement upon expiration of any rental period;

"(4) contain a provision for reinstatement of the agreement, which at a minimum—

"(A) permits a consumer who fails to make a timely rental payment to reinstate the agreement, without losing any rights or options which exist under the agreement, by the payment of all past due rental payments and any other charges then due under the agreement and a payment for the next rental period within 7 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays monthly, or within 3 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays more frequently than monthly;

"(B) if the consumer returns or voluntarily surrenders the property covered by the agreement, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 60 days after the date of the return or surrender of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period;

"(C) if the consumer has paid 50 percent or more of the total cost necessary to acquire ownership and returns or voluntarily surrenders the property, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 120 days after the date of the return of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period; and

"(D) permits the consumer, upon reinstatement of the agreement to receive the same property, if available, that was the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, or if the same property is not available, a substitute item of comparable quality and condition may be provided to the consumer; except that, the Board

may, by regulation or order, exempt any independent small business (as defined by the Board by regulation) from the requirement of providing the same or comparable product during the extended reinstatement period provided in subparagraph (C), if the Board determines, taking into account such standards as the Board determines to be appropriate, that the reinstatement right provided in such subparagraph would provide excessive hardship for such independent small business.

''(5) provide a statement specifying the terms under which the consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement either by payment of the total cost to acquire ownership, as provided in section 1006, or by exercise of any early purchase option provided in the rental-purchase agreement;

''(6) provide a statement disclosing that if any part of a manufacturer's express warranty covers the property at the time the consumer acquires ownership of the property, the warranty will be transferred to the consumer if allowed by the terms of the warranty; and

"(7) provide, to the extent applicable, a description of any grace period for making any periodic payment, the amount of any security deposit, if any, to be paid by the consumer upon initiation of the rental-purchase agreement, and the terms for refund of such security deposit to the consumer upon return, surrender or purchase of the property.

"(b) REPOSSESSION DURING REINSTATEMENT PERIOD.—Subsection (a)(4) shall not be construed so as to prevent a merchant from attempting to repossess property during the reinstatement period pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(A), but such a repossession does not affect the consumer's right to reinstate.

"SEC. 1006. RIGHT TO ACQUIRE OWNERSHIP.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and the rental-purchase agreement shall terminate, upon compliance by the consumer with the requirements of subsection (b) or any early payment option provided in the rental purchase agreement, and upon payment of any past due payments and fees, as permitted in regulation by the Board.

"(b) PAYMENT OF TOTAL COST.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the rental property upon payment of the total cost of the rental-purchase agreement, as such term is defined in section 1001(17), and as disclosed to the consumer in the rental-purchase agreement pursuant to section 1004(a).

"(c) ADDITIONAL FEES PROHIBITED.—A merchant shall not require the consumer to pay, as a condition for acquiring ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, any fee or charge in addition to, or in excess of, the regular periodic payments required by subsection (b), or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as applicable. A requirement that the consumer pay an unpaid late charge or other fee or charge which the merchant has previously billed to the consumer shall not constitute an additional fee or charge for purposes of this subsection.

"(d) TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP RIGHTS.—Upon payment by the consumer of all payments necessary to acquire ownership under subsection (b) or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as appropriate, the merchant shall—

"(1) deliver, or mail to the consumer's last known address, such documents or other instruments, which the Board has determined by regulation, are necessary to acknowledge full ownership by the consumer of the property acquired pursuant to the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(2) transfer to the consumer the unexpired portion of any warranties provided by the manufacturer, distributor, or seller of the property, which shall apply as if the consumer were the original purchaser of the property, except where such transfer is prohibited by the terms of the warranty.

"SEC. 1007. PROHIBITED PROVISIONS.

"A rental-purchase agreement may not contain—

"(1) a confession of judgment;

"(2) a negotiable instrument;

"(3) a security interest or any other claim of a property interest in any goods, except those goods the use of which is provided by the merchant pursuant to the agreement;

"(4) a wage assignment;

"(5) a provision requiring the waiver of any legal claim or remedy created by this title or other provision of Federal or State law;

"(6) a provision requiring the consumer, in the event the property subject to the rental-purchase agreement is lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, to pay an amount in excess of the least of—

"(A) the fair market value of the property, as determined by the Board in regulation;

REV_00162159

"(B) any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement; or

"(C) the actual cost of repair, as appropriate;

"(7) a provision authorizing the merchant, or a person acting on behalf of the merchant, to enter the consumer's dwelling or other premises without obtaining the consumer's consent or to commit any breach of the peace in connection with the repossession of the rental property or the collection of any obligation or alleged obligation of the consumer arising out of the rental-purchase agreement;

"(8) a provision requiring the purchase of insurance or liability damage waiver to cover the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, except as permitted by the Board in regulation;

"(9) a provision requiring the consumer to pay more than 1 late fee or charge for an unpaid or delinquent periodic payment, regardless of the period in which the payment remains unpaid or delinquent, or to pay a late fee or charge for any periodic payment because a previously assessed late fee has not been paid in full.

REV_00162160

"SEC. 1008. STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

"Upon request of a consumer, a merchant shall provide a statement of the consumer's account. If a consumer requests a statement for an individual account more than 4 times in any 12-month period, the merchant may charge a reasonable fee for the additional statements.

"SEC. 1009. RENEGOTIATIONS AND EXTENSIONS.

"(a) RENEGOTIATIONS.—A renegotiation occurs when a rental-purchase agreement is satisfied and replaced by a new agreement undertaken by the same consumer. A renegotiation requires new disclosures, except as provided in subsection (c).

"(b) EXTENSIONS.—An extension is an agreement by the consumer and the merchant, to continue an existing rental-purchase agreement beyond the original end of the payment schedule, but does not include a continuation that is the result of a renegotiation.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—New disclosures are not required for the following, even if they meet the definition of a renegotiation or an extension:

"(1) A reduction in payments.

"(2) A deferment of 1 or more payments.

"(3) The extension of a rental-purchase agreement.

"(4) The substitution of property with property that has a substantially equivalent or greater economic value provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

REV_00162161

"(5) The deletion of property in a multiple-item agreement.

"(6) A change in rental period provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(7) An agreement resulting from a court proceeding.

"(8) Any other event described in regulations prescribed by the Board.

"SEC. 1010. POINT-OF-RENTAL DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For any item of property or set of items displayed or offered for rental-purchase, the merchant shall display on or next to the item or set of items a card, tag, or label that clearly and conspicuously discloses the following:

"(1) A brief description of the property.

"(2) Whether the property is new or used.

"(3) The cash price of the property.

"(4) The amount of each rental payment.

"(5) The total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property.

"(6) The rental-purchase cost.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—

REV_00162162

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant may make the disclosure required by subsection (a) in the form of a list or catalog which is readily available to the consumer at the point of rental if the merchandise is not displayed in the merchant's showroom or if displaying a card, tag, or label would be impractical due to the size of the merchandise.

"(2) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1011. RENTAL-PURCHASE ADVERTISING.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If an advertisement for a rental-purchase transaction refers to or states the amount of any payment for any specific item or set of items, the merchant making the advertisement shall also clearly and conspicuously state in the advertisement the following for the item, or set of items, advertised:

"(1) The transaction advertised is a rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) The amount, timing, and total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership under the rental-purchase agreement.

REV_00162163

"(3) The amount of the rental-purchase cost.

"(4) To acquire ownership of the property the consumer must pay the rental-purchase cost plus applicable taxes.

"(5) Whether the stated payment amount and advertised rental-purchase cost is for new or used property.

"(b) PROHIBITION.—An advertisement for a rental-purchase agreement shall not state or imply that a specific item, or set of items, is available at specific amounts or terms unless the merchant usually and customarily offers, or will offer, the item or set of items at the stated amounts or terms.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that required disclosures shall be presented in a type, size, shade, contrast, prominence, location, and manner, as applicable to different mediums for advertising, so as to be readily noticeable and comprehensible to the ordinary consumer.

"(2) REGULATORY GUIDANCE.—The Board shall prescribe regulations on principles and factors to meet the clear and conspicuous standard as appropriate to print, video, audio, and computerized advertising, reflecting the principles and factors typically applied in each medium by the Federal Trade Commission.

"(3) LIMITATION.—Nothing contrary to, inconsistent with, or in mitigation of, the required disclosures shall be used in any advertisement in any medium, and no audio, video, or print technique shall be used that is likely to obscure or detract significantly from the communication of the disclosures.

"SEC. 1012. CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in section 1013, any merchant who fails to comply with any requirement of this title with respect to any consumer is liable to such consumer as provided for leases in section 130. For purposes of this section, the term 'creditor' as used in section 130 shall include a 'merchant', as defined in section 1001.

"(b) JURISDICTION OF COURTS; LIMITATION ON ACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 130(e), any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date the last payment was made by the consumer under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) RECOUPMENT OR SET-OFF.—This subsection shall not bar a consumer from asserting a violation of this title in an action to collect an obligation arising from a rental-purchase agreement, which was brought after the end of the 1-year period described in paragraph (1) as a matter of defense by recoupment or set-off in such action, except as otherwise provided by State law.

"SEC. 1013. ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) INDIVIDUAL CASES WITH ACTUAL DAMAGES.—Any merchant who fails to comply with any requirements imposed under section 1010 or 1011 with respect to any consumer who suffers actual damage from the violation shall be liable to such consumer as provided in section 130.

"(b) PATTERN OR PRACTICE OF VIOLATIONS.—If a merchant engages in a pattern or practice of violating any requirement imposed under section 1010 or 1011, the Federal Trade Commission or an appropriate State attorney general, in accordance with section 1016, may initiate an action to enforce sanctions against the merchant, including—

REV_00162166

"(1) an order to cease and desist from such practices; and

"(2) a civil money penalty of such amount as the court may impose, based on such factors as the court may determine to be appropriate.

"SEC. 1014. LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES.

"(a) ASSIGNEES INCLUDED.—For purposes of section 1013, and this section, the term 'merchant' includes an assignee of a merchant.

"(b) LIABILITIES OF ASSIGNEES.—

"(1) APPARENT VIOLATION.—An action under section 1012 or 1013 for a violation of this title may be brought against an assignee only if the violation is apparent on the face of the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"(2) APPARENT VIOLATION DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, a violation that is apparent on the face of a rental-purchase agreement includes, but is not limited to, a disclosure that can be determined to be incomplete or inaccurate from the face of the agreement.

"(3) INVOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.—An assignee has no liability in a case in which the assignment is involuntary.

REV_00162167

"(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No provision of this section shall be construed as limiting or altering the liability under section 1012 or 1013 of a merchant assigning a rental-purchase agreement.

"(b) PROOF OF DISCLOSURE.—In an action by or against an assignee, the consumer's written acknowledgment of receipt of a disclosure, made as part of the rental-purchase agreement, shall be conclusive proof that the disclosure was made, if the assignee had no knowledge that the disclosure had not been made when the assignee acquired the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"SEC. 1015. REGULATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, to prevent its circumvention, and to facilitate compliance with its requirements.

"(b) MODEL DISCLOSURE FORMS.—The Board may publish model disclosure forms and clauses for common rental-purchase agreements to facilitate compliance with the disclosure requirements of this title and to aid the consumer in understanding the transaction by utilizing readily understandable language to simplify the technical nature of the disclosures. In devising such forms, the Board shall consider the use by merchants of data processing or similar automated equipment. Nothing in this title may be construed to require a merchant to use any such model form or clause prescribed by the Board under this section. A merchant shall be deemed to be in compliance with the requirement to provide disclosure under section 1003(a) if the merchant—

"(1) uses any appropriate model form or clause as published by the Board; or

"(2) uses any such model form or clause and changes it by—

"(A) deleting any information which is not required by this title; or

"(B) rearranging the format, if in making such deletion or rearranging the format, the merchant does not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure.

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE OF REGULATIONS.—Any regulation prescribed by the Board, or any amendment or interpretation thereof, shall not be effective before the October 1 that follows the date of publication of the regulation in final form by at least 6 months. The Board may at its discretion lengthen that period of time to permit merchants to adjust to accommodate new requirements. The Board may also shorten that period of time, notwithstanding the first sentence, if it makes a specific finding that such action is necessary to comply with the findings of a court or to prevent unfair or deceptive practices. In any case, merchants may comply with any newly prescribed disclosure requirement prior to its effective date.

"SEC. 1016. ENFORCEMENT.

"(a) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.), and a violation of any requirements imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements of this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional test in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"(b) STATE ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An action to enforce the requirements imposed by this title may also be brought by the appropriate State attorney general in any appropriate United States district court, or any other court of competent jurisdiction.

"(2) PRIOR WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The State attorney general shall provide prior written notice of any such civil action to the Federal Trade Commission and shall provide the Commission with a copy of the complaint.

REV_00162170

"(B) EMERGENCY ACTION.—If prior notice is not feasible, the State attorney general shall provide notice to the Commission immediately upon instituting the action.

"(3) FTC INTERVENTION.—The Commission may—

"(A) intervene in the action;

"(B) upon intervening—

"(i) remove the action to the appropriate United States district court, if it was not originally brought there; and

"(ii) be heard on all matters arising in the action; and

"(C) file a petition for appeal.

"SEC. 1017. CRIMINAL LIABILITY FOR WILLFUL AND KNOWING VIOLATION.

"Whoever willfully and knowingly gives false or inaccurate information or fails to provide information which he is required to disclose under the provisions of this title or any regulation issued thereunder shall be subject to the penalty provisions as provided in section 112.

REV_00162171

"SEC. 1018. RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.

"(a) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) NO EFFECT ON CONSISTENT STATE LAWS.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), this title does not annul, alter, or affect in any manner the meaning, scope or applicability of the laws of any State relating to rental-purchase agreements, except to the extent those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF INCONSISTENCY.—Upon its own motion or upon the request of an interested party, which is submitted in accordance with procedures prescribed in regulations of the Board, the Board shall determine whether any such inconsistency exists. If the Board determines that a term or provision of a State law is inconsistent, merchants located in that State need not follow such term or provision and shall incur no liability under the law of that State for failure to follow such term or provision, notwithstanding that such determination is subsequently amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"(3) GREATER PROTECTION UNDER STATE LAW.—Except as provided in subsection (b), for purposes of this section, a term or provision of a State law is not inconsistent with the provisions of this title if the term or provision affords greater protection and benefit to the consumer than the protection and benefit provided under this title as determined by the Board, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party.

"(b) STATE LAWS RELATING TO CHARACTERIZATION OF TRANSACTION.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), this title shall supersede any State law to the extent that such law—

"(1) regulates a rental-purchase agreement as a security interest, credit sale, retail installment sale, conditional sale or any other form of consumer credit, or that imputes to a rental-purchase agreement the creation of a debt or extension of credit, or

"(2) requires the disclosure of a percentage rate calculation, including a time-price differential, an annual percentage rate, or an effective annual percentage rate.

"(c) RELATION TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT.—No provision of this title shall be construed as limiting, superseding, or otherwise affecting the applicability of the Federal Trade Commission Act to any merchant or rental-purchase transaction.

REV_00162173

"SEC. 1019. EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

"No civil liability or criminal penalty under this title may be imposed on the United States or any of its departments or agencies, any State or political subdivision, or any agency of a State or political subdivision.

"SEC. 1020. COMPLIANCE DATE.

"Compliance with this title shall not be required until 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act. In any case, merchants may comply with this title at any time after such date of enactment.".

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF

DANIEL L. COOPER,

UNDER SECRETARY FOR BENEFITS,

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS,

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify today on several bills of great interest to veterans.

H.R. 241

H.R. 241, the "Veterans Beneficiary Fairness Act of 2003," would eliminate a discrepancy regarding the limitation on the period for which retroactive benefits due and unpaid a claimant may be paid to others after the claimant's death. In the interest of fairness, we support enactment of this bill.

Under 38 U.S.C. § 5121, periodic monetary benefits to which an individual was entitled at death under existing ratings or decisions or based on evidence on file with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) at the time of death are paid upon the death of the individual to specified classes of survivors according to a prescribed order of preference. Prior to a recent court decision, VA had construed section 5121 to limit the payment of any benefits under that section to the retroactive period specified in the statute, regardless of whether the payment was based on an existing rating or decision or on evidence on file at the date of death. The retroactive payment period, originally one year, was extended to two years by Public Law 104-275, the "Veterans' Benefits Improvements Act of 1996."

On December 10, 2002, the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC) issued its decision in Bonny v. Principi, 16 Vet. App. 504 (2002). In that decision, the court held that 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) specifies two kinds of benefits: benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, and benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the file at the time of death. The court held that, in the case of the first type of benefits, the statute requires that an eligible survivor is to receive the entire amount of the award; only the latter type of "accrued" benefits is subject to the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a). The court based its interpretation of the statute primarily on the punctuation of section 5121(a).

The CAVC's Bonny decision has resulted in differing entitlements under section 5121 based on the status of the deceased's claim at the time of his or her death. H.R. 241 would eliminate this distinction by amending section 5121 to eliminate the two-year limitation on payment of retroactive benefits for all classes of beneficiaries under that statute.

The distinction the Bonny decision draws between the two categories of claimants—those whose claims had been approved and those whose entitlement had yet to be recognized when they died—is really one without a difference. In either case, a claimant's estate is deprived of the value of benefits for which he or she was, in life, eligible. H.R. 241 would remove this inequitable distinction, and we support its enactment.

We estimate the cost of complying with the Bonny decision for fiscal year (FY) 2004 to be $ 1.7 million and $18.2 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate the incremental cost to implement H.R. 241, that is, the difference between the cost of complying with the court's decision and the cost of enactment of H.R. 241, to be $5.9 million for FY 2004 and $65.8 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013.

In addition, we note one technical change needed in H.R. 241 should it be enacted. The comma in current section 5121(a) following "existing ratings or decisions" should be deleted to clarify, for purposes of 38 U.S.C. §§ 5121(b) and (c) and 5122, that the term "accrued benefits" includes both benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, as well as benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the veteran's file at the time of death.

REV_00162182

H.R. 533

H.R. 533, the "Agent Orange Veterans' Disabled Children's Benefits Act of 2003," would amend chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize VA to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to a person suffering from spina bifida who is natural child, regardless of age or marital status, of a parent who performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service," if the person was conceived after such service. A parent would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if, while performing active military, naval, or air service, he or she "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period during which such agent was used in that area; or . . . otherwise was exposed to a Vietnam-era herbicide agent." The term "Vietnam-era herbicide agent" would be defined by reference to current 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(3). VA does not support this bill.

Congress has repeatedly acted since 1979 to ensure that the Federal Government investigates the health effects of exposure to herbicides containing dioxin and compensates veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era and suffered disability as a result of that exposure. Because of the "concern and apprehension among veterans regarding the health effects of herbicides," Congress mandated an epidemiologic study by VA of the effects of exposure to dioxin in the Veterans Health Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1979. Congress also required VA to review and scientifically analyze literature relating to possible long-term health effects of human exposure to dioxin. In 1981, Congress authorized VA to provide hospital and nursing home care to certain veterans exposed during service to dioxin or ionizing radiation for conditions which, although not shown to have resulted from such exposure, are not found to have resulted from a cause other than such exposure. The Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act of 1984 directed VA to issue regulations to establish guidelines and, where appropriate, standards and criteria for the resolution of benefit claims based on exposure to herbicides containing dioxin in service in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The act also required VA to make specific findings, either positive or negative, regarding service connection as to three diseases, chloracne, porphyria cutanea tarda, and soft-tissue sarcoma.

In 1991, Congress added section 1116 (formerly section 316) to title 38, United States Code, establishing a presumption of service connection, applicable to veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, for three diseases. The act also called for VA to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to perform a review and evaluation of the scientific evidence regarding the association between disease and exposure to herbicides used in connection with the Vietnam War and each disease suspected of association with such exposure. Congress amended section 1116 in 1994 and 2001 by adding five conditions to the list of diseases presumed to be service connected in Vietnam veterans.

More recently, Congress has enacted legislation to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to the children of Vietnam veterans who were born with spina bifida, as well as to children with certain other birth defects who are the natural children of women veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

Congress' legislative enactments indicate its recognition of the unique circumstances of service in Vietnam—circumstances including the special sacrifices made by veterans of that war, and the great uncertainties regarding exposures of individual veterans to aerially applied herbicides. H.R. 533 would extend benefits Congress bestowed upon the affected children of those veterans to children of veterans who did not serve under those circumstances. In addition, H.R. 533's language is so vague as to be almost impossible to administer. Under that language, an individual would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if he or she, while performing active service, "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period when such agent was used in that area." The vagueness of the terms "area," "was used," and "during a period when" is sure to generate substantial litigation over what Congress intended by this language.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 533 would result in PAYGO costs of $60.8 million in FY 2004 and $760.7 million over the ten-year period FY 2004-2013. In addition, VA estimates administrative costs of $357,000 for FY 2004 and $ 1.73 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 761

Mr. Chairman, you also requested our comments on two proposals that would affect the Specially Adapted Housing program authorized by chapter 21 of title 38, United States Code. Under current law, veterans who are entitled to compensation for certain permanent and total service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 of title 38 are eligible for a grant to adapt their homes with features made necessary by the nature of their disabilities.

The first proposal, Mr. Chairman, is H.R. 761, the "Disabled Servicemembers Adapted Housing Assistance Act of 2003," which would permit VA to provide Specially Adapted Housing assistance to disabled members of the Armed Forces who remain on active duty pending medical separation. VA favors enactment of H.R. 761.

This bill would permit members of the Armed Forces with the service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 to apply for Specially Adapted Housing benefits and permit VA to process their applications and award benefits without having to wait for the servicemembers to be released from active duty. H.R. 761 could provide some affected veterans the opportunity to move into an adapted home as soon as they are separated from active duty, or at least much sooner than is possible under current law. With this accelerated determination of eligibility and assistance, veterans could avoid continued institutional care, thus improving their quality of life and increasing their independence. This could also reduce the cost to VA of in-patient healthcare for some affected veterans.

Because Specially Adapted Housing grants are a one-time-only benefit, the enactment of this measure should not materially increase either the total number of grants provided under this program or the dollar amount of such grants. Rather, H.R. 761 would merely accelerate the payment of this benefit to certain individuals who, under current law, would become entitled to the same benefit upon their release from active duty. Accordingly, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 761 would produce insignificant costs or savings.

H.R. 1048

Specially Adapted Housing

The other Specially Adapted Housing proposal is contained in section 2 of H.R. 1048, the "Disabled Veterans Adaptive Benefits Improvement Act of 2003." This section would increase the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grants. VA favors such increases, provided offsetting savings may be found.

Under H.R. 1048, the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grant authorized by section 2101(a) would be increased from $48,000 to $50,000. In addition, the maximum Special Housing Adaptations grant authorized by section 2101(b) would be increased from $9,250 to $10,000. These grants were last increased by Public Law 107-103, enacted December 27, 2001. Increases in the cost of construction since then justify increasing these important benefits.

VA estimates that approximately 600 veterans per year will receive specially adapted housing assistance, of which about 92.5 percent will qualify for the grant authorized by section 2101(a). VA estimates the cost of enacting section 2 of H.R. 1048 would be $1.14 million per year, with a total 10-year cost of $11.4 million.

REV_00162187

Assistance for Automobile and Adaptive Equipment

Section 3 of H.R. 1048 would increase from $9,000 to $11,000 the maximum amount that VA may pay under 38 U.S.C. § 3902(a) to provide or assist in providing an automobile or other conveyance to eligible persons. VA supports enactment of this provision.

The maximum automobile allowance was last increased to the current $9,000 by Public Law 107-103 in 2001. An increase since then in the cost of obtaining automobiles and in the cost of adapting them justifies increasing this benefit so as to preserve its value to deserving veterans.

VA estimates the total benefits cost of both provisions of H.R. 1048 would be $3.3 million for FY 2004 and $33.3 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 850

Special Compensation for Former Prisoners of War

Section 2 of H.R. 850, the "Former Prisoners of War Compensation Act of 2003," would add a new subchapter at the end of chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize special compensation for former prisoners of war (POWs). This special compensation would be separate from any service-connected disability compensation or pension to which a former POW may be entitled and is exempted from attachment, execution, or levy in the same manner as special pension paid to recipients of the Medal of Honor pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1562(c). The bill would direct the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to pay monthly to each former POW, including active duty personnel, special compensation at a rate of payment determined by the cumulative length of confinement or internment as a POW. Thirty days would be the minimum period of confinement for which a former POW would be eligible to receive special compensation. The bill would establish three rates of special compensation based on the length of the period of the former POW's detainment or interment, as follows:

Length of Former POW's Detainment or Interment	Special Compensation Monthly Rate
30-120 days	$150
121-540 days	$300
541 days or more	$450

In the past, former POWs have been entitled to receive a modest lump-sum cash payment, based on their length of internment. Pursuant to the War Claims Act of 1948, codified as amended at 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005 (2001), and subsequent amendments, former POWs were entitled to receive a lump sum payment of up to $2.50 per day for World War II veterans, $2.50 per day for Korea veterans, and $5.00 per day for Vietnam veterans.[1] Compensation for former POWs is otherwise limited to the service-connected disability compensation administered by VA pursuant to title 38, United States Code.

[1] Pursuant to 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005, WW II veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (b)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (d)); Korea veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (e)(2)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (e)(3)); Vietnam veterans were eligible to receive up to $2 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (f)(2)) and $3.00 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (f)(3)).

We estimate that approximately 39,029 former POWs are still living. Of that population, 13,631 (34.9%) receive disability compensation, with over half of those rated at 50% disabling or less. The typical former POW is 81 years old, and 88% of all living former POWs were interned during World War II. The following table summarizes basic demographic data for former POWs:

	WWII Europe	WWII Pacific	Korea	Vietnam	Gulf War	Total for All Wars
Number Alive on 1/1/03	29,675	4,477	2,264	595	21	39,029[2]
Average Age[3]	80	84	72	64	39	81
Average Length of Captivity[4]	11.5 mos.	39 mos.	24 mos.	56 mos.	1 mo.	16.5 mos.

We estimate that benefit-costs for the POW portion of the bill would be $139.6 million for FY 2004 and $1.1 billion for FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate administrative costs to be an additional one-time cost of $632 thousand in the first year. These amounts are not included in the President's FY 2004 budget request, and the Department cannot support this provision's enactment.

Prohibition Against Compensation for Substance-Abuse Disabilities

Section 3(a) of H.R. 850 would amend 38 U.S.C. §§ 1110 and 1131 to clarify that the prohibition on payment of compensation for a disability that is a result of the veteran's own abuse of alcohol or drugs applies even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability. Section 3(b) would make that amendment applicable to claims filed on or after the date of enactment and to claims filed prior to, but not finally decided as of that date. We strongly support this provision, which is also proposed in the President's budget.

Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, authorize the payment of compensation for disability resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service, during a period of war or during other than a period of war, respectively. Sections 1110 and 1131 also currently provide, "but no compensation shall be paid if the disability is a result of the veteran's own willful misconduct or abuse of alcohol or drugs." Before their amendment in 1990, the provisions currently codified in sections 1110 and 1131 prohibited compensation "if the disability is the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct." In 1990, they were amended to also prohibit compensation if the disability is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse.

VA had long interpreted those provisions to authorize compensation not only for disability immediately resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in service, but also for disability more remotely resulting from such injury or disease. That interpretation is embodied in 38 C.F.R. § 3.310(a), which provides that, generally, disability which is proximately due to or the result of a service-connected disease or injury shall be service connected. Thus, VA does pay, in specific cases, compensation for primary service-connected disability and for secondary service-connected disability. However, consistent with the plain meaning of sections 1110 and 1131, if a disability, whether primary or secondary, is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse, VA did not pay compensation.

This has changed. On February 2, 2001, a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit interpreted section 1110 as allowing compensation for an alcohol or drug-abuse-related disability arising secondarily from a service-connected disability. Allen v. Principi, 237 F.3d 1368, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2001). More specifically, the panel held that section 1110 "does not preclude compensation for an alcohol or drug abuse disability secondary to a service-connected disability or use of an alcohol or drug abuse disability as evidence of the increased severity of a service-connected disability." Id. at 1381. The Government filed a petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which the panel and full court denied on October 16, 2001. Allen v. Principi, 268 F.3d 1340, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2001). However, five of the eleven judges who considered the petition for rehearing en banc dissented from the order denying rehearing, opining that the court's interpretation is wrong. 268 F.3d at 1341-42.

We are concerned that payment of additional compensation based on the abuse of alcohol or drugs is contrary to congressional intent and is not in veterans' best interests because it removes an incentive to refrain from debilitating and self-destructive behavior.

The Federal Circuit's interpretation in Allen could also greatly increase the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities. Under the court's interpretation, any veteran with a service-connected disability who abuses alcohol or drugs is potentially eligible for an increased amount of compensation if he or she can offer evidence that the substance abuse is a result of a service-connected disability, i.e., that the substance abuse is a way of coping with the pain or loss the disability causes. Under this interpretation, alcohol or drug abuse disabilities that are secondary to either physical or mental disorders are compensable.

The potential for increased costs is illustrated by mental disorders, which are frequently associated with alcohol and drug abuse. Almost 421,000 veterans are currently receiving compensation for a service-connected mental disability. About 324,000 of those disabilities are currently rated less than 100 percent and could potentially be rated totally disabling on the basis of secondary alcohol or drug abuse. Even if the service connection of disability from alcohol or drug abuse does not result in an increased schedular evaluation, temporary total evaluations could be assigned whenever a veteran is hospitalized for more than twenty-one days for treatment or observation related to the abuse. Even the 97,000 cases of a service-connected mental disability evaluated at 100 percent disabling have potential for increased compensation for secondary alcohol or drug abuse if the statutory criteria for special monthly compensation are met.

The potential increase in compensation does not end there. Under the Federal Circuit's interpretation, VA is required to pay compensation for the secondary effects of the abuse of alcohol or drugs. Once alcohol or drug abuse is service connected as being secondary to another service-connected disability, then service connection can be established for any disability that is a result of the service-connected abuse of alcohol or drugs. If alcohol or drug abuse results in a disease, such as cirrhosis of the liver, then that disease would also be service connected and provide a basis for compensation under the court's interpretation.

Of course, an increase in the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities will increase the benefit cost of the compensation program. Section 3 of H.R. 850 would avoid those increased costs. Our estimate of savings that would result from enactment of this provision is based on the payment of only basic compensation for alcohol or drug abuse disabilities secondary to service-connected disabilities. We estimate that this provision would result in benefit cost savings of $127 million and administrative cost savings of $44 million in FY 2004 and benefit cost savings of $4.6 billion and administrative cost savings of $97 million for the ten-year period FY 2004 through FY 2013. This amount does not include the savings that would be associated with payment of compensation for temporary total evaluations, special monthly compensation, or compensation for the secondary effects of alcohol or drug abuse.

Dental Care for Former Prisoners of War

Section 4 of H.R. 850 would require VA to provide outpatient dental services and treatment, and related dental appliances, for any non-service-connected dental condition or disability from which a veteran who is a former POW is suffering. Currently, a veteran who is a former POW may receive dental benefits for non-service-connected dental conditions or disabilities only if the veteran was incarcerated for 90 days or more. By eliminating the 90-day requirement, section 4 would authorize VA to treat all former POWs the same, regardless of their length of captivity, with respect to dental care for a non-service-connected condition or disability. It would also make the eligibility rules for dental benefits for former POWs the same as for other health-care services for former POWs.

VA has strongly supported similar provisions in the past, and we continue our strong support for this provision. We believe this amendment is needed to ensure that former POWs receive all needed care for conditions that may be attributable to the privations of their service.

Costs resulting from enactment of this provision would be insignificant.

H.R. 966

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 966, the "Disabled Veterans' Return-to-Work Act of 2003," would amend provisions of 38 U.S.C. § 1524 to reinstate a program of vocational training for certain pension recipients that was in place between February 1, 1985, and December 31, 1995. That temporary program, established pursuant to the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-543, required the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible in the case of certain veterans awarded pension during the program period. If the achievement of such a goal was found to be feasible, these veterans were offered the opportunity to pursue programs of vocational training consisting of vocationally oriented and other services and assistance of the same kind provided under the vocational rehabilitation program authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code. These services and assistance did not include subsistence allowances, loans, or automobile adaptive equipment. Once a program of training was completed, a veteran could also receive employment assistance. The law limited the number of evaluations to be performed to not more than 3,500 veterans during any 12-month period. The initial program period ran from February 1, 1985, to January 31, 1992.

Initially, the law required that a veteran under the age of 50 who was awarded pension during the program period be evaluated with respect to his or her potential for rehabilitation. It required that the evaluation include a personal interview by a VA employee trained in vocational counseling. If the veteran refused to participate in the evaluation, his or her pension was suspended until he or she participated in an evaluation. Subsequent participation in the vocational training itself was voluntary. For a veteran pension recipient 50 years of age or older, the program of vocational training was totally voluntary. If, upon application by such a veteran-pensioner, VA made a preliminary finding on the basis of information in the application that, with the assistance of a vocational training program, the veteran had good potential for achieving employment, VA was authorized, upon the veteran's request, to evaluate the veteran to further determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible.

In 1992, Public Law 102-562 eliminated the limitation on the number of program participants who may be evaluated annually and amended the program for veterans under age 45, rather than under age 50, who were awarded pension during the program period so as to (A) require the Secretary, based on information on file with VA, to make a preliminary finding whether the veteran, with the assistance of a VA vocational training program, had a good potential for achieving employment; (B) if that potential was found to exist, required the Secretary to solicit from the veteran an application for VA vocational training; and (C) if the veteran applied for training, required the Secretary to provide an evaluation to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible. In addition, the program was opened to veterans age 45 and older who had been awarded pension before the program period. That Public Law also extended the program ending date until December 31, 1995. No further action was taken by Congress, and by operation of law, the program ended on December 31, 1995.

During the period February 1, 1985, through January 31, 1989, VA evaluated approximately 9,468 veterans under the program. Of these, 2,838 were found to be feasible for training. Some 468 veterans participated in programs of vocational training. Sixty-five veterans completed that training. Fifty-eight obtained employment. Between fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1992, VA conducted 9,140 evaluations under the program, with 937 veterans participating in training.

H.R. 966 would reinstate the program and provide that a new program period would run for five years beginning on the date of enactment of the Act. In addition, it would require the Secretary to ensure that the availability of vocational training under section 1524 be made known through a variety of means, including the Internet and announcements in VA publications and other veterans' publications. Finally, the bill would require the Secretary, within two years after the date of enactment of the Act, to report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House on the operation of the program to include an evaluation of the vocational training provided and an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of the training provided, as well as data on the entered-employment rate of veterans pursuing such training.

If H.R. 966 were to be enacted, we estimate that VA would conduct approximately 1,300 record reviews each year, based on new accessions to the pension rolls, to determine whether each veteran so evaluated has good potential for achieving employment. We estimate that the achievement of a vocational goal will be determined to be feasible in about 1/3 (433) of those cases. Of that number, it is estimated that approximately 1/3 of these, 144 veterans, will actually end up participating in the program. In addition, because the program is also available to veterans over age 45 on a voluntary basis, we estimate that an additional 25 participants may participate, for a total of 169 cases per year. Based on those numbers, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 966 would cost $3 million for fiscal years 2004 through 2008 and an additional $3.6 million for fiscal years 2009 though 2013, totaling $6.6 million. Administrative costs associated with this bill are expected to be insignificant.

Mr. Chairman, given our experience in administering the temporary program during its ten-year duration, and the fact that only a small number of veterans benefited from the program, VA believes that the finite resources available to us for program administration would be best used to support our current program of vocational rehabilitation for service-disabled veterans, as authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, especially in light of the current combat activities in Iraq. Thus, the Department does not support the enactment of H.R. 966.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. I will be pleased to respond to any questions you or the members of the Subcommittee may have.

H. R. 850

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162210

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§ 1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162211

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162212

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 996

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 27, 2003

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (for himself, Mr. ROSS, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

---

A BILL

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act".

REV_00162214

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) The rental-purchase industry provides a service that meets and satisfies the demands of many consumers.

(2) Each year, approximately 2,300,000 United States households enter into rental-purchase transactions and over a 5-year period approximately 4,900,000 United States households will do so.

(3) Competition among the various firms engaged in the extension of rental-purchase transactions would be strengthened by informed use of rental-purchase transactions.

(4) The informed use of rental-purchase transactions results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to assure the availability of rental-purchase transactions and to assure simple, meaningful, and consistent disclosure of rental-purchase terms so that consumers will be able to more readily compare the available rental-purchase terms and avoid uninformed use of rental-purchase transactions, and to protect consumers against unfair rental-purchase practices.

REV_00162215

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.

The Consumer Credit Protection Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE X—RENTAL-PURCHASE TRANSACTIONS

"Sec. 1001. Definitions.
"Sec. 1002. Exempted transactions.
"Sec. 1003. General disclosure requirements.
"Sec. 1004. Rental-purchase disclosures.
"Sec. 1005. Other agreement provisions.
"Sec. 1006. Right to acquire ownership.
"Sec. 1007. Prohibited provisions.
"Sec. 1008. Statement of accounts.
"Sec. 1009. Renegotiations and extensions.
"Sec. 1010. Point-of-rental disclosures.
"Sec. 1011. Rental-purchase advertising.
"Sec. 1012. Civil liability.
"Sec. 1013. Additional grounds for civil liability.
"Sec. 1014. Liability of assignees.
"Sec. 1015. Regulations.
"Sec. 1016. Enforcement.
"Sec. 1017. Criminal liability for willful and knowing violation.
"Sec. 1018. Relation to other laws.
"Sec. 1019. Effect on government agencies.
"Sec. 1020. Compliance date.

"SEC. 1001. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) ADVERTISEMENT.—The term 'advertisement' means a commercial message in any medium that promotes, directly or indirectly, a rental-purchase agreement but does not include price tags, window signs, or other in-store merchandising aids.

"(2) AGRICULTURAL PURPOSE.—The term 'agricultural purpose' includes—

REV_00162216

"(A) the production, harvest, exhibition, marketing, transformation, processing, or manufacture of agricultural products by a natural person who cultivates plants or propagates or nurtures agricultural products; and

"(B) the acquisition of farmlands, real property with a farm residence, or personal property and services used primarily in farming.

"(3) BOARD.—The term 'Board' means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"(4) CASH PRICE.—The term 'cash price' means the price at which a merchant, in the ordinary course of business, offers to sell for cash the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase transaction.

"(5) CONSUMER.—The term 'consumer' means a natural person who is offered or enters into a rental-purchase agreement.

"(6) DATE OF CONSUMMATION.—The term 'date of consummation' means the date on which a consumer becomes contractually obligated under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(7) INITIAL PAYMENT.—The term 'initial payment' means the amount to be paid before or at the consummation of the agreement or the delivery of the property if delivery occurs after consummation, including the rental payment; service, processing, or administrative charges; delivery fee; refundable security deposit; taxes; mandatory fees or charges; and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

"(8) MERCHANT.—The term 'merchant' means a person who provides the use of property through a rental-purchase agreement in the ordinary course of business and to whom a consumer's initial payment under the agreement is payable.

"(9) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—The term 'payment schedule' means the amount and timing of the periodic payments and the total number of all periodic payments that the consumer will make if the consumer acquires ownership of the property by making all periodic payments.

"(10) PERIODIC PAYMENT.—The term 'periodic payment' means the total payment a consumer will make for a specific rental period after the initial payment, including the rental payment, taxes, mandatory fees or charges, and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

REV_00162218

"(11) PROPERTY.—The term 'property' means property that is not real property under the laws of the State where the property is located when it is made available under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(12) RENTAL PAYMENT.—The term 'rental payment' means rent required to be paid by a consumer for the possession and use of property for a specific rental period, but does not include taxes or any fees or charges.

"(13) RENTAL PERIOD.—The term 'rental period' means a week, month, or other specific period of time, during which the consumer has a right to possess and use property that is the subject of a rental-purchase agreement after paying the rental payment and any applicable taxes for such period.

"(14) RENTAL-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' means a contract in the form of a bailment or lease for the use of property by a consumer for an initial period of 4 months or less, that is renewable with each payment by the consumer, and that permits but does not obligate the consumer to become the owner of the property.

REV_00162219

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' does not include—

"(i) a credit sale (as defined in section 103(g) of the Truth in Lending Act);

"(ii) a consumer lease (as defined in section 181(1) of such Act); or

"(iii) a transaction giving rise to a debt incurred in connection with the business of lending money or a thing of value.

"(15) RENTAL-PURCHASE COST.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of sections 1010 and 1011, the term 'rental-purchase cost' means the sum of all rental payments and mandatory fees or charges imposed by the merchant as a condition of entering into a rental-purchase agreement or acquiring ownership of property under a rental-purchase agreement, such as the following:

"(i) Service, processing, or administrative charge.

"(ii) Fee for an investigation or credit report.

"(iii) Charge for delivery required by the merchant.

REV_00162220

"(B) EXCLUDED ITEMS.—The following fees or charges shall not be taken into account in determining the rental-purchase cost with respect to a rental-purchase transaction:

"(i) Fees and charges prescribed by law, which actually are or will be paid to public officials or government entities, such as sales tax.

"(ii) Fees and charges for optional products and services offered in connection with a rental-purchase agreement.

"(16) STATE.—The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, any territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(17) TOTAL COST.—The term 'total cost' means the sum of the initial payment and all periodic payments in the payment schedule to be paid by the consumer to acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement.

"SEC. 1002. EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS.

"This title shall not apply to rental-purchase agreements primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes, or those made with Government agencies or instrumentalities.

"SEC. 1003. GENERAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) RECIPIENT OF DISCLOSURE.—A merchant shall disclose to any person who will be a signatory to a rental-purchase agreement the information required by sections 1004 and 1005.

"(b) TIMING OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required under sections 1004 and 1005 shall be made before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement and clearly and conspicuously in writing as part of the rental-purchase agreement to be signed by the consumer.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall be worded plainly and simply, and appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be readily noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1004. RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For each rental-purchase agreement, the merchant shall disclose to the consumer the following, to the extent applicable:

"(1) The date of the consummation of the rental-purchase transaction and the identities of the merchant and the consumer.

REV_00162222

"(2) A brief description of the rental property, which shall be sufficient to identify the property to the consumer, including an identification or serial number, if applicable, and a statement indicating whether the property is new or used.

"(3) A description of any fee, charge or penalty, in addition to the periodic payment, that the consumer may be required to pay under the agreement, which shall be separately identified by type and amount.

"(4) A clear and conspicuous statement that the transaction is a rental-purchase agreement and that the consumer will not obtain ownership of the property until the consumer has paid the total dollar amount necessary to acquire ownership.

"(5) The amount of any initial payment, which includes the first periodic payment, and the total amount of any fees, taxes, or other charges, required to be paid by the consumer.

"(6) The amount of the cash price of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and, if the agreement involves the rental of 2 or more items as a set (as may be defined by the Board in regulation) a statement of the aggregate cash price of all items shall satisfy this requirement.

REV_00162223

"(7) The amount and timing of periodic payments, and the total number of periodic payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(8) The total cost, using that term, and a brief description, such as 'This is the amount you will pay the merchant if you make all periodic payments to acquire ownership of the property.'.

"(9) A statement of the consumer's right to terminate the agreement without paying any fee or charge not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property in good repair upon expiration of any lease term.

"(10) Substantially the following statement: 'OTHER IMPORTANT TERMS: See your rental-purchase agreement for additional important information on early termination procedures, purchase option rights, responsibilities for loss, damage or destruction of the property, warranties, maintenance responsibilities, and other charges or penalties you may incur.'.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required by paragraphs (4) through (10) of subsection (a) shall be segregated from other information at the beginning of the rental-purchase agreement and shall contain only directly related information, and shall be identified in boldface, upper-case letters as follows: 'IMPORTANT RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES'.

"(c) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO INSURANCE PREMIUMS AND LIABILITY WAIVERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant shall clearly and conspicuously disclose in writing to the consumer before the consummation of a rental-purchase agreement that the purchase of leased property insurance or liability waiver coverage is not required as a condition for entering into the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) AFFIRMATIVE WRITTEN REQUEST AFTER COST DISCLOSURE.—A merchant may provide insurance or liability waiver coverage, directly or indirectly, in connection with a rental-purchase transaction only if—

"(A) the merchant clearly and conspicuously discloses to the consumer the cost of each component of such coverage before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(B) the consumer signs an affirmative written request for such coverage after receiving the disclosures required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph and paragraph (1).

REV_00162225

"(d) ACCURACY OF DISCLOSURE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The disclosures required to be made under subsection (a) shall be accurate as of the date the disclosures are made, based on the information available to the merchant.

"(2) INFORMATION SUBSEQUENTLY RENDERED INACCURATE.—If information required to be disclosed under subsection (a) is subsequently rendered inaccurate as a result of any agreement between the merchant and the consumer subsequent to the delivery of the required disclosures, the resulting inaccuracy shall not constitute a violation of this title.

"SEC. 1005. OTHER AGREEMENT PROVISIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each rental-purchase agreement shall—

"(1) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for loss, theft, damage, or destruction of the property;

"(2) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for maintaining or servicing the property, together with a brief description of the responsibility;

REV_00162226

"(3) provide that the consumer may terminate the agreement without paying any charges not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property that is the subject of the agreement upon expiration of any rental period;

"(4) contain a provision for reinstatement of the agreement, which at a minimum—

"(A) permits a consumer who fails to make a timely rental payment to reinstate the agreement, without losing any rights or options which exist under the agreement, by the payment of all past due rental payments and any other charges then due under the agreement and a payment for the next rental period within 7 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays monthly, or within 3 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays more frequently than monthly;

"(B) if the consumer returns or voluntarily surrenders the property covered by the agreement, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 60 days after the date of the return or surrender of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period;

"(C) if the consumer has paid 50 percent or more of the total cost necessary to acquire ownership and returns or voluntarily surrenders the property, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 120 days after the date of the return of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period; and

"(D) permits the consumer, upon reinstatement of the agreement to receive the same property, if available, that was the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, or if the same property is not available, a substitute item of comparable quality and condition may be provided to the consumer; except that, the Board

may, by regulation or order, exempt any independent small business (as defined by the Board by regulation) from the requirement of providing the same or comparable product during the extended reinstatement period provided in subparagraph (C), if the Board determines, taking into account such standards as the Board determines to be appropriate, that the reinstatement right provided in such subparagraph would provide excessive hardship for such independent small business.

''(5) provide a statement specifying the terms under which the consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement either by payment of the total cost to acquire ownership, as provided in section 1006, or by exercise of any early purchase option provided in the rental-purchase agreement;

''(6) provide a statement disclosing that if any part of a manufacturer's express warranty covers the property at the time the consumer acquires ownership of the property, the warranty will be transferred to the consumer if allowed by the terms of the warranty; and

"(7) provide, to the extent applicable, a description of any grace period for making any periodic payment, the amount of any security deposit, if any, to be paid by the consumer upon initiation of the rental-purchase agreement, and the terms for refund of such security deposit to the consumer upon return, surrender or purchase of the property.

"(b) REPOSSESSION DURING REINSTATEMENT PERIOD.—Subsection (a)(4) shall not be construed so as to prevent a merchant from attempting to repossess property during the reinstatement period pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(A), but such a repossession does not affect the consumer's right to reinstate.

"SEC. 1006. RIGHT TO ACQUIRE OWNERSHIP.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and the rental-purchase agreement shall terminate, upon compliance by the consumer with the requirements of subsection (b) or any early payment option provided in the rental purchase agreement, and upon payment of any past due payments and fees, as permitted in regulation by the Board.

"(b) PAYMENT OF TOTAL COST.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the rental property upon payment of the total cost of the rental-purchase agreement, as such term is defined in section 1001(17), and as disclosed to the consumer in the rental-purchase agreement pursuant to section 1004(a).

"(c) ADDITIONAL FEES PROHIBITED.—A merchant shall not require the consumer to pay, as a condition for acquiring ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, any fee or charge in addition to, or in excess of, the regular periodic payments required by subsection (b), or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as applicable. A requirement that the consumer pay an unpaid late charge or other fee or charge which the merchant has previously billed to the consumer shall not constitute an additional fee or charge for purposes of this subsection.

"(d) TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP RIGHTS.—Upon payment by the consumer of all payments necessary to acquire ownership under subsection (b) or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as appropriate, the merchant shall—

"(1) deliver, or mail to the consumer's last known address, such documents or other instruments, which the Board has determined by regulation, are necessary to acknowledge full ownership by the consumer of the property acquired pursuant to the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(2) transfer to the consumer the unexpired portion of any warranties provided by the manufacturer, distributor, or seller of the property, which shall apply as if the consumer were the original purchaser of the property, except where such transfer is prohibited by the terms of the warranty.

"SEC. 1007. PROHIBITED PROVISIONS.

"A rental-purchase agreement may not contain—

"(1) a confession of judgment;

"(2) a negotiable instrument;

"(3) a security interest or any other claim of a property interest in any goods, except those goods the use of which is provided by the merchant pursuant to the agreement;

"(4) a wage assignment;

"(5) a provision requiring the waiver of any legal claim or remedy created by this title or other provision of Federal or State law;

"(6) a provision requiring the consumer, in the event the property subject to the rental-purchase agreement is lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, to pay an amount in excess of the least of—

"(A) the fair market value of the property, as determined by the Board in regulation;

REV_00162232

"(B) any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement; or

"(C) the actual cost of repair, as appropriate;

"(7) a provision authorizing the merchant, or a person acting on behalf of the merchant, to enter the consumer's dwelling or other premises without obtaining the consumer's consent or to commit any breach of the peace in connection with the repossession of the rental property or the collection of any obligation or alleged obligation of the consumer arising out of the rental-purchase agreement;

"(8) a provision requiring the purchase of insurance or liability damage waiver to cover the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, except as permitted by the Board in regulation;

"(9) a provision requiring the consumer to pay more than 1 late fee or charge for an unpaid or delinquent periodic payment, regardless of the period in which the payment remains unpaid or delinquent, or to pay a late fee or charge for any periodic payment because a previously assessed late fee has not been paid in full.

REV_00162233

"SEC. 1008. STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

"Upon request of a consumer, a merchant shall provide a statement of the consumer's account. If a consumer requests a statement for an individual account more than 4 times in any 12-month period, the merchant may charge a reasonable fee for the additional statements.

"SEC. 1009. RENEGOTIATIONS AND EXTENSIONS.

"(a) RENEGOTIATIONS.—A renegotiation occurs when a rental-purchase agreement is satisfied and replaced by a new agreement undertaken by the same consumer. A renegotiation requires new disclosures, except as provided in subsection (c).

"(b) EXTENSIONS.—An extension is an agreement by the consumer and the merchant, to continue an existing rental-purchase agreement beyond the original end of the payment schedule, but does not include a continuation that is the result of a renegotiation.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—New disclosures are not required for the following, even if they meet the definition of a renegotiation or an extension:

"(1) A reduction in payments.

"(2) A deferment of 1 or more payments.

"(3) The extension of a rental-purchase agreement.

"(4) The substitution of property with property that has a substantially equivalent or greater economic value provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(5) The deletion of property in a multiple-item agreement.

"(6) A change in rental period provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(7) An agreement resulting from a court proceeding.

"(8) Any other event described in regulations prescribed by the Board.

"SEC. 1010. POINT-OF-RENTAL DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For any item of property or set of items displayed or offered for rental-purchase, the merchant shall display on or next to the item or set of items a card, tag, or label that clearly and conspicuously discloses the following:

"(1) A brief description of the property.

"(2) Whether the property is new or used.

"(3) The cash price of the property.

"(4) The amount of each rental payment.

"(5) The total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property.

"(6) The rental-purchase cost.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—

REV_00162235

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant may make the disclosure required by subsection (a) in the form of a list or catalog which is readily available to the consumer at the point of rental if the merchandise is not displayed in the merchant's showroom or if displaying a card, tag, or label would be impractical due to the size of the merchandise.

"(2) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1011. RENTAL-PURCHASE ADVERTISING.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If an advertisement for a rental-purchase transaction refers to or states the amount of any payment for any specific item or set of items, the merchant making the advertisement shall also clearly and conspicuously state in the advertisement the following for the item, or set of items, advertised:

"(1) The transaction advertised is a rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) The amount, timing, and total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership under the rental-purchase agreement.

REV_00162236

"(3) The amount of the rental-purchase cost.

"(4) To acquire ownership of the property the consumer must pay the rental-purchase cost plus applicable taxes.

"(5) Whether the stated payment amount and advertised rental-purchase cost is for new or used property.

"(b) PROHIBITION.—An advertisement for a rental-purchase agreement shall not state or imply that a specific item, or set of items, is available at specific amounts or terms unless the merchant usually and customarily offers, or will offer, the item or set of items at the stated amounts or terms.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that required disclosures shall be presented in a type, size, shade, contrast, prominence, location, and manner, as applicable to different mediums for advertising, so as to be readily noticeable and comprehensible to the ordinary consumer.

"(2) REGULATORY GUIDANCE.—The Board shall prescribe regulations on principles and factors to meet the clear and conspicuous standard as appropriate to print, video, audio, and computerized advertising, reflecting the principles and factors typically applied in each medium by the Federal Trade Commission.

"(3) LIMITATION.—Nothing contrary to, inconsistent with, or in mitigation of, the required disclosures shall be used in any advertisement in any medium, and no audio, video, or print technique shall be used that is likely to obscure or detract significantly from the communication of the disclosures.

"SEC. 1012. CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in section 1013, any merchant who fails to comply with any requirement of this title with respect to any consumer is liable to such consumer as provided for leases in section 130. For purposes of this section, the term 'creditor' as used in section 130 shall include a 'merchant', as defined in section 1001.

"(b) JURISDICTION OF COURTS; LIMITATION ON ACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 130(e), any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date the last payment was made by the consumer under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) RECOUPMENT OR SET-OFF.—This subsection shall not bar a consumer from asserting a violation of this title in an action to collect an obligation arising from a rental-purchase agreement, which was brought after the end of the 1-year period described in paragraph (1) as a matter of defense by recoupment or set-off in such action, except as otherwise provided by State law.

"SEC. 1013. ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) INDIVIDUAL CASES WITH ACTUAL DAMAGES.—Any merchant who fails to comply with any requirements imposed under section 1010 or 1011 with respect to any consumer who suffers actual damage from the violation shall be liable to such consumer as provided in section 130.

"(b) PATTERN OR PRACTICE OF VIOLATIONS.—If a merchant engages in a pattern or practice of violating any requirement imposed under section 1010 or 1011, the Federal Trade Commission or an appropriate State attorney general, in accordance with section 1016, may initiate an action to enforce sanctions against the merchant, including—

REV_00162239

"(1) an order to cease and desist from such practices; and

"(2) a civil money penalty of such amount as the court may impose, based on such factors as the court may determine to be appropriate.

"SEC. 1014. LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES.

"(a) ASSIGNEES INCLUDED.—For purposes of section 1013, and this section, the term 'merchant' includes an assignee of a merchant.

"(b) LIABILITIES OF ASSIGNEES.—

"(1) APPARENT VIOLATION.—An action under section 1012 or 1013 for a violation of this title may be brought against an assignee only if the violation is apparent on the face of the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"(2) APPARENT VIOLATION DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, a violation that is apparent on the face of a rental-purchase agreement includes, but is not limited to, a disclosure that can be determined to be incomplete or inaccurate from the face of the agreement.

"(3) INVOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.—An assignee has no liability in a case in which the assignment is involuntary.

REV_00162240

"(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No provision of this section shall be construed as limiting or altering the liability under section 1012 or 1013 of a merchant assigning a rental-purchase agreement.

"(b) PROOF OF DISCLOSURE.—In an action by or against an assignee, the consumer's written acknowledgment of receipt of a disclosure, made as part of the rental-purchase agreement, shall be conclusive proof that the disclosure was made, if the assignee had no knowledge that the disclosure had not been made when the assignee acquired the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"SEC. 1015. REGULATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, to prevent its circumvention, and to facilitate compliance with its requirements.

"(b) MODEL DISCLOSURE FORMS.—The Board may publish model disclosure forms and clauses for common rental-purchase agreements to facilitate compliance with the disclosure requirements of this title and to aid the consumer in understanding the transaction by utilizing readily understandable language to simplify the technical nature of the disclosures. In devising such forms, the Board shall consider the use by merchants of data processing or similar automated equipment. Nothing in this title may be construed to require a merchant to use any such model form or clause prescribed by the Board under this section. A merchant shall be deemed to be in compliance with the requirement to provide disclosure under section 1003(a) if the merchant—

"(1) uses any appropriate model form or clause as published by the Board; or

"(2) uses any such model form or clause and changes it by—

"(A) deleting any information which is not required by this title; or

"(B) rearranging the format, if in making such deletion or rearranging the format, the merchant does not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure.

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE OF REGULATIONS.—Any regulation prescribed by the Board, or any amendment or interpretation thereof, shall not be effective before the October 1 that follows the date of publication of the regulation in final form by at least 6 months. The Board may at its discretion lengthen that period of time to permit merchants to adjust to accommodate new requirements. The Board may also shorten that period of time, notwithstanding the first sentence, if it makes a specific finding that such action is necessary to comply with the findings of a court or to prevent unfair or deceptive practices. In any case, merchants may comply with any newly prescribed disclosure requirement prior to its effective date.

"SEC. 1016. ENFORCEMENT.

"(a) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.), and a violation of any requirements imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements of this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional test in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"(b) STATE ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An action to enforce the requirements imposed by this title may also be brought by the appropriate State attorney general in any appropriate United States district court, or any other court of competent jurisdiction.

"(2) PRIOR WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The State attorney general shall provide prior written notice of any such civil action to the Federal Trade Commission and shall provide the Commission with a copy of the complaint.

REV_00162243

"(B) EMERGENCY ACTION.—If prior notice is not feasible, the State attorney general shall provide notice to the Commission immediately upon instituting the action.

"(3) FTC INTERVENTION.—The Commission may—

"(A) intervene in the action;

"(B) upon intervening—

"(i) remove the action to the appropriate United States district court, if it was not originally brought there; and

"(ii) be heard on all matters arising in the action; and

"(C) file a petition for appeal.

"SEC. 1017. CRIMINAL LIABILITY FOR WILLFUL AND KNOWING VIOLATION.

"Whoever willfully and knowingly gives false or inaccurate information or fails to provide information which he is required to disclose under the provisions of this title or any regulation issued thereunder shall be subject to the penalty provisions as provided in section 112.

REV_00162244

"SEC. 1018. RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.

"(a) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) NO EFFECT ON CONSISTENT STATE LAWS.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), this title does not annul, alter, or affect in any manner the meaning, scope or applicability of the laws of any State relating to rental-purchase agreements, except to the extent those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF INCONSISTENCY.—Upon its own motion or upon the request of an interested party, which is submitted in accordance with procedures prescribed in regulations of the Board, the Board shall determine whether any such inconsistency exists. If the Board determines that a term or provision of a State law is inconsistent, merchants located in that State need not follow such term or provision and shall incur no liability under the law of that State for failure to follow such term or provision, notwithstanding that such determination is subsequently amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"(3) GREATER PROTECTION UNDER STATE LAW.—Except as provided in subsection (b), for purposes of this section, a term or provision of a State law is not inconsistent with the provisions of this title if the term or provision affords greater protection and benefit to the consumer than the protection and benefit provided under this title as determined by the Board, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party.

"(b) STATE LAWS RELATING TO CHARACTERIZATION OF TRANSACTION.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), this title shall supersede any State law to the extent that such law—

"(1) regulates a rental-purchase agreement as a security interest, credit sale, retail installment sale, conditional sale or any other form of consumer credit, or that imputes to a rental-purchase agreement the creation of a debt or extension of credit, or

"(2) requires the disclosure of a percentage rate calculation, including a time-price differential, an annual percentage rate, or an effective annual percentage rate.

"(c) RELATION TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT.—No provision of this title shall be construed as limiting, superseding, or otherwise affecting the applicability of the Federal Trade Commission Act to any merchant or rental-purchase transaction.

REV_00162246

"SEC. 1019. EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

"No civil liability or criminal penalty under this title may be imposed on the United States or any of its departments or agencies, any State or political subdivision, or any agency of a State or political subdivision.

"SEC. 1020. COMPLIANCE DATE.

"Compliance with this title shall not be required until 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act. In any case, merchants may comply with this title at any time after such date of enactment.".

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF

DANIEL L. COOPER,

UNDER SECRETARY FOR BENEFITS,

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS,

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify today on several bills of great interest to veterans.

H.R. 241

H.R. 241, the "Veterans Beneficiary Fairness Act of 2003," would eliminate a discrepancy regarding the limitation on the period for which retroactive benefits due and unpaid a claimant may be paid to others after the claimant's death. In the interest of fairness, we support enactment of this bill.

Under 38 U.S.C. § 5121, periodic monetary benefits to which an individual was entitled at death under existing ratings or decisions or based on evidence on file with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) at the time of death are paid upon the death of the individual to specified classes of survivors according to a prescribed order of preference. Prior to a recent court decision, VA had construed section 5121 to limit the payment of any benefits under that section to the retroactive period specified in the statute, regardless of whether the payment was based on an existing rating or decision or on evidence on file at the date of death. The retroactive payment period, originally one year, was extended to two years by Public Law 104-275, the "Veterans' Benefits Improvements Act of 1996."

On December 10, 2002, the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC) issued its decision in Bonny v. Principi, 16 Vet. App. 504 (2002). In that decision, the court held that 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) specifies two kinds of benefits: benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, and benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the file at the time of death. The court held that, in the case of the first type of benefits, the statute requires that an eligible survivor is to receive the entire amount of the award; only the latter type of "accrued" benefits is subject to the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a). The court based its interpretation of the statute primarily on the punctuation of section 5121(a).

The CAVC's Bonny decision has resulted in differing entitlements under section 5121 based on the status of the deceased's claim at the time of his or her death. H.R. 241 would eliminate this distinction by amending section 5121 to eliminate the two-year limitation on payment of retroactive benefits for all classes of beneficiaries under that statute.

The distinction the Bonny decision draws between the two categories of claimants—those whose claims had been approved and those whose entitlement had yet to be recognized when they died—is really one without a difference. In either case, a claimant's estate is deprived of the value of benefits for which he or she was, in life, eligible. H.R. 241 would remove this inequitable distinction, and we support its enactment.

We estimate the cost of complying with the Bonny decision for fiscal year (FY) 2004 to be $ 1.7 million and $18.2 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate the incremental cost to implement H.R. 241, that is, the difference between the cost of complying with the court's decision and the cost of enactment of H.R. 241, to be $5.9 million for FY 2004 and $65.8 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013.

In addition, we note one technical change needed in H.R. 241 should it be enacted. The comma in current section 5121(a) following "existing ratings or decisions" should be deleted to clarify, for purposes of 38 U.S.C. §§ 5121(b) and (c) and 5122, that the term "accrued benefits" includes both benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, as well as benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the veteran's file at the time of death.

REV_00162256

H.R. 533

H.R. 533, the "Agent Orange Veterans' Disabled Children's Benefits Act of 2003," would amend chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize VA to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to a person suffering from spina bifida who is natural child, regardless of age or marital status, of a parent who performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service," if the person was conceived after such service. A parent would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if, while performing active military, naval, or air service, he or she "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period during which such agent was used in that area; or . . . otherwise was exposed to a Vietnam-era herbicide agent." The term "Vietnam-era herbicide agent" would be defined by reference to current 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(3). VA does not support this bill.

Congress has repeatedly acted since 1979 to ensure that the Federal Government investigates the health effects of exposure to herbicides containing dioxin and compensates veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era and suffered disability as a result of that exposure. Because of the "concern and apprehension among veterans regarding the health effects of herbicides," Congress mandated an epidemiologic study by VA of the effects of exposure to dioxin in the Veterans Health Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1979. Congress also required VA to review and scientifically analyze literature relating to possible long-term health effects of human exposure to dioxin. In 1981, Congress authorized VA to provide hospital and nursing home care to certain veterans exposed during service to dioxin or ionizing radiation for conditions which, although not shown to have resulted from such exposure, are not found to have resulted from a cause other than such exposure. The Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act of 1984 directed VA to issue regulations to establish guidelines and, where appropriate, standards and criteria for the resolution of benefit claims based on exposure to herbicides containing dioxin in service in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The act also required VA to make specific findings, either positive or negative, regarding service connection as to three diseases, chloracne, porphyria cutanea tarda, and soft-tissue sarcoma.

In 1991, Congress added section 1116 (formerly section 316) to title 38, United States Code, establishing a presumption of service connection, applicable to veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, for three diseases. The act also called for VA to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to perform a review and evaluation of the scientific evidence regarding the association between disease and exposure to herbicides used in connection with the Vietnam War and each disease suspected of association with such exposure. Congress amended section 1116 in 1994 and 2001 by adding five conditions to the list of diseases presumed to be service connected in Vietnam veterans.

More recently, Congress has enacted legislation to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to the children of Vietnam veterans who were born with spina bifida, as well as to children with certain other birth defects who are the natural children of women veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

Congress' legislative enactments indicate its recognition of the unique circumstances of service in Vietnam—circumstances including the special sacrifices made by veterans of that war, and the great uncertainties regarding exposures of individual veterans to aerially applied herbicides. H.R. 533 would extend benefits Congress bestowed upon the affected children of those veterans to children of veterans who did not serve under those circumstances. In addition, H.R. 533's language is so vague as to be almost impossible to administer. Under that language, an individual would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if he or she, while performing active service, "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period when such agent was used in that area." The vagueness of the terms "area," "was used," and "during a period when" is sure to generate substantial litigation over what Congress intended by this language.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 533 would result in PAYGO costs of $60.8 million in FY 2004 and $760.7 million over the ten-year period FY 2004-2013. In addition, VA estimates administrative costs of $357,000 for FY 2004 and $ 1.73 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 761

Mr. Chairman, you also requested our comments on two proposals that would affect the Specially Adapted Housing program authorized by chapter 21 of title 38, United States Code. Under current law, veterans who are entitled to compensation for certain permanent and total service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 of title 38 are eligible for a grant to adapt their homes with features made necessary by the nature of their disabilities.

The first proposal, Mr. Chairman, is H.R. 761, the "Disabled Servicemembers Adapted Housing Assistance Act of 2003," which would permit VA to provide Specially Adapted Housing assistance to disabled members of the Armed Forces who remain on active duty pending medical separation. VA favors enactment of H.R. 761.

This bill would permit members of the Armed Forces with the service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 to apply for Specially Adapted Housing benefits and permit VA to process their applications and award benefits without having to wait for the servicemembers to be released from active duty. H.R. 761 could provide some affected veterans the opportunity to move into an adapted home as soon as they are separated from active duty, or at least much sooner than is possible under current law. With this accelerated determination of eligibility and assistance, veterans could avoid continued institutional care, thus improving their quality of life and increasing their independence. This could also reduce the cost to VA of in-patient healthcare for some affected veterans.

Because Specially Adapted Housing grants are a one-time-only benefit, the enactment of this measure should not materially increase either the total number of grants provided under this program or the dollar amount of such grants. Rather, H.R. 761 would merely accelerate the payment of this benefit to certain individuals who, under current law, would become entitled to the same benefit upon their release from active duty. Accordingly, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 761 would produce insignificant costs or savings.

H.R. 1048

Specially Adapted Housing

The other Specially Adapted Housing proposal is contained in section 2 of H.R. 1048, the "Disabled Veterans Adaptive Benefits Improvement Act of 2003." This section would increase the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grants. VA favors such increases, provided offsetting savings may be found.

Under H.R. 1048, the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grant authorized by section 2101(a) would be increased from $48,000 to $50,000. In addition, the maximum Special Housing Adaptations grant authorized by section 2101(b) would be increased from $9,250 to $10,000. These grants were last increased by Public Law 107-103, enacted December 27, 2001. Increases in the cost of construction since then justify increasing these important benefits.

VA estimates that approximately 600 veterans per year will receive specially adapted housing assistance, of which about 92.5 percent will qualify for the grant authorized by section 2101(a). VA estimates the cost of enacting section 2 of H.R. 1048 would be $1.14 million per year, with a total 10-year cost of $11.4 million.

REV_00162261

Assistance for Automobile and Adaptive Equipment

Section 3 of H.R. 1048 would increase from $9,000 to $11,000 the maximum amount that VA may pay under 38 U.S.C. § 3902(a) to provide or assist in providing an automobile or other conveyance to eligible persons. VA supports enactment of this provision.

The maximum automobile allowance was last increased to the current $9,000 by Public Law 107-103 in 2001. An increase since then in the cost of obtaining automobiles and in the cost of adapting them justifies increasing this benefit so as to preserve its value to deserving veterans.

VA estimates the total benefits cost of both provisions of H.R. 1048 would be $3.3 million for FY 2004 and $33.3 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 850

Special Compensation for Former Prisoners of War

Section 2 of H.R. 850, the "Former Prisoners of War Compensation Act of 2003," would add a new subchapter at the end of chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize special compensation for former prisoners of war (POWs). This special compensation would be separate from any service-connected disability compensation or pension to which a former POW may be entitled and is exempted from attachment, execution, or levy in the same manner as special pension paid to recipients of the Medal of Honor pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1562(c). The bill would direct the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to pay monthly to each former POW, including active duty personnel, special compensation at a rate of payment determined by the cumulative length of confinement or internment as a POW. Thirty days would be the minimum period of confinement for which a former POW would be eligible to receive special compensation. The bill would establish three rates of special compensation based on the length of the period of the former POW's detainment or interment, as follows:

Length of Former POW's Detainment or Interment	Special Compensation Monthly Rate
30-120 days	$150
121-540 days	$300
541 days or more	$450

In the past, former POWs have been entitled to receive a modest lump-sum cash payment, based on their length of internment. Pursuant to the War Claims Act of 1948, codified as amended at 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005 (2001), and subsequent amendments, former POWs were entitled to receive a lump sum payment of up to $2.50 per day for World War II veterans, $2.50 per day for Korea veterans, and $5.00 per day for Vietnam veterans.[1] Compensation for former POWs is otherwise limited to the service-connected disability compensation administered by VA pursuant to title 38, United States Code.

[1] Pursuant to 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005, WW II veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (b)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (d)); Korea veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (e)(2)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (e)(3)); Vietnam veterans were eligible to receive up to $2 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (f)(2)) and $3.00 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (f)(3)).

We estimate that approximately 39,029 former POWs are still living. Of that population, 13,631 (34.9%) receive disability compensation, with over half of those rated at 50% disabling or less. The typical former POW is 81 years old, and 88% of all living former POWs were interned during World War II. The following table summarizes basic demographic data for former POWs:

	WWII Europe	WWII Pacific	Korea	Vietnam	Gulf War	Total for All Wars
Number Alive on 1/1/03	29,675	4,477	2,264	595	21	39,029[2]
Average Age[3]	80	84	72	64	39	81
Average Length of Captivity[4]	11.5 mos.	39 mos.	24 mos.	56 mos.	1 mo.	16.5 mos.

We estimate that benefit-costs for the POW portion of the bill would be $139.6 million for FY 2004 and $1.1 billion for FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate administrative costs to be an additional one-time cost of $632 thousand in the first year. These amounts are not included in the President's FY 2004 budget request, and the Department cannot support this provision's enactment.

Prohibition Against Compensation for Substance-Abuse Disabilities

Section 3(a) of H.R. 850 would amend 38 U.S.C. §§ 1110 and 1131 to clarify that the prohibition on payment of compensation for a disability that is a

[2] This total includes an additional 1,997 former POWs of World War II who are not categorized under either WWII Europe or WWII Pacific.

REV_00162264

result of the veteran's own abuse of alcohol or drugs applies even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability. Section 3(b) would make that amendment applicable to claims filed on or after the date of enactment and to claims filed prior to, but not finally decided as of that date. We strongly support this provision, which is also proposed in the President's budget.

Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, authorize the payment of compensation for disability resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service, during a period of war or during other than a period of war, respectively. Sections 1110 and 1131 also currently provide, "but no compensation shall be paid if the disability is a result of the veteran's own willful misconduct or abuse of alcohol or drugs." Before their amendment in 1990, the provisions currently codified in sections 1110 and 1131 prohibited compensation "if the disability is the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct." In 1990, they were amended to also prohibit compensation if the disability is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse.

VA had long interpreted those provisions to authorize compensation not only for disability immediately resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in service, but also for disability more remotely resulting from such injury or disease. That interpretation is embodied in 38 C.F.R. § 3.310(a), which provides that, generally, disability which is proximately due to or the result of a service-connected disease or injury shall be service connected. Thus, VA does pay, in specific cases, compensation for primary service-connected disability and for secondary service-connected disability. However, consistent with the plain meaning of sections 1110 and 1131, if a disability, whether primary or secondary, is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse, VA did not pay compensation.

This has changed. On February 2, 2001, a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit interpreted section 1110 as allowing compensation for an alcohol or drug-abuse-related disability arising secondarily from a service-connected disability. Allen v. Principi, 237 F.3d 1368, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2001). More specifically, the panel held that section 1110 "does not preclude compensation for an alcohol or drug abuse disability secondary to a service-connected disability or use of an alcohol or drug abuse disability as evidence of the increased severity of a service-connected disability." Id. at 1381. The Government filed a petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which the panel and full court denied on October 16, 2001. Allen v. Principi, 268 F.3d 1340, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2001). However, five of the eleven judges who considered the petition for rehearing en banc dissented from the order denying rehearing, opining that the court's interpretation is wrong. 268 F.3d at 1341-42.

We are concerned that payment of additional compensation based on the abuse of alcohol or drugs is contrary to congressional intent and is not in veterans' best interests because it removes an incentive to refrain from debilitating and self-destructive behavior.

The Federal Circuit's interpretation in Allen could also greatly increase the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities. Under the court's interpretation, any veteran with a service-connected disability who abuses alcohol or drugs is potentially eligible for an increased amount of compensation if he or she can offer evidence that the substance abuse is a result of a service-connected disability, i.e., that the substance abuse is a way of coping with the pain or loss the disability causes. Under this interpretation, alcohol or drug abuse disabilities that are secondary to either physical or mental disorders are compensable.

The potential for increased costs is illustrated by mental disorders, which are frequently associated with alcohol and drug abuse. Almost 421,000 veterans are currently receiving compensation for a service-connected mental disability. About 324,000 of those disabilities are currently rated less than 100 percent and could potentially be rated totally disabling on the basis of secondary alcohol or drug abuse. Even if the service connection of disability from alcohol or drug abuse does not result in an increased schedular evaluation, temporary total evaluations could be assigned whenever a veteran is hospitalized for more than twenty-one days for treatment or observation related to the abuse. Even the 97,000 cases of a service-connected mental disability evaluated at 100 percent disabling have potential for increased compensation for secondary alcohol or drug abuse if the statutory criteria for special monthly compensation are met.

The potential increase in compensation does not end there. Under the Federal Circuit's interpretation, VA is required to pay compensation for the secondary effects of the abuse of alcohol or drugs. Once alcohol or drug abuse is service connected as being secondary to another service-connected disability, then service connection can be established for any disability that is a result of the service-connected abuse of alcohol or drugs. If alcohol or drug abuse results in a disease, such as cirrhosis of the liver, then that disease would also be service connected and provide a basis for compensation under the court's interpretation.

Of course, an increase in the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities will increase the benefit cost of the compensation program. Section 3 of H.R. 850 would avoid those increased costs. Our estimate of savings that would result from enactment of this provision is based on the payment of only basic compensation for alcohol or drug abuse disabilities secondary to service-connected disabilities. We estimate that this provision would result in benefit cost savings of $127 million and administrative cost savings of $44 million in FY 2004 and benefit cost savings of $4.6 billion and administrative cost savings of $97 million for the ten-year period FY 2004 through FY 2013. This amount does not include the savings that would be associated with payment of compensation for temporary total evaluations, special monthly compensation, or compensation for the secondary effects of alcohol or drug abuse.

Dental Care for Former Prisoners of War

Section 4 of H.R. 850 would require VA to provide outpatient dental services and treatment, and related dental appliances, for any non-service-connected dental condition or disability from which a veteran who is a former POW is suffering. Currently, a veteran who is a former POW may receive dental benefits for non-service-connected dental conditions or disabilities only if the veteran was incarcerated for 90 days or more. By eliminating the 90-day requirement, section 4 would authorize VA to treat all former POWs the same, regardless of their length of captivity, with respect to dental care for a non-service-connected condition or disability. It would also make the eligibility rules for dental benefits for former POWs the same as for other health-care services for former POWs.

VA has strongly supported similar provisions in the past, and we continue our strong support for this provision. We believe this amendment is needed to ensure that former POWs receive all needed care for conditions that may be attributable to the privations of their service.

Costs resulting from enactment of this provision would be insignificant.

H.R. 966

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 966, the "Disabled Veterans' Return-to-Work Act of 2003," would amend provisions of 38 U.S.C. § 1524 to reinstate a program of vocational training for certain pension recipients that was in place between February 1, 1985, and December 31, 1995. That temporary program, established pursuant to the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-543, required the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible in the case of certain veterans awarded pension during the program period. If the achievement of such a goal was found to be feasible, these veterans were offered the opportunity to pursue programs of vocational training consisting of vocationally oriented and other services and assistance of the same kind provided under the vocational rehabilitation program authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code. These services and assistance did not include subsistence allowances, loans, or automobile adaptive equipment. Once a program of training was completed, a veteran could also receive employment assistance. The law limited the number of evaluations to be performed to not more than 3,500 veterans during any 12-month period. The initial program period ran from February 1, 1985, to January 31, 1992.

Initially, the law required that a veteran under the age of 50 who was awarded pension during the program period be evaluated with respect to his or her potential for rehabilitation. It required that the evaluation include a personal interview by a VA employee trained in vocational counseling. If the veteran refused to participate in the evaluation, his or her pension was suspended until he or she participated in an evaluation. Subsequent participation in the vocational training itself was voluntary. For a veteran pension recipient 50 years of age or older, the program of vocational training was totally voluntary. If, upon application by such a veteran-pensioner, VA made a preliminary finding on the basis of information in the application that, with the assistance of a vocational training program, the veteran had good potential for achieving employment, VA was authorized, upon the veteran's request, to evaluate the veteran to further determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible.

In 1992, Public Law 102-562 eliminated the limitation on the number of

program participants who may be evaluated annually and amended the program for veterans under age 45, rather than under age 50, who were awarded pension during the program period so as to (A) require the Secretary, based on information on file with VA, to make a preliminary finding whether the veteran, with the assistance of a VA vocational training program, had a good potential for achieving employment; (B) if that potential was found to exist, required the Secretary to solicit from the veteran an application for VA vocational training; and (C) if the veteran applied for training, required the Secretary to provide an evaluation to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible. In addition, the program was opened to veterans age 45 and older who had been awarded pension before the program period. That Public Law also extended the program ending date until December 31, 1995. No further action was taken by Congress, and by operation of law, the program ended on December 31, 1995.

During the period February 1, 1985, through January 31, 1989, VA evaluated approximately 9,468 veterans under the program. Of these, 2,838 were found to be feasible for training. Some 468 veterans participated in programs of vocational training. Sixty-five veterans completed that training. Fifty-eight obtained employment. Between fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1992, VA conducted 9,140 evaluations under the program, with 937 veterans participating in training.

H.R. 966 would reinstate the program and provide that a new program period would run for five years beginning on the date of enactment of the Act. In addition, it would require the Secretary to ensure that the availability of vocational training under section 1524 be made known through a variety of means, including the Internet and announcements in VA publications and other veterans' publications. Finally, the bill would require the Secretary, within two years after the date of enactment of the Act, to report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House on the operation of the program to include an evaluation of the vocational training provided and an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of the training provided, as well as data on the entered-employment rate of veterans pursuing such training.

If H.R. 966 were to be enacted, we estimate that VA would conduct approximately 1,300 record reviews each year, based on new accessions to the pension rolls, to determine whether each veteran so evaluated has good potential for achieving employment. We estimate that the achievement of a vocational goal will be determined to be feasible in about 1/3 (433) of those cases. Of that number, it is estimated that approximately 1/3 of these, 144 veterans, will actually end up participating in the program. In addition, because the program is also available to veterans over age 45 on a voluntary basis, we estimate that an additional 25 participants may participate, for a total of 169 cases per year. Based on those numbers, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 966 would cost $3 million for fiscal years 2004 through 2008 and an additional $3.6 million for fiscal years 2009 though 2013, totaling $6.6 million. Administrative costs associated with this bill are expected to be insignificant.

Mr. Chairman, given our experience in administering the temporary program during its ten-year duration, and the fact that only a small number of veterans benefited from the program, VA believes that the finite resources available to us for program administration would be best used to support our current program of vocational rehabilitation for service-disabled veterans, as authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, especially in light of the current combat activities in Iraq. Thus, the Department does not support the enactment of H.R. 966.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. I will be pleased to respond to any questions you or the members of the Subcommittee may have.

H. R. 850

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162284

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§ 1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162285

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162286

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for health benefits and certain other benefits to be furnished by the Department of Veterans Affairs to any individual who has spina bifida and is the natural child of a veteran who, while in military service, was exposed to a herbicide agent.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Agent Orange Veterans' Disabled Children's Benefits Act of 2003".

REV_00162301

SEC. 2. EXTENSION OF SPINA BIFIDA BENEFITS FOR CHILDREN OF VETERANS.

(a) ELIGIBLE CHILDREN.—Subchapter I of chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting before section 1802 the following new section:

"§ 1801. Persons eligible for benefits

"(a) ELIGIBLE CHILD.—An individual is an eligible child for purposes of this subchapter if the individual is suffering from spina bifida and is—

"(1) a child as defined in section 1821(1) of this title; or

"(2) the natural child, regardless of age or marital status, of a parent who performed qualifying herbicide-risk service, if the individual was conceived after the parent performed such service.

"(b) QUALIFYING HERBICIDE-RISK SERVICE.—(1) An individual performed qualifying herbicide-risk service if (as determined by the Secretary) the individual, while performing active military, naval, or air service (without regard to the characterization of that individual's service)—

"(A) served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period during which such agent was used in that area; or

"(B) otherwise was exposed to a Vietnam-era herbicide agent.

REV_00162302

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'Vietnam-era herbicide agent' has the meaning given the term 'herbicide agent' in section 1116(a)(3) of this title.".

(b) HEALTH CARE.—Section 1803(a) of such title is amended by striking "a child of a Vietnam veteran who is suffering from spina bifida" and inserting "an eligible child".

(c) VOCATIONAL TRAINING AND REHABILITATION.—Section 1804(a) of such title is amended by striking "a child of a Vietnam veteran who is suffering from spina bifida" and inserting "an eligible child".

(d) MONETARY ALLOWANCE.—Section 1805(a) of such title is amended by striking "any child of a Vietnam veteran" and inserting "any eligible child".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The heading of chapter 18 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 18—DISABILITY BENEFITS FOR CHILDREN OF VIETNAM VETERANS AND OTHER VETERANS EXPOSED TO HERBICIDE AGENTS".

(2) The heading of subchapter I of such chapter is amended to read as follows:

REV_00162303

"SUBCHAPTER I—CHILDREN BORN WITH SPINA BIFIDA".

(3) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended—

(A) by striking the item relating to subchapter I and inserting the following:

"SUBCHAPTER I—CHILDREN BORN WITH SPINA BIFIDA";

and

(B) by inserting before the item relating to section 1802 the following new item:

"1801. Persons eligible for benefits.".

(4) The items relating to chapter 18 in the tables of chapters at the beginning of title 38, United States Code, and at the beginning of part II of such title, are amended to read as follows:

"18. Disability Benefits for Children of Vietnam Veterans and Other Veterans Exposed to Herbicide Agents ..... 1801".

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 850

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162305

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§ 1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162306

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162307

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 996

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 27, 2003

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (for himself, Mr. ROSS, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

---

A BILL

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act".

REV_00162309

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) The rental-purchase industry provides a service that meets and satisfies the demands of many consumers.

(2) Each year, approximately 2,300,000 United States households enter into rental-purchase transactions and over a 5-year period approximately 4,900,000 United States households will do so.

(3) Competition among the various firms engaged in the extension of rental-purchase transactions would be strengthened by informed use of rental-purchase transactions.

(4) The informed use of rental-purchase transactions results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to assure the availability of rental-purchase transactions and to assure simple, meaningful, and consistent disclosure of rental-purchase terms so that consumers will be able to more readily compare the available rental-purchase terms and avoid uninformed use of rental-purchase transactions, and to protect consumers against unfair rental-purchase practices.

REV_00162310

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.

The Consumer Credit Protection Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE X—RENTAL-PURCHASE TRANSACTIONS

"Sec. 1001. Definitions.
"Sec. 1002. Exempted transactions.
"Sec. 1003. General disclosure requirements.
"Sec. 1004. Rental-purchase disclosures.
"Sec. 1005. Other agreement provisions.
"Sec. 1006. Right to acquire ownership.
"Sec. 1007. Prohibited provisions.
"Sec. 1008. Statement of accounts.
"Sec. 1009. Renegotiations and extensions.
"Sec. 1010. Point-of-rental disclosures.
"Sec. 1011. Rental-purchase advertising.
"Sec. 1012. Civil liability.
"Sec. 1013. Additional grounds for civil liability.
"Sec. 1014. Liability of assignees.
"Sec. 1015. Regulations.
"Sec. 1016. Enforcement.
"Sec. 1017. Criminal liability for willful and knowing violation.
"Sec. 1018. Relation to other laws.
"Sec. 1019. Effect on government agencies.
"Sec. 1020. Compliance date.

"SEC. 1001. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) ADVERTISEMENT.—The term 'advertisement' means a commercial message in any medium that promotes, directly or indirectly, a rental-purchase agreement but does not include price tags, window signs, or other in-store merchandising aids.

"(2) AGRICULTURAL PURPOSE.—The term 'agricultural purpose' includes—

REV_00162311

"(A) the production, harvest, exhibition, marketing, transformation, processing, or manufacture of agricultural products by a natural person who cultivates plants or propagates or nurtures agricultural products; and

"(B) the acquisition of farmlands, real property with a farm residence, or personal property and services used primarily in farming.

"(3) BOARD.—The term 'Board' means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"(4) CASH PRICE.—The term 'cash price' means the price at which a merchant, in the ordinary course of business, offers to sell for cash the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase transaction.

"(5) CONSUMER.—The term 'consumer' means a natural person who is offered or enters into a rental-purchase agreement.

"(6) DATE OF CONSUMMATION.—The term 'date of consummation' means the date on which a consumer becomes contractually obligated under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(7) INITIAL PAYMENT.—The term 'initial payment' means the amount to be paid before or at the consummation of the agreement or the delivery of the property if delivery occurs after consummation, including the rental payment; service, processing, or administrative charges; delivery fee; refundable security deposit; taxes; mandatory fees or charges; and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

"(8) MERCHANT.—The term 'merchant' means a person who provides the use of property through a rental-purchase agreement in the ordinary course of business and to whom a consumer's initial payment under the agreement is payable.

"(9) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—The term 'payment schedule' means the amount and timing of the periodic payments and the total number of all periodic payments that the consumer will make if the consumer acquires ownership of the property by making all periodic payments.

"(10) PERIODIC PAYMENT.—The term 'periodic payment' means the total payment a consumer will make for a specific rental period after the initial payment, including the rental payment, taxes, mandatory fees or charges, and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

REV_00162313

"(11) PROPERTY.—The term 'property' means property that is not real property under the laws of the State where the property is located when it is made available under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(12) RENTAL PAYMENT.—The term 'rental payment' means rent required to be paid by a consumer for the possession and use of property for a specific rental period, but does not include taxes or any fees or charges.

"(13) RENTAL PERIOD.—The term 'rental period' means a week, month, or other specific period of time, during which the consumer has a right to possess and use property that is the subject of a rental-purchase agreement after paying the rental payment and any applicable taxes for such period.

"(14) RENTAL-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' means a contract in the form of a bailment or lease for the use of property by a consumer for an initial period of 4 months or less, that is renewable with each payment by the consumer, and that permits but does not obligate the consumer to become the owner of the property.

REV_00162314

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' does not include—

"(i) a credit sale (as defined in section 103(g) of the Truth in Lending Act);

"(ii) a consumer lease (as defined in section 181(1) of such Act); or

"(iii) a transaction giving rise to a debt incurred in connection with the business of lending money or a thing of value.

"(15) RENTAL-PURCHASE COST.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of sections 1010 and 1011, the term 'rental-purchase cost' means the sum of all rental payments and mandatory fees or charges imposed by the merchant as a condition of entering into a rental-purchase agreement or acquiring ownership of property under a rental-purchase agreement, such as the following:

"(i) Service, processing, or administrative charge.

"(ii) Fee for an investigation or credit report.

"(iii) Charge for delivery required by the merchant.

REV_00162315

"(B) EXCLUDED ITEMS.—The following fees or charges shall not be taken into account in determining the rental-purchase cost with respect to a rental-purchase transaction:

"(i) Fees and charges prescribed by law, which actually are or will be paid to public officials or government entities, such as sales tax.

"(ii) Fees and charges for optional products and services offered in connection with a rental-purchase agreement.

"(16) STATE.—The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, any territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(17) TOTAL COST.—The term 'total cost' means the sum of the initial payment and all periodic payments in the payment schedule to be paid by the consumer to acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement.

"SEC. 1002. EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS.

"This title shall not apply to rental-purchase agreements primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes, or those made with Government agencies or instrumentalities.

"SEC. 1003. GENERAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) RECIPIENT OF DISCLOSURE.—A merchant shall disclose to any person who will be a signatory to a rental-purchase agreement the information required by sections 1004 and 1005.

"(b) TIMING OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required under sections 1004 and 1005 shall be made before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement and clearly and conspicuously in writing as part of the rental-purchase agreement to be signed by the consumer.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall be worded plainly and simply, and appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be readily noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1004. RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For each rental-purchase agreement, the merchant shall disclose to the consumer the following, to the extent applicable:

"(1) The date of the consummation of the rental-purchase transaction and the identities of the merchant and the consumer.

REV_00162317

"(2) A brief description of the rental property, which shall be sufficient to identify the property to the consumer, including an identification or serial number, if applicable, and a statement indicating whether the property is new or used.

"(3) A description of any fee, charge or penalty, in addition to the periodic payment, that the consumer may be required to pay under the agreement, which shall be separately identified by type and amount.

"(4) A clear and conspicuous statement that the transaction is a rental-purchase agreement and that the consumer will not obtain ownership of the property until the consumer has paid the total dollar amount necessary to acquire ownership.

"(5) The amount of any initial payment, which includes the first periodic payment, and the total amount of any fees, taxes, or other charges, required to be paid by the consumer.

"(6) The amount of the cash price of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and, if the agreement involves the rental of 2 or more items as a set (as may be defined by the Board in regulation) a statement of the aggregate cash price of all items shall satisfy this requirement.

REV_00162318

"(7) The amount and timing of periodic payments, and the total number of periodic payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(8) The total cost, using that term, and a brief description, such as 'This is the amount you will pay the merchant if you make all periodic payments to acquire ownership of the property.'.

"(9) A statement of the consumer's right to terminate the agreement without paying any fee or charge not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property in good repair upon expiration of any lease term.

"(10) Substantially the following statement: 'OTHER IMPORTANT TERMS: See your rental-purchase agreement for additional important information on early termination procedures, purchase option rights, responsibilities for loss, damage or destruction of the property, warranties, maintenance responsibilities, and other charges or penalties you may incur.'.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required by paragraphs (4) through (10) of subsection (a) shall be segregated from other information at the beginning of the rental-purchase agreement and shall contain only directly related information, and shall be identified in boldface, upper-case letters as follows: 'IMPORTANT RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES'.

"(c) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO INSURANCE PREMIUMS AND LIABILITY WAIVERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant shall clearly and conspicuously disclose in writing to the consumer before the consummation of a rental-purchase agreement that the purchase of leased property insurance or liability waiver coverage is not required as a condition for entering into the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) AFFIRMATIVE WRITTEN REQUEST AFTER COST DISCLOSURE.—A merchant may provide insurance or liability waiver coverage, directly or indirectly, in connection with a rental-purchase transaction only if—

"(A) the merchant clearly and conspicuously discloses to the consumer the cost of each component of such coverage before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(B) the consumer signs an affirmative written request for such coverage after receiving the disclosures required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph and paragraph (1).

REV_00162320

"(d) ACCURACY OF DISCLOSURE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The disclosures required to be made under subsection (a) shall be accurate as of the date the disclosures are made, based on the information available to the merchant.

"(2) INFORMATION SUBSEQUENTLY RENDERED INACCURATE.—If information required to be disclosed under subsection (a) is subsequently rendered inaccurate as a result of any agreement between the merchant and the consumer subsequent to the delivery of the required disclosures, the resulting inaccuracy shall not constitute a violation of this title.

"SEC. 1005. OTHER AGREEMENT PROVISIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each rental-purchase agreement shall—

"(1) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for loss, theft, damage, or destruction of the property;

"(2) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for maintaining or servicing the property, together with a brief description of the responsibility;

REV_00162321

"(3) provide that the consumer may terminate the agreement without paying any charges not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property that is the subject of the agreement upon expiration of any rental period;

"(4) contain a provision for reinstatement of the agreement, which at a minimum—

"(A) permits a consumer who fails to make a timely rental payment to reinstate the agreement, without losing any rights or options which exist under the agreement, by the payment of all past due rental payments and any other charges then due under the agreement and a payment for the next rental period within 7 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays monthly, or within 3 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays more frequently than monthly;

"(B) if the consumer returns or voluntarily surrenders the property covered by the agreement, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 60 days after the date of the return or surrender of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period;

"(C) if the consumer has paid 50 percent or more of the total cost necessary to acquire ownership and returns or voluntarily surrenders the property, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 120 days after the date of the return of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period; and

"(D) permits the consumer, upon reinstatement of the agreement to receive the same property, if available, that was the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, or if the same property is not available, a substitute item of comparable quality and condition may be provided to the consumer; except that, the Board

may, by regulation or order, exempt any independent small business (as defined by the Board by regulation) from the requirement of providing the same or comparable product during the extended reinstatement period provided in subparagraph (C), if the Board determines, taking into account such standards as the Board determines to be appropriate, that the reinstatement right provided in such subparagraph would provide excessive hardship for such independent small business.

''(5) provide a statement specifying the terms under which the consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement either by payment of the total cost to acquire ownership, as provided in section 1006, or by exercise of any early purchase option provided in the rental-purchase agreement;

''(6) provide a statement disclosing that if any part of a manufacturer's express warranty covers the property at the time the consumer acquires ownership of the property, the warranty will be transferred to the consumer if allowed by the terms of the warranty; and

"(7) provide, to the extent applicable, a description of any grace period for making any periodic payment, the amount of any security deposit, if any, to be paid by the consumer upon initiation of the rental-purchase agreement, and the terms for refund of such security deposit to the consumer upon return, surrender or purchase of the property.

"(b) REPOSSESSION DURING REINSTATEMENT PERIOD.—Subsection (a)(4) shall not be construed so as to prevent a merchant from attempting to repossess property during the reinstatement period pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(A), but such a repossession does not affect the consumer's right to reinstate.

"SEC. 1006. RIGHT TO ACQUIRE OWNERSHIP.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and the rental-purchase agreement shall terminate, upon compliance by the consumer with the requirements of subsection (b) or any early payment option provided in the rental purchase agreement, and upon payment of any past due payments and fees, as permitted in regulation by the Board.

"(b) PAYMENT OF TOTAL COST.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the rental property upon payment of the total cost of the rental-purchase agreement, as such term is defined in section 1001(17), and as disclosed to the consumer in the rental-purchase agreement pursuant to section 1004(a).

"(c) ADDITIONAL FEES PROHIBITED.—A merchant shall not require the consumer to pay, as a condition for acquiring ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, any fee or charge in addition to, or in excess of, the regular periodic payments required by subsection (b), or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as applicable. A requirement that the consumer pay an unpaid late charge or other fee or charge which the merchant has previously billed to the consumer shall not constitute an additional fee or charge for purposes of this subsection.

"(d) TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP RIGHTS.—Upon payment by the consumer of all payments necessary to acquire ownership under subsection (b) or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as appropriate, the merchant shall—

"(1) deliver, or mail to the consumer's last known address, such documents or other instruments, which the Board has determined by regulation, are necessary to acknowledge full ownership by the consumer of the property acquired pursuant to the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(2) transfer to the consumer the unexpired portion of any warranties provided by the manufacturer, distributor, or seller of the property, which shall apply as if the consumer were the original purchaser of the property, except where such transfer is prohibited by the terms of the warranty.

"SEC. 1007. PROHIBITED PROVISIONS.

"A rental-purchase agreement may not contain—

"(1) a confession of judgment;

"(2) a negotiable instrument;

"(3) a security interest or any other claim of a property interest in any goods, except those goods the use of which is provided by the merchant pursuant to the agreement;

"(4) a wage assignment;

"(5) a provision requiring the waiver of any legal claim or remedy created by this title or other provision of Federal or State law;

"(6) a provision requiring the consumer, in the event the property subject to the rental-purchase agreement is lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, to pay an amount in excess of the least of—

"(A) the fair market value of the property, as determined by the Board in regulation;

REV_00162327

"(B) any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement; or

"(C) the actual cost of repair, as appropriate;

"(7) a provision authorizing the merchant, or a person acting on behalf of the merchant, to enter the consumer's dwelling or other premises without obtaining the consumer's consent or to commit any breach of the peace in connection with the repossession of the rental property or the collection of any obligation or alleged obligation of the consumer arising out of the rental-purchase agreement;

"(8) a provision requiring the purchase of insurance or liability damage waiver to cover the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, except as permitted by the Board in regulation;

"(9) a provision requiring the consumer to pay more than 1 late fee or charge for an unpaid or delinquent periodic payment, regardless of the period in which the payment remains unpaid or delinquent, or to pay a late fee or charge for any periodic payment because a previously assessed late fee has not been paid in full.

REV_00162328

"SEC. 1008. STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

"Upon request of a consumer, a merchant shall provide a statement of the consumer's account. If a consumer requests a statement for an individual account more than 4 times in any 12-month period, the merchant may charge a reasonable fee for the additional statements.

"SEC. 1009. RENEGOTIATIONS AND EXTENSIONS.

"(a) RENEGOTIATIONS.—A renegotiation occurs when a rental-purchase agreement is satisfied and replaced by a new agreement undertaken by the same consumer. A renegotiation requires new disclosures, except as provided in subsection (c).

"(b) EXTENSIONS.—An extension is an agreement by the consumer and the merchant, to continue an existing rental-purchase agreement beyond the original end of the payment schedule, but does not include a continuation that is the result of a renegotiation.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—New disclosures are not required for the following, even if they meet the definition of a renegotiation or an extension:

"(1) A reduction in payments.

"(2) A deferment of 1 or more payments.

"(3) The extension of a rental-purchase agreement.

"(4) The substitution of property with property that has a substantially equivalent or greater economic value provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

REV_00162329

"(5) The deletion of property in a multiple-item agreement.

"(6) A change in rental period provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(7) An agreement resulting from a court proceeding.

"(8) Any other event described in regulations prescribed by the Board.

"SEC. 1010. POINT-OF-RENTAL DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For any item of property or set of items displayed or offered for rental-purchase, the merchant shall display on or next to the item or set of items a card, tag, or label that clearly and conspicuously discloses the following:

"(1) A brief description of the property.

"(2) Whether the property is new or used.

"(3) The cash price of the property.

"(4) The amount of each rental payment.

"(5) The total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property.

"(6) The rental-purchase cost.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—

REV_00162330

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant may make the disclosure required by subsection (a) in the form of a list or catalog which is readily available to the consumer at the point of rental if the merchandise is not displayed in the merchant's showroom or if displaying a card, tag, or label would be impractical due to the size of the merchandise.

"(2) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1011. RENTAL-PURCHASE ADVERTISING.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If an advertisement for a rental-purchase transaction refers to or states the amount of any payment for any specific item or set of items, the merchant making the advertisement shall also clearly and conspicuously state in the advertisement the following for the item, or set of items, advertised:

"(1) The transaction advertised is a rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) The amount, timing, and total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership under the rental-purchase agreement.

REV_00162331

"(3) The amount of the rental-purchase cost.

"(4) To acquire ownership of the property the consumer must pay the rental-purchase cost plus applicable taxes.

"(5) Whether the stated payment amount and advertised rental-purchase cost is for new or used property.

"(b) PROHIBITION.—An advertisement for a rental-purchase agreement shall not state or imply that a specific item, or set of items, is available at specific amounts or terms unless the merchant usually and customarily offers, or will offer, the item or set of items at the stated amounts or terms.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that required disclosures shall be presented in a type, size, shade, contrast, prominence, location, and manner, as applicable to different mediums for advertising, so as to be readily noticeable and comprehensible to the ordinary consumer.

"(2) REGULATORY GUIDANCE.—The Board shall prescribe regulations on principles and factors to meet the clear and conspicuous standard as appropriate to print, video, audio, and computerized advertising, reflecting the principles and factors typically applied in each medium by the Federal Trade Commission.

"(3) LIMITATION.—Nothing contrary to, inconsistent with, or in mitigation of, the required disclosures shall be used in any advertisement in any medium, and no audio, video, or print technique shall be used that is likely to obscure or detract significantly from the communication of the disclosures.

"SEC. 1012. CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in section 1013, any merchant who fails to comply with any requirement of this title with respect to any consumer is liable to such consumer as provided for leases in section 130. For purposes of this section, the term 'creditor' as used in section 130 shall include a 'merchant', as defined in section 1001.

"(b) JURISDICTION OF COURTS; LIMITATION ON ACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 130(e), any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date the last payment was made by the consumer under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) RECOUPMENT OR SET-OFF.—This subsection shall not bar a consumer from asserting a violation of this title in an action to collect an obligation arising from a rental-purchase agreement, which was brought after the end of the 1-year period described in paragraph (1) as a matter of defense by recoupment or set-off in such action, except as otherwise provided by State law.

"SEC. 1013. ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) INDIVIDUAL CASES WITH ACTUAL DAMAGES.—Any merchant who fails to comply with any requirements imposed under section 1010 or 1011 with respect to any consumer who suffers actual damage from the violation shall be liable to such consumer as provided in section 130.

"(b) PATTERN OR PRACTICE OF VIOLATIONS.—If a merchant engages in a pattern or practice of violating any requirement imposed under section 1010 or 1011, the Federal Trade Commission or an appropriate State attorney general, in accordance with section 1016, may initiate an action to enforce sanctions against the merchant, including—

REV_00162334

"(1) an order to cease and desist from such practices; and

"(2) a civil money penalty of such amount as the court may impose, based on such factors as the court may determine to be appropriate.

"SEC. 1014. LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES.

"(a) ASSIGNEES INCLUDED.—For purposes of section 1013, and this section, the term 'merchant' includes an assignee of a merchant.

"(b) LIABILITIES OF ASSIGNEES.—

"(1) APPARENT VIOLATION.—An action under section 1012 or 1013 for a violation of this title may be brought against an assignee only if the violation is apparent on the face of the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"(2) APPARENT VIOLATION DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, a violation that is apparent on the face of a rental-purchase agreement includes, but is not limited to, a disclosure that can be determined to be incomplete or inaccurate from the face of the agreement.

"(3) INVOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.—An assignee has no liability in a case in which the assignment is involuntary.

REV_00162335

"(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No provision of this section shall be construed as limiting or altering the liability under section 1012 or 1013 of a merchant assigning a rental-purchase agreement.

"(b) PROOF OF DISCLOSURE.—In an action by or against an assignee, the consumer's written acknowledgment of receipt of a disclosure, made as part of the rental-purchase agreement, shall be conclusive proof that the disclosure was made, if the assignee had no knowledge that the disclosure had not been made when the assignee acquired the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"SEC. 1015. REGULATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, to prevent its circumvention, and to facilitate compliance with its requirements.

"(b) MODEL DISCLOSURE FORMS.—The Board may publish model disclosure forms and clauses for common rental-purchase agreements to facilitate compliance with the disclosure requirements of this title and to aid the consumer in understanding the transaction by utilizing readily understandable language to simplify the technical nature of the disclosures. In devising such forms, the Board shall consider the use by merchants of data processing or similar automated equipment. Nothing in this title may be construed to require a merchant to use any such model form or clause prescribed by the Board under this section. A merchant shall be deemed to be in compliance with the requirement to provide disclosure under section 1003(a) if the merchant—

"(1) uses any appropriate model form or clause as published by the Board; or

"(2) uses any such model form or clause and changes it by—

"(A) deleting any information which is not required by this title; or

"(B) rearranging the format, if in making such deletion or rearranging the format, the merchant does not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure.

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE OF REGULATIONS.—Any regulation prescribed by the Board, or any amendment or interpretation thereof, shall not be effective before the October 1 that follows the date of publication of the regulation in final form by at least 6 months. The Board may at its discretion lengthen that period of time to permit merchants to adjust to accommodate new requirements. The Board may also shorten that period of time, notwithstanding the first sentence, if it makes a specific finding that such action is necessary to comply with the findings of a court or to prevent unfair or deceptive practices. In any case, merchants may comply with any newly prescribed disclosure requirement prior to its effective date.

"SEC. 1016. ENFORCEMENT.

"(a) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.), and a violation of any requirements imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements of this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional test in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"(b) STATE ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An action to enforce the requirements imposed by this title may also be brought by the appropriate State attorney general in any appropriate United States district court, or any other court of competent jurisdiction.

"(2) PRIOR WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The State attorney general shall provide prior written notice of any such civil action to the Federal Trade Commission and shall provide the Commission with a copy of the complaint.

REV_00162338

"(B) EMERGENCY ACTION.—If prior notice is not feasible, the State attorney general shall provide notice to the Commission immediately upon instituting the action.

"(3) FTC INTERVENTION.—The Commission may—

"(A) intervene in the action;

"(B) upon intervening—

"(i) remove the action to the appropriate United States district court, if it was not originally brought there; and

"(ii) be heard on all matters arising in the action; and

"(C) file a petition for appeal.

"SEC. 1017. CRIMINAL LIABILITY FOR WILLFUL AND KNOWING VIOLATION.

"Whoever willfully and knowingly gives false or inaccurate information or fails to provide information which he is required to disclose under the provisions of this title or any regulation issued thereunder shall be subject to the penalty provisions as provided in section 112.

REV_00162339

"SEC. 1018. RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.

"(a) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) NO EFFECT ON CONSISTENT STATE LAWS.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), this title does not annul, alter, or affect in any manner the meaning, scope or applicability of the laws of any State relating to rental-purchase agreements, except to the extent those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF INCONSISTENCY.—Upon its own motion or upon the request of an interested party, which is submitted in accordance with procedures prescribed in regulations of the Board, the Board shall determine whether any such inconsistency exists. If the Board determines that a term or provision of a State law is inconsistent, merchants located in that State need not follow such term or provision and shall incur no liability under the law of that State for failure to follow such term or provision, notwithstanding that such determination is subsequently amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"(3) GREATER PROTECTION UNDER STATE LAW.—Except as provided in subsection (b), for purposes of this section, a term or provision of a State law is not inconsistent with the provisions of this title if the term or provision affords greater protection and benefit to the consumer than the protection and benefit provided under this title as determined by the Board, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party.

"(b) STATE LAWS RELATING TO CHARACTERIZATION OF TRANSACTION.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), this title shall supersede any State law to the extent that such law—

"(1) regulates a rental-purchase agreement as a security interest, credit sale, retail installment sale, conditional sale or any other form of consumer credit, or that imputes to a rental-purchase agreement the creation of a debt or extension of credit, or

"(2) requires the disclosure of a percentage rate calculation, including a time-price differential, an annual percentage rate, or an effective annual percentage rate.

"(c) RELATION TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT.—No provision of this title shall be construed as limiting, superseding, or otherwise affecting the applicability of the Federal Trade Commission Act to any merchant or rental-purchase transaction.

REV_00162341

"SEC. 1019. EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

"No civil liability or criminal penalty under this title may be imposed on the United States or any of its departments or agencies, any State or political subdivision, or any agency of a State or political subdivision.

"SEC. 1020. COMPLIANCE DATE.

"Compliance with this title shall not be required until 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act. In any case, merchants may comply with this title at any time after such date of enactment.".

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF

DANIEL L. COOPER,

UNDER SECRETARY FOR BENEFITS,

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS,

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify today on several bills of great interest to veterans.

H.R. 241

H.R. 241, the "Veterans Beneficiary Fairness Act of 2003," would eliminate a discrepancy regarding the limitation on the period for which retroactive benefits due and unpaid a claimant may be paid to others after the claimant's death. In the interest of fairness, we support enactment of this bill.

Under 38 U.S.C. § 5121, periodic monetary benefits to which an individual was entitled at death under existing ratings or decisions or based on evidence on file with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) at the time of death are paid upon the death of the individual to specified classes of survivors according to a prescribed order of preference. Prior to a recent court decision, VA had construed section 5121 to limit the payment of any benefits under that section to the retroactive period specified in the statute, regardless of whether the payment was based on an existing rating or decision or on evidence on file at the date of death. The retroactive payment period, originally one year, was extended to two years by Public Law 104-275, the "Veterans' Benefits Improvements Act of 1996."

On December 10, 2002, the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC) issued its decision in Bonny v. Principi, 16 Vet. App. 504 (2002). In that decision, the court held that 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) specifies two kinds of benefits: benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, and benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the file at the time of death. The court held that, in the case of the first type of benefits, the statute requires that an eligible survivor is to receive the entire amount of the award; only the latter type of "accrued" benefits is subject to the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a). The court based its interpretation of the statute primarily on the punctuation of section 5121(a).

The CAVC's Bonny decision has resulted in differing entitlements under section 5121 based on the status of the deceased's claim at the time of his or her death. H.R. 241 would eliminate this distinction by amending section 5121 to eliminate the two-year limitation on payment of retroactive benefits for all classes of beneficiaries under that statute.

The distinction the Bonny decision draws between the two categories of claimants—those whose claims had been approved and those whose entitlement had yet to be recognized when they died—is really one without a difference. In either case, a claimant's estate is deprived of the value of benefits for which he or she was, in life, eligible. H.R. 241 would remove this inequitable distinction, and we support its enactment.

We estimate the cost of complying with the Bonny decision for fiscal year (FY) 2004 to be $ 1.7 million and $18.2 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate the incremental cost to implement H.R. 241, that is, the difference between the cost of complying with the court's decision and the cost of enactment of H.R. 241, to be $5.9 million for FY 2004 and $65.8 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013.

In addition, we note one technical change needed in H.R. 241 should it be enacted. The comma in current section 5121(a) following "existing ratings or decisions" should be deleted to clarify, for purposes of 38 U.S.C. §§ 5121(b) and (c) and 5122, that the term "accrued benefits" includes both benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, as well as benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the veteran's file at the time of death.

REV_00162350

H.R. 533

H.R. 533, the "Agent Orange Veterans' Disabled Children's Benefits Act of 2003," would amend chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize VA to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to a person suffering from spina bifida who is natural child, regardless of age or marital status, of a parent who performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service," if the person was conceived after such service. A parent would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if, while performing active military, naval, or air service, he or she "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period during which such agent was used in that area; or . . . otherwise was exposed to a Vietnam-era herbicide agent." The term "Vietnam-era herbicide agent" would be defined by reference to current 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(3). VA does not support this bill.

Congress has repeatedly acted since 1979 to ensure that the Federal Government investigates the health effects of exposure to herbicides containing dioxin and compensates veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era and suffered disability as a result of that exposure. Because of the "concern and apprehension among veterans regarding the health effects of herbicides," Congress mandated an epidemiologic study by VA of the effects of exposure to dioxin in the Veterans Health Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1979. Congress also required VA to review and scientifically analyze literature relating to possible long-term health effects of human exposure to dioxin. In 1981, Congress authorized VA to provide hospital and nursing home care to certain veterans exposed during service to dioxin or ionizing radiation for conditions which, although not shown to have resulted from such exposure, are not found to have resulted from a cause other than such exposure. The Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act of 1984 directed VA to issue regulations to establish guidelines and, where appropriate, standards and criteria for the resolution of benefit claims based on exposure to herbicides containing dioxin in service in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The act also required VA to make specific findings, either positive or negative, regarding service connection as to three diseases, chloracne, porphyria cutanea tarda, and soft-tissue sarcoma.

In 1991, Congress added section 1116 (formerly section 316) to title 38, United States Code, establishing a presumption of service connection, applicable to veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, for three diseases. The act also called for VA to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to perform a review and evaluation of the scientific evidence regarding the association between disease and exposure to herbicides used in connection with the Vietnam War and each disease suspected of association with such exposure. Congress amended section 1116 in 1994 and 2001 by adding five conditions to the list of diseases presumed to be service connected in Vietnam veterans.

More recently, Congress has enacted legislation to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to the children of Vietnam veterans who were born with spina bifida, as well as to children with certain other birth defects who are the natural children of women veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

Congress' legislative enactments indicate its recognition of the unique circumstances of service in Vietnam—circumstances including the special sacrifices made by veterans of that war, and the great uncertainties regarding exposures of individual veterans to aerially applied herbicides. H.R. 533 would extend benefits Congress bestowed upon the affected children of those veterans to children of veterans who did not serve under those circumstances. In addition, H.R. 533's language is so vague as to be almost impossible to administer. Under that language, an individual would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if he or she, while performing active service, "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period when such agent was used in that area." The vagueness of the terms "area," "was used," and "during a period when" is sure to generate substantial litigation over what Congress intended by this language.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 533 would result in PAYGO costs of $60.8 million in FY 2004 and $760.7 million over the ten-year period FY 2004-2013. In addition, VA estimates administrative costs of $357,000 for FY 2004 and $ 1.73 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 761

Mr. Chairman, you also requested our comments on two proposals that would affect the Specially Adapted Housing program authorized by chapter 21 of title 38, United States Code. Under current law, veterans who are entitled to compensation for certain permanent and total service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 of title 38 are eligible for a grant to adapt their homes with features made necessary by the nature of their disabilities.

The first proposal, Mr. Chairman, is H.R. 761, the "Disabled Servicemembers Adapted Housing Assistance Act of 2003," which would permit VA to provide Specially Adapted Housing assistance to disabled members of the Armed Forces who remain on active duty pending medical separation. VA favors enactment of H.R. 761.

This bill would permit members of the Armed Forces with the service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 to apply for Specially Adapted Housing benefits and permit VA to process their applications and award benefits without having to wait for the servicemembers to be released from active duty. H.R. 761 could provide some affected veterans the opportunity to move into an adapted home as soon as they are separated from active duty, or at least much sooner than is possible under current law. With this accelerated determination of eligibility and assistance, veterans could avoid continued institutional care, thus improving their quality of life and increasing their independence. This could also reduce the cost to VA of in-patient healthcare for some affected veterans.

Because Specially Adapted Housing grants are a one-time-only benefit, the enactment of this measure should not materially increase either the total number of grants provided under this program or the dollar amount of such grants. Rather, H.R. 761 would merely accelerate the payment of this benefit to certain individuals who, under current law, would become entitled to the same benefit upon their release from active duty. Accordingly, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 761 would produce insignificant costs or savings.

H.R. 1048

Specially Adapted Housing

The other Specially Adapted Housing proposal is contained in section 2 of H.R. 1048, the "Disabled Veterans Adaptive Benefits Improvement Act of 2003." This section would increase the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grants. VA favors such increases, provided offsetting savings may be found.

Under H.R. 1048, the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grant authorized by section 2101(a) would be increased from $48,000 to $50,000. In addition, the maximum Special Housing Adaptations grant authorized by section 2101(b) would be increased from $9,250 to $10,000. These grants were last increased by Public Law 107-103, enacted December 27, 2001. Increases in the cost of construction since then justify increasing these important benefits.

VA estimates that approximately 600 veterans per year will receive specially adapted housing assistance, of which about 92.5 percent will qualify for the grant authorized by section 2101(a). VA estimates the cost of enacting section 2 of H.R. 1048 would be $1.14 million per year, with a total 10-year cost of $11.4 million.

REV_00162355

Assistance for Automobile and Adaptive Equipment

Section 3 of H.R. 1048 would increase from $9,000 to $11,000 the maximum amount that VA may pay under 38 U.S.C. § 3902(a) to provide or assist in providing an automobile or other conveyance to eligible persons. VA supports enactment of this provision.

The maximum automobile allowance was last increased to the current $9,000 by Public Law 107-103 in 2001. An increase since then in the cost of obtaining automobiles and in the cost of adapting them justifies increasing this benefit so as to preserve its value to deserving veterans.

VA estimates the total benefits cost of both provisions of H.R. 1048 would be $3.3 million for FY 2004 and $33.3 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 850

Special Compensation for Former Prisoners of War

Section 2 of H.R. 850, the "Former Prisoners of War Compensation Act of 2003," would add a new subchapter at the end of chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize special compensation for former prisoners of war (POWs). This special compensation would be separate from any service-connected disability compensation or pension to which a former POW may be entitled and is exempted from attachment, execution, or levy in the same manner as special pension paid to recipients of the Medal of Honor pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1562(c). The bill would direct the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to pay monthly to each former POW, including active duty personnel, special compensation at a rate of payment determined by the cumulative length of confinement or internment as a POW. Thirty days would be the minimum period of confinement for which a former POW would be eligible to receive special compensation. The bill would establish three rates of special compensation based on the length of the period of the former POW's detainment or interment, as follows:

Length of Former POW's Detainment or Interment	Special Compensation Monthly Rate
30-120 days	$150
121-540 days	$300
541 days or more	$450

In the past, former POWs have been entitled to receive a modest lump-sum cash payment, based on their length of internment. Pursuant to the War Claims Act of 1948, codified as amended at 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005 (2001), and subsequent amendments, former POWs were entitled to receive a lump sum payment of up to $2.50 per day for World War II veterans, $2.50 per day for Korea veterans, and $5.00 per day for Vietnam veterans.[1] Compensation for former POWs is otherwise limited to the service-connected disability compensation administered by VA pursuant to title 38, United States Code.

[1] Pursuant to 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005, WW II veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (b)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (d)); Korea veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (e)(2)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (e)(3)); Vietnam veterans were eligible to receive up to $2 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (f)(2)) and $3.00 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (f)(3)).

We estimate that approximately 39,029 former POWs are still living. Of that population, 13,631 (34.9%) receive disability compensation, with over half of those rated at 50% disabling or less. The typical former POW is 81 years old, and 88% of all living former POWs were interned during World War II. The following table summarizes basic demographic data for former POWs:

	WWII Europe	WWII Pacific	Korea	Vietnam	Gulf War	Total for All Wars
Number Alive on 1/1/03	29,675	4,477	2,264	595	21	39,029[2]
Average Age[3]	80	84	72	64	39	81
Average Length of Captivity[4]	11.5 mos.	39 mos.	24 mos.	56 mos.	1 mo.	16.5 mos.

We estimate that benefit-costs for the POW portion of the bill would be $139.6 million for FY 2004 and $1.1 billion for FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate administrative costs to be an additional one-time cost of $632 thousand in the first year. These amounts are not included in the President's FY 2004 budget request, and the Department cannot support this provision's enactment.

Prohibition Against Compensation for Substance-Abuse Disabilities

Section 3(a) of H.R. 850 would amend 38 U.S.C. §§ 1110 and 1131 to clarify that the prohibition on payment of compensation for a disability that is a result of the veteran's own abuse of alcohol or drugs applies even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability. Section 3(b) would make that amendment applicable to claims filed on or after the date of enactment and to claims filed prior to, but not finally decided as of that date. We strongly support this provision, which is also proposed in the President's budget.

Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, authorize the payment of compensation for disability resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service, during a period of war or during other than a period of war, respectively. Sections 1110 and 1131 also currently provide, "but no compensation shall be paid if the disability is a result of the veteran's own willful misconduct or abuse of alcohol or drugs." Before their amendment in 1990, the provisions currently codified in sections 1110 and 1131 prohibited compensation "if the disability is the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct." In 1990, they were amended to also prohibit compensation if the disability is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse.

VA had long interpreted those provisions to authorize compensation not only for disability immediately resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in service, but also for disability more remotely resulting from such injury or disease. That interpretation is embodied in 38 C.F.R. § 3.310(a), which provides that, generally, disability which is proximately due to or the result of a service-connected disease or injury shall be service connected. Thus, VA does pay, in specific cases, compensation for primary service-connected disability and for secondary service-connected disability. However, consistent with the plain meaning of sections 1110 and 1131, if a disability, whether primary or secondary, is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse, VA did not pay compensation.

This has changed. On February 2, 2001, a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit interpreted section 1110 as allowing compensation for an alcohol or drug-abuse-related disability arising secondarily from a service-connected disability. Allen v. Principi, 237 F.3d 1368, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2001). More specifically, the panel held that section 1110 "does not preclude compensation for an alcohol or drug abuse disability secondary to a service-connected disability or use of an alcohol or drug abuse disability as evidence of the increased severity of a service-connected disability." Id. at 1381. The Government filed a petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which the panel and full court denied on October 16, 2001. Allen v. Principi, 268 F.3d 1340, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2001). However, five of the eleven judges who considered the petition for rehearing en banc dissented from the order denying rehearing, opining that the court's interpretation is wrong. 268 F.3d at 1341-42.

We are concerned that payment of additional compensation based on the abuse of alcohol or drugs is contrary to congressional intent and is not in veterans' best interests because it removes an incentive to refrain from debilitating and self-destructive behavior.

The Federal Circuit's interpretation in Allen could also greatly increase the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities. Under the court's interpretation, any veteran with a service-connected disability who abuses alcohol or drugs is potentially eligible for an increased amount of compensation if he or she can offer evidence that the substance abuse is a result of a service-connected disability, i.e., that the substance abuse is a way of coping with the pain or loss the disability causes. Under this interpretation, alcohol or drug abuse disabilities that are secondary to either physical or mental disorders are compensable.

The potential for increased costs is illustrated by mental disorders, which are frequently associated with alcohol and drug abuse. Almost 421,000 veterans are currently receiving compensation for a service-connected mental disability. About 324,000 of those disabilities are currently rated less than 100 percent and could potentially be rated totally disabling on the basis of secondary alcohol or drug abuse. Even if the service connection of disability from alcohol or drug abuse does not result in an increased schedular evaluation, temporary total evaluations could be assigned whenever a veteran is hospitalized for more than twenty-one days for treatment or observation related to the abuse. Even the 97,000 cases of a service-connected mental disability evaluated at 100 percent disabling have potential for increased compensation for secondary alcohol or drug abuse if the statutory criteria for special monthly compensation are met.

The potential increase in compensation does not end there. Under the Federal Circuit's interpretation, VA is required to pay compensation for the secondary effects of the abuse of alcohol or drugs. Once alcohol or drug abuse is service connected as being secondary to another service-connected disability, then service connection can be established for any disability that is a result of the service-connected abuse of alcohol or drugs. If alcohol or drug abuse results in a disease, such as cirrhosis of the liver, then that disease would also be service connected and provide a basis for compensation under the court's interpretation.

Of course, an increase in the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities will increase the benefit cost of the compensation program. Section 3 of H.R. 850 would avoid those increased costs. Our estimate of savings that would result from enactment of this provision is based on the payment of only basic compensation for alcohol or drug abuse disabilities secondary to service-connected disabilities. We estimate that this provision would result in benefit cost savings of $127 million and administrative cost savings of $44 million in FY 2004 and benefit cost savings of $4.6 billion and administrative cost savings of $97 million for the ten-year period FY 2004 through FY 2013. This amount does not include the savings that would be associated with payment of compensation for temporary total evaluations, special monthly compensation, or compensation for the secondary effects of alcohol or drug abuse.

Dental Care for Former Prisoners of War

Section 4 of H.R. 850 would require VA to provide outpatient dental services and treatment, and related dental appliances, for any non-service-connected dental condition or disability from which a veteran who is a former POW is suffering. Currently, a veteran who is a former POW may receive dental benefits for non-service-connected dental conditions or disabilities only if the veteran was incarcerated for 90 days or more. By eliminating the 90-day requirement, section 4 would authorize VA to treat all former POWs the same, regardless of their length of captivity, with respect to dental care for a non-service-connected condition or disability. It would also make the eligibility rules for dental benefits for former POWs the same as for other health-care services for former POWs.

VA has strongly supported similar provisions in the past, and we continue our strong support for this provision. We believe this amendment is needed to ensure that former POWs receive all needed care for conditions that may be attributable to the privations of their service.

Costs resulting from enactment of this provision would be insignificant.

H.R. 966

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 966, the "Disabled Veterans' Return-to-Work Act of 2003," would amend provisions of 38 U.S.C. § 1524 to reinstate a program of vocational training for certain pension recipients that was in place between February 1, 1985, and December 31, 1995. That temporary program, established pursuant to the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-543, required the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible in the case of certain veterans awarded pension during the program period. If the achievement of such a goal was found to be feasible, these veterans were offered the opportunity to pursue programs of vocational training consisting of vocationally oriented and other services and assistance of the same kind provided under the vocational rehabilitation program authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code. These services and assistance did not include subsistence allowances, loans, or automobile adaptive equipment. Once a program of training was completed, a veteran could also receive employment assistance. The law limited the number of evaluations to be performed to not more than 3,500 veterans during any 12-month period. The initial program period ran from February 1, 1985, to January 31, 1992.

Initially, the law required that a veteran under the age of 50 who was awarded pension during the program period be evaluated with respect to his or her potential for rehabilitation. It required that the evaluation include a personal interview by a VA employee trained in vocational counseling. If the veteran refused to participate in the evaluation, his or her pension was suspended until he or she participated in an evaluation. Subsequent participation in the vocational training itself was voluntary. For a veteran pension recipient 50 years of age or older, the program of vocational training was totally voluntary. If, upon application by such a veteran-pensioner, VA made a preliminary finding on the basis of information in the application that, with the assistance of a vocational training program, the veteran had good potential for achieving employment, VA was authorized, upon the veteran's request, to evaluate the veteran to further determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible.

In 1992, Public Law 102-562 eliminated the limitation on the number of program participants who may be evaluated annually and amended the program for veterans under age 45, rather than under age 50, who were awarded pension during the program period so as to (A) require the Secretary, based on information on file with VA, to make a preliminary finding whether the veteran, with the assistance of a VA vocational training program, had a good potential for achieving employment; (B) if that potential was found to exist, required the Secretary to solicit from the veteran an application for VA vocational training; and (C) if the veteran applied for training, required the Secretary to provide an evaluation to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible. In addition, the program was opened to veterans age 45 and older who had been awarded pension before the program period. That Public Law also extended the program ending date until December 31, 1995. No further action was taken by Congress, and by operation of law, the program ended on December 31, 1995.

During the period February 1, 1985, through January 31, 1989, VA evaluated approximately 9,468 veterans under the program. Of these, 2,838 were found to be feasible for training. Some 468 veterans participated in programs of vocational training. Sixty-five veterans completed that training. Fifty-eight obtained employment. Between fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1992, VA conducted 9,140 evaluations under the program, with 937 veterans participating in training.

H.R. 966 would reinstate the program and provide that a new program period would run for five years beginning on the date of enactment of the Act. In addition, it would require the Secretary to ensure that the availability of vocational training under section 1524 be made known through a variety of means, including the Internet and announcements in VA publications and other veterans' publications. Finally, the bill would require the Secretary, within two years after the date of enactment of the Act, to report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House on the operation of the program to include an evaluation of the vocational training provided and an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of the training provided, as well as data on the entered-employment rate of veterans pursuing such training.

If H.R. 966 were to be enacted, we estimate that VA would conduct approximately 1,300 record reviews each year, based on new accessions to the pension rolls, to determine whether each veteran so evaluated has good potential for achieving employment. We estimate that the achievement of a vocational goal will be determined to be feasible in about 1/3 (433) of those cases. Of that number, it is estimated that approximately 1/3 of these, 144 veterans, will actually end up participating in the program. In addition, because the program is also available to veterans over age 45 on a voluntary basis, we estimate that an additional 25 participants may participate, for a total of 169 cases per year. Based on those numbers, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 966 would cost $3 million for fiscal years 2004 through 2008 and an additional $3.6 million for fiscal years 2009 though 2013, totaling $6.6 million. Administrative costs associated with this bill are expected to be insignificant.

Mr. Chairman, given our experience in administering the temporary program during its ten-year duration, and the fact that only a small number of veterans benefited from the program, VA believes that the finite resources available to us for program administration would be best used to support our current program of vocational rehabilitation for service-disabled veterans, as authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, especially in light of the current combat activities in Iraq. Thus, the Department does not support the enactment of H.R. 966.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. I will be pleased to respond to any questions you or the members of the Subcommittee may have.

H. R. 850

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162378

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§ 1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162379

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162380

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 996

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 27, 2003

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (for himself, Mr. ROSS, and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services

---

A BILL

To amend the Consumer Credit Protection Act to assure meaningful disclosures of the terms of rental-purchase agreements, including disclosures of all costs to consumers under such agreements, to provide certain substantive rights to consumers under such agreements, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act".

REV_00162382

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) The rental-purchase industry provides a service that meets and satisfies the demands of many consumers.

(2) Each year, approximately 2,300,000 United States households enter into rental-purchase transactions and over a 5-year period approximately 4,900,000 United States households will do so.

(3) Competition among the various firms engaged in the extension of rental-purchase transactions would be strengthened by informed use of rental-purchase transactions.

(4) The informed use of rental-purchase transactions results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to assure the availability of rental-purchase transactions and to assure simple, meaningful, and consistent disclosure of rental-purchase terms so that consumers will be able to more readily compare the available rental-purchase terms and avoid uninformed use of rental-purchase transactions, and to protect consumers against unfair rental-purchase practices.

REV_00162383

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.

The Consumer Credit Protection Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE X—RENTAL-PURCHASE TRANSACTIONS

"Sec. 1001. Definitions.
"Sec. 1002. Exempted transactions.
"Sec. 1003. General disclosure requirements.
"Sec. 1004. Rental-purchase disclosures.

"Sec. 1006. Right to acquire ownership.
"Sec. 1007. Prohibited provisions.
"Sec. 1008. Statement of accounts.
"Sec. 1009. Renegotiations and extensions.
"Sec. 1010. Point-of-rental disclosures.
"Sec. 1011. Rental-purchase advertising.
"Sec. 1012. Civil liability.
"Sec. 1013. Additional grounds for civil liability.
"Sec. 1014. Liability of assignees.
"Sec. 1015. Regulations.
"Sec. 1016. Enforcement.
"Sec. 1017. Criminal liability for willful and knowing violation.
"Sec. 1018. Relation to other laws.
"Sec. 1019. Effect on government agencies.
"Sec. 1020. Compliance date.

"SEC. 1001. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) ADVERTISEMENT.—The term 'advertisement' means a commercial message in any medium that promotes, directly or indirectly, a rental-purchase agreement but does not include price tags, window signs, or other in-store merchandising aids.

"(2) AGRICULTURAL PURPOSE.—The term 'agricultural purpose' includes—

REV_00162384

"(A) the production, harvest, exhibition, marketing, transformation, processing, or manufacture of agricultural products by a natural person who cultivates plants or propagates or nurtures agricultural products; and

"(B) the acquisition of farmlands, real property with a farm residence, or personal property and services used primarily in farming.

"(3) BOARD.—The term 'Board' means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"(4) CASH PRICE.—The term 'cash price' means the price at which a merchant, in the ordinary course of business, offers to sell for cash the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase transaction.

"(5) CONSUMER.—The term 'consumer' means a natural person who is offered or enters into a rental-purchase agreement.

"(6) DATE OF CONSUMMATION.—The term 'date of consummation' means the date on which a consumer becomes contractually obligated under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(7) INITIAL PAYMENT.—The term 'initial payment' means the amount to be paid before or at the consummation of the agreement or the delivery of the property if delivery occurs after consummation, including the rental payment; service, processing, or administrative charges; delivery fee; refundable security deposit; taxes; mandatory fees or charges; and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

"(8) MERCHANT.—The term 'merchant' means a person who provides the use of property through a rental-purchase agreement in the ordinary course of business and to whom a consumer's initial payment under the agreement is payable.

"(9) PAYMENT SCHEDULE.—The term 'payment schedule' means the amount and timing of the periodic payments and the total number of all periodic payments that the consumer will make if the consumer acquires ownership of the property by making all periodic payments.

"(10) PERIODIC PAYMENT.—The term 'periodic payment' means the total payment a consumer will make for a specific rental period after the initial payment, including the rental payment, taxes, mandatory fees or charges, and any optional fees or charges agreed to by the consumer.

REV_00162386

"(11) PROPERTY.—The term 'property' means property that is not real property under the laws of the State where the property is located when it is made available under a rental-purchase agreement.

"(12) RENTAL PAYMENT.—The term 'rental payment' means rent required to be paid by a consumer for the possession and use of property for a specific rental period, but does not include taxes or any fees or charges.

"(13) RENTAL PERIOD.—The term 'rental period' means a week, month, or other specific period of time, during which the consumer has a right to possess and use property that is the subject of a rental-purchase agreement after paying the rental payment and any applicable taxes for such period.

"(14) RENTAL-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' means a contract in the form of a bailment or lease for the use of property by a consumer for an initial period of 4 months or less, that is renewable with each payment by the consumer, and that permits but does not obligate the consumer to become the owner of the property.

REV_00162387

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'rental-purchase agreement' does not include—

"(i) a credit sale (as defined in section 103(g) of the Truth in Lending Act);

"(ii) a consumer lease (as defined in section 181(1) of such Act); or

"(iii) a transaction giving rise to a debt incurred in connection with the business of lending money or a thing of value.

"(15) RENTAL-PURCHASE COST.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of sections 1010 and 1011, the term 'rental-purchase cost' means the sum of all rental payments and mandatory fees or charges imposed by the merchant as a condition of entering into a rental-purchase agreement or acquiring ownership of property under a rental-purchase agreement, such as the following:

"(i) Service, processing, or administrative charge.

"(ii) Fee for an investigation or credit report.

"(iii) Charge for delivery required by the merchant.

REV_00162388

"(B) EXCLUDED ITEMS.—The following fees or charges shall not be taken into account in determining the rental-purchase cost with respect to a rental-purchase transaction:

"(i) Fees and charges prescribed by law, which actually are or will be paid to public officials or government entities, such as sales tax.

"(ii) Fees and charges for optional products and services offered in connection with a rental-purchase agreement.

"(16) STATE.—The term 'State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, any territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

"(17) TOTAL COST.—The term 'total cost' means the sum of the initial payment and all periodic payments in the payment schedule to be paid by the consumer to acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement.

"SEC. 1002. EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS.

"This title shall not apply to rental-purchase agreements primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes, or those made with Government agencies or instrumentalities.

"SEC. 1003. GENERAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) RECIPIENT OF DISCLOSURE.—A merchant shall disclose to any person who will be a signatory to a rental-purchase agreement the information required by sections 1004 and 1005.

"(b) TIMING OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required under sections 1004 and 1005 shall be made before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement and clearly and conspicuously in writing as part of the rental-purchase agreement to be signed by the consumer.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall be worded plainly and simply, and appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be readily noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1004. RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For each rental-purchase agreement, the merchant shall disclose to the consumer the following, to the extent applicable:

"(1) The date of the consummation of the rental-purchase transaction and the identities of the merchant and the consumer.

REV_00162390

"(2) A brief description of the rental property, which shall be sufficient to identify the property to the consumer, including an identification or serial number, if applicable, and a statement indicating whether the property is new or used.

"(3) A description of any fee, charge or penalty, in addition to the periodic payment, that the consumer may be required to pay under the agreement, which shall be separately identified by type and amount.

"(4) A clear and conspicuous statement that the transaction is a rental-purchase agreement and that the consumer will not obtain ownership of the property until the consumer has paid the total dollar amount necessary to acquire ownership.

"(5) The amount of any initial payment, which includes the first periodic payment, and the total amount of any fees, taxes, or other charges, required to be paid by the consumer.

"(6) The amount of the cash price of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and, if the agreement involves the rental of 2 or more items as a set (as may be defined by the Board in regulation) a statement of the aggregate cash price of all items shall satisfy this requirement.

REV_00162391

"(7) The amount and timing of periodic payments, and the total number of periodic payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(8) The total cost, using that term, and a brief description, such as 'This is the amount you will pay the merchant if you make all periodic payments to acquire ownership of the property.'.

"(9) A statement of the consumer's right to terminate the agreement without paying any fee or charge not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property in good repair upon expiration of any lease term.

"(10) Substantially the following statement: 'OTHER IMPORTANT TERMS: See your rental-purchase agreement for additional important information on early termination procedures, purchase option rights, responsibilities for loss, damage or destruction of the property, warranties, maintenance responsibilities, and other charges or penalties you may incur.'.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—The disclosures required by paragraphs (4) through (10) of subsection (a) shall be segregated from other information at the beginning of the rental-purchase agreement and shall contain only directly related information, and shall be identified in boldface, upper-case letters as follows: 'IMPORTANT RENTAL-PURCHASE DISCLOSURES'.

"(c) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO INSURANCE PREMIUMS AND LIABILITY WAIVERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant shall clearly and conspicuously disclose in writing to the consumer before the consummation of a rental-purchase agreement that the purchase of leased property insurance or liability waiver coverage is not required as a condition for entering into the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) AFFIRMATIVE WRITTEN REQUEST AFTER COST DISCLOSURE.—A merchant may provide insurance or liability waiver coverage, directly or indirectly, in connection with a rental-purchase transaction only if—

"(A) the merchant clearly and conspicuously discloses to the consumer the cost of each component of such coverage before the consummation of the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(B) the consumer signs an affirmative written request for such coverage after receiving the disclosures required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph and paragraph (1).

REV_00162393

"(d) ACCURACY OF DISCLOSURE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The disclosures required to be made under subsection (a) shall be accurate as of the date the disclosures are made, based on the information available to the merchant.

"(2) INFORMATION SUBSEQUENTLY RENDERED INACCURATE.—If information required to be disclosed under subsection (a) is subsequently rendered inaccurate as a result of any agreement between the merchant and the consumer subsequent to the delivery of the required disclosures, the resulting inaccuracy shall not constitute a violation of this title.

"SEC. 1005. OTHER AGREEMENT PROVISIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each rental-purchase agreement shall—

"(1) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for loss, theft, damage, or destruction of the property;

"(2) provide a statement specifying whether the merchant or the consumer is responsible for maintaining or servicing the property, together with a brief description of the responsibility;

REV_00162394

"(3) provide that the consumer may terminate the agreement without paying any charges not previously due under the agreement by voluntarily surrendering or returning the property that is the subject of the agreement upon expiration of any rental period;

"(4) contain a provision for reinstatement of the agreement, which at a minimum—

"(A) permits a consumer who fails to make a timely rental payment to reinstate the agreement, without losing any rights or options which exist under the agreement, by the payment of all past due rental payments and any other charges then due under the agreement and a payment for the next rental period within 7 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays monthly, or within 3 business days after failing to make a timely rental payment if the consumer pays more frequently than monthly;

"(B) if the consumer returns or voluntarily surrenders the property covered by the agreement, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 60 days after the date of the return or surrender of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period;

"(C) if the consumer has paid 50 percent or more of the total cost necessary to acquire ownership and returns or voluntarily surrenders the property, other than through judicial process, during the applicable reinstatement period set forth in subparagraph (A), permits the consumer to reinstate the agreement during a period of at least 120 days after the date of the return of the property by the payment of all amounts previously due under the agreement, any applicable fees, and a payment for the next rental period; and

"(D) permits the consumer, upon reinstatement of the agreement to receive the same property, if available, that was the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, or if the same property is not available, a substitute item of comparable quality and condition may be provided to the consumer; except that, the Board

may, by regulation or order, exempt any independent small business (as defined by the Board by regulation) from the requirement of providing the same or comparable product during the extended reinstatement period provided in subparagraph (C), if the Board determines, taking into account such standards as the Board determines to be appropriate, that the reinstatement right provided in such subparagraph would provide excessive hardship for such independent small business.

''(5) provide a statement specifying the terms under which the consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement either by payment of the total cost to acquire ownership, as provided in section 1006, or by exercise of any early purchase option provided in the rental-purchase agreement;

''(6) provide a statement disclosing that if any part of a manufacturer's express warranty covers the property at the time the consumer acquires ownership of the property, the warranty will be transferred to the consumer if allowed by the terms of the warranty; and

"(7) provide, to the extent applicable, a description of any grace period for making any periodic payment, the amount of any security deposit, if any, to be paid by the consumer upon initiation of the rental-purchase agreement, and the terms for refund of such security deposit to the consumer upon return, surrender or purchase of the property.

"(b) REPOSSESSION DURING REINSTATEMENT PERIOD.—Subsection (a)(4) shall not be construed so as to prevent a merchant from attempting to repossess property during the reinstatement period pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(A), but such a repossession does not affect the consumer's right to reinstate.

"SEC. 1006. RIGHT TO ACQUIRE OWNERSHIP.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, and the rental-purchase agreement shall terminate, upon compliance by the consumer with the requirements of subsection (b) or any early payment option provided in the rental purchase agreement, and upon payment of any past due payments and fees, as permitted in regulation by the Board.

"(b) PAYMENT OF TOTAL COST.—The consumer shall acquire ownership of the rental property upon payment of the total cost of the rental-purchase agreement, as such term is defined in section 1001(17), and as disclosed to the consumer in the rental-purchase agreement pursuant to section 1004(a).

"(c) ADDITIONAL FEES PROHIBITED.—A merchant shall not require the consumer to pay, as a condition for acquiring ownership of the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, any fee or charge in addition to, or in excess of, the regular periodic payments required by subsection (b), or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as applicable. A requirement that the consumer pay an unpaid late charge or other fee or charge which the merchant has previously billed to the consumer shall not constitute an additional fee or charge for purposes of this subsection.

"(d) TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP RIGHTS.—Upon payment by the consumer of all payments necessary to acquire ownership under subsection (b) or any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement, as appropriate, the merchant shall—

"(1) deliver, or mail to the consumer's last known address, such documents or other instruments, which the Board has determined by regulation, are necessary to acknowledge full ownership by the consumer of the property acquired pursuant to the rental-purchase agreement; and

"(2) transfer to the consumer the unexpired portion of any warranties provided by the manufacturer, distributor, or seller of the property, which shall apply as if the consumer were the original purchaser of the property, except where such transfer is prohibited by the terms of the warranty.

"SEC. 1007. PROHIBITED PROVISIONS.

"A rental-purchase agreement may not contain—

"(1) a confession of judgment;

"(2) a negotiable instrument;

"(3) a security interest or any other claim of a property interest in any goods, except those goods the use of which is provided by the merchant pursuant to the agreement;

"(4) a wage assignment;

"(5) a provision requiring the waiver of any legal claim or remedy created by this title or other provision of Federal or State law;

"(6) a provision requiring the consumer, in the event the property subject to the rental-purchase agreement is lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, to pay an amount in excess of the least of—

"(A) the fair market value of the property, as determined by the Board in regulation;

REV_00162400

"(B) any early purchase option amount provided in the rental-purchase agreement; or

"(C) the actual cost of repair, as appropriate;

"(7) a provision authorizing the merchant, or a person acting on behalf of the merchant, to enter the consumer's dwelling or other premises without obtaining the consumer's consent or to commit any breach of the peace in connection with the repossession of the rental property or the collection of any obligation or alleged obligation of the consumer arising out of the rental-purchase agreement;

"(8) a provision requiring the purchase of insurance or liability damage waiver to cover the property that is the subject of the rental-purchase agreement, except as permitted by the Board in regulation;

"(9) a provision requiring the consumer to pay more than 1 late fee or charge for an unpaid or delinquent periodic payment, regardless of the period in which the payment remains unpaid or delinquent, or to pay a late fee or charge for any periodic payment because a previously assessed late fee has not been paid in full.

REV_00162401

"SEC. 1008. STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

"Upon request of a consumer, a merchant shall provide a statement of the consumer's account. If a consumer requests a statement for an individual account more than 4 times in any 12-month period, the merchant may charge a reasonable fee for the additional statements.

"SEC. 1009. RENEGOTIATIONS AND EXTENSIONS.

"(a) RENEGOTIATIONS.—A renegotiation occurs when a rental-purchase agreement is satisfied and replaced by a new agreement undertaken by the same consumer. A renegotiation requires new disclosures, except as provided in subsection (c).

"(b) EXTENSIONS.—An extension is an agreement by the consumer and the merchant, to continue an existing rental-purchase agreement beyond the original end of the payment schedule, but does not include a continuation that is the result of a renegotiation.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—New disclosures are not required for the following, even if they meet the definition of a renegotiation or an extension:

"(1) A reduction in payments.

"(2) A deferment of 1 or more payments.

"(3) The extension of a rental-purchase agreement.

"(4) The substitution of property with property that has a substantially equivalent or greater economic value provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(5) The deletion of property in a multiple-item agreement.

"(6) A change in rental period provided the rental-purchase cost does not increase.

"(7) An agreement resulting from a court proceeding.

"(8) Any other event described in regulations prescribed by the Board.

"SEC. 1010. POINT-OF-RENTAL DISCLOSURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For any item of property or set of items displayed or offered for rental-purchase, the merchant shall display on or next to the item or set of items a card, tag, or label that clearly and conspicuously discloses the following:

"(1) A brief description of the property.

"(2) Whether the property is new or used.

"(3) The cash price of the property.

"(4) The amount of each rental payment.

"(5) The total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership of the property.

"(6) The rental-purchase cost.

"(b) FORM OF DISCLOSURE.—

REV_00162403

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A merchant may make the disclosure required by subsection (a) in the form of a list or catalog which is readily available to the consumer at the point of rental if the merchandise is not displayed in the merchant's showroom or if displaying a card, tag, or label would be impractical due to the size of the merchandise.

"(2) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—As used in this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that information required to be disclosed to the consumer shall appear in a type size, prominence, and location as to be noticeable, readable, and comprehensible to an ordinary consumer.

"SEC. 1011. RENTAL-PURCHASE ADVERTISING.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If an advertisement for a rental-purchase transaction refers to or states the amount of any payment for any specific item or set of items, the merchant making the advertisement shall also clearly and conspicuously state in the advertisement the following for the item, or set of items, advertised:

"(1) The transaction advertised is a rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) The amount, timing, and total number of rental payments necessary to acquire ownership under the rental-purchase agreement.

REV_00162404

"(3) The amount of the rental-purchase cost.

"(4) To acquire ownership of the property the consumer must pay the rental-purchase cost plus applicable taxes.

"(5) Whether the stated payment amount and advertised rental-purchase cost is for new or used property.

"(b) PROHIBITION.—An advertisement for a rental-purchase agreement shall not state or imply that a specific item, or set of items, is available at specific amounts or terms unless the merchant usually and customarily offers, or will offer, the item or set of items at the stated amounts or terms.

"(c) CLEARLY AND CONSPICUOUSLY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'clearly and conspicuously' means that required disclosures shall be presented in a type, size, shade, contrast, prominence, location, and manner, as applicable to different mediums for advertising, so as to be readily noticeable and comprehensible to the ordinary consumer.

"(2) REGULATORY GUIDANCE.—The Board shall prescribe regulations on principles and factors to meet the clear and conspicuous standard as appropriate to print, video, audio, and computerized advertising, reflecting the principles and factors typically applied in each medium by the Federal Trade Commission.

"(3) LIMITATION.—Nothing contrary to, inconsistent with, or in mitigation of, the required disclosures shall be used in any advertisement in any medium, and no audio, video, or print technique shall be used that is likely to obscure or detract significantly from the communication of the disclosures.

"SEC. 1012. CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in section 1013, any merchant who fails to comply with any requirement of this title with respect to any consumer is liable to such consumer as provided for leases in section 130. For purposes of this section, the term 'creditor' as used in section 130 shall include a 'merchant', as defined in section 1001.

"(b) JURISDICTION OF COURTS; LIMITATION ON ACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 130(e), any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date the last payment was made by the consumer under the rental-purchase agreement.

"(2) RECOUPMENT OR SET-OFF.—This subsection shall not bar a consumer from asserting a violation of this title in an action to collect an obligation arising from a rental-purchase agreement, which was brought after the end of the 1-year period described in paragraph (1) as a matter of defense by recoupment or set-off in such action, except as otherwise provided by State law.

"SEC. 1013. ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR CIVIL LIABILITY.

"(a) INDIVIDUAL CASES WITH ACTUAL DAMAGES.—Any merchant who fails to comply with any requirements imposed under section 1010 or 1011 with respect to any consumer who suffers actual damage from the violation shall be liable to such consumer as provided in section 130.

"(b) PATTERN OR PRACTICE OF VIOLATIONS.—If a merchant engages in a pattern or practice of violating any requirement imposed under section 1010 or 1011, the Federal Trade Commission or an appropriate State attorney general, in accordance with section 1016, may initiate an action to enforce sanctions against the merchant, including—

REV_00162407

"(1) an order to cease and desist from such practices; and

"(2) a civil money penalty of such amount as the court may impose, based on such factors as the court may determine to be appropriate.

"SEC. 1014. LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES.

"(a) ASSIGNEES INCLUDED.—For purposes of section 1013, and this section, the term 'merchant' includes an assignee of a merchant.

"(b) LIABILITIES OF ASSIGNEES.—

"(1) APPARENT VIOLATION.—An action under section 1012 or 1013 for a violation of this title may be brought against an assignee only if the violation is apparent on the face of the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"(2) APPARENT VIOLATION DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, a violation that is apparent on the face of a rental-purchase agreement includes, but is not limited to, a disclosure that can be determined to be incomplete or inaccurate from the face of the agreement.

"(3) INVOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.—An assignee has no liability in a case in which the assignment is involuntary.

REV_00162408

"(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No provision of this section shall be construed as limiting or altering the liability under section 1012 or 1013 of a merchant assigning a rental-purchase agreement.

"(b) PROOF OF DISCLOSURE.—In an action by or against an assignee, the consumer's written acknowledgment of receipt of a disclosure, made as part of the rental-purchase agreement, shall be conclusive proof that the disclosure was made, if the assignee had no knowledge that the disclosure had not been made when the assignee acquired the rental-purchase agreement to which it relates.

"SEC. 1015. REGULATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, to prevent its circumvention, and to facilitate compliance with its requirements.

"(b) MODEL DISCLOSURE FORMS.—The Board may publish model disclosure forms and clauses for common rental-purchase agreements to facilitate compliance with the disclosure requirements of this title and to aid the consumer in understanding the transaction by utilizing readily understandable language to simplify the technical nature of the disclosures. In devising such forms, the Board shall consider the use by merchants of data processing or similar automated equipment. Nothing in this title may be construed to require a merchant to use any such model form or clause prescribed by the Board under this section. A merchant shall be deemed to be in compliance with the requirement to provide disclosure under section 1003(a) if the merchant—

"(1) uses any appropriate model form or clause as published by the Board; or

"(2) uses any such model form or clause and changes it by—

"(A) deleting any information which is not required by this title; or

"(B) rearranging the format, if in making such deletion or rearranging the format, the merchant does not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure.

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE OF REGULATIONS.—Any regulation prescribed by the Board, or any amendment or interpretation thereof, shall not be effective before the October 1 that follows the date of publication of the regulation in final form by at least 6 months. The Board may at its discretion lengthen that period of time to permit merchants to adjust to accommodate new requirements. The Board may also shorten that period of time, notwithstanding the first sentence, if it makes a specific finding that such action is necessary to comply with the findings of a court or to prevent unfair or deceptive practices. In any case, merchants may comply with any newly prescribed disclosure requirement prior to its effective date.

"SEC. 1016. ENFORCEMENT.

"(a) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.), and a violation of any requirements imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements of this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional test in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"(b) STATE ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An action to enforce the requirements imposed by this title may also be brought by the appropriate State attorney general in any appropriate United States district court, or any other court of competent jurisdiction.

"(2) PRIOR WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The State attorney general shall provide prior written notice of any such civil action to the Federal Trade Commission and shall provide the Commission with a copy of the complaint.

REV_00162411

"(B) EMERGENCY ACTION.—If prior notice is not feasible, the State attorney general shall provide notice to the Commission immediately upon instituting the action.

"(3) FTC INTERVENTION.—The Commission may—

"(A) intervene in the action;

"(B) upon intervening—

"(i) remove the action to the appropriate United States district court, if it was not originally brought there; and

"(ii) be heard on all matters arising in the action; and

"(C) file a petition for appeal.

"SEC. 1017. CRIMINAL LIABILITY FOR WILLFUL AND KNOWING VIOLATION.

"Whoever willfully and knowingly gives false or inaccurate information or fails to provide information which he is required to disclose under the provisions of this title or any regulation issued thereunder shall be subject to the penalty provisions as provided in section 112.

"SEC. 1018. RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.

"(a) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) NO EFFECT ON CONSISTENT STATE LAWS.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), this title does not annul, alter, or affect in any manner the meaning, scope or applicability of the laws of any State relating to rental-purchase agreements, except to the extent those laws are inconsistent with any provision of this title, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF INCONSISTENCY.—Upon its own motion or upon the request of an interested party, which is submitted in accordance with procedures prescribed in regulations of the Board, the Board shall determine whether any such inconsistency exists. If the Board determines that a term or provision of a State law is inconsistent, merchants located in that State need not follow such term or provision and shall incur no liability under the law of that State for failure to follow such term or provision, notwithstanding that such determination is subsequently amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"(3) GREATER PROTECTION UNDER STATE LAW.—Except as provided in subsection (b), for purposes of this section, a term or provision of a State law is not inconsistent with the provisions of this title if the term or provision affords greater protection and benefit to the consumer than the protection and benefit provided under this title as determined by the Board, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party.

"(b) STATE LAWS RELATING TO CHARACTERIZATION OF TRANSACTION.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), this title shall supersede any State law to the extent that such law—

"(1) regulates a rental-purchase agreement as a security interest, credit sale, retail installment sale, conditional sale or any other form of consumer credit, or that imputes to a rental-purchase agreement the creation of a debt or extension of credit, or

"(2) requires the disclosure of a percentage rate calculation, including a time-price differential, an annual percentage rate, or an effective annual percentage rate.

"(c) RELATION TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT.—No provision of this title shall be construed as limiting, superseding, or otherwise affecting the applicability of the Federal Trade Commission Act to any merchant or rental-purchase transaction.

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF

DANIEL L. COOPER,

UNDER SECRETARY FOR BENEFITS,

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON BENEFITS,

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

APRIL 10, 2003

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify today on several bills of great interest to veterans.

H.R. 241

H.R. 241, the "Veterans Beneficiary Fairness Act of 2003," would eliminate a discrepancy regarding the limitation on the period for which retroactive benefits due and unpaid a claimant may be paid to others after the claimant's death. In the interest of fairness, we support enactment of this bill.

Under 38 U.S.C. § 5121, periodic monetary benefits to which an individual was entitled at death under existing ratings or decisions or based on evidence on file with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) at the time of death are paid upon the death of the individual to specified classes of survivors according to a prescribed order of preference. Prior to a recent court decision, VA had construed section 5121 to limit the payment of any benefits under that section to the retroactive period specified in the statute, regardless of whether the payment was based on an existing rating or decision or on evidence on file at the date of death. The retroactive payment period, originally one year, was extended to two years by Public Law 104-275, the "Veterans' Benefits Improvements Act of 1996."

On December 10, 2002, the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC) issued its decision in Bonny v. Principi, 16 Vet. App. 504 (2002). In that decision, the court held that 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a) specifies two kinds of benefits: benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, and benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the file at the time of death. The court held that, in the case of the first type of benefits, the statute requires that an eligible survivor is to receive the entire amount of the award; only the latter type of "accrued" benefits is subject to the two-year limitation in 38 U.S.C. § 5121(a). The court based its interpretation of the statute primarily on the punctuation of section 5121(a).

The CAVC's Bonny decision has resulted in differing entitlements under section 5121 based on the status of the deceased's claim at the time of his or her death. H.R. 241 would eliminate this distinction by amending section 5121 to eliminate the two-year limitation on payment of retroactive benefits for all classes of beneficiaries under that statute.

The distinction the Bonny decision draws between the two categories of claimants—those whose claims had been approved and those whose entitlement had yet to be recognized when they died—is really one without a difference. In either case, a claimant's estate is deprived of the value of benefits for which he or she was, in life, eligible. H.R. 241 would remove this inequitable distinction, and we support its enactment.

We estimate the cost of complying with the Bonny decision for fiscal year (FY) 2004 to be $ 1.7 million and $18.2 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate the incremental cost to implement H.R. 241, that is, the difference between the cost of complying with the court's decision and the cost of enactment of H.R. 241, to be $5.9 million for FY 2004 and $65.8 million for the period FY 2004 through FY 2013.

In addition, we note one technical change needed in H.R. 241 should it be enacted. The comma in current section 5121(a) following "existing ratings or decisions" should be deleted to clarify, for purposes of 38 U.S.C. §§ 5121(b) and (c) and 5122, that the term "accrued benefits" includes both benefits that have been awarded to an individual in existing ratings or decisions but not paid prior to the individual's death, as well as benefits that could be awarded based on evidence in the veteran's file at the time of death.

REV_00162424

H.R. 533

H.R. 533, the "Agent Orange Veterans' Disabled Children's Benefits Act of 2003," would amend chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize VA to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to a person suffering from spina bifida who is natural child, regardless of age or marital status, of a parent who performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service," if the person was conceived after such service. A parent would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if, while performing active military, naval, or air service, he or she "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period during which such agent was used in that area; or . . . otherwise was exposed to a Vietnam-era herbicide agent." The term "Vietnam-era herbicide agent" would be defined by reference to current 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(3). VA does not support this bill.

Congress has repeatedly acted since 1979 to ensure that the Federal Government investigates the health effects of exposure to herbicides containing dioxin and compensates veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era and suffered disability as a result of that exposure. Because of the "concern and apprehension among veterans regarding the health effects of herbicides," Congress mandated an epidemiologic study by VA of the effects of exposure to dioxin in the Veterans Health Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1979. Congress also required VA to review and scientifically analyze literature relating to possible long-term health effects of human exposure to dioxin. In 1981, Congress authorized VA to provide hospital and nursing home care to certain veterans exposed during service to dioxin or ionizing radiation for conditions which, although not shown to have resulted from such exposure, are not found to have resulted from a cause other than such exposure. The Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act of 1984 directed VA to issue regulations to establish guidelines and, where appropriate, standards and criteria for the resolution of benefit claims based on exposure to herbicides containing dioxin in service in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The act also required VA to make specific findings, either positive or negative, regarding service connection as to three diseases, chloracne, porphyria cutanea tarda, and soft-tissue sarcoma.

In 1991, Congress added section 1116 (formerly section 316) to title 38, United States Code, establishing a presumption of service connection, applicable to veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, for three diseases. The act also called for VA to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to perform a review and evaluation of the scientific evidence regarding the association between disease and exposure to herbicides used in connection with the Vietnam War and each disease suspected of association with such exposure. Congress amended section 1116 in 1994 and 2001 by adding five conditions to the list of diseases presumed to be service connected in Vietnam veterans.

More recently, Congress has enacted legislation to provide a monetary allowance and other benefits to the children of Vietnam veterans who were born with spina bifida, as well as to children with certain other birth defects who are the natural children of women veterans who served in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

Congress' legislative enactments indicate its recognition of the unique circumstances of service in Vietnam—circumstances including the special sacrifices made by veterans of that war, and the great uncertainties regarding exposures of individual veterans to aerially applied herbicides. H.R. 533 would extend benefits Congress bestowed upon the affected children of those veterans to children of veterans who did not serve under those circumstances. In addition, H.R. 533's language is so vague as to be almost impossible to administer. Under that language, an individual would be considered to have performed "qualifying herbicide-risk service" if he or she, while performing active service, "served in an area in which a Vietnam-era herbicide agent was used during a period when such agent was used in that area." The vagueness of the terms "area," "was used," and "during a period when" is sure to generate substantial litigation over what Congress intended by this language.

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 533 would result in PAYGO costs of $60.8 million in FY 2004 and $760.7 million over the ten-year period FY 2004-2013. In addition, VA estimates administrative costs of $357,000 for FY 2004 and $ 1.73 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 761

Mr. Chairman, you also requested our comments on two proposals that would affect the Specially Adapted Housing program authorized by chapter 21 of title 38, United States Code. Under current law, veterans who are entitled to compensation for certain permanent and total service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 of title 38 are eligible for a grant to adapt their homes with features made necessary by the nature of their disabilities.

The first proposal, Mr. Chairman, is H.R. 761, the "Disabled Servicemembers Adapted Housing Assistance Act of 2003," which would permit VA to provide Specially Adapted Housing assistance to disabled members of the Armed Forces who remain on active duty pending medical separation. VA favors enactment of H.R. 761.

This bill would permit members of the Armed Forces with the service-connected disabilities described in section 2101 to apply for Specially Adapted Housing benefits and permit VA to process their applications and award benefits without having to wait for the servicemembers to be released from active duty. H.R. 761 could provide some affected veterans the opportunity to move into an adapted home as soon as they are separated from active duty, or at least much sooner than is possible under current law. With this accelerated determination of eligibility and assistance, veterans could avoid continued institutional care, thus improving their quality of life and increasing their independence. This could also reduce the cost to VA of in-patient healthcare for some affected veterans.

Because Specially Adapted Housing grants are a one-time-only benefit, the enactment of this measure should not materially increase either the total number of grants provided under this program or the dollar amount of such grants. Rather, H.R. 761 would merely accelerate the payment of this benefit to certain individuals who, under current law, would become entitled to the same benefit upon their release from active duty. Accordingly, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 761 would produce insignificant costs or savings.

H.R. 1048

Specially Adapted Housing

The other Specially Adapted Housing proposal is contained in section 2 of H.R. 1048, the "Disabled Veterans Adaptive Benefits Improvement Act of 2003." This section would increase the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grants. VA favors such increases, provided offsetting savings may be found.

Under H.R. 1048, the maximum Specially Adapted Housing grant authorized by section 2101(a) would be increased from $48,000 to $50,000. In addition, the maximum Special Housing Adaptations grant authorized by section 2101(b) would be increased from $9,250 to $10,000. These grants were last increased by Public Law 107-103, enacted December 27, 2001. Increases in the cost of construction since then justify increasing these important benefits.

VA estimates that approximately 600 veterans per year will receive specially adapted housing assistance, of which about 92.5 percent will qualify for the grant authorized by section 2101(a). VA estimates the cost of enacting section 2 of H.R. 1048 would be $1.14 million per year, with a total 10-year cost of $11.4 million.

REV_00162429

Assistance for Automobile and Adaptive Equipment

Section 3 of H.R. 1048 would increase from $9,000 to $11,000 the maximum amount that VA may pay under 38 U.S.C. § 3902(a) to provide or assist in providing an automobile or other conveyance to eligible persons. VA supports enactment of this provision.

The maximum automobile allowance was last increased to the current $9,000 by Public Law 107-103 in 2001. An increase since then in the cost of obtaining automobiles and in the cost of adapting them justifies increasing this benefit so as to preserve its value to deserving veterans.

VA estimates the total benefits cost of both provisions of H.R. 1048 would be $3.3 million for FY 2004 and $33.3 million for the ten-year period FY 2004-2013.

H.R. 850

Special Compensation for Former Prisoners of War

Section 2 of H.R. 850, the "Former Prisoners of War Compensation Act of 2003," would add a new subchapter at the end of chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize special compensation for former prisoners of war (POWs). This special compensation would be separate from any service-connected disability compensation or pension to which a former POW may be entitled and is exempted from attachment, execution, or levy in the same manner as special pension paid to recipients of the Medal of Honor pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1562(c). The bill would direct the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to pay monthly to each former POW, including active duty personnel, special compensation at a rate of payment determined by the cumulative length of confinement or internment as a POW. Thirty days would be the minimum period of confinement for which a former POW would be eligible to receive special compensation. The bill would establish three rates of special compensation based on the length of the period of the former POW's detainment or interment, as follows:

Length of Former POW's Detainment or Interment	Special Compensation Monthly Rate
30-120 days	$150
121-540 days	$300
541 days or more	$450

In the past, former POWs have been entitled to receive a modest lump-sum cash payment, based on their length of internment. Pursuant to the War Claims Act of 1948, codified as amended at 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005 (2001), and subsequent amendments, former POWs were entitled to receive a lump sum payment of up to $2.50 per day for World War II veterans, $2.50 per day for Korea veterans, and $5.00 per day for Vietnam veterans.[1] Compensation for former POWs is otherwise limited to the service-connected disability compensation administered by VA pursuant to title 38, United States Code.

[1] Pursuant to 50 U.S.C. Appx. § 2005, WW II veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (b)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (d)); Korea veterans were eligible to receive up to $1 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (e)(2)) and $1.50 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (e)(3)); Vietnam veterans were eligible to receive up to $2 for each day held as a POW on which they did not have adequate food rations (subsection (f)(2)) and $3.00 for each day of forced labor or inhumane treatment (subsection (f)(3)).

We estimate that approximately 39,029 former POWs are still living. Of that population, 13,631 (34.9%) receive disability compensation, with over half of those rated at 50% disabling or less. The typical former POW is 81 years old, and 88% of all living former POWs were interned during World War II. The following table summarizes basic demographic data for former POWs:

	WWII Europe	WWII Pacific	Korea	Vietnam	Gulf War	Total for All Wars
Number Alive on 1/1/03	29,675	4,477	2,264	595	21	39,029[2]
Average Age[3]	80	84	72	64	39	81

We estimate that benefit-costs for the POW portion of the bill would be $139.6 million for FY 2004 and $1.1 billion for FY 2004 through FY 2013. We estimate administrative costs to be an additional one-time cost of $632 thousand in the first year. These amounts are not included in the President's FY 2004 budget request, and the Department cannot support this provision's enactment.

Prohibition Against Compensation for Substance-Abuse Disabilities

Section 3(a) of H.R. 850 would amend 38 U.S.C. §§ 1110 and 1131 to clarify that the prohibition on payment of compensation for a disability that is a result of the veteran's own abuse of alcohol or drugs applies even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability. Section 3(b) would make that amendment applicable to claims filed on or after the date of enactment and to claims filed prior to, but not finally decided as of that date. We strongly support this provision, which is also proposed in the President's budget.

Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, authorize the payment of compensation for disability resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service, during a period of war or during other than a period of war, respectively. Sections 1110 and 1131 also currently provide, "but no compensation shall be paid if the disability is a result of the veteran's own willful misconduct or abuse of alcohol or drugs." Before their amendment in 1990, the provisions currently codified in sections 1110 and 1131 prohibited compensation "if the disability is the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct." In 1990, they were amended to also prohibit compensation if the disability is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse.

VA had long interpreted those provisions to authorize compensation not only for disability immediately resulting from injury or disease incurred or aggravated in service, but also for disability more remotely resulting from such injury or disease. That interpretation is embodied in 38 C.F.R. § 3.310(a), which provides that, generally, disability which is proximately due to or the result of a service-connected disease or injury shall be service connected. Thus, VA does pay, in specific cases, compensation for primary service-connected disability and for secondary service-connected disability. However, consistent with the plain meaning of sections 1110 and 1131, if a disability, whether primary or secondary, is a result of the veteran's own alcohol or drug abuse, VA did not pay compensation.

This has changed. On February 2, 2001, a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit interpreted section 1110 as allowing compensation for an alcohol or drug-abuse-related disability arising secondarily from a service-connected disability. Allen v. Principi, 237 F.3d 1368, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2001). More specifically, the panel held that section 1110 "does not preclude compensation for an alcohol or drug abuse disability secondary to a service-connected disability or use of an alcohol or drug abuse disability as evidence of the increased severity of a service-connected disability." Id. at 1381. The Government filed a petition for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which the panel and full court denied on October 16, 2001. Allen v. Principi, 268 F.3d 1340, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2001). However, five of the eleven judges who considered the petition for rehearing en banc dissented from the order denying rehearing, opining that the court's interpretation is wrong. 268 F.3d at 1341-42.

We are concerned that payment of additional compensation based on the abuse of alcohol or drugs is contrary to congressional intent and is not in veterans' best interests because it removes an incentive to refrain from debilitating and self-destructive behavior.

The Federal Circuit's interpretation in Allen could also greatly increase the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities. Under the court's interpretation, any veteran with a service-connected disability who abuses alcohol or drugs is potentially eligible for an increased amount of compensation if he or she can offer evidence that the substance abuse is a result of a service-connected disability, i.e., that the substance abuse is a way of coping with the pain or loss the disability causes. Under this interpretation, alcohol or drug abuse disabilities that are secondary to either physical or mental disorders are compensable.

The potential for increased costs is illustrated by mental disorders, which are frequently associated with alcohol and drug abuse. Almost 421,000 veterans are currently receiving compensation for a service-connected mental disability. About 324,000 of those disabilities are currently rated less than 100 percent and could potentially be rated totally disabling on the basis of secondary alcohol or drug abuse. Even if the service connection of disability from alcohol or drug abuse does not result in an increased schedular evaluation, temporary total evaluations could be assigned whenever a veteran is hospitalized for more than twenty-one days for treatment or observation related to the abuse. Even the 97,000 cases of a service-connected mental disability evaluated at 100 percent disabling have potential for increased compensation for secondary alcohol or drug abuse if the statutory criteria for special monthly compensation are met.

The potential increase in compensation does not end there. Under the Federal Circuit's interpretation, VA is required to pay compensation for the secondary effects of the abuse of alcohol or drugs. Once alcohol or drug abuse is service connected as being secondary to another service-connected disability, then service connection can be established for any disability that is a result of the service-connected abuse of alcohol or drugs. If alcohol or drug abuse results in a disease, such as cirrhosis of the liver, then that disease would also be service connected and provide a basis for compensation under the court's interpretation.

Of course, an increase in the amount of compensation VA pays for service-connected disabilities will increase the benefit cost of the compensation program. Section 3 of H.R. 850 would avoid those increased costs. Our estimate of savings that would result from enactment of this provision is based on the payment of only basic compensation for alcohol or drug abuse disabilities secondary to service-connected disabilities. We estimate that this provision would result in benefit cost savings of $127 million and administrative cost savings of $44 million in FY 2004 and benefit cost savings of $4.6 billion and administrative cost savings of $97 million for the ten-year period FY 2004 through FY 2013. This amount does not include the savings that would be associated with payment of compensation for temporary total evaluations, special monthly compensation, or compensation for the secondary effects of alcohol or drug abuse.

Dental Care for Former Prisoners of War

Section 4 of H.R. 850 would require VA to provide outpatient dental services and treatment, and related dental appliances, for any non-service-connected dental condition or disability from which a veteran who is a former POW is suffering. Currently, a veteran who is a former POW may receive dental benefits for non-service-connected dental conditions or disabilities only if the veteran was incarcerated for 90 days or more. By eliminating the 90-day requirement, section 4 would authorize VA to treat all former POWs the same, regardless of their length of captivity, with respect to dental care for a non-service-connected condition or disability. It would also make the eligibility rules for dental benefits for former POWs the same as for other health-care services for former POWs.

VA has strongly supported similar provisions in the past, and we continue our strong support for this provision. We believe this amendment is needed to ensure that former POWs receive all needed care for conditions that may be attributable to the privations of their service.

Costs resulting from enactment of this provision would be insignificant.

H.R. 966

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 966, the "Disabled Veterans' Return-to-Work Act of 2003," would amend provisions of 38 U.S.C. § 1524 to reinstate a program of vocational training for certain pension recipients that was in place between February 1, 1985, and December 31, 1995. That temporary program, established pursuant to the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-543, required the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible in the case of certain veterans awarded pension during the program period. If the achievement of such a goal was found to be feasible, these veterans were offered the opportunity to pursue programs of vocational training consisting of vocationally oriented and other services and assistance of the same kind provided under the vocational rehabilitation program authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code. These services and assistance did not include subsistence allowances, loans, or automobile adaptive equipment. Once a program of training was completed, a veteran could also receive employment assistance. The law limited the number of evaluations to be performed to not more than 3,500 veterans during any 12-month period. The initial program period ran from February 1, 1985, to January 31, 1992.

Initially, the law required that a veteran under the age of 50 who was awarded pension during the program period be evaluated with respect to his or her potential for rehabilitation. It required that the evaluation include a personal interview by a VA employee trained in vocational counseling. If the veteran refused to participate in the evaluation, his or her pension was suspended until he or she participated in an evaluation. Subsequent participation in the vocational training itself was voluntary. For a veteran pension recipient 50 years of age or older, the program of vocational training was totally voluntary. If, upon application by such a veteran-pensioner, VA made a preliminary finding on the basis of information in the application that, with the assistance of a vocational training program, the veteran had good potential for achieving employment, VA was authorized, upon the veteran's request, to evaluate the veteran to further determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible.

In 1992, Public Law 102-562 eliminated the limitation on the number of program participants who may be evaluated annually and amended the program for veterans under age 45, rather than under age 50, who were awarded pension during the program period so as to (A) require the Secretary, based on information on file with VA, to make a preliminary finding whether the veteran, with the assistance of a VA vocational training program, had a good potential for achieving employment; (B) if that potential was found to exist, required the Secretary to solicit from the veteran an application for VA vocational training; and (C) if the veteran applied for training, required the Secretary to provide an evaluation to determine whether the achievement of a vocational goal was reasonably feasible. In addition, the program was opened to veterans age 45 and older who had been awarded pension before the program period. That Public Law also extended the program ending date until December 31, 1995. No further action was taken by Congress, and by operation of law, the program ended on December 31, 1995.

During the period February 1, 1985, through January 31, 1989, VA evaluated approximately 9,468 veterans under the program. Of these, 2,838 were found to be feasible for training. Some 468 veterans participated in programs of vocational training. Sixty-five veterans completed that training. Fifty-eight obtained employment. Between fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1992, VA conducted 9,140 evaluations under the program, with 937 veterans participating in training.

H.R. 966 would reinstate the program and provide that a new program period would run for five years beginning on the date of enactment of the Act. In addition, it would require the Secretary to ensure that the availability of vocational training under section 1524 be made known through a variety of means, including the Internet and announcements in VA publications and other veterans' publications. Finally, the bill would require the Secretary, within two years after the date of enactment of the Act, to report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House on the operation of the program to include an evaluation of the vocational training provided and an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of the training provided, as well as data on the entered-employment rate of veterans pursuing such training.

If H.R. 966 were to be enacted, we estimate that VA would conduct approximately 1,300 record reviews each year, based on new accessions to the pension rolls, to determine whether each veteran so evaluated has good potential for achieving employment. We estimate that the achievement of a vocational goal will be determined to be feasible in about 1/3 (433) of those cases. Of that number, it is estimated that approximately 1/3 of these, 144 veterans, will actually end up participating in the program. In addition, because the program is also available to veterans over age 45 on a voluntary basis, we estimate that an additional 25 participants may participate, for a total of 169 cases per year. Based on those numbers, VA estimates that the enactment of H.R. 966 would cost $3 million for fiscal years 2004 through 2008 and an additional $3.6 million for fiscal years 2009 though 2013, totaling $6.6 million. Administrative costs associated with this bill are expected to be insignificant.

Mr. Chairman, given our experience in administering the temporary program during its ten-year duration, and the fact that only a small number of veterans benefited from the program, VA believes that the finite resources available to us for program administration would be best used to support our current program of vocational rehabilitation for service-disabled veterans, as authorized under chapter 31 of title 38, United States Code, especially in light of the current combat activities in Iraq. Thus, the Department does not support the enactment of H.R. 966.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. I will be pleased to respond to any questions you or the members of the Subcommittee may have.

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 13, 2003

Mr. SIMPSON (for himself, Mr. COX, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. DREIER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LEACH, Mr. OTTER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, and Mr. WILSON of South Carolina) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Former Prisoners of War Special Compensation Act of 2003".

REV_00162452

SEC. 2. SPECIAL COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"§1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall pay monthly to each veteran who is a former prisoner of war and who while a prisoner of war was detained or interned for not less than 30 days special compensation at the rate specified in subsection (b).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term 'veteran' includes an individual serving on active duty.

"(b) The rate of special compensation for purposes of this section shall be as follows:

"(1) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of not more than 120 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $150.

"(2) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 120 days and not more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $300.

REV_00162453

"(3) If the former prisoner of war was detained or interned for a period of more than 540 days, the monthly amount of special compensation payable shall be $450.

"(c) If a former prisoner of war was detained or interned on two or more separate occasions, the cumulative length of all occasions of confinement or internment as a prisoner of war shall determine the monthly compensation rate payable under subsection (b).

"§ 1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war

"(a) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall be paid in addition to any other payment under the laws of the United States. Amounts paid to an individual under this subchapter shall not be considered to be income or resources for purposes of determining eligibility to receive benefits under any Federal or federally assisted program.

"(b) Special compensation payable under this subchapter shall not be considered to be compensation within the meaning of that term in section 101(13) of this title.

"(c) The provisions of subsection (c) of section 1562 of this title shall apply to special compensation under this subchapter in the same manner as to special pension under that section.".

REV_00162454

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER VII—FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

"1181. Special compensation: former prisoners of war.
"1182. Provisions relating to special compensation for former prisoners of war.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR ALCOHOL OR DRUG-RELATED DISABILITY.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—Sections 1110 and 1131 of title 38, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", even if the abuse is secondary to a service-connected disability" before the period at the end.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to any claim—

(1) filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) filed before the date of the enactment of this Act and not finally decided as of that date.

SEC. 4. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE FOR ALL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR.

Section 1712(a)(1)(F) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking "and who was detained or interned for a period of not less than 90 days".

Subject: FYI - class action markup scheduled for this Thursday from CQ:

On Thursday, the Senate Judiciary Committee is slated to mark up class action reform legislation, which was held over from last week after Democrats complained they had not enough time to examine a new bipartisan compromise.
April 10, 9:30 a.m., 226 Dirksen Bldg. Thursday also marks the deadline Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch set last month for stakeholder feedback on an asbestos litigation reform bill he is drafting.

Class Action Bill Mark Up Will Include Feinstein Amendment
By Keith Perine, CQ Staff
The Senate Judiciary Committee will try once again to mark up a bill that would establish new rules for class action lawsuits.
The measure, which is expected to be considered April 10, has taken the lead among various pieces of legislation that together represent a conservative tort overhaul movement in the 108th Congress. The panel is expected to approve it.
It originally was scheduled to be marked up at a March 27 committee meeting. At the request of committee Democrats, some of whom fiercely oppose the bill, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, twice has postponed committee action.
The legislation (Sÿ274) would steer many cases that are filed in state courts into federal courts if at least $2 million is at stake and if at least one plaintiff lives in a different state than does the defendant. Some exceptions are possible, such as if a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs and the primary defendants are citizens of the state where the case is originally filed.
The legislation also would mandate that notices to class members be detailed and clearly written, and that courts could not approve settlements that would cause a "bounty" payment to be made to one class member.
Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., plans to offer an amendment that would raise the bar for transferring class action cases to federal courts.
The Feinstein amendment, which Hatch supports, would make cases eligible for removal to federal courts only if at least $5 million is at stake. It also would mandate that class action suits would remain in state courts if more than two-thirds of the plaintiffs live in the same state as the primary defendant.

Business lobbyists pushing for the bill say the White House, which strongly backs the measure, also has accepted the Feinstein language. There already are three Democratic co-sponsors of the bill * including Thomas R. Carper of Delaware, who has been championing it in the Democratic caucus. But Feinstein's support is seen as critical to securing a filibuster-proof 60-vote majority for the bill on the Senate floor. Business lobbyists believe they are already close to that number.
Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the committee's ranking Democrat, is expected to offer an amendment that would make it a crime to deliberately conceal or destroy documents and records related to class action cases. The offense would be punishable by a fine and or up to 20 years in prison.
Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., is expected to offer several amendments, including one that would exempt tobacco-related class action lawsuits.
Depending on the number of amendments offered and the press of other Senate business, the committee might not finish its markup on April 10.
Hatch said on April 2 that he had not yet sought a commitment for floor time for the measure from Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn.
The committee April 10 also is expected to consider several judicial nominations, as well as a bill (Sÿ731) that would criminalize the possession or use of authentication features * such as watermarks or holograms * to make false identification. That bill originally was scheduled for committee action on April 3.

Class Action Bill Mark Up Will Include Feinstein Amendment

By Keith Perine, CQ Staff

The Senate Judiciary Committee will try once again to mark up a bill that would establish new rules for class action lawsuits.

The measure, which is expected to be considered April 10, has taken the lead among various pieces of legislation that together represent a conservative tort overhaul movement in the 108th Congress. The panel is expected to approve it.

It originally was scheduled to be marked up at a March 27 committee meeting. At the request of committee Democrats, some of whom fiercely oppose the bill, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, twice has postponed committee action.

The legislation (S 274) would steer many cases that are filed in state courts into federal courts if at least $2 million is at stake and if at least one plaintiff lives in a different state than does the defendant.

Some exceptions are possible, such as if a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs and the primary defendants are citizens of the state where the case is originally filed.

The legislation also would mandate that notices to class members be detailed and clearly written, and that courts could not approve settlements that would cause a "bounty" payment to be made to one class member.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., plans to offer an amendment that would raise the bar for transferring class action cases to federal courts.

The Feinstein amendment, which Hatch supports, would make cases eligible for removal to federal courts only if at least $5 million is at stake. It also would mandate that class action suits would remain in state courts if more than two-thirds of the plaintiffs live in the same state as the primary defendant.

Business lobbyists pushing for the bill say the White House, which strongly backs the measure, also has accepted the Feinstein language. There already are three Democratic co-sponsors of the bill — including Thomas R. Carper of Delaware, who has been championing it in the Democratic caucus. But Feinstein's support is seen as critical to securing a filibuster-proof 60-vote majority for the bill on the Senate floor. Business lobbyists believe they are already close to that number.

Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the committee's ranking Democrat, is expected to offer an amendment that would make it a crime to deliberately conceal or destroy documents and records related to class action cases. The offense would be punishable by a fine and or up to 20 years in prison.

Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., is expected to offer several amendments, including one that would exempt tobacco-related class action lawsuits.

Depending on the number of amendments offered and the press of other Senate business, the committee might not finish its markup on April 10.

Hatch said on April 2 that he had not yet sought a commitment for floor time for the measure from Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn.

The committee April 10 also is expected to consider several judicial nominations, as well as a bill (S 731 <>) that would criminalize the possession or use of authentication features — such as watermarks or holograms — to make false identification. That bill originally was scheduled for committee action on April 3.

"[F]ew awards exceeding a single-digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages, to a significant degree, will satisfy due process. .
. . [R]atios greater than those we have previously upheld may comport with due process where a particularly egregious act has resulted in only a small amount of economic damages. . . . The converse is also true, however. When compensatory damages are substantial, then a lesser ratio, perhaps only equal to compensatory damages, can reach the outermost limit of the due process guarantee." The Court later concludes that the $1 million compensatory award in that case was "substantial."

All of this suggests that a 1-to-1 punitive-to-compensatory damages ratio may now be constitutionally mandated when the compensatory award is considered "substantial." Important development.

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday handed a major victory to corporate defendants, imposing new limits on punitive damage awards in civil litigation.

By a 6-3 vote in State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Campbell, No. 01-1289, the high court overturned a $145 million verdict against an insurer -- saying it was out of whack with the $1 million in compensatory damages awarded in the case.

Writing for the majority, Justice Anthony Kennedy said the ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages almost never should exceed single digits -- a maximum of nine to one, in other words -- and that in many cases punitive damages should not exceed compensatory damages at all.

"Single-digit multipliers are more likely to comport with due process, while still achieving the state's goals of deterrence and retribution, than awards with ratios in the range of 500 to 1 or, in this case, of 145 to 1," wrote Kennedy.

After a decade-long series of rulings on the issue of giant punitive damages awards, the ruling marks the Supreme Court's most explicit statement yet about how big is too big.

In addition, the Court ruled that neither a defendant's wealth nor its out-of-state conduct could be a factor in calculating punitive damages. "A defendant should be punished for the conduct that harmed the plaintiff, not for being an unsavory individual or business," wrote Kennedy.

Kennedy also wrote, "The wealth of a defendant cannot justify an otherwise unconstitutional punitive damage award."

The ruling offered the corporate defense bar a near treasure-trove of helpful language in fighting the large liability awards that have fueled an increasingly potent tort-reform movement.

;;;;;;; Since recent articles have stated that the White House has shown support for the Feinstein-Hatch amendment, do any of you have a copy of it? Thanks, Lisa

;;;;;;; Class Action Claims Top Legal Spot
;;;;;;; ;;;; Class action reform legislation is emerging as the dark horse victor in the first leg of an informal but intense competition among various legal reform bills whose proponents are trying to cast their measures in the most bipartisan light possible in the closely divided Senate.

;;;;;;; ;;;; With Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch reaching a compromise in committee last week on class action, the measure has now eclipsed other pending legal reform bills on asbestos litigation and medical malpractice.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Class action now will occupy the place on the Senate schedule that would have gone for debate on medical malpractice legislation -- had a separate deal Feinstein had in the works with Senate Republicans on that front not fallen through last month.
;;;;;;; ;;;; "While we remain hopeful that something on medical malpractice can be worked out, it appears the slowdown in [that negotiation] has, indeed, opened up space for us to move forward on class action reform," said a spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Frist Monday.
;;;;;;; ;;;; He added, "It is our hope to see some floor activity on class action reform in May, but it is not definite."
;;;;;;; ;;;; As asbestos litigation, class action and medical malpractice reforms make their way through the legislative pipeline, a nagging concern for supporters of each this year has been whether one will drain the pool of Democratic goodwill before another makes it to the trough.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Medical malpractice appears to be out of the running, at least for the time being. And although class action and asbestos litigation reform bills do not have identical constituencies, there is plenty of overlap.
;;;;;;; ;;;; But more important is the overlap in perception these bills could hold in the minds of moderate "swing" Democrats, like Feinstein, sources said.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Each bill's success arguably hinges on a willingness by 20 or so Democrats on the Senate floor to lock horns with their powerful constituents in the trial bar.
;;;;;;; ;;;; While some Democrats, such as Sen. Thomas Carper of Delaware, are expected to back both bills, conventional wisdom dictates to observers that most other Democrats are willing to cross those particular allies no more than once this session.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Initially, asbestos litigation reform was widely seen as the more palatable of the two business-backed legal reforms. Earlier this year, Hatch said he was pegging that bill's chances above those of a class action bill, which he suggested would be more at the mercy of the trial bar.
;;;;;;; ;;;; An increasing number of lawmakers, "even Democrats" -- including Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy of Vermont -- are coming to grips with the scope of the problem in asbestos litigation, Hatch added in that interview.
;;;;;;; ;;;; The asbestos litigation measure even has elements of the trial bar supporting it, although both that reform and class action reform have the conceptual backing of the broader legal community.
;;;;;;; ;;;; However, the complex asbestos reform bill has yet to be written -- something Hatch has said he plans to do over the April recess -- and it appears susceptible to becoming bogged down among a myriad of conflicting interests.
;;;;;;; ;;;; The Senate Judiciary Committee meets Thursday for a class action reform markup that was originally scheduled for last week. Hatch agreed to a delay after Democrats charged that they had not been given ample time to study the Feinstein language.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Coincidentally, Thursday marks the deadline set by Hatch for when he would accept private sector input on the asbestos litigation bill he is drafting.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Class action lobbyists have yet to lock in the commitments, but are utterly convinced they will have the 60 votes needed to weather any attempted filibuster.
;;;;;;; ;;;; "We definitely believe we're in striking distance of 60-plus votes," said Matt Webb of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Institute for Legal Reform. Feinstein's agreement "just puts that much more momentum behind it," he added.
;;;;;;; ;;;; To achieve that, lobbyists have targeted a number of New Democrats and other moderate Democrats as likely cosponsors, or at least supporters, of the legislation.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Among the targeted Democrats is Senate Minority Whip Reid, who sources forecast will step up as an early cosponsor of the measure once it leaves committee. Reid's office did not confirm that plan.

;;;;;;; ;;;; Moreover, pro-bill sources said the Bush administration privately has signaled its support for the Feinstein-Hatch compromise and appears convinced that class action reform will be the first major legal reform to reach the president's desk this year.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Class action proponents, who began lobbying Feinstein a year ago, were generally elated last month when she backed away from a medical malpractice compromise she had been negotiating with Senate Republicans.
;;;;;;; ;;;; The widespread belief was that, having abandoned that particular legal reform, Feinstein was free to pursue a deal on class action reform.
;;;;;;; ;;;; And she did, striking a deal with Hatch last week that, while narrowing the scope of the pending corporate-backed bill, still would make many class action cases removable from state to federal court, where business thinks it would have a better shake.
;;;;;;; ;;;; But if the conventional wisdom holds true that most Democrats have a limited appetite for legal reform, then Feinstein and other like-minded Democrats are not apt to support asbestos litigation reform, sources surmised.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Not everyone buys that argument, however. "We hope [class action's success] whets their appetite," quipped Joe Manero of the Alliance of American Insurers, whose organization supports both reforms.
;;;;;;; ;;;; "The class action bill is the one right now, ready to go first," added Jeff Peck, a Democratic consultant who has been hired by separate entities to lobby lawmakers on behalf of both reforms.
;;;;;;; ;;;; Peck added that he believes a "consensus bill" on asbestos litigation reform "will have great support as well."
;;;;;;; ;;;; Feinstein's support, strictly speaking, was not needed to get the class action bill out of committee, where a majority of senators already support it.
;;;;;;; ;;;; But her cosponsorship, along with that of Judiciary member Herb Kohl , D-Wis., sends a powerful signal to Democrats of the bipartisan nature of the bill and to Republican leaders about the bill's readiness for prime time, sources said.
;;;;;;; ;;;; The markup delay caused a bit of angst for bill supporters -- among other things it gives Democratic opponents, including Leahy, more time to muster their arguments against the Feinstein compromise -- but it was a wise move on Hatch's part to agree to a delay, they reasoned.
;;;;;;; ;;;; In so doing, Hatch undercut a case some Democrats might try to make that the bill has been tainted by "partisanship" or benefited from the GOP majority riding roughshod over regular order, sources said. By Pamela Barnet

The Generals, Brief
The most powerful argument in the Michigan case.

By Peter N. Kirsanow

y far the most persuasive brief in the University of Michigan preference cases is the so-called "green brief" or "generals' amicus brief."

A constellation of military figures have signed onto a brief in support of the University of Michigan's preferential admissions program * including such admired figures as retired generals Norman Schwartzkopf, Hugh Shelton, and Anthony Zinni.

The generals' brief has captured more attention than perhaps any other except the one filed by the Bush administration, and it's the one that most troubles conservatives. After all, it contains arguments supported by serious men in the most serious occupation.

During last Tuesday's oral arguments before the Supreme Court, Justices Ginsburg, Stevens, and Souter especially were fascinated by the arguments set forth in the brief, and peppered advocates with numerous questions about the points made therein. Rarely has a non-administration amicus had such an impact.

Liberals have seized upon the brief, according the military a strange new respect. Ellen Goodman of the Boston Globe, for example, asserts that the brief makes the most effective case in support of preferences in admissions.

Goodman is dead wrong. The generals' brief so persuasively makes the point for striking down preferences at the University of Michigan (and, by extension, elsewhere) that a conspiracy theorist might well be excused for concluding that the brief was actually a malevolent attempt to undermine UM's argument.

The generals' brief effectively outlines the fundamental differences between service academies and other institutions of higher learning and emphatically demonstrates why UM's preference program fails to satisfy either the compelling state interest or the narrow-tailoring prong of strict scrutiny.

Since racial classifications are based upon an immutable physical characteristic, and because of the nation's baleful history with respect to race, the Supreme Court has declared racial classifications pernicious and "odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon a doctrine of equality." Consequently, post-Bakke jurisprudence requires that racial classifications must further a compelling governmental interest and be narrowly tailored to serve that interest.

Compelling governmental interests supporting the use of racial classifications or preferences are extremely rare. Indeed, except for the criminological benefits of using race in the selection of law-enforcement officers and in the hiring of corrections officers, courts have not looked favorably upon purported the "compelling interests" proffered in support of racial preferences.

The generals' brief argues that a racially diverse officer corps trained to command the nation's racially diverse enlisted ranks is essential to accomplishing the military's mission * protecting national security. There is no more compelling governmental interest. The generals note that today's officer corps is 81 percent white, 8.8 percent black, 4 percent Hispanic, 3.2 percent Asian-American, and .6 percent Native American, whereas the enlisted ranks are 61.7 percent white, 21.7 percent black, 9.6 percent Hispanic, 4 percent Asian-American, and 1.2 percent Native American. In contrast, during the Vietnam War, the ranks of black enlisted men in the Army swelled to between 15 percent and 20 percent, while only 3 percent of Army officers were black. This disparity contributed to low morale, racial polarization, disciplinary problems, and racial violence. Unit cohesion and effectiveness were compromised * at times severely.

The military performs the most important work with which the government is charged; obviously it is a serious matter for its capabilities to be compromised. Racial polarization is not only problematic in the armed forces of a democratic republic, it can cause racial schisms in overall domestic support for military enterprises. This is especially true in today's force, which relies solely on volunteers.

But the above considerations nevertheless clearly demonstrate why the preference programs employed by UM and other non-military colleges fail the compelling governmental interest test. The respective missions of UM and West Point are manifestly light years apart. Producing a well-rounded Theatre Arts graduate may be a laudable mission, but it is hardly on the same level as preventing another 9/11.

The generals try, however, to elevate the importance of non-military preference programs by arguing that since the officer corps also draws from ROTC programs at elite schools, the preference programs at those schools must be preserved to maintain sufficient minority enrollment. This is both a peculiar and attenuated argument. It presumes that ROTC programs at elite schools cannot achieve diversity with a more narrowly tailored, race-neutral program. The Texas and Florida percentage plans refute that notion (we can debate the merits and constitutionality of those at a later time). Further, sizable numbers of officers come from so-called second-tier schools (e.g., Colin Powell, ROTC CUNY) and HBCUs, whereas ROTC participation at elite schools is often abysmal (and, at Harvard, non-existent).

The generals' brief also shows that the means by which the service academies further the (arguably) compelling governmental interest is far more narrowly tailored than that employed by the University of Michigan, et al. In fact, the academies' admissions programs more closely resemble affirmative action as it was originally conceived * i.e., aggressive recruitment and outreach to expand the pool of minority applicants, before it metastasized into a racial spoils system.

To be sure, the academies do consider race in admissions. But the degree to which race is a factor is tiny at these institutions, compared to UM. As Rich Lowry has noted, a Center for Equal Opportunity analysis shows that whereas a black West Point applicant is twice as likely to be admitted as a similarly situated white applicant, that same black applicant is 174 times more likely to be admitted to UM than his white counterpart. At other schools, this ratio rises to as much as 700 to 1. By any measure, a program that yields such an astonishing differential can hardly be narrowly tailored.

Whether the admissions programs at service academies pass constitutional muster is an inquiry for another day. Because of the distinctions noted above, a Supreme Court decision that struck down UM's programs would not necessarily invalidate those of West Point and Annapolis. But, those same distinctions in effect render the unconstitutionality of UM's programs nearly incontrovertible. Let's see if the Supremes agree.

The Generals, Brief
The most powerful argument in the Michigan case.

By Peter N. Kirsanow

y far the most persuasive brief in the University of Michigan preference cases is the so-called "green brief" or "generals' amicus brief."

A constellation of military figures have signed onto a brief in support of the University of Michigan's preferential admissions program * including such admired figures as retired generals Norman Schwartzkopf, Hugh Shelton, and Anthony Zinni.

The generals' brief has captured more attention than perhaps any other except the one filed by the Bush administration, and it's the one that most troubles conservatives. After all, it contains arguments supported by serious men in the most serious occupation.

During last Tuesday's oral arguments before the Supreme Court, Justices Ginsburg, Stevens, and Souter especially were fascinated by the arguments set forth in the brief, and peppered advocates with numerous questions about the points made therein. Rarely has a non-administration amicus had such an impact.

Liberals have seized upon the brief, according the military a strange new respect. Ellen Goodman of the Boston Globe, for example, asserts that the brief makes the most effective case in support of preferences in admissions.

Goodman is dead wrong. The generals' brief so persuasively makes the point for striking down preferences at the University of Michigan (and, by extension, elsewhere) that a conspiracy theorist might well be excused for concluding that the brief was actually a malevolent attempt to undermine UM's argument.

The generals' brief effectively outlines the fundamental differences between service academies and other institutions of higher learning and emphatically demonstrates why UM's preference program fails to satisfy either the compelling state interest or the narrow-tailoring prong of strict scrutiny.

Since racial classifications are based upon an immutable physical characteristic, and because of the nation's baleful history with respect to race, the Supreme Court has declared racial classifications pernicious and "odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon a doctrine of equality." Consequently, post-Bakke jurisprudence requires that racial classifications must further a compelling governmental interest and be narrowly tailored to serve that interest.

Compelling governmental interests supporting the use of racial classifications or preferences are extremely rare. Indeed, except for the criminological benefits of using race in the selection of law-enforcement officers and in the hiring of corrections officers, courts have not looked favorably upon purported the "compelling interests" proffered in support of racial preferences.

The generals' brief argues that a racially diverse officer corps trained to command the nation's racially diverse enlisted ranks is essential to accomplishing the military's mission * protecting national security. There is no more compelling governmental interest. The generals note that today's officer corps is 81 percent white, 8.8 percent black, 4 percent Hispanic, 3.2 percent Asian-American, and .6 percent Native American, whereas the enlisted ranks are 61.7 percent white, 21.7 percent black, 9.6 percent Hispanic, 4 percent Asian-American, and 1.2 percent Native American. In contrast, during the Vietnam War, the ranks of black enlisted men in the Army swelled to between 15 percent and 20 percent, while only 3 percent of Army officers were black. This disparity contributed to low morale, racial polarization, disciplinary problems, and racial violence. Unit cohesion and effectiveness were compromised * at times severely.

The military performs the most important work with which the government is charged; obviously it is a serious matter for its capabilities to be compromised. Racial polarization is not only problematic in the armed forces of a democratic republic, it can cause racial schisms in overall domestic support for military enterprises. This is especially true in today's force, which relies solely on volunteers.

But the above considerations nevertheless clearly demonstrate why the preference programs employed by UM and other non-military colleges fail the compelling governmental interest test. The respective missions of UM and West Point are manifestly light years apart. Producing a well-rounded Theatre Arts graduate may be a laudable mission, but it is hardly on the same level as preventing another 9/11.

The generals try, however, to elevate the importance of non-military preference programs by arguing that since the officer corps also draws from ROTC programs at elite schools, the preference programs at those schools must be preserved to maintain sufficient minority enrollment. This is both a peculiar and attenuated argument. It presumes that ROTC programs at elite schools cannot achieve diversity with a more narrowly tailored, race-neutral program. The Texas and Florida percentage plans refute that notion (we can debate the merits and constitutionality of those at a later time). Further, sizable numbers of officers come from so-called second-tier schools (e.g., Colin Powell, ROTC CUNY) and HBCUs, whereas ROTC participation at elite schools is often abysmal (and, at Harvard, non-existent).

The generals' brief also shows that the means by which the service academies further the (arguably) compelling governmental interest is far more narrowly tailored than that employed by the University of Michigan, et al. In fact, the academies' admissions programs more closely resemble affirmative action as it was originally conceived * i.e., aggressive recruitment and outreach to expand the pool of minority applicants, before it metastasized into a racial spoils system.

To be sure, the academies do consider race in admissions. But the degree to which race is a factor is tiny at these institutions, compared to UM. As Rich Lowry has noted, a Center for Equal Opportunity analysis shows that whereas a black West Point applicant is twice as likely to be admitted as a similarly situated white applicant, that same black applicant is 174 times more likely to be admitted to UM than his white counterpart. At other schools, this ratio rises to as much as 700 to 1. By any measure, a program that yields such an astonishing differential can hardly be narrowly tailored.

Whether the admissions programs at service academies pass constitutional muster is an inquiry for another day. Because of the distinctions noted above, a Supreme Court decision that struck down UM's programs would not necessarily invalidate those of West Point and Annapolis. But, those same distinctions in effect render the unconstitutionality of UM's programs nearly incontrovertible. Let's see if the Supremes agree.

You asked two questions yesterday that I have followed up on.

First, you asked whether DOJ, after having cleared a deal or proposal, can subsequently claim an antitrust violation in the future regarding the same issues that were reviewed in clearing the deal or proposal. The technical answer is yes, but the practical answer is no, in that this virtually never happens according to DOJ.

Second, you asked how long FTC has been applying a standard under Section 5 in a manner consistent with settled antitrust principles, notwithstanding that the FTC (like DOT) has the legal authority to act more broadly. As Tim Muris has informed us, the answer is that FTC, by and large, has been following this approach for the past two decades.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

April 9, 2003
(Senate Floor)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(THIS STATEMENT HAS BEEN COORDINATED BY OMB WITH THE CONCERNED AGENCIES.)

S. 476 - CARE Act of 2003
(Sen. Grassley (R) IA)

The Administration supports Senate passage of S. 476, which contains key elements of the President's agenda to expand charitable giving and to strengthen faith-based and other neighborhood-serving groups to help them better serve Americans in need. S. 476 includes a number of important provisions of the President's faith-based initiative that will address our Nation's charity crisis and expand the important work of faith-based and grassroots groups. The Administration will continue to seek action by Congress to end discrimination against faith-based organizations that seek to work in partnership with the Federal Government in helping those in need.

In particular, the Administration is pleased that S. 476 would stimulate more charitable giving through a number of robust tax incentives, including a provision allowing non-itemizers a deduction for their charitable donations and another provision removing a barrier to charitable contributions from Individual Retirement Accounts. These and certain other incentives are consistent with the President's objective to promote charitable giving across the Nation and to provide relief to taxpayers making contributions to charitable programs. The Administration will work with Congress to make these incentives as effective and robust as possible. In addition, the Administration appreciates that the bill includes a number of conservation tax incentives and looks forward to working with Congress to ensure that these are consistent with the President's Budget.

The Administration also is pleased that this bill would encourage savings by lower income persons through the creation of 300,000 Individual Development Accounts (IDAs).

However, the Administration strongly opposes the bill's proposed $275 million and $1.1 billion increases in funding for the Social Services Block Grant (SSBG) for fiscal years 2003 and 2004 respectively. Compared to FY 2002, this would represent a 16% increase in funding in FY 2003 and a 65% increase in funding in FY 2004. These large increases in SSBG funding far exceed the President's request and would create significant pressure to extend the 2004 level into the future, costing $11 billion over ten years if made permanent.

Additionally, the Administration is concerned about a number of tax provisions in the bill that would unnecessarily complicate the U.S. tax code and would raise significant policy concerns. The Administration looks forward to working with Congress to make appropriate modifications to the bill that would address our policy concerns.

Finally, the Administration recognizes that this bill reflects many of the legislative proposals contained in the Treasury Department's Enforcement Proposals for Abusive Tax Avoidance Transactions, issued on March 20, 2002. The Administration supports the goal of stopping abusive tax avoidance transactions, but it shares the Chairman's concerns regarding the codification of the economic substance doctrine.

In addition, the Administration firmly supports the provisions in the manager's amendment to S. 476 that would authorize a "Compassion Capital Fund" to be established at several Federal agencies to provide technical assistance to small faith-based and community organizations through qualified intermediary organizations, and would authorize funding for grants to provide young mothers and their children access to community-based, adult-supervised group homes.

The Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to address the issues described above, perfect the language in S. 476 regarding certain Constitutional issues, ensure that the legislation avoids inappropriate intrusion into the attorney-client relationship, correct certain issues with tax exempt federally guaranteed obligations, and to continue to move forward this important legislation that meets our shared goal of better serving Americans in need.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

The Budget Enforcement Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002. The Administration supports the extension of these budget enforcement mechanisms in a manner that ensures fiscal discipline and is consistent with the President's budget. OMB's cost estimate of this bill currently is under development.

Points Concerning Allen-Harkin Amendment

- The provision will cost the U.S. taxpayer dearly and will have no financial impact on Iran.

- The United States agreed in the 1981 Algiers Accords to prevent suits by the hostages from going forward in exchange for their release from captivity. (The Accords were ratified by President Reagan and received overwhelming bipartisan support on the Hill following extensive hearings.)

- Iran will view the amendment as a blatant U.S. violation of the Accords and will likely sue the United States before the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal for any judgment rendered against it in favor of the hostages.

- The hostages have already attempted to bring a suit against Iran for $8 billion. This amendment will permit that suit to go forward.

- The Tribunal could very well issue an award against the United States for any such amount and the U.S. taxpayer will likely end up paying.

- Even if the United States chooses not to pay the Tribunal award, the Algiers Accords expressly make Tribunal awards binding and enforceable against the two government in the courts of any country in the world.

- Iran will therefore attempt to seize U.S. assets anywhere they can find them, including perhaps in the United States, to pay the Tribunal award.

- This amendment also sends the signal to other countries that the United States may break international agreements, and that the President's commitment in executive agreements cannot be relied upon.

The first bullet could say something like:

* The amendment would give victims of terrorism the ability to sue Iran in U.S. courts. This would be contrary to the U.S.'s obligation under the 1981 Algiers Accords to prohibit such suits.

Subject: RE: Meeting re. Algiers Accords

Here are the two one-pagers. If anyone has specific edits, let's get them circulating quickly:

Points Concerning Allen-Harkin Amendment:

* The provision will cost the U.S. taxpayer dearly and will have no financial impact on Iran.

* The United States agreed in the 1981 Algiers Accords to prevent suits by the hostages from going forward in exchange for their release from captivity. (The Accords were ratified by President Reagan and received overwhelming bipartisan support on the Hill following extensive hearings.)

* Iran will view the amendment as a blatant U.S. violation of the Accords and will likely sue the United States before the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal for any judgment rendered against it in favor of the hostages.

* The hostages have already attempted to bring a suit against Iran for $8 billion. This amendment will permit that suit to go forward.

* The Tribunal could very well issue an award against the United States for any such amount and the U.S. taxpayer will likely end up paying.

* Even if the United States chooses not to pay the Tribunal award, the Algiers Accords expressly make Tribunal awards binding and enforceable against the two government in the courts of any country in the world.

* Iran will therefore attempt to seize U.S. assets anywhere they can find them, including perhaps in the United States, to pay the Tribunal award.

* This amendment also sends the signal to other countries that the United States may break international agreements, and that the President's commitment in executive agreements cannot be relied upon.

Points Concerning Amendment to the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act:

* The amendment would expand the definition of "blocked asset" under TRIA to include any property or assets that are regulated and licensed.

* While TRIA made a very limited exception to the important principle of the separate legal status of states and the entities they own, this amendment would greatly expand the effect of this exception.

* It would make regulated and licensed assets of separate entities, which have not been blocked, available to pay judgments against the states.

* The amendment will eliminate the current flexibility the Executive Branch has in imposing and managing sanctions regimes.

* Sanctions are generally not eliminated all at once. They are subject to a variety of regulation and licensing, including general licenses, which have the effect of gradually undoing certain aspects of sanctions programs.

* The amendment would interfere substantially with U.S. foreign policy objectives, as it would make normalization with any new regimes of these states very difficult.

* For example, this amendment will make it difficult for any new Iraqi government to do business in the United States. Any of its state-owned entities that attempt to bring assets into the United States or do business here, subject to regulation or license, would have its assets seized to pay for the wrongs perpetrated by the prior regime.

* It could also increase taxpayer costs for reconstruction of Iraq.

* The amendment would encourage reciprocal legal measures, holding U.S. entities liable for conduct of the United States worldwide.

The Administration strongly supports House passage of H.R. 1036. The manufacturer or seller of a legal, non-defective product should not be held liable for the criminal or unlawful misuse of that product by others. H.R. 1036 would help prevent abuse of the legal system and help curb the growing problem of frivolous lawsuits in the United States. At the same time, the legislation would carefully preserve the right of individuals to have their day in court with civil liability actions. These civil actions are enumerated in the bill and respect the traditional role of the States in our Federal system with regard to such actions.

Ok, just came out of a meeting with speaker staff. The TRIA language, which does not appear in either bill, will not be pushed by the speaker.
They will cite that they simply cannot anticipate the full impact.

As for allen, the speaker has constituent interest and he "will not be bound by a bad deal of a different admin. Moreover, someone needs to stand up for families whose rights were dealt away by carter. " We are not in a good spot on this one. The ONLY argument that has any traction is the Treasury exposure. Can I get someone who would be willing to "lawyer up" the spkr staff? Specifically, I need someone who can explain exactly how US Treasury could be on the hook for these claims.
```

Dear Colleague,

I am pleased to invite you to the Bush Administration's series of executive briefings for new Schedule C appointees to learn about the President's Management Agenda, his vision and values, and to discuss the unique challenges you face with your new responsibilities. As a Schedule C appointee, you will play a key role in turning President Bush's principles of a citizen-centered, results-oriented and market-based government into reality.

The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) conducts these programs with the White House. The next session will be held April 15, 2003.

These sessions for new appointees provide an overview of executive branch priorities and a unique opportunity to interact with a broad range of policymakers. You may have heard from your colleagues about our previous briefings that included presentations from Cabinet Secretaries, top advisors to the President, including his National Security Advisor, and the Vice President. Though particular officials are not available for each briefing, you will be provided insights and information on domestic and foreign policy issues from the Administration's most knowledgeable individuals.

The program is held at the Ronald Reagan Building. A swearing-in ceremony and reception, in your honor, conclude the program.

To accept my invitation, please register with the Office of Executive Resources Management by April 4, 2003. In the past, these programs have filled prior to the deadline, so send in your form right away. Enclosed are program and registration information.

Sincerely,

Kay Coles James
Director

BRIEFING FOR NEW SCHEDULE C APPOINTEES

APRIL 15, 2003

WHEN APRIL 15, 9:00 am - 6:00 pm . Registration check-in and continental breakfast begin at 8:15 am.

WHERE Amphitheater at the Ronald Reagan Building ♦1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20004.

WHAT The keynote address will be delivered by a senior Bush Administration official, followed by presentations on Ethics, Hatch Act, and high-priority issues for the Administration. Speakers will include prominent Administration officials and White House staff. Plan to be there. It is a program that you won't want to miss!

HOW TO REGISTER Fax your registration form and payment information to OPM at 202-606-0557 or 202-606-2126. We accept: Government-issued purchase cards or an agency Training Authorization Form (contact your training office for forms) and must receive all payment information by the first day of the briefing.

REGISTRATION DEADLINE April 4, 2003, at 4:00 p.m. or when we reach 200 nominations, whichever occurs first. Programs are very popular and tend to fill-up quickly. We will fax a confirmation notice of your registration to the number you provide us. OPM staff can only confirm your registration. We can not accept registrations received after the closing date or once we reach our limit.

CONFIRMATION NOTICES confirming your registration will be sent via fax or email by the Office of Personnel Management. A confirmation from your agency's training office does not mean you are registered with OPM. If you do not receive a notice from OPM by APRIL 15, please call 202-606-1632, we will gladly fax or email another one.

COST $395. This includes conference materials, continental breakfast, luncheon, coffee breaks, and an evening reception.

CANCELLATIONS Written cancellations or substitutions must be received by the registration closing date. If you cancel after that date, OPM will bill you for the full registration fee. Email requests to Shirley Sewell at sesewell@opm.gov or fax to 202-606-2126.

SWEARING-IN CEREMONY & RECEPTION The program concludes with a Federal Judge administering the oath of office, followed by a reception in your honor from 5:00 pm until 6:00 pm. If you wish, a photographer will take your picture with the officiating judge and your certificate. Business attire is appropriate. Due to limited space, family members and/or friends can not attend.

SPECIAL NEEDS Please tell us as soon as possible if you have any special needs. We are happy to provide interpreters and accommodate special diets, but must know in advance to prepare for your needs.

LOCAL TRANSPORTATION The Ronald Reagan Building is accessible via the Metrorail system (subway). We highly recommend using the subway, as commercial parking in the surrounding area is expensive and limited. To use the Metrorail, take the Blue or Orange line to Federal Triangle Station. As you exit the station, the Reagan Building is directly in front of you, across the plaza.

HOTELS Please contact your White House Liaison for hotels located near the Ronald Reagan Building and Metro stations

March 7, 2003

Dear Colleague,

I am pleased to invite you to the Bush Administration's series of executive briefings for new Schedule C appointees to learn about the President's Management Agenda, his vision and values, and to discuss the unique challenges you face with your new responsibilities. As a Schedule C appointee, you will play a key role in turning President Bush's principles of a citizen-centered, results-oriented and market-based government into reality.

The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) conducts these programs with the White House. The next session will be held April 15, 2003.

These sessions for new appointees provide an overview of executive branch priorities and a unique opportunity to interact with a broad range of policymakers. You may have heard from your colleagues about our previous briefings that included presentations from Cabinet Secretaries, top advisors to the President, including his National Security Advisor, and the Vice President. Though particular officials are not available for each briefing, you will be provided insights and information on domestic and foreign policy issues from the Administration's most knowledgeable individuals.

The program is held at the Ronald Reagan Building. A swearing-in ceremony and reception, in your honor, conclude the program.

To accept my invitation, please register with the Office of Executive Resources Management by April 4, 2003. In the past, these programs have filled prior to the deadline, so send in your form right away. Enclosed are program and registration information.

Sincerely,

Kay Coles James
Director

BRIEFING FOR NEW SCHEDULE C APPOINTEES

APRIL 15, 2003

WHEN APRIL 15, 9:00 am - 6:00 pm . Registration check-in and continental breakfast begin at 8:15 am.

WHERE Amphitheater at the Ronald Reagan Building ♦1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20004.

WHAT The keynote address will be delivered by a senior Bush Administration official, followed by presentations on Ethics, Hatch Act, and high-priority issues for the Administration. Speakers will include prominent Administration officials and White House staff. Plan to be there. It is a program that you won't want to miss!

HOW TO REGISTER Fax your registration form and payment information to OPM at 202-606-0557 or 202-606-2126. We accept: Government-issued purchase cards or an agency Training Authorization Form (contact your training office for forms) and must receive all payment information by the first day of the briefing.

REGISTRATION DEADLINE April 4, 2003, at 4:00 p.m. or when we reach 200 nominations, whichever occurs first. Programs are very popular and tend to fill-up quickly. We will fax a confirmation notice of your registration to the number you provide us. OPM staff can only confirm your registration. We can not accept registrations received after the closing date or once we reach our limit.

CONFIRMATION NOTICES confirming your registration will be sent via fax or email by the Office of Personnel Management. A confirmation from your agency's training office does not mean you are registered with OPM. If you do not receive a notice from OPM by APRIL 15, please call 202-606-1632, we will gladly fax or email another one.

COST $395. This includes conference materials, continental breakfast, luncheon, coffee breaks, and an evening reception.

CANCELLATIONS Written cancellations or substitutions must be received by the registration closing date. If you cancel after that date, OPM will bill you for the full registration fee. Email requests to Shirley Sewell at sesewell@opm.gov or fax to 202-606-2126.

SWEARING-IN CEREMONY & RECEPTION The program concludes with a Federal Judge administering the oath of office, followed by a reception in your honor from 5:00 pm until 6:00 pm. If you wish, a photographer will take your picture with the officiating judge and your certificate. Business attire is appropriate. Due to limited space, family members and/or friends can not attend.

SPECIAL NEEDS Please tell us as soon as possible if you have any special needs. We are happy to provide interpreters and accommodate special diets, but must know in advance to prepare for your needs.

LOCAL TRANSPORTATION The Ronald Reagan Building is accessible via the Metrorail system (subway). We highly recommend using the subway, as commercial parking in the surrounding area is expensive and limited. To use the Metrorail, take the Blue or Orange line to Federal Triangle Station. As you exit the station, the Reagan Building is directly in front of you, across the plaza.

HOTELS Please contact your White House Liaison for hotels located near the Ronald Reagan Building and Metro stations

Interesting question. They have been dual-status for some time with copies maintained in both SS and WH, but we have been considering having all copies produced to WH. I will elaborate in morning.

Senators Kyl and Cornyn today introduced ISCRAA, a bill to apply an attorneys fee formula in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA would allow attorneys to receive fees of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. Because it applies to continuing fee payments from the state tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA would restore income with a present value of approximately $9 billion to the states. Attached please find: 1. a one-page summary of the bill; 2. a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover from the tobacco settlement fee awards under the bill; 3. a footnoted version of Senator Kyl's speech introducing the bill; 4. and the bill itself.

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. CORNYN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003" (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

REV_00162833

"SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

"(a) INITIAL TAXES.—There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(c) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION; EXCESS FEE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

"(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of—

"(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

"(ii) a reasonable fee based on—

"(I) the number of hours of non-duplicative, professional quality legal work provided by the collecting attorney of material value to the outcome of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (D) of subsection (h)(2),

"(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

"(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

"(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is—

"(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

"(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal

REV_00162837

work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

"(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

"(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

"(iv) LIMITATION.—An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES.—Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee—

"(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and

"(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

"(2) EXCESS FEE.—The term 'excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

"(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.—For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

"(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF.—For purposes of this section, the term 'applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

"(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—The term 'collecting attorney' means any person engaged in the practice of law who represents—

"(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

"(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

"(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty,

REV_00162840

whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

"(D) any assignee or other holder of claims described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

"(2) TAXABLE PERIOD.—The term 'taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of—

"(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or

"(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

"(3) CORRECTION.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess

REV_00162841

fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

"(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

"(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS.—In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

"(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE.—No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

"(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE.—Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

"(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT.—The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney—

"(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

"(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

"(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

REV_00162844

"(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including—

"(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

"(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

"(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

"(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

"(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

"(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

REV_00162845

"(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

"(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

"(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF.—The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

"(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations to prevent avoidance of the purposes of this section and regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.".

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

REV_00162846

(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 4963 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by inserting "4959," after "4958,".

(2) Subsection (e) of section 6213 of such Code is amended by inserting "4959 (relating to excess fee transactions)," before "4971".

(3) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 7422(g) of such Code are each amended by inserting "4959," after "4958,".

(4) The heading for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

_____ISCRAA: The Kyl-Cornyn Bill to Enforce Fiduciary Attorney Fee Standards in Mass Tort Litigation

The Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act (ISCRAA) limits attorneys fees to no more than 500% of reasonable hourly rates in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA uses an existing provision of the tax code to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. To avoid punitive tax rates, an attorney would be required to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the client. Because ISCRAA applies to current and future fees paid pursuant to the state Medicaid tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states.

ISCRAA's Benefits:

- Limiting speculative, fee-driven mass tort litigation. The current mass-tort litigation crisis is driven in large part by the enormous and unethical fees commanded by some plaintiffs attorneys. Because their fees are so grossly disproportionate to their actual efforts, these lawyers can pursue even speculative lawsuits that lack a legitimate foundation – even only an occasional victory produces massive profits. By requiring that fees be proportional to attorneys' actual work, ISCRAA inevitably will limit this type of litigation. To prevent evasion of its standards, ISCRAA also aggregates identical claims when brought against common defendants – thereby limiting the coercive effects of this type of litigation.

- Protecting Fiduciary Interests. Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 states, is the attorney's duty to not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Thus courts traditionally have read a reasonableness requirement into every attorneys fee contract.

- Protecting Interstate Commerce. Because of the large size of the litigations to which it applies, ISCRAA unquestionably is an appropriate exercise of Congress's power to regulate and protect interstate commerce. Experts have estimated that ISCRAA probably will apply to only 15-20 litigations a year. $100 million is a standard threshold used by the federal government to determine whether an economic transaction significantly impacts interstate commerce.

- Guaranteeing Mass-Tort Plaintiffs Access to Counsel. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA protects fiduciary interests, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in large lawsuits.

ISCRAA: RESTITUTION TO THE STATES

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

SENATOR KYL
INTRODUCTION OF ISCRAA

Mr. KYL: I rise today to introduce the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA). This legislation will restore to the states billions of dollars in revenue due to them from a massive lawsuit recently conducted on their behalf – the tobacco-related Medicaid expenses litigation. ISCRAA amends an existing provision of the federal tax code in order to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. By applying these standards to the attorneys who represented the states in the tobacco settlement, ISCRAA reasonably can be expected to restore to the states income with a present value of approximately $9 billion. I have included at the end of my statement a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover.

ISCRAA's tax formula is borrowed from the 1996 Tax Act's Intermediate Sanctions Tax (IST), which applies a two-step excise tax to any excessive or unreasonable compensation that the managers of a trust pay to themselves from the assets of the trust. The IST framework encourages the trustee to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the trust – when he does so, the IST's punitive taxes do not apply.

ISCRAA extends the IST to another type of trust relationship: that between a lawyer and his client. ISCRAA applies the IST tax formula to any unreasonable or excessive income that a lawyer collects from litigation resulting in a judgment or settlement in excess of $100 million. To avoid IST taxes, an attorney must restore the excessive portion of the fee to the client.

As my colleague Senator CORNYN will explain today, the ethical and legal abuses that resulted from the 1998 state tobacco settlement make the need for this legislation manifest. Senator CORNYN also will discuss the law of attorneys' fiduciary obligations, which establishes that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured.

I will discuss today how ISCRAA will affect massive litigations generally. In order to gauge the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee award, ISCRAA adopts and codifies a liberal version of the lodestar-multiplier system. As I will later explain in greater detail, ISCRAA allows fee multipliers of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This limit is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA's fee formula guarantees that attorneys' fiduciary obligations will be respected, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in these types of cases.

Massive Litigations and the Prospect of Tax Farming

Federal supervision of fee awards resulting from $100 million litigations is appropriate for several reasons. First, because of their shear size, these types of lawsuits inevitably operate as a tax on the consuming public. Few defendants actually can afford to pay such judgments with cash on hand. Instead, the affected industries simply will raise the prices that they charge to their customers.

This is exactly what has happened in the state Medicaid tobacco settlement – according to the leading proponents of that litigation. The first state attorney general to file suit against the tobacco companies has admitted that "what always happens in these cases is the industry passes the costs to the consumer."[1] Other commentators agree that this has occurred in the tobacco litigation. As one law-review article notes, "the [tobacco] settlement * * * is a tax because it's a set of payments made by tobacco companies that depend on how many packs they sell; in short, it looks like a tax and quacks like a tax."[2]

Because of the way that these massive judgments typically are satisfied, it is particularly important to ensure that attorneys are paid in proportion to the services that they provided – rather than solely on the basis of the size of the recovery. Again, the state tobacco settlement highlights the nature of the problem. As two of the leading academic commentators have noted, it is "very troubl[ing]" that under that agreement, "a group of private citizens [are] getting paid a percentage of a tax increase they helped pass."[3] The shear size of the tobacco settlement – and the fact that attorneys fees were based on this size, rather than on the attorneys' actual efforts – has given the fee awards an uncanny resemblance to the medieval practice of tax farming. In all but name, the government has licensed a group of private individuals to collect a tax from the consuming public.

I would emphasize at this point that ISCRAA is not an attack on the state tobacco lawsuits. The bill does not pass judgment on the merits or the appropriateness of this type of litigation. ISCRAA simply is designed to ensure that when such lawsuits are brought on the public's behalf, the public receive its fair share of the proceeds. If a state chooses to seek compensatory revenue from industry for past harms, then the resulting tax on the public – minus the reasonable value of the legal services actually provided – must go to the state treasury.

$100 Million Lawsuits Are Different

There are several reasons why $100 million is an appropriate threshold for applying ISCRAA's fee formula. First, the courts themselves have indicated that fee agreements based primarily on the size of the recovery tend to become unreasonable when judgements reach this size. As one court has stated, "in much smaller cases, a fee award of 33% does not present the danger of providing the plaintiff's counsel with the windfall that would accompany a 'megafund' settlement of $100 million or upwards. But it is quite different when the figures hit the really big time."[4] Or as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded [for attorneys fees] as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[5]

The logic of avoiding judgment-based awards in these very large cases is straightforward. As one court explains, "it is not 150 times more difficult to prepare, try, and settle a $150 million case than it is to try a $1 million case, but the application of a percentage comparable to that in a smaller case may yield an award 150 times greater."[6] Thus (according to another court) "there is considerable merit" to disallowing standard percentage awards as the "size of the [recovery] fund increases. In many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel."[7]

It also bears mention that because of its $100 million threshold, ISCRAA applies to a fairly limited universe of cases. As courts have remarked, "there are few so-called 'megafund' cases with settlements over $100 million."[8] In 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit attempted to catalogue all common-fund cases in federal court that resulted in recoveries greater than $100 million. Though such litigations have been more frequent in recent years, the Third Circuit identified only 22 such cases since 1985. See in re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 737 (3d Cir. 2001).

ISCRAA is somewhat broader than the criteria that Cendant Corp. employed to collect cases. ISCRAA is not limited to common-fund cases – it also applies to judgments won on behalf of tax-exempt entities or even single individuals. ISCRAA also applies to cases brought in state court, and it aggregates identical claims that are brought against common defendants in separate actions, in order to prevent evasion of its limits through the subdivision of actions. Nevertheless, ISCRAA's scope remains fairly narrow. An academic specialist who is familiar with developments in this field has reviewed the bill and concluded that because of its "relatively high threshold," ISCRAA probably would apply only to about 15-20 litigations per year. I will include a copy of this professor's letter to me in the congressional record.

Finally, a $100 million threshold also is appropriate because it limits ISCRAA's reach to litigations that are a natural subject of congress's authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is well-established that "Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress's power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

Guaranteeing Adequate Incentives to Plaintiffs' Lawyers

Another point that I would like to emphasize today is that ISCRAA is not an anti-plaintiffs' lawyer bill. It is not stingy toward trial attorneys. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts' practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers' professional associations.

Federal courts primarily rely on two systems for calculating attorneys fees in cases (such as class actions) in which they are required to set "reasonable fees:" the percentage method and the lodestar-multiplier method. The percentage method, as its name implies, calculates fees as a percentage of the total recovery. The lodestar system, by contrast, requires a court to first calculate a fee based on the number of hours that the lawyer worked multiplied by prevailing hourly rates (the "lodestar"). The court then multiplies this lodestar fee again in order to reward the attorney for the risk of nonpayment of fees that he assumed and for any exceptional services that he provided.

Over the last thirty years, courts have moved back and forth between these two systems.[9] Only a few courts make lodestar-multipliers the exclusive means of awarding attorneys fees. But as one academic commentator has noted, "lodestar, or hours-based methods, have been adopted in every [federal judicial] circuit."[10]

And more importantly, in large-recovery cases, there has been very little difference between lodestar and percentage systems. This is because even when courts apply a percentage to calculate fees, and as judgements become very large, courts typically also calculate a reasonable lodestar in order to determine what constitutes a reasonable percentage. Thus, again, as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[11]

Courts have been wary of awarding fees based on percentages alone. As one state supreme court explains:

> "to begin the assessment by arbitrarily picking a percentage amount without any reliance on a cognizable structure invites decisions that are nonobjective and inconsistent. What constitutes a reasonable percentage may differ from one judge to another depending on each judge's predilections, background, and geographical location in the state."[12]

Thus "courts that employ the percentage approach appear to be motivated in part by a lodestar dynamic. Because courts are reluctant to give fee awards totally incommensurate with the efforts of the attorneys, percentage awards generally decrease as the amount of the recovery increases."[13]

One result of the cross-use of the lodestar and percentage systems is that even when courts use the percentage system, those awards overwhelmingly tend to reflect a reasonable lodestar multiplier. Therefore, even percentage-based cases tend to provide evidence of the range of multipliers that the courts consider to be reasonable.

In 2001, the Third Circuit "set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used."[14] (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and "the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99." And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.[15]

Other courts, surveying smaller cases than the $100 million recoveries examined in Cendant Corp., have identified larger multipliers. One federal district court has "observe[d] that in virtually every case where the court notes a lodestar but awards fees based upon a percentage, the lodestar multiplier converted from this percentage is in the range of 1 to 4."[16] Another federal district court has found that "the range of lodestar multipliers in large and complicated class actions runs from a low of 2.26 to a high of 4.5."[17]

By contrast, some courts have declared that they would allow only lower multipliers. One federal court has stated that "only in the most exceptional circumstances would this court award a multiplier of 3 or greater. * * * this court believes that lodestars enhanced by multipliers less than 3 should adequately compensate even the most talented counsel."[18] And the Seventh Circuit has suggested that "it may be that a doubling of the lodestar would provide a sensible ceiling."[19]

On the other hand, the Florida Supreme Court – which is generally regarded as one of the more plaintiff-friendly courts in the United States – has announced that:

> "we set the maximum multiplier available in this common-fund category of cases at 5. * * * * [A] multiplier which increases fees to five times the accepted hourly rate is sufficient to alleviate the contingency risk factor involved and attract high level counsel to common fund cases while producing a fee that remains within the bounds of reasonableness. We emphasize that 5 is a maximum multiplier."[20]

ISCRAA adopts this more liberal standard. It allows fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. ISCRAA awards multipliers based on two criteria: it allows up to 300% to be added onto the amount of reasonable hourly fees if a case that involved a substantial risk of nonrecovery of fees, and allows an additional 100% add-on if the attorney provided exceptional services that improved the plaintiff's recovery.

The criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as necessary prerequisites to the legitimacy of a contingency fee. "Courts in general have insisted that a contingent fee be truly contingent. The typically elevated fee reflecting the risk to the lawyer of receiving no fee will be permitted only if the representation indeed involves a significant degree of risk." Charles W. Wolfram, MODERN LEGAL ETHICS § 9.4, at 532 (1986). The risk requirement has been recognized ever since contingency fees first were allowed in the United States. The American Bar Association even noted at that time that "a contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by law, should be reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation." ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 13 (1908). Indeed, even the professional associations of plaintiffs' attorneys have, at times, acknowledged that contingent fees should be based on an actual contingency. In a guide to its members, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America has "recommend[ed]" that attorneys "exercise sound judgment in using a percentage in the contingent fee contract that is commensurate with the risk, cost and effort required." ATLA, KEYS TO THE COURTHOUSE: QUICK FACTS ON THE CONTINGENCY FEE SYSTEM 13 (1994).

The criteria that ISCRAA employs are universally accepted – and the limits that it sets should be universally acceptable. ISCRAA is not intended to alter the considered standards of any jurisdiction. Rather, it is intended to enforce those standards – and to correct the occasional extreme outlier. Because ISCRAA incorporates a fee formula that is substantially more liberal than the usual practices of the federal courts in $100 million cases, we can be confident that high-quality legal representation will remain available to plaintiffs in these large litigations. See, e.g. in re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (RICO and Commodities Exchange Act case resulting in $116 million recovery; attorneys reviewed millions of pages of documents located throughout the world, many requiring translation from Japanese; federal district court awards multiplier of 250% for total fee of $32 million).

Fiduciary Restraints on Attorney Fee Contracts

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."[21] (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

> "[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."[22]

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."[23] (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."[24] (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."[25] (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

> "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."[26]

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

> "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[27]

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

> "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[28]

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."[29] (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."[30] (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA's Effective Date

Another subject that I would like to address today is ISCRAA's effective date. ISCRAA applies to attorney fee payments received after June 1, 2002. This effective date is appropriate under the circumstances of the state tobacco settlement for several reasons: first, Congress routinely enacts major tax legislation with effective dates that look back much further than does ISCRAA. The Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) ("A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client"); Trinkle v. Leeney, 650 N.E.2d 749, 754 (Ind.Ct.App.1995) ("Under no circumstances is a lawyer entitled to more than the reasonable value of his or her services. Supreme Court has "repeatedly upheld [such moderately] retroactive tax legislation against a due process challenge." United States v. Carlton, 512 U.S. 26, 30-31 (1994); see id. at 33 (upholding tax whose "actual retroactive effect * * * extended for a period only slightly greater than one year").

Second, ISCRAA is not even truly retroactive. ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorneys fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."[31] (Emphasis added.)

As I described earlier, to enforce fiduciary standards, ISCRAA codifies and applies a very generous version of the fee multiplier system, allowing attorneys fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This is considerably more generous than what federal courts typically allow in large-judgment cases. No attorney can be heard to complain that he is subjected to a law that is more generous than his existing fiduciary obligations.

Further, none of the tobacco-settlement attorneys can reasonably maintain that they have a vested right to see their fiduciary duties to the states go unenforced. Nevertheless, in order to be fair to all parties, ISCRAA's excise taxes are applied only to fees that were paid after June 1, 2002. By this date, all of the tobacco lawyers twice had received notice from George W. Bush that he intended to enact legislation to enforce their fiduciary obligations. In February 2000, then-candidate Bush promised that he would "extend[] the 'excess benefits' provision of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities," with "the reasonableness of the fees * * * [to] be determined by the standard judicial 'lodestar' method." And as early as February 2001, the current Administration announced that it anticipated providing "additional public health resources for the States from the President's proposal to extend fiduciary responsibilities to the representatives of States in tobacco lawsuits." See A BLUEPRINT FOR NEW BEGINNINGS: A RESPONSIBLE BUDGET FOR AMERICA'S PRIORITIES 80, Office of Management and Budget, February 28, 2001.

Under ISCRAA, all of the attorneys who participated in the state tobacco settlement still will be very liberally compensated. Because ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. Every one of the tobacco lawyers will have more than enough money left to pay for the yachts, luxury cars, and vacation homes that were purchased with the tobacco proceeds. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

State Recovery of Excess MSA Payments

But most importantly, because ISCRAA applies to the last year's worth of tobacco fee payments, and to all future payments, it will return a substantial amount of funds to the states – money that already should belong to the states under any reasonable interpretation of fiduciary standards. It is critical that these funds be restored in this time of widespread fiscal crisis. Today a large number of the states face massive budget deficits that threaten their ability to provide health care to the indigent, to fully fund public education, and to guarantee adequate and effective law enforcement. When such needs risk going unmet, fee abuses that cost the states billions of dollars simply can no longer be ignored. The states must receive their fair share of the tobacco settlement proceeds – funds that are badly needed to support basic public services.

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state,

REV_00162866

California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

Subject: Kyl-Cornyn mass tort fees bill

Senators Kyl and Cornyn today introduced ISCRAA, a bill to apply an attorneys fee formula in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA would allow attorneys to receive fees of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. Because it applies to continuing fee payments from the state tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA would restore income with a present value of approximately $9 billion to the states. Attached please find: 1. a one-page summary of the bill; 2. a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover from the tobacco settlement fee awards under the bill; 3. a footnoted version of Senator Kyl's speech introducing the bill; 4. and the bill itself.

108TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. CORNYN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003" (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

REV_00162879

"SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

"(a) INITIAL TAXES.—There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

"(c) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION; EXCESS FEE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

"(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of—

"(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

"(ii) a reasonable fee based on—

"(I) the number of hours of non-duplicative, professional quality legal work provided by the collecting attorney of material value to the outcome of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (D) of subsection (h)(2),

"(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

"(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

"(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is—

"(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

"(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal

work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

"(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

"(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

"(iv) LIMITATION.—An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

"(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES.—Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee—

"(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and

"(ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

"(2) EXCESS FEE.—The term 'excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

"(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.—For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

"(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF.—For purposes of this section, the term 'applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

"(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) COLLECTING ATTORNEY.—The term 'collecting attorney' means any person engaged in the practice of law who represents—

"(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

"(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

"(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty,

REV_00162886

whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or

"(D) any assignee or other holder of claims described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

"(2) TAXABLE PERIOD.—The term 'taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of—

"(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or

"(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

"(3) CORRECTION.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess

REV_00162887

fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

"(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

"(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS.—In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

"(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE.—No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

"(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE.—Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

"(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT.—The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney—

"(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

"(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

"(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

REV_00162890

"(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including—

"(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

"(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

"(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

"(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

"(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

"(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

REV_00162891

"(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

"(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

"(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF.—The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

"(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM.—The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations to prevent avoidance of the purposes of this section and regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.".

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

REV_00162892

(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 4963 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by inserting "4959," after "4958,".

(2) Subsection (e) of section 6213 of such Code is amended by inserting "4959 (relating to excess fee transactions)," before "4971".

(3) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 7422(g) of such Code are each amended by inserting "4959," after "4958,".

_____ISCRAA: The Kyl-Cornyn Bill to Enforce Fiduciary Attorney Fee Standards in Mass Tort Litigation

The Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act (ISCRAA) limits attorneys fees to no more than 500% of reasonable hourly rates in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA uses an existing provision of the tax code to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. To avoid punitive tax rates, an attorney would be required to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the client. Because ISCRAA applies to current and future fees paid pursuant to the state Medicaid tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states.

ISCRAA's Benefits:

- Limiting speculative, fee-driven mass tort litigation. The current mass-tort litigation crisis is driven in large part by the enormous and unethical fees commanded by some plaintiffs attorneys. Because their fees are so grossly disproportionate to their actual efforts, these lawyers can pursue even speculative lawsuits that lack a legitimate foundation – even only an occasional victory produces massive profits. By requiring that fees be proportional to attorneys' actual work, ISCRAA inevitably will limit this type of litigation. To prevent evasion of its standards, ISCRAA also aggregates identical claims when brought against common defendants – thereby limiting the coercive effects of this type of litigation.

- Protecting Fiduciary Interests. Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 states, is the attorney's duty to not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Thus courts traditionally have read a reasonableness requirement into every attorneys fee contract.

- Protecting Interstate Commerce. Because of the large size of the litigations to which it applies, ISCRAA unquestionably is an appropriate exercise of Congress's power to regulate and protect interstate commerce. Experts have estimated that ISCRAA probably will apply to only 15-20 litigations a year. $100 million is a standard threshold used by the federal government to determine whether an economic transaction significantly impacts interstate commerce.

- Guaranteeing Mass-Tort Plaintiffs Access to Counsel. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA protects fiduciary interests, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in large lawsuits.

ISCRAA: RESTITUTION TO THE STATES

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

SENATOR KYL
INTRODUCTION OF ISCRAA

Mr. KYL: I rise today to introduce the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA). This legislation will restore to the states billions of dollars in revenue due to them from a massive lawsuit recently conducted on their behalf – the tobacco-related Medicaid expenses litigation. ISCRAA amends an existing provision of the federal tax code in order to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. By applying these standards to the attorneys who represented the states in the tobacco settlement, ISCRAA reasonably can be expected to restore to the states income with a present value of approximately $9 billion. I have included at the end of my statement a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover.

ISCRAA's tax formula is borrowed from the 1996 Tax Act's Intermediate Sanctions Tax (IST), which applies a two-step excise tax to any excessive or unreasonable compensation that the managers of a trust pay to themselves from the assets of the trust. The IST framework encourages the trustee to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the trust – when he does so, the IST's punitive taxes do not apply.

ISCRAA extends the IST to another type of trust relationship: that between a lawyer and his client. ISCRAA applies the IST tax formula to any unreasonable or excessive income that a lawyer collects from litigation resulting in a judgment or settlement in excess of $100 million. To avoid IST taxes, an attorney must restore the excessive portion of the fee to the client.

As my colleague Senator CORNYN will explain today, the ethical and legal abuses that resulted from the 1998 state tobacco settlement make the need for this legislation manifest. Senator CORNYN also will discuss the law of attorneys' fiduciary obligations, which establishes that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured.

I will discuss today how ISCRAA will affect massive litigations generally. In order to gauge the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee award, ISCRAA adopts and codifies a liberal version of the lodestar-multiplier system. As I will later explain in greater detail, ISCRAA allows fee multipliers of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This limit is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA's fee formula guarantees that attorneys' fiduciary obligations will be respected, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in these types of cases.

Massive Litigations and the Prospect of Tax Farming

Federal supervision of fee awards resulting from $100 million litigations is appropriate for several reasons. First, because of their shear size, these types of lawsuits inevitably operate as a tax on the consuming public. Few defendants actually can afford to pay such judgments with cash on hand. Instead, the affected industries simply will raise the prices that they charge to their customers.

This is exactly what has happened in the state Medicaid tobacco settlement – according to the leading proponents of that litigation. The first state attorney general to file suit against the tobacco companies has admitted that "what always happens in these cases is the industry passes the costs to the consumer."[1] Other commentators agree that this has occurred in the tobacco litigation. As one law-review article notes, "the [tobacco] settlement * * * is a tax because it's a set of payments made by tobacco companies that depend on how many packs they sell; in short, it looks like a tax and quacks like a tax."[2]

Because of the way that these massive judgments typically are satisfied, it is particularly important to ensure that attorneys are paid in proportion to the services that they provided – rather than solely on the basis of the size of the recovery. Again, the state tobacco settlement highlights the nature of the problem. As two of the leading academic commentators have noted, it is "very troubl[ing]" that under that agreement, "a group of private citizens [are] getting paid a percentage of a tax increase they helped pass."[3] The shear size of the tobacco settlement – and the fact that attorneys fees were based on this size, rather than on the attorneys' actual efforts – has given the fee awards an uncanny resemblance to the medieval practice of tax farming. In all but name, the government has licensed a group of private individuals to collect a tax from the consuming public.

I would emphasize at this point that ISCRAA is not an attack on the state tobacco lawsuits. The bill does not pass judgment on the merits or the appropriateness of this type of litigation. ISCRAA simply is designed to ensure that when such lawsuits are brought on the public's behalf, the public receive its fair share of the proceeds. If a state chooses to seek compensatory revenue from industry for past harms, then the resulting tax on the public – minus the reasonable value of the legal services actually provided – must go to the state treasury.

$100 Million Lawsuits Are Different

There are several reasons why $100 million is an appropriate threshold for applying ISCRAA's fee formula. First, the courts themselves have indicated that fee agreements based primarily on the size of the recovery tend to become unreasonable when judgements reach this size. As one court has stated, "in much smaller cases, a fee award of 33% does not present the danger of providing the plaintiff's counsel with the windfall that would accompany a 'megafund' settlement of $100 million or upwards. But it is quite different when the figures hit the really big time."[4] Or as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded [for attorneys fees] as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[5]

The logic of avoiding judgment-based awards in these very large cases is straightforward. As one court explains, "it is not 150 times more difficult to prepare, try, and settle a $150 million case than it is to try a $1 million case, but the application of a percentage comparable to that in a smaller case may yield an award 150 times greater."[6] Thus (according to another court) "there is considerable merit" to disallowing standard percentage awards as the "size of the [recovery] fund increases. In many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel."[7]

It also bears mention that because of its $100 million threshold, ISCRAA applies to a fairly limited universe of cases. As courts have remarked, "there are few so-called 'megafund' cases with settlements over $100 million."[8] In 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit attempted to catalogue all common-fund cases in federal court that resulted in recoveries greater than $100 million. Though such litigations have been more frequent in recent years, the Third Circuit identified only 22 such cases since 1985. See in re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 737 (3d Cir. 2001).

ISCRAA is somewhat broader than the criteria that Cendant Corp. employed to collect cases. ISCRAA is not limited to common-fund cases – it also applies to judgments won on behalf of tax-exempt entities or even single individuals. ISCRAA also applies to cases brought in state court, and it aggregates identical claims that are brought against common defendants in separate actions, in order to prevent evasion of its limits through the subdivision of actions. Nevertheless, ISCRAA's scope remains fairly narrow. An academic specialist who is familiar with developments in this field has reviewed the bill and concluded that because of its "relatively high threshold," ISCRAA probably would apply only to about 15-20 litigations per year. I will include a copy of this professor's letter to me in the congressional record.

Finally, a $100 million threshold also is appropriate because it limits ISCRAA's reach to litigations that are a natural subject of congress's authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is well-established that "Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress's power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

Guaranteeing Adequate Incentives to Plaintiffs' Lawyers

Another point that I would like to emphasize today is that ISCRAA is not an anti-plaintiffs' lawyer bill. It is not stingy toward trial attorneys. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts' practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers' professional associations.

Federal courts primarily rely on two systems for calculating attorneys fees in cases (such as class actions) in which they are required to set "reasonable fees:" the percentage method and the lodestar-multiplier method. The percentage method, as its name implies, calculates fees as a percentage of the total recovery. The lodestar system, by contrast, requires a court to first calculate a fee based on the number of hours that the lawyer worked multiplied by prevailing hourly rates (the "lodestar"). The court then multiplies this lodestar fee again in order to reward the attorney for the risk of nonpayment of fees that he assumed and for any exceptional services that he provided.

Over the last thirty years, courts have moved back and forth between these two systems.[9] Only a few courts make lodestar-multipliers the exclusive means of awarding attorneys fees. But as one academic commentator has noted, "lodestar, or hours-based methods, have been adopted in every [federal judicial] circuit."[10]

And more importantly, in large-recovery cases, there has been very little difference between lodestar and percentage systems. This is because even when courts apply a percentage to calculate fees, and as judgements become very large, courts typically also calculate a reasonable lodestar in order to determine what constitutes a reasonable percentage. Thus, again, as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."[11]

Courts have been wary of awarding fees based on percentages alone. As one state supreme court explains:

> "to begin the assessment by arbitrarily picking a percentage amount without any reliance on a cognizable structure invites decisions that are nonobjective and inconsistent. What constitutes a reasonable percentage may differ from one judge to another depending on each judge's predilections, background, and geographical location in the state."[12]

Thus "courts that employ the percentage approach appear to be motivated in part by a lodestar dynamic. Because courts are reluctant to give fee awards totally incommensurate with the efforts of the attorneys, percentage awards generally decrease as the amount of the recovery increases."[13]

One result of the cross-use of the lodestar and percentage systems is that even when courts use the percentage system, those awards overwhelmingly tend to reflect a reasonable lodestar multiplier. Therefore, even percentage-based cases tend to provide evidence of the range of multipliers that the courts consider to be reasonable.

In 2001, the Third Circuit "set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used."[14] (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and "the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99." And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.[15]

Other courts, surveying smaller cases than the $100 million recoveries examined in Cendant Corp., have identified larger multipliers. One federal district court has "observe[d] that in virtually every case where the court notes a lodestar but awards fees based upon a percentage, the lodestar multiplier converted from this percentage is in the range of 1 to 4."[16] Another federal district court has found that "the range of lodestar multipliers in large and complicated class actions runs from a low of 2.26 to a high of 4.5."[17]

By contrast, some courts have declared that they would allow only lower multipliers. One federal court has stated that "only in the most exceptional circumstances would this court award a multiplier of 3 or greater. * * * this court believes that lodestars enhanced by multipliers less than 3 should adequately compensate even the most talented counsel."[18] And the Seventh Circuit has suggested that "it may be that a doubling of the lodestar would provide a sensible ceiling."[19]

On the other hand, the Florida Supreme Court – which is generally regarded as one of the more plaintiff-friendly courts in the United States – has announced that:

> "we set the maximum multiplier available in this common-fund category of cases at 5. * * * * [A] multiplier which increases fees to five times the accepted hourly rate is sufficient to alleviate the contingency risk factor involved and attract high level counsel to common fund cases while producing a fee that remains within the bounds of reasonableness. We emphasize that 5 is a maximum multiplier."[20]

ISCRAA adopts this more liberal standard. It allows fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. ISCRAA awards multipliers based on two criteria: it allows up to 300% to be added onto the amount of reasonable hourly fees if a case that involved a substantial risk of nonrecovery of fees, and allows an additional 100% add-on if the attorney provided exceptional services that improved the plaintiff's recovery.

The criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as necessary prerequisites to the legitimacy of a contingency fee. "Courts in general have insisted that a contingent fee be truly contingent. The typically elevated fee reflecting the risk to the lawyer of receiving no fee will be permitted only if the representation indeed involves a significant degree of risk." Charles W. Wolfram, MODERN LEGAL ETHICS § 9.4, at 532 (1986). The risk requirement has been recognized ever since contingency fees first were allowed in the United States. The American Bar Association even noted at that time that "a contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by law, should be reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation." ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 13 (1908). Indeed, even the professional associations of plaintiffs' attorneys have, at times, acknowledged that contingent fees should be based on an actual contingency. In a guide to its members, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America has "recommend[ed]" that attorneys "exercise sound judgment in using a percentage in the contingent fee contract that is commensurate with the risk, cost and effort required." ATLA, KEYS TO THE COURTHOUSE: QUICK FACTS ON THE CONTINGENCY FEE SYSTEM 13 (1994).
