We believe that under its best reading, Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam), reflects and endorses this distinction, and that suggestions to the contrary misread the opinion. First, Buckley cites both Germaine and Auffmordt approvingly. See id. at 125-26 & n.162. Second, in several of its statements of the definition of "officers," Buckley, sometimes citing Germaine explicitly, says that the term applies to appointees or appointed officials who exercise significant authority under federal law, thus recognizing the possibility that non-appointees might sometimes exercise authority under federal law. See, e.g., 424 U.S. at 131 ("Officers" are "all appointed officials exercising responsibility [*55] under the public laws"). It is true that at other points in its opinion, the Buckley Court used language that, taken in isolation, might suggest that the Appointments Clause applies to persons who, although they do not hold positions in the public service of the United States, exercise significant authority pursuant to federal law. See id. at 141. However, we think such a reading of Buckley is unwarranted. So understood, Buckley must be taken to have overruled, sub silentio, Germaine and Auffmordt -- cases upon which it expressly relies in its analysis, see id. at 125-26 & n.162 -- and its repeated quotation of the Germaine definition of "officer" as "all persons who can be said to hold an office under the government" would make no sense. The apparently unlimited language of some passages has a simpler explanation: there was no question that the officials at issue in Buckley held "employment[s]," Maurice, 26 F. Cas. at 1214, under the federal government, and thus the question of the inapplicability of the Appointments Clause to persons not employed by the federal government was not before the Court. The post-Buckley Supreme Court has often assessed [*56] the validity of statutes that would starkly pose Appointments Clause issues if, in fact, the Court had adopted the position that wielding significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States, without more, requires appointment in conformity with that Clause. In none of these cases has the Court even hinted at the existence of an Appointments Clause issue. See, e.g., Thomas v. Union Carbide Agric. Prods. Co., 473 U.S. 568 (1985) (upholding statutory requirement that registrants under a federal regulatory scheme submit to binding arbitration conducted by a panel of arbitrators who are private individuals not appointed by one of the methods specified in the Appointments Clause and are subject only to limited judicial review); FERC v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. 742 (1982) (upholding requirement that states enforce federal regulatory scheme relating to utilities); Lake Carriers' Ass'n v. Kelley, 456 U.S. 985 (1982) (mem.), aff'g 527 F. Supp. 1114 (E.D. Mich. 1981) (three-judge panel) (upholding statute that granted states authority to ban sewage emissions from all vessels); Train v. National Resources Defense Council, Inc., 421 U.S. 60 (1975) (construing provision [*57] of Clean Air Act that gave states authority to devise and enforce plans for achieving congressionally defined, national air quality standards). The Supreme Court's decision in Buckley, we conclude, did not modify the long-settled principle that a person who is not an officer under Hartwell need not be appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. Some recent opinions of this Office have read Buckley more broadly as repudiating the historical understanding of the Appointments Clause and endorsing the proposition we reject here -- that is, that all persons exercising significant federal authority, by virtue of that fact alone, must be appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. We are aware of four opinions in which our disagreement with this understanding of Buckley would cause us to reach a different conclusion on the Appointments Clause question presented. See Constitutionality of Subsection 4117(b) of Enrolled Bill H.R. 5835, the "Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990," 14 Op. O.L.C. 170, 171 (1990) (preliminary print) (statutory scheme under which congressional delegations and physicians' organizations of certain states exercise "significant authority" [*58] violates Appointments Clause); Constitutionality of the Qui Tam Provisions of the False Claims Act, 13 Op. O.L.C. 249, 264-65 (1989) (preliminary print) (provisions of False Claims Act authorizing qui tam suits by private parties violate Appointments Clause because qui tam relators exercise "significant governmental power"); Representation of the United States Sentencing Commission in Litigation, 12 Op. O.L.C. 21, 31-33 (1988) (preliminary print) (private party acting as counsel for United States agency must be appointed pursuant to Appointments Clause); Proposed Legislation to Establish the National Indian Gaming Commission, 11 Op. O.L.C. 73, 74 (1987) (Appointments Clause problems raised where state and local officials given authority to waive federal statute). Our conclusion that the more limited historical understanding of the Appointments Clause is correct requires us to disavow the Appointments Clause holdings of those opinions. To the extent that our current reading of Buckley is inconsistent with the Appointments Clause reasoning of other opinions of this office, that reasoning is superseded. See Common Legislative Encroachments on Executive Branch Constitutional Authority, [*59] 13 Op. O.L.C. 299, 300 (1989) (preliminary print).

REV_00260110

b. The Exercise of Significant Authority. Chief Justice Marshall's observation that "[a]lthough an office is 'an employment,' it does not follow that every employment is an office," United States v. Maurice, 26 F. Cas. 1211, 1214 (C.C.D. Va. 1823) (No. 15,747) (Marshall, Circuit Justice), points to a second distinction as well -- although not one that was at issue in Maurice itself. An officer is distinguished from other full-time employees of the federal government by the extent of authority he or she can properly exercise. As the Court expressed this in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam):

> We think that the term "Officers of the United States" as used in Art. II, defined to include "all persons who can be said to hold an office under the government" in United States v. Germaine, [means] that any appointee exercising significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States . 20. 20. must . 20. 20. be appointed in the manner prescribed by [the Appointments Clause].

Id. at 125-26 (emphasis added). See Appointments in the Department of Commerce and Labor, 29 Op. Att'y [*60] Gen. 116, 118-19, 122-23 (1911) (official authorized to perform all the duties of the Commissioner of Fisheries, who was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, was an officer; scientists, technicians, and superintendent of mechanical plant in the Bureau of Standards were employees rather than officers); Second Deputy Comptroller of the Currency -- Appointment, 26 Op. Att'y Gen. 627, 628 (1908) ("The officer is distinguished from the employee in the greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position"; official authorized to exercise powers of the Comptroller of the Currency in the absence of the Comptroller was clearly an officer). In contrast, "[e]mployees are lesser functionaries subordinate to officers of the United States." Id. at 126 n.162.

The distinction between constitutional officers and other employees is a long-standing one. See, e.g., Burnap v. United States, 252 U.S. 512, 516-19 (1920) (landscape architect in the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds was an employee, not an officer); Second Deputy Comptroller of the Currency -- Appointment, 26 Op. Att'y Gen. 627, 628 (1908) (Deputy Comptroller of the Currency was "manifestly an officer [*61] of the United States" rather than an employee). At an early point, the Court noted the importance of this distinction for Appointments Clause analysis. See Germaine, 99 U.S. at 509. The status of certain officials traditionally appointed in modes identical to those designated by the Appointments Clause is somewhat anomalous. For instance, low-grade military officers have always been appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and understood to be "Officers of the United States" in the constitutional sense; in Weiss v. United States, 114 S. Ct. 752, 757 (1994), the Supreme Court recently indicated its agreement with that understanding. It is at least arguable, however, that the authority exercised by second lieutenants and ensigns is so limited and subordinate that their analogues in the civil sphere clearly would be employees. There are at least three possible explanations. (1) Congress may make anyone in public service an officer simply by requiring appointment in one of the modes designated by the Appointments Clause. The Clause, on this view, mandates officer status for officials with significant governmental authority but does not restrict the status to such [*62] officials. This apparently was the nineteenth-century view, see, e.g., United States v. Perkins, 116 U.S. 483, 484 (1886) (cadet engineer at the Naval Academy was an officer because "Congress has by express enactment vested the appointment of cadet-engineers in the Secretary of the Navy and when thus appointed they become officers and not employees"). While recognizing that Congress may make anyone in the public service an officer, Attorney General Kennedy rejected the argument that Congress evinces and effectuates such an intention merely by providing for the public servant to be appointed by a method that coincidentally conforms with the Appointments Clause. See Communications Satellite Corporation, 42 Op. Att'y Gen. 165, 167 (1962) ("it does not follow" from the Constitution that "every appointment authorized by law which is preceded by nomination and confirmation necessarily renders the appointee an officer"). (2) Certain officials are constitutional officers because in the early Republic their positions were of greater relative significance in the federal government than they are today. Cf. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 126 (postmasters first class and clerks of district courts [*63] are officers). (3) Even the lowest ranking military or naval officer is a potential commander of United States armed forces in combat -- and, indeed, is in theory a commander of large military or naval units by presidential direction or in the event of catastrophic casualties among his or her superiors.

REV_00260111

The Supreme Court relied on the officer/employee distinction in its recent decision in Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868 (1991). In Freytag, the Court rejected the argument that special trial judges of the Tax Court are employees rather than officers because "they lack authority to enter a final decision" and thus arguably are mere subordinates of the regular Tax Court judges. In fact, as the Court pointed out, the chief judge of the Tax Court can assign special trial judges to render final decisions in certain types of cases, a power that the government conceded rendered them, in those circumstances, "inferior officers who exercise independent authority." The Court rejected the argument that special trial judges could be deemed inferior officers for some purposes and employees for others. 501 U.S. at 882. Id. at 881. The Court put some weight on the fact that [*64] the position of special trial judge, as well as its duties, salary, and mode of appointment, are specifically established by statute; The text of the Appointments Clause implies that offices in the sense of the Clause must be established in the Constitution or by statute. See U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 202, cl. 202 (specifying certain officers and then referring to "all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law"). the Court also emphasized that special trial judges "exercise significant discretion" in carrying out various important functions relating to litigation in the Tax Court. Id. at 881-82.

Applying the same understanding of the distinction between officers and employees, this Office has concluded that the members of a commission that has purely advisory functions "need not be officers of the United States" because they "possess no enforcement authority or power to bind the Government." Proposed Commission on Deregulation of International Ocean Shipping, 7 Op. O.L.C. 202, 202-03 (1983). For that reason, the creation by Congress of presidential advisory committees composed, in whole [*65] or in part, of congressional nominees or even of members of Congress does not raise Appointments Clause concerns.

Since employees do not wield independent discretion and act only at the direction of officers, they do not in their own right "exercis[e] responsibility under the public laws of the Nation," Buckley, 424 U.S. at 131. That an employee may not exercise independent discretion does not, of course, mean that his or her duties may not encompass responsibilities requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion under the ultimate control and supervision of an officer. In Steele v. United States (No. 202), 267 U.S. 505, 508 (1925), the Supreme Court noted that a "deputy marshal is not in the constitutional sense an officer of the United States," yet "is called upon to exercise great responsibility and discretion" in "the enforcement of the peace of the United States, as that is embraced in the enforcement of federal law." But deputy marshals act at the direction of "the United States marshal under whom they serve," id., who is an officer in the constitutional sense. As a constitutional matter, therefore, an employee may be selected in whatever manner Congress [*66] directs. Conversely, "any appointee" in federal service who "exercis[es] significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States" must be an officer in the constitutional sense and must be appointed in a manner consistent with the Appointments Clause. See Appointment and Removal of Inspectors of Customs, 4 Op. Att'y Gen. 162, 164 (1843) (Congress may not provide for the appointment of "any employe[e], coming fairly within the definition of an inferior officer of the government," except by a mode consistent with the Appointments Clause). 424 U.S. at 126. Congress and the President may not avoid the strictures of the Clause by vesting federal employees with the independent or discretionary responsibility to perform any "significant governmental duty." Id. at 141. Buckley illustrates this last point. The FEC commissioners appointed by congressional officials were undoubtedly employees of the federal government but they could not constitutionally exercise the enforcement powers the statute attempted to grant them because their mode of appointment precluded them from being officers. 424 U.S. at 137-41.

REV_00260112

c. BAppointment to a Position of Employment within the Federal [*67] Government. Finally, United States v. Hartwell, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 385 (1868), and the other major decisions defining "Officers of the United States" all reflect the historical understanding that a constitutional officer is an individual who is appointed to his or her office by the federal government. The Appointments Clause simply is not implicated when significant authority is devolved upon non-federal actors. The delegation to private persons or non-federal government officials of federal-law authority, sometimes incorrectly analyzed as raising Appointments Clause questions, can raise genuine questions under other constitutional doctrines, such as the non-delegation doctrine and the general separation of powers principle. Compare Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians v. United States, 841 F. Supp. 1479, 1486-89 (D. Or. 1994) (confusing Appointments Clause with separation of powers analysis in holding invalid a delegation to a state governor) with United States v. Ferry County, 511 F. Supp. 546, 552 (E.D. Wash. 1981) (correctly dismissing Appointments Clause argument and analyzing delegation to county commissioners under non-delegation doctrine). In Hartwell the [*68] Court stated, "[a]n office is a public station, or employment, conferred by the appointment of government. 20. 20. 20. The employment of the defendant was in the public service of the United States." Id. at 393; see also United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 510 (1879) (founders intended appointment pursuant to the Appointments Clause only for "persons who can be said to hold an office under the government about to be established under the Constitution"). It is a conceptual confusion to argue that federal laws delegating authority to state officials create federal "offices," which are then filled by (improperly appointed) state officials. Rather, the "public station, or employment" has been created by state law; the federal statute simply adds federal authority to a pre-existing state office. Accordingly, the substantiality of the delegated authority is immaterial to the Appointments Clause conclusion. See Seattle Master Builders Ass'n v. Pacific Northwest Elec. Power & Conservation Planning Council, 786 F.2d 1359, 1365 (9th Cir. 1986) ("because the Council members do not serve pursuant to federal law," it is "immaterial whether they exercise some significant executive [*69] or administrative authority over federal activity"), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1059 (1987). An analogous point applies to delegations made to private individuals: the simple assignment of some duties under federal law, even significant ones, does not by itself pose an Appointments Clause problem. One might also view delegations to private individuals as raising the same considerations as suggested by the distinction drawn earlier between appointee and independent contractor -- so long as the statute does not create such tenure, duration, emoluments and duties as would be associated with a public office, the individual is not the occupant of a constitutional office but is, rather, a private party who has assumed or been delegated some federal responsibilities.

In our view, therefore, the lower federal courts have been correct in rejecting Appointments Clause challenges to the exercise of federally derived authority by state officials, See, e.g., Seattle Master Builders, 786 F.2d at 1364-66. The particular state officials at issue were serving on an entity created by an interstate compact established with the consent of as a vital check against tyranny." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 121 (1976) (per curiam). In order to safeguard liberty, therefore, the Constitution creates three distinct branches of government -- Congress, the President, and the federal judiciary -- and assigns to them differing roles in the exercise of the government's powers. The resulting division of governmental authority is not a mere set of housekeeping rules indicating which branch presumptively performs which [*2] functions; it is, rather, a fundamental means by which the Constitution attempts to ensure free, responsible, and democratic government. See MWAA, 501 U.S. at 272 ("The ultimate purpose of this separation of powers is to protect the liberty and security of the governed."). The constitutional separation of powers advances this central purpose by "assur[ing] full, vigorous, and open debate on the great issues affecting the people"; Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 722 (1986). by "placing both substantive and procedural limitations on each [branch]"; MWAA, 501 U.S. at 272. and by maintaining a "system of . 20. 20. checks and balances" among the three branches. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 693 (1988). James Madison described the "policy" lying behind "distributions of power" -- "the constant aim is to divide and arrange the several offices in such a manner as that each may be a check on the other." The Federalist No. 51, at 349 (James Madison) (Jacob E. Cooke ed., 1961), quoted in Buckley, 424 U.S. at 122-23.

REV_00260113

Although the structure of the Constitution is designed to obviate the danger to liberty posed by each of the branches, See INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. [*3] 919, 951 (1983) (the Constitution's separation of powers is designed to counteract the "hydraulic pressure inherent within each of the separate Branches to exceed the outer limits of its power"). the founders were particularly concerned with the Congress's potential for improvident or overreaching action: "the tendency of republican governments is to an aggrandizement of the legislat[ure] at the expense of the other departments." The Federalist No. 49, at 315-16 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961), cited in United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 444 n.17 (1965). Many specific aspects of the Constitution's separation of governmental powers embody the founders' "profound conviction . 20. 20. that the powers conferred on Congress were the powers to be most carefully circumscribed" and the founders' recognition of the particular "'propensity'" of the legislative branch "'to invade the rights of the Executive.'" INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 947 (1983) (quoting The Federalist No. 73, at 442 (Alexander Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961)). Executive branch lawyers thus have a constitutional obligation, one grounded not in parochial institutional interests but in [*4] our fundamental duty to safeguard the liberty of the people, to assert and maintain the legitimate powers and privileges of the President against inadvertent or intentional congressional intrusion. As Attorney General William Mitchell put it long ago:

> Since the organization of the Government, Presidents have felt bound to insist upon the maintenance of the Executive functions unimpa[i]red by legislative encroachment, just as the legislative branch has felt bound to resist interferences with its power by the Executive. To acquiesce in legislation having a tendency to encroach upon the executive authority results in establishing dangerous precedents.

Constitutionality of Proposed Legislation Affecting Tax Refunds, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 56, 64 (1933). The Attorney General noted that "[t]he first presidential defense of the integrity of the powers of the Executive under the Constitution was made by Washington himself" and that "[f]rom that day to this the Presidents, with very few exceptions, have felt the necessity for refusing to overlook encroachments upon the executive power." 37 Op. Att'y Gen. at 64.

The Constitution, however, "by no means contemplates total separation of [*5] each of these three essential branches of Government." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 121. Instead, "'[w]hile

REV_00260096

Congress, but that fact is not significant for Appointments [*70] Clause purposes. The crucial point was that "[t]he appointment, salaries and direction" of the officials were "state-derived": "the states ultimately empower the [officials] to carry out their duties." Id. at 1365. The Supreme Court's recent decision in New York v. United States, 112 S. Ct. 2408 (1992), which held that Congress cannot "commandeer" state officials to serve federal regulatory purposes, reenforces this conclusion. Where state officials do exercise significant authority under or with respect to federal law, they do so as state officials, by the decision and under the ultimate authority of the state.

Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252 (1991), does not suggest a different conclusion. The constitutional issue in that case was the validity of a statutory provision subjecting the Airports Authority "to the veto power of" a Board of Review composed of members of Congress purportedly "acting 'in their individual capacities.'" Id. at 270. The Supreme Court held that the Board in fact acted as an agent of Congress and that the Board's veto power therefore represented an unconstitutional [*71] enlargement of congressional authority. Nothing in the Court's opinion suggests that there would have been any constitutional problem if Congress had delegated the same power to the Authority subject to review by the executive branch. the District of Columbia City Council, See Techworld Dev. Corp. v. D.C. Preservation League, 648 F. Supp. 106, 115-17 (D.D.C. 1986). qui tam relators under the False Claims Act, We believe that United States ex rel. Kelly v. Boeing Co., 9 F.3d 743, 757-59 (9th Cir. 1993) (rejecting Appointments Clause challenge to False Claims Act), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 1125 (1994), reached the correct result but through an incorrect line of analysis. See id. at 758 (Clause not violated because of the relative modesty of the authority exercised by the relator). The better analysis, in our view, is that of the court in United States ex rel. Burch v. Piqua Engineering, Inc., 803 F. Supp. 115 (S.D. Ohio 1992), which held that "because qui tam plaintiffs are not officers of the United States, the FCA does not violate the Appointments Clause." Id. at 120. We now disapprove the Appointments Clause analysis and conclusion of an earlier opinion [*72] of this Office, Constitutionality of the Qui Tam Provisions of the False Claims Act, 13 Op. O.L.C. 249 (1989) (preliminary print) (arguing that the qui tam provisions violate the Clause). and plaintiffs under the citizen suit provisions of the Clean Water Act. Here the Court phrased its analysis in terms of separation of powers, but the challenge to the statute was, at its core, based on the Appointments Clause. See Chesapeake Bay Found. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 652 F. Supp. 620, 624 (D. Md. 1987) (Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam), "does not stand for the proposition . 20. 20. that private persons may not enforce any federal laws simply because they are not Officers of the United States appointed in accordance with Article II of the Constitution"). The same conclusion should apply to the members of multinational or international entities who are not appointed to represent the United States. At least where these entities are created on an ad hoc or temporary basis, there is a long historical pedigree for the argument that even the United States representatives need not be appointed in accordance with Article II. See, e.g., Alexander Hamilton, The [*73] Defence No. 37 (Jan. 6, 1796), reprinted in 20 The Papers of Alexander Hamilton 13, 20 (Harold C. Syrett ed., 1974):

> As to what respects the Commissioners agreed to be appointed [under the Jay Treaty with Great Britain], they are not in a strict sense OFFICERS. They are arbitrators between the two Countries. Though in the Constitutions, both of the U [nited] States and of most of the Individual states, a particular mode of appointing officers is designated, yet in practice it has not been deemed a violation of the provision to appoint Commissioners or special Agents for special purposes in a different mode.

The traditional view of the Attorneys General has been that the members of international commissions hold "an office or employment emanating from the general treaty-making power, and created by it and" the foreign nation(s) involved and that members are not constitutional officers. Office -- Compensation, 22 Op. Att'y Gen. 184, 186 (1898). We believe that the Appointments Clause doubts sometimes voiced about legislation requiring the concurrence of state or local officials, Indian tribes, or private persons as a condition precedent to federal action are equally [*74] without merit. Some of our prior opinions express such concerns. Because that view, we now conclude, cannot be reconciled with Appointments Clause principles or caselaw, we expressly disavow it.

Determining whether an individual occupies a position of private employment or federal employment can pose difficult questions. The Supreme Court recently set forth rules for making this determination in Lebron v. National Railroad Passenger Corp., 115 S. Ct. 961 (1995). There, the Court found itself faced with the question of whether Amtrak is a private corporation or an agency of the government. Amtrak is chartered by Congress and incorporated under the District of Columbia Business Corporation Act. Id. at 967. The organic statute expressly provides that Amtrak "shall be operated and managed as a for-profit corporation, and is not a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government." 49 U.S.C. § 2024301(a)(2)-(3). The Court ruled that this provision "is assuredly dispositive of Amtrak's status as a Government entity for purposes of matters that are within Congress' control 20. 20. 20. 20. But it is not for Congress to make the final determination of Amtrak's [*75] status as a government entity for purposes of determining the constitutional rights of citizens affected by its actions." 115 S. Ct. at 971. However, the Court held that an entity is "what the Constitution regards as the Government," if the entity is government-created and government-controlled. Id. at 971. Because Amtrak was created "by special law for the furtherance of governmental objectives," it is government-created. The Court also referred to this as a "policy-implementing" role. Id. at 973. This is to distinguish government agencies and instrumentalities, such as Amtrak, from truly private corporations that, though created pursuant to statutory authority, do not implement any government policy, but instead pursue profit and the policies of their shareholders. Id. at 974. Because federally appointed members of Amtrak's governing board hold "voting control" and there is no provision for this government control to sunset, Amtrak is government-controlled. The Court contrasted Conrail, which it determined is not what the Constitution regards as the government. By statute the federal government appoints a voting majority of Conrail's board of directors. Nevertheless, [*76] the Court held that Conrail is not part of the government, because the government's voting control will shift to the private shareholders if Conrail's debt to the federal government falls below half of its total indebtedness and because "'[t]he responsibilities of the federal directors are not different from those of the other directors -- to operate Conrail at a profit for the benefit of its shareholders' -- which contrasts with the public-interest 'goals' set forth in Amtrak's charter." Id. (quoting Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 152 (1974)). In some passages, the Court spoke in terms of the First Amendment and individual rights, for instance:

> We hold that where, as here, the Government creates a corporation by special law, for the furtherance of governmental objectives, and retains for itself permanent authority to appoint a majority of the directors of that corporation, the corporation is part of the Government for purposes of the First Amendment.

Id. We do not, however, believe that the Court meant to imply that it is within Congress's power to exempt federal instrumentalities from the Constitution's structural requirements, such [*77] as the Appointments Clause and the separation of powers doctrine, that apply to all other federal agencies. We believe instead that the references to individual rights are explained by two considerations. First, the issue in the case was whether Amtrak had violated the petitioner's First Amendment rights, and so did not raise any structural issues. Second, the Constitution imposes certain obligations on all government entities, state as well as federal. In other words, not all government entities, within Lebron's definition, are part of the federal government; many are part of a state or local government or of an interstate compact. See id. at 973 (citing Pennsylvania v. Board of Directors of City Trusts, 353 U.S. 230 (1957) (per curiam)). These latter entities are not subject to the separation of powers doctrine or the Appointments Clause. Because the Court was concerned with all entities that the Constitution regards as within the government, not just the federal government, it naturally phrased its opinion in terms of the obligations that apply to all organs of government, not just the organs of the federal government. Ultimately, we can conceive of no principled [*78] basis for distinguishing between the status of a federal entity vis-a-vis constitutional obligations relating to individual rights and vis-a-vis the structural obligations that the Constitution imposes on federal entities. See Brief of Appellant United States, Wilkinson v. United States, Nos. 2095-5144, 91-5174 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 22, 1995). It therefore is not surprising that the Court did not consistently limit its language to individual rights. See, e.g., Lebron, 115 S. Ct. at 973 ("It surely cannot be that government, state or federal, is able to evade the most solemn obligations imposed in the Constitution by simply resorting to the corporate form."). Thus, we do not believe that Congress may evade the "solemn obligations" of the doctrine of separation of powers by resorting to the corporate form any more than it may evade the obligations of the Bill of Rights through this artifice.

REV_00260115

d. Summary. An appointee (1) to a position of employment (2) within the federal government (3) that carries significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States is required to be an "Officer of the United States." Each of these three conditions is independent, and all three must [*79] be met in order for the position to be subject to the requirements of the Appointments Clause.

We recently applied this principle in determining whether the Appointments Clause represents a blanket proscription against participation by the federal government in binding arbitration. Typically, arbitrators are private individuals chosen by the parties to the dispute. In a binding arbitration, the decision of the arbitrators is mandatory upon the parties, subject only to limited judicial review. The view that the Appointments Clause prohibits federal government participation in binding arbitration proceeds from the misinterpretation of Buckley discussed above. We reasoned that although it is "beyond dispute that arbitrators exercise significant authority, at least in the context of binding arbitration involving the federal government," Memorandum for John Schmidt, Associate Attorney General, from Walter Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General, re: Constitutional Limitations on Federal Government Participation in Binding Arbitration, at 10 (Sept. 7, 1995). the standard binding arbitration mechanism does not implicate the Appointments Clause. Arbitrators > are manifestly private [*80] actors who are, at most, independent contractors to, rather than employees of, the federal government. Arbitrators are retained for a single matter, their service expires at the resolution of that matter, and they fix their own compensation. Hence, their service does not bear the hallmarks of a constitutional office -- tenure, duration, emoluments, and continuing duties. Consequently, arbitrators do not occupy a position of employment within the federal government, and it cannot be said that they are officers of the United States. Because arbitrators are not officers, the Appointments Clause does not place any requirements or restrictions on the manner in which they are chosen.

REV_00260116

Memorandum for John Schmidt, Associate Attorney General, from Walter Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General, re: Constitutional Limitations on Federal Government Participation in Binding Arbitration, at 10 (Sept. 7, 1995). We nevertheless noted that it is possible for a theoretical binding arbitration mechanism to run afoul of the Appointments Clause. As indicated, arbitrators whose sole or collective decisions are binding on the government exercise significant authority. If any such arbitrator were to [*81] occupy a position of employment within the federal government, that arbitrator would be required to be appointed in conformity with the Appointments Clause. See Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 881 (1991). Thus, if a federal agency were to conduct binding arbitrations and to employ arbitrators with whom it provided all relevant attributes of an office, all such arbitrators would be required to be appointed in conformity with the Appointments Clause. See Federal Government Participation in Binding Arbitration, at 13. The only case that to our knowledge addresses this question agreed with our analysis and conclusion, and held that the Appointments Clause does not prohibit the federal government from entering into binding arbitration. See Tenaska Washington Partners v. United States, 34 F. Cl. 434, 440 (1995) ("the OLC Memorandum is a thorough and persuasive analysis").

2. Who May Be an Inferior Officer? Since all officers of the United States may be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, the only Appointments Clause significance to the distinction between principal and inferior officers lies in Congress's ability to provide [*82] for the appointment of inferior officers by one of the alternative means listed in the Clause. The Supreme Court has observed that "[t]he line between 'inferior' and 'principal' officers is one that is far from clear, and the Framers provided little guidance into where it should be drawn." Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 671 (1988). Unfortunately, the Court's own decisions provide only modest additional guidance. In Morrison, the Court declined to "attempt . 20. 20. to decide exactly where the line falls" because it found that the independent counsel "clearly falls on the 'inferior officer' side of that line." Id. at 671. The Court advanced several factors that pointed to that conclusion: (1) The counsel was removable by the Attorney General, thus making her "to some degree 'inferior' in rank and authority." Id. (2) The counsel's duties were limited, particularly with respect to policy making and administration. (3) The counsel's tenure was limited to the particular "mission that she was appointed for." Id. at 672. The Court also compared the independent counsel's status to that of other officials who had been considered inferior officers in earlier decisions. [*83] See 487 U.S. at 672-73 (discussing cases dealing with vice-consuls, election supervisors, and United States commissioners). The Court also took note of its "reference in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 694, 696 (1974), to the Office of Watergate Special Prosecutor -- whose authority was similar to that of [the independent counsel] -- as a 'subordinate officer'" and concluded that this characterization was "consistent" with its conclusion that independent counsels are inferior officers. See 487 U.S. at 673. The Court's other recent Appointments Clause decisions shed little additional light on the subject. Buckley simply asserted that the members of the FEC were "at the very least" inferior officers. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126 (1976) (per curiam). In Freytag, no one claimed that the special trial judges at issue were principal, as opposed to inferior, officers; instead, the case involved the distinction between inferior officers and employees. Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 880-82 (1991). The military judges under review in Weiss, like all commissioned officers in the armed forces, were appointed with the advice and consent of the [*84] Senate. Weiss v. United States, 114 S. Ct. 752, 757 (1994). Justice Souter concurred in the Court's opinion on the understanding that the military judges at issue there are inferior officers. Id. at 763. He reasoned that there were substantial points to be made on either side of the question whether they were principal or inferior officers and concluded that the Court should defer "to the political Branches' [implicit] judgment" that the military judges were inferior officers. Id. at 769. Although Justice Souter's admonition that "it is ultimately hard to say with any certainty on which side of the line" between principal and inferior status a given officer may fall, id., is indubitably correct, the executive branch cannot invoke the principle of judicial deference he properly used to decide the issue in Weiss.

We agree with the court of appeals in Silver v. United States Postal Service, 951 F.2d 1033 (9th Cir. 1991), that the particular factors Morrison discussed do not constitute an exhaustive or exclusive list. See id. at 1040 ("The nature of each government position must be assessed on its own merits."). The Silver court noted that the official [*85] at issue in that case, the Postmaster General, "performs many tasks and has many responsibilities," but determined the office to be an inferior one because the Postmaster General "does not have 'control'" and "serv[es] at the pleasure of the" Board of Governors of the Postal Service. Id. This approach is consistent with the one we have taken in the past. For example, in concluding that United States Attorneys are inferior officers whose appointment could be vested in the Attorney General, we rejected the argument that the constitutional term "inferior" means "'petty or unimportant'"; instead, we concluded that the term connotes amenability to supervision by the superior "in whom the power of appointment is vested." United States Attorneys -- Suggested Appointment Power of the Attorney General -- Constitutional Law (Article 202, § 202, cl. 202), 2 Op. O.L.C. 58, 58-59 (1978) (quoting Collins v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 568, 574 (1878)); see also Department of Housing and Urban Development -- Delegations of Authority -- 42 U.S.C. § 203533, 3535, 2 Op. O.L.C. 87, 89 (1978) (deputy assistant secretary, who is subject to direction by an assistant secretary, is "unquestionably" [*86] an inferior officer). In determining whether an officer may properly be characterized as inferior, we believe that the most important issues are the extent of the officer's discretion to make autonomous policy choices and the location of the powers to supervise and to remove the officer. While an officer responsible only to the President for the exercise of significant discretion in decision making is probably a principal officer, an officer who is subject to control and removal by an officer other than the President should be deemed presumptively inferior.

3. Who May Appoint Inferior Officers? The Appointments Clause does not define "Heads of Departments" or "Courts of Law," and questions have arisen about which entities are included by these terms within the "possible repositories for the appointment power." Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 884 (1991). Earlier Attorneys General have accorded these terms a broad construction. See, e.g., Authority of Civil Service Commission to Appoint a Chief Examiner, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 227 (1933). The same is true of the courts, The exception to this broad reading of the Clause was Buckley's unsurprising conclusion that [*87] "neither Congress nor its officers [are] included within the language 'Heads of Departments.'" Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 127 (1976) (per curiam). which have held that the Tax Court, Freytag, 501 U.S. at 892. The Court in Freytag concluded that it is constitutional for the chief judge of the Tax Court to appoint special trial judges because the Tax Court, though an Article I legislative court, "exercise[s] judicial power and perform[s] exclusively judicial functions" and thus is a "Court[] of Law" within the meaning of the Clause. Id. Justice Scalia argued in a concurring opinion that the Tax Court should be treated as a "Department" and the chief judge as its "Head." Id. at 914-22 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). Justice Souter recently has suggested that the opinion of the Court in Freytag did not actually resolve the question of whether the judges of the Tax Court, including the chief judge, are principal officers. Weiss v. United States, 114 S. Ct. 752, 768 (1994) (Souter, J., concurring). a special division of a court of appeals created primarily for the purpose of appointing independent counsels, Morrison v. Olson [*88] , 487 U.S. 654 (1988). In Morrison, the Court indicated that there is some "constitutional limitation on 'incongruous' interbranch appointments," id. at 677, despite the broad language the Appointments Clause uses in describing Congress's discretion on the subject. A statute vesting in a court the power to appoint officers acting in areas in which judges "have no special knowledge or expertise," id. at 676 n.13, for example, might create tension between the court's normal functions and "the performance of [its] duty to appoint." Id. at 676. We think that this limitation is probably of little practical significance with respect to presidential appointments in light of the fact that it is difficult to conceive a plausible argument that vesting the power in the President to appoint any officer (other, perhaps, than some legislative officers) could ever be constitutionally "incongruous." and the Governors of the Postal Service (as a collective head of department), Silver v. United States Postal Serv., 951 F.2d 1033, 1038 (9th Cir. 1991). can be vested with appointments power. The interpretive difficulties lie in determining exactly how broadly the term "Department" [*89] should be read.

REV_00260118

We think that the "Departments" to which the Appointments Clause refers are not limited to those major divisions of the executive branch that are headed by members of the President's cabinet. The Appointments Clause thus differs from Section 4 of the Twenty-fifth Amendment, the language and history of which confirm that the "principal officers of the executive departments" it mentions are the members of the Cabinet. U.S. Const. amend. XXV, § 204; see Freytag, 501 U.S. at 886-87; id. at 917 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). In 1933, Acting Attorney General Biggs opined that Congress could authorize the Civil Service Commission to appoint an inferior officer. Authority of Civil Service Commission to Appoint a Chief Examiner, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 227 (1933). His opinion noted that the Commission "ha[d] certain independent executive duties to perform," was "responsible only to the Chief Executive," id. at 229, and was "not a subordinate Commission attached to one of the so-called executive departments," id. at 231. As "an independent division of the Executive Branch," he concluded, the Commission was a "Department" for Appointments [*90] Clause purposes and its three commissioners, collectively, "the 'head of a Department' in the constitutional sense." Id. The fact that the commissioners were not members of the Cabinet was not controlling, the Acting Attorney General concluded, because the Cabinet itself is not a creation of the Constitution. Id. "The Cabinet, as such, was not provided for by the Constitution and it follows therefore that the interpretation of the Constitution cannot depend upon such consideration." 37 Op. Att'y Gen. at 231; accord Freytag, 501 U.S. at 916-17 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). We find this opinion persuasive and note that the Court's opinion in Freytag ultimately reserved the question of whether the heads of entities other than cabinet-level departments can be vested with the power to appoint inferior officers. See Freytag, 501 U.S. at 887 n.4. While the opinion of the Court in Freytag rejected the argument that "every part of the Executive Branch is a department," 501 U.S. at 885, we do not think that the Court's reasoning is inconsistent with the 1933 Justice Department opinion. The Court's chief concern was that part of the [*91] Appointments Clause's purpose is to prevent "the dangers posed by an excessively diffuse appointment power." Id. The Court observed that "[g]iven the inexorable presence of the administrative state, a holding that every organ in the Executive Branch is a department would multiply indefinitely the number of actors eligible to appoint." Id. We do not think that our view that entities other than cabinet-level agencies can be "Departments" for the purposes of the Appointments Clause leads to this constitutionally troublesome result. We assume the continuing validity of United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1879), which held that the head of a bureau within an executive branch department was not the head of a department. Most of the discrete units of the executive branch in fact are subordinate to some larger executive agency, and therefore are not departments under Germaine. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, for example, wields far-reaching law enforcement authority, but as a component of the Justice Department it is not itself a "Department" for purposes of the Appointments Clause. Legislation authorizing the appointment of inferior officers by a subordinate officer [*92] within a department with the approval of the head of the department, see United States v. Hartwell, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 385, 392-94 (1868); see also Germaine, 99 U.S. at 511 (explaining Hartwell), does not transgress this principle because for constitutional purposes the appointment should be deemed to be made by the department head. We also note that the four concurring Justices in Freytag expressly adopted the reading of the Appointments Clause set forth in the 1933 Attorney General's opinion: that "the term 'Departments' means all independent executive establishments." 501 U.S. at 919 (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, & Souter, JJ., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). Cf. United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1879)

REV_00260119

(Commissioner of Pensions, as head of a bureau within the Interior Department, was not a "Head of Department"). The court of appeals in Silver found no constitutional problem with a statute vesting the power to appoint an inferior officer, the Deputy Postmaster General, in an entity consisting of the Governors of the Postal Service (principal officers who are collectively the "head of a Department") and the Postmaster General (an inferior [*93] officer appointed by the Governors). See 951 F.2d at 1036-41. This conclusion might be justified on either of two rationales. (1) As Justice Souter recently noted, it remains unresolved whether "the Appointments Clause envisions appointment of some inferior officers by other inferior officers," Weiss v. United States, 114 S. Ct. 752, 768 (1994) (Souter, J., concurring), and it may be that there is no constitutional objection to designating one or more inferior officers to be the head of a department with the power to make appointments. (2) It might be argued that although as a general matter the head of a department must be a principal officer and a collective head of department must consist of exclusively principal officers, the association of an inferior officer with a collective head of department in making a specific appointment is constitutionally harmless.

We would apply the reasoning of the 1933 opinion in concluding that it is constitutional for Congress to vest the power to appoint inferior officers in the heads of the so-called independent agencies -- those agencies whose heads are not subject to removal at will by the President and that conventionally are understood [*94] to be substantially free of policy direction by the President. Except for the attenuated nature of the President's supervisory authority, most of the independent agencies are clearly analogous to major executive agencies. They exercise governmental authority without being subordinated to any broader unit within the executive branch, and Congress has implicitly characterized them as "Departments" for Appointments Clause purposes by permitting their heads to appoint officials who plainly are inferior officers. See Freytag, 501 U.S. at 918 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) (noting that most inferior officers in independent agencies are appointed by neither the President nor a Cabinet official). Nothing in the original history of the Clause suggests any intention to exclude from the scope of the Clause separate establishments that are not subject to plenary presidential control. In late-eighteenth century English, the term "department" had no specialized governmental or organizational meaning. For example, Dr. Johnson defined "department" as "[s]eparate allotment; province or business assigned to a particular person," 1 Samuel Johnson, A Dictionary [*95] of the English Language (1755), to which Webster added the gloss "in which a class of duties are allotted to a particular person." 1 Noah Webster, American Dictionary 58 (1828), quoted in Freytag, 501 U.S. at 920 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) (founders chose "Department" to connote "separate organization"). In its foundational legislation, the First Congress used the word both for the Departments of Foreign Affairs (later, State) and War and for the Department of the Treasury, even though it pointedly did not term Treasury an "executive department" as it did State and War. Compare Act of July 27, 1789, ch. 204, 1 Stat. 28-29 (establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs) and Act of Aug. 7, 1789, ch. 207, 1 Stat. 49-50 (establishing the Department of War) with Act of Sept. 2, 1789, ch. 2012, 1 Stat. 65-67 (establishing the Department of the Treasury). A substantial body of scholarship views this terminological choice as reflecting an intention to make Treasury at least partially independent of the President, although by means other than limiting the latter's removal power. See Lawrence Lessig & Cass R. Sunstein, supra [*96] note 33, at 27-29; Gerhard Casper, supra note 33, at 240-42; Peter M. Shane, supra note 33, at 615-16. Finally, in reserving the question of appointments by "the head of one of the principal agencies," the Freytag Court itself included as examples of those agencies the "independent" FTC and the SEC as well as the clearly executive CIA, which suggests that the Court did not perceive a difference between the two types of agencies, at least in the Appointments Clause context. 501 U.S. at 887 n.4. We see no reason to exclude the independent regulatory agencies from the class of entities that are "Departments" for Appointments Clause purposes.

We note that, even accepting the reasoning of the 1933 Justice Department opinion, some entities may exercise governmental authority in so limited a manner that they need not be viewed as "Departments" even though their heads are responsible only to the President. For example, the Committee for Purchase from People Who Are Blind or Severely Disabled, the members of which are appointed by the President alone, 41 U.S.C. § 2046(a), appears to exercise significant authority but is subordinate to no larger executive agency. Id. §§ 2046-48c. [*97] Given the narrow scope of the Committee's powers, however, we do not think that the Committee necessarily should be analyzed as a collective head of a department for Appointments Clause purposes.

4. Legislation Lengthening the Tenure of an Officer. As the Court held in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126 (1976) (per curiam), the Appointments Clause by its terms and its structure prohibits Congress from itself exercising the power to appoint "Officers of the United States." The text and structure of the Clause reflect a deliberate constitutional choice to deny to the legislature the power to select the individuals who exercise significant governing authority as non-legislative officers of the federal government. See id. at 129-31 (reviewing the debates in the Philadelphia convention). Buckley noted that the Constitution expressly authorizes the selection of the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate from among the membership of those bodies, see U.S. Const. art. I, § 202, cl. 205; id. art. 20I, § 203, cl. 205, and held that nothing in the Constitution forbids Congress from appointing non-members as legislative branch officials [*98] to "perform duties . 20. 20. in aid of those functions that Congress may carry out by itself." 424 U.S. at 127-28, 139. This choice to exclude Congress as such from the appointments process can be set at naught by means other than legislation overtly vesting in Congress the power of appointment. Accordingly, the executive branch has traditionally viewed statutes that constitute an effective exercise by Congress of the power to appoint as violations of the Appointments Clause.

This issue sometimes arises in connection with statutes that attempt to extend the tenure of an officer with a set term, thus potentially denying the President the power he or she would otherwise have to reappoint the officer or select someone else. In 1951, for example, the President requested the Justice Department's views on the validity of a statute extending the terms of the members of a commission. See Displaced Persons Commission -- Terms of Members, 41 Op. Att'y Gen. 88 (1951). According to the original legislation creating the commission, the terms were to expire in June 1951, but prior to that date Congress amended the legislation to extend the commissioners' tenure to August 1952. Acting Attorney [*99] General Perlman advised the President that, while he did not think "there can be any question as to the power of the Congress to extend the terms of offices which it has created," this legislative power is subject "to the President's constitutional power of appointment and removal." Id. at 90. However, because the legislation did not attempt to restrict the President's authority to remove the commissioners at will, it was constitutionally harmless: the President remained free to exercise his appointment power simply by removing the incumbents from office at any time. See id. ("As so construed, the [extension legislation] presents no constitutional difficulties."); see also Pension Agents and Agencies, 14 Op. Att'y Gen. 147, 148-49 (1872) (discussing President's power to remove officer serving a term extended by statute). In this circumstance, Congress's action in lengthening an officer's term does not have the effect of usurping the power of appointment the Constitution vests in the President rather than in Congress. Cf. In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133, 1142-43 (9th Cir. 1987) (Norris, J., concurring in the judgment):

> [T]he Appointments Clause precludes Congress from [*100] extending the terms of incumbent officeholders. I am simply unable to see any principled distinction between congressional extensions of the terms of the incumbents and more traditional forms of congressional appointments. Both implicate the identical constitutional evil -- congressional selection of the individuals filling nonlegislative offices.

REV_00260121

We think that the Department's 1951 opinion adopted the correct approach to this issue: while the power to lengthen the tenure of an incumbent officer is incident to Congress's general power to create, determine the duties of, and abolish offices, See Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U.S. 99 (1890); Civil Service Retirement Act -- Postmasters -- Automatic Separation from the Service, 35 Op. Att'y Gen. 309, 314 (1927) ("If, as stated in [Embry v. United States, 100 U.S. 680, 685 (1879),] Congress may at any time add to or take from compensation fixed, it may also, it would seem, by analogy, at any time shorten or lengthen a term of office."). that power cannot legitimately be employed to produce a result that is, practically speaking, a congressional reappointment to office. On this reasoning, the extension of tenure of officers [*101] serving at will raises no Appointments Clause problem, but lengthening the term of an officer who may be removed only for cause would be constitutionally questionable. In 1987, this Office issued an opinion that may be read to hold that legislation extending the term of any officer, even one serving at the pleasure of the President, is unconstitutional. See Reappointment of United States Parole Commissioners, 11 Op. O.L.C. 135 (1987). At the time it was issued, that opinion was directly contrary to long-standing executive branch precedent. See, e.g., Displaced Persons Commission -- Terms of Members, 41 Op. Att'y Gen. at 90-91. We recently revisited the question presented in the 1987 opinion and concluded that it was in error. See Legislation Extending the Terms of Office of United States Parole Commissioners (July 15, 1994) (publication forthcoming in 18 Op. O.L.C. (1994)). We therefore reaffirmed the traditional view that legislation extending the term of an officer subject to removal at will does not violate the Appointments Clause and disavowed our 1987 suggestion to the contrary. However, this conclusion, which we think sound in principle, has been rejected by the courts [*102] in at least one context. The Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984 extended the tenure of bankruptcy judges, who can be removed only for cause, and that provision has been sustained repeatedly against constitutional challenge. The leading case, In re Benny, 812 F.2d 1133 (9th Cir. 1987), held that a statutory extension of tenure "becomes similar to an appointment" only "when it extends the office for a very long time." Id. at 1141; see also In re Investment Bankers, Inc., 4 F.3d 1556, 1562 (10th Cir. 1993) (agreeing with Benny and noting that the contrary Appointment Clause argument "has been rejected by every court that has considered it"), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 1061 (1994). We do not find especially persuasive the reasoning of Benny, Benny asserted that Wiener v. United States, 357 U.S. 349 (1958), implicitly rejected any Appointments Clause argument against term-extension legislation. 812 F.2d at 1141. We think that this overstates Wiener. Wiener dealt only with the President's removal power and did not consider any issue regarding the Appointments Clause. The date on which the President removed the plaintiff in [*103] Wiener from office was in fact within the term of office for which the plaintiff was originally appointed, although part of the backpay the plaintiff ultimately recovered was for a period after his original term would have expired. See 357 U.S. at 350-51 (term should have expired on March 1, 1954 as the law stood at the time plaintiff was appointed; President removed plaintiff on December 10, 1953; plaintiff recovered backpay for four months after March 1, 1954, because commission's authorization was extended after his appointment). The additional Supreme Court cases that Benny and other opinions have cited are distinguishable. See, e.g., Benny, 812 F.2d at 1141 (citing Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U.S. 282 (1893), which upheld legislation imposing additional duties on an officer); In re Tom Carter Enters., 44 B.R. 605, 607 (C.D. Cal. 1984) (citing Shoemaker and cases dealing with issues under the Contracts Clause and the Philippine Organic Act). Benny also pointed out that the First Congress twice extended the tenure of the first Postmaster General. 812 F.2d at 1142. While we agree that this fact supports the argument that Congress generally [*104] possesses the power to extend terms, the original Postmaster General served at the pleasure of the President, and thus the First Congress's actions placed no practical limitation on the appointments power. and it is possible that the doctrine of Benny is limited to its factual context. The result reached in the Benny line of cases was as a practical matter much less troublesome than its reverse, which would have put in question an enormous number of decisions within the bankruptcy system. It is therefore possible to characterize these decisions as a sensible resolution of a legal quandary, which may have compromised constitutional logic but did so at no real cost to the ultimate purposes of the Constitution. However, while this view of the cases may be quite sensible from a political-science perspective, it leaves the constitutional law on the subject in some disarray. However, the reasoning set forth in Benny and the cases that follow it is susceptible to general application, and it is unclear that the courts could repudiate Benny's conclusion with respect to other officers without undercutting the legitimacy of those cases.

REV_00260122

The relevant precedents contemplate a [*105] continuum. At the one end is constitutionally harmless legislation that extends the term of an officer who is subject to removal at will. At the other end is legislation, constitutionally objectionable even under Benny, that enacts a lengthy extension to a term of office from which the incumbent may be removed only for cause. Legislation along this continuum must be addressed with a functional analysis. Such legislation does not represent a formal appointment by Congress and, absent a usurpation of the President's appointing authority, such legislation falls within Congress's acknowledged authority -- incidental to its power to create, define, and abolish offices -- to extend the term of an office. As indicated, constitutional harm follows only from legislation that has the practical effect of frustrating the President's appointing authority or amounts to a congressional appointment.

Our recent opinion on legislation extending the terms of members of the United States Sentencing Commission is illustrative of this functional approach. After the Sentencing Commission had been appointed, Congress enacted legislation "to provide [that] a member of the United States Sentencing Commission [*106] may continue to serve until a successor is appointed or until the expiration of the next session of Congress." Pub. L. No. 102-349, 106 Stat. 933 (1992). Commissioners may be removed only for cause. 28 U.S.C. § 20991(a). We concluded that the statute did not function to violate the President's appointment power. See Whether Members of the Sentencing Commission Who Were Appointed Prior to the Enactment of a Holdover Statute May Exercise Holdover Rights Pursuant to the Statute (Apr. 5, 1994) (publication forthcoming in 18 Op. O.L.C. (1994)). The statute left the President free to "nominate whomever he want[ed] at precisely the same time as he could before [the statute was enacted]." Id. at 10. We noted that the effect of the legislation could actually be to augment the President's power by giving him "the option of retaining the holdover officer until he chooses to nominate a successor." Id.

We acknowledged the argument that the statute might give Congress the opportunity to appoint, in effect, an incumbent to a new term because the President's removal authority is statutorily restricted and the Senate might refuse to confirm any presidential nominee in order to retain [*107] a congressionally favored incumbent. Id. But this argument was unavailing for two reasons. First, the argument is unduly speculative insofar as it hypothesizes contumacious conduct on the part of the Congress, and whatever danger such a possibility might entail was mitigated by the limitation on the period for which a holdover may continue to serve. Second, we noted that the holdover provision is the Constitution diffuses power the better to secure liberty, it also contemplates that practice will integrate the dispersed powers into a workable government. It enjoins upon its branches separateness but interdependence, autonomy but reciprocity.'" Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 381 (1989) (quoting Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring)). The Constitution thus guards against "the accumulation of excessive authority in a single Branch" not by providing mutually exclusive lists of executive, legislative, and judicial powers, but by imposing on each of the three branches "a degree of overlapping responsibility, a duty of interdependence as well as independence." Id. at 381. The Supreme Court repeatedly has rejected the "'archaic view of the separation of powers as requiring three airtight departments of government.'" Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977) (citation omitted). In doing so, the Court has noted that such a view is "inconsistent with the origins of th[e] doctrine" as [*6] well as with "the contemporary realities of our political system." Id. at 441; see also id. at 442 & n.5 (noting that James Madison in The Federalist No. 2047 and Justice Joseph Story in his famous treatise on the Constitution rejected the claim that the Constitution requires an absolute separation). The constitutional boundaries between the powers of the branches must be determined "according to common sense and the inherent necessities of the governmental co-ordination." J.W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. United States, 276 U.S. 394, 406 (1928).

REV_00260123

Some general observations on the sources and methodology we employ in analyzing separation of powers questions are appropriate. We believe that the constitutional structure obligates the executive branch to adhere to settled judicial doctrine that limits executive and legislative power. While the Supreme Court's decisions interpreting the Constitution cannot simply be equated with the Constitution, we are mindful of the special role of the courts in the interpretation of the law of the Constitution. "It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 [*7] Cranch) 137, 177 (1803).

The Supreme Court's decisions interpreting the constitutional separation of powers among Congress, the President, and the courts recognize the founders' basic concern over the "encroaching nature" of power, as well as their specific belief that Congress is potentially the most dangerous branch. "It is this concern of encroachment and aggrandizement that has animated our separation-of-powers jurisprudence and aroused our vigilance against the 'hydraulic pressure inherent within each of the separate Branches to exceed the outer limits of its power.'" Mistretta, 488 U.S. at 382 (citation omitted). The Court's decisions have employed three distinct principles in resolving separation of powers disputes. First, where "[e]xplicit and unambiguous provisions of the Constitution prescribe and define . 20. 20. just how [governmental] powers are to be exercised," Chadha, 462 U.S. at 945, the constitutional procedures must be followed with precision. Second, where the effect of legislation is to vest Congress itself, its members, or its agents with "'either executive power or judicial power,'" the statute is unconstitutional. MWAA, 501 U.S. at 274 (citation [*8] omitted). We shall refer to this theme in the Supreme Court's separation of powers jurisprudence as "the anti-aggrandizement principle." Finally, legislation that affects the functioning of one of the other branches may be unconstitutional if it prevents the affected branch "from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions." Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977) (legislation affecting the executive branch); accord CFTC v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 851, 856-57 (1986) (legislation affecting the judiciary). We refer to this line of reasoning as "the general separation of powers principle."

Our analyses are guided and, where there is a decision of the Court on point, governed by the Supreme Court's decisions on separation of powers. At the same time, the executive branch has an independent constitutional obligation to interpret and apply the Constitution. Indeed, Article II specifically requires the President to take an oath or affirmation "to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution." U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 201, cl. 208. That obligation is of particular importance in the area of separation of powers, where the issues > unarguably valid as applied to Sentencing Commissioners who took office after the statute's enactment. We concluded that "[i]t is simply not persuasive to argue that the President's appointment power is effectively frustrated when incumbent commissioners hold over but not when subsequent commissioners hold over." Id.

REV_00260097

>
> We also found it significant that the holdover statute was neutral in its application. We reserved the question of whether a holdover statute "might amount to a prohibited congressional designation, even if the holdover period is for a short time," if the statute "would create or repeal holdover provisions for selective members of the same commission or for classes of members on the same commission, e.g., those appointed on a certain date or those from a particular [*108] political party." Id. at 14 n.8.

5. Legislation Imposing Additional Duties on an Officer. The executive branch has consistently maintained that a statute creating a new office and conferring it and its duties on the incumbent of an existing office would be unconstitutional under the Appointments Clause. See, e.g., President Buchanan's signing statement dated June 25, 1860, relating to the Civil Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1861, in 5 Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789-1897, at 597-98 (1897) (construing Act to avoid the constitutional problem). Congress's recognized authority to alter the duties and powers of existing offices could be employed to achieve substantially the same result if the legislature were unconstrained in the duties it could add to an office. The same possibility is not presented by Congress's power to reduce or limit the duties of an officer. Except with respect to (certain) constitutional officers, Congress has plenary authority to eliminate offices altogether, subject to the general separation of powers principle. The lesser-included power to take away part of an officer's authority does not in itself enable Congress to choose [*109] which individual will exercise authority and thus does not implicate the Appointments Clause. See United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U.S. 273, 284 (1888) (Congress, as "the legislative body which created the office" of Attorney General, has the authority to put "restrictions . 20. . upon the exercise of [the Attorney General's] authority").

In Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U.S. 99 (1890), the Supreme Court upheld a statute that affected undergraduates ("cadet midshipmen") at the Naval Academy by redesignating them as "naval cadets" and restricting the circumstances in which they would be commissioned upon graduation. The Court concluded that "Congress did not thereby undertake to name the incumbent of any office. It simply changed the name, and modified the scope of the duties." Id. at 109.

The Supreme Court accordingly has interpreted the Constitution to limit the legislature's discretion. The leading case, Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U.S. 282 (1893), concerned a statute that created a commission to select the land for Rock Creek Park in the District of Columbia. Three of the five members were to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; [*110] the persons holding two existing federal offices, the chief of engineers of the Army and the engineer commissioner of the District, were declared members ex officio. The Court rejected an Appointments Clause challenge to the assignment of the two engineers to the new commission:

> [W]e do not think that, because additional duties, germane to the offices already held by them, were devolved upon them by the act, it was necessary that they should be again appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It cannot be doubted, and it has frequently been the case, that Congress may > increase the power and duties of an existing office without thereby rendering it necessary that the incumbent should be again nominated and appointed.

Id. at 301. The legislation at issue was valid, the Court concluded, because the new duties assigned to the engineers "cannot fairly be said to have been dissimilar to, or outside of the sphere of," the engineers' existing responsibilities. Id.

The Shoemaker rule ensures "that Congress [is] not circumventing the Appointments Clause by unilaterally appointing an incumbent to a new and distinct office." Weiss v. United States, [*111] 114 S. Ct. 752, 759 (1994). For the imposition of new duties on an officer to be valid under Shoemaker, two requirements must be met. First, as in Shoemaker itself, the legislation must confer new duties on "offices, . 20. 20. [not] on any particular officer." Olympic Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Director, Office of Thrift Supervision, 732 F. Supp. 1183, 1192 (D.D.C.) (emphasis in original), appeal dismissed as moot, 903 F.2d 837 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "Had the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army or the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia resigned from office after the commission was established, he would no longer have served on the commission -- the new Chief of Engineers or Engineer Commissioner would have taken over those duties." Id. at 1192-93 (discussing facts in Shoemaker). The statute at issue in Olympic Federal, in contrast, abolished certain offices (the three-person Federal Home Loan Bank Board) while simultaneously defining the duties of a new office (the Director of OTS) and designating as the first Director the holder of one of the abolished offices (the chair of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board). See id. at [*112] 1186. The Olympic Federal court correctly determined that by doing so the statute in effect appointed the particular individual who was chair of the old board to a new position. Id. at 1193. The Olympic Federal court thought the legislation would have been valid if Congress had created a three-person directorate for the OTS and designated the members of the former board as the directors. (The court reasoned that the germaneness requirement of Shoemaker would be satisfied because OTS was absorbing the duties of the old board as well as acquiring other, related ones.) 732 F. Supp. at 1193. We reached a similar conclusion in 1980 in opining that Congress could merge the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals and designate the members of those courts to serve as members of the merged court. See Legislation Authorizing the Transfer of Federal Judges from One District to Another, 4B Op. O.L.C. 538, 541 (1980). The "merger situation . 20. 20. involves the end of one institution and the continuance of its major functions in another," and it was reasonable for Congress "to provide in this context for the relocation of experienced and capable judicial [*113] personnel, and for their continuing to perform the functions of the office to which they were originally appointed." Id.

The second facet of the Shoemaker rule is the requirement that the new duties be "germane to the offices already held by" the affected officers. 147 U.S. at 301. This inquiry is necessarily case-specific. In Weiss, the Court examined closely the specific duties of military judges and the general responsibilities of military and naval officers and concluded that they are so intertwined that the selection by the Judges Advocate General of certain military and naval officers to serve for a time as military judges is consistent with the germaneness requirement. 114 S. Ct. at 759-60. In giving advice on this issue, we also have looked at the reasonableness of assigning the new duties "in terms of efficiency and institutional continuity," and we have asked whether "it could be said that [the officers'] functions . 20. 20. [with the additional duties] were within the contemplation of those who were in the first place responsible for their appointment and confirmation." Legislation Authorizing the Transfer of Federal Judges from One District to Another, 4B [*114] Op. O.L.C. 538, 541 (1980).

The Weiss decision may have weakened judicial enforcement of Shoemaker's germaneness requirement by suggesting that some legislation that adds new duties is valid regardless of whether it satisfies the requirement. The opinion of the Court stressed the fact that "[i]n Shoemaker, Congress assigned new duties to two existing offices, each of which was held by a single officer. This no doubt prompted the [Shoemaker] Court's description of the argument as being that 'while Congress may create an office, it cannot appoint the officer.' . 20. 20. But here the statute authorized an indefinite number of military judges, who could be designated from among hundreds or perhaps thousands of qualified commissioned officers." 114 S. Ct. at 759. For that reason, the Court concluded, there was "no ground for suspicion here that Congress was trying to both create an office and also select a particular individual to fill the office." Id. The Court nevertheless went on to consider the germaneness issue and concluded that the duties of military judges are adequately related to the duties of the commissioned officers from whom the judges are selected. [*115] Id. at 760.

REV_00260125

In a separate opinion, Justice Scalia argued that "'germaneness' is relevant whenever Congress gives power to confer new duties to anyone other than the few potential recipients of the appointment power specified in the Appointments Clause," because "taking on . 20. 20. nongermane duties . 20. 20. would amount to assuming a new 'Offic[e]' within the meaning of Article II, and the appointment to that office would have to comply with the strictures of Article II." Id. at 770 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). We find Justice Scalia's reasoning persuasive and believe that in an appropriate setting the executive branch should urge the Court expressly to accept it. In light of the Weiss Court's detailed examination of the germaneness issue, this may not require the Court in fact to modify the doctrine of that case because it is unclear to us that the Court actually intended to hold germaneness constitutionally irrelevant in Weiss-type circumstances. The Court may instead simply have been emphasizing the fact that assignment of new and nongermane duties to a few specific officers not only violates the Appointments Clause per se, [*116] but also fails under the more general anti-aggrandizement principle of its decisions. We believe that it is appropriate, therefore, to review proposed new-duties legislation for germaneness even where the new duties are assigned to large or indefinite groups.

6. The Ineligibility and Incompatibility Clauses. The Constitution places two important restrictions on the universe of persons who may be appointed to serve as officers of the United States. U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 206, cl. 202. One possible restriction is notable for its absence from the Constitution: although Articles I and II and the Twelfth Amendment establish citizenship and age requirements for serving as a member of Congress, the President, or the Vice President (and also set varying minimum age requirements), see U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 202, cl. 202 (Representatives); id. art. 20I, § 203, cl. 203 (Senators); id. art. 20II, § 201, cl. 204 (the President); id. amend. 20XII (Vice President), the Constitution places no such limitations on anyone who becomes an officer through one of the processes prescribed by the Appointments Clause. The Ineligibility Clause states that "[n]o Senator or Representative [*117] shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time." Id. The Clause "restricts the President's power to appoint Members of Congress," and "[i]t has long been settled within the executive branch that the President, in exercising his powers of appointment under Article 20II, § 202, cl. 202, will not make an appointment in violation of the . 20. 20. clause." Members of Congress Holding Reserve Commissions, 1 Op. O.L.C. 242, 244 (1977). The most common problem under the Ineligibility Clause arises from legislation that creates a commission or other entity and simultaneously requires that certain of its members be Representatives or Senators, either ex officio or by selection or nomination by the congressional leadership. Unless the congressional members participate only in advisory or ceremonial roles, or the commission itself is advisory or ceremonial, the appointment of members of Congress to the commission would violate the Ineligibility Clause. After FEC v. NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d 821 (D.C. [*118] Cir. 1993), cert. dismissed, 115 S. Ct. 537 (1994), it appears that designating a member of Congress to serve on a commission with any executive functions, even in what was expressly labeled a ceremonial or advisory role, may render the delegation of significant governmental authority to the commission unconstitutional as a violation of the anti-aggrandizement principle. See id. at 826-27.

REV_00260126

The Incompatibility Clause provides that "no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in Office." U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 206, cl. 202. The Clause is primarily a restriction on Congress and its members: the Incompatibility Clause "disqualifies individuals who have already been appointed from assuming or retaining seats in Congress." Reserve Commissions, 1 Op. O.L.C. at 244; cf. Members of Congress Serving in the Armed Forces, 40 Op. Att'y Gen. 301 (1943). The Incompatibility Clause does not prohibit members of Congress from serving in positions that are not offices in the constitutional sense. See, e.g., Proposed Commission on Deregulation of International Ocean Shipping, 7 Op. O.L.C. 202, 202-03 (1983) (members [*119] of Congress may serve as members of a "purely advisory" commission because the members need not be officers). However, the President's duty to take care that the law of the Incompatibility Clause is observed requires him or her to ensure that appointments Cf. Special Deputization of Members of Congress, at 1 n.1 (May 25, 1994) (publication forthcoming in 18 Op. O.L.C. (1994)) (recognizing Incompatibility Clause requirement but finding it unnecessary to reach that issue). and legislation creating governmental positions are consistent with the Clause. See, e.g., Case of the Collectorship of New Orleans, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 449, 451 (1868) ("in view of the" Incompatibility Clause, an executive officer's acceptance of a seat in Congress "must be considered as having the legal character of a resignation of the office"); Appointments to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution, 8 Op. O.L.C. 200, 207-08 (1984) (providing advice about "various structural arrangements within the Commission that might be designed to respect the Incompatibility Clause"). The suggestion in this Office's 1977 opinion on the Clause that "exclusive responsibility for interpreting and enforcing [*120] the Incompatibility Clause rests with Congress," Reserve Commissions, 1 Op. O.L.C. at 242, thus was an overstatement.

7. The Recess Appointments Clause. With respect to officers of the United States, the Constitution vests the President with the "Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session." U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 202, cl. 203. "A long line of opinions of the Attorneys General, going back to 1823 . 20. 20. and which have been judicially approved . 20. 20. has firmly established that . 20. 20. [t]he President's power to make recess appointments . 20. 20. extends to all vacancies existing during the recess regardless of the time when they arose." Recess Appointments -- Compensation, 3 Op. O.L.C. 314, 314 (1979) (citations omitted); accord Executive Authority to Fill Vacancies, 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 631 (1823). The most thorough judicial treatment of the issue, which quotes extensively from Attorney General Wirt's 1823 opinion, is United States v. Allocco, 200 F. Supp. 868 (S.D.N.Y. 1961), aff'd, 305 F.2d 704 (2d Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 371 U.S. 964 (1963). [*121] Although there was some early uncertainty about the President's power to make appointments under the Recess Appointments Clause during intrasession recesses, that question was settled within the executive branch by an often-cited opinion of Attorney General Daugherty concluding that the President is so authorized. Executive Power -- Recess Appointments, 33 Op. Att'y Gen. 20 (1921). The most difficult problem of interpretation under the Clause today is determining how substantial an intrasession recess must be to give rise to the President's power. There must be a vacancy in order for the President to exercise the authority granted by the Recess Appointments Clause. See Recess Appointments, 3 Op. O.L.C. at 317 (the power to make a "recess appointment presupposes the existence of a vacancy," and an appointment cannot in itself remove an incumbent so as to create a vacancy). In many situations, whether a vacancy exists will depend on the correct interpretation of a holdover provision in the statute creating the office. The scanty caselaw on this issue -- which is a matter of statutory construction rather than of constitutional law -- is not easily reconciled. Compare Staebler v. [*122] Carter, 464 F. Supp. 585 (D.D.C. 1979) with Mackie v. Clinton, 827 F. Supp. 56 (D.D.C. 1993), vacated as moot, Nos. 93-5287 & 93-5289, 1994 WL 163761 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 9, 1994). Attorney General Daugherty concluded that a twenty-eight-day recess was sufficient, but cautioned that "the term 'recess' must be given a practical construction." Id. at 24-25. We agree with his view that the President has discretion to make a good-faith determination of whether a given recess is adequate to bring the Clause into play. "In this connection I think the President is necessarily vested with a large, although not unlimited, discretion to determine when there is a real and genuine recess making it impossible for him to receive the advice and consent of the Senate. 20. 20. 20. But there is a point, necessarily hard of definition, where palpable abuse of discretion might subject his appointment to review." 33 Op. Att'y Gen. at 25. Giving advice on how the President may properly exercise that discretion has proven a difficult task. See Recess Appointments During the Recess of the Senate Beginning January 3, 1992, 16 Op. O.L.C. 15 (1992) (preliminary print) (eighteen-day recess a sufficient [*123] period, particularly in light of fact that except for a brief formal session on January 3 the Senate would actually be absent for fifty-four days); Recess Appointments, 3 Op. O.L.C. at 316 (President may make recess appointments "during a summer recess of the Senate of a month's duration").

REV_00260127

8. Acting and Interim Appointments. Early Attorneys General repeatedly opined that the President enjoyed a constitutional power of appointment empowering the President to make temporary or ad interim appointments to offices in cases of need without conforming to the requirements of the Appointments or Recess Appointments Clause. See, e.g., Appointment of Acting Purser, 6 Op. Att'y Gen. 357, 365 (1854) (executive power of "filling up a vacancy by an appointment of one to act ad interim, and for a particular exigency, in a distant service" could be exercised to make temporary appointment of acting purser despite statutory prohibition on anyone acting as purser prior to Senate confirmation); Executive Power of Appointment, 4 Op. Att'y Gen. 248, 248 (1843) (appointment power is derived from President's Take Care Clause duty, "an obligation imposed by the constitution, and from the [*124] authority of which no mere act of legislation can operate a dispensation," although President could not pay interim appointees without an appropriation). Their initial reaction to congressional legislation on the subject of vacancies was therefore to view it as having neither the purpose nor the effect of supplanting the President's preexisting constitutional authority. See Office and Duties of Attorney General, 6 Op. Att'y Gen. 326, 352 (1854) ("Perhaps the truer view of the question is to consider the . 20. 20. statutes as declaratory only, and to assume that the power to make such temporary appointment is a constitutional one."). After the enactment of the Vacancies Act of 1868, 15 Stat. 168, however, the Attorneys General treated the Act as providing the exclusive means of making temporary appointments to those offices covered by the statute. See, e.g., Appointments Ad Interim, 17 Op. Att'y Gen. 530 (1883); Appointments Ad Interim, 16 Op. Att'y Gen. 596, 596-97 (1880) (authority to fill vacancy in the office of Navy Secretary is "a statutory power," and when the power is exhausted, "the President is remitted to his constitutional power of appointment"). A 1904 [*125] opinion attempted to synthesize the older and the more recent views, treating as reasonable and legitimate Congress's wish to cabin presidential discretion to make interim appointments while the Senate is in session, but describing as a "fundamental right as Chief Executive" the President's authority "to make such a temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another whenever the administration of the Government requires it." Temporary Recess Appointments, 25 Op. Att'y Gen. 258, 261 (1904); see also Promotion of Marine Officer, 41 Op. Att'y Gen. 291, 294 (1956) (President has constitutional authority to appoint "key military personnel to positions of high responsibility" without following statutory procedures).

There is little modern caselaw on the President's power to make temporary appointments to offices requiring Senate confirmation. Indeed, at least one court has indicated a judicial willingness to defer to the views of the Attorney General on the President's authority to make temporary appointments. See Olympic Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Director, Office of Thrift Supervision, 732 F. Supp. 1183, 1197-98 (D.D.C.) ("The Attorney [*126] General is charged with responsibility for ensuring that only lawfully appointed officials act on behalf of the United States, and consequently his interpretation of law on this subject is entitled to great deference."), appeal dismissed as moot, 903 F.2d 837 (D.C. Cir. 1990). The "leading" judicial decision is a brief per curiam court of appeals opinion denying a motion for a stay of the district court's mandate pending appeal, Williams v. Phillips, 482 F.2d 669 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (per curiam). Williams was a challenge to the legality of actions taken by the acting director of the Office of Economic Opportunity on the grounds that the President lacked authority to appoint an acting director of that office and to continue the interim appointment for over four months without submitting to the Senate any nomination to the position of director. The district court declared the President's action unlawful. The court of appeals refused to grant a stay of the district court's order because in its judgment the acting director had failed to show the requisite likelihood of success on the merits. The brief discussion in Williams of the merits emphasized that Article II "unequivocally [*127] requires an officer of the United States to be confirmed by the Senate unless different provision is made." The court nevertheless observed that "[i]t could be argued" that the President has "an implied power, in the absence of limiting legislation . 20. 20. to appoint an acting director for a reasonable period of time before submitting the nomination of a new director to the Senate" 482 F.2d at 670. Because of its procedural posture, Williams did not actually resolve the constitutional issue, but it suggested somewhat obliquely that what non-statutory power the President possesses to make interim appointments to offices requiring Senate confirmation can be employed only for a "reasonable time required by the President to select persons for nomination." Id. at 671. Looking to the thirty-day period that was, at the time, permitted temporary appointments under the Vacancies Act for an indication of what a reasonable period would be, Williams concluded that even if the implied power existed, a four-and-a-half-month period without any nomination was unreasonable. Id. at 670-71. Our opinions have struggled with the meaning of Williams. See, e.g., Power of the President [*128] to Designate Acting Member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, 1 Op. O.L.C. 150, 151-52 (1977) (court of appeals' opinion in Williams "can perhaps be read as disagreeing with" the argument that the President has no non-statutory authority or "as perhaps agreeing" that he does have such authority, "in the absence of a limiting statute," subject, of course, to the condition that he must submit a nomination within a reasonable time). Since Williams was decided, the Vacancies Act has been amended to provide for an initial appointment period of 120 days. Up to two extensions, each lasting 120 days, may be made depending on the specific circumstances of the vacancy. Moreover, the Vacancies Act also tolls the running of these periods when particular conditions obtain. See 5 U.S.C. § 203348. Thus, the Vacancies Act allows temporary appointments, in appropriate circumstances, of durations well in excess of even one year. Accordingly, we would not currently view a four-and-a-half-month temporary appointment as necessarily exceeding a reasonable duration, provided that a nomination is submitted to the Senate.

REV_00260128

On the assumption that Williams can be read to indicate that "[t]o [*129] keep the Government running calls for the designation of acting officials to fill vacancies in the absence of express statutory authority," Department of Energy -- Vacancies, 2 Op. O.L.C. 113, 117 (1978) (citing Williams), we have argued that the reasonableness of a given interim appointment should be measured not by a per se rule but by a variety of pragmatic factors. Those factors include "the difficulty of finding suitable candidates," id. at 118, "the specific functions being performed by the [interim officer]; the manner in which the vacancy was created (death, long-planned resignation) . 20. 20. and particular factors affecting the President's choice [such as] a desire to appraise the work of [the interim officer] or the President's ability to devote attention to the matter." Status of the Acting Director, Office of Management and Budget, 1 Op. O.L.C. 287, 290 (1977). However, given the ambiguity of the Williams opinion, we have urged caution, even when the relevant department head has statutory authority to designate another official to serve in an acting capacity. See Acting Officers, 6 Op. O.L.C. 119, 121-22 (1982).

We recently revisited the vacancies [*130] question in relation to the United States Commission on Civil Rights. The Commission is headed by an eight-member committee that works on a part-time basis, while its day-to-day functioning is administered by a staff director. The statute creating the position of staff director vests the authority to appoint the staff director in the President, subject to the concurrence of a majority of the members of the Commission. In keeping with the Department of Justice's long-standing position, we concluded that, when confronted with a vacancy in the position of staff director, the President has constitutional authority to appoint an acting staff director, unless Congress had statutorily limited this authority. We stated:

REV_00260129

> The President's take care authority to make temporary appointments rests in the twilight area where the President may act so long as Congress is silent, but may not act in the face of congressional prohibition. See Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 637 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring). Thus, the Vacancies Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 203345-3348, constitutes a restriction on the President's authority, as opposed to a source of power. If it applies to a given [*131] position, the Vacancies Act constitutes the sole means by which a temporary appointment to that position may be made.

Appointment of an Acting Staff Director of the United States Commission on Civil Rights, at 3 (Jan. 13, 1994) (publication forthcoming in 18 Op. O.L.C. (1994)).

We concluded that Congress had not limited the President's constitutional authority with respect to the appointment of an acting staff director of the Civil Rights Commission. The Vacancies Act does not apply to the position of staff director. The Vacancies Act only applies to temporary appointments "[w]hen an office[]" is vacant. 5 U.S.C. § 203346 (emphasis added). Because the staff director for the Commission on Civil Rights 20is not a constitutional officer, the Vacancies Act does not apply. See Olympic Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Director, Office of Thrift Supervision, 732 F. Supp. 1183, 1195 (D.D.C.) (finding that "officer" as used in the Vacancies Act, 5 U.S.C. § 203346, means "constitutional officer"), appeal dismissed as moot, 903 F.2d 837 (D.C. Cir. 1990). Indeed, since the Commission is an exclusively investigatory and advisory body, see Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420, 441 (1960), [*132] none of the positions at the Commission are constitutional offices. See Statement on Signing the United States Commission on Civil Rights Act of 1983, 2 Pub. Papers 1634, 1635 (Nov. 30, 1983) (Statement by the Department of Justice). Accordingly, the Vacancies Act does not apply to the Commission at all. In addition, the statute creating the position is silent on the subject of temporarily filling a vacancy in that position. Consequently, we concluded that the President was free to exercise his constitutional authority to appoint an acting staff director. A federal district court ruled to the contrary, but its decision has been vacated. See George v. Ishimaru, 849 F. Supp. 68 (D.D.C. 1994), vacated as moot, No. 94-5111 1994 WL 517746 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 25, 1994).

9. Other Issues of Combined, Collective, and Interbranch Authority and the Appointments Clause. The Appointments Clause prohibits Congress or the President from obscuring the lines of authority and responsibility within the federal government: the political branches cannot vest the power to perform "a significant governmental duty" of an executive, administrative, or adjudicative nature in any federal official [*133] who is not appointed in a manner consistent with the Clause. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 141 (1976) (per curiam). The Clause, however, does not prohibit creative combinations of officers and authorities as long as a person or body with legitimate appointing authority under the Clause has appointed -- and therefore is accountable for -- all federal officials with such power. Cf. Weiss v. United States, 114 S. Ct. 752, 768 (1994) (Souter, J., concurring); Silver v. United States Postal Serv., 951 F.2d 1033, 1040-41 (9th Cir. 1991).

The Appointments Clause therefore does not forbid the exercise of authority by a decision-making body with a collective head that consists of principal officers and an inferior officer removable by them. See Silver, 951 F.2d at 1040-41. Nor is the Clause offended by the delegation of concurrent authority to a Senate-confirmed officer and her deputy when the latter is appointed by a head of department. See Department of Housing and Urban Development -- Delegations of Authority, 2 Op. O.L.C. 87, 89-91 (1978). In both cases all of the officials performing significant governmental duties are validly appointed officers.

REV_00260130

The exercise of [*134] authority by a group of principal officers, some of whom serve at the President's pleasure while others are removable by the President only for cause, presents no Appointments Clause issue: once again, the Clause's procedures for appointing federal officials so that they may wield "significant authority" have been met. The Clause's strictures are likewise satisfied by arrangements in which a head of department, pursuant to a statute, designates a subordinate to sit in his or her stead on a commission or board: if the designation by the head were authorized by statute, then it would itself be an appointment in conformity with the Clause, and even if it were not, the designee would be acting for or on behalf of the head of department, whose actions, for constitutional purposes, are the head's.

Finally, the Appointments Clause does not invalidate commissions composed of members or appointees from more than one branch of the government. Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 412 (1989), upheld the constitutionality of the Sentencing Commission, which includes at least three federal judges and the Attorney General as an ex officio non-voting member, while Buckley concluded [*135] that a commission consisting of a mixture of presidential appointees and members of Congress selected by the Speaker and President pro tempore can validly exercise "powers . 20. 20. essentially of an investigative and informative nature," 424 U.S. at 137. Interbranch entities are subject to constitutional review on other grounds, including the anti-aggrandizement and general separation of powers principles, but their interbranch nature does not in itself raise any Appointments Clause question.

C. Removal Power Issues

1. The Executive's Removal Power. The first great constitutional debate in the First Congress concerned the power to remove officers of the United States. A wide range of views was expressed over the respective roles -- or lack thereof -- of the President and Congress in removal matters, Professor Gerhard Casper has identified seven "major positions [in the First Congress] on the question of the location of the removal power," ranging from the view that the President has illimitable authority to remove any non-judicial officer to the argument that Congress has plenary discretion over removal issues under the Necessary and Proper Clause. See Gerhard Casper, [*136] supra note 33, at 234-35. but ultimately, as the Supreme Court has interpreted the "Decision of 1789," Congress rejected a legislative role in removal in favor of recognizing plenary presidential power over officers appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 723-24 (1986); see also Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 111-44 (1926) (discussing debates and subsequent acquiescence in the legislative decision).

The nineteenth-century Justices interpreted the First Congress's actions as illustrative of a more general principle that "the power of removal [is] incident to the power of appointment." Ex parte Hennen, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 230, 259 (1839). Thus, it was determined that inferior officers appointed by a department head were not removable by the President (absent statutory authorization to do so) but by the secretary who appointed them and that a new appointment by the proper officer amounted to a removal of the previous incumbent by operation of law. Id. at 260-61; accord The President and Accounting Offices, 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 624 (1823). In United States v. Perkins, 116 U.S. 483 (1886), the [*137] Court held that, "when Congress, by law, vests the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of departments, it may limit and restrict the power of removal as it deems best for the public interest." Id. at 485. Although the Court did not address any questions about presidential removal powers, its reasoning about Congress's authority to limit department heads' removal power could logically be applied to the President with respect to inferior officers whose appointment is vested by statute in the President alone. "The constitutional authority in Congress to thus vest the appointment implies authority to limit, restrict, and regulate the removal by such laws as Congress may enact in relation to the officers so appointed. The head of a Department has no constitutional prerogative of appointment to offices independently of the legislation of Congress, and by such legislation he must be governed, not only in making appointments, but in all that is incident thereto." Perkins, 116 U.S. at 485. The President similarly "has no constitutional prerogative" to make appointments without senatorial advice and consent "independently" of congressional authorization -- that is, the President [*138] may make appointments without the advice and consent of the Senate only if Congress authorizes the President to do so. See Myers, 272 U.S. at 161-62 (noting without deciding the question). The power to suspend an officer, finally, was held to be "an incident of the power of removal." Burnap v. United States, 252 U.S. 512, 515 (1920) (relying primarily on nineteenth-century precedents). The Court's conclusions in Hennen, Perkins, and Burnap remain good law. We do not read Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), to cast any doubt on the continuing vitality of these decisions. See id. at 689 n.27, 690 n.29 (implicitly reaffirming Perkins).

REV_00260131

The seminal twentieth-century cases on removal, Myers and Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), both addressed the power to remove officers appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Myers held unconstitutional a statute requiring Senate approval of the President's decision to remove certain postmasters. The Court based its holding in part on its interpretation of the "Decision of 1789" and on its understanding of the President's constitutional role. "Made responsible [*139] under the Constitution for the effective enforcement of the law, the President needs as an indispensable aid to meet it the disciplinary influence upon those who act under him of a reserve power of removal. 20. 20. 20. Each head of a department is and must be the President's alter ego in the matters of that department where the President is required by law to exercise authority." 272 U.S. at 132-33. An illimitable removal power, Myers concluded, is a necessary incident to the President's power and responsibility to take care that the laws are faithfully executed. Id. at 163-64. The Court dismissed the argument that the rationale for giving the President plenary removal authority over heads of department and other great officers of state simply did not apply to postmasters with the observation that Congress could extend civil service tenure protection to the latter simply by vesting their appointment "in the head[] of department[] to which they belong." 272 U.S. at 174.

Any suggestion in Myers that the Supreme Court would invalidate all limitations on the President's power to remove officers appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate was firmly repudiated [*140] less than a decade later by Humphrey's Executor. The case concerned the President's power to remove a member of the Federal Trade Commission on the grounds of policy differences, despite the existence of a for-cause removal provision in the statute establishing the Commission. The statute establishing the FTC included a provision stating that a commissioner "may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office," which the Court construed as intended "to limit the executive power of removal to the causes enumerated, the existence of none of which is claimed here." Humphrey's Ex'r, 295 U.S. at 623, 626. The Court dismissed Myers as inapposite because a postmaster is "an executive officer restricted to the performance of executive functions," and "the necessary reach of the decision" only "goes far enough to include all purely executive officers [and] no farther." 295 U.S. at 627-28. Humphrey's Executor expressly repudiated the language in Myers suggesting that the President's general executive powers and Take Care Clause responsibilities rendered it unconstitutional for Congress to reduce or eliminate presidential control over [*141] the administration of federal law. "In the course of the opinion [in Myers], expressions occur which tend to sustain the government's contention, but these are beyond the point involved and, therefore, do not come within the rule of stare decisis. In so far as they are out of harmony with the views here set forth, these expressions are disapproved." Humphrey's Ex'r, 295 U.S. at 626. By contrast, the Court examined the functions of the FTC and concluded that it was "an administrative body" exercising "quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial powers," rather than an agency of the executive branch. Id. at 628. The Court reasoned that Congress possesses the authority in creating such a body "to require [it] to act in discharge of [its] duties independently of executive control." Id. at 629. See also id. at 628:

REV_00260132

> The FTC was created by Congress to "carry into effect legislative policies embodied in the statute in accordance with the legislative standard therein prescribed, and to perform other special duties as a legislative or judicial aid. 20. 20. 20. Its duties are to be performed without executive leave and, in the contemplation of the statute, must be free from [*142] executive control." In Wiener v. United States, 357 U.S. 349 (1958), the Court extended the scope of Humphrey's Executor by inferring the existence of a for-cause limitation on the President's power to remove an officer with quasi-adjudicatory functions, even in the absence of an express statutory removal restriction. The rationale of Wiener, which is essentially that Congress must have implied a for-cause removal restriction when the Court believes that the functions of the agency demand such tenure protection, 357 U.S. at 353-56, seems questionable. There would be nothing illogical in a legislative decision, for example, to protect against review or revision of the decisions of the agency, see id. 354-55, while placing the agency's decision makers within the control of the President. Congress has made such decisions from the beginning of the Republic. To the extent that Wiener assumes that control is and ought to be a binary matter -- either plenary or non-existent -- its reasoning is difficult to reconcile with more recent separation of powers decisions that reject such an either/or approach to presidential control. See, e.g., Morrison v. Olson [*143] , 487 U.S. 654 (1988). Despite these possible flaws in its logic, however, Wiener's holding continues to be followed. See FEC v. NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d 821, 826 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (concluding that the members of the Federal Election Commission probably are removable only for cause despite the absence of an explicit statutory restriction on removal), cert. dismissed, 115 S. Ct. 537 (1994).
>
> The rationale in Humphrey's Executor for upholding Congress's power "to forbid [the commissioners'] removal except for cause" was in fact identical to that for recognizing the President's plenary removal power over "purely executive officers." "[I]t is quite evident that one who holds his office only during the pleasure of another, cannot be depended upon to maintain an attitude of independence against the latter's will." 295 U.S. at 629. The constitutionality of congressional limitations on presidential removal authority thus depended under Humphrey's Executor on the legitimacy of a legislative decision to reduce or eliminate the President's control over a particular agency or officer, and that in turn depended on the nature of the functions performed by the agency [*144] or officer. Congress's decision was considered legitimate in Humphrey's Executor because the Court viewed the FTC as "a body of experts" "charged with the enforcement of no policy except the policy of the law" and concluded that "[s]uch a body cannot in any proper sense be characterized as an arm or an eye of the executive". 295 U.S. at 624, 628. We do not find the Court's reasoning in Humphrey's Executor completely persuasive. The Court's assertion about the FTC's "enforcement of no policy except the policy of the law," id. at 624, does not differentiate the FTC, except perhaps as a matter of degree, from the many undoubtedly executive agencies upon which Congress imposes mandatory duties. The Court also stated that an FTC member is "an officer who occupies no place in the executive department," but the Court may only have meant that the FTC is "an agency of the legislative or judicial departments of the government," id. at 628, in which case questions would arise under current constitutional doctrine as to the legitimacy of an Article I entity exercising law-making authority without following bicameralism and presentment, see INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 often do not give rise [*9] to cases or controversies that can be resolved by the courts. This is due in part to the limits of jurisdiction and justiciability that Article III places on the courts. In addition there may be legislation that violates one of the three principles outlined above and yet is unlikely to reach the courts in a form or context in which the judiciary will be able to identify or remedy the constitutional problem. An example of such legislation would be an enactment that does not, when viewed in isolation, violate the constitutional principles we have identified, but as to which constitutional difficulties arise when the statute is examined in conjunction with other similar enactments. Because, absent a refusal by the executive to enforce any of these cumulative enactments, the courts may not have an opportunity to review the statute in its full context, it is incumbent upon the executive to object to such legislation before it becomes law. Burdensome reporting requirements may illustrate this problem. Even if no single reporting requirement violates the general separation of powers principle, see Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. at 443, the cumulative effect of many such requirements [*10] might prevent the executive from acting with the dispatch and efficiency that the Constitution intends and that, indeed, Congress expects. The Attorneys General and this Office have a long tradition of carrying out this constitutional responsibility, one that dates back to Attorney General Edmund Randolph's 1791 opinions on the constitutionality of a national bank. See The Constitutionality of the Bank Bill: The Attorney General's First Constitutional Law Opinions (publication forthcoming in 18 Op. O.L.C. (1994)) (reprinting, with commentary, the bank opinions). Persuaded by Secretary of the Treasury Hamilton's opinion defending the validity of the legislation, President Washington declined to accept the Attorney General's arguments that the bank bill was unconstitutional and signed it into law. The Supreme Court upheld the President's conclusion that Congress could charter a national bank in M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819). We believe therefore that it is important in addressing separation of powers matters to give careful consideration to the views of our predecessors and to what seems to us to be the import of the Constitution's text, history, and structure. [*11] For an example of an opinion that is, in our view, an exemplary model of the approach this Office should take in interpreting the Constitution, see Article II, Section 2, Clause 3 -- Recess Appointments -- Compensation (5 U.S.C. § 205503), 3 Op. O.L.C. 314 (1979).

REV_00260133

To be sure, respect for the legislative branch of the government requires a degree of deference to legislative judgments. From the beginning of the Republic, the executive branch has interpreted the Constitution with a due regard for the constitutional views of Congress. See, e.g., Thomas Jefferson, The Constitutionality of the Bill for Establishing a National Bank (Feb. 15, 1791) (Opinion of the Secretary of State), in 5 Writings of Thomas Jefferson 284, 289 (Paul L. Ford ed., 1895) (arguing that the President should not veto a bill on constitutional grounds, "if the pro and the con hang so even as to balance his judgment," out of "a just respect for the wisdom of the legislature"). Respect for Congress also demands that the executive, like the judiciary, construe statutes so as to avoid constitutional problems. See, e.g., Appropriations Limitation for Rules Vetoed by Congress, 4B Op. O.L.C. 731, 732 n.3 [*12] (1980) ("It is our practice to interpret statutes in ways that avoid constitutional infirmities, whenever possible."). However, it is also the President's "duty to pass the executive authority on to his successor, unimpaired by the adoption of dangerous precedents." Proposed Legislation Affecting Tax Refunds, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. at 65. Thus, for example, in declining to comply with a request from the House of Representatives that he deemed an intrusion on the treaty power, President Washington explained that "as it is essential to the due administration of the government, that the boundaries fixed by the [C] onstitution between the different departments should be preserved: A just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my Office . 20. 20. forbids a compl[i]ance with your request." Message to the House of Representatives (Mar. 30, 1796), reprinted in 35 Writings of George Washington 5 (John C. Fitzpatrick ed., 1940). Our constitutional analyses are informed by both of these concerns. The correct resolution of separation of powers questions demands that due respect be given to two distinct constitutional axioms. The first axiom is that the Constitution's creation of a vigorous [*13] executive and an independent judiciary must not be undermined by legislative encroachment. The second axiom is that the Constitution (1983), [*145] or of an Article III non-judicial entity "bind[ing] or regulat[ing] the primary conduct of the public," Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 396 (1989). We do not think that the "independent" regulatory agencies could be viewed today as within the legislative or judicial branches. See id. at 386 n.14 (SEC is "not located in the Judicial Branch").

In Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), the Supreme Court upheld a provision of the Ethics in Government Act that forbids the removal of an independent counsel appointed under the Act except for cause. The Court explained that under "[t]he analysis contained in our removal cases," the constitutional question is whether Congress has "interfere[d] with the President's exercise of the 'executive power' and his constitutionally appointed duty to 'take care that the laws be faithfully executed.'" Id. at 689-90. Morrison reasoned that the Attorney General retained adequate control over the independent counsel to safeguard "the President's ability to perform his constitutional duty." Id. at 691.

Morrison's broader significance is defined by the office in question. The removal restriction upheld in Morrison [*146] concerned an inferior officer with a sharply limited and highly unusual function, the investigation of particular allegations about the conduct of high-ranking executive branch officials. In that context, although it declined to decide "exactly what is encompassed within the term 'good cause,'" the Court held that "because the independent counsel may be terminated for 'good cause,' the Executive . 20. 20. retains ample authority to assure that the counsel is competently performing his or her statutory responsibilities in a manner that comports with the provisions of the Act." 487 U.S. at 692. The Morrison Court thus had no occasion to consider the validity of removal restrictions affecting principal officers, officers with broad statutory responsibilities, or officers involved in executive branch policy formulation. A much older decision, Shurtleff v. United States, 189 U.S. 311 (1903), had held that a for-cause provision did not oust the President's power, derived from the power of appointment, to remove an officer at will, but after Humphrey's Executor, Shurtleff appeared confined to its factual setting (where the official's tenure had no fixed termination). See Kalaris [*147] v. Donovan, 697 F.2d 376, 395 & n.76 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1119 (1983). Bowsher, however, cited Shurtleff in connection with a more general suggestion that "the enumeration of certain specified causes of removal" may not "exclud[e] the possibility of removal for other causes." 478 U.S. at 729. Bowsher and Morrison together suggest that a generous reading of the President's (or a department head's) power to remove an inferior officer for cause may be essential to the constitutionality of removal restrictions concerning even those officers whose functions are narrow.

The Supreme Court's removal cases establish a spectrum of potential conclusions about specific removal limitations. At one end of the spectrum, restrictions on the President's power to remove officers with broad policy responsibilities in areas Congress does not or cannot shelter from presidential policy control clearly should be deemed unconstitutional. We think, for example, that a statute that attempts to limit the President's authority to discharge the Secretary of Defense would be plainly unconstitutional and that the courts would so hold. The Tenure of Office Act of 1867, ch. [*148] 20154, 14 Stat. 430 (1867), expressly provided the Secretaries of War and the Navy, among others, with terms longer than that of the President who appointed them, subject only to presidential removal with the consent of the Senate. President Andrew Johnson's attempt to remove the Secretary of War was the legal basis for his impeachment and near-removal from office. (The Act had been passed over President Johnson's constitutionally based veto.) As the Court stated in Morrison, Myers "was undoubtedly correct . 20. 20. in its broader suggestion that there are some 'purely executive' officials who must be removable by the President at will if he is to be able to accomplish his constitutional role." 487 U.S. at 690. With respect to an officer serving at the President's pleasure, the President may remove the incumbent by direct order or by appointing his or her successor after receiving the advice and consent of the Senate. See, e.g., Quackenbush v. United States, 177 U.S. 20, 25 (1900); Presidential Appointees -- Resignation Subject to the Appointment and Qualification of a Successor, 3 Op. O.L.C. 152 (1979). At the other end of the spectrum, we believe that for cause and fixed [*149] term limitations on the power to remove officers with adjudicatory duties affecting the rights of private individuals will continue to meet with consistent judicial approval: the contention that the essential role of the executive branch would be imperiled by giving a measure of independence to such officials is untenable under both precedent and principle.

REV_00260134

Between these two extremes, the arguments are less clear, and it is imperative that the executive branch carefully examine removal limitations in pending legislation for their impact on the President's ability to exercise his or her constitutional powers and carry out his or her duties. In situations in which Congress does not enact express removal limitations, we believe that the executive branch should resist any further application of the Wiener rationale, under which a court may infer the existence of a for-cause limit on presidential removal, except with respect to officers whose only functions are adjudicatory. On the basis of precedent, and in light of the understandable tendency of Article III judges to value tenure protection positively, it is safe to assume that courts will continue to apply Wiener with respect [*150] to officials whose primary duties involve the adjudication of disputes involving private persons. In reviewing pending legislation, furthermore, we should be aware that legislative silence about the President's removal power over administrative agency officers invites judicial policy choices that may be contrary to those the President or Congress intended.

2. Congressional Removal Power. Unless it limits its own discretion by statute, Congress enjoys plenary authority to remove its own officers, as do the individual houses of Congress. The two houses of Congress also have complementary roles in the congressional power to impeach and remove any civil officer of the United States. See U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 202, cl. 205; id. art. 20I, § 203, cl. 206. In addition, Congress has the general authority to legislate in ways that in fact terminate an executive branch officer or employee's tenure by defunding a position, for example, or by legislating mandatory retirement rules that apply to incumbents. Congress's authority in this regard is bounded, to be sure, by independent constitutional limitations such as the Bill of Attainder Clause, U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 209, cl. [*151] 203. See United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946) (provision in appropriations statute prohibiting the payment of compensation to three specified executive branch employees because of their political beliefs was an unconstitutional bill of attainder). The executive branch, however, has long maintained that the Constitution does not permit this legislative authority to be deployed abusively as a de facto removal power. See Civil Service Retirement Act -- Postmasters -- Automatic Separation from the Service, 35 Op. Att'y Gen. 309, 312-15 (1927) (deeming mandatory retirement statute constitutional because it could not fairly be viewed as an encroachment on the President's removal power). The Supreme Court's decisions confirm the executive position. In Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926), the Court at one point portrayed the issue before it in terms of congressional aggrandizement, id. at 161, and modern decisions have redescribed the enduring rationale of Myers in anti-aggrandizement terms. See Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 686 (1988) ("the essence of the decision in Myers was the judgment that the Constitution prevents Congress from 'draw[ing] [*152] to itself . 20. 20. the power to remove'"); Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 724-26 (1986). Legislation that can properly be described as exercising the power of removal is unconstitutional, therefore, because it amounts to an attempt on Congress's part "to gain a role in the removal of executive officials other than its established powers of impeachment and conviction." Morrison, 487 U.S. at 686. One could also describe the reasoning directly in terms of the impeachment and removal powers. See U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 202, cl. 205 (House has "sole Power of Impeachment"); id. art. 20I, § 203, cl. 206 (Senate has "sole Power to try all Impeachments"); id. art. 20II, § 204 ("President, Vice President and all civil Officers" are subject to impeachment and removal). These powers stem from "[e]xplicit and unambiguous provisions of the Constitution [that] prescribe and define" the only means by which Congress may remove officers. INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 945 (1983). We think, for example, that "ripper" legislation that ostensibly abolished an office while simultaneously proceeding to recreate it would be a transparent, and unconstitutional, attempt to remove the [*153] officer in question and therefore would violate the anti-aggrandizement principle. See Constitutionality of Proposed Legislation Requiring Renomination and Reconfirmation of Executive Branch Officers Upon the Expiration of a Presidential Term, 11 Op. O.L.C. 25, 26 (1987).

REV_00260135

The executive branch also has resisted attempts by the Senate to "reconsider" the nomination of an officer to whose appointment that body has already given its advice and consent once the President has taken steps to complete the appointment. In 1931, for example, President Hoover declined to return to the Senate resolutions notifying him that it had confirmed three nominees to the Federal Power Commission. The President explained that "the return of the documents by me and reconsideration by the Senate would be ineffective to disturb the appointees in their offices. I cannot admit the power in the Senate to encroach upon Executive functions by removal of a duly appointed executive officer under the guise of reconsideration of his nomination." Message to Senate, January 10, 1931, quoted in United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6, 28 n.3 (1932); see also United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6, 37-48 (1932) (discussing [*154] historical practice). Such senatorial action is both an unconstitutional attempt to remove the officer and a violation of the anti-aggrandizement principle, in that it is a legislative attempt to exercise power after the constitutionally prescribed role of the legislative body has been completed. In Smith the Supreme Court rejected a challenge to the right of one of President Hoover's appointees to sit on the Federal Power Commission, but based its holding on its construction of the Senate's rule permitting reconsideration. The Court thus did not reach the executive's constitutional arguments. See 286 U.S. at 34 ("we have, therefore, no occasion to consider the constitutional objection").

D. Issues Involving the Boundaries of the Legislative Sphere

The Supreme Court decisions articulating the Court's anti-aggrandizement principle make it plain that Congress's formal authority is limited to the enactment of legislation and activities in aid of the legislative process such as investigation and oversight. The Gramm-Rudman Act's vesting in a congressional agent of the power to exercise policy-making control over the post-enactment decisions of executive officials is the paradigmatic [*155] example of congressional action in violation of this limitation. See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986) (invalidating the relevant provision of the Act). Respect for Congress's legitimate and broad authority to legislate is consistent with our duty as officials of the executive branch to identify instances in which Congress transgresses the boundaries of its constitutional sphere of operations.

1. The Paradox of the Congressional Agencies. From reading the bare text of the Constitution, one might not expect there to exist any formally separate entities within the legislative branch other than the two houses themselves. From an early date, however, Congress has created distinct agencies, under its special supervision, for various purposes. Some of these agencies, or the officers who head them, exercise authority that seems incompatible or at least difficult to reconcile with the Supreme Court's anti-aggrandizement decisions. Of special interest are the Smithsonian Institution (and its subordinate bureaus, such as the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts ("J.F.K. Center")), the Library of Congress, the General Accounting Office ("GAO") (headed by the Comptroller [*156] General), the Government Printing Office ("GPO"), and the Office of the Architect of the Capitol. The composition of the Smithsonian's Board of Regents and of the Board of Trustees of the J.F.K. Center presents a separate problem under Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam), because members of Congress serve on these boards through appointment by the Speaker and the President pro tempore. See 20 U.S.C. § 2042 (Regents of Smithsonian); Id. § 2076h(a) (Trustees of J.F.K. Center). The head of each of these agencies exercises authority with respect to executive officials or private persons that could be seen as problematic under Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), which held unconstitutional the Comptroller General's exercise of controlling authority over executive branch budgeting.

REV_00260136

We believe that many of the powers currently exercised by the presently existing congressional agencies may be deemed constitutionally harmless. Most of the functions undertaken by the Library of Congress, the basic accounting tasks of the GAO, and all of the duties of the Architect of the Capitol can comfortably be described as in aid of the legislative process. See Springer [*157] v. Government of the Philippine Islands, 277 U.S. 189, 202 (1928). The activities undertaken by the Smithsonian and its bureaus also seem to fit under a broad construction of that concept, a construction that is supported by historical practice stretching far back into the antebellum Republic. Cf. Springer, 277 U.S. at 211 (Holmes, J., dissenting) ("Congress long ago established the Smithsonian Institution, to question which would be to lay hands on the Ark of the Covenant"). The GPO's involvement in executive branch printing is also supported by a substantial historical pedigree, see Joint Res. No. 2025, 36th Cong., 1st Sess., 12 Stat. 117 (1860), but in the twentieth century the executive branch has repeatedly been compelled to resist congressional attempts to empower the GPO to exercise genuine discretion over executive decisions. Under the modern understanding of the separation of powers, we do not think that Congress validly can empower the GPO to play any role that is not purely ministerial with respect to the executive branch. The review authority of the Librarian of Congress over the Copyright Arbitration Royalty Panel, see 17 U.S.C. §§ 20801-803, is permissible [*158] because the Librarian's tenure is not protected by an explicit for-cause removal limitation, and we therefore infer that the President has at least the formal power to remove the Librarian at will. Formal removal authority is sufficient to render the Librarian subject to the President's control for constitutional purposes. See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 726-27 (1986). We think that under Bowsher the fact that a President is highly unlikely to remove a Librarian is legally irrelevant. Id. at 727 n.5. We note that the historical lineage of, and long-standing acquiescence of the Presidents in, these legislative agencies and most of their activities are important to our conclusion that those activities are constitutionally permissible: we think it highly doubtful that Congress constitutionally could create new legislative agencies with operational powers, or afford existing agencies novel powers, with respect to executive officials or private persons.

Our conclusion about the limits on Congress's authority to create legislative branch agencies with powers reaching beyond the legislative branch is consistent with the decision in Hechinger v. Metropolitan Washington [*159] Airports Authority, 36 F.3d 97 (D.C. Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 934 (1995), where the court of appeals held unconstitutional Congress's response to the Supreme Court's decision in Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252 (1991). After MWAA struck down a congressionally constituted board with the power to review and reverse the decisions of the Airports Authority, Congress created a similar, congressionally controlled board of review with the power to delay, but not to control, the Authority's implementation of decisions. The court rejected the argument that the new board's powers were constitutional because of this distinction: the very purpose of this board was to bring congressional policy views to bear on the decisions of the Authority by enabling congressional agents to participate directly in the Authority's decision-making processes. Under the Supreme Court's rigorous understanding of the anti-aggrandizement principle, any such extension of legislative power beyond the legislative sphere is invalid. We therefore believe that Hechinger was correctly decided.

REV_00260137

2. Reporting Requirements. [*160] Many statutes empower executive branch agencies to take certain actions only after a specified period following the provision of notice or of a report to Congress. The Department of Justice has long acknowledged the constitutionality of such report-and-wait provisions, see, e.g., Constitutionality of Proposed Legislation Affecting Tax Refunds, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 56, 63 (1933) ("[n]o one would question the power of Congress to provide for delay in the execution of . 20. 20. an administrative order"), and the Supreme Court in INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983), "specifically recognized" report-and-wait requirements "as a constitutionally acceptable alternative to the legislative veto." Implementation of the Bid Protest Provisions of the Competition in Contracting Act, 8 Op. O.L.C. 236, 246 (1984); see Chadha, 462 U.S. at 935 n.9, 955 n.19. While individual instances of congressional investigation and oversight may be objectionable on policy grounds, and in certain situations may involve information with respect to which the President is constitutionally entitled to assert executive privilege, the conduct of investigation into, and oversight concerning, executive actions is [*161] generally well within the power of Congress. See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 137-38 (1976) (per curiam). The Constitution presupposes that all executive branch action is taken under the legal authority of officers of the United States and that it is those officers (and not their subordinates) who are constitutionally responsible for those actions. See U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 204 (civil officers may be impeached). It is our view, therefore, that the executive branch is generally entitled to resist congressional demands that employees be questioned about their actions and that as a matter of constitutional comity Congress ordinarily is obligated to respect an executive decision to send a superior officer to present testimony and answer questions about the actions of a subordinate officer. (The last statement does not apply to congressional investigations connected with impeachment or with other legitimate investigations into the actions of specific officers.) Although the details of executive responses to congressional demands for information have changed somewhat, the general principle that Congress ought not employ its powers of investigation to disrupt the lines of [*162] responsibility and authority within the executive branch is very old. See Thomas Jefferson, Opinion of the Cabinet (Apr. 2, 1792), in I The Writings of Thomas Jefferson 304 (Andrew A. Lipscomb ed., 1903) (advising President Washington "that neither the committee nor [the] House [of Representatives] had a right to call on the Head of a Department, who and whose papers were under the President alone; but that the committee should instruct their chairman to move the House to address the President"). Report-and-wait provisions generally are constitutional means of assisting Congress in carrying out these legitimate activities. This is not to say that an unconstitutional report-and-wait provision cannot be imagined. A provision that imposed so lengthy a delay as to in effect nullify the executive's power to take action substantively authorized by the Constitution or a statute might be invalid as a violation of the anti-aggrandizement or general separation of powers principle.

Simple reporting requirements, which again are sometimes objectionable on policy grounds, are clearly constitutional as a general matter. "Congress may at all times call on [the heads of executive departments] [*163] for information or explanation in matters of official duty." Office and Duties of Attorney General, 6 Op. Att'y Gen. 326, 344 (1854); see Chadha, 462 U.S. at 955 n.19; see also Duties of the Attorney General, 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 335, 336 (1820) (Congress could by legislation require Attorney General to prepare report on claims against the United States). In the past, this Office has made constitutional objections to so-called "concurrent" reporting provisions that require an executive agency to submit a given report simultaneously to the President and Congress. See Constitutionality of Statute Requiring Executive Agency to Report Directly to Congress, 6 Op. O.L.C. 632 (1982); Inspector General Legislation, 1 Op. O.L.C. 16, 17 (1977). The argument is that such provisions interrupt the lines of responsibility within the executive branch and interfere with a presidential prerogative to control the presentation of the executive branch's views to Congress. On the other hand, advocates of such provisions might argue that a concurrent reporting provision does not, as a formal matter, enlarge congressional powers at the expense of the executive, because the power to require information [*164] is well within Congress's legitimate legislative authority.

REV_00260138

We think that concurrent reporting requirements are best analyzed under the general separation of powers principle. That principle first requires an inquiry into "the extent to which" a given reporting provision "prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions." Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977) (citation omitted). Many conceivable concurrent reporting requirements, particularly ones touching on the President's responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs and for national defense, would have a serious negative impact on the President's performance of his "constitutionally assigned functions." A statutory requirement that the Secretary of State report simultaneously to the President and Congress on the status of United States relations with a given foreign power, for instance, would fall within that description. Moreover, such a provision ought to fail the courts' final test under general separation of powers analysis -- whether the statute's impact on the executive "is justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional [*165] authority of Congress." Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. at 443. The hypothesized reporting requirement could seriously impair the President's ability to formulate foreign policy and conduct negotiations and addresses an area in which Congress's constitutional authority is limited. Similarly, legislation that attempted to impose concurrent reporting requirements across a broad spectrum of executive branch activities might well constitute so serious an interference with the President's fulfillment of his obligations under the Take Care Clause, U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 203, that it should be deemed invalid. The courts, however, might uphold the validity of a concurrent reporting requirement imposed for a legitimate congressional purpose on a specific agency with limited, domestic, and purely statutory duties.

As a practical political matter, concurrent reporting requirements clearly weaken the President's control over the executive branch and by doing so increase congressional leverage on the President and other officials of the executive branch. By doing so they impair the Constitution's "'great principle of unity and responsibility in the Executive department.'" [*166] Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 131 (1926) (quoting James Madison). For this reason, we think the presumption should be that the executive branch will object to any concurrent reporting provision in proposed legislation.

3. Congressional Agents in Non-Legislative Contexts. The Supreme Court's decisions make it clear that legislation placing members or agents of Congress on a board or commission that is outside the legislative branch is immediately suspect. The constitutional "location" of a given entity is not a matter of congressional fiat; Congress cannot define away an anti-aggrandizement problem simply by declaring that a given entity is within or without the legislative branch. The result in Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), for example, would not be changed by a statute providing that the General Accounting Office is an executive branch agency. Through the Comptroller General, an official removable by Congress, the legislature would still be exercising ultimate authority over executive decisions. In fact, the Comptroller General does have obligations to the executive branch as well as to Congress. See Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 746 (Stevens, J., concurring [*167] in the judgment). The question is, we think, a matter of the relationship between the entity's functions and the formal powers Congress can assert over and through it. In Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252 (1991), for example, the board at issue was the board of review of an entity, the Airports Authority, created by a compact between Virginia and the District of Columbia, and the review board members were appointed by the Authority. However, by federal legislative mandate, the Authority was compelled to appoint a review board made up exclusively of members of Congress selected from a pool determined by Congress. See id. at 268-69. Congress's agents on the board thus were able to exercise ultimate control over important operational decisions of the Authority, in violation of the Constitution's constraints on the exercise of congressional power. Id. at 275-77.

REV_00260139

The Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit recently came to a similar conclusion in FEC v. NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d 821 (D.C. Cir. 1993), cert. dismissed, 115 S. Ct. 537 (1994), in striking down part of a section of the Federal [*168] Election Campaign Act, 2 U.S.C. § 437c(a)(1). That section provides that the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House or their designees are to be members of the Federal Election Commission "ex officio and without the right to vote." The Secretary and the Clerk are self-evidently agents of Congress, but the Commission argued that their presence was constitutionally harmless because their only formal role was informational and advisory. The court rejected the argument, reasoning that the very point of placing the Secretary and Clerk on the Commission was to influence the Commission's actions and that > Congress must limit the exercise of its influence, whether in the form of advice or not, to its legislative role. 20. 20. 20. What the Constitution prohibits Congress from doing, and what Congress does in this case, is to place its agents "beyond the legislative sphere" by naming them to membership on an entity with executive powers.

6 F.3d at 827 (citation omitted). We believe that NRA Political Victory Fund was correctly decided: however modest the ability of Congress's agents to influence the Commission's actions may have been formally, the statute placed the agents [*169] intended to communicate that influence within the very heart of an agency charged with enforcing federal law. The anti-aggrandizement principle properly can be interpreted to forbid even modest attempts by Congress to intervene in the enforcement of the laws once "its participation [in the passage of legislation] ends." Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 733 (1986).

E. The General Separation of Powers Principle

The proper application of the general separation of powers principle is highly specific to context, and thus few generalizations are possible. For example, in the past we have expressed concern that legislation delegating federal authority to state or local officials or private persons could undermine the executive branch's ability to carry out its functions and thereby violate the principle. See, e.g., Constitutional Limitations on "Contracting Out" Department of Justice Functions under OMB Circular A-76, 14 Op. O.L.C. 106, 114-15 (1990) (preliminary print). The delegation question actually at issue in our 1990 opinion concerned OMB requirements to contract out governmental work. Executive branch delegations to non-federal entities, we now think, are properly analyzed [*170] as raising issues about the executive's statutory authority to delegate. We continue to believe that such delegations can raise questions with respect to the constitutional separation of powers, In theory, Congress's authority to delegate law-making authority to anyone, including the President, is limited by the non-delegation doctrine, which prohibits standardless grants of legislative power. That doctrine is, however, essentially moribund in the courts. See, e.g., Yakus v. United States, 321 U.S. 414 (1944) (upholding broad delegation). In any event, the problem of delegation in the separation of powers context is not, or not primarily, one of congressional failure to specify the limits and standards relevant to the delegated authority, but rather the interference with executive (or judicial) branch functions created by the bestowal of federal-law authority on non-federal entities. Cf. Currin v. Wallace, 306 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1939) (upholding statute requiring supermajority vote by participants in regulated activity before executive branch could take certain action). and that in certain circumstances, a congressional delegation of authority to non-federal officials or to [*171] private parties might have a significant impact on the executive branch's ability to fulfill its constitutional functions. If so, the delegation might be invalid under the general separation of powers principle. A common form of "delegation" -- the grant of authority to state, local, or tribal officials or to private parties to stop federal action by declining to consent to it -- is unlikely to present a constitutional problem. Such legislation merely sets a condition on the executive branch's exercise of authority that the executive would not possess at all in the absence of the legislation. In upholding a statute requiring a supermajority of regulated farmers to agree before the Secretary of Agriculture could exercise certain powers, the Supreme Court rejected the argument that the statute impermissibly delegated legislative power, reasoning that such legislation does not, strictly speaking, involve a delegation of authority to the farmers at all. See Currin v. Wallace, 306 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1939). By requiring the Secretary, as one of the prerequisites to the exercise of power granted him by statute, to ascertain the agreement of a certain percentage of those who would be [*172] affected, the statute at issue in Currin had done nothing but add another condition to the availability of the power. Id. at 15 ("Congress has merely placed a restriction upon its own regulation by withholding its operation as to a given market 'unless two-thirds of the growers voting favor it.'").

REV_00260140

A recent district court opinion that reached the opposite conclusion illustrates, in our judgment, the fallacy involved in attempting to discern a separation of powers problem in this sort of legislation. See Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians v. United States, 841 F. Supp. 1479 (D. Or. 1994) (appeal pending). The statute at issue prohibits the location of gaming establishments on land acquired by the Department of the Interior in trust for the benefit of a Native American tribe when the land in question is off-reservation. The statute permits the Secretary to grant a waiver of the prohibition, but requires him or her to obtain the concurrence of the relevant state governor before finally approving the waiver. The district court denied that the act was similar for constitutional purposes to the legislation upheld in Currin or the False Claims Act provisions sustained [*173] in the qui tam cases: "Instead we have a statute in which Congress delegates to a state official the power to veto a favorable determination by an official of the Executive Branch who was legislatively charged with making that determination." 841 F. Supp. at 1488. Therefore, the court concluded, the provision requiring the governor's concurrence violated the Appointments Clause and the general separation of powers principle. Id. at 1489. We think that the district court went wrong in its description of the legislation it was reviewing: the only final determination the Secretary is "legislatively charged with making" under 25 U.S.C. § 202719(b)(1)(A) is a determination that the statutory conditions -- inter alia, that the relevant governor concurs in the Secretary's findings that granting the waiver will be beneficial to the tribe and harmless to its neighbors -- have been satisfied. The governor's concurrence, from the Secretary's perspective, is as much a fact about the world as the predicted effects of the casino (or the concurrence of the supermajority of farmers at issue in Currin) -- it is one more condition that must be met before the Secretary can exercise the [*174] waiver power Congress has provided, albeit a condition that the Secretary may be able to satisfy using different methods (persuasion, for example) than those employed in satisfying other conditions (economic forecasts of the impact of a casino, for example).

For somewhat similar reasons, there is no separation of powers problem with legislation that defines a federal rule of law by reference to state or foreign law. The Supreme Court held in United States v. Sharpnack, 355 U.S. 286 (1958), that the Constitution permits Congress to provide for the application, as bases for federal prosecution, of subsequently enacted state criminal laws in federal enclaves. The Court concluded that such a prospective congressional adoption of "future state legislative action in connection with the exercise of federal legislative power" does not involve "a delegation by Congress of its legislative authority to the States" at all. Id. at 294. On the basis of Sharpnack's reasoning, we think that no special separation of powers issues are raised by the role of the states under such legislation. The courts of appeals have applied the rationale of Sharpnack to a variety of federal statutes [*175] that require consideration of state or foreign laws in determining the application of federal law. See, e.g., United States v. Rioseco, 845 F.2d 299, 302 (11th Cir. 1988) ("Congress has delegated no power, but has itself set out its policies and has implemented them").

REV_00260141

F. Statutory Construction

Issues involving the constitutional separation of powers between the President and Congress most often arise in the context of a statute that raises or proposed legislation that would raise questions under one of the three headings we have identified. For this reason, it is worth recalling the "cardinal principle" of statutory interpretation that statutes be construed to avoid raising serious constitutional questions, where such a construction is reasonably available. See, e.g., Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22 (1932).

An important subset of these questions relate to statutes that do not plainly state that they apply to the President. The Supreme Court and this office have adhered to a plain statement rule: statutes that do not expressly apply to the President must be construed as not applying to the President, where applying the statute to the President would pose a significant question [*176] regarding the President's constitutional prerogatives. See, e.g., Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992); Memorandum for Jack Quinn, Counsel to the President, from Walter Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General, re: Application of 28 U.S.C. § 20458 to Presidential Appointments of Federal Judges (Dec. 18, 1995). This principle has two sources in the constitutional context within which the Congress drafts statutes. The first is the interpretive canon of avoiding serious constitutional questions. See, e.g., Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988).

The second source is the constitutional principle of separation of powers. The purpose of the constitutional separation of powers is to prevent an excessive accumulation of authority in any of the three branches of the federal government. The plain statement safeguards "the 'usual constitutional balance'" of power. Will v. Michigan Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 65 (1989) (quoting Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 242 (1985)); see Franklin, 505 U.S. at 800-01. Given the central position that the separation of powers doctrine [*177] occupies in the Constitution's design, this rule also serves to "assure[] that the legislature has in fact faced, and intended to bring into issue, the critical matters" of the balance of power between the three branches of the federal government. See United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 349 (1971).

This plain statement rule has been applied frequently by the Supreme Court as well as this office with respect to statutes that might otherwise be susceptible of an application that would affect the President's constitutional prerogatives, were one to ignore the constitutional context. For instance, in Franklin the Court was called upon to determine whether the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C § 20701, authorized "abuse of discretion" review of final actions by the President. The APA authorizes review of final actions by an "agency," which it defines as "each authority of the Government of the United States." 5 U.S.C. § 20701(b)(1). From this definition, the APA expressly exempts Congress, the courts, the territories, and the DC government.

Even though the statute defined agency in a way that could include the President and did not list the President among the express exceptions [*178] to the APA, Justice O'Connor wrote for the Court,

> [t]he President is not explicitly excluded from the APA's purview, but he is not explicitly included, either. Out of respect for the separation of powers and the unique constitutional position of the President, we find that textual silence is not enough to subject the President to the provisions of the APA. We would require an express statement by Congress before assuming it intended the President's performance of his statutory duties to be reviewed for abuse of discretion.

REV_00260142

505 U.S. at 800-01 (emphasis added). To amplify, she continued, "[a]s the APA does not expressly allow review of the President's actions, we must presume that his actions are not subject to its requirements." Id. at 801. Numerous other Supreme Court decisions employ this approach. See, e.g., Public Citizen v. United States Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440 (1989) (holding that the Federal Advisory Committee Act does not apply to committees that advise the President on the discharge of his exclusive constitutional functions because doing so would raise serious separation of powers questions); Sale v. Haitian Centers Council, Inc., 113 S. Ct. [*179] 2549 (1993) (refusing to give the Refugee Act extraterritorial application because doing so could conflict with the President's constitutionally committed authority); Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731 (1982) (President was immune from suit because Congress had failed to create a cause of action expressly against the President of the United States).

In addition to the Supreme Court precedents, this office has frequently applied the plain statement rule in the context of the separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches. For example, we were asked whether the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), 29 U.S.C. §§ 20621-634, prohibits the President from considering the age of judicial candidates when determining whom to nominate for federal judgeships. See Judges -- Appointment -- Age Factor, 3 Op. O.L.C. 388 (1979). We concluded that the ADEA should not be read to apply to the presidential appointment of federal judges:

> The power to appoint Federal judges, who hold office on good behavior, is by tradition and design one of the most significant powers given by the Constitution to the President. It provides one of the few administrative mechanisms [*180] through which the President can exert a long-term influence over the development and administration of law in the courts. The President's present power to exert that influence to the fullest by preferring candidates for appointment who are likely to have long, rather than short, careers on the bench is therefore a matter of constitutional significance. Whether Congress could deny the President that power by requiring him to disregard utterly the age of candidates for appointment has never been considered by the courts, but because of the gravity of the constitutional questions it raises, we would be most reluctant to construe any statute as an attempt to regulate the President's choice in that way, absent a very clear indication in the [statute].

Id. at 389. See also Memorandum for Jack Quinn, Counsel to the President, from Walter Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General, re: Application of 28 U.S.C. § 20458 to Presidential Appointments of Federal Judges (Dec. 18, 1995); Constraints Imposed by 18 U.S.C. § 201913 on Lobbying Efforts, 13 Op. O.L.C. 361, 366-68 (1989) (preliminary print); Prosecution for Contempt of Congress of an Executive Branch Official Who Has Asserted [*181] a Claim of Executive Privilege, 8 Op. O.L.C. 101 (1984); Memorandum for Richard T. Burress, Office of the President, from Laurence H. Silberman, Deputy Attorney General, re: Conflict of Interest Problems Arising out of the President's Nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President under the Twenty-Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, at 2, 5 (Aug. 28, 1974); Memorandum for Egil Krogh, Staff Assistant to the Counsel to the President, from William H. Rehnquist, Assistant Attorney General, re: Closing of Government Offices in Memory of Former President Eisenhower (Apr. 1, 1969).

III. Constitutional Requirements and Policy Concerns delegates to Congress broad power "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers [of Congress], and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." U.S. Const. art. I, § 208, cl. 2018 (emphasis added). The Necessary and Proper Clause thereby authorizes Congress not only to choose any appropriate means of exercising the legislative powers it has been delegated, but also "to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of the government" as a whole, M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. at 420, including the powers vested in the President. In our analyses, we fully acknowledge the broad sweep of Congress's powers while insisting, as we must, that those powers cannot be legitimately employed so as to undermine the constitutional authority of the executive branch.

REV_00260143

A. Express Procedures: The Bicameralism and Presentment

Requirements and the Appointments [*14] Clause

While the expression "separation of powers" does not appear in the Constitution, the Constitution does require both separation and interdependence on some matters by specifying, expressly and precisely, the procedures that must be followed. Where the constitutional text is unequivocal as to the manner in which the branches are to relate, any attempt to vary from the text's prescriptions is invalid. In such circumstances "the balance" between the branches "already has been struck by the Constitution itself" in the text. Public Citizen v. United States Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 486 (1989) (Kennedy, J., concurring). The Court has identified two such express procedures relating to the separation of executive and legislative powers: the bicameralism and presentment requirements for legislation, and the Appointments Clause.

Congress's broad authority to take action that has "the purpose and effect of altering the legal rights, duties, and relations of persons . 20. 20. outside the Legislative Branch," INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 952 (1983), is limited by the procedural requirements of Article I. With a few express exceptions found or rooted in the constitutional [*15] text, Metropolitan Washington Airports Auth. v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252, 276 n.21 (1991), The House of Representatives has the power to impeach any civil officer of the United States, see U.S. Const. art. 20I, § 202, cl. 205; id. art. 20II, § 204, and the Senate to try and, if convinced that the officer is guilty of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors," to remove him or her from office, id. art. 20I, § 203, cls. 205, 6; id. art. 20II, § 204. The Senate also acts on its own in exercising its advice and consent powers with respect to treaties and the appointment of officers. Congress and congressional committees, furthermore, may take certain actions in aid of Congress's legislative tasks that have legal consequences for specific persons outside the legislative branch; a congressional committee, for example, may issue a subpoena to a witness. See Lear Siegler, Inc. Energy Prods. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1108 (9th Cir. 1988), modified as to attorney fees, 893 F.2d 205 (1989) (en banc). We disagree with the Lear Siegler court's application of this principle to the question before it. Article I requires that Congress [*16] take such action "in accord with a single, finely wrought and exhaustively considered, procedure" -- bicameral passage and presentation to the President followed by presidential signature or bicameral repassage by a two-thirds majority. Chadha, 462 U.S. at 951; see U.S. Const. art. 20I, §§ 201, 7. The classic and often-repeated violation of this express textual requirement is the "legislative veto" mechanism invalidated in Chadha. The statute at issue in Chadha provided for a one-house "veto" of certain decisions by the Attorney General. A two-house "veto" satisfies bicameralism but is inconsistent with the requirement of presentment, and soon after Chadha the Court summarily invalidated a statute employing this mechanism. See United States Senate v. FTC, 463 U.S. 1216 (1983) (mem.). These Supreme Court decisions vindicated the executive branch's long-held objections to any form of legislative "veto." See Memorandum for the Attorney General from President Franklin D. Roosevelt (Apr. 7, 1941), reprinted in Robert H. Jackson, A Presidential Legal Opinion, 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1353, 1357-58 (1953)

The conclusion that a particular provision of proposed legislation probably would not be held unconstitutional by the courts is not equivalent to a determination that the legislation is constitutional per se. The judiciary is limited, properly, in its ability to enforce the Constitution, both by Article III's requirements of jurisdiction and justiciability and by the obligation to defer to the political branches in cases of doubt or where Congress or the President has special constitutional responsibility. This last point is true not only with respect [*182] to true "political questions," i.e., constitutional issues the resolution of which is committed by the Constitution to (one of) the political branches, but also as to areas which, although not absolutely insulated from judicial review, demand extraordinary judicial respect for the decisions of a coordinate branch. See, e.g., United States v. Butenko, 494 F.2d 593, 603, 605 (3d Cir. 1974) (en banc) (broad presidential power to order covert surveillance for foreign affairs and national security purposes does not "justify completely removing" judicial enforcement of the Fourth Amendment; however, the "strong public interest" in "the efficient operation of the Executive's foreign policy-making apparatus" should make a court "wary of interfering"). In such situations, the executive branch's regular obligation to ensure, to the full extent of its ability, that constitutional requirements are respected is heightened by the absence or reduced presence of the courts' ordinary guardianship of the Constitution's requirements. Furthermore, even where on any view the letter of the Constitution is satisfied, the Constitution's intention to separate the federal government's powers can appropriately [*183] be invoked as a sound reason for objecting to legislation that undermines or imperils that separation. The constitutional separation of powers, to make the point in a different way, is a political as well as a legal principle. Justice Robert Jackson once wrote that "[i]t is hard to conceive a task more fundamentally political than to maintain amidst changing conditions the balance between the executive and legislative branches of our federal system." Robert H. Jackson, The Supreme Court in the American System of Government 62 (1955).

The Constitution demands of the executive and legislative branches alike an "ethic of institutional responsibility" in defending their respective roles in the overall constitutional structure. See Richard A. Champagne, Jr., The Separation of Powers, Institutional Responsibility, and the Problem of Representation, 75 Marq. L. Rev. 839, 844 (1992). For example, legislation that attempts to structure the very details of executive decision making, or that imposes onerous and repetitive reporting requirements on executive agencies, is troubling from a separation of powers standpoint even if the individual statutes could not easily be described [*184] in themselves as unconstitutional. The overall effects of such micromanagement for the constitutional separation of powers obviously can be tremendous, and yet it is unlikely that judicial intervention can or would preserve the constitutional balance. The executive branch thus has the primary responsibility for presenting, in as forceful and principled a way as possible, the separation of powers problems with all legislation that has such effects. In carrying out this Office's various roles in the executive's review of existing and proposed legislation, we intend to bear this obligation in mind, and we are pleased to be of assistance to other components of the executive branch in their efforts to analyze, from a policy standpoint as well as from a strictly legal basis, the impact of legislation on the constitutional separation of congressional and presidential powers.

Walter Dellinger

Assistant Attorney General

Source: All Sources : Federal Legal - U.S. : Administrative Agency Materials : US Attorney General Opinions
Terms: ("fbi" or "federal bureau of investigation")and director and acting and confirm! (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, January 13, 2001 - 2:31 PM EST

REV_00260144

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

REV_00260145

(concurrent resolution); Constitutionality of Proposed [*17] Legislation Affecting Tax Refunds, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 56, 60-62 (1933) (joint congressional committee); Constitutional Issues Raised by Inter-American Convention on International Commercial Arbitration, 4B Op. O.L.C. 509, 512-13 (1980) (one-house veto of "private" action).

The Supreme Court has applied a similar analysis to the Appointments Clause of Article II, Section 2. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 138-39 (1976) (per curiam), the Court concluded that "Congress' power under [the Necessary and Proper] Clause is inevitably bounded by the express language of Art. II, § 2, cl. 2," and that consequently Congress cannot provide for the appointment of "'Officers of the United States,'" except through a procedure that "comports with" the Appointments Clause. Buckley vindicated the long-standing constitutional view of the executive branch. See, e.g., Constitutionality of Resolution Establishing United States New York World's Fair Commission, 39 Op. Att'y Gen. 61 (1937). Pursuant to the language of the Clause, principal officers must be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, while Congress is limited in providing alternative means for the appointment [*18] of inferior officers to the "possible repositories for the appointment power." Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 884 (1991). (Those repositories are "the President alone, . 20. 20. the Courts of Law, or . 20. 20. the Heads of Departments." U.S. Const. art. 20II, § 202, cl. 202.)

The rules of law derived from the requirements of bicameralism/presentment and the Appointments Clause have the clear and powerful effect of invalidating any inconsistent congressional action. Congress may not employ any mode of exercising legislative power other than through bicameralism and presentment. The Appointments Clause's list of those who may appoint officers is exclusive, and Congress cannot authorize anyone else to appoint officers of the United States. The major difficulty in applying the bicameralism/presentment and Appointments Clause requirements lies in determining whether a particular action falls within the scope of the prescribed procedures. In section II of this memorandum, we discuss questions that have arisen concerning the scope of both requirements.

B. The Anti-Aggrandizement Principle

Although the founders were concerned about the concentration of governmental [*19] power in any of the three branches, their primary fears were directed toward congressional self-aggrandizement, See Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 411 n.35 (1989) (distinguishing Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), as resting on "the special danger recognized by the Founders of congressional usurpation of Executive Branch functions"). and the Supreme Court's decisions call for careful scrutiny of legislation that has the purpose or effect of extending Congress's authority beyond the legislative process. Just as the textual requirement of bicameralism and presentment limits the means by which Congress may legislate, so the anti-aggrandizement principle limits the means by which Congress may influence the execution (or adjudication) of the laws. The fact that the anti-aggrandizement principle does not rest on a particular provision of the Constitution does not make it any less important and legitimate a feature of the law of separation of powers than those features such as bicameralism and presentment that do have specific textual loci.

> The Framers regarded the checks and balances they had built into the tripartite Federal Government as a self-executing safeguard [*20] against the encroachment or aggrandizement of one branch at the expense of the other. 20. 20. 20. This Court has not hesitated to enforce the principle of separation embodied in the Constitution when its application has proved necessary for the decisions of cases or controversies properly before it.

REV_00260100

Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 122-23 (1976) (per curiam). The Constitution affords Congress great latitude in making policy choices through the process of bicameral passage and presentment. However, "once Congress makes its choice in enacting legislation, its participation ends," and "Congress can thereafter control the execution of its enactment only indirectly -- by passing new legislation." Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 733-34 (1986). While Congress may inform itself of how legislation is being implemented through the ordinary means of legislative oversight and investigation, the anti-aggrandizement principle forbids Congress, directly or through an agent subject to removal by Congress, "The structure of the Constitution does not permit Congress to execute the laws; it follows that Congress cannot grant to an officer under its control what it does not possess." Bowsher [*21] , 478 U.S. at 726. An officer subject to removal by Congress is subordinate to Congress as a matter of constitutional law and must be viewed as an agent of Congress for separation of powers purposes. Id. at 730. The Constitution expressly prescribes the only means by which the houses of Congress may participate in the removal from an ongoing office of a non-legislative official -- impeachment by the House and trial by the Senate. Id. at 723. from intervening in the decision making necessary to execute the law. See id. at 733-34; FEC v. NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d 821, 827 (D.C. Cir. 1993), cert. dismissed, 115 S. Ct. 537 (1994). Bowsher upheld the view of the Constitution long maintained by the executive branch. See, e.g., Constitutionality of Proposed Legislation Affecting Tax Refunds, 37 Op. Att'y Gen. 56, 56 (1933) (unconstitutional for Congress to give a joint committee of Congress authority "to approve or disapprove executive acts").

In Bowsher, the Court held that a provision of the Gramm-Rudman Deficit Reduction Act was unconstitutional because it vested in the Comptroller General (an official "removable only at the initiative of Congress," [*22] 478 U.S. at 728) the power to make post-enactment decisions about how the executive branch should implement budget reduction legislation. The Court rejected the argument that self-aggrandizing legislation can be upheld when it is as a practical matter harmless or de minimis and dismissed as beside the point Justice White's vigorous argument that "[r]ealistic consideration of the nature of the Comptroller General's relation to Congress . 20. 20. reveals that the threat to separation of powers . 20. 20. is wholly chimerical." 478 U.S. at 774 (White, J., dissenting); see also Metropolitan Washington Airports Auth. v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252, 269 n.15 (1991) ("the likelihood that Congress" actually would exercise its authority to remove the members of the review board under consideration in MWAA was "irrelevant for separation-of-powers purposes"). In contrast, the Court upheld the validity of the laws challenged in Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988) (independent counsel provisions of Ethics in Government Act of 1978), and CFTC v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833 (1986) (regulations implementing section of the Commodity Exchange Act), in [*23] part because the Court saw no reason to view those laws as examples of legislative aggrandizement. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 694 ("We observe first that this case does not involve an attempt by Congress to increase its own powers at the expense of the Executive Branch."); Schor, 478 U.S. at 856 ("Unlike Bowsher, this case raises no question of the aggrandizement of congressional power at the expense of a coordinate branch.").

Like the express requirements of the bicameralism/presentment process and the Appointments Clause, the anti-aggrandizement principle puts a powerful constraint on congressional power: legislative action that falls within the scope of the principle is unconstitutional. The bicameralism/presentment and anti-aggrandizement requirements converge when Congress attempts to vest in itself or its agents the power to take action with legal effects outside the legislative branch by some means other than the textually prescribed procedure of bicameral passage of a bill and presentation to the President. Such an attempt is unconstitutional regardless of whether one views the attempt as a violation of the bicameralism/presentment requirement for legislation or as [*24] a self-aggrandizing intrusion into the sphere of activity of another branch. See MWAA, 501 U.S. at 274-77. However, the two requirements do not always work in tandem. A statute providing that the President can exercise additional authority over some issue with the approval of a single house of Congress would not amount to congressional self-aggrandizement but would violate the bicameralism requirement. Similarly, it is difficult to view the designation by statute of agents of Congress to be non-voting members of an extra-legislative decision-making body as leading to the exercise of legislative authority in violation of Chadha, but such designation may well run afoul of the anti-aggrandizement principle. See, e.g., NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d at 826-27. The complementary limit on the principle is that, as the Court understands it, the principle applies only to congressional action that amounts to formal or direct self-aggrandizement -- for example, the placement of congressional agents on a body with prosecutorial or law enforcement powers -- no matter how limited the power thereby seized by Congress. See NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d at 826-27. The [*25] Court reviews legislation that arguably increases Congress's power indirectly by weakening the executive politically under the less stringent general separation of powers principle. See Morrison, 487 U.S. at 694. A significant difficulty in applying the anti-aggrandizement principle arises from the uncertain line between minor (but unconstitutional) aggrandizements and (constitutional) exercises of Congress's broad investigative and oversight powers. Compare NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d at 826-27 (unconstitutional for Congress to place agents within an entity exercising final decision-making authority) with McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135 (1927) (constitutional for Congress to issue subpoenas). In section II, we discuss some of the questions that have arisen.

REV_00260101

C. The General Separation of Powers Principle

Legislation that affects the constitutional separation of powers but is consistent with the requirements of bicameralism/presentment, the Appointments Clause, and the anti-aggrandizement principle is subject to less searching scrutiny. Legislation impinging on the President's responsibilities in the areas of foreign affairs and national defense poses unique [*26] issues in the application of the general principle of separation of powers, requiring a more searching examination of the validity of congressional action. While some older judicial opinions used language suggesting that any overlap between the powers wielded by the different branches is illegitimate, See, e.g., Springer v. Philippine Islands, 277 U.S. 189, 201 (1928) (discussing the "exclusive character of the powers conferred upon each of the three departments"). On the present Court, Justice Scalia adheres to a version of this view. See, e.g., Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 703-04 (1988) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (criticizing the Court for focusing on "such relatively technical details as the Appointments Clause and the removal power" rather than on "the principle of separation of powers"). the modern Supreme Court interprets the general principle of separation of powers in light of Madison's assertion that the separation necessary to free government is violated only "'where the whole power of one department is exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of another department.'" Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 442 n.5 (1977) [*27] (quoting The Federalist No. 47, at 325-26 (James Madison) (Jacob E. Cooke ed., 1961) (emphasis in original)). Madison's language about "the whole power of [a] department" should not be construed in a woodenly literalistic manner. As the Supreme Court's decisions indicate, the point is that the principle of separation of powers safeguards the overall constitutional role and function of the affected branch. Indeed, this would seem to have been Madison's view as well: during the great debate in the First Congress over the President's authority to remove executive branch officers, Madison argued against congressional power to limit the President's authority on the ground that such limitations would distort the constitutionally ordained role of the executive. See Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 131 (1926) (quoting Madison). Therefore, "in determining whether [an] Act disrupts the proper balance between the coordinate branches, the proper inquiry focuses on the extent to which it prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions." Id. at 443. Cf. CFTC v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 856-57 (1986) ("the separation of powers question [*28] presented in this litigation is whether Congress impermissibly undermined . 20. 20. the role of the Judicial Branch"). An affirmative answer to the question of whether Congress has prevented the executive or judiciary from accomplishing its functions, furthermore, would not lead inexorably to the judicial invalidation of the statute: in that case, the Court has stated, it would proceed to "determine whether that impact is justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of Congress." Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. at 443. Although most of the Court's decisions applying the general separation of powers principle have concerned legislation arguably interfering with the executive or judiciary, the Court's approach is applicable in other circumstances as well. For example, United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), addressed the argument that a subpoena duces tecum addressed to the President in the course of a criminal proceeding was a judicial encroachment on the executive's autonomy. The Court rejected the argument, holding in the circumstances of the case that the President's "generalized interest in confidentiality" was outweighed [*29] by "the demonstrated, specific need [of the courts and the accused] for evidence in a pending criminal trial." Id. at 713. The threat to the President's constitutionally based interest posed by compelled disclosure in such (presumably rare) circumstances was slight, the Court concluded, while "the allowance of the privilege to withhold evidence . 20. 20. would . 20. 20. gravely impair the basic function of the courts." Id. at 712. The Court built on its reasoning in United States v. Nixon in formulating the test set out a few years later in Administrator of General Services, under which it examined the impact of an adverse decision on the constitutional functions of the executive and judicial branches.

REV_00260102

The Court's current understanding of the general principle of separation of powers is illustrated by Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988). See also Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361 (1989). Mistretta upheld the validity of Congress's decision to create the Sentencing Commission as an independent entity within the judicial branch composed, in part, of Article III judges against the claim that the Commission violated the general separation of powers [*30] principle. Id. at 383. As in Morrison, the Court looked to the impact of the challenged legislation on the ability of the affected branch to fulfill its duties and concluded that the legislation posed no real threat to the integrity or authority of the judiciary. Id. at 384. In Morrison, the Court concluded that the restrictions in the independent counsel statute on the executive's supervisory and removal powers did not violate the principle. While the Court acknowledged that the statute rendered the independent counsel "free from Executive supervision to a greater extent than other federal prosecutors," it was unpersuaded that the limitations placed on that supervision meant that the President would not be able "to perform his constitutionally assigned duties." Id. at 696. The Court also addressed the statute's imposition of a for-cause requirement on the Attorney General's power to remove an independent counsel, arguably a violation of the rule of Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926) (holding unconstitutional a statute requiring Senate advice and consent to the presidential removal of certain postmasters). Morrison distinguished Myers as based [*31] on what we have called the anti-aggrandizement principle, 487 U.S. at 686 (like Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), Myers involved "Congress' attempt to involve itself in the removal of an executive official"), and rejected the argument that the constitutionality of a for-cause removal requirement depends on whether an official is classified as "purely executive," id. at 689. The proper inquiry, the Court concluded, was the compatibility of the restriction on the executive's removal power with the general separation of powers principle that Congress cannot legislate in such a way that the President cannot carry out his constitutional functions. Ultimately, the Court was "simply [unable to] see how the President's need to control the [counsel's] exercise of . 20. 20. discretion is so central to the functioning of the Executive Branch as to require as a matter of constitutional law that the counsel be terminable at will by the President." Id. at 691-92. In light of the narrow range of the independent counsel's jurisdiction, her essential insulation from any significant policy-making role, and the well-established principle that Congress can limit the removal authority [*32] of a head of department when granting that officer the power to appoint subordinates, the Court concluded that the independent counsel statute did not fundamentally undermine the executive's constitutional authority.

The Supreme Court's basic formulation of the general principle of separation of powers is

REV_00260103

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

[Separation of Powers] [2]

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2164/2075
9694

Box 52
Folder 13

REV_00260146

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: ("executive office" /2 president) and "political activities" (Edit Search)

*32 Duq. L. Rev. 773, **

Copyright (c) 1994 Duquesne University
Duquesne Law Review

Summer, 1994

32 Duq. L. Rev. 773

LENGTH: 14836 words

COMMENT: Congressional Power vis a vis the President and Presidential Papers

Sandra E. Richetti

SUMMARY:
... The concept of "separation of powers" that has emerged as a result of the framework of the Constitution denotes three separate and independent branches of government, each with its own powers that cannot be infringed upon by any other branch. ... On writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court, Nixon argued that the PRMPA violated principles of separation of powers and that it offended the presumption of confidentiality of presidential communications set forth in United States v. Nixon. ... Although the Court in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services did recognize that Congress may regulate the President so long as it does not usurp any of the President's constitutional power, it did not place as much importance on principles of executive privilege as it had in United States v. Nixon. Indeed, the Court rendered it difficult to ascertain exactly when presidential confidentiality would prevail over congressional demands for disclosure. ... Instead, the court reasoned that judicial review only ensured that the President complied with the PRA and did not alter the control vested in the archivist or the executive branch. ... Thus, the court ordered the archivist to take all necessary measures to ensure that all federal records on the PROFS system, with the exception of purely presidential records under the PRA, were preserved. ...

TEXT:
[*773]

The concept of "separation of powers" [1] that has emerged as a result of the framework of the Constitution denotes three separate and independent branches of government, each with its own powers that cannot be infringed upon by any other branch. [2] However, this concept has its limits because the three branches of government must interact in order for the government to function effectively; hence, the "separation of powers" can never exist in the strictest sense. [3] Thus, for example, the powers of the President, as head of the executive branch, will from time to time be affected by the legislative and judicial branches. [4]

This comment will first examine the concept of separation of powers and how it has been handled by the courts, particularly [*774] with respect to the extent that Congress may exert power over the President. Second, it will examine the historical background with respect to the power of the President over the presidential papers. Third, this comment will analyze the effect of the Nixon administration on the issue. Fourth, it will discuss Congress' passage of the Presidential Records Act to deal with the issue. Fifth, it will examine the effect of the Reagan/Bush administrations on issues of presidential control over executive papers. Finally, this comment will conclude with an analysis of the extent to which the legislative branch may and should be able to encroach on the autonomy of the President with respect to control over the court found that the recordkeeping procedures of the NSC were "arbitrary and capricious" and in violation of the FRA. [161] Finally, the court found that the archivist violated his duties of providing adequate guidelines and failed to prevent the destruction of valuable information contained on the PROFS system. [162] Thus, the court ordered the archivist to take all necessary measures to ensure that all federal records on the PROFS system, with the exception of purely presidential records under the PRA, were preserved. [163]

VI. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

The impact of the decision in Armstrong v. Bush is unclear. On the one hand, the result of the decision was to prevent the destruction of the information on the PROFS system by the President. [164] However, the court's analysis itself leads to the conclusion that the PRA is a judicially unenforceable statute that really only ensures that the President does not remove or destroy presidential papers at the conclusion of the term in office.

Indeed, the President may dispose of records that the President does not wish to preserve without any veto power on the part of the archivist or Congress. [165] The only possible exception to this is if Congress decides to pass legislation to prohibit a proposed disposal. However, this could only occur when the archivist brings the proposed disposal to Congress' attention. [166] Given that the archivist is a purely executive official removable by the President, it is not difficult to imagine a situation in which certain important historical materials may escape Congress' attention altogether.
[*796]

Furthermore, although the PRA does require the President to create, maintain, and preserve a system of records, [167] it does not provide any remedy if the President does not do so. In effect, the PRA relies heavily upon voluntary compliance by the President.

As such, the PRA may recognize the traditional deference granted to presidential communications to a greater degree than suggested in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services. Therefore, the PRA may be more in accordance with the principles of United States v. Nixon, wherein the Supreme Court recognized that there was more to protecting the President's communications than non-interference with constitutional functions. [168] The PRA may reflect a congressional realization that the President's communications should be accorded more protection than suggested in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services. However, if this were true, Congress probably would have expressly precluded judicial review rather than leaving to the courts the decision of whether it was impliedly precluded. Furthermore, the language of the PRA suggests that the President's duties are mandatory rather than discretionary, as the lower court recognized in Armstrong v. Bush. [169] Thus, it is this author's opinion that the PRA probably does not impliedly preclude judicial review. Nevertheless, there are many safeguards written into the PRA which protect the President's discretion and control of the materials; hence, based on Nixon v. Administrator of General Service, it is unlikely that the courts will ever find the PRA to be an infringement on the President's powers and thus, unconstitutional.

However, the fact that the President has to take the PRA into account at all in the course of making decisions on policy may be a hinderance in itself. Indeed, Presidents in the future will invariably be more careful with regard to their records if they choose to comply with the PRA. This will be true because not only will they have to be more cautious about what is communicated, but they will also have to submit to Congress proposals for disposal of certain information the archivist deems valuable. [170]

Although Congress has no veto power over disposal decisions, the President may not wish for Congress to view executive branch materials that the President plans to dispose. This in itself could cause a President to exercise caution when communicating. Addi [*797] tionally, the President's disposal decisions are subject to congressional legislation. [171] Of course, the President would have an opportunity to veto the bill that prohibits the disposal. Undeniably, if Congress overrides a presidential veto by a two-thirds vote, there is a strong possibility that the President's interest in confidentiality will not be great enough to counter a compelling interest in preserving the information. This would comport with the analysis in United States v. Nixon, whereby the Court determined that the President's need for confidentiality is of constitutional proportion and can only be overridden by a compelling interest.

REV_00260156

Thus, the PRA may serve an important function by allowing Congress to at least inspect materials before they are destroyed, so as to preclude destruction of information that it has a compelling interest in retaining. However favorable this may be, the possibility exists that Presidents, through good faith compliance with the PRA, may screen their own communications and less readily speak openly and freely for fear that Congress may at some point examine and scrutinize what they have preserved as a record.

If the President does not wish to comply with the PRA, it may be possible for the President to pressure the archivist not to submit the proposed disposal to Congress, because the archivist works directly for the President. However, a President may not wish to pressure the archivist in this way and the archivist, who is a professional, may not wish to follow the President's command. Hence, the President would still be affected by the PRA, for without it this option would not be considered at all.

Concededly, it is beneficial to the public to place ownership of presidential papers in the hands of the United States; thus, valuable information of social or historical importance will be maintained and preserved when the President does not object. The PRA would have accomplished much if that was its only goal. The constitutionality of such law cannot be doubted for it recognizes that the President is elected to serve the public, but it offers the President the latitude to make decisions without fear that open and full discussion may lead to disclosure of secret information. However, the provisions of the PRA may go a step beyond the presumption of confidentiality recognized in United States v. Nixon, for they mandate that the President create and maintain a record system and subject presidential records to Congressional disclosure.
[*798]

The decision in Armstrong v. Bush adds another dimension to the dilemma: executive materials may be subject to disclosure under the FRA by way of review of the agency head's and archivist's actions under the "arbitrary and capricious" standard of the APA. Although this does not impede the President in the decisionmaking process, this does effectively subject executive materials to congressional regulation and possible public disclosure. The extent to which these materials are subject to claims of executive privilege is unclear. On the one hand, the same principles should apply to executive branch materials as apply to the President's own materials because it is the autonomy of the entire branch that is protected, and not just that of the President. On the other hand, however, the court in Armstrong v. Bush asserted that agency materials did not deserve the same protection as did the President's day-to-day communications. [172]

The decision in Armstrong v. Bush, however, was not that of the Supreme Court. Consequently, the issues that are raised by that decision and by the area of presidential autonomy will not be resolved until the Supreme Court has the opportunity to decide them. In the meantime, President Clinton and future Presidents face the uneasy task of ascertaining whether or not compliance with the PRA is necessary. As for the archivist, the court in Armstrong v. Bush has made the role more clear for the time being: the archivist will be busy ensuring that federal agencies have complied with the FRA but not so busy when it comes to the President.

FOOTNOTES:

REV_00260157

n1 The term "separation of powers" is defined as follows:

The governments of states and the United States are divided into three departments or branches: the legislative, which is empowered to make laws, the executive, which is required to carry out the laws, and the judicial, which is charged with interpreting the laws . . . one branch is not permitted to encroach on the domain or exercise the powers of another branch.

BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 951-52 (6th ed. abr. 1991).

n2 Article I of the Constitution defines the powers of the legislative branch; Article II defines those of the executive branch; and Article III outlines the powers of the judicial branch of government. U.S. CONST. art. I-III. The framework of the Constitution sets up a system of a limited government; that is, the distribution of authority among the branches of government gives to each branch the power to limit or expand the authority of another branch. PETER M. SHANE & HAROLD H. BRUFF, THE LAW OF PRESIDENTIAL POWER 31 (1988).

n3 See Archibald Cox, Executive Privilege, 122 U. PA. L. REV. 1383, 1388 (1974) ("Interaction, not independence, has historically been characteristic of the operation of the three branches of our government").

n4 Cox, cited at note 3, at 1388.

n5 295 U.S. 602 (1935).

n6 Humphrey, 295 U.S. at 629-30.

n7 15 U.S.C. 41-77 (1991). Section 41 of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides as follows:

A commission is created and established, to be known as the Federal Trade Commission . . . which shall be composed of five Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. . . . Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

15 U.S.C. 41.

n8 Humphrey, 295 U.S. at 629-32.

n9 Id. at 624.

n10 Id. at 628-30. The Court distinguished these officials from presidential appointees that performed "purely executive functions" that were removable by the President at will. Id.

n11 SHANE & BRUFF, cited at note 2, at 305. Shane & Bruff point to the fact that the FTC has concurrent jurisdiction with the Justice Department to prosecute antitrust violations. Id.

n12 Id.

n13 343 U.S. 579 (1952).

n14 Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 582.

n15 Id. at 583.

n16 Id.

REV_00260158

n17 Id.

n18 Id. at 585.

n19 Youngstown, 343 U.S at 585-89. Justice Jackson, in a concurring opinion, outlined the relationship of presidential power with respect to Congress. Id. at 635 (Jackson, J., concurring). Jackson's analysis was as follows:

1. When the President acts pursuant to an express or implied authorization of Congress, his authority is at its maximum, for it includes all that he possesses in his own right plus all that Congress can delegate. . . .

2. When the President acts in absence of either a congressional grant or denial of authority, he can only rely upon his own independent powers, but there is a zone of twilight in which he and Congress may have concurrent authority, or in which its distribution is uncertain. . . .

3. When the President takes measures incompatible with the expressed or implied will of Congress, his power is at its lowest ebb, for then he can rely only upon his own constitutional powers minus any constitutional powers of Congress over the matter.

Id. at 635-38.

n20 Id. at 585-89.

n21 Eric R. Glitzenstein & Alan B. Morrison, The Supreme Court's Decision in Morrison v. Olsen: A Common Sense Application of the Constitution to a Practical Problem, 38 AM. U. L. REV. 359, 370 (1989). The Court generally has been concerned with the encroachment of any branch of government with respect to any other. Id.

n22 462 U.S. 919 (1983).

n23 Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Pub. L. No. 414, 66 Stat. 163, 214 (codified at 8 U.S.C. 1254(a)(1) (1993)). Section 244(a)(1) of the Act provides, in pertinent part: (a) the Attorney General may, in his discretion, suspend deportation and adjust the status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, in the case of an alien who . . . (1) is deportable under any law of the United States . . . and proves that . . . he was and is a person of good moral character; and is a person whose deportation would . . . result in extreme hardship.

8 U.S.C. 1254(a)(1).

n24 Chadha, 462 U.S. at 951-59.

n25 Id. at 957-59. Earlier, in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), the Court had discussed the constitutionality of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, 18 U.S.C. 437 (1971 & Supp. 1993). Buckley, 424 U.S. at 6. The Court held that Congress' appointment of officers to the Federal Election Commission violated separation of powers because the officers were given wide-ranging enforcement powers; hence, they must have been appointed by the President pursuant to Article II of the Constitution. Id. at 140.

n26 See, e.g., Chadha, 462 U.S. at 951-9; Buckley, 424 U.S. at 140.

n27 Cox, cited at note 3, at 1384.

n28 Id.

n29 Id.

REV_00260159

n30 Id. at 1384-87.

n31 Id. at 1391. For instance, James Wilson, addressing the Pennsylvania Ratification Convention asserted: "the executive power is better to be trusted when it has no screen. . . . He cannot act improperly, and hide either his negligence or inattention . . . ." Id. (citation omitted).

n32 Cox, cited at note 3, at 1392.

n33 Carl McGowan, Presidents and Their Papers, 68 MINN. L. REV. 409, 410 (1983). For instance, George Washington took his papers with him when he left office, and Congress, apparently believing them to be privately owned, purchased the papers from Washington's heir fifteen years later for $ 20,000. Id. at 410-11 (citation omitted).

n34 Id. at 411.

n35 Id. at 412-13. For instance, Abraham Lincoln's son Robert was once found destroying Lincoln's Civil War correspondence. Id. at 412.

n36 Id. at 414.

n37 Id. at 415.

n38 Cox, cited at note 3, at 1396.

n39 Carl Bretscher, Presidential Records Act: The President and Judicial Review under the Records Acts, 60 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 1477, 1480 (1992).

n40 Cox, cited at note 3, at 1404. For example, in some instances Congress had explicitly given the President the discretion to decide whether or not to deliver the documents. Id. at 1397. Other instances of non-disclosure involved presidential challenges to the particular body to deal with the subject of the requested documents. Id. at 1398.

n41 Id. at 1403 (citation omitted).

n42 Id.

n43 Prior to the Nixon administration, Congress' regulation of executive branch documents was predominantly limited to the Federal Records Act of 1943, 44 U.S.C. 21002118, 2501-2506, 2901-2909, 3101-3107, 3301-3324 (1984) ("FRA"). The FRA represents a series of statutes that originated with the Disposal of Records Act, ch. 192, 57 Stat. 380 (1943) and the Federal Records Act, ch. 849, 64 Stat. 583 (1950). These acts were eventually amended by the National Archives and Records Administration Act of October 19, 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-497, 98 Stat. 2280 (1984).

The FRA requires that "the head of each federal agency make and preserve records containing adequate and proper documentation of the . . . transactions of the agency." 44 U.S.C. 3101. Furthermore, it is the duty of each agency head to "establish and maintain an active, continuing program for the economical and efficient management of the records of the agency," 44 U.S.C. 3102, and to "establish safeguards against the removal or loss of records." 44 U.S.C. 3105.

In addition, the FRA orders the archivist to provide guidelines to federal agencies and promulgate standards and procedures which may be followed; furthermore, the archivist has a duty to inspect the record management programs of the federal agencies. 44 U.S.C. 2904. If it is discovered that any federal agency practice was in violation of the FRA, the archivist must inform the head of the agency in writing of the violation and make recommendations for corrective measures. 44 U.S.C. 2115. If the corrective measures are not taken, the archivist must notify the President and Congress of the violation. 44 U.S.C. 2115.

REV_00260160

The FRA also provides that no federal record can be alienated or destroyed except as authorized by the Act. 44 U.S.C. 3314. A "record" is defined under the Act as follows: "All books, papers, maps, photographs, machine readable materials, or other documentary materials . . . preserved or appropriate for preservation by that agency . . . as evidence of the organization, functions, policies, decisions, procedures, operations, or other activities of the Government or because of the informational value of the data in them." 44 U.S.C. 3301.

Pursuant to the FRA, records can be disposed of if, upon request of the agency head, the archivist believes that they lack "sufficient administrative, legal, research, or other value to warrant their continued preservation by the Government." 44 U.S.C. 3303(a).

Accordingly, the FRA regulated the creation, maintenance, preservation, and disposal of federal records. However, the Act did not place ownership of the records in the United States. Further, though the FRA applied to the entire Executive Branch, the FRA apparently did not govern access to Presidential materials for it regulated only agency heads. Indeed, in enacting the FRA Congress' concern was not with the protection of executive privilege; instead, the FRA represented a concern for the maintenance of an orderly system of records management in the Executive Branch. Bretscher, cited at note 39, at 1488-89.

Furthermore, in Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980), the Supreme Court determined that the FRA did not confer a private right of action on private plaintiffs, but rather that Congress' intention was that the FRA be enforced through a system of administrative standards. Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 149. For instance, the FRA provides that the agency heads and the archivist must request the Attorney General to initiate an action to recover records removed from the agency in violation of the Act. Id. at 149; 44 U.S.C. 3106.

Another major regulation of executive materials was had through the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. 552 (1970), which was passed in 1966 and directs each "agency" of the federal government to make publicly available all agency records that do not fall within certain exemptions. 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(3). The Freedom of Information Act is a disclosure statute only and does not direct agencies to create or preserve records. Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 152.

n44 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n45 Nixon, 418 U.S. at 707.

n46 Id. at 687.

n47 Id. at 688.

n48 Id. Nixon publicly released edited transcripts of 43 conversations in which portions of 20 of the subpoenaed documents were included. Id.

n49 Id.

n50 Nixon, 418 U.S. at 688-89.

n51 Id. at 714.

n52 Id. at 689-90.

n53 Id. at 690.

REV_00260161

n54 Id. at 703.

n55 Nixon, 418 U.S. at 703.

n56 Id. at 704-05.

n57 Id. at 705-06.

n58 Id. at 708.

n59 Id. Furthermore, the Court reasoned that a President must be free to have open and free discussions with advisors in private so that policies may be shaped without hinderance. Id.

n60 Nixon, 418 U.S. at 706.

n61 Id. The Court further asserted that construing Article II powers as providing to the President an absolute, unqualified privilege against enforcement of the criminal laws would do violence to the notion of a constitutionally "workable government" and upset the role of the Judiciary as provided by Article III of the Constitution. Id. at 707.

n62 The Court noted that although the President's interest in confidential communications was not explicitly set forth in the Constitution, it is related to the effective function of the President in carrying out the duties of the office, and as such had its roots in the Constitution. Id. at 705-06.

n63 Id. at 712-13. The Court examined the interests in the administration of justice in light of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments and found that the constitutional need for production of evidence in a criminal trial was essential. Id. at 711-13. Furthermore, the Court reasoned that, while the President's interest in confidentiality was only general, the need for production of evidence at a particular trial was more specific and crucial. Id. at 713.

n64 Id. at 714-15.

n65 Nixon, 418 U.S. at 708.

n66 See id. at 705-06.

n67 Id. at 706.

n68 Interestingly, in 1948 Congressman Richard M. Nixon, addressing the issue of executive privilege, asserted as follows:

That would mean that the President could have arbitrarily issued an Executive order . . . denying the Congress of the United States information it needed to conduct an investigation of the executive department and the Congress would have no right to question his decision.

Any such order of the President can be questioned by the Congress as to whether or not that order is justified . . . .

Cox, cited at note 3, at 1396 (citation omitted).

n69 433 U.S. 425 (1977).

n70 Pub. L. No. 93-526, 88 Stat. 1695 (1974) (codified as amended at 44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note (1984)). The act provides, in relevant part: 101. (a) Notwithstanding any other law or any agreement or understanding . . . any Federal employee in possession shall deliver, and the Archivist of the United States . . . shall receive, obtain, or retain, complete possession and control of all original tape recordings of conversations which were recorded . . . and which-(1) involve former President Richard M. Nixon or other individuals who, at the time of the conversation, were employed by the Federal Government; . . . .

REV_00260162

(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other law or any other agreement . . . the Archivist shall receive, retain, or make reasonable efforts to obtain . . . the Presidential historical materials of Richard M. Nixon . . . . 102. (a) None of the tape recordings or other materials . . . shall be destroyed . . . except as hereafter may be provided by law. (b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title . . . the tape recordings and other materials . . . shall, immediately . . . be made available, subject to any rights, defenses, or privileges which the Federal Government or any other person may invoke, for use in any judicial proceeding . . . .

44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note (1984).

The PRMPA represented a Congressional response to President Nixon's intention to have the millions of documents and hundreds of tape recordings that had been accumulated while in office shipped to him in California. Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 430.

n71 Id. at 432. Nixon's intention to retain his papers was illustrated by the NixonSampson agreement, in which Nixon and the Administrator of General Services, Arthur B. Sampson, agreed that Nixon was to be vested of all legal and equitable title to the materials. Id. at 431. Further, the agreement recited that the materials were to be deposited near Nixon's home in California at a government facility. Id. The documents were to be held in the facility for three years, subject to Nixon's right to reproduce any materials. Id. at 432. At the end of the term, Nixon was to donate the documents to the United States but could exercise the right to withdraw any document without formality for any purpose as he saw fit. Id. The tape recordings, on the other hand, were to be donated to the United States after five years; however, Nixon retained the right to direct that the administrator destroy any tapes. Id. Moreover, the tapes were to be destroyed at the time of Nixon's death or on September 1, 1984, whichever came first. Id.

Prior to the passage of the PRMPA, Nixon had filed suit seeking enforcement of the Nixon-Sampson agreement. Id. Nixon v. Sampson, 389 F. Supp. 107 (D.C. Cir. 1975). For a discussion of the legislative history of the PRMPA, see Nixon v. Richey, 513 F.2d 430, 43945 (D.C. Cir. 1975).

n72 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 434-35.

n73 44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note. Further, the PRMPA prohibited destruction of such materials, made them available for court subpoena, afforded Nixon access to any materials for any purpose consistent with the PRMPA, and directed the administrator to promulgate regulations governing access to the materials. 44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note.

n74 44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note. Specifically, 104 of the PRMPA lists the factors which the Administrator must take into account in promulgating the regulations as follows: (1) the need to provide the public with the full truth, at the earliest reasonable date, of the abuses of governmental power popularly identified under the generic term "Watergate'; (2) the need to make such recordings and materials available for use in judicial proceedings; (3) the need to prevent general access, except in accordance with appropriate procedures established for use in judicial proceedings to information relating to the Nation's security; (4) the need to protect every individual's right to a fair and impartial trial; (5) the need to protect any party's opportunity to assert any legally or constitutionally based right or privilege which would prevent or otherwise limit access to such recordings and materials; (6) the need to provide public access to those materials which have general historical significance, and which are not likely to be related to the need described in paragraph (1); and (7) the need to give to

REV_00260163

Richard M. Nixon, or his heirs, for his sole custody and use, tape recordings and other materials which are not likely to be related to the need described in paragraph (1) and are not otherwise of general historical significance.

44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note.

n75 44 U.S.C.A. 2111 note.

n76 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 429-30. The PRMPA was signed by President Ford in December of 1974, four months after Nixon had resigned as President. Id. at 429. Nixon commenced this action the day after Ford signed the PRMPA. Id. Nixon challenged the constitutionality of the PRMPA based on principles of separation of powers. Id. at 440.

n77 Id. at 430.

n78 Id. at 440. In addition to the separation of powers and privilege claims, Nixon also argued that the PRMPA offended his privacy interest, his First Amendment association rights, and the Bill of Attainder Clause. Id. at 429. However, the Court determined that these additional arguments were without merit. Id. at 455-84.

n79 Id. at 440.

n80 Id. at 441.

n81 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 441.

n82 Id. at 443 (citing Nixon v. GSA, 408 F. Supp. 321, 342 (D.C. Cir. 1976)).

n83 Id. at 443.

n84 Id. at 444.

n85 Id. The Court also focused on the fact that the materials were available for use in judicial proceedings subject to a valid claim of executive privilege, that the materials which were purely private were to be returned to Nixon, and that the PRMPA did not make any materials available to Congress for inspection. Id.

n86 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 449-50.

n87 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n88 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 449. However, the Court determined that its review of executive privilege was limited to the process by which the President's materials would be screened by the archivists, for pursuant to the PRMPA, any subsequent disclosure to the public would be subject to any asserted privilege of the President. Id. at 450. The Court also noted that purely private materials would be protected and returned to the President. Id.

n89 Id. at 451-52. The Court noted that in light of this historical practice, executive officials should recognize that their communications may be subject to examination by the archivists. Id. at 452. Further, the Court noted that the archivists " "record for discretion in handling confidential material is unblemished.' " Id. (citation omitted).

n90 Id. Among these interests were the need for procedures to preserve materials for historical and governmental purposes, the need to restore public confidence in the political process, and the need for the materials in civil and criminal litigation. Id. at 452-53.

n91 Id. at 455. Nixon continued to mount challenges to the taking of his materials pursuant to the PRMPA. See, e.g., Nixon v. United States, 782 F. Supp. 634 (D.C. Cir. 1991), in which it was determined that Nixon did not have legal title to his papers, but instead, as President, held them as trustee for the people of the United States. Id. at 643.

REV_00260164

n92 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 450.

n93 Id.

n94 Id. at 451.

n95 Id. at 454.

n96 Id. at 443.

n97 Compare note 92 and accompanying text with note 60 and accompanying text.

n98 Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. at 450.

n99 Id.

n100 McGowan, cited at note 33, at 431.

n101 Id. at 426.

n102 Pub. L. No. 95-591, 92 Stat. 2523 (codified at 44 U.S.C. 2201-2207 (1989)).

n103 Presidential Records Act of 1978, H.R. REP. No. 95-1487, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1978).

n104 44 U.S.C. 2202. Vice-presidential records are treated in the same manner as presidential records for purposes of the PRA. 44 U.S.C 2207.

n105 44 U.S.C. 2203(a).

n106 44 U.S.C. 2203(b). "Documentary material" is defined under the PRA to be "all books, correspondence, memorandums, documents, papers, pamphlets, works of art, models, pictures, photographs, plats, maps, films, motion pictures . . . ." 44 U.S.C. 2201(1).

Presidential records include "any documentary materials relating to the political activities of the President or members of his staff, but only if such activities relate to or have a direct effect upon the carrying out of constitutional, statutory, or other official or ceremonial duties of the President." 44 U.S.C. 2201(2)(A).

Personal records include "all documentary materials . . . of a purely private or nonpublic character" such as:

(a) diaries, journals, or other personal notes . . . not prepared or utilized for . . . transacting Government business; (b) materials relating to private political associations . . . having no relation to . . . the carrying out of . . . duties . . .; and (c) materials relating exclusively to the President's own election to the office of the Presidency . . . which have no relation to . . . the carrying out of . . . duties of the President.

44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

n107 44 U.S.C. 2203(c).

n108 The Archivist of the United States is an executive official who is appointed by the presidential papers.

I. SEPARATION OF POWERS

The concept of "separation of powers" has important implications in the area of presidential power, particularly with respect to the extent to which such power can be limited by Congress. In 1935, the Supreme Court in Humphrey's Executor v. United States [5] asserted, "the fundamental necessity of maintaining each of the three general departments . . . entirely free from the control . . . of the others . . . is hardly open to serious question. So much is implied in the very fact of the separation of the powers of these departments by the Constitution." [6]

Nonetheless, Humphrey upheld a provision of the Federal Trade Commission Act [7] that limited the President's power to remove persons appointed to the Federal Trade Commission. [8] The Court determined that Congress could create an independent agency, such as the Federal Trade Commission, in which the appointees could not be removed by the President for policy reasons, but instead were removable only for cause. [9] The Court supported this decision by declaring that the duties of the Federal Trade Commission were quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial, and as such wholly discon [*775] nected from the executive branch; hence, presidential removal would threaten the powers of such department. [10]

However, as a practical matter, the Court allowed Congress to create agencies which in effect could succeed in independent execution of the laws without presidential control. For instance, independent agencies are often involved in prosecuting violations of laws. [11] Therefore, despite the rigid separation of powers discussion undertaken in Humphrey, the Court has permitted Congress to limit the President's power to remove appointees involved in execution of the laws. [12]

Later, the Supreme Court recognized that the President's powers could not be viewed independently of the other branches of government, and that Congress was crucial in shaping the role of the President. In Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. v. Sawyer, [13] the Supreme Court examined the scope of presidential power with respect to the legislative branch. [14] In Youngstown, the Korean conflict caused President Truman to direct the Secretary of Commerce to seize and operate the nation's steel mills when labor disputes threatened a strike. [15] President Truman notified Congress of his actions after he had issued the order. [16] The steel companies brought suit against the Secretary of Commerce arguing that the seizure was unconstitutional because it was not congressionally authorized. [17]

In the course of its opinion, the Court discussed the power of the presidency with respect to Congress. Specifically, the Court held that the President's power to act must stem from either the Constitution or from an act of Congress. [18] Finding neither to exist in this case, the Court found the seizure unconstitutional. [19] In sum, [*776] the Court found that the President could not exercise any legislative power without Congressional approval; furthermore, the President's power to act, in the area of legislation or otherwise, was largely defined with respect to the powers that Congress could lawfully exercise and the powers that Congress had chosen to delegate to the President. [20]

Although the Court in Youngstown had recognized that the President's powers could not be viewed independently of Congressional powers, the Court has consistently guarded against the usurpation by Congress of powers which the Constitution has vested in the President. [21] For instance, in Immigration and Naturalization Services v. Chadha, [22] the Court struck down a provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act [23] which gave to either House of Congress the power to veto a deportation decision of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. [24] The Court asserted that Congress could not legislate and take away the President's President with the advice and consent of the Senate and may be removed by the President. 44 U.S.C. 2103(a). The President must communicate the reasons for such removal to Congress. 44 U.S.C. 2103(a).

n109 44 U.S.C. 2203(c)(1).

n110 44 U.S.C. 2203(c).

n111 44 U.S.C. 2203(d)-(e).

n112 See, generally, 44 U.S.C. 2203.

n113 See H.R. REP. No. 1487 at 13.

n114 See note 108 and accompanying text. Congress, in enacting the PRA, did not want to place any limitations on the authority of the President to remove the Archivist so that actual control of presidential papers would remain within the executive branch. H.R. REP. No. 1487 at 2.

n115 44 U.S.C. 2203(f)(1)-(2).

n116 44 U.S.C. 2203(f)(3). The archivist, upon making such determination, must publish notice of the intended disposal in the Federal Register at least 60 days ahead of the scheduled date of disposal. 44 U.S.C. 2203(f)(3).

n117 44 U.S.C. 2203(f)(1).

n118 44 U.S.C. 2204. Documents which may be restricted include those: (1) authorized to be kept secret for national security and foreign policy reasons; (2) relating to the appointment of federal officials; (3) exempted from disclosure by statute; (4) trade secrets and commercial or financial information which is confidential; (5) confidential communications between the President and advisors concerning requests for advice; and (6) personnel and medical files of which disclosure would be an invasion of privacy. 44 U.S.C. 2204(a)(1)-(6).

n119 44 U.S.C. 2204(b)(3). However, a person denied any presidential record because it has been restricted pursuant to the PRA may file an administrative appeal with the archivist or his designee. 44 U.S.C. 2204(b)(3).

n120 Bretscher, cited at note 39, at 1486-87.

n121 H.R. REP. No. 14876 at 6-7.

n122 Id. at 13.

n123 Id.

n124 44 U.S.C. 2204(a).

n125 See note 120 and accompanying text.

n126 See note 120.

n127 See 44 U.S.C.A. 2201 note.

n128 721 F. Supp. 343 (D.C. 1989), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 924 F.2d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1991), on remand, 810 F.Supp 335 (D.C. 1993).

n129 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 344-45. PROFS, a computer system marketed by IBM, allowed for users of the system to send three types of messages to other users: "(1) short "notes' or mail; (2) larger documents, which the recipient could revise; and (3) individual calendars." Id. at 345.

n130 Id. at 345 n.1.

n131 5 U.S.C. 552 (1970). See note 43.

n132 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 347; See also Armstrong, 810 F. Supp. at 337.

n133 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 347.

n134 Id. The procedures for preservation of the PROFS information by the EOP were limited. Id. at 345. For example, the NSC made backup tapes of information that had not already been deleted by the senders or receivers of the information. Id. The backup tapes were kept for only two weeks before disposal. Id. Other entities in the EOP kept backup tapes for four to six weeks before disposal. Id.

n135 Id.

n136 Id. at 348.

n137 Id. at 353 n.16.

n138 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 348.

n139 Id. at 350.

n140 Id.

n141 Id. In addition, the defendants urged that the information on the PROFS system did not constitute a "record" for purposes of the PRA or FRA. Id. at 348.

Although the plaintiffs brought claims pursuant to the FOIA, the court did not address these claims because it found that the FOIA constituted a "disclosure statute, and a disclosure statute only" and as such it imposed no obligations for record maintenance. Id. at 345 (citing Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 152).

n142 5 U.S.C. 701 (1993). The APA provides, in relevant part, that ""agency action is committed to agency discretion by law." 5 U.S.C. 701(a)(2).

n143 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 351.

n144 Id. at 354-55.

n145 Id. at 350.

n146 Id.

n147 Id. at 352 (citing 44 U.S.C. 2203(a)). Specifically, the court said that 2203(a) requires that "through the implementation of records management controls . . . the President shall document the performance of his duties" and assure that such documents "are maintained as Presidential records." Id.

n148 Armstrong, 721 F. Supp. at 353.

REV_00260167

n149 Id. Specifically, the court found significant the fact that ownership of the records was transferred to the United States in determining that the President's actions under the PRA would not constitute a political question. Id. Additionally, the court denied that judicial review under the PRA would display a lack of respect for the President or that it was impossible for want of judicially manageable standards. Id. (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 208 (1962)).

n150 Id. at 354. The court concluded that the FRA was also enforceable through the APA, although it concentrated its discussion solely on the PRA. Id. at 351-54. In addition, the Court found that there were genuine issues of fact as to whether the PROFS information constituted a "record" for purposes of the PRA and FRA and whether the NSC's recordkeeping procedures were "arbitrary and capricious." Id. at 353-54.

n151 Armstrong v. Bush, 924 F.2d 282, 287 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

n152 Armstrong, 924 F.2d at 287.

n153 Id.

n154 Id.

n155 Id. at 290.

n156 Id.

n157 Armstrong, 924 F.2d at 290. Thus, the court asserted: "it is difficult to conclude that Congress intended to allow courts, at the behest of private citizens, to rule on the adequacy of the President's records management practices or overrule his record creation, management, and disposal decisions." Id. (citation omitted).

Consequently, the court deemed significant the fact that under the PRA neither Congress nor the archivist had the authority to veto a decision of the President to dispose of records. Id. Also, the court noted that the PRA did not give the archivist authority to examine or question the President's record management practices. Id.

n158 Id. at 297. Nevertheless, the court did agree with the lower court's decision that the FRA did not impliedly preclude judicial review. Id. at 291-92. Although the court did find that the FRA precluded a private citizen from directly enforcing the FRA against an agency official, the FRA did not preclude a challenge against the agency head or archivist through the APA based on their failure to take enforcement action. Id. at 294-95.

The court based this determination on the holding in Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 148, which maintained that the FRA precluded private enforcement in favor of a system of administrative enforcement. Armstrong, 924 F.2d at 294. Further, the court noted that the legislative history of the FRA did not indicate a congressional mandate against judicial review under the APA's "arbitrary and capricious" standard. Id. at 295.

Crucial to this determination was the court's finding that the separation of powers concerns inherent in the PRA did not exist with respect to the FRA because the President's day-to-day operations were not at stake. Id. at 292. Hence, the court affirmed the lower court's decision that the APA authorized judicial review of the NSC's recordkeeping procedures and of the archivist's alleged breach of duty under the FRA. Id. at 297.

n159 Armstrong v. Bush, 810 F. Supp. 335 (D.C. 1993).

n160 Armstrong, 810 F. Supp. at 340-41.

REV_00260168

n161 Id. at 342-48. This finding was based on the fact that the NSC gave discretion of determining what was a federal record to its staff, the material on the computer system was different from the copy that is printed out and preserved, and there was no adequate supervision of the staff's determination of what constituted a record. Id.

n162 Id. at 348.

n163 Id. at 350.

n164 Id.

n165 44 U.S.C. 2203(d)-(e).

n166 44 U.S.C. 2203(d)-(e).

n167 44 U.S.C. 2203(a).

n168 See notes 61 and 62 and accompanying texts.

n169 See note 148 and accompanying text.

n170 44 U.S.C. 2203(d)-(e).

n171 H.R. REP. No. 1487 at 13.

n172 See note 158.

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: ("executive office" /2 president) and "political activities" (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, January 30, 2001 - 9:51 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

constitutionally authorized veto power; hence, Congress' only recourse was to pass a law which would be subject to the presidential veto. [25]
[*777]

II. HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT

As the above analysis reveals, as long as Congress does not attempt to usurp power that was vested in the President by the Constitution, Congress can regulate or otherwise affect the President's overt exercise of powers. [26] This general approach historically defined the interplay between the President and Congress with respect to control over the President's actions. However, traditionally, an exception has existed where Congress attempted to interfere with the President's autonomy and internal decisionmaking processes. [27] This exception generally has been referred to as the executive privilege. [28] The executive branch had frequently invoked executive privilege in cases in which Congress or the judiciary had attempted to obtain documents concerning communications within the executive branch. [29]

The Constitution does not provide for an executive privilege to withhold information from Congress or the judiciary; the concept arose from a strict theory of separation of powers. [30] The intent of the Framers of the Constitution with respect to executive privilege is not entirely clear. On the one hand, there were those that argued that such privilege did not exist. [31] On the other hand, some Presidents believed that the President had the power to withhold executive papers from Congress and did in fact withhold documents. [32] Indeed, such Presidents believed that their papers were their personal property. [33]

The concept of private ownership rendered difficult the preservation of presidential papers. [34] For instance, many papers were ei [*778] ther destroyed by Presidents, bequeathed to heirs, or destroyed by the Presidents' heirs. [35] A dramatic increase in the number of records preserved occurred when President Franklin D. Roosevelt established the presidential libraries, consisting of depositories for the President's materials upon completion of the President's term or terms in office. [36] However, these libraries did not have the effect of altering the private ownership principle because the President had discretion over whether to deposit any papers therein. [37]

Consequently, the private ownership principle was consistent with the presidential withholding of documents. Although requests for documents were often complied with by the Presidents, [38] at times various Presidents chose to withhold disclosure to Congress, to the judiciary, or to the public in order to protect the confidentiality of internal communications. [39] However, most of these decisions could be justified by reasons other than preserving the President's need for privacy. [40] Yet, President Jackson, in refusing to deliver to the Senate papers regarding the removal of money from the Bank of the United States, wrote as follows:

I have yet to learn under what constitutional authority that branch of the Legislature has a right to require of me an account of any communication. . . . Might I be required to detail to the Senate the free and private conversations I have held with those officers on any subject relating to their duties and my own. [41]

Thus, it was apparent that claims of executive privilege had relied in some part on the President's need for privacy with respect to internal communications. [42] This traditional approach recognized that the President must be free to discuss and deliberate in private without fear that the communications or decisionmaking processes would later be subjected to scrutiny.
[*779]

III. THE EFFECT OF THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION

The Nixon administration had a negative impact on presidential privilege for the necessities of the times mandated that the tension between the privilege and need for disclosure be resolved in favor of the latter. [43] The Nixon administration and the Watergate inci [*780] dent handed to the Supreme Court an opportunity to explore the doctrine of executive privilege and its effect on presidential withholding of documents. In United States v. Nixon, [44] the Court denied President Nixon's claim that executive privilege precluded the President from being amenable to judicial process. [45] Here, President Nixon was named an unindicted co-conspirator in the Watergate incident by a grand jury of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. [46] Subsequently, the special prosecutor had a subpoena issued to Nixon requiring that he produce certain tapes, papers, and other writings relating to meetings between Nixon and his advisors. [47] After releasing some of the requested information, [48] Nixon filed a motion to quash the subpoena based on a claim of executive privilege. [49]

The district court denied the motion to quash, holding that the judiciary had the final word with respect to claims of executive privilege. [50] The court issued an order for in camera inspection of the subpoenaed material. [51] Nixon appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. [52] The special prosecutor and Nixon then each filed a petition to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari before judgment, both of which were granted. [53]

On appeal, Nixon argued that the subpoena should be quashed because the separation of powers doctrine prohibited judicial review of the President's claim of executive privilege, [54] and that, for purposes of constitutional law, executive privilege should prevail over the subpoena. [55] After finding that the controversy was indeed susceptible to judicial review, the Court examined Nixon's claim of [*781] an absolute privilege and the need to protect the communications between Presidents and their advisors. [56] The Court stated that the privilege of presidential confidentiality arose from the supremacy of the branches of government within their own area of constitutional duties; hence, the protection of the President's confidentiality had constitutional underpinnings. [57] Consequently, the Court asserted that there was a presumptive privilege in favor of presidential communications. [58] The Court based this assertion on the expectation of a President to the confidentiality of conversations and correspondence and on the deference accorded to the privacy of all citizens. [59]

However, the Court did not rule in favor of the President's "presumptive privilege." Instead, the Court held that "neither the doctrine of separation of powers, nor the need for confidentiality of high-level communications, without more, can sustain an absolute, unqualified Presidential privilege . . . ." [60] The Court further stated that absent a claim of a need to protect military, diplomatic, or national security, the interest in confidentiality alone was not hindered by an in camera inspection of the documents. [61] The Court weighed the President's need for confidentiality [62] against the need for fair administration of criminal laws, and found that a generalized interest in confidentiality alone could not outweigh the need for fair adjudication of a criminal case. [63] Hence, the Court ordered that the President comply with the subpoena, but cautioned that, with respect to an in camera inspection of presidential [*782] material, the district court had a heavy burden of ensuring that any evidence not relevant to the prosecution was not released. [64]

The Court in United States v. Nixon struck a fair balance between the need for presidential privacy and the need for disclosure. The Court recognized that a President necessarily demands a high level of confidentiality in order for decisionmaking to be effective. [65] The Court appeared to place this demand within the realm of constitutional protection. [66] However, it also recognized that some fundamental interests, especially those rooted in the Constitution, must prevail over a generalized interest in privacy absent more compelling circumstances. [67] The fact that this was a criminal case involving the President may have influenced the Court to ensure that the subpoena did issue, for the public's interest in learning of any possible criminal activities of its elected leader was indeed compelling. Even so, the Court's decision represented a fair and reasonable method of examining a President's claim of executive privilege. [68]

Consequently, the principles underlying the decision in United States v. Nixon were further discussed in a later case involving Congressional regulation of presidential papers. In Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, [69] the Supreme Court examined the constitutionality of the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act ("PRMPA"). [70]
[*783]

The PRMPA was passed in an effort to abrogate the NixonSampson agreement. [71] The general purpose of the PRMPA was to keep all materials pertaining to the Nixon administration in the custody of the archivist of the United States. [72] Specifically, the PRMPA provided that complete control and possession of papers, documents and other objects and materials that constituted historical materials would be in the United States. [73] Additionally, the PRMPA directed that the administrator take into account the need to give to Nixon tape recordings and other materials not pertaining to the interest in providing the public with the truth about Watergate, along with those materials not of historic significance. [74]
[*784] In addition, judicial review by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia was provided for under the PRMPA. [75]

Consequently, Nixon filed an action in the District Court for the District of Columbia challenging the constitutionality of the PRMPA and seeking an injunction against its enforcement. [76] The district court determined that the PRMPA did not violate the Constitution and, therefore, dismissed the action. [77] On writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court, Nixon argued that the PRMPA violated principles of separation of powers and that it offended the presumption of confidentiality of presidential communications set forth in United States v. Nixon. [78]

The Court, in analyzing the PRMPA, determined that it did not violate principles of separation of powers. [79] First, the Court rejected Nixon's claim that the congressional delegation of decisionmaking power to an executive officer related to disclosure of presidential materials constituted an interference with executive branch business. [80] Instead, the Court opined that because control of the materials was given to the Administrator of General Services and the career archivists, who were all executive officials appointed by
[*785] the President, legislative non-interference was demonstrated. [81]

Furthermore, the Court asserted that Nixon's argument represented an " "archaic view of the separation of powers as requiring three airtight departments of government'." [82] Instead, the proper inquiry in analyzing separation of powers issues was whether the PRMPA deterred the executive branch from accomplishing its proper functions as set forth in the Constitution. [83] The Court concluded that the PRMPA contained appropriate safeguards to protect executive branch functions. [84] Indeed, the fact that the materials remained in the control of the executive branch and could be released only absent an applicable executive privilege was of particular significance. [85]

The Court also rejected Nixon's assertion of presidential privilege with respect to the materials. [86] The Court, relying on the analysis set forth in United States v. Nixon, [87] recognized that a President, and even a former President, may assert a privilege with respect to communications made in performance of official responsibilities and in the process of shaping policies and making decisions. [88]

Notwithstanding, the Court contended that the screening of materials by archivists presented a very limited interference with the need for confidentiality in presidential decisionmaking; indeed, the archivists had historically reviewed presidential materials on a confidential basis for purposes of maintaining presidential libraries. [89] Furthermore, consistent with the requirements of United States v. Nixon, the Court concluded that intrusions into executive [*786] confidentiality were justified by substantial government and public interests. [90] Thus, the Court concluded that the PRMPA did not violate any principle of executive privilege and was therefore constitutional. [91]

Interestingly, the Court in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services did not appear to attach the same weight to the President's need for confidentiality in communications that it did in United States v. Nixon. The Court instead opined that "an absolute barrier to all outside disclosure is not practically or constitutionally necessary . . . . There has never been an expectation that the confidences of the Executive Office are absolute and unyielding." [92] The Court based this assertion on the fact that former Presidents had deposited papers in presidential libraries for preservation and disclosure. [93] Further, the Court stated the expectation of the confidentiality of presidential communications had consistently been limited in the past and is subject to erosion after a President leaves office. [94] Accordingly, the Court concluded that claims of executive privilege by themselves must yield to congressional purposes of preservation of materials for important government and historical reasons. [95]

Although the Court in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services did recognize that Congress may regulate the President so long as it does not usurp any of the President's constitutional power, [96] it did not place as much importance on principles of executive privilege as it had in United States v. Nixon. [97] Indeed, the Court rendered it difficult to ascertain exactly when presidential confidentiality would prevail over congressional demands for disclosure. Of course, Congress will almost always have an interest in preservation of presidential materials. The Court indicated that this interest will overcome the President's need for confidential [*787] ity. [98] Indeed, the Court suggested that unless the President can invoke a specific privilege, such as the need to protect military secrets, the bare interest in confidentiality will never be sufficient to override Congress' power to regulate presidential materials. [99]

This analysis, if taken to its extreme, would render constitutional any regulation enacted by Congress to control access to virtually all of the President's materials, excepting those materials to which the President may invoke a specific need for a privilege. Thus, presidential decisionmaking could be hindered through the President's knowledge that any communications of historical significance may be subject to regulation and disclosure.

IV. THE PRESIDENTIAL RECORDS ACT

Although the Supreme Court provided answers to questions regarding control over Nixon's records, the Nixon administration left Congress with the recognition that the United States lacked a clear policy with respect to the papers of the President. [100] The PRMPA applied only to Nixon, and the question of ownership of presidential documents remained open. [101]

In 1978, Congress attempted to resolve the issues surrounding executive privilege and the ownership of presidential materials through enactment of the Presidential Records Act ("PRA"). [102] The House Report accompanying the PRA stated the purposes of the Act as follows: "(1) to establish the public ownership of records created by future Presidents . . . in the course of discharging their official duties; and (2) to establish procedures governing the preservation and public availability of these records at the end of a Presidential administration." [103] The PRA provides that the United States retains complete ownership, possession, and control of presidential records. [104]

Consequently, during the term in office, the President has the duty to create and manage adequate records ensuring that "the activities, deliberations, decisions, and policies that reflect the per [*788] formance of his constitutional, statutory, or other official or ceremonial duties are adequately documented . . . ." [105] Furthermore, the PRA requires that all documentary materials produced or received by the President, the President's staff, or the President's assistants be characterized and maintained as either presidential or personal records. [106]

Additionally, the PRA provides that the President can dispose of any records no longer of historical, evidentiary, administrative or informational value. [107] The only restriction placed on the President is the duty to obtain, in writing, the archivist's [108] views concerning the intended disposal. [109] If the archivist notifies the President that Congress will not be consulted regarding disposal of the records, the President can then dispose of the records immediately. [110] If, however, the archivist believes the records to be of significant interest, Congress will be notified and the President must submit disposal schedules to Congress and wait sixty days before disposal. [111] However, neither the archivist nor Congress has a veto power over the decision of the President to dispose of the records. [112] Congress does, however, have the power to pass legisla [*789] tion to prohibit the disposal of certain records. [113]

At the conclusion of the President's term or terms in office, the duty to maintain, preserve, and provide access to presidential records shifts to the Archivist of the United States, [114] whose responsibility it is to ensure that all such records are deposited in an archival facility operated by the United States. [115] The archivist is, however, authorized to dispose of any records that had been examined and determined to lack any administrative, historical, or informational value. [116]

The PRA also gives to the archivist the duty to make presidential records available to the public as quickly and as completely as possible. [117] Notwithstanding this duty, the PRA places restrictions on public access to presidential records. For example, the President can specify durations, not to exceed twelve years, in which access to certain documents may be withheld. [118] Full discretion is given to the archivist to restrict any records, and such decisions are not subject to judicial review. [119] Furthermore, the PRA neither expressly provides for judicial review of the President or archivist nor confers any private right of action; hence, the question remains as to whether judicial review may have been impliedly precluded by the PRA. [120]

Congress enacted the PRA with the decision in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services in mind. [121] Specifically, Congress wanted to ensure that it did not encroach on the President's ability [*790] to perform the duties assigned by the Constitution. [122] Thus, total control of the recordkeeping system was left in the hands of the executive branch through the President and the archivist, a purely executive official removable by the President. [123] Congress also left the President with discretion in the preservation or disposal of records and allowed the President to restrict access for twelve years. [124] Furthermore, Congress did not provide for judicial review of the PRA and left open the question of whether it was impliedly precluded. [125]

By including all of these safeguards, Congress seemed to recognize the need to protect the confidentiality of the President's communications. However, Congress, in relying solely on the decision in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, in reality did not attach significance to the traditional deference that was accorded to a President's claim of confidentiality; instead, it concentrated only on non-interference with the President in carrying out the duties which were constitutionally delegated to the President. Through the PRA, Congress may have effectively placed a barrier on a President's ability to communicate freely without the realization that someday, whether at the conclusion of the presidential term or twelve years in the future, the President's actions will be subject to public disclosure. This very possibly could have a chilling effect on a President concerned with maintaining a favorable image in history.

REV_00260153

Nonetheless, because questions of judicial review were left open, [126] and the PRA may not be enforceable against the President, the President may be able to dispose of any information the President wishes not to disclose. If this is true, then the PRA may have left the President with substantial discretion so as not to impinge on presidential decisionmaking processes. As the discussion that follows will reveal, this was a crucial determination that the courts were forced to examine after passage of the PRA.
[*791]

V. THE EFFECT OF THE REAGAN AND BUSH ADMINISTRATIONS

The PRA was effective on January 20, 1981; [127] thus Ronald Reagan was the first President to be affected by its terms. In Armstrong v. Bush, [128] Reagan's alleged involvement in the selling of arms to Iran in order to subsidize the Contras in Nicaragua ("IranContra") provided the courts with the opportunity to answer questions of judicial review and determine the effect that the PRA had upon the President and executive privilege.

President Reagan, at the conclusion of his administration, began preparing to destroy information contained on the PROFS system, the inter-office computer communications system used by employees within the Executive Office of the President ("EOP"). [129] The PROFS system became significant during the congressional investigation of Iran-Contra, for it appeared that messages which discussed the scheme were sent via PROFS by certain participants. [130] When journalist Scott Armstrong, the National Security Archive, and other private citizens and entities ("plaintiffs") heard of the proposed disposal, they filed suit in the District Court for the District of Columbia against then President Bush as head of the EOP, the National Security Council ("NSC") and against the Archivist of the United States ("defendants") seeking declaratory and injunctive relief under the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), [131] the PRA, and the FRA. [132]

The plaintiffs alleged that information contained on the PROFS system constituted either agency records, thus falling under the FOIA or the FRA, or presidential records, thus governed by the PRA. [133] The plaintiffs also contended that the NSC's recordkeeping procedures were "arbitrary and capricious"; thus, the archivist had shirked his responsibilities under the PRA and FRA to ensure that the PROFS system information was properly managed. [134]

[*792] Therefore, plaintiffs sought to enjoin the destruction of the PROFS information and to compel the President and the NSC to classify the information under either the FRA or PRA. [135]

The defendants moved to dismiss the action or, in the alternative, for summary judgment. [136] However, they did not raise a challenge to the constitutionality of the PRA itself; [137] instead, the defendants argued that implying a private cause of action into the PRA or the FRA violated the principles of separation of powers. [138] Further, the defendants emphasized that the legislative history of the PRA demonstrated Congress' concern with not interfering with presidential performance of constitutional duties, as set forth in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services. [139]

REV_00260154

Accordingly, the defendants contended that, to further this aim, Congress ensured that control of the records be vested in the executive branch through the archivist. [140] Therefore, judicial review of the PRA would result in an improper transfer of control to the judiciary and would violate separation of powers. [141] Moreover, the defendants asserted that even if a private cause of action could be implied, the President's actions demonstrated complete compliance; further, his actions were unreviewable because the actions were committed to the President's discretion under the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"). [142] Hence, the defendants claimed that, because they were discretionary, these actions constituted the unreviewable exercise of political authority and represented purely political questions. [143]

The lower court denied the defendants' motions to dismiss and [*793] for summary judgment. [144] The court disagreed that judicial review of the PRA constituted the judicial usurpation of executive power. [145] Instead, the court reasoned that judicial review only ensured that the President complied with the PRA and did not alter the control vested in the archivist or the executive branch. [146]

Moreover, the court determined that the PRA, by its terms, was not discretionary; indeed, the language of the PRA was mandatory. [147] Accordingly, the court contended that although the President was given some discretion over how to manage the presidential records, the PRA nevertheless imposed an affirmative duty on the President to ensure that records were maintained. [148] The court also concluded that the presidential compliance with the PRA did not constitute a political question. [149] Thus, the court found that the PRA and the FRA were enforceable through the APA. [150]

The defendants appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and asserted that the plaintiffs, as private parties, lacked standing to assert claims under the PRA or FRA. [151] Furthermore, the defendants claimed that the President's actions were not reviewable under the PRA or FRA because the PRA precluded judicial review of presidential actions and the FRA precluded judicial review of agency actions. [152]

The court, affirming the lower court's decision not to grant summary judgment, first determined that the plaintiffs had standing
[*794] because they were in the "zone of interests" to be protected by the statutes. [153] Specifically, the court decided that the intention of Congress in enacting both the PRA and the FRA was to secure to private researchers access to the records and history of the United States government. [154]

However, the court reversed the lower court's determination that the PRA did not preclude judicial review. [155] The court opined that the intention of Congress in enacting the PRA was to balance two competing goals: (1) to ensure the preservation and public ownership of presidential materials, and (2) to effectuate a policy of minimal interference with the President's day-to-day operations and retain executive control of the materials. [156] Thus, the court reasoned that Congress impliedly precluded judicial review so that the President would be required to maintain the records, but that implementation of the requirement would be left to the President's own discretion. [157] Furthermore, the court reversed the lower court's determination that the APA authorized judicial review of the President's actions under the PRA, because the President was not an "agency" for purposes of the APA; accordingly, the court remanded the case to the district court. [158]
[*795]

On remand, the district court examined the recordkeeping practices of the NSC with respect to the PROFS system, as well as the practices of the archivist in providing adequate guidelines for its preservation. [159] First, the court determined that some of the information on the PROFS system did indeed rise to the level of a "record" under the FRA. [160] Second, the

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)

*83 Minn. L. Rev. 1127, **

Copyright (c) 1999 Minnesota Law Review
Minnesota Law Review

May, 1999

83 Minn. L. Rev. 1127

LENGTH: 6860 words

SYMPOSIUM: Executive Privilege Since United States v. Nixon: Issues of Motivation and Accommodation

Dawn Johnsen *

* Associate Professor of Law, Indiana University School of Law-Bloomington. J.D. 1986, Yale Law School; B.A. 1983, Yale College. Acting Assistant Attorney General, 1997-98, and Deputy Assistant Attorney General, 1993-96, for the Office of Legal Counsel, U.S. Department of Justice. The Office of Legal Counsel provides legal advice to the President and the executive branch including on executive privilege matters. The views expressed in this article are not necessarily those of the Department of Justice. I am grateful to Paul Colborne, Daniel O. Conkle, H. Jefferson Powell, and my research assistant, Ellen Meilaender, for their suggestions.

SUMMARY:
... What better time to contemplate the shadow cast by President Nixon's Watergate-era abuses on subsequent presidential assertions of executive privilege than as the House of Representatives contemplates the impeachment of another President for, among other things, asserting executive privilege in a manner that allegedly constituted an abuse of power. Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's inclusion in his impeachment referral of President Clinton's very assertion of executive privilege both evidences and contributes to the vulnerability of the privilege - and to the vulnerability of Presidents willing to assert it. ... Although Rozell makes no such claim regarding the FBI/DEA Memorandum, these more difficult questions arise in the context of President Clinton's assertion of executive privilege in Independent Counsel Starr's investigation involving the President and Monica Lewinsky. ... Rozell also describes as indefensible President Clinton's assertion of executive privilege in the context of a House committee investigation of the termination of employees of the White House Travel Office. ... Other executive branch officials first should seek to accommodate Congress's legitimate needs and exhaust alternatives, which requires them to express to Congress their concerns about confidentiality in terms other than assertions of executive privilege. ... In response, executive branch officials, typically - and appropriately - acting at this stage without presidential involvement, convey to Congress their confidentiality concerns in terms other than executive privilege. ... As part of this process of achieving appropriate accommodations, executive branch officials must convey to Congress their confidentiality concerns in terms other than executive privilege. ...

TEXT:
[*1127]

The events that dominate our national consciousness on this twenty-fifth anniversary of United States. v. Nixon [1] underscore the value of Mark Rozell's enterprise. What better time up conversations about potential wrongdoing in the White House." Id. at 1070.

n17. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit recognized this duty of each branch to accommodate the legitimate needs of the other in considering a House subcommittee's request for executive branch information: "The Constitution contemplates such accommodation. Negotiation between the two branches should thus be viewed as a dynamic process affirmatively furthering the constitutional scheme." United States v. AT&T, 567 F.2d 121, 130 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

n18. 418 U.S. 683, 708 (1974). The Court in Nixon held that the need for confidentiality in presidential communications was outweighed by prosecutorial need in the particular context of a criminal trial of President Nixon's close advisers, where President Nixon was named as an unindicted co-conspirator. The Court noted the likely limited effect of its holding: "We cannot conclude that advisers will be moved to temper the candor of their remarks by the infrequent occasions of disclosure because of the possibility that such conversations will be called for in the context of a criminal prosecution." Id. at 712.

n19. Harmon, supra note 6, at 10. The memorandum explained further,

The President must maintain a climate in which executive branch advisers do not feel compelled to write and speak for a larger audience. That is, he must be able to assure his advisers that their deliberations will be made public, if at all, only in exceptional circumstances. Anything that undermines this assurance impairs, to a degree, the ability of the executive branch to perform its constitutional functions. This is the basis of the constitutional privilege for executive branch deliberations.

Id. at 10-11.

n20. Rozell, supra note 2, at 1124.

n21. Clearly, as the court noted, "purely private conversations that did not touch on any aspect of the President's official duties or relate in some manner to presidential decision-making would not properly fall within the executive privilege." In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 5 F. Supp. 2d 21, 26 (D.D.C.), aff'd in part, rev'd in part sub nom. In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir.), and cert denied, 119 S. Ct. 466 (1998) (footnote omitted). The court appropriately recognized, however, that "the President does need to address personal matters in the context of his official decisions." Id.

n22. The court required Independent Counsel Starr to demonstrate "first, that each discrete group of the subpoenaed materials likely contains important evidence; and second that this evidence is not available with due diligence elsewhere." Id. at 28 (quoting In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 754 (D.C. Cir. 1997)).

n23. See Letter from Attorney General Janet Reno to the President (May 23, 1996) (on file with author); see also Letters from Jack Quinn, Counsel to the President, to William F. Clinger, Jr., Chairman, Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, U.S. House of Representatives (May 3, May 9, May 30, June 25, and Aug. 15, 1996) (on file with author) (describing factual background and legal basis for assertion of privilege).

n24. See Rozell, supra note 2, at 1103 ("[A] number of controversies during his presidency bring to light how his administration exercised that power in a crafty, even hidden-hand, fashion.").

n25. Id. at 1102.

n26. Id. at 1082.

n27. See Harmon, supra note 6, at 16.

n28. Executive Privilege - Secrecy in Government: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Intergovernmental Relations of the Senate Comm. on Gov't Operations, 94th Cong. 125 (1975) (statement of Antonin Scalia, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel).

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, February 10, 2001 - 5:15 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

to contemplate the shadow cast by President Nixon's Watergate-era abuses on subsequent presidential assertions of executive privilege than as the House of Representatives contemplates the impeachment of another President for, among other things, asserting executive privilege in a manner that allegedly constituted an abuse of power. Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's inclusion in his impeachment referral of President Clinton's very assertion of executive privilege both evidences and contributes to the vulnerability of the privilege - and to the vulnerability of Presidents willing to assert it.

Professor Rozell and I agree upon much, beginning with the basic legitimacy of the principle of executive privilege. Although both United States v. Nixon and the Clinton impeachment inquiry involved criminal investigations, Rozell appropriately focuses primarily on disputes between the executive branch and Congress, the far more typical context in which executive privilege issues arise. Such disputes require balancing the President's need for confidentiality against Congress's legitimate need for executive branch information. I agree with Rozell that "in a democratic republic, the presumption gener [*1128] ally should be in favor of openness, but it is also important to recognize that Presidents have legitimate secrecy needs." [2]

Rozell persuasively argues that President Nixon's shadow has created an imbalance against executive privilege. Presidents fearing criticism, including comparisons to President Nixon, may have been at times unduly reluctant to assert the privilege, or even to address the issue more generally. [3] Rozell opens his article with the promising suggestion that "there is a need to reestablish the legitimacy of executive privilege and an understanding of its proper scope and limits in our constitutional system." [4] Undoubtedly, the legitimacy of executive privilege depends on careful application of a clear and principled understanding of the privilege, particularly in times of a weakened presidency. Rozell devotes surprisingly little attention, however, to defining his view of the "proper scope and limits" of executive privilege or developing a framework for analyzing the legitimacy of assertions of executive privilege.

Instead, the bulk of Rozell's article seeks to describe and assess seriatim every presidential assertion and significant potential assertion of executive privilege since United States v. Nixon. As in his previous works, Rozell has created a valuable resource by compiling historical information that can be difficult to obtain. Yet despite our shared basic understandings [*1129] about the legitimacy of executive privilege, I find myself disagreeing with his analysis of many of these specific incidents. [5] He often is harshly critical of the actions of Presidents and executive branch officials, though it is difficult to discern a pattern to his criticism. He accuses Presidents in some instances of unjustifiably withholding information from Congress, and elsewhere of inappropriately backing down and withdrawing claims of executive privilege, thereby weakening the privilege.

Criticism from both sides certainly could be warranted if a President fails to act consistently across incidents or Presidents do not act consistently with each other. Yet Rozell's specific criticisms often do not seem based on these or other principled grounds. Moreover, many of the same incidents of which Rozell is most critical seem to me good examples of how the system should work when the President and Congress disagree about the release of executive branch material, with the two branches reaching agreements that seek to accommodate the needs of both. In the end, Rozell's unduly harsh assessments, including likening President Clinton to President Nixon, may contribute to the very problem he decries: the undermining of the legitimacy of executive privilege.

Professor Rozell and I seem to hold disparate conceptions of both the appropriate scope of executive privilege and the optimal process for resolving disputes between Congress and the executive branch about the disclosure of information. And our views on scope and process seem to flow in part from different perspectives on the role that partisan, personal and institutional interests on the parts of both branches can be expected to play in executive privilege disputes. The Framers of the Constitution appreciated that the President and Members of Congress would be political actors, motivated at times by partisanship, personal self-interest, and institutional concerns, and [*1130] devised a constitutional system that takes account of these anticipated motivations. So, too, must an appropriate understanding of executive privilege reflect and accommodate this basic political reality. Rozell's analysis would benefit from a fuller consideration of the appropriate contours of executive privilege, and in particular the accommodation process, which is a central feature of executive branch policy in this area and the process actually used to negotiate with Congress to seek to accommodate the legitimate needs of both branches.

REV_00260171

A few examples may illustrate the differences in our approaches first to scope and then to process. With regard to scope, Rozell describes executive privilege as appropriately asserted for "shielding materials relating to national security or maintaining the privacy of internal deliberations over official governmental matters." [6] He accurately and approvingly describes the function of the privilege as enabling Presidential advisors "to deliberate and discuss policy options without fear of public disclosure of their every utterance." [7] In application, however, Rozell apparently would require more of Presidents than is suggested by these general descriptions, though what more is not clear.

For example, Rozell harshly criticizes President Clinton's assertions of executive privilege: "The Clinton administration has made elaborate and mostly indefensible claims of executive privilege. Prior to the so-called Lewinsky scandal, the administration made several claims of executive privilege - only one of which appeared designed to protect the constitutional preroga [*1131] tives of the executive branch." [8] Although he warns generally of the dangers of facile comparisons of Presidents with President Nixon, Rozell apparently believes that a direct comparison is warranted in the case of President Clinton: "Is it any longer possible to restore the proper balance to the exercise of executive privilege? Because of the Watergate taint and Clinton's more recent abuses, that may take years to happen." [9] Rozell, however, fails to substantiate his attempt to associate President Clinton's use of executive privilege with President Nixon's Watergate abuses.

President Clinton, for example, asserted executive privilege to prevent the release of a memorandum to the President from the Director of the FBI and the Administrator of the DEA. The memorandum conveyed confidential advice and recommendations regarding the Clinton Administration's efforts to combat drug trafficking. This was a candid and confidential advice memorandum from two high-ranking executive branch officials to the President. Such a memorandum, typically described as a presidential communication, is widely and properly recognized as falling at the very core of executive privilege.

Of course, executive privilege is a qualified privilege, and the President's need for confidentiality must be balanced against Congress's need for the document. Here the Members of Congress who requested the FBI/DEA Memorandum asserted no particularized need for it, such as having a related bill under consideration. Indeed, Rozell references allegations that the request was a politically motivated attempt to embarrass the President in an election year. [10]

Professor Rozell's brief analysis of this incident does not adequately explain why he views the assertion as indefensible, let alone why it does not meet his own standard of "maintaining the privacy of internal deliberations over governmental matters." He apparently would require a greater showing of harm to the public interest than the chilling effect on advice and deliberations that the courts, including the Supreme Court, have recognized as supporting the privilege. He also misstates the applicable test for assessing whether congressional need is sufficient to override the privilege, without offering any citation or explanation for his formulation: "Lacking a real threat to na [*1132] tional security or to the public interest posed by revealing internal deliberations, Congress's request for information must override the President's claim of privilege, unless it can be specifically demonstrated that Congress's actions were outside the scope of any legitimate investigation." [11] He goes so far as to suggest that congressional need is adequate "even for pursuit down "blind alleys.'" [12] In fact, under the controlling case law presidential communications are "presumptively privileged," and the privilege can be overridden in the congressional setting only by a showing that the information is "demonstrably critical to the responsible fulfillment of the [congressional entity's] functions." [13] Citing this "controlling case law," the Attorney General advised President Clinton of her determination that the subcommittee that requested the FBI/DEA Memorandum had failed to make the requisite showing of need to overcome the clearly applicable privilege. [14]

Moreover, Rozell's assessment of this claim of privilege seems to be influenced by what he views as a desire on the part of President Clinton to protect himself from embarrassment that might result from releasing the document. [15] Elsewhere, [*1133] too, where he is critical of presidential action, Rozell seems to suggest that an assertion of executive privilege is illegitimate where a President is motivated by a concern that disclosure of information would prove embarrassing. He at times seems to equate an effort to avoid embarrassment with an effort to hide evidence of executive branch wrongdoing. [16] Rozell's analysis thus implicitly raises interesting questions about the role motive should play in executive privilege.

Clearly motive matters. Where a President asserts executive privilege in order to hide evidence of illegal acts or other wrongdoing by high level executive officials, the assertion is illegitimate. In fact, motive matters for both the President and Congress, because both have a constitutional obligation to respect and accommodate the legitimate needs of the other. [17] Both branches also have an obligation to consider the long-term interests of their institutions and the public interest more generally. In some instances, for example, the institutional interests of the presidency may require an assertion of executive privilege that conflicts with other of the President's short-term personal interests, such as where public release of an advice memorandum would reflect well on the President, but would severely chill the willingness of advisers to be candid in the future. Finally, although relevant, motive is extremely difficult to assess. Rarely will there be direct evidence of congressional or presidential motive. Reliance on motive to assess the legitimacy of particular requests for information or assertions of privilege thus must be exercised with caution.

Unlike situations where requested information would reveal executive branch wrongdoing, the fact that release of a deliberative communication to the President likely would embarrass the President typically should not defeat an otherwise [*1134] legitimate claim of privilege. Indeed, it is not merely coincidental, but inherent in the nature of presidential communications that they often could prove embarrassing if publicly released: that is a fundamental reason for the very existence of the privilege. The Supreme Court in United States v. Nixon recognized the necessity for protection of the public interest in candid, objective, and even blunt or harsh opinions in Presidential decisionmaking. A President and those who assist him must be free to explore alternatives in the process of shaping policies and making decisions and to do so in a way many would be unwilling to express except privately. [18]

The Department of Justice Office of Legal Counsel also implicitly addressed the inherent connection between the need for confidentiality and potential embarrassment to the President in a 1981 memorandum where it noted that executive branch advisers "may hesitate - out of loyalty or perhaps, as the Supreme Court suggested, out of self-interest - to make remarks that might later be used against their colleagues or superiors." [19] A President's political adversaries can be expected to seek presidential communications and executive branch deliberative information for the very reason that public disclosure might prove embarrassing to the President, which Rozell notes may have been the motivation behind the request for the FBI/DEA Memorandum to President Clinton. The presidential communications privilege rests on a recognition that the public interest is served by allowing Presidents to receive candid advice from their top officials, and confidentiality is critical to the willingness of advisers to be forthcoming, particularly where [*1135] the advice is potentially embarrassing to the President. Thus, the President's confidentiality needs appropriately may prevail, whether or not the information is personally embarrassing, where Congress has not demonstrated an adequate overriding need.

Difficult cases may arise where the information sought not only would prove embarrassing to the President but arguably would reveal presidential wrongdoing, or where the assertion of the privilege itself otherwise may be viewed as an abuse of power. Although Rozell makes no such claim regarding the FBI/DEA Memorandum, these more difficult questions arise in the context of President Clinton's assertion of executive privilege in Independent Counsel Starr's investigation involving the President and Monica Lewinsky. Again, Rozell attacks President Clinton's motive: "there is little evidence... the Clinton White House undertook this drawn-out battle merely to make a principled stand on executive privilege. All evidence to date suggests that Clinton used executive privilege to frustrate and delay the investigation ...." [20] Although Rozell does not address the issue of impeachment, his criticism is similar to that of Independent Counsel Starr, who in his impeachment referral and testimony before the House Judiciary Committee charged President Clinton with abuse of power for these and other assertions of privilege in the course of Starr's investigation.

A thorough analysis of the Lewinsky assertion, including how the analysis changes as executive privilege moves from the congressional to the independent counsel and impeachment settings, is not possible here. Again, though, Rozell oversimplifies in condemning the assertion, which in my view clearly does not constitute an impeachable offense.

Independent Counsel Starr had contended that executive privilege was wholly inapplicable because what was at issue was the President's personal, not official, conduct. Starr therefore claimed the right to compel presidential advisers to testify before the grand jury without any showing of particularized need to overcome the privilege. The district court rejected this argument, agreeing instead with the President that the communications at issue involved official matters, such as impeachment, domestic and foreign policy matters, and assertions of official privileges, arising out of the independent counsel investigation involving the President's personal relationship with [*1136] Lewinsky. [21] The district court therefore required Starr to make an ex parte showing of need to the court, and then, not surprisingly, ruled that under the applicable test, Starr's need for evidence in a criminal investigation outweighed the President's need for confidentiality. [22] After prevailing on the legal principle in dispute, but losing in its application to his own situation, the President declined to appeal. Although this assertion of executive privilege fairly may be criticized, particularly with the benefit of hindsight, an issue of principle was involved and on this issue the court ruled for the President.

Rozell also describes as indefensible President Clinton's assertion of executive privilege in the context of a House committee investigation of the termination of employees of the White House Travel Office. This assertion was appropriate in my view. The factual background and issues raised are quite complex and not fully considered by Rozell. The Attorney General explained the basis for the assertion in a publicly released letter to the President advising him that the assertion would be appropriate. [23] Briefly, of particular importance was that the congressional request was highly unusual and intrusive in that it sought confidential documents prepared by the Office of White House Counsel in order to assist the President and his staff in responding to the very House committee that made the request. The request thereby threatened the ability of the President to have the effective assistance of his White House Counsel in considering privilege and other issues of importance [*1137] to the presidency that often arise in congressional oversight investigations.

REV_00260174

Perhaps more fundamental than my differences with Rozell over the scope of executive privilege are our disparate views about the appropriate process to be followed to resolve information disputes between Congress and the executive branch. To summarize some recurring themes in Rozell's analysis with which I disagree: Rozell criticizes Presidents since President Nixon for seeking to avoid personally asserting executive privilege and for asserting the privilege only as a last resort. He accuses Presidents of improperly "inventing" other rationales for noncompliance with congressional requests for information, often to promote personal or partisan interests. He applauds Congress when it forces the President to invoke executive privilege and criticizes the executive branch when it reaches an accommodation with Congress, implying that ultimate resolution of disputes demonstrates the illegitimacy of earlier executive branch objections. He evaluates disputes in terms of which branch was the victor and which the loser.

In my view, Rozell's assessments rest on a fundamentally misguided approach to executive privilege. For reasons I will discuss, I believe that direct presidential involvement in responding to congressional requests for information should be avoided whenever possible. I agree that only Presidents may assert executive privilege in disputes with Congress, but they should do so only when absolutely necessary, only as a last resort, typically late in the process. Other executive branch officials first should seek to accommodate Congress's legitimate needs and exhaust alternatives, which requires them to express to Congress their concerns about confidentiality in terms other than assertions of executive privilege. Congress should be respectful of these confidentiality concerns and not demand that the President personally assert executive privilege where legislative needs do not outweigh confidentiality concerns. And, finally, reaching an accommodation with Congress, even late in the game, does not inherently constitute a loss for the executive branch, threatening to the legitimacy of executive privilege. Nor does it demonstrate that the executive branch was unjustified in raising confidentiality concerns.

My views are consistent with the accommodation process actually used to resolve disputes between the executive branch and Congress. There certainly is room to differ about the optimal process to be followed. But Rozell does not critique or find [*1138] fault with the accommodation process; he fails even to acknowledge that Presidents and executive branch officials are following a process. Rozell instead impugns Presidents' motives, accusing President Bush, for example, of being "crafty" and "hidden-handed" and intentionally concealing his use of executive privilege by devising inappropriate grounds for withholding information. [24] In fact, many of the executive branch actions of which Rozell is harshly critical were entirely consistent with long-standing and principled executive branch practice.

When viewed through the lens of the accommodation process, greater consistency emerges across the incidents Rozell attributes to individual Presidents' personal motivations and distinct approaches to the issue of executive privilege. For example, Rozell characterizes "Bush's strategy" as seeking to "further the cause of withholding information by not invoking executive privilege," but instead by "cloaking the use of executive privilege under different names." [25] There may well be ascertainable differences in Presidents' willingness to accommodate congressional requests for information, as well as in the relative value Presidents place on openness in government. To the extent that differences exist, I would tend to favor greater openness, as apparently Rozell would. Rozell's analysis, however, does not establish such differences, nor does it explain why he condemns Bush for being "crafty, even hidden-handed," while he praises Ford's "cautious, non-confrontational approach" of "avoiding the phrase "executive privilege' and using other legal bases for withholding information." [26]

The practice of seeking to avoid a formal assertion of executive privilege and first discussing confidentiality concerns in other terms is, in my view, a central and valuable component of the accommodation process, not the "strategy" of a single President. Moreover, differences among incidents and Presidents often seem attributable to Congress, including to the role politics plays in motivating the congressional requests. For example, the number and nature of congressional requests vary to a [*1139] significant degree with whether the same political party that commands majorities in Congress also occupies the presidency.

The accommodation process effectively takes account of the institutional, partisan and personal interests that may arise in disputes between Congress and the President over executive branch information. This long-standing practice is premised on a respect for Congress as a coordinate branch of government with legitimate needs for information that sometimes conflict with the executive branch's needs for confidentiality. Both branches have a constitutional obligation to work together in good faith to resolve such conflicts. Often the initial congressional request for executive branch information seeks more than is legitimately needed, particularly in times of divided government where partisanship is more likely a factor. In response, executive branch officials, typically - and appropriately - acting at this stage without presidential involvement, convey to Congress their confidentiality concerns in terms other than executive privilege. Executive branch policy prohibits an assertion of privilege until the President and the Attorney General are satisfied that the executive branch has discharged its constitutional duty to accommodate Congress's legitimate needs. [27] Typical accommodations include Congress substantially narrowing its initial request, or the executive branch briefing members of Congress on the subject matter of the requested documents, or the executive branch showing - but not relinquishing control of - the documents to particular members of Congress. It misses the point to attempt to categorize such resolutions in terms of wins and losses.

The reality of congressional oversight of the executive branch is not a neat theoretical world but one that requires the messy give and take of negotiations. The institutional conflicts and political motivations sometimes inherent in this aspect of the relationship between the President and Congress are best resolved through a process that allows for flexibility, a balancing of competing interests, and compromise. As part of this process of achieving appropriate accommodations, executive branch officials must convey to Congress their confidentiality concerns in terms other than executive privilege. Far from being a "hidden-handed" or "crafty" attempt to avoid presidential involvement, this process maximizes the likelihood of reaching an appropriate accommodation of Congress's needs. [*1140] Only when this process fails is presidential invocation of executive privilege appropriate. The alternative of routine early involvement by the President seems impractical, insufficiently respectful of Congress, and likely to encourage the solidification of positions on both sides.

Executive privilege is unlikely ever to be a popular constitutional principle, or even one well understood by the general public. In times of constitutional crisis and a weakened presidency, assertions of executive privilege become particularly easy targets. It is precisely during such times of difficulty, however, that respect for the principle of executive privilege, and maintaining a principled approach to the application of the privilege, is most critical.

Returning to the months following Watergate proves instructive. In reaction to President Nixon's failed attempt to use executive privilege to withhold certain tape recordings containing evidence of wrongdoing, Congress considered legislation to limit the ability of Presidents to assert executive privilege. Now-Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, who was then serving as the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel, had the unenviable task of defending executive privilege before a Senate subcommittee considering the legislation. He informed the subcommittee that its bill would unconstitutionally infringe on the President's authority to assert executive privilege.

Now, as then, the President's authority to assert executive privilege in appropriate circumstances constitutes a vital component of our constitutional system of government. To quote from Assistant Attorney General Scalia's Senate testimony in 1975:

REV_00260176

I realize that anyone saying a few kind words about Executive privilege after the events of the last few years is in a position somewhat akin to the man preaching the virtues of water after the Johnstown flood, or the utility of fire after the burning of Chicago. But fire and water are, for all that, essential elements of human existence. And Executive privilege is indispensable to the functioning of our system of checks and balances and separation of powers. [28]

I would add that the President personally bears a special burden to safeguard the principle of executive privilege. Each [*1141] President has a responsibility to preserve the constitutional authorities of the office. President Nixon's assertion of executive privilege for the purpose of hiding wrongdoing clearly weakened executive privilege. So, too, may less egregious, yet unwise presidential assertions. In other instances, though, the good of the presidency may require Presidents to assert executive privilege, even at high personal costs where unfair comparisons to President Nixon are sure to follow.

FOOTNOTES:

n1. 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n2. Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege and the Modern Presidents: In Nixon's Shadow, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1069, 1126 (1999).

n3. Rozell carries this point too far, however, in arguing that Nixon's successors routinely have concealed their use of executive privilege: "A common tactic is to devise some other phrase or use some other power to justify withholding information when an executive privilege claim would have been appropriate." Id. at 1071. As I will discuss, this criticism reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of the elements of the process of accommodation, a long-standing practice by which the President and Congress resolve disputes regarding access to executive branch materials.

I also disagree with Rozell's implicit suggestion that each President should adopt new guidelines on executive privilege. For example, the procedures President Reagan set forth in a 1982 memorandum remain in effect today, and there is great value in such continuity. See Memorandum from President Ronald Reagan to the Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Re: Procedures Governing Responses to Congressional Requests for Information (Nov. 4, 1982).

n4. Rozell, supra note 2, at 1072. I also fully endorse his conclusion that legislation defining and limiting executive privilege is unwarranted - and would add that such legislation might encounter significant constitutional impediments - because Congress possesses ample powers to challenge presidential assertions of executive privilege, including its authorities related to oversight, appropriations, confirmations and impeachment.

n5. In some instances, my disagreement stems not from differences in analysis, but from what I view as mistaken characterizations of the relevant facts, which admittedly can be difficult to ascertain in this area. For example, Rozell states that the Bush Administration created a "secret opinions policy" to deny Congress a legal opinion of the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel (OLC). He asserts that "Congress traditionally has not been denied access to OLC decision memoranda." Id. at 1114. In fact, the policy of keeping confidential certain sensitive OLC legal opinions was not new to the Bush Administration and is entirely consistent with the principle of executive privilege. Rozell himself notes that President Reagan asserted executive privilege to prevent the release to Congress of OLC legal opinions. See id. at 1099.

REV_00260177

n6. Id. at 1071. He also describes the privilege as "an accepted doctrine when appropriately applied to two circumstances: (1) certain national security needs and (2) protecting the privacy of White House deliberations when it is in the public interest to do so." Id. at 1070. This latter characterization is somewhat narrower, and unduly so, in that it refers only to "White House deliberations." The privilege also is available for deliberative communications that take place elsewhere in the executive branch, as well as for nondeliberative presidential communications. See In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (discussed infra at note 13); Memorandum from John Harmon, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, to the Attorney General, Re: The Constitutional Privilege for Executive Branch Deliberations: The Dispute with a House Subcommittee over Documents Concerning the Gasoline Conservation Fee (Jan. 13, 1981) (on file with author). Finally, executive privilege has long been recognized as appropriately asserted to protect information regarding open law enforcement investigations. See 40 Op. Att'y Gen. 45, 46 (1941).

n7. Rozell, supra note 2, at 1122.

n8. Id. at 1118 (footnote omitted).

n9. Id. at 1125.

n10. See id. at 1121.

n11. Id.

n12. Id.

n13. Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 731 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit first articulated this standard in refusing to enforce a subpoena issued by the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities for tape recordings of conversations in President Nixon's offices. See id. at 726.

The D.C. Circuit recently reviewed the law of executive privilege, including as discussed in Senate Select Committee and United States v. Nixon, and confirmed that "the Nixon cases establish the contours of the presidential communications privilege." In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 744 (D.C. Cir. 1997). The court there considered an assertion of executive privilege in the context of an Independent Counsel investigation and held that where the President invokes presidential communications privilege, the documents become presumptively privileged and the privilege is more difficult to surmount than in the more general case of deliberative communications. Moreover, the court held that unlike the deliberative process privilege, which applies only to the deliberative or advice portions of the document sought, the presidential communications privilege encompasses documents in their entirety, including purely factual information, and extends to post-decisional communications. See id. at 744-46.

n14. Letter from Attorney General Janet Reno to the President (Sept. 30, 1996) (on file with author).

n15. Rozell states, "Clinton never made a case that releasing the memorandum would cause any undue harm. It appeared that he only stood to harm his own political standing by releasing a document that contained embarrassing information." Rozell, supra note 2, at 1121.

n16. For example, Rozell characterizes President George Washington's views on executive privilege as follows: "At no point did [President Washington] believe that a President could withhold information to protect himself from politically embarrassing information or to cover-

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)

*8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 541, **

Copyright (c) 2000 Publications Council of the College of William and Mary
William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal

April, 2000

8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 541

LENGTH: 24374 words

SYMPOSIUM: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND THE CLINTON PRESIDENCY: Restoring Balance to the Debate Over Executive Privilege: A Response to Berger

Mark J. Rozell *

* Associate Professor of Politics, The Catholic University of America in Washington, DC. Ph.D., American Government, University of Virginia, 1987. Author of numerous studies of executive privilege including EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE: THE DILEMMA OF SECRECY AND DEMOCRATIC ACCOUNTABILITY, University Press of Kansas (2d ed. forthcoming). The author appreciates Louis Fisher's valuable critique of an earlier draft of this Essay.

SUMMARY:
... The Clinton scandal of 1998-1999 reinvigorated the national debate over executive privilege. ... He asks, "Who has a more legitimate interest in inquiring whether a law has been faithfully executed than the lawmaker?" [29] Executive privilege remains dubious if Congress has an absolute, unlimited power of inquiry. ... [60] He believed that he had an absolute power of executive privilege--one that could be claimed on behalf of the entire executive branch of government. ... [232] Foley's thesis is most germane to the analysis of how to resolve the dilemma of executive privilege:

> ... [234] Such resolutions to the dilemma of executive privilege are antithetical to the nature of a constitutional system that tolerates and cultivates abeyances. ...

In this Essay, Professor Rozell responds to Raoul Berger's Executive Privilege: A Constitutional Myth. Berger's work claims that executive privilege does not have a constitutional basis. Addressing Berger's textual, historical, and structural arguments, Professor Rozell argues contrarily that executive privilege is a legitimate power when exercised properly and that to view executive privilege as a constitutional absolute is improper. As such, Professor Rozell recognizes the limits of executive privilege and suggests that it may be subject to a balancing test when weighed against demands for information. He argues that presidents should not use this power to protect information that is merely embarrassing or politically damaging but rather should reserve this power for the most compelling reasons--such as protecting certain national security needs or preserving White House confidentiality when it is in the public interest to do so. Professor Rozell argues that the separation of powers doctrine can resolve executive privilege dilemmas, as the political branches settle informational disputes between themselves, with limited judicial Therefore, there is much evidence that executive privilege is, in many instances, a legitimate, not usurped, power. The exercise of a presidential power creates a strong presumption of validity, especially when the coordinate branches of government accept the legitimacy of such authority.

B. Executive Privilege and the Early Presidents

To understand the Framers' view of executive branch secrecy requires an examination of governmental decision-making in the early republic. The intentions of the Framers are illuminated by how they put constitutional principles into practice. As Berger writes, an analysis of the early years of the republic is "more nearly contemporaneous with the forging of the Constitution." [105]

The first presidential administration established the most important precedents for the exercise of executive power. George Washington understood the crucial role [*556] he played in establishing precedents for the future. As he wrote on May 5, 1789, to James Madison, "As the first of every thing, in our situation will serve to establish a precedent, it is devoutly wished on my part, that these precedents may be fixed on true principles." [106]

Washington established important precedents for executive privilege. The first concerned a congressional request to investigate the failure of a 1791 military expedition by General Arthur St. Clair against American Indians. [107] The House of Representatives established an investigative committee "to call for such persons, papers, and records, as may be necessary to assist their inquiries." [108] The committee requested from the President documents regarding St. Clair's expedition. [109]

Washington convened his Cabinet to determine how to respond to this first-ever request for presidential materials by a congressional committee. [110] He wanted to discuss whether any harm would result from public disclosure and, most pertinently, whether he could rightfully refuse to submit documents to Congress. [111] Along with Hamilton, Knox, and Edmund Randolph, Thomas Jefferson attended the meeting. He later recalled:

> We had all considered and were of one mind 1. that the house was an inquest, & therefore might institute inquiries. 2. that they might call for papers generally. 3. that the Executive ought to communicate such papers as the public good would permit, & ought to refuse those the disclosure of which would injure the public. Consequently were to exercise a discretion. 4. that neither the [committees] nor House has a right to call on the head of a [department], who & whose papers were under the [President] alone, but that the [committee] [should] instruct their chairman to move the house to address the President. [112]

Washington eventually determined that disclosing the information would not harm the national interest and that it was a necessary action in order to vindicate St. Clair. [113] Although Washington chose to negotiate with Congress over the committee's request and eventually decided to turn over relevant information, he had taken an affirmative position on the executive branch's right to withhold information. [*557] Importantly, Washington determined that he had the right to withhold information if disclosure would injure the public. He did not believe that it was appropriate to withhold embarrassing or politically damaging information. [114] Unfortunately, this distinction between exercising secrecy in the public interest as opposed to doing so out of self-interest would be lost on some of Washington's successors.

In 1794, the Senate directed Secretary of State Edmund Randolph, "'to lay before the Senate the correspondences which have been had between the Minister of the United States at the Republic of France, [Gouverneur Morris] and said Republic, and between said Minister and the office of Secretary of State.'" [115] The Senate later amended the motion to address the President instead of Minister Morris. [116] The amended version also "requested" rather than "directed" that such information be forwarded to Congress. [117] Believing that disclosure of the correspondence would be inappropriate, Washington sought the advice of his cabinet. [118] Three cabinet members expressed their opinions:

> "General Knox is of the opinion, that no part of the correspondences should be sent to the Senate:
>
> Colonel Hamilton, that the correct mode of proceeding is to do what General Knox advises; but the principle is safe, by excepting such parts as the President may choose to withhold:
>
> Mr. Randolph, that all correspondence proper, from its nature, to be communicated to the Senate, should be sent; but that what the President thinks is improper, should not be sent." [119]

The Attorney General William Bradford wrote separately: "'it is the duty of the Executive to withhold such parts of the said correspondence as in the judgment of the Executive shall be deemed unsafe and improper to be disclosed.'" [120]

Washington responded as follows to the Senate's request:

> "After an examination of [the correspondence], I directed copies and translations to be made; except in those particulars, which, in my judgment, for public considerations, ought not to be communicated.
>
> [*558] These copies and translations are now transmitted to the Senate; but the nature of them manifest the propriety of their being received as confidential." [121]

Washington allowed the Senate to examine some parts of the correspondence, subject to his approval. [122] He believed that information damaging to the "public interest" could be withheld from Congress. [123] The Senate never challenged his action. [124]

In 1796, John Jay had completed U.S. negotiations with Great Britain over unsettled issues from the American Revolution. [125] Because many considered the settlement unfavorable to the United States, Congress took a keen interest in the administration's actions in the negotiations. [126] Not only did the Senate debate ratification of the Jay Treaty, but the House also set out to conduct its own investigation. The House passed a resolution requesting from Washington information concerning his instructions to the U.S. Minister to Britain regarding the treaty negotiations. [127] Washington refused to comply with the House request and replied:

> The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated would be extremely impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers. The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in > the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the House of Representatives to demand and to have as a matter of course all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power would be to establish a dangerous precedent. [128]

[*559] Washington explained that "the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office . . . forbids a compliance with your request." [129]

The House debated the propriety of Washington's action. [130] The House took no substantive action other than passing two non-binding resolutions: one asserting that Congress need not stipulate any reason for requesting information from the Executive; [131] and the other proclaiming that the House had a legitimate role in considering the expediency with which a treaty was being implemented. [132] The chief constitutional architect, James Madison, who was then a Representative, disagreed in part with Washington's action and defended the House's "right" to request information from the President. [133] Madison also proclaimed, however, on the House floor, "that the Executive had a right, under a due responsibility, also, to withhold information, when of a nature that did not permit a disclosure of it at the time." [134]

During ratification, the Senate voted to keep the treaty secret, as Hamilton wrote, "because they thought [the secrecy] the affair of the President to do as he thought fit." [135] The Senate minority opposed to ratification listed seven objections to the treaty. [136] None cited Washington's decision not to seek advice from the Senate. [137]

Thomas Jefferson recognized the legitimacy of executive branch secrecy. As President, he classified his correspondence as either public or secret. [138] He withheld correspondence deemed secret from both the public and Congress. [139] For example, in 1807, President Jefferson denied a congressional request to provide information about the Aaron Burr conspiracy. [140] Burr had been involved with a secessionist conspiracy, resulting in treason charges. [141] Most relevant to the executive privilege debate was a January, 1807 House resolution requesting that the President "lay before this House any information in possession of the Executive, except such as he may deem the public welfare to require not to be disclosed." [142] Congress clearly had acknowledged the President's right to exercise his discretion to withhold information. Jefferson replied to the congressional resolution by announcing Burr's guilt and [*560] asserting a need to withhold information about the other alleged conspirators: "In this state of the evidence, delivered sometimes, too, under the restrictions of private confidence, neither safety nor justice will permit the exposing names, except that of the principal actor, whose guilt is placed beyond question." [143] Jefferson also had written to the U.S. District Attorney conducting the Burr prosecution that it was "the necessary right of the President of the [United States] to decide, independently of all other authority, what papers, coming to him as President, the public interests permit to be communicated, & to whom." [144]

The principal author of the Constitution, James Madison, also withheld information from Congress during his presidency. [145] He purposefully withheld information about French trade restrictions against the United States that eventually led to widespread support for war against Great Britain. [146] Madison, and later President James Monroe, withheld information from Congress regarding the U.S. takeover of the Florida territory. [147] On February 15, 1816, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations issued a report stating:

> If it be true that the success of negotiations is greatly influenced by time and > accidental circumstances, the importance to the negotiative authority of acquiring regular and secret intelligence can not be doubted. The Senate does not possess the means of acquiring such intelligence. It does not manage the correspondence with our ministers abroad nor with foreign ministers here. . . .

>
> The President . . . manages our concerns with foreign nations and must necessarily be most competent to determine when, how, and upon what subjects negotiation may be urged with the greatest prospect of success. [148]

Although numerous presidents have exercised executive privilege, not all have done so judiciously. As with all other grants of authority, the power to do good is also the power to do bad. The only way to avoid the latter--and consequently eliminate the ability to do the former--is to strip away authority altogether.

The evidence for the legitimacy of executive privilege in many instances is convincing. Critics of executive privilege take too narrow a view of the Constitution. They also have an unrealistic understanding of how our governing system should [*561] work. Executive privilege not only is constitutional, occasionally it is necessary to the effective discharge of the President's duties.

The Supreme Court has struck down important legislative control devices, expanding the scope of the President's powers. [149] The Court has determined that secrecy is a necessary condition for the President to carry out many of his constitutional duties, especially in foreign affairs. [150]

Under U.S. law, the power to classify information is given to the Executive, not to the Legislature. [151] Congressional decision-making is purposefully slow and indecisive. Congress may be out of session sometimes when foreign policy problems arise. One argument stated often in favor of executive privilege is that Congress does not always maintain secrets. Although true, Congress certainly is not unique in that regard. The executive branch does not always maintain secrets either. Once sensitive information is turned over to any large group of officials, there is no guarantee that someone will not divulge what he or she knows for policy, partisan, or personal reasons. For that reason, executive privilege may be necessary occasionally to substantially limit the circle of individuals with access to sensitive information, especially when national security is at stake.

The preservation of national security sometimes requires secrecy. Under certain circumstances, the right to exercise executive privilege is a necessary precondition for the Chief Executive to achieve national security aims. Additionally, the Chief Executive needs sound staff advice, and the quality of his counsel depends ultimately on the degree of its candor.

C. The Need for Candid Advice

The President's constitutional duties necessitate that he be able to consult with advisers without fear of public disclosure of their advice. If officers of the executive branch believed that their confidential advice could eventually be disclosed, the quality of that advice would be seriously damaged. [152] Indeed, it would be difficult for advisers to be completely honest and frank in their discussions if their every word might someday be disclosed to partisan opponents or to the public. Averell Harriman [*562] testified to Congress, "The President is entitled to receive the frank views of his advisers and therefore must be able to protect the personal or confidential nature of their communications with him." [153] William P. Bundy also testified, "If officers of an administration should come to feel that their confidential advice would be disclosed, short of a period of many years, I do believe that the consequences in terms of honesty, candor, courage, and frankness within the executive branch could be very serious indeed." [154]

REV_00260193

Executive privilege recognizes this common sense notion. Indeed, in *United States v. Nixon, [155] the Supreme Court not only recognized the constitutionality of executive privilege, but the occasional need for secrecy in the operation of the presidency:

> The valid need for protection of communications between high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties . . . is too plain to require further discussion. Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process. . . . The confidentiality of Presidential communications has . . . constitutional underpinnings. . . . The privilege is fundamental to the operation of Government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution. [156]

In 1979, the Court iterated its support of executive privilege based on the need for candid interchange among advisers: "Documents shielded by executive privilege remain privileged even after the decision to which they pertain may have been effected, since disclosure at any time could inhibit the free flow of advice, including analysis, reports and expression of opinion." [157]

The Court has recognized that the need for candid interchange is an important basis for executive privilege. Although it is well recognized that Congress needs access to executive branch information to carry out its oversight and investigative duties, it does not follow that Congress must have full access to the details of every executive branch communication. Congressional inquiry, like executive privilege, has limits. That is not to suggest that presidents can claim the need for candid advice to [*563] restrict any and all information. In fact, Congress' power of inquiry trumps a claim of executive privilege unless the President can make a showing of need for secrecy. [158]

D. Limits on Congressional Inquiry

Congress' power of inquiry, though broad, is not unlimited. [159] Berger's claim that the Constitution granted Congress an absolute power of inquiry is unfounded, as there is nothing in Article I, or in any part of the Constitution, that substantiates that claim. The debates at the Constitutional Convention and at the subsequent ratifying conventions provide little evidence that the Framers intended to confer such authority on Congress. The legitimacy of the congressional power of inquiry is indeed unquestioned. [160] Berger's argument that this power is unlimited simply goes too far.

Regarding the power of inquiry, a distinction must be drawn between sources of information generally and those necessary for the legislative branch to perform its legislative and investigative functions. [161] There is a strong presumption of validity to a congressional request for information relevant to these functions. [162] The presumption weakens in the case of a congressional "fishing expedition"--a broad, sweeping quest for any and all executive branch information that is of interest to Congress for no specified reason. [163] Indeed, Congress itself has recognized that there are limits on its power of inquiry.

[*564] Nonetheless, Berger believes that Congress has an absolute, unlimited power to compel disclosure of all executive branch information. [164] His view has been echoed by Representative John Dingell (D-Mich.) who said that members of Congress "'have the power under the law to receive each and every item in the hands of the government.'" [165] This expansive view of congressional inquiry is as wrong as the belief that the President has the unlimited power to withhold all information from Congress. There are inherent constitutional limits on the powers of the respective governmental branches. The common standard for legislative inquiry has been whether the requested information was vital to Congress' lawmaking and oversight function. [166] It is ironic that Berger maintains that executive privilege lacks validity because it is not specifically granted by the Constitution and then argues that Congress possesses an absolute, unlimited inquiry power despite a similar lack of such a constitutional grant.

REV_00260194

E. The Other Branches Exercise Confidentiality

Executive privilege also can be defended on the basis of accepted practices of secrecy in the other branches of government. Members of Congress receive candid, confidential advice from committee staff and legislative assistants. [167] Congressional committees meet on occasion in closed session to "mark-up" legislation. Congress is not obligated to disclose information to another branch. A court subpoena will not be honored without a vote of the legislative chamber concerned. Members of Congress enjoy a constitutional form of privilege that absolves them from having to account for their official behavior, particularly regarding speech, anywhere but in Congress. [168] As with the Executive, this privilege does not extend into the realm of criminal conduct. [169]

Secrecy also is found in the judicial branch. It is difficult to imagine more secretive deliberations than those that take place in Supreme Court conferences. David O'Brien refers to secrecy as one of the "basic institutional norms" of the Supreme Court. [170] "Isolation from the Capitol and the close proximity of the justices' chambers within the Court promote secrecy, to a degree that is remarkable . . . . The [*565] norm of secrecy conditions the employment of the justices' staff and has become more important as the number of employees increases." [171] Members of the Judiciary claim immunity from having to respond to congressional subpoenas. [172] The norm of judicial privilege also protects judges from having to testify about their professional conduct. [173]

It is inconceivable that secrecy, so common to the legislative and judicial branches, should not be exercised by the executive branch. [174] The executive branch regularly is engaged in a number of activities that are secret in nature. George C. Calhoun explains that the executive branch > presents . . . matters to grand juries; assembles confidential investigative files in criminal matters; compiles files containing personal information involving such things as census, tax, and veterans information; and health, education and welfare benefits to name a few. All of these activities must, of necessity, generate a considerable amount of confidential information. And personnel in the executive branch . . . necessarily prepare many more confidential memoranda. Finally, they produce a considerable amount of classified information as a result of the activities of the intelligence community. [175]

In the cases of legislative, judicial, and executive branch secrecy, a common purpose is being served: to arrive at more prudent policy decisions than those that would be determined through an open process. In each case, the end result is what will be subject to scrutiny. Indeed, accountability is built into secretive decisionmaking processes. The elected public officials must justify the end result at some point.

F. Restoring the Balance

The post-Watergate period has witnessed a breakdown in the proper exercise of executive privilege. Because of Nixon's abuses, Presidents Ford and Carter kept executive privilege at a distance and resorted to other constitutional and statutory means to preserve executive branch secrecy. [176] President Reagan tried to restore executive privilege as a presidential prerogative but ultimately failed when [*566] congressional committees threatened administration officials with contempt citations and adopted other retaliatory actions to compel disclosure. [177] President Bush, like Ford and Carter before him, avoided executive privilege when possible and used other means to preserve secrecy. [178] President Clinton has exercised executive privilege more often than all of the other post-Watergate presidents combined, often times improperly. [179] In the post-Watergate era, therefore, presidents either have avoided uttering the words "executive privilege" and have protected secrecy through other sources of authority (Ford, Carter, Bush), or they have tried to restore executive privilege and failed (Reagan, Clinton).

REV_00260195

Clinton's aggressive use of executive privilege at least served to revive the national debate over this presidential power. Therefore, now is the appropriate time to discuss how to restore a sense of balance to the executive privilege debate.

The dilemma of executive privilege is that it is troubling to permit governmental secrecy in a political system predicated on leadership accountability. On the surface, the dilemma is a complex one to resolve: it is questionable whether the public can hold democratically elected leaders accountable when such leaders are able to deliberate in secret or to make secretive decisions.

Under certain circumstances, presidential exercise of executive privilege fits comfortably within the embrace of our constitutional system. Nonetheless, in recent years, executive privilege has fallen into disrepute because of the abuses of that power by presidents seeking to conceal wrongdoing. The modern pattern of (1) executive branch recriminations that suggest that legislators and independent counsels unnecessarily meddle in the affairs of the executive branch; and (2) accusations that the executive branch's failure to divulge all information constitutes criminal activity, has been unhealthy to our governing system. Currently, there appears to be a lack of recognition by the political branches of each other's legitimate powers and interests in the area of governmental secrecy. To restore some sense of balance to the modern debate over executive privilege, the following must be recognized.

First, when used under appropriate circumstances, executive privilege is a legitimate constitutional power. The weight of the evidence refutes the assertion that the executive privilege is a "constitutional myth." [180] Consequently, presidential administrations should not be devising schemes for achieving the ends of executive privilege while avoiding any mention of the constitutional doctrine. Furthermore, Congress and judicial entities must recognize that the executive branch, like the legislative and judicial branches, has a legitimate need to deliberate in secret and that [*567] not every assertion of executive privilege is automatically a devious attempt to conceal wrongdoing.

Second, executive privilege is not an unlimited, unfettered presidential power. Executive privilege should be exercised only rarely and for the most compelling reasons. Congress has the right, and often the duty, to challenge presidential assertions of executive privilege. [181] Congress should make challenges, especially when such assertions clearly are not related to the two primary categories: (1) protecting certain national security needs; or (2) protecting the privacy of White House deliberations when it is in the public interest to do so.

Third, there are no clear, precise constitutional boundaries that determine, a priori, whether any particular claim of executive privilege is legitimate. The resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege is found in the political ebb and flow of the separation of powers system. There is no need for any precise definition of the constitutional boundaries surrounding executive privilege. Such a power cannot be subject to precise definition because it is impossible to determine in advance all of the circumstances under which presidents may have to exercise that power. A return to the traditional separation of powers theory provides the appropriate resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege and democratic accountability.

III. RESOLVING THE DILEMMA: THE SEPARATION OF POWERS

In response to the constitutional dilemma posed by the presidential use of executive privilege, it is often tempting to try to devise a remedy that would eliminate any potential future conflict. Berger believes there is just one answer to the question of how to resolve this constitutional dilemma: eliminate the source of power from which the dilemma originates. [182] In his view, "Secrecy in the operations of government is an abomination." [183] Berger concludes that actions during the Nixon presidency proved that point. During the Nixon presidency, Berger writes, "'confidentiality' was the vehicle for the cover-up of criminal acts and conspiracies by [Nixon's] aides, an instrument he repeatedly employed for the obstruction of justice." [184]

Berger accurately describes Nixon's exercise of executive privilege. In addition, one easily could add the more recent actions of the Clinton administration to the list of presidential misuse of executive privilege. Yet, many of the critiques of executive privilege focus on the incredible abuses of one or a few administrations. Generalizing from these abuses of power, many critics of executive privilege maintain that there [*568] must be completely open deliberations within the executive branch of government--a position never adopted, even by the "open" presidencies of Gerald R. Ford or Jimmy Carter. [185] These critics, while having identified an undeniable problem, call for a simplistic, blanket solution: if a power such as the executive privilege potentially can be abused, then it must be eliminated in favor of completely open, public deliberations. Such critics perceive openness as the only means by which to assure accountability from the executive branch. [186]

Underlying this argument against executive privilege is the view that, given the need for democratic accountability and the specific powers conferred upon the legislative branch by Article I of the Constitution, Congress always must be supreme in the lawmaking process. Berger that there should be no exceptions to that rule. [187]

Yet, as James W. Ceaser argues, the belief that Congress must always be supreme in the lawmaking process "is based on a narrow and legalistic understanding of the Constitution and on a failure to recognize the real purpose for which the founders adopted the theory of separation of powers." [188] The failure to understand or to accept the Founders' theory of the separation of powers has resulted in a quest for absolutes on the issue of executive privilege. Dogmatically opposed to executive privilege under any circumstance, Berger and others want to eliminate such a power because of past abuses and the real potential for future abuses. [189] Yet, this remedy elevates the exception--the abuse of power--into the rule, leading to the call for a broad, sweeping, and ultimately an impractical solution.

Many of President Nixon's defenders, on the other hand, elaborated the equally suspect argument that Congress and the public have no authority to limit and constrain the exercise of executive powers. Nixon took this viewpoint to the extreme, claiming that any action undertaken by the President is legitimate. Nixon's attorneys argued that the manner in which executive privilege is exercised "is a matter of presidential judgment alone." [190] In United States v. Sirica, [191] Judge George MacKinnon expressed best of all the notion of an unlimited executive privilege:

> In my opinion an absolute privilege exists for presidential communications. . . . Strict confidentiality is so essential to the [*569] deliberative process that it should not be jeopardized by any possibility of disclosure. [192]

Neither dogmatic view of executive privilege presents an accurate assessment of the separation of powers system. Neither outlook provides a workable resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege. Only a proper understanding of the separation of powers can help resolve the inherent conflict between governmental secrecy and the "right to know."

The alternative proposed by Berger and his followers--completely open executive branch deliberations--is worse than the danger they seek to eliminate. Any power can be abused once it has been created. Because secrecy is occasionally vital to the proper functioning of the presidency, periodic attempts to abuse this power may be an unavoidable price that must be accepted. To demand that presidents exercise their powers fully to advance an activist policy agenda, that they strictly conform to the letter of every legal and constitutional provision in the exercise of their powers, and that they remain fully subordinate to the legislative authority in all areas, is to expect nothing less than an ideal world--one in which the trustworthiness of chief executives is never at issue; in which the legal and constitutional provisions pertaining to the presidency are unmistakably clear, consistent, and do not unduly constrain the exercise of presidential authority; and in which legislators are concerned only with high-minded matters of policy and the public good. As the Founders understood so well, such a state of affairs never will exist given the undeniable foibles of human beings. There are better ways to check the potential abuse of power than elimination of the source of power altogether. The dilemma of executive privilege can be resolved by means other than eliminating that authority altogether or effectively trying to do so through the use of onerous legalistic constraints.

Furthermore, the pro-imperial presidency view--the one in which the Chief Executive exercises his authority unfettered by congressional constraints, Congress defers to executive fiat, and the only check on presidential power takes place on election day--also misunderstands the separation of powers doctrine. The resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege is not simply to allow the President to determine for himself the scope and limits of his own authority. As Louis W. Koenig has written, "John Locke would have been flabbergasted" by Nixon's assertion that any action undertaken by the President is legal. [193]

A proper understanding of the separation of powers is rooted in the founding period and the early years of the Republic. The Founders recognized an implied constitutional prerogative of presidential secrecy, a power they believed was occasionally necessary and proper. [194] The leading Founders either exercised or [*570] acknowledged the right of executive branch secrecy in the early years of the Republic. [195] In devising the American constitutional system, they sought to limit the Executive's powers to reduce the threat of tyranny. Yet, this perceived need to limit power never implied either weak government or a subordinate executive branch. As political scientist L. Peter Schultz has written, "The separation of powers constitutes an attempt to solve one of the major problems of government, that of providing for both reasonable government and forceful government without sacrificing either." [196]

It is well recognized that the leading Founders exercised considerable foresight in establishing a constitutional system capable of adapting to the needs of changing times. That foresight has been especially useful to the conduct of foreign policy, an area in which some claims of executive privilege are especially compelling. When it came to writing the articles of the Constitution concerning the executive branch, the Framers exercised great care not to constrain all executive power with constitutional exactitude.

A proper understanding of the separation of powers is founded also on the notion that there are inherent limitations on the prerogative powers of the presidency. The eventual resolution of the Nixon Administration's scandals shows that Congress and the Judiciary, when given good reason to believe that the claim of privilege is being abused, have institutional mechanisms that can be used to compel the President to divulge information. The separation of powers provides the vital mechanisms by which the other branches of government can challenge executive claims of privilege.

REV_00260198

The answer to the question of how executive privilege can be properly exercised and constrained is found in an examination of the roles of the other branches in ensuring that the executive branch does not abuse its powers.

A. Role of Congress

One solution to the dilemma of executive privilege that is proposed occasionally is to establish a statutory definition of that power, specifying the circumstances under which executive privilege can be exercised. [197] Fortunately, no such legislative solution to the dilemma has been enacted. Any a priori "solution" is bound to fail, given the impossibility of determining all of the circumstances under which executive privilege may be exercised in the future. As former Attorney General Edward Levi [*571] has explained, "The lesson of history is that the reasonableness of an assertion of confidentiality cannot be determined in advance on the basis of neat categories." [198]

Congress already has the institutional capability to challenge claims of executive privilege by means other than eliminating the right to withhold information or attaching statutory restrictions on the exercise of that power. For example, if members of Congress are not satisfied with the response to their demands for information, they have the option of retaliating by withholding support for the President's agenda or his executive branch nominees. In one famous episode during the Nixon Administration, the Senate Judiciary Committee threatened the confirmation of Richard Kleindienst to the office of Attorney General until a separate access-to-information dispute had been resolved. [199] That action resulted in President Nixon ceding to the Senators' demands. [200] If information can be withheld only for the most compelling reasons, it is not unreasonable for Congress to attempt to force the President's hand by making him weigh the importance of withholding the information against that of moving forward a nomination or piece of legislation. Presumably, information being withheld for purposes of vital national security or constitutional concerns would take precedence over pending legislation or a presidential appointment. If not, there must be little justification for withholding the information in the first place.

Congress possesses numerous other means by which it can compel presidential compliance with requests for information. First, Congress maintains control over the governmental "purse-strings," a formidable power over the executive branch. [201] Additionally, Congress often relies on the subpoena power or a contempt of Congress charge to compel release of withheld information. [202] It is not merely the exercise of these powers that matters, but the threat that Congress may resort to such powers. During the Reagan/Bush years, Congress had a great deal of success at compelling executive branch disclosure of information through the subpoena and contempt of Congress powers. [203]

In the extreme case, Congress also has the power of impeachment--the ultimate weapon with which to threaten the Executive. [204] Clearly, this congressional power cannot be routinely exercised as a means of compelling disclosure of information and consequently will not constitute a real threat in commonplace information disputes. Nonetheless, in the case of a scandal of Watergate-like proportions, in which other [*572] remedies have failed, Congress can threaten to exercise its ultimate power over the President. For a time in 1998, Congress considered an impeachment article against President Clinton for his abuse of presidential powers, including executive privilege. [205] Ultimately, Congress dropped that particular article. [206]

In the vast majority of cases, it can be expected that the President will comply with requests for information rather than withstand retaliation from Congress. Presidential history is intervention. Finally, he proposes that each administration should adopt guidelines that provide members of the executive branch with formal procedures for handling and resolving executive privilege issues.

TEXT:
[*541] INTRODUCTION

The Clinton scandal of 1998-1999 reinvigorated the national debate over executive privilege. Much like President Richard M. Nixon's actions in the Watergate scandal, President Clinton's aggressive and improper use of executive privilege brought disrepute to this constitutional power. Of course, the improper use of a constitutional power by one or even a number of presidents does not render that power illegitimate. Yet, during the Nixon period, a single work of scholarship on executive privilege loomed large and seemed to lend credibility to the view that this presidential power lacked a constitutional foundation: Raoul Berger's Executive [*542] Privilege: A Constitutional Myth. It was a monumental study many years in the making that fortuitously was published during a period of intense national debate over executive privilege. [1]

Berger's thesis dovetailed nicely with the widespread sentiment of the time that executive privilege was an unconstitutional vehicle for presidential abuse of power. [2] Nonetheless, Berger's analysis was flawed. His book surely had the markings of an impressively documented lawyer's brief against executive privilege, but it lacked the crucial scholarly component of being a balanced presentation of evidence and analysis.

Berger's study was hugely influential in its time and it remains a fixture in legal and scholarly analyses today. With the current revival of the debate over executive privilege, it is an appropriate time to review and critique his analysis. As Clinton's presidency draws to an end, there is a clear need to bring an appropriate balance to the study and the exercise of executive privilege.

To be sure, in critiquing Berger's analysis, I am not championing the opposite view--that executive privilege is an unlimited presidential prerogative. Rather, executive privilege is a legitimate power when it is exercised properly. Any claim of executive privilege is open to challenge and, as with other governmental powers, it may be subject to a balancing test when weighed against demands for access to information.

I. BERGER ON EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE

The Constitution never explicitly grants to the Executive the power to withhold information. Berger maintains that a determination of the scope of the executive power requires a strict reading of the Constitution. [3] He does not accept the idea of an implied power of executive privilege. [4] Rather, he believes that the constitutional Framers did not give the Executive the power to withhold information. [5] Quite simply, had the Framers intended for the Executive to have the power of executive privilege, they would have granted it in Article II. Therefore, Berger proclaims executive privilege "a constitutional myth." [6]

To make a convincing case against executive privilege requires much more than an assertion that such a power lacks a specific constitutional provision. Throughout history, presidents have exercised formidable powers not explicitly granted by the [*543] Constitution. [7] Congress has done so as well. [8] Accordingly, critics of executive privilege also must show that the Framers clearly did not intend for such a power to be exercised and that the Framers created impediments to prevent such a power from ever being adopted.

Berger believes that the Framers made Congress the supreme player in the making of foreign policy and never intended the Executive to play the lead role. [9] Because many claims of executive privilege center around national security and foreign policy, this argument replete with examples of chief executives who tried to invoke privilege or threatened to do so, only to back down in the face of congressional challenges. [207]

If certain members of Congress believe that the executive privilege power is too formidable, the remedy resides not in crippling presidential authority, but in exercising the vast array of powers already at Congress' disposal. Sotirios A. Barber contends that presidential preeminence in foreign policymaking "cannot be explained by comparing that executive and legislative powers are enumerated in the Constitution." [208] Barber correctly explains that Congress possesses formidable powers, but at times has failed to exercise them fully. [209] Over three decades ago, Senator J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) argued that Congress acquiesced too often to presidential authority in foreign affairs and charged his colleagues not to allow the Chief Executive to act unilaterally in foreign policy or in a secretive fashion: "I conclude that when the president, for reasons with which we can all sympathize, does not invite us into his high-policy councils, it is our duty to infiltrate them as best we can." [210]

Nonetheless, Louis Koenig refutes the oft-stated belief that the presidency has become imperial while Congress' powers have atrophied. Koenig cites the example of the Nixon Presidency as proof that Congress has both possessed and exercised formidable powers when it wanted to so:

> The imperial presidency thesis excessively downgrades Congress and misstates the historical experience of the presidency. Time and again, Congress prevailed over Nixon. Congress ended his once secret war in Cambodia by cutting off its funds. His claims of massive powers to impound funds or abolish programs were rejected both by Congress and [*573] the courts. His modest program proposals were rejected by Congress more frequently than any other contemporary president. Ultimately, Nixon's certain impeachment by the House of Representatives drove him from the presidency. . . . [The presidency] contains substantial weaknesses of power which the imperial thesis obscures. [211]

The resolution of executive-legislative disagreements over withheld information need not occur through such combative techniques. Rooted in the separation of powers is the notion that the potential stalemate that results from the executive branch's refusal to release information can be overcome by mutual accommodation and compromise. I disagree with the assessment of the former Attorney General William French Smith, who argued that there are inherent problems with holding any members of Congress in confidence regarding sensitive information. [212] The divulging of sensitive information to a few trusted and highly respected members of Congress has succeeded in the past. For example, during the Second World War, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt frequently confided sensitive national security information to trusted members of Congress, and they respected the sanctity of that information. In times of great uncertainty over the appropriateness of withholding information, the President can, in secret chambers, discuss the problem with a few members of Congress who are highly trusted within their own institution.

The circumstances surrounding treaty negotiations is particularly complex because of the obvious need for the Executive to keep discussions confidential combined with the Senate's constitutional authority of "advice and consent." [213] In diplomatic negotiations, to publicly divulge negotiating positions before an agreement has been reached is highly imprudent. The flexibility of negotiating positions is compromised by such revelations, making highly difficult the achievement of an agreement between or among the parties. Chief Justice William Rehnquist has argued that the use of private discussions between the President and some members of Congress can satisfy both Congress' right to know and the needs of diplomatic negotiations:

> Frequently the problem of overly broad public dissemination of such negotiations can be solved by testimony in executive session, which informs the members of the committee of Congress without making the same information prematurely available throughout the world. The end is not secrecy as to the end product--the treaty--which of course should [*574] be exposed to the fullest public scrutiny, but only the confidentiality as to the negotiations which lead up to the treaty. [214]

A statutory resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege is not needed. Congress already possesses the constitutional means by which to challenge the executive branch when it withholds information. [215] Congress has had substantial success using its existing powers to compel disclosure of withheld information. In fact, Congress appears to have gained the upper hand in its disputes with the executive branch over information policy. When it comes to executive privilege, there is no convincing evidence for the view that the President is imperial, capable of doing whatever he wants.

B. Role of the Courts

In the realms of foreign affairs and national security policymaking, the courts generally have been deferential to the so-called "political branches." The Judiciary's role in the separation of powers is not regarded as one of arbitrating conflicts between the political branches over how foreign policy should be conducted. On many occasions, courts have recognized that the judicial branch may not be best suited for deciding complex matters of foreign affairs, national security and intelligence policy. [216] Louis Fisher explains the usual judicial response to congressional attempts [*575] at posing constitutional challenges to the President's national security decisions:

> Congress must be prepared, and willing, to exercise the ample powers within its arsenal. When it acquiesces to executive initiatives, the record clearly shows that legislative inaction will not be cured by judicial remedies. Four times during the Reagan administration, members of Congress filed suit in federal court to have President Reagan's military actions in El Salvador, Nicaragua, Grenada, and the Persian Gulf held unconstitutional and illegal. Four times the federal courts gave Congress the same message: if you fail to challenge the president, don't come to us. Justice Lewis Powell put it well in the treaty termination case of Goldwater v. Carter (1979): "If the Congress chooses not to confront the President, it is not our task to do so." Congress has the constitutional power. It needs also the institutional courage and constitutional understanding to share with the president the momentous decision to send U.S. forces into combat. [217]

This recognition of the limitations on the role of the courts does not preclude a role for the Judiciary in arbitrating constitutional, rather than policy, disputes. As the Supreme Court affirmed in *United States v. Nixon, the separation of powers does not guarantee > an absolute, unqualified Presidential privilege of immunity from judicial process under all circumstances. The President's need for complete candor and objectivity from advisers calls for great deference from the courts. However, when the privilege depends solely on the broad, [*576] undifferentiated claim of public interest in the confidentiality of such conversations, a confrontation with other values arises. [218]

The Court clarified that when a claim of privilege is made to protect national security or foreign policy deliberations, such a claim often is difficult for another branch to overcome in a balancing of constitutional powers. [219] Yet, while upholding the "constitutionally based" nature of the privilege, the Court also made it clear that the privilege may, at times, have to defer to the constitutionally-based powers of a coordinate branch of government. [220] Although the Court did not specify the exact balance of powers between the branches, it did affirm that the judicial branch has the authority to compel production of information when needed in a criminal case:

> We conclude that when the ground for asserting privilege as to subpoenaed materials sought for use in a criminal trial is based only on the generalized interest in confidentiality, it cannot prevail over the fundamental demands of due process of law in the fair administration of criminal justice. The generalized assertion of privilege must yield to the demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial. [221]

Other court cases have affirmed that it is appropriate to apply a balancing test of competing interests when disputes arise over executive branch information policies. [222] In *United States v. Nixon, the Supreme Court exhibited the capacity of the Judiciary to pose as a viable check on presidential abuses of executive privilege. [223]

There also is considerable legal precedent for in camera review of sensitive information by the courts. [224] Rather than simply compelling disclosure of privileged [*577] information for open court review, it may be appropriate for the executive branch to convince the court, in secret chambers, of the necessity of nondisclosure. The courts repeatedly have affirmed their right to decide in particular cases whether the necessity of protecting sensitive information outweighs the need for evidence in criminal justice matters. [225] Little evidence exists to support the claim that the Judiciary does not administer this duty carefully and prudently. As Chief Justice John Marshall asserted in United States v. Burr, [226] the President has the right to protect privileged information, but this right does not override the authority of the judiciary to review protected documents:

> The president, although subject to the general rules which apply to others, may have sufficient motives for declining to produce a particular paper, and those motives may be such as to restrain the court from enforcing its production. . . . I can readily conceive that the president might receive a letter which it would be improper to exhibit in public . . . . The occasion for demanding it ought, in such a case, to be very strong, and to be fully shown to the court before its production could be insisted on. . . . Such a letter, though it be a private one, seems to partake of the character of an official paper, and to be such as ought not on light ground to be forced into public view. [227]

The Judiciary clearly plays a less active role than the Congress in resolving executive privilege disputes. Institutional conflict between the political branches usually should resolve informational controversies. Constant judicial intervention in such controversies is neither practical nor desirable. Nonetheless, the courts may get involved in those conflicts in which they are a party and in disputes that the political branches cannot resolve without judicial intervention.

CONCLUSION

The dilemma of executive privilege cannot be resolved with constitutional exactitude. To try to do so would be to attempt to impose a solution that is [*578] antithetical to the

REV_00260202

American constitutional culture. The dilemma can best be resolved on a case-by-case basis, through the normal ebb-and-flow of politics as envisioned by the Framers of the governing system in the United States. Exactitude cannot be achieved in a government that must accommodate ever-changing circumstances. The genius of the American constitutional system is its enormous capacity to maintain its legitimacy and stability by accommodating changing circumstances without sacrificing the fundamental values that underlie the system.

The search for constitutional absolutes--e.g., that executive privilege is a myth or that executive privilege is an unfettered prerogative--is misguided. Our constitutional system cannot guarantee certitude with regard to how every informational policy dispute in government will be resolved, nor should it. Two executive privilege claims that, on the surface, appear equally valid, may be treated very differently from one another given different circumstances--e.g., the political composition of Congress, the membership of a particular investigating committee, the popularity of the President, and the like. In the Bush Administration, one presidential claim of executive privilege that had little to do with national security concerns prevailed in part because of the popularity of a Cabinet member who might otherwise have been held in contempt of Congress, and in part because the chair of the committee in charge of the investigation failed to vigorously pursue the matter. [228] On numerous other occasions in the modern presidency, Congress has prevailed over administration claims of privilege either because of its vigorous challenges to those actions or due to the unwillingness of some post-Watergate presidents to resist congressional demands. [229]

It is implausible that a strict, legalistic definition of executive privilege could have determined in advance the appropriate resolution to each controversy. What is problematic in the post-Watergate years is the delegitimization of executive privilege due to Nixon's, and more recently Clinton's, abuses of power.

Many advocates of the strong presidency now decry the so-called "imperial Congress" and the Legislature's propensity to solve informational disputes through the use of narrow legalisms. [230] Rather than an appropriate exercise of the separation of powers mechanism moderating presidential power, more often intransigent positions are adopted by members of the political branches. This development [*579] represents a regrettable deviation from the Framers' notion of the separation of powers and from the traditional dynamic that occurred between the political branches over executive branch secrecy until the Nixon years. Through the normal political process of confrontation, compromise, and accommodation, the coordinate branches usually had resolved satisfactorily their differences over executive privilege matters. We cannot solve our modern dilemma by resorting to the solution that was rejected by the Framers--that is, by demanding constitutional certitude.

Michael Foley makes the point that constitutional dogmatism could have the effect of dangerously exposing the unresolvable elements of the separation of powers and the inconsistencies of the constitutional system. He correctly explains that certain constitutional problems are not amenable to definitive solutions. [231] In fact, an advanced constitutional culture is one that tolerates and even cultivates the existence of what he calls "abeyances," defined as, "those constitutional gaps which remain vacuous for positive and constructive purposes." [232] Foley's thesis is most germane to the analysis of how to resolve the dilemma of executive privilege:

> There is simply more to be gained by cultivating and protecting abeyances and in preventing political issues and institutional differences from inciting intransigent divisions and entrenched constitutional dogmatism. In not extending claims to their logical but provocative conclusions; in not seeking to maximize advantages irrespective of their repercussion; and in promoting "comity" by which positions are acknowledged and honored in the cause of achieving a means of cooperation > within a context brooding with adversity, political participants can transform immobilism into productive interplay. The unremitting dissonance of a separated powers system, therefore, can condition those who work within it to the need to strive continuously against a background of conflict and dispute, in order to achieve any sense of common purpose. [233]

REV_00260203

Nonetheless, critics of executive privilege make the case that such a power potentially is dangerous, thereby requiring either elimination of that power or the imposition of severe legal constraints on its exercise. [234] Such resolutions to the dilemma of executive privilege are antithetical to the nature of a constitutional system that tolerates and cultivates abeyances. Those resolutions demonstrate a lack of understanding of a separation of powers system in which the exercise of executive [*580] privilege is sometimes necessary. Ceaser makes the point that the exercise of prerogative powers is appropriate for unusual circumstances and that "the exception or extreme case need not define the rule." [235] In creating the separation of powers system, the Framers did not envision the resort to strict legalisms as the means to resolve customary inter-branch disputes. Ceaser's explanation of the Framers' theory of the separation of powers is germane to this analysis:

> The executive power, although it cannot always be subject to precise limitations, can still be watched, checked, and supervised by other institutions possessing an equal or greater regard among the people. Following this theory, the founders placed the greater part of the lawmaking power in Congress, thereby reducing the prospect that the prerogative power would ever be carried over into normal governance. Moreover, the very presence of institutions as powerful as the Congress and the Supreme Court could serve to check the executive power. Finally, there is a sense in which the founders made the legislative power supreme not so much by giving it the law-making power as by giving it the power to impeach and convict the president. By this means the legislature can dismiss the person exercising the executive power, even though it cannot exercise that power itself. [236]

Many critics of executive privilege too readily assume that any invocation of that power is, by definition, suspect--that no one wants to refuse to disclose information unless he or she has "something to hide." To avoid future Watergate-like scandals and to resolve the dilemma of executive privilege, they offer solutions that are more troublesome than the problems they wish to eliminate. The resolution to the dilemma of executive privilege is, in a sense, right before our eyes. The Founders' theory of separation of powers offers the necessary mechanisms by which prerogative powers can be exercised, challenged, and constrained.

Although there is no need for any statutory definition of, or limitations on, executive privilege, the post-Watergate years demonstrate that it is prudent for each presidential administration to adopt a set of procedures on how it will exercise executive privilege. [237] The failure to do so in the Ford and Carter Administrations--though perhaps necessitated by the political environment of the mid-to-late 1970s--resulted in a great deal of confusion both within each administration and between the political branches. There is no small irony to the fact that these two presidencies--predicated on promises to be "open" and in every possible way unlike the Nixon Administration--in failing to adopt their own [*581] executive privilege guidelines operated officially under the guidelines established in the Nixon memorandum. [238] President Reagan adopted new executive privilege guidelines in 1982, [239] which remained in effect throughout the Reagan/Bush years. [240] The Bush Administration routinely did not abide by those guidelines. [241] The Clinton Administration adopted revised executive privilege guidelines in 1994 [242] and the President clearly violated some of the new procedures during the Monica Lewinsky scandal investigation. [243]

REV_00260204

To avoid confusion regarding the exercise of executive privilege, it would be eminently sensible for each new administration to promulgate a set of guidelines on the use of that power. These guidelines need not diverge substantially, or even at all, from one administration to the next. Yet, each administration should issue a presidential directive to make unmistakably clear how members of the executive branch are to handle executive privilege matters. Each administration should not pose its guidelines in the form of legalisms, but rather, should outline the formal procedures of the administration for handling and resolving executive privilege issues. The guidelines also should identify only broad categories of areas in which issues of executive privilege might arise. The traditional categories are national security, confidential deliberations, enforcement of criminal justice, and privacy of executive branch officials. Specific cases of executive privilege should be dealt with as they arise, as all such cases cannot be anticipated in advance.

Regardless of how the guidelines are set up--whether, for example, the President personally must assert executive privilege, or the use of that power must be approved by the Attorney General--responsibility for the exercise of that prerogative resides ultimately with the President. Consequently, accountability is not compromised by the exercise of executive privilege because the President will have to justify his use of that power to the electorate or to one or both of the coordinate branches of government. To accept the legitimacy of a properly constrained executive privilege power in the system of separated powers is to place an important trust in the President that he will exercise this power prudently and in the public interest, and to know that the American populace can hold him accountable for the manner in which he discharges such constitutional authority.

When properly exercised, executive privilege clearly is constitutional. Despite the evidence, executive privilege remains mired in controversy. Much of the [*582] controversy can be attributed to the fact that--as with other constitutional powers--not every president has exercised executive privilege prudently or properly. Executive privilege became most controversial during the Watergate era and then later on during the Clinton scandal. Regarding President Nixon's actions, Berger explains that "'confidentiality' was the vehicle for the cover-up of criminal acts and conspiracies by his aides, an instrument he repeatedly employed for the obstruction of justice." [244]

Berger's description of governmental secrecy in the Nixon White House is indisputable. Similarly harsh judgments can be made legitimately regarding President Clinton's aggressive use of executive privilege to thwart inquiries from the Office of Independent Counsel.

Nonetheless, it is important not to generalize from the abuses of any particular administration that "secrecy in the operations of government is an abomination." [245] It is no more valid to argue against the legitimate exercise of executive privilege because of the abuses of that power by Presidents Nixon and Clinton than it is to dismiss the legitimate exercise of legislative inquiry because of the abuses of that power by Senator Joseph McCarthy (R-Wis.) in the 1950s.

In certain circumstances, executive privilege is a necessary and proper power that is open to challenge. Like other governmental powers, it may be subject to a balancing test when weighed against demands for information. Presidents should not lightly exercise this power. They should reserve executive privilege for the most compelling reasons--such as protecting certain national security needs or preserving White House confidentiality when it is in the public interest to do so. Executive privilege never should be used to protect an administration from revealing embarrassing or politically damaging information. Past attempts to do so have given executive privilege a bad name. Restoring the good name of executive privilege is ultimately important to the effective discharge of presidential responsibilities.

FOOTNOTES:

REV_00260205

n1 See RAOUL BERGER, EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE: A CONSTITUTIONAL MYTH (1974).

n2 See id. at 5-9.

n3 See id. at 51 (examining the definition of "executive power" in Article II of the U.S. Constitution).

n4 See id. at 12.

n5 See id. ("And we should be slow to import into the words 'executive power' an implication which curtails an established legislative power.").

n6 Id.

n7 War powers and executive agreements are two examples. See id. at 74 (noting that the presidential decision to send "armed forces to repel invasion of Korea or Vietnam" lacked constitutional support).

n8 Creating independent regulatory agencies is an example.

n9 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 35 & n. 124.

n10 HAROLD HONGJU KOH, THE NATIONAL SECURITY CONSTITUTION: SHARING POWER AFTER THE IRAN-CONTRA AFFAIR 4 (1990).

n11 LOUIS HENKIN, CONSTITUTIONALISM, DEMOCRACY, AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS 36 (1990).

n12 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 10 (noting that the "scope of the congressional power . . . can not be diminished by presidential fiat").

n13 2 ASHER C. HINDS, HINDS' PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES 1044 (1907) (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 36-394 (1860)).

n14 See Executive Privilege: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Separation of Powers of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 92d Cong. 245 (1971) (statement of Raoul Berger) [hereinafter Executive Privilege].

n15 U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 3.

n16 Raoul Berger, The Incarnation of Executive Privilege, 22 UCLA L. REV. 16, 17 (1974) [hereinafter Berger, Incarnation].

n17 George C. Calhoun, Confidentiality and Executive Privilege, in THE TETHERED PRESIDENCY: CONGRESSIONAL RESTRAINTS ON EXECUTIVE POWER 173 (Thomas M. Franck ed., 1981).

n18 See Raoul Berger, Executive Privilege vs. Congressional Inquiry, 12 UCLA L. REV. 1043, 1056 (1965) ("The first one in line for interrogation . . . is properly the official himself.") [hereinafter Berger, Congressional Inquiry].

n19 Id. at 1058-60 (citing Coke, 4 Inst. 11; Howard v. Gossett, 10 Q.B. 359, 379-80, 116 Eng. Rep. 139, 147 (1845)).

n20 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 245 (statement of Raoul Berger). Article I, Section 6, clause 1 of the Constitution provides that "for any speech or debate in either House [members] shall not be questioned in any other place." U.S. CONST. art. I, § 6, cl. 1.

REV_00260206

Berger notes that there is no comparable guarantee in Article II against anyone else examining the Executive. See Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 245 (statement of Raoul Berger).

n21 U.S. CONST. art. II, § 4.

n22 3 HINDS, supra note 13, at 183.

n23 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 37.

n24 See id.

n25 Id. at 37 (quoting 2 THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, 158 (Max Farrand ed., 1966)).

n26 See id.

n27 Id. at 38 (quoting U.S. CONST. art. II, § 3).

n28 U.S. CONST. art. II, § 3.

n29 BERGER, supra note 1, at 3.

n30 See id. at 13.

n31 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 278 (statement of Raoul Berger).

n32 See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

n33 See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

n34 See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8.

n35 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 119 (noting the "all but total takeover of foreign relations by the President").

n36 U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2.

n37 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 120-21.

n38 See id. at 122.

n39 See id. at 126-27.

n40 Id. at 127.

n41 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 283 (statement of Raoul Berger).

n42 Id. at 31 (statement of J. William Fulbright).

n43 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 118-21.

n44 See id. at 2 & n.6 (citing W.P. Rogers, Constitutional Law: The Papers of the Executive Branch, 44 A.B.A. J. 941 (1953)).

n45 See Berger, Congressional Inquiry, supra note 18, at 1058-60.

REV_00260207

n46 273 U.S. 135 (1927).

n47 Id. at 161.

n48 See H.R. REP. NO. 97-2, at 35-36 (1981).

n49 See id.

n50 See id.

n51 Id. at 30.

n52 See IRVING L. JANIS, GROUPTHINK 172 (2d ed. 1982).

n53 See id. at 178-86.

n54 See H.R. REP. NO. 97-2 at 40 (1981).

n55 See id.

n56 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 289.

n57 See Berger, Incarnation, supra note 16, at 16 ("The Framers provided for limited secrecy by Congress alone, thereby excluding executive secrecy from the public.").

n58 DAVID WISE, THE POLITICS OF LYING: GOVERNMENT DECEPTION, SECRECY, AND POWER 339 (1973) (quoting President Richard M. Nixon).

n59 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 254.

n60 See id. at 254-55.

n61 See Berger, Incarnation, supra note 16, at 4.

n62 See Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege and the Modern Presidents: In Nixon's Shadow, 83 MINN. L. REV. 1069, 1124-25 (1999) (noting that Clinton's misuse of executive privilege did more to undermine and discredit it than reestablish its legitimacy) [hereinafter Rozell, Nixon's Shadow].

n63 See, e.g., id. at 11, 21, 26-27, 29 (discussing other examples of abuses of executive privilege); Norman Dorsen & Shattuck, Executive Privilege: The President Won't Tell, in NONE OF YOUR BUSINESS: GOVERNMENT SECRECY IN AMERICA, 27-60 (Norman Dorsen & Stephen Gillers eds., 1975) (arguing against "discretionary" executive privilege); Note, Military and State Secrets Privilege, 91 YALE L.J. 570, 579 (1982) (criticizing the use of executive privilege for information of "minimal security value" to counter allegations of misconduct).

n64 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 8 (agreeing with Senator Fulbright's statement that "secrecy and subterfuge are themselves more dangerous to democracy than the practices they conceal").

n65 Berger, Incarnation, supra note 16, at 26.

n66 See id. at 4-5, 24 (noting the corrupt use of government secrecy during the Nixon Administration).

n67 See THE FEDERALIST NOS. 68-77 (Alexander Hamilton).

REV_00260208

n68 See id.

n69 See id. at 50.

n70 See id.

n71 See LOUIS W. KOENIG, THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE 14 (revised ed. 1968).

n72 See id.

n73 See id. at 14-16.

n74 See J.W. PELTASON, CORWIN & PELTASON'S UNDERSTANDING THE CONSTITUTION 9 (10th ed. 1985).

n75 See id.

n76 See id. at 10-11.

n77 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 1-2.

n78 See supra note 57.

n79 See BERGER, supra note 1, at vii-viii.

n80 See THE FEDERALIST NO. 64 (John Jay).

n81 See THE FEDERALIST NO. 64 (John Jay), NO. 70 (Alexander Hamilton).

n82 THE FEDERALIST NO. 64 vol. 2, at 12 (John Jay) (Tudor Publ'g Co. ed. 1937).

n83 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 128-29.

n84 See THE FEDERALIST NO. 64, supra note 82, vol. 2, at 12-13 (John Jay).

n85 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 13.

n86 See THE FEDERALIST NO. 64, supra note 82, vol. 2, at 12-13 (John Jay).

n87 See id.; THE FEDERALIST NO. 75 (Alexander Hamilton) (refuting the belief that the Constitution assigns to the Senate the preeminent role in treaty-making). Hamilton wrote, "To have intrusted the power of making treaties to the Senate alone, would have been to relinquish the benefits of the constitutional agency of the President in the conduct of foreign negotiations." THE FEDERALIST NO. 75, supra note 82, vol. 2, at 82 (Alexander Hamilton).

n88 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 127.

n89 See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1.

n90 See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2.

n91 See MICHAEL FOLEY, THE SILENCE OF CONSTITUTIONS: GAPS, 'ABEYANCES' AND POLITICAL TEMPERAMENT IN THE MAINTENANCE OF GOVERNMENT, at xi-xii (1989).

n92 J.W. PELTASON, CORWIN AND PELTASON'S UNDERSTANDING THE CONSTITUTION 88 (10th ed. 1988).

REV_00260209

potentially undermines a frequently cited justification for executive privilege--that the Executive possesses prerogative powers that are especially compelling in the international realm.

Berger is not alone in rejecting the existence of prerogative powers. For example, Harold Hongju Koh wrote, "The constitutional system of checks and balances is not suspended simply because foreign affairs are at issue." [10] In addition, Louis Henkin agreed that "constitutionalism implies limited government. For our subject, that means that the Constitution should be expounded so that there can be no extraconstitutional government, that, in principle and in effect, no activity of government is exempt from constitutional restraints, not even foreign affairs . . . ." [11] Therefore, by implication, critics argue that executive privilege cannot be legitimate, because to make a claim for its legitimacy would be tantamount to arguing that the Executive has the authority to act without congressional consent or even knowledge.

Furthermore, Berger contends that the President is always accountable to Congress; yet, Congress need not be accountable to the President. [12] An 1860 report of the House of Representatives stated, "The conduct of the President is always subject to the constitutional supervision and judgment of Congress; while he, on the contrary, has no such power over either branch of that body." [13] According to Berger, the Framers recognized the need for secrecy in government and gave that power to Congress. [14] As support, he cites Article I, Section 5(3) of the Constitution: "Each [*544] House shall keep a Journal of its proceedings, and from time to time, publish the same excepting such parts as may in their judgement require secrecy." [15] Because no such mention of secrecy is made in Article II, Berger maintains that "in the Constitution the Framers provided for limited secrecy by Congress alone, thereby excluding executive secrecy from the public." [16]

A former special counsel to the U.S. Attorney General, George C. Calhoun attributes much of the interbranch conflict over executive privilege to the "belief of many in the government that each branch owns the information it develops." [17] According to Berger, Congress possesses not only its own information but also the Executive's. [18] He maintains that the Framers "patently modeled" the U.S. Congress after the British Parliament and thereby made Congress the nation's "Grand Inquest." [19] Consequently, the President has no constitutional authority to resist Congress' demands for information. As Berger explained to the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, "there is no word in the Constitution that expresses any intention whatsoever to curtail the normal attribute of the legislative power . . . [and] there is not a single word in any one of the conventions expressing any intention to curtail the legislative power of investigation." [20]

Berger maintains that the Executive's accountability to Congress also is guaranteed by the Article II, Section 4 provision for impeachment: "The President . . . shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for and Conviction of Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." [21]

To properly conduct an impeachment proceeding, the House of Representatives must have complete access to the executive branch's information. In support of this argument, Berger notes an 1843 House Report, which stated the following: "The House of Representatives has the sole power of impeachment . . . a power which [*545] implies the right of inquiry on the part of the House to the fullest and most unlimited extent." [22] If this interpretation of the House's inquiry power is correct, then the case for executive privilege is weakened. Obviously, the House cannot investigate the Executive if the President can withhold any information that he chooses.

Berger argues that the Article II, Section 3 provision for a presidential delivery to Congress of information on the state of the Union also repudiates executive privilege: "He shall from

n93 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 4.

n94 See Berger, Congressional Inquiry, supra note 18, at 1058-60.

n95 See id.

n96 Id. at 1117.

n97 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 10-11.

n98 James W. Ceaser, In Defense of Separation of Powers, in SEPARATION OF POWERS--DOES IT STILL WORK? 168, 171 (Robert A. Goldwin & Art Kaufman eds., 1986).

n99 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 10-11.

n100 See, e.g., Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178 (1957) (holding invalid a petitioner's conviction for refusing to answer questions as to whether he had known that certain persons were members of the Communist Party).

n101 See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974) (upholding a subpoena directing President Nixon to produce certain tape recordings and documents relating to his conversations with aides and advisers).

n102 U.S. CONST. art. II, § 3.

n103 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 37.

n104 See id.

n105 Berger, Congressional Inquiry, supra note 18, at 1078.

n106 Letter from George Washington to James Madison (May 5, 1789), in 30 THE WRITINGS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON, 1745-1799, at 311 (John Fitzpatrick ed., 1931-1944).

n107 See 3 ANNALS OF CONG. 493 (1792).

n108 Id.

n109 See id.

n110 See Berger, Congressional Inquiry, supra note 18, at 1079.

n111 See id.

n112 1 THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS JEFFERSON, 1760-1775, at 189-90 (Paul Ford ed., 1892).

n113 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 167.

n114 See id.

n115 Abraham Sofaer, Executive Privilege: An Historical Note, 75 COLUM. L. REV. 1319 (1975) (quoting 4 ANNALS OF CONG. 38 (1794)) [hereinafter Sofaer, Executive Privilege].

n116 See id.

n117 See id.

n118 See id.

n119 Id. (quoting Cabinet Opinion, Jan. 28, 1794, in 4 THE WORKS OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON 505-06 (J.C. Hamilton ed., New York, C.S. Francis 1851)).

n120 Id. at 1320 (quoting Letter of William Bradford to President Washington, in 4 THE WORKS OF HAMILTON, supra note 119, at 494-95).

n121 Id. (quoting American State Papers, 1 FOREIGN RELATIONS 329 (1833)).

n122 See id. at 1321.

n123 See id.

n124 Id.; see also Abraham Sofaer, Executive Power and Control Over Information: The Practice Under the Framers, 1977 DUKE L.J. 1, 8 (citing 4 ANNALS OF CONG. 56 (1794)) [hereinafter Sofaer, Executive Power and Control].

n125 See Sofaer, Executive Power and Control, supra note 124, at 8.

n126 See id.

n127 See 5 ANNALS OF CONG. 760-62 (1796).

n128 1A COMPILATION OF THE MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS, 1789-1897, 186-87 (James D. Richardson ed., Washington, Government Printing Office, 1896) [hereinafter COMPILATION].

n129 Id.

n130 See 5 ANNALS OF CONG. 771-72 (1796).

n131 See id. at 771-72.

n132 See id. at 771.

n133 See id. at 773.

n134 Id.

n135 10 THE WORKS OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON 107 (Henry C. Lodge ed., 1904) (1971).

n136 See Sofaer, Executive Power and Control, supra note 124, at 14-15.

n137 See id.

n138 See id. at 15.

n139 See id. at 14-15.

n140 See id. at 16-17.

n141 See THOMAS P. ABERNATHY, THE BURR CONSPIRACY 237 (1954).

n142 16 ANNALS OF CONG. 336 (1807).

REV_00260211

n143 COMPILATION, supra note 128, at 400.

n144 Letter from Thomas Jefferson to George Hay (June 12, 1807), in 9 THE WRITINGS OF JEFFERSON, supra note 112, at 55.

n145 See Sofaer, Executive Privilege, supra note 115, at 19-24.

n146 See id.

n147 See id. at 28-45.

n148 8 COMPILATION OF REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS, U.S. SENATE, 1789-1901, Doc. No. 56-231, at 24 (1901).

n149 See, e.g., Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986) (holding that powers vested in the Comptroller General under a legislative provision violated the Constitution's command that Congress play no direct role in the execution of the laws); Immigration and Naturalization Serv. v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983) (striking down a congressional veto provision that operated to overrule the Attorney General and mandate deportation of an alien).

n150 See Chicago and S. Airlines v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 111 (1948) (holding that final orders regarding a citizen carriers' application to engage in overseas and foreign air transportation embody presidential discretion beyond the competence of the courts to adjudicate).

n151 See 50 U.S.C. § 401 (1994).

n152 See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 708 (1974).

n153 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 353 (statement of Averell Harriman).

n154 Id. at 320-21 (statement of William P. Bundy).

n155 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n156 Id. at 705-06, 708.

n157 Federal Open Mkt. Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340, 360 (1979).

n158 See Nixon, 483 U.S. at 709-13.

n159 See, e.g., Wilkinson v. United States, 365 U.S. 399 (1961) (upholding a conviction for not admitting before Congress to being a member of the Communist party); Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178 (1957) (reversing a conviction for the giving of information about members of the Communist Party).

n160 See, e.g., Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 263 (1929) (upholding the conviction of a witness who refused to testify before a committee); McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135 (1927) (holding that the authority of Congress to require pertinent disclosures in aid of its own constitutional power is not abridged because the information also may be of use in pending legal suits).

n161 See Senate Select Comm. on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 731 (1974) ("The sufficiency of the Committee's showing must depend solely on whether the subpoenaed evidence is demonstrably critical to the responsible fulfillment of the Committee's functions.").

n162 See id.

n163 Nonetheless, as Louis Fisher observes, the courts consistently have ruled that the congressional power of investigation is available, even for pursuit down "blind alleys." See LOUIS FISHER, CONSTITUTIONAL CONFLICTS BETWEEN CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT 187 (4th ed. 1997); see also Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491 (1975) (holding that congressional inquiry into activities of respondent organization to determine whether they were potentially harmful to the morale of the U.S. Armed Forces was within the legitimate legislative sphere). In a balancing test between a seemingly strong presidential claim to executive privilege and a blind congressional pursuit, the inquiry power of Congress may have to yield to the executive branch.

n164 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 4.

n165 H.R. REP. NO. 97-968, at 83 n.1 (1982). For a classic study of secrecy and legislative inquiry, see Irving Younger, Congressional Investigations and Executive Secrecy: A Study in the Separation of Powers, 20 U. PITT. L. REV. 755-84 (1959).

n166 See Todd D. Peterson, Prosecuting Executive Branch Officials for Contempt of Congress, 66 N.Y.U. L. REV. 563, 617 (1991).

n167 See Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 612 (1972).

n168 See id. at 612

n169 See id. at 615.

n170 DAVID M. O'BRIEN, STORM CENTER: THE SUPREME COURT IN AMERICAN POLITICS 150 (2d ed. 1990).

n171 Id. at 150-51.

n172 See Nixon v. Sirica, 487 F.2d 700, 738-40 (1973) (Mackinnon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (summarizing Congress's claim of "absolute privilege to decide itself whether its members or employees should respond to subpoenas").

n173 See id. at 740.

n174 See Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1080 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (Wilkey, J., concurring).

n175 Calhoun, supra note 17, at 174.

n176 See Rozell, Nixon's Shadow, supra note 62, at 1072-94.

n177 See id. at 1094-103.

n178 See id. at 1103-18.

n179 See id. at 1118-26.

n180 The phrase "Constitutional Myth" was coined by Raoul Berger. See BERGER, supra note 1, at 1.

n181 See Peterson, supra note 166, at 613.

n182 See Berger, Incarnation, supra note 16, at 4.

n183 Id. at 29.

n184 Id.

n185 See Rozell, Nixon's Shadow, supra note 62 at 1077.

n186 See 1 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 65-74, 88 (comments of Senator J. William Fulbright).

n187 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 14.

n188 See Ceaser, supra note 98, at 190.

n189 See supra Pts. I-II.

n190 Brief of Richard M. Nixon in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, Senate Select Comm. on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 366 F. Supp. 51 (D.D.C. 1973) (No. 1593-73) in 9 WEEKLY COMP. PRES. DOC. 1174, 1179 (Sept. 24, 1973).

n191 487 F.2d 700 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

n192 Id. at 742.

n193 LOUIS W. KOENIG, THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE 11 (5th ed. 1986).

n194 See MARK J. ROZELL, EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE: THE DILEMMA OF SECRECY AND DEMOCRATIC ACCOUNTABILITY 32-42 (1994) [hereinafter ROZELL, DILEMMA OF SECRECY].

n195 See id. at 25-32.

n196 L. Peter Schultz, The Separation of Powers and Foreign Affairs, in SEPARATION OF POWERS, supra note 98, at 118, 119.

n197 See, e.g., James Hamilton & John C. Grabow, A Legislative Proposal for Resolving Executive Privilege Disputes Precipitated by Congressional Subpoenas, 22 HARV. J. ON LEGIS. 145 (1984).

n198 Letter from Edward Levi to Vice President Nelson Rockefeller (June 13, 1975) (on file with author).

n199 See LOUIS FISHER, THE POLITICS OF SHARED POWER: CONGRESS AND THE EXECUTIVE 72 (4th ed. 1998).

n200 See id.

n201 See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8.

n202 See 2 U.S.C. § 190 (2000).

n203 See ROZELL, DILEMMA OF SECRECY, supra note 194, at 108-41.

n204 See U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 2.

n205 See EMILY FIELD VAN TASSEL & PAUL FINKELMAN, IMPEACHABLE OFFENSES 274 (1999).

n206 See id.

n207 See FISHER, supra note 199, at 15-18 (noting the failed assertions of executive privilege by Presidents Reagan and Clinton).

N208 Sotirios A. Barber, The Supreme Court and Congress's Responsibilities in Foreign Affairs, in TAKING THE CONSTITUTION SERIOUSLY: ESSAYS ON THE CONSTITUTION AND CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 231 (Gary L. McDowell ed., 1981).

n209 See id. at 233.

n210 J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, THE ARROGANCE OF POWER 46 (1966).

n211 See KOENIG, supra note 193, at 11-12.

n212 Letter from William French Smith to Rep. John D. Dingell (Nov. 30, 1982) cited in STAFF OF HOUSE COMM. ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSP., 97TH CONG., REPORT ON CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS 77, 79 (Comm. Print 1982); see also supra note 29.

n213 U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2.

n214 Executive Privilege, supra note 14, at 434 (statement of Justice William Rehnquist).

n215 See supra notes 3-29 and accompanying text.

n216 See, e.g., New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713, 727-30 (1971) (Stewart, J., concurring) (upholding the denial of an injunction the United States government sought against the publication by the NEW YORK TIMES of the contents of a classified study entitled History of U. S. Decision-Making Process on Viet Nam Policy); Chicago & S. Air Lines v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 111 (1948) (holding that the Civil Aeronautics Act, which provides that orders of the Civil Aeronautics Board that grant or deny applications by citizens to engage in overseas and foreign air transportation, which are subject to the approval of the President, creates an implied exception to the provision of the Act for the judicial review of the Board's orders other than those "in respect of any foreign air carrier subject to the approval of the President."); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 453-55 (1939) (upholding a judgment of the Supreme Court of Kansas denying a writ of mandamus, applied for in that court by senators of the State and members of its house of representatives for the purpose of compelling the Secretary of the Senate to erase an endorsement purporting to show that a resolution for the ratification of a proposal to amend the federal Constitution had passed the Senate, and to restrain the officers of the Senate and the other house of the legislature from signing the resolution and the Secretary of State of Kansas from authenticating it and delivering it to the Governor); Oetjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U.S. 297, 302 (1918) (holding that the seizure and sale in Mexico, as a military contribution, of property at the time owned and in the possession of a Mexican citizen, by a duly commissioned military commander of what must be accepted by the courts as the legitimate government of Mexico, in the progress of a revolution, and when conducting active independent operations, is not subject to reexamination or modification by a court of the United States in an action of replevin involving the title to such property); Holtzman v. Schlesinger, 484 F.2d 1307, 1309-10 (2d Cir. 1973) (deciding the court had no power to decide on the authorization of Congress to enter into a conflict in Cambodia); Crockett v. Reagan, 558 F. Supp. 893 (D.D.C. 1982) (refusing to grant an injunction to stop military aid to El Salvador); United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. v. Reagan, 557 F. Supp. 61, 65-66 (D.D.C. 1982) (refusing to rule on the constitutionality of Executive Order 12333, which established the framework in which American governmental and military agencies are to effectuate the process of gathering foreign intelligence and counterintelligence information, and the manner in which intelligence-gathering functions would be conducted at home and abroad, on the grounds that it is a political question); Atlee v. Laird, 347 F. Supp. 689, 703 (E.D. Pa. 1972), aff'd without opinion, 411 U.S. 421 (1973) (refusing to rule on the question of the power of the President to wage a "war" in Southeast Asia).

n217 Louis Fisher, War Powers: The Need for Collective Judgment, in DIVIDED DEMOCRACY: COOPERATION AND CONFLICT BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS 199, 215 (James A. Thurber ed., 1991).

n218 United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 706 (1974).

n219 See id. at 706, 710.

n220 See id. at 707.

n221 Id. at 713.

n222 See, e.g., United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 567 F.2d 121, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1977); United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 551 F.2d 384, 394 (D.C. Cir. 1976); Senate Select Comm. on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 728-29 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

n223 See Nixon, 418 U.S. at 706.

n224 See, e.g., Farnsworth Cannon, Inc. v. Grimes, 635 F.2d 268, 275-76 (4th Cir. 1980) (suggesting that the parties waive a jury trial in favor of an in camera disposition of a tort action involving sensitive naval documents); United States v. Boyce, 594 F.2d 1246, 1252 (9th Cir. 1979) (examining classified materials in camera to determine if they contained exculpatory evidence useful to accused spy Christopher Boyce); United States v. Lyon, 567 F.2d 777, 783 (8th Cir. 1977) (examining in camera the testimony of two C.I.A. representatives made under oath); Nixon v. Sirica, 487 F.2d 700, 707-08 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (holding that the in camera examination of presidential tape recordings was "necessary and appropriate" to identify relevant evidence); United States v. Jolliff, 548 F. Supp. 229, 231-32 (D. Md. 1981) (noting the strong legal precedent supporting in camera examinations of confidential evidence).

n225 See, e.g., Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, Inc. v. Seaborg, 463 F.2d 788, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (upholding a conservation group's discovery request for nuclear testing information after the redacting of military and diplomatic statements); Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958) (holding that a document concerning an advisory opinion of a subordinate to an agency head was privileged).

n226 25 F. Cas. 187 (1807).

n227 Id. at 190, 191-92.

n228 See ROZELL, DILEMMA OF SECRECY, supra note 194, at 134-35.

n229 See Rozell, Nixon's Shadow, supra note 62, at 1069-126.

n230 See TERRY EASTLAND, ENERGY IN THE EXECUTIVE: THE CASE FOR A STRONG PRESIDENCY (1992) (arguing for a strong presidency in order to achieve what the constitutional Framers saw as good government); THE FETTERED PRESIDENCY: LEGAL CONSTRAINTS ON THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH (L. Gordon Crovitz & Jeremy A. Rabkin eds., 1989) (compiling essays critical of legislative intrusions on executive powers); The Imperial Congress (Gordon S. Jones & John A. Marini eds., 1988) (compiling essays that recall the original purposes of the separation of powers, how it has been undermined, and ways to restore it).

n231 See FOLEY, supra note 91, at 77.

n232 Id. at xi.

n233 Id. at 76.

n234 See BERGER, supra note 1, at 58 (finding that a president's powers are only those strictly enumerated by the founding fathers, and that "lacking an 'enumerated' power, action is illegal").

n235 Ceaser, supra note 98, at 176.

n236 Id.

n237 See ROZELL, DILEMMA OF SECRECY, supra note 194, at 83-141.

n238 See id. at 85-89, 97-101.

n239 Memorandum from President Regan to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Procedures Governing Responses to Congressional Requests for Information (Nov. 4, 1982) (on file with author).

n240 See ROZELL, DILEMMA OF SECRECY, supra note 194, at 110-11, 124-26.

n241 See id. at 126-40.

n242 Memorandum from Lloyd Cutler to All Executive Department and Agency General Counsels (Sept. 28, 1994) (on file with author).

n243 See Rozell, Nixon's Shadow, supra note 62, at 1069-126.

n244 Berger, Incarnation, supra note 16, at 29.

n245 Id.

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, February 10, 2001 - 5:42 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." [23]

Berger believes that this constitutional duty of presidents is yet another measure of Congress' absolute power of inquiry. [24] The original provision presented at the Constitutional Convention allowed the President little discretion in determining the kind of information he could exclude from a congressional inquiry. In the rejected version, the Framers established "his duty to inform the Legislature of the Condition of the U.S. so far as may respect his Department." [25] The final, adopted version, Berger believes, did not limit the President's duty to supply Congress with information. [26] In fact, the President's duty to provide information "'from time to time,'" according to Berger, "is the reciprocal of the familiar legislative power to inquire." [27]

Finally, Berger cites the Article II, Section 3 provision that the President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed" [28] as evidence that the Executive must be accountable to the legislative branch. He asks, "Who has a more legitimate interest in inquiring whether a law has been faithfully executed than the lawmaker?" [29] Executive privilege remains dubious if Congress has an absolute, unlimited power of inquiry.

A. The Framers' Fear of Tyranny

Fearing that a strong Executive might at some time be transformed into a tyrannical ruler, the Framers sought to devise a governmental system of limited powers. Given the colonial experiences with the abuses of power by King George III, the Framers were determined that the American constitutional system should preempt [*546] the possibility of ever having an arbitrary and tyrannical Executive. [30] The Framers also made the Legislature the supreme lawmaking branch. In his statement to the Senate Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, Berger noted that James Madison, the chief constitutional architect, explained, "'In republican government, the legislative authority necessarily predominates.'" [31]

According to this view, the Framers so feared executive power that they made the Legislature the supreme branch of government in all policy areas, even in foreign affairs. Specifically, the Constitution grants to the President two exclusive powers: to receive ambassadors and to act as Commander in Chief of the armed forces. [32] The President must share with the Senate the treaty-making power as well as the power to appoint ambassadors. [33] Congress possesses such formidable powers as declaring war and regulating commerce. [34] Berger maintains that the President cannot be the director of foreign policy and that the reality of executive preeminence in that area is due to a gradual presidential usurpation of power. [35]

According to Berger, a telling example of presidential usurpation of congressional authority is the treaty-making power. He cites the provision of Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution that states, "He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties," [36] to substantiate the argument that presidents have been acting unconstitutionally. [37]

The Senate, according to Berger, has the right to participate in the negotiation and formulation of treaties, as well as in their ratification. [38] From his study of the Constitutional Convention, Berger concludes that the Framers intended the treaty-making power to have belonged to the Senate. [39] "It was the President . . . who was finally made a participant in the treaty-making process, which had been initially lodged--after the pattern of the Continental Congress--in the Senate alone." [40] Berger believes there is no presidential privilege to withhold information on the development of treaties and he explained his position in the following manner to a congressional committee:

REV_00260184

> [*547] How can you help "make" a treaty if you don't know a thing about how it is being negotiated? How can the Senate "advise" as to the "making" of a treaty if it is kept in the dark? That doesn't mean that you have to play strip poker in full view of the public. The alternative to operation in a gold fish bowl is not necessarily a darkroom. [41]

Despite the Framers' fear of a tyrannical Executive and notwithstanding their efforts to constrain presidential power, even in foreign policy, the ascendance of the President in foreign policymaking has become widely accepted. Nonetheless, echoing an argument by Berger, former Senator J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) once countered, "Usurpation is not legitimized simply by repetition, nor is a valid power nullified by failure to exercise it." [42] Berger maintains that presidents have usurped such authority, in contravention of the constitutional scheme. [43] In essence, he argues that the Framers--who sought to limit and control executive authority--could not have possibly accepted such a broad-based, independent power as the right to withhold information. He asserts that, logically, a Chief Executive who is subservient to the will of the Legislature has no such right.

B. The "Right" and the Need to Know

In a democratic society, a premium is placed on the values of open government and freedom of information. For our democracy to properly function, both Congress and the public must be fully informed of the activities of the Executive Branch. [44] Congress must have adequate information to carry out its primary functions and a well-informed citizenry cannot be kept in the dark about its government's actions.

The executive branch is an essential source of information for Congress. In order to best know how to appropriate funds for the military and assistance to foreign governments, to oversee the bureaucracy, and to review treaties and executive agreements, Congress needs access to executive branch information. Without adequate information, members of Congress are unable to weigh alternatives, to estimate costs and benefits, and to develop strategies to improve government policies. Congress often must rely on executive branch information to determine whether public policies are being executed faithfully. For Berger, Congress, the "Grand Inquest" of the nation, can never legitimately be denied access to executive branch information. [45] Berger looks to constitutional support for this view, including one [*548] leading Supreme Court case, McGrain v. Daugherty. [46] In McGrain, Justice Willis Van Devanter offered the following judgment:

> In actual legislative practice power to secure needed information by such [investigative] means has long been treated as an attribute of the power to legislate. It was so regarded in the British Parliament and in the Colonial legislatures before the American Revolution . . . . [47]

From this perspective, congressional access to executive branch information not only is a practical necessity, but is legally required. In Berger's view, the executive branch never really loses "control" over information because it does not own that information.

Members of Congress reasonably maintain that executive branch information not only must be available, but also must be received in a timely fashion. [48] Most legislators want timely information so that they can play a substantive role in the early stages of decision-making. [49] To be precise, they prefer being "consulted" to merely being "informed." [50] Divulging previously withheld information after a decision has been made does little to advance

REV_00260185

Congress's role in the policy process. A 1981 House of Representatives Report on Congress and foreign policymaking stated the dilemma well: "Unless consultation is timely, it loses a good deal of its impact and 'effective' relations are of only symbolic value." [51]

A strong argument against executive privilege is that decision-makers benefit from exposure to numerous viewpoints. Irving Janis' classic study, Groupthink, shows that, from a policymaker's perspective, it is important to avoid conformity, to seek out different opinions, and to resist isolation from outside opinions. [52] Janis illustrates the disastrous consequences of decisions made by like-minded groups of individuals who resisted different points of view. [53] Consequently, an Executive may withhold information at his peril from people whom he knew would disagree with his position. Members of Congress believe they are particularly well-situated to provide the Executive with diverse opinions.

The 1981 House Report on Congress and foreign policy also noted an important obstacle to the Executive seeking out diverging viewpoints: a lack of trust in Congress. The Report quoted a White House official who agreed that presidents need [*549] constructive advice from members of Congress. [54] Yet, the Executive instead often keeps secrets because "even when the President has stressed the sensitivity of an issue Members of Congress have walked outside and talked to the press on the White House grounds." [55]

Berger disputes the fears of public disclosure of sensitive information. [56] Moreover, he argues that the public has a right to know everything about the operations of the executive branch in a democratic system of government. [57] Executive privilege can only hinder the free flow of information and ideas.

Executive privilege indeed appears difficult to accommodate in a government based on accountability. It is dubious to assume that executive branch officials can be held accountable for their actions when the public and Congress do not know what these officials are doing.

Perhaps most ironic is the following quotation from former President Richard M. Nixon, made just three months prior to the Watergate break-in: "'When information which properly belongs to the public is systematically withheld by those in power, the people soon become ignorant of their own affairs, distrustful of those who manage them, and--eventually--incapable of determining their own destinies.'" [58]

C. Misuses of the Privilege

Presidents and their staffs have invoked executive privilege to cover-up illegal or unethical governmental activities. They have used executive privilege to hide embarrassing information or to maintain an advantage in policy debates with congressional opponents.

Concerns about government misuse of executive privilege are certainly wellfounded. Indeed, there are numerous examples of executive branch officials concealing information of minimal security value to cover-up governmental misconduct. For example, during the Nixon administration, President Nixon refused to allow certain aides to testify when called to appear before congressional committees. [59] The President attempted to use executive privilege to conceal wrongdoing by members of his administration. [60] He believed that he had an absolute [*550] power of executive privilege--one that could be claimed on behalf of the entire executive branch of government. [61]

More recently, President Clinton has made extensive use of executive privilege in circumstances that do not warrant the exercise of that power. His attempts to resist legitimate inquiries from the Office of Independent Counsel by using executive privilege gave additional ammunition to critics who charge that such a presidential power naturally leads to abuses. [62]

REV_00260186

Given these abuses of executive privilege, it is no wonder that critics such as Berger perceive any such claim of that presidential power as suspect. [63] For many critics of executive privilege, the evils of nondisclosure clearly outweigh any potential evil that may result from executive disclosure of sensitive information. [64] For those who accept the need for a balancing test, their scale always tips decisively in favor of candor and openness. In Berger's opinion, there is no need for a balancing test because executive privilege always is illegitimate. He argues, "Against the debatable assumption that fear of disclosure to Congress may inhibit 'candid interchange' and impair administration, there is the proven fact that such exchanges have time and again served as the vehicles of corruption and malversation . . . ." [65]

II. A RESPONSE TO BERGER

Berger maintains that government secrecy is undemocratic and leads to abuses of power. [66] Nonetheless, the weight of the evidence in many instances tilts in favor of executive privilege. Berger's detailed presentation is impressive; yet, he clearly overstates his case. For example, although the Framers wanted to preserve liberty by [*551] limiting power, they never set out to cripple executive power. [67] Any power can be used for either good or bad purposes. The Framers devised institutional mechanisms to avoid the abuse of power, but they never intended to destroy executive power altogether as a means of protecting liberty. [68]

When exercised under the appropriate circumstances, executive privilege has clear constitutional, political, and historical underpinnings. The American separation of powers system provides for executive privilege, but not without limitations. Executive privilege is legitimate when exercised for necessary and compelling reasons. The exercise of that power is always open to challenge by those with compulsory power. Many claims of executive privilege fail the balancing test because, in a democratic system, the presumption generally should be in favor of openness. Unfortunately, one defense of executive privilege is based on the false claim that this power is an absolute, unlimited prerogative. This claim is as misguided as the belief that the Framers rejected for all times and under all circumstances any such exercise of presidential power.

A. The Constitutional Period

Berger points to the Framers' fear of tyranny as proof that the Constitution provides for a subordinate executive power. [69] He identifies the colonial experiences under King George III as the key points of reference for the Framers in creating the executive power. [70]

The argument that the Framers sought to devise a weak Executive because of their experience under King George's rule neglects the true point of reference for these Constitution-makers--their governing experiences under the Articles of Confederation. During that period, most of the states had extraordinarily weak governors with terms of office as brief as six months or one year, no power to reelect the incumbent, and no powers independent of the state legislatures. [71] The most telling exception was New York, which had an independent executive with full administrative powers, a three-year term, and unlimited eligibility for reelection. [72] Of the state governments during the Articles of Confederation, New York could claim the most efficient, competent administration. [73]

At the national level, no single executive existed under the Articles of Confederation. [74] The Continental Congress, a deliberative assembly, had authority [*552] for governing the separate states. [75] The failures of governance under this system precipitated the 1787 Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, where the Framers set forth a new governing plan. Because of the inability of the separate sovereign states to raise a national militia, to carry out interstate commerce, and to conduct a coherent foreign policy, the Framers established a new constitutional system, which included an independent, single-member Executive with substantial powers. [76]

Contrary to Berger, that executive privilege is mentioned nowhere in the Constitution does not preclude the exercise of that power. Recall his interpretation that Article I, Section 5, clause 3 of the Constitution provides for an exclusive legislative privilege to keep secrets. [77] No comparable provision exists in Article II, leading Berger to conclude that the Framers intentionally excluded the President from exercising secrecy. [78]

This narrow reading of the Constitution is not credible. First, this raises the question of how Berger can oppose executive privilege because of the lack of an explicit grant in the Constitution and yet favor the congressional power of inquiry, which also is nowhere mentioned in the document. In practice, both the executive and the legislative branches exercise a vast array of powers not expressly provided in the Constitution.

Second, Berger claims that the fact that the phrase "executive privilege" did not exist until 1958 means that such a presidential power cannot be grounded in our constitutional scheme. [79] This argument fails, however, because all presidents going back to George Washington have practiced what we today call "executive privilege." Whether that phrase was a part of the common language at a particular time is irrelevant. The logic of Berger's argument would lead to the rejection of judicial review, congressional investigations, and many other legitimate powers.

Third, judging from the writings of the leading Framers who frequently stressed the needs for "secrecy" and "despatch" in government, [80] it is hard to imagine that these same people believed that secrecy was so evil that it had to be excluded from the executive article. The Framers understood secrecy as so obvious an executive power--and a judicial one as well--that there was no need for a specific grant of that power in the Constitution. Perhaps, the Framers specified such a grant of power in Article I because secrecy could not be assumed to have resided in a legislature. Several selections from the Federalist Papers indeed support executive branch secrecy. [81]

[*553] Furthermore, Federalist No. 64 [82] contradicts Berger's interpretation of the Senate's role in treaties. From the Article II, Section 2 "Advice and Consent" Clause, Berger concludes that the Framers precluded the exercise of executive privilege because the Senate cannot give advice on matters over which it is not informed. [83] John Jay maintained that there are circumstances under which a President may have to resort to secret measures in treaty-making. [84] Berger assigns the Senate the preeminent role in treaty-making. [85] Jay portrayed the President and Senate as making substantial contributions of their own based on their particular institutional strengths. [86]

Nonetheless, a President who includes the Senate in the negotiation stage acts prudently; otherwise, he threatens rejection of the treaty. Still, to suggest that presidents should involve the Senate at each stage of the treaty-making process is not to conclude that such action is required in every case. There are occasions when presidents must deliberate with foreign leaders in secret over the development of treaties. Executive privilege may support the exercise of such secretive negotiations in certain circumstances. [87] Refusing a Senate request for information on the development of a treaty may be exceptional and it may be imprudent in most cases; but notwithstanding the latter, such a refusal is not illegal.

Central to Berger's argument is the view that the Framers made Congress preeminent in foreign policymaking. [88] He asserts that, logically, the subordinate branch of government cannot keep secrets from the preeminent one. The evidence, however, supports a different view. The key members of the Committee of Style at the Constitutional Convention--

Alexander Hamilton, Rufus King, and Governeur Morris--shaped the language of Article II to allow the Executive to exercise vast powers. The Vesting Clause, [89] the lack of any enumeration of duties in the Commander in Chief Clause, [90] and many silences about such powers as war, diplomatic powers, and control over executive departments all left the President with a vast reserve of unspecified authority. Michael Foley explains that the U.S. Constitution contains many such silences--what he calls "constitutional [*554] abeyances"--that allow for the discretionary exercise of authority according to circumstances. [91] Jack W. Peltason writes that Article II "gives the President a power that has never been defined or enumerated and, in fact, cannot be defined since its scope depends largely upon circumstances." [92]

In Berger's view, in a system based on legislative supremacy, there is no constitutional basis for executive privilege. Recall that he cites the Article II, Section 4 provision for impeachment as proof of this position. [93] Berger believes that the Framers "patently modeled" the U.S. Congress after the British Parliament. [94] He points out that, historically, both the colonial legislatures and the British Parliament were able to compel disclosure of executive information. [95] For Berger, "History, the traditional index of constitutional construction, discloses that a sweeping power of legislative inquiry had been exercised by Parliament and by the colonial legislatures." [96] Berger concludes that Congress must have the same limitless power of inquiry as entrusted to the British Parliament. [97]

The problem is that Berger equates the power of the Executive in a presidential system with that of a parliamentary system. Yet, as James W. Ceaser writes, "Under a presidential system the essential executive force is never extinguished or in doubt; under a parliamentary system the executive force cannot be guaranteed (and in practice has not been)." [98]

Berger's argument rests upon the belief that the power of inquiry in a governmental system based on the separation of powers is as unquestioned and extensive as the power of inquiry in a system that rejects the concept of separation of powers. [99] A system of separated powers by its nature does not elevate one branch to supreme status. The Supreme Court has ruled that the congressional power of inquiry has limits. [100] The Court also has determined that, in cases of inquiry into possible criminal actions, the Executive has to release pertinent information. [101] [*555] Congress does not possess a complete, unlimited power of inquiry. Neither does the Executive possess an unfettered power to withhold any and all information from Congress.

Congress certainly has a very strong claim to any germane executive branch information in cases of impeachment and investigations into executive branch corruption. That the presumption is strongly in favor of Congress' demands for information in those circumstances does not bolster Berger's argument that the legislative power of inquiry is therefore absolute. It means merely that the balancing test shifts decisively in Congress's favor.

Berger's interpretation of Article II, Section 3, of the Constitution--"He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient" [102] --is misleading. Referring to the original version proposed at the Constitutional Convention--rather than the just-recited adopted version--Berger argues that the Framers intended to limit the discretion of the President to present information in the State of the Union address. [103] Therefore, Berger's argument rests on the assumption that historians should look primarily to the original provision for Article II, Section 3, introduced at the Convention, to understand the meaning of that provision in its adopted form. [104] The adopted version means the opposite of what Berger suggests. In practice, presidents have used the State of the Union address to present information that they wanted to reveal to Congress, not information that Congress compelled them to present.

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)

*8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 583, **

Copyright (c) 2000 Publications Council of the College of William and Mary
William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal

April, 2000

8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 583

LENGTH: 29995 words

SYMPOSIUM: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND THE CLINTON PRESIDENCY: INVOKING EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE: NAVIGATING TICKLISH POLITICAL WATERS

Louis Fisher*

999 *Senior Specialist in Separation of Powers, Congressional Research Service, The Library of Congress. B.S., 1956, College of William and Mary; Ph.D., 1967, the New School for Social Research. The author appreciates valuable comments on this article by Harold Relyea, Mort Rosenberg, and Mark Rozell.

SUMMARY:
... In support of his argument, he points to early precedents set during the Washington Administration and to congressional leverage over the executive branch. ... [257] At various points, the memorandum cites Garfinkel for the proposition that Congress cannot "divest the President of his control over national security information in the Executive Branch by vesting lower-ranking personnel in that Branch with a 'right' to furnish such information to a Member of Congress without receiving official authorization to do so. ... [262] From Egan he extracted a sentence-"'The authority to protect such [national security] information falls on the President as head of the Executive Branch and as Commander in Chief"" -without acknowledgi[g] that Egan was decided on statutory, not constitutional, grounds. ...

TEXT:
[*583]

In this Article, Louis Fisher acknowledges the constitutional legitimacy of executive privilege, but he argues that legal and political limits render the scope of the privilege narrower than what is commonly believed. In support of his argument, he points to early precedents set during the Washington Administration and to congressional leverage over the executive branch. Though he recognizes the executive branch's interest in ensuring that information is disclosed through authorized channels and its concern about disclosures of information that may embarrass the administration or one of its agency's, he asserts that there is no legal or constitutional justification for concealing such information. Dr. Fisher further argues that Congress' need for information to govern supports an investigatory power that trumps the executive branch's claim to exclusive control of information in national security and foreign affairs cases.

REV_00260218

II. Using Congressional Leverage

Exquisite legal and constitutional arguments may have to play second fiddle to the political leverage that Congress can exert when it wants. As mentioned previously, this may involve the simple act of having to appropriate funds to implement a treaty, thus elevating the House to equal partnership with the Senate. Either house may decide to roll out heavy artillery to get the administration's attention by unleashing the impeachment power or holding an executive official in contempt of Congress. On other occasions, the administration may agree reluctantly to release sensitive papers and documents because that is the only way to jump-start the confirmation process. [95]

A. The Impeachment Power

When President Washington denied the House the papers it requested regarding the Jay Treaty, he said that the only ground on which the House might have [*596] legitimately requested the documents was impeachment, "which the resolution has not expressed." [96] Presumably, if Congress had requested the documents on that basis, Washington would have acquiesced. The power of impeachment, said President Polk, gives to the House of Representatives:

the right to investigate the conduct of all publicofficers under the Government. This is cheerfully admitted. In such a case the safety of the Republic would be the supreme law, and the power of the House in the pursuit of this object would penetrate into the most secret recesses of the Executive Departments. It could command the attendance of any and every agent of the Government, and compel them to produce all papers, public or private, official or unofficial, and to testify on oath to all facts within their knowledge. [97]

Even short of impeachment, the exercise of executive privilege is inappropriate when there are serious charges of administrative malfeasance. President Jackson, a zealous defender of executive prerogatives, told Congress that if it could:

point to any case where there is the slightest reason to suspect corruption or abuse of trust, no obstacle which I can remove shall be interposed to prevent the fullest scrutiny by all legal means. The offices of all the departments will be opened to you, and every proper facility furnished for this purpose. [98]

The Supreme Court has noted that the power of Congress to conduct investigations "comprehends probes into departments of the Federal Government to expose corruption, inefficiency or waste." [99]

REV_00260227

While defending a broad theory of executive privilege, Attorney General William French Smith admitted in 1982 that he would not try "to shield documents [from Congress] which contain evidence of criminal or unethical conduct by agency officials from proper review." [100] During a news conference in 1983, President Ronald Reagan said, "[W]e will never invoke executive privilege to cover up wrongdoing." [101] It would not be the first time. After the Iran-Contra story broke in November 1986, [*597] President Reagan permitted his two former national security advisers, Robert McFarlane and John Poindexter, to testify before Congress, [102] allowed his Cabinet officials, including Secretary of State George Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, to discuss with Congress their conversations with the President, [103] and made available to Congress thousands of sensitive, classified documents. [104] The purpose of this extraordinary cooperation was to forestall any possibility of an impeachment effort. [105]

B. The Contempt Power

When executive officials refuse to comply with a congressional request for information, the contempt power may be used asan instrument of legislative coercion. In 1975, Congress clashed with the executive branch over reports compiled by the Department of Commerce identifying U.S. companies that had been asked to join the Arab boycott of Israel. [106] Commerce Secretary Rogers Morton initially refused to comply with a subpoena from a House Interstate and Foreign Commerce subcommittee, but the prospect of contempt proceedings was sufficient incentive for him to release the material to the subcommittee. [107]

In 1980, President Carter threatened to withhold documents concerning his oil import fee. After a subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee voted to hold Energy Secretary Charles W. Duncan, Jr., in contempt of Congress for refusing to produce the documents, Duncan bowed to the congressional will. [108] White House Senior Associate Counsel Douglas B. Huron said that he did not think that executive privilege ever was asserted formally, although the White House considered it. [109] In any event, the subcommittee received the material it wanted.

In 1982, the House actually voted to hold in contempt Anne (Gorsuch) Burford, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), when she refused to [*598] release certain documents. [110] The House Public Works Committee, seeking documents on the EPA's enforcement of the "Superfund" program, was advised by the agency that there would be no objection "so long as the confidentiality of the information in those files was maintained." [111] Shortly thereafter, the Reagan Administration decided that Congress could not see, under any circumstances, documents in active litigation files. [112] A memorandum from President Reagan to Gorsuch claimed that the documents in question represented "internal deliberative materials containing enforcement strategy and statements of the Government's position on various legal issues which may be raised in enforcement actions relative to the various hazardous waste sites" by the EPA or the Justice Department. [113] Accepting that position, congressional oversight would have to be put on hold for years until the government completed its enforcement and litigation actions.

REV_00260228

After the committee held Gorsuch in contempt, the House of Representatives voted 259 to 105 to support the contempt citation. [114] To create the top-heavy majority, 55 Republicans joined 204 Democrats. [115] After the matter had a short detour to court, the Administration eventually agreed to release "enforcement sensitive" documents to Congress. [116] Although the legislative branch eventually prevailed, [117] the litigation highlighted a serious weakness of the contempt process. If the President opposes the release of documents to Congress, there is little likelihood that the Justice Department will vigorously prosecute someone in the administration who is doing the President's bidding. At the very least, the ability of the administration to take the matter to court will delay the delivery of documents to Congress. [118]

In 1995, the House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight began a detailed inquiry into the firing of seven Travel Office employees at the Clinton White House. [119] After the President invoked executive privilege to keep documents from the committee, it voted 27 to 19 to hold White House Counsel Jack Quinn in contempt. [120] [*599] Before the contempt citation could be taken to the floor, the disputed documents were released to the committee. [121]

C. The Appointment Power

Until the President submits the name of a nominee to the Senate, Congress has no grounds for gaining access to the files relating to the individual's employment with the government. Requests for personnel and medical files might be regarded by the President as unwarranted intrusions into personal privacy. President Grover Cleveland once withheld from the Senate various papers and documents that pertained to a suspended official. The power to remove, he said, was solely an executive prerogative and could not be shared or compromised with the Senate. [122]

If the President, on the other hand, is trying to insure confirmation and needs the cooperation and goodwill of the Senate, he may be forced to surrender documents that could otherwise be withheld under the doctrine of executive privilege. On July 31, 1986, President Reagan invoked executive privilege to deny to the Senate certain internal memos that Chief Justice-designee William H. Rehnquist had written while serving in the Justice Department from 1969 to 1971. [123] The reason given for withholding the memos was familiar: to protect the confidentiality and candor of the legal advice submitted to presidents and their assistants. [124] Nevertheless, Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee began rounding up votes to subpoena the papers. [125] Committee Democrats had agreed with Republicans to vote on both Rehnquist and Associate Justice-designee Antonin Scalia on August 14, but the impasse over the papers threatened to delay the votes. [126]

In an op-ed piece for the Los Angeles Times, Senator Edward M. Kennedy put the matter succinctly: "Rehnquist: No Documents, No Senate Confirmation." [127] Hoping to move the nominations of Rehnquist and Scalia along, President Reagan agreed to a narrowed request by the committee for twenty-five to thirty documents written by Rehnquist during his career in the Justice Department. [128] The eight [*600] Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee picked up two moderate Republicans to form a majority in favor of a subpoena. [129] A few days later the Committee requested and received additional documents prepared by Rehnquist for the Justice Department. [130] The nominations of Rehnquist and Scalia then went forward as scheduled. [131]

REV_00260229

Two years later, the Senate replayed the same drama. The nomination of Stephen S. Trott for Ninth Circuit judge was delayed four months because Senators Kennedy and Howard Metzenbaum wanted internal documents from the Justice Department. [132] Refusing to release the documents, the department explained: "'As you know, it is a longstanding policy of the Department not to provide copies of internal, deliberative memoranda to persons outside the Department.'" [133] That may have been "longstanding policy," but the Trott nomination did not proceed until the Department yielded, which it eventually did. Having received the documents they wanted, Kennedy and Metzenbaum released their hold. [134]

In 1991, the appointment of the U.S. Ambassador to Guyana was delayed seventeen months until Senator Jesse Helms received documents he wanted from the State Department. [135] During a visit by Helms to Chile in 1985, one of his aides was accused of leaking U.S. intelligence information to the government of former Chilean President Augusto Pinochet. [136] Helms insisted that the State Department show him secret cable traffic regarding the visit, but the Department refused to turn over two cables, which they called internal memoranda. [137]

When the Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Chile was later nominated in June 1990 for the position of ambassador to Chile, [138] Helms had the necessary leverage. After Helms renewed his request for the cables and the State Department again refused, he blocked the nomination. [139] As the months rolled by and Helms held firm, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger came to Helms' [*601] office one day to show him the memos, which had been critical of both Helms and his aide. Helms released the hold and the nomination went forward. [140]

In March 1994, a House subcommittee subpoenaed the records of six cases handled by the Environment and Natural Resources Division of the Justice Department. [141] The subcommittee's request reflected congressional interest for the past several years in the work of the Environmental Crimes Section (ECS) and the shift of prosecution responsibilities from U.S. Attorneys in the field to Washington officials. [142] In an effort to mediate the dispute, Attorney General Janet Reno allowed subcommittee staff to interview line attorneys within ECS. [143] President Clinton did not intervene in this subcommittee- department dispute. White House Communications Director Mark Gearan announced, "'We will not assert any privilege or waiver.'" [144]

In addition to sending the subpoenas, subcommittee chairman John Dingell (D- Mich.) and ranking minority member Dan Schaefer (R-Colo.) released letters to the Senate Judiciary Committee asking that the confirmation of Lois Schiffer be delayed. [145] She had been serving as Acting Attorney General of the Environment and Natural Resources Division and had been nominated for the position on February 2, 1994. [146] Schaefer expressed his concern about her confirmation because of what he described as "'obstruction of the subcommittee's work on oversight of the nation's environmental laws.'" [147]

REV_00260230

As the dispute deepened, ECS chief Neil S. Cartusciello announced his resignation. [148] By that time, the subcommittee had begun receiving some of the documents it had subpoenaed. [149] After Schiffer moved to find a replacement for Cartusciello, the hearing on her nomination tentatively was scheduled. [150] After some further delays, and after the subcommittee was satisfied with the cooperation it had received from the Justice Department, Schiffer was confirmed by the Senate on October 6, 1994. [151]

[*602]

These examples illustrate that Congress has sufficient tools at its command to wrest from the executive branch the documents it needs to fulfill congressional duties. The question is whether lawmakers will press their advantage. The issue is "not the adequacy of congressional power to obtain information, but the willingness of committee chairs and staffers to aggressively pursue information." [152]

III. Shouting "National Security" is Not Enough

Those who write about executive privilege sometimes imply that the mere claim by the administration of "national security" (or "foreign affairs" or "diplomacy") is sufficient to establish an unreviewable presidential power. In a recent article, Saikrishna Prakash writes that "national security considerations strongly bolster the case for an executive privilege. . . . Properly wielded, an executive privilege could lead to . . . enhanced supervision of foreign affairs . . . ." [153]

Writing for the Court in the Watergate tapes case, Chief Justice Burger rejected an "absolute, unqualified" presidential privilege of immunity from judicial process. [154] However, in clumsy dicta, he seemed to cede ground if the President claimed a "need to protect military, diplomatic, or sensitive national security secrets." [155] If the Supreme Court wants to accept such presidential arguments, it is free to do so. Congress, however, should not follow in its steps. The Watergate tapes case concerned judicial, not congressional, access to executive branch information. [156]

Unlike the judiciary, Congress has express constitutional powers and duties in the fields of military affairs and national security. When Congress passed the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), requiring executive agencies to make documents available to the public, it set forth nine exemptions from the Act, including matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." [157] Another exemption excluded "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency."

REV_00260231

[158] Yet another exemption excluded "records or information compiled for law enforcement [*603] purposes." [159] These exemptions are some of the grounds for denying members of the public information from executive agencies. They do not apply to Congress; FOIA specifically provides that these exemptions do not constitute "authority to withhold information from Congress." [160]

A. Controlling National Security Information

A 1996 memorandum prepared by the Office of Legal Counsel of the Justice Department (OLC) argued that a congressional enactment "would be unconstitutional if it were interpreted 'to divest the President of his control over national security information in the Executive Branch by vesting lower-ranking personnel in that Branch with a "right" to furnish such information to a Member of Congress without receiving official authorization to do so.'" [161] OLC based this position on the following separation of powers rationale:

[T]he President's roles as Commander in Chief, head of the Executive Branch, and sole organ of the Nation in its external relations require that he have ultimate and unimpeded authority over the collection, retention and dissemination of intelligence and other national security information in the Executive Branch. There is no exception to this principle for those disseminations that would be made to Congress or its Members. In that context, as in all others, the decision whether to grant access to the information must be made by someone who is acting in an official capacity on behalf of the President and who is ultimately responsible, perhaps through intermediaries, to the President. The Constitution does not permit Congress to circumvent these orderly procedures and chain of command-and to erect an obstacle to the President's exercise of all executive powers relating to the Nation's security-by vesting lower-level employees in the Executive Branch with a supposed "right" to disclose national security information to Members of Congress (or anyone else) without the authorization of Executive Branch personnel who derive their authority from the President. [162]

According to this analysis, two congressional statutes and pending language in [*604] a Senate bill were unconstitutional. [163] The Department's position relies on generalizations and misconceptions about the President's roles as Commander in Chief, head of the executive branch, and "sole organ" of the nation in its external relations.

1. Commander in Chief

The Constitution empowers the President to be Commander in Chief, but that title must be understood in the context of military responsibilities that the Constitution grants to Congress. Article II reads, "The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States . . . ." [164] For the militia, Congress-not the President-does the calling. The Constitution gives to Congress the power to provide "for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel invasions." [165] The

REV_00260232

Commander in Chief Clause also was intended to preserve civilian supremacy. [166]

Article I empowers Congress to declare war, raise and support armies, and make rules for the land and naval forces. The debates at the Philadelphia Convention made clear that the Commander in Chief Clause did not grant the President unilateral, independent power other than the power to "repel sudden attacks." [167] Roger Sherman said the President should be able "to repel and not to commence war." [168] Taking the country from a state of peace to a state of war was a deliberative process that required congressional debate and approval. James Mason told his colleagues that he was for "clogging rather than facilitating war." [169] At the Philadelphia ratifying convention, James Wilson expressed the prevailing sentiment that the system of checks and balances "will not hurry us into war; it is calculated to guard against it. It will not be in the power of a single man, or a single body of men, to involve us in such distress . . . ." [170]

The framers gave Congress the power to initiate war because they believed that presidents, in the search for fame and personal glory, would have a bias that favored war. [171] John Jay warned in Federalist No. 4 that "absolute monarchs will often make [*605] war when their nations are to get nothing by it, but for purposes and objects merely personal, such as a thirst for military glory, revenge for personal affronts, ambition, or private compacts to aggrandize or support their particular families or partisans." [172] James Madison made the same point. Writing in 1793, he called war:

the true nurse of executive aggrandizement. . . . In war, the honours and emoluments of office are to be multiplied; and it is the executive patronage under which they are to be enjoyed. It is in war, finally, that laurels are to be gathered; and it is the executive brow they are to encircle. [173]

The historical record is replete with examples of Congress relying on the regular legislative process, including access to information held by the executive branch, to control the President's actions in military affairs. [174] There is no evidence from these sources that the Framers intended the Commander in Chief Clause to deny to members of Congress information needed to supervise the executive branch and learn of agency wrongdoing.

2. Head of the Executive Branch

The Framers placed the President at the head of the executive branch to provide for unity, responsibility, and accountability. There can be no doubt that such an authorization of power was an important principle for assuring that the President, under Article II, Section 3, was positioned to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." [175] The delegates at the Constitutional Convention rejected the idea of a plural executive, preferring to anchor that responsibility in a single individual. Said John Rutledge, "A single man would feel the greatest responsibility and administer the public affairs best." [176]

REV_00260233

Yet, placing the President at the head of the executive branch did not remove from Congress the power to direct certain executive activities and to gain access to information needed for the performance of its legislative duties. At the Convention, Roger Sherman considered the Executive "nothing more than an institution for carrying the will of the Legislature into effect." [177] It was never the purpose to make the President personally responsible for executing all the laws. Rather, he was to [*606] ensure that the laws be faithfully executed, including laws that excluded him from some operations in the executive branch. For example, from an early date, Congress vested in certain subordinate executive officials the duty to carry out specified "ministerial" functions without interference from the President. [178] On many occasions, attorneys general have advised presidents that they have no legal right to interfere with administrative decisions made by the auditors and comptrollers in the Treasury Department, [179] pension officers, [180] and other officials. [181] The President is responsible for seeing that administrative officers faithfully perform their duties, "but the statutes regulate and prescribe these duties, and he has no more power to add to, or subtract from, the duties imposed upon subordinate executive and administrative officers by the law, than those officers have to add or subtract from his duties." [182] In several decisions, the Supreme Court has recognized that Congress can impose certain duties on executive officials that are beyond the control and direction of the President. [183]

These principles were underscored by a confrontation during the Reagan administration. In 1984, Congress passed the Competition in Contracting Act (CICA) [184] to give the Comptroller General certain authorities over agency contracting. President Reagan signed the bill, but instructed Attorney General Edwin Meese III to inform all executive branch agencies how to comply with the statute "in a manner consistent with the Constitution." [185] A memorandum from the Justice Department concluded that the contested provision for the Comptroller General was unconstitutional and should not be enforced by the agencies. [186] In effect, the administration had exercised an item veto by deciding what parts of a statute to carry out. This was part of a larger strategy devised by enthusiasts who believed in the [*607] theory of a "unitary executive," with all parts of the executive branch directly accountable and subordinate to the President. [187]

This theory was repeatedly struck down in the courts. In upholding the provisions of CICA, a New Jersey district court judge stated that the position of the Reagan administration "flatly violates the express instruction of the Constitution that the President shall 'take care that the Laws be faithfully executed.'" [188] Once a bill is enacted into law, the President executes all of it, not just the parts he favors. The district court's ruling was upheld on appeal by the Third Circuit. [189] The Ninth Circuit, in upholding the Comptroller General provision, said that once Reagan put his signature to CICA it became "part of the law of the land and the President must 'take care that [it] be faithfully executed.'" [190] In his role as head of the executive branch, the President has no authority to "employ a so-called 'line item veto' and excise or sever provisions of a bill with which he disagrees." [191] A later attempt by the Justice Department to challenge the constitutionality of CICA also was turned aside in the courts. [192]

Agencies have a direct responsibility to Congress, the body that creates them. In 1854, Attorney General Caleb Cushing advised departmental heads that they had a threefold relation: to the President, to execute his will in cases in which the President possessed a constitutional or legal discretion; to the law, which directs them to perform certain acts; and to Congress, "in the conditions contemplated by the Constitution." [193] Agencies are created by law and "most of their duties are prescribed by law; Congress may at all times call on them for information or explanation in matters of official duty; and it may, if it sees fit, interpose by legislation concerning them, when required by the interests of the Government." [194]

[*608]

3. "Sole Organ" in Foreign Affairs

During debate in the House of Representatives in 1800, John Marshall said that the President "is the sole organ of the nation in its external relations, and its sole representative with foreign nations." [195] This remark was later incorporated in Justice Sutherland's opinion in United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., [196] to suggest that the President is the exclusive policymaker in foreign affairs. [197] However, Justice Sutherland wrenched Marshall's statement from context to imply a position that Marshall never held. At no time, either in 1800 or later, did Marshall ever suggest that the President could act unilaterally to make foreign policy in the face of statutory limitations.

The debate in 1800 focused on the decision of President John Adams to turn over to England someone who had been charged with murder. [198] Because the case was already pending in an American court, some members of Congress thought that President Adams should be impeached for encroaching upon the judiciary and violating the doctrine of separated powers. [199] It was then that Marshall intervened to say that there was no basis for impeachment. [200] Adams, by carrying out an extradition treaty entered into between England and the United States, was not attempting to make national policy single-handedly. Instead, he was carrying out a policy made jointly by the President and the Senate (for treaties). [201] Only after the policy had been formulated through the collective effort of the executive and legislative branches (by treaty or by statute) did the President emerge as the "sole organ" in implementing national policy. The President merely announced policy; he did not alone make it. Consistent with that principle, Marshall later decided a case as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and ruled that, in a conflict between a presidential proclamation and a congressional statute governing the seizure of foreign vessels during wartime, the statute prevails. [202]

Sutherland's use of the "sole organ" remark in Curtiss-Wright prompted Justice Robert Jackson to say in 1952 that the most that can be drawn from Sutherland's decision is the intimation that the President "might act in external affairs without congressional authority, but not that he might act contrary to an act of Congress." [203] Jackson also noted that "much of the opinion is dictum." [204] In 1981, the [*609] District of Columbia Circuit cautioned against placing undue reliance on "certain dicta" in Sutherland's opinion: "To the extent that denominating the President as the 'sole organ' of the United States in international affairs constitutes a blanket endorsement of plenary Presidential power over any matter extending beyond the borders of this country, we reject that characterization." [205]

REV_00260235

B. Role of the Courts

In the period immediately after World War II, federal courts typically deferred to presidential responsibilities in military and diplomatic affairs. In 1948, the Supreme Court said it would be intolerable that courts, without the relevant information, should review and perhaps nullify actions of the Executive taken on information properly held secret. Nor can courts sit in camera in order to be taken into executive confidences. But even if courts could require full disclosure, the very nature of executive decisions as to foreign policy is political, not judicial. 206

A few years later, in the midst of the Korean War, the Court again avoided a clash with the executive branch over national security affairs. It said that the Judiciary "should not jeopardize the security which the [government's] privilege [to withhold evidence from a pending lawsuit] is meant to protect by insisting upon an examination of the evidence, even by the judge alone, in chambers." 207

These attitudes have long since been superseded by statutory grants of power to the courts, inviting them to exercise independent judgment on matters of national security. 208 Nevertheless, some courts continue to defer to the President. In 1980, the Fourth Circuit remarked that the "executive possesses unparalleled expertise to make the decision whether to conduct foreign intelligence surveillance, whereas the judiciary is largely inexperienced in making the delicate and complex decisions that lie behind foreign intelligence surveillance." 209 The Fourth Circuit freely expressed its uneasiness in this area: "[T]he courts are unschooled in diplomacy and military affairs, a mastery of which would be essential to passing upon an executive branch request that a foreign intelligence wiretap be authorized." 210 The court even referred [*610] to the executive branch "as the pre-eminent authority in foreign affairs." 211 However obsequious federal judges decide to behave, Congress-given its explicit constitutional duties-does not have to assume the same posture.

1. The Pentagon Papers

In the Pentagon Papers case in 1971, the Supreme Court decided that two newspapers were constitutionally entitled to publish a Defense Department secret study that was critical of U.S. policy in the Vietnam War. 212 Justice Stewart wrote a concurrence that spoke approvingly of independent president power:

If the Constitution gives the Executive a large degree of unshared power in the conduct of foreign affairs and the maintenance of our national defense, then under the Constitution the

Introduction

Presidents and scholars identify a variety of constitutional principles and practices to justify executive privilege. There is no doubt that there are reasonable grounds for withholding documents from Congress and for prohibiting some executive officials from testifying before congressional committees. Just as there are sound reasons for executive privilege, however, there are also legal and political limits. Impressive claims for executive privilege can be offset by persuasive arguments that Congress needs access to information to fulfill its constitutional mandates. In many cases, the politics of the moment or practical considerations override legal principles. Efforts to discover enduring and enforceable norms in this area invariably fall short.

This Article examines some of the misconceptions about the extent of executive privilege. Part I reviews the precedent established during the Washington Administration for withholding documents from Congress. Close examination reveals that the scope of presidential authority has been greatly exaggerated. Congress had access to more documentation than is commonly believed and could have had more [*584] if it had demanded it. Part II focuses on congressional leverage. The power to impeach, to hold executive officials in contempt, and to block nominations may force executive officials to release documents that they otherwise would want to keep private and confidential. Even if a President announces perfectly plausible grounds for the withholding of documents, he may be forced to surrender to the will of Congress to achieve more important goals. Part III examines the overly general-and generous-claim that executive privilege has especially strong, if not unreviewable, authority in the fields of foreign affairs, diplomacy, and national security.

I. Identifying Constitutional Principles: Early Congressional Investigations

The Constitution makes no specific reference to an executive power allowing the President to withhold documents from Congress, nor does it specifically recognize a need on the part of Congress for information from the Executive in order to legislate. It is now routine, however, to consider both powers implied in the operation of the executive and legislative branches. Long before the Supreme Court acknowledged that fact, [1] the political branches already had reached a rough understanding and worked out accommodations. When these two implied powers collide, one wonders which should prevail. No magic formula yields a ready and reliable answer, for too much depends on individual circumstances and political requirements.

A. Robert Morris Inquiry

During the First Congress, the House of Representatives debated a request from Robert Morris to investigate his conduct as Superintendent of Finance. [2] The matter was referred to a select committee consisting of James Madison, Theodore Sedgwick, and Roger Sherman. [3]

REV_00260219

Executive must have the largely unshared duty to determine and preserve the degree of internal security necessary to exercise that power successfully. [213]

At first glance, this sentence seems logical: if one clause is valid, the other follows. There is, however, no necessary linkage between the two. The President's largely unshared power to conduct foreign affairs does not imply a largely unshared power to determine the policy for internal security. The conduct of foreign policy usually involves the implementation of national security policy determined jointly by Congress and the President. Conduct may be executive, but the policymaking power is executive-legislative. That proposition is true to an even greater extent in the "maintenance of our national defense," as Justice Stewart expressed it. [214] Congress shares that responsibility with the President. In the field of foreign affairs, the Constitution does not give "a large degree of unshared power" either to Congress or to the President. [215]

Justice Stewart offered other broad views about presidential power:

[I]t is clear to me that it is the constitutional duty of the Executive-as a matter of sovereign prerogative and not as a matter of law as the courts know law- through the promulgation and enforcement of executive regulations, to protect the confidentiality necessary to carry out its [*611] responsibilities in the fields of international relations and national defense. [216]

No one doubts that the President has important duties and prerogatives in protecting confidential information. The more difficult question is the degree to which Congress can share in those duties and prerogatives by enacting restrictive legislation and, on that issue, Stewart's concurrence provides no answer.

Justice Stewart did acknowledge that the President lacks a monopoly: "This is not to say that Congress and the courts have no role to play." [217] Yet, he appeared to assign to Congress a narrow, subordinate role: "Undoubtedly Congress has the power to enact specific and appropriate criminal laws to protect government property and preserve government secrets." [218] In any event, a single concurrence by one justice has no authoritative value in settling or defining constitutional issues.

Two other points about the Stewart concurrence deserve comment. First, his overall analysis depends almost entirely upon a single case, Curtiss- Wright, [219] which is itself deeply flawed. Second, largely because he concluded that the presidential power in national defense and international relations is "largely unchecked by the Legislative and Judicial branches," [220] and that there is "the absence of the governmental checks and balances present in other areas of our national life," [221] he concluded that the Pentagon documents should be published in the newspapers. Because of what he believed to be inadequate governmental checks on presidential power, Justice Stewart declared that "the only effective restraint upon executive policy and power in the areas of national defense and international affairs may lie in an enlightened citizenry-in an informed and critical public opinion which alone can here protect the values of democratic government." [222] It was for that reason that he supported "an informed and free press" to enlighten the people. [223]

REV_00260237

2. Recent Statutory Changes

Judicial attitudes have become somewhat more emboldened in recent decades, in part because of congressional legislation. In 1973, the Supreme Court decided that it had no authority to examine in camera certain documents regarding a planned [*612] underground nuclear test to sift out "non-secret components" for their release. [224] In response, Congress passed legislation that clearly authorized courts to examine executive records in judges' chambers as part of a determination of the nine categories of exemptions in the Freedom of Information Act. [225] The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 [226] required a court order to engage in electronic surveillance within the United States for purposes of obtaining foreign intelligence information. [227] The Chief Justice appoints a special court, the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (FISC), to review applications submitted by government attorneys. [228] In 1980, Congress passed the Classified Information Procedures Act (CIPA) [229] to establish court procedures for allowing judges to screen classified information to determine whether it could be used during the trial. [230]

These statutes bring the courts a long way in terms of attitude, procedures, and capability in passing judgment on national security matters. Even if courts were to continue to defer to the President, the same attitude should not be taken by Congress. Unlike the courts, Congress has explicit duties under the Constitution to declare war, [231] provide for the common defense, [232] raise and support armies, [233] and provide and maintain a navy. [234] Legislative expertise exists in the Armed Services Committees, the defense appropriations subcommittees, the Budget Committees, the intelligence committees, and other legislative panels.

Deference towards the executive branch by the courts need not mean deference by Congress. Two recent decisions by the Supreme Court-one in 1988 and the other in 1989-have been misinterpreted by the executive branch and some scholars to confer an unwarranted independent authority on the part of the President in foreign affairs and national security.

3. Department of the Navy v. Egan

A memorandum by the Office of Legal Counsel in 1996 relied in part on [*613] Department of the Navy v. Egan [235] to maximize presidential power. [236] Egan, however, is fundamentally a case of statutory construction. The case involved the Navy's denial of a security clearance to Thomas Egan, who worked on the Trident submarine. [237] Egan subsequently was removed. [238] He then sought review by the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB), [239] but the Supreme Court upheld the Navy's action by holding that the denial of a security clearance is a sensitive and discretionary judgment call committed by law to the executive agency with the necessary expertise for protecting classified information. [240] The conflict in this case was within the executive branch, between the Navy and the MSPB and not between Congress and the executive branch.

REV_00260238

The focus on statutory questions was evident throughout the case. As the Justice Department noted in its brief submitted to the Supreme Court: "The issue in this case is one of statutory construction and 'at bottom . . . turns on congressional intent.'" [241] The parties were directed to address this question: "Whether, in the course of reviewing the removal of an employee for failure to maintain a required security clearance, the Merits Systems Protection Board is authorized by statute to review the substance of the underlying decision to deny or revoke the security clearance." [242]

The statutory questions concerned Sections 7512, 7513, 7532, and 7701 of title 5 of the United States Code. The Justice Department's brief analyzed the relevant statutes and their legislative history and could find no basis for determining that Congress intended the MSPB to review the merits of security clearance determinations. [243] The entire oral argument before the Court on December 2, 1987, was devoted to the meaning of statutes and what Congress intended by them. [244] At no time did the Justice Department suggest that classified information could be withheld from Congress.

The Court's deference to the Navy did not cast a shadow over the right of Congress to sensitive information. The Court decided merely the "narrow question" of whether the MSPB had statutory authority to review the substance of a decision to deny a security clearance. [245] Although the Court referred to independent [*614] constitutional powers of the President, including those as Commander in Chief and head of the executive branch, [246] and noted the President's responsibility with regard to foreign policy, [247] the case was decided on statutory grounds. In stating that "courts traditionally have been reluctant to intrude upon the authority of the Executive in military and national security affairs," [248] the Court added this key qualification: "unless Congress specifically has provided otherwise." [249] The Court appears to have borrowed this thought and language from the Justice Department's brief: "Absent an unambiguous grant of jurisdiction by Congress, courts have traditionally been reluctant to intrude upon the authority of the executive in military and national security affairs." [250] Nothing in the legislative history of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 convinced the Court that the MSPB could review, on the merits, an agency's security-clearance determination. [251]

In citing the President's role as Commander in Chief, the Court stated that the President's authority to protect classified information "flows primarily from this constitutional investment of power in the President and exists quite apart from any explicit congressional grant." [252] If Congress had never enacted legislation regarding classified information, certainly the President could act in the absence of congressional authority. Yet, if Congress acts by statute, it can narrow the President's range of action.

It is helpful to place Egan in the context of Justice Jackson's three categories laid out in the Steel Seizure Cases of 1952: [253] (1) when the President acts pursuant to congressional authority, his authority is at its maximum because it includes everything that he possesses under the Constitution, plus what Congress has delegated to him; [254] (2) when he acts in the absence of congressional authority, he operates in a "zone of twilight" in which he and Congress share concurrent authority; [255] (3) when he acts against "the expressed or implied will of Congress, his power is at its lowest ebb." [256] Egan belongs in the middle category. The President's range is broad until Congress enters the "zone of twilight" and exerts its own authority.

[*615]

4. The Garfinkel Case

The OLC memorandum also misapprehended the litigation that led to the Supreme Court's decision in American Foreign Service Ass'n. v. Garfinkel. [257] At various points, the memorandum cites Garfinkel for the proposition that Congress cannot "divest the President of his control over national security information in the Executive Branch by vesting lower-ranking personnel in that Branch with a 'right' to furnish such information to a Member of Congress without receiving official authorization to do so." [258] Yet, the progression of this case from district court to the Supreme Court and back to the district court illustrates how a lower court may exaggerate the national security powers of the President at the expense of congressional prerogatives. The district court's interpretation of executive power was quickly vacated by the Supreme Court.

In 1983, President Reagan directed that all federal employees with access to classified information sign "nondisclosure agreements" or risk the loss of their security clearance. [259] Congress, concerned about the vagueness of some terms and the loss of access to information, passed legislation to prohibit the use of appropriated funds to implement the nondisclosure policy. [260]

In 1988, District Court Judge Oliver Gasch held that Congress lacked constitutional authority to interfere by statute with nondisclosure agreements drafted by the executive branch to protect the secrecy of classified information. [261] Among other authorities, Judge Gasch relied on Egan and Curtiss-Wright. [262] From Egan he extracted a sentence-"'The authority to protect such [national security] information falls on the President as head of the Executive Branch and as Commander in Chief'" n263-without acknowledgi[9] that Egan was decided on statutory, not constitutional, grounds. [264] From Curtiss-Wright, he concluded that the "sensitive and complicated role cast for the President as this nation's emissary in foreign relations requires that congressional intrusion upon the President's oversight of national security information be more severely limited than might be required in matters of [*616] purely domestic concern." [265] In fact, the issue in Curtiss-Wright was whether Congress could delegate its powers to the President in the field of foreign relations. [266] The previous year, the Court had struck down the National Industrial Recovery Act because it delegated an excessive amount of legislative power to the President in the field of domestic policy. [267] The question before the Court in Curtiss-Wright was limited to whether Congress could use more general standards when delegating its authority in foreign affairs. The Court held that more general standards were permissible because of the changing circumstances that prevail in international affairs. [268] The issue before the Court was the extent to which Congress could delegate its power (embargo authority), not the existence of independent and autonomous powers for the President.

Having mischaracterized both Supreme Court decisions, Judge Gasch concluded that Congress had passed legislation that "impermissibly restricts the President's power to fulfill obligations imposed upon him by his express constitutional powers and the role of the Executive in foreign relations." [269]

On October 31, 1988, the Supreme Court noted probable jurisdiction in the Garfinkel case. [270] Both the House and the Senate submitted briefs objecting strongly to Judge Gasch's analysis of the President's power over foreign affairs. [271] During oral argument, after Edwin Kneedler of the Justice Department spoke repeatedly about the President's constitutional role to control classified information, one of the justices remarked, "But, Mr. Kneedler, I just can't-I can't avoid interrupting you with this thought. The Constitution also gives Congress the power to provide for a navy and for the armed forces, and so forth, and often classified information is highly relevant to their task." [272]

On April 18, 1989, the Court issued a per curiam order that vacated Judge Gasch's order and remanded the case for further consideration. [273] In doing so, the Court cautioned Judge Gasch to tread with greater caution in expounding upon constitutional matters: "Having thus skirted the statutory question whether the [*617] Executive Branch's implementation of [nondisclosure] Forms 189 and 4193 violated § 630, the court proceeded to address appellees' argument that the lawsuit should be dismissed because § 630 was an unconstitutional interference with the President's authority to protect the national security." [274] The Court emphasized that the district court "should not pronounce upon the relative constitutional authority of Congress and the Executive Branch unless it finds it imperative to do so. Particularly where, as here, a case implicates the fundamental relationship between the Branches, courts should be extremely careful not to issue unnecessary constitutional rulings." [275]

On remand, Judge Gasch held that the plaintiffs (American Foreign Service Association and members of Congress) failed to state a cause of action for courts to decide. [276] By dismissing the plaintiff's complaint on this ground, Judge Gasch did not address any of the constitutional issues. [277]

C. Continued Executive-Legislative Collisions

In the 1970s and 1980s, Congress and the executive branch clashed over access to "national security" and "foreign affairs" documents. On each occasion, the Justice Department insisted that these documents could not be shared with a congressional committee. In the end, the administration was forced to drop its pretensions of having an exclusive role in determining what to release. Federal courts applied the necessary pressure in the first dispute. In the next two confrontations, the power of Congress to hold an executive official in contempt was sufficient leverage to pry loose the documents.

REV_00260241

1.The AT&T Cases

The first dispute began in 1976 when Representative John Moss and his subcommittee requested from the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. (AT&T) information on "national security" wiretaps by the administration. [278] AT&T was willing to release the information, but the Justice Department intervened to prevent compliance with the subcommittee subpoena, arguing that compliance might lead to public disclosure of vital information injurious to national security. [279] President Ford wrote directly to Representative Moss, "'I have determined that compliance with the subpoena would involve unacceptable risks of disclosure of extremely sensitive [*618] foreign intelligence and counterintelligence information and would be detrimental to the national defense and foreign policy of the United States and damaging to the national security.'" [280]

A district court judge decided that if a final determination had to be made about the need for secrecy and the risk of disclosure, "it should be made by the constituent branch of government to which the primary role in these areas is entrusted. In the areas of national security and foreign policy, that role is given to the Executive." [281]

This judicial deference to presidential power was soon overturned by Judge Harold Leventhal of the District of Columbia Circuit, who rejected the claim of the Justice Department that the President "retains ultimate authority to decide what risks to national security are acceptable." [282] In the opinion of the District of Columbia Circuit, the cases cited by the administration did not "establish judicial deference to executive determinations in the area of national security when the result of that deference would be to impede Congress in exercising its legislative powers." [283]

Leventhal urged executive and legislative officials to settle their differences out of court, noting that a "compromise worked out between the branches is most likely to meet their essential needs and the country's constitutional balance." [284] Continued disagreement between the Justice Department and the subcommittee forced the appellate court to intervene again to give additional guidance. [285] Leventhal dismissed the idea that the dispute was primarily a "political question" beyond the court's jurisdiction. [286] When a dispute consists of a clash of authority between the two branches, "judicial abstention does not lead to orderly resolution of the dispute," [287] for neither branch had "final authority in the area of concern." [288] In a dispute of this nature, judicial intervention helps promote the "smooth functioning of government." [289]

Leventhal urged the parties to resolve their differences by seeking middle- ground positions. He noted that the Framers, in adopting a Constitution with general and overlapping provisions, anticipated that "a spirit of dynamic compromise would promote resolution of the dispute in the manner most likely to result in efficient and effective functioning of our governmental system." [290] Each branch "should take cognizance of an implicit constitutional mandate to seek optimal accommodation through a realistic evaluation of the needs of the conflicting branches in the particular [*619] fact situation." [291] The case finally was dismissed on December 21, 1978, after the Justice Department and the subcommittee settled their differences. [292]

2. Proceedings Against Henry Kissinger

On November 6, 1975, the House Select Committee on Intelligence issued a subpoena to Henry Kissinger, Secretary of State, commanding him to provide documents relating to covert actions. [293] After he failed to comply with the subpoena, the Committee met in open session to determine what action should be taken against him. By a vote of 10 to 2, the Committee recommended that the Speaker certify the committee report regarding Kissinger's contumacious conduct and proceed to a contempt citation. [294]

Acting on the advice of the Justice Department, President Ford invoked executive privilege on November 14 to keep the material from the committee. [295] He said that the documents included "recommendations from previous Secretaries of State to previous Presidents," jeopardizing the internal decisionmaking process. [296] A few days later, in a letter to the Committee, Ford cautioned that the dispute "involves grave matters affecting our conduct of foreign policy and raises questions which go to the ability of our Republic to govern itself effectively." [297] Recognizing that Congress had constitutional responsibilities "to investigate fully matters relating to contemplated legislation," [298] Ford told the Committee that he directed Kissinger not to comply with the subpoena on the grounds of executive privilege because the documents "revealed to an unacceptable degree the consultation process involving advice and recommendations to Presidents Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon." [299] Ford pointed out that some of the documents concerned the National Security Council (NSC), and that, as of November 3, Kissinger was no longer his Assistant for National Security [*620] Affairs. [300] As to those materials, "there has been a substantial effort by the NSC staff to provide these documents." [301]

Calling the contempt threat "frivolous," Kissinger warned that it would have adverse effects worldwide: "'I profoundly regret that the committee saw fit to cite in contempt a secretary of state, raising serious questions all over the world what this country is doing to itself.'" [302] On December 9, three committee members and two staff members visited the White House to determine which documents would be made available. [303] The next day, they received an oral briefing on the information that had been the target of the subpoena and an NSC aide read verbatim from documents concerning the covert actions. [304] On December 10, the committee chairman announced that the White House was in "substantial compliance" with the subpoena and that the planned contempt action was "moot." [305]

3. The James Watt Episode

The third dispute concerned a decision by Interior Secretary James Watt to withhold thirty-one documents from a House subcommittee in 1981. [306] The confrontation quickly escalated to a committee subpoena for the documents and a recommendation by the House Committee on Energy and Commerce that Watt be cited for contempt. [307] When the full committee acted, the vote to hold Watt in contempt was 23 to 19. [308]

Attorney General William French Smith advised President Reagan to invoke executive privilege on the ground that "the interest of Congress in obtaining information for oversight purposes is, I believe, considerable weaker than its interests when specific legislative proposals are in question." [309] This was a remarkably ineffective argument. Courts have held consistently that the investigative power is available not merely to legislate or when a "potential" for legislating exists, but even for pursuits down blind alleys. [310] At the Philadelphia Convention, George Mason [*621] remarked that Congressmen "are not only Legislators but they possess inquisitorial powers. They must meet frequently to inspect the Conduct of the public offices." [311] Moreover, Congress easily could erase Smith's artificial distinction by introducing a bill whenever it had oversight in mind.

Smith also claimed that all the documents at issue were "either necessary and fundamental to the deliberative process presently ongoing in the Executive Branch or relate to sensitive foreign policy considerations." [312] Attorney General Smith's comments about "foreign policy considerations" force one to wonder whether the Attorney General and his legal assistants in the Justice Department were unaware that Congress had a clearly legitimate and constitutionally-based reason for requesting the information. The dispute with Watt concerned the impact of Canadian investment and energy policies on American commerce, [313] an issue clearly within the enumerated constitutional power of Congress to "regulate Commerce with foreign Nations" and its authority to oversee the particular statute that established the nation's policy on foreign investments. [314]

The eventual outcome of this dispute demonstrated that the documents were not, as Smith argued, of "fundamental" importance to the deliberative process. They could have been, and eventually were, shared with the subcommittee. The White House delivered the documents to a secure room on Capitol Hill and only subcommittee members reviewed them. [315] Conditions were imposed: the technical assistance of subcommittee staff would not be available, and members could not photocopy the documents, but could take notes. [316] Subcommittee members, however, were granted access to the papers they wanted.

4. Immigration Cases

Newspaper stories in 1999 revealed the extent to which the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) relies on secret or classified evidence to take action against aliens. In late 1999, an immigration judge ordered the release of an Egyptian who had been kept in jail for three and a half years on grounds that the INS considered him a national security threat. [317] Classified FBI evidence linked him to [*622] Sheik Omar Abdel Rahman who had been convicted of conspiring to bomb the United Nations. [318] The judge held that most of the evidence was "'double or triple hearsay.'" [319] INS Commissioner Doris Meissner "took the unusual step of citing 'national security implications' as a basis for asking [Attorney General

REV_00260244

Janet] Reno to order that [the Egyptian] not be released." [320] The previous month, a federal district judge in New Jersey had ruled that "it was unconstitutional to detain a Palestinian immigrant on the basis of secret evidence." [321] Representative David Bonior recently introduced legislation to prohibit the use of classified evidence in deportation proceedings. [322] In approximately twenty pending immigration cases, the INS is relying on secret evidence. [323]

D. Congressional Access to Executive Branch Employees

In 1997, the Select House and Senate Intelligence Committees considered legislation to expand executive employee access to Congress. A Senate report explained that current "executive branch policies on classified information could interfere with [the Select Intelligence Committee's] ability to learn of wrongdoing within the elements over which it has oversight responsibility." [324] In creating the Intelligence Committees in the 1970s, Congress relied heavily on them to guard the interests of Congress as an institution. [325] To a great degree, Congress delegated to the committees the responsibility for monitoring and controlling the intelligence community.

A memorandum of November 26, 1996, from the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC), an office within the Department of Justice, analyzed the constitutionality of two congressional enactments concerning the rights of federal employees to provide information to Congress: [326] the Lloyd-LaFollette Act [327] and Section 625 of the [*623] Treasury, Postal Service Appropriation Act for Fiscal 1997. [328] Both statutory provisions give executive employees the right to furnish information to either chamber of Congress or to a committee or member thereof.

1. The Lloyd-LaFollette Act

The OLC memorandum swept broadly to challenge the constitutionality of the Lloyd-LaFollette Act, originally enacted in 1912. [329] The statute responded to presidential efforts to block the flow of information from executive employees to Congress. For example, in 1902, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a "gag order" prohibiting executive branch employees from seeking to influence legislation "individually or through associations," except through heads of departments. [330] Failure to abide by this presidential order resulted in possible dismissal from government service. [331] In 1909, President William Howard Taft issued another gag order, forbidding any bureau chief or subordinate in government to apply to either house of Congress, to any committee of Congress, or to any member of Congress, for legislation, appropriations, or congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through, or as authorized by, the head of his department. [332]

REV_00260245

Through language added to an appropriations bill in 1912, Congress nullified the gag orders issued by Roosevelt and Taft. [333] The debate on this provision underscored Congress' concern that the gag orders would put congressional committees in the position of hearing only "one side of a case": the views of Cabinet officials rather than the rank-and-file employees of a department. [334] Members wanted agency employees to express complaints about the conduct of their supervisors. [335] The stated purpose of the legislation was to ensure that government employees could exercise [*624] their constitutional rights to free speech, to peaceable assembly, and to petition the government for redress of grievances. [336]

Lawmakers viewed the gag orders as an effort "to prevent the Congress from learning the actual conditions that surrounded the employees of the service." [337] If agency employees could speak only through the heads of departments, "there is no possible way of obtaining information excepting through the Cabinet officers, and if these officials desire to withhold information and suppress the truth or to conceal their official acts it is within their power to do so." [338] Another legislator remarked, "The vast army of Government employees have signed no agreement upon entering the service of the Government to give up the boasted liberty of the American citizens." [339] Even more explicit was the following statement delivered during a debate in the Senate:

Mr. President, it will not do for Congress to permit the executive branch of this Government to deny to it the sources of information which ought to be free and open to it, and such an order as this, it seems to me, belongs in some other country than the United States. [340]

Section 6 of the Postal Services Appropriations Act of 1912 added the language used to nullify the gag orders. [341] Section 6, known as the Lloyd- LaFollette Act, provided a number of procedural safeguards to protect agency officials from arbitrary dismissals. The final sentence of Section 6 reads: "The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with." [342]

The Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 later supplemented Section 6 and codified it as permanent law. [343] The conference report elaborated on the need for executive employees to disclose information to Congress:

The provision is intended to make clear that by placing limitations on the kinds of information any employee may publicly disclose without suffering reprisal, there is no intent to limit the information an employee [*625] may provide to Congress or to authorize reprisal against an employee for providing information to Congress. For example, 18 U.S.C. 1905 prohibits public disclosure of information involving trade secrets. That statute does not apply to transmittal of such information by an agency to Congress. Section 2302(b)(8) of this act

REV_00260246

The House learned a day later that the Senate had passed a resolution empowering President George Washington to appoint three commissioners to inquire into the receipts and expenditures of public moneys during Morris' administration. [4]

The select committee of Madison, Sedgwick, and Sherman issued a report, recommending that a five-member committee be appointed to examine Morris' [*585] performance in office. John Lawrence [Laurance] and William Smith were added to the three already in place. [5] Elbridge Gerry objected on grounds that the House was pretending it still had the power of the Continental Congress, which possessed both legislative and executive powers. He said that the President was the only competent authority to take cognizance of the conduct of officers in the Executive Department; if we pursue the proposed plan of appointing committees, we destroy the responsibility of Executive officers, and divest the House of a great and essential privilege, that of impeaching our Executive officers for mal- administration. [6]

Gerry favored the Senate's approach of appointing three commissioners to do the job. [7] Theodorick Bland opposed the appointment of commissioners "as creating an unnecessary expense." [8] Madison supported the five-man committee, arguing "that the House should possess itself of the fullest information in order to doing justice to the country and to public officers." [9] The committee was appointed and issued a report on February 16, 1791. [10]

The committee investigation did not produce a direct collision between Congress and the Washington Administration because the area of inquiry concerned activities that occurred during the previous Continental Congress. Nevertheless, it is important to note that Congress debated which branch of government-legislative or executive-was the proper party for investigating executive matters. [11] The House decided, as Madison noted, that it was necessary for Congress to acquire the necessary information in order to "do justice" to the country and to public officers. [12]

B. Major General Arthur St. Clair Investigation

Two years later, on March 27, 1792, the House appointed a committee to inquire into the heavy military losses suffered by the troops of Major General Arthur St. Clair to Indian tribes. [13] Out of 1400 troops, 657 were killed and another 271 wounded. [14] The House committee was empowered "to call for such persons, papers, [*586] and records, as may be necessary to assist their inquiries." [15] William Giles, regarding the inquiry as "indispensable" and "strictly proper," concluded that the House is "the proper source, as the immediate guardians of the public interest." [16] Similar to the inquiry of Morris, some representatives thought the investigation should be conducted by President Washington. [17] A motion to that effect was rejected 21 to 35, after which the House inquiry was supported 44 to 10. [18] would not protect an employee against reprisal for public disclosure of such statutorily protected information, but it is not to be inferred that an employee is similarly unprotected if such disclosure is made to the appropriate unit of the Congress. Neither title I nor any other provision of the act should be construed as limiting in any way the rights of employees to communicate with or testify before Congress. [344]

As codified in 1978, any interference with the right of executive branch employees in communicating with Congress becomes an enforceable right along with other prohibited personnel practices. The United States Code now provides that various qualifications to the provision on prohibited personnel practices "shall not be construed to authorize the withholding of information from the Congress or the taking of any personnel action against an employee who discloses information to the Congress." [345]

2. Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989

Congress supplemented these federal employee protections by enacting legislation in 1989, finding that "[f]ederal employees who make disclosures described in section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code, serve the public interest by assisting in the elimination of fraud, waste, abuse, and unnecessary Government expenditures" [346] and that "protecting employees who disclose Government illegality, waste, and corruption is a major step toward a more effective civil service." [347] Employees may disclose information that they reasonably believe evidences a violation of any law, rule, or regulation, or constitutes gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety. [348] Such disclosures are permitted unless "specifically prohibited by law and if such information is not specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or the conduct of foreign affairs." [349] In signing the bill, President George Bush said that "a true whistleblower is a public servant of the [*626] highest order. . . . [T]hese dedicated men and women should not be fired or rebuked or suffer financially for their honesty and good judgment." [350]

3. Congressional Action in 1998

In order to examine the objections raised by the OLC, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence held two days of hearings in 1998. [351] Professor Peter Raven-Hansen of the George Washington University Law School and I appeared the first day to rebut the OLC's position that the President has ultimate and unimpeded authority over the collection, retention, and dissemination of national security information. [352] On the second day of hearings, I testified alongside an attorney from the OLC. [353]

Based on these hearings and its own independent staff analysis, the Committee reported legislation despite claims by the Justice Department that the bill was an unconstitutional invasion of presidential prerogatives. [354] The Committee acted unanimously, voting 19 to 0 to report the measure. [355] The bipartisan vote for legislative prerogatives was solid. The

REV_00260247

Senate report said that the "Administration's intransigence on this issue compelled the Committee to act." [356] The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 93 to 1. [357]

The House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence took a different approach in drafting the legislation, but also rejected the Administration's claim that the President exercised exclusive control over national security information. I testified before the House Committee as well. [358] Like the Senate, the House Committee dismissed the assertion that the President, as Commander in Chief, "has ultimate and unimpeded constitutional authority over national security, or classified, information. Rather, national security is a constitutional responsibility shared by the executive and legislative branches that proceeds according to the principles and practices of comity." [359] The two committees reported and enacted legislation with this language: [*627] "national security is a shared responsibility, requiring joint efforts and mutual respect by Congress and the President." [360] The statute further provided that "Congress, as a co-equal branch of Government, is empowered by the Constitution to serve as a check on the executive branch; in that capacity, it has a 'need to know' of allegations of wrongdoing within the executive branch, including allegations of wrongdoing in the Intelligence Community." [361]

Conclusion

To perform its constitutional functions, Congress depends on information obtained from the executive branch. The Supreme Court remarked in 1927:

A legislative body cannot legislate wisely or effectively in the absence of information respecting the conditions which the legislation is intended to affect or change; and where the legislative body does not itself possess the requisite information-which not infrequently is true-recourse must be had to those who do possess it. [362]

Investigation is a prerequisite for intelligent lawmaking, and much of the information that Congress requires is located within the executive branch. Congress needs information to enact legislation, to oversee the administration of programs, to inform the public,and to protect its integrity, dignity, reputation, and privileges. To enforce these constitutional duties, Congress possesses the inherent power to issue subpoenas and to punish for contempt. [363] The Supreme Court has said that the power of Congress to conduct investigations "comprehends probes into departments of the Federal Government to expose corruption, inefficiency or waste." [364]

The power of Congress to investigate reaches all sectors of executive branch activity, not merely domestic policy, but also foreign, military, and national security policy. The first major congressional investigation, in 1792, involved the ill-fated expedition of Major General St. Clair. [365] To buttress its power to investigate, Congress frequently enacts statutory language that requires the executive branch to produce information. [366] When Congress passed the Budget and Accounting Act of [*628] 1921, [367] it directed the newly established Bureau of the Budget (now the Office of Management and Budget) to provide Congress with information: "The Bureau shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations, furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request." [368] The current version regarding congressional requests for information in the budget area appears in title 31 of the United States Code. [369]

REV_00260248

As part of the National Security Act, Congress, in 1991, required the "Director of Central Intelligence and the heads of all departments, agencies, and other entities of the United States Government involved in intelligence activities" to "keep the intelligence committees fully and currently informed of all intelligence activities, other than a covert action." [370] The procedures for covert actions are spelled out elsewhere. The intelligence committees are to receive "any information or material concerning intelligence activities . . . which is requested by either of the intelligence committees in order to carry out its authorized responsibilities." [371]

Congress also relies on the assistance ofemployees within the executive branch. Upon the request of a congressional committee or a committee member, any officer or employee of the State Department, the U.S. Information Agency, the Agency for International Development, the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, or any other department, agency, or independent establishment of the United States Government primarily concerned with matters relating to foreign countries or multilateral organizations may express his views and opinions, and make recommendations he considers appropriate, if the request of the committee or member of the committee relates to a subject which is within the jurisdiction of that committee. [372]

The text and intent of the Constitution, combined with legislative and judicial precedents over the past two centuries, provide strong support for congressional access to information within the executive branch. Without that information, Congress would be unable adequately to discharge its legislative and constitutional duties. It could not properly oversee executive branch agencies, which are creatures of Congress. Part of legislative access depends on executive employees-the rank- [*629] and-file-who are willing to share with Congress information about operations within their agencies. On the basis of two centuries of experience, Congress knows the value of gaining access to information regarding agency corruption and mismanagement that an administration may want to conceal.

No doubt the executive branch has an interest in seeing that agency information is disclosed only through authorized channels. Part of that concern has been directed toward controlling information that might be embarrassing to the agency, and the administration, if released. There is no legal or constitutional justification for concealing that kind of information. To the extent that the concern of the executive branch is directed toward the control of information that might be damaging to national security, the intelligence committees have procedures in place designed to protect against such damage. To question these procedures would put the executive branch in the position of asserting that only its procedures can safely protect national security, even at the cost of denying Congress the information it needs to discharge its constitutional duties.

REV_00260249

FOOTNOTES:

n1 See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 711 (1974) (holding that, to the extent that the President's interest in withholding information for the purpose of confidentiality "relates to the effective discharge of a President's powers, it is constitutionally based"); McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 175 (1927) ("A legislative body cannot legislate wisely or effectively in the absence of information respecting the conditions which the legislation is intended to affect or change.").

n2 See 1 Annals of Cong. 1129 (Joseph Gales ed., 1789).

n3 See id. at 1164.

n4 See id. at 1191.

n5 See 2 Annals of Cong. 1464 (1790).

n6 Id. (statement of Rep. Elbridge Gerry).

n7 See id. at 1464-65.

n8 Id. at 1465 (statement of Rep. Theodorick Bland).

n9 Id. (statement of Rep. James Madison).

n10 See id. at 1964.

n11 See id. at 1465.

n12 See id.

n13 See 3 Annals of Cong. 493 (1792).

n14 See George C. Chalou, St. Clair's Defeat, 1792, in 1 Congress Investigates, A Documented History, 1792-1974, at 7 (Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. & Roger Bruns eds., 1975).

n15 3 Annals of Cong. 493 (1792).

n16 Id. at 490.

n17 See id. at 491-92.

n18 See id. at 493.

n19 1 The Writings of Thomas Jefferson 304 (Andrew A. Lipscomb & Albert Ellery Bergh eds., Library ed. 1904).

n20 Id. at 305.

n21 Letter from George Washington to the Secretary of War (Apr. 4, 1792), in 32 The Writings of George Washington 15 (John C. Fitzpatrick ed., 1939).

n22 Id. at 16.

REV_00260250

n23 See 3 Annals of Cong. at app. 1052-59, 1106-13, 1310-17.

n24 1The Writings of Jefferson, supra note 19, at 304.

n25 See 4 Annals of Cong. 38 (1794).

n26 Cabinet Opinion of H. Knox, Alexander Hamilton, & Edm. Randolph (Jan. 28, 1794), in 4 The Works of Alexander Hamilton 505 (John C. Hamilton ed., New York, Charles S. Francis & Co. 1851).

n27 Id.

n28 Id. at 505-06.

n29 Cabinet Opinion of Wm. Bradford (1793), in 4 The Works of Hamilton, supra note 26, at 494-95.

n30 4 Annals of Cong. 56 (1794).

n31 Abraham D. Sofaer, Executive Privilege: An Historical Note, 75 Colum. L. Rev. 1318, 1321 (1975).

n32 See 5 Annals of Cong. 394 (1796).

n33 Id. at 400.

n34 Id. at 400-01.

n35 Id. at 426.

n36 Id. at 428.

n37 See id. at 437, 466-74.

n38 See id. at 759.

n39 Id. at 461 (statement of Rep. Harper).

n40 See id. at 802-20.

n41 Id. at 642 (statement of Rep. Williams).

n42 Id. (statement of Rep. Williams).

n43 Id. at 588 (statement of Rep. Freeman).

n44 Id. at 437 (statement of Rep. Madison).

n45 Id. at 438 (statement of Rep. Madison).

n46 See id.

n47 Id. (statement of Rep. Madison).

n48 See id.

REV_00260251

n49 See id. at 760-62.

n50 Id. at 760.

n51 Id. at 761.

n52 Letter from Alexander Hamilton to George Washington (Mar. 24, 1796), in 20 The Papers of Alexander Hamilton 81-82 (Harold C. Syrett ed., 1974).

n53 Editor's Introductory note to Letter from Alexander Hamilton to George Washington (Mar. 7, 1796), in 20 The Papers of Hamilton, supra note 52, at 66.

n54 Letter from Alexander Hamilton to George Washington (Mar. 7, 1796), in 20 The Papers of Hamilton, supra note 52, at 69 (alteration in original).

n55 Id. at 69.

n56 5 Annals of Cong. 771 (1796). For the votes, see id. at 782-83.

n57 Id. at 773.

n58 Id.

n59 Id.

n60 See id. at 991.

n61 Id. at 970.

n62 Id. at 970-71.

n63 See id. at 1291.

n64 See id.

n65 See id. at 1280.

n66 See 1 Stat. 459 (1796).

n67 See Letter from Thomas Jefferson to John Breckenridge (Aug. 12, 1803), in 10 The Writings of Thomas Jefferson 407, 408 (Albert Ellery Bergh ed., Definitive ed. 1907).

n68 Id. at 411.

n69 Id.

n70 Id. at 410.

n71 Special Message to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States (Oct. 21, 1803), in 1 A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789- 1902, at 362-63 (James D. Richardson ed., 1905); see also 13 Annals of Cong. 18, 382 (1803).

n72 See 13 Annals of Cong. 385 (1803).

n73 See id. at 385-419.

n74 See id. at 419.

REV_00260252

n75 See 2 Stat. 245, 247 (1803).

n76 See Ivan M. Stone, The House of Representatives and the Treaty-Making Power, 17 Ky. L.J. 216, 233 n.53 (1929).

n77 See id.

n78 See id. at 234.

n79 Chalfant Robinson, The Treaty-Making Power of the House of Representatives, 12 Yale Rev. 191 (1903); see also Stone, supra note 76, at 234-35.

n80 See Stone, supra note 76, at 235.

n81 See 2 Arthur C. Hinds, Precedents of the House of Representatives § 1526, at 990 (1907) [hereinafter Hinds' Precedents].

n82 See 24 Stat. 1018 (1886); 25 Stat. 1370 (1885); 24 Stat. 975 (1883); 2 Hinds' Precedents, supra note 81, §§ 1526-1528, at 990-91.

n83 For the development of reciprocal trade legislation, see Louis Fisher, President and Congress 133-55 (1972).

n84 See Louis Fisher, Constitutional Conflicts between Congress and the President 239 (1977).

n85 See id.

n86 S. Rep. No. 94-941, at 2 (1976).

n87 See International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976, § 507, Pub. L. No. 94-329, 90 Stat. 729, 765 (1976); see also Pub. L. No. 94-537, 90 Stat. 2498 (1996) (authorizing appropriations for the International Security Assistance and Arms Control Act of 1976).

n88 Agreement on Friendship, Defense and Cooperation Between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain, July 2, 1982, U.S.-Spain, Complementary Agreement Three, Art. 2, 34 U.S.T. 3966, 3966.

n89 Id.

n90 See Uruguay Round Agreements, submitted Sept. 27, 1994.

n91 See (check the purposes section of the bill).

n92 See GATT Implementing Legislation: Hearings on S. 2467 Before the Senate Comm. on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, 103d Cong. 302-12 (1994) (statement of Harvard Law School Prof. Laurence H. Tribe).

n93 U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

n94 See Bruce Ackerman & David Golove, Is NAFTA Constitutional?, 108 Harv. L. Rev. 799 (1995); Laurence H. Tribe, Taking Text and Structure Seriously: Reflections on Free-Form Method in Constitutional Interpretation, 108 Harv. L. Rev. 1221 (1995).

n95 See Nada Mourtada-Sabbah, Le Privil ge de Executif Aux États-Unis 221-351 (1999).

REV_00260253

n96 5 Annals of Cong. 760 (1796).

n97 Special Message to the House of Representatives (Apr. 20, 1846), in A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789-1902, supra note 71, at 431, 434.

n98 13 Cong. Deb. app. at 202 (1836-37). For the entire discussion, see id. at 189-225.

n99 Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 187 (1957).

n100 Letter from Attorney General William French Smith to Rep. John Dingell, reprinted in H.R. Rep. No. 97-968, at 41 (1982).

n101 The President's News Conference, 1 Pub. Papers 238, 239 (Feb. 16, 1983).

n102 See Theodore Draper, A Very Thin Line: The Iran- Contra Affairs 498 (1991).

n103 See id. at 540.

n104 Theodore Draper, Foreword to The Iran-Contra Scandal: The Declassified History, at xiii (Peter Kornbluh & Malcolm Byrne eds., 1993); see generally The Iran-Contra Scandal, supra (containing a collection of documents relating to the Iran- Contra affair).

n105 Attorney General Edwin Meese III thought the Iran-Contra affair had the potential for "toppling" the President and triggering impeachment proceedings in the House. See Testimony in trial of Oliver North (Mar. 28, 1989) in Draper, supra note 102, at 521.

n106 See 31 Cong. Q. Almanac 343 (1975).

n107 See 31 Cong. Q. Almanac 343-44 (1975); see also 121 Cong. Rec. 33,872-76, 36,038-39, 40,230, 40,768-69 (1975) (noting highlights of the proceedings for the record).

n108 See Elder Witt, Carter Foiled in First Tilt With Executive Privilege, Cong. Q. Wkly. Rep., May 17, 1980, at 1352.

n109 See Executive Privilege, Revisited, Cong. Q. Wkly. Rep., June 21, 1980, at 1753.

n110 See 128 Cong. Rec. 31746-76 (1982).

n111 H.R. Rep. No. 97-968, at 11 (1982).

n112 See id. at 15, 21.

n113 Id. at 42.

n114 See 128 Cong. Rec. 31,746-76 (1982).

n115 See id.

n116 See United States v. House of Representatives, 556 F. Supp. 150 (D.D.C. 1983); H.R. Rep. No. 98-323, at 18-40 (1983).

n117 See House of Representatives, 556 F. Supp. at 153.

n118 See Stanley M. Brand & Sean Connelly, Constitutional Confrontations: Preserving a Prompt and Orderly Means by Which Congress May Enforce Investigative Demands Against Executive Branch Officials, 36 Cath. U. L. Rev. 71, 79-81 (1986).

REV_00260254

n119 See id.

n120 See id.

n121 See David Johnston, Panel Acts to Gain Travel Office Papers, N.Y. Times, May 10, 1996, at A26; Eric Schmitt, White House Gives Committee More Papers in Dismissal Case, N.Y. Times, May 31, 1996, at A20.

n122 See Louis Fisher, Grover Cleveland and the Senate, 7 Cong. Stud. 11 (1979).

n123 George Lardner, Jr. & Al Kamen, Reagan Uses Executive Privilege to Keep Rehnquist Memos Secret, Wash. Post, Aug. 1, 1986, at A1.

n124 See id.

n125 See Howard Kurtz & Ruth Marcus, Democrats Seek to Subpoena Papers, Wash. Post, Aug. 2, 1986, at A1.

n126 See George Lardner, Jr. & Al Kamen, Senators to Push for Rehnquist Memos, Wash. Post, Aug. 5, 1986, at A4.

n127 Edward M. Kennedy, Rehnquist: No Documents, No Senate Confirmation, L.A. Times, Aug. 5, 1986, Part II, at 5.

n128 See Al Kamen & Howard Kurtz, Rehnquist Told in 1974 of Restriction in Deed, Wash. Post, Aug. 6, 1986, at Al.

n129 See id.

n130 See Senators Are Given More Rehnquist Data, Wash. Post, Aug. 8, 1986, at A3.

n131 See Al Kamen, Rehnquist Confirmed In 65-33 Senate Vote; Scalia Approved as Associate Justice, 98-0, Wash. Post, Sept. 18, 1986, at A1.

n132 See Ruth Marcus, Impasse Over Justice Documents Ends, Wash. Post, Mar. 25, 1988, at A23.

n133 Id. (quoting Assistant Attorney General John R. Bolton).

n134 See id.

n135 See Al Kamen, Ambassador to Guyana is Appointed After 17-Month Standoff, Wash. Post, Nov. 29, 1991, at A40.

n136 See id.

n137 See id.

n138 See id.

n139 See id.

n140 See id.

n141 See Jim McGee, House Panel Subpoenas Justice, Wash. Post, Mar. 12, 1994, at A4.

REV_00260255

n142 See id.

n143 See id.

n144 Id. (quoting Mark Gearan).

n145 See id.

n146 See id.

n147 Id. (quoting Rep. Shafer).

n148 See Jim McGee, Environmental Crimes Controversy Lingers Under Reno, Wash. Post, Apr. 7, 1994, at A25.

n149 See Jim McGee, Chief of Environmental Crimes Section Quits, Wash. Post, Apr. 2, 1994, at A4.

n150 See Al Kamen, Teaming Up, Wash. Post, July 13, 1994, at A15.

n151 See 140 Cong. Rec. 28359-60 (1994). For further details on this controversy, see Staff of Subcomm. on Oversight and Investigations of the Comm. On Energy and Commerce, 103d Cong., Damaging Disarray: Organization Breakdown and Reform in the Justice Department's Environmental Crimes Program, 103-T (Comm. Print 1994); Neal Devins, Congressional-Executive Information Access Disputes: A Modest Proposal-Do Nothing, 48 Admin. L. Rev. 109, 123-25 (1996).

n152 Devins, supra note 151, at 133.

n153 Saikrishna Bangalore Prakash, A Critical Comment on the Constitutionality of Executive Privilege, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1143, 1145 (1999).

n154 United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 706 (1974).

n155 Id.

n156 A footnote in the Court's decision makes this distinction clear: "We are not here concerned with . . . congressional demands for information . . . ." Id. at 712 n.19.

n157 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1) (1994).

n158 Id. § 552(b)(5).

n159 Id. § 552(b)(7).

n160 Id. § 552(d).

n161 Memorandum from Christopher H. Schroeder, Office of Legal Counsel, to Michael J. O'Neil, General Counsel of the Central Intelligence Agency, Nov. 26, 1996, at 3 (on file with author) [hereinafter OLC Memo].

n162 Id. at 4.

n163 See infra Pt. III.D.

n164 U.S. Const. art. II, § 2.

REV_00260256

According to the account of Thomas Jefferson, President Washington convened his Cabinet to consider the extent to which the House could call for papers and persons. Jefferson reported that the Cabinet considered and agreed:

first, that the House was an inquest, and therefore might institute inquiries. Second, that it might call for papers generally. Third, that the Executive ought to communicate such papers as the public good would permit, and ought to refuse those, the disclosure of which would injure the public: consequently were to exercise a discretion. Fourth, that neither the committee nor House had a right to call on the Head of a Department, who and whose papers were under the President alone; but that the committee should instruct their chairman to move the House to address the President. [19]

According to Jefferson, the Cabinet concluded that "there was not a paper which might not be properly produced." [20] President Washington instructed Secretary of War Henry Knox to "lay before the House of Representatives such papers from your Department, as are requested by the enclosed Resolution." [21] Washington also thought it appropriate for St. Clair, who had expressed an interest in retiring, to make himself fully available to the House: "I should hope an opportunity would thereby be afforded you, of explaining your conduct, in a manner satisfactory to the public and yourself." [22] The House committee examined papers furnished by the executive branch, listened to explanations from department heads and other witnesses, and received a written statement from General St. Clair. [23] The general principle of [*587] executive privilege had been established because the President could refuse papers "the disclosure of which would injure the public." [24] The language here is significant. The President was concerned about injury to the public, not to himself or his associates. Presidents were not entitled to withhold information simply because it might embarrass the administration or reveal improper or illegal activities.

C. Diplomatic Correspondence with France

In 1794, the Senate adopted a resolution requesting President Washington to submit certain diplomatic correspondence concerning U.S. policy with France. [25] At a Cabinet meeting, he received advice from Secretary of War Henry Knox that "no part of the correspondences should be sent to the Senate." [26] Secretary of Treasury Alexander Hamilton agreed with Knox, adding that "the principle is safe, by excepting such parts as the President may choose to withhold." [27] Attorney General Edmund Randolph, who would soon become Secretary of State, said that "all the correspondence proper, from its nature, to be communicated to the Senate, should be sent; but that what the President thinks improper, should not be sent." [28] William Bradford, replacing Randolph as Attorney General, was of the opinion that "it is the duty of the Executive to withhold such parts of the said correspondence as in the judgment of the Executive shall be deemed unsafe and improper to be disclosed." [29]

Washington, carving out some room, notified the Senate that he had "directed copies and translations to be made; except in those particulars which, in my judgment, for public considerations, ought not to be communicated." [30] Apparently, the Senate accepted this n165 Id. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

REV_00260221

n166 See 10 Op. Att'y Gen. 74, 79 (1861).

n167 2 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 318 (Max Farrand ed., 1937) [hereinafter Constitutional Debates].

n168 Id.

n169 Id. at 319.

n170 2 The Debates in the Several State Conventions, on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution 528 (Jonathan Elliot ed., 1941).

n171 See William Michael Treanor, Fame, the Founding, and the Power to Declare War, 82 Cornell L. Rev. 695, 699-700 (1997).

n172 The Federalist No. 4, at 101 (John Jay) (Benjamin Fletcher Wright ed., 1961).

n173 6 The Writings of James Madison 174 (Gaillard Hunt ed., 1906).

n174 See generally Louis Fisher, Presidential War Power (1995).

n175 U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

n176 1 Constitutional Debates, supra note 167, at 65.

n177 Id.

n178 See Louis Fisher, The Politics of Shared Power: Congress and the Executive 127-28 (1998).

n179 See, e.g., 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 624 (1823); 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 636 (1824).

n180 See, e.g., 4 Op. Att'y Gen. 515 (1846).

n181 See, e.g., 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 678 (1824); 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 705 (1825); 1 Op. Att'y Gen. 706 (1825); 2 Op. Att'y Gen. 480 (1831); 2 Op. Att'y Gen. 507 (1832); 2 Op. Att'y Gen. 544 (1832); 5 Op. Att'y Gen. 287 (1851); 11 Op. Att'y Gen. 14 (1864); 13 Op. Att'y Gen. 28 (1869).

n182 19 Op. Att'y Gen. 685, 686-87 (1890).

n183 See, e.g., United States v. Louisville, 169 U.S. 249, 253-55 (1898); United States v. Price, 116 U.S. 43, 44 (1885); Butterworth v. Hoe, 112 U.S. 50, 68 (1884); United States v. Schurz, 102 U.S. 378, 394-95 (1880); Kendall v. United States, 37 U.S. 522, 610 (1838).

n184 31 U.S.C. §§ 3551-3556 (1994).

n185 2 Pub. Papers 1053 (1984).

n186 See Office of Legal Counsel, Department of Justice, Memorandum for the Attorney General, "Implementation of the Bid Protest Provisions of the Competition in Contracting Act" (Oct. 17, 1984), at 15 (on file with the author).

n187 For an excellent analysis of the deficiencies of this theory, see Morton Rosenberg, Congress' Prerogative Over Agencies and Agency Decisionmakers: The Rise and Demise of the Reagan Administration's Theory of the Unitary Executive, 57 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 627 (1989).

REV_00260257

n188 Ameron, Inc. v. United States Army Corps of Engineers, 610 F. Supp. 750, 755 (D. N.J. 1985) (quoting U.S. Const. art. II, § 3); see also Ameron, Inc. v. United States Army Corps of Engineers, 607 F. Supp. 962 (D. N.J. 1985).

n189 See Ameron, Inc. v. United States Army Corps of Engineers, 809 F.2d 979, 980 (3d Cir. 1986); Ameron, Inc. v. United States Army Corps of Engineers, 787 F.2d 875, 876 (3d Cir. 1986).

n190 Lear Siegler, Inc., Energy Prods. Div. v. Lehman, 842 F.2d 1102, 1124 (9th Cir. 1988) (quoting U.S. Const. art. I, § 7).

n191 Id.

n192 See United States v. Instruments, S.A., Inc., 807 F. Supp. 811, 816 (D.D.C. 1992).

n193 6 Op. Att'y Gen. 326, 344 (1854).

n194 Id.

n195 10 Annals of Cong. 613 (1800).

n196 299 U.S. 304 (1936).

n197 See id. at 320.

n198 See 10 Annals of Cong. 532 (1800).

n199 See id. at 552 (statement of Rep. Harper).

n200 See id. at 596 (statement of Rep. Marshall).

n201 See id. at 597, 613-14.

n202 See Little v. Barreme, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 170, 179 (1804).

n203 Youngstown Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 636 n.2 (1952).

n204 Id.

n205 American Intern. Group v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 657 F.2d 430, 438 n.6 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

n206 Chicago & S. Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 111 (1948).

n207 United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 10 (1953).

n208 See infra Pt. III.B.2.

n209 United States v. Truong Dinh Hung, 629 F.2d 908, 913 (4th Cir. 1980).

n210 Id. at 913-14.

n211 Id. at 914.

REV_00260258

n212 See New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713, 728-29 (1971) (Stewart, J., concurring).

n213 Id. at 728-29 (Stewart, J., concurring).

n214 Id. at 729 (Stewart, J., concurring).

n215 Id. (Stewart, J., concurring).

n216 Id. at 729-30 (Stewart, J., concurring).

n217 Id. at 730 (Stewart, J., concurring).

n218 Id. (Stewart, J., concurring).

n219 See id. at 727 n.2, 728-29 n.3 (Stewart, J., concurring) (citing United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304 (1936)).

n220 Id. at 727 (Stewart, J., concurring) (footnotes omitted).

n221 Id. at 728 (Stewart, J., concurring).

n222 Id. (Stewart, J., concurring).

n223 Id. (Stewart, J., concurring).

n224 Environmental Protection Agency v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 78 (1973).

n225 See Freedom of Information Act Amendments § 4(B), Pub. L. No. 93-502, 88 Stat. 1562 (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1994)); see also H.R. Rep. No. 93-1380, at 8-9, 11-12 (1974).

n226 Pub. L. No. 95-511, 92 Stat. 1783 (codified as amended at 50 U.S.C. § 1801 (1994)).

n227 See 50 U.S.C. § 1802.

n228 See id.

n229 Pub. L. No. 96-456, 94 Stat. 2025 (codified at 18 U.S.C. app. 3 §§ 1-16 (1994)).

n230 See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 4.

n231 See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

n232 See id. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

n233 See id. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

n234 See id. art. I, § 8, cl. 13.

n235 484 U.S. 518 (1988).

n236 OLC Memo, supra note 161, at 6-7.

n237 See Egan, 484 U.S. at 522.

n238 See id.

REV_00260259

n239 See id.

n240 See id. at 529-30.

n241 Brief for the Petitioner at 22, Egan (No. 86- 1552) (quoting Clarke v. Securities Industry Ass'n, 479 U.S. 388, 400 (1987)).

n242 Id. at (I) (emphasis added).

n243 See Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit at 4-5, 13, 15-16, 18, Egan (No. 86-1552).

n244 See Transcript of Oral Argument, Egan (No. 86- 1552).

n245 See Egan, 484 U.S. at 520.

n246 See id. at 527.

n247 See id. at 529.

n248 Id. at 530.

n249 Id. (emphasis added).

n250 Brief for the Petitioner at 21, Egan (No. 86- 1552).

n251 See Egan, 484 U.S. at 531 n.6.

n252 Id. at 527.

n253 See Youngstown Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952).

n254 See id. at 635 (Jackson, J., concurring).

n255 Id. at 637 (Jackson, J., concurring).

n256 Id. (Jackson, J., concurring).

n257 490 U.S. 153 (1989).

n258 OLC Memo, supra note 161, at 3.

n259 See National Security Decision Directive 84; see also Louis Fisher, Congressional-Executive Struggles Over Information Secrecy Pledges, 42 Admin. L. Rev. 89, 90 (1990).

n260 See Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-202, § 630, 101 Stat. 1329-31, 1329-432; Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Appropriations Act of 1989, Pub. L. No. 100-440, § 619, 102 Stat. 1721, 1756.

n261 See National Fed'n of Fed. Employees v. United States, 688 F. Supp. 671, 683 (D.D.C. 1988).

n262 See id. at 676, 684-85.

n263 Id. at 685 (quoting Department of the Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518, 527 (1988)).

REV_00260260

n264 See id.

n265 Id.

n266 See United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 315 (1936).

n267 See Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495 (1935); Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388 (1935).

n268 See Curtiss-Wright, 299 U.S. at 329.

n269 National Fed'n of Fed. Employees v. United States, 688 F. Supp. 671, 685 (D.D.C. 1988).

n270 See American Foreign Service Ass'n v. Garfinkel, 488 U.S. 923 (1988).

n271 See Brief and Motion of the Speaker and Leadership Group for Leave to File Brief Amici Curiae Out of Time, American Foreign Service Ass'n (No. 87-2127); Motion for Leave to File Brief Amicus Curiae Out of Time and Brief of the United States Senate as Amicus Curiae, American Foreign Service Ass'n (No. 87-2127).

n272 Transcript of Oral Argument at 57-58, Garfinkel (No. 87-2127).

n273 See American Foreign Service Ass'n. v. Garfinkel, 490 U.S. 153 (1989) (per curiam).

n274 Id. at 158.

n275 Id. at 161.

n276 American Foreign Service Ass'n v. Garfinkel, 732 F. Supp. 13, 16 (D.D.C. 1990).

n277 See id. at 16, 17.

n278 See Timothy S. Robinson, Judge Halts Hill Probe of Wiretaps, Wash. Post, July 23, 1976, at A1.

n279 See id.

n280 Id. (quoting President Ford).

n281 United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 419 F. Supp. 454, 461 (D.D.C. 1976).

n282 United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 551 F.2d 384, 392 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

n283 Id.

n284 Id. at 394.

n285 See United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

n286 See id. at 126.

n287 Id.

n288 Id.

REV_00260261

n289 Id.

n290 Id. at 127.

n291 Id.

n292 See House Select Committee on Congressional Operations, 95th Cong. Court Proceedings and Actions of Vital Interest to the Congress, Current to December 31, 1978, at 50 (Comm. Print 1978).

n293 See H.R. Rep. No. 94-693, at 4-5 (1975).

n294 See id. at 2.

n295 See The President's News Conference of November 14, 1975, in 2 Pub. Papers 1866, 1867 (1975).

n296 Id.

n297 Letter to the Chairman of the House Select Committee on Intelligence About Contempt Resolutions Concerning Testimony of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, in 2 Pub. Papers 1887 (1975).

n298 Id.

n299 Id. at 1889.

n300 See id. at 1889-90.

n301 Id. at 1890.

n302 31 Cong. Q. Almanac 406 (1975) (quoting Secretary of State Kissinger).

n303 See id. at 407.

n304 See id.

n305 Id.

n306 See William Chapman, Hill Panel Votes to Cite Watt for Contempt, Wash. Post, Feb. 26, 1982, at A1.

n307 See id.

n308 See id.

n309 Staff of House Committee on Energy and Commerce, 97th Cong., Executive Privilege: Legal Opinions Regarding Claim of President Ronald Reagan in Response to a Subpoena Issued to James G. Watt, Secretary of the Interior 3 (Comm. Print 1981) [hereinafter Executive Privilege].

n310 See, e.g., Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 509 (1975).

n311 2 Constitutional Debates, supra note 167, at 206; see also id. at 199 (Mason's comments, as recorded by Madison).

n312 Executive Privilege, supra note 309, at 2.

REV_00260262

n313 See Chapman, supra note 306, at A5.

n314 U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

n315 See H.R. Rep. 97-898, at 8 (1982).

n316 See id.; Contempt of Congress: Hearings Before the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, 97th Cong. 385-94 (1982); Margot Hornblower, White House Avoids Hill Showdown Over Documents, Wash. Post, Mar. 17, 1982, at A5.

n317 See Lorraine Adams and David A. Vise, INS Drops Plea to Reno to Detain Egyptian, Wash. Post, Nov. 30, 1999, at A5.

n318 See id.

n319 Id. (quoting Donn Livingston, an immigration judge).

n320 Benjamin Weiser, U.S. Frees Man Jailed 3 Years on Secret Data, N.Y. Times, Nov. 30, 1999, at A1.

n321 Id. at B12.

n322 See id.

n323 See David Cole, Editorial, No More Secret Evidence, Wash. Post, Dec. 3, 1999, at A41.

n324 S. Rep. No. 105-24, at 26 (1997).

n325 Senator Walter Huddleston, who served on the Senate Intelligence Committee, remarked in 1980, "[T]he two broadly based Intelligence Committees will be acting as proxies for the American people." 126 Cong. Rec. 13095 (1980). Congressman Lee Hamilton, as chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, underscored that point in 1985: "The House and Senate Intelligence Committees provide the only check on intelligence agencies outside the executive branch." 131 Cong. Rec. 32436 (1985).

n326 Memorandum from Christopher H. Schroeder, Office of Legal Counsel, to Michael J. O'Neil, General Counsel of the Central Intelligence Agency, Nov. 26, 1996 (on file with author).

n327 5 U.S.C. § 7211 (1994).

n328 Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-359 (codified at 5 U.S.C. § 7301 (1994)).

n329 See 37 Stat. 539, 555 (1912).

n330 48 Cong. Rec. 4513 (1912).

n331 See id.

n332 Id.

n333 See 37 Stat. 539 (1912).

n334 48 Cong. Rec. at 4657 (1912).

REV_00260263

n335 See id.

n336 See id. at 5201.

n337 Id. at 5235.

n338 Id. at 5634 (statement of Rep. Lloyd).

n339 Id. at 5637 (statement of Rep. Wilson).

n340 Id. at 10674 (statement of Sen. Reed).

n341 See 37 Stat. 539, 555 (1912).

n342 Id.

n343 See 5 U.S.C. § 7211 (1994).

n344 S. Rep. No. 95-1272, 132 (1978).

n345 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b) (1994).

n346 Pub. L. 101-12 § 2(a)(1), 103 Stat. 16 (1989).

n347 Id. § 2(a)(2).

n348 See id. § 1213(a)(1).

n349 Id.

n350 Remarks on Signing the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989, in 1 Pub. Papers 391 (1989).

n351 See Disclosure of Classified Information to Congress, 1988: Hearings Before the Senate Select Comm. on Intelligence, 105th Cong. (1998).

n352 See id. at 13-39.

n353 See id. at 45.

n354 See S. Rep. No. 105-165 (1998).

n355 See id. at 2.

n356 Id. at 5.

n357 See 144 Cong. Rec. at S1564 (daily ed. Mar. 9, 1998).

n358 See Record of Proceedings on H.R. 3829, The Intelligence Community Whistleblower Protection Act: Hearings Before the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, 106th Cong. 32-53 (1998).

n359 H.R. Rep. No. 105-747, pt.I, at 15 (1998).

n360 Intelligence Community Whistleblower Protection Act of 1998, Pub. L. No. 105-272, § 701(b)(1), 112 Stat. 2413 (1998).

REV_00260264

n361 Id. § 701(b)(3); see also H.R. Rep. No. 105- 780, at 19 (1998).

n362 McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 175 (1927).

n363 See Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 505 (1975); Anderson v. Dunn, 19 U.S. (6 Wheat.) 204, 207 (1821).

n364 Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 187 (1957).

n365 See 3 Annals of Cong. 490 (1792).

n366 See supra Pt. III.

n367 Pub. L. 67-13, 42 Stat. 20 (1921).

n368 Id. § 212.

n369 See 31 U.S.C. § 1113 (1994).

n370 Pub. L. 102-88 § 502, 105 Stat. 442 (1991).

n371 50 U.S.C. § 413a (1994), as added by the 1991 Intelligence Authorization Act, Pub. L. 102-88, 105 Stat. 442 (1991); Staff of House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, 104th Cong., Compilation of Intelligence Laws and Related Laws and Executive Orders of Interest to the National Intelligence Community 20 (Comm. Print 1995).

n372 2 U.S.C. § 194(a) (1994).

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, February 10, 2001 - 5:43 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

arrangement, but had senators wanted to press the matter, they might have forced the release of more material. As Abraham Sofaer notes, "[N]othing would have prevented a majority from demanding the material, especially in confidence, or from using their power over foreign policy, funds and offices to pressure the President to divulge." [31]

[*588]

D. The Jay Treaty

Another executive-legislative conflict occurred in 1796 after President Washington informed Congress that the Jay Treaty had been ratified. His message was sent on March 1, 1796. [32] The very next day, Representative Edward Livingston stated that "it was very desirable, therefore, that every document which might tend to throw light on the subject should be before the House." [33] He offered a resolution that President Washington "be requested to lay before this House a copy of the instructions given to the Minister of the United States who negotiated the Treaty with Great Britain, . . . together with the correspondence and other documents relative to the said Treaty." [34] Recognizing that some of the negotiations were probably unfinished, Livingston modified his resolution by adding this language: "Excepting such of said papers as any existing negotiation may render improper to be disclosed." [35] Explaining the role of the House in the treaty process, Livingston said that the House possessed "a discretionary power of carrying the Treaty into effect, or refusing it their sanction." [36] Without the papers, the House might decide to withhold appropriations needed to implement the Treaty. Representative Albert Gallatin agreed that the House did not have to acquiesce in decisions agreed to by the President and the Senate if a treaty encroached upon powers expressly reserved to the House, such as the regulation of trade. [37]

After weeks of debate, the House supported the Livingston resolution by a margin of 62 to 37. [38] Curiously, some of the documents had already been shared with the House. Livingston, as chairman of the House Committee on American Seamen, "together with the whole committee, had been allowed access to these papers, and had inspected them. The same privilege, he doubted not, would be given to any member of that House who would request it." [39] It was during this period that Congress passed legislation to provide for the relief and protection of American seamen, many of whom had been impressed by Great Britain. [40] One member of the House said that with respect to the papers on the Jay Treaty, "he did not think there were any secrets in them. He believed he had seen them all." [41] He remarked that "[f]or the space of ten weeks any member of that House might have seen them." [42] Another member of [*589] the House noted that his colleagues could have walked over to the office of the Secretary of the Senate to see the papers, but why, he said, "depend upon the courtesy of the Clerk for information which might as well be obtained in a more direct channel?" [43]

Madison, who voted for Livingston's resolution, elaborated on his views regarding executive-legislative struggles over information. He began by avowing his intent to proceed "with the utmost respect to the decorum and dignity of the House, with a proper delicacy to the other departments of Government, and, at the same time, with fidelity and responsibility, for our constituents." [44] He wanted the resolution drafted in such a form "as not to bear even the appearance of encroaching on the Constitutional rights of the Executive." [45] Livingston's amendment to his resolution, Madison felt, went a long way toward removing constitutional objections. [46] Madison proposed the following language to further ease the tensions between the branches: "Except so much of said papers as, in his judgment, it may not be consistent with the interest of the United States, at this time, to disclose." [47] Madison's amendment failed by a vote of 37 to 47. [48]

REV_00260222

In denying the House request for papers, Washington cited a number of reasons, including the need for caution and secrecy in foreign negotiations as well as the exclusive role of the Senate to participate as a member of the legislative branch in treaty matters. [49] Washington said that the only ground on which the House might request documents regarding treaty instructions and negotiations would be impeachment, "which the resolution has not expressed." [50] Washington's decision to withhold documents from the House was not an exercise of executive privilege, because he acknowledged that "all the papers affecting the negotiation with Great Britain were laid before the Senate, when the Treaty itself was communicated for their consideration and advice." [51]

Washington's message to the House is unsatisfactory on several grounds. First, the House was not requesting documents as part of the treaty process. That process was complete; the Jay Treaty had been negotiated, approved by the Senate, and ratified. The House merely was requesting documents as part of the post-treaty process-the appropriation of funds to implement the treaty. The House had a right to whatever papers it needed to make an informed legislative judgment. Second, Washington seemed to understand that right; a letter from Hamilton to Washington [*590] implied that Washington had initially considered giving the House the papers it requested:

The course you suggest has some obvious advantages & merits careful consideration. I am not however without fears that there are things in the instructions to Mr. Jay which good policy, considering the matter externally as well as internally, would render it inexpedient to communicate. This I shall ascertain to day. A middle course is under consideration-that of not communicating the papers to the house but of declaring that the Secretary of State is directed to permit them to be read by the members individually. [52]

In other words, because Washington seemed prepared to submit the papers to the House, Hamilton was offering an intermediate position of retaining the papers in the custody of the Secretary of State while allowing members of the House to come and read them in his presence. The editor of Hamilton's papers reported that, in an unfound letter to Hamilton, Washington "apparently suggested that he planned to comply with the request in Livingston's resolution." [53]

Hamilton, no longer in the administration, later advised President Washington to deny the House the documents it requested on the Jay Treaty. He thought that production of the papers "cannot fail to start [a] new and unpleasant Game-it will be fatal to the Negotiating Power of the Government if it is to be a matter of course for a call of either House of Congress to bring forth all the communication however confidential." [54] Having taken a hard line, Hamilton cautioned Washington not to appear too abrupt or imperious when communicating to the House: "[A] too peremptory and unqualified refusal might be liable to just criticism." [55] Hamilton's admonishment was good advice.

REV_00260223

Shortly after Washington's message to the House on the papers, Representative Thomas Blount introduced two resolutions, which were both adopted 57 to 35, stating that the House of Representatives did not claim any agency in making treaties, but, that when a Treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend, for its execution, as to such stipulations, on a law or laws to be passed by [*591] Congress. And it is the Constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives, in all such cases, to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such Treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon, as, in their judgment, may be most conducive to the public good. [56]

Madison, supporting the Blount resolutions, said that the House "must have a right, in all cases, to ask for information which might assist their deliberations on the subjects submitted to them by the Constitution; being responsible, nevertheless, for the propriety of the measure." [57] Madison was "as ready to admit that the Executive had a right, under a due responsibility, also, to withhold information, when of a nature that did not permit a disclosure of it at the time." [58] Yet, Madison expressed some misgivings about Washington's rationale that the papers were not related to any objective of the House:

[The rationale] implied that the Executive was not only to judge of the proper objects and functions of the Executive department, but, also, of the objects and functions of the House. He was not only to decide how far the Executive trust would permit a disclosure of information, but how far the Legislative trust could derive advantage from it. It belonged, he said, to each department to judge for itself. If the Executive conceived that, in relation to his own department, papers could not be safely communicated, he might, on that ground, refuse them, because he was the competent though a responsible judge within his own department. If the papers could be communicated without injury to the objects of his department, he ought not to refuse them as irrelative to the objects of the House of Representatives; because the House was, in such cases, the only proper judge of its own objects. [59]

The House had driven home its point: if a treaty entered into by the President and the Senate required legislation and appropriations to be carried out, the House would be strongly positioned to insist on whatever papers and documentation it needed to judge the merits of the treaty. Denied such information, it could threaten to block implementation. It might easily tell the President: "Sorry, without additional documents supplied by you, we have inadequate grounds to pass the necessary legislation."

[*592]

Precisely those conditions prevailed in 1796 because President Washington needed the support of both Houses to pass an appropriation of $ 90,000 to implement the Jay Treaty. [60] Congressman Samuel Maclay lamented the situation, noting that members of the House, having been denied the papers they requested, "were left to take their measures in the dark; or, in other words, they were called upon to act without information." [61] He proposed the following preamble and resolution:

The House . . . are of opinion that [the treaty] is in many respects highly injurious to the interests of the United States; yet, were they possessed of any information which could justify the great sacrifices contained in the Treaty, their sincere desire to cherish harmony and amicable intercourse with all nations, and their earnest wish to co-operate in hastening a final adjustment of the differences subsisting between the United States and Great Britain, might have induced them to waive their objection to the Treaty; . . . Therefore,

Resolved, That, under the circumstances aforesaid, and with such information as the House possess, it is not expedient at this time to concur in passing the laws necessary for carrying the said Treaty into effect. [62]

The House never voted on Maclay's language. After a lengthy debate, the bill to appropriate funds to implement the treaty passed by the narrow margin of 51 to 48. [63] James Madison voted against the bill. [64] An earlier test vote showed the House divided 49 to 49, with the Speaker willing to break the tie to support the treaty. [65] The appropriation was enacted into law. [66] Given the closeness of the vote, had the opposition maintained a narrow margin, it seems reasonable that President Washington would have shared with the House-or with a few selected opponents-the documents needed to swing some votes.

E. The Louisiana Purchase

In 1803, after President Jefferson entered into negotiations with France for the Louisiana Purchase, he had considerable doubts about the legality of what he had done. On the basis of a provisional appropriation of $ 2 million to be applied toward the purchase of New Orleans and the Floridas, the Jefferson Administration entered [*593] into an agreement with France to buy the whole of the Louisiana Territory. [67] Jefferson thought that the executive officials who had negotiated the terms "have done an act beyond the Constitution." [68] Because Congress would have to "ratify and pay for it," [69] the treaty "must of course be laid before both Houses, because both have important functions to exercise respecting it." [70]

Jefferson sent copies of the ratified treaty to both the House of Representatives and the Senate, explaining: "You will observe that some important conditions can not be carried into execution but with the aid of the Legislature, and that time presses a decision on them without delay." [71] The House debated at length a resolution asking Jefferson to submit certain papers and documents relating to the treaty. [72] Some portions of the resolution were adopted, others rejected. [73] The resolution as a whole went down to defeat, 57 to 59. [74] With or without the resolution, there is little doubt that the administration was willing to provide the House with whatever documents it needed to support the treaty. Subsequently, the House joined the Senate in passing legislation to enable Jefferson to take possession of the Louisiana Territory. [75]

F. Subsequent Disputes

On other occasions, the House opposed treaties that required appropriations, two examples being the Gadsden Purchase Treaty with Mexico in 1853 [76] and the Alaskan Purchase Treaty with Russia in 1867. [77] The need to have support from both houses for certain treaties was recognized in a reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands in 1876. [78] A proviso made the treaty dependent on the consent by both houses. [79] A commercial treaty with Mexico in 1883 contained a clause making its validity [*594] dependent on action by both houses. [80] The House Committee on Ways and Means interpreted the language to mean that the House had a voice in treaties affecting revenue. [81] Although additional conventions extended the time available for congressional approval, the House refused to support the treaty and it did not take effect. [82] The use of statutes that authorize reciprocal trade agreements have also protected the prerogatives of the House in other matters of foreign commerce, tariffs, and revenues. [83]

The House continues to make its will felt in treaty matters. Although the Ford Administration believed it could enter into an executive agreement with regard to military bases in Spain, the Senate insisted it be done by treaty. [84] Later, members of both the House and the Senate objected to language in the treaty that appeared to make appropriations mandatory over a five-year period. [85] In the end, the prerogatives of the appropriations and authorization committees were respected. The Senate Resolution of Advice and Consent contained a declaration that the sums referred to in the Spanish treaty "shall be made available for obligation through the normal procedures of the Congress, including the process of prior authorization and annual appropriations." [86] Congress enacted legislation in 1976 to authorize the appropriation of funds needed to implement the Spanish treaty. [87]

The Spanish Bases Treaty was replaced by an executive agreement in 1982, but congressional interests were again protected. The agreement stipulated that the supply of defense articles and services are subject to "the annual authorizations and appropriations contained in United States security assistance legislation." [88] Although the agreement promised support "in the highest amounts, the most favorable terms, and the widest variety of forms," it also conditioned such support on what "may be [*595] lawful and feasible." [89] In blunter terms: Spain would get what Congress decided.

The role of the House in international agreements was debated again in 1994 when President Clinton submitted the Uruguay Round Agreements to Congress as a bill rather than as a treaty. [90] The purpose of the bill was to implement the worldwide General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). [91] Professor Laurence H. Tribe testified that certain features of the bill would so alter the dynamics of state-federal relations that ratification of a treaty by two-thirds of the Senate was necessary, given the Senate's special role in representing the states as political units. [92] However, there are no clear constitutional guidelines on the types of national policythat must be included in a treaty only and not in a statute. The subject matter of NAFTA and GATT-international trade-is certainly within the constitutional jurisdiction of Congress as a whole to "regulate commerce with foreign nations" [93] and therefore merits action by both houses through the regular statutory process. [94]

REV_00260226

[Separation of Powers] [3]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 21641 / 20755
9694

Box 52
Folder 14

REV_00260266

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)

*8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 631, **

Copyright (c) 2000 Publications Council of the College of William and Mary
William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal

April, 2000

8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 631

LENGTH: 12476 words

SYMPOSIUM: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND THE CLINTON PRESIDENCY: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE: THE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION IN THE COURTS

Neil Kinkopf*

*Assistant Professor of Law, Georgia State University College of Law. I wish to thank David Barron, Jonathan Entin, Dawn Johnsen, and Eric Segall.

SUMMARY:
... [1] This Essay focuses on a relatively rare setting: the judicial treatment of executive privilege claims. ... [23] President Nixon refused to comply fully with the subpoena, asserting executive privilege. ... [40] The court thus was asked to determine: "How far down the line does the presidential communications privilege go?" [41] To resolve this question, the court applied the general separation of powers principle: "The ultimate question is whether restricting the presidential communications privilege to communications that directly involve the President will 'impede the President's ability to perform his constitutional duty.'" [42] The court then concluded that the general separation of powers principle required that it apply the presidential communications privilege to communications received by presidential advisors within the scope of their advisory roles. ...

TEXT:
[*631]

Exploring the role of the judicial branch of the federal government in Clinton- era executive privilege claims, Neil Kinkopf suggests that courts have misunderstood executive privilege. Professor Kinkopf points out that federal courts have given different treatment to executive privilege claims asserted in judicial and congressional arenas, protecting the Judiciary from encroachment by the executive branch, while avoiding becoming involved in controversies among the political branches. He argues that the judicial confusion about executive privilege stems from the fact that courts have interpreted cases such as Clinton v. Jones to be about the separation of powers between the executive and judicial branches, rather than about the interpretation of federal jurisdictional statutes. Professor Kinkopf proposes judicial and legislative responses that could provide remedies for the problem of judicial misunderstanding of executive privilege in the future.

The Jones case presented a peculiarly apt setting for the application of the Clear Statement Rule. The Court pointed to the two major federal jurisdiction statutes as the source of federal court authority to hear the lawsuit. [112] Federal courts have "jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." [113] Federal courts also have "jurisdiction of all civil actions where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $ 75,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is between citizens of different states." [114] Neither of these jurisdictional statutes states that it applies to the President. Indeed, the primary setting in which these statutes operate likely involves civil litigation among private individuals or corporations. The APA, by contrast, operates exclusively in the context of federal administrative action. [115]

The clear statement rule avoids interpreting legislation to alter the balance of governmental power when Congress has not expressed statutorily such an intention [*648] and thus has not rendered, even implicitly, a judgment that the alteration is constitutionally permissible. In fact, because Congress appears to have made an exhaustive review of the APA's applicability to the spectrum of federal authorities, it is conceivable that Congress also considered the possibility that the statute might apply to the President. [116] The federal question and diversity jurisdiction statutes, by contrast, do not waive the sovereign immunity of the federal government or operate primarily as mechanisms to regulate the behavior of federal agencies or officials. [117] Nothing on the face of these statutes would draw Congress' attention to the separation of powers question that President Clinton raised in Jones. [118]

The Jones case also directly implicated the clear statement rule's competency rationale. The President's arguments in Jones were political, as is inevitable with such a separation of powers issue. He argued that the burdens of civil litigation would substantially distract him from the duties of his office and that civil litigation would be used as a political weapon. [119] The Supreme Court responded that, "Most frivolous and vexatious litigation is terminated at the pleading stage or on summary judgment, with little if any personal involvement by the defendant." [120] It is difficult to imagine a group of nine lawyers believing this assertion at the time the opinion was written. [121] In hindsight, each of the President's assertions seems powerful, while the Court's response appears preposterous and naive. In light of subsequent events, the [*649] prospect of politically motivated litigation against a President seems anything but remote. [122]

The most significant error in Jones, however, was not the Court's political judgment. Rather, the most important misstep was the Court's decision to attempt a political judgment at all. The Clear Statement Rule reflects the understanding that the Judiciary is not well-equipped to make political judgments; indeed, it is designed to be ill-equipped to make such determinations. [123] For this reason, the Court repeatedly defers to the expressed, or fairly implied, judgment of the political branches in separation of powers cases, [124] and it abstains from supplying a judgment in cases in which the political branches cannot be fairly understood to have spoken. Distracted by the misperception that its own turf was at stake, the Court in Jones failed to recognize that the political branches had never made the judgment that the general federal civil jurisdiction statutes would not upset the separation of powers if applied to the President, even for suits arising from occurrences that pre-date his term in office.

The Court in Nixon, by contrast, came to the correct conclusion because it involved enforcement of the criminal law. [125] It simply presents no genuine separation of powers issue to say that the President is subject to the prohibitions of the federal criminal code. Thus, the President may not commit mail fraud or bribery. Applying these proscriptions to the President in no way threatens any separation of powers value.

The ratification debates demonstrate the understanding that the President would be subject to the criminal laws. [126] Opponents of the Constitution's ratification raised as a chief objection the prospect of a President who, like a monarch, would not be [*650] subject to the proscriptions of the criminal law. [127] Advocates of ratification repeatedly highlighted the President's amenability to law as an important feature of the document. [128] These considerations find expression in the text of the Constitution.

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States, but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment, according to law. [129]

It is a fundamental premise of the structure of the presidency that the President is not exempt from the criminal law.

The Nixon case presented these fundamental considerations. The investigation in that case centered on criminal wrongdoing by the President and his close aides and advisers. [130] President Nixon had been named an unindicted co- conspirator. [131] Compelling the President to comply with a subpoena duces tecum under these circumstances does not generate tension with the constitutional separation of powers. Given the fundamental commitment that the President be subject to criminal proscriptions, compliance with the subpoena was consonant with the constitutional structure of the office.

The problem with Nixon is not the decision itself, but the way it has come to be understood, especially in Espy. The court in Espy did not pay careful attention to the factual setting of the prosecutor's request for information. The investigation of Secretary Espy did not implicate even remotely the possibility of presidential involvement. Absorbed by concern for its own constitutional turf, the District of Columbia Circuit asserted the mechanisms of criminal law enforcement as a proxy [*651] for its own Article III powers. [132] This led the court to discount the force of the President's privilege claim. The court ignored the possible chilling effect of overriding executive privilege in a context like Espy. Future presidents will be hamstrung in their ability to conduct any sort of internal investigation into allegations of wrongdoing. Undermining the ability of the President to root out misfeasance within the executive branch does not advance the values underlying the constitutional structure of an independent executive.

Espy's formulation of the standard governing executive privilege in the criminal law context-that evidence be "directly relevant" n133-is less troublesome than how courts understa[d] that standard. As long as courts erroneously see their own constitutional position at stake in these disputes, they predictably will undervalue legitimate assertions of need to keep presidential communications confidential. Judges should understand that their constitutional position is not implicated significantly when they accommodate generally applicable criminal procedure statutes, which were enacted without regard for the peculiar setting of investigations of the executive branch, to that unique and delicate setting.

V. Proposal

A. Judicial Response

The Court's approach to constitutional privilege claims is basically sound. Conceptualizing the issue as one of separation of powers is appropriate. Within the separation of powers setting, the Judiciary typically and properly defers to the judgment of the political branches. [134] Problems arise when the Court mischaracterizes the separation of powers issue as implicating the constitutional functions of the Judiciary. This leads the Court to be less deferential and, as seen in Jones, to venture political judgments on questions that the political branches have not addressed. [135] The Clinton-era privilege litigation demonstrates how important it is for the Court to characterize properly the nature of the separation of powers issue before it and to apply its Clear Statement Rule in order to refrain from filling a void with its own political judgment.

The specific harm of Jones-that civil litigation is available as a political weapon against the President-remains on the books. [136] An exploration of all the possible systemic ramifications of political litigation is beyond the scope of this Essay. [137] The [*652] Jones litigation and its aftermath-the Lewinsky investigation and the impeachment proceedings-show that there are some significant problems with political litigation. The most pernicious consequence may be what can be referred to as distraction. By occupying the time and attention of the President and Congress for such a lengthy period, the matter necessarily displaced other policy items from the agendas of those institutions.

Political scientists write about the importance of agenda-setting. First, whoever controls the agenda-the order and timing in which matters are considered-can control outcomes. Second, Congress and the President can complete a finite set of business, which is markedly smaller than the set of demands for action placed on those institutions. Consequently, the ability to set the agenda and determine what actions will be considered, and in what order, can shape and, under certain circumstances, even control which actions are taken and which are neglected or rejected. [138]

The Jones precedent allows any individual or organization that can muster a colorable civil lawsuit to exert substantial influence over, or even to commandeer, the agenda of the federal government. Yet, these litigants are private individuals or organizations which are not democratically accountable. Thus, Jones grants unaccountable actors significant control over the agenda of the federal government.

The Jones case itself provides an illustration. The lawsuit would not have proceeded without the funding of a political organization that was opposed to the President-the Rutherford Institute. [139] It would be difficult to overstate the extent to which the decisions of this organization reshaped the agenda of the federal government over a period of several years.

Temporary presidential immunity from civil lawsuits would not mean that the President is entirely immune from investigation of wrongdoing that falls outside the category of criminal wrongdoing. Congress holds vast investigative and oversight jurisdiction and is not shy about asserting it. [140] A major difference between a congressional inquiry and a civil lawsuit is that Congress is democratically accountable. If oversight and investigation of the Administration occupy too significant a position on the federal agenda, the public can demand that Congress curtail or scale back its inquiries and turn its focus to matters the public deems more worthy of governmental attention. The public ultimately can enforce its demand at [*653] the ballot box, but it has no corresponding leverage over a private entity, such as the Rutherford Institute.

B. A Legislative Response

Edified by the spectacle that followed the Supreme Court's decision in Jones, Congress should respond by enacting appropriate legislation. For an analogy, Congress might look to the statutory regime governing public access to federal documents. The generally applicable statute is the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). [141] FOIA grants to the public a right of nearly immediate access to a wide range of federal information. [142] The Supreme Court held that FOIA does not apply to the Office of the President. [143] The statute covers the Executive Office of the President, [144] but the Supreme Court relied on legislative history to carve the Office of the President out of the Executive Office of the President and then to exempt the Office of the President from FOIA. [145] Subsequently, Congress enacted the Presidential Records Act (PRA) [146] to regulate the public disclosure of presidential records. [147] The PRA allows the President to maintain all presidential records and their confidentiality throughout his term or terms of office and for up to twelve years thereafter. [148]

[*654]

In the context of civil litigation, Congress should recognize that the unique status of the President requires a specifically tailored jurisdictional regime, just as the generally applicable FOIA does not account adequately for the special sensitivity of presidential records. As the PRA grants immunity to presidential records from disclosure during the President's term in office, while at the same time recognizing that orderly public disclosure thereafter serves a significant public benefit, Congress should recognize that the President should be immune from civil lawsuits during the term of his office. Once that term ends, however, it is proper for the President to be subject to civil lawsuit. The PRA prevents the system of public disclosure from being used as a political weapon against the President. Congress also should provide a deterrent against the system of civil litigation being used in a similar fashion.

REV_00260279

The plaintiff in Jones raised legitimate concerns regarding the potential effects of a temporary immunity that could last as long as eight years. [149] The plaintiff's concerns centered on the possibility that evidence might be lost or difficult to discover after the temporary immunity finally elapses. [150] The Court chose to vindicate these interests and to look to "case management" to accommodate the President's concerns. [151] Having seen that the tools of case management are ineffective, Congress should instead try to accommodate the legitimate concern of plaintiffs in the context of temporary presidential immunity.

This accommodation can be made by requiring the President, should he decide to invoke the temporary immunity, to post a bond to compensate the plaintiff for any losses that might result from delaying discovery and trial. The decision whether to require a bond in a given case and the amount of the bond should be left to the discretion of the trial judge, who would examine the particular circumstances of the case and its evidentiary setting. This requirement would be similar to the provision allowing a judge to require that a plaintiff post a bond as a condition to receiving a preliminary injunction. [152]

The following is a draft of what temporary presidential immunity legislation might look like:

SECTION 1. Once filed, all legal proceedings that may prejudice the unofficial legal rights of the person serving as President shall be suspended temporarily during the period for which the person serves as President without regard to when the events giving rise to such legal proceedings may have occurred. [153]

[*655]

SECTION 2. If a party files a cause of action covered by Section 1, the district court may, in its discretion, order the President to give security, in such sum as the court may deem proper, for the payment of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered as a result of the delay occasioned by the temporary immunity granted by Section 1.

Conclusion

The executive privilege cases arising from the Clinton Administration have raised important separation of powers issues. The judicial misperception that these cases significantly involved the constitutional role of the judiciary has been a source of real harm to our political system. Nevertheless, it is not too late for Congress and the courts to take appropriate action to prevent mischief in the future.

FOOTNOTES:

n1 See Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege: The Dilemma of Secrecy and Democratic Accountability 142-57 (1994); Dawn Johnsen, Executive Privilege Since United States v. Nixon: Issues of Motivation and Accommodation, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1127, 1140 (1999).

n2 The Reagan and Bush Administrations spawned some relevant judicial doctrine, especially in connection with the investigation of the Iran-Contra scandal, but it does not compare in quality or quantity to the judicial response to the Clinton Administration.

n3 See Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege and the Modern Presidents: In Nixon's Shadow, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1069, 1069 (1999).

n4 See Laurence H. Tribe, 1 American Constitutional Law 769-71 (3d ed. 2000).

n5 See id. It is tempting to add a category that arises by negative implication, an ultra vires privilege. Under this privilege, the President properly may refuse to comply with a demand for evidence that the requester has no authority to demand. The typical case involves a congressional demand for documents or testimony that do not fall within Congress' investigative or oversight authority. See, e.g., Christopher H. Schroeder & Neil Kinkopf, What about Burton's Contempt for the Constitution?, Legal Times, Aug. 17, 1998, at 25. The ultra vires privilege would not fall within the definition offered above because it is grounded in the constitutional attributes of Congress rather than the presidency. For this reason, it is not a power or privilege inhering in the President.

n6 See, e.g., Thomas W. Lippman, Clinton Keeps Papers On Haiti From House; Executive Privilege Invoked in Panel's Probe of Killings, Wash. Post, Sept. 26, 1996, at A20 (reporting on President Clinton's refusal to "turn over 47 documents subpoenaed by House investigators probing whether the administration knew that security agents of Haiti's U.S.-backed government had murdered political opponents")lter Pincus, Official Balks At Hearing On Bosnia, Wash. Post, Apr. 17, 1996, at A6 (reporting on a Clinton Administration official's claim to executive privilege regarding an investigation into the Administration's "policy of tolerating Iran's shipment of arms to Bosnia's Muslim-led government in 1994 and 1995 in violation of a U.N. embargo").

n7 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263, 1267 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (per curiam).

n8 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 684 (1997). The Supreme Court, of course, already had recognized absolute presidential immunity for acts taken within the broad parameters of office. See Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731, 756 (1982). In Jones, President Clinton asserted a temporary immunity from suits arising from events that preceded his election as President. See Jones, 520 U.S. at 681.

n9 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n10 See infra notes 29-35 and accompanying text.

n11 According to this principle, no branch may act in a way that prevents another branch from performing its constitutionally assigned role. An action that threatens to do so is unconstitutional unless its impact is justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of the encroaching branch. See Nixon v. Adm'r of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977); see also infra notes 12-20 and accompanying text.

n12 A number of the novel privilege claims that the Clinton Administration asserted do not fall within this category because the Administration grounded them in the distinct category of common law privileges. Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence authorizes the federal courts to develop the common law of evidentiary privileges. These common law privileges are not constitutionally mandatory and may be repealed or altered by statute. Thus, the Administration's claim of government attorney- client privilege did not raise a novel claim of constitutional executive privilege. Insofar as the government attorney-client privilege is asserted in the context of communications between the President and a government attorney acting within the scope of an attorney-client relationship, it is identical to the presidential communications privilege. The government attorney- client privilege's much broader application-to executive branch lawyering that does not implicate the President-is an instance of the common law evidentiary privilege. See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d at 1267-68. The protective function privilege raised by the Clinton Administration was not asserted to be a presidential privilege. Instead, the protective function privilege was raised as a privilege of the Secretary of the Treasury, who asked the court to recognize the privilege under its Rule 501 authority. See In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d 1073, 1075 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (per curiam).

n13 See infra Pt. II.

n14 See generally Rozell, supra note 1, at 142-57 (discussing the potential political nature of congressional response to claims of executive privilege).

n15 See Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 699-700 (1988) (asserting executive privilege in response to congressional oversight hearings into the administration of the Superfund by the EPA); Senate Select Comm. v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In Senate Select Committee, President Nixon had invoked executive privilege to protect recorded conversations between him and his aides that were the subject of a subpoena duces tecum by the Senate Select Committee investigating wrongdoing in connection with the 1972 presidential campaign and election. See Senate Select Comm., 498 F.2d at 726-27.

n16 See Senate Select Comm., 498 F.2d at 731 (applying a presumption of privilege when claimed by the President, unless Congress demonstrates that the requested evidence is critical to its function); cf. Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 833 (1997) (Souter, J., concurring): [T]he contest here . . . is in substance an interbranch controversy about calibrating the legislative and executive powers, as well as an intrabranch dispute between segments of Congress itself. Intervention in such a controversy would risk damaging the public confidence that is vital to the functioning of the Judicial Branch by embroiling the federal courts in a power contest nearly at the height of its political tension.

n17 See Rozell, supra note 1, at 151-52.

n18 520 U.S. 681 (1997).

n19 See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 708 (1974). Numerous commentators agree that the Court in Nixon was correct on this point. See, e.g., Rozell, supra note 1, at 142- 57; Steven G. Calabresi, Caesarism, Departmentalism, and Professor Paulsen, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1421, 1422 (1999) (arguing that the dispute in Nixon was nonjusticiable under the separation of powers doctrine); Johnsen, supra note 1, at 1140 ("[E]xecutive privilege is indispensable to the functioning of our system of checks and balances and separation of powers."). Nevertheless, some remain convinced that the Constitution's textual silence-buttressed by its structure and original understanding-refutes any claim of executive privilege. See Raoul Berger, Executive Privilege: A Constitutional Myth (1974); Saikrishna Bangalore Prakash, A Critical Comment on the Constitutionality of Executive Privilege, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1143 (1999). I accept as correct the Court's view, though it is beyond the scope of this Essay to attempt to resolve the disagreement in the literature.

n20 The Court declared, "The privilege is fundamental to the operation of Government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution." Nixon, 418 U.S. at 708.

n21 See id. at 687.

n22 See id.

n23 See id. at 687-88.

n24 See id. at 688.

n25 See id. at 703.

n26 See id.

n27 See id. at 706. As to Nixon's claim, the Court ruled that the qualified privilege was overcome by the demonstrated and particularized need of the criminal justice system. See id. at 713.

n28 See, e.g., Clinton v. New York, 524 U.S. 417 (1998) (applying bicameralism and presentment requirements to a delegation to the President); Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 946-51 (1983) (applying bicameralism and presentment requirements to a legislative veto); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 124-43 (1976) (per curiam) (applying the Appointments Clause).

n29 See Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 514 U.S. 211, 240 (1995) (holding that the constitutional separation of powers was violated when a provision of the Securities Exchange Act directed courts to reopen final judgments).

n30 See, e.g., Metropolitan Washington Airports Auth. v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, 501 U.S. 252 (1991); Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986). In Bowsher, the Court struck down the Gramm-Rudman Balanced Budget Act, which authorized the Comptroller General to make cuts necessary to bring the federal budget into balance. Because Congress had statutory authority to remove the Comptroller, the Court concluded that Congress could control the Comptroller and, through him, could control the power to make budget cuts. Therefore, Congress had aggrandized its own power. This rationale would have been a more persuasive basis for the Court's holding in Chadha. See Tribe, supra note 4, at 678-79. The Court also recharacterized one of its earlier cases, Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926), which declared unconstitutional a statute requiring the President to receive the advice and consent of the Senate before removing a postmaster first class. The Court in Bowsher contended that the constitutional defect of the removal provision was that it aggrandized Congress' power. See Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 724-26.

n31 Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443 (1977).

n32 See id. This formulation has been repeated often. See, e.g., Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681 (1997); Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748 (1996); Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 381 (1989); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988); Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833 (1986).

n33 See Plaut, 514 U.S. at 240.

n34 See generally Neil Kinkopf, Of Devolution, Privatization, and Globalization: Separation of Powers Limits on Congressional Authority to Assign Federal Power to Non-Federal Actors, 50 Rutgers L. Rev. 331, 348-57 (1998) (outlining the major court decisions on separation of powers).

n35 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681; In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998); In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d 1073 (D.C. Cir. 1998); In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729 (D.C. Cir. 1997) [hereinafter Espy].

n36 See Espy, 121 F.3d at 734.

n37 See id. Espy was acquitted on all 30 counts that were submitted to the jury; the judge dismissed eight additional counts. See Neil A. Lewis, Espy is Acquitted on Gifts Received While in Cabinet, N.Y. Times, Dec. 3, 1998, at A1.

n38 See Espy, 121 F.3d at 735. The White House Counsel recommended that the President take no action in large part because Espy already had tendered his resignation and made payments reimbursing all of the questionable gratuities. The President accepted his counsel's recommendation. See id.

n39 See id.

n40 See id.

n41 Id. at 746.

n42 Id. at 751 (quoting Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 691 (1988)). Judge Wald's opinion poses this question within the broad separation of powers framework, first noting that "'even when a branch does not arrogate power to itself, . . . the separation-of-powers doctrine requires that a branch not impair another in the performance of its constitutional duties.'" Id. (quoting Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748, 757 (1996)).

n43 See id. at 751-52.

n44 See id. at 752.

n45 See id. at 753-54.

n46 See id. at 753.

n47 For a discussion of this aspect of Nixon, see infra notes 75-79 and accompanying text.

n48 Espy, 121 F.3d at 753-54 (emphasis added). The court made these statements in the course of denying an argument that the judicial "need" for the evidence be greater-specifically that it be "critical" to an accurate judicial determination. See id. at 754.

n49 Id. at 754.

n50 Id. (citing Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 17(c)).

n51 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263, 1268 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (per curiam); In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d 1073, 1075 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

n52 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d at 1271-73.

n53 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d at 1268; In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d at 1075.

n54 See supra notes 19-20 and accompanying text.

n55 See In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d at 1074. The Secret Service is a bureau within the Department of the Treasury.

n56 See In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d at 1075-79.

n57 520 U.S. 681 (1997).

n58 See id. at 684.

n59 457 U.S. 731 (1982).

n60 See id. at 757-58.

REV_00260284

n61 See Jones, 520 U.S. at 684.

n62 See id. at 697.

n63 See id. at 698.

n64 Id. at 701 (quoting Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748 (1996)).

n65 See id.

n66 See id.

n67 See id.

n68 Id. at 708. For a criticism of this assurance, see infra notes 136-40 and accompanying text.

n69 See Jones, 520 U.S. at 708.

n70 Id. at 703-04 ("The fact that a federal court's exercise of its traditional Article III jurisdiction may significantly burden the time and attention of the Chief Executive is not sufficient to establish a violation of the Constitution.") (emphasis added).

n71 Id. at 704. The Court offered no citation for this proposition and it directly contradicted its holding in Dalton v. Specter. 511 U.S. 462, 472-74 (1994) (finding that "claims simply alleging that the President has exceeded his authority are not 'constitutional' claims subject to judicial review under the" Franklin exception for review of constitutional claims). The Court later referred to Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952), and Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803), but, in Dalton, it construed these cases as limited to the question of whether the President had violated the Constitution. See Dalton, 511 U.S. at 463. The Court in Dalton expressly rejected the proposition that the courts have the authority to review presidential action merely to determine whether the action is within the law. See id. at 472. A claim that presidential action is ultra vires is not sufficient to invoke the court's jurisdiction, according to the Dalton decision. See id. The claim must assert an independent constitutional violation. See id. The Courts pronouncement in Dalton is deeply flawed. First, it ignores a fundamental commitment of the Constitution's structure: that the federal government is a government of limited and enumerated powers. The Dalton decision offers no response to the argument that ultra vires action is unconstitutional as a violation of this component of the Constitution's structure. Even taking a clause-bound approach, ultra vires action by the President violates the Take Care Clause: the President's duty to take care that the law be faithfully executed includes taking care to comply with the Constitution and the limits it imposes on governmental action. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3; see also Neil Kinkopf, The Progressive Dilemma, 75 Notre Dame L. Rev. (forthcoming 2000). Nevertheless, the Court only recently had decided Dalton and ought to have attempted to explain how it squared with the broad assertion in Jones.

n72 See Jones, 520 U.S. at 703.

n73 Id. at 702.

n74 See McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (1 Wheat.) 316, 407 (1819).

n75 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n76 Id. at 707.

Introduction

The Clinton Administration is fertile ground for an examination of executive privilege. No administration since President Nixon's has yielded such a spate of executive privilege controversies. These controversies play out in a variety of fora and are resolved most frequently through the process of political accommodation. [1] This Essay focuses on a relatively rare setting: the judicial treatment of executive privilege claims. [2]

Exactly what "executive privilege" means has never been entirely clear. While presidents since George Washington have asserted some form of the privilege, it is emblematic of the privilege's mutability that the phrase "executive privilege" was not coined until the Eisenhower Administration. [3] Executive privilege is remarkably [*632] protean; it can assume a seemingly limitless array of forms and, consequently, is difficult to grasp. Regarding executive privilege as a heading for these multifarious claims is a standard account. [4] For the purposes of this Essay, "executive privilege" refers to the variety of privileges and immunities, grounded in the constitutional structure of the presidency, that allow the President to withhold information or refrain from participation in the processes of the other branches. These privileges and immunities include the state secrets privilege, the presidential communications privilege, and the presidential immunity from civil suit for official acts. [5] In addition to asserting several of the sanctioned categories of executive privilege listed above, [6] the Clinton Administration has claimed a number of privileges and immunities that had never before been the subject of judicial rulings, including the government attorney-client privilege [7] and temporary presidential immunity from civil suit. [8]

The Clinton Administration has seen two important developments in the judicial doctrine of separation of powers. First, in the twenty-five years since the Supreme Court held, in United States v. Nixon, [9] that executive privilege is grounded in the constitutionally created separation of powers, the Court has substantially developed [*633] and consolidated its understanding of separation of powers. [10] Federal courts in the Clinton era have adapted the Nixon holding to this recently consolidated doctrine. When ruling on the Clinton claims, the courts have followed the standard account, regarding each claim as an application of the general separation of powers principle, rather than as a distinct privilege. [11] Thus, courts have accepted the notion that this welter of factually disparate claims actually forms a single doctrinal category. [12] Second, despite having identified the relevant framework and legal principles for resolving executive privilege claims, the courts repeatedly have misapplied the doctrinal framework to those claims. [13]

In resolving the Clinton-era claims of executive privilege, the courts have followed another element of the standard account of executive privilege-the validity of any specific claim of executive privilege will depend on whether it is asserted in the congressional or judicial arena. [14] When the privilege is asserted in response to a congressional inquiry, the President's claim is pitted against Congress' constitutional powers of investigation and oversight. [15] The courts are reluctant to get involved in [*634] a dispute between the political branches. [16] When the President asserts the privilege in a judicial proceeding, the courts understand the primary separation of powers battle line to be drawn between the President's constitutional powers and those of the Judiciary. [17] This assumption, however, is a misunderstanding. The forum does not define the separation of powers combatants.

n77 Id. at 709.

n78 The lone exception comes in Section 3, which defines treason. See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 ("Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort.").

n79 Indeed, the Supreme Court invoked Article III, but never cited the provision of Article III with which President Nixon's position conflicted. This failure to cite authority has led a variety of commentators to denounce the opinion as an unfounded assertion of judicial superiority. See, e.g., Akhil Reed Amar, Nixon's Shadow, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1405, 1411 (1999) ("[Nixon] imperialized the Judiciary and marginalized the legislature.").

n80 520 U.S. 681 (1997).

n81 Id. at 682.

n82 See U.S. Const. art. III.

n83 See 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1994).

n84 See 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Even though these statutes use the language of Article III, neither confers jurisdiction to the fullest extent that Article III permits. For example, Article III allows jurisdiction in any case that presents a federal question. Section 1331, however, limits federal question jurisdiction to federal questions asserted in a well-pleaded complaint. See Louisville & Nashville R.R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U.S. 149, 152 (1908). It does not extend jurisdiction to any case in which a significant federal law defense, including a constitutional defense, is asserted if the plaintiff did not raise a federal question in pleading its claim. See id. Section 1332 limits diversity jurisdiction even more sharply from the baseline of constitutional permissibility. It imposes an amount-in-controversy threshold, currently $ 75,000, that must be exceeded to invoke federal jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). Moreover, the statute also requires complete diversity of the parties to establish jurisdiction; if any plaintiff is a citizen of the same state as any defendant, § 1332 denies jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a)(1); see also Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (1 Cranch) 267, 267 (1806). Yet, the Constitution allows jurisdiction under conditions of minimal diversity, where at least one claimant is diverse from a defendant. See U.S. Const. art III, § 2. Congress enacted the federal interpleader statute on this understanding. See 28 U.S.C. § 1335.

n85 See Jones, 520 U.S. at 685.

n86 Id. at 753.

n87 The opinion cites two academic treatments of executive privilege, neither of which establishes the proposition for which the court cites them. See Rozell, supra note 1, at 142-57; Norman Dorsen & John Shattuck, Executive Privilege, the Congress and the Courts, 35 Ohio St. L. Rev. 1 (1974). Professor Rozell draws the same distinction as the court but similarly fails to explain why the arena in which the claim of executive privilege is asserted should affect the constitutional analysis. Professor Rozell aptly notes that Congress has political tools available to force disclosure. See Rozell, supra note 1, at 148- 49. These tools are not available to the Judiciary. See id. at 151. Yet, it is not clear why or how this bears on the question of whether the privilege applies and, if so, whether it is overcome by countervailing considerations. Vague intimations of Richard Nixon's lawyer, James St. Clair, aside, no President has defied a court order to submit to judicial process. See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Nixon Now: The Courts and the Presidency After Twenty-five Years, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1337, 134-49 (1999). At least one commentator, however, apparently believes that this would be permissible. See id.

n88 See The Federalist No. 51, at 321 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

n89 See id. at 321-22.

n90 See The Federalist Nos. 47, 48, 51 (James Madison).

n91 See supra Pt. II.

n92 See The Federalist No. 51, supra note 88, at 322- 23 (James Madison).

n93 This is also how the general separation of powers principle has been applied. The only two cases in which the Court has held that a statute violates the general separation of powers principle have involved legislative encroachment on the Judiciary. See Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 87 (1982); Hayburn's Case, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 408, 412 (1792).

n94 The requirement that the separation of powers concern be genuine is an important qualification, although the executive branch sometimes overlooks it. See Memorandum from Walter Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, to Jack Quinn, Counsel to the President (Dec. 18, 1995) (visited Apr. 9, 2000) <http://www.usdoj.gov/olc/ mem ops.htm> (stating that statutes "'are construed not to include the President unless there is a specific indication that Congress intended to cover the Chief Executive.'" (quoting Memorandum from William H. Rehnquist, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, to Egil Krogh, Staff Assistant to the Counsel to the President (Apr. 1, 1969))); see also The Constitutional Separation of Powers Between the President and Congress, Op. Off. Legal Counsel (visited Apr. 9, 2000) <http://www.usdoj.gov/olc/ mem ops.htm>. This qualification is important because it distinguishes the rule of construction from Richard Nixon's famous assertion that "When the President does it that means it is not illegal." Excerpts from Interview with Nixon about Domestic Effects of Indochina War, N.Y. Times, May 20, 1977, at A16 (interview by David Frost).

n95 This is not to say that clear statement rules generally are appropriate or sound. See generally Richard Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 285 (1985); William Eskridge & Phillip Frickey, Quasi-Constitutional Law: Clear Statement Rules as Constitutional Lawmaking, 45 Vand. L. Rev. 593 (1992).

n96 Similarly, the Court has adopted the Clear Statement Rule for questions involving the vertical separation of powers-that is, federalism. In that context, the Clear Statement Rule is designed also to accord due regard to the sovereignty of the states and to ensure that the federal government has considered the ramifications of applying a generally applicable statute in that unique setting. See, e.g., Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452 (1991) (holding that the Age Discrimination in Employment Act would apply to the mandatory retirement age of state judges only if the statute clearly covered this situation); see also William N. Eskridge, Jr., et al., Legislation and Statutory Interpretation 354-62 (2000) (discussing interpretive canons used to protect state authority from federal encroachment).

n97 See, e.g., Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988) (upholding the independent counsel statute, which clearly was designed to limit the President's control over prosecutorial functions vested in the independent counsel); Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425 (1977) (applying a highly deferential standard to determine whether the Presidential Records Act violated the separation of powers doctrine).

n98 This rule of construction is closely related to the so-called avoidance canon, under which the courts will construe a statute to avoid raising constitutional questions if there is an alternative ground on which to decide the case. For example, the Supreme Court refused to interpret the Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA), 5 U.S.C. app. 2 § 1 et seq. (1994), which requires open meetings by advisory committees that comprise members who are not federal officials, as applying to the American Bar Association's Committee on Judicial

REV_00260287

Nominations. The Court's rationale was to avoid the serious separation of powers concerns that would arise if this advisory function could not be performed in confidence. Achieving that construction, however, meant significant interpretive contortions. See Public Citizen v. United States Dept. of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 443 (1989) ("[W]e cannot believe that [FACA] was intended to cover every formal and informal consultation between the President or an Executive agency and a group rendering advice."). The District of Columbia Circuit also employed the avoidance canon to FACA in holding that the First Lady is a government official; therefore, the President's health care task force was not subject to FACA. See Association of Am. Physicians & Surgeons, Inc. v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (1993). For a criticism of this approach, see Frederick Schauer, Ashwander Revisited, 1995 Sup. Ct. Rev. 71 (1995).

n99 The Federalist No. 78, supra note 88, at 465 (Alexander Hamilton).

n100 See U.S. Const. art. III, § 1.

n101 505 U.S. 788 (1992).

n102 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq. (1994).

n103 See Franklin, 505 U.S. at 796.

n104 See 5 U.S.C. § 704 (1994).

n105 5 U.S.C §§ 551(1), 701(b)(1).

n106 The Office of the President is an administrative unit that encompasses the President and his closest staff. It is a subset of the Executive Office of the President. See Kissinger v. Reporter's Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 455 U.S. 136 (1980); see also infra note 144.

n107 5 U.S.C §§ 551(1), 701(b)(1).

n108 See id.

n109 See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992). Out of respect for the separation of powers and the unique constitutional position of the President, we find that textual silence is not enough to subject the President to the provisions of the APA. We would require an express statement by Congress before assuming it intended the President's performance of his statutory duties to be reviewed for abuse of discretion .Id. at 800-01.

n110 457 U.S. 731 (1982).

n111 Franklin, 505 U.S. at 801.

n112 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 685 (1997).

n113 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1994).

n114 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

n115 See Franklin, 505 U.S. at 796-801.

n116 See id. For example, the list of exceptions demonstrates that Congress thought about how the statute should apply to Congress, the territories, and the District of Columbia. It is not much of a leap to conclude that Congress probably thought about whether the APA might also apply to the President.

n117 Of course, the jurisdiction statutes regulate the Article III Judiciary by defining the cases to which the judicial power extends. The APA is designed to grant the federal Judiciary the authority to review the administrative actions of federal agencies. See 5 U.S.C. § 581. The federal question and diversity jurisdiction statutes are designed to grant the federal Judiciary jurisdiction to hear a broad range of controversies, mainly involving parties that are wholly private. See 28 U.S.C.§§ 1331-1332.

REV_00260288

n118 Shifting the focus to the federal statutes creating the federal causes of action at issue in Jones (Title VII and § 1983) would not alter this point. The application of these statutes to a sitting president is far removed from the context in which each would typically operate.

n119 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 692-706 (1997).

n120 Id. at 708.

n121 It may not be implausible, however, in the case of the nine justices that decided Clinton v. Jones. The relevant background for Jones would have included significant experience with contemporary litigation and a substantial political office. None of the justices possessed either. By virtue of the experience of each of the individual justices, the Court was singularly unqualified to comprehend the issues and arguments involved in that case. See Verbatim, The Chron. Higher Educ., Sept. 24, 1999 ("If [the Supreme Court] is going to settle politically charged cases, it seems to me the relevant experience is politics. If you go back to the Supreme Court of the 40s and 50s, justices had substantial experience . . . . Today we have these kind-of virgins-nine justices whose cumulative political experience is slight.").

n122 To its speculation that summary judgment would prove an effective defense against political harassment, the court added its conclusion, "History indicates that the likelihood that a significant number of such cases will be filed is remote." Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 709 (1997). History now demonstrates that "a significant number of such cases" is one.

n123 See supra notes 94-100 and accompanying text.

n124 Where the political branches, through bicameralism and presentment, have determined that an institutional arrangement does not upset the proper balance of governmental power, the Court will not second guess their assessment. See, e.g., Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 381 (1989) (holding that a court will invalidate an act of Congress only for compelling constitutional reasons); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988) (emphasizing the importance of a congressional determination). Even when applying an anti- aggrandizement analysis, the Court does not make a judgment about whether a given measure will in fact yield a shift in power among the branches. See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 730 (1986) (refusing to engage in a "judicial assessment" of how a statute might, as a "practical result," affect the balance of power between the branches).

n125 See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

n126 This Essay does not offer an opinion as to whether a criminal indictment may be issued, or a trial commenced, against a President while still in office.

n127 See, e.g., The Address and Reasons of Dissent of the Minority of the Convention of Pennsylvania, Pennsylvania Packet and Daily Advertiser, Dec. 18, 1787, reprinted in The Essential Antifederalist 53, 66 (W.B. Allen & Gordon Lloyd eds., 1985) (espressing the fear that the President may use his power to "screen from punishment the most treasonable attempts that may be made on the liberties of the people")orge Mason, Objections to the Constitution of Government formed by the Convention, 1787, reprinted in The Essential Antifederalist, supra, at 11, 12 (expressing the fear that the President might use his power to "screen from punishment those whom he had secretly instigated to commit [a] crime, and thereby prevent discovery of his own guilt").

REV_00260289

n128 See, e.g., The Federalist No. 69 vol. 2, at 40, 41 (Alexander Hamilton) ("The President of the United States would be liable to be impeached, tried, and, upon conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors, removed from office; and would afterwards be liable to prosecution and punishment in the ordinary course of law.").

n129 U.S. Const. art. I, § 3 (emphasis added).

n130 See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 687-88 (1974). Although President Nixon was not a named defendant, he was an unindicted co-conspirator.

n131 See id. at 687.

n132 See Espy, 121 F.3d 729, 753-54 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

n133 Id. at 754.

n134 See supra note 124.

n135 See supra notes 119-24 and accompanying text.

n136 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681 (1997).

n137 Political litigation may have some salutary consequences. For example, subjecting the President to the various discovery mechanisms authorized by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is apt to afford the public access to a greater quantum of information about the President.

n138 See, e.g., Kenneth Arrow, Social Choice and Individual Values (1963).

n139 See Robert W. Gordon, Imprudence and Partisanship: Starr's OIC and the Clinton-Lewinsky Affair, 68 Fordham L. Rev. 639, 681 (1999) ("The Jones case was at this point being prolonged and financed by ideological opponents of the President, the Rutherford Institute.").

n140 Though vast, this jurisdiction is not unlimited. See, e.g., Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168 (1880); see also Schroeder & Kinkopf, supra note 5, at 25.

n141 5 U.S.C § 552 (1994). Other statutes-such as the Federal Records Act, 44 U.S.C. § 2901-are important to the overall system of federal record maintenance and disclosure, but are not sufficiently analogous to illuminate the issue of temporary presidential immunity from civil suit.

n142 FOIA requires that the agency subject to a request for information make a determination on the request within 10 days, absent unusual circumstances. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6). FOIA requesters know that in practice it takes much longer to get an actual response. In addition, FOIA excludes significant categories of information from its disclosure requirements. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

n143 See Kissinger v. Reporters' Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 138 (1980).

n144 The Executive Office of the President (EOP) is a more encompassing entity than the Office of the President. The EOP includes some of the permanent agencies, staffed largely by civil servants, that are housed administratively within the White House, such as the Office of Management and Budget and the Council of Economic Advisers. See White House Offices and Agencies <http://www.whitehouse.gov/WH/EOP/html/EOP org.html>. The Office of the President consists of the President's immediate staff and advisers.

REV_00260290

n145 See Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 156.

n146 44 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2206.

n147 See 44 U.S.C. § 2201.

n148 At the conclusion of his presidency, the President must turn over all records to the Archivist. The President may designate that records containing certain sensitive categories of information be withheld from access for up to 12 additional years. All other records are to be disclosed within five years or once the Archivist finishes cataloging them, if that is completed earlier. See 44 U.S.C. §§ 2203-2204.

n149 See Jones v. Clinton, 72 F.3d 1354, 1363 (1996).

n150 See id.

n151 See Clinton v. Jones, 502 U.S. 681, 702 (1997).

n152 See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c).

n153 This language is modeled on the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C. app. 510 (1994).

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, February 10, 2001 - 5:43 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

Executive privilege cases arising in the judicial arena do not implicate significantly the Judiciary's constitutional role or authority. This misunderstanding has led courts astray during the Clinton era, especially in Clinton v. Jones. [18]

This Essay seeks to explain how the courts have misunderstood executive privilege and to propose remedies for that misunderstanding. The Essay will set forth the doctrine of separation of powers and locate executive privilege controversies within that doctrine, including those involving President Clinton. With this background, the Essay then will explain how the Judiciary's misperception that its own turf was at stake in these cases led it to misapply the separation of powers doctrine. Finally, this Essay will offer a specific legislative proposal to redress this error.

I. Executive Privilege

The Supreme Court has recognized that the categories of executive privilege flow from a common source-the constitutional separation of powers. [19] United States v. [*635] Nixon expressly sets forth this position. Nixon recognized executive privilege as rooted in the constitution. [20]

Seven aides and advisers to President Richard Nixon, each serving on the staff of either the White House or the Committee to Re-Elect the President, were indicted for a variety of crimes. [21] Although the President was not indicted, he was named as an unindicted co-conspirator. [22] The district court granted the special prosecutor's motion for a subpoena duces tecum to the President requiring him to submit audio tapes of conversations with several of his indicted aides relating to their activities. [23] President Nixon refused to comply fully with the subpoena, asserting executive privilege. [24]

The Supreme Court concluded that the separation of powers encompasses the concept of executive privilege. [25] Although the Court did not articulate a specific separation of powers principle from which the privilege derives, it did conclude that the privilege is necessary to the proper functioning of the executive branch. [26] The Court further concluded that recognizing a qualified, rather than an absolute, privilege under the facts of Nixon would not violate the separation of powers doctrine. [27]

At the time Nixon was decided, the Supreme Court had not attempted to articulate a doctrinal framework to govern the resolution of separation of powers disputes. In the years since, however, the Court has set forth such a framework. Outside the limited group of cases in which a textual provision is directly controlling, [28] the Court looks to whether one branch has acted to aggrandize its own [*636] power. [29] If a branch has acted to aggrandize its own power, the action- typically enactment of a statute-is unconstitutional. [30] For all other separation of powers cases, the Court applies a general separation of powers principle: no branch may "prevent[ ] [another] Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions," [31] unless it is justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of the acting branch. [32]

REV_00260269

The general separation of powers principle, in its formulation and its application, is extremely deferential. The only instances in which a statute has been found unconstitutional under that principle involved congressional encroachments on the Judiciary. [33] When the Court's own power is not at stake, the Judiciary has deferred to the judgment of the political branches, expressed by enactment through bicameralism and presentment, that the statute or statutorily authorized action at issue does not prevent Congress or the President from fulfilling its constitutional roles. [34]

[*637]

II. Applying the Doctrinal Framework to the Clinton Administration

A. The Espy Case

In the recent spate of cases involving the Clinton Administration, the courts consistently have applied this general separation of powers principle to determine whether to recognize a privilege and how to define the parameters of the privilege. [35] The most significant case dealing with a claim of the presidential communications privilege did not involve an investigation of the President himself; instead, it concerned an investigation of the Administration's first Secretary of Agriculture, Mike Espy.

Espy was the subject of allegations that he had received illegal gifts from lobbyists and entities subject to the Department of Agriculture's regulatory jurisdiction. [36] These allegations led to the appointment of an independent counsel to investigate and, ultimately, prosecute Espy. [37] President Clinton also responded to the allegations. He ordered the White House Counsel to conduct a separate investigation to determine whether the President should take any disciplinary or executive action. [38] These distinct investigations collided when the grand jury, at the behest of the independent counsel, subpoenaed all of the records, notes, and documents that the White House Counsel had compiled in the course of its investigation. [39]

The President asserted privilege over eighty-four documents covered by the grand jury subpoena, including documents that were not prepared for the President and were never viewed by the President personally. [40] The court thus was asked to determine: "How far down the line does the presidential communications privilege go?" [41] To resolve this question, the court applied the general separation of powers principle: "The ultimate question is whether restricting the presidential communications privilege to communications that directly involve the President will 'impede the President's ability to perform his constitutional duty.'" [42] The court then concluded [*638] that the general separation of powers principle required that it apply the presidential communications privilege to communications received by presidential advisors within the scope of their advisory roles. [43]

As in United States v. Nixon, the court in Espy ruled that the presidential communications privilege is a qualified privilege. [44] The court returned to Nixon for guidance in determining whether the President ultimately could withhold the subpoenaed documents. [45] The court read Nixon to require a balance between the President's interest in confidentiality and the public interest in disclosure. [46] The public interest, however, is described in terms of the judicial role, as it was in Nixon. [47] The court in Espy cited Nixon in characterizing the interest that weighs against the President's interest as the "need for evidence in a pending criminal trial" in which the evidence bears on, or is relevant to, "an accurate judicial determination." [48]

The court in Espy then concluded that the balance would require the President to disclose privileged information whenever the evidence is "directly relevant" and is not available "with due diligence" from another source. [49] The first requirement-that the evidence be directly relevant-does not obviously yield a significant change from the generally applicable discovery requirement that evidence be relevant. The opinion itself concedes, "In practice, this component can be expected to have limited impact." [50] Thus, the court in Espy reduced the separation of powers to a rule of etiquette: a prosecutor should approach the President only if the evidence sought is not reasonably available elsewhere.

B. In re Lindsey and In re Sealed Case

In two of the most widely reported Clinton-era cases, the Administration asked the courts to recognize previously untested privilege claims: the government attorney-client privilege and the protective function, or secret service, privilege. Neither case [*639] yielded a Supreme Court opinion. The Administration did not contend in either case that the privilege was constitutionally based. Instead, the Administration asked the District of Columbia Circuit to recognize the privilege under Federal Rule of Evidence 501, which authorizes the federal courts to develop common law evidentiary privileges. [51]

The court recognized the government attorney-client privilege, but held that the privilege dissolves in the context of a criminal proceeding. [52] In this setting, the relevant inquiry focuses on the presidential communications privilege as expounded in Espy. [53] Thus, the availability of the privilege comes under the general separation of powers principle. [54] The President did not assert the protective function privilege. Instead, the Secretary of the Treasury asserted this privilege to prevent Secret Service officers from being required to testify before the grand jury. [55] Because the President was absent from this proceeding and the Treasury Department did not raise the separation of powers issue, the court did not discuss the general separation of powers principle and resolved the case under its common law precedents as authorized by Rule 501. [56]

C. Clinton v. Jones

The lone case to draw an opinion on the merits from the Supreme Court is also the most prominent privilege case of the Clinton Administration: Clinton v. Jones. [57] In Jones, President Clinton asserted temporary immunity from civil suit for actions undertaken before he took office as President. [58] Thus, he sought to extend a qualified application of Nixon v. Fitzgerald. [59] In Nixon, the Supreme Court held that the President enjoys absolute immunity from civil suit for actions undertaken within the broad parameters of his official capacity. [60] The Court rejected President Clinton's claim of temporary immunity. [61]

President Clinton's principal argument relied on the separation of powers principle. He contended that requiring the President to submit to civil litigation while [*640] in office would undermine seriously his ability to fulfill his constitutional role, thus violating the general separation of powers principle. [62] The Supreme Court agreed that the President had identified the relevant question. [63] In articulating the general separation of powers test, the Court "recognized that 'even when a branch does not arrogate power to itself . . . the separation-of-powers doctrine requires that a branch not impair another in the performance of its constitutional duties.'" [64] The Court, however, was unpersuaded by the President's contention that submitting to civil litigation would undermine impermissibly his ability to perform his constitutional duties. [65]

The Court believed that requiring the President to defend a civil lawsuit would not place a substantial burden on him. It found support for this view in history; only three presidents had ever been subject to suit for their private conduct. [66] The Supreme Court also anticipated that the district court would be capable, through sensitive case management, to accommodate the schedule and other exigencies of the presidential defendant. [67] As to the President's concern that his amenability to suit would "generate a large volume of politically motivated harassing and frivolous litigation," Justice Stevens assured that "[m]ost frivolous and vexatious litigation is terminated at the pleading stage or on summary judgment, with little if any personal involvement by the defendant." [68]

The Supreme Court, however, did not stop at rejecting the President's "predictive judgment" that allowing civil lawsuits to proceed against him while in office would disrupt his presidency seriously. [69] The Court also asserted what it perceived as the Judiciary's own institutional interest in the question: the vitality of its "traditional Article III jurisdiction." [70] The Court saw two components of that traditional constitutional jurisdiction implicated in Jones. First, "[W]hen the President takes official action, the Court has the authority to determine whether he has acted within the law." [71] Second, the President is subject to judicial process in "appropriate [*641] circumstances." [72] Here, the Court is referring to instances in which the President has been required to testify or make information available in the context of a judicial proceeding. These grounds illuminate the Court's position: the President will be subject to the judicial process-as a party, or a witness, or a source of evidence-in those instances that implicate the Court's "traditional Article III jurisdiction." [73]

III. Judicial Confusion

The Judiciary's confusion stems from a simple misunderstanding: judges fail to remember that it is a statute they are expounding. [74] In each of the Clinton-era privilege cases, the courts have viewed the separation of powers dispute as placing the President against the Judiciary. Properly construed, these cases set the President against the operation of a statute.

A. United States v. Nixon

The seed of this confusion was sown in United States v. Nixon. [75] In Nixon, the Supreme Court viewed the President's assertion of privilege as being in tension with "the primary constitutional duty of the Judicial Branch to do justice in criminal prosecutions[, which] would plainly conflict with the function of the courts under [*642] Article III." [76] The Court elaborated, "The need to develop all relevant facts in the adversary system is both fundamental and comprehensive. The ends of criminal justice would be defeated if judgments were to be founded on a partial or speculative presentation of the facts." [77]

It may have been that the President's assertion of privilege would have conflicted with the goals of criminal justice. It is odd, though, to conceptualize this conflict as implicating Article III. If withholding the evidence-in Nixon, the Watergate tapes-would have thwarted a prosecution, this would have prevented the effectuation not of Article III, but of the provisions of the federal criminal code that the Watergate defendants were charged with violating. Article III does not create a criminal justice system or, with one exception, define criminal law. [78] Nothing in Article III required prosecution of the Watergate defendants. Thus, President Nixon's position with regard to turning over the Watergate tapes was in conflict with a congressional enactment, and not with any requirement of Article III. [79]

B. Clinton v. Jones

The Court followed Nixon decision's lead in Clinton v. Jones. [80] It saw the case as "merely asking the courts to exercise their core Article III jurisdiction to decide cases and controversies." [81] This formulation oversimplified the source of federal jurisdiction. Article III does not confer jurisdiction on the federal courts to hear cases such as the Jones lawsuit. Instead, Article III generally looks to Congress to determine whether, and to what extent, to grant the federal courts jurisdiction to hear cases. [82]

The Clinton v. Jones decision did not implicate jurisdiction conferred directly by the Constitution. The authority of the federal courts to hear the Jones case was based not on Article III, but on the two statutes that confer the vast majority of federal jurisdiction: the general federal question statute [83] and the diversity of citizenship [*643] statute. [84] As a result, the Jones case did not involve a tension between Article III and Article II. Rather, the case raised a conflict between the constitutional attributes of the presidency and the application of a congressional enactment. The question in Jones was whether the operation of a statute would yield to the President's institutional interests. [85]

REV_00260273

The Court of Appeals fell into this same trap in Espy. The court declared, "The President's ability to withhold information from Congress implicates different constitutional considerations than the President's ability to withhold evidence in judicial proceedings." [86] Regrettably, Judge Wald's opinion does not identify what these different considerations might be. [87]

[*644]

C. Constitutional Structure

Readers of the Federalist should not have been surprised at the Court's confusion, or that its confusion would influence its separation of powers analysis. Madison anticipated that each branch would be ambitious and would seek to expand its power. [88] Moreover, each branch was expected to be vigilant in protecting its turf against incursions by the other branches. [89] The Constitution is designed to cultivate and to capitalize on these institutional instincts. [90]

In the privilege cases, however, the Judiciary's self-defense instinct leads it to conceptual confusion. In each case involving the Clinton Administration, the Judiciary saw the asserted privilege as representing a threat to the constitutional powers of the judicial branch. [91] Having perceived a threat, the Judiciary naturally placed little weight on the asserted privilege.

Because the Constitution structures the branches in opposition to one another, the power of each can be understood only in relation to the power of the others. [92] By minimizing the importance of the presidential privilege, the Judiciary can be understood to have placed relatively greater weight on its own institutional interests and to have asserted its own power. Thus, the courts responded to the threats to their own position as the Constitution's structure anticipates they will-by acting in self-defense and according little value to the competing interests of the other branches. [93]

IV. Statutory Construction: The Clear Statement Rule

Dispelling the illusion that claims of executive privilege implicate the Judiciary's constitutional position, we find a recurring issue of statutory construction: a broadly applicable statute that presents genuine separation of powers concerns if applied to the President. In construing such statutes, the Court repeatedly has invoked the Clear Statement Rule: a court interprets the statute to apply to the President only if it clearly expresses this application. [94] The reason for this rule is simple and sound. [95] [*645] Due regard for separation of powers dictates that Congress and the President expressly consider the ramifications of applying a general statute to the President and provide assurances that the statute will not apply in a way that impairs the President's ability to function within the constitutional structure of government. [96] Once a statute's scope is clearly determined to include the President, the Court is extremely deferential to the implicit judgment of the political branches that such application is consistent with the constitutional separation of powers. [97] When it is not evident that Congress ever considered whether the statute would apply to the President, the justification for deference is attenuated because the enactment of the statute no longer clearly implies a judgment by the political branches that applying the statute to the President will not upset the constitutional balance of power between the branches. [98]

REV_00260274

[*646]

The federal Judiciary is not a political branch. The judicial branch is designed to be insulated from politics in order "to secure a steady, upright, and impartial administration of the laws." [99] The Constitution grants federal judges life tenure, during good behavior, and provides that their salaries may not be reduced while in office. [100] Because federal judges may be removed only in extraordinary circumstances, they are not subject formally to the supervision and control of any other political actor or constituency. The federal Judiciary's independence and insulation from politics render it institutionally the least competent branch to make political judgments.

Following the implications of this design, the courts have at times strained the text of a statute to conclude that it does not cover the President. For example, the Supreme Court in Franklin v. Massachusetts [101] held that the Administrative Procedure Act's (APA) [102] provision of judicial review of final agency action does not apply to final administrative action undertaken by the President. [103]

The APA grants to the Judiciary the jurisdiction to review final agency actions. [104] The APA defines an "agency" to be:

each authority of the Government of the United States, whether or not it is within or subject to review by another agency, but does not include-(A) the Congress; (B) the courts of the United States; (C) the governments of the territories or possessions of the United States; (D) the government of the District of Columbia. [105]

On a straight textual analysis, the term agency would seem to encompass the Office of the President. [106] That office is, under any natural usage, an "authority of the [*647] Government of the United States." [107] Under the maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius (the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another), the express exception of other potentially covered authorities strengthens the textual case that the term agency includes the Office of the President. The heads of the other branches of the federal government are excluded under the first two exceptions. [108] Application of the expressio unius maxim would suggest that the two exceptions were strong evidence that the head of the branch that was not excepted-the President-is included. Nevertheless, the Court in Franklin refused to read the APA's judicial review provisions to cover the President unless expressly provided by the statute. [109] To support this position, the Court cited Nixon v. Fitzgerald, [110] which it characterized as holding that the "Court would require an explicit statement by Congress before assuming Congress had created a damages action against the President." [111]

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)

*8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 657, **

Copyright (c) 2000 Publications Council of the College of William and Mary
William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal

April, 2000

8 Wm. & Mary Bill of Rts. J. 657

LENGTH: 10393 words

SYMPOSIUM: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND THE CLINTON PRESIDENCY: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND INTERBRANCH COMITY AFTER CLINTON

Jonathan L. Entin*

*Professor of Law and Political Science, Case Western Reserve University. The author thanks Frances Lee for suggesting some valuable references, but is entirely responsible for any errors of fact or interpretation.

SUMMARY:
... [1] Giving precise content to the powers of these three great departments of the national government has proven difficult. ... [29] Furthermore, individual members of Congress rarely will have standing to assert separation of powers claims against the executive branch. ... [120] It is possible, however, that the national parties have become more polarized over the past two decades; one study shows strikingly greater output of important legislation with unified government than with divided government during this period. ... [123] Of the thirty-one investigations that met Mayhew's criteria, almost exactly as many occurred during periods of unified government as occurred during times of divided government. ... On the other hand, if the trend toward increasing polarization between the parties suggested by data on legislative output over the past two decades is accurate, [125] we might expect to see higher levels of interbranch conflict over executive privilege during times of divided government. ...

TEXT:
[*657]

Although both constitutional theory and practical considerations offer powerful reasons for Congress and the President to prefer negotiation rather than litigation of separation of powers disputes, the Clinton Administration litigated and lost several important cases dealing with presidential power. Some commentators have suggested that these rulings will undermine the presidency for years after Clinton leaves office. Professor Entin assesses some factors, notably the phenomenon of divided government, that might have contributed to the difficulty of reaching interbranch accommodations in recent years and suggests that the long-term implications of the adverse judicial rulings may be less severe than the pessimists fear.

Introduction

REV_00260292

making notes about policy deliberations.

But the impact on executive branch relationships with Congress is likely to be rather less bleak than this overall picture suggests. A major factor here is that Congress does not have law enforcement authority. Although legislators might want to expose executive misbehavior, the denouement of the Iran-Contra hearings might give pause to thoughtful members of Congress. The two highest officials tried in the wake of those congressional hearings had their convictions overturned because of the prosecution's inability to demonstrate that it had not relied on their immunized testimony on Capitol Hill. [110] As for the reluctance of presidential aides to write down their candid views during policy deliberations, this unfortunate problem did not begin with the Clinton litigation. [111] Administrators in various agencies and departments have noted that what the executive branch regards as overly intrusive congressional oversight had been adversely affecting the quality of deliberation for years before Clinton's troubles. [112] Finally, both Congress and the President retain many incentives to reach workable accommodations about information disputes. [113] Litigating such disputes will continue to have costs in time, money, and flexibility. If, as Judge [*673] Posner has written, the impeachment process demonstrated the resiliency of American government, [114] perhaps the less epic disputes over presidential privilege will do less long-term harm than proponents of a strong presidency might now fear.

III. On Divided Government and Executive Privilege Disputes

The acrimonious relationship between President Clinton and Congress is widely attributed to the fact that, for most of his administration, the legislative branch has been controlled by the political opposition. Divided government is widely believed to be undesirable. Divided government certainly played a major role in the Clinton impeachment, and in the Nixon and Andrew Johnson impeachments as well. We should hesitate, however, before attributing too much additional significance to partisan division.

Divided government has been a common feature of American politics since Andrew Jackson's time. For almost half the period since 1832, the United States has lacked unified partisan control of the political branches. [115] Focusing more specifically on the years since World War II, an era during which divided government has been even more common, political scientists have raised questions about the conventional wisdom deploring the phenomenon. For example, David Mayhew has shown that Congress has passed about as many important laws during times of divided government as during unified government. [116] Mayhew defined these measures as those that were so regarded at the time by knowledgeable journalists and those that have been so regarded in retrospect by policy specialists. [117] Mayhew's landmark study has stimulated an outpouring of further literature, most of which has generally confirmed his conclusions. [118] His work has been extended in two significant respects. First, Mayhew focused only on bills that passed, not on bills that failed. Although passage of significant legislation is unaffected by divided government, major legislative proposals are more likely to fail under divided government than under unified government. [119] Second, Mayhew viewed the decline in the absolute number [*674] of important laws passed since 1980 as evidence of greater reliance on omnibus legislation during recent years. [120] It is possible, however, that the national parties have become more polarized over the past two decades; one study shows strikingly greater output of important legislation with unified government than with divided government during this period. [121]

REV_00260301

Executive privilege disputes between Congress and the President typically do not arise in the context of debating proposed legislation. Rather, they occur primarily in oversight and investigation. [122] Mayhew, unlike most other political scientists who have investigated divided government lately, examined the incidence of high-profile congressional investigations of executive misconduct between 1946 and 1990. [123] Of the thirty-one investigations that met Mayhew's criteria, almost exactly as many occurred during periods of unified government as occurred during times of divided government. [124] These findings suggest that partisan differences are unlikely to affect the incidence of executive privilege disputes. On the other hand, if the trend toward increasing polarization between the parties suggested by data on legislative output over the past two decades is accurate, [125] we might expect to see higher levels of interbranch conflict over executive privilege during times of divided government. This, in turn, suggests that the Clinton Administration's judicial defeats might indeed encourage a more assertive Congress to press even harder for executive branch information than it has done in the past. How far this trend will go remains uncertain due to the institutional incentives to reach accommodation that have already been discussed. [126] There were, apparently, only about thirty information disputes per year between 1964 and 1973, while perhaps hundreds of thousands of requests for information were processed amicably during the same era. [127] Even if some members [*675] of Congress take a more confrontational approach in the wake of the judicial rulings adverse to the Clinton Administration, the legislative branch might well lack the institutional capacity to handle an enormous increase in the number of disputes with the White House and the executive establishment. Indeed, many supporters of the legislative veto backed off from using that device as often as they might have desired in the years before Chadha precisely because that prospect threatened to leave Congress with no time to do anything but review administrative regulations. [128]

Conclusion

Proposals to avoid judicial resolution of constitutional issues may strike many people as subversive of the rule of law. After all, courts are supposed to decide legal disputes. Nevertheless, there are strong arguments against resort to the judicial process to determine once and for all the frontier between congressional and presidential power in executive privilege and related matters. Although Bill Clinton might have weakened his office, it remains unclear to what extent his legal defeats will have long-term consequences. Both Congress and the White House will have good reason to try to reach workable arrangements to promote an effective government in the future.

FOOTNOTES:

n1 See U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 ("All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."); id. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 ("The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America."); id. art. III, § 1 ("The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."). The implications of the linguistic differences in these vesting clauses is beyond the scope of this Article. For a suggestion that these differences imply a very strong presidency, see Steven G. Calabresi & Kevin H. Rhodes, The Structural Constitution: Unitary Executive, Plural Judiciary, 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1153, 1186-206 (1992).

REV_00260302

n2 Of course, the people elect the President only indirectly by choosing the members of the Electoral College. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2; id. amend. XII. This detail does not detract from the notion that the chief executive is nonetheless accountable to the people.

n3 See Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring) ("While the Constitution diffuses power the better to secure liberty, it also contemplates that practice will integrate the dispersed powers into a workable government."); cf. Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 293 (1926) (Brandeis, J., dissenting) ("The doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the Convention of 1787, not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power.").

n4 See U.S. Const. art. I, § 7, cl. 2.

n5 See id. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

n6 See id. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

n7 Id. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

n8 Richard E. Neustadt, Presidential Power 33 (1960) (footnote omitted).

n9 1 Alexis de Tocqueville, Democracy in America 20 (Phillips Bradley ed., 1945) (1835).

n10 Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803).

n11 See, e.g., Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417 (1998) (invalidating the Line Item Veto Act; Metropolitan Wash. Airports Auth. v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, Inc., 501 U.S. 252 (1991) (holding that members of Congress may not exercise direct control over local airports); Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361 (1989) (upholding the constitutionality of federal sentencing guidelines); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988) (rejecting a challenge to the independent counsel provisions of the Ethics in Government Act); Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986) (striking down the central mechanism for reducing federal budget deficits in the Gramm- Rudman-Hollings Act); Immigration Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1982) (invalidating a legislative veto provision in the Immigration and Nationality Act); Nixon v. Administrator of Gen. Servs., 433 U.S. 425 (1977) (upholding the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam) (rejecting the original method for appointing members of the Federal Election Commission); United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974) (limiting the scope of executive privilege in criminal investigations).

n12 See, e.g., United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 551 F.2d 384 (D.C. Cir. 1976), appeal after remand, 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977); United States v. House of Representatives, 556 F. Supp. 150 (D.D.C. 1983); Neal Devins, Congressional- Executive Information Access Disputes: A Modest Proposal-Do Nothing, 48 Admin. L. Rev. 109 (1996) [hereinafter Devins, Congressional-Executive Information]; Jonathan L. Entin, Congress, the President, and the Separation of Powers: Rethinking the Value of Litigation, 43 Admin. L. Rev. 31 (1991) [hereinafter Entin, Rethinking Litigation]; Peter M. Shane, Legal Disagreement and Negotiation in a Government of Laws: The Case of Executive Privilege Claims Against Congress, 71 Minn. L. Rev. 461 (1987) [hereinafter Shane, Legal Disagreement]; Peter M. Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge: Administrative Responses to Congressional Demands for Information, 44 Admin. L. Rev. 197 (1992) [hereinafter Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge]. One prominent commentator has argued that courts should refuse to resolve separation of powers disputes between the legislative and executive branches. See Jesse H. Choper, Judicial Review and the National Political Process 260-379 (1980). But see Deborah Jones Merritt, The Guarantee Clause and State Autonomy: Federalism for a Third Century, 88 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 15-17 & n.101 (1988) (criticizing the premises of Choper's argument); Peter L. Strauss, The Place of Agencies in Government: Separation of Powers and the Fourth Branch, 84 Colum. L. Rev. 573, 621 n.194 (1984) (noting that Choper's proposal would require significant modification of justiciability doctrines).

REV_00260303

n13 H.P. Hood & Sons, Inc. v. Du Mond, 336 U.S. 525, 535 (1949).

n14 See Entin, Rethinking Litigation, supra note 12, at 53; Shane, LegalDisagreement, supra note 12, at 465-66.

n15 See infra Pt. II.

n16 See M.J.C. Vile, Constitutionalism and the Separation of Powers 13-18 (1967).

n17 The Federalist No. 47, at 302 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961). Madison went on to warn that tyranny impended only "where the whole power of one department is exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of another department." Id. at 302-03.

n18 The Federalist No. 48, supra note 17, at 308 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

n19 The Federalist No. 51, supra note 17, at 321-22 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961).

n20 Id. at 322.

n21 See U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 8.

n22 See id. art. VI, cl. 3.

n23 See Louis Fisher, Constitutional Dialogues 233-34 (1988); Joseph M. Bessette & Jeffrey Tulis, The Constitution, Politics, and the Presidency, in The Presidency in the Constitutional Order 3, 11 (Joseph M. Bessette & Jeffrey Tulis eds., 1981); Paul Brest, The Conscientious Legislator's Guide to Constitutional Interpretation, 27 Stan. L. Rev. 585, 587 (1975); Stephen F. Ross, Legislative Enforcement of Equal Protection, 72 Minn. L. Rev. 311, 313-14 (1987).

n24 See, e.g., U.S. Const. art. I, § 9 (prohibiting bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, expenditures not authorized by an appropriations statute, and titles of nobility, as well as limiting the grounds for suspending habeas corpus); id. amend. I (forbidding laws that establish or limit free exercise of religion, or that abridge freedom of speech, press, and assembly); id. amend. V (banning double jeopardy, self- incrimination, or uncompensated takings of private property, as well as deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law).

n25 See, e.g., id. amend. XIII, § 2); id. amend. XIV, § 5; id. amend. XV, § 2.

n26 See, e.g., Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents, 120 S. Ct. 631, 644-50 (2000); City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997); Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966).

n27 See U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1.

n28 See, e.g., Cynthia R. Farina, Supreme Judicial Court Advisory Opinions: Two Centuries of Interbranch Dialogue, in The History of the Law in Massachusetts 353 (Russell K. Osgood ed., 1992); Mel A. Topf, The Jurisprudence of the Advisory Opinion Process in Rhode Island, 2 Roger Wms. U. L. Rev. 207, 213-14 (1997); Margaret M. Bledsoe, Comment, The Advisory Opinion in North Carolina: 1947 to 1991, 70 N.C. L. Rev. 1853 (1992); Terrance A. Smiljanich, Commentary, Advisory Opinions in Florida: An Experiment in Intergovernmental Cooperation, 24 U. Fla. L. Rev. 328 (1972).

n29 See, e.g., Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464 (1982); Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208 (1974).

n30 See, e.g., Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997); Campbell v. Clinton, 203 F.3d 19 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 120 S.Ct. 1286 (2000); see also Department of Commerce v. U.S. House of Representatives, 119 S.Ct. 765, 779 (1999) (finding no "substantial federal question" in suit filed by one branch of Congress after resolving identical issue in case brought by other plaintiffs). For discussion of recent congressional standing jurisprudence, see Neal Devins & Michael A. Fitts, The Triumph of Timing: Raines v. Byrd and the Modern Supreme Court's Attempt to Control Constitutional Confrontations, 86 Geo. L.J. 351 (1997); Jonathan L. Entin, The Dog That Rarely Barks: Why the Courts Won't Resolve the War Powers Debate, 47 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 1305, 1308-09 (1997). At the same time, individual members do have standing to litigate personal claims that they have been treated in a discriminatory manner. See, e.g., Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

n31 See, e.g., Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992) (establishing constitutional requirements for standing); Air Courier Conference v. Postal Workers, 498 U.S. 517 (1991) (outlining prudential requirements for standing).

n32 On justiciability, see, e.g., Nixon v. United States, 506 U.S. 224 (1993); Goldwater v. Carter, 444 U.S. 996, 1002-06 (1979) (Rehnquist, J., concurring). But see Davis v. Bandemer, 478 U.S. 109, 121-27 (1986) (declining to apply the nonjusticiability doctrine); Immigration Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 940-43 (1983) (same); Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962) (same). On ripeness, see, e.g., Abbott Laboratories. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136 (1967).

n33 See Bessette & Tulis, supra note 23, at 9-10; Frederick Schauer, Easy Cases, 58 S. Cal. L. Rev. 399, 414 (1985). There is room for debate over what constitutes a bill that is subject to bicameralism and presentment, see INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983), or over who is an officer of the United States, see Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988).

n34 Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393 (1857).

n35 See 2 The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 495 (Roy P. Basler ed., 1953) (stating his acceptance of the Scott judgment as determinative of the rights of the parties to the case but rejecting the outcome as a "political rule"); see also 3 id. at 255.

n36 6 A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789-1897, at 5, 9 (James D. Richardson ed., Washington: Government Printing Office 1896) [hereinafter Messages and Papers of the Presidents].

n37 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819).

n38 2 Messages and Papers of the Presidents, supra note 36, at 576, 582.

n39 Ch. 74, 1 Stat. 596 (expired 1801).

n40 Jefferson explained in an 1804 letter to Abigail Adams that "nothing in the Constitution has given [the Judiciary] a right to decide for the executive, more than to the executive to decide for them." 4 The Writings of Thomas Jefferson 560, 561 (H.A. Washington ed., Washington, Taylor & Maury 1854).

n41 See Fisher, supra note 23, at 209-15.

n42 See Elizabeth Drew, Washington Journal 5, 45, 304- 05, 328 (1975).

n43 410 U.S. 113 (1973); see Neal Devins, Shaping Constitutional Values 100 (1996). Regan and Bush sought several times to persuade the Court to overrule Roe. See Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 844 (1992); Devins, supra, at 109-10.

n44 See Edward H. Levi, Some Aspects of Separation of Powers, 76 Colum. L. Rev. 371, 391 (1976).

n45 See Nelson W. Polsby, Congress and the Presidency 206-09 (4th ed. 1986).

n46 See Robert F. Nagel, Constitutional Cultures 18-22 (1989).

n47 See id. at 21; Shane, Legal Disagreement, supra note 12, at 464-65, 492, 501-14.

n48 See id. at 494-96; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 220-22.

n49 See Devins, Congressional-Executive Information, supra note 12, at 131, 133.

n50 See id. at 114, 135; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 201.

n51 See Contempt Proceedings Against Secretary of Commerce, Rogers C. B. Morton: Hearings and Related Documents Before the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, 94th Cong. (1975).

n52 See Devins, Congressional-Executive Information, supra note 12, at 125; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 202-03.

n53 See The Petroleum Import Fee: Department of Energy Oversight: Hearings Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Government Operations, 96th Cong. (1980). At one point, the Subcommittee on Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources voted to hold Secretary Duncan in contempt. See id. at 139.

n54 See Independent Gasoline marketers Council v. Duncan, 492 F. Supp. 614 (D.D.C. 1980).

n55 See The Petroleum Import Fee, supra note 53, at 142; Devins, Congressional-Executive Information, supra note 12, at 125-26; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 203-05.

n56 See Shane, Legal Disagreement, supra note 12, at 501-08.

n57 See id. at 501-07; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 205-07.

n58 See IRS Senior Employee Misconduct Problems: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs of the House Comm. on Government Operations, 101st Cong. (1989); Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 213- 14.

n59 See Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 213-14.

n60 See id. at 214-17.

REV_00260306

n61 551 F.2d 384 (D.C. Cir. 1976), appeal after remand, 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

n62 See id.

n63 See id. at 395.

n64 Id. at 394.

n65 Id. at 395.

n66 United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 567 F.2d 121, 127 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

n67 Id. at 131.

n68 See Devins, Congressional-Executive Information, supra note 12, at 131.

n69 For more details on this dispute, see id. at 118- 20; Shane, Legal Disagreement, supra note 12, at 508-14; Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 207-10.

n70 556 F. Supp. 150 (D.D.C. 1983).

n71 Id. at 153.

n72 See Shane, Legal Disagreement, supra note 12, at 513-14. In addition to encouraging parties involved in interbranch disputes to negotiate rather than litigate their disagreements, the District of Columbia Circuit has sometimes denied legislators judicial relief under the doctrine of equitable discretion. Under this doctrine, plaintiffs with standing to sue had their cases dismissed even when no alternative avoidance device was available. This practice provokes considerable controversy. For a careful analysis, see Sophia C. Goodman, Note, Equitable Discretion to Dismiss Congressional-Plaintiff Suits: A Reassessment, 40 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 1075 (1990). The Supreme Court's restrictive approach to standing for congressional plaintiffs may well have sounded the death knell for this doctrine. See supra note 30 and accompanying text.

n73 462 U.S. 919 (1983). See also Process Gas Consumers Group v. Consumer Energy Council, 463 U.S. 1216 (1983), aff'g mem. Consumer Energy Council v. FERC, 673 F.2d 425 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (invalidating one-house legislative veto of administrative regulations); United States, Inc. v. FTC, 691 F.2d 575 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (en banc) (per curiam) (invalidating two- house veto of administrative regulations).

n74 See Louis Fisher, The Legislative Veto: Invalidated, It Survives, Law & Contemp. Probs., Autumn 1993, at 273, 288-91; but see Jessica Korn, The Power of Separation 39-40 (1996) (contending that provisions in appropriations should not be regarded as legislative vetoes).

n75 See Fisher, supra note 74, at 292.

n76 The sophistication, knowledge, and resources of parties to interbranch disputes suggests that compromise will not systematically disadvantage one side. The possibility of such inequalities in other settings has prompted dissents from the general enthusiasm for alternative dispute resolution. See, e.g., Owen M. Fiss, Against Settlement, 93 Yale L.J. 1073 (1984). Because lawyers representing the legislative and executive branches have different roles than do attorneys for private litigants, see Shane, Legal Disagreement, supra note 12, at 493- 94, concerns that government attorneys will be adversely affected by negotiated resolution of interbranch disputes have little validity in this context, whatever cogency they might have in other contexts. See Kevin C. McMunigal, The Costs of Settlement: The Impact of Scarcity of Adjudication on Litigating Lawyers, 37 UCLA L. Rev. 833, 848-77 (1990).

REV_00260307

n77 520 U.S. 681 (1997).

n78 See id. at 684-85.

n79 See id. at 686-87.

n80 See id. at 692.

n81 See id. at 693-94.

n82 See id. at 702.

n83 Id.

n84 See id. at 703-05.

n85 See id. at 705-07.

n86 See id. at 708.

n87 See id. at 707-08.

n88 See id. at 708-09.

n89 See id. at 708.

n90 See id. at 724 (Breyer, J., concurring).

n91 See id. at 722 (Breyer, J., concurring).

n92 See id. at 723 (Breyer, J., concurring).

n93 In re Sealed Case, 148 F.3d 1073, 1074-76 (D.C. Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied sub nom. Rubin v. United States, 525 U.S. 990 (1998).

n94 See id. at 1074.

n95 See id. at 1076.

n96 See id. at 1075.

n97 Id. at 1076.

n98 See id. at 1078.

n99 See id. at 1077-78.

n100 See id. at 1079. This point is reminiscent of the Supreme Court's suggestion that Congress might act to allow the President to obtain a postponement of private damage actions relating to his conduct before taking office. See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 709 (1997).

n101 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied sub nom. Office of the President v. Office of Indep. Counsel, 525 U.S. 996 (1998).

REV_00260308

n102 See id. at 1267.

n103 See id. at 1282-83.

n104 Id. at 1276.

n105 See id. at 1278-83.

n106 See id. at 1267 (citing In re Sealed Case (Espy), 121 F.3d 729, 754 (D.C. Cir. 1997)).

n107 See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 722-23 (1997) (Breyer, J., concurring in the judgment).

n108 See Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege: The Dilemma of Secrecy and Democratic Accountability 83-141 (1994); Randall K. Miller, Congressional Inquests: Suffocating the Constitutional Prerogative of Executive Privilege, 81 Minn. L. Rev. 631, 670-79 (1997); Mark J. Rozell, Executive Privilege and the Modern Presidents: In Nixon's Shadow, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 1069 (1999).

n109 See In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d at 1286-87 (Tatel, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); Randall K. Miller, Presidential Sanctuaries After the Clinton Sex Scandals, 22 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 647, 673-74 (1999).

n110 See United States v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1991); United States v. North, 910 F.2d 843 (D.C. Cir. 1990), modified on reh'g, 920 F.2d 940 (D.C. Cir. 1990).

n111 See Shane, Negotiating for Knowledge, supra note 12, at 225.

n112 See id. ("Executive employees also believe that Congress underweighs the negative impact of oversight on executive branch deliberations . . . .").

n113 See Devins, Congressional-Executive Information, supra note 12, at 114.

n114 See Richard A. Posner, An Affair of State 263-64 (1999).

n115 See Morris P. Fiorina, An Era of Divided Government, 107 Pol. Sci. Q. 387, 388 (1992). For a comparative perspective, see Matthew Soberg Shugart, The Electoral Cycle and Institutional Sources of Divided Presidential Government, 89 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 327 (1995).

n116 See David R. Mayhew, Divided We Govern 76 (1991).

n117 See id. at 37-50.

n118 See, e.g., David W. Brady & Craig Volden, Revolving Gridlock (1998); Morris Fiorina, Divided Government (2d ed. 1996); Keith Krehbiel, Pivotal Politics: A Theory of U.S. Lawmaking (1998).

n119 See Sarah A. Binder, The Dynamics of Legislative Gridlock, 1947-76, 93 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 519 (1999); George C. Edwards et al., The Legislative Impact of Divided Government, 41 Am. J. Pol. Sci. 545 (1997).

n120 See Mayhew, supra note 116, at 76.

n121 See Bruce I. Oppenheimer, The Importance of Elections in a Strong Congressional Party Era: The Effect of Unified vs. Divided Government, in Do Elections Matter? 120, 126- 34 (Benjamin Ginsberg & Alan Stone eds., 3d ed. 1996).

REV_00260309

n122 See Miller, supra note 109, at 632 ("Over the past two decades, Congress and the President have engaged in increasingly bitter constitutional warfare over access to information."); Matthew Cooper Weiner, Note, In the Wake of Whitewater: Executive Privilege and the Institutionalized Conflict Element of Separation of Powers, 12 J.L. & Pol. 775, 776 (1996) ("[T]he Executive branch has either invoked or threatened to invoke executive privilege in nearly all of the major political 'scandals' of modern times . . . .").

n123 To qualify, an investigation must have generated at least 20 front-page stories in the New York Times during any Congress in the relevant time period. The story must have involved a charge of executive misconduct by a congressional committee member, committee staffer, witness, or informant, or a response to such a charge by a current or former executive official. See Mayhew, supra note 116, at 9-11.

n124 See id. at 31-32.

n125 See supra text accompanying note 123 .

n126 See supra text accompanying note 76.

n127 See supra note 50 and accompanying text.

n128 See Barbara Hinkson Craig, Chadha: The Story of an Epic Constitutional Struggle 49-50, 56-57 (1988).

Source: All Sources : Secondary Legal : Law Reviews, Combined
Terms: "executive privilege" and date(aft 1997) and nixon and congress (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Saturday, February 10, 2001 - 5:44 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

The Constitution divides federal power into three separate but overlapping categories: legislative, executive, and judicial. [1] Giving precise content to the powers of these three great departments of the national government has proven difficult. Part of the difficulty has been political. Both Congress and the President are elected by and accountable to the people in whose name the Constitution was adopted, although only the chief executive has a truly national constituency. [2] On a more basic level, however, the Constitution did not precisely define the powers it vested in the federal [*658] government. Instead, the Framers established a complex set of checks and balances to structure relationships between and among the branches to promote the twin values of governmental efficiency and individual liberty. [3] For example, Congress was given the legislative power, but the President received a qualified veto over bills approved by the House and Senate, which may, in turn, override an executive veto by a supermajority vote in both chambers. [4] The President was made Commander in Chief of the armed forces, [5] but Congress was granted the power to declare war. [6] The President was authorized to appoint "Officers of the United States," but subject to "the Advice and Consent of the Senate." [7]

The result was "a government of separated institutions sharing powers." [8] This has provided ample opportunity for turf battles between the political branches, a perennial aspect of American public life. Congress and the President have often sought judicial resolution of separation of powers disputes, because, as Alexis de Tocqueville wrote more than a century and a half ago, "Scarcely any political question arises in the United States that is not resolved, sooner or later, into a judicial question," [9] and because, as Chief Justice Marshall observed even longer ago, "It is emphatically the province of the judicial department to say what the law is." [10] Although the Supreme Court has decided a surprisingly large number of these disputes over the past three decades, [11] both judges and commentators have urged the [*659] political branches to find alternative ways of resolving their disagreements. [12] Judges have been reluctant to resolve the "great silences of the Constitution," [13] and commentators have maintained that the political system as a whole would be better served if these matters were negotiated rather than adjudicated. [14] Nevertheless, the Clinton Administration litigated several disputes relating to the scope of presidential privilege and lost almost every time. [15] Although the issues arose in the context of lawsuits in which Congress was not a party, the legislative branch might regard the resolution of those cases as grounds for greater assertiveness in future turf battles with the White House.

This Article assesses some of the implications of the Clinton litigation for future executive privilege controversies, with particular emphasis on whether this litigation might have reduced the prospects for interbranch accommodation. Part I summarizes the argument for negotiation rather than litigation of executive privilege disputes between Congress and the President. Next, Part II assesses the possible impact of recent judicial rulings on the White House's negotiating position. Finally, Part III briefly considers the role of divided government that has loomed so large in the impeachment and related controversies.

[*660]

I. Arguments Against Litigating Interbranch Disputes

A. Arguments from Constitutional Structure

Those who prefer negotiation to litigation of executive privilege and similar disputes emphasize the structure of the Constitution. In particular, the Framers rejected the "pure doctrine" of separation of powers, which assigns each branch a unique and unshared function, in favor of a checks and balances system that gives each branch limited control over the operation of the other branches. [16] This decision reflected Madison's view that separation of powers "did not mean that these departments ought to have no partial agency in, or no control over, the acts of each other." [17] Instead of relying on "parchment barriers," [18] the Framers sought to provide each branch with "the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the others." [19] The constitutional design was based on the premise that "[a]mbition must be made to counteract ambition" [20] in a way that would channel interbranch relationships in a constructive direction. The constitutional design, in other words, afforded the political branches ample resources with which to defend their positions without relying on the Judiciary to serve as referee. Moreover, that design appears to authorize, if not to require, legislators as well as presidents to make their own judgments about the meaning of the Constitution.

Among the provisions that empower these nonjudicial officials to interpret the Constitution are the oath requirement for both the chief executive [21] and members of Congress. [22] Faithfulness to their oath requires these persons to consider the constitutionality of their actions. [23] Moreover, several other provisions of the [*661] Constitution specifically prohibit some types of legislation, [24] whereas others authorize the passage of "appropriate" laws. [25] In this regard, the Supreme Court has held that Congress is not strictly bound by judicial interpretations of equal protection for purposes of implementing the Fourteenth Amendment, although any legislation passed under this authority is subject to judicial review. [26] Even if they wanted to, therefore, members of Congress and the President cannot avoid passing on some constitutional issues.

Beyond this practical necessity, the courts simply cannot resolve every interesting or important dispute about the meaning of the Constitution. First, the judicial power extends only to cases and controversies. [27] This precludes the federal courts from issuing advisory opinions on pending policy issues, something that some state courts may do under certain circumstances. [28] This, in turn, means that only those with standing may challenge government actions in court. If too many persons are affected, no private party will have standing to litigate a generalized grievance. [29] Furthermore, individual members of Congress rarely will have standing to assert separation of powers claims against the executive branch. [30] Even if all the barriers [*662] to standing are surmounted, [31] other avoidance techniques such as the justiciability and ripeness doctrines could prevent courts from resolving interbranch disputes. [32] Where judicial resolution is unavailable, therefore, Congress and the President have no choice but to address some constitutional issues on their own.

As a practical matter, the political branches do interpret the Constitution without guidance from the courts. That document defines important political understandings that typically go unremarked because they are so commonplace. Everyone understood that the Twenty-second Amendment prevented Presidents Eisenhower, Reagan, and Clinton from seeking election to a third term and that Edward Kennedy had to wait until he had turned thirty years old to succeed to his brother John F. Kennedy's Senate seat. Nor is there any doubt that bills must satisfy the bicameralism and presentment requirements to become laws, or that the Senate must confirm officers of the United States. [33] At the same time, members of Congress had to decide for themselves whether there were grounds to impeach President Clinton-and Presidents Nixon and Andrew Johnson before him-with no judicial guidance.

Finally, history shows that legislative and executive officials feel free to disagree with judicial interpretations of the Constitution. Abraham Lincoln emphasized his opposition to the Dred Scott decision [34] central to his unsuccessful campaign for the Senate in 1858, [35] and he repeated this position in his first inaugural address:

[*663]

[T]he candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers . . . . [36]

Other chief executives have taken similar positions contending that judicial interpretations of the Constitution are not necessarily conclusive. Andrew Jackson vetoed a bill to recharter the Second Bank of the United States, which he regarded as unconstitutional, even though the constitutionality of that institution had been upheld in McCulloch v. Maryland. [37] Old Hickory explained:

The Congress, the Executive, and the Court must each for itself be guided by its own opinion of the Constitution. Each public officer who takes an oath to support the Constitution swears that he will support it as he understands it, and not as it is understood by others . . . . The authority of the Supreme Court must not, therefore, be permitted to control the Congress or the Executive when acting in their legislative capacities, but to have only such influence as the force of their reasoning may deserve. [38]

Along the same lines, Thomas Jefferson pardoned persons who had been convicted under the Sedition Act of 1798, [39] a law he denounced as infringing First Amendment rights, although lower courts had upheld the measure. [40] Modern chief executives have also denounced what they regarded as objectionable constitutional interpretations by the Judiciary. Franklin D. Roosevelt went so far as to propose his unsuccessful Court-packing plan, [41] Richard Nixon implied that he would obey only a "definitive" Supreme Court ruling in the Watergate tapes case, [42] and Presidents Reagan and Bush repeatedly denounced the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade. [43]

[*664]

In short, the structure of the Constitution clearly allows and sometimes mandates that the political branches interpret it without judicial guidance. Beyond these matters of principle, other pragmatic considerations have prompted courts and commentators to encourage Congress and the President to avoid litigation of turf disputes.

B. Arguments from Practicality

Political negotiation rather than litigation of executive privilege and similar disputes seems fully consistent with the constitutional design, but it also has important practical advantages. Perhaps the most important of these is that an effective government requires a degree of interbranch comity that is inconsistent with frequent resort to the judicial process. The American governmental system rests on unexpressed understandings and an uncodified but shared sense of limits. [44] Understandings are unexpressed and the sense of limits is shared, but uncodified because participants in the political process generally recognize the need to avoid open warfare and because both structural and institutional factors dampen inevitable conflicts. [45]

Judicial rulings, on the other hand, raise the stakes of any particular conflict. This happens because lawsuits clearly identify winners and losers. Decisions are accompanied by opinions setting out rationales that not only explain the specific result, but also presumably will control the disposition of analytically similar disputes that might arise in the future. [46] The prospect of litigation therefore creates incentives for both sides to assert maximum positions for short-term advantage in court and to characterize opposing views as illegitimate. [47] Greater reliance on negotiation can enable participants to focus on taking each disagreement as a problem to be solved rather than as an opportunity to score rhetorical points. [48] Moreover, the inherent delays in the court system may exacerbate tension and prevent timely resolution of disputes. [49] From this perspective, negotiated resolutions of specific disagreements can decide discrete questions in ways that can form the basis for other informal arrangements of subsequent interbranch conflicts while recognizing the contrasting but legitimate interests of both Congress and the White House.

This nonconfrontational model reflects much of traditional interbranch dispute resolution. The overwhelming majority of congressional requests for information [*665] from the executive branch are honored. [50] Even when the executive branch initially refuses to provide information to Congress, the dispute typically is resolved without resort to litigation. For example, in 1975, Secretary of the Interior Rogers Morton refused to disclose information about U.S. companies that had been asked to comply with the Arab boycott of Israel. A subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce voted to hold Morton in contempt. [51] The day before the full committee would have voted on the contempt citation the Secretary made the records available to the subcommittee Chair under an agreement that kept the information confidential. [52] In 1980, Secretary of Energy Charles Duncan refused to give documents concerning President Carter's imposition of a highly controversial fee on petroleum imports to a subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations. [53] Several weeks later, following a district court decision in a private lawsuit that invalidated the fee, [54] the Administration disclosed all of the contested documents. [55] In 1982, the Reagan Administration allowed members of a House subcommittee restricted access to a dozen documents relating to Secretary of the Interior James Watt's decision in a controversy over Canadian eligibility to hold American mineral leases; [56] the decision came after seven months of acrimony and with Watt facing an imminent contempt vote. [57]

Although the threat of litigation clearly loomed in some of these cases, other information disputes have been resolved amicably. In 1989, for instance, a House subcommittee investigating allegations of Internal Revenue Service corruption was given limited access to the records of a taxpayer who reportedly had been targeted for [*666] an audit after one of his business competitors bribed an IRS agent. [58] This arrangement was negotiated despite the general prohibition on disclosing taxpayer records to third parties and grand jury information relating to an ongoing criminal probe. [59] The intelligence committees in both the House and the Senate also have negotiated successfully for access to intelligence information held by the executive branch without resort to litigation or the threat of litigation. [60]

The reluctance to rely on ultimate judicial resolution of information disputes is not confined to legislative and executive officials. Courts have encouraged parties involved in pending litigation to negotiate their differences. Perhaps the most notable illustration of this phenomenon is United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., [61] which involved a congressional subpoena to the telephone company covering information about warrantless domestic wiretaps for national security purposes. The Justice Department obtained an injunction preventing AT&T from turning over the records encompassed by the subcommittee subpoena, [62] but the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit instructed the executive branch to negotiate with the subcommittee in hopes of reaching a compromise that would accommodate the interests of both sides. [63] Judge Leventhal explained: "A court decision selects a victor, and tends thereafter to tilt the scales. A compromise worked out between the branches is most likely to meet their essential needs and the country's constitutional balance." [64] Because the parties had almost reached such a compromise, "[t]he court may be of assistance in avoiding the broad confrontation now tendered, and in facilitating a complete accord . . . ." [65] After the parties failed to reach agreement after remand to the district court, the court of appeals once more declined to resolve the controversy. Emphasizing that "the coordinate branches do not exist in an exclusively adversary relationship to one another," Judge Leventhal urged "each branch [to] take cognizance of an implicit constitutional mandate to seek optimal accommodation through a realistic evaluation of the needs of the conflicting branches in the particular fact situation" so as to "avoid[ ] the mischief of polarization of disputes." [66] Although the parties had clarified their positions, the court declined to "impose a rigid arrangement" but to "continue approach of [*667] gradualism." [67] Thereafter the Justice Department and the subcommittee reached a settlement and the case was dismissed. [68]

Several years later, a federal district court declined to resolve a highly contentious dispute involving a House subcommittee and Anne Gorsuch, the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and a House subcommittee. She was cited for contempt after refusing, on instructions from President Reagan, to comply with a subpoena to turn over records relating to the Agency's enforcement of the Superfund program. [69] In United States v. House of Representatives of the United States, [70] Judge Smith dismissed the Justice Department's suit seeking a declaration that Gorsuch had acted lawfully in withholding the subpoenaed records. Instead, he encouraged the parties to negotiate their differences: "The difficulties apparent in prosecuting Administrator Gorsuch for contempt of Congress should encourage the two branches to settle their differences without further judicial involvement. Compromise and cooperation, rather than confrontation, should be the aim of the parties." [71] Gorsuch resigned a month later. The White House subsequently turned over all of the disputed records, although, some sensitive documents were disclosed subject to confidentiality provisions. [72]

REV_00260297

Finally, even when the courts actually rule on disputes, the political branches sometimes work out their own accommodations to circumvent the judicial resolutions. The most notable example of this phenomenon is the legislative veto, which supposedly was invalidated in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha. [73] Despite the Court's ruling in Chadha, Congress during the following decade passed [*668] over two hundred legislative veto provisions, mostly in appropriations bills. [74] The executive branch acquiesced, largely because these devices afford greater flexibility than strict compliance with the legislative formalities purportedly required by Chadha. [75]

In sum, both constitutional theory and practical considerations provide powerful arguments that Congress and the White House should avoid litigating over executive privilege and similar disputes. The political branches must negotiate some of these disputes because judicial review may be unavailable. Even when the courts are theoretically accessible, the Judiciary still may avoid resolving such disputes. The cost, delay, and uncertainty of litigation also afford powerful incentives to prefer compromise. [76]

II. The Impact of the Clinton Litigation

The Clinton Administration has been involved in several lawsuits in which presidential power was at least indirectly in question. One of these cases concerned the chief executive's temporary immunity from private lawsuits regarding events that occurred before he took office; the others, decided in the appellate courts rather than the Supreme Court, concerned testimonial privileges for Secret Service agents and White House lawyers. Although executive privilege was not directly at issue in these rulings, the rejection of the executive branch's position might have implications for future relationships between Congress and the President.

A. Clinton v. Jones

In Clinton v. Jones, [77] a unanimous Supreme Court rejected the argument that a [*669] sitting President is entitled to defer lawsuits relating to his private conduct before taking office. Former Arkansas state employee Paula Corbin Jones sued President Clinton for allegedly boorish sexual advances that occurred during Clinton's tenure as governor of Arkansas. [78] Clinton sought to delay proceedings until his presidential term of office had ended. [79]

The Court rejected his request for several reasons. First, no precedent supported the request. Only three sitting chief executives had been subjected to civil suits for their pre-presidential conduct. [80] Second, absolute presidential immunity from civil damages relating to official conduct was intended to prevent the Chief Executive from being intimidated by extraneous influences in the performance of his official duties. However, Clinton based his request for delay on potential distraction rather than intimidation. [81] Moreover, whatever potential for distraction actually existed would not interfere with the Chief Executive's performance of his constitutional duties. Allowing this private lawsuit to proceed would hardly overwhelm the presidency in light of the historical paucity of civil tort claims against sitting presidents' private behavior before taking office. [82] The Court also held that even "quite burdensome interactions" with the judicial branch do not impermissibly burden the President. [83] Courts may review official presidential conduct, subject the Chief Executive to judicial process under the right conditions, and even compel the President to testify or provide information. [84] Having concluded that the Constitution did not entitle Clinton to a delay in the trial, the Court further held that the district judge abused her discretion in deferring the trial while allowing discovery to proceed. [85] The district judge failed to give adequate weight to Jones's interest in avoiding prejudice arising from the passage of time and gave too much weight to the possibility that other unrelated lawsuits might prevent Clinton from performing his official duties. [86] Any actual burden on the chief executive's schedule could be handled as it arose. [87] Finally, the Court discounted the prospect of politically inspired lawsuits designed to hinder or distract the President because of the availability of sanctions for vexatious litigation. [88] Also, such cases typically are resolved before trial and therefore would make few demands on his time. [89]

REV_00260298

[*670]

Only Justice Breyer questioned this analysis, but even he concurred in the judgment, concluding because Clinton failed to justify his request for a trial postponement. [90] Breyer was skeptical of the Court's assumption that presidents have little reason to fear hostile private lawsuits initiated by political enemies, [91] and warned that if his fears were vindicated, the Judiciary would have to develop rules to accommodate the chief executive in such cases. [92]

B. The Secret Service Case

During the course of investigating Clinton's relationship with Monica Lewinsky, Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr sought to compel the testimony, before a grand jury, of Secret Service agents assigned to guard the President. [93] The Treasury Department, of which the Secret Service is a part, resisted the subpoenas on the basis of a protective function privilege. [94] A unanimous panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals rejected this privilege claim.

The court noted that this was apparently the first time that agents guarding the President had ever been compelled to testify about their work. [95] The court also emphasized that the case arose under Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, rather than under the Constitution. [96] While agreeing that protecting the Chief Executive was "a public good of the utmost importance," [97] the court found that the government had provided insufficient reason to believe that rejection of the asserted privilege would place the President at risk. [98] Moreover, the very narrowness of the proposed privilege, the government's inability to enforce a gag rule against agents who do not have to agree to confidentiality are not sworn to secrecy as a condition of employment, and the expiration of the privilege at the end of the presidential term effectively vitiated whatever utility the privilege may have. [99] Accordingly, the court left the question of recognizing such a privilege to Congress. [100]

REV_00260299

[*671]

C. Government Attorney-Client Privilege

The last of the Clinton-related cases involved the assertion of attorney-client privilege by Bruce Lindsey, Deputy White House Counsel, when he testified before the grand jury empaneled by the independent counsel. [101] Lindsey invoked executive privilege at one point to avoid answering some questions, but he abandoned that claim on appeal after it was rejected by the district court. [102] The court of appeals rejected Lindsey's attorney-client privilege claims on the basis that a government lawyer has an obligation not to withhold information relating to possible criminal activities from a grand jury. [103] The majority recognized that its ruling might "chill some communications between government officials and government lawyers," but emphasized that those officials seeking complete confidentiality could always talk with private counsel instead. [104] The court went on to reject several arguments that Lindsey was functioning as the President's personal attorney, so the privilege still did not apply. [105]

D. Implications

Assessing the significance of these cases for future executive privilege disputes between Congress and the White House is complicated by several factors. The most obvious of these factors is that Jones and the Secret Service case did not involve any claim of executive privilege. The third case, Lindsey, did have an executive privilege component, but that argument fell by the wayside after the district court concluded that, in the context of a criminal investigation, the independent counsel had shown both a strong need for the information and the unavailability of that information from any other source. [106]

As Justice Breyer suggested in his Jones concurrence, however, the import of these decisions might be less in the details of judicial rationale than in the bottom line: in all these cases, what many regarded as the President's position was rejected. Because the chief executive appears more vulnerable to suit, his adversaries might be emboldened to try their luck. [107] Moreover, the weakness of the executive privilege claim in Lindsey could encourage Congress to resist presidential assertions of privilege even more strongly than the legislative branch already does. Indeed, one [*672] lesson of the post-Watergate era has been the practical difficulty that presidents face in asserting executive privilege. [108]

On this view, one legacy of the Clinton Administration is the weakening of the presidency. There are, however, reasons to doubt the magnitude of the harm that the executive branch has suffered at Clinton's hands. To be sure, Lindsey might well complicate the White House's deliberative processes by subjecting staff lawyers to outside interrogation into potential criminal misconduct. Because of increased media and congressional concern over executive illegality and the personalization of much contemporary political discourse, presidents might choose to rely less on government lawyers and more on personal attorneys who can assert attorney-client privilege. [109] Moreover, the prospect that government lawyers will be required to testify about possible official illegalities might well discourage presidential advisors from

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years ⓘ
Terms: "executive privilege" /10 gonzales (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

Presidential Studies Quarterly December 1, 2001

Copyright 2001 Gale Group, Inc.
ASAP
Copyright 2001 Center for the Study of the Presidency Presidential Studies Quarterly

December 1, 2001

SECTION: No. 4, Vol. 31; Pg. 561; ISSN: 0360-4918

IAC-ACC-NO: 80805089

LENGTH: 13839 words

HEADLINE: The White House counsel's office; Articles.

BYLINE: Borrelli, Maryanne; Hult, Karen; Kassop, Nancy

AUTHOR-ABSTRACT:
The Office of White House Counsel sits at the intersection of law, politics, and policy. Its distinctive challenge is to advise the president to take actions that are both legally sound and politically astute. Often called "the president's lawyer," the counsel's office serves, more accurately, as the "presidency's lawyer," with tasks that extend well beyond the exclusively legal. Drawing on interviews with previous occupants of the office, the authors examine the unit's numerous activities, its place in the larger White House and executive branch, and the experiences of those who have served as counsel.

BODY:
The White House counsel's office is at the hub of virtually all presidential activity. Its mandate is to be watchful for and attentive to legal issues that may arise in policy and political contexts involving the president. To fulfill this responsibility, it monitors and coordinates the presidency's interactions with other players in and out of government. Often called "the president's lawyer," the counsel's office serves, more accurately, as the "presidency's lawyer," with tasks that extend well beyond exclusively legal ones. These have developed over time depending on the needs of different presidents, the relationship between a president and a counsel, and contemporary political conditions.

Today, the office carries out many routine tasks, such as vetting all presidential appointments and advising on the application of ethics regulations to White House staff and executive branch officials, but it also operates as a "command center" when crises or scandals erupt. Thus, the more sharply polarized political atmosphere of recent years has led to greater responsibility, as well as heightened political pressure and visibility, for the traditionally low-profile counsel's office. The high-stakes quality of its work has led to a common sentiment among counsels and their staff that there is "zero tolerance" for error.
Law, Politics, and Policy

A helpful way to understand the counsel's office is to see it as sitting at the intersection of law, politics, and policy. Consequently, it confronts the difficult and delicate task of trying to reconcile all three without sacrificing too much of any one. The distinctive challenge confronting the counsel's office is to advise the president to take actions that are both legally

REV_00260311

Federal ethics statutes and regulations typically are more stringent than those enacted in the states. Likewise, the standards for the legislative and executive branches are different, creating the need for former congresspersons and staffers to be carefully briefed.

> At the beginning of my tenure, we circulated [an ethics] memo that had all the details. Everyone who was going to be appointed by the President would get this memo, everyone on the White House staff got this memo. It was a memo from me and it laid out in detail what all the rules were. But then I also would meet with groups of people who were about to enter on to their jobs, in some cases they already had entered on to the jobs, maybe thirty at a time.... (Wallison 2000, 27)

These orientation sessions would be reprised when an individual left the White House. For example, the counsel staff would review the Presidential Records Act and "remind everyone that these are presidential documents; you're not walking out of the White House with them; these are things that become part of the permanent record" (Brady 1999, 7).

The need to educate and monitor staffers is particularly acute during the campaign seasons, both congressional and presidential. The counsel's office staff provide general briefings and memoranda about campaign activities. Changes in the associated statutes may create an even greater need for this information.

> We had two very active ethicists in the Office. One of them was Beth Nolan and the other was Cheryl Mills.... So the driving force was that the Hatch Act had just been amended and it has caused some changes. It now allowed people to get more involved than they had been previously. (Mikva 2000, 17)

As is suggested by the counsel's role in responding to document requests and subpoenas directed to members of the White House staff and other executive branch officials, many counsels also have had to oversee investigations. Whether conducted by independent counsels or congressional committees, these proceedings have consumed much of the counsel's resources.

> My first job [in the Clinton administration], which occupied the bulk of my time really, was to look in to the so-called White House--Treasury relationship having to do with the RFC [request for comment] in reference to the Justice Department of the whole Whitewater matter.... Then I had to look into the Espy case; I had to look into the Cisneros case, et cetera.... A lot of [developing ethics rules for the White House staff] was done in collaboration with the so-called Office of Legal Ethics, which is > an independent quasi-executive branch agency, and which has the responsibility under the various ethics statutes to write regulations, give opinions as to what you can and cannot do. (Cutler 1999, 20)

REV_00260320

Bernard Nussbaum (1999, 4) described Washington as practicing a "culture of investigation." That environment is not likely to change in the near future. Although the expiration of the independent counsel statute almost certainly will alter the investigatory process, investigations will doubtless continue, with profound implications for the counsel's office.

Handling White House Contacts with the Department of Justice and the Rest of the Executive Branch

Depending on the course of politics and policy in an administration, the White House counsel routinely interacts with most executive branch departments and agencies. Because of the nature of its responsibilities, the Department of Justice is especially important.

Department of Justice. Three factors have influenced the extent and nature of a White House counsel's contact with the Department of Justice: the scope of the president's judicial agenda, including judicial nominations; the strength of the president's relationship with the attorney general; and the relative activism of the White House counsel and the attorney general as policy makers. A larger judicial agenda creates the need for more contacts with the Justice Department. Similarly, a strong presidential relationship with an activist attorney general may establish a line of communication that often excludes the White House counsel.

Former counsels strongly recommend that the counsel's office function as a gatekeeper for all contacts between the White House and the Department of Justice.

> All requests for OLC opinions had to go through me, all communications with the department had to go through my office.... there were certain exceptions but no one could call over to the Deputy Attorney General and the solicitor general directly; they had to go through me. My typical point of contact was the Deputy Attorney General for everything except OLC opinions, then I would call the head of OLC. (Culvahouse 1999b, 16)

This oversight is designed to ensure that communications between the White House and the Justice Department are properly conducted. Any effort to influence the legal judgments of the department would generate significant difficulties for an administration. Reagan counsel Culvahouse recalled, for instance, that departmental statements of administrative policy were routinely reviewed unless Justice was issuing them.

Attorney general. The attorney general and the White House counsel appear, at first glance, to have similar advisory roles and jurisdictions. Notwithstanding differences in accountability (e.g., the attorney general is subject to Senate confirmation) and location, the distinctive contributions of the White House counsel and the attorney general more often have been negotiated through practice than by invoking abstract principles. Conflict has occurred frequently, and presidential libraries contain numerous memoranda of understanding between attorneys general and White House counsels.

White House counsels and attorneys general have rarely been equals within an administration. Presidents have tended to name either an attorney general or a White House counsel with whom they were well acquainted. The selections have, more often than not, been connected to the judicial agenda of the president: a larger judicial agenda generally has coincided with the nomination of a presidential colleague to the attorney general's office.

REV_00260321

The appointment of a close presidential colleague as White House counsel may allow the counsel's office to enter into more substantive policy discussions. Although C. Boyden Gray (1999, 2) hedged his comments with a series of qualifiers, he acknowledged his influence on several key legislative negotiations:

> [President George H. W. Bush] kept drawing me into the Civil Rights Bill in 1990-1991. I didn't really want to do that because it was very difficult politically, but he kept yanking me back into it.... But I would say that civil rights was legal policy, not necessarily part of the counsel's office historically any more than the ADA [Americans with Disabilities Act] was. I did very little on the ADA act.... I had a lot to do in the prior administration about teeing it up for then--Vice President Bush to make it a campaign promise during the '88 campaign. But I spent very little time on it once we got in the White House.... I was involved very little, maybe ten or twenty hours worth. It was very little. The hours I spent were very important, it turned out, but I was not involved in the day-to-day negotiation of the language or the lobbying.... I had to have permission to work on the Clean Air Act. I wanted to work on it because I had an interest in it but it was something that [Chief of Staff John] Sununu was wary about and the President was a little nervous about because of the time it would take from other responsibilities.

Office of Legal Counsel. The resources of the OLC--including its institutional memory--render it an invaluable source of legal expertise for the White House counsel. Quite simply, the counsel's office cannot provide all the information and the advising that an administration needs.

> OLC is the single most important legal office in the government. More important really in terms of scholarship and memory and research--White House counsel's office doesn't really have the staff to do all [that] and they shouldn't. It should be done in OLC.... the White House doesn't go to court without the department.... OLC was a huge problem for us in the sense > that they were putting on a brake. We were free to ignore their advice but you knew so you did so at your peril because if you got into trouble you wouldn't have them there backing you up, you wouldn't have the institution backing you up.... When in doubt, ask them and they'll tell you where the land mines are. (Gray 1999, 18-19, 21)

REV_00260322

Several other counsels echoed Gray's (1999) description of the OLC as a formidable ally and a significant check on the White House counsel's office. Precisely because of the similarities in their responsibilities, however, the relationship between the two can be highly competitive. Both are recognized as legal experts immersed in politics and policy. The fact that these offices' jurisdictions are blurred and unclear only exacerbates the tensions.

> The real conflict between offices, inherent conflict, is between the White House counsel's office and the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department because the White House counsel's office is growing and growing and is acquiring more and more capabilities to do that kind of research and analysis that the Office of Legal Counsel does and it does it for the President. The White House always wins over the agencies, always, because they're closer to the President. So they have first dibs, if you will, on any issue that comes up to the presidential level. If there's a constitutional question about the President's power, if they want, they can make that decision on their own without consulting the OLC. Whenever you get a situation like that where some group has first opportunity and doesn't even have to inform the other group over time that first group is going to grow larger and larger and more competent and eventually freeze out completely the Office of Legal Counsel. (Wallison 2000, 21-22)

Similarly, Gray (1999) stressed that the ambitions of the White House counsel's office can endanger an administration. He advised reestablishing the OLC as an influential legal commentator, concluding that the advantages gained from the OLC's insights far outweigh any disadvantages resulting from its sometimes critical stance.

Still, this competitive relationship does reflect differences between the units. The White House counsel is appointed by the president and does not require Senate confirmation. The members of the Justice Department include presidential appointees who are subject to Senate confirmation, nominees who need not be confirmed, and careerists. Thus, department officials have numerous and crosscutting loyalties. Furthermore, although the president's claim to executive privilege for communications with the White House counsel has been delimited in recent years, the Reagan administration may well have sacrificed the possibility of presidents successfully making such claims about the OLC.

REV_00260323

> It had to do with a request by the Senate Judiciary Committee for all of William Rehnquist's files when he was head of the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department.... I thought that was simply harassment and I thought they were trying to create the kind of issue they could use to stop the nomination. I and the person who was then head of the Office of Legal Counsel in the Justice Department both felt this was a good executive privilege claim because the Office of Legal Counsel is the lawyer for the entire government, and in effect for the President, and everyone discloses everything to them to get rulings about legal issues. The whole underpinning of the attorney/client privilege, which is part of the executive privilege, is to get people to disclose all relevant information so you can give them the right advice. I thought, if there was ever a case, this was it. So I sent a memo to the President saying I thought he ought to claim executive privilege in this case, but Meese did not like at all that idea. We debated it in front of the President and the President decided he wouldn't claim it.... In the future, if someone wants the files of the Office of Legal Counsel, they are more likely to get them because this precedent exists. (Wallison 2000, 20)

Clearly, then, requesting a legal interpretation from the OLC is a strategic undertaking. If the counsel does not involve the OLC--or, having received the OLC's interpretation, sets it aside--the White House is isolated and will lack support for its actions. This is risky and even dangerous. Boyden Gray (1999), for example, unequivocally concluded that the White House should never go to court without Justice's support. At the same time, the OLC is staffed by experts who cannot claim executive privilege and, in any event, have allegiances that extend beyond the White House.

Other departments and agencies. The White House counsel's contacts throughout the rest of the executive branch are extensive. At the very least, the counsel's office communicates with the general counsels of departments and agencies and processes the paperwork associated with every presidential nominee or appointee. Indeed, with the notable exception of the Justice Department, the White House counsel typically communicates with the executive branch departments and agencies through the general counsels.

> We used to have more or less monthly meetings of all the general > counsels.... It's a little more difficult to meet with the general counsels of the so-called independent agencies, as you know, but we do meet even with them on some matters.... A lot of it has to do with the ground rules for executive privilege and turning documents over to Congress which we don't think should be turned over to Congress but which the department under the thumb of Congress always wants to turn over without ever consulting the President whose privilege it is not to provide them. (Cutler 1999, 7)

REV_00260324

Boyden Gray (1999) added that exceptions to this rule occurred only when the secretary or the agency chief executive had matters to discuss with the White House counsel. Occasionally, Gray said, he would speak with the deputy secretary. (2) Again, the Justice Department was the standard exception. The White House counsel and the attorney general typically communicated with each other daily.

Principal Relationships in the White House

Within the White House Office, the counsel's principal relationship--and greatest source of influence--has been with either the president or the chief of staff. To whom the counsel reports has frequently been a product of individual counsels' past professional relationships, and this authority relationship has been clearly established at the time of appointment. This clarity is essential if the president wishes to avoid destructive competition between two units that are crucial to the success of the administration and its policy agenda.

The President

In electing to have the White House counsel report directly to the president, presidents often have appointed individuals who were their long-standing friends or professional colleagues. (3) Even with the advantage of a prior relationship with the president, counsels have faced various challenges to their position and their influence. The White House staff is likely to include a number of longtime presidential colleagues, all of whom may compete for access to the Oval Office

Of course, even if the counsel is able to sustain a close relationship with the president, there is no guarantee that the president will seek or follow advice. President Gerald Ford's decision to pardon former president Richard Nixon, arguably the most significant legal decision of his administration, was made without any consultation. Counsel Philip Buchen provided only post hoc support and legal reasoning.

Two administrations have recruited counsels to raise the profile and significantly re-establish the counsel's office within the Washington community. President Jimmy Carter appointed Lloyd Cutler to meet these needs; President Bill Clinton named Cutler, former congressman and U.S. court of appeals judge Abner Mikva, and then former U.S. attorney and D.C. Corporation counsel Charles Ruff. Cutler (1999, 10-11), in particular, has stressed that he entered office with a promise of direct communication with the president.

> When I was asked by the President [Carter] to take this job, it was a mid-life crisis of his administration, the so-called "malaise" period. I said, "What kind of a role do you want me to play?" I knew him, but I didn't know him that well. He said, "I want you to play sort of a Clark Clifford role." I got that in writing and, of course, Clifford was so venerable and such a great storyteller, everybody thought that Harry Truman never made a move without consulting Clark Clifford. And every time I got left out of a meeting I would go to Jordan or I would go to the President and I would say, "I think that Harry Truman would have wanted Clark Clifford in this meeting." I was older than all the rest of them so nobody could gainsay me....

REV_00260325

The White House counsel and presidential privileges. The issue of confidentiality in the president's communications with the White House counsel has been a matter of intense concern. Of the various legal privileges that a president or a counsel might claim--executive privilege, government attorney--client privilege, work product protection, deliberative process protection, and common interest doctrine--most salient are executive privilege and government attorney--client privilege. (4)

Because the White House counsel's office is in the unique position of providing both political and legal advice to the president, navigating the shoals of presidential privileges is an especially tricky venture. Judicial acceptance of a privilege claim is determined by many factors, such as whether the conversation is political or legal; whether the person is communicating with the president in a legal or political capacity; whether the request for presidential communications comes from the courts, Congress, or an independent counsel; whether the information is needed in a civil or criminal proceeding; whether the asserted public interest in confidentiality outweighs another institution's need for the information; and whether the requested information is available from an alternative source. Varying combinations of these factors will produce different judicial outcomes, making for complex and unpredictable results.

The Clinton administration was embroiled in numerous legal controversies in which it vigorously asserted a whole host of privilege claims, and it found little comfort in the resulting federal court decisions. Legal scholars and commentators reacted critically to the administration's decision to litigate. In contrast, most other White Houses found ways to assert such claims but ultimately chose to resolve the conflicts through compromise. In essence, the Clinton administration forced the issue into the judicial process, and the courts ruled against it, narrowing considerably any maneuverability for future claims.

Chief of Staff

The Reagan administration chose an alternative authority relationship in which the White House counsel reported to the chief of staff. Reagan's White House counsels had previously been professional colleagues of the chiefs of staff. Even so, a change in the chief of staff did not necessarily result in the appointment of a new counsel. The Reagan counsels left office for a variety of personal and institutional reasons: Fred Fielding, because he "was ready to go out into the real world"; and Peter Wallison, because of pressures generated by Iran-contra (Wallison 2000, 1). A. B. Culvahouse, the third and final Reagan counsel, served two chiefs of staff: Howard Baker and Kenneth Duberstein.

REV_00260326

Although reporting to the president through the chief of staff might appear to be a disadvantage, Culvahouse (1999b, 21) disagreed.

> [Howard Baker] is my mentor and my friend. He was my ace in the hole in the White House. I think to the extent I was an effective White House counsel is because he gave me a lot of support as did the President. But people did not try to go around me or over me very frequently and never very successfully.

Still, the Reagan counsels presided over an office that was widely seen as being focused more on law than on policy.

> In the Reagan White House, the counsel's office was viewed as sort of an additional final check. Unlike ... some other White House counsel's offices, we didn't really have a policy agenda. We felt like we were to be honest brokers as well as lawyers. (Culvahouse 1999b, 2)

It may be that having the counsel report to the chief of staff, rather than directly to the president, contributed to changing the orientation of the office.

White House Staff

The White House counsel's office is in contact with virtually every unit in the White House. The consequent dialogues and negotiations add immeasurably to the office's workload. Tight deadlines compound the difficulties.

> [For] everything else [apart from Iran-contra] there were lots of cooks, lots of principals and lots of lawyers, and sometimes just trying to reach a decision or trying to force a decision in a timely way tended to be a lot of what I did.... The timing was forced by your own judgment or sometimes you'd have deadlines. Sometimes you'd have the ranking Republican on the committee calling up and saying if you don't tell us what you think the committee is going to go forward tomorrow regardless. (Culvahouse 1999b, 28)

The following list provides examples of the units with which the counsel's office routinely has established strong relationships.

* Communications, regarding presidential speeches, travel, and campaign expenses. This relationship may be especially close during the campaign seasons, when travel expenses and contacts are subject to strict legal standards.

REV_00260327

* Legislative Affairs, regarding legislation, nominations, and confirmations. Some White House counsels have participated directly in legislative negotiations, even communicating directly with senators about judicial appointments.

* Personnel Office, regarding appointments and clearances. This responsibility also causes the White House counsel's office to consult regularly with the FBI and (at least through the Clinton years) the ABA.

* Office of Political Affairs, regarding travel and campaign expenses.

* Press Office, regarding presidential press conferences. In some administrations, the counsel's office also has prepared presidential statements about federal court rulings that affect the presidency or the executive branch.

* OMB, regarding budget proposals, rescissions, and deferrals.

* NSC staff, regarding foreign policy.

Organization and Operations

Since the 1970s, the size of the White House counsel's office has expanded from two to three attorneys to more than forty at times during the Clinton administration. Some former counsels attribute this growth to the increasingly hostile Washington environment faced by recent presidents and the mounting scrutiny of their appointees. Lloyd Cutler (1999, 7) recalled, for example,

> In Carter's day, when I came in, including myself, there were six lawyers.
>
> Twenty-five years later, under Clinton, there are probably forty lawyers, > fifty lawyers. Part of that is dealing with the attacks on the President > and these enormous vetting responsibilities that descend on the White House > counsel.
>
>
>

Similarly, John Tuck, an aide to Chief of Staff Howard Baker in the Reagan White House, recalled "a whole huge shadow counsel's office" that developed following the Iran-contra revelations (as quoted in Baker 1999, 15).

Internal Division of Labor

The counsel's office has been structured internally in numerous ways. Typically, however, the White House counsel, as a senior presidential adviser, participates in myriad activities and issues, many of which are unpredictable and unplanned. Indeed, the counsel's time often is consumed almost completely in handling crises or unexpected demands. Thus, Reagan counsel Peter Wallison (2000, 34) remembered,

> At least politics and crises are the two things that you have to be sure
>
> [to handle]--one of the reasons you want to get a staff that is capable and
>
> has the lines of authority and lines of responsibility clear is that at
>
> some point you are going to be completely consumed with something and that means your office has to function without you. So you need a really good and capable deputy, which I had [in] Jay Stephens, and you need very good lawyers, and then they have to know what their areas of responsibility are so that they don't have to keep coming to you.

REV_00260328

Counsels beginning with John Dean have all included at least one deputy counsel on their staffs (see the appendix). A deputy counsel routinely serves as the primary overseer of workflow within the office as well as a substitute for the counsel. The deputy also may perform other tasks at the direction of the counsel.

James Castello was the deputy who really was my person and managed the staff and was at the second meeting I couldn't be at if I was at the first one. [He] probably had the most to do with the legislative agenda. He met regularly with the legislative office and made sure that there weren't any surprises on the Hill that the President didn't know about or what was going up as our core legislation didn't have any pitfalls in it. (Mikva 2000, 21)

Such deputies typically are charged with assuring that the counsel sees only the highest-priority items. On personnel issues, for instance, Reagan counsel Culvahouse (1999b, 4) stated,

I clearly was the principal advisor to the President ... within the White House on the vetting process which included not only the people to be nominated by the President but also people who would be appointed by the President even if they did not require Senate confirmation as well as anyone who would get a White House staff badge.... I never saw their files or anything, unless there was a problem. So the default rule was if there was a problem certified as such by my deputy then it would be put on my desk. So I saw 10 per cent of the files roughly.

In the Clinton White House, longtime presidential confidant Bruce Lindsey served for much of the administration as a "deputy counsel for special projects." According to Abner Mikva (2000, 17), besides a host of other activities, there was always a special project he was involved in either for the President or because the President would indicate to me or [Chief of Staff] sound and politically astute. For example, A. B. Culvahouse recalled his experience on arriving at the White House as counsel and having to implement President Reagan's earlier decision to turn over his personal diaries to investigators during the Iran-contra scandal.

REV_00260329

> Ronald Reagan's decision to turn over his diary--that sits at the core of the presidency.... You're setting up precedents and ceding a little power. But politically, President Reagan wanted to get it behind him. (As quoted in Bendavid 1994, 13)

Nonetheless, Culvahouse (1999b, 28) added, the counsel is > the last and in some cases the only protector of the president's constitutional privileges. Almost everyone else is willing to give those away in part inch by inch and bit by bit to win the issue of the day, to achieve compromise on today's thorny issue.

Indeed, Lloyd Cutler, counsel to both Presidents Carter and Clinton, made a similar point, observing that the most challenging part of the counsel's job is to be the one to tell the president no. Cutler (1999, 3-4) noted that in return for being > on the cutting edge of problems, the counsel needs to be someone who has his own established reputation ... someone who is willing to stand up to the president, to say "No, Mr. President, you shouldn't do that for these reasons."

Consequently, the most essential task a counsel can perform for a president is to act as an early warning system for potential legal trouble spots before they erupt. For this role, a counsel must keep his or her "antennae" constantly attuned. Being at the right meetings at the right time and knowing which people have information or the technical expertise in specific policy or legal areas are key. Lloyd Cutler (1999, 4) noted, > the White House counsel will learn by going to the staff meetings, et cetera, that something is about to be done that has buried within it a legal issue which the people who are advocating it either haven't recognized or push under the rug.

Disaster can also strike when counsels do not make good use of the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) in the Department of Justice for guidance on prevailing legal interpretations and opinions on the scope of presidential authority. The counsel must sift through the legal opinions and offer the president his or her best recommendation. Cutler (1999, 4) described how this process works:

> [OLC staffers] are where the President has to go or the President's counsel

REV_00260312

> Leon [Panetta] that he wanted somebody that could really use his clout effectively. For instance, Bruce was the point man on the baseball strike.... I don't think I said Bruce, go do the baseball strike. It was known that we needed somebody who could go in there and say the President really thinks this ought to be done or that ought to be done, and nobody could do that like Bruce.

In addition, the counsel's immediate staff (often an administrative assistant and an executive secretary) usually is responsible for ensuring that external deadlines are met and internal work is parceled out appropriately. Culvahouse (1999b, 8), for example, reported having > three non-attorney people who worked for me: an executive assistant, an administrative assistant and an executive secretary. The first two spent most of their time assigning out projects and making sure the work was done and the deadlines were observed.

In recent White Houses, aides with the title of "special counsel" have on occasion appeared in the counsel's office. Typically, these are staffers assigned to handle short-term or "crisis" situations that may involve congressional or other investigations, such as Iran-contra or Whitewater. Most observers attribute the swelling of the counsel's office over the course of an administration to such crises and to the heightened external scrutiny of administrations.

Moreover, given the range of diverse responsibilities that have come to be lodged in the White House counsel's office, some substantive division of labor usually appears. For instance, a deputy counsel and one or more other members of the office participated in judicial selection in the Carter, Reagan, George H. W. Bush, and Clinton administrations, which also appears to be the case in the George W. Bush White House.

Similarly, after the initial flurry of vetting for nominations and appointments at the beginning of an administration, typically one assistant or associate counsel and a security assistant (and staff) in the office handle FBI and financial disclosure reports (see, e.g., Wallison 2000, 12 ff). This lawyer also is responsible for taking the confidential reports to the chairs and ranking minority members of the appropriate Senate committees, with potentially problematic allegations flagged. In the second term of the Clinton administration, a "senior counsel" was among those handling these responsibilities.

Other tasks that commonly have been assigned to particular lawyers in the counsel's office have included interpreting ethics legislation and additional ethics rules issued by an administration. As noted earlier, counsels provide this advice for staffers in the White House Office and Executive Office of the President and, on occasion, for cabinet officials and other presidential appointees. Still other attorneys in the counsel's office focus on issues of international trade and transportation, defense and national security policy (to support the counsel's role as chair of the War Powers Committee), and government regulation. Presidential travel also has been assigned to a counsel's office attorney. In the Reagan White House, for example,

> Alan Raul ... was in charge of presidential travel. That was a big and difficult issue because of what had to be paid for by private funds, by political funds or by government funds. So they were constantly, the people in the political office and in the travel office, they were constantly calling Alan for advice on that subject. (Wallison 2000, 31)

REV_00260330

Rhythms of Quadrennial Governance

Over the course of a presidential term, the activities, demands, and emphases of the counsel's office typically follow common patterns. The first year is both demanding and somewhat distinctive. After that, the work of the counsel's office--like much of the rest of the administration--to a significant extent reflects the presidency's efforts to respond to external deadlines. Other tasks arise more routinely throughout an administration.

First year. A major task that begins well before Inauguration Day and continues throughout most of the first year is vetting for nominations and appointments. C. Boyden Gray (1999, 1) remembered, "For the first year that's all you do, is read FBI reports and ABA reports. It's not much fun. Financial disclosure reports. It's not much fun."

During this early period as well, the counsel's office seeks to ensure that all White House staffers and political appointees are informed of the ethics statutes, executive orders, and other administration rules under which they must work. Gray (1999, 13) described his approach to handling the task: "My rule of thumb was: 'If it's fun, stop! If it feels good, stop! If you're having fun, you're doing something wrong!'"

At the outset, too, the counsel's office needs to give White House staffers instructions on how to keep their files. Phillip Brady (1999, 9) recalled that in the George H. W. Bush administration, the counsel and deputy counsel "tried to be very careful to ensure all new employees were given a counsel's office memo that would articulate what presidential documents are and what needed to be preserved and that sort of thing."

The initial weeks and months of a new administration also bring numerous other demands. Chief among them: the president's budget must be submitted by early February; the economic report is due at about the same time. The legislative agenda, congressional messages, and bills must be drafted and sent to Congress. The counsel's office is involved in all of these activities.

Annual cycles. Especially important annual cycles are the preparation of the president's budget and the drafting of the State of the Union address and the Economic Report of the President. Although the counsel's office is not the central player, it does perform the pivotal role of ensuring that the officials involved act in accordance with prevailing legal and ethical guidelines.

Electoral cycles. As the midterm congressional elections or a presidential reelection campaign approaches, the counsel's office faces other tasks. The office may well be besieged with requests for advice from White House aides and political appointees throughout the executive branch about the sorts of partisan and electoral activities in which they and their aides are legally permitted to engage. In most administrations, the counsel and staff try to anticipate such requests and related problems by sending out written guidelines and holding information sessions.

Then, as elections approach, the President becomes more involved in direct politics which raises > questions about ... how much of his time would be devoted to it, who pays for it, all those things. That becomes much more important every two years. Whether the President is running for election or not, usually he's out doing things, raising funds or otherwise supporting candidates which require you to make these kinds of allocations in the best possible way to avoid charges of various kinds. (Wallison 2000, 32-33)

REV_00260331

Recalling the allegations of illegal fundraising preceding the 1996 presidential election, Abner Mikva (2000, 18) regretted that > none of us saw fit to raise a warning flag for the president.... I had seen what goes on in state politics. I'd been a state legislator for ten years. I know governors in Illinois pick up the phone when they're sitting in the governor's office and lean on people to give money to their campaign and the party. It's just a fact of life and I suspect it goes on in most states.... I think this government came in to the White House not very sensitive to the fact that the White House and the federal government is a different place. So I should have warned the President.

The presidential electoral cycle also can influence submission of judicial nominations to the Senate. Former Deputy Counsel Phillip Brady (1999, 4) noted that "as you get closer and closer to presidential elections the Senate becomes less and less receptive to confirming nominees for lifetime appointments depending on what happens in the next presidential election."

Final year. The last year of a presidency also can be "dangerous" (Culvahouse 1999a, 5). As the final days of the Clinton presidency highlighted, this is a time when requests for pardons, commutations, executive orders, and other presidential actions may be likely to reach fever pitch. It also is a time when presidents may be especially responsive to those who have supported and worked with them for numerous years.

More regular tasks. Many of the other tasks handled by the counsel's office are performed throughout an administration. Reagan counsel Culvahouse (1999b, 8-9) recalled, for example, this included the judicial selection committee, which met > every two weeks and more frequently if--basically the idea was to get people's nominations up as soon as possible so if the FBI was able to process background checks and all the materials were in we sometimes would meet every week.

REV_00260332

Executive orders also need to be drafted throughout an administration.

In contrast, Culvahouse (1999b, 9) continued,

> Congress tends to work in fits and starts.... The legislative agenda can be heavy or it can be light. There were also Statements of Administration policy that we would review.... Sometimes we would say, "This should not come out of the White House; the Justice Department or the State Department should issue this." Sometimes we would be involved in deciding who ought to comment on the bill, and who ought to testify. If it was going to be a Statement of Administration policy, which is in effect attributed to the President, we would look at those carefully. Those would be in effect a letter that would say here's what the Administration thinks about S-332, the omnibus such and such act.

In addition, throughout an administration, new individuals must be nominated for and appointed to positions throughout the executive branch. After the first year, "The nomination process was fairly continuous.... So every week there would be nominations to be processed, people to be vetted, ethics agreements to be looked at" (Wallison 2000, 9). Informing new hires about ethics regulations also had to continue.

Crises/scandals/unexpected events. Counsels, of course, find themselves (and their staffs) handling unexpected situations and, on occasion, crises, at least as seen from the administration's perspective. As chair of the War Powers Committee, the counsel has responsibilities whenever U.S. troops are (or may become) involved in hostilities.

A scandal of one sort or another seems likely to occur at some point during an administration. In the words of Peter Wallison (2000, 33), > you can always count on ... some kind of big scandal.... And when I went in to that office I assumed there was going to be a blizzard. What I didn't realize was that there would be a hundred-year snow in the form of Iran-Contra....

Lloyd Cutler, who served as counsel for both Presidents Carter and Clinton, observed that the job has become more driven by scandal and congressional efforts to probe more deeply into administrations:

> We were doing executive privilege in the Carter days; we were doing it in the Clinton days. We had demands from congressional committees for White House documents and agency documents; drafts of legal opinions, for example, were so much more pervasive. Mostly, it's the difference that when I worked for Carter while we did have the Billy Carter problem and a few others, Hamilton Jordan's alleged drug violations--which turned out to be entirely untrue, while we had a couple of those, most of what I did was substantive.... In Clinton's time I had the same understanding that I could be in on all these things but I had to put in so much of my own daily effort, and my staff did, on the investigations of the President, Whitewater, et cetera, that I had no time.... working for Carter--which was a year and a half--not more than 20 per cent [of the counsel's work] was what I call playing defense. Under Clinton it was closer to 80 per cent. (1999, 8)

REV_00260333

Turnover: Counsel and Deputy Counsel

Given the demands on the counsel as well as the often unforgiving nature of Washington, it is scarcely surprising that relatively few counsels stay in the position for more than two years. Only Philip Buchen (Ford) and C. Boyden Gray (George H. W. Bush) stayed throughout an administration. Fred Fielding worked even longer as counsel to Ronald Reagan, serving from January 1981 until February 1986 (see the appendix).

In recent presidencies, counsels have departed for a variety of reasons. Some--such as John Dean--became directly involved in administration scandals. Others--J. Fred Buzhardt, Peter Wallison--departed after the president or chief of staff who brought them to the White House was forced out. Still other counsels joined the White House staff explicitly on a temporary basis to help handle political or policy crises. In Democratic administrations, such figures have tended to be well-respected "old Washington hands" themselves (like Lloyd Cutler, Abner Mikva, and Charles Ruff). In the Reagan administration, by contrast, the new counsel, A. B. Culvahouse, was a trusted associate of the incoming chief of staff, Howard Baker, who himself fit the same profile.

When counsels have left the White House, in virtually all cases, their deputies have departed within several months. The only exception was Clinton aide Bruce Lindsey, who was lodged in the counsel's office from 1993 through 2000, working under multiple counsels (and always with a second deputy counsel).

In addition, turnover has been somewhat higher among deputies than among counsels. Typically, deputy counsels leave to pursue other opportunities both in and outside the administration. From 1971 through 2000, no deputy counsel succeeded a counsel, although at least one (Cheryl Mills) turned down the job when it was offered to her. Clinton's sixth counsel, Beth Nolan, served as an associate counsel in the first term. Deputy counsels Cheryl Mills and William P. Marshall served as associate counsels (Mills under Nussbaum, Cutler, Mikva, and Quinn; Marshall under Ruff) before being named deputies.

Conclusion

In sum, the counsel's office can be characterized as a monitor, coordinator, negotiator, recommender, and translator. It monitors ethics matters, coordinates the president's message and agenda with other executive branch units, negotiates on the president's behalf with Congress and others, recommends actions to the president, and translates or interprets the law in its broadest context throughout the executive branch. It oversees all of the political and policy actions the president takes to ensure compliance with legal and constitutional requirements. No paper goes in or out of the president's office without the counsel's review.

REV_00260334

The challenges for this office are daunting. The paper flow is relentless; the pressures, both time and political, are crushing; the scope of its tasks extends to every facet of the president's political and constitutional responsibilities; and the potential for disaster is as close as the next crisis. The counsel's office performs both routine and extraordinary tasks and participates in domestic as well as foreign policy making. Because its charge covers such a wide swath and there is no time for on-the-job training, an incoming counsel must conquer the sharp learning curve immediately, expect the unpredictability of events, and get used to making crucial decisions with incomplete information.

As a consequence of the increasing polarization and politicization of U.S. government, there has been a greater recognition of the highly influential role the counsel's office can play. These heightened stakes have intensified the strains under which counsels operate. Counsels must understand the "fishbowl" nature of the office, and they must be especially vigilant about reining in presidents in the last year of their administrations. Counsels must recognize as well that maintaining good relations with the OLC is critical as an institutional check on their own instincts, despite the tensions that can arise between these two legal units.

Finally, the counsel's office sits on the edge of a precipice: it is the last line of defense for the institution of the presidency. Its ultimate role as protector of presidential privileges and prerogatives means that its advice will have profound implications for the power of the presidency.

Appendix

Counsels and Deputy Counsels, 1969-2001

Administration	Counsel	Date
Clinton	Beth Nolan	8/99 to 1/01
	Charles F. C. Ruff	2/97 to 8/99
	John (Jack) Quinn	11/95 to 2/97
	Abner Mikva	9/94 to 11/95
	Lloyd N. Cutler	3/94 to 9/94
	Bernard W. Nussbaum	1/93 to 3/94
Bush	C. Boyden Gray	1/89 to 1/93

REV_00260335

Reagan	A. B. Culvahouse	1987 to 1/89
	Peter Wallison	4/86 to --
	Fred F. Fielding	1/81 to 2/86
Carter	Lloyd Cutler	10/79 to 1/81
	Robert J. Lipshutz	1/77 to 8/79
Ford	Philip W. Buchen	8/74 to 1/77
Nixon	J. Fred Buzhardt	1/74 to 8/74
	Leonard Garment	5/73 to 1/74
	John Dean	7/70 to 4/73
	John Ehrlichman	1/69 to 11/69

Administration	Deputy	Date
Clinton	Bruce R. Lindsey	1/93 to 1/01
	William P. Marshall	12/99 to 1/01
	Cheryl Mills	/96 to 8/99
	Kathleen Wallman	/96 to --
	James Castello	3/95 to --
	Joel I. Klein	7/93 to 3/95
	Vincent W. Foster	1/93 to 7/93
Bush	John P. Schmitz	1/89 to 1/93
Reagan	Phillip D. Brady	/88 to 1/89
	Jay B. Stephens	/86 to/87
	Richard A. Hauser	1/81 to --
	Herbert E. Ellingwood	1/81 to --
Carter	Michael Cardozo	10/79 to 1/81
	Joseph Onek	9/79 to 1/81
	Margaret A. McKenna	1/77 to 12/79

REV_00260336

Ford	Edward C. Schmults	10/75 to 1/77
	Roderick Hills	4/75 to 10/75
	Philip Areeda	10/74 to 2/75
Nixon
	Fred Fielding	5/73 to 1/74 (on counsel staff since 10/70)

(1.) John Dean established the White House counsel's office under Richard Nixon. Dean was the first counsel whose duties primarily focused on lawyering, and he was the first to seek out new legal responsibilities and draw them into a separate office in the White House. Although presidents from FDR through Nixon had aides with the titles of "special counsel" or "counsel," such staffers typically had more wide-ranging policy responsibilities. The Eisenhower White House to some extent was an exception: Gerald Morgan, as special counsel, and Edward McCabe, an associate special counsel, worked on tasks quite similar to some of those in the contemporary counsel's office. See, for example, Rabkin (1995), Strine (1995), and Walcott and Hult (1995).

(2.) Nonetheless, communications with independent regulatory agencies were handled with special care and circumspection.

(3.) Most recently, President George W. Bush named longtime Texas associate Alberto R. Gonzales his White House counsel.

(4.) The courts view these two as clearly distinct. Executive privilege is the constitutionally based protection of confidentiality of a president's communications with any government officer when the chief executive seeks advice on the exercise of official governmental duties. Its purpose is to promote candid and frank discussions between a president and his advisors. Government attorney-client privilege is a variant of the common-law attorney-client privilege, but with the following crucial distinctions:

1. the client is the Office of the President of the United States; and

2. the advice being rendered by a government attorney to the president is "for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law; or (ii) legal services; or (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding" (In re Sealed Case, 737 F. 2d at 98 to 99 [quoting U.S.v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357, 358 to 59 (D. Mass. 1950)] in In re Bruce Lindsey [Grand Jury Testimony], 158 F. 3d 1263 [D.C. Cir. 1998]).

References

Baker, Howard (with John Tuck). 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, November 12.

Bendavid, Naftali. 1994. Keeping the president's counsel. Legal Times, March 14, pp. 1, 20-21.

Brady, Phillip. 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, August 17.

REV_00260337

Culvahouse, A. B. 1999a. Comments on the topic, "Should the White House Counsel's Office Be Abolished?" Conference paper presented at the Constitution under Clinton: A Critical Assessment, September 23-25, at Duke University Law School, Durham, NC.

--. 1999b. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, September 15.

--. 2000. Personal communication to Martha Joynt Kumar, October 9.

Cutler, Lloyd C. 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar (with Nancy Kassop), White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, July 8.

Goldman, Sheldon, and Elliot Slotnick. 1997. Clinton's first term judiciary: Many bridges to cross. Judicature 80 (May-June): 254-73.

--. 1999. Clinton's second term judiciary: Picking judges under fire. Judicature 82 (May-June): 264-84.

Goldman, Sheldon, Elliot Slotnick, Gerard Gryski, and Gary Zuk. 2001. Clinton's judges: Summing up the legacy. Judicature 84 (March-April): 228-54.

Gray, C. Boyden. 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar (with Nancy Kassop), White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, October 4.

Light, Paul C., and Virginia Thomas. 2000. The merit and reputation of an administration: Presidential appointees on the appointments process. Washington, DC: Presidential Appointees Initiative.

Lipshutz, Robert. 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, September 1.

Marcus, Ruth, and Ann Devroy. 1994. Nussbaum quits White House post. Washington Post, March 6, p. A1.

Mikva, Abner. 2000. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar (with Terry Sullivan), White House Interview Program, Chicago, April 26.

Nussbaum, Bernard C. 1999. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar (with Nancy Kassop), White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, November 9.

Rabkin, Jeremy. 1995. White House lawyering: Law, ethics, and political judgments. In Government lawyers: The federal legal bureaucracy and presidential politics, edited by Cornell W. Clayton. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas.

Strine, Michael 1995. Counsels to the president: The rise of organizational competition. In Government lawyers: The federal legal bureaucracy and presidential politics, edited by Cornell W. Clayton Lawrence: University Press of Kansas.

Sullivan, Terry. 2001. In full view: The inquiry of presidential nominees (Rep. No. 15, White House 2001 Project, March 29) [Online]. Available from http://whitehouse2001.org.

Walcott, Charles E., and Karen M. Hult. 1995. Governing the White House: From Hoover through LBJ. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas.

Wallison, Peter. 2000. Interview by Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, Washington, DC, January 27.

MaryAnne Borrelli is associate professor of government at Connecticut College and the coeditor of The Other Elites: Women, Politics, and Power in the Executive Branch.

Karen M. Hult is professor of political science at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. She is the author of Agency Merger and Bureaucratic Redesign and the coauthor, with Charles E. Walcott, of Governing the White House: From Hoover through LBJ and Governing Public Organizations.

Nancy Kassop is associate professor of political science and international relations at the State University of New Paltz. Her most recent article is "The Expansion and Contraction of Presidential Power under Clinton" in The Presidency and Law after Clinton.

AUTHORS' NOTE: We are grateful for the comments and suggestions of Martha Joynt Kumar and for the time and effort of the former presidential staffers who shared their experiences and insights in the White House Interview Project.

IAC-CREATE-DATE: January 3, 2002

LOAD-DATE: January 04, 2002

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years ⓘ
Terms: "executive privilege" /10 gonzales (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Monday, October 14, 2002 - 11:25 AM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00260339

has to go to get an opinion on whether something may properly be done or not. For example, if you wish to invoke an executive privilege not to produce documents or something, the routine now is you go to the Office of Legal Counsel and you get their opinion that there is a valid basis for asserting executive privilege in this case.... You're able to say [to the judge who is going to examine these documents] the Office of Legal Counsel says we have a valid basis historically for asserting executive privilege here.

The counsel's office is the channel through which most paper and people must pass on the way to the president and, equally, through which all outputs from the Oval Office must be monitored and evaluated. The unit exists in a fishbowl, is subject to searing public criticism when it makes the slightest misstep, and yet prompts intense loyalty among those who have been privileged to serve in it.

Functions of the White House Counsel's Office

Although the White House counsel's office has assumed different tasks in different administrations, the broader contours of its responsibilities began to take shape under Counsel Fred Fielding in the Nixon administration and have been remarkably consistent since the Ford years. (1)

Advising on the Exercise of Presidential Powers and Defending the President's Constitutional Prerogatives

The counsel's responsibilities associated with presidential powers are highly volatile. They involve such activities as routinely reviewing (and occasionally drafting) executive orders, reviewing pardon and commutation recommendations, approving covert action proposals, interpreting treaties and executive agreements, examining presidential statements for consistency and compliance with legal standards (and in anticipation of legal challenges), and participating in editing the State of the Union address. Tasks that have consistently related to the defense of a president's constitutional prerogatives are fewer in number. These have generally focused on issues related to executive privilege, war powers, and presidential disability or succession.

The present Washington political environment is notable for partisanship, polarization, and confrontation. Presidential actions are subject to extraordinary scrutiny, and a twenty-four-hour news cycle accelerates the pace of decision making, making any distinction between the "routine" and the more "crisis-laden" exercise of a president's constitutional powers essentially artificial. At any time, political events may transform an otherwise routine exercise of presidential powers into an extraordinary undertaking. As Clinton counsel Bernard Nussbaum (1999, 6) concluded, "Small (and not so small) policy and political problems grow into legal problems. It was my job to make sure that these political and policy brushfires didn't become conflagrations."

A White House counsel must be well informed about political developments throughout the White House and the executive branch. Such knowledge is crucial if a counsel is to manage the conflicts that can result when Congress, a court, or an independent counsel exercising prosecutorial functions demands information from a sitting president who refuses to accede.

REV_00260313

Despite the primacy of high-stakes politics in these stand-offs, some political accommodation, rather than a purely "legal" answer, is typically the outcome. As many counsels have discovered, the best legal judgments about appropriate presidential response often have been overridden by political considerations.

> I think this President operated on the premise pretty much and I certainly did that whatever the legal consequences or legal parameters were of executive privilege, if Congress really wanted something, politically it almost was impossible to deny it. The more you stood on privilege, the more you pointed to precedents, the more you showed these are the things that the President didn't turn over, the more they could make political hay out of it. (Mikva 2000, 5)

In relative terms, the counsel's role in regard to war powers has been less controversial. As chair of the War Powers Committee, the counsel is responsible for notifications to Congress. In keeping with presidential views that the War Powers Resolution is unconstitutional, however, counsels have provided Congress with a minimum of information "in the interest of comity." In the words of A. B. Culvahouse (1999b, 5), "There is a real kabuki dance that was done. You sent a notice up to the Hill while protesting all the time that you're not providing notice." Like a kabuki dance, the war powers dialogue is often quite ceremonial, lacks a clear beginning or ending, and reveals much about the competition for political power. Typically, precedent is followed very closely, with past letters serving as models for correspondence.

Presidential disability and succession also require the counsel's attention. Culvahouse (2000) has commented on this recurring issue of temporary presidential medical incapacity:

> This is an area where the lack of an institutional memory is atrocious. The White House should not have to re-invent a process each time the POTUS [President of the United States[has surgery. We did the same thing when President Reagan had surgery (I think for skin cancer) in '87/'88.

Further complicating the counsel's work as protector of presidential powers and constitutional prerogatives is the lack of clarity associated with the counsel's responsibilities as an advocate. The White House counsel provides legal advice to the office of the presidency, not to the individual president. As such, the counsel protects the powers of the office within the constitutional order of separated powers. Determining whether the office or the individual is under attack, however, may be difficult.

> In fact, when I was first introduced to this job by Fred Fielding he said to me, "You are counsel to the office of the presidency. You are not counsel to the President." ... However, in practice, it's not a very useful guide, because you really don't know--when issues like Whitewater come up--whether you're representing the President or the presidency.... But as soon as it becomes clear--and there's no bright line here--that this isn't just noise by political opponents, but in fact relates to the President's personal conduct, then the President should have his own lawyer. (Wallison 2000, 25)

REV_00260314

Identifying and drawing these distinctions often has generated controversy. For instance, Clinton counsel Bernard Nussbaum was widely viewed as failing to differentiate between advocacy on behalf of the office and on behalf of an individual president. For his part, Nussbaum wrote in his resignation letter that he left "as a result of controversy generated by those who do not understand, nor wish to understand, the role and obligations of a lawyer, even one acting as White House counsel." (As quoted in Marcus and Devroy 1994, A1)

Overseeing Presidential Nominations and Appointments to the Executive and Judicial Branches

White House counsel advising about presidential nominees and appointees to the executive branch typically has focused on nominations to the top Justice Department positions and to the general counsel positions in the departments and agencies. Nussbaum (1999, 5) bluntly stated that his office "appointed the Attorney General, head of the FBI, Justice Department officials (Dellinger--I sent him over to OLC from the White House counsel's office)."

White House counsels also stress their need to appoint a counsel to the National Security Council (NSC) staff. Lloyd Cutler argued for appointing the NSC counsels to the White House counsel's office rather than to the NSC staff; C. Boyden Gray (1999, 23) emphasized the importance of a low-key NSC observer:

We worked out a deal that I could name [National Security Assistant Brent Scowcroft's] deputy legal advisor to the NSC, Steve Rademaker.... But that can be tricky. It was tricky and a huge problem in Iran-Contra....

Scowcroft agreed that I should never be in a situation like that. That's why he allowed me to have Rademaker in there.

The extent to which the counsel's office has been involved in the judicial appointment process has differed across administrations (Goldman and Slotnick 1997, 1999; Goldman et al. 2001). In several recent administrations, the White House counsel oversaw the process from start to finish: the counsel chaired the judicial selection committee, supervised the vetting and clearance process, and prepared the nominee for confirmation. In every administration, the judicial nomination process required the careful coordination of several White House offices, consultation with the Justice Department, and extended negotiations with U.S. senators.

The selection process varies for district, circuit, and Supreme Court nominations. Senators tend to be more involved in nominations to the U.S. district courts than they are in nominations to the courts of appeal or, especially, to the U.S. Supreme Court. Partisanship, though, plays an important role in determining the amount of influence that each player will have in the process.

Unlike the Supreme Court, with courts of appeal and district courts you had > to deal with the local Republican, in our case senators, if there were senators. If there weren't senators, the governors, congressmen and congresswomen. District courts, I seldom got involved. The Justice Department had a lot of protracted negotiations ... about whether this was an appropriate person and so forth or was this a person who shared the President's judicial philosophy. Courts of appeal I would more often get involved. There would be disputes between the senators and the Justice Department. There would be disputes between maybe two Republican senators from the same state, between the governor and the more senior congressman or congresswoman. (Culvahouse 1999b, 20-21)

REV_00260315

Yet, over time, the selection process has shifted from being centered in the Justice Department to being firmly ensconced in the White House, albeit with the status of the Attorney General always a factor. Carter counsel Robert Lipshutz encountered considerable resistance from the Department of Justice when he sought to participate in judicial selection.

> [White House involvement in judicial appointments] was a struggle within the Justice Department because, number one, the White House was stepping into what many, particularly career people, and even Griffin [Bell, the Attorney General] too, felt should be strictly their prerogative and that is helping the President pick the judges. (Lipshutz 1999, 11)

White House involvement in lower court nominations increased during the Reagan years and had become routine by the time Bill Clinton took office.

> The judicial selection process is centered in the White House Office. A lot of other White House counsel's offices did not have the breadth and authority we had (maybe because of Foster and his access to the First Lady). We had special responsibility for Court of Appeals and Supreme Court appointments. (Nussbaum 1999, 5)

From the Reagan years onward, the judicial selection committee chaired by the counsel typically included members of the White House counsel's office and the Department of Justice. In the Clinton administration, it also included representatives from the first lady's office and the office of legislative affairs. The selection committee's assessments were both legal and political, weighing the potential nominee's legal philosophy and the likelihood of Senate confirmation.

REV_00260316

Well, it's all done in conjunction with the Department of Justice and it's pretty obvious to any lawyer who the candidates are. It's not rocket science. The question is always, "Can you get the person you really ...?" What's the matrix of confirmability with whom you really want to go with? You can't do your ideal person, usually, because there's a confirmation problem or there's a background problem or there's a money problem or there's something. So it never lines up perfectly. (Gray 1999, 9)

Members of the Clinton counsel's office were invited to the personal interviews with prospective lower federal court nominees, which were conducted by senior officials in the Department of Justice's Office of Policy Development. Counsel staff also contacted senators about possible nominees, working with senior members and staffers of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In addition, the counsel's participation in the nomination and appointment process has consistently involved the office in supervising the vetting and clearance process (FBI, IRS, 278 forms and financial disclosure forms) for all presidential nominees to the executive and judicial branches. The time and resources consumed by these reviews are extraordinary (see, e.g., Light and Thomas 2001; Sullivan 2001).

Well, the FBI thing takes roughly three months although you can speed it up. You can do an expedite and do it in a week if someone has been through it before. I think we did Cheney over a long weekend. But if you're starting from scratch with somebody, normally it's three to four months depending on how old they are.... It can take people three months just to fill out the forms so you really have to hammer people.... (Gray 1999, 21-22)

When the background checks were complete--or even while they were progressing--decisions had to be made about whether to proceed with the nomination or appointment. In each administration, White House counsels noted that different standards were applied to appointments than to nominations and also to nominations for more and for less visible positions.

You'd have some people that you might never send up to the Hill for confirmation, but because they were strong allies of the President, supporters and/or were people that had a lot to offer, you might appoint them to the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board rather than nominate them to be undersecretary of defense because the President has unilateral appointment authority. Maybe they go to a Schedule C position in OMB [Office of Management and Budget] or DAS [Deputy Assistant Secretary], Treasury or whatever. You were pretty darn pure about cabinet people, deputy secretar[ies]. We were awfully pure about State, Defense, Treasury, Justice.... (Culvahouse 1999b, 32)

REV_00260317

Then, when the nominations were sent to the Senate, negotiations had to be conducted about the legislators' access to the reports.

How much of the FBI files do they get to see[?] We conduct the search; we do the FBI for our benefit not for their benefit.... That was subject to enormous negotiation.... Huge fights over that.... You have to negotiate them one by one.... (Gray 1999, 16)

Beyond vetting the nominees, the counsel's office sometimes prepared them for the confirmation hearings.

We [the Reagan administration] did a lot of murder boards, not just for judicial nominees but for a lot of people. I probably did fifty murder boards in my twenty-two months.... You get a bunch of lawyers and legislative types pretending to be senators and acting like horse's rear ends.... What you want to do is anticipate questions, to make it more difficult for him or her than it is going to be in fact, and hit all of the areas that he or she is going to be questioned about. Supreme Court nominees are very difficult because the hearings go on forever and ever.... There should be an understanding that a good enough answer is good enough. We're not striving for perfection here--we're striving for B-plus--and that you don't critique during the first two hours. You only critique on breaks thereafter.... This person already is the President's nominee. (Culvahouse 1999b, 18-19)

Advising on Presidential Actions Relating to the Legislative Process

Congressional relations are a daily fact of life for the White House staff and, therefore, for the counsel's office. In recent administrations, this has involved counsel aides in reviewing legislative proposals; reviewing bills presented for signature or veto and drafting signing statements and veto messages; reviewing State and Defense Department authorizations and appropriations proposals; drafting budget rescissions and deferrals; participating in the negotiations associated with Senate treaty hearings; and joining legislative negotiations concerning policy, document requests, treaties, and nominations.

REV_00260318

The extent to which the counsel's office has participated in policy negotiations has varied within and across administrations. Among the counsels who were deeply engaged in policy making was C. Boyden Gray, who recalled,

> The question is whether you take the lead or just participate in negotiations. I basically had to lead all the negotiations with the civil rights groups and the Congress on the Civil Rights Bill. I was sitting at the center of the table. I did not lead but I was a participant in all the negotiations down in [George] Mitchell's conference room in the Senate--endless, endless meetings on the Clean Air Act. They would go until two, three, four in the morning sometimes. I wasn't leading those, but I was there. (1999, 4; see also Cutler 1999, 15)

At a minimum, counsels have routinely been consulted about legislative matters. The resultant advising typically has involved as much politicking as it has lawyering. For example, the Reagan and Bush administrations seized on signing statements, which are drafted by the counsel's office, as opportunities for statutory interpretation by the executive. These presidents used signing statements to urge courts to give the same legal weight to the "executive intent" of legislation as they traditionally have given to its legislative intent. Accordingly, the counsel's office became deeply involved in the associated political and policy debates.

Educating White House Staffers about Ethics Rules and Records Management and Monitoring for Adherence

Perhaps the most prominent of the newer demands confronting the counsel's office is the intensified scrutiny of a range of ethical matters. The increased stress on ethics has generated the need for a central coordinator who is alert to potential problems and able to take preemptive (or corrective) action. This emphasis involves counsel staffers in a range of activities, including distinguishing between White House expenses and campaign expenses; reviewing presidential travel; approving requests for appointments with the president and monitoring the requests for propriety, seemliness, legality, and executive privilege issues; responding to document requests and subpoenas directed to the president and to other White House and executive branch officials by congressional committees and independent counsels; and serving as the ethics officers for White House staff and executive branch political appointees. Past counsels underscore that this work is essential to a president's early success because it allows an administration to put its own people in place, establish responsible procedures, and advance its policy initiatives.

Ethics laws, to quote C. Boyden Gray (1999, 1), "are quite complicated and obscure and overworked and ought to be deregulated." The White House counsel's office is needed to explain these laws to both political appointees and members of the White House staff. This role is particularly important at the outset of an individual's service in the White House or executive branch, throughout the campaign season, and during investigations.

REV_00260319

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM
REPORT NO. 21

THE CHIEF OF STAFF

CHARLES E. WALCOTT
VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE & STATE UNIVERSITY

SHIRLEY ANNE WARSHAW GETTYSBURG COLLEGE

STEPHEN J. WAYNE
GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY

Contact Information

The White House 2001 Project
Martha Joynt Kumar, Director
by email: mkumar@brook.edu
phone: 202/496.1348

Released 17 December, 2000

Undertaken by presidency scholars and funded by the Pew Charitable Trusts, the White House Interview Program provides information to incoming Presidential staff on White House transitions and operations. See http://whitehouse2001.org for more information. A later version will appear in Presidential Studies Quarterly, Spring 2001.

REV_00260340

Staff and top staffers. There is no "one best way" to set things up. Depending upon the background and interests of the Chief of Staff and the top aides, the office is frequently involved in congressional relations, communications strategies, and political liaison. For instance, former members of Congress such as Howard Baker, Leon Panetta or Henson Moore, were naturally drawn into this arena. Michael Deaver was deeply involved in communications planning as James Baker's deputy, even before he took over the operation formally.

At the outset of the Reagan administration, James Baker explicitly excluded the Chief of Staff office from policy development, leaving that to Counselor Edwin Meese. Baker assumed responsibility for process. (Deaver) Michael Deaver, who had the title of Assistant Chief of Staff, was responsible for scheduling and travel, the East Wing (the offices of the First Lady and the military) and anything to do with communications. When David Gergen left the White House, Deaver formally took on responsibility for communications. Richard Darman, who replaced Deaver, did not have responsibility for scheduling, which remained with Deaver, but he did oversee management and administration. Another Deputy, James Cicconi, was primarily responsible for overseeing the decision making process. (Cicconi) When Donald Reagan succeeded Baker, he put three deputies in place, and allowed the Chief of Staff office to expand considerably. But Howard Baker reverted to a simple model, with two top assistants, one of whom specialized in decision process management. (H. Baker and Tuck) When Baker's deputy, Kenneth Duberstein became Chief of Staff, the same model was retained.

Little changed under President Bush's first Chief of Staff, John Sununu. He had one deputy, responsible for overseeing White House operations, and with a varied portfolio beyond that (Card) By the fall of 1991, Sununu had only one top aide, the deputy, Andrew Card, along with the usual complement of lower-level aides. As Card described a key element of his job:

> I was kind of the bad guy in the White House. As deputy Chief of Staff I did basically all of the salaries. And I was tough. I would say, "No, we're not going to pay that much... I was also very tough on the number of commissioned officers you could have... (Card)

Under Samuel Skinner, the Chief of Staff's staff grew back to a deputy and a counselor (Henson Moore and Cameron Findlay, respectively). Moore dealt mainly with White House mechanics (Moore), with press, scheduling, and speechwriting reporting to him. He also became involved in congressional relations, and the job evolved beyond that:

> As it turned out, Sam (Skinner) did not like to travel, so I did all the traveling with the President. . .When you travel with the President you become the Chief of Staff at that point because the staff is supposed to move with the President. (Moore)

When James Baker replaced Skinner at the end of the administration he brought in his own people, but kept the basic model. In fact, his deputy, Bob Zoellick, "actually ran the White House at that time," while Baker functioned mainly as chairman of the Bush re-election campaign. (J. Baker, II)

The Clinton chiefs followed a familiar organizational pattern, with two deputy chiefs (or the equivalent) serving under the Chief of Staff, but Leon Panetta, in the process of strengthening the Chief of Staff role, expanded the Chief of Staff office. Initially, under Mack McLarty, the responsibilities of the deputies were defined rather loosely, as McLarty adjusted to the particular strengths of Mark Gearan and Roy Neel, and to get along without Harold Ickes, whom he had hoped to employ. (McLarty) When Panetta succeeded McLarty, he made Ickes deputy in charge of political affairs and some oversight of substantive issues, while Erskine Bowles took charge of scheduling and management of White House personnel. Panetta also placed senior Presidential advisers George Stephanopoulos and Rahm Emanuel in the Chief of Staff office, assuming that they would report to the President through the Chief of Staff. Moreover, with the 1996 election impending, Panetta placed additional White House staff units – speechwriting and communications – in the now-expanded Chief of Staff office. As Chief of Staff, after the election, Bowles in part reverted to the earlier pattern, taking considerable scheduling responsibility himself, while speechwriting and communications were dropped from the Chief of Staff office. However, as noted above, the Chief of Staff office did not shrink back to the simpler model of prior administrations. The senior advisers and others stayed, and the overall staff grew, in part to coordinate the now-expanded office.

REV_00260349

Informal Structures

Not all organizational structuring – recurring, predictable activities and responsibilities – is found on organization charts. Successful Chiefs of Staff have supplemented formal arrangements by initiating regular group meetings with key White House personnel. This has been a key management tool for all chiefs so long as the senior staff meetings do not get too large and unwieldy. (Card; H. Baker)

In addition, different chiefs and/or deputies have taken the lead in initiating meetings to plan communications strategy (Deaver), brief the Cabinet, plan the President's schedule (Moore), or organize task forces or "war rooms" for the pursuit of unusually important projects. The extreme case of informal structuring can be found in the small group Al Haig brought together during the waning days of the Nixon administration to handle the routine business of the White House while the President focused on his fight for political survival. (Jones) In any case, the desirability or need for such organizational innovations will most likely be dictated by a President's particular agenda and by circumstances, such as the onset of a campaign season or the development of major legislative efforts like Carter's energy plan or Clinton's health care initiative.

CONTROLLING THE FLOW OF PEOPLE AND PAPER

Getting Control of the Paper Flow

The Chief of Staff must take responsibility for the operation of the White House. To do so, lines of authority must flow to and through his office to the President. No matter how White House functions are organized, the information flow must be up and to the Chief of Staff, usually through the staff secretary, cabinet secretary and deputy Chiefs of Staff. Only by monitoring the full flow of paper to the President can a Chief of Staff assure that all relevant information has been received and all relevant points of view represented.

The fundamental purpose of orderly processes in the White House is to provide the basis for the best-informed decisions possible. The job of the Chief of Staff is to assure that all relevant voices are hear in the decision process, and that choices are made in light of full information. James Baker summarized:

> You have to make sure you have an orderly system, that you have a system that's fair. Otherwise, you start the leaking in the press, one against the other. You have to have a system that lets the President hear all sides. And you have to have one, that if you're going to be running the White House, you have to know what's going on. (J. Baker, II)

To assure such fairness, all recent White Houses have employed a decision process whereby decision memoranda are routinely circulated, usually by the staff secretary, to all officials with expertise or a stake in a Presidential decision. The Chief of Staff must monitor the workings of this process closely, for it is here, in the framing of the decision and the description of options, that staffers may be tempted to push their own particular interests, or substitute them for those of their principals. As Howard Baker said of this kind of problem:

> Well, that's exactly the level of detail where it occurs, in the staffing of the memo that's going to the President, the decision memo with the options describing – that's where all the fights occur – describing what the background is, describing the discussion, describing the options... We tried not to let that spill up to the President but sometimes the memos were so controversial... we just couldn't forge consensus about what this paper would look like. (H. Baker)

REV_00260350

Due to the crucial position of the staff secretary in the operation of this system, it is imperative that the Chief of Staff pick a trustworthy staff secretary. Mark Siegel, who served under Carter, noted that Hamilton Jordan, even before he became Chief of Staff, was careful to place his own man, Rick Hutcheson, in that position.

> Hamilton is a very smart guy and he understood and we discussed that he (Jordan) would control the paper and control the presidency. He would control the paper in the Oval Office, controlled everything. And why he selected this – Rick, at that point he was a baby.

The Chief of Staff or someone on his staff must supplement the staff secretary in the exercise of judgment as to what gets to the President and what does not. Deputy Chief of Staff Andrew Card, who had this responsibility under Bush, contrasted the staff secretary's monitoring with his own:

> They did it watching for policy or consistency of language. I did it to protect the President. Is this something the President has to have today?... the staff secretary job is to be pretty policy wonkish, too. This policy is inconsistent with the one we had the President say last week....That was more of an editorial role; mine was more of how do I protect the President in there from wasting his time and energy. (Card)

Leon Panetta made a similar point:

> I wanted to funnel all of the issues and decision making that ultimately had to go to the President through the Chief of Staff's operation. That helped a great deal because it came in kind of a vacuum in which staff people and others weren't getting decision on issues unless they had to take it to the President. And there is a lot of decision, frankly, that you could make that don't necessarily have to go to the President..... So my role was to make decisions. If they were important decisions, I would always brief the President. But having those decisions made, whether it's scheduling, whether it's this, whether it's that, keeps that place running. (Panetta)

Beyond decision memoranda, Presidents will also require background papers on issues. President Clinton, for instance, "would want maybe a summary with several pages of backup on a particular matter we were considering." (McLarty) The Chief of Staff is often responsible for the preparation of such materials, and likewise for their thoroughness and balance. At the very least, the Chief of Staff must monitor what goes to the President. If the President's out box contains material that never went through the in box – if, in other words, people are bypassing the staff system, the Chief of Staff must address the problem. Whether by paper or in person, such "end runs" will tend to upset the balance of the decision system.

Of course, the discretion implied in these accounts is liable to abuse, as well as to the perception of abuse. Although H.R. Haldeman denied that he tried to control policy in the Nixon White House, the perception that he did nevertheless was strong. Thus it is important for the Chief of Staff to involve other White House staff in his decision processes (Panetta), and to maintain confidence in the essential accessibility of both the process and the President. Sherman Adams imposed a similar procedural rule during the Eisenhower administration. (Adams)

Adjusting and Conforming to the President's Style

The President must feel comfortable with the people on the White House staff and the way it works. Although "the Chief of Staff's personality dominates the way the White House works, it can only be done if it has the blessing of the President," noted one person who served in that office.

If a President wishes to keep control of a lower level decisional or administrative matter, there is little a Chief of Staff can do. That such an arrangement may be ineffective needs to become obvious to a President before the system can be streamlined. Ford, Carter and Clinton found this out the hard way at the beginning of their administrations.

REV_00260351

Landon Butler, who worked in the Carter White House stated: "We were a direct reflection of what the President wanted around him and what he needed. In our case, Carter played a very hands-on role in virtually every aspect of putting the White House together." (Butler) Mack McLarty also set up the type of system that Clinton wanted:

> I think the President's style also wanted a large range of opinions, to be coordinated for sure. But he is clearly an engaged person in terms of both his political style, his personality and his policy-making style. So that was kind of the framing of it. I think that's how we approached it. (McLarty)

In explaining this, McLarty also noted that the operation of "the White House and to some extent the administration... was clearly driven by the campaign. And I think to have dramatically altered that would have created a whole other set of dynamics and problems." (McLarty) A senior official familiar with the Clinton operation added:

> Mack had a very untenable situation in that regard and did the best he could with that... his authority was constantly and often inadvertently or indirectly undermined by the President's willingness or indulgence... (to allow individuals who had developed a relationship with him on his campaign to see him). (background interview)

Most other recent Presidents have had a very different operating style, which encouraged much more staff control over his schedule, speeches, and visitors. This has been the case for all but Carter and Ford. And, like Clinton, Ford rather quickly abandoned the "spokes-of-the-wheel" system of open access for a more structured system with a strong chief, even though the title "Chief of Staff" was carefully eschewed. He was encouraged to do so by Donald Rumsfeld who accepted the President's offer to oversee White House operations only if he be given the authority of a Chief of Staff. Carter, after trying to do without a Chief of Staff altogether, in the style of his Democratic predecessors, ultimately turned to Hamilton Jordan, then Jack Watson as Chief of Staff, though neither was what one would call a "strong" chief.

Guarding the Door to the Oval Office

A very important aspect of the Chief of Staff role is to guard the flow of people and paper into the Oval Office. Time is an incredibly important Presidential commodity. It is up to the Chief of Staff to help him manage it effectively. "You need to have discipline and order and be discriminating," said James Baker. (J. Baker, I)

Limiting access to the Oval Office serves another purpose. It saves the President from his friends and supporters. Presidents are politicians and as such, like to please. What they don't like to do is say "no." Thus an important function of the Chief of Staff is to protect the President by eliminating or reducing those politically embarrassing situations which put a President on the spot. Sometimes, of course, obstructing access can be carried too far. Donald Regan overly protected Ronald Reagan. The President's friends had to go public to reach him. On the other hand, when H.R. Haldeman kept people out of the Oval Office, he was following Nixon's wishes. According to one insider, Haldeman "was implementing Nixon's instructions faithfully, maybe harshly but doing it.... He [Nixon] was a recluse...and did not enjoy the give and take of special pleadings and wouldn't do it." (background interview)

Among the Chiefs of Staff there was also a consensus that Presidents need to be protected from what James Baker called "Oh by the way, decisions," i.e. decisions that are made on the spur of the moment without staff consultation or consideration of consequences. "It's not in anyone's interest, "stated Baker, "to get 'oh by the way decisions' as a guy is leaving a meeting." One way to discourage this practice is for Presidents to issue a generic warning at their first cabinet meeting that such practices will be considered out of order and not tolerated. (Baker, I)

REV_00260352

Because the job of the staff is to run interference for the President, especially when the discussion turns from the prepared agenda, "the Chief of Staff needs to know what the President is telling people and what they're telling him. You need to have an understanding with him about it." (J. Baker, I) In Reagan's case, he regularly informed his staff if he met with anyone without the staff being present. In Bush's case, unless the meeting was listed as private, an aide from the Chief of Staff office would always be in attendance. (Moore) Being with the President also involves traveling with him. Either the Chief of Staff or a designated deputy should be on all trips away from the White House.

Coordinating Presidential Appearances and Statements

The office of the Chief of Staff must be involved in scheduling the President, which includes long-range (perhaps three months) planning. The Chief of Staff need not personally be deeply involved, however. For instance, in the first Reagan term, James Baker delegated responsibility for scheduling (along with communications and relations with the First Lady and her office) to deputy Michael Deaver. (Deaver). Similarly, Henson Moore, under Samuel Skinner, had responsibility for scheduling, and also had the speechwriters and the press office reporting to him. But whether it is the Chief of Staff or a deputy, all these streams – where the President will be, what the President will say, and how attention will be gained for it – must come together

As gatekeeper, the Chief of Staff must review all Presidential schedules, briefings, and speeches. Leon Panetta noted, "If it was a low-level speech to a particular group, I would just sometimes review it very quickly but let the people involved with the policy have the largest impact." But on high-level speeches, such as State of the Union or other major pronouncements, Panetta paid close attention. (Panetta) Much of the friction between him and Dick Morris, Clinton's political adviser, stemmed from Morris' penchant for changing speeches that had gone through the Chief of Staff clearance process. So strongly did Panetta object to this end-running, that he threatened to quit unless it was stopped. And it was. The Wednesday night meetings in the Mansion were used to bring the principals together to debate and hopefully iron-out their differences. Such special-purpose group meetings, regular or ad hoc, can be used to supplement the normal staff meetings in planning and integrating the President's schedule and message.

MANAGING INFORMATION AND BROKERING OPINIONS

In performing the gatekeeper's role, the Chief of Staff must function as an honest broker. Practically all of the chiefs and their deputies interviewed considered such a role essential. James Baker was advised by a predecessor: "Be an honest broker. Don't use the process to impose your policy views on the President." The President needs to see all sides. He can't be blindsided. (J. Baker II) Additionally, cabinet members need to know that their position will be fairly represented, especially if they encounter difficulty in presenting it themselves. Mack McLarty noted that former Chiefs he talked with had > (A) pretty high degree of consensus about the honest-broker approach, that the Chief of Staff certainly needed to be viewed by cabinet members and others as someone who would not shape information in a way that would unduly affect the President's decision making. The cabinet officers and others had the right to expect their information to be fairly presented. (McLarty)

Honest brokerage does not mean having no opinions, or refusing to offer them when asked by the President. It does, however, mean assuring that the decision process will include all relevant points of view, without allowing the agenda or views of the Chief of Staff to bias or distort that process. (Jones) Nor is it enough to be in fact an honest broker. The Chief of Staff must be perceived as such by those seeking access, in person or for their ideas, to the President.

REV_00260353

Although chiefs disagreed on how tight personal access to the President should be, there was unanimity that it should be administered fairly with sensitivity to the position of those who wished to gain an audience. As James Baker put it, "You walk around with a target on your chest and on your back. You use up your chits pretty quickly because the job of the Chief of Staff is to say 'no' to people. Everybody wants something from the President, and your job is to say no or say yes, maybe, but." (J. Baker, I)

Being a good listener is another attribute of the honest brokering function. According to Howard Baker, "There wasn't a day went by when in a senior staff meeting somebody didn't point out to me something that I didn't know about and was not sensitive to. It was an early warning system that worked very well." (H. Baker)

Perhaps the key element in the role of the broker is the process of soliciting opinions prior to Presidential decisions – a process that also can work in the direction of consensus building. While the primary responsibility for doing this, usually via formal memoranda, falls to the Staff Secretary, it is a process the Chief of Staff must monitor. It is the main point at which people will attempt to get access to the decision process – even to the point of staffers substituting their views for, e.g., a cabinet member's. As Howard Baker's deputy, John Tuck, said:

> Well, that's exactly the level of detail where it occurs, in the staffing of the memo that's going to the President, the decision memo with the options describing the discussion, describing the options. And all the fights occur on just exactly that level of detail. We tried not to let that spill up to the President but sometimes the memos were so controversial – and I can only think of one or two where the memo was bigger than it should have been because we just couldn't forge a consensus about what this paper would look like. (Tuck, in H. Baker)

As a broker, the Chief of Staff is also responsible for Presidential briefings. The regular morning meetings between the President and Chief of Staff are a time for briefings. But for more formal briefings, involving multiple participants, the Chief normally works with other staffers. Panetta described such a process:

> Just to give you an example, clearly national security issues where there were decisions related to what was going to happen in Bosnia... (etc.) would go to the President. What I would do is work with the National Security Adviser and basically set up the briefing so they could make their presentation to the President. And, because of the nature of this President usually even on scheduling issues, you'd go in with a schedule. You'd present a proposed schedule to the President but you would let him obviously comment on that as well. (Panetta)

III. ADVISORY ROLES

ADVISING THE PRESIDENT ON POLITICS, POLICY, AND MANAGEMENT

Although the Chief of Staff is first and foremost an honest broker, it is unlikely that a staffer so close to a President would not be called upon as an adviser, as well. This is particularly true in areas of the Chief's special interest or competence. Leon Panetta, for example, as a former OMB director, was an adviser on budgetary matters. (Panetta). Mack McLarty, with a background in private business, advised President Clinton on his economic planning. (McLarty)

One important aspect of advising is integrating policy and politics. Most other advisers, inside and outside the White House, specialize in one or the other. But the Chief of Staff is expected to be conversant with both. James Baker gave an example of this in discussing the advice President Bush received concerning the economy in 1992:

REV_00260354

> I want to tell you the problem there was not so much that President Bush wasn't listening to (his advisers)... But he was listening to his economic advisers, who were giving him good economic advice – good economic advice – but lousy political advice. This, I think, was the fault of the White House staff and organization at the time. They should have been able to see that, while the economy might not have needed any action... we nevertheless needed an economic or domestic policy agenda around which to coalesce a campaign. (J. Baker II)

More generally, Baker described the Office of the Chief of Staff as "the place where policy and politics come together." (J. Baker, I)

PROTECTING THE PRESIDENT'S INTERESTS

The role of the Chief of Staff as adviser to the President is inherently problematic, however, since as it has the potential to conflict with the role of honest broker. Nevertheless, the Chief of Staff is often required to advise, especially when that consists of carrying bad news or disagreement to the President. Others may want to, but often find that they cannot. This falls under the category of protecting the interests of the President. One former Chief of Staff spoke to this issue:

> Second, you've got to have a person who can tell you what they think... and it's rare when you're President. Most people come up to me as Chief of Staff and say I'm going in and tell him it's the dumbest thing I've ever seen and he's simply got to change it. They get in there, slobber all over him, kiss his ring, tell him how wonderful he is, leave and walk out and say, gee, I really told him. I'd say that's the most groveling, sycophantic behavior I've ever seen in my life. And they say, no, I told him... People just simply do not walk in, point their finger at the President and say, look: that's wrong. (background interview)

Henson Moore explained:

> It's just something about the Oval Office, there's something about the aura of the power of a President that people just won't say what really needs to be said to a President except a very choice few people who are so close to him and were so close to him before he was President that they can overcome it, or they have such a position of trust and respect held for them by the President that they don't feel intimidated." (Moore)

"Sam Skinner and I were not that close to the President. We were staff and he listened to us politely, but if his initial instinct was different from mine or Sam's, he'd go with his initial instinct. We didn't have the ability to turn him from that." (Moore) A factor that aggravated this problem in the Bush White House was the President's decision to keep White House operations separate from the campaign. The effectively kept Skinner, the Chief of Staff, out of the political loop and greatly limited his overall influence, even with elements of his own staff. (Skinner),

The protection of the President's interests is perhaps most crucial in times of crisis. The Iran-Contra affair in the Reagan administration illustrated what can happen when the advisory system fails to work well. James Baker made that clear:

> When (President Reagan) got in trouble was when that system broke down after I left and after Mike Deaver left, particularly. They got him to agree to some things on Iran-Contra and other things that were a mistake. Bill Casey always wanted to go in there and see the President by himself. But as long as the President would tell us, then we could act to either say, "Wait a minute. Do you really want to do this or do you not?" (J. Baker I; see also Deaver)

Mack McLarty also faced a crisis when the Whitewater accusations began to fly. Here, protection of the President's interests had more to do with coping with forces beyond the presidency. He described his approach:

REV_00260355

> The way you deal with that I think as effectively as you can, and I think we were reasonably good at it, is to really try to segment it and separate is as much as you possibly can and isolate it. You've got to deal with it, but we did set up a task force to deal with it. Therefore, you've got people who are concentrating on this, capable, skilled, dealing with the issues and then that allows, obviously, the agenda to go forward... (McLarty)

Presidents may even need to be protected from themselves. H.R. Haldeman, President Nixon's Chief of Staff, wrote:

> I soon realized that this President had to be protected from himself. Time and again I would receive petty vindictive orders... after a Senator made an anti-Vietnam War speech: "Put a 24-hour surveillance on that bastard." And so on and on and on. If I took no action, I would pay for it. The President never let up. He'd be on the intercom buzzing me ten minutes after such an order... I'd say "I'm working on it," and delay and delay until Nixon would one day comment, with a sort of half-smile on his face, "I guess you never took action on that, did you?" "No." "Well, I guess it was the best thing . . ." (Haldeman)

NEGOTIATING WITH THE ENVIRONMENT CONGRESS, THE DEPARTMENTS, AND OTHERS

Chiefs of staff need to get around. They cannot remain closeted in the White House. However, one of the areas of difference among the various Chief of Staff was how much visibility they should personally have. Howard Baker, James Baker, Dick Cheney, and Ken Duberstein all urged the Chief of Staff to stay in the background and not become the center of attention. James Baker saw it as a function of the Chief of Staff to keep the press informed of developments, but to do so on a background basis. "That's not leaking, that's spinning," he said. (Baker, I) Increasingly, however, chiefs have functioned as spokespersons, negotiators, and occasionally, as go-betweens on key issues. Sununu linked the Bush White House to conservative groups, James Baker to the Republican political establishment in 1992, while McLarty developed and maintained the Clinton administration's contacts with the business community.

A key element of the role of most recent Chiefs of Staff has been congressional relations. Though the White House has an office that specializes in this, the Chief of Staff has nonetheless become a major administration spokesman, at least since the emergence of James Baker in that role in the early Reagan years. Prior to that, even a former member of Congress like Donald Rumsfeld did relatively little in that area. (Rumsfeld)

A more common view among more recent chiefs was that of Howard Baker:

> I think it's enormously important though for a President to have a good understanding of the Congress and what's going on up thee and even perhaps a good relationship. A Chief of Staff from that setting can help almost always. Leon Panetta helped and I think I helped. (H. Baker)

John Tuck went so far as to say that Baker "became in fact the congressional affairs guy as well as the Chief of Staff" because members trusted him and "knew what he said would be the policy of the administration." (Tuck, in H. Baker) While that will not often be the case, Andrew Card nonetheless estimated that congressional relations is "probably a good 30 per cent of the responsibility" of the Chief of Staff. (Card)

Another "external" aspect of the Chief of Staff job is dealing with the press. The Chief of Staff may be asked to play a public role as spokesperson for the administration on Sunday talk shows and the like. Beyond that, there is much room for a quieter role. As James Baker pointed out:

> You have to be willing to background the press. Background, not leak. There's a big difference. But one of the things Cheney told me before I took the job, he said, "Be sure you spend a lot of time with the press giving them your spin, why you're doing these things. Talk to them. But always do it invisibly. (J. Baker, II)

REV_00260356

James Baker argued that the "on the record" public presence, attempted by Donald Regan, worked less well because "nobody wanted to hear it from the Chief of Staff. He wasn't elected. They wanted to hear it from the President." (J. Baker, II)

Leon Panetta met regularly with the press for formal and informal briefings.

> You met with the press in the Roosevelt Room to brief them on issues. For example, if we were putting out a budget or putting out a major issue... and you wanted to make sure that the press would give it the kind of emphasis that we wanted, you would do briefings... Then sometimes I would do a one-on-one briefing with a reporter in the Chief of Staff's office. And it varied depending on what the issue was. I didn't do that for everything. (Panetta)

The Chief of Staff also may become involved in cabinet relations, though this is likely to be a smaller part of the job. The White House normally has a cabinet secretary to handle most of the load. Indeed, a veteran of the office noted that "there is natural tension between the Chief of Staff and a cabinet." Presidents have varied in whether they have given the Chief of Staff cabinet rank. The same official's take on that was "I don't know that it makes any difference."

Finally, the Chief of Staff must deal in some ways with interest groups, at least to the extent of scheduling the President for fundraisers. In turn, according to Panetta, the White House must be sensitive to donors:

> These are the kind of big players who are always around.... They are constantly the people you turn to because they have the money for these events. I think, as a result of that, there is without question a greater sensitivity to the issues that they are involved with... .Now, does it control policy, which is the major question in the minds of the American people? Does it control policy? Not necessarily but it sure as hell has an impact as far as decision that are made. It is a factor and it is a growing factor. (Panetta)

Panetta reported that he did feel obligated to meet with and listen to such people. (Panetta)

IV. Personal Styles and Attributes

The Variety of Approaches and People

Both Presidents and Chiefs of Staff come from a variety of backgrounds, display a diversity of personal strengths, weaknesses, and operating styles, and encounter widely differing circumstances during their time in the White House.

Much of the advice relevant to this mix of factors is embedded in what has gone before. Certainly the key is for the Chief of Staff to adapt to the style of the President. The hands-on approach of Jimmy Carter or Bill Clinton certainly required a different form of staff support than the hands-off approach of Ronald Reagan. (Butler; McLarty; Baker I). Likewise, the temperament of the chief executive requires adjustments. The essential factor, perhaps, is achieving the trust of the President. Leon Panetta stated that:

> The first and foremost quality that is essential is trust. You've got to have their trust. To some extent, you have to build that trust because you're just going in to a job, you have to prove yourself. But, ultimately, if you have that trust and you develop that trust, you can do the job. (Panetta)

One also needs to adapt to the various other prominent actors in the White House. Mack McLarty stressed the importance of the Vice President:

REV_00260357

> Another concept I felt strongly about that was not necessarily echoed from the other Chiefs of Staff (with whom he spoke) was that the Vice President be integrated into the Office of the President. Clinton and Gore clearly ran as a team; the Vice President was someone of real standing, a strong personality. And the President's wishes were to have Vice President Gore as an integral part of the team... to keep the Vice President in the information flow and in important meetings... and also have certain areas where he or she would have direct responsibility... (McLarty)

Leon Panetta elaborated upon the importance of the First Lady:

> I think, if there's anything that is probably as common a trend in the White House as Presidents who don't want to offend people, it's that they have very tough first ladies who have been through a lot of the battles and just by the nature of what they've gone through are very strong individuals. (Panetta)

Panetta developed a weekly briefing session for Hillary Clinton for the first six or eight months of his tenure as Chief of Staff. After that, the necessary trust having been established, the meetings "kind of faded away." (Panetta). Similarly, in the Reagan White House, part of Michael Deaver's value as deputy Chief of Staff lay in the confidence that Nancy Reagan placed in him. (Deaver) When Deaver left, Donald Regan was unable to establish such a relationship, which helped lead to his downfall.

Chiefs of staff have come from very different backgrounds. Washington savvy, as noted above, is a desirable trait regardless of background. But there was at least a suggestion that people who have been top decision-makers have a harder time adjusting to the staff role than others do, as both Governor Sununu and Treasury secretary (and former Merrill Lynch CEO) Regan discovered. A former official noted, "I think the most difficult thing for a governor to make the change to becoming a Chief of Staff is that a governor is a principal and a Chief of Staff is staff. You must realize that the spotlight is not supposed to be shining on me; it is supposed to be shining on the other guy." (background interview) Marlin Fitzwater, who served under Reagan and Bush, uttered a similar refrain: "In the end every Chief of Staff is a servant of the President, and the more independence they ask for or try to carve out for themselves, the more likely they are to fail." (Fitzwater)

Regardless of background, one final piece of people-oriented advice from James Baker, reiterating advice noted above, would seem to apply to all who would be Chief of Staff:

> One very important rule in Washington generally is to surround yourself with the best people you can get. People who are so insecure that they are not willing to put really good people in as their deputies don't succeed. If they're worried so much about their own visibility or public persona that they're not going to put somebody strong in, then they're going to fail. (J. Baker, I)

"YOU ARE NOT THE PRESIDENT"

James Baker, Ken Duberstein, and others reiterate the importance of the chief never forgetting the staff component of his title. Remember you are staff, not elected or appointed by President and confirmed by the Senate. "The Chief of Staff has the second most powerful job in government but it's staff. The minute you forget that you're in trouble." (Baker, I) In another interview, Baker repeated much the same warning, "You're really powerful but every bit of that power is derivative from the President. The minute you forget that you get in trouble. And it would be totally inappropriate to call a committee chairman and say, 'Come down to my office to negotiate.' Sometimes they might want to. If one of them wanted to come down, that's fine. You do that. But generally speaking, I went up there and I spent a lot of time up there." (J. Baker, II)

Duberstein made the point with a story of a "crusty Democratic congressman" who once said to him,

REV_00260358

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION 1

I. BASIC ELEMENTS OF THE JOB IN BRIEF 2
Roles 2
1. Managerial roles 2
2. Advisory roles 2
Operating Styles and Environments 2
Personal Attributes, Strategies, and Tactics 3

II. MANAGERIAL ROLES 3
Selecting and Managing White House Personnel 3
Structuring the Staff 6
The White House Office 6
Organization of the Office of the Chief of Staff 7
General Patterns 7
Division of Labor in Recent Administrations 7
Informal Structures 9
Controlling the Flow of People and Paper 9
Getting Control of the Paper Flow 9
Adjusting and Conforming to the President's Style 10
Guarding the Door to the Oval Office 11
Coordinating Presidential Appearances and Statements 12
Managing Information and Brokering Opinions 12

III. ADVISORY ROLES 13
Advising the President on Politics, Policy, and Management 13
Protecting the President's Interests 14
Negotiating with the Environment Congress, the Departments, and Others 15

IV. PERSONAL STYLES AND ATTRIBUTES 16
The Variety of Approaches and People 16
"You Are Not the President" 17

V. DEVELOPING A DAILY SCHEDULE 18
Components 18
Daily Routine 18

VI. CONCLUSION 19

REFERENCES 21
Interviews in White House 2001 Project 21
Other References 21

ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT 1
The White House Interview Program 1
Nomination Forms Online 1

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT REPORT SERIES 2
General Series 2
White House Staff Series 2

REV_00260341

> "Duberstein, you're smarter than 95 per cent of the SOB's up here. You know it and we know it. But what you have to remember is we're elected and you ain't." One of the best pieces of advice I ever got. (Duberstein)

Not only must Chief of Staff keep their own egos in check, but they must be sensitive to the egos and interests of others who work in the White House. Long hours, constant pressures, and personal ambitions, can produce dysfunctional behavior that undercuts a team effort. According to Henson Moore, a former member of Congress and deputy chief in the Bush administration:

> The hours are very long. The pressure is very great for the President, to have him be successful. The warfare and backstabbing is more acute there than I ever saw in the department or ever saw in the Congress. If something goes wrong, you don't want to be blamed for it; you want to put the blame on somebody else. You want to have an exit strategy that you leave as a hero not as a dog." (Moore)

McLarty's deputy, Roy Neel, offered a similar warning:

> The White House... nurtures junkies who grow to feel like they have to have this rush of the daily pressures and the high stakes stuff. That can be good for a while but it does burn people out. Someone has to be there to evaluate when someone has burned out. You can't leave it to the individuals to decide when they've lost their effectiveness." (Neel)

V. DEVELOPING A DAILY SCHEDULE

COMPONENTS

The daily schedule of the Chief of Staff can best be seen as having four components. The first and primary component is to ensure that the President's daily schedule accomplishes what the President needs at that point in time. Every meeting the President has is discussed with the Chief of Staff before it is put on the schedule. The Chief of Staff reviews the President's daily schedule with his staff to assure any changes or modifications are needed.

And as noted previously, when the schedule calls for Presidential travel, as it often will, either the Chief of Staff or a member of the chief's staff will almost always be a part of the traveling party, performing the kind of coordination on the road that the Chief of Staff must provide in the White House itself. (Skinner) The second component of the daily schedule of the Chief of Staff is to ensure that every speech the President makes or position the White House takes is consistent with broad Presidential themes. Every policy that moves through the White House has to be cleared by the Chief of Staff. The third component of the daily schedule is representing the President in meetings with members of Congress, the departments, or constituent groups. The Chief of Staff has the authority to negotiate on behalf of the President within certain boundaries. In summary, the Chief of Staff is the trainmaster of the White House. He has to make sure the trains run on time, (Card) but the Chief of Staff also needs to make sure they don't collide. If the Chief of Staff does not personally oversee all of this activity, a designated deputy must be given both the responsibility and the authority.

DAILY ROUTINE

There is a clear rhythm in all administrations. The morning meetings of the Chief of Staff begin with a small group of top staff within the chief' s office and then move to a larger meeting that includes all senior staff, and finally to a private meeting between the chief and the President - all by 9:00 am. The chief may also attend the President's national security briefing which also occurs in the early morning. In the occasional instance where this pattern has not been faithfully followed, problems have arisen. Samuel Skinner, for instance, notes that this was not always the case during his term as Chief of Staff, but advises that it ought to be. (Skinner)

REV_00260359

The White House day generally begins at 7:00am with a meeting which includes the deputy Chiefs of Staff, and perhaps the press secretary and congressional liaison. In the Bush administration, OMB director Richard Darman often attended. Overnight issues such as national emergencies, economic reports, or intelligence materials (Brady) are addressed here. The 7:00am discussion provides a framework for the larger meeting of senior staff at 7:30 or 8:00am. The senior staff meeting includes top White House aides, most of whom carry the designation "Assistant to the President". This group, which tends to be 10-15 in number, is overseen by the Chief of Staff. There is a sense throughout the various administrations that only senior staff should attend, not their designees. The senior staff meetings usually begin with a discussion of the schedule of the President's day (Brady).

After the senior staff meet, the Chief of Staff meets alone with the President (usually at 8:30 or 9:00), depending on the President's personal schedule. At this meeting the President is briefed on his schedule for the day, issues in Congress, and other matters that emerged in the senior staff meeting earlier.

Some variations on the daily schedule of the Chief of Staff involve the re-election process when the Chief of Staff might meet in the evenings with campaign staff, budget negotiations and other dealings with members of Congress, and national crises.

VI. CONCLUSION

The tasks of the Chief of Staff are many, varied, subtle and critically important to the success of a presidency. While there can be no simple prescription for doing the job right, certain principles do emerge from the experiences of those who have held the position. Very briefly summarized, they are:

Gain control.
The White House is large and complex, and its responses to events must often be immediate. This is not an environment conducive to lengthy discussion or loose management. Successful chiefs have been "strong" ones, but not self-interested or autocratic.

Adapt to the stylistic preferences and needs of the President.
Just as Presidents differ, optimal approaches to working with them will also. Nothing is more important to remember than that the power of the Chief of Staff derives only from the President. A chief who forgets this precept, who acts as if he were President, will get into trouble sooner or later.

Protect the President.
Adjusting to the Presidential style does not preclude compensating for Presidential weaknesses. H.R. Haldeman's well-known tales of the Presidential orders he did not carry out serve as a lesson and a warning for any Chief of Staff. (Jones) Above all, help the President avoid making what James Baker calls "oh, by the way" decisions, where commitments are made without sufficient staffing or thoughtful consideration. (J. Baker, I) Choose bright, trustworthy and loyal subordinates.

Be willing to delegate work to them in the certainty that it will get done as it should.

Be an honest broker.
Arguably, this is the most important point of all.

REV_00260360

Run a lean shop, be flexible, and establish a rhythm.

Under most circumstances, keep the Chief of Staff office itself relatively lean, to keep the management challenges of that office reasonable. Be sensitive for the need of informal, fluid, often temporary organizational devices (regular meetings, war rooms, etc.) to cope with particular problems and opportunities. In addition to establishing clear rhythms for normal presidential and White House days, be careful to include in discussions and decisions only those with a need and competence to be there. But be careful at the same time not to create groups that are too unwieldy to accomplish their work.

REV_00260361

REFERENCES

INTERVIEWS IN WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT

Baker, James A. III. (I) July 7, 1999, by Martha Kumar and Terry Sullivan
Baker, James A. III. (II) November 16, 1999, by Martha Kumar and Terry Sullivan
Baker, Howard, with John Tuck. November 12, 1999 by Martha Kumar
Brady, Phillip. August 17, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Butler, Landon. October 14, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Card, Andrew. May 25, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Cheney, Richard. July 27, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Deaver, Michael. September 9, 1999, by Martha Kumar Duberstein, Kenneth. August 12, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Fitzwater, Marlin. October 21, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Ford, Gerald. October 10, 2000, by Martha Kumar
Jones, Jerry. April 11, 2000, by Martha Kumar
McLarty, Thomas F. "Mack". November 16, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Moore, W. Henson. October 15, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Neel, Roy. June 15, 1999, by Martha Kumar
Panetta, Leon. May 4, 2000, by Martha Kumar
Rumsfeld, Donald. April 25, 2000, by Martha Kumar
Skinner, Samuel. April 24, 2000, by Martha Kumar
Torkelson, Jodie. October 19, 1999, by Martha Kumar

OTHER REFERENCES

Adams, Sherman. First Hand Report. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1961.
Haldeman, H.R., with Joseph DiMona, The Ends of Power. New York: Times Books, 1978.

REV_00260362

ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT

http://whitehouse2001.org

Presidency scholars lead a two-part project designed to provide incoming White House staff members with information on operating key White House offices and to help Presidential nominees fill out the tidal wave of forms they face in the appointments process. Funded by The Pew Charitable Trusts, a foundation known for the stature of its programs and the nonpartisan nature of its organization, the White House 2001 Project works with two broad, Pew initiatives: The Transition to Governing Project of the American Enterprise Institute and the Presidential Appointee Initiative of the Brookings Institution. White House 2001 was designed and developed by the board and members of the Presidency Research Group, the worldwide professional organization of scholars focused on the American presidency and a section of the American Political Science Association.

THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM

Unlike corporations both large and small, a White House begins without a record compiled by its previous occupants. The goal of the White House Interview Program is to smooth the path to power by furnishing incoming staff with substantive information about the operation of seven White House offices critical to an effective beginning: Chief of Staff, Staff Secretary, Press Office, Office of Communications, Office of the Counsel to the President, Office of Management and Administration, and the Office of Presidential Personnel. Through interviews with current and former White House staff members from the last six administrations, the White House Interview Program provides new staff with detailed information about how their White House offices function, the organization of their units, and the roles played by the heads of each office.

In addition to this institutional memory, the White House Interview Program provides a support package of important tools previous staff have identified as invaluable. These tools include a "rolodex" of contact information about the people who previously served in their posts with current addresses and phone numbers. The White House Interview Program also provides the first ever detailed organization charts of White House offices approximately every six months through the Carter administration. The scholars associated with the project, researching and writing about the White House staff, are nationally recognized for their work on the presidency. They are: Professors Peri Arnold, MaryAnne Borrelli, John Burke, George Edwards, Karen Hult, Nancy Kassop, John Kessel, Martha Joynt Kumar, Bradley Patterson, James Pfiffner, Terry Sullivan, Kathryn Dunn Tenpas, Charles Walcott, Shirley Anne Warshaw, and Stephen Wayne.

NOMINATION FORMS ONLINE

In order to address the volume of information required from appointees and the problem of the plethora of forms to be filled out by nominees, the Nomination Forms Online program provides a software package that nominees can use to complete the myriad of forms required by the White House, the FBI, the US Office of Government Ethics, and, where appropriate, the Senate committee of jurisdiction. The software uses innovative programming techniques so that the software distributes repetitive information across the several forms nominees must complete. The software allows the nominee to store information for future use in completing annual reports. It also makes available a portable file of data in standard formats so the nominee can share information, at his or her discretion, with the White House Office of Presidential Personnel and other agencies. Nomination Forms Online is freeware.

REV_00260363

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
REPORT SERIES

available in PDF format (as noted) from: http://whitehouse2001.org

GENERAL SERIES

This collection of reports from the White House 2001 Project describe topics of general concern to White House operations. Those in the general series marked with an asterisk (*) are currently only available to the Presidential Transition Team.

1. Opportunities and Hazards – The White House Interview Program
2. Meeting the Freight Train Head On – Planning for the Presidential Transition
3. Lessons from Past Transitions
4. A Tale of Two Transitions: 1980 and 1988
5. The Presidency and the Political Environment*
6. The White House World – Start Up, Organization, and the Pressures of Work Life*
7. A Guide to Inquiry*
8. Analyzing Questionnaires – Executive Forms for Nominees*
9. Changing the White House Personal Data Statement
10. Report Series Index
11. WH2001 Contacts Database, Alphabetic
12. WH2001 Contacts Database, by Administration
13. WH2001 Contacts Database, by Office

WHITE HOUSE STAFF SERIES

This collection of reports from the White House 2001 Project create an "institutional memory" for the White House Staff. Currently, these reports are available only to the Presidential Transition Team. Look for a release of these reports in the Spring of 2001.

21. Office of the Chief of Staff
22. Organization Charts for the Office of Chief of Staff
23. Office of the Staff Secretary
24. Organization Charts for the Office of the Staff Secretary
25. Office of Management and Administration
26. Organization Charts for the Office of Management and Administration
27. Office of Presidential Personnel
28. Organization Charts for the Office of Presidential Personnel
29. Office of Counsel to the President
30. Organization Charts for the Office of Counsel to the President
31. Press Office
32. Organization Charts for the Press Office
33. Office of Communications
34. Organization Charts for the Office of Communications

REV_00260364

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM

THE CHIEF OF STAFF

Charles E. Walcott, Virginia Polytechnic Institute & State University
Stephen J. Wayne, Georgetown University
Shirley Anne Warshaw, Gettysburg College

INTRODUCTION

The office of White House Chief of Staff is crucial to the successful operation of the contemporary presidency. As former President Gerald Ford explained:

> I started out in effect not having an effective Chief of Staff and it didn't work. So anybody who doesn't have one and tries to run the responsibilities of the White House I think is putting too big a burden on the President himself. You need a filter, a person that you have total confidence in who works so closely with you that in effect his is almost an alter ego. I just can't imagine a President not having an effective Chief of Staff. (Ford)

Ford's second Chief of Staff, Richard Cheney, elaborated on the need for effective White House organization:

> Well, it's crucial in terms of how he's going to function as President, whether or not he's effective. His reach, his ability to sort of guide and direct the government, to interact with the cabinet, to deal effectively with the Congress, to manage his relationship with the press, all of those are key ingredients to his success. The White House staff structure and set up and how it functions as an organization determines whether or not he is successful in these relationships. No matter how hard he works or how smart he might be, he can't do it by himself.

The job of the White House Chief of Staff has many common elements from one administration to the next. But there are also key differences, resulting mainly from different Presidents' ideas work styles and beliefs about how the White House should operate. Many former chiefs have stressed that the chief's most important job at the beginning of an administration is simply to find out "what the job is." Mack McLarty, for instance, reported that after talking to most of his predecessors about the job, James A. Baker III told him, "Well, Mack, you just kind of have to be there." (McLarty) In any case, a Chief's understanding of the job has to arise out of close communication between the new President and Chief of Staff, since the President defines the chief's role. But former chiefs likewise stress the value of understanding the basic nature of the job, the possible variations in its performance, and, above all, the pitfalls that any Chief of Staff must avoid. The best way to do this is to talk with those who have held the job before. A typical comment is that of Landon Butler, deputy Chief of Staff in the Carter administration:

> I think, by and large, we learned far more from our predecessors than we did from any written material. We learned from our predecessors and they were very helpful. They genuinely wanted us to be successful at running the White House at least. (Butler)

REV_00260342

To supplement such conversations, though not to substitute for them, we present here a summary of the wisdom offered by former chiefs in extensive interviews.

I. Basic Elements of the Job in Brief

As recently as the beginning of the Carter administration, it was possible to argue that the White House could be run without a Chief of Staff. Those days are past. The complexity of the modern White House requires discipline and coordination that can only be achieved if there is a central coordinating point, someone other than the President to oversee the operation. This job is not easy. Long days, constant crises, and persistent rivalries, much of them built into the institutional structure and processes, the roles of the personnel that occupy the White House, and overlapping missions and interests, create a pressured short time-frame in which to operate. Many chiefs see their job as the second most important and most difficult in Washington. To underline the point, James Baker, who served as Chief of Staff under two Presidents, includes the Chief of Staff office along with Presidential personnel and the counsel as the three jobs that should be filled first, because these people have "got to help the President pick the rest of the administration." (J. Baker, I)

Roles

Most Chiefs of Staff agree on the critical roles they must perform. These, while interrelated, fall into two broad categories: managerial and advisory.

1. Managerial roles

- select the key people on the White House staff, and oversee them
- structure the White House staff system, including the Chief of Staff office
- control the flow of people and paper into the Oval Office, adjusting it to the President's style of doing business
- manage the flow of information and opinion to and from the President and do so in a way that brokers honestly among differing perspectives and recommendations

2. Advisory roles

- advise the President on issues of politics, policy and management
- protect the interests of the President
- negotiate with the environment of the presidency, including Congress, the executive branch, and extra-governmental political groups and individuals

Operating Styles and Environments

Although they agree on the roles, they do not agree on a single, "best" way for a Chief of Staff to achieve them. Some of their disagreement stems from the differing people and circumstances involved. The exact nature of the Chief of Staff job will depend upon such things as

- Presidential styles

REV_00260343

- the circumstances in which they inherited their job, and some from
- the personnel with whom they had to contend and budget they had to administer
- partisanship (precedents and advice from earlier administrations)

Variations in the White House environment also naturally affect organizational arrangements, operational procedures, and personnel decisions. Such factors include the shape of the staff, particularly at the time the chief assumes office, coordination with other White House units, and the structure of day-to-day activities that must vary with the President's style, decisional time frame, and to some extent, the administration's priorities. As we will see below, a chief's role is a reflection of the President. The Chief of Staff is always limited by the President's preferences, views, and habits of management and leadership.

Personal Attributes, Strategies, and Tactics

In addition to role, structure, and processes, the chiefs agreed that certain personal attributes, political strategies, and operational tactics are more likely than others to be successful. Decisiveness, sensitivity, credibility, and political savvy are deemed essential traits for the job.

Strategies based on realistic assumptions about public expectations, those that correctly anticipate elite and public reactions, and those that consider the mood of the country and are designed to work within the broad parameters of public opinion are more apt to achieve the desired goal. Similarly, tactics that incorporate the President's bully pulpit to gain political leverage, that see information as an instrument of power, are also most likely to be successful in today's public-media environment.

Chiefs of staff and their deputies also expressed general agreement on the dangers that may be encountered. Their warnings to future chiefs echoed difficulties that tend to be intrinsic to the job. We will explore these areas of agreement and disagreement in our summary of their advice to the future Chief of Staff.

II. Managerial Roles

Selecting and Managing White House Personnel

Ultimately, the entire White House staff, with very few if any exceptions, will report to the President through the Chief of Staff. At the outset of an administration, the Chief of Staff should and often has been primarily responsible for putting together the staff in the first place. Having one's own people is essential. Loyalty, energy, dependability, temperament, and work style are important attributes for working in the White House. At the same time, a chief must ensure that no matter what personal agendas aides may have (and most aides do have them), it is the President's agenda they pursue. (Moore) More generally, James Baker advised would-be Chiefs of Staff that:

> The people who succeed in Washington are the people who are not afraid to surround themselves with really good, strong people. If you're afraid to surround yourself with really top-notch, quality people – because you're afraid they'll overshadow you or what not, and there is a lot of that that goes on – you're not going to succeed. A strong White House staff buys the President one hell of a lot... (J. Baker, II)

Typical of a Chief given responsibility for selecting his team was John Sununu in the Bush administration, a White House observer related:

REV_00260344

> When the White House staff was put together, there was very little interaction with the other part of the transition. In other words, it was basically Sununu did his own thing . . .anybody that was appointed by the President, that would be an assistant to the President, deputy assistant to the President, special assistant to the President, the President was involved. But to his credit, he gave a very long leash to John Sununu – "If that's the team you want, that's okay. Or, "Are you sure you really want to do it? If you really want to do it it's okay." But the benefit of the doubt went with John Sununu in putting together the White House staff. (background interview)

In order to exercise effective control over White House operations, Chiefs of Staff must be able to pick at least their principal deputies. Prior to the beginning of an administration, the Chief of Staff-designate should oversee the White House transition which should be separate from the rest of the transition to government. Two criteria deemed essential in the initial choice of top staff aides are political savvy and Washington experience. James Baker noted:

> It [political credentials] gives you far more cachet in policy debates and inter-departmental policy... If you've been out there fighting the political wars with the President, you're in a better position to speak to those issues than other people who just maybe gave some money... .(J. Baker, I)

W. Henson Moore, Samuel Skinner's deputy and a former Member of Congress, remarked that both the Chief of Staff and the deputies... "really ought to have some political experience. This is no place to have on the job training in politics...they've got to have some political instincts." (Moore)

Marlin Fitzwater likewise noted the difference between the management challenges of the White House and those elsewhere, and the importance of both Washington experience and personal relationships:

> When you talk about management of the White House from the Chief of Staff, you're really talking about twenty people, a very small group. And that turns out to be a very personal kind of thing. Then there's a second circle of management in which you're kind of directing cabinet officers and deciding agenda issues and matters like that that grow out of it. But in terms of the people management it's a very small group and it's always a personality kind of thing. And that's also why I think businessmen have such a difficult time. There's always this kind of feeling when you bring in businessmen or businesswomen with experience and they'll bring some professionalism to the organization. And they always fail because they always think in line-staff structural relationships and in business they don't have to worry about personal relationships because they have the power. They give orders; they take away your salary; they can fire you; they can give you bonuses. And in the White House all those normal management techniques go out the window. Oftentimes you can't fire people. (Fitzwater)

A third factor, implicit in the advice that the Chief of Staff pick the top staff, is loyalty. Samuel Skinner noted that > Once a loyalist of a President gets in there... it's the normal tendency of everybody including Presidents and Chiefs of Staff and everybody else to honor that loyalty and, if somebody is trying to push them out, to protect them. So there's a tendency, if loyalists get in to the White House and they... don't have a duty and responsibility to the Chief of Staff as having put them there, the thief of staff can have them go around him very easily unless you have a President who never lets that happen. Even though you control the process, there are ways to get around it.

Naturally a Chief of Staff who comes in the middle of an administration usually does not have the luxury of completely cleaning house, but must be able to have some flexibility in getting the shop in order and his people placed. This was the problem that beset Skinner and to a lessor extent, Leon Panetta when they took over for Sununu and Mack McLarty respectively. In the words of Moore,

> The President had his staff. He had been goaded, pushed, convinced into getting rid of Sununu and Card, people... he liked. And he wasn't going to hear of anybody else being replaced on that staff. So once that > word gets out to the people who are supposed to be reporting to you and taking orders from you that you can't touch them, you have limited authority to really make things happen. (Moore; see Skinner)

REV_00260345

Skinner concurred, noting that "the President also made it quite clear that he did not want a wholesale change in his staff." (Skinner) But, said Skinner,

> A good friend of mine, Vernon Jordan, told me... you've got to have your own people in order to make anything work in Washington. I think those people have to be accountable. The only other way you're going to do that is to fire one of the President's favorites and let it be know that you've got to fire him. That's hard to do.

Leon Panetta encountered some of the same difficulty when he attempted to replace press secretary Dee Dee Myers with Michael McCurry at the beginning of his tenure as Chief of Staff. Nonetheless, Panetta managed to bring in a core of key people upon whom he could depend. Both Howard and James Baker likewise insisted on bringing in a solid group of their own people when they took over the Chief of Staff office during the Reagan and Bush administrations. As Howard Baker's deputy, John Tuck recalled:

> He picked his own team, as you well know, except for Marlin (Fitzwater) who stayed, who was there before. Everybody else changed over and it was just understood that when Senator Baker became the Chief of Staff that it was going to be a Baker team... (This permitted) a strong Chief of Staff system where the decisions and the decision making process and the people and the access to the President of papers and people was controlled by one person. (Tuck, in H. Baker)

Along the same line, James Baker noted that you don't have to fire people to move them out. When he brought his team aboard the White House in 1992, he chose to "layer" the existing staff, moving the new people to the key jobs. "They probably resented that, and probably rightly so. They weren't fired, but they were layered." (J. Baker, II)

Keeping people too long, however, can be a problem, especially if personalities clash or working styles conflict with one another. Ford's Chiefs of Staff faced such a situation in dealing with long-time aide and speechwriter Robert Hartmann, whose dismissal from the White House was out of the question. The solution to this internal problem was to circumvent Hartmann whenever possible. James Baker likewise advised that "one good way to discipline people when you're in a political environment like that in the government is to cut them out of meetings." (Baker, II) While sometimes effective in the short run, this approach can allow a persistent source of conflict to remain rooted in the White House. It also opens the door to end runs by people who are out of the loop but who still have access to the President. (Fitzwater)

The same kind of problem can appear when a President wants to replace people, but is reluctant to simply let them go. This invites friction and discontent. As Howard Baker put it, "If you cut the dog's tail off, cut it all off at once." (H. Baker)

More commonly, the problem connected to long-term White House service is burnout. A Chief of Staff taking over in mid-term may find, as Alexander Haig did during the Watergate affair and Skinner did after Sununu, that key personnel simply have burned out under the relentless pressure of White House work. (Jones and Skinner) Skinner's advice: "I think just find them another job... You probably ought to refresh on a regular basis." (Skinner)

REV_00260346

STRUCTURING THE STAFF

The White House Office

A Chief of Staff can think of structuring in three different senses. The first is structuring the White House Office as a whole. Since most White House staffers report to the President through the Chief of Staff, the Chief of Staff must work with the President to set up an overall reporting and decision making system for the WHO. As many White House veterans have noted, this is best done as soon as possible after the election, so the White House staff will be ready to function immediately after the inauguration, if not sooner.

The experience of recent presidencies indicates that there has been relatively little variation in the overall design of the White House in terms of offices and responsibilities. The basic model for the modern White House dates back to the Nixon administration, and has been modified, but only at the margins since then. Thus, it is likely that the major political offices – Congressional Relations, Public Liaison, Communications and Press, etc., will appear in some form in any new administration, as will the key staff organizations, such as the Office of Management and Administration and the Staff Secretariat. Likewise, the basic model for the NSC and its staff, as well as the domestic policy staff, has become stable. The Clinton White House's employment of the National Economic Council to deal specifically with economic policy has further institutionalized the operation of a White House-based economic group that has functioned in some form since the Ford administration.

Within this overall framework, however, there are have been important differences in operating patterns. Most generally, one can distinguish between relatively "strong" and "weak" Chiefs of Staff. This is, of course, an oversimplification, but it does point to a contrast in organizational strategies. The primary differences are in the degree to which the Chief of Staff controls information flow to the President and the extent of the Chief of Staff's control over the President's schedule. As previously noted, the contrast between Sununu and Skinner in the Bush administration and between McLarty and Panetta in Clinton's illustrates the strong and weak models of Chief of Staff. From these example it is also clear that the relative "strength" of a Chief of Staff is not just a matter of the Chief of Staff's preference, but is also dependent upon circumstances. The key point, however, is that the Chief of Staff is bound by the President's habits and operating style. The job of the Chief of Staff is to make the best of that, and to compensate where possible for whatever weaknesses emerge.

A further dimension of Chief of Staff "strength" involves the scope of his control of information and access. While all chiefs have sought to oversee the flow of paper and people in the areas of domestic policy and politics, chiefs have varied in their relationship with the National Security Assistant (NSA) and the NSC staff in general. The NSA is one of the principal potential White House competitors of the Chief of Staff. Some Chiefs, such as Leon Panetta (Panetta), have insisted that the NSC go through them, while others have not. This is not always the choice of the Chief of Staff alone. Nonetheless, it can be a fateful choice. In the first four years of the Reagan administration, for instance, the NSA did not report through Chief of Staff James Baker, but through Counselor Edwin Meese. Moreover, once William Clark became NSA, his long-time relationship with the President rendered him outside staff control. (J. Baker II) In hindsight, Baker indicated that he would want his own person in the job of NSA from the start.

Similarly, some chiefs have taken a hands-on approach to the Office of Management and Administration -- again, Panetta is an example (Torkelson) -- while others have not.

On the whole, the "strong" model tends to be the one lauded by most of those who have served as Chief of Staff or Deputy Chief of Staff. Indeed, Skinner and McLarty are the only recent Chiefs of Staff since Hamilton Jordan under Carter who did not clearly attempt this approach. But the Chiefs caution that this "strength" must be exercised within the understanding that the Chief of Staff is not the President, and that the Chief of Staff serves only the President's agenda.

REV_00260347

Organization of the Office of the Chief of Staff

General Patterns

The second structural responsibility of the Chief of Staff is to design his office. As Howard Baker observed,"... a Chief of Staff and a national security adviser...are now so loaded with responsibility and with paper... that they sort of get in the same category as the President does. If they don't have somebody prompting them or watching out for them, they'll get in the same fix." (H. Baker) Again, there has not been a great deal of variation in the organizational schemes for the Chief of Staff office, but there have been different approaches to dividing responsibility.

Most Chief of Staff offices have been relatively lean, with one or two deputies reporting directly to the Chief. Most Democratic administration have had two deputies, with one assigned to handle political chores while the other oversees White House operations. Republican White Houses have sometimes relied on just one deputy, whose job has varied. Michael Deaver, under Reagan, for instance, specialized in communications. Andrew Card, under Bush, specialized in administration.

> Reporting came to both of us, both Skinner and me, as to what was going on in Congress. I spent a lot of time talking to congressmen trying to assist the White House in every way. So it was kind of a loose dividing of reporting authority. I don't recall there ever being anything in writing about all that... .(Moore)

In addition to the Chief of Staff and deputy or deputies, there have usually been two or three assistants (variously titled "Personal Assistant," "Executive Assistant," "Staff Assistant," or just "Secretary") to the Chief of Staff and one person at roughly the Staff Assistant level to work under each deputy. By 1998, this number had grown to five.

Beyond that, Chiefs of Staff have varied with regard to the placement of additional people and duties directly within the Office of the Chief of Staff. Donald Regan, for instance, formally had three deputies (holding the rank of deputy assistant to the President), one of whom, Frederick Ryan, supervised the administration's Private Sector Initiative, and with it a substantial staff.

Election season has normally brought substantial campaign responsibilities to the Chief of Staff. This has often been reflected in the addition of people reporting to the Chief of Staff. Jack Watson's office, at the end of the Carter administration, for example, contained several deputies, including a labor liaison and a research director. Leon Panetta's office likewise expanded, providing an organizational home for Counselors and Senior Advisers such as Rahm Emanuel, and George Stephanopoulos, while assuring that they reported to President Clinton through Panetta.

When elections are not impending, a relatively lean Chief of Staff operation is still a viable option. However, the most recent trend is in the other direction. The second four years of the Clinton White House have witnessed a continuation of the practice of placing senior advisers in the Chief's office. Under John Podesta in 1998, for instance, were two Counselors (Paul Begala and Doug Sosnick) and a Senior Adviser (Emanuel) plus two deputy slots, one assistant deputy, the Deputy Director of Millennium Projects, and eight others who assisted these people. Thus the total personnel at the level of staff assistant or above numbered 20. That compares with seven under James Baker in 1992.

Division of Labor in Recent Administrations

A key issue in this organization is how the work is divided among the Chief of Staff and the deputies. There are clearly more demands upon the Chief of Staff Office than one individual can satisfy. Delegation is therefore critical (See Baker II) Patterns have varied depending mainly on the interests and experiences of the Chief of

REV_00260348

Brett

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM
REPORT NO. 29

THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE

MARYANNE BORRELLI
CONNECTICUT COLLEGE

KAREN HULT
VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

NANCY KASSOP
STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK – NEW PALTZ

HIGHLIGHTS:

- "One of the best legal jobs in the country...you're always on the cutting edge of problems and you're giving this mixture of legal and policy advice all the time."
  — Lloyd Cutler
- "Nothing went to the president...that didn't go through the Counsel's Office."
  — Peter Wallison
- "So FDR announced that he was creating this White House Counsel, and Judge [Samuel] Rosenman was going to be the White House Counsel. One of the press people asked him, 'Mr. President, what's he going to do?' And FDR supposedly answered, 'Legal stuff.' That's about as good a description as there probably is: 'Legal stuff.'"
  — Abner Mikva

Contact Information

The White House 2001 Project
Martha Joynt Kumar, Director
by email: mkumar@brook.edu
phone: 202/496.1348

Released 1 November, 2000

Undertaken by presidency scholars and funded by the Pew Charitable Trusts, the White House Interview Program provides information to incoming presidential staff on White House transitions and operations. See http://whitehouse2001.org for more information.

REV_00260365

often quite ceremonial, lacks a clear beginning or ending, and reveals much about the competition for political power.

Typically, precedent is followed very closely, with past letters serving as models for correspondence.

> War Powers is less of a problem because you can always rely on OLC to give you the tick-tock on that. That's a shared responsibility; I never worried much about war powers... (Gray interview, p. 6)

> ... the War Powers Act discussions were very desultory. I think I saw my role and most of the lawyers involved in the process saw their role and the political people saw their role as trying to make sure that we did the minimum necessary to comply with the notice provisions and other provisions the act required of us so we didn't give Congress a free hit. (Mikva interview, p. 13)

Advising on Presidential Disability and Succession

C. Boyden Gray observed that the Counsel's Office is singularly responsible for designing decision-making procedures for presidential disability and succession.

> There's a Twenty-fifth Amendment, that's all – we didn't inherit much on that but we did develop a big decision tree thing which worked when [President Bush] had his thyroid problem and I think has worked since. That was a big contribution to the Counsel's Office, the work that we did to put that all together.... I don't think we involved anybody outside the White House but I sat down and did it with the Chief of Staff ... [and] the White House doctor.... What happens: If X then go to Y; if Z then go back to A. It's just a decision tree on how to handle disability and it worked like a charm faultlessly, perfectly when he went into the hospital. (Gray interview, p. 6)

A.B. Culvahouse has commented on this recurring issue of temporary presidential medical incapacity.[1]

> This is an area where the lack of an institutional memory is atrocious. The White House should not have to re-invent a process each time the POTUS [President of the United States] has surgery. We did the same thing when President Reagan had surgery (I think for skin cancer) in '87/'88.

The Limits of Advocacy

Complicating the Counsel's work as a protector of presidential powers and constitutional prerogatives is the lack of clarity associated with the Counsel's responsibilities as an advocate. The White House Counsel provides legal counsel to the office of the presidency, not to the individual president. As such, the Counsel's Office protects the powers of the office within the constitutional order of separated powers. Determining whether the office or the individual is under attack, however, may be difficult.

> In fact, when I was first introduced to this job by Fred Fielding he said to me, "You are counsel to the office of the presidency. You are not counsel to the President." I absorbed that and thought I understood what it all meant. However, in practice, it's not a very useful guide, because you really don't know -- when issues like Whitewater come up -- whether you're representing the President or the presidency. For example, counsel can certainly with a lot of noise created by the President's political opponents, even if they are allegations concerning the President's own personal conduct. But as soon as it becomes clear -- and there's no bright line here -- that this isn't just noise by political opponents, but in fact relates to the President's personal conduct, then the President should have his own lawyer. (Wallison interview, p. 25)

Identifying and drawing these distinctions, however, often has generated controversy. For instance, Clinton Counsel Bernard Nussbaum was widely viewed as failing to make this distinction between advocacy on behalf of the office and on behalf of an individual president. For his part, Nussbaum wrote in his resignation letter that he left "as a result of controversy generated by those who do not understand, nor wish to understand, the role and obligations of a lawyer, even one acting as White House Counsel." (As reported in Marcus and Devroy, 1994)

---

[1] Personal communication A.B. Culvahouse to Martha Joynt Kumar, White House Interview Program, October 9, 2000.

REV_00260374

2. Overseeing Presidential Nominations & Appointments to the Executive and Judicial Branches

Participating in the Selection of Presidential Nominees and Appointees to the Executive Branch

White House Counsel advising about presidential nominees and appointees to the executive branch has typically focused on nominations to the top Justice Department positions and to the General Counsel positions in the departments and agencies. Bernard Nussbaum bluntly stated that his office "appointed the Attorney General, head of the FBI, Justice Department officials (Dellinger -- I sent him over to OLC from the White House Counsel's Office)." (Nussbaum interview, p. 5)

Within the White House, White House Counsels stressed their need to appoint a counsel to the National Security Council (NSC) staff. Lloyd Cutler argued for appointing the NSC Counsels to the White House Counsel's Office, rather than to the NSC staff; C. Boyden Gray emphasized the need for a low key NSC observer.

> We worked out a deal that I could name [Scowcroft's] deputy legal advisor to the NSC, Steve Rademaker:... But that can be tricky. It was tricky and a huge problem in Iran-Contra.... Scowcroft agreed that I should never be in a situation like that. That's why he allowed me to have Rademaker in there. I don't know how the current administration has done this. I don't know whether the White House Counsel has his person in the NSC operation but that to me was very important, very, very important. (Gray interview, p. 23)

Participating in the Selection of Presidential Nominees to the Judicial Branch

The extent to which the Counsel's Office has been involved in the judicial appointment process has varied across administrations. (Goldman and Slotnick 1997, 1999) In several recent administrations, the White House Counsel oversaw the process from start to finish: the Counsel chaired the judicial selection committee, supervised the vetting and clearance process, and prepared the nominee for confirmation. In every administration, the judicial nomination process required the careful coordination of several White House offices, consultation with the Justice Department, and extended negotiations with U.S. Senators.

The selection process routinely varies for district, circuit, and Supreme Court nominations. Senators tend to be more involved in nominations to the U.S. District Courts than they are in nominations to the Courts of Appeal or, especially, to the U.S. Supreme Court. Partisanship, though, plays an important role in determining the amount of influence that each player will have in the process.

> Unlike the Supreme Court, with courts of appeal and district courts you had to deal with the local Republican, in our case senators if there were senators. If there weren't senators, the governors, congressmen and congresswomen. District courts, I seldom got involved. The Justice Department had a lot of protracted negotiations ... about whether this was an appropriate person and so forth or was this a person who shared the President's judicial philosophy. Courts of appeal I would more often get involved. There would be disputes between the senators and the Justice Department. There would be disputes between maybe two Republican senators from the same state, between the governor and the more senior congressman or congresswoman. (Culvahouse interview, pp. 20-21)

REV_00260375

The selection process itself has shifted from being centered in the Justice Department to being firmly ensconced in the White House, albeit with the status of the Attorney General always a factor. Carter Counsel Robert Lipshutz recalled that the Department of Justice believed that judicial selection was its distinctive responsibility.

> [White House involvement in judicial appointments] was a struggle within the Justice Department because, number one, the White House was stepping into what many, particularly career people, and even Griffin [Bell, the Attorney General] too, felt should be strictly their prerogative and that is helping the President pick the judges. (Lipshutz interview, p. 11)

During the Reagan administration, White House involvement in lower court nominations increased. By the Clinton years, such involvement had become routine, although the Justice Department continued to participate in the process. Members of the Clinton Counsel's Office were invited to the personal interviews with prospective lower federal court nominees, which were conducted by senior officials in the DOJ's Office of Policy Development. Counsel staff also contacted senators about possible nominees, working with senior members and staffers of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

> The judicial selection process is centered in the White House office. A lot of other White House Counsel's Offices did not have the breadth and authority we had (maybe because of Foster and his access to the First Lady). We had special responsibility for Court of Appeals and Supreme Court appointments. (Nussbaum interview, p. 5)

From the Reagan years onward, the judicial selection committee chaired by the Counsel typically included members of the White House Counsel's Office and the Department of Justice. In the Clinton administration, it also included representatives from the First Lady's Office and the Office of Legislative Affairs. The selection committee's assessments were both legal and political, weighing the potential nominee's legal philosophy and the likelihood of Senate confirmation. [See the Wallison interview for an extended discussion of the Reagan judicial selection process.]

> Well, it's all done in conjunction with the Department of Justice and it's pretty obvious to any lawyer who the candidates are. It's not rocket science. The question is always, "Can you get the person you really...?" What's the matrix of confirmability with whom you really want to go with. You can't do your ideal person, usually, because there's a confirmation problem or there's a background problem or there's a money problem or there's something. So it never lines up perfectly. (Gray interview, p. 9)

Supervising the Vetting and Clearance Process

The Counsel's participation in the nomination and appointment process has minimally and consistently involved the Office in supervising the vetting and clearance process (FBI, IRS, 278 forms and financial disclosure forms) for all presidential nominees to the executive and judicial branches. The time and resources consumed by these reviews is extraordinary. (See "Rhythms" in the Organization and Operations section, on this work over the course of an administration.)

> Well, the FBI thing takes roughly three months although you can speed it up. You can do an expedite and do it in a week if someone has been through it before. I think we did Cheney over a long weekend. But if you're starting from scratch with somebody, normally it's three to four months depending on how old they are. If they're twenty-one, it won't take that long. If they're fifty-one, they have a whole life to go through especially if they've traveled. So it takes three months, average . It can take people three months just to fill out the forms so you really have to hammer people and say, "The FBI can't start until they know where you live and that means filling out the form." (Gray interview, pp. 21-22)

When the background checks were complete – or even while they were progressing – decisions had to be made about whether to proceed with the nomination or appointment. In each administration, White House Counsels noted that different standards were applied to appointments than to nominations, and to nominations for less visible and more visible positions.

REV_00260376

> [Y]ou'd have some people that you might never send up to the Hill for confirmation, but because they were strong allies of the President, supporters and/or were people that had a lot to offer, you might appoint them to the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board rather than nominate them to be undersecretary of defense because the President has unilateral appointment authority. Maybe they go to a Schedule C position in OMB or DAS [Deputy Assistant Secretary], Treasury or whatever. You were pretty darn pure about cabinet people, deputy secretar[ies]. We were awfully pure about State, Defense, Treasury, Justice.... You make different calls about whether or not the person had access to classified information, whether or not they had grant contract awarding authority. Different people are suited for different things. Take a look at the [Senate] committee. There were some committees that would take no prisoners and others – the finance committee, I think, was pretty terrific about exercising discretion, where youthful indiscretions ... were not disenfranchising if the person was a great Treasury securities expert. (Culvahouse interview, p. 32)

Then, when the nominations were sent to the Senate, negotiations had to be conducted about the legislators' access to the reports.

> How much of the FBI files do they get to see[?] We conduct the search; we do the FBI for our benefit not for their benefit.... That was subject to enormous negotiation.... Huge fights over that.... You have to negotiate them one by one.... [O]nce you concede to one committee, you can't cut back for another committee; they're going to demand the same treatment. But it's got to be renegotiated and reinvented every time. (Gray interview, p. 16)

Preparing the Nominee for the Confirmation Hearing

Beyond vetting the nominees, the Counsel's Office sometimes prepared them for the confirmation hearings. This preparation could take the form of "murder boards."

> We [the Reagan administration] did a lot of murder boards, not just for judicial nominees but for a lot of people. I probably did fifty murder boards in my twenty-two months.... You get a bunch of lawyers and legislative types pretending to be senators and acting like horse's rear ends.... You can have too many [people on a murder board]. To me, there is an art to running a murder board. I've seen some where too many people are trying to impress the nominee, which is not what you want to do. What you want to do is anticipate questions, to make it more difficult for him or her than it is going to be in fact, and hit all of the areas that he or she is going to be questioned about. Supreme Court nominees are very difficult because the hearings go on forever and ever. In my view, there should be four or five questioners max. There should be an understanding that a good enough answer is good enough. We're not striving for perfection here – we're striving for B-plus – and that you don't critique during the first two hours. You only critique on breaks thereafter.... This person already is the President's nominee. It's too late [to educate them to policy positions]. The object is to get them confirmed and make sure they're not so immobilized with promises and commitments that they can't exercise discretion with a full range of options. (Culvahouse interview, pp. 18-19)

3. Advising on Presidential Actions Relating to the Legislative Process

In recent presidential administrations, tasks in this category have included reviewing legislative proposals; reviewing bills presented for signature or veto, and drafting signing statements and veto messages; reviewing State and Defense Department authorizations and appropriations proposals; drafting budget rescissions and deferrals; participating in the negotiations associated with Senate treaty hearings; and being involved in legislative negotiations concerning policy, document requests (see also executive privilege, above), treaties, and nominations.

Congressional negotiations are a daily fact of life for the White House staff and, therefore, for the White House Counsel's Office.

> Well, to begin with there is hardly anything the president can do without the cooperation of the Congress. Most of his programs require congressional approval. The budget requires congressional action. Congress is always slow and we go through these continued crises of shutting down the government and continuing resolutions, et cetera. Getting Congress to move is very, very important. (Cutler interview, p. 34)

REV_00260377

The extent to which the Counsel's Office has been involved in these policy negotiations has varied within and across administrations. Two Counsels who were deeply engaged in policy making were Lloyd Cutler and C. Boyden Gray.

> Well, you had a lot of dealings with Congress because both the members and their staffs would call you up about things they were particularly interested in that they wanted you to take up with the President, or get a decision favorable to their constituent or whatever. I was used to a considerable extent to do what you might call lobbying Congress, although I'm not a lobbyist myself in the normal sense of the word. (Cutler interview, p. 15)

> The question is whether you take the lead or just participate in negotiations. I basically had to lead all the negotiations with the civil rights groups and the Congress on the Civil Rights Bill. I was sitting at the center of the table. I did not lead but I was a participant in all the negotiations down in [George] Mitchell's conference room in the Senate -- endless, endless meetings on the Clean Air Act. They would go until two, three, four in the morning sometimes. I wasn't leading those, but I was there. (Gray interview, p. 4)

At a minimum, however, Counsels have routinely been consulted about legislative matters. The resultant advising has typically involved as much politicking as it did lawyering. For example, the Reagan and Bush administrations seized upon signing statements, which are drafted by the Counsel's Office, as opportunities for statutory interpretation by the executive. These administrations used signing statements to urge courts to give the same legal weight to the "executive intent" of legislation as courts have traditionally given to its legislative intent. Accordingly, the Counsel's Office became deeply involved in the associated political and policy debates.

4. Educating White House Staffers About Ethics Rules & Records Management & Monitoring for Adherence

Among the tasks in this category are distinguishing between White House expenses and campaign expenses; reviewing presidential travel; approving requests for appointments with the president, monitoring these for propriety, seemliness, legality, and executive privilege issues; responding to document requests and subpoenas directed to the president and to other White House and executive branch officials by congressional committees and Independent Counsels; and serving as the ethics officer for the White House staff and executive branch political appointees. [In this list, links are needed from the subpoena and ethics officer points to the Torkelson interview.] Past Counsels stress that this work is essential to a president's early success, because it allows an administration to put its people in place, to establish responsible procedures, and to advance its policy initiatives.

Perhaps the most prominent of the newer demands confronting the Counsel's Office is the intensified scrutiny of ethical matters within a presidential administration. This has generated a need for a central coordinator, alert to potential problems and able to take pre-emptive (or corrective) action. This issue arena is one of the many that draws the Counsel's Office closer to other White House units, and that obliges it to develop constructive relationships with Congress and various other political actors.

Ethics laws, to quote C. Boyden Gray, "are quite complicated and obscure and overworked and ought to be deregulated." (Gray interview, p. 1) The White House Counsel's Office is needed to explain these laws to political appointees and to the members of the White House staff. This role is needed particularly at the outset of an individual's service in the White House or executive branch, throughout the campaign season, and during investigations. (See "Rhythms" in Organization and Operations)

REV_00260378

Orienting New White House Staff and Executive Branch Officers

Federal ethics statutes and regulations are typically more stringent than those enacted in the states. Likewise, the standards for the legislative and executive branches are different, creating the need for former Congress members and staffers to be carefully briefed.

> At the beginning of my tenure, we circulated [an ethics] memo that had all the details. Everyone who was going to be appointed by the President would get this memo, everyone on the White House staff got this memo. It was a memo from me and it laid out in detail what all the rules were. But then I also would meet with groups of people who were about to enter on to their jobs, in some cases they already had entered on to the jobs, maybe thirty at a time.... All through the administration anyone who was going to be appointed to a job [was affected]. And I would go through what the rules were and then I would give them a little lecture about how important it was to abide by these rules and how the President was trusting them to abide by these rules; that every time something happens, at no matter what level of an agency, it is always the President's responsibility that it happened. "You've been appointed by Ronald Reagan. I will vouch for his honesty and his integrity and his desire to do things the right way. So you owe him a responsibility to act in the most ethical possible way. If there's ever a question you should check with your Counsel or you can check with me and I'll be happy to provide you with any advice that you need on these questions." (Wallison interview, p. 27)

These orientation sessions would be reprised when an individual left the White House. For example, the Counsel staff would review the Presidential Records Act and would "remind everyone that these are presidential documents; you're not walking out of the White House with them; these are things that become part of the permanent record." (Brady interview, p. 7)

Monitoring and Educating Staffers During Campaigns

The need to educate and monitor staffers is particularly acute during the campaign seasons, both congressional and presidential. Then, the Counsel's Office staff has been called upon to provide general briefings and to circulate a more general memo about campaign activities. Changes in the associated laws may create an even greater need for this information.

> [W]e had two very active ethicists in the Office. One of them was Beth Nolan and the other was Cheryl Mills. Both of them, that was their field. Beth was in charge of ethics in the White House and Cheryl was her deputy. So the driving force was that the Hatch Act had just been amended and it has caused some changes. It now allowed people to get more involved than they had been previously. As I recall, it was Beth probably who said we really need to get a memo out to everybody telling them what they can and can't do and not to overread the Hatch Act changes thinking they can do more than they should. (Mikva interview, p. 17)

Reviewing Investigations and Associated Proceedings

As is suggested by the Counsel's role in responding to document requests and subpoenas directed to members of the White House staff and other executive branch officials, many Counsels have had to oversee investigations. Whether conducted by Independent Counsels or congressional committees, these proceedings have consumed much of the Counsel's resources. (See also the Organization and Operations and the Lessons Learned sections.)

> My first job [in the Clinton administration], which occupied the bulk of my time really, was to look in to the so-called White House – Treasury relationship having to do with the RFC in reference to the Justice Department of the whole Whitewater matter.... Then I had to look into the Espy case; I had to look into the Cisneros case, et cetera.... A lot of [developing ethics rules for the White House staff] was done in collaboration with the so-called Office of Legal Ethics, which is an independent quasi-Executive Branch agency, and which has the responsibility under the various ethics statutes to write regulations, give opinions as to what you can and cannot do. Now every department has an ethics officer so there is frequent consultation with the ethics officers. But a lot of that came up in this Whitewater, Treasury, White House contact investigation. (Cutler interview, p. 20) [Cf. the Office of Government Ethics in the Executive Office of the President — http://www.usoge.gov/]

REV_00260379

Bernard Nussbaum has described Washington as practicing a "culture of investigation." (Nussbaum interview, p. 4) That environment is not likely to change in the near future. Although the expiration of the Independent Counsel statute will almost certainly alter the investigatory process, investigations will doubtless continue and will have profound implications for the Counsel and the Counsel's Office.

5. HANDLING DEPARTMENT, AGENCY, AND WHITE HOUSE STAFF CONTACTS WITH THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The relations between the Justice Department and the Counsel's Office often are quite close. On occasion, for example, DOJ appointees and Counsel staff members have been recruited to and from one another's offices. This occurred most recently in the case of Clinton Counsel Beth Nolan, who was the Assistant Attorney General-designate in the Office of Legal Counsel. Similarly, Clinton Solicitor General Walter Dellinger previously served as an Associate Counsel and as Assistant Attorney General for the OLC.

Monitoring Contacts with the Department of Justice

The Counsel's Office functions as a gatekeeper for all contacts between the White House and the Department of Justice.

> ... all requests for OLC opinions had to go through me, all communications with the department had to go through my office.... [T]here were certain exceptions but no one could call over to the Deputy Attorney General and the solicitor general directly; they had to go through me. My typical point of contact was the Deputy Attorney General for everything except OLC opinions, then I would call the head of OLC. (Culvahouse interview, p. 16)

The White House Counsel's oversight is meant to ensure that communications between the White House and the Justice Department are properly conducted. Any effort to influence the legal judgments of the Department would generate significant difficulties for an administration. Reagan Counsel A.B. Culvahouse noted, for instance, that departmental statements of administrative policy were routinely reviewed unless Justice was issuing them. Contacts with the DOJ, in brief, have serious implications for presidential power and for policy development, and therefore are carefully supervised.

Requesting OLC Legal Opinions

The resources of the OLC -- including its institutional memory -- render this office an invaluable source of legal expertise for the White House Counsel. Quite simply, the Counsel's Office cannot provide all the information and the advising that an administration needs.

> OLC is the single most important legal office in the government. More important really in terms of scholarship and memory and research – White House Counsel's Office doesn't really have the staff to do all [that] and they shouldn't. It should be done in OLC.... [T]he White House doesn't go to court without the department..... OLC was a huge problem for us in the sense that they were putting on a brake. We were free to ignore their advice but you knew so you did so at your peril because if you got into trouble you wouldn't have them there backing you up, you wouldn't have the institution backing you up. So you did it at your risk; you did it at your risk.... You're best able to avoid the land mines if ... you restore the rightful place of the Office of Legal Counsel. When in doubt, ask them and they'll tell you where the land mines are. (Gray interview, pp. 18-19, 21)

Several other Counsels echoed Gray's description of the OLC as a formidable ally and a significant check on the White House. However, precisely because of the similarities in their responsibilities, the relationship between the White House Counsel and the OLC can be highly competitive. Both are recognized as legal experts immersed in politics and policy. Exacerbating matters, the jurisdictions of their offices, having evolved through practice, are blurred and lack strict bureaucratic rationality.

REV_00260380

Yet, to an even larger extent, this competitive relationship reflects differences between the organizations. The White House Counsel is appointed by the president and does not require Senate confirmation. The members of the Justice Department include presidential appointees who are free of Senate confirmation, presidential nominees who are subject to Senate confirmation, and careerists. As such, Department officials have numerous and crosscutting loyalties. Further, while the president's claim to executive privilege in regard to communications with the White House Counsel has been delimited in recent years, any possibility of the president successfully making such a claim in regard to the OLC may have been sacrificed in the Reagan administration.

> ... it had to do with a request by the Senate Judiciary Committee for all of William Rehnquist's files when he was head of the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department.... I thought that was simply harassment and I thought they were trying to create the kind of issue they could use to stop the nomination. I and the person who was then head of the Office of Legal Counsel in the Justice Department both felt this was a good executive privilege claim because the Office of Legal Counsel is the lawyer for the entire government, and in effect for the President, and everyone discloses everything to them to get rulings about legal issues. The whole underpinning of the attorney/client privilege, which is part of the executive privilege, is to get people to disclose all relevant information so you can give them the right advice. I thought, if there was ever a case, this was it. So I sent a memo to the President saying I thought he ought to claim executive privilege in this case, but Meese did not like at all that idea. We debated it in front of the President and the President decided he wouldn't claim it.... [I]t turned out not to be as serious a problem as I thought, except that it creates a precedent. In the future, if someone wants the files of the Office of Legal Counsel, they are more likely to get them because this precedent exists. The result of that is that some people aren't going to go to the Office of Legal Counsel for advice if they have to disclose things that they don't want turned over to a Senate committee. (Wallison interview, p. 20)

Requesting a legal interpretation from the OLC, therefore, is clearly a strategic undertaking. If the Counsel does not involve the OLC -- or, having received the OLC's interpretation, proceeds to set it aside -- the White House is isolated and will lack support for its actions. Politically, this is risky and even dangerous. C. Boyden Gray, for example, unequivocally concluded that the White House should never go to court without Justice's support. At the same time, the OLC is staffed by experts who cannot claim executive privilege and, in any event, have allegiances that extend beyond the White House.

PRINCIPAL RELATIONSHIPS IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

Depending on the course of politics and policy in a presidential administration, the White House Counsel will interact with most of the executive branch departments and agencies. Likewise, given its functions, this Office could -- and often does -- interact with every White House unit. At the very least, the Counsel's Office will communicate with the General Counsels throughout the executive branch, and will also process the paperwork associated with every presidential nominee or appointee. Having acknowledged the extent and scope of the Office's network, this section highlights the offices and departments with which past Counsels were in most frequent contact.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Within the White House, the Counsel's principal relationship -- and greatest source of influence -- has been either the president or the Chief of Staff. To whom the Counsel reports has frequently been a product of individual Counsels' past professional relationships, and this authority relationship has been clearly established at the time of appointment. This clarity is essential, if the president wishes to avoid destructive competition between two offices that are crucial to the success of the administration and its policy agenda.

REV_00260381

The President

In electing to have the White House Counsel report directly to the president, presidents often have appointed individuals who were their longstanding friends or professional colleagues. Counsels with this profile included the following individuals:

> Ford Counsel Philip Buchen, a former classmate and law firm partner of the President;
> Carter Counsel Robert Lipshutz, a longtime friend and former attorney for the President;
> Bush Counsel C. Boyden Gray, who worked for George Bush throughout his twelve-year tenure in the White House; and > Clinton Counsel Bernard Nussbaum, who had hired Hillary Rodham Clinton to work on the Nixon impeachment investigations and remained a good friend of the Clintons throughout the intervening years.

Even with the advantage of a prior relationship with the president, Counsels have faced various challenges to their position and their influence. Some have found that prior relationships were insufficient guarantees of influence.

> I talked to Hillary about some of these things [policy and political problems]. She agreed with me about the Independent Counsel, but she folded on me. She just came in and said, "The President wants to get on with his agenda." There was trust and confidence between the First Lady and me, but she was torn between me and her husband. I had only a few friends in the White House, including the First Lady. (Nussbaum interview, p. 7)

The White House staff is likely to include a number of longtime presidential colleagues, all of whom may compete for access to the Oval Office.

Of course, even if the Counsel is able to sustain a close relationship with the president, there is no guarantee that the president will seek or follow advice. President Ford's decision to pardon former President Richard Nixon, arguably the most significant legal decision of his administration, was made without any consultation. Counsel Philip Buchen provided only post hoc support and legal reasoning.

Two administrations have recruited Counsels to raise the profile and significantly re-establish the Counsel's Office within the Washington community (see, too, "Turnover" in Organization and Operations). President Jimmy Carter appointed Lloyd Cutler to meet these needs; President Bill Clinton named Cutler, and then former Congressman and U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Abner Mikva and former U.S. Attorney and D.C. Corporation Counsel Charles Ruff. Cutler, in particular, has publicly stressed that he entered office with a promise of direct communication with the president. He claimed to have held President Carter to that commitment.

> When I was asked by the President [Carter] to take this job, it was a mid-life crisis of his administration, the so-called "malaise" period. I said, "What kind of a role do you want me to play?" I knew him, but I didn't know him that well. He said, "I want you to play sort of a Clark Clifford role." I got that in writing and, of course, Clifford was so venerable and such a great storyteller, everybody thought that Harry Truman never made a move without consulting Clark Clifford. And every time I got left out of a meeting I would go to Jordan or I would go to the President and I would say, "I think that Harry Truman would have wanted Clark Clifford in this meeting." I was older than all the rest of them so nobody could gainsay me.... In theory I had the same deal with President Clinton but I didn't have the time to really capitalize on it. (Cutler interview, pp. 10-11)

The White House Counsel and Presidential Privileges

The issue of confidentiality in the president's communications with the White House Counsel is currently a matter of intense concern. Of the various legal privileges that a president or a Counsel might claim

REV_00260382

The White House Staff

The White House Counsel's Office is in contact with virtually every unit in the White House. The consequent dialogues and negotiations add immeasurably to the Office's workload. Tight deadlines compound the difficulties.

> Everything else [apart from Iran-contra] there were lots of cooks, lots of principals and lots of lawyers, and sometimes just trying to reach a decision or trying to force a decision in a timely way tended to be a lot of what I did. For right or wrong, we have to get an answer to this question and get it today. ... The timing was forced by your own judgment or sometimes you'd have deadlines. Sometimes you'd have the ranking Republican on the committee calling up and saying if you don't tell us what you think the committee is going to go forward tomorrow regardless. (Culvahouse interview, p. 28)

The scarcest resource is always time, obliging the Counsel to exercise careful judgment in determining which meetings to attend and in allocating staff. (See Organization and Operations for a more detailed discussion of these issues.)

Past Counsels have stressed that their participation in domestic and foreign policy-making may facilitate decision-making and avert difficulties. Notably, the Counsel has chaired the War Powers Committee in recent administrations and, in a number of White Houses, has regularly attended the meetings of senior domestic policy-makers. In particular, legislative advising draws the Counsel's Office into contact with a wide range of other White House units. This circumstance has prevailed since the Eisenhower administration.

> [I]t is our judgment that Counsel to the President should have, in addition to his other functions, the responsibility of coordinating the development of the proposed legislative program for the President. After the legislative program has been approved by the President it should be the function of Counsel to coordinate the content of the State of the Union message, the Budget Message, and Economic Report, as well as special legislative messages to make sure they comport with the President's program.
>
> This part of the Counsel's job during the Eisenhower Administration worked exceedingly well during those eight years.... This function ... will require that Counsel to the President work very closely with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Secretaries of the various departments, and also the General Counsels of the various departments. He will also have to work very closely with the President's Press Secretary, the President's Assistant in charge of Congressional Relations, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the President's Assistant in charge of preparing Presidential messages. (Memo, Eisenhower Special Counsel Gerald Morgan and Associate Special Counsel Edward McCabe to Ford White House Counsel Philip Buchen, 2 October 1974.)

The following list provides examples of the units with which the Counsel's Office has predictably and consistently established strong relationships.

- Communications Office, regarding presidential speeches, travel, and campaign expenses. This relationship may be especially close during the campaign seasons, when travel expenses and contacts are subject to strict legal standards.
- Legislative Affairs, regarding legislation, nominations, and confirmations. Some White House Counsels have participated directly in legislative negotiations, even communicating directly with Senators about judicial appointments.
- Personnel Office, regarding appointments and clearances. This responsibility also causes the White House Counsel's Office to consult regularly with the FBI and the ABA. C. Boyden Gray noted that the relationship between these two offices was so close that his assistant married the director of the Office of Presidential Personnel. (Gray interview, p. 26)
- Office of Political Affairs, regarding travel and campaign expenses.

REV_00260383

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Given that the United States of America is governed under the rule of law, and that the President is its elected Chief Magistrate, the role of the White House Counsel's Office is to maintain the presidency in lawful tension with all other elements, in and out of government. As the burdens of the nation's highest office grow, so do the responsibilities of what is often called "the president's lawyer" but is more accurately described as the "presidency's lawyer." The myriad tasks of this complex office include: monitor ethics matters; coordinate the president's message and agenda within the executive branch units; negotiate on the president's behalf with Congress and other vectors; recommend actions to the president; and translate or interpret the law in its broadest context throughout the Executive branch. Often overlooked is its separate role as protector of the Office, in everything from scrutinizing the security of its workers to the legal boundaries all must maintain. So encompassing are the sweeping burdens of this office that no adequate job description exists. Suffice it that the White House Counsel's Office is a mirror held up to the highest office in the land. As such, it is forever the stuff of tomorrow's front page headlines.

LESSONS LEARNED

i) Name the Counsel as early as possible.
ii) Prepare to enter an empty office
iii) Meet with the outgoing Counsel
iv) Expect a steep learning curve, the unpredictability of events, and deadlines dictated by the media
v) Know where to go for information.
vi) Maintain good relations with the Office of Legal Counsel in the Department of Justice
vii) Divide the Counsel's Office when scandals arise.
viii) Monitor the president closely in the last year of the term
ix) Be aware of sharp public criticism of the White House Counsel's Office
x) Understand the impact of the loss of government attorney-client privilege
xi) Note the continuing significance of issues of executive privilege and other presidential prerogatives xii) Recognize the difficult political environment for the judicial appointment process

REV_00260366

- Press Office, regarding presidential press conferences. In some administrations, the Counsel's Office has also prepared presidential statements about federal court rulings that affect the presidency or the executive branch.
- Office of Management and Budget, regarding budget proposals, rescissions, and deferrals.
- National Security Council staff, regarding foreign policy.

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

Perhaps the most distinctive contribution of the White House Counsel to the wider White House staff comes through its consultations with the Department of Justice, and more specifically with the Office of Legal Counsel. The White House Counsel, as discussed in the Functions section above, properly serves as the gatekeeper for all communications with the Department of Justice.

The Department of Justice

The extent and nature of a White House Counsel's contact with the Department of Justice has been particularly influenced by three factors:

1. The extent of the president's judicial agenda, including judicial nominations;
2. The strength of the president's relationship with the Attorney General; and
3. The relative activism of the White House Counsel and the Attorney General as policy-makers.

A larger judicial agenda creates the need for more contacts with the Justice Department. Similarly, a strong presidential relationship with an activist Attorney General may establish a line of communication that is more exclusive of the White House Counsel.

All of the Justice Department contacts, however, are made in a political environment that is highly suspicious of White House – Justice Department associations. Close relationships between Presidents and Attorneys General in the Nixon and Reagan administrations, for example, injured the credibility of both of these offices. This, in its turn, hampered the officeholders' ability to implement their policy decisions. Likewise, past executive privilege decisions may discourage presidents from contacting the Justice Department, because those communications have even less protection than do those with White House aides.

The Attorney General

The Attorney General and the White House Counsel appear, at first glance, to share similar advisory roles and jurisdictions. Notwithstanding differences in accountability (the Attorney General is subject to Senate confirmation) and circumstances (executive branch department vs. White House), the distinctive contributions of the White House Counsel and the Attorney General have more often been negotiated through practice than by invoking abstract principles. Conflict has occurred frequently, and presidential libraries contain numerous memoranda of understanding between attorneys general and White House Counsels.

White House Counsels and Attorneys General, however, have rarely been equals within an administration. Presidents have tended to name either an Attorney General or a White House Counsel with whom they were well-acquainted. The selections have, more often than not, been connected to the judicial agenda of the president: a longer judicial agenda has generally coincided with the nomination of a presidential colleague to the Attorney General's office.

REV_00260384

The appointment of a close presidential colleague to the White House Counsel's Office, however, may allow the Office to enter into more substantive policy discussions. Though C. Boyden Gray hedges his comments with a series of qualifiers, he acknowledges that he did influence the direction of several key legislative negotiations.

> [President Bush] kept drawing me into the Civil Rights Bill in 1990-1991. I didn't really want to do that because it was very difficult politically, but he kept yanking me back into it.... But I would say that civil rights was legal policy, not necessarily part of the Counsel's Office historically any more than the ADA [Americans with Disabilities Act] was. I did very little on the ADA act.... I had a-lot to do in the prior administration about teeing it up for then-Vice President Bush to make it a campaign promise during the '88 campaign. But I spent very little time on it once we got in the White House.... I was involved very little, maybe ten or twenty hours worth. It was very little. The hours I spent were very important, it turned out, but I was not involved in the day-to-day negotiation of the language or the lobbying.
>
> I had to have permission to work on the Clean Air Act. I wanted to work on it because I had an interest in it but it was something that [Chief of Staff John] Sununu was wary about and the President was a little nervous about because of the time it would take from other responsibilities. Again, I could only do it because I had discharged my other obligations. I think at the end of the day people were appreciative of my being involved in it. (Gray interview, p. 2)

The Office of Legal Counsel (OLC)

If the White House Counsel and the Attorney General regularly vie for the president's attention, the White House Counsel's Office and the Office of Legal Counsel are even more frequently competitors in legal interpretation. Though cooperative relationships have been established – doubtless facilitated by the exchange of personnel between the offices – they tend to jockey for advantage within an administration. (See Functions, especially item 5 on White House Counsel – Justice Department relations, for an extended discussion of these practices.)

> I doubt there was very much communication directly with the Office of Legal Counsel that didn't go through White House Counsel's Office. In fact, as I've said many times in forums that have talked about this issue, the real conflict between offices, inherent conflict, is between the White House Counsel's Office and the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department because the White House Counsel's Office is growing and growing and is acquiring more and more capabilities to do that kind of research and analysis that the Office of Legal Counsel does and it does it for the President. But there is a real tendency on the part of cabinet officers also to come to the White House Counsel's Office and ask for advice about legal issues. ... [M]ost of the time the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department never hears about it. It just goes on. But when the White House has a constitutional question that's really the point at which this becomes quite sensitive because that is an area that the Office of Legal Counsel has traditionally handled for the White House. But if the White House staff is large enough and they consider themselves strong enough and smart enough, they can handle those things too and advise the President on constitutional issues. The White House always wins over the agencies, always, because they're closer to the President. So they have first dibs, if you will, on any issue that comes up to the presidential level. If there's a constitutional question about the President's power, if they want, they can make that decision on their own without consulting the OLC. Whenever you get a situation like that where some group has first opportunity and doesn't even have to inform the other group over time that first group is going to grow larger and larger and more competent and eventually freeze out completely the Office of Legal Counsel. I think that['s] a long-time trend that's going to occur. (Wallison interview, pp. 21-22)

On this same point, C. Boyden Gray has stressed that the ambitions of the White House Counsel's Office (in Wallison's words, above, "large enough ... strong enough ... smart enough") can endanger an administration. Gray advises re-establishing the OLC as an influential legal commentator, concluding that the advantages gained from the OLC's insights far outweigh any disadvantages resulting from its sometimes critical stance.

REV_00260385

Other Executive Branch Departments and Agencies

With the notable exception of the Justice Department, the White House Counsel typically communicates with the executive branch departments and agencies through the General Counsels.

> We used to have more or less monthly meetings of all the General Counsels of the departments and the executive branch. It's a little more difficult to meet with the General Counsels of the so-called independent agencies, as you know, but we do meet even with them on some matters.... Typically a lot of it would be show and tell, what we're doing and what that General Counsel thought was a problem that would go to the White House. A lot of it has to do with the ground rules for executive privilege and turning documents over to Congress which we don't think should be turned over to Congress but which the department under the thumb of Congress always wants to turn over without ever consulting the President whose privilege it is not to provide them. (Cutler interview, p. 7)

C. Boyden Gray noted that the White House Counsel's Office is "supposed to be the lead focal point for all of [the General Counsels'] dealings with the White House.... They come to you. We tried to have meetings on a regular basis but it degenerated after a while because you saw them all so much anyway." (Gray interview, p. 23) He added that exceptions to this rule occurred, in most departments and agencies, only when the secretary or the agency chief executive had issues to discuss with the White House Counsel. Occasionally, Gray said, he would speak with the deputy secretary. Communications with the independent regulatory agencies were handled with special care and circumspection.

The Justice Department, however, was the standard exception. The White House Counsel and the Attorney General typically were in daily communication with one another.

ORGANIZATION AND OPERATIONS

The internal organization of the White House Counsel's Office has changed considerably since John Dean established the unit in the Nixon White House. Dean was the first Counsel whose duties primarily focused on "lawyering," and he was the first as well to seek out new legal responsibilities and draw them into a separate office in the White House.

Since the 1970s, the size of the Office of White House Counsel has expanded from two to three attorneys to more than 40 lawyers at times during the Clinton administration. Some former Counsels attribute this growth to the increasingly hostile Washington environment faced by recent presidents and the mounting scrutiny of their appointees. Lloyd Cutler recalls, for example: "In Carter's day, when I came in, including myself, there were six lawyers. Twenty-five years later, under [Bill] Clinton, there are probably forty lawyers, fifty lawyers. Part of that is dealing with the attacks on the President and these enormous vetting responsibilities that descend on the White House counsel." (Cutler interview, p.7) Similarly, John Tuck, an aide to Chief of Staff Howard Baker in the Reagan White House, recalled "a whole huge shadow Counsel's Office" that developed following the Iran-contra revelations. (In Baker interview, p. 15).

Although presidents from FDR through Richard Nixon had aides with the titles of "Special Counsel" or "Counsel," such staffers typically had more wide-ranging policy responsibilities. The origin of the title "Special Counsel" can be traced back to Samuel Rosenman, the FDR speechwriter who oversaw much domestic policy during World War II. Rosenman served on the New York state court of last resort until FDR finally persuaded him to move to Washington to work full-time for the President in the early 1940s. "Special Counsel" was viewed as an appropriate title for the lawyer and former judge. Later aides with the title (for example, Clark Clifford and Charles Murphy in the Truman administration, Theodore Sorensen under Kennedy, Harry McPherson in the Johnson White House, and John Ehrlichman in the first year of the Nixon administration) also were lawyers and typically participated in policy development and speechwriting. The Eisenhower White House to some extent was an exception: Gerald Morgan, as Special Counsel, and Edward McCabe, an Associate Special Counsel, worked on tasks quite similar to some of those in the contemporary Counsel's Office.

REV_00260386

INTERNAL DIVISION OF LABOR

The Counsel's Office has been structured internally in numerous ways. Typically, however, the White House Counsel, as a senior presidential adviser, participates in myriad activities and issues, many of which cannot be predicted or planned for. Indeed, the Counsel's time often is consumed almost completely in handling crises or unexpected demands. Thus, Reagan Counsel Peter Wallison remembered: "At least politics and crises are the two things that you have to be sure [to handle]— one of the reasons you want to get a staff that is capable and has the lines of authority and lines of responsibility clear is that at some point you are going to be completely consumed with something and that means your office has to function without you. So you need a really good and capable deputy, which I had [in] Jay Stephens, and you need very good lawyers, and then they have to know what their areas of responsibility are so that they don't have to keep coming to you." (Wallison interview, p. 34)

Deputy Counsels

Counsels beginning with John Dean all have included at least one Deputy Counsel on their staffs. (For occupants of this position, see Appendix Two) A Deputy Counsel routinely serves as the primary overseer of workflow within the Office as well as a substitute for the Counsel. The Deputy also may perform other tasks at the direction of the Counsel.

> James Castello was the deputy who really was my person and managed the staff and was at the second meeting I couldn't be at if I was at the first one. [He] probably had the most to do with the legislative agenda. He met regularly with the legislative office and made sure that there weren't any surprises on the Hill that the President didn't know about or what was going up as our core legislation didn't have any pitfalls in it. (Mikva interview, p. 21)

Such deputies typically are charged with assuring that the Counsel sees only the highest priority items. On personnel issues, for instance, Reagan Counsel, A.B. Culvahouse stated:

> ...I clearly was the principal advisor to the President ... within the White House on the vetting process which included not only the people to be nominated by the President but also people who would be appointed by the President even if they did not require Senate confirmation as well as anyone who would get a White House staff badge. Even the Park Service people who pruned the plants would come through the White House Counsel's Office. I never saw their files or anything, unless there was a problem. So the default rule was if there was a problem certified as such by my deputy then it would be put on my desk. So I saw 10 per cent of the files roughly. (Culvahouse interview, p. 4)

Likewise, C. Boyden Gray noted: "My deputy [inaudible] read far more forms than I did but if there were problems with any high-ranking person it got kicked up to me and then I would have to deal with it, either deal with it with the President, or deal with the cabinet officer if it was one of his top people" (Gray interview, p. 11).

In the Clinton White House, long-time presidential confidant Bruce Lindsey served for much of the administration as a "Deputy Counsel for Special Projects." According to Abner Mikva, besides a host of other activities,

> ... there was always a special project he was involved in either for the President or because the President would indicate to me or [Chief of Staff] Leon [Panetta] that he wanted somebody that could really use his clout effectively. For instance, Bruce was the point man on the baseball strike. ... I don't think I said Bruce, go do the > baseball strike. It was known that we needed somebody who could go in there and say the President really thinks this ought to be done or that ought to be done, and nobody could do that like Bruce. So he spent a lot of time on things like that. (Mikva interview, p. 17)

REV_00260387

Immediate Support Staff

In addition, the Counsel's immediate staff (often an administrative assistant and an executive secretary) usually is responsible for assuring that external deadlines are met and internally work is parceled out appropriately. A.B. Culvahouse, for example, reported having "three non-attorney people who worked for me: an executive assistant, an administrative assistant and an executive secretary. The first two spent most of their time assigning out projects and making sure the work was done and the deadlines were observed." (Culvahouse interview, p. 8)

Special Counsels

In recent White Houses, aides with the title of "Special Counsel" have on occasion appeared in the Counsel's Office. Typically, these are staffers assigned to handle short-term or "crisis" situations that may involve congressional or other investigations, such as the Iran-contra or Whitewater affairs. Most observers attribute the swelling of the Counsel's Office over the course of an administration to such crises and the heightened external scrutiny of administrations.

Other Work

Moreover, given the range of diverse responsibilities that have come to be lodged in the Office of White House Counsel, some substantive division of labor usually appears. For instance, a Deputy Counsel and one or more other members of the Office participated in judicial selection in the Carter, Reagan, Bush, and Clinton administrations. Although presidents have always paid most attention to nominations to the U.S. Supreme Court, recent White Houses also have focused on nominations to the U.S. Courts of Appeals and, to a somewhat lesser extent, the U.S. District Courts.

Similarly, after the initial flurry of "vetting" for nominations and appointments at the beginning of an administration, typically one Assistant or Associate Counsel and a Security Assistant (and staff) in the Office handle FBI and financial disclosure reports on nominees to executive branch openings (see, e.g., Wallison interview, pp. 12ff). The lawyer also is responsible for taking the confidential reports to Capitol Hill to the chairs and ranking minority members of the appropriate Senate committees, with potentially problematic allegations flagged. In the second term Clinton White House, a "Senior Counsel" was among those handling these responsibilities.

Other tasks that commonly have been assigned to particular lawyers in the Counsel's Office have included interpreting ethics legislation and additional ethics rules issued by an administration for staffers in the White House Office and Executive Office of the President, and, on occasion, for cabinet officials and other presidential appointees. Presidential travel and distinctions between "official" and "political" events and funding also have received specialized scrutiny. Moreover, Reagan Counsel A.B. Culvahouse recalled:

> Someone in my office would have reviewed and approved anything that the President said, signed or issued his name to -- from the ridiculous declaring next week national dairy goat week which is the kind of thing that happens all the time, to pretty important things, veto messages, signing statements. And we would not only review it for form and legality but if it were legislation we would also have a recommendation: should the president sign, should he veto, should he let it become law without his signature....We would approve scheduling requests. If people were coming in to see the President, we would get a list of the attendees and look at them for > propriety and seemliness and should the President see someone who ten years ago had been convicted of something. (Culvahouse interview, p. 8)

REV_00260388

Still other attorneys in the Counsel's Office focus on issues of international trade and transportation, defense and national security policy (to support the Counsel's role as chair of the War Powers Committee), and government regulation. As noted earlier, another primary responsibility of the Office is to protect presidential prerogatives, frequently on matters involving executive privilege, the issuance of executive orders, or interpretation of legislation.

RHYTHMS OF QUADRENNIAL GOVERNANCE

Over the course of a presidential term, the activities, demands, and emphases of the Counsel's Office typically follow common patterns. The first year is both demanding and somewhat distinctive. After that, the work of the Counsel's Office -- like much of the rest of the administration -- to a significant extent reflects the presidency's efforts to respond to external deadlines. Other tasks arise more routinely throughout an administration.

First Year

A major task that begins well before Inauguration Day and continues through most of the first year is vetting for nominations and appointments. C. Boyden Gray remembered: "for the first year that's all you do, is read FBI reports and ABA reports. It's not much fun. Financial disclosure reports. It's not much fun." (Gray interview, p. 1)

During this early period as well, the Counsel's Office seeks to assure that all White House staffers and political appointees are informed of the ethics statutes, executive orders, and other administration rules under which they must work. Gray described his approach to handling the task: "My rule of thumb was: 'If it's fun, stop! If it feels good, stop! If you're having fun, you're doing something wrong!' That's the way I summed up all the rules." (Gray interview, p. 13)

At the outset, too, the Counsel's Office needs to give White House staffers instructions on how to keep their files. Phillip Brady recalled that in the Bush administration, the Counsel and Deputy Counsel "... tried to be very careful to ensure all new employees were given a Counsel's Office memo that would articulate what presidential documents are and what needed to be preserved and that sort of thing." (Brady interview, p. 9)

The initial weeks and months of a new administration also bring numerous other demands. Chief among them: the president's budget must be submitted by February 2nd, the economic report is due at about the same time, and the legislative agenda, congressional messages, and bills must be drafted and sent to Congress. The Counsel's Office is involved in all of these activities.

Annual Cycles

Especially important annual cycles are the preparation of the president's budget and the drafting of the State of the Union address and the Economic Report of the President. Although the Counsel's Office is not the central player in any of these, it does perform the pivotal role of ensuring that the processes and the officials involved act in accordance with prevailing legal and ethical guidelines.

REV_00260389

Electoral Cycles

As the mid-term congressional elections or a presidential re-election campaign approaches, the Counsel's Office faces other tasks. The Office may well be besieged with requests for advice from other White House staffers and from political appointees throughout the executive branch about the sorts of partisan and electoral activities they and their aides are legally permitted to engage in. In most administrations, the Counsel and staff try to anticipate such requests and related problems by sending out written guidelines and holding information sessions.

Clinton Counsel Abner Mikva remembered the memo he wrote to White House staffers and other political appointees for the 1996 presidential campaign:

> The idea came from the fact that that kind of the same memo had been written every four years since anybody could remember. I think we even had a copy of the memo that not Gray but one of the predecessors had sent out— maybe Fielding; it may have been Fielding— sent out during his [tenure]. (Mikva interview, p. 17)

Moreover, as elections approach,

> ...the President becomes more involved in direct politics which raises questions about ... how much of his time would be devoted to it, who pays for it, all those things. That becomes much more important every two years. Whether the President is running for election or not, usually he's out doing things, raising funds or otherwise supporting candidates which require you to make these kinds of allocations in the best possible way to avoid charges of various kinds. (Wallison interview, pp. 32-33)

Mikva noted that in retrospect, "None of us saw fit to raise a warning flag for the President."

> I had seen what goes on in state politics. I'd been a state legislator for ten years. I know governors in Illinois pick up the phone when they're sitting in the governor's office and lean on people to give money to their campaign and the party. It's just a fact of life and I suspect it goes on in most states. I'm sure it went on in Arkansas. I think this government came in to the White House not very sensitive to the fact that the White House and the federal government is a different place. So I should have warned the President. (Mikva interview, p. 18)

Indeed, Lloyd Cutler has remarked,

> When a president is up for re-election, there are all sorts of temptations, things apresident wants to do that may be legally questionable but that he wants to do to get re-elected. For a White House Counsel, those are the hardest calls to make. You should tell a White House Counsel to leave before that last year of a president's firstterm. (Cutler, Duke panel transcript, p.6)

The presidential electoral cycle also can influence submission of judicial nominations to the Senate. Former Deputy Counsel Phillip Brady noted: "There's a political year consideration, too, as you get closer and closer to presidential elections the Senate becomes less and less receptive to confirming nominees for lifetime appointments depending on what happens in the next presidential election." (Brady interview, p. 4)

Final Year

The last year of a presidency can be "dangerous." (Culvahouse, Duke panel transcript, p. 5) This is a time when requests for pardons, commutations, executive orders, and other presidential actions may be likely to reach fever pitch. It also is a time when presidents may be especially responsive to those who have supported and worked with them for numerous years.

More Regular Tasks

Many of the other tasks handled by the Counsel's Office are performed throughout an administration. Reagan Counsel A.B. Culvahouse recalled, for example, this included the judicial selection committee, which met "every two weeks and more frequently if— basically the idea was to get people's nominations up as soon as possible so if the FBI was able to process background checks and all the materials were in we sometimes would meet every week." (Culvahouse interview, pp. 8-9) Executive orders also need to be drafted throughout an administration.

REV_00260390

In contrast, Culvahouse continued:

> Congress tends to work in fits and starts. ... The legislative agenda can be heavy or it can be light. There were also Statements of Administration policy that we would review. If it was a statement of Justice Department policy, we would not review it. Sometimes we would say, "This should not come out of the White House; the Justice Department or the State Department should issue this." Sometimes we would be involved in deciding who ought to comment on the bill, and who ought to testify. If it was going to be a Statement of Administration policy, which is in effect attributed to the President, we would look at those carefully. Those would be in effect a letter that would say here's what the Administration thinks about S-332, the omnibus such and such act. (Culvahouse interview, p. 9)

> Other legislative decisions to which the Counsel's Office responds are more routine: There was someone who handled the disease of the week. Congress passes all of these little bills all the time establishing that cystic fibrosis week will be such and such and a presidential proclamation is required. So somebody has to read what Congress said and then prepare the proclamation. It's called the disease of the week. When there was all this talk about testing urine and blood for drugs, I had someone handle that, and he was our fluids man. It was pretty informal but yet I knew what each of the people in the Office would be handling. So I could always bring that person in— . (Wallison interview, p. 16)

In addition, throughout an administration, new individuals must be nominated for and appointed to positions throughout the executive branch. After the first year, "The nomination process was fairly continuous... So every week there would be nominations to be processed, people to be vetted, ethics agreements to be looked at" (Wallison interview, p. 9). Informing new hires about ethics regulations also had to continue.

Meanwhile, questions about presidential travel continually arise. In the Reagan White House, for example, "Alan Raul ... was in charge of presidential travel. That was a big and difficult issue because of what had to be paid for by private funds, by political funds or by government funds. So they were constantly, the people in the political office and in the travel office, they were constantly calling Alan for advice on that subject." (Wallison interview, p. 31)

Crises / Scandals / Unexpected Events

Counsels, of course, find themselves (and their staffs) handling unexpected situations and, on occasion, crises, at least as seen from the administration's perspective. As chair of the War Powers Committee, the Counsel has responsibilities whenever U.S. troops are (or may become) involved in hostilities.

Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel for both Presidents Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton, observed that the job has become more driven by scandal and congressional efforts to probe more deeply into administrations:

> We were doing executive privilege in the Carter days; we were doing it in the Clinton days. We had demands from congressional committees for White House documents and agency documents; drafts of legal opinions, for example, were so much more pervasive. Mostly, it's the difference that when I worked for Carter while we did have the Billy Carter problem and a few others, Hamilton Jordan's alleged drug violations -- which turned out to be entirely untrue, while we had a couple of those, most of what I did was substantive. ... In Clinton's time I had the same understanding that I could be in on all these things but I had to put in so much of my own daily effort, and my staff did, on the investigations of the President, Whitewater, et cetera, that I had no time. ... I would say working for Carter -- which was a year and a half -- not more than 20 per cent [of the Counsel's work] was what I call playing defense. Under Clinton it was closer to 80 per cent. (Cutler interview, p. 8)

REV_00260391

A scandal of one sort or another also is likely to occur at some point during an administration. In the words of Peter Wallison:

> ...you can always count on ... some kind of big scandal. It just is like that; something is going to happen. And when I went in to that office I assumed there was going to be a blizzard. What I didn't realize was that there would be a hundred-year snow in the form of Iran-Contra. You don't know those things. I knew there would be something that was really going to take my time and for the last six months I was there it was virtually all Iran-Contra. I just couldn't get away from it. (Wallison interview, p. 33)

THE COUNSEL'S DAILY SCHEDULE

Although there certainly is no "typical day" for a White House Counsel and the larger Office, some daily routines can be identified. For the Counsel, most days involve a stream of meetings, including meetings of the White House senior staff, meetings with the Counsel staff, participation in discussions of policy initiatives and major speeches, and weekly or bi-weekly sessions on judicial nominations. President Bush's Counsel, C. Boyden Gray, pithily summarized the job as "Meetings all day long. Meetings, meetings, meetings" (Gray interview, p. 25). When surprises or crises occur, of course, the Counsel is typically on call.

Peter Wallison, for example, remembers:

> I would usually arrive at the White House about seven in the morning. The staff meeting was at eight; that is, the senior staff meeting was at eight. So I would come in; I'd read the newspapers.... to see if there was anything in the newspapers, anything I hadn't already heard on the radio coming in in the morning or before I went to bed the night before. ... In most cases, I would then go to the staff meeting at eight o'clock. Sometimes I would go down to [Chief of Staff Donald] Regan's office in advance of the staff meeting and I would raise a subject that I saw in the papers or heard about, something like that, that I thought he might want to talk about at the staff meeting or that he might not want to talk about at the staff meeting or he might have to have an answer if the question comes up at the staff meeting about what I thought. ... I would get ten, fifteen minutes with him about something before the staff meeting started. That was fairly rare. Then we'd go in the staff meeting. ... Then after the staff meeting ... every morning I would have my own staff meeting. ... And I would review with them the things that came up at the senior staff meeting that would relate to the things that they were doing. So they would each get directions about what were the issues the White House was dealing with today and what they were going to hear from their clients. (Wallison interview, pp. 30-31)

A. B. Culvahouse's recollections are similar:

> We'd have a senior staff meeting which was twenty-five people in the Roosevelt Room every morning at 7:30. Then we'd have a meeting in [Chief of Staff Howard] Baker's office that was never on the schedule but which everyone knew about of six people. Howard [Baker], [Deputy Chief of Staff Kenneth] Duberstein, [Press Secretary Marlin] Fitzwater, [National Security Assistant Colin] Powell, me, [Assistant to the President for Communications Thomas] Griscom and Dan Crippen. ...It was basically referred to as the "real meeting." ...[The first meeting was about] what was going to happen, what was coming up, sort of broadly defined. But it was not a secure meeting because if you talked about anything really interesting it would find its way to the press. (Culvahouse interview, pp. 25-26; cf. interview with Baker, p. 16)

Culvahouse also had a daily staff meeting "... at least early on, during the Iran-Contra investigations, and then I would meet with the other staff at least twice a week." (Culvahouse interview, p. 27)

After meeting with the Counsel staff, in Peter Wallison's words, the Counsel "... start[s] to handle the crises of the day, whatever they happened to be. Mostly that's what you did. William French Smith was once asked what it was like to be Attorney General and he said it's one damn thing after another. And that's basically what it's like to be White House counsel; it's one damn thing after another." (Wallison interview, p. 31)

REV_00260392

Often, at least for contemporary Counsels, the days and weeks can be long ones. Some recall six-day weeks and weekdays of more than twelve hours, especially when crises arise. Taking over in the aftermath of the Iran-contra revelations, A.B. Culvahouse reported:

> I'd try to get in by 7:15 so I could read the President's intelligence daily brief and get a briefing particularly on the Iran-Contra investigations, anything that had changed since the night before. I tended to leave probably 10-ish. Then I'd work like from 8:00 to 6:00 on Saturday. I worked every Sunday for the first while and then after about six months I tried to keep Sundays free for my family ... Of course you have the secure telephone at home which quickly became the blankity-blank White House phone because it would ring at all hours of the day and night. It had a unique ring. (Culvahouse interview, p. 27)

In the scandal-plagued Clinton administration, "being on Clinton's legal team, with its 18-hour workdays and constant pressure, burned people out. [Special Counsel Jane] Sherburne recalls working in her windowless office day after day, never seeing daylight." (Oliphant, 2000, p. 5) Clinton's third Counsel, Abner Mikva, commented on the physical demands:

> I came in at sixty-nine and I was actually seventy by the time I left and the physical schedule was just more than I could handle. I would come in at six-thirty in the morning and leave at nine at night. I was the first one out of the White House. They were all still doing scheduling meetings and all kinds of things. I'd never served a president younger than I was and I realized that maybe if I'd had the personal relationship with him beforehand, which I didn't, maybe I could have played the nice graybeard that would be called in once in a while to consult. But to run the kind of schedule that the rest of the senior staff was running and that he had every reason to expect out of a White House Counsel was way beyond me. I walked out totally exhausted. It turned out I had pneumonia. I didn't realize that until after I left. (Mikva interview, pp. 22-23)

With some understatement, Jonathan Turley, a George Washington University law professor, remarked: "'This was not a job to envy. Every[one] in the Clinton administration seemed to age before our eyes.'" (Oliphant, 2000, p. 4)

Under less harried circumstances in the Reagan administration, Peter Wallison recalled:

> I didn't make a habit of it, I don't think, of being in on Saturdays. When Iran-Contra started, I did; I would go in Saturdays and Sundays. But before that it was a pretty easy job actually except for the constant pressures. It didn't involve my having to work very late most of the time. As a lawyer I was used to working twelve hours a day. I would always work twelve hours a day no matter when I got to the office. A tough day was sixteen hours but twelve hours was a pretty ordinary day. I doubt I left before seven many times; I probably left at eight. I don't have a distinct recollection of this but I do know that I wasn't seeing my family all that much during this time. (Wallison interview, p. 43)

The more striking memory may be the constant pressure. Wallison also observed:

> In the White House you never get away from the tension and the pressure of the job. You can go home but you turn on the television or you listen to the radio or you look at a newspaper and there are things that you are working on or you know about or you know are coming at you that are in those media. So, even though you don't even recognize it, you're constantly at work and constantly under pressure. It can be extremely wearing for that reason. As I say, you don't recognize it. You don't know that you are always in front of an audience. You don't realize that but you are because your mind is constantly occupied with what is going on in your office. ... When you're in the White House you've got all the opponents that there are, in effect; all the political opponents are at you all the time. When you're in the Treasury Department or even when you're working for the Vice President—I had left that out—the pressure is much less. ... Everyone, however, has an interest in what the White House is doing so you have a legion of opponents. (Wallison interview, pp. 35-36)

Nonetheless, C. Boyden Gray has commented that, despite the "never-ending" pressure, "... some of it is unnecessary. I can say that looking back on it; perhaps I'm not sure I felt that way at the time. There are meetings that you don't have to attend, stuff you don't have to do. You have to discipline yourself just to walk away from it and go to the gym and work out. You can find time. I found time." (Gray interview, p. 25) And, Mikva recalled, serving as Counsel was "exciting. You're at the point of some very important decisions.

REV_00260393

TABLE OF CONTENTS

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY II

LESSONS LEARNED II

INTRODUCTION 1

Overview - 2

Law, Politics and Policy 2

FUNCTIONS OF THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE 4

1. Advising on the Exercise of Presidential Powers & Defending the President's Constitutional Prerogatives 4

Advising on Executive Privilege 5

Advising on War Powers 5

Advising on Presidential Disability and Succession 6

The Limits of Advocacy 6

2. Overseeing Presidential Nominations & Appointments to the Executive and Judicial Branches 7

Participating in the Selection of Presidential Nominees and Appointees to the Executive Branch 7

Participating in the Selection of Presidential Nominees to the Judicial Branch 7

Supervising the Vetting and Clearance Process 8

Preparing the Nominee for the Confirmation Hearing 9

3. Advising on Presidential Actions Relating to the Legislative Process 9

4. Educating White House Staffers About Ethics Rules & Records Management & Monitoring for Adherence 10

Orienting New White House Staff and Executive Branch Officers 11

Monitoring and Educating Staffers During Campaigns 11

Reviewing Investigations and Associated Proceedings 11

5. Handling Department, Agency, and White House Staff Contacts with the Department of Justice 12

Monitoring Contacts with the Department of Justice 12

Requesting OLC Legal Opinions 12

PRINCIPAL RELATIONSHIPS IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH 13

The White House 13

The President 14

The White House Counsel and Presidential Privileges 14

The Chief of Staff 16

The White House Staff 17

Departments and agencies 18

The Department of Justice 18

The Attorney General 18

The Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) 19

Other Executive Branch Departments and Agencies 20

ORGANIZATION AND OPERATIONS 20

Internal Division of Labor 21

Deputy Counsels 21

Immediate Support Staff 22

Special Counsels 22

Other Work 22

Rhythms of Quadrennial Governance 23

First Year 23

Annual Cycles 23

Electoral Cycles 24

REV_00260367

Whether you're making them or not, you're involved in the decisional process. You're dealing with interesting people, interesting situations. There just was not a single boring moment that I had." (Mikva interview, p. 23)

TURNOVER: COUNSEL AND DEPUTY COUNSEL

Given the demands on the Counsel as well as the often unforgiving nature of Washington, it is scarcely surprising that relatively few Counsels stay in the position for more than two years. Only Philip Buchen (Ford) and C. Boyden Gray (Bush) stayed through their administrations. Fred Fielding worked even longer as Counsel to Ronald Reagan, serving from January 1981 until February 1986. (See Appendix Two)

In recent presidencies, Counsels have departed for a variety of reasons. Some -- such as John Dean -- became directly involved in administration scandals. Others -- J. Fred Buzhardt, Peter Wallison -- departed after the president or chief of staff who brought them to the White House was forced out. Still other Counsels joined the White House staff explicitly on a temporary basis, to help handle political or policy crises. In Democratic administrations, such figures have tended to be well respected, "old Washington hands" themselves (like Lloyd Cutler, Abner Mikva, and Charles Ruff). In the Reagan administration, by contrast, the new Counsel, A.B. Culvahouse, was a trusted associate of the incoming Chief of Staff, Howard Baker, who himself fit this same profile.

When a Counsel has left the White House, in virtually all cases, his deputies have departed within several months. The only exception has been Clinton aide Bruce Lindsey, who was lodged in the Counsel's Office (typically as a "Deputy Counsel to the President for Special Projects") from 1993 through 2000, working under multiple Counsels (and always with a second Deputy Counsel).

In addition, there has been somewhat higher turnover among deputies than among Counsels. Typically, Deputy Counsels leave to pursue other opportunities both in and outside the administration. Over the period from 1971 through 1999, no Deputy Counsel has succeeded a Counsel, although at least one (Cheryl Mills) turned down the job when it was offered to her. Clinton's sixth Counsel, Beth Nolan, served as an Associate Counsel in the first term. Deputy Counsels Cheryl Mills and William P. Marshall served as Associate Counsels (Mills under Nussbaum, Cutler, Mikva, and Quinn, and Marshall under Ruff) before being named Deputies.

LESSONS LEARNED

Advice from former Counsels can be helpful in trying to avoid some of the pitfalls from the past as well as in preparing for the rigors of the job prior to entering it. The following points are offered in that spirit, and have been culled from comments of past Counsels, published articles and general observation:

NAME THE COUNSEL AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE.

The president-elect (or, even better, the presidential nominee) should appoint the Counsel at the earliest possible time, since this position is key to shepherding the nomination and confirmation processes for all other presidential appointments.

According to C. Boyden Gray:

REV_00260394

> I can't emphasize enough the difficulty of absorbing all you have to absorb. It is bewildering. It is absolutely bewildering. And if people don't understand it they're going to get into trouble again and again and again. (Gray interview, p. 7)

> Bush asked me to go to work for him two weeks before he was elected and he said, "I should have asked you two months ago." The White House Counsel's Office -- you asked [about] the people who shovel the most papers around and deliver them. The volume of paper that goes through the White House Counsel's Office is ten times the other offices combined. ... Because of all the forms and the other nomination papers. (Gray interview, p. 8)

> The day a president is elected people should be shot right into the FBI the very next day. ...You should start people filling out those forms, I think, before the election. Certainly, the day of the election there ought to be 100 people doing nothing but filling out those forms. (Gray interview, p. 10).

Bernard Nussbaum, the first of six Counsels for President Clinton, echoed these sentiments about the need for an early start.

> I was offered the job only a week before it was announced on January 6th. I was offered it in late December, when I went to Little Rock. I was appointed very late in the process. A president-elect needs to start by November, by the day after the election. He [the Counsel] needs to hire staff, hire secretaries - some were detailed over from the departments. And that was not a good thing. Detailing hurt the president. (Nussbaum interview, p. 1)

PREPARE TO ENTER AN EMPTY OFFICE

Most former Counsels have remarked about the lack of any institutional memory. There are a few folders, letters, and memos that have been left behind on such matters as war powers and presidential disability and succession, and A.B. Culvahouse talked about twenty- to twenty-five binders that he left for C. Boyden Gray as the next incoming Counsel (Culvahouse interview, p. 7). Generally, however, there is little paper in the Office when a new Counsel enters. Bernard Nussbaum recalled:

> When you walk into the White House at the beginning of an administration, it is empty. It is an amazing thing. All of the files are gone. Even the secretaries are gone (except one - Linda Tripp was my secretary for a year). Nobody knew what to expect. The Democrats were stunned. This was the first time in a generation (since 1968) that they were in power (with the exception of Carter). Nobody knows anything. But the minute you walk into the office, the phones are ringing. It's as if the ten biggest litigation cases in your life are going on simultaneously. I got a call from the State Department on the first day - and there were no lawyers over there, either. I went to the office straight from the inauguration, and went to work right away, doing executive orders on that first day. (Nussbaum interview, p. 1)

Gray remembers that the only materials left behind when he took over were "Folders that lay out some of the statutory - the [inaudible] [Anti-]Deficiency Act, the Ethics in Government Act, the Hatch Act, the Presidential Records Act, all of these." (Gray interview, p. 6)

Clearly, this is a matter that future Counsels may wish to modify. As Lloyd Cutler said, "This is an area [lack of institutional memory] where there could be a very substantial improvement" (Cutler interview, p.22)[3]

[3] Until 1999, the National Security Council (NSC) staff retained records from one presidential administration to another, effectively building a "continuing archive on every pending [foreign policy] problem" (Cutler interview, p. 22) from the Truman Administration onward. When court rulings during the Clinton Administration declared that the NSC was subject to the Presidential Records Act, NSC staffers began copying the documents that they deemed essential to on-going governance. In October 2000, as this memo was being finalized, the files were still being duplicated and the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) was still working with the National Security Council staff to determine where the original files would be deposited. Members of the White House Counsel's office, therefore, may wish to consult with the NSC staff to determine the status of this process. They should also note that NARA makes provision for expedited processing of documents requested by White House policy-makers.

REV_00260395

MEET WITH THE OUTGOING COUNSEL

Especially because of the lack of materials available to the new counsel, many former counsels have discussed the importance of meeting with their predecessor prior to taking over. Noted C. Boyden Gray:

> I don't think Bernie Nussbaum spent as much as an hour with me. Vince Foster spent a little more time with John Schmitz [the deputy counsel]. But I spent maybe ten or fifteen hours with A.B. Culvahouse. I had been in the White House already for eight years and I still felt I didn't understand what I was doing... [I]t is enormously difficult to come in cold and understand all the statutes that apply... all the rules about travel... It's just very, very difficult. (Gray interview, p. 5)

EXPECT A STEEP LEARNING CURVE, THE UNPREDICTABILITY OF EVENTS, AND DEADLINES DICTATED BY THE MEDIA

Because the Counsel's responsibilities cover such broad territory, many have commented on the simply overwhelming nature of the materials that need to be mastered. The job entails a steep learning curve at the beginning, knowing where the "land mines" are, being sufficiently flexible to be able to switch gears immediately and respond to breaking crises, and working with incomplete information, especially when there is a need for a decision by the evening news. As Clinton Counsel Charles Ruff observed, "It's a job for which no training or experience exists for the crosscurrents of legal, political and constitutional issues." (Oliphant, 2000, p. 4)

In particular,

> The incoming White House counsel should interview previous White House counsel and be thoroughly immersed on all of the land mines that he or she is going to face... [The land mines are] all over the place. They're all over the place. (Gray interview, p. 21)

At the same time, one must always be prepared for the unexpected. Clinton Counsel Abner Mikva remarked: "there are those kinds of crises and the crisis management of walking in every morning, no matter what you have on your list of things to do, that isn't what you're going to spend your time on because something happens in between." (Mikva interview, p. 10)

And, always, past occupants urge, the Counsel has to pay attention to the news media.

> You better worry about the media, because the media sets the agenda... Your day starts with The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, Washington Post. They set the agenda. You may have four or five things on your list to do for the day. You probably won't get to any of them. (Nussbaum, Duke panel transcript, p. 5)

The demands of the media can be a special problem for those coming to the White House from private practice.

> It's this terrible dilemma. If you're a lawyer, you want to have all the facts. And usually you want to have all the facts before you give advice to someone about what to do about it. In the White House, you have to act on the basis of what information you can get some time before the six o'clock news because if you don't have a White House position and the news is "the White House is divided and can't make up its mind," some opposition senator will go on the air and use up the space and tell you what was done wrong. So, you have to adjust to that; you have to operate on the basis of hunch and experience. (Cutler interview, pp. 12-13)

As Counsel, Cutler also said, "You're acting on the basis of not enough information and there's always this gnawing fear that you've gotten something wrong or you've said something you shouldn't have said." (Cutler interview, p. 31)

REV_00260396

KNOW WHERE TO GO FOR INFORMATION.

Having ready access to information, and knowing how and where to get it, as well as who has it, are clearly the most critical practical components of the job. A. B. Culvahouse, Lloyd Cutler and C. Boyden Gray emphasize the importance for a Counsel to "make sure you're part of the process. You cannot recognize the problems or deal with the problems unless you see them in their inception." (Culvahouse in Quade, 1988, p. 37). Cutler was quoted above with similar advice about recognizing the legal aspects of issues discussed in meetings (Cutler interview, p. 4), and Gray, also, noted the need to know which meetings to attend (Gray interview, p. 29).

Speaking anonymously, one Deputy Counsel offered the following advice:

> [Y]ou will get every possible issue thrown at you, and there is no way you could have technical, legal expertise on all of them. Thus, the key quality to doing the Counsel's job well is to establish good personal relations with people throughout government, and to know where to go and whom to ask when you need specific information to do your job effectively.

MAINTAIN GOOD RELATIONS WITH THE OFFICE OF LEGAL COUNSEL IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

All Counsels agree it is essential to maintain good relations with the Office of Legal Counsel in the Department of Justice. They emphasize how critical it is to know when to turn to OLC for legal advice. C. Boyden Gray, for example, maintains that, as Counsel, "you're best able to avoid the land mines if... you restore the rightful place of the Office of Legal Counsel. When in doubt ask them, and they'll tell you where the land mines are." (Gray interview, p. 21)

DIVIDE THE COUNSEL'S OFFICE WHEN SCANDALS ARISE

When scandals arise, previous Counsels have walled off or isolated "scandal management" from the routine office tasks. Typically, "Special Counsels" have been appointed to work exclusively on the crisis, along with additional staff members that are specifically tasked to that purpose. A.B. Culvahouse recalled, for example, that Reagan Chief of Staff Howard Baker "told me to focus on Iran-contra and get a separate staff up and running to handle that and let my deputy handle the more routine stuff." (Culvahouse interview, p. 25) Clinton Chief of Staff Leon Panetta explained the value of separating handling scandals from other tasks:

> What you don't want to do is consume the general counsel's operation by that scandal. What you want to do is make sure that that's pulled out of the normal operation so that there is a separate focus on that. So you can basically say that crisis is being handled, these are people that are involved with it and it doesn't tie up the rest of the operation. (Panetta interview, p. 38)

MONITOR THE PRESIDENT CLOSELY IN THE LAST YEAR OF THE TERM

A.B. Culvahouse has cautioned Counsels to beware of a president in his last year in office. "Never forget that your most important contribution is what you don't let happen in the last year of a presidency. That last year is a dangerous time." (Culvahouse, Duke panel transcript, p. 5, emphasis in original) In a similar vein, Lloyd Cutler has said,

REV_00260397

> When a president is up for re-election, there are all sorts of temptations, things a president wants to do that may be legally questionable but that he wants to do to get re-elected. For a White House Counsel, those are the hardest calls to make. You should tell a White House Counsel to leave before that last year of a president's first term. (Cutler, Duke panel transcript, p.6)

BE AWARE OF SHARP PUBLIC CRITICISM OF THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE

The Office of White House Counsel is under attack these days -- for some of its actions during the Clinton administration, and even for its very existence. The title alone of a Duke University conference panel, "Should the White House Counsel's Office be Abolished?," dramatically underscores the highly controversial nature of this office. A former competitor of the Counsel's Office, Carter Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti elaborated: "The White House Counsel's Office is an abomination, structurally inefficient, lots of potential for conflict because of its political nature." (Civiletti, Duke panel transcript, p.1)

UNDERSTAND THE IMPACT OF THE LOSS OF GOVERNMENT ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

The existing skepticism surrounding the Counsel's Office has been further heightened by the dark implications many observers see from the loss of government attorney-client privilege, as a consequence of unsuccessful litigation by the Clinton administration. There is now even less reason for a president to use a White House Counsel for strictly legal purposes. Rather, presidents seem likely to turn to private counsel more often, especially when legal matters are unclear as to whether they involve "the president" or "the presidency." All of the Counsels interviewed for this project reacted strongly to these court decisions: some decried the choice to litigate matters of privilege at all (Gray), rather than to seek accommodation with the source of the demand for testimony and documents, while others (such as Cutler, Nussbaum, Mikva) lamented the very real and damaging consequences of these decisions. Abner Mikva concluded:

> [The attorney-client rulings] make it almost impossible for a president to function the way we want a president to function. It's a very sad legacy. But, I think they had to litigate. They had no option. (Oliphant, 2000, p. 3)

Clinton Counsel Charles Ruff elaborated:

> There's always a choice [whether to litigate the president's privileges]. You can acquiesce. We ended up deciding that the principles involved were sufficiently important to the institution that they needed to be pursued. (Oliphant, 2000, p. 6)

The fallout from these rulings on presidential privilege and, more generally, from the hostile and polarized political atmosphere caused by the independent counsel statute, has been considerable. Mikva, for example, recalls that he took no notes, kept nothing in writing.

> We just never put anything in writing. At least I did[n't]. All the habits I learned as a good litigator where I took detailed notes about what was going on I threw out the window. (Mikva interview, p. 1)

One of his successors, Charles Ruff, operated the Office in the same way. "We did not take notes. We were subject to subpoena. People were very careful not to put things down in writing." (Oliphant, 2000, p. 2)

> Future White House Counsels should study carefully the body of court opinions on presidential privileges. The District Court and D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals rulings in the matter of Bruce Lindsey's grand jury testimony are the key ones that deal with government attorney-client privilege and executive privilege. [In re Sealed Case (Bruce R. Lindsey) (Grand Jury Testimony), 5 F. Supp. 2d, 21 (D.D.C. 1998); In re: Bruce Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F. 3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998)]

REV_00260398

NOTE THE CONTINUING SIGNIFICANCE OF ISSUES OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE AND OTHER PRESIDENTIAL PREROGATIVES

Presidents Ronald Reagan and Bill Clinton took diametrically opposed approaches to executive privilege: Reagan waived privilege and submitted his diaries and thousands of White House documents to the Iran-contra investigators, while Clinton vigorously asserted his privileges and chose to litigate them in court. Yet, despite their contrasting strategies, both Reagan and Clinton were sharply criticized for damaging this constitutional power for future presidents. White House Counsels view with enormous care their responsibility to protect and guard a president's constitutional prerogatives, such as executive privilege.

RECOGNIZE THE DIFFICULT POLITICAL ENVIRONMENT FOR THE JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT PROCESS

One final word of caution for the next Counsel is a warning about how poisoned the process for judicial appointments has become. Speculation abounds that there may be anywhere from one to four Supreme Court vacancies sometime during the next president's term of office, vacancies that will fall directly into the Counsel's lap. The experience of getting federal judicial nominees through the confirmation process during the Clinton administration was a torturous one, with historic delays and much ill will. There does not appear to be reason for optimism that this confrontational relationship will change in the near future, especially if conditions of divided government persist.

REV_00260399

REFERENCES

WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM. INTERVIEWS WITH:

Baker, Howard, with John Tuck. Martha Joynt Kumar. Washington, D.C. 12 November 1999.

Brady, Phillip. Martha Joynt Kumar. Washington, D.C. 17 August 1999.

Culvahouse, A.B. Martha Joynt Kumar. Washington, D.C. 15 September 1999.

Cutler, Lloyd C. Martha Joynt Kumar with Nancy Kassop. Washington, D.C. 8 July 1999.

Gray, C. Boyden. Martha Joynt Kumar with Nancy Kassop. Washington, D.C. 4 October 1999.

Mikva, Abner. Martha Joynt Kumar with Terry Sullivan. Chicago, Ill. 26 April 2000.

Nussbaum, Bernard C. Martha Joynt Kumar with Nancy Kassop. 9 November 1999.

Panetta, Leon. Martha Joynt Kumar. Monterey Bay, CA. 4 May 2000.

Wallison, Peter. Martha Joynt Kumar. Washington, D.C. 27 January 2000.

COURT CASES

Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 1997.

In re Sealed Case (Bruce R. Lindsey) (Grand Jury Testimony), 5 F. Supp. 2d, 21 (D.D.C. 1998).

In re: Bruce Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F. 3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998). http://laws/findlaw.com/dc/983060d.html

Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731, 1982.

U.S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 684, 1974.

U.S. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 89 F. Supp. 357, 358-59 [D. Mass. 1950].

OTHER REFERENCES

Bendavid, Naftali. "Keeping the President's Counsel." Legal Times (14 March 1994): 1, 20-21.

Civiletti, Benjamin. Comments. Duke University Law School. "Should the White House Counsel's Office Be Abolished?" Panel at conference on The Constitution Under Clinton: A Critical Assessment. 23-25 September 1999.

Culvahouse, A.B. Comments. Duke University Law School. "Should the White House Counsel's Office Be Abolished?" Panel at conference on The Constitution Under Clinton: A Critical Assessment. 23-25 September 1999.

Cutler, Lloyd. Comments. Duke University Law School. "Should the White House Counsel's Office Be Abolished?" Panel at conference on The Constitution Under Clinton: A Critical Assessment. 23-25 September 1999.

Goldman, Sheldon and Elliot Slotnick. "Clinton's First Term Judiciary: Many Bridges to Cross." Judicature 80 (May-June 1997): 254-73.

Goldman and Slotnick. "Clinton's Second Term Judiciary: Picking Judges Under Fire." Judicature 82 (May-June 1999): 264-84.

REV_00260400

Marcus, Ruth. "Court Rejects Privilege Claim." Washington Post (28 July 1998): A1.

Marcus, Ruth and Ann Devroy. "Nussbaum Quits White House Post." Washington Post (6 March 1994): A1.

Morgan, Gerald and Edward McCabe to Philip Buchen. 2 October 1974. Memo, "Functions to be Performed by the Office of Counsel to the President." "Office Organization and Functions (1)." Buchen Counsel's Office Files, Box 100. Ford Presidential Library.

Nussbaum, Bernard. Comments. Duke University Law School. "Should the White House Counsel's Office Be Abolished?" Panel at conference on The Constitution Under Clinton: A Critical Assessment. 23-25 September 1999.

Oliphant, Jim. "Losing Privilege: A Scandal-Scarred Legacy for Future Presidents: White House Counsel Without a Shield." Legal Times (10 March 2000): 1-7. http://www.lawnewsnetwork.com/stories/A18273-2000Mar9.html 3 April 2000.

Quade, Vicki. "The President Is His Only Client." Barrister 15 (Winter/Spring 1988): 4-7, 34-37.

Strobel, Warren P. "Clinton Court Losses Seen Weakening 'Imperial Presidency.'" Washington Times (5 August 1998): 10.

REV_00260401

APPENDICES

APPENDIX ONE
FUNCTIONS OF THE OFFICE OF WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL

i) Advise on the Exercise of Presidential Powers and Defend the President's Constitutional Prerogatives

- review (and, in unusual cases, draft) executive orders
- review all recommendations for pardoning and commutation
- review requests for federal disaster relief
- review CIA drafted intelligence findings and approve covert action proposals
- interpret treaties and executive agreements
- review all presidential statements and speeches for consistency and compliance with legal standards, and in anticipation of legal challenges
- participate in editing the State of the Union address
- advance recommendations about executive privilege
- chair the president's War Powers Committee
- manage the processes associated with presidential disability or succession

ii) Oversee Presidential Nominations and Appointments to the Executive and Judicial branch

- participate in the selection of nominees for the top Justice Department positions participate in the selection of General Counsel nominees throughout the executive branch and in the NSC staff
- chair the joint White House – Department of Justice judicial selection committee
- supervise the vetting and clearance process (FBI, IRS, 278 forms, and financial disclosure forms) for all presidential nominees and appointees to the executive and judicial branches
- negotiate Senate access to the FBI reports on each nominee
- conduct "murder boards" to prepare nominees for Senate confirmation hearings

iii) Advise on Presidential Actions Relating to the Legislative Process

- review legislative proposals from the president, Executive Office of the President, and executive departments and agencies
- review bills presented for signature or veto, preparing signing statements and veto messages
- review State and Defense Department authorizations and appropriations proposals
- draft budget rescissions and deferrals
- participate in negotiations associated with Senate treaty hearings
- participate in legislative negotiations concerning policy, document requests, treaties, and nominations

iv) Educate White House Staffers about Ethics Rules and Records Management and Monitor for Adherence

- distinguish between government expenses and campaign expenses
- review presidential travel

REV_00260402

- approve requests for appointments with the president, monitoring those for propriety, seemliness, legality, and executive privilege issues
- respond to document requests and subpoenas, directed to the President and to other White House and executive branch officials, by Congressional committees and Independent Counsels
- serve as the ethics officer for the White House staff and senior executive branch appointees

v) Handle Department, Agency, and White House Staff Contacts with the Department of Justice

- conduct all consultations with the Office of Legal Counsel and other Justice Department offices
- request OLC legal opinions on matters of constitutional law
- consult with and coordinate department and agency General Counsels

REV_00260403

Final Year 24
More Regular Tasks 24
Crises / Scandals / Unexpected Events 25
The Counsel's Daily Schedule 26
Turnover: Counsel and Deputy Counsel 28

LESSONS LEARNED 28
Name the Counsel as early as possible. 28
Prepare to enter an empty office 29
Meet with the outgoing Counsel 30
Expect a steep learning curve, the unpredictability of events, and deadlines dictated by the media 30
Know where to go for information. 31
Maintain good relations with the Office of Legal Counsel in the Department of Justice 31
Divide the Counsel's Office when scandals arise 31
Monitor the president closely in the last year of the term 31
Be aware of sharp public criticism of the White House Counsel's Office 32
Understand the impact of the loss of government attorney-client privilege 32
Note the continuing significance of issues of executive privilege and other presidential prerogatives 33
Recognize the difficult political environment for the judicial appointment process 33

REFERENCES 34
White House Interview Program. Interviews with: 34
Court Cases 34
Other References 34

APPENDICES 36
Appendix One Functions of the Office of White House Counsel 36
Appendix Two: Counsels and Deputy Counsels, 1969 -2000 38

ADDITIONAL READING ON THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE 39
Articles 39
News Articles 39
Court decisions 40
Congressional hearings 40
Books 40

ADDITIONAL READINGS ON THE FEDERAL JUDICIAL SELECTION PROCESS 41
Articles 41
Books 41

ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT 1
The White House Interview Program 1
Nomination Forms Online 1

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT REPORT SERIES 2
General Series 2
White House Staff Series 2

REV_00260368

APPENDIX TWO: COUNSELS AND DEPUTY COUNSELS, 1969 -2000

Administration	Counsel	Dates	Deputy(ies)	Dates
Clinton	Beth Nolan	8/99-	Bruce R. Lindsey	1/93-
			William P. Marshall	12/99-
	Charles F. C. Ruff	2/97-8/99	Cheryl Mills	/96-8/99
	John (Jack) Quinn	11/95-2/97	Kathleen Wallman	/96-
	Abner Mikva	9/94-11/95	James Castello	3/95-
	Lloyd N. Cutler	3/94-9/94
	Bernard W. Nussbaum	1/93-3/94	Joel I. Klein	7/93- 3/95
			Vincent W. Foster	1/93-7/93
Bush	C. Boyden Gray	1/89-1/93	John P. Schmitz	1/89-1/93
Reagan	A.B. Culvahouse	1987-1/89	Phillip D. Brady	/88-1/89
			Jay B. Stephens	/86-/87
	Peter Wallison	4/86-
	Fred F. Fielding	1/81-2/86	Richard A. Hauser	1/81-
			Herbert E. Ellingwood	1/81-
Carter	Lloyd Cutler	10/79-1/81	Michael Cardozo	10/79-1/81
			Joseph Onek	9/79-1/81
	Robert J. Lipshutz	1/77-8/79	Margaret A. McKenna	1/77-12/79
Ford	Philip W. Buchen	8/74-1/77	Edward C. Schmults	10/75-1/77
			Roderick Hills	4/75-10/75
			Philip Areeda	10/74-2/75
Nixon	J. Fred Buzhardt	1/74-8/74
	Leonard Garment	5/73-1/74	Fred Fielding	5/73-1/74 (on counsel staff since 10/70)
	John Dean	7/70-4/73
	John Ehrlichman	1/69- 11/69

REV_00260404

ADDITIONAL READING ON THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE

ARTICLES

Lloyd Cutler, "The Role of the Counsel to the President of the U.S.," The Record of the Bar Association of the City of New York, Vol. 35, No. 8, November 1980, pp. 470-480.

Michael K. Forde, "The White House Counsel and Whitewater: Government Lawyers and the Scope of Privileged Communications," Yale Law and Policy Review, Vol. 16, No. 109, 1997, pp. 109-167.

Nelson Lund, "Lawyers and the Defense of the Presidency," Brigham Young University Law Review, Vol. 17, 1995, pp. 17-98.

Nelson Lund, "The President as Client and the Ethics of the President's Lawyers," Law and Contemporary Problems, Vol. 61, No. 2, Spring 1998, pp. 65-81. http://www.law.duke.edu/journals/61LCPLund

W. John Moore, "The True Believers," National Journal, Vol. 23, Nos. 33-34, August 17, 1991, pp. 2018-2022.

Michael Stokes Paulsen, "Hell, Handbaskets, and Government Lawyers: The Duty of Loyalty and its Limits," Law and Contemporary Problems, Vol. 61, No. 1, Winter 1998, pp. 83-106. http://www.law.duke.edu/journals/61LCPPaulsen

Michael Stokes Paulsen, "Who "Owns" the Government's Attorney-Client Privilege?" Minnesota Law Review, Vol. 83, December 1998, pp. 473-521.

Vicki Quade, "The President is His Only Client," Barrister Magazine, American Bar Association, Vol. 15, No. 1, Winter/Spring 1988, pp. 4-7, 34-37.

Jeremy Rabkin, "At the President's Side: The Role of the White House Counsel in Constitutional Policy," Law and Contemporary Problems, Vol. 56, No. 4, 1993, pp. 63-98.

Jennifer Wang, "Raising the Stakes at the White House: Legal and Ethical Duties of the White House," Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics, Vol. 8, 1994, pp. 118-.

NEWS ARTICLES

James A. Barnes, "Changing Lawyers," National Journal, Vol. 29, No. 6, February 8, 1997, pp. 284-285.

James A. Barnes, "How Clinton's Team Spins the Hearings," National Journal, Vol. 29, No. 30, July 26, 1998, p. 1521.

Gregory C. Bauman, "Keeping Presidential Privileges Intact," Legal Times, August 10, 1998, p. 14.

Gregory C. Bauman, "Of Presidents and Precedents," Legal Times, August 17, 1998, p. 1.

Naftali Bendavid, "Keeping the President's Counsel," Legal Times, January 10, 1994, pp. 1, 20-21.

Naftali Bendavid, "Whitewater Meets the Washington Legal Culture: Cutler's Task: Mixing Politics, Fealty and Law," Legal Times, March 14, 1994, p. 1.

Gloria Borger, "The First Client's Privilege," U.S. News and World Report, May 26, 1997, p. 31.

Anne Kornhauser, "Boyden Gray: Not Just George Bush's Lawyer," Legal Times, November 12, 1990, pp. 1, 18-19.

REV_00260405

Ruth Marcus, "Court Rejects Privilege Claim," The Washington Post, July 28, 1998, p. 1.

Jim Oliphant, "Losing Privilege: A Scandal-Scarred Legacy for Future Presidents: White House Counsels Without a Shield," Legal Times, March 10, 2000. http://www.lawnewsnetwork.com/stories/A18273-2000Mar9.html

Paul R. Rice, "Should We Make Bruce Lindsey Talk? Drawing the Parallels Between the Governmental and the Corporate Attorney-Client Privilege," Legal Times, July 6, 1998, p. 17.

Jeffrey Rosen, "How to Isolate a President," The New York Times, July 30, 1998, p. 21.

Robert Schmidt, "'Special' Role Leaves Counsel Some Private Space," Legal Times, March 14, 1994, pp. 8-9.

Alexis Simendinger, "Everything an Aide Needs to Know," National Journal, Vol. 29, No. 39, p. 1897.

David O. Stewart, "The President's Lawyer," ABA Journal, The Lawyer's Magazine, Vol. 72, April 1, 1986, pp. 59-61.

Warren P. Strobel, "Clinton Court Losses Seen Weakening 'Imperial Presidency'," The Washington Times, August 5, 1998, p. 10.

Stuart Taylor, Jr., "Me and Lloyd," Legal Times, March 14, 1994, pp. 18, 20.

Stuart Taylor, Jr. and Daniel Klaidman, "A Troubling Legal Legacy," Newsweek, August 24, 1998, p. 25.

COURT DECISIONS

Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681 (1997)

In re: Bruce R. Lindsey (Grand Jury Testimony), 158 F. 3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998) http://laws.findlaw.com/dc/983060d.html

In re Sealed Case (Bruce R. Lindsey) (Grand Jury Testimony), 5 F. Supp. 2d, 21 (D.D.C. 1998).

Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731 (1982).

U.S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 684 (1974).

CONGRESSIONAL HEARINGS

"Hearings Relating to Madison Guaranty S&L and the Whitewater Development Corporation - Washington, D.C. Phase," Hearings Before the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, 103rd Congress, 2nd session, Vol. IV, August 3, 4, 5, 1994, esp. pp. 466-515 (testimony of Bernard W. Nussbaum).

BOOKS

Griffin B. Bell, Taking Care of the Law (New York: William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1982), esp. pp. 37-39.

Cornell W. Clayton, ed., Government Lawyers: The Federal Legal Bureaucracy and Presidential Politics (Lawrence, KS: University Press of Kansas, 1995), esp. Chapters 5, 8 and 9.

Clark Clifford and Richard Holbrooke, Counsel to the President: A Memoir (New York: random House, 1991).

John W. Dean, III, Blind Ambition: The White House Years (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1976).

REV_00260406

Office of the Counsel to the President

Bradley H. Patterson, Jr. The White House Staff :Inside the West Wing and Beyond (Washington, DC: Brookings Institution Press, 2000), esp. Chapter 6, "The 'Just-Us' Department: The Counsel to the President."

Robert N. Roberts and Marion T. Doss, Jr., From Watergate to Whitewater: The Public Integrity War (Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers, 1997), esp. pp. 97-99.

James Michael Strine, The Office of Legal Counsel: Legal Professionals in a Political System (Ph.D. dissertation, Johns Hopkins University, 1992), esp. Chapters 2, 4 and 5.

Gregory S. Walden, On Best Behavior: The Clinton Administration and Ethics in Government (Indianapolis, IN: Hudson Institute, 1996).

ADDITIONAL READINGS ON THE FEDERAL JUDICIAL SELECTION PROCESS

ARTICLES

Garland W. Allison. "Delay in Senate Confirmation of Federal Judicial Nominees." Judicature 80 (July-August 1996): 8-15.

Michael J. Gerhardt. "Toward a Comprehensive Understanding of the Federal Appointments Process." Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy 21 (Spring 1988): 467-539.

Sheldon Goldman and Elliot Slotnick. "Clinton's First Term Judiciary: Many Bridges to Cross." Judicature 80 (May-June 1997): 254-273.

Sheldon Goldman and Elliot Slotnick. "Clinton's Second Term Judiciary: Picking Judges Under Fire." Judicature 82 (May-June 1999): 265-284.

Roger E. Hartley and Lisa M. Holmes. "Increasing Senate Scrutiny of Lower Federal Court Nominees." Judicature 80 (May-June 1997): 274-278.

Miller Commission on the Selection of Federal Judges. Report. Miller Center Commission No. 7, White Burkett Miller Center of Public Affairs, Charlottesville, VA, 1996. http://www.virginia.edu/~miller/commissions/commission7.htm

Lee Renzin. "Advice, Consent and Inaction," Judicature 82 (January-February 1999): 166-174.

BOOKS

Sheldon Goldman. Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection from Roosevelt Through Reagan. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1997.

REV_00260407

About the White House 2001 Project

http://whitehouse2001.org

Presidency scholars lead a two-part project designed to provide incoming White House staff members with information on operating key White House offices and to help presidential nominees fill out the tidal wave of forms they face in the appointments process. Funded by The Pew Charitable Trusts, a foundation known for the stature of its programs and the nonpartisan nature of its organization, the White House 2001 Project works with two broad, Pew initiatives: The Transition to Governing Project of the American Enterprise Institute and the Presidential Appointee Initiative of the Brookings Institution. White House 2001 was designed and developed by the board and members of the Presidency Research Group, the worldwide professional organization of scholars focused on the American presidency and a section of the American Political Science Association.

The White House Interview Program

Unlike corporations both large and small, a White House begins without a record compiled by its previous occupants. The goal of the White House Interview Program is to smooth the path to power by furnishing incoming staff with substantive information about the operation of seven White House offices critical to an effective beginning: Chief of Staff, Staff Secretary, Press Office, Office of Communications, Office of the Counsel to the President, Office of Management and Administration, and the Office of Presidential Personnel. Through interviews with current and former White House staff members from the last six administrations, the White House Interview Program provides new staff with detailed information about how their White House offices function, the organization of their units, and the roles played by the heads of each office.

In addition to this institutional memory, the White House Interview Program provides a support package of important tools previous staff have identified as invaluable. These tools include a "rolodex" of contact information about the people who previously served in their posts with current addresses and phone numbers. The White House Interview Program also provides the first ever detailed organization charts of White House offices approximately every six months through the Carter administration. The scholars associated with the project, researching and writing about the White House staff, are nationally recognized for their work on the presidency. They are: Professors Peri Arnold, MaryAnne Borrelli, John Burke, George Edwards, Karen Hult, Nancy Kassop, John Kessel, Martha Joynt Kumar, Bradley Patterson, James Pfiffner, Terry Sullivan, Kathryn Dunn Tenpas, Charles Walcott, Shirley Anne Warshaw, and Stephen Wayne.

Nomination Forms Online

In order to address the volume of information required from appointees and the problem of the plethora of forms to be filled out by nominees, the Nomination Forms Online program provides a software package that nominees can use to complete the myriad of forms required by the White House, the FBI, the US Office of Government Ethics, and, where appropriate, the Senate committee of jurisdiction. The software uses innovative programming techniques so that the software distributes repetitive information across the several forms nominees must complete. The software allows the nominee to store information for future use in completing annual reports. It also makes available a portable file of data in standard formats so the nominee can share information, at his or her discretion, with the White House Office of Presidential Personnel and other agencies. Nomination Forms Online is freeware.

REV_00260408

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM
REPORT NO. 29

THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE

MaryAnne Borrelli, Connecticut College
Karen Hult, Virginia Polytechnic Institute
Nancy Kassop, State University of New York – New Paltz

INTRODUCTION

The White House Counsel's Office is at the hub of all presidential activity. Its mandate is to be watchful for and attentive to legal issues that may arise in policy and political contexts in which the president plays a role. To fulfill this responsibility, it monitors and coordinates the presidency's interactions with other players in and out of government. Often called "the president's lawyer," the Counsel's Office serves, more accurately, as the "presidency's lawyer," with tasks that extend well beyond exclusively legal ones. These have developed over time, depending on the needs of different presidents, on the relationship between a president and a Counsel, and on contemporary political conditions. The Office carries out many routine tasks, such as vetting all presidential appointments and advising on the application of ethics regulations to White House staff and executive branch officials, but it also operates as a "command center" when crises or scandals erupt. Thus, the more sharply polarized political atmosphere in recent years has led to greater responsibility and demands, as well as heightened political pressure and visibility, on the traditionally low-profile Counsel's Office. The high-stakes quality of its work has led to a common sentiment among Counsels and their staff that there is "zero tolerance" for error in this office.

In sum, the Counsel's Office might be characterized as a monitor, a coordinator, a negotiator, a recommender, and a translator: it monitors ethics matters, it coordinates the president's message and agenda with other executive branch units, it negotiates with a whole host of actors on the president's behalf (not the least of which is Congress), it recommends myriad actions to the president, and it translates or interprets the law (whether it is the Constitution, federal rules and regulations, treaties or legislation) for all executive branch officials. Past Counsels have lamented that there is no job description for this office, while the opening quote from Peter Wallison makes clear that even if there was, it would be all-consuming and all-inclusive of everything that goes in and out of the president's office.

REV_00260369

OVERVIEW

In simple terms, the Counsel's Office performs five basic categories of functions: (1) advising on the exercise of presidential powers and defending the president's constitutional prerogatives; (2) overseeing presidential nominations and appointments to the executive and judicial branches; (3) advising on presidential actions relating to the legislative process; (4) educating White House staffers about ethics rules and records management and monitoring adherence; and (5) handling department, agency and White House staff contacts with the Department of Justice (see Functions section). In undertaking these responsibilities, the Counsel's Office interacts regularly with, among others, the president, the Chief of Staff, the White House Office of Personnel, the Press Secretary, the White House Office of Legislative Affairs, the Attorney General, the Office of Management and Budget (on the legislative process), the General Counsels of the departments and agencies, and most especially, the Office of Legal Counsel in the Department of Justice (see Relationships section). In addition to the Counsel, the Office usually consists of one or two Deputy Counsels, a varying number of Associate and Assistant Counsels, a Special Counsel when scandals arise, a Senior Counsel in some administrations, and support staff. Tasks are apportioned to these positions in various ways, depending on the Counsel's choices, though most Counsels expect all Office members to share the ongoing vetting for presidential appointments (see Organization and Operations section).

Certain responsibilities within the Office are central at the very start of an administration (e.g., vetting for initial nominations and shepherding the appointment process through the Senate), while others have a cyclical nature to them (e.g., the annual budget, the State of the Union message), and still others follow an electoral cycle (e.g., determining whether presidential travel and other activities are partisan/electoral/campaign or governmental ones) (see Organization and Operations). There is, of course, the always unpredictable (but almost inevitable) flurry of scandals and crises, in which all eyes turn to the Counsel's Office for guidance and answers. Watergate, Iran-contra, Whitewater, the Clinton impeachment, and the FBI files and White House Travel Office matters were all managed from the Counsel's Office, in settings that usually separated scandal management from the routine work of the Office, so as to permit ongoing operations to continue with minimal distraction. Among the more regular tasks that occur throughout an administration are such jobs as directing the judicial nomination process, reviewing legislative proposals (the president's, those from departments and agencies, and bills Congress has passed that need the Counsel's recommendation for presidential signature or veto), editing and clearing presidential statements and speeches, writing executive orders, and determining the application of executive privilege (see both Relationships and Organization and Operations sections).

Perhaps, the most challenging task for the Counsel is being the one who has the duty to tell the president "no," especially when it comes to defending the constitutional powers and prerogatives of the presidency. Lloyd Cutler, Counsel for both Presidents Carter and Clinton, noted that, in return for being "on the cutting edge of problems," the Counsel needs to be someone who has his own established reputation... someone who is willing to stand up t o the President, to say, "No, Mr. President, you shouldn't do that for these reasons." There is a great tendency among all presidential staffs to be very sycophantic, very sycophantic. It's almost impossible to avoid, "This man is the President of the United States and you want to stay in his good graces," even when he is about to do something dumb; you don't tell him that. You find some way to put it in a very diplomatic manner. (Cutler interview, pp. 3-4)

LAW, POLITICS AND POLICY

A helpful way to understand the Counsel's Office is to see it as sitting at the intersection of law, politics and policy. Consequently, it confronts the difficult and delicate task of trying to reconcile all three of these without sacrificing too much of any one. It is the distinctive challenge of the Counsel's Office to advise the president to take actions that are both legally sound and politically astute. A 1994 article in Legal Times warned of the pitfalls:

REV_00260370

> Because a sound legal decision can be a political disaster, the presidential counsel constantly sacrifices legal ground for political advantage. (Bendavid, 1994, p. 13)

For example, A.B. Culvahouse recalled his experience upon arriving at the White House as counsel and having to implement President Reagan's earlier decision to turn over his personal diaries to investigators during the Iran-contra scandal.

> Ronald Reagan's decision to turn over his diary - that sits at the core of the presidency. ... You're setting up precedents and ceding a little power. But politically, President Reagan wanted to get it behind him. (Bendavid, 1994, p. 13)

Nonetheless, Culvahouse added, the Counsel is "the last and in some cases the only protector of the President's constitutional privileges. Almost everyone else is willing to give those away in part inch by inch and bit by bit in order to win the issue of the day, to achieve compromise on today's thorny issue. So a lot of what I did was stand in the way of that process..." (Culvahouse interview, p. 28)

Because of this blend of legal, political and policy elements, the most essential function a Counsel can perform for a president is to act as an "early warning system" for potential legal trouble spots before (and, ultimately, after) they erupt. For this role, a Counsel must keep his or her "antennae" constantly attuned. Being at the right meetings at the right time and knowing which people have information and/or the necessary technical knowledge and expertise in specific policy or legal areas are the keys to insuring the best service in this part of the position. C. Boyden Gray, Counsel for President Bush, commented: "As Culvahouse said -- I used to say that the meetings I was invited to, I shouldn't go to. ... It's the meetings I wasn't invited to that I'd go to." (Gray interview, p. 26) Lloyd Cutler noted that

> ....the White House Counsel will learn by going to the staff meetings, et cetera, that something is about to be done that has buried within it a legal issue which the people who are advocating it either haven't recognized or push under the rug. He says, "Wait a minute. We've got to check this out," and goes to the Office of Legal Counsel and alerts them and gets their opinion. But for the existence of the White House Counsel, the Office of Legal Counsel would never have learned about the problem until it was too late. (Cutler interview, p. 4)

One other crucial part of the job where the legal overlaps with the policy and the political -- and which can spell disaster for Counsels who disregard this -- is knowing when to go to the Office of Legal Counsel for guidance on prevailing legal interpretations and opinions on the scope of presidential authority. It is then up to the White House Counsel to sift through these legal opinions, and to bring into play the operative policy and political considerations in order to offer the president his or her best recommendation on a course of presidential action. Lloyd Cutler described how this process works:

> They [OLC staffers] are where the President has to go or the President's counsel has to go to get an opinion on whether something may properly be done or not. For example, if you wish to invoke an executive privilege not to produce documents or something, the routine now is you go to the Office of Legal Counsel and you get their opinion that there is a valid basis for asserting executive privilege in this case. ...You're able to say [to the judge who is going to examine these documents] the Office of Legal Counsel says we have a valid basis historically for asserting executive privilege here. (Cutler interview, p. 4)

C. Boyden Gray underscored the critical importance of OLC's relationship to the Counsel's Office:

> They [OLC] were the memory... We paid attention to what they did. [Vincent] Foster never conferred with them. When they [the Clinton Counsel's Office] filed briefs on executive privilege, they had the criminal division, the civil division and some other division signing on the brief; OLC wasn't on the brief... In some ways they [OLC] told us not to do things but that was helpful. They said no to us... I can give you a million examples. They would have said to Vince Foster, "Don't go in and argue without thinking about it." They would have prevented the whole healthcare debacle [referring to the Clinton Counsel's Office's position that Hillary Rodham Clinton was a government official for FACA purposes] ... [T]he ripple effect of that one decision is hard to exaggerate: it's hard to calculate. (Gray interview, pp. 18-19)

REV_00260371

In addition, Gray continued,

> ... OLC has this long institutional memory of how to deal with Congress in situations like this [referring to the Clinton Counsel's Office's agreement to permit the president to give grand jury testimony to Independent Counsel Ken Starr] and they would have said, "Hey, have you thought about [this]?" (Gray interview, p. 20)

Thus, the Counsel's Office is the channel through which most paper and people must pass on the way to the president, and, equally, through which all outputs from the Oval Office must be monitored and evaluated. The pace of the work is incessant, and the pressure to ensure against errors of substance or judgment, unrelenting. The Office exists in a fishbowl, is subject to searing public criticism when it makes the slightest misstep, and yet prompts intense loyalty among those who have been privileged to serve in it.

The following sections will provide more detailed information on the functions of the Office, the relationships it maintains with other governmental units, and its organization and routine operations. A final section on Lessons Learned from prior Counsels will close with some practical advice and cautions for its future occupants.

FUNCTIONS OF THE WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL'S OFFICE

Although the White House Counsel's Office has assumed different tasks in different administrations, the broader contours of its responsibilities began to take shape under Counsel Fred Fielding in the Nixon administration, and have been remarkably consistent since the Ford years. These responsibilities generally fall into the following categories. (For a summary, see Appendix One)

1. Advising on the exercise of presidential powers and defending the president's constitutional prerogatives;
2. Overseeing presidential nominations and appointments to the executive and judicial branches;
3. Advising on presidential actions relating to the legislative process;
4. Educating White House staffers about ethics rules and records management and monitoring adherence; and
5. Handling department, agency, and White House staff contacts with the Department of Justice.

1. ADVISING ON THE EXERCISE OF PRESIDENTIAL POWERS & DEFENDING THE PRESIDENT'S CONSTITUTIONAL PREROGATIVES

Counsel tasks related to presidential powers include routine review of executive orders (and, in unusual cases, drafting them); reviewing all pardoning and commutation recommendations; reviewing requests for federal disaster relief; reviewing CIA-drafted intelligence findings and approving covert action proposals; interpreting treaties and executive agreements; examining all presidential statements for consistency and compliance with legal standards, and in anticipation of legal challenges; and participating in editing the State of the Union address. Tasks that have consistently related to the defense of a president's constitutional prerogatives are fewer in number. These have generally focused on issues related to executive privilege, war powers, and presidential disability or succession. [In this list, links are needed from the executive orders, pardoning, and war powers points to the Culvahouse interview.]

The responsibilities associated with presidential powers are highly volatile. The present Washington political environment is notable for partisanship, polarization, and confrontation. Presidential actions and decisions are subjected to extraordinary scrutiny, and a twenty-four hour news cycle accelerates the pace of decision-making. For these reasons, any distinction between the "routine" and the more "crisis-laden" exercise of a president's constitutional powers is essentially artificial. At any time, political events may transform an otherwise routine exercise of presidential powers into an extraordinary undertaking. As Clinton Counsel Bernard Nussbaum concluded, "Small (and not so small) policy and political problems grow into legal problems. It was my job to make sure that these political and policy brushfires didn't become conflagrations." (Nussbaum interview, p. 6) Consequently, a White House Counsel must be well informed about political developments throughout the White House and the executive branch.

REV_00260372

Advising on Executive Privilege

Issues relating to the president's constitutional prerogatives require both an awareness of politics and an attentiveness to precedents. Nowhere are these two requirements more critical than in the intensely sensitive clashes that can result when Congress, a court, or an independent counsel exercising prosecutorial functions demands information (documents or testimony) from a sitting president who refuses to accede to such demands.

Despite the primacy of high-stakes politics in these stand-offs between the branches, some degree of political accommodation, rather than a purely "legal" answer, is more often the outcome of such conflicts. Although presidents are fiercely protective of their prerogatives, they may also recognize the practical need to find some compromise to break the political logjam. White House Counsels often find themselves caught in the cross-hairs, where their best legal judgment about the appropriate presidential response is often overridden by more forceful political considerations from influential political advisors.

> Once we began to understand it, we decided to negotiate when the problem came up. As a result, I don't think we ever had a showdown on [executive privilege]. For instance, if a committee wanted certain documents and certain information we would try to figure out everything we could properly give to them and sit down with them – either I would, [Assistant to the President for Congressional Relations] Frank Moore would or someone else would – and try to negotiate on disclosing everything we possible could. I don't think we had any confrontations of any serious consequence on the whole executive privilege issue as a result of that. (Lipshutz interview, p. 27)

> I think this President operated on the premise pretty much and I certainly did that whatever the legal consequences or legal parameters were of executive privilege, if Congress really wanted something, politically it almost was impossible to deny it. The more you stood on privilege, the more you pointed to precedents, the more you showed these are the things that the President didn't turn over, the more they could make political hay out of it. As I say, we operated on the premise that you could resist and you could maybe negotiate but that, by and large, if Congress really wanted anything you have to give [it] to them, therefore, better act forthcoming.

> I think the worst rap they put on this administration was that they have stonewalled on anything with the exception of Monica – obviously it was stonewalled. (Mikva interview, p. 5)

A more detailed discussion of executive privilege, specifically referencing recent decisions in this area, can be found in the Relationships and in the Lessons Learned sections.

Advising on War Powers

In relative terms, the Counsel's role in regard to war powers has seemed less controversial. As chair of the War Powers Committee, the Counsel is responsible for notifications to Congress. In keeping with presidential views of the War Powers Resolution as unconstitutional, though, Counsels have provided Congress with a minimum of information "in the interest of comity." In the words of A.B. Culvahouse, "There is a real kabuki dance that was done. You sent a notice up to the Hill while protesting all the time that you're not providing notice." (Culvahouse interview, p. 5) Like a kabuki dance, the war powers dialogue is

REV_00260373

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM
REPORT NO. 6

THE WHITE HOUSE WORLD
START UP, ORGANIZATION, AND THE PRESSURES OF WORK LIFE

MARTHA JOYNT KUMAR
TOWSON UNIVERSITY
WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT, DIRECTOR

Contact Information

The White House 2001 Project
Martha Joynt Kumar, Director
by email mkumar@brook.edu
phone 202/496.1348

Released 12 December, 2000

Undertaken by presidency scholars and funded by the Pew Charitable Trusts, the White House Interview Program provides information to incoming presidential staff on White House transitions and operations. See http://whitehouse2001.org for more information.

REV_00260409

move these people away as if they were [Lyndon B.] Johnson loyalists. Well, she may or may not have been but she knew how the place worked; she was willing and eager to share that with us. It took us about a week of stumbling around before we brought her back in to a prominent position in the Press Office."

There is a whole group of people in the Office of Management and Budget who know White House operations. William Galston, who worked on education issues in the first term of the Clinton Administration described the importance of permanent people in the Executive Branch. "Just think about it institutionally," he said.[16] "There are very few people in senior staff positions in the Congress who didn't start out with junior staff positions in the Congress. There is a training process. But somehow when you get to the White House, the cycle of training and experience is broken and it's as though you're starting over again with each administration." What that means "is that a lot of power shifts to the more permanent executive branch presence's. Now that's not all bad. For example, without the assistance of senior OMB people, career people, I would have been lost in the early months on my job... .You have to figure out that they're there and you have to figure out how to interact usefully and respectfully."

COMING IN TIRED

If the President-elect moved directly from the campaign into transition mode, it is quite possible he failed to rest during that time period. The result is coming into the White House tired. If he is exhausted, so too will be his staff as wherever a President is during the transition he is certain to have staff who follow his moves. David Gergen described the problem and the Clinton example. "I do believe that the physical pacing of the President is so important. The transition time is one in which its extremely important to put him down for a while to recharge the engines. You come off a grueling campaign and everybody is exhausted. If you don't allow those people to have some time, especially the candidate, to find himself or herself again, get yourself back together and be ready for what is going to hit in January, you're just asking for enormous problems," he said.[17] For Reagan it was not difficult to take time off after the election and get rested. "That was sort of his natural bent anyway," Gergen observed. "After he did a picture, he relaxed; that was his way of life. Then you get up for the next one. Clinton I saw at renaissance weekend in Hilton Head in late December or early January 1993. I was stunned at the pace he was trying to keep. He came in tired. He would stay up half the night partying and enjoying himself, seeing friends. He'd be up at six o'clock in the morning to play football. He was going on like four hours sleep. He had been doing it all through the transition." The result was a President who came into office without having taken time off to make the switch from campaigning to governing.

EARLY MISTAKES COST VALUABLE ENERGY

Especially in the area of appointments, the early months are difficult ones replete with opportunities to go off track. Jerry Jones, who worked in the Personnel Office in the Nixon White House, told of the huge number of resumes he had to deal with that had been requested by those working in the transition. He was brought into the White House to deal with letters solicited by the personnel transition team from people whose names were in Who's Who in America. The transition team had sent letters to them asking they send in names of people appropriate for jobs in the administration. They enthusiastically did so.

> The EOB [Executive Office Building]'s halls on the first floor, over by the Personnel Office, were stacked with letters from these people. And then, when they didn't hear from them - which they > couldn't do because there were multi-thousands of these letters and resumes everywhere - it simply broke the system down. Then, when they didn't hear, they wrote again. So there were then twice as many letters. Then, when they didn't hear again, they started calling. They all thought their recommendations - because they're important people - should be listened to. Then, when they weren't, which they couldn't possibly be— there were at that time 555 presidentially-appointed jobs. There were about 3,000 Schedule C jobs, [there] were about 150 some odd ambassadorial appointments - of which about 30 were politically appointed - and there were 300 and some odd federal judgeships, of which vacancies came up from time to time as people retired. That's a very small group of people. And if you have 50,000 resumes, how do you even begin to deal with it? Well, they couldn't. It was a huge black eye.

[16] Interview with William Galston, Martha Joynt Kumar, College Park, MD., June 5, 1997.

[17] White House Interview Program, Interview with David Gergen, Martha Joynt Kumar, Shirlington, Virginia, August 26 , 1999.

REV_00260418

One mistake in the appointment process can draw the energy of a new administration into areas where it had not planned to go. "The John Tower confirmation, failure to confirm, that was a serious bump in the road for us," observed Andrew Card who served as Deputy Chief of Staff in the early part of the Bush Administration.[18] The Tower confirmation was a problem because it was unanticipated and it threatened to compromise their routines and focus. "It preoccupied senior staff attention at the White House for probably two weeks when we couldn't afford to give it the attention." They were lucky for the selection of Richard Cheney to be Secretary of Defense in place of John Tower. "The President's selection of Cheney was masterful. The background check was fast because it was easy. There were no skeletons that anybody could find and Cheney knew the process, the process knew him. So we stopped the bleeding very, very quickly." If Cheney had not been so easy to confirm they could have faced a loss of momentum. "If we had stumbled after the Tower problems I think it would have taken us a long time to recover and it would have jeopardized any momentum we had on the policy side," Card said.

EMPTYING OUT THE OFFICES

One of the difficult tasks at the end of the administration is emptying out the offices of political appointees and for those coming in, making certain the deed was done in a complete fashion. Chair huggers are rampant in the White House and throughout the administration. If it is a transition involving a change in party, the White House is automatically cleared. In a transition involving the same party and where a Vice-President is the President-elect, the problems of clearing the desks is magnified. Then it requires canceling White House passes and leaving people on the payroll for a short period of time. In the transition from the Reagan to the Bush administrations, one official familiar with the process said White House staff had their passes canceled a week after the Inauguration but they were kept on the payroll for two to three weeks.[19]

> In a hostile transition, pressure is there to protect the people out in the departments and agencies, which makes it difficult for those coming into the White House to set up their administration. The Executive Branch is more difficult to clear out than is the White House. Traditionally, the President-elect chooses to empty out the offices under his own direction or have the incumbent President fire people. At the request of President-elect Clinton, President Bush sent letters to people they appointed informing them they were terminated. A person involved in that transition said people out in the departments sought to hold onto their jobs by requesting of the Bush people: "'Don't tell them I'm around; let them find me'. 'I've done a good job; of course, they want me on their team.' 'They'd be foolish to replace me'," people said.[20] In fact, they did clear the decks and then requested of each department head a [18] White House Interview Program, Interview with Andrew Card, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., May 25, 1999.

[19] Background interview.
[20] Background interview.

REV_00260419

briefing book with the responsibilities sketched out for each of the political appointees from the Schedule Cs to the department secretary.

A friendly transition has unanticipated problems. Those coming into office believe the transition will be a smooth one and fail to take into account the two issues they will confront: bringing in their own people and thinking through representation of their party's coalition. One person familiar with the transition from Presidents Reagan to Bush observed:

> I think the friendly takeover was more difficult than the hostile because in the friendly takeover there was almost an expectation for the people who were left in the Reagan Administration that they would stay on and how dare you punish me and fire me. President Reagan did not clear the decks basically. His people basically were there. Many of them assumed they would move on but there were a lot who were holding on and because they hadn't been asked to leave assumed they could stay. I think that was very, very uncomfortable and it also had policy ramifications. Then there were, 'I was doing a perfectly good job at the Department of Agriculture and President Bush fired me because he disagreed with our policies.' It wasn't because he disagreed with the policies. And then there was a backlash in the policy debate. So I think that was more difficult. At least when you have a hostile takeover there's an expectation on those who are in jobs that they are likely to be out of them.[21]

A friendly transition has the additional problem of taking into account all of the factions within a part. "The other thing is, in a friendly takeover, there's still the reality that there are different camps. When it's a hostile takeover you don't have to worry about the different camps," said an observer.[22] "When we came in as the Bush team, we had to worry about the old Reagan team, we had to worry about the Bob Dole campaign workers, the Pat Buchanan campaign workers, the Republican factions that complicated both the personnel process and the early policy debate process." The personnel issue in a friendly transition is especially difficult because it is unanticipated and little attention is given to it when something could be done to ameliorate hard feelings towards the incoming team. In the case of the transition from Presidents Reagan to Bush, the incoming people could have insisted President Reagan fire people rather than leave the task to those coming in. The hard feelings felt by those asked to leave remained for years to come.

WHITE HOUSE ORGANIZATION

The White House is difficult to organize because it is a political organization required to perform management tasks. It does so in an environment where staff turnover is high and loyalty is to the President, not to the staff member who hired them. As unique an operation as it is in some ways, a White House is subject to patterns that repeat themselves from one administration to another. It is no accident, for example, that the communications operations of Presidents Nixon, Reagan, and Clinton had striking similarities. No matter what party the President represents or what the goals of their administrations were, all of the Chief Executives needed an effective communications operation to win a second term and to push through policies of interest to them. Each President and his staff developed a communications operation that had strong central direction with the Chief of Staff involved in the development of strategies, a coordinated effort within the process, liaison, and policy shops of the White House, and a planning operation that thought through events several weeks out. The President didn't talk to their predecessors about these operations nor did many of their staff. They all came to the same conclusion about what worked. That pattern repeats itself all over the White House no matter who the incumbent is, what party he represents, or who he hires. All of the successful

[21] Background interview.
[22] Background interview.

REV_00260420

presidents have had a sense of the importance of the White House staff to the success of their administrations and to their effectiveness as Chief Executives.

What An Effective White House Staff Buys for a President

The White House staff extends the reach of a President and increases his capacity to handle the crushing responsibilities of those early weeks and months. "The Chief of Staff, the national security advisor and all the layers involved, function as an extension of the President" observed former Chief of Staff Howard Baker. "They extend his ability to operate, his understanding of issues." They represent "an extension of his own governance," he said.[23] "It's crucial in terms of how he's going to function as President, whether or not he's effective," observed Richard Cheney, former Chief of Staff to President Ford.[24] "A President can do a lot just based on his own personal skills but there's a limit. His reach, his ability to sort of guide and direct the government, to interact with the cabinet, to deal effectively with the Congress, to manage his relationship with the press, all of those are key ingredients to his success." The staff is particularly important because of the difficulty moving policy in Washington. You need people in place because "there's not a lot that he can do by himself" observed former Chief of Staff James Baker observed.[25] "Most of it, he has to do with the iron triangle up there in Washington, D.C.-the press, the Congress, and the political groups."

James Baker spoke of the importance of getting in place a good White House team. "I think it bought us a successful first year, which we then translated into a successful first term... .it was our conclusion - mine and my people's-that the way presidents are judged in terms of success or failure is whether they can move things through the Congress, whether they can accomplish change in legislation. Therefore, we formed this legislative strategy group that was really the most effective operation I think in the White House. Trying to turn policy into law, trying to get things moving through. That was the major operative element in the Reagan White House. That legislative strategy group."[26]

Donald Rumsfeld discussed the importance of the White House staff in ordering the decision-making process. "He has the Congress, the press, and office seekers and friends and people promoting policy positions all trying to get access," he said.[27] "The staff system should discipline that whole process in a way that what comes up has been reasonably rationalized and comes up in a reasonably orderly way .... So [the President] ought to want that White House staff to put a discipline and integrity into the process, create a structure, that will give him reasonable assurance that 'what you see is what you get'," Rumsfeld said. "He has to make the decisions. He needs a staff that will preserve his options in areas where he ought to be the decision-maker. The staff must figure out how to send things forward to him so that the decision that's made not only decides that single issue but decides more than that issue. That way the same kinds of issues don't keep popping back up."

A White House Is President Centered

While White House staff members will deal directly far more with the Chief of Staff than they will with the President, the President sets the tone for a White House and it is to him staff members assign their allegiance, not the Chief of Staff. Marlin Fitzwater, who worked under seven Chiefs during his years in the

---

[23] White House Interview Program, Interview with Howard Baker, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., November 12, 1999.

[24] White House Interview Program, Interview with Richard Cheney, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., July 27, 1999.

[25] James Baker III interview, November 16, 1999.

[26] White House Interview Program, Interview with James A. Baker, III, Martha Joynt Kumar and Terry Sullivan, Houston, TX., July 7, 1999.

[27] Donald Rumsfeld interview.

REV_00260421

Reagan and Bush White Houses, observed. "The Chief of Staff is not as important as the President," he said.[28] "The President is still the ultimate manager. And, if a Chief of Staff doesn't reflect what he wants to do or the way he wants to do it, chaos will result because people will follow the President and not the Chief of Staff." The people who come into the White House are there because of the President, not the Chief of Staff. "You have to remember that every person in the White House has a private constituency; that's how they got there. Somebody liked them and got them there. It seldom is the Chief of Staff. And that private constituency almost always is loyal to the President. If you're the Press Secretary or the deputy Press Secretary or the assistant Press Secretary for the kids in the lower press office, every one of them has a little power base of their own that got them that job with the White House and it's always directly traceable to the President. They worked for the President; their family knows the President; the President liked them, something. But he is the source of all power in the White House."

The President is the central resource in a White House and his office serves as a complementary tool of governing. A President and his staff regularly employ the mystique of the Oval Office as a resource as he seeks to convince others to do what he wants them to do. President Ford explained how he did so: "I'm not sure I was always successful but I tried. When we were having a terrible dispute about delivering some arms to Turkey that they had bought and paid for but the Greek lobby was opposed to, I tried to bring members of the House and Senate down to explain they were both NATO [North Atlantic Treaty Organization] allies."[29] He continued: "I would bring down members of the House and Senate and say this is plain justice. You can't not deliver on what you promised. And we tried to use the Oval Office for that benefit." At the same time, the Oval Office comes between a President and his staff.

The mystique that helps a President as he seeks to persuade others interferes with his getting a honest opinion from many of his staff. "There were many times when people would stand around in the Oval Office, where you're always intimidated, and they'd tell the President what they thought the President wanted to hear and then they'd walk out in the Roosevelt Room across the hall and say, 'Did we do the right thing?'," explained a senior staff member who spent several years working in the White House.[30] "I said, 'Well, you have a reservation about it? Why didn't you tell the President about it?' 'Well, he seemed like he was comfortable with it.' 'Well, he should know you're uncomfortable with it.', the advisor related. "And I'd go back and talk to the President, "I know you met with [OMB Director]and [head of the Council of Economic Advisors] but you should know that you probably got the impression that [CEA advisor] thought this was okay. The truth is [he] has some reservations.'," he said. Without staff willing to serve as an interpreter between the President and those bringing him advice, the Chief Executive can end up with many a false impression.

Organizing a White House Staff Has Several Parts

As former White House Staff Secretary and Personnel chief, Jerry Jones, expresses it: "if you figure that the White House is going to determine whether your government is going to be successful or not, and if I'm right that it is, it is the brain of the Executive Branch, then you've got to do it right," he said.[31] Setting up a White House involves four components: organization, process, values, and people. "You can't start too early and you can't get good enough people....You have to organize it properly. You have to have the proper process. You have to have the proper values and you have to have the proper people. The President is the key to all of that and he's got to know that he has to do that." That means a President must start directly after his election to select his [28] Marlin Fitzwater interview.

[29] President Ford interview.
[30] Background interview.
[31] White House Interview Program, Interview with Jerry Jones, Martha Joynt Kumar, Rosslyn, Virginia, April 11 , 2000.

REV_00260422

key staff. But in order to do so, he needs to be aware of the importance of the staff in his governance. Presidents come to understand their importance after they have been in office, but rarely do they have the understanding as they come to power that they will have later on in their administration. Of recent presidents, only Presidents Bush and Reagan paid attention to their key White House staff picks in their first two weeks. President Clinton did not announce his pick for Chief of Staff until mid-December and the remainder of his White House staff came on board five days before the Inauguration.

STAFF STRUCTURE

The Place of the Chief of Staff

President Gerald Ford discussed the importance of having a Chief of Staff in order to put in place a process for gathering information from Cabinet officers. He said: "Well, that was one of the benefits of shifting to have the Chief of Staff be the filter. He would demand that cabinet officers or others who had a request had to put it in writing, they had to make their best case and that made it easier for me to look at it. Sometimes I would see the cabinet officers; sometimes I would just act on the documents that were submitted. It was a big time saver and I think much more effective the way we ended up."[32]

The priorities of the Chief of Staff are fairly similar no matter who holds the position or their party. Donald Rumsfeld described what others agree are key activities for a Chief. "First is knowing what the priorities are, and the second is getting the right people," he said.[33] "Another area is seeing that problems are dealt with early, preferably before they become major problems. A fourth is to see that you're arranged in a way that you don't have problems you don't need. That involves setting a tone, tempo and behavior pattern that is not going to lead to scandal or crossed wires among departments and the like."

One former Chief of Staff discussed the manner in which a small item can turn around to create a problem you had not even considered arising if you and your President do not have a clear communications line. His President reviewed the list for state dinners and in one instance decided a particular Cabinet officer should be taken off the list. "'He was at the last three,'" the President told his Chief of Staff.[34] "'There are other people who should go to these things,' [the President] said to me. I said fine. I didn't sense any particular reason why that person had to be there at that particular one. I said okay and the list went out." It was not long before the Chief heard from the Cabinet officer. "Well, the cabinet officer went ballistic and said [in attendance would be the] President of [the XYZ] country and it's terribly important I be there. We're doing all this business with them and it's absolutely necessary that I be there.'" The Chief went to talk with the President who held firm in his position the Cabinet member should not be there. The next day the Cabinet member was at the White House and "stays afterwards and says, 'Mr. President, I simply have to be at that dinner.' The President is a good guy, he says, 'Fair enough. I'll figure out how to do it,' never telling him that he was the one that took him off in the first place, never telling him that he was the one that denied it in the second place, not intentionally but unintentionally, leaving the impression that I did it. And the guy believed I did it." The result was: "So, suddenly, I've got a problem with a cabinet officer I don't need, because the President didn't know how to deal with something like that. He didn't understand what the inevitable effects would be of his making that decision that way."

---

[32] President Ford interview.

[33] Donald Rumsfeld interview.

[34] Background interview.

REV_00260423

A Chief of Staff is good for about two years. The reason they generally do not stay longer is because of the enemies they make. Their job is often to say "no" to people, something that earns them the enmity of many. James Baker told President-elect Reagan that he thought a Chief of Staff should most likely stay only two years. "When he asked me to take the job and I took it, I said, 'Mr. President, these jobs are best performed in two-year increments.' The Chief of Staff is a big target," he said.[35] "You walk around with a target on your chest and on your back. You use up your chits pretty quickly, because the job of the Chief of Staff is to say no to people. Everybody wants something from the President, and your job is to say no or to say yes, maybe, but-. You use your political capital up fairly quickly."

One person who worked under several chiefs of staff described the kind of discipline a Chief of Staff needs to exercise: "They can't be a procrastinator. They have to be disciplined enough to get the work done. They also have to be disciplined enough to say no— no, you can't see the President; no, we're not putting that on the schedule. So what I'm trying to get to is a typical politician is sometimes not a very good Chief of Staff because politicians don't like to say no."[36]

The 'Spokes-of-the-Wheel": A Disagreement

There is some disagreement on the idea of the Spokes of the Wheel and its effectiveness as a management mechanism in a White House. Donald Rumsfeld was entirely opposed to it and James Baker a proponent. Rumsfeld describes the concept in the following terms:

> .... .the only thing that happens where the spokes come in to the hub is that it gets overheated and the bearings have to be replaced - and that's going to be either the President or you, or both.... . And we did [get away from it], in relatively short order. You simply have to have a structure where things are reasonably tidy and you know who is doing what, and what the President is saying, to whom, and there's some record of it. You can have a number of things going on off to the side - that are not part of the system - but you start multiplying that and you're just going to have a mess.

James Baker used the term "spokes-of-the-wheel" but he and his staff organized their operation in such a manner as to eliminate the "oh, by the way" aspect of the decision making associated with the concept. What Baker applauded is the inclusion of people and their ideas while at the same time making certain the Chief of Staff and other senior staff are aware of the ideas people are taking to the President and have the commitment of the Chief Executive to hold off on making decisions until the ideas were staffed out in the normal process. He described the system:

> we had a spokes-of-the-wheel type approach to the White House, where any cabinet officer who wanted to see the President could, on twenty-four hours notice. Anybody who wanted to see the President alone could see the President. The President also had a post office box number where people could write him and not have to go through the staff. But the President committed that he would always debrief us about those communications, and he did. For the most part, it worked really, really well.[37]

There were times, though, that someone was able to slip by and get to the President without the Chief of Staff knowing about it. James Baker provided an example.

> I remember one time, Bill Clark in a leaks investigation ordered lie detector tests for everybody following a National Security Council meeting. Well, that meant the Vice President of the United

---

[35] James Baker III interview, July 7, 1999.

[36] Background interview.

[37] James Baker III interview, July 9, 1999.

REV_00260424

> States was going to be strapped up to a lie detector. [George] Shultz, the Secretary of State, said, 'Not me. I'm leaving. Put me on the lie detector. If you've got that little faith in my word, I'm out of here.' I said the same thing. The minute the President - He had okayed that when the National Security Advisor, Bill Clark, had come in to see him one-on-one. But after it was all reviewed, I'll never forget Reagan's saying, 'Bill shouldn't have done that,' picking up the phone and calling Clark.

In order to have control over the process and make certain others can't slip unnoticed to see the President and get his ear and agreement, a Chief of Staff has to assert control over several aspects of White House operations. James Baker speaks of the need to control a variety of operations. "I had the make-the-trains-run-on-time responsibility, the political responsibility. You'll see there [referring to the memorandum] I had the press office, the communications office, congressional liaison, the things that you need to do to make policy successful, to get it through the legislative branch," he said. He controlled: "The paper, the schedule, the politics, the legislative strategy, and the message, and the bully pulpit," he said. By implication, his role in policy was important as well because he controlled the legislative strategy and communications. "The policy wonks can go in there and they can do whatever they want to on policy. They can do it forever. But to implement it, you have to have this side of the equation," he noted. Thus, while he did not control the substance of policy, it would be difficult for anyone to implement it without his involvement.

A Well Run White House System: Orderly, Fair, and Collegial

James Baker: "You have to make sure you have an orderly system, that you have a system that's fair. Otherwise, you start the leaking in the press, one against the other. You have to have a system that lets the President hear all sides. And you have to have one, that if you're going to be running the White House, you have to know what's going on. You have to have a system where you're in the know. We had that."

Marlin Fitzwater discussed the payoff of a system of collegiality. "The Chief of Staff has to manage in a way that makes everybody in the staff believe their access to the President is greater because of it, their reputation is enhanced because of it, their increased attention is greater because of it. Generally that involves a management process of, again, collegiality, of having meetings with various people, talking to legislative folks, talking to communications folks, taking them in to see the President, letting people know that if they go through the Chief of Staff they have more access not less; they have more power not less; they have more prestige not less. If you ever get the idea you have less, you'll find other ways to do it; you'll circumvent them. Everybody in the White House is an egocentric, power-hungry kind of person. You wouldn't be there if you weren't."[38]

Consensus was a key ingredient to the manner in which Robert Rubin worked when he was in the White House and in the Treasury Department as well. David Dreyer, who observed him at close range, commented on the three elements of Rubin's style: "One was that he spoke with great authority. Two [was] he was a fabulous listener and, three, he believed in consensus.... Rubin was independently respected for his achievements in the private sector. He was a great listener and believed, certainly at Treasury when I observed him most closely and at the White House when I often observed him, that everybody—I mean everybody—had some kind of a contribution to make. So, for example, when we worked together at Treasury, he'd have people from the scheduling office in policy meetings. One of them every once in a while would say something that may not have had value in and of itself but which triggered a thought or an impulse on Rubin's part that he didn't get from anybody else. So he was eager to have people—junior, senior; related, unrelated—in the meetings and got the most out of whoever was there. Third, once he had a policy and he had heard everyone and a decision was made, it was imposed and implemented in such a way that people didn't feel they had been rolled over. So in the course of executing a policy, there weren't a lot of people on background trying to establish their independent judgment with the generalists saying if only Rubin had listened it would have gone better."

[38] White House Interview Program, Interview with Marlin Fitzwater, Martha Joynt Kumar, Deale, Maryland, September, 1999.

REV_00260425

White House Staff Size and Office Configuration: Similar Patterns Among Administrations

The similarities in the organization of White House staff are found with greater frequency than are the differences between administrations. The functions performed by staff remain pretty much the same, the numbers of people on the staff and the supplementary help also is fairly constant, the turnover of staff, and the structure of offices is relatively stable.

In the last 30 years the White House staff has ebbed and flowed but one can expect to be working with a total size of around 600. In large measure the differences are more ones in how "staff" is calculated than it is a matter of how many people are sitting in offices in the West Wing and in the Old Executive Office Building. John Rogers, who headed the Office of Management and Administration in the Reagan White House, made the point. "I had a number that I thought was necessary, no matter what Administration. About 600 people are needed for a modern White House staff. Even if you went back to the Reagan Administration, I think we had 361 on the White House payroll, as I recall. Another 400 were somewhere else. Sometimes the number is disguised within details, etc., but 600 turns out to be the average."[39]

While this figure has not been a particularly troublesome one for Republicans who rarely make promises to cut the staff, Democrats have had difficulty reconciling their White House staff needs with the promises they made prior to coming into the White House to cut the staff by 25%. Presidents Carter and Clinton both made such a promise. In order to meet their promises, the presidents made heavy use of interns, volunteers, and detailees from governmental institutions. In the Press Office, for example, on any day in the Lower Press Office where there are six staff members on the payroll, their numbers are supplemented by three interns who are present to relieve them on tasks, such as answering the phones and directing calls. Volunteers work in offices throughout the White House on tasks where they have specific knowledge or skill. The Presidential Correspondence and Messages unit is staffed almost entirely by volunteers, who are typically retirees, as well as interns who are rotated in during the year in three waves corresponding to the semesters and summer terms.

In addition to volunteers for seasonal tasks such as helping to handle the crowd of youngsters at Easter and the decorating of the White House at Christmas, some work on operations within offices. The Office of Presidential Personnel is the spot traditionally relying most heavily on volunteers, most especially at the beginning of an administration when the personnel load is the heaviest. Bob Nash discussed the use of volunteers as the Clinton personnel staff moved from the transition operation into the White House. He said: "There were 220 people total. That included Dick Riley. We got up to about 220 probably around— at least by December 1 I believe we had that many. Most of those people stayed until January 20. On January 20, a little over 100 people came here. Most of those were volunteers. The headhunters came here."[40] In addition, there were lawyers who volunteered their time to aid in the process of vetting the names of nominees. Once a sufficient number of names has been generated and the personnel process has settled into a rhythm of a normal staffing operation, volunteers are used for tasks such as the computer operation.

---

[39] White House Interview Program, Interview with John Rogers, Martha Joynt Kumar, New York, New York, November 10, 1999.

[40] White House Interview Program, Interview with Bob Nash, Martha Joynt Kumar and Terry Sullivan, Washington, D.C., September 1, 2000.

REV_00260426

While the number of staff have hovered at the 600 number, there has been a growth in the number of commissioned staff members and in the degree of specificity of the titles staff have. In the Chief of Staff's operation, for example, Hamilton Jordan carried the title Assistant to the President when he operated as Chief of Staff. Today Chief of Staff John Podesta carries the title and his major assistant carry titles such as Counselor to the Chief of Staff, Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations. A President can expect staff members to stay an average of around 18 months with senior staff remaining around two years.

In the seven offices in our study, there are three that have had the same basic structure over the past four administrations: the Press Office, Personnel, and Counsel. The offices that have been fairly fluid in terms of structure and personnel are the Chief of Staff, Staff Secretary, Communications, Management and Administration. What ties the three offices that have had a consistent structure is the permanence of the tasks and constituencies they deal with. Their numbers have changed over the years, some units have been added in each, and staff titles have grown, but the offices perform similar functions in each administration. They serve the needs of the press corps following the President, staff up an administration, and vet nominees as well as handle legal issues coming into a White House. The structure of the offices of Chief of Staff, Staff Secretary, Communications, and Management and Administration depend upon, first, the choice of the President in selecting a Chief and then he in turn generally chooses those heading the other three offices. More than is so with the first three offices, these three vary substantially in their structure from the time of the Reagan White House to the Clinton one. Each of the offices has existed during most of the last fifteen years but sometimes not as an independent office.

Decisions and Routines

Establishing Routines

A well run White House depends upon an established process of routines relating to the flow of information and the way decisions are made. Roger Porter, who worked in four of the last six administrations observed: "There needs to be established a set of routines that people understand and are comfortable with that allow a whole series of tasks to be performed without an enormous amount of stress and hardship. Once those routines get established and they are made efficient then they help the whole flow of the place."[41] He commented that: "in the absence of those routines getting established then you have an enormous number of fire drills where something comes up and you discover that we're behind and we have to catch up, we have to do things in hurry and then you pull every one off. You feel like you're in an organization that is staggering from one deadline to another." If you can get your routines in place then you can devote time and energy to the substance of problems. Porter said: "The less efficient routines that have gotten established then the more you're going to be doing these fire drills that are very draining and very exhausting. When you come to the end of a fire drill, you're sort of tired and you say I wish we had one more day because we got 90 per cent of the way there but we didn't get 100 per cent of the way there." When you have operations routinized, problems are flagged earlier and everything works more smoothly.

There are limitations to the degree to which routines and order can be imposed on the staff. As one who worked in the White House for 12 years under seven chiefs of staff, Marlin Fitzwater described what happens when a Chief of Staff institutes a system of line management. "Occasionally you'll find a Chief of Staff who tries to set up a line staff management relationship that says so-and-so reports to the assistant for policy and the assistant for policy reports to the domestic czar; the domestic czar reports to the Chief of Staff [41] White House Interview Program, Interview with Roger Porter, Martha Joynt Kumar, Cambridge, MA., October 22, 1999.

REV_00260427

TABLE OF CONTENTS

FORCES WORKING AGAINST A SMOOTH TRANSITION INTO THE WHITE HOUSE 2
It Takes A President Time to Appreciate the Place of Staff 2
The White House as an Artificial Construct 2
The Required Four Types of Knowledge: Campaign, President, Policy, & White House 3
Campaign People 3
Personal Presidential Choices 4
Substantive Policy People 5
People with White House Experience 5
Discovering Knowledgeable Insiders 6
Coming In Tired 7
Early Mistakes Cost Valuable Energy 7
Emptying Out the Offices 8

WHITE HOUSE ORGANIZATION 9
What An Effective White House Staff Buys for a President 10
A White House Is President Centered 10
Organizing a White House Staff Has Several Parts 11
Staff Structure 12
The Place of the Chief of Staff 12
The 'Spokes-of-the-Wheel": A Disagreement 13
A Well Run White House System: Orderly, Fair, and Collegial 14
White House Staff Size and Office Configuration: Similar Patterns Among Administrations 15
Decisions and Routines 16
Establishing Routines 16
Implementation of Decisions 17
Handling Crises 17
Relationships 18
The White House as a Complex Web of Interrelationships 18
Relations with the Congress 19
Relations with the Cabinet 20
Relationships with the First Lady and the Vice President 21
Outsiders as Sounding Boards 22

THE PRESSURES ASSOCIATED WITH WHITE HOUSE WORK LIFE 22
Working in a White House 23
Constantly on the Job 24
Physical Stress 25
Recognizing Burnout 25
Getting It Right 26
Hostile Political Climate 26
Scrutiny 27
No Margin Of Error 27

REDUCING THE SLOPE OF THE LEARNING CURVE 28

REV_00260410

and so forth," he said.[42] "They always fail because people won't obey the lines of authority. First of all, they are not there to make a career of it. They are there for a year or two. They are there for their own thing and, again, everybody's looking to the President. So people just tear that apart. You can see it happening as sure as anything." Establishing order is attractive as a concept but difficult to develop and maintain.

Implementation of Decisions

One recurring area of weakness in a White House is the implementation of decisions already reached. Former Clinton Chief of Staff Mack McLarty said that in his discussions with those who previously served in the position, a recurring theme of their conversations was the importance of implementation of decisions already reached. There was "a pretty good theme of follow-through and execution with the cabinet, not just to get certain policies decided on but to get them implemented; that they felt there was a weakness of actually getting things implemented and executed," he said.[43] In the Clinton White House, the implementation of decisions was a secondary concern to get them made in the first place. "That was something that we focused on early on but we didn't end up doing too much of that. That tended to be more honor system," someone familiar with the process commented.[44] "In other words, if the President would send something back, he would send some document back and there'd be a question on it— Bruce Reed, what about blank— it would more be the case that we would depend on Bruce Reed sending an answer back than that we would be calling Bruce and saying what about that. I don't think that there was particularly a conceptual or a principal reason for that as much as it was just a time thing." What they did deliver "were a lot of information memos, not a lot in percentage terms but there were a lot of information memos that we would get in a given period of time or a week that would be in response to things that the President had asked. Occasionally he would ask about something— Bob Rubin or Gene Sperling or somebody would see him in some other meeting and give him an answer orally." They did not set up a system for formally tracking decisions. " We thought about trying to do a real serious tracking system and we just ended up thinking that the cost-benefit analysis part of it didn't warrant it; there were undoubtedly some things that slipped through the cracks but not important enough to kind of do this whole time-intensive thing. Again, there was a period there where we kind of tried to do a little of that but we ended up not really following it through very actively."

Handling Crises

There is a common approach to handling crises whether the administration is Democratic or Republican and the crisis domestic or foreign policy. The Chief of Staff has the role of managing the team and making certain a group is tasked with dealing with a crisis allowing the remainder of the White House staff to handle their tasks. Leon Panetta observed: "The role of a Chief of Staff is not so much a management position as a battlefield position in that you have a certain mission that you want to accomplish for the day with the President that's laid out for that day. In the process of trying to do that mission you suddenly will find yourself under fire with mortar shells, artillery shells coming in on all kinds of crises. What can happen is the troops can panic because of those kinds of events taking place and you lose sight of the larger mission that you have to accomplish. So what you have to do is you have to have the discipline to be able to handle that kind of incoming fire and yet make sure the troops keep their eye on the mission and keep.... So to do that, if a crisis is hitting and something breaks, normally what I would do is set up almost a kind of crisis task force team immediately on that issue so that I could say to the rest of the staff you do your thing; we've got control of this."[45] He continued: "What you want to do is make sure that that's pulled out of the normal operation so

---

[42] Marlin Fitzwater interview.

[43] White House Interview Program, Interview with Thomas McLarty, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., November 16, 1999.

[44] Background interview.

[45] White House Interview Program, Interview with Leon Panetta, Martha Joynt Kumar, Monterey Bay, CA., May 4, 2000.

REV_00260428

that there is a separate kind of focus on that. So you can basically say that crisis is being handled, these are people that are involved with it and it doesn't tie up the rest of the operation."

Watergate made governing difficult as the attention of the senior staff and the Cabinet officers as well was directed towards dealing with the crisis. Since so much of the time of the principals was consumed by Watergate related issues, Chief of Staff Alexander Haig had a system that relied heavily on the deputies to move the operations of government. He said:

> Every day the staff went over the business of the country and the designated Cabinet members joined us on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. A good part of those meetings was consumed with just handling the ongoing public relations crisis. It doesn't take long to realize that the principals walked out of these meetings and into the maelstrom and by the end of the day hadn't done what the President wanted done. So I put a substructure together of the principals' key assistants, their deputies, or their hand-picked agents. My deputy in turn ran that meeting for me. He would sit in on the earlier principals' meeting, make notes on everything that was decided on, and then meet with the subgroup who in turn would and could spend all day getting the decisions implemented. That modified system began to work very well. I would pursue such a system today, Watergate or no Watergate crisis. It was both efficient and built better teamwork.[46]

During crises, the Chief of Staff sometimes puts in place a group of people he can contact who will offer him feedback on the issues related to the crisis. In addition to his deputies on whom he relied for their attention to the details of running the government, Alexander Haig had a group of lawyers from outside of Washington with whom he discussed the Watergate situation. He said: "because of my set of problems during Watergate, I had legal people, constitutional lawyers, experienced political lawyers, criminal lawyers, all kinds. That included men like Maurice Liebman from Chicago. He was a lovely, wonderful man although he was a Democrat at heart. I also brought in a professor from Duke University and a professor from Chicago; a judge from Chicago." They came in and provided him with an outside perspective, something presidents do as well.

RELATIONSHIPS

The White House as a Complex Web of Interrelationships

A good clue to the complicated interrelationships surrounding a White House can be found in something so simple as the arrangements for washing the windows. Chris Hicks, who headed the Office of Management and Administration noted: "if you paint that colonnade along the Rose Garden, where the press room is on the other side, GSA [General Service Administration] is responsible for painting to the glass doors that go in to the mansion and washing the windows on those doors, the French doors. But the residence staff is responsible on the other side of the glass. It's the same pane of glass."[47] The White House occupies eighteen acres and has several agencies and departments in charge of operations found there. The Department of Interior is involved in the building because the Residence is a national park, President's Park, maintained by the National Park Service. The General Service Administration maintains the property, including making repairs to the West and East wings, which are not part of President's Park. The Navy operates the White House mess as well as Camp David, the Secret Service establishes and maintains security for the President and the grounds, the White House Communications Agency – the old Army Signal Corps – provides sound for presidential events and sometimes film as well. The residence staff, some on detail from [46] White House Interview Program, Interview with Alexander Haig, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., December 22, 1999.

[47] White House Interview Program, Interview with Christopher Hicks, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., November 18, 1999.

REV_00260429

the Interior Department, maintain the house itself and perform the duties incidental to running the White House as a home.

The operations of the White House are carried out by an infrastructure of people who have little visibility yet they are crucial to making the operations work. Often their work must be done on an emergency basis and under less than ideal conditions. When President Bush and Margaret Thatches were speaking in Aspen, Colorado on the occasion of the anniversary of the Aspen Institute, Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait. "So we have two heads of state, both of whom need to be communicating with their respective governments and other heads of state and we're managing it out of a Winnebago parked halfway up a mountaintop," commented Bonnie Newman who served as director of the Office of Management and Administration.[48] "You've got people actually holding hand-held transmitters to keep that signal going. That's what folks don't appreciate, a lot of that background stuff, and that it's apt to be a nineteen-year-old private in the army who is operating the TelePrompTer from the basement of some hotel while a President is making a very significant speech."

The web of relationships in a White House most often predate the incumbents and are impervious to the efforts of the temporary inhabitants to get control of their operations. Hicks described the origins of the Signal Corps entry into the White House. "I never got control of the military office or the Signal phone system. That started during the [Franklin] Roosevelt Administration. Talk about detailees. During World War II it was decided they needed to be able to have President Roosevelt get in touch with Winston Churchill anytime he wanted so the Defense Department detailed over these people from the Army Signal Corps and they've stayed ever since."[49]

Relations with the Congress

Whether they are Chiefs of Staff or directors of Personnel, or heads of the Office of Legislative Affairs, senior White House staff spend a great deal of time managing the President's relations with members of Congress and handling with them issues important to the Chief Executive. It is a central aspect of the lives of all three of those occupying the above posts. Kenneth Duberstein, who worked in the Legislative Affairs unit, explained the manner in which in the area of appointments the Chief of Staff, Legislative Affairs and Personnel come together to work with people on the Hill.[50]

> That requires a close coordination between personnel and the congressional relations staff. We certainly had it at the beginning of the administration and at the end of the Reagan Administration with Bob Tuttle. One of the legislative affairs people on the Senate side sat in on all final personnel meetings. As personnel decisions went to the President, they were reviewed first by the Chief of Staff and then by the President but sitting in the room as the personnel head made his pitch to the President was the Chief of Staff. The other person who had been consulted in advance was the head of congressional relations. That's the way I think it should work. The personnel office [head] obviously has done his or her personal checks with the political affairs office but the congressional relations person has to take the lead on the Hill.

The object of passing names by people on the Hill is to discover political problems you might otherwise not discover though you will wish you did. Duberstein continued:

> It would have to go to the Hill and say, "Here are the people we are thinking about. I don't know if you know any of these folks. Do you have any sense of them? This is not a final decision that's going [48] White House Interview Program, Interview with Bonnie J. Newman, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., January 26, 2000.

---

[49] Christopher Hicks interview, November 18, 1999.

[50] White House Interview Program, Interview with Kenneth Duberstein, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., August 12, 1999.

REV_00260430

> to the President. Here are the three candidates; here is the short list." They may say he is terrific or she is wonderful or I never heard of this one. "Well, that person is close to ex-senator— it's not from your state, it's from another state. That's where the recommendation came from. Oh. I'll check it out." That's what you're looking for. You're looking for pitfalls. You're not looking for a veto; you're looking for pitfalls. You're looking to say, "Oh. There may be a problem here," separate and apart from the FBI stuff. Political problems; political vetting. You're saving the President problems because if in fact he goes forward with an intent to nominate and a nomination and then it blows up, you are spending chips that you're going to need elsewhere.

Chase Untermeyer, who headed the Personnel office in the Bush Administration, went to the Hill when he was asked to do so or when he explained policy. "If summoned would clearly be that occasion by a senator who was upset, wanted to know why you weren't naming somebody he wanted named or more people from his state. So my job was to sit there and listen," Untermeyer said.[51] "And I remember I had several good meetings with Senator [Claiborne] Pell who at the time was the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee on ambassadorships since that is always very sensitive and to let him know what the administration was planning to do on ambassadorships."

Chief of Staff James Baker discussed the importance for the Chief of Staff going up to the Hill to discuss matters important to members of Congress. He stressed the importance for White House staff to remember their position as staff, most especially in relation to those serving in elected political office. He said: "But I went up there. Occasionally I would see some members of Congress in my office. Sometimes they would come down. But it's a hell of a lot better for you to go to them. They're committee chairmen. You're just a staff person. You're really powerful, but every bit of that power is derivative from the President. The minute you forget that you get in trouble," Baker commented.[52]

Relations with the Hill are shaped by the President himself, particularly those Chief Executives who are interested in establishing good personal relationships with members. Leon Panetta discussed his view of presidents from his vantage point as chairman of the Budget Committee. "The other thing is Reagan also had a tremendous relationship with the American people and his ability to use the bully pulpit. So he could bring an awful lot of pressure down on you by going directly to the public, probably more so than almost anybody I've seen even including Clinton," he commented.[53] "The ability to generate in the public— suddenly the willingness to call a member of Congress or do something as a result of the speech. We'd always wait and see kind of that onslaught coming. So a combination of his personality plus his kind of relationship with the American people was very powerful." Thus, for Reagan, his relationship with members of Congress was personal both in terms of his work and that of his staff in their relations with individuals on the Hill and it was institutional as well as with a political and communications machine capable of creating pressure on both House members and Senators in an effort to spur them into particular actions.

Relations with the Cabinet

Cabinet relations are not simple ones for anyone, the President included. President Ford indicated he at first thought he would have open access to Cabinet members but soon he found that was not a realistic policy. He needed a filter to protect himself. "I started out with the concept that any cabinet member or top executive in the administration could have direct access to me. In effect, that undercut the role of the Chief of Staff," he said. "I shortly found out that was impractical. A President doesn't have that much time every day to meet with the various cabinet officers and other top people. You've got to have the Chief of Staff as

---

[51] White House Interview Program, Interview with Chase Untermeyer, Martha Joynt Kumar, Houston, TX., July 6, 1999.

[52] White House Interview Program, Interview with James A. Baker, III, Martha Joynt Kumar, Houston, TX., November 16, 2000.

[53] Leon Panetta interview.

REV_00260431

sort of a filtering spot. I changed the policy, I guess it was, within two months." A President must be careful, though, that when he has the Chief of Staff as the filter, the Chief does so as an "honest broker" representing the articulated views of the Cabinet secretaries and not his own view.

Often the relations between the Chief of Staff and the Cabinet secretaries involve discipline or stroking. One person who watched the operations of several Cabinet secretaries in their relations with the White House observed: "And it's usually either over significant policy or it might be discipline. 'Okay, you're a loose cannon out there; come in to my office, shut the door and we'll argue about it. We want you toeing the line on this thing or whatever'," the person commented.[54] He then continued. "Jack Kemp was probably the best example... It was when he would make utterances about economic policy. Come on; you're job is HUD. Stay focused on HUD. Don't talk about Latvia and Estonia. Or don't criticize us." The Cabinet hear from others on the White House staff in addition to the Chief of Staff.

> Now during the Reagan Administration it was more Mike Deaver disciplining the cabinet— stay on message; stay on message; stay on message— "I understand that you met with the press the other day and you did not talk about our tax cut plan. Every time you talk to the press talk about our tax cut plan. I don't care what else you're talking about." So there was discipline and I think that comes from the Chief of Staff. The other thing a Chief of Staff should do is be sensitive to when a cabinet member feels abused because inevitably that will get to the President. So you want to try to address it so the President doesn't have to. Or tell the President that so and so feels unloved today or something like that and the President will pick up the phone and call the cabinet member and then they feel loved.

Relationships with the First Lady and the Vice President

For many working in a White House, there are several individuals and groups involved in the work you are doing. In all White Houses, the staff think through their relationships with the First Lady as well as the Vice-President. Leon Panetta discussed the importance of having the support of all three people when you come into a White House. "I think it's absolutely essential in a job like Chief of Staff you have to have the full support and confidence of the President, even beyond that the respect and confidence of the first lady and the Vice President because you need to have the ability to make some very tough decisions and some crucial decisions. If you're worried that every step you take you're going to be undercut by those above you because they don't trust your judgment then you're in trouble," he said.[55] "The first and foremost quality that is essential is trust. You've got to have their trust... .when I went in as Chief of Staff I went in and said to the President, I have to have your full support because there are some decisions that have to be made and I need to make sure that I have your full support and trust in that process. I said the same thing to the First Lady as well as the Vice President." Don Baer, who served as the head of the Office of Strategic Planning and Communications, had to think through the needs of the President and then those of the offices of the First Lady, the Vice President, and Cabinet officers. In discussing the pressures associated with his office and position, he observed: "You have to make sure you're managing the relationships with the First Lady and her operation and the Vice President and his operation or cabinet secretaries who want to or interest groups. It's a lot [of pressure]," observed Don Baer of the operations of the Office of Strategic Planning and Communications.[56]

Those are relationships that can harm a staff member more than they can help them. Many of the staff members interviewed in talking about why a particular staff member left, remarked the person "got crossways

---

[54] Background interview.
[55] Leon Panetta interview.
[56] Don Baer interview.

REV_00260432

with the First Lady." That was a theme that came up with people in the Reagan White House and it arose in the Clinton White House in terms of the First Lady being involved in hiring staff members. Senior staff members were interviewed by Hillary Clinton as well as by President Clinton when they came to work at the White House. For Panetta and others, the interview was an opportunity to make certain what their relationships would be and to bring on board the First Lady and Vice-President as well as the President.

Outsiders as Sounding Boards

In addition to Alexander Haig who used a sounding board of outsiders during Watergate, there are those in the White House who confer regularly with a group of people who do not work in the government. Tom Griscom, Director of Communications in the Reagan White House when Howard Baker was Chief of Staff, commented on the group of people he assembled. "One of the things I did was have an informal group that I would talk to every week just to make sure you don't lose perspective," he commented.

> I never put the whole group together. A lot of times, because of the press of business, they were telephone conversations. Sometimes you could sneak away for a little bit during lunch and catch up. But they were not formal sessions; they were more informal, give-and-take. They worked because it was all kept private. This was not trying to say, 'Look who I can talk to,' or somebody on the outside saying, 'Well, they're asking my advice.' I think that was important. It was really designed to understand what we're doing right; what we're doing wrong. That's how they always started. The first piece of advice most of them gave— and they were right— is you will come in there with your breath taken away when you look at the magnitude of what you have to deal with. And you come in from the outside and you're not tainted by the White House, but within a short period of time you'll get consumed. What you'll find is that your ability to carve out any time to think and look ahead will go away. Sure enough, that's what happened. You get so consumed by the day-to-day management that you stop and want to know where you are, how you are doing and what you are missing.[57]

While others commended the efforts made by White House staff to get a view from outside of the building, few were able to do so. Very few people found they had time to step back and assess where they were or look backward at what they had done and how they could improve their operation. Occasionally White House staff will have a retreat of some sort where they assess their operations, as the Press Office staff did during the Ford Administration, but such meetings do not take place on a regular basis. In the Clinton White House there were assessments of particular events and how a week went in terms of its being a good or a bad one for the administration, but presidents and their staffs do not seem able to find time to assess their operations, only the outcomes from them.

THE PRESSURES ASSOCIATED WITH WHITE HOUSE WORK LIFE

"When they come to the White House there's no forty-hour week and they shouldn't expect it," said President Gerald Ford.[58] "It has to be almost a twenty-four-hour-a-day job for both the President and the staff." The White House is a place where the work load is heavy, the hours long, the pressures great, and the benefits many fold. As hard as people say the work is, few would trade the time they spent working in the [57] Thomas Griscom interview.

[58] Gerald Ford interview.

REV_00260433

White House nor is there a shortage of people wanting to work there. Donald Rumsfeld expressed the view of many that their service involved dual aspects. He related his experience:

> in the White House you are very much at the center of things. There is an amazing flow of information. It is stimulating, because there's so much pressure. In my case, it was working with just a truly wonderful human being; a fine, decent, honorable, good person. The disadvantages for me—and I don't know that it's universal—is that some people like being an assistant and others don't. The disadvantage for me was that I had run large organizations and then I found myself back as an assistant. And I knew, as anyone in that job ought to know, that no one really cares what you think. What they really want to know when they ask you a question is what the President thinks. Therefore you constantly have to answer, respond and behave in a way that reflects what you believe to be the President's thinking and the President's best interest. That causes a change in how you handle yourself. You're not as natural. You're not as responsive. You're not as open, because you're trying to do it in a way that serves him and his presidency. That is a very different kind of a job than running something yourself. So it has those pluses and those minuses.[59]

WORKING IN A WHITE HOUSE

The pressures relate to the volume and variety of the work, the heavy commitment of hours and days, the generous amount of criticism directed towards the President and individual White House staff members, and the narrow margin of error allowed to those working for the President. Though less numerous than the pressures, the benefits are an important component of White House work life. They revolve around the importance of and respect accorded to White House work as well as having a part in history as it is made.

Working in a White House has clear rewards, most especially because it is interesting and important work. "It's exciting," said Abner Mikva. "You're at the point of some very important decisions. Whether you're making them or not, you're involved in the decisional process. You're dealing with interesting people, interesting situations. There just was not a single boring moment that I had."[60] Satisfaction comes with the work and with one's place in history as well. James Fetig, who served as the liaison to the Press Office for the National Security Council, commented: "The benefit as a citizen is to understand the glory of this republic and how it works, to have a chance to serve the American people and serve the Constitution and the highest office of the land first-hand, personally; to be there, to be part of history; to stand in places where history has been made. It's a very uplifting and motivating thing to do. When you walk through the gate of the White House every morning, you have no question of why you're at work. Getting motivated to go to work at the White House was never an issue, never a problem whatsoever. It was a delight to do no matter how frustrating it could be day by day, hour by hour."

Pete Roussel discussed his first day on the job as a Deputy Press Secretary, which gives life to the assertion that one witnessed history at close quarters and then also the pressure that comes with such a position. He was called in to see Chief of Staff James Baker who told him he was to get on a plane for Phoenix, Arizona. Roussel related that Baker told him:

> Tomorrow morning at ten a.m. the President is going to walk into the briefing room here and announce the appointment of a woman named Sandra Day O'Connor to the United States Supreme Court, a historic appointment; the first female justice," he said. 'I just hung up with her. She's going to be swamped with press when this gets out. I've told her you're on the way; you'll handle it.' At that point I had two thoughts: basically the first one was, 'hey pal, your first day here and you've been [59] White House Interview Program, Interview with Donald Rumsfeld, Martha Joynt Kumar, Chicago, Il., April 25, 2000.

[60] White House Interview Program, Interview with Abner Mikva, Martha Joynt Kumar and Terry Sullivan, Chicago, Il., April 26, 2000.

REV_00260434

> handed an assignment that will never happen again; you'd been given a front row on history in a sense.' The second thought I had was a much less positive one and it was emphasized to me by Baker as I was walking out the door and—this goes to the whole issue of working with the press in the White House—what he basically said was in essence, these weren't his exact words, 'Right now only a handful of people know about this. You can count them on your hands. So if this gets out before ten a.m. tomorrow morning, good luck.' Not a real reassuring thought at that point knowing that such things can happen.[61]

There is pressure that comes with knowing the information should not come out and that you will be held responsible if it does.

People work in a White House at the senior level rarely serve out a full four year term with the President working in the same job. They either leave or they shift from one position to another as happened in the current administration with Robert Rubin, George Stephanopoulos, Bruce Lindsey, Gene Sperling, Leon Panetta, Bruce Reed, Rahm Emanuel, and Sylvia Matthews. In fact, Matthews, Sperling, Lindsey, and Reed are still in the Clinton White House, though no one is in the same position he or she held in January 1993. Most who work in a White House expect to work two years and then leave for another post outside of the building. Though the benefits of working there are many, the pressures are indeed great and the toll service in a White House takes is heavy in terms of one's time, energy, and family and personal life.

CONSTANTLY ON THE JOB

White House working hours are long no matter what the administration nor the office one works in. Alexander Haig described the heavy commitment of time he made when he worked in the White House as Chief of Staff. "I usually was in by seven and I never went home before midnight seven days a week. I did that for two years," he said.[62] In addition to his two years observing that schedule when he served as Chief of Staff, Haig followed the same schedule earlier for his four years serving as the deputy to National Security Adviser Henry Kissinger. In fact, Haig commented, it was worse working for Kissinger:

> because Henry used to have his ideas at night. He would call me at one, two o'clock in the morning, three o'clock in the morning and I had just gotten home. He didn't sleep but four hours a night. I didn't sleep but three hours a night. And I did that for seven years. That's the kind of job it is and that's why you have to change. People do get burnout.

While few worked the hours Alexander Haig observed, a normal White House day involves little time for oneself or one's family. Marlin Fitzwater discussed the demands of a day and observed that you really have only about two hours to yourself when you work at the White House. He said:

> You usually leave about 7:30 or 8:00. This is the worst part. You get home at 9:00—it takes an hour to get home—have a drink and you realize that you have to be in bed by 11:00 in order to have enough sleep to deal with the next day. So basically your entire private life is boiled down to between 9:00 and 11:00. That's tough to take. That's the part that people can't understand. People ask, what's it like to work in the White House? How many hours do you work? But the idea that there's really only two hours a day where you can deal with yourself or your family, that's the tough part.[63]

The constant pressure to be at the White House means people have little time to spend with their families. Ron Nessen discussed the lack of time he had with his child. "I left home at 6:30, as I said, and I,

---

[61] Pete Roussel interview.

[62] White House Interview Program, Interview with Alexander Haig, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., December 22, 2000.

[63] Marlin Fitzwater interview.

REV_00260435

usually because I had this thing about returning phone calls, got home at 9:30 or 10:00 or later if there was something going on. My son was eighteen months old then. I never saw him. Sometimes I'd wake him up at 11:00 to play with him because that was the only time I'd see him."[64] Phillip Brady talked about the illusion for young children their father is not around. "One night I put my oldest son to bed," he said. "It was on a Sunday night. I put him to bed and he said without any sense of sarcasm, 'See you next week, Dad.' I was home all that next week; it was just that I'd leave before he got up and I got home after he went to bed. So the only time I could possibly see him was on the weekend when we weren't traveling."[65]

PHYSICAL STRESS

White House work has a physical dimension to it. James Fetig, who was the press officer for the National Security Council working with the Press Office, discussed the physical difficulties inherent in working in a White House. "The most difficult thing that anybody ought to know when they come in is going to be physical," he said. "It's the lack of sleep. The phone rings most nights and you almost never have a night of uninterrupted sleep. You start averaging four to five hours of sleep and the rest of the time you're at work."[66]

Margita White, who headed the Office of Communications, provides us with an example of the physical toll of White House work. It involved an offer, which she accepted, to take a position on the Federal Communications Commission.

> I came back on Air Force One three-thirty in the morning—I had been on Air Force One or the press plane back and forth—from a six-state trip, regional briefings and what have you. I got home about three-thirty or four, went to bed, got up at six, knocked over a full pot of coffee on my leg, was taken in to the shower with cold water and then to the emergency room and I had second-degree burns all the way down my leg. As they peeled off the skin and I was in the emergency room, I had a phone call from Dick Whalley who was then the chairman of the FCC. He [Dick Whalley] said I just want Margita to know what I did. He talked to my ex-husband and he [Dick Whalley] had just found out that there was going to be a vacancy on the FCC and he had gone to the White House and said I want Margita White. When I came to, I learned about this. I thought, you know, I think I want to do that.[67]

RECOGNIZING BURNOUT

There is no optimum amount of time to spend working at the White House but burnout is a real factor. The difficulty with burnout is people rarely recognize it in themselves. Accompanying the burnout factor is what Chase Untermeyer dubs the "White House Narcotic." if a person is on the White House staff that at some point they should want to leave otherwise they run a couple of risks. One of which is White House burnout. The other is sort of the opposite, which you can call the White House narcotic, the sense that this is all too wonderful, I can't possibly leave it; I can't possibly leave being in a situation in which if you walk into the White House Mess you see famous people or various cabinet secretaries; or out on the lawn: 'There are all these flags today. I wonder who's coming?' Or walking through the lobby of the West Wing: 'What movie

---

[64] Ron Nessen interview.

[65] White House Interview Program, Interview with Phillip Brady, Martha Joynt Kumar, McLean, VA., August 17, 1999.

[66] White House Interview Program, Interview with James Fetig, Martha Joynt Kumar, Rockville, MD., February 5, 1999.

[67] White House Interview Program, Interview with Margita White, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., October 26, 1999.

REV_00260436

star will I see?' All of that is wonderful to the degree of telling stories at the Thanksgiving dinner table but from the point of view of really doing anything with your life I think it's of limited value."[68]

People on their own rarely recognize they are reaching the point of burnout but when they do, the President should honor their request to leave. Most often in a White House, others have to recognize it for them. "If it's your job to oversee fifteen people, if you're the Chief of Staff or the deputy Chief of Staff, you can figure out pretty quickly– there's so much happening so quick. There's so much performance going on," said one person who worked in a senior level White House position.[69] "It doesn't take you long to evaluate it. It doesn't mean somebody makes one mistake and they're gone but you can pick it up pretty quickly. Attitude is a big thing; energy level, enthusiasm. And you have to differentiate between success and failure. The success/failure issue as opposed to the effectiveness/energy/enthusiasm issue. There are going to be successes and failures." Those at the top have to be aware of the need to recognize burnout in others as well as in themselves.

GETTING IT RIGHT

Did you get it right? Is the President satisfied with what you did, if indeed your work rises to his level of attention. Don Baer described the pressure associated with getting it right. There is "a lot of pressure and stress on you about in the meantime how did the thing that you planned a week ago play today when the President went out and did it. How did it play in the press? Did all the pieces of it fit together and go the way you had planned? How did he feel about it because you don't always have the time [to go over it] in specifics and even if you do he's not going to remember most of them to tell him exactly what he's doing and why he's doing it and what his place in all this is; here's what he's going to say. What did he want to say? Did it come out the way he thought it would?" Those are all concerns associated with the job you are doing for the President.

Ann Lewis indicated that in addition to the physical strain of working the number of hours one does in a White House, there is an emotional strain that comes with the impact of your work. "The second is the emotional strain when everything you may say and do is enormously important, is watched so closely, and has potentially the impact that a White House statement does."[70] Jody Powell discussed the pressure of getting things right. "There's a tremendous amount of pressure to get things right, to not make a problem worse or create a new problem because you either got it wrong in terms of understanding it or you said it wrong. I didn't find that particularly onerous but it is probably the biggest source of pressure, that you need to be careful. You have to be careful but you can't be so careful that you're not communicating either. So you're balancing those two things."[71]

HOSTILE POLITICAL CLIMATE

An added stress in the Clinton White House and was a factor of somewhat lesser importance in the Reagan and Bush White Houses was that associated with a plethora of lawsuits and their attendant subpoenas requiring people appear on the Hill and before grand juries. Ann Lewis indicated you need to add in these pressures when considering the stresses of White House work life. "You add to that being in, as we are, a hostile political climate in which the danger of lawsuits, special investigators, having your notes or papers sort

[68] White House Interview Program, Interview with Chase Untermeyer, Martha Joynt Kumar, Houston, TX., July 6, 1999.
[69] Background interview.
[70] White House Interview Program, Interview with Ann Lewis, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., July 9, 1999.
[71] White House Interview Program, Interview with Jody Powell, Washington, D.C., August 2, 2000.

REV_00260437

ABOUT THE AUTHOR 1
Contact Information: 1
ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT 2
The White House Interview Program 2
Nomination Forms Online 2
THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT REPORT SERIES 3
General Series 3
White House Staff Series 3

REV_00260411

of called in on any particular issue is ever present," she said.[72] "I think the biggest impact is that it takes time away from positive things. You're in a defensive mode much of the day. The things that it does, which I actually think are not bad, are that you remember to think all decisions through very carefully. You have a much more structured decisionmaking process than I think you would if you didn't always think someone was looking over your shoulder or tomorrow you'll get a subpoena on that or you'll see it in the Washington Post or whatever." At the same time the process of making decisions was improved, it was accompanied by a reluctance to take risks. "I think it slowed things down tremendously and made it more difficult and I think people were a lot more cautious sometimes than they needed to be just because it was easier to do nothing because nothing could be criticized than it would be to take a risk and do something even if it wasn't that much of a risk."

SCRUTINY

With litigation now so important a factor in White House work life, there has been something of a common understanding among staff that one limits the amount of notes one takes. "There a lot of times when somebody would literally take out a pen and start writing something and someone would say, 'What are you writing?' And people going, 'Oh. You're right,'" said Jodie Torkelson.[73]

> It wasn't— yes, I think everybody just knew that writing in this administration turned out to be deadly to people and nobody wanted to get subpoenaed. I had staff that got subpoenas because they took a phone message from David Watkins and they had David Watkins written down on one of those pads that make the little Xerox copy. When they did a subpoena for anything that had to do with David Watkins and travel office, whatever, they ended up having to be subpoenaed and they had to go and testify all because they wrote the guy's name down because he called about his health benefits. That's all it was. So it wasn't like it was irrational behavior; it was so silly the kinds of people that were getting dragged in to things for the dumbest of reasons that no one felt secure writing anything down. You just didn't. If you didn't want to have a legal bill, you didn't take a note.

Scrutiny of those working in a White House can be so severe even when you are saying nothing you are indicating an answer. Ron Nessen discussed the kind of scrutiny the words of a Press Secretary receive from the reporters listening in the briefing. "One time a reporter asked me about rumors that Bill Simon was going to resign as Secretary of the Treasury or he was going to be fired as Secretary of Treasury. And there was some discussion in the White House of whether he was going to stay or go. I knew about the discussion. The reporter said what about the rumors that Simon's going to be fired or something. I was trying to think how am I going to answer this; I don't want to lie about it. There is some talk but nothing's decided. So I just took a second to think about what I was going to say and the reporter starts scribbling down wildly because of this long pause, this long pause when I was thinking of what I was going to say. He interpreted that to mean something. There's a lot of scrutiny," he said." You have to be careful what you don't say or how quickly you say it."

NO MARGIN OF ERROR

Ray Jenkins spoke of pressures in addition to the time one spends at the White House. He said: "It is a high-stress job but it is high stress not because of the long hours but because there is absolutely no margin for error whatsoever. Now you're going to make errors and then you spend the rest of your time correcting

---

[72] Ann Lewis interview, July 7, 1999.

[73] Jodie Torkelson interview.

REV_00260438

but you just have to remember that once a problem reaches the White House basically it has no solution. If it had a solution it would have been solved at some level lower down. It's so often a roll of the dice. Sometimes you roll seven and sometimes you roll eleven. The stress is not so much from the long hours—because the hours literally are twenty-four hours a day. It doesn't matter if you're at the White House or whether you're at home or in San Francisco or where. The stress arises from the burden of the job rather than the length of the hours."

Marlin Fitzwater provided an example of an instance when a minor error by an entry level staff member in the White House quickly turned into a presidential level decision on whether to fire her. A young woman mixed up the contents of two envelopes with presidential talking points ending up in an envelope marked for Sam Donaldson. "The talking points, unfortunately, were written by some legislative affairs person and it said, 'Greetings. Hello, members of Congress. Glad to have you here today. (Hold up your hand or shake hands or something).'," Fitzwater said. "This is really written by some guy who has never met the President probably, some kid who is trying to be thorough so he puts in all the instructions which happens often when you're writing briefing papers. Anyway, Sam got it, ran a story on the evening news about Ronald Reagan is so dumb he doesn't even know enough to say hello and shake hands." While an innocent mistake, it caused reverberations that were felt right up to the Oval Office. "Yet it was a mistake of such magnitude and ramifications, it was on national television; the basis for a story and the President of the United States thought she should be fired." While the discussion between the President, the Chief of Staff Howard Baker, and Fitzwater resulted in the woman keeping her job, it is surprising to consider such an action rises to the presidential level and does so quickly. For Fitzwater, "it was always a great example of the risk you face and the small margin for error. That's a lot of tension. If you think of a twenty-year-old kid taking a first or second job and having to live every day with the idea that if they happen to give somebody the wrong piece of paper their career is over.[74]

REDUCING THE SLOPE OF THE LEARNING CURVE

Those coming into the White House have strong forces lined up against them as they set about to create a smooth running operation. The people populating it come in at one time, they do not know one another, and they are required to make decisions of great magnitude from their first day on the job. In addition, there is scant written information on White House operations left behind by those who preceded them. Working in their favor, though, are the good will of the public and the Washington community and the benefits to be reaped from learning from those who preceded them. Most often on Inauguration Day there is a feeling of good will among the public and in the Washington community for those who begin their term in office and a willingness to give them time as they find their way. It is a period "where you want to wish the new guy well whether you voted for him or not, and you want to give him the benefit of the doubt initially," commented James Cicconi about the early months of a President's term.[75]. "So there is a period where there is almost a suspension of partisanship, a knowing suspension of it and where a sense of fair play enters in." If an administration makes use of information relating to the start up and the operations of those administrations preceding them, a President and his team can make even greater use of their early days in the White House. As is true of any institution, the White House is an organization that has rhythms and routines associated with its operations that one can discern. Perhaps the most effective resource for those accompanying the Chief Executive as he enters office is the group of those who previously served in the White House. Not only are the previous occupants a source of a great of information on where one can find the gears and levers [74] Marlin Fitzwater interview.

REV_00260439

operating the institution, those who worked in the building are almost uniformly eager to help those who succeed them. It is up to the President and his staff to find them and then to make use of the information they possess.

REV_00260440

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Contact Information:

Contact Information

The White House 2001 Project
Martha Joynt Kumar, Director
by email: mkumar@brook.edu
phone: 202/496.1348

Dr. Martha Joynt Kumar is currently serving as Director of the White House 2001 Project. In addition to her work on the project, she is at work on a book under contract with the Johns Hopkins University Press, Wired for Sound and Pictures: The President and White House Communications Policies. Her published works include Portraying the President: The White House and the News Media and a variety of articles on presidential-press relations, including ones found in the Harvard International Journal of Press & Politics, Presidential Studies Quarterly, and the recent edition of Congressional Quarterly's Guide to the Presidency.

She has received grants from the Ford Foundation and The Pew Charitable Trusts and a fellowship from the Joan Shorenstein Center of the Kennedy School at Harvard University. She is a Senior Fellow at the Academy of Leadership at the University of Maryland and is a professor in the Department of Political Science at Towson University. She is on leave from her position from 1998 to 2001 in order to direct the White House 2001 Project. In 1998 she received a University of Maryland System Regents' Award for Scholarship. A year earlier she was recognized for her work on behalf of presidency scholars with the Richard E. Neustadt Award presented to her by the Presidency Research Group, a section of the American Political Science Association. She served as President of the group. She received her B.A. from Connecticut College and her Masters and Ph.D. in political science from Columbia University. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT

http://whitehouse2001.org

Presidency scholars lead a two-part project designed to provide incoming White House staff members with information on operating key White House offices and to help presidential nominees fill out the tidal wave of forms they face in the appointments process. Funded by The Pew Charitable Trusts, a foundation known for the stature of its programs and the nonpartisan nature of its organization, the White House 2001 Project works with two broad, Pew initiatives: The Transition to Governing Project of the American Enterprise Institute and the Presidential Appointee Initiative of the Brookings Institution. White House 2001 was designed and developed by the board and members of the Presidency Research Group, the worldwide professional organization of scholars focused on the American presidency and a section of the American Political Science Association.

THE WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM

Unlike corporations both large and small, a White House begins without a record compiled by its previous occupants. The goal of the White House Interview Program is to smooth the path to power by furnishing incoming staff with substantive information about the operation of seven White House offices critical to an effective beginning: Chief of Staff, Staff Secretary, Press Office, Office of Communications, Office of the Counsel to the President, Office of Management and Administration, and the Office of Presidential Personnel. Through interviews with current and former White House staff members from the last six administrations, the White House Interview Program provides new staff with detailed information about how their White House offices function, the organization of their units, and the roles played by the heads of each office.

In addition to this institutional memory, the White House Interview Program provides a support package of important tools previous staff have identified as invaluable. These tools include a "rolodex" of contact information about the people who previously served in their posts with current addresses and phone numbers. The White House Interview Program also provides the first ever detailed organization charts of White House offices approximately every six months through the Carter administration. The scholars associated with the project, researching and writing about the White House staff, are nationally recognized for their work on the presidency. They are: Professors Peri Arnold, MaryAnne Borrelli, John Burke, George Edwards, Karen Hult, Nancy Kassop, John Kessel, Martha Joynt Kumar, Bradley Patterson, James Pfiffner, Terry Sullivan, Kathryn Dunn Tenpas, Charles Walcott, Shirley Anne Warshaw, and Stephen Wayne.

NOMINATION FORMS ONLINE

In order to address the volume of information required from appointees and the problem of the plethora of forms to be filled out by nominees, the Nomination Forms Online program provides a software package that nominees can use to complete the myriad of forms required by the White House, the FBI, the US Office of Government Ethics, and, where appropriate, the Senate committee of jurisdiction. The software uses innovative programming techniques so that the software distributes repetitive information across the several forms nominees must complete. The software allows the nominee to store information for future use in completing annual reports. It also makes available a portable file of data in standard formats so the nominee can share information, at his or her discretion, with the White House Office of Presidential Personnel and other agencies. Nomination Forms Online is freeware.

REV_00260442

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
REPORT SERIES

available in PDF format (as noted) from: http://whitehouse2001.org

GENERAL SERIES

This collection of reports from the White House 2001 Project describe topics of general concern to White House operations. Those in the general series marked with an asterisk (*) are currently only available to the Presidential Transition Team.

1. Opportunities and Hazards – The White House Interview Program
2. Meeting the Freight Train Head On – Planning for the Presidential Transition
3. Lessons from Past Transitions
4. A Tale of Two Transitions: 1980 and 1988
5. The Presidency and the Political Environment*
6. The White House World – Start Up, Organization, and the Pressures of Work Life*
7. A Guide to Inquiry*
8. Analyzing Questionnaires – Executive Forms for Nominees*

WHITE HOUSE STAFF SERIES

This collection of reports from the White House 2001 Project create an "institutional memory" for the White House Staff. Currently, these reports are available only to the Presidential Transition Team. Look for a release of these reports in the Spring of 2001.

21. Office of the Chief of Staff
22. Organization Charts for the Office of Chief of Staff
23. Office of the Staff Secretary
24. Organization Charts for the Office of the Staff Secretary
25. Office of Management and Administration
26. Organization Charts for the Office of Management and Administration
27. Office of Presidential Personnel
28. Organization Charts for the Office of Presidential Personnel
29. Office of Counsel to the President
30. Organization Charts for the Office of Counsel to the President
31. Press Office
32. Organization Charts for the Press Office
33. Office of Communications
34. Organization Charts for the Office of Communications

REV_00260443

THE WHITE HOUSE 2001 PROJECT
WHITE HOUSE INTERVIEW PROGRAM
REPORT NO. 6

THE WHITE HOUSE WORLD
START UP, ORGANIZATION, AND THE PRESSURES OF WORK LIFE

Martha Joynt Kumar,
Director, White House 2001 Project
Towson University

When you enter your West Wing office for the first time, you are going to know right off you are in a world different from any you have experienced. "When you walk into the White House at the beginning of an administration, it is empty," commented Bernard Nussbaum, Counsel to President Clinton.[1] "All of the files are gone. Even the secretaries are gone." Your predecessors records are sitting in a warehouse waiting the creation of a Clinton library. While you may or may not have furniture in your office, one object you assuredly will have is a ringing telephone. "I think my first day I got 300 phone calls from people asking specifically for me," related Jan Naylor Cope who worked in the Office of Presidential Personnel.[2] A deputy to a senior adviser in the Clinton White House described the ringing phone when he walked into his boss's office. He entered "and found that the office was empty and that all eight of his telephone lines were ringing. I didn't pick up the phone. And the reason for that was, once I said hello and identified myself, I didn't know how to help any person who was on the other end of the line. If it was a reporter asking me a question about the President's schedule, I didn't know the answer. If it was a White House staff person who I had never met, I wouldn't have been able to find their office. And so I stood, not particularly knowing what to do, with his telephone ringing off the hook."[3] Bernard Nussbaum answered his phone commenting on the business of the first day: "the minute you walk into the office, the phones are ringing. It's as if the ten biggest litigation cases in your life are going on simultaneously," he said. "I went to the office straight from the inauguration, and went to work right away, doing executive orders on that first day." No records, no furniture, no support staff, no information while at the same time you face a deluge of phone calls from people asking for answers to questions for which most likely you have no response. All of this makes for a first day that is an anomaly in the prior experience of most who go to work at the White House.

---

[1] White House Interview Program, Interview with Bernard Nussbaum, Martha Joynt Kumar and Nancy Kassop, New York, New York, November 9, 2000.

[2] White House Interview Program, Interview with Jan Naylor Cope, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., June 8, 2000.

[3] Background interview.

REV_00260412

FORCES WORKING AGAINST A SMOOTH TRANSITION INTO THE WHITE HOUSE

In addition to the lack of memory and the immediate demands for action greeting staff members, there are natural forces working against a smooth transition to power. First, a White House is organized around a President who may or may not come in with a sense of how important his staff will be to the success of his administration. Second, the White House is an artificial construct created all at once from a pool of people many of whom do not know one another. Third, it is difficult to weave together the necessary elements of campaign people and old White House and Washington hands. Fourth, it takes every administration time to discover the knowledgeable people working within the White House and in the Office of Management and Budget. Fifth, mistakes made early make it difficult to catch up and get ahead. Sixth, too many people come into office tired and have difficulty responding to the rush of work in terms of its volume and variety. Seventh, emptying out offices in the White House and in the Executive Branch is a daunting task, most especially if the transition does not involve a change in party

IT TAKES A PRESIDENT TIME TO APPRECIATE THE PLACE OF STAFF

President Ford discussed his initial lack of appreciation for the margin staff buys for a President. "I started out in effect not having an effective Chief of Staff and it didn't work," said former President Gerald R. Ford.[4] "So anybody who doesn't have one and tries to run the responsibilities of the White House I think is putting too big a burden on the President himself. You need a filter, a person that you have total confidence in who works so closely with you that in effect his is almost an alter ego. I just can't imagine a President not having an effective Chief of Staff." The Chief of Staff represents the staff and the need a President has to organize his time and his tasks. When he began his tenure as President, Ford had an open door policy with Cabinet officers and top administration officials. He soon found he had little time to do anything other than meet with those who requested his attention. "Traditionally every cabinet officer wants to see the President as often as possible and other top people as well," said President Ford. "The net result is there aren't that many hours in a day with all the other obligations that you have to handle on a daily basis."

If the President does not choose a Chief of Staff, the framework for the White House staff structure is not established and filled in. President Clinton did not announce a Chief of Staff until mid-December in 1992. Until he named Thomas McLarty, no choices could be made on the decision-making process to be used for the Chief Executive and the President-elect's relations with Congress and the news media had no permanent staff member assigned to them until right before Clinton and Gore came to Washington. The senior White House staff was appointed five days before the Inauguration, which left them no time to organize their White House before they came in.

THE WHITE HOUSE AS AN ARTIFICIAL CONSTRUCT

A White House is constructed from a standing start; not gradually developed through experience. The people who come into a White House are coming into a building governed by the rules of politics and moved by its dynamics rather than a common understanding of rules of management. "The most important thing to grasp first is how much a White House itself, especially as it starts off after a change in the party occupying the White House, resembles a city hall," noted Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to both Presidents Carter and Clinton.[5] "It is very, very difficult to organize. It isn't as if General Electric bought a company and sent in a management team that had worked together for twenty years and then they came to reshape this company that they bought. A new President naturally relies on the people who helped him get elected and also then seeks ethnic balance, geographic balance, leading public figures, experts in various fields." Inevitably these people do not know each other well as the administration begins. Yet they are required to gather and analyze information and then make decisions whether or not their decision making process is in order.

[4] President Gerald Ford interview.

REV_00260413

At the same time a White House is pulled together from disparate sources, the President and his senior staff often have to withstand strong pressure from groups to get their people on board. One veteran White House staff member described the pressure a President faces:

> The incoming White House can't have a deaf ear or political tin ear but it must be disciplined to withstand that kind of pressure. It's always going to happen and you have to have very diplomatic outreach teams and you have to have people in the White House that are open and receptive but you cannot populate the government and the White House by quota. It just won't give you the team you have to have.[6]

Thus, as you are putting together your staff, you need to develop strategies and mechanisms to fend off those you want to hold at arms length and not let into the building.

The Required Four Types of Knowledge: Campaign, President, Policy, & White House

One of the most difficult aspects of a transition into the White House is the need to accommodate in the government those who work in the campaign while at the same time integrating into the operation those who know the President even though they did not work in the campaign, and those with White House and Washington experience, and people who have substantive knowledge in the areas of social, economic, and national security policy. "You want somebody who was at least served in the upper echelons of the White House staff and knows what goes on, knows how that place runs. You've absolutely got to have that," Leon Panetta said.[7] "I would then say with that person you're going to assign one of your top campaign people who knows people, knows personnel and knows the politics of the President and who they screwed and who they don't want to screw and brings a political sense to that. That's the best combination. If you can get those two in one person you're even better off. If you can get those with two people they can work together that's good as well."

Campaign People

The problem with having campaign people come into the government is they remain to be tested on the ability to govern. Those who work in campaigns think in a short time span, see the world in black and white, and have a sense of attack. While fit for campaigning, these qualities are not necessarily what you want to emphasize in governing. "Campaigns are inevitably exercises of shifting tides and winds and expediency" observed Roger Porter who worked in all four of the last Republican administrations.[8] "You're trying to [5] White House Interview Program, Interview with Lloyd Cutler, Martha Joynt Kumar and Nancy Kassop, Washington, D.C., 1999.

[6] Background interview.
[7] White House Interview Program, Interview with Leon Panetta, Martha Joynt Kumar, Monterey Bay, CA., May 4, 2000.
[8] White House Interview Program, Interview with Roger Porter, Martha Joynt Kumar, Cambridge, Massachusetts, October, 1999.

REV_00260414

resolve this little thing here and this little thing there and keep this group on board and what we have here. That is different than governing. I think there is some merit in having people recognize the distinction between the way decisions get made in a campaign and how processes occur during a campaign," he observed. When you campaign you are living a very different life than is true when governing. "You have to build coalitions. You're not in an us-them, we've got to defeat them; we've got to destroy them. There's just a different mentality. That's the way it has to be in a campaign. During a campaign, if you don't win, it doesn't matter. But when you govern you've got to figure how to build a coalition and work with others because in fact in our system power is so widely distributed and fragmented that that's the only way you can effectively govern. Those are not necessarily the same set of skills that get illuminated during the course of a campaign."

Martin Anderson explained the dynamic of bringing into the White House people who worked on the campaign.

> They work so long and so hard and become so much of the team that when their candidate wins they automatically come in. It's just the most natural thing in the world. Positions are found for them. That's why I've always argued that if you can identify the key people a candidate surrounded himself with six to nine months or the year before the election, I can tell you what's going to happen. You can tell because they all come in."[9] It doesn't make a difference if they have the qualities needed to govern. "In my experience, it's a secondary consideration," he said. There are several priorities for a President. "With Reagan it was real clear. He knew what he wanted to do. He wanted people to help him do it so they agreed with him. They should be competent for the job. We didn't want idiots. They should know what they were doing. But given the choice of taking someone who was competent and fully agreed with Reagan and someone who was brilliant and disagreed, you took the first one. You also want loyalty, total, absolute loyalty and enthusiasm. Then if they know something about Washington that's nice but not that critical.

When they come into a White House even if they fit in in terms of their substantive contributions, campaign people, especially those working in the political and communications areas, often find the adjustment a difficult one because of the differences in the technology they work with in a White House. In a campaign, the operations involve the newest technology for accumulating and delivering information. A White House is traditionally at the low end of the tech spectrum. Jodie Torkelson, who headed the Office of Management and Administration, provides a glimmer of the contrast. "A lot of these folks had worked in telecommunications or very modern areas," she said of those working in the campaign. "Everybody had a laptop and everybody had cell phones. They expected when they went to the White House to find those kinds of things and it was a shock when you walked in the door you had a big old phone with big square buttons that lit up. You had about six lines across and you have to push here; if you wanted to transfer a call you had to click twice on the receiver. It was so archaic."[10] Making the changes in the system the incoming crew want to make can take the whole of the administration. Making do takes time as well.

Personal Presidential Choices

In addition to choosing his own Chief of Staff, a President will select four or five other senior staff members. President Ford explained his picks. "The Press Secretary, I made the choice. First Jerry terHorst, then he left and then Ron Nessen. Those were personal choices," he said. As a veteran of the Hill, President Ford chose his legislative liaison. "I felt I had a better knowledge of the kind of a person who ought to do that and I picked Jack Marsh who had been in Congress with me as a southern Democrat. Then when I went [9] White House Interview Program, Interview with Martin Anderson, Martha Joynt Kumar, Stanford, California, May 5, 2000.

[10] White House Interview Program, Interview with Jodie Torkelson, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., October 19, 2000.

REV_00260415

as Vice President he was over at the Pentagon as legislative liaison for the Pentagon. Then when I became President I drafted Jack to come and be my legislative liaison," he recounted. "Another is your speechwriter. In my case I felt I wanted to pick the head of speechwriting and I picked Bob Hartmann who had been my Chief of Staff when I was Vice President. A speechwriter has to have an intimate relationship with the President and the President with the speechwriter," he declared. "Those are the kind of people that a President has to pick personally." They may make different choices, but presidents will select a handful of people to occupy positions they consider to be crucial to the manner in which their presidency functions.

Substantive Policy People

As a White House starts up, substantive policy people must be represented from its creation. Leon Panetta discussed some of the blend here.

> You want the most qualified people in those kinds of positions because as you go through the decision-making process you may want to make some changes, you may want to bring some political input in to it. You have got to have the substance down so you know what the hell you're getting in to. You make political judgments on top of that but you, by God, need to know what's really involved in that decision making process and you're not going to get that with— if you put campaign types in these positions, their first thought will be the politics of it. You want somebody in these positions whose first thought is not the politics of it but the substance of it. What's the right economic policy? What's the right national security policy? What's the right policy in terms of the counsel and the law? You want people that make straight calls on that. It's easy to make political decisions on top of that.[11]

An area where political and substantive people clashed in the Clinton White House was on economic policy and the priority to be accorded to deficit reduction. David Dreyer, who worked for Robert Rubin, discussed the conflict that can take place between political and policy people. "There are times when the political people were advising him [Rubin] he couldn't quote, unquote break a campaign promise by under-funding or not funding a particular program where he was able to persuade them and cabinet people who represented those programs that we had to hit a particular dollar figure on deficit reduction where the financial markets would regard as credible," he said.

> That, in tandem with Lloyd Bentsen going out on a Sunday news broadcast and talking about an energy tax to demonstrate seriousness and purpose about deficit reduction were key things which got the markets believing that we were actually going to do what we had set out to do. There were some strong-willed individuals seated around that table from the [James] Carvilles and the [Paul] Begalas representing the President's political promises— and they had an important brief to argue— and the programmatic people like Secretary [Robert] Reich at the Labor Department and Dick Riley at Education. He got all of those people singing off of the same sheet of music about the President's priorities and the depth of the deficit reduction we were going to do and that meant that some of our tax promises and some of our programmatic initiatives weren't going to be as fulfilled or as out front as they wanted them to be.[12]

People with White House Experience

A well functioning White House is generally a blend of people from the campaign and those with a previous tour of service in the White House. James Cicconi, who served in the Reagan and Bush administrations, discussed the advantage of prior service. "I was a hell of a lot better at my job under

---

[11] Leon Panetta interview.

[12] White House Interview Program, Interview with David Dreyer, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., August 1, 1999.

REV_00260416

President Bush because I had worked in a more junior position under President Reagan," he said.[13] "I was able to see how Darman and others, how that job functioned, when it functioned well, when it functioned poorly, how it needed to adapt to the President's style of work. I saw how it worked; I saw how White Houses work and are structured, how decisions get made. I learned the importance of speaking up and how to affect a decision, how to deal with pressure and stress in the job and balance things in your life at the same time. I was a lot better the second time around than I would have been coming in cold, a lot better."

William Galston, who worked in the Clinton White House, observed: "the only institutional memory that counts is what's in somebody's head. A database across time is no substitute for someone who's been there before and is going back."[14] James Baker discussed what you learn from being in or near a White House. His first experience with a White House was coming to meetings there during the Ford Administration when he came in place of the Secretary of Commerce, Rogers C.B. Morton, who was ill at the time. Baker said he learned the following: "How options should go to the President. How decisions should be made. The role of the honest broker. The land mines that you have to be aware of as Chief of Staff." Once he came in as Chief of Staff, his earlier time had served him well as he prepared to come in.

Those people who have not worked on a campaign are looked upon with suspicion. Gerald Warren who worked in the Press Office and the Office of Communications in the Nixon and Ford White Houses explained his entry and the manner in which he sought to fit in.

> I walked in to the White House for the first time on January 21 early in the morning. I had come in on the red eye. I was advised by a very wise person who had been through this before to skip the inauguration festivities because I wasn't a member of the team. I wasn't in the campaign. I was told that I was going to be initially viewed as an outsider who wasn't in the trenches with the [Richard] Nixon folks so I should go in as quietly as possible. So I did. That turned out to be true. I was a newspaper editor. I wasn't identified as a Nixon person. I had to overcome that within the staff.[15]

When asked how one overcomes the initial cool response of those who have worked with the President-elect, Warren said. "I think just by quietly going about your work and learning the ropes of the White House staff, how the White House staff works and doesn't work, which is a very difficult thing for people coming in for the first time to do.".

DISCOVERING KNOWLEDGEABLE INSIDERS

It takes some while before those coming into a White House appreciate the knowledge of the White House support staff. The White House has rhythms that repeat themselves from one administration to another. It generally takes some while, though, before the new people appreciate the importance of those who have served sometimes for several presidents. "There are certain people who have that metronome in their head and know how it's supposed to work, like the clerk downstairs in the White House," observed Warren. "There's always someone in each office, some secretary in each office, who has the key, who knows how it works. The difficult thing is to find that person and then, in the case of a Republican administration replacing a Democrat or Vice versa, protecting that person and saying please help us." Invariably such people are demoted until the new staff recognize the usefulness of those who previously served. In the case of the Press Office, for example, Connie Gerard worked for press secretaries from George Reedy through Marlin Fitzwater. "Each of us going in, in those circumstances, seems to make the same mistake," he said. "They [13] White House Interview Program, Interview with James Cicconi, Martha Joynt Kumar, Washington, D.C., November 29, 1999.

[14] Interview with William Galston, Martha Joynt Kumar, College Park, MD., June 5, 1997.
[15] White House Interview Program, Interview with Gerald Warren, Martha Joynt Kumar, Middleburg, Virginia, October, 1999.

REV_00260417

REV_00260444

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Sharing Grand Jury Information with Intelligence Agencies

OA/NARA#: 2184 / 2095
9804

Box 53
Folder 1

REV_00260445

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Shedd, Dennis W.

OA/NARA#: 2182/2093
9802

Box 53
Folder 2

Office of Legal Policy
United States Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D. C. 20530

DATE: 6/21/02

TO: Brett Kavanaugh

Re: Shedd

FAX: 202-456-5104

PAGES: _30___ (including cover)

FROM: Wendy Keefer
VOICE: 202-616-2643
FAX: 202-307-3137

FILED
OCT 14 1999
LARRY W. PROPES, CLERK
COLUMBIA, S.C.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA DIVISION

ENTERED
10-14-99

MARIE T. CROSBY,

Plaintiff,

and

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff-Intervenor,

vs.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL,

Defendant.

C.A. No. 3:97-3588-19BD

ORDER

This case is before the Court for review of the Report and Recommendation filed by United States Magistrate Judge Bristow Marchant on June 30, 1999 (as supplemented on September 3, 1999). In the Report, Magistrate Judge Marchant recommends that the Court grant defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiff's Family and Medical Leave Act ("FMLA") claim because Congress did not properly enact the FMLA under § 5 of the fourteenth amendment and, therefore, has not abrogated defendant's eleventh amendment immunity from suit.[1] Although plaintiff has not objected to this

[1]The Court previously accepted Magistrate Judge Marchant's recommendation that defendant is entitled to summary judgment on plaintiff's claim under the Americans with Disabilities Act ("ADA").

AO 72A
(Rev. 8/82)

REV_00260447

recommendation, the United States of America – which the Court permitted to intervene – has objected.

After carefully reviewing the record and the controlling legal principles, the Court concludes that the Report is proper. Accordingly, the Court will accept the Report, overrule the United States' objections, and grant summary judgment for defendant on the FMLA claim.

IT IS SO ORDERED on this the 13th day of October, 1999, at Columbia, South Carolina.

Dennis W. Shedd

DENNIS W. SHEDD
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

REV_00260448

9-3-99

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA DIVISION

FILED

SEP 3 1999

LARRY W. PROPES, CLERK
COLUMBIA, S. C.

MARIE T. CROSBY,

Plaintiff,

and

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff-Intervenor,

v.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 3:97-3588-19BD

SUPPLEMENTAL

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Plaintiff, a former division director with the Defendant South Carolina Department of Health and Environmental Control (hereinafter "DHEC"), filed this employment discrimination action pursuant to Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), 42 U.S.C. § 12101, et. seq., and the Family and Medical Leave Act ("FMLA"), 29 U.S.C. § 2601, et. seq. On June 30, 1999, the undersigned issued a Report and Recommendation recommending that Defendant's motion for summary judgment be granted as to both Plaintiff's ADA claim and her FMLA claim. On August 5, 1999, the Honorable Dennis W. Shedd, United States District Judge, granted the Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's ADA claim. See Order dated August 5, 1999.

AO 72A
(Rev.8/82)

33

REV_00260449

With regard to Plaintiff's FMLA claim, the undersigned recommended dismissal on the grounds that the FMLA was not properly enacted under Congress' § 5 enforcement powers, and that Congress has therefore not abrogated the state's Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit. Report and Recommendation, at pp. 16-19. In his order of August 5, 1999, Judge Shedd determined that "[b]ecause the constitutionality of the FMLA has...been called into question, the Court - acting pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2403 and Fed.R.Civ.P. 24(c)- shall hold this issue in abeyance pending review by the Attorney General of the United States, who shall be permitted to intervene on behalf of the United States of America if she deems appropriate." See Order dated August 5, 1999. On August 27, 1999, the United States of America ("United States") intervened and filed a memorandum in opposition to Defendant's motion to dismiss or for summary judgment, solely addressing the issue of the FMLA's abrogation of the States' immunity. Judge Shedd thereafter remanded this matter to the undersigned for further consideration of Defendant's motion in light of the United States' intervention.

Discussion

Plaintiff alleges that the Defendant violated her rights under the Family and Medical Leave Act, 29 U.S.C. § 2601, et. seq., by not restoring her to the position of Division Director or an equivalent position when her physician released her to return to her duties, but not in the Heritage Building, on September 30, 1998.[1] Defendant asserts that Plaintiff's FMLA claim is [1]The full factual background and evidence of record in this case are set forth in the undersigned's Report and Recommendation filed on June 30, 1999.

AO 72A
(Rev.8/82)

REV_00260450

barred pursuant to the Eleventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.[2] Specifically, the Defendant argues that enactment of the FMLA fails to meet the requirement that such an Act be a proper exercise of Congress' enforcement power under the Fourteenth Amendment.

In its brief, the United States argues that the FMLA properly abrogates the immunity of the states under the Eleventh Amendment, spending considerable space extolling the virtues of the Act. However, while the goals and requirements of the Act are laudable, the question before the Court is whether it is constitutional. After carefully reviewing the brief filed by the United States, the undersigned is unpersuaded by the arguments presented. For the reasons previously set forth and discussed in the Report and Recommendation of June 30, 1999, the undersigned continues to agree with the majority of courts which have addressed this issue in finding that Congress did not effectively abrogate the States' Eleventh Amendment Immunity in enacting the FMLA. See Kilvitis v. County of Luzerne, ____ F.Supp. 2d ___, 1999 WL 428246 (M.D.Pa. June 25, 1999); Sims v. University of Cincinnati, 46 F.Supp.2d 736 (S.D.Ohio 1999); McGregor v. Goord, 18 F.Supp.2d 204 (N.D.N.Y. 1998); Thomson v. Ohio State University Hospital, 5 F.Supp. 2d 574 (S.D.Ohio 1998); Driesse v. Florida Board of Regents, 26 F.Supp.2d 1328 (M.D.Fla. 1998); Garrett v. Board of Trustees of Univ. of Alabama, 989 F.Supp. 1409 (N.D.Ala. 1998), appeal pending, 11th Cir. No. 98-6069; Post v. State of Kan., No. 98-1238, 1998 WL 928677 at * 3 (D.Kan. Dec. 10, 1998)["Of the district courts which have now considered the issue, the majority and all of the more recent cases have concluded that the Eleventh Amendment bars FMLA claims

---

[2]The Eleventh Amendment provides as follows:
The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.

AO 72A
(Rev.8/82)

REV_00260451

against state agencies."]; but see Iolliffe v. Mitchell, 986 F.Supp. 339, 342-343 (W.D.Va. 1997); Biddlecome v. Univ. of Texas, No. 96-1872, 1997 WL 124220 (S.D.Tex. 1997); Knussman v. State of Md., 935 F.Supp. 659, 663 (D.Md. 1996)[3].

Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, it remains the recommendation of the undersigned that the Defendant's motion to dismiss and for summary judgment be granted as to Plaintiff's FMLA claim, and that this case be dismissed.

Bristow Marchant
United States Magistrate Judge

Columbia, South Carolina

September 3, 1999

[3]As the Kilvitis opinion points out, the court in Knussman only considered whether Congress expressed its intent to abrogate the Eleventh Amendment, specifically noting that the parties had neither briefed nor argued whether Congress acted pursuant to a valid exercise of power in doing so.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA DIVISION

FILED
AUG - 5 1999
LARRY W. PROPES, CLERK
COLUMBIA, S C

MARIE T. CROSBY,

Plaintiff,

vs.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL,

Defendant.

C.A. No. 3:97-3588-19BD

ENTERED
8-5-99

ORDER

The Court has received the Report and Recommendation ("the Report") filed in this case by United States Magistrate Judge Bristow Marchant.[1] The Court has carefully reviewed the Report and concludes that it is proper concerning plaintiff's ADA claim. Accordingly, the Court will grant summary judgment in defendant's favor on that claim.

Concerning plaintiff's FMLA claim, Magistrate Judge Marchant recommends that the Court grant summary judgment in favor of defendant based on his conclusion that Congress did not properly enact it under § 5 of the 14th Amendment. Because the constitutionality of the FMLA has therefore been called into question, the Court – acting pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2403 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c) – shall hold this issue in abeyance pending review by the Attorney General of the United States, who shall be permitted to intervene on behalf of the United States of America if she deems appropriate.

[1]Although she sought and obtained an extension of time (until July 26, 1999) to file objections to the Report, Plaintiff has not filed objections to the Report.

The Court directs the Clerk of Court to immediately forward a copy of this Order to the United States Attorney for the District of South Carolina. The United States Attorney shall notify the Court by no later than August 27, 1999, of the United States' position on this matter.

IT IS SO ORDERED on this the 5th day of August, 1999, at Columbia, South Carolina.

Dennis W. Shedd

DENNIS W. SHEDD
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

REV_00260454

9
7-1-99
MW

FILED
JUN 30 1999
LARRY W. PROPES, CLERK
COLUMBIA, S.C.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA DIVISION

MARIE T. CROSBY,

Plaintiff,

v.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 3:97-3588-19BD

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Plaintiff, a former division director with the Defendant South Carolina Department of Health and Environmental Control (hereinafter "DHEC"), filed this employment discrimination action pursuant to Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), 42 U.S.C. § 12101, et. seq., and the Family and Medical Leave Act ("FMLA"), 29 U.S.C. § 2601, et. seq..[1] The Defendant filed a motion to dismiss and for summary judgment pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 56, Fed.R.Civ.P., on October 13, 1998. Plaintiff filed a memorandum in opposition to Defendant's motion on November 16, 1998, and Defendant filed a reply memorandum on November 25, 1998.

[1]Plaintiff also initially asserted claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended ("Title VII"), 42 U.S.C. § 2000e, et. seq.; and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), 29 U.S.C. § 621, et. seq.. However, Plaintiff has withdrawn her claims under Title VII and the ADEA. See Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment, at p. 2.

AO 72A
(Rev.8/82)

REV_00260455

Defendant's motion is now before the Court for disposition.[2]

Background and Evidence

The evidence before the Court, considered in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff, shows that she was employed by the Defendant as Division Director of the Inspection of Care (IOC) Division of the Bureau of Certification from 1992 until her departure from the agency in November 1996. Price Deposition, p. 54; Plaintiff's Deposition, pp. 22-23.[3] The IOC was one of two divisions in the Bureau of Certification, the other division being the Certification Division. Plaintiff's Deposition, pp. 133, 135. The Bureau of Certification was in turn one of a number of DHEC bureaus comprising the Health Regulations section of the agency.

REV_00260456

Office of Legal Policy
United States Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D. C. 20530

DATE: 6/21/02

TO: Brett Kavanaugh

Re: Shedd

FAX: 202-456-5104

PAGES: 49 (including cover)

FROM: Wendy Keefer
VOICE: 202-616-2643
FAX: 202-307-3137

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA DIVISION

CIVIL ACTION NO.: 3:94-1196

FILED
JUN 14 1994
LARRY W. PROPES, CLERK
COLUMBIA, S. C.

JOSEPH ALLEY, ET AL.,

PLAINTIFFS,

VS.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, ET AL.,

DEFENDANT.

6/10/94; TEN A.M.; COLA., SC

BEFORE: THE HON. DENNIS W. SHEDD

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

TRANSCRIPT ORDERED BY ATTORNEYS FOR THE DEFENDANTS

THE ABOVE-ENTITLED CASE WAS CALLED FOR MOTION, REPORTED BY ME, JANE G. LA PORTE, OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER FOR THE U.S. DISTRICT COURT, BY MEANS OF STENOGRAPHIC MACHINE, AND TRANSCRIBED BY ME.

* * * * * * * * * *

JANE G. LA PORTE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

1845 ASSEMBLY STREET COLUMBIA SC 29201

803-254-6239

REV_00260458

LAWSUIT. YOU PLAN TO HAVE THEM BACK?

MR. WHITE: THEY ARE NOT DEFENDANTS.

THE COURT: WHY DID YOU DROP THEM? DO YOU THINK THEY VIOLATED YOUR STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OR DON'T YOU?

MR. WHITE: THE VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS REGARDING OBTAINING INJUNCTION AND ENDING THE VIOLATION OF STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

THE COURT: OH, I KNOW CLEARLY WHAT YOU WANT. I MEAN, IT IS CLEARLY WHAT YOU WANT. YOU WANT THAT FLAG TO COME DOWN.

MR. WHITE: THAT'S RIGHT, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: I UNDERSTAND.

I'M JUST TRYING TO SEE WHERE WE STAND THIS MORNING. I JUST WANT TO UNDERSTAND THAT.

IN READING YOUR FILINGS, WHAT IS YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY, YOUR FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT IS THAT REALLY 42-1983, WHAT IS THE CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY? YOU JUST CLAIM GENERALLY FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. WHAT DO YOU MEAN BY THAT?

MR. WHITE: IT WOULD CALL ON 1983 AND MAYBE SOME INDICATION OF 1985, 1986.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH, MR. WHITE.

I'M GOING TO COME BACK TO YOU. THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

MR. WHITE: THANK YOU.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

NOW, TURN TO YOU, MR. SHINE. YOU ARE NEXT UP FOR ME THIS MORNING.

YOU CLAIM THE GOVERNOR HAS NO AUTHORITY. I WANT TO TALK ABOUT THE GOVERNOR FIRST. YOU CLAIM THE GOVERNOR HAS NO AUTHORITY UNDER STATE LAW TO TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN; IS THAT CORRECT?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

MR. WHITE -- THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

MR. WHITE, CAN YOU CITE ME ANY SPECIFIC STATUTE OR CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION WHICH SAYS THE GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA HAS THE AUTHORITY TO BRING THAT FLAG DOWN?

MR. WHITE: YOUR HONOR, MS. VALTORTA HAS COME PREPARED TO ADDRESS THAT.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

HEAR FROM YOU ON THAT.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, YOUR HONOR, THE GOVERNOR IS CHAIRMAN OF THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, WHICH CONTROLS THE STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

THE COURT: WELL, YOU ARE MAKING ARGUMENT ABOUT THE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD NOW; AREN'T YOU?

MR. WHITE: TOGETHER WITH THE GOVERNOR. AND I'M SAYING THAT THOSE ENTITIES TOGETHER HAVE CONTROL OVER THE STATE HOUSE GROUNDS.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

REV_00260468

LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

CAN YOU GIVE -- CAN YOU CITE ME ANY STATUTE IN SOUTH CAROLINA OR CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION -- LET ME SAY, DO YOU DOUBT THAT THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR AS DEFINED IN HIS AUTHORITY IS BY THE CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES OF SOUTH CAROLINA?

MS. VALTORTA: NO. I DO NOT DOUBT THAT.

THE COURT: I AGREE WITH YOU, IT SHOULDN'T BE DOUBTED. BECAUSE THAT'S THE LAW IN SOUTH CAROLINA. THAT BEING THE CASE, NOW, TELL ME -- CITE TO ME SPECIFICALLY A STATUTORY OR CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION WHICH SAYS THE GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA CAN TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I WOULD SAY THROUGH EXECUTIVE ORDER. I WOULD CITE SOUTH CAROLINA CODE SECTION 13-340, I BELIEVE, IS THE SECTION.

IN ORDER TO PREVENT DISRUPTION OF PEACE, THE STATE -- THE GOVERNOR COULD ORDER THE FLAG TO COME DOWN. AND SINCE THERE IS NO AUTHORITY AT PRESENT TO HAVE IT UP THERE, THAT HE WOULD BE WELL WITHIN HIS POWERS TO DO THAT.

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE NOW. WAIT A MINUTE NOW. EXECUTIVE ORDER, YOU AREN'T ASSERTING THAT THE GOVERNOR BY EXECUTIVE ORDER CAN DO SOMETHING THAT HE'S NOT OTHERWISE AUTHORIZED TO DO?

LET SAY, FOR INSTANCE, THE STATE HOUSE COULD NOT PASS THE BUDGET. COULD THE GOVERNOR BY EXECUTIVE ORDER ESTABLISH A BUDGET FOR THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA? JUST SAY THE STATE CAN'T COME TO AN AGREEMENT, BY EXECUTIVE ORDER HEREIN IS THE BUDGET FOR THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA. DO YOU MEAN THAT? DO YOU?

.

MS. VALTORTA: NO. BUT THAT'S A DIFFERENT ISSUE. HERE YOU HAVE AN ISSUE WHERE THE FLAG WAS PUT UP THERE BY CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

THE COURT: I KNOW THAT. I KNOW HOW IT WAS PUT UP THERE. I'M TALKING TO MR. MEDLOCK OR SOMEBODY FROM HIS OFFICE IN A FEW MINUTES.

CAN YOU CITE ME TO A SPECIFIC STATUTE, OTHER THAN WHAT YOU SAY IS EXECUTIVE ORDER, WHICH I DON'T AGREE WITH YOU ON. IS THERE ANY SPECIFIC STATUTE OR CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION WHICH GIVES THE GOVERNOR THE RIGHT TO BRING THAT FLAG DOWN?

.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, CANDIDATES FOR GOVERNOR HAVE SAID THAT THEY WOULD TAKE IT DOWN THROUGH EXECUTIVE ORDER.

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE NOW. WAIT A MINUTE NOW. SO LET ME SEE YOUR AUTHORITY IS WHAT SOMEBODY RUNNING FOR POLITICAL OFFICE SAYS THE LAW IS? THAT'S YOUR LEGAL AUTHORITY THIS MORNING?

.

MS. VALTORTA: NO.

THE COURT: LET ME SAY, I HOPE FOR YOUR SAKE YOU HAVE

MORE THAN THAT.

MS. VALTORTA: YES.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

DO YOU WANT ME TO HOLD EVERYBODY RUNNING FOR OFFICE LIABLE FOR WHAT THEY SAY, THE TRUTH OF WHAT THEY SAY?

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, THAT WOULD BE NICE. BUT OBVIOUSLY YOU CAN'T DO THAT.

THE COURT: WELL, IF YOU DID, LET ME SUGGEST YOU ARE GOING TO BE FILING MORE LAWSUITS PROBABLY.

MS. VALTORTA: I WOULD SAY.

THE COURT: THAT'S NO SLIGHT -- THAT'S NO SLIGHT ON PEOPLE RUNNING FOR OFFICE.

BUT I JUST POINT OUT I THINK THE FALLACY OF SAYING SOMEBODY IN THE POLITICAL CONTEST SAYING SOMETHING RUNNING FOR OFFICE, DECIDES WHAT THE LAW IN SOUTH CAROLINA IS.

ALL RIGHT.

LET ME SAY -- WHO SPEAKS FOR THE ATTORNEYS GENERAL'S OFFICE? WHO SPEAKS FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE? DO YOU? I JUST WANT TO ASK MR. MEDLOCK --

MR. MEDLOCK: YES, SIR.

THE COURT: -- I WASN'T SURE HOW YOU DIVIDE THIS UP. I KNOW YOU ARE BUSY AND FARM SOME ISSUES OUT. I KNOW YOU HAVE

CONTROL OVER IT.

DO YOU THINK THE GOVERNOR HAS AUTHORITY UNDER STATE LAW TO TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN?

MR. MEDLOCK: YOUR HONOR WE DECIDED SOMETIME AGO THE LEGISLATURE HAS THE AUTHORITY TO REMOVE THE FLAG.

THE COURT: I'M NOT DISAGREEING WITH YOU. THE GOVERNOR DOESN'T HAVE ANY -- LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT WAS OUR POSITION.

THE COURT: I READ YOUR OPINION. AND THAT'S WHY I ASKED THIS QUESTION. YOU CAN'T CITE ME TO ANY AUTHORITY FOR THE GOVERNOR TO TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN; CAN YOU?

MR. MEDLOCK: WE CANNOT.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH. DON'T SIT DOWN YET. AND I WANT TO MAKE THAT CLEAR, THAT'S NOT AIMED AT THIS PARTICULAR GOVERNOR, GOVERNOR CAMPBELL. YOU ARE TALKING THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT IS CORRECT.

THE COURT: AND YOUR ANALYSIS WOULD BE THE SAME IF SOMEBODY HAD ASKED YOU TO APPLY THAT ANALYSIS TO THEN GOVERNOR HOLLINGS UNDER WHOSE TENURE THE FLAG WENT UP; GOVERNOR RUSSELL, GOVERNOR MC NAIR, GOVERNOR WEST, GOVERNOR EDWARDS OR GOVERNOR RILEY, YOUR POSITION IS CONSISTENT ON THAT. IT IS NOT THE GOVERNOR'S PREROGATIVE TO TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU THIS QUESTION AND SEE IF YOU WANT TO ANSWER. IF YOU DECIDE YOU DON'T WANT TO, I'M NOT GOING TO FORCE YOU TO. AND I'M GOING TO LEAVE THE SITTING GOVERNOR OUT OF THIS. SO IT IS NOT ANY KIND OF PERSONAL MATTER.

SO LET'S TURN TO THE ELECTION OF THE NEW GOVERNOR NEXT YEAR. IF THE GOVERNOR WERE TO GO OVER AND TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN, WOULD THAT ACTION BE LEGAL?

MR. MEDLOCK: THE GOVERNOR WHO WISHES TO REMOVE THE FLAG SHOULD WORK WITH THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

THE COURT: IS THAT -- I COULD PRESS YOU FURTHER ON THAT -- IS THAT ALL YOU CARE TO SAY ABOUT THAT?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT'S ALL I KNOW ABOUT THAT.

THE COURT: IN OTHER WORDS, THE GOVERNOR CAN'T DO IT BY HIMSELF?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT'S CORRECT.

THAT'S CONSISTENT WITH THE OPINION WE HAVE WRITTEN -- ALL OF THE OPINIONS THAT WE HAVE WRITTEN.

THE COURT: I AGREE WITH YOU A HUNDRED PERCENT. YOUR POSITION HERE THIS MORNING IS EXACTLY CONSISTENT, YOU ARE EXACTLY RIGHT. THAT'S WHY I TRY TO HELP OUT OVER HERE. ALTHOUGH SOME CANDIDATE RUNNING FOR GOVERNOR MAY SAY HE'S GOING TO DO THAT, NO BASIS IN STATE LAW FOR HIM TO DO THAT.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

I'M GOING TO COME BACK TO YOU. THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

LET ME SAY THIS: GOVERNOR'S MOTION TO DISMISS IS GRANTED. THE GOVERNOR IS OUT OF THIS CASE. THE GOVERNOR HAS NO AUTHORITY WHATSOEVER TO TAKE THAT FLAG DOWN.

NOW, LET'S TURN TO THE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, MR. SHINE.

MR. SHINE: YES, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: YOU SAY THERE -- YOU SAY THERE'S NO AUTHORITY FOR THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: LET'S LEAVE THAT ARGUMENT ALONE FOR A MINUTE. LET'S LEAVE THAT ARGUMENT ALONE FOR A MINUTE. YOU ALSO CLAIM ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY; DON'T YOU?

MR. SHINE: ABSOLUTELY, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: BECAUSE THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, YOU BELIEVE, IS ALTER EGO OF THE STATE?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: DO YOU ALSO CLAIM THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD IS NOT A PERSON?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: UNDER THE WILL DECISION, 1983 DECISION?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT, WE CITED THAT IN OUR --

THE COURT: I HAVE READ WHAT YOU FILED. THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

ALL RIGHT.

WHO SPEAKS OVER HERE? MR. WHITE ON THIS ONE?

MR. WHITE: I DO.

THE COURT: AS TO THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, WHY MAY THEY NOT ASSERT AN ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY IN THIS FEDERAL ACTION -- IN THE FEDERAL ACTION?

LET ME SAY, WE ALL UNDERSTAND WHAT AN ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IS, IS THE RIGHT OF THE STATE TO ASSERT IN A FEDERAL CASE THAT THEY WILL NOT BE SUED IN THE STATE FORUM.

WHY CAN'T THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY IN THIS ACTION?

MR. WHITE: YOUR HONOR, THEY CAN ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY. WE HAD HOPED THEY WOULD NOT. WE THOUGHT THEY HAD AN INTEREST IN THIS SUIT, THEY WOULD WANT TO COME IN AS INTERVENORS.

THE COURT: THEY HAVE AN INTEREST, THEY WANT TO BE SUED IN THE PROPER FORUM, STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA. THEY HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA AND ITS OFFICIALS AND ITS JUDGES, ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE NOW. THAT DOESN'T MEAN YOU DON'T HAVE CONFIDENCE IN ME; DOES IT?

MR. SHINE: I HAVE FULL CONFIDENCE IN YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: YOU JUST SAY THAT'S AN ELEVENTH AMENDMENT RIGHT OF THE STATE TO ASSERT, AND THE STATE WANTS TO ASSERT IT. AND YOU ASSERT IT ON BEHALF OF THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, THAT IS A RIGHT PEOPLE HAVE -- OF SOUTH CAROLINA

HAVE. THEY HAVE THAT RIGHT TO HAVE YOU ASSERT IT?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT, YOUR HONOR.

IN FACT, IT IS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY NOT TO ASSERT THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT.

THE COURT: I TELL YOU THIS MUCH, STATE ASSERTS ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY EVERYDAY IN THIS COURT, ALMOST EVERY SINGLE DAY. YOU DON'T DISAGREE THEY CAN'T ASSERT IT?

MR. WHITE: WE DON'T DISAGREE THEY CAN ASSERT IT. WE ASK THEY NOT -- WE THINK THEY SHOULD PROPERLY BE HERE TO REPRESENT THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE.

THE COURT: LET ME GET THIS STRAIGHT. THE PLAINTIFF BRINGING THE LAWSUIT WANTS TO ADVISE YOU ON HOW TO DEFEND YOUR CLIENT THAT HE'S SUING. DO YOU WANT TO TAKE HIS ADVICE?

MR. SHINE: NO.

MR. WHITE: WE DON'T EXPECT THEM TO. WE INVITE THEM TO. BUT YOU WE DON'T EXPECT THEM TO.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

I EXPECT AND TRUST YOU ALL GOING TO GET JOINED UP IN AN ACTION YOU ALL HAVE YOUR SAY AT SOME POINT.

LET ME ASK OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE AGAIN, MR. MEDLOCK --

MR. MEDLOCK: YES, SIR.

THE COURT: -- YOU DON'T DISPUTE, DO YOU, I MEAN IT IS NOT YOUR CLIENT SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO ANSWER, BUT I'M ASKING YOU AGAIN BECAUSE YOU ARE HERE AND YOU LOOKED AT THE LAW THE APPEARANCES:

FOR THE PLAINTIFF:

MR. GARY WHITE AND
MS. LAURA PUCCIA VALTORTA
2009 LINCOLN STREET
COLUMBIA, SC

* * * * *

FOR THE DEFENDANTS:

MR. ROBERT DEWAYNE COOK
SC ATTORNEY GENERAL
PO BOX 11549
COLUMBIA, SC

AND

MR. EDWIN E. EVANS
SC ATTORNEY GENERAL
PO BOX 11549
COLUMBIA, SC

AND

MR. THOMAS TRAVIS MEDLOCK
SC ATTORNEY GENERAL
PO BOX 11549
COLUMBIA, SC

STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD THEY CAN ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY; CAN'T THEY? STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD, THEY CAN ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY PROPERLY; CAN'T THEY?

MR. MEDLOCK: I'M GOING TO DEFER TO MR. EVANS.

THE COURT: THAT'S WHY I ASKED YOU EARLIER WHO'S HANDLING --

MR. EVANS: AGAIN, WE DIDN'T PRECISELY RESEARCH THAT FOR THE PURPOSE OF THIS HEARING.

BUT TRADITIONALLY STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED AS A STATE ACTOR.

THE COURT: RECOGNIZED AS AN ALTER EGO. IF THEY ARE ALTER EGO, YOU DON'T DISPUTE THEY CAN ASSERT AN ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY?

MR. EVANS: WE HAVE NEVER DISPUTED THAT.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

LET ME SAY, BASED -- AND LET ME TELL YOU WHY ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY IS AN ISSUE. I HAVE TO LOOK AT THIS AS A COURT OF LIMITED JURISDICTION. AND ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY, IF ASSERTED, REMOVES SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION AS TO THAT PARTY.

ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY IS ABSOLUTELY CORRECT.

ALSO, LET ME SAY ON THE BASIS, MR. SHINE, OF THE WILL DECISION, THEY ARE NOT A PERSON WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE 1983 STATUTE, THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD IS DISMISSED FROM

THIS ACTION.

MR. SHINE: THANK YOU.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

NOW, LET ME TURN -- LET ME TURN TO THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, JUST AS TO THE JURISDICTIONAL QUESTION. AND I GUESS ELEVENTH AMENDMENT EXPERT, I GUESS I TALK TO YOU.

I FIND IT PUZZLING, WHY ISN'T THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA ASSERTING THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT?

MR. EVANS: YOUR HONOR, AGAIN, I WOULD ASSERT THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT, IF THE PLAINTIFFS WERE SEEKING INJUNCTION AGAINST THE STATE, WE ARE NOT HEAR FOR THAT PURPOSE. WE ARE HERE ONLY FOR THE PURPOSE OF LIMITED PARTICIPATION, ADVISE THE COURT OF THE STATE LAW ISSUES IN THIS CASE.

THE COURT: NO. BUT YOU DON'T THINK THEY CONTROL THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE, DO YOU?

MR. EVANS: PARDON ME?

THE COURT: YOU DON'T THINK THEY CONTROL THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE?

MR. EVANS: THEY MAY VERY WELL REMANUFACTURE THE NECESSITY OF CONSTITUTIONAL RULING ON THOSE ISSUES.

THE COURT: THE POINT IS, THIS LAWSUIT -- THIS IS NOT THE STATE COURT ACTION, THIS IS THE FEDERAL COURT ACTION. I KNOW YOU UNDERSTAND. I'M JUST SORT OF STATING IT FOR THE RECORD. THIS CASE IS HERE BECAUSE OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM. I HAVE TO ADDRESS THAT. THAT'S WHY I

ASKED MR. WHITE UNDER HIS CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY, WHETHER OR NOT THERE IS AUTHORITY TO FLY THE FLAG MAKES NO DIFFERENCE, NO DIFFERENCE WHATSOEVER.

I KNOW YOU ASSERT, AND I HAVE READ YOUR PAPERS, YOU ASSERT THAT THERE IS NO STATE AUTHORITY TO FLY THE FLAG. THAT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE TO HIS CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM. HIS CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM IS, IT IS UP THERE WHETHER IT IS UP THEREBY AUTHORITY OR NOT, MY CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS, MY CLIENTS' CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS ARE BEING VIOLATED, IT HAS TO COME DOWN; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. EVANS: THAT'S HIS ASSERTION. IT IS UP TO YOUR HONOR TO DETERMINE WHETHER ANY STATE AUTHORITY MAY INTERPLAY WITH THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

WE ARE HERE FOR THE LIMITED PARTICIPATION MUCH AS THE FEDERAL COURTS OFTEN REQUIRE US TO BE REPRESENTING THE STATE TO ADVISE ON THE STATE LAW ISSUES AS THEY CAME INTO PLAY.

THE COURT: I ASKED YOU TO BE HERE BEFORE ON OCCASION WHEN YOU DECLINED. I ASKED YOU TO BE HERE. I'M JUST ASKING YOU THAT.

MR. EVANS: THAT'S COMPLETELY CONSISTENT WITH THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT FOR THE LIMITED PARTICIPATION BY THE STATE. I WOULD AGREE WITH YOUR HONOR, IF THE PLAINTIFF WERE INTENDING TO ENJOIN THE STATE, I THINK THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT WOULD CLEARLY BAR THAT.

THE COURT: OKAY.

SO?

MR. EVANS: FOR THE LIMITED PARTICIPATION OF BEING ADVISED OF THE CRITICAL STATE LAW ISSUES, THAT IS CONSISTENT WITH ELEVENTH AMENDMENT RECOGNIZED BY FEDERAL STATUTORY LAW.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU THIS, ON THE QUESTION OF STATE LAW AS TO THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE FLAG FLYING: DO YOU THINK THAT'S BEEN DEALT WITH HERE OR IN STATE COURT?

MR. EVANS: THE BETTER FORUM WOULD BE THE STATE COURT FOR RESOLUTION OF THAT ISSUE, TO THE EXTENT IT MEANS FURTHER RESOLUTION, OF COURSE, ADJUDICATED BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

THE COURT: AND SO I JUST WANT TO BE SURE I UNDERSTAND YOUR THEORY. BUT WHAT IF I RAISE THE QUESTION OF ELEVENTH AMENDMENT THIS MORNING, FOR JURISDICTIONAL PURPOSE. THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA HAS BEEN SUED IN STATE COURT, YOU HAVE FILED -- YOU CLEARLY HAVE FILED -- LET ME SAY, I READ YOUR FILINGS, AND I THINK, QUITE FRANKLY, I'M GOING TO GUESS YOU ARE GOING TO MAKE EXACTLY THE SAME FILING IN STATE COURT, IF YOU HAVEN'T ALREADY DONE THAT.

MR. EVANS: WE HAVEN'T BEEN SERVED. BUT WE WILL TAKE A CONSISTENT POSITION. I DON'T KNOW WHAT THE ISSUES ARE IN THE STATE COURT FORUM.

THE COURT: STRIKES ME YOUR FILING DIDN'T ADDRESS THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE HERE. BUT IT DID ADDRESS THE STATUTORY ISSUE.

MR. EVANS: THAT'S CORRECT. AND THAT WAS -- THAT'S OUR LIMITED PARTICIPATION.

THE COURT: SO IF I WERE TO RAISE THE QUESTION THIS MORNING OF THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA BEING IN THIS LAWSUIT -- IN THIS LAWSUIT, AND ASK YOU YOUR POSITION AS I'M RAISING IT, EVERYBODY HAS NOTICE OF IT, IT'S BEEN RAISED BY THE GOVERNOR, I THINK IT IS CLEARLY RAISED BY THE WHAT THE LAW IS, YOUR POSITION WOULD BE THE STATE WOULD ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY?

MR. EVANS: AGAIN, YOUR HONOR, AS AN EXECUTIVE OFFICER I CANNOT WAIVE THE STATES ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY.

THE COURT: YOU HAVE TO ASSERT IT.

MR. EVANS: NOR CAN ANYONE ELSE WHO REPRESENTS ANY OF THE STATE OFFICERS. I WOULD NOT SAY WE HAVE TO ASSERT IT, I BELIEVE AS YOUR HONOR NOTED IT IS A LIMITATION ON THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION TO AWARD RELIEF AGAINST THE STATE.

AND WHETHER IT IS CERTIFIED OR NOT, THAT IS A SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION LIMITATION.

THE COURT: YOU AGREE WITH ME?

MR. EVANS: IF, IN FACT, THE PLAINTIFF IS HERE BEFORE YOU TODAY TO SEEK INJUNCTION AGAINST THE STATE, I WOULD AGREE WITH YOU, ELEVENTH AMENDMENT WOULD BAR THAT RELIEF.

THE COURT: WELL, --

MR. EVANS: BAR THIS COURT ENTERING THAT RELIEF.

THE COURT: WELL, THAT'S WHAT HE'S ASKING YOU SUED IN THIS LAWSUIT.

MR. EVANS: I BELIEVE THE PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL WOULD ADVISE THE COURT THE STATE CAN PARTICIPATE CONSISTENT WITH ELEVENTH AMENDMENT, AT LEAST ADVISE THE COURT OF THE CRITICAL STATE LAW ISSUES TO THE EXTENT THAT HELP OR ASSIST THE COURT IN RESOLVING THE FEDERAL ISSUES.

THE COURT: I APPRECIATE THAT. BUT WHAT YOU JUST TOLD ME IS, AND I AGREE WITH YOU, THE BETTER FORUM TO DECIDE WHAT STATE LAW IS, YOU DON'T -- LET'S JUST GET THIS STRAIGHT, YOU ARE NOT STANDING HERE SAYING YOU WANT THE FEDERAL COURTS TO TELL THE PEOPLE OF SOUTH CAROLINA WHAT THEIR LAW IS?

MR. EVANS: I DON'T WANT TO GET CAUGHT IN MR. SHINE'S SPOT AND SAYING I DON'T HAVE CONFIDENCE IN HIS HONOR TO RESOLVE STATE LAW ISSUES. BUT TRADITIONALLY --

THE COURT: BUT YOU HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL SYSTEM BY WHICH I HAVE LIMITED AUTHORITY. LET'S GET TO THE BOTTOM, YOU ARE NOT ASKING THE FEDERAL COURTS GET INVOLVED.

MR. EVANS: WELL, AGAIN, TO THE EXTENT THAT THE COURT MAY NEED THAT INFORMATION FOR RESOLUTION OF THE STATE LAW ISSUES, THE COURT CAN CERTIFY THAT QUESTION TO STATE SUPREME COURT IS ONE OPTION.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU ABOUT THAT. THAT'S CROSSED MY MIND.

WHY DO YOU THINK THE STATE SUPREME COURT WOULD TAKE A

REV_00260482

CERTIFICATION FROM ME WHEN THE ACTION IS PENDING IN ITS OWN COURT SYSTEM RIGHT NOW?

I'M JUST ASKING WHAT YOU THINK.

MR. EVANS: IT WOULD BE PURELY SPECULATIVE. IT'S AN ISSUE OF LAW MAY VERY WELL TAKE JURISDICTION UNDER THE CERTIFICATION RULE.

IF YOUR HONOR PLEASE, IF I CAN DETOUR GOING BACK TO OUR ROLE REPRESENTING THE STATE HERE IN OUR LIMITED PARTICIPATION. BEFORE THERE WAS A CERTIFICATION RULE, THE QUESTIONS WERE CERTIFIED TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL BY COMMON PRACTICE IN THE DISTRICT COURT AND THAT'S AGAIN OUR ROLE TODAY.

THE COURT: SO ARE YOU GLAD THERE'S A CERTIFICATION PROCESS TO THE SUPREME COURT NOW OR NOT?

MR. EVANS: I DON'T KNOW. I ENJOYED BEING THE SUPREME COURT. BUT THERE IS A PROCESS THERE IF THE COURT BELIEVES THAT RESOLUTION OF THOSE CRITICAL STATE ISSUES IS NECESSARY FOR THIS COURT TO CONSIDER THE FEDERAL QUESTIONS PENDING THE CERTIFICATION PROCESS EXISTS.

THE COURT: RIGHT.

LET'S GO BACK. I DON'T SEE HOW -- HOW THE RESOLUTION OF THE STATE ISSUE -- HOW I WOULD RESOLVE THAT ISSUE IN THE FIRST INSTANCE. BECAUSE WHETHER IT IS AUTHORIZED TO FLY OR NOT, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM STILL STANDS; DOESN'T IT, MR. WHITE?

MR. WHITE: YOUR HONOR, THE CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM

WOULD STILL STAND. I BELIEVE WE DO HAVE THE PENDENT STATE CLAIMS IN THIS ACTION, BUT WE AGREED THE STATE IS THE PROPER FORUM FOR THAT.

THE COURT: IF YOU AGREE TO THAT, WHY DID YOU FILE A SUIT IN FEDERAL COURT?

MR. WHITE: WELL, WE DO HAVE FEDERAL ISSUES.

THE COURT: WELL, WAIT A MINUTE NOW. STATE COURTS CAN DECIDE FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES; CAN'T THEY?

MR. WHITE: THEY CAN. WE THINK THE BETTER FORUM FOR THAT IS HERE IN FEDERAL COURT.

THE COURT: YOU DON'T HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THE STATE COURT ON FEDERAL QUESTIONS?

MR. WHITE: WE DO NOT.

THE COURT: I CAN'T FIND LAWYERS OUT THERE WITH MUCH CONFIDENCE.

MR. WHITE: WE DO HAVE CONFIDENCE IN YOUR HONOR ON FEDERAL ISSUES AND IN THE STATE COURT ON STATE ISSUES. WE THINK THE PROPER FORUM FOR THE STATE ISSUES IS THE STATE; PROPER FORUM FOR FEDERAL ISSUES IS FEDERAL COURT.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

(DISCUSSION HELD OFF THE RECORD.)

THE COURT: YOU KNOW WHAT -- COUPLE THINGS --

MR. MEDLOCK: YOUR HONOR, COULD I JUST CLARIFY ONE THING WE HAVE IN THE STATE COURT ACTION NOW PENDING. I WILL ASSERT THE SAME POSITION THERE THAT I HAVE ASSERTED HERE.

THE COURT: I HAD NO DOUBT THAT YOU WOULD. YOU MIGHT BE SURE YOU TALK TO YOUR ASSISTANTS. I DON'T KNOW. I WAS THE ONE SAYING I THOUGHT YOU FILED THE EXACT SAME PAPER. QUITE FRANKLY, I EXPECT YOU TO DO THAT.

MR. MEDLOCK: FILED ESSENTIALLY THE SAME DOCUMENTS. WE SIMPLY REPORT TO THE STATE COURT, AS WE ARE REPORTING TO THE FEDERAL COURT, WHAT THE STATE OF THE LAW IS IN THE VIEW OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE.

THE COURT: I'M GOING TO ASK A QUESTION BASED ON HISTORY IN JUST ONE SECOND ABOUT THAT.

BUT LET ME ASK NOW: I DON'T THINK CERTIFICATION WOULD WORK. BECAUSE CERTIFICATION DON'T I HAVE TO CERTIFY THAT THE QUESTION WILL BE DISPOSITIVE? I CAN'T CERTIFY TO THE STATE SUPREME COURT BECAUSE -- I CAN'T SAY: "MEMBERS OF THE STATE SUPREME COURT, BY THE WAY YOU CAN CHECK, I HAVE CERTIFIED QUESTIONS. AND I'M PLEASED TO SAY I HAVE THEM, EXCEPT THOSE QUESTIONS AT LEAST TWO IN THE LAST TWO YEARS, AND I APPRECIATE THEIR GUIDANCE ON STATE LAW QUESTIONS. AND I WILL TELL YOU THIS, I HAVE HAD REQUESTS FOR CERTIFICATION MORE THAN THAT, THAT I DIDN'T FOLLOW.

BUT I CAN'T SAY TO THE STATE SUPREME COURT: "TELL ME WHETHER OR NOT THE FLAG IS UP BY AUTHORITY." BECAUSE IT WILL BE DISPOSITIVE OF THE FEDERAL ISSUES BECAUSE IT WILL NOT BE, IT WILL NOT BE.

THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM WILL REST ON THE

FLAG FLYING, NOT WHETHER IT IS FLYING BY AUTHORITY OR NOT. YOU SORT OF HAVE AN ARGUMENT IN THERE, MAYBE IT MIGHT BE MOOTED OUT I GUESS. BUT THAT'S NOT THE SAME THING AS CERTIFICATION ISSUE.

MR. SHINE?

MR. SHINE: YOUR HONOR, TO ASSIST THE COURT ON ELEVENTH AMENDMENT ISSUE REGARDING ALL --

THE COURT: YOU THINK I NEED SOME HELP, MR. SHINE?

MR. SHINE: NO, SIR. I THINK YOU DID QUITE WELL. I'M GOING TO SUGGEST ELEVENTH AMENDMENT CANNOT BE WAIVED.

THE COURT: IT CAN BE WAIVED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

MR. SHINE: ONLY BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY HAS SPOKEN TO THAT IN THE TORT CLAIMS ACT.

THE COURT: ONLY FOR THE PURPOSE OF THAT TORT CLAIMS ACT; DIDN'T THEY?

MR. SHINE: THAT'S CORRECT, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

LET ME SAY -- JUST LET ME SAY, I APPRECIATE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FILING THIS CASE. BUT THEY DIDN'T COME IN JUST AS SOMEBODY TO ADVISE. THEY WERE SUED, THEY WERE NAMED DEFENDANTS IN THIS CASE.

BEFORE I MAKE MY RULING ON THAT, LET ME ASK THIS: IT IS NOT CRYSTAL CLEAR TO ME ON THE HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN FLAG FLYING, IS THE ACT OR JOINT RESOLUTION UNDER WHICH THE AMERICAN FLAG FLIES -- AND THIS HAS NO BEARING ON THIS, JUST A QUESTION OF HISTORY.

AND

MR. SAMUEL W. HOWELL

HAYNSWORTH, MARION, MCKAY AND GUERARD

PO BOX 7157

COLUMBIA, SC

AND

MR. JAMES WALKER COLEMAN

HAYNSWORTH, MARION, MC KAY AND GUERARD

PO BOX 1119

CHARLESTON, SC 29402

AND

MR. MARK ELAM

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

PO BOX 11369

COLUMBIA, SC 29202]

AND

MR. JOSEPH DAWSON SHINE

GENERAL COUNSEL

SOUTH CAROLINA BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD

PO BOX 12444

COLUMBIA SC 29211

REV_00260460

YOU SAY THAT'S THE -- IS IT 1906 JOINTS RESOLUTION; IS THAT IT?

MR. COOK: THAT'S CORRECT, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. COOK: NINETEEN-O-SIX JOINT RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO FLY THE AMERICAN FLAG AND THE STATE FLAG.

THE COURT: SO THAT'S WHERE AUTHORITY COMES FROM?

MR. COOK: PROVIDED FOR THE APPROPRIATION TO DO THAT.

THE COURT: ALTHOUGH IT CAME DOWN DURING SOME PERIOD WHEN THEY HAD TO DO SOME WORK ON THE STATE HOUSE, IT WAS DOWN ACTUALLY IN VIOLATION OF THAT STATUTE. YOU JUST COULDN'T CARRY THAT OUT BECAUSE YOU COULDN'T GET UP THERE AND TO FLY IT.

WHEN IT WENT BACK UP IN 1962 OR 63, THE AMERICAN FLAG, IT WAS STILL PURSUANT TO THE 1906 JOINT RESOLUTION?

MR. COOK: YES, SIR.

THE COURT: THAT'S WHAT I THOUGHT.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH. LET ME SAY THIS THEN: IT IS A MATTER OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION. THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA -- BY THE WAY, MR. ABLE, YOU WANT TO INTERVENE IN THIS MATTER, IN PART TO ASSERT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. ABLE: THAT'S ONE OF THE DEFENSES WE PUT IN OUR ANSWER, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: IF I FIND FOR THE STATE ON THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IMMUNITY, YOU DON'T NEED TO INTERVENE IN THIS ACTION.

MR. ABLE: WELL, ALL DEFENDANTS WOULD BE OUT. THERE WOULD BE NO PENDING CASE.

THE COURT: I DON'T KNOW THAT ALL THE DEFENDANTS WOULD BE OUT. STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE IS IN. STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE, YOU HAVEN'T MOVED TO BE DISMISSED; HAVE YOU?

MR. HOWELL: NO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: QUITE FRANKLY, BECAUSE MAYBE UNDER EX-PARTY YOU HAVE A PROBLEM WITH PROSPECTIVE INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AGAINST THE MEMBERS OF YOUR COMMITTEE PERHAPS.

MR. HOWELL: THAT'S RIGHT.

AS WELL AS THE INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS.

THE COURT: YOU MIGHT COULD MOVE TO GET THE NAME OUT. BUT, I MEAN, EVERYBODY -- ALL THE PLAYERS WOULD STILL BE IN FROM YOUR PERSPECTIVE; ISN'T THAT RIGHT?

MR. HOWELL: THAT'S RIGHT.

THE COURT: THAT'S WHY YOU ASSERTED TENTH AMENDMENT NOT ELEVENTH AMENDMENT; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

THE COURT: I THOUGHT YOU WERE CORRECT IN DOING THAT PROBABLY.

BUT LET ME SAY THIS: QUESTION OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA UNDER THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT IS DISMISSED FROM THIS ACTION. DISMISSED FROM THIS ACTION.

NOW, WELL I HAVE DISMISSED YOU FROM THIS ACTION, MR.

MEDLOCK. BUT I MAY, IF YOU WANT TO STAY HERE, WE AREN'T GOING TO BE MUCH LONGER. IF YOU WANT TO STAY AND COMMENT ON SOME OF THE QUESTIONS, I WILL BE GLAD TO HAVE YOUR LEGAL INPUT, AS I HAVE HAD ALREADY, IF YOU WANT TO STAY WITH US FOR JUST A FEW MINUTES.

MR. MEDLOCK: IF I COULD?

THE COURT: I UNDERSTAND YOU ARE NOT A PARTY ANYMORE. MAYBE I WOULD HAVE TO ADD YOU BACK TO MAKE YOU ANSWER. I'M SURE YOU WOULD ANSWER IF I ASKED YOU.

MR. MEDLOCK: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU ABOUT YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY FOR JUST A SECOND -- JUST A SECOND. I'M NOT GOING TO SPEND MUCH TIME ON IT. WE ARE NOT GOING TO TALK ABOUT THE MERITS OF THIS ACTION.

DO I UNDERSTAND YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL -- YOUR FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY TO BE THAT BECAUSE SOMEBODY FINDS SOME ACT OF THE STATE OFFENSIVE, THAT VIOLATES THEIR FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS?

.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, IT'S MORE THAN THAT, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

TELL ME WHAT MORE IT IS.

.

MS. VALTORTA: WE ARE SAYING THAT SINCE 1962 WHEN THE CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG WAS RAISED ON THE CAPITAL DOME, IS, IN EFFECT, A SORT OF PUBLIC FORUM, A PUBLIC FORUM LIMITED TO ONE NARROW VIEWPOINT.

THE COURT: NO. IT IS NOT ONE VIEWPOINT. IT FLIES THE AMERICAN FLAG AND THE SOUTH CAROLINA FLAG, TOO.

MS. VALTORTA: THOSE TWO FLAGS DO NOT REPRESENT PARTISAN VIEWPOINTS.

THE COURT: WELL, MAYBE THEY DON'T TO YOU, BUT THEY MIGHT TO SOMEBODY ELSE.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I THINK THAT THE CONTROVERSY SURROUNDING THIS ISSUE SHOWS THAT THE CONFEDERATE FLAG REPRESENTS PARTISAN -- VERY PARTISAN VIEWPOINTS.

THE COURT: WELL, LET ME ASK YOU THIS, THOUGH. IN 1968 AND 69, DIDN'T THE AMERICAN FLAG REPRESENT THE SAME THING TO PEOPLE WHO WERE OPPOSED TO THE WAR IN VIETNAM?

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I DON'T THINK THOSE PEOPLE DENIED THAT IT HAD AUTHORITY -- THE FLAG HAD AUTHORITY OVER THEM.

I THINK THAT THE CONFEDERATE --

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE. NO. NO. WAIT ONE MINUTE. NO. NO. NO.

YOUR ARGUMENT ISN'T THAT THE FLAG LACKS AUTHORITY OVER THEM, IT IS THAT IT'S OFFENSIVE, SOMEHOW CHILLS THEIR RIGHTS OF ASSOCIATION.

MY POINT IS, CAN YOU REALLY CONSISTENTLY MAKE YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM ABOUT THE CONFEDERATE FLAG AND NOT MAKE IT

ABOUT THE SOUTH CAROLINA FLAG, THE AMERICAN FLAG?

MORE THAN THAT, THE PALMETTO TREE? WHAT IF AN ENVIRONMENTALIST WAS UPSET THAT THE PALMETTO TREE IS ON THE STATE LICENSE TAG -- IS IT STILL? OR BIRD? IT USED TO BE -- IT IS ON THE FLAG -- AN ENVIRONMENTALIST SAYS: "I'M VERY UPSET ABOUT THAT BECAUSE THAT REMINDS ME THAT PALMETTO TREES WERE CUT DOWN TO MAKE FORT MOULTRIE. AND I FIND THAT OFFENSIVE. IT CHILLS MY RIGHTS TO HAVE ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS COME TO SOUTH CAROLINA."

ISN'T THAT THE SAME CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM?

MS. VALTORTA: I NEVER HEARD THAT ARGUMENT.

THE COURT: YOU JUST HEARD IT FROM ME. RESPOND TO IT.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I'M SAYING THAT I BELIEVE THAT THE STATE FLAG AND THE UNITED STATES FLAG REPRESENT THE STATE AS A WHOLE AT THIS TIME. WHEREAS, --

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE NOW. WAIT A MINUTE NOW. WAIT A MINUTE.

I DON'T WANT TO OFFEND ANYBODY'S SENSIBILITY. HAS THE CLEMSON FLAG THROWN OVER THE STATE HOUSE, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY FLAG?

MS. VALTORTA: PERHAPS IT SHOULD BE GIVEN OPPORTUNITY TO FLY THERE. BECAUSE BY PUTTING THE CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG UP ON THE CAPITAL BUILDING WHICH REPRESENTS A VERY CONTROVERSIAL VIEWPOINT IS REALLY SAYING --

THE COURT: SO THE STATE CAN'T DO ANYTHING THAT'S CONTROVERSIAL THEN? AND CONTROVERSIAL IS DEFINED IF ANYBODY FINDS IT UNCONSTITUTIONAL?

MS. VALTORTA: THE STATE HAS NO AUTHORITY TO FLY THE FLAG.

THE COURT: DOESN'T MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE TO YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT. YOU ALREADY TOLD ME THAT.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I THINK THAT IN A SENSE, I MEAN, THE FACT THE FLAG IS THERE DIVIDES THE STATE INTO DISTINCT GROUPS.

AND I DON'T BELIEVE THAT THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATE FLAG DO THAT. AND FURTHER, THE CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG HAS NO LEGAL ASSOCIATION TO THE STATE ACCEPT HISTORICAL CONTEXT.

THE COURT: WELL, BUT SO WHAT? FOR YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM, SO WHAT?

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I THINK IT CHILLS THE FREE SPEECH OF PEOPLE WHO OPPOSE THE FLAG.

THE COURT: WELL, I UNDERSTAND THAT'S YOUR CLAIM. WHY COULDN'T SOMEBODY MAKE THAT CLAIM ABOUT ANYTHING THAT THE STATE DOES?

LET ME MAKE IT CLEAR TO EVERYBODY -- NO. NO. NO. I'M NOT DETERMINING NOW ON WHETHER OR NOT THE FLAG SHOULD BE THERE AT ALL. I'M JUST DOING WHAT -- YOU LAWYERS HAVE BEEN WITH ME BEFORE KNOW, I'M EXPLORING YOUR LEGAL THEORY.

AND MAYBE YOU CAN'T ANSWER ANYMORE TODAY. MAYBE YOU HAVEN'T HAD TIME TO THINK THROUGH IT. IF YOU DON'T WANT TO ANSWER ANYMORE QUESTIONS.

MS. VALTORTA: I COULD JUST SAY THAT I MEAN THE PUBLIC FORUM HAS BEEN CREATED BY THAT PARTICULAR FLAG, BY THAT CONTROVERSIAL FLAG. BECAUSE THE CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG --

THE COURT: WELL, THE AMERICAN FLAG CAN BE CONSTITUTIONAL, TOO; CAN'T IT?

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I DON'T BELIEVE ANYONE WOULD DISPUTE IT INCLUDES EVERYONE.

THE COURT: WHAT ABOUT FLAG BURNING? FLAG BURNING THE AMERICAN FLAG? THAT'S PRETTY CONTROVERSIAL.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I WOULDN'T SAY THAT ANYONE DISPUTES THE FACT THAT THE AMERICAN FLAG REPRESENTS THEM.

THE COURT: IT DOESN'T MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE WHETHER IT REPRESENTS THEM. IT MIGHT BE OFFENSIVE TO THEM. YOU SAY AS LONG AS IT REPRESENTS YOU, IT CAN'T VIOLATE YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

I MEAN, WHAT IF SOMEBODY -- LET ME GIVE YOU ANOTHER EXAMPLE. WHAT IF SOMEBODY CLAIMED THAT THEY DIDN'T LIKE THE AMERICAN POLICY IN HAITI. AND THEY WORKED WITH GROUPS THAT WANTED TO CHANGE THE AMERICAN POLICY IN HAITI TOWARD HAITI, WHICH, LET ME SAY, IS VERY VALID FOR PUBLIC DEBATE. I'M NOT SAYING IT IS NOT. AND THEY FILED A LAWSUIT HERE IN THIS COURT AND SAID: "YOU HONOR, THAT FLAG -- AMERICAN FLAG FLYING IN SOUTH CAROLINA OVER THE STATE HOUSE INDICATES TO US AND TO PEOPLE WHO AGREE WITH US THAT WE SUPPORT THE AMERICAN POLICY IN HAITI, SOUTH CAROLINA SUPPORTS IT; THEREFORE, OUR FRIENDS WON'T COME TO SOUTH CAROLINA TO TALK TO US ABOUT OVERTURNING THE AMERICAN POLICY IN HAITI, THAT'S CHILLING. THAT HAS A CHILLING IMPACT AND VIOLATES OUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS."

IT IS THE SAME EXACT THEORY.

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I THINK THAT THE AMERICAN FLAG REPRESENTS -- ONE OF THE THINGS IT REPRESENTS IS THE ABILITY AND THE RIGHTS OF CITIZENS TO DISPUTE WHAT THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT --

THE COURT: YOU THINK THAT?

MS. VALTORTA: WELL, I'M SURE THAT IT DOES. AND THAT FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND FREEDOM OF -- THE FREEDOM TO DISPUTE GOVERNMENT ACTIONS IS INHERENT IN THE AMERICAN FLAG; WHEREAS THE CONFEDERATE FLAG REPRESENTS ONE OPINION.

THE COURT: THAT'S WHAT YOU SAY. THAT IT MAY REPRESENT THAT TO YOU.

MS. VALTORTA: THAT'S WHAT THE PLAINTIFFS SAY.

THE COURT: THAT'S RIGHT. YOU SAY THAT. I MEAN, THE PLAINTIFFS SAY THAT'S CORRECT.

LET ME SAY, I'M NOT GOING TO PRESS YOU ANY FURTHER ON YOUR THEORY. I WANT YOU TO THINK ABOUT IT BEFORE YOU COME BACK IN.

MR. WHITE: MAY I HAVE A WORD ON THAT?

THE COURT: YOU SURE MAY, MR. WHITE. I DON'T LET TWO LAWYERS ON THE SAME SIDE ARGUE, BUT I'M GOING TO LET YOU ARGUE.

MR. WHITE: JUST -- THE AMERICAN FLAG AND STATE FLAG ARE UP THERE BY LAW.

THE COURT: STOP.

YOU HAVE ALREADY TOLD ME THAT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE.

MR. WHITE: I MAY HAVE BEEN WRONG.

THE COURT: WAIT A MINUTE NOW. WAIT A MINUTE. I DON'T MIND TWO LAWYERS ON THE SAME SIDE ARGUING, BUT I'M NOT SO SURE I LIKE ONE SIDE ON THE SAME SIDE TAKING TWO DIFFERENT POSITIONS.

NOW, LET ME TELL YOU QUITE FRANKLY, MR. WHITE, I THINK YOU HAVE SEEN THE BOX YOU HAVE GOTTEN YOURSELF IN ON YOUR ANALYSIS.

I THINK YOU ARE RIGHT IN THE FIRST INSTANCE. WHETHER OR NOT THAT FLAG IS UP WITH AUTHORITY OR NOT, CANNOT MAKE A DIFFERENCE UNDER YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL ATTACK.

MR. WHITE: WELL, THERE IS --

THE COURT: BECAUSE YOU KNOW WHY, SUPREMACY CLAUSE OF THE U.S. CONSTITUTION, THAT'S WHY.

IF IT IS UP -- LET ME GIVE EVERYBODY AN EXAMPLE. IN CASE YOU DON'T REMEMBER, SOUTH CAROLINA SCHOOLS WERE ALL SEGREGATED. AND YOU KNOW THIS, MR. MEDLOCK, VERY WELL. YOU WERE INVOLVED IN A LOT OF THIS. I DON'T MEAN HAVING IT, BUT WORKING WITH EDUCATORS AND ALL OPPOSING THIS.

SEGREGATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA WAS UNDER COLOR OF STATE LAW; WASN'T IT?

MR. MEDLOCK: YES.

THE COURT: DE JURE; WASN'T DE FACTO, THE LAW OF SOUTH CAROLINA TO HAVE SEPARATE SCHOOLS; ISN'T THAT CORRECT?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: ALTHOUGH THAT WAS AUTHORIZED BY LAW, IT HAD TO FALL TO THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE OF THE U.S. CONSTITUTION; DIDN'T IT?

MR. MEDLOCK: THAT IS CORRECT, SIR.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

THAT'S WHY, MR. WHITE, THE AUTHORITY CANNOT MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT, FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT.

MR. WHITE: THERE'S ONE THING THAT I'M NOT SURE WHAT YOUR HONOR WILL THINK OF IT, BUT THERE ARE LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENT PURPOSES FOR HAVING THE SYMBOL OF THE UNITED STATES AND SYMBOL OF THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA OVER THE STATE HOUSE DOME.

WE WOULD ASSERT THERE'S NO LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENT PURPOSE FOR THE FLAG OF THE CONFEDERACY PREVAIL AGAINST THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES WHICH STANDS FOR THOSE THINGS, THE BILL OF RIGHTS AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT STAND AGAINST, THAT THERE IS NO LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENT PURPOSE FOR IT TO BE UP BEYOND THE HISTORICAL PURPOSE FOR WHICH IT PASSED AT

PROCEEDINGS:

THE COURT: CALL THE CASE PLEASE, MADAM CLERK.

THE CLERK: PLEASE THE COURT:

THIS IS THE CASE OF JOSEPH ALLEY ET AL -VERSUS- THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, ET AL.

CIVIL ACTION NUMBER 3:94-1196.

THE COURT: COUNSEL READY TO PROCEED?

ALL RIGHT.

LET'S SAY FOR THE RECORD WHO WE HAVE.

MR. SHINE, YOU ARE HERE REPRESENTING WHO?

MR. SHINE: STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD AND GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE COURT: MR. ELAM?

MR. ELAM: GOVERNOR CAMPBELL.

THE COURT: MR. HOWELL?

MR. HOWELL: STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE AND THE LEGISLATIVE MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. ABLE?

MR. ABLE: I REPRESENT THE INTERVENOR'S, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. EVANS: ED EVANS, YOUR HONOR, TRAVIS MEDLOCK, WE REPRESENT THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

MR. COOK: BOB COOK FOR THE STATE.

THE END OF THE CENTENNIAL.

THE COURT: LET ME SAY, YOU HAVE A CHANCE PERHAPS IN THE FUTURE TO EXPRESS YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY TO ME.

AND LET ME SAY THIS, WE AREN'T GETTING FURTHER INTO THE MERITS. I WANT TO EXPLORE IT SOME TO SEE IF I UNDERSTAND, I THINK I DO UNDERSTAND WHAT YOUR THEORY IS.

MR. WHITE: TO THAT EXTENT, WE WOULD LIKE TO MOVE TO ALLOW THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA TO COME IN FOR THE PURPOSE OF ADVISING THE COURT ON STATE LAW. AND WE THINK THEY HAVE DONE THAT ADEQUATELY.

WE THINK THEIR CONTINUED PARTICIPATION WOULD BE OF ASSISTANCE IN THAT REGARD IF THEY ARE WILLING TO DO THAT.

THE COURT: I DON'T NEED IT. THANK YOU VERY MUCH FOR YOUR REQUEST. I DON'T NEED IT. THEY HAVE DONE A GOOD JOB EXPLAINING THE HISTORY. THEY HAVE DONE THE BEST JOB OF EXPLAINING WHAT THE HISTORY IS.

LET ME SAY, MR. SHINE, WOULD YOU STAND UP FOR ME PLEASE.

MR. SHINE: YES, SIR.

THE COURT: LET ME SAY THIS ON THE RECORD, MR. ELAM, TOO, YOU SIGNED THE FILING. LET ME HAVE YOU STAND UP FOR ME. YOU FOLKS DID THEY BEST JOB OF ADDRESSING LEGAL ISSUES IN THIS CASE.

I DIDN'T ASK YOU VERY MANY QUESTIONS BECAUSE YOUR POSITIONS WERE STATED ACCURATELY. I DIDN'T JUST ACCEPT THEM.

I THOUGHT I KNEW SOME OF THE LAW ANYWAY. BUT I WENT BACK AND RESEARCHED THE LAW. SO I SAY THAT ON THE RECORD, YOUR FILING WAS MOST HELPFUL TO THE COURT.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

NOW, AND I APPRECIATE YOU WANTING THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO BE HERE. HE'S EXPLAINED THE HISTORY, AND EXPECT HE'S GOING TO FURTHER ELABORATE ON THE HISTORY IN STATE COURT AS WE MOVE ALONG.

NOW, LET ME SAY THIS ABOUT THIS CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY THAT I HEAR IN THIS CASE.

THERE ARE VERY SERIOUS QUESTIONS ABOUT THIS CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY -- ABOUT THE CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY, THAT IT VIOLATES THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION, ABOUT THE THEORY.

NOW, WE'LL JUST HAVE TO SEE THE APPLICATION OF IT. BUT EVERY FEDERAL COURT THAT I CAN FIND HAS DISMISSED ANY SORT OF SIMILAR THEORY FOR WHAT THEY ARE HEARING IN THIS CASE. AT ANY RATE, I WANT TO MAKE THAT COMMENT. WE'LL SEE WHERE IT GOES.

(DISCUSSION HELD OFF THE RECORD.)

THE COURT: MR. HOWELL, WE HAVE HAD A LITTLE DISCUSSION, SIR, ABOUT THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT. DO YOU WANT ME TO TAKE UP THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT JUST ON THE STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE? YOU JUST WILLING TO LET THAT RIDE FOR RIGHT NOW.

MR. HOWELL: I JUST AS SOON LET IT RIDE.

THE COURT: I THOUGHT SO. I JUST WANT TO BE SURE ON

THE RECORD.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

LET ME JUST MAKE A FEW COMMENTS HERE. LET ME JUST BE CONSISTENT -- WAIT ONE SECOND, MR. ABLE -- TO BE CONSISTENT. SOMEBODY COULD SAY I SHOULD GO AHEAD AND WAIVE YOU OUT. THE TRUTH IS THE PLAYERS ON YOUR COMMITTEE WOULD STILL BE IN FRONT OF THIS COURT. SO I'M GOING TO LEAVE THAT ALONE FOR RIGHT NOW.

I WANT EVERYBODY TO UNDERSTAND I COULD TAKE THE NAME STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE, AND IT COULD BE WRONG. BUT ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE ARE STILL GOING TO BE IN THIS CASE.

ALL RIGHT.

MR. ABLE, YOU STOOD UP?

MR. ABLE: YES, SIR.

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT:

SINCE THE STATE IS OUT AND THE MOTION TO INTERVENE ON BEHALF OF THE STATE IS MOOTED BY THAT, WE WOULD MAKE AN ORAL MOTION TO BE ALLOWED TO INTERVENE AT LEAST AS PERMISSIVE INTERVENORS TO PARTICIPATE WITH THE STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

THE COURT: TAKEN UNDER CONSIDERATION. YOU HAVE A STATE HOUSE STATE ACTION. I DON'T KNOW IF YOU FILED TO INTERVENE OVER THERE OR NOT.

MR. ABLE: THAT ACTION HAS NOT BEEN COMMENCED.

THE COURT: I DON'T KNOW ABOUT THAT.

MR. ABLE: IT HASN'T BEEN. I FILED, AND IT'S BEEN FILED NOT SERVED.

THE COURT: LISTEN TO ME, I'M NOT MAKING ANY RULING AS FAR AS SOME ACTION YOU WANT TO BE IN, IT IS NOT GOING TO BE IN THIS COURTROOM. I THINK IT IS PRETTY CLEAR TO YOU, YOU BETTER SEE WHAT ELSE YOU WANT TO DO.

MR. ABLE: I WILL BE THERE.

THE COURT: I'M NOT TELLING YOU TO DO IT. BUT THE POINT IS, I THINK I MADE IT PRETTY CLEAR, THE STATE LAW QUESTION ISN'T GOING TO BE RESOLVED IN THIS COURT. BECAUSE I HAPPEN TO AGREE, I THINK IT WAS THE GOVERNOR'S POSITION THAT FEDERAL COURTS SHOULDN'T BE DICTATING TO STATES ON STATE LAW MATTERS. AND THAT HAPPENS TO BE MY PHILOSOPHY AS WELL. THAT'S WHAT I'M GOING TO DO.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

MR. ABLE: THANK YOU, SIR.

THE COURT: NOW, LET ME JUST MAKE A FEW COMMENTS TO YOU. AND THEN I WILL ISSUE A FINAL RULING THAT I'M GOING TO ISSUE TODAY.

LET ME SAY, WE HAVE PEOPLE HERE TODAY ALL OF WHOM ARE GOOD LAWYERS, ALL OF WHOM HAVE AN INTEREST IN THE COMMUNITY. SOME HAVE INTEREST POSITIONS OF POWER.

LET ME TELL YOU THREE INCIDENTS THAT HAVE HAPPENED IN MY COURTROOM IN THE LAST -- IN THE LAST MONTH AND A HALF OR SO.

FIRST, AND I THINK I'M GOING TO TAKE A GUILTY PLEA IN THIS CASE TODAY, I HAVE HAD THE OCCASION TO HAVE BEFORE ME A YOUNG MAN WHO SHOT HIS SCHOOLMATE AT A SCHOOL HERE IN THE CAPITAL CITY.

SECOND, I HAVE HAD THE OCCASION RECENTLY TO TAKE A GUILTY PLEA OF ANOTHER YOUNG MAN WHO GRADUATED FROM A HIGH SCHOOL IN THIS CITY -- GRADUATED FROM HIGH SCHOOL AND HE CANNOT READ AND WRITE.

AND THEN LAST WEEK, AND THIS IS UNBELIEVABLE TO ME, I SENTENCED A MAN FOR BRANDISHING A FIREARM. AND THEN WHEN I GOT THE INFORMATION, THIS IS WHAT HAPPENED, AND I PUT THIS ON THE RECORD BECAUSE ALL OF YOU FOLKS ARE IMPORTANT PEOPLE. AND I THINK YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE OTHER ISSUES OUT THERE THAT MAY REQUIRE SOME ATTENTION.

I'M NOT GOING TO DENIGRATE THE CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM ABOUT THE CONFEDERATE FLAG. BUT IT STRIKES ME WE ARE TAKING A WHOLE LOT OF TIME IN THIS WHOLE STATE ON THE CONFEDERATE FLAG, WHEN THERE ARE OTHER ISSUES, EVERY-DAY ISSUES THAT SOME MAY CONSIDER A LITTLE MORE IMPORTANT.

THIS MAN CAME IN, AND HIS HOUSE HAD BURNED DOWN. AND SO HE HAD TO GO TO WHAT HE CALLED THE PROJECTS. BUT I CAN TELL YOU IT IS HOUSING UNITS WITHIN BLOCKS OF THAT DOME WHERE THOSE FLAGS FLY.

HE SAID -- AND ALL THE TESTIMONY FROM ALL SIDES -- CRACK COCAINE IS BEING SOLD EVERYWHERE IN THE PRESENCE OF CHILDREN, GUNS PRESENT. THIS MAN SAID IN HIS HOUSING UNIT, WHEN HE AND HIS WIFE WOULD LEAVE FOR ANY REASON, PEOPLE WOULD BREAK IN EVERY TIME THEY LEFT AND THE WOULD STEAL EVERYTHING IN THEIR HOUSE, EVERYTHING.

ON ONE OCCASION HE WENT TO THE POLICE STATION HERE IN COLUMBIA TO -- AND I'M NOT PICKING ON COLUMBIA, BUT THIS IS THE CAPITAL CITY IN WHICH THEY FLAG IS FLYING -- WENT TO THE POLICE STATION AND COMPLAINED ABOUT A BURGLARY. AND WHEN HE GOT BACK TO HIS HOUSE WITH THE POLICE, STRANGERS HAD MOVED INTO HIS HOUSE. THEY WERE IN HIS BED, THEY WERE SITTING ON HIS FURNITURE, AND THEY WOULD NOT LEAVE.

IT SOUNDS LIKE SOMETHING OUT OF THAT MOVIE ESCAPE FROM NEW YORK CITY. AND HE SAID, PLEASE MAKE THEM LEAVE MY HOUSE. AND THE POLICE SAID YOU GOT TO EVICT THEM. WHAT DO YOU MEAN I HAVE GOT TO EVICT THEM? THEY DON'T LIVE HERE. THEY DON'T LIVE HERE.

AND SO HE'S CONCERNED ABOUT HIS WIFE, QUITE FRANKLY, WHO USED CRACK. AND CRACK DEALERS WERE GIVING HER CRACK COCAINE. AND HE DIDN'T WANT HIS WIFE TO HAVE CRACK ANYMORE. SO HE ASKED THEM TO NOT GIVE HER ANY MORE CRACK. THEY WERE BREAKING INTO HIS HOUSE, THREATENING HIM, THE CRACK DEALERS WERE, HERE IN COLUMBIA. COMING DOWN TO LURE HIS WIFE AWAY WITH CRACK COCAINE.

HE SAID TO THE POLICE, CAN I PROTECT MYSELF? THE POLICEMAN SAID, YES, YOU SURE CAN. SO HE GOT A GUN TO PROTECT

HIMSELF. HE GOT INTO A SCUFFLE WITH A COUPLE OF COCAINE DEALERS, WHEN HE WENT AFTER THEM BRANDISHING A FIREARM.

HE'S NOW IN FEDERAL PRISON FOR HAVING THAT FIREARM. HE WAS A CONVICTED FELON, BUT HE WAS CHARGED WITH OTHER THINGS.

LET ME SAY THIS, IT IS A LITTLE DIFFICULT TO SIT HE AS A FEDERAL JUDGE AND HEAR AND READ ABOUT AND SEE THE EFFORT THAT'S BEING PUT IN BY THE GOOD PEOPLE OF SOUTH CAROLINA ON T CONFEDERATE FLAG ISSUE, WHEN I WILL DARE SAY THOSE THREE EXAMPLES I JUST MENTIONED -- THEY DON'T CARE IF THAT FLAG FL OR NOT. THEY WANT THEIR LIFE IMPROVED, AND THEY WANT SOMETH ELSE DONE TO IMPROVE THEIR LIFE.

AND I JUST SAY THAT FOR WHAT IT'S WORTH. BECAUSE BELIEVE THIS, I HAVE GREAT CONFIDENCE IN THE PEOPLE IN SOUT CAROLINA. I HAVE GREAT CONFIDENCE IN THE OFFICIALS, BOTH ELECTED AND THE JUDICIAL OFFICIALS WHO ARE ELECTED BY THOSE ELECTED OFFICIALS. AND I'M COMFORTABLE THEY CAN DEAL WITH CONFEDERATE FLAG ISSUE IN A WAY, ON STATE LAW, THEY CAN DE WITH IT. THAT'S A PROPER FORUM FOR IT. THERE ARE PEOPLE GOODWILL ON ALL SIDES OF THE ISSUES IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE FLAG ISSUE I JUST SUSPECT AND HOPE THAT THE MATTER WILL BE RESOLVED, AND BE RESOLVED IN A MANNER SO W ALL -- EVERYBODY CAN CONCENTRATE ON THE KIND OF PROBLEMS POINTED OUT TO YOU.

I JUST THINK IT IS DISGRACEFUL THOSE CONDITION

IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

I WILL JUST TELL, YOU THAT'S MY OPINION. AND WE OUGHT TO BE USING OUR TIME AND EFFORTS AND RESOURCES TO ADDRESS THOSE REAL PROBLEMS.

THOSE PEOPLE I TALKED ABOUT, I DARE SAY, THEY DON'T CARE -- THEY DON'T CARE IF ANY FLAG IS ON THAT DOME. THEY DON'T CARE ABOUT THAT. THEY WANT THERE LIVES IMPROVED AND BE SURE THAT CHILDREN AREN'T GOING TO BE SHOT WHEN THEY GO TO SCHOOL HERE IN COLUMBIA.

NOW, LET ME SAY THIS, ALSO, MR. SHINE, YOU AND MR. ELAM POINTED OUT AND RAISED THE QUESTION OF ABSTENTION IN THIS CASE. THAT IS, IF THERE IS A STATE LAW MATTER THAT CAN BE RESOLVED AND SHOULD BE RESOLVED IN THE STATE FORUM, THAT THE FEDERAL COURT SHOULD DO THAT.

AND UNDER THE PULLIAM DECISION WHICH, QUITE FRANKLY, JUSTICE SCALIA, IN MY OPINION, CAUSED DEFERRAL RATHER THAN ABSTENTION.

PERHAPS UNDER BURFORD AS WELL, I BELIEVE IT IS PROPER FOR THIS COURT TO ABSTAIN ANY FURTHER IN THIS MATTER.

LET ME MAKE IT VERY CLEAR, LET ME MAKE IT VERY CLEAR, I AM DEFERRING ON MR. WHITE'S CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM. I WANT YOU TO UNDERSTAND THAT, MR. WHITE.

I DON'T KNOW HOW THE MATTER IS GOING TO BE RESOLVED. I DON'T KNOW. I SUSPECT SOME EFFORT WILL BE PUT INTO GETTING IT RESOLVED IN COURT OR IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OR SOMEHOW.

LET ME SAY, I DON'T KNOW. BUT IF WHATEVER THAT RESOLUTION TURNS OUT TO BE, MR. WHITE, IF YOU AREN'T SATISFIED WITH IT, YOU CAN COME BACK AND PRESENT YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM HERE IN THIS COURT.

NOW, I HAVE ALREADY TOLD YOU I THINK THAT CLAIM IS VERY TENUOUS AND QUESTIONABLE. BUT I'M NOT RULING ON IT HERE. AND I WILL GIVE YOU FURTHER CHANCE TO PRESENT IF WE GET THAT FAR.

I'M GOING TO MAKE IT VERY CLEAR, I'M GIVING THE STATE COURT THE TIME TO DEAL WITH THE STATE COURT ISSUES; HOWEVER, I AM NOT DEFERRING TO STATE COURT ON QUESTIONS OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

IF THAT MATTER COMES UP AGAIN, THE PARTIES CAN COME BACK TO ME, AND I WILL DECIDE THE QUESTIONS OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

LET ME SAY THIS: I THANK ALL OF YOU FOR BEING HERE THIS MORNING. I APPRECIATE YOUR PARTICIPATION. I APPRECIATE WHAT YOU FILED WITH THE COURT.

ALL RIGHT.

ANYTHING FURTHER?

MR. SHINE: NOTHING FURTHER.

MR. WHITE: NOTHING FROM THE PLAINTIFF AT THIS TIME.

THE COURT: THANK YOU VERY MUCH. THANK YOU ALL VERY MUCH.

THE MARSHAL: ALL RISE.

REV_00260505

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MS. VALTORTA: LAURA VALTORTA FOR THE PLAINTIFF.

MR. WHITE: GARY WHITE FOR THE PLAINTIFF.

THE COURT: MR. WHITE.

GOOD MORNING.

MR. WHITE: GOOD MORNING, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

SOME OF YOU HAVE BEEN IN FRONT OF ME BEFORE, OTHERS OF YOU HAVEN'T.

LET ME TELL YOU HOW WE ARE GOING TO PROCEED. I READ ALL YOUR FILINGS. I JUST WANT YOU TO ANSWER MY QUESTIONS. I HAVE SOME COMMENTS, AND I WANT YOU TO ANSWER THE QUESTIONS THAT I ASK YOU. THAT'S HOW WE ARE GOING TO PROCEED.

MR. WHITE, AS WE GET STARTED, I WANT TO ASK YOU JUST A FEW QUESTIONS TO GET US STARTED HERE THIS MORNING.

MR. WHITE: ALL RIGHT.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

YOU, IN YOUR COMPLAINT, YOU AREN'T ALLEGING -- I JUST WANT TO GET THIS STRAIGHT FOR THE RECORD, I DON'T THINK IT MATTERS TO YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY, I JUST WANT TO GET IT STRAIGHT ON THE RECORD -- YOU AREN'T CLAIMING, ARE YOU, THAT THERE WAS ANY PROTEST REASON FOR THE FLAG BEING RAISED ORIGINALLY IN 1962?

YOU DON'T ASSERT THAT; DO YOU?

MR. WHITE: NOT ORIGINALLY. ALTHOUGH CONTINUING TO FLY PAST THE CENTENNIAL PERIOD WE THINK DOES SEND A MESSAGE --

THE COURT: I'M NOT TALKING ABOUT SENDING A MESSAGE. I KNOW YOU CLAIM IT SENDS A MESSAGE. I'M ASKING, DO YOU THINK THERE'S RACIAL PURPOSE BEHIND ITS CONTINUED FLYING?

MR. WHITE: THE CONTINUED FLYING WE DO.

NOW, THE ORIGINAL FLYING OF THE FLAG WAS IN HONOR OF THE CENTENNIAL. WE HONOR THAT.

THE COURT: YOU DON'T THINK IT WAS PUT UP ORIGINALLY FOR RACIAL REASONS BUT CONTINUES TO FLY FOR RACIAL REASONS?

MR. WHITE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

UNDER YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY, THE QUESTION OF WHETHER OR NOT THE STATE HAS AUTHORITY TO FLY THAT FLAG DOESN'T MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE, DOES IT, IF THE FLAG IS UP -- IF IT IS UP BY AUTHORITY, YOU STILL CLAIM CONSTITUTIONAL DEPRAVATION.

SO THE QUESTION OF WHETHER OR NOT IT IS UP WITH LEGAL AUTHORITY REALLY ISN'T RELEVANT TO YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY; IS THAT CORRECT?

MR. WHITE: THAT'S CORRECT.

THERE'S A STATE ACTION THAT'S A STATE ISSUE, WE RECOGNIZE THAT AS A STATE ISSUE.

THE COURT: OKAY. ALL RIGHT.

AND YOU ARE HERE IN FRONT OF ME ON THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE?

MR. WHITE: THAT'S RIGHT, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT. ALL RIGHT.

LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

ISN'T THIS A CASE IN WHICH YOU ARE FORUM SHOPPING? IT'S CLEAR TO ME WHAT'S HAPPENED IS, YOU FILED AN ACTION IN FEDERAL COURT NAMING EVERYBODY I THINK YOU THOUGHT MIGHT HAVE SOME ROLE IN THE FLAG. I'M NOT FAULTING YOU FOR THAT AT THIS POINT, I'M JUST SAYING THAT'S WHAT YOU DID.

THEN YOU FILED A STATE ACTION NAMING BASICALLY THE SAME GROUP OF PEOPLE; IS THAT CORRECT, AS DEFENDANTS?

MR. WHITE: WE DID.

BUT WE REVIEWED THE STATE -- PROPER PARTY WAS THE STATE. THE ONLY PARTY IN THE STATE ACTION IS THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

LET ME GET BACK FOR A SECOND, I'M GOING TO COME BACK TO YOU ON THAT IN A SECOND.

YOU FILED AN ACTION AGAINST EVERYBODY IN FEDERAL COURT. THEN YOU FILED AN ACTION AGAINST ALL THOSE SAME PEOPLE IN STATE COURT.

AND THEN AFTER YOU HEARD FROM THE DEFENDANTS, AND YOU FOUND OUT THAT MOST OF THE DEFENDANTS WOULD FIGHT YOU EXCEPT FOR THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA THROUGH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, YOU DROP EVERYBODY FROM YOUR STATE ACTION, SO THAT YOU ARE LEFT WITH ONLY -- ARE YOU NOT ONLY FORUM SHOPPING BUT DEFENDANT

SHOPPING; AREN'T YOU?

MR. WHITE: WELL, WE ARE TRYING TO FIND WHAT AVENUE WE CAN GO TO GET RELIEF.

THE COURT: YOU ARE TRYING TO FIND THE DEFENDANT, AND YOU DID FIND THE DEFENDANT, WHO'S GOING TO AGREE WITH YOU; ISN'T THAT WHAT YOU HAVE DONE?

MR. WHITE: WELL, THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA DOES TAKE THE SAME POSITION WE DO.

THE COURT: THAT'S RIGHT.

MR. WHITE: AND WE HAVEN'T REALLY SOUGHT THAT OUT. THAT'S JUST THE RESPONSE WE HAVE GOT.

THE COURT: THAT'S WHAT HAPPENED. YOU FILED A FEDERAL ACTION, YOU FILED A STATE ACTION. YOU GET RESPONSES IN THE FEDERAL ACTION WHICH WAS FILED FIRST, AND YOU FIND OUT THAT ALL THE DEFENDANTS YOU SUED EXCEPT FOR ONE IS GOING TO FIGHT YOU.

SO THEN IN THE STATE ACTION YOU DROP ALL THE DEFENDANTS WHO ARE GOING TO FIGHT YOU AND JUST KEEP IN THE DEFENDANT WHO AGREES WITH YOU; THAT'S WHAT HAPPENED?

MR. WHITE: WE BASICALLY KNEW WHAT THE RESPONSES OF MOST OF THE DEFENDANTS WERE GOING TO BE ANYWAY.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. WHITE: AND THE REASON THAT THE ONLY DEFEND IN THE STATE ACTION IS THE STATE IS THAT IN FEDERAL COURT THE INDIVIDUALS ARE RESPONSIBLE UNDER THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT, WE REALIZE THAT.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. WHITE: IN THE STATE COURT WE FEEL WE CAN SUE THE STATE SINCE IT IS A STATE COURT.

THE COURT: LET ME ASK YOU THIS:

YOU ALLEGE STATE CONSTITUTIONAL VIOLATIONS IN YOUR STATE COURT ACTION; DON'T YOU?

MR. WHITE: WE DO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: BUT YOU DON'T THINK THE GOVERNOR THE STATE BUDGET AND CONTROL BOARD OR STATE HOUSE COMMITTEE -- YOU DON'T THINK ANY OF THOSE PEOPLE BY THEIR ACTIONS HAVE DEPRIVED YOU OF STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS?

MR. WHITE: WE HAVE ALLEGED THAT.

THE COURT: NO YOU HAVEN'T, NOT AGAINST THOSE DEFENDANTS. YOU DROPPED THEM.

MR. WHITE: WE DID DROP THEM.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

THAT'S MY POINT.

SO AS WE STAND HERE TODAY, YOU DON'T THINK ANYBODY -- ANY OF THE NAMED DEFENDANTS WHO YOU ORIGINALLY NAMED IN THE STATE COURT ACTION, WHICH WERE THE SAME DEFENDANTS HERE IN FRONT OF ME TODAY, YOU DON'T THINK THEY VIOLATED YOUR STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS?

MR. WHITE: WELL, I DON'T WANT TO FORECLOSE THAT.

THE COURT: WELL, YOU DROPPED THEM FROM YOUR Sixth Circuit Balance

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 53
Folder 3

REV_00260506

REV_00260507

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Smith, Lavenski

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2182/2093
9802

Box 53
Folder 4

Arkansas State Conference

National Association For The Advancement of Colored People

P.O. Box 25314 • Little Rock, Arkansas 72221 • Telephone (501) 376-2227 • Fax (501) 227-9215

DALE H. CHARLES, State President

Atty. Jimmie Wilson, First Vice-President
Pinkey McFarlin, Second Vice-President
Doris Bonet, Third Vice-President

C. Diane Charles, Secretary
Marjorie Jackson, Treasurer

April 8, 2002

Senator Patrick Leahy
United State Senate
Chairman Judiciary Committee
443 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Leahy:

As the President of the Arkansas State Conference of Branches NAACP, I am writing to express our concern that Attorney Lavenski Smith, who is from Arkansas, has not been given a confirmation hearing. President Bush nominated Mr. Smith approximately a year ago for the Eighth Circuit Court, however, he has not been given a hearing before the Judiciary Committee.

While I understand there are some partisan issues involved, I am asking you as Chairman of Judiciary Committee to, immediately, schedule a hearing on behalf of the confirmation of Mr. Smith for the Eight Circuit Court. It is my opinion that Mr. Smith is a fine individual and has served the people of Arkansas well in his capacity as a public official.

For additional information, you may contact me at (501) 227-7231or by e-mail at dhcharles@prodigy.net

Sincerely,

Dale Charles

Dale Charles
President

DC: cdc

Arkansas State Conference

National Association For The Advancement of Colored People

P.O. Box 25314 • Little Rock, Arkansas 72221 • Telephone (501) 376-2227 • Fax (501) 227-9215

DALE H. CHARLES, State President

Atty. Jimmie Wilson, First Vice-President
Pinkey McFarlin, Second Vice-President
Doris Bonet, Third Vice-President

C. Diane Charles, Secretary
Marjorie Jackson, Treasurer

April 8, 2002

Senator Blanche Lincoln
United State Senate
359 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Lincoln:

As a constituent of yours and the President of the Arkansas State Conference of Branches NAACP, I am writing to express our concern that Attorney Lavenski Smith, also, a resident of Arkansas, has not been given a confirmation hearing. President Bush nominated him approximately a year ago for the Eighth Circuit Court; however, he has not been given a hearing before the Judiciary Committee.

While I understand there are some partisan issues involved, I am asking you to, immediately, call and write Senator Patrick Leahy to urge him to schedule a confirmation hearing on behalf of Mr. Smith. It is my opinion that Mr. Smith is a fine individual and he has served the people of Arkansas well in his capacity as a public official.

For additional information you may contact me at (501-227-7231) Page 1(877) 558-1520 or by e-mail at dhcharles@prodigy.net

Sincerely,

Dale Charles

Dale Charles
President

DC: cdc

REV_00260509

Smithsonian Exhibit

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1824/1742
9632

Box 53
Folder 5

REV_00260510

Smithsonian
National Museum of American History

24 June 2002

Ms. Linda Gambatesa
Deputy Assistant to the President and Director, Oval Office Operations
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Washington, D. C. 20500

Dear Ms. Gambatesa:

Betty Monkman, the White House Curator, has asked that I contact you directly about the forthcoming exhibition, September 11, 2001: Bearing Witness to History at the National Museum of American History. On behalf of the Museum, I would like to ask your help in directing the enclosed letter to President Bush, so that we could borrow the following objects for temporary exhibition.

- bullhorn used by President Bush to address workers at Ground Zero
- the New York Port Authority shield given to President Bush by Arlene Howard, mother of slain officer George Howard

The Smithsonian would greatly appreciate your assistance in processing this paperwork and moving forward with the loan of these objects for exhibition. We understand the NY Port Authority shield may not be available until the dedication ceremony for the opening of the exhibition, September 10. The Museum staff will work closely with the President, you, and other White House staff to coordinate this loan for the duration of the exhibition -- until January 11, 2003.

If this meets with the President's approval, please have him or his designee sign and date both copies of the enclosed Incoming Loan Agreement (at the bottom of the back of each of the two pages) and return them to us as soon as possible in the enclosed return envelope. Due to problems with timely mail delivery, we would appreciate it if you communicate by fax to 202-786-2423 or e-mail to bowert@si.edu in addition to regular mail which should be sent to P. O. Box 37012, MRC 640, National Museum of American History, Washington, D. C. 20013. A countersigned copy of the loan agreement will be returned to you for the President's records.

If you wish to discuss the loan with me, please call me at 202-357-2271 or by e-mail to zoidis@si.edu. If you have questions concerning the loan agreement process, please contact me at the above address, or bowert@si.edu.

Thank you for your support of the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History.

Sincerely yours,

Marilyn Zoidis

Marilyn Zoidis
Lead Curator, September 11 Exhibition
Smithsonian Institution, National Museum of American History
PO Box 37012, MRC 629
Washington, DC 20013

Enclosure: NMAH Facilities Report
NMAH Agreement for Incoming Loan
Return envelope

Cc: Tom Bower
Melinda Machado

Smithsonian Institution

Lawrence M. Small
Secretary

June 21, 2002

The President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The Smithsonian's National Museum of American History, Behring Center is preparing an extraordinary exhibition, September 11, 2001: Bearing Witness to History, to mark the first anniversary of the terrorist attacks on the United States of America. The tragic events of last September have challenged this museum to fulfill its responsibility to the American people to collect and interpret history as it happens.

September 11, 2001: Bearing Witness to History will bring together objects, images, and personal stories that help tell the story of this historic day and its impact. The title of the exhibition suggests that we are all witnesses to history; we have all been affected by the events of September 11. In immediate and evocative ways, objects will connect visitors to compelling stories of the attack sites, the rescue and recovery efforts, and the response of local, national, and global communities.

The exhibition will be installed in a prominent gallery on the Museum's second floor, adjacent to the main entrance off the National Mall and across from the First Ladies exhibition. We will open the exhibition to the public on September 11, 2002, and it will remain on view for four months, closing January 11, 2003. We believe this is an invaluable opportunity to reach out to Americans.

Your strong, determined leadership in a time of crisis united the American people, and your firm actions provided essential stability for a nation in shock. To illustrate your key role in "bearing witness," we would like to request the loan of the following objects:

- the bullhorn you used to address workers at Ground Zero, and
- the New York Port Authority shield presented to you by Arlene Howard, mother of slain officer George Howard.

We understand the strong attachment you feel for George Howard's shield and only ask for you to temporarily part with it -- so that it can be shared with the American people.

A member of my staff will be in touch with your office to answer any questions. We appreciate your willingness to consider our request.

All the best,

Smithsonian Institution Building
1000 Jefferson Drive SW
Washington DC 20560-0016
202.357.1846 Telephone
202.786.2515 Fax

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF AMERICAN HISTORY 2002.6019
~~Smithsonian Institution~~

12th Street at Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20560
Office of the Registrar 202-357-1894

AGREEMENT FOR INCOMING LOAN

Date: 24 June 2002

From: George W. Bush, President of the United States (Lender's Name) (Additional Contact)

The White House, Washington, D.C. 20500 (Address) ( ) (Telephone Number)

To: Marilyn Zoidis, Curator (Curatorial Unit) (202) 357-2271 (Telephone Number)

In accordance with the Conditions printed on the reverse, the objects listed below are borrowed for the following purpose only (give name of exhibition, when applicable):

September 11, 2001: Bearing Witness to History

For the period To Be Determined - September 2002 to 12 January 2003
(From estimated time objects leave Lender's custody until their return and receipt by Lender; see "Shipping" below)

Initiated by: _____
(NMAH Curatorial Signature)

Objects	Description of Objects (Include dimensions, weight, and brief report of condition; attach recent photo(s) if available)	Insurance Value(s)
	Bullhorn used by President Bush to address workers at Ground Zero The New York Port Authority shield given to President Bush by Arlene Howard, mother of slain officer George Howard

(attach continuation sheet if necessary)

INSURANCE: (see Conditions on reverse) _____ carried by National Museum of American History _____ by Lender: estimated premium charges $_____ _____ insurance waived

PACKING and SHIPPING: The following packing and shipping arrangements are proposed subject to review and approval by the NMAH Registrar's Office in consultation with the Lender:

Objects to be packed by: _____ Lender _____ NMAH Other: _____
To be shipped from (address and contact): _____

To arrive no later than (date): _____ Via: _____
To be returned to above address (unless otherwise notified) Via: _____

COSTS: Borrower will pay all costs of packing, shipping, insurance, unless otherwise noted here:

CREDIT LINE: _____
(For exhibition label and catalog)

SPECIAL REQUIREMENTS for handling, installation, etc. (attach continuation sheet if necessary):

2900 PLEASE READ CONDITIONS AND SIGN ON REVERSE SI-2880 REV. 91-08-15

REV_00260516

CONDITIONS GOVERNING LOAN

Care and Preservation

1. The National Museum of American History , Smithsonian Institution (the"Museum") will give to objects borrowed the same care as it does comparable property of its own. Precautions will be taken to protect objects from fire; theft; mishandling; dirt and insects; and extremes of light, temperature and humidity while in the Museum's custody. It is understood by the Lender and Museum that all tangible objects are subject to gradual inherent deterioration for which neither party is responsible.

2. Evidence of damage at the time of receipt or while in the Museum's custody will be reported immediately to the Lender. It is understood that objects which in our opinion show evidence of infestation may be fumigated at the discretion of the Museum.

3. The Lender will be requested to provide written authorization for any alterations, restoration, or repair. The Museum may examine objects by all modern scientific methods.

4. The Museum retains the right to determine when, if, and, for how long objects borrowed will be exhibited.

Transportation and Packing

1. The Lender certifies that the objects lent are in such condition as to withstand ordinary strains of packaging and transportation and handling. A written report of condition of objects prior to shipment must be sent by the lender to the Museum. Otherwise, it will be assumed that objects are received in the same condition as when leaving the Lender's possession. Condition records which may include photographs will be made at the Museum on arrival and departure.

2. Costs of transportation and packing will be borne by the Museum unless the loan is at the Lender's request. The method of shipment must be agreed upon by both parties.

3. Government regulations will be adhered to in international shipments. As a rule, the Lender is responsible for adhering to its country's import/export requirements and the Borrower is responsible for adhering to its country's import/export requirements.

4. The Lender will assure that said objects are adequately and securely packed for the type of shipment agreed upon, including any special instructions for unpacking and repacking. Objects will be returned packed in the same or similar materials as received unless otherwise authorized by the Lender.

Insurance

1. Objects will be insured for the amount specified herein by the Smithsonian Institution under its "all risk" wall-to-wall policy subject to the following standard exclusions: wear and tear, gradual deterioration insects, vermin or inherent vice; repairing, restoration or retouching process; hostile or warlike action, insurrection, rebellion, etc.; nuclear reaction, nuclear radiation or radioactive contamination.

   Insurance will be placed in the amount specified by the Lender herein which must reflect the fair market value. If the Lender fails to indicate an amount, the Smithsonian, with the implied concurrence of the Lender, will set a value only for purposes of insurance for the period of the loan. Said value is not to be considered an appraisal.

2. If the Lender elects to maintain his own insurance coverage, then prior to shipping the Museum must be supplied with a certificate of insurance naming the the Smithsonian Institution and the United States Government as additional insureds or waiving rights of subrogation. If the Lender fails to provide said certificate, this failure shall constitute a waiver of insurance by the Lender (see No. 4 below .) The Smithsonian Shall not be responsible for any error or deficiency in information furnished by the Lender to the insurer or for lapses in coverage.

3. In the case of long-term loans, it is the responsibility of the Lender to notify the Museum of updated insurance valuations.

4. If insurance is waived by the Lender, this waiver shall constitute the agreement of the Lender to release and hold harmless the Smithsonian Institution and the United States Government from any liability for damage to or loss of the loan property.

5. The amount payable by insurance secured in accordance with this loan agreement is the sole recovery available to the Lender from Smithsonian in the event of loss or damage. Any recovery for depreciation or loss of value shall be calculated as a percentage of the insured value specified by the Lender in the Agreement.

Reproduction and Credit

1. Unless otherwise notified in writing by the Lender, the Museum may photograph or reproduce the objects lent for educational, catalog, and publicity purposes.

2. It is understood that objects or exhibit may be photographed by the general public.

3. Unless otherwise instructed in writing, the Museum will give credit to the Lender as specified on the face of this agreement in any publications. Whether individual labels are provided for objects on display is at the discretion of the Museum.

Change in Ownership and/or Address

It is the responsibility of the Lender or his agent to notify the Museum promptly, in writing, if there is any change in ownership of the objects (whether through inter vivos transfer or death) or if there is a change in the identity or address of the Lender. The Museum assumes no responsibility to search for a Lender (or owner) who cannot be reached at the address-of-record.

Return of Loans

1. Unless otherwise agreed in writing, a loan terminates on the date specified on the face of this agreement. If no date is specified, the loan shall be for a reasonable period of time, but in no event to exceed three years. Upon termination of the loan, the Lender is on notice that a return or renewal must be effected, or else an unrestricted gift of the object will be inferred.

2. Objects will be returned only to the Lender-of-Record or to a location mutually agreed upon in writing by the Museum and the Lender-of-Record. In case of uncertainty, the Museum reserves the right to require a Lender/Claimant to establish title by proof satisfactory to the Museum.

3. When the loan is returned, the Museum will send the Lender a receipt form. If this form is not signed and returned within thirty days after mailing , the Museum will not be responsible for any damage or loss.

4. If the Museum's efforts to return objects within a reasonable period following the termination of the loan are unsuccessful, then the objects will be maintain at the Lender's risk and expense for a maximum of two years. If after two years the objects have not been claimed, then and in consideration for maintenance and safeguarding, the Lender/Owner shall be deemed to have made the objects an unrestricted gift to the Museum.

Applicable Law

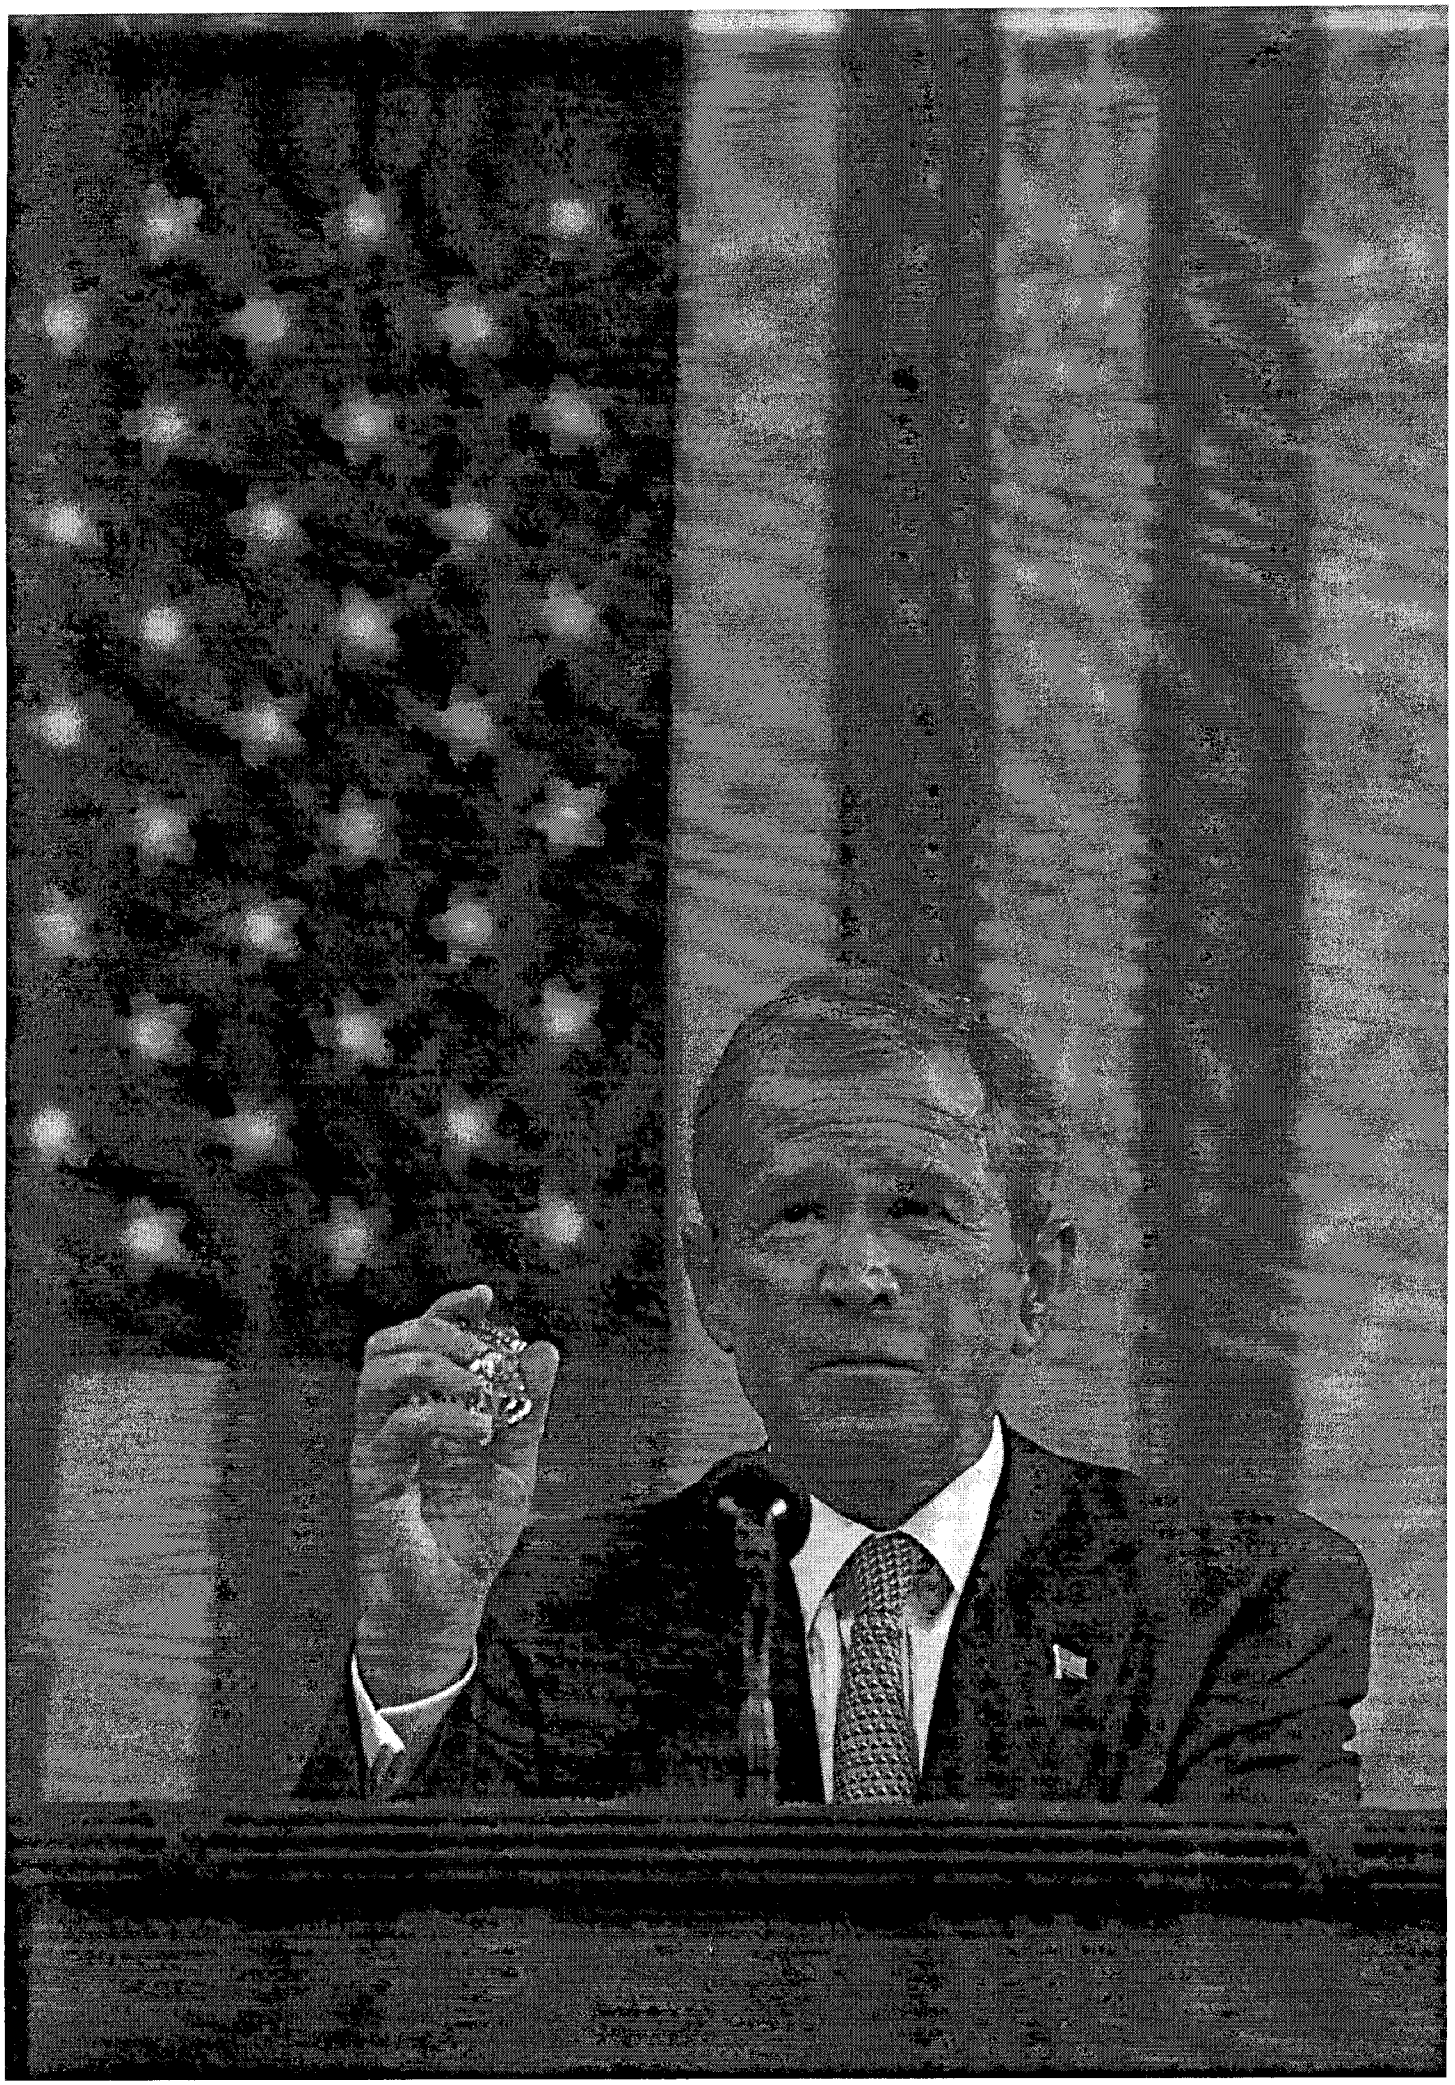
The agreement shall be construed in accordance with law of the District of Columbia.

I have read and agree to the above conditions and certify that I am authorized to agree thereto.

Signed: _____ Date: _____

☐ Owner ☐ Authorization Agent

Title: _____



Approved for the National Museum of American History:

Signed: _____ Date: _____

Title: _____

Please Sign and Return Both Copies

REV_00260517

AUTHORITY
POLICE
1012

REV_00260520

Solicitor General Reports

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 53
Folder 6

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 5

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: Room 5143

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: _____

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or the employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 3/25/03 TIME: 10:36 a.m. INITIALS: eb

REV_00260522

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Solicitor General's Office Updates

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1652/1520
9603

Box 53
Folder 7

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 5

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: 5712

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 541-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or th employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 4/23/02 TIME: 10:55 am INITIALS: eb

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 3

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 2/12/02 TIME: 11:45am INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

February 11, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

A. NEXT WEEK

- Office of Solicitor General to Argue in Public Housing Cases. On February 19, the Department will argue as petitioner in HUD v. Rucker, a case that has been consolidated with Oakland Housing Authority v. Rucker. The question presented is whether a statutorily required provision in a public housing lease — which provides that any drug-related activity by the tenant, the tenant's family, or anyone under the tenant's control provides cause to terminate the lease — is breached by drug-related activity of which the tenant did not know or have reason to know.

- Solicitor General to Argue as Amicus Curiae in School Voucher Case. On February 20, the Department will argue as amicus curiae in support of the petitioners in Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, which the Supreme Court has ordered consolidated with Hanna Perkins School v. Simmons-Harris and Taylor v. Simmons-Harris. The question presented is whether the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment prevents a State from providing tuition aid as part of a general assistance program to the parents of children who attend failing public schools and authorizing the parents to use that aid to enroll their children in a private school of their own choosing, without regard to whether the school is religiously affiliated. The Department will argue that the program at issue survives constitutional scrutiny.

- Office of Solicitor General to File Brief in Criminal Case. On February 19, the Department will brief a brief as petitioner in United States v. Ruiz. The question presented is whether before pleading guilty, a criminal defendant has a constitutional right to obtain exculpatory information, including impeachment material, from the government, and, if so, whether that right may be waived through a plea agreement.

- Office of Solicitor General to File Brief in Criminal Case. On February 19, the Department will file a brief as petitioner in United States v. Drayton. The question presented is whether an officer who informs a passenger on a bus that the officer is conducting drug and illegal weapons interdiction and asks the passenger for consent to search, while another officer stays at the front of the bus without blocking the exit, has effected a "seizure" of that passenger withing the meaning of the Fourth Amendment and Florida v. Bostick, 501 U.S. 429 (1991).

- Office of Solicitor General to File Brief in Criminal Case. On February 19, the Department will file a brief as petitioner in United States v. Cotton. The question presented is whether the omission from a federal indictment of a fact that enhances the statutory maximum sentence requires a court of appeals to vacate the enhanced sentence notwithstanding the defendant's failure to object to the sentence, the government's having introduced overwhelming proof of the fact that supports the enhanced sentence, and the defendant's having had notice that the fact could be used to seek an enhanced sentence.

- Office of Solicitor General to File Brief in Social Security Case. On February 19, the Department will file a brief as respondent in Gisbrecht v. Barnhart. The question presented is whether a court, when determining a "reasonable" attorney's fee under 42 U.S.C. 406(b), which is paid as a deduction from the back benefit award of a claimant for social security benefits who obtained a favorable judgment in court, should calculate the fee based on the "lodestar" method (which multiplies the hours that the attorney worked by the reasonable hourly rate, with certain adjustments for other relevant factors), or instead by applying a rebuttable presumption that the attorney should receive 25% of the back benefit award, which is the maximum award permitted by the statute. The Department will argue that courts should employ the former method.

- Office of Solicitor General to File Brief in Criminal Case. On February 22, the Department will file a brief as respondent in Harris v. United States. As framed by the Court, the question presented is: Given that a finding of "brandishing," as used in 18 U.S.S. Sec. 924(c)(1)(A), results in an increased mandatory minimum sentence, must the fact of "brandishing" be alleged in the indictment and proved beyond a reasonable doubt?

B. THIS WEEK

- Nothing to report.

C. LAST WEEK

- Nothing to report.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Counsel's Office Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: January 16, 2002

RE: Office of Solicitor General Update

Attached is the latest update from the Solicitor General.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 4

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: 5712

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 541-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or th employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 4/29/02 TIME: 5:30pm INITIALS: eb

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 6

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: 5712

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 541-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or th employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 6/25/02 TIME: 12 noon INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

July 8, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: for Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

A. NEXT WEEK

- Office of Solicitor General To File Petition for Certiorari in Drug Trafficking Case. On July 12, the Department will file a petition for certiorari in United States v. McGowan. The question presented is whether the Federal Rules of Evidence categorically bar expert testimony about the structure and modus operandi of drug-trafficking organizations. The Department will argue that such evidence may be admitted where ordinary standards for relevant expert testimony are satisfied.

- Office of Solicitor General To File Brief in Abortion Protest Cases. On July 12, the Department will file a brief in Scheidler v. NOW and Operation Rescue v. NOW. The questions presented are: (i) whether The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) authorizes private parties to seek injunctive relief, and (ii) whether obtaining by threat control over a corporation's assets constitutes "extortion" for purposes of the Hobbs Act. The Department will argue that only the Attorney General may obtain injunctive relief under RICO, and that obtaining such control can constitute extortion of property.

B. THIS WEEK

- Office of Solicitor General Filed Brief as Petitioner in Indian Affairs Case. On July 8, the Department filed a brief as petitioner in United States v. White Mountain Apache Tribe. In 1960, Congress declared that a former military post in Arizona would "be held by the United States in trust for the White Mountain Apache Tribe, subject to the right of the Secretary of the Interior to use any part of the land and improvements for administrative or school purposes for as long as they are needed for that purpose." The question presented is whether that act of Congress authorizes the award of money damages against the United States for alleged breach of trust in connection with such property; the Department argued that it does not.

- Office of Solicitor General Filed Petition for Certiorari in Related Immigration Cases. On July 3, the Department filed a petition for certiorari in INS v. Chen. The questions presented are: (i) whether the court of appeals wrongly reversed the Board of Immigration Appeals' assessment of a witness's credibility, and (ii) whether, following such reversal, the court of appeals improperly declined to remand other legal and factual issues for determination by the Board. The Department argued that the court of appeals erred on both points.

On July 5, the Department filed a petition for certiorari in INS v. Ventura. The question presented is whether, after reversing one of the Board of Immigration Appeals' determinations in a case, the court of appeals improperly declined to remand other legal and factual issues for determination by the Board. The Department argued that the case should be either consolidated with Chen or held pending disposition of the petition in Chen.

- Office of Solicitor General Filed Brief as Intervenor in Transportation Case. On July 5, the Department filed a brief as intervenor in Pierce County v. Guillen. To comply with federal law, a State that seeks federal funding for highway safety improvements must compile and collect certain data to support its request; Section 409 of Title 23 restricts individuals' ability to discover and use such compilations in litigation. The questions presented are: (i) whether the Supreme Court of Washington issued a final appealable judgment, (ii) whether a private individual has standing to challenge Section 409, (iii) whether Section 409 shields data compiled by local governments for reasons unrelated to obtaining federal highway funding, and (iv) whether Section 409 is a valid exercise of Congress's powers under Article I of the Constitution. The Department argued that finality and standing were satisfied, that Section 409 shelters only information compiled for highway safety purposes, and that Section 409 is a proper exercise of congressional power.

C. LAST WEEK

- Nothing to report.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 3

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: 5712

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 541-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or th employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 7/9/02 TIME: 3:20pm INITIALS: eb

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-5104

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 7

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: Room 5143

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS:

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient or the employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 1/21/03 TIME: 5:21pm INITIALS: eb

REV_00260549

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

[Southern California Americans for Democratic Action Email on Barbara Boxer]

OA/NARA#: 2162/2073
9692

Box 53
Folder 8

REV_00260555

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

[Special Access Request]
[Folder 1]

OA/NARA #: 1825/1743
9633

Box 53
Folder 9

FAX

Office of the Historian
Bureau of Public Affairs
U.S. Department of State
Washington, DC 20520

Date March 5, 2003
Number of pages including cover sheet 13

To:
Brett M. Kavanaugh

Phone
Fax Phone 202-456-5104
CC:

From:
Paul Claussen
Chief, Special Projects
Division (PA/HO)

E-mail Claussenp@State.gov
Phone 202-663-1126
Fax Phone 202-663-1289

REMARKS:

☐ Urgent ☐ For your review ☐ Reply ASAP ☐ Please comment

Followup to our phone conversation of February 11, 2003 - Department of State now urgently needs Clinton White House materials on Middle East.

Paul

From → e-forms is unlimited sys/s

- apk. Exp for s...

-

- Sorry I've been dig on Pdig work

FAX

Office of the Historian
Bureau of Public Affairs
U.S. Department of State
Washington, DC 20520

Date Feb 11, 2003
Number of pages including cover sheet 4

To: Brett M. Kavanaugh

Phone
Fax Phone 202-456-5104
CC:

From:

Paul Claussen
Chief, Special Projects
Division (PA/HO)

E-mail Claussenp@State.gov
Phone 202-663-1126
Fax Phone 202-663-1289

REMARKS:

☐ Urgent ☐ For your review ☐ Reply ASAP ☐ Please comment

As we discussed on the phone just now.

Paul

Counsel's office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

[Special Access Request]
[Folder 2]

Box 53
Folder 10

OA/NARA #: 2175 /2086
9795

REV_00260564

MEMORANDUM

If a witness refuses to comply with a duly authorized subpoena from a Senate committee, a committee may initiate a civil action to enforce the subpoena. The procedures for civil enforcement of Senate subpoenas are established in 2 U.S.C. § 288d and 28 U.S.C. § 1365. Under the subpoena enforcement statute, a subpoena may be enforced civilly only by the Senate's adoption of a resolution directing the Legal Counsel to bring an action in district court to enforce the subpoena.

Following a witness's refusal to comply with a subpoena after having been ordered and directed to do so, the first step toward civil enforcement of the subpoena is for the committee to report a resolution to the Senate by a majority vote at a committee meeting at which a majority of the committee's members are physically present. 2 U.S.C. § 288d(c)(1). The committee must accompany the resolution with a report that describes the procedure followed in issuing the subpoena, the extent to which the witness complied with the subpoena, any objections or privileges raised by the witness, and the reasons that the committee decided to proceed by civil enforcement, rather than by certifying a criminal action for contempt of Congress or initiating a contempt proceeding directly before the Senate. 2 U.S.C. § 288d(c)(2).

The Whitewater committee resolution specifically authorizes the committee to report resolutions for civil enforcement of committee subpoenas to the Senate. S. Res. 120, 104th Cong., 1st Sess. § 5(b)(10) (1995). The committee must order and direct a witness to comply with a documentary subpoena before seeking to enforce it civilly. S. Res. 120, § 5(b)(1).

At any time following the resolution's being reported to the Senate, it is in order to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. A motion to proceed to consideration of the resolution is highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to. 2 U.S.C. § 288j(a)(1). Once the Senate proceeds to consideration of a resolution to enforce a subpoena, there are no prescribed limits on debate on the resolution. Of the five civil subpoena enforcement actions initiated by the Senate, four have been agreed to by unanimous consent, and one, involving Senator Packwood's diaries, was authorized by roll call vote after two days of debate.

There is one significant limitation on the Senate's ability to invoke the civil enforcement mechanism. The civil enforcement statute excludes from its coverage actions against "an officer or employee of the Federal Government acting within his official capacity." 28 U.S.C. § 1365(a). The legislative history of this provision explains that it "should be construed narrowly. Therefore, a subpena against Federal government officers or employees not acting within the scope of their official duties is not excluded from the coverage of this jurisdictional statute." Public Officials Integrity Act of 1977, S. Rep. No. 170, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 92 (1977). The question that the Senate, and a court, would need to consider in addressing potential civil enforcement of a documentary subpoena to a former government employee is whether the then-employee prepared the documents within, or outside, his official duties. The answer to that question may be heavily dependent upon analysis of the facts in a particular case.

REV_00260566

Once a civil enforcement resolution has been reported by the committee and adopted by the Senate, the Senate Legal Counsel files a civil action in federal district court in the District of Columbia applying in the committee's name for a declaratory judgment or an order requiring the witness to comply with the committee's subpoena. In his or her response to the committee's application, the witness has an opportunity to raise any objections or privileges implicated by the subpoena. If the court agrees with the committee's position and overrules the witness's objections, the court would issue an order requiring the witness to comply with the committee subpoena. The committee would then provide the witness with another opportunity to answer its questions or to produce the required documents.

Continued refusal to testify or produce documents in obedience to an order of the court would be punishable as a contempt of the court's order. The committee would initiate a summary contempt proceeding in court by applying for an order to show cause why the witness should not be held in contempt for disobeying the court's order. If the court overruled the witness's objections to a contempt order, the court would impose upon the witness sanctions to compel the witness to obey the court's order to testify. These sanctions could include incarceration, imposition of a daily fine, or both. The sole purpose of these sanctions under the civil enforcement mechanism, rather than a criminal contempt proceeding, is to compel the witness to provide the testimony or documents that the committee seeks. Therefore, the witness may purge the contempt at any time by agreeing to obey the court's order to testify. If the witness should continue to refuse to comply, the period of incarceration or other sanction would extend as long as the committee continued to seek the witness's testimony -- presumably for the duration of the committee's investigation.

REV_00260567

A district court order adjudging the witness in contempt could be appealed to the court of appeals and review could be sought from the Supreme Court. The decision whether the district court's order imposing sanctions on the witness should be stayed pending review by the court of appeals, or should be enforced immediately, rests within the courts' discretion.

The Senate has invoked the civil enforcement mechanism five times, since the subpoena enforcement statute was enacted in 1978. On two occasions in the early 1980s, the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations enforced subpoenas to witnesses. On a third occasion, in 1987, the Senate Iran-Contra Committee applied for an order requiring a witness to comply with a directive to consent to disclosure of his foreign bank records. The committee ultimately obtained the materials, but not through the enforcement proceeding. The civil enforcement mechanism was used a fourth time in 1989 when the Senate committee hearing evidence in Judge Alcee Hastings' impeachment trial obtained an order directing a witness to testify. Finally, in 1993-94, the Senate Ethics Committee enforced its subpoena to Senator Packwood for the Senator's diaries.

REV_00260568

REV_00260569

WASHINGTON LEGAL FOUNDATION

Legal Background

2009 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE, NW • WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036 • (202) 588-0302

Vol. 11 No. 8

February 16, 1996

THE CONGRESSIONAL SUBPOENA POWER

by

Douglas R. Cox

Each House of Congress has historically exercised the subpoena power as an adjunct to its investigatory functions. In most cases, the recipient of a congressional subpoena complies with its terms, or negotiates a more limited response that is acceptable to both sides; there is accordingly no public dispute over the subpoena, and no issue arises as to how such a subpoena might be enforced, if the recipient had refused to comply.

The recent controversy over the Whitewater notes of former associate counsel to the President, William Kennedy, squarely — albeit briefly — presented the question of how the Senate could secure enforcement of two committee subpoenas against a recalcitrant witness. In December 1995, the Senate's Special Committee To Investigate Whitewater Development Corporation and Related Matters issued subpoenas for notes taken by Kennedy during his service in the White House. The Administration directed Kennedy not to comply, and proffered a host of legal objections to the subpoenas. The Special Committee and the Senate thereafter voted to seek judicial enforcement of the outstanding subpoenas. An accommodation was ultimately reached and the subpoena enforcement action became moot.

The Kennedy subpoenas were unusual: the Administration's interest in the Kennedy notes, Kennedy's ethical obligations arising out of his former service as an associate counsel to the President, and repeated references by all involved to executive privilege gave the dispute the atmospherics of a constitutional struggle between the legislative and the executive branches. Nonetheless, the subpoenas were addressed not to any Administration official, but to Kennedy, a private citizen. Under the applicable statute, that fact greatly strengthened the Senate's legal position on enforcement.

Judicial enforcement of a congressional subpoena can become a more complicated question, however, when the subpoena is addressed to an executive branch official who invokes executive privilege in response. As discussed below, Congress faces surprising uncertainties in seeking direct enforcement of such a subpoena, but possesses numerous tools to vindicate its interests by indirect means.

Douglas R. Cox is counsel for the law firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and former Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the U.S. Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel at the end of the Bush Administration.

WLF publications are available on LEXIS/NEXIS® (filename "WLF").

The Washington Legal Foundation ("WLF") is a 501(C)(3) tax exempt organization and is America's largest pro-free enterprise public interest law & policy center. This Legal Backgrounder is one of a series of original papers written especially for and published by WLF's Legal Studies Division.

REV_00260570

Congressional Authority To Seek Enforcement of Subpoenas

Congress has broad investigative authority. In order to exercise that authority effectively, Congress has long exercised the power to issue subpoenas in order to secure documents and testimony. The rules of both Houses of Congress authorize the issuance of subpoenas in certain circumstances. E.g., House Rule XI(2)(m); Standing Senate Rule XXVI. In turn, the Supreme Court has held that Congress must have some enforcement mechanism available in order to ensure that its subpoenas are obeyed. E.g., McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 174 (1927) ("the power of inquiry — with process to enforce it — is an essential and appropriate auxiliary to the legislative function."); id. at 175 ("some means of compulsion are essential to obtain what is needed.").

Congressional subpoenas, of course, may present many issues other than enforceability. A subpoena may be issued in apparent violation of the relevant rule, or seek information outside the scope of the issuing committee's jurisdiction, or provide other bases for challenging its validity. But if a valid subpoena is issued to a serving member of the Administration, and if the President instructs that official to assert executive privilege with respect to the subpoena, what steps could be taken to secure enforcement of the subpoena?

Each House has essentially three possible routes to seek enforcement of its subpoenas: a civil action; a referral to the United States Attorney for criminal prosecution for contempt of Congress; and arrest by a congressional officer, traditionally the Sergeant-at-Arms. None of these routes provides a certain means to compel compliance.

Civil Enforcement. Civil enforcement is obviously the least draconian of the three enforcement mechanisms listed above. There is, however, no explicit statutory authority for either House of Congress to seek enforcement of its subpoenas against executive branch officials in the face of an assertion of executive privilege.

The Senate — but not the House — has explicit statutory authority to seek civil enforcement of its subpoenas against private individuals. 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b, 288d; 28 U.S.C. § 1365. The Special Committee and the Senate invoked those statutes in seeking enforcement against William Kennedy. 141 Cong. Rec. S18920-21 (daily ed. Dec. 19, 1995). Section 1365, however, contains an important exception for executive branch officials: the statute provides that "[t]his section shall not apply to an action to enforce . . . any subpoena or order issued to an officer or employee of the Federal Government acting within his official capacity." The Senate report accompanying Section 1365 provided that "[t]his exception in the statute is not intended to be a Congressional finding that the Federal courts do not now have the authority to hear a civil action to enforce a subpoena against an officer or employee of the Federal Government. However, if the Federal courts do not now have this authority, this statute does not confer it." 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 4216, 4307-08.

Arguably, the statutory exception should be read to preclude any civil enforcement action, at least by the Senate, against an executive branch official, on the theory that Section 1365 is meant to be the exclusive mechanism for such an enforcement action. At a minimum, the exception in Section 1365 clouds the authority of the Senate to seek civil enforcement of subpoenas against executive branch officials under any other statute.

Both Houses of Congress may have additional statutory authority to seek judicial enforcement of subpoenas under the grant of federal question jurisdiction found in 28 U.S.C. § 1331. In Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 366 F. Supp. 51, 59-61 (D.D.C. 1973), for example, the district court dismissed a subpoena enforcement action brought under Section 1331 solely on the ground that the amount in controversy requirement had not been satisfied. Section 1331 thereafter was amended to eliminate the amount in controversy requirement. See also United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 551 F.2d 384, 389 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (asserting jurisdiction over subpoena dispute under Section 1331). Nonetheless, no clear mechanism exists for either House of

Copyright © 1996 Washington Legal Foundation

ISSN 1056 3059

REV_00260571

Congress to seek civil enforcement of a subpoena against an Administration official who asserts executive privilege.

Further, the courts have shown considerable reluctance to involve themselves in this type of inter-branch dispute, with its obvious constitutional overtones. E.g., American Tel. & Tel. Co., 551 F.2d at 394 ("This dispute between the legislative and executive branches has at least some elements of the political-question doctrine in it. A compromise worked out between the branches is most likely to meet their essential needs and the country's constitutional balance."); United States v. House of Representatives of the United States, 556 F. Supp. 150, 152 (D.D.C. 1983) ("When constitutional disputes arise concerning the respective powers of the Legislative and Executive Branches, judicial intervention should be delayed until all possibilities for settlement have been exhausted," dismissing declaratory judgment action brought by the Justice Department to vindicate an assertion of executive privilege). As a result, there are significant obstacles to effective civil enforcement of a congressional subpoena against a determined Administration.

Referral for Criminal Prosecution. The statutes governing criminal contempt of Congress are found at 2 U.S.C. §§ 192 and 194. Section 192 defines the offense of contempt of Congress as including refusal to testify or to produce documents in response to a demand by either House. The offense is a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of "not more than $1,000 nor less than $100" and imprisonment for "not less than one month nor more than twelve months." Section 194 provides that whenever a witness fails to appear for testimony or to produce documents, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House must refer the matter "to the appropriate United States attorney, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for its action." Thus, the effectiveness of criminal referrals as an enforcement mechanism depends entirely on Section 194's direction that the United States Attorney has a "duty" to refer the matter to a grand jury.

Section 194 does not purport to require that a contumacious witness be prosecuted: even were the United States Attorney legally compelled by Section 194 to refer the matter to the grand jury, and even were the jury to return an indictment, the prosecutor could, consistent with the language of Section 194, refuse to sign the indictment, and no prosecution would result.

Moreover, the constitutional principle of separation of powers requires that the United States Attorney, as a member of the executive branch, retain discretion as to the exercise of the prosecutorial power in an individual case, and Congress may not by legislation take that discretion away. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 693 (1974) ("the Executive Branch has exclusive authority and absolute discretion to decide whether to prosecute a case").

The Justice Department has opined that Section 194 cannot be construed, as a matter both of statutory interpretation and constitutional principle, to require the U.S. Attorney to prosecute for contempt of Congress an executive branch official in this context. "Prosecution for Contempt of Congress of an Executive Branch Official Who Has Asserted a Claim of Executive Privilege," 8 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 101 (1984); see also "Response to Congressional Requests for Information Regarding Decisions Made Under the Independent Counsel Act," 10 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 68 (1986).

Congress was unable to secure the criminal prosecution of the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency in 1982. The Administrator, at the President's direction, refused to release certain documents to a House Subcommittee on grounds of executive privilege. The House approved a contempt of Congress resolution, and the Speaker referred the matter to the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia. Significantly, the United States Attorney declined to prosecute, citing ongoing negotiations between the parties, and a separate suit brought by the Department of Justice to block enforcement of the subpoena. See United States v. House of Representatives, supra. Eventually, the negotiations resulted in an accommodation and the contempt citation was "withdrawn."

Conceivably, Congress could seek to invoke the statute governing independent counsels in an effort to secure a criminal contempt prosecution, but that statute imposes procedural hurdles of its own. Indeed, independent counsels are required to "comply with the written or other established policies of the Department of Justice respecting enforcement of the criminal laws," unless such compliance "would be inconsistent with the purposes" of the independent counsel statute. 28 U.S.C. § 594(f)(1). Thus, an independent counsel would presumably adhere to the Justice Department's interpretation prohibiting, on both statutory and constitutional grounds, the application of 2 U.S.C. § 194 to executive branch officials in the context of an executive privilege dispute. Even if an independent counsel were to ignore that interpretation, the serious constitutional problems with such a prosecution would remain.

Copyright © 1996 Washington Legal Foundation

ISSN 1056 3059

REV_00260572

Section 194 thus does not appear to present a credible threat to executive branch officials, and its effectiveness as a means of securing enforcement of congressional subpoenas is limited.

Arrest By Congressional Officers. There remains the option of self-help: either House, faced with a contumacious witness, could presumably order one of its officers to effect an arrest and to bring the witness to the bar of the aggrieved House. The Supreme Court has held that Congress has the inherent power to imprison individuals for contempt. Jurney v. MacCracken, 294 U.S. 125 (1935). Indeed, both Jurney and McGrain, cited above, arose in those circumstances: the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate had arrested a contumacious witness, who filed a petition for habeas corpus. Jurney, 294 U.S. at 143; McGrain, 273 U.S. at 154. This option is sometimes described as "the inherent contempt power."

It is far from plain, however, that the courts today would countenance a congressional assertion of combined judicial authority (the contempt resolution) and executive power (imprisonment), even if those powers were exercised as "incidental" to the legislative power. Moreover, as a practical matter, instances in which a House of Congress would be prepared to order the arrest of an executive branch official for contempt are presumably rare. Finally, the same constitutional considerations that limit the application of the criminal contempt statute to executive branch officials asserting a claim of executive privilege would seem to require similar limitations on whatever inherent self-help authority Congress possesses. See 8 Op. Off. Legal Counsel at 140 n.42.

Other Enforcement Tools Available To Congress

Is Congress really all that powerless in subpoena disputes with the executive branch? Of course not. As an historical matter, Presidents have been reluctant to assert executive privilege in all but the most clear-cut cases, and as noted above, accommodation rather than confrontation has been the keynote of most congressional attempts to obtain executive branch documents or testimony.

Moreover, Congress retains a host of other tools to secure the information and testimony it needs. Not least of these is the force of public opinion: in the Kennedy dispute, for example, many newspapers opined editorially that the Administration should make Kennedy's notes available to the Senate, and Senators rushed to enter those editorials in the Congressional Record. Moreover, even assuming that a citation for contempt does not lead to criminal prosecution, presumably few Administrations — and few officials within an Administration — would welcome a contempt citation, with the resultant publicity and public criticism.

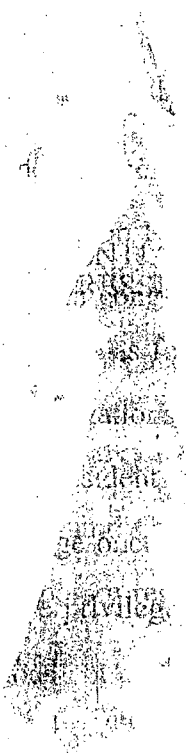
Congress can also delay action on bills favored by the Administration, or use the power of the purse to increase pressure on the executive branch; Administration nominations can be placed on hold in the Senate; and ultimately, of course, Congress possesses the constitutional power of impeachment.

Congress thus retains ample means by which to defend its legitimate interests and to secure the information and testimony it requires. History demonstrates that these indirect means are sufficient to enable Congress to perform its legislative function, even if constitutional or other considerations limit the effectiveness of more direct means of subpoena enforcement.

Copyright © 1996 Washington Legal Foundation

ISSN 1056 3059

To receive information about previous Washington Legal Foundation publications contact the Legal Studies Division. Material concerning WLF's other legal activities may be obtained by contacting Daniel J. Popeo, Chairman.



REV_00260573

Service of Congressional Subpoena
On U.S. Citizens Abroad

Congressional Oversight Manual at CRS-33: "Service may be effected anywhere in the United States. The subpoena power reaches aliens in the United States. Securing compliance of United States nationals and aliens living in foreign countries present more complex problems."

Grabow at 83: "With respect to the issuance of a subpoena to a witness residing on foreign soil, the simple answer is that the Congress may issue and seek to serve a subpoena anywhere, whether in this or any other country; to obtain attendance, a house of Congress retains its historical power to enforce its subpoenas by issuing a warrant ordering its Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest a witness and bring him or her before the bar of the parent body. If the witness were outside of the country, however, the only realistic means of securing compliance would be judicial enforcement. If, as seems likely, a court would enforce a congressional bupooena in circumstances similar to that in which it would enforce its own subpoenas, Congress would likely be able to obtain enforcement of a subpoena issued to a United States national in a foreign country*, but not a subpoena issued to an alien abroad."

*Judicial subpoenas may be issued upon U.S. nationals in foreign countries. See 28 USC §1783.

National Archives & Records Administration

facsimile TRANSMITTAL

[redacted]

to: Alberto R. Gonzales

fax #: (202) 456-6279

re: NLMS 2003-036

date: June 17, 2003

pages: [3 Pages (including cover sheet)].

From the desk of...

Nancy Smith
Director
Presidential Materials Staff
700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20408
Telephone: (202) 501-5700
Fax: (202) 501-5709
Email: nancy.smith@nara.gov

National Archives and Records Administration

700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20408-0001

VIA FACSIMILE
(NLMS 2003-036)

June 17, 2003

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20502

Re: United States v. Philip Morris, Inc., et al., No 99-CV-2496 (GK) (D.D.C.)

Dear Judge Gonzales:

This letter is being written to provide you, on behalf of the incumbent President, with notice that, pursuant to ongoing discovery in the above-captioned action, the Justice Department has determined that additional Clinton Presidential and Gore Vice Presidential textual and email records should now be disclosed to defendants. Pursuant to the Presidential Records Act (PRA), 44 U.S.C. 2205(2), and Executive Order 13233, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) is providing you with this formal notice of our intent to make these records available to defendants in the litigation, absent the assertion of privilege.

The records at issue constitute 32 pages previously identified on various of the government's privilege logs, and subsequently made subject to one or more challenges by defendants. These records have since been made available to Bruce Lindsey and Lisa Brown, who represent President Clinton and Vice President Gore, respectively, in this litigation, for the purpose of reassessing the government's continuing claims of privilege. The representatives, upon further review, have informed DOJ that they have no objection to this group of records being released in whole or in part to defendants under the provisions of the governing protective order in the lawsuit (Order #123, dated February 14, 2002).

Consistent with the provisions of EO 13233 and Order #123, the incumbent President has 21 days from receipt of this letter to inform us of your decision with respect to any remaining privilege concerns or other reasons for continued nondisclosure of these documents. The Justice Department has asked that, if at all possible, your review be expedited for this group of records. We are here providing this further set of documents for White House Counsel's review.

REV_00260576

If you have any questions relating to this request, please contact me at (202) 501-5700, or Jason Baron in the Office of General Counsel, at (301) 837-1499.

Sincerely,

Nancy Kegan Smith

NANCY KEGAN SMITH
Director
Presidential Materials Staff

cc:
H. Christopher Bartolomucci, White House Counsel's Office
Paul P. Colborn, DOJ/OLC
Bruce R. Lindsey, Representative of President William J. Clinton
Lisa Brown, Representative of Vice President Albert Gore
David S. Klontz, DOJ Civil Tobacco Litigation Team
Jason R. Baron, NARA Office of General Counsel

REV_00260577

National Archives & Records Administration

facsimile TRANSMITTAL

[redacted]

to: Alberto R. Gonzales

fax #: (202) 456-6279

re: Notification of intent to release Bush Presidential records (NLMS 2003-041)

date: June 24, 2003

pages: [4 Pages (including cover sheet)].

Copies of these records will be delivered to Brett Kavanaugh's office today.

From the desk of...

Nancy Smith
Director
Presidential Materials Staff
700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20408
Telephone: (202) 501-5700
Fax: (202) 501-5709
Email: nancy.smith@nara.gov

National Archives and Records Administration

700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20408-0001

VIA FACSIMILE
(NLMS 2003-041)

June 24, 2003

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20502

Dear Judge Gonzales:

In accordance with the requirements of the Presidential Records Act (PRA), 44 U.S.C. §§2201-2207 and Executive Order 13233, this letter constitutes a formal notice from the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) to the incumbent President of our intent to open Bush Presidential records in response to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request listed in Attachment A.

This material, consisting of 324 pages, was previously restricted from release under 44 U.S.C. §2204(a)(1) and/or 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(1). In accordance with sections 3.5 and 3.6 of Executive Order 12958, as amended, archivists at the George Bush Library returned copies of these documents to the originating and/or equity agencies for a classification review. These documents have subsequently been declassified in whole or in part by those agencies. Because these records do not require closure under any of the six PRA Presidential restrictive categories that President Bush imposed, including confidential communications requesting or submitting advice, or any applicable FOIA exemptions, NARA is proposing to open these 324 pages.

In order to fulfill the White House Counsel's Office request that NARA provide the incumbent President with document-level information about formerly classified material proposed for release as well as the agencies authorizing their declassification, copies of these Bush Presidential records can be found at Attachment B. Please inform us at your earliest convenience of your decision with respect to any privilege claims. We are also concurrently informing former President Bush's representative, James W. Cicconi, of our intent to release these records. Pursuant to E.O. 13233, NARA will not release the documents unless and until former President Bush and the incumbent President agree to authorize access to the records.

If you have any questions relating to this request, please contact me at (202) 501-5700 or NARA General Counsel Gary M. Stern at (301) 837-3026.

Sincerely,

Nancy Kegan Smith

NANCY KEGAN SMITH
DIRECTOR
Presidential Materials Staff

Enclosures

REV_00260579

cc: Brett Kavanaugh
Associate Counsel to the President
Paul Colborn
Office of Legal Counsel, Department of Justice
Gary M. Stern
General Counsel, National Archives and Records Administration
Doug Menarchik
Director, George Bush Library

REV_00260580

ATTACHMENT A

Case Number	Requester	Request Topic	Pages Proposed for Opening
1998-0099-F/2	Allison Astorino-Courtois	Persian Gulf Conflict	324

###

REV_00260581

National Archives & Records Administration

facsimile TRANSMITTAL

[redacted]

to: Alberto R. Gonzales

fax #: (202) 456-6279

re: NLMS 2003-042

date: June 24, 2003

pages: [3 Pages (including cover sheet)].

From the desk of...

Nancy Smith
Director
Presidential Materials Staff
700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20408
Telephone: (202) 501-5700
Fax: (202) 501-5709
Email: nancy.smith@nara.gov

National Archives and Records Administration
700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20408-0001

VIA FACSIMILE
(NLMS 2003-042)

June 24, 2003

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20502

Re: United States v. Philip Morris, Inc., et al., No 99-CV-2496 (GK) (D.D.C.)

Dear Judge Gonzales:

This letter is being written to provide you, on behalf of the incumbent President, with notice that, pursuant to ongoing discovery in the above-captioned action, the Justice Department has determined that additional Clinton Presidential and Gore Vice Presidential e-mail records should now be disclosed to defendants. Pursuant to the Presidential Records Act (PRA), 44 U.S.C. 2205(2), and Executive Order 13233, NARA is providing you with this formal notice of our intent to make available to defendants in the litigation, absent the assertion of privilege.

The records at issue constitute approximately 700 pages previously identified on various of the government's privilege logs, and subsequently made subject to one or more challenges by defendants. These records have since been made available to Bruce Lindsey and Lisa Brown, who represent President Clinton and Vice President Gore, respectively, in this litigation, for the purpose of reassessing the government's continuing claims of privilege. The representatives, upon further review, have informed DOJ that they have no objection to this group of records being released to defendants under the provisions of the governing protective order in the lawsuit (Order #123, dated February 14, 2002).

Consistent with the provisions of EO 13233 and Order #123, the incumbent President has 21 days from receipt of this letter to inform us of your decision with respect to any remaining privilege concerns or other reasons for continued nondisclosure of these documents. The Justice Department has asked that, if at all possible, your review can be expedited for this group of records. We are here providing this further set of documents for White House Counsel's review.

REV_00260583

If you have any questions relating to this request, please contact me at (202) 501-5700, or Jason Baron in the Office of General Counsel, at (301) 837-1499.

Sincerely,

Nancy Kegan Smith

NANCY KEGAN SMITH
Director
Presidential Materials Staff

cc:
H. Christopher Bartolomucci, White House Counsel's Office
Paul P. Colborn, DOJ/OLC
Bruce R. Lindsey, Representative of President William J. Clinton
Lisa Brown, Representative of Vice President Albert Gore
David S. Klontz, DOJ Civil Tobacco Litigation Team
Jason R. Baron, NARA Office of General Counsel

REV_00260584

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 3, 2003

Nancy Smith
Director, Presidential Materials Staff
National Archives and Records Administration
Washington, DC 20408

Dear Ms. Smith:

This letter approves access by historians from the Office of the Secretary of Defense to the National Security Council institutional files as requested by Alfred Goldberg, OSD Historian. These NSC files are maintained as presidential records by the National Archives and Records Administration. The OSD Historical Office has requested access for Dr. Richard Hunt, who is working on a history of OSD from 1969-73. Future requests will identify individual historians and provide their specific research subjects. The Historical Office also will verify the historians' clearances with the National Archives and Records Administration.

This letter does not pre-approve the disclosure of any records or information reviewed or obtained by the historians during their research. All rights, privileges and immunities pertaining to the reviewed records, and the information contained therein, are reserved pending subsequent review and decision. The review of all documents selected by the OSD Historical Office for potential declassification or publication will be coordinated by the NSC in accordance with applicable law, including Executive Order 13233.

Sincerely,

Brett M. Kavanaugh

Brett M. Kavanaugh
Associate Counsel to the President

Cc: William Leary
Alfred Goldberg

REV_00260586

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State - Foreign Assets

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 53
Folder 11

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division
Federal Programs Branch
901 E St. N.W. Rm 862
Washington, D.C. 20004

Carol Federighi
Trial Attorney

Tel: (202) 514-1903
Fax: (202) 616-8460 (alternate numbers, 616-8470/8202)

FAX TRANSMITTAL COVER SHEET

DATE: August 7, 2002

TO: JOCK SCHARFEN
456-9110

FROM: CAROL FEDERIGHI

THERE ARE A TOTAL OF ___ PAGES INCLUDING THIS COVER PAGE IN THIS TRANSMITTAL.

JAMES COOPER-HILL, P.C.
ATTORNEY AT LAW
1111 EAST MAIN STREET
ROCKPORT, TEXAS 78382
(361) 729-3565
FAX (361) 729-3946
E-MAIL: Cmpwlaw@AOL.com

JAMES COOPER-HILL
Board Certified, Consumer & Real Estate Law
Board Certified, Residential Real Estate Law
Texas Board of Legal Specialization

Also admitted in Ohio, California and Colorado

October 15, 2001

Honorable Colin L. Powell
Department of State
2201 C Street NW
Washington, D.C. 20520

Re: Daliberti et al vs. Republic of Iraq; Cause No. 96-CV-1118 in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

My co-counsel, Andrew Hall and Nelson Jones, and I represent four United States citizens and their spouses who are the plaintiffs and judgment creditors in the above referenced matter. Each of the four men were detained by the government of Iraq in three episodes. Chad Hall was kidnaped at gunpoint in Kuwait in 1992, transported across the border into Iraq and tortured.

Ken Beaty was captured at a checkpoint and held hostage for seven months in 1993. Iraq sought to have the sanctions lifted in exchange for his release but after the delivery of $5 million in exempt medical supplies, Senator David Boren (D. Okla) obtained his release from Deputy Premier Tarriq Azziz and brought Mr. Beaty home.

David Daliberti and Bill Barloon were also captured at a checkpoint. Again the government of Iraq attempted to link their release to a lifting of the sanctions. Then Congressman Bill Richardson negotiated directly with Premier Saddam Hussein and brought the men home.

Suit was filed in May, 1996 on behalf of these four men and their spouses pursuant to the Anti-Terrorism & Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996. While Iraq sought dismissal and challenged the suit over a period of several years, the matter was tried earlier this year and a judgment entered against Iraq. A copy of the Judgment and Order is enclosed.

The time for any appeal has now passed and the judgment is final. All that is left is to levy on assets of the Republic of Iraq to obtain satisfaction of the judgment. Under existing law both the Department of State and the Department of the Treasury are required to assist in this effort.

EXHIBIT
C

An informal request was made of the State Department in June this year but assistance in satisfying the judgment was refused. This letter is a formal request that the Department of State provide the assistance the law requires and comply with the following statute:

> "At the request of any party in whose favor a judgment has been issued with respect to a claim for which the foreign state is not immune under §1605(a)(7), the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State shall fully, promptly and effectively assist any judgment creditor or any court that has issued any such judgment in identifying, locating, and executing against the property of that foreign state or any agency or instrumentality of such state." 28 U.S.C. §1610(f)(1)(A).

A similar letter is being sent this date to the Secretary of the Treasury, likewise seeking the assistance which the law requires. Two weeks from the date of this letter, a Writ of Execution will be requested from the court if an affirmative response is not forthcoming within that time period.

We all look forward to your assistance in bringing justice and closure to these brave Americans who have suffered at the hands of terrorist states.

Very truly yours,

James Cooper-Hill

JCH/ns
cc: Andrew Hall
Nelson Jones

REV_00260589

REV_00260590

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

[State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances]

OA/NARA#: 1824/1742
9632

Box 53
Folder 12

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Alameda	CA					No such ordinance - See email from Deputy City Clerk. Discrimination based upon sexual orientation not mentioned.	Emailed to City Clerk, ordinances not online.
City of Albany	NY	Yes			Code of the City of Albany, New York, v22, Part I Administrative Legislation, Chapter 48, Equal Employment Opportunity; Affirmative Action, et al, Article III Omnibus Human Rights Law, Section 48-26 (E.3)	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.
City of Albuquerque	NM				Section 13, Housing Authority	Does not mention sexual orientation in criteria for doing business within bounds of building affordable housing. GOV TV (Government Access Cable Channel): does not allow discrimination based upon sexual orientation.
City of Alexandria	VA		Yes	Yes	Muni. Code 12, Chapter 4 "Human Rights Ordinance"; Sec. 12-4-5, 12-4-6	Employers may not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. City contractors may not discriminate--but does not mention sexual orientation. Religious exemption when religion is a bona fide occupational qualification.
City of Alfred	NY	Yes			Article II, Section I	"No person, corporation, or other legally recognized entity within corporation limits of the Village shall discriminate against any person or persons for reasons of race, color, religion, age, sex, marital status or sexual orientation."
City of Ames	IA		Yes		Chapter 14, Secton 14.6(1)(a)	"It shall be an unfair or discriminatory practice for any Person to refuse to hire, accept, register, classify, or refer for employment, to discharge any employee, or to otherwise discriminate in employment against any applicant for employment or any employee because of the age, race, creed, color, sex, national origin, religion, disability or sexual orientation of such applicant or employee, unless based upon the nature of the occupation."
City of Amherst	MA					nf	City clerk to mail to Regan 3/14/01
City of Anchorage	AK					Ban on employment discrimination. Does not include sexual orientation.
City of Ann Arbor	MI	Yes			Chapter 112. Non-Discrimination, Chapter 98. Building Safety and Engineering, Chapter 8. Boards and Commissions, Chapter 14. Purchasing, Contracting and Selling Procedures	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.
City of Anoka	MN					nf	City Clerk confirmed via phone that code does not contain non-discrimination provision re employment

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Determined to be an Administrative Marking Per E.O. 13526, SEC 3.4 (B)

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and ~~Confidential~~

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Empty Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Morgantown	WV					nf	Emailed city clerk at cityclerk@morgantown.com - codes not online. Unable to contact by phone.
City of Mountain View	CA		Maybe		Standard Provisions - Section 1.01	General City policy to not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. Purchasing/Contract Negotiation stated that current boilerplate language states that "each contractor/vendor shall not discriminate due to ... sexual orientation ...."	Left message with City Attorney's office. City Attorney (650-903-6490) forwarded to Public Works. Spoke with attorney (Shelly Emerson 2/28/01 12:00 PM). Fred Irwin of Purchasing/Contract Negotiation
City of New Haven	CT				Title III,Chapter 12 1/2 Article II, Section 12 1/2-23	Discrimination not allowed in City Contracts; language does not include sexual orientation.
City of New Orleans	LA					Not specified in code. Although Human Rights Ordinance includes "sexual orientation."	(504) 565-7916 - Director of Human Relations Commission - demanded request in writing. Emailed him at earlja@new-orleans.la.us. - email returned.
City of New York	NY					1st site applies to city employees - emailed from web site to procurement agency. Procurement agency sent email advising City Attorney would handle, who sent me to City Clerk. City Clerk said that State of New York Statutes superceded City's Code. State of New York Statutes prohibits employment discrimination generally, but does not include sexual orientation.
City of Oakland	CA		Yes		Municipal Code Article VIII Fiscal Administration Section 807-808 and Title 9 Public Peace,Morals, and Welfare, Chapter 9.44 Discrimination based on Sexual Orientation	Chapter 9.44.020 and Chapter 9.44.040 generally prohibit employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orietation, AIDS, or ARC status. Article 8, Section 808 only requires the City to review their bidding procedures every two years to determine the race and gender disparity. If they determine identifiable discrimination, the City shall establish "a narrowly tailored race and/or gender business participation program" to remedy the discrimination.
City of Oberlin	OH					nf	no web site
City of Olympia	WA				05.80.040 - Prohibited practices designated	Housing Discrimination and hate crimes covered.
City of Orlando	FL		Yes		Titel II, Chapter 57, Article One, Section 57.14(1) [NOTE: Sexual Orientation not applicable]; Article II, Chapter 57, Articles Two and Three establish Minority (race) and Women's Business Enterprise to allow for equal opportunity in bidding on City contracts	"It shall be unlawful for an employer, because of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, age, handicap or marital status of any individual, to refuse to hire or employ or to bar or to discharge from employment such individual or to discriminate against such individual in compensation or in terms, conditions or privileges of employment."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Orono	ME		Yes	Yes	Chapter 24 article IV	Discrimination based upon sexual orientation for all employers in city is prohibited. "This article does not…apply to a religious corporation, association, or organization."	Emailed city clerk at: kmorrill@spsd.org for information
City of Oxford	PA					nf	E-mail to Chamber of Commerce 3/16/01
City of Pacifica	CA					nf	Call to City Manager's Office 3/07/01 - confirmed no such code provisions or ordinances.
City of Palo Alto	CA				Title 2 Administrative Procedure, Chapter 2.30 Contracts Purchasing Procedures, Section 2.30.150(7) [Note: Does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of Sexual Orientation]	"If awarded the contract, the bidder will not discriminate in the employment of any person under the contract because of race, color, national origin or ancestry, or religion, of any such person."
City of Pasadena	CA				Title 4 Revenue and Finance, Chapter 4.09 Affirmative Action in Contracting; Title 8 Health and Safety, Chapter 8.82 Discrimination Against Victims of AIDS	4.09.050 specifically provides for equal employment opportunities in contracting with the city through a "Disadvantaged business enterprise programs" for those "minority" or "economically" disadvantaged businesses or businesses owned and controlled primarily by women. 8.82.030 specifically prohibits any employer from discriminating against those suffering from AIDS or an AIDS related condition.
City of Philadelphia	PA	Yes			§17-402. Contract Requirements	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. "Each city contract shall provide [that]…discrimination with regard to…sexual orientation…constitutes a substantial breach of such city contract."
City of Phoenix	AZ	Yes		Yes	Article V Affirmative Action Supplier's Ordinance Section 18-4(a)(2) [Employment Discrimination generally] and Section 18-4(a)(5).	"[I]t is an unlawful employment practice for employers that are vendors, suppliers, or contractors doing business with the City of Phoenix which employ 35 or more persons to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because of such individual's sexual orientation." "The provisions concerning sexual orientation…shall not apply to a bona fide religious organization."	Equal Opportunity Dept. (602) 262-7716

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Pittsburgh	PA	Yes	Yes		Tile One, Article VII, Chapter 161, Section 161.02 Competitive Bidding; Exceptions; Title Six, Article V, Chapter 659, Section 659.02 Unlawful Employment Practices	161.02(e)(5) Prohibits the city from contracting with business who has obtained goods or products made under sweatshop conditions where any worker has been "discriminated against in employment in any way on the basis of sex, race, religion, age, disability, sexual orientation, national origin, political opinion, or social or ethnic origin." 659.02(a) It is an unlawful employment practice "[f]or any employer to refuse to hire any person or otherwise to discriminate against any person with respect to hiring, tenure, compensation, promotion, discharge or any other terms, conditions, privileges directly or indirectly related to employment because of race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, place of birth, sex, sexual orientation, age, nonjob related handicap or disability."
City of Plattsburgh	NY					nf
City of Portland	OR	Yes		Yes	Title 3.100.005 City Policies Relating to Equal Employment Opportunity, et al.; Title 23.01.040 Re: Exceptions; Title 23.01.050 Discrimination in Employment	"It shall be unlawful to discriminate in employment on the basis of...sexual orientation, [or] gender identity...." Exemption for "space within a church...or other facility used primarily for religious purposes." 2/25/98--City adopted ordinance mandating those who want to do more than $2500 in business per year with the City to verify they do not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation.
City of Portland	ME		Yes	Yes	Section 2-48, City Ordinances; Code of Ordinances Sec. 13.5-23(a); Sec. 13.5-34(b)	City shall not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. "It shall be unlawful employment discrimination, in violation of this article, except where based on a bona fide occupational qualification: (a) For any employer to fail or refuse to hire or otherwise discriminate against any applicant for employment because of sexual orientation...." "This article does not...(b) Apply to a religious corporation, association or organization...."
City of Providence	RI				Chapter 21 REVENUE AND FINANCE	Nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation not a part of contract requirements.
City of Pullman	WA				Pullman City code Ch. 114 - Unable to pull Washington Code, website search engine down.	City shall not discriminate in hiring on the basis of sexual orientation. Contracts handled under "Washington State Standard Specifications for Road, Bridge and Construction," which includes a nondiscrimination clause which does not include sexual orientation.	Called Public Works Director for copy of standardized contract. Mark Workman (509) 334-4555 (left message). I spoke with Mark Workman 3/8/01. He advised.
City of Raleigh	NC		Maybe		Division II Part 4 Chapter 1 Article A Section 4 1004(d)	(d) The City Manager is directed to establish such policies as will insure that there is no discrimination in any function or area of City government. City policy is to oppose discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Riverside	CA	Yes			Chapter 6.26 Prohibition Against Aids Discrimination, Section 6.26.055. See Also Chapter 3.18 Equal Employment Opportunities for Public Works Contracts [providing that all contracts with the city in excess of $25,000 shall contain an affirmative action plan]	"All contracting agencies of the City of Riverside, or any department thereof, acting for or on behalf of the City, shall include in all contracts... a provision obligating the contractor, franchisee, lessee, concessionaire, or other party of the agreement not to discriminate on the ground or because of race, color, creed, national origin, ancestry, age, sex, sexual orientation, or disability including the medical condition AIDS or any condition related thereto."
City of Rochester	NY					nf
City of Rockville	MD				City Code, Chapter 17 - Procurement and Contract Formation	Sexual orientation not specified in contractor's hiring practices. Only housing nondiscrimination based upon sexual orientation mentioned in code.
City of Sacramento	CA		Yes		Title 9 Public Peace, Morals and Welfare, Chapter 9.20.020; Title 5 Business Licenses and Regulations, Chapter 5.28.1490 and 5.28.2440 prohibit licensees and franchisees contracting with the city to provide cable access from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, or marital status.	It is an unlawful practice for any employer to "fail or refuse to hire, or discharge an individual, discriminate against any individual with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, including promotion; or to limit, segregate or classify employees in any way which would adversely affect his or her status as an employee" on the basis of sexual orientation.
City of Salt Lake	UT					No sexual orientation language found.
City of San Diego	CA	Yes	Yes	Maybe	Nondiscrimination Policy, Chapter 2 Administration, Section 22.3504; Chapter 5 Public Safety, Morals, and Welfare, Section 52.9603(a)(1) Generally prohibits employers from discriminating on the basis of sexual orientation.	"It is the policy of the city of San Diego not to accept bids or proposals from, nor to engage in business with, any business firm that has discriminated on the basis of race, gender, religion, national origin, ethnicity, sexual orientation, age, disability, or any other form of unlawful discrimination in its solicitation, selection, hiring or treatment of another business. Exemption for "bona fide occuptational qualification."
City of San Francisco	CA	Yes			S.F. Admin. Code Ch. 12B	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. "All contracting agencies of the City...shall include in all contracts...a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate on the basis of the fact or perception of...sexual orientation, gender identity, domestic partner status...."
City of San Jose	CA	Yes			Title 4 Revenue, Finance and Business Taxes, Chapter 4.08 Violations of this Chapter, Section 4.08.070 [10.48.030 Generally prohibits any employer from discriminating on the basis of AIDS or any AIDS related condition only]	"It shall be a violation of this chapter for any contractor to discriminate or grant preferenctial treatment on the basis of race, sex, color, age, religion, sexual orientation, disability, ethnicity, or national origin, in the performance of any contract with the city or with the redevelopment agency of the city of San Jose."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Santa Barbara	CA	Yes		Maybe	Chapter 9.126 Non-Discriminatory Employment Provisions for All Contracts of the City, Section 9.126.020; Chapter 9.132.080 Prohibits Employment Discrimination on the basis of AIDS, ARC, or HIV.	"The Contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, ancestry, sexual orientation, political affiliation, or beliefs in sex, age, physical handicap, medical condition, marital status or pregnancy, except where such discrimination is based on bona fide occupational qualification."
City of Santa Cruz	CA		Yes		Title 9 Peace, Safety and Morals, Chapter 9.83, Section 9.83.030 and Section 9.83.070	Section 9.83.030 States it is an unlawful employment practice for any employer to fail to hire, refuse to hire, or discharge any individual for any "discriminatory reason" [as defined "as a result of that person's race, color, creed, religion, national origin, ancestry, disability, marital status, sex, gender, sexual orientation, height, weight, or physical characteristics"]. Section 9.83.070 states that with respect to city services, facilities, and transactions, "[t]he city shall be bound by the provisions of this chapter to the same extent as private individuals."
City of Santa Monica	CA		Yes	Yes	Article 4 Public Welfare, Morals, and Policy, Chapter 4.40.030	"It shall be unlawful employment practice for an employer to fail or refuse to hire, or to discharge any indivdual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment on the basis, in whole or in part, of such individual's sexual orientation." "No part of this chapter shall apply to bona fide religious organizations."
City of Seattle	WA	Yes			SMC 14.04.040 Unfair employment practices	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. "It is an unfair employment practice within the city for any employer to discriminate." Discrimination includes sexual orientation.
City of Shorewood Hills	WI					nf	Website does not have codes. Emailed Village Trustee Mark Sundquist PRA 6 No phone listed for Administration. Sent second email to a different Village trustee, Peter Hans, PRA 6
City of Somerville	MA					nf	Codes not listed on website. "Doing business with City page" does not include Contract sample. Emailed city clerk at jlong@ci.somerville.ma.us
City of Sorrento	ME					nf	no web site.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and ~~Confidential~~

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of South Portland	ME		Yes	Yes	Article VI, Division 1, Sec. 10-1101, et. seq.	Discrimination based on sexual orientation prohibited if usual place of employment is within city limits. Includes religious exemption--Nothing in this article applies to "a religious corporation, association, or organization."	Emailed city clerk at: Info@Orono.org
City of Southampton	NY	Yes			Article 15--Human Rights Law	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. Standardized language used references Article 15 (Human Rights Law) which includes sexual orientation.	Requested info from Richard J. Blowes, Town Management Services Administrator, Rblowes@town.southampton.ny.us - referred to Town Attorney's office, gave my fax and phone number. Spoke with Celia Gilvary, Assistant Town Atty in charge of contracts 631.287.3065
City of Spokane	WA					Human Rights Commission established "[t]o promote and secure mutual understanding and respect among all people regardless of race, color, sex, ancestry, gender, religion, affectional/sexual orientation, age, disability, familial/marital status, or economic condition."
City of Springfield	MA					nf	no web site.
City of St. Louis	MO	Maybe		Yes	St. Louis Revised Code Ch. 3.44.120	Discrimination based upon sexual orientation unlawful in city funded programs. "No person shall, on the ground of...sexual orientation...be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving funding...directly or indirectly from the City of St. Louis." Exemption for religious organizations using property for religious purposes.
City of St. Paul	MN	Yes			Chapter 183, City Ordinances, Human Rights and "Model Affirmative Action Plan" for non-construction contractor(s), Page 6	Discrimination based upon sexual or affectional orientation in contracting disallowed by City's contractual requirements.
City of Stamford	CT				Stamford CT Charter & Code, Chapter 47, Article IV, Section 47.15	Sexual orientation not mentioned in contractor's hiring practices.
City of Syracuse	NY		Yes	Yes	"Local Law No. 2" County of Onandaga, NY	"This law is created to eliminate and prevent discrimination based upon sexual or affectional preference or sexual orientation ..." Includes all employers with more than 4 employees. "Nothing contained in this law shall be construed to bar any religious or denominational institution or organization, or any organization operating for charitable or educational purposes...from giving preference to persons of the same religious or...from making such selection...to promote the religious principles for which it is established or maintained."	Received from Syracuse, NY City Clerk's Office.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Takoma Park	MD				Ord. 1989-52; 1992-33	Illegal to discriminate against city employees based on sexual orientation. "The City should treat all employees and applicants for employment fairly...sexual orientation...[is] not relevant to their treatment."
City of Tampa	FL		Yes	Maybe	Ord. 92-147, Sec. 2, 9-10-92	Illegal to discriminate against city employees based on sexual orientation with religious exemptions. "It is an unlawful employment practice for an employer to fail or refuse to hire...any individual, or, otherwise to discriminate...with respect to that person's...sexual orientation." Exemption when sexual orientation is a bona fide occupational qualification.
City of Telluride	CO		Yes	Maybe	Title 11, Chapter 11.04, Section 11.04.020	"It shall be unlawful for any person who is an employer or employment agency, directly or indirectly, to discriminate [defined as unequal treatment... because of that person's sexual orienation, heterosexuality, homosexuality, or bisexuality; race, color, creed, religion, ancestry, national origin, gender, pregnancy or childbirth; age, marital status, physical or mental disabilities, family responsibility, military status, or political affilation] against any person with regard to application, employment, hiring, occupational training, tenure, promotion, compensation, layoff, discharge, or any other term or condition of employment except when based upon a bona fide occupational qualification."
City of Toledo	OH		Yes	Yes	Chapter 115, Section 115.04(b) [Contracts - does not apply to sexual orientation]; Chapter 158, Section 158.02(a) [General - AIDS]; Chapter 554 [General]	554.02(a): "No employer... shall discriminate against any person with regard to hire, discharge, tenure... solely on grounds of race, religious creed, color, national origin, ancestry, sex, handicap, age, or sexual orientation." 115.04(b) "There shall be included in all leases entered into by the City... and all contracts for services to be performed for the City, a provision that lessee or contractor shall not refuse to serve and shall not refuse to employ any person on account of race, color, or religion..."
City of Troy	NY					nf	Written request submitted 3/08/01; response due 3-5 days
City of Tucson	AZ	Yes			Tucson Code Ch. 28 Art. XII, Sec. 28-138	Discrimination based on sexual orientation with contractors and/or vendors prohibited. Contractor must provide that, "the contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant...because of...sexual orientation."
City of Tybee Island	GA					nf
City of Urbana	IL				Code 1975, Sec. 2.70	No sexual orientation language in City's contracting requirements.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Vancouver	WA	Maybe			City Code Sec. 3.05.242 (Ord. M-3129, Sect 2 (part), 1994)	"All contracts by and between the city and contractors for any public work or improvement exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars shall comply with the city workforce diversity program established pursuant to Ordinance M-3082 (Ord. M-3129 Sec. 2 (part), 1994)."
City of Virginia Beach	VA	Maybe			City Code Sec. 2-224.5(b) (Ord. No. 2309, 2-28-95)	"Compliance with the provisions of section 2-224.2, 'Employment discrimination by contractor prohibited," shall be considered in the RFP evaluation and contractor selection process."
City of Washington	DC					nf	Message with General Counsel Ben Briant 3/16/01
City of Watertown	NY					No specific code/ordinance regarding employing contractor; however City passed a resolution 5/2/88 establishing Equal Employment Affirmative Action Plan ensuring equal employment opportunities for the City.	Resolutions unavailable on-line. Contact: City Manager @ (305) 785-7790
City of West Hollywood	CA	Yes			Municipal code Sections 9.28-9.44	Municipal code generally prohibits employment discrimination based on sexual orientation, religion, and AIDS. Section 9.28.050 specifically states: "Any employer, employment agency or labor or organization who is, or wishes to become, a contractor with the city for public works or for goods and services is subject to the provisions of this chapter relating to discrimination in its employment and to the nondiscrimination of this chapter."
City of West Lafayette	IN				Municipal Code Sec. 24.09(a)	"All contractors doing business with the city in an aggregate amount greater than fifty thousand dollars per year, except those specifically exempted by regulations promulgated by the human relations commission and approved by the common council shall take affirmative action to insure that applicants and employees are treated, in respect to employment, in a manner which provides equal employment opportunity and tends to eliminate inequality based upon race, color, creed, religion, ancestry, national origin, sex, disability, age, marital status, or status with regard to public assistance."
City of West Palm Beach	FL	Yes			Section 8 of the Procurement Code (Equal Opportunity)	Section 8: "No person shall be excluded from participation in, denied benefits of,or otherwise discriminated against in connection with procurement by the City on the grounds of race, color, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, or physical impairment."	Call into City Clerk 3/12/01 re general non-discrimination clause

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Worcester	MA		Maybe		Part II, Article 22, Section 1 and Section 6	Establishes the foundation of a Human Rights Commission to "assure that every individual [has] equal access to and benefit from all public services... to protect the individual enjoyement and exercise of civil rights..." and to investigate "the denial of equal access to and discrimination in employment, housing, education, recreation, and public accomodation... against a person based on race, color, religious creed, national origin, gender, age, ancestry, marital status, parental status, sexual orientation, disability, or source of income."	Call into purchasing director 3/01/01.
City of Yellow Springs	OH		Yes		Village Ordinance No. 632.02(a)	Nothing specific to contractors. Ordinance states: "It shall be an unlawful practice for any employer, because of the race, color, religion, sex, sexual preference, national origin, handicap or ancestry of any person, to refuse to hire or otherwise to discriminate against that person with respect to hire, tenure, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, or any matter directly or indirectly related to employment."
City of York	PA		Yes		City Ordinance Article 185.05(a)	"It shall be an unlawful discriminatory practice... for any employer because of the race, color, religious creed, ancestry, age, sex, national origin, sexual orientation, or non job related disability or the use of a guide or support animal because of the disability of any individual or contractor, to refuse to hire or employ or contract with, or to bar or to discharge from employment such individual or independent contractor, or to otherwise discriminate against such individual or independent contractor with respect to compensation, hire, tenure, terms, conditions or privileges of employment or contract, if the individual or independent contractor is the best able and most competent to perform the services required."
City of Youngstown	OH					nf	City Hall (330) 742-8700
City of Ypsilanti	MI					nf	Ordinance Dept. (734) 485-4393
County of Alameda	CA		Maybe		Title 6, Chapter 6.24, Section 6.24.030	Nothing regarding employment specifically to contractors. Section 6.24.030 Prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of AIDS, and Section 3.08.040 prohibits employment discrimination for those in the civil service. Section 2.32.020 does, however, state that it is "the public policy of the county... to create an environment in which all men, women, and children... may realize the highest potential unhampered by any discrimination based on race, ethnicity, religion, national origin, immigrant status, gender, age, actual or perceived sexual orientation, and mental or physical disabilities protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act."
County of Albany	NY					nf	E-mail to County Clerk 3/16/01

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of Arlington	VA		Yes		Code of County of Arlington, Virginia Ch. 31 Sec. 31-3	It shall be unlawful for any employer to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. It shall be an unlawful housing practice...to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation.
County of Benton	OR					None found as of 3/16/01	Call into HR Department 3/07/01 and 3/08/01. Will research with County Counsel and get back to Regan in a few days.
County of Boulder	CO					nf	Message with office of County Counsel (Shelly Bailey) 3/16/01
County of Broward	FL		Yes	Yes	Pt. II Code of Ordinances, Ch. 16 1/2, Art. II.	It is a discriminatory practice for an employer to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation. Religious corporations or associations are exempt when carrying on religious activities. Employers are exempt when qualification is bona fide occupational qualification.
County of Cerro Gordo	IA					nf
County of Clallam	WA		Maybe		Home Rule Charter, Article 10, Section 10.30	"In the exercise of its powers or in the performance of its duties, the county shall ensure that no person is discriminated against because of race, creed, political ideology, color, national origin, sex, marital status, sexual orientation, age, the presence of sensory, mental, or physical handicap, or any other basis not reasonably related to the accomplishment of a legitimate governmental purpose, and shall take whatever affirmative action necessary to accomplish this purpose as defined in the state and federal constitutions and applicable court interpretations."
County of Clark	WA					Code only provides for antidiscrimination in employment for the County Department of Public Works (2.32.070)
County of Cook	IL	Yes	Yes		Cook County Human Rights Ordinance, III(B)(1) [General Employment Discrimination] and VII(B)	"The purchasing agent for the County, and all other department heads, as authorized, shall include a provision in all county contracts that sets forth the County's policies with respect to unlawful discrimination [discrimination against a person because of the actual or perceived status, practice, or perceived expression of that person's race, color, sex, age, religion, disability,national origin, ancestry, sexual orientation, marital status, parental status, military discharge status, source of income, or housing status] and sexual harassment, as embodied in this Ordinance..."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and ~~Confidential~~

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Ashland	OR		Maybe		Resolution No. 1993-17 (May 1993); Ashland Municipal Code Sec. 3.8.40	City Ordinances prevent housing discrimination. Applies to City Employees. Contractors are covered by the "Oregon Model Public Contract Rules Manual," as published by the Oregon Attorney General. City Policy is to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.	Emailed City Administrator (dick@ashland.or.us) Dick Wanderscheid for copy of Affirmative Action Statement.
City of Aspen	CO	Maybe	Yes		Title 15, Chapter 15.04, Section 15.04.570(b) and (f)	(b) "It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to discriminate against any employee with regard to application for employment, hiring, occupational training, tenure, promotion, compensation, layoff, discharge, or any other term or condition of employment except when based upon a bona fide occupational qualification." (f) "Whenever it appears that the holder of a permit, license, franchise, benefit, or advantage, issued by the City of Aspen is in violation of this section... the City of Aspen may take such action regarding the temporary or permanent suspension of the violator's City of Aspen business license, permit, franchise, benefit or advantage as it considers appropriate based on the facts disclosed to it."
City of Athens	OH				Ord. No. 0-157-97	Added Sexual Orientation as a protected category in the Community Relations Ordinance.
City of Atlanta	GA	Yes	Yes		Muni. Code Pt. II, Ch. 2, Art. X, Div. II, Sec. 2-414; Pt. II, Ch. 94, Art. IV, Sec. 94-97, Sec. 94 112	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. Religious Exemption for sale or lease of property. Overall employment discrimination ban on basis of sexual orientation.
City of Austin	TX				§ 7-4-2 DISCRIMINATORY EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES PROHIBITED	Sexual orientation not included in definition of discriminatory employment practices by vendors or contractors.
City of Baltimore	MD		Yes		Article 4, Subtitle 3, Section 3-1	"... it shall be an unlawful employment practice for any employer to discriminate [on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, ancestry, sex, age, physical or mental capability, marital status, or sexual orientation] against an individual with respect to hire, tenure, promotion, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment..."	Contact office of Legislative Reference @ 410-396-4731
City of Bar Harbor	ME		Yes		Chapter 8, Section 8.07 Discrimination Based on Sexual Orientation, 8.07.03.01.01	It is unlawful "[f]or any employer to fail or refuse to hire or otherwise discriminate against any applicant for employment because of sexual orientation or because of such reason to discharge an employee or discriminate with respect to hire, tenure, promotion, transfer, compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges, or any matter directly or directly related to employment..."
City of Berkeley	CA	Yes			Section 13.26.070 Nondiscrimination provisions of a contract.	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and Confidential

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of Cuyahoga	OH	Yes	Yes		Code Section 1.02 (Affirmative Action Policy)	"It is the policy of the county to ensure equal employment opportunity. Discrimination against any person in recruitment, training, examination, appointment, promotion, retention, discipline or any other aspect of personnel administration because of race, religion, national origin, sex, ancestry, age, disability, sexual orientation, or veteran status is prohibited... In the area of contracting for goods, services, and construction, the county requires all bidders for public contracts executed by the Board of County Commissioners comply with its affirmative action policy."
County of Dane	WI	Yes			Ch. 19.58	Contractors with county may not discriminate based upon sexual orientation.
County of Essex	NJ					nf	Message with County Administrator 3/14/01
County of Fulton	GA		Yes		Code of Ord. Ch. 38, Article 1; Sec. 38-1; Ch. 154, Article 1, Sec. 154-3	Fulton County has equal opportunity for every citizen and employee regardless of sexual orientation. Opposes discrimination and harassment in work place based on sexual orientation.
County of Hennepin	MN					nf
County of Honolulu	HI		Yes		Revised Ord. Of Honolulu Sec. 1-11.1; 1-11.2. See also, Ord. 88-16	Honolulu County may not discriminate against its employees based on sexual orientation.
County of Howard	MD				Title 12, Subtitle 2, Section 12.208(II)(a); religious exception applies to Educational Institutions only [Sec. 12.208(III)(b)]	"It shall be unlawful if, because of discrimination; an employer: (1) Discharges a person; (2) Refuses to hire a person; (3) Acts against a person with respect to compensation or other terms and conditions of employment; or (4) Limits, segregates, classifies or assigns employees." "Discrimination" does not include discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.
County of Ingham	MI				Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Policy 1 re: Purchasing and Contracting Policy), rev. 8/12/82	"All persons or firms selling or contracting in any manner with the various departments and agencies of Ingham County government shall be required to file an "Affidavit of Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action" at least once a calendar year, with the office of the Ingham County Comptroller." No sexual orientation language in Affidavit.
County of Jefferson	KY		Yes		County Code Section 92.06(A)(1)	It is an unlawful practice "to fail to hire or to discharge any individual, otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his or her compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, national origin, age forty (40) and over, disability, sex, gender identity, or sexual orientation."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply Discr (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of King	WA	Yes			City Code Section 12.17.020 (A) (Ord. 13981 Sec. 3, 2000)	It is an unfair contracting practice for a: King County government agency, business enterprise doing business in unincorporated King County or business enterprise required to comply with this chapter by the terms of an agreement with King County under K.C.C. 12.17.100 to discriminate against a person with respect to the bid, award or referral of a contract or with respect to the conditions, terms, price, performance standards or other provisions of a contract;" (Note: "Discriminate" is defined to refer to those actions which "adversely affect or differentiate between or among individuals or groups of individuals, by reasons of race, color, age, gender; marital status, sexual orientation, religion, ancestry, national origin, [or] disability...."
County of Los Angeles	CA				County Ord. Section 2.07.020	County shall not discriminate in employment on the basis of sexual orientation.
County of Marin	CA		Maybe		Ord. Sec. 2.42.020	"County policy to prohibit discrimination based on...sexual orientation."
County of Miami-Dade	FL				Ordinance Nos. 82-37 and 98-30; Resolution No. R-1049-93	Together the three require city manager to consider affirmative action plans with respect to minorities and women when considering contract bids and to require documentation establishing that contractors have non-discriminatory employment and procurement policies.
County of Minnehaha	SD		Yes		County Equal Opportunity Statement	"In compliance with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 as amended and under authority of SDCL 7-8-20, it is the policy of the Minnehaha County government to provide equal employment opportunities to all persons irrespective of race, color, creed, age, sex, disability, sexual orientation, national origin, veteran's status or any other non-merit factors." No specific ordinance re: discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.
County of Montgomery	MD	Yes			City Code Sec. 11B-33 (a)	"Each contractor and subcontractor must comply with the requirements of Chapter 27, and all federal civil rights requirements prohibiting discrimination in employment."
County of Multnomah	OR	Yes			Ordinance No. 90, Division 60.030 (2) (revising County Code No. MCC 2.20.250(B)	"Every county contract shall contain a provision prohibiting discrimination by the contractor based on race, religion, color, sex, marital status, familial status, national origin, age, mental or physical disability, sexual orientation, source of income, or political affiliation in programs, activities, services, benefits and employment."
County of Nassau	NY					nf
County of Northhampton	PA					nf

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of Onandaga	NY		Yes	Yes	"Local Law No. 2" County of Onandaga, NY	"This law is created to eliminate and prevent discrimination based upon sexual or affectional preference or sexual orientation ..." Includes all employers with more than 4 employees. "Nothing contained in this law shall be construed to bar any religious or denominational institution or organization, or any organization operating for charitable or educational purposes...from giving preference to persons of the same religious or...from making such selection...to promote the religious principles for which it is established or maintained."	Received from Syracuse, NY City Clerk's Office.
County of Palm Beach	FL				Palm Beach County Code. Ch. 15 Human Rights, Article 3 - Housing	Sexual orientation discrimination illegal in housing.
County of Prince Georges	MD					nf
County of Salt Lake	UT					nf	Submitted written request 3/8/01. Regan to receive response in 3-5 days.
County of San Mateo	CA		Yes		Ord. 2125, 2498; Ord 3511, 3580	San Mateo created a Human Relations Commission to prevent discrimination, including sexual orientation. The County ordinance for contractors does not refer to sexual orientation.
County of Santa Barbara	CA				Ord. 3653 Sec.2; Ord. 2993	Santa Barbara prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation for any employees of civil service. The County ordinance for contractors does not refer to sexual orientation.
County of Santa Cruz	CA					nf	Check sent to Clerk of the Board to process copies of Affirmative Action policy 3/14/01
County of Sonoma	CA					nf	Left message with County Counsel's office 3/15/01
County of Suffolk	NY				Form CM11--Standard contract with the city of Boston/County of Suffolk	Standard contract does not include "sexual orientation" language. Sexual Orientation discrimination illegal in housing.
County of Tompkins	NY					nf	Left message with County Counsel's office (Mitchell Morris) 3/15/01
County of Ventura	CA				No code ordinance; language printed on all standard contracts with the County (does not apply to sexual orientation)	All contracts with County must set forth following language: "The following Affirmative Action compliance policy for contractors and vendors is hereby established as the policy and practice of our company: Our company will recruit, employ, and treat applicants and employees without regard to race, age, color, sex, religion, ancestry, national origin, marital status or handicap..."	Submitted written request 3/8/01. Regan to receive response in 3-5 days.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of Wayne	MI	Yes			Ord. 537, Sec. 125-4 (effective Sept. 1999)	Prohibits discrimination of contractors based on sexual orientation
County of Westchester	NY					Per Law Dept., cannot give out information re County Code; suggest contact Pace Law School re research request	E-mail to Pace Law School, Social Justice Center, 3/16/01
State of California	CA		Yes		Cal Gov Code Sec. 12935; Labor Code Sec. 1102.1; Cal Gov Code Sec. 12940	Dept. of Fair Employment and Housing adopts rules and regulations and conducts hearings to oversee housing and employment discrimination based on sexual orientation. (24 Cal.3d.458; 235 Cal.App.3d 654) prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation. Unlawful for employer to discriminate based on sexual orientation. "It shall be an unlawful employment practice, unless based upon a bona fide occupational qualification...for an employee, because of...sexual orientation...to refuse to hire or employ the person." "Employer' does not include a religious association or corporation not organized for private profit."
State of Colorado	CO					NA
State of Connecticut	CT	Yes		Yes	Conn. Gen. Stat. Sec. 4a-60a; Conn. Gen. Stat. Sec. 46a-81p	Contracts of the state and political subdivisions shall not discriminate any person or group based on sexual orientation. Religious organizations are exempt from sexual orientation discrimination. "Every contract to which the state or any political subdivision of the state...is a party shall [provide]...the contractor agrees that...the contractor will not discriminate...on the grounds of sexual orientation." "This provision...shall not apply to a religious corporation...with respect to the employment of individuals to perform work connected with the carrying on...of its activities."
State of Delaware	DE					NA
State of Hawaii	HI		Yes	Yes	HRS Sec 42F-103, HRS Sec 368-1, HRS Sec 368-2, HRS Sec 368-3	Prohibits discrimination of individual grants and subsidies based on sexual orientation. Prohibits discrimination of individuals based on sexual orientation in employment, housing, public accomodations and state financial assistance. Prohibits employers, employment agencies or labor organizations to discrimination based on sexual orientation. Religious organizations are exempt from discriminating against individuals based on their sexual orientation. Nothing in this part will "prohibit or prevent any religious organization...from...making a selection calculated to promote the religious principles for which the organization is established or maintained."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and Confidential

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
State of Illinois	IL			Yes	775 ILCS 5/1-103, 775 ILCS 5/2-101, 775 ILCS 5/2-102	Unlawful discrimination means to discriminate against a person because of their race, color, religion, national origin, ancestry, age, set, etc. NOT sexual orientation. Employer does not include religious organizations. Prohibits employers from discrimination on the basis of citizenship status or unlawful discrimination.
State of Maryland	MD					Illegal to discriminate based on sexual orientation when dealing with the housing authority.
State of Massachusetts	MA				Mass. Gen. Laws Ch. 151B, Sec. 2	Unlawful discrimination based on race, color religious creed, national origin, ancestry or sex. Does NOT include sexual orientation.
State of Minnesota	MN		Yes	Yes	Minn. Stat. Sec. 363.01, Minn. Stat. Sec. 363.02, Minn. Stat. Sec. 363.03	Per statute, a local commission created for the purpose of dealing with discrimination based on sexual orientation. Religious or fraternal corporations, associations, or societies are exempt from employing individuals based on sexual orientation. States it is an unfair employment practice for an employer or a labor organization to discriminate based on sexual orientation. "Except when based on a bona fide occupational qualification, it is an unfair employment practice...for an employer, because of...sexual orientation...to discriminate against a person."
State of Montana	MT					NA
State of Nevada	NV	Yes			Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. Sec. 338.125	Contracts with the state and political subdivisions "must contain...[an agreement] not to discriminate...because of...sexual orientation."
State of New Hampshire	NH				RSA 21-I:52	State employees shall have no "employment action taken on account of such person's sexual orientation."
State of New Jersey	NJ	Yes			N.J. Stat. Sec. 10:5-32, N.J. Stat. Sec. 10:5-33	Public works contract shall be awarded to any contractor, subcontractor or business firm who guarantees equal opportunity with regards to sexual orientation. The contractor must agree, "During performance of this contract, [the contractor] will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of...sexual orientation...."
State of New Mexico	NM				N.M.Stat.Ann. Sec. 11-13-1 (Indian Gaming Compact)	Section 4(5) Mandates that "the Tribe shall adopt laws prohibiting theTribe, the Gaming Enterprise and a Management Contractor from discriminating in the employment of persons to work for the gaming Enterprise or in the Gaming Facility on the grounds of race, color, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, age or handicap."
State of New York	NY				NY CLS Exec Sec. 296 (2000)	Prohibits employment discrimination generally, does NOT include sexual orientation.
State of Pennsylvania	PA					NA

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
State of Rhode Island	RI				R.I. Gen. Laws Section 28-5-7 and 28-5.1-7	Generals laws state that it is unlawful to refuse to hire any applicant, or to refuse to render service to any state citizen, based on race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, age, national origin, or disability.
State of Vermont	VT		Yes	Yes	3 V.S.A. Sec. 961; 3 V.S.A. Sec. 963; 21 V.S.A. § 495; 21 V.S.A. § 1726	Employers shall not discriminate based on sexual orientation. An employee organization entering into an agreement shall not discriminate based on sexual orientation. State of Vermont states it is unlawful employment practice for any employer, employment agency or labor organization to discriminate based on sexual orientation. Employers shall not discriminate based on sexual orientation. "It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer...to discriminate against an employee on account of...sexual orientation." "The provisions of this section prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation shall not be construed to prevent any religious...organization [from] taking any action with respect to matters of employment which is calculated...to promote...religious principles...."
State of Washington	WA					NA
State of Wisconsin	WI	Yes			Wis. Stat. Sec. 234.29	Contractors and subcontractors engaged in the construction of economic development or housing projects shall not discriminate against any person or group based on sexual orientation.
Ann Arbor School District	MI				Ann Arbor Public School District Board of Education Policies1000-1600, 9000-9730	N/A
Central County Emergency 911	MO					nf	Confirmed via phone that no written policy prohibiting
City School Board of Rochester	NY					nf
County of Broward School District	FL	Yes	Yes		School Board Policy No. 4001.1	"The School Board of Broward County, Florida shall not discriminate against students, parents or guardians of students, employees, applicants, contractors, or individuals participating in school board sponsored activities... This policy is established to provide an environment free from discrimination and harassment based upon age, race, color, disability, gender, marital status, national origin, religion, or sexual orientation."
County of Dade School District	FL		Yes		School Board Rules, Chapter 4, Section 4A-1.01; Chapter 3, Section 3G-1.04 provides for a Business Development and Assistance Program for minority and women's businesses to participate in procurement contracting with the school board	"It is the policy of the School Board that no person will be denied acess, employment, training, or promotion on the basis of gender, race, color, religion, ethnic or national origin, political beliefs, marital status, age, sexual orientation, social and family background, linguistic preference, pregnancy, or disability, and that merit principles will be followed."
Lake Washington School District	WA					nf

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
County of Leon School District	FL				School Board Policy No. 2.29	"The policies, procedures, and practices of the school district shall be administered in a manner that does not discriminate against applicants or employees because of race, color, religion, national origin, age, gender, disability, marital status, or status as a veteran."
Town of Middlebury	VT					nf
Minneapolis Public Library	MN					nf
Village of Oak Park	IL	Yes			Oak Park Illinois Village Code, Ch. 13 Human Rights, Article 3 - Fair Employment Practices Section 13-3-4 Contracts with Village of Oak Park	Any contracts with the Village of Oak Park shall incorporate provisions of Section 13-3-1: unlawful to refuse to employ based on sexual orientation.
Pinellas County School District	FL					nf
Seattle Public Library	WA					nf
Town of West Hartford	CT					The City of West Hartford had the complete code for the city was available online. There was no mention in the code about sexual orientation or discrimination.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and ~~Confidential~~

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Bloomington	IN		Yes		Code of City of Bloomington Ch. 2.21.030 et seq.	Basic sexual orientation clause applies to employees of city and other employers, not defined in contractors affirmative action statement. Sexual orientation not included in definition of discriminatory employment practices by vendors or contractors.
City of Boston	MA		Yes		Form CM11--Standard contract with the city of Boston/County of Suffolk	Standard contract does not include "sexual orientation" language. Sexual Orientation discrimination illegal in housing.
City of Boulder	CO	Yes			Title 12, Human Rights, Ch 1, 12-1-1	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.
City of Brighton	NY					nf
City of Brisbane	CA					nf
City of Brookline	MA	Yes			SECTION 4.5.1 UNLAWFUL PRACTICE	May not discriminate on basis of sexual orientation in contracts with city.
City of Buffalo	NY					Buffalo has a commission which investigates discrimination, but does not have actual ordinance.
City of Burlington	VT					nf	Message to City Clerk 3/16/01
City of Cambridge	MA		Yes	Yes	Section 2.76.110 (posting of policy) Section 2.76.120 (Acts prohibited)	Discrimination in employment based on sexual orientation prohibited. Religious exemption when discrimination is related to bona fide religious purpose.
City of Carrboro	NC				Article II, Section 4-6(a)	"No discrimination shall be excercised, threatended or promised against, or in favor of, any employee because of his/her race, religion, color, creed, national origin, political beliefs, sex, disability, or sexual orientation." Applies only to employees of city.	Contact City Clerk (Sarah Williamson) @ 919-918-7309
City of Carson City	NV					nf	Phone request to DA's office 3/14/01; will research and respond
City of Castine	ME		Yes		Castine Anti-Discrimination Ordinance	"We... affirm the right of every person to fair and equal treatment regardless of any differences in race, color, national origin, language, gender, or sexual orientation. It is therefore declared to be the policy of the Town of Castine to prevent discrimination in employment, town services, housing, access to public accomodations, and education because of sexual orientation."	Contact Town Clerk @ (207) 326-4502
City of Cathedral City	CA		Maybe		Title 11 PEACE, MORALS AND SAFETY Chapter 11.88 PROHIBITION AGAINST ARBITRARY DISCRIMINATION	Public policy of city to prevent discrimination of the basis of sexual orientation. Sexual orientation language not specific to contracts.
City of Cedar Rapids	IA					nf	HR Director to send via mail 3/16/01

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Champaign	IL	Yes			MUNICIPAL CODE Chapter 12.5 FINANCES AND PURCHASES ARTICLE III. EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN PU RCHASING ORDINANCE Sec. 12-5.63. Policy.	All contracts must include a provision pledging nondiscrimination based on sexual orientation.
City of Chapel Hill	NC					No sexual orientation language found
City of Charlottesville	VA	Yes		Yes	Chapter 22 PUBLIC PROCUREMENT* ARTICLE I. IN GENERAL Sec. 22-11. Provisions required in certain contracts.	Contract must pledge non-disrimination based on sexual orientation. Exemption where there is a bona fide occupational qualification.
City of Charlottesville School District	VA					nf	Board clerk confirmed no administrative policies re employment discrimination 3/14/01
City of Chicago	IL		Maybe		CHAPTER 2-160 HUMAN RIGHTS	General policy of nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.
City of Cleveland	OH		Yes	Yes	Title V, Chapter 667, Section 667.05(a)	"No person shall refuse to employ or to bar or to discharge from employment any person because of race, religion, color, sex, sexual orientation, national origin, age, disability, ethnic group or Vietnam-era or disabled veteran status of such person."	Contact Public Administration Library (Karen Martines) @ 912-623-2919
City of Cleveland Heights	OH	Yes			Administrative Code 171.08(a)(b) and 171.09(a)	"Each contract entered into between the City and a construction manager, who may be a general contractor, shall require that in hiring employees and the selection of contractors with respect to the contract, and in the performance of the contract, the construction manager and any person acting on his behalf shall not, by reason of race, creed, sex, sexual orientation, handicap or color, discriminate against any person in the employment of labor or workers who are qualified and available to perform work to which the contract relates."	Contact City Attorney @216-291 5775
City of Colorado Springs	CO					No ordinance found with sexual orientation language.
City of Columbia	MO		Yes		CHAPTER 12 HUMAN RELATIONS	Language does not include contracts.
City of Columbus	OH		Yes		Title 23 GENERAL OFFENSES CODE Chapter 2331 DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES; CIVIL RIGHTS; DISCLOSURE	Ordinance 2550-93 repealed most affirmative action codes related to contracts; only language is now in 2331 that prohibits discrimination in employment, housing and accommodations.
City of Corvallis	OR		Yes		Chapter 1.23, Section 1.23.050	"It shall be unlawful to discriminate in employment on the basis of an individual's race, religion, color, sex, national origin, marital status, age, or disability... sexual orientation, source of income or familial status..."	Contact City Manager's office @ 541-766-6963 or emely.day@ci.corvallis.or.us

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Privileged and ~~Confidential~~

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Crested Butte	CO	Yes	Maybe	Yes	Article 2-6, Section 2-6-3 Discriminatory Employments Practices Prohibited; Section 2-6-6 Penalties and Civil Liability	"It shall be unlawful for any person who is an employer or employment agency, directly or indirectly, to discriminate [defined as unequal treatment on the basis of "race, color, creed, religion, ancestry, national origin, sex, age, marital status, physical or mental disability, sexual orientation, family responsibility, or political affiliation"] against any person with regard to application for employment, hiring...or any other term or condition of employment..." Section2-6-6(c) Mandates that any holder of a permit, license, franchise, benefit, or advantage issued by the Town of Crested Butte found in violation of the anti-discrimination policies risks "temperary or permanent suspension" of those benefits.	Information not available on-line; Contace Town Clerk (Linda) @ 970-349-5338
City of Cupertino	CA					No language found.
City of Dallas	TX				Ord. 15-B	Anti-discrimination policy in contracts does not include sexual orientation.
City of Daly City	CA					nf	City clerk confirmed via phone that code does not contain non-discrimination provision re employment (City "piggy-backs" State and Federal ordinances.
City of Davenport	IA				CHAPTER 2.58 CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION	Language does not include contracts.
City of Davis	CA		Maybe		SECTION 10.01.020 POLICY	General city policy prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.
City of Dayton	OH					nf	Letter request to Office of Public Affairs 3/13/01
City of De Kalb	IL		Yes		CHAPTER 49 HUMAN RELATIONS COMMISSION	Language does not include contracts.
City of Decatur	GA				CHAPTER 1 GENERAL PROVISIONS Sec. 1 7. Ordinances not affected by Code.	Contracts entered into by the city are "not affected by Code."
City of Denver	CO				CHAPTER 28 HUMAN RIGHTS ARTICLE V. NONDISCRIMINATION IN CITY CONTRACTS FOR GOODS AND SERVICE S	Language does not includes sexual orientation.
City of Detroit	MI					Phone request to City Clerk's office 3/12/01; will research and respond.
City of Durham	NC				Article II, Chapter 8.6, Section 8.6-5(a) Employers; Chapter 26, Section 26-5(a) Encouragement of M/WBE Contracting [mandates that the city and contractors working for the city take affirmative steps to contract with minority (defined as "Black Americans") and women's businesses]	"It is a discriminatory Practice for any employer to fail or refuse to hire, or to discharge any individual or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to that individual's compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, disability, or age."	Equal Opportunity/Equal Assurance Department - 919.560.4180

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of East Hampton	NY					No Code provisions re discrimination; affirmative action; equal opportunity; or diversity
City of East Lansing	MI	Yes	Yes		City Code Ch. 4, Sect.1.127(b) and (g); sub-section (b) prohibits employment discrimination generally; sub-section (g) prohibits employment discrimination as to contractors	"A contract which the City, a political subdivision, or an agency thereof, is a party shall contain a covenant by the contractor and his/her subcontractors not to discriminate against an employee or applicant for employment with respect to hire, tenure, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, including a benefit plan or system or a matter directly or indirectly related to employment, because of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex, height, weight, marital status, handicap, sexual orientation, student status or use by an individual of adaptive devices or aids."
City of Eastchester	NY					nf	Town Attorney confirmed no antidiscrimination provisions in City Code 3/16/01
City of Eugene	OR	Yes		Yes	4.625, 4.655 Human Rights - Fair Employment Practice Provisions in City Contracts.	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited. Exemption when compliance would "substantially burden a person's exercise of religion."
City of Evanston	IL	Yes			Chapter 12, Section 1-12-5	All contractors, bidders, vendors, etc. contracting with the city shall include in their contracts an EEO clause certifying that said contractor/bidder/vendor, etc. "will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, national origin or ancestry, or age or physical or mental disabilities...."	Contact Town Clerk (Mary Morris) @ 847-866-2925
City of Falmouth	ME		Yes	Yes	Chapter 19, Article II, Section 3	"It shall be unlawful employment discrimination for any employer to fail to hire or otherwise discriminate against any applicant for employment because of sexual orientation or because of such reason to discharge or discriminate with respect to hire, tenure; promotion, transfer, compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment..."
City of Fayetteville	AR					nf	City Clerk confirmed via phone that code does not contain non-discrimination provision re employment 3/14/01
City of Flint	MI				DEPT. OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/CONTRACT COMPLIANCE	Language does not include sexual orientation.
City of Fort Collins	CO				CHAPTER 13 HUMAN RELATIONS, ARTICLE II. DISCRIMINATION	Language defining discrimination does not include sexual orientation.
City of Fort Worth	TX	Maybe			Chapter 17 HUMAN RELATIONS" ARTICLE III. DISCRIMINATION DIVISION 3. EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES Sec. 17-67. Discrimination prohibited.	Employment discrimination on the basis of sexaul orientation banned. May not "participate in a contractual...arrangement...that has the effect of subjecting a...qualified applicant...to the discrimination prohibited by this provision."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Gainesville	FL		Yes	Yes	City Code Part II Code of Ordinances, Chapter 8 Discrimination, Article III Equal Employment Opportunity, Section 8-48	"It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to [f]ail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his/her compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment because of the individual's sexual orientation." Religious exemption when discrimination is for a bona fide occupational qualification.
City of Grand Ledge	MI					nf	Confirmed via phone that no provisions in City Code prohibiting employment discrimination 3/14/01
City of Grand Rapids	MI				Chapter 11 PURCHASES, CONTRACTS AN D SALES* Sec. 1.517. Provision Against Discrimination I n Contracts.	Ordinance relating to discrimination in contracts does not include sexual orientation language.
City of Harrisburg	PA	Yes	Yes		Chapter 4-105, Section 4-105.1 and 4-105.6	Section 4-105.1: It shall be an unlawful employment practice "for any employer to refuse to hire any person... because of race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, place of birth, sex, age, national origin, place of birth, sex, age, non-job related handicap or disability, familial status, marital status, GED, or sexual preference/orientation." Section 4-105.6: "All contracts entered into by the City and its purchasing and contracting agencies shall obligate the contractor to comply with this Code relating to fair employment practices..."	Contact City Clerk @ 717-255-3060
City of Hartford	CT	Yes			Chapter 2 ADMINISTRATION, ARTICLE VII. FINANCE DIVISION 3. PURCHASES AND CONTRACT S* Sec. 2-558. Discrimination in employment or housing by contractors with city.	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.
City of Henderson	KY					nf	Confirmed via phone that no provisions in City Code prohibiting employment discrimination 3/14/01
City of Honolulu	HI		Yes		CHAPTER 1, ARTICLE 11	Nondiscrimnation policy on the basis of sexual orientation does not specifically mention contracts; Chapter 6 Article 29. Standards for the Appropriation of Funds to Private Organizations contains anti-discrimination language that does not include sexual preference.
City of Houston	TX				Chapter 15 CONTRACTS* ARTICLE II. ANTI-DISCRIMINATION PROVISIONS IN CITY CO NTRACTS* Sec. 15-17. Equal employment opportunity clause	Language does not include anti-discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or preference.

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

State and Local Governments with Antidiscrimination Ordinances that Include Sexual Orientation

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Iowa City	IA		Yes	Yes	Title 2, Chapter 3, Section 2-3-1 Employment Practices	"It shall be unlawful for any employer to refuse to hire, accept, register, classify, upgrade or refer for employment, or to otherwise discriminate in employment against any other person or to discharge any employee because of age, color, creed, disability, gender identity, marital status, national origin, race, religion, sex, or sexual orientation."
City of Ithaca	NY	Yes			CODE OF THE CITY OF ITHACA, NEW YOR K, v3 Updated through 12-15-2000 PART I ADMINISTRATIVE LEGISLATION Chapter 39, CONTRACTS	Discrimination in contracts based on sexual orientation prohibited.
City of Kalamazoo	MI					nf	HR confirmed with City Clerk that there are no antidiscrimination provisions in City Code 3/16/01
City of Kansas City	MO				PART II CODE OF ORDINANCES Chapter 38 HUMAN RELATIONS* ARTICLE III. DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICE S*	Does not include language related to contracts.
City of Key West	FL				PART II CODE OF ORDINANCES TITLE VII. GENERAL SERVICES 72.00 DISCRIMINATION* HUMAN RIGHTS GENERALLY	Does not include language related to contracts.
City of Lafayette	IN	Maybe			Chapter 2.07 COMMISSION ON HUMAN RELATIONS	No specific language with regards to contracts, refers to overall business with the city.
City of Laguna Beach	CA		Yes	Yes	Title 1 GENERAL PROVISIONS Chapter 1.07 DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION	"An 'employer' shall not include a religious association or corporation not organized for private profit."
City of Lancaster	PA		Maybe			City code information only available if purchased; HRC Worknet indicates that city prohibits discrimination in public and private employment.
City of Lawrence	KS					nf	Left message for Assistant City Manager for Administrative Services & Legal Services Director Dave Corliss - 3/16/01
City of Lexington	KY		Yes	Yes	Chapter II, Article II, Section 2-33(1) [Note: City and County government is merged]	"It is the policy of the Lexington Fayette Urban County Government to safeguard all individuals within Fayette County from discrimination in employment, public accomodation, and housing on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity, as well as from discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability, and age forty and over."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

Employer Name	State	Expressly relates to K	Emply. Disc. (Implied)	Religious Exempt	Ordinance Number(s)	Status/Information	Contact Information
City of Lithia Springs	GA					nf	Message with City Clerk 3/16/01
City of Long Beach	CA				Chapter 2.72 EQUAL OPPORTUNITY CONTRACT COMPLIANCE PROGRAM	Nondiscrimination language does not include sexual orientation.
City of Long Island	ME					nf
City of Los Angeles	CA	Yes			DIVISION 10 - CONTRACTS CHAPTER 1 - CONTRACTS GENERAL ARTICLE 1 - CONTRACTS REQUIREMENT	"Notwithstanding any provision of any ordinance of the City of Los Angeles to the contrary, every contract...with or on behalf of the City of Los Angeles shall contain...a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate in his employment practices...because of...sexual orientation."
City of Louisville	KY				TITLE III: ADMINISTRATION Chapter 36: City Employment Provisions AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PLAN FOR CONTRACTORS AND VENDORS § 36.170 FINDINGS, PURPOSE, AND POLICY.	Language does not include sexual orientation.
City of Madison	WI				CHAPTER 3 OFFICIALS, BOARDS, EMPLOYEES AND PUBLIC RECORDS Section 3.58 AFFIRMATIVE ACTION ORDINANCE.	Language does not include sexual orientation.
City of Malden	MA					nf	Call into city clerk 3/15/01
City of Mansfield	CT					nf	Asst. Town Manager confirmed via phone 3/14/01 that there are no code provisions prohibiting employment discrimination.
City of Miami Beach	FL		Maybe	Yes		General nondiscrimination policy includes protection of sexual orientation. Religious organizations are exempted from ordinances dealing with sexual orientation.
City of Milwaukee	WI	Yes			Section 109-15 of the Milwaukee Code of Ordinances - CITY OF MILWAUKEE - INVITATION, INSTRUCTIONS, TERMS AND CONDITIONS - FOR FORMAL BID & CONTRACT	NONDISCRIMINATION: The successful bidder will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of age, race, creed, color, sex, sexual orientation, disability, national origin or ancestry, and as provided by Section 109-15 of the Milwaukee Code of Ordinances. This provision must be included in all subcontracts.
City of Minneapolis	MN	Yes			Title 7 Chapter 139.10 "affectional preference" and specifically in Title 7, Chapter 139.50.1 Provisions required in contracts with city.	"During performance of the contract, the contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of...affectional preference...."

Yes = Contains provision
Maybe = May be interpreted to contain such provision
NA = Not Applicable
nf = Not Found
K = Contract(or)

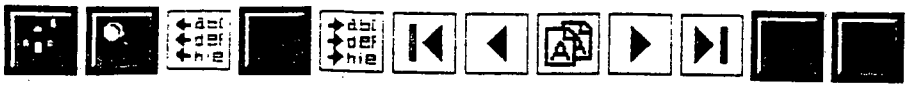
Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

Analysis of Antidiscrimination Ordinances That Include Sexual Orientation
Total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that expressly relate to contractors	48
Total number of ordinances with religious exemptions from antidiscrimination ordinances that either expressly or impliedly relate to contractors	28
Percent of total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that expressly relate to contractors	20.5%
Percent of total number of ordinances with religious exemptions from antidiscrimination ordinances that either expressly or impliedly relate to contractors	12.0%
Total number of ordinances banning discrimination by all employers and that may be implied to relate to contractors	55
Total number of ordinances with religious exemptions that apply to antidiscrimination contract clauses	6

Total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that may relate to contractors	6
Total number of ordinances with exemptions that may include religious organizations	4
Percent of total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that may relate to contractors	2.6%
Percent of total number of ordinances with exemptions that may include religious organizations	1.7%
Total number of ordinances with an antidiscrimination policy that may ban employment-based discrimination	13

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

REV_00260617



Analysis of Instances of Antidiscrimination Ordinances That Include Sexual Orientation
Total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that either expressly or impliedly ban employment discrimination by contractors	54
Total number of ordinances that clearly exempt religious organizations plus total number of ordinances with exemptions that may include religious organizations	32
Percent of total number of ordinances with antidiscrimination clauses that either expressly or impliedly ban employment discrimination by contractors	23.1%
Percent of total number of ordinances that clearly exempt religious organizations plus total number of ordinances with exemptions that may include religious organizations	13.7%

Not Done	0
Total Codes and Cities Investigated	234
Codes Not Found or Available	45
Total Codes and Cities found	189

REV_00260618

Work Product for
Salvation Army National Corporation

Blair Allan
Craig Schultz
Loeb & Loeb LLP
(213) 688-3400

City of Seattle Legislative Information Service

Information updated as of May 5, 2000 9:19 AM

Council Bill Number: 112928
Ordinance Number: 119748

AN ORDINANCE related to contracts; creating a new Seattle Municipal Code Chapter 20.45 requiring contractors on City contracts to provide employee benefits to their employees with domestic partners equivalent to those provided to their employees with spouses.

Date introduced/referred: Oct 4, 1999
Date passed: Nov 22, 1999
Status: Passed As Amended
Vote: 9-0
Date of Mayor's signature: Nov 23, 1999

Committee: Public Safety, Health & Technology
Sponsor: PODLODOWSKI

Index Terms: EMPLOYEE-BENEFITS, DOMESTIC-PARTNERS, CONTRACTS, CONSULTANT-CONTRACTS

Text

Note to users: {- indicates start of text that has been amended out
-} indicates end of text that has been amended out {+ indicates start of text that has been amended in +} indicates end of text that has been amended in

AN ORDINANCE related to contracts; creating a new Seattle Municipal Code Chapter 20.45 requiring contractors on City contracts to provide employee benefits to their employees with domestic partners equivalent to those provided to their employees with spouses.

WHEREAS, employee benefits routinely comprise between 30 and 40 percent of total employee compensation; and

WHEREAS, discrimination in the provision of employee benefits between employees with domestic partners and employees with spouses results in unequal pay for equal work; and

WHEREAS, Seattle law prohibits discrimination based on marital status and/or sexual orientation; and

WHEREAS, contractors with the City of Seattle are required to comply with the City's nondiscrimination laws; and

WHEREAS, it is the City's intent, through the contracting practices outlined herein, to equalize the total compensation between similarly situated employees with spouses and employees with domestic partners; Now, therefore

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE CITY OF SEATTLE AS FOLLOWS:

REV_00260619

Section 1. There is hereby added to the Seattle Municipal Code a new Chapter 20.45 to read as follows:

Chapter 20.45 City Contracts - Non-Discrimination in Benefits

20.45.010 Definitions. For the purposes of this chapter,

A. "Contract" means a contract for public works, consulting, or supplies, material, equipment or services as set forth in SMC Ch. 3.18.800 et seq., estimated to cost Thirty Three Thousand Dollars ($33,000.00) or more in 1999, consistent with the competitive threshold requirements of, and as adjusted pursuant to, Seattle Municipal Code Sections 3.18.840 and 3.114.140.

Grants?

B. "Contract awarding authority" means the City officer, department, commission, employee, or board authorized to enter into or to administer contracts on behalf of the City.

C. "Department" means the Executive Services Department.

D. "Director" means the Executive Services Department Director.

E. "Domestic Partner" means any person who is registered with his/her employer as a domestic partner, or, in the absence of such employer-provided registry, is registered as a domestic partner with a governmental body pursuant to state or local law authorizing such registration. Any internal employer registry of domestic partnership must comply with criteria for domestic partnerships specified by rule by the Department.

F. "Employee benefits" means the provision of bereavement leave; disability, life, and other types of insurance; family medical leave; health benefits; membership or membership discounts; moving expenses; pension and retirement benefits; vacation; travel benefits; and any other benefits given to employees, provided that it does not include benefits to the extent that the application of the requirements of this chapter to such benefits may be preempted by federal or state law.

20.45.020 Discrimination in the provision of benefits prohibited.

A. No contractor on a City contract shall discriminate in the provision of employee benefits between an employee with a domestic partner and an employee with a spouse, subject to the following conditions:

1. In the event that the contractor's actual cost of providing a particular benefit for the domestic partner of an employee exceeds that of providing it for the spouse of an employee, or the contractor's actual cost of providing a particular benefit for the spouse of an employee exceeds that of providing it for the domestic partner of an employee, the contractor shall not be deemed to discriminate in the provision of employee benefits if the contractor conditions providing such benefit upon the employee agreeing to pay the excess costs.

2. The contractor shall not be deemed to discriminate in the provision of employee benefits if, despite taking reasonable measures to do so, the contractor is unable to extend a particular employee benefit to domestic partners, so long as the contractor provides the employee with a cash equivalent.

B. Other options for compliance allowed.

Provided that a contractor does not discriminate in the provision of benefits between employees with spouses and employees with domestic partners, a contractor may:

1. Elect to provide benefits to individuals in addition to employees' spouses and employees' domestic partners;

2. Allow each employee to designate a legally domiciled member of the employee's household as being eligible for spousal equivalent benefits; or

3. Provide benefits neither to employees' spouses nor to employees' domestic partners.

C. Requirements inapplicable under certain conditions.

The Director may waive the requirements of this chapter where:

1. Award of a contract or amendment is necessary to respond to an emergency;

2. The contractor is a sole source;

3. No compliant contractors are capable of providing goods or services that respond to the City's requirements;

4. The contractor is a public entity;

5. The requirements are inconsistent with a grant, subvention or agreement with a public agency;

6. The City is purchasing through a cooperative or joint purchasing agreement;

D. Requests for waivers of the terms of this Chapter are to be made to the Department by the contract awarding authority in a manner prescribed by the Department. Decisions by the Department to issue or deny waivers are final.

Waiver Process?

E. The Director may reject an entity's bid or proposal, or terminate a contract, if the Director determines that the entity was set up, or is being used, for the purpose of evading the intent of this Chapter.

F. No contract awarding authority shall execute a contract with a contractor unless such contractor has agreed that the contractor will not discriminate in the provision of employee benefits as provided for in this chapter.

G. All contracts awarded by the City shall contain provisions developed by the Department prohibiting discrimination in the provision of employee benefits, including provisions containing appropriate remedies for the breach thereof as prescribed by SMC Ch. 20.45.040, except as exempted by this chapter or rule.

20.45.030 Limitations.

The requirements of this Chapter only shall apply to those portions of a contractor's operations that occur (i) within the City; (ii) on real property outside of the City if the property is owned by the City or if the City has a right to occupy the property, and if the contractor's presence at that location is connected to a contract with the City; and (iii) elsewhere in the United States where work related to a City contract is being performed. The requirements of this Chapter shall not apply to subcontracts or subcontractors of any contract or contractor.

20.45.40 Powers and duties of the Director.

The Executive Services Department Director shall have the power to:

A. Adopt rules and regulations, in accordance with this chapter and the Administrative Code of The City of Seattle (SMC Chapter 3.02), establishing standards and procedures for effectively carrying out this chapter;

B. Determine and impose appropriate sanctions and/or liquidated damages for violation of this chapter by contractors including, but are not limited to:

1. Disqualification of the contractor from bidding on or being awarded a City contract for a period of up to 5 years; and

2. Contractual remedies, including, but not limited to, liquidated damages and termination of the contract.

C. Examine contractor's benefit programs covered by this chapter;

D. Impose other appropriate contractual and civil remedies and sanctions for violations of this chapter;

E. Allow for remedial action after a finding of non-compliance, as specified by rule.

F. Perform such other duties as may be required by ordinance or which are necessary to implement the purposes of this chapter.

20.45.050 Effective date.

The provisions of this chapter shall apply to any contract awarded on or after September 30, 2000.

Section 2. On October 1, 2001, the Department will present to the Council a status report on the implementation of these provisions. This status report will include options for expanding the provisions to cover additional City contracts, including but not limited to employee benefits, franchise, concessions, and contracts under the formal competitive bid threshold, and will specifically outline alternative program options and associated resource requirements.

F/U Report on 10/1/01

Section 3. Consistent with the Copernicus project objectives of improving and streamlining our contracting processes while still pursuing important social and economic policies of the City, the Department will evaluate the provisions of the new "Boost" program, this "Non-Discrimination in Benefits" ordinance, and the "City Contracts -Prevention of Discrimination Ordinance (SMC Ch. 20.44) in order to recommend ways to harmonize the various rules, processes and legislation with each other and with existing rules, processes and legislation related to contracting. By September 30, 2000, the Department will present to the Council a proposal for reducing time and cost of contracting, from a baseline established in December of 1999. On October 1, 2001, the Department's status report to Council on implementation and possible expansion of the provisions of this Chapter will include documentation of further contract processing efficiencies.

Section 4. Severability. The provisions of this ordinance are declared to be separate and severable. If a court of competent jurisdiction, all appeals having been exhausted or all appeal periods having run, finds any provision of this ordinance to be invalid or unenforceable as to any person or circumstance, such offending provision shall, if feasible, be deemed to be modified to be within the limits of enforceability or validity. However, if the offending provision cannot be so modified, it shall be null and void with respect to the particular person or circumstance, and all other provisions of this ordinance in all other respects, and the offending provision with respect to all other persons and all other circumstances, shall remain valid and enforceable.

Section 5. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force thirty (30) days from and after its approval by the Mayor, but if not approved and returned by the Mayor within ten (10) days after presentation, it shall take effect as provided by Municipal Code Section 1.04.020.

REV_00260622

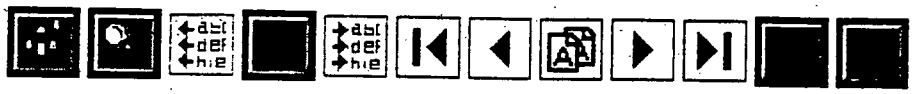
Passed by the City Council the _____ day of _____, 1999, and signed by me in open session in authentication of its passage this _____ day of _____, 1999.

_____
President _____ of the City Council



Approved by me this _____ day of _____, 1999.

_____
Mayor

Filed by me this _____ day of _____, 1999.

_____
City Clerk
November 22, 1999

EBFinal#2.doc
(Ver. 1)

REV_00260623

REV_00260624

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department - Victims of Terrorism [Folder 1]

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 53
Folder 13

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department - Victims of Terrorism [Folder 2]

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 53
Folder 14

REV_00260625

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET

TO: Brett Kavanaugh

DATE: 1-23-02

FAX #: Phone (67984) 61647

Number of pages _____ (excluding this page)

FROM:

Jay Lefkowitz
General Counsel
Office of Management and Budget
Washington, DC 20503
Phone: (202) 395-5044
Fax: (202) 395-7289

Comments:

(C) in the case of a claim filed by a parent or legal guardian, information demonstrating the claimant's status as a parent or legal guardian;

(D) information regarding collateral sources of payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

(c) The claim form shall state clearly and conspicuously that filing of a claim under this Program constitutes a waiver as described in section 109(c).

SEC. 106 ELIGIBILITY

(a) In General. - The Commission shall review each claim filed under this Program and determine whether the claimant is an eligible individual under subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Eligible Individuals. -- A claimant is an eligible individual if the Commission determines that such claimant is --

(1) where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, an individual who suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(2) where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, an individual who, as of the date on which the act of international terrorism occurred, (A) was a national of the United States or an employee of the United States Government; and (B)(i) suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism, or (ii) was held hostage for a period of at least one week as a direct result of an act of international terrorism and not solely for ransom;

(3) in the case of a decedent who is an individual within the meaning of subparagraph (b)(1) or (b)(2), the personal representative of the decedent who files a claim on behalf of the decedent; or

(4) in the case of an individual who is an individual within the meaning of subparagraph (b)(1) or (b)(2), and who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent or incapacitated, the parent or legal guardian of the individual who files a claim on behalf of the individual.

(2) An individual identified by the Attorney General to have been a participant or conspirator in the act of international terrorism, or a representative of such individual, shall not be eligible to receive compensation under the Program.

(c) Exclusion for Armed Conflict. - This Program does not apply to any claim arising out of injury or death sustained while engaged in armed conflict by a member of the U.S. Armed Forces serving on active duty. The Secretary of Defense shall determine promptly whether the incident giving rise to the claims shall be deemed an armed conflict for the purposes of the preceding sentence. The Secretary of Defense's determination under this subsection shall be final and conclusive, and it shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

SEC. 107 NATURE OF AWARDS

(a) Awards shall be made without regard to the negligence or any other theory of liability of the claimant or of the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim.

(b) In the event of a death resulting from an act of international terrorism, there shall be an award of $1 million to an eligible individual, adjusted at three-year intervals beginning January 1, 2005, to reflect changes in the consumer price index for the immediately preceding three-year period.

(c) In the event of physical injury or having been held a hostage as a direct result of an act of international terrorism, compensation shall be determined on the net present value of the economic and noneconomic losses demonstrated by the claimant, provided that the amount awarded shall not exceed the amount provided for under the preceding subsection.

(d) The portion of any award for actual and projected pain and suffering or emotional distress resulting from a physical injury shall not exceed $250,000, adjusted at three year intervals beginning January 1, 2005, to reflect changes in the consumer price index for the immediately preceding three year period.

(e) Amounts may not be awarded for punitive or exemplary purposes.

(f) The Commission shall reduce the amount awarded by the amount of the collateral source payments the claimant has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

SEC. 108 LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS

(a) Single Claim. -- Not more than one claim may be submitted under this Program by an individual or on behalf of an individual with respect to an act of international terrorism.

(b) Time Limitation for Filing. -- No claim may be filed on the basis of an act of international terrorism after the date that is 2 years after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a determination under section 104(a) of this Act.

(c) Bar on Other Claims. - No claim may be made in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding if such claim could have been filed under this Act in the absence of subsection (b).

SEC. 109 INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE

(a) Compensation may be awarded under this Act, subject to the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of this section, to eligible individuals for an acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act and which occurred on or after November 1, 1979.

(b) The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, shall issue, promptly upon the request of a claimant potentially covered under subsection (a), a determination whether an incident that occurred on or after November 1, 1979, and before the date of enactment of this Act was an Act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) of this Act. Such requests will be considered only if made within one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) By filing a claim under this section, the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, (1) waives any right to file and any right to continue to pursue any judicial, administrative or other proceeding for damages sustained as a result of the act of international terrorism, and (2) relinquishes all claims and rights to compensatory and punitive damages and amounts awarded as judicial sanctions under such judgments.

SEC. 110 PAYMENT OF AWARDS

(a) Judgment Fund. - Awards under this Program shall be paid from the appropriation made under section 1304 of title 31, United States Code.

(b) Conforming Amendment. - Section 1304(a)(3) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection (E) - > "(E) pursuant to a final decision of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission under the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 111 EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDY

(a) In General. - Subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, this Program constitutes the exclusive remedy in the United States with respect to the injury or death of an eligible individual caused by an act of international terrorism after the effective date of this Act. The United States or a foreign state, or instrumentalities thereof, shall have no liability to eligible individuals, their legal representatives, spouses, dependents, next of kin, heirs, successors, assignees, and any other persons entitled to recover damages in a judicial, administrative, or other proceeding in the United States as a result of the injury or death caused by an act of international terrorism.

(b) Nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of recovery against persons or entities who may be involved in an act of international terrorism and who are not foreign states or instrumentalities or officials thereof.

(c) Nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of an eligible individual to bring an action to obtain collateral source payments.

(d) Conforming Amendments. --

(1) Section 1605, title 28 of the United States Code is amended -
(A) in subsection (a), by striking subparagraph (7);
(B) by striking subsection (e); and
(C) by striking subsection (f).

(2) Section 1610, title 28 of the United States Code is amended -

(A) in subsection (a), by striking subparagraph (7);
(B) in subsection (b)(2), by striking ",or (7)"; and
(C) by striking subsection (f).

(3) Section 589 of Title V of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1997, as enacted in Public Law 104-208, Div. A, title I, sec. 101(c) is repealed.

SEC. 112 SUBROGRATION

(a) The United States shall be subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to all rights related to an injury or death of an individual paid under the Program.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall limit or otherwise affect any right of the United States, including any right of recovery from a foreign state or instrumentality thereof, under any applicable law.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

SEC. 101 SHORT TITLE

This section provides that this Act may be cited as the "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 102 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

This section establishes the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Program ("Program"). The Program is a comprehensive federal system under which monetary awards will be made in accordance with this Act to eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism. As Congress recognized in section 626 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-77), there is a pressing need to rationalize the current piecemeal approach to compensation for victims of international terrorism.

This Program is modeled loosely on the compensation program that was established by Congress for the victims of the September 11 attacks (see Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, Public Law 107-42). This Program, however, sets in place a permanent structure to compensate victims of future acts of international terrorism, and covers acts of international terrorism both in the United States and abroad. Instead of a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General, as is the case with the September 11 program, the review and adjudication of claims is committed to the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission ("Commission"). The Commission is a quasi-independent agency of the Department of Justice which has career staff with substantial experience handling large-scale claims programs.

SEC. 103 DEFINITIONS

This section sets forth the definitions of critical terms in this Act. Notably, the Act relies on the definition of "international terrorism" already contained in 18 U.S.C. 2331. The definition of "employee of the United States Government" modifies and expands upon the definition in 5 U.S.C. 8101, which applies to the federal worker's compensation program administered by the Department of Labor. It is intended to be a broad definition, covering all categories of U.S. government personnel, including the military, Civil Service employees, members of the Foreign Service (including locally employed staff), and personal service contractors.

SEC. 104 ADMINISTRATION

This section lays out the administrative framework of the Program. As set forth in subsection (a), the first step is that upon the occurrence of a terrorist incident, the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, will issue a written determination if he concludes that the incident is an act of "international terrorism" within the meaning of the Act. This determination, which must be published in the Federal Register, triggers the application of the Program.

The second step is that claimants may file claims for compensation with the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission. Subsection (b) explains that the Commission shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, adjudicate and render final decisions with respect to claims. A decision to make an award shall be in writing, and copies of such decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General. When the Commission decides to make an award of compensation, the transmittal of the final decision will be accompanied by certification of the award to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment out of the Judgment Fund (31 U.S.C. 1304).

Subsection (b) further provides that except to the extent inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the provisions of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) will apply to claims filed under the Program. Accordingly, the Program can take advantage of the existing statutory authorities of the Commission, for example, to promulgate regulations necessary to perform its functions; to give public notice of the time when claims may be filed; to take evidence through documents, hearings, and depositions; to issue awards in accordance with the applicable principles of international law, justice and equity; and to issue final decisions.

Finally, subsection (c) authorizes such sums as may be necessary to pay the administrative and support costs for the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105 FILING OF CLAIMS

This section sets forth claims filing procedures similar to those established for the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks. Subsection (a) requires claims for compensation to be filed with the Commission on a standard form and to state the factual basis for eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation sought.

Subsection (b) directs the Commission to develop a form that claimants will use when submitting claims. In the case of a claim filed with respect to a decedent, the claim form should request information demonstrating the decedent's death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. In the case of a claim not involving a death, the claim form should request information concerning (1) the physical harm that the claimant suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism; and (2) information concerning any economic and noneconomic losses that the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. The claim form also should request information regarding collateral source payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

Subsection (c) provides that the claim form will state clearly and conspicuously that filing of a claim under this Program constitutes a waiver as described in section 109(c).

SEC. 106 ELIGIBILITY

This section contains provisions governing the eligibility of claimants for compensation. Subsection (a) explains that the Commission will review each claim filed under this Program and determine whether the claimant is an eligible individual.

Subsection (b) sets forth the criteria for a determination that a claimant is an "eligible individual." Where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, this would be an individual who suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. Where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, this would be an individual who, as of the date on which the act of international terrorism occurred, (A) was a national of the United States or an employee of the United States Government; and (B)(i) suffered physical harm or death as a direct result thereof or (ii) was held hostage for a period of at least one week as a direct result thereof and not solely for ransom. In the case of a decedent, the "eligible individual" is the personal representative of the decedent who files a claim on behalf of the decedent. In the case of an individual who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent, or incapacitated, the parent or legal guardian is an "eligible individual." An individual identified by the Attorney General to have been a participant or conspirator in the act of international terrorism, or a representative of such individual, shall not be eligible to receive compensation under this Act.

Subsection (c) clarifies that the Program does not apply to any claim arising out of injury or death sustained while engaged in armed conflict by a member of the U.S. Armed Forces serving on active duty. The Secretary of Defense will determine whether the incident giving rise to the claims should be deemed an armed conflict for the purposes of the Program.

SEC. 107 NATURE OF AWARDS

Section 107 sets forth conditions regarding compensation awarded under the Program. Subsection (a) provides that compensation under the Program is to be awarded without regard to the negligence or any other theory of liability of the claimant, or of the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim.

Subsection (b) provides that in the event of a death resulting from an act of international terrorism, there will be an award of $1 million to the eligible individual. This amount will be adjusted for inflation.

Subsection (c) provides that in the event of physical injury or hostage-taking directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, compensation shall be determined on the basis of the net present value of the economic and noneconomic losses demonstrated by the claimant, up to the amount available for death claims.

Subsection (d) places a cap of $250,000 on that portion of an award regarding actual and projected pain and suffering or emotional distress from a physical injury. This amount will be adjusted for inflation.

Subsection (e) provides that compensation awarded under the Program may not include punitive or exemplary damages.

Subsection (f) directs the Commission to reduce the amount of compensation awarded by the amount of the collateral source payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

SEC. 108 LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS

Subsection (a) provides that not more than one claim may be submitted under this program by an individual or on behalf of an individual.

Subsection (b) provides that no claim may be filed after the date that is 2 years after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a determination under section 104 of this Act.

Subsection (c) provides that no claim may be made in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding if such claim could have been filed under this Act in the absence of a statute of limitations issue.

SEC. 109 INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE

Subsection (a) permits victims of acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act and which occurred on or after

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Enclosed for your consideration is a legislative proposal entitled "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act," along with a sectional analysis. This legislation would establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism.

As the Congress recognized in section 626 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-77), there is a pressing need for a program to compensate victims of international terrorism in a fair, coherent, and timely manner. Currently, compensation for victims is highly erratic -- dependent on a number of legislative programs, litigation, and in many cases private relief bills. This ad hoc approach raises serious questions of equity and fairness for the victims. In addition, there is a particular need to provide a rational compensation program where state-sponsored terrorism is involved. Recent legislation permitting a handful of victim plaintiffs to attach the blocked assets of foreign states designated as sponsors of terrorism is not only arbitrary but undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests.

The Honorable
J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives

November 1, 1979, to opt into this new compensation program. This date was selected in order to allow victims of prior acts of international terrorism abroad, including the Iranian hostage and Beirut victim plaintiffs, to take advantage of the Program.

Subsection (b) provides that the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, shall promptly, upon the request of a potentially covered claimant, issue a written determination as to whether an incident is an act of international terrorism within the meaning of this Act. In cases where such a determination is made, victims of that prior act of international terrorism may submit claims to the Commission under the Program. All requests by potential claimants for determinations that prior incidents are covered by the Program established by the Act must be made within one year after the date of enactment.

Subsection (c) makes clear that upon the submission of a claim for compensation under this section, the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, (1) waives any right to file or to continue to pursue a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist incident, and (2) relinquishes all claims and rights to compensatory and punitive damages and amounts awarded as judicial sanctions under such judgments. The preceding sentence does not apply to a civil action to obtain collateral source payments.

SEC. 110 PAYMENT OF AWARDS

Subsection (a) provides that awards under this Program will be paid from the Judgment Fund pursuant to the appropriation made under 31 U.S.C. 1304.

Subsection (b) makes a conforming amendment to 31 U.S.C. 1304.

SEC. 111 EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDY

This section makes clear that litigation against the United States and foreign states cannot be a part of a fair, timely, and rational compensation scheme for U.S. victims of international terrorism.

Subsection (a) provides that subject to subsections (b) and (c), the compensation awarded under the Program is the exclusive means by which U.S. nationals and U.S. government employees who are injured or killed by an act of international terrorism may receive compensation. Therefore, any judicial, administrative or other proceedings against the United States or a foreign state, or instrumentalities thereof, are barred.

Subsection (b) clarifies that nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of recovery against individuals or entities who may have been involved in an act of international terrorism who are not foreign states or instrumentalities or officials thereof.

Subsection (c) provides that nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of an eligible individual to bring a civil action to obtain collateral source payments.

Subsection (d) makes certain conforming amendments to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act and related legislation in order to preclude suits for damages against foreign states designated as sponsors of terrorism and against foreign officials acting in their official capacity. This would rectify the current situation in which certain victims who have been able to obtain default judgments against foreign states are able to collect hundreds of millions of dollars in payments, while other U.S. victims obtain far less. However, as set forth in section 109, those plaintiffs who have obtained judgments under 28 U.S.C. 1605(a)(7) would be entitled to opt in to this new compensation system.

SEC. 112 SUBROGRATION

Subsection (a) provides that for each individual paid under this section, the United States becomes subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to rights of that individual.

Subsection (b) provides that nothing in this Act shall limit or otherwise affect any right of the United States, including any right of recovery from a foreign state or instrumentality thereof, under any applicable law.

Background

Victims of international terrorism currently are eligible to receive compensation under a variety of legislative schemes. If they are U.S. government employees, they are entitled to federal benefit programs designed to replace income and other expenses, and in some cases death gratuity benefits. Private victims, whether they are U.S. nationals or foreign nationals, may receive compensation from their employers or insurers, and in the case of aircraft incidents from airlines or airlines' insurers. Both U.S. government and private U.S. victims also are eligible for assistance from the Crime Victims Fund administered by the Department of Justice.

In the case of the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks, Congress has established a special compensation program administered by the Attorney General, acting through a Special Master. See Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107-42). Victims of the attacks (including both U.S. and foreign nationals) may file claims for compensation and any awards are paid from the U.S. Treasury. Legislation has been introduced recently seeking to bring the U.S. victims of the East Africa bombings within the September 11 compensation program.

In addition, certain U.S. victims and their families are filing lawsuits seeking compensatory and punitive damages against designated foreign state sponsors of terrorism. A series of measures were enacted beginning in 1996 to repeal the historic immunity of foreign states from litigation, thus permitting victims or their survivors to sue designated terrorist states, and to collect on their default judgments either out of blocked assets or the U.S. Treasury.

In short, different levels of compensation are being provided to victims of international terrorism depending on the terrorist incident at issue, their ability to identify a foreign state sponsor of terrorism and pursue litigation, or their effectiveness in obtaining Congressional support for private relief. Also, recent legislation permitting collection against the blocked assets of foreign states undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. The legislation impairs our ability to use blocked assets as diplomatic leverage and invites similar measures by other countries. Moreover, legislative initiatives permitting the attachment of diplomatic or consular property may contravene our international legal obligations.

A Rational Compensation Program

In view of the foregoing, the Administration believes that a comprehensive and rational program to compensate victims of international terrorism is urgently needed. The proposed legislation establishes just such a program, building upon the legislation enacted to compensate the September 11 victims.

The proposed legislation contains the following key elements:

- Acts of "international terrorism" (as defined in the statute) both within and outside the United States would be covered by the program.

- Where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, all U.S. national and U.S. government employee victims would be covered. Where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, all victims (including foreign nationals) would be covered.

- The Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, would make a threshold determination as to whether a terrorist incident comes within the scope of the program. If the incident is covered, a victim or victim's representative will be able to recover without having to prove in a court action who was responsible for the act of international terrorism.

- Claimants would then file claims for compensation with the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission (an agency within the Department of Justice with expertise in handling claims). The Commission would review the claims and issue a lump-sum award.

- In the event of a death directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, an eligible individual would receive an award of $1 million, adjusted for inflation.

- In the event of physical injury or hostage-taking directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, an eligible individual would be entitled to economic and noneconomic losses, up to the same amount as available for death claims.

- The amount of the compensation would be reduced by any payments the claimant has received or is entitled to receive from collateral sources.

- The Foreign Claims Settlement Commission would issue a final, written decision, and certify any award to the Secretary of Treasury for payment.

- Awards would be paid from the Judgment Fund, for which there is already a permanent, indefinite appropriation under 31 U.S.C. 1304.

- Victims or survivors of acts of international terrorism abroad after November 1, 1979, would be permitted to "opt in" to the new system in return for waiving rights to file or continue to pursue any court action. This would permit the Iranian hostage and Beirut victims to take advantage of this new program.

- This Act would be the exclusive remedy for compensating eligible individuals for death or injury resulting from an act of international terrorism. Individuals could not file lawsuits against the U.S. government or foreign states, or instrumentalities thereof.

- Nothing in the Act, however, limits rights of recovery against private individuals or entities who may be responsible for the act of international terrorism.

- The United States would be subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to all rights related to the injury of an individual paid under the program.

The Administration looks forward to working with you on this important legislative package.

Sincerely,

Colin Powell

A BILL

To establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate victims of international terrorism.

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101 SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 102 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

There is established the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Program ("Program") under which monetary awards shall be made in accordance with this Act to eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism.

SEC. 103 DEFINITIONS

In this Act, the following definitions apply:

(a) Abroad. - The term "abroad" means outside the United States.

(b) Claimant. - The term "claimant" means an individual filing a claim for compensation under this Act.

(c) Collateral Source. - The term "collateral source" means life insurance, pension funds, death benefit or disability programs, and payments by Federal, State or local governments related to the act of international terrorism, and payments from whatever source similar in purpose to the foregoing.

(d) Commission. - The term "Commission" means the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

(e) Economic Loss. - The term "economic loss" means any pecuniary loss resulting from the injury inflicted as a result of the act of international terrorism, including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities.

(f) Employee of the United States Government. - The term "employee of the United States Government" means a civilian employee in any branch of the Government of the United States, including an officer or employee of an instrumentality wholly owned by the United States, a member of the U.S. armed forces, or an individual rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of a civilian employee of the United States or a member of the U.S. armed forces, with pay, without pay or for nominal pay, when a statute authorizes the acceptance or use of the service, or authorizes payment of travel or other expenses of the individual, but does not include an independent contractor.

(g) Noneconomic Losses. - The term "noneconomic losses" means losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), and other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature.

(h) International Terrorism. - The term "international terrorism" has the meaning given in section 2331(1), title 18 of the United States Code.

(i) National of the United States. - The term "national of the United States" has the meaning given in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)).

(j) Personal Representative. - The term "personal representative" means an executor or administrator of the estate of the deceased, or persons who perform substantially the same function under applicable law.

(k) United States. - The term "United States" means the States, the District of Colombia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Mariana Islands, the territories and possessions of the United States, the territorial sea of the United States, and the airspace above them.

SEC. 104 ADMINISTRATION

(a) Threshold Determination. -

(1) Upon the occurrence of a terrorist incident, the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, shall promptly determine in writing whether an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) of this Act has taken place.

(2) The Secretary of State's determination under this section shall be final and conclusive, and it shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

(3) If the Secretary determines that an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) has taken place, the Secretary shall publish such a determination in the Federal Register and transmit a copy of it to the Commission.

(b) Commission. -

(1) Upon receipt of the threshold determination set forth in subsection (a), the Commission shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, adjudicate, and render final decisions with respect to claims filed under section 105 in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) A decision of the Commission to make an award with respect to a claim shall be contained in a written, final decision of the Commission on that claim. The Commission shall transmit to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General copies of all final decisions made by the Commission under the Program.

(3) When a final decision of the Commission makes an award of compensation, the transmittal of the final decision shall be accompanied by the Commission's certification of that award to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment.

(4) Except to the extent inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) shall apply to claims filed under the Program.

(c) Authorization of Appropriations. -- There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the administrative and support costs for the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Department of Defense, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105 FILING OF CLAIMS

(a) In General. -- Claims for compensation under the Program shall be filed with the Commission on the form developed under subsection (b) and shall state the factual basis for eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation sought.

(b) Claim Form. --

(1) The Commission shall develop a form that claimants shall use when submitting claims under subsection (a).

(2) The claim form at a minimum shall request -

(A) in the case of a claim filed with respect to a decedent, information demonstrating the decedent's death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(B) in the case of a claim not involving a death, information demonstrating - (i) the physical harm that the claimant suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism; and (ii) any economic and noneconomic losses that the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the individual is filing, suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

Summary of Section 15 of H.R. 3210,
Terrorism Risk Protection Bill

Generally, Section 15 of H.R. 3210 creates a federal cause of action for claims relating to certified terrorist acts and limits damages and attorneys fees recoverable from defendants other than the perpetrators of the acts and their co-conspirators. Section 15(e) permits judgment holders to satisfy their judgments with blocked assets of the terrorist party or an agency or instrumentality of that party. While different from the Cannon-Issa amendment previously offered to the Anti-Terrorism bill, the attachment provisions of Section 15(e) share the same objective. They make blocked terrorist assets available to satisfy judgments and provide for a very restrictive Presidential waiver, all which conflict with, but do not repeal, the provisions of current law. As discussed below, in major part, subsection (e) bears little relationship to the rest of the provisions of Section 15.

A. Cause of Action

Subsections (a)-(d) are designed to to limit the exposure of insurance companies, airlines, property managers and the like, for liability arising from actions perpetrated by terrorists. While these provisions create a broad and exclusive cause of action for acts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be acts of terrorism committed in the United States from the time of enactment until 2003,[1] they provide for remedies that are meant to be restrictive in nature, with certain exceptions. They provide for an exclusive remedy for "claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from such acts of terrorism," supplanting all other federal and state law causes of action.[2] The determination by the Secretary giving rise to [1] Section 5(b) of the bill restricts determinations of "acts of terrorism" to acts occurring within the "covered period," which is defined in Section 20 to mean the period between enactment and January 1, 2003; the section permits the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the period by up to two years. Under Section 19(1)(B)(ii) of the bill, an "act of terrorism" includes only an act occurring within the United States or against U.S. domestic air carriers or U.S. flag vessels.

[2] Currently, 18 U.S.C. 2333 provides a similar Federal cause of action for international terrorism. It provides:

> Any national of the United States injured in his or her person, property, or business by reason of an act of international terrorism, or his or her estate, survivors, or heirs, may sue therefor in any appropriate district court of the United States the cause of action is not subject to review. Except for the perpetrators of the acts themselves, liability for non-economic damages is limited and, punitive damages may not be awarded, unless the defendant is "any person" who commits or knowingly commits the underlying terrorist act[3]. Collateral sources of compensation must be offset, and attorneys fees are capped at 20 percent. The United States would be subrogated to all claims that are paid by the United States under the Act.

B. Attachment of Blocked Assets

Subsection (e) provides that persons with judgments for compensatory damages against a terrorist party on the newly created cause of action, or pursuant to section 1605(a)(7) of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, may satisfy those judgments out of the frozen assets of that terrorist party, including those of any agency or instrumentality of the party. The bill's provision for the satisfaction of judgments issued pursuant to section 1605(a)(7) would appear to have no relationship whatsoever to the other provisions of the bill.[4]

This attachment provision does not appear to replace the existing provision at 28 U.S.C. 1610(f)(1)(A) governing the use of blocked assets to satisfy judgments, which has been waived by the President, since no reference is made to an amendment to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. Subsection (e) also provides a Presidential waiver of its own, but applies only to property that is subject to the

---

and shall recover threefold the damages he or she sustains and the cost of the suit, including attorney's fees.

18 U.S.C. 2337, however, states explicitly that no action shall be maintained under section 2333 against "a foreign state, an agency of a foreign state, or an officer or employee of a foreign state or an agency thereof acting within his or her official capacity or under color of legal authority." The Flatow amendment, 28 U.S.C. 1605 note, cited in most of the terrorism lawsuits against foreign states, provides only for a federal cause of action against the "official, employee or agent of a foreign state," but not against the state itself. Some courts recognize a federal common law cause of action in such cases.

[3] See subsection (b).

[4] Subsection (a) provides for a federal cause of action for acts perpetrated against individuals or organizations, but waivers of immunity are not necessary under section 1605(a)(7).

Vienna Conventions on Diplomatic and Consular Relations and then only to such property if has not been used for any non-diplomatic purpose (including use as rental property). Thus, it would not permit the President to waive the provision's application to Iran's diplomatic and consular property, since it has all been leased to private parties, with perhaps the exception of the Chancery.

The one thing that does not appear in this new bill that was in Cannon-Issa is the waiver of U.S. Government sovereign immunity. Thus, Iran FMS Trust Fund monies and Tribunal awards would not be subject to garnishment and attachment. Ironically, therefore, the Iran plaintiffs would be left with virtually nothing but the diplomatic and consular property in this bill, property barely sufficient to satisfy completely even one judgment against Iran.

REV_00260650

State Department Documents [1]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1822/1740
9630

Box 53
Folder 15

Brent –

Would you create for me -- and maintain near your office -- a misc files for State Dept related docs? These 3 documents should go in that file.

Thanks

Beverly

Document Originally Attached to Following Page

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 8/23/01

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: US Department of State

SUBJECT: Macedonian Peace Deal

ROUTE TO:		ACTION		DISPOSITION
OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	DATE M/D/YR	TYPE RESP	C D	COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	8/23/01		C
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	Courtney	A
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	ACTION COMMENTS:

COMMENTS:

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

REV_00260652

Lotus Domino Fax Server

Media Reaction Fax Server Cover Page

U.S. Department of State
Media Reaction

To: Senior Adviser

Subject: Issue Focus: MACEDONIAN PEACE DEAL
Date:
Pages: 14 , including cover page

From: U.S. Department of State
Company: Media Reaction (INR-R-MR)
Address: Stephen Shaffer, Acting Director
Kathleen Brahney, Branch Chief

Phone: (202) 619-6511
Fax: (202) 619-5507

"In The Balkans, A Conflict Of Interests Among Allies"

Alberto Negri speculated in leading, business-oriented Il Sole-24 Ore (8/21): "There is a 'peculiar' aspect to NATO's mission in Macedonia. In fact, in order to 'sell' the peace accords with the Albanians to the reluctant Slavic majority, the United States has committed to funding a promotional campaign throughout the country. A very good initiative...aimed at hampering an almost unavoidable ethnic friction, but perhaps the Macedonians--and not only them--would have also liked...an explanation about what happened during these past two years at the border between Kosovo and Macedonia. There is the impression that...a new campaign will have to be funded--aimed, this time, at convincing Macedonians that, when (NATO forces) leave, within 30 or 40 days, all will be finished with the disarmament of the guerillas; otherwise, the campaign should be addressed to the Western public opinion to explain why (NATO) soldiers will have to remain in Macedonia, probably with different tasks, instead. This latter hypothesis...would explain why the Alliance is studying its moves so in-depth...before landing in Skopje. However, (NATO's) hesitant attitude doesn't justify what happened in Kosovo after KFOR entered the country in 1999.... In Kosovo, close to the border with Macedonia, in Urosevo, the United States installed the Camp Bondsteel military base. From that strategic place...one might have expected more accurate control by the Americans over KLA and the Albanian guerrillas."

RUSSIA: "NATO Comes To Stay"

Fyodor Lukyanov mused in reformist Vremya MN (8/23): "Macedonia is a major milestone for NATO now that it has taken on the job of the chief guarantor of peace in post-Cold War Europe. As NATO goes there, it is sure to get embroiled in internal politics, becoming part of the state system and acting as its prop. Clearly, having the peacekeepers withdraw in 30 to 40 days, as planned by Brussels, is out of the question. Without the prop, the state will collapse. The agreement, made possible by the Western peace brokers, won't hold without them."

"NATO's Intervention Fraught With War"

Yuliya Petrovskaya wrote on page one of reformist Vremya MN (8/23): "Formally, the operation is impeccable: The Alliance has a request from the legitimate government, a peace agreement signed by the principal parties, and the NLA's consent to surrender the arms.... Contrary to NATO's statements, there is no guarantee that it won't be drawn into the Macedonian standoff. Direct involvement is not ruled out, with NATO troops free to use force, if attacked."

"Rebels Like NATO's Style"

Georgiy Stepanov held in reformist Izvestiya (8/20): "NATO is not quite sure of itself. Diplomats in the member countries of the Alliance have many doubts about its mission.... The rebels hope that the presence of NATO troops will 'freeze' the current status quo, letting them stay in the positions they now control. The Albanians need the peacekeepers. The Slavs don't. As Essential Harvest gets under way, the rebels are expected to surrender at least 6,000 to 8,000 weapons. Some sources put their arsenal at 10,000. NATO's estimate is different. It hopes to collect 2,300 to 2,500 weapons. Naturally, the Albanians prefer NATO's approach. They like NATO's style, in general."

AUSTRIA: "Meaning Well"

Foreign affairs writer Gerhard Plott commented in liberal Der Standard (8/21): "It is questionable whether the Albanian rebels can be disarmed.... Alarms should be ringing in NATO considering the past experience in Kosovo with disarming KLA fighters.... In Kosovo, the United States was satisfied with the 'antique weapons' that were handed in, while the modern armament was hidden and reappeared in Macedonia.... NATO is hoping for a successful Operation Essential Harvest, but it would be the first time that a rebel army in permanent combat delivers its weapons."

"A Test For Europe"

Senior foreign affairs editor Norbert Mayer wrote mass-circulation Kurier (8/18): "NATO is undertaking yet another risky action on the Balkans in order to contribute a little to the stability in the region.... This time it will be a test of the credibility of EU foreign and security policy because the United States is only marginally involved.... But military presence and the deployment of an ever-increasing number of troops is insufficient to give the region a perspective for the future.... While making significant investments and improving the infrastructure of Macedonia would provide peace and stability."

BELGIUM: "Dialogue And Concessions"

In the wake of the recent bomb attacks by ETA in Spain and violence in Corsica, diplomatic correspondent Mia Doornaert held in independent Catholic De Standaard (8/21): "It is an illusion to believe that a policy of dialogue and concessions--as imposed by the EU and NATO in Macedonia--will automatically stop the tradition of nationalistic violence. If that proved to be impossible even in democracies like France and Spain, it is much more difficult to believe that such a recipe can work in the Balkans."

BULGARIA: NATO's Harvest Is In Vain"

Center-left Novinar commented (8/23): "NATO's Essential Harvest...may be in vain.... The concealed arms are enough for at least three civil wars."

"A New State Is A Good Decision"

Yordan Velichkov wrote in largest-circulation Trud (8/21): "Is there a way out of the Macedonian crisis?... The most acceptable option for all ethnic groups is uniting all Albanians from former Yugoslavia in a separate state or uniting them with Albania.... It's far more reasonable to take from Macedonia the five or six thousand kilometers of territory densely populated by Albanians now, than to lose the republic's whole territory to Albanian hands later. There is no other way out of the conflict."

GREECE: "Concerns"

Pro-government, large-circulation Ta Nea wondered in its lead editorial (8/23): "A step toward peace or the unknown?... It is not certain that all Albanian guerrillas subscribe to the agreement nor is it certain that they will all surrender their weapons! At the same time, nothing excludes the possibility that the Albanian irregulars may be re-armed by their allies in Kosovo, who in turn were armed by the partners of those who are now going there to disarm them! If hostilities resume and if the NATO force is subject to attacks, will the 30-day mandate remain unchanged or will it be extended in time and content?"

"Fabrication Of Consensus"

Popular, influential, anti-American Eleftherotypia editorialized (8/19): "The United States is funding a $250,000 campaign aimed at influencing FYROM's public opinion and parliament in favor of the ratification of the agreement signed by Slav-Albanian parties, simply because they are realizing that the agreement would not be easily accepted. Do they really believe that Balkan peoples are so naive that they ignore who ignited the fire in Kosovo--which then spilled over to FYROM--and who armed and encouraged the UCK?... The agreement is fragile because Albanian guerrillas are called to surrender their weapons to NATO voluntarily amidst serious concerns that they will instead pass them over to Kosovo through non-controlled borders. However, it is better to have a U.S.-funded advertising campaign--if indeed U.S. participation ends there--than a U.S. involvement like in Kosovo, which worsened the situation instead of bringing peace. Wherever there were U.S. interventions, larger wounds were opened that couldn't heal. Such interventions are simply in favor of more weapons sales by U.S. industries, which have every interest to fuel the fire instead of putting it out in crisis areas around the planet. Consequently whose fault is it that 'the majority of the world sees the prime rogue state today as the United States' as Robert Jervis, president of the American Political Science Association recently stressed?"

THE NETHERLANDS: "NATO As Collector"

Influential NRC Handelsblad has this editorial (8/22): "NATO has obligated itself diplomatically.... One of the prerequisites of peacekeeping interventions is having an exit strategy. The 30-day period appears to provide this.... An extension of the mandate need not be the greatest evil. The real risk lies in NATO being made partisan in the conflict between the two population groups. The portents are there already."

"The Elephant And The Mouse"

Left-of-center Trouw editorialized (8/23): "Despite broad support for NATO mission Operation Essential Harvest, skepticism prevails. NATO has made itself extremely dependent on cooperation from both the Macedonian government and the Albanian rebels. We need practically just one wrong shot and NATO will be packing its bags. Moreover, we have to wait and see if the rebels are kind enough to turn in their Kalashnikovs. Like [Dutch Member of Parliament] Middelkoop said: If the mouse squeaks a few times, the elephant will run away.... Under these circumstances, one could wonder if Essential Harvest is indeed of decisive importance in harvesting the arms.... [Dutch Member of Parliament] Hoekema is right when he says that this mission is mainly of psychological and political importance."

NORWAY: "Unsafe Peace"

Independent VG commented (8/23): "NATO's official decision on starting operation 'Essential Harvest' was no surprise. Too much is at stake for both the West and the Balkans if the bloody disturbances in Macedonia should continue.... What NATO fears the most is that the fighting will start again and that NATO soldiers will get killed.... Many fear that the engagement in Macedonia might last much longer than a month and demand many more that 3500 soldiers."

"Fast In And Fast Out Again"

Social democratic Dagsavisen opined (8/23): "There is something half-hearted about the parties' will for peace in Macedonia. The compromises have only been decided on after massive pressure from the EU and from the United States. The rhetoric, the insults that the parties use about each other are not very promising for the future. What nevertheless creates a certain optimism, is the way that the British vanguard has been received by both parties."

ROMANIA: "American Thinking: Inexplicable"

In opposition Cotidianul, Stefan Augustin Doinas commented (8/21): "We supposed that the Americans were thinking like us [the Romanians] and that the pacification of the Balkans was the real reason for NATO's involvement in the conflict which set Yugoslavia on fire. Now, we realize, with a deep regret, that this pacification was not fulfilled, the theater of war has moved from Serbia to Macedonia and the United States' attitude in this region of Europe continues to remain inexplicable. Some say that the United States is supporting the Muslim Albanians to decrease the Slavs' influence in the Balkans, which will favor the Russians whose whose imperial game cannot be closed; or that the United States is looking for an agreement with the Albanian Muslims to have a playing chip in mediating the conflict between the Arabs and the Israelis in the Middle East. "

"Bet On Peace Is Lost From The Beginning"

In independent Ziua, foreign policy analyst Cristian Stefanescu wrote (8/21): "The last years' experience and the terms in which the [peace] agreement was worked out led us to believe that we are facing a huge failure. The Balkans, as well as the Middle East, taught us that when our feelings of identity are transformed into weapons, there is no way back. And when a dialogue is ended by acknowledging the uselessness of bridges of communication, the bet on peace is lost from the beginning."

SLOVENIA: "Whose Harvest?"

Left-of-center Delo opined in a front page editorial (8/23): "Operation Essential Harvest seems so undefined that even General Wesley Clark...warns about the unpredictable consequences of this inadequately outlined operation. It has not even been agreed whether the peaceful 'harvesting' of Albanian [weapons] may turn into a military intervention, and about what should be done if this really happens."

SPAIN: "The Third Mission"

Left-of-center El Pais wrote (8/23): "It is still to be seen what will happen once NATO pulls its troops out [of Macedonia]: Thirty days is a short period of time to complete a definitive disarmament.... It is significant that the United States is participating...contrary to the initial desire of Bush to pull his forces out of the Balkans."

"NATO And Macedonia"

Conservative La Vanguardia held (8/21): "In this operation, not only is the fate of Macedonia as a unified country in a state of play, but also the credibility of NATO.... The limits placed on the mission raise grave questions. What will happen, for example, after the NATO soldiers have left the scene with the collected weapons? Not all NATO members want to repeat history with a grand invasion in Macedonia. For this reason, they have opted for a limited mission. Only time will tell if it will be enough to prevent another conflict."

SWITZERLAND: "Essential Harvest--And Plan B"

In the center-right, German-language Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Markus Spillmann wrote (8/23): "NATO is dispatching 3,500 soldiers to Macedonia to disarm the forces of the ethnic Albanian National Liberation Army (UCK).... That is Plan A. The question is, what happens if Plan A fails? Plan B, according to Brussels, is to cancel the operation and immediately withdraw the troops. So, should a few Albanian guerrillas or a hothead among the ethnic Slavs decide not to cooperate, the most important institution of trans-Atlantic security will turn tail and run.... In Macedonia the Alliance has made itself hostage to a political process that could very easily fail. Perhaps all will go well. If not, it would be good to have a better Plan B."

TURKEY: "The Unwilling Peace"

Zafer Atay wrote in economics/politics Dunya (8/22): "The agreement sounds very nice as a text, yet its implementation is not going to be that easy. There is a serious mistrust between the sides, and it will be way too optimistic to believe that these groups will forget everything and start working together for peace. The peace was achieved due to immense efforts from both NATO and the EU.... The most important issue remains the weapons that Albanian groups have. It remains to be seen whether they are going to give back all of their weapons."

"The Reluctant Peace In Macedonia"

Necati Ozfatura wrote in conservative/religious Turkiye (8/22): "The Macedonian ultra-nationalists are the main obstacle toward implementation.... If the Macedonian militia groups continue their provocations, the peace process could easily turn into a war situation.... This is actually a reluctant peace that is due to pressure as well as intervention from outside. Since fanatics do not welcome this agreement, its fate is on shaky ground."

EAST ASIA

JAPAN: "Fears Linger Over Rekindling Of Fighting"

Liberal Mainichi observed (8/23): "NATO governments have finally approved a plan to send in thousands of troops to collect weapons from ethnic Albanian rebels in Macedonia. It took NATO more than two months to approve the plan because of the time taken to confirm the continuation of a cease-fire reached between Macedonian government troops and rebels. Although NATO Secretary General Robertson appears optimistic about the dispatch of NATO troops to Macedonia, some member nations are cautious about the deployment of a large force out of concerns that it might rekindle fighting and subsequently involve NATO troops. The U.S. military's 'passive' participation in the troops dispatch has indirectly made West European member nations more cautious. The Macedonian situation remains far from promising. It is still explosive."

SOUTH ASIA

BANGLADESH: "The Peace Plan For Macedonia"

Conservative, Bangla- language Ittefaq commented (8/17): "Muslims have been in favor of peace from the beginning, although they had to take up arms. It was the Macedonian government who refused to negotiate with the rebels for peace. However, a peace plan mediated by the West has been signed. The Muslim rebels immediately accepted the plan, terming it their victory against the government's repression. According to the plan, the Muslim rebels will surrender their arms to a NATO force, and some of the Muslims' demands will be accepted. We would heave a sigh of relief if the signing of the peace plan had ended the conflict. It is really unfortunate that fresh fighting has begun. We would urge all sides to work for peace. We hope that the recent clashes were isolated incidents and that a complete peace will be established in Macedonia. The rebels will surrender their arms if the plan is implemented. It is the responsibility of the NATO force to ensure that the Muslims do not face repression once they surrender their arms. Any kind of failure in this will worsen the situation. We hope that the Western-mediated peace plan will be implemented in a perfect way."

##

Thursday, August 23, 2001

MACEDONIAN PEACE DEAL: INCREASING PESSIMSIM

Observers in Europe weighed in on the peace agreement reached in Macedonia last Thursday. The hopeful tone struck one week ago by some European observers virtually evaporated, replaced by increasing pessimism that peace in the region is, at best, an iffy proposition. Opinionmakers foresaw many risks and obstacles ahead for all parties--including the two antagonists and the international contingent. Foremost among their concerns was that "serious mistrust" between the ethnic Albanian and Slavic sides remains, marked by continuing episodes of violence which could ultimately threaten the implementation of the Ohrid peace deal. Commentators also proffered their assessments on the role of NATO and its Operation Essential Harvest. Flattering portraits were scarce. Only a few media voices believed that the Alliance "got it right" this "third" time around--a reference to other NATO missions in Bosnia and Kosovo. Meanwhile, the regional media from FYROM, Kosovo and Albania was replete with harsh and insulting recriminations. Notably absent was any prediction of peaceful days to come. Salient themes follow:

ALBANIAN 'TERRORISTS'...: Pro-government and independent dailies in Skopje--consistent ly referring to the Albanian rebels as "terrorists"--expressed dismay that NLA leaders are being "legitimized" as "politicians" in the peace process. There was also heavy press coverage of the attack on the Orthodox monastery in Lesok. Pro-government Utrinski Vesnik blamed the blast on Albanian "terrorists," contending that their aim was to "undermine the historic, cultural and...national identity of the Macedonians in the Tetovo region." Commentators also aimed their criticisms at the U.S., suggesting that it is biased toward the ethnic Albanians, and that the Albanians "do what they want with the stupid Americans."

... AND SLAVIC 'CHAUVINISTS': Analysts in Pristina and Tirana railed against Slavic "extremists" and "hot heads" who are "trying in different ways to obstruct [the Ohrid] agreement." Muslim voices in Bangladesh and Turkey joined the fray, also condemning the "ultra-nationalist" Slavic government as the "main obstacle" to peace.

NATO MISSION--TOO LITTLE, TOO SHORT, TOO MUCH, JUST RIGHT?: Outside the region, the focus was more on NATO. Some European observers--most vociferously in the conservative British press--believed that the Alliance was getting involved, once again, in a scenario in which it had no business. Greek columnists went further, suggesting that not only does NATO go where it should not, but also that it then goes on to fail in its missions. Others--for instance, in the center-left media in Germany--were critical of the time and troop limits set by the Alliance for Operation Essential Harvest, holding that an expanded mission must be an option. The few optimistic media voices in Britain, Germany and Italy tended to argue that the Alliance mission is crucial and that its plan of action is on target. They also were quick to emphasize that the operation has gone ahead "without U.S. front-line forces." They welcomed this as helping to "pave the way for other missions which European states may have to undertake on their own."

EDITOR: Diana McCaffrey

EDITOR'S NOTE: This survey is based on 47 reports from 21 countries, August 17-23. Editorial excerpts from each country are listed from the most recent date.

EUROPE

FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA: "It Is Obvious Who Is For War"

Independent Dnevnik ran this editorial by Branko Geroski (8/22): "The campaign for promoting the Ohrid peace deal, for which the generous and creative Americans will invest a fantastic sum of $250,000, started with the demolishing of the church in Lesok, a mean attack carried out by heretics who Western diplomats and media promote as peacemakers and fighters for rights.... Some--foreign and domestic--allegedly concerned about the threatened peacemaking process, recently asked me why Dnevnik had changed its policy from supporting peace to supporting war. Dear readers, do not buy such stories and do not allow such morons to convince you that you are wrong. We have not changed and we are definitely not wrong. Yes, something has changed. The Lesok monastery--part of it--does not exist any more. Some 70 Macedonian families have been left without men. Many things have changed for the worse.... We are not for war. It is obvious who is for war. It is obvious who started this. It is obvious who breaches the cease fire and kills the fragile peace. We are the same--we were and are still for peace. The terrorists were and are still for war. Only the foreigners changed their policy. For them, Ahmeti was a bandit. Now he is Mr. Nice Guy. It does not matter to them who started the war. They do not want to admit that the Macedonians are victims in this war. They do not support peace. They want us to capitulate."

"Attack On Lesok Monestary: Situation On Ground Is Not Optimistic"

Pro-government Utrinski Vesnik's Saso Colakovski editorialized (8/22): "The message of the attack [on the Lesok monestary] was to undermine the historic, cultural and finally, the national identity of the Macedonians in the Tetovo region.... The situation on the ground is not optimistic. On the contrary. In the tactics of the terrorists we can recognize their attempt to maintain low conflict intensity. For two reasons. The first, short-term, is accomplished when the Macedonian forces respond to provocation. The second, long-term, is the plan to transform the 'Harvest' mandate into a demarcation mandate.... The problematic attitude of Europe--and particularly the United States--towards the crisis in Macedonia originates in the American support for the Albanian radicals in Kosovo. This support has become private and profit-inspired now."

"NLA In System More Dangerous Than Gangs"

Pro-government Utrinski vesnik ran an editorial by Saso Colakovski (8/21): "The Tetovo village of Sipkovica, where NLA leader Ali Ahmenti held a press conference and displayed flags of NATO, the EU, the United States and Albania reminded one of a protectorate. His press conference is worth perceiving from another angle, too. Similar to the already established pattern in Kosovo (with Hasim Thaci) designed by Western intelligence, in two-three weeks, Ahmeti will most likely replace his uniform with a suit which will represent his public promotion from a war leader to a civilian politician. There are a few elements worth mentioning in this story. First, the international community made a critical strategic move by naming the Macedonian security forces and the terrorist gangs as the 'two sides.'... After putting Ahmeti at the negotiating table (through Xhaferi and Imeri), Western advisers suggested to the Macedonian authorities that they should make big compromises because their ' position on the ground is bad.' Macedonia sustained this cynicism too (after pressures for 'restraint' and 'proportionate response'), but bringing Ahmeti in Sipkovica turned our frustrations into inhibitions. Does anyone remember that Ahmeti is on Bush's and the EU's black lists?

"Does anyone remember that the Macedonian state pursues him for crimes he has committed in the past six months? I can see the outcome. ONA accepts to lay down arms, thus washing its hands of the massacres in Grupcin and Ljubanci. Then, ANA takes responsibility for the killings. Ahmeti claims he has no idea who the new guys are. Marvelous. That's how Hasim Thaci became a politician. That's how the UCK became OVPMB. Macedonia still needs a leader who will tell the truth, no matter how painful it is!"

"Ali, NATO And The Forty Thieves"

Independent Dnevnik carried an editorial by Zarko Jordanoski (8/21): "I admit that those theories that NATO, that is, the United States, invented the NLA to destroy Macedonia once seemed realistic to me. However, after the news conference of Ahmeti in Sipkovica it is quite clear that the Albanians do what they want with the stupid Americans. The stupidity was incorporated from the very beginning of the crisis when NATO and the EU decided that terrorist aggression should be resolved by making political concessions to the Albanians and by blocking the Macedonian security forces. It should have been the other way around, which would have made the crisis end sooner. NATO could have thus said that it had maintained peace in a sovereign state--a 'partner for peace.' Even after that, the democratic system in Macedonia could have started being fixed. But in order to avoid the truth that the UN 'protectorate' was a source of instability, NATO (protecting itself) did a great job for the terrorists allowing them to increase their appetites. To maintain their stupid concept, NATO and the EU had address some facts. First, they had to prove that the Albanians were really endangered species in Macedonia. How did all those reporters (notably Badinter) feel, who described Macedonia as 'success story?' It was 'bingo' for the terrorists. Second, they had to prove that the conflict was not imported from Kosovo, because if it was it should not be resolved with political methods. That is why the Americans had to tell the neat and naïve Germans to 'lose' border control. Third, they had to prove constantly that the Macedonian army and police were not capable of coping with the terrorists. That is why they had to threaten 'poor' Trajkovski with The Hague and with sanctions to evacuate terrorists together with their trainers--'work on' the Ukrainians, bring Zlenko to Ohrid, etc. Super bingo for the NLA! After they brought the peace plan to the 'Harvest' stage, they realized that they needed Ahmeti. If he had said 'no,' they would have appeared morons. That is why any disarmament was better that none. And Ahmeti was 'generous' too. He will deliver all pieces of weapons except for those that he will not deliver. Bravo! The Americans buy this! After this, not only that he will display flags of the EU, NATO and the United States in his 'liberated territory' in Sipkovica, but he will sleep in sheets made of those flags."

YUGOSLAVIA (KOSOVO): "For Albanians, Religious Buildings Are A Special Cult"

Pro-LDK Bota Sot commented (8/23): "NLA leaders have unanimously condemned the destruction of the Orthodox monastery in Lesok.... Thus the NLA denied speculations and the most monstrous accusations of the Macedonian Slav extremist circles.... They accused Albanians for the damage inflicted to this ecclesiastical building.... They blame Albanians, even compare them with the Taliban in Afghanistan!... In the Albanian-Macedonian conflict (when it comes to the burning and destruction of the religious and cultural buildings) Talibans were the Macedonian Slav paramilitaries themselves. With their killing machinery and military and paramilitary punitive expeditions they burned and destroyed 50 mosques and many Albanian villages, including many objects of the Albanian culture that clearly proves the autochthony of the Albanian population in Macedonia."

"Slav Paramilitaries, Nationalists Against Albanians, NATO"

Pro-LDK Bota Sot had this comment (8/22): "The line of extreme nationalism of the Macedonian Slavs (including some 20,000 paramilitaries who are, most likely under Georgievski's command) is obstructing the implementation of the peace agreement.

"Their sole objective is to realize the Macedonian Academy of Sciences scenario on the partition of the territory.... Behind this scenario for the failure of this agreement stands a part of the Macedonian Slav official authorities. For five days Macedonian Slav extremists have blocked the road to Kosovo thus cutting the main supply for NATO peacekeeping troops in Kosovo, until the Western powers meet a long list of demands set by Todor Petrov, the president of the Macedonian World Congress. Of course, these demands are damaging for Albanians and for the peace agreement. These demands...are oriented against the United States and especially against NATO.... These chauvinist forces think that only the renewal of the interethnic conflict can facilitate realization of their demands for the partition across ethnic lines, meaning that there would be an ethnic cleansing of Albanians from Kumanovo region and northern Macedonia. The alliance should also disarm the 20,000 strong formations of the Macedonian Slav paramilitaries.... The international community should reward the good cooperation Albanians have offered for implementing the agreement. It will be done by disarming simultaneously the NLA and the Macedonian Slav paramilitaries."

"The Alliance Should Move Quickly To Implement Peace"

Pro-LDK Bota Sot commented (8/20): "Macedonia lives these days between the implementation of the peace agreement and the chauvinist exponents of the Macedonian Slav side who are trying various ways to obstruct this agreement. They are doing that by inciting hatred against the Albanians but also against the NATO deployment in this country. In that context the Macedonian Slav chauvinists have blocked the highway that connects Skopje and Kosovo thus obstructing NATO's use of its main supply line for its peacekeeping forces in Kosovo, unless Western powers meet a long list of demands which are damaging to Albanians and against the reached agreement for peace. On the other side, a good portion of the Macedonian media have created new tensions with their tendentious reporting instead of creating a climate for the relaxation of the interethnic relations in Macedonia."

"'Harvesting' The Peace"

Independent tabloid Kosova Sot had this comment (8/20): "The actual military operation is starting in an atmosphere different from before. The feeling of distrust toward the West has increased while a part of the Macedonian Slavs see Europeans and Americans as the allies of the 'Albanian terrorists.' Added to the skepticism greatly expressed by the political class of Skopje, a hostile climate surrounds international troops which could make it hard for them to complete their mission of collecting arms from the Albanian guerrilla. There are numerous elements to support this claim. Immediately after the signing of the peace agreement, Georgievski and other Macedonian leaders said that the parliament would not ratify the agreement if the NLA did not hand over all weapons. Parallel to these rather unenthusiastic statements, the fighting and victims on the ground pose a serious threat to the agreement. It is clear now that Macedonians are trying to minimize the demands from the agreement by making its ratification harder and perhaps later hindering the practical implementation of its provisions."

"Is The Macedonian National Interest Anti-Western?"

The publisher of independent Koha Ditore, Veton Surroi, opined (8/19): "Albanians are aware that the partition of Macedonia would set a precedent that will have an influence on Kosovo and Bosnia partitioning. Albanians of the Balkans have shown their consistency in their policy towards the Euro-Atlantic mainstream. Another consequence of this policy is about the communication of Albanians across borders. Ethnic Macedonians will easily understand that the Albanians need to have communication among them. The ability of Albania, Kosovo and Macedonia to communicate free of strong borders is an essential part of the Albanian national interest. At the same time this is a part of the regional Balkans' interests and of the interests of a new Europe.

"With this the Albanian national interest becomes part of a historic development followed by the most developed countries in the world. The question is where do the national interests of the Albanians and Macedonians confront each other? Nowhere but in a primitive and anti-Western manifestation that was 'spontaneously' organized by a part of the Macedonian political bloc. Instead of a Macedonian vision oriented towards the West, Ukraine suddenly became favorite, NATO hated and American citizens were recommended not to travel to Skopje, as was the case with Tehran some time ago."

"Albanians Did Not Win The War--Just A Battle"

Pro-LDK Bota Sot had this comment (8/19): "Although the Albanian-Macedonian Slavs agreement brings 'a moment of a relieved breath' for Albanians, it in fact just initiates a process of seeking their legal national rights. Therefore the agreement does not mark 'the winning of the war' but only 'of a single battle' which should reconsolidate the Albanian subject in Macedonia around joint projects from the program of the national movement for the resolution of the Albanian issue."

ALBANIA: "The Last Macedonian Ravings "

Medium-circulation, independent Koha Jonë front paged the following op-ed piece (8/17): "Imaginary enemies are always essential for a state with dictatorial nuances in order to keep the establishment standing and the nationalistic spirit alive. That is what seems to be happening with the Macedonian government. Although there is a very balanced president there, the executive structure of this state is very far from Trajkovski. Defeated in the nationalistic battle, 'ashamed' before the anti-Albanian militants, the prime minister of Macedonia is looking for an enemy to bill with all of his political failures. The Macedonian authorities declared yesterday that Albania has supported the terrorists who have acted there. While all are trying to implement the Ohrid agreement, while the internationalists are turning the final pages of their projects on the future of Macedonia, while the NATO troops are awaiting orders to 'march' to the Macedonian land, while both ethnic groups are being relieved from fears and refugees get ready to return, this accusation comes from the 'dark' Macedonian offices. There have been previous attempts by the reckless Macedonian diplomacy to incriminate Albania but they have faded away quickly. The Macedonian hotheads that sought for about six months the political and military execution of the Albanians are stuck in a trap from international pressure and the signature they put in Ohrid. And in order to come out 'clean' in front of those who had asked for weapons to fight the Albanians, they are trying to shift the hatred of the Macedonian population toward Albania. After the failed undertaking to save Macedonia from the Albanian seed or at least to leave the Albanians in the status they had been before, Georgievski is now trying to assume the merits of a moderate politician who cannot be blamed for FYROM's mess, but was always on the defensive. Of course, finding an outside enemy and exporting the guilt is not easy for the hotheaded PM, especially now that some graves of murdered Albanians are being discovered. It would be better for the Macedonian government to seriously obey the instructions of the internationalists in order to come out of this threshold of civil war with honor, giving up on ravings and daydreaming, and for the Macedonians to try and establish fragile bridges with the Albanian ethnic group."

BRITAIN: "Third Time Right"

The liberal Guardian editorialized (8/23): "NATO's intervention in Macedonia...has been a remarkably smooth and uncontested affair.... One reason is that the mission's mandate is narrow and carefully agreed with the contending sides.... NATO is not there to enforce it. Its primary duty is to collect weapons from the guerrillas and ensure they qualify for amnesty. The model is not the role NATO has been playing in Kosovo or Bosnia, but what happened in the Presevo valley of south Serbia earlier this year.... A second reason for NATO's almost relaxed approach to its current intervention is that it is acting, for the first time in its history, as a 'coalition of the willing.'... This is an important precedent, symbolized most strikingly by the absence of American ground troops.... [But] the fact that a NATO operation has gone ahead without U.S. frontline forces helps to loosen Europe's excessive dependence on its transatlantic links and paves the way for other missions which European states may have to undertake on their own. Arguments between Washington and the Europeans postponed action in Bosnia and Kosovo. This time, at last, the lessons of dissension and delay have been learnt. The major issue for NATO's new mission is how it ends.... The Macedonian parliament will have to ratify the arrangements for providing greater civil rights to the Albanian minority as the ethnic Albanian guerrillas hand in their weapons. Whether some guns are hidden is not the main issue. More important is what happens when NATO leaves.... The [OSCE] ought to prepare now to enlarge its observer missions to monitor progress when NATO withdraws."

"Nothing But A Make-Work Scheme For NATO"

An opinion piece by Simon Jenkins in the conservative Times read (8/22): "I have not read a single commentator on the Balkans who regards this week's Operation Essential Harvest as anything but a make-work scheme for NATO. Macedonia should be left alone to handle its own internal affairs. But if NATO must meddle, given its partial responsibility for this conflict, the Macedonian government might reasonably expect it to come down unequivocally on its side. NATO should occupy the rebel areas, disarm the troops and keep the peace. NATO should side with an elected government, not glamorize the NLA and its pectorals and bandannas. Yet this is precisely what NATO has said it will not do.... Using British soldiers as NATO's political mercenaries is immoral. They are not defending British territory, British citizens or British interests. They cannot argue that they are protecting Europe or promoting world peace. By bolstering the egos of a group of insurgents in a tiny Balkan state, this intervention has done the opposite. Any villain with a grouse against his government can cause mayhem and know that Lord Robertson will come running, cameras at the ready.... The argument for Britain's latest Balkan adventure has not been discussed or tested in public. It cannot go unchallenged."

"Disarmament In Macedonia: It's Just A Balkan Coffee Break"

Andrew Apostolou judged in the conservative Daily Telegraph (8/21): "The Macedonian peace deal is a post-dated suicide note. All the elements of failure are present: futile disarmament and incentives for partition. Fumbling mediators have struggled to deal with venal and dishonest local politicians. The mediators have naively assumed that both the ethnic Macedonians and ethnic Albanians want to keep Macedonia intact. In an unfortunate echo of 10 years ago, the cry has gone up that this Balkan calamity, like Yugoslavia in 1991, is an issue to be settled by Europeans.... For all their griping, the Europeans crave American leadership. Without the committed weight of the United States behind them, the mediators have been undermined. The Western mediators have been manipulated and outmaneuvered. Ethnic Albanians and ethnic Macedonians alike repeatedly lied to the mediators.... The Macedonian government has called for an end to fighting while handing out weapons to ethnic Macedonian civilians.... Although war-related deaths have been below 200, the conflict has displaced tens of thousands, laying the foundations of a future partition. The peace agreement will accelerate this trend towards ethnically concentrated populations.... Each side wishes to dominate, not to cooperate, making partition a temptation for ethnic Albanians and ethnic Macedonians alike. There has been diplomatic babble about a 'Belgian model' for Macedonia. Perhaps, if Macedonia becomes as boring as Belgium, then nobody will want to die for it. If only that were true."

FRANCE: "NATO's Harvest"

Right-of-center Les Echos said in its editorial (8/23): "As opposed to its mission in Kosovo, [NATO] is keeping all weapons in their sheaths: proof that NATO can also play a preventive role."

GERMANY: "Between War And Peace"

Martin Winter commented in left-of-center Frankfurter Rundschau (8/23): "The decisive question in Macedonia is not whether British parachuters will be ambushed when collecting weapons. The difference between war and peace is whether the EU succeeds in stabilizing the process of a peaceful conflict settlement.... This is the only context where NATO's mission makes sense.... Nobody seriously believes that NATO will collect all weapons in a period of 30 days.... But the envoys and all sides involved will get a breather and time to cool down.... This alone will not be enough. The EU must now also keep to its promises: first, pressure for a quick amendment to the Constitution must be kept up. And second, the people in Macedonia need to see a peace dividend. And this means: greater economic assistance. Great risks remain for the soldiers as well as for the peace process. There is no guarantee for success. But the EU has at least created a opportunity and it would be utterly irresponsible not to take advantage of it."

"NATO On A Risky Mission"

Berthold Kohler penned the following editorial in the front page of center-right Frankfurter Allgemeine (8/23): "A lot is at stake in Macedonia. If the young state disintegrates, the whole architecture of southeastern Europe would begin to sway. That is why the conflict must be contained as quickly as possible, if necessary with a 'robust' intervention. Right now, only NATO is able to do that. If the Alliance turned out to be a paper tiger in this mission, the conflict in Macedonia would not be the only one that could spiral out of control.... Defending its own credibility must be one of NATO's goals in Macedonia. Insisting on the fact that NATO troops are given a realistic mandate and sufficient means to cope with the perceived risks is not lack of solidarity with the Alliance but loyalty to it."

"No Alternative"

Juergen Spengler commented on national radio station Deutschlandfunk of Cologne (8/22): "It is necessary to discuss in a critical way the pros and cons of the EU/NATO mission, but there is no alternative.... If NATO tried to get out of the mission, the price would be to expose itself to ridicule. This would, under certain circumstances, be tolerable but more important is that NATO has to live up to is word. It cannot afford breaking promises and losing its credibility.... But the decisive question is whether the chance for peace in Macedonia would be greater with or without NATO. The answer is clear. If the Alliance withdrew, a bloody civil war is likely to begin. No, there is really no alternative to 'Essential Harvest.' However, NATO is again performing only an emergency operation. The international community lacks the will to discard the obviously failed concept of a multi-ethnic state and to restructure the region in the western Balkans. And it does not have the courage to risk something in order to implement such a plan, give [NATO] a robust mandate, and accept military risks. This lack of courage is understandable, since the politicians' fear of the voters is too great and is justified. What they need are really sound arguments to convince the people that it is worthwhile risking the lives of one's own soldiers to force the peoples in the Balkans to make peace."

"Operation Sunshine"

Stefan Kornelius has this to say in center-left Sueddeutsche Zeitung of Munich (8/22): "In Macedonia, NATO is about to make a similar mistake [as in Kosovo]. Even though there is a military goal (the collection of weapons) and a time frame (30 days), the Alliance is again ignoring the real purpose of the operation. The forces will be nothing but a buffer, a bulwark between separatists and the Macedonian army. They are supposed to calm down both sides, halt further skirmishes, and make possible a political process.... Seen from this angle, NATO is working much more than in previous missions as a midwife for democracy. But...who controls the territory from which the KLA withdraws? Who guarantees ethnic diversity? Who decides when radicals no longer want peace and want to divide Macedonia? With its tight mandate, NATO has given up any chance of escalating the situation. It makes itself predictable, small, and thus assailable. And the mood in the sending states can be used as a tool by the radical forces in Macedonia.... If violence escalates, if soldiers are involved in fighting and killed, for the peoples in the NATO states this would be a shock. The damage for the Alliance and the Balkans would be immense. The secretary general of the Alliance and the chancellor should have the courage to mention these dangers, even though they have signed a sunshine mandate."

"Thanksgiving In Albanian"

Bernhard Kueppers argued in an editorial in center-left Sueddeutsche Zeitung of Munich (8/21): "The KLA in Macedonia will only turn in its less important weapons to NATO's disarmament forces. But this is only one reason why KLA leader Ahmeti wants to meet NATO forces in Macedonia in a 'friendly' way. Another aspect is more important. Ahmeti and the KLA leaders in the background in Kosovo and in the Albanian diaspora consider the 'voluntary disarmament' their victory, because NATO factually upgraded the KLA as a negotiating partner and accepted it as a guarantor of peace in the region. This will help the KLA get rid of its image as a gang of thugs.... NATO must watch out not to be misused in the end. Like during the recognition of the Republika Srpska in Bosnia and the tolerated displacement of Serbs from Kosovo, the Alliance could be used for the territorial solution of ethical questions in Macedonia."

"One Step, No More"

P. Bumeder said in a commentary on regional radio station Radio Kultur of Berlin (8/18): "The agreement is one step to settle the conflict, no more. Macedonia still stands on the brink of war. Individual exchanges of fire and skirmishes are still a daily event. Every day can bring the country closer to war, and NATO will not be able to change this situation too much if it confines itself to...collecting weapons. Nevertheless, this mission in Macedonia is not an outing in uniforms.... The Western forces could turn into a buffer between two highly armed and pugnacious parties. In such a situation, the KLA would like to hide behind such a buffer and continue to control the regions which it had won with military means over the past few months. The 'harvest,' which NATO has now promised to reap, will not be promising in such a case. Under the current mandate, NATO is not allowed to use military means to increase the 'harvest yield.' It may be possible that the soldiers will return as frustrated and unsuccessful 'harvesters' after 30 days."

ITALY: "NATO Mission In Macedonia Begins"

Defense analyst Andrea Nativi wrote in pro-government, leading center-right Il Giornale (8/23): "A successful outcome of 'Essential Harvest' is the only alternative to the dismantling of Macedonia and to a civil war.... Obviously no one is fooling himself into thinking that that the guerrillas will, indeed, turn in all the weapons in their possession.... 'Essential Harvest' is important also for other reasons: first of all, the absence of U.S. troops."

"NATO In Macedonia: Operational Phase Of Disarmament Mission Begins"

Leading business-oriented Il Sole-24 Ore noted (8/23): "As he announced at the beginning of Operation 'Essential Harvest,' Robertson pointed out that the mission is indispensable to stability in the area.... Robertson underlined that, even if this is a peace operation, NATO troops, if attacked, 'will respond' in order to defend themselves. There are still doubts about a mission that has been criticized since the planning phase. First of all, the doubts concern the presence in Macedonia of guerrillas who refuse to turn in the weapons.... Secondly, there is uncertainty about the real number of weapons that NATO will have to collect."

"A Quick Mission Full Of Risks"

An analysis in pro-Democratic Left Party L'Unita held (8/23): "The strongest doubts concern the short period of time set by NATO for this mission: Only one month to collect the weapons from the Albanian guerrillas, and then everybody will return home. NATO missions in Bosnia and in Kosovo have continued for years and nobody has ever mentioned returning home. That would be like giving up the work done so far and letting the 'film' about local conflicts start all over again. Why has a precise deadline been set in the case of Macedonia, then? The answer can be found in the fear of getting stuck in a crisis that a prolonged NATO presence would, paradoxically, risk feeding. How? By adding to the hopes of those--both Slovenians and Albanians--who count on the armed presence of Western nations as a defense against destruction by the enemy, but also as possible sponsors of a territorial partition, based on ethnicity. The supporters of single-community solutions--independent states or highly autonomous regions--hope that, with time, Western nations will become convinced that peaceful coexistence is impossible, and that the only solution is the total or partial separation of the two communities. NATO does not want to give time to the extremists to define a way--through provocations, ambushes and attacks--to implement their plan, i.e., to convince Western nations that putting up single-ethnic or single-religious blocs is the only way to achieve peace. Hence the West's determination to end the mission soon in order not to become trapped into that logic."

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 8/6/01

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: William Elliott Burk

SUBJECT: Russia

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	C D	COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	8/6/01		C
	Courtney	A

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

COMMENTS:

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

REV_00260667

July 31, 2001 A.D.
To White House Counsel
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
The White House

Dear White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales

Since the USA is hurtling toward certain economic and thermonuclear destruction, possibly sometime in your lifetime, as a Christian, save the USA and as many lives as possible. It is God's choice for you to choose between life or death for America!!!

Pres. Reagan humbled Russia into cooperating ("without firing a shot") by massively building up the USA military strength making a possible victory by Russia in WWIII a zero probability event, therefore Russia relented and cooperated for a short time under Pres. Boris Yeltsin.

REV_00260668

Angels are much more intelligent than men and it is an important reason why every effort possible to obey the Bible and Word of God is so important in the White House.

It is very good that President Bush is trying to stop the demonic slaughter of millions of babies, however it would be even better if he advocated the Christian America Amendment on the website titled "Christian America Amendment" advocating a Constitutional Amendment where free exercise under the law for all Christian religions is again possible by law, as it was in the days of America's Founding Fathers. America became a nonchristian nation by the "Treaty of Tripoli, Article 11" and must repent by law and return to Jesus as the Christian America Amendment allows.

The early Founding Fathers of America wanted to establish God's Kingdom here on Earth by the USA and later broken their covenant to God and repudiated a Christian nation in favor of legal polytheism and persecution of the free exercise of all Christian religions.

In Federal Government, it is God's will to care for the economic prosperity of the "common man," that is for Christians to have a higher standard of living I will briefly write of the three pillars of revitalizing America with a sustainable higher standard of living of most people if you will allow the Holy Spirit to teach you in these matters. It is God's will to establish His Kingdom, His Government Here on Earth Today!

Because most people serve money instead of God as Jesus commanded, and greed and capital formation are the idols of their lives, "carrot and stick" tax incentives and economic packages must be passed into law.

Because God labels the End Times government the Beast such incentives are needed!

1) ITC Investment Tax Credits 10% for 10 years resulting in effectively 100% of the cost of new factories and installed manufacturing equipment in the USA. (WTO treaty forbids such necessary tax credits so America will die under the UN world government.)

2) 10% minimum Tax Credit for ongoing corporation Research and Development, Research and Experimentation, instead of merely a tax credit for the increase over the base ongoing corporate budget. (By development of new products and the ITC tax credits, the factories and jobs will be built in the USA the rest of the world will envy and purchase making a sustainable general higher standard of living possible through the labor unions efforts in achieving the necessary economic ripple effects from the workers in the manufacturing sector for us in the service sector.

By producing more and better products in the USA, the rest of the world will come to buy them. R&D drives GDP growth in economics.

(Economist Dr. Robert Solo of M.I.T won a Nobel Prize in Economics for his contribution in understanding of in general, increasing R&D results in increasing GDP.)

3) Moderate Tariffs, Duties and Quotas. Moderate tariffs, not 10% tariffs "across the board nonsense" that would drive domestic inflation, but carefully calculated tariffs, duties and quotas necessary to stimulate domestic production and provide for manufacturing base necessary for a sustainable USA economy. (In contrast, closing America's factories results in cheaper goods resulting in price deflation as a short term "high," but inflation will again surface taking its' toll.)

America should have a "BUY AMERICAN FIRST" policy as it once did. Also as selling Israel to God's enemies was forbidden and you and America as a once Christian nation by covenant are also forbidden to sell America to God's enemies as is being done in television and in national security.

In the United Nations and NATO it is usually just the USA and Britain going it alone. The UN is only a deception and sin against God and Mankind, helping their enemies to take their lives ultimately as the Apocalypse of Jesus has written.

The "Cold War" national security measures that George Bush's father ended must be restored immediately, or America has literally NO SECURITY.

Why let God's enemies work at USA National Labs and steal national secrets, including all the atomic bomb secrets?

Is America only made up of traitors or is there a remnant pleasing to God's will so to be righteous before Him?

As China's Dr. Lee and other foreign nationals plunders and loots America's technology, there is only sincere mutual deception operative as National Security.

As the "Beast" and the beasts in the Book of Daniel representing the world governments in a time line, people behave as animals in regards to money and greed and a tax system/economic policy that recognizes this basic fundamental sin of most people in regards to the service of money.

The recent tax cut bill was an economic disaster to the future of America, because of an inadequate manufacturing sector to absorb and expand using those additional funds in the economy so by producing more, there would not be future inflation by having given consumers more money to spend. And by taking money from those paying Social Security Taxes and giving most of it to the rich and some to the rest in a last drunken "credit card spending spree" until America is fully destroyed economically, making the complete fall to the waiting arms of the U.N. monster beast America created as its' leaders were deceived into making treaties with God's enemies. Keep in mind, supernatural spirits, whether it be the Holy Spirit controlling Christians as written in the Book of Acts of the early Christians and hopefully of you, and evil spirits, deceiving spirits and the power of sin as Apostle Paul wrote in Romans 6-8 that caused Apostle Paul to do evil, until he repented by the power and grace of Jesus Christ the Creator.

Only by the power of Holy Spirit can leaders and nations be pleasing to Him. Therefore we are to seek His power in our lives, and not be drunk with the power of other spirits in government.

Regarding the Jewish people, the Federal Reserve Chairman is a wonderful person, friendly and I would be honored to know him personally and have him as my friend. However as "Worth" magazine wrote, Alan Greenspan worships money and greed.

Jesus said "you cannot serve money and God!" Greenspan fails to establish the prosperity of the common man as his goal and policy.

In the Bible in Romans 11:28 Apostle Paul writes the Jewish people are your enemies (better believe the truth Jewish people are enemies to the long term welfare of the USA), and Fed Chairman's Alan Greenspan's view to reduce most of the American people to global economic productivity units and poverty, is great sin against Jesus and great harm to the future of the USA in free trade.

(Yes at the Second Coming or their personal repentance in accepting their and our Messiah Jesus some Jews will convert and come to eternal salvation and be our friends indeed, those whom God fore knew from the beginning of the World will be saved, however as for now, they are indeed your enemies, especially in their government policies for they oppose defenses and the Kingdom of God at their every vote.)

The "New Economy" is a great lie and deception making out if everyone gets college degrees, then most the economy being consumer and service sector oriented would somehow get productive, when in fact, the service sector, despite raising employment standards requiring college degrees that have little job relevance, does NOT raise general economic productivity in the for most of the economy.

As the "New Economy" ravages the middle class with free trade, with lower buying power with reduced discretionary budgets with a lower standard of living, fewer consumer goods are purchased causing a spiraling falling economy in the long term for the USA outlook. Although there will be minor "upticks" in the economy as the business cycle is not dead, the general trend of the economy will be a falling standard of living for most people this century as ALL macroeconomists will confirm.

The looting of the Social Security Trust Fund for the recent tax-cut and refund, will indeed give a temporary boost to the general economy, however it will soon be the end of America as a world leader unless you repent and act righteously in economic policy. Instead of the Social Security funds being used to buy the electric power companies and paying the dividends to Social Security recipients in the coming decades, the "Beast" capitalistic electric utilities are turning to expose how truly greedy and cruel they actually are!!!

As the "dot.com" or "dot.bombs" did NOT have a valid business model, neither does America's extremists libertarian economists have a valid business model for America's economy. It isn't a matter of closing "buggy whip" factories, it is a matter of closing almost ALL factories with a gradually falling standard of living for most people. The typical false economic paradigm is people are taking low paying service sector jobs and losing high paid factory jobs.

The truth is there is NO way to pay American service sector jobs more than Chinese service sector jobs in the long term of about a century of a declining standard of living for most American people.

So therefore it is not merely a matter of losing "high paid" factory jobs, it is matter of free trade driving down the general standard of living for most Americans in the service sector as decades pass. America is truly on a down hill spiral.

The New Economy is a great LIE, just as the forbidden World Government of the United Nations bringing false hopes that will ultimately result in the premature fall and destruction of the USA. Overqualified ditch diggers and other positions in the service sector DO NOT GENERALLY HELP ECONOMIC PRODUCTIVITY.

Ditch diggers with college degrees will NOT help productivity and many jobs that now require college degrees will make NO DIFFERENCE in the global marketplace.

People with doctorate degrees, are not ALWAYS better qualified than those with lesser academic achievements.

The Tech sector of the economy will drive about 20% of the USA economy according to major macroeconomists, the remaining 80% of the USA economy is made up of basic goods and services and is generally NOT helped in productivity by excessive college degrees.

The ONLY way to sustain the general standard of living is through manufacturing increasing (productivity) and NOT DECREASING USA MANUFACTURING.

In the movie "It's A Wonderful Life" Jimmy Stewart has the opportunity to turn his hometown into a wonderful place, making the most of people's talents, abilities and making the most of their money as a Godly Steward in a savings and loan company, or in your case, the federal government.

The Republican Party policy has been generally to turn America into the greedy nightmarish commercial Babylon that Jimmy Stewart in the movie did his best to stop! You must stop America from turning into the nightmarish commercial Babylon as the Creator of the Universe, Jesus Christ commands this of you!

The Bible has written, "be moderate in all things" and this includes moderate socialism.

Congress needs to hire and seek truthful academic counsel in legislation and policies in order to honor God and truth is their duty to the nation.

In the Old Testament God use to "wink at sin."

In the New Testament, Jesus destroys and smashes nations for their sins. The Bible has written "speak truth to each other."

In the Book of Galatians 3 the promises made to Abraham are promises now made to us including the land of Israel.

God claims Israel to be His Land in Joel 3.

God condemns those who "divide the land" to war and eternal damnation.

All diplomatic efforts of America to divide up Israel must stop, and the USA must also withdraw from the United Nations which has made laws, by Security Council Resolution to divide up the land of Israel. (All PLO protesters should be systematically exiled as necessary from the land promised to Abraham.)

Although these government policy proposals and positions sound "extremist" and unworkable, America would not be facing God's wrath and on the "fast track" to economic destruction and thermonuclear war if America's sins were NOT rising to heaven as a terrible stench in the nostrils of God.

"God is Light" Apostle John writes in 1John 1:5, and even the light waves are being sold to the devil in the name of predatory global capitalism to God's enemies so the children and future of America would be only, heartache and ruin.

Since Congress DARED to sell God and the light spectrum, God has decided to sell America to His enemies as He sold ancient Israel. If Congress will repent, then God will relent and repent of His judgment to destroy America.

Revelation 18:13 condemns predatory capitalism of those who sell the "minds, souls and bodies of men!" Economist Adam Smith in the "Wealth of the Nations" once wrote of the "invisible hand" of God guiding economic activity.

God has literally turned His hand against America and will gradually destroy the nation until, or if there is any suitable repentance.

Congress, by turning America into global competitive predatory capitalism by LAW, has brought and is bringing the ruin of the people and destruction of the nation written of in Revelation 18 and the rest of the Bible.

As corporations evidence in their behaviors, it is often the devil's hand that now guides business decisions.

In the Bible, in the Book of Nehemiah, Nehemiah was threatened by enemies, such as Russia, and raised the defenses and built up the military of Jerusalem so God's enemies, though they intended war, did not fire a shot, as recorded in the Holy Scriptures. To make a treaty to leave America defenseless against an expected First Strike violates God's Command to NOT make treaties with His Enemies and is treason against the Creator of the Universe leaving America defenseless against our enemies.

In Summary, just the threat of using lethal force is enough to deter God's enemies, if the nation is in God's will. In the Law of Moses, it is the promise of God who will make His enemies to be at peace with the nation that is called by His Name and obeys His Holy Spirit.

Pres. Boris Yeltsin was very cooperative to USA interests and advice in his time of office.

Human nature has NOT changed in Russia, as they threaten and buildup militarily, and again they must be humbled into cooperation by massively building up the USA military. Russia clearly designates the USA as their enemy every time the USA talks about defending itself.

If Russia were a friend and militarily allied with the USA, the defenses of the USA would pose no potential threat against them and would be ignored by Russia instead of threatening to race ahead in the arms race to build ever increasing numbers of strategic nuclear missile systems and mirving their warheads even more then they do now!

Capitalistic resources are NOT allocated upon domestic economic productivity and need and godly responsibility as Jesus would Himself, but according to supranational corporations' needs to serve their greed and lust to control nations without loyalty to the USA in many cases.

Just as "you are the temple of God" in the New Testament, you are to "drive out the money changers" from your heart and turn America's government from predatory capitalism to Christian socialism as Jesus and His disciples practiced.

Jesus said go out into the highways and byways and "seize them violently" and bring them into the wedding feast of the Lamb in the original Greek manuscripts as well as the fact Jesus said "I came to bring a sword and NOT peace (and safety treaties)." Jesus said a "violent man takes the kingdom by force" and He meant favorable administration bias and schooling would be required of Christian nations as America once was.

It is NOT the "free marketplace of ideas," but biased coercion that Jesus requires of the marketplace and highways of commerce so to win men's souls to the Creator! Jesus requires heavy favoritism and bias in favor of the weighted evidence and truth in all forums of debate and thought.

Voluntary "free market" level trading playing field arguments in the evangelism/ideology of Christianity is the doctrine of demons as world government with God's enemies.

The public light waves must be used for the common good as Jesus Himself would in broadcasting, or the consequences include selling most children to sin and social destruction.

Instead of the White House listening to the rich and greedy, understand Jesus has given the death sentence to those with "excessive luxuries" written of in Revelation 18. Apostle James writes to his Christian audience "WOE" to the rich Christians. The Bible WARNS you the rich rule you for evil and not for your good! In general rich people are BAD GOVERNMENT as they could help the nation and the common man, but do not in their worship of greed and idolatry of riches.

Isaiah 45:3 has written it is your Christian duty to take the riches of darkness and use them for general welfare and good of the people Israel who are in the nation you have rule over.

Wealth transfer from the unrighteous rich to God's people is God's Command today as God does not change!

As the fable of "Robin Hood" you are to take from the rich and give to the poor to do the will of Jesus as faithful stewards in government.

Jesus said you would have wealth you did not earn and many houses in the New Testament. In the Old Testament God also promised "cities and houses you did not build."

In the Old Testament, God promised houses that we did not build, not just spoils of war, but sacrificial social love in providing for the needs of the Body of Jesus Christ. De 6:10 (Cities including houses Israel did not build as part of the blessing to serve Jehovah would be theirs.)

To give tax breaks and refunds to the rich is a great evil temptation to them and evil to the nation.

Since you are helping to send the rich and wealthy to the lake of fire by helping them buy "excessive luxuries" instead of investing in the future of America by tax credits in manufacturing productivity, you have done evil before the LORD in tax law.

It is true, God promised great riches to King Solomon in the O.T., however God did so for His stated purpose that His Will and kingdom be established here on earth as it is in Heaven.

The Law of Moses prohibits the king amassing wealth and gold to himself as King Solomon did and was a contributing factor to his terrible end when "the LORD departed from Solomon." De 17:18 God forbids the excessive luxuries wealth of silver and gold to belong the king of Israel.

The Biblical king was to establish the COVENANT OF JEHOVAH with the wealth of the nation as the WHITE HOUSE is to establish the COVENANT OF JESUS with the wealth of the nation and disciple all nations.

There are two types of kings and leaders, "the basest of men" or "a man after God's own heart." Choose carefully who will be kings of America.

"You are a nation of kings and priests" and are to FORBID by TAX LAWS, excessive personal wealth, as it is a great sin of all kings/citizens in a democracy, based upon De 17:18 and Revelation 18.

The American government at the end of the 19th century and early twentieth, use to warn of the dangers of "democracy" in the context of warning of the dangers of "communism." When most people have turned against the Creator of the Universe, the principles of a democracy doing what is righteous, falls to the earth as the citizens trample the truth in their lust of power and evil in television and other entertainment. Truth MUST be subsidized as Jesus is Truth!

It is your duty in government to NOT to be swept away by the hypocrisy and paradigms and delusions of most people in business.

The DMCA Digital Millennium Copyright Act of 1998 MUST be changed so COPYRIGHTS may only be renewed no more than a total of twenty one years. Making OLD BOOKS, MUSIC, and Television available as LIBRARIES ALREADY DO FOR NEWER MUSIC, MOVIE and BOOKS. "Selling the minds, souls and bodies of men" on the altar of Babylon America Capitalism is eternal death as Revelation 18 has written in the Bible. Making thinking only a luxury of those capable of buying copyright information is a great evil to God!

IF BLIND GREED was not the "guiding force" of Congress in Copyright Law, music could be recorded from NAPSTER just as listening on AM/FM Radio as long as the music was NOT SOLD for MONEY, as that would be "piracy."

Putting entire libraries of nonfiction books on the INTERNET will help turn America's people back to truth and knowledge instead of strangling the souls and minds of children with Federal Copyright Laws!

I advocate Copyrights be renewed no more than 21 twenty-one years, at least 22 year old books, music, and movies will be available to the children, as the heritage of America and the people's of the world who wish to be influenced by America's knowledge of decades past.

For the heritage of the children, everyone must have and will have INTERNET access to 22 year old nonfiction, fiction books, music and movies. Selling the heritage of the children to the devil for money is great evil. Old books need to be downloadable and readable on computers for the good of the common man and for the good of the children.

Embryonic stem cell research must be banned in order to obtain God's blessing. However Stem cells from blood supplies may be used for research as they do not involve the murder of convenience of a human baby.

You are spirit, although the conceptus cells become the placenta, the spirit of the infant was created at the moment of conception. As the infant's body is built, the spirit inhabits it!

Termination of the conceptus, although the body has not formed is non sequitur as Jesus said on the cross, "Father receive my spirit."

You are an eternal spirit, an unique person created in the "image and likeness" of God. The spirit of murder should not prevail in the murder of the conceptus, and the resulting murder of the spirits of human babies.

In the Book of Acts the early Christians were in the City of Jerusalem Temple worshiping Jesus openly until Acts Chapter 8 when the great persecutions broke out. Acts 2 and chapter 4 have written it is the will of Jesus and His Apostles Christians practice some socialism and meet the needs of ALL of the saints and not just be selfish as many were practicing with their personal wealth.

Therefore today's Christians are to practice some moderate socialism. (For example BPA has provided reasonably price federal public electric power with good wages for the workers until recently.) In contrast, recent artificial/contrived refinery/oil shortages and electricity "shortages" with horrific price gouging, show the evil and utterly ruthless nature of ungodly corporations. Federal intervention is unfortunately required in such cases.

Therefore God would prosper most Christians and you are to make it your policy also instead of reducing most people to certain poverty in this century with sinful "free trade."

It is God's will for government to bless His people with prosperity, to establish His will here on Earth as Jesus commanded in the Lord's Prayer in Matthew 6.

It is great SIN for harlot Christians to curse most Christian in America with poverty, based upon the Holy Scriptures of the Bible.

When America's economy is ravaged by "free trade" then the Earth's last hope to hold off World War III will end forever.

There are no "free lunches" in economics.

ONLY BY PRODUCING MORE GOODS, MAY THERE BE MORE WEALTH IN THE FUTURE TO SPREAD AROUND THROUGH TAXES AND ECONOMIC RIPPLE EFFECTS!

Congress ordered the Federal Reserve to "fudge" and make up "fairy tales" about service sector productivity in the economy, giving a false sense of security of America's financial future.

Instead of a "kinder and gentler" future for America, the free trade economics of reducing Americans to global economic productivity units have been implemented by Government, as if people are mere animals instead of being created in the "image and likeness" of God.

Men need to be employed as the Holy Spirit leads, in order to feel they have personal value in most cases, and it is your duty in government, to school, to train and employ human resources in the nation as Jesus would and as the Holy Spirit leads you.

Corporations did not have a white collar middle management fat/bloat problem in the past, but were trying to obey the Christian edict and Command of Jesus to pay people more than they are worth as Jesus said He was a generous man and Christians would have an abundance of houses and wealth. There should be mercy and grace in growing old instead of being reduced to poverty by free trade animals by the government God labels as the "Beast" whom makes men and women mere economic productivity units, subject to cost benefit analyses as their idol paradigm in government administrations. Now even older teachers can't find work in many cases because of age discrimination in employment.

Manufacturing once made up about 40% of the USA economy and is now collapsed to about 9% of the GDP. The high standard of living enjoyed by most Americans is unsustainable economically in the long term as ALL MACROECONOMISTS will confirm to you.

As teachers are being paid more and students are being "dumbed down" with their textbooks in math and other subjects the economic "productivity" in the service sector of the economy is actually "NEGATIVE" overall and has been so for many years.

It is necessary for the Library of Congress to put twenty year old K-12 textbooks, with emphasis on math textbooks to stop the "dumbing down" of America's children. If given a chance, the Copyright Lawyers would greedily close down libraries charging for every "use/read" book bringing God's Wrath upon the USA. To "sell the minds of men" is sin. Truth must be sacrificed for and subsidized as Jesus is the Truth!

The Federal Reserve is completely wrong in saying productivity is generally improving over the years, although recently, the bad news of negative productivity is gradually becoming their view also.

ONLY BY PRODUCING MORE (manufacturing more) MAY A HIGHER STANDARD OF LIVING BE SUSTAINABLE IN THE LONG TERM IN THE USA. This can ONLY be done by manufacturing in the vast majority of cases. When more goods are produced, then there will be more wealth in the future to spread around through economic ripple effects and moderate socialism.

ONLY by "Carrot and Stick" tax credits may the manufacturing sector's production will increase in the USA. This is necessary due to the greedy beast like nature of money and corporations' short term objectives.

It is cheaper for immoral supranational corporations to cannibalize America and build similar factories in Mexico and other nations and the product quality is often just as high. Without manufacturing tax credits for additional new factories America's economic future is bleak with certain poverty for most to eventually result.

I have given you the basic solutions and Holy Spirit truth in economics. It is said "Economics is an Art and NOT a Science." Take a chance and believe what the Holy Spirit is saying to you in economics!

Keep in mind, unless you can turn America's leaders to repent in Christian laws, defenses and in economics, America is doomed.

Inflating the money supply, without corresponding increases in sustaining manufacturing will ONLY result in tragic inflation and a lower standard of living for most Americans in the long term. Excessive capital formation and excessive stock prices results in predatory inflation. Once capital is formed, then investment must be made according to the needs of the economy for greater production to meet appropriate consumer demand for USA made products.

Anytime excessive money is created through the Federal Reserve, stocks or services results in price distortion and through economic ripple effects a lower standard of living generally will result.

In the past, when America's corporations respected Jesus and America, then they invested in America and their employees so everyone possible would have a better future in America. However today's corporations are supranational/multinational and quasi nations in their own legal and administrative rule making and usually care nothing for their employees, firing the weak and old as productivity falls, slashing the standard of living and destroying nations as they serve the idolatry of quarterly profits.

As China "HUMBLES THE USA" by slowing down the INTERNET at times and having our surveillance airplane chopped up into pieces, and Russia's President reveals the truth to CBS that Russia is not a "partner" and does not "evidently" want to take the steps necessary to be an ally of the USA and NATO, any consideration of upgrading Russia's status in NATO to a full member must be forever shelved or destruction for America will possibly realized much sooner!

Deuteronomy 7:2 and 23:6 LITERALLY FORBIDS TREATIES WITH GOD'S ENEMIES! It is also God's Command today as God is "the same today, yesterday, yes forever!" God's Law is fulfilled in Christ and Romans 3:31 has written it is our Duty to God to establish His Law!

Every law passed by Congress either is a law for good or for evil. Today it is also SIN to make treaties with God's enemies!

The USA must repent of making treaties with God's enemies as God Himself requires this! Although this may be inconvenient, do note America and the British Empire could of assimilated the entire Earth in the Bible's "Manifest Destiny" for God's people to rule the nations after World War II.

In 1 Kings 22:48 King Jehoshaphat's entire merchant marine shipping fleet of ancient Israel was completely destroyed by God as a sign of His displeasure of making a treaty with God's enemy. FREE TRADE IS SIN TODAY!

Most supranational corporations have no American national loyalty, and usually serve only greed and profits.

Yes the corporations have an interest in America as a customer base to make money, but that is just about all as America turns into the Babylon "Beast" that sells men's souls and minds in the service of money!

America should change its laws so to return to maximum of ten hours a day for workers, unless there is an extenuating circumstances/emergency other than saving employee benefits sacrificed on the altar of not hiring more employees. Working people twelve hours a day is NOT helping them change from "gory to glory" in God's image nor helping their children. Amen

Finally, Apostle Paul said it was God's will because "Eve was deceived" that women, are NEVER to be appointed to positions of authority as National Security Advisor.

Modern science shows, although equally intelligent as men statistically, women's two brain hemispheres are hard wired together so emotionalization of ideas, instead of abstract logical reasoning is usually the case.

As a result women will speak thousands of more words every day than the average man in order to comfort herself and "emotionalize" the stress.

Also as God is "Always the same" it is written Isaiah 3:12

"woe to you when women and children rule over you!"

Men do not usually emotionalize thoughts and seek "emotional release" through talking as women do, men instead turn to spirits in their thinking more often instead of turning to emotion for comfort, whether good spirits, as the Holy Spirit and the Spirit of Jesus in you, or men turn to seducing devils and their ideas (literally) to help them make their decisions.

This is a reason why men are the "head" of the marriage as men seek spiritual guidance more regularly in their thinking as God essentially excluded the emotional "release" brain mechanism women have with a differently "wired" brain.

1 Timothy 2:12* "And I do not allow a woman to teach nor to exercise authority over a man, but to be in silence.

13* For Adam was formed first, then Eve.

14* And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived has come to be in transgression."

Although some twist the Scriptures with radical false assumptions, the context is Adam was not deceived and Eve was deceived and more prone to being deceived.

"Braided hair" is in the context of gold and cosmetic enhancements and not primarily a reference to the Greek cult prostitutes in the area of Pastor Timothy's church. God does not want His people looking as the wealthy and prostitutes do.

Excessive personal wealth and outlandish/worldly clothing is sin for Christians, men or women.

"Excessive luxuries" such as gold is judged to be a sin worthy of eternal damnation as written in Revelation 18.

Apostle Peter had NO personal gold or silver, as the needs of the Body of Christ were too great and numerous.

In the Book of Judges chapter 4 Prophetess Deborah (a woman ruler) did righteously rule Israel, however it was in the context of exceedingly evil and "wicked men" who were unsuitable for righteous leadership in God's sight.

God is always the same and sometimes today in the context of wicked men of America, some women who have the gift of being a prophet are suitable for America's sinful government today.

It would be desirable for America, who was once a Christian nation by law, again become a Christian nation by law, by adopting the Christian America Amendment so God could bring His blessings again upon America instead of certain looming tragic destructions.

The Law of Moses through the Apocalypse/Revelation describes the tragic punishment nations as America any other nation that breaks His covenant they made in past centuries, as America has broken the Covenant of Jesus.

God SOLD Israel to His enemies in Judges 4:1-2 because all of Israel was practicing evil in God's sight!

Today, as "God is the same," God is selling America to His enemies for America's great sins and evil practices and Congress passed the "fast track trade" laws necessary to sell America to her enemies.

Since God has judged America to be destroyed, even the lightwaves/frequency-spectrum are being sold to His enemies so the children will be destroyed by television and the media.

Unlike Israel in the Bible whose soverignty as a nation was restored after 2,500 years, America, once the USA is destroyed by THERMONUCLEAR WAR, we will never be restored as a nation, though some people may reinhabit the USA after centuries of radioactivity declining, similar to the destruction described in Revelation 18.

In Summary, men are usually less prone to being deceived, as Adam was NOT deceived in the Garden of Eden, having women advisors in critical leadership positions is sin as most born again Christian women will agree.

Life begins at conception, when an egg and sperm join together, inside or outside the womb. The Embryo may be frozen for perhaps a thousand years and grown in a test tube or womb at that time. "God is Spirit" and Jesus on the cross asked His Father to receive His Spirit.

You are an eternal spirit and you will exist forever in Heaven or Hell if you refuse to repent of sin. Albeit a short life for embryos outside of a womb, it is still a life nevertheless. Revelation 18 gives those who sell the bodies of men and their souls eternal damnation and eternal separation from the loving Creator, Jesus. For humans to be parasites preying upon the lives of embryos for their stem cells is an abomination before God and a great evil sin.

The question of why the general population was swept away by NAZI Socialism and Soviet Communism was recently asked.

The answer is: In the Old Testament God wipes out most life on Earth for disobeying Him and as Jesus said "many are called, few are chosen," the Apocalypse generally describes global genocide as the consequence for nations to make covenant and then break their Covenant with Jesus the Creator of the Universe.

A more academic answer is the governments of Germany and Russia, "dumbed down" their captive public school children. As the NAZI's indoctrinated the youth corps so Russia today is indoctrinating their youth in the NAZI style. Also there was leader worship in Germany and Christian worship of God ignored and persecuted. Russia & China have designated America as their enemy they are preparing to kill and destroy, although they say "nothing personal":(

Without the "Spirit of God" as it is written, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

Without the spiritual anointing that breaks the yokes of "strong feelings" caused by deluding spirits, the spirits of the children are often taken captive and the mobs of democracy are swept away by Lucifer, the "god of this world."

With a different set of false paradigms, America's government is being "swept away" by deluding spirits of "free trade" bringing poverty to most USA citizens instead of prosperity as commanded by God in the Bible. Free Trade will destroy the USA just as surely as Nazi or Soviet Communist paradigms.

In the same deluding spirit as the Soviets, America's schools are "dumbing down" the children with strong delusional spirits of evolution of life from the simple to the complex which CATEGORICALLY have no factual basis in the "Hard Sciences."

Instead of teaching the children they are loved and created by a loving Creator of the Universe, and will inherit eternal life and love if they will help the Creator make them and other disciples into the "image and likeness" of God, they are falsely indoctrinated into the false religion of the "evolution of life" and they were created as animals as an "accident of nature."

God chides Israel in how they love "seducing spirits and loving a "stupid spirit." Instead of teaching children to love an "excellent spirit" as the Prophet Daniel and love the Holy Spirit, the children are left to being captivated by stupid spirits, that literally make children and adults stupid. There is a season of pleasure with sin and loving stupid spirits brings pleasure to many Americans.

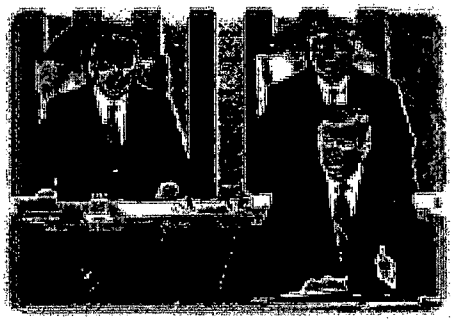
As a result the public school indoctrinated children are captivated by delusional spirits and will work to break society and destroy the nation in their selfish delusional religious indoctrination by the public schools.

To make sure the children are completely destroyed by the educational process in the USA they are taught there are No Absolute Truths or moral values, where religion is a choice of "life style" and not as a basis of moral behavior and guiding values in "secular" or multi theistic government that America has become.

The Bible has written to "train up a child in the way they should go" and NOT wait until their adults to evangelize them.

Jesus said let the children come to Him and not OPPOSE the Creator of the Universe as the Public Schools and the U.S. Courts have wickedly done. The Public Schools hinder the children from coming to Jesus and our Heavenly Father!

The Public Schools and the Courts have turned against Jesus almost completely where even Congress forbids their Chaplains from using the Name of Jesus in their prayers, inviting guest Chaplains of every religion and praying to the demons of "Mystical Babylon" that helped destroy ancient Israel.



As a result America is being turned over to spirits of strong delusion 2Thessalonians 2:11 When the truth is rejected, they God sends lies to dominate the minds of government. Free Trade to the ruin of the common man and to the USA is one such strong delusion for America's death.

Opposing a Christian USA by law where there is free exercise of all Christian religions is another wicked delusion the harlot Christians of America hold to in many cases.

God cannot be mocked, if America's leaders do not want the truth, then God sends them lies. As Prophet Jeremiah stated, "Truly Thou Art A God Who Deceives." Jesus is the Truth in all fields of knowledge including in politics, Hold Fast To the Truth. Amen

It is our duty to rule and reign with Christ Jesus as He started ruling thousands of years ago as written in Rev 1:5

If Christians are traitors or play the harlot for other ideologies or philosophies, then tragic judgment is incurred.

The Creator of the Universe is making His final Call for America to again become His Kingdom and Government here on Earth. The salvation of America and her allies is your duty.

It is your duty in government to NOT be swept away with false paradigms and the peer group hypocrisy of sin but always be led by the Holy Spirit, Romans 8:14.

To make treaties with God's enemies, Russia and the United Nations is sin against God. Russia and China designated the USA as their planned military objective to be destroyed, although Pres. Putin said, "nothing personal!" As convoluted the diplomatic paradigms are, the Russians have made it very clear America will be eventually destroyed by them and leaving America effectively defenseless against their attack is their highest priority in making treaties. Jesus said "love your enemies" and NOT make treaties with His enemies. Get the USA out of the U.N. and end the treaties with God's enemies of Russia and China and stop building them up economically so to bring WWIII at the soonest possible time.

God today, is gradually destroying America because of the sins of "free trade" with His enemies.

As a result of "free trade" with God's enemies, God's Judgment and wrath are literally being poured out upon America. Judgment starts at the "house of God" the USA, and not with Russia, whom is God's enemy. 1 Peter 4:17.

Russia in recent years has made treaty arrangements with Iran to come in against Israel in any warfare conflict making Russia the enemy of God from all reasonable perspectives.

Sen. Chuck Hagel, Nebraska Republican and a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said on CNN he believes some Republicans may be unhappy with the president´s glowing praise of Mr. Putin, who is a former KGB agent and communist apparatchik. But Mr. Hagel says he believes it was a "wise course of action to take," given the "immense impact" Russia will have "on the future of the world."

Part of the written Law of God's punitive curses was God would raise up more enemies against Israel and bring more evil upon the nation, if His people and nation failed to repent.

The USA was once a God fearing and covenant Christian nation with the states having state churches in a majority of cases. Amen

America is making the same policy error as prior to World War II, in building up Japan and Germany economically so they could launch world war II. In Revelation 18 God gives "CAPITALISTS" His wrath of eternal damnation for their dedication to greed of selling the "minds, souls and bodies of men."

Jesus said to give money to His enemies in some cases, however it needs to be in way that glorifies our Heavenly Father and Savior Jesus and not in a way that glorifies the death of the USA and most life on the planet in building up His enemies to launch the war they are preparing for.

Jesus said Love your enemies, but not make sinful treaties putting them in a World Government of the United Nations where they will gain control the World Government and destroy all Christians and most life on the Earth!

Get the USA out of the U.N. Amen!

Jesus Bless You and Help you always.
Grace, Love and Blessings forever in Jesus,
Respectfully your servant,

Pastor William E. Burk

PRA 6

Voice Phone: PRA 6

E-mail PRA 6

Table of Contents

Page 1 A strong military deters violence and war.
Page 3 Treaties with God's Enemies are forbidden by Bible
Page 3-4 Free Trade Treaties with God's enemies forbidden
Page 5 USA broke Covenant with Jesus made by Founding Fathers of America
Page 5 Free Trade ultimately results in Thermonuclear War
Page 6 Holy Spirit elects "Himself" with Pres. George Bush
Page 7 Jesus and the U.N. Treaty Organization with His Enemies
Page 9 Jesus and traitors for forbidden world government UN
Page 10 The "common man" and economic prosperity
Page 10 Jesus said to establish His Father's Kingdom as America's Founding Fathers promised Him
Page 11-12 Economic Policy for prosperity and wealth for the "common man" by the Holy Spirit's Book
Page 13 Spies and Enemies and "foxes in the chicken coop" of America's National Labs
Page 14 Jewish people, however nice, are often enemies of America's defense policy and prosperity of the "common man"
Page 15 "The New Economy" is a great lie and deception as Jesus warned, "men would deceive themselves and others"
Page 16 "Its' A Wonder Life" nightmare of commercial predatory capitalism and the fall of America
Page 17 God claims Israel is His Land and property and Galatians 3 makes the property and promises made to Abraham to us Christians in the New Testament including Israel from the River of Egypt to the Euphrates River

Table of Contents Continued

Page 18 America sells God by selling the lightwaves for the Bible has written "God is Light" but God sells America's children to devils and to His enemies instead
Page 19 Jesus wants America's leaders to lay down their lives in His service and for His Faithful Witness in the economy and in the media
Page 20 "Robin Hood" is a disciple of Jesus Christ
Isaiah 45:3 has written to take the riches of darkness for the glory of God and His Covenant
God would make America the "head and not the tail" and to "rule the nations" instead of reducing America to a "level trading field" with God's enemies so the USA will be destroyed
Page 21 personal wealth is a great sin and for Christian government to encourage it is great sin for not even the kings of the Old Testament were to have large personal fortunes, but use their wealth to make disciples of all nations and meet the needs of the people of the nation
Page 22 Copyright Law and the sinful and forbidden "selling minds, souls and bodies of men"
Copyright Law "dumbs down" the children of America
Democracy by the "rule of the mob" is a great sin
Page 23 The heritage of America's children demands the line must be drawn somewhere and 21 years of copyright protection is enough!
Embryonic Stem Cell research is usually Murder of convenience and sin against God

Table of Contents Continued

Page 24 Public utilities and BPA with good stewardship provide good wages and salaries while providing low cost electricity for the "common man" and for the "common good"

Page 25 No "free lunches" in economics

Only by producing more goods may a sustainable higher standard of living for the "common man" become a reality for the USA

Page 28 supranational corporations usually have NO loyalty nor any allegiances to the USA

Page 29 Isaiah 3:12 "woe to you when women and children rule over you."

Page 30 Women in government are sometimes more easily deceived in a deceptive and dangerous world

Page 32-33 synopsis and summary of some of America's errors in taking the "broad pathway to destruction"

Page 34-40 A brief explanation Why the peoples of nations are swept away by false ideologies of NAZI Socialism and Soviet Communism and summary plea

Page 41-43 Table of Contents

Love One Another

Love One Another

REV_00260711

The USA broke the covenant of Jesus and turned to legal polytheism and usually making evangelical Christians a persecuted minority in America where it is illegal to evangelize in the workplace starting with laws as the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

By actually forbidding the Name of Jesus from being used in prayers in the Congress in official prayers by the Chaplains, Congress is hypocritically denying the Kingdom and Government of God here on Earth in favor of polytheism ruling America in the name of religious toleration and ignore the fact God has damned America to destruction for playing the "harlot" as ancient Israel played the "harlot" and was destroyed by God's Judgment. Jesus said, "You cannot serve legal polytheism and God" to paraphrase His words and when government and Christian leaders conspire against Him to oppose a Christian government and fight even for the rights of occult to practice their false religions, they are working against God serving the devil wrecking havoc upon America helping to bring even more evil supernatural powers against America to "wear down the saints."

The immediate short term prognosis of America's future is poor, as "free trade" reduces the standard of living for most Americans gradually to poverty, more and more Americans will gradually vote Democratic in national elections for their social safety nets and basic needs for their families.

"Free Trade," by gradually destroying the middle class and enslaving most Americans with poverty in coming decades, has damned America to fall to destruction.

America will fall as the economy is devastated by free trade, before the forbidden U.N. World Government which will eventually be governed by God's enemies and will turn to destroy the USA in their madness along with most life on Earth forever. . . . .

The legacy of the Republicans, in seducing the world to predatory capitalism and free trade and world government will be a dead planet Earth. . . . . forever

God is against a cost benefit analyses for everything and for everyone attaching a money benefit for every act of government.

The early Christians practiced Christian Socialism and Socialism is not always subject to superficial cost benefit analyses.

As the Bible has written in Acts 2 and chapter 4, it is the duty of everyone to practice Christian Socialism and meet the basic needs of Christians, and the Republicans need to repent of their lawless type of freedom which is basically the sin of lawlessness "anomia in the Greek."

(Personally I always vote a straight ticket of Republican and have done so for decades, including voting for President Reagan twice, primarily because of the usually more Christian oriented abortion and defense policies.) The Holy Spirit said when George Bush was a candidate, "I will elect myself" speaking of George Bush's coming electoral victory as George would be God's Servant. However in four years, without repentance of sins, George Bush will only serve one term as president, with probably Al Gore as the next president.

What to do then? Jesus being God is quite intelligent and has adequate economic policies if you will listen more carefully to His Holy Spirit.

Jesus is literally the whole Truth of all spheres/areas of knowledge.

The whole foundational legal basis of the United Nations is illegal based upon the Bible and is wrong, flawed Sin against God being based upon sinful and forbidden treaties with God's enemies.

Jesus said "love your enemies" and NOT to put your enemies in a forbidden world government where one day they will gain control and use the immense military resources of NATO and the UN military treaty organizations to destroy the USA and most life on Earth!

Although President Wilson was a seminary student, he was deceived and sinned against Jesus, just as Judas Iscariot sinned against Jesus by trying to send mankind to destruction and their deaths.

Any interpretation of the World "Beast" Government in the Apocalypse has most people dying as a result of U.N. World Government, however Wilson refused to acknowledge God's prohibition on WORLD GOVERNMENT.

Jesus said "make loans to your enemies and do not even expect repayment." However Jesus did not say to build up God's enemies of Russia and China across the board with forbidden trade treaties, so to help them prepare for World War III and planetary extinction of most life including the deaths of most Christians.

Jesus intended to make loans/gifts to His enemies on the basis of glorifying our Heavenly Father and bringing His Kingdom here on Earth as it is in Heaven!

Directly or indirectly helping Russia to destroy the USA by sinful "free trade" does not fulfill the "spirit" of the command to love by Jesus.

Since the father of President Bush was pushing for the World Government "NEW WORLD ORDER" of the United Nations and having everything in the White House "run on automatic" instead of as Godly kings with a "hands on attitude" as King Solomon in giving the judgment between the two mothers, and day to day handling the minutiae of government, America has fallen to a Babel/chaos that the people have begun to despise.

Pres. Clinton has even signed a Presidential directive absorbing a "first strike" by Russia so no weapons will survive to retaliate against Russia, inviting Russia to attack whenever they feel the need to do so, without fear of retaliation.

Jesus said "men will be traitors" in the last days and it is difficult to find some to save America and obey Jesus and defend His Kingdom as Jesus said, under certain circumstances, "My servants would fight" and also ordered His disciples to buy swords so to use lethal force when necessary!

Since even international trade treaties with God's enemies are forbidden by Jehovah-Jesus, Free Trade must be replaced by "Managed Free Trade," on a case by case basis with each nation as the Holy Spirit leads you else God's curse is upon America for indiscriminate trading with our enemies.

Building up the economy of Japan and Germany prior to World War II did not stop, but in fact hastened the onset of World War II.

Building up Russia and China economically across the board, will result in the onset of World War III that much sooner. NAZI Germany fought war at the first possible moment after their military forces were at sufficient strength levels!!!

The free traders are truly traitors, accelerating God's enemies ability to prepare and go to the brink of global war and to planetary death.

Just as Pres. George Bush "clothes himself with Jesus Christ" and the power of God every day, or at least tries, other leaders allow in various degrees, "seducing spirits" spiritual beings of the devil "the Great Deceiver."

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 8/1/01

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: Ana Cristina Hirata

SUBJECT: Brazil Government Guide

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	DISPOSITION C D	DISPOSITION COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	8/1/01		C
	Courtney	A

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

COMMENTS:

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS:

MEDIA:

REV_00260712

PATRI, INC.

A Brazilian Government-Relations Company

July 11, 2001

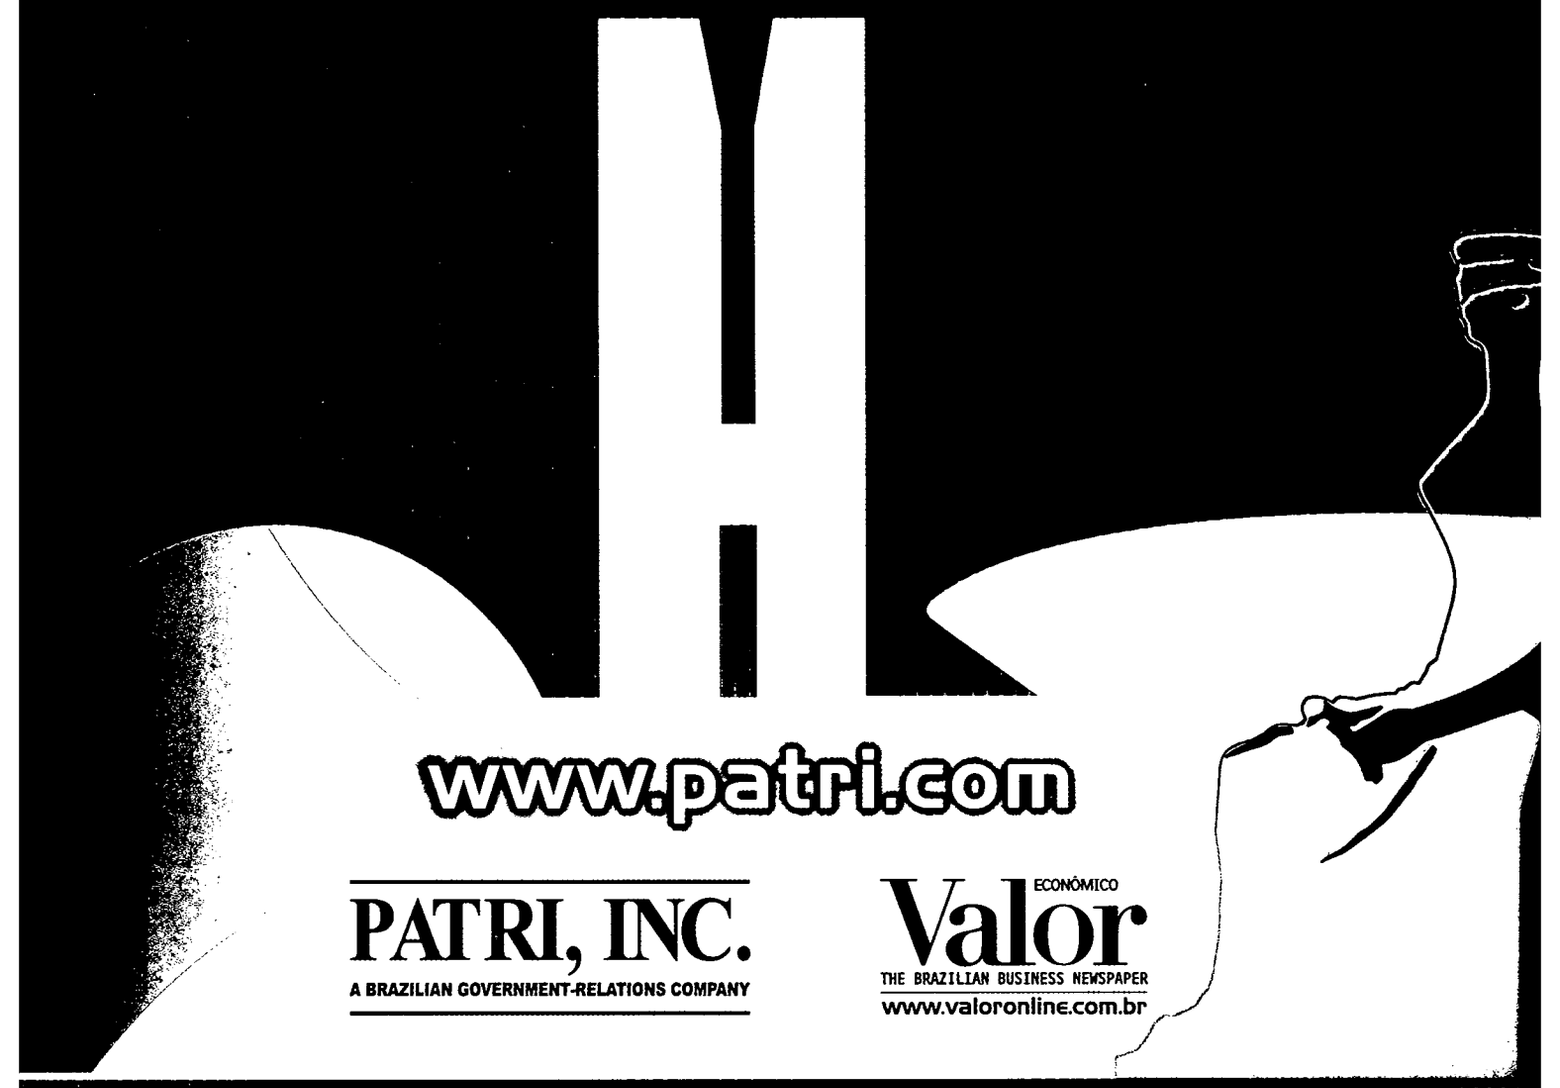
Dear Sir or Madam,

I am pleased to present you with PATRI's latest publication, Brazil Directory 2001, a comprehensive listing of key government officials, politicians, media, diplomatic missions and other entities that play a special role in forming public opinion and public policy in Brazil. I am confident that this guide will be a useful tool in your institution's dealings with Brazil.

PATRI is a consulting firm in government relations, with 15 years of experience in Brazil. Over the years, we have developed expertise in a broad range of sectors, from infrastructure to financial services, consumer goods to defense. With offices in Brasília, São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and an affiliate company, PATRI, Inc. in Washington, PATRI is one of the largest and most respected firms of its kind.

PATRI caters to major Brazilian and international corporations doing business in Brazil, providing a full array of customized public affairs services such as:

- Proactive advocacy strategies;
- Continuous monitoring of the Brazilian government and media;
- Political risk management; and
- Crisis management.



Please feel free to contact me if you would like further information about PATRI. For additional copies of the directory, please send us your request via e-mail to brazilinfo@patri.com. Please indicate "Brazil Directory 2001" in the subject field, and include your name, title, company name, complete mailing address and telephone number. We also welcome your comments and suggestions on the directory.

Sincerely,

Ana Cristina Hirata
Washington Director

Washington: 1101 17th St., NW – Suite 1010 - Washington, DC 20036 – Tel: (202) 822-6420 - Fax: (202) 822-6423
Brasília: SCN Qd. 02 Torre "A" - Centro Empresarial Encol - salas 701 a 717 - Tel: (61) 327-2606 - Fax: (61) 327-1619
Rio de Janeiro: Rua da Assembléia, 10 - 30° andar - sala 3010 - Centro - Tel: (21) 531-3373 - Fax: (21) 531-3373
São Paulo: Av. Nove de Julho, 5.435 - 10°andar - Jardim Paulista – Tel: (11) 3079-4533 - Fax: (11) 3079-2202
http:// www.patri.com.br E-mail: brazilinfo@patri.com

2001 Brazil Directory

www.patri.com

PATRI, INC.
A BRAZILIAN GOVERNMENT-RELATIONS COMPANY

Valor ECONÔMICO
THE BRAZILIAN BUSINESS NEWSPAPER
www.valoronline.com.br

REV_00260714

REV_00260715

State Department Documents [2]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1822/1740
9630

Box 53
Folder 16

PATRI, INC.

A Brazilian Government-Relations Company

July 11, 2001

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am pleased to present you with PATRI's latest publication, Brazil Directory 2001, a comprehensive listing of key government officials, politicians, media, diplomatic missions and other entities that play a special role in forming public opinion and public policy in Brazil. I am confident that this guide will be a useful tool in your institution's dealings with Brazil.

PATRI is a consulting firm in government relations, with 15 years of experience in Brazil. Over the years, we have developed expertise in a broad range of sectors, from infrastructure to financial services, consumer goods to defense. With offices in Brasília, São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and an affiliate company, PATRI, Inc. in Washington, PATRI is one of the largest and most respected firms of its kind.

PATRI caters to major Brazilian and international corporations doing business in Brazil, providing a full array of customized public affairs services such as:

- Proactive advocacy strategies;
- Continuous monitoring of the Brazilian government and media;
- Political risk management; and
- Crisis management.

Please feel free to contact me if you would like further information about PATRI. For additional copies of the directory, please send us your request via e-mail to brazilinfo@patri.com. Please indicate "Brazil Directory 2001" in the subject field, and include your name, title, company name, complete mailing address and telephone number. We also welcome your comments and suggestions on the directory.

Sincerely,

Ana Cristina Hirata
Washington Director

Washington: 1101 17th St., NW – Suite 1010 - Washington, DC 20036 – Tel: (202) 822-6420 - Fax: (202) 822-6423
Brasília: SCN Qd. 02 Torre "A" - Centro Empresarial Encol - salas 701 a 717 - Tel: (61) 327-2606 - Fax: (61) 327-1619
Rio de Janeiro: Rua da Assembléia, 10 - 30º andar - sala 3010 - Centro - Tel: (21) 531-3373 - Fax: (21) 531-3373
São Paulo: Av. Nove de Julho, 5.435 - 10°andar - Jardim Paulista – Tel: (11) 3079-4533 - Fax: (11) 3079-2202
http:// www.patri.com.br E-mail: brazilinfo@patri.com

REV_00260716

2001 Brazil Directory

www.patri.com

PATRI, INC.
A BRAZILIAN GOVERNMENT-RELATIONS COMPANY

Valor ECONÔMICO
THE BRAZILIAN BUSINESS NEWSPAPER
www.valoronline.com.br

REV_00260717

REV_00260718

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department, Henry Kissinger
Transcripts [1]

OA/NARA#: 1911/1829
9674

Box 53
Folder 17

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S10	6	09/23/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S10	6	09/23/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S76	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F
2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S81	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F
2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S84	3	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S84	3	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [1]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

2014-0544-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]

OA/NARA#: 1911/1829
9674

Box [illegible]

Folder 1

REV_00260730

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S96	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclóse trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S96	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S115	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S115	2	10/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S148	1	10/07/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S148	1	10/07/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [2]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S149	2	10/07/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S149	2	10/07/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S165	4	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S165	4	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260749

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S169	2	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S169	2	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S206	3	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S206	3	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S207	1	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260754

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S207	1	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [3]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department, Henry Kissinger
Transcripts [4]

OA/NARA#: 1911/1829
9674

Box
Folder

REV_00260756

PARTIAL RELEASE

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S185	2	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/17/2018 by BZ

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S185	2	10/08/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/17/2018 by BZ

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S216	2	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260760

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S216	2	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S230	2	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - S230	2	10/10/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [4]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T172	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [5]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by RAF

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T172	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [5]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by RAF

REV_00260765

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

State Department, Henry Kissinger
Transcripts [6]

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1911/1829
9674

Box 54
Folder 5

REV_00260766

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T282	3	01/28/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T282	3	01/28/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T284	2	01/29/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260770

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T284	2	01/29/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T371	3	02/11/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T371	3	02/11/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [7]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

State Department, Henry Kissinger
Transcripts [8]

OA/NARA#: 1911/1829
9674

Box 54
Folder 7

REV_00260774

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T378	1	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T378	1	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T380	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T380	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T167	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260779

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	Telcon - T167	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [8]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advise between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by SAH

REV_00260780

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T379	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [9]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/17/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T74	1	12/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [9]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T77	1	12/06/1973	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [9]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T172	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T172	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

REV_00260789

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T185	3	01/08/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T185	3	01/08/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T200	2	01/09/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T200	2	01/09/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [10]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/18/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T282	3	01/28/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T282	3	01/28/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T284	2	01/29/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T284	2	01/29/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T338	3	02/04/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T338	3	02/04/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [11]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T371	3	02/11/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T371	3	02/11/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]

FRC ID:
9674

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T378	1	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T378	1	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T380	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T380	3	02/12/1974

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House

SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files

FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [12]

FRC ID:
9674

OA Num.: 1911

NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/19/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T167	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [13]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T167	2	01/06/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [13]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/20/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T379	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [13]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/17/2018 by DRS

Withdrawal Marker
The George W. Bush Library

FORM	SUBJECT/TITLE	PAGES	DATE	RESTRICTION(S)
Telcon	TELCON - T379	3	02/12/1974	P1/b1;

This marker identifies the original location of the withdrawn item listed above. For a complete list of items withdrawn from this folder, see the Withdrawal/Redaction Sheet at the front of the folder.

COLLECTION:
Counsel's Office, White House
SERIES:
Kavanaugh, Brett - Subject Files
FOLDER TITLE:
State Department, Henry Kissinger Transcripts [13]
FRC ID:
9674
OA Num.: 1911
NARA Num.: 1829

FOIA IDs and Segments:
2017-0345-F

RESTRICTION CODES

Presidential Records Act - [44 U.S.C. 2204(a)]

P1 National Security Classified Information [(a)(1) of the PRA]
P2 Relating to the appointment to Federal office [(a)(2) of the PRA]
P3 Release would violate a Federal statute [(a)(3) of the PRA]
P4 Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information [(a)(4) of the PRA]
P5 Release would disclose confidential advice between the President and his advisors, or between such advisors [a)(5) of the PRA]
P6 Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(a)(6) of the PRA]

PRM. Personal record misfile defined in accordance with 44 U.S.C. 2201(3).

Deed of Gift Restrictions

A. Closed by Executive Order 13526 governing access to national security information.
B. Closed by statute or by the agency which originated the document.
C. Closed in accordance with restrictions contained in donor's deed of gift.

Freedom of Information Act - [5 U.S.C. 552(b)]

b(1) National security classified information [(b)(1) of the FOIA]
b(2) Release would disclose internal personnel rules and practices of an agency [(b)(2) of the FOIA]
b(3) Release would violate a Federal statute [(b)(3) of the FOIA]
b(4) Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential or financial information [(b)(4) of the FOIA]
b(6) Release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [(b)(6) of the FOIA]
b(7) Release would disclose information compiled for law enforcement purposes [(b)(7) of the FOIA]
b(8) Release would disclose information concerning the regulation of financial institutions [(b)(8) of the FOIA]
b(9) Release would disclose geological or geophysical information concerning wells [(b)(9) of the FOIA]

Records Not Subject to FOIA

Court Sealed - The document is withheld under a court seal and is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

This Document was withdrawn on 7/17/2018 by DRS

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Status of HSC (Homeland Security Council) Within EOP (Executive Office of the President)

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 55
Folder 6

REV_00260813

- either option is available
- §905 of ITS Act provides adequate authority to include under Title III [WHO] less disruptive

- EOP security → Interior
  [closing]

Preservation Copy

REV_00260814

LII
legal information institute collection home

US CODE COLLECTION

search

Search this title:

Search Title 31

Notes
Updates
Parallel authorities (CFR)
Topical references

Sec. 901. - Establishment of agency Chief Financial Officers

(a)

There shall be within each agency described in subsection (b) an agency Chief Financial Officer. Each agency Chief Financial Officer shall -

(1)

for those agencies described in subsection (b)(1) -

(A) be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; or be designated by the President, in consultation with the head of the agency, from among officials of the agency who are required by law to be so appointed;

(B)

(2)

for those agencies described in subsection (b)(2) -

(A)

be appointed by the head of the agency;

(B)

be in the competitive service or the senior executive service; and

(C)

be career appointees; and

REV_00260815

(3)

be appointed or designated, as applicable, from among individuals who possess demonstrated ability in general management of, and knowledge of and extensive practical experience in financial management practices in large governmental or business entities.

(b)

(1)

The agencies referred to in subsection (a)(1) are the following:

(A) The Department of Agriculture.

(B)

The Department of Commerce.

(C) The Department of Defense.

(D)

The Department of Education.

(E) The Department of Energy.

(F)

The Department of Health and Human Services.

(G) The Department of Housing and Urban Development.

(H)

The Department of the Interior.

(I) The Department of Justice.

(J)

The Department of Labor.

(K) The Department of State.

(L)

The Department of Transportation.

(M) The Department of the Treasury.

(N)

REV_00260816

The Department of Veterans Affairs.

(O) The Environmental Protection Agency.

(P)

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(2)

The agencies referred to in subsection (a)(2) are the following:

(A) The Agency for International Development.

(B)

The Federal Emergency Management Agency.

(C) The General Services Administration.

(D)

The National Science Foundation.

(E) The Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

(F)

The Office of Personnel Management.

(G) The Small Business Administration.

(H)

The Social Security Administration.

(c)

(1)

There shall be within the Executive Office of the President a Chief Financial Officer, who shall be designated or appointed by the President from among individuals meeting the standards described in subsection (a)(3). The position of Chief Financial Officer established under this paragraph may be so established in any Office (including the Office of Administration) of the Executive Office of the President.

(2)

The Chief Financial Officer designated or appointed under this subsection shall, to the extent that the President determines appropriate and in the interest of the United States, have the same authority and perform the same functions as apply in the case of a Chief Financial Officer of an agency described in subsection (b).

REV_00260817

(3)

The President shall submit to Congress notification with respect to any provision of section 902 that the President determines shall not apply to a Chief Financial Officer designated or appointed under this subsection.

(4)

The President may designate an employee of the Executive Office of the President (other than the Chief Financial Officer), who shall be deemed "the head of the agency" for purposes of carrying out section 902, with respect to the Executive Office of the President

Next

© copyright about us send email

REV_00260818

Stem Cell

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 341/237
9122

Box 55
Folder 7

REV_00260819

■ PUBLIC POLICY ■

Cells, Fetuses, and Logic

Who is being sentimental, who rational, in this debate?

RAMESH PONNURU

AMERICANS' attitudes toward abortion are notoriously muddled. But it is safe to say that they tend to dislike pro-lifers more than pro-choicers, even when they themselves favor curbs on abortion. Pro-lifers have a suspect, a frightening, passion. They are agitators; they are religious zealots. Pro-choicers, on the other hand, are the party of reason. They see all the pitfalls of prohibiting abortion. They understand that abortion raises issues much more complex than sentimental slogans about "protecting unborn babies" can capture.

This is, I think, a widespread view about the combatants in the abortion wars. It is also close to 180 degrees from the truth. Sentiment has been the pro-choicers' ally more often than not. The pro-life position, on the other hand, must ultimately be rooted in rigorous logic. A pro-life position that is merely sentimental is a weak and unsustainable thing—as demonstrated, most recently, in the controversy over embryonic stem-cell research.

Pro-choicers can depend more reliably on sentiment than pro-lifers for the simple reason that distressed pregnant women elicit more sympathy than endangered fetuses. Nobody remembers being a fetus. Nobody has held a fetus's hand. But many women know what it is like to be pregnant under difficult circumstances, or can easily imagine it. All of us, men and women alike, have known or can imagine a woman we care about in that situation: a sister, a friend. The fetus has almost no emotional claim on us. It—we think of the young fetus as an "it," not a "he" or "she," although of course every fetus has a chromosomally determined sex—is an abstraction to us, usually nameless.

Smart people have attempted to found moral theory on natural sentiments: One thinks of no less a figure than Adam Smith. But these attempts are doomed. Untutored sentiment is a poor guide to morality. No profound knowledge of history or psychology is necessary to see that our sympathy often fails to recognize the legitimate moral claims of those we do not know or of those we do not look like. Tender feelings alone cannot lead us to grasp the requirements of decency or justice. It takes abstract reasoning to tell us, first, that the fetus is a living human being, and then to follow that premise to the eventual conclusion that abortion is a violation of human rights.

To say that the pro-life position is rooted in abstract logic is not, of course, to deny that its adherents possess strong emotions about the matter, or even that their emotions are stronger than those of pro-choicers. As Richard Brookhiser has remarked in this connection, thoughts, if they are taken seriously, do not lie idly on the mind's table. They lead to further thoughts, and emotions and sensibilities form around them like crystals.

Nor do I mean to suggest that pro-lifers never make non-rational appeals. Many pro-choicers find the pro-life movement's rhetoric about "babies" manipulative. Fetuses aren't babies, they say. But pro-lifers don't really hold the views they hold because they think fetuses are babies; rather, they know that fetuses are members of human race. (Fifteen-year-olds, 31-year-olds, and 62-year-olds aren't babies, either, but nobody thinks it's okay to kill them.) The campaign against partial-birth abortion is an attempt by pro-lifers to win support from Americans in the "mushy middle" by stressing the grisliness of some abortions. But pro-lifers took up that campaign as a tactic, not because they really believe one method of abortion is worse than another.

For pro-choicers, however, an appeal to sentiment is frequently not merely a tactic or a bit of loose rhetoric but the entirety of the argument. Katha Pollitt, The Nation's engaging feminist columnist, jeers at pro-lifers for fretting about the fate of clusters of cells smaller than a fingernail. But surely size cannot be our criterion for determining when rights should be protected.

If the appeal of sentiment has been powerful in the debate over abortion, it has been irresistible in the one over embryonic stem cells. Research using these cells may yield cures or treatments for Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's, and other ailments. But the extraction of the cells, and thus the research, requires the destruction of embryos. A recent cover story on stem cells in Newsweek was typical of press coverage in following the usual script of pro-life religious fanatics vs. science. But this is in fact a conflict in which the average person's emotional reaction is almost completely one-sided. On the one hand, people—movie stars, relatives of congressmen and journalists, your next-door neighbor—with terrible diseases. On the other hand, what looks like a clump of cells in some lab.

Indeed, the pro-abortion writer Anna Quindlen has advocated stem-cell research on the precise grounds that it would make people even more emotionally inclined to dismiss concerns about abortion: "[S]ome who believe that life begins at conception may look into the vacant eyes of an adored parent with Alzheimer's or picture a paralyzed child walking again, and take a closer look at what an embryo really is." Quindlen would have us judge difficult moral questions by taking a look and forming a picture—by acts of dumb perception rather than of intellection. This is not surprising coming from a woman whose nonfiction oeuvre practically constitutes a sustained implicit brief against the application of logic to social controversies.

REV_00260820

More surprising, perhaps, is that many people who are usually pro-life have adopted this way of thinking, or rather not thinking, to justify embryonic stem-cell research. Here is Republican senator Orrin Hatch speaking to the New York Times: "I just cannot equate a child living in the womb, with moving toes and fingers and a beating heart, with an embryo in a freezer." He has made similar comments elsewhere, with particular emphasis on the womb/freezer distinction and the embryo's lack of visibly human characteristics. But surely neither temperature nor location is morally decisive. Nobody would question whether a twelve-year-old who had been conceived in a lab was a human being entitled to full rights as such.

Wall Street Journal editor Robert Bartley, who while not a pro-lifer himself is a frequent ally of pro-lifers, has made a similar argument for embryonic stem-cell research. Using the term for a six-day-old embryo, he writes, "I would find a funeral service for a blastocyst grotesque." Most miscarriages do not occasion funerals either, but presumably Bartley would not deny that what miscarriages end are tiny human lives. Blastocysts may not look like human beings at first glance. But on reflection, they look exactly like human beings—exactly like human beings at that stage of development; exactly like all of us once looked. (Not that stem-cell research and miscarriages raise the same moral issues. Michael Kinsley remarks in Time that since pro-lifers are not exercised about the thousands of miscarriages that happen every year—a "mass slaughter of embryos"—they shouldn't oppose the destruction of a few embryos for medical research. This is a miscarriage of logic. The elderly die in large numbers every year, too, but that doesn't mean it's okay to extract organs they need to survive for research purposes.)

One virtue of the pro-life position is its clarity. Life begins at conception, and taking human life can be allowed under only the strictest of circumstances. Pro-choicers have a much harder time drawing a line past which life is unambiguously protected. Their views of when life begins generally fall into one of three categories: 1) The fetus, like Schrödinger's cat, exists in a kind of suspended state of life/non-life until the mother decides what she wants; 2) there is some continuum in which a fetus that is not a human life gradually becomes one; or 3) we don't really need to think about this obscure theological mystery. (Oddly enough, in the philosophical literature on abortion it is more common to see pro-choicers speculating on when "ensoulment" might occur than to see pro-lifers pondering the question.) In practice, they appear to draw the line at birth. At least their most powerful contingent, the judges, do.

■

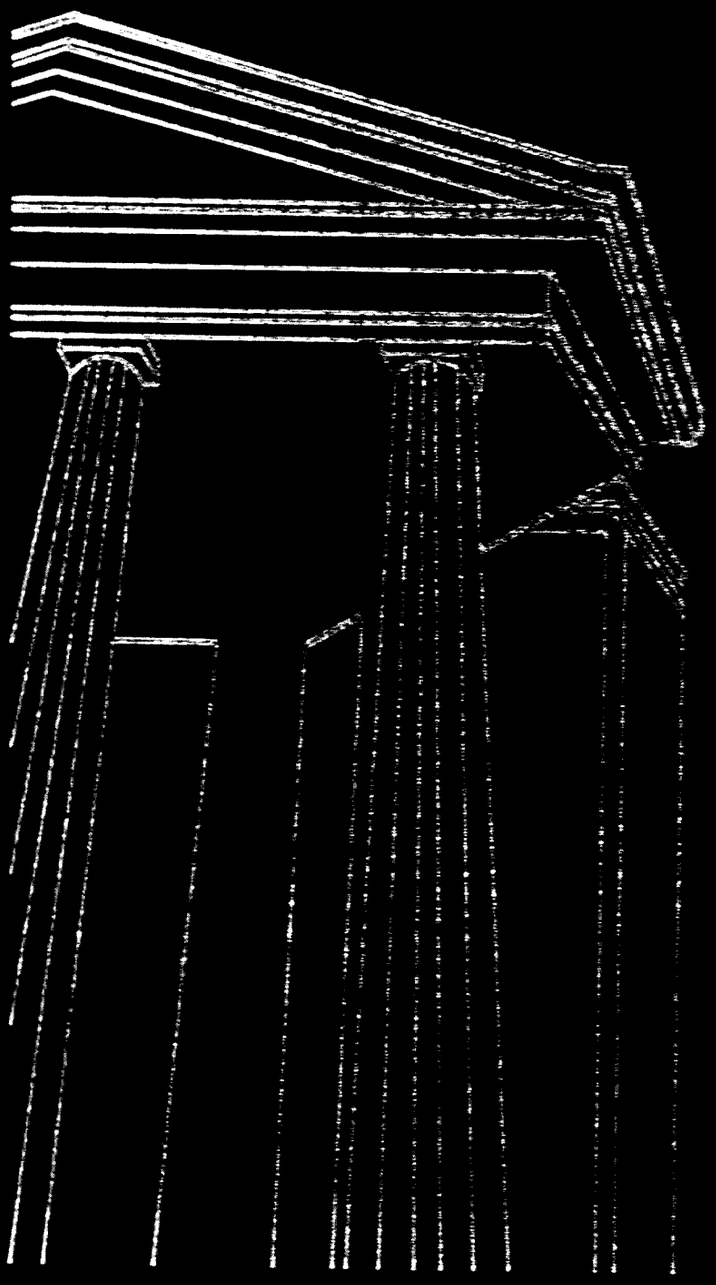
When do pro-life supporters of stem-cell research believe life begins?

■

A pro-life position not rooted in logic ends up having the same line-drawing problem. When do pro-life supporters of stem-cell research believe life begins? They would seem to believe that a clump of matter that is not a person somehow becomes inhabited by a person as it develops. Rather than defend this theoretical disaster bordering on superstition, some of these pro-lifers have resorted to the name games that pro-choicers have used in the past: Blastocysts aren't embryos, embryos that have not been implanted are pre-embryos, etc. But none of these nominal distinctions—nor the biological distinctions they denote—mark a point of moral distinction.

Bartley describes himself as a member of the "mushy middle" on abortion as though it were good in itself not to draw principled distinctions. He opposes partial-birth abortion because it is ugly, supports stem-cell research because nobody grieves for blastocysts, seeks a middle ground because the extremists are off-putting: a clump of positions united only by sensibility.

The trouble with this middle ground is that, in addition to giving up territory that should be defended, it is itself indefensible territory. Slippery slopes are slippery because the logic that starts you down them will lead you further down. During the stem-cell debate, people have said that it's okay to use embryos for research because we already "discard" plenty of embryos as a byproduct of in vitro fertilization; they could with equal validity say that we should allow research on five-month-old fetuses because we allow them to be aborted. Judges have said that we have to allow partial-birth abortion, or even euthanasia, because we allow abortion. The Washington Post says that the logic of abortion rights does not permit the law to charge people with murder when they kill an unborn child in the course of an assault on a pregnant woman, even if the woman considers it murder.



Slippery-slope arguments rarely succeed because people discount the possibility of remote future horrors; they think they will be able to stop the slide. But horrors can get less horrible as the future becomes less remote. People adjust their sensibilities. In 1973, not even pro-abortion lawyers were challenging Texas's law against partial-birth abortion. Back then, embryo-killing research would have seemed monstrous. I have read the argument (in Reason, the libertarian magazine, as it happens) that people predicted all kinds of dire consequences from in vitro fertilization that did not happen, so why not allow cloning? One of the dire consequences of in vitro fertilization, however, is precisely that we are debating cloning now.

A common trope of the press coverage of the stem-cell conflict—which reeks of weariness at the continued existence of pro-lifers—is that it's a shame this "scientific issue" has gotten caught up in the "politics" of abortion. But it is caught up in the issue because the premises of the arguments are the same: Either conception results in a new human being deserving of legal protection or it doesn't. No amount of sophisticated hairsplitting over bioethics is going to work if it ignores that awkward, obvious question. NR

REV_00260821

SUPREME COURT PRACTICE

SEVENTH EDITION

Robert L. Stern
Eugene Gressman
Stephen M. Shapiro
Kenneth S. Geller

REV_00260822

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1824/1742
9632

Subpoena From the Superior Court of the District of Columbia

Box 56
Folder 2

REV_00260823

May 13, 2003

MEMORANDUM FOR: BRETT KAVANAUGH
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL

FROM: TERRY GOOD
OFFICE OF RECORDS MANAGEMENT

RE: SUBPOENA FROM THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Office of Records Management, with the assistance of the Office of the Chief Information Officer, has searched and compiled two listings relevant to the request of Perham Gorgji, the Attorney for the Government, in the case of the United States vs. Edwardo Ramos, which is assigned the case number M591-03.

This information was abstracted from the Worker and Visitor Entrance System (WAVES) data base of the United States Secret Service.

The Subpoena requests a "list of individuals authorized for entry at the White House on January 24, 2003." One of the two lists responds to this demand. It contains information about the people who were cleared into the Complex on January 24, 2003, as either visitors, workers, or members of the Press Corps. It does not include staff. It is arranged alphabetically by last name and includes the following additional information in columns, reading from left to right, first name, middle initial, date of birth, Social Security number, USSS identifying number, USSS badge number, access type (visitor, worker, press), time of arrival, USSS post of arrival, time of departure, USSS post of departure, date appointment was made, date and time of appointment, and date and time of departure. No one with the surname "RAMOS" appears in this listing.

The second list contains the names of people surnamed "RAMOS" who were cleared in to the Complex for all days in January, 2003. No "EDWARDO's" appear on this list. This information was pulled from the same data base as the first list. Given the much smaller number of people, it was possible to include more of the fields in this list.

It should be emphasized that the Office of Records Management merely performs a custodial role for this information. Questions regarding the design, the completeness and the accuracy of the data should be addressed to the USSS, having designed and maintained the system.

Superior Court of the District of Columbia

CRIMINAL DIVISION

SUBPOENA

UNITED STATES

vs. Case No. M591-03

EDWARDO RAMOS

To: Terry Goode - White House Office Records Manager

YOU ARE HEREBY COMMANDED:

To appear before the Criminal Division Courtroom 219 of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, 500 Indiana Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C., on the 14th day of MAY, 2003, at 8:45 a.m. as a witness for

TRIAL

☒ and bring with you. VALID PHOTO I.D. AND THIS SUBPOENA, ALSO LIST OF INDIVIDUALS AUTHORIZED FOR ENTRY AT WHITE HOUSE ON JANUARY 24, 2003.

and do not depart from the Court without leave thereof.

WITNESS, the Honorable Chief Judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, and the seal of said Court this 13 day of MAY, 2003.

Clerk, Superior Court of the District of Columbia

Officer in Charge District

PERHAM GORJI
Attorney for Government/Defendant

Phone No. 202-353-9848

Authorization as required by D.C. Code § 14-307 and Brown v. U.S., 567 A. 2d 426 (D.C. 1989), is hereby given for issuance of subpoena for medical records.

Date Judge

RETURN ON THIS SUBPOENA IS REQUIRED ON OR BEFORE THIS DATE:

☐ I hereby certify that I have personally served, or have executed as shown in "REMARKS," the above subpoena on the individual at the address below.

Name and Title of Individual Served	Address (If different than shown above)

☐ I hereby certify that, after diligent investigation, I am unable to locate the individuals, company, corporation, etc., named in above subpoena for the reason(s) as shown in "REMARKS".

Date(s) of Endeavor	Date and Time of Service
REMARKS	Signature of Title of Server

TOTAL P.02

REV_00260825

U.S. Department of Justice
United States Attorney
District of Columbia

Judiciary Center
555 Fourth St. N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530

FAX

To:	Terry Goode - White House Office Records Manager	From:	Perham Gorji- AUSA
Fax:	202-456-2129	Phone:	202- 353-9848
Date:	May 13, 2003
Re:	Emergency Subpoena, M591-03, Trial Date: 5-14-03
Page(s):	2, including cover

COMMENTS:

U.S. ATTORNEY FACSIMILE COMMUNICATION

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	KELSEY	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6	SSN
UIN		BDGNBR	0	ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	POA	VIS
TOD	1/7/2003 10:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/7/2003 9:26:41 AM	Total_People	100
APPT_START_DATE	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/7/2003 12:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	SH	LastEntryDate	1/7/2003 9:29:04 AM
visitee_namelast	PENNY	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	PENNY	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	SARAH
CALLER_PHONE	6-1662	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260827

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	KELSEY	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	POA	VIS
TOD	1/7/2003 10:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/7/2003 9:26:41 AM	Total_People	100
APPT_START_DATE	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/7/2003 12:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	SH	LastEntryDate	1/7/2003 9:29:04 AM
visitee_namelast	PENNY	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	PENNY	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	SARAH
CALLER_PHONE	6-1662	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	RAMOS	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/15/2003 10:13:28 AM	POA	A0401
TOD	1/15/2003 8:28:05 PM	POD	A0401
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/14/2003 4:06:00 PM	Total_People	3
APPT_START_DATE	1/15/2003 10:30:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/15/2003 12:30:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	AS	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZS	LastEntryDate	1/14/2003 4:06:00 PM
visitee_namelast	GUERRA	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	WW
CALLER_NAME_LAST	GUERRA	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	ABEL
CALLER_PHONE	6-2155	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260837

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 8:03:48 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/9/2003 9:09:01 AM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260838

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/13/2003 7:08:06 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/13/2003 8:45:17 AM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/13/2003 10:06:25 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/13/2003 1:08:00 PM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260840

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 4:47:29 PM	POA	K0101
TOD	1/9/2003 4:53:09 PM	POD	K1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260841

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 5:05:27 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/9/2003 6:32:11 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260842

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB		PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/10/2003 7:36:37 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/10/2003 3:09:29 PM	POD	A5
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260843

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 9:13:41 AM	POA	K0102
TOD	1/9/2003 10:04:25 AM	POD	K1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 10:15:06 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/9/2003 3:08:05 PM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/9/2003 3:14:55 PM	POA	K0102
TOD	1/9/2003 3:18:31 PM	POD	K1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260846

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	KERRI	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	POA	VIS
TOD	1/7/2003 10:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/7/2003 9:26:42 AM	Total_People	100
APPT_START_DATE	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/7/2003 12:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	SH	LastEntryDate	1/7/2003 9:29:05 AM
visitee_namelast	PENNY	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	PENNY	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	SARAH
CALLER_PHONE	6-1662	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

REV_00260829

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	MARCO	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/31/2003 3:20:08 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/31/2003 4:25:45 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	7/14/2000 4:35:00 PM	Total_People	182
APPT_START_DATE	9/28/2001 5:00:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZJ	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 1:50:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BONOS	visitee_namefirst	KERRY	visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	OEOB	MEETING_ROOM	OEOB/NEOB
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-2230	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260847

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/8/2003 2:22:25 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/8/2003 4:20:34 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260848

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/6/2003 7:40:26 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/6/2003 4:21:03 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260849

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LORENZO	NAMEMID	C
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	6/8/2000 2:58:00 PM	Total_People	182
APPT_START_DATE	9/28/2001 5:00:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZS	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 1:50:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BONOS	visitee_namefirst	KERRY	visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	OEOB	MEETING_ROOM	OEOB/NEOB
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-2230	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LUIS	NAMEMID	A
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/22/2003 5:02:51 PM	POA	B0402
TOD	1/23/2003 5:02:51 AM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/26/2001 5:51:00 PM	Total_People	284
APPT_START_DATE	1/19/2002 11:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	NJ	POST	WIJ
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	49	LastEntryDate	9/30/2002 6:20:00 PM
visitee_namelast	TANIS	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0053236
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WW/OEO/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST	TANIS	CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	0053236	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/10/2003 3:33:35 PM	POA	D0101
TOD	1/10/2003 4:08:23 PM	POD	A5
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/7/2003 7:23:12 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/7/2003 2:50:52 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/30/2003 9:36:50 AM	POA	A0101
TOD	1/30/2003 9:37:03 AM	POD	A1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260854

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB		PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/16/2003 11:27:33 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/16/2003 1:09:25 PM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260855

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	GABRIEL	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	9/24/2002 5:49:00 PM	Total_People	1
APPT_START_DATE	3/20/2000 11:10:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	A0	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	20	LastEntryDate	9/24/2002 8:32:00 PM
visitee_namelast	DESO	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0059210
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	EW
CALLER_NAME_LAST	DESO	CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	0059210	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	JOSEPH	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM	Total_People	5
APPT_START_DATE	1/5/2003 10:30:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/5/2003 12:30:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	AS	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZS	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BATTAGLIA	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	SOUTHLAWN
CALLER_NAME_LAST	BATTAGLIA	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	TODD
CALLER_PHONE	6-8668	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260830

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	ERNIE	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	12/9/2002 11:48:00 AM	Total_People	7
APPT_START_DATE	12/9/2002 11:40:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	9/2/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	DB	POST	WID
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	XB	LastEntryDate	1/14/2003 10:40:00 AM
visitee_namelast	QUARMBY	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	OEOB	MEETING_ROOM	23
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-4259	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260857

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	FERNANDO	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/26/2001 5:51:00 PM	Total_People	284
APPT_START_DATE	1/19/2002 11:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	NJ	POST	WIJ
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	49	LastEntryDate	9/30/2002 6:20:00 PM
visitee_namelast	TANIS	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0053236
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WW/OEO/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST	TANIS	CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	0053236	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/31/2003 3:14:17 PM	POA	K0101
TOD	1/31/2003 3:15:55 PM	POD	K0102
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260859

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/30/2003 9:56:29 AM	POA	B0402
TOD	1/30/2003 6:36:37 PM	POD	B4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260860

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/31/2003 7:41:57 AM	POA	D0101
TOD	1/31/2003 3:08:42 PM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260861

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/24/2003 4:07:50 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/24/2003 4:27:16 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260862

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/27/2003 7:39:09 AM	POA	D0101
TOD	1/27/2003 4:23:48 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260863

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/13/2003 1:35:11 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/14/2003 1:35:11 AM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260864

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	GONZALO	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	11/17/2000 9:33:00 AM	Total_People	182
APPT_START_DATE	9/28/2001 5:00:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIG
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	LS	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 1:50:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BONOS	visitee_namefirst	KERRY	visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	OEOB	MEETING_ROOM	OEOB/NEOB
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-2230	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260865

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/14/2003 10:13:34 AM	POA	D0101
TOD	1/14/2003 6:31:01 PM	POD	D4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260866

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	MELANY	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/21/2003 10:00:00 AM	POA	vis
TOD	1/21/2003 10:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/17/2003 5:17:00 PM	Total_People	46
APPT_START_DATE	1/21/2003 10:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/21/2003 12:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	HW	POST	WIH
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	LW	LastEntryDate	1/17/2003 5:17:00 PM
visitee_namelast	GRAY	visitee_namefirst	EMILY	visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	GRAY	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	EMILY
CALLER_PHONE	6-1204	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/28/2003 7:36:03 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/28/2003 7:36:03 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260867

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/21/2003 7:39:17 AM	POA	D0101
TOD	1/21/2003 4:04:18 PM	POD	A5
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/17/2003 9:55:39 PM	POA	B0401
TOD	1/18/2003 9:55:39 AM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260869

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/16/2003 1:13:49 PM	POA	K0102
TOD	1/16/2003 1:26:28 PM	POD	K1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260870

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/23/2003 8:00:11 AM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/23/2003 8:00:11 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260871

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/22/2003 12:00:13 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/22/2003 1:14:32 PM	POD	D3
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260872

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	LILIAN	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	WO
TOA	1/21/2003 4:33:49 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/21/2003 9:31:23 PM	POD	B4
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM	Total_People	175
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/1997 1:46:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	9/30/2003 11:59:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	N7	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	17	LastEntryDate	1/23/2002 3:07:00 PM
visitee_namelast	YATES	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	ALL	MEETING_ROOM	WH/OEB/NEO
CALLER_NAME_LAST		CALLER_NAME_FIRST
CALLER_PHONE	5-3358	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260873

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	VIRIGINIA	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM	Total_People	5
APPT_START_DATE	1/5/2003 10:30:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/5/2003 12:30:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	AS	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZS	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BATTAGLIA	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	SOUTHLAWN
CALLER_NAME_LAST	BATTAGLIA	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	TODD
CALLER_PHONE	6-8668	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

REV_00260832

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	FRANK	NAMEMID
DOB	PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/8/2003 1:45:47 PM	POA	D0102
TOD	1/8/2003 3:10:52 PM	POD	D1
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/8/2003 10:07:00 AM	Total_People	1
APPT_START_DATE	1/8/2003 2:00:00 PM	APPT_END_DATE	1/8/2003 4:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	TC	POST	WIT
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	XC	LastEntryDate	1/8/2003 10:07:00 AM visitee_namelast	STYLES	visitee_namefirst	ANGELA	visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	OEOB	MEETING_ROOM	352
CALLER_NAME_LAST	WINGARD	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	DORIS
CALLER_PHONE	5-5802	CALLER_ROOM

PRA 6

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	ROOSEVELT	NAMEMID
DOB		PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	POA	VIS
TOD	1/7/2003 10:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/7/2003 9:26:42 AM	Total_People	100
APPT_START_DATE	1/7/2003 10:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/7/2003 12:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	SH	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	SH	LastEntryDate	1/7/2003 9:29:05 AM
visitee_namelast	PENNY	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	PENNY	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	SARAH
CALLER_PHONE	6-1662	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	DANIEL	NAMEMID
DOB
UIN	PRA 6			ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA		POA
TOD		POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM	Total_People	5
APPT_START_DATE	1/5/2003 10:30:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/5/2003 12:30:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	AS	POST	WIA
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	ZS	LastEntryDate	1/3/2003 2:43:00 PM
visitee_namelast	BATTAGLIA	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	SOUTHLAWN
CALLER_NAME_LAST	BATTAGLIA	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	TODD
CALLER_PHONE	6-8668	CALLER_ROOM

WAVES - January 2003 - Last Name: RAMOS

NAMELAST	RAMOS	NAMEFIRST	ANAMARIS	NAMEMID
DOB		PRA 6
UIN				ACCESS_TYPE	VA
TOA	1/22/2003 11:00:00 AM	POA	vis
TOD	1/22/2003 11:00:00 PM	POD
APPT_MADE_DATE	1/21/2003 3:43:48 PM	Total_People	297
APPT_START_DATE	1/22/2003 11:00:00 AM	APPT_END_DATE	1/22/2003 1:00:00 PM
APPT_CANCEL_DATE
ESCORT_TYPE
ESCORT_NAME_LAST		ESCORT_NAME_F
LAST_UPDATEDBY	LJ	POST	WIN
TERMINAL_SUFFIX	LJ	LastEntryDate	1/21/2003 3:46:39 PM
visitee_namelast	BARFIELD	visitee_namefirst		visitee_phone	0-0
MEETING_LOC	WH	MEETING_ROOM	RESIDENCE
CALLER_NAME_LAST	BARFIELD	CALLER_NAME_FIRST	TIFFANY
CALLER_PHONE	6-6306	CALLER_ROOM

REV_00260836

Supreme Court Consultation

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2175/2086
9795

Box 56
Folder 3

REV_00260874

Untitled Document

June 10, 2003
The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The Constitution dictates that federal judges be nominated by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. I write to begin the process of fulfilling that Constitutional mandate.

In recent history, Presidents have announced their intention to nominate candidates to fill Supreme Court vacancies shortly after the positions have become available. The short time between the creation of a Supreme Court vacancy and the announcement of a potential replacement leaves little time for Senators to fulfill their constitutional duties to advise the President on whom to nominate.

Recent press reports have indicated that the White House is actively vetting potential nominees in preparation for Chief Justice Rehnquist's or any other Supreme Court justice's retirement. Because it appears you are actively engaged in this process and because I hold so important my constitutional obligation to advise you on these matters, I write to offer my input at this stage.

I start by encouraging you to use the same principles that guide me in evaluating judicial nominees. I consider three criteria: excellence, diversity, and moderation. I am confident that excellence will be a primary consideration for you because I know we agree that judges should be among the best lawyers the bar has to offer. I also know that you will consider the importance of diversity, as you have especially in working with me to put judges on the bench in New York.

When it comes to moderation, I am disappointed that we diverge with increasing frequency. I do not want judges who are too far Left or too far Right, because I believe judges who come to the bench with extreme ideologies are likely to make law, not interpret it. You, more than any other President in history, have chosen judges through an ideological prism. The White House's reliance on ideology when it has come to selecting lower court nominees has led to conflict that has frustrated both of us. If you were to select a mainstream nominee, you would do the process, the Judiciary, and the nation a real service.

REV_00260876

I would add a fourth consideration: the willingness to answer questions forthrightly. For the Senate to perform its constitutional role properly, we must have answers to appropriate questions. Several of your nominees have refused to answer questions that legal ethicists have said are clearly appropriate. The same questions were asked by Republican Senators and answered by Democratic nominees when President Clinton was in office, and the same questions have been answered by several of your own nominees. Clearly, there is nothing inappropriate about a nominee discussing his or her views on already decided Supreme Court cases, on the First Amendment, the Second Amendment, the Fourth Amendment, the Eleventh Amendment, the Fourteenth Amendment, the right to privacy, the Commerce Clause, the Spending Clause, or any of the other pressing constitutional issues of the day.

As you know, I have voted for well over 90% of the judges you have nominated, most of them Republicans, most of them conservatives (but mainstream conservatives), and many if not most of them pro-life. I have no litmus test when it comes to what a nominee believes, but if a nominee refuses to answer my fair and reasonable questions and I am unpersuaded that the nominee will preserve balance on the court to which he or she is nominated, I am compelled to vote no.

Having outlined the criteria I would hope you would consider, I want to offer the names of five potential Supreme Court nominees for your consideration. There is a rich tradition of Senators offering specific advice to Presidents on Supreme Court nominations. Most recently, when President Clinton was considering judicial nominees, he received advice from Senator Hatch.

According to Senator Hatch in his book, Square Peg, he advised President Clinton to consider nominating both Justice Ginsburg and Justice Breyer to the Supreme Court. He believed that both would win easy Senate confirmation and, while left of center, were "highly honest and capable jurists," and "far better than the other likely candidates from a liberal Democratic administration." My advice is offered in the same manner and with the goal of helping you identify a nominee who could win 100 Senators' votes, not just 51.

While there are scores of Democrats whom I would hope you would consider, I am offering only individuals who either are Republicans or have previously been nominated by Republican Presidents. The candidates I would advise you to consider are:

The Honorable Arlen Specter, Republican Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Honorable Ann Williams, Judge, Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, nominated by President Ronald Reagan to the Northern District of Illinois.

The Honorable Edward Prado. Judge, Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, nominated by you and unanimously confirmed by the 108th Senate.

The Honorable Michael Mukasey, Judge, Southern District of New York, nominated by President Ronald Reagan.

The Honorable Stanley Marcus, Judge, Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, nominated by President Ronald Reagan.

All of these individuals appear to be legally excellent, ideologically moderate, and several of them would add diversity to the Court. All of them have a history of bipartisan support, are within the mainstream, and have demonstrated a commitment to the rule of law. While I would need to do additional research on them and question them personally before announcing my unqualified support, my initial review of their records is promising.

This is far from an exhaustive list and I appreciate that you may have other individuals in mind should a vacancy arise. I would welcome the opportunity to evaluate any candidates you are considering and provide input before any nomination is made, consistent with the Constitution's mandate that the Senate advise the President on judicial nominations.

My profound hope is that, should there be a Supreme Court vacancy this summer, you will nominate a candidate who will unite us, not divide us. I am confident that by working together we can achieve that goal. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely,
Charles E. Schumer
United States Senator

TOM DASCHLE
SOUTH DAKOTA

United States Senate
Office of the Democratic Leader
Washington, DC 20510–7020

June 17, 2003

The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

I know that Senator Leahy, the Ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Senator Schumer, the Ranking Democrat on the Courts Subcommittee, have written to you over the last several weeks to indicate Democratic Senators' desire to consult with you should a vacancy arise on the United States Supreme Court. On behalf of the entire Senate Democratic Caucus, I want to emphasize that we remain hopeful that we would have meaningful, bipartisan consultation in advance of any Supreme Court nomination. We believe that it is not necessary to have a divisive confirmation fight over a Supreme Court appointment. If there are vacancies, we would like to see them filled by nominees who unite all Americans.

Should you be willing to convene a meeting of Senate leaders from both parties to begin a bipartisan process of consultation, I stand ready to participate in good faith in such a process and know that Senator Leahy and others would do so as well.

Sincerely,

Tom Daschle
Senate Democratic Leader

REV_00260882

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 17, 2003

Dear Senator Leahy:

Thank you for your letter of May 14 to the President, which we received recently due to screening procedures for regular White House mail.

Your letter first suggests that the Senate has moved with appropriate dispatch in considering the President's judicial nominees. We respectfully disagree with respect to appeals court nominees. While the Senate has confirmed 105 district court judges, the Senate has voted on only 26 of the President's 42 appeals court nominees. Of the 16 appeals court nominees who still have not received votes, 8 have been waiting since 2001. More than 10% of the 167 regional appeals court seats still remain vacant, including a dozen that have been declared "judicial emergencies" by the Judicial Conference of the United States.

Delays in Senate votes on appeals court nominees are not new: In the last three Administrations, too many appeals court nominees have had to wait years for a vote, and some have never received votes. As President Bush has stated repeatedly since the 2000 campaign (and as the Chief Justice and the American Bar Association have also advocated), every judicial nominee should receive a timely hearing and vote. In speeches on the Senate floor, you agreed with then-Governor Bush on this principle in 2000. But the problem of delayed and denied votes for appeals court nominees unfortunately has not improved in his Administration. More appeals court nominees had to wait at least a year for a hearing in the 107th Congress than in the last 50 years combined. Only 53% of President Bush's appeals court nominees in the 107th Congress received votes, compared to more than 90% in the last three Presidents' first two years. Judicial historian Sheldon Goldman independently examined the statistics and concluded that the 107th Congress was the least efficient in modern history in holding hearings and votes on appeals court nominees.

We acknowledge the work of the Senate on district court nominees, but more has to be done to address circuit vacancies and to end the delays in consideration of appeals court nominees, which have been the persistent problem in the last three Administrations. To ensure a fair and orderly process no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate, the President has respectfully urged the Senate to seek bipartisan agreement on a process that will provide every judicial nominee a timely up or down vote.

Your letter also references the possibility of a Supreme Court vacancy. If such a vacancy arises during his Presidency, President Bush will nominate an individual of high integrity, intellect, and experience. The Senate will have an opportunity to assess the President's nominee and exercise its constitutional responsibility to vote up or down on the nominee. I would be pleased to visit with you about the process and to consider suggestions you or others may have.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Copy: The Honorable Bill Frist
The Honorable Thomas Daschle
The Honorable Orrin Hatch

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1825/1743
9633

Supreme Court - OSG (Office of Solicitor General) Updates

Box 56
Folder 4

REV_00260885

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Counsel's Office Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: September 28, 2001

RE: Office of Solicitor General Update

Attached is the latest update from the Solicitor General.

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Supreme Court Updates from Solicitor General

OA/NARA#: 340/236
9121

Box 56
Folder 5

REV_00260887

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Attorneys in the Counsel's Office

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: April 16, 2001

RE: Supreme Court Update

Attached please find this week's Supreme Court update from the Acting Solicitor General. The Court issued no decisions this week, but did grant certiorari in two cases that raise important questions under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

April 16, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Grants of Certiorari

On April 16, the Supreme Court granted certiorari in the following cases:

1. Mickens v. Taylor, No. 00-9285. The Supreme Court granted Mickens's application for a stay of execution, which had been scheduled for tomorrow in Virginia. The Court also granted certiorari on the following question: Did the Court of Appeals err in holding that a defendant must show an actual conflict of interest and an adverse effect in order to establish a Sixth Amendment violation where a trial court fails to inquire into a potential conflict of interest about which it reasonably should have known? We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

2. Toyota Motor Mfg., Ky. Inc. v. Williams, No. 00-1089. This case presents the question whether an employee with physical impairments that prevent her from performing some but not all of her assigned duties suffers from a "disability" within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

3. US Airways, Inc. v. Barnett, No. 00-1250. The case presents the question whether the ADA, as the Ninth Circuit held en banc, requires an employer to reassign a disabled employee to a different position as a "reasonable accommodation" even though another employee is entitled to hold that position under employer's bona fide and established seniority system. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

II. Supreme Court Arguments

During the week of April 16, we are presenting arguments in the following cases:

1. Tyler v. Cain, No. 00-5961. The case presents the question whether a state prisoner's second or successive petition for a writ of habeas corpus asserting a claim under Cage v. Louisiana, 498 U.S. 39 (1990) (per curiam), satisfies AEDPA's requirement at 28 U.S.C. 2244(b)(2)(A) that such petitions rely "on a new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court." We contend that this provision requires that the determination that the new rule is retroactive be made by the Supreme Court in either an explicit statement or in the application of the new rule in post-conviction review, not by a lower court applying the general principles of retroactivity announced in prior Supreme Court decisions. We then argue that the Court should not make Cage retroactive because its rule about the proper definition of reasonable doubt in jury instructions does not satisfy either exception to the general rule against retroactive application outlined in Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 299 (1989). The Cage decision neither placed conduct beyond the reach of the state to prosecute nor was it a watershed rule of criminal procedure central to an accurate determination of innocence or guilt.

2. New Hampshire v. Maine, No. 130 (original). New Hampshire brought this original action claiming that its boundary with Maine in Portsmouth Harbor extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore. The practical focus of the dispute is the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, a federal facility that is located on Seavey's Island in the harbor. Maine currently exercises jurisdiction over the Shipyard, so New Hampshire residents who work at the Shipyard are required to pay Maine income taxes. The Court invited us to express our views and we contend that the doctrine of res judicata bars New Hampshire's claim because of a 1976 consent decree that New Hampshire and Maine agreed to in a prior original action in the Supreme Court concerning the lateral marine boundary in the vicinity of the current dispute. See 434 U.S. at 1-4. In that consent decree, the states agreed to be bound by King George II's 1740 order that fixed the boundary between the states "thro the Mouth of Piscataqua Harbor and up the Middle of the River." Because the 1976 consent decree set the boundary at the "Middle of the River," New Hampshire cannot now maintain that the boundary extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore.

3. United States v. United Foods, Inc., No. 00-276. The case presents the question whether the assessments imposed pursuant to the Mushroom Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act of 1990, 7 U.S.C. 6101 et seq., on members of the mushroom industry for advertising programs to support the industry violate the First Amendment. We contend that the assessments are constitutional for the reasons the Supreme Court identified in a 1997 decision, Glickman v. Wileman Bros. & Elliot, Inc., that rejected a First Amendment challenge to similar generic advertising programs for California tree fruits: the assessments "impose no restraint on the freedom of any producer to communicate any message to any audience"; "do not compel any person to engage in any actual or symbolic speech"; and "do not compel the producers to endorse or to finance any political or ideological views." We argue that the court of appeals erred in distinguishing Glickman on the basis that mushrooms are not as extensively regulated as California peaches, plums, and nectarines. The Supreme Court did not base its decision in Glickman on the extent of regulation and the justification for imposing mandatory assessments to fund generic advertising programs – avoiding "free rider" problems – is implicated whether a commodity is regulated or not. In addition to our argument that Glickman is controlling, we argue that the program is government speech, which the First Amendment does not constrain regardless whether the speech is funded from general tax revenues or from targeted exactions on those who benefit most from the speech.

4. Alabama v. Bozeman, No. 00-492. The case presents the question whether a one-day transfer of a federal prisoner to state custody for purposes of arraignment, without completing the trial on the state charges, violates Article IV(e) of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers (IAD) and requires dismissal of the state charges. While Bozeman was serving time in federal prison, Covington County, Alabama officials obtained custody of Bozeman, pursuant to the IAD, for his one-day arraignment on state criminal charges. Bozeman was returned to federal prison the next day. The Supreme Court of Alabama later dismissed the state charges against Bozeman under Article IV(e) of the IAD, which provides that if "trial is not had on any indictment, information or complaint contemplated hereby prior to the prisoner's being returned to the original place of imprisonment . . . such indictment, information or complaint shall not be of further force or effect, and the court shall enter an order dismissing the same with prejudice." We contend as amicus curiae that the Supreme Court of Alabama erred in dismissing based on a technical and wholly harmless defect. The Alabama decision conflicts with the vast majority of federal courts that have not required dismissal under the IAD for de minimis transfers and ignores the principle of statutory construction de minimis non curat lex -- "the law cares not for trifles." Under this principle, we argue that the one-day transfer of Bozeman for arraignment purposes does not require dismissal. Rather, the rapid return of Bozeman to federal custody furthers the purpose of Article IV(e), which is to minimize any interruption of a prisoner's participation in rehabilitative programs.

5. Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, No. 00-549. The case involves the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), which makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate . . . in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. 1962(c). The question presented is whether a claim may be maintained under this provision when the alleged RICO "enterprise" is a corporation and the "person" charged with the violation is an officer and employee of the corporation acting within the scope of his corporate duties. We argue as amicus curiae that a RICO claim may be maintained in that situation because although the "person" charged must be distinct from the "enterprise" under Section 1962(c), a corporate employee is sufficiently distinct from the corporation to satisfy the distinctness requirement. The plain language of the statute – "any person employed by . . . any enterprise" – indicates that corporate employees are proper defendants when the alleged racketeering enterprise is the corporation. We urge the Court to adopt the test that an individual RICO defendant is sufficiently distinct from the alleged RICO enterprise when the defendant and the enterprise are either legally or practically separable. That test provides a workable standard and serves the statute's underlying purposes by preventing racketeers from escaping RICO liability merely by incorporating their activities.

III. Supreme Court Filing

A. Brief on the Merits

On March 9, we filed a brief in Verizon Communications, Inc. v. FCC, No. 00-587. The case involves challenges to two important aspects of the FCC's regulations implementing the Telecommunications Act of 1996: pricing methodology and combinations rules. On remand from the Supreme Court, see AT&T v. Iowa Utilities Board, 525 U.S. 366 (1999), the Eighth Circuit invalidated the key regulation defining the FCC's forward-looking cost methodology, known as "total element long-run incremental cost" or TELRIC. The cost methodology is used by state public utility commissions to determine the amount incumbent local exchange carriers (ILECs) can recover from new entrants for the provision of interconnection and access to network elements. The appeals court, while recognizing the validity of a forward-looking cost methodology, rejected the Commission's determination that cost should be measured based on the use of the most efficient telecommunications technology currently available and the lowest cost network configuration. We argue that the regulation is a reasonable policy choice on a matter that Congress left for the FCC to resolve. The FCC's forward looking cost methodology promotes the 1996 Act's purpose of bringing meaningful competition to local telecommunications markets and ensuring the efficient use of existing network facilities. Federal agencies governing other regulated industries and most state public utility commissions have employed similar forward-looking cost methodologies that take into account the costs of efficient, currently available alternatives.

The Court will also decide the validity of FCC rules requiring that ILECs, at the request of a new entrant and for a cost-based fee, combine certain elements in their networks that they do not ordinarily combine. We contend that the Supreme Court in Iowa Utilities Board rejected the Eight Circuit's view that the 1996 Act "unambiguously indicates that requesting carriers will combine the unbundled elements themselves." The Supreme Court held that the statutory provision allowing "requesting carries to combine' [network elements] does not say, or even remotely imply, that elements must be provided only [in discrete pieces] and never in combined form." 525 U.S. at 394. We also argue that these FCC combinations rules are consistent with the 1996 Act's mandate that ILECs provide new entrants with "nondiscriminatory access" to network elements.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 5

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 4/16/01 TIME: 5 pm INITIALS: eb

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: All Attorneys in Counsel's Office

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: May 1, 2001

RE: Supreme Court Update

Attached please find the latest Supreme Court update from the Acting Solicitor General.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

April 30, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On April 24, 2001, the Court decided the following two cases:

1. Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, No. 99-1408. The case presented the question whether the Fourth Amendment prohibits officers who have probable cause to believe that a crime has been committed from arresting the suspect because the crime is a traffic offense punishable only by a fine. We argued as amicus curiae that the reasonableness of an arrest supported by probable cause should not turn on the classifications of crimes as misdemeanors or felonies, on variable judicial definitions of a "breach of the peace," or on a jurisdiction's decision to enforce the criminal law through a sanction other than imprisonment. We contended that the common law recognized that the arrest authority of police could be expanded by statute to include arrests for misdemeanors not involving a breach of the peace, and the longstanding practice of the federal government and every State confirms that understanding.

In an opinion written by Justice Souter, the Court affirmed, agreeing with our arguments. Reviewing English common-law usage of "breach of the peace," the Court found no consensus supporting Atwater's position that the common law confined warrantless misdemeanor arrests to actual breaches of the peace. Nor did the Court find evidence that the ratifiers of the Fourth Amendment sought to limit peace officers' warrantless misdemeanor arrest authority to instances of actual breach of the peace. Finally, the court found no historical evidence -- either in judicial precedent or legal commentary -- that Atwater's claimed rule has ever become "woven . . . into the fabric" of American law. Accordingly, the Court refused to restrict the scope of permissible warrantless misdemeanor arrests, and held that Atwater's arrest was constitutional. Justice O'Connor dissented, joined by Justices Stevens, Ginsburg, and Breyer. Because "reasonableness" is the "touchstone" of Fourth Amendment analysis, she would have held that "when there is probable cause to believe that a fine-only offense has been committed, the police officer should issue a citation unless the officer is able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant the additional intrusion of a full custodial arrest" (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted).

2. Alexander v. Sandoval, No. 99-1908. The case presented the question whether an implied private right of action exists to enforce disparate-impact regulations promulgated under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq., which prohibits discrimination based on race, color or national origin discrimination under any program or activity receiving federal financial assistance. Sandoval brought suit under Title VI challenging the Alabama Department of Public Safety's official policy of administering its driver's license examination only in the English language. Rather than disputing that its program discriminates in violation of Title VI, Alabama contended that there is no private right of action to enforce agency regulations implemented pursuant to Title VI, a position rejected by both lower courts. We argued that Congress enacted Title VI at a time when courts widely recognized an implied private right of action for individuals injured by violations of a statute or its implementing regulations, that although such liberal implication of private rights of action is no longer the rule, Title VI must be interpreted in light of the legal context at the time of enactment in order to discern congressional intent, and that the regulations prohibiting disparate impact discrimination are valid and consistent with the statutory language, legislative history, and Supreme Court precedent.

In an opinion written by Justice Scalia, the Court reversed, rejecting our arguments. The Court declined to give "dispositive weight to the expectations that the enacting Congress had formed in light of the contemporary legal context" (internal quotation marks omitted). Although the Court had previously recognized a private right of action to enforce Title VI itself, it noted that the "rights-creating language" found in Section 601 of Title VI ("[n]o person . . . shall . . . be subjected to discrimination") is absent from Section 602, which authorizes regulations ("[e]ach Federal department and agency . . . is authorized and directed to effectuate the provisions" of Section 601). The Court further stated that the methods that Section 602 provides for enforcing its authorized regulations fail to manifest an intent to create a private remedy. Additionally, the Court found it "most certainly incorrect to say that language in a regulation can conjure up a private cause of action that has not been authorized by Congress." Justice Stevens dissented, joined by Justices Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer. He accused the Court of misinterpreting relevant precedent and offering a "flawed an unconvincing analysis of the relationship between" Sections 601 and 602 that "ignor[ed] more plausible and persuasive explanations" set forth in prior opinions.

3. On April 25, 2001, the Court decided Daniels v. United States, No. 99-9136. The case presented the question whether a defendant, whose sentence was enhanced under a federal recidivist provision because of prior state convictions, and whose state convictions have not been set aside by any court, may challenge his federal sentence under 28 U.S.C. 2255 based on the claim that the prior state convictions are constitutionally invalid. Daniels was convicted of firearm possession by a convicted felon in violation of 18 U.S.C. 922(g). Because he had two prior state robbery convictions, he was sentenced under the Armed Career Criminal Act of 1984, 18 U.S.C. 924(e). He later filed an application under 28 U.S.C. 2255 seeking to challenge his sentence on the ground that the prior state convictions used to enhance his sentence were constitutionally invalid. The district court and the Ninth Circuit held that, under the Supreme Court's decision in Custis v. United States, 511 U.S. 485 (1994), Daniels was not entitled to raise such a challenge under 28 U.S.C. 2255 unless his prior convictions were obtained without counsel. We argued that the court of appeals decision was correct because in Custis, the Supreme Court held that a defendant could not, at sentencing, challenge the validity of prior state convictions used to enhance his sentence unless those convictions were obtained without counsel. Federal prosecutors, the Court held, should not be forced "to rummage through frequently nonexistent or difficult to obtain state-court transcripts or records that may date from another era, and may come from any one of the 50 States." 512 U.S. at 496. It would make little sense and defeat the rationale of Custis, we argued, to hold that the defendant could not challenge the validity of his state convictions at sentencing, only to let him collaterally challenge the same convictions one minute after sentencing -- with no other change in circumstances -- under 28 U.S.C. 2255.

In an opinion written by Justice O'Connor, the Court affirmed, agreeing with our arguments. The Court noted that "a district court evaluating a § 2255 motion is as unlikely as a district court engaged in sentencing to have the documents necessary to evaluate claims arising from long-past proceedings in a different jurisdiction." Noting that "the State does have a real and continuing interest in the integrity of its judgments," and that "[o]ur system affords a defendant convicted in state court numerous opportunities to challenge the constitutionality of his conviction," the Court concluded that "the defendant is not entitled to another bite at the apple simply because that conviction is later used to enhance another sentence," and therefore held that the Custis rule extends to Section 2255 proceedings as well. Justices Souter filed a dissenting opinion, joined by Justices Stevens and Ginsburg. He argued that finality concerns and the difficulty of reviewing old state convictions should not bar collateral review in this case, and that "[i]n denying [prisoners] the right to attack convictions later when attacks are worth the trouble, the Court adopts a policy of promoting challenges earlier when they may not justify the effort and perhaps never will." Justice Breyer also filed a dissenting opinion, arguing that Custis was wrongly decided and should be overturned.

The same day, the Court held in Lackawanna County District Attorney v. Coss, No. 99-1884, that relief is similarly unavailable to state prisoners through a petition for a writ of habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C. 2254. We did not participate in that case.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On April 23, 2001, we filed a brief in Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, No. 00-795. The case presents the question whether provisions of the Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1996 that criminalize the possession and distribution of material that appears to be of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct, or that is presented in such a way so as to convey the impression that it is of a minor engaging in such conduct, violates the First Amendment. We argue that the statute embodies Congress's judgment, based on abundant evidence, that such depictions are intrinsically related to the sexual abuse of real children. Under the analysis applied in New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982), that form of child pornography, like child pornography involving real children, is unprotected by the First Amendment. First, the governmental interest at stake is the "compelling" one of protecting children from sexual exploitation. Second, the depictions at issue are "intrinsically related" to the sexual abuse of children: pedophiles use such depictions to seduce other children into sexual activity and to whet their appetites for sexual abuse; the existence of such material makes it far more difficult to establish that a pornographic image is of a real child, endangering the government's ability to enforce existing child pornography laws; and such material is exchanged for pictures of real children engaged in sexually explicit conduct, and adds fuel to the underground market for child pornography. Finally, the value of depictions of children engaged in sexually explicit conduct is exceedingly modest, if not de minimis. Thus, like depictions of real children engaged in sexually explicit conduct, depictions that are virtually indistinguishable from such depictions are categorically unprotected by the First Amendment.

2. On April 27, 2001, we filed a brief in United States Postal Service v. Gregory, No. 00-758. The case presents the question whether a federal agency, when disciplining or removing an employee for misconduct pursuant to the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, 5 U.S.C. 1101 et seq., may take account of prior disciplinary actions that are the subject of pending grievance proceedings. The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit held that an agency may not take such actions into consideration. The court reasoned that consideration of such actions would risk harming the legitimacy of the disciplinary process by allowing the use of potentially unreliable evidence – the ongoing prior disciplinary actions – to support an agency action. We contend that both longstanding administrative practice and common sense support the Merit Systems Protection Board's rule that agencies may consider an employee's disciplinary record – without regard to pending grievances – in calibrating the discipline for subsequent misconduct. That rule is not arbitrary and capricious, or otherwise contrary to law. Accordingly, it should be given effect.

B. Petitions for Certiorari

1. On April 23, we filed a petition for certiorari in United States v. GWI PCS 1, Inc., No. 00-1621. The case presents the questions (1) whether it is proper for a court in bankruptcy proceedings to use the equitable mootness doctrine to override the FCC's exclusive statutory authority to issue and regulate licenses for electromagnetic spectrum, and (2) whether respondents' obligation to pay their $1.06 billion winning bid can be treated by a bankruptcy court as a constructive fraudulent conveyance on the basis of that court's own determination of the value of the licenses. We argue that the Fifth Circuit's holding that the bankruptcy-law doctrine of "equitable mootness" permitted it to affirm the lower court's orders -- notwithstanding either their illegality or the bankruptcy court's usurpation of the FCC's regulatory authority -- is incorrect and represents a substantial intrusion into the regulatory authority Congress has conferred on federal administrative agencies. Indeed, in this very case, the decision undermines and distorts the increasingly important market-based system of license allocation that Congress established in 47 U.S.C. 309(j), and that the FCC implemented through its carefully crafted auction system. For those reasons, and because the decision below concededly conflicts with a decision of the Second Circuit on a closely related issue, review by the Court is warranted.

2. On April 26, we filed a petition for certiorari in United States v. Jones, No. 00-1643. The case presents the questions (1) whether a district court's failure to advise a counseled defendant at his guilty plea hearing that he has the right to the assistance of counsel at trial, as required by Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(c)(3), is subject to plain-error, rather than harmless-error, review on appeal when the defendant fails to preserve the claim of error in the district court; and (2) whether, in determining if a defendant's substantial rights were affected by a district court's deviation from the requirements of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(c)(3), the court of appeals may review only the transcript of the guilty plea colloquy, or whether it may also consider other parts of the official record. Because this case presents the same questions as United States v. Vonn, No. 00-973, which is currently before the court, we argue that this petition should be held pending the Court's decision in that cas e, and then disposed of accordingly.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decision

A. Decision on the Merits

1. On April 30, 2001, the Court decided C & L Enterprises, Inc. v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, No. 00-292, which presented the question whether and under what circumstances an Indian Tribe's agreement to arbitrate disputes arising out of a standard form contract entered into with a private party, and to have judgment entered upon the final arbitration award "in any court having jurisdiction thereof," constitutes a valid waiver of the Tribe's sovereign immunity from suit in state court. As amicus curiae, we argued that an arbitration clause in a standard form contract does not constitute an express and unequivocal consent to suit in state court, at least where the agreement is ambiguous regarding whether an enforcement action can be brought in tribal courts.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Ginsburg, the Court reversed, rejecting our arguments. Because the contract required resolution of all contract-related disputes by binding arbitration, whose ensuing awards may be reduced to judgment "in accordance with applicable law in any court having jurisdiction thereof," "[t]he contract's choice-of-law clause makes it plain enough that a 'court having jurisdiction' to enforce the award in question is the Oklahoma state court in which C & L filed suit." The Court rejected the Tribe's argument that an arbitration clause "is not a waiver of immunity from suit," and noted that the contract was in no way ambiguous, and that it had been proposed and prepared by the Tribe itself.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 7

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 5/1/2001 TIME: 5:05pm INITIALS: eb

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: April 10, 2001

RE: Supreme Court Update

Attached please find this week's Supreme Court update from the Acting Solicitor General.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

April 9, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

I. Supreme Court Filing

A. Brief on the Merits

1. On April 6, we filed a brief for the federal petitioners in the consolidated cases of National Cable Television Ass'n v. Gulf Power Co., et al. and Federal Communication Commission and United States of America v. Gulf Power Co. Since the inception of cable television service, cable operators have leased space on telephone or electric utility poles, or in underground conduits, for the attachment of cable distribution facilities, such as coaxial or fiber-optic cable and associated equipment. In 1978, Congress enacted the Pole Attachments Act, 47 U.S.C. 224, to address the problem of utilities charging monopoly rents to cable operators for these attachments. The Pole Attachments Act, as amended by the Telecommunications Act of 1996, directs the FCC to set "just and reasonable" rates that a utility may charge for "any attachment by a cable television system or provider of telecommunications service to a pole, duct, conduit, or right-of-way owned or controlled by a utility." To implement these provisions, the FCC promulgated regulations to ensure reasonable rates and nondiscriminatory access for pole attachments, including those used to provide cable modem Internet access and wireless communications services. On consolidated petitions for review by several utility companies, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit held that the Commission lacks statutory authority to regulate pole attachment rates for cable Internet access and wireless telecommunications services.

In our brief, we argue that the Pole Attachments Act unambiguously calls on the Commission to regulate all pole attachments by cable television systems or telecommunications service providers, including attachments simultaneously used to provide high-speed Internet access and conventional cable television programming, and attachments by providers of wireless telecommunications services. This is the most natural reading of the statute's language, which does not limit the scope of the Act based on the type of services offered by the cable system or telecommunications carrier. We also point out that this interpretation is supported by the policies underlying the Act. To the extent there is any ambiguity, we argue that the Court should defer to the FCC's interpretation, which is reasonable and should therefore be controlling.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel Lawyers

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: April 3, 2001

RE: Supreme Court

Attached please find the Acting Solicitor General's weekly report on Supreme Court activity involving the United States. Nothing in this week's report warrants wider notice or distribution within the White House.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

April 2, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decision on the Merits

On April 2, 2001, the court decided Texas v. Cobb, No. 99-1702. The case presented the question whether an accused's Sixth Amendment right to counsel attaches to questioning about one crime when he has been charged with committing another, factually related crime. As amicus curiae supporting petitioner, we argued that the police did not violate Cobb's Sixth Amendment right by eliciting incriminating statements from him on his murder of two individuals after he was charged with burglary of the individuals' home and was represented by counsel on the burglary charge, because no Sixth Amendment right to counsel had attached on the murder charge.

The majority (Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices O'Conner, Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas), concluded that, because under McNeil v. Wisconsin the Sixth Amendment right to counsel is offense specific, the right to counsel does not necessarily extend to offenses that have not been charged but are factually related to the charged offenses. The Court concluded that two offenses should be considered separate offenses when each requires proof of a fact that the other does not. The test applied is the same test as that used in Blockburger v. United States to delineate the scope of the Fifth Amendment's Double Jeopardy Clause. Under the test, burglary and murder qualify as different offenses, and thus the Court concluded that the police did not violate respondent's Sixth Amendment right to counsel in questioning him about the murders. The majority rejected the contention that the offense-specific rule will permit law enforcement officers near complete license to conduct uncounseled interrogations, because even though the Sixth Amendment right does not attach to uncharged offenses, defendants retain the ability under Miranda to refuse any police questioning.

REV_00260906

Justice Kennedy, joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas, filed a concurring opinion. Justice Kennedy noted that the majority opinion does not explicitly reaffirm or give approval to Michigan v. Jackson, which bars an officer from approaching a defendant to interrogate him on a charged offense when he has invoked the right to counsel. Justice Kennedy stated his belief that the underlying theory of Jackson is questionable and concluded that, if Jackson remains good law, "its protections should apply only where a suspect has made a clear and unambiguous assertion of the right not to speak outside the presence of counsel," the same unambiguous election required to invoke Fifth Amendment rights.

Justice Breyer, joined by Justices Stevens, Souter, and Ginsberg, dissented. Justice Breyer concluded that for Sixth Amendment purposes, the term "same offense" should be interpreted to cover criminal acts that are closely related to or inextricably intertwined with the particular crime set forth in the charging instrument. The dissenters, relying on Jackson, argued that once the Sixth Amendment right to counsel attaches, "law enforcement officials are required, in most circumstances, to deal with the defendant through counsel rather than directly, even if the defendant has waived his Fifth Amendment rights." The dissenters contended that on the majority's view of the law, because the police remain free to question the suspect about any other related crime not actually charged in the indictment, little remains of the Sixth Amendment right to "communicate through counsel."

B. Grant of Certiorari

On April 2, 2001, the Court granted certiorari in Kansas v. Crane, No. 00-957. The question presented is whether the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires a State to prove that a sexually violent predator cannot control his criminal sexual behavior before the State can civilly commit him. We have not participated in the case to date and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief on the Merits

On March 28, 2001, we filed a brief in Calcano-Martinez v. INS, No. 00-1011, a companion case to INS v. St. Cyr, No. 00-767. The case presents the question whether the court of appeals correctly concluded that it lacked jurisdiction on direct petitions for review over petitioners' non-constitutional challenges to their final removal orders, but that the district court had habeas corpus jurisdiction to entertain those challenges under 28 U.S.C. 2241 (the general habeas corpus statute). The petitioners are aliens who were each convicted of an aggravated felony prior to the effective date of IIRIRA but placed in removal proceedings and charged with removability based on the conviction after the effective date of IIRIRA; they challenged their removal orders on the basis that they should have been considered eligible for discretionary relief from removal because they were convicted before the effective date of the repeal of the discretionary relief provision.

We contend that Congress has precluded all judicial review of petitioners' contention that they are eligible for discretionary relief from deportation under former 8 U.S.C. 1182(c). Petitioners were properly found removable based on their convictions for aggravated-felony offenses. Accordingly, although removal orders are generally subject to review by petition for review in the court of appeals, such review of petitioners' contentions is precluded by 8 U.S.C. 1252(a)(2)(C), which provides that no court may review a removal order entered against an alien who is removable because of an aggravated-felony conviction. Review under that provision is limited to the contention that the offense of which the alien was convicted does not meet the statutory definition of an aggravated felony, or that the individual is not an alien, or to a substantial constitutional challenge to a removal order.

We also contend that Congress has precluded the district courts from reviewing challenges to aggravated felons' removal orders by habeas corpus or otherwise. Congress's unmistakable intent in the judicial-review provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act is to channel challenges to removal orders into the courts of appeals. The court of appeals' ruling that petitioners' challenges could proceed in district court cannot be reconciled with the legislative scheme for judicial review of removal orders that Congress has enacted. Finally, we contend that Congress's preclusion of review of petitioners' claims does not violate the Suspension Clause of Article I, Section 9, the Due Process Clause, or Article III. However, if the Court concludes that judicial review of petitioners' claims is required by the Constitution, then that review should proceed in the court of appeals, not the district court.

B. Petitions for Certiorari

1. On March 29, 2001, we filed a petition for a writ of certiorari in United States Department of Justice v. Maydak, No. __-___. Exemption 7(a) of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) exempts from its general disclosure requirement law enforcement records and information the production of which "could reasonably be expected to interfere with [law] enforcement proceedings." 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(7)(A). Exemption 7(a) permits the government to justify withholding by a general categorical showing. The questions presented in the case are (1) whether, contrary to traditional summary judgment principles, a government motion for summary judgment based on Exemption 7(A)'s broad categorical protection of law enforcement records and information forfeits the government's ability to raise any other, more particularized FOIA exemptions, unless the government simultaneously establishes the applicability of each of those other exemptions in a manner that would permit the district court to grant summary judgment on them; and (2) whether, under FOIA, a court may order, as a remedy for the government's failure timely to prove the applicability of other asserted exemptions, the wholesale release of grand jury materials or other information the disclosure of which is separately prohibited by federal law or which would directly impair the interests of third parties not before the court.

While the direct appeal of his conviction for various crimes was pending, respondent submitted a FOIA request to the U.S. Attorney's office that had prosecuted him for copies of "any and all documents which pertain to me, mention me, or list my name." The request was denied under Exemption 7(A). Respondent filed suit, and the district court concluded that the documents were properly withheld under Exemption 7(A). The district court did not address other exemptions identified by the government in its cross motion for summary judgment. Subsequently, but before the completion of briefing on respondent's appeal, the Department of Justice determined that the 7(a) exemption no longer applied. The Department requested the court of appeals to remand the case to permit the district court to rule on the applicability of the other, more particularized exemptions. The court of appeals denied the motion to remand and ordered full disclosure of all requested documents.

We contend that the Court should grant certiorari and reverse the decision of the court of appeals. By requiring the government, on pain of forfeiting other important exemptions, to make the particularized showings that Exemption 7(A)'s categorical protection was designed to avoid, the court of appeals has eliminated much of the meaningful application of Exemption 7(A). We maintain that the court of appeals' decision departs from the practice of other circuits, conflicts with decisions of the Supreme Court governing both FOIA litigation and general summary judgment principles, and prescribes an unworkable procedure that already has begun to interfere with pending enforcement proceedings. Finally, we argue that nothing in FOIA permits courts to remedy perceived litigation missteps by the government by ordering the release of documents that are independently protected from disclosure by other federal laws or that would reveal private and sensitive information about third parties not before the court.

2. On April 2, 2001, we filed a petition for certiorari in United States v. Arvizu, No. __-___. The questions presented are (1) whether the court of appeals erroneously departed from the totality of the circumstances test that governs reasonable suspicion determinations under the Fourth Amendment by holding that particular facts observed by a law enforcement officer were entitled to no weight and could not be considered as a matter of law; and (2) whether, under the totality of the circumstances test, the Border Patrol agent in this case had reasonable suspicion that justified a stop of a vehicle near the Mexican border.

The court of appeals suppressed evidence found in a consent-based search of respondent's minivan after concluding that the consent was tainted by a stop that was unlawful because it was not based on reasonable suspicion. The court of appeals excluded from its analysis of reasonable suspicion respondent's dramatic reduction in speed upon seeing a Border Patrol vehicle, respondent's visible nervousness, unnatural waving by the children in the minivan, the registration of the minivan to a non-local address that is very close to the Mexican border and on a street that is used as a staging area for smuggling, indications that there was bulky cargo on the floor of the minivan, the direction that respondent was traveling (respondent was not headed toward nearby recreation areas and was not following a sensible route to recreation areas farther north), and the agent's conclusion that the minivan was not familiar as local traffic.

We contend that the decision of the court of appeals departed fundamentally from the Supreme Court's totality-of-the-circumstances test for determining whether reasonable suspicion exists. By declaring as a matter of law that law enforcement officers may not consider certain facts when forming a suspicion of illegal activity, the court of appeals created a direct conflict with decisions of the Supreme Court and other courts of appeals and incorrectly excluded critical evidence in this case. The Ninth Circuit's effort to graft bright-line rules onto the necessarily fact-specific reasonable suspicion inquiry should be rejected. Finally, we contend that correcting the court of appeals' erroneous narrowing of the reasonable suspicion inquiry is a matter of great importance to law enforcement, and particularly to the national effort to halt the transportation of illegal aliens away from border areas.

REV_00260909

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Counsel's Office Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: September 12, 2001

RE: Office of Solicitor General Update

Attached is the latest update from the Solicitor General.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

The Solicitor General

September 11, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

A. NEXT WEEK

Nothing to report.

B. THIS WEEK

- Solicitor General Files Briefs in Related Telecommunications Act Cases: The Department filed on September 10 a brief in Mathias v. Worldcom Technologies and a brief in United States v. Public Service Commission of Maryland (consolidated with Verizon Maryland Inc. v. Public Service Commission of Maryland). The Telecommunications Act of 1996 establishes comprehensive procedures to open local telecommunications markets to competition through the formation of interconnection agreements between incumbent local exchange carriers and potential competitors providing, inter alia, for the lease of incumbents' network elements. The Telecommunications Act permits state public utility commissions to assume certain regulatory authority over those agreements and provides, in Section 252, that such exercises of authority are subject to review in federal court. 47 U.S.C. 252(e)(6).

  The first question presented in Mathias v. Worldcom Technologies is whether a state commission's action relating to enforcement of a previously approved Section 252 interconnection agreement is a "determination under [Section 252]" and thus reviewable in federal court under Section 252(e)(6). The second is whether a state commission's acceptance of Congress's invitation to implement a federal regulatory scheme that provides for review of state commission determinations in federal court constitutes a waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity. The third and final question is whether an official capacity action seeking prospective relief against state public utility commissioners for alleged ongoing violations of federal law in performing federal regulatory functions under the Telecommunications Act can be maintained under the Ex parte Young doctrine.

REV_00260912

The related question presented in United States v. Public Service Commission of Maryland is whether a federal district court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1331, either in addition to or in the alternative to jurisdiction under Section 252, to determine whether a state public utility commission's order interpreting or enforcing an interconnection agreement violates the Act.

C. LAST WEEK

- Solicitor General Files Brief as Amicus Curiae in Sixth Amendment Case: On September 4, the Department filed an amicus brief in support of the respondent in Mickens v. Taylor. The question presented is whether the Court of Appeals erred in holding that a defendant must show an actual conflict of interest and an adverse effect in order to establish a Sixth Amendment violation where a trial court fails to inquire into a potential conflict of interest of which it should have known. The Department argued that the Sixth Amendment is not violated under such circumstances unless an actual conflict adversely affected counsel's performance.

- Solicitor General Files Brief as Amicus Curiae in Medicaid Eligibility Case: On September 7, the Department filed an amicus brief in support of the petitioner in Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services v. Blumer. Under the Medicaid program, the federal government provides funding to the States for the provision of medical services to eligible needy persons. Statutory provisions establish requirements for determining the eligibility of a married individual who lives in a nursing home or is otherwise institutionalized, but who has a spouse who is not institutionalized (the "community spouse"). The question presented is whether a federal statute that provides for a "fair hearing" procedure in which a State may increase the amount of resources available to the community spouse permits Wisconsin to use the "income-first" method of determining eligibility and thereby treat excess income of the institutionalized spouse as available to the community spouse. The Department argued that the Medicaid program permits use of the income-first method.

- Solicitor General Files Brief as Amicus Curiae in "Family and Medical Leave Act" Case: On September 7, the Department filed a brief in support of the petitioners in Ragsdale v. Wolverine World Wide. The Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) requires covered employers to provide eligible employees with a 12-week period of leave for specified reasons, including "a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee." 29 U.S.C. 2612(a)(1)(D). The Act in turn directs the Secretary of Labor to prescribe regulations to carry out the Act's provisions. The question presented is whether the Secretary has acted permissibly in providing by regulation that (with certain exceptions) employer-provided leave does not count against the Act's 12-week period until the employer notifies the employee of its designation as FMLA leave. The Department argued that the regulation in question is valid because the Secretary reasonably determined that full achievement of the statutory purpose that the worker be able to plan his treatment or care-giving activities at the outset of his leave requires that the employee be made aware at the outset of the period of his rights and responsibilities under the Act.

REV_00260914

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 4

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 9/12/2001 TIME: 6:40pm INITIALS: eb

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 2

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 8/7/2001 TIME: 11:55 am INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

August 6, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

A. NEXT WEEK

Nothing to report.

B. THIS WEEK

- Solicitor General to File Brief in Supreme Court's Review of U.S. Department of Transportation's Disadvantaged Business Enterprise Program: The Department expects to file on August 10 a brief for respondent in Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Mineta. The questions presented are (1) whether the court of appeals misapplied the strict scrutiny standard in determining if Congress had a compelling interest to enact legislation designed to remedy the effects of racial discrimination; and (2) whether the United States Department of Transportation's current Disadvantaged Business Enterprise program is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest.

C. LAST WEEK

Nothing to report.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Counsel's Office Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: July 16, 2001

RE: Office of Solicitor General Update

Attached is the latest update from the Solicitor General.

Lori,
Please circulate
to all attorneys.
Brett

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

July 16, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. The Department filed on July 12 a brief for petitioner in United States v. Knights, No. 00-1260. Knights presents the question whether an agreement to a term of probation that authorizes any law enforcement officer to search a person or premises with or without a warrant, and with or without individualized suspicion of wrongdoing, constitutes a valid consent to search. The Department contends that respondent's consent to search was valid and enforceable as applied to a search conducted for investigative purposes, and that nothing in the Fourth Amendment prevents a defendant from granting such consent as a condition of release on parole. The Department's brief argues that an individual may voluntarily give advance consent to search, a constitutional right may be relinquished through an agreement with the government, and requiring consent to search as a condition of probation is not an unconstitutional condition.

2. The Department also filed on July 12 a brief as amicus curiae supporting petitioner in McKune v. Lile, No. 00-1187. The question presented is whether the Fifth Amendment privilege against compelled self-incrimination prevents a State from encouraging incarcerated sexual offenders to participate in a clinical rehabilitative program, in which participants must accept responsibility for their offenses, by conditioning the availability of certain institutional privileges on participation in the program. The Department contends that nothing in the Self Incrimination Clause precludes a State from adopting, or encouraging inmates to participate in, a rehabilitative program in which information about a participant's past sexual history that indicates a current risk may be revealed. In light of the significant restrictions inherent in any sound penal regime, and in the absence of arbitrary state action, the minor changes in the privileges available to a prisoner who declines to participate do not result in unconstitutional compulsion. Moreover, any burden on Fifth Amendment rights is justified by the State's legitimate penological interests in rehabilitating convicted sexual offenders.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. The Department anticipates filing on July 16 a brief for petitioner in United States v. Dusenbery, No. 00-6567. The question presented is whether the Due Process clause requires that the government give actual notice to a person whose assets are the subject of an administrative forfeiture.

2. The Department anticipates filing on July 19 a brief for petitioner in United States v. Arvizu, No. 00-1519. The questions presented are (1) whether the court of appeals erroneously departed from the totality of the circumstances test that governs reasonable suspicion determinations under the Fourth Amendment by holding that particular facts observed by a law enforcement officer were entitled to no weight and could not be considered as a matter of law; and (2) whether, under the totality of the circumstances test, the Border Patrol agent in this case had reasonable suspicion that justified a stop of a vehicle near the Mexican border.

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief on the Merits

1. The Department anticipates filing on July 27 a brief for petitioner in Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union, No. 00-1293. The Child Online Protection Act (COPA) make is unlawful to make any communication for commercial purposes by means of the World Wide Web that is available to minors and that includes material that is "harmful to minors," unless good faith efforts are made to prevent children from obtaining access to such material. COPA relies in part on "community standards" to identify material that is "harmful to minors." The question presented is whether the court of appeals properly barred enforcement of COPA on First Amendment grounds because COPA relies on community standards to identify material that is harmful to minors.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 13

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 6/27/01 TIME: 3:50pm INITIALS: eb

Justice Scalia filed a dissenting opinion, in which Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Thomas joined, and Justice O'Connor joined in part. Justice Scalia contended that the statute clearly stripped the courts of jurisdiction to review the claims of aliens found deportable by reason of their criminal acts, that the majority improperly treated the "clear statement" requirement as a requirement of specific "magic words," and that the canon favoring avoidance of constitutional questions did not give license to courts to rewrite statutes so as to subvert clear congressional intent. The dissent also argued that reading the statute to strip the courts of habeas jurisdiction would not violate the Suspension Clause, Art. 1, § 9, cl. 2, because that clause does not confer a right to habeas relief but rather sets forth when the privilege of the writ may be suspended and because even if the Suspension Clause guarantees some constitutional minimum of habeas relief, it could not be understood to guarantee the right to judicial compulsion of the exercise of executive discretion.

Justice O'Connor filed a separate dissenting opinion in which she explained her view that even assuming that the Suspension Clause guarantees some minimum extent of habeas review, the rights asserted by St. Cyr fall outside of the scope of that review.

5. Calcano-Martinez v. INS, No. 00-1011. In this companion case to St. Cyr, the Court considered the additional question whether a court of appeals on petition for review may entertain challenges to the merits of INS final removal orders, even orders going to the availability of discretionary relief, notwithstanding the broad preclusion of review set forth in IIRIRA (8 U.S.C. 1252(a)(2)(C).

In an opinion by Justice Stevens, the Court agreed with our position that the court of appeals lacked jurisdiction to hear the petitions for direct review, but held that, as in St. Cyr, the petitioners could proceed with their petitions for habeas corpus. Justices Scalia and O'Connor filed dissenting opinions relying on their respective dissents in St. Cyr.

B. Grants of Certiorari

On June 25, the Court granted petitions for writs of certiorari in seven cases:

1. Owasso Independent School Dist. v. Falvo, No. 00-1073. The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 (FERPA), 20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)(1), prohibits the furnishing of federal funds to an educational institution that has a policy or practice of releasing, without parental consent, students' "education records," which are defined as "those records, files, documents, and other materials which--(i) contain information directly related to a student; and (ii) are maintained by an educational agency or institution or by a person acting for such agency or institution." The question presented is whether allowing students to grade each other's homework and tests as their teacher goes over the correct answers aloud in class violates FERPA's prohibition against the release of "education records." The Department of Education (DoE) has a longstanding interpretation, explained in a 1993 letter, that "FERPA would not prohibit teachers from allowing students to grade a test or homework assignment of another student or from calling out that grade in class, even though such grade may eventually become an education record." The district court deferred to the DoE's interpretation of FERPA. The Tenth Circuit reversed on the FERPA claim, holding that the DoE's interpretation conflicted with the plain meaning of the statute and in any event was not entitled to deference because it was contained in an opinion letter rather than a formal interpretive regulation. The Department argued that although the court of appeals erred in concluding that FERPA prohibits students from grading the homework and tests of other students in the classroom, Supreme Court review would be unwarranted and premature given the DoE's pending issuance of regulations or other formal guidance setting forth a more detailed and comprehensive analysis of the meaning of "education records" under FERPA.

2. Wisconsin Dept. of Health and Family Services v. Blumer, No. 00-952. The federal government, through the Medicaid program, provides partial funding to the States for the provision of medical services to eligible needy persons. This case arises out of the Medicaid program's "spousal impoverishment" provisions, 42 U.S.C. 1396r-5, which establish special rules for married couples where only one spouse is in a nursing home or other institution. These provisions govern the allocation of income and resources (i.e., assets) between the institutionalized spouse and the "community spouse" for purposes of determining Medicaid eligibility. The question presented is whether Wisconsin's "income first" requirement, Wis. Stat. Ann. § 49.455(8)(d), which treats income otherwise attributable to the institutionalized spouse as available to the community spouse to meet that spouse's minimum monthly maintenance needs, is consistent with the federal statute, 42 U.S.C. 1396r-5(e)(2)(C). The Wisconsin Court of Appeals invalidated the state law as inconsistent with the federal statute, which it interpreted as requiring a "resource first" rather than an "income first" methodology. While the federal Healthcare Financing Administration (now known as the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services) has issued interim rules allowing states to adopt either methodology, the agency is planning to promulgate final regulations addressing this issue within 90 days. In light of this imminent regulatory guidance, which might render review of this case unnecessary, the Department argued that the Court should defer review of this matter in this case.

3. Edelman v. Lynchburg College, No. 00-1072. In implementing Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the EEOC promulgated a regulation, 29 C.F.R. 1601.12(b), that allows a charge of employment discrimination filed with the Commission to be amended to cure "technical defects or omissions, including the failure to verify the charge," and states that such an amendment to verify a charge "will relate back to the date the charge was first received" by EEOC, even if the verification of the charge is made after the statutory limitation period for filing a charge. Petitioner sent an unsworn letter to the EEOC charging that he was denied tenure by respondent as a result of sex discrimination. After an interview with the EEOC, petitioner filed an EEOC Form 5 Charge of Discrimination with a verified signature, which was received by the EEOC thirteen days after the expiration of the applicable limitation period. Petitioner sued under state law and Title VII, and the district court granted respondent's motion to dismiss the Title VII claims on the ground that petitioner had failed to file a timely charge of discrimination. The Fourth Circuit affirmed, holding that the EEOC regulation permitting the verification of the discrimination charge to relate back to the date petitioner filed his unsworn letter is contrary to the statute and therefore invalid. The Department argued that the issue presented--the validity of 29 C.F.R. 1601.12(b)--is sufficiently important to the enforcement of federal employment-discrimination law to warrant the Court's review. While Title VII requires that a charge be filed within a specified limitation period and that a charge be verified before EEOC can require the respondent to participate in its investigation, the statute does not require that the charge be verified during the statutory limitation period. Because the court of appeals' decision is erroneous and conflicts with the decisions of several other circuits, the Department urged the Court to grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

4. Verizon Maryland, Inc. v. Public Service Comm'n of Maryland, No. 00-1531; and United States v. Public Service Comm'n of Maryland, No. 00-1711. The Telecommunications Act of 1996 establishes comprehensive procedures to open local telecommunications markets to competition through the formation of interconnection agreements between incumbent local exchange carriers and potential competitors providing, inter alia, for the lease of incumbents' network elements. The 1996 Act permits, but does not require, state public utility commissions to assume regulatory authority over those agreements and provides that such exercises of authority are subject to review in federal court. The Court granted the petitions for a writ of certiorari limited to the question whether a federal district court has subject-matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1331 to determine whether a state commission's action interpreting or enforcing an interconnection agreement violates the 1996 Act. The Court scheduled these cases for oral argument in tandem with Mathias v. WorldCom Technologies, Inc., No. 00-878, in which the Court granted the petition for a writ of certiorari on March 5, 2001.

5. Ragsdale v. Wolverine Worldwide, Inc. No. 00-6029. The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA) provides that "an eligible employee shall be entitled to a total of 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period . . . because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee." 29 U.S.C. 2612(a)(1)(D). Department of Labor (DoL) regulations implementing these provisions, 29 C.F.R. 825 et seq., require employers "to designate leave, paid or unpaid, as FMLA-qualifying, and to give notice of the designation to the employee" in writing. Another regulation states that "[i]f an employee takes paid or unpaid leave and the employer does not designate the leave as FMLA leave, the leave taken does not count against an employee's FMLA entitlement."

Petitioner sued respondent, her former employer, after she exhausted her 30 weeks of employer-provided sick leave, none of which was designated as FMLA leave, and then was denied a request for an additional 12 weeks of FMLA leave. In the decision below, the Eighth Circuit affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment for respondent on the FMLA claim, holding that the applicable DoL regulation is invalid because it "convert[s] the statute's minimum of federally-mandated unpaid leave into an entitlement to an additional 12 weeks of leave unless the employer specifically and prospectively notifies the employee that she is using her FMLA leave." The Department argued that the court of appeals erred in holding invalid a DoL regulation that is designed to ensure that employees covered by the FMLA are able to make informed choices concerning the exercise of their statutory rights.

6. National R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Morgan, No. 00-1614. The question presented is whether a plaintiff may bring a suit under a federal anti-discrimination statute after the limitations period has lapsed if incidents that occurred within the limitations period are "sufficiently related" to the otherwise time-barred claims. The Department has not participated in the case to date, and is determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

7. Kelly v. South Carolina, No. 00-9280. The question presented is whether the state courts' reusal to inform petitioner's sentencing jury that he would never be eligible for parole if sentenced to life imprisonment rather than death violated Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154 (1994). The Department has not participated in the case to date, and is determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

C. Invitation

On June 25, the Court invited the Solicitor General to file a brief expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in Kentucky Ass'n of Health Plans v. Miller, Kentucky Comm'r of Ins., No. 00-1406. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) preempts any state law that "relates to" ERISA-covered employee benefit plans, unless it is a state law "which regulates insurance." Petitioner health maintenance organizations (HMOs) make limited networks of health care providers available to ERISA health benefit plans. Kentucky's "Any Willing Provider" law requires HMOs to open their networks to any provider in the geographical region willing to meet the network contract terms. The question presented is whether Kentucky's AWP statute is preempted by ERISA or whether it is saved from preemption because it "regulates insurance."

The Court has scheduled an additional nonargument session on Thrusday, June 28th at which the remaining decisions from this Term are expected to be issued.

NEXT WEEK

Nothing to report.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

June 26, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: RE for Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 18, the Court decided three cases in which the Department participated:

1. United States v. Mead, No. 99-1434. The case presented the questions whether judicial deference is owed to the tariff classification rulings issued by the Customs Service under 19 U.S.C. 1502(a), and whether the Customs Service reasonably interpreted the statutory phrase "diaries, notebooks and address books, bound" to include the spiral-bound and ring-bound day planners imported by respondent. The Department contended that ordinary Chevron deference applies to classification rulings of the Customs Service and that under the proper standard of deference, the Customs Service classification ruling in this case should have been affirmed.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court held that the customs ruling had no claim to judicial deference under Chevron because there was no indication in the statute that Congress intended tariff rulings to have the force of law. The Court held that "administrative implementation of a particular statutory provision qualifies for Chevron deference when it appears that Congress delegated authority to the agency generally to make rules carrying the force of law, and that the agency interpretation claiming deference was promulgated in the exercise of that authority." The Court explained that an agency may show that Congress has delegated such authority in a variety of ways, such as a grant of authority to engage in adjudication or notice-and-comment rulemaking, and that there will sometimes be reason for Chevron deference when no such administrative formality was required or afforded, if there is some other indication of a comparable congressional intent. The customs ruling here, however, failed to qualify for Chevron deference, although the Court concluded that it might still be entitled to some lesser form of deference under Skidmore v. Swift & Co., and remanded to the court of appeals for further action.

Justice Scalia dissented. He characterized the majority opinion as abandoning the Chevron doctrine for a presumption that agency discretion does not exist unless a statute expressly or impliedly provides for it, and rejected that view. Justice Scalia contended that there is no necessary connection between the formality of agency procedures and the power of the agency administering the procedure to resolve authoritatively questions of law.

2. Saucier v. Katz, No. 99-1977. The case presented two questions: (1) whether, in a case alleging the use of constitutionally excessive force, the test for qualified immunity and the reasonableness test under the Fourth Amendment are identical, such that a finding of unreasonable force under the Fourth Amendment necessarily precludes qualified immunity; and (2) whether the court of appeals erred in concluding that petitioner's use of force to detain respondent, which consisted of carrying respondent from the crowd to a waiting van and pushing him inside without injuring him, so clearly exceeded the amount of force permitted by the Fourth Amendment as to warrant denial of qualified immunity. The Department argued that the Fourth Amendment reasonableness test and the qualified immunity test are distinct and that the minimal use of force that occurred here as petitioner was guarding then-Vice-President Gore was not so clearly unlawful as to deprive the officer of qualified immunity.

In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court agreed with our position. The Court held that the test for reasonableness of force under the Fourth Amendment, which requires analysis of the objective reasonableness of an officer's action, is distinct from the test for qualified immunity, which includes the further dimension of whether the law put an officer on notice that a particular amount of force used in particular circumstances was excessive. Applying that principle, the Court held that the officer was entitled to summary judgment because there was no clearly established rule prohibiting the officer from acting as he did.

Justice Ginsburg wrote an opinion concurring in the judgment, which Justices Stevens and Breyer joined. She would have held that in the context of an excessive force claim there is no distinction between the test for reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment and the test for qualified immunity. According to Justice Ginsburg, the proper test for the qualified immunity claim here is whether a reasonable officer, identically situated, would have believed that the force employed was lawful.

Justice Souter wrote an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Justice Souter agreed with the Court's determination that the qualified immunity test is distinct from the test governing the underlying merits, but would have remanded the case for application of the qualified immunity standard.

3. Idaho v. United States, No. 00-189. The case presented the question whether the United States holds title, in trust for the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, to lands underlying portions of Coeur d'Alene Lake and the St. Joe River that are within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. Because the State of Idaho conceded that the 1873 Executive Order establishing the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation included submerged lands in the reservation, under United States v. Alaska, 521 U.S. 1 (1997), the only remaining question was whether, at the time of Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress clearly intended to defeat Idaho's title to these submerged lands. The Department contended that Congress did so intend.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court agreed with our position. The Court concluded that the historical record indicated that, prior to Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress knew that the reservation included submerged lands and had authorized modification of the reservation solely by agreement with the Tribe. The Court considered this evidence, together with evidence from the period just after statehood suggesting that Congress did not understand statehood to have affected the submerged lands in question, sufficient to show that Congress intended to defeat Idaho's title to the submerged lands.

Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas, dissented. The dissenters took the view that the evidence relied on by the majority showed at best only that at the time of Idaho statehood, the executive branch intended the submerged lands in question to remain in trust for the Tribe, and that the existence of such an intent on the part of the executive branch was insufficient to defeat Idaho's title to the lands.

B. Denial of Stay of Execution

On June 18, the Court denied without comment the application for a stay of execution and the petition for habeas corpus in In Re Juan Raul Garza, Nos. A-1072 & 00-10456 and the application for a stay of execution and the petition for certiorari in Garza v. Lappin, Nos. A-11-1 and 00-10631.

C. Grant of Certiorari

On June 18, the Court granted a writ of certiorari in Festo Corp. v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushik Co., No. 00-1543. The questions presented are (1) whether every claim-narrowing amendment designed to comply with a provision of the Patent Act--including those provisions not related to prior art--automatically creates prosecution history estoppel regardless of the reason for the amendment; and (2) whether a finding of prosecution history estoppel completely bars application of the doctrine of equivalents. The Department has not participated in the case to date, and is determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

D. Invitation

On June 18, the Court invited the Solicitor General to file a brief expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Echazabal, No. 00-1406. The Americans with Disabilities Act provides that employers may require as a qualification for a job that the employee not pose a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals in the workplace. The court of appeals ruled that the "direct threat" defense cannot be used to argue that the accommodation would pose a direct threat to the disabled individual, but can only be used when an accommodation poses a direct threat to others in the workplace. The questions presented is whether a person who is unable to carry out essential functions of a job without incurring a direct threat to the person's own health or life is a qualified individual for that job within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On June 21, the Department filed a brief for petitioner in Massinari v. Sigmon Coal Dist., No. 00-1307. The case involves the Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act of 1992, 26 U.S.C. 9701 et seq., which established the United Mine Workers of America Combined Benefit Fund to finance health care benefits for retired miners and their dependents who worked under collective bargaining agreements that promised lifetime health care benefits. The Act directs the Commissioner of Social Security to assign responsibility for beneficiaries of the Fund to the "signatory operator" or "related person" of the operator that formerly employed them, if that signatory operator (or related person) is still "in business." 26 U.S.C. 9706(a). The question presented is whether the Commissioner is permitted to assign beneficiaries to the successor in interest of a signatory operator that is no longer in business. The Department argues that the Act grants the Commissioner this authority because the statutory definitions of the term "related person" reaches the direct successor in interest of the signatory operator. This construction of the statute is far more consistent with the background, legislative history, and purposes of the Coal Act than is the contrary definition of "related person" adopted by the court of appeals, which excludes the direct successor in interest of the signatory operator.

2. On June 21, the Department filed a brief for respondent in Chickasaw Nation v. United States, No. 00-507. The case presents the question whether Section 20(d) of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA), 25 U.S.C. 2719(d), exempts Indian Tribes from the wagering excise and occupational taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue Code. The Department argues that IGRA directs that all provisions of the Code "concerning the reporting and withholding of taxes with respect to * * * [a player's] winnings" are to apply to Tribes as they would to States, and that IGRA's parenthetical reference to Chapter 35 of the Internal Revenue Code, which imposes federal wagering taxes and exempts state lotteries from those taxes, cannot be read as a federal excise tax exemption for the Tribes.

B. Petition for Certiorari

On June 22, the Department filed a brief as amicus curiae urging the Court to grant the petitions for a writ of certiorari in Nos. 00-1751, 00-1777, and 00-1779, Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, Hanna Perkins School v. Simmons-Harris, and Taylor v. Simmons-Harris on the question whether the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment prevents a State from providing tuition aid as part of a general assistance program to the parents of children who attend failing public schools and authorizing the parents to use that aid to enroll their children in a private school of their own choosing, without regard to whether the school is religiously affiliated. The Department argues that the decision of the Sixth Circuit invalidating the Ohio Pilot Project Scholarship Program as a violation of the Establishment Clause conflicts with decisions of the Ohio Supreme Court and the Wisconsin Supreme Court upholding this and a similar tuition aid program, and that this conflict should be resolved by the Court so policymakers can know whether general assistance programs that make government funds available to individuals to enable them to obtain social services from private entities, including entities with religious affiliations, are a constitutionally permissible option for addressing failing public schools and other important social problems. The Department contends that the Sixth Circuit erred in striking down the Ohio program, which comports with the central tenets of the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause jurisprudence.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 25, the Court decided five cases in which the Department participated:

1. FEC v. Colorado Republican Fed. Campaign Comm., No. 00-191. The case presents the question whether the First Amendment grants a political party the right to make unlimited campaign expenditures in coordination with the party's congressional candidates, notwithstanding the limits on such coordinated expenditures imposed by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, 2 U.S.C. 431, et seq. (FECA). In 1996, the Supreme Court sustained respondent's challenge to petitioner's enforcement action, holding that independent, uncoordinated party expenditures are not subject to FECA's limits, but the Court declined to reach respondent's claim that Section 441a(d)'s limits on coordinated expenditures violate the First Amendment on its face. This time, the Court reached and rejected respondent's facial challenge.

The Department argued that a party's coordinated expenditures are functionally and constitutionally indistinguishable from direct monetary contributions to a candidate, and thus may be restricted in order to prevent circumvention of FECA's contribution limits. Because the Court previously sustained the contribution limits against First Amendment challenges, and because FECA allows political parties to make much larger coordinated expenditures than other political committees, the Department argued that FECA limits on party spending are constitutional. In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court agreed. While expenditure limits are subject to closer constitutional scrutiny than limits on contributions, Congress's treatment of coordinated party spending as the functional equivalent of contributions is constitutionally permissible to avoid the risk of political corruption and its appearance. Substantial evidence demonstrates how FECA's restrictions are tested by a system of tallying contributions in order to connect donors to candidates through the accommodation of a party, and how the contribution limits would be eroded if inducement to circumvent them were enhanced by removing restrictions on parties' coordinated spending.

Justice Thomas, joined by Justices Scalia and Kennedy and joined in part by the Chief Justice, dissented. He argued that Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam), should be overruled because it inadequately protects core rights of political speech and association. Even under the Buckley standard, the challenged restrictions on spending by political parties are too broad and too burdensome on political speech to pass constitutional muster.

2. United States v. United Foods, No. 00-276. The case presents the question whether the assessments imposed pursuant to the Mushroom Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act of 1990, 7 U.S.C. 6101 et seq., on members of the mushroom industry for advertising programs to support the industry violate the First Amendment. The Department argued that the assessments are constitutional for the reasons the Supreme Court identified in a 1997 decision, Glickman v. Wileman Bros. & Elliot, Inc., that rejected a First Amendment challenge to similar generic advertising programs for California tree fruits: the assessments "impose no restraint on the freedom of any producer to communicate any message to any audience"; "do not compel any person to engage in any actual or symbolic speech"; and "do not compel the producers to endorse or to finance any political or ideological views." Respondent, a large mushroom producer, wants to promote its brand of mushrooms as superior to those grown by other producers, and thus objects to having to pay for the contrary message favored by a majority of producers. In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court struck down the program as an unconstitutional compelled speech subsidy. The Court distinguished the mushroom marketing program from that sustained in Wileman because the mandated assessments for speech in that case were ancillary to a more comprehensive regulatory program. Here, in contrast, the funds at issue are mostly used for generic advertising and there are no marketing orders regulating mushroom production and sales, no antitrust exemption, and nothing preventing individual producers from making their own marketing decisions. The expression respondent is required to support is thus not germane to any purpose of the association independent from the speech itself. The Court refused to entertain the Department's argument that this case involves permissible government speech because this theory was not advanced below.

Justice Stevens filed a concurrence noting that although important government interests might justify a compelled subsidy for expression in other cases, the interest in making one entrepreneur finance advertising for the benefit of his competitors, including some who are not required to contribute, is insufficient in this case. Justice Thomas concurred, stating his view that there is no First Amendment distinction between compelled subsidies for advertising and compelled speech, both of which must be subjected to the most stringent First Amendment scrutiny. Justice Breyer, joined by Justice Ginsburg and joined in part by Justice O'Connor, dissented. He found the Court's reasons for distinguishing Wileman unpersuasive, and argued that the Court had improperly discounted the importance of the regulatory interests served by the challenged program.

3. Nevada v. Hicks, No. 99-1994. Respondent Hicks, a member of the Fallon Paiute-Shoshone Tribes of western Nevada, filed suit in tribal court alleging tort claims and civil rights violations under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against state game wardens who had executed state-court and tribal-court search warrants to search Hicks's home on the Tribes' reservation and seize big-horn sheep's head trophies. As amicus, the Department argued that the tribal court had jurisdiction over the claims against petitioners, because the Court recognized in Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438 (1997), that "tribes retain considerable control"--both regulatory and adjudicatory--"over non-member conduct on tribal land" within a reservation, as well as authority over the conduct of nonmembers elsewhere within a reservation where that conduct involves "consensual relationships with the tribe or its members" or affects "the political integrity, the economic security, or the health or welfare of the tribe." The Department contended this test was met here because petitioners entered into a consensual relationship with the Tribe when they obtained authorization from the tribal court to execute the warrants, and because a Tribe's political integrity and welfare are threatened when state officials, invoking the Tribe's own authority, are alleged to have violated the rights of its members on its reservation.

In an opinion by Justice Scalia, the Court rejected this position, holding that the tribal court did not have jurisdiction to adjudicate the claims. As to nonmember defendants such as the game wardens, a tribal court's inherent adjudicatory authority is at most as broad as the tribe's regulatory authority, and "the exercise of tribal power beyond what is necessary to protect tribal self-government or to control internal relations . . . cannot survive without express congressional delegation," Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544 at 564 (1981). Whether the acts occurred on tribal land is only one factor to be considered, and while that factor may sometimes be dispositive, tribal ownership is not alone sufficient to support regulatory jurisdiction over nonmembers. Tribal authority to regulate the conduct of state officers executing a search warrant to investigate a violation of state laws that occurred off the reservation is not essential to tribal self-government or internal relations, the Court held, and the State's interest in executing process is considerable. Indeed, such enforcement no more impairs the Tribes' self-government than federal enforcement of federal law impairs state government. Congress has not stripped the States of their inherent jurisdiction on reservations with regard to off-reservation violations of state law. The federal statutory scheme neither prescribes nor suggests that state officers cannot enter a reservation to investigate or prosecute such violations, nor has Congress explicitly granted tribal courts jurisdiction over federal civil rights claims arising from acts occurring on reservation land. Concurring opinions were filed by Justices Souter and Ginsburg, while Justice O'Connor concurred in part, and Justice Stevens concurred in the judgment only.

4. INS v. St. Cyr, No. 00-767. The respondent, an alien found removable because of his criminal conviction for an aggravated felony, applied for discretionary relief from removal. The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) concluded that he was ineligible for discretionary relief under the former 8 U.S.C. 1182(c) because that provision had been repealed by the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) and the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA). Respondent filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in district court under 28 U.S.C. 2241, contending that Congress's repeal of Section 1182(c) did not apply to his conviction, which was entered before the repeal, even though his removal proceedings were commenced after the repeal. The district court and the Second Circuit agreed and granted habeas corpus. The questions presented were whether the district court had habeas jurisdiction over respondent's challenge to his final removal order; and whether the BIA properly concluded that respondent is not eligible for discretionary relief under Section 1182(c) because his removal proceeding was commenced after the repeal of Section 1182(c) became effective.

With respect to the first issue, the Department contended that the court of appeals' decision could not be squared with the structure of judicial review of removal orders that Congress has enacted, and could lead to significant delays in the removal of criminal aliens from the United States, despite Congress's concern that the removal of criminal aliens should be expedited. With respect to the second issue, the Department argued that the court of appeals misinterpreted Section 304 of IIRIRA, which repealed 8 U.S.C. 1182(c) and comprehensively replaced the old system of deportation, including proceedings for discretionary relief, with a wholly new system of removal that provides different eligibility criteria for discretionary cancellation of removal. The Department further contended that the court of appeals relied on a misapprehension of the presumption against retroactive application of federal statutes, which has no operation in this removal context.

In an opinion by Justice Stevens, the Court held that the federal court retained jurisdiction under Section 2241 over challenges to a final removal order against an alien removable by reason of a criminal offense. In reaching this conclusion, the Court relied on the strong presumption in favor of judicial review of administrative action, the lack of an explicit statement of congressional intent to repeal habeas jurisdiction, the canon favoring construing statutes to avoid substantial constitutional questions, and historical practice in the immigration context. The Court also held that discretionary relief remains available for aliens, like St. Cyr, whose convictions were obtained through plea agreements and who would have been eligible for discretionary relief at the time of their pleas. The Court concluded that the statutory provisions eliminating discretionary review did not apply retroactively to aliens like St. Cyr because Congress had not directed retroactive application with the requisite clarity and such application would violate considerations of fair notice, reasonable reliance, and settled expectations.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 10

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 6/19/2001 TIME: 4:20 pm INITIALS: eb

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

On June 25, the Court will hold a non-argument session at which opinions and orders are expected to be issued.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

June 19, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

On June 11, the Court decided five cases in which the Department participated:

1. Nguyen v. INS, No. 99-2071. The case involved 8 U.S.C. 1409, which governs the acquisition of United States citizenship by persons born to one United States citizen parent and one noncitizen parent when the parents are unmarried and the child is born outside of the United States. The statute provides that a child born out of wedlock acquires at birth the nationality of a citizen mother, but requires legitimization, a declaration of paternity under oath by the father, or a court order of paternity when the father is the citizen parent. The case presented the question whether this statutory distinction is consistent with the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause. The Department had argued that Section 1409 survives equal protection scrutiny because the statue reflects careful congressional consideration of the relationships between unwed citizen parents and their children born abroad and draws reasonable distinctions between unmarried citizen mothers and unwed citizen fathers. In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court agreed with our position. The Court held that the requirements on unmarried citizen fathers are justified by two important governmental interests: assuring that a biological parent-child relationship exists and ensuring that the child and citizen parent have some demonstrated opportunity to develop a relationship that consists of meaningful ties between child and citizen parent and, in turn, the United States. The Court also held that the means Congress chose substantially relate to these interests.

Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, concurred, writing separately to reiterate his view that the Court lacks power to confer citizenship on a basis other than that prescribed by Congress and thus, even if the Court had found the statute unconstitutional, the Court could not confer citizenship on petitioner.

Justice O'Connor, joined by Justices Souter, Ginsburg and Breyer, dissented. The dissenters argued that the "majority opinion represents far less than the rigorous application of heightened scrutiny" for sex-based classifications that the Court's "precedents require." The dissenters emphasized that sex-neutral alternatives could have accomplished the governmental goals.

2. Kyllo v. United States, No. 99-8508. At issue was whether the use of a thermal imaging device to record the amount of heat emanating from a house constitutes a search within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. The Department had argued that use of the device from the street outside a house is not a search because, inter alia, there is no objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the heat emanating from one's home. The Court, in an opinion by Justice Scalia, held that use of a thermal imaging device that is not in general public use, to explore details of a private home that would previously have been unknowable without physical intrusion, constitutes a Fourth Amendment search. The Court rejected the Department's reliance on the fact that the thermal imager detected "only heat radiating from the exterior surface of the house" on the grounds that the Court had previously held that use of eavesdropping devices that "picked up only sound waves that reached the exterior of the phone booth" constituted a search and that such a distinction "would leave the homeowner at the mercy of advancing technology."

Justice Stevens, joined by the Chief Justice, Justice O'Connor, and Justice Kennedy, dissented. The dissenters emphasized that the thermal imaging device did not reveal any information about the interior of the home and criticized the holding for creating an overbroad rule with "uncertain" contours.

3. Alabama v. Bozeman, No. 00-492. The case presented the question whether a one-day transfer of a federal prisoner to state custody for purposes of arraignment, without completing the trial on the state charges, violates Article IV(e) of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers (IAD) and requires dismissal of the state charges. While Bozeman was serving time in federal prison, Covington County, Alabama officials obtained custody of Bozeman, pursuant to the IAD, for his one-day arraignment on state criminal charges. Bozeman was returned to federal prison the next day. The Supreme Court of Alabama later dismissed the state charges against Bozeman under Article IV(e) of the IAD, which provides that if "trial is not had on any indictment, information or complaint contemplated hereby prior to the prisoner's being returned to the original place of imprisonment . . . such indictment, information or complaint shall not be of further force or effect, and the court shall enter an order dismissing the same with prejudice." The Department had contended as amicus curiae that the Supreme Court of Alabama erred in dismissing based on a technical and wholly harmless defect. In a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court held that the literal language of Article IV(e) provides an absolute bar on any further criminal proceedings when a defendant is returned to the original place of imprisonment before trial.

4. Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, No. 00-549. The case involved the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), which makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate . . . in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. 1962(c). The question presented was whether a claim may be maintained under this provision when the alleged RICO "enterprise" is a corporation and the "person" charged with the violation is the sole owner, and an employee, of the corporation. The Department argued as amicus curiae that a RICO claim may be maintained in that situation, because although the "person" charged must be distinct from the "enterprise" under Section 1962(c), a corporate employee is sufficiently distinct from the corporation to satisfy the distinctness requirement. In a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court agreed with our position and held that Section 1962(c) applies when a corporate employee unlawfully conducts the affairs of the corporation of which he is the sole owner – whether he conducts those affairs within the scope, or beyond the scope, of corporate activity. The Court stated that RICO's plain language and the statute's underlying purposes support the view that the formal legal distinction that incorporation creates between "person" and "enterprise" satisfies the distinct entity requirement.

5. Kansas v. Colorado, No. 105 (original). The State of Kansas brought this original action to enforce its rights under the Arkansas River Compact. In an earlier decision, the Supreme Court accepted the Special Master's recommendation that Colorado be held liable for violations of the Compact resulting from post-Compact well pumping in Colorado. After further proceedings, the Master issued a Report recommending that Kansas be awarded money damages for losses that occurred as a result of the violations, including aggregate losses to past and future Kansas water users, and that prejudgement interest be awarded on damages from 1969 to the present. Both Kansas and Colorado filed exceptions to the recommended remedy. The Department contended that the exceptions should be overruled because the recommended remedy fell within the Court's broad discretion to fashion a fair and equitable remedy for Colorado's violations of the Compact.

In an opinion by Justice Stevens, the Court overruled all but one of the exceptions and remanded the case to the Special Master for preparation of a final judgment. The Court rejected Colorado's arguments that the recommended damages award violated the Eleventh Amendment and that the unliquidated nature of Kansas's money damages barred an award of prejudgment interest. The Court held that the Special Master properly determined the appropriate rate for the prejudgment interest award, but sustained Colorado's exception that prejudgment interest should begin accruing in 1985, when Kansas filed its complaint, rather than 1969, when Colorado knew or should have known that it was violating the Compact. And the Court held that the Special Master properly determined the value of the crop losses attributable to the Compact violations.

Justice O'Connor, joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas, filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Justice O'Connor argued that the award of prejudgment interest was improper on the ground that Kansas and Colorado could not have intended liability for prejudgment interest when they entered into the Compact because at that time prejudgment interest was unavailable on claims for unliquidated or unascertainable damages.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief of the Merits

1. The Department filed on June 15 a brief as amicus curiae supporting respondent in J.E.M. Supply v. Pioneer Hi-Bred Intl., No. 99-1996. The question presented is whether patents issued under 35 U.S.C. 101 granting the right to exclude others from sexually reproducing plants or plant varieties, or from selling or using plants or plant varieties reproduced by means of sexual reproduction (by seed), are invalid because the Plant Variety Protection Act of 1970, 7 U.S.C. 2321, et seq., and the Plant Patent Act of 1930, 35 U.S.C. 161-164, are the exclusive means of obtaining a federal statutory right to exclude others from reproducing, selling, or using plants or plant varieties. In Diamond v. Chakrabarty, 447 U.S. 303, 313 (1980), the Court held with respect to sexually reproduced plants that "[t]here is nothing in [the PVPA's] language or history to suggest that" the law was enacted because Section 101 precluded patenting of living things. We contend that there is no reason to overrule Chakrabarty's construction of Section 101 and revisit Chakrabarty's reasoning concerning the relationship between Section 101 and the Plant Variety Protection Act.

B. Petition for Certiorari

On June 11, the Department filed an acquiescence to the petition for certiorari in Young v. United States, No. 00-1567. The question presented is whether the three-year lookback period for determining the priority and nondischargeability of taxes pursuant to Sections 507(a)(8)(A)(i) and 523(a)(1)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code is tolled during the pendency of a debtor's prior bankruptcy case. The courts of appeals are in direct conflict on the question, and thus we do not oppose the granting of the petition in this case. We note in our petition, however, that the House and Senate have passed bills that would amend the Bankruptcy Code to resolve this question by making clear that the three-year lookback provision of the Code is tolled and extended for any period in which the automatic stay was in effect in a prior bankruptcy case.

C. Other

1. On June 14, the Department filed a Brief in Opposition to an Application for a Stay of Execution and Original Writ of Habeas Corpus in In Re Juan Raul Garza, Nos. A-1072 & 00-10456. The questions presented are (1) whether petitioner has satisfied the requirements for a stay of execution, as described in Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880 (1983); (2) whether petitioner's claim under Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154 (1994), and Shafer v. South Carolina, 121 S. Ct. 1263 (2001), satisfies the requirements for review of second or successive motions for collateral review under 28 U.S.C. 2255, which inform the Court's consideration of an original habeas petition; (3) whether Section 2255 is inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of petitioner's detention under Simmons and Shafer; and (4) whether denial of relief on petitioner's claim under Simmons and Shafer would constitute an unconstitutional suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner has previously exhausted a direct appeal and a first collateral review of his convictions and death sentence under Section 2255. We contend that petitioner cannot make the extraordinary showing required for a stay of execution or for habeas relief, because his Simmons claim -- that his sentencing jury should have been instructed that the only alternative to a death sentence was life imprisonment without the possibility of release -- was correctly rejected on direct review, and he is procedurally barred from relitigating the claim now. The Court denied the application and petition without comment on June 18.

2. On June 16, the Department filed a Brief in Opposition to an Application for a Stay of Execution and Petition for Certiorari in Garza v. Lappin, Nos. A-11-1 and 00-10631. The questions presented are (1) whether petitioner has satisfied the requirements for a stay of execution, as described in Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880 (1983); and (2) whether petitioner is entitled to have his death sentence vacated based on Report No. 52/01 of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which concluded that his sentences violate his rights under the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man (American Declaration) because evidence was introduced at the capital punishment phase of unadjudicated murders committed in Mexico, and that his execution would violate the Charter of the Organization of American States and the American Declaration. We contend that petitioner's application for a stay and petition for certiorari should be denied because the Commission does not have the power to issue binding orders on member states and the Commission's recommendation in this case does not give rise to a judicially enforceable right that may be invoked in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Thus petitioner cannot satisfy the requirements for a stay of execution. The Court denied the application and petition without comment on June 18.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 18, the Court decided three cases in which the Department participated:

1. United States v. Mead, No. 99-1434. The case presented the questions whether judicial deference is owed to the tariff classification rulings issued by the Customs Service under 19 U.S.C. 1502(a), and whether the Customs Service reasonably interpreted the statutory phrase "diaries, notebooks and address books, bound" to include the spiral-bound and ring-bound day planners imported by respondent. We contended that ordinary Chevron deference does apply to classification rulings of the Customs Service and that under the proper standard of deference, the Customs Service classification ruling in this case should have been affirmed.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court held that the customs ruling had no claim to judicial deference under Chevron because there was no indication in the statute that Congress intended tariff rulings to have the force of law. The Court held that "administrative implementation of a particular statutory provision qualifies for Chevron deference when it appears that Congress delegated authority to the agency generally to make rules carrying the force of law, and that the agency interpretation claiming deference was promulgated in the exercise of that authority." The Court explained that an agency may show that Congress has delegated such authority in a variety of ways, such as a grant of authority to engage in adjudication or notice-and-comment rulemaking, and that there will sometimes be reason for Chevron deference when no such administrative formality was required or afforded, if there is some other indication of a comparable congressional intent. The customs ruling here, however, failed to qualify for Chevron deference. Finally, the Court concluded that although the ruling in this case was not entitled to Chevron deference, it might still be entitled to some lesser form of deference under Skidmore v. Swift & Co., and remanded to the court of appeals for further action.

Justice Scalia dissented. He characterized the majority opinion as abandoning the Chevron doctrine for a presumption that agency discretion does not exist unless a statute expressly or impliedly provides for it, and rejected that view. Justice Scalia contended that there is no necessary connection between the formality of agency procedures and the power of the agency administering the procedure to resolve authoritatively questions of law.

2. Saucier v. Katz, No. 99-1977. The case presented two questions: (1) whether, in a case alleging the use of constitutionally excessive force, the test for qualified immunity and the reasonableness test under the Fourth Amendment are identical, such that a finding of unreasonable force under the Fourth Amendment necessarily precludes qualified immunity; and (2) whether the court of appeals erred in concluding that petitioner's use of force to detain respondent, which consisted of carrying respondent from the crowd to a waiting van and pushing him inside without injuring him, so clearly exceeded the amount of force permitted by the Fourth Amendment as to warrant denial of qualified immunity. We contended that the Fourth Amendment reasonableness test and the qualified immunity test are distinct and that the minimal use of force that occurred here as petitioner was guarding then Vice-President Gore was not so clearly unlawful as to deprive the officer of qualified immunity.

In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court agreed with our position. The Court held that the test for reasonableness of force under the Fourth Amendment, which requires analysis of the objective reasonableness of an officer's action, is distinct from the test for qualified immunity, which includes the further dimension of whether the law put an officer on notice that a particular amount of force used in particular circumstances was excessive. Applying that principle, the Court held that the officer was entitled to summary judgment because there was no clearly established rule prohibiting the officer from acting as he did.

Justice Ginsburg wrote an opinion concurring in the judgment, which Justices Stevens and Breyer joined. She would have held that in the context of an excessive force claim there is no distinction between the test for reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment and the test for qualified immunity. According to Justice Ginsburg, the proper test for the qualified immunity claim here is whether a reasonable officer, identically situated, would have believed that the force employed was lawful.

Justice Souter wrote an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Justice Souter agreed with the Court's determination that the qualified immunity test is distinct from the test governing the underlying merits, but would have remanded the case for application of the qualified immunity standard.

3. Idaho v. United States, No. 00-189. The case presented the question whether the United States holds title, in trust for the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, to lands underlying portions of Coeur d'Alene Lake and the St. Joe River that are within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. Because the State of Idaho conceded that the 1873 Executive Order establishing the Coeur D'Alene Indian Reservation included submerged lands in the Reservation, under United States v. Alaska, 521 U.S. 1 (1997), the only remaining question was whether, at the time of Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress clearly intended to defeat Idaho's title to these submerged lands. We contended that Congress did so intend.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court agreed with our position. The Court concluded that the historical record indicated that, prior to Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress knew that the reservation included submerged lands and had authorized modification of the Reservation solely by agreement with the Tribe. The Court considered this evidence, together with evidence from the period just after statehood suggesting that Congress did not understand statehood to have affected the submerged lands in question, sufficient to show that Congress intended to defeat Idaho's title to the submerged lands.

Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas, dissented. The dissenters took the view that the evidence relied on by the majority showed at best only that at the time of Idaho statehood, the executive branch intended the submerged lands in question to remain in trust for the Tribe, and that the existence of such an intent on the part of the executive branch was insufficient to defeat Idaho's title to the lands.

B. Denial of Stay of Execution

On June 18, the Court denied without comment the application for a stay of execution and the petition for habeas corpus in In Re Juan Raul Garza, Nos. A-1072 & 00-10456.

Also on June 18, the Court denied without comment the application for a stay of execution and the petition for certiorari in Garza v. Lappin, Nos. A-11-1 and 00-10631.

C. Grant of Certiorari

On June 18, the Court granted a writ of certiorari in Festo Corp. v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushik Co., No. 00-1543. The questions presented are (1) whether every claim-narrowing amendment designed to comply with a provision of the Patent-Act -- including those provisions not related to prior art -- automatically creates prosecution history estoppel regardless of the reason for the amendment; and (2) whether a finding of prosecution history estoppel completely bars application of the doctrine of equivalents. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

D. Invitation

On June 18, the Court invited the Solicitor General to file a brief expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Echazabal, No. 00-1406. The Americans with Disabilities Act provides that employers may require as a qualification for a job that the employee not pose a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals in the workplace. The court of appeals ruled that the "direct threat" defense cannot be used to argue that the accommodation would pose a direct threat to the disabled individual, but can only be used when an accommodation poses a direct threat to others in the workplace. The questions presented is whether a person who is unable to carry out essential functions of a job without incurring a direct threat to the person's own health or life is a qualified individual for that job within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

II. Supreme Court Filings

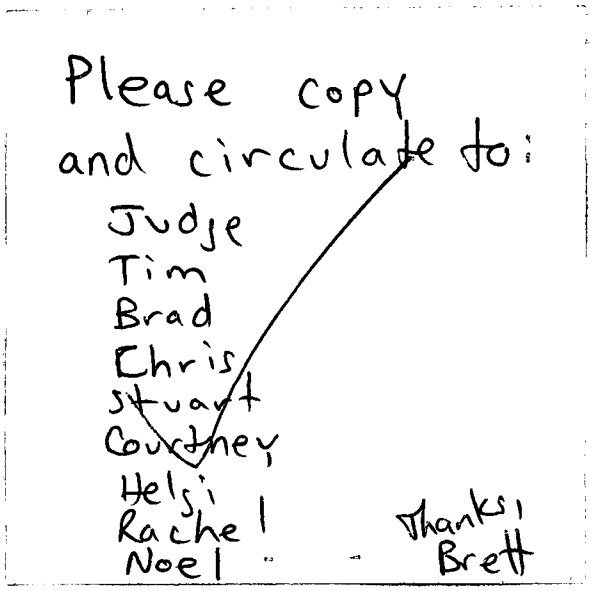
A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On June 21, the Department will file a brief for petitioner in Halter v. Sigmon Coal Dist., No. 00-1307. The case involves the United Mine Workers of America Combined Benefit Fund, which finances health care benefits for retired miners and their dependents who worked under collective bargaining agreements that promised lifetime health care benefits. The Coal Act, 26 U.S.C. 9701 et. seq., directs the Commissioner of Social Security to assign responsibility for beneficiaries of the Fund to the "signatory operator" or "related person" of the operator that formerly employed them, if that signatory operator (or related person) is still "in business." 26 U.S.C. 9706(a). The question presented is whether the Coal Act permits the Commissioner to assign beneficiaries to the successor in interest of a signatory operator that is no longer in business.

2. On June 21, the Department will file a brief for respondent in Chickasaw Nation v. United States, No. 00-507. The case presents the question whether Section 20(d) of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, 25 U.S.C. § 2719(d), exempts Native American Tribes from the wagering excise and occupational taxes imposed under the Internal Revenue Code.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales



CC: All Attorneys in Counsel's Office

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: May 13, 2001

RE: Supreme Court Update

Attached please find the latest Supreme Court update from the Acting Solicitor General.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

May 9, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decision

A. Decision on the Merits

1. On April 30, 2001, the Court decided C & L Enterprises, Inc. v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, No. 00-292, which presented the question whether and under what circumstances an Indian Tribe's agreement to arbitrate disputes arising out of a standard form contract entered into with a private party, and to have judgment entered upon the final arbitration award "in any court having jurisdiction thereof," constitutes a valid waiver of the Tribe's sovereign immunity from suit in state court. As amicus curiae, we argued that an arbitration clause in a standard form contract does not constitute an express and unequivocal consent to suit in state court, at least where the agreement is ambiguous regarding whether an enforcement action can be brought in tribal courts.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Ginsburg, the Court reversed, rejecting our arguments. Because the contract required resolution of all contract-related disputes by binding arbitration, whose ensuing awards may be reduced to judgment "in accordance with applicable law in any court having jurisdiction thereof," "[t]he contract's choice-of-law clause makes it plain enough that a 'court having jurisdiction' to enforce the award in question is the Oklahoma state court in which C & L filed suit." The Court rejected the Tribe's argument that an arbitration clause "is not a waiver of immunity from suit," and noted that the contract was unambiguous and had been proposed and prepared by the Tribe itself.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On May 7, we filed a brief for the petitioner in Chao v. Mallard Bay Drilling, Inc., No. 00-927. The case presents the question whether the United States Coast Guard has "exercise[d] statutory authority to prescribe or enforce standards or regulations affecting occupational safety or health" concerning the "working conditions of employees" (29 U.S.C. 653(b)(1)) on "uninspected vessels" (46 U.S.C. 2101(43)) so as to displace application of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, 29 U.S.C. 651 et seq. ("OSH Act"). We contend that the Fifth Circuit erred in concluding that the Coast Guard has exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of working conditions of seamen so as to preclude the application of the OSH Act to a fatal accident aboard a Mallard drilling barge.

We argue that the Fifth Circuit's holding rests on an interpretation of Section 4(b)(1) of the OSH Act (29 U.S.C. 653(b)(1)) that is inconsistent with its text, the purpose of the Act, the history surrounding the enactment of the Act, and the long-standing interpretation of the Act by the Secretary of Labor. Contrary to the view of the Fifth Circuit, Section 4(b)(1) does not create industry-wide exemptions from the OSH Act based on limited exercises of regulatory authority by other federal agencies. Rather, the Act is displaced only when another agency actually has regulated the working conditions at issue or has articulated a policy that the working conditions should not be regulated. Because the Coast Guard has done neither, the OSH Act continues to apply.

2. We anticipate filing on May 10 a brief for petitioner in United States v. Vonn, No. 00-973. The questions presented are: (1) whether a district court's failure to advise a counseled defendant at his guilty plea hearing that he has the right to the assistance of counsel at trial, as required by Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(c)(3), is subject to plain-error, rather than harmless-error, review on appeal when the defendant fails to preserve the claim of error in the district court; and (2) whether, in determining if a defendant's substantial rights were affected by a district court's deviation from the requirements of Rule 11(c)(3), the court of appeals may review only the transcript of the guilty plea colloquy, or whether it may also consider other parts of the official record.

NEXT WEEK

On May 14, the Court has a non-argument session at which opinions are expected to be released.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 10

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 6/19/2001 TIME: 4:20 pm INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

June 19, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Theodore B. Olson
Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

On June 11, the Court decided five cases in which the Department participated:

1. Nguyen v. INS, No. 99-2071. The case involved 8 U.S.C. 1409, which governs the acquisition of United States citizenship by persons born to one United States citizen parent and one noncitizen parent when the parents are unmarried and the child is born outside of the United States. The statute provides that a child born out of wedlock acquires at birth the nationality of a citizen mother, but requires legitimization, a declaration of paternity under oath by the father, or a court order of paternity when the father is the citizen parent. The case presented the question whether this statutory distinction is consistent with the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause. The Department had argued that Section 1409 survives equal protection scrutiny because the statue reflects careful congressional consideration of the relationships between unwed citizen parents and their children born abroad and draws reasonable distinctions between unmarried citizen mothers and unwed citizen fathers. In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court agreed with our position. The Court held that the requirements on unmarried citizen fathers are justified by two important governmental interests: assuring that a biological parent-child relationship exists and ensuring that the child and citizen parent have some demonstrated opportunity to develop a relationship that consists of meaningful ties between child and citizen parent and, in turn, the United States. The Court also held that the means Congress chose substantially relate to these interests.

Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, concurred, writing separately to reiterate his view that the Court lacks power to confer citizenship on a basis other than that prescribed by Congress and thus, even if the Court had found the statute unconstitutional, the Court could not confer citizenship on petitioner.

Justice O'Connor, joined by Justices Souter, Ginsburg and Breyer, dissented. The dissenters argued that the "majority opinion represents far less than the rigorous application of heightened scrutiny" for sex-based classifications that the Court's "precedents require." The dissenters emphasized that sex-neutral alternatives could have accomplished the governmental goals.

2. Kyllo v. United States, No. 99-8508. At issue was whether the use of a thermal imaging device to record the amount of heat emanating from a house constitutes a search within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. The Department had argued that use of the device from the street outside a house is not a search because, inter alia, there is no objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the heat emanating from one's home. The Court, in an opinion by Justice Scalia, held that use of a thermal imaging device that is not in general public use, to explore details of a private home that would previously have been unknowable without physical intrusion, constitutes a Fourth Amendment search. The Court rejected the Department's reliance on the fact that the thermal imager detected "only heat radiating from the exterior surface of the house" on the grounds that the Court had previously held that use of eavesdropping devices that "picked up only sound waves that reached the exterior of the phone booth" constituted a search and that such a distinction "would leave the homeowner at the mercy of advancing technology."

Justice Stevens, joined by the Chief Justice, Justice O'Connor, and Justice Kennedy, dissented. The dissenters emphasized that the thermal imaging device did not reveal any information about the interior of the home and criticized the holding for creating an overbroad rule with "uncertain" contours.

3. Alabama v. Bozeman, No. 00-492. The case presented the question whether a one-day transfer of a federal prisoner to state custody for purposes of arraignment, without completing the trial on the state charges, violates Article IV(e) of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers (IAD) and requires dismissal of the state charges. While Bozeman was serving time in federal prison, Covington County, Alabama officials obtained custody of Bozeman, pursuant to the IAD, for his one-day arraignment on state criminal charges. Bozeman was returned to federal prison the next day. The Supreme Court of Alabama later dismissed the state charges against Bozeman under Article IV(e) of the IAD, which provides that if "trial is not had on any indictment, information or complaint contemplated hereby prior to the prisoner's being returned to the original place of imprisonment . . . such indictment, information or complaint shall not be of further force or effect, and the court shall enter an order dismissing the same with prejudice." The Department had contended as amicus curiae that the Supreme Court of Alabama erred in dismissing based on a technical and wholly harmless defect. In a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court held that the literal language of Article IV(e) provides an absolute bar on any further criminal proceedings when a defendant is returned to the original place of imprisonment before trial.

4. Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, No. 00-549. The case involved the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), which makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate . . . in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. 1962(c). The question presented was whether a claim may be maintained under this provision when the alleged RICO "enterprise" is a corporation and the "person" charged with the violation is the sole owner, and an employee, of the corporation. The Department argued as amicus curiae that a RICO claim may be maintained in that situation, because although the "person" charged must be distinct from the "enterprise" under Section 1962(c), a corporate employee is sufficiently distinct from the corporation to satisfy the distinctness requirement. In a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court agreed with our position and held that Section 1962(c) applies when a corporate employee unlawfully conducts the affairs of the corporation of which he is the sole owner – whether he conducts those affairs within the scope, or beyond the scope, of corporate activity. The Court stated that RICO's plain language and the statute's underlying purposes support the view that the formal legal distinction that incorporation creates between "person" and "enterprise" satisfies the distinct entity requirement.

5. Kansas v. Colorado, No. 105 (original). The State of Kansas brought this original action to enforce its rights under the Arkansas River Compact. In an earlier decision, the Supreme Court accepted the Special Master's recommendation that Colorado be held liable for violations of the Compact resulting from post-Compact well pumping in Colorado. After further proceedings, the Master issued a Report recommending that Kansas be awarded money damages for losses that occurred as a result of the violations, including aggregate losses to past and future Kansas water users, and that prejudgement interest be awarded on damages from 1969 to the present. Both Kansas and Colorado filed exceptions to the recommended remedy. The Department contended that the exceptions should be overruled because the recommended remedy fell within the Court's broad discretion to fashion a fair and equitable remedy for Colorado's violations of the Compact.

In an opinion by Justice Stevens, the Court overruled all but one of the exceptions and remanded the case to the Special Master for preparation of a final judgment. The Court rejected Colorado's arguments that the recommended damages award violated the Eleventh Amendment and that the unliquidated nature of Kansas's money damages barred an award of prejudgment interest. The Court held that the Special Master properly determined the appropriate rate for the prejudgment interest award, but sustained Colorado's exception that prejudgment interest should begin accruing in 1985, when Kansas filed its complaint, rather than 1969, when Colorado knew or should have known that it was violating the Compact. And the Court held that the Special Master properly determined the value of the crop losses attributable to the Compact violations.

Justice O'Connor, joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas, filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Justice O'Connor argued that the award of prejudgment interest was improper on the ground that Kansas and Colorado could not have intended liability for prejudgment interest when they entered into the Compact because at that time prejudgment interest was unavailable on claims for unliquidated or unascertainable damages.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief of the Merits

1. The Department filed on June 15 a brief as amicus curiae supporting respondent in J.E.M. Supply v. Pioneer Hi-Bred Intl., No. 99-1996. The question presented is whether patents issued under 35 U.S.C. 101 granting the right to exclude others from sexually reproducing plants or plant varieties, or from selling or using plants or plant varieties reproduced by means of sexual reproduction (by seed), are invalid because the Plant Variety Protection Act of 1970, 7 U.S.C. 2321, et seq., and the Plant Patent Act of 1930, 35 U.S.C. 161-164, are the exclusive means of obtaining a federal statutory right to exclude others from reproducing, selling, or using plants or plant varieties. In Diamond v. Chakrabarty, 447 U.S. 303, 313 (1980), the Court held with respect to sexually reproduced plants that "[t]here is nothing in [the PVPA's] language or history to suggest that" the law was enacted because Section 101 precluded patenting of living things. We contend that there is no reason to overrule Chakrabarty's construction of Section 101 and revisit Chakrabarty's reasoning concerning the relationship between Section 101 and the Plant Variety Protection Act.

B. Petition for Certiorari

On June 11, the Department filed an acquiescence to the petition for certiorari in Young v. United States, No. 00-1567. The question presented is whether the three-year lookback period for determining the priority and nondischargeability of taxes pursuant to Sections 507(a)(8)(A)(i) and 523(a)(1)(A) of the Bankruptcy Code is tolled during the pendency of a debtor's prior bankruptcy case. The courts of appeals are in direct conflict on the question, and thus we do not oppose the granting of the petition in this case. We note in our petition, however, that the House and Senate have passed bills that would amend the Bankruptcy Code to resolve this question by making clear that the three-year lookback provision of the Code is tolled and extended for any period in which the automatic stay was in effect in a prior bankruptcy case.

C. Other

1. On June 14, the Department filed a Brief in Opposition to an Application for a Stay of Execution and Original Writ of Habeas Corpus in In Re Juan Raul Garza, Nos. A-1072 & 00-10456. The questions presented are (1) whether petitioner has satisfied the requirements for a stay of execution, as described in Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880 (1983); (2) whether petitioner's claim under Simmons v. South Carolina, 512 U.S. 154 (1994), and Shafer v. South Carolina, 121 S. Ct. 1263 (2001), satisfies the requirements for review of second or successive motions for collateral review

under 28 U.S.C. 2255, which inform the Court's consideration of an original habeas petition; (3) whether Section 2255 is inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of petitioner's detention under Simmons and Shafer; and (4) whether denial of relief on petitioner's claim under Simmons and Shafer would constitute an unconstitutional suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner has previously exhausted a direct appeal and a first collateral review of his convictions and death sentence under Section 2255. We contend that petitioner cannot make the extraordinary showing required for a stay of execution or for habeas relief, because his Simmons claim -- that his sentencing jury should have been instructed that the only alternative to a death sentence was life imprisonment without the possibility of release -- was correctly rejected on direct review, and he is procedurally barred from relitigating the claim now. The Court denied the application and petition without comment on June 18.

2. On June 16, the Department filed a Brief in Opposition to an Application for a Stay of Execution and Petition for Certiorari in Garza v. Lappin, Nos. A-11-1 and 00-10631. The questions presented are (1) whether petitioner has satisfied the requirements for a stay of execution, as described in Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880 (1983); and (2) whether petitioner is entitled to have his death sentence vacated based on Report No. 52/01 of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which concluded that his sentences violate his rights under the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man (American Declaration) because evidence was introduced at the capital punishment phase of unadjudicated murders committed in Mexico, and that his execution would violate the Charter of the Organization of American States and the American Declaration. We contend that petitioner's application for a stay and petition for certiorari should be denied because the Commission does not have the power to issue binding orders on member states and the Commission's recommendation in this case does not give rise to a judicially enforceable right that may be invoked in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Thus petitioner cannot satisfy the requirements for a stay of execution. The Court denied the application and petition without comment on June 18.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 18, the Court decided three cases in which the Department participated:

1. United States v. Mead, No. 99-1434. The case presented the questions whether judicial deference is owed to the tariff classification rulings issued by the Customs Service under 19 U.S.C. 1502(a), and whether the Customs Service reasonably interpreted the statutory phrase "diaries, notebooks and address books, bound" to include the spiral-bound and ring-bound day planners imported by respondent. We contended that ordinary Chevron deference does apply to classification rulings of the Customs Service and that under the proper standard of deference, the Customs Service classification ruling in this case should have been affirmed.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court held that the customs ruling had no claim to judicial deference under Chevron because there was no indication in the statute that Congress intended tariff rulings to have the force of law. The Court held that "administrative implementation of a particular statutory provision qualifies for Chevron deference when it appears that Congress delegated authority to the agency generally to make rules carrying the force of law, and that the agency interpretation claiming deference was promulgated in the exercise of that authority." The Court explained that an agency may show that Congress has delegated such authority in a variety of ways, such as a grant of authority to engage in adjudication or notice-and-comment rulemaking, and that there will sometimes be reason for Chevron deference when no such administrative formality was required or afforded, if there is some other indication of a comparable congressional intent. The customs ruling here, however, failed to qualify for Chevron deference. Finally, the Court concluded that although the ruling in this case was not entitled to Chevron deference, it might still be entitled to some lesser form of deference under Skidmore v. Swift & Co., and remanded to the court of appeals for further action.

Justice Scalia dissented. He characterized the majority opinion as abandoning the Chevron doctrine for a presumption that agency discretion does not exist unless a statute expressly or impliedly provides for it, and rejected that view. Justice Scalia contended that there is no necessary connection between the formality of agency procedures and the power of the agency administering the procedure to resolve authoritatively questions of law.

2. Saucier v. Katz, No. 99-1977. The case presented two questions: (1) whether, in a case alleging the use of constitutionally excessive force, the test for qualified immunity and the reasonableness test under the Fourth Amendment are identical, such that a finding of unreasonable force under the Fourth Amendment necessarily precludes qualified immunity; and (2) whether the court of appeals erred in concluding that petitioner's use of force to detain respondent, which consisted of carrying respondent from the crowd to a waiting van and pushing him inside without injuring him, so clearly exceeded the amount of force permitted by the Fourth Amendment as to warrant denial of qualified immunity. We contended that the Fourth Amendment reasonableness test and the qualified immunity test are distinct and that the minimal use of force that occurred here as petitioner was guarding then Vice-President Gore was not so clearly unlawful as to deprive the officer of qualified immunity.

In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the Court agreed with our position. The Court held that the test for reasonableness of force under the Fourth Amendment, which requires analysis of the objective reasonableness of an officer's action, is distinct from the test for qualified immunity, which includes the further dimension of whether the law put an officer on notice that a particular amount of force used in particular circumstances was excessive. Applying that principle, the Court held that the officer was entitled to summary judgment because there was no clearly established rule prohibiting the officer from acting as he did.

Justice Ginsburg wrote an opinion concurring in the judgment, which Justices Stevens and Breyer joined. She would have held that in the context of an excessive force claim there is no distinction between the test for reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment and the test for qualified immunity. According to Justice Ginsburg, the proper test for the qualified immunity claim here is whether a reasonable officer, identically situated, would have believed that the force employed was lawful.

Justice Souter wrote an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Justice Souter agreed with the Court's determination that the qualified immunity test is distinct from the test governing the underlying merits, but would have remanded the case for application of the qualified immunity standard.

3. Idaho v. United States, No. 00-189. The case presented the question whether the United States holds title, in trust for the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, to lands underlying portions of Coeur d'Alene Lake and the St. Joe River that are within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. Because the State of Idaho conceded that the 1873 Executive Order establishing the Coeur D'Alene Indian Reservation included submerged lands in the Reservation, under United States v. Alaska, 521 U.S. 1 (1997), the only remaining question was whether, at the time of Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress clearly intended to defeat Idaho's title to these submerged lands. We contended that Congress did so intend.

In an opinion by Justice Souter, the Court agreed with our position. The Court concluded that the historical record indicated that, prior to Idaho's admission to the Union, Congress knew that the reservation included submerged lands and had authorized modification of the Reservation solely by agreement with the Tribe. The Court considered this evidence, together with evidence from the period just after statehood suggesting that Congress did not understand statehood to have affected the submerged lands in question, sufficient to show that Congress intended to defeat Idaho's title to the submerged lands.

Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas, dissented. The dissenters took the view that the evidence relied on by the majority showed at best only that at the time of Idaho statehood, the executive branch intended the submerged lands in question to remain in trust for the Tribe, and that the existence of such an intent on the part of the executive branch was insufficient to defeat Idaho's title to the lands.

B. Denial of Stay of Execution

On June 18, the Court denied without comment the application for a stay of execution and the petition for habeas corpus in In Re Juan Raul Garza, Nos. A-1072 & 00-10456.

Also on June 18, the Court denied without comment the application for a stay of execution and the petition for certiorari in Garza v. Lappin, Nos. A-11-1 and 00-10631.

C. Grant of Certiorari

On June 18, the Court granted a writ of certiorari in Festo Corp. v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushik Co., No. 00-1543. The questions presented are (1) whether every claim-narrowing amendment designed to comply with a provision of the Patent-Act -- including those provisions not related to prior art -- automatically creates prosecution history estoppel regardless of the reason for the amendment; and (2) whether a finding of prosecution history estoppel completely bars application of the doctrine of equivalents. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

D. Invitation

On June 18, the Court invited the Solicitor General to file a brief expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Echazabal, No. 00-1406. The Americans with Disabilities Act provides that employers may require as a qualification for a job that the employee not pose a direct threat to the health or safety of other individuals in the workplace. The court of appeals ruled that the "direct threat" defense cannot be used to argue that the accommodation would pose a direct threat to the disabled individual, but can only be used when an accommodation poses a direct threat to others in the workplace. The questions presented is whether a person who is unable to carry out essential functions of a job without incurring a direct threat to the person's own health or life is a qualified individual for that job within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On June 21, the Department will file a brief for petitioner in Halter v. Sigmon Coal Dist., No. 00-1307. The case involves the United Mine Workers of America Combined Benefit Fund, which finances health care benefits for retired miners and their dependents who worked under collective bargaining agreements that promised lifetime health care benefits. The Coal Act, 26 U.S.C. 9701 et. seq., directs the Commissioner of Social Security to assign responsibility for beneficiaries of the Fund to the "signatory operator" or "related person" of the operator that formerly employed them, if that signatory operator (or related person) is still "in business." 26 U.S.C. 9706(a). The question presented is whether the Coal Act permits the Commissioner to assign beneficiaries to the successor in interest of a signatory operator that is no longer in business.

2. On June 21, the Department will file a brief for respondent in Chickasaw Nation v. United States, No. 00-507. The case presents the question whether Section 20(d) of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, 25 U.S.C. § 2719(d), exempts Native American Tribes from the wagering excise and occupational taxes imposed under the Internal Revenue Code.

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

On June 25, the Court will hold a non-argument session at which opinions and orders are expected to be issued.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM:

ADDRESS:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 14

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 6/6/2001 TIME: 12:55pm INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

June 6, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On May 29, the Court decided the following six cases in which the government participated:

1. PGA Tour, Inc. v. Martin, No. 00-24. This case presented the question whether Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq., regulates standards established for competitors (here, professional golfers) in athletic competitions held at places of public accommodation, and, if so, whether Title III requires professional sports organizations to grant selective waivers of their substantive rules of athletic competition in order to accommodate disabled competitors such as Martin, a professional golfer who has a circulatory disorder in his right leg, making it medically necessary for him to use a golf cart rather than walk the golf course. As amicus curiae, the Department argued that petitioner's operation of golf courses during tournaments falls squarely within Title III's prohibition on discrimination in places of public accommodation and that the courts below appropriately considered the relevant factors in concluding that a waiver of the PGA Tour's walking rule would not fundamentally alter its competitions, which are intended to measure shot-making skills rather than walking endurance. In an opinion written by Justice Stevens, the Court agreed with the Department's arguments and held that (1) the PGA Tour is a "public accommodation" during its tours and qualifying rounds, and is therefore subject to Title III of the ADA, and (2) allowing Martin to use a golf cart would neither "alter forth a more detailed analysis of the meaning of "education records" under FERPA and the application of that term and of FERPA not only to the particular practice at issue in this case, but also to a variety of other practices. Under the circumstances, the Department believes that it would be premature for the Court to grant review in this case to consider the meaning of "education records" under FERPA.

REV_00260973

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 4, the Court decided two cases in which the Department participated:

1. Pollard v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., No. 00-763. The case presents the question whether an award of front pay in a Title VII action is subject to the cap on compensatory and punitive damages established by the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. 1981a(b)(3). The Department argued that it is not, and the Court unanimously agreed. Petitioner sued respondent, her former employer, alleging that she had been subjected to a hostile work environment based on her sex, in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The district court awarded her, as relevant here, $300,000 in compensatory damages, the maximum permitted under 42 U.S.C. 1981a(b)(3). The district court observed that the award was insufficient to compensate petitioner but was bound by an earlier Sixth Circuit holding that front pay was subject to the damages cap of 1981a(b)(3). The Sixth Circuit affirmed. The Supreme Court reversed in a unanimous opinion authored by Justice Thomas (Justice O'Connor did not participate), holding that front pay is not an element of compensatory damages subject to the statutory cap. Rather, front pay is a form of equitable relief--like injunctions, reinstatement, backpay, lost benefits, and attorney's fees--that was available under Section 2000e-5(g) prior to the 1991 amendments. Those amendments expanded the available remedies to include compensatory damages for future pecuniary losses, emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, mental anguish, loss of enjoyment of life, and other nonpecuniary losses, and punitive damages. The 1991 amendments also capped these compensatory and punitive damages, but excluded from the definition of compensatory damages "any . . . type of relief authorized under section [2000e-5(g)]." Because the 1991 Act did not amend Section 2000e-5(g), which at the time had been consistently interpreted as authorizing awards of front pay, the Court held that the 1991 Act's cap on damages does not limit a court's ability to award equitable relief, including front pay, under Section 2000e-5(g).

2. United Dominion Indus. v. United States, No. 00-157. This case involves the tax treatment of product liability losses (PLL), which a corporation may carry back a maximum of ten years from the loss year and use as a deduction in the carryback year pursuant to 26 U.S.C. 172(b). PLL occurs when a taxpayer has a net operating loss (NOL) for the year and the NOL is attributable in whole or in part to deductions for product liability expenses. The question presented is whether the availability of the PLL carryover for affiliated entities that file a consolidated return is to be determined by aggregating the income and expenses of the consolidated entities or, instead, separately calculating the income and expense of each entity. The Department argued that the court of appeals correctly applied Treasury Regulations in ruling that the proper method is to determine PLL separately for each entity and, therefore, that the product liability expenses of an entity with positive income may not be included in the PLL carryback for the consolidated group.

In an opinion authored by Justice Souter, the Court rejected the Department's position and held that PLL must be calculated on a consolidated, single-entity basis. The tax code and regulations governing affiliated groups of corporations filing consolidated returns provide only one definition of NOL which applies to the consolidated entity. Because the exclusive definition of NOL is consolidated NOL, comparable tax treatment of PLL for the consolidated and the conventional taxpayer can be achieved only if product liability expenses are compared with the loss amount at the consolidated level after consolidated NOL has been determined. Justice Thomas filed a concurring opinion and Justice Stevens dissented.

B. Dismissal of Certiorari

1. On June 4, the Court dismissed the writ of certiorari in Florida v. Thomas, No. 00-391 for lack of jurisdiction. The Florida Supreme Court held below that a warrantless search of a vehicle incident to the driver's arrest was not valid where the police officer's first contact with the driver occurred after the driver had voluntarily exited the vehicle, unless there was some threat to officer safety or of destruction of evidence. The question presented was whether this holding conflicts with New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454 (1981), in which the Supreme Court held that "when a policeman has made a lawful custodial arrest of the occupant of an automobile, he may, as a contemporaneous incident of that arrest, search the passenger compartment of that automobile." As amicus curiae supporting petitioner, the Department contended that the Florida Supreme Court's limitation of Belton to circumstances in which the arrestee exits a vehicle at the direction of law enforcement officers finds no support in precedent or principle and should be rejected. The Court held, however, that because the Florida Supreme Court had remanded for a determination whether the challenged search was nonetheless lawful under Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752 (1969), the decision below is not a final judgment and the Supreme Court thus lacks jurisdiction to decide the question on which certiorari was granted.

C. Grant of Certiorari

1. On June 4, the Court granted the United States' petition for a writ of certiorari in United States v. Arvizu, No. 00-1519. The questions presented are (1) whether the court of appeals erroneously departed from the totality of the circumstances test that governs reasonable suspicion determinations under the Fourth Amendment by holding that particular facts observed by a law enforcement officer were entitled to no weight and could not be considered as a matter of law; and (2) whether, under the totality of the circumstances test, the Border Patrol agent in this case had reasonable suspicion that justified a stop of a vehicle near the Mexican border. In the petition for a writ of certiorari, the Department contended that the Ninth Circuit's decision in this case departed fundamentally from the Supreme Court's totality-of-the-circumstances test for determining whether reasonable suspicion exists. By declaring as a matter of law that law enforcement officers may not consider certain facts when forming a suspicion of illegal activity, the court of appeals created a direct conflict with decisions of the Supreme Court and other courts of appeals and incorrectly excluded critical evidence in this case.

D. Denial of Certiorari

1. On June 4, the Court denied the United States' petition for a writ of certiorari in United States v. Cyprus Amax Coal Co., et al., No. 00-360. The case presented the questions whether a taxpayer may commence an action to recover an unconstitutional tax without filing a timely claim for refund as required by Section 7422(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. 7422(a), and whether such an action is subject to the specific statute of limitations in 26 U.S.C. 6511(a) that applies, by its terms, to any suit to recover "any tax imposed by this title," or is instead subject only to the general statute of limitations in 28 U.S.C. 2401(a) that applies to "every civil action commenced against the United States."

E. Invitation

1. On June 4, the Supreme Court invited the Solicitor General to file a response to the petition for rehearing of the order denying a writ of certiorari in Nichols v. United States, No. 00-8900. Petitioner, currently serving a life sentence for his involvement in the Oklahoma City bombing, seeks a new trial alleging that he was prejudiced by the government's improper withholding of potentially exculpatory evidence in FBI files. His original petition for a writ of certiorari was denied, and he now seeks rehearing in light of the recent discovery of several thousand documents related to the bombing investigation that were not turned over to defense counsel during discovery.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On June 8, the Department expects to file a brief for respondents in Verizon Communications Inc. v. FCC, No. 00-511. The case involves challenges to two important aspects of the FCC's regulations implementing the Telecommunications Act of 1996: pricing methodology and combinations rules. On remand from the Supreme Court, see AT&T v. Iowa Utilities Board, 525 U.S. 366 (1999), the Eighth Circuit invalidated the key regulation defining the FCC's forward-looking cost methodology, known as "total element long-run incremental cost" or TELRIC, used by state public utility commissions to determine the amount incumbent local exchange carriers (ILECs) can recover from new entrants for the provision of interconnection and access to network elements. The court of appeals, while recognizing the validity of a forward-looking cost methodology, rejected the Commission's determination that cost should be measured based on the use of the most efficient telecommunications technology currently available and the lowest cost network configuration. The Court will also consider whether the court of appeals erred in holding that neither the Takings Clause nor the Telecommunications Act of 1996 requires incorporation of an ILEC's historical costs in the rates it charges new entrants. In addition, the Court will decide the validity of FCC rules requiring that ILECs make available their own unbundled network elements combined in new ways or in combination with elements provided by requesting carriers.

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

On June 11, the Court will hold a non-argument session at which opinions and orders are expected to be issued.

. . . an essential aspect of the game of golf" nor "fundamentally alter the character of the competition" by granting Martin an advantage over other golfers. In dissent, Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, took the view that the PGA Tour is not a public accommodation because professional golfers could not be considered "customers" of the tour, and that the majority's analysis that allowing Martin to ride in a court would not fundamentally alter the nature of PGA Tour golf was incoherent.

2. Atkinson Trading Co. v. Shirley, No. 00-454. This case presented the question whether the Navajo Nation may impose a hotel occupancy tax on non-Indian overnight guests at the Trading Post operated by petitioner on lands petitioner owns in fee, when the Trading Post is subject to federal regulations under the Indian Trader statutes, petitioner's land is wholly surrounded by Indian lands on the Navajo Reservation, and petitioner and its guests receive necessary government services from the Navajo Nation. As amicus curiae, the Department argued that the tax was valid. The Department noted that in Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544 (1981), the Court held that a Tribe may tax or regulate the activities of nonmembers on nonmember fee land within a reservation if the nonmembers enter "consensual relationships with the tribe or its members," or if their conduct "threatens or has some direct effect on the political integrity, the economic security, or the health or welfare of the tribe." The Department contended that the tax is valid under either Montana exception.

In a unanimous opinion written by Chief Justice Rehnquist, the Court rejected the Department's arguments. First, the Court found that the consensual relationship exception was inapplicable because that exception "requires that the tax or regulation imposed by the Indian tribe have a nexus to the consensual relationship itself," and that a "nonmember's consensual relationship in one area . . . does not trigger tribal civil authority in another." The Court also found the second exception to be inapplicable because that exception "grants Indian tribes nothing beyond what is necessary to protect tribal self-government or to control internal relations" (internal quotation marks omitted), and because the tax at issue here was not "necessary to vindicate the Navajo Nation's political integrity." Justice Souter concurred, joined by Justices Kennedy and Thomas, emphasizing the irrelevance of "whether the land at issue is fee land, or land owned by or held in trust for an Indian tribe."

3. New Hampshire v. Maine, No. 130 (original). New Hampshire brought this original action claiming that its boundary with Maine in Portsmouth Harbor extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore. The practical focus of the dispute is the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, a federal facility that is located on Seavey's Island in the harbor. Maine currently exercises jurisdiction over the Shipyard, so New Hampshire residents who work at the Shipyard are required to pay Maine income taxes. In response to the Court's invitation to express the Department's views, the Department contended that the doctrine of res judicata bars New Hampshire's claim because of a 1976 consent decree that New Hampshire and Maine agreed to in a prior original action in the Supreme Court concerning the lateral marine boundary in the vicinity of the current dispute. Because the 1976 consent decree set the boundary at the "Middle of the River," New Hampshire cannot now maintain that the boundary extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Ginsburg, the Court agreed with the Department's arguments, and held that the doctrine of judicial estoppel, which "generally prevents a party from prevailing in one phase of a case on an argument and then relying on a contradictory argument to prevail in another phase," bars New Hampshire from asserting that the Piscataqua River boundary runs along the Maine shore.

4. Booth v. Churner, No. 99-1964. This case presented the question whether the Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, which provides that a prisoner may not bring an action with respect to prison conditions "until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted," requires a prisoner suing prison officials for money damages to exhaust administrative remedies that address the problem identified by the inmate, but that do not permit the recovery of money damages. In McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 150 (1992), the Court construed a federal provision requiring inmates to exhaust such "plain, speedy, and effective remedies as are available" to excuse exhaustion when an inmate seeks only money damages and the prison's grievance procedure does not offer such relief. Congress subsequently amended the Act to tighten the exhaustion requirement by eliminating the qualifying terms "plain, speedy, and effective," removing the requirement that administrative remedies must meet certain minimum acceptable standards of fairness and effectiveness, and eliminating a court's discretion to excuse the plaintiff's failure to exhaust when exhaustion would not be appropriate or not in the interests of justice. The Department argued as amicus curiae that these changes reflect a judgment that inmates must exhaust all available remedies without regard to whether the administrative process provides for the recovery of the particular type of relief the inmate seeks.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Souter, the Court agreed with the Department's arguments. In addition to accepting the Department's argument based on the post-McCarthy amendments, the Court concluded that "the word 'exhausted' has a decidedly procedural emphasis," and "makes sense only in referring to the procedural means, not the particular relief ordered," thus rendering irrelevant the types of recovery afforded by the available administrative remedies.

5. NLRB v. Kentucky River Community Care, Inc., No. 98-1815. This case presented the questions (1) whether the National Labor Relations Board reasonably concluded that an employee's exercise of ordinary professional or technical judgment in directing less-skilled employees to deliver services in accordance with employer-specified standards does not constitute the exercise of "independent judgment" that makes an employee a "supervisor" under Section 2(11) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. 152(11); (2) whether the Board permissibly requires the party who alleges that an employee is excluded from the rights and protections afforded by the Act as a supervisor to bear the burden of proving the individual's supervisory status; and (3) whether, applying its interpretation of "independent judgment" and its allocation of the burden of proving supervisory status, the Board reasonably concluded that respondent's registered nurses are "employees" rather than supervisors and thus are entitled to the rights and protections afforded by the Act. The Department argued that the Board's determination that the registered nurses in this case are not supervisors and therefore covered by the Act is consistent with the statutory language, its purpose, and long-standing principles applied by the Board and the courts in administering the Act in a wide variety of employment contexts.

In a decision written by Justice Scalia, the Court agreed with the Department's argument regarding the burden of proof, but rejected the Department's argument regarding the merits of the case. The Court concluded that by eliminating "ordinary professional or technical judgment" from the category of "independent judgment," the Board "insert[ed] a startling categorical exclusion into statutory text that does not suggest its existence," and that such categorical exclusion "turns on factors that have nothing to do with the degree of discretion an employee exercises." The court found the Board's reference to "directly less-skilled employees" to be likewise devoid of "textual justification" and "conceptual justification." Justice Stevens, joined by Justices Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer, concurred in part and dissented in part. Justice Stevens agreed with the Court regarding the burden of proof, but would have deferred to the Board's interpretation of the statute, concluding that "since Congress has expressly provided that professional employees are entitled to the protection of the Act, there is good reason to resolve the ambiguities consistently with the Board's interpretation."

6. Buckhannon Board & Care Home v. West Virginia Dep't of Health and Human Resources, No. 99-1848. The case presented the question whether a civil rights plaintiff may recover attorney's fees as a "prevailing party" under 42 U.S.C. 1988 when, as a result of plaintiff's suit, the defendant voluntarily provides the plaintiff with the requested relief. Petitioners are operators of residential board and care homes who sought a declaratory judgment invalidating a West Virginia statute requiring that all residents of such homes be capable of "self-preservation," i.e., evacuating themselves from the building without assistance in case of fire; petitioners contended that the statute violates the Fair Housing Amendments Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act. While the action was pending, West Virginia amended the law to delete the challenged self-preservation requirement. Although the home did not obtain the change in state law through an enforceable judgment, consent decree, or settlement, it nevertheless claimed that it was entitled to attorney's fees as the prevailing party because it obtained the relief it sought through West Virginia's voluntary conduct in response to plaintiffs' lawsuit which brought to the State's attention the flaws in its law. As amicus curiae, the Department argued that the determination whether petitioners should be considered prevailing parties entitled to attorneys fees should be guided by three central considerations: (1) whether their complaint has legal merit; (2) whether they received actual relief that redressed their grievances; and (3) whether petitioners' lawsuit played a substantial role in inducing respondents to change their ways.

In an opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist, the Court rejected the Department's arguments. The Court concluded that "prevailing party" is a term of art meaning "one who has been awarded some relief by the court," and that it would be inconsistent with the meaning of "prevailing party" to "allow[] an award where there is no judicially sanctioned change in the legal relationship of the parties." The Court found no support for an opposite conclusion in the legislative history of Section 1988 and declined to "determine which way . . . various policy arguments cut," given what the Court viewed as "the clear meaning of 'prevailing party' in the fee-shifting statutes." Justice Scalia concurred, joined by Justice Thomas, and elaborated on the Court's discussion of the meaning of "prevailing party." Justice Ginsburg dissented, joined by Justices Stevens, Souter and Breyer. She rejected the Court's definition of "prevailing party" as unsupported by history or logic, and would have accepted the broader definition the Department urged, because such a definition "suitably advances Congress' endeavor to place private actions, in civil rights and other legislatively defined areas, securely within the federal law enforcement arsenal."

B. Grant of Certiorari

1. On May 29, the Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari in Thomas v. Chicago Park District, No. 00-1249, which involves a First Amendment challenge to a Chicago Park District ordinance that requires a permit for any event in a city park that involves more than 50 people or utilizes amplified sound. The Department has not participated in the case to date, and is determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

C. Invitation

1. On May 29, the Supreme Court invited the Solicitor General to file briefs expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in John Deere Insurance Co. v. Nueva, No. 00-1491. Federal law requires registered interstate motor carriers to file with the Department of Transportation a proof of insurance "sufficient to pay . . . for each final judgment against the registrant. 49 U.S.C. 13906(a)(1). Under the applicable federal regulations, insurance policies filed to satisfy this requirement incorporate, or are deemed to incorporate, the "Form MCS-90" endorsement, which is promulgated by regulation and provides, in relevant part, that an insurer who issues a policy to a registered motor carrier will pay "any final judgment recovered against the insured for public liability resulting from negligence in the operation, maintenance or use of motor vehicles . . . regardless of whether or not each motor vehicle is specifically described in the policy . . . ." The question presented is whether the Form MCS-90 endorsement attached to an insurance policy issued to a motor carrier requires the issuing insurer to pay a judgment entered against parties (in this case a different motor carrier and its driver) that are not entitled to coverage under the base policy, even where there is no "final judgment . . . against the insured" motor carrier named in the insurer's policy.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On May 30, the Department filed a brief for the United States and the Federal Trade Commission as amici curiae supporting respondent in TRW, Inc. v. Andrews, No. 00-1045, addressing the question whether the limitation period under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, which allows private damage actions for violations of the Act to be brought "within two years from the date on which the liability arises," begins to run at the time of an alleged violation, even if the potential plaintiff has no reason to know that she has been injured. The case involves petitioner's disclosures of allegedly inaccurate derogatory credit information concerning respondent after a third party had fraudulently used respondent's identifying information to obtain credit without respondent's knowledge. Although the district court entered partial summary judgment for petitioner because some of the challenged credit report disclosures had occurred more than two years prior to the lawsuit, the court of appeals reversed in part and remanded for trial on those claims because respondent had no reason to suspect the disclosures relating to the identity theft had occurred until after she obtained a copy of her credit reports in connection with the refinancing of her mortgage. The Department argues that the court of appeals correctly applied a "discovery rule" interpreting the Act's limitation provision to begin running when a party knows or should know that she has been injured.

2. On May 31, the Department filed a brief for respondents in New York v. FERC, No. 00-0568 and Enron Power Marketing, Inc. v. FERC, No. 00-0809. These consolidated cases present the questions (1) whether Section 201(b) of the Federal Power Act, which authorizes the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to regulate "the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce," gives FERC jurisdiction over the service of transmitting electricity from generators to retail customers, even if located in the same state, where the transmission service is "unbundled" from the State-regulated retail sale of electricity and the consumer can choose a preferred power supplier; (2) whether FERC properly determined that the FPA, which reserves to the States the regulation of local electricity distribution and retail sales, does not confer jurisdiction to FERC to regulate retail transmission service that is sold together with electricity in a "bundled" transaction between a public utility and its retail customer where the customer cannot choose his power supplier. The Department argues that because electricity is commingled in interconnected power systems without regard to the location of its source or ultimate user, Congress's express grant of authority over interstate transmission allows FERC to regulate all electric transmissions over power systems that are connected to an interstate power grid. Because the Act leaves to the States the regulation of retail electricity sales but does not specify whether a bundled retail sale of electricity along with the associated transmission should be treated as a single retail transaction subject to state jurisdiction or, instead, as a transmission transaction subject to federal jurisdiction and a retail sale of energy subject to state regulation, the Department argues that FERC reasonably resolved the FPA's ambiguity by leaving such bundled retail sales to state jurisdiction.

B. Responses to Invitations

1. On May 30, the Department responded to the Court's invitation to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Ragsdale v. Wolverine Worldwide, Inc. No. 00-6029. The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA) provides that "an eligible employee shall be entitled to a total of 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period . . . because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee." 29 U.S.C. 2612(a)(1)(D). Department of Labor (DOL) regulations implementing these provisions, 29 C.F.R. 825 et seq., require employers "to designate leave, paid or unpaid, as FMLA-qualifying, and to give notice of the designation to the employee" in writing. Another regulation states that "[i]f an employee takes paid or unpaid leave and the employer does not designate the leave as FMLA leave, the leave taken does not count against an employee's FMLA entitlement."

Petitioner sued respondent, her former employer, after she exhausted her 30 weeks of employer-provided sick leave, none of which was designated as FMLA leave, and then was denied a request for an additional 12 weeks of FMLA leave. In the decision below, the Eighth Circuit affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment for respondent on the FMLA claim, holding that the applicable DOL regulation is invalid because it "convert[s] the statute's minimum of federally-mandated unpaid leave into an entitlement to an additional 12 weeks of leave unless the employer specifically and prospectively notifies the employee that she is using her FMLA leave." The Department argues that although the court of appeals erred in holding invalid a DOL regulation that is designed to ensure that employees covered by the FMLA are able to make informed choices concerning the exercise of their statutory rights, further review is unwarranted at this time because there is no squarely presented conflict with the decisions of other circuits and the anomalous factual circumstances involved in this case make it a less than optimal vehicle for resolution of the question presented.

2. On June 1, the Department responded to the Court's invitations to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Edelman v. Lynchburg College, No. 00-1072. In implementing Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the EEOC promulgated a regulation, 29 C.F.R. 1601.12(b), that allows a charge of employment discrimination filed with the Commission to be amended to cure "technical defects or omissions, including the failure to verify the charge," and states that such an amendment to verify a charge "will relate back to the date the charge was first received" by EEOC, even if the verification of the charge is made after the statutory limitation period for filing a charge. Petitioner sent an unsworn letter to the EEOC charging that he was denied tenure by respondent as a result of sex discrimination. After an interview with the EEOC, petitioner filed an EEOC Form 5 Charge of Discrimination with a verified signature, which was received by the EEOC thirteen days after the expiration of the applicable limitation period. Petitioner sued under state law and Title VII, and the district court granted respondent's motion to dismiss the Title VII claims on the ground that petitioner had failed to file a timely charge of discrimination. The Fourth Circuit affirmed, holding that the EEOC regulation permitting the verification of the discrimination charge to relate back to the date petitioner filed his unsworn letter is contrary to the statute and therefore invalid. The Department argues that the issue presented by this case--the validity of 29 C.F.R. 1601.12(b)--is sufficiently important to the enforcement of federal employment-discrimination law to warrant the Court's review. While Title VII requires that a charge be filed within a specified limitation period and that a charge be verified before EEOC can require the respondent to participate in its investigation, the statute does not require that the charge be verified during the statutory limitation period. Because the court of appeals' decision is erroneous and conflicts with the decisions of several other circuits, the Department urges the Court to grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

3. On June 1, the Department responded to the Court's invitations to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Wisconsin Dept. of Health and Family Services v. Blumer, No.

00-952. The federal government, through the Medicaid program, provides partial funding to the States for the provision of medical services to eligible needy persons. This case arises out of the Medicaid program's "spousal impoverishment" provisions, 42 U.S.C. 1396r-5 (1994 & Supp. IV 1998), which establish special rules for married couples where only one spouse is in a nursing home or other institution. These provisions govern the allocation of income and resources (i.e., assets) between the institutionalized spouse and the "community spouse" for purposes of determining Medicaid eligibility. The question presented is whether Wisconsin's "income first" requirement, Wis. Stat. Ann. § 49.455(8)(d) (West 1997), which treats income otherwise attributable to the institutionalized spouse as available to the community spouse to meet that spouse's minimum monthly maintenance needs, is consistent with the federal statute, 42 U.S.C. 1396r-5(e)(2)(C). The Wisconsin Court of Appeals invalidated the state law as inconsistent with the federal statute, which it interpreted as requiring a "resource first" rather than an "income first" methodology. While the federal Healthcare Financing Administration has issued interim rules allowing states to adopt either methodology, the agency is planning to begin promulgating final regulations addressing this issue within 90 days. In light of this imminent regulatory guidance, which might render review of this case unnecessary, the Department argues that the Court should defer review of this matter in this case.

4. On June 1, the Department responded to the Court's invitations to file briefs expressing the views of the United States in Montemayor v. Corporate Health Ins., Inc., and Rush Prudential HMO, Inc. v. Moran, Nos. 00-665 and 00-1021. The question presented in these cases is whether state laws providing for external independent review of managed care organizations' medical necessity decisions are preempted by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), 29 U.S.C. 1001 et seq. or by the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959, 5 U.S.C. 8901 et seq. These cases present separate challenges by health insurers and managed care companies to Texas and Illinois state laws providing binding independent external review of decisions made by health maintenance organizations (HMOs) or health insurers that particular health care services furnished or proposed to be furnished to an enrollee are not medically necessary. In Montemayor, the Fifth Circuit held that enforcement of the Texas independent review law is preempted by ERISA, while the Seventh Circuit held in Rush Prudential that a substantially similar Illinois law is not preempted and may be enforced. Despite this conflict and the importance of the issues involved, the Department argues that further review of the preemption question is not warranted at this time because Congress is in the process of addressing this issue through federal legislation. The Department argues that at this time, with Congress actively considering the various alternatives, it would be appropriate for the Court to defer to the possibility of a comprehensive legislative resolution of the important social policy issues bound up in the principal question presented in these cases.

5. On June 1, the Department responded to the Court's invitations to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Chubb & Son, Inc. v. Asiana Airlines, No. 00-720. The question presented is whether the United States and the Republic of Korea were in 1995 in a treaty relationship under the Warsaw Convention (The Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules Relating to International Transportation by Air, done at Warsaw Oct. 12, 1929, 49 Stat. 3000, 137 L.N.T.S. 11, reprinted in 49 U.S.C. 40105 note), which limits the liability of air carriers for personal injury, or damaged, lost, or delayed baggage or cargo transported internationally by aircraft. The Warsaw Convention was amended by the Hague Protocol of 1955, which provides that "between the Parties to this Protocol, the [Warsaw] Convention and the Protocol shall be read and interpreted together as one single instrument and shall be known as the Warsaw Convention as amended at The Hague, 1955" and that "[a]dherence to this Protocol by any State which is not a Party to the Convention shall have the effect of adherence to the Convention as amended by this Protocol." The Second Circuit held that "in 1995 when this dispute arose, the United States had ratified the Original Warsaw Convention but not the Hague Protocol, while South Korea had adhered to the Hague Protocol but not the Original Warsaw Convention" and that accordingly there was no treaty relationship between the nations at that time. The Department argues that the court of appeals correctly resolved this question because at the time that the dispute arose, there was no treaty relationship between the United States and South Korea under the Original Warsaw Convention, the Hague Protocol, or a hybrid treaty consisting of those provisions of the Original Convention that were not amended by the Protocol. The Department furthermore argues that review is unwarranted because there is no conflict among the courts of appeals on that question, and the ruling of the court of appeals will have only limited effects and is interlocutory.

6. On June 1, the Department responded to the Court's invitations to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Owasso Independent School Dist. v. Falvo, No. 00-1073. The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 (FERPA), 20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)(1), prohibits the furnishing of federal funds to an educational institution that has a policy or practice of releasing, without parental consent, students' "education records," which are defined as "those records, files, documents, and other materials which-- (i) contain information directly related to a student; and (ii) are maintained by an educational agency or institution or by a person acting for such agency or institution." The question presented is whether allowing students to grade each other's homework and tests as their teacher goes over the correct answers aloud in class violates FERPA's prohibition against the release of "education records." The Department of Education has a longstanding interpretation, explained in a 1993 letter, that "FERPA would not prohibit teachers from allowing students to grade a test or homework assignment of another student or from calling out that grade in class, even though such grade may eventually become an education record." The district court deferred to the Department of Education's interpretation of FERPA. The Tenth Circuit reversed on the FERPA claim, holding that the Department of Education's interpretation conflicted with the plain meaning of the statute and in any event was not entitled to deference because it was contained in an opinion letter rather than a formal interpretive regulation.

The Department argues that although the court of appeals erred in concluding that FERPA prohibits students from grading the homework and tests of other students in the classroom, Supreme Court review is not warranted at this time. The question presented was a matter of first impression for the court of appeals in this case, and the question has not been addressed by any other court of appeals in the more than 25 years since FERPA was enacted. Furthermore, in response to the court of appeals' decision, the Department has decided to issue regulations or other formal guidance setting

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 5

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 5/15/2001 TIME: 5:20pm INITIALS: eb

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

May 14, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

1. On May 7, we filed a brief for the petitioner in Chao v. Mallard Bay Drilling, Inc., No. 00-927. The case presents the question whether the United States Coast Guard has "exercise[d] statutory authority to prescribe or enforce standards or regulations affecting occupational safety or health" concerning the "working conditions of employees" (29 U.S.C. 653(b)(1)) on "uninspected vessels" (46 U.S.C. 2101(43)) so as to displace application of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, 29 U.S.C. 651 et seq. ("OSH Act"). We contend that the Fifth Circuit erred in concluding that the Coast Guard has exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of working conditions of seamen so as to preclude the application of the OSH Act to a fatal accident aboard a Mallard drilling barge.

We argue that the Fifth Circuit's holding rests on an interpretation of Section 4(b)(1) of the OSH Act (29 U.S.C. 653(b)(1)) that is inconsistent with its text, the purpose of the Act, the history surrounding the enactment of the Act, and the long-standing interpretation of the Act by the Secretary of Labor. Contrary to the view of the Fifth Circuit, Section 4(b)(1) does not create industry-wide exemptions from the OSH Act based on limited exercises of regulatory authority by other federal agencies. Rather, the Act is displaced only when another agency actually has regulated the working conditions at issue or has articulated a policy that the working conditions should not be regulated. Because the Coast Guard has done neither, the OSH Act continues to apply.

2. On May 10, we filed a brief for petitioner in United States v. Vonn, No. 00-973. The questions presented are: (1) whether a district court's failure to advise a counseled defendant at his guilty plea hearing that he has the right to the assistance of counsel at trial, as required by Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(c)(3), is subject to plain-error, rather than harmless-error, review on appeal when the defendant fails to preserve the claim of error in the district court; and (2) whether, in determining if a defendant's substantial rights were affected by a district court's deviation from the requirements of Rule 11(c)(3), the court of appeals may review only the transcript of the guilty plea colloquy, or whether it may also consider other parts of the official record.

We argue that plain-error review applies when a defendant fails to raise in the district court any contention that the court failed to give him advice required by Rule 11(c)(3) before accepting his guilty plea. The plain-error rule serves two interests in this context -- promoting judicial economy and preventing parties from manipulating the system by allowing courts to lapse into error without objection and then later using that error to overturn an unfavorable result. We further argue that in determining whether error affected the outcome of the proceeding, an appellate court should look to the entire record, not just the record of the guilty plea proceeding itself.

3. On May 10, we filed a brief as amicus curiae supporting petitioners in Great-West Life & Annuity Insur. Co. v. Knudson, No. 99-1786. The case presents the question whether a civil action brought under Section 502(a)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) to redress a violation of, or to enforce, a term of a plan that requires a plan participant or beneficiary to reimburse the plan for medical expenses paid by the plan if the participant or beneficiary receives a recovery from a third-party tortfeasor, constitutes an action for "appropriate equitable relief" authorized by Section 502(a)(3). We contend that Section 502(a)(3) does authorize this type of suit. The Supreme Court has stated that the common law of trusts is "a starting point for analysis of" ERISA, Harris Trust & Sav. Bank v. Salomon Smith Barney Inc., 530 U.S. 238, 250 (2000), and we argue that an action to enforce a reimbursement term of an ERISA plan is analogous to a traditional suit in equity to obtain repayment from a beneficiary of an advance made from a trust.

B. Response to Invitation

1. On May 10, we responded to the Court's invitation to file a brief expressing the views of the United States in Arons v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel of the Supreme Court of Delaware, No. 00-509. The case presents the question whether the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act ("IDEA"), which requires that States afford parties to administrative "due process" hearings "the right to be accompanied and advised by counsel and by individuals with special knowledge or training with respect to the problems of children with disabilities," 20 U.S.C. 1415(h)(1) (Supp. IV 1998), establishes a clear federal right to non-lawyer representation in those proceedings that preempts a contrary state rule against the unauthorized practice of law. We question the Supreme Court of Delaware's view that the IDEA does not establish a clear federal right to non-lawyer representation, noting that the court erred in failing to defer to the Secretary of Education's construction of the statute. Nonetheless, we contend that the question whether IDEA authorizes lay representation does not warrant the Supreme Court's review at this time. The Supreme Court of Delaware is the first court to have squarely addressed the question, and the decision will impact only a small number of cases in Delaware.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decision on the Merits

1. On May 14, the Court decided United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Cooperative, No. 00-151. The case presented the question whether medical necessity is a legally cognizable defense to a charge of distributing drugs in violation of the Controlled Substances Act (CSA). We argued that the text, structure and purpose of the CSA establish a judgment by Congress that precludes a medical necessity defense. By classifying marijuana as a Schedule I controlled substance, Congress has declared that marijuana has "no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States," and "a lack of accepted safety for use * * * under medical supervision." 21 U.S.C. 812(b)(1).

In an opinion written by Justice Thomas, the Court agreed with our position and reversed a judgment of the Ninth Circuit that had instructed a district court to include a medical necessity exemption to an injunction sought by the government to end marijuana distribution at the Cooperative. The Court stated that "it is an open question whether federal courts ever have authority to recognize a necessity defense not provided by statute," but did not decide that question because a medical necessity exception "is at odds with the terms of the Controlled Substances Act." Congress classified marijuana as a Schedule I substance, a category reserved for those substances that have "no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States." The Court also rejected the Cooperative's argument that the district court had "broad equitable discretion" to tailor the injunctive relief to account for medical necessity.

Justice Stevens, joined by Justices Souter and Ginsburg, concurred in the judgment. He emphasized that the case involved only whether a medical necessity defense justified the distribution of marijuana. Justice Stevens also maintained that the Court's "precedent has expressed no doubt about the viability of the common-law defense" as a general matter.

B. Grants of Certiorari

1. On May 14, the Court granted our petition for a writ of certiorari in United States v. Knights, No. 00-1260. The case presents the question whether respondent's agreement to a term of probation that authorized any law enforcement officer to search his person or premises with or without a warrant, and with or without individualized suspicion of wrongdoing, constituted a valid consent to a search by a law enforcement officer investigating crimes. We argue that the Ninth Circuit incorrectly held that the Fourth Amendment prohibits law enforcement officers who are seeking evidence of criminal activity from searching based on the consent given by respondent's agreement to that term of probation, which is a common term of probation in California.

2. On May 14, the Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari in McKune v. Lile, No. 00-1187. The case involves a prison sex abuse treatment program that requires participants to disclose past sexual misconduct or suffer significantly reduced personal privileges. The Tenth Circuit held that the program creates a real and appreciable risk of self-incrimination, in violation of prisoners' Fifth Amendment rights. The question presented is whether revocation of correctional institution privileges violates the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination when such revocation is based upon a prisoner's failure to accept responsibility for his crimes as part of a sex offender treatment program. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

3. On May 14, the Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari in Alabama v. Shelton, No. 00-1214. The case presents the question whether the imposition of a suspended or conditional sentence in a misdemeanor case triggers a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On May 21, the Court has a non-argument session at which opinions are expected to be released.

II. Supreme Court Filing

A. Brief on the Merits

We anticipate filing on May 25 a brief for petitioner in EEOC v. Waffle House, No. 99-1823. The case presents the question whether an employee's agreement to arbitrate employment-related disputes with an employer bars the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), as plaintiff in an enforcement action against the employer, from obtaining victim-specific remedies for discrimination against the employee, such as backpay, reinstatement, and damages.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Alberto R. Gonzales

CC: Counsel's Office Attorneys

FROM: Brett M. Kavanaugh

DATE: May 31, 2001

RE: Supreme Court Update

Attached is the latest Supreme Court update from the Acting Solicitor General.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

May 30, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

LAST WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On May 21, the Court decided the following two cases:

1. Bartnicki v. Vopper, Nos. 99-1687 and 99-1728. This case presented the question whether the imposition of civil liability under 18 U.S.C. 2511(1)(c) and (d) for using or disclosing the contents of illegally intercepted communications, where the defendant knows or has reason to know that the interception was unlawful but is not alleged to have participated in or encouraged it, violates the First Amendment. As intervenor, we had defended the application of the federal statute to the conduct in this case on the grounds that the statutory scheme furthers important and substantial government interests that are unrelated to the suppression of free expression, namely the interest in preventing the aggravated injury to privacy that occurs when illegally intercepted communications are subsequently exploited or publicly disseminated, and the interest in preventing illegal interception. The Court, in an opinion by Justice Stevens, held that the interests served by the regulation could not justify the limit on use or disclosure of the communications, because the interest in deterring illegal interception would be better served by punishing the interceptor, and because the privacy interest in communication must give way to the interest in publishing matters of public concern.

Justice Breyer, joined by Justice O'Connor, concurred. Justice Breyer emphasized the special circumstances of the Court's holding, namely that (1) the defendants acted lawfully up until the time of final disclosure and (2) the information publicized involved the threat of potential physical harm to others, a matter of unusual public concern. Justice Breyer explained that, in his view, the Court's holding did not imply a broad constitutional immunity for the media, because the competing First Amendment interest in fostering private speech would in many instances justify regulations limiting the use or disclosure of illegally intercepted communications.

The Chief Justice, joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas, dissented. The dissenters criticized the holding on the basis that it hinders, rather than advances, the purposes of the First Amendment by chilling the speech of the millions of people who rely on electronic technology to communicate each day.

2. United States v. Hatter, No. 99-1978. This case presented a challenge to the 1983 extension of Social Security and Medicare taxes to the salaries of sitting federal judges as an unconstitutional diminution of those judges' compensation in violation of the Compensation Clause, which provides that Article III judges shall receive compensation for their services which "shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office." In an opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court accepted our position that Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920), which held that the Compensation Clause prohibits Congress from taxing the salaries of federal judges, should be overruled. The Court held that the Compensation Clause does not prohibit the imposition of a non-discriminatory tax on the salaries of federal judges, but prohibits taxation that singles out judges for special unfavorable treatment. Under this rule, the special retroactive Social Security rules for federal judges violated the Compensation Clause by effectively singling out federal judges for unfavorable treatment, but the Medicare tax, because it was extended generally to all federal employees, did not violate the Compensation Clause. The Court also held that the constitutional violation did not end when Congress increased statutory salaries by an amount greater than the amount of taxes deducted illegally.

Justice Scalia, concurring in part and dissenting in part, agreed with the Court that extending the Social Security Act to sitting Article III judges violated the Compensation Clause but would have held that extending the Medicare tax to federal judges also was unconstitutional. Justice Scalia rejected the nondiscrimination principle embraced by the majority and concluded that exemption from a certain tax can constitute part of a judge's compensation (and thus may not be reduced consistent with the Compensation Clause) and that the exemption from the Medicare tax was a part of the judge's compensation here. Justice Thomas, concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part, would have followed Evans v. Gore and held that any tax that reduces a judge's net compensation violates the Compensation Clause.

3. The Wharf (Holdings) Limited v. United International Holdings, Inc., No. 00-347. This case presented the question whether a company that sold an oral option to buy stock while secretly intending never to honor the option violated Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which prohibits using "any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance" "in connection with the purchase or sale of any security," and Rule 10b-5, the corresponding regulation. In a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, the Court agreed with our position as amicus curiae and held that petitioner's conduct violated Section 10(b), because petitioner conceded that the option was a security within the meaning of the statute, and petitioner's intent not to honor the option was properly considered a misrepresentation in connection with the sale of that option. The Court rejected the contention that Section 10(b) does not reach oral agreements and the contention that the secret reservation not to permit the exercise of the option falls outside Section 10(b) because it does not relate to the value of a security purchased or the consideration paid.

B. Grant of Certiorari

On May 21, the Supreme Court granted our petition in Ashcroft v. ACLU, No. 00-1293. The case concerns the Child Online Protection Act (COPA), which makes it unlawful to make any communication for commercial purposes by means of the World Wide Web that is available to minors and that includes material that is "harmful to minors," unless good faith efforts are made to prevent children from obtaining access to such material. COPA relies in part of community standards to identify material that is "harmful to minors." The question presented is whether the court of appeals properly barred enforcement of COPA on First Amendment grounds because it relies on community standards to identify material that is harmful to minors.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief on the Merits

On May 25, we filed a brief in EEOC v. Waffle House, No. 99-1823. The case presents the question whether an employee's agreement to arbitrate employment-related disputes with an employer bars the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), as plaintiff in an enforcement action against the employer, from obtaining victim-specific remedies for discrimination against the employee, such as backpay, reinstatement, and damages. We argue that the court of appeals, in holding that such an agreement does bar the EEOC seeking victim-specific remedies, reached a result that is (1) inconsistent with the plain language and structure of the Title VII (and ADA) enforcement scheme, (2) could seriously compromise the EEOC's ability to enforce antidiscrimination laws, and (3) is not supported by countervailing policy considerations.

B. Petition for Certiorari

On May 25, we filed a petition in United States Department of Housing and Urban Development v. Rucker, No. 00-1770. The case involves 42 U.S.C. 1437d(l)(6), which provides that public housing leases must contain a clause stating that "any drug-related criminal activity on or off [the] premises engaged in by a public housing tenant, any member of the tenant's household, or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall be cause for termination of tenancy." The question presented is whether such a lease clause is violated by drug-related criminal activity of household members, regardless of whether it can be shown that the tenant knew, or had reason to know, of the drug activity. We argue that such activity does violate the lease clause, and that the contrary decision of the court of appeals failed to grant proper deference to HUD's considered view that that provision does not admit of an "ignorant owner" or "innocent owner" exception. The court of appeals' decision drains much of the meaning and significance from the statute and its accompanying regulation, thereby depriving public housing authorities of an important tool to achieve safe and liveable public housing, and depriving public housing tenants of protection that Congress found to be important for their security and well-being.

THIS WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On May 29, the Court decided the following six cases in which the government participated:

1. PGA Tour, Inc. v. Martin, No. 00-24. This case presented the question whether Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq., regulates standards established for competitors (here, professional golfers) in athletic competitions held at places of public accommodation, and, if so, whether Title III requires professional sports organizations to grant selective waivers of their substantive rules of athletic competition in order to accommodate disabled competitors such as Martin, a professional golfer who has a circulatory disorder in his right leg, making it medically necessary for him to use a golf cart rather than walk the golf course. As amicus curiae, we argued that petitioner's operation of golf courses during tournaments falls squarely within Title III's prohibition on discrimination in places of public accommodation and that the courts below appropriately considered the relevant factors in concluding that a waiver of the PGA Tour's walking rule would not fundamentally alter its competitions, which are intended to measure shot-making skills rather than walking endurance. In an opinion written by Justice Stevens, the Court agreed with our arguments and held that (1) the PGA Tour is a "public accommodation" during its tours and qualifying rounds, and is therefore subject to Title III of the ADA, and (2) allowing Martin to use a golf cart would neither "alter . . . an essential aspect of the game of golf" nor "fundamentally alter the character of the competition" by granting Martin an advantage over other golfers. In dissent, Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, took the view that the PGA Tour is not a public accommodation, because professional golfers could not be considered "customers" of the tour, and that the majority's analysis that allowing Martin to ride in a court would not fundamentally alter the nature of PGA Tour golf was incoherent.

2. Atkinson Trading Co. v. Shirley, No. 00-454. This case presented the question whether the Navajo Nation may impose a hotel occupancy tax on non-Indian overnight guests at the Trading Post operated by petitioner on lands petitioner owns in fee, when the Trading Post is subject to federal regulations under the Indian Trader statutes, petitioner's land is wholly surrounded by Indian lands on the Navajo Reservation, and petitioner and its guests receive necessary government services from the Navajo Nation. As amicus curiae, we argued that such a tax was valid. We noted that in Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544 (1981), the Court held that a Tribe may tax or regulate the activities of nonmembers on nonmember fee land within a reservation if the nonmembers enter "consensual relationships with the tribe or its members," or if their conduct "threatens or has some direct effect on the political integrity, the economic security, or the health or welfare of the tribe." We contended that the tax is valid under both Montana exceptions.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Rehnquist, the court rejected our arguments. First, the Court found that the consensual relationship exception was inapplicable because that exception "requires that the tax or regulation imposed by the Indian tribe have a nexus to the consensual relationship itself," and that a "nonmember's consensual relationship in one area . . . does not trigger tribal civil authority in another." The court also found the second exception to be inapplicable because that exception "grants Indian tribes nothing beyond what is necessary to protect tribal self-government or to control internal relations" (internal quotation marks omitted), and because the tax at issue here was not "necessary to vindicate the Navajo Nation's political integrity." Justice Souter concurred, joined by Justices Kennedy and Thomas, and emphasized the irrelevance of "whether the land at issue is fee land, or land owned by or held in trust for an Indian tribe."

3. New Hampshire v. Maine, No. 130 (original). New Hampshire brought this original action claiming that its boundary with Maine in Portsmouth Harbor extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore. The practical focus of the dispute is the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, a federal facility that is located on Seavey's Island in the harbor. Maine currently exercises jurisdiction over the Shipyard, so New Hampshire residents who work at the Shipyard are required to pay Maine income taxes. In response to the Court's invitation to express our views, we contended that the doctrine of res judicata bars New Hampshire's claim because of a 1976 consent decree that New Hampshire and Maine agreed to in a prior original action in the Supreme Court concerning the lateral marine boundary in the vicinity of the current dispute. Because the 1976 consent decree set the boundary at the "Middle of the River," New Hampshire cannot now maintain that the boundary extends to the low water mark of the Maine shore.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Ginsburg, the Court agreed with our arguments, and held that the doctrine of judicial estoppel, which "generally prevents a party from prevailing in one phase of a case on an argument and then relying on a contradictory argument to prevail in another phase," bars New Hampshire from asserting that the Piscataqua River boundary runs along the Maine shore.

4. Booth v. Churner, No. 99-1964. This case presented the question whether Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, which provides that a prisoner may not bring an action with respect to prison conditions "until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted," requires a prisoner suing prison officials for money damages to exhaust administrative remedies that address the problem identified by the inmate, but that do not permit the recovery of money damages. In McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 150 (1992), the Court construed a federal provision requiring inmates to exhaust such "plain, speedy, and effective remedies as are available" to excuse exhaustion when an inmate seeks only money damages and the prison's grievance procedure does not offer such relief. Congress subsequently eliminated the qualifying terms "plain, speedy, and effective," eliminated the requirement that administrative remedies must meet certain minimum acceptable standards of fairness and effectiveness, and eliminated a court's discretion to excuse the plaintiff's failure to exhaust when exhaustion would not be appropriate or in the interests of justice. We argued as amicus curiae that these changes reflect a judgment that inmates must exhaust all available remedies without regard to whether the administrative process provides for the recovery of the particular type of relief the inmate seeks.

In a unanimous opinion written by Justice Souter, the Court agreed with our arguments. In addition to accepting our argument based upon the post-McCarthy statutory history, the Court concluded that "the word 'exhausted' has a decidedly procedural emphasis," and "makes sense only in referring only to the procedural means, not the particular relief ordered," thus rendering irrelevant the types of recovery afforded by the available administrative remedies.

5. NLRB v. Kentucky River Community Care, Inc., No. 98-1815. This case presented the questions (1) whether the National Labor Relations Board reasonably concluded that an employee's exercise of ordinary professional or technical judgment in directing less-skilled employees to deliver services in accordance with employer-specified standards does not constitute the exercise of "independent judgment" that makes an employee a "supervisor" under Section 2(11) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. 152(11); (2) whether the Board permissibly requires the party who alleges that an employee is excluded from the rights and protections afforded by the Act as a supervisor to bear the burden of proving the individual's supervisory status; and (3) whether, applying its interpretation of "independent judgment" and its allocation of the burden of proving supervisory status, the Board reasonably concluded that respondent's registered nurses are "employees" rather than supervisors and thus are entitled to the rights and protections afforded by the Act. We argued that the Board's determination that the registered nurses in this case are not supervisors and should be covered by the Act is consistent with the statutory language, its purpose, and long-standing principles applied by the Board and the courts in the Act's administration in a wide variety of employment contexts.

In a decision written by Justice Scalia, the Court agreed with our argument regarding the burden of proof, but rejected our argument regarding the merits of the case. The Court concluded that by eliminating "ordinary professional or technical judgment" from the category of "independent judgment," the Board "insert[ed] a startling categorical exclusion into statutory text that does not suggest its existence," and that such categorical exclusion "turns on factors that have nothing to do with the degree of discretion an employee exercises." The court found the Board's reference to "directly less-skilled employees" to be likewise devoid of "textual justification" and "conceptual justification." Justice Stevens, joined by Justices Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer, concurred in part and dissented in part. Justice Stevens agreed with the Court regarding the burden of proof, but would have deferred to the Board's interpretation of the statute, concluding that "since Congress has expressly provided that professional employees are entitled to the protection of the Act, there is good reason to resolve the ambiguities consistently with the Board's interpretation."

6. Buckhannon Board & Care Home v. West Virginia Dep't of Health and Human Resources, No. 99-1848. The case presented the question whether a civil rights plaintiff may recover attorney's fees as a "prevailing party" under 42 U.S.C. 1988 when, as a result of plaintiff's suit, the defendant voluntarily provides the plaintiff with the requested relief. Petitioners are operators of residential board and care homes who sought a declaratory judgment invalidating a West Virginia statute requiring that all residents of such homes be capable of "self-preservation," i.e., evacuating themselves from the building without assistance in case of fire; petitioners contend that the statute violates the Fair Housing Amendments Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act. While the action was pending, West Virginia amended the law to delete the self-preservation requirement. Although the home did not obtain the change in state law through an enforceable judgment, consent decree, or settlement, it nevertheless claimed that it was entitled to attorney's fees as the prevailing party because it obtained the relief it sought through West Virginia's voluntary conduct in response to plaintiffs' action which brought to the State's attention the flaws in its law. As amicus curiae, we argued that the determination whether petitioners should be considered prevailing parties entitled to attorneys fees should be guided by three central considerations: (1) whether their complaint has legal merit; (2) whether they received actual relief that redressed their grievances; and (3) whether petitioners' lawsuit played a substantial role in inducing respondents to change their ways.

In an opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist, the Court rejected our arguments. The Court concluded that "prevailing party" is a term of art meaning "one who has been awarded some relief by the court," and that it would be inconsistent with the meaning of "prevailing party" to "allow[] an award where there is no judicially sanctioned change in the legal relationship of the parties." The Court found no support for an opposite conclusion in the legislative history of Section 1988, and declined to "determine which way . . . various policy arguments cut," given what the Court viewed as "the clear meaning of 'prevailing party' in the fee-shifting statutes." Justice Scalia concurred, joined by Justice Thomas, and elaborated on the Court's discussion of the meaning of "prevailing party." Justice Ginsburg dissented, joined by Justices Stevens, Souter and Breyer. She rejected the Court's definition of "prevailing party" as not supported by history or logic, and would have accepted the broader definition that we pressed, because such a definition "suitably advances Congress' endeavor to place private actions, in civil rights and other legislatively defined areas, securely within the federal law enforcement arsenal."

B. Grant of Certiorari

On May 29, the Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari in Thomas v. Chicago Park District, No. 00-1249, which involves a First Amendment challenge to a Chicago Park District ordinance that requires a permit for any event in a City park that involve more than 50 people or utilizes amplified sound. We have not participated in the case to date, and are determining whether participation is warranted at this stage.

C. Invitation

On May 29, the Supreme Court invited the Solicitor General to file briefs expressing the views of the United States on the petition for certiorari in John Deere Insurance Co. v. Nueva, No. 00-1491. Federal law requires registered interstate motor carriers to file with the Department of Transportation a proof of insurance "sufficient to pay . . . for each final judgment against the registrant. 49 U.S.C. 13906(a)(1). Under the applicable federal regulations, insurance policies filed to satisfy this requirement incorporate, or are deemed to incorporate, the "Form MCS-90" endorsement, which is promulgated by regulation and provides, in relevant part, that an insurer who issues a policy to a registered motor carrier will pay "any final judgment recovered against the insured for public liability resulting from negligence in the operation, maintenance or use of motor vehicles . . . regardless of whether or not each motor vehicle is specifically described in the policy . . . ." The question presented is whether the Form MCS-90 endorsement attached to an insurance policy issued to a motor carrier requires the issuing insurer to pay a judgment entered against parties (in this case a different motor carrier and its driver) that are not entitled to coverage under the base policy, even where there is no "final judgment . . . against the insured" motor carrier named in the insurer's policy.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief on the Merits

On May 31, we anticipate filing briefs for respondents in New York v. FERC , No. 00-0568 and Enron Power Marketing, Inc. v. FERC, No. 00-0809. These consolidated cases present the questions (1) whether the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) may preempt state jurisdiction over the intrastate transmission of energy from generators to retail customers; (2) whether FERC has jurisdiction under the Federal Power Act (FPA), 16 U.S.C. 792 et seq., to regulate all transmission of electric energy that is sold to retail customers at a "bundled" price; (3) whether FERC has jurisdiction and an obligation under the FPA to eliminate pervasive "undue discrimination" in the provision of interstate electric energy transmission services by requiring transmission-owning utilities to provide interstate transmission services on the same terms to all users, for all interstate transmissions, including transmissions bundled with retail sales; and (4) whether the court of appeals erred in ruling that FERC had discretion to interpret the FPA as denying FERC the necessary jurisdiction to remedy the undue discrimination it had found in the provision of interstate transmission.

NEXT WEEK

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On June 4, the Court will hold a non-argument session at which opinions are expected to be released.

II. Supreme Court Filings

A. Brief on the Merits

On June 8, we anticipate filing a brief for respondents in Verizon Communications Inc. v. FCC, No. 00-511, which is consolidated with several other cases presenting the same questions. The case involves challenges to two important aspects of the FCC's regulations implementing the Telecommunications Act of 1996: pricing methodology and combinations rules. On remand from the Supreme Court, see AT&T v. Iowa Utilities Board, 525 U.S. 366 (1999), the Eighth Circuit invalidated the key regulation defining the FCC's forward-looking cost methodology, known as "total element long-run incremental cost" or TELRIC. The cost methodology is used by state public utility commissions to determine the amount incumbent local exchange carriers (ILECs) can recover from new entrants for the provision of interconnection and access to network elements. The appeals court, while recognizing the validity of a forward-looking cost methodology, rejected the Commission's determination that cost should be measured based on the use of the most efficient telecommunications technology currently available and the lowest cost network configuration. The Court will also consider whether the court of appeals erred in holding that neither the Takings Clause nor the Telecommunications Act of 1996 requires incorporation of an ILEC's historical costs in the rates it charges new entrants. The Court will also decide the validity of FCC rules requiring that ILECs make available their own unbundled network elements combined in new ways or in combination with elements provided by requesting carriers.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

10th & Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, DC 20530

TELEFAX TO:

RECIPIENT'S NAME: Brett Kavanaugh

AGENCY/FIRM: _____

ADDRESS: _____

_____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 456-7984

TELEFAX NUMBER: (202) 456-1647

NUMBER OF PAGES SENT (INCLUDING COVER PAGE): 10

IF YOU DO NOT RECEIVE THIS NUMBER OF PAGES, PLEASE CALL THE NUMBER BELOW.

TELEFAX FROM:

SENDER'S NAME: Paul Clement

ROOM NUMBER: _____

TELEPHONE NUMBER: (202) 514-2206

TELEFAX NUMBERS: (202) 514-9769

COMMENTS:

_____

_____

_____

- OFFICIAL INFORMATION ENCLOSED -

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 6103 and other applicable restrictions, the information contained in this transmission is intended only for the sole use of the individual or entity named above and may contain information that is privileged, confidential, and exempt from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient o employee responsible for delivering the message to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, or copying of this transmission is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately. Thank you.

TRANSMITTED: DATE: 5/31/2001 TIME: 10:15am INITIALS: eb

precludes a medical necessity defense. By classifying marijuana as a schedule I controlled substance, Congress has declared that marijuana has "no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States," and "a lack of accepted safety for use * * * under medical supervision." 21 U.S.C. 812(b)(1). Congress therefore banned the distribution of marijuana for any purposes unless the person dispensing the drug is a practitioner registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration to conduct research that has been specifically approved by the Food and Drug Administration, and Congress additionally established procedures for the reclassification or descheduling of controlled substances by the Attorney General, subject to judicial review. We further note that the 1998 statute that Congress passed in specific response to attempts by States to legalize medical use of marijuana unambiguously stated that "marijuana * * * has not been proven safe and effective for medical purposes" and that marijuana may not be used for medical purposes "without * * * the approval of the Food and Drug Administration."

We argue that a district court lacks the equitable discretion to craft an injunction that permits the distribution of marijuana for medical use in violation of the Act based on the court's own view that such conduct furthers the public interest. A district court may not override Congress's ban on the unauthorized distribution of marijuana for all purposes by reweighing the scientific and medical data and social policies considered by Congress, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and concluding that the public interest supports the illegal distribution of marijuana.

III. Supreme Court Filings

A. Briefs on the Merits

On March 26, we filed a brief as amicus curiae in Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, Nos. 00-596 and 00-597. The case presents the questions (1) whether state regulations that restrict the advertising of tobacco products near a school or playground are preempted by the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (FCLAA), and (2) whether such regulations violate the First Amendment.

Regarding preemption, we argue that FCLAA does not reflect any purpose by Congress to preempt advertising location restrictions like those at issue here. FCLAA's preemption provision reaches only restrictions or prohibitions that are "based on smoking and health." The restrictions at issue here are "based on" the location of the advertising; they are not "based on smoking and health." Congress used the phrase "based on smoking and health" to limit the scope of preemption to regulations that require or prevent the advertisement of a message concerning the relationship between smoking and health. Because the restrictions at issue here apply without regard to the message of the advertising, they are not preempted.

That conclusion is especially evident, we contend, when FCLAA is viewed as a whole. When Congress amended the preemption provision to its current form, it both reestablished federal warning requirements for cigarette labels and preserved the FTC's authority to require warnings in advertising in order to prevent unfair or deceptive advertising practices. The preemption provision is best understood as displacing state regulations that could interfere with that federal warning program -- such as those that require or prohibit health messages in labeling or advertising. State restrictions on the location of advertising, however, do not interfere with federal warning requirements. They are therefore not preempted.

Regarding the First Amendment, we argue that the State's restrictions on advertising near schools and playgrounds satisfy the established standards for evaluating the constitutionality of restrictions on commercial speech. The State's interests in preventing unlawful distribution of tobacco products to minors and protecting minors from the health consequences of smoking are compelling, and the State's restrictions on advertising are also directly and materially related to preventing underage tobacco use. By placing restrictions on advertising within 1000 feet of schools and playgrounds, the State has carefully tailored its restrictions to the areas where children are most likely to be repeatedly and unavoidably exposed to tobacco advertising. The State's restrictions also leave petitioners with ample opportunities to convey information about their products to adults, such as through outdoor advertising outside the school and playground zones, and through newspapers, magazines, direct mail, and personal solicitation.

We urge the Court to reject petitioners' proposal to apply strict scrutiny to what they assert are content or viewpoint based restrictions on commercial speech. The middle-tier scrutiny set forth in Central Hudson Gas & Elec. v. Public Serv. Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557 (1980), strikes the appropriate balance between a seller's interest in proposing a commercial transaction and the State's right to regulate speech that is intimately bound up with economic activity. Moreover, the restrictions at issue here do not entirely prohibit the dissemination of information about tobacco, and they are directly related to preservation of a fair bargaining process. The State justifiably views any bargain between tobacco manufacturers and children as inherently unfair, both because the State has made the sale of tobacco products to children unlawful, and because so many children lack the maturity in judgment to resist the tobacco industry's appeals to excitement, glamour, and independence, and to appreciate the addictive power and health risks of tobacco products.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of the Solicitor General

The Solicitor General

Washington, D.C. 20530

March 27, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From: BDC for
Barbara D. Underwood
Acting Solicitor General

Subject: Weekly Report

I. Supreme Court Decisions

A. Decisions on the Merits

On March 20, 2001, the Court decided the following two cases:

1. Buford v. United States, No. 99-9073. The question presented was whether a district court's determination that a defendant's prior convictions are not "related" for purposes of the career offender provision of the Sentencing Guidelines is subject to a deferential standard of review. Prior sentences imposed in related cases are to be treated as one sentence for purposes of the Sentencing Guideline's career offender provision. The District Court, in sentencing the petitioner for armed bank robbery, found that the petitioner's joint sentencing for five prior state-court convictions was a matter of administrative convenience rather than a "consolidation for sentencing" within the meaning of the Guidelines, and thus treated the offenses as unrelated and the petitioner as a career offender. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that whether cases have been consolidated for trial or sentencing is a matter of fact, to be reviewed deferentially on appeal. We argued that the court of appeals correctly applied a deferential standard of review because the question requires an inquiry into facts as determined by the district court rather than an exercise in statutory construction likely to establish widely applicable principles of law, and because the Sentencing Reform Act provides that courts of appeals should give "due deference" to the district court's application of the guidelines to the facts. 18 U.S.C. 3742(e).

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Seventh Circuit in a unanimous opinion by Justice Breyer, agreeing with our arguments. The Court held that deferential review is appropriate because 18

U.S.C. 3742(e) refers to "due deference," and because "the district court is in a better position than the appellate court to decide whether a particular set of individual circumstances demonstrates 'functional consolidation.'" This is so, the Court concluded, because trial judges are more familiar with trial and sentencing practices in general, including consolidation procedures. Furthermore, "factual nuance may closely guide the legal decision, with legal results depending heavily upon an understanding of the significance of case-specific details," thus rendering the district court better suited to make the determination. The Court downplayed any benefits of uniformity arising from de novo review, noting that "[t]he legal question at issue is a minor, detailed, interstitial question of sentencing law," not a "generally recurring, purely legal matter."

2. Traffix Devices, Inc. v. Marketing Displays, Inc, No. 99-1571. The case presented the questions whether and to what extent a party may maintain a trade dress infringement action under the Lanham Act to challenge the copying of product features after a utility patent covering the features has expired. The functionality doctrine of trademark law bars utilitarian features -- features that affect the purpose, action, performance or the facility or economy of processing, handling, or using a good -- from being withdrawn from the public domain as trade dress. We argued as amicus curiae that the functionality doctrine precludes a trade dress claim where an expired utility patent discloses that the feature alleged as trade dress contributes to the operation of the formerly patented device. We maintained that this rule would serve the interests of judicial economy and would be consistent with the patent-law goal of balancing the need to encourage new advances in technology with the goal of ensuring that those advances eventually enter the public domain. We further argued that the approach adopted by the court of appeals creates an unnecessary conflict between the Lanham Act and patent law.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Sixth Circuit in a unanimous opinion by Justice Kennedy, agreeing with our arguments and holding that because MDI's design was functional, its trade dress claim was barred. The Court determined that the expired patent had "vital significance in resolving the trade dress claim," because a utility patent "is strong evidence that the features therein claimed are functional," and "[i]f trade dress protection is sought for those features[,] the strong evidence of functionality based on the previous patent adds great weight to the statutory presumption that features are deemed functional until proved otherwise by the party seeking trade dress protection." The Court found that MDI failed to carry its burden of overcoming the strong evidentiary inference of functionality based on the disclosure of its design in the claims of the expired patents, finding that "[t]he rationale for the rule that the disclosure of a feature in the claims of a utlity patent constitutes strong evidence of functionality is well illustrated in this case." Because the Court found that functionality had been established, it declined to consider whether the design had acquired secondary meaning, and declined to determine whether the Patent Clause of the Constitution, of its own force, prohibits the holder of an expired utility patent from claiming trade dress protection.

On March 21, the Court decided the following two cases:

1. Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams, No. 99-1379. The case presented the question whether the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) applies to arbitration clauses in contracts of employment. Section 2 of the FAA provides that "a written [arbitration] provision in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce * * * shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable * * * ." 9 U.S.C. 2. Section 1, however, excludes from the Act "contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce." We argued, as amicus curiae, that the Ninth Circuit correctly ruled that § 1 excludes every employment contract that would otherwise be covered under the Act. We contended that although the phrase "engaged in commerce" is today considered a term of art indicating that Congress does not want to legislate to the full extent of its Commerce Clause authority, that was not the meaning of the phrase when the FAA was enacted in 1925. At that time, the Supreme Court's Commerce Clause decisions indicated that Congress could not regulate beyond those "engaged in commerce" so the exclusion should be read to exclude any employment contract that Congress can reach. We also argued that the § 2 coverage provision ("transaction involving commerce") and the § 1 exclusion ("contracts of workers engaged in commerce") are coextensive because "involving" and "engaged in" had the same meaning in 1925. Furthermore, we argued, the legislative history of the FAA clearly indicates that the FAA was not meant to apply to employment contracts.

The Court rejected our position and reversed and remanded the decision of the Ninth Circuit, in an opinion written by Justice Kennedy. The Court rejected respondents' contention that the word "transaction" in § 2 extends only to commercial contracts, and that therefore an employment contract is not a "contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce" at all. If that were true, the Court concluded, the separate § 1 exemption would be pointless.

Next, the Court concluded that the statute should be interpreted in accordance with the canon of ejusdem genesis, under which "[w]here general words follow specific words in a statutory enumeration, the general words are construed to embrace only objects similar in nature to those objects enumerated by the preceding specific words." Therefore, regarding the reference in § 1 to "contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce," the Court held that the residual clause ("any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce") must be read in accordance with the terms that preceded it ("seamen" and "railroad employees") and therefore should be read to refer only to transportation workers.

Even if the term "engaged in commerce" stood alone in § 1, the Court concluded, the outcome would be the same, because that phrase is "understood to have a more limited reach." The Court rejected the argument that, because the Commerce Clause is now construed more expansively than it was in 1925, the term should be read correspondingly to cover a broader swath. "[T]his fact alone," the Court determined, "does not give us basis to adopt, by judicial decision rather than amendatory legislation, an expansive construction of the FAA's exclusion provision that goes beyond the meaning of the words Congress used" (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Justice Stevens dissented, joined by Justices Ginsburg and Breyer, and in part by Justice Souter. Reviewing at length the history leading up to the passage of the FAA, Justice Stevens concluded that "no one interested in the enactment of the FAA ever intended or expected that § 2 would apply to employment contracts." He found further support for his position in Textile Workers v. Lincoln Mills, 353 U.S. 448 (1957), in which the Court resolved a labor dispute regarding the scope of an arbitration clause in a collective-bargaining agreement without relying on the FAA, in a situation where, in Justice Stevens' view, relying on the FAA would have been natural had the Lincoln Mills Court believed that the § 1 exclusion referred only to transportation workers. He concluded that the Court "misuse[d] its authority" by "refus[ing] to look beyond the raw statutory text" to consider "countervailing considerations that were expressed by Members of the enacting Congress and that remain valid today."

Justice Souter also filed a dissenting opinion, joined by Justices Stevens, Ginsburg, and Breyer. He concluded that "[t]he statute is * * * entitled to a coherent reading as a whole by treating the exemption for employment contracts as keeping pace with the expanded understanding of the commerce power generally" (citation omitted). He rejected the Court's reliance on ejusdem generis, which he characterized as a "fallback" that should be rejected "if there are good reasons not to apply it." Justice Souter would not have applied ejusdem generis because, in his view, "it is imputing something very odd to the working of the congressional brain to say that Congress took care to bar application of the Act to the class of employment contracts it most obviously had authority to legislate about in 1925, contracts of workers employed by carriers and handlers of commerce, while covering only employees 'engaged' in less obvious ways, over whose coverage litigation might be anticipated with uncertain results." Rather, "[i]t would seem to have made more sense either to cover all coverable employment contracts or to exclude them all."

