Our Court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the federal courts should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our Court is rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25% of the judgeships are vacant. Each active judge of our Court is now participating in deciding more than 550 cases a year--a case load that is excessive by any standard. In addition, we have almost 200 death penalty cases that will be facing us before the end of next year. I presently have six pending before me right now and many more in the pipeline. Although the death cases are very time consuming (the records often run to 5000 pages), we are under very short deadlines imposed by Congress for acting on these cases. Under present circumstances, we will be unable to meet these deadlines. Unlike the Supreme Court, we have no discretionary jurisdiction and must hear every case.

The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate "advise" as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years.

You and other members of the Senate have appeared before the Judicial Conference and other judges' groups many times and said that you care about the federal courts. I hope that you will now act to help us on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. We need your help and the help of the two Senators from Ohio, the two Senators from Tennessee, the two Senators from Kentucky, and the Senators from Michigan.

Sincerely,
Gilbert S. Merritt.

, 3/20/00, When There Were 75 Vacancies

MERRITT, GILBERT S., CHIEF JUDGE, SIXTH CIRCUIT on NOMINEES DESERVE A FLOOR VOTE

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit
Nashville, TN, March 20, 2000
Re: Vacancies on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals
Hon. Orrin Hatch
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate "advise" as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years.

REV_00255889

Sincerely,
Gilbert S. Merritt.
March 20, 2000

Letter to Senator Hatch, 3/20/00, When There Were 75 Vacancies

Free Congress Foundation
717 Second Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002

REV_00255890

NEW YORK TIMES on FILLING VACANCIES

A year has gone by since Chief Justice William Rehnquist, deploring the backlog in untried cases, pleaded with the Senate to act in a timely and orderly way on President Clinton's nominees for the federal bench. In response, the Senate began to make progress in reducing judicial vacancies. But its recent record is indefensible.

Contrary to assertions by the Judiciary Committee Chairman, Orrin Hatch, that he is moving rapidly, the record shows that the Republican Senate has approved many fewer judges than a Democratic Senate did during the comparable phase of George Bush's Presidency. Mr. Clinton has promised to press the Senate to act on his judicial nominees in an expeditious fashion when it returns from the August recess. He must do so, of course, but the real problem lies with Mr. Hatch and his obstructionist colleagues. Somebody ought to tell him and other Republican leaders that they are embarrassing their party.

Editorial, New York Times, 8/14/99, When There Were 64 Vacancies

---

NEW YORK TIMES on FILLING VACANCIES

It seems that Senate Republicans would rather inflict damage on the nation's judicial system than fulfill their constitutional responsibility to act with reasonable dispatch on President Clinton's judicial nominations.

President Clinton has been inexcusably slow in making nominations. But the main culprits are Senate Republicans, who have stalled in processing the nominations they have.

The Senate could have eased the Second Circuit's crisis by voting to confirm Sonia Sotomayor, a fine Federal District Court judge originally named to the bench by President George Bush. She was approved by the Judiciary Committee on March 5 by a vote of 16 to 2. But repeated pleas by Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont for action on her nomination have been ignored as the courts continue to disintegrate.

Editorial, "Emergency in the Courts," The New York Times, 4/6/98, When There Were 79 Vacancies

---

NEW YORK TIMES on RECESS APPOINTMENTS

The President should name Mr. Lee to the civil rights job. While he is at it, Mr. Clinton might consider using his recess authority to challenge the Senate on judicial vacancies as well.
"Another Route for Bill Lann Lee,"

New York Times, 11/25/97, When There Were 90 Vacancies

Free Congress Foundation
717 Second Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002

REV_00255891

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY on BURDEN ON CASELOADS

"All Americans should understand the gravity of what the Right has undertaken by attacking the judicial system," said Carole Shields, president of People For the American Way. "Right-wing leaders are so eager to offer a political payoff to their constituents that it matters little if the federal bench and our Constitution are smothered in the process. They have lost sight of the fundamental dividing lines that preserve our democracy."

Shields said the report shows how the conservative assault has placed the federal courts close to a point of crisis. "As the weeks and months go by, judicial vacancies remain unfilled, dockets are packed to bursting, hundreds of cases go unheard and mistakes are made out of haste," Shields said. "This must end, and it must end now. It is time that those responsible for this unconscionable paralysis recognized the harm they have done."

M2 Presswire, 10/6/97, When There Were 93 Vacancies

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY on JUDICIAL INDEPENDENCE

A comprehensive report released today by People For the American Way documents how, over the past two years, the right wing has launched an assault on the judiciary - by blocking scores of nominees, threatening impeachments and proposing to curtail the courts' jurisdiction. The report shows how a rapidly growing movement among political conservatives has targeted not just a set of judges or a particular ideology, but the very independence of the federal bench.

"All Americans should understand the gravity of what the Right has undertaken by attacking the judicial system," said Carole Shields, president of People For the American Way. "Right-wing leaders are so eager to offer a political payoff to their constituents that it matters little if the federal bench and our Constitution are smothered in the process. They have lost sight of the fundamental dividing lines that preserve our democracy."

Shields said the report shows how the conservative assault has placed the federal courts close to a point of crisis. "As the weeks and months go by, judicial vacancies remain unfilled, dockets are packed to bursting, hundreds of cases go unheard and mistakes are made out of haste," Shields said. "This must end, and it must end now. It is time that those responsible for this unconscionable paralysis recognized the harm they have done."

Elliot Mincberg, legal director of People For the American Way, said the refusal to confirm judges, combined with a constant flow of rhetoric attacking the bench and openly calling for "rebellion," has emerged as much more than a partisan dispute. "Political battles come and go, but rarely have we seen such a palpable threat to the system of checks and balances that forms the core of American democracy," Mincberg said. "The Founders intended for the judiciary to safeguard our constitutional rights, including when threatened by unconstitutional laws. When legislators and advocates call for allowing majorities to overrule decisions, for judicial term limits, for impeachments, they do violence to the Constitution itself."

The report shows that while conservatives claim only to seek judicial restraint, their actions and rhetoric have been driven primarily by the re-election of a Democratic President. "This talk of 'judicial activism' conceals a simple refusal to confirm the president's nominees," Mincberg said. "Even conservative legal scholars have acknowledged that today's judiciary shows no ideological tilt. In the Senate, allies of the Far Right have essentially decided the president should no longer have the right to nominate judges."

According to the report, many conservatives hope that if they are unable to take power away from the judiciary, their relentless campaign of intimidation will bully judges into passing their litmus test. "If we could get any momentum going to impeach the Justices, it would have an effect on their thinking," the Free Congress Foundation's Paul Weyrich has said. In fact, the report reveals that right-wing activists strongly pushed the idea of impeaching judges months before this tactic was mentioned by House Majority Whip Tom DeLay and other conservative politicians.

In compiling Judges Delayed, Justice Denied (http://pfaw.org/pubs/justice), PFAW's staff researchers combed through news stories and journals, direct-mail pieces, speech texts, judicial documents, and TV and radio broadcasts to produce a detailed record of the Right's burgeoning crusade against judges and their authority. The report shows that rhetoric by Far Right groups such as Focus on the Family, the Family Research Council, the Christian Coalition and the Eagle Forum built throughout 1996, then reached a fever pitch after the election.

Some conservatives speak dramatically about stirring up a revolt. Former judge Robert Bork questions whether Americans have a duty to start a "morally justified revolution" against the "regime" of the federal bench. Former Watergate conspirator Charles Colson ponders the "usurpation of ultimate political power" by judges and doubts "the moral legitimacy of the current political order." Others paint dire scenarios of a judiciary that controls American life: The Family Research Council's Gary Bauer says his group will battle "judicial tyranny," while Christian Coalition founder Pat Robertson calls the courts an "oligarchy" creating "unelected tyranny." Phyllis Schlafly calls the courts "the No. 1 threat to our democratic process."

The report concludes that these activists' rhetorical barrage has provided political cover for the Senate leadership to virtually shut down the confirmation process. But the effects of this shutdown upon the federal bench have been staggering. Among the report's findings:

Ninety-seven seats out of 846 on the federal bench, or 11 percent, remain vacant. For the first time in 40 years, not a single appellate court judge was confirmed in the last election year, 1996. There is a record number of 29 "judicial emergencies," vacancies that have stood for 18 months or longer. Because nearly one-third of the seats on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals are vacant, 600 hearings have been canceled there this year. The circuit's chief judge calls this "a crisis of serious proportions." And judges in other districts report that because of huge backlogs, civil cases have been almost completely crowded out by criminal cases.

"The Right's cries of 'judicial activism' are an eerie echo of a sad time in this nation's history," said Shields. "That is precisely the kind of rhetoric conservatives used in 1954 when the Supreme Court handed down its landmark decision in Brown v. Board of Education. Then, too, congressmen talked about impeaching judges, but Americans rejected this as extremism. Now all of us should stand fast against this latest onslaught - because, just as they were at the dawn of the republic, the courts must remain the last and best safeguard of individual liberty."

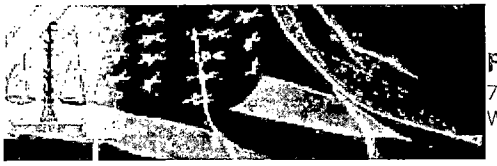
M2 Presswire, "Judges Delayed, Justice Denied,", 10/6/97, When There Were 93 Vacancies

---

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY on RECESS APPOINTMENTS

"We applaud President Clinton's timely holiday gift to the people of these five states and to all of America," said People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas, who was present in the Oval Office for President Clinton's announcement. "With this highly qualified appointment he has broken down a shameful and archaic barrier to equality that has no place in our nation in the 21st century."
The seat that Judge Gregory will fill has been vacant for 10 years. While the Senate leadership, spurred on by Sen. Jesse Helms, has refused to act on President Clinton's previous African American nominees to this Circuit, the Court has been declared by the U.S. Judicial Conference to be in a state of judicial emergency, with vacancies hampering the Court's ability to hear cases and administer justice in a timely way.

"People For The American Way: President Clinton Appoints First African American Judge To 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals,"



U.S. Newswire, 12/27/00, When There Were 67 Vacancies

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY on JUSTICE DELAYED

Dockets are backing up, cases are going unheard for years at a time, justice is being delayed.

Report, Judges Delayed, Justice Denied, 10/1/97, When There Were 93 Vacancies

---

Free Congress Foundation
717 Second Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002

REV_00255894

REHNQUIST, WILLIAM on VACANCY CRISIS

Meanwhile, in his annual report on the federal courts, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist urged Clinton to fill the judicial vacancies. "There is perhaps no issue more important to the judiciary right now than this serious judicial vacancy problem," Rehnquist wrote in his year-end report, which was released on Jan. 1. The federal courts, Rehnquist added, must adjust to "an era of austerity" that will affect the administration of justice. "Our challenge will be to preserve the best of our current adversary system -- and thereby do justice -- while recognizing the new realities," he said. (See this issue, p. 92.)

"President Clinton and the Courts, 1/8/94, When There Were 116 Vacancies

---

REHNQUIST, WILLIAM on BURDEN ON CASELOADS

If Federal jurisdiction remains at its current level -- or, worse, increases -- judicial vacancies will aggravate the problem of too few judges and too much work. Currently, 82 of the 846 Article III judicial offices in the Federal judiciary -- almost 1 out of every 10 -- are vacant. Twenty-six of the vacancies have been in existence for 18 months or longer and on that basis constitute what are called 'judicial emergencies.' In the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, the percentage of vacancies is particularly troubling, with over one-third of its seats empty.
Judicial vacancies can contribute to a backlog of cases, undue delays in civil cases, and stopgap measures to shift judicial personnel where they are most needed. Vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the Federal judiciary. Fortunately for the judiciary, a dependable corps of senior judges has contributed significantly to easing the impact of unfilled judgeships.

The New York Times, 1/1/98, When There Were 83 Vacancies

REHNQUIST, WILLIAM on JUSTICE DELAYED

The number of judicial vacancies can have a profound impact on a court's ability to manage its caseload effectively. Because the number of judges confirmed in 1996 was low in comparison to the number confirmed in preceding years, the vacancy rate is beginning to climb. When the 104th Congress adjourned in 1996, 17 new judges had been appointed and 28 nominations had not been acted upon. Fortunately, a dependable corps of senior judges contributes significantly to easing the impact of unfilled judgeships. It is hoped that the Administration and Congress will continue to recognize that filling judicial vacancies is crucial to the fair and effective administration of justice.

Legal Times, 1/6/97, When There Were 83 Vacancies

REHNQUIST, WILLIAM on JUSTICE DELAYED

If federal jurisdiction remains at its current level -- or, worse, increases -- judicial vacancies will aggravate the problem of too few judges and too much work. Currently, 82 of the 846 Article III judicial offices in the federal judiciary -- almost one out of every 10 -- are vacant. Twenty-six of the vacancies have been in existence for 18 months or longer and on that basis constitute what are called "judicial emergencies."

REV_00255895

Judicial vacancies can contribute to a backlog of cases, undue delays in civil cases, and stopgap measures to shift judicial personnel where they are most needed. Vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the federal judiciary.

The institutions that have the constitutionally assigned powers of nominating and confirming judicial nominees bear some of the responsibility for the current situation. . . .

Whatever the size of the federal judiciary, the President should nominate candidates with reasonable promptness, and the Senate should act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them. Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote.

The Senate confirmed only 17 judges in 1996 and 36 in 1997, well under the 101 judges it confirmed during 1994. The Senate is, of course, very much a part of the appointment process for any Article III judge. One nominated by the president is not "appointed" until confirmed by the Senate.

The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. In the latter case, the president can then send up another nominee. . . .

The Washington Post, 1/2/98, When There Were 83 Vacancies

REHNQUIST, WILLIAM on NOMINEES DESERVE A FLOOR VOTE

Whatever the size of the Federal judiciary, the President should nominate candidates with reasonable promptness, and the Senate should act within a reasonable time to confirm or reject them. Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote. The Senate confirmed only 17 judges in 1996 and 36 in 1997, well under the 101 judges it confirmed during 1994.

The Senate is, of course, very much a part of the appointment process for any Article III judge. One nominated by the President is not "appointed" until confirmed by the Senate. The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote for him up or vote him down. In the latter case, the President can then send up another nominee.

"Judiciary Report: Congress is Probed," The New York Times, 1/1/98, When There Were 83 Vacancies

---

[redacted]

Free Congress Foundation
717 Second Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002

REV_00255897

(2) "Gold Standard"

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Doc Contents
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 11 of 50 | Full Display - 14,979 bytes.[Help]

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS -- (Senate - September 09, 2002)

[Page: S8350] GPO's PDF

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I do not want to take an extended period of time because I know the managers of the legislation are here and ready to go forward with the very important consideration of and amendments to the Homeland Security Department, but I must comment on action last week of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Once again, Mr. President, there has been a tremendous miscarriage of justice by the Judiciary Committee. By a vote of 10 to 9, a unanimous, partisan block of Democrats--10 Democrats--voted against the nomination of Priscilla Owen, who had been nominated by the President to a seat on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The way this nomination was handled is a cause for great concern as well as the fact that, once again, the Senate will not have a chance to vote on a eminently qualified and experienced nominee to serve on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. I am convinced that had her nomination been permitted to make it to the floor--as the Republican Majority in the past allowed numerous controversial Democrat nominees to get to the floor--Judge Owen would be approved by the full Senate and she would be confirmed.

We always hear the arguments of those who say that there have been actions in the past where nominees who were qualified were not given votes. However, during the time when I was majority leader I remember numerous cases where despite the belief of many Senators on our side that the nominees' views were far, far outside the mainstream, we still permitted their nominations to come to the floor. We did that because while we disagreed with their political and ideological views, it was still hard to argue that they were not professionally qualified.

Mr. President, I specifically remember the nominations of Marsha Berzon, Richard Paez and Rosemary Barkett. Certainly, these nominees, while they were qualified, were in my opinion not near as qualified in the legal profession as Priscilla Owen.

Berzon had had no judicial experience whatsoever. And a minority of the ABA evaluation committee gave Berzon and Paez only a ``qualified'' rating whereas the ABA committee unanimously--unanimously--gave Priscilla Owen its highest rating of ``well qualified.''

Beyond professional qualifications, numerous Senators on this side of the aisle also had severe concerns that Berzon, Paez, and Barkett were very far out of the mainstream in light of their records which raised questions for many Senators as to whether they should be confirmed.

REV_00255898

Marsha Berzon had been a prominent ACLU and Labor Union lawyer who opposed parental consent laws for minors' to have abortions and had worked against the rights of individual workers in favor of the rights of unions. She was also a prominent and active member of the Brennan Center for Justice that cranked out initiatives it characterized as ``stand[ing] up to right-wing attacks on the judiciary."

Richard Paez had written publicly of his belief that whenever judges feel legislatures have failed to act, ``there's no choice but for the courts to resolve the question that perhaps ideally and preferably should be resolved through the legislative process." That is exactly the kind of judicial activism that Priscilla Owen's critics have falsely accused her of in order to give themselves an excuse for voting against her. Paez had also ruled as a district judge--prior to his confirmation to the appeals court--that States and cities could not outlaw was aggressive and intimidating panhandling by the homeless because it would infringe on a panhandler's free speech rights.

Rosemary Barkett, while a Florida Supreme Court Justice, had argued for overturning the death penalty of a man who had brutally murdered a youth in Jacksonville and then sent a tape to the victim's mother describing the horrible details of the killing. An opinion signed by Barkett opposed the death arguing that the killing was ``a social awareness case ..... effectuated to focus attention on ..... racial discrimination."

Nevertheless, despite the misgivings and question marks from an ideology standpoint as to whether or not they should be confirmed, the Republican majority permitted all three of these nominations to come to the floor and be voted on by the full Senate and all three were confirmed.

Now, in contrast to these three far left nominees, let me speak to Priscilla Owen's qualifications.

First of all, I am not one who thinks it is particularly important whether the American Bar Association rates a nominee qualified or not. But, of course, the ABA's judgment has been described by a number of leading Democrats as the gold standard in terms of evaluating a nominee's qualifications to serve in the Federal judiciary. Senator Leahy and senator Schumer described it that way in a March 16, 2001 letter to the President insisting that the ABA's role in the judicial confirmation process had to be maintained.

However, that did not prevent them from voting against Priscilla Owen after she received a ``well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association--the highest possible rating they could give and they gave it to her unanimously. This is also the first instance, I believe, that we have had of a nominee rated ``well qualified" by the American Bar Association being defeated in the Judiciary Committee and the Senate. So, from the standpoint of the American Bar Association, this nominee certainly more than qualified.

[Page: S8351] GPO's PDF

Also, Mr. President, when you look at Judge Owen's record, it is clear that she has a long record of being outstanding not only academically and intellectually, but also from the standpoint of character, experience, and professionalism as well.

This is a nominee who has had a stellar legal career. She graduated with honors from Baylor Law School and its undergraduate program and made the highest score on the Texas bar exam the year she took it. She then had a highly regarded legal practice with a leading law firm in Texas for 17 years. She then gave up her lucrative private sector practice to serve with distinction for the past eight years on the Texas State Supreme Court.

REV_00255899

She was elected, in a contested race, as I understand it, and then reelected unopposed with over 80 percent of the vote. She still enjoys overwhelming community support. She has been publicly endorsed and supported by Democrats and Republicans, including 15 former presidents of the Texas Bar Association. Every major newspaper in the state also supports her.

Mr. President, there is no question this nominee is qualified by experience, by education, and by the time that she spent in the Texas Supreme Court, where she has built up a very fine record of being a fair judge who has worked very hard in understanding the issues that have been before her and in casting her votes on the supreme court.

Yet, last week, I was shocked to hear her described by Senator Daschle as not qualified. These are exact quotes: ``We will confirm qualified judges.'' ``Don't send us unqualified people.''

Whatever you may be able to say about might be wrong with this nominee--because maybe she is too conservative, or maybe on she did not meet some litmus test from the liberal outside interest groups or because she didn't meet the test of a particular Senator--in no way could you describe this nominee as not being qualified or as being unqualified.

I am very worried when we see this sort of pattern developing. There have probably been very few nominees in the past to serve on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals more qualified than this nominee by every category you might bring to bear.

Let me remind my colleagues on this point what the their gold standard ABA's actual standards are. Let me quote what the ABA itself says it looks at when it rates nominees.

The [ABA] Committee's evaluation criteria for federal judicial nominations is directed solely to professional qualifications: integrity, professional competence and judicial temperament .....

Integrity is self-defining. The nominee's character and general reputation in the legal community are investigated, as are his or her industry and diligence .....

Professional competence encompasses such qualities as intellectual capacity, judgment, writing and analytical ability, knowledge of the law and breadth of professional experience .....

In investigating judicial temperament, the Committee considers the nominee's compassion, decisiveness, open-mindedness, courtesy, patience, freedom from bias and commitment to equal justice under the law .....

The ABA itself also notes that its standards are even higher for Appellate Court Nominees.

[T]he Committee believes that appellate court nominees should possess an especially high degree of scholarship and academic talent and an unusual degree of overall excellence.

Again, Mr. President, when the ABA applied these standards to Priscilla Owen they unanimously rated her ``well qualified.''

To merit a rating of ``Well Qualified'' the nominee must be at the top of the legal profession in his or her legal community, have outstanding legal ability, breadth of experience, the highest reputation for integrity and either have demonstrated, or exhibited the capacity for, judicial temperament.

REV_00255900

So it is a shame to characterize this nominee as somehow being professionally unqualified and it is a shame that the full Senate was denied an opportunity to vote on her because of a partisan, straight party-line vote of 10-9 with all Democrats voting against her.

Again, in my opinion, it reflects very poorly on the Senate, and I fear it will make it even more difficult for us to complete our work when we see these types of allegations leveled against such a fine nominee. It also puts even further into question the utility and necessity of bothering to have the ABA evaluate judicial nominations when the Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are going to put ideology first and a nominee's professional qualifications and ABA rating a far second.

Mr. President, I could not let that partisan and unwarranted vote in the Judiciary Committee go unnoticed by the leader of the Republicans, and correct the public record regarding a nominee with such outstanding legal credentials as Judge Owen. She is clearly qualified.

I would note in closing that the Washington Post in an editorial published this past July 24 agreed with the President and Republicans when it said that:

Justice Owen is indisputably well qualified, having served on a state supreme court for seven years and, prior to her election, having had a well-regarded law practice.

I hope we will ultimately find a way for this nominee to be confirmed before all is said and done.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to add to what the distinguished Republican leader has said. I have been in the Senate 18 years. This is the best witness I have ever heard, not just for a judicial nomination but for anything--an absolutely brilliant judge. She would have been confirmed had she been reported to the Senate, even without a positive recommendation.

I say to my friend, the leader, I worry about where we are, as well. I think we have crossed some kind of threshold here from which it is going to be very difficult to retreat from in the coming years.

I say to my friends on the other side of the aisle, we are not going to always be in the minority, and they may have a President again, as regretful as that might be to some of us, and the shoe could be on the other foot. Do we really want to establish this kind of standard , that we are prepared to vote down extraordinarily well qualified judges, who may be liberal or conservative, simply because we are of the other persuasion?

I think it is a low point in the recent history of the Senate. And I am not sure where we go from here. But I do not believe I will ever view these nominations quite the same way as I did in the past.

I can say this: I would like to have a lot of my votes back, going back over the last 8 years--Ginsburg, Breyer--scores of nominees for the circuit and district benches who I knew were far to the left of me, but I believed it was the President's prerogative. The Democrats won the election. It was the President's prerogative. And short of some kind of egregious failure to meet up to professional standards, it was not my place to impose my view on the nominee.

REV_00255901

So I think it was a sad day in the history of the Senate. I agree with everything the Republican leader has had to say about this most unfortunate episode. I hope the President will not withdraw this nomination and will send it up again next year, and hopefully we will have a Senate with a little more of an open mind to this truly outstanding nominee.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, let me just conclude my remarks with this, a quote from Senator Biden, a member of the Judiciary Committee for a long time. Unfortunately, he was also recorded last week as voting against Judge Owen despite her excellent record and the ABA's highest rating. But when he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I am convinced he worked hard at trying to be fair in the way the nominees were considered under the previous President Bush.

But while on Judiciary Committee back in 1986 on the issue of judicial nominations he was quoted to this effect:

[Judicial confirmation] is not about pro-life or pro-choice, conservative or liberal. It is not about Democrat or Republican. It is about the intellectual and professional competence to serve as a member of the third co-equal branch of the Government.

I agree. Priscilla Owen met that criterion. She should have been confirmed.

I yield the floor.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Doc Contents

REV_00255902

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years
Terms: leahy and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Washington Times May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

Copyright 2001 News World Communications, Inc.
The Washington Times

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: PART A; Pg. A1

LENGTH: 881 words

HEADLINE: Bush sends nominees in 'good faith';
Leahy foresees few foes to 'encouraging' judicial batch

BYLINE: Joseph Curl; THE WASHINGTON TIMES

BODY:
President Bush yesterday announced his first batch of judicial nominees, saying he would trust in the "good faith" of the Senate to swiftly confirm them and drawing a confident prediction from a top Democrat that all will pass muster.

"I now submit these nominations in good faith, trusting that good faith will also be extended by the United States Senate," Mr. Bush said in an East Room ceremony, flanked by his 11 nominees, more than half of whom are women or racial minorities.

"I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee," he said.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who attended yesterday's ceremony, said: "Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today." "I know them well enough that I would assume they'll go through all right," he said.

Most of the nominees - which include two blacks, three women and a Hispanic - have conservative ties and backgrounds, but the names of three other candidates for federal judicial positions were trimmed from the list before yesterday's event.

Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer said he did not know when those more-contentious candidates would be nominated.

During yesterday's brief White House event, Mr. Bush, in not-so-veiled language intended to put the Senate on the spot, said the confirmation process has became a partisan battleground that has "little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee."

"I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house and no matter who controls the Senate.

"I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process. And with this distinguished group of nominees awaiting confirmation, there is no better opportunity than right now," Mr. Bush said.

REV_00255903

The Republican-controlled Senate used its "advice and consent" role of reviewing all federal judicial appointments to reject many of President Clinton's nominees, often by simply not bringing the nomination to a vote.

In his first two years in office - the only time when Democrats controlled the Senate - Mr. Clinton pushed through 129 judges, an average of 65 each year. After Republicans took over, he won confirmation of 245 - just 41 per year.

The same was true, however, when Democrats controlled the body and the president was Mr. Bush's father. In fact, one of the new president's nominees - U.S. District Judge Terrence W. Boyle - was nominated by the first President Bush but never voted on in the Senate.

Mr. Leahy said that while partisan rancor has gridlocked nominations for years, it need not be so.

"It becomes polarized only if we try to lurch the federal judiciary one way or the other," he said.

But he also said that before he will move forward on the nominations, he will ask the American Bar Association to review them.

"We will submit the nominees to the ABA, so there could be peer review," Mr. Leahy said.

That move may rankle some Republicans and Mr. Bush, who in March ended the ABA's 54-year advisory role in the process of choosing Supreme Court and other federal judges, in part because of association's liberal political activism.

Mr. Fleischer said the more than 100 vacancies represent 17 percent of all positions on the federal bench.

All 11 nominees - of whom seven are sitting judges, three practicing lawyers and one a law professor - attended yesterday's White House ceremony, but none spoke to reporters.

Mr. Bush said: "As a group, they command broad, bipartisan support among those who know them and who have served with them. I submit their names to the Senate with full confidence that they will satisfy any test of judicial merit."

Also attending the event were Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican, and Virginia senators George F. Allen and John W. Warner.

Mr. Allen and Mr. Warner, both Republican, said they support the nomination of Roger L. Gregory, first named to the federal court by Mr. Clinton in a controversial "recess" appointment while the Senate was out of session. Judge Gregory became the first black judge in the 4th Circuit.

Mr. Fleischer said it is "an unprecedented act for a president to renominate a judicial choice to the circuit court whose original nomination was made by a president of the other party. It has never happened before in the history of our country."

But there were signs yesterday that Democrats will seek to oppose the nomination of Judge Boyle, a former aide to Sen. Jesse Helms, North Carolina Republican.

"Until we find some constructive process that allows for balance, then I would not support any nominee, including Judge Boyle," said Sen. John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat.

REV_00255904

Mr. Bush defended his nominees, saying, "Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench. . . . And all will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity."

GRAPHIC: Photo (color), Jurist prudence: President Bush introduces his 11 nominees to the Federal Appeals Court during a White House ceremony. Pictured in the rear row, from left: Judge Terrence Boyle, Michael McConnell, Judge Deborah Cook, Judge Barrington Parker. Middle row, from left: Jeffrey Sutton, Judge Edith Brown Clement, Judge Roger Gregory, John Roberts. Front row, from left: Judge Dennis Shedd, Miguel Estrada and Judge Priscilla Owens., By J.M. Eddins Jr./The Washington Times

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years
Terms: leahy and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:33 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years ⓘ
Terms: daschle and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Washington Times May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

Copyright 2001 News World Communications, Inc.
The Washington Times

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: PART A; Pg. A1

LENGTH: 830 words

HEADLINE: Democrats give up veto demand after Bush's 'gesture'

BYLINE: Audrey Hudson; THE WASHINGTON TIMES

BODY:
Senate Democrats yesterday backed down from demands for veto power over judicial nominees, and said they will move forward with President Bush's first 11 candidates.

Rather than a blanket objection, Democrats will review nominees on a case-by-case basis - standard Senate procedure.

Only one nominee, Terrence Boyle to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, is opposed by his home-state senator, John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat. A negative blue slip on the nomination has been submitted, Democrats said. "The result will not be a veto power over judges, it will, rather, force the White House to come meet us and act in a moderate way in terms of how they choose judges," said Sen. Charles E. Schumer, New York Democrat.

"I think we ought to move ahead with these judges that the president submitted," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat. "I think we ought to move the process ahead with them."

Democrats said they will continue the disputed "blue slip" policy to indicate support or opposition to federal judges from home-state senators, but it will not carry the weight of a veto, which they have been demanding for more than a month.

"That's the power they always had," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican.

The White House planned to send 14 nominations to the Senate yesterday, but withheld three nominees objected to by their home-state senators.

In their public statements, Democratic senators declared victory, citing the three withheld nominations, which they called a good-faith gesture from Mr. Bush.

Asked if letting the process go forward is a conciliatory gesture from Democrats to the White House, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware said "yeah, it is."

"I am pleased the White House has chosen to work with us on this first group," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle.

Democrats had earlier refused to take the word of Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Judiciary Committee chairman and Utah Republican, that consultation would take place. Now they appear willing to give Mr. Hatch and the president the benefit of the doubt.

As further proof of the Democrats' retreat, they agreed to let key Justice Department nominations held hostage over the veto issue move forward today.

"The president made a gesture and it was met with a gesture from the Democrats," said Ron Bonjean, spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican.

"This was a first test to see if they will be cooperative, although there will be many more tests down the road," Mr. Bonjean said.

Mr. Schumer said the Democrats have received "initial signals" the White House "will not try to just roll over us."

If a home-state senator does object to a nomination and it is not resolved through consultation, Mr. Schumer suggested the unified Democratic caucus would block the nomination in committee. The committee is split 9-9, but votes cannot be cast without a quorum of 10 members.

Mr. Kyl called the tactic "absolutely unprecedented" and said he hoped objections would be based on qualifications, not on "political pique or partisan reasons."

Democrats said they were reserving judgment on the first batch of nominees, except to say that most are conservative candidates. Two nominations, however, were first put forth by former President Bill Clinton: Roger L. Gregory to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and Barrington D. Parker Jr. to the 2nd Circuit.

Republicans are united in their approval of the nominations, and said each "has demonstrated outstanding legal abilities, the highest ethical standards, and a proven record of service to diverse communities," according to a Senate Republican policy paper issued yesterday.

Mr. Hatch did not address the Democrats' retreat, but, in a statement released by his office, said he hoped to move the nominees quickly through his committee and onto the Senate floor for a final vote.

"President Bush has nominated top-notch, highly-qualified candidates to the bench," Mr. Hatch said.

"He has reached across the aisle and nominated Democrats and continues to keep his promise to work in a bipartisan fashion to lower the partisan rhetoric in this town," Mr. Hatch said.

"They are all home runs, highly qualified and experienced," Mr. Kyl said.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, said nominees selected on their qualifications would likely be confirmed, but that Democrats would block those they believe were picked for their ideology.

The White House also angered Democrats when it removed the American Bar Association (ABA) from the vetting process.

However, Mr. Kennedy said Democratic reviews of the candidates "will specifically include analysis by the ABA and recommendations by the home-state senators."

REV_00255907

"We ought to hear from the Bar Association, we ought to have extensive examination of their backgrounds, we ought to hear what the home senators say about them," Mr. Kennedy said.

* Dave Boyer contributed to this article.

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years (i)
Terms: daschle and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:31 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

THIS SEARCH
Next Hit
Prev Hit
Hit List

THIS DOCUMENT
Forward
Back
Best Sections
Doc Contents

THIS CR ISSUE
Next Document
Prev Document
Daily Digest

GO TO New CR Search
HomePage
Help

DELAYS IN SENATE ACTION ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - June 18, 1998)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, just a couple of weeks ago, I commented in the Congressional Record on the Senate majority's poor record in acting on judicial nominees, especially noting those judicial nominees who are either minorities or women. I included a recent letter from the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which calls upon the Senate Republican leadership to allow votes on the Latino judicial nominees who have languished in the Senate for far too long.

I have also spoken often about the crisis in the second circuit and the need for the Senate to move forward to confirm the nominees to that court who are pending on the calendar.

Judge Sonia Sotomayor is just such a qualified nominee, and she is one being held up by the Republican majority, apparently because some on the other side of the aisle believe she might one day be considered by President Clinton for nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court, should a vacancy arise.

Last week, a lead editorial in the Wall Street Journal discussed this secret basis for the Republican hold against this fine judge. The Journal reveals that these delays are intended to ensure that Sonia Sotomayor not be nominated to the Supreme Court, although it is hard to figure out just how that is logical or sensible.

In fact, how disturbing, how petty, and how shameful: Trying to disqualify an outstanding Hispanic woman judge by an anonymous hold.

I have far more respect for Senators who, for whatever reason, wish to vote against her. Stand up; vote against her. But to have an anonymous hold--an anonymous hold--in the U.S. Senate with 100 Members representing 260 million Americans, which should be the conscience of the Nation, should not be lurking in our cloakrooms anonymously trying to hold up a nominee. If we want to vote against somebody, vote against them. I respect that. State your reasons. I respect that. But don't hold up a qualified judicial nominee.

I was asked last week by Neil Lewis of the New York Times about this circumstance. He correctly reported my response in a front page story this last Saturday. I am offended by this anonymous effort to oppose her prompt confirmation by stealth tactics. Here is a highly qualified Hispanic woman judge who should have been confirmed to help end the crisis in the Second Circuit more than three months ago.

The times Argus recently included an editorial entitled `Partisan Nonsense' on this hold. The editorial notes that Judge Sotomayor rose from a housing project in the Bronx to Princeton, Yale and a federal court appointment by President Bush, a Republican. The editorial notes that the stalling tactics are aggravating the judicial emergency faced by the Second Circuit caused by judicial vacancies for which the Republican leadership in the Senate refuses to consider her, and another worthy nominee. The editorial concludes by urging me to make `a lot of noise over this partisan nonsense.'

REV_00255909

I don't always follow the editorials in my home State. But this one I am happy to follow.

I will continue to speak out on behalf of Judge Sotomayor and all the qualified nominees being stalled here in the U.S. Senate.

Judge Sotomayor in not the only woman or minority judicial nominee who has been needlessly stalled. Indeed, if one considers those nominees who have taken the longest to confirm this year, we find a disturbing pattern:

Hilda Tagle, the only Hispanic woman the Senate has confirmed this year, took 32 months to be confirmed as a district court judge for the Southern District of Texas. That is more than two-and-one-half years.

Judge Richard Paez, currently a district court judge and a nominee to the Ninth Circuit, was first nominated in January 1996. Twenty-nine months latter, Judge Paez's nomination remains in limbo on the Senate calendar.

Nor have we seen any progress on the nomination of Jorge Rangel to the Fifth Circuit or Anabelle Rodriquez to the District Court for Puerto Rico, although her nomination was received in January 1996, almost 29 months ago.

For that matter, we have seen the President's nomination of Judge James A. Beaty Jr., the first African American nominated to the Fourth Circuit, stalled for 30 months, since December 1995. The situation in the Fourth Circuit was the topic of a Washington Post editorial past Saturday. We have seen the attack on Judge Frederica Massiah-Jackson, who would have been the first African-American woman to serve on the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, but who was forced to withdraw. We have seen the nomination of Clarence Sundram held up since September 1995, almost 33 months.

In his annual report on the judiciary this year on New Year's Day, the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court observed: `Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote. The Senate confirmed only 17 judges in 1996 and 36 in 1997, well under the 101 judges it confirmed in 1994.' He went on to note: `The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' Which of course is absolutely correct.

For some unexplained reason, judicial nominees who are women or racial or ethnic minorities seem to take the longest in the Senate. Of the 10 judicial nominees whose nominations have been pending the longest before the Senate, eight are women and racial or ethnic minority candidates. A ninth has been delayed in large measure because of opposition to his mother, who already serves as a judge. The tenth is one who blew the lid off the $1.4 million right-wing campaign to `kill' Clinton judicial nominees.

Pending on the Senate calendar, having been passed over again and again, are Judge Sonia Sotomayor, Judge Richard Paez, Oki Mollway and Ronnie White. Held up in committee after two hearings is Clarence Sundram. Still without a hearing are Anabelle Rodriquez, Judge James A. Beaty Jr., and Jorge C. Rangel. What all these nominees have in common is that they are either women or members of racial or ethnic minorities.

Acting to fill judicial vacancies is a constitutional duty that the Senate--and all of its member--are obligated to fulfill. In its unprecedented slowdown in the handling of nominees in the 104th and 105th Congresses, the Senate is shirking its duty. The Senate majority's choices as they stall Hispanic, women and minority nominees is wrong and should end.

REV_00255910

Mr. President, I have served here for nearly 24 years. I know Members of the Senate. I have enormous respect for so many of them, Republicans and Democrats alike. The vast majority of Senators I have served with do not have any bias or ethnic bias against people. They do not have a religious bias. They do not have a gender bias. But somehow ethnic and gender biases have crept into the stalling of these nominations.

If Senators are opposed to any judge, bring them up and vote against them. But don't do an anonymous hold, which diminishes the credibility and respect of the whole U.S. Senate.

I have had judicial nominations by both Democrat and Republican Presidents that I intended to oppose. But I fought like mad to make sure they at least got a chance to be on the floor for a vote.

I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty.

If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators.

With that, Mr. President, I see Senators have come back to the floor for their debate. So I ask unanimous consent that copies of the editorials of the Times Argus and the Washington Post, and the report from the New York Times, which I referred to, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Page: S6522] GPO's PDF

From The Times Argus, June 15, 1998

[FROM THE TIMES ARGUS, JUNE 15, 1998]

Partisan Nonsense

You may never have heard of a federal district judge named Sonia Sotomayor, and it appears that several key Republicans are hoping you never will. They'd like her to simply vanish from the nation's political radar screen, but Vermont's Sen. Patrick Leahy is among those who stand in their way.

It appears these political foes of President Clinton are afraid that if they confirm Judge Sotomayor's nomination to the 2nd District U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, as Clinton has proposed, her next stop will be a seat on the United States Supreme Court.

Although Sotomayor grew up in the sprawling housing projects of the Bronx, where success stories are less than commonplace, she managed to graduate with high honors from Princeton, become editor of the Yale Review and earn a reputation as an effective federal prosecutor.

In 1992, she was appointed to the federal bench by then-President George Bush. That would seem to suggest she had bipartisan support, but that was before some nervous Republicans began to fear there may soon be an opening on the Supreme Court. That opening, they worried, would allow Clinton to nominate Sotomayor, a woman and an Hispanic.

REV_00255911

Of course there is no vacancy on the high court, nor has there been any clear signal that there will be one any time soon. Justice John Paul Stevens, who many believe will be the first of the present batch of justices to retire, has already hired his clerks for the next court session. In addition, Sotomayor's name was not on a list of recommended nominees the Hispanic National Bar Association submitted to Clinton.

But even if there was a pending vacancy, what is it about Judge Sotomayor that would make Republicans so worried? Is it that she's Hispanic? Is it that she's too liberal, or too much a judicial activist?

For the record nobody is saying, but off the record, some Senate aides concede their bosses are worried she would, indeed, be an activist. Interestingly, conservative supporters of Judge Sotomayor's nomination vehemently disagree with that assessment.

Enter Sen. Leahy, the senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. In blunt terms, Leahy has criticized the Republicans who, behind the scenes and not for attribution, are seeking to scuttle Sotomayor's nomination.

`Their reasons are stupid at best and cowardly at worst,' Leahy told a New York Times reporter. `What they are saying is that they have a brilliant judge who happens to be a woman and Hispanic and they haven't the guts to stand up and argue publicly against her on the floor. They just want to hide in their cloakrooms and do her in quietly.'

Those are strong words, particularly for the United States Senate, but Leahy's anger is genuine and justified.

The campaign against Judge Sotomayor began on the editorial pages of the ultra-conservative Wall Street Journal and was given much wider exposure when it was taken up by Rush Limbaugh, the right wing radio talk show host.

The Journal was upset with Sotomayor's ruling that a coalition of New York businesses promoting a program for the homeless had violated federal law by not paying the minimum wage. This, in the Journal's opinion, constituted `judicial activism.'

But a well-known conservative, Gerald Walpin, has rushed to Sotomayor's defense and his message is worth heeding.

`If they had read the case they would see that she said she personally approved of the homeless program but that as a judge she was required to apply the law as it exists,' Walpin commented. `She wrote that the law does not permit an exception in this case. That's exactly what conservatives want a non-activist judge who does not apply her own views but is bound by the law.'

What's particularly aggravating by the stalling tactics of Clinton's foes is that they come at a time of major judicial delays caused by the existing vacancies on the bench Judge Sotomayor would fill. The chief judge of the circuit, a conservative Republican, has written about having to declare `judicial emergencies' because of these vacancies.

REV_00255912

We hope Sen. Leahy makes a lot of noise over this partisan nonsense.

--

--

[Page: S6523] GPO's PDF

From the New York Times, June 13, 1998

[FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES, JUNE 13, 1998]

G.O.P., Its Eyes On High Court, Blocks a Judge

(BY NEIL A. LEWIS)

Washington, June 12--Judge Sonia Sotomayor seemed like a trouble-free choice when President Clinton nominated her to an appeals court post a year ago. Hers was an appealing story: a child from the Bronx housing projects who went on to graduate summa cum laude from Princeton and become editor of the Yale Law Journal and then a Federal prosecutor.

Moreover, she had been a trial judge since 1992, when she was named to the bench by the last Republican president George Bush.

But Republican senators have been blocking Judge Sotomayor's elevation to the appeals court for a highly unusual reason: to make her less likely to be picked by Mr. Clinton for the Supreme Court, senior Republican Congressional aides said in interviews.

The delay of a confirmation vote on Judge Sotomayor to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, based in New York, is an example of the intense and often byzantine political maneuverings that take place behind the scenes in many judicial nominations. Several elements of the Sotomayor case are odd, White House officials and Democrats in Congress say, but the chief one is the fact that there is no vacancy on the Supreme Court, and no firm indication that there will be one soon. Nor is there any evidence of a campaign to put Judge Sotomayor under consideration for a seat if there were a vacancy.

Judge Sotomayor's nomination was approved overwhelmingly by the Senate Judiciary Committee in March. Of the judicial nominees who have cleared the committee in this Congress, she is among those who have waited the longest for a final vote on the floor.

Senate Republican staff aides said Trent Lott of Mississippi, the majority leader, has agreed to hold up a vote on the nomination as part of an elaborate political calculus; if she were easily confirmed to the appeals court, they said, that would put her in a position to be named to the Supreme Court. And Senate Republicans think that they would then have a difficult time opposing a Hispanic woman who had just been confirmed by the full Senate.

`Basically, we think that putting her on the appeals court puts her in the batter's box to be nominated to the Supreme Court,' said one senior Republican staff aide who spoke on the condition of anonymity. `If Clinton nominated her it would put several of our senators in a real difficult position.'

REV_00255913

Mr. Lott declined through a spokeswoman to comment.

Judge Sotomayor sits on Federal District Court in Manhattan, and the aides said some senators believe that her record on the bench fits the profile of an `activist judge,' a description that has been used by conservatives to question a jurist's ability to construe the law narrowly. It is a description that Judge Sotomayor's supporters, including some conservative New York lawyers, dispute.

Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, was blunt in his criticism of the Republicans who are blocking a confirmation vote. `Their reasons are stupid at best and cowardly at worst,' he said.

`What they are saying is that they have a brilliant judge who also happens to be a woman and Hispanic. and they haven't the guts to stand up and argue publicly against her on the floor,' Senator Leahy said. `They just want to hide in their cloakrooms and do her in quietly.'

The models for the strategy of putting candidates on appeals courts to enhance their stature as Supreme Court nominees are Judge Robert H. Bork and Judge Clarence Thomas. Both were placed on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in part to be poised for nomination to the Supreme Court. Judge Bork was denied confirmation to the Supreme Court in 1987 and Judge Thomas was confirmed in 1991, in both cases after bruising political battles.

The foundation for the Republicans's strategy is based on two highly speculative theories: that Mr. Clinton is eager to name the first Hispanic person to the Supreme Court and that he will have such an opportunity when one of the current justices, perhaps John Paul Stevens, retires at the end of the current Supreme Court term next month.

Warnings about the possibility of Judge Sotomayor's filling Justice Stevens's seat was raised by the Wall Street Journal's editorial pages this month, both in an editorial and in an op-ed column by Paul A. Gigot, who often reflects conservative thinking in the Senate.

Although justices often announce their retirements at the end of a term, Justice Stevens has not given a clue that he will do so. He has, in fact, hired law clerks for next year's term. The Journal's commentary also criticized Judge Sotomayor's record, particularly her March ruling in a case involving a Manhattan business coalition, the Grand Central Partnership. She rules that in trying to give work experience to the homeless, the coalition had violated Federal law by failing to pay the minimum wage.

Gerald Walpin, a former Federal prosecutor who is widely known in New York legal circles as a staunch conservative, took issue with the Journal's criticism.

`If they had read the case they would see that she said she personally approved of the homeless program but that as a judge she was required to apply the law as it exists,' he said. `She wrote that the law does not permit an exception in this case. That's exactly what conservatives want: a nonactivist judge who does not apply her own views but is bound by the law.' Mr. Bush nominated Judge Sotomayor in 1992 after a recommendation from Daniel Patrick Moynihan, New York's Democratic Senator.

It also remains unclear how some Senate Republicans came to believe that Judge Sotomayor was being considered as a candidate for the Supreme Court. Hispanic bar groups have for years pressed the Clinton Administration to name the first Hispanic justice, but White House officials said they are not committed to doing so. The Hispanic National Bar Association has submitted a list of six candidates for the Supreme Court to the White House. But Martin R. Castro, a Chicago lawyer and official of the group, said Judge Sotomayor's name is not on the list.

REV_00255914

The only Republicans to vote against her in March were Senator John Kyl of Arizona and Senator John Ashcroft of Missouri. The committee's other conservative members, including Orrin G. Hatch of Utah and Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, voted in her favor. Mr. Kyl and Mr. Ashcroft both declined to comment today.

--

--

From the Washington Post, June 13, 1998

[FROM THE WASHINGTON POST, JUNE 13, 1998]

Unpacking the Court

The saga of the North Carolina seats on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit is a caricature of the power individual senators have to hold up judicial nominations. In 1990 Congress added some seats to the 4th Circuit, including one for North Carolina. to this day--7 1/2 years later--that seat remains vacant. The reason is a byzantine power play by Sen. Jesse Helms.

The first nomination to the ghost seat was made by President Bush in 1991. He picked a conservative district court judge and Helms favorite named Terrence Boyle. That nomination was dropped--much to Mr. Helm's fury--when Mr. Bush subsequently lost the 1992 election. Since then Mr. Helms has stymied President Clinton's efforts to fill the seat. When President Clinton named Rich Leonard to it late in 1995, Mr. Helms blocked the nomination, and the Senate never acted on it. With no prospect of success, the nomination was not resubmitted in the next Congress. What's more, since Judge Dixon Phillips Jr. took senior status in 1994 and thereby opened another North Carolina slot on the court, Mr. Helms has also blocked the administration's attempts to fill that seat. As a result, the president's choice--U.S. District Judge James Beaty Jr: has been in limbo for 2 1/2 years without getting even a hearing. Mr. Helms has not even indicated to the administration what sort of nominees might be acceptable.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Doc Contents

REV_00255915

1 of 1 DOCUMENT

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Wednesday, March 19, 1997

105th Congress, 1st Session

Cong Rec S 2538

REFERENCE: ,No.

TITLE: SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

SPEAKER: Mr. BIDEN; Mr. SARBANES; Mr. HELMS

TEXT:

Madam President, I have not spoken on judges this year, but having worked on it for so many years with my friend from Utah, having either been the ranking member or chairman of that committee. But let me make one point.

It is one thing to say that we are going to disagree on judges. We did that when we were in control. We did that. And we said that all the judges that have been nominated here by two successive Republican Presidentswe picked seven out of a total of over 500we said we disagree with these judges. The most celebrated case was Judge Bork, and less celebrated cases were people who have gone beyond being judges. Some are Senators. But the bottom line was that we understand that.

But what I do not understand is this notion and all of the talk about activist judges without any identification of who the activist judges are. It is one thing for the Republicans to say that we are not going to vote for or allow activist judges. We understand that. We are big folks. We understand baseball, hardball. We got that part. No problem.

But what I do not understand is saying we are not going to allow whether or not I have an ideological problem with them.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield. It is worse than that. It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed. You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an upordown vote. That is the problem today. In other words, the other side will not let the process work so these nominees can come before the Senate for judgment. Some may come before the Senate for judgment and be rejected by the Senate. That is OK.

Mr. BIDEN. Fair enough.

Mr. SARBANES. But at least let the process work so the nominees have an opportunity and the judiciary has an opportunity to have these vacant positions filled so the court system does not begin to break down because of the failure to confirm new judges.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, let me give an example of what you just said. I know you know, but it is important for the Record.

I meet every yearI will not now because I am not the top Democrat on the committee. But every year for, I don't know, 14 or 15 years, I meet with what is called the Judicial Conference a legislatively organized body where the Congress says the court can have such a function, where we look for recommendations.

I might add, by the way, you may remember when there was a Republican President named Reagan, the Senator from Delaware introduced a bill to increase the number of Federal judgeships by 84. Why did I do that? I did that because the Federal court came to us, the Judicial Conference, and said, "Here is our problem. We don't have enough judges to administer justice in a timely fashion in this country. And there is a backlog on all these criminal cases."

I must admit to the Senator, when they came to me with that request, I knew the problem I was going to have. I was going to go into a Democratic caucus and say, by the way, a Republican President, who is a fine man but the most ideological guy we had in a long time, who announced he was going to appoint only very conservative judges, I was now going to give him 84 more than he had.

I realized that was not a politically wise thing for me to do. But, listening to the court, I did just that. My recollection is the Senator from Maryland stood with me and said, "I don't like it. I admit, I am not crazy about 84 more judges being appointed by Ronald Reagan. But the court needs to be filled."

Now we have the strange happening, the courts come back to us and sayand they do this in a very scientific waywe not only need the vacancies filled, we need more judges than we have. They cite, as the Senator is very familiar with, they cite the backlog, they give the rationale that cases are being backed up. Guess what? The idea that we will even get a chance to discuss a judgeship bill, I predict to my friend from Maryland, on this floor is zerozero. Not only that, to further make the point, this is the first time in the 24 years that I have been a Senator, in 24 years, the first time I have ever heard anybody come to the floor and say: You know, we should basically decommission judgeships.

The ninth circuit is the busiest circuit in America, out in California. One of our colleagues, a very wonderful guy, a nice guy, says, "I am not going to let any other judge be in the ninth circuit"notwithstanding they have five vacancies, if I am not mistaken, and they are up to their ears in work. This started last year when I was in charge of the Democratic side. He said, "I am not going to let anybody go through until the ninth circuit splits into two circuits."

I said, "Why do you want it to split?"

He said, "The reason I want it to split is I don't like the fact that California judges are making decisions that affect my State."

The distinguished Senator from Idaho is shaking his head. He agrees. He is in that circuit. It is painful to point this out, but the reason why there is a Federal court is so there is not Illinois, Indiana, Idaho, California justice. There is one uniform interpretation of the Constitution. That is the reason we have a Federal circuit court of appeals.

Now, this is quite unusual. We haveand I was not referring to the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who is on the floor, when I said, "there was a Senator." That is not to whom I am referring. But another one of our colleagues said he is not going to let anybody go through until there is a split, because he does not like the idea that decisions relating to his State are being made by judges who are not from his State or are not from States of similar size. That is, interestingly, an effectively rewrite of the Constitution of the United States of America. I do not think the Senator thought it in those terms, but that is literally what it is.

Now I am being told, OK, unless we, in fact, split the circuitand by the way, I am not opposed to splitting the circuit. We split the fifth circuit because when we got to the point where Florida grew so bigFlorida and Mississippi and Alabama and Louisiana, they are all in the same circuitbut they got so big, because of population growth, we saidthe court recommended, we agreedthat it should be split into two circuits. We understand that. I am not opposed to that. I am not arguing about that. But the idea that someone says, "Until you do it my way, until you can assure me I am not going to be associated with that State of California, I am not going to let any vacancies be filled"

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, in effect what is happening is the court system is being held hostage, so it is not able to function properly as a court system should. I submit that is an irresponsible tactic to use. As Members of the Congress, the first branch of Government, we have a responsibility to see that the court system can function in a proper fashion.

The Senator from Delaware, when he was chairman of the committee, always measured up to that responsibility, I think often taking a lot of political heat for doing it. But he was out to make sure the system could function. He had Republican Presidents nominating judges. He processed their nominations. He brought them to the floor of the Senate. He gave the Senate a chance to vote on them up or down for those people to get confirmed. That process is breaking down.

Mr. BIDEN. I voted for all of them but seven, I might add. There were only seven times that I voted against any of those nominees.

Mr. SARBANES. That process, I repeat, is now breaking down.

The other thing that is happening, as he says, instead of disagreeing with the qualifications of a nominee, the other side says, "We don't really need the position."

Mr. BIDEN. That is right.

Mr. SARBANES. And that is what we heard on Merrick Garland. In fact, when he first came up here, he was nominated for the 12th position on the D.C. circuit. They said, "We don't need that position. We have nothing against Merrick. He is a wonderful fellow, of course. We just don't think we need that 12th position." Of course, that does a lot for Merrick Garland. He's sitting, waiting to join the court. Then someone already on the court took senior status, and then they had two vacant positions, the 11th and 12th. Merrick Garland is nominated. He's now up for the 11th position; not the 12th position, the 11th position. The majority is right back here on the floor and it says, "We don't need this position." This is the 11th position. They never made that argument last year when he was going for the 12th position. Then they said we need the 11th, we don't need the 12th. Now they are back, some, todayfortunately, they did not prevailsaying we do not need either the 11th or the 12th position.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield on that point, it is probably going to get him in trouble, but I want to compliment the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee did not buy into that argument. The chairman of the committee took the position on this that we should act, and he had been pushing this for some time.

Again, I see my distinguished friend, who now I work with in another capacity, as the minoritythe euphemism we use is ranking memberof the Foreign Relations Committee. We have much less disagreement than we have on some issues relating to judges. But, with him here, I can remember that during the last days when the Senator from Delaware was trying to push through judgeson October 8, 1992, the last day of the session, with President Bush as President of the United States, the Senator from Delaware pushed through seven Republican judgesthe last day.

I will bet you that has not happened very often in this place with Democrats or Republicans: The last day, seven.

The reason I mention that is one of my distinguished colleagueswe have very different views, but I like him a lotwalked up to me and he was from a State where there were two Republican Senators, and two of those judges were his. He walked up and shook my hand. This will not go in the Recordit will go in the Record, but his name won't, but my colleagues will know who he is. He shook my hand and said, "Joe, you're a nice guy. I really appreciated it." He says, "Of course, you know I would never do this for you."

I like him because he is straightforward and honest. He meant it, and that's why we get along so well. I am not referring to the Senator from North Carolina. He said, "I'd never do this for you." The point being, not that Biden is a good guy or Biden is a stupid guy, the point being that the court is in desperate trouble in a number of jurisdictions. In southern California and south Florida, and in a number of places where there are drug cases that are backed up, a number of places where there are significant civil case backlogs, a number of places where population growth is straining the court, they need these vacancies filled.

I respectfully suggest that it is a rareit is a raredistrict court nominee by a Republican President or a Democratic President who, if you first believe they are honest and have integrity, have any reason to vote against them. I voted for Judge Bork, for example, on the circuit court, because Judge Bork I believed to be an honest and decent man, a brilliant constitutional scholar with whom I disagreed, but who stood there and had to, as a circuit court judge, swear to uphold the law of the land, which also meant follow Supreme Court decisions. A circuit court cannot overrule the Supreme Court.

So any member who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court.

So what I want to say, and I will yield because I see my friend from South CarolinaNorth Carolina, I beg your pardon. I am used to dealing with our close friend in the Judiciary Committee who is from South Carolina. I seem to have the luck of getting Carolinians to deal with, and I enjoy them. I will yield the floor by saying, I will come back to the floor at an appropriate time in the near term, immediately when we get back from the recess, and I will, as they say, Madam President, fill in the blanks in terms of what the absolute detail and each of the numbers are, because I have tried to recall some of them off the top of my head, not having intended to speak to this issue when I walked across the floor earlier.

Let it suffice to say at the moment, at least for me, that it is totally appropriate for any U.S. Senator to voice his or her opposition to any nominee for the Court, and they have a full right to do that. In my study of and teaching of constitutional law and separation of powers issues, there is nothing in the Constitution that sets the standard any Senator has to apply, whether they vote for or against a judge.

But I also respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated is entitled to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor.

We had a tie vote in the committee, Madam President, on one of the Supreme Court nominees. I was urged by those who opposed himand I opposed this particular nomineeto not report it to the floor. My reading of the Constitution, though, is the Judiciary Committee is not mentioned in the Constitution. The Judiciary Committee is not mentioned. The Senate is. We only in the Judiciary Committee have the right to give advice to the Senate, but it is the Senate that gives its advice and consent on judicial nominations.

I sincerely hope, and I have urged the administration to confer with Republican Senators before they nominate anyone from that Senator's State. I think that is totally appropriate. I think it is appropriate, as well, that Republican Senators, with a Democratic President, have some input, which Democrats never had with the last two Republican Presidents. I think that is appropriate.

But I do not think it is appropriate, if this is the caseand I do not know for certain, it just appears to beif the real hangup here is wanting to reach an informal agreement that for every one person the President of the United States gets to nominate, the Republican Party will get to nominate someone, the Republican Party in the Senate. Or for every two persons that the President nominates, the Republicans get to nominate one.

REV_00255932

It is totally appropriate for Republicans to reject every single nominee if they want to. That is within their right. But it is not, I will respectfully request, Madam President, appropriate not to have hearings on them, not to bring them to the floor and not to allow a vote, and it is not appropriate to insist that we, the Senatorswe, the Senatorsget to tell the President who he must nominate if it is not in line with the last 200 years of tradition.

Again, I did not intend speaking at all on this, other than the fact I walked through and it was brought up, and since I was in that other capacity for so long, I felt obliged to speak up.

I see my friend from North Carolina is here. I do not know if he wishes to speak on judges or foreign policy matters, but whichever he wishes to speak on, I am sure it will be informative. I yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brownback). The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, let me say that I always enjoy my friend, Senator Bidenall of it. You have to wait awhile sometimes, but the enjoyment is nonetheless sincere.

SUBJECT: CAUCUSES (77%);

LOAD-DATE: 10-02-1997

activist judges and then not identifying who those activist judges are. This is kind of what is going on here, and no one wants to say it. But since I have the reputation of saying what no one wants to say, I am going to say it.

Part of what is going on here is, and in the Republican caucus there are some who say, No. We want to change the rules. We want to make sure, of all the people nominated for the Federal bench, that the Republican Senators should be able to nominate half of them, or 40 percent of them, or 30 percent of them. That is malarkey. That is flat out malarkey. That is blackmail. That has nothing to do with activist judges.

I do not doubt the sincerity of my friend from Utah. We have worked together for 22 years. But here is my challenge. Any judge nominated by the President of the United States, if you have a problem with his or her activism, name it. Tell us what it is. Define it like we did. You disagreed. You disagreed with the definition. But we said straight up, "Bang. I do not want Bork for the following reasons." People understand that. But do not try to change 200 years of precedent and tell us that we are not letting judges up because we want the Republican Senator to be able to name the judge. Don't do that, or else do it and do it in the open. Let's have a little bit of legislating in the sunshine here. Do it flat in the open.

I see my colleagues nodding and smiling. I am sort of breaching the unspoken rule here not to talk about what is really happening. But that is what is really happening. I will not name certain Senators. But I have had Senators come up to me and say, Joe, here is the deal. We will let the following judges through in my State if you agree to get the President to say that I get to name three of them. Now folks, that is a change of a deal. That is changing precedent. That isn't how it works. The President nominates. We dispose one way or another of that nomination. And the historical practice has beenand while I was chairman we never once did thatthat never once that I am aware of did we ever say, "By the way, we are not letting Judge A through unless you give me Judges B and C."

Now, let me set the record totally straight here. There are States where precedents were set years ago. The Republican and Democratic Senator, when it was a split delegation, have made a deal up front in the open. In New York, Senator Javits and Senator Moynihan said: Look. In the State of New York, the way we are going to do this is that whomever is the Senator representing the party of the PresidentI believe they broke it down to 60for every two people that Senator gets to name, the Senator in the party other than the President gets to name one. OK, fine. Jacob Javits did not go to Pat Moynihan and demand that he was going to do that. Moynihan made the offer, as I understand it, to Jacob Javits. That is not a bad way to proceed.

But now to come along and say, "By the way, in the name of activist judges, we are not going to move judges" is not what this is about.

I might point out that all the talk last election that started off it all fizzled because it did not go anywhereabout how there is going to be an issue about activism on the courts, we pointed out that of all the judges that came up in Clinton's first term, almost all of them were voted unanimously out of this body by Democrats and Republicans, including the former majority leader. He only voted against three of all the nominees, then he argued, by the way, that Clinton nominated too many activist judges. And then it kind of fizzled when I held a little press conference, and said, "By the way. You voted for all of them." It kind of made it hard to make this case that they were so activist.

So look. Let me say that I will not take any more time, but I will come back to the floor with all of the numbers and the details. But here is the deal.

If the Republican majority in the Senate says, "Look, the following 2, 5, 10, 12, 20 judges are activist for the following reasons, and we are against them," we understand that. We will fight it. If we disagree, we will fight it. But if they come along and say, "We are just not letting these judges come up because really what is happening is they are coming to guys like me and saying, Hey, I will make you a deal. You give me 50 percent of judges, and I will let these other judges go through.' " Then that isn't part of the deal.

Look, I have a message to the Court. I know the Court never reads the Congressional Record, and Justice Scalia said that we should not consider the Record for legislative history because everybody knows that all the Congressional Record is is what Senators' staff say and not what Senators know. He is wrong. But that is what he said. Maybe they don't read it. But I want to send a message.

Madam President, when I was chairman of the committee and there was a Republican President named Reagan and a Republican President named Bush, the Judicial Conference on a monthly basis would write to me and say, "Why aren't you passing more judges?" They have been strangely silent about the vacancies that exist. Now, I agree that the administration has been slow in pulling the trigger here. They have not sent enough nominees up in a timely fashion. And I have been critical of them for the last 2 years, Madam President. But that is not the case now. All I am saying to you is, as they say in parts of my State, "I smell a rat here." What I think is happeningand I hope I am wrong is that this is not about activism.

This is about trying to keep the President of the United States of America from being able to appoint judges, particularly as it relates to the courts of appeals.

Now, what is happening is what happened today. Merrick Garland was around for years. Now, what is going to happen is they are going to say we reported out a circuit court of appeals judge. Aren't we doing something. The truth of the matter is the proof will be in the pudding several months from now when we find out whether or not we are really going to move on these judges.

Let me point out one other thing. And I see my friend from Maryland in the Chamber, and I will yield particularly since I had not intended speaking at this moment.

Mr. SARBANES. I want to ask the Senator a couple questions when he finishes his statement.

Mr. BIDEN. The point I wish to make is this. When I was chairman of the committee and a Republican was President, we held, on average, a hearing for judges once every 2 weeks and had usually five judges, circuit court and district court, who we heard.

Last year we essentially had one hearing every other month and we had to fight to get three to four on the agenda to be heard.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to.

Mr. SARBANES. This is a chart that Senator Leahy, now the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee, used today in the course of the Merrick Garland debate which I think is enormously instructive. It is the number of judges confirmed during second Senate sessions in Presidential election years.

Mr. BIDEN. I got it.

Mr. SARBANES. Now, in 1996, with a Democratic President, President Clinton, and a Republican Senate, the Senate confirmed no judges for the court of appeals, none whatsoever, and 17 judges for the district court. Now, in 1992, the previous election yearthat was when Mr. Bush was President

Mr. BIDEN. And I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. And if I am not mistaken, the distinguished Senator from Delaware was the very able chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BIDEN. I did not say "able." I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. I am suggesting the Senator is able. I am prepared to make that statement. We confirmed 11 court of appeals judges and 55I repeat, 55district judges in an election year. Now, that gives you some sense of how the Democratic majority in the Senate, led at the time by the able Judiciary Committee chairman, was dealing with this matter, essentially in a nonpolitical way.

In 1988, when I think, again, the Senator from Delaware was still the chairman of the Committee

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. With President Reagan, a Republican Presidentagain, in an election yearwe confirmed 7 court of appeals judges and 35 district court judges. Actually, the 35 that we confirmed in that election year was better than the Republican Senate did for President Reagan in 1984 when they only confirmed 33 judges. In any event, clearly this performance in these years is in marked contrast to what happened in 1996 and what apparently is continuing now in 1997. Merrick Garland was the first judge approved this year.

Mr. BIDEN. If I may respond to the Senator, obviously the facts are correct, but I think it worth elaborating a little bit more on the facts. I saw my very able colleague, the present chairman of the Judiciary Committee, on television the other day, and he was talking about the number of judges that were "left hanging," who were not confirmed and sent back to the administration at the end of 1992, the Bush administration. And he cited an accurate number. But as my very distinguished friend, who is, as well, a scholar, knows, there is an old expression attributed to Benjamin Disraeli, who said there are three kinds of lies: lies, damn lies, and statistics.

What my able friend from Utah did not mention is that just like President CarterCarter's judges is a separate charge we can go back to, but just like President Clinton, President Bush did not get his nominees up here until the end of the process.

In other words, they were late getting here. Notwithstanding the fact that he was late in getting his nominees up, the Senator may remember in the caucus over the objection of some Democrats who said the Republicans would never do this, I insisted we confirm judges up to the day we adjourned the Senate. During the last week the Senate was in that year, we confirmed seven judges. I could have easily just sneezed and they would not have been confirmed. And the fact is the reason why we did not confirm more is because we did not have time to hold the hearings and we were holding hearings on 20 or more a month.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, I can recall the Senator was holding hearings right up into the fall of the election year and judges were being brought to the floor of the Senate and being confirmed. And he is absolutely correct; there were some

Mr. BIDEN. Republican judges.

Mr. SARBANES. Yes, Republican judges. And there were some Members on the Democratic side who said, why are you doing this? We are about to have an election and the result may give us control of the White House. And the Senator from Delaware said, look, we ought not to have politics play a heavy hand in the judicial confirmation process.

One of the worst things that is happening in the Senate is what amounts to a heavy politicizing of the judicial confirmation process that is taking place in this body, and that was reflected in the performance in 1996 as compared with the performance in 1992 when the Senator from Delaware did his very best to keep politics out of the process, to fill judicial posts and to let the judiciary function as an independent branch of our Government. What is happening here is extremely serious. And of course, the Senator, with his candor, came to the floor and sort of stripped away the veneer and laid out what is going on behind the scenes, which is a complete departure from past practices. When there were Republican Presidents, I did not play a role in whom the Presidents sent up to the Senate to be nominated and confirmed in the job

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I was chairman or ranking member of that committee for 14 years. My distinguished colleague from Delaware is Senator Roth, who is my close friend. Every single Federal judge in the last 24 years who has been appointed in the district of Delaware or the third circuit has been appointed by Senator Roth. I did not expect, did not ask, and not once was ever consulted about who he would appoint, and I supported every one that he sent up. Not one single time was I made aware of anything other than after the fact, which is OK. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. SARBANES. That was the system.

Mr. BIDEN. That was the system. Not one single time. And I was chairman of the committee.

Now, I would point out one other thing to my friend. I want to have complete candor. If one considers taking judges based on their ideology and call that political, yes, we Democrats were political, as well. I am not complaining about that. I am not complaining about anybody who stands up and says I do not want Judge Smith, the President's nominee, because I think he will be bad on the court for the following reasons and comes to the floor and makes the case. I do not quarrel with that because I think that is the prerogative of the Senate and any Senator. What I am quarreling with is a different kind of politicizing, and that is drawing the conclusion that because I now control the Senate, I am not going to let the President of the United States have nominees

THIS SEARCH
Next Hit
Prev Hit
Hit List

THIS DOCUMENT
Forward
Back
Best Sections
Doc Contents

THIS CR ISSUE
Next Document
Prev Document
Daily Digest

GO TO New CR Search
HomePage
Help

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - June 16, 1997)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have spoken on the floor many, many times about the pace of the Senate confirming judicial nominees. The distinguished Presiding Officer, my friend, has had to do double duty because he has had to listen to me do it in the Judiciary Committee, too, on occasion. I commend his equanimity and patience in listening to my remarks.

Mr. President, I urge all Senators, Republican and Democrat alike, to move forward on the confirmation of judicial nominees. This weekend, on one of the ubiquitous television talk shows, the distinguished majority leader said he intended to block action on all nominations except military nominees until President Clinton fills four seats on the Federal Election Commission. The distinguished majority leader, of course, has the right and power to control the calendar of the Senate. I have no question about that. But I hope he would reconsider this policy for all nominees, but especially for the Federal judiciary.

The distinguished majority leader has a concern with the President on the FEC. I am not going to get in the middle of that issue. Both sides claim they are moving forward with nominees. I have to assume the majority leader of the U.S. Senate has ways of bringing pressure to bear on the President of the United States without having to cripple the Federal judiciary or to do things that might appear, whether intended or not, to diminish the independence of the Federal judiciary.

For example, we have four noncontroversial nominees at the moment in the Federal circuit and district courts. They should not get delayed in this political squabble. They enjoy strong bipartisan support. They were unanimously reported to the full Senate by the Judiciary Committee with all Democrats and all Republicans on that committee voting for them. More importantly, they are desperately needed in the courts which they have been nominated.

Let me give an example. Alan Gold has been nominated to be a U.S. district court judge for the southern district of Florida. Now, this is a noncontroversial nominee but it is also one desperately needed. He is an extremely well qualified nominee. The Judiciary Committee unanimously reported his nomination last month, and the Southern District Court of Florida desperately needs him to help manage its growing backlog of cases. This is in a district that has one of the fastest-growing populations in this country. In fact, during his confirmation hearing, the distinguished Republican Senator from Florida, Senator Mack, told the Judiciary Committee, `This appointment comes at a critical time for south Florida. The Supreme Court's recent decision in Lenz versus Mathis has resulted in the early release of hundreds of violent criminals back on the streets and brought about a crisis of confidence in the safety of our neighborhood. This unsettling feeling made it especially critical for South Florida to have a full complement of the judges administering the laws to fight violent crime.'

We first received Alan Gold's nomination in February of this year. The President nominated him for a vacancy on the district court for the southern district of Florida. This vacancy existed since shortly after the elections last year. He has the support of both Senator Graham and Senator Mack.

REV_00255934

He had a hearing on May 7. The Judiciary Committee reported his confirmation to the full Senate on May 22. This is the way the judicial confirmation process should work. The position had been open only a few months. The Senate was out at the time the vacancy occurred. Shortly after the elections, the President moved quickly with a nominee that had strong bipartisan support for his home State senators. The Judiciary Committee moved very quickly, and the nomination passed out unanimously. We know that there is a major need for a judge there. Alan Gold's nomination is now pending on the Senate calendar, awaiting action on the Senate floor. This process should not become entangled in partisan squabbling.

Instead, we should look at the one branch of our Government that is supposed to be nonpartisan--the judiciary--and not allow the Federal judiciary to be caught up in partisan squabbling of Senators or with the White House. We should move this nomination through the Senate very quickly.

Another example of a judicial nomination that we should move quickly is in the northern district of Georgia, where Thomas Thrash, Jr., has been nominated to be a U.S. district judge. We unanimously reported his nomination to the Senate last month, on May 22. But this is also a district--the northern district of Georgia--there in the eleventh circuit that desperately needs Thomas Thrash to help manage a growing backlog of cases.

Now, we received his nomination in May 1996--over a year ago. He was accorded a hearing last Congress, on July 31, 1996. But his nomination got caught in the election year freeze, which said we will not move nominations after a certain time in a Presidential election year. The President nominated him on the first day of this Congress for the same vacancy. That vacancy has existed since March of 1996, for over a year. He had a confirmation hearing on May 7. He was supported by both Senator Cleland and Senator Coverdell, one Democrat and one Republican from Georgia, and was reported to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee 2 weeks later. Now, this is not a case that should be held up because of a partisan squabble.

Also pending on the calendar is Eric Clay to be a circuit judge for the sixth circuit, another noncontroversial, well-qualified nominee. The Judiciary Committee unanimously reported his nomination to the Senate on May 22 of this year. Now, the sixth circuit desperately needs help in managing a growing backlog of cases. They have three vacancies, two of which have been designated judicial emergencies by the Judicial Conference of the United States. I mention the judicial emergencies, Mr. President, because this is not a case of some mere debating point; this is the Federal judiciary of this country with emergencies, where they need judges, where we could confirm the judges, and, frankly, the U.S. Senate is not doing its job.

We first received Eric Clay's nomination in March 1996. He was accorded a hearing on March 26, 1996. He was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee to the Senate on April 25, 1996. And now, more than a year later, we are still waiting for him to be confirmed. Now, Eric Clay has the strong support of both Senator Levin and Senator Abraham, one Republican and one Democrat. We ought to confirm this judge for the sixth circuit.

We also have Arthur Gajarsa's nomination to be U.S. circuit judge for the Federal circuit on the calendar. We first received his nomination in April--not April 1997, but April 1996. His nomination was passed unanimously by the Judiciary Committee back in June of last year. Now he is back here again, passed unanimously again. He ought to be confirmed quickly.

We also have the nomination of Margaret Morrow for the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California on the Senate calendar. She is another well-qualified nominee. Ms. Morrow is the first woman president of the California Bar Association and the Judiciary Committee unanimously approved her nomination last year, but her confirmation got caught up in the election year stall on judicial confirmations. Just last week, the Judiciary Committee again approved her nomination. The Senate should quickly take action on the nomination of Margaret Morrow.

REV_00255935

We have confirmed less than one judge a month since the start of this session in January. We have almost 100 vacancies in the Federal judiciary. Many of them are in critical areas, where huge backlogs are occurring, where courts are saying that we are benefiting criminals because they can't be tried; we can't have speedy trials. Criminals get the benefit of this by not having judges to hear the cases. If you have a civil case, forget about a speedy trial.

I just look at some of the headlines we have had recently seen, which are shown on this chart. One is by the Washington Post, by Sue Anne Pressley: `Cases Pile Up as Judgeships Remain Vacant; Drug Crackdown, Immigration Inundate U.S. Courts in Texas.' Apparently, you can be on the southern border of this country and have drug and immigration cases in major courts that can't be heard because you can't get enough judges there.

Bruce Fein is one who has written primarily from a conservative viewpoint. His column: `Judge Not.' It speaks of the independent Federal judiciary. He says, `The supreme jewel of our Constitution is a fiercely independent Federal judiciary, but congressional Republicans are attacking this gem.'

We have a couple of editorials on the Chief Justice--one from the Washington Post and one from the New York Times--speaking of the alert from the Chief Justice: `A Reminder From the Chief Justice.' These are the cases where the Chief Justice of this country--another conservative Republican--has said, `We have a crisis situation; let's move on it.'

We have one entitled, `The GOP Hold on Judgeships; Partisan Politics Have Ground Confirmations to a Halt.'

Now, I say this, Mr. President--I make the same argument now as when we have had a Republican President and a Democratically controlled Senate. If there is one area where partisan politics should not be allowed, it is in the area of the Federal judiciary.

One thing that sets our country apart from virtually all others is the independence of our Federal judiciary. Every country that in this century has moved toward democracy has sent observers to the United States of America to look at our Federal judiciary and they say, `How do you have such an independent judiciary?' Look what is happening in countries that are sometimes lurching into democracy. They say the one thing that holds them back, that allows crime to continue, that allows an economic system to break down, that allows graft and corruption to occur in each of those countries is because their judiciary cannot be truly independent. In our country, our Federal judiciary is truly independent.

Now, each one of us, I would gather, on this floor at some time or another has disagreed with a decision of a Federal judge, for different reasons. Each one of us, I would be willing to guess, has to thank God we have an independent Federal judiciary and that we can't stand up and tell the judge how to rule. I know that when I argued cases before Federal courts, I used to sit there knowing they were going to be independent, knowing that I might win and I might lose. I would make my best argument, and it would go from there. That is the way it should be.

REV_00255936

What I worry about, Mr. President, is that if we allow the Federal judiciary to be caught up in partisan moves, where one side tries to get advantage over the other, while one side or the other might win in the short term, all of us as Americans are damaged because our Federal judiciary is damaged. Every one of us--Republican or Democrat--should know if we look at history, read history, and if we understand history, that one of the reasons we are the greatest democracy history has ever known is because of our independent Federal judiciary. We should never allow anything to happen to cut back on that independence.

I have never seen anything like this current stall in the judicial confirmation process in almost 23 years in the U.S. Senate. I came here in 1974, in one of the largest classes of this Senate. In fact, I today stand here as the only one who has not announced retirement or left. But I think all the way through that, working with some of the finest men and women I have ever known in both parties--and we have had fights, partisan fights, saying that we should do this farm bill this way or this farm bill that way, or this highway bill this way or that way, or the crime bill this way or that way--we fought it out and we have had the votes and one side or the other wins, and the President either signs it or not. We have done this on foreign policy issues and on all others. But the one area that we have tried to protect from partisan squabbles has been the area of the Federal judiciary.

We know that whoever is President is going to have the greatest influence of all of us on who is going to be a Federal judge. President Reagan made it very clear when he ran for President, for example, who he would appoint as Federal judges. A lot of these Federal judges are not the men and women I would have appointed from that circuit or that district. But I voted for all of them because they were honest people, people of integrity, people of confidence, and people I could look at and say, although I might have disagreed with their political background, I know that, as a litigant, if I came before his or her court, I could expect an honest treatment.

President Bush had other ideas who should be there, as President Carter and President Ford did. These are all Presidents I have served with. President Clinton now has his ideas.

Now, the interesting thing, President Ford was appointed, but these others, in every election, at some point during the campaign, it became an issue as to who will this Presidential candidate appoint to the Federal judiciary. And the American people examined their views and they elected President Carter, President Reagan, President Ford, and President Clinton.

A President should be given a great deal of latitude on who he nominates to the Federal court. If we disagree with a nomination, then we can vote against it. But, frankly, Mr. President, not only does it damage the integrity and the independence of the Federal judiciary by just holding judicial nominations hostage where nobody ever even votes on them, but I think it damages the integrity of the U.S. Senate.

I have said many times that the U.S. Senate should be the conscience of the Nation. On occasion, it has been. But it does not reflect the conscience of a great nation when we take a third and independent branch of our Government, a truly independent branch of our Government, and try to whittle away its independence and try to whittle away its efficacy, and do it unwilling to stand on the floor of the U.S. Senate and vote one way or the other.

If President Clinton sends a nominee to the Senate that any Senator--Democrat or Republican--doesn't like, vote against him or her. That is your right as a U.S. Senator. But don't say, well, they look like pretty good people, but we can't even allow a vote on their nomination. And don't say, if you are, for example, in Texas, that it is terrible that drug and illegal immigrant cases are not being heard, what is the court doing? People in Texas should say, what is the U.S. Senate doing? Why aren't they acting? If you are a civil litigant in the sixth circuit or ninth circuit, or a number of others that have emergency vacancies, and you have one of your rights to be protected, what do you do? You say, why aren't those judges hearing these cases? No. Say, why isn't the U.S. Senate confirming people.

REV_00255937

Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator should be advised that under the previous order, at 12:30, the Senate was to begin consideration of S. 903. Neither of the floor managers for that legislation are present; therefore, a request to continue would be in order.

[Page: S5654] GPO's PDF

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair. I ask unanimous consent to continue for another 10 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we live, unfortunately, in a partisan time. I have never seen either the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives tied up in such partisan knots. I find that it is personally distressing to me. I have enormous respect for the U.S. Senate and enormous respect for the House of Representatives.

I have felt it a great privilege to serve with distinguished Republican and Democrat leaders of both the House and the Senate. I think I have been a personal friend of nearly every leader in the House and the Senate in both parties. And I have considered that as one of the great joys of serving in the U.S. Senate. I can think of a number of times I have joined with Members of both parties to push difficult legislation through. The last farm bill was an example when it was completely tied up. Then it became the Lugar-Leahy-Dole farm bill and passed this Senate with the highest number of votes which I believe a farm bill had ever passed before. The next closest one was probably the Lugar-Leahy farm bill of 5 years before.

I am not suggesting that the two parties hold hands on every issue by any means. I don't think that would serve the country well. But there are certain issues where we come together for the country. We have done this on major foreign policy issues. We have done it at times when this country desperately needed it. We did it recently on the budget agreement.

Mr. President, each one of us should search our souls and ask whether the country is well served by the bitterness that has gone on in some of the partisanship, by the personal attacks against each other and against the institution that we should be proud to serve, or the attacks against the President that have become so personal.

We should ask ourselves if we benefit this great Nation that we are privileged to serve if we diminish and chip away and even destroy some of the independence of our Federal judiciary because, if we do that, Mr. President, some day we will no longer be here. Nobody holds a seat in the U.S. Senate. The distinguished Presiding Officer will leave sometime, and the Senator from Vermont will leave the U.S. Senate sometime. All of us will.

But when we leave, we should look back, and ask, `What did we do here? What mark in history did we leave?' If we have left as our mark that we made the Government better, that we made the Senate better, that we made the Congress better, that we protected the institutions of our Government, that we protected the people of our democracy, then we can go home knowing that we served our Nation well.

REV_00255938

But we should ask ourselves, each and every one, if we leave here and say that as a result of our partisanship on either side of the aisle that the Federal judiciary was diminished--one of the great institutions of this country, one of the reasons we have remained a democracy, one of the things which guaranteed our diversity, which allows the most powerful nation that history has ever known to be a democracy and not a dictatorship--then we cannot feel that we have served our Nation well. We cannot feel that we can be proud of our time in the U.S. Senate.

So I urge Senators to think about this story. I realize that we are in a different time--and I am reminded that I have spoken before on the floor of the Senate about the experience my father had in Vermont in 1937, 3 years before I was born. Vermont was one of the most Republican States back in 1936 in the Roosevelt great landslide. Alf Landon--the distinguished father of our distinguished former colleague, Senator Kassebaum--Alf Landon carried two States: Maine and Vermont.

And the head of our largest insurance company, the National Life Insurance Co., basically the titular head of the Republican Party, was standing next to my father on State Street in Montpelier, VT, as President Roosevelt was making a visit to Vermont and went by in an open car. The president of the National Life Insurance Co. stood at attention and took off his hat--all men wore hats at that time--and he held it over his heart as President Roosevelt's car went by. My dad said, `I can't believe you took off your hat for Franklin Roosevelt.' He looked with arched concern at my father and said, `Howard, I took off my hat for the President of the United States, not for Franklin Roosevelt.'

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Doc Contents

REV_00255939

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress
Terms: presidential nominee and republican (Edit Search)
Focus: presidential nominee and republican and senate and leahy (Exit FOCUS™)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

*146 Cong Rec S 7531, **

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Tuesday, July 25, 2000

106th Congress, 2nd Session

146 Cong Rec S 7531

REFERENCE: Vol. 146, No. 98

TITLE: JUDICIAL NOMINEES

SPEAKER: Mr. LEAHY; Mr. SANTORUM; Mr. REID; Mr. NICKLES

TEXT: [*S7531]

Mr. President, I am sorry I was not on the Senate floor to hear Chairman Hatch earlier this afternoon. I was attending an important confirmation hearing and chairing a meeting of the bipartisan Internet Caucus. I spoke to the issue of judicial nominations last Friday and say, again, with 60 current and longstanding vacancies within the federal judiciary, and seven more on the horizon, we cannot afford to stop or slow down the little progress we are making.

Our hearing today included three nominees moved forward to fill positions on the District Court of Arizona that have all been declared judicial emergencies. Each of the nominees was nominated last Friday. They are now having their hearing, they look forward to being voted out of committee on Thursday and approved by the Senate before the week is out--within one week of nomination. This demonstrates what we can do when we want to take action. All the talk about needing six months or more to process and review nominees is just that--talk. If all goes according to schedule, these nominees will be in and out of the Senate in less than one week.

We could do that with a number of nominees. Instead, this is a Senate that has kept highly-qualified nominees, such as Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon, waiting for years before they get a vote. There is just no reason to have a qualified nominee like Judge Helene White of Michigan held hostage for over 42 months without a hearing.

I am disappointed to have seen another hearing come and go without even one nominee to fill one of the many vacancies to the Courts of

And this is where last October, the Senate wrongfully rejected President Clinton's nomination of Justice Ronnie White. That vote made me doubt seriously whether this Senate, serving at the end of a half century of progress, would have voted to confirm Judge Hastie or Justice Marshall.

On October 5, 1999, the Senate Republicans voted in lockstep to reject the nomination of Justice Ronnie White to the federal court in Missouri--a nomination that had been waiting 27 months for a vote. For the first time in almost 50 years a nominee to a federal district court was defeated by the United States Senate. There was no Senate debate that day on the nomination. There was no open discussion--just that which took place behind the closed doors of the Republican caucus lunch that led to the party-line vote.

It is unfortunate that the Republican Senate has on a number of occasions delayed consideration of too many women and minority nominees. The treatment of Judge Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon are examples from earlier this year. Both of these nominees were eventually confirmed this past March by wide margins.

I have been calling for the Senate to work to ensure that all nominees are given fair treatment, including a fair vote for the many minority and women candidates who remain pending. According to the report released last September by the Task Force on Judicial Selection of Citizens for Independent Courts, the time it has been taking for the Senate to consider nominees has grown significantly and during the 105th Congress, minorities and women nominees took significantly longer to gain Senate consideration than white male nominees: 60 days longer for non-whites, and 65 days longer for women than men. The study verified that the time to confirm female nominees was now significantly longer than that to confirm male nominees--a difference that has defied logical explanation. They recommend that "the responsible officials address this matter to assure that candidates for judgeships are not treated differently based on their gender."

On July 13, 2000, President Clinton spoke before the NAACP Convention in Baltimore and lamented the fact that the Senate has been slow to act on his judicial nominees who are women and minorities. He said: "The quality of justice suffers when highly-qualified women and minority candidates, fully vested, fully supported by the American Bar Association, are denied the opportunity to serve for partisan political reasons." He went on to say: "The face of injustice is not compassion; it is indifference, or worse. For the integrity of the courts and the strength of our Constitution, I ask the Republicans to give these people a vote. Vote them down if you don't want them on." I agree with the President.

The Senate should be moving forward to consider the nominations of Judge James Wynn, Jr. and Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit. When confirmed, Judge Wynn and Mr. Gregory will be the first African-Americans to serve on the Fourth Circuit and will each fill a judicial emergency vacancy. Fifty years has passed since the confirmation of Judge Hastie to the Third Circuit and still there has never been an African-American on the Fourth Circuit. The nomination of Judge James A. Beatty, Jr., was previously sent to us by President Clinton in 1995. That nomination was never considered by the Senate Judiciary Committee or the Senate and was returned to President Clinton without action at the end of 1998. It is time for the Senate to act on a qualified African-American nominee to the Fourth Circuit. President Clinton spoke powerfully about these matters last week. We should respond not by misunderstanding or mischaracterizing what he said, but by taking action on this well-qualified nominees.

REV_00255949

In addition, the Senate should act favorably on the nominations of Judge Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis to the Sixth Circuit, Bonnie Campbell to the Eighth Circuit, and Enrique Moreno to the Fifth Circuit. Mr. Moreno succeeded to the nomination of Jorge Rangel on which the Senate refused to act last Congress. These are well-qualified nominees who will add to the capabilities and diversity of those courts. In fact, the Chief Judge of the Fifth Circuit declared that a judicial emergency exists on that court, caused by the number of judicial vacancies, the lack of Senate action on pending nominations, and the overwhelming workload.

I am disappointed that the Committee has not reported the nomination of Bonnie Campbell to the Eighth Circuit. She completed the nomination and hearing process two months ago and is strongly supported by Senator Grassley and Senator Harkin from her home state. She will make an outstanding judge.

Filling these vacancies with qualified nominees is the concern of all Americans. The Senate should treat minority and women and all nominees fairly and proceed to consider them without delay.

I think it was unfortunate that the chairman tried to assign blame for the Senate's lack of progress on a number of legislative items. I disagree with that assessment. He knows, as I do, that the Democratic leader made a proposal that would have moved the H-1B legislation and allowed votes on the humanitarian immigration issues. The Republicans refused Senator Daschle's offer. We all know the Democrats have not opposed the religious liberty bill Senator Kennedy helped develop. We all know we have been pressing for reauthorization of the Violence Against Women's Act for many months. It is not fair to suggest Democrats are holding that up.

I will give you one other example. I am getting calls from police organizations, and I see the distinguished assistant minority leader, the Senator from Nevada, who served as a police officer. He will understand this. I am getting calls from police organizations all over the country.

REV_00255950

They ask me: Why hasn't the Campbell-Leahy bill to provide more bulletproof vests passed? Why hasn't it gone through the Senate? I tell my friend from Nevada what I told them. I said: My friend from Nevada, who is the Democratic whip, has checked, as I have, with every single Democrat, and every single Democrat is willing to pass it this minute by unanimous consent. We said that to the Republican leader.

We were told there was an objection on the Republican side. My goodness. Have we gotten so partisan that a bill sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, Mr. Campbell, by myself and the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Mr. Hatch, a bill to provide bulletproof vests--cosponsored by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, Mr. Reid, as well--that a bill to provide bulletproof vests for law enforcement officers is being stalled by Republican objections? That is wrong.

[*S7535]

If that bill were allowed to come to the floor for a vote, I am willing to bet--in fact, I know because we have already checked--that every Democratic Senator would vote for it. But I am also willing to bet that virtually every Republican Senator would vote for it. This is not a Democrat or Republican bill. In fact, Senator Campbell and I have specifically worked to make sure it is not a partisan bill.

So I tell my friends from law enforcement: Please call the other side of the aisle. I am convinced that a majority of Republicans support it, but somebody on the Republican side is holding it up. The Democrats are willing to pass it immediately.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee knows we were working toward a bankruptcy bill until the Republicans decided to end bipartisan discussion and negotiate among themselves and not negotiate with the Democrats.

He knows we should have passed the Madrid Protocol Implementation Act weeks, if not months, ago. I tell the business community that continuously asks me that every single Democrat is willing to move forward with it. It has been stalled on the Republican side.

In fact, let me take a bill involving the two of us. The Hatch-Leahy juvenile crime bill passed the Senate in May of 1999. Again, I ask my friend from Nevada: As I recall, that passed with 73 votes, Democrats and Republicans, the majority of both parties. It passed the Senate with 73 votes.

REV_00255951

My friend from Utah is the chair of the House-Senate conference. But we haven't convened in almost a year. It is a bill that should have been enacted last year. But we will not even have a conference. Seventy-three Senators voted for that bill--73. We can't get the conference to meet on it and the Senate controls the conference.

These are a lot of items, such as the H-1B legislation, the religious liberty bill, the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization, the bulletproof vest bill, the Madrid Protocol Implementation Act, the Hatch-Leahy juvenile crime bill, the bankruptcy bill. These are things that can move forward. But there seems to be no movement from the other side.

I will continue to try to find ways to work with the distinguished chairman, my friend from the Judiciary Committee, to make progress. I point out that we worked together on civil asset forfeiture reform, and it passed. We worked together on intellectual property and antitrust matters. Those measures pass with a majority of Republicans and Democrats joining us. But now we find legislation on the bulletproof vest bill, which most of us agree on, that we cannot get passed. We find nominations on which we cannot get a vote--even when the soon to be Republican nominee for the Presidency, Governor Bush, said we ought to vote them up or down within 60 days. We can't get votes on them. Some stay stalled for months and years by humiliating delay.

I have spoken about how humiliating it must be to somebody who is nominated for a judgeship--the pinnacle of their legal career. They get nominated. The American Bar and others looked at them, and said: This is an outstanding person, an outstanding lawyer, and they would be a terrific jurist. Usually we get inundated with letters from lawyers--Republicans and Democrats alike--who say they know this man or woman and he or she would make a superb judge. The FBI and others do the background check --as thorough as you can imagine, such that most people in private life would never be able to put up with it. Their privacy is just shredded. They come back and say: This is an outstanding person.

If they are in private practice, they are congratulated by their partners in their firm. They say how wonderful it is. They realize, of course, that the nominee can't take on any more new cases because no one wants conflicts of interest. They kind of suggest as soon as they have this party that the nominee can sort of move out so the rest of the law firm can go forward.

The nominees wait and wait and wait and wait. Nobody is against them, but they can't get a hearing. They can't get a vote. Then, if the public pressure grows enough, if they are in a high profile, they may get a hearing. Then if the pressure continues, they may get a Committee vote. And then, if the pressure really builds and the Democratic leader and the Democratic caucus insist, they may get a Senate vote on confirmation. When they get voted, they get confirmed--with the exception of Justice White--by 90 to 10, or 95 to 5, and many times unanimously. But their lives has been put on hold for 2 or 3 years. Their authority as a judge has been diminished because of that. It is humiliating to them.

REV_00255952

Frankly, it is humiliating to the Senate. It is beneath this great body. I have served here for over 25 years. I can't think of any greater honor that could come to me than to have the people of Vermont allow me to serve here. I should put on my tombstone, other than husband and father, that I was a United States Senator.

I have always thought of this Senate as the conscience of the Nation. We are not handling the conscience of this Nation very well.

We have a responsibility to uphold the judiciary. If we allow it to be tattered, if we allow it to be shredded, if we allow it to be humiliated, how can a democracy of a quarter of a billion people uphold our laws? How can the country have respect both for the laws and the courts that administer them, if we in the Senate, the most powerful legislative body in this country, don't show that same respect? If we diminish that, it will be an example to be followed by the rest of the people in this country.

There are only 100 of us who have the privilege of serving here at any given time to represent a quarter of a billion Americans. Sometimes we should think more of that responsibility than partisan politics.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before my friend from Vermont leaves, let me say a few things. In this body, we tend not to give the accolades to our fellow Senators that we should. I want the Senator from Vermont to know how the entire Democratic caucus supports and follows the lead of this man on matters related to the judiciary. He has done an outstanding job leading the Democratic conference through this wide-ranging jurisdictional authority of the Judiciary Committee.

REV_00255953

We are very proud of the work that Pat Leahy does. The people of Vermont should know that, first of all, he is always looking after the people of Vermont. I am from a State 3,000 miles away from Vermont, the State of Nevada. People in Nevada should, every day, be thankful for the work the Senator does, not only for the State of Vermont but for the country.

I want the Record to be spread with the fact that we in the minority are so grateful for the work the Senator from Vermont does for our country. The statement made today certainly outlines many of the problems we are having in the Senate, none of which are caused by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Nevada. I must admit, in my 25 years, nobody has handled the job as whip the way the Senator has. In having the Senator as an ally on the floor, I come well armed, indeed.

Mr. SANTORUM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Inhofe). Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBJECT:
JUDGES (92%); CAUCUSES (90%); POLITICS (90%); APPROVALS (78%); VOTERS & VOTING (78%); INTERNET & WWW (73%);

LOAD-DATE: 07-26-2000

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress ⓘ
Terms: presidential nominee and republican (Edit Search)
Focus: presidential nominee and republican and senate and leahy (Exit FOCUS™)

REV_00255954

View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 4:49 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00255955

Appeals around the country. I was encouraged to hear Senator Lott recently say that he continues to urge the Judiciary Committee to make progress on judicial nominations. The Majority Leader said: "There are a number of nominations that have had hearings, nominations that are ready for a vote and other nominations that have been pending for quite some time and that should be considered." He went on to note that the groups of judges he expects us to report to the Senate will include "not only district judges but circuit judges." Unfortunately, the Committee has not honored the Majority Leader's representations and was only willing to consider a few District Court nominees at today's hearing. Pending before the Committee are a dozen nominees to the Federal Courts of Appeals who are awaiting a hearing--12 nominees, not one of which the Republican Majority saw fit to include in this hearing. Left off the agenda are Judge Helene White of Michigan, who is now the longest pending judicial nomination at over 42 months without even a hearing; Barry Goode, whose nomination to the Ninth Circuit was the subject of Senator Feinstein's statements at our Committee meeting last Thursday and who has been pending for over two years; as well as a number of qualified minority nominees whom I have been speaking about throughout the year, including Kathleen McCree Lewis of Michigan, Enrique Moreno of Texas and Roger Gregory of Virginia.

I noted for the Senate last Friday that there continue to be multiple vacancies on the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Tenth and District of Columbia Circuits. With 20 vacancies, our appellate courts have nearly half of the total judicial emergency vacancies in the federal court system. I know how fond our Chairman is of percentages, so I note that the vacancy rate for our Courts of Appeals is more than 11 percent nationwide. Of course that vacancy rate does not begin to take into account the additional judgeships requested by the Judicial Conference to handle their increased workloads. If we added the 11 additional appellate judges being requested, the vacancy rate would be 16 percent. By comparison, the vacancy rate at the end of the Bush Administration, even after a Democratic Majority had acted in 1990 to add 11 new judgeships for the Courts of Appeals, was only 11 percent. Even though the Congress has not approved a single new Circuit Court position within the federal judiciary since 1990, the Republican Senate has by design lost ground in filling vacancies on our appellate courts.

At our first Judiciary Committee meeting of the year, I noted the opportunity we had to make bipartisan strides toward easing the vacancy crisis in our nation's federal courts. I believed that a confirmation total of 65 by the end of the year was achievable if we made the effort, exhibited the commitment, and did the work that was needed to be done. I urged that we proceed promptly with confirmations of a number of outstanding nominations to the Court of Appeals, including qualified minority and women candidates.

Yet only five nominees to the appellate courts around the country have had nomination hearings this year and only three of those five have been reported by the Committee to the Senate and confirmed--only three all year. The Committee included no Court of Appeals nominees at the hearings on April 27 and July 12, and there are no Court of Appeals nominee at the hearing today. The Committee has yet to report the nomination of Allen Snyder to the District of Columbia Circuit, although his hearing was 11 weeks ago, or the nomination of Bonnie Campbell to the Eighth Circuit, although her hearing was eight weeks ago. The Republican candidate for President talks about final Senate action on nominations within 60 days and we cannot get the Committee to report some nominations within 60 days of their hearing.

REV_00255941

There is no good reason to have a qualified nominee such as Judge Helene White of Michigan held hostage for over 42 months without a hearing--42 months, and she has not even gotten a hearing. We had two men who were nominated last Friday, and they had a hearing today. They will probably be confirmed this week. Helene White has been held hostage for over 42 months without a hearing. She is the record holder for judicial nominees who have had to wait for a hearing--and her wait continues. It is insulting to the people of Michigan, insulting to the court, and insulting to her. The people of Michigan deserve a vote up or down on this outstanding lawyer and Judge from Michigan.

[*S7532]

Now why do I keep mentioning this? I keep mentioning it because, frankly, we are doing a poor job in confirming judges. I compare this to the last year of President Bush's term. We had a Democratic majority in the Senate. We confirmed twice as many judges then as this Senate is confirming now with a Republican majority and a Democratic President. Something was said the other day that, well, the Democrats are in the minority, and that is probably why they complain so. Well, heavens, I would be happy to have the complaints of the Republicans when they were in the minority. The Democrats moved twice as many judges for a Republican President as Republicans are moving for a Democratic President. It is a simple fact.

3. The soon-to-be presidential nominee of the Republican Party has said--and I agree with him--that this is wrong, the Senate ought to vote these people up or down in 60 days. Of course, we could do that. There is a concern that has been expressed--and rightly so--that so many nominees are held without any vote. Nobody votes against them, but nobody gets an opportunity to vote for them; they just sit there. And even though the criticism stings, the fact is that, on average, women and minorities take longer to go through this Senate than white males do. Some women, some minorities have gone through very quickly, but most have taken longer.

I said earlier that I do not see any sense of bias or sexism in our chairman. I have known him for over 20 years, and I have never heard him make a biased remark or a sexist remark during that whole time. But something is happening, somewhere they are being held up. It is wrong. One of the things that most Republicans and Democrats ought to be able to agree on is what Governor Bush said: Do it and vote them up or down in 60 days. Let's make a decision.

REV_00255942

Some of these people got held up for 2 or 3 or 4 years. When they finally got a vote, they passed overwhelmingly. But for 2 or 3 or 4 years they were humiliated, caused to dangle, have their law practices fall apart, have people question what was going on. Why? Because one or two Senators thought they should be held up. Well, let those one or two Senators vote against them. We are paid to vote yes or no, not maybe. I do not know whether it is because they are women, because they are Hispanic, because they are too liberal, or too conservative, too active, not active enough, that people don't want them to be confirmed. Let them vote against them.

I argued, when we had a very distinguished African American justice of a State supreme court, that we ought to let him at least have a vote. We had a vote after 2 years and, on a party line vote, he was voted down. Every single Republican voted against him, and every single Democrat voted for him, even though he had the highest rating of the American Bar Association, even though he was a justice of his state's highest court, and even though he was one of the most outstanding nominees either of a Democratic or Republican President to come before the Senate. At least he had a vote. I think the vote was wrong; he should have been confirmed. But at least he had a vote.

I also worry about are all these people who are not even given a vote.

Senator Hatch compared this year's confirmation total against totals from other Presidential election years. The only year to which this can be favorably compared is 1996 when the Republican majority in the Senate refused to confirm even a single appellate court judge to the Federal bench. The total that year was zero. That is hardly a comparison in which to take pride. I say let us compare 1992, in which there was a Democratic majority in the Senate and a Republican President. We confirmed 11 court of appeals nominees during that Republican President's last year in office--11 court of appeals nominees, and 66 judges in all. In fact, we went out in October of that year. We were having hearings in September. We were having people confirmed in October.

So do not come here and say the Democrats are not well grounded in complaining about what is happening. We established the way nonpartisanship can work in confirming judges. We did it for Republican Presidents. Obviously, it is not being done for a Democratic President. What we did in 1992, between July 24 and October 8, was the Senate confirmed 32 judicial nominees. We ought to try to do the same here, basically, from now until about the time we go out. Again, the last time that happened at the end of a President's term, the Democrats helped get 32 judges through during that period of 10 weeks at the end of the Congress. Well, we ought to do the same here. The Republicans ought to be willing to do the same thing.

REV_00255943

In fact, in 1992 the Committee held 15 hearings--twice as many as this Committee has found time to hold this year. Late that year, we met on July 29, August 4, August 11, and September 24, and all of the nominees who had hearings then were eventually confirmed before adjournment. We have a long way to go before we can think about resting on any laurels.

Having begun so slowly in the first half of this year, we have much more to do before the Senate takes its final action on judicial nominees this year. We cannot afford to follow the "Thurmond Rule" and stop acting on these nominees now in anticipation of the presidential election in November. We must use all the time until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetuated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice. That should be a top priority for the Senate for the rest of this year. In the last 10 weeks of the 1992 session, between July 24 and October 8, 1992, the Senate confirmed 32 judicial nominations. I will work with the Republican Majority to try to match that record.

One of our most important constitutional responsibilities as United States Senators is to advise and consent on the scores of judicial nominations sent to us to fill the vacancies on the federal courts around the country. I continue to urge the Senate to meet its responsibilities to all nominees, including women and minorities. That these highly qualified nominees are being needlessly delayed is most regrettable. The President spoke to this situation earlier this month in his appearance before the NAACP. The Senate should join with the President to confirm these well-qualified, diverse and fair-minded nominees to fulfill the needs of the federal courts around the country.

The Arizona vacancies are each judicial emergency vacancies. Two were authorized in appropriations legislation last year when the Republicans Majority continued its refusal to consider a bill to meet the judicial Conference's recommendation for 72 additional judges around the country. All we were able to authorize were a few judgeships in Arizona, Florida and Nevada. That points out one of the reasons that the comparisons that Chairman Hatch is seeking to draw to the vacancy rates at the end of the Bush Administration are incorrect. During President Reagan's Administration and again during the Bush Administration, Congress added a significant number of new judgeships. The so-called vacancy rate that Senator Hatch is so fond of citing at the end of the Bush Administration is highly inflated by the addition of 85 new judgeships in 1990 and by the addition of 87 new judgeships in 1984, of which many where yet to be filled. By contrast the vacancies currently plaguing the federal courts are longstanding and in spite of Republican intransigence against authorizing additional judgeships requested by the Judicial Conference since 1996. If those additional judgeships were taken into account, the vacancy rate today would be over 13 percent with over 120 vacancies--hardly a comparison that the Republican majority would want to make, but that would be comparing comparable figures.

REV_00255944

In addition, even running the gauntlet and getting a confirmation hearing does not automatically guarantee someone a vote before the current Judiciary Committee. Bonnie Campbell, nominated by the President on March 2, 2000, has completed the nomination and hearing process and is strongly supported by Senator Grassley and Senator Harkin from her home state. But her name continues to be left off the agenda at our executive meetings for the last several weeks. She is a former Iowa Attorney General and former high ranking Justice Department official who has worked extensively on domestic violence and crime victims matters. Allen Snyder is another well-respected and highly-qualified nominee who got a hearing but no Committee vote. He was nominated on September 22, 1999, received the highest rating from the ABA, enjoys the full support of his home state Senators, and had his hearing on May 10, 2000. There are and have been many others.

[*S7533]

I continue to urge the Senate to meet its responsibilities to all nominees, including women and minorities. That highly-qualified nominees are being needlessly delayed is most regrettable. The Senate should join with the President to confirm well-qualified, diverse and fair-minded nominees to fulfill the needs of the federal courts around the country.

More than two years ago Chief Justice William Rehnquist warned that "vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the federal judiciary." The New York Times reported last year how the crushing workload in the federal appellate courts has led to what it calls a "two-tier system" for appeals, skipping oral arguments in more and more cases. Law clerks and attorney staff are being used more and more extensively in the determination of cases as backlogs grow. Bureaucratic imperatives seem to be replacing the judicial deliberation needed for the fair administration of justice. These are not the ways to continue the high quality of decisionmaking for which our federal courts are admired or to engender confidence in our justice system.

When the President and the Chief Justice spoke out, the Senate briefly got about its business of considering judicial nominations last year. Unfortunately, last year the Republican majority returned to the stalling tactics of 1996 and 1997 and judicial vacancies are again growing in both number and duration. Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote at the end of 1997: "The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down." The Senate is not defeating judicial nominations in up or down votes on their qualifications but refusing to consider them and killing them through inaction.

During Republican control it has taken two-year periods for the Senate to match the one-year total of 101 judges confirmed in 1994, when we were on course to end the vacancies gap. Nominees like Judge

REV_00255945

Helene White, Barry Goode, Judge Legrome Davis, and J. Rich Leonard, deserve to be treated with dignity and dispatch--not delayed for two and three years. We are still seeing outstanding nominees nitpicked and delayed to the point that good women and men are being deterred from seeking to serve as federal judges. Nominees practicing law see their work put on hold while they await the outcome of their nominations. Their families cannot plan. They are left to twist in the wind. All of this despite the fact that, by all objective accounts and studies, the judges that President Clinton has appointed have been a moderate group, rendering moderate decisions, and certainly including far fewer ideologues than were nominated during the Reagan Administration.

Federal law enforcement relies on judges to hear criminal cases, and individuals and businesses pay taxes to exercise their right to resolve civil disputes in the federal courts. As workloads continue to grow and vacancies are perpetuated, the remaining judges are being overwhelmed and the work of the federal judiciary is suffering.

Our independent federal judiciary sets us apart from virtually all others in the world. Every nation that in this century has moved toward democracy has sent observers to the United States in their efforts to emulate our judiciary. Those fostering this slowdown of the confirmation process and other attacks on the judiciary are risking harm to institutions that protect our personal freedoms and independence.

What progress we started making two years ago has been lost and the Senate is again failing even to keep up with normal attrition. Far from closing the vacancies gap, the number of current vacancies has grown from 57, when Congress recessed last year, to 60. Since some like to speak in terms of percentage, I should note that the judicial vacancy rate now stands at over seven percent of the federal judiciary (60/852). If one considers the 63 additional judges recommended by the judicial conference, the vacancies rate would be over 13 percent (123/915).

What is most significant about the recent trend of judicial vacancies and vacancy rates is that the vacancies that existed in 1993 (after the creation of 85 new judgeships in 1990) had been cut almost in half in 1994, when the rate was reduced to 7.4% with 63 vacancies at the end of the 103rd Congress. We continued to make progress even into 1995. In fact, the vacancy rate was lowered to 5.8% after the 1995 session, and before the partisan attack on federal judges began in earnest in 1996 and 1997.

Progress in the reduction of judicial vacancies was reversed in 1996, when Congress adjourned leaving 64 vacancies, and in 1997, when Congress adjourned leaving 80 vacancies and a 9.5% rate. No one was happier than I that the Senate was able to make progress in 1998 toward reducing the vacancy rate. I praised Senator Hatch for his effort. Unfortunately, the vacancies are now growing again.

REV_00255946

Let me also set the record straight, yet again, on the erroneous but oft-repeated argument that "the Clinton Administration is on record as having stated that a vacancy rate just over 7% is virtual full-employment of the judiciary." That is not true.

The statement can only be alluded to an October 1994 press release. That press release cannot be construed or even fairly misconstrued in this manner. That press release was pointing out at the end of the 103rd Congress that if the Senate proceeded to confirm the 14 nominees then on the Senate calendar, it would have reduced the judicial vacancy rate to 4.7%, which the press release then proceeded to compare to a favorable unemployment rate of under 5%.

This was not a statement of administration position or even a policy statement but a poorly designed press release that included an ill-conceived comment. Job vacancy rates and unemployment rates are not comparable. Unemployment rates are measures of people who do not have jobs not of federal offices vacant without an appointed office holder.

When I learned that some Republicans had for partisan purposes seized upon this press release, taken it out of context, ignored what the press release actually said and were manipulating it into a misstatement of Clinton administration policy, I asked the Attorney General, in 1997, whether there was any level or percentage of judicial vacancies that the administration considered acceptable or equal to "full employment."

The Department responded:

> There is no level or percentage of vacancies that justifies a slow down in the Senate on the confirmation of nominees for judicial positions. While the Department did once, in the fall of 1994, characterize a 4.7 percent vacancy rate in the federal judiciary as the equivalent of the Department of Labor full employment' standard, that characterization was intended simply to emphasize the hard work and productivity of the Administration and the Senate in reducing the extraordinary number of vacancies in the federal Article III judiciary in 1993 and 1994. Of course, there is a certain small vacancy rate, due to retirements and deaths and the time required by the appointment process, that will always exist. The current vacancy rate is 11.3 percent. It did reach 12 percent this past summer. The President and the Senate should continually be working diligently to fill vacancies as they arise, and should always strive to reach 100 percent capacity for the federal bench.

At no time has the Clinton administration stated that it believes that 7 percent vacancies on the federal bench is acceptable or a virtually full federal bench. Only Republicans have expressed that opinion. As the Justice Department noted two years ago in response to an inquiry on this very questions, the Senate should be "working diligently to fill vacancies as they arise, and should always strive to reach 100 percent capacity for the federal bench."

REV_00255947

Indeed, I informed the Senate of these facts in a statement in the Congressional Record on July 7, 1998, so that there would be no future misunderstanding or misstatement of the record. Nonetheless, in spite of the facts and in spite of my July 1998 statement, these misleading statements continue to be repeated.

The Senate should get about the business of voting on the confirmation of the scores of judicial nominations that have been delayed with justification for too long. We must redouble our efforts to work with the President to end the longstanding vacancies that plague the federal courts and disadvantage all Americans. That is our constitutional responsibility. It should not be shirked.

[*S7534]

I am sorry that Senator Hatch feels that he is being attacked from all sides. I regret that some on his side of the aisle and other critics have sought to prevent him from doing his duty. I have gone out of my way to compliment the Chairman when praise was warranted and to keep my criticism from becoming personal.

With respect to the Senate's treatment of nominees who are women or minorities, I remain vigilant. I have said that I do not regard Senator Hatch as a biased person. I have also been outspoken in my concern about the manner in which we are failing to consider qualified minority and women nominees over the last four years. From Margaret Morrow and Margaret McKeown and Sonia Sotomayor, through Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon, and including Judge James Beatty, Judge James Wynn, Roger Gregory, Enrique Moreno and all the other qualified women and minority nominees who have been delayed and opposed over the last four years, I have spoken out. The Senate may never remove the blot that occurred last October when the Republican Senators emerged from a Republican Caucus to vote lockstep against Justice Ronnie White to be a Federal District Court Judge in Missouri.

The United States Senate is the scene where some 50 years ago, in October 1949, the Senate confirmed President Truman's nomination of William Henry Hastie to the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, the first Senate confirmation of an African American to our federal district courts and courts of appeal. This Senate is also where some 30 years ago the Senate confirmed President Johnson's nomination of Thurgood Marshall to the United States Supreme Court.

REV_00255948

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

President's Judges Plan [3]

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 48

Folder 6

REV_00255956

1 of 1 DOCUMENT

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Tuesday, February 3, 1998

105th Congress, 2nd Session

144 Cong Rec S 292

REFERENCE: Vol. 144, No. 5

TITLE: NOMINATIONS OF CARLOS R. MORENO, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA AND CHRISTINE O. C. MILLER, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, TO BE A JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS

SPEAKER: Mr. HATCH; Mr. LEAHY; Mrs. FEINSTEIN; Mr. KENNEDY; Mr. NICKLES; Mr. FORD

TEXT: [*S292]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now go into executive session to consider two nominations which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of Carlos R. Moreno, of California, to be United States District Judge for the Central District of California and Christine O. C. Miller, of the District of Columbia, to be a judge of the United States Court of Federal Claims.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise today to support the nominations of Carlos Moreno to the Federal district bench in the Central District of California and Christine O. Miller to the Court of Federal Claims.

I plan to discuss in greater detail why I intend to support these workload. That brings the total pool of federal judges available to hear cases up to 1,188.

Despite claims to the contrary, the Senate has confirmed the vast majority of President Clinton's nominees, and I am confident that we will continue on a steady course this session. I am basically pleased with the pace at which the Judiciary Committee and the Senate have acted on the President's nominees. Indeed, one of the Senate's first items of business this session was to confirm three judicial nominees, including Ann Aiken, a controversial nominee whom I supported. We can, of course, always improve. I am hoping that the Committee will establish a good working relationship with the White House in this new year.

Such a relationship, however, does not mean that the President has carte blanche to appoint judges. The Constitution obligates the Senate to give advice to the President on his nominees and ultimately to consent to them. Under my stewardship, the Judiciary Committee will not simply push nominees through just for the sake of filling vacancies. Only recently, after the Judiciary Committee had expeditiously reviewed and held hearings on two nominees, did information surface that caused one of those nominees to withdraw and that places the other's confirmation prospects in question. If the Committee were blindly to follow some sort of a timetable in processing nominees, the federal bench would have been adversely affected. Indeed, such a specific timetable could encourage nominees to withhold relevant information from the Committee in the hope of forcing a vote. There is a good deal of background research that must be done by the Committee before it can send a nominee to the floor. If the Committee fails to do its groundwork, it fails the Senate, and thus prevents that body from fulfilling its constitutional duty. I do not hold the President to any sort of a timetable in selecting nominees; nor would I expect others to place such burdens upon the Senate.

REV_00255966

I would further note that the Chief Justice's report did not focus solely on judicial vacancies. In fact, the primary focus of his remarks was the increase in the federal judiciary's workload. The Chief Justice complimented Congress on its efforts to reform federal habeas corpus procedures and to streamline prison litigation suits--two measures that he indicated would be of great benefit to the judiciary. As I recall, these were legislative measures the ABA opposed. Nevertheless, I am hopeful that the ABA will be supportive of further efforts to improve the judicial process.

In a similar vein, the Chief Justice expressed concern about the expansion of federal jurisdiction. I hope in the coming months to review the current status of federal jurisdiction and to search for recommendations on how federal courts might be freed from hearing cases more properly brought in state courts. I think we must be vigilant in searching for ways to utilize properly the federal courts' limited resources.

Last year, I sought to steer the confirmation process in a way that kept it a fair and principled one, and exercised what I felt was the appropriate degree of deference to the President's judicial nominees. Yet, the solution to an increased judicial workload should not be simply to add more judges or for the Senate to be held to some sort of a confirmation timetable. I am confident that the Committee will stay the course and continue to exercise its constitutional duty in an appropriate manner. Thank you for considering my views.

Sincerely,

Orrin G. Hatch,

Chariman.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I am glad to be here with my good friend from Utah and welcome him back from a productive weekend.

Last week, I commended the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for scheduling the judicial confirmation hearing, the first of this year, for tomorrow afternoon, and I commend the chairman again. I note that he is following through on his earlier statement by including both Margaret McKeown of Washington State and Susan Oki Mollway of Hawaii at that hearing. They have each been pending for over 18 months, and it will be good to have their confirmation hearing.

I hope we will maintain pace this year that was established during the last 9 weeks of the last session. In order to do that, I hope that in addition to these nominees we can proceed to confirm additional nominees for article III judicial vacancies before the end of the week.

I am delighted the Senate is getting the opportunity to consider the nomination of Judge Carlos Moreno to the United States District Court for the Central District of California. He has been strongly supported by both Senators Feinstein and Boxer. They have both spoken to me about him and strongly support him.

I have spoken often about the District Court of the Central District of California, its workload and the need to confirm qualified nominees for the judicial vacancies that persist and are arising on that Court. I have spoken most often about that Court in connection with the longstanding nomination of Margaret Morrow. It is my expectation that the Senate will fulfill the commitment it made last year and proceed to that nomination by the end of next week.

Judge Moreno received his undergraduate education at Yale College and his law degree from Stanford Law School. He was a deputy city attorney in Los Angeles, as well as a municipal court judge before joining the Los Angeles Superior Court in 1993. Judge Moreno is currently serving the people of California as a Judge of the California Superior Court. He received high remarks from the American Bar Association and was reported by the Judiciary Committee on November 13, 1997, unanimously. I thank both the majority leader and my good friend from Utah for bringing him up this morning.

Along with Judge Moreno currently pending on the Senate calendar are Ms. Morrow, two nominees for long-vacant judgeships in Illinois and a Pennsylvania State court judge. I hope that we have a strong bipartisan vote in his favor.

I also expect that today the Senate will confirm the President's judgment in nominating and reappointing Judge Christine Miller to the Court of Claims. The President's nomination of Judge Miller was received last year before her first term expired, but the Senate failed to act on it before adjournment last fall.

The President used his recess appointment power to reappoint Judge Miller and resubmitted her nomination. Today the Senate will reaffirm the President's action and confirm her to a full term.

The Court of Claims is an important court. It is established by Congress under article I of the Constitution. No less than the Federal judiciary that is appointed to fill vacancies in the article III courts that we speak about so often, the vacancies on the Court of Claims should be filled and filled without delay.

Madam President, I hope that the distinguished Senator from Utah and I will be allowed by our caucuses to move forward on judges as quickly as possible. I know there is support in mine to do that.

Madam President, I see the distinguished Senator from California on the floor and yield to her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I thank the ranking member, and I thank the Presiding Officer. I also would like to begin by thanking the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for what was, by and large, a rapid and prompt processing of Carlos Moreno. I submitted the name of Carlos Moreno to the President for appointment to the District Court from the Central District of California. In a sense, Madam President, I believe he is prototypical of really what a good Federal judge should bring to that office. I would like to just quickly go over what is an amazing success story.

REV_00255970

Judge Moreno was born in East L.A., just 2 miles from the Federal courthouse where he will be serving. He has earned the respect and admiration of both the legal and the law community, and he has had 13 years of service on the State courts. He has strong bipartisan support, including the endorsements of the former Governor George Deukmejian and Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block.

As the chairman of the committee pointed out, he obtained his bachelor's degree from Yale in 1970 and his J.D. from Stanford in 1975. He began his legal career in the City Attorney's Office of Los Angeles where he worked for 4 years, from 1975 to 1979.

He prosecuted numerous jury trials, misdemeanor prosecutions, and criminal and civil consumer protection cases. He worked as a litigation attorney for 7 years, handling commercial litigation in State and Federal courts. So he has experience in both the civil as well as the criminal law. His caseload there included bankruptcy, wrongful termination, banking, real estate, and antitrust.

In 1986 the Governor of California, George Deukmejian, appointed him to the municipal court. He served there for 7 years, handling 40 civil jury trials in addition to a regular criminal trial workload.

In 1993, Governor Wilson elevated him to the California Superior

REV_00255971

Court where he served for the past 4 years. He averaged approximately 2 dozen jury trials a year, at least a third of which have been homicides. The remainder have consisted of a broad range of felonies and he has presided over about a dozen bench trials per year.

So, 13 years as a municipal and superior court judge. This year he was selected as the superior court judge of the year by the criminal law section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association and was described as one who earns praise from both prosecutors and defense attorneys for his fair, even-tempered handling of a high-volume calendar of criminal cases. The large number of court trials he handles in which both sides, both sides, waive the jury and try the case before him is an indicator, I believe, of the trust he has received from opposing counsels.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record letters of support by George

[*S295]

Deukmejian, former Governor; a letter from the District Attorney of Los Angeles County; and a letter from the Sheriff of Los Angeles County.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Los Angeles, CA,

October 6, 1997.

Re Judge Carlos R. Moreno.

Hon. Orrin Hatch,

Chairman, Committee on Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Hatch: It has come to my attention that Judge Carlos Moreno has been nominated for an appointment to the U.S. District Court, Central District of California.

In 1986, it was my pleasure to appoint him to the Compton Municipal Court and in 1993 he was appointed by Governor Pete Wilson to the Los Angeles Superior Court.

It is my understanding that he has performed in an exemplary manner as a Municipal and Superior Court Judge and has a clear perception of the importance of maintaining a judicial system that insures fairness and social order.

Judge Moreno is well suited for this position. I am confident that he has the appropriate judicial skills and in light of his qualifications, I hope you will give him every consideration for appointment to the U.S. District Court.

Most cordially,

George Deukmejian,

35th Governor of California.

Los Angeles County

District Attorney,

REV_00255973

Los Angeles, CA, May 2, 1997.

Hon. Dianne Feinstein,

U.S. Senator, San Francisco, CA.

Dear Dianne: Superior Court Judge Carlos R. Moreno has informed me that he is seeking an appointment to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, and I am writing to strongly recommend his nomination and confirmation.

Although Judge Moreno is not a personal acquaintance of mine, I have had the opportunity to personally interview him and to speak with several of my colleagues who have appeared before him on many occasions. All of the persons I contacted were effusive in their praise of the professional attributes that Judge Moreno brings to the bench as a Superior Court trial judge: he is fair, bright, willing to read with care the lawyers' written motions, control his courtroom, and give both sides fair hearings in his court. In addition, he apparently relishes legal research and thoroughly familiarizes himself with the issues of a case before he gives a decision--a quality which would serve him well on the Federal bench.

I do not make recommendations on behalf of those seeking appointments lightly, and in fact, I turn down most requests. However, the level of support and enthusiasm expressed by my colleagues on behalf of Judge Moreno prompted me to agree to interview him, and I found him during the interview to have the personal attributes that I had been told he displays on a daily basis in his court. I am confident Carlos Moreno would serve as a District Court judge with distinction, and I believe his appointment would be beneficial to the citizens of California.

Very truly yours,

Gil Garcetti,

District Attorney.

County of Los Angeles,

Monterey Park, CA, April 23, 1997.

Hon. Dianne Feinstein,

U.S. Senate,

San Francisco, CA.

Dear Dianne: It has come to my attention that Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carlos R. Moreno has indicated his desire to be appointed a United States District Court Judge for the Central District of California. I am pleased and honored to give him my personal endorsement.

Judge Moreno has an extensive criminal justice background. He has been a Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County since November of 1993. Prior to that, Judge Moreno was a City Attorney with the City of Los Angeles from 1975 to 1979 where he handled criminal and civil consumer protection prosecutions and legislative and politically sensitive matters. He was a member of the law firm of Kelley, Drye & Warren from 1979 to 1986, and in October 1986 Judge Moreno was elected Judge of the Municipal Court. He held that seat judges' nominations, but first I would like to address some of the concerns that have been expressed with respect to the Senate's role in the confirmation of Federal judges.

As chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, one of the most important duties I hold or fulfill is in screening judicial nominees. Indeed, the Constitution itself obligates the Senate to provide the President with advice concerning his nominees and to consent to their ultimate confirmation. Although some have complained about the pace at which the Senate has moved on judicial nominees, I would note that this body has undertaken its constitutional obligation in a wholly appropriate fashion.

Indeed, the first matter to come before the Senate this session was confirmation of three of President Clinton's judicial nominees. Senator Lott is to be commended for giving these nominees early attention. As well, the Judiciary Committee has announced judicial confirmation hearings for February 4 and February 25.

In 1997, the first session of the 105th Congress, the Senate confirmed 36 judges. This is only slightly behind the historical average of 41 judges confirmed during the first sessions in each of the last five Congresses. And I would note the Judiciary Committee itself processed 47 nominees, including the two judges we are considering today.

Currently, there are 88 judicial vacancies in the judiciary, 85 if the three nominees confirmed last week are included. In May 1992, however, when a Republican occupied the White House and the Democrats controlled the Senate, there were 117 vacancies on the Federal bench.

REV_00255958

until his appointment to the Superior Court in 1993. Throughout his tenure on the bench, he has continually demonstrated the prerequisite abilities necessary to be a fair, impartial, and knowledgeable jurist.

Judge Moreno is an extremely hard working individual of impeccable character and integrity. His list of credits, both professionally and within the community, is extensive.

I would like to recommend that you favorably consider his appointment. I have no doubt that he would be a distinguished addition to the United States District Court.

Sincerely,

Sherman Block,

Sheriff.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, to sum it up, I believe we have a man among men, a fine jurist, a fine attorney, skilled and knowledgeable in both criminal and civil law. This is the reason I respectfully submit him as someone who is really prototypical of the kind and type of background that one might bring to the Federal district court.

I thank the ranking member and I thank the chairman for the rapid processing of this distinguished nominee.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I strongly support the nominations of Carlos Moreno and Christine Miller to serve as federal judges.

Judge Moreno is superbly qualified to serve as a federal judge in the Central District of California. He is a graduate of Yale University, Harvard Business School, and Stanford Law School. Currently, he is a judge on the Los Angeles Superior Court. As a member of that court's Trial Delay Reduction Committee he was instrumental in establishing and enforcing policies that successfully reduced trial backlogs in Los Angeles County. At a time when lengthy backlogs are also plaguing the federal courts, Judge Moreno's experience will be an important asset for California's Central District Court.

Judge Miller is also well qualified to continue her service on the United States Court of Federal Claims. She has served on that court for the past fifteen years, and President Clinton's nomination of her for a second fifteen-year term is a tribute to her ability and leadership.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my concern that the Senate has still not had a chance to vote on the nomination of Margaret Morrow to the federal district court for the Central District of California. Ms. Morrow was first nominated in May 1996. She was approved by the Judiciary Committee in June last year, and it is long past time for the Senate to vote on her nomination.

On average, it is taking twice as long for Senate Republicans to confirm President Clinton's nominees as it took for Democrats to act on President Bush's nominations. But I am especially concerned about the Republicans' record of subjecting women who are nominated for federal judgeships to far greater delays than men.

Women nominated to the federal courts are four times--four times--more likely than men to be held up by the Republican Senate for more than a year.

REV_00255977

Last year, the Senate confirmed 30 men, but only 6 women. And, by confirming only 36 judges, the Senate condemned many of our nation's busiest courts to even lengthier delays in processing their civil cases.

There is no question that Margaret Morrow possesses the necessary qualifications to be confirmed. She is a Harvard-educated attorney and a partner in a prestigious California law firm. She is the first woman to serve as the president of the California Bar Association. She is a well-respected attorney and a role model for women in the legal profession.

Yet action on her nomination has been delayed--like nine other nominees who have been waiting for more than 18 months--because the Republicans are playing politics and preventing needed judicial positions from being filled.

When even a Republican Chief Justice criticizes the Republican Congress for refusing to move more quickly to confirm judges, you know something's wrong. The Chief Justice is deeply concerned about the large number of judicial vacancies on the federal courts. There are too few judges to handle the workload.

The bottleneck in the Senate is jeopardizing the court system and undermining the quality of justice. Fewer than half of President Clinton's nominees have been confirmed.

We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote. If our Republican colleagues don't like them, vote against them.

But give them a vote.

The distinguished majority leader has rightly noted that the process of confirming judges is time-consuming. The Senate should take care to ensure that only individuals acceptable to both the President and the Senate are confirmed. The President and the Senate do not always agree. But it should not take longer to consider women than it does to consider men.

[*S296]

Some Republicans claim they have slowed the confirmation process to protect the federal courts from "judicial activism.'' But this argument is a smokescreen. If President Clinton is actually nominating judicial activists, then why is it that these nominees are approved overwhelmingly when the Senate is finally allowed to vote on them? The closest vote that we have had on any nominee in this Congress was the 76 to 30 vote in favor of Ann Aiken last week.

The claim that Clinton judges are activist judges is a transparent ruse being used to slow down the confirmation process. The reason is obvious. The Republican majority in Congress is doing all it can to prevent a Democratic President from naming judges to the federal courts. The courts are suffering, and so is the nation.

In some areas of the country, people have to wait years to have their cases even heard in court. And then they have to wait years more for overburdened judges to find time to issue their decisions. Families, workers, small businesses, women and minorities have traditionally looked to the courts to resolve disputes. The lack of federal judges makes the swift resolution of their cases impossible.

In fact, there are more sitting Federal judges today than there were through virtually all of the Reagan and Bush administrations. As of today, there are 756 active Federal judges. In addition, there are 432 senior judges who must, by law, hear cases, albeit with a reduced load. Ordinarily, when a judge decides to leave the bench, he or she does not completely retire, but instead takes senior status. A judge who takes senior status, as opposed to a judge who completely retires, must hear a certain number of cases each year. Thus, when a judge leaves the bench, he or she does not stop working altogether, he or she merely takes a somewhat reduced caseload.

Even in the ninth circuit, which has 10 vacancies, only one judge has actually stopped hearing cases. The others have all taken senior status and are still hearing cases. The total pool of Federal judges available to hear cases is 1,188, a record number of Federal judges.

The Republican Senate has confirmed the vast majority of President Clinton's judicial nominees, and if the President continues to send us qualified nominees, I am sure that trend will continue. Let me say, however, that I will not vote to confirm judges who refuse to abide by the rule of law. In my view, that is the absolute minimal qualification an individual must have to serve as one of our lifetime-appointed Federal judges.

Last year, I sought to steer the confirmation process in a way that kept it a fair and principled one, and exercised what I felt was the appropriate degree of deference to the President's judicial nominees. It is in this spirit of fairness that I will vote to confirm Judge Miller and Judge Moreno.

[*S293]

REV_00255959

Judge Moreno is currently a Los Angeles superior court judge. He was appointed to that position in 1993 by Governor Wilson. Prior to his current appointment, Judge Moreno served as a municipal court judge, worked as an associate in the L.A. firm of Kelley, Drye & Warren, and served as deputy city attorney in Los Angeles.

Judge Miller currently serves on the Court of Federal Claims. She was appointed to that position in 1983 by President Ronald Reagan. Judge Miller, before her judicial appointment, worked at the law firms of Shack & Kimball, and then Hogan & Hartson. She also had the honor, after graduating from the Utah College of Law, of clerking for the Honorable David Lewis, a Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals judge.

I think both these individuals will serve the Federal bench well and, therefore, urge my colleagues to support them. I also would like to submit for the Record an editorial written by our leader, Senator Trent Lott, which appeared on February 2 in the Washington Post, also a letter I wrote to the ABA discussing the Senate's work in confirming nominees. I ask unanimous consent that both those documents be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

From the Washington Post, Feb. 2, 1998

Rehnquist's Rush to Judgment

(By Trent Lott)

Chief Justice Rehnquist's 1997 year-end report has drawn considerable press attention to the Senate's role in the confirmation and appointment of federal judges. Good. It's about time proper attention was given to these unique government officials, who are appointed for life, paid salaries that can run to nearly $145,000 and are provided facilities and staff costing American taxpayers many millions of dollars annually.

And if the cost of these judgeships and the judiciary bureaucracy isn't enough to cause concern, consider the fact that many such lifetime-appointed judges actually attempt to make law from the bench. This is especially troubling when federal judges seek to impose taxes on the public or turn criminals loose on society.

The chief justice contends that federal judges are underpaid and overworked and that the "quality of justice'' administered by the federal judiciary is in peril. He also attempts to make an argument for more judges based on statistics regarding, for example, the total caseload of all district and circuit courts and the number of judicial vacancies.

Interestingly, Rehnquist chooses to omit statistics that hurt his case. In his report, he notes that the "Senate confirmed only 17 judges in 1996 and 36 in 1997, well under the 101 judges it confirmed during 1994.''

True, the 17 judges confirmed in 1996 were certainly low as compared with most other years. But in 1989, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 15 of President George Bush's nominees. Moreover, the chief justice's reference to 1994 and the confirmation of 101 judges that year is inappropriate, because the Democrats controlled the Senate and the presidency that year. Historically, the number and pace of confirmations lessen when one party holds the White House and the other the Senate. The large number of vacancies on the bench in 1994 allowed Clinton to nominate many more judges than in an average year, which accounts for the large number of confirmations.

REV_00255961

The chief justice also neglected to point out that Congress has authorized an additional 250 judgeships since 1978 (now totaling 849). Further, rather than retiring, many judges take "senior'' status, in which they continue to be paid, have staff and decide cases. There are approximately 274 district and 82 circuit judges on "senior'' status, contributing to the reduction of the workload of "active'' judges.

Almost every year, Congress receives a request from the judiciary to add new judgeships to meet caseload increases. The Committee on Long Range Planning of the Judicial Conference projects that we will need 1,370 federal judges by the year 2000, 2,350 judges by 2010 and 4,110 by 2020. Clearly, the problems of caseload will have to be addressed over the coming years. But merely creating new judgeships will not provide solutions to such issues.

The chief justice also focused on the number of vacancies--83--in the district and circuit courts. This number pales in comparison with the 125 vacancies that occurred in 1993 during President Clinton's first year, when the Democrats controlled the Senate. The chief also failed to mention that President Clinton has not submitted nominees to the Senate for 41 of these vacancies.

REV_00255962

Of the 13 nominees for circuit court judgeships, five were went to the Senate less than 30 days from adjournment. Of the 28 district court nominees, three were sent to the Senate within 30 days of adjournment, another three within 45 days and one within 60 days of adjournment. Even the most partial observers of the confirmation process recognize that more than 60 days is required for investigation of a nominee's education, experience and potential judicial temperament.

As noted by the chief justice, the judiciary characterizes 26 of the current 83 vacancies that have existed for more than 18 months as "judicial emergencies.'' There appears to be no basis for this characterization other than the length of time the position has been vacant and the notion that every authorized position urgently needs to be filled. In fact, one vacant position in the 4th Circuit, authorized in 1990, has never been filled, and President Clinton has not nominated anyone to it. By the same token, he submitted nominees just last year for two Texas district court positions vacant since being authorized in 1990.

Clearly, the president did not view vacancies in any of those positions as "emergencies.'' In all, of the 26 "emergencies,'' only 12 apparently are deemed important enough that the president has submitted nominations fill them.

REV_00255963

The pace of confirmation hasn't changed much in the Senate since 1987. That was the year Democrats regained control of the Senate and slowed the process of confirming Reagan nominees. District court confirmations averaged 129 days and circuit court confirmations 113 days in 1987. This pace continued during the Bush administration, when Democrats controlled the Senate. The experience of the Robert Bork, Douglas Ginsberg and Clarence Thomas nominations to the Supreme Court did much to further politicize an already labor-intensive and time-consuming review process.

The pace quickened in 1993 and '94, when President Clinton's district court nominees were confirmed on average within 74 days of referral to the Democrat-controlled Senate. The pace naturally slowed again when Republicans regained control of the Senate.

The chief justice's dismal assessment of the judiciary is not warranted. Congress will continue to closely monitor the needs of the judiciary to fulfill its function as a separate and equal branch of government. As a part of this process, Congress will create and maintain such judgeships as are necessary to empower the judiciary to accomplish the fair and equal application of justice through the interpretation and application of our laws.

U.S. Senate,

Committee on the Judiciary,

REV_00255964

Washington, DC, February 3, 1998.

Mr. Jerome Shestack,

President, American Bar Association, Philadelphia, PA.

Dear President Shestack: I am sorry that I could not attend the American Bar Association's annual convention this year, as I am at the World Economic Summit. I understand, however, that Senator Patrick Leahy ably represents the Judiciary Committee. Nevertheless, I thought it prudent to make you aware of my views regarding the so-called judicial vacancies issue, in which, I am sure, the ABA has great interest.

As you are doubtless aware, Chief Justice William Rehnquist recently released his annual report on the federal judiciary. In that report, he noted, among other things, the need expeditiously to fill vacancies on the federal bench. The Chief Justice's comments were very similar to those made over the years, including 1992, when he urged the Senate to confirm more of President Bush's judicial nominees. Interestingly, 117 vacancies existed May 1992, compared with the 88 we have today.

In 1997, the Senate confirmed 36 judges, only slightly behind the historical average of 41 judges confirmed during the first sessions in each of the last five Congresses. And the Judiciary Committee itself processed 47 nominees during the past session. There are currently more sitting judges than there were throughout virtually all the Reagan and Bush administrations. As of today, there are approximately 756 active federal judges. In addition, there are 432 senior judges who must continue to hear cases, albeit with a reduced

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

November 7, 2002

Dear Senator Daschle, Senator Lott, Senator Leahy, and Senator Hatch:

On October 30, 2002, as you know, President Bush announced a proposal for timely consideration of judicial nominees. I write regarding the President's proposal and to suggest that we meet at your convenience to discuss it further.

The proposal is designed to resolve the judicial vacancy crisis and to improve the judicial nomination and confirmation process, both now and in the future no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The proposal involves all three Branches of the Federal Government. It calls on federal court of appeals and district court judges to provide advance notice of one year if possible before retirement, which builds on existing Judicial Conference policy. The proposal calls on Presidents to submit nominations within 180 days of a vacancy or announced future retirement. (President Bush will abide by this deadline for pending and future vacancies, including for the new judgeships recently created by H.R. 2215. The President thus intends, for example, to submit nominees for all currently known vacancies for which no nominee is pending no later than April 25, 2003.) The proposal further provides that the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold a hearing for each nominee within 90 days of a nomination, and the full Senate should hold an up-or-down floor vote on each nominee within 180 days after nomination.

The President's proposal builds upon statements that he made during the 2000 Presidential campaign and again in 2001 when announcing his first 11 judicial nominees. On June 8, 2000, then-Governor Bush stated that the Senate confirmation process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation. . . . The President must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them." At that time, Governor Bush proposed a timely standard for the Senate to meet in voting on all Presidential nominations, including nominations to the Judiciary. He stated that he would "ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November." When asked directly whether his standard should apply to President Clinton's pending judicial nominees, Governor Bush stated that he "would hope that Republicans would hear my call" and added: "[I]f it's good enough for me, it's good enough for . . . President [Clinton]."

On May 9, 2001, when announcing his first judicial nominees, President Bush similarly stated: "Over the years, we have seen how the confirmation process can be turned to other ends. . . . This is not good for the Senate, for our courts or for the country. . . . I urge Senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house, and no matter who controls the Senate. I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process."

The President's October 30, 2002, proposal builds upon his prior statements, and also upon the past statements of Senators of both parties who have advocated a timely hearing and timely up-or-down floor vote for every judicial nominee. The proposal also is consistent with recommendations of the Chief Justice (as representative of the Federal Judiciary), the American Bar Association, the bipartisan Citizens for Independent Courts, and the bipartisan Miller Commission.

In response to the President's call for a timely hearing and up-or-down floor vote, some have argued that certain appeals court nominees of President Clinton were mistreated, while others have contended that certain appeals court nominees of President George H.W. Bush in 1991 and 1992 were mistreated. In fact, at the end of those two Administrations, the records of the 106th Congress (in 1999-2000) and the 102nd Congress (in 1991-92) were similar. In 1999-2000, of the 30 court of appeals nominees President Clinton submitted more than 180 days before the end of his Presidency, only 15 received an up-or-down Senate floor vote. (President Bush re-nominated one of those 15 appeals court nominees who did not receive an up-or-down floor vote, Roger Gregory.) In 1991-92, of the 29 court of appeals nominees President George H.W. Bush submitted more than 180 days before the end of his Presidency, only 19 received an up-or-down floor vote. The record of the Senate in those years does not meet the standard that President Bush has proposed. As the President has stated, however, we will not be able to solve the vacancy crisis and improve the judicial nomination and confirmation process with an endless cycle of blame and bitterness.

The President believes we all must look forward and ensure a process that is fair and predictable from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. As he said when announcing the proposal, the President wants to work with the other Branches to ensure a system that is fair and effective for the Judiciary, Senators, Presidents, and nominees -- and for the American people who depend on the federal courts to dispense justice fairly and promptly.

Thank you very much for your continued work on this issue and for considering the President's proposal to improve the judicial nomination and confirmation process on a bipartisan basis. I look forward to meeting with you at your convenience to discuss the proposal further.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable Thomas A. Daschle
The Honorable Trent Lott
The Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
The Honorable Orrin G. Hatch
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Copy: The Honorable William H. Rehnquist

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress ⓘ
Terms: presidential nominee and republican (Edit Search)
Focus: presidential nominee and republican and senate and leahy and bush (Exit FOCUS™)

↶Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

*146 Cong Rec S 9657, **

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Tuesday, October 3, 2000

106th Congress, 2nd Session

146 Cong Rec S 9657

REFERENCE: Vol. 146, No. 121

TITLE: EXECUTIVE SESSION - NOMINATIONS OF MICHAEL J. REAGAN, OF ILLINOIS, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS; SUSAN RITCHIE BOLTON, OF ARIZONA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA; MARY H. MURGUIA, OF ARIZONA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

SPEAKER: Mr. HATCH. Mr. DURBIN. Mr. ROBB. Mr. LEVIN. Mr. HARKIN. Mr. LEAHY.

BILL NUMBER:
S. Res. 364 ◆ Retrieve Bill Tracking Report
◆ Retrieve full text of bill

TEXT: [*S9657]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now go into executive session and proceed to the consideration en bloc of Executive Calendar Nos. 652, 654, and 655, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of Michael J. Reagan, of Illinois, to be U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of Illinois;

Susan Ritchie Bolton, of Arizona, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Arizona;

Mary H. Murguia, of Arizona, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

REV_00255982

labeled him a "judicial activist." They produced some excuses or reasons for not confirming him, and he was defeated--one of the few times in modern memory that a judge made it to the floor and lost on a recorded vote.

I wonder how Justice Thurgood Marshall, the first black Justice appointed to the Supreme Court 33 years ago, would observe and reflect on what happened to Ronnie White.

I think Justice Marshall would have viewed the current state of judicial nominations differently than the Federalist Society. This conservative group has over 25,000 members plus scores of affiliates, including former Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr; Supreme Court Justices Thomas and Scalia; and University of Chicago's Richard Epstein and Frank Easterbrook, also a federal appellate judge.

And their numbers are growing. The Federalist Society has chapters in 140 out of the 182 accredited law schools. The campus chapter at the University of Illinois College of Law is very active.

I don't have to tell you about the Society's "originalist" approach to the Constitution. Justice Scalia's and Justice Thomas's opinions clearly reflect their point of view.

I don't have to tell you the Federalist Society has been instrumental in influencing the law. They have helped to weaken or rolled back statutes on civil rights and affirmative action; voting rights; women's right's and abortion rights; workers' rights; prisoners' rights; and the rights of consumers, the handicapped and the elderly.

Martin Luther King., Jr., once said, "The moment is always right to do what is right."

I think the moment is right to hold the tobacco industry responsible for the costs incurred by the federal government for the medical treatment of individuals made ill by their deadly products.

I think the moment is right to hold the gun industry accountable for the irresponsible design, manufacture, distribution and marketing of their lethal weapons.

The moment is right to ensure that HMOs and health insurance companies can be held accountable for their wrongdoing that results in the injury or death of American citizens.

The moment may be right to elect a President who will appoint

REV_00255991

Justices who reflect that point of view and will protect our civil liberties.

I think the moment is right to remove barriers to the bench so that every citizen--whether man, woman, or whatever ethnic, racial, or religious background--can be adequately represented on our court.

I will say a word on behalf of my nominee who is before the Senate, Michael Reagan, the judicial nominee for the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Illinois. Senator Fitzgerald and I reached an agreement about the selection of these nominees. Michael Reagan is the product of this agreement.

Michael Reagan possesses all the qualities necessary to make a tremendous contribution to the federal bench.

He has strong bipartisan support, as well as, the support of several respected judges, leaders, and organizations including: the National Sheriffs' Association; the Honorable Moses Harrison II, Chief Justice, Illinois Supreme Court; The Most Reverend Wilton D. Gregory, Bishop of the Diocese of Belleville; the Illinois Federation of Teachers; and the Illinois Pharmacists Association.

They have all written letters supporting Michael Reagan's nomination to fill the Southern District of Illinois' judicial vacancy.

Michael Reagan is a full-time public servant who wears several hats. In addition to his private practice, Mr. Reagan serves as a Commissioner of the Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Illinois. Mr. Reagan has held this position since 1995 and is responsible for supervising the attorney registration and disciplinary system in Illinois, a very important assignment.

In addition, Mr. Reagan serves as Assistant Public Defender in St. Clair County, Illinois. In this capacity, he represents indigent criminal defendants charged with major felonies. Mr. Reagan has served as an Assistant Public Defender since 1996.

Mr. Reagan also serves as an Honorary Deputy Sheriff in St. Clair, a fully commissioned law enforcement position that he has held for the past three years. His background as a police officer certainly qualified him in that capacity. As an Honorary Deputy Sheriff, Mr. Reagan has full arrest powers and is subject to be called to duty in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Reagan began his career in public service as a police officer after graduating with a Bachelor's of Science degree from Bradley University in 1976, his law degree from St. Louis University in 1980.

REV_00255992

Although Mr. Reagan holds many notable positions, the most important roles he plays are that of husband and father. Mr. Reagan has been married to Elaine Catherine Edgar since 1976. They have four boys. I have met them all; they are great kids.

The Reagans will soon be celebrating their 25th anniversary. It is a great family.

I am pleased that the Senate will have this opportunity to vote for Michael Reagan. He possesses a rare combination of intelligence, practical experience, temperament, and devotion to public service that makes for a great Federal judge. I look forward to his service on the Federal bench.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I join my distinguished colleagues to express my outrage at the treatment of judicial nominees this year. I do so with the same preface as my distinguished friend from Illinois, in saying that I have a good working and personal relationship with the chairman of the committee, but the failure to confirm the nominees at this time is an outrage.

I would like to focus my remarks on our efforts to fill one of the vacancies on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has fifteen seats. Five of those seats are currently vacant.

We have one seat on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that has been vacant for a decade--longer than any other vacancy in the nation.

Filling this vacancy has been deemed a "judicial emergency" by the U.S. Judicial Conference.

On June 30, the President of the United States nominated Roger Gregory, a distinguished lawyer from Virginia, to fill this vacancy. Mr. Gregory graduated summa cum laude from Virginia State University and received his J.D. from the University of Michigan. He has an extensive federal practice, is an accomplished attorney, and was described by Commonwealth Magazine as one of Virginia's "Top 25 Best and Brightest." And he has bipartisan support. Senators John Warner and Arlen Specter have also written to the Judiciary Committee to seek a hearing for Mr. Gregory.

REV_00255993

Despite the well-documented need for another judge on this court, and despite Mr. Gregory's stellar qualifications, the Judiciary Committee has stubbornly refused to even grant Mr. Gregory the courtesy of a hearing. In failing to provide Mr. Gregory with a hearing, the Judiciary Committee is abdicating its Constitutional responsibility and is effectively standing in the courthouse door to block this nomination.

[*S9661]

Article II of the United States Constitution makes clear that the President is to nominate and the Senate is to provide advice and consent on the nomination. It is difficult for the Senate to provide advice or give its consent if it won't even allow the nominee to be heard. Many excuses have been offered for why this nominee won't be granted a hearing. One convenient excuse is that this is a presidential election year.

There is nothing in Article II of the United States Constitution, however, that suspends its provisions every four years. We have a constitutional obligation to render our advice and, if appropriate, grant our consent or, if not appropriate, decline to grant our consent. But we cannot just throw up our hands and declare that this provision of the Constitution is rendered meaningless during presidential election years.

The supposed logic that underlies this excuse is that the nominee may not reflect the judicial philosophy of the next Administration. But how can we even question the nominee's judicial philosophy if we never hear from him. So even this excuse argues in favor of granting the nominee a hearing.

The most recent excuse for failing to act on Mr. Gregory's nomination is that five years ago a gentleman from North Carolina was nominated for this seat, and so the argument goes this seat now "belongs" to North Carolina. But five years before that, when this seat and three others were created, a Virginian was arguably nominated to fill this seat--but the Senate only acted to fill the other three seats and this one has been vacant ever since.

More importantly, however, seats on Courts of Appeal don't "belong" to any state. As I have already noted, there are only ten judges currently sitting in the Fourth Circuit. Four of these ten judges are filling seats that were previously filled by a candidate judge and then from another state. Finally, it's a little hard for the senior Senator from North Carolina to complain that the seat belongs to North Carolina when he is the one who has been blocking a North Carolinian from filling the seat.

REV_00255994

Rather than hide behind excuses, the Senate Judiciary Committee ought to seize the opportunity to right a historical wrong. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has the largest percentage of African-Americans in the nation. Yet, the Fourth Circuit has never been integrated. In fact, it is the only Circuit in the country that has never in history had minority representation. If we were to confirm Roger Gregory--who is African-American--we could knock down yet another barrier that has existed for far too long.

In my view, courts should better reflect the people over whom they pass judgment. We still have time, if only we have the will to act. In 1992, when there was a Republican in the White House and the Democrats ran the Senate, we confirmed 6 Circuit Court judges later than July: 3 in August 2, in September 1, in October. In fact, its instructive to look at the one nominee who was confirmed in October of 1992. Timothy K. Lewis was nominated to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals on September 17. The Judiciary Committee gave him a hearing on September 24. He was reported out of the Judiciary Committee on October 7, and confirmed by the Senate on October 8.

Roger Gregory is an outstanding nominee. Rather than standing in the courthouse door, we ought to throw the door open and desegregate the Fourth Circuit. We ought to end this judicial and moral emergency and we ought to do it now.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and reserve any time remaining for those covered under the unanimous consent order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Enzi). The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Wyoming, suggests the absence of a quorum with time to be allocated equally between the sides.

Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the Senate today will vote on the confirmation of a number of judicial nominees. I not only have no problem with that, I very much favor it. These nominees deserve a vote. The districts in which they will serve surely deserve to have their nominations acted upon. I believe the Nation, as a whole, deserves to have these nominees, and other nominees awaiting hearings and votes acted on by this Senate as well.

REV_00255995

The Judiciary Committee held hearings for three of the nominees and approved those nominations less than a week after the nominations were received. Other nominees wait in vain for years just for a hearing. That strikes me as being an arbitrary and inexplicable system, unfair to nominees awaiting hearings, awaiting votes, and unfair to the districts or the circuits in which they would serve if confirmed. I believe it is also unfair--perhaps this is most important of all--to the people who await justice in their courts.

Two Michigan nominees to the Sixth Circuit have been waiting unsuccessfully for a hearing for more than 3 1/2 years and 1 year respectively. Two women, highly qualified, nominated from Michigan for the Sixth Circuit where there is a severe shortage of judges and an enormous caseload that sits there pending, while they have been waiting for more than 3 1/2 years and 1 year respectively.

Judge Helene White, who is a court of appeals judge in Michigan, was first nominated in January of 1997. Her nomination to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals has never been acted upon. She has never been granted a hearing.

Kathleen McCree Lewis was nominated to the Sixth Circuit over a year ago. It has been pending before the Judiciary Committee for over a year. No hearing, no action.

These are two judicial nominees from my home State of Michigan. Despite there being no objection that I know of to their nominations, and in the absence of any explanation whatsoever, they have been kept in limbo without even a hearing for 3 1/2 years and 1 year respectively. I believe that is truly unconscionable. In the history of the Senate, no nominee has waited as long as Judge White for a confirmation hearing. The seat that she has been nominated for has been vacant for 5 1/2 years. It is considered a "judicial emergency" by the Judicial Conference of the United States.

There is no apparent reason for the denial of hearings for these two nominees. No one has questioned their qualifications for the bench. No one that I know of objects to their candidacies. It is well known Judge White and Ms. Lewis are both talented, hard-working nominees.

Each are highly respected for their records which show them to be women of integrity and fairness. Judge White has had a distinguished career. She was a trial judge for 10 years on the Wayne County Circuit Court bench and in 1992 was elected to the Michigan Court of Appeals where she has served ever since. She also serves on the board of directors of the Michigan Legal Services and the board of governors of the American Jewish Committee.

REV_00255996

Kathleen McCree Lewis is a distinguished appellate practitioner at the Detroit law firm of Dykema Gossett, one of the most prestigious law firms in our State. She also served as a commissioner on the Detroit Civil Service Commission and on the Civic Center Commission. She has argued dozens of cases and is a respected appellate lawyer in the very circuit to which she has been nominated. She also happens to be the daughter of the late Wade McCree, a highly respected judge who served on the Sixth Circuit, and was a former Solicitor General of the United States. If confirmed, Kathleen McCree Lewis will be the first African American woman ever to serve on the Sixth Circuit.

Gov. George Bush has said that the Senate should act on nominees within 60 days. That deadline passed years ago for Judge White and for Kathleen McCree Lewis. According to Governor Bush:

> The Constitution empowers the President to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Then he said:

> That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn > the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

[*S9662]

To keep these nominees pending for so long without hearings is unfair to the nominees, particularly where there is no known objection and where there is no explanation for the refusal to grant hearings.

Even more important, it is unfair to the citizens served by the court. There is a large backlog of cases in the Sixth Circuit which is a serious concern for not just Michigan but for all the States that are served by that court. Over one-fourth of the judgeships on the Sixth Circuit are currently vacant, and that is among the highest vacancy rate of any circuit court in the country.

Judge Gilbert Merritt, who recently served as chief judge of the Sixth Circuit, wrote in a March 20 letter to Chairman Hatch: The court is "hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its workload due to the fact that the Senate Judiciary Committee has acted on none of the nominations to our court."

REV_00255997

Judge Merritt went on to say the following--and this is the former chief judge who still sits on the court. This is what Judge Merritt said:

> Our court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the Federal courts should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our court is rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25 percent of the judgeships are vacant. Each active judge of our court is now participating in deciding more than 550 cases a year--a caseload that is excessive by any standard. In addition, we will have almost 200 death penalty cases that will be facing us before the end of the next year.
>
> The Founding Fathers certainly intended the Senate "advise" as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider any vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable to properly carry out their responsibilities for years.

That is Judge Merritt's letter. In addition to that, the Judiciary Committee chairman, Senator Hatch, received a letter from 14 former presidents of the State bar of Michigan. These include, by the way, Democrats and Republicans. That letter pleads for action relative to the situation on the Sixth Circuit.

The Michigan bar presidents wrote in their letter to Senator Hatch that the state of affairs on the Sixth Circuit has "serious adverse effects on the bar and the administration of justice for our clients. We urge you to promptly schedule hearings for, and to pass to the Senate floor for a vote, the nominations of Judge Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis."

In the last few months, there have also been several articles and editorials in papers around Michigan calling on the Senate to confirm the court of appeals nominees for Michigan.

An editorial in the Detroit Free Press said:

> The Senate's delay in considering President Clinton's nominations to the Sixth Circuit court is unfair to Michigan, to the nominees, and to anyone whose future might be affected by a decision of this court.

REV_00255998

An editorial in the Observer and Eccentric newspapers urged the Judiciary Committee and its members to "give two thoughtful and well-respected Michigan lawyers the courtesy of timely hearings on their nominations to the Federal judiciary that is currently hamstrung in carrying out its work."

An editorial in the Detroit News described the failure to act on Sixth Circuit nominees as "the sort of die-hard intransigence that should be out of bounds."

And a Jewish News editorial called the stall a "travesty of justice."

If Senators have concerns about something in the records of these Michigan candidates--and no one has raised anything to that effect--then Senators should air their concerns in a committee hearing and then let the committee vote. It is unfair to Michigan, it is unfair to the citizens who use this court to keep these judicial nominees endlessly in limbo, despite the absence of any objection that I know of to their nominations and with no explanation forthcoming whatsoever.

A number of us have spent many hours over the last few years trying to get hearings for these Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals nominees from Michigan, and yet two well-qualified candidates, each deserving a hearing and a Senate vote, have been left in limbo with no explanation, no stated objection.

What we are doing today in approving these four nominees, it seems to me, is surely our function, totally appropriate, and I believe and hope the nominees will be confirmed.

As we do this, we should also focus on nominees pending in the Judiciary Committee, awaiting hearings or awaiting a vote by the committee after a hearing, who are left there no matter how long they have been waiting, sometimes, again, years in the case of Helene White and Barry Goode. We have others who have been waiting since April of last year, June of last year, August of last year, September of last year. I think we can do better than that. We should rise above that kind of nonaction on the part of our Judiciary Committee.

No plea from me or from others who have worked with me on these nominations has produced hearings, despite the editorials, despite the letters from the bar associations and from Judge Merritt. Despite all these efforts, we have received just silence and statements about waiting a little longer or "we'll see" or "we'll try."

REV_00255999

We should be better than that. The Constitution wants us to be better than that. I will vote to confirm these nominees whose nominations, in many cases, were sent to the Senate, heard by the Judiciary Committee, and approved by the Judiciary Committee in less than a week. At the same time, I will be thinking of the vacancies that exist on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that have remained unfilled for years, where there is a judicial emergency, an enormous backlog, and where, despite all the pleas from the bar association, the Sixth Circuit, from indeed the Chief Justice of the United States, to vote on confirmations, we have these two well-qualified women from Michigan sitting there, awaiting a hearing, endlessly in limbo, nothing but silence, no explanation as to why their hearings are refused, no objection being noted or stated to their nominations, only two well-qualified women left in limbo and in silence.

We can do better. We should do better. I hope we find a way some day to do better.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record the following letters and editorials.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit,

Nashville, TN, March 20, 2000.

Re: Vacancies on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals

Hon. Orrin Hatch,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Hatch: Several years ago during the period that I was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the United States Judicial Conference, we met from time to time, and you were always concerned that the Senate Judiciary Committee do its duty in filling the vacancies on the various Courts of Appeals. I write now to you to request that the Judiciary Committee bring up for a hearing and a vote nominations to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

REV_00256000

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we are here today in the crunch of end-of-session business to debate and take time on four noncontroversial judicial nominees. This debate today was demanded by Senate Democrats who, ironically, have stood in the way of these nominations made by President Clinton, their own President. These are Clinton nominees the Democrats are holding up, Clinton nominees whom Democrats are insisting we take precious time to debate.

For the past few years, Senate Democrats have threatened shutdowns, claimed the existence of a so-called judicial vacancy crisis, and complained of race and sex bias in order to push through President Clinton's judicial nominees. These allegations are false.

First, there is and has been no judicial vacancy crisis. consider, for example, the Clinton administration's statements on this issue. At the end of the 1994 Senate session, the Clinton administration in a press release entitled "Record Number of Federal Judges Confirmed" took credit for having achieved a low vacancy rate. At that time, there were 63 vacancies and a 7.4 percent vacancy rate. The Clinton administration's press release declared: "This is equivalent to full employment' in the... federal judiciary." Today, there are 67 vacancies--after the votes today there will be only 63 vacancies, the same as in the 1994. Instead of declaring the judiciary fully employed as they did in 1994. Democrats claim that there is a vacancy crisis.

In fact, the Senate has confirmed President Clinton's nominees at almost the same rate as it confirmed those of Presidents Reagan and Bush. President Reagan appointed 382 Article III judges. Thus far, the Senate has confirmed 373 of President Clinton's nominees and, after the votes today, will have confirmed four more. During President Reagan's two terms, the Senate confirmed an average of 191 judges. During President Bush's one term, the Senate confirmed 193 judges. After these four judges are confirmed today, the Senate will have confirmed an average of 189 judges during each of President Clinton's two terms.

Second, there has not been a confirmation slowdown this year. Comparing like to like, this year should be compared to prior election years during times of divided government. In 1988, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 41 Reagan judicial nominees. After these four nominees are confirmed today, the Republican Senate this year will have confirmed 39 of President Clinton's nominees--a nearly identical number.

In May, at a Judiciary Committee hearing, Senator Biden, the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said: "I have told everyone, and I want to tell the press, if the Republican Party lets through more than 30 judges this year, I will buy you all dinner." When he said this, Senator

[*S9658]

REV_00255983

I was taken aback to see an alleged statement of Senator Mike DeWine from Ohio that no vote would be taken for a nomination to fill the vacancy currently existing from Ohio. Senator DeWine was quoted as saying that due to partisan considerations there would be no more hearings or votes on vacancies for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. I hope that this was not an accurate quote.

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals now has four vacancies. Twenty-five per cent of the seats on the Sixth Circuit are vacant. The Court is hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its work load due to the fact that the Senate Judiciary Committee has acted on none of the nominations to our Court. One of the vacancies is five years old and no vote has ever been taken. One is two years old. We have lost many years of judge time because of the vacancies.

By the time the next President is inaugurated, there will be six vacancies on the Court of Appeals. Almost half of the Court will be vacant and will remain so for most of 2001 due to the exigencies of the nomination process. Although the President has nominated candidates, the Senate has refused to take a vote on any of them.

Our Court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the federal courts should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our Court is rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25% of the judgeships are vacant. Each active judge of our Court is now participating in deciding more than 550 cases a year--a case load that is excessive by any standard. In addition, we have almost 200 death penalty cases that will be facing us before the end of next year. I presently have six pending before me right now and many more in the pipeline. Although the death cases are very time consuming (the records often run to 5000 pages), we are under very short deadlines imposed by Congress for acting on these cases. Under present circumstances, we will be unable to meet these deadlines. Unlike the Supreme Court, we have no discretionary jurisdiction and must hear every case.

[*S9663]

The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate "advise" as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years.

You and other members of the Senate have appeared before the Judicial Conference and other judges' groups many times and said that you care about the federal courts. I hope that you will now act to help us on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. We need your help and the help of the two Senators from Ohio, the two Senators from Tennessee, the two Senators from Kentucky, and the Senators from Michigan.

REV_00256001

Sincerely,
Gilbert S. Merritt.

July 7, 2000.
Re: Vacancies on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Hon. Orrin Hatch,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.
Hon. Patrick Leahy,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Dear Senators Hatch and Leahy: Recently, the former and current presidents of the Ohio State Bar wrote Senators DeWine and Voinovich a letter expressing their deep concern over the present situation in the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. With four of the sixteen seats vacant, the circuit is in a state of judiciary emergency. Former Chief Judge Gilbert Merritt has said:

"Our Court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the federal courts should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way.

* * * * *

"The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate "advise" as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable to properly to carry out their responsibilities for years."

Chief Justice Rehnquist has expressed the same sentiments.

Presently three Michigan seats remain open. The President has made two nominations. Judge Helene White was nominated in January 1997, and is the longest pending nominee without a hearing by over a year; Kathleen McCree Lewis was nominated in September, 1999. Senator Abraham returned the "blue slips" for the nominees in April. Joe Davis, a spokesman for Senator Abraham, was quoted as saying that Senator Abraham wants hearings for these nominees to take place. Still, no hearings have been scheduled.

REV_00256002

As former Michigan Bar Presidents, we agree with our Ohio colleagues that the situation has serious adverse affects on the bar and the administration of justice for our clients. We urge you to promptly schedule hearings for, and to pass to the Senate floor for a vote, the nominations of Judge Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis.

Respectfully,
Honorable Victoria A. Roberts (1996-1997); Honorable Dennis W. Archer (1984-1985); John A. Krsul (1982-1983); George T. Roumell, Jr. (1918-1986); William G. Reamon (1976-1977); Joseph L. Hardig, Jr. (1977-1978); Eugene D. Mossner (1987-1988); Donald Reisig (1988-1989); Robert B. Webster (1989-1990); Fred L. Woodworth (1991-1992); George A. Googasian (1992-1993); Jon R. Muth (1994-1995); Thomas G. Kienbaum (1995-1996); and Edmund M. Brady, Jr. (1997-1998).

From the Detroit Free Press, May 2, 2000

Judges On Hold: Senate hurts Justice by Delaying Confirmations

The 6th Circuit Court of Appeals now has four vacancies. Twenty-five percent of the seats... are vacant. The court is hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its workload due to the fact that the Senate Judiciary Committee has acted on none of the nominations to our court."

Those were the words of Judge Gilbert Merritt, former chief judge of the Cincinnati-based circuit, in a letter last month to Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and eight other senators--including Senates Carl Levin and Spencer Abraham of Michigan, one of eight states covered by the circuit.

Merritt should not be alone in his outrage. The Senate's delay in considering President Bill Clinton's nominations to the court is unfair to Michigan, to the nominees, and to anyone whose future might be affected by a decision of this court.

The judicial confirmation process has bogged down in mean-spirited, petty partisan wrangling between Democrat Clinton and the Republican-controlled Senate, which seems determined to wait out the lame duck and let his nominations wither.

It's not just the 6th Circuit, either. According to the Senate Judiciary Committee, there are 78 vacancies and 10 future vacancies in the federal judiciary. Only seven judges have been confirmed this year. Six nominees are pending on the Senate floor, 39 in committee, one nominee has withdrawn.

The 6th Circuit vacancies are for seats vacated by Judges

REV_00256003

Damon J. Keith and Cornelia Kennedy. Michigan Appeals Court Judge Helene White was nominated in January 1997 to fill the Keith vacancy. She has never had even a hearing. Nominee Kathleen McCree Lewis has been waiting since September 1999.

This is a disgrace that did not have to happen. Abraham sits on the Judiciary Committee and could move these along. Instead, he stalled consideration for three years, claiming the Clinton administration blindsided him with the White nomination.

It's hard to fathom what that has to do with the efficient, effective administration of justice in reasonable time, with the best interests of citizens in Michigan.

The federal court system should not be treated this way. Neither should the judges who seek to serve it, nor the citizens it is supposed to serve.

From the Michigan Press, June 25, 2000

Is the GOP Playing Politics With Judicial Appointments?

(By Phil Power)

"The presidential appointments process now verges on complete collapse." So concludes Paul C. Light, of the Brookings Institution (usually a liberal Washington think tank) and Virginia L. Thomas, of the Heritage Foundation (usually conservative) in a study of the experiences of 435 cabinet and sub-cabinet officials who served in the Reagan, Bush and Clinton administrations.

Some found treatment by the White House appointments people "an ordeal."

Others--35 percent of Reagan administration appointees and 57 percent of Clinton's nominees--were held hostage to the politics of the U.S. Senate in waiting for confirmation hearings.

That's one reason a lot of talented people are not about to consider appointment to top government positions.

A perfect instance of this general problem concerns the nominations of two Michigan lawyers to fill vacancies on the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that have been twisting slowly in the wind of the U.S. Senate for far too long.

Helene White is presently a member of the Michigan Court of Appeals; nominated by President Clinton in January 1997, Judge White has yet to receive a hearing from the Senate Judiciary Committee. Kathleen McCree Lewis, the daughter of former U.S. Solicitor General Wade McCree, is a partner in the Dykema Gossett law firm in Detroit; her nomination has been pending before the Judiciary Committee since September, 1999.

REV_00256004

The Sixth Circuit is authorized to have 16 judges. Currently, the Court has four vacancies, one of which goes back for five years. For the Court to operate at 75 percent efficiency means long delays to the litigants and enormous workloads for the remaining judges (each of whom now has a caseload of 550 cases each year). Authorities now consider the number of vacancies in the federal court system to constitute a "judicial emergency."

What's going on here?
Michigan's Senator Carl Levin, a Democrat and a minority member of the Judiciary Committee, says it's because Republicans in the Senate, hoping to win the presidency this fall, have decided to hold up judicial nominations from the Clinton White House.

As evidence, he produces a table showing that while the Democrats controlled the Senate during the Bush Administration, a total of 66 federal judges were confirmed.

However, when the GOP ran the Senate during the first term of the Clinton Administration, 17 judges were confirmed.

So far in Clinton's second term, the Senate has confirmed only seven judges, with a total of 33 judicial nominees hanging fire before the Judiciary Committee without any hearings scheduled on their nominations. There are at present 81 vacancies in the federal judiciary.

Michigan's other Senator, Spencer Abraham, is also a member of the Judiciary Committee, but as a Republican his party controls the committee.

I asked Joe Davis, a spokesman for Senator Abraham, how come it's taken three and a half years (in the case of Judge White) and eight months (in the case of lawyer Lewis) just to get the committee to hold hearings on their nominations.

According to Davis, "Senator Abraham does not know whether or when hearings will take place. He wants them to take place, though."

That's nice. Frankly, I suspect if Senator Abraham really wanted the Judiciary Committee to hold hearings on these nominations, he'd find a way to do it PDQ.

[*S9664]

A member of the Sixth Circuit, Judge Gilbert S. Merit, wrote in March a letter to Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch: "The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the

REV_00256005

Senate advise' as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down.

They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, under-staffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years."

Senator Abraham is running for reelection this fall. He is stressing his performance as an effective senator in his campaign. Somebody should ask him why he can't get his committee to give two able, thoughtful and well respected Michigan lawyers the courtesy of timely hearings on their nominations to the federal judiciary that is currently hamstrung in carrying out its work.

From the Detroit News, August 13, 2000

Get Judges Out of Limbo

Michigan Court of Appeals Judge Helene White got the welcome word that she had been appointed to the federal bench in January 1997.

That was 43 months, or more than 1,300 days ago. She is still waiting to be approved by the U.S. Senate and take her seat with the Sixth Circuit appeals court in Cincinnati, which covers Michigan and several other states. She now has the distinction of being the longest-delayed judicial nominee in American history.

Judge White has been caught in the cross-fire between President Bill Clinton and the Republican Senate leadership. So has Detroit attorney Kathleen McRee Lewis, whose nomination to the same court has been held up for nine months.

The Senate is angry, and justifiably so, at the president for deliberately bypassing the confirmation process and appointing Bill Lann Lee head of the civil rights division of the Justice Department. President Clinton knew that Mr. Lee did not stand a chance of being confirmed because of the his record in backing racial quotas.

Mr. Clinton got around it by the semi-devious route of making a recess appointment. This has infuriated Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott. In retaliation, he is holding up 37 judicial appointments.

This is exactly the sort of bitter political obstruction that Texas Gov. George W. Bush pledged to end in his convention acceptance speech last week.

REV_00256006

"I don't have enemies to fight," he said. "I want to change the tone in Washington to one of civility and respect."

Senate Republicans should listen to their party's nominee. While their anger is understandable. It is the courts, and by extension those who use the federal courts, who are punished because of the resulting shortage of judges.

Sen. Lott hasn't even scheduled hearings for these nominations. And the clock is ticking. If no action is taken by Oct. 6, when the Senate adjourns, the nominations will die.

U.S. Sen. Spencer Abraham, the Michigan Republican, initially supported the stall by withholding his approval of the nominations on the grounds that he was not properly consulted by the White House. But he has since been mollified, and he has given his go-ahead. His staff says, however, that he will not push for hearings, which would be within his power as a member of the Judiciary Committee. That is for the Democratic nominators to do, his staff argues.

Every nominee deserves, at the least, a hearing within a reasonable time frame. Mr. Bush has specifically suggested 60 days.

Certainly, there is ample room for disagreement when the legislative and executive branches of government are in the hands of different parties. But Mr. Lott's pique has outlived any reasonable purpose. It is the sort of die-hard intransigence that should be out of bounds.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the time will be equally divided. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: I understand this Senator has 30 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

REV_00256007

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I will support consideration by the Senate of these nominations to fill district judge vacancies in Arizona and Illinois because we are entering a critical stage in the rising number of judicial vacancies in our Federal courts. However, in addition to the district vacancies, there are 22 vacancies in our Federal appeals courts, and pending before the Judiciary Committee are several appeals court nominations who are more than qualified to fill those positions. That, of course, includes a constituent of mine, Bonnie J. Campbell, former attorney general of the State of Iowa and presently the head of the Department of Justice Office of Violence Against Women. Her nomination is for the Eighth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals.

These positions should be filled with qualified individuals as soon as possible. I urge the Republican leadership to take the steps necessary to allow the full Senate to vote up or down on these important nominations.

Basically what I have been hearing from the other side of the aisle, the Republican leadership, is: This is an election year. Why allow circuit nominees a vote on the floor? Hold it up. Maybe Governor Bush will win the election and we will control the Senate and the House, and we can have a whole new batch of appointees next year.

That attitude led me to take a look at the history of our judicial nominations. Let's go back to a time when there was a mirror image of what we have here, when there was a Republican President in the White House and a Democratic majority in the Senate. That year would be 1992. That year, then-President George Bush nominated fourteen circuit court judges. From July through October, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed nine of those judges. This year, a Democratic President nominated seven circuit court judges but with a Republican-controlled Senate, only one of these nominees has been confirmed. We have several pending, but we see no action. Time is running out. Basically what I have been told is, it is over with. They are not going to report any more of these nominees out for circuit courts.

I have also heard the argument that Bonnie Campbell was not nominated until this year so we shouldn't expect this nominee to go through. Let's take a look at what I am talking about with these charts. This is kind of a busy looking chart, but these are the circuit judges nominated in 1992 by then-President George Bush. These were all nominated in 1992. There were 14 nominated. There were 9 who had hearings, 9 who were referred, and 9 who were confirmed, 9 out of 14 who were nominated that year.

There was one nominee--Timothy Lewis--who was nominated in September of 1992, had his hearing in September of 1992, was referred in October of 1992, and confirmed in October of 1992. If the attitude that prevails among the Republican leadership today had prevailed in the Democrat-controlled Senate in 1992, we would not have confirmed anyone after July. This year, we have had none since July.

REV_00256008

In 1992, we had two in September, two in August, and one in October, despite the fact that it too was late in an election year. This year we have only had one.

It is clear who is playing politics with judgeships. The Republican leadership of the Senate is playing the most baldfaced politics. It is not alleged that these nominees are not qualified. It is simply that they were nominated by a Democratic President. That is all. I have not heard one person on the Republican side tell me that Bonnie Campbell is not qualified to be a circuit court judge.

Some people on the other side may have some differences with her on some of her views. I understand that. I have had differences of view with judges I have voted to confirm. Why? Because I thought they were qualified.

I thought that if the President nominated them, they had a fair hearing, and they were reported out, my only decision was whether or not they were qualified--not whether they were ideologically opposed to me or to how I feel or what I believe. It has been my observation over the last quarter century that oftentimes when judges who have more of a liberal bent get appointed to the court, in many cases they come down on the more conservative side of cases. And I have seen conservative judges appointed to the court come down on the liberal side of cases. You never really know how this will come out, but you know whether or not people are legitimately qualified to serve on the bench.

So the arguments made that Bonnie Campbell wasn't nominated until this year--well, as I said, in 1992, we had nine circuit court judges confirmed that were nominated in that year. A couple of these were quite controversial. This year, we have had one confirmed. We have six more pending for the circuit courts. I know my colleague from Vermont, who is ranking member on the Judiciary Committee, stated this last week that when a majority in the Senate starts playing these kinds of games, the result is that when the other side becomes the majority they will do the same thing. That is too bad for our democratic system of government, too bad for the judgeships, and for our third branch of Government to have that happen.

[*S9665]

I am not naive enough not to know that there are always politics involved in how judges are nominated. I understand that. That is the system in which we live. But there comes a point where politics ends and responsibility begins. When you have people who have had a hearing, who are qualified, yet they won't be reported out for a vote on the Senate floor, that is pure politics and that is the height of irresponsibility. The Republican leadership is being totally irresponsible.

REV_00256009

Of the judges nominated in 1992, every judge who got a hearing--every single judge who had a hearing in a Democrat-controlled Congress, when a Democrat was the Chair of the Judiciary Committee, when the Democrats controlled the Judiciary Committee, every person who got a hearing was confirmed. Every single one. That is not the case today. Too many political games are being played, I am afraid, on the Judiciary Committee and on the other side.

I would like to mention one other judicial example from 1992. Michael Melloy was nominated for the district court in April of that year. He was a Bush nominee, supported by Senator Grassley. As my colleagues know, Senator Grassley and I have a longstanding commitment to support the nominations of individuals from Iowa to our courts. Mr. Melloy is an example of this. He was nominated April 9, 1992, received his hearing on August 4, 1992, reported out of committee on August 12, 1992, and confirmed by the Senate that very same day in 1992.

Again, I may have been ideologically opposed to Mr. Melloy. There may have been some things he believed in that I didn't, but there was no question in my mind that Mr. Melloy was fully qualified to be a Federal judge. As long as he was qualified and supported by Senator Grassley and the administration, I supported that nominee, even though it was in the closing days of 1992.

Let's look at the current nominees that we have. Three of the four we are going to be voting on today were nominated, got hearings, and were reported out of the committee within one week. Mr. James Teilborg was nominated on July 21, 2000, got his hearing on July 25, and was reported out of the committee on July 27. Now he stands to be confirmed today. On the other hand, Bonnie Campbell received a hearing by the Judiciary Committee in May--more than 2 months before Mr. Teilborg. Yet she is not here on the floor. Why is it that Mr. Teilborg can come out on the floor today and not Bonnie Campbell? Politics, the rankest form of politics.

The majority is being very inconsistent in their arguments. They say, well, Bonnie Campbell was nominated this year, so it is too late. Mr. Teilborg was nominated this year--nominated, had a hearing, and was reported out all in the same week, and he will be confirmed today. If this year was too late for Bonnie Campbell, why wasn't it too late for James Teilborg?

As I said, nobody has come up and said Bonnie Campbell is not

REV_00256010

Biden apparently believed that the confirmation this year of more than 30 judges would be fair. Well Senator Biden owes some people some dinners, maybe everybody in the press. After the votes today, the Senate this year will have confirmed 39 judicial nominees.

The 1992 election year requires a bit more analysis.

The Democrat-controlled Senate did confirm 64 Bush nominees that year, but this high number was due to the fact that Congress had recently created 85 new judgeships. Examining the percentage of nominees confirmed shows that compared to 1992, there is no slowdown this year. In 1992, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 33 of 73 individuals nominated that year--or 45 percent. This year, the Senate will confirm 25 of 44 individuals nominated in 2000--or 57 percent. Those who cite the 1992 high of 64 confirmations as evidence of an election-year slowdown do not mention these details. Nor do they mention that despite those 64 confirmations, the Democrat-controlled Senate left vacant 115 judgeships when President Bush left office--nearly double the current number of vacancies.

Senate Democrats often cite Chief Justice Rehnquist's 1997 remarks as evidence of a Republican slowdown. Referring to the 82 vacancies then existing, the Chief Justice said: "Vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the federal Judiciary." Senators who cite this statement, however, do not also cite the Chief Justice's similar statement in 1993, when the Democrats controlled both the White House and the Senate: "There is perhaps no issue more important to the judiciary right now than this serious judicial vacancy problem." As the head of the judicial branch, the Chief Justice has continued to maintain pressure on the President and Senate to speedily confirm judges. He has not singled out the Republican Senate, however. Selective use of his statements to imply that he has is inappropriate.

The Chief Justice made additional comments in 1997, which also undermine the claim of a vacancy crisis. After calling attention to the existing vacancies, he wrote: "Fortunately for the Judiciary, a dependable corps of senior judges has contributed significantly to easing the impact of unfilled judgeships." The 67 current vacancies, in other words, are not truly vacant. There are 363 senior judges presently serving in the federal judiciary. Although these judges' seats are technically counted as vacant, they continue to hear cases at reduced workload. Assuming that they maintain a 25 percent workload (the minimum required by law), the true number of vacancies is less than zero.

Third, allegations of race or sex bias in the confirmation process are absolutely false. Just this month, for example, President Clinton issued a statement alleging bias by the Senate. He said: "The quality of justice suffers when highly qualified women and minority candidates are denied an opportunity to serve in the judiciary." The White House, qualified. I challenge someone to come on the floor and say that. Again, if people want to vote against Bonnie Campbell to be a circuit court judge, that is the right of each Senator--not only a right, but an obligation--if they believe someone is unqualified. We can't do that as long as she is bottled up in the committee.

REV_00255984

The Senator from Utah has the power on that committee to report her out. I say to my good friend from Utah, who just appeared on the floor, the Senator from Utah can report Bonnie Campbell's name out here to the floor and we can have a vote on this nominee. That is the way it should be done. Nobody has come up to me to say she is not qualified. She is a former attorney general of the State of Iowa. Since 1995, she has led the implementation of the Violence Against Women Act as the head of that office under the Justice Department. She has broad support on both sides of the aisle. This is a case where a judicial nominee has the support of both the Republican Senator from Iowa, Mr. Grassley, and the Democratic Senator from Iowa, me. Yet she has not been reported out of the Judiciary Committee. I say report her out. If people want to vote against her or say something about her qualifications, let them.

I can stand here today and talk about the qualifications of James Teilborg, or the other people; but, quite frankly, I am convinced they are qualified. I may be opposed to the way they think once in a while, but they are qualified. Is the reason Bonnie Campbell is not being reported out because somebody on the other side of the aisle doesn't like the way she thinks, or because she may have a view on an issue contrary to theirs? The rankest form of politics is holding up Bonnie Campbell's nomination. We have a backlog of nominees and we should vote on her.

The Violence Against Women Act expires this year. The Office of Violence Against Women in the Department of Justice has had only one person head it since this bill was first implemented in 1995, and that is Bonnie J. Campbell. The reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act was voted on in the House of Representatives last week. If I am not mistaken, I think the vote was 415-3. So 415 Members of the House voted to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act. Now, if the only person to ever head that office had done a bad job in enforcing that law, had not acted responsibly, had not brought honor and acclaim to that office and the administration of that law, do you think that 415 Members of the House would have voted to reauthorize it? No. They would have been on their feet over there, one after the other, talking about how terrible this office has been run and how the person operating that office had done such a bad job in enforcing the law. Not one Member of the House took the floor to so speak.

The one person to head that office is Bonnie J. Campbell. Not one person I have ever run across has said she has done anything less than an exemplary job in running that office. Yet the Senate Judiciary Committee will not report her name out for action by the full Senate. Yet we will get the Violence Against Women Act here and Senator after Senator will rush up to speak about how great this law is. I will bet you won't hear one Senator get up and say how badly this law has been administered by the Office of Violence Against Women in the Department of Justice.

REV_00256011

That tells you what an outstanding job Bonnie Campbell has done in that office.

If that is the case, why won't the Senate Judiciary Committee report her name out? Politics; pure rank politics. That is what is going on in the Judiciary Committee today. I hope it won't be that way if the Democrats take charge of the Senate. I am not on the Judiciary Committee, but we tend to get in what I call a "cesspool spiral," like a whirlpool. One side takes over the majority and begins to stall nominations, and then the other side takes over, we keep spiraling down further and further to the point where any nominee for a Federal court will be held up months and perhaps even years while we await the next election. Then our third branch of Government truly becomes a political football.

I hope the Judiciary Committee and the leadership on that side--I say to my friend from Utah--will listen to the words of Texas Governor George Bush. He said he would call for a 60-day deadline for judges--once they are nominated, the Senate will have 60 days to hold a hearing, to report out of committee and vote on the Senate floor.

Bonnie Campbell has been there a lot longer than 60 days and so have some of the other judges.

I say to my friends on the Republican side--you are supporting George Bush for President. If he said he would call for a 60-day deadline, I ask my friends on the Republican side: Why don't we act accordingly?

In this Congress, the judicial nominees who have been confirmed had to wait on average 211 days. Governor Bush said they should not wait longer than 60 days. This is not getting better; it is getting worse around here. It is really a shame.

Let's look at the percentages. I am told: This is the same today as it was before--blah, blah, blah, blah. I hear this all the time--nothing has changed.

[*S9666]

It has changed dramatically. For example, in the Reagan years, during the 98th Congress, the Republicans were in the majority. They had a Republican President. We received 22 circuit court nominations, and 14 were confirmed. This is a Republican President and a Republican Senate--22 received, and 14 confirmed, for a 63.6-percent confirmation rate.

REV_00256012

Let's look at the 100th Congress. President Reagan was still President, but there was a Democratic Senate. Twenty-six circuit court judge nominations were received; 17 were confirmed, for a 65.4-percent confirmation rate.

Think about that. Democrats had a higher confirmation rate under President Reagan--a very conservative President. We had a higher confirmation rate when the Democrats were in charge of the Senate than when the Republicans were in charge. We didn't block things when the Democrats were in charge.

Next, the 102d Congress, 1991-1992. President Bush was the Republican making nominations and the Democrats were in charge in the Senate. We received 31 circuit court nominations. Twenty were confirmed, again, for a 64.5-percent confirmation rate--Republican President and a Democratic Senate.

Now we move to the 104th Congress. We had a Democratic President, President Clinton, and we had a Republican Senate. Twenty circuit court nominations were received; 11 were confirmed. That was a 55-percent confirmation rate.

Now we are in the 106th Congress. We have a Democratic President and a Republican Senate. Thirty-one circuit court of appeals nominations have been received; 15 have been confirmed, for a 48.4-percent confirmation rate.

I ask my friend--and he is my friend--the chairman of the Judiciary Committee: How can we live with something like that? How can the Judiciary Committee come to this Senate with a straight face and say that a 48-percent confirmation rate is what we did in the past, when the record is clear? The record is in the 60-percent confirmation rate when we had Republican Presidents and a Democratic Senate. Yet today we are faced with a 48-percent confirmation rate.

I have heard from many judges. I have gotten letters from them saying that it is time we filled the bench. Cases are backing up. We need to get judges on the bench. But I suppose we first have to pay attention to the elections.

This one nominee, Bonnie J. Campbell, should be reported out if for no other reason than we need people on the bench who are sensitive to what is happening in domestic abuse cases and violence against women.

In 1998, American women were the victims of 876,000 acts of domestic violence. In 5 years--1993 to 1998--domestic violence accounted for 22 percent of the violent crimes against women. During those same years, children under the age of 12 lived in 43 percent of the households where this violence occurred. It is generational. The kids see it, they grow up, and they become abusive parents themselves.

REV_00256013

In Iowa, and all across America, prosecutors, victim service organizations, and law enforcement officers are fighting. But they need help. We need to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act. But there is more we can do to make sure that we have judges who know what is happening from firsthand experience and who can make sure that the law is applied fairly and upheld in courts around the country.

That is why we need someone like Bonnie Campbell on the circuit court of appeals. As I said, she is widely supported. She is supported by me and by Senator Grassley. She has the support of judges, police organizations, women, and domestic violence coalitions. She has strong support in the State of Iowa and on both sides of the aisle.

I ask the chairman of the committee: Why aren't we reporting out Bonnie Campbell? Why? Just one simple question: Why? Is there a member of the majority who thinks she is not qualified? Let them so state. Have specific objections been raised as to her qualifications? If so, we ought to know that so they can be addressed. But all we hear is a deafening silence from the other side. We are left to assume that the reason Bonnie Campbell is being held up is because they are hoping their nominee wins the election. That is their right to hope that. They can work as hard as they can for him. I don't blame them for that. But to hold up a qualified person like Bonnie Campbell who had her hearing 2 months before Mr. Teilborg had his; yet she is being locked up in the committee--all the paperwork is done. Yet politics is holding her up.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the text of an article that appeared in the Des Moines Register the other day regarding the Bonnie Campbell nomination and the text of two editorials, one in the Cedar Rapids Gazette and one in the Des Moines Register, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

From the Des Moines Register, Oct. 1, 2000

Campbell Issue Aids Democrats' Politics

(By Jane Norman)

If Iowa Democrats needed any more reason to be excited and energized about this year's presidential race in the state, they probably have found it in the controversy swirling around the stalled nomination of Iowan Bonnie Campbell in the Republican-controlled U.S. Senate. George W. Bush, hello?

REV_00256014

Campbell, the director of the Violence Against Women office for the U.S. Justice Department, was nominated in March to be Iowa's new appeals-court judge for the 8th Circuit based in St. Louis. She had a spectacularly sedate hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee in May, but then the nomination process ground to a halt. She's one of 42 judicial nominees pending in the Senate.

Campbell has had the support not just of Senator Tom Harkin, but also Senator Charles Grassley, even though it must stick in Grassley's craw. Campbell, who ran for governor of Iowa in 1994 and lost, made remarks during her race about Christian conservatives that riled conservative activists, who appealed to Grassley to kill her bid for the bench. That's fair; whatever you think of the merits of their arguments, it's their right to protest something as significant as a lifetime judicial appointment.

Grassley declined to side with his traditional conservative allies and supported Campbell, saying Democrats did not stand in the way he wanted judicial appointments during the waning days of the Bush presidency. While Grassley predicted that Campbell would fall victim to election-year politics, there's no evidence that he has tried to sabotage her behind the scenes.

Campbell's nomination hung around all summer, gaining the support of the bar association and the Iowa Police Association. When Congress returned to work in September, Harkin started turning up the heat. During the past week, he has taken to the floor repeatedly to lambaste majority Republicans for holding up the nomination, and he holds forth at length on the Campbell nomination with Iowa reporters.

This has been a masterful strategy by Harkin, who's become such a surrogate for Vice President Al Gore that Harkin was paired with GOP vice-presidential nominee Dick Cheney on a Fox News show. Campbell's woes only assist Harkin in making the case for a Democratic presidency, over and over again in media outlets across Iowa.

On Tuesday night, Harkin enlisted the help of Senator Joe Biden, the Delaware Democrat and Judiciary Committee member who's a friend of Campbell. Harkin and Biden formed a mutual admiration society on the floor to praise Campbell, and Biden recalled that he recommended that Campbell be made director of the Violence Against Women office when it was launched.

Biden insisted it was "flat malarkey" that Democrats have held up Republican appointments during the last days of Republican presidencies, and said he pushed through a flock of qualified Texas judges for Senator Phil Gramm in late 1992. "To be fair about it there were three members of our caucus who ripped me a new ear in the caucus for doing this," said Biden.

REV_00256015

Harkin said no Republican has ever come to him and explained their opposition to the nomination. "In fact, Republicans in Iowa ask me why she is being held up," said Harkin. "Mainstream Republicans are asking me that."

Biden said it is a "terrible precedent," and that it is hard on Harkin to see someone so "shabbily treated" from his home state. You hoped there was a box of tissues close at hand.

Then, on Thursday, Harkin revealed to reporters that he had been told by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch "in no uncertain terms" that the Republican caucus won't budge on the nomination. Harkin said there's not much he can do now other than fume on the floor and ponder holding up Republican priorities.

All of this cater-wauling gives Harkin, and Iowa Democrats, a huge opportunity to seize a way to criticize Republicans on the selection of judges, an issue where the GOP is somewhat vulnerable, particularly among women and undecided voters.

Texas Governor Bush does not sit in the Senate, and he is not the one holding up the stop sign. But his party is doing it, ostensibly for his benefit. Is it really wise to have the confirmation of a woman as a judge become a major fuss in a supposedly battleground state in the last month before the presidential election?

[*S9667]

On top of that, many Iowa Democrats are still angry at how Campbell was treated during her race for governor. The prospect that women such as Campbell will be shut out for another four years if Bush is elected president is like a booster shot for get-out-the-vote efforts.

Harkin said Thursday that he absolutely' would push Campbell to be nominated again if Gore wins the presidency. For the time being, she serves Democrats' purposes just as well if she never dons black robes.

From the Cedar Rapids Gazette, Sept. 26, 2000

Stop Stalling on Judicial Candidate

In three weeks or less, Congress will adjourn before the 2000 elections, and increasingly it appears it will do so before the U.S. Senate brings the nomination of Bonnie Campbell to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit up for a vote.

REV_00256016

It's not as if Campbell, the former attorney general of Iowa, is trying to get in at the last minute--unless you consider a six-month wait the last minute. Campbell was nominated to the job by the Clinton Administration in March. She had a hearing in May.

What's taking so long?

It seems apparent the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee is growing content to hold onto this nomination until after the session--and, not coincidentally--until after the November election, when they hope to win the White House. That would mean a Republican would more than likely be appointed to the job.

It is not unusual for political parties to try to run out the clock on nominations in the hope the next election will bring them to power. That does not make it right, and in this case it makes no sense to sit on the Campbell nomination.

U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, is her sponsor and he pointed out a week ago there are 22 vacancies on the federal appeals court. Campbell has the backing of the American Bar Association and the Iowa State Police Association. She also has the backing of U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who is also a member of the Judiciary Committee. Traditionally, Grassley and Harkin have backed the other's nominees, and if Campbell's nomination fails, we would hate to see that understanding damaged.

Frustrated proponents of the Campbell nomination--as well as several other nominations--have been arguing recently that over the last three years, women and minority candidates have had to wait longer to get through the confirmation process than their white male counterparts.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, has denied women and minorities are being treated differently in the committee than their white male counterparts. Still, of the 21 candidates for the federal bench who are women or minorities, nine have been waiting for more than a year for a hearing.

Campbell has a lengthy record in private legal practice. Elected in 1990, she was the first woman to serve as Iowa Attorney General. She was appointed in 1995 to be the director of the Violence Against Women Office in the U.S. Justice Department. Her hearing revealed no good reason why she should be denied this position.

The Senate leadership should do the right thing in the waning days of this session and let the full Senate vote on Campbell. It should set aside whatever reason it has for stalling and move forward. Let the process work and bring this nomination to the floor for a vote.

REV_00256017

Mr. HARKIN. I see the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee on the floor. He is a good man. He and I have fought many battles together. I like him personally and I respect him. If he would like to engage in colloquy, I will. He knows how strongly I feel about this nominee, about her qualifications and about the kind of job she has done at the Department of Justice. I am sure he knows I will do everything that is humanly and senatorially possible to try to get her name here. I believe I have a right and an obligation to do that. I will, within the confines of what is right and proper in the Senate, not violating any rules, do everything I can to try to get her name out.

We will be here this week and we will be here next week. I ask my friend from Utah, will we be allowed to have a vote on Bonnie Campbell for the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals?

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will submit a resolution, and after these remarks I will spend some time answering my two dear colleagues, Senator Robb of Virginia and Senator Harkin from Iowa, to the best of my ability.

(The remarks of Mr. Hatch pertaining to the submission of S. Res. 364 are printed in today's Record under "Submission of Concurrent and Senate Resolutions.")

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I must respond to the remarks of Senator Robb and Senator Harkin.

With regard to the nomination of Roger L. Gregory, the position for which Mr. Gregory has been nominated has been vacant since it was created in 1990. Before nominating Mr. Gregory, the President had not even submitted a name to the Senate for this position in almost 5 years. Despite the longstanding vacancy of this judgeship, the work of the Fourth Circuit has not been adversely affected.

Moreover, when the President did submit a name to the Senate for disposition almost 5 years ago, he submitted the name of a resident of North Carolina, J. Rich Leonard. In doing so, the President effectively agreed that this seat should be filled by a North Carolinian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator's previous time consumed on the Olympics will not count against his 7 minutes.

REV_00256018

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent I be able to speak for another 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. The President effectively agreed this seat should be filled by a North Carolinian. By nominating Roger Gregory, a Virginian, for the seat instead of a North Carolinian, the President sought to avoid the traditional practice of seeking the "advice and consent" of the Senators from the State where the judgeship is located about which local lawyer should be nominated.

It is very late in the session to be considering a circuit court nomination. Some nominations can move through the confirmation process quickly, but only where the White House has dealt with the Senate on nominations in good faith. The Arizona nominations we are debating today moved through the confirmation process quickly because the White House did work closely with Senator Kyl and negotiated in good faith over which Arizonans should get these lifetime appointments.

In contrast, the White House has not dealt with the Senate on nominations in good faith. During our August recess, the President determined to recess appoint several executive branch officials over the express objections of numerous Senators. Furthermore, Democrats stood in the way of these four nominees we are debating today, the President's nominees, and they threatened to shut down the work of the Senate. This is hardly good faith. In fact, it was a Democrat hold--a Democrat hold by the minority leader on these four judges who are put forth by this President in accordance with an agreement worked out--that really caused a lot of angst on our side, plus the fact that these recess appointments that were made without consultation caused a lot of difficulty. Then we have virtually every bill filibustered, even on the motion to proceed. As a matter of fact, the H-1B bill, which just passed 96-1, had three filibusters on it, from the motion to proceed right on up through final passage of 96-1.

I must respond to some of the things Senator Robb said here this morning. He used some pretty incendiary language to imply that the Senate majority is biased against Mr. Gregory because he is an African American. Senator Robb said we "are standing in the courthouse door" and are refusing to "integrate" the Fourth Circuit. These allegations of racial bias are beneath the dignity of a Senator in the U.S. Senate, and they are offensive and politically motivated. When Democrats blocked the nomination of Lillian BeVier to the Fourth Circuit--which is what they did--the first female nominee to the Fourth Circuit, no one on our side accused them of gender bias.

I am sure Roger Gregory is a fine man. I have no doubt about that. I have been told that by a number of friends of mine, including former Secretary Coleman. But I have informed my colleagues that because of the atmosphere that has resulted from the President's refusal to consult with the Senators from North Carolina, because of the President's recent recess appointments and disregard of commitments he had made up here, and disregard of the advice and consent because of the petty parliamentary games in which our friends on the other side have engaged, Mr. Gregory's nomination is not going to move forward. And because this is a North Carolina seat. We would have to have somebody nuts, from North Carolina, who would not stand up for a

REV_00256019

[*S9668]

North Carolinian in this seat. There is just no question about it. The President knew that, having nominated a North Carolinian before.

I would like to respond to Senator Levin for a few minutes. I don't want to go beyond that. There are other things I could say. But I bitterly resent anybody trying to play racial politics with judges, especially after what we went through in prior administrations.

It had always been my intention as chairman of the Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing on judicial nominations during the month of September. I planned on doing that. At that hearing I was fully prepared to consider the nomination of some of these people, and perhaps even Helene White or Kathleen McCree Lewis to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. A number of my colleagues were pressing very strongly for that. I wanted to try to resolve that if I could.

However, events conspired to prevent that from happening. First, during the August recess, the President determined to recess appoint several executive branch nominees over the express objection of numerous Senators. He did so notwithstanding the agreement to clear such recess appointments with the relevant Senators. We do not have much power around here in some ways against a President of the United States, but we can demand that he consult with us. These Senators are very aggrieved by the way they were treated on these appointments--I think rightly so.

Second, Democrat Senators determined to place holds on the four nominations we are debating today and threatened shutdowns of the Senate's committee work, going as far as to invoke the 2-hour rule and forcing the postponement of scheduled committee hearings, including the Wen Ho Lee hearing, which is an important hearing, a bipartisan hearing, for both sides to look at.

Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis have only the White House and Senate Democrats to blame for the current situation, I might add, because of some of these petty procedural games we have been going through around here with filibusters of almost everything that comes up, or a threat to bring up all kinds of extraneous amendments if we do though, also issued a statement boasting of the high number of women and minorities that Clinton has appointed to the federal courts: "The President's record of appointing women and minority judges is unmatched by any President in history. Almost half of President Clinton's judicial appointees have been women or minorities." The Senate, obviously, confirmed this record number of women and minorities. That is hardly evidence of systemic bias--or any bias at all.

REV_00256020

Last November, Senator Joseph Biden, former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, stated:

> There has been argumentation occasionally made... that the Judiciary Committee... has been reluctant to move on certain people based upon gender or ethnicity or race.... T here is absolutely no distinction made on these grounds . ... W hether or not a nominee moves has not a single thing to do with gender or race.... I realize I will get political heat for saying that, but it happens to be true.

I personally appreciated Senator Biden's comments on that, while others were trying to play politics with these issues. He knows how difficult it is under the circumstances to please both sides on these matters. The chairman takes pain from both sides on these matters. There is no question there are some on our side who have wanted to slow down this process, and others on the other side have wanted to speed up the process. The important thing is that we do a good process. That is what we have tried to do.

The statistics confirm Senator Biden's position. Data comparing the median time required for Senate action on male versus female and minority versus non-minority nominees shows only minor differences. During President Bush's final two years in office, the Democrat-controlled Senate took 16 days longer to confirm female nominees compared with males. This differential decreased to only 4 days when Republicans gained control of the Senate in 1994. During the subsequent 105th and 106th Congresses, it increased.

The data concerning minority nominees likewise shows no clear trend. When Republicans gained control in 1994, it took 28 days longer to confirm minority nominees as compared to non-minority nominees. This difference decreased markedly during the 105th Congress so that minorities were confirmed 10 days faster than non-minorities. The present 106th Congress is taking only 11 days longer to confirm a minority nominees than it is to confirm non-minority nominees.

These minor differences are a matter of happenstance. They show no clear trend. And even if there were actual differences, a differential of a week or two is insignificant compared to the average time that it takes to select and confirm a nominee. On average, the Clinton White House spends an average of 315 days to select a nominee while the Senate requires an average of 144 days to confirm.

REV_00255985

happen to bring a bill up that needs to be passed.

It is very late in the session to be considering a circuit court nomination. Some nominations can move through the confirmation process quickly, but only where the White House has dealt with the Senate, on nominations, in good faith. The Arizona nominations we are debating today moved through the confirmation process quickly because the White House worked closely with Senator Kyl and others, and myself, and negotiated in good faith over which Arizonans should get these lifetime appointments.

Everybody knows there is a tremendous need along the southern border in Arizona to have these judges. There is a tremendous court docket there that needs these judges. Yet they have been delayed for 2 solid months almost.

In contrast, the White House and Senate Democrats have not dealt in good faith, given the President's recess appointments in August of several executive branch nominees over the express objection of numerous Senators and Senate Democrats' efforts to hold up these nominees and hold up the work of the Senate.

With regard to the nomination of Bonnie J. Campbell, in March, Bonnie Campbell was nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. At the urging of Senator Grassley, the Judiciary Committee held a hearing for Ms. Campbell in May. It had always been my intention for the Judiciary Committee to report Ms. Campbell's nomination. However, events conspired to prevent that from happening.

First, during the August recess, as I have explained, the President determined to recess appoint several executive branch nominees over the express objection of numerous Senators. He did so notwithstanding his agreement to clear such recess appointments with the relevant Senators. By the way, this type of an agreement arose out of Senator Byrd's objections in earlier Congresses. His objections were followed here on the part of people on our side of the aisle, and the President agreed to it and then violated that agreement.

Second, after the August recess, Democrat Senators determined to place holds on the four nominations we are debating today, even though everybody admits--I think everybody admits --that they are important nominations and this arrangement that has been worked out has been fair.

Again, they threatened to shut down the Senate's committee work, going as far as to invoke the 2-hour rule and enforce the postponement of scheduled committee hearings. And we went through that because of pique. For these reasons, Bonnie Campbell's nomination has stalled. Ms. Campbell has only the White House and Senate Democrats to blame for the current situation.

REV_00256021

I might add, it did not help at all on our side for these petty filibusters on everything. It used to be when I got here, there might be one or two or three filibusters a year at the very most, and then they were on monumental issues that involved a wide disparity of belief. It was not every little motion to proceed, every little bill we were going to pass, like the one we just passed 96-1. To go through three filibuster cloture votes on that bill was beyond belief. But that irritated a lot of people. It made it more difficult to get these judges through.

Mr. Harkin, the Senator from Iowa, claimed that his review of history led him to believe we are "playing politics with the judges." I strongly disagree. In President Reagan's last year, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 41 nominees. After the votes today, the Senate this year will have confirmed 39 nominees. And there have been some indications there might be some games played with one of the four judges here today. If that is the case, boy, Katie bar the door, after what we have been trying to do here.

The committee worked sincerely to try to get these nominations out, and they have been here for quite a while. Finally, few nominees are confirmed when the White House and Senate are controlled by different political parties. From 1987 to 1992, the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed an average of 46 Reagan and Bush nominees per year. Things changed when President Clinton was elected. In 1994, the Democrat-controlled Senate pushed through 100 Clinton nominees. They could not have done that without cooperation from Republicans, but they did that.

In 1992, at the end of the Bush administration when Democrats controlled the Senate, the vacancy rate stood at 11.5 percent. Now at the end of the Clinton administration the vacancy rate after the votes today will stand at just 7.4 percent.

Also in 1992, Congress adjourned without having acted on 53 Bush nominations, or should I say nominees who were sitting there waiting to be confirmed. After the votes today, there will be only 38 Clinton nominations that are pending.

Under both Democrats and Republicans, the Senate historically confirms 65 to 70 percent of the President's nominees. In his last 2 years, President Bush made 176 nominations, and the Democrat-controlled Senate confirmed 122 of them, yielding a confirmation rate of 69 percent. During the last 2 years, President Clinton made 112 nominations, and after today's votes, the Senate will have confirmed 73 of them. He has a confirmation rate of almost the same, 65 percent.

In May, at a Judiciary Committee hearing, Senator Biden indicated he did not believe we would do even 30 judges this year. He is wrong. We will have now done, at the end of the day, 39 judicial nominees confirmed by the Senate.

REV_00256022

There has been much debate today about everything but the four nominees we ostensibly are debating. I fully support these nominees and want to say a few words about them. They are supported by their home State Senators--Senators Kyl, McCain, Fitzgerald, and Durbin.

The nominees we are supposedly debating today are as follows: Susan Ritchie Bolton from Arizona: Ms. Bolton has served as judge in the Maricopa County Superior Court since 1989. Before that, from 1977-89, she worked in private practice at a Phoenix law firm. From 1975-77, she clerked for the Hon. Laurance T. Wren of the Arizona Court of Appeals. Ms. Bolton received her law degree, with high distinction, from the University of Iowa Law School in 1975, and her undergraduate degree, with honors, from the University of Iowa in 1973.

[*S9669]

Mary H. Murguia: Since 1998, Ms. Murguia has served in the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys, first as Counsel and then as Director. Before that she served as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the District of Arizona from 1990-98. From 1985-90, she was an Assistant District Attorney in Wyandotte Country, Kansas. She received her law degree from the University of Kansas Law School in 1985, and her undergraduate degree from the University of Kansas in 1982.

Michael J. Reagan: Mr. Reagan has worked in private practice since graduating from law school in 1980; since 1995, he has been a sole practitioner at the Law Office of Michael J. Reagan. In addition, he has served as an Assistant Public Defender (part time) since 1995. He received his law degree from St. Louis University Law School in 1980, and his undergraduate degree from Bradley University in 1976.

James A. Teilborg: Mr. Teilborg has been a partner at the Phoenix law firm of Teilborg Sanders & Parks since 1972; before that he was an associate at another Phoenix firm from 1967-72. He received his law degree from the University of Arizona School of Law in 1966.

Some have complained the Arizona nominations have moved more quickly while others have not. Some nominations can move through the confirmation process quickly, there is no question about that, but only where the White House has dealt with the Senate on nominations in good faith. The Arizona nominations we are debating today moved through the confirmation process quickly because the White House worked closely with Senator Kyl and negotiated in good faith over which Arizonans should get these lifetime appointments.

REV_00256023

All four are Democrats, all four are supported by the President, all four came through the appropriate committee--the Judiciary Committee--and all four will be voted on today, and I expect all four to be confirmed unanimously. If there are no politics played, they will be confirmed unanimously.

In contrast, the White House and Senate Democrats have not dealt in good faith, given the President's recess appointments in August of several executive branch nominees over the express objection of numerous Senators and Senate Democrats' efforts to hold up these nominees and obstruct the work of the Senate--the filibusters that have occurred on almost everything that comes up here and, of course, the holds that have been placed on these four nominees who are President Clinton's nominees. It does not take long until people on our side know there are too many games being played on judicial nominees.

We have done a good job. President Reagan had the all-time highest confirmation of judges during his 8 years. That was 382 judges. By the end of the day, when we confirm these 4, President Clinton will have the all-time second highest, as far as I know, and that is 377 judges, 5 fewer than President Reagan. Had we not had all these games played, I believe I could have held a hearing in September, which I no longer can hold, and we would have confirmed probably enough to draw President Clinton equal to President Reagan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have been scarcely able to hold back the tears listening to my good friend from Utah. I am sure he did not mean to mislead the Senate, but those who might not know the numbers could be misled, not by any intent on the part of the senior Senator from Utah.

As he has said himself, we will have confirmed fewer than 40 judges in the last year of President Clinton's term in office. When the Democrats controlled the Senate, in the last year of President Bush's term in office, we confirmed 66. In fact, we were holding hearings right into September and voting on judges up to the last days of the session, confirming judges for President Bush.

The distinguished Senator from Utah feels perhaps some have suggested inappropriately that women, minorities, and others take longer going through this body. I point out that the ones who suggested that have been independent bipartisan groups outside the Senate.

REV_00256024

I have stated over and over, I have never seen or heard a statement expressing--I wonder if the Senator from Utah can stay while I speak; I do not want to say this with him off the floor--I have never once heard him express either a racist or a sexist remark. He has been a close and dear friend of mine for over 20 years. Nor have I ever suggested that anybody on the Senate Judiciary Committee has taken a racist or sexist position, but I am troubled, as I hope he and others would be troubled, by the fact that women and minorities, if they are nominated for judgeships, have taken longer to go through this Republican-controlled Senate than others if they are allowed to go through at all.

We talk about Roger Gregory, nominated to the Fourth Circuit. It has been suggested this is a seat that is reserved to North Carolina. That is not so. As pointed out in the Wall Street Journal in a recent letter from the President's Counsel Beth Nolan, this is a vacant seat that has not been allocated to the State of North Carolina and is appropriate for an appointment from Virginia. The distinguished chairman of the committee has said that Senators should work with the White House. In this case, two of the most distinguished Members of the Senate--one a Republican, one a Democrat, John Warner and Chuck Robb--worked very closely with the White House on this Virginia nomination and both support the nomination of Roger Gregory.

Senator Robb strongly urged the White House to appoint Roger Gregory, a highly distinguished African American. Senator Warner supports him. He has the highest ratings possible from bar associations. But he cannot get confirmed by the Senate; he cannot even get a hearing.

I commend what Senator Robb said on the floor today in support of Roger Gregory. I hope all of us will listen to him.

Likewise, I was struck by the remarks of Senator Durbin of Illinois with respect to the Supreme Court and his support for Michael Reagan to a district court judgeship in Illinois. Senator Durbin laid out what I have also heard from Republicans and Democrats who support Michael Reagan for that judgeship. Democrats and Republicans were at hearings for him. Democrats and Republicans, ranging across the political spectrum, have spoken to me in support of Michael Reagan. He is supported by both home state Senators, one a Republican and one a Democrat.

Senator Carl Levin, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan, one of the most respected voices in this body, spoke of his support for Judge Helene White to the Sixth Circuit and Kathleen McCree Lewis to the Sixth Circuit and how he wished they would be considered. They have been held up and blocked by this Senate. Is the chairman saying that Judge Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis do not have the support of their two Senators from Michigan? If that is the case, we ought to know that. I understand that they both have that support. If they don't have the support of a home state Senator, then let's say that. Judge Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis are extraordinarily well-qualified women. I wish they would get confirmed.

REV_00256025

Senator Tom Harkin, was an extraordinary advocate for Bonnie Campbell. I can't add to what he has said. Senator Harkin spoke extremely well about Bonnie Campbell and, of course, Bonnie Campbell should be confirmed. Again, going to the test: Did the President work with the Senators from that State. Are we saying that the two Senators from Iowa do not support Bonnie Campbell? My understanding is both of them support her. Why can't she get Committee consideration and a Senate vote?

The Senate will move forward on a number of nominees today: Michael Reagan, Susan Ritchie Bolton, Mary Helen Murguia, and James Teilborg. I recommend that all four be confirmed by the Senate. It is unfortunate that this Republican-controlled Senate, is not willing to do for President Bill

[*S9670]

Clinton what a Democratic-controlled Senate did for President George Bush, and move people forward. We can talk about the numbers that various Presidents have appointed. Recent Presidents have appointed more judges than George Washington did or Thomas Jefferson or Abraham Lincoln or Teddy Roosevelt. But we are also a much bigger country, and we have a lot more cases and need more judges. In fact, if we passed the judgeship bill the distinguished senior Senator from Utah and I have introduced, the vacancy rate would be well into the teens with over 130 vacancies.

We have waited 10 years to authorize new judges, even as this country has expanded over the years and caseloads have grown. The Judicial Conference is asking us to authorize 70 judges. In fact, I strongly urge we pass the judgeship bill before the Presidential election while no one knows who is going to be elected President, and we are looking at what is best for our court system.

I am glad to see the Senate moving forward on these three nominees. I expect they will be approved overwhelmingly. They are all well qualified for appointment to the federal courts.

Three judicial nominees on the Senate calendar have been cleared by Democrats for action for some time, including two from Arizona and one from Illinois who has been pending the longest of the four.

There were Senators who wanted to be heard and have a chance to debate the lack of hearings and the refusal to give hearings to qualified nominees. They have spoken eloquently on behalf of Roger

REV_00256026

Gregory, Bonnie Campbell and Judge Helene White. They are not seeking to filibuster these nominations and each has agreed to a reasonable time for debate before a vote.

The Senator from Arizona is right that there has been a problem with the nomination of James Teilborg, who happens to be a close personal friend of the Senator since their days together back at the University of Arizona Law School. Mr. Teilborg was nominated on July 21 and was afforded a hearing and was reported by the Judiciary Committee within a week.

The frustration that many Senators feel with the lack of attention the Committee has shown long-pending judicial nominees has recently boiled over. They wish to be heard; they seek parity and similar treatment for nominees they support. I understand their frustration and have been urging action for some time. This could all have been easily avoided if we were continuing to move judicial nominations like Democrats did in 1992, when we held hearings in September and confirmed 66 judges that presidential election year.

Michael Reagan, nominated to be a District Court Judge for the Southern District of Illinois, is a distinguished private attorney in Belleville, Illinois. He graduated from Bradley University in 1976, and St. Louis University Law School in 1980. He has been in private practice for over 20 years, and has been an adjunct professor of law at Belleville Area College and St. Louis University. He also presently serves as an Assistant Public Defender in St. Clair County, Illinois. He enjoys the support of both of his home state Senators. When other nominees to the Illinois federal courts were given hearings and confirmed in June, he was held back. He had likewise been nominated in early May. He was finally included in a hearing in late July and reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee on July 27. He could have been confirmed before the August recess or at any time in September. I am glad that time has finally come.

Judge Susan Ritchie Bolton has presided in the Arizona Superior Court for Maricopa County since 1989. She received her undergraduate degree and law degree from the University of Iowa. Following law school she clerked for the Honorable Laurence T. Wren on the Arizona Court of Appeals. She then went into private practice at Shimmel, Hill, Bishop & Bruender. She enjoys the support of both of her home state Senators and received a well-qualified rating from the American Bar Association. She was nominated on July 21, participated in a confirmation hearing on July 25 and was unanimously reported by the Judiciary committee on July 27. She could have been confirmed before the August recess or at any time in September. I am glad the Senate is turning its attention to her nomination and am confident that she will be confirmed to fill the judicial emergency vacancy for which she was nominated.

Mary Murguia currently serves as Director of the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys. She also serves as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Arizona. Prior to that, she served as an Assistant District Attorney for the Wyandotte County District Attorney's Office. She earned her undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Kansas. She enjoys the full support of both of her home state Senators. Like Judge Bolton, she was nominated on July 21, received a hearing on July 25 and was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee on July 27. She could have been confirmed before the August recess or at any time in September. I know that the Senate will now do the right thing and confirm her to fill the judicial emergency vacancy for which she was nominated.

REV_00256027

I thank the Majority Leader and commend the Democratic Leader for scheduling the consideration of these judicial nominations. I wish there were many more being considered to fill the 67 current vacancies and eight on the horizon. I wish that we were making progress on the Hatch-Leahy Federal Judgeship Act of 2000, S. 3071, and authorizing the 70 judgeships affected by that legislation as requested by the Judicial Conference.

I heard Senator Hatch argue last week that the vacancies on the federal judiciary are "less than zero". While I marvel at the audacity of such argument, it moves us no closing to fulfilling our constitutional responsibilities to the federal judiciary. Likewise the notion that the refusal by some to waive the Senate's 2-hour rule in late September somehow preventing the Committee from holding additional confirmation hearings in early September or now is hardly compelling. I wish the Committee and the Senate would have followed the model established in 1992 and continued holding hearings and reporting judicial nominees in August and September. That simply did not happen and despite my requests no additional hearings were held. This year we held about half as many hearings as in 1992. Despite all of our efforts we have been unable to get the Judiciary Committee to consider the nominations of Bonnie Campbell or Allen Snyder or Fred Woocher following their hearings.

The debate on judicial nominations over the last several years has included too much delay with respect to too many nominations. The most prominent current examples of that treatment are Judge Helene White, Bonnie Campbell, Roger Gregory, and Enrique Moreno. With respect to these nominations, the Senate has for too long refused to do its constitutional duty and vote. Nominees deserve to be treated with dignity and dispatch--not delayed for two or three or four years. The nomination of Judge White has now been pending for over four years, the longest pending nomination without a hearing in Senate history.

Of course it is every Senator's right to vote as he or she sees fit on all matters. But I would hope that in the cases of these long-pending nominations, those who have opposed them will show them the courtesy of using this time to discuss with us any concerns they may have and to explain the basis for their anonymous holds and the Senate's refusals to act.

REV_00256028

It was only a couple of years ago when the Chief Justice of the United States chastised this Senate for refusing to vote up or down on judicial nominations after a reasonable period for review.

This Senate continues to reject his wisdom and, in my view, our duty.

It is my hope the Senate will confirm all four district court nominees on the Senate calendar. I know there are Senators who want a chance to debate the lack of hearings and the refusal to give hearings to qualified nominees. I understand that frustration, and it is justifiable, especially as it is not the way the Democrats acted when they controlled the Senate with a Republican President.

The nominee from Illinois should have been confirmed some time ago. The nominees from Arizona have zipped through here faster than the Republican leadership has allowed most judges to go through. When Senators supporting nominations, received months and years before, see newer nominees zip through, they are, of course, frustrated.

[*S9671]

The Judiciary Committee has reported only three nominees to the court of appeals all year. We have held hearings without even including a nominee to the court of appeals. We have denied a committee vote to two outstanding nominees who have succeeded in getting hearings; namely, Bonnie Campbell and Allen Snyder. You have to understand the frustration of Senators and those outside the Senate who know that Roger Gregory and Helene White and Bonnie Campbell and Kathleen McCree Lewis and others should have been considered by the Judiciary Committee and voted on by the Senate.

On September 14, Senators Barbara Mikulski, Barbara Boxer, Blanche Lincoln, Tom Harkin, and Carl Levin and Representative Carolyn Maloney from the other body, highlighted the Senate's failure to act on judicial nominations to the Federal bench. They called on the Senate leadership to consider qualified women before the Congress adjourned. They also discussed the problems of judicial emergencies, the length of time it takes women and people of color to be confirmed, and how the Federal courts do not currently reflect the diversity of our country. I do not recall them or anybody else ascribing motives to those who are holding up these people. Rather, they were saying in a diverse country such as ours, the Federal court should reflect the diversity of our country.

They focused on the following women who have been waiting more than 60 days for confirmation: Helene White, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, has been pending more than 1,360 days; Kathleen McCree

REV_00256029

Lewis, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, has been pending more than 370 days; Bonnie Campbell, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, has been pending more than 215 days; Elena Kagen, U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, has been pending for more than 480 days; Lynette Norton, U.S. District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, has been pending more than 890 days; Patricia Coan, U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, has been pending more than 500 days; Dolly Gee, U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, has been pending more than 495 days; Rhonda Fields, U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, has been pending more than 325 days; and Linda Riegle, U.S. District Court for the District of Nevada, has been pending more than 165 days. That is why these Senators and this Member of Congress made the statement we did.

Mr. President, am I correct in understanding that under the previous order, we are to recess at 12:30?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. Then I yield the floor and withhold the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I believe I also have an hour under another part of the unanimous consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. I will withhold that and yield the floor.

SUBJECT: JUDGES (92%); POLITICS (90%); CAMPAIGNS & ELECTIONS (90%); VOTERS & VOTING (89%); LEGISLATORS (78%); YEAR 2000 ELECTIONS (78%);

LOAD-DATE: 10-04-2000

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress ⓘ
Terms: presidential nominee and republican (Edit Search)
Focus: presidential nominee and republican and senate and leahy and bush (Exit FOCUS™)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 4:53 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Under my stewardship, the Judiciary Committee has considered President Clinton's judicial nominees more carefully than the Democratic Senate did in 1993 and 1994. Some individuals confirmed by the Senate then likely would not clear the committee today. The Senate's power of advice and consent, after all, is not a rubber stamp.

But there is no evidence of bias or of a confirmation slowdown. Senate Democrats claim that Republicans have politicized the confirmation process. Republicans, though, have not levied false charges or used petty parliamentary games.

In conclusion, it always is the case that some nominations die at the end of the Congress. In 1992, when Democrats controlled the Senate, Congress adjourned without having acted on 53 Bush nominations. Currently there are only 38 Clinton nominations that are pending before the Judiciary Committee.

It is not the end of the line for nominees that do not get confirmed this year. Republican nominees who failed to get confirmed have bone on to great careers, both in public service and the private sector. Senator Jeff Sessions, Governor Frank Keating, Washington attorney John Roberts, and law professor Lillian BeVier are just a few examples. Lillian BeVier and a number of other women are prime examples of those who were denied the opportunity of being on the court for one reason or another back in those days.

I bitterly resent anybody trying to play politics with this issue. I stand ready to defend our position on the Judiciary Committee, and I look forward to confirming these last four nominees today. And, of course, once we have done that, we will have matched what was done back in 1994, when the President said we had a full judiciary, with a vacancy of 7.4 percent.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. It is my understanding that under the unanimous consent request, I have 10 minutes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Correct.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I have spoken with the staff of Senator Leahy and, if I go beyond 10 minutes, I ask that the additional time be taken from that allocated to Senator Leahy.

REV_00255986

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

I thank Senator Hatch for his leadership and friendship on the Senate Judiciary Committee. We have our differences. When I served on the committee, we had some profound differences, but I respect him very much, and I respect the job he does.

I thank Senator Hatch personally for the kind attention which he has given to the vacancies in my home State of Illinois. I am happy to report that with the nomination and confirmation of Michael Reagan, we will have a full complement of Federal judges in our State, which will make the workload more manageable all across the State. So I thank Senator Hatch and also Senator Fitzgerald. We have been working for the last 2 years, on a very bipartisan basis, toward approving these nominees to have come before the Senate.

[*S9659]

Before I address the nomination of Michael Reagan, I would like to address a larger issue which involves not only the Senate Judiciary Committee but the entire Senate, the Congress, and the people of this country because this week marks the opening of the Supreme Court's new term. It is a good moment to reflect on the role of the Supreme Court, its past, and its future.

This brief statement that I present to you represents some of the concerns I have about the Supreme Court, the role it is playing, and the impact of the Presidential election on the future of that Court.

One of the most interesting books ever written about America was written by a French tourist by the name of Alexis de Tocqueville. He came to the United States 165 years ago, traveling around different cities and making observations about this American character. This was a brand new nation. De Tocqueville wrote in his famous work his observations and took them back to Europe.

One might think that a book such as that would be lost in history. It turns out that de Tocqueville's observations were so impressive that 165 years later we still turn to this book, and I think it is nothing short of amazing that his observations turn out to be valid today. De Tocqueville made an observation about America and about all of the important political questions in our country which sooner or later turn out to be judicial questions. This wasn't a criticism. Quite the contrary. De Tocqueville admired the innovations in the American judiciary that granted the courts the independence and clarity of function that were found nowhere else in the world. De Tocqueville believed these observations would mean that America's judicial system would hear, and act on, the most important issues of the day. He couldn't have been more correct.

REV_00255987

Think about the "big issues". The issues that the American people have cared about--argued about--most deeply. The issues that spark the most debate--and the most passion. Sooner or later, the battle over these issues comes before the highest court in the land. Slavery. Child labor. Worker safety. Monopolies. Unionization. Freedom of the press. Capital punishment. Segregation. Environmental protection. Voting rights. A woman's right to choose.

The battle always comes to the Supreme Court; always comes before the nine justices who are Constitutionally granted enormous responsibilities, and enormous power.

In just the past year, the Supreme Court has offered important rulings on abortion, school prayer, gay rights, aid to parochial schools, pornography, Miranda rights, violence against women, parental rights--just to name a few. Not all of these decisions have turned out as I would have hoped.

For instance, take the case of U.S. vs. Morrison. The Supreme Court struck down a provision of the Violence Against Women Act that gave victims of rape and domestic violence the right to sue their attackers in federal court. Congress passed this law to give women an additional means of pursuing justice when they are the victims of assault. We passed this law because the States themselves did not always adequately pursue rapists and assailants. And the States acknowledged this!

Thirty-six States had entered this suit on behalf of the woman who had been victimized. They wanted victims of violence against women to retain the right to bring their attackers to court. But the Supreme Court, in a narrow vote, decided otherwise. The vote... five to four.

But this close margin is not unusual on our highest court--it is becoming commonplace. Rarely has the Supreme Court been so narrowly divided for such a long period of time. The replacement of just one judge could drastically change the dynamic of the Court for decades to come.

Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas--the Court's most conservative members--tend to vote together on hot button social and political issues such as affirmative action and school prayer. Centrist conservatives, Justices O'Connor and Kennedy, usually join them. The dissent is often written by the more liberal justices--Stevens, Souter, Ginsberg and Breyer. Both Ginsberg and Breyer are Clinton appointments.

Many of the Supreme Courts decisions have been made on the basis of a single vote. Partial birth abortion--five to four. Age discrimination--five to four. Gay rights--five to four. Warantless police searches--five to four. The federal role in death penalty cases--five to four.

REV_00255988

These are not mere academic cases. These are decisions that change people's lives. We all hope that the Supreme Court will act wisely and fairly. But we also all know--history and human nature tell us so--that this is not always the case.

We learned in school about the Dred Scott case. Mr. Scott had lived in my home state of Illinois--where slavery was banned--and sued for his freedom on the basis that he had already lived as a free man, and had the right to continue to do so. The Supreme Court infamously disagreed, finding that Mr. Scott was nothing more than property--"to be Used in Subserviency to the Interests, the Convenience, or the Will, of His Owner", a man "Without Social, Civil, or Political Rights." The decisions of the Supreme Court--and at times, the opinion of just one Justice--can make the difference between having, or losing, a cherished right.

Perhaps that is the reason that my colleague, the senior Senator from Utah, is of the opinion that a President's power to make nominations to the Supreme Court and to the federal bench is--and this is a quote--". ..the single most important issue of this next election."

I think he's right. The next President may have the opportunity to make two or three appointments to the Supreme Court. He may even appoint the next Chief Justice.

In the first two hundred years since the signing of the Constitution, the Supreme Court invalidated 128 laws that had been passed by Congress. About one law every two years, on average. Since 1995, however, the Court has struck down 21 laws, more than four per year. This is an unprecedented assertion of judicial power.

Will the next President try to use the appointment process to further shift the balance of power between the branches of government?

Will the next President of the United States use a litmus test to "pack" the Supreme Court with Justices--Justices whose minds were already made up on important issues?

That is what the far right, members of the Federalist Society, want. They want to turn back the hands of the clock.

So I'm inclined to agree with the distinguished Senator from Utah. This is, indeed, one of the most important issues of the Presidential campaign.

REV_00255989

Imagine a Supreme Court with three Antonin Scalia's--three Clarence Thomases--three radically conservative Justices bent on greatly restricting the authority of the federal government. The philosophical balance of the Court would shift dramatically. One by one the protections that have been built up over the past thirty five years could fall.

If you read the history of the Supreme Court, you will note that up until the time Franklin Roosevelt was President, it was an extremely conservative and somewhat lackluster Court. The Court started to change during Roosevelt's Presidency, and beyond. Republican and Democratic Presidents thereafter appointed more activist judges who looked at the problems facing America. One by one, the protections which we built up over that period of time would be in jeopardy.

Protection of the rights of minorities, women, and the handicapped; protection of voting rights, civil rights, worker rights, reproductive rights; protection of the environment; protection from gun violence; and protection of our fundamental freedoms as Americans. One by one, a different court could challenge each of these protections.

[*S9660]

No longer could the federal government require background checks for gun purchases, rein in polluters, or protect the persecuted.

I hope all Americans will give some thought to the type of Supreme Court they feel can best serve the American people. I hope they give it some thought before they go out and vote in November.

In addition to who will be appointed, it's also critical to realize who is not being appointed.

More than any previous president, President Clinton has succeeded in diversifying the bench. Nevertheless, women and minorities are still underrepresented in our Federal courts. It isn't as if some Members of Congress have not tried to address this disparity. But as hard as we try to diversify the bench, we have not been able to produce the record of success that we would like to show.

I wonder how one of the great Justices ever to serve on the Supreme Court, Justice Thurgood Marshall, would have reflected on the treatment of a nominee, Ronnie White for the Federal District Court in Missouri. He is a member of Missouri Supreme Court. He is African American. He was judged qualified and reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Then he was rejected on the Senate floor by a party-line vote. Some

REV_00255990

EXECUTIVE SESSION -- (Senate - July 30, 2002)

[Page: S7551]

NOMINATION OF D. BROOKS SMITH TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I now ask that the Senate proceed to executive session, as provided under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to executive session, and the clerk will report the nomination.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of D. Brooks Smith, of Pennsylvania, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Third Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are now 4 hours for debate, evenly divided between the chairman and ranking member.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, it is with considerable pride that I urge my colleagues to vote to confirm a very distinguished Federal judge, D. Brooks Smith, now Chief Judge of the Western District of Pennsylvania, whose nomination is now before the Senate for the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Judge Smith comes to this position with an outstanding academic background, having received his bachelor's degree from Franklin and Marshall College in 1973, his law degree from Dickinson Law School, and then engaged in the active practice of law for 8 years before becoming district attorney of Blair County, PA, a populous county whose county seat is Altoona.

He then became a judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Blair County in 1984, serving for 4 years until he became a judge for the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania where he is now the chief judge, and for now almost 14 years has had very distinguished service there.

I came to know Judge Smith when he appeared before the bipartisan nominating panel which had been established by Senator Heinz and myself, and I found him very well qualified and have known him on a continuing basis rather well over the course of the past 14 years. I have talked to him on many occasions and met with him on many occasions, discussing problems of the courts administratively, and issues that may come before the Judiciary Committee. He has been an outstanding jurist.

Judge Smith enjoys a unique reputation among all of the people who know him. During his confirmation hearings, large groups of people who knew him rallied to his defense and came forward to attest to his erudition, his scholarship, his good character, and his judicial temperament.

Certain issues have been raised which had delayed the confirmation. One involved a fishing club in which he was a member, but that club did not practice what is called invidious discrimination because it was a social club only. While in confirmation hearings for the district court, he had said he would resign from the club if they did not change their membership rules. It was later determined in 1992 in an opinion of precedential value that the club did not engage in invidious discrimination, so there was no

REV_00256032

Judge Smith did not resign within a year, or 2 years, as he had sworn. In fact, he did not resign within the time that the ethical rules that he was sworn to uphold as a judge required. He did not resign until 10 years later and then only when a new position on a higher court for someone from Western Pennsylvania opened up and he hoped to be appointed to it.

There is no reasonable, logical explanation for why he waited for more than 10 years to follow through except that one: There is now a vacancy on a court that he wanted to go to, the Third Circuit from Western Pennsylvania. Claims that the ethical rules changed to allow his continued membership are groundless.

The reason I stress this is that we have judicial nominations hearings, and the distinguished Senator from Utah, the distinguished Senator from Illinois, we have all sat in these hearings. You ask for certain commitments from judicial nominees because once they are confirmed they have a lifetime position.

When a nominee comes before the Senate and makes a commitment, we must rely on his or her word to honor that the promise will be kept. With Federal judges that is especially true. Once confirmed, they have lifetime appointments. Impeachment is not a realistic way to enforce such commitments and, unlike Republicans in the House and Senate a few years ago, I have never suggested impeachment of Federal judges.

If we allow such a promise, whether it is about club membership or some other issue, to be so flagrantly broken with no consequence, then promises and assurances to the United States Senate will mean very little. I think that is a bad precedent. I think that is a bad message to send to future nominees to the courts and to the executive branch: just tell us what we want to hear and then ignore those commitments without any consequence.

I cannot think of another occasion in which a judicial nominee has promised to take specific actions and then been confirmed, after failing to keep his word. It is true that some judicial nominees have been confirmed after resigning from a discriminatory club, but none have ever been confirmed after telling the Senate that they would resign and then failing for years to do so. The closest analogy I recall is the failed nomination of Judge Kenneth Ryskamp to the 11th Circuit, because Judge Ryskamp was on notice that membership in discriminatory clubs was impermissible, but he continued his membership in a discriminatory club anyway.

As a district court nominee of President Reagan in 1986, Judge Ryskamp admitted that he was then a member of the University Club, which had a rule against allowing women as members, and the Riviera Club, which had no race-specific membership rules, but which in practice had no Jewish or African American members. During his 1986 hearing, Senator Simon asked Ryskamp if he thought he should resign from the University Club, and Ryskamp promised the Senate, ``I will resign from any club the Committee feels is inappropriate.'' In 1986, he was not asked specifically about the Riviera Club, which he later said he did not consider to be a discriminatory club. He subsequently resigned from the University Club, but not the Riviera Club.

During his nomination by the first President Bush to the Eleventh Circuit, Judge Ryskamp's two-decade long membership in the Riviera Club was questioned extensively. For example, Senator Kennedy noted that the fact that the Senate had not specifically asked Judge Ryskamp to resign from the Riviera Club did not lessen his responsibility to follow the ethical rules anyway and resign. I recall that Judge Ryskamp told me that he resigned shortly before his confirmation hearing in March 1991 because his continued membership created the appearance of impropriety, not because, in his view, the Club discriminated. In April 1992, the motion to report favorably Judge Ryskamp's circuit nomination to the floor was defeated. The subsequent motion to send the nomination to the floor without recommendation also failed.

REV_00256041

Unlike Judge Smith, Judge Ryskamp never promised to resign from the club at issue, although several Senators believed Judge Ryskamp should have done so following his first confirmation. I think it only reasonable that Judge Smith's conduct regarding his previous promise to the Senate would lead a reasonable person to doubt the sincerity of his assurances to the Senate this year in other areas, as well.

Breaking a promise to the Senate, or misleading the Senate into believing that certain action would be taken, is an independent yet unusually strong reason for the rejection of a judicial nominee. I do not think Judge Smith should be given a promotion after failing to keep his word to the Senate. If his statements to the Senate in 1988 were not promises, then he most assuredly misled the Senate into believing he was going to resign, and he did not do so within any period that can be considered reasonable. On this basis alone, I feel I must vote against Judge Smith's confirmation to the Third Circuit.

Spruce Creek invidiously discriminates against women. Prior to his nomination to be promoted to the Third Circuit, Judge Smith never informed the Senate that he did not have to keep his promise to the Senate. He acknowledged in both his 1988 and 2001 Senate Questionnaires that the Club violated the ethical rules against judges belonging to clubs that engage in invidious discrimination. In fact, when Judge Smith finally resigned from the Club in December of 1999, he told the Club's president that the Club's men-only membership rules ``continue to be at odds with current expectations of Federal judicial conduct.'' It is only now that questions have been raised about his very late resignation does he belatedly assert for the first time that the Club is ``purely social'' and so the rules against discriminatory club membership do not apply. The exception he seeks to create would swallow the rule. His statements on this point really give me pause with respect to how Judge Smith would follow the law as an appellate judge or whether he would seek to bend it to his personal purposes. Public officials should not have to be told, repeatedly, not to belong to clubs that discriminate.

We have received a letter from Professor Stephen Gillers, the Vice Dean of the New York University School of Law, observing that the ethical rules against discriminatory club membership do not apply to purely private social clubs that do not allow business or professional meetings. However, both Professor Gillers and Professor Monroe Friedman, a distinguished ethics scholar, have noted that if club members can or do sponsor events or meetings at the club that are business or professionally related then the club cannot be called purely private and the club's discrimination against membership for women is ``invidious'' within the meaning of the Code of Conduct's prohibitions. This is true even if women are allowed, by the men who belong to the club, to attend some or all business and professional meetings hosted by the club's members.

I understand that, in fact, Spruce Creek has always allowed members to host business and professional meetings at its facilities. We know that members have hosted business meetings and gatherings of their professional colleagues at the Club. The President of the Club, who has been a member for decades, told Senate staff that members can use Club facilities for any meetings or occasions they want, without any oversight, but he refused to discuss the specific ways the Club is used by members for business meetings.

[Page: S7556]

REV_00256042

We also know that the Club's constitution and by-laws do not discourage the members from hosting business, professional or political meetings at the Club. Women, regardless of their standing in the community or in their profession, cannot invite their colleagues to Spruce Creek for business meetings because they are explicitly and intentionally excluded from membership.

Additionally, according to Professor Gillers, Judge Smith had an obligation to make sure that the Club maintained a purely social purpose, if he was going to claim that his membership was exempt from the ethical rules. He could not merely assume that it did. There is no ``don't ask, don't tell'' exception to the ethical rules. Given his previous assurances to the Senate and his own admissions up to and including his resignation in 1999, he can hardly assert that the Club is ``purely social'' now, as an after-the-fact justification for his conduct. He has made no showing in support of this belated contention.

Professor Gillers' view of this obligation to inquire is consistent with the guidance in the Judicial Conference's Compendium to the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. Judge Smith also did not follow the Compendium's advice regularly to re-evaluate club membership policies and practices. Judge Smith also did not seek an ethics opinion from his fellow Federal judges about whether the rules against discriminatory club membership somehow exempted this Club to which he so badly wanted to belong.

Judge Smith now says that he did not seek an ethics opinion because it was so clear to him that the ethics rules did not apply to this Club after amendments in 1992 that supposedly let him off the hook. This is another implausible and self-serving assertion. As Professor Gillers noted, the 1992 amendments to the Code of Conduct for United States Judges without a doubt strengthened the prohibition against discriminatory club membership by adopting the language of the ABA code referred to in the Senate Questionnaire that Judge Smith promised to follow when he swore to the Senate that he would resign. The only significant difference is that the rule Judge Smith promised to follow in 1988 allowed judges one year to get discriminatory rules changed or resign, while the 1992 rule gave judges up to two years, from learning of discrimination according to the Code's new, tougher rules, to change the club's practices or resign. Yet, Judge Smith did not resign in 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, or 1994. He did not resign until a chance for a higher position in the Federal courts became available in 1999.

I recall that more than a decade ago the Senate Judiciary Committee considered this issue at length. There was testimony from women and men from across the country describing the impact of discriminatory private clubs on the women and people of color excluded. From time to time, I suppose, reminders of these lessons are necessary.

In 1990, 2 years after Judge Smith was confirmed and promised the Senate that he would resign from the mens-only Spruce Creek Club, the Senate Judiciary Committee passed a sense of the Committee resolution on the issue of discriminatory clubs. The resolution stated that discrimination at clubs where business is conducted and which intentionally exclude women and minorities is ``invidious'' and ``conflicts with the appearance of impartiality required of persons who may serve in the federal judiciary.'' The Committee's resolution that was adopted on August 2, 1990, provides a bright-line rule for public officials. It defines the clubs at issue as those where members bring business clients or professional associates to the club for conferences, meetings, meals, or use of the facilities. Spruce Creek meets this definition. It is also obviously a place where contacts valuable for business purposes, employment and professional advancement are formed. The Club, by arbitrarily and intentionally excluding women from membership, practices invidious discrimination as defined by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Public officials should not have to be told repeatedly not to belong to clubs that discriminate.

REV_00256043

All judges, no matter how popular, have a solemn obligation to ``avoid the appearance of impropriety in all activities,'' under both the Judicial Conference's Code of Conduct for United States Judges and the ABA's model code. That is because, in the words of those codes, ``Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges. A judge must avoid all impropriety and appearance of impropriety. A judge must expect to be the subject of constant public scrutiny. A judge must therefore accept restrictions on the judge's conduct that might be viewed as burdensome by the ordinary citizen and should do so freely and willingly.''

This prohibition applies ``to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.'' The Judiciary Committee's club resolution similarly sets a high standard of conduct for Federal judges in their personal conduct with regard to club memberships and association. Judge Smith has failed in those obligations. He may very well be a nice person and courteous to women litigants in his courtroom, but that does not excuse him from following the ethical rules that govern his conduct as a lifetime appointee to the Federal courts. Ethical rules apply to all judges equally, regardless of popularity.

Judge Smith had an obligation to resign from the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club, both by virtue of his promise to the Senate and because of his responsibilities under the ethical codes, and he failed to do so in a timely fashion. His conduct should not be rewarded with a promotion.

I would also like to set the record straight on one final related point. Supporters of Judge Smith have referenced President Jimmy Carter visiting the Club. According to Carter's memoirs, however, one time in the late 1970s President Carter and the First Lady were invited by the ``Spruce Creek Hunting and Fishing Club for a day of fishing on a portion of their leased stream.'' That day, they met the man who actually owned that parcel of land and thereafter they visited and stayed at his farm, not the Club. The chapter in his book called ``Spruce Creek'' relates to the creek, not the Club. There is no evidence that President Carter has ever endorsed the Club's intentional, invidious discrimination against women.

Judge Smith failed to recuse himself promptly from conflicts of interest. I am also concerned about Judge Smith's late recusal, or disqualification, in two cases involving his substantial financial investments. According to two distinguished professors of legal ethics, Professor Gillers and Professor Friedman, Judge Smith also violated ethical rules due to his late recusal from the Black cases, a 1997 investment fraud case and a related 1999 criminal case. This is because it is undisputably true that Judge Smith and his wife had substantial investments (valued at between $200,000 and $500,000 together) in the bank or holding company that faced significant financial liability in those cases and because his wife also worked at the bank.

In one of those cases, Judge Smith waited five months to recuse himself. In the other case, he waited about a week to recuse himself after realizing that the bank was involved, but he issued significant orders in the intervening period. In both cases, Judge Smith revealed only his wife's employment at the bank to the lawyers in the cases. He never disclosed their substantial financial investments to the lawyers in either the civil or the criminal case. Judge Smith contends that he was not required to recuse himself but did so only in ``an abundance of caution.'' He also contends, basically, that nobody was harmed by his late recusal.

In the opinions of two ethics experts, however, Judge Smith was required to recuse himself from any case in which the judge or his spouse has any interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the case, in accordance with the rules passed by Congress in 28 U.S.C. □ 455 (a) and (b) (4), and with cases of the Supreme Court and Third Circuit. These rules against conflicts of interest, which are intended ``to avoid even the appearance of partiality,'' are largely self-enforcing. Parties may not know that a judge has substantial financial investments affected by the case and may not move to disqualify a judge unless the judge fully discloses such information. Judge Smith, again reading ethical rules narrowly, did not

REV_00256044

[Page: S7557]

do so. Such facts do not give one confidence in his conduct on the bench.

I do think this Senate should take seriously a lifetime appointee's failure to follow ethical rules, in this area and others, such as discriminatory club membership. It is problematic to confirm someone to the Court of Appeals who would read the ethical obligations so narrowly. This is especially so because, under the structure of the Federal courts, it is the circuit court judges who preside over ethics complaints against lower federal judges. I do not think those who read such rules narrowly should be elevated and given that special responsibility.

Judge Smith's remarks as a Federal District Court judge: Another troubling area is Judge Smith's insensitive and activist speeches. A number of these remarks call into question Judge Smith's judgment and fairness. For example, as a sitting federal judge he has given speeches in which he calls ``legal spam'' cases that affect the rights of ordinary Americans, such as cases involving their financial security, social security appeals, pension plan collection cases, and bankruptcy appeals. Such a characterization is shocking for its insensitivity to the importance of such cases to the individuals seeking a fair hearing of their claims in federal court. It calls into question how seriously Judge Smith has taken his oath as judge to administer justice to all persons equally and to ``do equal right to the poor and to the rich.''

Judge Smith also spoke out in favor of parties being required to pay each other's costs in responding to discovery requests. That idea--like the idea of requiring the loser in a case to pay the winner's expenses, which he also endorsed has been widely rejected because it would impose significant financial burdens on individuals suing corporations, for example, for personal injuries caused by a defective product. Such a rule could make it impossible for individuals to pursue legitimate grievances for which Congress has provided a federal court forum.

Another concern is Judge Smith's speeches to conservative ideological groups in which he basically gives advisory opinions about the constitutionality of federal statutes. For example, in 1993, as a sitting judge, he gave a far-reaching speech to the Federalist Society in which he advised the audience that the proposed Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was unconstitutional. He said this landmark legislation could not be justified as within the power of the federal government. He was also very critical of Congress's extensive findings of fact in VAWA, calling them a ``promiscuous invocation of the Commerce Clause.'' This lack of deference and respect to the legislative findings of a co-equal branch of government is troubling.

Judge Smith told the Federalist Society his own principles for deciding such cases: ``First, ask whether the subject matter is within the power of the national government by express delegation in the text of the [C]onstitution, or impliedly through a historically honest reading of the necessary and proper clause. If not stop!'' Such a subjectively narrow reading of the Constitution could ostensibly result in the overturning of many laws intended to protect the rights of individuals. He assured the Senate at his recent hearing that he would not read the Constitution so narrowly if he were promoted, but in 1988 he also assured the Senate that he would resign from a discriminatory club the following year, a promise he did not keep. I am not sure his assurances on the important issue of the scope of Congressional power should be credited now.

Similarly, Judge Smith gave a speech at the 1997 National Convention of the Federalist Society on

REV_00256045

``The Federalization of Criminal Law." In it he criticized the invocation of federal jurisdiction via the Commerce Clause in a ``routine" car bombing case under 18 U.S.C. □ 844, as well as the ``rape-shield" amendments to the Federal Rules of Evidence which generally bars evidence of a rape victim's sexual history. Judge Smith took issue with federal intrusion into these areas of the law, stating that using that statute in car bombing cases and rules like the rape-shield rule reflect ``elitism: a mind set on the part of Congress and some federal prosecutors that the state court systems can't be trusted to `get it right' ..... never mind the text of the Constitution." Such statements are unsettling. It seems as though Judge Smith has a deep distrust that Congress does not follow the Constitution, despite the precedent that requires judges to give congressional enactments a presumption of constitutionality.

Judge Smith has also written an article endorsing an idea he calls ``benign judicial activism" in which a judge intervenes early in a case to help reach a speedy and just resolution. While this idea has superficial appeal, in practice this approach may not be so benign. In about half of Judge Smith's more than 50 reversals, the Third Circuit reversed his decisions either to grant summary judgment in whole or in part to defendants in civil cases or to dismiss plaintiffs' complaints with prejudice. In a number of such reversals which span his years on the bench the Third Circuit took issue with his early intervention in cases in ways that denied plaintiffs the opportunity to have their cases adjudicated or tried on the merits. Thus, the Court of Appeals to which Judge Smith is now nominated has repeatedly reversed decisions of his which improvidently granted summary judgment or dismissals in favor of civil defendants, often big, corporate defendants. This pattern, combined with his speeches and conduct, raises concern.

Judge Smith's participation in seminars at resorts paid for by special interests is problematic. Another area of concern is that Judge Smith has attended a large number of educational seminars funded by corporations and groups with an interest in interpreting the law a particular way, in a politically or ideologically conservative way favoring corporate interests. As a sitting federal judge, Judge Smith has spent more than 72 days on junkets at luxury resorts on trips valued at more than $37,000 which were funded by corporations and conservative special interest groups. Judge Smith has taken three trips to seminars funded by the Foundation for Research on Economics and the Environment (FREE), which promotes ``free market environmentalism," opposes environmental regulations, and gives lectures on topics like ``Liberty and the Environment: A Case for Principled Judicial Activism." He has also taken nine trips funded by the Law and Economics Center (LEC), which is affiliated with George Mason Law School and which sponsors seminars with anti-regulatory bent on topics like ``Misconceptions about Environmental Pollution and Cancer."

My colleague on the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Feingold, has spent a great deal of time trying to address the problem of these junkets. The current ethical rules do not clearly prohibit such judicial education seminars at luxury resorts paid for by special interests, and it is difficult for outsiders to obtain information about who is really footing the bill. According to one report, however, Judge Smith has presided over at least two dozen cases involving corporations that funded LEC and he is one of the most frequent fliers to such seminars. I do think it is difficult to maintain the appearance of impartiality under such circumstances. It is axiomatic that judges must be perceived as fair and impartial, and actually be so, for our system of justice to work. I am troubled by Judge Smith's insensitivity to such matters.

Judge Smith's reversals for dismissing plaintiffs' claims: I am also concerned about the unsettling anti-plaintiff pattern in Judge Smith's judicial decisions. Judge Smith's published and unpublished decisions reveal numerous instances in which he has been more solicitous to corporations than to plaintiffs and pro se litigants. Judge Smith has been reversed by the Third Circuit dozens of times for denying plaintiffs the opportunity to try the merits of their cases. In cases involving personal injuries, toxic torts, employee rights, and civil rights claims by prisoners, Judge Smith has been reversed for improvidently granting defendants' motions for summary judgment, prematurely dismissing plaintiffs' complaints, and inappropriately denying motions for injunctive relief without giving the plaintiffs a hearing.

Overall, Judge Smith has been reversed 51 times, including 18 unpublished reversals, in 14 years. In contrast, Judge Pickering was reversed 28 times in 11 years and Judge Barrington Parker, one of President Bush's nominees who was confirmed last fall, was reversed nine times in 11 years on the district court bench. The Third Circuit's reversals suggest that Judge Smith's political philosophy greatly influences the outcome in cases before him. Of the many problematic reversals and published, as well as unpublished, decisions of Judge Smith on the district court, three are particularly illustrative of his approach to claims of plaintiffs, but there are many others that raise concerns.

[Page: S7558]

In Metzgar v. Playskool, 30 F.3d 459 (3d Cir. 1994), for example, three Reagan appointees reversed Judge Smith's dismissal by summary judgment to the corporate defendant that had been sued for the death of a 15-month-old child who choked on a wooden block marketed without a warning label. Judge Smith granted summary judgment to the corporation on his theory that choking is an obvious danger and therefore no express warning was necessary. The Third Circuit was ``troubled'' by Judge Smith's analysis and his reliance on flawed statistics. The appellate court concluded that Judge Smith should have given the jury a chance to consider whether the blocks were so obviously dangerous that no specific warning was needed for parents of toddlers.

In Wicker v. Consolidated Rail Corporation, 143 F.3d 690 (3d Cir. 1998), Judge Smith was reversed for granting summary judgment to an employer sued under the Federal Employees Liability Act (FELA) for injuries caused by exposure to toxic solvents, degreasers and paints illegally dumped and buried by the employer. Smith granted the corporation's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the workers had signed a release settling prior, unrelated injury claims against the railroad. The Third Circuit reversed and held that FELA was intended to protect workers in these situations and that the releases seized on by Smith were invalid.

In Brown v. Borough of Mahaffey, 35 F.3d 846 (3d Cir. 1994), Judge Smith improvidently granted summary judgment to a city that refused to allow the plaintiff and his Pentecostal ministry access to tent revival meetings in violation of their rights under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. The city had intentionally locked a recently-erected gate to impede access to the Christian revival meetings. Judge Smith concluded erroneously that these actions, even if manifesting anti-Christian bias, did not constitute a substantial burden on the exercise of their religion. The Third Circuit reversed, holding that Judge Smith's analysis was ``inappropriate for a free exercise claim involving intentional burdening of religious exercise'' because ``[a]pplying such a burden test to non-neutral government actions would make petty harassment of religious institutions and exercise immunity from the protection of the First Amendment.'' The Third Circuit completely disagreed with Judge Smith's hostile decision in which he stated that the plaintiff's ``invocation of the First Amendment provisions guaranteeing religious liberty in so glaring a piece of spiteful litigation is insulting to the principles protected by that constitutional amendment.'' I was shocked by Judge Smith's rough and disrespectful treatment of the legitimate claims of people of faith in this case.

This unsettling pattern created by Judge Smith's judicial decisions, his high level of participation in right wing, special interest-funded junkets, his activist and insensitive speeches, his late recusal in cases involving his substantial financial interests, and his very belated resignation from a discriminatory club create a very unfavorable impression. Judge Smith's defense to each of these significant problems seems to be that he actually is a fair judge despite the appearance that he is not. I am not convinced that his record warrants a promotion to a higher court.

REV_00256047

Judge Smith's cramped and self-serving approach to the ethical rules that are supposed to govern federal judges is particularly troubling. He seems to think he is above the rules. His actual record of conduct on and off the bench creates a negative impression that is not reflected in Judge Smith's apparent popularity among his friends. I have no doubt that Judge Smith is an intelligent and charismatic person. What his record as a whole, not just as a colleague or friend, calls into question is his sensitivity, his fairness, his impartiality and his judgment. It calls into question how seriously he has taken his promises and assurances to the Senate in the past and recently, as well as how seriously he has taken his oath as judge to administer justice to all persons equally and to do equal right to the poor and to the rich. The record Judge Smith's own record of performance as a federal judge over these past 14 years does not merit his promotion to one of the highest courts in the land. Based on that record, I will vote against confirmation.

My good friend from Utah is waiting patiently. I withhold the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, hearing my colleague, one might forget that this is the U.S. Senate rather than some whacky politically correct college campus--Berkeley on the Potomac. The fact is, this judge is one of the most respected judges in all of Pennsylvania. He has virtually everybody in western Pennsylvania on his side. He has served 14 years on the Federal bench and has done a very good job in doing so. He is highly respected and has the highest rating from the American Bar Association--the gold standard, according to our colleagues from the other side. And he did not break his word.

The fact is, the law was different than was explained to him when he appeared before the committee, and it is still different than the distinguished Senator from Vermont has been making out here today.

I often hear my colleagues talk about the Clinton nominees who were left at the end of the 106th Congress, but I rarely hear them mention the 54 nominees who were left at the end of the Democratic-controlled 102nd Congress when George Herbert Walker Bush was President. If we are going to waste our time looking back on nominations past instead of looking ahead, let's not forget the 54 nominees the Democratic-controlled Senate left at the end of the 102nd. That is 13 more than the number of Clinton nominees left at the end of the 106th whom we hear so much about, and about 17 of them didn't have a chance anyway. The rest of them there were for reasons. Some of them, the blue slips weren't returned by Senators. You can't call them up.

I don't really think to talk about past congressional action on nominations in any way furthers the work we have been doing as a committee. However, it is difficult to listen to only a select portion of what has occurred in the past without trying to set the record straight. Those Bush 1 nominees who were never confirmed are just as important as these Clinton nominees who have been complained about, and there were far more of them than there were Clinton nominees left over. It is just a matter of fact. Whoever is President, you have some nominees left over. But there were a lot more left over by Democrats than there were by Republicans.

Let me name some of them: Jay C. Waldman of the Third Circuit, nominated for the Third Circuit;

REV_00256048

Franklin Van Antwerpen, Third Circuit; Lillian R. BeVier, Fourth Circuit; Terrence W. Boyle, Fourth Circuit, who has been sitting here for 14 months, nominated again 10 years later; Francis Keating II, current Governor of Oklahoma, the Tenth Circuit; Sidney A. Fitzwater, Fifth Circuit; John G. Roberts, again, nominated by the second Bush 10 years later, sat there all those months in the first Bush, and now he is sitting here for 14 months in this administration; John A. Smietanka, Sixth Circuit; Frederico Moreno, Eleventh Circuit; Justin P. Wilson, Sixth Circuit; James R. McGregor, Western District of Pennsylvania; Edmund Kavanagh, Northern District of New York; Thomas Sholtz, Southern District of Florida; Andrew O'Rourke, Southern District of New York.

There are plenty of names and an awful lot more than were left at the end of the Clinton administration, and with very little justification. They have seldom mentioned that the all-time confirmation champion was Ronald Reagan with 382 judges. He had 6 years of a favorable party Senate. His own party controlled the Senate. He got 382 judges through. President Clinton, with the opposition party controlling the Senate, with me as chairman, as a member of the opposition party, got 377 judges through, virtually the same number as the all-time confirmation champion, Ronald Reagan.

[Page: S7559]

Continuing my list of judges: Tony Graham, Northern District of Oklahoma; Carlos Bea, Northern District of California; James Franklin Southern District of Georgia; David Trager, Eastern District of New York; Kenneth Carr, Western District of Texas; James Jackson, Northern District of Ohio; Terral Smith, Western District of Texas;, Paul Schechtman, Southern District of New York; Percy Anderson, Central District of California; recently confirmed; Lawrence Davis, Eastern District of Missouri; Andrew Hane, Southern District of Texas; recently confirmed; Russell Lloyd, Southern District of Texas; John Walter, Central District of California; recently confirmed; Gene Vougts, Western District of Missouri; Manuel Quintana, Southern District of New York; Charles Banks, Eastern District of Arkansas; Robert Hunter, Northern District of Alabama; Maureen Mahoney, Eastern District of Virginia; James Mitchell, District of Nebraska; Ronald Leighton, District of Oklahoma; William Quarles, District of Maryland; James McIntyre, Southern District of California; Leonard Davis, Eastern Northern District of Texas; recently confirmed; Douglas Drushal, Northern District of Ohio; Christopher Hagy, Northern District of Georgia; Lewis Leonatti, Eastern District of Missouri; Raymond Finch, Northern District of Vermont; James McMonagle, Northern District of Ohio; Katherine Armentrout, District of Maryland; Larry Hicks, District of Nevada; Richard Casey, Southern District of New York; Edgar Campbell, Middle District of Georgia; Joanna Seyvert, Eastern District of New York; Robert Kostelka, Western Northern District of Louisiana; Richard Dorr, Western District of Missouri; has had a hearing; James Payne, District of Oklahoma, confirmed this congress; Walter Prince, District of Massachusetts; George O'Toole, Jr., District of Massachusetts; William Dimetroulas, Southern District of Florida; Henry Saad, Eastern District of Michigan--not to mention Kenneth Ryskamp, who, like Charles Pickering, was voted down in committee and never received a full Senate vote.

Let me also say I am going to get into this because I didn't think we would get down to the point where we started talking about a 115-member club that is a social club, not a business club, and virtually everybody knows it. To make that the big brouhaha that this is supposed to be is just almost beyond belief to me. I didn't want to have to talk about that, but I will be happy to.

I rise today to express my strong support for Judge D. Brooks Smith whom the President nominated on September 10 of last year for the Third Circuit Court of Appeals to be confirmed today or tomorrow. It has been over 5 months since his committee hearing. It has been over 60 days since the Judiciary Committee reported Judge Smith's nomination favorably to the Senate. I am disappointed, however, with the treatment Judge Smith is getting from those whose well-funded business it is to oppose President Bush's nominees.

REV_00256049

I have warned before of the growing power of the extreme left of mainstream special interest groups upon the judicial confirmation process. Almost all of them are right here in this town. My colleagues know full well that when I was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I did not welcome conservative groups telling the committee how to vote and what to do.

I told them to get lost. I even directed my staff to refuse briefings from them and even meetings with them. But the evidence indicates a very different relationship now to liberal special interest groups that seem to call the shots.

Newspapers from the Wall Street Journal to the Washington Post have commented on these liberal special interest groups and on their control of this process. But it is not a matter of opinion; here is the evidence. I would like to have printed in the RECORD evidence of this unfortunate relationship. First is a fundraising letter from People for the American Way taking credit for the rather shameless defeat of Judge Charles Pickering's nomination; second, a letter from a liberal Hispanic organization telling the committee not to bring up the nomination of Miguel Estrada until August to give them time to prepare a Pickering-like campaign against him. The President nominated Miguel Estrada over 1 full year ago. He would be the first Hispanic to sit on the Nation's second most influential court. But the Democratic leadership refuses to give him a hearing. Now I think we know why.

Lastly, I want to have printed in the RECORD a press release from the National Organization For Women, issued just hours after the Judiciary Committee voted to report favorably the nomination of Judge Brooks Smith to the full Senate. It appears that NOW and other radical liberal groups have demanded that the Democrat leadership come to the floor and fight to defeat Judge Smith.

I ask unanimous consent that the documents I have just referenced be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY,

Washington, DC, April 5, 2002.

In the past couple of weeks, the Wall Street Journal's notoriously right-wing editorial board has twice attacked People For the American Way--and me personally--in particularly venomous language. Being called a ``race-card specialist'' is not the best way to start the day. (You think I'd be used to it given that the Journal's editorial board has run more than two dozen attacks on me over the years, especially during my tenure at the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights as I chaired the successful coalition battle to keep Robert Bork off the U.S. Supreme Court.)

But there's good news in those unfair and inaccurate poison-pen editorials. As a longtime progressive ally recently reminded me, they don't come after us like that unless they think we're winning.

In this case their fears were well founded. On March 14, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted to reject the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to a lifetime appointment to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. People For the American Way played a crucial leadership role in the broad progressive coalition effort to defeat this nomination in the face of attacks from the far right, the GOP Senate leadership, and the White House. Even before the vote, the far right had been coming after us with all reason for him to leave the club.

An issue arose on a case, where he presided for a relatively brief period of time, as to whether there should have been an earlier recusal. The matter was inquired into, investigated at length by former Gov. Dick Thornburgh and former Attorney General of the United States, and in an elaborate statement, he went through the case in detail and found, as I concluded as well, that the judge had made a timely recusal.

Some issues were also raised as to a speech which Judge Smith made on the Violence Against Women Act. He had concluded that there was not Federal jurisdiction for that particular statute.

[Page: S7552]

I, frankly, disagreed with him about his conclusion on that, as lawyers are wont to do, even lawyers who become judges or lawyers who become Senators. In fact, the Supreme Court of the United States ultimately agreed with Judge Smith on the point.

I mention these issues in passing because I think they are not worth any more comment. The issues were considered at great length by the Judiciary Committee, and in a 12-to-7 vote, the Judiciary Committee recommended Judge Smith's confirmation.

As is well known, Judge Smith's nomination came before the Judiciary Committee at a time of considerable controversy involving the timing and the confirmation of nominees submitted by President Bush.

Senator Biden, Senator Kohl, and Senator Edwards all voted to confirm Judge Smith in an atmosphere where there was, to say the least, at least some element of partisanship.

I only mention those issues. I think they do not bear any more comment than I have given them.

When a man such as D. Brooks Smith undertakes public service in a Federal judgeship, I think it ought to be noted that there is a very considerable personal and financial sacrifice. I thank Judge Smith for serving on the Federal bench, and I thank all the Federal judges for serving on the Federal courts which are the pillars of justice and the pillars of our democratic society.

Judge Smith has undergone a difficult period in this confirmation process which has taken quite a considerable period of time. I compliment him for his steadfastness and for his determination in staying the course and in working through on this confirmation.

There is no doubt of Judge Smith's qualifications--his educational background, temperament, judicial experience, and experience being a district attorney. Judge Smith has a broad range of experience.

The Third Circuit is in desperate need of judges. They are in an emergency situation. I ask unanimous consent that a letter from Chief Judge Edward R. Becker be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1)

REV_00256033

the rhetorical fury they can muster. I can only imagine what will happen now that it is clear we won't let them complete their ideological takeover of the federal courts without a fight.

Pat Robertson recently told millions of his television viewers that People For the American Way is ``bad news for America. They don't tell the truth, and what they're doing is essentially smearing this man.'' Robertson's son Gordon, the heir apparent to the evangelist's empire, used the same television platform to accuse People For the American Way of ``anti-Christian bigotry,'' telling viewers we opposed Pickering because he is a Christian. Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum has denounced People For the American Way and our allies as an ``Unholy Alliance'' while calling Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee the ``Tyrannical Ten.''

Ultra-conservative senators like Trent Lott, Orrin Hatch and Mitch McConnell have gone after us and other Pickering critics. And right-wing pundits on the Internet are even worse, making totally irresponsible and inflammatory remarks.

The increasing frequency and harshness of the attacks directed against People For the American Way reflect more than anything else our leadership role in the progressive movement and the effectiveness of our work. We've been accused of aiding America's enemies for standing up to Attorney General John Ashcroft and his assaults on the Constitution. We've been attacked as anti-Christian bigots for defending separation of church and state. And now we're being attacked for fighting to preserve the federal courts as a refuge for people seeking to have their civil rights and civil liberties protected.

The recent Judiciary Committee vote was the first victory in what will certainly be a long and fierce struggle over the future of the federal judiciary and the rights and freedoms protected by our Constitution.

I hope that you will take this opportunity to become a member of People For the American Way or to continue your support. At this watershed moment in our history, we would be proud and honored to march forward with you as our partner.

Sincerely,

Ralph G. Neas,
President.

[Page: S7560]

--

Mexican American Legal Defense & Educational Fund, National Association of Latino Elected & Appointed Officials, National Council of La Raza, National Puerto Rican Coalition, Puerto Rican Legal Defense & Education Fund, Washington, DC, May 1, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As national Latino civil rights organizations, we write on a matter of great importance to U.S. Latinos, and all Americans--the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the D.C. Circuit

REV_00256051

Court of Appeals. Although historically we have expressed our views on judicial nominees with different levels of frequency, we are united in our view that all federal judicial appointments are important because they are life-long appointments, because they are positions of great symbolism, and because federal judges interpret the U.S. Constitution and federal laws serving as the balance to the legislative and executive branches of the federal government. While the Supreme Court is the highest court, the appellate courts wield considerable power. During its most recent term, the Supreme Court heard only 83 cases, while the circuit courts decided 57,000 cases. As a practical matter, circuit courts set the precedent in most areas of federal law.

We are united at this time around our belief that Mr. Estrada's nomination deserves full, thoughtful, and deliberate consideration. The President proposes to place Mr. Estrada, who has no judicial experience, on arguably the single most important federal appeals court to decide a myriad of statutory and regulatory issues that directly affect the Latino community. Every appointment to a powerful court is important as we recently witnesses in the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision in Hoffman Plastics that stripped undocumented workers of certain labor law protections. This decision, which inevitably will result in increased exploitation of the undocumented, as well as weaker labor standards for all low-wage workers, underscores the importance of nominations such as this one, not just to Hispanics, but all Americans.

This decision comes on the heels of a series of Supreme Court decisions which, in our view, have unnecessarily and incorrectly narrowed civil rights and other protections for Latinos. While we look to see if judicial nominees meet certain basic requirements such as honesty, integrity, character, temperament, and intellect, we also look for qualities that go beyond the minimum requirements. We look to see if a nominee, regardless of race or ethnicity, has a demonstrated commitment to protecting the rights of ordinary U.S. residents and to preserving and expanding the progress that has been made on civil rights, including rights protected through core provisions in the Constitution, such as the Equal Protection Clause and Due Process Clause, as well as through the statutory provisions that protect our legal rights.

We are aware that some are demanding a commitment from you and the Judiciary Committee to announce a date certain for action on Mr. Estrada's nomination. We agree with the proposition that every nominee deserves timely consideration. For this reason, we urged the Senate to act on the nomination of Judge Richard Paez to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, who was forced to wait for four years before being confirmed. We also believe, however, that if a nominee's record is sparse the Judiciary Committee should allow sufficient time for those interested in evaluating his record, including the U.S. Senate, to complete a thorough and comprehensive review of the nominee's record. We therefore respectfully request that you consider scheduling a hearing no earlier than August, prior to the scheduled recess. This leaves sufficient time for action prior to adjournment if his record is strong enough to receive substantial bipartisan support.

In the interim, we pledge to conduct a fair and thoughtful assessment of Mr. Estrada's record, and to communicate our views on his nomination to you, Ranking Member Hatch, and other Committee members in a timely manner.

Sincerely,

Antonia Hernandez,

REV_00256052

President and General Counsel, Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

Raul Yzaguirre,

President, National Council of La Raza.

Manuel Mirabal,

President, National Puerto Rican Coalition.

Juan Figueroa,

President and General Counsel, Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Arturo Vargas,

Executive Director, National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials.

--

[From the National Organization for Women, May 23, 2002]

Judiciary Committee Vote Insults Women; NOW Vows Campaign in Full Senate
(By Kim Gandy)

The field of credible Democrats running for President was significantly narrowed today when two rumored candidates insulted every employed woman, every woman in business, and every woman who has been a victim of violence in this country. In casting their votes to promote Judge D. Brooks Smith to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, only one step below the Supreme Court, rumored candidates Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., disregarded the extensive evidence of unethical behavior and discriminatory conduct that caused the Washington Post, New York Times and Los Angeles Times to oppose Smith's confirmation.

In an embarrassingly convoluted rationale, Biden expressed disappointment in Smith's strong criticism of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), but said it would be a ``double standard'' to vote against Smith because Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist held a similar opinion on VAWA. Apparently Biden doesn't recall that his vote for Rehnquist was cast many years before VAWA was even introduced. As for a ``double standard,'' someone should tell Sen. Biden that double nothing is still nothing. Biden's previous leadership on violence against women is just that--previous. He has jettisoned it in favor of friendship--his stated presumption of supporting any nominee sponsored by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. No doubt the people of Delaware will want to know that they have elected a Republican from Pennsylvania to represent them.

REV_00256053

Another Presidential wanna-be, Sen. Edwards, hid out in his office across the hall from the hearing, and didn't even have the courage to case his ``Yes'' vote in public. Sen. Herbert Kohl, D-Wis., joined all of the committee Republicans, whose cowardly votes betrayed the women of their states by recommending elevation of a judge whose repeated ``ethical lapses'' deserve censure, not promotion.

The Senate's reputation as an ``Old Boys Club'' was reinforced by today's vote, in which both of the women on the Judiciary Committee voted against Smith, but he won anyway because 12 of the 17 men voted in his favor. To promote a judge who will have to decide on cases of discrimination, when that judge has himself cavalierly participated in discrimination and even ruled in favor of discriminatory practices, is the height of irresponsibility by those who are charged with that duty.

NOW commends both of the women who serve on the Judiciary Committee, Senators Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and Maria Cantwell, D-Wash., whose votes against confirming Smith spoke volumes, as well as Committee Chair Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who spoke eloquently about discrimination against women, and Senators Richard Durbin, D-Ill., Russ Feingold, D-Wis., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

NOW intends to seek a filibuster in the Senate against Judge Smith's confirmation, and will urge every Senator to participate who cares about protecting the last 40 years of progress women have made. The Judiciary Committee's vote for D. Brooks Smith made a mockery of judicial standards. Unless the full Senate reverses, it will send a message to women that they can't expect to have civil rights--or ethics--taken seriously by the Senate or the courts.

Mr. HATCH. Referring in the most vitriolic terms to my friends, Senators Biden and Edwards, voting for Judge Smith in committee, NOW begins by saying:

The field of credible Democrats runningÐfor President was significantly narrowedÐtoday.....

This is simply because these Senators exercised their independent judgment and supported Judge Smith. Honoring the President's prerogative to nominate judges should hardly be a cause to attack my Democrat colleagues or take them out of a potential Presidential candidacy or race.

Rather than speak further about Judge Smith's enemies, I would like to speak about his friends. I think an editorial in the liberal Pittsburgh Post-Gazette put Judge Smith's nomination best when they wrote:

Outside Washington's world of partisan politics, Smith seems to have no enemies, only admirers. Those who have watched him work say an exemplary 14-year record in the Federal bench in Western Pennsylvania is being twisted by political opportunists. His popularity outside the capital extends even to members of the opposing political party, who describe him as fair, hard-working, and respectful to all.

I hope I am not alone in this Senate in finding this home-town report much more reliable and convincing than the hit pieces circulated by the Washington left-wing special interest groups, or for that matter the New York Times, which I read faithfully everyday and respect in many ways--but not in this instance.

But given the bipartisan support Judge Smith enjoys from the people who know him best, and his stellar record, I find it most difficult to accept that the opposition to him has centered on his belonging to an all-male, family oriented fishing club where his father first taught him to fly fish--the same rustic club that Jimmy and Roslyn Carter have visited to escape, relax, and fish.

[Page: S7561]

REV_00256054

If this is the kind of thing that members of the body use as an excuse for thwarting the President's judicial nominations, then the American people will have a big laugh at our expense. And rightly so.

In fact, there are hundreds of small, family-oriented fishing clubs like the one Judge Smith belonged to all across this country from Washington to North Carolina. I even pointed out the web□site called www.womensflyfishing.net, which lists the 60 or so women-only fishing clubs across the country.

We are far from those days when prestigious downtown clubs kept women out of their facilities, and in any case that is not the nature of Judge Smith's family-oriented, fly-fishing club. The special interest groups out to get Judge Smith on this count are proving that when the only tool you have is a hammer, everything you see starts looking like a nail.

In fact, there is a rich mosaic of single gender social clubs in this country that are entirely unobjectionable to any reasonable person. You should not be surprised to know, Mr. President, that this country is well-served by over 6,500 women's only clubs of every size.

Are Judge Smith's opponents in this Senate really prepared to say that the members of the important Francesca Club in San Francisco or the powerful Raleigh Women's Club, or the Junior Leagues throughout the South and all over the country, or the Masons, or the Knights of Columbus cannot serve as judges?

Perhaps the reason for this misguided line of attack on Judge Smith lies in the fact that, in his 1988 confirmation hearing before the Judiciary Committee, he stated that he believed the Judicial Code would require him to try to open the club to women, and to resign if he failed. But the fact is that he was wrong in that belief. The Judicial Code does not require resignation from clubs whose principal purpose is social, that do not function as public accommodations serving food to the public, or whose principal purpose is other than business.

Mr. President, the building you saw has a living room, a kitchen, two bathrooms, and six bedrooms on the second floor. It is not a great big building, even though they blew up a picture to make it look like it was. Even if it was, it is used only for social purposes, and then by a membership of 115.

By the way, that club does not have public accommodations. It does not serve food to the public. It does not do business with the public.

No legalistic parsing of words can change this fact, even though any motivated lawyer can certainly confuse the issue, as we have seen in the Judiciary Committee.

It is not surprising, of course, that the Judge Smith's detractors have chosen to disregard the clear constitutional standards articulated by the Supreme Court as well as the letter of the public accommodations law of Pennsylvania. After 1988, when the issue of single gender clubs was at its most heated peak, the Judicial Conference adopted standards pursuant to Supreme Court's decisions. It made clear that there was nothing--absolutely nothing--improper about a judge or nominee belonging to single-gender clubs, which exist in great numbers for both women and men in this country, so long as the association or club exhibits certain attributes of privacy first articulated by the Supreme Court in the 1984 case of Roberts v. Jaycees.

REV_00256055

Judge Smith was under no obligation to make efforts to open the club to women--as he promised this committee--or to resign from the club. But he did both, even though he had no obligation to do so.

Opposing Judge Smith because he used to belong to a fisher-men's club is most absurd when contrasted with Judge Smith's record. Judge Smith, who currently serves as Chief Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania, has earned a reputation for competence, fairness, and judicial temperament during 14 years as a Federal judge.

I used to practice law in that district and tried cases in the Federal District Court of Western Pennsylvania.

Judge Smith was appointed to that job at age 36--he was one of the youngest Federal judges in the country--and he came to it with experience as a state court judge, as a prosecutor, and as a private practitioner.

His nomination is supported by lawyers, judges, and public figures from across the political spectrum. The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, a respected newspaper with a liberal editorial viewpoint, has endorsed his nomination three times.

The accounts of the people who know Brooks Smith best became real to me a few weeks ago when I listened to tremendously moving stories of women lawyers from Pennsylvania who recounted emotionally powerful events where Judge Smith bent over backwards to help them succeed as pregnant women and mothers in the practice of law.

The truth is that Judge Smith is supported in the strongest possible terms by the women leaders and members of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania, the Allegheny County Bar Association, and the Blair Bedford Domestic Abuse Advisory Board, to name a few.

The Women's Bar Association gave Judge Smith their Susan B. Anthony Award ``because of his commitment to eradicating gender bias in the court system.'' That is a remarkable laud. The officers of the Women's Bar have also stated that they ``did not receive a single complaint concerning Judge Smith.''

To attempt now to taint Judge Smith as being insensitive to women's rights or interests is really beyond the pale of fairmindedness, if not decency.

Judge Smith, who is currently the Chief Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania, has earned a reputation for competence, fairness, and judicial temperament during his 13 1/2 years as a Federal judge. He was appointed to that job at age 36--he was one of the youngest Federal judges in the country--and he came to it with experience as a State-court judge, as a prosecutor, and as a private practitioner.

I briefly recount Judge Smith's record because it highlights the nature of the prejudice that occurs when a nominee or any person is judged on a single, private and lawful lifestyle choice. It seems to me that the root of all intolerance begins with just that act: to judge a person's entire worth based on a single characteristic, whether it be how a person exercises his or her freedom or religion or his of her freedom of association, which, like religion, has contributed so much to this Nation's unmatched vitality.

I believe the Senate suffered a great shame when it ruined whole careers in the 1950s by asking a single infamous question intruding into the freedom of association. I was ashamed when the Judiciary Committee echoed this question last year by questioning nominees about the Federalist Society, as distinguished an association of lawyers as there could be. Now the special interest groups are asking the Senate to deny the President's nominee a confirmation on the basis of a fly fishing club.

I fear the American people, are going to roll their eyes at the Senate with these type of accusations. But the truth of it is that if we disregard the right of lawful association, it will be no laughing matter.

The Supreme Court first recognized the freedom of association in 1958 as an extension of first amendment free speech in NAACP v. Alabama, and most recently it reaffirmed the right in Boy Scouts of America v. Dale.

It is a right, as Justice Thurmond Marshall wrote, ``which our system honors'' and that encourages ``all-white, all-black, all-brown, all-yellow clubs, as well as all-Catholic, all-Jewish as well as all-agnostic clubs to be established.'' And, it is a right that applies, Mr. President, as Justice Sandra Day O'Connor noted, to clubs whose purposes would be ``undermined if they were unable to confine their membership to those of the same sex, race, religion, or ethnic background.''

We should be glad that our personal politics are trumped by this American freedom because it has protected groups as diverse as the Communist Party and the Moose Lodge, and from the NAACP to the Boy Scouts of America. The freedom of association has protected the thousand points of light that have made this country's public life so vibrant. And it helps to distinguish us from those foreign places where people are shunned or even imprisoned for mere memberships in unpopular associations.

[Page: S7562]

While the constitutional right of association at first related to expressive association and protected unpopular groups, like the NAACP, in 1984, the Supreme Court articulated the right of intimate association concerning clubs such as Judge Smith's small fishing club. It did so while enforcing Minnesota's public accommodations law against a large single gender organization organized principally for business purposes. That is not the case here. The Court described the attributes of such intimate associations that the Constitution honors, including ``relative smallness.'' That is the case here. Judge Smith's former club has only 115 members. It has been around for a lot of years and has had both women and men enjoy the benefits.

An intimate association, said Justice Brennan, writing for the Court, must be protected ``as a fundamental element of personal liberty,'' and ``must be secured against undue intrusion .....because of the role of such relationships in safeguarding the individual freedom central to our constitutional scheme.'' As Justice Brennan explained, such small clubs transmit our culture and ``foster diversity.'' They foster pluralism.

I for one stand by our freedom of association. As Justice Thurmond Marshall pointed out, it is a freedom that has helped make this country great, and a freedom we honor. I hope that all on this Committee do also, and that Judges, or people who might want to be Judges someday, are just as free as anyone else to exercise that right lawfully.

Now, Senators who do not share my reverence for this First Amendment right will be interested to know that the State of Pennsylvania has a law against clubs that discriminate on the basis of gender. Pennsylvania has not sought to regulate the club Judge Smith resigned from--and for a good reason: that club does not violate the law against discrimination.

REV_00256057

In fact, Pennsylvania courts have found single-gender clubs to be permissible not on the basis of First Amendment rights, but as a privacy right, citing Griswold v. Connecticut. It would certainly be an entertaining footnote to Griswold jurisprudence if opponents of Judge Smith, who have seen fit to probe Judge Smith's views on Griswold, voted against him for exercising privacy rights emanating from that very case.

The special interest groups that are working to discredit Judge Smith apparently think that President Bush's circuit court nominees deserve to have their records distorted and their reputations dragged through the mud. But I don't think that any judicial nominee deserves such treatment, and that was something I practiced as chairman for 6 of President Clinton's 8 years in office.

I strongly agree with the Washington Post editorial of February 19, 2002, and nobody would suggest the Washington Post is a conservative newspaper, that ``opposing a nominee should not mean destroying him.'' The Post pointed out, ``The need on the part of liberal groups and Democratic senators to portray a nominee as a Neanderthal--all the while denying they are doing so--in order to justify voting him down is the latest example of the degradation of the confirmation process.''

I continue to hope that my colleagues will be sensitive to the dangers to the judiciary and to the reputation of this body that will certainly result from the repeated practice of degrading honorable and accomplished people who are will to put their talents to work in the public service. I urge my colleagues to examine Judge Smith on his record, and not on superficial and unsubstantiated allegations.

When Judge Smith comes for a vote we will have the opportunity to show that the senate is focused on the merits of President Bush's nominees, and is not out to obstruct them in the name of sensibilities far from the mainstream of the American people. I hope we take it. I hope we vote favorably on a fine judge.

My colleague has made a point in the past that somehow men's clubs are problematic and powerful and that women's clubs are somehow different and poorer. That is not a problem. I have a photo of an all-women's club. This is the Sulgrave Club of Washington. I, for one, believe they have a right to have an all-women's club.

If my colleagues have trouble seeing the club, it is a mansion. It is not just a living room, kitchen, and six bedrooms upstairs. It is the building behind the Jaguar, the Lexis and, of course, the Mercedes. It is not itty-bitty by anybody's stretch of the imagination. And it is probably in a historical landmark situation.

My colleague has also mentioned the ethicists who have written to condemn Judge Smith. Other ethicists have written to support Judge Smith.

One of these Democrat ethicists, by the way, is the one standing on the car. If my colleagues cannot see it because it is a little dark, maybe the camera can come in a little closer. That is one of the ethicists they can get to write almost any opinion they want. This ethicist has argued in favor of introducing false testimony into a trial and argued perjured testimony to a jury.

This is a photograph of another of the regulars who write to denounce President Bush's nominees. I might add, again, he is the one standing on top of the police car. We expect to have a lot of other letters from this particular ethicist.

This is the type of stuff we are putting up with. I think it is time to stop it. I think it is legitimate for people to differ on a judge's qualification from time to time, but there is little or no reason to differ on this one. This is a good man.

REV_00256058

I hold a license in that area. I know the top lawyers in that area. I tried against a number of the top lawyers in that area. I have to say I do not know any of them who are not in favor of Judge Smith, and that ought to count more than some of these bits of calumny that have been thrown his way by some who do not like President Bush's nominees.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will vote against the confirmation of Judge D. Brooks Smith to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. While Judge Smith is an intelligent jurist, I believe that his serious ethical lapses, and his record of reversals by the Third Circuit in cases concerning civil rights, and the rights of workers, environmental protection and consumer safety suggest that Smith has not met his burden of showing that he should be elevated to the Third Circuit.

Judge Smith's handling of his membership in the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun club, a club whose by-laws explicitly forbid the admission of women, gives me great concern. I am disturbed by Judge Smith's failure to resign from the Spruce Creek Club in a timely manner despite his sworn oral and explicit written promise to this committee at the time of his 1988 confirmation hearing. Smith promised that if he was unsuccessful in trying to change the club's membership policies he would resign, but he failed to do so for another 11 years, until 1999.

Rather than provide a simple explanation, or an apology, for his failure to fulfill this promise, Judge Smith claimed at his hearing that the Judicial Code of Conduct, the ethical rules governing judges, did not actually require resignation from the club. According to Smith, the Spruce Creek Club is purely a social club and is thus exempt from the rules. This strikes me as disingenuous. Judge Smith's 1999 resignation letter to Spruce Creek made clear that he was resigning from the club because its male-only admissions policies ``continue to be at odds with current expectations of Federal judicial conduct,'' suggesting that he knew the club's membership policy was in conflict with the Judicial Code of Conduct.

Contrary to Judge Smith's representations, it also appears that the Spruce Creek Club is not merely a social club, but a place where business is conducted. Three ethicists, including one who wrote at the behest of the Ranking Minority Member of the Judiciary Committee, have written that if the Spruce Creek Club can be used for business purposes, its exclusion of women would violate the Judicial Code of Conduct. The President of Spruce Creek Club has acknowledged that members of this club are allowed to host a variety of meetings on the premises, and the committee has learned that business and political meetings have been held at the club. The Code of Judicial Conduct is clear that exclusion of women, minorities, and others from clubs where business is conducted is prohibited. In addition, in 1990, this committee adopted a resolution stating that membership in organizations that practice invidious discrimination was inappropriate for a judicial nominee. The resolution reflects our belief that because such membership ``may be viewed as a tacit endorsement of the discriminatory practices, it conflicts with the appearance of impartiality'' that is required of federal judges. We recognized that exclusion of women and racial, ethnic or religious minorities from social clubs that also perform business denies these groups opportunities to make contacts with important members of the community, contacts that are often crucial to professional advancement.

[Page: S7563]

I am also troubled by Judge Smith's approach to cases implicating Federal rights important to victims of discrimination, workers and the disabled, and his disturbing, consistent pattern of favoring business and employers in these cases. Judge Smith has been reversed 51 times by the Third Circuit, often by panels of conservative judges. In many of these cases, Smith takes a narrow view of the laws protecting plaintiffs against abuses by businesses and employers.

REV_00256059

For instance, in Wicker v. Conrail, a case brought under the Federal Employer's Liability Act, FELA, Judge Smith was reversed by the Third Circuit for dismissing claims by workers who were exposed to toxic chemicals at their job site. The company knew the job site was contaminated, but the workers did not, yet Smith found that the workers had waived their claims by signing a general release settling prior, unrelated injury claims. The Third Circuit reversed, holding that claims relating to unknown risks cannot be waived under FELA, and emphasized the Supreme Court's directive, ignored by Judge Smith, that FELA be given a ``proemployee'' construction.

Similarly, in Ackerman v. Warnaco, the Third Circuit reversed Smith for granting summary judgment to the company with regard to ERISA claims brought by former employees who were denied promised severance pay after the company, unbeknownst to the workers, changed its written policy to deny severance pay shortly before laying off the workers. Again, in Unity Real Estate v. Hudson, Smith ruled against workers in a case concerning the Coal Industry Retiree Health Benefit Act. Amazingly, Smith held that coal act, which Congress passed in 1992 to require companies to enforce collective bargaining agreements promising lifetime health benefits for longtime workers, amounted to an unconstitutional taking. One year later, in a similar case, the Third Circuit effectively overruled Smith's holding on this score, noting that every Court of Appeals to have considered a ``takings'' challenge to the coal act had rejected it.

In addition, Judge Smith has a disturbing pattern of ruling against plaintiffs in civil rights cases. For instance, in United States v. Pennsylvania, Judge Smith ruled that an institution for the mentally disabled, whose violations included serving pest-infested food, improperly confining residents, failing to provide appropriate medical treatment, and overmedicating residents--did not violate the Constitution's due process clause. In another case, Schaefer v. Board of Public Education, Judge Smith was reversed by the Third Circuit, for dismissing the sex discrimination claim of a male teacher who claimed that the school board's family leave policy, which entitled women, but not men, to one year of unpaid leave for childbirth or ``childrearing'' violated Title VII.

Judge Smith's pattern of ruling in favor of business is particularly troubling when coupled with his frequent attendance at seminars funded by pro-business corporations and groups. Judge Smith spent more than 72 days on junkets at luxury resorts. The trips were valued at more than $37,000 and sponsored by groups that promote ``free market environmentalism,'' and oppose environmental regulations. I am troubled by the appearance of partiality caused by Judge Smith's frequent attendance at such junkets given the pro-business pattern of his rulings.

Judge Smith's narrow view of congressional power to pass legislation under the commerce clause, as expressed in a 1993 speech to the Federalist Society, also gives me great concern. In this speech, Judge Smith criticized the Violence Against Women's Act, which passed both Houses of Congress by overwhelming majorities, as exceeding Congress's power under the commerce clause. Judge Smith advanced a cramped reading of Congress' commerce clause power, stating that ``the Framers' primary, if not sole, reason for giving Congress authority over interstate commerce was to permit the national government to eliminate trade barriers.'' Not only would Judge Smith's reading of the commerce clause render Congress powerless to pass statutes like the Violence Against Women's Act but, under Judge Smith's reasoning, it appears that any Congressional enactment other than those aimed at eliminating trade barriers would be constitutionally suspect, including statutes such as the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Equal Pay Act, the Clean Air Act, and the Clean Water Act.

REV_00256060

Mr. SPECTER. I am confident, based on my personal knowledge of Judge Smith and his outstanding record, that he will be a credit to the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

I thank my distinguished colleague from Utah and my distinguished colleague from Vermont for permitting me to speak at this time.

Exhibit 1

U.S. COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT,

Philadelphia, PA, July 15, 2002.
Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Because the exercise of my responsibility to assure that efficient administration of justice for over 21 million Americans within the Third Judicial Circuit is being seriously impaired by the current impasse in the Senate over judicial nominations, I feel constrained to cry out. A total of eleven--yes eleven--judges within the Third Circuit, whose presence is desperately needed, would, I believe, have been confirmed and entered on duty but for the impasse.

Let me begin with the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. But for the impasse, Judge D. Brooks Smith would now be on my Court, which has three vacancies, two of them of long standing. I have scheduled him to sit in the early Fall, and we need him. We ``borrow'' judges in 45% of our cases, which is too much. But that situation pales in comparison with that of the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. There are five vacant judgeships on that Court; as of September 30, 2002, these judgeships will have been vacant for a total of 161.7 months. If it were not for the impasse, the following judges would likely have entered on duty: Joy Flowers Conti, who I understand has resigned from her law firm partnership, anticipating a July swearing-in-date (and is now without income); David S. Cercone; Terrence F. McVerry; and Arthur J. Schwab. The Western District is in desperate straits. Motions are piling up, and trials are being delayed.

Other courts within the Third Circuit are similarly disadvantaged. Two nominees to the Middle District of Pennsylvania are awaiting floor votes: John E. Jones, III and Christopher C. Conner, both nominated to fill vacancies that are well over a year old. Two nominees to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, one of the busiest courts in the nation, are also being held up: Timothy J. Savage and James Knoll Gardner. We also have problems in New Jersey where we have five vacancies. Stanley R. Chesler and William J. Martini are awaiting floor votes. There are also putative nominees for the other three vacancies: Jose Linares, Freda Wolfson, and Robert Kugler, whose progress is obviously being slowed by the impasse. Their presence is needed there to take up the slack caused by my assignment of Senior Judge Alfred Wolin, who had a full docket, to handle the mega-asbestos bankruptcy cases in Delaware, one of the nation's most important judicial assignments.

I have always respected the processes of the United States Senate. I came to the bench from politics, and understand the senatorial prerogatives. I have been tempted to speak out before, yet because of my background, held back. But the current impasse is too much even for me, hence this letter. As a judge of over three decades of experience on the federal bench, I understand the weighing and balancing process, and I believe that it is out of all proportion to the exercise of senatorial prerogative that these eleven

REV_00256034

In sum, I do not believe that Judge Smith has shown he has the integrity and commitment to core constitutional values required to justify his elevation to the Third Circuit. I therefore oppose his nomination.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHUMER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. HATCH are printed in today's RECORD under ``Morning Business.")

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REID). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I will say a word about the nomination of D. Brooks Smith to the Third Circuit. For me, my concerns with Judge Smith are not about ethics but about ideology. My questions are about his record. My worries are about what kind of judge he has been at the trial level and what kind of judge he will be at the appellate level.

Time and time again, the President says he is going to nominate conservatives in the mold of Justices Scalia and Thomas. Every indication is that he is following through with that promise.

At least by my standards, that is not OK. I certainly want legal excellence at the highest order. Diversity ought to be at the highest courts. We ought not have a bench of all like men. But I also want moderation and ideological balance. Unfortunately, as they nominate judge after judge, hard right, out of the mainstream, far further to the right than President Clinton's nominees were to the left, it is clear that this administration is committed to imbalance on the courts. Frankly, that is a strategy I cannot get behind.

When it comes to D. Brooks Smith, there are some red flags raised. As a city district court judge, he gave a speech in which he criticized the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, something I am pretty proud of because I was the author, along with Congresswoman Louise Slaughter in the House of Representatives. Senator Biden did a great job here in the Senate. Now, this was years before the Supreme Court had addressed the Violence Against Women Act and when there was still a possibility it would come before him as a judge. That is some very unjudge-like behavior.

I asked him some simple, written questions about his views on the law. I asked him about his views on the right to privacy. I asked him to reconcile his views on VAWA with his views on other Federal laws such as the Endangered Species Act. The response I got, I regret to say, was inadequate.

Judge Smith told me what the precedence said, not what he personally believes.

REV_00256061

That might be OK if you are a nominee to the district court where you do not have as much of a chance to make law. These days when you are nominated to an appellate court, when the Supreme Court takes virtually 75 cases a year, that argument does not fly. So I wrote back to Judge Smith, and again I asked him about his views. I made it clear I wanted to know about his personal views, not what the law was, but what his personal views were because we all know that influences a judge greatly when they make decisions.

[Page: S7564]

This idea that judges are part of an ideological system and read the law in the same way is poppycock.

Why is it judges nominated by Democratic nominees read the law differently than judges nominated by Republican nominees? We know ideology plays a role. There is nothing wrong with that. But we ought to let it into our decisionmaking.

Judge Smith dodged again.

I think I am entitled to know what a nominee thinks. I am not going to go about blindly confirming nominees to lifetime seats on the Federal courts without those answers. I am not going to vote to give the judge a lifetime appointment, tremendous power, the most unaccountable power that our Founding Fathers gave to any single person. I am not going to give that judge the power to invalidate the laws passed in this legislative, duly elected body; laws that protect privacy, laws that protect working people, laws that protect women, the environment. I am not going to give a judge the power to validate those laws unless I know what they think of our power, the Congress's power as a coequal branch of Government, when it comes to these important issues.

I have an obligation on behalf of the 19 million New Yorkers I represent to learn those views. They want to know if the judge is too far left or too far right. They want to know about things that affect their lives: How much money they are going to make; safety in the workplace; how the environment is going to be treated; and if they are a member of a minority group, how the judge regards civil rights. They want to know this. I want to know.

I am not going to make the mistake that this body made with Clarence Thomas, who came before this body. I was not here then. I was in the House. We don't, of course, vote on judges. He said he had no views on Roe v. Wade. I am not making that mistake again. I don't think any Member should. We all know Judge Thomas had strong views on Roe v. Wade, but he came here and said he had none, he had never discussed it.

If D. Brooks Smith had given me legitimate answers to my questions, I might have supported him. But his answers were not answers at all.

Now, I understand we cannot ask judges to precommit themselves on issues that come before them, even though that is what Judge Smith did in his VAWA speech. I don't want to put nominees in that position. When it comes to issues already decided, when it comes to discussing their judicial philosophy, when it comes to Supreme Court cases that will never come before this judge, I don't get why we shouldn't know what that judge thinks.

Every semester, first year law students are asked to critique Supreme Court opinions. But someone up for a Federal judgeship will not tell us what they think about the seminal Supreme Court cases?

REV_00256062

On the latest nominee for whom we had a hearing, Judge Owen, I asked her views. She said she doesn't think that way. She was asked to write papers in law school. She was asked to make opinions this way. She did not want to tell us.

There is a trend here. There is a trend. They don't want us to know what they think because they are so far out of the mainstream that they never could get picked if they told us their real views. They would never get supported by this body. They will not be honest about their views regarding Brown v. Board of Education or Korematus v. United States or Miranda v. Arizona or Roe v. Wade?

Judge Smith says what he thinks about the constitutionality of a statute the Supreme Court has yet to rule on, but he will not say what he thinks about Supreme Court opinions that have already been issued? Something is wrong with that. This nominee has it all turned around and it doesn't make sense.

The fact is, we are in the midst of a conservative judicial revolution. The very same people who decried the liberal activists, who took too many things too far--I am very critical of some of those opinions--are now doing the same thing themselves. When the hard right members of the conservative movement in the 1980s realized they could only get so much of their agenda implemented through elected branches because they were too far over for the American people, they turned their focus to the courts. They started a campaign that ran through the Reagan administration, through the first Bush administration, and continues through this administration. President Bush would like to portray himself as a moderate to the American people. Maybe he is. When I talk to him he sounds that way to me, one-on-one.

But if you look at who he nominates, there is hardly a moderate among them, particularly at the appellate court level. The nominees are committed to an ideological agenda which turns the clock back to maybe the 1930s, maybe the 1890s. They hate the Government and its power, by and large. They think the Federal Government has far too much power, which, let me tell you, in our post-September 11 world makes no sense.

So for the better part of the last decade, the commerce clause has been under assault and a whole host of laws protecting women, senior citizens, the disabled, and the environment have been invalidated. Now they turn their attention to the spending clause. To the average person, this sounds like mine-numbing stuff. But unfortunately, it has real impact on real people and it has to stop.

D. Brooks Smith is going to become a judge. We all know he has the vote. Tomorrow morning he will join a long line of judges, confirmed by the Senate, who appear to be intent on curtailing congressional power to protect the people who elect us.

At some point this Senate needs to wake up to the fact that our President and his Department of Justice are playing by different rules when it comes to nominating judges. They are using ideology as litmus tests, and then, when we want to ask about ideology, they say no, that is off the table. They are doing it to the detriment of the courts and the people the courts are supposed to protect.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from Nevada, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

REV_00256063

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHUMER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair now recognizes the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Torricelli.

END

REV_00256064

nominees (and scores of others) be held up so long. I urge you to press my plea before your colleagues.

Sincerely yours,
EDWARD R. BECKER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Durbin). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah for yielding me some time, and I also thank the Senator from Vermont for allowing Senator Specter and I to speak first on this nominee.

I, too, like Senator Specter, am very proud tonight to praise the nomination of Brooks Smith to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals and to congratulate the President on an excellent nominee. I certainly urge all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote for his confirmation. I truly hope they look at his record of 17 years of judicial service and experience on both the Federal and State level.

He is someone of paramount integrity, someone who is obviously academically qualified, having been confirmed already as a Federal judge some 13 years ago. He has impeccable credentials academically and professionally prior to being a judge, and I think his service on both the trial court level and the common pleas court of Blair County, as well as on the Federal bench of the western district, now serving as chief judge of the western district, has been exemplary.

He is someone who has been a model judge, someone who has steered a course, as most people who have described his nomination, right down the center, someone who follows the law and is very steadfast to what the role of a judge is, which is not to go out and make law but simply to serve in the capacity of meting out justice in a fair and equitable way that meets the expectations of the litigants. He has been highly praised by everyone.

He has gotten a letter of support from almost the entire Pennsylvania congressional delegation, Democrats and Republicans alike. He has been rated well qualified by the ABA and highly recommended by the Allegheny County Bar Association, which is their highest rating. Allegheny County is the bar where the Western District of Pennsylvania is located. He has gotten support from every prior U.S. attorney from Jimmy Carter on through President Clinton's appointments to the U.S. attorney position in the western district. They have all come out in support of him.

His colleagues on the statewide bench from the supreme court, superior court, on down, have written letters of support, both Republicans and Democrats alike, for his nomination.

One of the most disturbing aspects of this nomination was what some on the far left-wing groups have done to try to impeach Judge Smith's integrity. Senator Specter reviewed the three things that have been brought up in a 17-year career. Probably the most outrageous of all of them is the fact that Judge Smith belonged--I know this might be shocking to some of my colleagues--to a sportsman club that only has male members. I know that none of my colleagues have ever heard of such a thing, but believe it or not most sportsman clubs in America, I would suggest, have limitations on memberships. If anyone is interested in the opposite, where sportsman clubs limit membership only to women, go to www.womensflyfishing.net, and they will find 60 organizations where only women are permitted to be members.

At this particular club, the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club, only men are allowed to be members, but women certainly are allowed on the premises and allowed to use the facilities. They simply cannot be members of the club.

This club is a beautiful place. It is right in the heart of Pennsylvania. It has attracted many people from around the country because of its fabulous fly fishing. One such person who is an annual visitor, according to his own article on the subject, to this limited club is former President Jimmy Carter.

Former President Jimmy Carter goes to this club to which Judge Smith used to belong. When President Carter was President, my colleagues may recall the incident when the rabbit attacked his boat. That was somewhat of a famous incident during the Carter Presidency. That happened at the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club. This is purely a social organization.

When Judge Smith was before the Judiciary Committee, it was unclear whether he should continue to belong to such an organization. He was confirmed nonetheless. He promised at that time, when it was unclear whether that membership was unethical in some respects, that he would try to reverse the policy, and if he was unsuccessful he would resign. Subsequent to that, in 1992, the judicial code was changed and, as Senator Specter said, this kind of club does not fall into the ethical category of invidious. Therefore, as a result, he was not required under the judicial conduct code to resign.

Nevertheless, he tried for several years. Every year at their meetings, he would try to have women allowed to become members, but he failed. Eventually, I think after 9 or 10 years, he decided he would give up that quest and leave. This was some 5 years ago.

I understand there are a lot of women's groups that are complaining about this. To be candid, the complaint should be not that he resigned too late but that he is not still there trying to change it. That, to me, would be legitimate, to say he should have continued to stay there to try to get women as members. Instead, he gave up the fight, as some might suggest, and decided simply not to belong.

I think they have sort of missed the point, and the point is--this is ridiculous is really the point. The point that he belonged to this club has nothing to do with his ability to be a jurist. Probably the worst aspect of this whole thing is it brought up this tenor that somehow Judge Smith was anti-woman. Well, we had the president of the NOW organization in his home county, Blair County, former Democratic county commissioner, come to the Senate, to the LBJ room. She did a press conference talking about how Judge Smith, when he was a common pleas court judge, did more to help her in her role as county commissioner than anybody else she met in county government, and that he had an excellent record in regard to violence on women, and a variety of other things, as he did as a common pleas court judge.

Then later on, we heard from members of the women's bar association of western Pennsylvania going on at length about how Judge Smith was the best judge they had to deal with, who was the most respectful of women in the courtroom, most accepting of women in the courtroom.

This is the most frustrating part for the judge, and I know Senator Specter commented how difficult a process this has been for him, to be attacked for things that are so spurious and tangential to this whole process, and trying to then frame them for something that he has worked all his life to prove that he was not. It was really unfair.

Senator Specter went through the other two issues that have been highlighted. One is a case where he should have recused himself earlier. The trustee in the case, the former Attorney General and Governor, Richard Thornburgh, who said he would have been the aggrieved party in the case, as it turned out, said, no; that Judge Smith handled the case properly and forthrightly. The judge who eventually was assigned the case commented she would have handled the case in the precise manner Judge Smith handled the case. The Securities and Exchange Commission looked at this and stated Judge Smith did nothing improper.

REV_00256036

There is absolutely nothing there when it comes to these ``improprieties'' of Judge Smith on the bench. This is reaching. This is trying to find a reason to oppose someone who has an impeccable record of service in the judicial community of western Pennsylvania, someone who has been outstanding in everything he has attempted. He is an incredibly well-qualified person for this position. He has done nothing but prove that his nomination for the Third Circuit is warranted.

I am very hopeful that my colleagues again on both sides of the aisle--and I thank Senator Specter, Senator Edwards, Senator Kohl, and Senator Biden for their support of this nominee in committee--will be joined by many others on the other side of the aisle to confirm, as the ABA said, a well-qualified, very solid candidate, for the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I ask consent that following me, the Presiding Officer recognize the senior Senator from Utah; at 7:50 this evening, without using time from either side, the senior Senator from New Jersey be recognized for 10 minutes; and then we revert back to whichever member of the Judiciary Committee sought recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senate is debating the nomination of D. Brooks Smith to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. This, incidentally, is the 13th circuit court nominee to be considered by the Senate since the change in Senate majority and reorganization of the Judiciary Committee fewer than 13 months ago. That is an average of one court of appeals judge a month since the Democratic majority has been in place. That does set a record.

We voted and confirmed three judges yesterday, one a circuit court of appeals judge. There are 10 other judicial nominees on the calendar. All have been approved on the Democratic side of the aisle. We have no objection to going forward with votes on them. I commend the Senator from South Dakota, the majority leader, Senator Daschle, who worked very hard to overcome the Republican objections so we can vote on President Bush's nominees to the judiciary.

We set a record on the number of courts of appeals nominees who have been given hearings and votes. We have moved forward, including confirming one yesterday, and we will vote on another circuit court nominee tomorrow. That will be 13 in less than 13 months, plus more than 60 other judicial nominees for whom we have held hearings or on whom we have already voted. This seat on the Third Circuit is another example of the different ways in which the Republican majority and Democratic majority have proceeded.

Today's debate is taking place in broad daylight. Under the Democratic majority, Judge Smith received a hearing less than 4 months after receipt of his ABA peer review. In contrast, Judge Cindrich was previously nominated for the same vacancy on the Third Circuit by President Clinton. He sat there for 10 months. You may wonder what happened at his hearing. He never got a hearing. You may wonder what happened on his vote. He never got a vote. He was never allowed a hearing; he was never allowed a vote. Four months after Judge Smith came up with his ABA papers, we had a hearing.

REV_00256037

This is one of the many court of appeals vacancies for which President Clinton nominated qualified and moderate nominees but the Republican majority would not allow a vote--neither a hearing nor a committee vote. Bonnie Campbell, Allen Snyder, and so many others--I am sure they have not been treated as fairly as Judge Smith's nomination.

It is not enough to say some of the Republicans did not want those judicial nominees to be confirmed. I will vote against this nominee. I am the Chairman of the Committee. I could have refused to hold a hearing on Judge Smith. I could have refused to put his nomination on the calendar for a vote in our Committee. I did not. Even though, after the hearing, I made my up my mind to oppose this judge, I allowed the Committee to vote on his nomination and, if he got a majority vote in the Committee, allowed it to come to the Senate floor. That has always been the Democratic practice, and a practice that I follow.

Every Senator, Democrat and Republican, will vote his or her conscience about the merits of Judge Smith's promotion to the appellate bench. I do not question the conscience of any Senator in doing that. While the course charted by the Democratic Senate to improve the process and hold judicial nominees is an honorable, difficult and time-consuming course, it is a road not taken in many instances by the Republicans in the recent past.

[Page: S7554]

Some nominees, such as Judge Smith, are a portrait of contradiction. Those on the other side can extol his accomplishments and his popularity, but they omit his failings. They minimize his troubling record on ethical issues and his decisions as a judicial officer. Some, we heard tonight, may belittle the genuine concerns raised by many and shared by some Members of this Senate. I believe they are legitimate concerns.

As I said, I could have refused to allow him to have a hearing. I could have refused to allow him to have a vote in the Committee. I did not. I do have genuine concerns.

Some on the other side may try to castigate or caricature those who express opinions that are in opposition to the confirmation of a nominee. They may even choose to vilify those who dare to vote against a nominee who may be popular but who may be flawed in so many important respects. All of these contrasting views and accusations might cause an outside observer to wonder what exactly is the truth. The fundamental questions are whether this particular nominee should be confirmed, whether he should be promoted to a higher court, and whether his record of conduct on and off the bench warrants promotion. A lifetime appointment to review the decisions of other judges is not a right.

With the Supreme Court hearing fewer than 100 cases per year, it is the circuit courts that are really the courts of last resort for thousands of cases each year. These cases affect the Constitution, as well as statutes intended by Congress to protect the rights of all Americans; for example, the right to equal protection of the laws, the right to privacy, as well as the best opportunity to have clean air and clean water, not only for ourselves but for our future generations.

These courts are where Federal regulations will be upheld or overturned, where reproductive rights will be retained or lost, and where intrusive Government action will be allowed or curtailed. They are courts where thousands of individuals have their final appeal in matters affecting their financial future, their health, their lives, their liberty. I believe this record does not demonstrate that Judge D. Brooks Smith merits this promotion.

REV_00256038

In saying this, I mean no disrespect to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Specter, who strongly supported the confirmation of this nominee, nor disrespect to the nominee who is well-liked by many. I genuinely mean no harm to Judge Smith, no matter how we vote tomorrow. He has a lifetime appointment and a lifetime salary as a Federal judge. It is fair to say, however, that this nominee's record is problematic in a number of ways. Among my many concerns is the fact that Judge Smith's action creates an appearance that is too often beholden to special interests. The Federal courts are supposed to be an independent judiciary that is not beholden to anyone--the left, the right, or any economic interests. An independent judiciary is the people's bulwark against the loss of their freedom and rights.

A number of judges and lawyers in Pennsylvania have written to the Senate to support Judge Smith's confirmation. A number of individuals and groups from Pennsylvania and elsewhere in the Third Circuit and throughout the country have written to the Senate, have called and e-mailed our office to express their deep concerns about this nomination.

We have heard from many Americans who are concerned about Judge Smith's record as a judge, including, incidentally, a resolution that was passed by the City Council of the City of Philadelphia. It was sent to us after the vote in the Judiciary Committee. It called for his nomination to be rejected.

I am going to put in the RECORD at the end of my statement this City Council resolution, as well as the opinions of two ethics professors.

I am disappointed that Judge Smith's record on and off the bench has resulted in this kind of controversy. As I reviewed his record as a judge, that record raised significant doubts in my mind as well.

The issue for me is whether Judge Smith's record justifies this promotion from the lifetime Federal judgeship he now holds to the higher lifetime Federal judgeship. In this case, it is to a court that is only one step below the Supreme Court. Appellate judges in the circuit courts write opinions that become law, affecting all of us, whether we live in Pennsylvania, Utah, Vermont, or Illinois. I do not believe Judge Smith's record justifies this promotion.

For one thing, he failed to keep his promise to resign from a discriminatory country club. Incidentally, that was not a promise that is something given in a political statement or to somebody in the press in response to an impromptu question. This was a promise Judge Smith made in a sworn statement before the Senate a few years ago. He belonged to a discriminatory club for more than a decade after he swore, after he took an oath, that he would quit if the rules were not changed to allow women to become members, in 1988.

He stood there, he raised his right hand, he swore to tell the truth, and he told us that he would resign if women were not admitted by 1989. He did resign from this Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club in 1999, 10 years later.

What do you suppose was the thing that finally made him keep his word? A cynic would say that a vacancy had arisen on the court he wanted to be promoted to, and suddenly he thought: Wait a minute. I know I swore to resign by 1989--I had a lifetime judgeship and why do I have to resign from a club I like--but then suddenly, whoops, I might be promoted to even a higher Federal judgeship, maybe I better dust off that promise. I realize I am 10 years late, but better late than never.

I find that extremely troubling.

We had testimony by his supporters in letters that, well, the Spruce Creek is just a little fishing club, an itty-bitty fishing club of no consequence, kind of like a shack in the woods where a group of male friends might store their gear.

It is not exactly an itty-bitty club. This here is the itty-bitty club.

I have a little farmhouse in Vermont. My house probably would fit in the garage of this itty-bitty club. Look at this stately club. The Republicans may have missed one thing when they previously referred to this itty-bitty clubhouse, this inconsequential clubhouse as ``rustic.'' Maybe they didn't realize that, because it is such a stately and important place, it is on the National Registry of Historic Places.

I bet your home, Mr. Presiding Officer, is not on the National Registry of Historic Places. Mine is not on the National Registry of Historic Places. I will bet the senior Senator from Utah's home is not on the National Registry of Historic Places. But this little no-consequence, little tiny fishing club, the itty-bitty fishing club, is on such a prestigious list.

For nearly a century, this itty-bitty fishing club has been an exclusive recreational sportsmen's club that hosts its members and guests at its beautiful clubhouse. It has dining facilities. This itty-bitty clubhouse has fireplaces. It has bedrooms for overnight guests. It is not just a little bend in the road; it sits on hundreds of acres of prime real estate.

We can joke about it. It is obvious that Judge Smith and his supporters thought we would not actually go and find a picture of the club. I think they probably wish that we would not go back to his sworn testimony in which he promised to resign 10 years before he did. But let us be clear about what this is. The sports club--it does not make a difference whether the sport pursued is fishing or golfing. There are a number of women's fly fishing clubs attesting to the interest of women in that sport, and that is fine.

If men want to go off and go fly fishing themselves, that is fine. If women want to go off and go fly fishing, that is fine. But when they have facilities to conduct business and when businesspeople go there to conduct business and that is how you may be able to get ahead in the business world if you exclude women from it, if you say, women, if you want to be in business, you are not going to be able to join the moguls of the business or legal community here, then it is exclusionary.

[Page: S7555]

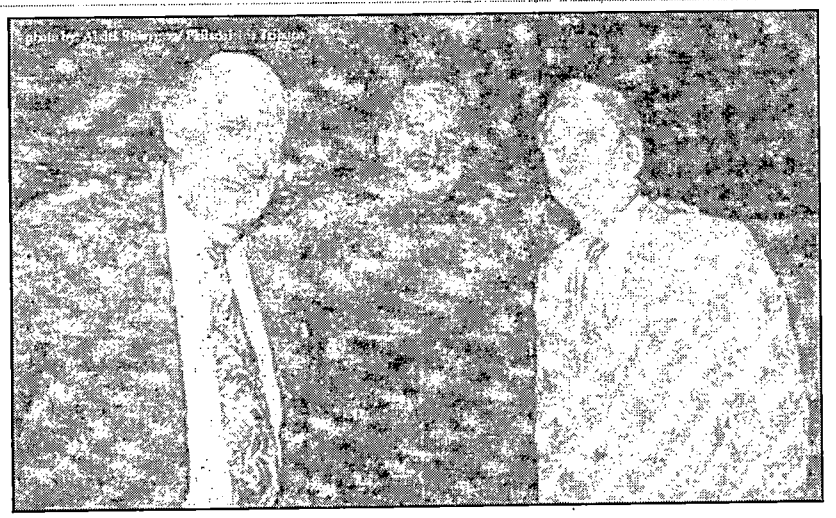
Women anglers who might have a fly fishing association could not walk into the Spruce Creek clubhouse. They could not fish in the stream called Spruce Creek that runs through the land owned by the club--unless a man, who is a member, condescended to invite them.

Frankly, it does not make any difference whether you exclude women or you exclude African Americans or you exclude people of particular religious faiths--it is still exclusion. That is why it is particularly troublesome that, when Judge Smith was up here the last time before the Senate seeking a lifetime appointment, he swore in sworn testimony to the Judiciary Committee and to the Senate of the United States that he would resign if he could not promptly get the club to change its exclusionary rules.

REV_00256040



SENATOR ARLEN SPECTER PENNSYLVANIA

Issues

Judicial Nominations

One of my most important duties as a United States Senator is the confirmation of federal judges. Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution states that the president "shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ... Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States." Because federal judges are given lifetime tenure, I take the Senate's role in the confirmation process very seriously.

Too many judicial vacancies exist with federal judges, especially vacancies on the court of appeals. I hope that the Judiciary Committee and the Senate acts quickly to give all of President Bush's nominees a hearing and an up or down vote before the end of the 107th Congress.

In order to speed up the judicial confirmation process I recently proposed a resolution which would provide for timetables, so that after a certain number of days after a nomination, a hearing would be held, within a certain number of additional days there would be action by the Judiciary Committee on a vote, and within another specified time, there would be a vote on the Senate floor. I believe that such a process is necessary to make sure that there are enough judges on the federal courts to ensure adequate access to justice and to deal with the growing case backlog facing the federal judiciary.

However, we have had remarkable success in getting Pennsylvania judges confirmed in the 107th Congress. President Bush has nominated twelve Pennsylvanians to sit on the federal courts, including eleven, for the district courts and one for the court of appeals. Currently, the Senate has confirmed nine of these district court judges and one judge for the Third Circuit Court of Appeals which sits in Philadelphia.

This success is due to the bipartisan nominating commission which Senator Santorum and I have established. This commission reviews federal judicial candidates and recommends individuals to Senator Santorum and myself. We, in turn, recommend these individuals to the President. This process, I have learned, ensures consensus, diversity, and speeds along the confirmation of our judges.

The following is the current status of all Pennsylvania Federal Judicial Nominees:

Eastern District of Pennsylvania
Michael M. Baylson
CONFIRMED on April 30, 2002 (Vote: 98-0)

Legrome D. Davis
CONFIRMED on April 18, 2002 (Vote: 94-0)

James Knoll Gardner

Submenu

- Defense
- Education
- Environment
- Foreign Affairs
- Judicial Nominat
- Medicare
- Social Security
- Tax Relief
- Transportation
- Veteran's Affairs

Contact Info

Main Office:
711 Hart Buildinç
Washington, DC
Tel: 202-224-42
Fax: 202-228-12
email:
arlen_specter@s view a specter

CONFIRMED on Ocotober 2, 2002 (Unanimous consent)

Cynthia M. Rufe
CONFIRMED on April 30, 2002 (Vote: 98-0)

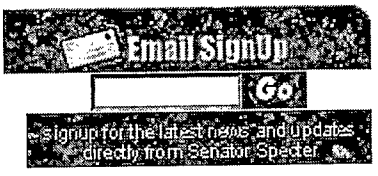
Timothy J. Savage
CONFIRMED on August 1, 2002 (Voice Vote)

Middle District of Pennsylvania
Christopher C. Conner
CONFIRMED on July 26, 2002 (Voice Vote)

John E. Jones
CONFIRMED on July 29, 2002 (Vote: 96-0)

Western District of Pennsylvania
David S. Cercone
CONFIRMED on August 1, 2002 (Voice Vote)

Joy Flowers Conti
CONFIRMED on July, 29, 2002 (Vote: 96-0)



Terrence F. McVerry
CONFIRMED on September 3, 2002 (Vote: 88-0)

Arthur J. Schwab
Confirmed on September 13, 2002 (Vote: 92-0)

U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit
D. Brooks Smith
CONFIRMED on July 31, 2002

Judicial Nominations Press Releases

- Jul. 31 - Senator Arlen Specter (R-PA), a senior member of the U.S. Senat...
- May. 23 - WASHINGTON, D.C. – D. Brooks Smith, President Bush's nominee for the United Stat...
- Mar. 07 - WASHINGTON, D.C. – U.S. Senator Arlen Specter, a senior member of the Judiciary ...
- Feb. 27 - U.S. Senator Arlen Specter, a senior member of the Judiciary Committee made the ...
- Jan. 23 - WASHINGTON - Senator Arlen Specter (R-PA), made the following comments today reg...

Home | Profile | Constituent Services | Contact Information
Events | Issues | News Center | State Profile

REV_00256066

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Doc Contents
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 16 of 50 | Full Display - 5,181 bytes.[Help]

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS -- (Senate - March 08, 2002)

[Page: S1694] GPO's PDF

Mr. SPECTER . Madam President, I have sought recognition to comment briefly on the pending nomination of Judge Charles Pickering for the circuit court of appeals, which was heard by the Judiciary Committee yesterday, with the vote postponed until next week.

I support Judge Pickering because I think Judge Pickering, in the year

[Page: S1695] GPO's PDF

2002, is an appropriate nominee for the circuit court. If Charles Pickering were still a State Senator in the 1970s, I would vote against him because his civil rights record at that time was not good. But today he is a different man. This is a different time.

The opposition raised against Judge Pickering, in large measure, is about what he was as a Mississippi State Senator in the 1970s.

It is my hope that at a minimum we will send Judge Pickering's nomination to the floor of the Senate for a vote by the full Senate. The Constitution provides for confirmation by the Senate--not by the Senate Judiciary Committee. There are solid indicators that if Judge Pickering reached the floor, there would be 51 or more votes for his confirmation.

When you take into account an analysis of the comments within the beltway by those who oppose Judge Pickering vociferously, and those in Mississippi who know him best, they are for him. Those who talk about him in Mississippi talk in specifics about how he took a courageous stand against a leader of the Ku Klux Klan, about how he sided with an African American who was a defendant in a case where there was a white victim, something which was frequently not the case in the South.

This may be a warmup for the next Supreme Court nomination.

We have already seen some indicators of that with some members of the Judiciary Committee saying that a litmus test should be applied, and, if a nominee will not pledge to uphold Roe v. Wade, that nominee is not appropriate for confirmation.

This is an effort, in effect, to equate Brown v. Board of Education on segregation, with Roe v. Wade. It is obvious that if someone did not support Brown v. Board of Education and desegregation, that person would not be considered fit for the Federal bench today. But to apply a litmus test more broadly is very troublesome, in my opinion.

REV_00256067

It is my hope that if Judge Pickering receives a negative vote in committee along party lines, which seems almost certain, that at a minimum he would be sent to the floor for full floor consideration.

We ought to establish a truce--an armistice--on the partisan in-fighting which has been ongoing on nominations. When we had a Democrat in the White House and a Republican-controlled Senate, it was the mirror image of what we have today with Republican President Bush in the White house and a Senate Judiciary Committee in the Senate controlled by the Democrats. I said the same thing when we had President Clinton in the White House and a Republican-controlled Senate. I crossed party lines to vote for Judge Paez and Judge Berzon, Judge Gregory and Bill Lann Lee for Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division.

It is my hope that we will establish a protocol.

I think Senator McConnell was right when he said yesterday in the Judiciary Committee hearing that we are facing an ``institutional crisis."

The American people do not like the partisan bickering--Democrats versus Republicans--especially when it comes to the selection of Federal judges and there is a judicial emergency in many circuits.

It is my hope that we will move ahead to try to end this partisanship.

There is solid precedent for submitting nominees to the full Senate when there is a negative or tied vote in committee. Judge Bork was defeated 8 to 5 in committee. Yet his nomination was sent to the floor for consideration as a Supreme Court nomination.

Justice Clarence Thomas had a tie vote in the committee of 7 to 7, but by a vote of 13 to 1 his nomination was sent to the floor.

Six nominees for district court or circuit courts have been sent to the full Senate when they did not receive an affirmative vote in committee--since 1951.

We still have time to revise the thinking on Judge Pickering. We still have time for an analysis on an appropriate way to handle Judge Pickering. But I submit that we ought to establish a principle from the Judiciary Committee that, if the vote is strictly along party lines, the matter be put before the full Senate for consideration.

I thank my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire for allowing me to precede him on the floor.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

REV_00256069

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - Current Congress
Terms: lott and confirmation and date(geq (5/09/2002) and leq (05/09/2002)) (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

*148 Cong Rec S 4113, **

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Thursday, May 09, 2002

107th Congress, 2nd Session

148 Cong Rec S 4113

REFERENCE: Vol. 148, No. 58

SECTION: Senate

Lott

TITLE: JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

SPEAKER: Mr. LOTT; Mr. DASCHLE

TEXT: [*S4113]

Mr. LOTT . Mr. President, I have been wanting to speak about the situation with regard to the President's judicial nominations. I have a number of points I wish to make.

I know there were some discussions about the nominations earlier this morning and even this afternoon. The major point we are trying to make today is that today is the 1-year anniversary of eight of the President's nominations to serve on circuit courts. These minorities, men and women, have not even had the courtesy of a hearing, let alone a vote in the Judiciary Committee.

I have learned over the years that when you are talking about judges and judicial nominations each side will have their statistics about what happened in the Clinton years, what happened in the Reagan years, and what happens right now. But the fact is, these eight nominees have not even had a hearing; they have been pending for a full year.

There are actually 11 nominees who were sent forward in a group_the first nominations of President Bush. Three of those have been confirmed. Two of those, I might add, were recycled, in effect, because they were Democrats, or were selected by Democrats, and they were qualified. The President resubmitted their names. They got through the process. But these eight have not had any further consideration for a full year.

You can argue statistics. But usually Presidents get their circuit nominations confirmed within a year of having them sent forward.

The President sought men and women of great experience and who meet the highest standards of legal training, temperament, and judgment_for all of his nominations, but particularly for this first group of circuit court nominees.

He sought out nominees who respect the powers given to them by the Constitution and who will interpret the law_not make the law. He sought out nominees who have reputations as lawyers of skill, discernment, and high character. He even sought out nominees who had a great deal of experience in arguing cases before the Supreme Court. In this group of eight nominees, they have collectively appeared before the Supreme Court over 60 times. One of the nominees has alone argued before the Supreme Court 30 times. In terms of their education, their experience, and their integrity, this group is unimpeachable and quite remarkable.

Here are these individuals' pictures. I think a picture helps inform our debate, because it takes the debate away from the realm of just statistics or mere names.

Mr. President, when we are talking about judges who have been delayed, we are talking about Miguel Estrada, who was born in Honduras, and has lived the American dream. He has tremendous experience in his profession, including serving as Assistant U.S. Solicitor General under President Clinton, a Supreme Court law clerk, arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, and working as a Federal prosecutor. He also graduated magna cum laude from Harvard Law School_not an institution known for turning out conservative lawyers, or judges_but certainly an eminently respected institution as far as quality, high standards, and academic rigor are concerned. Yet Estrada has been denied a fair hearing.

Why? Noone has suggested he is not qualified by education, by experience, or by professional or personal integrity.

Does he have a conservative philosophy? Does he believe in strict construction of the Founder's intent in interpreting the Constitution? Yes. Does that disqualify him? It should not.

I voted for Justice Ginsburg when she came before the Senate. I did not agree with her judicial or legal philosophy. I knew she would rule quite often in ways with which I would not agree. While most justices exercise discretion, you can't always count on how they may rule. But she was qualified by experience, by education, and by personal integrity and demeanor and I voted for her regardless of the fact that her philosophy was contrary to my own.

Unfortunately, I cannot think of any other reason than ideological prejudice for why Miguel Estrada has not had a hearing and an opportunity to be voted on_despite the fact that he was unanimously given the ABA's highest rating, "well qualified" by the American Bar Association which is supposed to be the Democrat's Gold Standard for evaluating nominees judicial qualifications. Yet, Miguel Estrada has not even had a hearing.

Another example, which is clearly one that is hard to understand, is the delay in considering Justice Priscilla Owen, a nominee to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. I have a special feeling in my heart about this circuit because it does include my State of Mississippi. Judge Owen has served on the Texas Supreme Court since 1994. She has been involved in business in the private sector. She is an outstanding graduate of Baylor Law School in Texas.

Again, by education, by experience, and by personal integrity, this is a lady who should have been accorded a hearing and a vote by now in the Judiciary Committee and on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, why do we need another pound of flesh concerning the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals? Is Judge Charles Pickering who has already been voted down in the Judiciary Committee not enough. If we are looking for tit for tat, how about just saying: OK, good, take that, Mr. President, Trent Lott, Republicans, we repaid you what you deserved from the past? But how does all of that apply to Priscilla Owen? Why has this lady not been accorded a hearing? Remember, [*S4114] once again, that she has been pending for a full year.

REV_00256071

One interesting thing of note, Mr. President, is that two of these nominees, were actually nominated by the first President Bush. So they in a sense have been waiting over 10 years to get a fair hearing and be confirmed to the circuit courts.

John Roberts is one of those two, and has again been nominated to the DC Circuit Court of Appeals. He is one of the Nation's leading appellate lawyers, having argued 36 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and serving as a Deputy Solicitor General for our Nation. He also graduated magna cum laude from Harvard. So again, by education, by incredible experience, and by personal integrity, he has stellar qualifications to serve as a circuit court judge. Yet, he too has been denied a fair hearing and an opportunity to be considered by the Senate by the majority of Democrats on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, our Nation's fourth President, James Madison, was certainly correct when he said that the courts exist to "exercise not the will of men, but the judgment of law." This President has gone to great lengths to nominate thekind of men and women who will do that once they are confirmed.

Another nominee who has been delayed for over a year without cause or justification, is Justice Deborah Cook, nominated to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. She has served as a justice on the Ohio Supreme Court since 1994. Before becoming a judge, she was the first woman partner at Akron's oldest law firm. She is a graduate of the University of Akron Law School.

This is the circuit where half of the judicial seats are vacant. There is a long history on why that is, but the fact is that again the nominee is an eminently qualified nominee. And she has been waiting 52 weeks for a hearing even though the ABA voted unanimously that she was qualified.

So what is the problem, Mr. President? There are no allegations of improper conduct. There are no allegations that she is not qualified by experience, by education, or by demeanor, yet she is still waiting on a hearing.

Yet another nominee unjustifiably delayed is Judge Terrence Boyle, a nominee to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. He was unanimously confirmed to be a Federal district judge in 1984.

Mr. President, one of the things that struck me as very interesting about Judge Pickering's treatment by the Democrats was that he has been a sitting federal district court judge since 1990, over 12 years. And now we have a nominee who has been a Federal district judge for almost two decades, who was unanimously confirmed in 1984. The former chairman of the State Democratic Party in North Carolina even supports his nomination. He is a graduate of American University's Law School. This is one of the two nominees, the other being John Roberts, who was first nominated to be a circuit court judge back during the first President Bush's administration. He was younger and well experienced then, and he now has another decade of experience as a Federal district court judge to his credit. And here he is back again, only to be denied a fair hearing by the Democrats.

So, in each and every one of these cases, there is no explanation for the year-long delay in giving President Bush's first group of nominees prompt and fair treatment.

Michael McConnell has been nominated to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals and again he is an eminently qualified legal scholar. He is one of the Nation's leading constitutional scholars, the author of legal books, and a prolific contributor to law journals. He has argued 11 cases before the Supreme Court. His reputation for fairness and integrity has generated support from numerous law professors. He is a graduate of the University of Chicago Law School. Again, on what possible grounds is such an extraordinarily qualified individual denied a hearing for over a year?

REV_00256072

Judge Dennis Shedd, a nominee to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, was another nominee unanimously confirmed to be a Federal district judge in 1990_yet another sitting Federal district judge, Mr. President. He is strongly supported in his home State by both Senators_Senator Fritz Hollings and Senator Strom Thurmond_and served in the past as chief counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee. He is one of ours no less. Yet, he has been waiting unjustifiably for over a year for a fair hearing and a vote.

Mr. President, I believe I have talked about each one of the nominee's personal qualifications to serve on the circuit courts of America. I should note that, back in January, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee indicated there would be a hearing for Justice Priscilla Owen, Michael McConnell, and Miguel Estrada_and that they would have hearings this year. Now, I guess we have 4 more months that have expired, another 4 months in which they have not been given a hearing much less a vote.

I hope they will given more than the courtesy of a hearing, which seems the minimum they should have. They should have a vote in the Judiciary Committee and then a vote here in the full Senate.

Mr. President, the delay in confirming such well qualified nominees to be judges has had an adverse impact on the judicial system itself. The number of vacancies has gone up over the past year_there are now almost 100 judgeships vacant_while 44 nominations languish in the Senate. As a result, justice is being delayed as the caseload burden increases for almost every current judge in the nation.

I would take a moment to note one curious thing about today's efforts regarding judges. We had six judges on the calendar ready to be voted on; but only four were moved, the other two were not. One of the two nominees has a very close association with Senator Hatch. The other one is the lone circuit judge on the calendar. So, once again, it appears circuit judges are receiving worse treatment by the Judiciary Committee than are the Federal district court nominees.

I realize around here we get to thinking: Well, wait a minute, circuit courts are more involved in the interpretation of the law. Maybe they are more important. But I will tell you what, if you ever practiced a day of law, the ones you see who really are dealing with the law every day are the Federal district judges. I do not understand the big dichotomy here and why the circuit judges are being delayed and treated so unfairly.

I want to point out what is happening in terms of these circuit judges nominated by President Bush as compared to the treatment that was afforded circuit court nominees during President Clinton's first two years in office.

First off, I should note that while President Bush sent his first nominations up on May 9, 2001, a year ago, President Clinton did not send up his first batch of nominations to the Senate until August of his first year in office.

So, there was actually less time to actually get President Clinton's nominees confirmed than there has been to get George Bush's out.

Yet you can see from the chart what is actually happening with Bush's nominees, particularly with respect to the circuit judges. President Clinton, in the 14 months after his first nominee was sent up, got 86 percent of them confirmed by the time Congress adjourned. Ultimately, over the course of the following Congress, Clinton ended up getting almost all of the judges he nominated during his first Congressional term. Again, I am not going to get into great arguments over the exact percentages or numbers, but there is clearly a problem here. While

REV_00256073

Clinton got 86 percent of his circuit judges by the time his first Congress adjourned, President Bush only has 30 percent so far. And at the current pace the judiciary is considering Bush's nominees, it looks like Bush is not going to break 50% by the end of this Congress.

It looks as if we might get two or three more circuit judges by the end of the year, but it surely is moving deliberately slowly. The American people recognize this is a problem for the country. When you have a circuit like the 6th circuit that has a 50-percent vacancy rate, then you begin to wonder, do we have enough judges to cover all the cases, even the truly important ones?

This is a question of law and order, Mr. President, drug cases, terrorist cases.

Justice Rehnquist, the Chief Justice, has decried the vacancy crisis as [*S4115] "alarming." More than 10 percent of Federal judgeships are currently vacant. So this problem for our nation that is very serious, particularly after the terrorist attacks in New York and here in Washington.

I have talked to Senator Daschle about it. Senator Nickles and I, along with Senator Hatch, have talked to Senator Leahy and Senator Reid. I know, having been majority leader, that sometimes these problems are hard to resolve. The Judiciary Committee doesn't always follow instructions even from the elected leaders. But this creates a problem. We have been trying to resist slowing down or blocking meetings or progress on the legislative process because we want to move forward on these important bills. But we have to point out that there is a blatant unfairness here, to the country and to the nominees. I can't help but think of the cliche that justice delayed is justice denied. That is what is happening here.

I know my time is running out. I probably will come back and talk more about this later. I ask for fairness, fairness for these eight circuit judges. We can argue about the others later, the other circuit nominees, other district judges, but after an entire year President Bush's first eight nominees should have a hearing. They should have a vote on the Senate floor. No criticisms have been raised against them other than un-attributed hints that they are conservative, and the current majority in the Senate is looking for some sort of a litmus test or conformance, I guess, based on philosophy and ideology. I don't think that either fair or appropriate. It is not what is called for under the Constitution. I hope that the Senate will ultimately find a way to make progress in this area and give these nominees the opportunity to be fairly considered based upon their temperament, professional and educational qualifications, and their personal integrity.

As President Bush has noted in making the case for getting his nominees confirmed, Federal judges are key to making sure America functions well. Every day they uphold the rights of an individual, they protect the innocent, they punish the guilty. Their rulings are essential to the rule of law in our nation. To discharge their responsibilities the federal courts must have judges."

Because of the number of vacancies in our nation's courts, Americans are being forced to wait for justice, and the burden on federal judges is growing heavier.

Mr. President, one newspaper, the Wichita Eagle, got it exactly right on the judges issue back in March in part I think because it is located in the heart of America when it said: "But just as presidents have an obligation not to nominate the incompetent or unqualified to the federal bench, presidents deserve the broad authority in making their choices for such judicial posts. And the Senate has a responsibility to give those choices every possible consideration and, barring some glaring defect, confirm them quickly. Yet the backstabbing and stalling on judicial confirmations has escalated to the point of obstructing justice. It needs to stop."

REV_00256074

This President's nominees are men and women of distinction and great accomplishment. They are solidly within the mainstream of American legal opinion, and they share a principled commitment to follow the law, not legislate it from the bench.

Mr. President, President Bush' nominees should be given fair hearings, voted on, and confirmed by the Senate as soon as possible.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE . Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE . Mr. President, the people who have been discussing and negotiating the trade matter have asked for a little additional time. In order to accommodate their discussions, I ask unanimous consent that the period for morning business be extended until 3:45.

Mr. LOTT . Mr. President, at this point I would have to object. I don't know that I would want to. I just have not had a chance to discuss this with Senator Daschle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

(The remarks of Mr. Cleland pertaining to the introduction of ♦ S. 1492 are located in today's Record under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

SUBJECT: JUDGES (78%); LAWYERS (77%); EDUCATION (75%); ANNIVERSARIES (58%);

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2002

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - Current Congress ⓘ
Terms: lott and confirmation and date(geq (5/09/2002) and leq (05/09/2002)) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Wednesday, November 6, 2002 - 11:41 AM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

TRENT LOTT May 9, 2002 lott.senate.gov

Senator Lott Asks the Senate to Vote on Circuit Judges

Senator Lott joined an overwhelming majority of Republican Senators on May 9 in calling on the Senate to vote on the confirmation of nine men and women nominated one year ago by President Bush to the Circuit Courts of Appeals.

"We're talking about outstanding Americans of diverse backgrounds who have not even had the courtesy of a hearing," Senator Lott said. "And there's no explanation for it."

The one-year-old nominations are: John G. Roberts and Miguel Estrada, both for the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; Terrence Boyle and Dennis Shedd, both for the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals; Michael McConnell and Jeffrey Sutton, both for the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals; Priscilla Owen for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals; and Deborah Cook for the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals.

"It's a matter of simple fairness, and I think the American people understand that justice delayed is justice denied," Senator Lott said.

The Republican Leader said that historically, a president can count on seeing all of his first 11 Circuit Court nominees confirmed. Presidents Reagan, George Herbert Walker Bush and Clinton all enjoyed a 100% confirmation rate on their first 11 Circuit Court nominees, and all were confirmed well within a year of nomination. In stark contrast, eight of President Bush's nominations to the Circuit Courts which are only one step below the Supreme Court are still pending in the Judiciary Committee, 365 days after nomination.

"Justice is being denied in our courts because of the refusal of the 10 Democratic Senators on the Judiciary Committee to confirm conservative, well-qualified judges to our Circuit Courts of Appeals," Senator Lott said. " These 10 liberal Senators prefer judges who share their activist ideology and who would use the power of the bench to make laws that the Senators have been unsuccessful in passing through Congress.

"Justice delayed is justice denied. It's time for the Senate to stop this cowardly process of blocking these eight distinguished nominees in the Committee. It's time for the Senate to have the courage of its convictions. It's time to vote."

Copyright © 1996-2000 Trent Lott All rights reserved. No portion of this website may be reproduced or retransmitted by any means without prior written consent. Please contact the webmaster for comments, suggestions, questions, or consent.

REV_00256076

TRENT LOTT August 1, 2002 lott.senate.gov

Senate Majority Leadership may have to be left back next year. . .

Senator Lott joined with Senators Kay Bailey Hutchison of Texas, Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania and the other members of the Senate Republican Leadership in issuing a 1st Semester Progress Report to the Senate Democratic Majority for the latter's failure to complete the people's business on critical issues facing the nation.

Majority Leader Tom Daschle and his leadership now controlling the Senate received:

• An "incomplete" on Energy for failing to bring a final energy independence bill to a vote while conflicts deepen in the Mid East;

• An "incomplete" on Prescription Drugs for denying seniors needed medications by bringing a flawed bill to the Senate floor strictly as a political issue, without any strategy or plan for actually putting a drug plan for seniors into law;

• An "incomplete" for failing to bring to a vote the President's Department of Homeland Security bill;

• An "incomplete, if not failure" for not passing a Budget to govern the nation's spending beginning October 1, 2002, the first time a Senate Majority has ignored the budget law since it was enacted in 1974;

• An "incomplete" on Welfare Reform Reauthorization, putting at risk our success story in moving welfare recipients off welfare rolls and into good jobs and future lives;

• An "incomplete" on enacting the defense funding bill for the new fiscal year beginning October 1, despite the President's calls to get this bill to his desk ASAP so that the War on Terrorism and our troops on the ground will not be affected by politics;

• And finally, an "incomplete" in confirming the President's judicial nominations to fill critical vacancies in the nation's Circuit Courts of Appeals so law and order judges will ensure that victims are not denied justice.

"As you can see, this is not the kind of report card you'd want to have to ask your parents to sign," Senator Lott told a press Capitol press conference on Thursday, August 1, when the report card was issued. "This Majority may have to be held back. But that's not stopping them from going out to recess tomorrow."

- 30 -

Copyright © 1996-2000 Trent Lott All rights reserved. No portion of this website may be reproduced or retransmitted by any means without prior written consent. Please contact the webmaster for comments, suggestions, questions, or consent.

REV_00256077

TRENT LOTT October 17, 2002

lott.senate.gov

The Judicial Crisis

Yet again a few liberals on the Senate Judiciary Committee are trying to block a conservative judge from a conservative state, just as they did with Mississippi's Judge Charles Pickering and Judge Priscilla Owen, of Texas. This time, Judge Dennis Shedd, - a highly-qualified judge from South Carolina - is being denied a vote before the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has repeatedly failed in its duty to approve judges and report them to the full Senate floor for a vote, where they enjoy broad bipartisan support. This is creating a judicial crisis, and a shortage of federal judges. The reason for the committee's inaction: some people fear judges who strictly interpret law, rather than make it.

It is no secret that the political left has tried to achieve its agenda through the courts. They have done this with the help of activist judges who have ruled so broadly that they have essentially made new law from the bench. Many liberals too often feel the need to go around elected representatives and instead default to the courts. This is because on the many so-called "hot button" issues, a majority of Americans find the button not so hot at all, and in fact come down solidly on the traditional side. For example, most Americans solidly support responsible gun ownership. As we have seen in Mississippi, a wide majority support a sensible tort system, where frivolous lawsuits are kept out of court. An overwhelming majority of Americans believe that the words "under God" are perfectly acceptable for our Pledge of Allegiance. Even 30 years after legalization, roughly half of all Americans still strongly oppose abortion. For these reasons, and others, conservative judges - especially those who are practicing Christians like Judge Pickering - annoy, anger and scare the political left in this country, which has repeatedly shown hostility toward traditional values and traditional institutions like businesses, churches, marriage and families. Many on the left feel that conservative judges are conspiring to use the judicial branch to promote a conservative agenda in the same way the left has in the past used the bench to advance its liberal agenda.

I suggest nothing could be further from the truth. Judge Pickering, Judge Owen, Judge Shedd are all rated highly by the American Bar Association (ABA) for their legal experience and fairness in interpreting the law. As conservative jurists, they do not believe in making law from the bench. Sure, they have personal opinions and feelings, but they were not given this coveted ABA rating by a bunch of partisan hacks who share their views. Instead, the ABA - a professional organization made up of legal experts from all backgrounds - bestows this rating based on a judge's professional experience and ethical conduct. If anything, the records of Judge Pickering, Judge Owen and Judge Shedd show that they are prepared to rule fairly, whether they agree with the law personally or not.

With the exception of nominees to the Supreme Court, usually the U.S. Senate has downplayed personal philosophical differences in the confirmation of judges, particularly circuit judges. During my years in the Senate, I have voted for a number of judges with whom I disagreed sharply in terms of politics. I voted for Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg's confirmation, when President Clinton nominated her for the U.S. Supreme court. She and I have differing views, but nevertheless she was qualified by education and experience. President Bush, and indeed all presidents, are entitled to nominate judges who are qualified by education, experience, and demeanor. The full Senate should be allowed by its Judiciary Committee to confirm or deny judges based on a judge's professional merits alone.

It is up to the Congress and President to make the law. It is up to judges to apply that law. To those who feel judges should indeed make law on the bench, and who fear judges like Judge Pickering, Judge Owen and Judge Shedd will use the courts to advance their personal views, I suggest they look at the records of these qualified men and women. Anyone will find these judges' standards to be much higher than that.

Copyright © 1996-2000 Trent Lott All rights reserved. No portion of this website may be reproduced or retransmitted by any means without prior written consent. Please contact the webmaster for comments, suggestions, questions, or consent.

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent 90 Days
Terms: bush and specter or lott and nominee or nominees and judicial (Edit Search)
Focus: bush and specter or lott and nominee or nominees and judicial and senate (Exit FOCUS™)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

USA TODAY, November 5, 2002

Copyright 2002 Gannett Company, Inc.
USA TODAY

November 5, 2002, Tuesday, FINAL EDITION

SECTION: NEWS; Pg. 8A

LENGTH: 770 words

HEADLINE: Senate sub makes political waves

BYLINE: Andrea Stone

BODY:
An angry Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura appointed a political independent to the Senate on Monday as a temporary replacement for Democrat Paul Wellstone, who died last month in a plane crash. At the same time, two candidates vying for the full six-year term clashed in their first and only debate.

Ventura, miffed at the partisan tone of last week's memorial service for Wellstone, named Dean Barkley to represent Minnesota at the post-election Senate session that begins next week. Barkley's Senate bid in 1994 garnered the Reform Party the 5% of the vote needed to put it on the ballot and win public financing.
Democrats, who worry that Barkley will vote with Republicans on spending and homeland-security bills next week, accused Ventura of grandstanding. "It's typical Jesse Ventura," state Democratic Chairman Mike Erlandson said. "He decided to make a political rant when people wanted to focus on who is going to be their next U.S. senator."

Sara Janecek, a Republican strategist and co-editor of Politics in Minnesota newsletter, called Ventura's announcement "a ridiculous side show" and added, "The governor is trying to matter, and he doesn't."

Barkley's appointment will result in a 49-49 split, with two independents. It was unclear whether he would serve until Nov. 19, when today's election is certified, or until early January, when new senators usually are seated.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss, said if Barkley decided to side with Republicans, "I would be recognized as majority leader as soon as he is sworn in."

Lott said he hoped that would allow Republicans to push through not only homeland-security and terrorism-insurance bills, but also the nominations of more than 80 judicial and other nominees held up by Democrats.

REV_00256081

"I'm sure this all puts him in a whirlwind," Lott said Monday on Oliver North's radio talk show. Barkley's "in the catbird seat right now. The decisions he makes will be very important."

If Barkley, 52, sides with the GOP, it will be a fitting end to the most topsy-turvy Senate in U.S. history. It began with a 50-50 split and Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., as majority leader for a few weeks in January 2001 before Dick Cheney replaced Al Gore as president of the Senate. Lott ran the Senate until June 2001, when Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont bolted from the Republican Party and became an independent allied with Democrats. Daschle took over until now.

The two men vying for the full six-year term squared off in a polite but at times heated debate at St. Paul's Fitzgerald Theater, an old vaudeville house best known as the home of public radio's A Prairie Home Companion.

Mondale, 74, who served in the Senate from 1964 to 1976, was aggressive throughout the debate. He called Coleman's campaign "the poster child for what is wrong in politics," citing its reliance on contributions from corporations and special-interest groups.

Coleman, 53, a former Democrat and mayor of St. Paul, criticized what he called his former party's divisive tone. He pledged to work across party lines.

The two clashed most on tax policy. Coleman said he favors making President Bush's 10-year, $ 1.35 trillion tax cuts permanent. He noted that taxes rose during Mondale's stint as President Carter's vice president. He reminded viewers of Mondale's pledge in the 1984 presidential race to raise taxes.

Mondale parried by noting that President Reagan raised taxes after beating him in a landslide. "I was the one who told the truth before the election," Mondale said. "And I think that's one of the big things Minnesotans have to look at: Who's got the courage to stand up, level with the people, even when it's difficult?"

Mondale said he favors tax cuts for the middle class; he said the Bush tax cuts most benefit the wealthiest 1% of Americans.

Lawrence Jacobs, a political scientist at the University of Minnesota, said Mondale surprised many observers with his aggressive approach in the debate. He called the strategy "high risk" but necessary if the Democrat is to win over the 10% of independent voters who remain undecided.

In summing up, Coleman reiterated what became his campaign theme after Mondale stepped in to replace Wellstone: that the race is about the future, not the past. Mondale appealed to voters to "re-elect" him.

"It's the question of, who can get the job done?" he said. "I know the Senate. I've served in the Senate. I was the president of the Senate. And under the rules, if you will re-elect me, I go into the Senate leadership on the first day."

REV_00256082

GRAPHIC: PHOTO, B/W, Ann Heisenfelt, AP; After debate in St. Paul: Republican Norm Coleman, left, and Democrat Walter Mondale are competing to represent Minnesota for the full six-year term in the Senate. The Minnesota Independence Party was not invited to the debate Monday.

LOAD-DATE: November 05, 2002

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent 90 Days ⓘ
Terms: bush and specter or lott and nominee or nominees and judicial (Edit Search)
Focus: bush and specter or lott and nominee or nominees and judicial and senate (Exit FOCUS™)
View: Full
Date/Time: Wednesday, November 6, 2002 - 11:25 AM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256083

April 30th, 2002 Contact: Margarita Tapia, 202.224.5225

JUDICIARY STATEMENT: "STATUS OF JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS"

Statement of Sen. Orrin Hatch

Hatch

before the

Senate Judiciary Committee

"Status of Judicial Confirmations"

Mr. President, I would like to respond briefly to some comments made earlier today on the topic of judicial confirmations. I had no intention of bringing up this topic today, but now I find myself with no choice but to set the record straight. I want to make one observation and then two simple points.

Mr. President, my observation is this: The American people want this Senate to help – rather than hinder – President Bush and anyone else who is President. Everyone understands that we are living at a time of great national importance. Our government is being put to a test. President Bush is performing extraordinarily well, and he is leading our country and our military in the right direction to achieve prosperity and security for all Americans. The American people support President Bush and his Administration, and they correctly believe that the Senate should do the same.

But the people who follow the Judiciary Committee's record on reviewing and approving President Bush's judicial nominations are frustrated – for good reason – with the way in which this body has treated President Bush. They know that President Bush gave great care and attention to finding nominees who are extremely well-qualified, highly talented legal thinkers who hold mainstream American values. There is not an ideologue among them. To the contrary, President Bush's picks for the judiciary are all principled and fair people, from a variety of backgrounds and experiences, who are committed to following precedent, applying the law as it exists, and standing firm against judicial activism. President Bush should not be forced to divert any more of his time and attention away from the war on terrorism and his many domestic priorities in order to persuade this body to do what is right for the American people.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to make two points that directly respond to the comments made earlier today.

Page 1 of 3

First, the current Senate leadership is NOT doing a better job this Congress than the Senate has done under other presidents. I listened as my colleague explained that, if looked at through the right looking glass, or examined in the right subsection of the right time period of the right session of the right Congress, then the current numbers are pretty impressive.

But Mr. President, the most important measure of performance should be how we are handling the most important courts: the Circuit Court of Appeal. Let's compare the treatment of President Bush's first 11 circuit court nominees to the first 11 of previous presidents. President Reagan, the first President Bush and President Clinton all enjoyed a 100% confirmation rate on their first 11 Circuit Court nominees, and all were confirmed well within a year. President Reagan's first 11 were confirmed in an average of 39 days, the first President Bush's first 11 averaged 88 days, and President Clinton's first 11 - only 115 days. The longest any of these individuals were held up in Committee was 202 days. In stark contrast to previous presidents, 8 of President Bush's first 11 nominations – made on May 9th, 2001, almost a year ago – are still pending in Committee without so much as a hearing! That's nearly 365 days, and only 3 of President's first 11 nominees are confirmed. Is this what the Democratic leadership considers a record-breaking pace? It may be record-breaking, all right, but not the record they're talking about. They are confirming with the velocity of molasses.

REV_00256084

Now I heard my colleague suggest that some of the first 11 nominees may have been superseded out of courtesy to Republican Senators who requested some later-nominated judges to move first. Well, I know how difficult it is to Chair the committee, and such requests do come in. But I would suggest to my friend that he do what I did for President Clinton: consider more than one circuit nominee per hearing. That's what we did, under Republican leadership, no fewer than 10 times. Why not two at a time?

Of course, the pace of confirming a President's first 11 nominees is not the only measure by which the current leadership is falling short. My colleague suggested that kudos should be awarded for bringing the circuit court vacancy rate down to 29. Well, it was NEVER that high at the end of ANY Congress when Republicans controlled the Senate. And I certainly don't recall that, during my Chairmanship, any of our Circuit Courts were facing the kind of crisis that is going on today in the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, where the Court is operating at half-staff despite the fact that President Bush has nominated SEVEN highly qualified people to serve on that court.

The fact is that, at the close of the 106th Congress, when I was Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, there were only 67 vacancies in the federal judiciary. In the space of one Democratic-controlled congressional session last year, that number shot up to nearly 100, where it remains today. Under Republican leadership, the Senate confirmed essentially the same number of judges for President Clinton (377) as it did for President Reagan (382), which proves bipartisan fairness – especially when you consider that President Reagan had six years of his party controlling the Senate, and President Clinton had only two.

So, how did we go from 67 vacancies at the end of the Clinton Administration to nearly 100 today? There can be only one answer: The current pace of hearings and confirmations is simply not keeping up with the increase in vacancies. We are moving so slowly that we are barely keeping up with natural attrition. President Bush nominated 66 highly qualified individuals to fill judicial vacancies last year. But in the first four months of Democratic control of the Senate last year, only 6 federal judges were confirmed. At several hearings, the Judiciary Committee considered only one or two judges at a time. The Committee voted on only 6 of 29 circuit court nominees in 2001, a rate of 21%, leaving 23 of them without any action at all.

This leads to my second point, Mr. President, which is that the current situation has nothing whatsoever to do with ideology. I was surprised to hear my friend, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, address earlier today the question of introducing ideology into the judicial confirmation process. Some of my Democrat colleagues have made no bones about the fact that this is exactly what they are seeking to do. In July, they have even held hearings expressly on how to justify it. We saw what happened to Judge Charles Pickering.

What is now occurring is far beyond the mere tug-of-war politics that unfortunately surrounds Senate judicial confirmation since Robert Bork. Some of my colleagues are out to effect a fundamental change in our constitutional system, as they were instructed to do by noted liberal law professors at a retreat early last year. Rather than seeking to determine the judiciousness of a nominee and whether a nominee will be able to rule on the law or the Constitution without personal bias, they want to guarantee that our judges all think in the same way, a way that is much further to the left of mainstream than most of President Bush's nominees.

REV_00256085

In the judiciary that some would create, citizens will have to worry about the personal politics of the judge to whom they come for justice under the law. I strongly object to that result.

Mr. President, the legitimacy of our courts, and especially the Supreme Court, comes from much more than black robes and a high bench. It comes from the people's belief that judges and justices will apply a judicial philosophy without regard to personal politics or bias.

In conclusion, Mr. President, it is time for this Senate to examine the real situation in the Judiciary Committee, rather than listen to more inventive ways of spinning it. We have lots of work to do. There are 90 vacancies in the federal judiciary – a vacancy rate of more than 10.5% – and we have 50 nominees pending, including 4 nominees for the Court of Federal Claims. Nineteen of the pending nominees are for circuit court positions, yet the Senate has confirmed only 9 circuit judges this Congress. This is despite a crisis of 29 vacancies pending in the circuit courts nationwide – virtually the same number of vacancies pending when the Democrats took control of the Senate in June of last year.

Mr. President, the American people are disappointed in this process. They want the Senate to help – not hinder – President Bush. I urge my friends across the aisle to focus on this situation, to step up the pace of hearings and votes, and to do what's right for the country.

###

REV_00256086

April 12th, 2002 Contact: Margarita Tapia 202.224.5225

HATCH ADDRESSES JUDICIAL CONFIRMATION PROCESS IN 'STATE OF THE SENATE'

Washington - Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), ranking Republican member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, today issued the following remarks on the current state of the judicial confirmation process:

"Thank you, Leader, for this opportunity to report on the State of the Senate's responsibility to confirm federal judges. I am sorry to say the we are not doing as well as I would like for the American people.

"The fact is our federal courts are in a vacancy crisis, while here in the Senate the judicial confirmation process appears to have fallen into the hands of very liberal Senate Democrats who appear intent on letting outside, extreme-left, special interest groups launch the most invidious attacks on the good people the President has nominated.

"Though you would think that Democrats might have recoiled after the national backlash they got from the hurtful way they treated a good man like Charles Pickering of Mississippi, it seems the stoves of the special interest groups are readying to boil up an attack on Judge Brooks Smith of Pennsylvania.

"Judge Smith has a very distinguished record as a federal judge for almost 14 years, and no one has questioned his ability or competence. Yet the extremists are trying to make hay out of the fact that he used to be a member of a family oriented fishing club, like hundreds of clubs that exist from Vermont to Utah that happen to limit membership to men or to women for solely leisure purposes.

"What is most distressing about this latest inside Washington attack is that it is yesterday's hysteria in more ways than one. Since 1988, the courts and the Judicial Conference have made clear that there is nothing improper about a Judge or nominee belonging to a single gender club that exhibits certain attributes first articulated by Justice William Brennan as an extension of First Amendment speech.

"I, for one, stand by the Freedom of Association. As Justice Thurgood Marshall pointed out, the ability to associate as we see fit is part of what makes this country great, and a freedom we honor. I hope Democrats do also. Judges, or people who might want to be Judges someday, are just as free as anyone else to exercise that right.
"The American people will roll their eyes at an attempt to ignore a 14-year career on the bench while focusing on a private hunting or fishing club . For goodness sake, Judge Smith has the support of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania and the local Domestic Violence Board in Pennsylvania.

"This sort of thing is not good for the country. In the case of Judge Pickering, I have to say, I am very concerned that an impression has been created by how Judge Pickering was treated, that Democrats are imposing a litmus test on personal views, in some cases derived of religious conviction. Judge Pickering was a Southern Baptist. The American people -- liberal or conservative -- will not, and should not, stand for this. To impose a litmus test offends everyone who appreciates the rule of law and the diversity that makes our country strong.

"Let me just report that today marks the 338th day since President Bush announced his first 11 picks for the federal bench. There can be little doubt that the unwillingness of Democrats to move more expeditiously in judicial confirmations is exacerbating the existing circuit court vacancy crisis.

REV_00256087

"What is happening in the Senate confirmation process is not tit for tat or mere pay back, Democrats are in the throes of pursuing a course that is more serious than that. Senate Democrats are seeking to de-diversify the federal judiciary. They are seeking a federal judiciary that looks nothing like the American people.

"One of my Senate colleagues, the senior Senator from New York, repeatedly argues that we need more diversity on our circuit courts of appeal. I couldn't agree more! But Democrats do not walk the talk. The 6th Circuit, for the Midwest States, currently has 6 Democrat-appointed judges, but only 2 Republican. President Bush has 7 nominees pending for that circuit, none have received a hearing. The 9th Circuit, for the Western states, has 17 Democrat-appointed judges but only 7 Republicans. No pending nominee has received a hearing. And in the 2nd Circuit, which covers New York, there are 9 Democrats and 1 Republican, but we do not hear Democrats clamoring for diversity in the 2nd Circuit.

"The bottom line is that nearly one in five circuit court seats is vacant all across America. When President Bush sent up his first nominees we had 31 circuit court vacancies, and today we still have 31 vacancies despite the nation's need. President Bush has responded to the circuit court vacancy crisis by rapidly nominating top-notch men and women. The only obstacle standing in the way of the nominees' ability to serve the American people is a Democrat-led Senate."

###

REV_00256088

April 11th, 2002 Contact: Margarita Tapia 202.224.5225

JUDICIARY STATEMENT: "NOMINATIONS OF HOWARD, ANDERSON, BAYLSON, GRIESBACH, LANCASTER, RUFE, AND WALTER"
Statement of Senator Orrin G. HatchRanking Republican MemberBefore the United States Senate Committee on the JudiciaryHearing on the Nominations ofJeffrey R. Howard, to be U.S. Circuit Judge, First CircuitPercy Anderson, to be U.S. District Judge, Central District of CaliforniaMichael M. Baylson, to be U.S. District Judge, E. District of PennsylvaniaWilliam C. Griesbach, to be U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of WisconsinJoan E. Lancaster, to be U.S. District Judge, District of MinnesotaCynthia M. Rufe, to be U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of Pennsylvania John F. Walter, to be U.S. District Judge, Central District of California

Statement of Sen. Orrin Hatch

before the

Senate Judiciary Committee

I am pleased that the Judiciary Committee is considering the nominations of seven exceedingly well-qualified candidates for the federal bench, and I would like to welcome you to the Committee.

Before we discuss the excellent credentials of today's nominees, however, I must take just a minute to make an observation about how this hearing fits into the bigger picture of the Committee's work on judicial nominations.

Today marks the 337th day since President Bush announced his first 11 picks for the federal bench. Eight of those nominations have been languishing in this committee for nearly a year with no commitments for hearings or votes any time soon. All eight received the ABA's majority rating of either well-qualified or qualified. Among these are some of the very best lawyers in the history of our country, including Miguel Estrada, John Roberts and Michael McConnell, just to name three.

This Committee's unwillingness to move more expeditiously on these nominations is exacerbating the circuit court vacancy crisis that exists in America today. Nearly one in five circuit court seats is vacant all across America. When President Bush sent up his first nominees we had 31 circuit court vacancies, and today we still have 31 vacancies. The DC Circuit Court of Appeals is one-third vacant and the 6th Circuit is 50-percent vacant.

President Bush has responded to the circuit court vacancy crisis by rapidly nominating top-notch men and women. The only obstacle standing in the way of the nominees' ability to serve the American people is this Committee.

I am glad that we will consider a circuit court nominee today, but I will point out that in years past under Republican leadership, we regularly considered two or more circuit nominees at a time. In fact, we did so on ten different occasions.

I'm also particularly pleased to see nominees John Walter and Percy Anderson from the Central District of California here - and I'll bet they are happy to be here today too - considering it's been 10 years since they were initially nominated to their seats during the first Bush Administration. They were both nominated in March of 1992, but unfortunately the Senate - which was controlled by the Democrats at the time - denied them a hearing.

REV_00256089

Interestingly, they are not the only nominees pending before the Committee today who were nominated by the first President Bush nearly 10 years ago. Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, John Roberts for the D.C. Circuit, Henry Saad for the 6th Circuit, Leonard Davis for the Eastern District of Texas, Andrew Hanen for the Southern District of Texas, Ronald Leighton for the Western District of Washington, and Richard Dorr for the Western District of Missouri - all seven of these nominees were also nominated by the first President Bush, but never received Committee action at that time. I hope that they too will soon receive their long-awaited hearings.

Now, although I would like to explain my support for each of the seven excellent nominees before us today, in the interest of time, I am going to ask Chairman Kohl if the balance of my remarks could be included in the record at this point. That way, we will have more time for the introductions from Members and for the nominees themselves. Let me just say that you are all excellent nominees and I am going to support all of you. I will work with my colleagues for your swift confirmation.

Jeffrey Howard's nomination to the First Circuit Court of Appeals is one more example of the quality appointments that President Bush is making. Mr. Howard has the record of a great attorney and a great public servant. He has served his communities in elected and appointed office and in a myriad public and volunteer undertakings. The people of New Hampshire can be proud of him.

As New Hampshire's Attorney General, he wrote and implemented one of the nation's first effective comprehensive state wide interdisciplinary protocols to combat domestic violence. He also led the fight in New Hampshire for consumers that were the victim of fraudulent businesses. As Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General for the Justice Department, Mr. Howard was a top advisor to Attorney General William Barr, in the areas of asset forfeiture, drug enforcement, and civil rights.

Percy Anderson, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Central District of California, began his career representing indigent clients in civil matters. He later became an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles, where he spent six years as First Assistant Division Chief, managing criminal division affairs in the absence of the Chief of the division. In 1985, he joined the Bryan Cave firm, specializing in white collar criminal defense and aviation litigation. In 1996, Mr. Anderson became a partner with Sonnenschein Nath & Rosenthal, a Los Angeles firm, where he focuses on commercial litigation, intellectual property, products liability, false claims, and white collar criminal defense work.

Michael Baylson, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, is familiar with that district because he has served as the United States Attorney there. In that capacity, he developed a reputation for adopting new and successful strategies for the war on drugs, including the tactic of identifying a drug gang, then infiltrating it to learn all its members and indict them en masse. He also was an early proponent of the "Weed and Seed" program designed to "weed out" drug dealers from a community and then "seed" those communities with social services and financial support.

William C. Griesbach, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, comes to us with seven years of experience on the bench, having served as a Wisconsin State Circuit Court Judge since 1995. Prior to his elevation to the bench, Judge Griesbach obtained substantial experience in both criminal and civil litigation: He spent eight years as an Assistant District Attorney for Brown County Wisconsin handling criminal matters, and five years before that at a Green Bay, Wisconsin law firm working on civil cases.

Joan E. Lancaster, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Minnesota, began her career as an Assistant City Attorney, trying approximately 12 jury and 40 court trials during her service. She then spent ten years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Minnesota. After two years of private practice, Justice Lancaster was named as a District Court Judge in the 4th Judicial District in Minnesota. Since 1998, she has served as an Associate Justice on the Minnesota Supreme Court.

REV_00256090

Cynthia M. Rufe, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, is another example of how President Bush has tried to create a diverse federal judiciary. Judge Rufe can only be described as a true champion of the rights of children and women. She also was a high school teacher. In addition to her charity work, Judge Rufe has also run the gambit of the legal profession. She was a Public Defender for 5 years and went on to start her own private practice. As a judge, she was appointed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and served with distinction as a member of the Appellate Procedural Rules Committee.

John F. Walter, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, has gained experience in private practice and government service. Mr. Walter has served as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Criminal Division, Fraud and Special Prosecutions Unit, where he prosecuted the then-largest bank burglary in the U.S. He has been in private practice since1972, working not only as a civil litigator but also as a criminal defense lawyer. As a member of the Federal Indigent Defense Panel, Mr. Walter has represented more than 75 indigent defendants charged with federal crimes in federal court and devoted thousands of pro bono hours to these cases.

###

REV_00256091

March 21st, 2002 Contact: Margarita Tapia 202.224.5225

FLOOR STATEMENT: "THE LOTT RESOLUTION & THE CIRCUIT COURT VACANCY CRISIS"

Statement of Sen. Orrin Hatch

before the

United States Senate

"Lott Resolution in light of the vacancy crisis on the Circuit Court."

Last Thursday, Senator Lott introduced a resolution calling for the Judiciary Committee to hold hearings on each of the circuit court judges nominated by President Bush on May 9 of last year.

We are coming up on the one-year anniversary of those nominations, and yet only 3 of the 11 nominees have had hearings and confirmation votes. All of these nominees have received well-qualified or qualified ratings from the American Bar Association, which some of my Democratic colleagues have described as the gold standard in evaluating judicial nominees.

Why is it so problematic that none of these 8 nominees have received a hearing or vote? Well, it is no secret that there is a vacancy crisis in the federal circuit courts, and that we are making no progress in addressing it.

Let's take a look at some numbers. A total of 22 circuit nominations are pending in the Judiciary Committee. But we have confirmed only 1 circuit judge this year, and only 7 since President Bush took office.

When Senate Democrats took over the Judiciary Committee in June of last year, there were 31 circuit court vacancies, and there remain 31 circuit court vacancies today. This does not represent progress – it represents stagnation. In contrast, at the end of 1995 (which was Republicans' first year of control of the Judiciary Committee during the Clinton Administration), there were only 13 circuit vacancies.

In fact, during President Clinton's first term, circuit court vacancies never exceeded 20 at the end of any year – including 1996, a presidential election year, when the pace of confirmations has traditionally slowed.

Moreover, there were only 2 circuit nominees left pending in Committee at the end of President Clinton's first year in office. In contrast, 23 of President Bush's circuit nominees were left hanging in Committee at the end of last year.

In light of the vacancy crisis, we cannot afford to let only 10 Senators defeat a circuit nominee. This is a question of process, not of seeking favorable treatment. For all these reasons, it is imperative to support Senator Lott's resolution to get hearings and votes for our longest pending circuit nominees. Given the vacancy crisis in our circuit courts, I can't imagine anyone voting against it.

REV_00256092

Some of our Democratic colleagues have tried to blame the Republicans for the present circuit court vacancy crisis by suggesting that 45% of President Clinton's circuit court nominees were not confirmed during his presidency. But that number is inflated by double counting individuals that were nominated more than once.

For example, by their numbers, Marsha Berzon – who was nominated in the 105th Congress, but not confirmed until the 106th – would count as two nominations and only one confirmation. If you remove the double counting and count by individuals, without counting withdrawn nominees, President Clinton nominated 86 individuals for the Circuit Courts and only 21 were not confirmed. That's only 24% who were not confirmed, as opposed to 45%.

And, of those 21 nominees who did not move, 9 lacked home state support, 1 had incomplete paperwork, and another was nominated after the August recess in 2000. That leaves only 10 circuit court nominees that did not receive action – some of whom may have had issues that simply cannot be publicly divulged.

###

REV_00256093

March 21st, 2002 Contact: Margarita Tapia 202.224.5225

STATEMENT ON THE STATUS OF JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

Washington – Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), Ranking Republican Member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, today addressed the status of judicial confirmations before the United States Senate. Senator Hatch's comments follow.

"Mr. President, I must respond to some of the comments that my colleagues across the aisle have made about the pace of judicial confirmations. These comments have included a gross distortion of my record as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee during six years of the Clinton Administration. Although we've all heard enough of the numbers, I will not hesitate to defend my record when it is unjustly attacked, as it has been over the past week.

"I believe that the source of many, if not all, of these attacks stems from the defensive posture that many of my Democratic colleagues have taken since ten members of the Judiciary Committee refused to send the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the floor for a vote by the full Senate. Some of these colleagues have defended what they call the Senate's fair treatment of judicial nominees in general, and Judge Pickering in specific. But the fact of the matter is that the Senate never got the opportunity to vote on Judge Pickering's nomination. The reality is that the ten Democratic members of the Judiciary Committee determined for the rest of the Senate the fate of Judge Pickering's nomination. This is despite the fact – or perhaps because of the fact – that had Judge Pickering's nomination been considered by the full Senate, he very likely would have been confirmed.

"The Committee's treatment of Judge Pickering is problematic for several reasons. First, during the six years that Republicans controlled the Senate during the Clinton Administration, not once was one of his judicial nominations killed by a Committee vote. The sole Clinton nominee who was defeated nevertheless received a floor vote by the full Senate. Judge Pickering was denied that opportunity. Some of my Democratic colleagues have said that their treatment of Judge Pickering was not payback. In one sense, they're right – if they were interested in treating President Bush's nominees as well as the Republicans treated President Clinton's nominees, then they would have sent Judge Pickering's nomination to the floor for a vote by the full Senate.

"Second, the actions of the Democratic members of the Committee were clearly orchestrated by liberal special interest groups. It is no coincidence that these groups asked the Committee to demand Judge Pickering's unpublished opinions, then – surprise! – the Committee announces that it will compel Judge Pickering to produce all of his unpublished opinions. I do not recall another nominee who has been subjected to a production demand of such scope – except, of course, for Judge D. Brooks Smith, another Bush nominee whom the groups have targeted.

"Let me read the text of the letter to Judge Smith. It simply says, "Copies of your unpublished opinions, not previously produced to the Committee, have been requested by Members. Please contact our nominations clerk . . . to arrange transmission of the materials. Thank you for your assistance in this matter." That's it. There is no explanation for why the Committee is demanding these unpublished opinions, and there was no consultation with the Republicans about taking the drastic step of demanding these opinions. This letter, incidentally, was sent to Judge Smith after his confirmation hearing – just like with Judge Pickering. There is nothing fair about subjecting nominees to fishing expeditions simply because the liberal special interest groups do not like them. The Committee's treatment of Judge Pickering's nomination was not an example of the Committee doing its job, as one of my colleagues described it last week. Instead, it's an example of special interest groups pulling strings. I am deeply concerned about what this means for the fairness with which future judicial nominees will be treated – especially any Supreme Court justice that President Bush may have the opportunity to nominate.

REV_00256094

"Some of my Democratic colleagues have tried to minimize the effect of their party-line Committee vote to defeat Judge Pickering's nomination by declaring that, last year, they held the first confirmation hearing on a Fifth Circuit judge since 1994. While this is technically true, there is an important fact they leave out: From 1994 to 1997, no Fifth Circuit nominees were pending for the Committee to act on. President Clinton did not nominate another Fifth Circuit judge until 1997, and that nominee did not have home state support due to lack of consultation from the White House. He was not renominated after the end of the 105th Congress. The next Fifth Circuit judge was not nominated until 1999. He, too, lacked home state support due to lack of consultation from the White House. Finally, a third Fifth Circuit nominee was nominated in 1999. So, in reality, only one of President Clinton's Fifth Circuit nominees after 1999 could have possibly moved, and I should say that nominee was not nominated until the seventh year of the Clinton presidency.

"Now, let's compare this record to the present Bush Administration. The Democrats have already killed one of President Bush's Fifth Circuit nominees, Judge Pickering, who enjoys the strong support of both of his home state senators. If they are being guided by precedent, then my Democratic colleagues have no excuse for refusing to move every other Fifth Circuit Bush nominee who has home state support. One such nominee, Justice Priscilla Owen of Texas, has been pending in Committee for over 300 days now without so much as a hearing.

"Which brings me to another point. My Democratic colleagues have argued at length about how fairly they are treating President Bush's judicial nominees, especially his circuit nominees. In fact, last week one of my colleagues said on the floor, "We are trying to accord nominees whose paperwork is complete and whose blue slips are returned both a hearing and a fair up or down vote." This colleague must have forgotten about the eight circuit judges whom President Bush nominated on May 9 of last year and who have been languishing in Committee without so much as a hearing for over 300 days. With one exception, the paperwork on all of these nominees has been complete for months. Each of these nominees has received a rating of well-qualified or qualified from the ABA, which my Democratic colleagues have referred to as the gold standard in evaluating judicial nominees.

"The rest of President Bush's circuit nominees have fared just as poorly. Only 9% of his circuit nominees awaiting a Committee vote have had a hearing thus far. This means that 91% of his circuit nominees, including 8 of his first 11 circuit judges nominated on May 9, have been languishing in Committee for no reason, but that the liberal interest groups don't want them to move.

"The failure of the Committee to act on these circuit nominees is particularly disturbing in light of the vacancy crisis in the circuit courts. The number of vacancies in the circuit courts is dramatically higher than it has been during the first two years of the most recent presidential Administrations. At the end of the first two years of the Bush I Administration, there were only 7 circuit court vacancies. At the end of the first two years of the first term of the Clinton Administration, there were only 15 circuit vacancies. At the end of the first two years of the second term of the Clinton Administration, there were only 14 vacancies. Incidentally, I chaired the Judiciary Committee during this time, and there were fewer vacancies than there were when Democrats controlled the Senate during the first two years of the first term of the Clinton Administration.

"Now, let's look at the present Administration. There are currently 31 vacancies in the circuit courts.

REV_00256095

This is the same exact number of vacancies in the circuit courts that existed when the Democrats took control of the Senate on June 5 of last year. This does not represent progress – it represents stagnation. It is for this reason that I find it more than a little hard to swallow my colleague's arguments that their pace of judicial confirmations is keeping up with the vacancy rate. The numbers simply tell another story: We are making absolutely no progress in addressing the vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary.

"Even if you look beyond the circuit courts to the full judiciary, the numbers are not much better. The end-of-session vacancies during the first two years of Republican control of the Senate during the Clinton Administration never exceeded the vacancies we now face. At the end of 1995, my first year of chairing the Committee, there were 50 vacancies in the federal judiciary. Only 13 of these vacancies were in the circuit courts. At the end of 1996, my second year of chairing the Committee, there were 63 vacancies in the federal judiciary. Only 18 were in the circuit courts. But at the end of last session, there were 94 vacancies in the federal judiciary. Now we have 95 vacancies, which is a dramatic increase from the 67 vacancies that existed at the end of the 106th Congress. As we've seen, 31 of these vacancies are in the circuit courts. What does this mean? It means that the Senate's pace under Democratic control in confirming President Bush's judicial nominees is simply not keeping up with the increasing vacancy rate, not even in "accordance with the precedents and practices of the Committee."

"For anyone who doubts that the vacancy crisis represents a problem, let me point out that the Sixth Circuit is presently functioning at a 50% capacity. Eight of that court's 16 seats are vacant. President Bush has nominated 7 well qualified individuals to fill the vacancies on that court. Two of those nominees, Deborah Cook and Jeffrey Sutton, have been pending since May 9 of last year. They were among those first 11 judges that President Bush nominated. Yet they have languished in Committee without so much as a hearing while the Sixth Circuit functions at 50% capacity. And although the Michigan Senators have blocked hearings for the three Bush nominees from Michigan by refusing to return blue slips, the paperwork on the remaining four nominees is complete. Again, nothing stands between them and a confirmation hearing except my Democratic colleagues.

"Another appellate court that is in trouble is the D.C. Circuit, which is missing one-third of its judges: It has only 8 of its 12 seats filled. President Bush nominated two exceedingly well qualified individuals to fill seats on the D.C. Circuit on May 9 of last year. Those individuals, Miguel Estrada and John Roberts, are among the most well respected appellate lawyers in the country. And I should say that Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to sit on this important court. Democrats talk a lot about diversity, but apparently it's diversity only if the candidates agree with the extreme liberal views of the special interest groups. This troubles me. The Judiciary Committee has not granted them a hearing, much less a vote. If the D.C. Circuit and the Sixth Circuit are any indication, it appears that the Committee is doing what it can to avoid filling seats on the courts that need judges the most.

"Part of the problem is a reluctance by the Committee to move more than one circuit judge per hearing. In fact, I don't believe that the Democrats have moved more than one circuit judge per hearing during the entire time they've had control of the Senate. When I was Chairman, I had ten hearings with more than one circuit nominee on the agenda. In fact, I had hearings with more than one circuit nominee on the agenda in every session in which I was Chairman except for presidential election years. THAT is precedents and practices of the Committee. Let's stop making excuses and confirm judges. If we are going to get serious about filling circuit vacancies, then I encourage my Democratic colleagues to move more than one circuit nominee per hearing.

"One of the more ludicrous charges I've heard is that the Republicans did not confirm any judges while they held the majority in the Senate last year. Let me set the record straight on this. President Bush announced his first eleven judicial nominations on May 9. I scheduled a confirmation hearing on three of those judicial nominees – all circuit court nominees – for May 23. However, some Democratic members of the Committee claimed to need more time to assess the nominees. Out of an abundance of caution, and in the interest of fairness, I agreed to postpone the hearing despite widespread speculation that the Republicans' loss of the majority in the Senate was imminent. As we all know, control of the Senate shifted to the Democrats shortly thereafter, on June 5. So, while the Republicans were ready to hold a hearing on three circuit judges within two weeks of their nomination in May, it took the Democrats until the end of August to hold confirmation hearings on three circuit judges.

REV_00256096

"I've also heard my Democratic colleagues complain that I was unfair because almost 60 Clinton nominees never received a hearing or vote. Well, I have two responses to this charge. First, the Democrats who controlled the Senate during the first Bush Administration left 59 judicial nominees hanging without a hearing or vote at the end of four years. In contrast, only 53 Clinton nominees weren't confirmed over my 6 years as Chairman. Yet my Democratic colleagues claim that I was unfair to Clinton nominees, despite the fact that they left more Bush I nominees unconfirmed in a shorter period of time.

"Second, many of the Clinton nominees who were not confirmed had good reasons for not moving. As I've mentioned, not including withdrawn nominees, there were only 53 Article III judicial nominees who were nominated by President Clinton during my six years as Chairman who did not get confirmed. Of those, 9 were nominated too late in a Congress for the Committee to feasibly act on them or were lacking paperwork. That leaves 44. Seventeen of those lacked home state support, which was often the result of a lack of consultation with home state senators. There was no way to confirm those without completely ignoring the senatorial courtesy that we afford to home state senators in the nominations process. That leaves 27. One nominee was defeated on the Senate floor, which leaves only 26 remaining nominees. Of those 26, some may have had other reasons for not moving that I simply cannot comment on. So in all 6 years that I chaired the Committee while President Clinton was in office, we are really only talking about 26 nominees who were left.

"Now, I heard one of my Democratic colleagues on the floor last week comparing their pace to mine in increments of months – nine months to twelve months, nine months to nine months, three months to three months, and so on. I must admit that I had a tough time following his argument in light of the astronomical vacancy rate that we now face in the federal judiciary. But in terms of fairness, let me set forth what I consider to be the bottom line. President Clinton enjoyed an 85% confirmation rate on the individuals he nominated. A total of 377 Clinton nominees sit on the federal bench today. This number is only 5 short of President Reagan, who holds the all-time record of appointing judges to the bench. When President Bush's judicial confirmations start approaching these numbers, then I may be ready to agree that the Democrats are treating his nominees fairly."

###

REV_00256097

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

President's Judges Plan [4]

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 48
Folder 7

REV_00256098

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress
Terms: governor bush and leahy and limbo and date(geq (10/03/2000) and leq (10/03/2000)) (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

*146 Cong Rec S 9671, **

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Tuesday, October 3, 2000

106th Congress, 2nd Session

146 Cong Rec S 9671

REFERENCE: Vol. 146, No. 121

TITLE: NOMINATION OF JAMES A. TEILBORG, OF ARIZONA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

SPEAKER: Mr. LEAHY. Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. KYL. Mr. INHOFE. Mr. HARKIN. Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. LOTT. Mr. CRAIG. Mr. THURMOND.

BILL NUMBER:
H.R. 4690 ◆ Retrieve Bill Tracking Report
◆ Retrieve full text of bill

TEXT: [*S9671]

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of James A. Teilborg, of Arizona, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Arizona.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I understand that under the prior unanimous consent agreement the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. Hatch; the Senator from Arizona, Mr. Kyl; and I each have 1 hour for the Teilborg nomination, and the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. Harkin, has up to 3 hours, unless time is yielded back, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be able to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Edwards, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

We still have pending without a hearing the nomination of Roger Gregory of Virginia and Judge James Wynn of North Carolina to the Fourth Circuit. Were either of these highly-qualified jurists confirmed by the Senate, we would be finally acting to allow a qualified African American to sit on that Court for the first time. Fifty years has passed since the confirmation of Judge Hastie to the Third Circuit and still there has never been an African-American on the Fourth Circuit in the history of that Circuit. The nomination of Judge James A. Beatty, Jr., was previously sent to us by President Clinton in 1995. That nomination was never considered by the Senate Judiciary Committee or the Senate and was returned to President Clinton without action at the end of 1998. It is time for the Senate to act on a qualified African-American nominee to the Fourth Circuit. It is also time for the Senate to act on the nomination of Kathleen McCree Lewis to be the first African American woman to serve on the Sixth Circuit. President Clinton spoke powerfully about these matters at the NAACP Convention. We should respond not be misunderstanding or mischaracterizing what he said but, instead, by taking action on these well-qualified nominees.

I commend Senators Robb and Warner, along with Representatives Bobby Scott and Jim Clyburn, for speaking out last Wednesday to draw attention to the Senate's failure to act upon the nomination of Roger Gregory to fill an emergency vacancy in the Fourth Circuit. As Senator Robb pointed out, Mr. Gregory has been nominated to fill a vacancy that has existed on the Fourth Circuit for 10 years. While the Court is authorized to have 15 judges, it is operating with only 10 judges today. That means the Court has one-third of its positions vacant. Beth Nolan, the Counsel to the President, recently wrote in the Wall Street Journal:

> T he seat for which Mr. Gregory was nominated has not been filed before, nor allocated to any particular state in the Fourth Circuit. Moreover, Roger Gregory has the strong support of both of his home-state senators (who were indeed consulted prior to nomination). Democratic Sen. Chuck Robb recommended Mr. Gregory to the president and has been working tirelessly on Mr. Gregory's behalf. Republican Sen. John Warner has joined Sen. Robb in requesting that Sen. Hatch give Mr. Gregory a hearing.

It is past time for the Judiciary Committee to consider Mr. Gregory's nomination.

We still have pending before the Committee the nomination of Enrique Moreno to the Fifth Circuit. He is the latest in a succession of outstanding Hispanic nominees by President Clinton to that Court, but he too is not being considered by the Committee or the Senate. Mr. Moreno succeeded to the nomination of Jorge Rangel on which the Senate refused to act last Congress. These are well-qualified nominees who will add to the capabilities and diversity of those courts. In fact, the Chief Judge of the Fifth Circuit declared that a judicial emergency exists on that court, caused by the number of judicial vacancies, the lack of Senate action on pending nominations, and the overwhelming workload.

REV_00256108

I remain vigilant regarding the Senate's treatment of nominees who are women or minorities. I have said that I do not regard the Chairman as a biased person. I have also been outspoken in my concern about the manner in which we are failing to consider qualified minority and women nominees over the last several years. From Margaret Morrow, Margaret McKeown and Sonia Sotomayor, through Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon, and including Judge James Beatty, Jr., Judge James Wynn, Roger Gregory, Enrique Moreno and all the other qualified women and minority nominees who have been delayed and opposed over the last several years, I have spoken out.

The Senate will never remove the blot that occurred last October when the Republican Senators emerged from a Republican Caucus to vote lockstep against Justice Ronnie White to be a Federal District Court Judge in Missouri. At a Missouri Bar Association forum last week, Justice White expressed concern that the rejection of his nominations to a federal judgeship will have a "chilling effect" on the desire of young African American lawyers to seek to enter the judiciary. The Senate took the wrong action last October when the Republican caucus rejected Justice White's nomination.

At our last Executive Business Session in the Judiciary Committee, the Chairman used some of Senator Biden's remarks from a nominations hearing last November to make the point that he is neither racist nor sexist. And I agree. I do not believe that the Chairman is himself for or against a particular nominee based purely on race or gender, though I do understand that the Committee does keep track of such numbers for statistical purposes. But to paraphrase our former Chairman from later on in that Executive Business Session, it would be better for the current Chairman to explain to those of us on this side of the aisle and the public at large why he is not moving on particular nominations. I understand there may be outstanding FBI investigations that he is not at liberty to discuss, but I do not believe any such impediments exist that would prevent the Chairman from telling us why Helene White, Roger Gregory, and Enrique Moreno have not yet had a hearing.

There continue to be multiple vacancies on the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Tenth and District of Columbia Circuits. With 23 current vacancies, our appellate courts have nearly half of the total judicial emergency vacancies in the federal court system. I note that the vacancy rate for our Courts of Appeals is more than 11 percent nationwide. If we were to take into account the additional appellate judgeships included in the Hatch-Leahy Federal Judgeship Act of 2000, a bill that was requested by the Judicial Conference to handle their increased workloads, the vacancy rate would be 16 percent.

Also at our last executive business session, my friend from Utah, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said there is and has been no judicial vacancy crisis. That is a bold statement considering there are 67 current vacancies in courts and emergency situations, including the Fifth Circuit. If we pass the bill that has been requested by the nonpartisan judicial conference, we would have another 7 or more judicial vacancies, so we would have over 150 judicial vacancies.

The chairman went on to say that since 363 senior judges are now serving in the Federal judiciary the true number of vacancies is "less than zero." While it is true that there are 363 senior judges now serving, it is inaccurate to say that the true number of vacancies is less than zero.

I commend the large number of senior judges for coming in to help out and fill in. Some of them are well into their eighties. But that is not the way it should be. Surely, if we didn't have these senior judges, the courts would collapse under the weight of their own caseloads and the extended and extensive vacancies.

What we have is a situation where selfless public servants have made a conscious decision to hold off on the rewards of retiring from a job well done to help administer fair and proper justice in our country. Our senior judges should be thanked for their diligent work and dedication. Still, their service does not mean we have fewer vacancies. Indeed, the Judicial Conference has recommended 70 new judgeships in addition to the already existing 67 vacancies.

Let's not say the only way that can happen is if people, no matter how old they are, say: I will never retire; I will just keep on showing up and do the best I can. It is the lifeblood of our judiciary to have new judges come in.

I regret that the last confirmation hearing for Federal judges held by the Judiciary Committee was in July. In fact, that was the last time the Judiciary Committee reported any nominees to the full Senate. Throughout August,

[*S9675]

September, and now the first week in October, there have been no additional hearings held, or even noticed; no executive business meetings have included any judicial nominees on the agenda.

I mention that because in 1992, the last year of the Bush administration, we had a Republican President and a Democratic majority in the Senate. We held three confirmation hearings in August and September. We continued to work to confirm judges.

REV_00256110

How late did we work, even though we have the so-called Thurmond rule which cuts off judicial nominations after about midyear? Do you know how long the Democrat-controlled Senate was confirming judges for a Republican President? Up to and including the very last day of the session; not up to and including 6 months before the session ended.

I know there is some frustration. Some Senators have objected to Senate committees continuing to meet on other matters while the Senate is in session. That is partly because the matter is so acute with regard to the numerous vacancies in our court of appeals and the qualified women and men who have been nominated and stalled.

The chairman says, and he holds the banner for his party, that Democrats have no grounds to complain. I remind the Senate of the hoops that Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon had to jump through in order to get a vote, including the extraordinary step of overcoming a motion to postpone indefinitely the vote on Marsha Berzon.

So I hope we will continue to meet our responsibility to all nominees--men, women, and minorities. As long as the Senate is in session, I am going to urge action. Highly qualified nominees should not be delayed. The Senate should join with the President to confirm well-qualified, diverse, and fair-minded nominees to fulfill the needs of the Federal courts around the country.

I see my friend from Arizona on the floor. I have spoken somewhat longer than I suggested to him that I would. I apologize for that, but I hope he will take some comfort from the fact that as I said at the beginning of my talk that I would vote for the nominees from his State, including one who has been a long-time friend of his. I am going to be urging Members on this side to do so. I can say with some certitude, all four will be confirmed.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I appreciate those remarks of the distinguished ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. It is probably a good segue for me to try to explain what has been going on here because colleagues who may be watching or people who are not in the Senate may be wondering what all of the discussion has been about when there are four specific nominees who President Clinton has nominated for Federal district judgeships and they are ostensibly being considered by the Senate and I have heard no discussion about the four. So I am going to discuss the four very briefly.

REV_00256111

The problem, as you have heard, is that many on the other side of the aisle are unhappy with the fact that other nominees have not been considered this year. You have heard all the discussion about that. You have heard Senator Hatch on our side explain why that is so. But there has been great displeasure on the other side because, in their view, not all the nominees they would have liked to have considered were considered.

The four nominees who are before us today are the only four the Senate can consider. They are the only nominees who have gone all the way through the process from nomination, ABA clearance, FBI clearance, hearing before the Judiciary Committee, and then the Judiciary Committee having acted upon them to send them to the floor of the Senate. These are the only four on whom the Senate can act. I am pleased that, today, we will have the opportunity to do that.

All four of these nominees were pending in July. The majority leader made a request of the minority to consider the four nominees. That request was denied, however. So these four nominees had to be held over the August recess. Obviously, on our side we would have much preferred that the four confirmations could have occurred because of the need to fill these vacancies for the District in Arizona--which I will refer to in just a moment--but to which Senator Leahy referred. He acknowledges we have a significant need in Arizona to fill these positions. But there was objection on his side to their consideration.

So when we came back in September, the majority leader again asked the minority leader for concurrence to bring these four nominees to the floor for a vote. Again, that was denied by the Democratic side.

People might ask: Why would Democrats be objecting to President Clinton's nominees? The reason has nothing to do with their merits. As Senator Leahy pointed out, undoubtedly all four of these nominees will be confirmed because they are all four very well qualified. The reason has to do with the politics of this Chamber. Because some Democrats were concerned that not all of their people had been yet considered, they were going to hold up nominees they perceived to be important to me and to Senator Fitzgerald from Illinois, the home State of the four nominees here before us.

But the fact is, these people are needed to serve the people of the United States of America. They were nominees of President Clinton. So the bottom line is that it is now time for the nominations to be considered by the full Senate. We need to get over the politics. We need to get on with doing the people's business and confirm these four well-qualified individuals. I am pleased that both the majority and minority have now made that possible and that in a few minutes we will be able to vote for all of these candidates.

The first three candidates should have been discussed this morning. I know they were not. Instead, we had the discussion that you have heard. But those four nominees, as Senator Hatch mentioned, are Michael Reagan from Illinois, about whom you will hear a little more in a moment from Senator Fitzgerald; Mary Murguia, a very well qualified assistant U.S. attorney from Arizona who, by the way, if confirmed, will be the first Latina to serve as a Federal district court judge from Arizona; and the Honorable Susan Bolton, a very distinguished Superior Court judge in Arizona. All three of those candidates I deem to be well qualified. I chaired the hearing. I can certainly attest to the fact that the two from Arizona have the highest qualifications.

REV_00256112

That leaves the fourth who is being considered separately here for reasons I will discuss in just a moment, but he is James Teilborg. Since I think it is appropriate when we are going to vote on somebody to actually have a little discussion about the individual, I am pleased to present a couple of minutes on his background here.

He was born and raised on a farm in southern Colorado and was State President of the Colorado Future Farmers of America. He married his wife, Connie, 37 years ago. They have two sons, Andy and Jay, and three granddaughters.

He and I attended the University of Arizona College of Law beginning in 1964. That is where I first met Jim Teilborg. I have known him ever since, and we have been close friends. So I can attest not only to his qualifications as a fine lawyer but also as a fine individual. He served in active duty U.S. Air Force to attend Navigator School. He is a retired colonel in the United States Air Force Reserve after 31 years in the National Guard and Reserve service. He was a member of the National Guard for 7 years, a navigator on the C-97 and KC-97 aircraft and, by the way, has been 23 years admissions counselor for the U.S. Air Force Academy. I would also note for the entire time I have been with the U.S. Congress, Jim Teilborg has chaired my service academy committee, a huge job of interviewing all the individuals who would like to attend one of our military service academies: interviewing them, making recommendations to me, and then for me to the academies. As a result of his exemplary service, I must say we have a much higher than average rate of acceptance by the service academies--because of Jim Teilborg's fine service.

He was a founder of the law firm of Teilborg, Sanders & Parks, the 12th largest law firm in Arizona. His practice focused on the areas of aviation, professional negligence, product liability, and complex tort litigation.

The Presiding Officer will appreciate, as a pilot himself, that, of course, Jim

[*S9676]

Teilborg is an accomplished pilot as well.

REV_00256113

He is a 33-year veteran trial lawyer. He was President of the Maricopa County Bar Association, and was a member of the board of directors. He was the lawyer representative to the Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference, a distinguished position for a member of the bar, and has served as chairman of the Maricopa County Bar Association Medical/Legal Liaison Committee, and also served as chairman of the Special State Bar Disciplinary Administrative Defense Counsel.

He is a Member of the International Association of Defense Counsel board of directors and was its president in 1981; and, a very prestigious honor, a fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers. This is the pinnacle for anybody who really wants to call himself a trial lawyer. In the latest edition of "The Best Lawyers of America," of course, he is included.

Jim Teilborg is one of those rare individuals who has practiced law for all of this time, made no enemies that I know of, but a lot of friends in the practice of law as a very competent litigator, a fine individual, and one who, as we found when we interviewed people in Arizona about his potential nomination, had unanimous support among judges and lawyers for service on the Federal district court.

I cannot think of anyone who would be more suited for the position because of his background, because of his judicial temperament, and because of his philosophy of always treating people fairly and his love for the law. It is personally a great honor for me and a pleasure to recommend James Teilborg to my colleagues.

That is probably the last you will hear about Jim Teilborg. Nobody is going to argue against him as an individual, I am sure. Of course, none has so far. I am hopeful that the political disagreement we have had over other nominees will not spill over into a negative vote on Jim Teilborg.

There is only one reason he has been set apart from the other nominees, and that is that he happens to be a Republican. Of course, I have supported nearly 97 percent of President Clinton's nominees during the time I have been in the Senate, and I daresay virtually all of them have been Democrats. One cannot base a vote on partisan reasons in this body.

I was very pleased to hear Senator Leahy say he would urge the support for Jim Teilborg, as well as committing that support himself. While we on both sides of the aisle have voted against candidates for reasons having to do with the merits of that individual candidate, I do not know of any time I have seen a colleague vote against a nominee in protest of something someone else had done. That would be wrong. A protest vote having nothing to do with the individual would be wrong.

REV_00256114

If the Senator from Vermont will still stay on the floor one more moment, I will quote him because I want him to know how much I agree with this important statement of his.

He said:

> We should be the conscience of the Nation. On some occasions, we have been, but we tarnish the conscience of this great Nation if we establish the precedents of partisanship and rancor that go against all precedents and set the Senate on a course of meanness and smallness.

The Senator from Vermont was, I think, very accurate not only in what he predicted would be the consequence of the precedent we would set if we acted in that degree of smallness, but also I think expressed the view all of us share that our decisions should be based upon the merits, however we see them--maybe differently--but never voting on an individual because of the actions of someone else, to make a protest about some other point.

I appreciate his comments, and I commend to all of his colleagues the statement he has made here with respect to Jim Teilborg.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. I will be very happy to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. I appreciate what my friend from Arizona said. And he is my friend. It has been my experience on the committee, even on issues that start out appearing to be partisan, that the Senator from Arizona has worked hard to remove that sense of partisanship. He and I have joined together on a number of pieces of legislation. I do not think he would object to the description as a conservative Republican and myself as a liberal Democrat, but we have both been pragmatic Senators in getting some very good pieces of legislation through.

I mention that because he and I may well share a belief that there have been some times this year when it has become too partisan. I hope after the elections, no matter who is elected President and no matter what the numbers are in the House and the Senate, that a number of Senators who have had the experience of working together across the aisle will start off the year trying to find pieces of legislation we can do that will demonstrate to the country there are many Members of good will in both parties who do want what is best for this country. There will be issues, of course, where there are distinct party differences, but there are so many issues where there is far more unity. I hope we can do that.

REV_00256115

I thank the Senator for his kind words. I yield the floor.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I will conclude. Some of the best things we have done have been in a bipartisan way--some of the things Senator Leahy and Senator Hatch have worked on in particular, things that Senator Feinstein and I have worked on in particular. I certainly look forward to getting together with Senator Leahy after the election to see how we begin next year, assuming I am returned to this body.

I conclude with a quick comment about the need to fill this position in Arizona.

In 1999, Congress created nine new Federal district court judgeships--four for Florida, two for Nevada, and three for Arizona. The Nevada positions and three of four in Florida have been confirmed, but none has been confirmed yet for Arizona. That is why this is such an important matter as we conclude our business this year.

These nominees are needed to handle the ever-increasing caseload in Arizona, and here is an illustration of that caseload.

Our criminal felony caseload has increased 60 percent in the last 3 years. The district of Arizona ranks second in total weighted filings for a judge among the Nation's 94 districts, by the way, twice the national average--901 compared to the national average of 472. We are fourth in weighted felony filings per judgeship. Felony filings per judgeship weighted are 236 percent above the national average.

So you can see, Mr. President, why this burgeoning amount of work in Arizona requires that we fill these positions. We have 19 Indian reservations and 21 tribes which produces a steady stream of U.S. jurisdiction cases which are not found in most other States. Because we are on the border, we have a lot of illegal immigration and drug smuggling cases. And Arizona is one of the fastest growing States in terms of population. It is pretty easy to see how a State such as Arizona can get into a position where it has to fill these positions.

I am very pleased that at this point, just before the Senate concludes its business for the year, we are able to fill these three positions in Arizona, as well as the Illinois position. I am delighted my colleague from Vermont will be urging his colleagues on the Democratic side to support all four nominations. I have certainly done the same on our side of the aisle. I think it will send a very good signal of that very kind of bipartisanship Senator Leahy was talking about if all of these nominees receive our unanimous support.

REV_00256116

I reserve the remainder of whatever time is remaining on my side. Mr. President, it is my understanding that any quorum call time will be attributed to both sides equally; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KYL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have to make that request.

Mr. KYL. I ask unanimous consent that any time spent in a quorum call be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KYL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

[*S9677]

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Crapo). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I rise to make some brief comments.

I was listening, while I was chairing the session, to the very distinguished Senator from Vermont talking about how many appointments and how many nominees should be acted upon. He was very passionate in his appeal to just have a vote; let's just vote up or down. He named nominee after nominee and how many days they have been under consideration.

I was tempted to go back and get the history as to some of the problems we are having with this administration and the fact that, yes, I am guilty of putting holds on judicial nominees and doing the same

REV_00256117

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I am pleased that today we are discussing some of the vacancies that exist in the Federal judiciary. There was a discussion this morning about an issue that is near and dear to my heart and important to the folks in North Carolina, which is the vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Senator Robb came down and discussed Judge Gregory's nomination. Chairman Hatch responded. I would like to say a few words about that discussion.

There are 15 authorized judgeships on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. There are presently only 10 active judges on that court. By tradition, my State of North Carolina, which is the largest, most populous State in the Fourth Circuit, is allocated three of those judgeships. Out of those 10 judgeships --presently active judges on the Fourth Circuit--how many come from North Carolina? None.

We are the only State in the nation that is not represented on a Federal circuit court, along with Hawaii. We are the largest State in the circuit. We have the largest population in the circuit, and we don't have a judge representing our State on this court. That has been true since Judge Ervin died in 1999.

The people of North Carolina, who have cases regularly heard in the Fourth Circuit, have no one there representing them. In addition, to the extent the court is regularly interpreting matters of North Carolina law, which it is required to do in diversity cases, there is no judge in this court who is trained in North Carolina law. Now, this Congress recognized some time ago how important it was for States to be represented on their circuit courts of appeal by enacting a law--in fact, requiring that States have a judge on their Federal circuit court of appeals. We have none. As I indicated before, along with Hawaii, we are the only two States in the country that are not represented on our circuit court of appeals.

Now, Chairman Hatch had some discussion this morning about Judge Gregory and his nomination to the Fourth Circuit in the State of Virginia, and the fact that that was a slot traditionally allocated to my State of North Carolina.

My question to Chairman Hatch is: What are we doing about the nomination of Judge Wynn? Judge Wynn is a very well-respected, very moderate, centrist jurist from North Carolina, who has been nominated for over a year from my State to fill a vacancy that is traditionally allocated to North Carolina. There is no question that Judge Wynn would be approved by this thing that, back in 1985, Senator Byrd did when Ronald Reagan was President of the United States.

[*S9672]

But rather than go into that, I will only say this--I don't want to take much time; I want the Senator from Iowa to have his time--we have acted upon President Clinton's nominees. In fact, it is my understanding that he is only five short of having an all-time record of having nominees being confirmed in a period of time.

Even though the Senator from Vermont was quite eloquent in talking about all of the judicial nominees who were left without final action being taken, either to confirm or not confirm, if we quit right now and didn't confirm these four we are discussing today, at the end of President Clinton's term, that would leave a total of 67 vacancies. It is my understanding that 61 is considered to be a full bench.

Let's say 67 vacancies are there. Back when President Bush was President, when he left office at the end of 1992, there were 107 vacancies.

The bottom line there is the Democrat-controlled Senate at that time was able to stop or was stopping more of the nominations than the Republican-controlled Senate is today.

Seeing that the Senator from Iowa has left the Chamber and no one else is asking for time, I will go ahead at this point and proceed to the history behind this.

Back in 1985, when Ronald Reagan was President of the United States and the Senate was controlled by the Democrats, a lot of the conservative appointments--not just judicial nominations but others--by the President were not acted upon by the Democrat-controlled Senate. Consequently, President Reagan did something he should not have done back in 1985. He started making recess appointments, and he made many recess appointments. The majority leader at that time, the very distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Byrd, wrote a letter to President Reagan.

In this letter, he reminded him as to what the senatorial prerogative was in accordance with the Constitution. At that time he said: You have violated the Constitution with these recess appointments, and you have done so to avoid our confirmation or lack of confirmation. Therefore, if you have any more recess appointments, I will put a hold on all nominees, not just judicial nominations but all nominations.

Consequently, after a short period of time, President Reagan wrote a letter back to Senator Byrd and said: You are right; it was a violation of the Constitution. And he recited that the Constitution had a provision for recess appointments only in the cases when the appointment occurs during the time we are in recess and that that was not the case when he made his recess appointments.

Fifteen months ago, when we found out that President Clinton was making excessive recess appointments, I found the old letter that Bob Byrd had sent to President Reagan, and I sent that same letter to President Clinton, saying the same thing: If you continue to do recess appointments, we are going to put holds on all your nominees, except, I said, just judicial nominees. Consequently, President Clinton, after a period of 3 or 4 weeks, wrote a letter back and said that he would agree to the same terms Ronald Reagan had agreed to back in 1985. Then when President Clinton violated his word, I put holds on nominations. This was 15 months ago.

As we all know, there was a vote to override my holds after a few months, and that was successful. However, for all judicial nominations that have not gone through the process since President Clinton did have 17 recess appointments during the August recess, I have renewed that hold on all future judicial nominations.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators and staff, I initially had 3 hours of time on which to speak about the judicial nominees and, more specifically, the holdup that is happening on the Judiciary Committee with regard to the former attorney general of the State of Iowa, Bonnie J. Campbell, who has been nominated for a seat on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

In discussing this with several Senators, I can say that it is now my intention to speak for a few minutes and to yield back the remainder of my time. In discussions with our side, I understand there probably will be just voice votes on all of these nominees.

Just for planning purposes--I know how sometimes I get irritated when I don't really know what is happening when some people have a lot of time--I want Senators to know I am going to speak for a few minutes, yield back my time, and then move to the votes on the nominees.

Again, I want to respond a little bit to what my friend from Utah said this morning, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator Hatch. I am reading from the transcript of this morning's session. Senator Hatch said:

REV_00256119

It had always been my intention for the Judiciary Committee to report Ms. Campbell's nomination. However, events conspired to prevent that from happening.

First, during the August recess, as I have explained, the President determined to recess appoint several executive branch nominees over the express objection of numerous Senators.

He did so notwithstanding his agreement to clear such recess appointments with the relevant Senators....

Second, after their August recess, Democrat Senators determined to place holds on the four nominations we are debating today, even everybody admits--I think everybody admits--that they are important nominations and this arrangement that has been worked out has been fair.

Again, they threatened to shut down the Senate's committee work, going as far as to invoke the 2-hour rule and forcing the postponement of scheduled committee hearings.... For these reasons, Bonnie Campbell's nomination has stalled. Ms. Campbell has only the White House and Senate Democrats to blame for the current situation.

I don't know what the Senator from Utah is talking about. Bonnie Campbell had nothing to do with whether the President made recess appointments or not. And the holds that were placed on the four nominations--they were saying, wait a minute, Bonnie Campbell had her hearing 2 months before some of the nominees that we are voting on today. Three of these nominees that will get their vote today were nominated, got their hearing and were reported out of Committee within one week in July of this year. Bonnie Campbell's hearing was in May.

So we are only saying: Why not take those who had their hearings first? Why take up those who had them later? Bonnie Campbell had her hearing, answered questions; they had more written questions that they sent her, and she responded to those. Yet there again, three of the four judges we are voting on here today went through the first three steps of the process within one week.

Ms. Campbell has only the White House and Senate Democrats to blame for the current situation? What is the Senator from Utah talking about? What is to blame are the pure rank politics of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate Republicans for holding up Bonnie Campbell's nomination and keeping it bottled up in committee.

The Senator from Utah knows full well that this Senator from Iowa had every right to exercise his rights as a Senator on the floor, to bottle up a lot of things on this floor after the August recess. I did not do so because I was led to believe that, by acting in good faith, the Senate Judiciary Committee would act on Bonnie Campbell's nomination.

REV_00256120

Why? Because the Senator from Iowa,

[*S9678]

Mr. Grassley--and if I am not mistaken, he is the second ranking member on the Judiciary Committee--supports Bonnie Campbell and has stated so publicly. So I figured, well, he is second ranking.

Now, Mr. Kyl, the Senator from Arizona, is fourth ranking on the committee, but he gets his nominee through. He was nominated, had a hearing, and was reported out that week. Mr. Kyl gets his nominee through.

Well, I figured if I acted in good faith--and I did so by not doing anything and letting the Judiciary Committee go from one week to the next, one week to the next, and I thought this week they didn't report

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the three nominations en bloc?

The nominations, were confirmed.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise to thank all of those responsible for helping in the steering of the confirmation of these four nominees--Senator Hatch and Senator Leahy.

I also would like to make a quick comment about my colleague, Senator Grassley, who observed earlier that even though I rank fifth on the Judiciary Committee and Senator Grassley ranks second, I was able to secure these nominees; whereas, the nominee very important to Senator Grassley and Senator Harkin has not been considered.

I want to make it clear that seniority had nothing to do with it. Senator Grassley has worked long and hard on behalf of the nominee that Senator Harkin has spoken about, Bonnie Campbell, former attorney general of Iowa.

I worked very hard on behalf of these nominees. But to make it clear, the nominees from Arizona were President Clinton's nominees. I worked with my colleague in the House, Ed Pastor, a Democrat, in helping to ensure that these nominees could be considered in this session of the Congress; that we could have the Senate Judiciary Committee approve the nominations, and send them to the floor for consideration. It was still laid over over the August recess. Notwithstanding all of that, we were able to get it done.

[*S9681]

But in the case of Bonnie Campbell, she is a circuit court nominee. I know Senator Grassley and Senator Harkin have an agreement that they will support each other's nominees when the other party is in power. In this case, the Democratic President makes a nominee, and Senator Harkin is supportive and Senator Grassley is also supportive. He certainly has been supportive.

I want the Record to be clear--I am sure Senator Harkin would concur in this--that Senator Grassley has been a very strong advocate for Bonnie Campbell.

I think the circumstances that permitted us to confirm these other four nominees--one from Illinois and three from Arizona --didn't have anything to do with the seniority on the committee or it wouldn't have been possible for the Arizona judges to have been confirmed by the Senate.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I respond by saying I was not trying to imply one way or the other that seniority had something to do with who gets out of the Judiciary Committee. My main point was that three of the four nominees we voted on today have been pending a very short time. They were nominated in July, their hearing was in July, and they were reported out of Committee in July--all in the same week. And they were brought to the floor today. Bonnie Campbell has been sitting there for 215 days. She had her hearing in May. Yet they won't report her out of the Judiciary Committee.

REV_00256122

This is unfair. It is unfair to her. It is unfair to the women of this country. It is unfair to the court which needs to fill this position. We recognize in Bonnie Campbell a champion, a champion of women, someone who has done an outstanding job in administering the office of violence against women. She is the only one who has held that office since the legislation was passed. The House last week voted 415-3 to reauthorize it. Now we will try to do something in the Senate. I think the women of this country understand the Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee and the Republican-controlled Senate are stopping the Senate from having a vote on Bonnie Campbell for pure political reasons.

I think it is wrong the way they are treating Bonnie Campbell in this nomination process. I will continue to point that out every day that we remain in session. It is unfair to her. It is unfair to the women of this country to have someone so qualified, someone who has done so much to reduce and prevent violence against women, to have the Senate Judiciary Committee bottle up her name and not even permit it to come on the floor for a vote.

I am still hopeful perhaps they will see the light and permit that to happen, although time is running out. I will take every day we are here to talk about it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Grams). The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we have heard much debate today about Federal judges. One would think that President Clinton has fared very poorly in the judicial confirmation process, but this is simply not true. He has done quite well with the cooperation of the Republican-controlled Senate.

During the President's first term, the Senate confirmed nearly one-quarter of the entire Federal Judiciary. After today, the Senate will have confirmed 44 percent or 377 Clinton judges.

It is no secret that while I served as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee during the first six years of the Reagan Administration, I made the confirmation of judges a top priority of the Committee. I am proud of our accomplishments during those years.

Yet, with Republican control of the Congress, President Clinton's success rate is really no different. After today, the Senate will have confirmed only five more Article III judges for President Reagan than it has thus far for President Clinton.

REV_00256123

Today, the vacancy rate is 7.9 percent, and the Clinton Administration has recognized a 7 percent vacancy rate as virtual full employment for the Judiciary. The vacancy rate at the end of the Bush Administration was 11.5 percent, but there was no talk then about a vacancy crisis. At the end of the Bush Administraton, the Congress adjourned without acting on 53 Bush nominations. Today, there are only 38 Clinton nominees pending in Committee.

The Fourth Circuit is a good example of the healthy status of the Judiciary. The court is operating very well and does not need more judges. In fact, today, it is the most efficient circuit. The Fourth Circuit takes less time than any other to decide a case on appeal. The truth is that, due to a lack of cases needing oral argument, the Fourth Circuit has cancelled at least one term of court for each of the past four years, and two terms of court for the past two years.

The Chief Judge of the Fourth Circuit has made clear that additional judges are not needed, and he should know better than us the needs of his court. There is no good reason to add judges to the most efficient circuit in the nation. Given that a circuit judgeship costs about one million dollars per year for the life of the judge, it would be a waste of taxpayer money to do so.

We also should not be misled by the fact that some vacancies are defined as a "judicial emergency." The term is defined so broadly that, with one exception, all current circuit court judgeships that have been vacant for 18 months are considered "emergencies."

The issue of judgeships in the Federal courts is not just about numbers and statistics. Much more is at stake. Each judgeship is a life-time appointment that yields great power but is basically accountable to no one.

The Senate has a Constitutional duty to review each nominee carefully and deliberately. We take this responsibility very seriously in the Judiciary Committee, as we must. We cannot be a rubber stamp for any Administration. The entire Nation loses when we allow judicial activists or judges who are soft on crime to be confirmed to these life-time positions.

Under Senator Hatch's leadership, the Judiciary Committee has taken a fair and reasoned approach to the confirmation process. As a result, the Clinton Administration has done quite well regarding judicial confirmations.
her out, maybe they'll do it next week, or maybe the next week. Well, now, the time has run out and it is clear to me I was being strung along all this time with false promises that the Judiciary Committee would, indeed, act on Bonnie Campbell's nomination.

REV_00256124

So now to say that it is the Senate Democrats who are to blame for the current situation with Bonnie Campbell is utter fabrication, total nonsense. The Senator from Utah knows as well as I do that there is one reason it is being held up, and it is called politics--pure rank politics. Then, again, Senator Hatch says that the reason it has been held up is because President Clinton had some recess appointments, and that we had a hold on these four nominees for a while. Well, why is he singling out one nominee? Why is he targeting Bonnie Campbell? Why is Bonnie Campbell the target? What about all the other judges? Why is he singling her out?

Is it because of her work to prevent domestic violence as the director of the Office of Violence Against Women at the Justice Department? The Senate Republicans have stalled passing the reauthorization of that law just as they have blocked Bonnie Campbell's nomination from getting a vote on the Senate floor.

Bonnie Campbell has done a superb job of focusing on the issue of violence against women, especially domestic violence. The Violence Against Women Act has expired. It expired on the last day of September of this year. This Republican Congress didn't even see fit to take it up and pass it.

So it is no surprise to me that in poll after poll after poll across this country women are saying no to Republican candidates because they see what has been happening here. This Republican Senate is holding up the one person who really knows what violence against women is about, who headed that office and has done a superb job; yet Senate Republicans aren't going to let her come out. How well has she done? Take a look at the House vote on reauthorization. The vote was 415 to 3. Do you really think this bill would have been reauthorized if the person who has headed the office to implement its provisions had done a bad job?

Well, I say to Senate Republicans, you better beware. The women of this country are watching what you do up here on the issues that are important to them. They want the Senate to reauthorize VAWA. They want judges who will enforce that law. Who better to do that than Bonnie Campbell? She is qualified, and no one has come to the Senate floor and said any differently since her hearing.

I can tell you, this Republican Senate that is holding up her nomination and the reauthorization of VAWA will have only themselves to blame if the women of this country vote overwhelmingly against their party in November. It pains me to say this, but I think that is what it has come down to. If they want to play politics with Bonnie Campbell and Violence Against Women, go right ahead, but it will bite them bad. Real bad.

You may think you are only holding up one person, only one judge, saying, well, she was from Iowa, not of any consequence. I say to my Republican friends, you are seriously mistaken. Bonnie Campbell did an outstanding job as attorney general for the State of Iowa. She was well known to women all over this country as a role model and someone they have looked to for leadership, someone who has brought honor to our State, honor to the legal profession, honor to this administration, and honor to what we are about as a nation in trying to provide more equality for women in this country.

I say to my friends on the Republican side, if you think you are playing smart politics by holding up Bonnie Campbell's nomination, I say to you that you are sadly mistaken.

But I guess it has come down to this. I am told that there is no use even talking about it anymore. They are not going to let Bonnie Campbell's nomination be reported out. I don't know about that. I say it is never over until it's over. And perhaps some cooler heads will prevail on the Republican side. They will see that they are only hurting their own cause. They are only hurting themselves and their candidates who are out there running by holding up Bonnie Campbell's nomination.

It is time we have more diversity on the Federal bench. Only 20 percent of the Federal judiciary are women. Of the 148 circuit judges, only 33 are women. It is time we have more--qualified women on the federal bench.

Last year, a report by the Task Force on Judicial Selection of Citizens for Independent Courts--an independent group--verified that the time to confirm female nominees is now significantly longer than that to confirm male nominees. There is a difference that has defied logical explanation. The fact is--it is true--to confirm female nominees takes a lot longer than men.

We have some men who are being voted on today. We have one man being voted on today who was nominated in July. He was passed out the same week. Bonnie Campbell has waited 215 days since she was nominated.

The standard bearer of the Republican Party this year--Gov. Bush of Texas--said there should be a deadline of 60 days from nomination through the process.

Evidently, the Republicans in the Senate and on the Judiciary Committee are not paying much heed to their standard bearer.

I am sorry to have to disagree with Mr. Hatch. But the White House is not to blame for this, and neither are the Senate Democrats.

REV_00256126

Mr. Hatch has an argument with the White House on recess appointments. That is another matter entirely. It has nothing to do with judicial nominees.

Maybe he doesn't like what Mr. Clinton said at a press conference. Maybe Senator Hatch doesn't like a lot of things the President does. But does that give the Senator from Utah the right to hold up a judicial nominee because he doesn't like what the President did on some other matter?

I want to point out again that three out of the four nominees voted on today were nominated, a hearing was held, and they were reported out of the committee in 1 week in July. Yet Bonnie Campbell has been waiting 215 days, and they will not report her out of the committee.

One can only ask again why the Republicans are playing this political charade. I guess they figure, well, if they just hold on, maybe their guy will win and they can move ahead.

But, as I said earlier, I think the Republicans over there ought to be aware of this one. This one is going to bite hard.

Mr. President, I yield whatever time the Senator from Minnesota desires. I yield up to 10 minutes to the Senator from New York, Mr. Schumer, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I came to the floor to support my colleague, the Senator from Iowa, and to speak for a couple of minutes about Bonnie Campbell. I believe Bonnie Campbell would be the second woman to serve on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Dianne Murphy from Minnesota is the first. Bonnie Campbell has done a lot of good work, but most important is her record at the Justice Department in the violence against women office.

I come here to speak about this woman's magnificent work. Bonnie Campbell has probably more than any single individual made the most difference when it came to reducing violence and trying to end some of the violence in families; unfortunately, most of it directed against women and children. About every 13 seconds, a woman is battered in our country. A home should be a safe place. Somewhere between 3 million and 10 million witness this in their homes.

[*S9679]

body if he ever got a hearing and a vote on the floor.

Unfortunately, that has not happened. It is easy to understand why the Clinton administration believed they needed to take some action. That action has turned out to be to nominate Judge Gregory. I have to admit it was somewhat frustrating to me, representing North Carolina, to have Judge Gregory nominated for the slot he was nominated for because it was traditionally allocated to North Carolina. But, I do support Judge Gregory's nomination.

In addition to having no judge from North Carolina being on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, our court does not presently have, nor has it ever had, an African American judge. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has the largest African American population in the country and does not now have, nor has it ever had, an African American judge. Obviously, there is a huge part of our population in the Fourth Circuit that has never been represented on this court. They are entitled to representation by a well-qualified judge.

In fact, Judge Wynn who was nominated over a year ago--from my State that has no judge on the Fourth Circuit--is also an African American judge. I urge Chairman Hatch to grant Judge Wynn a hearing and to push forward his vote on the floor of this Senate where he will be approved.

The bottom line is that Judge Gregory is a well-respected and well-qualified African American lawyer from the State of Virginia who also deserves a hearing, and also deserves a vote in this body this year.

The argument that is made--and Chairman Hatch made it this morning--is we only need 10 judges on the Fourth Circuit, we don't really need the 15 that Congress in fact has authorized. The reason is that the chief judge of that circuit, Judge Wilkinson, says they do not need any more judges, they are operating perfectly efficiently.

I point out several things.

No. 1, the Fourth Circuit issues more one-sentence opinions than any Federal circuit court in the country. Litigants come before it and make their case. Instead of getting a reasoned decision about why they won or lost their case, they get one sentence. What does that tell them about how much attention in fact is being paid to their case?

This same argument was made when there were 13 judges on the court. Now we are down to l0.

Since when do we let the chief judge of the circuit court decide how

REV_00256101

Bonnie Campbell has visited Minnesota. I have seen her speak with very quiet eloquence. I cannot say enough about the magnificent work she has done. As attorney general in Iowa, I think she passed the first anti-stalking law in the State. She is well known in Iowa. She is well known throughout the United States of America. She is a skillful lawyer. She would be a great judge. She is extremely important when it comes to being a voice for families in this country. She has done probably some of the best work that any individual could possibly do in this incredibly important area of reducing violence in this country. There is way too much violence--especially directed at women and children.

I cannot for the life of me understand why we have been waiting almost 7 months or thereabouts for this nomination to move through the Senate.

Minnesota is covered by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. Dianne Murphy is from the State of Minnesota. She was the first woman to serve on this court. She is a great judge.

Bonnie Campbell would be a great judge. We need her on this court. We need a judge who understands the concerns and circumstances of too many women's lives and too many children's lives in this country. We need a judge such as Bonnie Campbell who has such a distinguished background and such a distinguished career. We need a judge on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals like Bonnie Campbell with such a proven record of public service. I can't find anything in her background, I can't find anything in her record, I can't find anything about her which would make her anything other than 100 percent eminently qualified to serve on this court of appeals.

I share in the indignation that my colleague from Iowa has expressed. There is no excuse to hold this nomination for one day longer. I think it is shameful that, in the Senate, really good people who have so much to offer, who could do such good--in this particular case, at the Eighth Circuit of Appeals--find themselves blocked for no good reason.

I heard Senator Harkin say he thought this was going to come back to "bite." I hope it does. It is true; most of the people in the country are not so directly connected to this process of how we do confirmations of judicial appointments. We have had Senator Leahy doing yeoman work, and there are other Senators who have spoken. Senator Leahy provides the leadership. The more people learn about a person of the caliber of Bonnie Campbell--and as a man, I care a lot about how we can reduce this violence in families, how we can reduce the violence in homes--the more people hear about this, the more outraged they will be, and for good reason.

REV_00256128

I know it is asking too much, but I want to see a little bit more fairness. I want to see an end to this blocking of good people who could do good work and could help so much. Bonnie Campbell is a perfect example. We shouldn't be delaying this nomination one day. But we are. I just want to express my support for Bonnie Campbell.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Before I get into the substance of my remarks dealing with honoraria for judges, I echo the words of my colleague from Minnesota, Senator Wellstone, as well as our leader on the Judiciary Committee, Senator Leahy, about the holdup in judges. Senator Leahy has laid it out quite carefully; that is, that we have not appointed as many judges, on a percentage basis, as when Democrats controlled the Senate during the Reagan and Bush years.

I particularly add my voice to those who are asking that Bonnie Campbell be added to the Eighth Circuit.

The reason I rise is not only as a member of the Judiciary Committee, not only as somebody who believes we ought to fill the vacancies in our courts--and I am appreciative that Senator Hatch has worked with me to fill those vacancies in New York. Neither the Second Circuit nor any of the New York district courts have vacancies, and we did manage to fill at least six judgeships this year. I thank the chairman for that. But that doesn't mean the rest of the country should have things unanswered.

I worked with Bonnie Campbell. I was the sponsor in the House of the Violence Against Women Act. It was authored originally by Senator Biden and Senator Boxer, when she was a House Member. She carried it between 1990 and 1992. When she was elected to the Senate, she asked me to take the reins, and we did. We passed the law. As somebody greatly interested in the Violence Against Women Act, of bringing that dirty little secret, the amount of violence in our families, out into the sunlight so we could deal with it, I believed very strongly the right person should be appointed to be in charge of the act.

Bonnie Campbell did a fabulous job on an issue of great concern to all Americans. I think it is just unfair to "reward her" by letting her sit there in limbo when she so deserves and could be such a great addition to the Eighth Circuit. I plead with my friend, the Senate majority leader, my friend, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee--who, as I say, has been fair and good to New York on this issue--to bring the names of all four judges before the Senate, or all the judges who are waiting in the wings--there are more than four--but particularly Bonnie Campbell.

REV_00256129

On an issue related, as well, of debating a number of nominees to be Federal judges, I want to address an issue that affects the entire Federal judiciary: The ban on honoraria. Under current law, as we all know, Federal judges are not allowed to accept honoraria. That is how it should be. The framers of the Constitution designed article III to keep judges outside of politics and above influence. Read the Federalist Papers. One of the great debates was that Federal judges, in article III, achieve life appointment.

There was one reason for it: So they would be unfettered, so they would be uninfluenced; they could make their own decisions, knowing that no sanction could be taken against them for decisions they made, and, just as importantly, so the public would know it.

Because the judiciary has neither the power of the sword, as does the executive, nor the power of the purse, as does Congress, it is essential that the judiciary maintain its power--and it has, thank God--for these 211 years since the Constitution was written, through an untainted reputation for integrity and impartiality. The Federal judiciary has had it. It has frustrated us at times. It frustrated Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1930s. It has frustrated some Members today on issues where we disagree with the majority. There is nothing we can do about it, thank God, because an independent judiciary is vital.

I believe the public, if the surveys I have seen are correct, believes the Federal judiciary is independent--far more, I might say, than State and local judiciaries where there are either elections or appointments of term so that judges believe they have to please either an individual or even the whole electorate to make up their minds.

Nothing could do more to undo the justified reputation so much wanted by the founders and sustained in this Republic as the provision that has been inserted into H.R. 4690 that would allow judges to accept honoraria. The repeal of the ban would create a significant loophole in the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 which bars high-ranking Federal officials of all branches of Government from receiving speaking fees for 11 years. This prohibition has limited real and perceived corruption. It has limited real corruption and, probably much more widespread, perceived corruption. The conflicts of interest among Members of Congress, Federal judges, and senior members of the executive branch have been limited, as well.

I, for one, opposed honoraria for Members of Congress. I don't believe in a standard for the judges and a different one for Members. While honoraria were allowed in the Congress for most of the years I served in the House, I refused to take them. I remember my first speech, right after I was elected. A leading financial institution in New York asked me to speak. I had just been appointed to the Banking Committee, which regulated a lot of their activities. After the speech, they handed me a check. I was sort of surprised; it sort of knocked my socks off. I looked at the check. I said: This is wrong; this is not a check for the "Reelect Schumer Committee"--which I would have believed would have been untoward to give me right after a speech anyway--but this is for me. They said: Yes, that is your honorarium.

REV_00256130

[*S9680]

I felt bad about it, returned the check, and vowed not to take any honoraria in the future.

It is even more important for judges because, as I said, they are not sanctioned to election; they are not supposed to be sanctioned to the whims of either the people or of special interest groups. It would simply lower the standard for the very officials for whom standards should be the highest.

Thousands of U.S. citizens go before Federal judges every year and expect impartial justice. That is why judges have, as I mentioned, life appointments. That is why the rules so assiduously guard against even the appearance of impropriety. And that is why we spend so much time debating the appointment of these judges. We know once they are appointed, that is it; they are in for life.

Lifting the ban will only leave litigants wondering whether the integrity of the judges has been undermined by speaking fees from groups that have a stake, or may have a stake, in the case before them.

The Federal judiciary, it is said, is underpaid. If you believe it, raise the pay; budget the money. But don't, please, allow judges to moonlight as talking heads.

That demeans our independent Federal judiciary. To simply give them leave to forage for speaking engagements is nothing less than an abdication of our responsibility. Moreover, exempting judges from the honorarium ban will give the biggest benefit to those who are in high demand for speaking engagements--likely the most famous, the most high ranking. Presumably inadequate compensation is a problem for all Federal judges, not just those who can garner the largest fees or even who are the most eloquent. We don't hire our judges, we don't appoint our judges, on the basis of eloquence.

Additionally, if judges are underpaid, then they may be more susceptible to influence from outside income--even more reason to maintain the honorarium ban.

REV_00256131

In conclusion, the issue boils down to one simple, simple nugget: The faith of the people in their government. We have a great Republic. The more I am on Earth, the more I believe that the Founding Fathers were the greatest collection of practical geniuses history has ever known and the more I believe that our country is, as they put it, a noble experiment. It was when it started, and, God bless America, it still is today.

Honoraria for judges strike a dagger right in the heart of what the Founding Fathers wanted--a totally independent judiciary, perceived as independent as well as actually being independent. Inserting this nefarious provision into the thick of an appropriations bill in the dark of night ruins that image. Unfortunately, the sneaky addition of this provision matches the substantive effect of it. It will only enhance the public's perception that those in government should not be trusted.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senators from Iowa and Vermont are ready to yield back their time; is that correct?

Mr. REID. Yes. On behalf of the Democrats who have been allocated time, time is yielded back.

Mr. LOTT. With that in mind, we also yield back all our time on the majority side.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the nomination of James Teilborg.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

REV_00256132

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOTT. This vote will occur momentarily. However, for just a minute, I will suggest the absence of a quorum, and we will be ready to proceed almost immediately. I want Senators to know the vote is about to begin.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, we are ready for the recorded vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of James A. Teilborg, of Arizona, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Arizona? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Gregg) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from California (Mrs. Feinstein), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Lieberman), and the Senator from Arkansas (Mrs. Lincoln) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Grams). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced--yeas 95, nays 0, as follows:

REV_00256133

Rollcall Vote No. 263 Leg.

YEAS--95

Abraham
Akaka
Allard
Ashcroft
Baucus
Bayh
Bennett
Biden
Bingaman
Bond
Boxer
Breaux
Brownback
Bryan
Bunning
Burns
Byrd
Campbell
Chafee, L.
Cleland
Cochran
Collins
Conrad
Craig
Crapo
Daschle
DeWine
Dodd
Domenici
Dorgan
Durbin
Edwards
Enzi
Feingold
Fitzgerald
Frist
Gorton
Graham
Gramm
Grams
Grassley
Hagel
Harkin
Hatch
Helms
Hollings
Hutchinson
Hutchison
Inhofe
Inouye

REV_00256134

Jeffords
Johnson
Kerrey
Kerry
Kohl
Kyl
Landrieu
Lautenberg
Leahy
Levin
Lott
Lugar
Mack McCain
McConnell
Mikulski Miller
Moynihan
Murkowski
Murray
Nickles
Reed
Reid
Robb
Roberts
Rockefeller
Roth
Santorum
Sarbanes
Schumer
Sessions
Shelby
Smith (NH)
Smith (OR)
Snowe
Specter
Stevens
Thomas
Thompson
Thurmond
Torricelli
Voinovich
Warner
Wellstone
Wyden

NOT VOTING--5

Feinstein
Gregg
Kennedy
Lieberman
Lincoln

SUBJECT: JUDGES (91%); AFRICAN AMERICANS (78%); APPROVALS (78%);

REV_00256135

LOAD-DATE: 10-04-2000

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress ⓘ
Terms: governor bush and leahy and limbo and date(geq (10/03/2000) and leq (10/03/2000)) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 5:24 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

many judges go on the court? That is a function we in Congress have responsibility for--not him.

You can certainly make an argument that this is a partisan decision that the chief judge has made--that he likes the present composition of the court. He was a Republican-nominated judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent for another 3 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield another 3 minutes without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, here we have the chief judge, who is a Republican-nominated judge, and a court that now has a majority of Republican judges. You can certainly make the argument that he likes the composition of the court the way it is; he never wants that to be changed.

That is so fundamentally wrong and so fundamentally different from the way our Constitution provides. We should be nominating judges. Whether it is a Democratic or a Republican administration, it shouldn't make any difference in nominating well-qualified judges. This body should act on the qualification of those men and women to serve on the court, not based upon the Republican or Democratic composition of the court. It is just that simple. This should be totally nonpartisan.

My State has no one representing them on the Fourth Circuit. There is not, nor has there ever been, an African American judge on this court.

The simple bottom line is that we have the responsibility of deciding how many judges should be authorized for that court. We have made that decision--15. It is now down to 10. Of those 10, North Carolina has none. The people of North Carolina are entitled to be represented on this court.

In addition to that, we should deal with the issue that there has never been an African American judge on this court.

REV_00256102

We presently have pending the nomination of two well-respected and very well qualified African American jurists.

This is what I would say to the Chairman Hatch. Let us have a hearing on Judge Wynn. Let Judge Wynn have a vote on the floor of this Senate, and let the people of North Carolina have what, by law enacted by this body, they are entitled to, which is a judge representing them on their Federal court of appeals so that when my people go to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to have their case heard, they have at least one judge representing them on that court. Aren't they entitled to that?

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for his comments. Senator Edwards has been a friend since he came to this body. I have, at the risk of embarrassing him, stated on a number of occasions on this floor that the Senate was enhanced by his presence here. As a lawyer, I must say that having him here because of his own experience as one of the most outstanding and most recognized trial lawyers in the country, to say nothing about his own State. I think Senators on both sides of the aisle should listen to what he said.

He is not a Senator who speaks in the abstract and who simply reads a statement on this. This is a Senator who has spent time in the courts of his State and of the region. He has had active practice in both State courts and Federal courts. He understands the judicial system.

He has argued cases at all levels. He has worked with lawyers who have been on his side of an issue and opposed to him. He knows, as does any lawyer who practices law, that no matter how much you might try a case at the trial level, at some point, especially if the stakes are high, that case is going to go up on appeal. It is going to go up on appeal whether you are the plaintiff or the defendant. Whoever loses that case, if it is of significance, will take it up on appeal.

I recall the statements made in court when I was trying cases. The judge in chambers would say: OK, we will take it to the jury and let justice be done. Usually the person who had the weaker case said: If that is the case, I will appeal, if justice is done.

But the fact of matter is cases become more and more complex and more and more significant to the litigants and to the issues of law. They go up on appeal, and you ought to have a good appellate court.

I commend the Senator for what he has said. I hope we will listen to what is needed in that appellate court.

REV_00256103

We should also note, I suggest, that there is going to be a significant debate tonight in Boston between the two candidates of our two great parties--the Republican and Democratic Parties. Both parties have nominated those we consider to be our best choices. Obviously, I strongly support my friend of over 20 years, Al Gore. But I also know that the Republican Party has nominated a very distinguished Governor, George W. Bush.

4.

I mention this because Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech awhile back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo.

Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no--not vote maybe.

When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting "maybe" but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this. They have to put their life on hold. They do not know what is going to happen: Are they going to be confirmed, or not? It is not like when any one of us runs for election; we know that on a certain day the election occurs. We either win or we lose. But we know that on that Tuesday, we are going to know our fate. We won or we lost.

[*S9673]

These people come here and they never know what may happen. They don't know whether they will have a hearing. And if they have a hearing, they don't know if there will be a vote in committee. And if there is a vote in committee, they don't know whether they will come on the floor. And if they come on the floor, they don't know if they will have a vote because one person hiding in the Cloakroom will say: Don't allow it to come to a vote yet. So they may have 99 Senators voting for them but somebody mysteriously in the background says "Don't vote," and they don't vote.

Helene White of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has been pending for 1,360 days. Governor Bush said we ought to have a vote up or down within 60 days. Let's have a vote on Helene White. She has been waiting not 60 days, not 600 days, but 1,360 days.

Kathleen McCree Lewis, who has been nominated for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, an outstanding African American woman, who has one of highest ratings of anybody we have ever seen come before the Senate, has been waiting for 370 days. Not the 60 days we talked about, but more than six times the 60 days. Bonnie Campbell, for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, has been spending for more than 215 days.

REV_00256104

We are debating bringing up the Violence Against Women Act which has been stalled. The Violence Against Women Act has expired. Distinguished Senators on both sides of the aisle are working to bring it up and we cannot bring it up for a vote.

I see the distinguished Senator from Delaware and the distinguished Senator from Kansas, both of whom support it on the floor, and we cannot get that up for a vote.

We also can't get Bonnie Campbell up, even though she is the Director of the Violence Against Women Office. She supported, worked for and administered the Violence Against Women Act, an act that has seen a dramatic decrease in violence against women.

We ought to be standing and applauding Ms. Campbell. She is somebody who shows by her own experience that she can do the things necessary to bring down this scourge of violence against women in our country. Now that she has gone through the vetting process, and found out that she is one of the most qualified people to be a judge of anyone confirmed in the last 20 years, Republican or Democrat, we ought to at least let her have a vote instead of holding her in limbo.

Elena Kagan for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has been pending for more than 480 days without a vote; Lynette Norton, for the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, has been pending for more than 890 days; Patricia Coan, for the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, has been pending for more than 500 days; Dolly Gee, for the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California has been pending for more than 495 days; Rhonda C. Fields, for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, has been pending for 325 days; Linda Riegle, for the U.S. District Court of Nevada, has been pending for more than 165 days.

Let them have a vote. These women are outstanding. They have demonstrated more than most people who get confirmed in this body, Republican or Democrat, how well qualified they are. At least let them have a vote. If people want to vote against them, vote against them.

I will state for the record that I will vote for every one of them. In checking with our side of the aisle, every single Democrat Senator will vote for every one of these women.

REV_00256105

President Clinton, in remarks before the Michigan Bar Association, recently spoke about the Senate's failure to act upon his judicial nominees, noting his nominees have received more top American Bar Association ratings than those of any President in 40 years. President Clinton, to his credit, has nominated people who have received higher ratings than any President, Democrat or Republican, in 40 years and they still get held up. He said:

> These people are highly qualified, which leads to only one conclusion, that the appointments process has been politicized in the hope of getting appointees ultimately to the bench who will be more political. That is wrong. It is a denial of justice.

President Clinton is right. We should move forward with these nominees. Let them have a vote. Don't do this in the dark of the night holding people up.

We are going to have four nominees, three from Arizona which has a desperate situation, where they need Federal judges. My friend from Arizona, Senator Kyl, has pointed out, quite rightly, that cases cannot be heard, several cases cannot be heard. He has had experiences as a civil lawyer. He knows how difficult that is.

I say as a former prosecutor, when that happens, the criminal cases can't be heard because you don't have enough people on the bench. When that happens, the prosecutor has to start plea bargaining down. He or she has to either get a lighter sentence or has to start dropping charges all over the place because they know they can't get a trial because the judges aren't there.

If we are going to be tough on law and order, we have to have the judges there. We cannot just say we are against crime. I am willing to concede that all 100 of us are against crime. But if we are going to fight crime, we have to have the men and women there to do it: the prosecutors, the defense attorneys, and the judges.

If we will move those judges through, I will vote for every one of them. But I also point out that they can move through very rapidly, all the judges from the time they were nominated, to the hearings, to the floor. A lot of the other judges discussed today are judicial nominees who have waited and waited and waited and waited and cannot get a vote.

It is not too late in the session to move on these nominations. We know that we can make quick progress when we want to do so. The group of nominees being considered tonight include nominations received on a Friday, who had a hearing the next Wednesday and were reported that Thursday, all within a week. In addition, there is the example of a hearing held last month by the Government Affairs Committee on two

REV_00256106

District of Columbia Superior Court judges, one who was nominated on May 1 and the other who was nominated on June 26. Another example of the ability of the Senate to act is the September 8 confirmation of James E. Baker to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. In addition, there is the examples of Timothy Lewis who was confirmed in waning days of the 1992 session, the last year of a Republican presidential term with a Democratic majority in the Senate. Judge Lewis was confirmed to the Third Circuit on October 8, having only been nominated on September 17 of that year.

Of course, the Republican candidate for the presidency has said that nominations should be acted upon within 60 days. Of the 42 judicial nominations currently pending, 37 have been pending from 60 days to 4 years without final action.

Let us compare the lack of action this year to what a Democratic majority in the Senate accomplished in 1992 during the last year of a Republican presidential term. The Senate confirmed 11 Court of Appeals nominees during that Republican President's last year in office and a total of 66 judges for that year. This year the Senate is will not reach anywhere near 66 confirmations, not 60, not 50, not even 40. In 1992, the Committee held 15 hearings--twice as many as this Committee has found time to hold this year. In the last 10 weeks of the 1992 session, the Committee held four hearings and all of the nominees who had hearings then were confirmed before adjournment. In the last 10 weeks of the 1992 session, we confirmed 32 judicial nominations. In the last 10 weeks of this year we will be holding no hearings and confirming only four District Court nominees.

We still have pending without a hearing qualified nominees like Judge Helene White of Michigan. She has been held hostage for over 45 months without a hearing. She is the record holder for a judicial nominee who has had to wait the longest for a hearing and her wait continues without explanation to this day.

We still have pending before the Committee, the nomination of Bonnie Campbell to the Eighth Circuit. Ms Campbell had her hearing last May, but the Committee refuses to consider her nomination, vote her up or vote her down. Instead, there is the equivalent of an anonymous and unexplained secret hold. Bonnie Campbell is a distinguished lawyer, public servant and law enforcement officer. She was the Attorney General for the State of Iowa and the Director of the Violence Against Women Office at the United States Department of Justice. And she enjoys the support of both of her home State Senators, Senator Harkin and Senator Grassley. I understand and share Senator Harkin's frustration and believe that the Senate's failure to act on this highly qualified nominee is without justification.

[*S9674]

REV_00256107

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress ⓘ
Terms: governor bush and leahy and date(geq (10/11/2000) and leq (10/11/2000)) (Edit Search)

*146 Cong Rec S 10164, **

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

Wednesday, October 11, 2000

106th Congress, 2nd Session

146 Cong Rec S 10164

REFERENCE: Vol. 146, No. 126

TITLE: TRAFFICKING VICTIMS PROTECTION ACT OF 2000--CONFERENCE REPORT

SPEAKER: Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. LEAHY. Mr. KENNEDY. Mrs. BOXER. Mrs. MURRAY. Ms. MIKULSKI. Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. BINGAMAN.

BILL NUMBER:
H.R. 3244 ♦ Retrieve Bill Tracking Report
♦ Retrieve full text of bill

TEXT: [*S10164]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now proceed to the conference report accompanying H.R. 3244.

The clerk will report the conference report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate on the bill, H.R. 3244, an act to combat trafficking of persons, especially into the sex trade, slavery, and slavery-like conditions, in the United States and countries around the world through prevention, through prosecution and enforcement against traffickers, and through protection and assistance to victims of trafficking, having met, have agreed that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, and the Senate agree to the same, signed by a majority of the conferees on the part of both Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

REV_00256137

countries rare and punishment of traffickers almost nonexistent. Without work or much hope of a future at home, an eager teenager will find it hard to believe that the promise of a job in Italy, Turkey or Israel is almost certain to be worthless.

"I answered an ad to be a waitress," said Tamara, 19, a Ukrainian prostitute in a massage parlor near Tel Aviv's old Central Bus Station, a Russian-language ghetto for the cheapest brothels. "I'm not sure I would go back now if I could. What would I do there, stand on a bread line or work in a factory for no wages?"

Tamara, like all other such women interviewed for this article, asked that her full name not be published. She has classic Slavic features, with long blond hair and deep green eyes. She turned several potential customers away so she could speak at length with a reporter. She was willing to talk as along as her boss was out. She said she was not watched closely while she remained within the garish confines of the "health club."

"I didn't plan to do this," she said, looking sourly at the rich red walls and leopard prints around her. "They took my passport, so I don't have much choice. But they do give me money. And believe me, it's better than anything I could ever get at home."

* * * * *

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, Irina's story is told all too often and is reenacted all too often around the world today. Our Government estimates that between 600,000 and 2 million women are trafficked each year beyond international borders. They are trafficked for the purpose of sexual prostitution by organized crime units and groups that are aggressively out making money off the trafficking of human flesh. It is wrong. This bill seeks to deal with that wrong and that tragedy that has occurred and is occurring around the world today.

This is significant human rights legislation that this body is going to pass. I hope, predict, and pray that it will pass today. It is significant human rights legislation for those poor young victims who are trafficked and who are caught sometimes with the view that, "I am just stupid, I got caught in this," but who live this horrible, hellish life they have been put into and trafficked into and can't find their way out.

The conference report is entitled "The Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000." As I mentioned previously, it passed the House of Representatives on Friday, October 6, by a vote of 371-1.

REV_00256146

The Senate will vote on this conference report today, with the lead underlying bill being the Brownback-Wellstone anti-trafficking legislation. Senator Wellstone and I have been working for the last year on this legislation, which is a companion to the Smith-Gejdenson bill in the House known as the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000.

I want to thank and recognize my staff, Sharon Payt and Karen Knutson, two people who have worked tirelessly and endlessly to deal with this particular issue.

Our anti-trafficking bill is the first complete legislation to address the growing practice of international "trafficking" worldwide. This is one of the largest manifestations of modern-day slavery internationally. Notably, this legislation is the most significant human rights bill of the 106th Congress, if passed today, as hoped for. This is also the largest anti-slavery bill that the United States has adopted since 1865 and the demise of slavery at the end of the Civil War. Therefore, I greatly anticipate this vote today in the Senate on this legislation.

Senator Wellstone's and my trafficking bill, which passed in the Senate on July 27 of this year, was conferenced to reconcile the differences with the House bill, and the conference report was filed on October 5, Thursday, of last week. The final conference package contains four additional pieces of legislation which are substantially appropriate to our bill. Most significant among those bill amendments is the Violence Against Women Act, known as VAWA, which provides relief and assistance to those who suffer domestic violence in America. Thus, the additional four bills included in this conference report include the Violence Against Women Act. This is a reauthorization of the initial bill which was passed in 1994 as part of the Omnibus Crime Control Act; this legislation renews several grant programs to assist law enforcement officers, social service providers, and others dealing with sexual crime and domestic violence.

Also in this package is Aimee's law, which provides for interstate compensation for the costs of incarceration of early-release sex offenders who commit another sex crime in a second State. It is based on the circumstances of what happened in a Pennsylvania case where a murderer was released early out of a Nevada prison, went to Pennsylvania, and kidnapped and brutally raped and murdered a young girl there who was in the very flower of life and coming forth. This law is built upon that terrible crime that took place in Pennsylvania.

Also in this package is the 21st Amendment Enforcement Act, which allows for State attorneys general to enforce their State alcohol control laws in Federal court, including laws prohibiting sales to minors, which strengthens the grant of authority to States under the 21st amendment to the Constitution; and the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act, which authorizes the payment of foreign seized assets to American victims of international terrorism.

REV_00256147

The last step to adopting this legislative package in Congress rests with the Senate today.

Before I continue describing this urgently needed legislation, I would like to take a few moments to thank some key people who have brought us to this point today. Some of them are in the Galleries as I speak. They are people of heart, courage, and intelligence whose advocacy made a way for this bill--whose dedication pried open the doors and let the light shine into this darkness. Among them is Senator Wellstone who started this work long before I came on board. He and his wife, most notably, 3 years ago started advocating on this particular issue. I know he stands firmly and strongly today as one of the principal advocates to set this aside, and he brought this forward and seeks to go forward from here to help those who are victims of these crimes.

I also thank Congressmen Chris Smith and Sam Gejdenson. I would also like to thank Gary Haugen of the International Justice Mission and Dr. Laura Lederter of the Protect Project at Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Laura Lederter of the Protect Project at Johns Hopkins University is the foremost authority in the country on tracking from where and to where these victims are trafficked.

I have up here one of the maps she introduced of women who have been trafficked out of Russia and Ukraine with the fall of the Soviet Union. With the increased travel out of there to freedom, we have seen a huge amount of trafficking also taking place. These are the routes out of Russia and Ukraine and where they go--to Canada, to the United States, to Mexico, to Europe, to Africa and Asia, to Australia and New Zealand. This is the work of her project.

I also want to thank Michael Horowitz of the Hudson Institute, and Gloria Steinem, whom I am not noted to thank, is part of this coalition; Chuck Colson, Jessica Neuworth, William Bennett, the National Association of Evangelicals, the Southern Baptist Convention, among others I'm sure I'm forgetting. I would also like to thank the staff for both the Senate and House, including Joseph Rees, David Abramowitz, Charlotte Oldham-Moore, Jill Hickson, Mark Lagon, and my staff Karen Knutson and Sharon Payt. Thank you all. We are here today at final passage because of all your efforts.

This legislation is our best opportunity to challenge the largest manifestation of slavery worldwide, known as "trafficking." This practice of trafficking involves the coercive transportation of persons into slavery-like conditions, primarily involving forced prostitution, among other forms of slavery-like conditions.

REV_00256148

Trafficking is the new slavery of the world. These victims are routinely forced against their will into the sex trade, transported across international borders, and left defenseless in a foreign country. This bill also addresses the insidious practice known as "debt bondage," wherein a person can be enslaved to the money lender for an entire lifetime because of a $50 debt taken by the family for an emergency. This is a common practice in countries throughout the South Asian region.

[*S10167]

People of conscience have fought against the different manifestations of slavery for centuries. This anti-slavery legislation is in the tradition of William Wilberforce and Amy Carmichael of England, who were ardent abolitionists against different forms of slavery. Amy Carmichael was a British missionary to India at the turn of last century, in the early 1900's. Upon arrival, she was mortified to discover the routine practice of forced temple prostitution. This was and continues to be a practice wherein young girls, from age six onward, are dedicated to the local temple, and are then forced into prostitution against their will to generate income. Upon this morbid discovery, Amy Carmichael began to physically steal the young girls away from this incredibly degrading form of slavery, hiding the girls to escape the inevitable backlash of violence. Eventually, the government outlawed this practice of forced temple prostitution, as a result of her efforts. However, it bears noting that this terrible practice continues today, in a lesser degree, in rural villages throughout South Asia, including India.

This bill challenges the myriad forms of slavery including sex trafficking, temple prostitution, and debt bondage, among other forms.

This new phenomenon of sex trafficking is growing exponentially. Some report that it is, at least, $7 billion per year illicit trade, exceeded only by the international drug and arms trade. Its victims are enslaved into a devastating brutality against their will, with no hope for release or justice, while its perpetrators build criminal empires on this suffering with impunity. Our legislation will begin to challenge these injustices.

This is the new slavery of the world, Dr. Kevin Bales of the University of Surrey in England recently testified for us before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He astutely observed that the new slavery has a peculiar quality which does not look like the old forms associated with lifetime bondage as a chattel slave, but it is slavery nonetheless.

Sex trafficking is among the most common forms of the new slavery and typically entails shorter periods of bondage, usually asking for 5 to 6 years, or whenever something like AIDS or tuberculosis is contracted, after which the victim is thrown out on the street, broken, without community or resources, left to die. I have met with people caught in that condition.

REV_00256149

Women and children are routinely forced against their will. Sex traffickers favor girls aging in the range of 10 to 13.

I have a number of other things I could say, but my time is limited. I know a number of people want to speak on this bill. I ask to reserve the remainder of my time. I will turn the floor over to Senator Wellstone.

I ask unanimous consent on any quorum calls that might be called during the discussion of this conference report, that time be allotted and assessed against all allocated time to speak under the bill, including myself and Senator Wellstone, along with Senator Biden, Senator Hatch, and Senator Leahy, who have all been allocated time. I ask the quorum calls be equally divided between those who have time under the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I finally note to others who seek to speak on this bill, I invite Members to come to the floor to make comments. At the conclusion of our presentation, a vote will occur on this conference report.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I thank my colleague, Senator Brownback, for his very gracious remarks. It has been an honor to work with him on this legislation. I think a very strong friendship has come out of this effort. There are some times when we can work and reach out and have the most interesting and I hope important coalition. Working with Senator Brownback, Sharon Payt, and Karen Knutson has been the best legislative work. At the end of the day, I believe today we will pass this legislation. Members can feel they have done something really good. They can make a positive difference. I thank Senator Brownback for his great leadership and his great work for each step along the way. In all the negotiations, all the work that has been done, the Senator has been there. I thank the Senator.

REV_00256150

I want to talk about Charlotte Oldham-Moore and Jill Hickson, who have worked with me and our staff, who have done a great job. There are other people who will be on the floor who put this together--especially the Violence Against Women Act--Senator Leahy, Senator Biden, Senator Hatch, and others, and Sam Gejdenson and Chris Smith have been phenomenal. I thank them for their yeoman work on the House side. I also thank Frank Loy and Harold Koh at the State Department for their work.

The trafficking of human beings for forced prostitution and sweatshop labor is a rapidly growing human rights abuse. It is one of the greatest aspects of the globalization of the world economy. The Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000 is the first piece of legislation to address the widespread practice of the trafficking of men, women, and children into sweatshop labor and sexual bondage.

My wife Sheila urged me to do something about this problem several years ago. Consequently, she and I spent time with women trafficked from the Ukraine to work in brothels in Western Europe and the United States. They told us after the breakup of the Soviet Union and the ascendancy of the mob, trafficking in women and girls became a booming industry that destroyed the lives of the youngest and most vulnerable in their home countries.

We began work on the bill then, and 3 years later, after extraordinary bipartisan effort, tremendous leadership from Senators Brownback and Leahy, and Sam Gejdenson and Chris Smith, and others, it passed the House with a vote of 371-1. Now it is poised to pass the Senate.

Our Government estimates that 2 million people are trafficked each year. Of those, 700,000 women and children, primarily young girls, are trafficked from poor countries to rich countries and sold into slavery, raped, locked up, physically and psychologically abused, with food and health care withheld. Of those, as many as 50,000 immigrants are brought into the United States each year, and they wind up trapped in brothels, sweatshops, and other types of forced labor, abused and too fearful to seek help.

Traffickers exploit the unequal status of women and girls, including harmful stereotypes of women as property and sexual objects to be bought and sold. Traffickers have also taken advantage of the demand in our country and others for cheap, unprotected labor. For the traffickers, the sale of human beings is a highly profitable, low-risk enterprise as these women are viewed as expendable and reusable commodities.

Overall, profit in the trade can be staggering. It is estimated that the size of this business is $7 billion annually, only surpassed by that of the illegal arms trade. Trafficking has become a major source of new income for criminal rings. It is coldly observed that drugs are sold once while a woman or a child can be sold 10 or 20 times a day.

In the United States, Thai traffickers who incarcerated Thai women and men in sweatshops in El Monte, CA, are estimated to have made $8 million in 6 years. Further, Thai traffickers who enslaved Thai women in a New York brothel made about $1.5 million over 1 year and 3 months.

Last year, Albanian women were kidnapped from Kosovo refugee camps and trafficked to work in brothels in Turkey and Europe. Closer to home, organized crime has trafficked Russian and Ukranian women into sexually exploitive work in dozens of cities in the United States of America. Just next door, law enforcement authorities suspected mafia involvement in the gruesome murder of a Russian woman trafficked to Maryland.

All of these cases reflect a new condition: Women whose lives have been disrupted by civil wars or fundamental changes in political geography, such as the disintegration of the Soviet Union or the violence in the Balkans, have fallen prey to traffickers.

Seeking financial security, many innocent persons are lured by traffickers' false promises of a better life and lucrative jobs abroad. Seeking this better life, they are lured by local advertisements for good jobs in foreign countries at wages they could never imagine at home. However, when they arrive, these victims are often stripped of their passports, held against their will, some in slave-like conditions, in the year 2000.

[*S10168]

Rape, intimidation, and violence are commonly employed by traffickers to control their victims and to prevent them from seeking help. Through physical isolation and psychological trauma, traffickers and brothel owners imprison women in a world of economic and sexual exploitation that imposes a constant threat of arrest and deportation, as well as violent reprisals by the traffickers themselves to whom the women must pay off ever-growing debts. That is the way this works.

Many brothel owners actually prefer foreign women, women who are far from help and from home, who do not speak the language, precisely because of the ease of controlling them. Most of these women never imagined they would enter such a hellish world, having traveled abroad to find better jobs or to see the world.

Many in their naivete believe nothing bad can happen to them in the rich and comfortable countries such as Switzerland or Germany or the United States. Others are less naive, but they are desperate for money and opportunity. But they are no less hurt by the trafficker's brutal grip.

REV_00256152

Trafficking rings are often run by criminals operating through nominally reputable agencies. In some cases overseas, police and immigration officials of other nations participate and benefit from the trafficking. Lack of awareness or complacency among government officials such as border control and consular offices contributes to the problem. Furthermore, traffickers are rarely punished, as official policies often inhibit victims from testifying against their traffickers, making trafficking a highly profitable, low-risk business venture for some.

Trafficking abuses are occurring not just in far-off lands but here at home in America as well. The INS has discovered 250 brothels in 26 different cities which involve trafficking victims. This is from a CIA report. This is the whole problem of no punishment--being able to do this with virtual impunity.

In a 1996 trafficking case involving Russian and Ukrainian women who answered ads to be au pairs, sales clerks and waitresses, and were forced to provide sexual services and live in a massage parlor in Bethesda, MD, the Russian-American massage parlor owner was fined. He entered a plea bargain and charges were dropped with the restriction that he would not operate a business again in Montgomery County. The women, who had not been paid any salary and were charged $150 for their housing, were deported or left the United States voluntarily. There was no charge at all.

Teenage Mexican girls were held in slavery in Florida and the Carolinas, and they were forced to submit to prostitution.

Russian and Latvian women were forced to work in nightclubs in the Midwest. According to charges filed against the traffickers, the traffickers picked the women up upon their arrival at the airport, seized their documents and return tickets, locked them in hotels and beat them. This is in our country. The women were told that if they refused to work in sexually exploitive conditions, the Russian Mafia would kill their families. Furthermore, over a 3-year period, hundreds of women from the Czech Republic who answered advertisements in Czech newspapers for modeling were ensnared in an illegal prostitution ring.

Trafficking in persons for labor is an enormous problem as well. The INS has also worked on cases involving South Asian children smuggled into the United States to work in slavery-like conditions. In one case, about 100 Indian children, some of them as young as 9 or 10, were brought into New York and shuffled around the country to work in construction and restaurants--ages 9 and 10, in the United States; today, in the United States--2000.

REV_00256153

Some of the children appear to have been sold by their parents to the traffickers. In Woodbine, MD, a pastor bought Estonian children, ages 14 to 17, promising them they would attend Calvery Chapel Christian Academy, but then forcing them to clean roach-invested apartments and to do construction. The children worked 15 hours a day. The children were threatened and punishments included denial of food and being forced to stand in one spot for prolonged periods.

The bitter irony is that quite often victims are punished more harshly than the traffickers because of their illegal immigration status, their serving as prostitutes, or their lack of documents, which the traffickers have confiscated in order to control the victims.

A review of the trafficking cases showed that the penalties were light and did not reflect the multitude of human rights abuses perpetrated against these women.

In a Los Angeles case, traffickers kidnapped a Chinese woman, raped her, forced her into prostitution, posted guards to control her movements, and burned her with cigarettes. Nevertheless, the lead defendants received 4 years and the other defendants received 2 and 3 years. That is what they received.

In a tragic case involving over 70 Thai laborers who had been held against their will, systematically abused, and made to work 20-hour shifts in a sweatshop, the seven defendants received sentences ranging from 4 to 7 years with one defendant receiving 7 months.

In another case where Asian women were kept physically confined for years with metal bars on the windows, guards, and an electronic monitoring system, and were forced to submit to sex with as many as 400 customers to repay their smuggling debt, the traffickers received 4 years and 9 years--in the United States of America, in the year 2000.

I thank Senator Brownback for his work. It is important.

A review of the trafficking cases showed that the penalties were light and they did not reflect the multitude of the human rights abuses perpetrated against these women. The statutory minimum for sale into involuntary servitude is only 10 years, whereas the maximum for dealing in small quantities of certain drugs is life.

Let me repeat that. The statutory minimum for sale into involuntary servitude is only 10 years, whereas the maximum for dealing in small quantities of certain drugs is life.

REV_00256154

Few State and Federal laws are aimed directly at people who deliver or control women for the purpose of involuntary servitude or slavery in sweatshops or brothels. Consequently, prosecutors are forced to assemble cases using a hodgepodge of laws, such as document fraud and interstate commerce, and accept penalties that they believe are too light for the offense. Up until this legislation, there was no way for the prosecutors to go after these traffickers.

The Victims of Violence and Trafficking Protection Act of 2000 establishes, for the first time, a bright line between the victim and the perpetrator. It punishes the perpetrator and provides a comprehensive approach to solving the root problems that create millions of trafficking victims each year.

This legislation aims to prevent trafficking in persons, provide protection and assistance to those who have been trafficked, and strengthen prosecution and punishment for those who are responsible for the trafficking. It is designed to help Federal law enforcement officials expand antitrafficking efforts here and abroad, to expand domestic antitrafficking and victim assistance efforts, and to assist nongovernment organizations, governments and others worldwide, who are providing critical assistance to victims of trafficking. It addresses the underlying problems which fuel the trafficking industry by promoting public antitrafficking awareness campaigns and initiatives in other countries to enhance economic opportunity, such as microcredit lending programs and skills training, for those who are most susceptible to trafficking, and have an outreach so women and girls as young as 10 and 11 know what they might be getting into.

It also increases protections and services for trafficking victims by establishing programs designed to assist in the safe reintegration of victims into their communities and ensure that such programs address both the physical and mental health needs of trafficking victims.

[*S10169]

Imagine what it would be like to be age 12 or 13, a young girl, to go through this. We have, in Minnesota, the Center for the Treatment of Torture Victims. It is a holy place. I have had an opportunity to meet with staff and meet with many men and women who have been helped by this center. These girls, these women, have gone through the same living hell.

This legislation also increases protections and services for trafficking victims by providing community support. Furthermore, the bill seeks to stop the practice--and this is so important. I am sitting next to Senator Kennedy who has done so much with the immigration work. This bill seeks to stop the practice of immediately deporting the victims back to potentially dangerous situations by providing them with

REV_00256155

(The report was printed in the House proceedings of the Record of October 5, 2000.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I believe under the uniform unanimous consent agreement that we have, time has been allocated to several different Members of the Senate to speak on this conference report; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, let me start this debate and discussion with the story of Irina. Irina's story appeared in the New York Times not that long ago, and it is similar to the story of a number of women with whom I have met and who have been caught in this situation of sex trafficking--young ladies I met with in Nepal, and several testified in committee. I think Irina's story tells in graphic detail why this is a problem and why the Senate needs to act.

> Irina always assumed that her beauty would somehow rescue her from the poverty and hopelessness of village life. A few months ago, after answering a vague ad in a small Ukrainian newspaper, she slipped off a tour boat when it put in at Haifa, hoping to make a bundle dancing naked on the tops of tables.
>
> She was 21, self-assured and glad to be out of Ukraine. Israel offered a new world, and for a week or two everything seemed possible. Then, one morning, she was driven to a brothel, where her boss burned her passport before her eyes.
>
> "I own you," she recalled his saying. "You are my property and you will work until you earn your way out. Don't try to leave. You have no papers and you don't speak Hebrew. You will be arrested and deported. Then we will get you and bring you back."

That was her master. The article goes on.

> It happens every single day. Not just in Israel, which has deported nearly 1,500 Russian and Ukrainian women like Irina in the past three years. But throughout the world, where selling naive and desperate young women into sexual bondage has become one of the fastest-growing criminal enterprises in the robust global economy.
>
> ... Many end up like Irina. Stunned and outraged by the sudden order to prostitute herself, she simply refused. She some interim immigration relief. Victims of "severe forms of trafficking," defined as people who were held against their will--"for labor or services through the use of force, fraud, or coercion for the purpose of subjection to involuntary servitude, peonage, debt bondage or slavery"--would be eligible for a special visa letting them stay in the country at least through the duration of their captors' prosecution, and perhaps permanently.-- -Name: -Payroll No. -Folios: -Date: -Subformat:

REV_00256138

Right now, if you are a Ukrainian girl or woman in a massage parlor in Bethesda, and you step forward to get some help, you are deported. The trafficker is hardly prosecuted. The victim is automatically deported. This provides temporary visa protection.

I will give an example. In a 1996 trafficking case involving Russian and Ukrainian women who had answered ads to be au pairs, sales clerks, and waitresses but were forced to provide sexual services and live in a massage parlor in Bethesda, MD, 2 miles from here, the Russian American massage parlor owner was fined. He entered a plea bargain and charges were dropped with the restriction that he would not operate his business again in Montgomery County. The women, who had not been paid any salary, were forced into prostitution, and were charged for their housing, were deported.

This legislation toughens current Federal trafficking penalties, criminalizing all forms of trafficking in persons and establishing punishment commensurate with the heinous nature of this crime. The bill establishes specific laws against trafficking. Violators can be sentenced to prison for 20 years to life, depending on the severity of the crime. Yes, if you are trafficking a young girl and forcing her into prostitution, you can face a life sentence. They can also be forced to make full restitution to their victims, paying them the salary that would have been due for their months or years of involuntary service.

This bill requires expanded reporting on trafficking, including a separate list of countries which are not meeting minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking.

It requires the President to suspend "nonhumanitarian and nontrade" assistance to only the worst violators on the list of countries which do not meet these minimum standards and who actively condone this human rights abuse. This is a major piece of human rights legislation. This is a major human rights bill.

These are the rare governments which are openly complicit in trafficking people across their borders. It allows the Congress to monitor closely the progress of countries in their fight against trafficking, and it gives the administration flexibility to couple its diplomatic efforts to combat trafficking with targeted enforcement action. Finally, the bill provides three generous waivers.

REV_00256156

By passing the Victims of Violence and Trafficking Act today, this Chamber will take a historic step toward the elimination of trafficking in persons.

Thanks to the partnership of Jewish and Evangelical groups, women and human rights organizations, and others, we will take a historic and effective step against organized crime rings and corrupt public officials who each year traffic more than 2 million people into desperate, broken lives of bondage and servitude.

Something important is in the air when such a broad coalition of people, including Bill Bennett, Gloria Steinem, Rabbi David Sapperstein, Ann Jordan, and Chuck Colson work together for the passage of this legislation. I am thankful for their support, I am thankful for the support of the administration, and I am thankful for your support today in seeking to end this horrible, widespread, and growing human rights abuse.

By way of conclusion, I say to my colleagues, starting with Senator Brownback, I believe with passage of this legislation--I believe it will pass today and the President will sign it--we are lighting a candle. We are lighting a candle for these women and girls and sometime men forced into forced labor. I also think because of the work of so many in the House and the Senate, this can be a piece of legislation that other governments in other parts of the world can pass as well. This is the beginning of an international effort to go after this trafficking, to go after this major, god-awful human rights abuse, this horrible exploitation of women, sometimes men, and of girls.

I am very proud of this legislation. I thank my colleague from Kansas. I thank other colleagues as well.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hagel). The Senator has 36 minutes remaining.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. The other part of this legislation that is so significant, and I know colleagues are here to speak about it, is the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act. I want to reserve time to speak about that very important piece of legislation. For me, to see both of these bills pass and to see it happen today is one of the best days I can have in the Senate. I yield the floor.

REV_00256157

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will withhold for a moment, is my understanding correct that the Senator from Vermont has 3 hours?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, for the information of colleagues, I do not intend to use all that time. At some point, I am going to yield back a considerable amount of time. I know there are Senators on both sides of the aisle who have commitments tonight, some connected with the debates of the two parties' Presidential nominees. It is my hope we will be voting fairly early this afternoon--a vote on the Thompson point of order and final passage.

I yield such time as the Senator from Massachusetts needs, and I ask unanimous consent that I then be able to yield to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I greatly appreciate the absolutely splendid presentation by my friend and colleague, Senator Wellstone. I agree with him on so many issues. His statement today was one of his very best. We can certainly understand the extraordinary work he has done, along with Senator Brownback and others, to make sure this legislation is considered. All of us will forever be grateful to him for his leadership in this extremely important area. I certainly am. I thank him for an absolutely splendid presentation.

Mr. President, I'm pleased that the Senate is finally about to pass the re-authorization of the Violence Against Women Act. The current authorization for the Act expired on September 30, and it has taken far too long to bring this important extension to the Senate floor.

A woman is beaten every 15 seconds as a result of domestic violence. Every year, one-third of the women who are murdered are killed by their husbands or partners, and approximately one million women are stalked. Conservative estimates indicate that 60 percent of disabled women, up to 25 percent of pregnant women, and 1 out of 25 elderly people have suffered domestic violence.

This isn't a problem that only affects adults. Each year, 3.3 million children are exposed to domestic violence. In homes where abuse of women occurs, children are 1,500 times more likely to be abused as well. Whether they witness the violence or are actually assaulted by the abuser, many children learn shocking behavior from adults. 12 percent of high school dating couples have suffered abuse in their relationships, and often these teenagers are themselves victims of abuse at home.

REV_00256158

[*S10170]

Eighteen year-old Tanyaliz Torres and her mother were stabbed to death by her father in Springfield, Massachusetts. Fifty-eight-year-old Mabel Greineder of Wellesley, Massachusetts was stabbed and bludgeoned to death by her husband. From October 1999 through September 2000, 24 Massachusetts women and children were killed as a result of domestic violence. It is a national epidemic that touches every community in the country.

The Violence Against Women Act was enacted in 1994 to address this problem and provide greater safety and peace of mind for millions of women and their families. The act creates a partnership between the public sector and the private sector at every level--Federal, State, and local. Its goal is to establish a safety net of new programs and policies, including community-based services for victims, a National Domestic Violence Hotline, needed technological assistance, and larger numbers of well-trained law enforcement officers and prosecutors.

The national Hotline gives women across the country immediate access to the help they need. Since its initiation in 1996, it has received over 500,000 calls. When a Spanish-speaking woman in Arizona needed shelter for herself and her three children, the Hotline called a shelter in Phoenix, found a Spanish-speaking counselor, and gave the caller the counselor's name and directions to the shelter. In the countless cases, the Hotline is an invaluable resource, and we must do all we can to support it.

In Massachusetts, $20 million under the Violence Against Women Act has been awarded to advocacy organizations, law enforcement personnel, and State and local governments. The Wampanoag Tribe of Gay Head received funding to develop and strengthen tribal justice strategies to remedy violent crimes against Indian women and to develop and strengthen services for victims.

The act also supports HarborCOV--Harbor Communities Overcoming Violence--a Massachusetts program serving Chelsea and Greater Boston. In addition to its core services, HarborCOV has an economic development component which helps survivors move from welfare to work. Employment training and employment referrals are also provided to help domestic violence victims find jobs.

The reauthorization will ensure that support for these programs and others will continue. It also includes important new measures, such as transitional housing assistance and a $175 million authorization for shelters, which will be significant additional tools in the battle against domestic violence.

One of the most important provisions in the bill is the Battered Immigrant Protection Act. This provision helps battered immigrants by restoring access to a variety of legal protections undermined by the 1996 immigration laws. The Violence Against Women Act passed in 1994 included provisions that allowed battered immigrants to apply for legal status without the cooperation of their abusers, and enabled victims to seek protective orders and cooperate with law enforcement officials to prosecute crimes of domestic violence.

Unfortunately, the subsequent changes in immigration laws have reduced access to those protections. Thousands of battered immigrants are again being forced to remain in abusive relationships, out of fear of being deported or losing their children. The pending bill removes obstacles currently hindering the ability of battered immigrants to escape domestic violence safely and prosecute their abusers.

It restores and expands vital legal protections like 245(i) relief. This provision will assist battered immigrants, like Donna, who have been in legal limbo since the passage of the 1996 immigration laws. Donna, a national of Ethiopia, fled to the U.S. in 1992 after her father, a member of a prominent political party, was murdered. In 1994, Donna met Saul, a lawful permanent resident and native of Ethiopia. They married and moved to Saul's home in Massachusetts. Two years later, Saul began drinking heavily and gradually became physically and verbally abusive. The abuse escalated and Donna was forced to flee from their home. She moved in with close family friends who helped her seek counseling. She also filed a petition for permanent residence under the provisions of the Violence Against Women Act.

Unfortunately, with the elimination of 245(i), the only way for Donna to obtain her green card is to return to Ethiopia, the country where her father was murdered. The possibility of returning there terrifies her. This legislation will enable her to obtain her green card here, where she has the support and protection of family and access to the domestic violence counseling she needs.

Under this act, battered immigrants will also have up to one year from the entry of an order of removal to file motions to reopen prior deportation orders. The Attorney General may waive the one year deadline on the basis of extraordinary circumstances or hardship to the battered immigrant's child.

This Act will also expand remedies for battered immigrants living abroad with spouses and parents serving in the United States military or other federal positions. Current law only allows battered immigrants residing in the United States to request this relief. This bill will make it easier for these immigrants and their children to escape abusive relationships and obtain the help they deserve.

REV_00256160

The legislation also grants the Attorney General the discretion to waive certain bars to immigration relief for qualified applicants. For example, battered immigrant women acting in self-defense are often convicted of domestic violence crimes. Under the 1996 immigration law, they became deportable and are denied relief under the Violence Against Women Act. The Attorney General will be able to use the waiver authority to help battered immigrants who otherwise qualify for relief.

Also, recently divorced battered immigrants will be able to file self-petitions. Current law allows only battered immigrant women currently married to their abusive spouses to qualify for relief. As a result, many abusers have successfully rushed to the court house to obtain divorces, in order to deny relief to their immigrant spouse. This provision will prevent this unfair result and ensure that victims are not wrongly deprived of the legal protection they need.

These and other important measures will do a great deal to protect battered immigrants and their children from domestic violence and free them from the fear that often prevents them from prosecuting these crimes. Congress enacted the Violence Against Women Act in 1994 to help all victims of domestic violence, regardless of their citizenship. It is long past time to restore and expand these protections.

I am also pleased that the legislation includes authorization for increased funds for the National Domestic Violence Hotline. Consistent with last year's funding, the bill authorizes $2 million a year for the hotline and ensures that the Hotline will be an effective source of assistance, providing vital services to women, children, and their families.

A second, equally important part of the bill we are considering today is the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, which condemns and combats the trafficking of persons into forced prostitution or forced labor, a practice that is tantamount to modern day slavery.

Enactment of this legislation will strengthen laws that punish traffickers and ensure protection for their victims--most of whom are women and children.

One of the most important of these provisions expands assistance and protection to victims of severe forms of trafficking, ensuring that they receive appropriate shelter and care, and are able to remain in the United States to assist in the prosecution of traffickers. Relief from deportation is also critical for victims who could face retribution or other hardship if removed from the United States.

REV_00256161

Sara, a native of Sri Lanka, was promised a lucrative job as a housekeeper. Upon arrival in the U.S., Sara was virtually imprisoned in her employer's Massachusetts home, and subjected to physical and sexual assault. She bore three children as a result of rape. After 5 years of living in captivity and isolation, she was finally able to escape. This legislation will provide persons like Sara with the protection and rights they need to assist in the prosecution of these despicable crimes.

[*S10171]

Finally, this legislation also includes an important provision to provide compensatory damages to Frank Reed and other American citizens who were victims of Iranian terrorism.

In 1986, Frank Reed, of Malden, MA, was kidnapped in Lebanon. At the time, he was a private citizen and president of the Lebanese International School. During his 44-month captivity, he was blindfolded, chained, tortured, and held in solitary confinement for 2 years. His captors periodically fed him arsenic, from which his health still suffers.

In 1990, he was released to Syrian Army intelligence officers in Beirut, who took him to the U.S. Embassy in Damascus. I met him when he returned to the United States after his tragic and traumatic ordeal.

A U.S. judge ordered the Iranian Government to provide Frank Reed and his wife with $26 million in compensatory damages, but the Government has refused to comply.

Under the legislation we are approving today, the U.S. Government will provide the funding. The amount will be recovered in turn by the U.S. Government from the Iranian Government through a Foreign Military Sales Account that holds $400 million.

Frank Reed suffered immensely at the hands of his brutal captors, and so did his family, and he deserves this compensation.

I strongly support the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, and the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act. This legislation will ensure that we are doing much more to protect women from violence and abuse, and it deserves to be enacted as soon as possible.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT

REV_00256162

Mr. President, I want to also address the Senate for just a few moments on another matter of importance to families all across this country which is central to their concerns, and that is, what has happened to this Senate's commitment to passing and reauthorizing the Elementary and Secondary Education Act? That legislation is the backbone of Federal participation in helping local communities strengthen academic achievement and accomplishment. We are now going into the final days of this Congress and we still have not reauthorized that central piece of legislation even though we have had strong commitment by the majority party that this was a priority and that we were going to have consideration of this legislation.

We heard a great deal during the recent debates of our two candidates for President and our two candidates for Vice President about education. But our American families are wondering, whatever happened to the Senate of the United States on this issue? The fact is, we are basically AWOL, we are A-W-O-L on this issue. It is the first time in 35 years that we have failed to reauthorize this legislation.

I understand, as we remain here for these final days, that we will have a conference report for agriculture, that we will have a series of appropriations conference reports, but there is no reason in the world we can't go back and complete this legislation in the time that we are in here waiting for the various appropriations bills.

We continue to challenge the Republican leadership to bring this back. There is still unfinished business in education and in the area of minimum wage. There is unfinished business on the Patients' Bill of Rights and on the prescription drug issue.

I want to reemphasize exactly where we are on the issue of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. These are statements that have been made by the Republican leader, Senator Lott's promise on education, going back to January 6, 1999. He said:

> Education is going to be a central issue this year.... For starters, we must reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. That is important.

Remarks to U.S. Conference of Mayors, January 29, 1999:

> But Education is going to have a lot of attention, and it's not going to be just words....

Press conference, June 1999:

> Education is number one on the agenda for Republicans in the Congress this year....

REV_00256163

Remarks to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in February of 2000:

We're going to work very hard on education. I have emphasized that every year I've been Majority Leader.... And Republicans are committed to doing that.

A speech to the National Conference of State Legislatures, February 3, 2000:

We must reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.... Education will be a high priority in this Congress.

On the Senate floor, May 1, 2000:

This is very important legislation. I hope we can debate it seriously and have amendments in the education area. Let's talk education.

Press stakeout, May 2, 2000:

Question: Senator, on ESEA, have you scheduled a cloture vote on that?

Senator Lott: No, I haven't scheduled a cloture vote.... But education is number one in the minds of the American people all across this country and every State, including my own State. For us to have a good, healthy, and even a protracted debate and amendments on education, I think is the way to go.

We agree with that statement. We still have some time, while we are waiting for the appropriators to conclude their work, where we ought to be bringing this back and having a full debate. We are prepared to do that. We think it can be done.

Senate floor, July 10, 2000:

I, too, would very much like to see us complete the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.... I feel very strongly about getting it done.... We can work day and night for the next 3 weeks.

Senate floor, July 25, 2000:

> We will keep trying to find a way to go back to this legislation this year and get it completed.

That was on July 25, and we are still waiting.

The fact is, we are failing to meet this central challenge. Our Presidential candidates are talking about the issue of education, but they are talking about it in a vacuum because the Senate of the United States is failing to take up this particular issue which makes such a difference to families, and that is strengthening academic achievement and accomplishment. The fact is that we are in a new world of technology and it is demanding. We have to refocus and re-prioritize the whole issue of education to make sure that it addresses the needs of today's economy and society. This is going to be central in terms of our national debate and discussion. That is what this debate is all about.

What is going to be our involvement in terms of helping families? The fact is that we are absent in this debate because we are refusing to conclude action.

This is what is happening in America. More students are now taking the SATs. 83 percent of four-year colleges use SAT scores as a factor in admission. Increasing numbers of students are recognizing that a college education is the key to success in America. Families understand the importance of taking those tests; children understand it. We want to make sure we are helping those families who have children taking the SATs and those who would like their children to take the SATs.

As depicted on this chart, this is what has happened. From 1995, 42 percent of the children were taking SATs, and it is up to 44 percent in 2000.

More students are also taking advanced math and science classes because they understand that in a highly technological world, with new kinds of demands in terms of technology, they are going to have to do more in terms of math and science courses. We see increases in the number of students taking advanced classes in pre-calculus, calculus, and physics. Young people are doing their share. The real question is whether we in the Congress are going to do ours. The answer comes back that, no, we are not. Look at what has been happening with the SAT math scores. They are higher now than in the last 30 years, and they are continuously moving up. The indicators are all positive. You would not know that listening to Governor Bush last week. We know we are facing challenges across the country, but look at the SAT math scores; they are the highest in 30 years. More kids are taking the SAT, and still was beaten and raped before she succumbed. Finally she got a break. The brothel was raided and she was brought here to another place , the only women's prison in Israel. Now, like hundreds of Ukrainian and Russian women with no documents or obvious forgeries, she is waiting to be sent home.

REV_00256165

This is a quote from Irina:

"I don't think the man who ruined my life will even be fined," she said softly, slow tears filling her enormous green eyes. "You can call me a fool for coming here. That's my crime. I am stupid. A stupid girl from a little village. But can people really buy and sell women and get away with it? Sometimes I sit here and ask myself if that really happened to me, if it can really happen at all."

Then, waving her arm toward a muddy prison yard, where Russian is spoken more commonly than Hebrew, she whispered one last thought: "I am not the only one, you know. They have ruined us all."

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the full text of this article.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Traffickers' New Cargo: Naive Slavic Women

(By Michael Specter)

Ramle, Israel.--Irina always assumed that her beauty would somehow rescue her from the poverty and hopelessness of village life. A few months ago, after answering a vague ad in a small Ukrainian newspaper, she slipped off a tour boat when it put in at Haifa, hoping to make a bundle dancing naked on the tops of tables.

She was 21, self-assured and glad to be out of Ukraine. Israel offered a new world, and for a week or two everything seemed possible. Then, one morning, she was driven to a brothel, where her boss burned her passport before her eyes.

"I own you," she recalled his saying. "You are my property and you will work until you earn your way out. Don't try to leave. You have no papers and you don't speak Hebrew. You will be arrested and deported. Then we will get you and bring you back."

It happens every single day. Not just in Israel, which has the scores are moving up. I think we ought to understand what is happening out there. Some progress is being made.

REV_00256139

[*S10172]

Now, this doesn't mean that progress is being made in all of the States. That is very important, indeed. Looking at the State SAT averages and progress made since 1997, some States have done much better than others. I am glad my own State of Massachusetts has moved up some 8 points, from an average total SAT score of 1,016 in 1997 to 1,024 in 2000. We have had major educational reforms. We have done many things in our State in terms of smaller class sizes, better trained teachers, and afterschool programs. We are not doing all the things we need to be doing, but we have done a lot. We have also taken advantage of Net Day to try, in a voluntary way, to get good computers in classrooms with well-trained teachers.

We also have found out in this discussion and debate that not all the States--including the State of Texas--have made progress. It is interesting that actually the State of Texas has declined some 2 points in their average total SAT score since 1997. They dropped from an average score of 995 in 1997 to 993 in 2000. They are also below the national SAT total score average. The national average has gone up 3 points from 1997 to 2000, but the State of Texas has gone down 2 points. That is a 5-point spread. So I think when we listen to these debates about what ought to be done, we ought to try to take with a grain of salt what has been happening in Texas over the period of these last 3 years.

In addition, looking back at the trend over the last 10 years, as I understand it, in SAT verbal scores since 1990, Texas has been 10 points below the national average. By 2000, the gap had grown to 12 points. In math, Texas has been 12 points below the national average. By 2000, the gap has grown to 14 points.

I think we want to have leadership at the national level that is going to bring continued improvement. We know we have challenges. We know we have challenges in urban areas and we have challenges in rural areas. But we also know some of the things that work. The STARS Program, as we have seen in Tennessee, has been very important in terms of enhancing children's academic achievement and accomplishment.

We know what has happened when we focus on getting better teachers in schools, such as in the State of Connecticut. Much of the progress there has been under Republican as well as Democratic Governors. We want to try to find out what has worked in these States and then have an opportunity to try to give general national application to it. But we are effectively being closed out by the Republican leadership from having this debate. That is what families ought to understand across this country.

REV_00256166

We are basically being told we can't have a debate here in the Senate on the issue of education. We had 6 days when the measure was before the Senate, and 2 days were for debate only. We had eight votes and one was a voice vote. So that meant seven rollcalls and three of them were virtually unanimous. So we really didn't have much debate and discussion. We had 16 days of debate on the bankruptcy legislation and 55 different amendments on it. So it is a matter of prioritizing.

I dare say we are failing to meet the responsibilities to families across this country who want to have investment in the kinds of educational programs that are going to work and who understand their children are living in a new age of technological challenges. They want to see their children move ahead academically. We have seen that children are prepared to do that. We have seen them taking more difficult courses. They are taking the challenges of SATs. They are prepared to move ahead.

Some of the States are moving ahead boldly, such as North Carolina, in terms of their efforts. But we have to ask ourselves: Where in the world are the Congress and Senate in terms of helping and assisting families in this area? The fact of the matter is that we are AWOL. We have failed to do our homework. If we were students with this behavior, we would be in the principal's office for several hours in discipline.

We are going to continue to talk about this. I see that we now are going to have a continuing resolution that will go into next week. We may go even further. There is no reason in the world we can't use these interludes to take on one of the really important issues for families; that is, the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I believe under the unanimous consent agreement that I can now yield to the distinguished Senator from California. I ask the Senator from California how much time she would like.

Mrs. BOXER. Between 10 and 15 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from California.

So many have worked so hard on this. The distinguished Senators from

REV_00256167

Massachusetts and Minnesota have spoken already, but especially Senators Boxer, Mikulski, Lincoln, Landrieu, Murray, and Feinstein have worked so hard.

I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from California.

I ask the Chair how much time is remaining for the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 hours 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, thank you very much. I thank my friend from Vermont for all his hard work. I thank my friend, Senator Wellstone. I thank Senator Brownback. I thank Senator Biden and Senator Hatch.

We have a very important bill before us. I think the Trafficking Victims Protection Act sort of stands on its own. I would love to have seen that come on its own because it is a landmark piece of legislation. I felt the same way about the Violence Against Women Act.

That is a landmark piece of legislation. Unfortunately, I think we have issues and pieces of legislation that shouldn't be in here. But that is the way it goes. How you would ever get to the point where you would put an issue that deals with sales of wine on the Internet is beyond me. I don't think people really get what we do here when we take these issues and blend them together. But let's call it the way it is.

The Trafficking Victims Protection Act and the Violence Against Women Act are so important that Members are willing to say, even if they didn't agree with all the appendages, they are willing to go along with them. I am going to make some comments about each piece that is in this legislation.

The Violence Against Women Act is very near and dear to my heart because in 1990 I was over in the House, where I served very proudly for about 10 years, and Senator Biden came to me and said: Would you be willing to offer the Violence Against Women Act in the House? He had authored it in the Senate. I was extremely pleased to agree.

The whole issue of domestic violence in our country up until that time was never discussed. It was swept under the rug. Even though we knew it was brutalizing women and children, we didn't have the courage to act. In those early years, it was very hard to get attention paid to violence against women.

REV_00256168

I was able in the House to get through just a couple of pieces of that legislation. But it wasn't until I came to the Senate with Senator Biden that we really orchestrated tremendous support for the bill. In 1994, we got it through as part of the Crime Act. It has proven itself.

In this particular reauthorization, we will provide $3.3 billion in funding over the next 5 years to protect victims of domestic abuse and violence. We have made tremendous progress. We have seen a reduction of about 21 percent in domestic violence. But still to this day, we have a national crisis that shatters the lives of millions of women across the country and tears at the very fabric of our society.

Reauthorizing these programs sends a much needed message to those who even think about lifting a hand to a spouse or think about lifting a hand to an innocent child that we will not stand silently by and that we in fact will protect those victims of domestic violence.

We know that nationwide nearly one in every three adult women experiences at least one physical assault by an intimate partner. We know for a fact that domestic violence is the leading cause of injury to women age 15 to 44, with nearly one-third of women who are murdered being murdered by a husband or a boyfriend.

[*S10173]

Although domestic violence affects both men and women, the overwhelming majority of domestic violence victims happen to be women. That is why a majority of the services authorized under the Violence Against Women Act focus on the unique circumstances of women in abusive relationships.

Again, we have made progress. Since 1994, when the bill passed and President Clinton signed it into law, there has been a 21-percent decrease in intimate partner violence and we have increased battered women's shelters by 60 percent.

I remember in those years when we were battling for this bill, we originally pointed out that there were more shelters for animals than there were for battered women. I am proud to say today we have seen an increase in the number of shelters so we can in fact address the critical needs of victimized women and their children, many of whom have absolutely no place to go and therefore sometimes they are forced to stay in these abusive relationships. Where are they going to go?

REV_00256169

They will go out on the street if they don't have a loving family to go home to. It is a tragic situation indeed.

The bill ensures that we will be funding a continued increase in these shelters. But we also want to stop the violence before it gets to that. We have STOP grants that provide moneys for rape prevention, and education grants, and a 24-hour national domestic violence hotline which is so important. Women in these circumstances need to have a reassuring voice. They believe sometimes that no one cares about them; they are all alone. If they can dial that hotline and get professional help, it makes all the difference in the world.

This bill will strengthen law enforcement efforts to reduce domestic violence by requiring the enforcement of other States' protection orders as a condition of funding for some of the grants. In other words, if you have a batterer who tries to escape prosecution by going across State lines, we address this issue.

This is very important. I want to talk about the children. We talk about battered women, but we know--this is an incredible fact as we look at the causes of violence in society, and we are right to look everywhere in the society--we need to understand if a young boy sees his father beat his mother, that child is twice as likely to abuse his own wife than the son of a nonviolent parent. If a child, particularly a young boy, sees a father beat a mother, he is twice as likely to abuse his own spouse.

We know 10 million children every year are exposed to domestic violence. More alarming even than that is the fact that 50 percent to 70 percent of those men who abuse their female partners also abuse their children. It becomes a way of life and a way of communicating for which we should have zero tolerance. These abused children are at high risk for violent, delinquent behavior. The National Institute for Justice reports that being abused as a child increases a child's likelihood of arrest as a juvenile by 53 percent. We know even when they are young they are more apt to be arrested and get in trouble. We know when they are adult and they marry they are more likely to abuse a spouse.

When we talk about the Violence Against Women Act, we are not talking only about women. We are also talking about the children. If there is anything we can do in this hallowed hall of the Senate, it is to protect children. We have the Safe Havens for Children Pilot Program; we have victims of child abuse programs funded; we have rural domestic violence and child abuse enforcement grants. This package also includes training for judges and court personnel. We also, for the first time, look at battered immigrants, which is a very important issue, because we sometimes have people coming here who don't understand their rights. They need to understand their rights, that their bodies don't belong to anyone else, and they have a right to cry out if they are abused.

REV_00256170

There are many other programs reauthorized by the Violence Against Women Act, such as those to combat sexual assault and rape, transitional housing, and civil, legal assistance. Again, a lot of these folks don't understand their legal rights. We provide grants to counsel them. We include protection for older and disabled women.

It is hard to even imagine an older woman in our society or a disabled person being victimized. Is there no rule that would say to every human being that there has to be respect? Unfortunately, in some cases, these rules don't penetrate. So we have to get tough and make sure that we prevent this. However, if it happens, we will crack down.

Again, I thank Senator Joe Biden for his work. It is very important.

Also, a judgeship that is being held up is the nomination of Bonnie Campbell to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. One might ask what it has to do with the Violence Against Women Act. The fact is, Bonnie Campbell has been the first and only Director of the Violence Against Women Office in the Department of Justice, and her nomination is being held up because of partisan politics in the Senate. Here is a woman who paved the way for the Violence Against Women Act, ensuring it was successful, and she is a perfect person to be a judge. She was the attorney general in Iowa for many years. Her achievements and qualifications are obvious. If we really care about the Violence Against Women Act, and I believe we do, then I believe we will have an overwhelming vote, hopefully a unanimous vote. Then we ought to look at one of the people who has made this act such a success. What a wonderful tribute it would be to the women of America to make Bonnie Campbell a judge.

I join with Senator Harkin on this because I know he has been quite distressed that such an excellent nominee has had a hearing, but her nomination has not come out of committee. We know of no one who is opposed to Bonnie Campbell. I think it would be a fitting tribute to the women of America to bring her nomination quickly to the floor.

I appreciate the work of Senator Wellstone and Senator Brownback on the Trafficking Victims Protection Act. We know that some of these victims have been subjected to the most horrific lives, including rape, sexual abuse, torture, starvation, and imprisonment. The selling of naive and desperate women into sexual bondage has become one of the fastest growing criminal enterprises in the global economy. It is hard to understand how this could happen. But when people are in a strange land and are frightened, they look to others to protect them when they really want to hurt and harm them. This legislation authorizes $94 million over 2 years to stop this abhorrent practice.

At the beginning of my remarks, I talked about sometimes attaching bills to other bills that make no sense. I am sad to say this has the alcoholic beverage sales attached to it. I am very sorry for the small wineries in my State. I tried to protect them. I will have some kind of a colloquy with Senator Hatch on this. Half of our 900 wineries in California are run by families. They don't have big, elaborate distributors; they don't have a big distribution. Because of this they will need to sell their product on the Internet. I have nothing against the way wine is distributed, but the new technologies will make it possible for our many wine sellers to sell directly to consumers without the need to go through a middleman or middle person. I think it is sad that we have attached this because these very small family-owned wineries may well suffer.

REV_00256171

I am going to be working with my colleagues. I know Senator Leahy is quite sympathetic to this. We want to make sure there are no negative impacts from this legislation. We think there will be. But we are going to follow this very closely.

The excuse given is, we will stop kids from buying on the Internet. That is a legitimate point. But we recommended a solution dealing directly with preventing underage drinking, and it was not accepted. In my heart of hearts, I believe this is a special interest piece of legislation to protect the distributors. It doesn't do anything to protect young people from buying liquor. I think it is a sad day for our small wineries that are trying hard to survive in California.

[*S10174]

In conclusion, I again thank Senator Leahy for this time. It is a wonderful day. We finally got this Violence Against Women Act reauthorized. We are going to put an end, hopefully, to the sex trafficking. It is a good day for the Senate.

I only hope we will heed the words of Senator Kennedy now and get on with education, get on with prescription drugs, and get on with the real Patients' Bill of Rights. Let's do our work. We can do our work. The American people want us to do it. The way the procedure is going now, we have no chance to offer amendments on education or health care. It is a shame.

I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished Senator from California on Bonnie Campbell. As the one who has brought life into the Violence Against Women Act, it is remarkable that she cannot even get a vote in this Chamber on her judicial nomination.

REV_00256172

5.

I have said on the floor, although we are different parties, I have agreed with Gov. George Bush, who has said that in the Senate a nominee ought to get a vote, up or down, within 60 days. I urge in the time remaining in this session that he, as the head of his party, as their Presidential nominee, call the Republican leader of the Senate and say that all of these women, all of these minorities, in fact, all of the people who have been sitting here for well over 60 days waiting for a vote on their nomination, let them have a vote. Vote for them or vote against them. Bonnie Campbell deserves a vote. My guess is the reason she has not been brought for a vote is they know at least 80 of the 100 Senators would vote for her. It would be impossible to justify a vote against her because of her extraordinary qualifications.

Again, if Governor Bush is serious when he says have a vote within 60 days, pick up the phone, call the Senate majority leader, reach him at the switchboard, 202-224-3121, and ask him to bring her to a vote. It is a very easy thing to do.

I agree with the Senator on the Internet alcohol bill. That was included over my objection. It is unnecessary. It is dangerous to e-commerce. Adding Internet sales on alcohol demeans the issue of violence against women and sex trafficking that this bill is all about. It is demeaning to what is a good bill.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank my friend for his comments on all fronts. Regarding his last comment, he is so right. When I first learned there was a move to attach this bill to the Violence Against Women Act, I was absolutely stunned. People have to watch what we do here. They understand, unfortunately, that the special interests still have a lot of influence. This is one case where they had too much influence. As my friend knows, we tried to work this so we could address the issue of juveniles buying liquor from the Internet, which everyone agrees is a terrible thing. This hurts our small wineries--let's call it the way it is--in favor of the big distributors.

But on the Bonnie Campbell point, I particularly want to say to my friend how much I have appreciated his leadership on these judicial nominations. I say today we would not have had even the meager number that we have had without his leadership and his pointing out, over and over again, that women and minorities are getting second-class treatment here.

I ask my friend if he would recount, briefly, the study he had quoted many times, showing that women and minorities take about 3 months longer, on average, to get through; just his comments on how it always seems we are here fighting for women or a minority. It does not seem as if we have to fight that hard for the white male.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator will yield, the study was done by the non-partisan Citizens for Independent Courts. In fact, the former

REV_00256173

Republican Congressman from Oklahoma, Mickey Edwards, co-chaired that study. They found, without taking sides and without taking political stands, that women and minorities took longer to be confirmed by the Senate. Unfortunately, a lot of those women and minorities are not even getting a vote.

Again I say if Governor Bush means it, pick up the phone and call 202-224-3121; ask the Senate switchboard to connect him to the Republican leader and say: You know, I have made it a tenet of my campaign that the Senate should vote on a nomination within 60 days. You can bring every one of these people to the floor for a vote, up or down, today. Let's do so. Who knows. We will find out how the Senate feels about them. Are they for them or are they against them? Right now, instead of voting yes or no, we vote "maybe," by having one or two Senators in the dark of night put holds on these people.

I see the distinguished Senator from Washington State, who has been one of the great leaders on the issue of violence against women, on sex trafficking, and on these other issues. I ask her, how much time does the Senator from Washington require?

Mrs. MURRAY. Ten minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. We yield 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont for his comments. I am looking forward, hopefully, to him chairing the Judiciary Committee next year; so that women such as Bonnie Campbell are not held up for months on end and we actually have a chance to put good, qualified women and minorities into judiciary positions in this country.

I also thank the Senator from Vermont for his tremendous work on the Violence Against Women Act, bringing us to a point today where we are finally going to have a vote on this bill, despite the fact there are other parts of this bill that I do not believe should be attached to it. I appreciate his efforts because this is an extremely important bill.

I have come to the floor to express my strong support for reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act and to endorse the pending conference report. In communities across America, the Violence Against Women Act has been an overwhelming success. It has empowered women and children to escape violent relationships, and it has helped to put abusers behind bars. On every account, the Violence Against Women Act deserves to be reauthorized. I urge my colleagues to support this vital legislation.

REV_00256174

It is unfortunate that reauthorization was allowed to lapse this past month, but I am pleased the Republican leadership has finally agreed that reauthorization must be a priority. I wish we had reached the conclusion earlier in this session.

This subject deserves a much more open and extended debate than has been allowed, but I want to take full advantage of the opportunity before us, the chance to reauthorize and strengthen the Violence Against Women Act. VAWA has been nothing short of historic.

Not long ago, domestic violence was considered a private family matter. That perception made it very difficult for women to get help and for communities to confront domestic violence. But all of that changed in 1994. I am very proud to have worked to pass the Violence Against Women Act because, for the first time, our Nation recognized domestic violence for what it is--a violent crime and a public health threat.

Through the Violence Against Women Act, we created a national strategy for dealing with violence against women. Today, looking back, it is very clear just how revolutionary the act was. For the first time, it established a community-wide response, bringing together cops and prosecutors, shelters and advocates and others on the front lines of domestic violence. It authorized programs to give financial and technical support to police departments to focus on domestic violence and to encourage arrests. It recognized and supported the essential role of the courts in ensuring justice. It provided funding for battered women's shelters and for programs that address the public health impact of domestic violence.

VAWA authorized funding for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, for Rape Prevention and Education, and it helped establish a national toll-free hotline for victims of domestic violence. Today, 1-800-799-SAFE offers battered women immediate help. In fact, every month, that hotline receives more than 13,000 calls. Back in 1994, some people wondered whether this unprecedented national strategy would work. Today, 6 years later, the facts are in and it is clear that the Violence Against Women Act has been a success. Arrests and convictions are up. We have more than doubled funding for battered women's shelters. Since 1994, we have appropriated close to $2 billion for VAWA-related programs.

[*S10175]

As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, one of my highest priorities has always been increasing funding for the Violence Against Women Act programs. In communities throughout my State and others, the deported nearly 1,500 Russian and Ukrainian women like Irina in the past three years. But throughout the world, where selling naive and desperate young women into sexual bondage has become one of the fastest-growing criminal enterprises in the robust global economy.

REV_00256175

The international bazaar for women is hardly new, of course. Asians have been its basic commodity for decades. But economic hopelessness in the Slavic world has opened what experts call the most lucrative market of all to criminal gangs that have flourished since the fall of Communism: white women with little to sustain them but their dreams. Pimps, law enforcement officials and relief groups all agree that Ukrainian and Russian women are now the most valuable in the trade.

Because their immigration is often illegal--and because some percentage of the women choose to work as prostitutes--statistics are difficult to assess. But the United Nations estimates that four million people throughout the world are trafficked each year--forced through lies and coercion to work against their will in many types of servitude. The International Organization for Migration has said that as many as 500,000 women are annually trafficked into Western Europe alone.

Many end up like Irina. Stunned and outraged by the sudden order to prostitute herself, she simply refused. She was beaten and raped before she succumbed. Finally she got a break. The brothel was raided and she was brought here to Neve Tirtsa in Ramle, the only women's prison in Israel. Now, like hundreds of Ukrainian and Russian women with no documents or obvious forgeries, she is waiting to be sent home.

"I don't think the man who ruined my life will even be fined," she said softly, slow tears filling her enormous green eyes. "You can call me a fool for coming here. That's my crime. I am stupid. A stupid girl from a little village. But can people really buy and sell women and get away with it? Sometimes I sit here and ask myself if that really happened to me, if it can really happen at all."

Then, waving her arm toward the muddy prison yard, where Russian is spoken more commonly than Hebrew, she whispered one last thought: "I'm not the only one, you know. They have ruined us all."

traffic patterns: russia and ukraine supply the flesh

Centered in Moscow and the Ukrainian capital, Kiev, the networks trafficking women run east to Japan and Thailand, where thousands of young Slavic women now work against their will as prostitutes, and west to the Adriatic Coast and beyond. The routes are controlled by Russian crime gangs based in Moscow. Even when they do not specifically move the need is overwhelming, and funding makes a dramatic difference. Working with the chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, HHS, and Education of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I have seen funding for shelters climb from $10 million to more than $100 million. I know Senator Specter has been a strong advocate for the Violence Against Women Act programs. I am pleased that VAWA has always been a bipartisan issue in appropriations.

REV_00256140

While we have much to be proud of today, we cannot forget that abuse is still too common. In Washington State, my home State, the toll-free domestic violence hotline received more than 37,000 calls between July 1998 and July 1999. We cannot forget that there are still too few resources for women in need. In my State during that same period, 23,806 women and children were turned away from shelters--turned away as they sought help because the resources were not there.

We cannot forget that not all communities offer a full range of services, and not all police departments are equipped to handle a life-threatening domestic violence call.

The truth is, while the Violence Against Women Act was a historic first step, it was just that, a first step. The time has come for us to build on the foundation created by that act. VAWA offered an immediate response to the threat of violence. Now it is time to address the long-term issues. It is time to confront the long-range economic barriers that trap women and children in violent relationships.

I have worked with Senators Wellstone and Schumer to write and introduce the Battered Women's Economic Security Act. This legislation tears down economic barriers and breaks the cycle of violence. Our bill deals with employment discrimination, insurance discrimination, housing assistance, legal help, and child care. It addresses the punitive elements of the welfare system that can penalize women who are fleeing dangerous situations. It provides additional help to shelters and providers to meet the overwhelming needs of battered women and children.

I had hoped we would have been able to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act in a timely manner and move to addressing those economic issues that I have outlined. Unfortunately, we cannot have that debate today or in this session of Congress. But let me assure my colleagues we will be back in the 107th Congress to fight to put these powerful tools in the hands of victims and their advocates.

Before I conclude, I want to say a special word of thanks to the many people who have helped us reach this point today.

I thank, again, Senator Leahy and Senator Biden for their leadership. They worked very hard to bring a bipartisan bill to the floor today.

REV_00256176

I also thank all of the advocates who fought so hard to ensure the success of the Violence Against Women Act and who have been aggressive in urging this Congress to act. Without their support in our communities, VAWA would never have been a success.

I thank the Washington State Coalition Against Domestic Violence for its dedicated work.

I thank all of the advocates, police officers, and community leaders with whom I have worked since 1994 to implement VAWA and to strengthen this important act.

I thank the many shelters and organizations that have opened their facilities to me during this session of Congress, including the Tacoma-Pierce County YWCA, Kitsap Special Assault Victims Investigative Services in Bremerton, the Bellingham YWCA, the Vancouver YWCA Domestic Violence Day Care Shelter, the Spokane Domestic Violence Consortium, the Spokane Women's Drop-In Center, and the people at Vashon Island Domestic Violence Outreach Services.

As I have visited with them, I have seen firsthand the services they offer and the challenges they face. I have spoken personally with women who have had their lives changed because of the services offered, and I have been impressed by the progress they are making day in and day out. Those experiences have strengthened my determination to support their work in the Senate.

In closing, it is clear the Violence Against Women Act has been a remarkable success. We cannot delay authorization any longer, and I urge my colleagues to vote for this measure. I look forward to working with those in the Senate and those in my State to help build on the progress of the Violence Against Women Act in the next session of Congress.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time is remaining for the Senator from Vermont?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 55 minutes 35 seconds.

REV_00256177

Mr. LEAHY. Out of the 3 hours? We have not been in session 3 hours, Mr. President. The Senator from Vermont had a total of 3 hours. We went into session less than 3 hours ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will indulge, we will recalculate.

Mr. LEAHY. I thought there might be more. You have to watch out for that fuzzy math.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 1 hour 55 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEAHY. That sounds a little closer to it. I am going to be reserving time for my own speech, but I have been withholding giving a speech because other Members on our side want to speak. I see the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maryland, my good friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I hope today the Senate will pass legislation to improve the lives of women in America and around the world and protect them from predators.

Make no mistake, when people commit crimes, they never commit crimes against people who are bigger, stronger, or have more power than they. They always go after the weak, the vulnerable. One can be weak either in physical strength or weak because one does not have the same size weapon.

Today we have two pieces of legislation pending: One, the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, and the other will break new ground to protect women and children who are bought and sold around the world as if they were commodities. They are victims of predatory behavior.

By passing this legislation, we are going to protect them. Women in their own homes are often victims of violence. Mr. President, 900,000 women last year were battered in their own homes.

The Violence Against Women Act says we will not tolerate violence, whether it is in the home, in the neighborhood, or on a street corner.

I thank Senator Leahy and Senator Brownback who have been working on this legislation, along with Senator Joe Biden. We appreciate the support and leadership of the good men here.

REV_00256178

We want to be sure that through this legislation, we are going to not only prevent violence but help women rebuild their lives. The Violence Against Women Act works through domestic violence programs at the State level, works with law enforcement, and works in treatment programs for those who were the abusers. I hope we pass this legislation.

The second part is legislation that will also be a hallmark. It is the Sexual Trafficking Victims Protection Act. Girls as young as 10 years old are kidnapped from their villages and taken to brothels or sweatshops where they are imprisoned, forced to work as prostitutes, beaten, threatened, and even drugged into submissiveness. They prey upon women in the poorest regions of the world.

In addition, in central and southern Europe, with the collapse of the old economy, women from very poor villages are lured by fraudulent scam predators into thinking they are going to work in the West and are going to work in the hospitality industry. You bet it's hospitality. It is called turning them into whores.

[*S10176]

I say to my colleagues, that is not what the free world and free economy should be about. We want to make the trafficking in women and children as criminal as the trafficking in illegal drugs. Guess what. Often the same scum who traffic in women are also the ones who traffic in drugs and traffic in illegal weapons of mass destruction.

I support and applaud the efforts of the Senator from Kansas who has taken the leadership in this area. He has visited Asia and has seen the recruitment and despicable circumstances under which young girls and children are forced to work. From briefings here, we know this is going on in the Balkans, out of Ukraine, and out of Poland. Many are brought into this country under false pretenses with phony visas. We have to stop the trafficking of women around the world.

This is very good legislation.

It will improve the lives of women in America and around the world. By passing the Violence Against Women Act, we are helping the victims of domestic violence to rebuild their lives. By passing the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, we are protecting women and children who are bought and sold, and forced into slavery.

Again every year, more than 900,000 women are victims of violence in their own homes. Every second, 20 women are battered. The Violence Against Women Act says we will not let violence threaten women, families, or communities.

REV_00256179

Violence against women is not just a threat to the health and safety of women. It is a threat to the health and safety of families and our communities.

No woman in this country should live in fear. No woman should fear walking home at night. No woman should fear leaving a campus library. No woman should fear that her husband or boyfriend will hurt her or her children.

We will not tolerate it--not in Maryland, where 41 women were killed by domestic violence last year; not anywhere in America, where 4 women a day are killed by domestic violence.

The Violence Against Women Act supports programs that help women to rebuild their lives. It strengthens law enforcement's response to domestic violence. It gives legal assistance to victims of domestic violence, and it creates safe havens for women and children who are victims of domestic violence.

The Violence Against Women Act will protect thousands of woman throughout the country. Today we are also taking steps to protect women throughout the world--by passing the Sex Trafficking Victims Act.

The truly repugnant practice of trafficking in human beings affects between one and two million women and girls each year. As I have stated, girls as young as ten years old are kidnaped from their villages. Or unsuspecting families allow their daughters to leave--with promises of good jobs and better lives. These women are taken to brothels or sweatshops--where they are imprisoned. They are forced to work as prostitutes. They are beaten, they are threatened--and many are killed. Even if a woman escapes, she is often so afraid of retaliation that she will not testify against her abductors.

Organized, international criminals are responsible for the increase in trafficking. They prey on young women in the poorest regions of the world. They take advantage of the most vulnerable--who live in developing countries with poor economic and uneven law enforcement.

Most countries have no way of dealing with this sophisticated form of international crime. Many countries where trafficking is most prevalent lack the laws and law enforcement authority to handle the problem. To often, when local authorities catch traffickers, the women get the brunt of the punishment for prostitution--while traffickers face minor penalties.

REV_00256180

That is why this legislation is so important. It focuses on prevention, protection, and support for victims, and prosecution of traffickers. It recognizes that trafficking is a global problem that requires an international solution.

To prevent trafficking this legislation raises the awareness of the problem in villages and countries. It educates potential victims by promoting anti-trafficking awareness campaigns and by authorizing educational and training assistance to international organizations and foreign governments. It also requires the Secretary of State to report on the severe forms of trafficking in persons in the annual country reports.

To strengthen prosecution, this legislation provides local authorities with the tools to crack down on traffickers.

To support the victims of trafficking, this legislation directs funds for international organizations that help these women to rebuild their lives. They are given a safe haven where they can recover. They are provided with education, training, and microloans.

This legislation also recognizes that trafficking is not just a foreign problem. Approximately 50,000 women are brought to the United States each year where they are forced into prostitution or other servitude. This bill toughens current Federal trafficking penalties by doubling the current maximum penalties for traffickers to 20 years imprisonment with the possibility of life imprisonment. It also changes immigration law to help victims of trafficking. This will stop the practice of deporting victims back to potentially dangerous situations.

We want this century to be one of democracy and human rights. We will not achieve this unless everyone, including the worlds' poorest women, is able to control their own lives. This means education, economic development, family planning and civic institutions that protect the rights of women. The legislation we are passing today will take us closer to achieving these goals. I urge my colleagues to join me in strongly supporting the Violence Against Women Act and the Sex Trafficking Victims Act.

In conclusion, 4 years ago, I was a victim of violence. I was coming home from dinner with a wonderful professor who was an economic adviser to me and was here for a conference. I got her to her hotel. As I stepped out of my car, zam, I was mugged. I lost my handbag. I had a severe injury to my hand. I tried to fight him off, but he was over 6 feet, and I am under 5 feet. Fortunately, I escaped with my life. All I had was a broken memory and shattered security in my own neighborhood.

REV_00256181

Thanks to the success of the Baltimore Police Department and the pressing of charges and the willingness not to plea bargain, that man is doing time while I hope I am out here doing good. I want to be sure the streets of America are safe. I have an entire Baltimore community on my side, including the informants. Not every woman has that. Let's try to get them the resources they need to be safe in their homes and communities. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I recall very well the incident of which the Senator from Maryland speaks. I am pleased this is a case where the perpetrator was arrested and prosecuted.

One of the things I learned in my years as a prosecutor is that too often nobody wanted to pursue those cases. All that meant, of course, was that somebody else would be a victim. In this case, it was the Senator from Maryland. But from my experience, had the person not been apprehended, not been convicted, then someday it would be somebody else. So I commend the people of Baltimore who rallied to her. At least out of that sorry thing there was adequate prosecution. But we have so much violence against women that we never see.

I recall so many times police officers seeing a badly battered woman, and where we would bring prosecution, but as I talked to her, I would find this had happened several times before in a domestic situation and that they had gone to law enforcement, and others, and had been turned back where nothing had been followed up on. We had a very aggressive program in my office where we would follow up on it. I have to think there are a number of deaths, though, that have occurred and do occur in places where it is not followed up on.

This is something you do not see in the sunny ads and the perfect homes and domestic situations that we see on our television. The fact is, there are a lot of places in this country where there is enormous violence against women.

[*S10177]

I would add to the comments of my colleague, it goes across every economic strata, it goes across all social strata. This is not one thing that is just in poor neighborhoods or just in one ethnic group or another. This goes across the economic strata. It goes across good neighborhoods and bad neighborhoods, large families and small families. But, unfortunately, many times it never comes to the attention of law enforcement. Regrettably, sometimes when it does, it is not followed up on. This act, itself, will help focus the attention of law enforcement on this.

REV_00256182

Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey had asked to speak, and I know the Senator from Louisiana wishes to speak.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, if I could say before my colleague from Maryland leaves the floor, I thank her for her leadership on this Violence Against Women Act and for her statements on the sex trafficking bill. I look forward to working with her on both issues as we move forward. Hopefully, this will be cleared through the Senate and signed into law and we can take more actions and steps down the road to see that people are cared for in these terrible situations. I do appreciate her comments and her support. I thank the Senator.

I apologize for the interruption.

Mr. LEAHY. The Senator from Kansas does not have to make any apologies with all the work he has done on this. I appreciate him being here.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I join with the others in thanking our colleague from Vermont, Senator Leahy, for his leadership in this area and, of course, Senator Biden and other Senators who have spoken this morning on this important subject.

I want to follow up with what Senator Leahy just said by sharing with him, and with all here, an unfortunate story that appeared recently in a newspaper out of Maryland where a 44-year-old man was convicted of raping an 18-year-old girl who was unconscious from drinking.

Unfortunately, this judge is one of many judges, or at least too many--the number is too high--who are ignorant and uninformed. He said on the record in this particular case: "Finding an unconscious woman is a dream come true to a lot of men."

Finding an unconscious woman is a dream come true to a lot of men.

I will submit this judge's name for the Record and will be writing him a personal letter, asking him, if he did make this statement which was reported, that he resign his seat immediately.

That is part of the problem we have in this Nation. The Senator from Vermont, as a former prosecutor, understands this well, that this problem is pervasive. It is a real shame in America--this country of freedom and order and democracy--that we still have a severe and serious problem of domestic violence.

REV_00256183

Sometimes our Nation takes that extra step and goes that extra mile to stop violence on the street and to continue to support our police officers. Yet when it comes to stopping violence in our own homes, our Government falls short in terms of funding, in terms of research, in terms of education.

That is the hope that this act brings. It is to help move judges such as this off the bench; so when he is up for reelection, there is some education in the community that would force his either resignation or moving him off the bench through the election cycle.

There are prosecutors around the Nation, some of whom are more enlightened than others. But I will tell you of two in my State who are doing an outstanding job on this subject: DA Paul Connick from Jefferson Parish and DA Walter Reed from St. Tammany Parish.

We have many excellent DAs. But in the last few years, many of these DAs--99 percent of whom, I would imagine, in the Nation are male and who perhaps do not come to the subject from a very personal point of view--have been really educated because of the good work that has been done in this Congress and with groups all around this Nation.

These two particular DAs have instituted a very progressive policy which is basically a no-drop policy, which means that if a battered woman comes in to file a charge, the DA takes it upon himself, and basically the State and the county and the parish, even if she begins to back down because her self-esteem is not as strong as it should be, or she is understandably frightened, or she has been threatened if she does not drop the charges, to simply tell the abuser, when he comes in for his interview: I am sorry, we refuse to drop the charges. This is against you and me, buddy, basically, and we are going to see this to the end, where you can get the punishment coming to you.

They are really being very aggressive. I hope if other district attorneys or other staffers or folks and other elected officials are tuning in today, they will encourage district attorneys all over this Nation to take up the no-drop policy, because getting abusers convicted, getting them punished, and then getting them the right treatment for this is the only way we are going to stop this terrible tragedy from occurring.

There are so many things I could say about this subject, but I do think our leaders realize it is about education; it is about district attorneys; it is about judges, it is about the court system; it is not just about shelters and counseling and aid, which is so important. This is the first step, giving women a safe place to go, giving children a safe place to go. Our justice system must work for them. That is why this bill is so important.

REV_00256184

My colleague from New Jersey is waiting to speak on the same subject. I thank Senator Lautenberg for his great leadership in this area. But let me just for the record read some recent headlines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 2 more minutes.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, let me read some recent headlines from our national newspapers because the Senator was making an earlier point that I agree with, that this isn't just in poor neighborhoods; this isn't just in neighborhoods of people who have recently come to this Nation; this isn't about people who have not had a good education; this affects everyone in all walks of life.

"Popular Romance Novelist Shot and Killed by Estranged Husband," an AP story from June 1999.

"Tommy Lee goes to jail for Wife Abuse," from USA Today, in May 1998.

"Colorado Rockies Pitcher Arrested on Suspicion of Punching Pregnant Wife in Face," from the Washington Post, August 1999.

"Number of Women Dying from Domestic Violence Holding Steady Despite Drastic Drop in Overall Homicide Rates," San Francisco, February 1998.

Mr. President, we have to do a better job. We have to continue on this track. Violence has no place in our society--on our streets, on our playgrounds, or in back alleys. But it most certainly has no place in our homes where children grow up. If a home can't be safe, if a home can't provide peace for a child or a woman, as a person, where can they find peace, Mr. President? That is what this bill is about.

I think it is appropriate that the Violence Against Women Act will be passed with the Trafficking Victims Protection Act. It says that we understand that violence against women is a world wide problem.

In passing the Violence Against Women Act in 1994 we seized the opportunity to be a world leader--to take the stand that in the women overseas, they provide security, logistical support, liaison with brothel owners in many countries and, usually, false documents.

REV_00256185

Women often start their hellish journey by choice. Seeking a better life, they are lured by local advertisements for good jobs in foreign countries at wages they could never imagine at home.

In Ukraine alone, the number of women who leave is staggering. As many as 400,000 women under 30 have gone in the past decade, according to their country's Interior Ministry. The Thai Embassy in Moscow, which processes visa applications from Russia and Ukraine, says it receives nearly 1,000 visa applications a day, most of these from women.

Israel is a fairly typical destination. Prostitution is not illegal here, although brothels are, and with 250,000 foreign male workers--most of whom are single or here without their wives--the demand is great. Police officials estimate that there are 25,000 paid sexual transactions every day. Brothels are ubiquitous.

None of the women seem to realize the risks they run until it is too late. Once they cross the border their passports will be confiscated, their freedoms curtailed and what little money they have taken from them at once.

"You want to tell these kids that if something seems too good to be true it usually is," said Lyudmilla Biryuk, a Ukrainian psychologist who has counseled women who have escaped or been released from bondage. "But you can't imagine what fear and real ignorance can do to a person."

The women are smuggled by car, bus, boat and plane. Handed off in the dead of night, many are told they will pick oranges, work as dancers or as waitresses. Others have decided to try their luck at prostitution, usually for what they assume will be a few lucrative months. They have no idea of the violence that awaits them.

[*S10165]

The efficient, economically brutal routine--whether here in Israel, or in one of a dozen other countries--rarely varies. Women are held in apartments, bars and makeshift brothels; there they service, by their own count, as many as 15 clients a day. Often they sleep in shifts, four to a bed. The best that most hope for is to be deported after the police finally catch up with their captors.

Few ever testify. Those who do risk death. Last year in Istanbul, Turkey, according to Ukrainian police investigators, two women were thrown to their deaths from a greatest democracy in the world it is unacceptable that such violence occurs.

REV_00256141

We have spent $16 billion on programs on education, assistance and prosecution. We must continue.

Every 5 minutes a woman is raped. Every day four women die as a result of domestic violence.

More women are injured by domestic violence than by automobile accidents and cancer deaths combined.

We have made progress but there is more to be done.

Here are some of the other statistics from that Tulane study:

More than eight of ten knew someone who had been murdered;

More than half had witnessed a shooting;

43% said they had seen a dead body in their neighborhood; and 37% of them were themselves victims of physical violence.

[*S10178]

If we think that violence is something that only affects other countries we must think again. If we think that a bill like the violence against women's act only affects women we are wrong.

Studies show that a child's exposure to the father abusing the mother is the strongest risk factor for transmitting violent behavior from one generation to the next.

A significant number of young males in the juvenile justice system were from homes where violence was the order of the day.

Family violence costs the nation from $5 to $10 billion annually in medical expenses, police and court costs, shelters and foster care, sick leave, absenteeism, and non-productivity.

Last week I told you about a woman from my State, Jacqulene Gersfeld, who was gunned down by her husband outside a courthouse just moments after she filed for divorce.

REV_00256186

The VAWA reauthorization includes a provision to expand the investigation and prosecution of crimes of violence against women.

The need for this is great 85% of all reported rapes end up with no conviction. Almost 90% result in no jail time.

In Baltimore, MD, a 44 year old man was convicted of raping an 18 year old girl who was unconscious from drinking. The judge in the case said the following on the record: "Finding an unconscious woman is a dream come true for a lot of men." And so he sentenced him only to probation.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, first, I thank my colleague, Senator Leahy, for helping us get an addition to this legislation that we think is critically important. I also extend my thanks to Senator Brownback of Kansas for his assistance in enabling us to get our particular section of this bill into place.

Mr. President, a light comes as a result of the fact that we have our female colleagues with us in this Senate. How hard they work to get things done on both sides of the aisle. What a difference it has made in the way we operate. Many of us were here before there was a reasonable presence of women--and it is not yet "reasonable"; I will strike that word. But that will change in time. We are getting there. They have helped to bring to the consciousness of all America the kinds of abuses that are perpetrated against women and young children who are female--disgusting practices that shock us all; trafficking in young women, forcing them into virtual slavery and being sexually exploited, and losing their identity in the process. It is a humiliation few can imagine. I commend the authors of this bill. Also, I commend them for including the section on violence against women.

Mr. President, 3 years ago, when we were hard at work trying to reduce gun violence in our society, I offered a piece of legislation to prohibit those who had even as little as a misdemeanor charge proven against them from getting guns. It was a tough battle, and we were on the losing side a couple of times, with the old song about it which is "the camel's nose under the tent, and you will be controlling guns," and so forth, instead of thinking about how many lives we would save. We know that about 150 times a year a woman has a gun pointed at her head--and I guess the reverse is also true occasionally--and is told, "I will blow your head off" in front of children. What kind of wounds does that leave even if the trigger isn't pulled? It is a terrible memory for all of those who are either victims or witnesses.

REV_00256187

With the help of President Clinton, we were finally able to get a piece of legislation in a budget bill that had to be done--it is almost 4 years now, and it had to be done and it passed and was signed into law--to prevent spousal and children abusers from getting permits to own a gun. The result is that almost 35,000 gun permits have been denied to these people--35,000 potential opportunities for a man to put a gun against a woman's head and threaten to take her life. So I support this bill with these two sections. I have added a section--myself and Senator Mack of Florida--that talks about helping those who have been victims of terrorism, whether on our shores or away from America. American citizens are deserving of protection. I am pleased the Senate is going to pass this package of worthy legislation.

The underlying Trafficking Victims Protection Act addresses a very serious human rights issue in Europe and elsewhere, where people are trafficking particularly for sexual exploitation. Finally, we are taking action to combat trafficking and to help these victims. I am pleased that this conference report will also reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act and expand coverage to include new programs for immigrant women, elderly women, and women in the military service.

Throughout my career, I have worked to help prevent domestic violence. I strongly supported the original Violence Against Women Act, which Congress passed in 1994. I am so pleased that we are going to take care of those aberrations of behavior that leave women and families devastated. But we are getting onto another subject, as well, which I think is critical, and that is to provide justice for victims of terrorism as part of the trafficking victims protection conference report.

Mr. President, we all talk about our objections and abhorrence of terrorist attacks against American citizens, whether abroad or at home, and I had an experience that was almost in front of my eyes which shocked me and caused me to think about how we might prevent terrorism against our citizens at any time, at any place.

One of those victims was a young woman named Alisa Flatow. She was a junior at Brandeis University and she was studying in Israel for a time. In 1995, on April 9, she boarded a bus that took her from a place called Ashkelon to another destination. She never arrived. Shortly after noon, when the bus was in the Gaza Strip, a suicide bomber drove a van loaded with explosives into the bus. Seven passengers were killed. Alisa Flatow was among those injured. An Israeli Defense Forces helicopter rushed her to a hospital in a community nearby. It was the same day I arrived in Israel from a trip in the Middle East. When I arrived there, our U.S. Ambassador informed me of the terrible tragedy that had occurred and that one of them was a constituent from New Jersey and that she had been severely injured in that attack. I immediately reached her home in West Orange, NJ, an area very familiar to me because I lived near that neighborhood.

REV_00256188

I spoke to her mother, Rosalyn, and was informed that Alisa's father, Steve, was already on his way to Israel. By the time he arrived, the emergency surgery had failed to save his daughter's life. She died on April 10. She was 20 years old.

For any of those who have children, they know that 20 years of age is almost the beginning of life.

I have three daughters and a son. Those were marvelous years as they approached the end of their college terms and prepared for life beyond.

But that didn't prevent a faction of the Palestinian Islamic Jihad from claiming responsibility and being proud of what they did with that suicide bombing. What good was it going to do their cause to have one mission of terrorists to frighten people and prevent them from conducting their lives as they would like to without any specific gain to be had?

There was a sponsor who paid something to somebody to have these young people assassinated. It was Iran. That is one of the reasons that country is still on the State Department's list of terrorist countries.

I want to tell you, Mr. President, that I am befuddled by some of the policy decisions we make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 10 minutes has expired.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I ask if I can have 5 more minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield 5 more minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank Senator Leahy.

There is no stronger advocate for the protection and safety of our citizens than President Clinton. But I don't understand why we take a country such as Iran and start to deal with them in trade of insignificant items. Would you believe--I am almost embarrassed to say it--that caviar, pistachio, Persian rugs are vital items for the well-being of our society? It is outrageous.

REV_00256189

[*S10179]

But there are differences in point of view. I am not a professional diplomat. Maybe I fail to understand the longer term value of something that looks trivial to me as I express myself.

For the past five years, I have been proud to stand with Steve Flatow in his effort to achieve some measure of justice for the killing of his daughter. He and I both want to hold Iran accountable.

But Alisa Flatow was not Iran's only victim. Matt Eisenfeld of Connecticut and Sarah Duker of New Jersey, a young American couple in Israel, also were killed in 1996 when a suicide bomb from an Iran-sponsored group ripped through a bus they had boarded.

One cannot comprehend what these missions are supposed to accomplish.

I don't want to bring the situation in Israel and the Middle East up to a full-scale debate at this moment. But there can be nothing gained by assaults against people or their property.

I made a speech yesterday in which I pleaded with Mr. Arafat to stop the hatred of his people; to stop the inflammation; to stop the propaganda that induces this kind of hatred and action; to stop ugly cartoons about people who inhabit Israel, the Jewish community; and to stop the anti-Semitic diatribes that still occur in Palestine. Stop it; stop it.

Well-known journalist Terry Anderson and others were held hostage in Lebanon in the late 1980s by captors funded by Iran.

They and their families also deserve justice, as do the families of those killed when the Cuban government in 1996 deliberately shot down two planes used by Brothers to the Rescue.

Mr. President, The Antiterrorism Act of 1996 gave American victims of state-sponsored terrorism the right to sue the responsible state.

The law carved out a deliberately narrow exception to the sovereign immunity protections our laws afford other countries.

REV_00256190

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes has expired.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Vermont if I may have 5 more minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield an extra 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey, especially because of the tremendous work he has done along with the Senator from Florida, Mr. Mack, on this subject. I think they have had to overcome so many obstacles and so many mysterious holds on their legislation. I, of course, yield 5 more minutes to the Senator.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the Senator from Vermont not only for his graciousness in extending to me additional time but for the help and guidance that he gave as we tried to put this piece of legislation into law.

Our goal then, and our goal now, is to allow American victims to receive some measure of justice in U.S. courts and to make state sponsors of terrorism pay for the death and devastation they have wrought.

Victims of terrorism have put the 1996 law to good use. The Flatow family won a U.S. court judgment against Iran in 1998. Other victims of terrorism won similar cases.

The Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act helps the victims collect compensatory damages they've won fair and square in our nation's courts.

Foreign countries that sponsor terrorism should have to pay for the awful toll that terrorist attacks take on families like the Flatows. And we hope that making terrorist states pay that price will deter them from sponsoring terrorism in the future.

Let me close, by thanking the many cosponsors and Senators who have helped advance this legislation. I particularly would like to thank Senator Mack, who has been with me every step of the way, and Gary Shiffman on his staff.

I also want to thank Frederic Baron of my staff who worked so hard on this bill.

I think this bill is a good example of bipartisan cooperation for a worthy cause--helping provide justice for American victims of terrorism abroad.

REV_00256191

I am sure this legislation will pass overwhelmingly, but I want this message to go out across this globe: that if you sponsor terrorism against American citizens, you will pay a price. We ought to be unrelenting in that. I was proud of our country when we moved against Afghanistan to pay for the perpetrators of dastardly acts against American citizens and their interests.

We can never step aside and argue whether or not it is appropriate. We have to find out by testing the waters, by making sure that the legislation is there. If there is a challenge, so be it. But we have to indicate we will not stand by and let this happen without repercussions to those who sponsor terrorism.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roberts). The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Florida for their excellent work. I want to take a moment to engage in a colloquy with Senator Brownback to clarify a phrase in division A of the bill. In order to be eligible for the visa provided, the traffic victim would be required to prove she would face "extreme hardship involving unusual and severe harm."

This is a new standard under the Immigration and Nationality Act. Can the Senator explain why this new standard was created?

Mr. BROWNBACK. I am happy to respond to the Senator from Minnesota.

This was raised in conference committee under thorough discussion about this new standard of "extreme hardship involving unusual and severe harm." There was a fear on the part of some conferees that some judicial interpretations over the term "extreme hardship" might be too expansive; specifically, the conferees objected to an interpretation that the applicant could prove "extreme hardship" by showing he or she would miss American baseball after being deported from the United States. So this language should be interpreted as a higher standard than some of these expansive interpretations of "extreme hardship."

At the same time, however, this language should not exclude bona fide victims who would suffer genuine and serious harm if they were deported. There is no requirement that the harm be physical harm. I repeat, there is no requirement that the harm be physical harm or that it be caused by the trafficking itself. The harm or the hardship does not have to be caused by the trafficking itself. The purpose of inserting the phrase "unusual and severe" is to require a showing that something more than the inconvenience and dislocation that any alien would suffer upon removal might occur.

REV_00256192

I wish to make it clear in future interpretations of this act, while this is higher than extreme hardship, it doesn't require physical harm; it doesn't require the harm be associated with the trafficking, to be able to allow an American to qualify under this new definition within the act.

I thank my colleague from Minnesota for allowing me the opportunity to clarify this particular issue.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Senator for his clarification.

We have been talking about the trafficking legislation. Before a final vote, I want to get back to that legislation. I think it is such an important human rights effort.

I will talk about the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act and make a couple of points. Again, to have a vote on legislation that goes after this egregious practice of trafficking of women and girls for the purposes of forced prostitution and forced labor is important to our country and to the world. Then to have reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act also makes this a doubly important bill. I am so pleased to be on the conference committee and to be able to be a part of helping to make this happen.

I thank Senator Biden, I thank Senator Hatch, and I thank Senator Leahy and others, for including in this bill authorization for what we call safe havens or safety visitation centers. Let me explain by way of example from Minnesota. I need to honor these children, and I need to honor their mother. Anyone from Minnesota will remember the case of Alex and Brandon, seen in this picture; two beautiful boys. It was these two boys and what happened to them that made me understand the importance of safety visitation centers more than anything else that could ever have happened.

[*S10180]

On July 3, 1996, Brandon, who was 5, and Alex, who was 4, were murdered by their father during an unsupervised visit. Their mother, Angela, was separated from Kurt Frank, the children's father. During the marriage, she was physically and emotionally abused. Angela had an order of protection against Kurt Frank, but during the custody hearing she requested her husband not be allowed to see the children in unsupervised settings. The request he see the children only in supervised settings was rejected by the judge. Kirk Frank was able to see his sons with no supervision. When he did, and God knows why, he killed them. We have a center now, that the community supports, which is a safety visitation center.

REV_00256193

The point is this: There are two different examples. Say a woman has been battered. And please remember, every 13 seconds a woman is battered in the country. Say she has had the courage to get away, to end this marriage. There is a separation going on and a divorce; you are still not necessarily going to say the father can't see the child, but if the father comes to the home to pick up the child, he steps inside the home and then battering can start again. There is no protection. If you can do it at the safe havens, supervision centers, you can protect the woman and you can protect the children.

Or it might be the case where you are worried about the threat of a father to the children, but you cannot say a father can't see the child; with a supervised visitation center the father can see the children there.

This is really important. We are working very hard right now with Senator Hollings to get some funding. I am pleased this is a part of this legislation.

I say to colleagues, this was the work of Jill Morningstar on my staff, who, with my wife Sheila, made a lot of progress. It is so important to reauthorize. The hotline is important; the training for police is important; the support for law enforcement is important; the support for battered women shelters is so important for the people who are there in the trenches. All of this matters. The focus on rural communities and support in rural communities is important, as well. It has made a difference, a big difference.

In my State of Minnesota, this year already 33 women have been murdered. Each case is an example of "domestic violence." Last year, in the whole year, it was only 28. The year is only half over and we have already had 33 women who have been murdered. Clearly, we are going to have to do a lot more. To reauthorize this bill today is a huge victory.

Mr. President, I think it should whet our appetite to do much, much more. I am absolutely committed to making sure we do more to provide some support for children who witness this violence in their homes. These kids run into difficulty in school. These kids, quite often, run into trouble. These children are falling between the cracks and there is no real support for them.

There is another piece of legislation--and I hope to get it in the bill--I am very excited about Day One in Minnesota where we want to make sure all of the shelters are electronically wired so with one call to the hotline, a woman will know where she and her children can go. Rather than calling, being told there is no space, and then not knowing where to go, it should only take one call. That is very important.

REV_00256194

Then, there is a whole set of initiatives that would enable women to be more independent, to get more support to be more independent--whether it be affordable housing, whether it be family and medical applied to women in this situation, whether it be more job training--you name it. This will enable women to be put in a position where they are not unable or unwilling to leave a very dangerous situation for themselves and their children.

I say to colleagues, I am so pleased we are going to pass this conference report with an overwhelming vote. I am pleased to be a part of helping to work out this agreement. But I also think clearly, more than anything else, this ought to make us more determined to do much more. Again, about every 13 seconds a woman is battered in her home today in our country.

I will take a little more time to talk about the trafficking bill, since both these bills are linked together, to again make the point for all my colleagues, Democrats and Republicans alike, it is critically important to vote for this conference report, to keep this conference report intact.

I will keep thanking Senator Brownback. It has been great to work with him. I thank him for his fine work.

We are talking about 50,000 women, girls, trafficked to our country. We are talking about 2 million worldwide. We are talking about women, sometimes girls as young as 10 or 11, coming from countries where there is economic disintegration. They are trying to figure out a way they could go somewhere and they are told they could become waitresses. They are told there is a job.

When they arrive, their visas are taken away from them; they are beaten; they don't know the language; they don't know their rights; and they are forced into prostitution. We had a massage parlor 2 miles from here in Bethesda which was staffed mainly by Russian-Ukraine women. That is one example. This is one of the grimmest aspects of the new global economy. It is, in many ways, more profitable than drugs because these women and girls are recyclable. It is that God-awful. In the year 2000, this legislation is the first of its kind in this country. It is a model for many other governments around the world.

We put a focus on three "P's": No. 1, prevention, getting the outreach work done to other nations so these young girls and women will know what they are getting into and have some understanding what these traffickers are about. No. 2, protection, so when a girl steps forward, balcony while six of their Russian friends watched.

REV_00256195

In Serbia, also last year, said a young Ukrainian woman who escaped in October, a woman who refused to work as a prostitute was beheaded in public.

In Milan a week before Christmas, the police broke up a ring that was holding auctions in which women abducted from the countries of the former Soviet Union were put on blocks, partially naked, and sold at an average price of just under $1,000.

"This is happening wherever you look now," said Michael Platzer, the Vienna-based head of operations for the United Nations' Center for International Crime Prevention. "The mafia is not stupid. There is less law enforcement since the Soviet Union fell apart and more freedom of movement. The earnings are incredible. The overhead is low--you don't have to buy cars and guns. Drugs you sell once and they are gone. Women can earn money for a long time."

"Also," he added, "the laws help the gangsters. Prostitution is semilegal in many places and that makes enforcement tricky. In most cases punishment is very light."

In some countries, Israel among them, there is not even a specific law against the sale of human beings.

Mr. Platzer said that although certainly "tens of thousands" of women were sold into prostitution each year, he was uncomfortable with statistics since nobody involved has any reason to tell the truth.

"But if you want to use numbers," he said, "think about this. Two hundred million people are victims of contemporary forms of slavery. Most aren't prostitutes, of course, but children in sweatshops, domestic workers, migrants. During four centuries, 12 million people were believed to be involved in the slave trade between Africa and the New World. The 200 million--and many of course are women who are trafficked for sex--is a current figure. It's happening now. Today."

distress calls: far-flung victims provide few clues

The distress call came from Donetsk, the bleak center of coal production in southern Ukraine. A woman was screaming on the telephone line. Her sister and a friend were prisoners in a bar somewhere near Rome. They spoke no Italian and had no way out, but had managed, briefly, to get hold of a man's cell phone.

"Do you have any idea where they are, exactly?" asked Olga Shved, who runs La Strada in Kiev, Ukraine's new center dedicated to fighting the trafficking of women in Eastern Europe and the countries of the former Soviet Union.

REV_00256142

then she is not the one who pays the price. Right now there is no temporary visa protection so if you were to try to get out of this you are the one who is deported. In the meantime, these traffickers go without any punishment, which is something I want to get to in a moment. So you want to provide that protection. You also want to provide services for these young women to be able to rebuild their lives after they have been through this torture. It is torture. And finally, No. 3, prosecution. Right now our law enforcement community tells us they want to go after them but they do not have the laws. What we are saying is, if you are involved in this trafficking, you are going to face stiff sentences. If you are involved in the trafficking of a girl under the age of 14, you can face a life sentence. So there is a very strong part of the provision dealing with punishment.

We also have a listing of countries where this is happening, with a special focus on governments that are complicit in it. The President can take action against those governments, but there are also security waivers and other waivers. It is a balanced piece of legislation. I am proud of it. I think it will make a difference.

I think it is terribly important. I read some of these examples before. Let me give a couple of examples right now of what is happening in the year 2000.

In Los Angeles, where traffickers kidnapped a Chinese woman, raped her, forced her into prostitution, posted guards to control her movements, and burned her with cigarettes, the lead defendant received 4 years and the other defendants received 2 to 3 years for this offense.

In another case where Asian women were kept physically confined for years, with metal bars on the windows, guards and an electronic monitoring system, and were forced to submit to sex with as many as 400 customers to repay their smuggling debt, the traffickers received between 4 and 9 years. This is the year 2000 we are talking about.

Then I gave the example of a 1996 trafficking case involving Russian and Ukrainian women who would answer ads to be au pairs, sales clerks, and waitresses but were forced to provide sexual services and live in a massage parlor in Bethesda, MD. The Russian-American massage parlor owner was fined. He entered a plea bargain, the charges were dropped, with the restriction he would not operate a business again in Montgomery County. The women, who had not been paid any salary and were charged $150 for their housing, were deported or left the country.

This is what we are dealing with right now. There was a case involving

[*S10181]

REV_00256196

70 deaf Mexicans that my colleagues may remember, who were held under lock and key, forced to peddle trinkets, who were beaten and in some cases tortured. The leader received 14 years and the other traffickers from 1 to 8 years.

We intend to take this more seriously. Let me give one other example. The United States v. Hou, several Mexican nationals, all illegally in the United States, were required to live in one of the chicken sheds at an egg ranch. The shed was open to the elements. The defendants, man and wife, did not give the men any shelter, but encouraged them to build a small room out of cardboard and styrofoam egg cartons.

The men lived less than 15 feet from the chickens they tended. The men had to spread powerful pesticides in and around the chicken sheds, and the chemicals and various fuel oils were stored immediately next to their cardboard room. Faulty wiring in the rickety building resulted in a fire. One of the workers was killed as he tried to escape the shed and another suffered horrible burns. Despite the atrocious conditions, there was no evidence that the men had been kept in the defendants' service through threats of force or violence; the men stayed in the shed because Ms. Hou preyed upon their lack of English-speaking ability and lack of immigration status, deliberately misleading the victims and convincing them there was nowhere else to go.

Because the labor of the workers was maintained through a scheme of nonviolent and psychological coercion, the case did not fall under the involuntary servitude statutes--which could have resulted in life sentences given the death of one of the victims. Our legislation changes that. That is why this legislation is so important. No longer in the United States of America are we going to turn our gaze away from this kind of exploitation, to this kind of murder of innocent people.

This is a real commitment by the Senate and the Congress to defend human rights. This is a good piece of legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I wish to speak on a couple of other provisions in this bill to clarify those for Members. We will be voting on it later today. If others of my colleagues desire to speak on this bill, I urge them to come to the floor and speak now or forever hold their peace on this particular piece of legislation.

The item I wish to speak on now is Aimee's law. This is a part of this overall conference report that has passed the House, as I mentioned, by 371-1. Aimee's law was prompted by the tragic death of a college senior, Aimee Willard, who was from Brookhaven, PA, near Philadelphia. Arthur Bomar is a convicted murderer who was earlier paroled from a Nevada prison. Even after he had assaulted a woman in prison, Nevada released him early. Bomar traveled to Pennsylvania where he found Aimee. He kidnapped, brutally raped, and murdered Aimee. He was prosecuted a second time for murder for this terrible crime in Delaware County, PA.

REV_00256197

Aimee's mother, Gail Willard, has become a tireless advocate for victims' rights and serves as an inspiration on this particular piece of legislation.

This important legislation would use Federal crime-fighting funds to create an incentive for States to adopt stricter sentencing laws by holding States financially accountable for the tragic consequences of an early release which results in a violent crime being perpetrated on the citizens of another State. Specifically, Aimee's law will redirect Federal crime-fighting dollars from a State which has released early a murderer, rapist, child molester, to pay the prosecutorial and incarceration costs incurred by a State which has had to reconvict this released felon for a similar type of crime.

More than 14,000 murders, rapes, and sexual assaults on children are committed each year by felons who have been released after serving a sentence for one of these very same crimes.

Convicted murderers, rapists, and child molesters who are released from prisons and cross State lines are responsible for sexual assaults on more than 1,200 people annually, including 935 children, including Aimee Willard.

The reason I point this out is because Aimee's law previously passed this body by a vote of 81-17. As I mentioned, it redirects Federal crime funds from a State that has released early a murderer, rapist, or child molester, to pay the prosecutorial and incarceration costs incurred by a State which has had to reconvict this felon for a similar crime.

The formula for early release is if the criminal served less than 85 percent of his original sentence, and if a State kept a criminal in prison less time than the national average for a sentence of the same crime.

To counter concerns raised by the National Governors' Association, this does not federalize any crimes. I emphasize that, it does not federalize any crimes. It simply upholds State standards regarding murder, rape, and child molestation.

REV_00256198

Sex offenders have one of the highest recidivism rates of any crime, thus, requiring more stringent standards in amount of the sentence served.

This only affects Federal crime funds which are transferred from State 1 to State 2 where a crime has been committed of a similar type by the criminal who was released early from State 1.

The reason I go through this at some length is because some of my colleagues have a concern about this. I understand there will be a point of order raised against this as being part of the overall package. There will be a vote on that point of order.

If people want to get this bill dealing with sex trafficking, the Violence Against Women Act, the international terrorism aspect of this bill, the Internet alcohol enforcement of this bill through, they need to vote against those who seek to strip this particular provision out of the bill because if they strip this provision out, the bill has to go back to the House for it to be voted on, and it will have to be voted on again in the Senate.

We do not have the time to do it. It will kill the bill. If people vote to strip this provision out of this particular bill and send it back to the House, and it has to come back here, it will kill the bill. We do not have time to do that.

While some raise federalism arguments, most of our colleagues have already voted in favor of Aimee's law; 81 have voted in favor of it already. There are some arguable federalism principles involved. I think most of those have been worked out with the National Governors' Association. There is a strong advocacy group that has worked to get these standards where, if a person has been convicted in one State, they should serve their time rather than being released to commit a similar crime in another State. That is the direction of this.

I plead with my colleagues: Do not remove this provision. Do not support the point of order because, if you do, it is going to kill everything. It will kill the sex trafficking bill. It will kill the Violence Against Women Act. Do not do it. Most people have already supported this particular provision, Aimee's law.

I wish to say a couple of things on other issues before we break for the policy luncheons. I particularly appreciate my colleagues, Senator Lautenberg and Senator Mack, for their provisions on the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act. I understand Senator Hatch will speak later about the 21st Amendment Enforcement Act on VAWA. We have had an excellent discussion this morning on the importance of this legislation protecting women who are subject to domestic violence. This is reauthorization of important language and important legislation and strengthening of it as well. That is an important feature.

REV_00256199

I appreciate Senate majority leader Trent Lott bringing this issue to the floor. It is a good package of protection for both domestic and international women and children subject to violence. That is the theme that runs through this set of acts. It is protection for women, protection for children, protection domestically, and protection internationally.

I am very pleased with this legislation. It is a key piece of legislation to pass during this session of Congress to provide that level of protection. I am glad it has been done on a bipartisan basis. Mostly my colleagues from the other side of the aisle have spoken this morning supporting this legislation. Support is similarly strong on our side of the aisle. It is good to have that support back and forth.

[*S10182]

Rather than using up the rest of my time, I simply say to my colleagues who want to speak, please come to the floor. I anticipate we will be voting on this legislation by the middle of the afternoon. We will be recessing for policy luncheons from 12:30 p.m. until I believe 2:15 p.m., which is the normal recess time.

This will be a good time for people to comment on this important legislation. I plead with them: Do not strike this particular provision, Aimee's law, because it will sink the entire bill. It is a good bill. It is good legislation. It previously passed both Houses overwhelmingly. Let's get it done.

I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield the distinguished Senator from New Mexico time off my time. I yield to him for another purpose, and once he speaks, I am sure the Chair will understand the reason. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for his courtesy in yielding me some time. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business for 3 minutes.

REV_00256200

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. Bingaman are located in today's Record under "Morning Business.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I reiterate something the Senator from Kansas and the Republican floor leader on this bill have said, and that is that we hope, because of the request of a number of Senators on both sides of the aisle, to get these votes on both the Thompson point of order and final passage sometime midafternoon today. As one who holds the largest bulk of the individual time, I alert my colleagues that after the distinguished Senator from Utah and the distinguished Senator from Delaware, I will yield back the remaining part of that time which will move up somewhat the time of the vote.

The reason, incidentally, I have reserved the bulk of my time is to protect a number of Senators who wished to speak. I think virtually all of them have spoken. At least one of the Senators who would have wished to speak, the Senator from California, Mrs. Feinstein, has just undergone surgery for an accident to her leg and is not going to be here, although, of course, any statement by her will be printed in the Record. But the others have spoken.

Mr. President, I am glad that the Senate is finally taking up this conference report. Unlike the conference on the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill that passed the Senate in May 1999 with a bipartisan majority of 73 votes, and so many other matters that are still left undone by this Congress, we have an opportunity through this conference report to come to conclusion on three items that I have supported and tried to pass for many months. Unfortunately, there are two additional, extraneous items that were added over my opposition and that should not have been added to this conference report at all. I will speak on each of these matters.

At the outset, I want to acknowledge the important work of Representative Conyers in the House, who has been a stalwart and consistent supporter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2000. Without his cooperation and support and the hard work of his staff, we would not be standing here today. I also want to pay tribute to the efforts of Senators Boxer, Mikulski, Lincoln, Landrieu, Murray and Feinstein. Their efforts throughout this Congress, including in the last several days, have made the difference in our ability to move forward to begin this debate today.

With Senators Kennedy, Biden, Specter, Smith and so many others, I have been urging the Republican leadership to take up and pass the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 for some time. I had to urge action by the Judiciary Committee for several weeks before we were finally able to have it added to the agenda on June 15, 2000. It was reported unanimously the same month. Over the last several months since this legislation was reported, I have worked and prodded and pushed along with our Democratic Leader Senator Daschle, Senator Reid, Senator Durbin, Senator Robb, Senator Bingaman and others on both sides of the aisle to try to get this matter taken up and passed without further delay.

REV_00256201

The President of the United States wrote the Majority Leader back on September 27, 2000 urging passage. The First Lady and the Vice President had previously called for passage back in June at the time of the Judiciary Committee markup. The Violence Against Women Act of 2000 is a matter upon which we need to act.

I addressed this matter twice on the Senate floor in late September when an effort was being made by some on the Republican side of the aisle to try to use VAWA as a vehicle to force consideration of a flawed bankruptcy bill or to override Oregon state law. I said that playing political games with this important legislation was the wrong thing to do and that VAWA should not be used as leverage to enact less worthy provisions. Unfortunately, the Republican leadership in the Senate has been adamant in its refusal to take up and consider VAWA as a stand alone matter, even after the House passed its bill by a 415 to 3 vote. While we have been successful in preventing VAWA from being used as a vehicle for some measures, thanks in part to the President pro tempore Senator Thurmond and Senator Brownback honoring commitments they made to me in order to go to conference, we have not been wholly successful and two additional and unfortunate riders are included over my objection in this conference report.

Due to their dilatory tactics, VAWA was allowed by the Republican leadership to lapse on Saturday, September 30, despite the fact that it has served the women of this country well and the measure had passed the House by a vote of 415 to 3. Such inaction by the current Senate majority is not limited to reauthorization of VAWA. Congressional leaders have continued to drag their feet on enacting comprehensive juvenile crime prevention and enforcement legislation and reasonable gun safety measures, which have been stalled in conference for over a year. Judicial vacancies around the country and most acutely in our federal courts of appeals remain vacant month after month, year after year, while qualified women and men cannot get a hearing or a vote. Legislation to extend the Campbell-Leahy program to help provide bulletproof vests for local law enforcement officers was the victim of a secret hold in the Republican Senate cloakroom. Important intellectual property legislation is stalled without explanation by a similar anonymous hold on the other side of the aisle. And hate crime legislation, the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2000, has been dropped in conference in spite of the votes in both the Senate and House approving it.

REV_00256202

I am pleased that we will finally be able to reestablish the Violence Against Women Act, a law that makes such a profound difference in the lives of women and families who fall victim to domestic violence. I would not normally support efforts to add extraneous items in a conference report. In this case, in light of the unwillingness of the Senate Republican leadership to allow the Senate to act on the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 and the lapse of its authorization, I joined with Senator Biden and Senator Hatch to add it to the sex trafficking conference report we now consider.

I agreed with Senator Biden's assessment that in light of its importance and the resistance we have seen from the Senate Republican leadership to proceed to the VAWA bill for a straight up or down vote, this was the only way we would ever be able to get it considered by the Senate this year. I commend Senator Biden for making clear at the second and last meeting of the conferees on September 28th that he intended to insist on the conference reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act. Indeed, I had raised it at our initial meeting of conferees as the one thing we should consider adding to this bill, if anything extraneous was to be considered.

Unfortunately, when we voted on adding VAWA to the conference report, only three Senate conferees voted to support it--Senators Biden, Hatch and me--and the other four Senate conferees all voted against. I am glad that over the ensuing days, the other four Senate conferees and the House conferees, whose votes initially seemed to doom this effort, have reversed position and joined with us to add VAWA into this conference report. I am glad that others agree with us that while we need to address the tragic plight of women who are brought to the United States, we need to pass reauthorization of VAWA to help battered women in this country, as well.

[*S10183]

Although a conferee, I did not sign the conference report that we consider today. It may come as a surprise to some who have served in this body and remember how conferences are supposed to proceed, that I was not given an opportunity to consider the final report or to sign before it was filed. Indeed, after a second short meeting of conferees, the final meeting, which had been promised so that we could finalize our action, never occurred. Side deals were struck and broken and revised and implemented without resuming the conference. Legislating around here has come to resemble the television program "Survivor" more than the process intended by the Constitution or our Senate rules. We have all become increasingly accustomed to shortcuts in the legislative process, but we are now getting to the point that once sufficient numbers of signatures are obtained on a conference report, once an alliance has formed, conferees from the minority may not even be accorded an opportunity to view the final package let alone asked for their views. In this matter, after I had worked to ensure that VAWA was included in the conference report, I was treated like a member of the ill-fated Pagong tribe.

Had I been consulted we might have avoided the extended debate and point of order that Senator Thompson is bringing today. I was able to intervene just before the filing of the conference report when I obtained a draft that showed the elimination of the small state minimum funding level in certain grant programs. These eliminations would have been such a disaster for Vermont, New Hampshire, Delaware, Utah, Alaska and so many small and rural states that I had raise a strong objection and the small state minimum of $600,000 for shelters was restored by a last-minute handwritten change to the final conference report.

Unfortunately, while this conference report contains provisions that enjoy broad bipartisan support and will make a positive contribution to the well-being of many people, the Republican majority could not resist loading this conference report with other legislative proposals that are so problematic they could not have passed as stand-alone measures in this or any other Congress.

Let me begin by reviewing the positive parts of this conference report. These are the reasons that, last Friday, our colleagues in the House passed the Conference Report on Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act 371 to 1.

The trafficking of people for the illicit sex trade or slave labor is plainly abhorrent. This conference report partially addresses that problem by providing additional authority to law enforcement and offering visas to victims of severe trafficking, among other measures. Those who have experienced the horror of trafficking and are willing to assist law enforcement in prosecuting trafficking should receive the option of staying in the United States. The law enforcement and immigration measures in this report are the result of compromises reached between both Houses and both sides. In some cases, especially in the immigration area, these provisions are not as generous as I and many other members of this conference would prefer.

This bill will also insist that information about severe forms of trafficking in persons be provided in the annual State Department Country Report for each foreign country, an important step forward in our attempts to raise consciousness about this issue. It also provides for the establishment of an Inter-Agency Task Force to monitor and combat trafficking, with annual and interim reports on countries whose governments do not comply with the minimum standards. The bill calls upon the President to establish initiatives to enhance economic opportunity for potential trafficking victims, such as microcredit lending programs, training, and education.

As someone who has been a strong supporter of human rights, both in the United States and abroad, I am pleased to be associated with this attempt to reduce trafficking and protect its victims. I hope that the Senate can also turn its attention to human rights issues that affect immigrants who arrive in the United States willingly. In particular, I request that the Senate consider S. 1940, the Refugee Protection Act, a bill I have introduced with Senator Brownback that would restrict the use of expedited removal to times of immigration emergencies. Under expedited removal, those who flee persecution in their home countries face automatic removal from our country if they are traveling without documents, or even with documents that are facially valid but that an INS officer suspects are invalid. The limited protections that were built into this process when it was adopted in 1996 have proven insufficient, and we are receiving continuing reports of people in real danger being forced to leave the United States without even a hearing. This is simply inappropriate, and does an injustice to our nation's reputation as a haven for the oppressed.

REV_00256204

As I already noted, reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, or VAWA II, was also added to this report with strong bipartisan support. This is a particularly appropriate bill to add to this conference report. As the conference report states, " t raffickers primarily target women and girls, who are disproportionately affected by poverty, the lack of access to education, chronic unemployment, discrimination, and the lack of economic opportunity in countries of origin." VAWA II contains a number of important programs to protect women and children in this country, and would complement the goals of this legislation.

I witnessed the devastating effects of domestic violence early in my career as the Vermont State's Attorney for Chittenden County. In those days, long before the passage of the VAWA, Vermont lacked the support programs and services to assist victims of domestic violence. Today, because of the effort and dedication of people in Vermont and across the country who work on these problems every day, an increasing number of women and children are receiving help through domestic violence programs and shelters around the nation.

Six years ago, VAWA passed Congress as part of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act. That Act combined tough law enforcement strategies with safeguards and services for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. I am proud to say that Vermont was the first State in the country to apply for and receive funding under VAWA. Since VAWA was enacted, Vermont has received almost $14 million in VAWA funds. Since the passage of VAWA in 1994, I have been privileged to work with groups such as the Vermont Network Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault and the Vermont Center for Crime Victim Services and countless advocates who work to stop to violence against women and who provide assistance to victims.

This funding has enabled Vermont to develop specialized prosecution units and child advocacy centers throughout the state. Lori Hayes, Executive Director of the Vermont Center for Crime Victim Services and Marty Levin of the Vermont Network Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Abuse have been especially instrumental in coordinating VAWA grants in

REV_00256205

The woman's answer was no. Ms. Shved began searching for files and telephone numbers of the local consul, the police, anybody who could help.

"Do they know how far from Rome they are?" she asked, her voice tightening with each word. "What about the name of the street or bar? Anything will help," she said, jotting notes furiously as she spoke. "We can get the police on this, but we need something. If they call back, tell them to give us a clue. The street number. The number of a bus that runs past. One thing is all we need."

Ms. Shved hung up and called officials at Ukraine's Interior Ministry and the Foreign Ministry. Her conversations were short, direct and obviously a routine part of her job.

That is because Ukraine--and to a lesser degree its Slavic neighbors Russia and Belarus--has replaced Thailand and the Philippines as the epicenter of the global business in trafficking women. The Ukrainian problem has been worsened by a ravaged economy, an atrophied system of law enforcement, and criminal gangs that grow more brazen each year. Young European women are in demand, and Ukraine, a country of 51 million people, has a seemingly endless supply. It is not that hard to see why.

Neither Russia nor Ukraine reports accurate unemployment statistics. But even partial numbers present a clear story of chaos and economic dislocation. Federal employment statistics in Ukraine indicate that more than two-thirds of the unemployed are women. The Government also keeps another statistic: employed but not working. Those are people who technically have jobs, and can use company amenities like day-care centers and hospitals. But they do not work or get paid. Three-quarters are women. And of those who have lost their jobs since the Soviet Union dissolved in 1991, more than 80 percent are women.

The average salary in Ukraine today is slightly less than $30 a month, but it is half that in the small towns that criminal gangs favor for recruiting women to work abroad. On average, there are 30 applicants for every job in most Ukrainian cities. There is no real hope; but there is freedom.

In that climate, looking for work in foreign countries has increasingly become a matter of survival.

"It's no secret that the highest prices now go for the white women," said Marco Buffo, executive director of On the Road, an anti-trafficking organization in northern Italy. "They are the novelty item now. It used to be Nigerians and Asians at the top of the market. Now it's the Ukrainians."

Economics is not the only factor causing women to flee

REV_00256143

Vermont. Their hard work has brought grant funding to Vermont for encouraging the development and establishment of arrest policies for combating rural domestic violence and child abuse. These grants have made a real difference in the lives of those who suffer from violence and abuse. Reauthorization of these vital programs in VAWA II will continue to build on these successes.

VAWA II continues to move us toward reducing violence against women by strengthening law enforcement through the extension of STOP grants, which encourage a multi-disciplinary approach to improving the criminal justice system's response to violence against women. With support from STOP grants, law enforcement, prosecutors, courts, victim advocates and service providers work together to ensure victim safety and offender accountability.

[*S10184]

The benefits of STOP grants are evident throughout Vermont. With STOP grants the Windham County Domestic Violence Unit, the Rutland County Women's Network and Shelter and others like them have enhanced victim advocacy services, improved safety for women and children, and ensured that perpetrators are held accountable. The Northwest Unit for Special Investigations in St. Albans, Vermont, established a multi-disciplinary approach to the investigation of adult sexual assault and domestic violence cases with the help of STOP funds. By linking victims with advocacy programs at the time of the initial report, the Unit finds that more victims get needed services and support and thus find it easier to participate in the investigation and subsequent prosecution. The State's Attorney's Office, which has designated a prosecutor to participate in the Unit, has implemented a new protocol for the prosecution of domestic violence cases. The protocol and multi-disciplinary approach are credited with an 80 percent conviction rate in domestic violence and sexual assault cases.

Passing VAWA II will continue grants that strengthen pro-arrest policies and enforcement of protection orders. In a rural state like Vermont, law enforcement agencies greatly benefit from cooperative, inter-agency efforts to combat and solve significant problems. Last year, approximately $850,000 of this funding supported Vermont efforts to encourage arrest policies.

Vermont will also benefit from the extension of Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grants under VAWA II. These grants are designed to make victim services more accessible to women and children living in rural areas. I worked hard to see these provisions included in the original VAWA in 1994, and I am proud that its success has merited an increased authorization for funding in VAWA II. Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grants have been utilized by the Vermont Network Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault, the Vermont Attorney General's Office, and the Vermont Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services to increase community awareness, develop cooperative relationships between state child protection agencies and domestic violence programs, expand existing multi disciplinary task forces to include allied professional groups, and create local multi-use supervised visitation centers.

REV_00256206

VAWA II also reauthorizes the National Stalker and Domestic Violence Reduction Grant. This important grant program assists in the improvement of local, state and national crime databases for tracking stalking and domestic violence. As we work to prevent violence against women, we must not forget those who have already fallen victim to it. VAWA II recognizes that combating violence against women extends beyond providing assistance to victims, it includes preventing women from becoming victims at all.

The National Domestic Violence Hotline, which has assisted over 180,000 callers, will continue its crucial operation through the reauthorization of VAWA. Much like the state hotline that the Vermont Network Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault helped establish in Vermont, the National Hotline reaches victims who may feel they have nowhere to turn.

I am especially pleased to see that VAWA II will authorize a new grant program for civil legal assistance. In the past, funding for legal services for victims of domestic violence was dependent on a set-aside in the STOP grant appropriation. This separate grant authorization will allow victims of violence, stalking and sexual assault, who would otherwise be unable to afford professional legal representation, to obtain access to trained attorneys and advocacy services. In my State, Vermont Legal Aid, the Vermont Network to End Domestic Violence and the South Royalton Legal Clinic of Vermont Law School are currently involved in a collaborative project to expand civil legal assistance services to domestic violence victims across the state. These three organizations are partnering to create Intensive Service Teams that will provide coordinated civil legal assistance and victim advocacy in Rutland County and the Northeast Kingdom. Grants such as this one that support training, technical assistance and support for cooperative efforts between victim advocacy groups and legal assistance providers will continue to prosper under VAWA II.

I remain concerned, however, over a highly objectionable provision that prohibits any expenditure of the civil legal assistant grant funds to support litigation with respect to abortion. Currently, the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) operates under two abortion-related restriction provisions: The 1974 LSC statute bans the use of federally appropriated Corporation funds for legal assistance for any abortion-related proceeding or litigation. Additionally, an appropriations rider to the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill restricts LSC funds from use by any person or entity that participates in abortion-related litigation.

The language in VAWA II bill reaches further, in the sense that it would ban more organizations than just LSC from spending funds on abortion-related litigation. Under the Senate language, grants can be made to private, nonprofit entities, Indian tribal governments, and publicly funded organizations such as law schools. These grantees are certainly worthy and appropriate to provide these services generally; the objection is solely that they should not be gagged from providing abortion related legal assistance. I am concerned about the precedent this provision would set in expanding the restriction on abortion-related litigation to other programs and organizations. I think this kind of language should give us pause as we consider the effect it would have on victims who, in the face of domestic violence, sexual assault in family relationships, incest or rape, must run a gauntlet of congressionally imposed barriers in order simply to obtain full and complete information about their comprehensive health-care options.

REV_00256207

The original VAWA authorized funding for programs that provide shelter to battered women and children. I am pleased to see that VAWA II expands this funding so that facilities such as the Women Helping Battered Women Shelter in Burlington, Vermont, and the Rutland County Women's Shelter in Rutland, Vermont will continue to serve victims in their most vulnerable time of need. As I have noted, at one point I obtained a draft conference report that had dropped the $600,000 small state minimum funding these grants. I am relieved that my objection was heard and the minimum restored.

As glad as I am that we are finally reauthorizing VAWA, this is not the version of VAWA that I cosponsored and supported in the Judiciary Committee and urged the Senate to enact. In fact, this is not the VAWA II bill that was negotiated among staff at a bipartisan, bicameral meeting earlier in this process. The version of VAWA II in this conference report was negotiated behind closed doors in the last minutes before the conference report was filed. Unfortunately, this approach saw additional provisions added and struck that have diminished the final product. One provision of particular concern to me is that on transitional housing.

The previous Senate version of the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, S. 2787, had over 70 co-sponsors. I am one of them. That version included better provisions on transitional housing assistance. It would have been a significant improvement over the original VAWA. This new grant program for short-term housing assistance and support services for homeless families who have fled from domestic violence environments was a priority for me and Vermont, where availability of affordable housing is at an all-time low. Unfortunately, this authorization was reduced to one year without my consent. Those involved in the discussions attribute the change to "jurisdictional concerns" of the Health, Labor and Pensions Committee. I look forward to working with Senators Jeffords, Gregg and Kennedy next year during reauthorization of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to extend the authorization of this important program. We should all be concerned with providing victims of domestic violence with a safe place to recover from their traumatic experiences. In addition, I would like to see more support for groups that address the need for funding for under-served populations.

REV_00256208

[*S10185]

There are positive things to come out of the revised version of VAWA II. I am pleased that we were able to cover "dating violence" in most of the provisions and grant programs. The Bureau of Justice Statistics report indicates that more than four in every 10 incidents of domestic violence involves non-married persons, and further, that the highest rate of domestic violence occurs among young people aged 16-24. It is crucial that we authorize prosecution of their offenders. We cannot ignore this increasingly at risk segment of the population. The House-passed version of VAWA II had contained such provisions and I support them as they have been incorporated into the conference report.

In 1994, we designed VAWA to prevent abusive husbands from using control over their wives' immigration status to control them. Over the ensuing six years we have discovered additional areas that need to be addressed to protect immigrant women from abuse, and have attempted to do so in this legislation. VAWA II will ensure that the immigration status of battered women will not be affected by changes in the status of their abusers. It will also make it easier for abused women and their children to become lawful permanent residents and obtain cancellation of removal. With this legislation, battered immigrant women should not have to choose to stay with their abusers in order to stay in the United States.

I am pleased that we have taken these additional steps to protect immigrant women facing domestic abuse in the United States. I would also like to point out the difficult situation of immigrant women who face domestic violence if they are returned to their home country.

Numerous cases have arisen recently in which women who fear being killed by abusive spouses in their native lands were denied claims for asylum, despite the fact that the police in those countries do not enforce what limited laws apply to domestic violence. There are additional cases in which women who fear for their lives due to ingrained social practices--such as "honor killings" in Jordan, in which families have female relatives killed for "dishonoring" them--have lost asylum claims. The Attorney General is currently reviewing the Board of Immigration Appeals decision Matter of R-A-, which is the precedent on which these later decisions have been based. I have written, along with Senator Landrieu and many other of my colleagues, urging the Attorney General to reverse this decision and protect women who face persecution. I renew that request today, and hope that the passage of this legislation will prompt action on this issue as well.

The conference report includes a provision that would require dissemination of sex registry information to colleges and universities.

REV_00256209

Currently, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) applies strict restrictions on the dissemination of information in "education records," but these restrictions are specifically defined to exclude "records maintained by a law enforcement unit" of the school and were created for a law enforcement purpose. Thus, to the extent that campus police get information about registered sex offenders under State law, they are able to use it as they wish. Apparently not satisfied to leave this issue to the States, the conference report would mandate that States provide sex registry information concerning students to colleges and universities where the students are registered.

I see no need to impose a federal disclosure requirement when the States are now free to regulate as they see fit the dissemination of sex registry information to schools and campus police, who may use it to protect the safety of those on campus. No one is opposed to taking adequate safety measures regarding sex offenders on campus. My concern has to do with unnecessary federal mandates when the States are perfectly capable of addressing the issue.

VAWA II includes a provision to enhance protections for older women from domestic violence and sexual assault. Last year I introduced the Seniors Safety Act, S. 751, which would enhance penalties for crimes against seniors. This provision in VAWA II is an important complement to that legislation and I am pleased this provision has been able to generate wide support.

VAWA II would also help young victims of crime through funding for the establishment of safe and supervised visitation centers for children in order to reduce the opportunity for domestic violence. Grants will also be extended to continue funding agencies serving homeless youth who have been or who are at risk of abuse and to continue funding for victims of child abuse, including money for advocates, training for judicial personnel and televised testimony.

Many of the most successful services for victims start at the local level, such as Vermont's model hotline on domestic violence and sexual assault. VAWA II recognizes these local successes and continues grant funding of community demonstration projects for the intervention and prevention of domestic violence.

The original VAWA was an important and comprehensive Federal effort to combat violence against women and to assist the victims of such violence. Passage of VAWA II gives us the opportunity to continue funding these successful programs, to improve victim services, and to strengthen these laws so that violence against women is eliminated. I am pleased that we were able to find a way to get this considered and passed. I deeply regret that we have not been able to do so in stand-alone legislation or before VAWA expired last month.

REV_00256210

The conference report also includes the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act. I commend Senators Lautenberg and Mack for working with the Administration on this consensus legislation which addresses serious policy concerns raised by prior versions of the bill. This measure has been cleared for action and passage by unanimous consent for some time by all Democratic Senators. In my view, it should have been passed in its own right a long time ago.

The Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act addresses an issue that should deeply concern all of us: the enforcement of court-ordered judgments that compensate the victims of state-sponsored terrorism. This legislation has the strong support of American families who have lost loved ones due to the callous indifference to life of international terrorist organizations and their client states, and it deserves our support as well.

One such family is the family of Alisa Flatow, an American student killed in Gaza in a 1995 bus bombing. The Flatow family obtained a $247 million judgment in Federal court against the Iranian-sponsored Islamic Jihad, which proudly claimed responsibility for the bombing that took her life. But the family has been unable to enforce this judgment because Iranian assets in the United States remain frozen.

The conference report that the Senate passes today will provide an avenue for the Flatow family and others in their position to recover some of the damages due them under American law. It will permit these plaintiffs to attach certain foreign assets to satisfy the compensatory damages portion of their judgments against foreign states for personal injury or death caused by an act of torture, extrajudicial killing, aircraft sabotage, hostage taking, or the provision of material support or resources for such an act. It will also permit these plaintiffs to recover post-judgment interest and, in the case of claims against Cuba, certain amounts that have been awarded as sanctions by judicial order.

I am also pleased that this measure also includes a Leahy-Feinstein amendment dealing with support for victims of international terrorism. This amendment will enable the Office for Victims of Crime to provide more immediate and effective assistance to Americans who are victims of terrorism abroad--Americans like those killed or injured in the embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania, and in the Pan Am 103 bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland. These victims deserve help, but according to OVC, existing programs are failing to meet their needs. Working with OVC, we have crafted legislation to correct this problem.

The Leahy-Feinstein part of this measure will permit the Office for Victims of Crime to serve these victims better by expanding the types of assistance for which the VOCA emergency reserve fund may be used, and the range of organizations to which assistance may be provided. These changes will not require new or appropriated funds: They simply allow OVC greater flexibility in using existing reserve funds to assist victims of terrorism abroad, including the victims of the Lockerbie and embassy bombings.

[*S10186]

REV_00256211

This provision will also authorize OVC to raise the cap on the VOCA emergency reserve fund from $50 million to $100 million, so that the fund is large enough to cover the extraordinary costs that would be incurred if a terrorist act caused massive casualties, and to replenish the reserve fund with unobligated funds from its other grant programs.

At the same time, the provision will simplify the presently-authorized system of using VOCA funds to provide victim compensation to American victims of terrorism abroad, by permitting OVC to establish and operate an international crime victim compensation program. This program will, in addition, cover foreign nationals who are employees of any American government institution targeted for terrorist attack. The source of funding is the VOCA emergency reserve fund, which we authorized in an amendment I offered to the 1996 Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act.

Finally, the provision clarifies that deposits into the Crime Victims Fund remain available for intended uses under VOCA when not expended immediately. This should quell concerns raised regarding the effect of spending caps included in appropriations bills last year and this. I understand the appropriations' actions to have deferred spending but not to have removed deposits from the Fund. This provision makes that explicit.

I want to thank Senator Feinstein for her support and assistance on this initiative. Senator Feinstein cares deeply about the rights of victims, and I am pleased that we could work together on some practical, pragmatic improvements to our federal crime victims' laws. We would have liked to do more. In particular, we would have liked to allow OVC to deliver timely and critically needed emergency assistance to all victims of terrorism and mass violence occurring outside the United States and targeted at the United States or United States nationals.

Unfortunately, to achieve bipartisan consensus on this provision, we were compelled to restrict OVC's authority, so that it may provide emergency assistance only to United States nationals and employees. It seems more than a little bizarre to me that the richest country in the world would reserve emergency aid for victims of terrorism who can produce a passport or W-2. I will continue to work with OVC and victims' organization to remedy this anomaly.

I regret that we have not done more for victims this year, or during the last few years. I have on several occasions noted my concern that we not dissipate the progress we could be making by focusing exclusively on efforts to amend the Constitution. Regretfully, I must note that the pace of victims legislation has slowed noticeably and many opportunities for progress have been squandered. I look forward to continuing to work with the Administration, victims groups, prosecutors, judges and other interested parties on how we can most effectively assist victims and provide them the greater voice and rights that they deserve.

REV_00256212

This is the third good part of the package that comes before the Senate today. The sex trafficking bill, VAWA II and the Justice for Victims of Terrorism legislation could each have passed in its own right. The are being bundled together because the Republican leadership refused to proceed to consideration of VAWA II or the victims legislation and this session is drawing to a close. We are already passed the sine die adjournment date that had been set by the Majority Leader. We are already into the second or third or fourth continuing resolution needed to keep the government operating while Congress completes appropriations bills that should have been enacted in July and September.

While the conference report contains many provisions which I support, it also has been used as a vehicle for some pet Republican legislative projects that I do not endorse. I refer specifically to "Aimee's law" and the "Twenty-First Amendment Enforcement Act."

The conference report contains a legislative proposal called "Aimee's law," which, though well intended, will not serve this country well. We all shudder when a violent offender is incarcerated for an insufficient length of time only to be released and claim another victim. Let us be clear: everyone agrees that serious violent offenders should serve appropriate and sufficient incarceration. Yet, Aimee's law is not the way to pursue this goal. Neither Aimee's law or Congress can accurately assess with one hundred percent accuracy which offender will be a recidivist and which offender will not. This proposal has myriad practical implementation problems that will make this law a headache to administer for the States and the Department of Justice, without living up to its promise of stopping future tragedies.

Ironically, Aimee's law will adversely affect the States' ability to fight crime. By taking law enforcement funds away from the states, the legislation will in effect reduce the states' capacity to fight crime. The Pennsylvania Secretary of Corrections has advised that "Pennsylvania, along with many other states, plans for the use of federal law enforcement money years in advance. Excessive penalties have a high potential to interfere with states' abilities to keep violent offenders--including those who have committed Aimee's law crimes--incarcerated for longer periods of time."

Specifically, this proposal would allow a state to apply to the Attorney General for reimbursement of the costs for investigation, prosecution and incarceration of prisoners who were previously convicted in another state for murder, rape or a dangerous sexual offense. The source of the reimbursement funds will be from Federal law enforcement assistance funds that would otherwise be paid out to the state that convicted the individual of the prior offense and released that offender.

REV_00256213

Last year, this proposal was adopted as an amendment to S. 254, the Juvenile Justice bill. Even then I expressed grave reservations with the language and complications contained in the legislation. Specifically, I noted that the proposal was "extremely complicated and can create a great deal of problems with some States" and offered "to work more on the language to see if there are areas of unnecessary complication that could be removed." (Record, May 19, 2000, p. S5526). Unfortunately, the juvenile justice conference, in which the language of this proposal could have been refined, has failed to meet for over a year. Apparently, the Republican leadership intends to end the Congress without ever completing work on the juvenile crime bill.

By any stretch of the imagination, the costs of Aimee's law outweigh its promised benefits:

First, Aimee's law penalizes states' law enforcement not for their own actions, but for the actions taken by judicial and corrections officers resulting in the release of a defendant who has not served the incarceration period required under Aimee's law. Indeed, defendants who escape from jail without serving their full term and commit subsequent crimes could subject the state in which they committed their initial crimes to decreased federal funds otherwise used to help law enforcement.

Second, Aimee's law requires the annual collection, maintenance and reporting of criminal history for violent offenders and covers not just those offenders currently in the system but any such offender no matter how long ago that offender was convicted, served time and was released. This provision alone demands an enormous investment of time and money, neither of which the legislation provides, to build the criminal history database necessary to implement the new law. As the Department of Justice has pointed out, " s ince no time limit is imposed between the prior and subsequent convictions, the system would require electronic criminal records that do not now exist and would be very expensive to accumulate." This "would require the establishment of a major national data center to collect and match state records" and constitutes an "unfunded mandate."

During a colloquy in the House on October 6th, Congressman Conyers asked a House sponsor of Aimee's law whether it was the drafters' intent that Aimee's law shall apply prospectively, that is only to offenders whose first sentence for a covered offense occurs on or after the effective date of this law, January 1, 2002, and the sponsor responded affirmatively. Yet, the law remains murky on this point since the effective date may be construed to apply only to the time when states may make applications for reimbursement, not to when the offenses occurred. We have two years before the effective date to clarify this point, and others, in this problematic law.

[*S10187]

REV_00256214

Third, while Aimee's law would exempt certain States from application of the law, those exemptions are predicated, in part, upon "the average term of imprisonment imposed for that offense in all States." The Pennsylvania Director of Corrections has pointed out that " t here is no record of what the national average...' is for crimes covered in this language. Further, if such an average existed, it would continually fluctuate, guaranteeing that there would always be some states out of compliance."

Fourth, Aimee's law adopts offense definitions that are unclear and fail to conform to the offense definitions found in the federal criminal code or to the standard legal terms used in state codes making it difficult to enforce Aimee's law across state lines.

The National Governors' Association has repeatedly registered its disapproval of Aimee's law as "onerous, impractical and unworkable." Consequently, States may simply agree among themselves not to file the applications with the Attorney General required to obtain reimbursement. Indeed, such an application might trigger a retaliatory review of the applicant's own record of released defendants and result in reduction of important federal funds. As a consequence, states may view invocation of Aimee's law reimbursement provisions as a risky proposition.

In short, Aimee's law is an empty promise that may make good fodder for 60-second campaign spots but will do nothing to continue the progress we have made over the last eight years to reduce the violent crime rate or to truly help crime victims.

Senator Hatch has insisted that the "Twenty-First Amendment Enforcement Act" be included in the conference report, despite the fact that the conference met September 28th, and expressly rejected inclusion of this proposal in the conference report. It was rejected by the Senate conferees and the House conferees went so far as to adopt the position that no extraneous legislation would be added to the sex trafficking provisions. Nevertheless, the conference report contains Senator Hatch's bill, which amounts to a double whammy--it is unnecessary and dangerous to e-commerce. The purported goal of this legislation is to enforce state liquor laws. The approach of this legislation sets a dangerous precedent by erecting barriers to interstate and electronic commerce.

Specifically, the bill would permit the enforcement of state liquor their homelands. There is also social reality. For the first time, young women in Ukraine and Russia have the right, the ability and the willpower to walk away from their parents and their hometowns. Village life is disintegrating throughout much of the former Soviet world, and youngsters are grabbing any chance they can find to save themselves.

REV_00256215

"After the wall fell down, the Ukrainian people tried to live in the new circumstances," said Ms. Shved. "It was very hard, and it gets no easier. Girls now have few and opportunities yet great freedom. They see Pretty Woman,' or a thousand movies and ads with the same point, that somebody who is rich can save them. The glory and ease of wealth is almost the basic point of the Western advertising that we see. Here the towns are dying. What jobs there are go to men. So they leave."

First, however, they answer ads from employment agencies promising to find them work in a foreign country. Here again, Russian crime gangs play a central role. They often recruit people through seemingly innocuous "mail order bride" meetings. Even when they do not, few such organizations can operate without paying off one gang or another. Sometimes want ads are almost honest, suggesting that the women earn up to $1,000 a month as "escorts" abroad. Often they are vague or blatantly untrue.

recruiting methods: ads make offers too good to be true

One typical ad used by traffickers in Kiev last year read: "Girls: Must be single and very pretty. Young and tall. We invite you for work as models, secretaries, dancers, choreographers, gymnasts. Housing is supplied. Foreign posts available. Must apply in person."

One young woman who did, and made it back alive, described a harrowing journey. "I met these guys and they asked if I would work at a strip bar," she said. "Why not, I thought. They said we would have to leave at once. We went by car to the Slovak Republic where they grabbed my passport. I think they got me new papers there, but threatened me if I spoke out. We made it to Vienna, then to Turkey. I was kept in a bar and I was told I owed $5,000 for my travel. I worked for three days, and on the fourth I was arrested."

Lately, the ads have started to disappear from the main cities--where the realities of such offers are known now. These days the appeals are made in the provinces, where their success is undiminished.

Most of the thousands of Ukrainian women who go abroad each year are illegal immigrants who do not work in the sex business. Often they apply for a legal visa--to dance, or work in a bar--and then stay after it expires.

Many go to Turkey and Germany, where Russian crime groups laws in Federal court. This expansion of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is not warranted. State attorneys general are already enforcing their state liquor laws in state courts--whether the alcohol was brought over the Internet or over the counter at the corner store. The Internet has not changed the enforcement of state liquor laws.

REV_00256144

This year, for instance, the Utah Attorney General successfully enforced that state's liquor laws against an out-of-state direct sales shipper of alcoholic beverages. That case resulted in fines of more than $25,000 and guilty pleads by an out-of-state direct shipper to state law counts of unlawfully importing alcohol and selling it to a minor.

Indeed, the Utah Attorney General, Jan Graham, declared: "This case represents a significant win for Utah. No longer can retailers claim that we have no authority over illegal transactions that occur outside of the state. If you're shipping to a Utah resident, we can and will prosecute you."

This legislation is using the Internet as an excuse to impose a Federal fix for a problem that is already being solved at the state level. Whatever happened to Federalism? In fact, the National Conference of State Legislatures opposes this legislation, calling the bill "an overreaction to a situation which can be reconciled among the states and not in a federal court."

Skeptics rightly are concerned that some may be using the Internet as an excuse to protect the decades-old distribution system for wine and other alcoholic beverages. Although the Internet has not changed state liquor law enforcement, it has opened up the wine and beer market to new consumer choices and competition.

With the power of electronic commerce, adult consumers now have the freedom to choose from a rich assortment of different wine and beer products--from small wineries to nationwide brewers in America or any other country in the world.

We should be embracing this free market and open competition. Competition in the free market is the American way. But instead some wine and beer wholesalers want to use this legislation as a protectionist ploy to keep their present distribution system, which effectively locks out small wineries and micro-breweries from ever getting their products on a store shelf. Mothers Against Drunk Driving and the National Conference of State Legislatures have noted that this Federal legislation is nothing more than an attempt to use the Federal courts in a disagreement between wholesalers and small independent wineries and breweries.

On August 12, 1999, The Wall Street Journal wrote about this legislation: "This is a bad bill, with dangerous consequences not only for alcohol but for the future of e-commerce and other cross-state transactions." I whole-heartedly agree.

REV_00256216

The Department of Justice has warned Congress in relation to legislation affecting the Internet that: " A ny prohibitions that are designed to prohibit criminal activity on the Internet must be carefully drafted to accomplish the legislation's objectives without stifling the growth of the Internet or chilling its use." This bill fails that test. It is not carefully crafted. In fact, it is not even needed. It also could chill the use of the Internet as a means of promoting interstate commerce.

I will vote in support of this conference report because the provisions on sex trafficking, VAWA and justice for victims are proposals I endorse. I do so with profound regret with the process and that the majority insisted on including Aimee's law and the internet alcohol bill that are not well considered. They are the price that we pay for making progress here today. I will work to see if we can limit their damage.

In closing, I wish to thank the conferees and their staffs who showed courtesy to me and mine. In particular, I thank Karen Knutsen of Senator Brownback's staff and Mark Lagon and Brian McKee of the staff of the Foreign Relations Committee. I thank Nancy Zirkin of the American Association of University Women and Pat Reuss of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund for their efforts on behalf of VAWA II. This has been a difficult matter at a difficult time that is being concluded as best we can under these circumstances in order to enact the sex trafficking legislation, VAWA II and the victims bill for all the good they can mean.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Kansas be recognized to make a unanimous consent request.

REV_00256217

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes occurring relative to the Thompson appeal as provided in the consent agreement this body agreed to on October 6, 2000, occur at 4:30 p.m. today, with adoption of the conference report to occur immediately following that vote as provided in the consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

[*S10188]

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, for the information of Members, in light of this agreement, the next two votes will occur at approximately 4:30 p.m. with the Thompson appeal vote occurring at 4:30 and the conference report vote occurring immediately thereafter.

SUBJECT: HUMAN TRAFFICKING (91%); LEGISLATION (90%); PROSTITUTION (90%); WOMEN (90%); ARRESTS (

LOAD-DATE: 10-12-2000

Source: Legal > Federal Legal - U.S. > Individual Congressional Record Materials > Congressional Record - 106th Congress
Terms: governor bush and leahy and date(geq (10/11/2000) and leq (10/11/2000)) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 5:32 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256218

are particularly powerful. Israeli leaders say that Russian women--they tend to refer to all women from the former Soviet Union as Russian--disappear off tour boats every day. Officials in Italy estimate that at least 30,000 Ukrainian women are employed illegally there now.

Most are domestic workers, but a growing number are prostitutes, some of them having been promised work as domestics only to find out their jobs were a lie. Part of the problem became clear in a two-year study recently concluded by the Washington-based nonprofit group Global Survival Network: police officials in many countries just don't care.

The network, after undercover interviews with gangsters, pimps and corrupt officials, found that local police forces--often those best able to prevent trafficking--are least interested in helping.

Gillian Caldwell of Global Survival Network has been deeply involved in the study. "In Tokyo," she said, "a sympathetic senator arranged a meeting for us with senior police officials to discuss the growing prevalence of trafficking from Russia into Japan. The police insisted it wasn't a problem, and they didn't even want the concrete information we could have provided. That didn't surprise local relief agencies, who cited instances in which police had actually sold trafficked women back to the criminal networks which had enslaved them."

official reactions: best-placed to help, but least inclined

Complacency among police agencies is not uncommon. "Women's groups want to blow this all out of proportion," said Gennadi V. Lepenko, chief of Kiev's branch of Interpol, the international police agency. "Perhaps this was a problem a few years ago. But it's under control now."

That is not the view at Ukraine's Parliament--which is trying to pass new laws to protect young women--or at the Interior Ministry.

"We have a very serious problem here and we are simply not equipped to solve it by ourselves," said Mikhail Lebed, chief of criminal investigations for the Ukrainian Interior Ministry. "It is a human tragedy, but also, frankly, a national crisis. Gangsters make more from these women in a week than we have in our law enforcement budget for the whole year. To be honest, unless we get some help we are not going to stop it."

[*S10166]

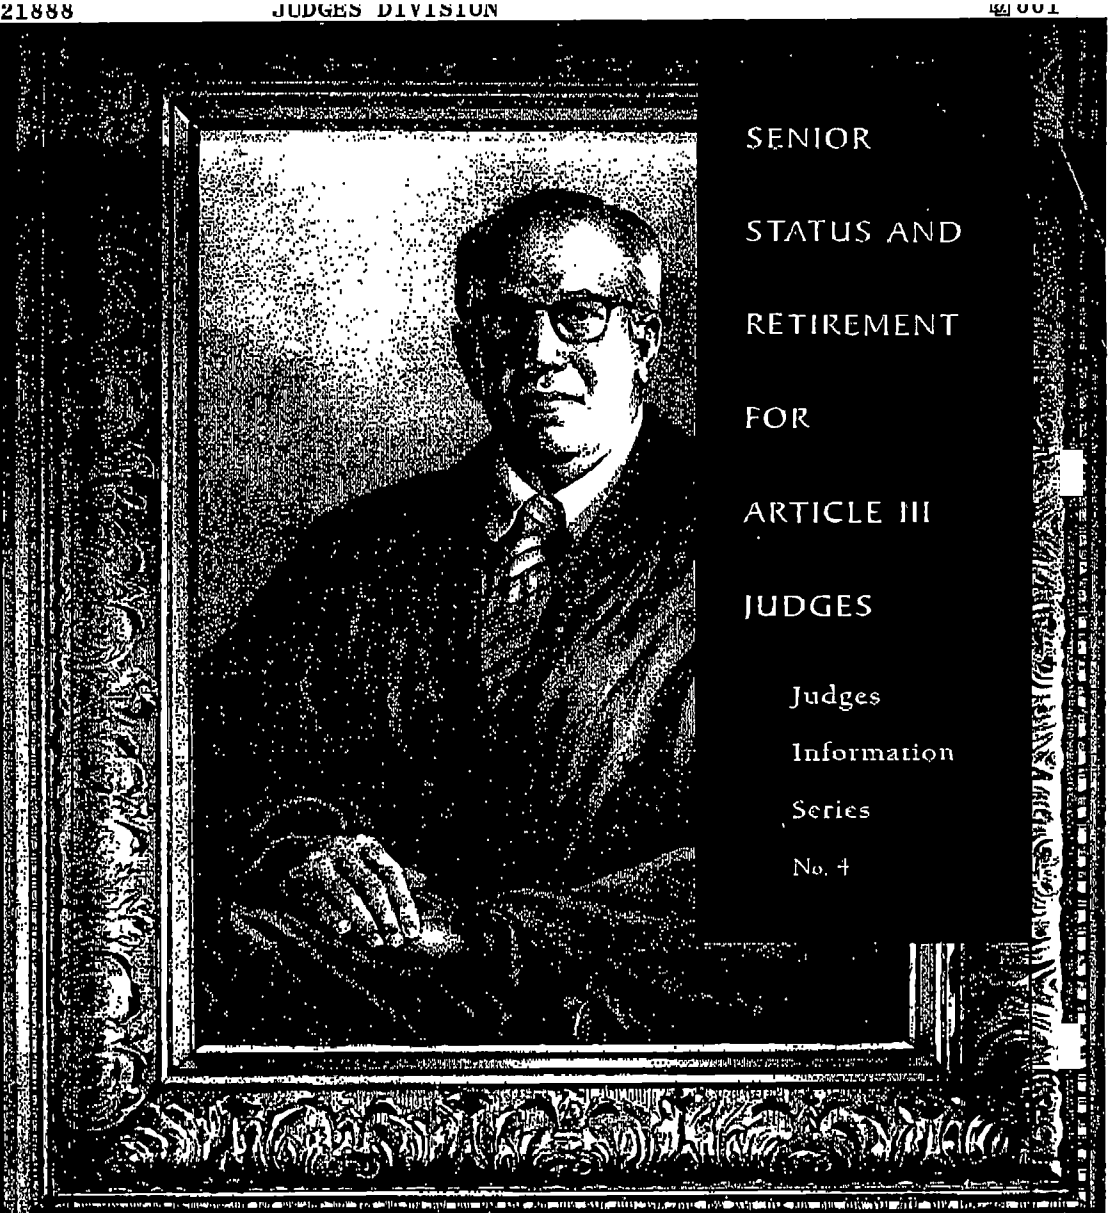
But solutions will not be simple. Criminal gangs risk little by ferrying women out of the country; indeed, many of the women go voluntarily. Laws are vague, cooperation between

REV_00256145

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett



Subject File

President's Judges Plan: Judges - Judicial Conference Action on President's Proposal

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 49
Folder 8

REV_00256219

SENIOR STATUS AND RETIREMENT FOR ARTICLE III JUDGES

Judges Information Series No. 4

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS
Leonidas Ralph Mecham, Director

REV_00256220

- the chief judge of the Court of International Trade (in the case of another judge of that court).

A judge who takes senior status on disability and has 10 or more years of Article III service will continue to receive the full salary of the judicial office, including any future COLAs and other salary increases. If a judge takes senior status on disability and has less than 10 years of Article III service, the judge receives one-half the salary of the judicial office, plus future COLAs and other salary increases.

A circuit judicial council or the Judicial Conference of the United States may request that a judge who is 65 years of age or older retire voluntarily from office or from regular active service without being required to satisfy the "Rule of 80" as to length of service if the judge is found to be disabled or to have committed an act of misconduct. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 372(c)(6)(B) (iii) & (c)(8)(A).

The disability of a circuit or district judge who does not retire voluntarily may be certified by a majority of the members of the circuit judicial council. In this case, the President may appoint an additional judge to the respective court if the judge in question is found to be unable to discharge all judicial duties efficiently and appointment of another judge is necessary for the efficient dispatch of business. The judge certified as disabled remains in active status but loses seniority in relation to all other active judges of the respective court for purposes of precedence, service as chief judge, or temporary performance of chief judge duties. See 28 U.S.C. § 372(b).

Official Notifications

In March 1988, the Judicial Conference considered the subject of judgeship vacancies and determined that "vacancies place significant burdens on the courts by increasing the workloads of those judges available for duty and diminishing the courts' ability to discharge their responsibilities." As a result, the Conference adopted a policy urging all judges nearing retirement to notify the President and the Administrative Office, if possible, six to twelve months before the contemplated change in status. This policy is further reflected in the Long Range Plan for the Federal Courts approved by the Conference in 1995 (see Recommendation 67).

A judge who decides to take senior status under 28 U.S.C. § 371(b) must notify the President in writing of the intention to leave active service and take senior status. Sample letters are included in Appendix G. Copies of that letter (or a similar notification) should be sent to the following:

REV_00256221

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

President's Judges Plan: Judges Proposal

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 48
Folder 9

REV_00256222

l judgeship, however, the earlier years of ward eligibility for retirement from office e who resigns in order to accept appoint-ition may, in limited circumstances, receive r the Civil Service Retirement System or em (see chapters 12 and 13 at pages 57 and

2 SENIOR STATUS

A judge who retires from regular active judicial service but elects to retain judicial office is known and designated as a senior judge. 28 U.S.C. § 294(b). Senior status may be taken under either 28 U.S.C. § 371(b)(1) (retirement from regular active service based on the Rule of 80) or 28 U.S.C. § 372(a) (retirement on disability). These statutes are reprinted in Appendix B.

ELIGIBILITY

Rule of 80 (28 U.S.C. § 371(b))

A judge who satisfies the Rule of 80 age and service requirements may choose senior status. The number of years of service and the judge's age must total at least 80, with the minimum retirement age fixed at 65 years and the service years ranging from 10 to 15 years. Only whole years, not fractions of years, are computed for purposes of the Rule of 80.

Voluntary Certification of Permanent Disability (28 U.S.C. § 372(a))

Any judge, regardless of age or length of service, may also retire from regular active service and take senior status if the judge becomes permanently disabled from performing judicial duties. A judge must certify the disability to the President in writing, and also furnish the President a certificate of disability signed by—

- the Chief Justice (in the case of an associate justice of the Supreme Court, a chief circuit judge, or the chief judge of the Court of International Trade),
- the chief circuit judge (in the case of another circuit judge or a district judge), or

REV_00256223

003
07/10/02 WED 14:21 FAX 2025021811 JUDGES COMP & BENEFITS
REV_00256224

- the chief judge of the Court of International Trade (in the case of another judge of that court).

A judge who takes senior status on disability and has 10 or more years of Article III service will continue to receive the full salary of the judicial office, including any future COLAs and other salary increases. If a judge takes senior status on disability and has less than 10 years of Article III service, the judge receives one-half the salary of the judicial office, plus future COLAs and other salary increases.

A circuit judicial council or the Judicial Conference of the United States may request that a judge who is 65 years of age or older retire voluntarily from office or from regular active service without being required to satisfy the "Rule of 80" as to length of service if the judge is found to be disabled or to have committed an act of misconduct. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 372(c)(6)(B) (iii) & (c)(8)(A).

The disability of a circuit or district judge who does not retire voluntarily may be certified by a majority of the members of the circuit judicial council. In this case, the President may appoint an additional judge to the respective court if the judge in question is found to be unable to discharge all judicial duties efficiently and appointment of another judge is necessary for the efficient dispatch of business. The judge certified as disabled remains in active status but loses seniority in relation to all other active judges of the respective court for purposes of precedence, service as chief judge, or temporary performance of chief judge duties. See 28 U.S.C. § 372(b).

Official Notifications

In March 1988, the Judicial Conference considered the subject of judgeship vacancies and determined that "vacancies place significant burdens on the courts by increasing the workloads of those judges available for duty and diminishing the courts' ability to discharge their responsibilities." As a result, the Conference adopted a policy urging all judges nearing retirement to notify the President and the Administrative Office, if possible, six to twelve months before the contemplated change in status. This policy is further reflected in the Long Range Plan for the Federal Courts approved by the Conference in 1995 (see Recommendation 67).

A judge who decides to take senior status under 28 U.S.C. § 371(b) must notify the President in writing of the intention to leave active service and take senior status. Sample letters are included in Appendix G. Copies of that letter should be sent to the following:

(1) Chief Justice of the United States
Washington, D.C. 20543

(2) Director
Administrative Office of the United States Courts
Thurgood Marshall Federal Judiciary Building
Washington, D.C. 20544

(3) Director
Federal Judicial Center
Thurgood Marshall Federal Judiciary Building
Washington, D.C. 20002

(4) Chief, Judges Compensation and Benefits Branch
Article III Judges Division
Administrative Office of the United States Courts
Thurgood Marshall Federal Judiciary Building
Washington, D.C. 20544.

A judge should also provide written notice to his or her court of the intention to take senior status:

- Circuit judges should notify the chief circuit judge and the circuit executive (or the clerk of court, in the case of judges of the Federal Circuit).
- District judges and judges of the Court of International Trade should notify the chief judge and the clerk of their respective courts.

A judge who retires from regular active service on disability grounds under 28 U.S.C. § 372(a) must certify the disability to the President in writing accompanied by a certificate of disability signed by—

(1) the Chief Justice (in the case of a chief circuit judge or the chief judge of the Court of International Trade),
(2) the chief judge of the circuit (in the case of another circuit judge or a district judge), or
(3) the chief judge of the Court of International Trade (in the case of another judge of that court).

Sample letters are included in Appendix G. Copies of that letter (or a similar notification) should be sent to the following (at the addresses indicated above):

(1) the Chief Justice of the United States
(2) the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts
(3) the Director of the Federal Judicial Center
(4) the Chief of the Judges Compensation and Benefits Branch, Article III Judges Division.

004 JUDGES COMP & BENEFITS 07/10/02 WED 14:22 FAX 2025021811 REV_00256225

A judge should also provide written notice to his or her court of the intention to retire from active service on disability grounds:

- Circuit judges should notify the chief circuit judge and the circuit executive (or the clerk of court, in the case of judges of the Federal Circuit).
- District judges and judges of the Court of International Trade should notify the chief judge and the clerk of their respective courts.

Compensation

A senior judge receives retirement compensation equal to the full salary of the judicial office at the time of retirement, plus any post-retirement COLAs and (subject to the workload certification requirement described below) other periodic salary increases. (If retired from regular active service on disability grounds before completing 10 years of service, a senior judge receives only one-half the judicial salary, including post-retirement adjustments and increases.) See 28 U.S.C. §§ 371(b), 372(a), 461(a). No statutory authority exists to provide either senior or active Article III judges any other types of salary adjustments provided to federal employees generally, such as "locality" pay or "post differential" pay.

Workload Certification

In order to receive post-retirement salary increases other than cost-of-living adjustments, a judge who takes senior status under the Rule of 80 generally must be certified each year, by the chief judge of the circuit in which the judge was commissioned (for a senior judge of the Court of International Trade, the chief judge of that court), as having performed certain judicial or administrative duties in the preceding calendar year. The nature and amount of these duties are described in 28 U.S.C. § 371(f) and the Rules for Certification of Senior Judges (contained in volume III of the Guide to Judiciary Policies and Procedures and reprinted in Appendix I) and may comprise:

- administrative duties equal to the full-time work of an employee of the judicial branch; or

- judicial duties, in an amount equal to or greater than the amount of work an average active service judge of the same office (i.e., circuit or district) performs in three months, consisting of (1) a caseload involving courtroom participation, (2) substantial judicial duties not involving courtroom participation, or (3) a combination of (1) and (2);

TRANSMITTAL COVER SHEET

DAN JACKSON
Chief, Judges Compensation and Benefits Branch
Article III Judges Division
Administrative Office of the United States Courts
Thurgood Marshall Federal Judiciary Building
One Columbus Circle, NE
Room 2-300N
Washington, DC 20544

VOICE: 202-502-1880
FAX: 202-502-1811

Date: 7/10/02

To: Brent Greenfield

From: Dawn Fatello

Description: Sr. Status

Number of pages (including transmittal sheet): 4

Transmitted by: _____

Will follow by mail: Yes ☐ No ☐

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

President's Judges Plan: Judges Proposal - Womack / Kavanaugh [1]

OA/NARA#: 2179 / 2090
9799

Box 48

Folder 10

REV_00256227

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Nominations Submitted	Nominees Confirmed	Percentage Of Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Nominations Submitted	Circuit Court Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Percentage of Nominees Confirmed
G.W. Bush (as of Aug. '02 Senate recess)	123	72	59%	32	13	41%
Clinton	140	126	90%	22	19	86%
George H.W. Bush	74	70	95%	23	22	96%
Reagan	88	87	99%	20	19	95%

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Circuit Court Nominees who waited more than a year for a hearing
G.W. Bush (as of August 2002)	11
Clinton	0
George H.W. Bush	0
Reagan	0

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. RES. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SPECTER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on _____

RESOLUTION

Providing for a protocol for nonpartisan confirmation of judicial nominees.

Whereas there has been a continuing controversy with the political party of the President protesting the process on confirmation of Federal judges by the Senate when the Senate is controlled by the opposite political party; and

Whereas there is a concern about a lack of public confidence in the Senate's judicial confirmation process when different parties control the White House and the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. PROTOCOL FOR NONPARTISAN CONFIRMATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINEES.

(a) TIMETABLES.—

REV_00256230

(1) COMMITTEE TIMETABLES.—The Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in collaboration with the Ranking Member, shall—

(A) establish a timetable for scheduling hearings for nominees to the United States district courts, courts of appeal, and Supreme Court, after the names of such nominees have been submitted to the Senate by the President; and

(B) establish a timetable for action by the full Committee after the hearings, and for reporting out nominees to the full Senate.

(2) SENATE TIMETABLES.—The Majority Leader, in collaboration with the Minority Leader, shall establish a timetable for action by the full Senate after the Committee on the Judiciary has reported out the nominations.

(b) EXTENSION OF TIMETABLES.—

(1) COMMITTEE EXTENSIONS.—The Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in collaboration with the Ranking Member, may extend the time for action by the Committee for cause, such as the need for more investigation or additional hearings.

(2) SENATE EXTENSIONS.—The Majority Leader, in collaboration with the Minority Leader, may extend the time for floor action for cause, such as the need for more investigation or additional hearings.

(c) REPORT OF NOMINATION TO SENATE.—

(1) NOMINATION TO SUPREME COURT.—Regardless of the vote of the Committee on the Judiciary, a nomination for the Supreme Court of the United States shall be reported by the Committee for action by the full Senate.

(2) NOMINATION TO DISTRICT COURT OR COURT OF APPEALS.—If a nomination for the United States district court or court of appeals is rejected by the Committee on the Judiciary on a party line vote, the nomination shall be reported by the Committee for action by the full Senate.

June 8, 2000

Governor George W. Bush

"A New Approach"

"We need a clean break from the recent past. It is time for leadership that sets a new tone – a tone of respect and bipartisanship. A president can do this. He can refrain from personal attacks, and treat members of both parties with respect. He can reach across the partisan aisle and work with all for the good of the country. In this same spirit, there are some practical steps we can take to change Washington. I am proposing today a set of six specific reforms relating to the budget process, pork-barrel spending, and nominations."

-- Governor George W. Bush

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Governor Bush believes that leaders should focus on solving problems, not settling scores. Yet partisan strife has become a way of life in Washington. Progress on vital national issues, such as Social Security and health care reform, has been stalled by brinkmanship, when it should have been advanced by statesmanship. The result has been an erosion of citizen confidence in government.

In contrast, Governor Bush has repeatedly reached across the aisle on a bipartisan basis in Texas to pass vital legislation, ranging from a new Texas Code of Education to civil justice reform. To bring this spirit of bipartisan leadership to Washington, and to restore confidence in government, Governor Bush proposes a series of practical reforms:

To promote bipartisan cooperation in the budget process, Governor Bush will:

- Adopt biennial budgeting to promote long-range planning and to allow budget decisions to be made in non-election years; alternating years would be used for oversight.
- Require a Joint Budget Resolution, signed by the President, to promote early agreement on an overall budget framework.
- Enact legislation to prevent government shutdowns, allowing the government to stay open even if an appropriations bill is not signed by October 1st of the new fiscal year.

To restore trust in government and eliminate pork-barrel spending, Governor Bush will:

- Support a Bipartisan Commission to Eliminate Pork-Barrel Spending, whose recommendations will be presented to the Congress for a straight "up or down" vote on the entire package.
- Seek line item veto legislation, fully constitutional, allowing the President to defer indefinitely unnecessary spending and use the savings to pay down the national debt.

To minimize delay and division over presidential appointments, Governor Bush will:

- Make the prompt submission of presidential nominees a top priority, and challenge Congress to act within 60 days of the submission of presidential nominees for the new Administration, regardless of who is elected president in 2000.

REV_00256233

Restoring Trust and Civility

> "A strong leader is guided by the convictions of his heart, not by the counsel of his pollster. A strong leader sets his mind to solving problems, not settling scores. And if goodwill is to prevail, a leader must set the right tone. Every successful mayor and governor understands this. And so should a president."
>
> -- Governor George W. Bush

In recent years, the federal government has been wracked by partisan strife. Progress on vital national issues, such as health care and Social Security reform, has been stalled by brinkmanship. As a result, citizen confidence and trust in government has eroded. Indeed, a recent ABC News/Washington Post survey found that only 30 percent of those responding said they "trusted" the federal government to do "what is right" all or most of the time.

In contrast, many state and local governments have succeeded in laying aside partisan differences to advance the public interest. As a Republican governor who has worked with a Democratic legislature, Governor Bush has repeatedly reached across the aisle on a bipartisan basis to pass legislation:

- Governor Bush worked with the Democratic Chairman of the House Public Education Committee to enact a new Texas Code of Education, which eliminated unnecessary bureaucracy, restored local control to schools, set clear goals and held districts accountable for results.

- Governor Bush worked with Democrats and Republicans to restructure the Texas Workforce Commission, consolidating 28 programs in 10 different state agencies into one agency, and devolving power to 28 new local workforce boards headed by local businesses. The resulting model was used as a template for federal workforce reform legislation in 1998.

- And in 1995, by working closely with a Democratic Lieutenant Governor, Governor Bush and the Texas Legislature passed a tort reform package that limited punitive damage awards, reformed the deceptive trade practices act, limited forum shopping, and curbed frivolous suits.

None of this bipartisan spirit is possible without leadership, and a president, above all, can provide that leadership. To create this spirit of bipartisanship in Washington, and to restore trust in government, Governor Bush will propose a set of specific reforms aimed at three perennial problems: the budget process, pork-barrel spending, and the process for approving presidential nominations.

REV_00256234

Reforming the Budget Process

"If the discord in Washington never seems to end, this is partly because the budget process never seems to end. Lawmakers spend more than half of their time each year wrangling over budget resolutions, reconciliation bills, and appropriations bills."
-- Governor George W. Bush

Every year, Congress battles over the budget, and each year, it seems, the battles get bloodier. While no procedural change can substitute for a commitment to bipartisan cooperation, Governor Bush believes there are several practical reforms that can blunt the partisan edge of budget negotiations.

A. Biennial Budgeting and Appropriations

The current annual budget cycle has proven to be time-consuming and inefficient, regardless of which party is in control of Congress. Only twice in the last 50 years has the Congress enacted all 13 appropriation bills by the end of the fiscal year. Each year, the same disputes over the same issues dominate the fall season in Washington. Under the imminent threat of a budget shutdown, leaders make hasty decisions simply to keep the government running.

In contrast, a biennial budget would allow lawmakers to devote more time every other year to ensuring that taxpayers' money is spent wisely and efficiently. In addition, government agencies would receive more stable funding, which would facilitate longer-range planning. According to Lee Hamilton, former Democratic Representative and currently Director of the Woodrow Wilson Center, moving to "biennial budgeting would also free up time that could be used by Congress and the executive branch to focus more on long-term strategic thinking – examining the challenges our country will face over the coming decades."

Under a biennial budget, funding decisions would be made in non-election years to help de-politicize the process. Moreover, lawmakers could devote more time to finishing the appropriation bills on time because the next year would be free for other legislative business.

Unfortunately, biennial budgeting recently failed to pass the House on a very close vote. Twenty-one states, however, including Texas, use biennial budgeting. As President, Governor Bush will:

Introduce Legislation to Adopt Biennial Budgeting and Appropriations: Government spending decisions would be made every two years, leaving the alternating year to be used for effective oversight of the federal agencies and systemic review.

REV_00256235

B. Require a Joint Budget Resolution

The budget process should allow our leaders to determine the overall fiscal course for the federal government. But under current law, neither the President's budget nor the Congressional budget has the force of law. As a result, the existing process discourages cooperation and encourages posturing. The Congress writes budgets that implicitly ignore the President's power to sign and veto laws, and the President crafts budgets that ignore the Congress' power to write legislation. There is little incentive for the President and Congress to reach early agreement on the broad outlines of a budget package, thus increasing the chance of a "train wreck" at the end of the process.

In contrast, a joint budget resolution would recognize that the two branches of government must cooperate. A joint resolution requires the President's signature and has the force of law. This joint budget resolution would set the overall level of appropriations, mandatory spending, taxes, and debt reduction in a simple document. It would bring the President into the process at an early stage and, together with biennial budgeting, would help restore order to the budget process. In 1997, the Congress and the President negotiated an overall framework before debating any specific legislation. This broad agreement facilitated passage of the Taxpayer Relief Act, the Balanced Budget Act, and the appropriations bills.

To maximize the chance of bipartisan cooperation on the budget, as President, Governor Bush will:

Seek Legislation to Require a Joint Budget Resolution Signed by the President: The joint budget resolution would set the overall level of appropriations, mandatory spending, taxes, and debt reduction into law. This would encourage the two branches of government to agree on an overall fiscal strategy before specific tax and spending bills are written.

C. Preventing Government Shutdowns

Under the present system, when appropriators cannot agree, and when Congress and the President remain at loggerheads, the government can shut down altogether. Most recently, for example, the federal government shut down (except for "essential functions") from November 14 to 19, 1995. That shutdown, however, did not end the stalemate, and from December 16, 1995 to January 8, 1996, the federal government shut down again while Congress and the President wrestled with the budget.

Fortunately, good suggestions exist for limiting this predictable trouble spot. Since the budget impasse of 1995, several members of Congress, including Senators McCain, Domenici, and Thompson, have each sponsored bills that would prevent future government shutdowns. As President, Governor Bush will:

REV_00256236

Seek Legislation Preventing Government Shutdowns: If an appropriations bill is not signed by October 1 of the new fiscal year, affected programs would continue to be funded at the lower of the President's budget or the prior year's level. This legislation would apply to each of the 13 appropriations bills, and to any omnibus bill. It would remove incentives for the President or the Congressional leadership to use the leverage of "shutting down government" to achieve spending objectives they could not otherwise obtain through the normal appropriations process.

Eliminating Pork-Barrel Spending

"It's often said that one politician's "pork" is another's vital project, one district's "corporate welfare" another district's vital federal investment. But we need a more objective definition of "vital." This confusion is the source of far too much waste, and frankly far too much haggling, bargaining, and resentment in Washington."

-- Governor George W. Bush

A. Challenging the Politics of Pork-Barrel Spending

A perennial criticism of the federal government is that the annual budget contains too much "pork-barrel spending." The persistence of pork erodes citizen confidence in government, and skirmishes over pork contribute to personal and partisan divisions throughout federal government. While many have observed that "one man's pork is another's essential service," there are some consistent characteristics of what fairly qualifies as pork.

According to the nonpartisan Citizens Against Government Waste, most pork-barrel spending can be identified as having at least two of the following seven characteristics:

1. It was requested by only one Chamber of Congress;
2. It was not specifically authorized;
3. It was not awarded competitively;
4. It was not requested by the President;
5. It greatly exceeded the President's budget request or the previous year's funding;
6. It was not the subject of congressional hearings; or
7. It serves only a local or special interest.

Items frequently cited as pork include $250,000 for research on caffeinated chewing gum (FY 1999) and $750,000 for grasshopper research in Alaska (FY 1999).

While many will debate the precise definition of pork, few will dispute that it is persistently difficult to strip from the budget. It is the rare Member who will challenge individual pork provisions for fear that his or her own pork initiatives will be challenged in return.

REV_00256237

What is needed is a bipartisan mechanism to eliminate pork-barrel spending. Senator McCain, along with Senators Thompson, Lieberman, and Abraham, has proposed just such a mechanism – a bipartisan commission to identify and eliminate pork initiatives. As President, Governor Bush will:

Endorse Legislation Calling for a Bipartisan Commission to Eliminate Pork-Barrel Spending: The legislation would create a bipartisan legislative commission to identify and propose for reduction or elimination non-entitlement government spending. The recommendations from the Commission would be presented to the Congress through legislation calling for an "up or down" vote on the entire package.

B. Line Item Veto Authority

The longer-term solution to the problem of unnecessary pork-barrel spending is to empower the President to act directly to stop it through the line item veto. The governors of 43 of the 50 states already have this authority, and at least eleven Presidents since the Civil War – Ulysees Grant, Rutherford Hayes, Chester Arthur, Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Ronald Reagan, George Bush, and Bill Clinton – have publicly called for giving the President line item veto authority. Similarly, Governor Bush would support a constitutional amendment giving the President this authority. Because the amendment process is by design long and cumbersome, he also supports immediate legislation providing for equivalent authority for the President to limit wasteful and pork-barrel spending.

In April 1996, Congress passed and the President signed the Line Item Veto Act. Two years later, in 1998, the Supreme Court declared the Act unconstitutional because it "g[ave] the President the unilateral power to change the text of duly enacted statutes." At the same time, however, the Court acknowledged that there were fully constitutional ways to accomplish the same result.

From the Nation's founding, the President has had the authority – if Congress so delegates it – to decline to spend appropriated sums. However, this authority was curtailed in 1974, when Congress passed the Impoundment Control Act, which restricted the President's authority to decline to spend appropriated sums.

The Line Item Veto Act of 1996 attempted to return some of that authority, but did so by allowing the President to permanently and irreversibly prevent an appropriation from having any "legal force or effect." Because this was tantamount to a "repeal" of a duly enacted law, the Court struck it down. But, as Justice Scalia noted in dissent, "[h]ad the Line Item Veto Act authorized the President to 'decline to spend' any item of spending contained in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, there is not the slightest doubt that authorization would have been constitutional."

In order to increase the President's authority to limit unnecessary pork spending, Governor Bush will:

REV_00256238

Propose Fully Constitutional Line Item Veto Legislation Linked to Paying Down the National Debt: Governor Bush will propose legislation giving the President the authority to decline to spend amounts appropriated for discretionary budget authority. Such deferrals will be allowed whenever the President determines the deferrals will not impair essential government functions and will not harm the national interest. All savings from such deferrals will be used to pay down the national debt.

Expediting Presidential Nominations

"The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation. Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became – lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. This has done enough harm, injured too many good people, and it must not happen again."

-- Governor George W. Bush

In recent years, the process of presidential nominations and confirmations has become increasingly lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant, resulting in fewer good people being willing to enter into high-level government service. As one recent nominee famously remarked, "[i]t is nasty and brutish without being short." In April 2000, the Heritage Foundation and the Brookings Institution released a joint report detailing the delays and problems with presidential nominations.

Under President Reagan, 11 percent of nominations took over 6 months to confirm; under President Bush, 25 percent took over 6 months; under President Clinton, 44 percent took over 6 months. Moreover, under President Clinton, 49 percent of appointees described the confirmation process as "confusing," and 25 percent as "embarrassing." This acrimony and delay causes the country to go without senior government officials – especially sub-cabinet officials – for extended periods of time, and it discourages good people from entering public service in the first place.

Governor Bush believes that a bipartisan effort should be made to improve the nominations process – regardless of which party wins the White House later this year. Thus, to minimize delay and divisions over presidential nominations and to help restore confidence in government, Governor Bush will:

Make the Prompt Submission of Presidential Nominees a Top Priority, and Challenge Congress to Act on Those Nominees Within 60 Days: Governor Bush believes that 60 days is a reasonable and achievable goal for Senate action on nominees. Indeed, from 1964 to 1984, 48 percent of all presidential nominees were through the confirmation process in one to two months. The Senate can and should do so, Governor Bush believes, regardless of who is elected President in 2000.

REV_00256239

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All
Terms: (lloyd /2 cutler) and judicial and confirmation and date(aft 2000) (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Washington Post, March 13, 2002

Copyright 2002 The Washington Post

The Washington Post
washingtonpost.com

The Washington Post

March 13, 2002, Wednesday, Final Edition

SECTION: EDITORIAL; Pg. A29

LENGTH: 806 words

HEADLINE: End the Judicial Blame Game

BYLINE: Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards

BODY:

Perhaps no issue has roiled the waters of partisanship in Washington in recent years more than federal judicial nominations. The judicial nomination "blame game," in which each party points an accusing finger at the other, consists of well-worn positions: The president is blamed for nominating candidates who are "too ideological" or otherwise unsuitable, and the Senate is blamed for stalling its vote on confirming the president's nominees. The rhetoric, along with the time needed to confirm judges, increases substantially when one political party controls the White House and the other controls the Senate.

There is no question that thoughtful scrutiny of judicial nominees is justified and is indeed the Senate's duty. After all, federal judges have life tenure and make decisions on important issues that affect millions of Americans. Ultimately, however, vacancies on the federal bench need to be filled. Judgeships sometimes remain open for two or three years. This can cause significant backlogs in civil cases, which, unlike criminal cases, are generally not subject to legal time limits. Delay in confirming judges means justice delayed for individuals and businesses, and, combined with the bitter nature of some confirmation battles, it may deter many qualified candidates from seeking federal judgeships. A recent study by the Constitution Project at Georgetown University and Professor Wendy Martinek of Binghamton University suggests the continuing nature of the problem. In the first year of President George W. Bush's term in office, successful nominees took an average of 112 days from nomination to confirmation. This compares with 36 days in the first year of President Reagan's first term, 46 days in the first year of his second term, 62 days in the first year of the first President Bush's administration and 52 days in the first year of President Clinton's first term. The current president's first year is only a modest improvement over the first year of Clinton's second term, when the average period from nomination to confirmation was 133 days.

Of course, the current president's first year in office was an extraordinary one: First, the change in control of the Senate disrupted the normal flow of committee work, and soon afterward the attacks of Sept. 11 pushed much of the nation's domestic agenda onto a back burner. In addition, the new Senate leadership is deferring action on judicial nominations until they are reviewed by the American Bar Association. Last year, the ABA's ratings were reported to the committee on average about eight weeks after the date of nomination, reflecting both the time it takes the Department of Justice to provide the relevant information to the ABA and the ABA's review procedures. Since the Eisenhower administration, presidents had sent proposed nominations to the ABA before they were submitted to the Senate; President Bush does not seek ABA review of his nominees. Thus, the delay associated with that process now takes place after nomination, rather than before.

REV_00256240

Even taking all this into account, the 112-day period from nomination to confirmation in President Bush's first year is a matter for concern. In 1999, the bipartisan task force of the Constitution Project urged both the White House and the Senate to make filling vacancies in timely fashion a high priority. It also made several recommendations that might help reduce delay as well as ensure high-quality nominees. Both the executive branch and the Senate should devote adequate staffing to the screening and processing of nominees. Although the Senate should satisfy itself that nominees are professionally qualified, impartial, committed to equal justice under law and possessed of a judicial temperament, it should refrain from seeking pre-commitments from candidates about unresolved issues that might come before them as judges and should exercise caution when drawing conclusions about candidates based upon their previous clients, speeches or writings. In addition, both the executive branch and the Senate should judge candidates on their merits and should avoid linking votes on candidates with unrelated business that is the subject of bargaining between the two branches or between senators.

Over the past 20 years, both political parties have been responsible for changing what was once a relatively speedy process into one that often moves more slowly than molasses in January. Failure to reverse this trend may delay the provision of justice in federal courts and discourage able men and women from seeking to serve as federal judges.

Lloyd Cutler, former White House counsel to Presidents Clinton and Carter, and Mickey Edwards, former Republican representative from Oklahoma, are the co-chairs of the Constitution Project's courts initiative.

LOAD-DATE: March 13, 2002

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All
Terms: (lloyd /2 cutler) and judicial and confirmation and date(aft 2000) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, August 6, 2002 - 10:53 AM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256241

Explore | Page Select a Reporter GO | Doc GO of 50 | Term GO of | De

REV_00256242

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: (lloyd /2 cutler) and judicial and confirmation and date(aft 2000) (Edit Search)

↶Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery
☐

Federal News Service June 26, 2001, Tuesday

Copyright 2001 Federal News Service, Inc.
Federal News Service

June 26, 2001, Tuesday

SECTION: PREPARED TESTIMONY

LENGTH: 1074 words

HEADLINE: PREPARED TESTIMONY OF LLOYD N. CUTLER

BEFORE THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE SUBCOMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE OVERSIGHT AND THE COURTS

SUBJECT - SHOULD IDEOLOGY MATTER?: JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS 2001

BODY:
I have served on two national commissions dealing with how to improve the process of nominating and confirming federal judges. Both have taken up the ideological issues that are the subject of your hearing today. The first commission, created by The Miller Center of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia, filed its report in 1996. The second, created by the Century Foundation and called Citizens for Independent Courts, filed its report in 1999.

My views on the role of ideology in the nominating and confirming process are set forth in these reports. They are incorporated in my statement. I will read a few key paragraphs from each:

First The Miller Center report in 1996:

"What is most important is the appointment of judges who are learned in the law, who are conscientious in their work ethic, and who possess what lawyers describe as "judicial temperament." That term, difficult to define, essentially has to do with a personality that is evenhanded, unbiased, impartial, courteous yet firm, and dedicated to a process, not a result. The law will be fairly read and applied, irrespective of the judge's personal views as to its wisdom; where the judge is the finder of fact, the facts will be fairly found." "As this Report recognizes, throughout our history the appointment process has been built on politics. The danger of purely political appointees lacking the necessary competence led Attorney General Brownell to introduce the American Bar Association's participation in the process. At that time -- and for some years thereafter -- relatively few persons in the Executive Branch and the Senate or its staff worked on judicial appointments, and rarely were any of them, even when lawyers, experienced in court practices and procedures. The ABA Committee was designed to fill that lack and insure, insofar as the political process permitted, the high quality of those selected."

"In addition to the growing number of appointments, the changing political process has had its impact on who the candidates for judicial office are and whether they will be nominated and confirmed. The increasingly ideological nature of political campaigns, the need for huge sums of money, the growth of dependence on contributions from various ideological groups, and the willingness of these groups to launch personal attacks on candidates they ideologically oppose, has the potential to affect the appointment process in unfortunate ways. Even putting aside the cases of Supreme Court nominees such as Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas, where this problem was obvious, there have been some signs of similar ideological controversy creeping into the process of nominating and confirming lower court candidates. While it appears that the present administration has been conscious of the problem and relatively successful in avoiding such ideological controversies, we have learned of occasional episodes where qualified candidates have refused to be considered or have withdrawn from fear of being "Borked."

REV_00256243

The Commission believes that it would be a tragic development if ideology became an increasingly important consideration in the future. To make ideology an issue in the confirmation process is to suggest that the legal process is and should be a political one. That is not only wrong as a matter of political science; it also serves to weaken public confidence in the courts. Just as candidates should put aside their partisan political views when appointed to the bench, so too should they put aside ideology. To retain either is to betray dedication to the process of impartial judging. Men and women qualified by training and experience to be judges generally do not wish to and do not indulge in partisan or ideological approaches to their work. The rare exception should not be taken as the norm.In any case, it is our view that the important process of appointing federal judges need not be as difficult as it now seems. The ultimate question is simply whether or not potential candidates have the qualities of integrity, good judgment and experience to become judicial officers of the United States. Occasional mistakes will be made. But no amount of bureaucratic vetting or testing for ideology will achieve perfection, and too complex a process can do more harm than good."

Second, the Century Foundation Report in 1999:

Recommendations for Executive and Legislative Branch Reviewers on Ideology in Federal Judicial Selection

1. Candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based on the law and facts of particular cases, without the intrusion of any rigid ideological pre-commitments to certain results or approaches to the law.

2. Reviewers should investigate a candidate's experience, qualifications, temperament, character, and general views of the law and of the judicial role. Selecting a federal judge is not just a matter of picking a legal technician, for a person's judgments may well reflect one's broad values and commitments.

3. Reviewers must refrain from asking candidates for particular pre- commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

4. The limit on questions seeking pre-commitments should be applied by reviewers in a common-sense fashion. In particular, this limit should not be allowed to prevent a fully deliberative investigation into the backgrounds, qualifications, and judicial philosophies of candidates for judgeships.

5. The limit on questions seeking pre-commitments should be respected equally by the President and other executive branch reviewers as well as by senators and other legislative branch reviewers, despite differences in the roles played by the two branches in the appointment process.

6. The limit on questions seeking pre-commitments should apply with respect to candidates for courts at all levels of the federal judiciary.

7. Reviewers seeking to assess a candidate's views should exercise caution when evaluating a person's current or former clients, memberships, and writings or speeches.

8. The value of judicial independence is consistent with pursuing diversity on the federal bench.9. The value of judicial independence is consistent with active involvement by bar associations in the selection process.

Rather than read these extracts from the two reports, I will file them for the record. After making a few personal observations of my own, I will be pleased to answer your questions.

END

LOAD-DATE: July 10, 2001

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: (lloyd /2 cutler) and judicial and confirmation and date(aft 2000) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, August 6, 2002 - 10:57 AM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256245

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Nominations Submitted	Nominees Confirmed	Percentage Of Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Nominations Submitted	Circuit Court Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Percentage of Nominees Confirmed
G.W. Bush (as of Aug. '02 Senate recess)	123	72	59%	32	13	41%
Clinton	140	126	90%	22	19	86%
George H.W. Bush	74	70	95%	23	22	96%
Reagan	88	87	99%	20	19	95%

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Circuit Court Nominees who waited more than a year for a hearing
G.W. Bush (as of August 2002)	11
Clinton	0
George H.W. Bush	0
Reagan	0

REV_00256247

THIS SEARCH
Next Hit
Prev Hit
Hit List

THIS DOCUMENT
Forward
Back
Best Sections
Doc Contents

THIS CR ISSUE
Next Document
Prev Document
Daily Digest

GO TO New CR Search
HomePage
Help

NOMINATIONS -- (Senate - July 23, 2001)

[Page: S8033] GPO's PDF

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, when we first came back and began this Congress in January, there was a lot of talk about bipartisanship at that time due primarily to the fact that the Senate was equally divided between Republicans and Democrats, and we knew we better act in a bipartisan way or not a lot would get done.

Since that time, of course, the Democratic Party has taken the majority, by virtue of the transfer from a Republican to an independent status, and we now have 50 Democrats, 49 Republicans, and one independent in the Senate; therefore, the Senate is under the control of the Democratic Party as the majority party. But we have a Republican administration and no less of a requirement to work together in a bipartisan fashion.

The distinguished President pro tempore chairs a committee which, by its very nature, requires bipartisanship. I think I was presiding in the chair the day the distinguished President pro tempore and his counterpart, the ranking member, the Senator from Alaska, talked about the fact that without the kind of bipartisan cooperation in that committee that has characterized its work, it would be hard for the Senate to get its work done.

That is also true of some other things, some housekeeping, if you will, that the Senate has to do as part of its constitutional responsibilities and, frankly, are among the most important of its responsibilities. That includes the advice and consent that we provide with respect to nominees from the executive branch.

When a new President comes into power, there is also a certain transition that takes place because the new President nominates his own people for his executive branch department, his Cabinet officers and subcabinet officers, and also, of course, judicial nominations.

In order for those departments to be fully staffed and up and operating, it is necessary for the Senate, as quickly as possible, to hold hearings on those nominees , to act on them one way or the other, and then those that it approves--the vast majority--can join the President and begin work in the executive branch of Government. Ordinarily, that is a somewhat lengthy process but not a particularly difficult process.

[Page: S8034] GPO's PDF

REV_00256248

Most of the nominations are relatively routine. After they finish their FBI check, there is a hearing . There is almost never any controversy and therefore it is not difficult for the Senate to confirm those nominees . In fact, for the benefit of a lot of folks who would not be aware of the process, we do not take time in this Chamber to debate each and every nominee and hold a rollcall vote on each and every nominee. Instead, most of them are not controversial, and the leader will ask that a group of them be considered in a group, at the end of the day; and if no Senator objects to the nominations, they are all approved, and they are approved unanimously.

That is the way it is done for most of the nominees . There are well over 600--I don't know the exact number--that we have to confirm. The problem is, this year, because of the election difficulties in Florida, the administration did not have as much time during the transition to get these people selected. As a result, we started out about a month behind in terms of the nominations from the Bush administration. Fortunately, the administration has worked very quickly and has actually caught up and even surpassed some previous administrations in the number of nominations that have been sent to the Senate.

But the Senate has not acted very quickly either. Part of that was due to the fact we had this change from an equally divided Senate to a Senate controlled by the Democratic Party, and there was a period when the reorganization resolution had not yet been adopted.

People might say: Why is all that important? Let's just get these nominees approved. Sometimes there are certain steps the Senate has to take before it can do things. The fact is, now we have had quite a period of time within which to act on these nominees , and we are beginning to act on some of them, but, frankly, they are not occurring as fast as I think they should occur and many of us believe should occur.

There are still far too many nominees we have not confirmed, and we are afraid will not be confirmed by the beginning of the August recess, in less than 2 weeks from now. That means it would not be until after Labor Day that the President would have his full complement of Cabinet officers in place, and subcabinet officers. That is far too long.

As of this month, over one-eighth of the Bush administration term is now gone, and many of the people he would have working for him are not even confirmed. The Senate has, so far, confirmed 210 Bush administration nominees , and that includes the 77 that we have confirmed just in the last 11 days. But even with that progress, it is just 58 percent of the nominees that President Bush has sent to us so far.

This chart represents the 58 percent of nominees confirmed by the Senate from George W. Bush. At this same time during the Bill Clinton administration, the Senate had confirmed 74 percent; and in the Reagan administration, 72 percent. These are administrations that took over from a previous party.

Ronald Reagan took over from Jimmy Carter. Bill Clinton took over from George Bush. And George Bush, of course, took over from Bill Clinton--each changing parties in the process.

So as we can see, the Bush nominees have not been approved, have not been confirmed at the same rate as the Senate confirmed previous Presidents' nominees . That is putting a real burden on this White House.

Incidentally, even though it wasn't a change from Reagan to the first George Bush in terms of party, the percentage was exactly the same as with regard to George W. Bush. Clearly, the Senate has to do a better job getting these nominations heard, getting them to the Senate floor, and getting them approved.

REV_00256249

The same thing is true with respect to judicial nominations. We are going to need to hold hearings and confirm judges at a much faster pace, or we are going to be way behind in terms of judgeships. I will talk about that in just a little bit.

The bottom line, the first point I am trying to make is that we would literally have had to confirm about 83 nominations last week to match the nominations that we confirmed for the Clinton administration. We confirmed only 23. We were literally 50 nominations behind as of last week.

The Bush administration has nominated 365 people to date. With the 210 confirmed, that leaves 155. We have less than 2 weeks before the August recess. We would have to do about 75 per week to get these all confirmed. The fact is, 27 of those are judicial nominees . There is no way we can hold all of the hearings on them. So let's subtract the 27 judicial nominees ; that still leaves 128 nonjudicial nominees . Those are the people the President needs to help run his Cabinet and his Cabinet agencies. That would mean we would have to do about 65 per week, this week and next week, in order to be done.

We are hopeful the Democratic leadership will cooperate in a bipartisan way to get these nominees confirmed. Because of what I explained earlier, it is not difficult to accomplish this. We can walk and chew gum at the same time. We can do both appropriations bills and nominations because nominations usually don't require a lot of time for debate on the Senate floor, and they don't require rollcall votes in most cases. In most cases, they are bundled together because they are not controversial. The leader asks unanimous consent at the end of the day that they be approved. That consent is given. They are approved, and it doesn't take very much time at all.

The good news is, the Senate can do both things at the same time. It can both pursue legislative business, which in the case of the next 2 weeks is going to consist mostly of appropriations bills, and at the same time we can do these nominations. That is the good news.

Let me try to give you a little bit of an idea of some of the agencies that have nominations pending and why these are important. As I said, there are 27 judicial nominations pending, 26 or 27. Everybody understands the importance of the judiciary. Tomorrow, the Judiciary Committee is going to hold a hearing on three nominees , but only one of them is a judge. The other two are nominees for the Department of Justice.

We have only confirmed three judicial nominees this entire year for President Bush. There is now a vacancy rate that is far higher than it was at the end of the last administration. In fact, there are today 108 vacancies in Federal courts. This is about 45 or so more than there were at the end of the Clinton administration.

Just to quote a couple of my colleagues to illustrate the significance of these judicial nominees , Senator Leahy is the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and has always been a very strong advocate for filling these judicial positions. When Bill Clinton was President, this is something Senator Leahy said:

Any week in which the Senate does not confirm three judges is a week in which the Senate is failing to address the vacancy crisis. Any fortnight in which we have gone without a judicial confirmation hearing marks 2 weeks in which the Senate is falling further behind.

REV_00256250

Senator Leahy is right about that. He said this in January of 1998. When he made that statement, there were fewer than 85 vacancies. Today there are 108 vacancies. As lawyers would say, a fortiori, it is important for us to begin confirming these judges. Moreover, as he pointed out, you can't confirm them until you have had hearings, and we are not having hearings on these judges.

We are supposed to have a hearing this week, but only one judge is on the panel. I remember the last three or four hearings of last year, we had five or six judges per panel. To have only 1 judge on the panel when there are 26 others on which we could have a hearing --their FBI clearances have been done; they are ready to have their hearing --is simply to slow down the process. There is no reason why we can't add more judges to the hearing calendar. We should be doing that.

I respectfully request that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee get on with the scheduling of these hearings.

Our majority leader, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, last year said:

[Page: S8035] GPO's PDF

Today there are 76 vacancies on the Federal bench. Of those 76 vacancies, 29 have been empty so long they are officially classified as judicial emergencies. The failure to fill these vacancies is straining our Federal court system and delaying justice for people all across this country. This cannot continue.

That was in March of 2000. When he made that statement, there were 76 vacancies, 29 of which were categorized as ``judicial emergencies.'' Today there are 108 vacancies, 40 of which are classified as ``judicial emergencies.''

It is clear the Judiciary Committee needs to begin holding more hearings, that we need to get these judges to the Senate floor for confirmation, and that the Senate needs to act more quickly on these very important judicial nominations, 40 of which are classified right now as ``emergencies.'' In other words, according to the administrative office of the U.S. courts, these are the positions which need to be filled immediately or the administration of justice will suffer. It represents 12.6 percent of the judicial positions in our country today. That is the vacancy rate, and of those, just under 40 percent, are classified as ``judicial emergencies.'' Clearly, we have to get working on these nominations.

I note that my colleague, Senator Craig, has arrived. I was going to begin discussing some of the specific nominees who are not judicial nominees that have been pending for a long time that we want to get cleared. Before I do that, perhaps my colleague is ready to make a presentation. I am happy to wait and go into some of the specific names after a little bit.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time does the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. As much time as the Senator takes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for as much time as he consumes.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Arizona for yielding. Most importantly, let me thank him for coming to the floor this afternoon to talk about what, without question, is a critically important issue to our country. That is that a President, once elected and sworn in by a Nation, has the right to govern the

REV_00256251

Clinton Administration Judicial Nominations

JUDGESHIP	NOMINATIONS	WITHDRAWN	RETURNED	REJECTED	CONFIRMED
Supreme Court	2	0	0	0	2
U.S. Circuit	106	3	38	0	65
U.S. District	384	8	70	1	305
U.S. International Trade	6	0	1	0	5
Article III Judicial Nomination TOTAL	498	11	109	1	377
U.S. Court of Federal Claims	7	0	0	0	7
U.S. Tax Court	9	0	0	0	9
U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims	1	0	0	0	1
Superior Court of the District of Columbia	24	0	2	0	22
District of Columbia Court of Appeals	5	0	1	0	4
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Services	2	0	0	0	2
OVERALL TOTAL	546	11	112	1	422

Procedural Votes

DATE	NOMINEE	VOTE
October 4, 1994	H. Lee Saroken – Third Circuit	Cloture Invoked, 85-12
September 28, 1995	James L. Dennis – Fifth Circuit	Motion to Recommit Rejected, 46-54
September 21, 1999	Marsha L. Berzon – Ninth Circuit	Motion to Proceed Rejected, 45-54
March 8, 2000	Marsha L. Berzon – Ninth Circuit	Cloture Invoked, 86-13
September 21, 1999	Richard A. Paez – Ninth Circuit	Motion to Proceed Rejected, 45-53
March 8, 2000	Richard A. Paez – Ninth Circuit	Cloture Invoked, 85-14
March 9, 2000	Richard A. Paez – Ninth Circuit	Motion to Postpone Rejected, 31-67

-There were 59 Roll Call Votes (52 confirmation of the nomination & 7 procedural) on Judicial Nominations during the Clinton Administration.
- A total of 26 returned nominations (11 Circuit & 15 District) were re-sunmitted and confirmed by the Senate.

REV_00256252

Senator Kyl

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ▫ Washington, D.C. 20510 ▫ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
April 30, 2002

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl Asks For Movement on Judges

Eight of 11 Circuit Court Nominees Still Languish After One Year

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Sen. Jon Kyl (R-AZ) today expressed disappointment that Senate Democratic leaders blocked his repeated requests to move forward on even one of the eight circuit court judges still awaiting a confirmation hearing nearly one year after their nomination by President Bush.

"Today on the Senate floor, I asked the leadership to schedule hearings on eight well-qualified judges who have been languishing in limbo for more than a year, and the Democrats said no," said Kyl today. "I asked them for hearings on seven judges, or six, or five, or four, and they said no again. Finally, I asked for a promise to hold a hearing on even one of the eight judges who have waited for Senate action for more than a year, and again my request was rebuffed.

"The lesson to be drawn is obvious: the Senate Democratic leadership is determined to obstruct and delay judicial nominations, and it is the American people who will suffer. If left unchecked, the spiraling vacancy rate on the federal courts could mean that trials are postponed, sentencings and judgments are delayed, and it would be harder for law-enforcement authorities to track and pursue suspected terrorists and other criminal offenders."

On the Senate floor, Kyl noted that only 31 percent of President Bush's circuit court nominees have been confirmed by the Senate, compared to 63 percent for President Clinton at this point in his term. Similarly, only 44 percent of Bush's overall judicial nominees have been confirmed, compared to 67 percent for Clinton at the same point in his term.

"President Bush deserves swift approval of his own nominees - and the American people certainly deserve to have a fully-staffed court system to carry out the administration of justice," Kyl added.

REV_00256253

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256254

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ▪ Washington, D.C. 20510 ▪ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
March 5, 2002

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl Urges Committee Colleagues to Release Judge Pickering

Fears Partisanship Will Frustrate Majority Will

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Senator Jon Kyl, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, today implored committee colleagues to let the majority of the Senate vote on Judge Charles Pickering's nomination to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, regardless of their personal vote on his nomination.

"With respect to judicial nominations, the Constitution requires the advice and consent of the Senate, not the advice and consent of the Judiciary Committee," said Kyl. "Since a clear majority of the Senate is poised to confirm Judge Pickering, I implore my committee colleagues to honor the democratic process and discharge Judge Pickering's nomination regardless of their own vote on his confirmation."

The Arizona Republican noted that Judge Pickering was confirmed to his current post on the U.S. District Court without a single vote in opposition in the Senate. In the last few weeks, at least two Senate Democrats have publicly stated an inclination to vote to confirm Judge Pickering for the Court of Appeals, giving him a clear majority were his nomination discharged from the committee, controlled 10-9 by Democrats.

"Ten Democrats, many of whom offered no opposition to Judge Pickering in the past, should not have the power to frustrate the wishes of more than 50 Senators," said Kyl.

Kyl, who expressed disgust with "harsh and unfair" attacks on Judge Pickering's record, also warned Democrats of the precedent they are setting for future nominations to the courts.

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256255

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ■ Washington, D.C. 20510 ■ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
Friday, May 3, 2002

An Unjust Delay

By Senator Jon Kyl

One year ago on May 9, President Bush appeared at the White House with his first 11 nominees to fill seats on the federal courts of appeals. One year later, eight of those 11 - all rated "qualified" or "well-qualified" by the American Bar Association -- have yet to even have a hearing scheduled on their nominations.

This isn't the way it used to be. President Bush's three immediate predecessors - Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton - saw nearly all of the judicial candidates nominated in the first eight months of their terms confirmed by the Senate within one year. By contrast, the Senate has confirmed just half of President Bush's total judicial nominees - signifying an appalling refusal by the Senate to respect the President's ability to select judges for the federal courts.

This week I went to the Senate floor to try to fix this inequity. At the very least, I asked my colleagues to agree to schedule hearings on the eight circuit court nominees who have languished for nearly a year. They rejected that request. Very well, I said, what about promising to schedule a hearing on seven of those nominees, or six or five, or even just one? They rejected each of those requests, too.

The necessity of acting promptly to confirm judges is much more than simply a matter of fairness to the President, though that is important. It is also the Senate's responsibility to the American people.

If we do not act to fill those vacancies -- many of which are considered emergencies -- and the number of empty seats on the courts continues to rise, the American people will pay the price. Delayed justice can take many forms. It may mean that some criminals linger on the streets while they await trial or sentencing. Or that victims of crimes will have to wait longer for judgments or compensation. Or that it becomes harder for law-enforcement officials to get judicial consent in time to track or monitor suspected terrorists within our borders.

REV_00256256

The Senate's inaction has risen to such a level that it has sparked a rare rebuke from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (who called the delays "alarming"), the Wall Street Journal (opining that "the Senate has not done enough to meet its constitutional responsibility") and the Washington Post (which editorialized that the Democratic leadership "has offered no reasonable justification for stalling on these nominations.")

Let me tell you about the eight circuit court nominees who have been consigned to an uncertain limbo for nearly a year:

- John Roberts has argued 36 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States.

- Miguel Estrada argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court, worked as a federal prosecutor, and as assistant U.S. solicitor general. He came to America as a teenager, speaking virtually no English. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

- Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen was elected to her current post in 1994 and re-elected in 2000, when she was endorsed by every major newspaper in the state.

- Michael McConnell, a nominee to the 10th Circuit, is one of the nation's leading constitutional scholars, endorsed by hundreds of Democratic law professors across the country.

- Jeff Sutton, a nominee to the Sixth Circuit, graduated first in his class at Ohio State Law School, and served as solicitor for the state.

- Justice Deborah Cook, who currently serves on the Ohio Supreme Court, was the first woman partner ever at Akron's oldest law firm.

- Judge Dennis Shedd, unanimously confirmed to the federal district court in 1990, served as chief counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

- Terrence Boyle, unanimously confirmed to the federal district court in 1984, is endorsed by the former chairman of the North Carolina Democratic Party, who hailed him for his fairness and integrity.

These are exemplary candidates being held hostage by a Senate majority that is playing politics with real people's lives - using them as bargaining chips to move legislation, or attacking them on behalf of special-interest groups determined to keep conservatives off the courts. This victimizes not only the nominees themselves, but their families, their friends, and their fellow citizens, over whom they would preside as judges.

This is why Senate Republicans will mark the one-year anniversary of their selection with disappointment and frustration. It shouldn't have to be this hard - or taken this long -- for any President to get such well-qualified and distinguished people on the federal courts.

###

REV_00256257

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ▫ Washington, D.C. 20510 ▫ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
July 24, 2001

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl Warns of Vacancy "Emergency" on Federal Courts

Urges Senate to Move Forward on Nominations Vital to Workings of Government

WASHINGTON, D.C. – U.S. Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ), warning that the nation faces a judicial "emergency," today urged the Senate to hold more hearings on President Bush's judicial nominations and to quickly bring candidates to the Senate floor for a vote. "Today the nation confronts a judicial confirmation emergency that imperils the administration of the courts and delays justice," said Kyl. "Without a properly staffed court system, cases are delayed, sentences cannot be swiftly imposed on many criminals, and violent crime victims and their families are continually frustrated and delayed in their quest for justice."

Kyl noted that there are currently 108 vacancies on the federal courts – 45 more than at the end of the Clinton administration. Of those vacancies, 40 are classified as judicial "emergencies" by the administrative office of the U.S. courts. To date, only three judicial nominees have been confirmed by the Senate in the entire year.

Kyl also said he was concerned that, overall, 42 percent of Bush administration nominees have not yet been voted on by the Senate – a rate far higher than at a similar point in time for Presidents Clinton and Reagan (26 and 28 percent, respectively).

"Acting quickly on administration nominations is one of the most important duties of the Senate, and it can be done without extensive debate on the Senate floor," Kyl said. "This is not a partisan issue, but an urgent need." Kyl noted that, in addition to the serious court vacancies, several key administration await Senate action.

These include: the Ambassador to the United Nations, the chairman of the Consumer Products' Safety Commission, the lawyer for the Department of Labor to enforce labor laws, and the director of the Office for Victims of Crime at the Department of Justice. In total, there are 27 nominees pending before the Judiciary Committee; ten before the Agriculture

REV_00256258

Committee; nine pending before the Armed Services Committee; seven pending before the Banking Committe; and 41 before the Foreign Relations Committee, Kyl said.

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256259

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ▪ Washington, D.C. 20510 ▪ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
September 4, 2001

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl: Judicial Vacancy Pace Worsening

Says New Effort to Change Rules On Nominations Will Cause

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, today said the American people should be disappointed by the "glacial" pace of judicial confirmations. He also warned that a new effort to change the rules concerning the Senate's exercise of its confirmation power would only worsen the vacancy crisis.

"Though the nation faces a growing vacancy crisis on the federal courts -- imperiling the swift administration of justice -- the Senate has managed to confirm only four federal judges this entire year," said Kyl. "Faced with 108 judicial vacancies - including 40 considered 'emergencies' - the American people should rightfully expect that the Senate do better than the rate of approving one judge every eight weeks."

Kyl said that a hearing scheduled today by the Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight threatened to further delay the confirmation of judges. Entitled "The Senate's Role in the Nomination and Confirmation Process: Whose Burden?," the hearing follows one held earlier this year that suggested that a judicial nominee's political beliefs alone would be a suitable grounds to reject his or her nomination.

"Not only is the Senate delaying confirmations, now some Senators want to change the way the process has worked for most of our history," Kyl said. "First they suggested that candidates with an unwelcome political ideology need not apply for a job on the courts. And today they suggest that presidential nominees may be presumed unqualified until the nominees demonstrate their fitness to some Senators' satisfaction.

"This is no way to pursue a swift and bipartisan confirmation process - and it is the American public that suffers from these delays," Kyl added. "Without a properly staffed court system, cases are delayed, sentences cannot be swiftly imposed on many criminals, and violent crime victims and their families are continually frustrated and delayed in their quest for justice. It's time to move on nominations."

REV_00256260

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256261

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ¤ Washington, D.C. 20510 ¤ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
March 15, 2002

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl Lauds Confirmation Of Tucsonan David Bury For Federal Judgeship

Senator Says Help Is On The Way For Overworked Federal District Court

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Senator Jon Kyl today commended the Senate for unanimously approving the nomination of Tucsonan David C. Bury for a seat on the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona. Bury's nomination was jointly supported by Senators Kyl and John McCain.

"David Bury's confirmation fills the third and final vacancy on Arizona's U.S. District Court," said Kyl today. "This is good news for Arizonans. For too long, the federal court in Tucson has been overworked and overburdened, creating a judicial vacancy emergency in our state that unavoidably delayed the administration of justice. That is why many of us have worked so hard to get the Senate to act quickly to fill these vacancies."

In addition to Bury, the Senate recently confirmed Pima County Superior Court Judge Cindy K. Jorgensen and Arizona Supreme Court Justice Frederick Martone for the U.S. District Court. All three were nominated by President Bush and sponsored by Kyl and McCain.

Mr. Bury is a founding partner and shareholder in the firm of Bury, Moeller, O'Meara & Gage P.C. of Tucson, Arizona. He has served as a trial lawyer for over 34 years, with experience in almost every area of civil trial practice. He has served as a lawyer representative to the Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference, on the Commission on Trial Court Appointments for Pima County, and on the disciplinary committee for the State Bar of Arizona. Bury is a graduate of the University of Arizona College of Law.

Kyl also urged the Senate to act quickly on President Bush's nomination of David Gonzales for U.S. Marshal for the District of Arizona. Gonzales presently serves as commander and chief of staff of the Arizona Department of Public Safety in Phoenix. He has previously worked as Interim Chief of Police in South Tucson and Bullhead City, and has served on various professional organizations, including the Arizona Latino Police Officer Association, the Arizona Highway Patrol Association, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, and the Arizona Juvenile Justice Commission.

REV_00256262

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256263

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ▪ Washington, D.C. 20510 ▪ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
May 9, 2002

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl Marks One Year Of Senate Inaction On Bush Circuit Court Nominees

"It Shouldn't Have Had to Come to This," Says Kyl

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Sen. Jon Kyl (R-AZ), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, today offered the following statement marking the one year anniversary of President Bush's first selection of candidates to serve on federal circuit courts:

"The anniversary we commemorate today is a sad one, because no one imagined it would ever have to come to this. But the fierce opposition to President's Bush's circuit court nominees is so unprecedented and so disgraceful that Republicans have had to join together to demand something that should not be so hard to get: simple fair play.

"The failure to act on judges is a disservice to the American people. Delayed justice can take many forms. It may mean that some criminals linger on the streets while they await trial or sentencing. Or that victims of crimes will have to wait longer for judgments or compensation. Or that it becomes harder for law-enforcement officials to get judicial consent in time to track or monitor suspected terrorists within our borders.

"Yet one year after these nominees have been selected, and many months after each have been rated qualified to serve by the American Bar Association, eight of the President's original circuit court selections have not even had a hearing to consider their nominations. This gamesmanship is a cruel affront to these fine candidates, their families, and their reputations.

"This astonishing refusal by the Democratic majority to even hold hearings on these nominees is unprecedented. Presidents Clinton, Bush, and Reagan all had nearly every one of their initial circuit court nominees confirmed by the Senate within one year of their selections.

REV_00256264

"Of course, both sides can wage a war of statistics about what happened in the past. But the question should be what is happening right now. More than three-quarters of President Bush's initial circuit court nominees today linger in an uncertain limbo, delaying justice for the American people. That is not fair to the President, to the nominees, or the country. It must be remedied, and it is the reason Republicans are speaking out today."

The following Circuit Court nominees have all been rated "qualified" or "well-qualified" for their posts by the American Bar Association and have waited exactly one year for any Senate action on their nominations:

- John Roberts has argued 36 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States.
- Miguel Estrada argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court, worked as a federal prosecutor, and as assistant U.S. solicitor general. He came to America as a teenager, speaking virtually no English. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.
- Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen was elected to her current post in 1994 and re-elected in 2000, when she was endorsed by every major newspaper in the state.
- Michael McConnell, a nominee to the 10th Circuit, is one of the nation's leading constitutional scholars, endorsed by hundreds of Democratic law professors across the country.
- Jeff Sutton, a nominee to the Sixth Circuit, graduated first in his class at Ohio State Law School, and served as solicitor for the state.
- Justice Deborah Cook, who currently serves on the Ohio Supreme Court, was the first woman partner ever at Akron's oldest law firm.
- Judge Dennis Shedd, unanimously confirmed to the federal district court in 1990, served as chief counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee.
- Terrence Boyle, unanimously confirmed to the federal district court in 1984, is endorsed by the former chairman of the North Carolina Democratic Party, who hailed him for his fairness and integrity.

###

Return to Press Office

REV_00256265

JON KYL
U.S. SENATOR FOR ARIZONA
NEWS
730 Hart Senate Office Building ■ Washington, D.C. 20510 ■ (202) 224-4521

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
July 17, 2001

CONTACT:
Matthew Latimer or
Andrew Wilder, (202) 224-4521

Kyl: Time to Fix Judicial Backlog

Senator Wants Pending Nominees Sent to the Floor by August

WASHINGTON, D.C. – U.S. Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, today continued to press the Senate leadership for a vote on all pending Bush administration nominees – including judiciary nominations -- before the chamber departs for its August recess.

"I will continue to press the Senate to confirm all pending nominees – many of whom have been languishing in uncertain limbo for months -- before our scheduled August recess," said Kyl. "This does not have to be a challenge, and this does not have to be difficult. A Senate committed to bipartisanship should be able to move forward on these nominees without further delay."

Last week, Kyl successfully reached agreement with the Democratic Senate leadership to schedule an up or down vote on five bottled-up Interior Department nominees. The Senator held up debate on an Interior appropriations bill until the nominations were acted on.

In addition to Executive Branch nominations, Kyl said a serious delay in confirming judicial nominees presents an equally grave crisis. He noted that not a single Bush judicial nominee to federal district or circuit courts have yet been confirmed by the Senate. Of 29 judiciary nominations announced by President Bush since his Inauguration, only three have had any hearings, he added.

"While I commend Democratic leaders for making some progress on confirming some administration nominees, we still have a long way to go," said Kyl. "Failure to promptly consider judicial nominees imperils the administration of justice."

###

REV_00256266

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: "and at least hearings for judicial nominees" (Edit Search)

The National Journal July 29, 2000

Copyright 2000 The National Journal, Inc.
The National Journal

July 29, 2000

SECTION: POLITICS; Pg. 2452; Vol. 32, No. 31

LENGTH: 2503 words

HEADLINE: America Is 'Starved for a New Tone'

BYLINE: James A. Barnes

BODY:

During one of his last campaign swings before the Republican National Convention, Texas Gov. George W. Bush talked with National Journal Staff Correspondent James A. Barnes between bites of airline food. The following are edited excerpts of their conversation:

NJ: What's President Clinton done right?

Bush: Protected his child. Began the process of saying that children are private. He is a master at using presidential power to paint the Congress in a corner. Relations between the executive branch and the legislative branch are a crucial part of the mix of a presidency.

NJ: How's he harmed the presidency? Bush: You know what? I don't think any individual can harm the presidency. I think the office is greater than its occupants, and I believe I can restore dignity to that office and I believe I can build enough capital to get something done. That's one of the refreshing things about the American system. Changes of power are peaceful and orderly, and tend to purge the system. I say that remembering what it was like in the '60s and the '70s, a very difficult period of time in American history.

NJ: Are you saying he somehow degraded the office?

Bush: I'm saying he's embarrassed the country.

NJ: Would you consider pardoning him if he's indicted for lying about his relationship with Monica Lewinsky?

Bush: No. He asked not to be pardoned. He said it loud and clear, and I take him at his word.

NJ: How do you think your approach to leading would differ from Al Gore's?

Bush: I think that Al Gore is a part of a scene in Washington that believes that when you tear something down, when you attack, you get ahead. I don't believe you can lead doing that. I don't think you can solve Social Security's problems by creating an environment of distrust. And there's nothing in this campaign thus far that has shown me there would be a different type of attitude in Washington, D.C., than that attitude of polarization. It's one thing to criticize, it's another thing to put everything in such personal matters. I think a President has got to set a different tone. And this country is starved for a different tone, one of the reasons I'm going to get elected.

NJ: In Knoxville, Tenn., last month, you called for a new approach to the way Washington works and said that "leaving yesterday's quarrels behind" would help achieve that goal.

Bush: Absolutely.
NJ: Is there something Republicans should let go of?

Bush: Yeah. There is a real bitterness about some Republicans, (who) are so used to the squabbles and the finger-pointing. In a speech I gave at the big gala in Washington, I basically said both parties are to blame. I happen to believe most of the onus is on the President. I think a President can set a tone. I wouldn't have run for the presidency if I did not believe an Administration can change a tone and an atmosphere in Washington, I firmly believe that. On the other hand, the Congress has responded at times, too, in like kind.
NJ: You also said in Knoxville that if elected you would ask the Senate to act on your nominations in 60 days.

Bush: Yes.
NJ: Thinking about the good will you said is important to establish in Washington, why wait until next year? Why shouldn't the Senate act in this session on President Clinton's nominees whose names were submitted at least 60 days ago?

Bush: That's a very good question. And I would hope that Republicans would hear my call. Now, there's going to be special circumstances in some of the cases. I mean, some judges may be deemed to be incompetent, but I hope there is expeditious review.
NJ: In this session?

Bush: Absolutely.
NJ: And at least hearings for judicial nominees?

Bush: Yeah, if it's good enough for me, it's good enough for the President.
NJ: In terms of letting things go, how about Republican calls for a special counsel investigation of the Clinton-Gore fund raising and their criticism of the Attorney General as being derelict in duty for not moving forward with one?

Bush: Well, there's a great deal of suspicion in Washington. There are folks that have completely overstepped the bounds of fund raising and yet there's been no real accountability. I can understand why Republicans are frustrated. Right after the primaries, my opponent said he wants to ban "soft money," the very same day the President is out raising soft money. These are sleight-of-hand experts. There has been no full accountability of the involvement. I mean, yesterday the Vice President says at the Buddhist temple no money changed hands. My only point is, in the face of a call for campaign funding reform, the best campaign funding reform is going to have honest people.

NJ: It's your first week in the White House....

Bush: Yes, thank you. I love an optimist. You're the only guy that's ever asked me that question.
... what are some of the first things you do in the office?

Obviously, Step 1 is to bring what is going to be a really interesting, smart, capable Cabinet and staff together and begin the process of doing something I did as governor-of building a team. I haven't thought this far ahead. One of the first things I did was have a full ethics briefing. I said this is the standard, the highest and all that, and attorneys briefed our staff on what to look for, what things to be careful about. Another thing is to start reaching out to Congress to prepare a legislative agenda. The first 100 days, 90 days, or 110 days will be very important. There are some executive directives like getting the Secretary of Defense started on a long-term strategic plan for what the military is going to look like. We have a chance to redefine war and, therefore, enhance peace. I really want our government and our country spending money on the military in a wise, focused fashion. Spending needs to be based upon a strategic vision that says today's military will be high in morale. We'll pay soldiers better and have better training, less deployment. This military needs to look different 30 years from now, so let's start the process today. That requires executive direction.
NJ: If elected, do you plan to use the Reagan model of quick action on major legislation?

Bush: Yes.
NJ: Would Social Security reform be a hundred days agenda item?

Bush: It would be wonderful if it could be, but I think Social Security reform is going to require first and foremost a bipartisan commission, which I would hope to get in place quickly. John McCain had a very good idea on the commission. I don't know whether their recommendations could come out in the first 100 days.
NJ: Would you put McCain on the commission?

Bush: Depends on where he is. I'm not telling you.

NJ: Why haven't you done more in conjunction with Republican congressional leaders in the campaign?

Bush: You mean why haven't I campaigned with them? It's not intentional. They are where they are in Washington, and I'm out in the hustings. They're friends, they're going to be allies. But there is something else here. They asked me yesterday on TV, "Are you for the President's swap on marriage penalty for prescription drugs?" This is up to the Congress and this

REV_00256269

President to resolve.
NJ: Are you concerned that the Republican Congress and President Clinton might cut some legislative deals to benefit both of them politically, as they did in 1996, which undercut Bob Dole's presidential campaign?

Bush: I expect it. But if it's good for the country, it doesn't concern me. I don't know what you have in mind, but I will tell an example of where I thought the Congress stood strong, and deservedly so, was on eliminating the death tax. In other words, it was a pure bill.
NJ: How much difference ideologically do you see between congressional Republicans and GOP governors?

Bush: It's just a difference. I thought you were going to say between the House and the Senate, and my answer to that was it's hard to tell because of the procedural nature of both houses. You can take the same person with the same philosophy, but because the rules are different, there's a lot of procedural differences that tend to set the tenor of each body. Same with governors. We're all conservative people, but there's such a difference between a governor and a legislator. It's just a different mentality. The governors are decision-makers, they're doers, they play the hand they've been dealt, and the legislative body tends to be more reactive. I tease people, saying appropriators are appropriators. If you think they are going to take surpluses and pay down debt, you don't understand the nature of an appropriator. Both Republican and Democrat appropriators appropriate. That's why I have no faith that unspent money, is going to be spent on what people want.
NJ: Have you ever voted for a Democrat?

Bush: Well, my stock answer is they always put the curtains on the booth for a reason, but, yes, I have, in Texas.
NJ: Who are some Democrats you admire?

Bush: I greatly admired (late Texas Lt. Gov.) Bob Bullock a lot. And he passed as a close friend. When he went it was a tearful moment. Speaker Pete Laney of the Texas House, I admire Pete. We have our differences, sometimes, but I think he's been a very good speaker, and I think the success of my tenure as governor is a result of me being able to work with Pete.
NJ: Democrats outside of Texas?

Bush: I had a good visit with (Sen.) Bob Kerrey the other day. And I found him to be a very interesting man. Just willing to think anew. Bob's an interesting guy. I was very impressed by him.
NJ: Do you think the nominating process should be changed so it's not so compressed?

Bush: That's a really hard question to ask somebody that's just come through the process. We're people who get mikes stuck in our face and(asked), "Will you promise to keep Iowa and New Hampshire first?" as you're campaigning in Iowa and New Hampshire. I mean, you know, hello? And so we're fresh off of promises to these states. Yeah, something has to be done, I think. I don't know what the solution is. I know this, though: It was a pretty tough process, physically. I'm in great condition, and it was a lot tougher than I thought it would be. Maybe it's because it was so compressed. I mean, remember-we're flying across the country, going from New York to California to Ohio to Missouri to California to New York, and it was a lot of work. I'm not averse to work, don't get me wrong. I'm not complaining, but it was tough. I think the process is good in many ways, though. It gave voters a chance to look at me. You didn't know me from Adam. You're probably wondering what this guy is all about. You now have a different set of data points. You saw me lose. You saw me lose, hopefully, gracefully. You saw me turn around and win. Everything looked like it was heading right to victory and all of a sudden I lost again.

REV_00256270

NJ: How about what phase in the campaign, like after you lost New Hampshire?

Bush: That was a learning experience. On the road to the presidency, there are certain moments that help define who I am to the public and who I am to myself. I believe that I am growing into the presidency. And I think there's a series of steps toward that. And, there's a certain internal, hard to describe what's happening to me, because you're talking in midprocess. But there's a certain internal, certain events that...
NJ: Steel you?

Bush: Yeah, that steel you; convince you that it's meant to be. Defeat is part of it. You see the primaries are this. You wake up in New Hampshire the next morning, you just got clobbered. Then you're down in Delaware and South Carolina. And you win Delaware, and the next moment it's South Carolina, and you win South Carolina, and then it's Michigan. Those of us who have run for office before remember the victories and then remember a little time off between the victories and the transition. In other words, there's a moment. And the final moment doesn't arrive for the presidency until November. So there's a series of these emotional ups and downs, and it's like a marathon. It's like a very-long-distance race. I've come away realizing that this process requires the utmost of discipline and focus and patience, something I have not been long on in my life. But I'm becoming a much more patient person, which I think will stand me in good stead to be the President. Patience is very important, because with patience comes the confidence-confidence in the strategy, confidence in the wisdom of the American people, confidence in my own abilities.
NJ: How important do you think the debates will be?

Bush: What debates? Just kidding. I think they'll be important, part of the puzzle. I think the selection of the Vice President will be very important. I think the acceptance speech will be important, and I think some of the debates will be important. But I think the Sunday Gore and I appeared on interview shows was important. For those who were paying attention, I think people got to see me under questioning and got to see Gore. It's kind of an interesting side-by-side comparison.

REV_00256271

But you pick moments, this is a moment. You walk away saying, you know, "complete idiot" or "maybe I will vote for him." And so do the voters. They pick up glimpses. People decide all kinds of different ways. The debates will have some importance. I found the debates in the primaries to be very important moments, important for me, important for my campaign. We got exposure. People paid attention, but they weren't deciding.
NJ: What lessons did you take from your father's loss in 1992?

Bush: That incumbency, if not properly defended, is fragile.
NJ: And his victory in '88?

Bush: That it's important to drive the agenda.
NJ: How are you like your father?

Bush: Call up people who know us both.
NJ: Same for your mother?

Bush: Sure. I don't know. A lot of people say I'm a lot like my mom. That's a hard question for me to answer. I don't spend a lot of time trying to figure me out, particularly in terms of what my genetic disposition is, and my personality is, relative to my parents. I'm just not into psychobabble. But Beverly Kaufman, the county clerk in Harris County, said one time when she was introducing me, she said, "I'm introducing a very great governor, an interesting man-he's got his daddy's eyes and his mother's mouth."

LOAD-DATE: August 1, 2000

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All
Terms: "and at least hearings for judicial nominees" (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:58 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256272

Copyright 2000 eMediaMillWorks, Inc.
(f/k/a Federal Document Clearing House, Inc.)
FDCH Political Transcripts

View Related Topics

June 8, 2000, Thursday

TYPE: CAMPAIGN 2000

LENGTH: 2068 words

HEADLINE: GOVERNOR GEORGE W. BUSH (R-TX) DELIVERS REMARKS ON GOVERNMENT REFORM; KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE

SPEAKER:
GOVERNOR GEORGE W. BUSH (R-TX),

BODY:
GOVERNOR BUSH DELIVERS REMARKS ON GOVERNMENT REFORM AT

KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE, EVENT, AS RELEASED BY THE BUSH

CAMPAIGN

JUNE 9, 2000

SPEAKER: GOVERNOR GEORGE W. BUSH (R-TX)

REPUBLICAN PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

*

BUSH: Thank you very much. It is good to be in Knoxville.

It has been almost a year since my campaign began. Since that first trip to Iowa, I have laid out my agenda for America both at home and abroad.

My goals for America are clear. To make sure that every child is educated, by returning high standards and accountability to public schools.
To bring more economic growth and opportunity, by reducing the income tax burden on all Americans -- especially those aspiring to the middle class.

To keep our commitment to elderly Americans, and generations to come, by saving and strengthening social security.

To keep the peace, by building a national missile defense, modernizing our military, and establishing clear principles for the use of our power in the world.

These are things that must be done, the nation's pressing business.

Today I want to talk about the way we conduct the nation's business. Many Americans believe that Washington's way of doing things just isn't working. That government's purposes are too often forgotten, and opportunities too often squandered -- resulting in too few results.

In so many ways, America in the year 2000 is the picture of success. Our economy is more competitive than ever -- more efficient. Our technologies are marvels of creativity. Throughout the private sector, we're seeing what people can accomplish with strong leadership, clear goals, fair dealing, and cooperation.

This could hardly be said of the federal government. There is too much argument in Washington and not enough discussion. Too much polling and not enough decision making. Too much needless division, not enough shared accomplishment. Not enough final acts and resolutions, and lasting achievements.

There is blame enough to go around. I do not dismiss the serious disagreements that are part of politics, but the reality is that Americans look upon this spectacle and don't like what they see. They know that this is not the way the world's great power should conduct its affairs. I agree with them. It's time for change.

Consider, by contrast, many of our state and local governments, where the best ideas and boldest reforms of the last decade have taken place. All across America, governors, state legislators, and city officials have laid partisan differences aside and done what they were elected to do -- serve the people.

In New York City, Mayor Rudy Giuliani brought order and civility back to the streets -- cutting crime rates by 50 percent.

In Cleveland, Mayor Michael White's bipartisan leadership has led to a revitalized downtown area and a higher quality of life similar to Mayor Ash, here in Knoxville.

In Wisconsin, Governor Tommy Thompson led bipartisan reform and proved that welfare dependence could be reversed -- reducing the rolls in his state by 91 percent similar to Governor Sundquist, here in Tennessee.

In Texas, we never lack for partisan battles. Texas is a two- party state where tough politics comes naturally. But when it counts, we work to put the public interest first. In my first term as governor, I worked with a Democratic legislature to reform education, the legal system, juvenile justice, and welfare. These were joint accomplishments of a Republican governor and a Democratic legislature.

Politics has not been my career. And what I've learned in the private sector has proven true in government: a little good will goes a long way. Good will is earned by respecting your opponents, telling the truth, and leaving yesterday's quarrels behind.

REV_00256274

And if good will is to prevail, a leader must set the right tone. A leader guided his convictions, not by the counsel of his pollster. A strong leader sets his mind to solving problems, not settling scores. Every successful mayor and governor understands this. And so should the next president.

With just seven months until the end of his term, we will leave our current president to the judgment of history. What matters now is whether the bitterness that now prevails in Washington will continue after his term.

There is a clear choice in this campaign, and the people are seeing it in the kind of tone we set, and how we talk about the big issues facing America. Take social security, for example. Recently I laid out a plan, a framework, to guide bipartisan reform in social security, to increase its value and keep our commitments to the elderly. There will be reasonable disagreements on this important issue. Surely, all can agree that this is a serious matter requiring the best efforts of both parties.

And yet all we have heard from my opponent are the familiar exaggerations and scare tactics. Ideas he doesn't share are never just the other side of an issue: They are "radical" or "reckless" ideas. Proposals he disapproves of are never just arguable; they are always "risky schemes."

This kind of unnecessary rhetoric is characteristic of the tone in Washington. It's the war-room mentality -- the hostile stance, the harsh charges, the lashing out at enemies. We have had eight years of this, and eight years is enough.

We need a clean break from the recent past. It is time for leadership that sets a new tone -- a tone of respect and bipartisanship.

A president can do this. He can refrain from personal attacks, and treat members of both parties with respect. He can reach across the partisan aisle and work with all for the good of the country.

In this same spirit, there are some practical steps we can take to change Washington. I am proposing today a set of six specific reforms relating to the budget process, pork-barrel spending, and nominations.

First, the budget process. I will propose that the federal budget be passed by both houses of Congress and signed by the president into law.

As it is now, the president and Congress work separately on their own budget proposals. Only very late in the year do these two branches begin working together on the details. Often their separate budgets are just a prelude to battle. A joint budget resolution signed by the legislative branch and the executive branch would start the process on the right footing, encouraging cooperation, and early agreement on fundamentals.

REV_00256275

I also support a law putting the entire budget and appropriations process on a biennial basis, as is done in my state and 20 others.

If the discord in Washington never seems to end, this is partly because the budget process never seems to end. Lawmakers spend more than half of their time each year wrangling over budget resolutions, reconciliation bills, and appropriations bills. And often, as many legislators will tell you, they've hardly had time to examine the bills before the vote is taken.

By putting the process on a two-year schedule, we allow more time for thoughtful debate on the whole range of issues facing the Congress -- better oversight of the bureaucracy, confirmations, and other long term concerns.

I will also propose a bill ending the annual threat of shutting down the government.

These threats have given both parties some moments we all prefer to forget. Disagreements have become deadlocks, the entire budget process resulting in no budget at all. Americans have had to watch federal agencies close for business and national parks and monuments turn away visitors.

These standoffs have undermined public confidence in government. To ensure that the government does not shut down again, here is what I propose.

If an appropriations bill is not signed by October first of the new fiscal year, affected programs would continue to be funded at the level of the president's budget, or the previous year's level as approved by Congress -- whichever is lower.

Behind this reform is the simple principle that, above and beyond the quarrels of the moment, the United States government has certain basic commitments, and those commitments must be kept.

Next, I will address a longstanding source of public irritation and outrage -- the wasteful habit of pork-barrel spending.

It's often said that one politician's "pork" is another's vital project, one district's "corporate welfare" another district's vital federal investment. But we need a more objective definition of "vital."

This confusion is the source of too much waste, and too much haggling, bargaining, and resentment in Washington. We have all heard examples of wasteful spending, such as the $250,000 to research caffeinated chewing gum. Or the 750,000 dollars for grasshopper research. New examples come along every year. The process never seems to change.

REV_00256276

I support the establishment of a bipartisan commission to eliminate pork throughout the federal government.

There is bipartisan support for such a commission, including the backing of Senators McCain, Thompson, Abraham, and Lieberman. But such an idea needs a presidential push, which I will give it. This panel will submit to Congress a list of all spending projects deemed frivolous and unnecessary. The Congress will then cast a simple "up" or "down" vote. No amendments, no back-scratching, no logrolling.

Further, to bring fiscal discipline to the budget, I will ask Congress to pass line-item veto legislation.

The Supreme Court has made clear how such legislation can pass constitutional muster. Congress cannot give the president a permanent line-item veto. But it can give the president authority to decline to spend wasteful appropriations. As president, I will seek that constitutional authority. And I will use it to prevent spending that fails to serve the public interest. And I will use the unspent money to pay down the national debt.

These reforms can take some of the friction out of our national politics -- and justify greater public confidence in Washington. But they are reforms of procedure only. In the end, only the spirit of the lawmakers themselves can bring real change to Washington. Above all else, we must call a truce to politics as combat -- where differences of principle give rise to unprincipled attacks on character.

A good place to start is the nomination and confirmation process.

The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became -- lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. Often they are occasions for pushing larger agendas, having nothing to do with the merits of the nominee. At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.

REV_00256277

Public service is an honorable calling, and there are many now serving in Washington who view it just that way. But their voices are easily drowned out in the din of battle. Instead, the agenda is determined -- the tone set -- by the loud, the aggressive, the contentious.

This should not be the spirit of Washington. This is no way to encourage good people to serve, and no way to build a legacy of accomplishment.

None of us can control how others will conduct themselves. But each of us can control our own actions and our own words. As president, I will set a new tone in Washington. I will do everything I can to restore civility to our national politics -- a respect for honest differences, and a decent regard for one another.

Thank you very much.

END

NOTES:
Unknown - Indicates speaker unknown.
Inaudible - Could not make out what was being said.
off mike - Indicates could not make out what was being said.

PERSON: GEORGE WALKER BUSH (97%); GEORGE W BUSH (73%);

LOAD-DATE: June 9, 2000

Document 1 of 1

About LexisNexis™ | Terms and Conditions | Privacy Policy | Support Identifier

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Brent D. Greenfield
08/05/2002 05:23:34 PM

Record Type: Record

To: Brett M. Kavanaugh/WHO/EOP@EOP

cc:
Subject: 60-day quotes

NJ: You also said in Knoxville that if elected you would ask the Senate to act on your nominations in 60 days.

Bush: Yes.

NJ: Thinking about the good will you said is important to establish in Washington, why wait until next year? Why shouldn't the Senate act in this session on President Clinton's nominees whose names were submitted at least 60 days ago?

Bush: That's a very good question. And I would hope that Republicans would hear my call. Now, there's going to be special circumstances in some of the cases. I mean, some judges may be deemed to be incompetent, but I hope there is expeditious review.

NJ: In this session?

Bush: Absolutely.

NJ: And at least hearings for judicial nominees?

Bush: Yeah, if it's good enough for me, it's good enough for the President.
-The National Journal, 07/29/00

GEORGE BUSH: ...Above all else, we must call a truce to the politics as combat, where differences of principles give rise to the unprincipled attacks on character. And a good place to start is in the nomination and confirmation process. The President and the Senate have a joint responsibility. The President must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting on them. Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees as top priorities, and I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I ask this to both - (Applause) - I ask both Republicans and Democrats to follow this standard, regardless of who may be elected next November.

-The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer, 06/09/00

Above all else, we must call a truce to politics as combat -- where differences of principle give rise to unprincipled attacks on character.

A good place to start is the nomination and confirmation process.

The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became -- lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. Often they are occasions for pushing larger agendas, having nothing to do with the merits of the nominee. At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.
-FDCH Political Transcript, 06/08/00

541372
ME001

LB

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 30, 2002

COPY from ORM

The Honorable William H. Rehnquist
The Chief Justice of the United States
Washington, D.C. 20543

Dear Mr. Chief Justice:

I write to propose a specific plan to address the problem of judicial vacancies and improve the judicial confirmation process. The plan would apply both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The cooperation of all three Branches of the Federal Government is necessary for the plan to work.

There is a vacancy crisis in the Federal Judiciary. As of this week, there are 79 vacancies out of 849 authorized judgeships, which amounts to a 9 percent vacancy rate. The 12 regional Federal appeals courts face a particularly serious crisis, with 28 vacancies out of 167 judgeships, amounting to a 17 percent vacancy rate. The number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high throughout my Presidency. Your 2001 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary called the situation "alarming," and the Secretary of the Judicial Conference of the United States stated in May 2002 that the "overall shortage" of Federal judges is "staggering." Moreover, the caseloads in the Federal courts continue to grow dramatically; for example, filings in the Federal appeals courts reached an all time high last year.

The high judicial vacancy numbers, when combined with the increasing caseloads, create crowded dockets and slow down the justice system. When judicial vacancies go unfilled, Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to protect constitutional rights, resolve civil disputes, and enforce the criminal, environmental, and civil rights laws that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans.

Too many judicial nominees -- and particularly appeals court nominees -- have had to wait too long for their Senate hearings and up-or-down Senate floor votes. Speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in your 2001 Year-End Report, you "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination." Many outside entities with an interest in the Judiciary have made similar pleas. For example, the American Bar Association in August 2002 adopted a resolution that the Senate should promptly advise and consent to or reject the nominees. The accompanying ABA report stated: "Vote them up or down, but don't hang them out to dry." These concerns are not new.

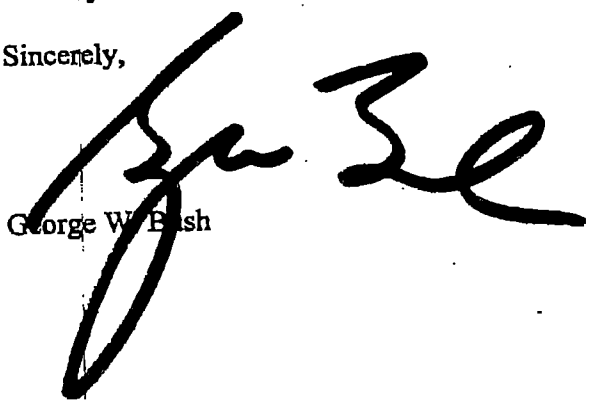
* Not dispatched through ORM

Today, I am advancing a new plan for the process of nominating and confirming Federal judges. We should have an even-handed, predictable procedure from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn. This procedure should apply now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

First, Federal court of appeals and district court judges should notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, if possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a Federal judge is a lengthy process even under the best of circumstances, judges who retire without advance notice can unintentionally create a judicial vacancy that can last for many months. This proposal builds on existing policy of the Judiciary and will help us work toward a system in which a new Federal judge is ready to take the bench on the day a sitting judge retires.

Second, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a Federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This proposal will speed up the sometimes time-consuming process of obtaining recommendations and evaluations from home-State Senators, Representatives, Governors, and bar leaders -- while leaving ample time for Presidents to vet and choose nominees of the highest quality.

Third, the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. A strict deadline is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. And 90 days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct necessary research before holding a hearing.



Finally, the full Senate should hold an up-or-down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. That is a very generous period of time that will allow all Senators to evaluate nominees and have their votes counted.

If adopted and followed by all three Branches, this plan will help restore fairness and dignity to the judicial confirmation process. All Senators will have a chance to make their voices heard and their views known. All nominees will have the certainty of an up-or-down Senate floor vote within a reasonable amount of time. All Presidents will have their judicial nominees considered promptly. All Americans will see a more dignified process, and have their Federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and liberties. And the judicial vacancy crisis will be resolved.

This plan requires everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of Federal judges to commit to improving the system. I respectfully call on the Judiciary, acting through you and the Judicial Conference of the United States, and the Senate to join me in adopting and following this plan both now and in the future.

Thank you for your consideration of this proposal.

Sincerely,

George W. Bush

UNITED STATES SENATE
REPUBLICAN POLICY COMMITTEE

Larry E. Craig, Chairman
Jude West, Staff Director

Publications Issue List Vote Analysis Main Page

May 9, 2002

Good For the Gander

What Democrats Said When Their President Was Nominating and Republicans Controlled the Judiciary Committee

Among the constitutional responsibilities entrusted to the Senate, none is more critical to the well-being of our democracy than providing advice and consent on Presidential nominations.

- Minority Leader Tom Daschle, March 8, 2000

No one will be here forever. All will leave at some time. When we leave, we can only look back and say: What kind of service did we give? Did we put the country's interests first? Or did we put partisan interest first? Did we put integrity first, or did we play behind the scenes and do things that were wrong?

- Ranking Judiciary Committee Member Patrick Leahy, September 21, 1999

One of the things that most Republicans and Democrats ought to be able to agree on is what [then-]Governor Bush said: Do it and vote them up or down in 60 days. Let's make a decision.

- Senator Leahy, July 25, 2000

On May 9, 2001, President Bush sent his first batch of judicial nominations to the Senate for consideration. One year later, 3 of the 11 nominees have been confirmed, the other 8 are yet to have even a hearing. Of the three that have been confirmed, two were Democrats who were previously nominated by President Clinton. Compare the record of this Senate with that of previous Senates: Presidents Clinton, G.H.W. Bush, and Reagan had 90, 93, and 98 percent, respectively, of their nominees confirmed during their first two years in office. This Senate has confirmed just over one-half of President Bush's nominees.

What follows is a collection of statements from the Congressional Record all made by Senate Democrats during the 106th Congress when their president was making the nominations and the Republicans were in control of the Senate. It would seem that if Democrats stood by what they said then, that the current backlog of Bush judicial nominations would be nonexistent.

REV_00256284

What Democrats Said About Vacancy Rates and Judicial Emergencies

[Note that as of May 9, 2002, the number of existing vacancies is 84 - 10.3 percent of the Federal Judiciary. Of the current vacancies, at least 35 (approximately 10 percent) are considered judicial emergencies. Of President Bush's 100 judicial nominations, 44 percent await Senate confirmation.]

- SEN. DASCHLE: One might assume we have no pressing need for Federal judges. In fact, just the opposite is true. Today, there are 76 vacancies on the Federal bench. Of those 76 vacancies, 29 have been empty so long they are officially classified as "judicial emergencies." The failure to fill these vacancies is straining our Federal court system and delaying justice for people all across this country. This cannot continue. As Chief Justice Rehnquist warns, "Judicial vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice." (S1255, 3/8/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: I am challenging the Senate to regain the pace it met in 1998 when the committee held 13 hearings and the Senate confirmed 65 judges.. . . As it is, the vacancy rate is almost 10 percent . . . Especially troubling is the vacancy rate on the courts of appeals, which continues at 15 percent. (S588, 2/10/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: We have 75 vacancies in the federal court. Prosecutors are under pressure all the time to move cases through because we have not confirmed the judges; we have not added the extra judges they need. The courts are backlogged. You cannot get civil cases heard because of all the criminal cases. (S1344, 3/9/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: The Senate needs to consider judicial nominations promptly and to confirm without additional delay the many fine men and women President Clinton is sending us. . . . Unfortunately, past delays mean that 26 of the current vacancies, over 40 percent, are already judicial emergency vacancies. . . . (S2092, 3/2/99)

- SEN. LEAHY: The vacancies gap is not being closed. . . . Judicial vacancies now stand at approximately 8 percent of the Federal judiciary. (S11796, 10/1/99)

- SEN. DASCHLE: We have 34 nominees pending. There is no reason why every single one of them cannot be confirmed or at least considered in the next few months. (S1365, 3/9/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: With 21 vacancies on the Federal appellate courts across the country, and nearly half of the total judicial emergency vacancies in the Federal courts systems in our appellate courts, our courts of appeals are being denied the resources that they need. Their ability to administer justice for the American people is being hurt. (S6567, 7/12/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: I note that the vacancy rate for our Courts of Appeals is more than 12 percent nationwide. . . . In the federal courts around the country there remain 63 current vacancies and several more on the horizon. . . . So long as the Senate is in session, I will urge action. (S9881-9882, 10/5/2000)

REV_00256285

What Democrats Said About the Senate's Duty of Advice and Consent

- SEN. LEAHY: I hope we will have a chance to vote on them, not just in committee . . . but on the floor of the Senate. That is what the Constitution speaks of in our advise and consent capacity. That is what these good and decent people have a right to expect. That is what our oath of office should compel Members to do - to vote for or against. I do not question the judgement or conscience of any man or woman in this Senate if they vote differently that I do, but vote. (S11102, 9/21/99)

- SEN. SCHUMER: By not filling vacancies, we hamper the judiciary's ability to fulfill its own constitutional duties. . . . This delay makes a mockery of the Constitution, makes a mockery of the fact that we are here working, and makes a mockery of the lives of very sincere people who have put themselves forward to be judges and then they hang out there in limbo. (S1211, 3/7/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: Acting to fill judicial vacancies is a constitutional duty that the Senate - and all of its members - are obligated to fulfill. In its unprecedented slowdown in the handling of nominees since the 104th Congress, the Senate is shirking its duty. That is wrong and it should end. (S7792, 6/29/99)

- SEN. KENNEDY: Over 200 years ago, the Framers of the Constitution created a system of checks and balances to ensure that excessive power is not concentrated in any branch of government. The President was given the authority to nominate federal judges with the advice and consent of the Senate. The clear intent was for the Senate to work with the President, not against him, in this process. (S1221, 3/7/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: We must redouble our efforts to work with the President to end the longstanding vacancies that plague the federal courts and disadvantage all Americans. That is our constitutional responsibility. (S10544, 9/8/99)

- SEN. LEAHY: There are only 100 of us who are elected to represent a quarter of a billion Americans. . . . Let us not play silly parliamentary games and tell the American people we do not have the guts to vote . . . (S1331, 3/8/2000)

- SEN. REED: This is one of our enumerated duties in the Constitution. . . . I ask my colleagues to take their constitutional duty seriously and vote for these nominees on the basis of their objective qualifications, and not on the basis of petty politics. This process is much too important to the citizens of this great democracy to do otherwise. (S1356-1357, 3/9/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: One of our most important constitutional responsibilities as United States Senators is to advise and consent on the scores of judicial nominations sent to us to fill the vacancies on the federal courts around the country. I continue to urge the Senate to meet its responsibilities to all nominees. . . . We must redouble our efforts . . . . That is our constitutional responsibility. It should not be shirked. (S7532-7534, 7/25/2000)

What Democrats Said About Treatment of Nominees

REV_00256286

- SEN. LEAHY: The American people should measure our progress by our treatment of the many qualified nominees . . . to the Courts of Appeals around the country. . . . That all of these highly qualified nominees are being needlessly delayed is most regrettable. The Senate should join with the President to confirm these well-qualified, diverse, and fair-minded nominees to fulfill the needs of the Federal courts around the country. (S6567-6568, 7/12/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: We are not being responsible. We are being dishonest, condescending, and arrogant toward the judiciary. It deserves better and the American people deserve better. . . . Nominees deserve to be treated with dignity and dispatch. . . . We are seeing outstanding nominees nitpicked and delayed to the point that good women and men are being deterred from seeking to serve as federal judges. (S10544, 9/8/99)

- SEN. KENNEDY: Many of us have been concerned about the Senate's continuing delays in acting on President Clinton's nominees to the federal courts . . . . This kind of partisan, Republican stonewalling is irresponsible and unacceptable. It's hurting the courts and it's hurting the country. . . . The continuing delays are a gross perversion of the confirmation process that has served this country well for more than 200 years. When the Founders wrote the Constitution and gave the Senate the power of advice and consent on Presidential nominations, they never intended the Senate to work against the President. . . . (S11102, 9/21/99)

- SEN. LEAHY: We should be the conscience of the Nation. On some occasions we have been. But we tarnish the conscience of this great Nation if we establish the precedence of partisanship and rancor that go against all precedents and set the Senate on a course of meanness and smallness . . . . For the last several years, I have been urging the Judiciary Committee and the Senate to proceed to consider and confirm judicial nominees more promptly, without the months of delay that now accompany so many nominations. (S11795-11796, 10/1/99)

- SEN. LEVIN: To keep these nominees pending for so long without hearings is unfair to the nominees, particularly where there is no known objection and where there is no explanation for the refusal to grant hearings. . . . We should also focus on nominees pending in the Judiciary Committee, awaiting hearings or awaiting a vote by the committee after a hearing, who are left there no matter how long they have been waiting. . . . (S9661-9662, 10/3/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: Nominees practicing law see their work put on hold while they await the outcome of their nominations. Their families cannot plan. They are left to twist in the wind. (S8935, 9/21/2000)

What Democrats Said About Time for Considering Nominees

- SEN. LEAHY: All the talk about needing six months or more to process and review nominees is just that - talk. (S7531, 7/25/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: The Judiciary Committee needs to do a better job and the Senate needs to proceed more promptly to consider nominees reported to it. . . . The Senate needs to consider judicial nominations promptly and to confirm without additional delay the many fine men and women President Clinton is sending us. (S3671, 4/14/99)

REV_00256287

- SEN. DASCHLE: I believe there is a time and a place for us to consider any nominee and, once having done so, we need to get on with it. I cannot imagine that anybody could justify, anybody could rationalize, anybody could explain why, in the name of public service, we would put anyone through the misery and the extraordinary anguish that these nominees have had to face for years. Why would anyone ever offer themselves for public service . . . ? (S1365, 3/9/2000)

- SEN. LEVIN: The Judiciary Committee held hearings for three of the nominees and approved those nominations less than a week after the nominations were received. Other nominees wait in vain for years just for a hearing. That strikes me as being an arbitrary and inexplicable system, unfair to nominees . . . and unfair to the districts or the circuits in which they would serve if confirmed. I believe it is also unfair - perhaps this is most important of all - to the people who await justice in their courts. (S9661, 10/3/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: [Judge Julio Fuentes'] nomination has already been pending for over seven months. He should get a hearing and prompt consideration. (S12689, 10/15/99)

- SEN. LEAHY: If I could make a recommendation, I would join an unusual ally in that. Gov. George W. Bush of Texas [stated that] presidential nominations should be acted upon by the Senate within 60 days. He said: 'The Constitution . . does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation. Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became - lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. It has done enough harm, injured too many good people, and it must not happen again.' Governor Bush is right. . . . I have said the same thing. (S7437, 7/21/2000)

- SEN. HARKIN: I hope the Judiciary Committee and the leadership on that side. . .will listen to the words of Texas Governor George Bush. He said he would call for a 60-day deadline for judges - once they are nominated, the Senate will have 60 days to hold a hearing, to report out of committee and vote on the Senate floor. . . . If he said he would call for a 60-day deadline, I ask my friends on the Republican side: Why don't we act accordingly? (S9664-9665, 10/3/2000)

What Democrats Said About Affording Judicial Nominees a Vote

- SEN. HARKIN: There are 22 vacancies in our federal appeals courts . . . . These positions should be filled with qualified individuals as soon as possible. I urge the Republican leadership to take the steps necessary to allow the full Senate to vote up or down on these important nominations. (S9664, 10/3/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: Let us find a way to tell these nominees they will get a vote one way or the other. I am not asking anybody how they should or should not vote but allow nominees to have a vote. All the people being nominated are extremely highly qualified lawyers and judges. They have to put their lives on hold and the lives of their families on hold while they wait. . . . Vote them up, vote them down. (S11102, 9/21/99)

REV_00256288

- SEN. DASCHLE: It is important that all of the nominees who are pending before the Judiciary Committee be considered. (s11789, 10/1/99)

- SEN. DASCHLE: The Republican majority should not be allowed to cherry-pick among nominees, allowing some to be confirmed in weeks, while letting other nominations languish for years. . . . Let the Senate vote on every nomination. (S11919, 10/5/99)

- SEN. LEAHY: When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting "maybe" but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this. They have to put their life on hold. They do not know what is going to happen: Are they going to be confirmed, or not? (S9672, 10/3/2000)

- SEN. LEAHY: Either vote for them or vote against them. Don't leave people . . . just hanging forever with even getting a rollcall vote. That is wrong. It is not a responsible way and besmirches the Senate. . . . (S9881-9882, 10/5/2000)

What Democrats Said About Leadership Allowing a Controversial Vote

- SEN. LEAHY: The distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee deserves great credit for having gotten these nominees through our committee, notwithstanding opposition from some members of his own party, and for having gotten them onto the floor and on the calendar. (S11102, 9/21/99)

- SEN. REED: I also recognize Senator Lott for making a commitment to bring the Paez and Berzon nominations to the Floor for a vote by March 15, over the protests of certain members of his caucus. (S1356, 3/9/2000)

- SEN. DASCHLE: I thank the majority leader. He and I have talked about this on several occasions, and it is never easy when you have dissent within your own caucus to make decisions. He made a commitment last year, and he held to that commitment this year. He said we would have these votes, up or down, on the confirmation of these two judicial nominees before the 15th of March, and we are going to do that. I publicly thank him and commend him for holding to that commitment. It is not easy. He has done a difficult thing, but he has done it. (S1366, 3/9/2000)

What Democrats Said About Fairness Versus Retribution

- SEN. DASCHLE: There is going to be no payback. We are not going to do to Republican nominees, whenever that happens, what they have done to Democratic nominees. Why? Because it is not right. Will we differ? Absolutely. Will we have votes and vote against nominees on the basis of whatever we choose? Absolutely. But are we going to make them wait for years and years to get their fair opportunity to be voted on and considered? Absolutely not. That is not right. I do not care who is in charge. I do not care which President is making the nomination. That is not right. (S1365, 3/9/2000)

REV_00256289

- SEN. HARKIN: Politics; pure rank politics. That is what is going on in the Judiciary Committee today. I hope it won't be that way if the Democrats take charge of the Senate. I am not on the Judiciary Committee, but we tend to get in what I call a "cesspool spiral," like a whirlpool. One side takes over the majority and begins to stall nominations, and then the other side takes over, we keep spiraling down further and further to the point where any nominee for a federal court will be held up months and perhaps even years while we await the next election. Then our third branch of government truly becomes a political football. (S9664-9665, 10/3/2000)

Top Publications Issue List Vote Analysis Main Page

REV_00256290

Brett M. Kavanaugh
11/11/2002 05:46:22 PM

Record Type: Record

To: staylor@nationaljournal.com @ inet

cc:
Subject: Senator Bayh on President's judges proposal

HUME: Senator, the president's team came forth in the final days of the campaign with a plan on judicial nominations that would have had retiring judges announce their retirements a year before they did. It would have had a timetable for the consideration of appointments to fill the seats. And it would have provided for a vote on the Senate floor on judicial nominees.

At the time, of course, it was looked as a eleventh-hour proposal, politics. The administration clearly intends to follow up on it and press for it.

What is your view of that proposal? Is that something you'd be interested in seeing passed?

BAYH: I'm willing to give it serious consideration, Brit. I think we need to get away, both parties--you know, this happened when Clinton was president. It's now happening a little bit now. We need to get a more orderly process in place for dealing with these nominations.

The big fight, though, won't be on the district and appellate court nominees. The big fight will be if there's a Supreme Court vacancy and what to do then.

HUME: Right, but do you believe that a president should be entitled at least to a floor vote on judicial nominees?

BAYH: I think in most cases yes. If someone is just clearly beyond the pale, then the committees do have their rights.

HUME: True, but if someone is clearly...

BAYH: In most cases, yes.

HUME: Clearly beyond the pale presumably means, reported out of the Judiciary Committee with a negative recommendation to the floor, where the Senate, presumably, in its wisdom, if the nominee is beyond the pale, would reject it.

BAYH: In most cases, yes. Unless there's something exceptional.

Brett M. Kavanaugh
11/11/2002 05:47:24 PM

Record Type: Record

To: staylor@nationaljournal.com @ inet

cc:

Subject: Sen. Hatch letter to editor in Salt Lake Tribune

BY ORRIN G. HATCH

Editorial boards are entitled to their own opinions, but not to their own set of facts. The Salt Lake Tribune's editorial against President Bush's plan to reform the judicial selection process ("Federal Bench Fiasco," Nov. 5) puts The Tribune in the extremely rare company of those who argue against speeding up a process that virtually every sensible observer thinks is too slow.

No one can honestly defend the current 77 empty seats in the federal judiciary, which means that 9 percent of the judicial branch sits vacant. This is one of the highest vacancy rates in modern times.

The Senate's goal -- regardless of who is president and which party controls the Senate -- should be to evaluate and confirm judicial nominees in a timely way in order to ensure a fully functioning federal judiciary. That is difficult to achieve due to the amount of work involved in researching the personal and professional backgrounds of nominees. It is also complicated by too much partisan politics. President Bush's plan to start the process earlier, and to establish a time frame for hearings and votes, is an honorable and practical way to streamline the review process and minimize divisive partisanship.

It is difficult to understand The Tribune's opposition to the idea of judges announcing their retirements in advance. Most other high-level public officials are selected before their offices are vacated; we elect presidents, senators, representatives and governors -- to name just a few -- while their predecessors remain in office. This method ensures continuity.

Moreover, it is entirely possible for the Senate to hold a hearing within three months, and a vote within six months, of the president's nominations. A rule forcing such a timetable would go a long way toward removing the partisan power to slow the process.

Selective statistics from narrow time periods in the past, such as those included in your editorial, only confuse the issues. My record as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee demonstrates that, contrary to your assertion, the Republicans who controlled the Senate during the past six years of the Clinton administration did not start the current controversy. In fact, those six years saw the number of judicial vacancies decrease by three.

Overall, during President Clinton's eight years in office, the Senate confirmed 377 judges, essentially the same (only five fewer) as it confirmed for President Reagan, who, by the way, had more judges confirmed than any other president in history. Note that President Reagan had six years of a Senate controlled by his own party, while President Clinton had only two.

Finally, although the Republicans get a lot of blame for the 41 Clinton nominees who did not receive hearings, that number is 13 fewer than the 54 nominees who suffered the same fate at the hands of Democrats during the first Bush administration. By the way, nine of the Clinton 41 were nominated so late in Clinton's eighth year that they could not possibly have been processed by the Senate.

Although neither party has a perfect record in the Senate, President Bush came to the judicial selection process with clean hands, having had no involvement in any of the prior controversies. And he began his term with an astonishing olive branch: The first-ever renomination of a circuit court nomination first submitted by a president of the other party.

It is even more ludicrous to accuse President Bush of failing to nominate fast enough. President Bush has responded to the vacancy crisis in the appellate courts by nominating a total of 32 top-notch men and women. The Senate Democrats have simply stalled them, confirming only 14 and leaving 17 more pending in committee. This disregards precedent. At the end of President Clinton's first year in office, there were only two circuit court nominees left pending in committee without hearings or votes; after President Bush's first year, there were 23.

There is great wisdom behind President Bush's call for the Senate to hold timely hearings and votes for all judicial nominees, regardless of who is president and who controls the Senate. By streamlining the process and limiting the power of partisan politicians on both sides of the political aisle, such a rule would serve the long-term interests of the judiciary and the American people. I simply don't understand The Salt Lake Tribune's concern here.

Rachael L. Sunbarger 05/09/2001 03:10 PM

Record Type: Record

To:

cc:

Subject: REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT DURING FEDERAL JUDICIAL APPOINTEES ANNOUNCEMENT

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release
May 9, 2001

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
DURING FEDERAL JUDICIAL APPOINTEES ANNOUNCEMENT

The East Room

2:43 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Attorney General, it's good to see you, sir, and happy birthday. Today is his birthday. Also, Judge Al Gonzales. Judge Gonzales is a great friend of mine who, fortunately, is my lawyer and is a part of the process, judicial selection process. Thank you for being here, Judge.

I'm also honored to welcome members of the United States Senate who are here to welcome the nominees to Washington: of course, Senator Orrin Hatch, Chairman of the Judiciary; as well as Senator Patrick Leahy, ranking member on the Judiciary. It's good to see you men, thank you both for coming.

John Warner, George Allen, George Voinovich and last, but not least, Senator Strom Thurmond. Welcome. (Applause.) Thank you all for coming.

I'm pleased to welcome my judicial nominees to the White House. And I'm pleased to welcome their family and friends, as well.

This is a proud moment for all of you, and it's a proud moment for me, as well. A President has fewer greater responsibilities than that of nominating men and women to the courts of the United States. A federal judge holds a position of great influence and respect, and can hold it for a lifetime.

When a President chooses a judge, he is placing in human hands the authority and majesty of the law. He owes it to the Constitution and to the country to choose with care. I have done so.

With me this afternoon are my first 11 judicial nominees, individuals of experience and character. Four of them serve as United States district judges, all four confirmed by unanimous votes. Two others are sitting judges on state supreme courts. Four have served as law clerks in the Supreme Court of the United States. One has served here as an associate counsel to the President. One already holds the position for which I nominate him, by recess appointment of President Clinton.

These men and women have followed different paths to this nomination. They come from diverse backgrounds, and will bring a wide range of experience to the bench. All have sterling credentials and have met high standards of legal training, temperament and judgment.

As a group, they command broad, bipartisan support among those who know them and who have served with them. I submit their names to the Senate with full confidence that they will satisfy any test of judicial merit.

These first nominations are also an opportunity to outline the standards by which I will choose all federal judges. The American people expect judges of the highest caliber, and my nominees will meet that test. A judge, by the most basic measure, has an obligation shared by the President and members of Congress. All of us are constitutional officers, sworn to serve within the limits of our Constitution and laws. When we observe those limits, we exercise our rightful power. When we exceed those limits, we abuse our powers.

Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench. To paraphrase the third occupant of this house, James Madison, the courts exist to exercise not the will of men, but the judgment of law. My judicial nominees will know the difference. Understanding this will make them more effective in the defense of rights guaranteed under the Constitution, the enforcement of our laws, and more effective in assuming that justice is done to the guilty and for the innocent.

My standard is informed by the oath that each judge will take: to administer justice without respect to persons, and to do equal right to poor and to the rich. A good judge exercises these powers with discernment, courage and humility. These are commitments, not just to philosophy, but of character.

REV_00256297

My nominees today and in the years to come will be notable for their distinction and accomplishments. And all will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity. With today's 11 nominees, we continue a constitutional process that involves all three branches of government.

For many weeks now, we have sought and received advice from senators of both parties. I now submit these nominations in good faith, trusting that good faith will also be extended by the United States Senate. Over the years, we have seen how the confirmation process can be turned to other ends. We have seen political battles played out in committee hearings -- battles that have little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee.

This is not good for the Senate, for our courts or for the country.

There are, today, over a hundred vacancies on the federal courts, causing backlogs, frustration and delay of justice. I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house, and no matter who controls the senate.

I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process. And with this distinguished group of nominees awaiting confirmation, there is no better opportunity than right now. I congratulate all of you on your service past, and for your service to come.

God bless. (Applause.)

END

2:50 P.M. EDT

NEWS RELEASE

Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts

March 13, 2002 Contact: Karen Redmond

Federal Courts Caseload in Fiscal Year Continues at High Levels

Caseloads in the federal courts during fiscal year 2001 continued near or exceeded FY 2000 caseload levels, according to statistics released by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. The Judiciary's 2001 fiscal year, the 12-month period from October 1 to September 30, established a new high for appeals cases, and saw the overall criminal caseload dip by 0.1 percent--just 37 cases --from the highest totals reported since 1933. Bankruptcy filings grew 14 percent during the Judiciary's fiscal year. The civil caseload fell, but by only 3 percent. The complete statistical report for FY 2003 is available in Judicial Business of the United States Courts 2001, at http://www.uscourts.gov/judbususc/judbus.html.

U.S. Courts of Appeals

For the sixth consecutive year, appeals filed in the federal courts of appeals broke records. FY 2001 filings in the 12 regional courts of appeals rose 5 percent to 57,464, the seventh successive year of growth in filings. The overall growth was due to increases in original proceedings (up 48 percent), criminal appeals (up 5 percent), administrative agency appeals (up 2 percent), and civil appeals (up 1 percent). Bankruptcy appeals dropped only 5 percent.

Original proceedings have risen each year since 1998, when motions requesting authority to file second or successive habeas corpus prisoner petitions and pro se mandamus petitions for which fees were not paid at filing were first added to the general docket for the courts of appeals.

Appeals related both to immigration laws, and to weapons and firearms, fueled the second consecutive year of growth in criminal appeals. Since 1997, the number of appeals related to immigration laws has climbed a staggering 297 percent. Civil appeals filings, which had declined for two years, rose 1 percent in 2001, primarily due to a 30 percent jump in prisoner petition motions to vacate sentence. An increase in appeals of decisions by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, National Labor Relations Board and the Immigration and Naturalization Service led to a 2 percent rise in filings of administrative agency appeals. Meanwhile, bankruptcy appeals, which accounted for less than 2 percent of all appeals filed, fell for the third consecutive year, dropping 5 percent to their lowest level since 1983.

(MORE)

REV_00256300

U.S. District Courts

Criminal Filings

Filings of criminal cases in FY 2001 dropped just 37 cases from FY 2000 levels to 62,708. Similarly, the number of defendants decreased less than 1 percent to 83,252. This slight dip in filings follows six consecutive years of growth. Although many courts reported lower criminal filings than expected for the month of September, no clear connection to the events of September 11 has been made at this point.

Federal courts reported a record level of weapons and firearms filings, and drug cases grew 5 percent. Three of the five southwestern border districts received the highest number of drug cases in the nation. The Western District of Texas had 2,296 cases, the Southern District of California had 1,682 cases, and the Southern District of Texas had 1,499 cases. For the first time since 1992, immigration filings declined, falling 7 percent to 11,277. Fraud cases also fell, by 3 percent.

Since 1997, criminal cases (excluding transfers) have jumped 25 percent. This increase stemmed largely from growth in filings involving immigration (up 69 percent), drugs (up 35 percent), and firearms law violations (up 84 percent).

Civil Filings

Civil filings in the district courts fell 3 percent to 250,907. Filings with the U.S. as plaintiff or defendant fell 11 percent, primarily as a result of a 46 percent decrease in cases with the U.S. as plaintiff seeking the recovery of overpayments and enforcement of judgments. A 47 percent drop in student loan recovery filings was a major factor in this substantial decline. The Department of Education has implemented new administrative measures that caused fewer student loan cases to be filed in the federal courts. A 17 percent decrease in forfeiture and penalty cases, most of them involving drug-related seizures of property, also contributed to the overall reduction in cases filed with the U.S. as plaintiff. Officials at the Department of Justice have indicated that, with the passage of the Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act in 2000, the federal government now requires a higher standard of proof before these cases can be filed in court.

Filings with the U.S. as defendant increased 10 percent, largely due to a 23 percent surge in federal prisoner petitions and an 8 percent rise in social security filings. Motions to vacate sentence filed by federal prisoners grew 36 percent. Federal habeas corpus (excluding death penalty) prisoner petitions rose 15 percent. In 2001, social security filings related to disability insurance and supplemental security income grew 6 percent and 9 percent, respectively.

Total private cases remained stable. Filings related to federal question jurisdiction fell less than 1 percent, while diversity of citizenship and civil rights filings rose less than 1 percent.

(MORE)

REV_00256301

Trials Completed

District court trials include proceedings resulting in jury verdicts or other final judgments, as well as other contested hearings at which evidence is presented. In 2001, the number of civil and criminal trials completed in the U.S. district courts declined 8 percent, with most of the decrease due to an 18 percent reduction in total civil trials. The number of criminal trials has increased 3 percent over the past five years, 4 percent from 2000 to 2001. Nonjury criminal trials jumped 13 percent, largely because of increases in hearings on contested proceedings.

Criminal Justice Act Appointments

In 2001, a total of 123,968 appointments of counsel were made under the Criminal Justice Act (CJA), an increase of 5 percent over the 118,494 appointments in 2000. The CJA provides funding for the representation of individuals with limited financial resources in federal criminal proceedings. Representations closed by the 70 federal or traditional community defender organizations rose 6 percent in FY 2001 to 70,703. The growth in representations occurred mainly in four districts along the southwestern border of the U.S.: the Western and Southern Districts of Texas, the District of Arizona, and the Southern District of California.

Probation and Pretrial Services

The number of persons under supervision in the federal court system on September 30, 2001, was 104,715, a 4 percent increase over the number reported on September 30, 2000. Persons serving terms of supervised release constituted 65 percent of all persons under supervision. Over the last decade, both the number and percentage of convicted defendants sentenced to prison have risen, and this has contributed to the growth in persons serving terms of supervised release. From 1991 to 2001, the number of convicted defendants sentenced to prison soared 83 percent.

The number of defendants in pretrial services cases opened in 2001 rose 1 percent to 86,140. Pretrial services officers prepared 82,709 pretrial services reports, up 1 percent. Federal judges conducted 194,693 pretrial hearings in 2001.

Fiscal Year Bankruptcy Filings

Following two years of decline, bankruptcy filings climbed 14 percent to 1,437,354, a fiscal year record. Overall, bankruptcy filings increased under all chapters of the bankruptcy code except for chapter 12. In fiscal year 2001, nonbusiness filings rose 14 percent with increases under all chapters of the bankruptcy code, while business filings increased 7 percent. Only three of the 94 districts reported declines in petitions in 2001. In 2001, cases per judgeship numbered 4,436, up 48 percent from the 2,998 cases in 1992, when the last new bankruptcy judgeships were created. Bankruptcy filings have continued to rise. The federal Judiciary recently released statistics for calendar year bankruptcy filings, showing that filings increased 19 percent in the 12-month period ending December 31, 2001.

###

REV_00256302

Judicial Caseload Indicators
Fiscal Years 1992, 1997, 2000, and 2001

Judicial Caseload	1992	1997	2000	2001	% Change Since 1992	% Change Since 1997	% Change Since 2000
U.S. Courts of Appeals[1]
Cases Filed	47,013	52,319	54,697	57,464	22.2	9.8	5.1
Cases Terminated	44,373	51,194	56,512	57,422	29.4	12.2	1.6
Cases Pending	35,799	39,846	40,261[2]	40,303	12.6	1.1	0.1
U.S. District Courts
Criminal (Includes Transfers)
Cases Filed	48,366	50,363	62,745	62,708	29.7	24.5	-0.1
Defendants Filed	68,668	70,201	83,963	83,252	21.2	18.6	-0.8
Cases Terminated	44,147	46,887	58,102	58,718	33.0	25.2	1.1
Cases Pending	34,078	37,237	47,677[2]	51,677	51.6	38.8	8.4
Civil
Cases Filed	230,509	272,027	259,517	250,907	8.8	-7.8	-3.3
Cases Terminated	231,304	249,641	259,637	248,174	7.3	-0.6	-4.4
Cases Pending	218,824	272,602	250,202[2]	252,935	15.6	-7.2	1.1
U.S. Bankruptcy Courts
Cases Filed	977,478	1,367,364	1,262,102	1,437,354	47.0	5.1	13.9
Cases Terminated	900,719	1,223,967	1,256,874	1,301,016	44.4	6.3	3.5
Cases Pending	1,220,102	1,326,136	1,378,139[2]	1,514,477	24.1	14.2	9.9
Federal Probation System
Persons Under Supervision	85,920	91,434	100,395	104,715	21.9	14.5	4.3
Presentence Reports	49,567	52,174	63,666	63,028	27.2	20.8	-1.0
Pretrial Services
Total Cases Activated	60,478	71,107	87,513	88,049	45.6	23.8	0.6
Pretrial Services Cases Activated	58,098	69,283	85,617	86,140	48.3	24.3	0.6
Pretrial Diversion Cases Activated	2,380	1,824	1,896	1,909	-19.8	4.7	0.7
Total Released on Supervision	26,255	28,629[2]	34,547	35,082	33.6	22.5	1.5
Pretrial Supervision	24,013	26,433[2]	32,388	33,033	37.6	25.0	2.0
Diversion Supervision	2,242	2,196[2]	2,159	2,049	-8.6	-6.7	-5.1

[1]Excludes the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.
[2]Revised.

REV_00256303

BK

Standing Rules of The Senate

RULE XXXI

EXECUTIVE SESSION - PROCEEDINGS ON NOMINATIONS

1. When nominations shall be made by the President of the United States to the Senate, they shall, unless otherwise ordered, be referred to appropriate committees; and the final question on every nomination shall be, "Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?" which question shall not be put on the same day on which the nomination is received, nor on the day on which it may be reported by a committee, unless by unanimous consent.

2. All business in the Senate shall be transacted in open session, unless the Senate as provided in rule XXI by a majority vote shall determine that a particular nomination, treaty, or other matter shall be considered in closed executive session, in which case all subsequent proceedings with respect to said nomination, treaty, or other matter shall be kept secret: Provided, That the injunction of secrecy as to the whole or any part of proceedings in closed executive session may be removed on motion adopted by a majority vote of the Senate in closed executive session: Provided further, That any Senator may make public his vote in closed executive session.

3. When a nomination is confirmed or rejected, any Senator voting in the majority may move for a reconsideration on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual executive session of the Senate; but if a notification of the confirmation or rejection of a nomination shall have been sent to the President before the expiration of the time within which a motion to reconsider may be made, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the President to return such notification to the Senate. Any motion to reconsider the vote on a nomination may be laid on the table without prejudice to the nomination, and shall be a final disposition of such motion.

4. Nominations confirmed or rejected by the Senate shall not be returned by the Secretary to the President until the expiration of the time limited for making a motion to reconsider the same, or while a motion to reconsider is pending unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

5. When the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all motions to reconsider a vote upon a nomination which has been confirmed or rejected by the Senate, which shall be pending at the time of taking such adjournment or recess, shall fall; and the Secretary shall return all such nominations to the President as confirmed or rejected by the Senate, as the case may be.

6. Nominations neither confirmed nor rejected during the session at which they are made shall not be acted upon at any succeeding session without being again made to the Senate by the President; and if the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President, and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President.

7. (a) The Official Reporters shall be furnished with a list of nominations to office after the proceedings of the day on which they are received, and a like list of all confirmations and rejections.

(b) All nominations to office shall be prepared for the printer by the Official Reporter, and printed in the Congressional Record, after the proceedings of the day in which they are received, also nominations recalled, and confirmed.

REV_00256304

(c) The Secretary shall furnish to the press, and to the public upon request, the names of nominees confirmed or rejected on the day on which a final vote shall be had, except when otherwise ordered by the Senate.

REV_00256305

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON THE SELECTION OF FEDERAL JUDGES 1996

Miller Center Commission No. 7

Preface

Miller Center Commissions seek to address urgent problems of public affairs by undertaking studies, taking testimony from witnesses, and reporting their findings in the form of recommendations for improving and strengthening some aspect of American governance. This seventh Miller Center Commission addresses problems concerning the process of appointing federal judges.

Although the Clinton administration appointed a larger number of federal judges in its first two years than did preceding administrations in their first two years, the federal judicial system continues to be plagued by a troubling accretion of unfilled judicial vacancies, delays in the appointment process, and backlogs of pending appointments. This Commission addresses the problems currently afflicting the federal judicial appointment process.

The bipartisan Commission is composed of present and former federal district and circuit court judges, former White House counsels to Republican and Democratic presidents, former Justice Department officials, two former U.S. senators, a prominent attorney, and a law school professor. The co-chairmen of the Commission are Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, attorney general in the Johnson administration, and Harold R. Tyler, Jr., a former federal judge and deputy attorney general in the Ford administration. Other members of the Commission include former Senators Howard Baker and Birch Bayh, Washington attorney Lovida H. Coleman, Jr., former counsels to presidents Lloyd N. Cutler and Fred F. Fielding, former federal Judges Leon Higginbotham and Frederick B. Lacey, United States District Judge Kimba M. Wood, and Professor Daniel J. Meador. David M. O'Brien served as part-time reporter. The director and Commission members drafted the final Report with extensive assistance from Professor Daniel J. Meador and Thomas W. Smith. Preliminary drafts were done by Professor David M. O'Brien

The Commission was established in October 1994, and met ten times in the months from 1994 to early 1996. It met monthly during the last half of 1995. The Commission conducted interviews with all the participants involved in the process of appointing federal judges, including representatives from the White House, the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the American Bar Association, and the Senate Judiciary Committee. It also invited and received suggestions from federal judges throughout the country. In addition, it considered reports by other bodies, including the Long Range Planning Report of the Judicial Conference of the United States. The Commission report describes the current selection process and its history, identifies problems that call for reform in the 1990s, and makes recommendations to improve the process. The report does not address the unique problems involved in the appointment of Supreme Court justices.

Kenneth W. Thompson, Director
White Burkett Miller Center of Public Affairs

REV_00256310

To maintain a full complement of circuit and district judges, a vacancy should be recognized on the date that a sitting judge becomes eligible for senior status. Although most judges take senior status when they become eligible, some do not and some do not announce their intentions far in advance. If a vacancy were deemed to exist on the date of eligibility, all parties concerned—senators, the Department of Justice, and the White House—could select and vet a nominee to be ready to take office on that date. If the new vacancy had been filled by that date, the number of authorized judgeships would be reduced by one when the judge eligible for senior status takes senior status. The Commission thus recommends that > Congress should enact a statute providing that an additional judgeship is created on the date an incumbent judge becomes eligible for senior status, if the incumbent judge does not take senior status on that date. If the newly created position has been filled, the number of authorized judgeships would be reduced by one when the incumbent takes senior status, retires, or dies.

III. CONCLUSION

It is most important to appoint judges who are learned in the law, who are conscientious in their work ethic, and who possess what lawyers describe as "judicial temperament." That term, though difficult to define, essentially describes a personality that is evenhanded, unbiased, impartial, courteous yet firm, and dedicated to a process, not a result. The law should be fairly read and applied, irrespective of the judge's personal views as to its wisdom. Where the judge is the finder of fact, the facts will be fairly found.

The Commission would be remiss if it did not conclude by acknowledging that, even during the exponential growth of the lower federal courts since the early 1950s, the selection and appointment procedures of the executive and the Senate have usually resulted in high-quality judges. While the Commission has been concerned about delays in filling vacancies, particularly in light of the rapid increase in cases, our focus on that concern in no way indicates dissatisfaction with the quality of the appointments. The quality of the judiciary is clearly far more important than the time taken in the appointment process, and we believe our proposals will enhance that quality.

Nonetheless, this Commission believes there are trends which suggest the possibility of future problems. One is simply the growth of the federal judiciary itself which could possibly lessen the prestige of office and hence the pool of available talent. It is crucial to our system of law and government that the public retain confidence in the high quality, fairness, and impartiality of the judiciary. Due process begins with the reputation and skill of the judges themselves.

As this report recognizes, throughout our history the judicial appointment process has been built on politics. The danger of purely political appointees lacking the necessary competence led Attorney General Brownell to introduce the American Bar Association's participation. At that time—and for some years thereafter—relatively few persons in the executive branch and the Senate or its staff worked on judicial appointments, and rarely were any of them experienced in court practices and procedures. The ABA Committee was designed to fill that shortcoming and insure, insofar as the political process permitted, the high quality of those selected.

REV_00256319

The Commission was surprised and concerned to find that today many more persons from the White House staff, the Department of Justice (including the FBI), and the Senate are involved at all stages of the appointment process. Quite apart from the obvious prospect of "over investigating" candidates and unnecessarily invading their personal privacy, the growing number of people raises the specter of excessive bureaucratization. Put differently, it poses the threat of lowering the level at which the nomination and confirmation decisions are actually made. This trend is clearly related to the increased number of judicial appointments and to the resulting fact that each individual appointment is politically less important to senators. In years past, campaign managers or lawyers who raised most of the money and otherwise assisted in electing a senator, often expected a judicial appointment as a reward. Indeed, Attorney General Brownell involved the ABA to assure that a senator's political preference was also a competent lawyer.

In addition to the growing number of appointments, the changing political process has affected who the candidates for judicial office are and whether they will be nominated and confirmed. The increasingly ideological nature of political campaigns, the need for huge sums of money, the growing dependence on contributions from various ideological groups, and the willingness of these groups to launch personal attacks on candidates they ideologically oppose, has the potential to affect the appointment process in unfortunate ways. Even putting aside the cases of Supreme Court nominees such as Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas, where this problem was obvious, there have been some signs of similar ideological controversy creeping into the process of nominating and confirming lower court candidates. While it appears that the present administration has been conscious of the problem and relatively successful in avoiding such ideological controversies, we have learned of occasional episodes where qualified candidates have refused to be considered or have withdrawn from fear of being "Borked."

The Commission believes that it would be a tragic development if ideology became an increasingly important consideration in the future. To make ideology an issue in the confirmation process is to suggest that the legal process is and should be a political one. That is not only wrong as a matter of political science, it also serves to weaken public confidence in the courts. Just as candidates should put aside their partisan political views when appointed to the bench, so too should they put aside ideology. To retain either is to betray dedication to the process of impartial judging. Men and women qualified by training and experience to be judges generally do not wish to and do not indulge in partisan or ideological approaches to their work. The rare exception should not be taken as the norm.

In any case, it is our view that the important process of appointing federal judges need not be as difficult as it now seems. The ultimate question is simply whether or not potential candidates have integrity, good judgment, and the experience necessary to become judicial officers of the United States. Occasional mistakes will be made. But no amount of bureaucratic vetting or ideological testing will achieve perfection, and too complex a process can do more harm than good.

REV_00256320

Commission Co-Chairmen

Nicholas deB. Katzenbach
Harold R. Tyler, Jr.

Commission Members

Howard Baker, Jr.
Birch Bayh
Lovida H. Coleman, Jr.
Lloyd N. Cutler
Fred F. Fielding
Leon A. Higginbotham, Jr.
Frederick B. Lacey
Daniel J. Meador
Kimba M. Wood

Miller Center Staff

Kenneth W. Thompson
David M. O'Brien
Thomas W. Smith

Witnesses Before the Commission

Victoria Radd
William Willis
Eleanor Acheson
Edward Whelan, III
Dick Hildreth
Thomas Coyle
Thomas Kelley

REV_00256321

Appendix A

Number of Judicial Appointments by Presidents from FDR to Clinton

President	Supreme Court	Circuit Court	District Court	Total
Roosevelt	9	52	137	198
Truman	4	27	102	133
Eisenhower	5	45	127	177
Kennedy	2	20	102	124
Johnson	2	41	125	168
Nixon	4	45	182	231
Ford	1	12	52	65
Carter		56	206	262
Reagan	4	78	290	372
Bush	2	37	148	187
Clinton	2	27	138	167

*Article III judgeships. President Clinton's judicial appointees are for his first two years in office.

REV_00256322

Appendix B

Average Time Required to Fill Federal Judicial Vacancies, 1979-1994

Year	Number of Judges Appointed	Average Number of Days from Vacancy to Nomination	Average Number of Days from Nomination to Confirmation	Average Number of Days to Fill Vacancy
1979	135	219	73	292
1980	64	333	91	424
1981	41	435	34	469
1982	47	310	32	342
1983	32	276	39	315
1984	43	163	36	199
1985	84	321	45	366
1986	44	368	41	409
1987	43	326	102	428
1988	41	284	140	424
1989	15	682	60	742
1990	55	362	81	443
1991	56	289	79	368
1992	66	366	139	505
1993	28	753	51	804
1994*	101	690	87	777
Average (1979-1994)	56	386	71	457

*As of October 8, 1994

Source: Senate Judiciary Committee

REV_00256323

Appendix C
JUDICIAL NOMINEE QUESTIONNAIRES

A. GENERAL PERSONAL QUESTIONS

SENATE Q#	SENATE Substance	DEPT. OF JUSTICE Q#	DEPT. OF JUSTICE Substance	ABA Q#	ABA Substance
I. 1. IV.1	Full name and any former names used.	A. 1. A.2.	Full name and any former names used. Government position sought.	1	Full name and social security number.
I. 2. IV.2	Address (current residence and office).	A. 3. A.4.	Current residence and mailing address. Home and office telephone numbers.	2	Office and home phone numbers and addresses (name of law firm if associated).
I. 3.	Date and place of birth.	N/A	Question not asked.	3 4	Date and place of birth. Naturalized? If so, give place and date.
I. 4.	Marital status and spouse's name/maiden name (if applicable), occupation and employer's name/address.	A. 5.	Marital status, spouse's current employer and also employer(s) for preceding five years (if applicable).	5. a.	Marital status, date of marriage, spouse's name/maiden name (if applicable).
N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.	5. b.	Divorced? If so, give date, moving party, case number, court and grounds.
N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.	5. c.	Names of children; their ages, addresses and occupations.

REV_00256324

I. 5.	Education (list each college, law school and date of degree).	N/A	Question not asked.	7	List colleges and law schools attended, degrees received, and reasons for leaving if degree not received.
I. 6.	Employment record (list by year each business or other enterprise since college).	A. 6.	List all jobs held in last 10 years with job title, employer, location and dates.	16	List any occupation not legal, judicial or in public office with dates and details.
I. 7.	Military service (list dates, service, rank, serial number and type of discharge).	N/A	Question not asked.	6	Military service (list dates, branch, rank, serial number and type of discharge).
I. 8.	Honors and Awards of interest to the Committee.	N/A	Question not asked.	28.	List honors, prizes, awards not previously mentioned.

REV_00256325

I. 13	What is present state of your health and when was your last physical exam?	B. 8. B. 9.	What is the condition of your health? Have you had a physical exam recently?	24. a 24. b 24. c 24.d 24. e 24. f 24.g	What is the present state of your health? In last 10 years have you been hospitalized for injury/illness or prevented from working? If so, give particulars. Suffer from any impairment? If so, give details. When was your most recent exam and who was the doctor? Currently being treated for illness? If so, give details. Ever treated for alcohol or drug dependency? If so, give details. Ever treated for mental illness? If so, give details.

B. LEGAL EXPERIENCE AND BACKGROUND

I.9.	Bar Associations (list all legal or judicial committees or conferences with titles and dates).	B. 3.	All memberships and offices in professional, fraternal, scholarly and civic organizations.	26.	All bar associations and professional societies with dates and offices held (including significant committee memberships).

REV_00256326

I. 10	Other memberships in organizations which lobby public bodies.	B. 3.	See above.	27. J27b J27c	All memberships in organizations other than bar associations or professional societies. Judge: also list chairmanships of bar associations and professional societies. Judge: describe participation, if any, on judicial committees, conferences, and as designated appellate judge.
I. 11	All courts in which admitted to practice with dates and list any lapses. Same information for administrative bodies requiring special admission.	N/A	Question not asked.	8.	All courts in which admitted to practice with dates of admission and the same for administrative bodies requiring special admission.
I. 12	List of all publications with copies of material not readily available and speeches on constitutional law or legal policy with readily available press reports about such speeches.	N/A	Question not asked.	25.	Furnish at least five examples of legal articles, books, briefs, etc. which represent your personal work (for briefs, indicate the degree to which they represent your personal work).

REV_00256327

I. 14	State chronologically any judicial offices held with description.	N/A	Question not asked.	14. a J.12 J13 J14.	Give dates and details of any judicial offices held with description. Judge: Describe your ten most important opinions with cites and appellate review, if any. Judge: describe any non-judicial office held.
I. 15	Provide citations for your ten most important opinions (if applicable), same for all appellate opinions reversing or criticizing your rulings, and your significant opinions on state or federal constitutional issues with related appellate rulings (if not readily available, provide copies of these).	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.

REV_00256328

Contents

Report 102

I. Current Problems in the Selection and Confirmation of Federal Judges 102

II. Recommendations 105

A. Expediting the Selection of Judicial Nominees 105

B. Expediting the Senate Confirmation Process for Judicial Nominees 107

C. Eliminating Redundancies and Paperwork 108

D. Timely Notice of Vacancies and Advance Processing of Nominees 108

III. Conclusion 109

Commission Members, Staff, and Witnesses 111

Appendix A: Number of Judicial Appointments by Presidents from FDR to Clinton 112

Appendix B: Average Time Required to Fill Federal Judicial Vacancies, 1979-1994 113

Appendix C: Judicial Nominee Questionnaires 114

Appendix D: Consolidated Questionnaire for Judicial Nominees 127

Appendix E: Judicial, Professional, and Political Service of Commission Members, Staff, and Witnesses 136

REV_00256311

I. 16	State any other public offices held with terms of service and descriptions, and list chronologically other candidacies.	B. 6.	List all offices with a political party in the last ten years, and any candidacies during the last ten years.	14. b	Give details of any non-judicial public office ever held, including dates of service and whether elected or appointed.
II.6	Ever play a role in a political campaign? If so, identify particulars, including candidate, dates, and your title/responsibilities.	B.7.	List all contributions to political parties/ election committees during the past six years.	15.	Give details and dates of any unsuccessful candidacies.

REV_00256329

I. 17 a. 1. a. 2. a. 3. b.1. b.2. c.1. c.2. c.3. c.4. c.5.	Describe chronologically your legal career including: Clerkships. Solo practice. Law firms, companies, and gov't agencies. Describe general character of your practice. Describe former clients and specialities. Frequency of appearances in court? If this varied, give by date. Percentage of appearances in (a) federal, (b) state, and (c) other courts. Percentage (a) civil and (b) criminal. Number of cases tried to conclusion and state your role. Percentage of cases (a) jury and (b) non-jury.	N/A	Question not asked.	9. a b c d 10. a b 11. a. b. c. d. e. 12.	Describe chronologically your law practice including: dates of clerkships. periods of solo practice periods with law firms, companies or gov't agencies with names and phone numbers of those with direct knowledge of your work there. any other relevant particulars. Describe general character of your practice over time. Describe your typical clients and areas of specialization. During last five years: What was frequency of appearances in court? If this varied, describe such variances and give dates for them. What percentage of appearances in (a) federal, (b) state, and (c) other courts? What percentage (a) civil and (b) criminal? Number of cases tried to conclusion and what was your role? Percentage of cases (a) jury and (b) non-jury? Same for prior 5 years.

REV_00256330

I. 18	Describe ten most significant litigated matters you personally handled. Give citation, summary, identify client, detail nature of your participation. Also: (a) date of representation. (b) name of court and judge. (c) names, addresses and phone numbers of co-counsel and principal counsel for other parties	N/A	Question not asked.	13.	Describe ten most significant litigated matters you personally handled. Give citation, summary, identify client, detail nature of your participation. Also: (a) dates of trial. (b) name of court and judge. (c) names, addresses and phone numbers of co-counsel for each of the other parties.
I. 19	Describe the most significant legal activities you pursued (non-trial or non-litigation). Describe the nature of your participation (unless privileged).	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.

REV_00256331

C. FINANCIAL DATA AND CONFLICT OF INTEREST

II.1	Sources, amounts and dates of all anticipated receipts from business relationships. Describe arrangements for any future compensation.	E.1.	Describe all financial arrangements for deferred compensation from business relationships. NOTE: DOJ requires financial information as to all household members.	17. a. b.	Are you now an officer or manager of business enterprise? If so, give details including title and term. Do you intend to resign such positions? If not, give reasons.
II.2.	Explain how you will resolve potential conflicts of interest and identify likely areas which may initially pose conflicts.	C.1. (A) (B) (C) D.1. E.2 E.3 E.4	List all organizations: connected to you in business relationship. in which you have continuing financial relationship (detail). in which you have other financial interests (detail). Will you sever all business connections if confirmed? Describe any business or financial relationship or transaction of the last five years which could result in a potential conflict of interest. Describe any lobbying activity of the last five years. Explain how you will resolve any conflict of interest raised by the responses above.	17.	See Q# 17 above.

REV_00256332

II.3.	Do you have plans to pursue outside employment with or without pay if confirmed? If so, explain.	D.2.	Do you have plans to pursue outside employment with or without pay if confirmed? If so, explain.	17.b	See Q# 17.b above.
II.4. II.5.	List all sources of income received in the calendar year prior to nomination. FINANCIAL STATEMENT REQUIRED	C.2. (A) (B) (C) (D)	Provide a complete net worth statement which includes: itemized assets. liabilities in excess of $1000. sources and amounts of items of value. copies of last three federal tax returns. FINANCIAL STATEMENT REQUIRED	N/A	Question not asked.

D. INVOLVEMENT IN LEGAL PROCEEDINGS/TAX AUDITS/OTHER CONFIDENTIAL

IV.3	Ever been discharged or resigned due to impending discharge?	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.
IV.4	Have you and your spouse paid all back taxes? Any tax payments made prior to your nomination? If so, detail.	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.

REV_00256333

IV.5.	Tax lien or collection procedure ever instituted against you? If so, detail.	N/A	Question not asked.	20.	Tax lien ever instituted against you? If so, give particulars.
IV.6	You or spouse ever subject of any tax audit or inquiry? If so, detail.	B.1.	Have your tax returns ever been the subject of an audit or inquiry? If so, explain.	N/A	Question not asked.
IV.7.	You or your spouse ever declared bankruptcy? If so, give particulars.	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.
IV.8	Have you or any organization you belonged to ever been under investigation for violating any law or regulation? If so, detail.	B.2	Are you currently under federal, state or local investigation for possible violation of a criminal statute? If so, give details.	18. 19.	Ever been arrested, charged or held by federal, state or local law enforcement for violation of any law, regulation or ordinance? If so, give details. Have you ever been under investigation for possible violation of a criminal statute? If so, give particulars.
IV.9	Have you ever been the subject of a complaint to any group, agency or court for breach of ethics or rule of conduct? If so, give particulars.	B.4.	Ever been disciplined or cited for breach of ethics or unprofessional conduct or been the subject of any such complaint? If so, give full details.	23.	Ever been cited or disciplined for breach of ethics or unprofessional conduct or been the subject of any such complaint? If so, give particulars.

REV_00256334

IV.10	Ever been a party to any litigation?	B.5.	Ever been involved in any civil litigation or administrative proceedings appropriate for consideration by the Committee? If so, give details.	21. 22.	Ever been sued by a client? If so, detail. Ever been a party in any other legal proceeding? If so, give particulars.
IV.11	Please advise the Committee of any other adverse information that may affect your nomination.	B.10	Without details, anything in your personal life which may be of embarrassment to the administration? What about near relatives?	30.	State any other information adverse or positive which should be disclosed in connection with your nomination.

E. GENERAL/OTHER

III.1	Describe your work to provide those disadvantaged with legal services.	N/A	Question not asked.	29.	Describe any pro bono or community service activities undertaken.
III.2	Any membership in a discriminatory organization? If so, what efforts did you make to try to change such policies?	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.
III.3	Selection committee in your jurisdiction to recommend nominations? If so, did they recommend you? Describe the entire process you underwent.	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.

REV_00256335

III.4	Did anyone involved in your selection discuss any legal case or issue seeking to learn how you might rule? If so, explain fully.	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.
III.5	Discuss your views on a criticism of judicial activism.	N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.
N/A	Question not asked.	N/A	Question not asked.	J24a b. c. d.	Judge: Did you participate in any proceeding in which you had a financial interest? If so, give particulars. Is there a rule in your court as to sitting on such cases? If so, state the rule and whether you complied with it. Have you, to best of your knowledge, complied with applicable ABA statutes and canons? If no, give particulars. Ever receive outside compensation (other than for teaching)? If so, give particulars.

REV_00256336

Appendix D
CONSOLIDATED QUESTIONNAIRE FOR JUDICIAL NOMINEES[1]

In answering these questions please use letter size paper. Repeat each question and place your answer immediately beneath it. To expedite matters, send in your completed Questionnaire as soon as possible since it is a prerequisite for the usual process of investigation.

If in response to any question you enclose published articles or judicial opinions, please include on your Questionnaire the full title of the article or the full citation for the judicial opinion.

1. Full name and social security number (include any former names used).

2. Address: List current place of residence and office address(es). Include zip codes, telephone numbers and area codes (include name of law firm, if applicable).

3. Date and place of birth. If you are naturalized, give the place and date of naturalization.

4. Marital status: If you are married, identify your spouse's present employer and his or her employer(s) for the five preceding years with the addresses. Give your spouse's name/pre-marriage name (if applicable).

5. Have you been divorced? If so, please give the date, moving party, case number, court and grounds.

6. Provide the names of your children, their ages, addresses and present occupations.

7. Education: List each college and law school you have attended, including dates of attendance, degrees received and dates degrees were granted. If you left any institution without receiving a degree, provide the reason for leaving.

---

[1] This questionnaire also contains changes and deletions suggested by the Commission as possible improvements in keeping with modern developments in the practice of law. These are in bold type and brackets at the end of the relevant questions.

REV_00256337

8. Employment record: List (by year) all business or professional corporations, companies, firms, or other enterprises, partnerships, institutions and organizations, non-profit or otherwise, including law firms, with which you were connected as an officer, director, partner, proprietor, or employee during the past ten (10) years. Include the job title, description, name of employer and address. If you have ever been engaged in any occupation, business or profession other than the practice of law or holding judicial or other public office, please give details, including dates.

[Change - insertion of time limitation.]

9. Military service: Have you ever had any military service? If so, give particulars, including the dates, branch of service, rank or rate, serial number, and type of discharge received.

10. Honors and awards: List any scholarships, fellowships, honorary degrees, and honorary society memberships that you believe would be of interest.

11. What is the present state of your health and when was your last physical exam? In the last ten years have you been hospitalized for any injury or illness, or have you been prevented from working or otherwise incapacitated? If so, please give particulars, including the causes, the dates, the places of confinement, and the present status of the condition which caused the confinement or incapacitation. If you suffer from any impairment of eyesight or hearing or any other physical handicap please give details. Are you currently under treatment for an illness or physical condition? If so, please give details. Have you ever been treated for or had any problem with alcoholism or any related condition associated with consumption of alcoholic beverages, or any other form of drug addition or dependency? If so, please give details. If you have ever been treated for or suffered from any form of serious mental illness, please give details. [Change to add "serious" in last line.]

REV_00256338

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON THE SELECTION OF FEDERAL JUDGES

I. Current Problems in the Selection and Confirmation of Federal Judges

The present process of selecting and appointing federal judges requires urgent attention for the following interrelated reasons. First, the size of the federal judiciary has increased in recent decades and is projected to grow further in the next century. Thus the president is responsible for nominating, and the Senate for confirming, a larger number of federal judges than in the past. This suggests that, unless the selection and appointment process is streamlined, the problems identified in this report will be exacerbated. Second, as the number of federal judges and appointments has grown, so has the number and average duration of judicial vacancies. A high percentage of judicial vacancies creates serious problems for the work load of federal courts and the prompt administration of justice. Third, the process of federal judicial selection and appointment has become increasingly complex and prolonged, involves a growing number of people, and is in need of simplification and some discipline.

The size of the federal judiciary is increasing because federal jurisdiction has expanded vastly since 1950. Over the 160 years following the Judiciary Act of 1789, the number of district and appellate court judgeships grew gradually to 277. Between 1950 and 1990, however, as Congress created new federal crimes and civil causes of action, annual filings in federal district courts increased by almost 300 percent and Congress legislated a concomitant growth in the number of judges. Congress had authorized increasing federal judgeships to 828 by 1994.

Anticipating continued growth in federal caseloads, the Committee on Long Range Planning of the Judicial Conference of the United States projects needing 1,370 federal judgeships by 2000; 2,350 by 2010; and 4,110 by 2020. While the desirability of increasing the number of federal judgeships is subject to debate, some further growth appears inevitable.

In recent times, presidents have nominated and the Senate has confirmed more federal judges than ever before (Appendix A). President Clinton appointed more federal judges in his first two years than did his two immediate predecessors in their first two years in office. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, in his 1994 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, "commend[ed] the President and the Senate for confirming 101 Article III judges during Congress's Second Session, the highest number in a single year since 1980." Still, the creation of additional federal judgeships and the large number the large number that remain vacant are serious problems that, in the words of the chief justice, have "greatly affected court work load in recent years."

The Committee on Long Range Planning of the Judicial Conference of the United States recently observed that, along with the increase in the size of the federal bench and the resulting increase in the frequency and number of vacancies, the time between vacancy and confirmation has also increased. During the last 15 years, the average time between a vacancy and nomination for the federal bench has been over a year; and it usually takes another three months to confirm the nomination (Appendix B).

Unfortunately, delays in nominating and confirming federal judicial appointees appear to be growing. "Emergency judicial vacancies"—vacancies that remain open for more than eighteen months—are increasing and are lasting longer than in the past. In December 1995, for instance, there were 65 vacancies on the federal bench, but only 39 nominees for those vacancies. Of the remaining

REV_00256312

12. Bar associations: List all Bar associations, legal or judicial-related committees of which you are or have been a member, and give the titles and dates of any offices which you have held in such groups. List all memberships and offices in any other professional, fraternal, scholarly and civic organizations (include any significant committee memberships) over the past ten (10) years. [Change - add to end of second sentence "over the past ten (10) years".]

13. Other memberships: List any political party and all organizations to which you belong that are active in lobbying before public bodies. [Change - delete last sentence as repetitive.]

14. Court admissions: List all courts in which you have been admitted to practice, with dates of admission and lapses, if any such memberships lapsed. Please explain the reason for any lapse of membership. Give the same information for administrative bodies which require special admission to practice.

15. Published writings: List the titles, publishers, and dates of books, articles, reports, or other published material you have written or edited during the last ten (10) years. Please supply one copy of all published material not readily available. Also, please supply a copy of all speeches by you on issues involving constitutional law or legal policy. If there were press reports about the speech, and they are readily available to you, please supply them. You should furnish at least five examples of legal articles, books, briefs, etc., which represent your personal work (for briefs, indicate the degree to which they represent your personal work). [Change - insertion of time limitation in first sentence.]

16. State chronologically any judicial offices you have held with their description, and state whether these positions were elective or appointive.

REV_00256339

17. For judges, provide citations for your ten most important opinions, and citations with short summaries of all appellate opinions reversing or criticizing your rulings. Provide any significant opinions you have written on state or federal constitutional issues, and include related appellate rulings (if any of these opinions are not readily available, please provide copies).

18. Public office: State (chronologically) any other public offices you have held, other than judicial offices, including the terms of service and whether such positions were elected or appointed. State (chronologically) any unsuccessful candidacies for elected public office. List all offices with a political party in the last ten years, and list all contributions to and involvement in political parties or election committees during the past six years. Also, please provide the details and dates of any unsuccessful candidacies.

19. Legal career: Describe chronologically your legal career after graduation from law school, including a. Whether you served as a clerk to a judge, and if so, the name of the judge, the court, and the dates of your clerkship.

b. Whether you practiced alone, and if so, the addresses and dates.

c. The dates, names and addresses of law firms, companies, and government agencies with which you have been connected, and the nature of your connection.

d. Describe the general character of your practice, dividing it into periods with dates if its character changed over time.

e. Describe your typical former clients and any of your specialties.

f. List the frequency of appearances you made in court, and if this varied, describe each variance by year.

REV_00256340

g. List the percentage of your appearances in

i. federal courts;

ii. state courts of record; and

iii. other courts.

h. List the percentage of your work in civil and criminal cases.

i. List the number of cases in courts of record that you tried to conclusion, and state your role in each as counsel, chief counsel or associate counsel.

j. List the percentage of your cases which were jury and non-jury.

20. Describe the ten most significant litigated matters in which you participated as sole or lead counsel. Provide the citation, if available, a short summary, identify your client, detail the nature of your participation and give the formal disposition of the case. Also list for each case:

a. The date of your representation;

b. The name of the court and judge before whom the case was litigated, including the docket number; and

c. The names, addresses, phone numbers of your co-counsel and principal counsel for each of the other parties. [Change - "as sole or lead counsel" after "participate".]

21. Describe the most significant legal activities you have pursued (which did not involve trial or litigation). Describe the nature of your participation (unless it was privileged).

22. List the sources, amounts and dates of all anticipated receipts from deferred income arrangements, stocks, options, uncompleted contracts and other future benefits from previous business relationships in excess of $10,000.00. Describe any arrangements you have made for future compensation for any business or professional relationship. Also list if you are an officer or manager of a business enterprise, including your title and term of service. If you intend to resign such position, please explain when, and, if not, provide the reasons. [Changes - (1) limitation of specific amount; (2) delete third sentence as too broad and intrusive.]

REV_00256341

23. List all organizations

a. Connected to you in a business relationship;

b. In which you have any continuing financial relationship through the ownership of stock, stock options, bonds, partnership interests, or other securities. Any interests held indirectly through trusts or other arrangements should be included. Please provide a copy of any trust or other agreement; and

c. In which you have any other financial interests. Please provide complete details. Please explain whether you will sever all business connections listed if you are confirmed. Explain how you will resolve any conflict of interest raised by the responses above. [Change - delete third and fourth sentences as being unnecessary.]

24. Do you have plans, commitments or agreements to pursue outside employment with or without pay if you are confirmed? If so, please explain.

25. Please list all sources of income received in the calendar year prior to your nomination, and for the current year. Include all salaries, fees, dividends, interest, gifts, rents, royalties, patents, honoraria, and other items exceeding $500. Complete the attached financial statement for you and your spouse, including a list of each asset valued in excess of $10,000.00, liabilities in excess of $1,000.00, any sources or amounts of items of value, and copies of your last three federal income tax returns. [Changes: (1) insert phrase "for you and your spouse" after "financial statement"; (2) value of asset in excess of $10,000.]

REV_00256342

26. Have you ever been discharged or resigned from a job due to an impending discharge?

27. Have you or your spouse paid all back taxes? Have you made any tax payments prior to your nomination? If so, please provide details.

28. Has a tax lien or other tax collection procedure ever been instituted against you? If so, please provide details.

29. Have the tax returns of you or your spouse ever been subject to audit for either federal, state or local taxes? If so, please provide details.

30. Have you or your spouse ever declared bankruptcy? If so, please provide particulars.

31. Have you or any corporation of which you were or are an officer or director or any firm of which you are or were a partner ever been under investigation for violating any law or regulation? Have you ever been charged or arrested for violation of any federal law or regulation, state law or regulation, or county law, ordinance, or regulation (do not include traffic violations for which a fine of $250.00 or less was imposed). If so, please provide details. [Changes: (1) substitute specific definition of "organization"; (2) raise fine amount to $250; (3) delete last sentence as repetitive of material in first two sentences.]

32. Have you ever been the subject of a complaint to any organized bar group, government agency, or court for breach of ethics or rule of conduct? If so, please provide particulars.

[Change - "any organized bar group, government agency ..."]

33. Have you ever been involved in any civil litigation or administrative proceeding in which you were found negligent or guilty of fraud? If so, please give details. Also, state whether or not you have ever been sued by a client and, if so, what was the outcome. [Changes: (1) first sentence revised to refer to negligence or fraud; (2) new last sentence.]

REV_00256343

34. [2]Describe any significant pro bono or community service activities you have undertaken during your career. [Change - insert the word "significant".]

35. [3]Do you currently belong, or have you ever belonged within the last ten (10) years, to any social, business or professional organization which discriminates on grounds of race, gender, etc.—through either formal membership requirements or in its activities or practices? If so, please list with dates of membership. What have you done to try to change these policies if they still exist? [Changes: (1) Insertion of time limitation; (2) insert phrase "social, business or professional" before "organization".]

36. For judges, with respect to your judicial service:

a. Have you participated in any proceeding in which you have had stock or other financial interest in one of the parties or in the matter in controversy? If so, please give particulars.

b. Is there a rule or custom in your court as to judges sitting on such cases? If so, state the rule or custom and whether or not you have complied with it.

c. Have you to the best of your knowledge and belief complied with the applicable statutes and canons of the American Bar Association relative to such matters as were enforced and applicable at the time? If not, please give particulars.

d. Have you ever received compensation from outside sources for services rendered (other than fees and expenses for lectures or teaching)? If so, please give particulars.

---

[2] Old paragraph 34 deleted as being too vague.

[3] Old paragraphs 37 through the end deleted as being either unnecessary or repetitive in concept.

REV_00256344

Appendix E

Judicial, Professional, and Political Service of the Commission Members, Staff, and Witnesses

Co-Chairmen

Nicholas deB. Katzenbach was assistant attorney general and deputy attorney general from 1961-1965; attorney general and under secretary of State in the Johnson administration. He taught at Yale and the University of Chicago Law Schools. From 1969-1986 he was a senior vice president and general counsel of IBM. Since his retirement from IBM he has practiced law in New Jersey. He contributed to the conclusions and important sections of the Report.

Harold R. Tyler, Jr. was an assistant attorney general, USA from 1959-60. He was a U.S. district judge for the Southern District of New York, from 1962-1975. From 1975-77, he was deputy attorney general, USA and vice chairman of the Administrative Conference of the USA. He has been a member of Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler in New York City since 1977. Judge Tyler took major responsibility for legal research and sections of the Report.

Members

Howard Baker, Jr. returned to the practice of law at Baker, Donelson, Bearman & Caldwell in Washington after serving in the United States Senate from 1967-1985, and as President Reagan's chief of staff, from February 1987 to July 1988. He was vice chairman of the Senate Watergate Committee and served two terms as minority leader and two terms as majority leader in the Senate.

Birch Bayh is the senior partner with the law firm of Bayh, Connaughton & Malone, P.C. in Washington, D.C. He served three terms as a United States Senator from Indiana. He was ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Lovida H. Coleman, Jr. is partner in the Washington law firm of Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan. She is a member of the Litigation Group specializing in white collar criminal matters and civil practice. She was deputy general counsel to the Bush-Quayle '92 re-election campaign and director of Policy Issues. From 1977-1980, she served in the Department of Justice as special assistant to the attorney general.

Lloyd N. Cutler is partner in the Washington law firm of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering. In 1979-1980 he served as counsel to the president of the United States, and from March-September 1994 he was special counsel to the president of the United States. He also served as special counsel to the president on ratification of SALT II Treaty, 1979-1980, and as a member of the President's Commission on Strategic Forces (Scowcroft Commission), 1983-1984. He played a significant editorial role in the Report.

REV_00256345

Fred F. Fielding is senior partner in the Washington law firm of Wiley, Rein & Fielding where he serves as head of the firm's Corporate Services, Government Affairs, and Crisis Management—White Collar litigation practices. From 1981-1986, he served as counsel to the president of the United States; deputy counsel to the president, 1972-1974; and assistant counsel, 1970-1972.

Leon A. Higginbotham, Jr. has been of counsel since 1993 to the New York City law firm of Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison. From 1964-1977, he was judge of the U.S. district court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and from 1977-1993, was a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Since 1993, he has also been a professor at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

Frederick B. Lacey is a senior partner at LeBoeuf, Lamb, Greene & MacRae in New York City. He was a United States district judge from 1971-1986, while also serving as a member of the United States Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court and the United States Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals; United States attorney 1969-1971; a judicial adviser to the Department of Justice Delegation to the United Nations Meeting on Organized Crime in Milan, Italy, 1985.

Daniel J. Meador is James Monroe Professor of Law Emeritus at the University of Virginia. He was assistant attorney general, Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice, U.S. Department of Justice, 1977-1979; chairman, ABA Standing Committee on Federal Judicial Improvements, 1987-1990; member of the Board of Directors, American Judicature Society, 1975-1977, 1980-1983; and member of the Board of Directors, State Justice Institute, 1986-1992. Professor Meador played a key role in editing the various drafts of the Report.

Kimba M. Wood is United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York. Previously, she was with the law firm of LeBoeuf, Lamb, Leiby & MacRae in New York City. From 1989-1991, she was judicial representative to the ABA Section of Antitrust Law; member of the New York State Bar Association House of Delegates in 1984; chairman of the ABA Antitrust Law Section from 1983-1984; and member of the American Law Institute. Judge Wood did important research for the Report.

Miller Center Staff

Kenneth W. Thompson, coordinator of the Commission, is director of the Miller Center of Public Affairs and J. Wilson Newman Professor of Government in the Woodrow Wilson Department of Government and Foreign Affairs at the University of Virginia. He served as vice president of the Rockefeller Foundation from 1961-1973. He is the author of some twenty-five books on government and international relations.

REV_00256346

David M. O'Brien, part-time reporter of the Commission, is a member of the faculty of the Department of Government and Foreign Affairs at the University of Virginia specializing in American Government and Constitutional Law. He is the author of Storm Center: The Supreme Court in American Politics. He prepared the first drafts of large portions of the Report.

Thomas W. Smith, acting assistant professor of Government at Wake Forest University and ABD graduate student in the Department of Government at the University of Virginia, assisted the Commission throughout the project with editing and revisions of the Report.

Witnesses Before the Commission

Victoria Radd, Office of the White House Counsel
William Willis, chairman, American Bar Association Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary
Eleanor Acheson, assistant attorney general, Office of Policy Development, Department of Justice
Edward Whelan, III, Senate Judiciary Committee Staff
Dick Hildreth, Thomas Coyle, and Thomas Kelley, Federal Bureau of Investigation

REV_00256347

26 vacancies, several had originated two to three years earlier.

Over the last few decades the process of selecting, nominating, and confirming federal judges has become increasingly dependent on larger staff operations for screening and investigating potential nominees. The Commission heard testimony from representatives of all entities involved in the nominating and confirming process. Much of that testimony demonstrates how the process of federal judicial appointments has changed and become more complicated during the last few decades. Potential judicial nominees must fill out three lengthy questionnaires and be screened by attorneys in the White House and the Department of Justice. Thereafter, potential judicial nominees undergo extensive investigations by the White House, the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary, and the Senate Judiciary Committee, as well as a number of private organizations—such as the Alliance for Justice and the Free Congress Foundation—that now monitor federal judicial appointments.

However, the Senate has historically forced presidents who are making federal district court appointments to confer with senators from the state in which the judicial vacancy exists. Furthermore, these senators can put a "hold" on nominations they do not approve, and thus ensure "senatorial patronage." Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy described the process as a senatorial appointment with the advice and consent of the president. However, during the Carter administration, senators were asked to suggest more than one name for each district court vacancy in their home state. That practice and other presidential attempts to curb senatorial patronage over lower federal court judgeships continued under Republican Presidents Ronald Reagan and George Bush, but with limited success.

Having a divided government, with one party in the White House and the other controlling Congress, enhances senators' abilities to veto district court nominations. Though divided government was uncommon during the 19th century, it has become commonplace since the 1950s. Under these circumstances, presidents selecting nominees have sometimes had to consider views from senators of the opposing party. In the 1980s, the Reagan administration tried to gain greater control over the selection of lower court judicial nominees. The Reagan administration's Department of Justice also used more attorneys in the Office of Legal Policy and the litigation divisions of the Department of Justice to review the records of, and conduct extensive interviews with, potential judicial nominees.

Thus, the process of selecting lower federal court judges has changed in three basic ways. There are now more attorneys and resources in the White House and Department of Justice devoted to screening potential judicial nominees. Extensive interviews with potential judicial nominees have also become routine. Finally, White House staff have become more involved in the screening and selection process. These trends in the process of selecting federal judicial nominees largely continued during the Bush and Clinton administrations. At least fourteen attorneys in the White House and the Department of Justice are currently involved in screening and interviewing potential judicial nominees. Other lawyers in the Department of Justice are also called to assist in the interviewing process as needed.

Today the White House no longer encourages senators to recommend three potential nominees for a district court vacancy in their home state. Instead, the Clinton administration has sought only a single recommendation for each vacancy. That policy change, while it reduces the number of candidates to be screened, may further delay nominations to the district courts because considerable time and resources are sometimes expended on a potential nominee who, for whatever reason, proves undesirable or problematic. The administration is then forced to seek another recommendation.

REV_00256313

Judicial nominations are delayed even further because some senators are slow in making recommendations for district court vacancies. Senators may await the recommendations of their own nominating commissions, or be reluctant to choose among several deserving aspirants. This already serious problem may worsen because the number of judicial vacancies is increasing and the process of selecting judicial nominees has become a larger and more time-consuming staff operation.

The process of selecting and nominating candidates for courts of appeals is slightly different. Because federal appellate courts have jurisdictions that span several states, presidents have greater discretion and defer less to individual senators when selecting nominees for circuit courts. When a vacancy appears on a circuit court, however, some senators and governors from the state of the vacating judge often seek to influence the selection of the new nominee. In such cases, presidents may need to take their recommendations into account for political reasons. During the Clinton administration, the selecting nominees for the courts of appeals has been centered in the more politically sensitive White House staff, with much less involvement by Justice Department attorneys.

Although most delays in filling lower federal court vacancies can be attributed to the selection and nomination processes, vetting nominations and scheduling Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings also delay federal judicial appointments. The Commission found that the Senate Judiciary Committee lacks a sufficient number of staff counsel to conduct its investigations of nominees, particularly where there is a large number of nominations. To alleviate that problem, the Department of Justice has at times provided its lawyers to assist in the Senate Judiciary Committee's investigations.

Although the role of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary has been criticized, alternatively by liberals and conservatives, the committee is useful in evaluating the professional qualifications of judicial nominees. While recent administrations have found some of the committee's investigations duplicative and too time consuming, there has been improvement over the past year or so.

Symbolic and illustrative of how "bureaucratized" the federal judicial appointment process has become in recent decades, judicial nominees are required to complete questionnaires for the Department of Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee, and the American Bar Association. The White House also uses these questionnaires. They ask a broad range of questions concerning professional experience, financial data, physical condition, and judicial philosophy. Filling out these questionnaires is burdensome and often redundant for the potential judicial nominees.

In the Commission's view, the cumbersome and protracted judicial selection process imposes costs on the justice system and on potential appointees. Highly qualified persons may be reluctant to seek or accept nomination because of the burdensome and redundant screening and vetting process. They may also be concerned about personal privacy and low judicial salaries. Moreover, waiting in limbo for many months while nomination or confirmation is pending can be particularly hard on practicing lawyers. They may lose clients and find planning for the future difficult.

Ultimately, the problems inherent in the process of appointing federal judges affect the quality of those serving on the federal bench. Maintaining the high quality of the federal judiciary is essential to the administration of justice. If the problems in promptly filling judicial vacancies with high-caliber appointees are not addressed, dockets will become even more crowded and we will find that justice delayed is justice denied. As Judge Learned Hand admonished almost a half-century ago, "If we are to keep democracy, there must be one commandment: Thou shalt not ration justice."

REV_00256314

II. Recommendations

A. Expediting the Selection of Judicial Nominees

To expedite the nomination process, the Commission offers the following recommendations for consideration by senators and those officials in the administration involved in the process of appointing federal judges.

1. Senators should identify candidates before a vacancy occurs, and those candidates should be vetted promptly, either before the vacancy occurs or within 30 days thereafter.

Identifying and vetting potential judicial nominees early is especially crucial in districts with large numbers of judges and, hence, frequent vacancies.

2. Senators should recommend candidates no later than 90 days after a judicial vacancy occurs.

3. Senators should recommend and prioritize two or more names for each vacancy, thereby avoiding delays in case a potential nominee becomes unavailable or undesirable.

These recommendations are especially important for solving the problems presented by protracted vacancies on district courts that have heavy caseloads and numerous judges. If not promptly filled, the frequent judicial vacancies that inevitably occur on such courts have a particularly deleterious effect on the administration of justice.

With respect to the administration's role in screening and selecting nominees for federal district courts, the Commission makes the following recommendations.

4. If a senator does not respond to the request for more than one name, then the administration should advise the senator of additional persons whom the administration would like to consider.

This recommendation is an attempt both to encourage the selection and nomination of the most highly qualified judicial nominees and to avoid unnecessary delays should an initially considered candidate prove undesirable.

5. Officials in the executive branch who are concerned with the selection of judicial nominees should develop and maintain lists of prospective judicial nominees for district and circuit courts.

REV_00256315

6. If senators have not made their recommendations within 90 days of a district court vacancy, the president should proceed with the administration's own nominee and, if confirmation is delayed, make recess appointments to the federal bench.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals recently upheld the constitutionality of a recess appointment of a federal judge in United States v. Woodley, 751 F.2d 1008 (9th cir., 1985) (en banc). Admittedly, some nominees may be reluctant to accept a recess appointment because recess appointees might not eventually be confirmed by the Senate. We note, however, that five of the 15 recess appointees to the U.S. Supreme Court took their seats on the bench before their confirmation, including three of Republican President Dwight D. Eisenhower's appointees: Chief Justice Earl Warren, Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., and Justice Potter Stewart. In addition, recess appointments could be attractive to persons of considerable experience, such as lawyers who would be willing to serve temporarily despite the possibility that they may not be confirmed.

7. The White House, the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the American Bar Association should complete their investigations of potential judicial candidates within 90 days of a senator's recommendation.

8. The ABA Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary should provide the administration and the Senate Judiciary Committee with a brief statement of the reasons for its rating.

A brief explanation of the ABA Committee's rating for a nominee would allow the executive branch, the Senate, and the public to understand its views. By explaining its rating, the ABA Committee can avoid the charge that the Committee is taking ideological or political considerations into account.

9. The American Bar Association should expand the size of its Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary and have more than one representative for each circuit.

Given the expanding number of federal judgeships and nominees, the ABA needs to expand the size of its Committee if it is to complete its investigation of judicial nominees within 30 days, as it should.

10. The White House and the Justice Department should review their current procedures in order to simplify the process. In particular, they should consider reducing the breadth and extent of questions posed to judicial candidates, doing away with duplicative inquiries, and whether personal interviews are really needed.

REV_00256316

The Commission was somewhat surprised to find that the number of persons involved in selecting and nominating candidates for the lower federal courts has significantly increased. Before 1981, only one or two staff people in the Justice Department, apart from the FBI, were involved. Personal interviews were rare and conducted only by the attorney general or deputy to clarify a difficult question such as a health problem. For a brief period, under Attorney General Kennedy, interviews were used to determine whether candidates from the deep South would follow the Constitution in racial matters. Kennedy abandoned these latter interviews when he found them far less reliable than the opinions of outside observers familiar with the candidate and his or her record. The practice of more extensive interviews on a range of issues appears to have begun in 1981. Several Commission members seriously question whether such interviews are relevant or necessary to determine a candidate's integrity, competence, and work habits.

Not only do we question the need for interviews but we believe they may offend some candidates. Moreover, the public, and especially the bar association, may see the effort as an attempt to influence the candidate's judicial views. We are satisfied that this is not the Justice Department's intent, but the perception may exist nonetheless. The participating personnel are either involved in the political process or perceived to be involved, and are thus believed to be interested in more than simply professional competence. Further, relative to the candidates, the persons conducting the interviews are young and inexperienced in litigation. Questions sometimes unintentionally probe personal beliefs and, coupled with the relative inexperience of the interviewer, may offend some candidates.

There is no question that the White House staff, Justice Department attorneys, the FBI, the ABA, and the Senate staff perform duplicative functions. To some extent this may be unavoidable, but efforts to assign more specific and limited roles might prove helpful. For example, the ABA Committee should confine itself to professional experience and competence. By virtue of their own experience and contacts, ABA Committee members can better make those judgments. If the FBI confined its inquiry to personal and financial integrity, health, and similar matters within its particular expertise, duplication could be reduced. Where the selecting officials believe more information is required, they can go back to the ABA and the FBI and request more data. Since the candidate is normally interviewed by an ABA representative and by the FBI, Justice Department attorneys and the White House staff should consider whether those interviews will suffice.

Experience has shown that it is difficult to determine how persons selected for the federal bench will perform. It is nevertheless true that the best indicator of future performance is the candidate's experience, integrity, intellectual capacity, objectivity, and termperament, as judged by his or her professional colleagues. Such judgments are relatively easy to ascertain.

B. Expediting the Senate Confirmation Process for Judicial Nominees

The Commission urges the Senate Judiciary Committee to explore ways to expedite the confirmation process for federal judicial nominees. Toward that end, the Commission makes the following recommendations, intended as objectives and guidelines for the confirmation process.

1. The Senate Judiciary Committee should increase the number of its staff attorneys charged with investigating judicial nominees. When there is an unusually large number of nominations pending, the Department of Justice should continue its present practice of lending personnel to the Senate Judiciary Committee in order to expedite investigations.

REV_00256317

2. If a judicial nominee is noncontroversial, the Senate Judiciary Committee should forego holding a confirmation hearing on the nominee.

3. The Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate should clear nominees for full Senate confirmation within two months of receiving the president's nomination.

Most hearings for noncontroversial judicial nominees are largely ceremonial. Having to schedule such hearings for times when senators can be present significantly delays the confirmation process. This problem will be exacerbated as the number of federal judgeships and vacancies continues to grow.

C. Eliminating Redundancies and Paperwork

Currently, prospective nominees for district courts and courts of appeals are required to complete two lengthy questionnaires—one for the Justice Department and White House, and one for the ABA Committee. After a nomination is made, the Senate Judiciary Committee requires the nominee to complete yet another lengthy questionnaire. These three questionnaires are duplicative and often overlap. Responding to the questionnaires is unnecessarily time consuming and onerous. A single questionnaire would suffice. The Commission therefore recommends the following modifications.

1. Prospective nominees for judicial office should be required to complete a single questionnaire which supplies all information sought by the Department of Justice, the White House, the ABA Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary, and the Senate Judiciary Committee. Appendix C contains a consolidated questionnaire that this Commission derived from the three questionnaires now used by the administration, the Senate Committee, and the ABA Committee.

2. The Department of Justice, the White House, the ABA Committee, and the Senate Judiciary Committee should explore whether or not it is really necessary or appropriate to obtain all the information presently sought. Appendix D contains the Commission's recommendations as to questions which could be eliminated or modified to make the questionnaire less burdensome and less intrusive without losing relevant information.

D. Timely Notice of Vacancies and Advanced Processing of Nominees

REV_00256318

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

President's Judges Plan: Judges Proposal - Womack/Kavanaugh [2]

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 48
Folder 11

REV_00256348

The Federalist Society
for Law and Public Policy Studies

Judicial Nominations

Index

There has been much controversy lately concerning the pace of Senate confirmations of Bush Administration judicial nominees, as well as the manner in which nominees ought to be scrutinized by the Senate. Following is a bibliography of materials to shed further light on this subject, as well as a history of the ABA's response on this general subject.

Senate Hearings : The American Bar Association : Advocacy Groups : Other Resources

Senate Hearings

- Hearings on the Judicial Confirmations Debate:

  Hearing before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts on "The Senate's Role in the Nomination and Confirmation Process: Whose Burden?" September 4, 2001

  Selected Testimony:

- Testimony of Ron Rotunda
- Testimony of Dean Douglas Kmiec
- Testimony of Hon. Paul Simon
- Testimony of Mark Tushnet

  Hearing before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts on "Should Ideology Matter?: Judicial Nominations 2001" June 26, 2001

  Selected Testimony:

- Senator Orrin Hatch
- Senator Charles Schumer
- Testimony of Boyden Gray
- Testimony of Lloyd Cutler
- Testimony of Steve Presser
- Testimony of Eugene Volokh
- Testimony of Clint Bolick

The American Bar Association

- ABA 2001 Legislative & Governmental Priorities

  Protracted delays in the judicial nomination and/or confirmation process weaken the federal judiciary by depriving it of the judges needed to resolve disputes expeditiously. Protracted delays also contribute to dangerously crowded dockets, suspended civil case dockets, overburdened judges, and understaffed courts.

REV_00256349

The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts held hearings on June 26 and September 4, 2001, to examine the role of ideology in the nomination and confirmation process. Over the last several Congresses, allegations that the nomination and confirmation process have been held hostage to politics have reached frenzied proportions and provoked calls for moderation and respect among the branches of government. Interbranch respect and restraint is the basic theme underlying the conclusions and recommendations of the 1997 ABA Report on Judicial Independence.

ABA Policy

The ABA urges the President to nominate candidates for vacant federal judicial positions promptly and urges the Senate to hear and vote on those nominations in an expeditious manner. The ABA also urges the appointment and confirmation of minority lawyers of racial and ethnic diversity to all levels of the federal judiciary.

Key Points

- The judicial selection and confirmation process is one of the most important constitutional responsibilities entrusted to the President and the Senate.
- The President and Members of the Senate need to work together to foster public trust and confidence in our justice system by creating a federal judiciary that reflects the rich diversity of America.
- The integrity and independence of the federal judiciary is threatened by protracted delays in filling judicial vacancies.
- Chronically understaffed courts have produced dangerously crowded dockets, delays in hearing criminal cases, suspended civil dockets, and overburdened judges.

- An Independent Judiciary: Report of the ABA Commission on Separation of Powers and Judicial Independence

b. Judicial Appointments

"The nomination and confirmation process is the one point at which the political branches may exercise a check on the composition and quality of the federal bench. To these ends, it is appropriate and desirable for members of the Senate and the President to explore the qualifications, character and judicial philosophy of would-be judges.

Problems arise, however, when legitimate inquiries into a nominee's judicial philosophy degenerate into thinly veiled efforts to preordain how the nominee will rule on specific issues in the future. Such "litmus test" questions cut to the quick of would-be judges' decisional independence and are properly resisted by the nominees.

A strong and independent judiciary likewise turns on the orderly filling of judicial vacancies. Protracted delays in the nomination and confirmation process, whether by design or as a result of inefficiency, weaken the federal judiciary and should be avoided.

The Miller Center Commission on the Selection of Federal Judges was established in 1994 by the University of Virginia's Miller Center of Public Affairs to respond to the perceived growing crisis in the federal court system caused by lengthy delays in filling judgeships. The Miller Commission issued its report on May 15, 1996 which contained a number of significant recommendations, including the following:181

- Senators, in their "advice and consent" role, should identify good judgeship candidates before a vacancy occurs and the candidates should be thoroughly appraised and "vetted" either before the vacancy occurs or within 30 days after it;
- Senators should recommend two or more names to the President, in order of priority, for each vacancy to avoid delays in case a potential nominee becomes unavailable. In no case should a senator's recommendation go to the executive branch later than 90 days after a vacancy occurs.

REV_00256350

- If a senator doesn't respond to the request for more than one name, the Administration should notify the senator of additional names the Administration would like to consider. The executive branch too should maintain lists of prospective judicial nominees.
- If senators haven't made recommendations within 90 days of a district court vacancy, the President should proceed with the administration's own nominee, and if confirmation is delayed, make a temporary, or "recess" appointment.
- The White House, Department of Justice, FBI and American Bar Association all should complete their investigations of candidates within 90 days of a vacancy.
- The ABA should have more than one representative from each circuit court on its Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary and should provide a brief explanation for its rating, to avoid charges that it sometimes takes political considerations into account.
- The White House and Justice Department should review current procedures to simplify them and avoid duplication and should consider eliminating personal interviews with candidates, to avoid the appearance of trying to influence candidates' judicial views.
- The Senate Judiciary Committee should increase the number of its staff attorneys investigating judicial nominees.
- If a nominee is noncontroversial, the Senate Judiciary Committee should forgo holding confirmation hearings.
- The committee should clear nominees for full Senate confirmation within two months of receipt of a President's nomination.
- Prospective nominees should be required to complete only a single questionnaire that supplies all the information sought by the Department of Justice, White House, ABA and Senate Judiciary Committee.
- Those agencies should explore whether it is really necessary or appropriate to obtain all the information presently sought.
- Congress should enact a statute providing that an additional judgeship is created on the date an incumbent becomes eligible for senior status (semi-retirement) even if the incumbent doesn't take senior status on that date. The number of authorized judgeships would be reduced by one when the incumbent takes senior status, fully retires or dies.

Recommendation:
The Commission urges that judicial vacancies be filled without delay and further urges that the procedures recommended by the 1996 Report of the Miller Center Commission on the Selection of Federal Judges set forth above, should be fully considered."

- ABA Resolutions Regarding Judicial Vacancies:
  - 1998 Midyear Meeting: Urge the President of the United States promptly to advance nominees for current vacancies for federal judicial positions and the Senate of the United States to hear and vote on those nominations in an expeditious manner. Urge ABA members and bar associations to contact the President and appropriate members of the Senate to urge prompt action on the nominations. 98M8A.
  - 1997 BOG: Resolve that the Board of Governors of the American Bar Association, which includes members of the both political parties, urge the United States Senate promptly to hear and vote on pending nominations for United States District Courts and Court of Appeal and that such action is essential for the effective and efficient administration of justice in the United States. 1097BOG 2.11.

- Yes, the ABA Rankings Are Biased
  Clinton's judicial nominees were much more likely to get a favorable rating.
  By: James Lindgren
- Federalist Society ABA Watch Project
  - ABA Watch
  - Barwatch Emails

REV_00256351

Advocacy Groups

Several groups have served as "watchdogs" over the judicial nominations process. Here are some links to the work they have been conducting:

- The Center for Individual Freedom: "The judicial confirmation process in the 107th Congress has been stalled by politics, as qualified nominees to the federal bench have been held in limbo. In this section, the Center provides an up-to-date list of judicial nominees yet to be confirmed by the Senate. Most of them are being denied a hearing in the Judiciary Committee."
- People for the American Way and its report, "Courting Disaster: How a Scalia-Thomas Supreme Court Would Endanger our Rights and Freedoms" PFAW has also published a report: "President Bush, the Senate, and the Federal Judiciary: Unprecedented Situation Calls for Unprecedented Solution" which attempts to "debunk accusations that Bush administration's nominees are being treated unfairly by the Senate, and documents the unprecedented blockade waged by some Senate Republicans, many of whom now clamor for immediate votes on Bush administration judicial nominees, against highly qualified Clinton administration nominees."
- National Organization for Women's "Judicial Nominees Special Report: Our Courts at Risk" According to the NOW Web site: "George W. Bush clearly holds the power to imprint his conservative agenda on the U.S. judicial system. To date, the Bush administration has sent 66 nominations to the Senate Judiciary Committee. The Senate has already confirmed 28 of them (22 trial level, and six appellate level). The Judiciary Committee has held 11 hearings on judicial nominees since July, while during the Clinton years the Republican-dominated committee held barely half a dozen hearings per year. These lower-court positions play a vital role in the judicial process because a vast majority of cases never make it to the Supreme Court. Cases that are decided by the Supreme Court face another threat. We find ourselves in the longest interval between Supreme Court vacancies in 178 years. When a position opens, Bush will surely attempt to fill it with someone from his stable of right-wing judicial ideologues. Considering that two out of three Supreme Court decisions in the last term were decided by 5-4 votes, all of our fundamental rights — reproductive rights, civil rights, lesbian rights, disability rights and so many other gains feminists have fought for in the past 35 years — could be at risk with the addition of just one new ultra-conservative Supreme Court justice. There is a ray of hope: With Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy chairing the judiciary committee, we have the political opportunity to stop at least some of the most egregious nominations from going forward."

Other Resources

- Cato Policy Analysis no. 446, "How Constitutional Corruption has Led to Ideological Litmus Tests for Judicial Nominees," by Roger Pilon
- Debate: Of Senate Default and Judicial Nominations: Does the Constitution Require the Full Senate to Act?, Dean Doug Kmiec and Elliot Mincberg (PDF), June 7, 2002
- Speech by Vice President Dick Cheney to the Federalist Society's 2001 National Lawyers Convention
- Hot Topics: Conservative Judicial Activism
- U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Legal Policy: Statistics on Judicial Nominations
- U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee: Nominations
- "End the Judicial Blame Game" by Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards, The Washington Post, March 13, 2002
- Debate: Resolved, The Senate Should Take Ideology into Account in the Judicial Confirmations Process, Ralph Neas and Roger Pilon, The Cato Institute, January 16, 2002
- "The Role of Ideology in Confirming Federal Court Judges" by Ronald D. Rotunda, The Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics, Fall 2001
- Stephen B. Presser, Should Ideology of Judicial Nominees Matter?: Is the Senate's Current Reconsideration of the Confirmation Process Justified?, 6 Tex. Rev. L. & Politics 245 (2001).

2002 The Federalist Society

REV_00256352

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: leahy /10 "judicial vacancy crisis" (Edit Search)

↶ Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Associated Press October 22, 1998, Thursday, PM cycle

The Associated Press

The materials in the AP file were compiled by The Associated Press. These materials may not be republished without the express written consent of The Associated Press.

October 22, 1998, Thursday, PM cycle

SECTION: Washington Dateline

LENGTH: 493 words

HEADLINE: As Congress ends, parties still bitterly at odds over judges

BYLINE: By CASSANDRA BURRELL, Associated Press Writer

DATELINE: WASHINGTON

BODY:
The Republican-controlled Senate confirmed 65 of President Clinton's nominees to be federal judges this year, but that failed to stop Democratic grumbling about the pace of confirmations.

Partisan foot-dragging is putting a further strain on short-staffed federal courtrooms already overloaded with cases, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said Wednesday as the Senate confirmed 17 judges shortly before adjourning for the year.

Despite the last-minute flurry of approvals, 50 of the government's 834 federal judgeships remain vacant, Leahy said.

"In order to understand why a judicial vacancy crisis is plaguing so many federal courts, we need only recall how unproductive the Republican Senate has been over the past three years," he said in a statement. "At each step of the process, judicial nominations are being delayed and stalled."

Republicans insist there is no partisan slowdown.

"This Congress has taken steps to significantly reduce the federal judicial vacancy rate to its lowest rate in almost a decade," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee takes the first look at presidential nominations and votes whether to reject them or to send them to the Senate for a vote.

Attorney General Janet Reno thanked Leahy and Hatch for speedy work at the close of the congressional session.

" We intend to work very hard to begin the 106th Congress with as many candidates for nomination as possible, so that we can continue to work with the Senate to ensure a full bench," Reno said at her weekly news conference.

Appointed by the president, federal judges have lifetime tenure and can exert influence long after the appointing president leaves office.

The Senate left town without passing judgment on four candidates approved by the Judiciary Committee, including Judge Richard Paez, who was first nominated to 9th U.S. District Court of Appeals in San Francisco in January 1996. Those nominations - and two dozen never voted out of committee - died when the Senate adjourned. Clinton will have to resubmit them or substitutes when a new session of Congress reconvenes in January.

Democrats say that in 1994, the year before Republicans regained control of the Senate, 101 judges were confirmed. And the confirmation process is taking longer, they say.

Hatch said that during the 104th Congress' two-year session, when Republicans wielded control of both Houses for the first time in 40 years, 75 Clinton judges were confirmed. Republicans say that compares favorably with the 71 confirmed by the 101st Congress, when President Bush was in the White House and Democrats ruled the Senate.

"Even if we were to stop holding nomination hearings - and we have not - I think you will see that our efforts compare quite favorably to other Congresses in terms of the number of judges confirmed at this point in the year, especially if you look at recent Democrat-controlled Congresses," Hatch said.

LOAD-DATE: October 22, 1998

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: leahy /10 "judicial vacancy crisis" (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, October 29, 2002 - 3:38 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

REV_00256354

Report of the Proceedings of the Judicial Conference of the United States

March 15, 1988

Washington, D.C.
1988

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS Fax:2025021799 Oct 24 2002 12:52 P.02

REV_00256355

COMMITTEE ON JUDICIAL RESOURCES

JUDGESHIP VACANCIES

Judgeship vacancies place significant burdens on the courts by increasing the workloads of those judges available for duty and diminishing the courts' ability to discharge their responsibilities. Accordingly, the Judicial Conference:

1. Noted the adverse effect on the courts and litigants attributable to vacancies in Article III judgeship positions and considers all such vacancies "judicial emergencies".

2. Urged all judges nearing retirement to notify the President and the Administrative Office as far in advance as possible of a change in status -- if possible, six to twelve months before the contemplated date of change in status.

3. Agreed that greater effort should be made to publicize the deleterious effect such vacancies have on the administration of justice.

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS Fax:2025021799 OCT 24 2002 12:32 P.05

REV_00256356

are indispensable resources who are readily available to supplement the work of life-tenured district judges in meeting workload demands. Maintaining an appropriate division of labor between district judges and magistrate judges will pose a continuing challenge to the courts. Maximum flexibility should be retained in the district courts to promote the most effective use of magistrate judges in each district in light of local conditions and changing caseload needs. Although each district court exercises discretion in its use of magistrate judges, the effort to encourage effective utilization of magistrate judges must be national in approach and effect.

The need to conserve the increasingly scarce time of district judges will make effective and extensive use of magistrate judges (including those retired judges available for recall service) a practical necessity in virtually all courts. Expanding the role of the magistrate judge in the area of felony criminal trials should be examined, taking into account constitutional considerations and sound judicial policy. The district courts should expand the use of magistrate judges to conduct civil proceedings with the parties' consent as currently authorized by 28 U.S.C. § 636(c). Use of magistrate judges for this purpose may necessitate reassessment of how they perform other functions. It has been suggested, for example, that where only an issue of law must be resolved, use of the report and recommendation procedure is inefficient because it is a duplicative use of resources.

District courts should adopt comprehensive plans for using magistrate judges in accordance with Judicial Conference guidelines. This process could lead to development of minimum standards to ensure that existing magistrate judge resources are used effectively before additional positions are authorized. Magistrate judges should be provided adequate staff, clerical, research, and other support services to enhance their ability to perform the functions specified above.

❒ RECOMMENDATION 66: Magistrate judges should be vested with a limited contempt power to punish summarily for misbehavior committed in their presence, and to punish for disobedience or resistance to their lawful orders in civil cases referred to them for disposition with the consent of the parties.

To be recognized and utilized as fully effective judicial officers in the district court, magistrate judges must possess the requisite legal authority and status, including an ability to enforce their own orders. Although 28 U.S.C. § 636(e) provides that certain acts or conduct in proceedings assigned to a magistrate judge constitute a contempt of the district court, the authority of the magistrate judge in such instances is limited to certifying the operative facts to a district judge and serving a show cause order on the alleged contemner. The power to punish litigants directly for contempt is essential in all cases of misbehavior in a magistrate judge's presence, and in cases of disobedience or resistance to a lawful order issued in civil matters referred to a magistrate judge for disposition with the consent of the parties. Indeed, the present lack of contempt power for magistrate judges can be a major detriment to their performance of judicial functions.

Diminishing the Problem of Judicial Vacancies

❒ RECOMMENDATION 67: Attention should be given to the problem of fre-

The Judicial Conference of the United States has approved the recommendations and implementation strategies in this Long Range Plan to guide future administrative action and policy development by the Conference and other judicial branch authorities. All other text in this Plan, including commentary on individual recommendations and strategies, explains and supplements the approved items but does not necessarily reflect the views of the Conference.

REV_00256357

quent, prolonged judicial vacancies in the federal courts. The executive branch and the Senate should be encouraged to fill vacancies promptly, and the judicial branch should utilize procedures and policies to mitigate the impact of vacancies on the capacity of the courts to conduct judicial business.

Research aimed at eliminating obstacles to efficiency in the federal courts shows two disturbing trends: (1) an increasing percentage of vacant judgeships; and (2) a lengthening average time from the occurrence of a vacancy to the confirmation of a successor judge. Unfortunately, while the judicial vacancy rate is among the more serious problems facing the federal courts, the solution to the problem lies primarily outside the judicial branch.

By constitutional design, the very nature of judicial appointments is political. Any potential solution that seeks to remove politics from, and to shorten, the appointments process would also dramatically change the nature of the appointment process and may require a constitutional amendment.[15] This plan does not endorse such drastic remedies. Nonetheless, several ideas for addressing the problem are outlined here as a means of emphasizing how serious the problem is and why it requires prompt attention and appropriate action.[16]

At present, nominees for court of appeals, district court, Court of International Trade, and Court of Federal Claims judgeships are selected through a variety of methods that depend on the type and geographic location of the positions to be filled, the decision making styles of persons involved in the process, and the prevailing political realities. Predictably, the results vary. It is not the province of the judiciary to instruct the executive and legislative branches on how they should discharge their responsibilities. Nevertheless, the other branches might consider measures aimed at speedier, perhaps surer decisions. For example, they might wish to undertake periodic review and enhancement of the procedures used to identify and screen judicial candidates, as well as devote additional financial and personnel resources to the selection process.

Ultimately it may be more worthwhile to address the effect of the vacancy problem rather than its various causes. The impact of prolonged vacancies is invariably the same: courts are required to manage caseloads without adequate judicial resources. Although it may be possible to expedite the appointment process, vacancies undoubtedly will continue to occur more rapidly than the system can fill them. The courts, in order to continue to meet their mandates, must maintain the ability to function well at less than full strength.

Implementation Strategies:

67a Delays in filling judicial vacancies should be reduced by encouraging retiring judges and those taking senior status to provide substantial (i.e., six-month or one-year) advance notice of that action. ✳

The lengthiest delays in filling judgeships arise in the process of identifying and evaluating the suitability of potential nominees. If that process can be routinely commenced before a vacancy arises, the period of time in which a court is required to operate at less than full strength can be substantially reduced if not eliminated. Advance notice can be used to achieve this [15] See Chapter 10, notes 11-17 and accompanying text infra.

[16] Chapter 10 also discusses the judicial vacancies problem, suggesting more far-reaching solutions in the event of an alternative, much less favorable, future.

REV_00256358

result in two ways: (1) directly apprising executive and legislative branch officials of the impending need for a judicial appointment; and (2) allowing local bar and civic organizations to use their resources to encourage the President and the Senate to act speedily in appointing a new judge.

Timely selection of successor judges depends, of course, on prompt notice of retirement decisions as they are made. Because this entails voluntary cooperation from individuals who, for various reasons, may not otherwise choose to make their retirement plans known in advance, it will be necessary to remind judges periodically of the Judicial Conference policy, adopted in March 1988, urging advance notification of impending retirements from active service or the bench.[17]

67b Statistics should be maintained concerning the number, length, and impact of judicial vacancies (including data which relates to judicial emergencies) in each court, and benchmarks or timelines should be created for the nomination and confirmation of all judges. The judicial branch should publicize all vacancies extending beyond these limits, and all data on judicial emergencies, to Congress and the President by means of semi-annual reports.

It is essential that judicial appointments be viewed as an important task that will be performed expeditiously. The stark impact of vacancies on each court's ability to function should be documented through the statistical presentations of judicial workload. In addition, reasonable time frames should exist for completing the appointment process. A useful approach would be the voluntary acceptance of "benchmarks" or "timelines" for nominations and confirmations. If generally recognized in the legal and political communities—e.g., with support from bar organizations, scholars, and the press—an expectation would be created that vacancies will be filled promptly. Periodic reports to Congress and the President would reinforce the point by reminding the other two branches, and the public at large, of any vacancies extending beyond the suggested time frames. In addition, the policy of declaring "judicial emergencies" in courts with vacancies of 18-months or longer duration should be continued.[18]

67c Procedures for the temporary assignment of judges should emphasize the importance of providing assistance to courts with vacant judgeships.

As described earlier in this chapter,[19] a flexible, efficient system of bringing judicial resources temporarily to the aid of overworked courts will be needed to an ever-increasing extent. In particular, courts operating at less than full strength should be encouraged to seek assistance of senior judges and other volunteer judges from courts able to spare them. One useful approach might be to dispatch "judicial emergency teams" of available district judges, magistrate judges, and support staff to aid understaffed districts with overwhelming dockets.[20]

67d Procedures and policies governing the transaction of court business should seek to address special circumstances arising as a result of prolonged judicial vacancies. Among other things, rules governing the number of visiting

[17] REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JUDICIAL CONFERENCE OF THE UNITED STATES 31-32 (Mar. 1988).

[18] Id.

[19] See Recommendation 62 supra.

[20] See note 12 supra and accompanying text.

The Judicial Conference of the United States has approved the recommendations and implementation strategies in this Long Range Plan to guide future administrative action and policy development by the Conference and other judicial branch authorities. All other text in this Plan, including commentary on individual recommendations and strategies, explains and supplements the approved items but does not necessarily reflect the views of the Conference.

REV_00256359

or senior judges serving on panels in the courts of appeals should be held in abeyance during the existence of vacancies on a court constituting a judicial emergency.

The individual courts should be active in devising means of coping with long-standing vacancies. Although various measures can (and should) be taken at the national or circuit levels, each court should take responsibility for developing emergency procedures (including exceptions to normal methods of operation, where permissible) to expedite the handling of judicial business when required to operate at less than full judge strength.

For example, applicable law requires that a majority of judges on any court of appeals panel "be judges of that court." But the same law allows for exceptions if "such judges cannot sit because recused or disqualified," or when "the chief judge of that court certifies that there is an emergency including, but not limited to, the unavailability of a judge of the court because of illness."[21] Although the circuits differ—in local rules, decisional law, or practice—on whether senior judges are "judges of th[e] court" for purposes of panel composition, the statute clearly empowers a court to deviate from the requirement, however defined, if an emergency arises. The courts of appeals should therefore be encouraged to take advantage of all available judicial resources, including senior and visiting judges, when vacancies seriously threaten their ability to function effectively. Of course, these "emergency" panels should be utilized sparingly given the possible impact on the coherence and consistency of circuit law.

[21] 28 U.S.C. § 46(b) (1988).

Managing Judicial Branch Resources

The governance structure of the federal courts reserves considerable local autonomy to individual courts and their judges. Recently, the decentralization of management authority has increased. With this trend has come increased accountability and responsiveness to centralized leadership. The trend is consistent with modern management theory, which emphasizes the efficiency benefits of empowering those small units closest to an enterprise's core mission.

Budget decentralization and expanded local roles in personnel and procurement have made judges and court administrators increasingly responsible for the direction and operations of their units. Planning—both near- and long-term—has become even more crucial.[22] In an environment of inadequate resources, priorities will constantly need to be set and reset. Thus while budget decentralization deals with the limited spending authority over these insufficient resources allocated to individual courts, the larger problem of resource allocation among the various levels of the judicial branch remains. Development and implementation of administrative policies, as noted in Chapter 7, might affect the decentralized governance of resource management.

Budget Decentralization

❒ RECOMMENDATION 68: To match responsibility with authority, the budget execution function should be further decentralized so that each court may [22] See, e.g., Henry Mintzberg, The Fall and Rise of Strategic Planning, 72 HARV. BUS. REV. (No. 3) 107, 112*ff.* (1994).

REV_00256360

Brent D. Greenfield
10/25/2002 10:51:52 AM

Record Type: Record

To: Brett M. Kavanaugh/WHO/EOP@EOP

cc:
Subject: Legal Times column

Legal Times, 07/08/02:

Let's Agree on a Timely Basis

To break the judicial nominations gridlock, the Senate needs to vote on schedule.

By Arlen Specter

Our constitutional system for choosing federal judges has hit an impasse. Public confidence in the Senate confirmation process has declined, while the inordinate number of judicial vacancies has caused corresponding delays in federal court dockets. For the benefit of those seeking legal redress and for citizens generally, we in the Senate can and must act to remedy this unacceptable situation. The solution lies in something as straightforward-and nonpartisan-as a series of scheduled steps leading to a full Senate vote on each and every nominee.

It was another series of steps that led to the current gridlock in confirming federal judicial nominees: President George W. Bush failed to win the popular vote in the 2000 presidential election, with the contest essentially decided in the Supreme Court. The president nominated for the federal bench several prominent individuals with judicial philosophies similar to the president's views. Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont left the Republican Party, ceding control of the Senate to the Democratic Party. Now the Democrats directing the Senate have refused to appropriately act on Bush judicial nominations-in several cases, for more than a year-in much the same way that Clinton judicial nominees were treated for six years by a Republican-controlled Senate. This reciprocal partisan treatment has in turn created an even deeper division in a Senate already deeply divided in light of the disputed 2000 election and the Jeffords defection. Advocacy groups with vested interests in the makeup of the judiciary have continued to wage negative campaigns against nominees, prompting at various times the invocation-and sometimes abuse-of the time-honored tradition of senatorial courtesy to delay or defeat nominations.

Article II, Section 2, of the Constitution tells us that the president "shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States." The Senate is thus a critical part of the process for naming federal judges. Unfortunately, the advice-and-consent power is applied in an arcane and ad hoc practice that lacks any set time lines-and therefore is subject to abuse.

All too often of late, where a president of one political party has submitted a judicial nomination to a Senate controlled by the opposite party, that nomination has been subjected to partisan treatment not focused solely on the nominee's qualifications for the federal bench. This has been the case regardless of which party controlled the White House and which party controlled the Senate.

Individual senators and committee chairmen have taken advantage of the ad hoc process to cause excessive delays in considering nominees. Some nominees have not even received a hearing. At other times, the Committee on the Judiciary-acting along party lines-has prevented the full Senate from exercising its constitutional duty to vote on all judicial nominations. While confirmation disputes have often been resolved by back-room arrangements among the Senate leadership, these deals themselves have tended to undermine the legitimacy of the confirmation process in the public's eyes.

I have suggested a simple Senate rule change-a nominations protocol-that would establish a timetable for confirmations.

My nominations protocol provides that the chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, in consultation with the ranking member, set a specific timetable for committee action on each nominee. A certain number of days after a nomination is submitted by the president, a hearing would be held, and within a certain number of additional days there would be a vote by the Judiciary Committee on whether to report the nominee to the full Senate for its consideration. Then, the majority leader of the Senate, in consultation with the minority leader, would agree upon a timetable for floor action so that, within another specified period of time, there would be a vote by the full Senate.

Additionally, my protocol requires that a nomination would proceed to the Senate floor if the nominee were rejected in committee on a party-line vote. The recent nomination to elevate U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Mississippi to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit is an instance where a nomination, rejected by the Judiciary Committee on a 10-9 party-line vote, was not reported to the full Senate for consideration. It is likely that Judge Pickering would have been confirmed by the full Senate. Thus the Democrats' refusal to allow the full Senate to consider his nomination did not conform to the Constitution, which calls for the Senate-not simply a committee-to make the decision to accept or reject federal judicial nominees.

I believe that any president, notwithstanding his political persuasion, should be accorded a certain degree of deference in his judicial nominations. Neither the text of the Constitution nor any contemporaneous or subsequent history says anything about the ability of one senator or one committee to defeat a judicial nomination by the president. To the contrary, in Federalist 76, Alexander Hamilton made clear that this constitutional function was to be exercised by the Senate as a whole, which would serve as a check upon unwise appointments. Each and every senator should participate in bringing the collective wisdom of the Senate to bear on judicial nominations. If one senator or one committee has the de facto power to block a nomination, then the advice-and-consent clause of the Constitution is rendered virtually meaningless.

Reporting a nomination to the full Senate even absent a majority vote in committee also has historical support under Senate practice. Since 1950, six lower court nominees have been sent to the full Senate even though they did not receive an affirmative vote in the Judiciary Committee.

Similarly, under my protocol, any Supreme Court nominee would be reported to the full Senate irrespective of the committee vote. This conforms with recent Senate practice: In 1991, the nomination of Judge Clarence Thomas to be an associate justice failed to receive a majority vote (7-7) in the Judiciary Committee, yet was reported to the full Senate, which confirmed him, 52-48. Another Supreme Court nominee, Judge Robert Bork, received a negative vote (9-5) in the Judiciary Committee, but his nomination was still sent to the Senate floor-and was ultimately defeated, 58-42.

To ensure that ample discretion is retained at the committee level, the timetables under my protocol could always be extended for cause, such as the need for more investigation or additional hearings. While it is presumed that the White House will adequately consult with senators from the judicial nominee's home state, a failure to consult-in and of itself-should not be considered sufficient cause to indefinitely delay a judicial nomination.

Besides the constitutional concern, a vital pragmatic consideration underlies the need for my protocol. According to both sitting federal judges and their court executives, filling vacancies is the most pressing issue facing our lower courts-due to the correlation between judicial vacancies and delays in processing cases.

For example, look at the 6th Circuit. The court's 50 percent vacancy rate has left a death penalty appeal pending for more than eight years, while a plaintiff in a civil case died after having waited more than 15 months just to have oral arguments in a job discrimination suit.

Egregious delays can also be found in the 4th Circuit, where more than a quarter of the seats are unfilled despite four declared judicial emergencies and one seat being vacant for eight years. Meanwhile, simple appeals languish. A municipality in South Carolina has been waiting 39 months for clarification of the constitutionality of its ban on the docking of longline fishing vessels at the local marina. A routine Longshoreman's Act claim has been pending for 38 months. It is difficult to conceive of a fully occupied court that could not dispose of such mundane cases in more than three years.

These anecdotal examples are representative of a much broader and most disturbing pattern of easily avoidable judicial vacancies and emergencies. The situation is unacceptable, and the Senate has a constitutional responsibility to act. My proposed protocol would provide a nonpartisan way to fill judicial vacancies with due care but without undue political influence.

Arlen Specter is the senior U.S. senator from Pennsylvania, a Republican, and a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

BRIEFING PAPER

REMARKS ON JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS
Tuesday, October, 29, 2002
1:40 p.m. – 2:10 p.m.
East Room
Alberto R. Gonzales

I. PURPOSE

To speak about the judicial vacancy crisis and Senate confirmation process and to propose a specific plan for the timely consideration of judicial nominees.

II. BACKGROUND

The process for Senate confirmation of judges remains broken, exacerbating a judicial vacancy crisis that the Chief Justice of the United States has termed "alarming." The Senate's delay in holding hearings and up-or-down floor votes on judges has been a problem for many years, but is now worse than ever.

Many observers, including the Chief Justice and most recently the American Bar Association, have called for the Senate to give every judicial nominee a timely hearing and up-or-down vote. At your initial announcement of judicial nominees on May 9, 2001, you called for the Senate to ensure a timely hearing and vote for all judicial nominees, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Attorney General John Ashcroft
Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson
Solicitor General Ted Olson
Judge Alberto Gonzales
Bar leaders, Justice Department officials, lawyers, and others to be determined

IV. PRESS PLAN

Open

V. SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

You arrive State Floor and are announced into East Room by Judge Gonzales.
You proceed to podium and deliver remarks.
You conclude remarks and depart.

VI. REMARKS

Provided by speechwriting.

VII. ATTACHMENTS

Remarks attached.

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

October 23, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR BRETT KAVANAUGH
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

FROM: JONATHAN BURKS
DEPUTY STAFF SECRETARY TO THE VICE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: Judicial confirmation Process Decision Memo

The Office of the Vice President has reviewed the above-referenced draft and recommends the changes marked on the attached copy.

Attachment

cc: Harriet Miers
Staff Secretary

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

ADOPTED BY THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES
August 12-13, 2002

RESOLVED, that the prompt filling of existing judicial vacancies in the federal courts of the United States is essential for the efficient, responsible and effective administration of justice; and that undue delays in the nomination and confirmation of candidates for vacancies in the federal courts of the United States adversely affects such effective, responsible and timely administration of justice;

FURTHER RESOLVED, that the American Bar Association urges the following:

1. The President of the United States should promptly nominate candidates to fill vacancies in the federal courts of the United States.

2. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary should promptly act on nominees.

3. The Senate of the United States should promptly advise and consent to or reject the nominees.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that the American Bar Association urges its members and state, local, and territorial bar associations to encourage the President to make prompt appointments to fill federal judicial vacancies and to contact the appropriate members of the Senate to urge prompt hearings and votes on pending nominations for the federal courts of the United States.

REV_00256372

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Nominations Submitted	Nominees Confirmed	Percentage Of Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Nominations Submitted	Circuit Court Nominees Confirmed	Circuit Court Percentage of Nominees Confirmed
G.W. Bush (as of Aug. '02 Senate recess)	123	72	59%	32	13	41%
Clinton	140	126	90%	22	19	86%
George H.W. Bush	74	70	95%	23	22	96%
Reagan	88	87	99%	20	19	95%

Judicial Appointments
Historical Comparison: First Two Years of a Presidency

President	Circuit Court Nominees who waited more than a year for a hearing
G.W. Bush (as of August 2002)	11
Clinton	0
George H.W. Bush	0
Reagan	0

REV_00256374

PRESIDENT BUSH ANNOUNCES HIS PLAN TO ENSURE TIMELY CONSIDERATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINEES

Today the President outlined his plan to ensure timely consideration of judicial nominees. The President calls on the Senate and the Judiciary to join him in adopting this plan and applying it both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The objective is to fix, on a permanent and bipartisan basis, a judicial confirmation process that is clearly broken.

THE CURRENT CRISIS

- There is a vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary. As of this week, there are 79 vacancies out of the 849 authorized federal judgeships, a 9% vacancy rate. The 12 regional federal appeals courts face a particularly serious crisis, with 28 vacancies out of 167 judgeships, a 17% vacancy rate.

    - ✓ Chief Justice Rehnquist's 2001 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary, issued when there were 94 vacancies, called the situation "alarming."
    - ✓ The Secretary of the Judicial Conference of the United States, which is the federal judiciary's governing body, stated in May 2002 that the overall shortage of federal judges is "staggering."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 described the status of the federal judiciary as an "emergency situation."
    - ✓ In 1998, when there were 50 judicial vacancies, Chairman Leahy stated that the number of vacancies represented a "judicial vacancy crisis." (AP, 10/22/98)
    - ✓ Caseloads in the federal courts continue to grow dramatically. Filings in the federal appeals courts reached an all-time high last year.

- The Senate has not lived up to its responsibility to hold fair hearings and prompt votes on judicial nominees.

    - ✓ The Senate has voted on only 80 of the President's 131 nominees overall and, even more problematic, has voted on only 14 of the President's 32 appeals court nominees. By contrast, in the first two years of the past three Administrations, 60 of the 65 appeals court nominees were confirmed.
    - ✓ As of November, 15 of President Bush's appeals court nominees will have been forced to wait more than a year just for a hearing (many are still waiting). That number is more than the number of appeals court nominees who had to wait a year for a hearing in the last 50 years combined.
    - ✓ The Chief Justice of the United States, speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in his 2001 Year-End Report, "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."
    - ✓ The American Bar Association report in August 2002 stated that as a result of delays in the judicial confirmation process, "the federal courts . . . suffer, and so does the rule of law." The report stated that the Senate Judiciary Committee's refusal to allow "confirmation proceedings in the full Senate is simply unacceptable to our notion of an appropriate and constitutional nomination process" and added: "Vote them up or down, but don't hang them out to dry."
    - ✓ The 2000 report of the bipartisan Citizens for Independent Courts stated that "the views of individual senators, while vital, should not be allowed to undermine collective decision-making in an open, deliberative process" and stated that "the Senate process should proceed expeditiously to a committee hearing, committee review and voting, and floor consideration and voting."

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL

This President's plan requires specific commitments from everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of federal judges:

- First, the President calls on federal court of appeals and district court judges to notify the President of their intended retirement dates at least a year in advance whenever possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge can be a lengthy process even under the best of circumstances, advance notice is necessary to prevent extended unnecessary judicial vacancies. The President's call to the Judiciary builds on existing Judicial Conference recommendations and is intended to create a seamless process whereby a new federal judge is ready to take the bench at or near the time a sitting federal judge retires.

- Second, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This would ensure that nominees are promptly submitted to the Senate and would help expedite the process by which home-State Senators, Representatives, bar leaders, and others provide their recommendations and evaluations of possible judicial candidates to the President.

- Third, the President calls on the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. The Committee has engaged in too many delays of too many nominees for too many years. A strict deadline, which will apply no matter who is President and which party controls the Senate, is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. Ninety days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct any necessary research before holding a hearing.

- Fourth, the President calls on the full Senate to hold an up-or-down floor vote within 180 days of receiving a judicial nomination. That is a generous period designed to give both the Committee and the full Senate ample time to evaluate nominees and answer any questions they may have. And all Senators will have an opportunity to have their voices heard and their votes counted.

U.S. SENATOR PATRICK LEAHY

CONTACT: Office of Senator Leahy, 202-224-4242 VERMONT

Comments Of Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy On The White House Proposal On Judicial Nominations Wednesday, Oct. 30, 2002

"I regret that instead of accepting our many previous invitations to work with the Senate and increase the level of consultation and cooperation to help fill judicial vacancies, the White House repeatedly has chosen to continue down its path of trying to politicize the process. The timing and handling of this unilateral White House proposal, a week before the elections, and after ignoring all previous invitations to consult with the Senate, cannot help but raise questions about its purpose.

"We have restored steadiness and openness to the judicial confirmation process. The Democratic Senate has moved far faster and with far more fairness than the previous Republican Senate in filling judicial vacancies, even though many of those vacancies were kept open through Republican stalling on so many of President Clinton's nominees. We have done more in 15 months than our predecessors did in 30 months. In just 15 months, the Judiciary Committee has voted on 100 nominees and approved 98 of them.

"Our list of firsts includes the first nominee confirmed to the 6th Circuit in almost five years, even though three of President Clinton's nominees to that court never got hearings and votes, and the first confirmation to the 5th Circuit in six years. The President today was incorrect in suggesting that no 6th Circuit nominee has been confirmed. The Senate on its own takes an average of only 150 days from nomination to confirmation, even with the time the White House has added to the Senate's timetable for peer-review vetting by the ABA.

"President Bush said he wanted to be a uniter and not a divider, but he has nominated several appellate court nominees who divide the American people and who divide the Senate, and controversial nominations always take longer. The President can help by choosing nominees not primarily for their ideology but for their fairness. The Senate has clearly shown that consensus nominees are acted on promptly.

"Cooperation from the White House would allow us to make a good record even better. The Senate has taken good-faith steps to speed the confirmation process. The White House has not reciprocated. Ten months ago I invited the President to work with the Senate and I renewed that invitation most recently on Monday. I would be glad to begin those discussions about consultation with the Senate and other steps to improve the process. But the President should understand that the Senate does not need arbitrary deadlines. What we need is cooperation from the White House in choosing more

REV_00256377

Judge Jose Martinez, S.D. Florida

Judge Arthur Schwab, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Reena Raggi, 2nd Circuit

Judge James Gardner, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Ronald Clark, E.D. Texas

Judicial Nominations Reported Favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate and on the Senate Executive Calendar Awaiting Final Action by the Senate:

John M. Rogers to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

Judge Stanley R. Chesler to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Rosemary M. Collyer to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia

Mark E. Fuller to the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama

Daniel L. Hovland to the U.S. District Court for the District of North Dakota

Kent A. Jordan to the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware

Judge James E. Kinkeade to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas

Judge Robert G. Klausner to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California

Judge Robert B. Kugler to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Ronald B. Leighton to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington

Judge Jose L. Linares to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Judge Alia M. Ludlum to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas

William J. Martini to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Judge Thomas W. Phillips to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee

Judge Linda R. Reade to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Iowa

William E. Smith to the U.S. District Court for the District of Rhode Island

Jeffrey White to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California

Judge Freda Wolfson to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

REV_00256386

Executive Branch Confirmations:

Department of Justice and Other Agencies:

Ralph Boyd, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division

Eileen O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, Tax Division

James Ziglar, Commissioner Immigration and Naturalization Service

Asa Hutchinson, Administrator, Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA)

Sarah Hart, Director, National Institute of Justice

Robert Mueller, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

Robert McCallum, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division

John Gillis, Director, Office of Victims of Crime

Richard Nedelkoff, Director, Bureau of Justice Assistance

Deborah Daniels, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Justice Programs

Jay Bybee, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel

Benigno Reyna, Director, U.S. Marshals' Service

Juan Carlos Benitez, Special Counsel for Immigration-Related Unfair Employment Practices

Sharee Freeman, Director, Community Relations Service

Jay Stevens, Associate Attorney General

James Rogan, Director of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office

Thomas Sansonetti, Assistant Attorney General, Environment and Natural Resources Division

John Walters, Director, Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP)

Mauricio Tamargo, Chair, Foreign Claims Settlement Commission

J. Robert Flores, Administrator, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention

Scott M. Burns, Deputy Director for State and Local Affairs, ONDCP

John M. Brown, III, Deputy Administrator, DEA

REV_00256387

Barry D. Crane, Deputy Director for Supply Reduction, ONDCP

Mary Ann Solberg, Deputy Director, ONDCP

Lawrence Greenfeld, Director, Bureau of Justice Statistics

United States Attorneys:

Michael Heavican, Nebraska

Paul McNulty, E.D. New York

Colm Connolly, Delaware

Roscoe Howard, Jr., District of Columbia

Michael Sullivan, Massachusetts

Joseph Van Bokkelen, N.D. Indiana

Stephen Pence, W.D. Kentucky

Gregory Van Tatenhove, E.D. Kentucky

Thomas Heffelfinger, Minnesota

Patrick Meehan, E.D. Pennsylvania

Mary Beth Buchanan, W.D. Pennsylvania

Peter Hall, Vermont

John Brownlee, W.D. Virginia

Tim Burgess, Alaska

Harry Mattice, E.D. Tennessee

Robert McCampbell, W.D. Oklahoma

Matthew Mead, Wyoming

Michael Mosman, Oregon

John Suthers, Colorado

Susan Brooks, S.D. Indiana

REV_00256388

Todd Graves, W.D. Missouri

Terrell Harris, W.D. Tennessee

David Iglesias, New Mexico

Charles Larson, Sr., N.D. Iowa

Steven Colloton, S.D. Iowa

Gregory Lockhart, S.D. Ohio

Anna Mills Wagoner, M.D. North Carolina

Margaret Chiara, W.D. Michigan

Robert Conrad, W.D. North Carolina

Thomas Gean, W.D. Arkansas

James Greenlee, N.D. Mississippi

Raymond Gruender, E.D. Missouri

Daniel Bogden, Nevada

Thomas DiBiagio, Maryland

Thomas Johnston, N.D. West Virginia

Donald Washington, W.D. Louisiana

Patrick Fitzgerald, N.D. Illinois

John McKay, W.D. Washington

Karl Warner, S.D. West Virginia

Leura Canary, M.D. Alabama

Paul Charlton, Arizona

Jeffrey Collins, E.D. Michigan

William Duffey, Jr., N.D. Georgia

Dunn Lampton, S.D. Mississippi

REV_00256389

Alice Howze Martin, N.D. Alabama

William Mercer, Montana

Thomas Moss, Idaho

Strom Thurmond, Jr., South Carolina

Maxwell Wood, M.D. Georgia

Drew Wrigley, North Dakota

David Dugas, M.D. Louisiana

Edward Kubo, Hawaii

James McDevitt, E.D. Washington

David O'Meilia, N.D. Oklahoma

Sheldon Sperling, E.D. Oklahoma

Johnny Sutton, W.D. Texas

Richard Thompson, S.D. Georgia

Harry Cummins, III, E.D. Arkansas

Christopher Christie, New Jersey

David York, S.D. Alabama

Michael Battle, W.D. New York

Thomas Colantuono, New Hampshire

James Vines, M.D. Tennessee

Paul Perez, M.D. Florida

Eric F. Melgren, Kansas

Michael Shelby, S.D. Texas

Jane Boyle, N.D. Texas

Matthew Orwig, E.D. Texas

REV_00256390

James Comey, S.D. New York

Thomas Marino, M.D. Pennsylvania

Debra W. Yang, C.D. California

Frank D. Whitney, E.D. North Carolina

Steven M. Biskupic, E.D. Wisconsin

Jan Paul Miller, C.D. Illinois

James McMahon, South Dakota

Roslynn R. Mauskopf, E.D. New York

Gregory Robert Miller, N.D. Florida

Kevin Vincent Ryan, N.D. California

Marcos D. Jimenez, S.D. Florida

Miriam F. Miquelon, S.D. Illinois

J.B. Van Hollen, W.D. Wisconsin

United States Marshals:

Dwight MacKay, Montana

James Dawson, S.D. West Virginia

William Jenkins, M.D. Louisiana

Ronald McCubbins, Jr., W.D. Kentucky

David Murtaugh, N.D. Indiana

Nehemiah Flowers, S.D. Mississippi

Arthur Hedden, E.D. Tennessee

David Jolley, W.D. Tennessee

Michael Roach, W.D. Oklahoma

Eric Robertson, W.D. Washington

REV_00256391

Brian Ennis, Nebraska

Chester Keely, N.D. Alabama

John Loyd, E.D. Oklahoma

David Viles, Maine

Johnny Hughes, Maryland

Randy Johnson, Alaska

Larry Wagster, N.D. Mississippi

William Smith Taylor, S.D. Alabama

Dennis Cluff Merrill, Oregon

John Schickel, E.D. Kentucky

William "Rut" Whittington, W.D. Louisiana

Stephen Fitzgerald, W.D. Wisconsin

J.C. Raffety, N.D. West Virginia

James Rose, Wyoming

James Kennedy, S.D. Indiana

Theophile Duroncelet, E.D. Louisiana

James Plousis, New Jersey

Charles Reavis, E.D. North Carolina

Timothy Welch, N.D. Oklahoma

Michael Regan, M.D. Pennsylvania

Jesse Seroyer, Jr., M.D. Alabama

Gregory Forest, W.D. North Carolina

John Edwards, Vermont

Kim Widup, N.D. Illinois

REV_00256392

Don Slazinik, S.D. Illinois

Patrick McDonald, Idaho

Warren Anderson, South Dakota

James Parmley, N.D. New York

John Quinn, N.D. Iowa

David Gonzales, Arizona

Edward Zahren, Colorado

Charles M. Sheer, W.D. Missouri

Gorden Eden, Jr., New Mexico

John Lee Moore, E.D. Texas

Ronald Henderson, E.D. Missouri

Randy Paul Ely, N.D. Texas

Gary Shovlin, E.D. Pennsylvania

Steven Monier, New Hampshire

Walter Bradley, Kansas

William P. Kruziki, E.D. Wisconsin

Steven Deatherage, C.D. Illinois

Thomas M. Fitzgerald, W.D. Pennsylvania

Pike, G. Wayne, W.D. Virginia

David W. Thomas, Delaware

Randall D. Anderson, Utah

Ray E. Carnahan, E.D. Arkansas

David S. Carpenter, North Dakota

Theresa A. Merrow, M.D. Georgia

REV_00256393

Ruben Monzon, S.D. Texas

James M. Wahlrab, S.D. Ohio

Anthony Dichio, Massachusetts

James T. Roberts, S.D. Georgia

James R. Dougan, W.D. Michigan

Michael L. Kline, E.D. Washington

George B. Walsh, District of Columbia

Peter A. Lawrence, W.D. New York

Charles E. Beach, S.D. Iowa

Richard Vaughn Mecum, N.D. Georgia

Burton Stallwood, Rhode Island

Denny Wade King, Tennessee

Antonio Candia Amador, C.D. California

Executive Branch Nominations Reported Favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate and on the Senate Executive Calendar Awaiting Final Action by the Senate:

Carol Chien-Hua Lam to be U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of California

Glenn Suddaby to be U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of New York

Johnny Mack Brown to be U.S. Marshal for the District of South Carolina

John Francis Clark to be U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of Virginia

Robert Maynard Grubbs to be U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of Michigan

Joseph Guccione to be U.S. Marshal for the Southern District of New York

Judicial and Executive Branch Nominations on which the Senate Judiciary Committee Voted Not to Report:

Charles Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

REV_00256394

As you can see, the Senate Judiciary Committee has worked hard to consider your judicial and executive branch nominations over the past 15 months since the Committee was permitted to reorganize following the change in majority. During that time, the Senate Judiciary Committee held 26 hearings for more than 100 of your nominees for lifetime appointment to the federal bench as well as 16 hearings for 21 executive branch nominees.

It was unfortunate to see the Senate's historic record of bipartisan cooperation on confirmations distorted in the weeks leading up to November elections. It was disturbing to see the White House, Senate Republicans and Republican candidates distorting the record and ignoring the Senate Judiciary Committee's achievements and those of the Senate.

The Judiciary Committee held hearings on 103 judicial nominations in 15 months. We held votes on 100 judicial nominations in 15 months and favorably reported 98 of your judicial nominees. The Committee voted not to report only two judicial nominees.

We held hearings on every federal trial court nominee who had a completed file by October 2. Unfortunately several, 16, of your judicial nominees do not have the support of home-state Senators. Had the White House worked more closely with those Senators of both parties, those situations may well have been avoided. In addition, because of the White House's decision to change the procedures that had been used since President Eisenhower by Republican and Democratic Presidents alike to obtain peer reviews through the ABA, a number of your more recent nominees, 10, do not have ABA peer reviews. Had we received the ABA peer reviews earlier in the course of the last 16 months, the Committee could have held hearings and voted on another 12 to 15 judges.

The Senate proceeded to confirm 80 judges in the 15 months since the change in majority, including 14 judges to the circuit courts. That is more judges than the Republican majority had confirmed in its final 30 months of Senate control from 1999 through the summer of 2001, more than the Republican majority had confirmed in its first two full years of Senate control in 1995 and 1996 combined, and more than were confirmed in the first two years of your father's term in 1989 and 1990 combined.

At our Committee meeting on October 8, the Committee favorably reported 17 judicial nominations to the Senate. At that one meeting, we equaled the output of the Republican Senate majority for the entire 1996 session when only 17 District Court judges were confirmed all year. No judges were confirmed to the circuit courts during the entire 1996 session of Congress when the Republican majority was in control.

In the 15 months in which I have chaired the Judiciary Committee, we held hearings on 20 circuit court nominees, held Committee votes on 17 and favorably reported 15 circuit court nominees. In the six and one-half years that the Republican majority controlled the pace of President Clinton's nominees, only 46 circuit court nominees were confirmed. In the first 15 months of Democratic control, by contrast, 14 circuit court nominees were confirmed.

To compare how your nominees are being treated in contrast to how the Republican Senate majority treated President Clinton's nominees, let me note the following. Senator Hatch is fond of saying that he presided over six years of President Clinton's terms in office and that President Clinton appointed 377 federal judges (although 127 were confirmed under the chairmanship of Senator Biden). Had the Republicans acted as quickly on as many of President Clinton's noncontroversial nominees. Controversial nominations to lifetime appointments, once confirmed, cannot be undone, and the Senate's consideration should not be needlessly rushed. Arbitrary deadlines on the Senate would only serve to remove any pressure from the White House in moderating the President's choices."

REV_00256395

1.

#####

[Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) today also released a letter sent Monday to President Bush, reporting on the Senate's work in acting on his judicial nominations and once again inviting a constructive dialogue with the President on further improvements in the process. The letter is pasted at the bottom of this page.]

#####

[Source: Senate Judiciary Committee:]

NOMINEES WHO THE PRESIDENT TOOK MORE THAN 180 DAYS TO NOMINATE

Nominee	Court	Days to Nomination
John R. Adams	ND Ohio	608
Thomas Ludington	ED Michigan	589
Robert G. Klausner	CD California	544
James Otero	CD California	544
Sandra Feurstein	ED New York	540
Richard Griffin	6th Circuit	522
James Dever	North Carolina	467
Timothy J. Corrigan	MD Florida	467
Morrison England	ED California	425
Timothy Savage	ED Pennsylvania	405
David Cercone	WD Pennsylvania	405
Richard Dorr	WD Missouri 405
Henry Autrey	ED Missouri	405

REV_00256378

nominees as the Judiciary Committee has over the last 15 months on your nominees, President Clinton would have been able to appoint 597 federal judges. During the time in which the Republican majority controlled the pace of confirmations in the Senate, had they maintained the pace that Democrats have maintained in reporting your judicial nominations to the Senate over the last 15 months, President Clinton's judicial appointments during the period of Republican control would have been 89 percent higher.

Rather than acknowledge the better pace that your nominees have been considered than those of the last President, you and members of your staff have chosen to treat this as a partisan political matter. You have refused to acknowledge what we have been able to achieve and, instead, focused only on your most controversial and divisive nominations.

In attempting to address responsibly the large number of vacancies created by Republican obstruction when they controlled the Senate, the Committee has endeavored to move as quickly as possible on the less controversial of the nominees, in order to provide much needed relief to the federal courts. The Committee's reporting 98 judicial nominations and the Senate's confirmation of 80 in 15 months demonstrates our willingness to act fairly, expeditiously and in a bipartisan way.

I inherited 110 vacancies when I became Chairman. Since then an additional 47 vacancies have arisen. The judiciary does not suffer from those 150 plus vacancies, which it would had we done nothing. With 80 confirmations so far in just 15 months, we have significantly reduced the vacancies in the 862-member federal judiciary to 77.

Unfortunately, despite the current number of judicial vacancies, you have not made nominations to 26 of the open seats on the federal courts (26 of 77). While we are moving at a fast pace to consider your judicial nominees, we obviously cannot confirm those who have not yet been nominated. Morever, a number of your more recent nominees, including all eight received in September and October, do not have ABA peer reviews and will not be eligible to be considered at all this year.

We wish you had chosen to work with us more closely on the important work of filling our federal courts with judicial nominees who will follow precedent, be fair and impartial to all people, and protect the rights of all Americans. If you would work with us and nominate less divisive, less controversial nominees, that would contribute greatly to the process and our mutual success. Unfortunately, you have chosen to politicize these appointments and to seek to create a partisan campaign issue.

Your unwillingness to work with the Majority Leader in selection nominees for bipartisan boards and commissions has greatly complicated the confirmation process, as well. Likewise, Republican Senators' unwillingness to proceed on your nominees has been a great difficulty and threatens progress on the judicial nominees reported by the Judiciary Committee and on the Senate Executive Calendar.

At the beginning of my term as Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee I reached out to try to work with your Administration. I renewed my efforts in January and the early parts of this year. I am doing so, again. Meaningful consultation, ideological balance and a depoliticizing of the judicial nomination process are all matters I remain willing to discuss. We have accomplished a good deal already. We could accomplish much more working more closely together.

REV_00256396

Sincerely,

_____
PATRICK LEAHY
Chairman

REV_00256397

Jeffrey White	ND California	391
William Smith	Rhode Island	384
Alia Ludlum	WD Texas	377
Legrome Davis	ED Pennsylvania	369
Cynthia Rufe	ED Pennsylvania	369
Arthur Schwab	WD Pennsylvania	369
Kenneth Marra	SD Florida	369
John Walter	CD California	368
William Griesbach	ED Wisconsin	368
Joy Conti	WD Pennsylvania	368
Percy Anderson	CD California	368
Jose Martinez	SD Florida	368
Frederick Rohlfing	Hawaii	368
Ronald Leighton	WD Washington	367
Henry Hudson	ED Virginia	367
Andrew Hanen	SD Texas	367
David Godbey	ND Texas	367
Cormac Carney	CD California	357
Leonard Davis	ED Texas	347
Samuel Mays	WD Tennessee	345
Ronald Clark	ED Texas	329
John E. Jones	MD Pennsylvania	328
Christopher Conner	MD Pennsylvania	316

REV_00256379

Thomas Varlan	ED Tennessee	314
Jose Linares	New Jersey	304
Richard Holwell	SD New York	294
Susan Bieke Neilson	6th Circuit	292
Judge D. Brooks Smith	3rd Circuit	233
Henry Saad	6th Circuit	292
Maurice Hicks	WD Louisiana	286
Amy St. Eve	ND Illinois	273
Judge Julia Smith Gibbons	6th Circuit	262
William H. Steele	11th Circuit	262
Phillip Martinez	WD Texas	262
Timothy Stanceu	ITC	261
Ralph Erickson	North Dakota	255
Ashley Royal	MD Georgia	251
Stanley Chesler	New Jersey	236
Robert Blackburn	Colorado	233
David Bury	Arizona	233
Cindy Jorgenson	Arizona	233
Gregory Frost	SD Ohio	212
Clay Land	ND Georgia	212
Randy Crane	SD Texas	212
Freda Wolfson	New Jersey	209
William Martini	New Jersey	207

REV_00256380

James Mahan	Nevada	201
Frederick Martone	Arizona	201
Julie Robinson	Kansas	201
Christina Armijo	New Mexico	194
Danny Reeves	ED Kentucky	194
Karon Bowdre	ND Alabama	194
Karen Caldwell	ED Kentucky	194
Clair Egan	ND Oklahoma	194
Kurt Englehardt	ED Louisiana	194
Stephen Friot	WD Oklahoma	194
Callie Granade	SD Alabama	194
Joe Heaton	WD Oklahoma	194
Larry Hicks	Nevada	194
William Johnson	New Mexico	194
Michael Baylson	ED Pennsylvania	190
Rosemary Collyer	D. DC	182
David Bunning	ED Kentucky	182

VACANCIES FOR WHICH THE PRESIDENT HAS FAILED TO NOMINATE (Vacancies More Than 180 Days Old)

Vacancy Created By	Court	Days Vacant as of October 30, 2002
Judge Charles Wiggins	9th Circuit	2128 days
Judge Sam Ervin	4th Circuit	1168 days
Judge Morton Greenberg	3rd Circuit	853 days

Judge Patrick Duggan	E.D. Mich.	792 days
Judge Francis Murnaghan	4th Circuit	790 days
Judge Laurence Silberman	D.C. Circuit	728 days
Judge Spencer Letts	C.D. Cal.	680 days
Judge Richard Vollmer	S.D. Ala.	668 days
Judge Robert Jones	D. Ore.	547 days
Judge Stephen Williams	D.C. Circuit	426 days
Judge James C. Fox	E.D. NC	272 days
Judge William Standish	W.D. Pa.	243 days
Judge Carol Los Mansmann	3rd Circuit	235 day
Judge Shelby Highsmith	S.D. Fla.	229 days

#####

October 28, 2002

The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

At times it has seemed to me that you may not be aware of all of your judicial and executive branch nominees on which the Democratic majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate have deferred to you and consented to the nomination. Accordingly, I list for you below the nominees the Judiciary Committee has voted on since I became Chairman.

Judicial Nominations Reported and Confirmed Between July 20, 2001 and October 2, 2002:

Judge Roger Gregory, 4th Circuit

Judge Richard Cebull, D. Montana

Judge Sam Haddon, D. Montana

REV_00256382

Judge William Riley, 8th Circuit

Judge Sharon Prost, Federal Circuit

Judge Reggie Walton, D. District of Columbia

Judge Barrington Parker, Jr., 2d Circuit

Judge Michael Mills, N.D. Mississippi

Judge James Payne, N.D./ E.D./ W.D. Oklahoma

Judge Karen Caldwell, E.D. Kentucky

Judge Laurie Smith Camp, D. Nebraska

Judge Claire Eagan, N.D. Oklahoma

Judge Larry Hicks, D. Nevada

Judge Christina Armijo, D. New Mexico

Judge Karon Bowdre, D. Alabama

Judge Stephen Friot, W.D. Oklahoma

Judge Terry Wooten, D. South Carolina

Judge Edith Brown Clement, 5th Circuit

Judge Harris Hartz, 10th Circuit

Judge Joe Heaton, D. Oklahoma

Judge Danny Reeves, E.D. Kentucky

Judge John Bates, D. District of Columbia

Judge Kurt Engelhardt, E.D. Louisiana

Judge Julie Robinson, D. Kansas

Judge William Johnson, D. New Mexico

Judge Clay Land, D. Georgia

Judge Frederick Martone, D. Arizona

REV_00256383

Judge C. Ashley Royal, M.D. Georgia

Judge Marcia Krieger, D. Colorado

Judge James Mahan, D. Nevada

Judge Callie Granade, S.D. Alabama

Judge Philip Martinez, W.D. Texas

Judge Michael Melloy, 8th Circuit

Judge Jay Zainey, E.D. Louisiana

Judge David Bunning, E.D. Kentucky

Judge James Gritzner, S.D. Iowa

Judge Richard Leon, D. District of Columbia

Judge Robert Blackburn, D. Colorado

Judge Cindy Jorgenson, D. Arizona

Judge Ralph Beistline, D. Alaska

Judge David C. Bury, D. Arizona

Judge Randy Crane, S.D. Texas

Judge Terrence O'Brien, 10th Circuit

Judge Lance M. Africk, E.D. Louisiana

Judge Legrome Davis, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Jeffrey Howard, 1st Circuit

Judge Percy Anderson, C.D. California

Judge William Griesbach, E.D. Wisconsin

Judge Joan Lancaster, D.C. Minnesota

Judge John Walter, C.D. California

Judge Cynthia Rufe, E.D. Pennsylvania

REV_00256384

Judge Michael Baylson, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Leonard Davis, E.D. Texas

Judge Andrew Hanen, S.D. Texas

Judge Samuel H. Mays, W.D. Tennessee

Judge Thomas Rose, S.D. Ohio

Judge Paul Cassell, D. Utah

Judge Lavenski R. Smith, 8th Circuit

Judge Richard R. Clifton, 9th Circuit

Judge Christopher C. Conner, M.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Julia Smith Gibbons, 6th Circuit

Judge Joy Flowers Conti, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge John E. Jones III, M.D. Pennsylvania

Judge D. Brooks Smith, 3rd Circuit

Judge Henry Autrey, E.D. Missouri

Judge Richard E. Dorr, W.D. Missouri

Judge David Godbey, N.D. Texas

Judge Henry Hudson, E.D. Virginia

Judge Timothy Savage, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Amy J. St. Eve, N.D. Illinois

Judge David Cercone, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Morrison Cohen England, E.D. California

Judge Terrence McVerry, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Kenneth Marra, S.D. Florida

Judge Timothy Corrigan, M.D. Florida

REV_00256385

U.S. SENATOR PATRICK LEAHY

CONTACT: Office of Senator Leahy, 202-224-4242 VERMONT

Comments Of Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy
On The White House Proposal On Judicial Nominations
Wednesday, Oct. 30, 2002

"I regret that instead of accepting our many previous invitations to work with the Senate and increase the level of consultation and cooperation to help fill judicial vacancies, the White House repeatedly has chosen to continue down its path of trying to politicize the process. The timing and handling of this unilateral White House proposal, a week before the elections, and after ignoring all previous invitations to consult with the Senate, cannot help but raise questions about its purpose.

"We have restored steadiness and openness to the judicial confirmation process. The Democratic Senate has moved far faster and with far more fairness than the previous Republican Senate in filling judicial vacancies, even though many of those vacancies were kept open through Republican stalling on so many of President Clinton's nominees. We have done more in 15 months than our predecessors did in 30 months. In just 15 months, the Judiciary Committee has voted on 100 nominees and approved 98 of them.

"Our list of firsts includes the first nominee confirmed to the 6th Circuit in almost five years, even though three of President Clinton's nominees to that court never got hearings and votes, and the first confirmation to the 5th Circuit in six years. The President today was incorrect in suggesting that no 6th Circuit nominee has been confirmed. The Senate on its own takes an average of only 150 days from nomination to confirmation, even with the time the White House has added to the Senate's timetable for peer-review vetting by the ABA.

"President Bush said he wanted to be a uniter and not a divider, but he has nominated several appellate court nominees who divide the American people and who divide the Senate, and controversial nominations always take longer. The President can help by choosing nominees not primarily for their ideology but for their fairness. The Senate has clearly shown that consensus nominees are acted on promptly.

"Cooperation from the White House would allow us to make a good record even better. The Senate has taken good-faith steps to speed the confirmation process. The White House has not reciprocated. Ten months ago I invited the President to work with the Senate and I renewed that invitation most recently on Monday. I would be glad to begin those discussions about consultation with the Senate and other steps to improve the process. But the President should understand that the Senate does not need arbitrary deadlines. What we need is cooperation from the White House in choosing more

REV_00256398

Judge Jose Martinez, S.D. Florida

Judge Arthur Schwab, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Reena Raggi, 2nd Circuit

Judge James Gardner, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Ronald Clark, E.D. Texas

Judicial Nominations Reported Favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate and on the Senate Executive Calendar Awaiting Final Action by the Senate:

John M. Rogers to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

Judge Stanley R. Chesler to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Rosemary M. Collyer to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia

Mark E. Fuller to the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama

Daniel L. Hovland to the U.S. District Court for the District of North Dakota

Kent A. Jordan to the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware

Judge James E. Kinkeade to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas

Judge Robert G. Klausner to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California

Judge Robert B. Kugler to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Ronald B. Leighton to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington

Judge Jose L. Linares to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Judge Alia M. Ludlum to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas

William J. Martini to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

Judge Thomas W. Phillips to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee

Judge Linda R. Reade to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Iowa

William E. Smith to the U.S. District Court for the District of Rhode Island

Jeffrey White to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California

Judge Freda Wolfson to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey

REV_00256407

Executive Branch Confirmations:

Department of Justice and Other Agencies:

Ralph Boyd, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division

Eileen O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General, Tax Division

James Ziglar, Commissioner Immigration and Naturalization Service

Asa Hutchinson, Administrator, Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA)

Sarah Hart, Director, National Institute of Justice

Robert Mueller, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

Robert McCallum, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division

John Gillis, Director, Office of Victims of Crime

Richard Nedelkoff, Director, Bureau of Justice Assistance

Deborah Daniels, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Justice Programs

Jay Bybee, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel

Benigno Reyna, Director, U.S. Marshals' Service

Juan Carlos Benitez, Special Counsel for Immigration-Related Unfair Employment Practices

Sharee Freeman, Director, Community Relations Service

Jay Stevens, Associate Attorney General

James Rogan, Director of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office

Thomas Sansonetti, Assistant Attorney General, Environment and Natural Resources Division

John Walters, Director, Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP)

Mauricio Tamargo, Chair, Foreign Claims Settlement Commission

J. Robert Flores, Administrator, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention

Scott M. Burns, Deputy Director for State and Local Affairs, ONDCP

John M. Brown, III, Deputy Administrator, DEA

REV_00256408

Barry D. Crane, Deputy Director for Supply Reduction, ONDCP

Mary Ann Solberg, Deputy Director, ONDCP

Lawrence Greenfeld, Director, Bureau of Justice Statistics

United States Attorneys:

Michael Heavican, Nebraska

Paul McNulty, E.D. New York

Colm Connolly, Delaware

Roscoe Howard, Jr., District of Columbia

Michael Sullivan, Massachusetts

Joseph Van Bokkelen, N.D. Indiana

Stephen Pence, W.D. Kentucky

Gregory Van Tatenhove, E.D. Kentucky

Thomas Heffelfinger, Minnesota

Patrick Meehan, E.D. Pennsylvania

Mary Beth Buchanan, W.D. Pennsylvania

Peter Hall, Vermont

John Brownlee, W.D. Virginia

Tim Burgess, Alaska

Harry Mattice, E.D. Tennessee

Robert McCampbell, W.D. Oklahoma

Matthew Mead, Wyoming

Michael Mosman, Oregon

John Suthers, Colorado

Susan Brooks, S.D. Indiana

REV_00256409

Todd Graves, W.D. Missouri

Terrell Harris, W.D. Tennessee

David Iglesias, New Mexico

Charles Larson, Sr., N.D. Iowa

Steven Colloton, S.D. Iowa

Gregory Lockhart, S.D. Ohio

Anna Mills Wagoner, M.D. North Carolina

Margaret Chiara, W.D. Michigan

Robert Conrad, W.D. North Carolina

Thomas Gean, W.D. Arkansas

James Greenlee, N.D. Mississippi

Raymond Gruender, E.D. Missouri

Daniel Bogden, Nevada

Thomas DiBiagio, Maryland

Thomas Johnston, N.D. West Virginia

Donald Washington, W.D. Louisiana

Patrick Fitzgerald, N.D. Illinois

John McKay, W.D. Washington

Karl Warner, S.D. West Virginia

Leura Canary, M.D. Alabama

Paul Charlton, Arizona

Jeffrey Collins, E.D. Michigan

William Duffey, Jr., N.D. Georgia

Dunn Lampton, S.D. Mississippi

REV_00256410

Alice Howze Martin, N.D. Alabama

William Mercer, Montana

Thomas Moss, Idaho

Strom Thurmond, Jr., South Carolina

Maxwell Wood, M.D. Georgia

Drew Wrigley, North Dakota

David Dugas, M.D. Louisiana

Edward Kubo, Hawaii

James McDevitt, E.D. Washington

David O'Meilia, N.D. Oklahoma

Sheldon Sperling, E.D. Oklahoma

Johnny Sutton, W.D. Texas

Richard Thompson, S.D. Georgia

Harry Cummins, III, E.D. Arkansas

Christopher Christie, New Jersey

David York, S.D. Alabama

Michael Battle, W.D. New York

Thomas Colantuono, New Hampshire

James Vines, M.D. Tennessee

Paul Perez, M.D. Florida

Eric F. Melgren, Kansas

Michael Shelby, S.D. Texas

Jane Boyle, N.D. Texas

Matthew Orwig, E.D. Texas

REV_00256411

James Comey, S.D. New York

Thomas Marino, M.D. Pennsylvania

Debra W. Yang, C.D. California

Frank D. Whitney, E.D. North Carolina

Steven M. Biskupic, E.D. Wisconsin

Jan Paul Miller, C.D. Illinois

James McMahon, South Dakota

Roslynn R. Mauskopf, E.D. New York

Gregory Robert Miller, N.D. Florida

Kevin Vincent Ryan, N.D. California

Marcos D. Jimenez, S.D. Florida

Miriam F. Miquelon, S.D. Illinois

J.B. Van Hollen, W.D. Wisconsin

United States Marshals:

Dwight MacKay, Montana

James Dawson, S.D. West Virginia

William Jenkins, M.D. Louisiana

Ronald McCubbins, Jr., W.D. Kentucky

David Murtaugh, N.D. Indiana

Nehemiah Flowers, S.D. Mississippi

Arthur Hedden, E.D. Tennessee

David Jolley, W.D. Tennessee

Michael Roach, W.D. Oklahoma

Eric Robertson, W.D. Washington

REV_00256412

Brian Ennis, Nebraska

Chester Keely, N.D. Alabama

John Loyd, E.D. Oklahoma

David Viles, Maine

Johnny Hughes, Maryland

Randy Johnson, Alaska

Larry Wagster, N.D. Mississippi

William Smith Taylor, S.D. Alabama

Dennis Cluff Merrill, Oregon

John Schickel, E.D. Kentucky

William "Rut" Whittington, W.D. Louisiana

Stephen Fitzgerald, W.D. Wisconsin

J.C. Raffety, N.D. West Virginia

James Rose, Wyoming

James Kennedy, S.D. Indiana

Theophile Duroncelet, E.D. Louisiana

James Plousis, New Jersey

Charles Reavis, E.D. North Carolina

Timothy Welch, N.D. Oklahoma

Michael Regan, M.D. Pennsylvania

Jesse Seroyer, Jr., M.D. Alabama

Gregory Forest, W.D. North Carolina

John Edwards, Vermont

Kim Widup, N.D. Illinois

REV_00256413

Don Slazinik, S.D. Illinois

Patrick McDonald, Idaho

Warren Anderson, South Dakota

James Parmley, N.D. New York

John Quinn, N.D. Iowa

David Gonzales, Arizona

Edward Zahren, Colorado

Charles M. Sheer, W.D. Missouri

Gorden Eden, Jr., New Mexico

John Lee Moore, E.D. Texas

Ronald Henderson, E.D. Missouri

Randy Paul Ely, N.D. Texas

Gary Shovlin, E.D. Pennsylvania

Steven Monier, New Hampshire

Walter Bradley, Kansas

William P. Kruziki, E.D. Wisconsin

Steven Deatherage, C.D. Illinois

Thomas M. Fitzgerald, W.D. Pennsylvania

Pike, G. Wayne, W.D. Virginia

David W. Thomas, Delaware

Randall D. Anderson, Utah

Ray E. Carnahan, E.D. Arkansas

David S. Carpenter, North Dakota

Theresa A. Merrow, M.D. Georgia

REV_00256414

Ruben Monzon, S.D. Texas

James M. Wahlrab, S.D. Ohio

Anthony Dichio, Massachusetts

James T. Roberts, S.D. Georgia

James R. Dougan, W.D. Michigan

Michael L. Kline, E.D. Washington

George B. Walsh, District of Columbia

Peter A. Lawrence, W.D. New York

Charles E. Beach, S.D. Iowa

Richard Vaughn Mecum, N.D. Georgia

Burton Stallwood, Rhode Island

Denny Wade King, Tennessee

Antonio Candia Amador, C.D. California

Executive Branch Nominations Reported Favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate and on the Senate Executive Calendar Awaiting Final Action by the Senate:

Carol Chien-Hua Lam to be U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of California

Glenn Suddaby to be U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of New York

Johnny Mack Brown to be U.S. Marshal for the District of South Carolina

John Francis Clark to be U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of Virginia

Robert Maynard Grubbs to be U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of Michigan

Joseph Guccione to be U.S. Marshal for the Southern District of New York

Judicial and Executive Branch Nominations on which the Senate Judiciary Committee Voted Not to Report:

Charles Pickering, Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

REV_00256415

As you can see, the Senate Judiciary Committee has worked hard to consider your judicial and executive branch nominations over the past 15 months since the Committee was permitted to reorganize following the change in majority. During that time, the Senate Judiciary Committee held 26 hearings for more than 100 of your nominees for lifetime appointment to the federal bench as well as 16 hearings for 21 executive branch nominees.

It was unfortunate to see the Senate's historic record of bipartisan cooperation on confirmations distorted in the weeks leading up to November elections. It was disturbing to see the White House, Senate Republicans and Republican candidates distorting the record and ignoring the Senate Judiciary Committee's achievements and those of the Senate.

The Judiciary Committee held hearings on 103 judicial nominations in 15 months. We held votes on 100 judicial nominations in 15 months and favorably reported 98 of your judicial nominees. The Committee voted not to report only two judicial nominees.

We held hearings on every federal trial court nominee who had a completed file by October 2. Unfortunately several, 16, of your judicial nominees do not have the support of home-state Senators. Had the White House worked more closely with those Senators of both parties, those situations may well have been avoided. In addition, because of the White House's decision to change the procedures that had been used since President Eisenhower by Republican and Democratic Presidents alike to obtain peer reviews through the ABA, a number of your more recent nominees, 10, do not have ABA peer reviews. Had we received the ABA peer reviews earlier in the course of the last 16 months, the Committee could have held hearings and voted on another 12 to 15 judges.

The Senate proceeded to confirm 80 judges in the 15 months since the change in majority, including 14 judges to the circuit courts. That is more judges than the Republican majority had confirmed in its final 30 months of Senate control from 1999 through the summer of 2001, more than the Republican majority had confirmed in its first two full years of Senate control in 1995 and 1996 combined, and more than were confirmed in the first two years of your father's term in 1989 and 1990 combined.

At our Committee meeting on October 8, the Committee favorably reported 17 judicial nominations to the Senate. At that one meeting, we equaled the output of the Republican Senate majority for the entire 1996 session when only 17 District Court judges were confirmed all year. No judges were confirmed to the circuit courts during the entire 1996 session of Congress when the Republican majority was in control.

In the 15 months in which I have chaired the Judiciary Committee, we held hearings on 20 circuit court nominees, held Committee votes on 17 and favorably reported 15 circuit court nominees. In the six and one-half years that the Republican majority controlled the pace of President Clinton's nominees, only 46 circuit court nominees were confirmed. In the first 15 months of Democratic control, by contrast, 14 circuit court nominees were confirmed.

To compare how your nominees are being treated in contrast to how the Republican Senate majority treated President Clinton's nominees, let me note the following. Senator Hatch is fond of saying that he presided over six years of President Clinton's terms in office and that President Clinton appointed 377 federal judges (although 127 were confirmed under the chairmanship of Senator Biden). Had the Republicans acted as quickly on as many of President Clinton's noncontroversial nominees. Controversial nominations to lifetime appointments, once confirmed, cannot be undone, and the Senate's consideration should not be needlessly rushed. Arbitrary deadlines on the Senate would only serve to remove any pressure from the White House in moderating the President's choices."

REV_00256416

#####

[Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) today also released a letter sent Monday to President Bush, reporting on the Senate's work in acting on his judicial nominations and once again inviting a constructive dialogue with the President on further improvements in the process. The letter is pasted at the bottom of this page.]

#####

[Source: Senate Judiciary Committee:]

NOMINEES WHO THE PRESIDENT TOOK MORE THAN 180 DAYS TO NOMINATE

Nominee	Court	Days to Nomination
John R. Adams	ND Ohio	608
Thomas Ludington	ED Michigan	589
Robert G. Klausner	CD California	544
James Otero	CD California	544
Sandra Feurstein	ED New York	540
Richard Griffin	6th Circuit	522
James Dever	North Carolina	467
Timothy J. Corrigan	MD Florida	467
Morrison England	ED California	425
Timothy Savage	ED Pennsylvania	405
David Cercone	WD Pennsylvania	405
Richard Dorr	WD Missouri 405
Henry Autrey	ED Missouri	405

REV_00256399

nominees as the Judiciary Committee has over the last 15 months on your nominees, President Clinton would have been able to appoint 597 federal judges. During the time in which the Republican majority controlled the pace of confirmations in the Senate, had they maintained the pace that Democrats have maintained in reporting your judicial nominations to the Senate over the last 15 months, President Clinton's judicial appointments during the period of Republican control would have been 89 percent higher.

Rather than acknowledge the better pace that your nominees have been considered than those of the last President, you and members of your staff have chosen to treat this as a partisan political matter. You have refused to acknowledge what we have been able to achieve and, instead, focused only on your most controversial and divisive nominations.

In attempting to address responsibly the large number of vacancies created by Republican obstruction when they controlled the Senate, the Committee has endeavored to move as quickly as possible on the less controversial of the nominees, in order to provide much needed relief to the federal courts. The Committee's reporting 98 judicial nominations and the Senate's confirmation of 80 in 15 months demonstrates our willingness to act fairly, expeditiously and in a bipartisan way.

I inherited 110 vacancies when I became Chairman. Since then an additional 47 vacancies have arisen. The judiciary does not suffer from those 150 plus vacancies, which it would had we done nothing. With 80 confirmations so far in just 15 months, we have significantly reduced the vacancies in the 862-member federal judiciary to 77.

Unfortunately, despite the current number of judicial vacancies, you have not made nominations to 26 of the open seats on the federal courts (26 of 77). While we are moving at a fast pace to consider your judicial nominees, we obviously cannot confirm those who have not yet been nominated. Morever, a number of your more recent nominees, including all eight received in September and October, do not have ABA peer reviews and will not be eligible to be considered at all this year.

We wish you had chosen to work with us more closely on the important work of filling our federal courts with judicial nominees who will follow precedent, be fair and impartial to all people, and protect the rights of all Americans. If you would work with us and nominate less divisive, less controversial nominees, that would contribute greatly to the process and our mutual success. Unfortunately, you have chosen to politicize these appointments and to seek to create a partisan campaign issue.

Your unwillingness to work with the Majority Leader in selection nominees for bipartisan boards and commissions has greatly complicated the confirmation process, as well. Likewise, Republican Senators' unwillingness to proceed on your nominees has been a great difficulty and threatens progress on the judicial nominees reported by the Judiciary Committee and on the Senate Executive Calendar.

At the beginning of my term as Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee I reached out to try to work with your Administration. I renewed my efforts in January and the early parts of this year. I am doing so, again. Meaningful consultation, ideological balance and a depoliticizing of the judicial nomination process are all matters I remain willing to discuss. We have accomplished a good deal already. We could accomplish much more working more closely together.

REV_00256417

Sincerely,

_____
PATRICK LEAHY
Chairman

REV_00256418

Jeffrey White	ND California	391
William Smith	Rhode Island	384
Alia Ludlum	WD Texas	377
Legrome Davis	ED Pennsylvania	369
Cynthia Rufe	ED Pennsylvania	369
Arthur Schwab	WD Pennsylvania	369
Kenneth Marra	SD Florida	369
John Walter	CD California	368
William Griesbach	ED Wisconsin	368
Joy Conti	WD Pennsylvania	368
Percy Anderson	CD California	368
Jose Martinez	SD Florida	368
Frederick Rohlfing	Hawaii	368
Ronald Leighton	WD Washington	367
Henry Hudson	ED Virginia	367
Andrew Hanen	SD Texas	367
David Godbey	ND Texas	367
Cormac Carney	CD California	357
Leonard Davis	ED Texas	347
Samuel Mays	WD Tennessee	345
Ronald Clark	ED Texas	329
John E. Jones	MD Pennsylvania	328
Christopher Conner	MD Pennsylvania	316

REV_00256400

Thomas Varlan	ED Tennessee	314
Jose Linares	New Jersey	304
Richard Holwell	SD New York	294
Susan Bieke Neilson	6th Circuit	292
Judge D. Brooks Smith	3rd Circuit	233
Henry Saad	6th Circuit	292
Maurice Hicks	WD Louisiana	286
Amy St. Eve	ND Illinois	273
Judge Julia Smith Gibbons	6th Circuit	262
William H. Steele	11th Circuit	262
Phillip Martinez	WD Texas	262
Timothy Stanceu	ITC	261
Ralph Erickson	North Dakota	255
Ashley Royal	MD Georgia	251
Stanley Chesler	New Jersey	236
Robert Blackburn	Colorado	233
David Bury	Arizona	233
Cindy Jorgenson	Arizona	233
Gregory Frost	SD Ohio	212
Clay Land	ND Georgia	212
Randy Crane	SD Texas	212
Freda Wolfson	New Jersey	209
William Martini	New Jersey	207

REV_00256401

James Mahan	Nevada	201
Frederick Martone	Arizona	201
Julie Robinson	Kansas	201
Christina Armijo	New Mexico	194
Danny Reeves	ED Kentucky	194
Karon Bowdre	ND Alabama	194
Karen Caldwell	ED Kentucky	194
Clair Egan	ND Oklahoma	194
Kurt Englehardt	ED Louisiana	194
Stephen Friot	WD Oklahoma	194
Callie Granade	SD Alabama	194
Joe Heaton	WD Oklahoma	194
Larry Hicks	Nevada	194
William Johnson	New Mexico	194
Michael Baylson	ED Pennsylvania	190
Rosemary Collyer	D. DC	182
David Bunning	ED Kentucky	182

VACANCIES FOR WHICH THE PRESIDENT HAS FAILED TO NOMINATE (Vacancies More Than 180 Days Old)

Vacancy Created By	Court	Days Vacant as of October 30, 2002
Judge Charles Wiggins	9th Circuit	2128 days
Judge Sam Ervin	4th Circuit	1168 days
Judge Morton Greenberg	3rd Circuit	853 days

REV_00256402

Judge Patrick Duggan	E.D. Mich.	792 days
Judge Francis Murnaghan	4th Circuit	790 days
Judge Laurence Silberman	D.C. Circuit	728 days
Judge Spencer Letts	C.D. Cal.	680 days
Judge Richard Vollmer	S.D. Ala.	668 days
Judge Robert Jones	D. Ore.	547 days
Judge Stephen Williams	D.C. Circuit	426 days
Judge James C. Fox	E.D. NC	272 days
Judge William Standish	W.D. Pa.	243 days
Judge Carol Los Mansmann	3rd Circuit	235 day
Judge Shelby Highsmith	S.D. Fla.	229 days

#####

October 28, 2002

The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

At times it has seemed to me that you may not be aware of all of your judicial and executive branch nominees on which the Democratic majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate have deferred to you and consented to the nomination. Accordingly, I list for you below the nominees the Judiciary Committee has voted on since I became Chairman.

Judicial Nominations Reported and Confirmed Between July 20, 2001 and October 2, 2002:

Judge Roger Gregory, 4th Circuit

Judge Richard Cebull, D. Montana

Judge Sam Haddon, D. Montana

REV_00256403

Judge William Riley, 8th Circuit

Judge Sharon Prost, Federal Circuit

Judge Reggie Walton, D. District of Columbia

Judge Barrington Parker, Jr., 2d Circuit

Judge Michael Mills, N.D. Mississippi

Judge James Payne, N.D./ E.D./ W.D. Oklahoma

Judge Karen Caldwell, E.D. Kentucky

Judge Laurie Smith Camp, D. Nebraska

Judge Claire Eagan, N.D. Oklahoma

Judge Larry Hicks, D. Nevada

Judge Christina Armijo, D. New Mexico

Judge Karon Bowdre, D. Alabama

Judge Stephen Friot, W.D. Oklahoma

Judge Terry Wooten, D. South Carolina

Judge Edith Brown Clement, 5th Circuit

Judge Harris Hartz, 10th Circuit

Judge Joe Heaton, D. Oklahoma

Judge Danny Reeves, E.D. Kentucky

Judge John Bates, D. District of Columbia

Judge Kurt Engelhardt, E.D. Louisiana

Judge Julie Robinson, D. Kansas

Judge William Johnson, D. New Mexico

Judge Clay Land, D. Georgia

Judge Frederick Martone, D. Arizona

REV_00256404

Judge C. Ashley Royal, M.D. Georgia

Judge Marcia Krieger, D. Colorado

Judge James Mahan, D. Nevada

Judge Callie Granade, S.D. Alabama

Judge Philip Martinez, W.D. Texas

Judge Michael Melloy, 8th Circuit

Judge Jay Zainey, E.D. Louisiana

Judge David Bunning, E.D. Kentucky

Judge James Gritzner, S.D. Iowa

Judge Richard Leon, D. District of Columbia

Judge Robert Blackburn, D. Colorado

Judge Cindy Jorgenson, D. Arizona

Judge Ralph Beistline, D. Alaska

Judge David C. Bury, D. Arizona

Judge Randy Crane, S.D. Texas

Judge Terrence O'Brien, 10th Circuit

Judge Lance M. Africk, E.D. Louisiana

Judge Legrome Davis, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Jeffrey Howard, 1st Circuit

Judge Percy Anderson, C.D. California

Judge William Griesbach, E.D. Wisconsin

Judge Joan Lancaster, D.C. Minnesota

Judge John Walter, C.D. California

Judge Cynthia Rufe, E.D. Pennsylvania

REV_00256405

Judge Michael Baylson, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Leonard Davis, E.D. Texas

Judge Andrew Hanen, S.D. Texas

Judge Samuel H. Mays, W.D. Tennessee

Judge Thomas Rose, S.D. Ohio

Judge Paul Cassell, D. Utah

Judge Lavenski R. Smith, 8th Circuit

Judge Richard R. Clifton, 9th Circuit

Judge Christopher C. Conner, M.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Julia Smith Gibbons, 6th Circuit

Judge Joy Flowers Conti, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge John E. Jones III, M.D. Pennsylvania

Judge D. Brooks Smith, 3rd Circuit

Judge Henry Autrey, E.D. Missouri

Judge Richard E. Dorr, W.D. Missouri

Judge David Godbey, N.D. Texas

Judge Henry Hudson, E.D. Virginia

Judge Timothy Savage, E.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Amy J. St. Eve, N.D. Illinois

Judge David Cercone, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Morrison Cohen England, E.D. California

Judge Terrence McVerry, W.D. Pennsylvania

Judge Kenneth Marra, S.D. Florida

Judge Timothy Corrigan, M.D. Florida

REV_00256406

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years
Terms: daschle and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Associated Press May 10, 2001, Thursday, BC cycle

The Associated Press

The materials in the AP file were compiled by The Associated Press. These materials may not be republished without the express written consent of The Associated Press.

May 10, 2001, Thursday, BC cycle

SECTION: Washington Dateline

LENGTH: 756 words

HEADLINE: Senate Democrats seem ready to allow most of Bush's first judges

BYLINE: By JESSE J. HOLLAND, Associated Press Writer

DATELINE: WASHINGTON

BODY:
President Bush's first slate of judicial nominees appears headed for confirmation in the divided Senate following compromises with Democrats that will delay the battle over the direction of the federal judiciary until later.

Calling for "civility and dignity," Bush on Wednesday nominated 11 lawyers, including some prominent conservatives, who were hand-picked for easy confirmation to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals - the courts of last resort for most lawsuits in the country.

The nominees "will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity," Bush said during an announcement ceremony in the East Room of the White House.

Democrats appeared content with the choices after Bush withheld the planned nominations of at least four conservatives to avoid Democratic objections, and added Roger Gregory and Barrington Parker - two blacks who had been tapped by former President Clinton. "We are pleased that the White House has chosen to work with us on the first group of nominations," said Senate Minority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. He noted that some Democrats already had turned in positive reviews of some of the nominees.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the Judiciary Committee's top Democrat, even attended the White House announcement. "Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today," he said.

Bush chose seven lawyers from states with Republican senators and two judges from New York and Louisiana, both with Democratic senators. He also selected a respected federal judge and former Judiciary Committee counsel from South Carolina, which is represented by Republican Strom Thurmond and Democrat Ernest "Fritz" Hollings.

But even with the administration's vetting, at least one nominee, U.S. District Judge Terrence Boyle of North Carolina, faces a difficult confirmation process because of past bitterness over senators' power to block judicial nominees.

REV_00256419

Boyle, first nominated by Bush's father, is caught in a battle between Republican Sen. Jesse Helms and Democratic Sen. John Edwards, both of North Carolina. Democrats blocked the former Helms aide in 1991, and Helms retaliated by blocking Clinton's nominees from North Carolina.

Edwards has threatened to block Boyle again.

"Until we find some constructive process that allows for balance, then I would not support any nominee, including Judge Boyle," he said.

The junior senator has yet to turn in his required approval form and has "reserved judgment" on Boyle, spokesman Mike Briggs said.

Edwards also sent a letter to Bush saying the renomination of North Carolina Court of Appeals Judge James A. Wynn could help solve the problem. Wynn was denied a confirmation hearing by Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee for two years.

Other problems simmer just beneath the surface.

Democrats say there won't be any quick confirmation votes since Bush ended the American Bar Association's role in the White House vetting process.

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., a Judiciary Committee member, said the nominees won't be voted on until the ABA gives Democrats a report. "The Democrats will not be railroaded into rubber-stamping a group of judges," he said.

Democrats also recall Clinton's judges who were blocked by Republicans. Tensions over the judicial confirmation process has been high since Democrats scuttled the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork in 1987. Republicans, in turn, blocked many Clinton nominees to lower court seats.

"We will make sure it's a balanced judiciary," Leahy said. "Just as the Republicans felt they should keep a balanced judiciary when there's a Democratic president, we as Democrats feel there should be a balanced judiciary when there is a Republican president."

Bush said he wants "good faith" from the Senate. He cited the "backlogs, frustration and delay of justice" caused by vacancies and urged "a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee."

Interest groups, meanwhile, are mounting opposition against some of the nominees.

Americans United for Separation of Church and State announced its opposition to University of Utah professor Michael McConnell, recognized as especially conservative on abortion rights and church-state separation. He was tapped for the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, based in Denver.

"McConnell is the religious right's dream court nominee," said the Rev. Barry W. Lynn, executive director of Americans United. "He's a conservative Christian who's willing to use the force of government to impose his viewpoint."

GRAPHIC: AP Photos WH108,110

LOAD-DATE: May 11, 2001

REV_00256420

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, Most Recent Two Years
Terms: daschle and bush and date(is 5-10-2001) and judge (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:25 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Source: News & Business > News > Major Newspapers ⓘ
Terms: leahy and encouraged and date(geq (5/10/2001) and leq (5/10/2001)) (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Washington Post, May 10, 2001

Copyright 2001 The Washington Post

The Washington Post
washingtonpost.com

The Washington Post

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: A SECTION; Pg. A02

LENGTH: 860 words

HEADLINE: 11 Judicial Nominees Named; Bush Urges Senate to Rise Above Partisan 'Bitterness'

BYLINE: Amy Goldstein and Helen Dewar, Washington Post Staff Writers

BODY:

President Bush announced 11 nominees to a half-dozen federal appeals courts yesterday, imploring the Senate to "rise above the bitterness" that has thwarted the confirmation of judges in the recent past. Senate Democrats indicated that they will attempt to block at least one nomination but said that they have no wholesale plans to hinder consideration of the White House's candidates.

In his first round of choices for the federal judiciary, Bush adhered to his campaign commitment to fill court vacancies predominantly with conservative legal thinkers. But the administration sidestepped sharper ideological controversy by withholding three anticipated nominees opposed by Democrats and by selecting candidates who largely come from states without Democratic senators. At a time when Democrats wield considerable leverage because they hold half the seats in the Senate and on the Senate Judiciary Committee, the only nominee they immediately vowed to oppose is Terrence W. Boyle, a U.S. district judge from North Carolina whom Bush nominated to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, whose jurisdiction stretches from Maryland to the Carolinas. A former aide to Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) who Bush's father had tried to put on the appeals court, Boyle is opposed by Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.). Edwards wrote to the White House this week, urging Bush to consider a black judge, nominated to the appeals court by President Bill Clinton, for whom Helms had refused to allow a confirmation hearing.

Edwards's opposition comes as the Judiciary Committee has been sparring over how much influence to grant individual Democratic senators who balk at nominees from their own states. Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) has said that he will consider senators' views but will not be bound by them.

In a show of solidarity, the nine Democrats on the panel wrote Hatch a letter late last week, essentially saying that they will stand in the way of any nominee who lacks the support of his or her senators.

REV_00256422

Yesterday, party leaders modulated their tone. "I'm pleased that the White House has chosen to work with us on the first group of nominations," said Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.). Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), the Judiciary Committee's ranking Democrat and the only Senate Democrat who attended the White House ceremony at which Bush announced his choices, said: "Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today."

Daschle and other Democrats said, however, that they believe they have already influenced Bush's selections and that they expect to be consulted by the White House over future nominations. They left open the possibility that they may ultimately oppose more of the nominees who were announced yesterday, once their records are better known.

Bush used part of the ceremony in the East Room to warn against the political antagonisms that prevented many of Clinton's nominees from winning confirmation over the past six years. "We have seen political battles played out in committee hearings -- battles that have little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee," the president said. "I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee."

During the six-minute afternoon ceremony, all 11 nominees stood on risers next to Bush's lectern. The president extolled them but did not introduce them by name.

In exhorting the Senate to act swiftly, White House officials noted that eight of yesterday's appellate court nominations would fill vacancies that have been classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U.S Courts because of the number of vacant seats on certain circuits and the volume of cases there.

Bush has an uncommon opportunity to put his imprint on the federal judiciary because of a large number of vacancies. On the U.S. circuit courts of appeals -- the regional appellate courts that are the final arbiter over most federal laws -- 17 percent of the 179 seats are vacant. At the trial-level district courts, 10 percent of the 665 seats are vacant.

During the campaign, Bush drew the support of many conservatives who hoped that he would give the judiciary a more conservative tilt. Yesterday, a few of the president's choices already began to draw the ire of liberal organizations. For example, ADA Watch protested the nomination of Jeffrey S. Sutton to the Ohio-based 6th Circuit, contending that he has opposed the Americans With Disabilities Act and other civil rights laws.

For the Washington area, Bush nominated prominent, conservative Washington attorneys Miguel A. Estrada and John G. Roberts to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, considered the nation's second-highest court after the U.S. Supreme Court. In addition to Boyle, the White House selected for the 4th Circuit Dennis W. Shedd, a district judge from South Carolina, and Roger L. Gregory, who became the first black judge on the relatively conservative circuit when Clinton gave him a one-year appointment while the Senate was in recess late last year.

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

Source: News & Business > News > Major Newspapers ⓘ
Terms: leahy and encouraged and date(geq (5/10/2001) and leq (5/10/2001)) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:33 PM EST

REV_00256423

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Source: News & Business > News > Major Newspapers ⓘ
Terms: leahy and encouraged and date(geq (5/10/2001) and leq (5/10/2001)) (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

The Plain Dealer May 10, 2001 Thursday, Final / All

Copyright 2001 Plain Dealer Publishing Co.
The Plain Dealer

May 10, 2001 Thursday, Final / All

SECTION: NATIONAL; Pg. 19A

LENGTH: 560 words

HEADLINE: Bush urges Senate to confirm court nominees quickly

BYLINE: TOM DIEMER, PLAIN DEALER BUREAU

BODY:
WASHINGTON - President Bush yesterday called on senators to "rise above the bitterness of the past" and move quickly to confirm his first 11 nominees to the U.S. Court of Appeals, the second highest court in the land.

Bush presented his choices - a conservative but diverse cast that includes two Ohioans - amid signs that Senate Democrats would not stall the judicial confirmations.

"Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, the ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, who was among the White House guests. "I will continue to work with the president." Ohio Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook of Akron, and Columbus lawyer Jeffrey Sutton are Bush's nominees for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, which covers Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Michigan.

They stood to Bush's left with the other nominees, who included three women, a Latino, and two African Americans who were originally named to the bench by President Clinton. In brief remarks aimed at the Senate, the president urged a halt to "political battles played out in committee hearings."

The current dispute centers on whether a single senator from a nominee's home state could hold up a White House appointment. Ohio's senators are both Republicans, but 14 states have one senator from each party.

The argument reached a boiling point last week when Democrats, insisting on their right to block objectionable nominations, walked out of a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing and threatened to stand in the way of all federal court confirmations.

But consultation resumed behind the scenes and tempers cooled. Yesterday, Leahy indicated the nominees would be considered on a case by case basis.

Sen. Mike DeWine, an Ohio Republican who sits on the Judiciary Committee, said he had "the feeling it is going to get worked out, and we are going to move forward."

In 1987, Democrats refused to confirm Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork, largely because of his conservative ideology. Last year, Republicans rejected the federal court nomination of an African-American, Ronnie White of Missouri, and stalled other appointments.

REV_00256425

"There are some bad feelings hung over from last year," said Sen. George Voinovich, an Ohio Republican who attended the White House event. "I am prayerful they will give each of these nominees their day in court."

Cook, who is in her second term on the Ohio high court, said she could understand how "others label me a conservative."

"My record speaks for itself," she said. "I don't apply any sort of litmus test. I must apply the law."

Sutton, the former Ohio Solicitor General, has argued nine cases before the U.S. Supreme Court. He has defended school vouchers and argued successfully that states cannot be sued by aggrieved workers under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Both Ohio nominees are members of the Federalist Society, an organization of conservative lawyers who believe in strict construction of the Constitution.

"If nominees are picked because of their competence and independence, I suspect they get confirmed," Leahy said. "If they're picked because of their ideology and the direction they want to bring the court, they're not going to be confirmed."

Plain Dealer reporter Elizabeth Auster contributed to this report.

e-mail: tdiemer@plaind.com

Phone: 202-638-1366

LOAD-DATE: October 24, 2001

Source: News & Business > News > Major Newspapers ⓘ
Terms: leahy and encouraged and date(geq (5/10/2001) and leq (5/10/2001)) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Tuesday, November 5, 2002 - 6:37 PM EST

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2002 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

The Judicial Vacancy Crisis: Quantity and Quality

By
Thomas L. Jipping, J.D.

Submitted to the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on the Constitution
Following the Hearing
"A Judiciary Diminished is Justice Denied:
the Constitution, the Senate, and the Vacancy Crisis in the Federal Judiciary"

Submitted on Behalf of:

60 Plus Association
American Center for Law & Justice
American Conservative Union
American Family Association
Centre for New Black Leadership
Christian Coalition of America
Citizens for Community Values
Citizens United Foundation
Concerned Women for America
Eagle Forum
Family Research Council
Gun Owners of America
Home School Legal Defense Association
Landmark Legal Foundation
Law Enforcement Alliance for America
Life Issues Institute
National Legal Foundation
Southeastern Legal Foundation
U.S. Business & Industry Council

October 18, 2002

REV_00256427

"interpretation"[32] which is "the process of...ascertaining the meaning of a...written document."[33] While the legislative task involves political "will,"[34] the judicial task involves "judgment."[35] The law's meaning comes from those who make, not those who interpret, it.

This "judicial restraint," that is, judges restrained by law made by others, is part of the system of separated government powers that is necessary to preserve liberty itself. Alexander Hamilton stressed that "'there is no liberty if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers.'"[36] The Supreme Court has recognized that the separation of government powers was "adopted by the Framers to ensure the protection of 'our fundamental liberties.'"[37]

Like the U.S. Constitution, every state constitution separates government power into legislative, executive and judicial branches. This separation alone implies that each branch may not exercise the powers given to the others. At least 35 states,[38] however, explicitly state, in the words of the Arizona Constitution, that each branch "shall be separate and distinct, and no one [branch] shall exercise the powers properly belonging to either of the others."[39] Some states even identify this separation of powers, including the judicial branch's inability to exercise lawmaking power, as necessary "to the end that it may be a government of laws and not of men."[40]

The debate over judicial appointments is thus a debate over "the proper limits of judicial power."[41] That is, should the separation of powers be maintained and judges remain limited to interpreting the law or should the separation of powers be scrapped and judges have the power to make law?

A. The Obstruction Campaign's Goals

Leftist political forces oppose a judiciary that allows the people to make law because the people reject the leftist political agenda. The far-left needs a liberal activist judiciary to achieve its political goals. The far-left opposes President Bush's judicial nominees because he has pledged to appoint judges who will not legislate from the bench.[42]

1. Limiting judicial appointments

This obstruction campaign's first goal is to limit Bush appointments to all federal courts in general, and to certain courts in particular. This goal, in turn, has two related motives, preventing appointment of judges not likely to rule "favorably" and, therefore, to maximize the influence of liberal activist judges already on the bench.

REV_00256436

The far-left wants to maintain, for example, the current 51 percent majority of full-time judges appointed by Democrat presidents.[43] It also wants to maintain the composition of individual courts. Of the 24 full-time judges on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, for example, 17 (71 percent) were appointed by Democrat presidents, 14 of them (58 percent) by President Clinton alone. President Bush has made nominations to fill two of the four current vacancies but neither has received a Judiciary Committee hearing.

Similarly, seven of the 16 full-time positions on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit are vacant. Of the nine full-time judges, six (67 percent) were appointed by Democrat presidents, five (56 percent) by President Clinton. President Bush has made nominations to fill all seven of the current vacancies but only one has received a Judiciary Committee hearing. Of these seven nominations, two have been pending for 527 days, three for 344 days, and one for 303 days.[44]

2. Influencing judicial decisions

As Todd Gaziano described in his Subcommittee testimony, prolonged numerous vacancies can permit certain "emergency rules to operate."[45] These rules can alter the normal composition of the three-judge appeals court panels to include two senior or visiting judges rather than two full-time judges.[46] This, in turn, can influence the results and reasoning in judicial decisions from what they would have been otherwise. The Ninth Circuit decision declaring the Pledge of Allegiance unconstitutional because it contains the words "under God"[47] was one of those cases.

Mr. Gaziano also described how multiple, long-standing vacancies make "judicial manipulation of the docket" a "disturbing possibility."[48] He gave one prominent example, a case in which the Sixth Circuit upheld the University of Michigan's racial preference admissions policy.[49] The district court had struck down the policy.[50] On May 14, 2001, those defending the policy asked that the entire en banc Sixth Circuit, rather than a three-judge panel, consider the appeal. At the time of this request, the Court had 11 full-time judges, six Democrats and five Republicans. Chief Judge Boyce Martin, a Carter appointee, did not circulate the en banc request until October 15, after two Republican appointees had retired. The now-reduced Court took the case and voted 5-4 to uphold the racial preference policy on May 14, 2002. The chief judge wrote the opinion, with all five judges in the majority Democrat appointees and three of the four dissenters Republican appointees.

At that time, seven Bush nominees were pending in the Senate Judiciary Committee, two of them for more than a year and six for more than six months. This was certainly enough time for confirmation, since the Committee has confirmed at least seven appeals court nominees within six months of their nomination.[51] And it is likely that the votes of any who had been confirmed would have changed the outcome of this case, an outcome that was in direct contrast to the way other circuits had decided the same issue.[52]

REV_00256437

B. The Obstruction Campaign's Tactics

1. Changing the Senate's role

The far-left will employ whatever tools will help achieve its political goals. If judges are more receptive than legislatures, leftists abandon the statehouse for the courthouse, even if doing so upsets the separation of powers. Similarly, when the people elect a president pledged to nominating restrained judges, the far-left tries to empower the Senate to play a more aggressive role, even if doing so upsets the constitutional division of roles in the judicial selection process.

The blueprint for this approach was created in 1985 with publication of Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe's book God Save This Honorable Court. The Senate used his battle plan to defeat the 1987 Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork. That episode in confirmation politics is repeating itself, with Professor Tribe again advising Senate Democrats, testifying at a June 2001 hearing that ideology should drive confirmations.[53]

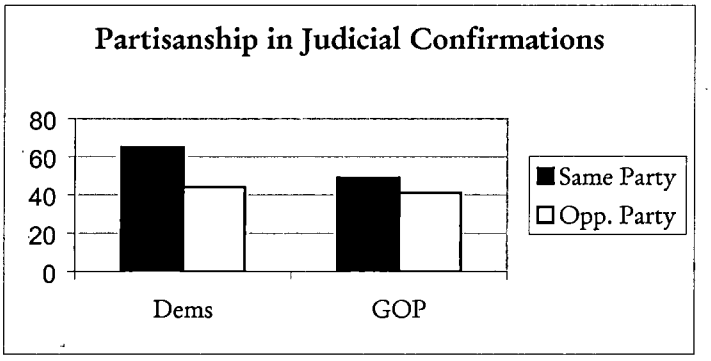
As Professor John Eastman outlined in his Subcommittee testimony, America's founders gave the exclusive power to nominate and the primary power to appoint federal judges to the president.[54] This is clear, first and foremost, from the Constitution's text itself. The sole mention of judicial selection is found in Article II about the executive branch. Alexander Hamilton wrote the obvious, that "in the business of appointments the execurtive will be the principal agent."[55]

This, then, makes Mr. Neas's claim that "the Senate has a co-equal role with the President in appointing federal judges"[56] absolutely incomprehensible. One can readily see the political or tactical value for him of fundamentally altering the Constitution's assignment of judicial selection responsibilities, but tactical value alone does not make it so.

As to the Senate's role of checking the president's ultimate appointment, Hamilton wrote that it would have "a powerful, though, in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters."[57] In contrast, the far-left wants the Senate to have a very loud operation directed toward co-opting the president's appointment power altogether.

2. Judiciary Committee defeating nominees

REV_00256438



Other historical standards relate to the tactics used to defeat Bush nominees. Appeals court nominee Priscilla Owen, for example, was the first female nominee ever voted down in the Judiciary Committee and the first who had received a unanimous "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association. She was the second Bush nominee voted down by the Judiciary Committee, only the sixth in nearly 60 years.[58]

Republicans never defeated a Clinton nominee in the Judiciary Committee when they ran the Senate during 1995-2000. Even Ronnie White, the only Clinton nominee defeated by the full Senate, was approved by the committee and sent to the Senate for a final vote.

3. Partisanship

The Judiciary Committee has voted on three nominees to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, one each from Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, the three states in the jurisdiction. The committee, by the same party-line vote, defeated the two nominees from states with two Republican senators, Priscilla Owen from Texas and Charles Pickering from Mississippi, and approved the nominee from a state with two Democrat senators, Edith Clement from Louisiana.[59] Several other appeals court nominees who remain stuck in the Judiciary Committee - Deborah Cook and Jeffrey Sutton of Ohio, Michael McConnell of Utah, and Timothy Tymkovich of Colorado - are from states with two Republican senators. Others, including Dennis Shedd of South Carolina, have the bi-partisan support of their home-state senators.

When Democrats control the Senate, they confirm an average of 65 nominees per year for a Democrat president (1993-94) and 44 nominees per year for a Republican president (1987-92, 2001-02), for a partisan differential of 21. When Republicans control the Senate, they confirm an average of 49 nominees per year for a Republican president (1981-86) and 41 nominees per year for a Democrat president (1995-2000), for a partisan differential of eight.

REV_00256439

III. Conclusion

By most objective measures, certainly by those Democrats have used in the past, there is a judicial vacancy crisis today. The cause of that crisis, however, is more important. The campaign to obstruct President Bush's judicial appointments is perpetuating the vacancy crisis to keep to a minimum appointment of restrained judges who will let the people make the law. Restrained judges, however, who know their proper place in our system of separated government power, are necessary for the people to retain the power to govern ourselves and, therefore, to preserve our liberty.

NOTES

[1] Senior Fellow in Legal Studies, Concerned Women for America. M.A. in political science, State University of New York (SUNY) at Buffalo (1989); J.D. cum laude, SUNY-Buffalo (1987); B.A. with honors, Calvin College (1983). Law Clerk to Judge William D. Hutchinson, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (1988-89).

[2] Organizations endorsing this report include the 60 Plus Association, American Center for Law & Justice, American Conservative Union, American Family Association, Centre for New Black Leadership, Christian Coalition of America, Citizens for Community Values, Citizens United Foundation, Concerned Women for America, Eagle Forum, Family Research Council, Gun Owners of America, Homes School Legal Defense Association, Landmark Legal Foundation, Law Enforcement Alliance of America, Life Issues Institute, National Legal Foundation, Southeastern Legal Foundation, U.S. Business & Industry Council.

[3] See 28 U.S.C. section 371 (1994).

[4] See http://www.uscourts.gov/vacancies/judgevacancy.htm.

[5] In April 2000, the figure was 67.5 percent; in September 1999, it was 77.9 percent; in March 1999, it was 83.3 percent; in October 1998, it was 87.1 percent; in April 1998, it was 84.6 percent; and in April 1997, it was 81 percent. See Jipping, "From Least Dangerous Branch to Most Profound Legacy: The High Stakes in Judicial Selection," 4 Texas Review of Law & Politics 365,419 (2000).

[6] http://www.supremecourtus.gov/publicinfo/year-end/2001year-endreport.html.

[7] This includes 665 positions on the U.S. District Court, 179 on the U.S. Court of Appeals, nine on the U.S. Court of International Trade, and nine on the U.S. Supreme Court.

[8] U.S. Constitution, Article III, Section 1 ("The Judges ... shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour"). This clause does not impose an additional condition for service, or an additional ground for removal, but only that judicial tenure, unlike legislative or executive, is not limited to a term of years. See Fenton, "The Scope of the Impeachment Power," 65 Northwestern University Law Review 719,724-25 (1970); Ferrick, "Impeaching Federal Judges: A Study of the Constitutional Provisions," 39 Fordham Law Review 1,51 (1970) ("'Good Behaviour' was an expression of 'tenure,' used to secure the independence of the judiciary.").

[9] The Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts currently lists 15 future vacancies, all on the U.S. District Court, six of them at least six months in the future. See http://www.uscourts.gov/vacancies/futurevacancy.htm.

[10] T. Gaziano, "Testimony of Todd F. Gaziano" House Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution (October 10, 2002), at 5 (hereinafter Gaziano Testimony). In 1994, the Clinton administration argued that 63 vacancies constituted "virtual full employment." See Hatch, "Judicial Nominees: The Senate's Steady Progress," The Washington Post, January 11, 1998, at C9; Congressional Record, January 28, 1998, at S74 (statement of Sen. Hatch); Congressional Record, May 21, 1998, at S5316 (statement of Sen. Hatch) ("[T]he Clinton administration is on record as having stated that 63 vacancies is virtual full employment for the federal judiciary."). Vacancies under President Bush have averaged 51 percent above even this higher benchmark.

REV_00256440

[11] http://www.uscourts.gov/cj96.htm.

[12] http://www.uscourts.gov/ttb/jan98ttb/january.htm.

[13] Current Judiciary Committee Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) frequently cited Chief Justice Rehnquist's statements during Judiciary Committee meetings and in speeches before the full Senate. See, e.g., Congressional Record, April 14, 1999, at S3670; Congressional Record, October 22, 1997, at S10924; Judiciary Committee Statement, September 30, 1997; Congressional Record, September 11, 1997, at S9163; Congressional Record, July 10, 1997, at S7206; Congressional Record, June 26, 1997, at S6492. Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Massachusetts), a longtime Judiciary Committee member, has done the same. See Congressional Record, March 19, 1997, at S2515). Former Attorney General Janet Reno referred to the Chief Justice's warnings in her August 5, 1997, speech to the American Bar Association. Sen. Charles Schumer (D-New York), a Judiciary Committee member, wrote a letter to the editor of the Albany Times Union on January 18, 1998, in which he stated that the Chief Justice "is correct in saying that partisan concerns are leading to a plethora of judicial vacancies."

[14] http://www.janda.org/politxts/State%20of%20Union%20Addresses/1993-2000%20Clinton/Clinton.98.html. President Clinton cited the Chief Justice's warning in his August 12, 1999, speech to the American Bar Association, when there were only 63 vacancies. He often cited the Chief Justice during his weekly radio addresses. See Congressional Record, October 22, 1997, at S10924.

[15] See supra note 6.

[16] http://leahy.senate.gov/press/199801/980101.html.

[17] Id.

[18] Congressional Record, October 21, 1998.

[19] R. Neas, "Written Testimony of Ralph G. Neas," House Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution (October 10, 2002), at 1 (hereinafter Neas Testimony).

[20] See Rutkus, "Judicial Nominations by President Clinton During the 103rd-106th Congresses," CRS Report for Congress (February 21, 2001).

[21] CRS does not count judicial nominations made within four months of adjournment of a two-year Congress because of the time required for FBI background checks, Judiciary Committee evaluation, hearings, and the like. See Garcia, "Failed Nominations on Which No Hearings Were Held, 1987-1996," Congressional Research Service Memorandum (September 5, 1997), at 1. Since President Bush no longer provides the American Bar Association with names of prospective nominees prior to nomination, however, the ABA conducts its evaluations after nomination, lengthening this time.

[22] Neas Testimony, at 1.

[23] Rutkus, supra note 20, at summary page.

[24] Neas Testimony, at 2.

[25] U.S. Constitution, Article II, Section 2.

[26] Speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, April 19, 1996.

[27] Meese, "Foreword," in Judicial Selection: Merit, Ideology, and Politics (National Legal Center for the Public Interest, 1990), at x. This appeared to be true for some appointees of President Harry Truman. Judge David Bazelon served on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit from 1949 to 1993. Judge David Edelstein served on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York from 1951 to 2000. He was in active service for 43 of those 49 years. And Judge Seybourn Lynn served on the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Alabama from 1945 to 2000, nearly half of those 55 years as a senior judge.

[28] U.S. Constitution, Article III, Section 1.

[29] Federal judges are subject to the same standard for impeachment as all other "civil Officers of the United States," namely, "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." U.S. Constitution, Article II, Section 4.

[30] Hamilton, The Federalist No.78, available at http://memory.loc.gov/const/fed/fed_78.html.

[31] Hamilton, The Federalist No.73, available at http://memory.loc.gov/const/fed/fed_73.html.

REV_00256441

[32] Hamilton, supra note 30.
[33] Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979), at 734.
[34] Hamilton, supra note 30.
[35] Id.
[36] Id., quoting Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws (Nugent trans., Rothman 1991), at 152.
[37] Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452,458 (1991), quoting Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234,242 (1985).
[38] See, e.g., Alabama Const., Section 43 ("the judicial [department] shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them"); Arizona Const., Article III; Arkansas Const., Article 4, Section 2; California Const., Article 3, Section 3; Colorado Const., Article III; Connecticut Const., Article XVIII; Florida Const., Article II, Section 3 ("No person belonging to one branch shall exercise any powers appertaining to either of the other branches"); Idaho Const., Article II, Section 1; Illinois Const., Article II, Section 1 ("No branch shall exercise powers properly belonging to another"); Indiana Const., Article 3, Section 1; Iowa Const., Article III, Section 1; Kentucky Const., Section 28; Louisiana Const., Article II, Section 2; Maine Const., Article III, Section 2; Maryland Const., Article 8; Massachusetts Const., Part the First, Article XXX; Michigan Const., Article III, Section 2; Minnesota Const., Article III, Section 1; Missouri Const., Article II, Section 1; Montana Const., Article III, Section 1; Nebraska Const., Article II, Section 1; Nevada Const., Article III, Section 1; New Jersey Const., Article III, Section 1 ("No person or persons belonging to or constituting one branch shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others"); North Carolina Const., Article I, Section 6; Oklahoma Const., Article IV, Section 1; Oregon Const., Article III, Section 1; Rhode Island Const., Article V; South Carolina Const., Article I, Section 8; South Dakota Const., Article II; Tennessee Const., Article II, Section 2; Texas Const., Article 2, Section 1; Utah Const., Article V, Section 1; Vermont Const., Chapter II, Section 5; Virginia Const., Article I, Section 5; West Virginia Const., Article V, Section 1; Wyoming Const., Article II, Section 1.
[39] Arizona Constitution, Article III.
[40] Alabama Const., Article III, Section 42. See also Massachusetts Const., Part the First, Article XXX.
[41] Meese, supra note 27. See also McDowell, "Doubting Thomas," The New Republic, July 29, 1991, at 12 (it is "an argument over ... the nature and extent of judicial power under a written Constitution").
[42] Making his first judicial nominations on May 9, 2001, President Bush said: "Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understand the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench." http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2001/05/20010509-3.html.
[43] http://www.judicialselection.org/.
[44] http://www.usdoj.gov/olp/nominations.htm.
[45] Gaziano Testimony, at 11.
[46] See id. at 12.
[47] Newdow v. United States Congress, 292 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2002).
[48] Gaziano Testimony, at 14.
[49] See id. The case is Grutter v. Bollinger, 288 F.3d 732 (6th Cir. 2002).
[50] Grutter v. Bollinger, 137 F.Supp.2d 821 (E.D. Mich. 2001).
[51] These include Barrington Parker (nominated 5/9/01, confirmed 10/11/01) and Reena Raggi (nominated 5/1/02, confirmed 9/20/02) to the Second Circuit, Roger Gregory (nominated 5/9/01, confirmed 7/20/01) to the Fourth Circuit, Edith Clement (nominated 5/9/01, confirmed 11/13/01) to the Fifth Circuit, William Riley (nominated 5/23/01, confirmed 8/2/01) to the Eighth Circuit, Harris Hartz (nominated 6/21/02, confirmed 12/6/01) to the Tenth Circuit, and Sharon Prost (nominated 5/21/01, confirmed 9/21/01) to the Federal Circuit.
[52] Gaziano Testimony, at 14. In another example, the Sixth Circuit voted 2-1 that a Kentucky resolution allowing display of historic documents including the Ten Commandments is an unconstitutional "establishment of religion." In Adland v. Russ, 2002 U.S.App. LEXIS 21054 (10/9/02), the same Carter appointee, Chief Judge Boyce Martin, wrote the opinion, joined by a Clinton-appointed visiting judge who was participating only because the Sixth Circuit was so under-staffed.
[53] See Professor Tribe's testimony at http://judiciary.senate.gov/oldsite/te062601tri.htm.

REV_00256442

[54] J. Eastman, "The Limited Nature of the Senate's Advice and Consent Role: Prepared Testimony of Dr. John Eastman," House Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution (October 10, 2002).
[55] A. Hamilton, The Federalist No.65, available at http://memory.loc.gov/const/fed/fed_65.html.
[56] Neas Testimony, at 2. He is not alone among leftists pushing this unconstitutional view. On June 26, 2001, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-New York) chaired a hearing in his Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Court titled "Should Ideology Matter? Judicial Nominations 2001." Marcia Greenberger, Co-President of the National Women's Law Center, testified that the Senate has a "co-equal, independent role" in judicial selection. See http://www.nwlc.org/pdf/nominationstestimony.pdf, testimony at 6. Her argument that the president having "a superior role in judicial appointments ... would upset the ... [Constitution's] system of checks and balances," id. at 7, is impossible to reconcile with the view of America's founders (the ones who created that system of checks and balances) that "in the business of appointments the executive will be the principal agent." See supra note 55.
[57] A. Hamilton, The Federalist No.76, available at http://memory.loc.gov/const/fed/fed_76.html.
[58] See Rutkus, "Senate Judiciary Committee Votes on Judicial Nominations Other than Those Approving Motions to Report Favorably, 1943 to the Present," Congressional Research Service Memorandum (March 5, 2002), at 3-4. The others were Charles Pickering, defeated on March 14, 2002; Kenneth Ryskamp, defeated on April 11, 1991; Bernard Siegan, defeated on July 14, 1988; Jefferson Sessions, defeated on June 5, 1986; and Charles Winberry, defeated on March 4, 1980. See id.
[59] The Judiciary Committee approved Judge Clement's nomination on November 1, 2001, with the full Senate approving the nomination on November 13, 2001, by a 99-0 vote. See http://www.senate.gov/legislative/vote1071/vote_00335.html.

REV_00256443

REV_00256428

The Judicial Vacancy Crisis: Quantity and Quality

By
Thomas L. Jipping[1]

Submitted to the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on the Constitution
Following the Hearing
"A Judiciary Diminished is Justice Denied:
the Constitution, the Senate, and the Vacancy Crisis in the Federal Judiciary"

October 18, 2002

On October 10, 2002, the U.S. House of Representatives Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution held an oversight hearing on the current vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary. This report is submitted on behalf of various organizations[2] concerned about both the quantitative vacancy crisis and its qualitative cause.

Leftist political forces are obstructing President Bush's judicial appointments, thus perpetuating a judicial vacancy crisis, because they seek a judiciary more powerful, and more ideological, than those appointments will likely provide. They see an unelected federal judiciary, rather than an elected legislature, as a more reliable and potent vehicle for achieving their political goals.

I. Quantity: Is There a Vacancy Crisis?

A. What Is a "Vacancy"?

To the layman, a judicial "vacancy" implies an empty position with no one doing any work. Judges in "active" service can, however, assume "senior" status, a form of semi-retirement that allows them to continue working and receive a full judicial salary.[3] The change in status does create an active-service "vacancy" needing a replacement, but means a judge remains, maintaining a partial caseload. Fifty-eight of the current 77 vacancies (75 percent) were created by judges assuming senior status,[4] a proportion comparable to previous years.[5]

Judicial vacancies will always be with us. In his 2001 annual report on the judiciary, Chief Justice William Rehnquist acknowledged that "part of the problem is endemic to the size of the federal Judiciary. With more judges, there are more retirements and more vacancies to fill."[6] Nonetheless, vacancies have a greater impact when they are widespread, of long duration, and deliberate.

REV_00256429

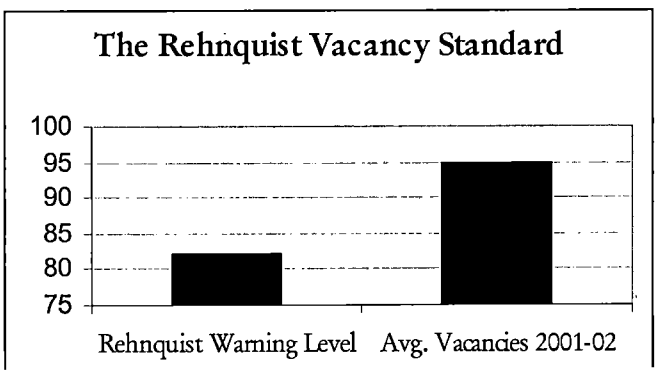
B. Judicial "Full Employment"

The federal judiciary currently contains 862 permanent positions[7] and judges, who serve for an unlimited term,[8] retire whenever they wish. Some announce their retirement months in advance,[9] others do not. One scholar testifying before the Subcommittee concluded that "a vacancy rate of about three to four percent [26-34 vacancies] represents the 'full employment' level ... for the federal judiciary."[10] The current 77 vacancies constitute a 9 percent vacancy rate.



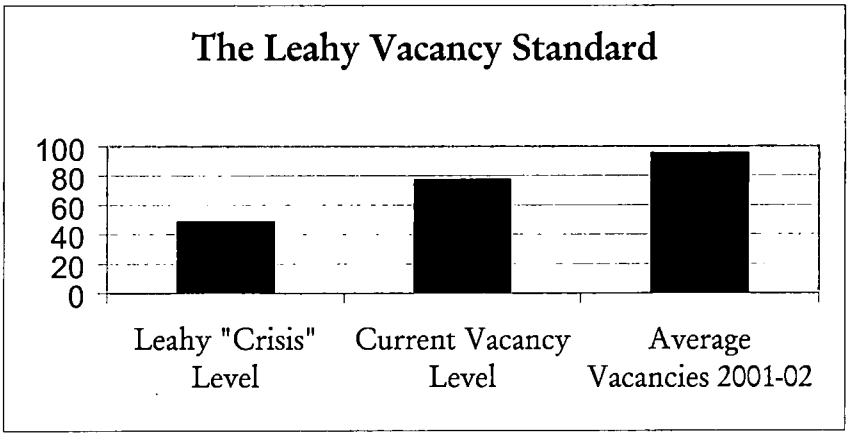
C. Is There a Vacancy "Crisis"?

1. The Rehnquist standard

One possible "crisis" benchmark comes from Chief Justice William Rehnquist. When there were 82 vacancies, he warned in his 1996 annual report on the judiciary that "filling judicial vacancies is crucial to the fair and effective administration of justice."[11] One year later, with vacancies at the same level, Chief Justice Rehnquist's warning was more direct: "Vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice that traditionally has been associated with the federal Judiciary."[12]

Democrats frequently quoted Chief Justice Rehnquist's warnings to argue for more confirmations.[13] In his 1998 State of the Union Address, for example, President Clinton said: "Here is what the Chief Justice of the United States wrote: 'Judicial vacancies cannot remain at such high levels indefinitely without eroding the quality of justice.' I simply ask the United States Senate to heed this plea and vote on the highly qualified nominees before you, up or down."[14]

Chief Justice Rehnquist's warning focused on a sustained high vacancy rate. Vacancies have only recently dropped to the current level, vacancies averaging 100 in 2001 and 95 overall since President Bush took office. This prompted Chief Justice Rehnquist, in his 2001 annual report, to repeat his 1997 warning and urge the Senate "to act with reasonable promptness and to vote on each nominee up or down."[15]



REV_00256430

2. The Leahy standards

Current Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) has also offered standards for identifying a judicial vacancy crisis. Responding to Chief Justice Rehnquist's 1997 warning, for example, Sen. Leahy said: "I hope his message will help shame the Senate into clearing the backlog early in the new year."[16] Vacancies under President Bush have averaged 16 percent above the level when the Chief Justice issued his warning, a level Sen. Leahy condemned as "poor" and worthy of "shame."

Sen. Leahy also condemned the Senate for leaving "more than 40 judicial nominees" in "limbo, having never been accorded a Senate vote."[17] Of the 47 currently pending nominees, 24 have not yet received a hearing in Sen. Leahy's committee. Nearly half of these have been waiting for more than a year.

On October 21, 1998, Sen. Leahy said that 48 vacancies (5.6 percent) constituted "a judicial vacancy crisis."[18] Vacancies are currently 60 percent higher than Sen. Leahy's "crisis" level and have averaged 98 percent higher since President Bush took office.

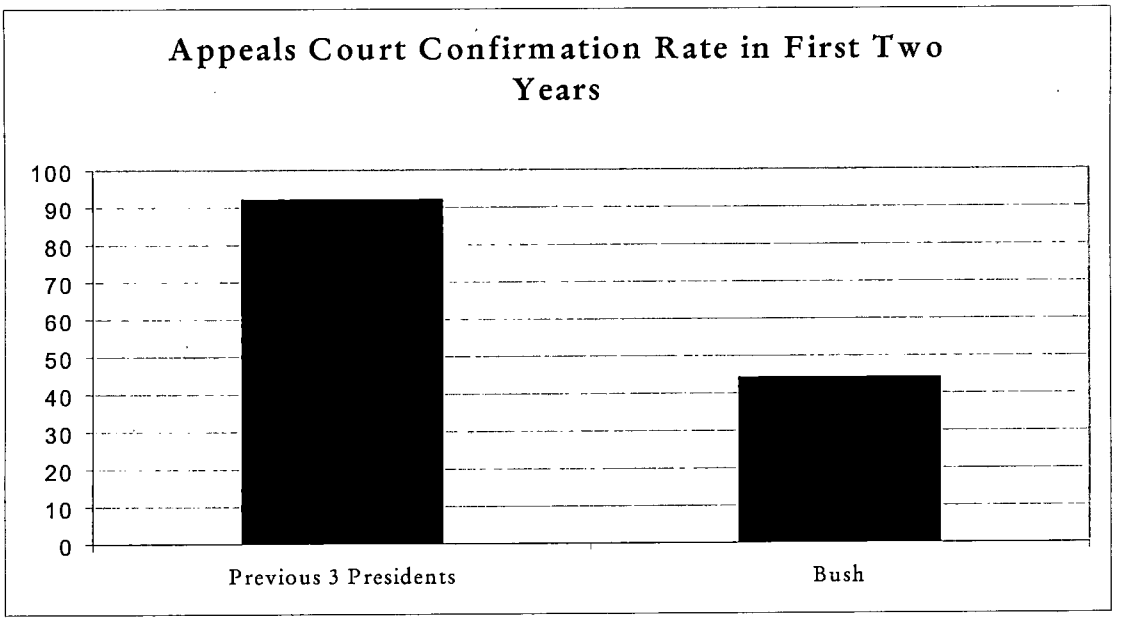
3. Historical standards

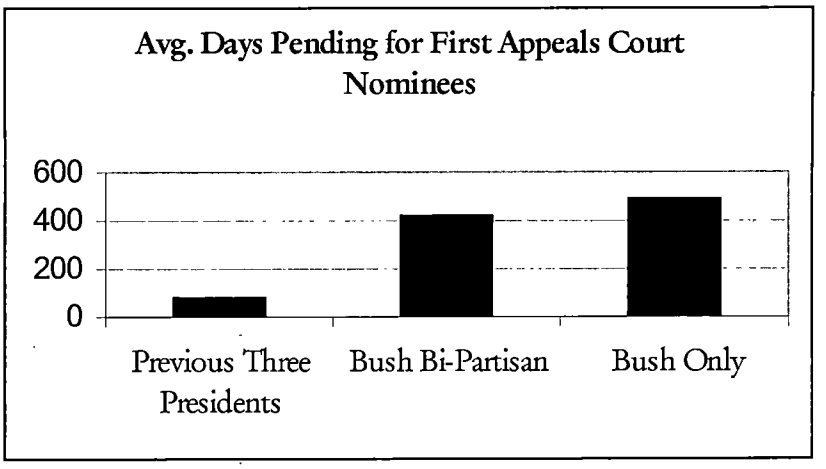
With Democrats running the Senate, judicial vacancies under President Bush have averaged 95, compared to an average of 70 when Republicans ran the Senate under President Clinton. Vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals have been 50 percent higher under President Bush than under President Clinton.

REV_00256431



Confirmations provide another comparison. The Senate confirmed 128 nominees during the first two years of the Clinton administration but just 80 during the first two years of the Bush administration. Democrats controlled the Senate during both periods, suggesting a partisan pattern.

Confirmation rates are an even better measure than confirmation totals because they account for the number of nominations. The Senate confirmed an average of 92 percent of the three previous presidents' appeals court nominees during their first two years, compared to just 44 percent for President Bush.



REV_00256432

Another historical standard reflects the deference traditionally given to a new president's first nominees. President Bush sent his first group of 11 appeals court nominees to the Senate on May 9, 2001. Three have been confirmed, three have had a Judiciary Committee hearing but no vote, one has been defeated in the Judiciary Committee, and four have yet to receive a hearing at all. The average time pending in the Senate for this first group of nominees is 421 days.

Two of the three confirmed nominees, however, had already been named to the federal bench by President Clinton, one to the U.S. District Court and the other, by recess appointment, to the Fourth Circuit. President Bush nominated U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker to the Second Circuit and Judge Roger Gregory to a full position on the Fourth Circuit as a "good will" bi-partisan gesture. Removing these from the calculation shows that the nine appeals court nominees originally selected by President Bush have been pending for an average of 489 days. By comparison, the three previous presidents saw their first 11 appeals court nominees confirmed in an average of 81 days.

REV_00256433

4. Ralph Neas' fake standards

Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way (PAW), testified before the Subcommittee. In his oral remarks and written statement, Mr. Neas repeated several claims PAW has often made about confirmation of President Clinton's judicial nominees by the Republican Senate during 1995-2000.

First, Mr. Neas claimed that "35 percent of President Clinton's appellate court nominees were blocked from 1995-2000."[19] Creative statistical tricks allow Mr. Neas to overstate the truth by at least 40 percent.

This and other similar claims state confirmations as a percentage of "nominations" rather than "nominees." An individual nominee, however, can result in more than one nomination if the Senate does not confirm him and the president re-nominates him. The focus on nominations rather than nominees overstates the nomination totals and understates the confirmation rate.

Mr. Neas counts as "blocked nominations" individuals who are today serving as federal judges!

According to the Congressional Research Service, President Clinton's appeals court nominations exceed his appeals court nominees by nearly 20 percent.[20] The CRS data show that during 1995-2000, President Clinton nominated 68 individuals to the U.S. Court of Appeals, withdrew four of them himself, and the Senate confirmed 41 of the rest. Eliminating several others who were nominated too late to be confirmed[21] shows that the Republican-led Senate failed to vote on about 25 percent of President Clinton's appeals court nominees. Not only is this significantly less than Mr. Neas' claim, but he provided no benchmark for evaluating whether even the figure he used was outside the historical norm.

REV_00256434

Second, Mr. Neas claimed that "45 percent [of President Clinton's appellate court nominees] failed to receive a vote in the Congress during which they were nominated."[22]

Accepting this as an accurate statement for the moment, the situation is, by Mr. Neas' own measure, obviously worse today. At least 54 percent of President Bush's appellate court nominees have not received a vote during the 107th Congress. Not surprisingly, Mr. Neas did not mention this in his testimony.

This claim, however, is false because it too counts nominations rather than nominees. Mr. Neas can thus count many nominees as not receiving a vote in the Congress during which they were nominated, even though most of these nominees were eventually confirmed. The CRS report cited above, in fact, states that "most ... of the persons whose nominations were returned" and the end of a two-year Congress "were later re-nominated and ultimately confirmed."[23]

President Clinton, for example, nominated William Fletcher to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit three times, in the 103rd-105th Congresses. The Senate confirmed him on October 8, 1998, one of the many sitting federal judges whom Mr. Neas would count as "blocked."

Another gimimick allowing Mr. Neas to create fake standards is comparing different time frames. As he did in his testimony before the Subcommittee, he will often compare "the first year during which Democrats controlled the Senate, beginning in July 2001"[24] with a previous calendar year.

II. Quality: The Cause of the Vacancy Crisis

The Constitution gives the president the power to nominate and, subject to Senate approval, to appoint federal judges.[25] As former Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole has said, these appointments may be a president's "most profound legacy."[26] Former Attorney General Edwin Meese agrees: "No President exercises more power more far-reaching, more likely to influence his legacy, than the selection of federal judges. Laws come and go; policies wax and wane; but judges, it often seems, go on forever."[27] Federal judges have unlimited terms, serving "during good behavior"[28] until they leave office voluntarily or by impeachment.[29] More importantly, during that unlimited tenure federal judges have the final word on the meaning, and thus the content, of our laws.

By original design and through most of American history, the scope of this power was very modest. America's founders believed that the judiciary would be the "weakest"[30] branch of government because the legislative branch, which has "superior weight and influence,"[31] makes the law. The judiciary's task is merely

REV_00256435

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

October 22, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR HARRIET MIERS

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: STAFFING OF JUDICIAL CONFIRMATION PROCESS DECISION MEMO

Attached is a decision memo for the President regarding the Judicial Confirmation process.

Please circulate this memo with a notation of "Close Hold." Comments should be returned to Brett Kavanaugh in my office no later than 4:00 pm on Wednesday, October 23, 2002. His phone number is 456-7984 and his fax number is 456-5104.

Thank you.

REV_00256445

[President's Judicial Nominations] [1]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

Box 49

Folder 1

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090

9799

THIS SEARCH | THIS DOCUMENT | THIS CR ISSUE | GO TO
Next Hit | Forward | Next Document | New CR Search
Prev Hit | Back | Prev Document | HomePage
Hit List | Best Sections | Daily Digest | Help
Contents Display

NOMINATION OF JAMES A. TEILBORG, OF ARIZONA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA -- (Senate - October 03, 2000)

[Page: S9671] GPO's PDF

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of James A. Teilborg, of Arizona, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Arizona.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I understand that under the prior unanimous consent agreement the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH; the Senator from Arizona, Mr. KYL; and I each have 1 hour for the Teilborg nomination, and the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. HARKIN, has up to 3 hours, unless time is yielded back, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be able to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. EDWARDS, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I am pleased that today we are discussing some of the vacancies that exist in the Federal judiciary. There was a discussion this morning about an issue that is near and dear to my heart and important to the folks in North Carolina, which is the vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Senator ROBB came down and discussed Judge Gregory's nomination. Chairman HATCH responded. I would like to say a few words about that discussion.

There are 15 authorized judgeships on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. There are presently only 10 active judges on that court. By tradition, my State of North Carolina, which is the largest, most populous State in the Fourth Circuit, is allocated three of those judgeships. Out of those 10 judgeships --presently active judges on the Fourth Circuit--how many come from North Carolina? None.

We are the only State in the nation that is not represented on a Federal circuit court, along with Hawaii. We are the largest State in the circuit. We have the largest population in the circuit, and we don't have a judge representing our State on this court. That has been true since Judge Ervin died in 1999.

The people of North Carolina, who have cases regularly heard in the Fourth Circuit, have no one there representing them. In addition, to the extent the court is regularly interpreting matters of North Carolina law, which it is required to do in diversity cases, there is no judge in this court who is trained in North Carolina law. Now, this Congress recognized some time ago how important it was for States to be represented on their circuit courts of appeal by enacting a law--in fact, requiring that States have a judge on their Federal circuit court of appeals. We have none. As I indicated before, along with Hawaii, we are the only two States in the country that are not represented on our circuit court of appeals.

Now, Chairman HATCH had some discussion this morning about Judge Gregory and his nomination to the Fourth Circuit in the State of Virginia, and the fact that that was a slot traditionally allocated to my State of North Carolina.

REV_00256447

My question to Chairman HATCH is: What are we doing about the nomination of Judge Wynn? Judge Wynn is a very well-respected, very moderate, centrist jurist from North Carolina, who has been nominated for over a year from my State to fill a vacancy that is traditionally allocated to North Carolina. There is no question that Judge Wynn would be approved by this body if he ever got a hearing and a vote on the floor.

[Page: S9672] GPO's PDF

Unfortunately, that has not happened. It is easy to understand why the Clinton administration believed they needed to take some action. That action has turned out to be to nominate Judge Gregory. I have to admit it was somewhat frustrating to me, representing North Carolina, to have Judge Gregory nominated for the slot he was nominated for because it was traditionally allocated to North Carolina. But, I do support Judge Gregory's nomination.

In addition to having no judge from North Carolina being on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, our court does not presently have, nor has it ever had, an African American judge. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has the largest African American population in the country and does not now have, nor has it ever had, an African American judge. Obviously, there is a huge part of our population in the Fourth Circuit that has never been represented on this court. They are entitled to representation by a well-qualified judge.

In fact, Judge Wynn who was nominated over a year ago--from my State that has no judge on the Fourth Circuit--is also an African American judge. I urge Chairman HATCH to grant Judge Wynn a hearing and to push forward his vote on the floor of this Senate where he will be approved.

The bottom line is that Judge Gregory is a well-respected and well-qualified African American lawyer from the State of Virginia who also deserves a hearing, and also deserves a vote in this body this year.

The argument that is made--and Chairman HATCH made it this morning--is we only need 10 judges on the Fourth Circuit, we don't really need the 15 that Congress in fact has authorized. The reason is that the chief judge of that circuit, Judge Wilkinson, says they do not need any more judges, they are operating perfectly efficiently.

I point out several things.

No. 1, the Fourth Circuit issues more one-sentence opinions than any Federal circuit court in the country. Litigants come before it and make their case. Instead of getting a reasoned decision about why they won or lost their case, they get one sentence. What does that tell them about how much attention in fact is being paid to their case?

This same argument was made when there were 13 judges on the court. Now we are down to l0.

Since when do we let the chief judge of the circuit court decide how many judges go on the court? That is a function we in Congress have responsibility for--not him.

You can certainly make an argument that this is a partisan decision that the chief judge has made--that he likes the present composition of the court. He was a Republican-nominated judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent for another 3 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield another 3 minutes without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, here we have the chief judge, who is a Republican-nominated judge, and a court that now has a majority of Republican judges. You can certainly make the argument that he likes the composition of the court the way it is; he never wants that to be changed.

REV_00256448

That is so fundamentally wrong and so fundamentally different from the way our Constitution provides. We should be nominating judges. Whether it is a Democratic or a Republican administration, it shouldn't make any difference in nominating well-qualified judges. This body should act on the qualification of those men and women to serve on the court, not based upon the Republican or Democratic composition of the court. It is just that simple. This should be totally nonpartisan.

My State has no one representing them on the Fourth Circuit. There is not, nor has there ever been, an African American judge on this court.

The simple bottom line is that we have the responsibility of deciding how many judges should be authorized for that court. We have made that decision--15. It is now down to 10. Of those 10, North Carolina has none. The people of North Carolina are entitled to be represented on this court.

In addition to that, we should deal with the issue that there has never been an African American judge on this court.

We presently have pending the nomination of two well-respected and very well qualified African American jurists.

This is what I would say to the Chairman HATCH. Let us have a hearing on Judge Wynn. Let Judge Wynn have a vote on the floor of this Senate, and let the people of North Carolina have what, by law enacted by this body , they are entitled to, which is a judge representing them on their Federal court of appeals so that when my people go to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to have their case heard, they have at least one judge representing them on that court. Aren't they entitled to that?

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for his comments. Senator EDWARDS has been a friend since he came to this body . I have, at the risk of embarrassing him, stated on a number of occasions on this floor that the Senate was enhanced by his presence here. As a lawyer, I must say that having him here because of his own experience as one of the most outstanding and most recognized trial lawyers in the country, to say nothing about his own State. I think Senators on both sides of the aisle should listen to what he said.

He is not a Senator who speaks in the abstract and who simply reads a statement on this. This is a Senator who has spent time in the courts of his State and of the region. He has had active practice in both State courts and Federal courts. He understands the judicial system.

He has argued cases at all levels. He has worked with lawyers who have been on his side of an issue and opposed to him. He knows, as does any lawyer who practices law, that no matter how much you might try a case at the trial level, at some point, especially if the stakes are high, that case is going to go up on appeal. It is going to go up on appeal whether you are the plaintiff or the defendant. Whoever loses that case, if it is of significance, will take it up on appeal.

I recall the statements made in court when I was trying cases. The judge in chambers would say: OK, we will take it to the jury and let justice be done. Usually the person who had the weaker case said: If that is the case, I will appeal, if justice is done.

But the fact of matter is cases become more and more complex and more and more significant to the litigants and to the issues of law. They go up on appeal, and you ought to have a good appellate court.

I commend the Senator for what he has said. I hope we will listen to what is needed in that appellate court.

We should also note, I suggest, that there is going to be a significant debate tonight in Boston between the two candidates of our two great parties--the Republican and Democratic Parties. Both parties have nominated those we consider to be our best choices. Obviously, I strongly support my friend of over 20 years, AL GORE. But I also know that the Republican Party has nominated a very distinguished Governor, George W. Bush.

REV_00256449

I mention this because Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech awhile back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo.

Frankly , that is what we are paid to do in this body . We are paid to vote either yes or no--not vote maybe.

When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting ``maybe" but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this. They have to put their life on hold. They do not know what is going to happen: Are they going to be confirmed, or not? It is not like when any one of us runs for election; we know that on a certain day the election occurs.

[Page: S9673] GPO's PDF

We either win or we lose. But we know that on that Tuesday, we are going to know our fate. We won or we lost.

These people come here and they never know what may happen. They don't know whether they will have a hearing. And if they have a hearing, they don't know if there will be a vote in committee. And if there is a vote in committee, they don't know whether they will come on the floor. And if they come on the floor, they don't know if they will have a vote because one person hiding in the Cloakroom will say: Don't allow it to come to a vote yet. So they may have 99 Senators voting for them but somebody mysteriously in the background says ``Don't vote," and they don't vote.

Helene White of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has been pending for 1,360 days. Governor Bush said we ought to have a vote up or down within 60 days. Let's have a vote on Helene White. She has been waiting not 60 days, not 600 days, but 1,360 days.

Kathleen McCree Lewis, who has been nominated for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, an outstanding African American woman, who has one of highest ratings of anybody we have ever seen come before the Senate, has been waiting for 370 days. Not the 60 days we talked about, but more than six times the 60 days. Bonnie Campbell, for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, has been spending for more than 215 days.

We are debating bringing up the Violence Against Women Act which has been stalled. The Violence Against Women Act has expired. Distinguished Senators on both sides of the aisle are working to bring it up and we cannot bring it up for a vote.

I see the distinguished Senator from Delaware and the distinguished Senator from Kansas, both of whom support it on the floor, and we cannot get that up for a vote.

We also can't get Bonnie Campbell up, even though she is the Director of the Violence Against Women Office. She supported, worked for and administered the Violence Against Women Act, an act that has seen a dramatic decrease in violence against women.

We ought to be standing and applauding Ms. Campbell. She is somebody who shows by her own experience that she can do the things necessary to bring down this scourge of violence against women in our country. Now that she has gone through the vetting process, and found out that she is one of the most qualified people to be a judge of anyone confirmed in the last 20 years, Republican or Democrat, we ought to at least let her have a vote instead of holding her in limbo.

Elena Kagan for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has been pending for more than 480 days without a vote; Lynette Norton, for the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, has been pending for more than 890 days; Patricia Coan, for the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, has been pending for more than 500 days; Dolly Gee, for the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California has been pending for more than 495 days; Rhonda C. Fields, for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, has been pending for 325 days; Linda Riegle, for the U.S. District Court of Nevada, has been pending for more than 165 days.

Let them have a vote. These women are outstanding. They have demonstrated more than most people who get confirmed in this body , Republican or Democrat, how well qualified they are. At least let them have a vote. If people want to vote against them, vote against them.

REV_00256450

I will state for the record that I will vote for every one of them. In checking with our side of the aisle, every single Democrat Senator will vote for every one of these women.

President Clinton, in remarks before the Michigan Bar Association, recently spoke about the Senate's failure to act upon his judicial nominees, noting his nominees have received more top American Bar Association ratings than those of any President in 40 years. President Clinton, to his credit, has nominated people who have received higher ratings than any President, Democrat or Republican, in 40 years and they still get held up. He said:

These people are highly qualified, which leads to only one conclusion, that the appointments process has been politicized in the hope of getting appointees ultimately to the bench who will be more political. That is wrong. It is a denial of justice.

President Clinton is right. We should move forward with these nominees. Let them have a vote. Don't do this in the dark of the night holding people up.

We are going to have four nominees, three from Arizona which has a desperate situation, where they need Federal judges. My friend from Arizona, Senator KYL, has pointed out, quite rightly, that cases cannot be heard, several cases cannot be heard. He has had experiences as a civil lawyer. He knows how difficult that is.

I say as a former prosecutor, when that happens, the criminal cases can't be heard because you don't have enough people on the bench. When that happens, the prosecutor has to start plea bargaining down. He or she has to either get a lighter sentence or has to start dropping charges all over the place because they know they can't get a trial because the judges aren't there.

If we are going to be tough on law and order, we have to have the judges there. We cannot just say we are against crime. I am willing to concede that all 100 of us are against crime. But if we are going to fight crime, we have to have the men and women there to do it: the prosecutors, the defense attorneys, and the judges.

If we will move those judges through, I will vote for every one of them. But I also point out that they can move through very rapidly, all the judges from the time they were nominated, to the hearings, to the floor. A lot of the other judges discussed today are judicial nominees who have waited and waited and waited and waited and cannot get a vote.

It is not too late in the session to move on these nominations. We know that we can make quick progress when we want to do so. The group of nominees being considered tonight include nominations received on a Friday, who had a hearing the next Wednesday and were reported that Thursday, all within a week. In addition, there is the example of a hearing held last month by the Government Affairs Committee on two District of Columbia Superior Court judges, one who was nominated on May 1 and the other who was nominated on June 26. Another example of the ability of the Senate to act is the September 8 confirmation of James E. Baker to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. In addition, there is the examples of Timothy Lewis who was confirmed in waning days of the 1992 session, the last year of a Republican presidential term with a Democratic majority in the Senate. Judge Lewis was confirmed to the Third Circuit on October 8, having only been nominated on September 17 of that year.

>>>

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

2

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit, Prev Hit, Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward, Back, Best Sections, Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document, Prev Document, Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search, HomePage, Help

DELAYS IN SENATE ACTION ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - June 18, 1998)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, just a couple of weeks ago, I commented in the Congressional Record on the Senate majority's poor record in acting on judicial nominees, especially noting those judicial nominees who are either minorities or women. I included a recent letter from the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which calls upon the Senate Republican leadership to allow votes on the Latino judicial nominees who have languished in the Senate for far too long.

I have also spoken often about the crisis in the second circuit and the need for the Senate to move forward to confirm the nominees to that court who are pending on the calendar.

Judge Sonia Sotomayor is just such a qualified nominee, and she is one being held up by the Republican majority, apparently because some on the other side of the aisle believe she might one day be considered by President Clinton for nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court, should a vacancy arise.

Last week, a lead editorial in the Wall Street Journal discussed this secret basis for the Republican hold against this fine judge . The Journal reveals that these delays are intended to ensure that Sonia Sotomayor not be nominated to the Supreme Court, although it is hard to figure out just how that is logical or sensible.

In fact, how disturbing, how petty, and how shameful: Trying to disqualify an outstanding Hispanic woman judge by an anonymous hold .

I have far more respect for Senators who, for whatever reason, wish to vote against her. Stand up; vote against her. But to have an anonymous hold --an anonymous hold --in the U.S. Senate with 100 Members representing 260 million Americans, which should be the conscience of the Nation, should not be lurking in our cloakrooms anonymously trying to hold up a nominee. If we want to vote against somebody, vote against them. I respect that. State your reasons. I respect that. But don't hold up a qualified judicial nominee.

I was asked last week by Neil Lewis of the New York Times about this circumstance. He correctly reported my response in a front page story this last Saturday. I am offended by this anonymous effort to oppose her prompt confirmation by stealth tactics. Here is a highly qualified Hispanic woman judge who should have been confirmed to help end the crisis in the Second Circuit more than three months ago.

The times Argus recently included an editorial entitled `Partisan Nonsense' on this hold . The editorial notes that Judge Sotomayor rose from a housing project in the Bronx to Princeton, Yale and a federal court appointment by President Bush, a Republican. The editorial notes that the stalling tactics are aggravating the judicial emergency faced by the Second Circuit caused by judicial vacancies for which the Republican leadership in the Senate refuses to consider her, and another worthy nominee. The editorial concludes by urging me to make `a lot of noise over this partisan nonsense.'

I don't always follow the editorials in my home State. But this one I am happy to follow.

I will continue to speak out on behalf of Judge Sotomayor and all the qualified nominees being stalled here in the U.S. Senate.

Judge Sotomayor in not the only woman or minority judicial nominee who has been needlessly stalled. Indeed, if one considers those nominees who have taken the longest to confirm this year, we find a disturbing pattern:

Hilda Tagle, the only Hispanic woman the Senate has confirmed this year, took 32 months to be confirmed as a district court judge for the Southern District of Texas. That is more than two-and-one-half years.

REV_00256452

Judge Richard Paez, currently a district court judge and a nominee to the Ninth Circuit, was first nominated in January 1996. Twenty-nine months latter, Judge Paez's nomination remains in limbo on the Senate calendar.

Nor have we seen any progress on the nomination of Jorge Rangel to the Fifth Circuit or Anabelle Rodriquez to the District Court for Puerto Rico, although her nomination was received in January 1996, almost 29 months ago.

For that matter, we have seen the President's nomination of Judge James A. Beaty Jr., the first African American nominated to the Fourth Circuit, stalled for 30 months, since December 1995. The situation in the Fourth Circuit was the topic of a Washington Post editorial past Saturday. We have seen the attack on Judge Frederica Massiah-Jackson, who would have been the first African-American woman to serve on the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, but who was forced to withdraw. We have seen the nomination of Clarence Sundram held up since September 1995, almost 33 months.

In his annual report on the judiciary this year on New Year's Day, the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court observed: `Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote. The Senate confirmed only 17 judges in 1996 and 36 in 1997, well under the 101 judges it confirmed in 1994.' He went on to note: `The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.' Which of course is absolutely correct.

For some unexplained reason, judicial nominees who are women or racial or ethnic minorities seem to take the longest in the Senate. Of the 10 judicial nominees whose nominations have been pending the longest before the Senate, eight are women and racial or ethnic minority candidates. A ninth has been delayed in large measure because of opposition to his mother, who already serves as a judge . The tenth is one who blew the lid off the $1.4 million right-wing campaign to `kill' Clinton judicial nominees.

Pending on the Senate calendar, having been passed over again and again, are Judge Sonia Sotomayor, Judge Richard Paez, Oki Mollway and Ronnie White. Held up in committee after two hearings is Clarence Sundram. Still without a hearing are Anabelle Rodriquez, Judge James A. Beaty Jr., and Jorge C. Rangel. What all these nominees have in common is that they are either women or members of racial or ethnic minorities.

Acting to fill judicial vacancies is a constitutional duty that the Senate--and all of its member--are obligated to fulfill. In its unprecedented slowdown in the handling of nominees in the 104th and 105th Congresses, the Senate is shirking its duty. The Senate majority's choices as they stall Hispanic, women and minority nominees is wrong and should end.

Mr. President, I have served here for nearly 24 years. I know Members of the Senate. I have enormous respect for so many of them, Republicans and Democrats alike. The vast majority of Senators I have served with do not have any bias or ethnic bias against people. They do not have a religious bias. They do not have a gender bias. But somehow ethnic and gender biases have crept into the stalling of these nominations.

If Senators are opposed to any judge , bring them up and vote against them. But don't do an anonymous hold , which diminishes the credibility and respect of the whole U.S. Senate.

I have had judicial nominations by both Democrat and Republican Presidents that I intended to oppose. But I fought like mad to make sure they at least got a chance to be on the floor for a vote.

I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge ; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge , whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty.

If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators.

With that, Mr. President, I see Senators have come back to the floor for their debate. So I ask unanimous consent that copies of the editorials of the Times Argus and the Washington Post, and the report from the New York Times, which I referred to, be printed in the Record.

REV_00256453

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Page: S6522] GPO's PDF

From The Times Argus, June 15, 1998

[FROM THE TIMES ARGUS, JUNE 15, 1998]

Partisan Nonsense

You may never have heard of a federal district judge named Sonia Sotomayor, and it appears that several key Republicans are hoping you never will. They'd like her to simply vanish from the nation's political radar screen, but Vermont's Sen. Patrick Leahy is among those who stand in their way.

It appears these political foes of President Clinton are afraid that if they confirm Judge Sotomayor's nomination to the 2nd District U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, as Clinton has proposed, her next stop will be a seat on the United States Supreme Court.

Although Sotomayor grew up in the sprawling housing projects of the Bronx, where success stories are less than commonplace, she managed to graduate with high honors from Princeton, become editor of the Yale Review and earn a reputation as an effective federal prosecutor.

In 1992, she was appointed to the federal bench by then-President George Bush. That would seem to suggest she had bipartisan support, but that was before some nervous Republicans began to fear there may soon be an opening on the Supreme Court. That opening, they worried, would allow Clinton to nominate Sotomayor, a woman and an Hispanic.

Of course there is no vacancy on the high court, nor has there been any clear signal that there will be one any time soon. Justice John Paul Stevens, who many believe will be the first of the present batch of justices to retire, has already hired his clerks for the next court session. In addition, Sotomayor's name was not on a list of recommended nominees the Hispanic National Bar Association submitted to Clinton.

But even if there was a pending vacancy, what is it about Judge Sotomayor that would make Republicans so worried? Is it that she's Hispanic? Is it that she's too liberal, or too much a judicial activist?

For the record nobody is saying, but off the record, some Senate aides concede their bosses are worried she would, indeed, be an activist. Interestingly, conservative supporters of Judge Sotomayor's nomination vehemently disagree with that assessment.

Enter Sen. Leahy, the senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. In blunt terms, Leahy has criticized the Republicans who, behind the scenes and not for attribution, are seeking to scuttle Sotomayor's nomination.

`Their reasons are stupid at best and cowardly at worst,' Leahy told a New York Times reporter. `What they are saying is that they have a brilliant judge who happens to be a woman and Hispanic and they haven't the guts to stand up and argue publicly against her on the floor. They just want to hide in their cloakrooms and do her in quietly.'

Those are strong words, particularly for the United States Senate, but Leahy's anger is genuine and justified.

The campaign against Judge Sotomayor began on the editorial pages of the ultra-conservative Wall Street Journal and was given much wider exposure when it was taken up by Rush Limbaugh, the right wing radio talk show host.

The Journal was upset with Sotomayor's ruling that a coalition of New York businesses promoting a program for the homeless had violated federal law by not paying the minimum wage. This, in the Journal's opinion, constituted `judicial activism.'

But a well-known conservative, Gerald Walpin, has rushed to Sotomayor's defense and his message is worth heeding.

REV_00256454

3

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 4 of 12 | Printer Friendly Display - 22,258 bytes.[Help]

EXECUTIVE SESSION -- (Senate - October 05, 1999)

[Page: S11918] GPO's PDF

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

NOMINATION OF RONNIE L. WHITE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 2:15 having arrived, the Senate will now go into executive session and proceed to the vote on Executive Calendar Nos. 172, 215 and 209 which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ronnie L. White, of Missouri, to be United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on each nomination with one showing of hands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Ronnie L. White, of Missouri, to be United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Florida (Mr. MACK) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced--yeas 45, nays 54, as follows:

[Page: S11919] GPO's PDF

(Rollcall Vote No. 307 Ex.)
YEAS--45

REV_00256455

McConnell

Murkowski

Nickles

Roberts

Roth

Santorum

Sessions

Shelby

Smith (NH)

Smith (OR)

Snowe

Specter

Stevens

Thomas

Thompson

Thurmond

Voinovich

Warner

NOT VOTING--1

Mack

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. CRAIG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to continue for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have to say this with my colleagues present. When the full history of Senate treatment of the nomination of Justice Ronnie White is understood, when the switches and politics that drove the Republican side of the aisle are known, the people of Missouri and the people of the United States will have to judge whether the Senate was unfair to this fine man and whether their votes served the interests of justice and the Federal courts.

REV_00256456

I am hoping--and every Senator will have to ask himself or herself this question--the United States has not reverted to a time in its history when there was a color test on nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I use leader time for 1 minute in response.

With regard to nominations, judicial or otherwise, I am sure the Senate would never use any basis for a vote other than the qualifications and the record of the nominee. And just so the record will be complete, as a matter of fact, of the 19 nominees who have been confirmed this year, 4 of them have been women, 1 of them African American, and 3 of them have been Hispanic. Their records and the kind of judges these men and women would make are the only things that have been a factor with the Senate and are the only things that should ever be a factor.

I ask unanimous consent that the remaining votes in the series be limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise to express how saddened I am by the party-line vote against Judge Ronnie White today. I had sincerely hoped that today would mark the beginning of a bipartisan attempt to clear the backlog of federal judicial nominees and begin to fill the vacancies that are rampant throughout the federal judiciary. I was mistaken. Instead, we got a party-line vote against a qualified minority judge coupled with a continued refusal to schedule votes on other qualified minority and women nominees.

Judge White is eminently qualified to sit on the federal bench. He is a distinguished jurist and the first African-American to serve on the Missouri Supreme Court. Prior to his service on Missouri's Supreme Court, Judge White served as a State Representative to the Missouri Legislature, where he chaired the Judiciary Committee. In his law practice, which he continued during his service as a legislator, White handled a variety of civil and criminal matters for mostly low income individuals. His nomination received the support of the St. Louis Metropolitan Police Department, the Saint Louis Post Dispatch, and the National Bar Association. He is a fine man who has given his life to public service and he deserved better than what he got from this Senate. He deserved better than to be kept waiting 27 months for a vote, and then to be used as a political pawn.

This vote wasn't about the death penalty. This vote wasn't about law and order. This vote was about the unfair treatment of minority judicial nominees. This vote tells minority judicial candidates ``do not apply.'' And if you do, you will wait and wait, with no guarantee of fairness.

Judge Marsha Berzon , for instance, has been kept waiting more than 20 months for a vote. Judge Richard Paez has been waiting more than 44 months. These nominees deserve a vote. While I am totally dismayed by what happened here today with respect to Judge White's nomination, the Senate today functioned, albeit in a partisan, political manner.

As Chief Justice Rehnquist has recognized: ``The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.'' An up-or-down vote, that is all we ask for Berzon and Paez . And, after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much. The Republican majority should not be allowed to cherry-pick among nominees, allowing some to be confirmed in weeks, while letting other nominations languish for years. Accordingly, I vow today, that we Democrats just will not allow Paez and Berzon to be forgotten.

As I have in the past, I will again move to proceed to the nominations of Judge Paez and Marsha Berzon , and I intend to take this action again and again should unnamed Senators continue to block a vote. Particularly after today's vote, I must say, I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination. Today's actions prove that we all understand that we have a constitutional outlet for antipathy against a judicial nominee--a vote against that nominee. What the Constitution does not contemplate is for one or two Senators to grind a nomination to a halt on the basis of a ``secret'' hold. This cowardly, obstructionist tactic is an anathema to the traditions of the Senate. Thus, today, I implore, one more time, every Senator to follow Senator LEAHY's advice, and treat every nominee ``with dignity and dispatch.'' Lift your holds, and let the Senate vote on every nomination.

REV_00256457

The business of judges is the simple but overwhelmingly important business of providing equal justice to the poor and to the rich. Accordingly, the consequences of this confirmation process are awesome. It is time that we all take it more seriously and it is time that we schedule votes on every nominee on the Calendar--including Judge Paez and Marsha Berzon . All we are asking of our Republican colleagues is to give these nominees the vote--and hopefully the fair consideration--they deserve. We will press this issue every day and at every opportunity until they get that vote.

Today is a dark day for the Senate. We have voted down a fully-qualified nominee but I hope we can do better in the future and that we can move forward on the Paez and Berzon nominations in a fair and non-partisan manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the next nomination, Calendar No. 215.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Brian Theadore Stewart, of Utah, to be United States District Judge for the District of Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Brian Theadore Stewart, of Utah, to be United States District Judge for the District of Utah? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Florida (Mr. MACK) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS) is necessarily absent.

The result was announced--yeas 93, nays 5, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 308 Ex.]

YEAS--93

Abraham

Akaka

Allard

Ashcroft

Bayh

Bennett

Biden

Bingaman

Bond

[Page: S11920] GPO's PDF

Breaux

Brownback

Bryan

Bunning

REV_00256458

5

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 1 of 2 | Printer Friendly Display - 16,081 bytes.[Help]

THE NOMINATION OF BONNIE CAMPBELL -- (Senate - October 06, 2000)

[Page: S10059] GPO's PDF

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, it has now been 218 days--218 days that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate has had Bonnie J. Campbell's name there and not reported her out. She has had her hearings. Her paperwork is done. Yet she sits bottled up in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

I understand that later today--or maybe early next week--there will be a unanimous consent request to bring up for consideration and pass the Violence Against Women Act. It is a very good bill, a good law, that has done a lot to help reduce domestic violence in our country.

But we have an interesting dichotomy here. There will be a line of Senators out here talking about how they are all for the Violence Against Women Act. It will go through here like greased lightning. But when it comes to the person who has been in charge of implementing the provisions of the Violence Against Women Act, the person who has been in charge of the Office of Violence Against Women since its beginning in 1995--because it was created by the Violence Against Women Act--when it comes to that person who is widely recognized all over America as the one person who has done more to implement that law than anybody else--when it comes to that person, they say, no, we are not going to let her be reported out of the Judiciary Committee. That is Bonnie Campbell.

It is all right to have the Violence Against Women Act but, no, it is not all right to have her sit on the court of appeals--the one person who knows this law intimately, the one person who has led the fight in this country against domestic violence and violence against women in general.

Bonnie Campbell has not been treated fairly by this Senate, by the Republican leadership, and by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

I have heard all the arguments--including the one that she she wasn't nominated until this year. Mr. President, she was nominated in early March. She had her hearing in May. Yet the other day we reported four judges out, all of whom were nominated later than Bonnie Campbell. Three were nominated in July, had their hearing, and were reported out all in the same week. Yet Bonnie Campbell sits there, 218 days today.

It is not as if the appeals courts are full. We have 22 vacancies on the appeals courts. And we need more women serving on the appeals court. Out of 148 circuit judges, 33 are women--22 percent. Yet the Republican leadership in this Senate and on the Senate Judiciary Committee will not let Bonnie Campbell's name come out for a vote.

[Page: S10060] GPO's PDF

If somebody on the other side wants to vote against her, for whatever reason, that is their right. It is their senatorial privilege and even their responsibility, if they feel deeply about it, to do so. But I don't believe it is anyone's responsibility, nor even a right, to hold that name bottled up in committee when she is fully qualified. I have not heard one Senator say Bonnie Campbell is not qualified for this position--not one. I have heard no objections raised at all. She is supported by both the Senators from Iowa--a Republican Senator, Mr. GRASSLEY, and by me, a Democrat. So there has been strong, bipartisan support.

REV_00256459

Again, she is a former attorney general of the State of Iowa and now head of the Violence Against Women office. Yet they won't report her name out.

Yes, they will let the Violence Against Women Act come through, and we will hear wonderful speeches about it, I am sure, from the Republican side. The House of Representatives, last week, voted for the Violence Against Women Act, 415-3. Does anybody believe they would have voted that overwhelmingly if the only person who has run that office had done a bad job and had not enforced the law fairly and equitably and brought honor to the law and the position? Absolutely not. By that 415-3 vote, they were saying Bonnie Campbell has done an outstanding job.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say this to the Senator from Iowa--and I wonder whether he would agree with me--I think if we had an up-or-down vote on Bonnie Campbell, it would be 100-0 or 99-1. Under the Violence Against Women Act, in terms of dramatically affecting the lives of women and their children, we would not have been able to have made a real difference without Bonnie Campbell. She is the one who made this a reality----

Mr. HARKIN. Exactly.

Mr. WELLSTONE. When it came to directly affecting their lives. If we had a vote, I think it would be 100-0 or 99-1.

Mr. HARKIN. I hadn't made that point, but yes, that is true. If we had a vote, I daresay maybe one or two may have a problem for some reason, but I think it would be overwhelming.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. The Republican nominee for President, George W. Bush, has said what the Senate ought to do on all these nominees is, within 60 days, vote them up or down, but at least bring them to a vote. Would the Senator from Iowa agree with me that that is a good idea on what should be done?

Mr. HARKIN. I think that is a great idea .

Mr. LEAHY. Would he also agree with me that if Governor Bush actually means that, he ought to pick up the phone and call the Republican leadership and say there are an awful lot of women and minorities and others who have been bottled up, as well as Bonnie Campbell, a lot longer than 60 days--I think one for more than 1,360 days--we ought to vote them up or down?

Mr. HARKIN. I agree.

Mr. LEAHY. Lastly, would the Senator from Iowa agree with me that all he wants and would be satisfied with--bring her down here, 9 o'clock in the morning, or at night, whatever, and let's have a rollcall vote? I can assure you, I have read all of her file, and I sit on the Judiciary Committee. I have gone through every bit of this. Bonnie Campbell is one of the most qualified people nominated by either a Republican or Democrat in the 25 years I have been on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HARKIN. I agree with the Senator from Vermont, my great friend who does an outstanding job on the Judiciary Committee. He is absolutely right. Governor Bush said we ought to have a 60-day deadline. He should pick up the phone, as my friend said, and call the Republican leadership. He is the leader of the Republican Party.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. President, I will, as I do every day, ask unanimous consent to discharge the Judiciary Committee on further consideration of the nomination of Bonnie Campbell, nominee for the Eighth Circuit Court, and that her nomination be considered by the Senate following the conclusion of action on the pending matter, and that the debate on the nomination be limited to 2 hours equally divided, and that a vote on her nomination occur immediately following the use or yielding back of that time.

REV_00256460

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SESSIONS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I intend to make my point every day. And as you can see, an objection to bringing Bonnie Campbell's name out of the Judiciary Committee so we can have a debate and vote is made every time on the Republican side. That is who is holding this up. It is a darn shame that this is being done to a person who has led an exemplary life, done an outstanding job in public service both as attorney general of Iowa and now as head of the Violence Against Women Office in the Department of Justice. It is not right, it is not fair.

So every day that we are here I will continue to ask unanimous consent to bring her name out. Before I yield the floor, once again, I will point out that in 1992, when there was a Republican President and a Democratic Senate, 9 circuit court judges had their hearings; there were 14 nominated in 1992, during an election year, and 9 had hearings. Of all those who had hearings, they were all referred and all confirmed--one as late as October of 1992, a couple in September, and a couple were in August.

When the shoe was on the other foot, when there was a Republican President and a Democratic Senate, we had the hearings. Everyone who had a hearing during the Bush Administration got a vote in Committee. All but one got a vote on the Senate floor. Well, Bonnie Campbell had her hearing. All the paperwork is done. Yet she has been referred. Every single one was confirmed in 1992.

Well, this is the year 2000 and we have had seven circuit court judges nominated this year. One has had a hearing and was referred and was confirmed. That is one out of seven. In 1992, it was 9 out of 14. Tell me who is playing politics around this place. Tell me who wants to play politics with the circuit courts. It is not our side. It is the other side.

In 1992, as I said, we had nine circuit judges nominated and confirmed. This year, there was only one. No. 1, it is a flimsy argument to say because she was nominated this year it is too late. No. 2, it is a phony argument that, well, it is a circuit court and maybe George Bush will win the election and, therefore, we will put Republicans on there instead of somebody such as Bonnie Campbell.

In 1992, as I pointed out, when the roles were reversed, we confirmed nine circuit court judges that year. We could have said the same thing: Bill Clinton may win, so don't confirm them. But we didn't do that. I believe the right course of action to follow is to report those out, let them have a debate. If people want to vote one way or the other, that is their right.

I will continue to take this floor every day until we adjourn sine die, or whatever we do here. I will begin to use every means at my disposal to get her name out of the Judiciary Committee and make sure she is treated fairly by this Senate and that at least we have a vote.

I yield the floor.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST--S. 3059

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. McCAIN. I am doing a unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the majority leader, in consultation with the Democrat leader, establish a date

REV_00256461

6

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - March 19, 1997)

Mr. BIDEN. The point I wish to make is this. When I was chairman of the committee and a Republican was President, we held, on average, a hearing for judges once every 2 weeks and had usually five judges, circuit court and district court, who we heard.

Last year we essentially had one hearing every other month and we had to fight to get three to four on the agenda to be heard.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to.

Mr. SARBANES. This is a chart that Senator Leahy, now the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee, used today in the course of the Merrick Garland debate which I think is enormously instructive. It is the number of judges confirmed during second Senate sessions in Presidential election years.

Mr. BIDEN. I got it.

Mr. SARBANES. Now, in 1996, with a Democratic President, President Clinton, and a Republican Senate, the Senate confirmed no judges for the court of appeals, none whatsoever, and 17 judges for the district court. Now, in 1992, the previous election year--that was when Mr. Bush was President----

Mr. BIDEN. And I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. And if I am not mistaken, the distinguished Senator from Delaware was the very able chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BIDEN. I did not say `able.' I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. I am suggesting the Senator is able. I am prepared to make that statement. We confirmed 11 court of appeals judges and 55--I repeat, 55--district judges in an election year. Now, that gives you some sense of how the Democratic majority in the Senate, led at the time by the able Judiciary Committee chairman, was dealing with this matter, essentially in a nonpolitical way.

In 1988, when I think, again, the Senator from Delaware was still the chairman of the Committee----

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. With President Reagan, a Republican President--again, in an election year--we confirmed 7 court of appeals judges and 35 district court judges. Actually, the 35 that we confirmed in that election year was better than the Republican Senate did for President Reagan in 1984 when they only confirmed 33 judges. In any event, clearly this performance in these years is in marked contrast to what happened in 1996 and what apparently is continuing now in 1997. Merrick Garland was the first judge approved this year.

Mr. BIDEN. If I may respond to the Senator, obviously the facts are correct, but I think it worth elaborating a little bit more on the facts. I saw my very able colleague, the present chairman of the Judiciary Committee, on television the other day, and he was talking about the number of judges that were `left hanging,' who were not confirmed and sent back to the administration at the end of 1992, the Bush administration. And he cited an accurate number. But as my very distinguished friend, who is, as well, a scholar, knows, there is an old expression attributed to Benjamin Disraeli, who said there are three kinds of lies: lies, damn lies, and statistics.

REV_00256462

What my able friend from Utah did not mention is that just like President Carter--Carter's judges is a separate charge we can go back to, but just like President Clinton, President Bush did not get his nominees up here until the end of the process.

In other words, they were late getting here. Notwithstanding the fact that he was late in getting his nominees up, the Senator may remember in the caucus over the objection of some Democrats who said the Republicans would never do this, I insisted we confirm judges up to the day we adjourned the Senate. During the last week the Senate was in that year, we confirmed seven judges. I could have easily just sneezed and they would not have been confirmed. And the fact is the reason why we did not confirm more is because we did not have time to hold the hearings and we were holding hearings on 20 or more a month.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, I can recall the Senator was holding hearings right up into the fall of the election year and judges were being brought to the floor of the Senate and being confirmed. And he is absolutely correct; there were some----

Mr. BIDEN. Republican judges.

Mr. SARBANES. Yes, Republican judges. And there were some Members on the Democratic side who said, why are you doing this? We are about to have an election and the result may give us control of the White House. And the Senator from Delaware said, look, we ought not to have politics play a heavy hand in the judicial confirmation process.

One of the worst things that is happening in the Senate is what amounts to a heavy politicizing of the judicial confirmation process that is taking place in this body, and that was reflected in the performance in 1996 as compared with the performance in 1992 when the Senator from Delaware did his very best to keep politics out of the process, to fill judicial posts and to let the judiciary function as an independent branch of our Government. What is happening here is extremely serious. And of course, the Senator, with his candor, came to the floor and sort of stripped away the veneer and laid out what is going on behind the scenes, which is a complete departure from past practices. When there were Republican Presidents, I did not play a role in whom the Presidents sent up to the Senate to be nominated and confirmed in the job----

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I was chairman or ranking member of that committee for 14 years. My distinguished colleague from Delaware is Senator Roth, who is my close friend. Every single Federal judge in the last 24 years who has been appointed in the district of Delaware or the third circuit has been appointed by Senator Roth. I did not expect, did not ask, and not once was ever consulted about who he would appoint, and I supported every one that he sent up. Not one single time was I made aware of anything other than after the fact, which is OK. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. SARBANES. That was the system.

Mr. BIDEN. That was the system. Not one single time. And I was chairman of the committee.

Now, I would point out one other thing to my friend. I want to have complete candor. If one considers taking judges based on their ideology and call that political, yes, we Democrats were political, as well. I am not complaining about that. I am not complaining about anybody who stands up and says I do not want Judge Smith, the President's nominee, because I think he will be bad on the court for the following reasons and comes to the floor and makes the case. I do not quarrel with that because I think that is the prerogative of the Senate and any Senator. What I am quarreling with is a different kind of politicizing, and that is drawing the conclusion that because I now control the Senate, I am not going to let the President of the United States have nominees whether or not I have an ideological problem with them.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield. It is worse than that. It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed. You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an up-or-down vote. That is the problem today. In other words, the other side will not let the process work so these nominees can come before the Senate for judgment.

Some may come before the Senate for judgment and be rejected by the Senate. That is OK.

Mr. BIDEN. Fair enough.

REV_00256463

Mr. SARBANES. But at least let the process work so the nominees have an opportunity and the judiciary has an opportunity to have these vacant positions filled so the court system does not begin to break down because of the failure to confirm new judges.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, let me give an example of what you just said. I know you know, but it is important for the Record.

I meet every year--I will not now because I am not the top Democrat on the committee. But every year for, I don't know, 14 or 15 years, I meet with what is called the Judicial Conference --a legislatively organized body where the Congress says the court can have such a function, where we look for recommendations.

I might add, by the way, you may remember when there was a Republican President named Reagan, the Senator from Delaware introduced a bill to increase the number of Federal judgeships by 84. Why did I do that? I did that because the Federal court came to us, the Judicial Conference, and said, `Here is our problem. We don't have enough judges to administer justice in a timely fashion in this country. And there is a backlog on all these criminal cases.'

I must admit to the Senator, when they came to me with that request, I knew the problem I was going to have. I was going to go into a Democratic caucus and say, by the way, a Republican President, who is a fine man but the most ideological guy we had in a long time, who announced he was going to appoint only very conservative judges, I was now going to give him 84 more than he had.

I realized that was not a politically wise thing for me to do. But, listening to the court, I did just that. My recollection is the Senator from Maryland stood with me and said, `I don't like it. I admit, I am not crazy about 84 more judges being appointed by Ronald Reagan. But the court needs to be filled.'

Now we have the strange happening, the courts come back to us and say--and they do this in a very scientific way--we not only need the vacancies filled, we need more judges than we have. They cite, as the Senator is very familiar with, they cite the backlog, they give the rationale that cases are being backed up. Guess what? The idea that we will even get a chance to discuss a judgeship bill, I predict to my friend from Maryland, on this floor is zero--zero. Not only that, to further make the point, this is the first time in the 24 years that I have been a Senator, in 24 years, the first time I have ever heard anybody come to the floor and say: You know, we should basically decommission judgeships.

The ninth circuit is the busiest circuit in America, out in California. One of our colleagues, a very wonderful guy, a nice guy, says, `I am not going to let any other judge be in the ninth circuit'--notwithstanding they have five vacancies, if I am not mistaken, and they are up to their ears in work. This started last year when I was in charge of the Democratic side. He said, `I am not going to let anybody go through until the ninth circuit splits into two circuits.'

I said, `Why do you want it to split?'

He said, `The reason I want it to split is I don't like the fact that California judges are making decisions that affect my State.'

The distinguished Senator from Idaho is shaking his head. He agrees. He is in that circuit. It is painful to point this out, but the reason why there is a Federal court is so there is not Illinois, Indiana, Idaho, California justice. There is one uniform interpretation of the Constitution. That is the reason we have a Federal circuit court of appeals.

Now, this is quite unusual. We have--and I was not referring to the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who is on the floor, when I said, `there was a Senator.' That is not to whom I am referring. But another one of our colleagues said he is not going to let anybody go through until there is a split, because he does not like the idea that decisions relating to his State are being made by judges who are not from his State or are not from States of similar size. That is, interestingly, an effectively rewrite of the Constitution of the United States of America. I do not think the Senator thought it in those terms, but that is literally what it is.

Now I am being told, OK, unless we, in fact, split the circuit--and by the way, I am not opposed to splitting the circuit. We split the fifth circuit because when we got to the point where Florida grew so big--Florida and Mississippi and Alabama and Louisiana, they are all in the same circuit--but they got so big, because of population growth, we said--the court recommended, we agreed--that it should be split into two circuits. We understand that. I am not opposed to that. I am not arguing about that. But the idea that someone says, `Until you do it my way, until you can assure me I am not going to be associated with that State of California, I am not going to let any vacancies be filled'----

REV_00256464

[Page: S2540] GPO's PDF

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, in effect what is happening is the court system is being held hostage, so it is not able to function properly as a court system should. I submit that is an irresponsible tactic to use. As Members of the Congress, the first branch of Government, we have a responsibility to see that the court system can function in a proper fashion.

The Senator from Delaware, when he was chairman of the committee, always measured up to that responsibility, I think often taking a lot of political heat for doing it. But he was out to make sure the system could function. He had Republican Presidents nominating judges. He processed their nominations. He brought them to the floor of the Senate. He gave the Senate a chance to vote on them up or down for those people to get confirmed. That process is breaking down.

Mr. BIDEN. I voted for all of them but seven, I might add. There were only seven times that I voted against any of those nominees.

Mr. SARBANES. That process, I repeat, is now breaking down.

The other thing that is happening, as he says, instead of disagreeing with the qualifications of a nominee, the other side says, `We don't really need the position.'

Mr. BIDEN. That is right.

Mr. SARBANES. And that is what we heard on Merrick Garland. In fact, when he first came up here, he was nominated for the 12th position on the D.C. circuit. They said, `We don't need that position. We have nothing against Merrick. He is a wonderful fellow, of course. We just don't think we need that 12th position.' Of course, that does a lot for Merrick Garland. He's sitting, waiting to join the court. Then someone already on the court took senior status, and then they had two vacant positions, the 11th and 12th. Merrick Garland is nominated. He's now up for the 11th position; not the 12th position, the 11th position. The majority is right back here on the floor and it says, `We don't need this position.' This is the 11th position. They never made that argument last year when he was going for the 12th position. Then they said we need the 11th, we don't need the 12th. Now they are back, some, today--fortunately, they did not prevail--saying we do not need either the 11th or the 12th position.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield on that point, it is probably going to get him in trouble, but I want to compliment the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee did not buy into that argument. The chairman of the committee took the position on this that we should act, and he had been pushing this for some time.

Again, I see my distinguished friend, who now I work with in another capacity, as the minority--the euphemism we use is ranking member--of the Foreign Relations Committee. We have much less disagreement than we have on some issues relating to judges. But, with him here, I can remember that during the last days when the Senator from Delaware was trying to push through judges--on October 8, 1992, the last day of the session, with President Bush as President of the United States, the Senator from Delaware pushed through seven Republican judges--the last day.

I will bet you that has not happened very often in this place with Democrats or Republicans: The last day, seven.

The reason I mention that is one of my distinguished colleagues--we have very different views, but I like him a lot--walked up to me and he was from a State where there were two Republican Senators, and two of those judges were his. He walked up and shook my hand. This will not go in the Record--it will go in the Record, but his name won't, but my colleagues will know who he is. He shook my hand and said, `Joe, you're a nice guy. I really appreciated it.' He says, `Of course, you know I would never do this for you.'

I like him because he is straightforward and honest. He meant it, and that's why we get along so well. I am not referring to the Senator from North Carolina. He said, `I'd never do this for you.' The point being, not that Biden is a good guy or Biden is a stupid guy, the point being that the court is in desperate trouble in a number of jurisdictions. In southern California and south Florida, and in a number of places where there are drug cases that are backed up, a number of places where there are significant civil case backlogs, a number of places where population growth is straining the court, they need these vacancies filled.

I respectfully suggest that it is a rare--it is a rare--district court nominee by a Republican President or a Democratic President who, if you first believe they are honest and have integrity, have any reason to vote against them. I voted for Judge Bork, for example, on the circuit court, because Judge Bork I believed to be an honest and decent man, a brilliant constitutional scholar with whom I disagreed, but who stood there and had to, as a circuit court judge, swear to uphold the law of the land, which also meant follow Supreme Court decisions. A circuit court cannot overrule the Supreme Court.

So any member who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court.

So what I want to say, and I will yield because I see my friend from South Carolina--North Carolina, I beg your pardon. I am used to dealing with our close friend in the Judiciary Committee who is from South Carolina. I seem to have the luck of getting Carolinians to deal with, and I enjoy them. I will yield the floor by saying, I will come back to the floor at an appropriate time in the near term, immediately when we get back from the recess, and I will, as they say, Madam President, fill in the blanks in terms of what the absolute detail and each of the numbers are, because I have tried to recall some of them off the top of my head, not having intended to speak to this issue when I walked across the floor earlier.

Let it suffice to say at the moment, at least for me, that it is totally appropriate for any U.S. Senator to voice his or her opposition to any nominee for the Court, and they have a full right to do that. In my study of and teaching of constitutional law and separation of powers issues, there is nothing in the Constitution that sets the standard any Senator has to apply, whether they vote for or against a judge.

But I also respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated is entitled to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor.

We had a tie vote in the committee, Madam President, on one of the Supreme Court nominees. I was urged by those who opposed him--and I opposed this particular nominee--to not report it to the floor. My reading of the Constitution, though, is the Judiciary Committee is not mentioned in the Constitution. The Judiciary Committee is not mentioned. The Senate is. We only in the Judiciary Committee have the right to give advice to the Senate, but it is the Senate that gives its advice and consent on judicial nominations.

I sincerely hope, and I have urged the administration to confer with Republican Senators before they nominate anyone from that Senator's State. I think that is totally appropriate. I think it is appropriate, as well, that Republican Senators, with a Democratic President, have some input, which Democrats never had with the last two Republican Presidents. I think that is appropriate.

<<< >>>

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

REV_00256466

8

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

NOMINATIONS OF CARLOS R. MORENO, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA AND CHRISTINE O. C. MILLER, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, TO BE A JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS (Senate - February 03, 1998)

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I strongly support the nominations of Carlos Moreno and Christine Miller to serve as federal judges.

Judge Moreno is superbly qualified to serve as a federal judge in the Central District of California. He is a graduate of Yale University, Harvard Business School, and Stanford Law School. Currently, he is a judge on the Los Angeles Superior Court. As a member of that court's Trial Delay Reduction Committee he was instrumental in establishing and enforcing policies that successfully reduced trial backlogs in Los Angeles County. At a time when lengthy backlogs are also plaguing the federal courts, Judge Moreno's experience will be an important asset for California's Central District Court.

Judge Miller is also well qualified to continue her service on the United States Court of Federal Claims. She has served on that court for the past fifteen years, and President Clinton's nomination of her for a second fifteen-year term is a tribute to her ability and leadership.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my concern that the Senate has still not had a chance to vote on the nomination of Margaret Morrow to the federal district court for the Central District of California. Ms. Morrow was first nominated in May 1996. She was approved by the Judiciary Committee in June last year, and it is long past time for the Senate to vote on her nomination.

On average, it is taking twice as long for Senate Republicans to confirm President Clinton's nominees as it took for Democrats to act on President Bush's nominations. But I am especially concerned about the Republicans' record of subjecting women who are nominated for federal judgeships to far greater delays than men.

Women nominated to the federal courts are four times--four times--more likely than men to be held up by the Republican Senate for more than a year.

Last year, the Senate confirmed 30 men, but only 6 women. And, by confirming only 36 judges, the Senate condemned many of our nation's busiest courts to even lengthier delays in processing their civil cases.

There is no question that Margaret Morrow possesses the necessary qualifications to be confirmed. She is a Harvard-educated attorney and a partner in a prestigious California law firm. She is the first woman to serve as the president of the California Bar Association. She is a well-respected attorney and a role model for women in the legal profession.

Yet action on her nomination has been delayed--like nine other nominees who have been waiting for more than 18 months--because the Republicans are playing politics and preventing needed judicial positions from being filled.

When even a Republican Chief Justice criticizes the Republican Congress for refusing to move more quickly to confirm judges, you know something's wrong. The Chief Justice is deeply concerned about the large number of judicial vacancies on the federal courts. There are too few judges to handle the workload.

The bottleneck in the Senate is jeopardizing the court system and undermining the quality of justice. Fewer than half of President Clinton's nominees have been confirmed.

REV_00256467

We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote . If our Republican colleagues don't like them, vote against them. But give them a vote .

The distinguished majority leader has rightly noted that the process of confirming judges is time-consuming. The Senate should take care to ensure that only individuals acceptable to both the President and the Senate are confirmed. The President and the Senate do not always agree. But it should not take longer to consider women than it does to consider men.

Some Republicans claim they have slowed the confirmation process to protect the federal courts from `judicial activism.' But this argument is a smokescreen. If President Clinton is actually nominating judicial activists, then why is it that these nominees are approved overwhelmingly when the Senate is finally allowed to vote on them? The closest vote that we have had on any nominee in this Congress was the 76 to 30 vote in favor of Ann Aiken last week.

The claim that Clinton judges are activist judges is a transparent ruse being used to slow down the confirmation process. The reason is obvious. The Republican majority in Congress is doing all it can to prevent a Democratic President from naming judges to the federal courts. The courts are suffering, and so is the nation.

In some areas of the country , people have to wait years to have their cases even heard in court. And then they have to wait years more for overburdened judges to find time to issue their decisions. Families, workers, small businesses, women and minorities have traditionally looked to the courts to resolve disputes. The lack of federal judges makes the swift resolution of their cases impossible.

The number of cases filed in the federal appeals courts has grown by 11 percent over the last six years. The average time between filing and disposition has also increased. Courts with long-standing vacancies are in even worse shape.

In California's Central District Court, the Court to which both Carlos Moreno and Margaret Morrow have been nominated, the caseload has grown by 15 percent since 1994. The time people have to wait for their civil cases to be resolved has increased by 11 percent. In that district, over 300 pending civil cases are more than three years old.

Across the country , real people are being hurt. In the Central District of Illinois, a disabled Vietnam veteran who was fired after enduring harassment from his co-workers has been waiting over three and a half years for a resolution to his case.

In the Southern District of Texas, 4,000 victims of a student loan fraud are waiting for the outcome of a class action suit that has been pending for almost eight years.

In the District Court of South Carolina, there is still no decision in a suit filed more than six years ago against the state's apportionment laws. The outcome of this case will affect hundreds of thousands of citizens. It goes to the heart of whether the basic constitutional principle of `one person, one vote' is being fairly applied. The last communication the lead plaintiff received from the Court was in June of last year.

In the Southern District of Florida, Julio Vasquez--a U.S. citizen migrant worker--broke his leg in 1989 in a boarding house provided by his employer. To this day, nearly nine years later, Mr. Vasquez has never received sufficient medical attention, and his injury affects his ability to work. He is still waiting for the judge's ruling in his case.

These are typical victims of the vacancy crisis in the federal courts. They are hard-working Americans injured on the job--citizens seeking to exercise their right to vote --students trying to get an education--disabled veterans searching for justice.

I commend my colleagues for bringing two distinguished nominees to a vote today. I hope with this new year we will see a new day in moving ahead to fill the vacancies in our courts and end these unconscionable delays.

[Page: S296] GPO's PDF

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

REV_00256468

9

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 1 of 2 | Printer Friendly Display - 5,428 bytes.[Help]

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS -- (Senate - September 21, 1999)

[Page: S11102] GPO's PDF

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, for several months, many of us have been concerned about the Senate's continuing delays in acting on President Clinton's nominees to the federal courts. Since the Senate convened in January, we have confirmed only 17 judges and 43 are still waiting for action. These delays can only be described as an abdication of the Senate's constitutional responsibility to work with the President and ensure the integrity of our federal courts.

At the current rate it will take years to confirm the remainder of the judicial nominees currently pending before the Judiciary Committee. This kind of partisan, Republican stonewalling is irresponsible and unacceptable. It's hurting the courts and it's hurting the country. It's the worst kind of ``do nothing'' tactic by this ``do nothing'' Senate.

The continuing delays are a gross perversion of the confirmation process that has served this country well for more than 200 years. When the Founders wrote the Constitution and gave the Senate the power of advice and consent on Presidential nominations, they never intended the Senate to work against the President, as this Senate is doing, by engaging in a wholesale stall and refusing to act on large numbers of the President's nominees.

Currently, there are 61 vacancies in the federal judiciary, and several more are likely to arise in the coming months, as more and more judges retire from the federal bench. Of the 61 current vacancies, 22 have been classified as ``judicial emergencies'' by the Judicial Conference of the United States, which means they have been vacant for 18 months or more.

The vast majority of these nominees are clearly well-qualified, and would be confirmed by overwhelming votes of approval. It would be an embarrassment for our Republican colleagues to vote against them. It should be even more embarrassing for the Republican majority in the Senate to abdicate their clear constitutional responsibility to do what they were elected to do.

The delay has been especially unfair to nominees who are women and minorities. Last year, two-thirds of the nominees who waited the longest for confirmation were women or minorities. Already, in this Congress, the Senate is on track to repeat last year's dismal performance. Of the 11 nominees who have been waiting more than a year to be confirmed, 7 are women or minorities. On the 50th anniversary of President Truman's appointment of the first African American to the Court of Appeals--Judge William Hastie--the Republican leadership should be ashamed of this record, particularly given the caliber of the distinguished African American, Latino, and female nominees waiting for confirmation.

[Page: S11103] GPO's PDF

For example, Marsha Berzon, Richard Paez, and Ronnie White have waited too long--far too long--for a vote on the Senate floor. Ms. Berzon is an outstanding attorney with an impressive record. She has written more than 100 briefs and petitions to the Supreme Court, and has argued four cases there. When she was first nominated last year, she received strong recommendations and had a bipartisan list of supporters, including our former colleague, Senator Jim McClure, and Fred Alvarez, a Commissioner on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and Assistant Secretary of Labor under President Reagan. Her nomination is also supported by major law enforcement organizations, and by many of those who have opposed her in court.

REV_00256471

Ms. Berzon was first nominated in January 1998--20 months later, the Senate has still not voted on her nomination.

The Senate is also irresponsibly refusing to vote on two other distinguished nominees--Judge Ronnie White, an African American Supreme Court judge in the state of Missouri, and California District Court Judge Richard Paez. Judge White was nominated to serve on the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri more than two years ago. Judge Paez was first nominated three years ago--three years ago--to serve on the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

It is true that some Senators have voiced concerns about these nominations. But that should not prevent a roll call vote which gives every Senator the opportunity to vote ``yes'' or ``no.'' These nominees and their families deserve a decision by the Senate. Parties with cases, waiting to be heard by the federal courts deserve a decision by the Senate. Ms. Berzon, Judge White, and Judge Paez deserve a decision by this Senate.

While Republican leaders play politics with the federal judiciary, countless individuals and businesses across the country are forced to endure needless delays in obtaining the justice they deserve. Justice is being delayed and denied in courtrooms across the country because of the unconscionable tactics of the Senate Republican majority.

It is long past time to act on these and other nominations. I urge my Republican colleagues to end this partisan stall and allow the President's nominees to have the vote by the Senate that they deserve.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

REV_00256472

10

THIS SEARCH | THIS DOCUMENT | THIS CR ISSUE | GO TO
Next Hit | Forward | Next Document | New CR Search
Prev Hit | Back | Prev Document | HomePage
Hit List | Best Sections | Daily Digest | Help
Contents Display

FEDERAL VACANCIES REFORM ACT OF 1998 (Senate - September 28, 1998)

Mr. DURBIN. Thank you, Madam President.

I thank the Senator from Michigan for yielding.

Madam President, I rise today to oppose this effort to bring to a close debate on the Vacancies Act reform legislation, S.2176. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting against cloture.

Without so much as a blink, a breath, or a blush, a cloture motion on the bill itself was immediately filed last Thursday morning on the heels of the Senate's agreement to proceed to this bill. This quick flinch maneuver is an attempt to deny Members the opportunity to offer meaningful relevant amendments to improve this legislation, such as those I intend to pursue to address the Senate's responsibility to act expeditiously on pending nominations.

Before I outline the importance of assessing both sides of the process and outline my specific reservations about the bill as presently drafted, I wish to emphasize that I share the convictions and concerns of the sponsors, notably Senators Byrd, Thurmond, and Thompson, about the critical need to preserve and protect the constitutional prerogative of the Senate to advise and consent to Presidential nominations to executive branch positions. I am sure that I am not alone in this view.

I appreciate the sponsors' zeal to remedy what has grown to be, numerous instances and examples throughout the government, of outright challenges to Senate authority by ignoring the Vacancies Act. There has been flagrant and contagious disregard for the application of the existing law as the sole mechanism for temporarily filling advise and consent positions while awaiting the nomination and confirmation of the official candidate.

I wholeheartedly concur that this law needs clarification so that moves to end-run its application are halted. The bill as advanced by the Governmental Affairs Committee laudably addresses this exclusivity question.

Thus, I do not oppose efforts to bolster the Vacancies Act as the exclusive mechanism (with limited and explicit exceptions) for the president to designate officials to temporarily fill vacancies in positions requiring Senate confirmation.

Unfortunately, in its current form this bill goes well beyond that justifiable but limited goal in several respects. Moreover, it fails to go far enough to address the Senate's duty to timely act on nominations.

While the Administration may well bear some responsibility for the slow pace of nominations, I am dismayed that the Senate would want to so severely restrict the ability to fill vacant positions temporarily and to conduct the people's business while at the same time impeding the nominations process and confirming nominees at a snail's pace.

The Senate bears partial responsibility for the time it takes to nominate officials for Senate confirmed positions. This Congress has subjected the Administration's nominees to unprecedented scrutiny, using almost any prior alleged indiscretion--no matter how trivial--by a nominee as an excuse to delay or prevent a vote.

Senators have also interjected themselves into the President's nominations process to an unparalleled degree. As a result, that front-end process --the selection, recruitment, and vetting of candidates--takes longer than ever before.

The nomination and confirmation process , it has been observed, is one of `the President proposing, the Senate disposing.' If the Senate expects adherence to the rigid parameters this bill would impose on advancing candidates, we as its Members need to be ready and willing to diligently consider these candidates for public office and take prompt and deliberate action to confirm or reject them.

REV_00256473

The Senate has frequently declined to exercise its advice and consent responsibility in a timely and appropriate manner. Too often, nominations die in Committee, languish interminably on the Executive Calendar, or simply take months or years to move through this Chamber.

Just as the President has a responsibility to forward nominees to the Senate in a timely fashion, we in the Senate have a concomitant obligation to discharge our constitutional prerogative of advice and consent on those candidates in an efficient and expeditious fashion.

We cannot simply confront practical deficiencies in the front-end phase of the process for recruiting and evaluating qualified candidates and ignore our own responsibilities.

We owe it not only to the Executive, but to the American public, to offer--not withhold--our advice and where appropriate, our consent.

I have filed and certainly hope to have an opportunity to offer some relevant amendments designed to address those instances of dilatory Senate Committee processing and floor inaction once a nominee is advanced to the calendar.

One amendment would provide that any nomination submitted to the Senate that is pending before a Senate committee for 150 calendar days shall on the day following such 150th day, be discharged and placed on the Senate executive calendar and be considered as favorably reported.

Another amendment would require the Senate to take up for a vote any nomination which has been pending on the Executive Calendar in excess of 150 days. Such Senate consideration must occur within 5 calendar days of the 150th day. In effect, it creates an end point after which we can no longer hold up a nominee.

I am not suggesting that we would give our consent to all of these nominees. I am basically saying that this process should come to a close . The Senate should vote. It should make its decision.

If we want to reasonably time-limit the front end of the process --with which I do not disagree--and promptly fill vacancies, we need to be equally willing to build some finality into the back-end of the process and impose some time limits on our own consideration of these candidates.

The first problem I find with this bill is that filling positions in the Government requires time far longer than that specified in this bill.

I have an amendment which suggests increasing the 150-day period to 210 days. I am sure people are wondering, if they are following this debate, why it would take so long for any kind of process to review a nominee. Well, as it turns out, the average number of days that a vacancy exists prior to a Senate nomination for the White House is 313 days. What could possibly take 313 days in investigating the qualifications of an individual to fill the job?

Consider all of the things that are going to be investigated. Not only the lengthy forms the individual must fill out, ethics disclosures, financial statements, fingerprints and the like, but also an FBI investigation, a Federal Bureau of Investigation report on that person, the opportunity for groups to contact the White House and say that they either oppose or support the individual, the opportunity for Members of Congress to come forward and suggest to the administration that they either support that nominee or they oppose it. And as it turns out, some of these things such as an FBI report may not happen as quickly as some people imagine. We have heaped on that agency additional responsibilities every year. We entrust them with very important jobs. We tell them that we want them to fingerprint and make certain that those who want to be citizens of the United States, in fact, have no criminal record in any foreign country. That is a valid question, but it is an additional administrative responsibility.

The list goes on and on and on. As a consequence, when the administration comes to this agency, and it is only one example, and asks for a timely review of an individual nominated for a position, they sometimes have to wait in line. And while they wait the clock is ticking.

REV_00256474

And consider this as well. As a result of this legislation, saying the administration shall only have 150 days, what if in the midst of this process --say, for example, 4 or 5 months into the process --the administration reaches a conclusion that the individual should not go forward and the nomination should not be sent to the Senate. Does the clock start to run again? No. The clock continues to run 150 days, so the new nominee, starting over going through all these processes, trying to clear all these hurdles, is still burdened by the original clock ticking at 150 days. I don't think it is realistic. I don't think it is fair. Merely adding 30 additional days to the current 120-day timeframe within which an acting official may temporarily perform the duties and functions of the vacant office unless the Senate has forwarded a nominee to the Senate within that span is impractical. It is unrealistic, and I do not believe it is adequate.

[Page: S11029] GPO's PDF

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Illinois has suggested an amendment, Madam President, as far as I am concerned, I could accept. Why not let us invoke cloture; that amendment is certainly a germane amendment, and have the Senator put it up for action by the Senate? I am one who would vote for it.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia, and I certainly appreciate those comments. But we are told by the Senate Parliamentarian that the amendment would be relevant but not germane, and therefore any action for cloture which would put a burden on the Senate to act within a certain period of time on nominees that are sent would be wiped away, or could be wiped away by this cloture motion.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. I may have misunderstood the Senator. I thought the Senator was suggesting that the 150 days is not enough and that he would like to see 30 additional days. That would certainly seem to be germane as far as I am concerned.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will allow me to respond, that amendment is germane. The only other amendments which would impose a responsibility on the Senate to move a nominee out of committee within 150 days after it is sent from the White House or to move it off the Executive Calendar for a vote within 150 days, I am told by the Senate Parliamentarian, may not be allowed if cloture is invoked.

[Page: S11030] GPO's PDF

Mr. BYRD. Yes. I expect the Parliamentarian is right on that. I would not argue with that, nor would I probably support it.

If the Senator will allow me, the Constitution doesn't say that the Senate has to confirm the nominees. It simply says the President cannot have the full responsibility and power himself to name people to important positions. This is a matter that has to be shared under the Constitution between the President and the Senate. This constitutional provision--the appointments clause--I am trying to protect today is being given the runaround by the Justice Department and several other Departments, and I want to protect that constitutional power that is given to the Senate. As to whether or not the Senate acts on nominations, the Constitution doesn't require the Senate to act, but I think that the Senate does act, and would continue to act, on nominations within a reasonable period of time.

Having been the majority leader of the Senate during three different Congresses, I can say to the distinguished Senator that when I was majority leader we had nominations left on the calendar at the end of a Congress, in all three of the Congresses in which I served as majority leader. When we adjourned sine die that Executive Calendar was not wiped clean. We all did the best we could, but we did leave some nominations on the calendar. And I certainly share the Senator's feeling that the Senate ought to act expeditiously, in a reasonable fashion, but when it comes to requiring the Senate to act on all nominations, I don't think the Constitution requires that. And I might have to part company with the Senator at that point. But some of his other suggestions, I think, are very well made.

REV_00256475

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia. It pains me to believe we would have a difference of opinion, but those things do occur. I am certain the Senator as majority leader did his constitutional responsibility--there has never been a doubt about that--and also acted with dispatch in a timely manner.

I think the Senator makes a good point. We not only want to protect the clear constitutional responsibility and right of the Senate in this process , we want to bring the best men and women forward to continue serving our Government, and we want it all done in a timely fashion. My concern with this bill is it addresses one side of the equation. It says to the executive branch, you have to move in a more timely fashion to bring these men and women to the Senate for consideration. If we are clearly looking for filling vacancies in a timely fashion, that is only half the process . Once the nomination is brought to the Senate, we should move in a timely fashion, too. Otherwise, using the old reference to equity, we don't come to this argument with clean hands, and that is why I think there should be some symmetry here in the requirement of the executive as well as the legislative branch.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. And I thank him for yielding. The Senator, as I think I understand, suggested that if we are going to deal with one part of the equation, namely, the nominating process by the executive, and protect ourselves in that regard, we ought to be equally interested in dealing with the other half of the equation by requiring action by the Senate to confirm or reject nominees.

May I with great respect suggest--and I am doing this for the record. I am sure I am not ahead of the Senator in thinking this--I am trying to address the constitutional side of the equation and stop the administration, not only this administration but also previous administrations, from conducting a runaround of the constitutional advice and consent powers of the Senate. I am suggesting we deal with that constitutional side of the equation.

Now, the other side, which the distinguished Senator mentions, if he will pardon my saying so, I think what he is talking about is the political side of the equation. That part is not included in the Constitution. The Constitution doesn't require the Senate to act on any nomination. But that is the political side. I would like to deal with the constitutional side, and that is the purpose of this legislation. And then we can do the best we can on dealing with the political side. The Senator is quite right; neither side comes into this matter with perfectly clean hands. That is an old equity maxim.

It reminds me of Themistocles who happened to say, one day, `that he looked upon it as the principal excellence of a general to know and foresee the designs of the enemy;' Aristides answered, `that is indeed a necessary qualification; but there is another very excellent one, and highly becoming a general, and that is to have clean hands.' The same thing would apply here. Neither party has clean hands when it comes to moving all nominations sent by a President to an up or down vote. As majority leader during the Presidential years of Mr. Carter and again during the 100th Congress, I can remember that the calendars were not always cleared of items that had been reported by committees when adjournments sine die occurred. I hope that we will not get bogged down in this way about a purely political matter when a far more important constitutional matter, important to the prerogatives of the Senate in the matter of appointments is at hand.

And let me state to the Senator the number of nominees that were left on the executive calendar when I was majority leader, at the time of sine die adjournment.

When I was majority leader--I will just take one Congress, for example, the 100th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator have an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Reserving the right to object, and I surely hope I will not, I wonder how much time remains.

Mr. BYRD. And that that time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 21 minutes; the Senator from Tennessee has 9 minutes. Is there objection to the request?

REV_00256476

Mr. LEVIN. The modified request, we have no objection to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I will just say this. To show that we all sometimes fail to have clean hands, when I was majority leader in the second session of the 100th Congress--I don't mind saying this--the civilian nominations totaled 516, including 112 nominations carried over from the first session; 335 of these were confirmed, 170 were unconfirmed, and 11 were withdrawn. So, this is a failing that can be ascribed to both Democrats and Republicans when they are in control of the Congress.

But, yet, I come back to my original premise; namely, that the Constitution did not require me to call up all those nominations off the calendar. It didn't say I had to do that. But it did say, with respect to nominations, that appointments to vacancies were to be shared by the President and the Senate, and that is what this bill is contemplating to enforce and what I am fighting for today.

I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

I would just say that I can't believe that I hurried back from Chicago this morning to come to the floor of the U.S. Senate to actually engage my friend and fellow Senator from West Virginia in any debate about the Constitution. I plead nolo contendere. I am not able to join you in that. And I can't even reach back in Greek or Roman history for any kind of solace or defense.

I am not sure who the author was, it could have been a Greek or Roman, maybe a West Virginian, or even an Illinoisan, who once said the profound statement, `What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander,' and that is what I am attempting to argue here. That is, if we are going to impose on the executive branch a requirement to produce the nominee in 150 days, or if the time goes beyond that to suffer the possibility of not having an acting person in that slot, then we should accept the responsibility on the Senate side as well, to act in a timely manner on these nominees.

[Page: S11031] GPO's PDF

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I hope he will forgive me.

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. I am not here to engage in challenging his statements. He is one of the fine Members of this Senate; one of the newer Members, in a way. He served a long time in the House of Representatives. He comes to the Senate well prepared to be a good Senator, and he is a good Senator.

But, again, I am concerned about that part of the responsibility which the Constitution places on both the executive and the legislative. I think the legislative is being given the run-around by the Judiciary Department. It has not just been during this administration. It has been, as I say, going on for over 25 years, and this is an opportunity for us to correct that, I hope we would vote for cloture and perhaps some of the Senators' amendments--which are certainly worthy of consideration and probably of adoption, some of them--could be given a chance to be offered and debated. I hope we would invoke cloture, indeed, to have an opportunity to do that.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

I think what we have found is that rarely do we visit this rather obscure area of the law, the Vacancies Act. I am hoping in this visitation on one side, that we have some balance and impose requirements on the Senate to act in a timely fashion, as we impose a requirement on the executive branch to report a nominee in a timely fashion. But I also hope the time periods that we choose are realistic. I think anyone involved in this process at any level understands that when a person's name comes up in nomination, they are subjected to far greater scrutiny than ever before. It discourages many good people from even trying public service, and I am sure that many have been disappointed.

<<< >>>

REV_00256477

13

Content and programming copyright 2001 Cable News Network Transcribed under license by eMediaMillWorks, Inc. (f/k/a Federal Document Clearing House, Inc.). Formatting Copyright 2001 eMediaMillWorks, Inc. (f/k/a Federal Document Clearing House, Inc.). All rights reserved. No quotes from the materials contained herein may be used in any media without attribution to Cable News Network. This transcript may not be copied or resold in any media.

CNN

SHOW: CNN EVANS, NOVAK, HUNT & SHIELDS 17:30

June 9, 2001 Saturday

Transcript # 060900CN.V38

SECTION: News; Domestic

LENGTH: 3498 words

HEADLINE: Harry Reid Discusses the Politics of the Democrat-Controlled Senate

GUESTS: Harry Reid

BYLINE: Mark Shields; Robert Novak

HIGHLIGHT:
Democratic Senate Majority Whip Harry Reid of Nevada discusses the politics behind James Jeffords' decision to become an independent. Finally, he talks about the agenda and priorities of the Democrat- controlled Senate

BODY:
THIS IS A RUSH TRANSCRIPT. THIS COPY MAY NOT BE IN ITS FINAL FORM AND MAY BE UPDATED.

MARK SHIELDS, CO-HOST: I'm Mark Shields. Robert Novak and I will question the No. 2 Democrat in the now Democratic-controlled U.S. Senate.

ROBERT NOVAK, CO-HOST: He is Senate Majority Whip Harry Reid of Nevada.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

NOVAK (voice-over): Party control of the Senate shifted this week for the first time ever during the course of a session.

SEN. THOMAS DASCHLE (D-SD), MAJORITY LEADER: I believe I have the moral authority as any majority leader would have with a 51-49 margin and I look forward to working with Senator Lott all the way through on all the issues.

SEN. TRENT LOTT (R-MS), MINORITY LEADER: A number of Democrats came right out last week and basically said, "Well, this is the end of national missile defense; this is the end of, you know, an opportunity to have additional oil supply in the ANWR of Alaska." But worst of all, that "this was the end to conservative judges and we're going to have a litmus test."

NOVAK: Senator Trent Lott might still be majority leader were it not for Harry Reid. He gave up his top Democratic slot on the Environment and Public Works Committee so that Senator James Jeffords of Vermont could still be a committee chairman if he left the Republican Party.

Elected to the Nevada legislature in 1968, Senator Reid later served as lieutenant governor of Nevada and chairman of the Nevada Gaming Commission. He was first elected to Congress in 1982. After four years in the House, he was elected to the Senate in 1986. He was elected to a third term in 1998 by only 428 votes, but returning to Washington was chosen by his Democratic colleagues as assistant party leader, or whip.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

NOVAK: Senator Reid, there seems to be some different versions of the conversion of James Jeffords from the Republican side of the aisle to voting in the Democratic Caucus. Are you saying, Senator, that he made this as a leap of faith -- as you say, as an evolutionary process rather than a deal? There was no promise that he would be given your slot on the Environment Committee? And the fact that he became a committee chairman after he decided was just a bonus for him?

SEN. HARRY REID (D-NV), SENATE MAJORITY WHIP: Well, you know, it's interesting. I talked to Jim Jeffords this week, and I said, "You know, I just finished an interview with Mary McGrory and she asked me where we held all of our meetings." I said, "Except for one, we held it right here, didn't we, Jim?"

You know, we met on the Senate floor, once in a while as he passed going to the bathroom. But these long meetings of ours weren't very long -- short conversations on the Senate floor, and we had one long meeting in his office.

If he were looking for a good deal, he should have stayed as a Republican as far as goodies. They offered a line to become part of the leadership. They allowed to have him -- they would waive the term limit rule they had and allow him to stay on as chairman of the committee. And he had all kinds of things, as I've said. He had the kitchen sink and everything filled up in it.

All my conversations with Jim Jeffords were very above-board. We talked about the problems he was having in the party. I indicated to him that I'd like to have him on the committee, and, of course, I have a lot to do. And there came a time during the very end of the conversation that we would talk to him about the chairmanship of the committee. But that deal was not made until Friday -- the Thursday after he announced his change.

NOVAK: But surely -- the rumor was all over the Hill, Senator Reid: Surely he knew that he was going to get that chairmanship, even if he didn't have it written in your blood.

REID: Bob, I have no doubt that he knew that he could get that if he wanted it, but it was not a quid pro quo. If he were looking for some goodies, he should have stayed where he was.

NOVAK: Senator Reid, actually on the tax bill, which he voted for, there were more Democratic defections than Republican defections. And I wonder, since you're the No. 2 person in the leadership, when you see that your new chairman of the Finance Committee, Max Baucus, standing by President Bush's side at the signing ceremony the other day, just exulting in a bill that you and Senator Daschle have said is a terrible bill, does that give you a little heartburn? Are you upset with Max Baucus?

REID: Bob, Senator Daschle and I have made the decision we're going to look forward, not back. I have served with Max Baucus ever since I've been back here. He is a good man. He is going to be a great chairman of the Finance Committee. He did what he did as a result of what he thought was the best thing for the state of Montana and the country.

REV_00256479

Now, I may disagree with him, but I think generally speaking Max Baucus and I agree on 95 percent of the things he has done and will do. So I'm not concerned at all about his having joined with Grassley.

I think the picture of the president with Max Baucus is a picture we need to magnify. We need more pictures like that, and we're going to have them. We're going to have more bipartisan legislation.

SHIELDS: Speaking of other pictures, Senator Reid, your conversion skills have been established in bringing over Senator Jeffords. What about John McCain? Are there overtures being made and conversations being held? Do you think that John McCain will move to independent status?

REID: If any of the three of us said we thought John McCain was going to do this or that, on Monday no one would be right. No one knows from day to day what John McCain's going to do. John McCain is a certified independent. He is going to do what he thinks is the right thing to do.

John McCain and I -- he and I came to Washington together in 1982, and he's one step ahead of me in seniority because Arizona has more people in it than Nevada. He and I literally have been side by side since we came here.

But I know John McCain, and John McCain is somebody that I don't know.

(LAUGHTER)

SHIELDS: That's a good answer.

Senator Reid, your leader and your friend Tom Daschle had this to say about Yucca Mountain, the potential repository for nuclear waste in Nevada. I'll put it up on the board. It says, "I think the Yucca Mountain issue is dead. As long as we're in the majority, it's dead." He said that on the 1st of June, 2001.

Do you agree with that? I mean, is there no possibility of any nuclear waste finding its way into the state of Nevada?

REID: That statement created so much controversy, some of the great journalists in America wrote about it.

SHIELDS: And some others, too.

(LAUGHTER)

REID: Interestingly enough, Frank Murkowski this week has said that he doubts very seriously if Yucca Mountain will be a place where they're going to store nuclear waste.

SHIELDS: But he's in the minority. You're in the majority.

REID: Well, but he has been an advocate for nuclear waste as long as I've been back here. And I think the situation we have is right now Yucca Mountain has cost about $8 billion. The price tag on Yucca Mountain is $58 billion. And I think that is without any consideration given to the transportation aspects of it.

REV_00256480

Tom Daschle is a realist. Frank Murkowski is a realist. Pete Domenici, who serves on the Subcommittee on Energy and Water with me -- we provide the money for Yucca Mountain and other things nuclear in this country -- he said to me that he thinks that the standards issued by Governor Whitman this week also indicate that it's going to be extremely difficult, if not impossible, at NRC to certify it.

REID: So, in short, what should we do with it? Leave it where it is? Dry cast storage containment? Or as Pete Domenici wants to, start looking at transportation. Daschle and Murkowski are right.

SHIELDS: But doesn't this effectively say, "This is the end of the growth of the nuclear industry in this country during an energy crisis"?

REID: Quite to the contrary, Bob. I think if we decide to do something about -- Bob. Pardon me, Mark.

If we decide to do something with producing nuclear power, solve the problem with nuclear waste and we can get on board right away.

NOVAK: Senator Reid, the last I saw there was over 60 votes in the Senate, certainly over 50 votes, that's in favor of a Yucca Mountain repository. So when you say, and Senator Daschle says, that there's not going to be a bill, are you saying that you are going to use all the parliamentary wiles you can, the filibuster and other things, to keep it from coming to an up-and-down vote on the floor? And is this going to be true of the other things that Senator Lott was talking about, like national missile defense. Are you going to keep the things you don't like from coming to an up-and-down vote on the floor?

REID: Bob, one of the interesting things about nuclear waste, it doesn't take new legislation. Nothing has to be done. Yucca Mountain is already on legislation has been passed. It was passed in 1982. The problem is that the scientific community is beginning to turn their nose up. The money going in there is going into a big cesspool. It's like dumping money into nowhere. And people are beginning to realize that if you haven't even addressed transportation, Yucca Mountain is not possible.

SHIELDS: Senator Reid, we learned that in spite of the new tone in Washington proclaimed by the Bush administration, that Senator Daschle, prior to becoming majority leader, had not had a conversation with the president since March. When was the last time, prior to your becoming majority whip -- or have you had one since you became majority whip with President George W. Bush?

REID: I've had one meeting with the president. It was an enjoyable meeting. He's a very, very pleasant man.

SHIELDS: When was that meeting?

REID: Well, it was a couple of months ago.

But I think that he's learned that now he's going to have to be doing something other than talking about bipartisanship; he's going to have to do it. He's had experience in Texas doing it. I don't think there's a reason that hasn't, except his staff has been giving him some terribly bad advice.

SHIELDS: OK.

REV_00256481

We have to take a break. When we come back, we'll ask Senator Harry Reid if President Bush is trying to steal the Democrat's thunder on health care issues.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

NOVAK: Senate Majority Whip Harry Reid, I'm going to ask you a straight question, and I'd love to get a straight answer out of you.

Is there a litmus test on federal judges appointed by President Bush on whether or not they're pro-choice or pro-life? That if they are pro-life that they are anti-abortion, they are going to be eliminated.

REID: I don't think we should have litmus tests for members of the sub-Cabinet, the Cabinet or the judges. And I think that this controversy over the judiciary, I'm afraid the Republican minority is concerned that we're going to treat them like they've treated us.

And what I mean by that is, you take the 106th Congress, it took 285 days on an average to get a judge approved; 103rd Congress when we controlled, it was 80 days. So you can see the difference there. Fifty five percent of President Clinton's judicial nominations to the appellate court were turned down.

We're not going to do that. We're going to have hearings. We're going to have the process vetted as soon as possible. And I think we should have up-or-down votes in the committee and on the floor. So the answer is, no, there is not litmus test and there will not be.

NOVAK: But, Senator, the president intended to name Congressman Christopher Cox of California, a very well-respected member of Congress, though quite conservative and anti-abortion. And that under the so-called blue slip system, one senator, Senator Barbara Boxer, has eliminated him from even being appointed. She's only one of -- what is it? -- 19 senators -- 18 senators in that judicial circuit. Do you think that's a good system, the blue slip system where one senator can get rid of all that?

REID: Bob, we didn't invented that system. Orrin Hatch invented that system. We're just following...

NOVAK: But you think it's a good system?

REID: I personally don't think it's a good system. I think the best system is one that John Ensign and I have developed in the state of Nevada, where we have bipartisan look at these judges. He's going to appoint three, I'm going to get one. I said that's one more than I deserve. And we've agreed so far on three judges; not a bad way to go. It can be done. I just think we need a more open process.

You're asking about nominations, generally. The system is broken for judges and everybody else. Bush will not have his Cabinet people in place until February of next year. It's not our fault. It's the system.

NOVAK: Sub-Cabinet?

REID: Yes. It's terrible.

SHIELDS: Senator Reid, on the question of litmus tests, you are rather lonesome on occasion because you are a pro-life Democrat. We hear so much every four years about the Republicans ought to be a big tent party, welcome in pro-choice folks, but really it seemed in the last few conventions that pro-life Democrats have been unwelcome to the party.

REV_00256482

14

THIS SEARCH | THIS DOCUMENT | THIS CR ISSUE | GO TO
Next Hit | Forward | Next Document | New CR Search
Prev Hit | Back | Prev Document | HomePage
Hit List | Best Sections | Daily Digest | Help
Contents Display

THE PAEZ NOMINATION -- (Senate - March 08, 2000)

Some who have opposed Berzon's nomination have even called her a labor zealot. But Mr. President, there are a number of people in this room who were attorneys before joining the Senate. They know, as do I, that the code of professional responsibility requires zealous advocacy on a client's behalf. So to mention her zeal for her practice is simply to highlight one of those qualities which makes her such a fine candidate for the 9th Circuit. It shows that she has taken her practice of law to the highest and most professional level.

[Page: S1298] GPO's PDF

And lest her opponents complain about professionalism and infer unfairly that a former labor lawyer cannot be fair to management, listen to what numerous management-side attorneys who have litigated against her say about Marsha Berzon. Let's take the case of W.I. Usery, Jr., a former Republican Secretary of Labor:

Usery said Ms. Berzon ``has all the qualifications needed, as well as the honesty and integrity that we need and deserve in our court system today..... I know she will be dedicated to the principles of fairness and impartiality in all her judicial activities.''

Or perhaps, we should listen to Fred Alvarez, President Ronald Reagan's former EEOC Commissioner and Assistant Secretary of Labor. Alvarez says:

Someone with the intellect and integrity, which Ms. Berzon has demonstrated, understands the difference between advocacy and the solemn responsibilities undertaken as a federal appellate court judge ..... I can think of no other union-side lawyer who would command so strong and so compelling a consensus from management lawyers on her suitability for such an important position on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

So there you have it Mr. President. Top Republican officials--who we can be sure favor management positions by personal philosophy--endorse Berzon and her professionalism without reservation.

So let's put the foolish argument that Marsha Berzon can't be fair concerning labor issues to rest.

Let's review. We've shown that arguments that Berzon is some liberal by her association with Justice Brennan are fallacious. We've shown that arguments that she is a zealous advocate and should be rejected as an ideologue in fact highlight her mastery of the practice of law and make her highly qualified for this position. We've exploded the myth that she is anti-management and incapable of impartiality in hearing cases pitting management versus labor, and found that she works towards reaching consensus. So one has to wonder Mr. President, what is really going on here?

I'm concerned about the appearance that Marsha Berzon has had such a long, hard road to confirmation because she is a woman. And I don't blame the public for taking that message from this delay when a highly qualified appellate attorney is held up for years and the arguments against her confirmation are so thin.

At the end of 1999, the entire federal judiciary included only 158 women--that's a scant and embarrassing 20% of sitting judges. Rather than attempting to address that disparity, this Senate has chosen to continue the policies of limiting the upward elevation of talented and capable women attorneys and judges. We've repeatedly delayed action on a host of female candidates. What's the impact? If fewer women get confirmed, there are fewer lower court judges to elevate to the nation's appellate courts. And if the judiciary remains a male bastion, as far as we've come in this country in recognizing equal rights for women, we risk creating the perception that gender biases will continue to plague our judicial system well into the 21st century.

REV_00256483

I believe Ms. Berzon is highly qualified to sit on the 9th Circuit, and her confirmation should wait no longer. I enthusiastically support her and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the nominations of Richard Paéz and Marsha Berzon to sit on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

There are serious problems with the 9th Circuit. It has become a renegade Circuit, far out of the mainstream of modern American jurisprudence, and I am afraid that if these nominees are confirmed, they will only make a bad situation worse.

Over the past six years, the 9th Circuit has been overturned 86% of the time by the U.S. Supreme Court, a terrible record. During this period, the Supreme Court has reviewed 99 decisions from the 9th Circuit, and overturned 85 of those decisions. During the current session, the 9th Circuit has been overturned in all of the 7 cases reviewed by the Supreme Court, and in one term--1996-97--27 of 28 decisions were overturned, including 17 by unanimous votes.

This is the worst record of any circuit, and is especially troubling given the size and influence of the 9th Circuit. It covers almost 40% of the country, and 50 million Americans--20 million more than any other circuit. The fact that the 9th Circuit has been slipping toward judicial extremism is no laughing matter, and directly affects a large part of our nation and almost one-fifth of our citizens.

The main reason for the judicial imbalance on the 9th Circuit is that Democratic appointees currently comprise 15 of the 22 positions on the 9th Circuit, 10 of whom were appointed by President Clinton. I do not begrudge President Clinton his appointees; he is the President, and has the constitutional right and responsibility to fill the federal bench. But the 9th Circuit has become lopsided with activist judges that has helped push it far out of the judicial mainstream. The circuit cries out for balance.

Confirming Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon to the 9th Circuit would only exacerbate its problems. Mr. President, I do not know the nominees and I have nothing against them. Their records show that they have long legal backgrounds, and deserve a final vote on their nominations. But, the record also shows that they both tilt far too left in their judicial views and would not help to restore balance or judicial sensibilities to the 9th Circuit.

Ms. Berzon has worked as the general counsel of the AFL-CIO for over a decade, and was long active with the ACLU. At least one conservative group has described her as the ``worst judicial nomination President Clinton has ever made.'' Mr. President, Ms. Berzon is entitled to her views and I am not going to criticize her for her personal beliefs. But looking at her past and the causes which she has pushed show that, if confirmed, she is not going to help steer the 9th Circuit toward the judicial mainstream.

As for Judge Paez, he currently sits on the federal district court in the 9th Circuit, and his nomination is opposed by over 300 grassroots conservative organizations that are troubled by his judicial activism. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, have even taken the unusual step of opposing his nomination because of their concerns over some of his past decisions, arguing that he has pursued an agenda that ``has the potential to cause significant disruption in U.S. and world markets.'' Mr. President, business groups usually do not become involved in judicial nominations, and when they do it should make us wonder.

Even the Washington Post editorial page, no friend of conservative causes, has cautioned that opposition to Judge Paez ``is not entirely frivolous'', and points to past public remarks by Judge Paez that show how ``sympathetic'' he is to activist, judicial thinking.

Mr. President, since coming to the Senate I have voted for some of President Clinton's judicial nominees, and I have opposed several. Yesterday, in fact, I voted to confirm Julio Fuente to sit on the Third Circuit. But confirming Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon to sit on the 9th Circuit would be a mistake, and would directly affect 50 million Americans. The 9th Circuit has serious problems, and confirming these nominations are not going to fix those problems. Consequently, I am going to oppose them.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise to speak today in strong support of the nomination of Richard Paez to be a judge on the Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. By finally moving on the nominations of Judge Paez and Ms. Marsha Berzon this week, the Senate will take long-delayed steps towards returning the 9th Circuit dockets to a manageable level. Action on these nominees is long overdue. I believe their nominations should be confirmed, and I hope, after all this delay, there will be strong bipartisan votes in favor of them.

REV_00256484

Four years, 1 month, and 11 days. Just over forty-nine months. One thousand, four hundred and ninety-nine days. That's right. 1499 days, two short of 1500. That is how long Judge Richard Paez has been waiting for the Senate to act on his nomination. In the same amount of time, a young adult could enter and complete a full college degree program. Let me repeat that. Judge Paez has waited for the Senate to grant him the simple grace of voting his nomination up or down for longer than it takes a young American to complete an entire college education. A President or Governor could be inaugurated, serve his or her entire term and be re-inaugurated during that same four year time period. While I'm sure Judge Paez is a patient man, possessed of the proper judicial temperament that makes him an excellent candidate to sit on the 9th Circuit, I know that even his patience must have long-ago worn thin waiting for the Senate to act on his nomination.

[Page: S1299] GPO's PDF

First nominated to fill a 9th Circuit vacancy on January 26, 1996, Judge Paez has been subject to delay after delay after delay, and yet his opponents have not been able to give a convincing reason why we shouldn't confirm his nomination. Even with his 13 year record as a LA Municipal Court Judge and nearly 6 years as a U.S. District Court Judge for the Central District of California, those who don't want him on the bench can't build a case against his elevation to the 9th Circuit. They charge that he is an ``activist judge,'' but the record simply doesn't support this allegation.

Judge Paez now bears the dubious distinction of suffering through the longest pendency of a nomination to the federal bench in the history of the United States.

All Judge Paez, has ever asked for was this opportunity: an up or down vote on his confirmation. Y et for years, the Senate has denied him that simple courtesy.

I find it ironic that Judge Paez, the same judge who diligently worked to reduce the length of delays in resolving civil matters in Los Angeles and throughout California's court system through his design and implementation of a civil trial delay reduction project, should himself be subjected to such egregious delay in getting his ``day in court'' before the full Senate. Particularly when the Senate confirmed his nomination for a District Court judgeship in July 1994 by unanimous consent. Now I recognize that control of this body has changed since 1994, but his nomination to the District Court was confirmed without objection. And his record on that court has been exemplary.

This delay has not simply been unfair to Judge Paez and his family. It has affected the administration of justice. Listen to the concerns of Procter Hug, Jr., Chief Judge of the 9th Circuit. Chief Judge Hug has responsibility for overseeing the functioning and managing the caseloads of the entire Circuit. Currently, of the 28 spots on the 9th Circuit, 6 stand vacant. Chief Judge Hug explained in a letter this past week to the Judiciary Committee that during his term as Chief Judge, the Senate has left him with up to 10 vacancies on the court at any one time. He has responded to this judicial emergency by begging his colleagues to redouble efforts to resolve cases and then increased their dockets to prevent even longer delays in resolution of cases. Hug argues forcefully for the confirmation of Judge Paez and Ms. Berzon and asks this body to swiftly fill the other 4 vacancies on the court.

Now Mr. President, let me address the argument made by the Majority Leader and others that the pending 9th Circuit nominations should be rejected because that circuit has a supposedly high level of reversals when its decisions are reviewed by the Supreme Court. This argument simply doesn't hold water.

First, if we assume that this argument is not meant to be critical of the views or qualifications Judge Paez or any other nominee personally, it makes no sense at all. Even if we disagree with the direction of that court, why would we deny the 9th Circuit adequate resources, thereby depriving the litigants in that circuit of efficient administration of justice? It just makes no sense.

More importantly, arguing that the Ninth Circuit is out of step with the Supreme Court and needs to be reined in doesn't get opponents over the hurdle that they have not yet been able to satisfy--to show that Judge Paez is unsuitable for the appellate bench. He is obviously not responsible for past decisions of the 9th Circuit. So the argument has to be that his elevation will continue the Circuit on its supposedly misguided course. The evidence of Judge Paez being unable to follow Supreme Court precedent is thin indeed, if not non-existent.

REV_00256485

But more fundamentally, it is simply not factually correct that the 9th Circuit is out of step with the Supreme Court and other circuit courts. Chief Judge Hug in his letter convincingly refutes the argument that his circuit is reversed more often than others. In fact, its clear from the numbers that even in 1996-1997, when the 9th Circuit's reversal rate was at its highest level of recent years, it was reversed less frequently than 5 other circuits--the 5th, 2nd, 7th, D.C. and Federal--each of which were reversed 100% of the time that year by the Supreme Court. In more recent years, the statistics show even more clearly that the 9th Circuit is not a runaway train that somehow needs to be slowed down, but many in the Senate would like it to become a more conservative circuit, perhaps to be broken into two conservative circuits. And they are willing to hold up Judge Paez and others to achieve that political objective.

Furthermore, I have to point out that reversal rates are a very poor criteria for judging a court's work. The Supreme Court is not required to review every appellate decision. It picks which cases to review. So it is hardly surprising that when it does take a case, it reverses a lower court. Chief Judge Hug quite rightly points out that the 9th Circuit decides about 4,500 cases on the merits each year. 4,500. So the fact that 10 or 20 cases per year are reversed really should not trouble us. It is just not a plausible argument against a nominee for this Circuit that its decisions are out of the mainstream.

We ought to congratulate the women and men currently serving on the 9th Circuit for so successfully fulfilling their judicial roles at the same time vacancies are greatly increasing their dockets and stretching their time thin. The pressure to carefully make the proper judicial decisions is great, and these Judges are responding with professionalism. I thank them for that, but I cannot help but think that we are putting an unconscionable burden on them.

So what is the point of raising meritless arguments against this nominee? Why the long delay? Let me suggest two possibilities, neither of which reflect well on the Senate. First, Senators delaying these nominations may be trying to run out the clock until President Clinton leaves office. Confirmations always slow down in a presidential election year. In 10 months, we will have a new President. Perhaps a different President will put forward a different nominee. But Judge Paez was actually nominated a year before the President's 2nd inaugural. So holding up this particular nomination for purely political reasons is most unfair. In some ways, this nomination should get special treatment. We had an intervening election after the nomination was first made, and President Clinton won. It is indefensible to hold a nomination hostage for his entire second term. It defies the clear constitutional prerogatives of the duly elected President to choose nominees to the bench and the duty of the Senate to say yes or no.

Some Senators may also object to moving the nomination of Judge Paez because of a perceived judicial philosophy. Some opponents of his nomination look to his long and distinguished service in legal aid and attempt to tar him with the epithet of ``liberal,'' forgetting that his exemplary judicial career has been filled with distinction at all levels. A close look at his record as a U.S. District Court judge since the Senate confirmed his nomination in 1994 debunks attempts to label his opinions as conservative or liberal, reactionary or progressive.

The Los Angeles Daily Journal, which is a newspaper devoted to covering the courts and the legal profession in Los Angeles commissioned 15 legal experts to examine Judge Paez's decisions in seven different cases. Each case was reviewed by at least 2 experts. The results were clear. Thirteen of the legal scholars and practitioners found Paez's opinions ``well-reasoned and well-written.'' Two others were mildly critical. And, in the one decision in which the experts were critical of Judge Paez's decision not to dismiss claims that Unocal Corporation was liable for human rights abuses in Burma, a third expert countered the criticism of Judge Paez's decision, saying ``I would give Judge Paez very good marks on his ruling.'' What's the point here? In a variety of decisions, the commentators praised the work of Judge Paez. Here are some of their comments:

[Page: S1300] GPO's PDF

I carefully read Judge Paez's opinion and found that it was excellent in every respect.

His writing was clear and his expression was good. He did not show any ideological or personal bias.

Judge Paez's injunction--in a case against anti-abortion demonstrators--was entirely consistent with the reasoning and result in conservative jurisdictions.

The result is that claims that the Judge's record is activist, or liberally slanted are simply wrong. Claims that he is anti-business are simply not borne out by the facts. Paez also ruled in favor of Philip Morris on a second-hand smoke suit and for Isuzu against Consumers Union. Senators opposing this nominee because they claim he's anti-business are missing the point. Paez rules on each case on the merits--yes, on the merits--and shows no favoritism for or against business. So again, Mr.

REV_00256486

President, I'm just baffled by these claims of activism or anti-business philosophy being leveled against Richard Paez.

Now if his record as a judge doesn't support these charges of ``judicial activism'' where did Judge Paez's opponents get the idea that he must be stopped. Opponents aren't saying it openly but it could be that they are worried that a judge who formerly worked in a legal aid capacity must be a liberal, and incapable of making balanced decisions. Having failed to find any hint of bias or lack of judicial temperament in 20 years of judicial decisions, what other reason for opposition could there be other than a belief that if you are an attorney who agrees to work on behalf of those unable to access the legal system because they are poor or under-educated, as Judge Paez did for nine years early in his career, you must be a liberal, right?

<<< >>>

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

REV_00256487

15

1 item retrieved.
1 Congressional Record article from the 106th Congress ranked by relevance on "These nominees, who have to put their lives on hold ".

Limited To: Kohl, Herb (WI) and on DATE 9/21/1999

1 article containing your phrase exactly as entered.
0 articles containing all your search words near each other in any order.
0 articles containing all your search words but not near each other.
0 articles containing one or more of your search words.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

EXECUTIVE SESSION -- (Senate - September 21, 1999)

[Page: S11096] GPO's PDF

NOMINATION OF BRIAN THEADORE STEWART, OF UTAH, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF UTAH

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on the minimum wage and ask for its immediate consideration.

[Page: S11097] GPO's PDF

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not on that bill.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

REV_00256488

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Cloture Motion

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on Executive Calendar No. 215, the nomination of Brian Theadore Stewart, of Utah, to be United States district judge for the district of Utah vice J. Thomas Greene, retired:

Trent Lott, Orrin Hatch, Mike Crapo, Wayne Allard, Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Charles Grassley, Peter G. Fitzgerald, Connie Mack, Chuck Hagel, Rod Grams, Pat Roberts, Conrad Burns, Judd Gregg, Larry E. Craig, Robert F. Bennett, and Mike DeWine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call under rule XXII is waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the nomination of Brian Theadore Stewart, of Utah, to be United States District Judge for the District of Utah, be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN), is necessarily absent.

The yeas and nays resulted--yeas 55, nays 44, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 281 Ex.]

YEAS--55

Abraham

Allard

Ashcroft

Bennett

Bond

Brownback

Bunning

Burns

Campbell

Chafee

Cochran

Collins

Coverdell

REV_00256489

Sarbanes

Schumer

Torricelli

Wellstone

Wyden

NOT VOTING--1

McCain

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 55, the nays are 44. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I deeply regret that we have reached this point in connection with the nomination of Brian Theadore Stewart to the District Court for Utah. Please understand that Democrats are prepared to vote on this nomination, as we are on all of the judicial nominations pending on the Senate Executive Calendar. This impasse is caused not by Democrats' refusals to vote on that nomination but by Republican refusals to allow a vote on the nominations of Judge Paez or Ms. Berzon. If we can vote on the Stewart nomination in less than 2 months, we should be able to vote on the Paez nomination within 4 years and the Berzon nomination within 2 years.

This debate is about fairness. The Senate needs to be fair to all people in this country. For too long nominees--judicial nominees like Judge Paez, Ms. Berzon and Justice Ronnie White of Missouri, and Executive Branch nominees like Bill Lann Lee-- have been opposed in anonymity through secret holds and delaying tactics. They have been forced to run a gauntlet of Senate confirmation. Those strong enough to survive are being dealt the final death blow not by being defeating in a fair up or down vote on the nomination but through a refusal of the Republican leadership to call them up for a vote. These nomination are being killed through neglect and silence, not defeated by a majority vote.

Today we are not asking for any Senator's vote for any nomination. Instead, I am asking the Senate recognize that its responsibility is to vote on all the judicial nominations on the calendar. We can vote for them or against them, we can vote them up or vote them down, but after 44 months or 27 months or 20 months, after completing every step in what is a long, tortuous confirmation process, the nominations of Judge Richard Paez, Justice Ronnie White and Marsha Berzon are as entitled to a Senate vote as the nomination of Ted Stewart.

I do not begrudge Ted Stewart a Senate vote. Despite strong opposition from many quarters from Utah and around the country, from environmentalists and civil rights advocates alike, I did not oppose the Stewart nomination in Committee and I expect to vote for his final confirmation here on the floor of the United States Senate. I have been supportive of Chairman HATCH in his efforts to expedite Committee consideration of the Stewart nomination with the expectation that these other nominees who have been held up so long, nominees like Judge Richard Paez, Marsha Berzon and Justice White, were to be considered by the Senate and finally voted on, as well. The Chairman and I have both voted for Judge Paez and Justice White each time they were considered by the Committee and we both voted for and support Marsha Berzon.

I have tried to work with the Chairman and with the Majority Leader on all these nominations. I would like to work with those whom the Majority Leader is protecting from having to vote on the Paez and Berzon nominations, but I do not know who there are. In spite of what was supposed to be a Senate policy that did away with anonymous holds, we remain in a situation where I do not even know who is objecting to proceeding to schedule a vote on the Paez and Berzon nominations, let alone why they are objecting. In this setting I have no ability to reason with them or address whatever their concerns are because I do not know their concerns. That is wrong and unfair to the nominees.

I do not deny to any Senator his or her prerogatives as a member of the Senate. I have great respect for this institutions and its traditions. Still, I must say that this use of anonymous holds for extended periods that doom a nomination from ever being considered by the United States Senate is wrong and unfair.

REV_00256490

Again, I say that this debate is about fairness and about the Senate being fair to all nominees and to other Senators and to the American people. If we can vote on the Stewart nomination within 4 weeks in session, we can vote on the Paez nomination within 4 years and the Berzon nomination within 2 years. That is the point that the distinguished Democratic Leader was making by moving to proceed to consider those nominations this evening. The Republican majority has refused to debate those nominations and continues its steadfast refusal to vote on them after years of delay.

I do not want to see any judicial nomination held up without a vote, but the Republican leadership is not being fair to the other judicial nominees on the calendar. We ask only for a firm commitment that they will each get an up or down vote, too. The Republican Majority refuses to make even that commitment to a vote before the end of the session on these qualified nominees.

In my statement last week I detailed the path that each of these nominees has traveled to the Senate. All are now available for a vote on confirmation by the Senate. All should be accorded an up or down vote.

[Page: S11098] GPO's PDF

Judge Richard Paez is an outstanding jurist and a source of great pride and inspiration to Hispanics in California and around the country. He served as a local judge before being confirmed to the federal court bench several years ago and is currently a Federal District Court Judge. He has twice been reported to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee and has spent a total of 9 months over the last 2 years on the Senate Executive Calendar awaiting the opportunity for a final confirmation vote. His nomination was first received by the Senate in January 1996, 44 months ago.

Justice Ronnie White is an outstanding member of the Missouri Supreme Court and has extensive experience in law and government. He is the first African American to serve on the Missouri Supreme Court. He has also been twice reported favorably to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee and has spent a total of 7 months on the floor calendar awaiting the opportunity for a final confirmation vote. His nomination was first received by the Senate in June 1997, 27 months ago.

Marsha Berzon is one of the most qualified nominees I have seen in 25 years. Her legal skills are outstanding, her practice and productivity have been extraordinary. Lawyers against whom she has litigated regard her as highly qualified for the bench. Nominated for a judgeship within the Circuit that saw this Senate hold up the nominations of other qualified women for months and years--people like Margaret Morrow, Ann Aiken, Margaret McKeown and Susan Oki Mollway--she, too, is listed ahead of the Stewart nomination on the floor calendar. Ms. Berzon was first nominated in January 1998, 20 months ago, and a year and one-half before Mr. Stewart.

It is against this backdrop that we are asking the Senate to be fair to these judicial nominees and all nominees. I do not want to see votes delayed on any nominee. For the last few years the Senate has allowed one or two or three secret holds to stop judicial nominations from even getting a vote. That is wrong.

The Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court wrote in January last year:

Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote..... The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.

Let us follow the advice of the Chief Justice. Let the Republican leadership schedule up or down votes on the nominations of Judge Paez, Justice White and Marsha Berzon so that we can vote them up or vote them down. And so that we can proceed on all the judicial nominations that our federal courts need to do their job of administering justice. Let us be fair to all.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I voted against cloture on the Stewart nomination because the process that brought us to this vote has, to date, prevented the Senate from even considering the nominations of several other judicial nominees who have been waiting far longer than has Mr. Stewart.

Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon, two nominees for the 9th Circuit, have both been reported by the Judiciary Committee and have been on the Senate Executive Calendar since July. But, more important, their nominations have been pending in the Senate for years--2 years in the case of Ms. Berzon and three years for Judge Paez!

REV_00256491

It is patently unfair to ignore these fine nominations while moving forward on the Stewart nomination. I have no problem with Mr. Stewart, as far as I know. But this is an important process question, and I simply had no choice but to vote no on cloture on Stewart until we are assured of also moving ahead with those nominations which have been pending far longer.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, Ted Stewart, as any other nominee, deserves a vote. And eventually, I expect to vote for him, because I respect the judgment of my friend ORRIN HATCH and of the President. But there is a long line of qualified nominees ahead of him and, at least at this point, it's not right for him to ``cut'' in line.

For example, just compare Mr. Stewart's path with that of another qualified candidate, Tim Dyk, a nominee for the Federal Circuit. Mr. Dyk was first nominated 18 months ago, came out of Committee with strong bipartisan support, then stalled on the floor in the last days of the session because of a ``secret'' hold. He was nominated again eight months ago, and he has still never been placed on the agenda.

As for Mr. Stewart, he was nominated less than two months ago, and it took him just 48 hours to go from nomination, to hearing, to Committee approval. Now Mr. Stewart is up for a full Senate vote just 53 days after he was nominated. Meanwhile, five hundred and two days after Tim Dyk was nominated, he seems to be going nowhere fast.

That makes no sense to me or, I suspect, to Chairman HATCH, who also supports this nominee.

Mr. President, as with Mr. Stewart, Mr. Dyk will, I predict, be confirmed with bipartisan support. He's a first-rate intellect. He passed this Committee by a 14 to 4 vote last year, and all of us know that the Federal Circuit would be lucky to have someone of his caliber.

Like Tim Dyk and Ted Stewart, there are many other deserving nominees out there. Let's not play favorites. These nominees, who have to put their lives on hold waiting for us to act, deserve an ``up or down'' vote. And, more importantly, the American people deserve prompt action, so that our courts can stay on top of their workload, and continue putting criminals behind bars.

So, Mr. President, I expect to support Ted Stewart, but don't think he alone should get the timely consideration that all nominees--including Tim Dyk, Marsha Berzon and Richard Paez--deserve. So I hope we can get an agreement to move forward not only Mr. Stewart, but also other deserving nominees. Thank you.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

REV_00256492

16

THIS SEARCH: Next Hit | Prev Hit | Hit List
THIS DOCUMENT: Forward | Back | Best Sections | Contents Display
THIS CR ISSUE: Next Document | Prev Document | Daily Digest
GO TO: New CR Search | HomePage | Help

Congressional Record article 1 of 2 | Printer Friendly Display - 9,591 bytes.[Help]

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - May 15, 1997)

[Page: S4516] GPO's PDF

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, yesterday Mr. Leahy and several of my colleagues spoke about judicial confirmations. Let me make a few additional points. First, we are experiencing a record slowdown in confirming judges. Last year, only 17 Federal judges were confirmed, and not a single judge for a court of appeals. This year, the process has gotten even worse--only two judges have been confirmed, and the year is almost half over. Indeed, at our current pace, with only 5 judges likely to be confirmed a year, and an average of more than 50 retiring, we would have no federal judges at all in 20 years. Literally, an empty bench.

Second, we need these judges, both to prosecute and sentence violent criminals and to prevent more backlogs in civil cases. This is about justice--it shouldn't be about politics. Don't take my word on this, ask Chief Justice Rehnquist. He says `filling judicial vacancies is crucial to the fair and effective administration of justice.' Chief Justice Rehnquist is right.

Or ask Judge George Kazen from the Southern District of Texas. He is the subject of a front page article in today's Washington Post with the headline `Cases Pile Up as Judgeships Remain Vacant.' He is hearing a dramatic increase in criminal cases now because we're cracking down on illegal immigration and drug smuggling in his border district. He desperately wants and needs help. But we haven't helped. Instead, the Senate has held up a nominee for his district for almost 2 years. I ask unanimous consent to print this article in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(see exhibit 1.)

Mr. President, third, inaction now can only make matters worse. If we don't start moving judges, some Senators might feel compelled to put a hold on all other legislative business. Or the President could be forced to make recess appointments to the Federal bench. Of course, no one wants either of these things, including me. But if we don't confirm nominees through the normal process , I am afraid this is what could happen.

Mr. President, let's breathe life back into the confirmation process . Let's vote on the nominees who already have been approved by the Judiciary Committee, and let's set a timetable for future hearings on pending judges. Let's fulfill our constitutional responsibilities; justice demands that at a minimum. I thank you, and I yield the floor.

[Page: S4517] GPO's PDF

Exhibit 1

From the Washington Post, May 15, 1997

[FROM THE WASHINGTON POST, MAY 15, 1997]

Cases Pile Up as Judgeships Remain Vacant

REV_00256493

(BY SUE ANNE PRESSLEY)

Laredo, TX.--The drug and illegal immigrant cases keep coming. No sooner does Chief U.S. District Judge George Kazen clear one case than a stack of new cases piles up. He takes work home at night, on weekends.

`It's like a tidal wave,' Kazen said recently. `As soon as I finish 25 cases per month, the next 25 are on top of me and then you've got the sentence reports you did two months before. There is no stop, no break at all, year in and year out, here they come.

`We've already got more than we can say grace over down here,' he said.

This is what happens to a federal judge on the southern border of the United States when Washington cracks down on illegal immigration and drug smuggling. It is a situation much aggravated by the fact that the Senate in Washington has left another federal judgeship in this district vacant for two years, one of 72 vacancies on federal district courts around the country.

As Border Patrol officers and other federal agents swarm this southernmost region of Texas along the Mexican border in ever-increasing numbers, Judge Kazen's docket has grown and grown. He has suggested, so far unsuccessfully, that a judgeship in Houston be reassigned to the Rio Grande Valley to help cope.

In Washington, where the laws and policies were adopted that has made Kazen's life so difficult, the Senate has made confirmation of federal judges a tedious process , often fraught with partisan politics. In addition to the 72 federal district court vacancies (the trial level), there are 25 circuit court vacancies (the appellate level) and two vacant international trade court judgeships across the country, leaving unfilled 99 positions, or 11 percent of the federal judiciary. Twenty-six nominations from President Clinton are pending, according to Jeanne Lopatto, spokeswoman for the Senate Judiciary Committee, which considers nominations for recommendation to the full Senate for confirmation .

Of those 99 vacancies, 24 qualify as judicial emergencies, meaning the positions have been vacant more than 18 months, according to David Sellers of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. Two of the emergencies exit in Texas, including the one in Kazen's southern district.

Lopatto said the thorough investigation of each nominee is a time-consuming process . But political observes say Republicans, who run the Senate, are in no hurry to approve candidates submitted by a Democratic president. The pinch is particularly painful here in border towns. The nominee for Brownsville, in Kazen's district, has been awaiting approval since 1995. Here in Laredo, Kazen's criminal docket has increased more than 20 percent over last year.

`We have a docket,' he said, `that can be tripled probably at the drop of a hat. * * * The Border Patrol people, the Customs people at the [international] bridges will tell you, they don't catch a tenth of who is going through. The more checkpoints you man, the more troops you have at the bridges, will necessarily mean more stops and more busts.'

And many more arrests are expected, the result of an unprecedented focus on policing the U.S.-Mexico border. Earlier this year, Clinton unveiled a $367 million program for the Southwest for fiscal 1998, beginning Oct. 1, that includes hiring 500 new Border Patrol agents, 277 inspectors for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, 96 Drug Enforcement Administration agents and 70 FBI agents.

In Kazen's territory, the number of Border Patrol agents already has swollen dramatically, from 347 officers assigned to the Laredo area in fiscal 1993 to 411 officers in fiscal 1996. More tellingly, in 1993, agents in the Laredo sector arrested more than 82,000 people on cocaine, marijuana and illegal immigration charges. By 1996, arrests had soared to nearly 132,000, according to data supplied by the INS.

All of which is keeping Kazen and the other judges here hopping. `I don't know what the answer is,' said U.S. District Judge John Rainey, who has been acting as `a circuit rider' as he tries to keep Kazen out in Laredo from his post in Victoria, Tex. `I certainly don't see it easing up anytime soon. There still seems to be such a demand for drugs in this country, and that's what causes people to bring them in. Until society changes, we won't see any changes down here.'

In a letter to Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.) in February, Kazen outlined the need for a new judge in the Laredo or McAllen division, rather than in Houston, where a vacancy was recently created when then-Chief Judge Norman Black assumed senior status. `The `border' divisions of our court--Brownsville, McAllen and Laredo--have long borne the burden of one of the heaviest criminal dockets in the country, and the processing of criminal cases involves special pressures, including those generated by the Speedy Trial Act,' he wrote.

REV_00256494

On a recent typical day, Kazen said, he sentenced six people on drug charges and listened to an immigration case. His cases tend to involve marijuana more often than cocaine, he said.

`The border is a transshipment area,' he said. `The fact is, a huge amount of contraband somehow crosses the Texas-Mexican border, people walking through where the river is low, and there are hundreds and hundreds of miles of unpatrolled ranchland.

`In some cases,' Kazen continued, `we're seeing a difference in the kind of defendant. We're almost never seeing the big shots--we're seeing the soldiers. Once in a while, we'll see a little bigger fish, but we're dealing with very, very smart people. We see some mom-and-pop stuff, too. There was a guy who came before me who had been in the Army umpteen years, and he needed the money, he was going bankrupt, so he did this 600-pound marijuana deal. He said he stood to pick up $50,000, and now he's facing five to 40 years.

`We see kids 18 and 19 years old,' Kazen said. `We see pregnant women. We see disabled people in wheel-chairs. This is very, very tempting stuff.' In Washington, the argument over court vacancies continues. On April 30, Attorney General Janet Reno told the Judiciary Committee, `Chief judges are calling my staff to report the prospect of canceling court sittings and suspending civil calendars for lack of judges, and to ask when they can expect help. This committee must act now to send this desperately needed help.'

In remarks yesterday to the Federal Judges Association meeting in Washington, Reno warned that `the number [of vacancies] is growing.'

`As you are no doubt aware,' Reno told the judges, `the level of contentiousness on the issue of filling judicial vacancies has unfortunately increased in recent times.'

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

17

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

THE JUDICIARY (Senate - January 28, 1998)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am very glad that we are moving forward with judges today. We all hear, as we are growing up, that, `Justice delayed is justice denied,' and we have, in many of our courts, vacancies that have gone on for a year, 2 years, and in many cases it is getting to the crisis level. So I am pleased that we will be voting. I thi nk, wh ether the delays are on the Republican sid e or the Democratic side, le t these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote.

In that regard, I am looking forward to having our debate on the nominee I had recommended to President Clinton, Margaret Morrow, who has the strong support of Senator Hatch, many Republicans on the Judiciary Committee, and I am very hopeful we can get that nomination resolved.

I kno w that our leaders had agreed that vote would take place before the February recess and I wil l be speaking with both leaders to find out a date certain.

REV_00256496

18

JUDICIAL VACANCIES (Senate - May 14, 1997)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, will my friend yield for about 2 minutes?

Mr. LEAHY. Of course. I am happy to yield to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I am appreciative of the Senator taking to the floor today to discuss this entire issue. We all learned growing up that justice delayed is justice denied.

We have these openings. Look, I was told very clearly by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, `Senator, you have to come in with nominations that will pass by Republicans and Democrats. You need to bring forward nominees who are supported by Republicans and Democrats.'

Mr. President, I have done just that. I think Senator Leahy has outlined this magnificently--I have never seen a nominee with such bipartisan support as this woman. This is what is so extraordinary about the kind of treatment she is receiving: a secret hold that has been placed on her.

Mr. President, this is not the way to run the U.S. Senate. Let's allow this woman's name to be placed on the floor and then those who have any objection can express their objections and vote no. But I am so confident that the vast majority of our colleagues will vote for Margaret Morrow.

I say that not only because of her extraordinary bipartisan support, but because of her incredible qualifications. I say to my friend from Vermont how much I appreciate his leadership on this. Sometimes we forget these nominees have private lives. This is a woman who is a law partner in a law firm making preparations for a new career. She is a 45-year-old wife and mother. She has a very loving family. They are very proud of her. They are completely mystified about these questions that keep coming. I have talked to several members of the Judiciary Committee, both Democrats and Republicans, and when I speak with them, I say to you, Mr. President, one on one, I am very confident that Margaret Morrow will get a vote and a fair vote.

I want to quote from one letter that is so important.

H. Walter Croskey, associate justice in the Court of Appeals for the State of California, Second Appellate District, describes himself, Mr. President, as a conservative Republican. He has written to Senator Hatch, and he wrote to Senator Hatch about an article he read that suggested that `concerns have been raised in the [Judiciary] Committee about judicial activism and noted that there were questions as to whether Margaret would be a judge who would follow the Constitution and the laws as they are written.' He says, `Such concerns are not shared by anyone who knows Margaret.' And he goes on to say, `Her well known and often expressed reverence for our system of government and justice and her great intellectual integrity provides full assurance that she would be the kind of judge who would follow and apply the laws as written * * *.'

He goes on.

Mr. President, we have Republican after Republican from my State. This particular judge was appointed by George Deukmejian, Republican Governor of the State of California.

Mayor Richard Riordan, Sheriff Sherman Block, a Republican-elected sheriff, supports her nomination.

So it is so difficult, frankly, for this Senator to understand why we would play with the life of a woman like this and not give her her fair chance.

REV_00256497

I understand that women's organizations have written to Senator Leahy and Senator Hatch. They have been very patient. But when you see a panel of people, as Senator Leahy has described, three men and one woman, and the three men get reported out of the committee--and I venture to say, I know they are all extremely qualified--I would put Margaret's qualifications right up against any of those.

So I am very pleased that my colleague, the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee, has raised this issue. I am hopeful, I say to my friend and the Presiding Officer today, that because Senator Grassley has lifted his objection to bringing the nomination to the floor and others on the committee have done the same, that they will prevail upon that secret hold, they will find who that particular Senator is who has put a hold here. If we start putting holds on each other's nominations and on each other's bills and on each other's amendments, I say to my friend, we are only going to deteriorate in this U.S. Senate. The people expect more.

To reiterate Mr. President, I come to the floor today to urge that Margaret M. Morrow be voted out of the Judiciary Committee and confirmed to sit on the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California.

Margaret Morrow is an outstanding candidate for the Federal bench, who enjoys broad bipartisan support. She has over a dozen support letters from prominent, widely respected Republicans, including judges, elected officials, and others. It has been my honor to recommend such a fine candidate to the President. Her name was submitted to me by my judicial advisory committee for the Central District of California. My committee enthusiastically found her to be a superior judicial candidate.

However, despite her strong bipartisan support and strong credentials, her nomination remains indefinitely stalled in committee. She has had two hearings, and has had several rounds of questions with no end in sight. No Member has come forward to explain why she should not be confirmed.

MARGARET MORROW'S HISTORY

Margaret Morrow was first nominated by the administration on May 9, 1996. She received the first of her nomination hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on June 25, 1996, and was reported out of committee just 2 days later without any opposition from the committee.

For several months, Margaret Morrow's nomination sat on the Executive Calendar waiting to be moved, and finally died on the floor of the Senate when we adjourned at the end of the session.

Margaret was then renominated on January 7 of this year because of her impeccable credentials. Her nomination languished for over 2 more months until further action on March 18, when she had yet another hearing.

Twice, now, the Judiciary Committee has reviewed stacks of information she provided to the committee, a full FBI background investigation, and her testimony before the committee. Yet, Margaret still sits in committee, facing repeated rounds of questions with no end in sight.

JUDICIAL VACANCIES

Margaret Morrow's confirmation should not be held hostage for political reasons, Mr. President. According to the U.S. Constitution , the President nominates, and the Senate shall provide advice and consent. It is not the role of the Senate to obstruct the process and prevent numbers of highly qualified nominees from even being given the opportunity for a vote on the Senate floor.

Today, we have 26 nominations from the President to consider. Every one of these nominations should be voted out of committee and placed on the calendar for consideration on the Senate floor.

[Page: S4421] GPO's PDF

MARGARET MORROW'S LIFE IS ON HOLD

REV_00256498

The vacancy Ms. Morrow would be filling has been vacant since January 24, 1996. In 2 short months, this vacancy will become a judicial emergency. That will make three judicial emergencies in the ninth circuit courts, and four judicial emergencies in the California district courts. Two of those judicial emergencies will be in the Central District of California. I don't think I need to remind this body that the Central District of California in Los Angeles is one of the busiest courts in the Nation.

To provide some historical context, in 1992, every one of the 66 nominees approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee were approved by the full Senate. Every single person nominated, Mr. President, was under a Republican administration and a Democratic-controlled Senate. Included in those 66 judges were 11 circuit court nominees. In 1992, the Democratic Senate confirmed the highest number of judges of any year of President Bush's term. And the confirmations did not slow as the election approached. During the 4-month period between June and September, the Senate Judiciary Committee favorably reported 32 nominees, including 7 appeals court nominees.

Former Majority Leader Bob Dole spoke of this process himself. In June of last year, he said `We should not be holding people up. If we need a vote, vote them down or vote them up * * * because [the nominees] probably have plans to make and there are families involved.' Even then-Majority Leader Dole recognized the necessity to provide resolution for nominees out of fairness to these individuals and their families.

Before I speak about Ms. Morrow's credentials or historical precedent for judicial confirmations, I wanted to make the point that there is also a personal side to the judicial confirmation process. For nominees who are awaiting confirmation, their personal and professional lives hang in the balance.

Margaret Morrow--a 45-year-old mother and law partner--has put her life and her professional practice on hold while she waits for the Senate to approve her nomination. The Senate's delay has affected her ability to assume certain responsibilities at her law practice. Her whole family--particularly her husband and young son--have waited patiently for her confirmation to proceed. Many of us here in the Senate have no idea what kind of strain and stress awaiting confirmation means for these nominees. We owe to her prompt Senate consideration.

Mr. President, I am unaware of any substantive reason why Ms. Morrow's nomination has not been before the full Senate long before today. If another Member of this body has a reason for opposing her confirmation, I want the opportunity to discuss those objections, as does Ms. Morrow, and to move on to Senate consideration.

THREE POINTS

There are three aspects of Margaret Morrow's qualifications, in particular, I want to emphasize:

First, Ms. Morrow's long history and background in the legal profession. Her credentials are impeccable.

Second, Ms. Morrow has the confidence of a broad spectrum of supporters.

Third, Ms. Morrow's qualifications and the broad support she enjoys would make her an exceptionally distinguished addition to the Federal bench.

MS. MORROW'S LONG HISTORY AND BACKGROUND IN THE LEGAL PROFESSION, HER CREDENTIALS ARE IMPECCABLE

Ms. Morrow graduated magna cum laude from Bryn Mawr College, and received her law degree from Harvard University, graduating cum laude. Ms. Morrow has enjoyed 23 years in private practice in commercial and civil litigation, and is now a partner at the prestigious law firm of Arnold & Porter. She is married to Judge Paul Boland of the Los Angeles Superior Court and they have a son, Patrick Morrow Boland.

From 1988 to 1989, Ms. Morrow served as president of the 25,000-member Los Angeles County Bar Association, the second largest voluntary bar association in the country, and created an innovative program in California called Pro Bono Council which calls on members of the association to do pro bono work for the poor. From 1993, she served a 1-year term as president of the largest mandatory bar association in the country, the 150,000-member State Bar of California. Ms. Morrow was the first woman to ever hold this office in that organization.

REV_00256499

Ms. Morrow has been recognized several times during her tenure in the legal profession. A few of these include a listing in 1994 as one of the top twenty lawyers in Los Angeles by California Law Business, a weekly publication of the Los Angeles Daily Journal. In 1995 and again in 1996, Ms. Morrow was included in the Los Angeles Business Journal's `Law Who's Who,' a list of 100 outstanding Los Angeles business lawyers.

Just this February, Ms. Morrow received the Shattuck-Price Award, the highest honor given by the Los Angeles County Bar Association for individuals with outstanding dedication to the high principles of the legal profession, the administration of justice and the progress of the county bar. Others who have received such distinction include Warren Christopher and Shirley Hufstedler, former U.S. circuit court judge and U.S. Secretary of Education.

MS. MORROW HAS THE CONFIDENCE OF A BROAD SPECTRUM OF SUPPORTERS

I'm not the only one who believes Ms. Morrow has an excellent legal mind and is a credit to the legal profession. Ms. Morrow enjoys the broad support of accomplished persons. Many of California's prominent and conservative Republican lawmakers and elected officials support her confirmation:

H. Walter Croskey, associate justice in the Court of Appeals for the State of California, Second Appellate District, and self-described conservative Republican writes to Senator Hatch about an article he read that:

. . . suggested that concerns have been raised in the [Judiciary] Committee about judicial activism and noted that there were questions as to whether Margaret would be a judge who would follow the Constitution and the laws as they are written. Such concerns are not shared by anyone who knows Margaret. Her well known and often expressed reverence for our system of government and justice and her great intellectual integrity provides full assurance that she would be the kind of judge who would follow and apply the laws as written with her only agenda to make that system work better and more efficiently. . . . The reservations expressed about her are simply without foundation and should not deter the Judiciary Committee from taking prompt and favorable action on what we here in California regard as a truly inspired choice.

The district attorney of Orange County, Mike Capizzi, writes to Senator Lott:

I have absolutely no hesitation in commending her nomination to you as being among the very best ever likely to come before you. * * * Of particular interest to crime victims, law enforcement and public prosecutors are her initiatives and achievement in the fields of juvenile justice and domestic violence, where her efforts have helped focus national attention.

He ends his letter by stating:

The record of scholarship, citizenship, and dedication to improving the legal system that Margaret will bring with her to the federal bench reveals great promise for a truly exceptional jurist of whom we will all be proud. I sincerely, wholeheartedly and enthusiastically entreat you to confirm Margaret's nomination for appointment to the district court, without delay. We need her.

Los Angeles Mayor Richard Riordan writes in strong support of Ms. Morrow's nomination. He adds that Morrow, `would be an excellent addition to the Federal bench. She is dedicated to following the law, and applying it in a rational and objective fashion.'

Representative James Rogan, former Republican assembly leader in the California Legislature, now Member of Congress, who gave a supporting introduction for Margaret Morrow at her second hearing, wrote to Senator Trent Lott urging his support of Ms. Morrow's nomination because he believes she would be `conscientious in applying the law.'

Republican Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block also supports Ms. Morrow's nomination, stating she is an extremely hard worker with impeccable character and integrity.

Republican Robert Bonner, appointed by President Reagan as U.S. attorney for the Central District, later appointed to the U.S. District Court in the Central District, and former head of the Drug Enforcement Administration under President Bush has also lent his support, stating she is a `brilliant person with a first-rate legal mind * * * nominated based upon merit, not political affiliation.'

REV_00256500

Lod Cook, chairman emeritus of ARCO, and a prominent Republican in the State of California wrote of Ms. Morrow:

I am convinced she is the type of person who would serve us well on the federal bench. I believe she will bring no personal or political agenda to her work as a judicial officer. Rather, her commitment will be to ensuring fairness and openness in the judicial process and to deciding cases on the facts and the law as they present themselves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these and additional letters of support be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

Court of Appeal,
Los Angeles, CA, April 17, 1997.

Hon. Orrin G. Hatch,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.
Re Nomination of Margaret Mary Morrow.

Dear Senator Hatch: I am pleased to write in support of the nomination of Margaret Morrow to the United States District Court for the Central District of California. I have known Margaret for over 15 years, both professionally and socially. During that period, I have worked with her on many local and state bar activities and committees; I have had repeated opportunities to discuss legal issues with her; and she has appeared before me in both the trial and appellate courts on a number of occasions. Finally, I am very familiar with her reputation in the legal community, both in Southern California and statewide. Based on all of that, I believe that she is the most outstanding candidate for appointment to the federal trial court who has been put forward in my memory.

Yesterday, I read an article in our local legal newspaper about Margaret's second hearing before the Judiciary Committee on March 18, 1997. That article suggested that concerns have been raised in the Committee about judicial activism and noted that there were questions as to whether Margaret would be a judge who would follow the Constitution and the laws as they are written. Such concerns are not shared by anyone who knows Margaret. Her well known and often expressed reverence for our system of government and justice and her great intellectual integrity provides full assurance that she would be the kind of judge who would follow and apply the laws as written with her only agenda to make that system work better and more efficiently. She will be a judge of whom all Americans, Republican or Democrat, can be very proud.

Every now and then we have the opportunity to bring into government service a truly outstanding person, a person whose knowledge, intelligence, integrity and industry are such as to command universal respect and admiration. We have that opportunity with Margaret's nomination. As the second woman to head the Los Angeles County Bar Association, (the second largest voluntary bar association, after the ABA, in the nation), the first woman to be elected president of the California State Bar Association, an attorney who has won every award and accolade which can be bestowed by the California legal community and a practicing lawyer with superlative skills and reputation, she can truly be characterized as an exceptional choice for appointment to the District Court. Indeed, as I mentioned, I can recall none better in my professional experience. The reservations expressed about her are simply without foundation and should not deter the Judiciary Committee from taking prompt and favorable action on what we here in California regard as a truly inspired choice.

As a lifelong conservative Republican, I would be very disappointed to see members of the Committee, whose views I share and admire on so many issues, fail to embrace this exceptionally well qualified nominee. Margaret's nomination should be promptly approved and sent to the Senate floor with a favorable recommendation.

My best to you and your staff. Keep up the good work.

Yours truly,
H. Walter Croskey.

REV_00256501

19

1 item retrieved.
1 Congressional Record article from the 105th Congress ranked by relevance on "If the majority of the Senate opposes a judicial nominee enough to derail ".

Limited To: Sarbanes, Paul S. (MD) and on DATE 12/15/1997

1 article containing your phrase exactly as entered.
0 articles containing all your search words near each other in any order.
0 articles containing all your search words but not near each other.
0 articles containing one or more of your search words.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS IN THE 105TH CONGRESS (Senate - December 15, 1997)

[Page: S12719] GPO's PDF

- [Begin insert]

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, now that we have concluded the 1st session of the 105th Congress, I want to again focus the attention of the Senate and the American people on the glacial pace of Federal judicial confirmations during this session.

Mr. President, the reluctance of the Senate to confirm the President's nominees to the Federal bench is a carryover from the 2d session of the 104th Congress, during which the Republican-controlled Senate, in an unprecedented display of election-year inaction, confirmed only 17 district court nominees and no circuit court nominees.

This pattern of inaction has continued into the 105th Congress, during which the Senate has confirmed only 36 of the President's judicial nominees--7 circuit judges and 29 district court judges. Admittedly, there was some effort made in the waning days of the session to confirm judges, but the overall numbers remain highly disturbing and worthy of attention.

In the last 2 years, the Senate has confirmed 53 judicial nominees, while a total of 81 seats on the bench continue to lie vacant, and 41 nominees await committee or floor consideration.

In other words, there are still more nominees pending in the Senate than were confirmed this year, and more than twice the number of nominees confirmed last year.

Compare the number of nominees confirmed thus far this year and in the 104th Congress to the number confirmed in the last two Democratically controlled Congresses, one of which featured a Republican President. In the 102d Congress, the Senate confirmed 124 Federal judges, while in the 103d Congress it confirmed 129 Federal judges. In the 104th Congress, the Republicans confirmed but 75 judges, while this year it confirmed 36. In other words, in the last 3 years, the Republican majority in the Senate has confirmed fewer Federal judges than the Democratically controlled Senate did in either the 102d or the 103d Congress.

I ask my colleagues to further compare the figures of the last 2 years with the number of judicial nominees confirmed by Democratically controlled Senates during years when a Republican White House faced a Democratic challenge--when, as in 1996, the party in control of the Senate had an incentive to delay confirmations, in the hopes that the Presidential election would effect a transfer of the White House to its party. "S12720

In 1992, when President Bush stood for reelection and the Democrats controlled the Senate, the Senate confirmed 11 circuit court judges and 55 district court judges. In other words, the Democratically controlled Senate in 1992 confirmed almost four times the number of Republican nominees confirmed by the Republican controlled Senate in 1996, and almost 25 percent more judges than the Republican Senate has confirmed in the last 2 years combined.

REV_00256502

Similarly, in 1988, when Vice President Bush stood for election, the Democratically controlled Senate confirmed 7 circuit court judges and 33 district court judges--over twice the number of judges confirmed last year, and more judges than were confirmed in this past nonelection year.

Clearly, in the last couple of years, the politicization of the confirmation process has increased. Today, the Republican majority in the Senate is effectively bottling up nominees in committee and on the floor, in stark contrast to the behavior of Democratically controlled Senates over the last decade.

This politicization, Mr. President, has been extended to include the practice of denying nominees an up or down vote on the Senate floor, or even in the Judiciary Committee. If the majority of the Senate opposes a judicial nominee enough to derail a nomination by an up or down vote, then at least the process has been served. Instead, however, the President's nominees are not even receiving that courtesy from this Senate: Some of the individuals whose nominations are pending before the Judiciary Committee or the full Senate have not been allowed a vote on the floor, much less in committee, for close to 2 years. It is especially troubling that of the 14 nominees who have been held up the longest by the Republican majority in the Senate, 12 are women or minorities.

Let me give one example of this phenomenon--that of James Beaty, the President's nominee to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which includes my State of Maryland.

Judge Beaty, currently a district court judge in North Carolina, was nominated by the President to the court of appeals in the 104th Congress, during which he did not even receive a vote in committee. He was renominated on January 7 of this year, and has yet to receive even a hearing in the committee, much less an up-or-down vote there, or on the floor.

Some have argued against Judge Beaty's nomination that, in their view, the fourth circuit does not need an additional judge, and that failure to confirm him would amount to a conservation of taxpayer resources. Assuming for the sake of argument that that is the case--and I would disagree that it is the case--Congress should act affirmatively to eliminate the vacant seat on that court before a nominee comes before it, not stall an individual's nomination into oblivion with arguments created after the fact. When you have a nominee sent to the Senate and then claims are made that the seat is unnecessary, it is simply impossible to divorce the claim that the seat is unnecessary from an ad hominem attack on the candidate himself.

Judge Beaty, if confirmed to the fourth circuit, would be the first African-American to sit on that court. Prior to becoming a district court judge, Judge Beaty maintained a general civil and criminal litigation practice in Winston-Salem, NC, and then served as a State court judge for 13 years. These accomplishments entitle him, at the very least, to an up-or-down vote on the floor of the U.S. Senate. Instead, he has not even received a committee hearing--much less a committee vote, at the hands of the majority.

By any measure, Mr. President, the Congress has become increasingly politicized in the last few years. I submit to my colleagues, however, that if there is one subject that should remain immune from political games and pressure it is our Federal judicial system, which is the envy of the world for its independence and integrity, and which is absolutely fundamental to our system of government.

It is essential for the maintenance of public confidence in this system that the confirmation process be as far removed from politics as possible. Yet we seem to be moving in the exact opposite direction, as we hear Members of the other party calling for impeachment of judges on the basis of decisions with which the Members disagree, and for defeat of judicial nominees deemed to possess liberal or activist tendencies.

This behavior--while perhaps politically advantageous in the short run--betrays a basic and dangerous misunderstanding of the role of the courts in our system of government.

Moreover, on a purely practical level, the Senate's failure to confirm the 42 nominees before it adjourns hamstrings the courts' ability to deal with its ever-increasing caseload--an increase that, I might add, Mr. President, is in large part due to the majority's proclivity for federalizing areas of law that have been historically left to the States.

So we have district judges throughout the country putting aside all civil cases in order to deal with their criminal dockets, because their courts have been left shorthanded by the Senate's inaction. We have courts of appeals canceling oral arguments because of shortages on their courts. We have Chief Justice Rehnquist--hardly the kind of liberal judicial activist that so concerns the majority--calling the problem of judicial vacancies the most pressing problem facing the Federal courts today. And yet we see little in the way of movement by the Senate to alleviate these burdens.

REV_00256503

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues--especially my Republican colleagues--will give serious attention to the problems, both practical and philosophical, that will result if the Senate does not revisit its approach to the judicial confirmation process, and that in this area, the second session of the 105th Congress will proceed in a markedly different manner than the last 2 years.

In closing, I would like to commend the efforts of my colleague from Vermont, Senator Leahy, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, in this area. He has tried to jog the Senate into acting to resolve this problem: I regret that his calls for action have not been heeded thus far, though I hold out hope that common sense and respect for our constitutional system will prevail in the long run.

- [End insert]

[Page: S12720] GPO's PDF

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections Contents Display	Daily Digest	Help

REV_00256504

20

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS (Senate - March 19, 1997)

Mr. SARBANES. I want to ask the Senator a couple questions when he finishes his statement.

Mr. BIDEN. The point I wish to make is this. When I was chairman of the committee and a Republican was President , we held, on average, a hearing for judges once every 2 weeks and had usually five judges, circuit court and district court, who we heard.

Last year we essentially had one hearing every other month and we had to fight to get three to four on the agenda to be heard.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to.

Mr. SARBANES. This is a chart that Senator Leahy, now the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee, used today in the course of the Merrick Garland debate which I think is enormously instructive. It is the number of judges confirmed during second Senate sessions in Presidential election years.

Mr. BIDEN. I got it.

Mr. SARBANES. Now, in 1996, with a Democratic President , President Clinton, and a Republican Senate, the Senate confirmed no judges for the court of appeals, none whatsoever, and 17 judges for the district court. Now, in 1992, the previous election year--that was when Mr. Bush was President ----

Mr. BIDEN. And I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. And if I am not mistaken, the distinguished Senator from Delaware was the very able chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BIDEN. I did not say `able.' I was chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. I am suggesting the Senator is able. I am prepared to make that statement. We confirmed 11 court of appeals judges and 55--I repeat, 55--district judges in an election year. Now, that gives you some sense of how the Democratic majority in the Senate, led at the time by the able Judiciary Committee chairman, was dealing with this matter, essentially in a nonpolitical way.

In 1988, when I think, again, the Senator from Delaware was still the chairman of the Committee----

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. With President Reagan, a Republican President --again, in an election year--we confirmed 7 court of appeals judges and 35 district court judges. Actually, the 35 that we confirmed in that election year was better than the Republican Senate did for President Reagan in 1984 when they only confirmed 33 judges. In any event, clearly this performance in these years is in marked contrast to what happened in 1996 and what apparently is continuing now in 1997. Merrick Garland was the first judge approved this year.

Mr. BIDEN. If I may respond to the Senator, obviously the facts are correct, but I think it worth elaborating a little bit more on the facts. I saw my very able colleague, the present chairman of the Judiciary Committee, on television the other day, and he was talking about the number of judges that were `left hanging,' who were not confirmed and sent back to the administration at the end of 1992, the Bush administration. And he cited an accurate number. But as my very distinguished friend, who is, as well, a scholar, knows, there is an old expression attributed to Benjamin Disraeli, who said there are three kinds of lies: lies, damn lies, and statistics.

What my able friend from Utah did not mention is that just like President Carter--Carter's judges is a separate charge we can go back to, but just like President Clinton, President Bush did not get his nominees up here until the end of the process.

In other words, they were late getting here. Notwithstanding the fact that he was late in getting his nominees up, the Senator may remember in the caucus over the objection of some Democrats who said the Republicans would never do this, I insisted we confirm judges up to the day we adjourned the Senate. During the last week the Senate was in that year, we confirmed seven judges. I could have easily just sneezed and they would not have been confirmed . And the fact is the reason why we did not confirm more is because we did not have time to hold the hearings and we were holding hearings on 20 or more a month.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, I can recall the Senator was holding hearings right up into the fall of the election year and judges were being brought to the floor of the Senate and being confirmed . And he is absolutely correct; there were some----

Mr. BIDEN. Republican judges.

Mr. SARBANES. Yes, Republican judges. And there were some Members on the Democratic side who said, why are you doing this? We are about to have an election and the result may give us control of the White House. And the Senator from Delaware said, look, we ought not to have politics play a heavy hand in the judicial confirmation process.

One of the worst things that is happening in the Senate is what amounts to a heavy politicizing of the judicial confirmation process that is taking place in this body, and that was reflected in the performance in 1996 as compared with the performance in 1992 when the Senator from Delaware did his very best to keep politics out of the process, to fill judicial posts and to let the judiciary function as an independent branch of our Government. What is happening here is extremely serious. And of course, the Senator, with his candor, came to the floor and sort of stripped away the veneer and laid out what is going on behind the scenes, which is a complete departure from past practices. When there were Republican Presidents, I did not play a role in whom the Presidents sent up to the Senate to be nominated and confirmed in the job----

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I was chairman or ranking member of that committee for 14 years. My distinguished colleague from Delaware is Senator Roth, who is my close friend. Every single Federal judge in the last 24 years who has been appointed in the district of Delaware or the third circuit has been appointed by Senator Roth. I did not expect, did not ask, and not once was ever consulted about who he would appoint, and I supported every one that he sent up. Not one single time was I made aware of anything other than after the fact, which is OK. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. SARBANES. That was the system.

Mr. BIDEN. That was the system. Not one single time. And I was chairman of the committee.

Now, I would point out one other thing to my friend. I want to have complete candor. If one considers taking judges based on their ideology and call that political, yes, we Democrats were political, as well. I am not complaining about that. I am not complaining about anybody who stands up and says I do not want Judge Smith, the President's nominee, because I think he will be bad on the court for the following reasons and comes to the floor and makes the case. I do not quarrel with that because I think that is the prerogative of the Senate and any Senator. What I am quarreling with is a different kind of politicizing, and that is drawing the conclusion that because I now control the Senate, I am not going to let the President of the United States have nominees whether or not I have an ideological problem with them.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield. It is worse than that. It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed . You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an up-or-down vote. That is the problem today. In other words, the other side will not let the process work so these nominees can come before the Senate for judgment.

Some may come before the Senate for judgment and be rejected by the Senate. That is OK.

REV_00256506

Mr. BIDEN. Fair enough.

Mr. SARBANES. But at least let the process work so the nominees have an opportunity and the judiciary has an opportunity to have these vacant positions filled so the court system does not begin to break down because of the failure to confirm new judges.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, let me give an example of what you just said. I know you know, but it is important for the Record.

I meet every year--I will not now because I am not the top Democrat on the committee. But every year for, I don't know, 14 or 15 years, I meet with what is called the Judicial Conference --a legislatively organized body where the Congress says the court can have such a function, where we look for recommendations.

I might add, by the way, you may remember when there was a Republican President named Reagan, the Senator from Delaware introduced a bill to increase the number of Federal judgeships by 84. Why did I do that? I did that because the Federal court came to us, the Judicial Conference, and said, `Here is our problem. We don't have enough judges to administer justice in a timely fashion in this country. And there is a backlog on all these criminal cases.'

I must admit to the Senator, when they came to me with that request, I knew the problem I was going to have. I was going to go into a Democratic caucus and say, by the way, a Republican President , who is a fine man but the most ideological guy we had in a long time, who announced he was going to appoint only very conservative judges, I was now going to give him 84 more than he had.

I realized that was not a politically wise thing for me to do. But, listening to the court, I did just that. My recollection is the Senator from Maryland stood with me and said, `I don't like it. I admit, I am not crazy about 84 more judges being appointed by Ronald Reagan. But the court needs to be filled.'

Now we have the strange happening, the courts come back to us and say--and they do this in a very scientific way--we not only need the vacancies filled, we need more judges than we have. They cite, as the Senator is very familiar with, they cite the backlog, they give the rationale that cases are being backed up. Guess what? The idea that we will even get a chance to discuss a judgeship bill, I predict to my friend from Maryland, on this floor is zero--zero. Not only that, to further make the point, this is the first time in the 24 years that I have been a Senator, in 24 years, the first time I have ever heard anybody come to the floor and say: You know, we should basically decommission judgeships.

The ninth circuit is the busiest circuit in America, out in California. One of our colleagues, a very wonderful guy, a nice guy, says, `I am not going to let any other judge be in the ninth circuit'--notwithstanding they have five vacancies, if I am not mistaken, and they are up to their ears in work. This started last year when I was in charge of the Democratic side. He said, `I am not going to let anybody go through until the ninth circuit splits into two circuits.'

I said, `Why do you want it to split?'

He said, `The reason I want it to split is I don't like the fact that California judges are making decisions that affect my State.'

The distinguished Senator from Idaho is shaking his head. He agrees. He is in that circuit. It is painful to point this out, but the reason why there is a Federal court is so there is not Illinois, Indiana, Idaho, California justice. There is one uniform interpretation of the Constitution. That is the reason we have a Federal circuit court of appeals.

Now, this is quite unusual. We have--and I was not referring to the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who is on the floor, when I said, `there was a Senator.' That is not to whom I am referring. But another one of our colleagues said he is not going to let anybody go through until there is a split, because he does not like the idea that decisions relating to his State are being made by judges who are not from his State or are not from States of similar size. That is, interestingly, an effectively rewrite of the Constitution of the United States of America. I do not think the Senator thought it in those terms, but that is literally what it is.

Now I am being told, OK, unless we, in fact, split the circuit--and by the way, I am not opposed to splitting the circuit. We split the fifth circuit because when we got to the point where Florida grew so big--Florida and Mississippi and Alabama and

REV_00256507

21

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

NOMINATION OF MARY A. McLAUGHLIN, OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA -- (Senate - May 24, 2000)

NOMINATION OF NATHAN HATCH

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Dr. Nathan Hatch for receiving the Senate's approval of his nomination to serve as a member of the National Council on the Humanities. Dr. Hatch has dedicated his life to academia. He currently serves as Provost of the University of Notre Dame and is also a Professor of History. As Provost, Dr. Hatch has focused on three areas: the establishment of academic centers of excellence, including the expansion of the Keough Institute for Irish Studies and the enhancement of the Medieval Institute; revitalization of undergraduate education through the creation of the Kaneb Center for Teaching and Learning; and the pursuit of outstanding faculty.

Dr. Hatch is considered to be one of the most influential scholars in the study of the history of religion in America. His book, The Democratization of American Christianity, won both the Albert Outler Prize in Ecumenical Church History and the John Hope Franklin Prize for the best book in American Studies; it was also chosen by his peers as one of the two most important books in the study of American religion.

Dr. Hatch is a remarkable asset for the University of Notre Dame and the State of Indiana. His experiences at Notre Dame will make him a valuable addition to the National Council on the Humanities. I applaud the Senate today for confirming this outstanding Hoosier.

NOMINATIONS OF MARIANNE BATTANI AND DAVID LAWSON

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has confirmed the two nominees for the Federal District Court in the Eastern District of Michigan, Judge Marianne Battani and David Lawson.

Mr. President, Michigan could not be better served. These nominees are well-known in Michigan for their long and distinguished careers, high standards of moral and ethical conduct, and knowledge and commitment to the law. I have every confidence that they will both be outstanding federal judges.

While I am glad that the Senate has finally confirmed these two district court judges, I am deeply concerned about the vacancies in the Sixth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals. The length of time that nominees for these positions have remained pending is unfair, both to the nominees, and to the State of Michigan.

There are now three Michigan vacancies on the Sixth Circuit. One of the nominees for these vacancies is Helene White, who was nominated more than three years ago, and is still awaiting a hearing. Kathleen McCree Lewis has been pending at the Committee awaiting a hearing for more than eight months. And the third candidate for a Michigan seat has not yet been nominated but hopefully will be at any time.

These Michigan candidates are intelligent and hardworking advocates of the law, who at a minimum, deserve to have and up or down vote on their nominations . Yet, Circuit Court of Appeals nominees continue to face unconscionable delays in this Senate.

The Senate slowdown has a serious impact on the administration of justice. In a March 20, 2000 letter to Senator HATCH, Judge Gilbert Merritt, Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, notes that these vacancies have hampered the Court's ability to complete the public's business. The Court, in his words, is deteriorating rapidly due to the high number of judicial vacancies.

REV_00256508

Judge Merritt writes:

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals now has four vacancies. Twenty-five per cent of the seats on the Sixth Circuit are vacant. The Court is hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its work load due to the fact that the Senate Judiciary Committee has acted on none of the nominations to our Court. One of the vacancies is five years old and no vote has ever been taken. One is two years old. We have lost many years of judge time because of the vacancies.

By the time the next President is inaugurated, there will be six vacancies on the Court of Appeals. Almost half of the Court will be vacant and will remain so for most of 2001 due to the exigencies of the nomination process. Although the President has nominated candidates, the Senate has refused to take a vote on any of them.

Our Court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the federal courts should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our Court is rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25% of the judgeships are vacant. Each active judge of our Court is now participating in deciding more than 550 cases a year--a case load that is excessive by any standard. In addition, we have almost 200 death penalty cases that will be facing us before the end of next year. I presently have six pending before me right now and many more in the pipeline. Although the death cases are very time consuming (the records often run to 5000 pages), we are under very short deadlines imposed by Congress for acting on these cases. Under present circumstances, we will be unable to meet these deadlines. Unlike the Supreme Court, we have no discretionary jurisdiction and must hear every case.

The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate ``advise'' as to judicial nominations, i.e., consider, debate and vote up or down. They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for each year.

I again urge the Senate Judiciary Committee to promptly hold a confirmation hearing for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals nominees from Michigan. They are highly qualified individuals who deserve to be voted on by this Senate.

NOMINATION OF RICHARD TALLMAN

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to support the confirmation today of Richard Tallman to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. In an unusual, if not unprecedented arrangement, particularly at this time and for the controversial Ninth Circuit, the White House, Senator MURRAY, and I have worked together quietly to select and confirm absolutely first rate judges from Washington State. Dick Tallman is no exception.

I had not met Mr. Tallman before he was chosen as a finalist for a district court vacancy by a Judicial Merit Selection Committee jointly appointed by Senator MURRAY and me. He impressed me tremendously at the time and I was privileged to be able later to recommend him to fill a vacancy on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. Tallman enjoys broad bi-partisan support within Washington's legal community, including that of the Democratic State Attorney General, two former United States Attorneys for Western Washington, the Federal Public Defender from Western Washington, the President of the Ninth Circuit District Judges Association, and the Federal Bar Association for the Western District of Washington.

Prior to starting his own small firm where he continues to specialize in white collar criminal defense, Mr. Tallman practiced law for many years at one of the largest private firms in Seattle, Bogle & Gates. Before that he served as an Assistant United States Attorney for the Western District of Washington. He has also been sought out by all levels of state government, serving as a Special Assistant City Attorney for Seattle, a Special Deputy Prosecuting Attorney for King County, as well as a Special Assistant Attorney General for Washington State. Over the years, Mr. Tallman has taught and lectured extensively to groups of lawyers and non-lawyers on a range of legal topics, instructing groups including the National Park Service, the Washington Medical Association, and the Seattle Police Academy.

Mr. Tallman's involvement in bar and civic activities is no less impressive than his professional record. In addition to extensive pro bono work, he has served as president of the local federal bar association and as chair of the lawyer delegates to the Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference. He has been active in committees for local, state, and federal bar associations, in the selection of judges, bench-bar relations, and in helping women and minorities interested in legal careers.

As the accomplishments I have just reviewed attest, Mr. Tallman is an impressive man. What these accomplishments to not convey, however, is the warmth, good humor, and the clear unpretentious intelligence I have observed in my short acquaintance with him. The Ninth Circuit will clearly benefit from our action today.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, one of our most important constitutional responsibilities is to provide advice and consent on the scores of judicial nominations sent to us to fill the vacancies on the federal courts around the country. Today we made some progress. We confirmed 16 new judges. For that I thank the Democratic leader and the majority leader, my counterpart on the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH, and all those who worked with us to achieve Senate action on these judicial nominees.

The Senate has finally begun to consider the judges needed to serve the American people in our federal courts. But before any Senator thinks that our work is done for the year, let us take stock: We are only one-third of the way to the number of judges nominated by a Republican President and confirmed by a Democratic majority in 1992, and only half way to the levels of confirmations achieved in 1984 and 1988. Today we finally passed the level of 17 confirmations achieved in 1996, the year before I became the Ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. That low water mark is no measure of success, however.

Today we face more judicial vacancies than when the Senate adjourned in 1994. That means there are more vacancies across the country than when the Republican majority took controlling responsibility for the Senate in January 1995. Over the last six years we have gained no ground in our efforts to fill longstanding judicial vacancies that are plaguing the federal courts.

In addition, recall that this is the first action that the Senate has taken on judicial nominees since March 9, when the Senate ended 4-years of delay and finally voted to confirm Judge Richard Paez to the Ninth Circuit. For more than two months, for more than 10 weeks, the Senate has not acted to confirm a single judge, not one. That stall accounts for the backlog in judicial nominations that results in there being 16 judicial nominations on the Senate calendar today. On the other hand, since March 9, seven additional vacancies have arisen and the Senate has received 17 additional nominations.

There remain 36 judicial nominations pending in the Judiciary Committee, plus new nominations that the President is sending us every week. I have challenged the Senate to regain the pace it met in 1998 when the Committee held 13 hearing and the Senate confirmed 65 judges. That would still be one less than the number of judges confirmed by a Democratic Senate majority in the last year of the Bush Administration in 1992. Indeed, in the last two years of the Bush Administration, a Democratic Senate majority confirmed 124 judges. It would take an additional 67 confirmations this year for this Senate to equal that total.

Over the last five years the Republican-controlled Senate confirmed the following: 58 federal judges in the 1995 session; 17 in 1996; 36 in 1997; 65 in 1998; and 34 in 1999. By contrast, in one year, 1994, with a Democratic majority in the Senate, we confirmed 101 judges. With commitment and hard work many things are achievable.

Of the confirmations achieved this year, seven were nominations that were reported last year and should have been confirmed last year. That would have made last year's total slightly more respectable. Instead, they were held over and inflate this year's numbers. In addition, Tim Dyk, one of the nominees finally being considered today, was nominated in 1998 and has been held over two years.

Moreover, the Republican Congress has refused to consider the authorization of the additional judges needed by the federal judiciary to deal with their ever increasing workload. In 1984, and again in 1990, Congress responded to requests by the Chief Justice and the Judiciary Conference for needed judicial resources. Indeed, in 1990, a Democratic majority in the Congress created scores of needed new judgeships during a Republican Administration.

Three years ago the Judicial Conference of the United States requested that an additional 53 judgeships be authorized around the country. Last year the Judicial Conference renewed its request but increased it to 72 judgeships needing to be authorized around the country. Instead, the only federal judgeships created since 1990 were the nine District Court judgeships authorized in the omnibus appropriations bill at the end of last year.

If Congress had timely considered and passed the Federal Judgeship Act of 1999, S.1145, as it should have, the federal judiciary would have nearly 130 vacancies today. That is the more accurate measure of the needs of the federal judiciary that have been ignored by the Congress over the past several years and places the vacancy rate for the federal judiciary at 14 percent (128 out of 915). As it is, the vacancy rate is almost 10 percent (65 out of 852) and has remained too high throughout the five years that the Republican majority has controlled the Senate.

REV_00256510

Especially troubling is the vacancy rate on the courts of appeals, which continues at over 11 percent (20 out of 179) without the creation of any of the additional judgeships that those courts need to handle their increased workloads.

Most troubling is the circuit emergency that had to be declared more than seven months ago by the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. I recall when the Second Circuit had such an emergency two years ago. Along with the other Senators representing States from the Circuit, I worked hard to fill the five vacancies then plaguing my circuit. The situation in the Fifth Circuit is not one that we should tolerate; it is a situation that I wished we had confronted by expediting consideration of the nominations of Alston Johnson and Enrique Moreno last year. I still hope that the Senate will consider both this year.

I deeply regret that the Senate adjourned last November and left the Fifth Circuit to deal with the crisis in the federal administration of justice in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi without the resources that it desperately needs. I look forward to our resolving this difficult situation. I will work with the Majority Leader and the Democratic Leader to resolve that emergency at the earliest possible time.

With 20 vacancies on the Federal appellate courts across the country and nearly half of the total judicial emergency vacancies in the Federal courts system in our appellate courts, our courts of appeals are being denied the resources that they need, and their ability to administer justice for the American people is being hurt. There continue to be multiple vacancies on the Ninth Circuit. Three vacancies is too many and perpetuating these four judicial emergency vacancies, as the Senate has in this one circuit, is irresponsible. We should act on these nominations promptly and provide the Ninth Circuit with the judicial resources it needs and to which it is entitled.

I am likewise concerned that the Fourth, Sixth and District of Columbia Circuits are suffering from multiple vacancies.

I continue to urge the Senate to meet our responsibilities to all nominees, including women and minorities, and look forward to action on the nominations of Judge James Wynn, Jr. to the Fourth Circuit, Enrique Moreno to the Fifth Circuit, Kathleen McCree Lewis to the Sixth Circuit and Judge Johnnie Rawlinson to the Ninth Circuit. Working together the Senate can join with the President to confirm well-qualified, diverse and fair-minded judges to fulfill the needs of the federal courts around the country.

Having begun so slowly in the first five months of this year, we have much more to do before the Senate takes its final action on judicial nominees this year. We should be considering 20 to 40 more judges this year. Having begun so slowly, we cannot afford to follow the ``Thurmond rule'' and stop acting on these nominees at the end of the summer in anticipation of the presidential election. We must use all the time until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetuated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice. I urge all Senators to make the federal administration of justice a top priority for the Senate for the rest of this year.

<<<

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

REV_00256511

April 30, 2003
The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

Six months ago you described the judicial nomination and confirmation process as "broken" and declared "we have a duty to repair it." I could not agree with you more. To fulfill that duty, both the Administration and the Senate must be willing to make concessions for the sake of the Judiciary and the nation. I write to suggest a reform that requires such concessions, but, if adopted, will go a long way toward repairing the damage that has been done.

As matters currently stand, both sides are clearly considering ideology in evaluating candidates for the bench and nominees are being delayed and deferred because of it.

On the front end, while most of the candidates you have sent to the Senate have been mainstream conservatives (and have been swiftly confirmed), a growing number of nominees have records that raise both eyebrows and concerns about their commitment to balance, fairness, and moderation. They may be excellent lawyers, but they have spent their careers advancing agendas that harm – most particularly – women, consumers, workers, civil rights, and the environment.

On the back end, in the face of such extremist nominees, one simply cannot expect the Senate to disregard its constitutional obligation and rubberstamp these extremist nominees. When confronted with nominees' hostility to basic fairness, we must ask questions, demand answers, and do all we can to stop those who fail to demonstrate the capacity to be even-handed jurists. Thus far, you have declined to take ideology out of the process. That is your right and I respect it, but it means we must continue to stand up against nominees who will bring an activist agenda to the courts.

Thus, we find ourselves at an impasse when it comes to several nominees. In addition, because we have to spend so much time vetting other nominees for whom red flags are raised, the process moves more slowly than any of us would like.

I believe there is a solution to the problems we face.

Both the Administration and the Senate should agree to the creation of nominating commissions in every state, the District of Columbia, and each Circuit Court of Appeals. Every commission will consist of an equal number of Republicans and Democrats, chosen by the President and the opposition party's Senate leader. Each commission will propose one candidate to fill each vacancy. Barring evidence that any candidate proposed by a Commission is unfit for judicial service, the President will nominate the individual and the Senate will confirm her or him.

To ensure each vacancy is filled rapidly but not hastily, the Commission will have a reasonable period of time within which to propose a nominee, the President will have a short time within which to make the nomination, and the Senate will have the same short period of time within which to confirm him or her.

This proposal is our best hope for filling the bench with judges who are appointed based on merit, not ideology or party affiliation. It is also our best hope for breaking the vicious cycle that the judicial nomination and confirmation process has been stuck in for years.

The solution I offer is similar to one proposed 25-years ago by President Carter, who relied on judicial nominating commissions to generate candidates for circuit court vacancies and it is similar to nominating commissions used by Senators in several states. The biggest differences are that this proposal ensures that all federal judges are appointed by the same process regardless of what party is in power and it guarantees that every single selection is bipartisan.

By giving the President and the Senate equal roles in picking the judge-pickers, both retain some control over the process, but neither gets a stranglehold.

By forcing every selection to be bipartisan, we maximize the prospect of achieving balance and moderation on the bench. Very few extremists on either side will get through and, in the rare instance where one does, he or she likely will be offset by an extremist on the other side.

By mutually agreeing to abide by the choices the commissions make, we take politics and patronage out of the process.

Once this system is in place, Presidents and Senates will be hard-pressed to abandon it. We have a real chance here to put these battles to rest for good.

REV_00256513

I promise to work to secure support for this proposal from every Senator on both sides of the aisle. I will also ask every Democratic candidate for the White House to take a vow to support this reform. Your leadership on this matter is essential to achieving this momentous goal. I hope you will agree to work with me to fix our broken system.

I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely
Charles E. Schumer
United States Senator

REV_00256514

The Superior Court
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA 90012
CHAMBERS OF
DZINTRA I. JANAVS, JUDGE

February 22, 2002

TELEPHONE
(213) 974-1234

The Hon. Patrick Leahy
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
433 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

The Hon. Orrin G. Hatch
Ranking Minority Member, Senate Judiciary Committee
104 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

The Hon. Dianne Feinstein
331 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

The Hon. Barbara Boxer
112 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Re: Nomination of Judge Carolyn B. Kuhl to U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit

Dear Senators:

We are all colleagues of Judge Carolyn B. Kuhl on the Superior Court of the State of California for Los Angeles County. We write in support of her being given a prompt and fair hearing on her nomination to be a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. We have served with her variously in the criminal felony courts, the general jurisdiction civil courts, the pilot program for complex litigation, and on committees and special projects

Judge Kuhl is seen by us and by the members of the Bar who appear before her as a fair, careful and thoughtful judge who applies the law without bias. She is respected by prosecutors, public defenders, and members of the plaintiffs' and defense bar. She is conscientious, scholarly, courteous and willing to listen with an open mind to the arguments of counsel. Judge Kuhl approaches her job with respect for the law and not a political "agenda."

Judge Kuhl has been a mentor to new women judges who join our Court to help them navigate the unfamiliar waters of judicial service. She has helped promote the judicial careers of women, both Republican and Democrat. She supported the Hon. Margaret Morrow when Judge Morrow was awaiting a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on her nomination by President Clinton to the United States District Court in Los Angeles. She also wrote in support of President Clinton's nomination of the Hon. Richard Paez to the Ninth Circuit when he likewise awaited his confirmation after his nomination by President Clinton. This shows both Judge Kuhl's open-mindedness and the continuing importance of affording all Presidents' judicial nominees a hearing. We would hope that equal consideration would now be given to allowing Judge Kuhl to have a timely hearing and vote.

As you know, the evaluation of Judge Kuhl, her professional work, credentials and competence by the American Bar Association's Standing Committee On The Federal Judiciary was completed last August. We understand that Judge Kuhl was rated Well Qualified by a substantial majority of that Committee and rated Qualified by the other members of that Committee. This high rating of Judge Kuhl for such an important appellate position is entirely consistent with our observations and her well deserved, excellent reputation among her colleagues and the bar. She is also a very decent, caring, honest and patient human being who is a delight to have as a professional colleague and friend.

As sitting Judges, we more than anyone appreciate the importance of an independent, fair-minded and principled judiciary. We believe that Carolyn Kuhl represents the best values of such a judiciary. Under the Constitution it is ultimately for each member of your Committee and eventually each member of the Senate to determine whether or not to confirm Judge Kuhl, but we urge you to deal with the question on the merits and not by denying her a hearing.

Sincerely yours,

The Hon. Dzintra Janavs

The Hon. Mary Ann Murphy

The Hon. Emilie H. Elias

The Hon. Judith C. Chirlin

The Hon. Ann Kough

The Hon. Victoria Chaney

The Hon. Ann I. Jones

The Hon. Helen I. Bendix

The Hon. Linda K. Lefkowitz

The Hon. Lorna Parnell

The Hon. Patricia L. Collins

The Hon. Elizabeth A. Grimes

The Hon. Rita Miller

The Hon. Lee Edmon

The Hon. Fumiko H Wasserman

The Hon. Mary Thornton House

The Hon. Ruth Ann Kwan

The Hon. Kathleen Kennedy Powell

The Hon. Tricia Ann Bigelow

The Hon. Judith L. Champagne

Copyright 2001 The Washington Post

The Washington Post
washingtonpost.com

The Washington Post

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: A SECTION; Pg. A02

LENGTH: 860 words

HEADLINE: 11 Judicial Nominees Named; Bush Urges Senate to Rise Above Partisan 'Bitterness'

BYLINE: Amy Goldstein and Helen Dewar, Washington Post Staff Writers

BODY:
President Bush announced 11 nominees to a half-dozen federal appeals courts yesterday, imploring the Senate to "rise above the bitterness" that has thwarted the confirmation of judges in the recent past. Senate Democrats indicated that they will attempt to block at least one nomination but said that they have no wholesale plans to hinder consideration of the White House's candidates.

In his first round of choices for the federal judiciary, Bush adhered to his campaign commitment to fill court vacancies predominantly with conservative legal thinkers. But the administration sidestepped sharper ideological controversy by withholding three anticipated nominees opposed by Democrats and by selecting candidates who largely come from states without Democratic senators.

At a time when Democrats wield considerable leverage because they hold half the seats in the Senate and on the Senate Judiciary Committee, the only nominee they immediately vowed to oppose is Terrence W. Boyle, a U.S. district judge from North Carolina whom Bush nominated to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, whose jurisdiction stretches from Maryland to the Carolinas. A former aide to Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) who Bush's father had tried to put on the appeals court, Boyle is opposed by Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.). Edwards wrote to the White House this week, urging Bush to consider a black judge, nominated to the appeals court by President Bill Clinton, for whom Helms had refused to allow a confirmation hearing.

Edwards's opposition comes as the Judiciary Committee has been sparring over how much influence to grant individual Democratic senators who balk at nominees from their own states. Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) has said that he will consider senators' views but will not be bound by them.

In a show of solidarity, the nine Democrats on the panel wrote Hatch a letter late last week, essentially saying that they will stand in the way of any nominee who lacks the support of his or her senators.

Yesterday, party leaders modulated their tone. "I'm pleased that the White House has chosen to work with us on the first group of nominations," said Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.). Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), the Judiciary Committee's ranking Democrat and the only Senate Democrat who attended the White House ceremony at which Bush announced his choices, said: "Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today."

REV_00256519

Daschle and other Democrats said, however, that they believe they have already influenced Bush's selections and that they expect to be consulted by the White House over future nominations. They left open the possibility that they may ultimately oppose more of the nominees who were announced yesterday, once their records are better known.

Bush used part of the ceremony in the East Room to warn against the political antagonisms that prevented many of Clinton's nominees from winning confirmation over the past six years. "We have seen political battles played out in committee hearings -- battles that have little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee," the president said. "I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee."

During the six-minute afternoon ceremony, all 11 nominees stood on risers next to Bush's lectern. The president extolled them but did not introduce them by name.

In exhorting the Senate to act swiftly, White House officials noted that eight of yesterday's appellate court nominations would fill vacancies that have been classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U.S Courts because of the number of vacant seats on certain circuits and the volume of cases there.

Bush has an uncommon opportunity to put his imprint on the federal judiciary because of a large number of vacancies. On the U.S. circuit courts of appeals -- the regional appellate courts that are the final arbiter over most federal laws -- 17 percent of the 179 seats are vacant. At the trial-level district courts, 10 percent of the 665 seats are vacant.

During the campaign, Bush drew the support of many conservatives who hoped that he would give the judiciary a more conservative tilt. Yesterday, a few of the president's choices already began to draw the ire of liberal organizations. For example, ADA Watch protested the nomination of Jeffrey S. Sutton to the Ohio-based 6th Circuit, contending that he has opposed the Americans With Disabilities Act and other civil rights laws.

For the Washington area, Bush nominated prominent, conservative Washington attorneys Miguel A. Estrada and John G. Roberts to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, considered the nation's second-highest court after the U.S. Supreme Court. In addition to Boyle, the White House selected for the 4th Circuit Dennis W. Shedd, a district judge from South Carolina, and Roger L. Gregory, who became the first black judge on the relatively conservative circuit when Clinton gave him a one-year appointment while the Senate was in recess late last year.

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

Document 1 of 4 next ➤

About LexisNexis™ | Terms and Conditions | Privacy Policy | Support Identifier
Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Copyright 2001 Federal News Service, Inc.
Federal News Service

May 9, 2001, Wednesday

SECTION: WHITE HOUSE BRIEFING

LENGTH: 1060 words

HEADLINE: STAKEOUT WITH SENATOR PATRICK LEAHY (D-VT) FOLLOWING PRESIDENT BUSH'S JUDICIAL NOMINATION ANNOUNCEMENTS

LOCATION: WHITE HOUSE DRIVEWAY

BODY:
SEN. LEAHY: I forgot -- you had started asking a question before, but basically I'll repeat the answer I gave and you can figure the question.

The president has nominated a number of judges. I don't know all of them; I know some of them. I would hope that we would go forward quickly. We'll certainly ask the ABA to do as quick an analysis as possible of them.

And one of the things I was struck by is that, in at least a couple of instances I know of where the senators have told me, from their home states, that they will submit quickly the blue slips. I say this as an indication that sometimes this looks like a very polarized thing, and it does not necessarily have to be. It becomes polarized only if we try to lurch the federal judiciary one way or the other.

So, any questions?

Q What's the situation in the Judiciary Committee per se right now, on all nominations?

SEN. LEAHY: It's such sweetness and light that it's almost impossible to bear. (Scattered laughter.)

Q Will there be a vote tomorrow on the --

Q So the deadlock has been broken on the Judiciary?

SEN. LEAHY: No, no. No, I think we understand the blue slip issue. We have made it very clear to Senator Hatch, the Democrats, what they will do on the blue slip. He has a feeling what he would do. Obviously, if there is a conflict at any one time, that's when it would create a problem.

But the blue slip is designed so that you have a check-and- balance in the Senate, so that the federal court system doesn't suddenly become a far left or a far right committee -- or, judiciary. The Republicans insisted on the blue slip as a check-and-balance, an appropriate check-and-balance, on President Clinton. We are asking for no more, no less, and we will insist on that with President Bush.

In the long run, I suspect it will help President Bush just as in the long run, in many cases, it helped President Clinton. You end up having a more moderate, non-ideological court where the key, the key question is not ideology, but competence, and that's our thing. We are very respectful of the president's right -- in fact, some would say duty -- to nominate, but at the same time, we have a constitutional duty that has existed since the beginning of the country, and that is to advise and consent.

It's not "nominate and rubber-stamp." It's nominate and then advise and consent.

Q Senator, are you encouraged by the slate the president put up this time? You talked today, earlier, about the importance of balance.

SEN. LEAHY: Yeah.

Q Does this strike you, on first impression, as a balanced slate?

REV_00256521

SEN. LEAHY: Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today.

Q Would you have been here today if --

SEN. LEAHY: And I am -- I will continue to work with the president. I completely respect his right to nominate anybody he wants. I mean, he could nominate a(n) ultra right-wing ideologue, if he wants, but the Senate would not confirm, just as, had President Clinton nominated an ultra left-wing ideologue, the Senate would not have confirmed. What we're doing is just making sure of the checks and balances.

And one of the things that's happened in this -- it got to somewhat of a rocky start. I think they did not understand now there's a lot more consulting with senators. And we'll go on. These things sometimes happen at the beginning of a(n) administration.

Some have said that you might get more of a gridlock with a 50-50 Senate. I think it's just the opposite. I think this is -- calls upon us to do the best to cooperate and make it work.

Q Are you going to allow nominations to move on a case-by- case basis until the blue slip thing is resolved, or everything stopped up right now?

SEN. LEAHY: Well, no, as far as I'm concerned, the blue slip is resolved.

Q Oh.

SEN. LEAHY: It will be the way -- we made it very clear when people would move or not. If you had senators who refuse to return the blue slip or a give a negative blue slip, I doubt if that nominee is going to go anywhere. And that's always been the way. No matter how you describe it, that's always been the way in the Senate. That's the way it will continue to be.

Thank you.

Q At this point, with what you know about these nominees, do you know enough to say you think they'll --

SEN. LEAHY: I -- we haven't even started this. We will submit to the ABA, so there could be peer review, and they will go forward. I know a couple of them personally, and only because I had sat on their original confirmation hearings, I know them well enough that I would assume they'll go through all right. But we'll have the ABA review, and then we'll go forth.

(Cross talk.)

Q Senator, you soon should be voting on the nominees be to head of the drug policy office and head of the DEA. Can you --

SEN. LEAHY: I don't think we do the drugs -- I don't think we do the drug policy office, do we? Is the drug policy office confirmable?

STAFF/Q Yes.

SEN. LEAHY: Are you sure?

STAFF/Q Yes.

SEN. LEAHY: Okay. I'll take your word for it.

Well, let's -- I don't -- I haven't even looked at that, but I heard --

Q What are your thoughts on the philosophies for the two men that the president is choosing for those posts?

SEN. LEAHY: Well, one of them I don't know; the other one is Asa Hutchinson.

Q Yeah, and John Walters.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, let me tell you -- I don't know Mr. Walters at all, and so I can't speak to that. But Asa Hutchinson I know very well. He and I were actually on obviously very publicly opposite sides on the impeachment trial. In fact, he led the Republican group that did the depositions, and I led the Democratic group that did depositions. So we had to deal with each other on that. All my dealings with Congressman Hutchinson I found him to be totally honest, even though we disagreed on issues; I found him to be totally scrupulous in his dealings with me. I respect him greatly. Unless there's something that's going to come out of this hearing that I'm not aware of, I would assume I would be supporting him. We obviously disagree philosophically on a lot of issues. We obviously disagreed during the impeachment trial. But the respect I have for him is such, and the respect I know he has for the United States, is that I would assume I'm going to be supporting him, unless something comes up that we're not aware of.

REV_00256522

Thank you.

Q Thank you.

END

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

REV_00256523

Copyright 2001 News World Communications, Inc.
The Washington Times

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: PART A; Pg. A1

LENGTH: 881 words

HEADLINE: Bush sends nominees in 'good faith';
Leahy foresees few foes to 'encouraging' judicial batch

BYLINE: Joseph Curl; THE WASHINGTON TIMES

BODY:
President Bush yesterday announced his first batch of judicial nominees, saying he would trust in the "good faith" of the Senate to swiftly confirm them and drawing a confident prediction from a top Democrat that all will pass muster.

"I now submit these nominations in good faith, trusting that good faith will also be extended by the United States Senate," Mr. Bush said in an East Room ceremony, flanked by his 11 nominees, more than half of whom are women or racial minorities.

"I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee," he said.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who attended yesterday's ceremony, said: "Had I not been encouraged, I would not have been here today."

"I know them well enough that I would assume they'll go through all right," he said.

Most of the nominees - which include two blacks, three women and a Hispanic - have conservative ties and backgrounds, but the names of three other candidates for federal judicial positions were trimmed from the list before yesterday's event.

Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer said he did not know when those more-contentious candidates would be nominated.

During yesterday's brief White House event, Mr. Bush, in not-so-veiled language intended to put the Senate on the spot, said the confirmation process has became a partisan battleground that has "little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee."

"I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house and no matter who controls the Senate.

"I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process. And with this distinguished group of nominees awaiting confirmation, there is no better opportunity than right now," Mr. Bush said.

The Republican-controlled Senate used its "advice and consent" role of reviewing all federal judicial appointments to reject many of President Clinton's nominees, often by simply not bringing the nomination to a vote.

In his first two years in office - the only time when Democrats controlled the Senate - Mr. Clinton pushed through 129 judges, an average of 65 each year. After Republicans took over, he won confirmation of 245 - just 41 per year.

The same was true, however, when Democrats controlled the body and the president was Mr. Bush's father. In fact, one of the new president's nominees - U.S. District Judge Terrence W. Boyle - was nominated by the first President Bush but never voted on in the Senate.

Mr. Leahy said that while partisan rancor has gridlocked nominations for years, it need not be so.

"It becomes polarized only if we try to lurch the federal judiciary one way or the other," he said.

But he also said that before he will move forward on the nominations, he will ask the American Bar Association to review them.

"We will submit the nominees to the ABA, so there could be peer review," Mr. Leahy said.

That move may rankle some Republicans and Mr. Bush, who in March ended the ABA's 54-year advisory role in the process of choosing Supreme Court and other federal judges, in part because of association's liberal political activism.

Mr. Fleischer said the more than 100 vacancies represent 17 percent of all positions on the federal bench.

All 11 nominees - of whom seven are sitting judges, three practicing lawyers and one a law professor - attended yesterday's White House ceremony, but none spoke to reporters.

Mr. Bush said: "As a group, they command broad, bipartisan support among those who know them and who have served with them. I submit their names to the Senate with full confidence that they will satisfy any test of judicial merit."

Also attending the event were Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Sen. Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican, and Virginia senators George F. Allen and John W. Warner.

Mr. Allen and Mr. Warner, both Republican, said they support the nomination of Roger L. Gregory, first named to the federal court by Mr. Clinton in a controversial "recess" appointment while the Senate was out of session. Judge Gregory became the first black judge in the 4th Circuit.

Mr. Fleischer said it is "an unprecedented act for a president to renominate a judicial choice to the circuit court whose original nomination was made by a president of the other party. It has never happened before in the history of our country."

But there were signs yesterday that Democrats will seek to oppose the nomination of Judge Boyle, a former aide to Sen. Jesse Helms, North Carolina Republican.

"Until we find some constructive process that allows for balance, then I would not support any nominee, including Judge Boyle," said Sen. John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat.

Mr. Bush defended his nominees, saying, "Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench. . . . And all will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity."

REV_00256525

GRAPHIC: Photo (color), Jurist prudence: President Bush introduces his 11 nominees to the Federal Appeals Court during a White House ceremony. Pictured in the rear row, from left: Judge Terrence Boyle, Michael McConnell, Judge Deborah Cook, Judge Barrington Parker. Middle row, from left: Jeffrey Sutton, Judge Edith Brown Clement, Judge Roger Gregory, John Roberts. Front row, from left: Judge Dennis Shedd, Miguel Estrada and Judge Priscilla Owens., By J.M. Eddins Jr./The Washington Times

LOAD-DATE: May 10, 2001

Document 1 of 3 next ➤

About LexisNexis™ | Terms and Conditions | Privacy Policy | Support Identifier
Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Copyright 2001 News World Communications, Inc.
The Washington Times

May 10, 2001, Thursday, Final Edition

SECTION: PART A; Pg. A1

LENGTH: 830 words

HEADLINE: Democrats give up veto demand after Bush's 'gesture'

BYLINE: Audrey Hudson; THE WASHINGTON TIMES

BODY:
Senate Democrats yesterday backed down from demands for veto power over judicial nominees, and said they will move forward with President Bush's first 11 candidates.

Rather than a blanket objection, Democrats will review nominees on a case-by-case basis - standard Senate procedure.

Only one nominee, Terrence Boyle to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, is opposed by his home-state senator, John Edwards, North Carolina Democrat. A negative blue slip on the nomination has been submitted, Democrats said.

"The result will not be a veto power over judges, it will, rather, force the White House to come meet us and act in a moderate way in terms of how they choose judges," said Sen. Charles E. Schumer, New York Democrat.

"I think we ought to move ahead with these judges that the president submitted," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat. "I think we ought to move the process ahead with them."

Democrats said they will continue the disputed "blue slip" policy to indicate support or opposition to federal judges from home-state senators, but it will not carry the weight of a veto, which they have been demanding for more than a month.

"That's the power they always had," said Sen. Jon Kyl, Arizona Republican.

The White House planned to send 14 nominations to the Senate yesterday, but withheld three nominees objected to by their home-state senators.

In their public statements, Democratic senators declared victory, citing the three withheld nominations, which they called a good-faith gesture from Mr. Bush.

Asked if letting the process go forward is a conciliatory gesture from Democrats to the White House, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware said "yeah, it is."

"I am pleased the White House has chosen to work with us on this first group," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle.

Democrats had earlier refused to take the word of Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Judiciary Committee chairman and Utah Republican, that consultation would take place. Now they appear willing to give Mr. Hatch and the president the benefit of the doubt.

As further proof of the Democrats' retreat, they agreed to let key Justice Department nominations held hostage over the veto issue move forward today.

"The president made a gesture and it was met with a gesture from the Democrats," said Ron Bonjean, spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican.

"This was a first test to see if they will be cooperative, although there will be many more tests down the road," Mr. Bonjean said.

Mr. Schumer said the Democrats have received "initial signals" the White House "will not try to just roll over us."

If a home-state senator does object to a nomination and it is not resolved through consultation, Mr. Schumer suggested the unified Democratic caucus would block the nomination in committee. The committee is split 9-9, but votes cannot be cast without a quorum of 10 members.

Mr. Kyl called the tactic "absolutely unprecedented" and said he hoped objections would be based on qualifications, not on "political pique or partisan reasons."

Democrats said they were reserving judgment on the first batch of nominees, except to say that most are conservative candidates. Two nominations, however, were first put forth by former President Bill Clinton: Roger L. Gregory to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and Barrington D. Parker Jr. to the 2nd Circuit.

Republicans are united in their approval of the nominations, and said each "has demonstrated outstanding legal abilities, the highest ethical standards, and a proven record of service to diverse communities," according to a Senate Republican policy paper issued yesterday.

Mr. Hatch did not address the Democrats' retreat, but, in a statement released by his office, said he hoped to move the nominees quickly through his committee and onto the Senate floor for a final vote.

"President Bush has nominated top-notch, highly-qualified candidates to the bench," Mr. Hatch said.

"He has reached across the aisle and nominated Democrats and continues to keep his promise to work in a bipartisan fashion to lower the partisan rhetoric in this town," Mr. Hatch said.

"They are all home runs, highly qualified and experienced," Mr. Kyl said.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat, said nominees selected on their qualifications would likely be confirmed, but that Democrats would block those they believe were picked for their ideology.

The White House also angered Democrats when it removed the American Bar Association (ABA) from the vetting process.

However, Mr. Kennedy said Democratic reviews of the candidates "will specifically include analysis by the ABA and recommendations by the home-state senators."

"We ought to hear from the Bar Association, we ought to have extensive examination of their backgrounds, we ought to hear what the home senators say about them," Mr. Kennedy said.

REV_00256528

George W. Bush Circuit Court Nominees

	Well Qualified		Qualified		Not Qualified
First Circuit	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
Second Circuit	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
Third Circuit	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
Fourth Circuit	1	33%	2	67%	0	0%
Fifth Circuit	4	100%	0	0%	0	0%
Sixth Circuit	4	50%	4	50%	0	0%
Seventh Circuit	0	-	0	-	0	-
Eighth Circuit	2	67%	1	33%	0	0%
Ninth Circuit	2	67%	1	33%	0	0%
Tenth Circuit	3	60%	2	40%	0	0%
Eleventh Circuit	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
DC Circuit	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
Federal Circuit	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
TOTAL	21	62%	13	38%	0	0%

George W. Bush District Court Nominees

		Well Qualified		Qualified		Not Qualified
AL	MD	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
	ND	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
	SD	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
AK		0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
AZ		1	33%	2	67%	0	0%
CA	CD	5	83%	1	17%	0	0%
	ED	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	ND	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
CO		2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
DC		4	100%	0	0%	0	0%
DE		1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
FL	SD	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
	MD	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
GA	MD	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
HI		0	0%	0	0%	1	100%
IA	SD	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	ND	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
IL	ND	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
IN	ND	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%

George W. Bush District Court Nominees

		Well Qualified		Qualified		Not Qualified
KS		1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
KY	ED	0	0%	2	67%	1	33%
LA	WD	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
	ED	1	33%	2	67%	0	0%
MD		2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
MI	ED	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
MN		1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
MO	ED	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
	WD	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
MS	ND	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
MT		2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
NC	ED	0	0%	2	100%	0	0%
ND		0	0%	2	100%	0	0%
NE		0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
NJ		4	80%	1	20%	0	0%

George W. Bush District Court Nominees

		Well Qualified		Qualified		Not Qualified
NM		0	0%	2	100%	0	0%
NV		2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
NY	ED	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	SD	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
OH	ND	0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
	SD	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
OK	ND	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	WD	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	ED	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
PA	ED	5	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	WD	2	50%	2	50%	0	0%
	MD	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
RI		0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
SC		1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
TN	WD	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
	ED	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
TX	ND	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%
	SD	1	50%	1	50%	0	0%
	WD	2	67%	1	33%	0	0%
	ED	2	100%	0	0%	0	0%

George W. Bush District Court Nominees

		Well Qualified		Qualified		Not Qualified
UT		1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
VA	ED	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
WA	WD	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
WI	ED	1	100%	0	0%	0	0%
Int'l Trade		0	0%	1	100%	0	0%
TOTAL		71	66%	34	32%	2	2%

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 3/3/2003

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: Patrick Leahy

SUBJECT: Meeting with Estrada

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	C D	COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	2/26/2003	C
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	Brett	A
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	ACTION COMMENTS:
	ACTION COMMENTS:

COMMENTS:

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

REV_00256534

United States Senate
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
WASHINGTON, DC 20510-6275

February 26, 2003

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzalez
Counsel to the President
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Judge Gonzales,

When I previously met with Mr. Estrada he indicated no objection to our reviewing his work at the Solicitor General's office. He reiterated that position at the hearing last September. If the suggestion in your February 25 letter includes production of these long-requested materials, I would be interested in pursuing it.

As the Democratic Leader and Assistant Democratic Leader have repeatedly stated, a positive response to the February 11 letter from Senator Daschle and me to the President would pave the way for completing Senate action on this nomination. Senator Bennett's colloquy with Senator Reid and me on the Senate floor indicated how to resolve this matter. I regret that the Administration has rejected Senator Bennett's approach.

It is most unfortunate that the President has, to date, chosen not to follow precedent and make Mr. Estrada's workpapers available to the Senate in connection with this nomination and that you have insisted upon maintaining a wall of secrecy around those writings in closed cases. Prior administrations have provided Justice Department memoranda written by attorneys to the Solicitor General, as well as memoranda of the Solicitor General and the head of the Office of Legal Policy in connection with past nominations when requested by the Senate. The reversal by this Administration of the traditional policy of accommodation has led to the current impasse.

Please do not hesitate to contact me or my staff to arrange for the production of the requested information so that we may proceed.

Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY
United States Senator

Texas Lawyers for a Fair Judiciary

March 12, 2003

VIA FACSIMILE 202-456-2461
President George W. Bush
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Bush,

The press has reported that Justice Priscilla Owen may be re-nominated for a position on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Justice Owen's previous nomination was defeated by the Senate Judiciary Committee because of her partisanship, ideological leanings and activist tendencies. If her previous history was not a sufficient demonstration of these characteristics, a recent decision by the Texas Supreme Court further confirms that she is among those judges who are willing to subvert logic to reach an ideologically correct result consistent with the extreme right wing of the Republican party. An enclosed editorial from the Houston Chronicle from Saturday, January 4, 2003, addresses her willingness to put partisan ideology above law and logic.

Her re-nomination would be doubly unfortunate because Texas possesses so many conservative judges who are Republican and who are intellectually brilliant, fair, non-partisan and non-ideological. Judge Sim Lake from the Southern District of Texas in Houston, Judge Deborah Hankinson, outgoing Justice of the Texas Supreme Court, and Judge Sidney Fitzwater, from the Northern District of Texas in Dallas are all distinguished jurists with long records of scholarship and fair judicial administration and decision making. Surely, there are others but these three come to mind readily as conservative, Republican, seasoned, strong and neither activist nor ideological.

I would implore the President to nominate one of these judges rather than re-nominate a justice whose nomination is certain to create partisan bickering, rancor and enormous opposition.

Former Vice-President Gore had the good grace to withdraw his nomination from the next presidential race. Justice Owen ought to have the good grace to withdraw her name. If she doesn't, she should not be re-nominated because there are other Republicans who are much more qualified in every sense of the word.

The American people deserve judges who have demonstrated a commitment to evenhanded administration of justice.

Sincerely,

Eliot P. Tucker
Andrew S. Golub
Margaret A. Harris
Katherine L. Butler
Scott Newar
Jenifer C. Melby
Thomas H. Padgett, Jr.
Beatrice Mladenka-Fowler
Barbara Gardner
Daryl Moore
Houston, Texas

Cheryl Rubenstein
Susan Motley
Ken Molberg
Hal K. Gillespie
Steven B. Thorpe
Carla S. Hatcher
Dallas, Texas

Michael Shirk
Malcolm Greenstein
Tim Mahoney
Rick Levy
Austin, Texas

Wade Forsman
Fort Worth, Texas

Tom Crane
Glen Mangum
David Van Os
San Antonio, Texas

Lynn Knaupp
David Griffin
John Griffin
Victoria, Texas

Francisco X. Dominquez
El Paso, Texas

EPT/jd
Enclosure

12

THIS SEARCH | THIS DOCUMENT | THIS CR ISSUE | GO TO
Next Hit | Forward | Next Document | New CR Search
Prev Hit | Back | Prev Document | HomePage
Hit List | Best Sections | Daily Digest | Help
Contents Display

Congressional Record article 1 of 2 | Printer Friendly Display - 15,674 bytes.[Help]

NOMINATIONS OF RAY FISHER, MARSHA BERZON, AND RICHARD PAEZ -- (Senate - October 04, 1999)

[Page: S11875] GPO's PDF

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I want to first thank our minority leader for all of his effort in bringing public attention to the plight of pending judicial nominees.

Thanks to Senator DASCHLE's efforts, we have made some progress. Jim Lorenz, a fine California attorney who served seven years on my judicial selection committee, was confirmed on Friday along with Victor Marrero of New York.

Jim Lorenz's confirmation will help address a desperate shortage of judges in the Southern District of California. I have spoken several times with Marilyn Huff, Chief Judge of the Southern District of California, about the District's caseload crisis.

A recent judicial survey ranked the Southern District as the most overburdened court in the country. The weighted average caseload in the Southern District is 1,006 cases per judge, more than twice the national average.

It is also a significant step forward for the Senate that we will have a vote tomorrow on Associate Attorney General, Ray Fisher, to be a Circuit Judge on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal.

Ray Fisher is an extraordinary nominee who will add some support to the skeleton crew of judges currently presiding on the Ninth Circuit.

Currently, the Ninth Circuit has seven vacancies, which is 25 percent of the total judgeship positions on the circuit.

Each one of these judicial vacancies qualifies as a judicial emergency. The Chief Judge of the Ninth Circuit reports that the Circuit could handle 750 more cases right now if the vacancies were filled.

Prior to his appointment as Associate Attorney General, Ray Fisher was considered one of the top trial lawyers in Southern California. His legal skills are so highly regarded that he recently was inducted into the American College of Trial Lawyers, an honor bestowed on only the top one percent of the profession.

During his 30 year career in private practice, Ray Fisher specialized in the toughest of cases, complex civil litigation, and in alternate dispute resolution. In 1988, he founded the Los Angeles Office of Heller Ehrman, White and McAullife, an office that has grown from 6 attorneys to 48.

The Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary of the American Bar Association has deemed Mr. Fisher ``Well Qualified'' for appointment as Judge of the United States Court of Appeals.

Ray Fisher graduated from Stanford Law School in 1966, where he was president of The Stanford Law Review and awarded the Order of the Coif. Following law school, he served as a law clerk for Judge J. Skelley Wright of United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and Supreme Court Justice William Brennan.

I am confident Ray Fisher's acute interest in public service, specifically in public safety, and his overarching concern for fairness will serve the Ninth Circuit well.

REV_00256538

However, I am disappointed that the Senate could not confirm other pending Ninth Circuit nominees. Ray Fisher is a start, but six vacancies remain on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Two of those vacancies should be filled by Marsha Berzon and Judge Richard Paez.

It is a disturbing fact that women and minority nominees are having a difficult time getting confirmed by the Senate.

A report by the independent, bipartisan group Citizens for Independent Courts released last week found that during the 105th Congress, the average time between nomination and confirmation for male nominees was 184 days, while for women it was 249 days--a full 2 months longer.

This disturbing trend continues this year. Women and minorities constitute over 55 percent of the President's nominees in 1999; by contrast, only 41 percent of the nominees confirmed this year by the Senate are women or minorities.

All we have ever asked for Marsha Berzon and Richard Paez is that both nominees get an up-or-down vote. If a Senator has a problem with particular nominees, he or she should vote against them. But a nominee should not be held up interminably by a handful of Senators.

Let me assure my colleagues, this does not mark the end of a fight. At some point, legislation is not going to move until Marsha Berzon and Judge Richard Paez get an up-or-down vote. Let me take a moment to discuss the nominations process that these two nominees have experienced.

Judge Richard Paez, the first Mexican-American District judge in Los Angeles, was nominated on January 25, 1996--almost four years ago. He still hasn't made it to the Senate Floor for a vote. Any problem with his nomination can't be with his legal background.

He has 17 years of judicial experience. The American Bar Association found him to be ``well-qualified.'' He is also strongly supported by the legal community in Los Angeles including Gil Garcetti, the District Attorney, the Los Angeles County Police Chiefs' Association and the Association for Los Angeles Deputy Sheriffs. Judge Paez has described this interminable nominations process as a ``cloud'' hanging over his head. Litigants in his court constantly query him if the case is going to be continued, if his case is going to be assigned to someone else, or if Judge Paez is going to keep it. No nominee should have to face this uncertainty. His family has been thrust into the public limelight, and for four years every action he has taken has been subject to microscopic scrutiny.

Marsha Berzon was nominated almost a year and a half ago. She had her first hearing on July 30, 1998, and a second hearing in June 1999. Only in July 1999 was she reported out of committee and her nomination is pending before the Senate. Nationally renowned appellate attorney with over 20 years of appellate practice, she clerked for Supreme Court Justice Brennan and U.S. Court of Appeals Judge James Browning. She graduated Order of the Coif from Boalt Hall, has the support of law enforcement including the National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) and the International Union of Police Organizations, has strong bipartisan support including former Idaho Senator James Mclure and former EPA Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus.

The slow pace of this nomination has caused an incredible burden on Marsha Berzon both personally and professionally. Due to uncertainty over her future, she has significantly curtailed her private practice, and no longer is representing clients before the Supreme Court or the Ninth Circuit.

Chief Justice Rehnquist recently said that ``[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.''

Richard Paez and Marsha Berzon do not deserve to have their distinguished careers and personal lives held in limbo. Our institutional integrity requires an up-or-down vote.

REV_00256539

Until Marsha Berzon and Richard Paez get votes, this nominations process will remain tainted.

I assure my colleagues in the Senate that the nominations of Marsha Berzon and Richard Paez will not fade away. We will keep pressing for these nominees until they get the vote they deserve.

- [Begin Insert]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is a great pleasure for me to support--on the Senate floor--the confirmation of a judicial candidate who is the epitome of good character, broad experience, and a judicious temperament.

First, however, I think it appropriate that I spend a moment to acknowledge the minority for relenting in what I consider to have been an ill-conceived gambit to politicize the judicial confirmations process. My colleagues appear to have made history on September 21 by preventing the invocation of cloture for the first time ever on a district judge's nomination.

This was--and still is--gravely disappointing to me. In a body whose best moments have been those in which statesmanship triumphs over partisanship, this unfortunate statistic does not make for a proud legacy.

My colleagues--who were motivated by the legitimate goal of gaining votes on two particular nominees--pursued a short term offensive which failed to accomplish their objective and risked long-term peril for the nation's judiciary. There now exists on the books a fresh precedent to filibuster judicial nominees whose nominations either political party disagrees with.

I have always, and consistently, taken the position that the Senate must address the qualifications of a judicial nominee by a majority vote, and that the 41 votes necessary to defeat cloture are no substitute for the democratic and constitutional principles that underlie this body's majoritarian premise for confirmation to our federal judiciary.

But now the Senate is moving forward with the nomination of Ted Stewart. I think some of my colleagues realized they had erred in drawing lines in the sand, and that their position threatened to do lasting damage to the Senate's confirmation process, the integrity of the institution, and the judicial branch.

The record of the Judiciary Committee in processing nominees is a good one. I believe the Senate realized that the Committee will continue to hold hearings on those judicial nominees who are qualified, have appropriate judicial temperament, and who respect the rule of law. I had assured my colleagues of this before we reached this temporary impasse and I reiterate this commitment today.

This is not a time for partisan declarations of victory, but I am pleased that my colleagues revisited their decision to hold up the nomination. We are proceeding with a vote on the merits of Ted Stewart's nomination, and we will then proceed upon an arranged schedule to vote on other nominees in precisely the way that was proposed prior to the filibuster vote.

Ultimately, it is my hope for us, as an institution, that instead of signaling a trend, the last two weeks will instead look more like an aberration that was quickly corrected. I look forward to moving ahead to perform our constitutional obligation of providing advice and consent to the President's judicial nominees.

And now, I would like to turn our attention to the merits of Ted Stewart's nomination. I have known Ted Stewart for many years. I have long respected his integrity , his commitment to public service, and his judgment. And I am pleased that President Clinton saw fit to nominate this fine man for a seat on the United States District Court for the District of Utah.

Mr. Stewart received his law degree from the University of Utah School of Law and his undergraduate degree from Utah State University. He worked as a practicing lawyer in Salt Lake City for six years. And he served as trial counsel with the Judge Advocate General in the Utah National Guard.

In 1981, Mr. Stewart came to Washington to work with Congressman JIM HANSEN. His practical legal experience served him well on Capitol Hill, where he was intimately involved in the drafting of legislation.

Mr. Stewart's outstanding record in private practice and in the legislative branch earned him an appointment to the Utah Public Service Commission in 1985. For 7 years, he served in a quasi-judicial capacity on the commission, conducting hearings, receiving evidence, and rendering decisions with findings of fact and conclusions of law.

REV_00256540

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	THIS CR ISSUE	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	Next Document	New CR Search
Prev Hit	Back	Prev Document	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Daily Digest	Help
	Contents Display

NOMINATIONS -- (Senate - September 16, 1999)

[Page: S11014] GPO's PDF

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, while the distinguished majority leader is still on the floor, I note I, too, do not want to see the Senate go down a path where a minority of the Senate is determining a judge's fate on votes of 41. In fact, the distinguished majority leader is perhaps aware of the fact that during the Republican administrations I rarely ever voted against a nomination by either President Reagan or President Bush. There were a couple I did.

I also took the floor on occasion to oppose filibusters to hold them up and believe that we should have a vote up or down. Actually, I was one of those who made sure, on a couple controversial Republican judges, that we did. That meant 100 Senators voted on them, 100.

In this case, unfortunately, we have at least one judge who has been held for 3 years by one or two or three or four Senators, not 41 but less than a handful. All I am asking is that we give them the fairness of having the whole Senate vote on them.

Unfortunately, in the last couple years, women and minorities have been held up longer than anybody else on these Federal judgeships. They ought to be allowed a vote up or down. If Senators want to vote against them, then vote against them. If they want to vote for them, vote for them. But to have two or three people, quietly, in the back room, never be identified as being the ones holding them up, I think that is unfair to the judiciary, it is unfair to the nominees, and, frankly, it demeans the Senate.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, as a Senator representing California, who sits on the Judiciary Committee, I have to say a word or two on this subject.

First, I believe the chairman of our committee, Senator HATCH, has been very fair with respect to these judges. I believe he has tried his level best to move the calendar along.

I think what we on this side are encountering is the holding up of judges, particularly on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, for years on end. That must stop. A nominee is entitled to a vote . Vote them up; vote them down. To keep them hanging on--the court has 750 cases waiting for a judge. These judges are necessary. If someone has opposition to a judge, which I believe to be the case in at least one, they should come to the floor and say that.

It is also my understanding and my desire to ask that there be some commitment from the other side as to when specifically the nominations of Judge Paez, Marsha Berzon, and Ray Fisher, pending on this calendar--

[Page: S11015] GPO's PDF

Judge Paez pending for 4 years; Marsha Berzon through two sessions now--can at least be brought to the floor for a vote .

REV_00256541

I am prepared to vote on the judges that the majority leader mentioned. I am prepared to vote affirmatively, but I can't do that unless I have some knowledge that judges who have stood on this calendar for years can be brought up before this body for a vote . I don't think that is too much to ask the other side to do.

What this does to a judge's life is, it leaves them in limbo--I should say, a nominee's life--whether they have a place to live, whether they are going to make a move. It is our job to confirm these judges. If we don't like them, we can vote against them. That is the honest thing to do. If there are things in their background, in their abilities that don't pass muster, vote no.

I think every one of us on this side is prepared for that. The problem is, we have a few people who prevent them from having a vote , and this goes on month after month, year after year.

The ranking member of the committee said something that I believe is concurred in on this side; that is, women and minorities have an inordinately difficult time having their nominations processed in an orderly and expeditious way. I don't think that befits this body.

What I am asking for, as a Senator from California, on these three judges, is to just tell us when we might see their nominations before the Senate for a vote up or down. I think there is also an understanding by the White House that will be the case as well.

I ask the majority party to please take this into consideration, allow us a vote up or down, and give us a time when this might happen.

Once again, I thank the ranking member and the chairman of the committee. I know the Senator from Utah has done everything he possibly can to move these nominations. I, for one, very much appreciate it. I am hopeful the leadership of his side will be able to give us some accommodation on this.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate my colleague's kind remarks. I support Mr. Stewart's nomination, and I urge my colleagues to do the same, and not to filibuster any nominee , let alone this nominee .

I am pleased, with regard to the judicial nominations that have been voted on so far this session--and there have been well over 300 since this President became President--that no one on our side, to my knowledge, has threatened to filibuster any of these judges. I think that is the way to proceed.

I think it is a travesty if we ever start getting into a game of filibustering judges. I have to admit that my colleagues on the other side attempted to do that on a number of occasions during the Reagan and Bush years. They always backed off, but maybe they did because they realized there were enough votes to stop a filibuster against Federal judges. I think it is a travesty if we treat this third branch of government with such disregard that we filibuster judges.

I also have appreciated the comments of the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator LEAHY, who stated on this floor in the past:

I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported. .....

The Republican leadership, the Democratic President, the Republican chairman, and the Democratic ranking member of the Judiciary Committee all support Mr. Stewart's nomination. The nomination should not be filibustered. As I understand it, the only reason there would be a filibuster is because some Senators want their judges up. They have no real reason to filibuster Mr. Stewart.

The only way I could ever see a filibuster would be justified is if a nominee is so absolutely unqualified to sit on the Federal bench that the only way to stop that person is a filibuster. I can understand it under those circumstances. Even then, I would question whether that should be done. If a person is so unqualified, we ought to be able to beat that person on the floor.

REV_00256542

REV_00256543

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

[President's Judicial Nominations] [2]

OA/NARA#: 2179/2090
9799

Box 49
Folder 2

Source: Legal > Cases - U.S. > U.S. Supreme Court Cases, Lawyers' Edition
Terms: "appointments clause" and military (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

*520 U.S. 651, *; 117 S. Ct. 1573, **;*
137 L. Ed. 2d 917, ; 1997 U.S. LEXIS 3076

JON E. EDMOND, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES; JAKE A. LAZENBY, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES; MICHAEL B. LEAVER, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES; JAMES B. LEONARD, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES; ROBERT J. NICHOLS, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES; DONALD H. VENABLE, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES

No. 96-262

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

520 U.S. 651; 117 S. Ct. 1573; 137 L. Ed. 2d 917; 1997 U.S. LEXIS 3076; 65 U.S.L.W. 4362; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3728; 97 Daily Journal DAR 6292; 10 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 459

February 24, 1997, Argued
May 19, 1997 *, Decided
* Together with Lazenby v. United States; Leaver v. United States, Leonard v. United States; Nichols v. United States; and Venable v. United States, also on certiorari to the same court (see this Court's Rule 12.4).

PRIOR HISTORY:

Petition for a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

DISPOSITION: 45 M.J. 19 (first judgment), 44 M.J. 273 (second, third, fifth, and sixth judgments), and 44 M.J. 272 (fourth judgment), affirmed.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: On a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, petitioner inmates sought review of the judgment of said court with respect to each petitioner in a consolidated petition pursuant to Sup. Ct. R. 12.4. Petitioners were convicted by court-martial, which convictions and sentences were affirmed by the appellate court and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

OVERVIEW: Petitioner inmates were each convicted by court-martial, which convictions and sentences were affirmed in whole or part by the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals and then by the next reviewing court. Petitioner's sought review, alleging that the appointment of civilian judges to the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals by the Secretary of Transportation were invalid because the Secretary of Transportation and not the Judge Advocate General had appointed the civilian judges sitting on the panel which affirmed petitioners' convictions. The Court affirmed the convictions, holding that said appointments were not invalid. The Court held that art. 66(a) Unif. Code Mil. Justice, 10 U.S.C.S. § 866(a) did not give Judge Advocates General authority to appoint Court of Criminal Appeal judges and that 49 U.S.C.S. §323(a) gave the Secretary of Transportation the authority to do so. The court also held that said judges were inferior officers and hence that said appointments by the Secretary did not violate U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

REV_00256544

such regulations and orders as he deems appropriate to carry out the provisions of [Title 14] or any other law applicable to the Coast Guard," 14 U.S.C. § 633. The Commandant of the Coast Guard is required to "carry out duties and powers prescribed by the Secretary of Transportation," and he "reports directly to the Secretary." 49 U.S.C. § 108(b). Most relevant to the present case, HN4 49 U.S.C. § 323(a) provides: "The Secretary of Transportation may appoint and fix the pay of officers and employees of the Department of Transportation and may prescribe their duties and powers." Petitioners do not dispute that judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals are officers of the Department of Transportation. Thus, although the statute does not specifically mention Coast Guard judges, the plain language of § 323(a) appears to give the Secretary power to appoint them.

Petitioners argue, however, that § 323(a) is a default statute, applicable only where Congress has not otherwise provided for the appointment of specific officers. Petitioners contend that Article 66(a) of the UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 866(a), gives the Judge Advocate General of each military branch exclusive authority to appoint judges of his respective Court of Criminal Appeals. That provision reads as follows:

[1578] HN5

> "Each Judge Advocate General shall establish a Court of Criminal Appeals which shall be composed of one or more panels, and each such panel shall be composed of not less than three appellate military judges. . . . Appellate military judges who are assigned to a Court of [*657] Criminal Appeals may be commissioned officers or civilians, each of whom must be a member of a bar of a Federal court or of the highest court of a State. The Judge Advocate General shall designate as chief judge one of the appellate military judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals established by him. The chief judge shall determine on which panels of the court the appellate judges assigned to the court will serve and which military judge assigned to the court will act as senior judge on each panel."

[*HR2D] [2D]
[*HR3] [3]
Were we to accept petitioners' interpretation of Article 66(a) as providing for the "appointment" of Court of Criminal Appeals judges, their argument that Congress intended it to be the exclusive means of appointment might prove persuasive. Ordinarily, HN6 where a specific provision conflicts with a general one, the specific governs. Busic v. United States, 446 U.S. 398, 406, 64 L. Ed. 2d 381, 100 S. Ct. 1747 (1980). Conspicuously absent from Article 66(a), however, is any mention of the "appointment" of military judges. Instead, the statute refers to judges "who are assigned to a Court of Criminal Appeals" (emphasis added). The difference between the power to "assign" officers to a particular task and the power to "appoint" those officers is not merely stylistic. In Weiss, we upheld the assignment of military officers to serve on military courts because they had previously been "appointed" as officers of the United States pursuant to the Appointments Clause, and because Congress had [927] not designated the position of a military judge as one requiring reappointment. 510 U.S. at 176. We noted in Weiss that Congress has consistently used the word "appoint" with respect to military positions requiring a separate appointment, rather than using terms not found within the Appointments Clause, such as "assign": "Congress repeatedly and consistently distinguished between an office that would require a separate appointment and a position or duty to which one could be 'assigned' or 'detailed' by a superior [*658] officer." Id., at 172. We found it significant that the sections of the UCMJ relating to military judges "speak explicitly and exclusively in terms of 'detail' or 'assign'; nowhere in these sections is mention made of a separate appointment." Id., at 172. This analysis suggests that Article 66(a) concerns not the appointment of Court of Criminal

REV_00256553

Appeals judges, but only their assignment.

[*HR2E] [2E]
[*HR4] [4]
[*HR5] [5]
Moreover, we see no other way to interpret Article 66(a) that would make it consistent with the Constitution. Under the Appointments Clause, Congress could not give the Judge Advocate General power to "appoint" even inferior officers of the United States; that power can be conferred only upon the President, department heads, and courts of law. Thus, petitioners are asking us to interpret Article 66(a) in a manner that would render it clearly unconstitutional--which HN7 we must of course avoid doing if there is another reasonable interpretation available. NLRB v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 500, 59 L. Ed. 2d 533, 99 S. Ct. 1313 (1979); Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U.S. 142, 72 L. Ed. 206, 48 S. Ct. 105 (1927). Petitioners respond that reading § 323(a) to permit the Secretary to appoint Court of Criminal Appeals judges causes us unnecessarily to reach the constitutional question whether those judges are inferior officers under the Appointments Clause, since Congress may vest only the appointment of inferior officers in a department head. But a constitutional question confronted in order to preserve, if possible, a congressional enactment is not a constitutional question confronted unnecessarily.

[*HR2F] [2F]
We conclude that Article 66(a) does not give Judge Advocates General authority to appoint Court of Criminal Appeals judges; that § 323(a) does give the Secretary of Transportation authority to do so; and we turn to the constitutional question whether this is consistent with the Appointments Clause. [1579]

III

The Appointments Clause of Article II of the Constitution reads as follows:

> HN8
>
> [*659] "[The President] shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." U.S. Const., Art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

[*HR6] [6]
[*HR7A] [7A]
As we recognized in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 125, 46 L. Ed. 2d [928] 659, 96 S. Ct. 612 (1976), the Appointments Clause of Article II is more than a matter of "etiquette or protocol"; it is among the significant structural safeguards of the constitutional scheme. By vesting the President with the exclusive power to select the principal (noninferior) officers of the United States, the Appointments Clause prevents congressional encroachment upon the Executive and Judicial Branches. See id., at 128-131; Weiss, supra, at 183-185 (SOUTER, J., concurring); Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 904, 115 L. Ed. 2d 764, 111 S. Ct. 2631, and n.4 (1991) (SCALIA, J., concurring). This disposition was also designed to assure a higher quality of appointments: the Framers anticipated that the President would be less vulnerable to interest-group pressure and personal favoritism than would a collective body. "The sole and undivided responsibility of one man will naturally beget a livelier sense of duty, and a more exact regard to reputation." The Federalist No. 76, p. 387 (M. Beloff ed. 1987)

REV_00256554

(A. Hamilton); accord, 3 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States 374-375 (1833). The President's power to select principal officers of the United States was not left unguarded, however, as Article II further requires the "Advice and Consent of the Senate." This serves both to curb executive abuses of the appointment power, see 3 Story, at 376-377, and "to promote a judicious choice of [persons] for filling the offices of the union," The Federalist No. 76, at 386-387. [*660] By requiring the joint participation of the President and the Senate, the Appointments Clause was designed to ensure public accountability for both the making of a bad appointment and the rejection of a good one. Hamilton observed:

> "The blame of a bad nomination would fall upon the president singly and absolutely. The censure of rejecting a good one would lie entirely at the door of the senate; aggravated by the consideration of their having counteracted the good intentions of the executive. If an ill appointment should be made, the executive for nominating, and the senate for approving, would participate, though in different degrees, in the opprobrium and disgrace." Id., No. 77, at 392.

See also 3 Story, supra, at 375 ("If [the President] should . . . surrender the public patronage into the hands of profligate men, or low adventurers, it will be impossible for him long to retain public favor.")

[*HR1C] [1C]
[*HR7B] [7B]
The prescribed manner of appointment for principal officers is also the default manner of appointment for inferior officers. "But," the Appointments Clause continues, "the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." This provision, sometimes referred to as the "Excepting Clause," was added to the proposed Constitution on the last day of the Grand Convention, with little discussion. See 2 M. Farrand, Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, pp. 627-628 (1911 ed.). As one of our early opinions suggests, its obvious purpose is administrative convenience, see United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 510, 25 L. Ed. 482 (1879)--but that convenience was deemed to outweigh the benefits of the more cumbersome procedure only with respect to the appointment of "inferior Officers." Section 323(a), which confers appointment power upon the Secretary of Transportation, can constitutionally be [*661] applied [929] to the appointment of Court of Criminal Appeals judges only if those judges are "inferior Officers." [1580]

Our cases have not set forth an exclusive criterion for distinguishing between principal and inferior officers for Appointment Clause purposes. Among the offices that we have found to be inferior are that of a district court clerk, Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. 225, 258 (1839), an election supervisor, Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 397-398, 25 L. Ed. 717 (1880), a vice-consul charged temporarily with the duties of the consul, United States v. Eaton, 169 U.S. 331, 343, 42 L. Ed. 767, 18 S. Ct. 374 (1898), and a "United States commissioner" in district court proceedings, Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 352-354, 75 L. Ed. 374, 51 S. Ct. 153 (1931). Most recently, in Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 101 L. Ed. 2d 569, 108 S. Ct. 2597 (1988), we held that the independent counsel created by provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 28 U.S.C. §§ 591-599, was an inferior officer. In reaching that conclusion, we relied on several factors: that the independent counsel was subject to removal by a higher officer (the Attorney General), that she performed only limited duties, that her jurisdiction was narrow, and that her tenure was limited. Id., at 671-672.

Petitioners are quite correct that the last two of these conclusions do not hold with regard to the office of military judge at issue here. It is not "limited in tenure," as that phrase was used in Morrison to describe "appointment essentially to accomplish a single task [at the end of which] the office is terminated." Id., at 672. Nor are military judges "limited in jurisdiction," as used in Morrison to refer to the fact that an independent counsel may investigate and prosecute only those individuals, and for only those crimes, that are within the scope of jurisdiction granted by the special three-judge appointing panel. See Weiss, 510 U.S. at 192 (SOUTER, J., concurring). However, Morrison did not purport to set forth a definitive test for whether an office is "inferior" under the Appointments Clause. To the contrary, it explicitly stated: "We need not attempt here to decide exactly [*662] where the line falls between the two types of officers, because in our view [the independent counsel] clearly falls on the 'inferior officer' side of the line." 487 U.S. at 671.

REV_00256555

[*HR1D] [1D]
To support principal-officer status, petitioners emphasize the importance of the responsibilities that Court of Criminal Appeals judges bear. They review those court-martial proceedings that result in the most serious sentences, including those "in which the sentence, as approved, extends to death, dismissal . . ., dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge, or confinement for one year or more." Art. 66(b)(1), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 866(b)(1). They must ensure that the court-martial's finding of guilt and its sentence are "correct in law and fact," Art. 66(c), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 866(c), which includes resolution of constitutional challenges. And finally, unlike most appellate judges, Court of Criminal Appeals judges are not required to defer to the trial court's factual findings, but may independently "weigh the evidence, judge the credibility of witnesses, and determine controverted questions of fact, recognizing that the trial court saw and heard the witnesses." Ibid. We do not dispute [930] that military appellate judges are charged with exercising significant authority on behalf of the United States. This, however, is also true of offices that we have held were "inferior" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause. See, e.g., Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 881-882, 115 L. Ed. 2d 764, 111 S. Ct. 2631 (1991) (special trial judges having "significant . . . duties and discretion" are inferior officers). HN9 The exercise of "significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States" marks, not the line between principal and inferior officer for Appointments Clause purposes, but rather, as we said in Buckley, the line between officer and non-officer. 424 U.S. at 126.

[*HR8] [8]
Generally speaking, the term "inferior officer" connotes a relationship with some higher ranking officer or officers below the President: whether one is an "inferior" officer depends on whether he has a superior. It is not enough that other officers may be identified who formally maintain a [*663] higher rank, or possess responsibilities of a greater magnitude. If that were the intention, the [1581] Constitution might have used the phrase "lesser officer." Rather, in the context of a clause designed to preserve political accountability relative to important government assignments, we think it evident that HN10 "inferior officers" are officers whose work is directed and supervised at some level by others who were appointed by presidential nomination with the advice and consent of the Senate.

This understanding of the Appointments Clause conforms with the views of the first Congress. On July 27, 1789, Congress established the first executive department, the Department of Foreign Affairs. In so doing, it expressly designated the Secretary of the Department as a "principal officer," and his subordinate, the Chief Clerk of the Department, as an "inferior officer:

> "Section 1. Be it enacted . . . that there shall be an Executive department, to be denominated the Department of Foreign Affairs, and that there shall be a principal officer therein, to be called the Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs, who shall perform and execute such duties as shall from time to time be enjoined on or intrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeable to the Constitution, relative to [matters respecting foreign affairs]; and furthermore, that the said principal officer shall conduct the business of the said department in such manner as the President of the United States shall from time to time order or instruct.

Section 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be in the said department, an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, and to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief Clerk in the Department of Foreign Affairs. . . ." 1 Stat. 28, ch. IV. [*664] Congress used similar language in establishing the Department of War, repeatedly referring to the Secretary of that department as a "principal officer," and the chief clerk, who would be "employed" within the Department as the Secretary "shall deem proper," as an "inferior officer." 1 Stat. 49, ch. VII.

[*HR1E] [1E]
Supervision of the work of Court of Criminal Appeals judges is divided between the Judge Advocate General (who in the Coast Guard is [931] subordinate to the Secretary of Transportation) and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. The Judge Advocate General exercises administrative oversight over the Court of Criminal Appeals. He is charged with the responsibility to "prescribe uniform rules of procedure" for the court, and must "meet periodically [with other Judge Advocates General] to formulate policies and procedure in regard to review of court-martial cases." Art. 66(f), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 866(f). It is conceded by the parties that the Judge Advocate General may also remove a Court of Criminal Appeals judge from his judicial assignment without cause. The power to remove officers, we have recognized, is a powerful tool for control. Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 727, 92 L. Ed. 2d 583, 106 S. Ct. 3181 (1986); Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 71 L. Ed. 160, 47 S. Ct. 21 (1926).

[*HR1F] [1F]
[*HR9A] [9A]
[*HR10] [10]
The Judge Advocate General's control over Court of Criminal Appeals judges is, to be sure, not complete. He may not attempt to influence (by threat of removal or otherwise) the outcome of individual proceedings, Art. 37, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 837, and has no power to reverse decisions of the court. This latter power does reside, however, in another Executive Branch entity, the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. n2 That court reviews every decision of the [*665] Courts of Criminal Appeals in which: (a) the sentence extends to death; (b) the Judge Advocate General orders such review; or (c) [1582] the court itself grants review upon petition of the accused. Art. 67(a), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 867(a). The scope of review is narrower than that exercised by the Court of Criminal Appeals: so long as there is some competent evidence in the record to establish each element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces will not reevaluate the facts. Art. 67(c), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 867(c); United States v. Wilson, 6 M.J. 214 (C. M. A. 1979). This limitation upon review does not in our opinion render the judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals principal officers. What is significant is that the judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals have no power to render a final decision on behalf of the United States unless permitted to do so by other executive officers.

[*HR9B] [9B]
[9B]

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - n2 Article 141 of the UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 941, states that the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces "is established under article I of the Constitution," and "is located for administrative purposes only in the Department of Defense." Although the statute does not specify the court's "location" for non-administrative purposes, other provisions of the UCMJ make clear that it is within the Executive Branch. The court reviews the judgments of only military tribunals, Art. 67, UCMJ, 19 U.S.C. § 867; its judges must meet annually in committee with the Judge Advocates General and two members appointed by the Secretary of Defense to survey the operation of the military justice system, Art. 146, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 946; and the President may remove its judges for neglect of duty, misconduct, or mental or physical disability, Art. 142, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 942(c).

REV_00256557

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Finally, petitioners argue that Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 115 L. Ed. 2d 764, 111 S. Ct. 2631 (1991), which held that special trial judges charged with assisting Tax Court judges were inferior officers and could be appointed by the Chief Judge of the Tax Court, suggests that Court of Criminal Appeals judges are principal officers. Petitioners contend that Court of Criminal Appeals judges more closely resemble Tax Court judges--who we implied (according to petitioners) were principal officers [932] --than they do special trial judges. We note initially that Freytag does not hold that Tax Court judges are principal officers; only the appointment of special trial judges was at issue in that case. Moreover, there are two significant distinctions between Tax Court judges and Court of Criminal Appeals judges. First, there is no Executive- [*666] Branch tribunal comparable to the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces that reviews the work of the Tax Court; its decisions are appealable only to courts of the Third Branch. 26 U.S.C. § 7482. And second, there is no officer comparable to a Judge Advocate General who supervises the work of the Tax Court, with power to determine its procedural rules, to remove any judge without cause, and to order any decision submitted for review. Freytag does not control our decision here.

* * *

[*HR1G] [1G]
[*HR2G] [2G]
We conclude that 49 U.S.C. § 323(a) authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to appoint judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals; and that such appointment is in conformity with the Appointments Clause of the Constitution, since those judges are "inferior Officers" within the meaning of that provision, by reason of the supervision over their work exercised by the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation in his capacity as Judge Advocate General and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. The judicial appointments at issue in this case are therefore valid.

Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces with respect to each petitioner.

It is so ordered.

CONCURBY: SOUTER (In Part)

CONCUR: JUSTICE SOUTER, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join in Parts I and II of the Court's opinion and agree with the reasoning in Part III insofar as it describes an important, and even necessary, reason for holding judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals to be inferior officers within the meaning of the Appointments Clause, U.S. Const., Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. The Court states that "generally speaking, the term 'inferior officer' connotes a relationship [of supervision and direction] with some higher [*667] ranking officer or officers below the President; whether one is an 'inferior' officer depends on whether he has a superior." Ante, at 11-12. The Court goes on to show that administrative supervision of these judges by the Judge Advocate General of the Coast Guard, combined with his power to control them by removal from a case, establishes that the intermediate appellate judges here have the necessary superior. With this conclusion I agree, but unlike the Court I am not prepared to decide on that basis alone that these judges are inferior officers.

REV_00256558

Because the term "inferior officer" implies an official superior, one who has no superior is not an inferior officer. This unexceptionable maxim will in some instances be dispositive of status; it might, for example, lead to [1583] the conclusion that United States district judges cannot be inferior officers, since the power of appellate review does not extend to them personally, but is limited to their judgments. See In re Sealed Case, 267 U.S. App. D.C. 178, 838 F.2d 476, 483 (CADC 1988), rev'd sub nom. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, [933] 101 L. Ed. 2d 569, 108 S. Ct. 2597 (1988) (suggesting that "lower federal judges . . . are principal officers" because they are "not subject to personal supervision," 838 F.2d at 483); cf. ante, at 13-14.

It does not follow, however, that if one is subject to some supervision and control, one is an inferior officer. Having a superior officer is necessary for inferior officer status, but not sufficient to establish it. See, e.g., Morrison v. Olson, supra, at 654, 722 (1988) ("To be sure, it is not a sufficient condition for 'inferior' officer status that one be subordinate to a principal officer. Even an officer who is subordinate to a department head can be a principal officer") (SCALIA, J., dissenting). Accordingly, in Morrison, the Court's determination that the independent counsel was "to some degree 'inferior'" to the Attorney General, see id., at 671, did not end the enquiry. The Court went on to weigh the duties, jurisdiction, and tenure associated with the office, id., at 671-672, before concluding that the independent counsel was an inferior [*668] officer. Thus, under Morrison, the Solicitor General of the United States, for example, may well be a principal officer, despite his statutory "inferiority" to the Attorney General. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 505 (directing Presidential appointment, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a Solicitor General to "assist the Attorney General in the performance of his duties"). The mere existence of a "superior" officer is not dispositive.

In this case, as the Court persuasively shows, the Judge Advocate General has substantial supervisory authority over the judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals. As the Court notes, the Judge Advocate General prescribes rules of procedure for the Court of Criminal Appeals, formulates policies for review of court martial cases, and is authorized to remove judges from their judicial assignments without cause. See ante, at 13. While these facts establish that the condition of supervision and control necessary for inferior officer status has been met, I am wary of treating them as sufficient to demonstrate that the judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals are actually inferior officers under the Constitution.

In having to go beyond the Court's opinion to decide that the criminal appeals judges are inferior officers, I do not claim the convenience of a single sufficient condition, and, indeed, at this stage of the Court's thinking on the matter, I would not try to derive a single rule of sufficiency. What is needed, instead, is a detailed look at the powers and duties of these judges to see whether reasons favoring their inferior officer status within the constitutional scheme weigh more heavily than those to the contrary. Having tried to do this in a concurring opinion in Weiss v. United States, 510 U.S. 163, 182, 127 L. Ed. 2d 1, 114 S. Ct. 752 (1994), I will not repeat the essay. See id., at 192-194 (reviewing the Morrison factors, including tenure, jurisdiction, duties, and removal; concluding that because it is "hard to say with any certainty" whether Courts of Military Review judges should be considered principal or inferior officers, [*669] deference to the political branches' judgment is appropriate). Here it is enough to add that after the passage of three Terms since writing in Weiss, [934] I am unrepentant. I therefore join not only in the Court's conclusion that the necessary supervisory condition for inferior officer status is satisfied here, but in the Court's ultimate holding that the judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals are inferior officers within the meaning of the Appointments Clause.

REV_00256559

REFERENCES: ◆ Return To Full Text Opinion

- ◆ Go to Supreme Court Brief(s)
- ◆ Go to Oral Argument Transcript

53 Am Jur 2d, Military and Civil Defense 24; 53A Am Jur 2d, Military and Civil Defense 338

3 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Armed Forces, Civil Disturbances, and National Defense 5:192, 5:193

45 Am Jur Trials 351, Court-Martial Defense by the Nonmilitary Lawyer; 61 Am Jur Trials 1, Considering Appeals

USCS, Constitution, Art II, 2, cl 2; 10 USCS 801(1), 866; 14 USCS 1-3; 49 USCS 323(a)

L Ed Digest, Courts-Martial 15

L Ed Index, Appointments Clause; Coast Guard; Courts-Martial

ALR Index, Appointment; Armed Forces; Coast Guard; Court-Martial

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's construction and application of appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2, of Federal Constitution. 101 L Ed 2d 1072.

Source: Legal > Cases - U.S. > U.S. Supreme Court Cases, Lawyers' Edition ⓘ
Terms: "appointments clause" and military (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Thursday, May 1, 2003 - 12:50 PM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

OUTCOME: The court affirmed the judgment with respect to each petitioner, holding that the Secretary of Transportation was authorized to appoint civilian members of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals and that such authorization was constitutional under the Appointments Clause of Article II.

CORE TERMS: appointment, inferior, military, appoint, inferior officer, appointed, civilian, armed forces, assigned, duty, principal officer, advice, independent counsel, supervision, commissioned, secretarial, subordinate, sentence, constitutional question, court-martial, memorandum, removal, tenure, clerk, vest, department head, presidential, convenience, nomination, prescribe

LexisNexis(TM) HEADNOTES - Core Concepts - ♦ Hide Concepts

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice

HN1 Appellate military judges who are assigned to a Court of Criminal Appeals must be members of the bar but may be commissioned officers or civilians. art. 66(a) Unif. Code Mil. Justice, 10 U.S.C.S. § 866(a).

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice

HN2 Military trial and appellate judges are officers of the United States and must be appointed pursuant to U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice

HN3 A defendant is entitled to a hearing before a properly appointed panel of the Coast Guard Court of Military Review.

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice

HN4 See 49 U.S.C.S. § 323(a).

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice

HN5 See art. 66(a) Unif. Code Mil. Justice, 10 U.S.C.S. § 866(a).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 In construing statutes, where a specific provision conflicts with a general one, the specific governs.

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation

HN7 The court must avoid construing a statute so as to render it clearly unconstitutional if there is another reasonable interpretation available.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN8 See U.S. Const., art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN9 The exercise of "significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States" marks not the line between principal and inferior officer for purposes under U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2, but rather the line between officer and non-officer.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN10 "Inferior officers" are officers whose work is directed and supervised at some level by others who were appointed by presidential nomination with the advice and consent of the United States Senate.

REV_00256545

◆ Hide Lawyers' Edition Display

DECISION: Secretary of Transportation's appointments of two civilian judges to predecessor of Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals held authorized by 49 USCS 323(a) and valid under appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of Federal Constitution.

SUMMARY: While the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution requires that principal officers of the United States must be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, the appointments clause authorizes Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers "in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments. "Several court-martial cases involved the question whether the two then-serving civilian judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals, an intermediate court in the military justice system, had been validly appointed. Under 14 USCS 1-3, the Coast Guard was established as a military service that, except in time of war, was part of the Department of Transportation, and under 49 USCS 323(a), the Secretary of Transportation was authorized to appoint officers of that department. Article 66 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) (10 USCS 866) authorized each Judge Advocate General to establish a Court of Criminal Appeals (formerly known as a Court of Military Review), composed of judges who (1) could be commissioned officers or civilians, (2) were referred to as being "assigned" to the court, and (3) were authorized to review court-martial proceedings. Pursuant to Article 1(1) of the UCMJ (10 USCS 801(1)), the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation was, ex officio, the Judge Advocate General of the Coast Guard. The two civilian judges in question had originally been assigned by the General Counsel to serve on the court (under its predecessor name of the Coast Guard Court of Military Review). When a concern was raised under the appointments clause, both judges were appointed to the court (still under its predecessor name) by a 1993 memorandum of the Secretary. In each of the cases at hand, (1) an accused's court-martial conviction and sentence was affirmed, in whole or in part, by the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (as such or under its predecessor name) after the 1993 appointments; and (2) the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, the highest court in the military justice system, eventually upheld the conviction (44 MJ 272; 44 MJ 273; 45 MJ 19) in reliance on that court's ruling, in still another case, that the Secretary's 1993 appointments were valid. The several accused then sought review in a consolidated petition for certiorari.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed with respect to each accused. In an opinion by Scalia, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court as to holding 1 below, and joined as to holding 2 below by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and Stevens, O'Connor, Kennedy, Thomas, Ginsburg, and Breyer, JJ., it was held that (1) 323(a) gave the Secretary the statutory authority to appoint civilian judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals; and (2) accordingly, the Secretary's 1993 appointments of the two civilian judges in question were valid under the appointments clause, since such judges were inferior officers within the clause's meaning, by reason of the supervision of the judges' work by the General Counsel and by the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

Souter, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that with respect to the appointments clause--while he agreed that judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals were inferior officers and that the supervision requirement for inferior-officer status had been satisfied--the Supree Court should have engaged in a further and detailed look at the powers and duties of such judges to see whether the reasons in favor of inferior-officer status weighed more heavily than the reasons to the contrary.

LEXIS HEADNOTES - Classified to U.S. Digest Lawyers' Edition:

REV_00256546

[*HN1] Courts-
MARTIAL §15
review -- Court of Criminal Appeals judges -- validity of appointments --

Headnote: [1A] [1B] [1C] [1D] [1E] [1F] [1G]
Appointments, pursuant to 49 USCS 323(a), by the United States Secretary of Transportation of civilian judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (under its predecessor name of the Coast Guard Court of Military Review), an intermediate court in the military justice system, are valid under the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution, since such judges are inferior officers within the clause's meaning--by reason of the supervision of the judges' work by the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation, as ex officio Judge Advocate General of the Coast Guard pursuant to Article 1 (1) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) (10 USCS 801(1)), and by the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, as the highest court in the military justice system--because (1) even though, under the provisions in Article 66 of the UCMJ (10 USCS 866) concerning the review of court-martial proceedings, Court of Criminal Appeals judges are charged with exercising significant authority on behalf of the United States, this factor marks the line between officers and nonofficers, rather than the line between principal officers--who would have to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate--and inferior officers, whose appointment may be vested by Congress in a department head; (2) each Judge Advocate General--who in the Coast Guard is subordinate to the Secretary of Transportation--exercises administrative oversight over the corresponding Court of Criminal Appeals, including (a) responsibilities as to the policies and procedures for the review of court-martial cases, and (b) the power to remove a judge from a Court of Criminal Appeals assignment without cause; (3) even though Article 37 of the UCMJ (10 USCS 837) prohibits a Judge Advocate General from attempting to influence, by threat of removal or otherwise, the outcome of individual proceedings--and even though a Judge Advocate General has no power to reverse decisions of a Court of Criminal Appeals--the latter power resides in another executive branch entity, the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, pursuant to Article 67 of the UCMJ (10 USCS 867); and (4) while the scope of review exercised by the latter court is narrower than that exercised by a Court of Criminal Appeals, (a) this limitation upon review does not render Court of Criminal Appeals judges principal officers, and (b) instead, what is significant is that such judges have no power to render a final decision on behalf of the United States unless permitted to do so by other executive officers.

[*HN2] Courts-
MARTIAL §15
review -- Court of Criminal Appeals judges -- authority to appoint --

Headnote: [2A] [2B] [2C] [2D] [2E] [2F] [2G]
While Article 66(a) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) (10 USCS sec; 866(a)) does not give Judge Advocates General the statutory authority to appoint judges of the Courts of Criminal Appeals--intermediate courts in the military justice system-- 49 USCS 323(a) gives the United States Secretary of Transportation the statutory authority to appoint civilian judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals, as (1) 14 USCS 1-3 establish the Coast Guard as a military service that, except in time of war, is part of the Department of Transportation, and 323(a) authorizes the Secretary to appoint officers of that department; (2) Article 66(a) authorizes each Judge Advocate General to establish a Court of Criminal Appeals, composed of judges who may be commissioned officers or civilians; (3) pursuant to Article 1(1) of the UCMJ (10 USCS 801(1)), the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation is, ex officio, the Judge Advocate General of the Coast Guard; (4) even though 323(a) does not specifically mention civilian judges of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals, the plain language of 323(a) appears to give the Secretary power to appoint such judges, as it is not disputed that such judges are officers of the Department of Transportation; and (5) while it is argued that 323(a) is a default statute that is not applicable in view of Article 66(a), which allegedly provides specific appointment authority, (a) conspicuously absent from Article 66(a) is any mention of the "appointment" of military judges, (b) instead, Article 66(a) refers to judges who are "assigned" to a Court of Criminal Appeals, (c) the difference between the power to "assign" officers to a particular task and the power to "appoint" those officers is not merely stylistic, and (d) Article 66(a) must be read to concern only the assignment of such judges, not their appointment, in order to render Article 66(a) consistent with the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution, which clause prohibits Congress from giving the Judge Advocates General power to appoint even inferior officers of the United States, because such power can constitutionally be conferred upon only the President, department heads, and courts of law.

REV_00256547

[*HN3]
STATUTES §233.5
specific and general --

Headnote: [3]
Ordinarily, where a specific statutory provision conflicts with a general one, the specific governs.

[*HN4]
STATUTES §107
avoiding doubt as to constitutionality --

Headnote: [4]
With respect to the Federal Constitution, the United States Supreme Court must avoid interpreting a federal statute in a manner that would render the statute clearly unconstitutional, if there is another reasonable interpretation available.

[*HN5]
COURTS §95.3
necessity of confronting constitutional question --

Headnote: [5]
A federal constitutional question that is confronted by the United States Supreme Court in order to preserve, if possible, a congressional enactment is not a constitutional question confronted unnecessarily.

[*HN6]
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §71

OFFICERS §8
appointment -- prevention of congressional encroachment --

Headnote: [6]
In providing for the appointment of officers of the United States, the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution is more than a matter of etiquette or protocol and is among the significant structural safeguards of the constitutional scheme; the clause's proisions prevent congressional encroachment upon the executive and judicial branches, are designed to assure a higher quality of appointments, serve to curb executive abuses of the appointment power, and are designed to insure public accountability for both the making of a bad appointment and the rejection of a good one.

[*HN7]
OFFICERS §8
manner of appointment --

REV_00256548

Headnote: [7A] [7B]
While the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution authorizes Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers of the United States "in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments," the clause's prescribed manner for the appointment of principal officers--that is, by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate--is also the default manner for the appointment of inferior officers.

[*HN8]
OFFICERS §8
appointment -- who is inferior officer --

Headnote: [8]
Generally speaking, for purposes of distinguishing between principal and inferior officers of the United States under the appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2 of the Federal Constitution, the term "inferior officer" connotes a relationship with some higher ranking officer or officers below the President; whether one is an inferior officer depends on whether one has a superior; it is not enough that other officers may be identified who formally maintain a higher rank--or who possess responsibilities of a greater magnitude--for if that were the intention, then the Constitution might have used the phrase "lesser officer"; rather, in the context of a clause designed to preserve political accountability relative to important government assignments, inferior officers are officers whose work is directed and supervised at some level by others who were appointed by presidential nomination with the advice and consent of the Senate.

[*HN9] Courts-
MARTIAL §15
review -- Court of Appeals for Armed Forces --

Headnote: [9A] [9B]
Even though Article 141 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) (10 USCS 941)--in providing that the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, the highest court in the military justice system, is established under Article I of the Federal Constitution and is "located for administrative purposes only" in the Department of Defense--does not specify the court's "location" for nonadministrative purposes, Articles 67, 142(c), and 146 of the UCMJ (10 USCS 867, 942(c), and 946) make clear that the court is within the executive branch, as (1) under Article 67, the court reviews the judgments of only military tribunals; (2) under Article 142(c), the President may remove the court's judges for neglect of duty, misconduct, or mental or physical disability; and (3) under Article 146, the court's judges must meet annually in committee, with the Judge Advocates General and with two members appointed by the Secretary of Defense, to survey the operation of the military justice system.

[*HN10] Courts-
MARTIAL §15
review -- scope --

Headnote: [10]
With respect to court-martial proceedings, the scope of review exercised by the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, the highest court in the military justice system, is narrower than the scope of review exercised by an intermediate Court of Criminal Appeals, for, under Article 67(c) of the Unform Code of Military Justice (10 USCS 867(c)), the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces will not reevaluate the facts, so long as there is some competent evidence in the record to establish each element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.

SYLLABUS:

REV_00256549

The Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (formerly the Coast Guard Court of Military Review) hears appeals from the decisions of courts-martial, and its decisions are subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Under Article 66(a) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), its judges may be commissioned officers or civilians. During the times here relevant, the court had two civilian members, both of whom were originally assigned to the court by the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. In anticipation of the possible invalidation of these assignments under the Appointments Clause, Article II, § 2, cl. 2, the Secretary of Transportation issued a memorandum "adopting" the General Counsel's earlier judicial assignments as appointments of his own. In Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177, 115 S. Ct. 2031, 132 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1995), this Court overturned a conviction that had been affirmed, before the secretarial appointments, by a Coast Guard Court of Military Review panel that included both civilian members, as it was conceded that the judges had not been validly appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. The present case concerns the validity of six convictions that were affirmed by the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (or its predecessor), with one or both civilian judges participating, after the secretarial appointments. The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces affirmed the convictions, relying on its holding on remand in Ryder that the Secretary's appointments were valid and cured the defect that had previously existed.

Held: The judicial appointments at issue are valid. Pp. 4-15.

(a) Congress has authorized the Secretary to appoint civilian members of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals. Petitioners' argument that those appointments are invalid because the Secretary lacks the power under 49 U.S.C. § 323(a) to appoint Coast Guard judges is rejected. Although § 323(a) does not specifically mention such judges, its plain language authorizes the Secretary to "appoint and fix the pay of officers and employees of the Department." This Court rejects petitioners' assertion that § 323(a) is a default statute superseded by express language in Article 66(a) of the UCMJ giving the Judge Advocate General of each military branch exclusive authority to appoint Court of Criminal Appeals judges. Conspicuously absent from Article 66(a) is any mention of "appointment." Instead, the statute refers only to judges "who are assigned to a Court of Criminal Appeals" (emphasis added). The fact that this Court found the distinction to be significant in Weiss v. United States, 510 U.S. 163, 171-72, 127 L. Ed. 2d 1, 114 S. Ct. 752, suggests that Article 66(a) concerns not the appointment of judges, but only their assignment. A contrary interpretation of Article 66(a) would render it unconstitutional, for under the Appointments Clause Congress could not give Judge Advocates General power to "appoint" even inferior officers of the United States. Pp. 4-7.

(b) The Secretary's authorization to appoint civilian Court of Criminal Appeals judges is constitutional. The Appointments Clause gives the President the exclusive power to select principal officers by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but authorizes Congress to "vest the Appointment of . . . inferior Officers . . . in the Heads of Departments." Despite the importance of the responsibilities the judges in question bear, they are "inferior Officers" under the Clause. Generally speaking, "inferior officers" are officers whose work is directed and supervised at some level by others who were appointed by presidential nomination with the Senate's advice and consent. See, e.g., 1 Stat. 28, ch. 4, §§ 1, 2. Supervision of the work of Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals judges is divided between the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation (who is subordinate to the Secretary) and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. See Arts. 66(f), 67(a), UCMJ. Significantly, these judges have no power to render a final decision on behalf of the United States unless permitted to do so by other executive officers, and hence they are inferior within the meaning of Article II. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 671-672, 101 L. Ed. 2d 569, 108 S. Ct. 2597, and Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 115 L. Ed. 2d 764, 111 S. Ct. 2631, distinguished. Pp. 7-15.

REV_00256550

45 M.J. 19 (first judgment), 44 M.J. 273 (second, third, fifth, and sixth judgments), and 44 M.J. 272 (fourth judgment), affirmed.

COUNSEL: Alan B. Morrison argued the cause for petitioners.

Malcolm L. Stewart argued the cause for respondent.

JUDGES: SCALIA, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and STEVENS, O'CONNOR, KENNEDY, THOMAS, GINSBURG, and BREYER, JJ., joined, and in which SOUTER, J., joined as to Parts I and II. SOUTER, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

OPINIONBY: SCALIA

OPINION: [*653] [1576] [924] JUSTICE SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

[*HR1A] [1A]
[*HR2A] [2A]
We must determine in this case whether Congress has authorized the Secretary of Transportation to appoint civilian members of the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals, and if so, whether this authorization is constitutional under the Appointments Clause of Article II.

I

The Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (formerly known as the Coast Guard Court of Military Review) is an intermediate court within the military justice system. It is one of four military Courts of Criminal Appeals; others exist for the Army, the Air Force, and the Navy-Marine Corps. The Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals hears appeals from the decisions of courts-martial, and its decisions are subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (formerly known as the United States Court of Military Appeals). n1

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n1 The names of the Courts of Military Review and of the United States Court of Military Appeals were changed, effective October 5, 1994, by Pub. L. 103-337, § 924, 108 Stat. 2831.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

HN1 Appellate military judges who are assigned to a Court of Criminal Appeals must be members of the bar, but may be commissioned officers or civilians. Art. 66(a), Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), 10 U.S.C. § 866(a). During the times relevant to this case, the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals has had two civilian members, Chief Judge Joseph H. Baum and Associate Judge Alfred F.Bridgman, Jr. These judges were originally assigned to serve on the court by the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation, [*654] who is, ex officio, the Judge Advocate General of the Coast Guard, Art. 1(1), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 801(1). Subsequent events, however, called into question the validity of these assignments.

In Weiss v. United States, 510 U.S. 163, 127 L. Ed. 2d 1, 114 S. Ct. 752 (1994), we considered whether the assignment of commissioned military officers to serve as military judges without reappointment under the Appointments Clause was constitutional. We held that HN2 military trial and appellate judges are officers of the United States and must be appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. Id., at 170. We upheld the judicial assignments at issue in Weiss because each of the military judges had been previously appointed by the President as a commissioned military officer, and was serving on active duty under that commission at the time he was assigned to a military court. We noted, however, that "allowing civilians to be assigned to Courts of Military Review, without being appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause, obviously presents [925] a quite different question." Id., at 170, n.4.

REV_00256551

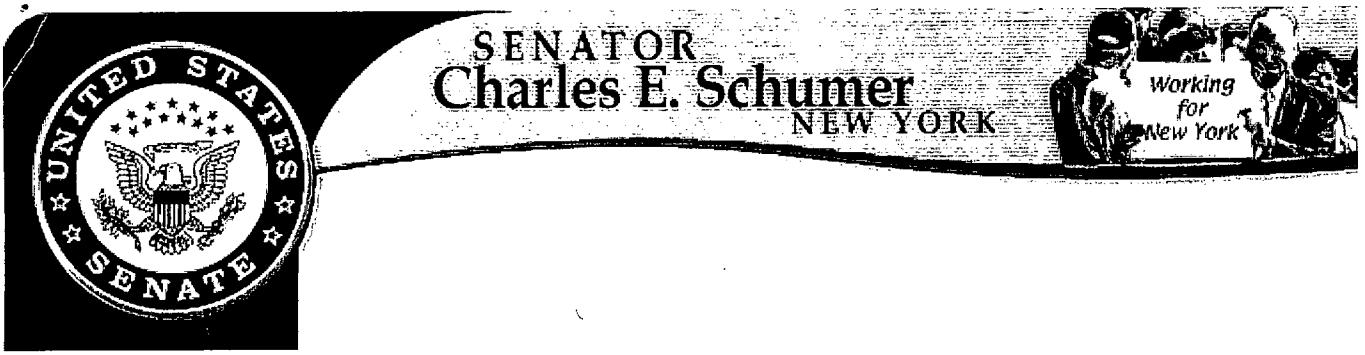
In anticipation of our decision in Weiss, Chief Judge Baum sent a memorandum to the Chief Counsel of the Coast Guard requesting that the Secretary, in his capacity as a department head, reappoint the judges so the court would be constitutionally valid beyond any doubt. See United States v. Senior, 36 M.J. 1016, 1018 (C. G. C. M. R. 1993). On January 15, 1993, the Secretary of Transportation issued a memorandum "adopting" [1577] the General Counsel's assignments to the Coast Guard Court of Military Review "as judicial appointments of my own." The memorandum then listed the names of "those judges presently assigned and appointed by me," including Chief Judge Baum and Judge Bridgman. Addendum to Brief for Petitioners A6.

Two Terms ago, in Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177, 115 S. Ct. 2031, 132 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1995), we considered the validity of a conviction that had been affirmed by a panel of the Coast Guard Court of Military Review, including its two civilian members, before the [*655] secretarial appointments of January 15, 1993. The Government conceded that the civilian judges of the Court of Military Review had not been appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause, see Brief for United States in Ryder v. United States, O.T. 1994, No. 94-431, p. 9, n.9, but argued that Ryder's conviction should be affirmed notwithstanding this defect. We disagreed, holding that HN3↑Ryder was "entitled to a hearing before a properly appointed panel of" the Coast Guard Court of Military Review. 515 U.S. at (slip op., at 10). We did not consider the validity of convictions affirmed by the court after the secretarial appointments.



Each of the petitioners in the present case was convicted by court-martial. In each case the conviction and sentence were affirmed, in whole or in part, by the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals (or its predecessor the Court of Military Review) after the January 15, 1993, secretarial appointments. Chief Judge Baum participated in each decision, and Judge Bridgman participated in the appeals involving two of the petitioners. The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces affirmed the convictions, relying on its holding on remand in United States v. Ryder, 44 M.J. 9 (1996), that the Secretary of Transportation's appointments were valid and cured the defect that had previously existed. Petitioners sought review in a consolidated petition pursuant to this Court's Rule 12.4, and we granted certiorari, 519 U.S. , 117 S. Ct. 416, 136 L. Ed. 328 (1996).

II

[*HR1B] [1B]
[*HR2B] [2B]
Petitioners argue that the Secretary's civilian appointments to the Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals are invalid for two reasons: first, the Secretary lacks authority under 49 U.S.C. § 323(a) to appoint members of the court; second, judges of military Courts of Criminal Appeals are principal, not inferior, officers within the meaning of the Appointments Clause, and must therefore be appointed by the [*656] President with the advice and consent of the Senate. We consider these contentions in turn.

[*HR2C] [2C]
Congress has established the Coast Guard as a military service and branch of the armed forces that, except in time of war (when it operates as a service within the Navy), is [926] part of the Department of Transportation. 14 U.S.C. §§ 1-3. The Secretary of Transportation has broad authority over the Coast Guard, including the power to "promulgate

REV_00256552

TOPICS

Latest News
Press Release Archive
Special Reports
Photo Downloads
Schumer Around NY

About Chuck | Senate Floor | Press Room | Services for New Yorkers | Kids' Page | Conta

Letter

Printer-friendly Version

April 30, 2003
The Honorable George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

Six months ago you described the judicial nomination and confirmation process as "broken" and "we have a duty to repair it." I could not agree with you more. To fulfill that duty, both the Adminis the Senate must be willing to make concessions for the sake of the Judiciary and the nation. I wr suggest a reform that requires such concessions, but, if adopted, will go a long way toward repai damage that has been done.

As matters currently stand, both sides are clearly considering ideology in evaluating candidates f bench and nominees are being delayed and deferred because of it.

On the front end, while most of the candidates you have sent to the Senate have been mainstrea conservatives (and have been swiftly confirmed), a growing number of nominees have records th both eyebrows and concerns about their commitment to balance, fairness, and moderation. They excellent lawyers, but they have spent their careers advancing agendas that harm – most particu women, consumers, workers, civil rights, and the environment.

On the back end, in the face of such extremist nominees, one simply cannot expect the Senate t its constitutional obligation and rubberstamp these extremist nominees. When confronted with nc hostility to basic fairness, we must ask questions, demand answers, and do all we can to stop th to demonstrate the capacity to be even-handed jurists. Thus far, you have declined to take ideolc the process. That is your right and I respect it, but it means we must continue to stand up agains who will bring an activist agenda to the courts.

REV_00256561

Thus, we find ourselves at an impasse when it comes to several nominees. In addition, because spend so much time vetting other nominees for whom red flags are raised, the process moves m than any of us would like.

I believe there is a solution to the problems we face.

Both the Administration and the Senate should agree to the creation of nominating commissions state, the District of Columbia, and each Circuit Court of Appeals. Every commission will consist number of Republicans and Democrats, chosen by the President and the opposition party's Sen Each commission will propose one candidate to fill each vacancy. Barring evidence that any can proposed by a Commission is unfit for judicial service, the President will nominate the individual Senate will confirm her or him.

To ensure each vacancy is filled rapidly but not hastily, the Commission will have a reasonable p time within which to propose a nominee, the President will have a short time within which to mak nomination, and the Senate will have the same short period of time within which to confirm him o

This proposal is our best hope for filling the bench with judges who are appointed based on meri ideology or party affiliation. It is also our best hope for breaking the vicious cycle that the judicial and confirmation process has been stuck in for years.

The solution I offer is similar to one proposed 25-years ago by President Carter, who relied on ju nominating commissions to generate candidates for circuit court vacancies and it is similar to nor commissions used by Senators in several states. The biggest differences are that this proposal e all federal judges are appointed by the same process regardless of what party is in power and it that every single selection is bipartisan.

By giving the President and the Senate equal roles in picking the judge-pickers, both retain some over the process, but neither gets a stranglehold.

By forcing every selection to be bipartisan, we maximize the prospect of achieving balance and r on the bench. Very few extremists on either side will get through and, in the rare instance where he or she likely will be offset by an extremist on the other side.

By mutually agreeing to abide by the choices the commissions make, we take politics and patron the process.

Once this system is in place, Presidents and Senates will be hard-pressed to abandon it. We hav chance here to put these battles to rest for good.

I promise to work to secure support for this proposal from every Senator on both sides of the aisl ask every Democratic candidate for the White House to take a vow to support this reform. Your l on this matter is essential to achieving this momentous goal. I hope you will agree to work with m broken system.

I look forward to hearing from you soon.

REV_00256562

Sincerely
Charles E. Schumer
United States Senato

REV_00256563

Service: Get by LEXSEE®
Citation: 501 U.S. 868,AT 884

*501 U.S. 868, *; 111 S. Ct. 2631, **;*
115 L. Ed. 2d 764, ; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 3818

THOMAS FREYTAG, ET AL., PETITIONERS v. COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE

No. 90-762

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

501 U.S. 868; 111 S. Ct. 2631; 115 L. Ed. 2d 764; 1991 U.S. LEXIS 3818; 59 U.S.L.W. 4872; 91-2 U.S. Tax Cas. (CCH) P50,321; 68 A.F.T.R.2d (RIA) 5025; 91 Cal. Daily Op. Service 5040; 91 Daily Journal DAR 7712

April 23, 1991, Argued
June 27, 1991, Decided

PRIOR HISTORY:

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

DISPOSITION: 904 F.2d 1011, affirmed.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Petitioner taxpayers appealed from the order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit that upheld the tax court's determination that petitioners owed tax deficiencies and rejected petitioners' contention that the reassignment of their cases by the chief tax court judge to a special trial judge violated 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A and the appointments clause of U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

OVERVIEW: Federal income tax deficiencies were assessed against petitioner taxpayers who allegedly deducted losses realized in a tax shelter scheme. Petitioners sought review of the determinations in tax court. The tax court judge retired due to illness during the trial, and, with petitioners' consent, their cases were reassigned to a special trial judge who ultimately ruled that petitioners owed additional taxes. The chief tax court judge adopted the ruling. Petitioners alleged that the adjudication of their cases by the special trial judge was not authorized by 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A, and that the reassignment violated the appointments clause of U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2. The court of appeals rejected petitioners' claims and affirmed. The court granted certiorari and affirmed, holding that 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b)(4) authorized the chief judge's assignment of petitioners' cases to the special trial judge. The court further concluded that the special trial judge's appointment did not violate the appointments clause because the tax court's role in the federal judicial scheme closely resembled that of Article I courts, which were given appointment power by the United States Constitution.

OUTCOME: The court granted certiorari and affirmed the court of appeals' order that upheld the tax court's ruling that petitioner taxpayers owed tax deficiencies, and that the reassignment of petitioners' cases to a special trial judge violated federal law and the appointments clause of the United States Constitution was without merit because the reassignment was authorized by statute, and the tax court was given the proper appointment power by Congress.

REV_00256564

limits the term "Department" to those departments of the executive branch of the Federal Government which are named in 5 USCS 101 does not provide a similar limitation on the term "Department" within the meaning of the appointments clause.

[*HN15]
CLAIMS §1.5

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §19

COURTS §186

OFFICERS §8
appointments clause -- judicial power -- territorial courts -- Court of Claims -- congressional interpretation --

Headnote: [15A] [15B] [15C] [15D] [15E]
A court which has been established by Congress pursuant to Article I of the Federal Constitution, and which court exercises the judicial power of the United States, can be a "Court of Law" within the meaning of the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which empowers the President to appoint the judges of the United States Supreme Court and other principal federal officers with the advice and consent of the Senate, while providing that Congress may by law vest the appointment of inferior officers of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--because (1) the text of the appointments clause does not limit "the Courts of Law" to those courts established under Article III of the Federal Constitution; (2) the appointments clause does not provide that Congress can vest appointment power only in the United States Supreme Court and other courts established under Article III, or only in tribunals that exercise broad common-law jurisdiction; (3) other non-Article III courts, such as the former Court of Claims and a territorial court, exercise the judicial power of the United States; and (4) Congress' consistent and longstanding interpretation of the appointments clause evinces a clear congressional understanding that Article I courts can be given the power to appoint. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

[*HN16]
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §27
cognate terms --

Headnote: [16]
The Federal Constitution's terms are illuminated by their cognate provisions.

[*HN17]
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §22
construction -- usage --

Headnote: [17]
Traditional ways of conducting government give meaning to the Federal Constitution.

[*HN18]
COURTS §225.1

INTERNAL REVENUE §82.5

OFFICERS §8
appointments clause -- Tax Court as "Court of Law" -- judicial power -- judicial review --

Headnote: [18A] [18B] [18C]

REV_00256573

The United States Tax Court, a court established by Congress pursuant to Article I of the Federal Constitution, is a "Court of Law" within the meaning of the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of inferior officers of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--because (1) the Tax Court, insofar as it was established to interpret and apply the Internal Revenue Code and regulations promulgated by the Internal Revenue Service in disputes between taxpayers and the Federal Government, exercises judicial power; (2) such judicial power is exercised to the exclusion of any other executive, legislative, or administrative function, and the Tax Court's exclusively judicial role distinguishes it from other non-Article III tribunals that perform multiple functions and provides the limit on the diffusion of appointment power that the Constitution demands; (3) the Tax Court's function and role in the federal judicial scheme closely resemble those of the Federal District Courts, which indisputably are "Courts of Law" within the meaning of the appointments clause, and the Tax Court exercises its judicial powers in much the same way as the District Courts exercise theirs; and (4) the decisions of the Tax Court are not subject to review by either Congress, the President, or District Courts, but rather--like District Court judgments--are appealable only to regional Federal Courts of Appeal, which courts review Tax Court decisions in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the District Courts in civil actions tried without a jury, rather than under the standard of review that a Court of Appeals applies to agency rulemaking. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

SYLLABUS: The Chief Judge of the United States Tax Court, an Article I court composed of 19 judges appointed by the President, is authorized to appoint special trial judges, 26 U. S. C. § 7443A(a), and to assign to them certain specified proceedings, §§ 7443A(b)(1), (2), and (3), and "any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate," § 7443A(b)(4). As to subsection (b)(4) proceedings, the special trial judge may hear the case and prepare proposed findings and an opinion, but the actual decision is rendered by a Tax Court judge, § 7443A(c). When petitioners sought review in the Tax Court of determinations of approximately $ 1.5 billion in federal income tax deficiencies, their cases were assigned to a Tax Court judge but were later reassigned, with petitioners' consent, to a Special Trial Judge. His unfavorable opinion was adopted by the Chief Judge as the opinion of the Tax Court. The Court of Appeals affirmed, rejecting petitioners' arguments that the assignment of complex cases to a special trial judge was not authorized by § 7443A and that such assignment violated the Appointments Clause of the Constitution, which, inter alia, limits congressional discretion to vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" to the President, the heads of departments, and the courts of law.

Held:

1. Subsection (b)(4) authorizes the Chief Judge to assign any Tax Court proceeding, regardless of complexity or amount in controversy, to a special trial judge for hearing and preparation of proposed findings and a written opinion. Its plain language contains no limiting term restricting its reach to cases that are minor, simple, or narrow; and neither the statute's structure nor legislative history contradicts the broad sweep of this language. Pp. 873-877.

2. Section 7443A does not transgress the structure of separation of powers embodied in the Appointments Clause. Pp. 877-892.

(a) This is one of those rare cases in which the Court should exercise its discretion to hear petitioners' challenge. That challenge goes to the validity of the Tax Court proceeding that is the basis for this litigation and, thus, is a nonjurisdictional structural constitutional objection that may be considered, even though petitioners consented to the assignment. See Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 535-536. Pp. 878-880, 8 L. Ed. 2d 671, 82 S. Ct. 1459.

(b) A special trial judge is an "inferior Officer" whose appointment must conform to the

REV_00256574

Appointments Clause. Such a judge acts as an inferior officer who exercises independent authority in cases governed by subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3). The fact that in subsection (b)(4) cases he performs duties that may be performed by an employee not subject to the Appointments Clause does not transform his status. Pp. 880-882.

(c) The Clause reflects the Framers' conclusion that widely distributed appointment power subverts democratic government. Thus, such power can be vested in the Tax Court's Chief Judge only if that court falls within one of the three repositories the Clause specifies. Clearly Congress did not intend to grant the President the power to appoint special trial judges. And the term "Department" refers only to executive divisions like Cabinet-level departments. United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 510-511, 25 L. Ed. 482. Treating the Tax Court as a "Department" would defy the purpose of the Clause, the meaning of the Constitution's text, and the clear intent of Congress to transform that court from an executive agency into an Article I court. Pp. 882-888.

(d) An Article I court, which exercises judicial power, can be a "Court of Law" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause. The reference to "Courts of Law" cannot be limited to Article III courts merely because they are the only courts the Constitution mentions. Congress has wide discretion to assign the task of adjudication to legislative tribunals, see, e. g., American Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 546; and an Article I court cannot exercise judicial power and not be one of the "Courts of Law." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659, 96 S. Ct. 612, distinguished. To hold otherwise would also undermine Congress' understanding that Article I courts can be given the power to appoint. See, e. g., In re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230. Pp. 888-890.

(e) The Tax Court is a "Court of Law" within the Clause's meaning. It exercises judicial power to the exclusion of any other function; its function and role closely resemble those of the federal district courts; and it is independent of the Executive and Legislative Branches, in that its decisions are appealable in the same manner as those of the district courts. Pp. 890-892.

COUNSEL: Kathleen M. Sullivan argued the cause for petitioners. With her on the briefs were Brian Stuart Koukoutchos and Richard J. Sideman.

Deputy Solicitor General Roberts argued the cause for respondent. With him on the briefs were Solicitor General Starr, Assistant Attorney General Peterson, Stephen J. Marzen, Gary R. Allen, and Steven W. Parks. *

* Erwin N. Griswold, pro se, and Patricia A. Dunn filed a brief of amicus curiae.

JUDGES: BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court with respect to Parts I, II, and III, and the opinion of the Court with respect to Part IV, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and WHITE, MARSHALL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, in which O'CONNOR, KENNEDY, and SOUTER, JJ., joined, post, p. 892.

OPINIONBY: BLACKMUN

OPINION: [*870] [*774] [2634] JUSTICE BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

[*HR1A] [1A]
The leading Framers of our Constitution viewed the principle of separation of powers as the central guarantee of a just government. James Madison put it this way: "No political truth is certainly of greater intrinsic value or is stamped with the authority of more enlightened patrons of liberty." The Federalist No. 47, p. 324 (J. Cooke ed. 1961). In this litigation, we must decide whether the authority that Congress has granted the Chief Judge of the United States Tax Court to appoint special trial judges transgresses our structure of separated powers. We answer that inquiry in the negative.

REV_00256575

I

By the Tax Reform Act of 1969, § 951, 83 Stat. 730, 26 U. S. C. § 7441, Congress "established, under article I of the Constitution of the United States, a court of record to be known as the United States Tax Court." It also empowered the Tax Court to appoint commissioners to assist its judges. § 958, 83 Stat. 734. By the Tax Reform Act of 1984, § 464(a), 98 Stat. 824, the title "commissioner" was changed to "special trial judge." By § 463 (a) of that Act, 98 Stat. 824, and by § 1556(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, 100 Stat. 2754, HN1 Congress authorized the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to appoint and assign these special trial judges to hear certain specifically [*871] described proceedings and "any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate." 26 U. S. C. §§ 7443A(a) and (b). The Tax Court presently consists of 19 judges appointed to 15-year terms by the [2635] President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. [775] §§ 7443(a), (b), and (e).

II

[*HR2A] [2A]
This complex litigation began with determinations of federal income tax deficiencies against the several petitioners, who had deducted on their returns approximately $ 1.5 billion in losses allegedly realized in a tax shelter scheme. n1 When petitioners sought review in the Tax Court in March 1982, their cases were assigned to Tax Court Judge Richard C. Wilbur. Trial began in 1984. Judge Wilbur became ill in November 1985, and the Chief Judge of the Tax Court assigned Special Trial Judge Carleton D. Powell to preside over the trial as evidentiary referee, with the proceedings videotaped. App. 2. When Judge Wilbur's illness forced his retirement and assumption of senior status effective April 1, 1986, the cases were reassigned, with petitioners' specified consent, Brief for Petitioners 8; Tr. of Oral Arg. 10, to Judge Powell for preparation of written findings and an opinion. App. 8, 12-14. The judge concluded that petitioners' tax shelter scheme consisted of sham transactions and that petitioners [*872] owed additional taxes. The Chief Judge adopted Judge Powell's opinion as that of the Tax Court. 89 T.C. 849 (1987). n2

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n1 At oral argument, counsel for petitioners described the litigation in this way:

"This is a tax case with implications for up to 3,000 taxpayers and a billion and a half in alleged tax deficiencies, and it involved one of the longest trials below in the tax court's history -- 14 weeks of evidence, complex financial testimony, 9,000 pages of transcripts, 3,000-plus exhibits." Tr. of Oral Arg. 3.

Counsel also stated petitioners' primary position:

"In other words, just to put our point succinctly, Congress did not and could not have intended special trial judges in large, complex, multiparty, multimillion dollar tax shelter cases -- alleged tax shelter cases such as this one -- Congress did not and could not have intended such cases to be in effect decided by the autonomous actions of a special trial judge." Id., at 17.

[*HR2B] [2B]
n2 Petitioners place some emphasis on the facts that Special Trial Judge Powell filed his proposed findings and opinion with the Tax Court on October 21, 1987; that on that day the

REV_00256576

Chief Judge issued an order reassigning the litigation to himself for disposition, App. 15; and that on that same day the Chief Judge adopted the opinion of Judge Powell. Brief for Petitioners 8-9. Indeed, the opinion, including its appendix, covers 44 pages in the Tax Court Reports. At oral argument, however, counsel observed that Judge Powell "sometime in the preceding 4 months had filed a report with the Chief Judge of the tax court." Tr. of Oral Arg. 11. In any event, this chronology does not appear to us to be at all significant. The Chief Judge had the duty to review the work of the Special Trial Judge, and there is nothing in the record disclosing how much time he devoted to the task. As Chief Judge he was aware of the presence of the several cases in the court and the magnitude of the litigation. The burden of proof as to any negative inference to be drawn from the time factor rests on petitioners. We are not inclined to assume "rubber stamp" activity on the part of the Chief Judge.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Petitioners took an appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. It affirmed. 904 F.2d 1011 (1990). Petitioners did not argue to the Court of Appeals, nor do they argue here, that the Tax Court is not a legitimate body. Rather, they contended that the assignment of cases as complex as theirs to a special trial judge was not authorized by § 7443A, and that this violated the Appointments Clause of the Constitution, Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. The Court of Appeals ruled that because the question of the Special Trial Judge's authority was "in essence, an attack upon the subject matter jurisdiction of the special trial judge, it may be [776] raised for the first time on appeal." 904 F.2d at 1015 (footnote omitted). The court then went on to reject petitioners' claims on the merits. It concluded that the Code authorized the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to assign a special trial judge to hear petitioners' cases and that petitioners had waived any constitutional challenge to this appointment by consenting to a trial before Judge Powell. Id., at 1015, n. 9.

[*873] We granted certiorari, 498 U.S. 1066 (1991), to resolve the important questions the litigation [2636] raises about the Constitution's structural separation of powers.

III

[*HR3A] [3A] HN2
Section 7443A(b) of the Internal Revenue Code specifically authorizes the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to assign four categories of cases to special trial judges: "(1) any declaratory judgment proceeding," "(2) any proceeding under section 7463," "(3) any proceeding" in which the deficiency or claimed overpayment does not exceed $ 10,000, and "(4) any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate." In the first three categories, the Chief Judge may assign the special trial judge not only to hear and report on a case but also to decide it. § 7443A(c). In the fourth category, the Chief Judge may authorize the special trial judge only to hear the case and prepare proposed findings and an opinion. The actual decision then is rendered by a regular judge of the Tax Court.

Petitioners argue that adjudication by the Special Trial Judge in this litigation exceeded the bounds of the statutory authority that Congress has conferred upon the Tax Court. Despite what they concede to be the "sweeping language" of subsection (b)(4), Brief for Petitioners 6, petitioners claim that Congress intended special trial judges to preside over only the comparatively narrow and minor matters covered by subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3).

[*HR3B] [3B]
[*HR4] [4]
The plain language of § 7443A(b)(4) surely authorizes the Chief Judge's assignment of petitioners' cases to a special trial judge. HN3When we find the terms of a statute unambiguous, judicial inquiry should be complete except in rare and exceptional circumstances. Demarest v. Manspeaker, 498 U.S. 184, 190, 112 L. Ed. 2d 608, 111 S. Ct.

REV_00256577

599 (1991). Subsection (b)(4) could not be more clear. HN4 It states that the Chief Judge may assign "any other proceeding" to a special trial judge for duties short of "making the decision." The subsection's text contains no [*874] limiting term that restricts its reach to cases that are minor, simple, or narrow, as petitioners urge. We have stated that HN5 courts "are not at liberty to create an exception where Congress has declined to do so." Hallstrom v. Tillamook County, 493 U.S. 20, 27, 107 L. Ed. 2d 237, 110 S. Ct. 304 (1989).

[*HR3C] [3C]
Nothing in the legislative history contradicts the broad sweep of subsection (b)(4)'s language. In proposing to authorize the Chief Judge to assign "any other proceeding" to the special trial judges, the Committee on Ways and Means stated that it intended "to clarify" that any other proceeding could be assigned to special trial judges "so long as a Tax Court judge must enter the decision." H. R. Rep. No. 98-432, pt. 2, p. 1568 (1984). The Report goes on to explain:

> [777] "A technical change is made to allow the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to assign any proceeding to a special trial judge for hearing and to write proposed opinions, subject to review and final decision by a Tax Court judge, regardless of the amount in issue. However, special trial judges will not be authorized to enter decisions in this latter category of cases." Ibid.

The Conference Report "follows the House Bill," H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 98-861, p. 1127 (1984), and, like the House Report, indicates that Congress knowingly removed the jurisdictional requirement of a maximum amount in dispute in order to expand the authority of special trial judges to hear, but not to decide, cases covered by subsection (b)(4).

Petitioners appear not to appreciate the distinction between the special trial judges' authority to hear cases and prepare proposed findings and opinions under subsection (b)(4) and their lack of authority actually to decide those cases, which is reserved exclusively for judges of the Tax Court. n3 Because they do [2637] not distinguish between hearing a [*875] case and deciding it, petitioners advance two arguments that, it seems to us, miss the mark.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - n3 Petitioners also argue that the deferential standard with which Tax Court Rule 183 requires a Tax Court judge to review the factual findings of a special trial judge allows the latter not only to hear a case but effectively to resolve it. This point is not relevant to our grant of certiorari, which concerned the question whether the assignment of petitioners' cases to a special trial judge was authorized by 26 U. S. C. § 7443A(b)(4). Accordingly, we say no more about this new argument than to note that under § 7443A(c) a special trial judge has no authority to decide a case assigned under subsection (b)(4).

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Petitioners first argue that the legislative history notes that the amendment to what is now § 7443A was merely a "technical" change and cannot be read to transfer dispositive power to special trial judges. Petitioners are correct that the 1984 amendment neither transferred decisional power nor altered the substantive duties of the special trial judges. HN6 Congress has limited the authority of special trial judges to enter decisions to the narrow category of cases set forth in subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3). The scope of the special trial judges' authority to hear and decide cases, however, has little, if any, relevance to the category of cases that the special trial judges may hear but not decide.

Since the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1943, § 503, 58 Stat. 72, the Tax Court has possessed authority to appoint commissioners to assist it in particular cases. Special trial judges and their predecessors, the commissioners, have been authorized for almost a half century to hear any case before the Tax Court in the discretion of its Chief Judge. In practice, before 1984, special trial judges often heard and reported on large and complex cases. Accordingly, when Congress adopted subsection (b)(4), it codified the Chief Judge's discretion to assign cases like petitioners' to a special trial judge for hearing and preparation of a report. The 1984 amendment was "technical" in light of the historical development of the special trial judges' role; the technical nature of the amendment, however, does not alter the wide-ranging effect of the statutory text's grant of authority to the Chief Judge to assign "any other [778] proceeding" within the Tax Court's jurisdiction to a special trial judge.

REV_00256578

[*876] Petitioners also argue that the phrase "any other proceeding" is a general grant of authority to fill unintended gaps left by subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3). Reading subsection (b)(4) as a catchall provision, petitioners argue that its meaning must be limited to cases involving a small amount of money because any other interpretation would render the limitations imposed by subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3) a nullity. In support of this argument, petitioners rely on this Court's decision in Gomez v. United States, 490 U.S. 858, 104 L. Ed. 2d 923, 109 S. Ct. 2237 (1989).

We held in Gomez that the Federal Magistrates Act's general grant of authority allowing magistrates to "be assigned such additional duties as are not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States," 28 U. S. C. § 636(b) (3), did not permit a magistrate to supervise juror voir dire in a felony trial over a defendant's objection. In so holding, we explained:

> "When a statute creates an office to which it assigns specific duties, those duties outline the attributes of the office. Any additional duties performed pursuant to a general authorization in the statute reasonably should bear some relation to the specified duties." 490 U.S. at 864.

In the Magistrates Act, the list of specifically enumerated duties followed the general grant of authority and provided the outlines for the scope of the general grant. Unlike the Magistrates Act, HN7 § 7443A explicitly distinguishes between the categories of cases enumerated in subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3), which are declaratory judgment proceedings and cases involving $ 10,000 or less, and the category of "any other proceeding" found in subsection (b)(4).

[2638] The lesser authority exercised by special trial judges in proceedings under subsection (b)(4) also prevents that subsection from serving as a grant of general authority to fill any gaps left in the three preceding subsections. HN8 Special trial judges may hear and decide declaratory judgment proceedings and the limited-amount cases. A special trial judge, [*877] however, cannot render the final decision of the Tax Court in a case assigned under subsection (b)(4). If the cases that special trial judges may hear, but not decide, under subsection (b)(4) are limited to the same kind of cases they could hear and decide under the three preceding subsections, then subsection (b)(4) would be superfluous. Our cases consistently have expressed HN9 "a deep reluctance to interpret a statutory provision so as to render superfluous other provisions in the same enactment." Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare v. Davenport, 495 U.S. 552, 562, 109 L. Ed. 2d 588, 110 S. Ct. 2126 (1990). See also Automobile Workers v. Johnson Controls, Inc., 499 U.S. 187, 201, 113 L. Ed. 2d 158, 111 S. Ct. 1196 (1991). HN10 The scope of subsection (b)(4) must be greater than that of subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3).

[*HR3D] [3D]
We conclude that subsection HN11 (b)(4) permits the Chief Judge to assign any Tax Court proceeding, regardless of complexity or amount, to a special trial judge for hearing and the preparation of proposed findings and written opinion. The statute's language, structure, and history permit no other conclusion.

REV_00256579

[*779] IV

[*HR1B] [1B]
This construction of § 7443A raises a constitutional issue to which we now must turn. Petitioners submit that if subsection (b)(4) permits a special trial judge to preside over the trial of any Tax Court case, then the statute violates the Appointments Clause of the Constitution, Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. According to petitioners, a special trial judge is an "Officer" of the United States who must be appointed in compliance with the Clause. The Clause reads:

> HN12"He [the President] . . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law; but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in [*878] the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments."

Thus, HN13the Constitution limits congressional discretion to vest power to appoint "inferior Officers" to three sources: "the President alone," "the Heads of Departments," and "the Courts of Law." Petitioners argue that a special trial judge is an "inferior Officer," and also contend that the Chief Judge of the Tax Court does not fall within any of the Constitution's three repositories of the appointment power.

A

[*HR5A] [5A]
We first address the Commissioner's argument that petitioners have waived their right to challenge the constitutional propriety of § 7443A. The Commissioner contends that petitioners waived this right not only by failing to raise a timely objection to the assignment of their cases to a special trial judge, but also by consenting to the assignment.

[*HR6A] [6A]
The roots of the separation-of-powers concept embedded in the Appointments Clause are structural and political. Our separation-of-powers jurisprudence generally focuses on the danger of one branch's aggrandizing its power at the expense of another branch. See Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 382, 102 L. Ed. 2d 714, 109 S. Ct. 647 (1989). The Appointments Clause not only guards against this encroachment but also preserves another aspect of the Constitution's structural integrity by preventing the diffusion of the appointment power.

[2639] The Commissioner correctly notes that petitioners gave their consent to trial before the Special Trial Judge. This Court in the past, however, has exercised its discretion to consider nonjurisdictional claims that had not been raised below. See Grosso v. United States, 390 U.S. 62, 71-72, 19 L. Ed. 2d 906, 88 S. Ct. 709 (1968); Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 535-536, 8 L. Ed. 2d 671, 82 S. Ct. 1459 (1962); Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, 556-560, 85 L. Ed. 1037, 61 S. Ct. 719 (1941). Glidden expressly included Appointments Clause objections to judicial officers in the category of nonjurisdictional structural [*879] constitutional objections that could be considered on appeal whether or not they were ruled upon below:

REV_00256580

> "And in Lamar v. United States, [780] 241 U.S. 103, 117-118, 60 L. Ed. 912, 36 S. Ct. 535, the claim that an intercircuit assignment . . . usurped the presidential appointing power under Art. II, § 2, was heard here and determined upon its merits, despite the fact that it had not been raised in the District Court or in the Court of Appeals or even in this Court until the filing of a supplemental brief upon a second request for review." Glidden, 370 U.S. at 536 (Harlan, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

[*HR5B] [5B]
[*HR7] [7]
Like the Court in Glidden, we are faced with a constitutional challenge that is neither frivolous nor disingenuous. The alleged defect in the appointment of the Special Trial Judge goes to the validity of the Tax Court proceeding that is the basis for this litigation. It is true that, as a general matter, a litigant must raise all issues and objections at trial. But the disruption to sound appellate process entailed by entertaining objections not raised below does not always overcome what Justice Harlan called "the strong interest of the federal judiciary in maintaining the constitutional plan of separation of powers." Ibid. We conclude that this is one of those rare cases in which we should exercise our discretion to hear petitioners' challenge to the constitutional authority of the Special Trial Judge.

In reaching this conclusion, we note that we are not persuaded by the Commissioner's request that this Court defer to the Executive Branch's decision that there has been no legislative encroachment on Presidential prerogatives under the Appointments Clause in connection with § 7443A. According to the Commissioner, the structural interests implicated in this litigation are those of the Executive Branch, which can be expected to look out for itself. It is claimed, accordingly, that there is no need for this Court to be concerned about protecting the separation-of-powers interests at stake here.

[*880]

[*HR6B] [6B]
[*HR8] [8]
We are not persuaded by this approach. The Commissioner, we believe, is in error when he assumes that the interest at stake is the Executive's own appointment power. The structural principles embodied in the Appointments Clause do not speak only, or even primarily, of Executive prerogatives simply because they are located in Article II. HN14 The Appointments Clause prevents Congress from dispensing power too freely; it limits the universe of eligible recipients of the power to appoint. Because it articulates a limiting principle, the Appointments Clause does not always serve the Executive's interests. For example, the Clause forbids Congress to grant the appointment power to inappropriate members of the Executive Branch. Neither Congress nor the Executive can agree to waive this structural protection. "The assent of the Executive to a bill which contains a provision contrary to the Constitution does not shield it from judicial review." INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 942, n. 13, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317, 103 S. Ct. 2764 (1983). The structural interests protected by the Appointments Clause are not those of any one branch of Government but of the entire Republic.

B

We turn to another preliminary issue in petitioners' Appointments [781] Clause challenge. [2640] Petitioners argue that a special trial judge is an "inferior Officer" of the United States. If we disagree, and conclude that a special trial judge is only an employee, petitioners' challenge fails, for such "lesser functionaries" need not be selected in compliance with the strict requirements of Article II. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126, n. 162, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659, 96 S. Ct. 612 (1976).

REV_00256581

The Commissioner, in contrast to petitioners, argues that a special trial judge assigned under § 7443A(b)(4) acts only as an aide to the Tax Court judge responsible for deciding the case. The special trial judge, as the Commissioner characterizes his work, does no more than assist the Tax Court judge in taking the evidence and preparing the proposed findings and opinion. Thus, the Commissioner concludes, special [*881] trial judges acting pursuant to § 7443A (b)(4) are employees rather than "Officers of the United States."

[*HR1C] [1C]
[*HR9A] [9A]
[*HR10] [10]
"Any appointee exercising significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States is an 'Officer of the United States,' and must, therefore, be appointed in the manner prescribed by § 2, cl. 2, of [Article II]." Buckley, 424 U.S. at 126. The two courts that have addressed the issue have held that special trial judges are "inferior Officers." The Tax Court so concluded in First Western Govt. Securities, Inc. v. Commissioner, 94 T.C. 549, 557-559 (1990), and the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Samuels, Kramer & Co. v. Commissioner, 930 F.2d 975, 985 (1991), agreed. Both courts considered the degree of authority exercised by the special trial judges to be so "significant" that it was inconsistent with the classifications of "lesser functionaries" or employees. Cf. Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 352-353, 75 L. Ed. 374, 51 S. Ct. 153 (1931) (United States commissioners are inferior officers). We agree with the Tax Court and the Second Circuit that HN15 a special trial judge is an "inferior Officer" whose appointment must conform to the Appointments Clause.

[*HR9B] [9B]
The Commissioner reasons that special trial judges may be deemed employees in subsection (b)(4) cases because they lack authority to enter a final decision. But this argument ignores the significance of the duties and discretion that special trial judges possess. The office of special trial judge is "established by Law," Art. II, § 2, cl. 2, and the duties, salary, and means of appointment for that office are specified by statute. See Burnap v. United States, 252 U.S. 512, 516-517, 64 L. Ed. 692, 40 S. Ct. 374 (1920); United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 511-512, 25 L. Ed. 482 (1879). These characteristics distinguish special trial judges from special masters, who are hired by Article III courts on a temporary, episodic basis, whose positions are not established by law, and whose duties and functions are not delineated in a statute. Furthermore, special trial judges perform more than ministerial tasks. They take testimony, [*882] conduct trials, rule on the admissibility of evidence, and have the power to enforce compliance with discovery orders. In the course of carrying out these important functions, the special trial judges exercise significant discretion.

Even if the duties of special trial judges under subsection (b)(4) were [782] not as significant as we and the two courts have found them to be, our conclusion would be unchanged. Under §§ 7443A(b)(1), (2), and (3), and (c), the Chief Judge may assign special trial judges to render the decisions of the Tax Court in declaratory judgment proceedings and limited-amount tax cases. The Commissioner concedes that in cases governed by subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3), special trial judges act as inferior officers who exercise independent authority. But the Commissioner urges that petitioners may not rely on the extensive power wielded by the special trial judges in declaratory judgment proceedings and limited-amount tax cases because petitioners lack standing to assert the rights of taxpayers whose cases are assigned [2641] to special trial judges under subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3).

This standing argument seems to us to be beside the point. Special trial judges are not inferior officers for purposes of some of their duties under § 7443A, but mere employees with respect to other responsibilities. The fact that an inferior officer on occasion performs duties

REV_00256582

CORE TERMS: appointment, inferior, judicial power, courts of law, tribunal, appoint, assign, duty, appointed, hear, forfeiture, power to appoint, assigned, Court of Law, presidential, territorial, salary, vest, forfeited, subject-matter, waived, entity, secretary, encroachment, Twenty-fifth Amendment, inferior officer, authorize, constitutional challenge, nonjurisdictional, establishment

LexisNexis(TM) HEADNOTES - Core Concepts - ♦ Hide Concepts

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN1 Congress has authorized the chief judge of the tax court to appoint and assign special trial judges to hear certain specifically described proceedings and any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate. 26 U.S.C.S. §§ 7443A(a) and (b).

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN2 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b) specifically authorizes the chief judge of the tax court to assign four categories of cases to special trial judges: (1) any declaratory judgment proceeding, (2) any proceeding under 26 U.S.C.S. § 7463, (3) any proceeding in which the deficiency or claimed overpayment does not exceed $ 10,000, and (4) any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate. In the first three categories, the chief judge may assign the special trial judge not only to hear and report on a case but also to decide it. 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(c). In the fourth category, the chief judge may authorize the special trial judge only to hear the case and prepare proposed findings and an opinion. The actual decision then is rendered by a regular judge of the tax court.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 When a reviewing court finds the terms of a statute unambiguous, judicial inquiry should be complete except in rare and exceptional circumstances.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN4 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b)(4) states that the chief judge may assign any other proceeding to a special trial judge for duties short of making the decision. The subsection's text contains no limiting term that restricts its reach to cases that are minor, simple, or narrow, as petitioners urge.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Courts are not at liberty to create an exception where Congress has declined to do so.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN6 Congress has limited the authority of special trial judges to enter decisions to the narrow category of cases set forth in 26 U.S.C.S. §§ 7443A(b)(1), (2), and (3). The scope of the special trial judges' authority to hear and decide cases, however, has little, if any, relevance to the category of cases that the special trial judges may hear but not decide.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN7 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A explicitly distinguishes between the categories of cases enumerated in 26 U.S.C.S. §§ 7443A(b)(1), (2), and (3), which are declaratory judgment proceedings and cases involving $ 10,000 or less, and the category of any other proceeding found in 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443(A)(b)(4).

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

REV_00256565

that may be performed by an employee not subject to the Appointments Clause does not transform his status under the Constitution. If a special trial judge is an inferior officer for purposes of subsections (b)(1), (2), and (3), he is an inferior officer within the meaning of the Appointments Clause and he must be properly appointed.

C

[*HR1D] [1D]
[*HR11] [11]
Having concluded that the special trial judges are "inferior Officers," we consider the substantive aspect of petitioners Appointments Clause challenge. The principle of separation of powers is embedded in the Appointments Clause. Its relevant language bears repeating: "The Congress may by [*883] Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." Congress clearly vested the Chief Judge of the Tax Court with the power to appoint special trial judges. An important fact about the appointment in this case should not be overlooked. This case does not involve an "interbranch" appointment. Cf. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 675-677, 101 L. Ed. 2d 569, 108 S. Ct. 2597 (1988). However one might classify the Chief Judge of the Tax Court, there surely is nothing incongruous about giving him the authority to appoint the clerk or an assistant judge for that court. See id., at 676. We do not consider here an appointment by some officer of inferior officers in, for example, the Department of Commerce or Department of State. The appointment in this case is so obviously appropriate that petitioners' burden of persuading us that it violates the Appointments Clause is indeed heavy.

[*HR12] [12]
Although petitioners bear a heavy burden, their challenge is a serious one. Despite Congress' authority to create offices and to provide for the method of appointment to those offices, "Congress' power . . . is inevitably bounded by the express language of Article II, cl. 2, and unless the method it provides comports with the latter, the holders of those offices will not be 'Officers of the United States.'" Buckley, 424 U.S. at 138-139 (discussing Congress' power [783] under the Necessary and Proper Clause).

[*HR6C] [6C]
The "manipulation of official appointments" had long been one of the American revolutionary generation's greatest grievances against executive power, see G. Wood, The Creation of The American Republic 1776-1787, p. 79 (1969) (Wood), because "the power of appointment to offices" was deemed "the most insidious and powerful weapon of eighteenth century despotism." Id., at 143. Those who framed our Constitution addressed these concerns by carefully husbanding the appointment power to limit its diffusion. Although the debate on the Appointments Clause was brief, the [*884] sparse record indicates the Framers' determination to limit the distribution of the power of appointment. The Constitutional Convention rejected Madison's complaint that the Appointments Clause did "not go far enough if it be necessary at all": Madison argued that "Superior Officers below Heads of Departments ought in some cases to have the appointment of the lesser offices." 2 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, pp. 627-628 (M. Farrand rev. 1966). The Framers understood, however, that by limiting the appointment power, they could ensure that those who wielded it were accountable to political force and the will of the people. Thus, the Clause bespeaks a principle of limitation by dividing the power to appoint the principal federal officers -- ambassadors, ministers, heads of departments, and judges -- between the Executive and Legislative Branches. See Buckley, 424 U.S. at 129-131. [2642] Even with respect to "inferior Officers," the Clause allows Congress only limited authority to devolve appointment power on the President, his heads of departments, and the courts of law.

[*HR1E] [1E]

REV_00256583

With this concern in mind, we repeat petitioners' central challenge: Can the Chief Judge of the Tax Court constitutionally be vested by Congress with the power to appoint? The Appointments Clause names the possible repositories for the appointment power. It is beyond question in this litigation that Congress did not intend to grant to the President the power to appoint special trial judges. We therefore are left with three other possibilities. First, as the Commissioner urges, the Tax Court could be treated as a department with the Chief Judge as its head. Second, as the amicus suggests, the Tax Court could be considered one of "the Courts of Law." Third, we could agree with petitioners that the Tax Court is neither a "Department" nor a "Court of Law." Should we agree with petitioners, it would follow that the appointment power could not be vested in the Chief Judge of the Tax Court.

[*885]

[*HR13A] [13A]
We first consider the Commissioner's argument. According to the Commissioner, the Tax Court is a department because for 45 years before Congress designated that court as a "court of record" under Article I, see § 7441, the body was an independent agency (the predecessor Board of Tax Appeals) within the Executive Branch. Furthermore, the Commissioner argues that § 7441 simply changed the status of the Tax Court within that branch. It did not remove the body to a different branch or change its substantive duties.

The Commissioner "readily" acknowledges [784] that "the Tax Court's fit within the Executive Branch may not be a perfect one." Brief for Respondent 41. But he argues that the Tax Court must fall within one of the three branches and that the Executive Branch provides its best home. The reasoning of the Commissioner may be summarized as follows: (1) The Tax Court must fit into one of the three branches; (2) it does not fit into either the Legislative Branch or the Judicial Branch; (3) at one time it was an independent agency and therefore it must fit into the Executive Branch; and (4) every component of the Executive Branch is a department.

We cannot accept the Commissioner's assumption that every part of the Executive Branch is a department, the head of which is eligible to receive the appointment power. The Appointments Clause prevents Congress from distributing power too widely by limiting the actors in whom Congress may vest the power to appoint. The Clause reflects our Framers' conclusion that widely distributed appointment power subverts democratic government. Given the inexorable presence of the administrative state, a holding that every organ in the Executive Branch is a department would multiply indefinitely the number of actors eligible to appoint. The Framers recognized the dangers posed by an excessively diffuse appointment power and rejected efforts to expand that power. See Wood 79-80. So do we. For the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to qualify as a "Head of [a] Department," the Commissioner must demonstrate not only that the Tax [*886] Court is a part of the Executive Branch but also that it is a department.

We are not so persuaded. This Court for more than a century has held that the term "Department" refers only to "'a part or division of the executive government, as the Department of State, or of the Treasury,'" expressly "created" and "giv[en] . . . the name of a department" by Congress. Germaine, 99 U.S. at 510-511. See also Burnap, 252 U.S. at 515 ("The term head of a Department means . . . the Secretary in charge of a great division of the executive branch of the Government, like the State, Treasury, and War, who is a member of the Cabinet"). Accordingly, the term "Heads of Departments" does not embrace [2643] "inferior commissioners and bureau officers." Germaine, 99 U.S. at 511.

Confining the term "Heads of Departments" in the Appointments Clause to executive divisions like the Cabinet-level departments constrains the distribution of the appointment power just as the Commissioner's interpretation, in contrast, would diffuse it. The Cabinet-level departments are limited in number and easily identified. Their heads are subject to the exercise of political oversight and share the President's accountability to the people.

REV_00256584

Such a limiting construction also ensures that we interpret that term in the Appointments Clause consistently with its interpretation in other constitutional provisions. In Germaine, see 99 U.S. at 511, this Court noted that the phrase "Heads of Departments" in the Appointments Clause must be read in conjunction with the Opinion Clause of Art. II, § 2, cl. 1. The Opinion Clause provides that the President [785] "may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the Executive Departments," and Germaine limited the meaning of "Executive Department" to the Cabinet members.

[*HR13B] [13B]
[*HR14A] [14A]
The phrase "executive departments" also appears in § 4 of the Twenty-fifth Amendment, which empowers the Vice [*887] President, together with a majority of the "principal officers of the executive departments," to declare the President "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office." The Amendment was ratified February 10, 1967, and its language, of course, does not control our interpretation of a prior constitutional provision, such as the Appointments Clause. n4 Nevertheless, it is instructive that the hearings on the Twenty-fifth Amendment confirm that the term "department" refers to Cabinet-level entities:

> "Only officials of Cabinet rank should participate in the decision as to whether presidential inability exists. . . . The intent . . . is that the Presidential appointees who direct the 10 executive departments named in 5 U. S. C. 1 [now codified as § 101], or any executive department established in the future, generally considered to comprise the President's Cabinet, would participate . . . in determining inability." H. R. Rep. No. 203, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1965).

[*HR14B] [14B]

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - n4 Because the language of the Twenty-fifth Amendment does not bind our interpretation of the Appointments Clause, the fact that the Amendment strictly limits the term "department" to those departments named in 5 U. S. C. § 101 does not provide a similar limitation on the term "Department" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause. We do not address here any question involving an appointment of an inferior officer by the head of one of the principal agencies, such as the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

[*HR13C] [13C]
Even if we were not persuaded that the Commissioner's view threatened to diffuse the appointment power and was contrary to the meaning of "Department" in the Constitution, we still could not accept his treatment of the intent of Congress, which enacted legislation in 1969 with the express purpose of "making the Tax Court an Article I court rather than an executive agency." S. Rep. No. 91-552, p. 303 (1969). Congress deemed it "anomalous to continue to classify" [*888] the Tax Court with executive agencies, id., at 302, and questioned whether it was "appropriate for one executive agency [the pre-1969 tribunal] to be sitting in judgment on the determinations of another executive agency [the IRS]." Ibid.

Treating the Tax Court as a "Department" and its Chief Judge as its "Head" would defy the purpose of the Appointments Clause, the meaning of the Constitution's text, and the clear intent of Congress to transform the Tax Court into an Article I [2644] legislative court. The Tax Court is not a "Department."

Having so concluded, we now must determine whether it is one of the "Courts of Law," as amicus suggests. Petitioners and the Commissioner both take the position that the Tax Court cannot be a "Court of Law" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause because, they [786] say, that term is limited to Article III courts. n5 n5 The Commissioner has not been consistent in this position. Indeed, when the present litigation was in the Fifth Circuit, the Government advocated that the Tax Court is one of the "Courts of Law." Brief for Appellee in No. 89-4436 et al., pp. 47-51. It abandoned that position in the later case of Samuels, Kramer & Co. v. Commissioner, 930 F.2d 975 (CA2 1991), and there urged that the Tax Court was a "Department." Brief for Appellee in No. 89-4436 et al., pp. 34-48.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

[*HR15A] [15A]
[*HR16] [16]
The text of the Clause does not limit the "Courts of Law" to those courts established under Article III of the Constitution. The Appointments Clause does not provide that Congress can vest appointment power only in "one supreme Court" and other courts established under Article III, or only in tribunals that exercise broad common-law jurisdiction. Petitioners argue that Article II's reference to the "Courts of Law" must be limited to Article III courts because Article III courts are the only courts mentioned in the Constitution. It of course is true that the Constitution "nowhere makes reference to 'legislative courts.'" See Glidden, 370 U.S. at 543. But petitioners' argument fails nevertheless. We [*889] agree with petitioners that the Constitution's terms are illuminated by their cognate provisions. This analytic method contributed to our conclusion that the Tax Court could not be a department. Petitioners, however, underestimate the importance of this Court's time-honored reading of the Constitution as giving Congress wide discretion to assign the task of adjudication in cases arising under federal law to legislative tribunals. See, e. g., American Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 546 (1828) (the judicial power of the United States is not limited to the judicial power defined under Article III and may be exercised by legislative courts); Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 565-567, 77 L. Ed. 1372, 53 S. Ct. 751 (1933) (same).

[*HR15B] [15B]
Our cases involving non-Article III tribunals have held that these courts exercise the judicial power of the United States. In both Canter and Williams, this Court rejected arguments similar to the literalistic one now advanced by petitioners, that only Article III courts could exercise the judicial power because the term "judicial Power" appears only in Article III. In Williams, this Court explained that the power exercised by some non-Article III tribunals is judicial power:

> "The Court of Claims . . . undoubtedly . . . exercises judicial power, but the question still remains -- and is the vital question -- whether it is the judicial power defined by Art. III of the Constitution.
>
> "That judicial power apart from that article may be conferred by Congress upon > legislative courts . . . is plainly apparent from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in American Insurance Co. v. Canter . . . dealing with the territorial courts. . . . The legislative courts possess and exercise judicial power . . . although not conferred in virtue of the third article of the Constitution." 289 U.S. at 565-566.

REV_00256586

We cannot hold that an Article I court, such as the Court of Claims in Williams or the Territorial Court of Florida in [*890] Canter, can exercise the judicial power of the United States and yet cannot be one of the "Courts of Law."

Nothing in Buckley v. Valeo contradicts [787] this conclusion. While this Court in Buckley paraphrased the Appointments Clause to allow the appointment of inferior officers "by the President alone, by the heads of departments, or by the Judiciary," 424 U.S. at 132, we did not hold that "Courts of Law" consist only of the Article III judiciary. The appointment authority of the "Courts of Law" was not before this Court in Buckley. Instead, we were concerned with whether the appointment of Federal Elections [2645] Commissioners by Congress was constitutional under the Appointments Clause.

[*HR15C] [15C]
[*HR17] [17]
The narrow construction urged by petitioners and the Commissioner also would undermine longstanding practice. "From the earliest days of the Republic," see Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 64, 73 L. Ed. 2d 598, 102 S. Ct. 2858 (1982), Congress provided for the creation of legislative courts and authorized those courts to appoint clerks, who were inferior officers. See, e. g., In re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230 (1839). Congress' consistent interpretation of the Appointments Clause evinces a clear congressional understanding that Article I courts could be given the power to appoint. Because "'traditional ways of conducting government . . . give meaning' to the Constitution," Mistretta, 488 U.S. at 401, quoting Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 610, 96 L. Ed. 1153, 72 S. Ct. 863 (1952) (concurring opinion), this longstanding interpretation provides evidence that Article I courts are not precluded from being "Courts of Law" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause.

[*HR15D] [15D]
[*HR18A] [18A]
Having concluded that HN16 an Article I court, which exercises judicial power, can be a "Court of Law" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause, we now examine the Tax Court's functions to define its constitutional status and its role in the constitutional scheme. See Williams, 289 U.S. at 563-567. The Tax Court exercises judicial, rather than [*891] executive, legislative, or administrative, power. It was established by Congress to interpret and apply the Internal Revenue Code in disputes between taxpayers and the Government. By resolving these disputes, the court exercises a portion of the judicial power of the United States.

[*HR18B] [18B]
The Tax Court exercises judicial power to the exclusion of any other function. It is neither advocate nor rulemaker. As an adjudicative body, it construes statutes passed by Congress and regulations promulgated by the Internal Revenue Service. It does not make political decisions.

The Tax Court's function and role in the federal judicial scheme closely resemble those of the federal district courts, which indisputably are "Courts of Law." Furthermore, the Tax Court exercises its judicial power in much the same way as the federal district courts exercise theirs. It has authority to punish contempts by fine or imprisonment, 26 U. S. C. § 7456(c); to grant certain injunctive relief, § 6213(a); to order the Secretary of the Treasury to refund an overpayment determined by the court, § 6512(b)(2); and to subpoena and examine witnesses, order production [788] of documents, and administer oaths, § 7456(a). All these powers are quintessentially judicial in nature.

REV_00256587

*HN17*The Tax Court remains independent of the Executive and Legislative Branches. Its decisions are not subject to review by either the Congress or the President. Nor has Congress made Tax Court decisions subject to review in the federal district courts. Rather, like the judgments of the district courts, the decisions of the Tax Court are appealable only to the regional United States courts of appeals, with ultimate review in this Court. The courts of appeals, moreover, review those decisions " in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the district courts in civil actions tried without a jury." § 7482(a). This standard of review contrasts with the standard applied to agency rulemaking by the courts of appeals under § 10(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C. § 706(2)(A). See Motor Vehicle Mfrs. [*892] Assn. v. State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43-44, 77 L. Ed. 2d 443, 103 S. Ct. 2856 (1983).

[*HR1F] [1F]
[*HR15E] [15E]
[*HR18C] [18C] HN18
The Tax Court's exclusively judicial role distinguishes it from other non-Article III tribunals that perform multiple functions and provides the limit on the diffusion of appointment power that the Constitution demands. Moreover, since the early 1800's, Congress [2646] regularly granted non-Article III territorial courts the authority to appoint their own clerks of court, who, as of at least 1839, were "inferior Officers" within the meaning of the Appointments Clause. See In re Hennen, 13 Peters at 258. Including Article I courts, such as the Tax Court, that exercise judicial power and perform exclusively judicial functions among the "Courts of Law" does not significantly expand the universe of actors eligible to receive the appointment power.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

CONCURBY: SCALIA (In Part)

CONCUR: JUSTICE SCALIA, with whom JUSTICE O'CONNOR, JUSTICE KENNEDY, and JUSTICE SOUTER join, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the Court that 26 U. S. C. § 7443A allows the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to assign special trial judges to preside over proceedings like those involved here, and join Parts I, II, and III of its opinion. I disagree, however, with the Court's decision to reach, as well as its resolution of, the Appointments Clause issue.

I

As an initial matter, I think the Court errs by entertaining petitioners' constitutional challenge on the merits. Petitioners not only failed to object at trial to the assignment of their case to a special trial judge, but expressly consented to that assignment. It was only after the judge ruled against them that petitioners developed their current concern over whether his appointment violated Article II, § 2, cl. 2, of the [*893] Constitution. They raised this important constitutional question for the first time in their appeal to the Fifth Circuit. That court concluded that petitioners had "waived this objection" by consenting to the assignment of [789] their case. 904 F.2d 1011, 1015, n. 9 (1990). When we granted certiorari, we asked the parties to brief and argue the following additional question: "Does a party's consent to have its case heard by a special tax judge constitute a waiver of any right to challenge the appointment of that judge on the basis of the Appointments Clause, Art. II, § 2, cl. 2?" 498 U.S. 1066 (1991).

REV_00256588

Petitioners would have us answer that question "no" by adopting a general rule that "structural" constitutional rights as a class simply cannot be forfeited, and that litigants are entitled to raise them at any stage of litigation. The Court neither accepts nor rejects that proposal -- and indeed, does not even mention it, though the opinion does dwell upon the structural nature of the present constitutional claim, ante, at 878-880. Nor does the Court in any other fashion answer the question we specifically asked to be briefed, choosing instead to say that, in the present case, it will "exercise our discretion" to entertain petitioners' constitutional claim. Ante, at 879. Thus, when there occurs a similar forfeiture of an Appointments Clause objection -- or of some other allegedly structural constitutional deficiency -- the courts of appeals will remain without guidance as to whether the forfeiture must, or even may, be disregarded. (The Court refers to this case as "one of the rare" ones in which forfeiture will be ignored, ibid. -- but since all forfeitures of Appointments Clause rights, and arguably even all forfeitures of structural constitutional rights, can be considered "rare," this is hardly useful guidance.) Having asked for this point to be briefed and argued, and having expended our time in considering it, we should provide an answer. In my view the answer is that Appointments Clause claims, and other structural constitutional claims, have no special entitlement to review. A party forfeits the right to advance on appeal a nonjurisdictional [*894] claim, structural or otherwise, that he fails to raise at trial. Although I have no quarrel with the proposition that appellate courts may, in truly exceptional circumstances, exercise discretion to hear forfeited claims, I see no basis for the assertion that the structural nature of a constitutional claim [2647] in and of itself constitutes such a circumstance; nor do I see any other exceptional circumstance in the present case. Cf. Peretz v. United States, post, at 954-955 (SCALIA, J., dissenting). I would therefore reject petitioners' sweeping proposition that structural constitutional rights as a class cannot be waived or forfeited and would refuse to entertain the constitutional challenge presented here. n1

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n1 I have no quarrel with the Court's decision to entertain petitioners' statutory claim on the merits, as that claim was resolved on the merits by the Court of Appeals. See Virginia Bankshares, Inc. v. Sandberg, post, at 1099, n. 8 (1991).

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

"No procedural principle is more familiar to this Court than that a constitutional right may be forfeited in criminal as well as civil cases by the failure to make timely assertion of the right before a tribunal having jurisdiction to determine it." Yakus [790] v. United States, 321 U.S. 414, 444, 88 L. Ed. 834, 64 S. Ct. 660 (1944); see also United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 238-239, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940). Forfeiture n2 is "not a mere technicality and [*895] is essential to the orderly administration of justice." 9 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2472, p. 455 (1971). In the federal judicial system, the rules generally governing the forfeiture of claims are set forth in Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 51 and 52(b) and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 46. The Tax Court, which is not an Article III court, has adopted a rule virtually identical to the latter, Tax Court Rule 144. These rules reflect the principle that a trial on the merits, whether in a civil or criminal case, is the "main event," and not simply a "tryout on the road" to appellate review. Cf. Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 90, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594, 97 S. Ct. 2497 (1977). The very word "review" presupposes that a litigant's arguments have been raised and considered in the tribunal of first instance. To abandon that principle is to encourage the practice of "sandbagging": suggesting or permitting, for strategic reasons, that the trial court pursue a certain course, and later -- if the outcome is unfavorable -- claiming that the course followed was reversible error.

REV_00256589

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n2 The Court uses the term "waive" instead of "forfeit," see ante, at 878-880. The two are really not the same, although our cases have so often used them interchangeably that it may be too late to introduce precision. Waiver, the "intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege," Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 82 L. Ed. 1461, 58 S. Ct. 1019 (1938), is merely one means by which a forfeiture may occur. Some rights may be forfeited by means short of waiver, see, e. g., Levine v. United States, 362 U.S. 610, 619, 4 L. Ed. 2d 989, 80 S. Ct. 1038 (1960) (right to public trial); United States v. Bascaro, 742 F.2d 1335, 1365 (CA11 1984) (right against double jeopardy), cert. denied sub nom. Hobson v. United States, 472 U.S. 1017, 87 L. Ed. 2d 613, 105 S. Ct. 3476, 105 S. Ct. 3477 (1985); United States v. Whitten, 706 F.2d 1000, 1018, n. 7 (CA9 1983) (right to confront adverse witnesses), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1100, 80 L. Ed. 2d 125, 104 S. Ct. 1593 (1984), but others may not, see, e. g., Johnson, supra (right to counsel); Patton v. United States, 281 U.S. 276, 312, 74 L. Ed. 854, 50 S. Ct. 253 (1930) (right to trial by jury). A right that cannot be waived cannot be forfeited by other means (at least in the same proceeding), but the converse is not true.

In this case, petitioners expressly consented to the Special Trial Judge's role. As far as my analysis is concerned, however, it would not matter if an even more inadvertent forfeiture were involved -- that is, if petitioners had not even consented but had merely failed to object in timely fashion. I shall not try to retain the distinction between waiver and forfeiture throughout this opinion, since many of the sources I shall be using disregard it.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

The blanket rule that "argument[s] premised on the Constitution's structural separation of powers [are] not a matter of personal rights and therefore [are] not waivable," Brief for Petitioners 43-44, would erode this cardinal principle of sound judicial administration. It has no support in principle or in precedent or in policy.

As to principle: Personal rights that happen to bear upon governmental structure are no more laden with public interest (and hence inherently nonwaivable by the individual) [2648] than many other personal rights one can conceive of. First [*896] Amendment free-speech rights, for example, or the Sixth Amendment right to a trial that is "public," provide benefits to the entire society more important than many structural guarantees; but if the litigant does not assert them in a timely [791] fashion, he is foreclosed. See, e. g., Head v. New Mexico Bd. of Examiners in Optometry, 374 U.S. 424, 432-433, n. 12, 10 L. Ed. 2d 983, 83 S. Ct. 1759 (1963) (First Amendment); Levine v. United States, 362 U.S. 610, 619, 4 L. Ed. 2d 989, 80 S. Ct. 1038 (1960) (Sixth Amendment). Nor is it distinctively true of structural guarantees that litigants often may undervalue them. Many criminal defendants, for example, would prefer a trial from which the press is excluded.

It is true, of course, that a litigant's prior agreement to a judge's expressed intention to disregard a structural limitation upon his power cannot have any legitimating effect -- i. e., cannot render that disregard lawful. Even if both litigants not only agree to, but themselves propose, such a course, the judge must tell them no. But the question before us here involves the effect of waiver not ex ante but ex post -- its effect not upon right but upon remedy: Must a judgment already rendered be set aside because of an alleged structural error to which the losing party did not properly object? There is no reason in principle why that should always be so. It will sometimes be so -- not, however, because the error was structural, but because, whether structural or not, it deprived the federal court of its requisite subject-matter jurisdiction. Such an error may be raised by a party, and indeed must be noticed sua sponte by a court, at all points in the litigation, see, e. g., American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Finn, 341 U.S. 6, 17-18, 95 L. Ed. 702, 71 S. Ct. 534 (1951); Mansfield, C. &

REV_00256590

L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 382, 28 L. Ed. 462, 4 S. Ct. 510 (1884); Capron v. Van Noorden, 6 U.S. 126, 2 Cranch 126, 127, 2 L. Ed. 229 (1804). Since such a jurisdictional defect deprives not only the initial court but also the appellate court of its power over the case or controversy, to permit the appellate court to ignore it because of waiver would be to give the waiver legitimating, as opposed to merely remedial, effect, i. e., the effect of approving, ex [*897] ante, unlawful action by the appellate court itself. That this, rather than any principle of perpetual remediability of structural defects, is the basis for the rule of "nonwaivability" of lack of subject-matter jurisdiction is demonstrated by the fact that a final judgment cannot be attacked collaterally -- i. e., before a court that does have jurisdiction -- on the ground that a subject-matter jurisdictional limitation (structural or not) was ignored. See, e. g., Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702, n. 9, 72 L. Ed. 2d 492, 102 S. Ct. 2099 (1982).

As to precedent: Petitioners place primary reliance on some broad language in Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 92 L. Ed. 2d 675, 106 S. Ct. 3245 (1986). We said in that case that "when these Article III limitations are at issue" (referring not to all structural limitations of the Constitution, but only to those of Article III, §§ 1 and 2) "notions of consent and waiver cannot be dispositive." 478 U.S. at 851. But the claim before us in Schor involved a particular sort of structural defect (a tribunal's exceeding its subject-matter jurisdiction) which, as I have just described, had traditionally been held nonwaivable on appeal in the context of Article III tribunals. To extend the same treatment to similar defects in the [792] context of non-Article III tribunals is quite natural, whether or not it is analytically required. Cf., e. g., Clapp v. Commissioner, 875 F.2d 1396, 1399 (CA9 1989) ("While the Tax Court is an Article I court, . . . the few cases discussing the differences between the Tax Court and an Article III court indicate that questions of Tax Court jurisdiction are to be resolved in the same manner as for an Article III court"). It is clear from our opinion in Schor [2649] that we had the analogy to Article III subject-matter jurisdiction in mind. "To the extent that this structural principle is implicated in a given case," we said, "the parties cannot by consent cure the constitutional difficulty for the same reason that the parties by consent cannot confer on federal courts subject-matter jurisdiction beyond the limitations imposed by Article III, § 2." [*898] 478 U.S. at 850-851. n3 I would not extend that nonwaiver rule -- a traditional rule in its application to Article III courts, and understandably extended to other federal adjudicative tribunals -- to structural defects that do not call into question the jurisdiction of the forum. The subject-matter jurisdiction of the forum that issued the judgment, the Tax Court, is not in question in the present case.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n3 Ironically enough, the categorical "no-waiver" rule that petitioners propose would destroy the very parallelism between administrative and judicial tribunals that Schor sought to achieve. For we have held that, in the administrative context, the use of unauthorized personnel to conduct a hearing (a hearing examiner not properly appointed pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act) would not justify judicial reversal of the agency decision where no objection was lodged before the agency itself:

"We hold that the defect in the examiner's appointment was an irregularity which would invalidate a resulting order if the Commission had overruled an appropriate objection made during the hearings. But it is not one which deprives the Commission of power or jurisdiction, so that even in the absence of timely objection its order should be set aside as a nullity." United States v. L. A. Tucker Truck Lines, Inc., 344 U.S. 33, 38, 97 L. Ed. 54, 73 S. Ct. 67 (1952).

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Petitioners only other appeal to precedent is Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 8 L. Ed.

REV_00256591

2d 671, 82 S. Ct. 1459 (1962). That case did address a nonjurisdictional structural defect that had not been raised below. As the Court explains, however, that was a structural defect that went to the validity of the very proceeding under review, ante, at 879, as opposed to one that merely affected the validity of the claim -- for example, improper appointment of the Executive officer who issued the regulation central to the controversy. That was considered significant by the only opinion in the case (that of Justice Harlan, joined by Justices Brennan and Stewart) to address the waiver point. ("The alleged defect of authority here relates to basic constitutional protections designed in part for the benefit of litigants." Id., at 536 (emphasis added).) The formulation petitioners advance, of course, is much broader than that. ("An argument premised on the Constitution's structural separation of powers is not a matter of personal rights and [*899] therefore is not waivable." Brief for Petitioners 43-44 (emphasis added)). "There can be no hierarchy among separation of powers principles, in which some are fundamental and nonwaivable while the vindication of others may be relegated to the vagaries of individual litigation strategies." Id., at 45.) Even more important, Justice Harlan's [793] plurality opinion in Glidden does not stand for the proposition that forfeiture can never be imposed, but rather the more limited proposition, which the Court reiterates today, that forfeiture need not always be imposed.

Several recent opinions flatly contradict petitioners' blanket assertion that structural claims cannot be waived. Surely under our jurisprudence the so-called negative Commerce Clause is structural. See Dennis v. Higgins, 498 U.S. 439, 447, 112 L. Ed. 2d 969, 111 S. Ct. 865 (1991). And surely the supposed guarantee against waivability must apply in state courts as well as in federal courts, since according to petitioners it emanates from the structural rights themselves. Yet only last Term, in Jimmy Swaggart Ministries v. Board of Equalization of California, 493 U.S. 378, 397, 107 L. Ed. 2d 796, 110 S. Ct. 688 (1990), we declined to consider a negative Commerce Clause challenge to a state tax because state courts had found the issue procedurally barred as a result of petitioner's failure to raise it in his administrative proceeding for a tax refund. And in G. D. Searle & Co. v. Cohn, 455 U.S. 404, 414, 71 L. Ed. 2d 250, [2650] 102 S. Ct. 1137 (1982), we declined to reach a negative Commerce Clause claim in litigation arising in the federal courts; we remanded the case for consideration of that issue by the Court of Appeals, "if it was properly raised below." (Emphasis added.) The Federal Courts of Appeals (even after Schor) have routinely applied the ordinary rules of forfeiture to structural claims not raised below. See, e. g., United States v. Doremus, 888 F.2d 630, 633, n. 3 (CA9 1989) (separation of powers claims), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1046, 112 L. Ed. 2d 772, 111 S. Ct. 751, 111 S. Ct. 752 (1991); Opdyke Investment Co. v. Detroit, 883 F.2d 1265, 1276 (CA6 1989) (same); Interface Group, Inc. v. [*900] Massachusetts Port Authority, 816 F.2d 9, 16 (CA1 1987) (Breyer, J.) (Supremacy and Commerce Clause claims).

Finally, as to policy: The need for the traditional forfeiture rule -- in cases involving structural claims as in all others -- is obvious. Without that incentive to raise legal objections as soon as they are available, the time of lower court judges and of juries would frequently be expended uselessly, and appellate consideration of difficult questions would be less informed and less complete. Besides inviting these evils, the categorical rule petitioners advance would require the development of a whole new body of jurisprudence concerning which constitutional provisions are "structural" -- a question whose answer is by no means clear. Cf. Sunstein, Government Control of Information, 74 Calif. L. Rev. 889, 915 (1986) (arguing that the First Amendment is structural). Moreover, since that rigid rule would cut so much against the grain of reason and practice, it would have the side effect of distorting substantive law. The maxim volenti non fit injuria has strong appeal in human affairs, and, by requiring it to be absolutely and systematically disregarded in cases involving structural protections of the Constitution, we would incline ourselves towards finding that no such structural protection exists.

Thus, the structural nature of the claim here is not sufficient reason to ignore its forfeiture -- and the Court (though it discusses the virtues of structure at some length) does not

REV_00256592

HN8 Special trial judges may hear and decide declaratory judgment proceedings and the limited-amount cases. A special trial judge, however, cannot render the final decision of the tax court in a case assigned under 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b)(4).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN9 An appellate court has a deep reluctance to interpret a statutory provision so as to render superfluous other provisions in the same enactment.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN10 The scope of 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b)(4) must be greater than that of 26 U.S.C.S. §§ 7443A(b)(1), (2), and (3).

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN11 26 U.S.C.S. § 7443A(b)(4) permits the chief judge to assign any tax court proceeding, regardless of complexity or amount, to a special trial judge for hearing and the preparation of proposed findings and written opinion.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN12 See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN13 The United States Constitution limits congressional discretion to vest power to appoint inferior officers to three sources: the President alone, the heads of departments, and the courts of law.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN14 The Appointments Clause of U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 prevents Congress from dispensing power too freely; it limits the universe of eligible recipients of the power to appoint.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN15 A special trial judge is an inferior officer whose appointment must conform to the appointments clause of U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

HN16 An Article I court, which exercises judicial power, can be a court of law within the meaning of the appointments clause of U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

HN17 The tax court remains independent of the executive and legislative branches. Its decisions are not subject to review by either the Congress or the President. Nor has Congress made tax court decisions subject to review in the federal district courts. Rather, like the judgments of the district courts, the decisions of the tax court are appealable only to the regional United States courts of appeals, with ultimate review in the United States Supreme Court. The courts of appeals, moreover, review those decisions in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the district courts in civil actions tried without a jury. 26 U.S.C.S. § 7482(a). This standard of review contrasts with the standard applied to agency rulemaking by the courts of appeals under § 10(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C.S. § 706(2)(A).

Constitutional Law > The Presidency > Appointment of Officials

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedure > Tax Court (IRC secs. 7441-7491)

REV_00256566

[*794] pretend otherwise. There must be some additional reason, then, why the Court "exercise[s] our discretion," ante, at 879, to disregard the forfeiture. To disregard it without sufficient reason is the exercise not of discretion but of whimsy. Yet beyond its discussion of structure, the only reason the Court gives is no reason at all: "we are faced with a constitutional challenge that is neither frivolous nor disingenuous," ibid. That describes the situation with regard to the vast majority of forfeited claims raised on appeal. As we make clear in another case decided this very day, waiver generally [*901] extends not merely to "frivolous" and "disingenuous" challenges, but even to "the most basic rights of criminal defendants." Peretz, post, at 936. Here, petitioners expressly consented to the Special Trial Judge. Under 26 U. S. C. § 7443A, the Chief Judge of that court has broad discretion to assign cases to special trial judges. Any party who objects to such an assignment, if so inclined, can easily raise the constitutional issue pressed today. Under these circumstances, I see no reason why this should be included among those "rare cases in which we should exercise our discretion," ante, at 879, to hear a forfeited claim.

II

Having struggled to reach petitioners' Appointments Clause objection, the Court finds it invalid. I agree with that conclusion, but the reason the Court assigns is in my view both wrong and full of danger for the future of our system of separate and coequal powers.

The Appointments Clause provides:

> "The Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." Art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

[2651] I agree with the Court that a special trial judge is an "inferior Officer" within the meaning of this Clause, with the result that, absent Presidential appointment, he must be appointed by a court of law or the head of a department. I do not agree, however, with the Court's conclusion that the Tax Court is a "Court of Law" within the meaning of this provision. I would find the appointment valid because the Tax Court is a "Department" and the Chief Judge is its head.

A

A careful reading of the Constitution and attention to the apparent purpose of the Appointments Clause make it clear that the Tax Court cannot be one of those "Courts of Law" [*902] referred to there. The Clause does not refer generally to "Bodies exercising judicial Functions," or even to "Courts" generally, or even to "Courts of Law" generally. It refers to "the Courts of Law." Certainly this does not mean any "Court of Law" (the Supreme Court of Rhode Island would not do). The definite article "the" obviously narrows the class of eligible "Courts of Law" to those courts of law envisioned by the Constitution. Those are Article III courts, and the Tax Court is not one of them.

The Court rejects this conclusion because the Appointments Clause does not (in the style of the Uniform [795] Commercial Code) contain an explicit cross-reference to Article III. Ante, at 888-889. This is no doubt true, but irrelevant. It is equally true that Article I, § 8, cl. 9, which provides that Congress may "constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court," does not explicitly say "Tribunals under Article III, below." Yet, this power "plainly relates to the 'inferior Courts' provided for in Article III, § 1; it has never been relied on for establishment of any other tribunals." Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. at 543 (opinion of Harlan, J.); see also 3 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States §

REV_00256593

1573, p. 437 (1833). Today's Court evidently does not appreciate, as Chief Justice Marshall did, that the Constitution does not "partake of the prolixity of a legal code," McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 4 Wheat. 316, 407, 4 L. Ed. 579 (1819). It does not, like our opinions, bristle with "supras," "infras," and footnotes. Instead of insisting upon such legalisms, we should, I submit, follow the course mapped out in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 124, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659, 96 S. Ct. 612 (1976) (per curiam), and examine the Appointments Clause of the Constitution in light of the "cognate provisions" of which it is a central feature: Article I, Article II, and Article III. The only "Courts of Law" referred to there are those authorized by Article III, § 1, whose judges serve during good behavior with undiminishable salary. Art. III, § 1. See Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, supra, at 543 (opinion of Harlan, J.); United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 307, 31 L. Ed. 463, 8 S. Ct. 505 [*903] (1888) ("courts of justice") (dictum). The Framers contemplated no other national judicial tribunals. "According to the plan of the convention, all judges who may be appointed by the United States are to hold their offices during good behavior . . . ." The Federalist No. 78, p. 465 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961) (A. Hamilton) (second emphasis in original).

We recognized this in Buckley, supra, and it was indeed an essential part of our reasoning. Responding to the argument that a select group of Congressmen was a "Department," we said:

> "The phrase 'Heads of Departments,' used as it is in conjunction with the phrase 'Courts of Law,' suggests that the Departments referred to are themselves in the Executive Branch or at least have some connection with that branch. While the Clause expressly authorizes Congress to vest the appointment of certain officers in the 'Courts of Law,' the absence of similar language to include Congress must mean that neither Congress nor its officers were included within the language 'Heads of Departments' in this part of cl. 2.
>
> [2652] "Thus, with respect to four of the six voting members of the Commission, neither the President, the head of any department, nor the Judiciary has any voice in their selection." Id., at 127 (emphasis added).

The whole point of this passage is that "the Heads of Departments" must reasonably be understood to refer exclusively to the Executive Branch (thereby excluding officers of Congress) because "the Courts of Law" obviously refers exclusively to the Judicial Branch. We were right in Buckley, and the Court is wrong today.

[*796] Even if the Framers had no particular purpose in making the Appointments Clause refer only to Article III courts, we would still of course be bound by that disposition. In fact, however, there is every reason to believe that the Appointments Clause's limitation to Article III tribunals was adopted [*904] with calculation and forethought, faithfully implementing a considered political theory for the appointment of officers.

The Framers' experience with postrevolutionary self-government had taught them that combining the power to create offices with the power to appoint officers was a recipe for legislative corruption. n4 The foremost danger was that legislators would create offices with the expectancy of occupying them themselves. This was guarded against by the Incompatibility and Ineligibility Clauses, Article I, § 6, cl. 2. See Buckley, supra, at 124. But real, if less obvious, dangers remained. Even if legislators could not appoint themselves, they would be inclined to appoint their friends and supporters. This proclivity would be unchecked because of the lack of accountability in a multimember body -- as [*905] James Wilson pointed out in his criticism of a multimember executive:

REV_00256594

> "Are impartiality and fine discernment likely to predominate in a numerous [appointing] body? In proportion to their own number, will be the number of their friends, favorites and dependents. An office is to be filled. A person nearly connected, by some of the foregoing ties, with one of those who is to vote in filling it, is named as a candidate. . . . Every member, who gives, on his account, a vote for his friend, will expect the return of a similar favor on the first convenient opportunity. In this manner, a reciprocal intercourse of partiality, of interestedness, of favoritism, perhaps of venality, is established; and in no particular instance, is there a practicability of tracing the poison to its source. Ignorant, vicious, and prostituted characters are introduced into office; and some of those, who voted, and procured others to vote for them, are the first and loudest in expressing [797] their astonishment, that the door of admission was ever opened to men of their infamous description. The suffering people are thus [2653] wounded and buffeted, like Homer's Ajax, in the dark; and have not even the melancholy satisfaction of knowing by whom the blows are given." 1 Works of James Wilson 359-360 (J. Andrews ed. 1896).

See also Essex Result, in Memoir of Theophilus Parsons 381-382 (1859); The Federalist No. 76, pp. 455-457 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961) (A. Hamilton). And not only would unaccountable legislatures introduce their friends into necessary offices, they would create unnecessary offices into which to introduce their friends. As James Madison observed:

> "The power of the Legislature to appoint any other than their own officers departs too far from the Theory which requires a separation of the great Departments of Government. One of the best securities against the creation [*906] of unnecessary offices or tyrannical powers is an exclusion of the authors from all share in filling the one, or influence in the execution of the other." Madison's Observations on Jefferson's Draft of a Constitution for Virginia, reprinted in 6 Papers of Thomas Jefferson 308, 311 (J. Boyd ed. 1952).

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n4 The Court apparently thinks that the Appointments Clause was designed to check executive despotism. Ante, at 883-884. This is not what we said in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 129, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659, 96 S. Ct. 612 (1976), and it is quite simply contrary to historical fact. The quotations on which the Court relies describe abuses by the unelected royal governors and the Crown, who possessed the power to create and fill offices. The drafters of several early State Constitutions reacted to these abuses by lodging the appointment power in the legislature. See, e. g., Va. Const. (1776) (legislature appoints judges); cf. Articles of Confederation, Art. IX (Congress appoints courts and officers of land forces). Americans soon learned, however, that "in a representative republic where the executive magistracy is carefully limited . . . it is against the enterprising ambition of the [legislative] department that the people ought to indulge all their jealousy and exhaust all their precautions." The Federalist No. 48, p. 309 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961) (J. Madison). Soon after the revolution, "the appointing authority which in most constitutions had been granted to the assemblies had become the principal source of division and faction in the states." G. Wood, The Creation of The American Republic, 1776-1787, p. 407 (1969). By 1780, States were reacting to these abuses by reposing appointment authority in the executive. See Mass. Const., Part The Second, Chapter II, § 1, Art. IX (1780); N. H. Const. (1784) (officers appointed by president and a council). On legislative despotism, see generally Wood, supra, at 403-409. The Framers followed the lead of these later Constitutions. The Appointments Clause is, intentionally and self-evidently, a limitation on Congress.

REV_00256595

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

For these good and sufficient reasons, then, the federal appointment power was removed from Congress. The Framers knew, however, that it was not enough simply to define in writing who would exercise this power or that. "After discriminating . . . in theory, the several classes of power, as they may in their nature be legislative, executive, or judiciary, the next and most difficult task [was] to provide some practical security for each, against the invasion of the others." The Federalist No. 48, p. 308 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961) (J. Madison). Invasion by the Legislature, of course, was the principal threat, since the "legislative authority . . . possesses so many means of operating on the motives of the other departments." Id., No. 49, p. 314 (J. Madison). It can "mask, under complicated and indirect measures, the encroachments which it makes on the co-ordinate departments," id., No. 48, p. 310 (J. Madison), and thus control the nominal actions (e. g., appointments) of the other branches. Cf. T. Jefferson, Notes on the State of Virginia 120 (W. Peden ed. 1955).

Thus, it was not enough simply to repose the power to execute the laws (or to appoint) in the President; it was also necessary to provide him with the means to resist legislative encroachment upon that power. The means selected were various, including a separate political constituency, to which he alone was responsible, and the power to veto encroaching laws, see Art. I, § 7, or even to disregard them when they are unconstitutional. See Easterbrook, Presidential Review, 40 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 905, 920-924 (1990). One of the most obvious and necessary, however, was a permanent salary. Art. II, § 1. Without this, "the separation of the [*907] executive from the legislative department would be merely nominal and nugatory. The legislature, with a discretionary power over the salary and emoluments of the Chief Magistrate, could render him as obsequious to their will as they might think proper to make him." The Federalist No. 73, p. 441 (C. Rossiter [798] ed. 1961) (A. Hamilton). See also id., No. 51, p. 321 (J. Madison); Mass. Const., Part The Second, Chapter II, § 1, Art. XIII (1780).

A power of appointment lodged in a President surrounded by such structural fortifications could be expected to be exercised independently, and not pursuant to the manipulations of Congress. The same is true, to almost the same degree, of the appointment power lodged in the heads of departments. Like the President, these individuals possess a reputational stake in the quality of the individuals they appoint; and though they are not themselves able to resist congressional encroachment, they are directly answerable to the President, who is responsible to his constituency for their appointments and has the motive and means to assure faithful actions by his direct lieutenants.

[2654] Like the President, the Judicial Branch was separated from Congress not merely by a paper assignment of functions, but by endowment with the means to resist encroachment -- foremost among which, of course, are life tenure (during "good behavior") and permanent salary. These structural accoutrements not only assure the fearless adjudication of cases and controversies, see The Federalist Nos. 78, 79 (A. Hamilton); Northern Pipeline Constr. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 57-60, 73 L. Ed. 2d 598, 102 S. Ct. 2858 (1982) (opinion of Brennan, J.); they also render the Judiciary a potential repository of appointment power free of congressional (as well as Presidential) influence. In the same way that depositing appointment power in a fortified President and his lieutenants ensures an actual exclusion of the legislature from appointment, so too does reposing such power in an Article III court. The Court's holding, that Congress may deposit [*908] such power in "legislative courts," without regard to whether their personnel are either Article III judges or "Heads of Departments," utterly destroys this carefully constructed scheme. And the Court produces this result, I remind the reader, not because of, but in spite of, the apparent meaning of the phrase "the Courts of Law."

B

REV_00256596

Having concluded, against all odds, that "the Courts of Law" referred to in Article II, § 2, are not the courts of law established by Article III, the Court is confronted with the difficult problem of determining what courts of law they are. It acknowledges that they must be courts which exercise "the judicial power of the United States" and concludes that the Tax Court is such a court -- even though it is not an Article III court. This is quite a feat, considering that Article III begins "The judicial Power of the United States" -- not "Some of the judicial Power of the United States," or even "Most of the judicial Power of the United States" -- "shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Despite this unequivocal text, the Court sets forth the startling proposition that "the judicial power of the United States is not limited to the judicial power defined under Article III." Ante, at 889. It turns out, however -- to our relief, I suppose it must be said -- that this is really only a pun. "The judicial power," as the Court uses it, bears no resemblance to the constitutional [799] term of art we are all familiar with, but means only "the power to adjudicate in the manner of courts." So used, as I shall proceed to explain, the phrase covers an infinite variety of individuals exercising executive rather than judicial power (in the constitutional sense), and has nothing to do with the separation of powers or with any other characteristic that might cause one to believe that is what was meant by "the Courts of Law." As far as I can tell, the only thing to be said for this approach is that it makes the Tax [*909] Court a "Court of Law" -- which is perhaps the object of the exercise.

I agree with the unremarkable proposition that "Congress [has] wide discretion to assign the task of adjudication in cases arising under federal law to legislative tribunals." Ante, at 889. Congress may also assign that task to subdivisions of traditional executive departments, as it did in 1924 when it created the Tax Court's predecessor, the Tax Board of Appeals -- or to take a more venerable example, as it did in 1791 when it created within the Treasury Department the Comptroller of the United States, who "decided on appeal, without further review by the Secretary, all claims concerning the settlement of accounts." Casper, An Essay in Separation of Powers: Some Early Versions and Practices, 30 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 211, 238 (1989); see 1 Stat. 66. Such tribunals, like any other administrative board, exercise the executive power, not the judicial power of the United States. They are, in the words of the great Chief Justice, "incapable of receiving [2655] [the judicial power]" -- unless their members serve for life during good behavior and receive permanent salary. American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 546 (1828) (Marshall, C. J.).

It is no doubt true that all such bodies "adjudicate," i. e., they determine facts, apply a rule of law to those facts, and thus arrive at a decision. But there is nothing "inherently judicial" about "adjudication." To be a federal officer and to adjudicate are necessary but not sufficient conditions for the exercise of federal judicial power, as we recognized almost a century and a half ago.

> "That the auditing of the accounts of a receiver of public moneys may be, in an enlarged sense, a judicial act, must be admitted. So are all those administrative duties the performance of which involves an inquiry into the existence of facts and the application to them of rules of law. In this sense the act of the President in calling out the militia under the act of 1795, [Martin v. Mott,] [*910] 25 U.S. 19, 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. Ed. 537 [(1827)], or of a commissioner who makes a certificate for the extradition of a criminal, under a treaty, is judicial. But it is not sufficient to bring such matters under the judicial power, that they involve the exercise of judgment upon law and fact." Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. 272, 18 How. 272, 280, 15 L. Ed. 372 (1856).

Accord, Bator, The Constitution as Architecture: Legislative and Administrative Courts Under

REV_00256597

Article III, 65 Ind. L. J. 233, 264-265 (1990). The first Patent Board, which consisted of Thomas Jefferson, Henry Knox, and Edmund Randolph in their capacities as Secretary of State, Secretary of War, and Attorney General, respectively, 1 Stat. [800] 109, 110 (1790), adjudicated the patentability of inventions, sometimes hearing argument by petitioners. See 18 J. Pat. Off. Soc. 68-69 (July 1936). They were exercising the executive power. See Easterbrook, "Success" and the Judicial Power, 65 Ind. L. J. 277, 280 (1990). Today, the Federal Government has a corps of administrative law judges numbering more than 1,000, whose principal statutory function is the conduct of adjudication under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), see 5 U. S. C. §§ 554, 3105. They are all executive officers. "Adjudication," in other words, is no more an "inherently" judicial function than the promulgation of rules governing primary conduct is an "inherently" legislative one. See Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911); APA, 5 U. S. C. § 553 ("Rule making").

It is true that Congress may commit the sorts of matters administrative law judges and other executive adjudicators now handle to Article III courts -- just as some of the matters now in Article III courts could instead be committed to executive adjudicators. "There are matters, involving public rights, which may be presented in such form that the judicial power is capable of acting on them, and which are susceptible of judicial determination, but which Congress may or may not bring within the cognizance of the courts of the United [*911] States, as it may deem proper." Murray's Lessee, supra, at 284. See also Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 451, 73 L. Ed. 789, 49 S. Ct. 411 (1929). Congress could, for instance, allow direct review by the courts of appeals of denials of Social Security benefits. It could instead establish the Social Security Court -- composed of judges serving 5-year terms -- within the Social Security Administration. Both tribunals would perform identical functions, but only the former would exercise the judicial power.

In short, given the performance of adjudicatory functions by a federal officer, it is the identity of the officer -- not something intrinsic about the mode of decisionmaking or type of decision -- that tells us whether the judicial power is being exercised. "Our cases demonstrate [that] a particular function, like a chameleon, will often take on the aspect of the office to which it is assigned." Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 749, 92 L. Ed. 2d 583, 106 S. Ct. 3181 [2656] (1986) (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment). Cf. INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 953, n. 16, 77 L. Ed. 2d 317, 103 S. Ct. 2764 (1983). Where adjudicative decisionmakers do not possess life tenure and a permanent salary, they are "incapable of exercising any portion of the judicial power." Ex parte Randolph, 20 F. Cas. 242, 254 (No. 11,558) (CC Va. 1833) (Marshall, C. J.).

The Tax Court is indistinguishable from my hypothetical Social Security Court. It reviews determinations by Executive Branch officials (the Internal Revenue Service) that this much or that much tax is owed -- a classic executive function. For 18 years its predecessor, the Board of Tax Appeals, did the very same thing, see H. Dubroff, The United States Tax Court 47-175 (1979), and no one suggested that body exercised "the judicial power." We held just the opposite:

> "The Board of Tax Appeals is not a court. It is an executive or administrative board, upon the decision [801] of which the parties are given an opportunity to base a petition for review to the courts after the administrative inquiry of the Board has been had and decided." Old [*912] Colony Trust Co. v. Commissioner, 279 U.S. 716, 725, 73 L. Ed. 918, 49 S. Ct. 499 (1929) (Taft, C. J.).

Though renamed "the Tax Court of the United States" in 1942, it remained "an independent agency in the Executive Branch," 26 U. S. C. § 1100 (1952 ed.), and continued to perform the same function. As an executive agency, it possessed many of the accoutrements the Court considers "quintessentially judicial," ante, at 891. It administered oaths, for example, and subpoenaed and examined witnesses, § 1114; its findings were reviewed "in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the district courts in civil actions tried without a jury," § 1141(a). This Court continued to treat it as an administrative agency, akin to the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) or the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). See Dobson v. Commissioner, 320 U.S. 489, 495-501, 88 L. Ed. 248, 64 S. Ct. 239 (1943).

REV_00256598

When the Tax Court was statutorily denominated an "Article I Court" in 1969, its judges did not magically acquire the judicial power. They still lack life tenure; their salaries may still be diminished; they are still removable by the President for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office." 26 U. S. C. § 7443(f). (In Bowsher v. Synar, supra, at 729, we held that these latter terms are "very broad" and "could sustain removal . . . for any number of actual or perceived transgressions.") How anyone with these characteristics can exercise judicial power "independent . . . [of] the Executive Branch" is a complete mystery. It seems to me entirely obvious that the Tax Court, like the Internal Revenue Service, the FCC, and the NLRB, exercises executive power. Amar, Marbury, Section 13, and the Original Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, 56 U. Chi. L. Rev. 443, 451, n. 43 (1989). See also Northern Pipeline, 458 U.S. at 113 (WHITE, J., dissenting) (equating administrative agencies and Article I courts); Samuels, Kramer & Co. v. Commissioner, 930 F.2d 975, 992-993 (CA2 1991) (collecting academic authorities for same proposition).

[*913] In seeking to establish that "judicial power" in some constitutionally significant sense -- in a sense different from the adjudicative exercise of executive power -- can be exercised by someone other than an Article III judge, the Court relies heavily upon the existence of territorial courts. Ante, at 889-891. Those courts have nothing to do with the issue before us. n5 I [802] agree that they [2657] do not exercise the national executive power -- but neither do they exercise any national judicial power. They are neither Article III courts nor Article I courts, but Article IV courts -- just as territorial governors are not Article I executives but Article IV executives.

> "These Courts, then, are not constitutional Courts, in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the general government, can be deposited. They are incapable of receiving it. They are legislative Courts, created in virtue of the general right of sovereignty which exists in the government, or in virtue of that clause which enables Congress to make all needful rules and regulations, respecting the territory belonging to the United States. . . . In legislating for them, Congress exercises the combined powers of the general, and of a state government." American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Peters at 546 (Marshall, C. J.) (emphasis added).

[*914] Or as the Court later described it:

> "[Territories] are not organized under the Constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government, as the organic law; but are the creations, exclusively, of the legislative department, and subject to its supervision and control." Benner v. Porter, 50 U.S. 235, 9 How. 235, 242, 13 L. Ed. 119 (1850).

Thus, Congress may endow territorial governments with a plural executive; it may allow the executive to legislate; it may dispense with the legislature or judiciary altogether. It should be obvious that the powers exercised by territorial courts tell us nothing about the nature of an entity, like the Tax Court, which administers the general laws of the Nation. See Northern Pipeline, supra, at 75-76 (opinion of Brennan, J.).

REV_00256599

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - n5 Sadly, the Court also relies on dicta in Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 77 L. Ed. 1372, 53 S. Ct. 751 (1933), an opinion whose understanding of the principles of separation of powers ought not inspire confidence, much less prompt emulation. It includes, for example, the notion that all disputes over which Article III provides jurisdiction can only be committed to Article III courts, id., at 580-581; see also D. Currie, Federal Courts 145-146 (1982) -- which would make the Tax Court unconstitutional. Williams has been declared an "intellectual disaster" by commentators. P. Bator, D. Meltzer, P. Miskin, & D. Shapiro, Hart & Wechsler's The Federal Courts and The Federal System 468 (3d ed. 1988); Bator, The Constitution as Architecture: Legislative And Administrative Courts Under Article III, 65 Ind. L. J. 233, 242-243, n. 30 (1990) ("I could devote a whole lecture to the ways in which [the reasoning of Williams] is erroneous").

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

The Court claims that there is a "longstanding practice" of permitting Article I courts to appoint inferior officers. Ante, at 890. I am unaware of such a practice. Perhaps the Court means to refer not to Article I courts but to the territorial courts just discussed, in which case the practice would be irrelevant. As I shall discuss below, an Article I court (such as the Tax Court) that is not within any other department would be able to have its inferior officers appointed by its chief judge -- not under the "Courts of Law" provision of Article II, § 2, but under the "Heads of Departments" provision; perhaps it is that sort of practice the Court has in mind. It is certain, in any case, that no decision of ours has ever approved the appointment of an inferior officer by an Article I court. Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. 230 (1839), which the Court cites, involved appointment by an Article III tribunal.

III

Since the Tax Court is not a court of law, unless the Chief Judge is the head of a department, the appointment [803] of the Special Trial Judge was void. Unlike the Court, I think he is.

[*915] I have already explained that the Tax Court, like its predecessors, exercises the executive power of the United States. This does not, of course, suffice to make it a "Department" for purposes of the Appointments Clause. If, for instance, the Tax Court were a subdivision of the Department of the Treasury -- as the Board of Tax Appeals used to be -- it would not qualify. In fact, however, the Tax Court is a free-standing, self-contained entity in the Executive Branch, whose Chief Judge is removable by [2658] the President (and, save impeachment, no one else). Nevertheless, the Court holds that the Chief Judge is not the head of a department.

It is not at all clear what the Court's reason for this conclusion is. I had originally thought that the Court was adopting petitioners' theory -- wrong, but at least coherent -- that "Heads of Departments" means Cabinet officers. This is suggested by the Court's reliance upon the dictum in Burnap v. United States, 252 U.S. 512, 515, 64 L. Ed. 692, 40 S. Ct. 374 (1920), to the effect that the head of a department must be "'the Secretary in charge of a great division of the executive branch of the Government, like the State, Treasury, and War, who is a member of the Cabinet,'" ante, at 886 (emphasis added); by the Court's observation that "the Cabinet-level departments are limited in number and easily identified," ibid.; and by its reliance upon the fact that in the Twenty-fifth Amendment "the term 'department' refers to Cabinet-level entities," ante, at 887. Elsewhere, however, the Court seemingly disclaims

REV_00256600

Cabinet status as the criterion, see ante, at 887, n. 4, and says that the term "Department" means "executive divisions like the Cabinet-level departments," ante, at 886 (emphasis added). Unfortunately, it never specifies what characteristic it is that causes an agency to be "like a Cabinet-level department," or even provides any intelligible clues as to what it might have in mind. It quotes a congressional Committee Report that seemingly equates Cabinet status with inclusion within the statutory defintion of "'department'" in 5 U. S. C. § 101, ante, at 887 (quoting H. R. Rep. [*916] No. 203, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1965)), but this hint is canceled by a footnote making it clear that "Cabinet-like" character, whatever it is, is not "strictly limited" by that provision, ante, at 887, n. 4. Its approving quotation of Burnap's reference to "a great division of the executive branch" might invite the guess that numerosity is the key -- but the Department of Education has fewer than 5,000 employees, and the FCC, which the Court also appears willing to consider such a "'great division,'" ante, at 886, fewer than 1,800. See Employment and Trends as of March 1991, Office of Personnel Management, Table 2. The Court reserves the right to consider as "Cabinet-like" and hence as "Departments" those agencies which, above all others, are at the farthest remove from Cabinet status, and whose heads are specifically designed not to have the quality that the Court earlier thinks important, of being "subject to the exercise of political oversight and [804] sharing the President's accountability to the people," ante, at 886 -- namely, independent regulatory agencies such as the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission, ante, at 887, n. 4. Indeed, lest any conceivable improbability be excluded, the Court even reserves the right to consider as a "Department" an entity that is not headed by an officer of the United States -- the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, whose president is appointed in none of the manners constitutionally permitted for federal officers, but rather by a Board of Directors, two-thirds of whom are elected by regional banks, see 12 U. S. C. §§ 302, 304, and 341. It is as impossible to respond to this random argumentation as it is to derive a comprehensible theory of the appointments power from it. I shall address, therefore, what was petitioners' point, what I originally took to be the point of the Court's opinion, and what is the only trace of a flesh-and-blood point that subsists: the proposition that "Department" means "Cabinet-level agency."

There is no basis in text or precedent for this position. The term "Cabinet" does not appear in the Constitution, the [*917] Founders having rejected proposals to create a Cabinet-like entity. See H. Learned, The President's Cabinet 74-94 (1912); E. Corwin, The President 97, 238-240 (5th rev. ed. 1984). The existence of a Cabinet, its membership, and its prerogatives (except to the extent the Twenty-fifth Amendment speaks to them), [2659] are entirely matters of Presidential discretion. Nor does any of our cases hold that "the Heads of Departments" are Cabinet members. In United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482 (1879), we merely held that the Commissioner of Pensions, an official within the Interior Department, was not the head of a department. And, in Burnap, supra, we held that the Bureau of Public Buildings and Grounds, a bureau within the War Department, was not a department.

The Court's reliance on the Twenty-fifth Amendment is misplaced. I accept that the phrase "the principal officers of the executive departments" is limited to members of the Cabinet. It is the structural composition of the phrase, however, and not the single word "departments" which gives it that narrow meaning -- "the principal officers" of the "executive departments" in gross, rather than (as in the Opinions Clause) "the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments," or (in the Appointments Clause) simply "the Heads" (not "principal Heads") "of Departments."

The only history on the point also militates against the Court's conclusion. The 1792 Congress passed an "Act to establish the Post-Office and Post Roads within the United States," creating a Postmaster General and empowering him to appoint "an assistant, and deputy postmasters, at all places where such may be found necessary." § 3, 1 Stat. 234. President Washington did not bring the Postmaster into his Cabinet. See Learned, supra, at 233-249. It seems likely that the Assistant Postmaster General and Deputy Postmasters were inferior officers -- which means either that "the Heads of Departments" include principal officers other than the Cabinet, or that the Second Congress and President [*918] Washington did not understand the [805] Appointments Clause. In any case, it is silly to think that the Second Congress (or any later Congress) was supposed to guess whether the President would bring the new agency into his Cabinet in order to determine how the appointment of its inferior officers could be made.

REV_00256601

Modern practice as well as original practice refutes the distinction between Cabinet and non-Cabinet agencies. Congress has empowered non-Cabinet agencies to appoint inferior officers for quite some time. See, e. g., 47 U. S. C. § 155(f) (FCC -- managing director); 15 U. S. C. § 78d(b) (Securities and Exchange Commission -- "such officers . . . as may be necessary"); 15 U. S. C. § 42 (Federal Trade Commission -- secretary); 7 U. S. C. § 4a(c) (Commodity Futures Trading Commission -- general counsel). In fact, I know of very few inferior officers in the independent agencies who are appointed by the President, and of none who is appointed by the head of a Cabinet department. The Court's interpretation of "Heads of Departments" casts into doubt the validity of many appointments and a number of explicit statutory authorizations to appoint.

A number of factors support the proposition that "Heads of Departments" includes the heads of all agencies immediately below the President in the organizational structure of the Executive Branch. It is quite likely that the "Departments" referred to in the Opinions Clause ("The President . . . may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments," Art. II, § 2) are the same as the "Departments" in the Appointments Clause. See Germaine, supra, at 511. In the former context, it seems to me, the word must reasonably be thought to include all independent establishments. The purpose of the Opinions Clause, presumably, was to assure the President's ability to get a written opinion on all important matters. But if the "Departments" it referred to were only Cabinet departments, [*919] it would not assure the current President the ability to receive a written opinion concerning the operations of the Central Intelligence Agency, an agency that is not within any other department, and whose Director is not a member of the Cabinet.

[2660] This evident meaning -- that the term "Departments" means all independent executive establishments -- is also the only construction that makes sense of Article II, § 2's sharp distinction between principal officers and inferior officers. The latter, as we have seen, can by statute be made appointable by "the President alone, . . . the Courts of Law, or . . . the Heads of Departments." Officers that are not "inferior Officers," however, must be appointed (unless the Constitution itself specifies otherwise, as it does, for example, with respect to officers of Congress) by the President, "by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate." The obvious purpose of this scheme is to make sure that all the business of the Executive will be conducted under the supervision of officers appointed by the President with Senate approval; only officers "inferior," i. e., subordinate, to those can be appointed in some other fashion. If the Appointments Clause is read as I read it, all inferior officers can be made appointable by their ultimate (sub-Presidential) superiors; as petitioners [806] would read it, only those inferior officers whose ultimate superiors happen to be Cabinet members can be. All the other inferior officers, if they are to be appointed by an Executive official at all, must be appointed by the President himself or (assuming cross-department appointments are permissible) by a Cabinet officer who has no authority over the appointees. This seems to me a most implausible disposition, particularly since the makeup of the Cabinet is not specified in the Constitution, or indeed the concept even mentioned. It makes no sense to create a system in which the inferior officers of the Environmental Protection Agency, [*920] for example -- which may include, inter alios, bureau chiefs, the general counsel, and administrative law judges -- must be appointed by the President, the courts of law, or the "Secretary of Something Else."

In short, there is no reason, in text, judicial decision, history, or policy, to limit the phrase "the Heads of Departments" in the Appointments Clause to those officials who are members

REV_00256602

HN18 The tax court's exclusively judicial role distinguishes it from other non-Article III tribunals that perform multiple functions and provides the limit on the diffusion of appointment power that the United States Constitution demands.

◆ Hide Lawyers' Edition Display

DECISION: Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2) held not violated by 26 USCS 7443A, which authorizes chief judge of United States Tax Court to appoint special trial judges.

SUMMARY: Under 26 USCS 7443A(b), the chief judge of the United States Tax Court--which court was established by Congress under Article I of the Federal Constitution--is authorized to appoint and assign special trial judges (1) to hear and decide declaratory judgment proceedings and cases involving $ 10,000 or less (26 USCS 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3)); and (2) to hear and prepare proposed findings and a written opinion in "any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate" (26 USCS 7443A(b)(4)). In cases assigned under 7443A(b)(4), the actual decision is rendered by a regular judge of the Tax Court who has been appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. After the Commissioner of Internal Revenue determined income tax deficiencies against several taxpayers, who had deducted on their returns approximately $ 1.5 billion in losses allegedly realized in a tax shelter scheme, the taxpayers sought review in the Tax Court. When the Tax Court judge assigned to the taxpayers' cases became ill after trial began, the chief judge assigned a special trial judge to preside over the trial as an evidentiary referee, and the proceedings were videotaped to enable the Tax Court judge to review testimony at home. Subsequently, the Tax Court judge retired and assumed senior status, and the chief judge--with the taxpayers' consent--reassigned the cases to the same special trial judge for preparation of written findings and an opinion. The special trial judge concluded that the tax shelter scheme consisted of sham transactions and that the taxpayers owed additional taxes. The chief judge formally adopted the special trial judge's opinion as the decision of the Tax Court (89 TC 849). On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, affirming, ruled that (1) the assignment of the taxpayers' cases to the special trial judge was authorized by 7443A; and (2) the taxpayers' contention, raised for the first time on appeal, that 7443A violated the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--had been waived by the taxpayers' consent to the assignment of their cases (904 F2d 1011).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed. In an opinion by Blackmun, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court as to holding 1 below, and joined by Rehnquist, Ch. J., and White, Marshall, and Stevens, JJ., as to holdings 2 and 3 below, it was held that (1) in view of the language and legislative history of 7443A, 7443A(b)(4) permitted the chief judge to assign any Tax Court proceeding to a special trial judge, regardless of the proceeding's complexity or the monetary amount involved; (2) the Supreme Court would exercise its discretion to hear the taxpayers' appointments clause challenge to the propriety of 7443A, even though the taxpayers had consented to the chief judge's assignment of their cases to the special trial judge, since the alleged defect in the special trial judge's appointment went to the validity of the taxpayers' Tax Court proceedings; and (3) the appointments clause--and the constitutional principle of separation of powers embedded in the clause--were not violated by 7443A, notwithstanding that a special trial judge appointed pursuant to 7443A was an "inferior Officer" whose appointment must conform to the appointments clause, because the chief judge could be vested by Congress with the power to appoint such special trial judges, insofar as the Tax Court was a "Court of Law" under the appointments clause.

REV_00256567

of the President's Cabinet. I would give the term its ordinary meaning, something which Congress has apparently been doing for decades without complaint. As an American dictionary roughly contemporaneous with adoption of the Appointments Clause provided, and as remains the case, a department is "[a] separate allotment or part of business; a distinct province, in which a class of duties are allotted to a particular person . . . ." 1 N. Webster, American Dictionary 58 (1828). I readily acknowledge that applying this word to an entity such as the Tax Court would have seemed strange to the Founders, as it continues to seem strange to modern ears. But that is only because the Founders did not envision that an independent establishment of such small size and specialized function would be created. They chose the word "Department," however, not to connote size or function (much less Cabinet status), but separate organization -- a connotation that still endures even in colloquial usage today ("that is not my department"). The Constitution is clear, I think, about the chain of appointment and supervision that it envisions: Principal officers could be permitted by law to appoint their subordinates. That should subsist, however much the nature of federal business or of federal organizational structure may alter.

I must confess that in the case of the Tax Court, as with some other independent establishments (notably, the so-called "independent regulatory agencies" such as the FCC and the Federal Trade Commission) permitting appointment of inferior officers by the agency head may not ensure the [*921] high degree of insulation from congressional control that was the purpose of the appointments scheme elaborated in the Constitution. That is a consequence of our decision in Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602, 79 L. Ed. 1611, 55 S. Ct. 869 (1935), which approved congressional restriction upon arbitrary dismissal of the heads of such agencies by the President, a scheme avowedly designed to made such agencies less accountable to him, and hence he less responsible for them. Depending upon how broadly one reads the President's [2661] power to dismiss "for cause," it may be that he has no control over the appointment of inferior officers in [807] such agencies; and if those agencies are publicly regarded as beyond his control -- a "headless Fourth Branch" -- he may have less incentive to care about such appointments. It could be argued, then, that much of the raison d'etre for permitting appointive power to be lodged in "Heads of Departments," see supra, at 903-908, does not exist with respect to the heads of these agencies, because they, in fact, will not be shored up by the President and are thus not resistant to congressional pressures. That is a reasonable position -- though I tend to the view that adjusting the remainder of the Constitution to compensate for Humphrey's Executor is a fruitless endeavor. But in any event it is not a reasonable position that supports the Court's decision today -- both because a "Court of Law" artificially defined as the Court defines it is even less resistent to those pressures, and because the distinction between those agencies that are subject to full Presidential control and those that are not is entirely unrelated to the distinction between Cabinet agencies and non-Cabinet agencies, and to all the other distinctions that the Court successively embraces. (The Central Intelligence Agency and the Environmental Protection Agency, for example, though not Cabinet agencies or components of Cabinet agencies, are not "independent" agencies in the sense of independence from Presidential control.) [*922] In sum, whatever may be the distorting effects of later innovations that this Court has approved, considering the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to be the head of a department seems to me the only reasonable construction of Article II, § 2.

* * *

For the above reasons, I concur in the judgment that the decision below must be affirmed.

REFERENCES: ♦ Return To Full Text Opinion

- Go to Supreme Court Brief(s)
- Go to Oral Argument Transcript

REV_00256603

16 Am Jur 2d, Constitutional Law 323; 34 Am Jur 2d, Federal Taxation (1991) 9238; 63A Am Jur 2d, Public Officers and Employees 97; 77 Am Jur 2d, United States 55

20 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Internal Revenue 48:886

20 Am Jur Trials 255, Preparing a Federal Income Tax Case for Trial

USCS, Constitution, Art II, 2, cl 2; 26 USCS 7443A

RIA Federal Tax Coordinator 2d U-3500

L Ed Digest, Constitutional Law 72; Judges 1; Officers 8

L Ed Index, Appointments Clause; Executive Acts or Officers; Separation of Powers; Tax Court

Index to Annotations, Appointment; Executive Acts and Officers; Separation of Powers; Tax Court

Annotation References:

Supreme Court's construction and application of appointments clause of Art II, 2, cl 2, of Federal Constitution. 101 L Ed 2d 1072.

What issues will the Supreme Court consider, though not, or not properly, raised by the parties. 42 L Ed 2d 946.

Modern status of applicability of doctrine of estoppel against federal government and its agencies. 27 ALR Fed 702.

Service: Get by LEXSEE®
Citation: 501 U.S. 868,AT 884
View: Full
Date/Time: Thursday, May 1, 2003 - 12:55 PM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Scalia, J., joined by O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that (1) 7443A allowed the chief judge of the Tax Court to assign special trial judges to preside over proceedings like those involved in the case at hand; but (2) the taxpayers' express consent to the assignment of their cases to a special trial judge constituted a forfeiture of their claim that 7443A violated the appointments clause; and (3) the chief judge's appointment of special trial judges was valid under the appointments clause not because the Tax Court was a "Court of Law," but because the Tax Court was a "Department" with the chief judge as its "Head."

LEXIS HEADNOTES - Classified to U.S. Digest Lawyers' Edition:

[*HN1]
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §72

JUDGES §1

OFFICERS §8
appointments clause -- separation of powers -- Tax Court -- special trial judges --

Headnote: [1A] [1B] [1C] [1D] [1E] [1F]
The Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--and the constitutional principle of separation of powers embedded in the clause are not violated by 26 USCS 7443A, which provides that the chief judge of the United States Tax Court is authorized to appoint and assign special trial judges to both hear and decide cases in certain specifically described proceedings, and to hear and propose findings in any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate; although a special trial judge appointed pursuant to 7443A is an "inferior Officer" whose appointment must conform to the appointments clause, the chief judge of the Tax Court can be vested by Congress with the power to appoint such special trial judges, because the Tax Court is a "Court of Law" under the appointments clause. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

[*HN2]
EVIDENCE §272
burden of proof -- actions by judges --

Headnote: [2A] [2B]
The burden of proof rests on taxpayers challenging a decision of the United States Tax Court as to any negative inference to be drawn from the fact that on the same day, (1) the special trial judge assigned by the chief judge of the Tax Court to prepare written findings and a proposed opinion in the taxpayers' case, pursuant to 26 USCS 7443A(b)(4), filed such findings and opinion; (2) the chief judge issued an order reassigning the litigation to himself for disposition; and (3) the chief judge adopted the opinion of the special trial judge.

[*HN3]
COURTS §225.2

STATUTES §108.5
Tax Court -- assignments to special trial judges --

Headnote: [3A] [3B] [3C] [3D]
Pursuant to 26 USCS 7443A(b)(4), which authorizes the chief judge of the United States Tax Court to assign to a special trial judge, for hearing and the preparation of proposed findings and a written opinion, "any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate" in addition to declaratory judgment proceedings and proceedings involving $ 10,000 or less--as to which proceedings, enumerated in 26 USCS 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3), a special trial judge can be assigned not only to hear and report on a case, but also to decide it--the chief judge is permitted to assign any Tax Court proceeding to a special trial judge, regardless of the proceeding's complexity or the monetary amount involved, because (1) the plain language of 7443A authorizes such assignment, since the text contains no limiting terms that restrict its reach to cases that are minor, simple, or narrow; (2) nothing in the legislative history of 7443A contradicts the broad sweep of the language of 7443A(b)(4), in that (a) the House Report and the conference committee report indicate that Congress intended to clarify that any other proceeding could be assigned to a special trial judge so long as a Tax Court judge must enter the decision, and also that Congress knowingly removed the jurisdictional requirement of a maximum amount in dispute in order to expand the authority of special trial judges to hear but not to decide cases covered by 7443A(b)(4), and (b) the legislation which included 7443A(b)(4) was a "technical" change, as such term was used in the legislative history, in light of the historical development of the special trial judge's role--insofar as special trial judges and their predecessors, the commissioners, have been authorized for almost a half century to hear any case before the Tax Court in the discretion of its chief judge--but the technical nature of such legislation does not alter the wide-ranging effect of the grant of authority to the chief judge in 7443A(b)(4); and (3) the phrase "any other proceeding" in 7443A(b)(4) is not a general grant of authority to fill unintended gaps left by 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3), and a reading of 7443A(b)(4) as a catch-all provision limited to cases involving a small amount of money is not required on the ground that any other interpretation would render the limitations imposed by 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3) a nullity, in that 7443A(b)(4)--the scope of which must be greater than that of 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3)--would be superfluous if the cases that special trial judges could hear but not decide under 7443A(b)(4) are limited to the same kind of cases that they could hear and decide under 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3).

REV_00256568

[*HN4]
STATUTES §83
absence of ambiguity --

Headnote: [4]
When the terms of a statute are unambiguous, judicial inquiry is complete except in rare and exceptional circumstances.

[*HN5]
APPEAL §1112.5
validity of Tax Court proceedings -- failure to raise question below -- consent --

Headnote: [5A] [5B]
On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court will exercise its discretion to hear a challenge by taxpayers under the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2), which provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of inferior officers of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments," to 26 USCS 7443A, which authorizes the chief judge of the United States Tax Court to assign to a special trial judge, for hearing and the preparation of proposed findings and a written opinion, "any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate" in addition to declaratory judgment proceedings and proceedings involving $ 10,000 or less--as to which proceedings a special trial judge can be assigned to decide a case as well--notwithstanding that the taxpayers consented, and failed to raise a timely objection, to the chief judge's assignment of their Tax Court cases, which involved approximately $ 1.5 billion in alleged tax deficiencies, to a special trial judge, since the alleged defect in the special trial judge's appointment goes to the validity of the taxpayers' Tax Court proceedings. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

[*HN6]

REV_00256569

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §68.5

ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER §6

OFFICERS §8
separation of powers -- function of appointments clause --

Headnote: [6A] [6B] [6C]
The Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which empowers the President to appoint the principal federal officers with the advice and consent of the Senate, while providing that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--not only guards against the aggrandizement of power by one branch of the Federal Government at the expense of another branch, but also preserves another aspect of the Constitution's structural integrity by preventing the diffusion of the appointment power; the structural principles of separation of powers embodied in the appointments clause do not speak only or even primarily of prerogatives of the executive branch of the Federal Government simply because such principles are located in Article II of the Constitution; insofar as the appointments clause bespeaks a principle of limitation by dividing the power to appoint the principal federal officers between the executive and legislative branches and by allowing Congress only limited authority to devolve appointment power on the President, "the Heads of Departments," and "the Courts of Law," so as to insure that those who wielded the appointment power were accountable to political force and the will of the people, the appointments clause prevents Congress from dispensing power too freely, and the clause limits the universe of eligible recipients of the power to appoint; the structural interests protected by the appointments clause are not those of any one branch of the government, but rather those of the entire republic, and thus neither Congress nor the executive branch can agree to waive the structural protection afforded by the appointments clause. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.)

[*HN7]
APPEAL §1104

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §68.5
failure to raise question below -- separation of powers --

Headnote: [7]
Although a litigant in federal court generally must raise all issues and objections at trial, the disruption to sound appellate practice entailed by entertaining objections not raised below does not always overcome the strong interest of the federal judiciary in maintaining the federal constitutional plan of separation of powers.

[*HN8]
COURTS §95

STATUTES §13
federal bill -- judicial review --

Headnote: [8]
The assent of the executive branch of the Federal Government to a bill which contains a provision contrary to the Federal Constitution does not shield the bill from judicial review.

[*HN9]
JUDGES §1

OFFICERS §2

REV_00256570

REFERENCE §6
appointments clause -- special trial judge of Tax Court -- establishment of office -- employees -- special masters --

Headnote: [9A] [9B]
For purposes of the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which empowers the President to appoint certain officers of the United States with the advice and consent of the Senate, while providing that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--a special trial judge appointed by the chief judge of the United States Tax Court pursuant to 26 USCS 7443A--which provides that the chief judge is authorized to appoint and assign special trial judges to both hear and decide cases in certain specifically described proceedings (26 USCS 7443A(b)(1)-7443A(b)(3)), and to hear and propose findings in any other proceeding which the chief judge may designate (26 USCS 7443A(b)(4))--is an "inferior Officer" whose appointment must conform to the appointments clause, because (1) the establishment of the office, and the duties, salary, and means of appointment of such special trial judges are specified by statute, and such characteristics distinguish special trial judges from the special masters hired by courts established under Article III of the Constitution; (2) in the course of taking testimony, conducting trials, ruling on the admissibility of evidence, and enforcing compliance with discovery orders, special trial judges appointed under 7443A perform more than ministerial tasks and exercise significant discretion; and (3) even if the duties of special trial judges under 7443A(b)(4) are not significant, special trial judges cannot be inferior officers for purposes of some of their duties under 7443A, but mere employees with respect to other responsibilities, since the fact that an inferior officer on occasion performs duties that may be performed by an employee not subject to the appointments clause does not transform the inferior officer's status under the Constitution.

[*HN10]
OFFICERS §2
definition -- appointment --

Headnote: [10]
For purposes of the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which empowers the President to appoint certain "Officers of the United States" with the advice and consent of the Senate, while providing that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--any appointee exercising significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States is an "Officer of the United States," and such person must therefore be appointed in the manner prescribed by the appointments clause.

[*HN11]
EVIDENCE §244
burden of persuasion -- appointment of officers --

Headnote: [11]
Persons seeking to challenge the authority of Congress to vest the chief judge of the United States Tax Court with the power to appoint special trial judges for the Tax Court bear a heavy burden of persuasion that such vesting violates the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2), insofar as an interbranch appointment is not implicated in such a challenge.

[*HN12]
OFFICERS §2
creation of office -- appointment --

REV_00256571

Headnote: [12]
Despite Congress' authority under Article II of the Federal Constitution to create offices and to provide for the method of appointment to those offices, Congress' power is inevitably bounded by the express language of Article II, and unless the method Congress provides comports with Article II, the holders of those offices will not be "Officers of the United States" within the meaning of Article II.

[*HN13]
COMMISSIONERS AND MAGISTRATES §1

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §27

EVIDENCE §244

OFFICERS §8

STATUTES §102

UNITED STATES §22
appointments clause -- Tax Court as executive "Department" -- separation of powers -- President --

Headnote: [13A] [13B] [13C]
The United States Tax Court is not a "Department" for purposes of the Federal Constitution's appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2)--which provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of "inferior Officers" of the United States in "the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments"--because (1) given the appointments clause's limitation of the actors in whom Congress may vest the power to appoint, it cannot be assumed that every component of the Federal Government's executive branch is a department, the head of which is eligible to receive appointment power under the appointments clause; (2) the term "Department" refers only to a part or division of the executive branch that has been expressly created and given the name of a department by Congress, and thus the term "Heads of Departments" does not embrace inferior commissioners and bureau officers; (3) confining the term "Heads of Departments" to executive divisions like the Cabinet-level departments constrains the distribution of the appointment power, and insures that the term is interpreted consistently with its interpretation in other provisions of the Federal Constitution, including (a) the opinion clause of Art II, 2, cl 1, which provides that the President may require opinions from the principal officers of the "Executive Departments," and in which clause the term "Executive Departments," according to a previous decision of the United States Supreme Court, is limited to Cabinet members, and (b) 4 of the Twenty-fifth Amendment regarding the disability of the President, in which section the term "executive departments," according to the hearings on the Amendment, refers to Cabinet-level entities; and (4) the express purpose of the legislation which established the Tax Court was to make it a court under Article I of the Federal Constitution, rather than an executive agency. (Scalia, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ., dissented from this holding.)

[*HN14]
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §6 effect of amendment -- repeated terms --

Headnote: [14A] [14B]
The language of the Federal Constitution's Twenty-fifth Amendment does not control the interpretation of a prior provision of the Federal Constitution, such as the appointments clause (Art II, 2, cl 2); this being the case, the fact that the Twenty-fifth Amendment strictly

REV_00256572

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All ⓘ
Terms: levin and helene /2 white and date(is 9-2000) (Edit Search)

↶ Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

Federal News Service September 14, 2000, Thursday

Copyright 2000 Federal News Service, Inc.
Federal News Service

September 14, 2000, Thursday

SECTION: PRESS CONFERENCE OR SPEECH

LENGTH: 3839 words

HEADLINE: PRESS CONFERENCE WITH SENATOR BARBARA MIKULSKI (D-MD) AND OTHERS

TOPIC: PENDING WOMEN JUDICIAL NOMINEES

PARTICIPANTS INCLUDE: SENATOR BARBARA BOXER (D-CA) SENATOR TOM HARKIN (D-IA), SENATOR CARL LEVIN (D-MI), SENATOR BLANCHE LAMBERT LINCOLN (D-AR), REPRESENTATIVE CAROLYN MALONEY (D-NY), AND SENATOR PATTY MURRAY (D-WA)

LOCATION: THE SENATE SWAMP, WASHINGTON, D.C.

BODY:
SEN. MIKULSKI: Good afternoon, everybody. I'm here to join my colleagues in both the House and the United States Senate to really call for freeing our judicial nominees.

Democrats know that people want judges who reflect the American mosaic, yet this Republican Congress repeatedly blocks women and minorities to our federal courts. We know that women nominees wait two and a half months longer to be confirmed than their male counterparts. We now have 38 nominees waiting for confirmation. Nine of these are women, and they've been waiting more than 60 days. Some have been waiting for years.

The women of the Senate are "nine and counting." Our women judicial nominees are nine and waiting.

One candidate, Helene White, has been waiting over three and a half years, no hearing, for a seat vacant in 1995. We have a distinguished applicant like Ronnie White, who waited for over a year, only to be voted down in the Congress.

What does this mean? Well I'll tell you what it means: that in the Republicanly-controlled Congress, if you are a woman or a minority, you wait at the back of the bus. This party seems to forget that it was once the party of Lincoln, and now it is the party of judicial block.

We're waiting to confirm President Clinton's appointments. We have outstanding women and men who are African American, Asian American and Hispanic. Clinton and the Gore administration have nominated more women and minorities for the federal judiciary than any time in history.

But this is not only about color; it is about ensuring that there's competency on the judicial bench. We've encouraged them to hold hearings, have votes, move this out. Just two days ago, a Republican senator took the floor to say he was putting a hold on further nominees. Well, you know what this means for justice? It means justice delayed.

REV_00256606

What we now have is a judicial emergency. Four of the 15 seats are vacant. Every woman and minority has delayed. We don't have time for delays; the courts don't have time for delays; America doesn't have time for delays. I hope Tom DeLay calls the Senate and says, "Let's get moving."

I would now like to turn this conference over to one of the great champions; the person who walked up the steps to make sure that women were represented on the Judiciary for judicial nominations; a great fighter, my colleague, Senator Barb Boxer.

SEN. BOXER: Thank you, Senator Mikulski.

I want to thank Senator Mikulski, I want to thank the American Association of University Women for organizing this effort to call attention to the shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary have been treated by this Republican Senate.

Senator Mikulski has pointed out the long time that women and minorities have had to wait to get their day, if you will, in the Senate court, so they can take their seats on the judiciary.

Today we are focusing on women. I strongly support the four women who are patiently await their confirmation, the four women we are focusing on today. They are very fortunate to have Senators Harkin and Levin fighting for them. They couldn't have better fighters than those two senators.

But I want to point out today that these four women are not isolated cases. There is a terrible pattern of treating these first- class nominees as second-class citizens.

I would like to share the stories, very briefly, of three women nominees from California who have gone down this difficult path.

In May 1996 President Clinton nominated Margaret Morrow (sp) to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California. You couldn't find a more qualified, less controversial woman. She got the unanimous vote of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Chairman Hatch called her one of the most qualified nominees he had ever seen. You would think it would have been a slam-dunk, but her nomination died in the pre-election logjam. So the president nominated Ms. Morrow (sp) in January '97, and again we expected a swift confirmation. But a small group of right-wing senators targeted Margaret as part of their campaign against the so-called activist judiciary. By the way, I think "activist" means "anyone who has a pulse." (Laughter.)

Support poured in, from Democrats and Republicans alike, for Margaret. Finally, in February '98, after putting her life on hold for 21 months, Margaret Morrow (sp) was confirmed. You'd think it would have been a close vote, wouldn't you? They made her suffer so much. It was 67 to 28.

One more quick story:

Marsha Berzon. In '98 President Clinton nominated her to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, and she was so qualified and is so qualified --distinguished record, broad bipartisan support. She had to put her life on hold in private practice, turning down cases and suspending her personal plans. And like Ms. Morrow (sp), Ms. Berzon had to wait two years before she was confirmed -- and again, overwhelmingly so.

The last case:

Dolly Gee, G-E-E. She is still waiting. She was nominated in May '99. The Republicans haven't even given her the courtesy of a hearing, even though she's been endorsed by prominent Republicans.

REV_00256607

Dolly Gee is the daughter of Chinese immigrants. She would make history in this particular confirmation. She became an attorney largely because she saw the conditions in the garment industry in Los Angeles, where her mother worked as a seamstress.

Now she has a successful civil practice with an emphasis on employment law.

Dolly Gee's private life is the embodiment of the American dream, but her experience in the U.S. Senate is an American nightmare. So we're here today to end that nightmare, to give the Republican Senate a wake-up call, to let the people of America know how these fine women are being treated, and we are here to say we are going to focus the light on this matter.

And it is my great privilege to turn it over to Congresswoman Maloney of New York, a strong leader for women and equal rights for all people.

REP. C. MALONEY: Thank you so much, Barbara.

SEN. BOXER: You're welcome.

REP. C. MALONEY: And I thank all of my friends in the Senate and my former colleague in the House, Blanche, and especially Nancy Zirkin of AAUW that helped organize this today.

Less than a year ago, we stood here together to ask whether there was a glass ceiling in the Senate. We wanted to know how there could be so many vacancies on the federal bench. Right now, there are 64 vacancies, 23 of which are judicial emergencies, while so many talented, qualified women and men have had their nominations held up.

Well, here we are again with many more exceptional nominees, and still they are held up. There are 38 nominees, nine of whom are women, and I must note that only 20 percent of the federal bench now is represented -- only 20 percent of the federal judges in the United States are women. And we need the nominees and the judges of this country to reflect this country, and we need more women and minorities on the bench.

We have passed many federal laws in housing and discrimination, in all types of areas, and our courts are clogged and waiting to act with justice. And if we don't nominate and put forward these people, then we will just wait and wait and wait for justice.

And as these important nominees sit idle and important cases wait for fair hearings, members of the Senate -- some members of the Senate -- stall, hoping that the outcome of the November election will result in a president who will nominate more conservative candidates.

This is just plain wrong. We need to move forward and put qualified women, minorities and men on the bench, and we are calling to have these vacancies filled.

It is now my great pleasure to introduce the senator from the great state of Michigan, Senator Levin.

SEN. LEVIN: Two of the women who we're focusing on today are from Michigan. They are nominees for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. They are Helene White, who is a judge now in the second- highest court in Michigan and has been a Court of Appeals judge for seven years, and before that was a trial court judge for 10 years. And the other woman who we're focusing on is Kathleen McCree Lewis, a very distinguished appellate advocate with one of the largest law firms in Michigan. She would be the first African American woman to sit on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals if she were confirmed.

REV_00256608

We've been unable to get hearings for these two women. The first one, Helene White, has waited three and a half years for a hearing. This is the longest wait for a hearing in Senate history. Kathleen McCree Lewis has waited a year for a hearing. This is just for a hearing. No objection has been raised to their nomination, no suggestion has been made that they're not qualified. It's just no action, non-action. It's just stall. It's just, "Well, it's not me, it's somebody else." The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether or not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts.

We have a 25 percent vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit of Appeals. The recently retired chief judge, Judge Meritt (sp), wrote a letter which in a way is -- I think it's one of the strongest letters I have ever heard from any court. This was written to Senator Hatch, who said the following about the Sixth Circuit:

"Our courts should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in a federal court should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our court is," to use his words, "rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25 percent of the judgeships are vacant." And then he finished: "The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate advise as to the judicial nomination -- that is, consider, debate and vote up or down.

They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years."

Governor Bush has said that no nominee should wait longer than 60 days for a decision in the Senate. He is the nominee of the Republican Party, and we would hope that the leadership of this Senate and the Judiciary Committee, the Republicans who run both the Senate and the committee, would listen -- if not to their consciences, and if not to the judges who sit on these courts, and if not to the litigants who are waiting for justice because of these vacancies year after year -- at least would listen to their own nominee for president, who says 60 days is the longest that anybody should wait for a vote on their confirmation.

Judge White has waited three and a half years. Kathleen Lewis has waited a year. It's too long. It's wrong. It's unfair not just to them, but to my constituents in Michigan and to the people of the United States.

Pat, I think --

SEN. MURRAY: I'm ready.

SEN. LEVIN: Are you next, Patty? I need to -- whoops, excuse me for --

SEN. MURRAY: Thank you. We are here today to strongly object to the Republican majority who continues to block the confirmation of qualified judges, especially women and minorities. This is about justice, and justice delayed is justice denied. By failing to confirm nominees, the Republicans have delayed justice for those who rely on our overburdened court system. As a result of their inaction, cases are piling up in dockets across America. Our justice system is being held hostage, and America's communities are paying the price.

In fact, the Republican-controlled Senate is far behind the norm in confirming judges. Only 48 percent of President Clinton's Circuit Court of Appeals nominees for this year have been confirmed by the Senate. In comparison, during President Bush's last year in office, the Democratic Senate confirmed 65 percent of his nominees. This delay is especially troubling when we look at what's happened to women and minorities.

REV_00256609

We know that women are already underrepresented on the federal bench and we know there are many vacancies yet to fill. Nine women have been waiting for confirmation for more than 60 days. One of those women, Helene White, has been waiting for more than 1,300 days -- over three and a half years.

Unfortunately, Republicans have created a glass ceiling that blocks the confirmation of women judges. It's time to dismantle that glass ceiling and let qualified jurists take their place on the bench.

We are here to send a message to the Republican leadership: Confirm the judicial nominees pending before the Senate, and let these qualified men and women fill the vacancies in courtrooms across America.

Thank you and it is my honor to introduce Senator Blanche Lincoln from Arkansas.

SEN. LINCOLN: I'm delighted to join with my colleagues and former colleagues here today to talk about such a travesty.

Although there aren't any judges in my home state awaiting confirmation, I'm here because I'm appalled, as a women and as a senator, about the games that are being played with these people's lives and with our judicial system.

Just several weeks ago, after meeting with a group of appellate and district court judges in Arkansas, I sent a letter on this issue to our majority leader to express my frustration. In that letter, I reminded him that people look to us for more than just legislation; they look to us for an example. And although we don't need -- or we don't have any waiting confirmations, those judges expressed to me an incredible overload in their courts. I can't imagine what the situation must be in these areas where these positions are left unfilled.

I was taught at an early age that public service is a high calling and a noble profession. We need to encourage it, not discourage it. I was also taught at an early age that there is absolutely no good excuse to be rude. And the way that we're handling these confirmations is irresponsible, it's unacceptable, and it's rude to think that we are asking these people to put their life on hold; to not even be heard; to not have a hearing; to not even be voted up or down.

My colleagues before me have outlined many of the examples that -- of why -- and have given some of the disheartening examples of qualified, dedicated women and men who are willing to serve this country.

You know, there's a lot of talk among my colleagues about restoring the faith of the people in their political system and government.

But in my opinion, if we want respect, we've got to earn it. And we need to start right here and right now with treating these people respectably. If we want people to respect their government again, then government must act respectably. It's my hope that we'll take the necessary steps to give these men and these women, especially, the up or down vote that they deserve.

I thank my colleagues for all of what they have done, and I'm proud to introduce Senator Tom Harkin.

SEN. HARKIN: Thanks, Blanche. I'm sorry I'm late. I was just at a hearing.

REV_00256610

SEN. LINCOLN: There you go, Tom. How are you?

SEN. HARKIN: Thank you all very much for being here. Thank you all for holding this press conference to address this important issue. Again, I'm sure I'm just going to echo the sentiments expressed by my colleagues on these judicial nominations. This process has been dragging on too long. The Senate should act promptly to fill these vacancies. I'm especially concerned about my own constituent, Bonnie Campbell, for the Eighth Circuit. And I know Senator Levin, I met his judge nominees Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis.

Bonnie Campbell from Iowa is a former attorney general who is now the head of the Violence Against Women office in the Department of Justice, has done a great job. She's got strong bipartisan support. She's supported by Senator Grassley from my state, and me, the Bar Association. I don't know of anyone that is not supporting her for any of these reasons. And yet she's bottled up and will not be reported out, they're not reporting her out to the floor so that we can act on it. I think this is unconscionable.

I'll just close by saying that Governor Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination. The Republican leadership in the Senate should follow that advice.

Thank you. Any questions, or -- Mike?

Q Senator Harkin -- any of the senators. (Off mike) -- you've got many pressure points; you can work with leadership, hold bills, what have you. Have you done that? Why not? Are you going to do something like that -- (off mike) -- to get your nominees -- (off mike)?

SEN. HARKIN: There may come a time for that, but basically -- I'm speaking for myself -- there's sort of been an implied -- not implied. No, no. That's the wrong word. There's actually been statements made to me and others that if we engage in any activity like that, that they absolutely will not report them out.

And so we're at a situation here where we didn't have a Judiciary Committee meeting this week. They're supposed to have one next week. Well, if that goes into the week after that, you see what they're playing with, is that there's a game going on here. We know that we have the power to slow things down and perhaps take some actions here to try to force their hand, but we're told if they do that, they absolutely won't report them out. And so all we can do is operate on goodwill and good faith around here. We're told that they're going to have a meeting. We're told that they're going to vote on these nominees or, in the case of yours, to have a hearing after three long years. And you know, you kind of go on good faith around this place.

SEN. LINCOLN: Why should we have to trade progress for partisanship?

SEN. HARKIN: Yeah. Go ahead, Blanche. That's a good statement.

SEN. LINCOLN: Why should we have to trade progress for partisanship? I mean, this is our duty. This is something we should be doing. We're not asking them to vote for these nominees, we're just asking them to vote. Give these people the courtesy that they deserve, being heard, you know, instead of asking them to put their lives on hold for 1,300 days. I can't imagine, especially as a --

SEN. HARKIN: Yeah. If they want to vote against them, let them vote against them. That's their prerogative. But at least have a vote.

SEN. LEVIN: The leadership of the Senate has urged us to hold off on any of those tactics because they still see the possibility that they're going to be able to get some of these nominees confirmed. And we've abided by that request. We've been incredibly patient, those of us who have nominees from our states, and we're trying to show just the maximum of good faith and good will that is humanly possible. That's our goal. We're not trying to in any way disrupt the Senate. That's not our purpose here. And as long as the leadership is telling us there's still this hope that we can accomplish our goal without those tactics, it seems to me we should give them that benefit of the doubt and that additional period of time. It may come -- it may come to that point, however.

REV_00256611

Q (Off mike.)

SEN. LEVIN: No, no. No. Both Mr. -- Senator Daschle and Senator Lott and Senator Hatch. We've spoken with great frequency to all of them and Senator Leahy with great regularity.

And we still have a ray of hope -- a ray of hope that the Judiciary Committee will both report out the judge in the case of the Iowa Court of Appeals nominee and hold hearings for the two judges from Michigan who have been nominated to the Sixth Circuit, and I can't comment on other situations because those are the only ones that I'm familiar with.

Q (Off mike) --

SEN. LEVIN: Yes.

Q (Continues, off mike) -- objected that the president's recess appointments -- (off mike) -- kind of rubbed some senators the wrong way. They were supposed to have five nominations -- (off mike). Do you see a kind of tit-for-tat here that got away from him, or was that a wise decision --

SEN. HARKIN: No, no. Look. Look, I saw a comment made by someone, I forget, that the president was thwarting the Constitution by making recess appointments. Those are constitutional appointments. That is constitutionally permitted. Now, they can only serve until the end of the session, but recess appointments are constitutional.

Q (Off mike) -- it flies in the face, if your nominees are being held hostage, in retaliation. So you don't fault the president on this?

SEN. HARKIN: No, because his nominees were held up. Again, the same situation, where they weren't given the benefit of a hearing and a vote and the due process here in the Senate, and in the case of a couple of these people, the offices to which he appointed them were offices that needed to be directed. They need a director. They needed someone in there to run these offices.

SEN. LEVIN: I just want quickly -- 14 past presidents of the Michigan Bar Association, Republicans and Democrats, have urged hearings for these two nominees. They are well-qualified, and we have copies both of this letter from the presidents of the Michigan bar as well as the letter from the retired chief judge of the 6th Circuit that I made reference to before.

And one other quick comment. What is happening here, if these hearings are not held or these votes not taken, is that a pattern is being set for future Senates which is unhealthy for future Senates and future presidents. And people who follow the course of action that is currently being followed of not allowing hearings or votes on nominees who've been waiting a long period of time are putting into place a pattern which, it seems to me, they should not want to set for future Senates and for future presidents.

And they ought to see the lack of wisdom in their short-term gain that they may see by denying people a vote or a hearing. There may be a short-term benefit in leaving some vacancies for the next president, but they're not going to benefit from it in the next Senate because the next Senate will follow the pattern of this one, I assume, if that is the way they're going to play this thing out.

REV_00256612

So we've been very, very patient. We have followed the advice of the minority leader and Senator Hatch in holding off, still in the hope that some of these nominees can be given hearings and votes. We can't say that that course of action is going to last indefinitely; it will not. But at least we've shown good faith, maximum patience, and we still have a hope that without this kind of a tactic that you make reference to, that we can get justice and fairness and decency applied to these nominees.

END

LOAD-DATE: September 15, 2000

Source: News & Business > News > News Group File, All (i)
Terms: levin and helene /2 white and date(is 9-2000) (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Sunday, May 4, 2003 - 5:13 PM EDT

About LexisNexis | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Copyright 2000 Federal News Service, Inc.
Federal News Service

September 14, 2000, Thursday

SECTION: PRESS CONFERENCE OR SPEECH

LENGTH: 3839 words

HEADLINE: PRESS CONFERENCE WITH SENATOR BARBARA MIKULSKI (D-MD) AND OTHERS

TOPIC: PENDING WOMEN JUDICIAL NOMINEES

PARTICIPANTS INCLUDE: SENATOR BARBARA BOXER (D-CA) SENATOR TOM HARKIN (D-IA), SENATOR CARL LEVIN (D-MI), SENATOR BLANCHE LAMBERT LINCOLN (D-AR), REPRESENTATIVE CAROLYN MALONEY (D-NY), AND SENATOR PATTY MURRAY (D-WA)

LOCATION: THE SENATE SWAMP, WASHINGTON, D.C.

BODY:
SEN. MIKULSKI: Good afternoon, everybody. I'm here to join my colleagues in both the House and the United States Senate to really call for freeing our judicial nominees.

Democrats know that people want judges who reflect the American mosaic, yet this Republican Congress repeatedly blocks women and minorities to our federal courts. We know that women nominees wait two and a half months longer to be confirmed than their male counterparts. We now have 38 nominees waiting for confirmation. Nine of these are women, and they've been waiting more than 60 days. Some have been waiting for years.

The women of the Senate are "nine and counting." Our women judicial nominees are nine and waiting.

One candidate, Helene White, has been waiting over three and a half years, no hearing, for a seat vacant in 1995. We have a distinguished applicant like Ronnie White, who waited for over a year, only to be voted down in the Congress.

What does this mean? Well I'll tell you what it means: that in the Republicanly-controlled Congress, if you are a woman or a minority, you wait at the back of the bus. This party seems to forget that it was once the party of Lincoln, and now it is the party of judicial block.

We're waiting to confirm President Clinton's appointments. We have outstanding women and men who are African American, Asian American and Hispanic. Clinton and the Gore administration have nominated more women and minorities for the federal judiciary than any time in history.

But this is not only about color; it is about ensuring that there's competency on the judicial bench. We've encouraged them to hold hearings, have votes, move this out. Just two days ago, a Republican senator took the floor to say he was putting a hold on further nominees. Well, you know what this means for justice? It means justice delayed.

What we now have is a judicial emergency. Four of the 15 seats are vacant. Every woman and minority has delayed. We don't have time for delays; the courts don't have time for delays; America doesn't have time for delays. I hope Tom DeLay calls the Senate and says,

REV_00256614

"Let's get moving."

I would now like to turn this conference over to one of the great champions; the person who walked up the steps to make sure that women were represented on the Judiciary for judicial nominations; a great fighter, my colleague, Senator Barb Boxer.

SEN. BOXER: Thank you, Senator Mikulski.

I want to thank Senator Mikulski, I want to thank the American Association of University Women for organizing this effort to call attention to the shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary have been treated by this Republican Senate.

Senator Mikulski has pointed out the long time that women and minorities have had to wait to get their day, if you will, in the Senate court, so they can take their seats on the judiciary.

Today we are focusing on women. I strongly support the four women who are patiently await their confirmation, the four women we are focusing on today. They are very fortunate to have Senators Harkin and Levin fighting for them. They couldn't have better fighters than those two senators.

But I want to point out today that these four women are not isolated cases. There is a terrible pattern of treating these first- class nominees as second-class citizens.

I would like to share the stories, very briefly, of three women nominees from California who have gone down this difficult path.

In May 1996 President Clinton nominated Margaret Morrow (sp) to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California. You couldn't find a more qualified, less controversial woman. She got the unanimous vote of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Chairman Hatch called her one of the most qualified nominees he had ever seen. You would think it would have been a slam-dunk, but her nomination died in the pre-election logjam. So the president nominated Ms. Morrow (sp) in January '97, and again we expected a swift confirmation. But a small group of right-wing senators targeted Margaret as part of their campaign against the so-called activist judiciary. By the way, I think "activist" means "anyone who has a pulse." (Laughter.)

Support poured in, from Democrats and Republicans alike, for Margaret. Finally, in February '98, after putting her life on hold for 21 months, Margaret Morrow (sp) was confirmed. You'd think it would have been a close vote, wouldn't you? They made her suffer so much. It was 67 to 28.

One more quick story:

Marsha Berzon. In '98 President Clinton nominated her to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, and she was so qualified and is so qualified --distinguished record, broad bipartisan support. She had to put her life on hold in private practice, turning down cases and suspending her personal plans. And like Ms. Morrow (sp), Ms. Berzon had to wait two years before she was confirmed -- and again, overwhelmingly so.

The last case:

Dolly Gee, G-E-E. She is still waiting. She was nominated in May '99. The Republicans haven't even given her the courtesy of a hearing, even though she's been endorsed by prominent Republicans.

REV_00256615

Dolly Gee is the daughter of Chinese immigrants. She would make history in this particular confirmation. She became an attorney largely because she saw the conditions in the garment industry in Los Angeles, where her mother worked as a seamstress.

Now she has a successful civil practice with an emphasis on employment law.

Dolly Gee's private life is the embodiment of the American dream, but her experience in the U.S. Senate is an American nightmare. So we're here today to end that nightmare, to give the Republican Senate a wake-up call, to let the people of America know how these fine women are being treated, and we are here to say we are going to focus the light on this matter.

And it is my great privilege to turn it over to Congresswoman Maloney of New York, a strong leader for women and equal rights for all people.

REP. C. MALONEY: Thank you so much, Barbara.

SEN. BOXER: You're welcome.

REP. C. MALONEY: And I thank all of my friends in the Senate and my former colleague in the House, Blanche, and especially Nancy Zirkin of AAUW that helped organize this today.

Less than a year ago, we stood here together to ask whether there was a glass ceiling in the Senate. We wanted to know how there could be so many vacancies on the federal bench. Right now, there are 64 vacancies, 23 of which are judicial emergencies, while so many talented, qualified women and men have had their nominations held up.

Well, here we are again with many more exceptional nominees, and still they are held up. There are 38 nominees, nine of whom are women, and I must note that only 20 percent of the federal bench now is represented -- only 20 percent of the federal judges in the United States are women. And we need the nominees and the judges of this country to reflect this country, and we need more women and minorities on the bench.

We have passed many federal laws in housing and discrimination, in all types of areas, and our courts are clogged and waiting to act with justice. And if we don't nominate and put forward these people, then we will just wait and wait and wait for justice.

And as these important nominees sit idle and important cases wait for fair hearings, members of the Senate -- some members of the Senate -- stall, hoping that the outcome of the November election will result in a president who will nominate more conservative candidates.

This is just plain wrong. We need to move forward and put qualified women, minorities and men on the bench, and we are calling to have these vacancies filled.

It is now my great pleasure to introduce the senator from the great state of Michigan, Senator Levin.

SEN. LEVIN: Two of the women who we're focusing on today are from Michigan. They are nominees for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. They are Helene White, who is a judge now in the second- highest court in Michigan and has been a Court of Appeals judge for seven years, and before that was a trial court judge for 10 years. And the other woman who we're focusing on is Kathleen McCree Lewis, a very distinguished appellate advocate with one of the largest law firms in Michigan. She would be the first African American woman to sit on the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals if she were confirmed.

REV_00256616

We've been unable to get hearings for these two women. The first one, Helene White, has waited three and a half years for a hearing. This is the longest wait for a hearing in Senate history. Kathleen McCree Lewis has waited a year for a hearing. This is just for a hearing. No objection has been raised to their nomination, no suggestion has been made that they're not qualified. It's just no action, non-action. It's just stall. It's just, "Well, it's not me, it's somebody else." The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether or not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts.

We have a 25 percent vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit of Appeals. The recently retired chief judge, Judge Meritt (sp), wrote a letter which in a way is -- I think it's one of the strongest letters I have ever heard from any court. This was written to Senator Hatch, who said the following about the Sixth Circuit:

"Our courts should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in a federal court should not be treated this way. The remaining judges on a court should not be treated this way. The situation in our court is," to use his words, "rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25 percent of the judgeships are vacant." And then he finished: "The Founding Fathers certainly intended that the Senate advise as to the judicial nomination -- that is, consider, debate and vote up or down.

They surely did not intend that the Senate, for partisan or factional reasons, would remain silent and simply refuse to give any advice or consider and vote at all, thereby leaving the courts in limbo, understaffed and unable properly to carry out their responsibilities for years."

Governor Bush has said that no nominee should wait longer than 60 days for a decision in the Senate. He is the nominee of the Republican Party, and we would hope that the leadership of this Senate and the Judiciary Committee, the Republicans who run both the Senate and the committee, would listen -- if not to their consciences, and if not to the judges who sit on these courts, and if not to the litigants who are waiting for justice because of these vacancies year after year -- at least would listen to their own nominee for president, who says 60 days is the longest that anybody should wait for a vote on their confirmation.

Judge White has waited three and a half years. Kathleen Lewis has waited a year. It's too long. It's wrong. It's unfair not just to them, but to my constituents in Michigan and to the people of the United States.

Pat, I think --

SEN. MURRAY: I'm ready.

SEN. LEVIN: Are you next, Patty? I need to -- whoops, excuse me for --

SEN. MURRAY: Thank you. We are here today to strongly object to the Republican majority who continues to block the confirmation of qualified judges, especially women and minorities. This is about justice, and justice delayed is justice denied. By failing to confirm nominees, the Republicans have delayed justice for those who rely on our overburdened court system. As a result of their inaction, cases are piling up in dockets across America. Our justice system is being held hostage, and America's communities are paying the price.

In fact, the Republican-controlled Senate is far behind the norm in confirming judges. Only 48 percent of President Clinton's Circuit Court of Appeals nominees for this year have been confirmed by the Senate. In comparison, during President Bush's last year in office, the Democratic Senate confirmed 65 percent of his nominees. This delay is especially troubling when we look at what's happened to women and minorities.

REV_00256617

We know that women are already underrepresented on the federal bench and we know there are many vacancies yet to fill. Nine women have been waiting for confirmation for more than 60 days. One of those women, Helene White, has been waiting for more than 1,300 days -- over three and a half years.

Unfortunately, Republicans have created a glass ceiling that blocks the confirmation of women judges. It's time to dismantle that glass ceiling and let qualified jurists take their place on the bench.

We are here to send a message to the Republican leadership: Confirm the judicial nominees pending before the Senate, and let these qualified men and women fill the vacancies in courtrooms across America.

Thank you and it is my honor to introduce Senator Blanche Lincoln from Arkansas.

SEN. LINCOLN: I'm delighted to join with my colleagues and former colleagues here today to talk about such a travesty.

Although there aren't any judges in my home state awaiting confirmation, I'm here because I'm appalled, as a women and as a senator, about the games that are being played with these people's lives and with our judicial system.

Just several weeks ago, after meeting with a group of appellate and district court judges in Arkansas, I sent a letter on this issue to our majority leader to express my frustration. In that letter, I reminded him that people look to us for more than just legislation; they look to us for an example. And although we don't need -- or we don't have any waiting confirmations, those judges expressed to me an incredible overload in their courts. I can't imagine what the situation must be in these areas where these positions are left unfilled.

I was taught at an early age that public service is a high calling and a noble profession. We need to encourage it, not discourage it. I was also taught at an early age that there is absolutely no good excuse to be rude. And the way that we're handling these confirmations is irresponsible, it's unacceptable, and it's rude to think that we are asking these people to put their life on hold; to not even be heard; to not have a hearing; to not even be voted up or down.

My colleagues before me have outlined many of the examples that -- of why -- and have given some of the disheartening examples of qualified, dedicated women and men who are willing to serve this country.

You know, there's a lot of talk among my colleagues about restoring the faith of the people in their political system and government.

But in my opinion, if we want respect, we've got to earn it. And we need to start right here and right now with treating these people respectably. If we want people to respect their government again, then government must act respectably. It's my hope that we'll take the necessary steps to give these men and these women, especially, the up or down vote that they deserve.

I thank my colleagues for all of what they have done, and I'm proud to introduce Senator Tom Harkin.

REV_00256618

SEN. HARKIN: Thanks, Blanche. I'm sorry I'm late. I was just at a hearing.

SEN. LINCOLN: There you go, Tom. How are you?

SEN. HARKIN: Thank you all very much for being here. Thank you all for holding this press conference to address this important issue. Again, I'm sure I'm just going to echo the sentiments expressed by my colleagues on these judicial nominations. This process has been dragging on too long. The Senate should act promptly to fill these vacancies. I'm especially concerned about my own constituent, Bonnie Campbell, for the Eighth Circuit. And I know Senator Levin, I met his judge nominees Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis.

Bonnie Campbell from Iowa is a former attorney general who is now the head of the Violence Against Women office in the Department of Justice, has done a great job. She's got strong bipartisan support. She's supported by Senator Grassley from my state, and me, the Bar Association. I don't know of anyone that is not supporting her for any of these reasons. And yet she's bottled up and will not be reported out, they're not reporting her out to the floor so that we can act on it. I think this is unconscionable.

I'll just close by saying that Governor Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination. The Republican leadership in the Senate should follow that advice.

Thank you. Any questions, or -- Mike?

Q Senator Harkin -- any of the senators. (Off mike) -- you've got many pressure points; you can work with leadership, hold bills, what have you. Have you done that? Why not? Are you going to do something like that -- (off mike) -- to get your nominees -- (off mike)?

SEN. HARKIN: There may come a time for that, but basically -- I'm speaking for myself -- there's sort of been an implied -- not implied. No, no. That's the wrong word. There's actually been statements made to me and others that if we engage in any activity like that, that they absolutely will not report them out.

And so we're at a situation here where we didn't have a Judiciary Committee meeting this week. They're supposed to have one next week. Well, if that goes into the week after that, you see what they're playing with, is that there's a game going on here. We know that we have the power to slow things down and perhaps take some actions here to try to force their hand, but we're told if they do that, they absolutely won't report them out. And so all we can do is operate on goodwill and good faith around here. We're told that they're going to have a meeting. We're told that they're going to vote on these nominees or, in the case of yours, to have a hearing after three long years. And you know, you kind of go on good faith around this place.

SEN. LINCOLN: Why should we have to trade progress for partisanship?

SEN. HARKIN: Yeah. Go ahead, Blanche. That's a good statement.

SEN. LINCOLN: Why should we have to trade progress for partisanship? I mean, this is our duty. This is something we should be doing. We're not asking them to vote for these nominees, we're just asking them to vote. Give these people the courtesy that they deserve, being heard, you know, instead of asking them to put their lives on hold for 1,300 days. I can't imagine, especially as a --

SEN. HARKIN: Yeah. If they want to vote against them, let them vote against them. That's their prerogative. But at least have a vote.

REV_00256619

SEN. LEVIN: The leadership of the Senate has urged us to hold off on any of those tactics because they still see the possibility that they're going to be able to get some of these nominees confirmed. And we've abided by that request. We've been incredibly patient, those of us who have nominees from our states, and we're trying to show just the maximum of good faith and good will that is humanly possible. That's our goal. We're not trying to in any way disrupt the Senate. That's not our purpose here. And as long as the leadership is telling us there's still this hope that we can accomplish our goal without those tactics, it seems to me we should give them that benefit of the doubt and that additional period of time. It may come -- it may come to that point, however.

Q (Off mike.)

SEN. LEVIN: No, no. No. Both Mr. -- Senator Daschle and Senator Lott and Senator Hatch. We've spoken with great frequency to all of them and Senator Leahy with great regularity.

And we still have a ray of hope -- a ray of hope that the Judiciary Committee will both report out the judge in the case of the Iowa Court of Appeals nominee and hold hearings for the two judges from Michigan who have been nominated to the Sixth Circuit, and I can't comment on other situations because those are the only ones that I'm familiar with.

Q (Off mike) --

SEN. LEVIN: Yes.

Q (Continues, off mike) -- objected that the president's recess appointments -- (off mike) -- kind of rubbed some senators the wrong way. They were supposed to have five nominations -- (off mike). Do you see a kind of tit-for-tat here that got away from him, or was that a wise decision --

SEN. HARKIN: No, no. Look. Look, I saw a comment made by someone, I forget, that the president was thwarting the Constitution by making recess appointments. Those are constitutional appointments. That is constitutionally permitted. Now, they can only serve until the end of the session, but recess appointments are constitutional.

Q (Off mike) -- it flies in the face, if your nominees are being held hostage, in retaliation. So you don't fault the president on this?

SEN. HARKIN: No, because his nominees were held up. Again, the same situation, where they weren't given the benefit of a hearing and a vote and the due process here in the Senate, and in the case of a couple of these people, the offices to which he appointed them were offices that needed to be directed. They need a director. They needed someone in there to run these offices.

SEN. LEVIN: I just want quickly -- 14 past presidents of the Michigan Bar Association, Republicans and Democrats, have urged hearings for these two nominees. They are well-qualified, and we have copies both of this letter from the presidents of the Michigan bar as well as the letter from the retired chief judge of the 6th Circuit that I made reference to before.

And one other quick comment. What is happening here, if these hearings are not held or these votes not taken, is that a pattern is being set for future Senates which is unhealthy for future Senates and future presidents. And people who follow the course of action that is currently being followed of not allowing hearings or votes on nominees who've been waiting a long period of time are putting into place a pattern which, it seems to me, they should not want to set for future Senates and for future presidents.

REV_00256620

And they ought to see the lack of wisdom in their short-term gain that they may see by denying people a vote or a hearing. There may be a short-term benefit in leaving some vacancies for the next president, but they're not going to benefit from it in the next Senate because the next Senate will follow the pattern of this one, I assume, if that is the way they're going to play this thing out.

So we've been very, very patient. We have followed the advice of the minority leader and Senator Hatch in holding off, still in the hope that some of these nominees can be given hearings and votes. We can't say that that course of action is going to last indefinitely; it will not. But at least we've shown good faith, maximum patience, and we still have a hope that without this kind of a tactic that you make reference to, that we can get justice and fairness and decency applied to these nominees.

END

LOAD-DATE: September 15, 2000

Document 1 of 2 next ➤

About LexisNexis™ | Terms and Conditions | Privacy Policy | Support Identifier
Copyright © 2003 LexisNexis, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved.

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

Binder - Principles of Federal Appropriation Law: Second Edition, Volume I [1]

OA/NARA#: 2167/2078
9697

Box 49
Folder 3

REV_00256622

United States General Accounting Office

GAO

Office of the General Counsel

Principles of Federal Appropriations Law

Second Edition

Volume I

Preservation Copy

REV_00256623

Chapter 4 Availability of Appropriations: Purpose

4-1

A. General Principles 4-2
1. Introduction: 31 U.S.C. § 1301(a) 4-2
2. Determining Authorized Purposes 4-5
a. Statement of Purpose 4-5
b. Specific Purpose Stated in Appropriation Act . . 4-7
c. Effect of Budget Estimates 4-9
3. New or Additional Duties 4-11
4. Termination of Program 4-13

B. The "Necessary Expense" Doctrine 4-14
1. The Theory 4-14
a. Relationship to the Appropriation 4-16
b. Expenditure Otherwise Prohibited 4-21
c. Expenditure Otherwise Provided For 4-22
2. General Operating Expenses 4-23
a. Training 4-23
b. Travel 4-24
c. Postage Expenses 4-25
d. Books and Periodicals 4-25
e. Miscellaneous Items Incident to the Federal Workplace 4-26

C. Specific Purpose Authorities and Limitations 4-28
1. Introduction 4-28
2. Attendance at Meetings and Conventions 4-29
a. Government Employees 4-29
(1) Statutory framework 4-29
(2) Inability to attend 4-33
(3) Federally-sponsored meetings 4-34
(4) Rental of space in District of Columbia . . . 4-35
(5) Military personnel 4-35
b. Non-Government Personnel 4-36
(1) 31 U.S.C. § 1345 4-36
(2) Invitational travel 4-40
(3) Use of grant funds 4-42
3. Attorney's Fees 4-43
a. Introduction 4-43
b. Hiring of Attorneys by Government Agencies . . 4-44
c. Suits Against Government Officers and Employees 4-46
d. Claims by Federal Employees 4-55
(1) Discrimination proceedings 4-55
(2) Other employee claims 4-57

REV_00256632

example, an appropriation expressly included two mandatory earmarks for projects beyond the scope of the related authorization. Noting that "the appropriation language provides its own expanded authorization for these programs," GAO concluded that the agency was required to reserve funds for the two mandatory earmarks before committing the balance of the appropriation for discretionary expenditures.

Except to the extent Congress expressly expands or limits authorized purposes in the appropriation act, the appropriation must be used in accordance with the authorization act in terms of purpose. Thus, in B-125404, August 31, 1956, it was held that an appropriation to construct a bridge across the Potomac River pursuant to a statute authorizing construction of the bridge and prescribing its location was not available to construct the bridge at a slightly different location even though the planners favored the alternate location. Similarly, in B-193307, February 6, 1979, the Flood Control Act of 1970 authorized construction of a dam and reservoir for the Ellicott Creek project in New York. Subsequently, legislation was proposed to authorize channel construction instead of the dam and reservoir, but was not enacted. A continuing resolution made a lump-sum appropriation for flood control projects "authorized by law." The Comptroller General found that the appropriation did not repeal the prior authorization, and that therefore the funds could not properly be used for the alternative channel construction.

d. Period of Availability

An authorization of appropriations, like an appropriation itself, can be made on a multiple-year or no-year, as well as fiscal year, basis. The question we address here is the extent to which the period of availability specified in an authorization or enabling act is controlling.

Congress can, in an appropriation act, expand the period of availability beyond that specified in the authorization, but it must do so explicitly. The action must be explicit because of (1) the rule against repeals by implication, (2) the presumption that every appropriation in an annual appropriation act is a one-year appropriation, and (3) the prohibition in 31 U.S.C. § 1301(c) against construing an appropriation to be permanent or available continuously unless the appropriation act expressly so states.

Thus, an appropriation of funds "to remain available until expended" (no-year) was found controlling over a provision in the authorizing legislation which authorized appropriations on a two-year basis. B-182101, October 16, 1974. See also B-149372/ B-158195, April 29, 1969 (two-year appropriation of Presidential transition funds held controlling notwithstanding provision in Presidential Transition Act of 1963 which authorized services and facilities to former President and Vice-President only for six months after expiration of term of office).

REV_00256722

A 1982 decision, 61 Comp. Gen. 532, included an additional complication. An authorization act had authorized funds to be appropriated for a particular project "for fiscal year 1978." The FY 1978 funds for that project were included in a larger lump sum appropriated "as authorized by law, to remain available until expended." GAO reconciled the two statutes by finding the appropriation to be a no-year appropriation, except to the extent the related authorization specified a lesser period of availability. Thus, funds for the project in question from the lump-sum appropriation were available for obligation only during fiscal year 1978.

Clearly, Congress can also reduce the period of availability from that specified in the authorization act. Indeed, express language in the appropriation itself is not needed to reduce the period of availability to the fiscal year covered by the appropriation act.

In the first group of cases to consider this issue, the crucial test was whether the appropriation language specifically referred to the authorization. If it did, then GAO considered the provisions of the authorization act—including any multiple-year or no-year authorizations—to be incorporated by reference into the provisions of the appropriation act. This was regarded as sufficient to satisfy 31 U.S.C. § 1301(c) and to overcome the presumption of fiscal year availability derived from the enacting clause. If the appropriation language did not specifically refer to the authorization act, the appropriation was held to be available only for the fiscal year covered by the appropriation act. 45 Comp. Gen. 508 (1966); 45 Comp. Gen. 236 (1965); B-147196, April 5, 1965; B-127518, May 10, 1956; B-37398, October 26, 1943. The reference had to be specific; the phrase "as authorized by law" was not enough. B-127518, May 10, 1956.

The House Committee on Appropriations considered the issue in connection with the 1964 foreign aid appropriations bill. In its report on that bill, the Committee first described existing practice:

REV_00256723

"The custom and practice of the Committee on Appropriations has been to recommend appropriations on an annual basis unless there is some valid reason to make the item available for longer than a one-year period. The most common technique in the latter instances is to add the words 'to remain available until expended' to the appropriation paragraph.

"In numerous instances, . . . the Congress has in the underlying enabling legislation authorized appropriations therefor to be made on an 'available until expended' basis. When he submits the budget, the President generally includes the phrase 'to remain available until expended' in the proposed appropriation language if that is what the Executive wishes to propose. The Committee either concurs or drops the phrase from the appropriation language."

H.R. Rep. No. 1040, 88th Cong., 1st Sess. 55 (1963). The Committee then noted a situation in the 1963 appropriation which had apparently generated some disagreement. The President had requested certain refugee assistance funds to remain available until expended. The report goes on to state:

"The Committee thought the funds should be on a 1-year basis, thus the phrase 'to remain available until expended' was not in the bill as reported. The final law also failed to include the phrase or any other express language of similar import. Thus Congress took affirmative action to limit the availability to the fiscal year 1963 only." Id. at 56.

The Committee then quoted what is now 31 U.S.C. § 1301(c), and stated:

"The above quoted 31 U.S.C. [§ 1301(c)] seems clearly to govern and, in respect to the instant class of appropriation, to require the act making the appropriation to expressly provide for availability longer than 1 year if the enacting clause limiting the appropriations in the law to a given fiscal year is to be overcome as to any specific appropriation therein made. And it accords with the rule of reason and ancient practice to retain control of such an elementary matter wholly within the terms of the law making the appropriation. The two hang together. But in view of the question in the present case and the possibility of similar questions in a number of others, consideration may have to be given to revising the provisions of 31 U.S.C. [§ 1301(c)] to make its scope and meaning crystal clear and perhaps update it as may otherwise appear desirable." Id. (Emphasis in original.)

Section 1301(c) was not amended, but soon after the above discussion appeared, appropriation acts started including a general provision stating that "[n]o part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein." This added another ingredient to the recipe which had not been present in the earlier decisions, although it took several years before the new general provision began appearing in almost all appropriation acts.

REV_00256724

When the issue arose again in a 1971 case, GAO considered the new appropriation act provision and the 1963 comments of the House Appropriations Committee. As a result of these developments, the rule was changed. Now, if an appropriation act contains the provision quoted in the preceding paragraph, it will not be sufficient for an appropriation contained in that act to merely incorporate a multiple-year or no-year authorization by reference. The effect of this general provision is to require the appropriation language to expressly provide for availability beyond one year in order to overcome the enacting clause. 50 Comp. Gen. 857 (1971). In that decision, GAO noted that "it seems evident that the purpose [of the new general provision] is to overcome the effect of our decisions . . . regarding the requirements of 31 U.S.C. [§ 1301(c)]," and further noted the apparent link between the discussion in House Report 1040 and the appearance of the new provision. Id. at 859. See also 58 Comp. Gen. 321 (1979) and B-207792, August 24, 1982. Thus, the appropriation act will have to expressly repeat the multiple-year or no-year language of the authorization, or at least expressly refer to the specific section of the authorizing statute in which it appears.

Changes in the law from year to year may produce additional complications. For example, the National Historic Preservation Act (authorization) provided that funds appropriated and apportioned to states would remain available for obligation for three fiscal years, after which time any unobligated balances would be reapportioned. This amounted to a no-year authorization. For several years, appropriations to fund the program were made on a no-year basis, thus permitting implementation of the authorization provision. Starting with FY 1978, however, the appropriation act was changed and the funds were made available for two fiscal years. This raised the question of whether the appropriation act had the effect of overriding the apparently conflicting authorizing language, or if it meant merely that reapportionment could occur after two fiscal years instead of three, thus effectively remaining a no-year appropriation.

REV_00256725

GAO concluded that the literal language and plain meaning of the appropriation act must govern. In addition to the explicit appropriation language, the appropriation acts contained the general provision restricting availability to the current fiscal year unless expressly provided otherwise therein. Therefore, any funds not obligated by the end of the two-year period would expire and could not be reapportioned. B-151087, September 15, 1981; B-151087, February 17, 1982.

For purposes of the rule of 50 Comp. Gen. 857 and its progeny, it makes no difference whether the authorization is in an annual appropriations authorization act or in permanent enabling legislation. It also appears to make no difference whether the authorization merely authorizes the longer period of availability or directs it. See, for example, 58 Comp. Gen. 321 (1979), in which the general provision restricting availability to the current fiscal year, as the later expression of congressional intent, was held to override 25 U.S.C. § 13a, which provides that the unobligated balances of certain Indian assistance appropriations "shall remain available for obligation and expenditure" for a second fiscal year. Similarly, in Dabney v. Reagan, No. 82 Civ. 2231-CSH (S.D.N.Y. March 21, 1985), 1985 WL 443, the court held that a 2-year period of availability specified in appropriation acts would override a "mandatory" no-year authorization contained in the Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank Act.

e. Authorization Enacted After Appropriation

Our discussion thus far has, for the most part, been in the context of the normal sequence—that is, the authorization act is passed before the appropriation act. Sometimes, however, consideration of the authorization act is delayed and it is not enacted until after the appropriation act. Determining the relationship between the two acts involves application of the same general principles we have been applying when the acts are enacted in the normal sequence.

The first step is to attempt to construe the statutes together in some reasonable fashion. To the extent this can be done, there is no real conflict, and the reversed sequence will in many cases make no difference. Earlier, for example, we discussed the rule that a specific earmark in an authorization act must be followed when the related appropriation is an unspecified lump sum. In two of the cases cited for that proposition—B-220682, February 21, 1986, and B-193282, December 21, 1978—the appropriation act had been enacted prior to the authorization, a factor which did not affect the outcome.

REV_00256726

In B-193282, for example, the 1979 Justice Department authorization act authorized a lump-sum appropriation to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and provided that $2 million "shall be available" for the investigation and prosecution of certain cases involving alleged Nazi war criminals. The 1979 appropriation act made a lump-sum appropriation to the INS but contained no specific mention of the Nazi war criminal item. The appropriation act was enacted on October 10, 1978, but the authorization act was not enacted until November. In response to a question as to the effect of the authorization provision on the appropriation, the Comptroller General advised that the two statutes could be construed harmoniously, and that the $2 million earmarked in the authorization act could be spent only for the purpose specified. It was further noted that the $2 million represented a minimum but not a maximum. B-193282, December 21, 1978, amplified by B-193282, January 25, 1979. This is the same result that would have been reached if the normal sequence had been followed.

Similarly, in B-226389, November 14, 1988, a provision in the 1987 Defense Appropriation Act prohibited the Navy from including certain provisions in ship maintenance contracts. The 1987 authorization act, enacted after the appropriation, amended a provision in title 10 of the United States Code to require the prohibited provisions. Application of the "last in time" rule would have negated the appropriation act provision. However, it was possible to give effect to both provisions by construing the appropriation restriction as a temporary exemption from the permanent legislation in the authorization act. Again, this is the same result that would have been reached if the authorization act were enacted first.

If the authorization and appropriation cannot be reasonably reconciled, the "last in time" rule will apply just as it would under the normal sequence, except here the result will be different because the authorization is the later of the two. A 1989 case will illustrate. The 1989 Treasury Department appropriation act contained a provision prohibiting the placing of certain components of the Department under the oversight of the Treasury Inspector General. A month later, Congress enacted legislation placing those components under the Inspector General's jurisdiction and transferring their internal audit staffs to the Inspector General "notwithstanding any other provision of law." But for the "notwithstanding" clause, it might have been possible to use the same approach as in B-226389 and find the appropriation restriction a temporary exemption from the new permanent legislation. In view of that clause, however, GAO found that the two provisions could not be reconciled, and concluded that the Inspector General legislation, as the later enactment, superseded the appropriation act provision. B-203900, February 2, 1989.

REV_00256727

Just as with any other application of the "last in time" rule, the later enactment prevails only to the extent of the irreconcilable conflict. B-61178, October 21, 1946 (specific limitations in appropriation act not superseded by after-enacted authorization absent indication that authorization was intended to alter provisions of prior appropriation).

Sometimes, application of the standard principles fails to produce a simple answer. For example, Congress appropriated $75 million for FY 1979 for urban formula grants "as authorized by the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964." When the appropriation was enacted, legislation was pending—and was enacted three months after the appropriation—repealing the existing formula and replacing it with a new and somewhat broader formula. The new formula provision specified that it was to be applicable to "sums appropriated pursuant to subparagraph (b) of this paragraph." On the one hand, since the original formula had been repealed, it could no longer control the use of the appropriation. Yet on the other hand, funds appropriated three months prior to passage of the new formula could not be said to have been appropriated "pursuant to" the new act. Hence, neither formula was clearly applicable to the $75 million. The Comptroller General concluded that the $75 million earmarked for the grant program had to be honored, and that it should be distributed in accordance with those portions of the new formula that were "consistent with the terms of the appropriation," that is, the funds should be used in accordance with those elements of the new formula that had also been reflected in the original formula. B-175155, July 25, 1979.

f. Two Statutes Enacted on Same Day

The Supreme Court has said that the doctrine against repeal by implication is even more forceful "where the one Act follows close upon the other, at the same session of the legislature." Morf v. Bingaman, 298 U.S. 407, 414 (1936). This being the case, the doctrine reaches perhaps its strongest point, and the "last in time" rule is correspondingly at its weakest, when both statutes are enacted on the same day. Except in the very rare case in which the intent of one statute to affect the other is particularly manifest, it makes little sense to apply a "last in time" concept where the time involved is a matter of hours, or as in one case (B-79243, September 28, 1948), seven minutes. Thus, the starting point is the presumption—applicable in all cases but even stronger in this situation—that Congress intended both statutes to stand together. 67 Comp. Gen. 332, 335 (1988); B-204078.2, May 6, 1988.

REV_00256728

When there is an apparent conflict between an appropriation act and another statute enacted on the same day, the approach is to make every effort to reconcile the statutes so as to give maximum effect to both. In some cases, it will be found that there is no real conflict. In 67 Comp. Gen. 332, for example, one statute authorized certain Commodity Credit Corporation appropriations to be made in the form of current, indefinite appropriations, while the appropriation act, enacted on the same day, made line-item appropriations. There was no conflict because the authorization provision was a directive to the Congress itself which Congress was free to disregard, subject to a possible point of order, when making the actual appropriation. Similarly, there was no inconsistency between an appropriation act provision which required that Panama Canal Commission appropriations be spent only in conformance with the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977 and its implementing legislation, and an authorization act provision, enacted on the same day, requiring prior specific authorizations. B-204078.2, May 6, 1988.

In other cases, applying traditional rules of statutory construction will produce reconciliation. For example, if one statute can be said to be more specific than the other, they can be reconciled by applying the more specific provision first, with the broader statute then applying to any remaining situations. See B-231662, September 1, 1988; B-79243, September 28, 1948.

Legislative history may also help. In B-207186, February 10, 1989, for example, authorizing legislation extended the life of the Solar Bank to March 15, 1988. The 1988 appropriation, enacted on the same day, made a 2-year appropriation for the Bank. Not only were there no indications of any intent for the appropriation to have the effect of extending the Bank's life, there were specific indications to the contrary. Thus, GAO regarded the appropriation as available, in theory for the full 2-year period, except that the authority for anyone to obligate the appropriation would cease when the Bank went out of existence.

REV_00256729

The most extreme situation, and one in which the "last in time" rule by definition cannot possibly apply, is two conflicting provisions in the same statute. Even here, the approaches outlined above will usually prove successful. See, e.g., B-211306, June 6, 1983. We have found only one case, 26 Comp. Dec. 534 (1920), in which two provisions in the same act were found irreconcilable. One provision in an appropriation act appropriated funds to the Army for the purchase of land; another provision a few pages later in the same act expressly prohibited the use of Army appropriations for the purchase of land. The Comptroller of the Treasury concluded, in a very brief decision, that the prohibition nullified the appropriation. The advantage of this result, although not stated this way in the decision, is that Congress would ultimately have to resolve the conflict and it is easier to make expenditures that have been deferred than to recoup money after it has been spent.

g. Ratification by Appropriation

"Ratification by appropriation" is the doctrine by which Congress can, by the appropriation of funds, confer legitimacy on an agency action which was questionable when it was taken. Clearly Congress may ratify that which it could have authorized. Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd. v. United States, 300 U.S. 297, 301-02 (1937). It is also settled that Congress may manifest its ratification by the appropriation of funds. Greene v. McElroy, 360 U.S. 474, 504-06 (1959); Ex Parte Endo, 323 U.S. 283, 303 n.24 (1944); Brooks v. Dewar, 313 U.S. 354, 360-61 (1941).

Having said this, however, we must also emphasize that "ratification by appropriation is not favored and will not be accepted where prior knowledge of the specific disputed action cannot be demonstrated clearly." D.C. Federation of Civic Associations v. Airis, 391 F.2d 478, 482 (D.C. Cir. 1968); Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc. v. Morton, 507 F.2d 1167, 1174 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 830. Thus, a simple lump-sum appropriation, without more, will generally not afford sufficient basis to find a ratification by appropriation. Endo, 323 U.S. at 303 n.24; Airis, 391 F.2d at 481-82; Wade v. Lewis, 561 F. Supp. 913, 944 (N.D. Ill. 1983); B-213771, July 10, 1984. The appropriation "must plainly show a purpose to bestow the precise authority which is claimed." Endo, 323 U.S. at 303 n.24.

REV_00256730

Some courts have used language which, when taken out of context, implies that appropriations cannot serve to ratify prior agency action. E.g., Concerned Residents of Buck Hill Falls v. Grant, 537 F.2d 29, 35 n.12 (3d Cir. 1976). Nevertheless, while the doctrine may not be favored, it does exist. We turn now to some specific situations in which the doctrine has been accepted or rejected.

Presidential reorganizations have generated perhaps the largest number of cases. Generally, when the President has created a new agency or has transferred a function from one agency to another, and Congress subsequently appropriates funds to the new agency or to the old agency for the new function, the courts have found that the appropriation ratified the Presidential action. Fleming v. Mohawk Wrecking & Lumber Co., 331 U.S. 111, 116 (1947); Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. v. United States, 300 U.S. 139, 147 (1937). The transfer to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in 1978 of enforcement responsibility for the Age Discrimination in Employment Act and the Equal Pay Act produced a minor flood of litigation. The cases were complicated by the existence of a legislative veto issue, with the ratification issue having to be faced only if the reorganization authority were found severable from the legislative veto. Although the courts were not uniform, a clear majority found that the subsequent appropriation of funds to the EEOC ratified the transfer. EEOC v. Dayton Power & Light Co., 605 F. Supp. 13 (S.D. Ohio 1984); EEOC v. Delaware Dept. of Health & Social Services, 595 F. Supp. 568 (D. Del. 1984); EEOC v. New York, 590 F. Supp. 37 (N.D.N.Y. 1984); EEOC v. Radio Montgomery, Inc., 588 F. Supp. 567 (W.D. Va. 1984); EEOC v. City of Memphis, 581 F. Supp. 179 (W.D. Tenn. 1983); Muller Optical Co. v. EEOC, 574 F. Supp. 946 (W.D. Tenn. 1983), aff'd on other grounds, 743 F.2d 380 (6th Cir. 1984). Contra, EEOC v. Martin Industries, 581 F. Supp. 1029 (N.D. Ala. 1984), appeal dismissed, 469 U.S. 806; EEOC v. Allstate Ins. Co., 570 F. Supp. 1224 (S.D. Miss. 1983), appeal dismissed, 467 U.S. 1232. Congress resolved any doubt by enacting legislation in 1984 to expressly ratify all prior reorganization plans implemented pursuant to any reorganization statute.[45]

Another group of cases has refused to find ratification by appropriation for proposed construction projects funded under lump-sum appropriations where the effect would be either to expand the [45]Pub. L. No. 98-532, 98 Stat. 2705 (1984), 5 U.S.C. § 906 note.

REV_00256731

e. Criminal Justice Act 4-59
(1) Types of actions covered 4-60
(2) Miscellaneous cases 4-61
f. Equal Access to Justice Act 4-62
g. Contract Matters 4-66
(1) Bid protests 4-66
(2) Contract disputes 4-67
h. Public Participation in Administrative Proceedings: Funding of Intervenors 4-68
4. Compensation Restrictions 4-74
a. Employment of Aliens 4-75
b. Forfeiture of Annuities and Retired Pay 4-78
(1) General principles 4-78
(2) The Alger Hiss case 4-79
(3) Types of offenses covered 4-80
(4) Related statutory provisions 4-81
5. Entertainment—Recreation—Morale and Welfare 4-82
a. Introduction 4-82
(1) Application of the rule 4-82
(2) What is entertainment? 4-83
b. Food for Government Employees 4-84
(1) Working at official duty station under unusual conditions 4-86
(2) Attendance at meetings and conferences 4-88
(3) Government Employees Training Act . . . 4-94
(4) Award ceremonies 4-95
(5) Cafeterias and lunch facilities 4-96
c. Entertainment for Government Employees Other Than Food 4-97
(1) Miscellaneous cases 4-97
(2) Cultural awareness programs 4-98
d. Entertainment of Non-Government Personnel 4-100
e. Recreational and Welfare Facilities for Government Personnel 4-103
(1) The rules: older cases and modern trends 4-103
(2) Child care 4-106
f. Reception and Representation Funds 4-109
6. Fines and Penalties 4-114
7. Firefighting and Other Municipal Services 4-119
a. Firefighting Services: Availability of Appropriations 4-119 scope of a prior congressional authorization or to supply an authorization required by statute but not obtained. Libby Rod and Gun Club v. Poteat, 594 F.2d 742 (9th Cir. 1979); National Wildlife Federation v. Andrus, 440 F. Supp. 1245 (D.D.C. 1977); Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Callaway, 382 F. Supp. 610 (D.D.C. 1974); B-223725, June 9, 1987.

REV_00256633

A few additional cases in which ratification by appropriation was found are summarized below:

- The Tennessee Valley Authority had asserted the authority to construct power plants. TVA's position was based on an interpretation of its enabling legislation which the court found consistent with the purpose of the legislation although the legislation itself was ambiguous. The appropriation of funds to TVA for power plant construction ratified TVA's position. Young v. TVA, 606 F.2d 143 (6th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 942.
- The authority of the Postmaster General to conduct a mail transportation experiment was ratified by the appropriation of funds to the former Post Office Department under circumstances showing that Congress was fully aware of the experiment. The court noted that existing statutory authority was broad enough to encompass the experiment, and nothing prohibited it. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Summerfield, 229 F.2d 777 (D.C. Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 351 U.S. 926.
- The authority of the Department of Justice to retain private counsel to defend federal officials in limited circumstances, while not explicitly provided by statute, is regarded as ratified by the specific appropriation of funds for that purpose. 2 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 66 (1978).

Note that in all of the cases in which ratification by appropriation was approved, the agency had at least an arguable legal basis for its action. See also Airis, 391 F.2d at 481 n.20; B-232482, June 4, 1990. The doctrine has not been used to excuse violations of law. Also, when an agency action is constitutionally suspect, the courts will require that congressional action be particularly explicit. Greene v. McElroy, 360 U.S. at 506-07; EEOC v. Martin Industries, 581 F. Supp. at 1033-37; Muller Optical Co. v. EEOC, 574 F. Supp. at 954.

REV_00256732

h. Repeal by Implication

We have on several occasions referred to the rule against repeal by implication. The leading case in the appropriations context is Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153 (1978). In that case, Congress had authorized construction of the Tellico Dam and Reservoir Project on the Little Tennessee River, and had appropriated initial funds for that purpose. Subsequently, Congress passed the Endangered Species Act of 1973. Under the provisions of that Act, the Secretary of the Interior declared the "snail darter," a three-inch fish, to be an endangered species. It was eventually determined that the Little Tennessee River was the snail darter's critical habitat and that completion of the dam would result in extinction of the species. Consequently, environmental groups and others brought an action to halt further construction of the Tellico Project. In its decision, the Supreme Court held in favor of the plaintiffs, notwithstanding the fact that construction was well under way and that, even after the Secretary of the Interior's actions regarding the snail darter, Congress had continued to make yearly appropriations for the completion of the dam project.

The appropriation involved was a lump-sum appropriation which included funds for the Tellico Dam but made no specific reference to it. However, passages in the reports of the appropriations committees indicated that those committees intended the funds to be available notwithstanding the Endangered Species Act. The Court held that this was not enough. The doctrine against repeal by implication, the Court said, applies with even greater force when the claimed repeal rests solely on an appropriation act.

> "When voting on appropriations measures, legislators are entitled to operate under the assumption that the funds will be devoted to purposes which are lawful and not for any purpose forbidden."

Id. at 190. Noting that "[e]xpressions of committees dealing with requests for appropriations cannot be equated with statutes enacted by Congress" (id. at 191), the Court held that the unspecified inclusion of the Tellico Dam funds in a lump-sum appropriation was not sufficient to constitute a repeal by implication of the Endangered Species Act insofar as it related to that project.[46] In other words, the doctrine of ratification by appropriation we discussed in the preceding section does not apply, at least when the appropriation is an otherwise unspecified lump sum, where the effect would be to change an existing statutory requirement.

[46]Less than four months after the Court's decision, Congress enacted legislation exempting the Tellico project from the Endangered Species Act. Endangered Species Act Amendments of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-632, § 5, 92 Stat. 3751, 3761 (1978).

REV_00256733

TVA v. Hill is important because it is a clear and forceful statement from the Supreme Court. In terms of the legal principle involved, however, the Court was breaking little new ground. A body of case law from the lower courts had already laid the legal foundation. One group of cases, for example, had established the proposition that the appropriation of funds does not excuse non-compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act. Environmental Defense Fund v. Froehlke, 473 F.2d 346 (8th Cir. 1972); Committee for Nuclear Responsibility v. Seaborg, 463 F.2d 783 (D.C. Cir. 1971); National Audubon Society v. Andrus, 442 F. Supp. 42 (D.D.C. 1977); Environmental Defense Fund v. Corps of Engineers, 325 F. Supp. 749 (E.D. Ark. 1971). Cases supporting the general proposition of TVA v. Hill in other contexts were also not uncommon. See Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc. v. Morton, 507 F.2d 1167 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 830; D.C. Federation of Civic Associations v. Airis, 391 F.2d 478 (D.C. Cir. 1968); and Maiatico v. United States, 302 F.2d 880 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

Some subsequent cases applying the concept of TVA v. Hill (although not all citing that case) include Donovan v. Carolina Stalite Co., 734 F.2d 1547 (D.C. Cir. 1984); 64 Comp. Gen. 282 (1985); B-208593.6, December 22, 1988; B-213771, July 10, 1984; B-204874, July 28, 1982; and B-193307, February 6, 1979. In B-204874, for example, the Comptroller General advised that the otherwise unrestricted appropriation of coal trespass receipts to the Bureau of Land Management did not implicitly amend or repeal the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act prescribing the use of such funds.

In reading the cases, one will encounter the occasional sweeping statement such as "appropriations acts cannot change existing law," National Audubon Society v. Andrus, 442 F. Supp. at 45. Such statements can be misleading, and should be read in the context of the facts of the particular case. It is clear from TVA v. Hill, together with its ancestors and its progeny, that Congress cannot legislate by legislative history. It seems equally clear that the appropriation of funds, without more, is not sufficient to overcome a statutory requirement. If, however, instead of an unrestricted lump sum, the appropriation in Hill had provided a specific line-item appropriation for the Tellico project, together with the words "notwithstanding the provisions of the Endangered Species Act," it is difficult to see how a court could fail to give effect to the express mandate of the appropriation.

REV_00256734

Thus, the message is not that Congress cannot legislate in an appropriation act. It can, and we have previously cited a body of case law to that effect. The real message is that, if Congress wants to use an appropriation act as the vehicle for suspending, modifying, or repealing a provision of existing law, it must do so advisedly, speaking directly and explicitly to the issue.

i. Lack of Authorization

As we have previously noted, there is no general statutory requirement that appropriations be preceded by specific authorizations, although they are required in some instances. Where authorizations are not required by law, Congress may, subject to a possible point of order, appropriate funds for a program or object which has not been previously authorized or which exceeds the scope of a prior authorization, in which event the enacted appropriation, in effect, carries its own authorization and is available to the agency for obligation and expenditure. E.g., 67 Comp. Gen. 401 (1988); B-219727, July 30, 1985; B-173832, August 1, 1975.

It has also been held that, as a general proposition, the appropriation of funds for a program whose funding authorization has expired, or is due to expire during the period of availability of the appropriation, provides sufficient legal basis to continue the program during that period of availability, absent indication of contrary congressional intent. 65 Comp. Gen. 524 (1986); 65 Comp. Gen. 318, 320-21 (1986); 55 Comp. Gen. 289 (1975); B-131935, March 17, 1986; B-137063, March 21, 1966. The result in these cases follows in part from the fact that the total absence of appropriations authorization legislation would not have precluded the making of valid appropriations for the programs. E.g., B-202992, May 15, 1981. In addition, as noted, the result is premised on the conclusion, derived either from legislative history or at least the absence of legislative history to the contrary, that Congress did not intend for the programs to terminate.

There are limits on how far this principle can be taken, depending on the particular circumstances. One illustration is B-207186, February 10, 1989. A 1988 continuing resolution provided funds for the Solar Bank, to remain available until September 30, 1989. Legislation enacted on the same day provided for the Bank to terminate on March 15, 1988. Based in part on legislative history indicating the intent to terminate the Bank on the specified sunset date, GAO distinguished prior decisions in which appropriations were found to authorize program continuation, and concluded that the appropriation did not authorize continuation of the Solar Bank beyond March 15, 1988.

REV_00256735

A device Congress has used on occasion to avoid this type of problem is an "automatic extension" provision, under which funding authorization is automatically extended for a specified time period if Congress has not enacted new authorizing legislation before it expires. An example is discussed in B-214456, May 14, 1984.

Questions concerning the effect of appropriations on expired or about-to-expire authorizations have tended to arise more frequently in the context of continuing resolutions. The topic is discussed further, including several of the cases cited above, in Chapter 8.

Where specific authorization is statutorily required, the case may become more difficult. In Libby Rod and Gun Club v. Poteat, 594 F.2d 742 (9th Cir. 1979), the court held that a lump-sum appropriation available for dam construction was not, by itself, sufficient to authorize a construction project for which specific authorization had not been obtained as required by 33 U.S.C. § 401. The court suggested that TVA v. Hill and similar cases do not "mandate the conclusion that courts can never construe appropriations as congressional authorization," although it was not necessary to further address that issue in view of the specific requirement in that case. Poteat, 594 F.2d at 745-46. The result would presumably have been different if Congress had made a specific appropriation "notwithstanding the provisions of 33 U.S.C. § 401." It should be apparent that the doctrines of repeal by implication and ratification by appropriation are relevant in analyzing issues of this type.

REV_00256736

D. Statutory Interpretation: Determining Congressional Intent

"[T]his is a case for applying the canon of construction of the wag who said, when the legislative history is doubtful, go to the statute." Greenwood v. United States, 350 U.S. 366, 374 (1956) (Frankfurter, J.).

1. The Goal of Statutory Construction [47]

As we have noted elsewhere, an appropriation can be made only by means of a statute. In addition to providing funds, the typical appropriation act includes a variety of general provisions. Anyone who works with appropriations matters will also have frequent need to consult authorizing and program legislation. It should thus be apparent that the interpretation of statutes is of critical importance to appropriations law.[48]

The objective of this section is to provide a brief overview, designed primarily for those who do not work extensively with legislative materials. The cases we cite are but a sampling, selected for illustrative purposes or for a particularly good judicial statement of a point. The literature in the area is voluminous, and readers who need more than we can provide are encouraged to consult one of the established treatises such as Sutherland's Statutes and Statutory Construction.

The goal of statutory construction is simply stated: to determine and give effect to the intent of the enacting legislature. Philbrook v. Glodgett, 421 U.S. 707, 713 (1975); United States v. American Trucking Associations, Inc., 310 U.S. 534, 542 (1940); 55 Comp. Gen. 307, 317 (1975); 38 Comp. Gen. 229 (1958). While the goal may be simple, the means of achieving it are complex and often controversial. The primary vehicle for determining legislative intent is the language of the statute itself. When this does not suffice, there is an established body of principles, centering primarily on the use of legislative history, to aid in the effort.

[47]There is a technical distinction between "interpretation" (determining the meaning of words) and "construction" (application of words to facts). 2A Sutherland, Statutes and Statutory Construction § 45.04 (4th ed. 1984). The distinction, as Sutherland points out, has little practical value. We, as does Sutherland, use the terms interchangeably.

[48]"But if Congress has all the money of the United States under its control, it also has the whole English language to give it away with . . . ." 9 Op. Att'y Gen. 57, 59 (1857).

REV_00256737

At this point, it is important to recognize that the concept of "legislative intent" is in many cases a fiction. Where not clear from the statutory language itself, it is often impossible to ascribe an intent to Congress as a whole.[49] As we will note later, a committee report represents the views of that committee. Statements by an individual legislator represent the views of that individual. Either may, but do not necessarily or inherently, reflect a broader congressional perception. For this reason, the use of legislative history to determine congressional intent has come under increased criticism. To say this, however, is by no means to denigrate the process. Applying the complex maze of rules and "canons of construction," imperfect as the process may be, serves the essential purpose of providing a common basis for problem-solving.

This in turn is important for two reasons. First, everyone has surely heard the familiar statement that our government is a government of laws and not of men.[50] This means that you have a right to have your conduct governed and judged in accordance with identifiable principles and standards, not by the whim of the decisionmaker. Second, the law should be reasonably predictable. A lawyer's advice that a proposed action is or is not permissible amounts to a reasoned and informed judgment as to what a court is likely to do if the action is challenged. While this can never be an absolute guarantee, it once again must be based on identifiable principles and standards. Conceding its weaknesses, the law of statutory construction represents an organized approach for doing this.

2. The "Plain Meaning" Rule

"The Court's task is to construe not English but congressional English." Commissioner v. Acker, 361 U.S. 87, 95 (1959) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

By far the most important rule of statutory construction is this: You start with the language of the statute. Mallard v. United States District Court, 490 U.S. 296, 300 (1989). The primary vehicle for Congress to express its intent is the words it enacts into law. As stated in an early Supreme Court decision:

[49]E.g., United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 318 (1897): "Looking simply at the history of the bill from the time it was introduced in the Senate until it was finally passed, it would be impossible to say what were the views of a majority of the members of each house in relation to the meaning of the act."

[50]"The government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws, and not of men." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 163 (1803).

REV_00256738

"The law as it passed is the will of the majority of both houses, and the only mode in which that will is spoken is in the act itself; and we must gather their intention from the language there used . . . ."

Aldridge v. Williams, 44 U.S. (3 How.) 9, 24 (1845). A somewhat better-known statement is from United States v. American Trucking Associations, 310 U.S. at 543:

"There is, of course, no more persuasive evidence of the purpose of a statute than the words by which the legislature undertook to give expression to its wishes."

If the meaning is clear from the language of the statute, there is no need to resort to legislative history or any other extraneous source. This is the so-called "plain meaning" rule. If the meaning is "plain," you apply that meaning and that's the end of the inquiry. E.g., Mallard v. District Court, 490 U.S. 296; United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241 (1989); Aloha Airlines, Inc. v. Director of Taxation, 464 U.S. 7, 12 (1983); Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 570 (1982); TVA v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 184 n.29 (1978); Ex parte Collett, 337 U.S. 55, 61 (1949); Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485, 490 (1917); 56 Comp. Gen. 943 (1977); B-230656, April 4, 1988. In Mallard, for example, the Supreme Court held that a court may not require an unwilling attorney to represent an indigent litigant under a statute providing that a court "may request an attorney to represent" indigents in civil cases. "Request" simply does not mean "require."

One common-sense way to determine the plain meaning of a word is to consult a dictionary. E.g., Mallard, 490 U.S. at 301; American Mining Congress v. EPA, 824 F.2d 1177, 1183-84 & n.7 (D.C. Cir. 1987). As a perusal of any dictionary will show, words often have more than one meaning.[51] The "plain meaning" will be the ordinary, everyday meaning rather than some obscure usage. E.g., Mallard, 490 U.S. at 301; 38 Comp. Gen. 812 (1959). If a word has more than one ordinary meaning and the context of the statute does not make it clear which is being used, there may well be no "plain meaning" for purposes of that statute.

[51] "A word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged, it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used." Towne v. Eisner, 245 U.S. 418, 425 (1918) (Holmes, J.).

REV_00256739

The converse of the plain meaning rule is that it is legitimate and proper to resort to legislative history when the meaning of the statutory language is not plain on its face. Again, we start with an early Supreme Court passage, this one a famous statement by Chief Justice John Marshall:

"Where the mind labours to discover the design of the legislature, it seizes every thing from which aid can be derived . . . ."

United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 358, 386 (1805). See also United States v. Donruss Co., 393 U.S. 297, 302-03 (1969); Caminetti, 242 U.S. at 490 (legislative history "may aid the courts in reaching the true meaning of the legislature in cases of doubtful interpretation").

Like all "rules" of statutory construction, the plain meaning rule is "rather an axiom of experience than a rule of law, and does not preclude consideration of persuasive evidence if it exists." Boston Sand and Gravel Co. v. United States, 278 U.S. 41, 48 (1928) (Holmes, J.), quoted in Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 266 (1981). In another often-quoted statement, the Court said:

"When aid to construction of the meaning of words, as used in the statute, is available, there certainly can be no 'rule of law' which forbids its use, however clear the words may appear on 'superficial examination'" [footnotes omitted].

United States v. American Trucking Associations, Inc., 310 U.S. 534, 543-44 (1940), quoted in, for example, Train v. Colorado Public Interest Research Group, 426 U.S. 1, 10 (1976).

Thus, it is generally accepted that the literal language of a statute will not be followed if it would produce a result demonstrably inconsistent with clearly expressed congressional intent. The case probably most frequently cited for this proposition is Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U.S. 457 (1892), which gives several interesting examples. One of those examples is United States v. Kirby, 74 U.S. (7 Wall.) 482 (1868), in which the Court held that a statute making it a criminal offense to knowingly and wilfully obstruct or retard a driver or carrier of the mails did not apply to a sheriff arresting a mail carrier who had been indicted for murder. Another is an old English ruling that a statute making it a felony to break out of jail did not apply to a prisoner who broke out because the jail was on fire. Holy Trinity, 143 U.S. at 460-61. An example from early administrative decisions might be 24 Comp. Dec. 775 (1918), holding that an appropriation for "messenger boys" was available to hire "messenger girls."[52] See also "Errors in Statutes" later in this chapter.

REV_00256740

In cases subsequent to Holy Trinity, the Court has emphasized that departures from the plain meaning rule are justified only in "rare and exceptional circumstances," such as the illustrations used in Holy Trinity. Crooks v. Harrelson, 282 U.S. 55, 60 (1930). See also United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 242 (1989); Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 571 (1982); TVA v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 187 n.33 (1978) (citing Crooks v. Harrelson with approval).

The exception to the plain meaning rule is also sometimes phrased in terms of avoiding "absurd consequences." E.g., United States v. Ryan, 284 U.S. 167, 175 (1931). As the dissenting opinion in TVA v. Hill points out (437 U.S. at 204 n.14), there is a bit of confusion in this respect in that Crooks—again, cited with approval by the majority in TVA v. Hill—explicitly states that avoiding absurd consequences is not enough, although the Court has used the "absurd consequence" formulation in post-Crooks cases such as Ryan. In any event, as a comparison of the majority and dissenting opinions in TVA v. Hill will demonstrate, the "absurd consequences" test is not always easy to apply in that what strikes one person as absurd may be good law to another.

3. Use of Legislative History

a. Uses and Limitations

The term "legislative history" refers to the body of congressionally-generated written documents relating to a bill from the time of introduction to the time of enactment. Legislative history is always relevant in the sense that it is never "wrong" to look at it. Thus, most cases purporting to apply the plain meaning rule also review legislative history—TVA v. Hill being one good example—if for no other reason than to establish that nothing in that history contradicts the court's view of what the plain meaning is.

[52]The decision had nothing to do with equality of the sexes; the "boys" were all off fighting World War I.

REV_00256741

b. Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974 4-123
c. Other Municipal Services 4-124
8. Gifts and Awards 4-128
a. Gifts 4-128
b. Contests 4-131
(1) Entry fees 4-131
(2) Government-sponsored contests 4-132
c. Awards 4-133
9. Guard Services: Anti-Pinkerton Act 4-139
a. Evolution of the Law Prior to 57 Comp. Gen. 524 4-139
b. 57 Comp. Gen. 524 and the Present State of the Law 4-142
10. Insurance 4-144
a. The Self-Insurance Rule 4-144
b. Exceptions to the Rule 4-147
(1) Departments and agencies generally . . . 4-147
(2) Government corporations 4-150
c. Specific Areas of Concern 4-151
(1) Property owned by government contractors 4-151
(2) Use of motor vehicles 4-152
(3) Losses in shipment 4-154
(4) Bonding of government personnel 4-154
11. Lobbying and Related Matters 4-156
a. Introduction 4-156
b. Criminal Statutes 4-157
c. Appropriation Act Restrictions: Publicity and Propaganda 4-161
(1) Origin and general considerations 4-161
(2) Self-aggrandizement 4-164
(3) Covert propaganda 4-166
(4) Providing assistance to private lobbying groups 4-167
(5) Pending legislation: overview 4-169
(6) Cases involving "grass roots" lobbying violations 4-172
(7) Pending legislation: cases in which no violation was found 4-175
d. Lobbying with Grant Funds 4-179
e. Government Employees Training Act 4-184
f. Informational Activities 4-185

REV_00256634

It is entirely proper to use legislative history to seek guidance on the purpose of a statute (to see, for example, what kinds of problems Congress wanted to address), or to confirm the apparent plain meaning, or to resolve ambiguities. A classic example of the latter is a statute using the words "science" or "scientific." Either term, without more, does not tell you whether the statute applies to the social sciences as well as the physical sciences. E.g., American Kennel Club, Inc. v. Hoey, 148 F.2d 920, 922 (2d Cir. 1945); B-181142, August 5, 1974 (GAO recommended term "science and technology" in a bill be defined to avoid this ambiguity). If the statute does not include a definition, you would look next to the legislative history.

The use becomes improper when the line is crossed from using legislative history to resolve things that are not clear from the statutory language to using it to rewrite the statute. The Comptroller General put it this way:

> "[A]s a general proposition, there is a distinction to be made between utilizing legislative history for the purpose of illuminating the intent underlying language used in a statute and resorting to that history for the purpose of writing into the law that which is not there."

55 Comp. Gen. 307, 325 (1975). To pursue this thought with our "science" example, if a statute authorizing grants for scientific research explicitly defined the term as meaning the physical and biological sciences, grants for research in economics or sociology would not be authorized, notwithstanding any legislative history to the contrary. Or, to take an illustration in a lighter vein, suppose Congress enacted a law to "regulate the feeding of garbage to swine."[53] One might legitimately ask precisely what Congress intended to include in the term "garbage." If the statute did not include a definition, the legislative history might provide guidance.[54] On the other hand, if someone asked whether the law applied to farm animals other than swine (assuming anyone would consider feeding garbage to other farm animals), the answer would clearly be no, unless specified in the statute itself. One term is inherently ambiguous; the other is plain on its face.

[53]Yes, it exists. It's the Swine Health Protection Act, Pub. L. No. 96-468, 94 Stat. 2229 (1980), 7 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3813.

[54]In this case, the statute does define the term. See 7 U.S.C. § 3802(2).

REV_00256742

b. Components and Their Relative Weight

Legislative history falls generally into three categories: committee reports, floor debates, and hearings. For probative purposes, they bear an established relationship to one another. Let us emphasize before proceeding, however, that listing items of legislative history in an "order of persuasiveness" is merely a guideline. The evidentiary value of any piece of legislative history depends on its relationship to other available legislative history and, most importantly, to the language of the statute.

(1) Committee reports

The most authoritative single source of legislative history is the conference report. E.g., Squillacote v. United States, 739 F.2d 1208, 1218 (7th Cir. 1984); B-142011, April 30, 1971. This is especially true if the statutory language in question was drafted by the conference committee. The reason the conference report occupies the highest rung on the ladder is that it must be voted on and adopted by both Houses, and thus is the only legislative history document that can be said to reflect the will of both Houses. Commissioner v. Acker, 361 U.S. 87, 94 (1959) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

Next in sequence are the reports of the legislative committees which considered the bill and reported it out to their respective Houses. The Supreme Court has consistently been willing to rely on committee reports when otherwise appropriate. E.g., Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 474 (1921); United States v. St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co., 247 U.S. 310, 318 (1918); Lapina v. Williams, 232 U.S. 78, 90 (1914).

However, material in committee reports, even a conference report, will ordinarily not be used to controvert clear statutory language. Squillacote, 739 F.2d at 1218; Hart v. United States, 585 F.2d 1025 (Ct. Cl. 1978); B-33911/B-62187, July 15, 1948.

Committee reports, as with all legislative history, must be used with caution. The following two passages reflect recent criticism of excessive reliance on committee reports. The first is from the opinion of the Court of Claims in Hart v. United States, 585 F.2d at 1033, quoted in Conlon v. United States, 8 Cl. Ct. 30, 33 (1985):

"We note that with the swiftly growing use of the staff system by Congress, many congressional documents may be generated that are not really considered fully by each or perhaps by any legislator. Thus, committee reports and the like are perhaps less trustworthy sources of congressional intent than they used to be, and less than the actual wording of the legislation, which one would hope received more thorough consideration prior to enactment. If there is inadvertent error either in the statute or in the committee report, the offender is more likely to be the latter, surely."

REV_00256743

The second is an excerpt from a colloquy between Senators Armstrong and Dole which took place on July 19, 1982:

"Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, did members of the Finance Committee vote on the committee report?

"Mr. DOLE. No.

"Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the reason I raise the issue is not perhaps apparent on the surface . . . . The report itself is not considered by the Committee on Finance. It was not subject to amendment by the Committee on Finance. It is not subject to amendment now by the Senate.

. . . .

"I only wish the record to reflect that this is not statutory language. It is not before us. If there were matter within this report which was disagreed to by the Senator from Colorado or even by a majority of all Senators, there would be no way for us to change the report. I could not offer an amendment tonight to amend the committee report.

". . .[F]or any jurist, administrator, bureaucrat, tax practitioner, or others who might chance upon the written record of this proceeding, let me just make the point that this is not the law, it was not voted on, it is not subject to amendment, and we should discipline ourselves to the task of expressing congressional intent in the statute."[55]

Notwithstanding the imperfections of the system, in those cases where there is a need to resort to legislative history, committee reports remain generally recognized as the best source.

(2) Floor debates

Proceeding downward on the ladder, after committee reports come floor debates. Statements made in the course of floor debates have traditionally been regarded as suspect in that they are "expressive [55]128 Cong. Rec. 16918-19 (1982), quoted in Hirschey v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 777 F.2d 1, 7 n.1 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (Scalia, J., concurring).

REV_00256744

of the views and motives of individual members." Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 474 (1921). In addition—

> "[I]t is impossible to determine with certainty what construction was put upon an act by the members of a legislative body that passed it by resorting to the speeches of individual members thereof. Those who did not speak may not have agreed with those who did; and those who spoke might differ from each other . . . ."

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 318 (1897). Some of the earlier cases, such as Trans-Missouri Freight, indicate that floor debates should never be taken into consideration. Under the more modern view, however, they may be considered, the real question being the weight they should receive in various circumstances.

Floor debates are less authoritative than committee reports. Garcia v. United States, 469 U.S. 70, 76 (1984); Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168, 186 (1969); United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 385 (1968); United States v. United Automobile Workers, 352 U.S. 567, 585 (1957). It follows that they will not be regarded as persuasive if they conflict with explicit statements in more authoritative portions of legislative history such as committee reports. United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., 315 U.S. 110, 125 (1942); B-114829, June 27, 1975.

Debates will carry considerably more weight when they are the only available legislative history as, for example, in the case of a post-report floor amendment. Northeast Bancorp, Inc. v. Board of Governors, 472 U.S. 159, 169-70 (1985); Preterm, Inc. v. Dukakis, 591 F.2d 121, 128 (1st Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 952. Indeed, the Preterm court suggested that "heated and lengthy debates" in which "the views expressed were those of a wide spectrum" of members might be more valuable in discerning congressional intent than committee reports "which represent merely the views of [the committee's] members and may never have come to the attention of Congress as a whole." Preterm, 591 F.2d at 133.

The weight to be given statements made in floor debates varies with the identity of the speaker. Thus, statements by legislators in charge of a bill, such as the pertinent committee chairperson, have been regarded as "in the nature of a supplementary report" and receive somewhat more weight. United States v. St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co., 247 U.S. 310, 318 (1918). See also McCaughn v. Hershey Chocolate Co., 283 U.S. 488, 493-94 (1931) (statements by Members "who were not in charge of the bill" were "without weight"); Duplex v. Deering, 254 U.S. at 474-75; National Labor Relations Board v. Thompson Products, Inc., 141 F.2d 794, 798 (9th Cir. 1944). The Supreme Court's statement in St. Paul Ry. Co. gave rise to the entirely legitimate practice of "making" legislative history by preparing questions and answers in advance, to be presented on the floor and answered by the Member in charge of the bill.[56]

REV_00256745

Statements by the sponsor of a bill are also entitled to somewhat more weight. E.g., Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 394-95 (1951); Ex Parte Kawato, 317 U.S. 69, 77 (1942). However, they are not controlling. Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 311 (1979).

Statements by the opponents of a bill expressing their "fears and doubts" generally receive little, if any, weight. Shell Oil Co. v. Iowa Dept. of Revenue, 488 U.S. 19, 29 (1988); Schwegmann, 341 U.S. at 394. However, even the statements of opponents may be "relevant and useful," although not authoritative, in certain circumstances, such as, for example, where the supporters of a bill make no response to opponents' criticisms. Arizona v. California, 373 U.S. 546, 583 n.85 (1963); Parlane Sportswear Co. v. Weinberger, 513 F.2d 835, 837 (1st Cir. 1975).

Where Senate and House floor debates suggest conflicting interpretations and there is no more authoritative source of legislative history available, it is legitimate to give weight to such factors as which House originated the provision in question and which House has the more detailed and "clear cut" history. Steiner v. Mitchell, 350 U.S. 247, 254 (1956); 49 Comp. Gen. 411 (1970).

(3) Hearings

Hearings occupy the bottom rung on the ladder. They are valuable for many reasons: they help define the problem Congress is [56]The origin and use of this device were explained in a floor statement by former Senator Morse on March 26, 1964. See 110 Cong. Rec. 6423 (1964).

REV_00256746

addressing; they present opposing viewpoints for Congress to consider; and they provide the opportunity for public participation in the lawmaking process. As legislative history, however, they are the least persuasive form. The reason is that they reflect only the personal opinion and motives of the witness. It is impossible to attribute these opinions and motives to anyone in Congress, let alone Congress as a whole, unless more authoritative forms of legislative history expressly adopt them. As one court has stated, an isolated excerpt from the statement of a witness at hearings "is not entitled to consideration in determining legislative intent." Pacific Ins. Co. v. United States, 188 F.2d 571, 572 (9th Cir. 1951). "It would indeed be absurd," said another court, "to suppose that the testimony of a witness by itself could be used to interpret an act of Congress." SEC v. Collier, 76 F.2d 939, 941 (2d Cir. 1935).

There is one significant exception. Testimony by the government agency which recommended the bill or amendment in question, and which often helped draft it, is entitled to special weight. Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 12 n.13 (1948); SEC v. Collier, 76 F.2d at 941.

Also, testimony at hearings can be more valuable as legislative history if it can be demonstrated that the language of a bill was revised in direct response to that testimony. Relevant factors include the presence or absence of statements in more authoritative history linking the change to the testimony; the proximity in time of the change to the testimony; and the precise language of the change as compared to what was offered in the testimony. See Premachandra v. Mitts, 753 F.2d 635, 640-41 (8th Cir. 1985). See also Allen v. State Board of Elections, 393 U.S. 544, 566-68 (1969); SEC v. Collier, 76 F.2d at 940, 941.

c. Post-Enactment Statements

Observers of the often difficult task of discerning congressional intent occasionally ask, isn't there an easier way to do this? Why don't you just call the sponsor or the committee and ask what they had in mind? The answer is that post-enactment statements have virtually no weight in determining prior congressional intent. The reason is that it is impossible to demonstrate that the substance of a post hoc statement reflects the intent of the pre-enactment Congress, unless it can be corroborated by pre-enactment statements, in which event it would be unnecessary. Or, as the Supreme Court has said:

REV_00256747

"Since such statements cannot possibly have informed the vote of the legislators who earlier enacted the law, there is no more basis for considering them than there is to conduct postenactment polls of the original legislators."

Pittston Coal Group v. Sebben, 488 U.S. 105, 118-19 (1988).

This rule applies regardless of the identity of the speaker (sponsor, committee, committee chairman, etc.) and regardless of the form of the statement (report, floor statement, letter, affidavit, etc.). There are numerous cases in which the courts, and particularly the Supreme Court, have expressed the unwillingness to give weight to post-enactment statements. See, e.g., Bread Political Action Committee v. Federal Election Commission, 455 U.S. 577, 582 n.3 (1982); Quern v. Mandley, 436 U.S. 725, 736 n.10 (1978); Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 132 (1974); United States v. Southwestern Cable Co., 392 U.S. 157, 170 (1968); Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85, 87 n.4 (1968). GAO naturally follows the same principle. E.g., 54 Comp. Gen. 819, 822 (1975).

Even post-enactment material may be taken into consideration, despite its very limited value, when there is absolutely nothing else. See B-169491, June 16, 1980.

4. Some Other Principles

Many other principles or "canons" of construction exist to aid in the interpretation of statutes. Again, they are guidelines rather than rigid rules, and their application depends on their relationship to the totality of available evidence. We note here a few useful points.

a. Title

The title of a statute is relevant in determining its scope and purpose. By "title" in this context we mean the line on the slip law immediately following the words "An Act," as distinguished from the statute's "popular name," if any. For example, Public Law 97-177 is "An Act [t]o require the Federal Government to pay interest on overdue payments, and for other purposes" (title); section 1 says that the act may be cited as the "Prompt Payment Act" (popular name). A public law may or may not have a popular name; it always has a title.

The title of an act may not be used to change the plain meaning of the enacting clauses. It is evidence of the act's scope and purpose, however, and may legitimately be taken into consideration to resolve ambiguities. E.g., Lapina v. Williams, 232 U.S. 78, 92 (1914); White v. United States, 191 U.S. 545, 550 (1903); Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U.S. 457, 462-63 (1892); United States v. Fisher, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 358, 386 (1805); 36 Comp. Gen. 389 (1956); 19 Comp. Gen. 739, 742 (1940). To illustrate, in Church of the Holy Trinity, the Court used the title of the statute in question, "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States," as support for its conclusion that the statute was not intended to apply to professional persons, specifically in that case, ministers and pastors.

REV_00256748

The utility of this principle will, of course, depend on the degree of specificity in the title. Its value has been considerably diminished by the practice, found in many recent statutes such as the Prompt Payment Act noted above, of adding on the words "and for other purposes."

b. Punctuation

Punctuation may be taken into consideration when no better evidence exists, although punctuation or the lack of it should never be the controlling factor. For example, whether an "except" clause is or is not set off by a comma may help determine whether the exception applies to the entire provision or just to the portion immediately preceding the "except" clause. E.g., B-218812, January 23, 1987.

Punctuation was a relevant factor in the majority opinion in United States v. Ron Pair Enterprises, Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241-42 (1989). A number of additional cases, which we do not repeat here, are cited in Justice O'Connor's dissenting opinion, 489 U.S. at 249.

c. Effect of Omission

In the course of researching legislative history, you occasionally find a provision especially pertinent to your inquiry that was in the original version of a bill but was deleted later in the legislative process, or was proposed in a floor amendment but not adopted. It is tempting to draw inferences from the omission. For example, if an amendment is proposed to exempt a particular situation but is rejected, it might seem that Congress obviously did not want the exemption.

However, unless the legislative history explains the reason for the omission or deletion or the reason is indisputably clear from the context, drawing conclusions is little more than speculation. Perhaps Congress did not want that particular provision; perhaps Congress felt it was already covered in the same or other legislation. Absent an explanation, the effect of such an omission or deletion is simply inconclusive. Fox v. Standard Oil Co., 294 U.S. 87, 96 (1935); Southern Packaging and Storage Co. v. United States, 588 F. Supp. 532, 549 (D.S.C. 1984); 63 Comp. Gen. 498, 501-02 (1984); 63 Comp. Gen. 470, 472 (1984).

REV_00256749

d. Similar Words in Same Statute

When Congress uses the same term in more than one place in the same statute, it is presumed that Congress intends for the same meaning to apply absent evidence to the contrary. The Comptroller General stated the principle as follows in 29 Comp. Gen. 143, 145 (1949), a case involving the term "pay and allowances":

> "[I]t is a settled rule of statutory construction that it is reasonable to assume that words used in one place in a legislative enactment have the same meaning in every other place in the statute and that consequently other sections in which the same phrase is used may be resorted to as an aid in determining the meaning thereof; and, if the meaning of the phrase is clear in one part of the statute and in others doubtful or obscure, it is in the latter case given the same construction as in the former."

A corollary to this principle is that when Congress uses a different term, however closely related, it intends a different meaning. E.g., 56 Comp. Gen. 655, 658 (1977) (term "taking line" presumed to have different meaning than "taking area" which had been used in several other sections in the same statute).

5. Retroactivity of Statutes

The traditional rule has been that statutes and amendments to statutes are construed to apply prospectively only (that is, from their date of enactment or other effective date if one is specified). Under this traditional rule, statutes are not construed to apply retroactively unless a retroactive construction is required by express language or by necessary implication or unless it is demonstrated that this is what Congress clearly intended. 38 Comp. Gen. 103 (1958); 34 Comp. Gen. 404 (1955); 28 Comp. Gen. 162 (1948); 16 Comp. Gen. 1051 (1937); 7 Comp. Gen. 266 (1927); 5 Comp. Gen. 381 (1925); 2 Comp. Gen. 267 (1922); 26 Comp. Dec. 40 (1919); B-205180, November 27, 1981; B-191190, February 13, 1980; B-162208, August 28, 1967. This has also been the traditional rule of the courts. E.g., Greene v. United States, 376 U.S. 149 (1964).

REV_00256750

A measure of confusion arose with the Supreme Court's decision in Bradley v. Richmond School Board, 416 U.S. 696 (1974). In that case, the Court held that when a law changes subsequent to a judgment of a lower court, whether the change is constitutional, statutory, judicial, or administrative, an appellate court must apply the new law, i.e., the law in effect when it renders its decision, unless applying the new law would produce manifest injustice or unless there is statutory direction or legislative history to the contrary. Relevant factors in making the "manifest injustice" determination are "(a) the nature and identity of the parties, (b) the nature of their rights, and (c) the nature of the impact of the change in law upon those rights." Id. at 717. Whether Bradley was intended to replace the traditional rule, or whether it was merely a limited exception applicable to post-judgment changes for cases on appeal, was not clear. What did become clear was that, to the extent Bradley superseded the traditional rule, what had once been a fairly simple question had become a very complicated one. See, e.g., 64 Comp. Gen. 493 (1985), concluding that Bradley does not require retroactive application of the administrative offset provisions of the Debt Collection Act of 1982.

Subsequent action by the Supreme Court suggests that Bradley may be the exception rather than the rule. In a 1988 decision, the Court said:

> "Retroactivity is not favored in the law. Thus, congressional enactments and administrative rules will not be construed to have retroactive effect unless their language requires this result. E.g., Greene v. United States, 376 U.S. 149, 160 . . . ."

Bowen v. Georgetown University Hospital, 488 U.S. 204, 208 (1988).

More recently, the Court has acknowledged, but did not resolve, the "apparent tension" between Bradley and Bowen. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. Bonjorno, ___ U.S. ___, 110 S. Ct. 1570, 1577 (1990). The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has been more blunt, viewing the "tension" as an "irreconcilable conflict," and choosing to follow the Bowen rule. Sargisson v. United States, 913 F.2d 918, 922-23 (Fed. Cir. 1990). See also Mai v. United States, 22 Cl. Ct. 664, 667-68 (1991).

REV_00256751

g. Advertising and the Employment of Publicity Experts 4-186
(1) Commercial advertising 4-186
(2) Advertising of government programs, products, or services 4-187
(3) Publicity experts 4-189
12. Membership Fees 4-191
a. 5 U.S.C. § 5946 4-191
b. Attorneys 4-196
13. Personal Expenses and Furnishings 4-198
a. Business or Calling Cards 4-198
b. Health, Medical Care and Treatment 4-200
(1) Medical care 4-200
(2) Purchase of health-related items 4-205
c. Office Furnishings (Decorative Items) 4-208
d. Personal Qualification Expenses 4-210
e. Photographs 4-211
f. Seasonal Greeting Cards and Decorations . . . 4-212
(1) Greeting cards 4-212
(2) Seasonal decorations 4-214
g. Traditional Ceremonies 4-214
h. Wearing Apparel 4-215
i. Miscellaneous Personal Expenses 4-221
(1) Commuting and parking 4-222
(2) Miscellaneous employee expenses 4-223
14. Rewards 4-224
a. Rewards to Informers 4-224
(1) Reward as "necessary expense" 4-224
(2) Payments to informers: Internal Revenue Service 4-226
(3) Payments to informers: Customs Service 4-228
b. Missing Government Employees 4-229
c. Lost or Missing Government Property 4-230
d. Contractual Basis 4-231
e. Rewards to Government Employees 4-233
15. State and Local Taxes 4-234
a. Introduction 4-234
b. Tax on Business Transactions to Which the Federal Government is a Party 4-237
(1) General principles 4-237
(2) Public utilities 4-243
c. Property-Related Taxes 4-245
d. Taxes Paid by Federal Employees 4-249

REV_00256635

Another line of cases has dealt with a different aspect of retroactivity. GAO is reluctant to construe a statute to retroactively abolish or diminish rights which had accrued before its enactment unless this was clearly the legislative intent. For example, the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 authorized $50 "special payments" to certain taxpayers. Legislation in 1977 abolished the special payments as of its date of enactment. GAO held in B-190751, April 11, 1978, that payments could be made where payment vouchers were validly issued before the cutoff date but lost in the mail. Similarly, payments could be made to eligible claimants whose claims had been erroneously denied before the cutoff but were later found valid. B-190751, September 26, 1980.

6. Errors in Statutes

a. Clerical or Typographical Errors

A statute may occasionally contain what is clearly a technical or typographical error which, if read literally, could alter the meaning of the statute or render execution effectively impossible. In such a case, if the legislative intent is clear, the intent will be given effect over the erroneous language.

In one situation, a supplemental appropriation act made an appropriation to pay certain claims and judgments as set forth in Senate Document 94-163. Examination of the documents made it clear that the reference should have been to Senate Document 94-164, as Senate Document 94-163 concerned a wholly unrelated subject. The manifest congressional intent was held controlling, and the appropriation was available to pay the items specified in Senate Document 94-164. B-158642-0.M., June 8, 1976. The same principle had been applied in a very early decision in which an 1894 appropriation provided funds for certain payments in connection with an election held on "November fifth," 1890. The election had in fact been held on November 4. Recognizing the "evident intention of Congress," the decision held that the appropriation was available to make the specified payments. 1 Comp. Dec. 1 (1894). See also 11 Comp. Dec. 719 (1905); 8 Comp. Dec. 205 (1901); 1 Comp. Dec. 316 (1895).

In another case, a statute authorized the Department of Agriculture to purchase "section 12" of a certain township for inclusion in a national forest. However, section 12 was already included within the national forest, and it was clear from the legislative history that the "section 12" was a printing error and the statute should have read "section 13." The Comptroller General concluded that the clear intent should be given effect, and that the Department was authorized to purchase section 13. B-127507, December 10, 1962.

REV_00256752

More recently, Congress authorized awards for cost savings disclosures, and added the new provisions to the existing Government Employees Incentive Awards Act. The new authority was to terminate on September 30, 1984, but the sunset provision erroneously used the word "title" instead of "subchapter." Read literally, the entire Incentive Awards Act would have terminated at the end of FY 1984, a result that was clearly not intended. GAO concluded that the statute could be construed as if the correct word had been used. 64 Comp. Gen. 221 (1985). The mistake was corrected when Congress later extended the sunset date.

Courts have followed the same approach in correcting obvious printing or typographical errors. See Ronson Patents Corp. v. Sparklets Devices, Inc., 102 F. Supp. 123 (E.D. Mo. 1951); Fleming v. Salem Box Co., 38 F. Supp. 997 (D. Ore. 1940); Pressman v. State Tax Commission, 204 Md. 78, 102 A.2d 821 (1954); Johnson v. United States Gypsum Co., 217 Ark. 264, 229 S.W.2d 671 (1950); Baca v. Board of Commissioners, 10 N.M. 438, 62 P. 979 (1900).

b. Error in Amount Appropriated

A 1979 decision illustrates one situation in which the above rule will not apply. A 1979 appropriation act contained an appropriation of $36 million for the Inspector General of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The bills as passed by both Houses and the various committee reports specified an appropriation of only $35 million. While it seemed apparent that the $36 million was the result of a typographical error, it was held that the language of the enrolled act signed by the President must control and that the full $36 million had been appropriated. The Comptroller General did, however, inform the Appropriations Committees. 58 Comp. Gen. 358 (1979). See also 2 Comp. Dec. 629 (1896); [1] Bowler, First Comp. Dec. 114 (1894).

However, if the amount appropriated is a total derived from adding up specific sums enumerated in the appropriation act, then the amount appropriated will be the amount obtained by the correct addition, notwithstanding the specification of an erroneous total in the appropriation act. 31 U.S.C. § 1302; 2 Comp. Gen. 592 (1923).

REV_00256753

In recent years, Congress has on occasion authorized the Clerk of the House to make certain corrections in the printed enrollment of appropriation bills. E.g., Pub. L. No. 100-454, § 2(a)(2), 102 Stat. 1914 (1988) (FY 1989 appropriation bills). However, the authority is limited to spelling, punctuation, and stylistic corrections and does not extend to altering amounts.

7. Statutory Time Deadlines

Statutes may contain a variety of time deadlines directed at government agencies. Some, statutes of limitations being the prime example, are usually mandatory. Miss a statute of limitations and, with very few exceptions, you've lost the right to file the claim or commence the lawsuit. Other time deadlines may be either mandatory or "directory." If a time deadline on an agency action is directory only, missing the deadline will not deprive the agency of the authority to take the action.

The general rule followed in most circuits is:

> "[a] statutory time period is not mandatory unless it both expressly requires an agency or public official to act within a particular time period and specifies a consequence for failure to comply with the provision."

St. Regis Mohawk Tribe v. Brock, 769 F.2d 37, 41 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1140, quoting Fort Worth Nat'l Corp. v. FSLIC, 469 F.2d 47, 58 (5th Cir. 1972).[57]

The St. Regis case concerned a provision in the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act which required the Secretary of Labor to investigate complaints alleging improprieties and to issue a final determination not later than 120 days after receiving the complaint. The issue was whether failure to meet the 120-day deadline barred the government from attempting to recover misused funds. Applying the above rule, the court held that it did not.

The issue was litigated in other circuits. The circuits split, St. Regis representing the majority view. One of the minority cases went to the Supreme Court which, in Brock v. Pierce County, 476 U.S. 253 [57] St. Regis cites several additional cases for the proposition.

REV_00256754

(1986), agreed with the St. Regis result. While the Supreme Court treated favorably the rule espoused in St. Regis, it stopped short of expressly adopting it. The Court first noted that "[t]his Court has never expressly adopted the Circuit precedent [the St. Regis rule] upon which the Secretary relies. However, our decisions supply at least the underpinnings of those precedents." Id. at 259-60. The Court then cautioned, however, that "[w]e need not, and do not, hold that a statutory deadline for agency action can never bar later action unless that consequence is stated explicitly in the statute." Id. at 262 n.9. Noting that treating the deadline as mandatory would prejudice important public rights (the right of the taxpayers to guard against misuse of public funds), the Court held that the mere use of the word "shall" in the statute did not make it mandatory. Id. at 261-62.

Thus, while the St. Regis rule remains a reasonably reliable guideline, its precise parameters await future development. At a minimum, it would seem, the statutory deadline must be cast in mandatory terms. Failure to specify a consequence of missing the deadline will be relevant, but perhaps can be overcome by persuasive legislative history indicating a contrary intent. Another relevant factor is the nature of the rights or interests involved, public or private, and the extent to which they will be affected by the mandatory/directory determination.

One context in which statutory deadlines are more likely to be found directory is the termination of temporary public commissions. In Ralpho v. Bell, 569 F.2d 607 (D.C. Cir. 1977), for example, the court held that a statutory time limit on the existence of the Micronesian Claims Commission was directory and did not preclude further consideration of claims which had been denied on allegedly improper grounds.

A temporary commission is frequently required to submit a report as its final official act. The enabling statute often provides a deadline for submitting the report, with the commission to go out of existence a specified time period after submitting the report. GAO has found these deadlines to be directory only, concluding that a commission which fails to submit its final report on time is authorized to continue in existence, the termination period being measured from the actual submission of the report. B-225832.6, July 8, 1987; B-211021, May 3, 1984. As the 1984 decision points out, the commission does not thereby acquire permanent existence; Congress retains control through oversight and the appropriations process.

REV_00256755

As noted, a relevant factor in assessing the effect of a statutory deadline is the nature and effect of any rights or interests affected. In some circumstances, missing a deadline may provide the basis for challenging agency action in denying benefits that would have been available had the agency acted in a more timely fashion. Thus, one court held that the Environmental Protection Agency was required, to the extent of available budget authority, to fund certain water quality grant applications submitted after the end of the fiscal year where the delay was attributable to the agency's failure to issue guidelines within the statutorily-prescribed time period. National Association of Regional Councils v. Costle, 564 F.2d 583 (D.C. Cir. 1977). In determining the effect of a statutory time limit, "a court should consider the purpose and design of the entire statutory program of which it is a part." Id. at 591. The same result would probably not apply under the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act since the legislation provided for the use of guidelines under prior programs during the interim period until new guidelines were issued. Delay in issuing the McKinney guidelines would thus not have the same effect as in Costle. B-229004-O.M., February 18, 1988.

In sum, a statutory time deadline on agency action will generally be regarded as directory rather than mandatory where the statute does not specify a consequence of non-compliance. It may be found mandatory, however, if there is persuasive legislative history indicating that intent, or if significant rights or interests would be prejudiced by failing to enforce the deadline.

REV_00256756

REV_00256757

Chapter 3

Agency Regulations and Administrative Discretion

A. Agency Regulations 3-2

1. The Administrative Procedure Act 3-3
   a. The Informal Rulemaking Process 3-3
   b. Informal Rulemaking: When Required 3-7
2. Regulations May Not Exceed Statutory Authority 3-9
3. "Force and Effect of Law" 3-10
4. Waiver of Regulations 3-13
5. Amendment of Regulations 3-16
6. Retroactivity 3-17

B. Agency Administrative Interpretations 3-19

1. Interpretation of Statutes 3-19
2. Interpretation of Agency's Own Regulations 3-26

C. Administrative Discretion 3-27

1. Discretion Is Not Unlimited 3-28
2. Failure or Refusal to Exercise Discretion 3-30
3. Regulations May Limit Discretion 3-32
4. Insufficient Funds 3-33

REV_00256758

Agency Regulations and Administrative Discretion

This chapter deals with certain topics in administrative law which, strictly speaking, are not "appropriations law" or "fiscal law." Nevertheless, the material covered is so pervasive in all areas of federal law, appropriations law included, that a brief treatment in this publication is warranted. We caution that it is not our purpose to present an administrative law treatise, but rather to highlight some important "cross-cutting" principles that appear in various contexts in many other chapters. The case citations should be viewed as an illustrative sampling.

A. Agency Regulations

As a conceptual starting point, agency regulations fall into two broad categories. First, every agency head has the authority, largely inherent but also authorized generally by 5 U.S.C. § 301,[1] to issue regulations to govern the internal affairs of his or her agency. This statute is nothing more than a grant of authority for what are called "housekeeping" regulations. Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 309 (1979); NLRB v. Capitol Fish Co., 294 F.2d 868, 875 (5th Cir. 1961). It confers "administrative power only." United States v. George, 228 U.S. 14, 20 (1913); 54 Comp. Gen. 624, 626 (1975). Regulations in this category may include such things as conflicts of interest, employee travel, or delegations to organizational components.

In addition, when Congress enacts a new program statute, it typically does not prescribe every detail of its implementation but leaves it to the administering agency to do so by regulation.[2] There are many reasons for this. It is often not possible to foresee in advance every detail that ought to be covered. In other cases, there may be a need for flexibility in implementation that is simply not practical to detail in the legislation. In many cases, Congress prefers to legislate a policy in terms of broad standards, leaving the details of implementation to the agency with program expertise.

[1] "The head of an Executive department or military department may prescribe regulations for the government of his department, the conduct of its employees, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of its records, papers, and property. . . ."

[2] Regulations of this type have traditionally been called "statutory regulations," as distinguished from "administrative regulations," such as those issued under 5 U.S.C. § 301. E.g., 21 Comp. Dec. 482 (1915). While the statutory vs. administrative terminology may be convenient shorthand in some contexts, its significance has been largely superseded by the Administrative Procedure Act. Courts today occasionally use the term "administrative regulations" in the broader sense of agency regulations in general. E.g., Rodway v. United States Dep't of Agriculture, 514 F.2d 809, 814 (D.C. Cir. 1975).

REV_00256759

Finally, it is much easier for an agency to amend a regulation to reflect changing circumstances than it would be for Congress to have to go back and amend the basic legislation. Thus, agency regulations have become an increasingly vital element of federal law.

1. The Administrative Procedure Act

The key statute governing the issuance of agency regulations is the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), originally enacted in 1946 and now found in Title 5 of the United States Code, primarily sections 551–559 (administrative provisions) and 701–706 (judicial review).[3] The APA deals with two broad categories of administrative action: rulemaking and adjudication. Our concern here is solely with the rulemaking portions.

a. The Informal Rulemaking Process

The APA uses the term "rule" rather than "regulation." In the context of the APA, the issuance of a regulation is called "rulemaking." The term "rule" is given a very broad definition in 5 U.S.C. § 551(4):

> " '[R]ule' means the whole or any part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency . . . ."

It is apparent from this definition that a great many agency issuances, regardless of what the agency chooses to call them, are "rules."

The APA prescribes two types of rulemaking, which have come to be known as "formal" and "informal." Formal rulemaking under the APA involves a trial-type hearing (witnesses, depositions, transcript, etc.) and is governed by 5 U.S.C. §§ 556 and 557. This more rigorous, and today relatively uncommon, procedure is required only where the governing statute requires that the proceeding be "on the record." 5 U.S.C. § 553(c); United States v. Florida East Coast Railway Co., 410 U.S. 224 (1973).

Most agency regulations are the product of informal rulemaking—the notice and comment procedures prescribed by 5 U.S.C. § 553. The [3]For an excellent summary of the APA together with a useful bibliography, see Administrative Conference of the United States, Federal Administrative Procedure Sourcebook (1985). The Sourcebook is also particularly useful because it reprints in full the 1947 Attorney General's Manual on the Administrative Procedure Act, which has been called the government's "most authoritative interpretation of the APA." Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 218 (1988) (Justice Scalia, concurring).

REV_00256760

first step in this process is the publication of a proposed regulation in the Federal Register. The Federal Register is a daily publication printed and distributed by the Government Printing Office. 44 U.S.C. § 1504.[4] The agency then allows a period of time during which interested parties may participate in the process, usually by submitting written comments although oral presentations are sometimes permitted. Next, the agency considers and evaluates the comments submitted, and determines the content of the final regulation, which is also published in the Federal Register, generally at least 30 days prior to its effective date. 5 U.S.C. §§ 553(b)–(d).

Publication of a document in the Federal Register constitutes legal notice of its contents. 44 U.S.C. § 1507; Federal Crop Insurance Corp. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380 (1947); 63 Comp. Gen. 293 (1984).

The agency is also required to publish a "concise general statement" of the basis and purpose of the regulation. 5 U.S.C. § 553(c). This is commonly known as the preamble, the substance of which appears in the Federal Register under the heading "Supplementary Information."

The preamble is extremely important since it is the primary means for a reviewing court to evaluate compliance with section 553. The courts have cautioned not to read the terms "concise" and "general" too literally. Automotive Parts & Accessories Ass'n v. Boyd, 407 F.2d 330, 338 (D.C. Cir. 1968). Rather, the preamble must be adequate:

> "to respond in a reasoned manner to the comments received, to explain how the agency resolved any significant problems raised by the comments, and to show how that resolution led the agency to the ultimate rule."

Rodway v. United States Dep't of Agriculture, 514 F.2d 809, 817 (D.C. Cir. 1975). See also Home Box Office, Inc. v. FCC, 567 F.2d 9, 36 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 829; Automotive Parts, 407 F.2d at 338. As one court stated, "the agencies do not have quite the prerogative of obscurantism reserved to the legislatures." United States v. Nova Scotia Food Products Corp., 568 F.2d 240, 252 (2d Cir. 1977). The preamble does not, however, have to [4]Indispensable though it may be, the Federal Register has been termed "voluminous and dull." Federal Crop Insurance Corp. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 387 (1947) (Justice Jackson, dissenting).

REV_00256761

(1) Parking taxes 4-250
(2) Hotel and meal taxes 4-251
(3) Tolls 4-252
(4) State and local income taxes 4-253
(5) Possessory interest taxes 4-253
(6) Occupational license fees 4-254
e. Refund and Recovery of Tax Improperly Paid 4-254
16. Telephone Services 4-256
a. Telephone Service to Private Residences 4-256
(1) The statutory prohibition 4-256
(2) Funds to which the statute applies 4-256
(3) What is a private residence? 4-257
(4) Application of the general rule 4-258
(5) Exceptions 4-259
b. Long-Distance Calls 4-263
(1) Residential telephones 4-263
(2) Government telephones 4-265
c. Telephones in Automobiles 4-267

Chapter 5 Availability of Appropriations: Time

5-1
A. General Principles—Duration of Appropriations . . 5-2
1. Introduction 5-2
2. Types of Appropriations 5-3
3. Permissible Actions Prior to Start of Fiscal Year . . 5-8
B. The Bona Fide Needs Rule 5-9
1. The Concept 5-9
2. Future Years' Needs 5-13
3. Prior Years' Needs 5-16
4. Delivery of Materials Beyond the Fiscal Year 5-19
5. Services Rendered Beyond the Fiscal Year 5-22
6. Replacement Contracts 5-26
7. Contract Modifications and Amendments Affecting Price 5-31
8. Multi-Year Contracts 5-34
9. Exceptions to the Bona Fide Needs Rule 5-41
C. Advance Payments 5-42
1. The Statutory Prohibition 5-42
2. Government Procurement Contracts 5-46
a. Contract Financing 5-46
b. Payment 5-50
3. Lease and Rental Agreements 5-53
4. Publications 5-53

REV_00256636

address every item included in the comments. Id.; Automotive Parts, 407 F.2d at 338.

The preamble normally accompanies publication of the final regulation, although this is not required as long as it is sufficiently close in time to make it clear that it is in fact contemporaneous and not a "post hoc rationalization." Action on Smoking and Health v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 713 F.2d 795, 799 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Tabor v. Joint Board for Enrollment of Actuaries, 566 F.2d 705, 711 n.14 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

Apart from questions of judicial review, the preamble serves another highly important function. It provides, as its title in the Federal Register indicates, useful supplementary information. Viewed from this perspective, the preamble serves the same purpose with respect to a regulation as legislative history does with respect to a statute.[5]

Codifications of agency regulations are issued in bound and permanent form in the Code of Federal Regulations. The "C.F.R." is supplemented or republished at least once a year. 44 U.S.C. § 1510. Unfortunately, with rare exceptions, the preamble does not accompany the regulations into the C.F.R., but is found only in the original Federal Register issuance. The C.F.R. does, however, give the appropriate Federal Register citation. Regulations on the use of the Federal Register and the C.F.R. are found in 1 C.F.R. Chapter I.

Agencies may supplement the APA procedures, but are not required to unless directed by statute. The Supreme Court has admonished that a court should:

"not stray beyond the judicial province to explore the procedural format or to impose upon the agency its own notion of which procedures are 'best' or most likely to further some vague, undefined public good."

Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 435 U.S. 519, 549 (1978). The Court repeated its caution the following year in Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 312-13 (1979).

[5]The "legislative history" analogy may be extended to unpublished agency documents used in the preparation of a regulation, which may be relevant in resolving ambiguities in the regulation. See Deluxe Check Printers, Inc. v. United States, 5 Cl. Ct. 498, 500-01 (1984).

REV_00256762

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, in Home Box Office, Inc. v. FCC, 567 F.2d at 35-36, has provided the following summary of the APA's informal rulemaking requirements:

"The APA sets out three procedural requirements: notice of the proposed rulemaking, an opportunity for interested persons to comment, and 'a concise general statement of [the] basis and purpose' of the rules ultimately adopted. . . . As interpreted by recent decisions of this court, these procedural requirements are intended to assist judicial review as well as to provide fair treatment for persons affected by a rule. . . . To this end there must be an exchange of views, information and criticism between interested persons and the agency. . . . Consequently, the notice required by the APA, or information subsequently supplied to the public, must disclose in detail the thinking that has animated the form of a proposed rule and the data upon which that rule is based. . . . Moreover, a dialogue is a two-way street: the opportunity to comment is meaningless unless the agency responds to significant points raised by the public. . . ."

Against this backdrop, the Comptroller General has found that an agreement to issue, with specified content, a regulation otherwise subject to the APA, not only violates the APA but is invalid as contrary to public policy. B-212529, May 31, 1984. In effect, a promise to issue a regulation with specified content amounts to a promise to disregard any adverse public comments received, clearly a violation of the APA.

Prior to legislation enacted on November 29, 1990, proposed regulations were usually drafted by agency staff, based on the agency's own expertise. Nothing prohibited agencies from consulting with interested parties at this preliminary stage, but, with few exceptions, it was rarely done. The few agencies which did experiment with "negotiated rulemaking" found that it reduced the potential for court challenges to the final regulations. Congress provided a uniform statutory framework by enacting the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-648, 104 Stat. 4969 (1990), which added a new 5 U.S.C. §§ 581–590. Under this legislation, a proposed regulation is drafted by a committee composed of representatives of the agency and other interested parties. An agency may use this procedure if it determines, among other things, that there are a limited number of identifiable interests that will be significantly affected by the regulation, and that there is a reasonable likelihood that a committee can reach a consensus without unreasonably delaying the rulemaking process. Once the proposed regulation is developed in this manner, it remains subject to the

REV_00256763

APA's notice and comment requirements. The negotiated rulemaking procedure is optional, an agency's decision to use or not use it is not subject to judicial review, and use of the procedure does not entitle the regulation to any greater deference than it would otherwise receive. (The background information in the first part of this paragraph is taken from the report of the House Judiciary Committee, H.R. Rep. No. 461, 101st Cong., 2d Sess. 7-9 (1990).)

b. Informal Rulemaking: When Required

A great many things are required by one statute or another to be published in the Federal Register. One example is "substantive rules of general applicability adopted as authorized by law, and statements of general policy or interpretations of general applicability formulated and adopted by the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(1)(D). Privacy Act notices are another example. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(4). Other items required or authorized to be published in the Federal Register are specified in 44 U.S.C. § 1505. However, the mere requirement to publish something in the Federal Register is not, by itself, a requirement to use APA procedures.

As a starting point, anything that falls within the definition of a "rule" in 5 U.S.C. § 551(4) and for which formal rulemaking is not required, is subject to the informal rulemaking procedures of 5 U.S.C. § 553 unless exempt. This statement is not as encompassing as it may seem, since section 553 itself provides several very significant exemptions. These exemptions, said one court, "will be narrowly construed and only reluctantly countenanced." New Jersey Dep't of Environmental Protection v. EPA, 626 F.2d 1038, 1045 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Be that as it may, they appear in the statute and cannot be disregarded.

For example, section 553 does not apply to matters "relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts." 5 U.S.C. § 553(a)(2). Several agencies, primarily in response to a recommendation by the Administrative Conference of the United States, have published in the Federal Register a statement committing themselves to follow APA procedures in these matters. To the extent an agency has done this, it has voluntarily waived the benefit of the exemption and must follow the APA. E.g., Alcaraz v. Block, 746 F.2d 593 (9th Cir. 1984); Humana of South Carolina, Inc. v. Califano, 590 F.2d 1070 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Rodway v. United States Dep't of Agriculture, 514 F.2d 809 (D.C. Cir. 1975); Herron v. Heckler, 576 F. Supp. 218 (N.D. Cal. 1983); Ngou v. Schweiker, 535 F. Supp. 1214 (D.D.C. 1982); B-202568,

REV_00256764

September 11, 1981. If an agency has not waived its exemption with respect to the specified matters, it need not follow the APA.[6] California v. EPA, 689 F.2d 217 (D.C. Cir. 1982); City of Grand Rapids v. Richardson, 429 F. Supp. 1087 (W.D. Mich. 1977).

Another significant exemption, found in 5 U.S.C. § 553(b), is for "interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice." Again, much litigation has ensued over whether a given regulation is "substantive" or "legislative," in which event section 553 applies, or whether it is "interpretative," in which event it does not. See, for example, Guardian Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n v. FSLIC, 589 F.2d 658 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Joseph v. United States Civil Service Commission, 554 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Detroit Edison Co. v. EPA, 496 F.2d 244 (6th Cir. 1974). As these cases demonstrate, the agency's own characterization of a regulation as interpretative is not controlling.[7]

A regulation which is subject to 5 U.S.C. § 553 but which is issued in violation of the required procedures (including a non-existent or inadequate preamble) stands an excellent chance of being invalidated. If the regulation is one the agency is required to issue, the courts will typically declare the regulation invalid, or "void" (e.g., W.C. v. Bowen, 807 F.2d 1502 (9th Cir. 1987)), or vacate the regulation and remand it to the agency for further proceedings in compliance with the APA, the extent of the further proceedings depending on the degree of non-compliance.[8] If the regulation is authorized but not required, it will still be invalidated but the [6]The exemption may be unavailable to particular agencies or programs, in whole or in part, by virtue of some other statute. For example, Congress has required the Department of Energy to follow the APA with respect to public property, loans, grants, or contracts, although the Department may waive notice and comment upon finding that strict compliance is likely to cause serious harm to the public health, safety, or welfare. 42 U.S.C. §§ 7191(b)(3), (e).

[7]As should be apparent, the traditional classification of regulations as "statutory" or "administrative" is of little help in assessing the applicability of the APA. Most "administrative regulations" (regulations issued under the authority of 5 U.S.C. § 301) will be exempt from the APA not because somebody calls them "administrative," but because they will be matters "relating to agency management or personnel" or "rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice." Substantive or legislative regulations will generally be "statutory," but so will most regulations relating to grants or loans, as well as many interpretative regulations.

[8]E.g., Tabor v. Board of Actuaries, 566 F.2d at 712; Rodway v. Dep't of Agriculture, 514 F.2d at 817; Detroit Edison Co. v. EPA, 496 F.2d at 249. Occasionally, although this appears to be a minority position, a court may be willing to entertain further explanation from the agency in the form of affidavits or testimony. E.g., National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. Weinberger, 512 F.2d 688 (2d Cir. 1975).

REV_00256765

agency will usually have the discretion to repromulgate under the correct procedures.[9]

Agency issuances may be called many things besides regulations: manuals, handbooks, instruction memoranda, etc. For purposes of determining applicability of the APA, the test is the substance and effect of the document rather than what the agency chooses to call it. E.g., Guardian Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n v. FSLIC, 589 F.2d at 666; Herron v. Heckler, 576 F. Supp. at 230; Saint Francis Memorial Hospital v. Weinberger, 413 F. Supp. 323, 327 (N.D. Cal. 1976).

If agency in-house publications are inconsistent with "governing statutes and regulations of the highest or higher dignity, e.g., regulations published in the Federal Register, they do not bind the government, and persons relying on them do so at their peril." Fiorentino v. United States, 607 F.2d 963, 968 (Ct. Cl. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1083.

2. Regulations May Not Exceed Statutory Authority

It is a fundamental proposition that agency regulations are bound by the limits of the agency's statutory and organic authority. An often quoted statement of the principle appears in the Supreme Court's decision in Manhattan General Equipment Co. v. Commissioner, 297 U.S. 129, 134 (1936):

> "The power of an administrative officer or board to administer a federal statute and to prescribe rules and regulations to that end is not the power to make law—for no such power can be delegated by Congress—but the power to adopt regulations to carry into effect the will of Congress as expressed by the statute. A regulation which does not do this, but operates to create a rule out of harmony with the statute, is a mere nullity."

To take an example of particular relevance to this publication, an agency may not expend public funds or incur a liability to do so on the basis of a regulation, unless the regulation is implementing authority given by law. A regulation purporting to create a liability on the part of the government not supported by statutory authority is invalid and not binding on the government. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co. v. United States, 55 Ct. Cl. 339 (1920); Holland-America Line v. United States, 53 Ct. Cl. 522 (1918); Illinois

[9]E.g., United States v. Garner, 767 F.2d 104, 123 (5th Cir. 1985); Joseph v. Civil Service Commission, 554 F.2d at 1157.

REV_00256766

Central Railroad Co. v. United States, 52 Ct. Cl. 53 (1917). See also B-201054, April 27, 1981, discussed below. In other words, the authority to obligate or expend public funds cannot be created by regulation; the basic authority must be conferred by Congress.

Further illustrations may be found in the following decisions of the Comptroller General:

- Where the program statute provided that federal grants "shall be" a specified percentage of project construction costs, the grantor agency could not issue regulations providing a mechanism for reducing the grants below the specified percentage. 53 Comp. Gen. 547 (1974).
- Where a statute provided that administrative costs could not exceed a specified percentage of funds distributed to states under an allotment formula, the administering agency could not amend its regulations to relieve states of liability for overexpenditures or to raise the ceiling. B-178564, July 19, 1977, affirmed in 57 Comp. Gen. 163 (1977).
- Absent a clear statutory basis, an agency may not issue regulations establishing procedures to accept government liability or to forgive indebtedness based on what it deems to be fair or equitable. B-201054, April 27, 1981. See also B-118653, July 15, 1969.

See also Harris v. Lynn, 555 F.2d 1357 (8th Cir. 1977) (agency cannot extend benefits by regulation to class of persons not included within authorizing statute); Tullock v. State Highway Commission of Missouri, 507 F.2d 712, 716-17 (8th Cir. 1974); Pender Peanut Corp. v. United States, 20 Cl. Ct. 447, 455 (1990) (monetary penalty not authorized by statute cannot be imposed by regulation); 62 Comp. Gen. 116 (1983); 56 Comp. Gen. 943 (1977); B-201706, March 17, 1981.

3. "Force and Effect of Law"

A very long line of decisions holds that "statutory regulations" which are otherwise valid (that is, which are within the bounds of the agency's statutory authority) have the force and effect of law. E.g., 53 Comp. Gen. 364 (1973); 43 Comp. Gen. 31 (1963); 37 Comp. Gen. 820 (1958); 33 Comp. Gen. 174 (1953); 31 Comp. Gen. 193 (1951); 22 Comp. Gen. 895 (1943); 15 Comp. Gen. 869 (1936); 2 Comp. Gen. 342 (1922); 21 Comp. Dec. 482 (1915).

REV_00256767

The thrust of these decisions is that the regulations are binding on all concerned, the issuing agency included, and that the agency cannot waive their application on an ad hoc or situational basis. In view of developments in the law in recent years, stating the principle in terms of "statutory regulations" has become somewhat oversimplified.

In Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281 (1979), the Supreme Court provided detailed instruction as to when an agency regulation is entitled to the "force and effect of law." The regulation "must have certain substantive characteristics and be the product of certain procedural requisites." 441 U.S. at 301. Specifically, the Court listed three tests which must be met:

- The regulation must be a "substantive" or "legislative" regulation affecting individual rights or obligations. Regulations which are interpretative only generally will not qualify.[10]
- The regulation must be issued pursuant to, and subject to any limitations of, a statutory grant of authority. For purposes of this test, 5 U.S.C. § 301 does not constitute a sufficient grant of authority. 441 U.S. at 309-11. (This test is discussed further under "Agency Administrative Interpretations" later in this chapter.)
- The regulation must be issued in compliance with any procedural requirements imposed by Congress. This generally means the APA, unless the regulation falls within one of the exemptions previously discussed.[11]

A regulation which meets these three tests will be given the "force and effect of law." A regulation with the force and effect of law is "binding on courts in a manner akin to statutes" (Chrysler Corp., 441 U.S. at 308); it has the same legal effect "as if [it] had been enacted by Congress directly" (Federal Crop Insurance Corp. v.

[10]This of course is the same distinction discussed earlier with respect to the applicability of informal rulemaking procedures under the APA. It has been pointed out that the term "legislative" is preferable to "substantive" because the latter can become confused with another distinction occasionally encountered, substantive vs. procedural, which has little value in the present context. A legislative rule may be procedural, and an interpretative rule may be substantive in the sense that it does not deal with an issue of procedure. See Joseph v. United States Civil Service Comm'n, 554 F.2d 1140, 1153 n.24 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Professor Kenneth Culp Davis, in his Administrative Law Treatise, vol. 2, § 7:9 (2d ed. 1979), also suggests that the term "substantive" in this context should be discontinued in favor of "legislative." Whichever term is used, the terminology can be misleading, as pointed out in Production Tool Corp. v. Employment and Training Admin., 688 F.2d 1161, 1166 (7th Cir. 1982).

[11]See, for example, B-226499, April 1, 1987, holding that an unpublished notice purporting to amend a published regulation did not have the force and effect of law.

REV_00256768

Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 385 (1947)); it "is as binding on a court as if it were part of the statute" (Joseph v. United States Civil Service Commission, 554 F.2d 1140, 1153 (D.C. Cir. 1977)); it is "as binding on the courts as any statute enacted by Congress" (Production Tool Corp. v. Employment and Training Admin., 688 F.2d 1161, 1165 (7th Cir. 1982)).

This is strong language. It cautions a reviewing court (or reviewing administrative agency) not to substitute its own judgment for that of the agency, and not to invalidate a regulation merely because it would have interpreted the law differently. A regulation with the force and effect of law is controlling, subject to the "arbitrary and capricious" standard of the APA (5 U.S.C. § 706). Batterton v. Francis, 432 U.S. 416, 425-26 (1977); Guardian Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n v. FSLIC, 589 F.2d 658, 664-65 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Joseph v. Civil Service Commission, 554 F.2d at 1154 n.26. A regulation will generally be found arbitrary and capricious—

> "if the agency has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise."

Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Ass'n v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983).

Thus, rather than saying "statutory regulations have the force and effect of law," it is more accurate to say that "substantive or legislative regulations, issued pursuant to a grant of statutory authority and in compliance with the APA or other procedural statute as and to the extent applicable, have the force and effect of law." Such a regulation, as the numerous GAO decisions have pointed out, should be uniform in application, is binding on the government as well as any private parties affected, and, at least as a general proposition, cannot be waived on an ad hoc basis.

For cases applying the Chrysler standards in determining that various regulations do or do not have the force and effect of law, see Horner v. Jeffrey, 823 F.2d 1521 (Fed. Cir. 1987); St. Mary's Hospital, Inc. v. Harris, 604 F.2d 407 (5th Cir. 1979); Intermountain Forest Industry Ass'n v. Lyng, 683 F. Supp. 1330 (D. Wyo. 1988).

REV_00256769

4. Waiver of Regulations

When you ask whether an agency can waive a regulation, you are really asking to what extent an agency is bound by its own regulations. If a given regulation binds the issuing agency, then the agency should not be able to grant ad hoc waivers, unless the governing statute has given it that authority and the agency has built it into the regulation. The question of whether an agency must follow its own regulations is somewhat broader than the question of waiver. However, we have chosen to treat them together because the answer, to the extent an answer can be said to exist at the present time, is basically the same.

A regulation with the "force and effect of law" is clearly binding on the agency. See also Section C.3 below. If the courts meant what they said about such regulations being treated essentially the same as statutes, then the agency should not be able to waive the regulation any more than it could waive the statute. The underlying philosophy—still valid—was expressed as follows in a 1958 GAO decision:

> "Regulations must contain a guide or standard alike to all individuals similarly situated, so that anyone interested may determine his own rights or exemptions thereunder. The administrative agency may not exercise discretion to enforce them against some and to refuse to enforce them against others." 37 Comp. Gen. 820, 821 (1958).[12]

Even here, however, there may be room for some slight measure of discretion, at least with respect to certain types of regulation. For example, in American Farm Lines v. Black Ball Freight Service, 397 U.S. 532 (1970), the Court held that the Interstate Commerce Commission could deviate from a provision in what was at least a "statutory," if not a "legislative" regulation, stating that the regulations were "not intended primarily to confer important procedural benefits upon individuals," but were "mere aids to the exercise of the agency's independent discretion" (id. at 538-39).

The real problems arise when one enters the realm of regulations which do not have the force and effect of law. These may include regulations which were published in the Federal Register under APA procedures but which are classified as interpretative, as well as a [12]Of course, the government has "prosecutorial discretion" in enforcing violations, and may select one case or a few cases to make its point. This is different from the point being made in the text, which is that an agency cannot follow its regulation when it feels like it and not follow it when it does not feel like it.

REV_00256770

variety of unpublished agency documents, including internal publications such as manuals, handbooks, etc. There is a growing body of case law on whether regulations in this category are binding on the issuing agency. At the present time, the best answer we can give is that some are while others are not.

In some of the cases, the issue is stated as whether the given item constitutes a "regulation." E.g., Fairington Apartments of Lafayette v. United States, 7 Cl. Ct. 647 (1985). The thing to remember is that, in this specific context, the answer to that question determines only whether the item is binding on the agency in that case. It does not necessarily follow that an item found to be a "regulation" should have been published under APA procedures or that it has the force and effect of law. These are separate (although related) questions which, as discussed above, have their own tests and standards.

Early (and some not so early) GAO and Comptroller of the Treasury decisions viewed the waiver question as flowing essentially from the old statutory vs. administrative distinction. Thus, it has often been held that statutory regulations may not be waived. E.g., 60 Comp. Gen. 15, 26 (1980); 57 Comp. Gen. 662 (1978); 10 Comp. Gen. 242 (1930); B-233946.2, December 14, 1989; B-208610, September 1, 1983. See also the cases cited in the first paragraph under "Force and Effect of Law" above. Correspondingly, several decisions hold that "administrative regulations" can be waived. E.g., 4 Comp. Gen. 767 (1925); 1 Comp. Gen. 13 (1921); 26 Comp. Dec. 99 (1919); 21 Comp. Dec. 482 (1915). As a result of Supreme Court decisions in the 1950's, GAO modified its position somewhat in 51 Comp. Gen. 30 (1971), noting cautiously that the former distinctions "are no longer regarded as applicable in all respects" (whatever that means). Id. at 32.

The Supreme Court has also yet to articulate a clear standard. For example, in Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199 (1974), the Court held the Bureau of Indian Affairs bound by a provision in an internal BIA manual which stated that directives relating to the public are published in the Federal Register in accordance with the APA. Based on this, the Court held ineffective another provision in the BIA manual, not published in the Federal Register, restricting eligibility for general assistance benefits. "Where," the Court said, "the rights of individuals are affected, it is incumbent upon agencies to follow their own procedures." Id. at 235. Yet in Schweiker v. Hansen,

REV_00256771

5. Other Governmental Entities 5-55
D. Disposition of Appropriation Balances 5-57
1. Terminology 5-57
2. Evolution of the Law 5-58
3. Expired Appropriations and Closing of Accounts . . 5-61
4. No-Year Appropriations 5-64
5. Repayments and Deobligations 5-65
E. Effect of Litigation on Period of Availability 5-67

REV_00256637

450 U.S. 785 (1981), the Court found a Social Security Administration claims manual not binding on the agency, in a case where an individual's eligibility for benefits was at stake.[13]

Without undertaking an extensive analysis, the best that can be said is that, at least where a purported waiver or deviation would be adverse to individuals, some non-legislative regulations may now be as binding on the agency as legislative regulations. Morton v. Ruiz; 51 Comp. Gen. 30 (1971). See also Massachusetts Department of Correction v. Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, 605 F.2d 21, 26 (1st Cir. 1979); B-184068, August 22, 1975. However, other types of non-legislative regulations, particularly where the regulations are for the primary benefit of the agency and failure to follow them would not adversely affect private parties, remain open to waiver. E.g., 60 Comp. Gen. 208, 210 (1981) (Urban Mass Transportation Administration internal guideline on evidence of grantee financial capability).

An interesting variation occurred in Health Systems Agency of Oklahoma, Inc. v. Norman, 589 F.2d 486 (10th Cir. 1978). An application for designation as a Health Systems Agency was submitted to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare 55 minutes past the deadline announced in the Federal Register, because the applicant's representative overslept. HEW refused to accept the application. Finding that the deadline was not statutory, that its purpose was the orderly transaction of business, and that internal HEW guidelines permitted some discretion in waiving the deadline, the court held HEW's refusal to be an abuse of discretion.

What seems clear is that a "form over substance" approach will be rejected, and what an agency chooses to call its regulation is largely immaterial. As stated in one GAO decision:

"That the Bureau's policy and procedure memoranda were never intended as 'regulations' is of no particular import since whether or not they are such must be determined by their operative nature." 43 Comp. Gen. 31, 34 (1963).

[13]"[T]here is no doubt that Connelly failed to follow the Claims Manual in neglecting to recommend that respondent file a written application and in neglecting to advise her of the advantages of a written application. But the Claims Manual is not a regulation. It has no legal force, and it does not bind the SSA." 450 U.S. at 789.

REV_00256772

In assessing the binding nature of a non-legislative regulation or other agency document, the language of the document itself is obviously an important starting point. Brock v. Cathedral Bluffs Shale Oil Co., 796 F.2d 533, 537-38 (D.C. Cir. 1986). The issuing agency's intent is also an important factor. Thorpe v. Housing Authority of Durham, 393 U.S. 268 (1969); New England Tank Industries of New Hampshire, Inc. v. United States, 861 F.2d 685 (Fed. Cir. 1988); Fairington Apartments of Lafayette v. United States, 7 Cl. Ct. 647 (1985). Intent is ascertained by examining "the provision's language, its context, and any available extrinsic evidence." Doe v. Hampton, 566 F.2d 265, 281 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

Factors which may provide some indication of intent, although they are not dispositive, are whether the item has been published in the Federal Register (failure to do so suggests an intent that the item be non-binding), and, more significantly, whether it has been published in the Code of Federal Regulations (under 44 U.S.C. § 1510, the C.F.R. is supposed to contain only documents with "legal effect"). Brock v. Cathedral Bluffs, 796 F.2d at 538-39.

For further reading on this interesting and apparently still evolving topic, see:

- Peter Raven-Hansen, Regulatory Estoppel: When Agencies Break Their Own 'Laws,' 64 Tex. L. Rev. 1 (1985).
- Note, Violations by Agencies of Their Own Regulations, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 629 (1974).

5. Amendment of Regulations

While waiver of regulations can be problematic, it has long been recognized that the authority to issue regulations includes the authority to amend or revoke those regulations, at least prospectively. E.g., 21 Comp. Dec. 482, 484 (1915). This common-sense proposition is reflected in the APA's definition of rulemaking as "agency process for formulating, amending, or repealing a rule." 5 U.S.C. § 551(5).

An amendment to a regulation, like the parent regulation itself, must of course remain within the bounds of the agency's statutory authority. B-221779, March 24, 1986; B-202568, September 11, 1981.

REV_00256773

As the APA's definition of rulemaking makes clear, an amendment to a regulation is subject to the APA to the same extent as the parent regulation. Thus, if a regulation is required to follow the notice and comment procedures of 5 U.S.C. § 553, an amendment or repeal of that regulation must generally follow the same procedures. Consumer Energy Council of America v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 673 F.2d 425, 446 (D.C. Cir. 1982); Detroit Edison Co. v. EPA, 496 F.2d 244 (6th Cir. 1974); B-221779, March 24, 1986.

If a regulation is subject to the APA's informal rulemaking requirements, an unpublished agency document which purports to amend that regulation is invalid and does not bind the government. Fiorentino v. United States, 607 F.2d 963, 968 (Ct. Cl. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1083; 65 Comp. Gen. 439 (1986); B-226499, April 1, 1987.

It is possible to have a regulation subject to 5 U.S.C. § 553, with an amendment to that regulation which falls within one of the exemptions, in which event the amendment need not comply with the APA procedures. See Detroit Edison, 496 F.2d at 245, 249; B-202568, September 11, 1981; 5 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 104 (1981). Although we have found no cases, logic would suggest that the converse is also possible—an amendment to an interpretative regulation which rises to the level of a substantive or legislative rule.

If a parent regulation is exempt from compliance with the APA but the agency has, without generally waiving the exemption, published it under APA procedures anyway, the voluntary compliance will not operate as a waiver. The agency may subsequently amend or repeal the regulation without following the APA. Baylor Univ. Medical Center v. Heckler, 758 F.2d 1052 (5th Cir. 1985); Malek-Marzban v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 653 F.2d 113 (4th Cir. 1981); Washington Hospital Center v. Heckler, 581 F. Supp. 195 (D.D.C. 1984).

6. Retroactivity

A number of decisions have pointed out that amendments to regulations should be prospective only. E.g., 35 Comp. Gen. 187 (1955); 32 Comp. Gen. 315 (1953); 2 Comp. Gen. 342 (1922); 21 Comp. Dec. 482 (1915). The theory is that amendments should not affect rights or reliance accruing under the old regulation. While these are still crucial concerns, the law is not quite that simple.

REV_00256774

At the outset, it may be useful to understand the difference between "primary" and "secondary" retroactivity. Primary retroactivity changes the past legal consequences of past actions. Secondary retroactivity changes the future legal consequences of past actions. See generally Bowen v. Georgetown University Hospital, 488 U.S. 204, 219-20 (1988) (Justice Scalia, concurring).

To take a concrete illustration, when Individual Retirement Accounts were first authorized, most people could take an income tax deduction for amounts deposited into an IRA, up to a statutory ceiling. A few years later, Congress changed the law to eliminate the deduction for persons covered by certain types of retirement plan. This is an example of secondary retroactivity. Persons affected by the amendment could no longer deduct IRA contributions in the future, but the deductions they had taken in the past were not affected. (A purely prospective amendment would have applied only to new IRAs opened on or after the effective date of the amendment.) If Congress had attempted to invalidate deductions taken prior to the amendment, this would have been primary retroactivity.

It is generally accepted that Congress can make its laws retroactive in either the primary or the secondary sense if retroactive application serves a rational legislative purpose, subject of course to constitutional limitations (such as due process and the impairment of contracts). See id. at 223; Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 729–30 (1984); Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15–17 (1976). The same standard does not, however, apply to agency regulations.

There is no blanket prohibition on secondary retroactivity in agency regulations. The standard of review is the "arbitrary or capricious" standard of the APA. See Bowen, 488 U.S. at 220. With respect to primary retroactivity, however, the Bowen Court held that:

> "a statutory grant of legislative rulemaking authority will not, as a general matter, be understood to encompass the power to promulgate retroactive rules unless that power is conveyed by Congress in express terms." Id. at 208.

There may be some room for exceptions even from the strict proscription of the Bowen rule, based on a balancing of interests in a particular case. See Bowen, 488 U.S. at 224-25; Citizens to Save

REV_00256775

Spencer County v. EPA, 600 F.2d 844, 879-81 (D.C. Cir. 1979); Saint Francis Memorial Hospital v. Weinberger, 413 F. Supp. 323, 332-33 (N.D. Cal. 1976). Reduced stringency may also be appropriate in the case of a policy statement,[14] or certain interpretative rules.[15]

Does the APA prohibit retroactive rulemaking? Thus far, the Supreme Court has not directly addressed the question. The court of appeals decision affirmed by the Supreme Court in Bowen held that it does. Georgetown University Hospital v. Bowen, 821 F.2d 750 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The Supreme Court's majority opinion did not discuss the APA, although Justice Scalia's concurring opinion expressly endorsed the circuit court's views.

The prohibition on retroactivity in rulemaking does not apply to adjudication. Bowen, 488 U.S. at 220-21 (concurring opinion). In the context of adjudication, retroactivity is measured against a standard of reasonableness and a balancing of interests. E.g., Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 606 F.2d 1094, 1116 n.77 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 920 and 447 U.S. 922; NLRB v. Majestic Weaving Co., 355 F.2d 854 (2d Cir. 1966); Shell Oil Co. v. Kleppe, 426 F. Supp. 894, 908 (D. Colo. 1977). As suggested above, the extent to which a balancing approach might justify exceptions from the Bowen rule with respect to regulations remains to be determined.

B. Agency Administrative Interpretations

1. Interpretation of Statutes

The interpretation of a statute, by regulation or otherwise, by the agency Congress has charged with the responsibility for administering it, is entitled to considerable weight. This principle is really a matter of common sense. An agency that works with a program from day to day develops an expertise which should not be lightly

[14]E.g., Iowa Power and Light Co. v. Burlington Northern, Inc., 647 F.2d 796, 812 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 907.

[15]E.g., Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. United States, 589 F.2d 1040, 1043 (Ct. Cl. 1978) (first regulation promulgated under a statute).

REV_00256776

disregarded. Even when dealing with a new law, Congress does not entrust administration to a particular agency without reason, and this decision merits respect. This, in addition to fundamental fairness, is why GAO considers it important to obtain agency comments wherever possible before rendering a decision.[16]

In the often cited case of Udall v. Tallman, 380 U.S. 1, 16 (1965), the Supreme Court stated the principle this way:

"When faced with a problem of statutory construction, this Court shows great deference to the interpretation given the statute by the officers or agency charged with its administration."

When the agency's interpretation is in the form of a regulation with the force and effect of law, the "deference," as we have seen, is at its highest. The agency's position should be upheld unless it is arbitrary or capricious. There should be no question of substitution of judgment. If the agency position can be said to be reasonable or to have a rational basis within the statutory grant of authority, it should stand, even though the reviewing body finds some other position preferable.

When the agency's interpretation is in the form of an interpretative regulation, manual, handbook, etc.— anything short of a regulation with the force and effect of law—the standard of review is somewhat lessened, and it is here that the question of deference really comes into play. It is clear that a reviewing body "is not required to give effect to an interpretative regulation." Batterton v. Francis, 432 U.S. 416, 425 n.9 (1977). Yet, as the Court also instructed in Udall v. Tallman, there is an entitlement to deference.

Deference in this context is not some fixed concept, but is variable, depending on the interplay of several factors. The Supreme Court explained the approach as follows in Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134, 140 (1944):

[16]GAO's desire for agency comments applies to audit reports as well as legal decisions. However, in view of the fundamental differences between the two products, the process differs. GAO's policy for audit reports is, at a minimum, to discuss the draft report with agency officials at an "exit conference." Depending on the results of the conference, written comments may or may not be requested, although GAO prefers to obtain written comments, especially when the report deals with sensitive or controversial issues. The final report will then reflect the comments received and identify significant changes resulting from them. See generally 31 U.S.C. § 718. For a legal decision, the agency's position on the legal issue(s) involved is solicited before a draft is ever written. For obvious reasons, draft legal decisions are not submitted for comment.

REV_00256777

"We consider that the rulings, interpretations and opinions of the Administrator under this Act, while not controlling upon the courts by reason of their authority [i.e., the statements in question were not regulations with the force and effect of law], do constitute a body of experience and informed judgment to which courts and litigants may properly resort for guidance. The weight of such a judgment in a particular case will depend upon the thoroughness evident in its consideration, the validity of its reasoning, its consistency with earlier and later pronouncements, and all those factors which give it power to persuade, if lacking power to control."

The basic premise that an agency interpretation is entitled to some largely undefined degree of deference is now settled. See, for example, in addition to the Tallman and Skidmore cases cited above, Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 315 (1979); Batterton v. Francis, 432 U.S. 416, 424-25 (1977); General Electric Co. v. Gilbert, 429 U.S. 125, 141 (1976) (referring to the above-quoted passage from Skidmore as the "most comprehensive statement of the role of interpretative rulings"); West Coast Construction Co. v. Oceano Sanitary District, 311 F. Supp. 378, 383 (N.D. Cal. 1970).[17]

As noted above, the degree of weight to be given an agency administrative interpretation varies with several factors:

- The nature and degree of expertise possessed by the agency. Chrysler Corp., 441 U.S. at 315; Batterton, 432 U.S. at 425 n.9. To take a somewhat self-serving example, we like to think that GAO's expertise in appropriations matters merits a certain respect. E.g., International Union, UAW v. Donovan, 746 F.2d 855, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 825; City of Los Angeles v. Adams, 556 F.2d 40, 51 (D.C. Cir. 1977).
- The duration and consistency of the interpretation. United States v. Clark, 454 U.S. 555, 565 (1982); Chrysler Corp., 441 U.S. at 315; Batterton, 432 U.S. at 425 n.9; Skidmore, 323 U.S. at 140; Theodus v. McLaughlin, 852 F.2d 1380, 1387 (D.C. Cir. 1988); Oceano, 311 F. Supp. at 383. While consistency may not always be a virtue, inconsistency will not help your case in court. E.g., Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 446 n.30 (1987); Rowan Cos. v. United States, 452 U.S. 247, 258-63 (1981); General Electric Co. v. Gilbert, 429 U.S. at 143.

[17]The rule is hardly a new one. It has consistently been espoused by the Supreme Court for well over a century and a half. Some of the early cases are: United States v. Philbrick, 120 U.S. 52, 59 (1886); Hahn v. United States, 107 U.S. 402, 406 (1882); United States v. Pugh, 99 U.S. 265, 269 (1878); United States v. Moore, 95 U.S. 760, 763 (1877); Edwards v. Darby, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 206, 210 (1827).

REV_00256778

- The soundness and thoroughness of reasoning underlying the position. Skidmore, 323 U.S. at 140.
- Evidence (or lack thereof) of congressional awareness of, and acquiescence in, the administrative position. United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 549-50 (1940); Helvering v. Winmill, 305 U.S. 79, 82-3 (1938); Norwegian Nitrogen Products Co. v. United States, 288 U.S. 294, 313-15 (1933); 41 Op. Att'y Gen. 57 (1950); B-114829-O.M., July 17, 1974.

For illustrations of how GAO has applied the deference principle in decisions, see:

- 49 Comp. Gen. 510 (1970) (Department of Agriculture regulations under Meat Inspection Act).
- 48 Comp. Gen. 5 (1968) (Veterans Administration interpretation of statutory educational assistance allowance).
- 42 Comp. Gen. 467, 477 (1963) (long-standing Navy application of Buy American Act).
- B-205365, June 3, 1985 (Department of Energy's statement on duration of Residential Conservation Service program).
- B-211558, February 13, 1984 (statement of Federal Emergency Management Agency on eligibility for certain Disaster Relief Act assistance).
- A-51604, August 25, 1981, affirming A-51604, February 19, 1980 (Department of Agriculture regulations on administrative cost reimbursement under the Food Stamp Act).
- B-160573, June 6, 1967, affirming B-160573, January 17, 1967 (Office of Emergency Planning interpretation of coverage under the Federal Disaster Act).

The deference principle does not apply to an agency's litigating position unless that position is also expressed in the regulations, rulings, or administrative practice of the agency. Bowen v. Georgetown University Hospital, 488 U.S. at 212. It also does not apply to an agency's interpretation of a statute which is not part of its program or enabling legislation. United States Dep't of Justice v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 709 F.2d 724, 729 n.21 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Library of Congress v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 699 F.2d 1280, 1286 n.29 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

As noted above, a regulation with the "force and effect of law" merits the highest degree of deference. In this connection, it is necessary to elaborate somewhat on the second Chrysler test—that the regulation be issued pursuant to a statutory grant of authority. How specific must the statutory delegation be? Chrysler itself provides somewhat conflicting signals. In one place, in the course of listing the three tests, the Court gives as an example the proxy rules of the Securities and Exchange Commission. 441 U.S. at 302-03. These are issued under the explicit delegation of 15 U.S.C. § 78n, which authorizes the SEC to issue proxy rules. Yet in another place, the Court said:

REV_00256779

> "This is not to say that any grant of legislative authority to a federal agency by Congress must be specific before regulations promulgated pursuant to it can be binding on courts in a manner akin to statutes. What is important is that the reviewing court reasonably be able to conclude that the grant of authority contemplates the regulations issued." 441 U.S. at 308.

A sampling of case law suggests that the "force and effect of law" is more likely to be found where the delegation is explicit. For example, the Secretary of the Treasury has general authority to "prescribe all needful rules and regulations" to administer the Internal Revenue Code. 26 U.S.C. § 7805. In addition, various other provisions of the Internal Revenue Code authorize the issuance of regulations dealing with specific topics. Regulations issued under the general authority of 26 U.S.C. § 7805—statutory though they may be—are not given the force and effect of law, and are accorded less deference than regulations issued under one of the more specific provisions. United States v. Vogel Fertilizer Co., 455 U.S. 16, 24 (1982); Rowan Cos. v. United States, 452 U.S. 247, 252-53 (1981); McDonald v. Commissioner, 764 F.2d 322, 328 (5th Cir. 1985); Gerrard v. United States Office of Education, 656 F. Supp. 570, 574 n.4 (N.D. Cal. 1987); Lima Surgical Associates v. United States, 20 Cl. Ct. 674, 679 n.8 (1990).

Some other illustrative cases are:

- Horner v. Jeffrey, 823 F.2d 1521 (Fed. Cir. 1987) (provision of Federal Personnel Manual found to be interpretive only, because statute did not expressly authorize Office of Personnel Management to define term "military service").
- Fmali Herb, Inc. v. Heckler, 715 F.2d 1385, 1387 (9th Cir. 1983) (Food and Drug Administration regulation defining term "common use in food" held interpretive because FDA was not "instructed by statute" to define the term).

REV_00256780

- St. Mary's Hospital, Inc. v. Harris, 604 F.2d 407 (5th Cir. 1979) (regulation issued under statute prohibiting disclosure of certain data "except as the Secretary . . . may by regulations prescribe" found to meet second Chrysler test).
- Intermountain Forest Industry Ass'n v. Lyng, 683 F. Supp. 1330, 1340-41 (D. Wyo. 1988) (second Chrysler test satisfied in case of published Forest Service timber management regulations where statutory delegation was not explicit, but this did not extend to plans developed under the regulations).

The question of deference to agency interpretations received considerable attention from the Supreme Court in the 1980's. Perhaps the most important case, one which we have not previously mentioned, is Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837 (1984), a decision involving regulations of the Environmental Protection Agency under the Clean Air Act. The Court formulated its approach in terms of two questions. The first question is "whether Congress has directly spoken to the precise question at issue." Id. at 842. If it has, the agency must of course comply with clear congressional intent, and regulations to the contrary will be invalidated. Thus, before you ever get to questions of "deference," it must first be determined that the regulation is not contrary to the statute, a question of delegated authority rather than deference. "If a court, employing traditional tools of statutory construction, ascertains that Congress had an intention on the precise question at issue, that intention is the law and must be given effect." Id. at 843 n.9.

Once you cross this threshold, that is, once you determine that the "statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue," the question becomes "whether the agency's answer is based on a permissible construction of the statute." Id. at 843. The Court went on to say:

> "If Congress has explicitly left a gap for the agency to fill, there is an express delegation of authority to the agency to elucidate a specific provision of the statute by regulation. Such legislative regulations are given controlling weight unless they are arbitrary, capricious, or manifestly contrary to the statute. [This presumably refers to regulations with the "force and effect of law," although the Chevron Court did not use that language.] Sometimes the legislative delegation to an agency on a particular question is implicit rather than explicit. In such a case, a court may not substitute its own construction of a statutory provision for a reasonable interpretation made by the administrator of an agency." Id. at 843-44 (footnotes omitted).

REV_00256781

REV_00256638

Reiterating the traditional deference concept, the Court then said that the proper standard of review is not whether the agency's construction is "inappropriate," but merely whether it is "a reasonable one." Id. at 844-45.

Three years later, in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421 (1987), the Court revisited the issue. The majority opinion arguably removes statutory construction from the scope of the deference concept, and indicates that deference is required only when an agency is applying a standard to a particular set of facts. Id. at 446-48. In a separate opinion concurring in the judgment only, Justice Scalia sharply criticized the majority opinion for misapplying Chevron and for doing so gratuitously. Id. at 453-55.

The lower courts wasted little time in finding Cardoza-Fonseca to have effectively modified Chevron, rejecting deference on "pure questions of statutory construction." E.g., Union of Concerned Scientists v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 824 F.2d 108 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Adams House Health Care v. Heckler, 817 F.2d 587 (9th Cir. 1987); International Union, UAW v. Brock, 816 F.2d 761 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

Before the ink on these decisions was dry, the Supreme Court spoke again in still another 1987 decision, NLRB v. United Food and Commercial Workers Union, 484 U.S. 112. The majority opinion indicates that, even under Cardoza-Fonseca, the two-step approach of Chevron continues to apply to a "pure question of statutory construction." 484 U.S. at 123. Justice Scalia wrote another concurring opinion, this time joined by three other Justices including the Chief Justice, applauding the return to Chevron and explicitly calling the three 1987 court of appeals cases cited above wrong. 484 U.S. at 133-34. A court of appeals case following this "latest" reading of Cardoza-Fonseca is Theodus v. McLaughlin, 852 F.2d 1380 (D.C. Cir. 1988). See also B-232482, June 4, 1990 (applying Chevron).

We began this chapter by noting the increasing role of agency regulations in the overall scheme of federal law. We conclude this discussion with the observation that this enhanced role makes continued litigation on the issues we've outlined inevitable. The proliferation and complexity of case law perhaps lends credence to Professor Davis' mild cynicism:

REV_00256782

"Unquestionably one of the most important factors in each decision on what weight to give an interpretative rule is the degree of judicial agreement or disagreement with the rule."[18]

2. Interpretation of Agency's Own Regulations

The principle of giving considerable deference to the administering agency's interpretation of a statute applies at least with equal force to an agency's interpretation of its own regulations. The Udall v. Tallman Court, after making the statement quoted at the beginning of this section, went on to state that "[w]hen the construction of an administrative regulation rather than a statute is in issue, deference is even more clearly in order." 380 U.S. at 16.

Perhaps the strongest statement is found in a 1945 Supreme Court decision, Bowles v. Seminole Rock & Sand Co., 325 U.S. 410, 413-14:

"Since this involves an interpretation of an administrative regulation a court must necessarily look to the administrative construction of the regulation if the meaning of the words used is in doubt. The intention of Congress or the principles of the Constitution in some situations may be relevant in the first instance in choosing between various constructions. But the ultimate criterion is the administrative interpretation, which becomes of controlling weight unless it is plainly erroneous or inconsistent with the regulation."[19]

A good illustration of how all of this can work is found in B-222666, January 11, 1988. The Defense Security Assistance Agency (DSAA) is responsible for issuing instructions and procedures for Foreign Military Sales transactions. These appear in the Security Assistance Management Manual (SAMM). A disagreement arose between DSAA and an Army operating command as to whether certain "reports of discrepancy," representing charges for nonreceipt by customers, should be charged to the FMS trust fund (which would effectively pass the losses on to all FMS customers) or to Army appropriated funds. DSAA took the latter position. GAO reviewed the regulation in question, and found it far from clear on this point. The decision noted that "both of the conflicting interpretations in this case appear to have merit, and both derive support from portions of the regulation." However, while the regulation may have been complex, the solution to the problem was fairly [18]2 Administrative Law Treatise § 7:13 (2d ed. 1979).

[19]While this determines the controlling interpretation, the propriety of that interpretation does not automatically follow. As the Court went on to caution in the very next sentence, "[t]he legality of the result reached by this process, of course, is quite a different matter." Bowles, 325 U.S. at 414.

REV_00256783

simple. DSAA wrote the regulation and GAO, citing the standard from the Bowles case, could not conclude that DSAA's position was plainly erroneous or inconsistent with the regulation. Therefore, DSAA's interpretation must prevail.

See also Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Stanisic, 395 U.S. 62, 72 (1969); San Luis Obispo Mothers for Peace v. NRC, 789 F.2d 26 (D.C. Cir. 1986); 63 Comp. Gen. 154 (1984); 57 Comp. Gen. 347 (1978); 56 Comp. Gen. 160 (1976); B-202568, September 11, 1981.

Just as with the interpretation of statutes, inconsistency in the application of a regulation will significantly diminish the deference courts are likely to give the agency's position. E.g., Murphy v. United States, 22 Cl. Ct. 147, 154 (1990).

C. Administrative Discretion

"[S]ome play must be allowed to the joints if the machine is to work." Tyson & Brother v. Banton, 273 U.S. 418, 446 (1927) (Justice Holmes, dissenting).

Throughout this publication, the reader will encounter frequent references to administrative discretion. The concept of discretion implies choice or freedom of judgment, and appears in a variety of contexts. There are many things an agency does every day that involve making choices and exercising discretion.

One type of discretion commonly occurs in the context of purpose availability. A decision may conclude that an appropriation is legally available for a particular expenditure if the agency, in its discretion, determines that the expenditure is a suitable means of accomplishing an authorized end.

To put this another way, there is often more than one way to do something, and reasonable minds may differ as to which way is the best. The thing to keep in mind from the legal perspective is that if a given choice is within the actor's legitimate range of discretion, then, whatever else it may be, it is not illegal. For example, as we will see in Chapter 4, an agency has discretionary authority to provide refreshments at award ceremonies under the Government Employees Incentive Awards Act. Agency A may choose to do so while agency B chooses not to. Under this type of discretion, agency B's reasons are irrelevant. It may simply not want to spend the money. As a matter of law, both agencies are correct.

REV_00256784

Another type of discretion is implicit in all of the preceding discussion of agency regulations. This type occurs when Congress charges an agency with responsibility for implementing a program or statute, but leaves much of the detail to the agency. In the course of carrying out the program or statute, the agency may be required to make various decisions, some of which may be expressly committed to agency discretion by the governing statute. Subject to certain fundamental concepts of administrative law, the agency is free to make those decisions in accordance with the sound exercise of discretion.

Under the Administrative Procedure Act, action which is "committed to agency discretion by law" is not subject to judicial review. 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). As the Supreme Court has pointed out, this is a "very narrow exception" applicable in "rare instances" where, quoting from the APA's legislative history, "statutes are drawn in such broad terms that in a given case there is no law to apply." Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 410 (1971). As noted, the "no law to apply" exception is uncommon, and most exercises of discretion will be found reviewable at least to some extent.

At this point, we should emphasize that these introductory comments are largely oversimplified; they are intended merely to lay a foundation for a discussion of the principles that follow.

1. Discretion Is Not Unlimited

To say that an agency has freedom of choice in a given matter does not mean that there are no limits to that freedom. Discretion does not mean unbridled license. The decisions have frequently pointed out that discretion means legal discretion, not unlimited discretion. The point was stated as follows in 18 Comp. Gen. 285, 292 (1938):

> "Generally, the Congress in making appropriations leaves largely to administrative discretion the choice of ways and means to accomplish the objects of the appropriation, but, of course, administrative discretion may not transcend the statutes, nor be exercised in conflict with law, nor for the accomplishment of purposes unauthorized by the appropriation . . . ."

See also 35 Comp. Gen. 615, 618 (1956); 4 Comp. Gen. 19, 20 (1924); 7 Comp. Dec. 31 (1900); 5 Comp. Dec. 151 (1898); B-130288, February 27, 1957; B-49169, May 5, 1945; A-24916, November 5, 1928.

REV_00256785

Discretion must be exercised before the obligation is incurred. Approval after the fact is merely a condoning of what has already been done and does not constitute the exercise of discretion. 22 Comp. Gen. 1083 (1943); 14 Comp. Gen. 698 (1935); A-57964, January 30, 1935. (This point should not be confused with an agency's occasional ability to ratify an otherwise unauthorized act. See, for example, the discussion of quantum meruit claims in Chapter 12.)

One way to illustrate the concept of "legal discretion" is to visualize a person standing in the center of a circle. The circumference of the circle represents the limits of discretion, imposed either by law or by the difficult-to-define but nonetheless real concept of "public policy."[20] The person is free to move in any direction, to stay near the center or to venture close to the perimeter, even to brush against it, but must stay within the circle. If our actor crosses the line of the circumference, he has exceeded or, to use the legal term, "abused" his discretion.

When GAO is performing its audit function, it may criticize a particular exercise of discretion as ill-conceived, inefficient, or perhaps wasteful. From the legal standpoint, however, there is no illegal expenditure as long as the actor remains within the circle. We may also note that the size of the circle may vary. For example, as we will see in Chapter 17, government corporations frequently have a broader range of discretion than non-corporate agencies.

When Congress wishes to confer discretion unrestrained by other law, its practice has been to include the words "notwithstanding the provisions of any other law" or similar language. 14 Comp. Gen. 578 (1935). Even this is not totally unfettered, however. For example, even this broad authority would not, at least as a general proposition, be sufficient to permit violation of the criminal laws. Also, agency power to act is always bound by the Constitution. Short of an amendment to the Constitution itself, no statute, however explicit, can be construed to authorize constitutional violations.

In addition, depending on the context and circumstances, federal laws of general applicability may be found to remain applicable.

[20]See, e.g., L'Orange v. Medical Protective Co., 394 F.2d 57 (6th Cir. 1968) (court may invalidate an act as "contrary to public policy" in the sense of being "injurious to the public," even where the act may not be expressly prohibited by statute).

REV_00256786

E.g., D.C. Federation of Civic Associations v. Volpe, 459 F.2d 1231, 1265 (D.C. Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1030 (provision of Federal-Aid Highway Act directing construction of a bridge "notwithstanding any other provision of law" did not render inapplicable certain federal statutes regarding protection of historic sites).

An example of a statute permitting action without regard to other laws is 50 U.S.C. § 1431, under which the President may authorize an agency with national defense functions to enter into or modify contracts "without regard to other provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, whenever he deems that such action would facilitate the national defense." Provisions of this type are not self-executing but contemplate specific administrative determinations in advance of the proposed action. In other words, the "other provisions of law" continue to apply unless and until waived by an authorized official. 35 Comp. Gen. 545 (1956). See also 22 Comp. Gen. 400 (1942).

2. Failure or Refusal to Exercise Discretion

Where a particular action or decision is committed to agency discretion by law, the agency is under a legal duty to actually exercise that discretion. The principle has evolved, and now appears firmly established, that the failure or refusal to exercise discretion committed by law to the agency is itself an abuse of discretion. As the following cases demonstrate, the fact of exercising discretion and the particular results of that exercise are two very different things.

We start with a Supreme Court decision, Work v. Rives, 267 U.S. 175 (1925). That case involved section 5 of the Dent Act, 40 Stat. 1274, under which Congress authorized the Secretary of the Interior to compensate a class of people who incurred losses in furnishing supplies or services to the government during World War I. The Secretary's determinations on particular claims were to be final and conclusive. The statute "was a gratuity based on equitable and moral considerations" (id. at 181), vesting the Secretary with the ultimate power to determine which losses should be compensated.

The plaintiff in Rives had sought mandamus to compel the Secretary to consider and allow a claim for a specific loss, incurred as a result of the plaintiff's obtaining a release from a contract to buy land. The Secretary had previously denied the claim because he had interpreted the statute as not embracing money spent on real estate. In holding that the Secretary had done all that was required by law, the Court cited and distinguished a line of cases—

REV_00256787

"in which a relator in mandamus has successfully sought to compel action by an officer who has discretion concededly conferred on him by law. The relator [plaintiff] in such cases does not ask for a decision any particular way but only that it be made one way or the other." Id. at 184.

The Secretary had made a decision on the claim, had articulated reasons for it, and had not exceeded the bounds of his statutory authority. That was enough. A court could compel the Secretary to actually exercise his discretion, that is, to act on a claim one way or the other, but could not compel him to exercise that discretion to achieve a particular result.

In Simpkins v. Davidson, 302 F. Supp. 456 (S.D.N.Y. 1969), the plaintiff sued to compel the Small Business Administration to make a loan to him. The court found that the plaintiff was entitled to submit an application, and to have the SBA consider that application and reach a decision on whether or not to grant the loan. However, he had no right to the loan itself, and the court could not compel the SBA to exercise its discretion to achieve a specific result. A very similar case on this point is Dubrow v. Small Business Administration, 345 F. Supp. 4 (C.D. Cal. 1972). See also B-226121-O.M., February 9, 1988, citing and applying these cases.

Another case involved a provision of the Farm and Rural Development Act which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to forgo foreclosure on certain delinquent loans. The plaintiffs were a group of farmers who alleged that the Secretary had refused to consider their requests. The district court held that the Secretary was required to consider the requests. Matzke v. Block, 542 F. Supp. 1107 (D. Kans. 1982). "When discretion is vested in an administrative agency, the refusal to exercise that discretion is itself an abuse of discretion." Id. at 1115. The Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed that portion of the decision in Matzke v. Block, 732 F.2d 799 (10th Cir. 1984), stating at page 801:

"The word 'may', the Secretary 'may' permit deferral, is, in our view, a reference to the discretion of the Secretary to grant the deferral upon a showing by a borrower. It does not mean as the Secretary argues that he has the discretion whether or not to implement the Act at all and not to consider any 'requests' under the statutory standards."

REV_00256788

The Comptroller General applied these principles in 62 Comp. Gen. 641 (1983). The Military Personnel and Civilian Employees' Claims Act of 1964 gives agencies discretionary authority to consider and settle certain employee personal property claims. An agency asked whether it had discretion to adopt a policy of refusing all claims submitted to it under the Act. No, the concept of administrative discretion does not extend that far, replied the Comptroller. While GAO would not purport to tell another agency which claims it should or should not consider—that part was discretionary—the decision noted that "a blanket refusal to consider all claims is, in our opinion, not the exercise of discretion" (id. at 643), and held "that an agency has the duty to actually exercise its discretion and that this duty is not satisfied by a policy of refusing to consider all claims" (id. at 645). Thus, for example, an agency would be within its discretion to make and announce a policy decision not to consider claims of certain types, such as claims for stolen cash, or to impose monetary ceilings on certain types of property, or to establish a minimum amount for the filing of claims. What it cannot do is disregard the statute in its entirety.

Additional cases illustrating this concept are California v. Settle, 708 F.2d 1380 (9th Cir. 1983); Rockbridge v. Lincoln, 449 F.2d 567 (9th Cir. 1971); and Jacoby v. Schuman, 568 F. Supp. 843 (E.D. Mo. 1983).

3. Regulations May Limit Discretion

By issuing regulations, an agency may voluntarily (and perhaps even inadvertently) limit its own discretion. A number of cases have held that an agency must comply with its own regulations, even if the action is discretionary by statute.

The leading case is United States ex rel. Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260 (1954). The Attorney General had been given statutory discretion to suspend the deportation of aliens under certain circumstances, and had, by regulation, given this discretion to the Board of Immigration Appeals. The Supreme Court held that, regardless of what the situation would have been if the regulations did not exist, the Board was required under the regulations to exercise its own judgment, and it was improper for the Attorney General to attempt to influence that judgment, in this case by issuing a list of "unsavory characters" he wanted to have deported. "In short, as long as the regulations remain operative, the Attorney General denies himself the right to sidestep the Board or dictate its decision in any manner." Id. at 267. Of course, the Attorney General could always amend his regulations, but an amendment could operate prospectively only.

REV_00256789

Awards under the Government Employees Incentive Awards Act, as we will discuss in Chapter 4, are wholly discretionary. In a 1982 decision, GAO reviewed Army regulations which provided that "awards will be granted" if certain specified criteria were met, and noted that the Army had circumscribed its own discretion by committing itself to make an award if those conditions were met. B-202039, May 7, 1982. Reviewing Air Force regulations under similar legislation applicable to military personnel, the Court of Claims noted in Griffin v. United States, 215 Ct. Cl. 710, 714 (1978):

> "Thus, we think that the Secretary may have originally had uncontrolled and unreviewable discretion in the premises, but as he published procedures and guidelines, as he received responsive suggestions, as he implemented them and through his subordinates passed upon compensation claims, we think by his choices he surrendered some of his discretion, and the legal possibility of abuse of discretion came into the picture."

More recently, the Comptroller General concluded in 67 Comp. Gen. 471 (1988) that the Farmers Home Administration had broad statutory authority to terminate the accrual of interest on the guaranteed portion of defaulted loans, but that it had restricted that discretion by certain provisions in its own regulations.

Another group of cases in this category are those, previously noted in Section A.1 of this chapter, in which an agency has waived an exemption from the APA and was held bound by that waiver.

For additional authority on the proposition that an agency can, by regulation, restrict otherwise discretionary action, see United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974); Vitarelli v. Seaton, 359 U.S. 535 (1959); Service v. Dulles, 354 U.S. 363 (1957); Sargisson v. United States, 913 F.2d 918, 921 (Fed. Cir. 1990); California Human Development Corp. v. Brock, 762 F.2d 1044 (D.C. Cir. 1985); Griffin v. Harris, 571 F.2d 767 (3d Cir. 1978); McCarthy v. United States, 7 Cl. Ct. 390 (1985).

4. Insufficient Funds

Congress occasionally legislates in such a manner as to restrict its own subsequent funding options. An example is contract authority, described in Chapter 2. Another example is entitlement legislation not contingent upon the availability of appropriations. A well-known example here is social security benefits. Where legislation creates, or authorizes the administrative creation of, binding legal obligations without regard to the availability of appropriations, a funding shortfall may delay actual payment but does not authorize the administering agency to alter or reduce the "entitlement."

REV_00256790

In the far more typical situation, however, Congress merely enacts a program and authorizes appropriations. For any number of reasons—budgetary constraints, changes in political climate, etc.—the actual funding may fall short of original expectations. What is an agency to do when it finds that it does not have enough money to accommodate an entire class of beneficiaries? Obviously, it can ask Congress for more. However, as any program administrator knows, asking and getting are two different things. If the agency cannot get additional funding and the program legislation fails to provide guidance, there is solid authority for the proposition that the agency may, within its discretion, establish reasonable classifications, priorities, and/or eligibility requirements, as long as it does so on a rational and consistent basis.[21]

The concept was explained by the Supreme Court in Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199, 230-31 (1974), a case involving an assistance program administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs:

> "[I]t does not necessarily follow that the Secretary is without power to create reasonable classifications and eligibility requirements in order to allocate the limited funds available to him for this purpose. [Citations omitted.] Thus, if there were only enough funds appropriated to provide meaningfully for 10,000 needy Indian beneficiaries and the entire class of eligible beneficiaries numbered 20,000, it would be incumbent upon the BIA to develop an eligibility standard to deal with this problem, and the standard, if rational and proper, might leave some of the class otherwise encompassed by the appropriation without benefits. But in such a case the agency must, at a minimum, let the standard be generally known so as to assure that it is being applied consistently and so as to avoid both the reality and the appearance of arbitrary denial of benefits to potential beneficiaries."

[21] Even under an entitlement program, an agency could presumably meet a funding shortfall by such measures as making prorated payments, but such actions would be only temporary pending receipt of sufficient funds to honor the obligation. The recipient would remain legally entitled to the balance.

REV_00256791

REV_00256639

In Suwannee River Finance, Inc. v. United States, 7 Cl. Ct. 556 (1985), the plaintiff sued for construction-differential subsidy payments under the Merchant Marine Act, administered by the Maritime Administration. In response to a sudden and severe budget reduction, MarAd had cut off all subsidies for nonessential changes after a specified date, and had notified the plaintiff to that effect. Noting that "[a]fter this budget cut, MarAd obviously could no longer be as generous in paying subsidies as it had been before," the court held MarAd's approach to be "a logical, effective and time-honored method for allocating the burdens of shrinking resources" and well within its administrative discretion. Id. at 561.

Another illustration is Dubrow v. Small Business Administration, 345 F. Supp. 4 (C.D. Cal. 1972), noted above in our discussion of failure to exercise discretion. The SBA was administering a program of low interest loans under the Disaster Relief Act following an earthquake in Los Angeles County. During the last few months of the period SBA established for filing applications, the number of applications increased drastically, to the point where it became apparent that continuing to approve claims in the same ratio as past claims would far exceed available funds. Unable to obtain additional funding from Congress, SBA changed its guidelines to require a more stringent showing of need and a reasonable ability to repay. The court held that SBA had not acted arbitrarily nor abused its discretion.

An illustration from the Comptroller General's decisions is B-202568, September 11, 1981. Due to a severe drought in the summer of 1980, the Small Business Administration found that its appropriation was not sufficient to meet demand under the SBA's disaster loan program. Rather than treating applicants on a "first come, first served" basis, SBA amended its regulations to impose several new restrictions, including a ceiling of 60 percent of actual physical loss. GAO reviewed SBA's actions and found them completely within the agency's administrative discretion.

In a 1958 case, Congress had, by statute, directed the Department of the Interior to transfer $2.5 million from one appropriation to another. Congress had apparently been under the impression that the "donor" account contained a sufficient unobligated balance. The donor account in fact had ample funds if both obligated and unobligated funds were counted, but had an unobligated balance of only $1.3 million. Interior was in an impossible position. It could not liquidate obligations in both accounts. If it transferred the full $2.5 million, some valid obligations under the donor appropriation would have to wait; if it transferred only the unobligated balance, it could not satisfy the entire obligation under the receiving account. First, GAO advised that the transfer would not violate the Antideficiency Act since it was not only authorized but directed by statute. As to which obligation should be liquidated first—that is, which could be paid immediately and which would have to await a supplemental appropriation—the best answer GAO could give was that "the question is primarily for determination administratively." In other words, there was no legally mandated priority, and all the agency could do was use its best judgment. GAO added, however, that it might be a good idea to first seek some form of congressional clarification. 38 Comp. Gen. 93 (1958).

REV_00256792

An early case, 22 Comp. Dec. 37 (1915), considered the concept of prorating. Congress had appropriated a specific sum for the payment of a designated class of claims against the Interior Department. When all claims were filed and determined, the total amount of the allowed claims exceeded the amount of the appropriation. The question was whether the amount appropriated could be prorated among the claimants.

The Comptroller of the Treasury declined to approve the prorating, concluding that "action should be suspended until Congress shall declare its wishes by directing a pro rata payment . . . or by appropriating the additional amount necessary to full payment." Id. at 40. If the decision was saying merely that the agency should attempt to secure additional funds—or at least explore the possibility—before taking administrative action which would reduce payments to individual claimants, then it is consistent with the more recent case law and remains valid to that extent. If, however, it was suggesting that the agency lacked authority to prorate without specific congressional sanction, then it is clearly superseded by Morton v. Ruiz and the other cases previously cited. There is no apparent reason why prorating should not be one of the discretionary options available to the agency along with the other options discussed in the various cases. It has one advantage in that each claimant will receive at least something.

A conceptually related situation is a funding shortfall in an appropriation used to fund a number of programs. Again, the agency must allocate its available funds in some reasonable fashion. Mandatory programs take precedence over discretionary ones.[22] Within the group of mandatory programs, more specific requirements should be funded first, such as those with specific time schedules, with remaining funds then applied to the more general requirements. B-159993, September 1, 1977; B-177806, February 24, 1978 (non-decision letter). These principles apply equally, of course, to the allocation of funds between mandatory and nonmandatory expenditures within a single-program appropriation. E.g., 61 Comp. Gen. 661, 664 (1982).

REV_00256793

Other cases recognizing an agency's discretion in coping with funding shortfalls are Los Angeles v. Adams, 556 F.2d 40, 49-50 (D.C. Cir. 1977), and McCarey v. McNamara, 390 F.2d 601 (3d Cir. 1968).

[22]A "mandatory program," as we use the term here, should not be confused with the entitlement programs previously noted. A mandatory program is simply one which Congress directs (rather than merely authorizes) the agency to conduct, but within the limits of available funding. Entitlement programs would take precedence over these "mandatory" programs.

REV_00256794

REV_00256795

Chapter 1

Introduction

A. Nature of Appropriations Law 1-2

B. The Congressional "Power of the Purse" 1-3

C. Historical Perspective 1-8

1. Evolution of the Budget and Appropriations Process 1-8
2. GAO's Role in the Process 1-11

D. "Life Cycle" of an Appropriation 1-13

1. Executive Budget Formulation and Transmittal 1-13
2. Congressional Action 1-14
   a. Summary of Congressional Process 1-14
   b. Points of Order 1-17
3. Budget Execution and Control 1-18
   a. In General 1-18
   b. Impoundment 1-19
4. Audit and Review 1-22
   a. Basic Responsibilities 1-22
   b. GAO Recommendations 1-23
5. The "Afterlife"—Unexpended Balances 1-24

E. The Role of the Accounting Officers: Legal Decisions 1-24

1. A Capsule History 1-24
   a. Accounting Officers Prior to 1894 1-24
   b. 1894-1921: Comptroller of the Treasury 1-25
   c. 1921 to the Present Time 1-26
2. Decisions of the Comptroller General 1-26
   a. General Information 1-26
   b. Note on Citations 1-29
   c. Matters Not Considered 1-29
   d. Research Aids 1-31
3. Other Relevant Authorities 1-33
   a. GAO Materials 1-33
   b. Non-GAO Materials 1-36
   c. Note on Title 31 Recodification 1-37

REV_00256640

Introduction

"[T]he protection of the public fisc is a matter that is of interest to every citizen . . . ." Brock v. Pierce County, 476 U.S. 253, 262 (1986).

A. Nature of Appropriations Law

A federal agency is a creature of law and can function only to the extent authorized by law. The Supreme Court has expressed what is perhaps the quintessential axiom of "appropriations law" as follows:

> "The established rule is that the expenditure of public funds is proper only when authorized by Congress, not that public funds may be expended unless prohibited by Congress."

United States v. MacCollom, 426 U.S. 317, 321 (1976). Thus, the concept of "legal authority" is central to the spending of federal money. When we use the term "federal appropriations law" or "federal fiscal law," we mean that body of law which governs the availability and use of federal funds.

Federal funds are made available for obligation and expenditure by means of appropriation acts (or occasionally by other legislation) and the subsequent administrative actions which release appropriations to the spending agencies. The use or "availability" of appropriations once enacted and released (that is, the rules governing the purpose, amounts, manner, and timing of obligations and expenditures) is governed by various authorities: the terms of the appropriation act itself; legislation, if any, authorizing the appropriation; the "organic" or "enabling" legislation which prescribes a function or creates a program which the appropriation funds; general statutory provisions which allow or prohibit certain uses of appropriated funds; and general rules which have been developed largely through decisions of the Comptroller General and the courts. These sources, together with certain provisions of the Constitution of the United States, form the basis of "appropriations law"—an area where questions may arise in as many contexts as there are federal actions that involve spending money.

Although this publication attempts to incorporate all relevant authorities, its primary focus is on the decisions and opinions of the "accounting officers of the government"—the Comptroller General of the United States and his predecessors.

REV_00256641

United States General Accounting Office

GAO

Office of the General Counsel

PROPERTY OF THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

PO # W5G135

DATE REC'D 7/95

July 1991

PRINCIPLES OF FEDERAL APPROPRIATIONS LAW

Second Edition

Volume I

GAO/OGC-91-5

REV_00256624

B. The Congressional "Power of the Purse"

The congressional "power of the purse" refers to the power of Congress to appropriate funds and to prescribe the conditions governing the use of those funds.[1] The power derives from specific provisions of the Constitution of the United States. First, Article I, section 8 empowers the Congress to "pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States," and to—> "make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers [listed in Art. I, § 8], and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof."

Next, the so-called Appropriations Clause, the first part of Article I, section 9, clause 7, provides that—

> "No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law . . . ."

The Appropriations Clause has been described as "the most important single curb in the Constitution on Presidential power."[2] It means that "no money can be paid out of the Treasury unless it has been appropriated by an act of Congress." Cincinnati Soap Co. v. United States, 301 U.S. 308, 321 (1937). Regardless of the nature of the payment—salaries, payments promised under a contract, payments ordered by a court, whatever—a federal agency may not make a payment from the United States Treasury unless Congress has made the funds available. As the Supreme Court stated well over a century ago:

> "However much money may be in the Treasury at any one time, not a dollar of it can be used in the payment of any thing not . . . previously sanctioned [by a congressional appropriation]."

Reeside v. Walker, 52 U.S. (11 How.) 272, 291 (1850). This prescription remains as valid today as it was when it was written. Citing both Cincinnati Soap and Reeside, the Court recently reiterated that any exercise of power by a government agency "is limited

[1]While the phrase itself is well-known, there has been relatively little literature describing and analyzing the substantive aspects of the power. One recent treatment is Stith, Congress' Power of the Purse, 97 Yale L.J. 1343 (1988).

[2]Edward S. Corwin, The Constitution and What It Means Today 134 (H.W. Chase & C.R. Ducat 14th ed. 1978).

REV_00256642

by a valid reservation of congressional control over funds in the Treasury." Office of Personnel Management v. Richmond, ___ U.S. ___, 110 S. Ct. 2465, 2472 (1990).[3]

As these statements by the Supreme Court make clear, the congressional "power of the purse" reflects the fundamental proposition that a federal agency is dependent on Congress for its funding. At its most basic level, this means that it is up to Congress to decide whether or not to provide funds for a particular program or activity and to fix the level of that funding. In exercising its appropriations power, however, Congress is not limited to these elementary functions. It is also well-established that Congress can, within constitutional limits, determine the terms and conditions under which an appropriation may be used. See, e.g., Cincinnati Soap Co., 301 U.S. at 321; Oklahoma v. Schweiker, 655 F.2d 401, 406 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (citing numerous cases); Spaulding v. Douglas Aircraft Co., 60 F. Supp. 985, 988 (S.D. Cal. 1945), aff'd, 154 F.2d 419 (9th Cir. 1946). Thus, Congress can decree, either in the appropriation itself or by separate statutory provisions, what will be required to make the appropriation "legally available" for any expenditure. It can, for example, describe the purposes for which the funds may be used, the length of time the funds may remain available for these uses, and the maximum amount an agency may spend on particular elements of a program. In this manner, Congress may, and often does, use its appropriation power to accomplish policy objectives and to establish priorities among federal programs.

Congress can also use its appropriation power for other measures. It can, for example, include a provision in an appropriation act prohibiting the use of funds for a particular program. By doing this without amending the program legislation, Congress can effectively suspend operation of the program for budgetary or policy reasons, or perhaps simply to defer further consideration of the merits of the program. The Supreme Court recognized the validity of this application of the appropriation power in United States v. Dickerson, 310 U.S. 554 (1940).

As some authorities have pointed out, there are limitations on the congressional spending power. Courts have listed four restrictions:

[3]Numerous similar statements exist. See, e.g., Knote v. United States, 95 U.S. 149, 154 (1877); Doe v. Mathews, 420 F. Supp. 865, 870-71 (D.N.J. 1976); Hart's Case, 16 Ct. Cl. 459, 484 (1880), aff'd, Hart v. United States, 118 U.S. 62 (1886).

REV_00256643

an exercise of the spending power must be in pursuit of the general welfare; conditions imposed on the use of federal funds must be reasonably related to the articulated goal; the intent of Congress to impose conditions must be authoritative and unambiguous; and the action in question must not be prohibited by an independent constitutional bar. South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 207-08 (1987); Nevada v. Skinner, 884 F.2d 445, 447 (9th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 1112. However, the Skinner court conceded that discussion of these restrictions comes more from commentators than from the courts themselves. Id. at 447 n.2.

The only cases we have found in which courts invalidated funding restrictions as exceeding the congressional spending power did so on the grounds that the restrictions violated some independent constitutional bar. For example, in United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946), the Supreme Court held an appropriation act restriction unconstitutional as a bill of attainder. The rider in question was a prohibition on the payment of salary to certain named individuals rather than a condition on the receipt of funds. In a more recent case, a provision in the 1989 District of Columbia appropriation act prohibited the use of any funds appropriated by the act unless the District adopted legislation spelled out in the rider. The provision was invalidated on first amendment grounds. Clarke v. United States, 705 F. Supp. 605 (D.D.C. 1988), aff'd, 886 F.2d 404 (D.C. Cir. 1989). The district court recognized that Congress has the power to condition funding on the enactment of certain legislation by the states. E.g., North Carolina ex rel. Morrow v. Califano, 445 F. Supp. 532, 535-36 (E.D.N.C. 1977), aff'd mem., 435 U.S. 962. The difference was that the provision in question would have barred use of all funds provided for the District for 1989 and, as both the district court and the court of appeals noted, was thus clearly coercive. 705 F. Supp. at 609; 886 F.2d at 409.[4]

Unless and until the courts provide further definition, it would appear safe to say that Congress can, as long as it does not violate the Constitution, appropriate money for any purpose it chooses, from paying the valid obligations of the United States to what the Supreme Court has termed "pure charity,"[5] and can implement [4]As of the date of this publication, the Clarke litigation may not be over. See Clarke v. United States, 898 F.2d 162 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (period for seeking Supreme Court review tolled pending en banc reconsideration of government motions).

[5]United States v. Realty Co., 163 U.S. 427, 441 (1896).

REV_00256644

policy objectives by imposing conditions on the receipt or use of the money.

The Constitution does not provide detailed instruction on how Congress is to implement its appropriation power, but leaves it to Congress to do so by statute. Congress has in fact done this, and continues to do it, in two ways: the annual budget and appropriations process and a series of permanent "funding statutes." As one court has put it:

> "[The Appropriations Clause] is not self-defining and Congress has plenary power to give meaning to the provision. The Congressionally chosen method of implementing the requirements of Article I, section 9, clause 7 is to be found in various statutory provisions." Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190, 194-95 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

There were few statutory funding controls in the early years of the Nation and abuses were commonplace. As early as 1809, one senator, citing a string of abuses, introduced a resolution to look into ways to prevent the improper expenditure of public funds.[6] In 1816 and 1817, John C. Calhoun lamented the "great evil" of diverting public funds to uses other than those for which they were appropriated.[7] Even as late as the post-Civil War years, the situation saw little improvement. "Funds were commingled. Obligations were made without appropriations. Unexpended balances from prior years were used to augment current appropriations."[8]

The permanent funding statutes, found mostly in Title 31 of the United States Code, are designed to combat these and other abuses. They did not spring up overnight, but have evolved over the span of nearly two centuries. Nevertheless, when viewed as a whole, they form a logical pattern. We may regard them as pieces of a puzzle which fit together to form the larger picture of how Congress exercises its control of the purse. Some of the key statutory directives in this scheme, each of which is discussed elsewhere in this publication, are:

[6]19 Annals of Cong. 347 (1809) (remarks of Senator Hillhouse).

[7]Hopkins & Nutt, The Anti-Deficiency Act (Revised Statutes 3679) and Funding Federal Contracts: An Analysis, 80 Mil. L. Rev. 51, 57 n.7 (1978).

[8]Id. at 57.

REV_00256645

- A statute will not be construed as making an appropriation unless it expressly so states. 31 U.S.C. § 1301(d).
- Agencies may not spend, or commit themselves to spend, in advance of or in excess of appropriations. 31 U.S.C. § 1341 (Antideficiency Act).
- Appropriations may be used only for their intended purposes. 31 U.S.C. § 1301(a).
- Appropriations made for a definite period of time may be used only for expenses properly incurred during that time. 31 U.S.C. § 1502(a) ("bona fide need" statute).
- Unless authorized by law, an agency may not keep money it receives from sources other than congressional appropriations, but must deposit the money in the Treasury. 31 U.S.C. § 3302(b) ("miscellaneous receipts" statute).

The second part of Article I, section 9, clause 7 of the Constitution requires that—

> "a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time."

Implementation of this provision, as a logical corollary of the appropriation power, is also wholly within the congressional province, and the courts have so held.[9] United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 178 n.11 (1974) ("it is clear that Congress has plenary power to exact any reporting and accounting it considers appropriate in the public interest"); Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d at 195; Hart v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. at 484 ("[a]uditing and accounting are but parts of a scheme for payment . . . .").

The Constitution mentions appropriations in only one other place. Article I, section 8, clause 12 provides that the Congress shall have power to "raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years." The two-year limit in clause 12 has been strictly construed as applying essentially to appropriations for personnel and for operations and maintenance, and not to other military appropriations such as weapon system procurement or military construction. See B-114578, November 9, 1973; 40 Op. Att'y Gen. 555 (1948); 25 Op.

[9]Thus, Congress has delegated authority to the Comptroller General to prescribe, after consultation with the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, accounting principles and standards for the federal government. 31 U.S.C. § 3511.

REV_00256646

Att'y Gen. 105 (1904). In any event, Congress has traditionally made appropriations for military personnel and operations and maintenance on a fiscal-year basis.

Whenever one reflects upon the constitutional prerogatives of the legislature, it must be against the backdrop of a central theme underlying much of federal fiscal law and policy—the natural antithesis of executive flexibility and congressional control. Each objective is valid and necessary, but it is impossible to simultaneously maximize both. Either can be enhanced only at the expense of the other. Finding and maintaining a reasonable and proper balance is both the goal and the challenge of the legal process.

C. Historical Perspective

1. Evolution of the Budget and Appropriations Process [10]

The first general appropriation act, passed by Congress in 1789, appropriated a total of $639,000 and illustrates what was once a relatively uncomplicated process. We quote it in full (1 Stat. 95):

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be appropriated for the service of the present year, to be paid out of the monies which arise, either from the requisitions heretofore made upon the several states, or from the duties on impost and tonnage, the following sums, viz. A sum not exceeding two hundred and sixteen thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of the civil list, under the late and present government; a sum not exceeding one hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of the department of war; a sum not exceeding one hundred and ninety thousand dollars for discharging the warrants issued by the late board of treasury, and remaining unsatisfied; and a sum not exceeding ninety-six thousand dollars for paying the pensions to invalids."

As the size and scope of the federal government have grown, so has the complexity of the appropriations process.

In 1789, the House established the Ways and Means Committee to report on revenues and spending, only to disband it that same year following the creation of the Treasury Department. The House [10]For a more detailed review, see Louis Fisher, The Authorization-Appropriation Process in Congress: Formal Rules and Informal Practices, 29 Cath. U.L. Rev. 51, 53-59 (1979).

REV_00256647

Ways and Means Committee was re-established to function permanently in 1795 and was recognized as a standing committee in 1802.

On the Senate side, the Finance Committee was established as a standing committee in 1816. Up until that time, the Senate had referred appropriation measures to temporary select committees. By 1834, jurisdiction over all Senate appropriation bills was consolidated in the Senate Finance Committee.

In the mid-19th century, a move was begun to restrict appropriation acts to only those expenditures which had been previously authorized by law. The purpose was to avoid the delays caused when legislative items or "riders" were attached to appropriation bills. Rules were eventually passed by both Houses of Congress to require, in general, prior legislative authorizations for the enactment of appropriations.

It was during this same period that the concept of a fiscal year separate and distinct from the calendar year came into existence.[11]

Under the financial strains caused by the Civil War, appropriations committees first appeared in both the House and the Senate, diminishing the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees, respectively. Years later, the need for major reforms was again accentuated by the burdens of another war. Following World War I, Congress passed the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, Pub. L. No. 67-13 (June 10, 1921), 42 Stat. 20.

Before 1921, departments and agencies generally made individual requests for appropriations. These submissions were compiled for congressional review in an uncoordinated "Book of Estimates." The Budget and Accounting Act authorized the President to submit a national budget each year and restricted the authority of the agencies to present their own proposals. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 1104, 1105. With this centralization of authority for the formulation of the executive branch budget in the President and the newly established Bureau of the Budget (now Office of Management and Budget), Congress also [11]Prior to 1842, the government did not distinguish between fiscal year and calendar year. From 1842 to 1976, the government's fiscal year ran from July 1 to the following June 30. In 1974, Congress changed the fiscal year to run, starting with FY 1977, from October 1 to September 30. 31 U.S.C. § 1102. The concept of a fiscal year has been termed an "absolute necessity." Sweet v. United States, 34 Ct. Cl. 377, 386 (1899). See also Bachelor v. United States, 8 Ct. Cl. 235, 238 (1872) (reasons for fixing a fiscal year are "so obvious . . . that no one can fail to see their importance").

REV_00256648

took steps to strengthen its jurisdiction over fiscal matters, including the establishment of the General Accounting Office.[12]

The decades immediately following World War II saw growth in both the size and the complexity of the federal budget. It became apparent that the congressional role in the "budget and appropriations" process centered heavily on the appropriations phase and placed too little emphasis on the budgetary phase. A major round of reforms came about with the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974.[13] This statute made several major changes in the budget and appropriations process. For example:

- It established a detailed calendar governing the various stages of the budget and appropriations process. 2 U.S.C. § 631.
- It provided for congressional review of the President's budget; the establishment of target ceilings for federal expenditures through one or more concurrent resolutions; and the evaluation of spending bills against these targets. 2 U.S.C. §§ 632–642. Prior to this time, Congress had considered the President's budget only in the context of individual appropriation bills. To implement the new process, the law created Budget Committees in both the Senate and the House, and a Congressional Budget Office.
- Prompted by the growth of "backdoor spending," it enhanced the role of the Appropriations Committees in reviewing proposals for contract authority, borrowing authority, and mandatory entitlements. 2 U.S.C. § 651.

The 1974 legislation also imposed limitations on the impounding of appropriated funds by the executive branch. 2 U.S.C. §§ 681–688.

The next piece of major legislation in the fiscal area was the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act,[14] enacted to deal with a growing budget deficit (excess of total outlays over total receipts for a given fiscal year, 2 U.S.C. § 622(6)). The Gramm-Rudman procedures received a major overhaul with the Budget Enforcement Act of [12]A summary of the changes brought about by the Budget and Accounting Act, including a listing of all amendments to the Act up to 1989, may be found in National Federation of Federal Employees v. Cheney, 883 F.2d 1038, 1043-46 (D.C. Cir. 1989).

[13]Pub. L. No. 93-344, 88 Stat. 297 (1974).

[14]Pub. L. No. 99-177, title II, 99 Stat. 1037, 1038 (1985).

REV_00256649

1990.[15] The law establishes maximum deficit amounts for each fiscal year through FY 1995, subject to adjustment, and sets monetary caps on several broad spending categories. In grossly oversimplified terms, if spending bills cause a cap to be exceeded, the law provides mechanisms for making appropriate spending reductions (called "sequestrations" of budget authority). Sequestrations may occur at several points during a fiscal year.

2. GAO's Role in the Process

As the budget and appropriations process has evolved over the course of the 20th century, GAO's role with respect to it has also evolved. Title III of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, GAO's basic enabling statute, created two very different roles for the Comptroller General and his new agency. First, he was to assume all the duties of the Comptroller of the Treasury and his six subordinate auditors, and to serve as the chief accounting officer of the government. To this end, the Comptroller General is to settle all claims by and against the government,[16] and to settle the accounts of the United States government.[17] Another of these functions is the issuance of legal decisions, discussed separately in Section E below.

In addition, the Comptroller General was directed to investigate the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds, reporting the results to Congress;[18] and to make investigations and reports upon the request of either House of the Congress or of any congressional committee with jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures.[19] He is also directed to supply such information, if requested, to the President.[20] The mandates in the 1921 legislation, together with a subsequent directive in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 to make expenditure analyses of executive branch

[15]Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-508 (November 5, 1990), 104 Stat. 1388–573. The law requires the Comptroller General to report to the Congress and the President, 45 days after the end of a legislative session, on the extent to which the President and the Office of Management and Budget have complied with the statutory requirements.

[16]Budget and Accounting Act § 305, 42 Stat. at 24, 31 U.S.C. § 3702(a).

[17]31 U.S.C. § 3526(a), also derived from § 305 of the Budget and Accounting Act.

[18]Budget and Accounting Act §§ 312(a) and (c), 42 Stat. at 25-26, 31 U.S.C. §§ 712(1), 719(c).

[19]Budget and Accounting Act § 312(b), 42 Stat. at 26, 31 U.S.C. §§ 712(4) and (5). At about this same time, both the House and the Senate consolidated jurisdiction over all appropriation bills in a single committee in each body.

[20]31 U.S.C. § 719(f), derived from Budget and Accounting Act § 312(e), 42 Stat. at 26.

REV_00256650

agencies with reports to the cognizant congressional committees,[21] have played a large part in preparing the Congress to consider the merits of the President's annual budget submission.

The Accounting and Auditing Act of 1950[22] authorized the Comptroller General to audit the financial transactions of each executive, legislative, and judicial agency;[23] and to prescribe, in consultation with the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, accounting principles, standards, and requirements for the executive agencies suitable to their needs.[24]

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 expanded the scope of GAO's audit activities to include program evaluations as well as financial audits.[25]

The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 gave GAO a number of additional duties in the budgetary arena. It directs GAO, in cooperation with Treasury, the Office of Management and Budget, and the Congressional Budget Office, to "establish, maintain, and publish standard terms and classifications for fiscal, budget, and program information of the Government, including information on fiscal policy, receipts, expenditures, programs, projects, activities, and functions." Agencies are to use these terms and classifications in providing information to Congress.[26] It gives GAO a variety of functions relating to the obtaining, studying, and reporting to Congress of fiscal, budget, and program information.[27] Finally, it gives the Comptroller General the responsibility to [21]Pub. L. No. 79-601, § 206, 60 Stat. 812, 837 (1946), 31 U.S.C. §§ 712(3), 719(e).

[22]Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, Pub. L. No. 81-784, Title I, Part II, 64 Stat. 832, 834 (1950).

[23]Id. § 117(a), 64 Stat. at 837, 31 U.S.C. § 3523(a).

[24]Id. § 112(a), 64 Stat. at 835, 31 U.S.C. § 3511(a).

[25]Pub. L. No. 91-510, § 204, 84 Stat. 1140, 1168 (1970), 31 U.S.C. § 717.

[26]31 U.S.C. §§ 1112(c) and (d), derived from Pub. L. No. 93-344, § 801(a), 88 Stat. at 327.

[27]31 U.S.C. §§ 1113(b)–(e), also derived from Pub. L. No. 93-344, § 801(a). GAO is continually studying the budget process as part of its overall mission. For an overview of GAO reform proposals, with references to related GAO reports, see Managing the Cost of Government: Proposals for Reforming Federal Budgeting Practices, GAO/AFMD-90-1 (October 1989). A study of the budget deficit is The Budget Deficit: Outlook, Implications, and Choices, GAO/OCG-90-5 (September 1990).

REV_00256651

Foreword

We are pleased to present the second edition of Principles of Federal Appropriations Law. Our first edition, published in June 1982, was to our knowledge the first attempt at a comprehensive treatment of the body of law governing the expenditure of federal funds. Response to that effort has been both gratifying and encouraging.

Our objective in Principles is to present a basic reference work covering those areas of law in which the Comptroller General renders decisions and which are not covered in other GAO publications. Our approach has been to lay a foundation with text discussion, using relevant authorities to illustrate the principles discussed, their application, and exceptions. We have tried to be simultaneously basic and detailed—basic so that the book will be useful as a "teaching manual" for the novice or occasional user, lawyer and non-lawyer alike; detailed so that it will also be a useful reference for those whose work requires a more in-depth understanding. Principles is essentially expository in nature, and should not be regarded as an independent source of legal authority.

The material in this publication is, of course, subject to change by statute or through the decision-making process. In addition, it is manifestly impossible to cover every aspect of this broad field. We make no claim to have included every relevant decision, and we may admit, albeit grudgingly, that errors and omissions are probably inevitable. Principles should therefore be used as a general guide and starting point, and not as a substitute for legal research. As errors, omissions, and new material are discovered, they will be addressed in revisions or supplements, which we plan to issue periodically.

It is also important to emphasize that we have tried to focus our attention on issues and principles of governmentwide application. In various instances, there may be agency-specific legislation which provides authority or restrictions somewhat different from the general rule. While we have noted many of these for purposes of illustration, a comprehensive cataloguing of such legislation is beyond the scope of this publication. Thus, failure to note agency-specific exceptions in a given context does not necessarily mean that they do not exist.

We are publishing our second edition in looseleaf format. It will consist of four volumes. Users should retain their copies of the first monitor, and report to Congress on, all proposed impoundments of budget authority by the executive branch.[28]

REV_00256625

The Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982[29] is a very brief law but one with substantial impact. It was intended to increase governmentwide emphasis on internal accounting and administrative controls. Agencies are to establish internal accounting and administrative control systems in accordance with standards prescribed by the Comptroller General, conduct annual reviews of their systems in accordance with Office of Management and Budget guidelines, and report the results of these reviews to the President and to Congress. GAO monitors, and issues governmentwide reports on, the implementation of the Financial Integrity Act. See, for example, Financial Integrity Act: Inadequate Controls Result in Ineffective Federal Programs and Billions in Losses, GAO/AFMD-90-10 (November 1989).

D. "Life Cycle" of an Appropriation

An appropriate subtitle for this section might be "phases of the budget and appropriations process." An appropriation has phases roughly similar to the various stages in the existence of "man"—conception, birth, death, even an afterlife. The various phases in an appropriation's "life cycle" may be identified as follows:

- Executive budget formulation and transmittal
- Congressional action
- Budget execution and control
- Audit and review
- The "afterlife"—unexpended balances

1. Executive Budget Formulation and Transmittal

The first step in the life cycle of an appropriation is the long and exhaustive administrative process of budget preparation and review, a process that may well take place several years before the budget for a particular fiscal year is ready to be submitted to the Congress. The primary participants in the process at this stage are the agencies and individual organizational units, who review current operations, program objectives, and future plans, and the [28]Pub. L. No. 93-344, §§ 1014(b), 1015, 88 Stat. at 335, 336, 2 U.S.C. §§ 685(b), 686.

[29]Pub. L. No. 97-255, 96 Stat. 814 (1982), codified at 31 U.S.C. §§ 3512(c) and (d) (redesignated by section 301(a) of the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990).

REV_00256652

Office of Management and Budget (OMB),[30] which is charged with broad oversight, supervision, and responsibility for coordinating and formulating a consolidated budget submission.

Throughout this preparation period, there is a continuous exchange of information among the various federal agencies, OMB, and the President, including revenue estimates and economic outlook projections from the Treasury Department, the Council of Economic Advisers, the Congressional Budget Office, and the Departments of Commerce and Labor.

The President's budget must be submitted to Congress on or before the first Monday in February of each year, for use during the following fiscal year. 2 U.S.C. § 631. Numerous statutory provisions, the most important of which are 31 U.S.C. §§ 1104–1109, prescribe the content and nature of the materials and justifications that must be submitted with the President's budget request. A comprehensive listing is contained in GAO's report Budget Issues: The President's Budget Submission, GAO/AFMD-90-35 (October 1989). Specific instructions and policy guidance are contained in OMB Circular No. A-11, entitled Preparation and Submission of Budget Estimates.

2. Congressional Action

a. Summary of Congressional Process

In exercising the broad discretion granted by the Constitution, the Congress can approve funding levels contained in the President's budget, increase or decrease those levels, eliminate proposals, or add programs not requested by the Administration.

In simpler times, appropriations were often made in the form of a single, consolidated appropriation act. The most recent regular consolidated appropriation act[31] was the General Appropriation Act, 1951, 64 Stat. 595. Since that time, appropriations have generally [30]OMB was established by Part 1 of Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1970 (84 Stat. 2085), which designated the former Bureau of the Budget as OMB and transferred all the authority vested in the Bureau and its director to the President. By Executive Order 11541, July 1, 1970, the President in turn delegated that authority to the Director of OMB. OMB's primary functions include assistance to the President in the preparation of the budget and the formulation of the fiscal program of the government, supervision and control of the administration of the budget, centralized direction in executive branch financial management, and review of the organization and management of the executive branch.

[31]For a few years in the mid-1980s, very few regular appropriation acts were passed, resulting in consolidated continuing resolutions for those years.

REV_00256653

been made in a series of regular appropriation acts plus one or more supplemental appropriation acts. Most regular appropriation acts are organized on the basis of one or more major departments and a number of smaller agencies (corresponding to the jurisdiction of appropriations subcommittees), although a few are based solely on function. An agency may receive funds under more than one appropriation act. The individual structures are of course subject to change over time. At the present time, there are 13 regular appropriation acts, as follows:

- Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and related agencies
- Department of Defense
- Department of the Interior and related agencies
- Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and related agencies
- Department of Transportation and related agencies
- Department of the Treasury, Postal Service, and general government
- Departments of Veterans Affairs, Housing and Urban Development, and independent agencies
- District of Columbia
- Energy and water development
- Foreign operations, export financing, and related programs
- Legislative branch
- Military construction
- Rural development, Department of Agriculture, and related agencies

Before considering individual appropriation measures, however, Congress must, under the Congressional Budget Act, first agree on governmentwide budget totals. A timetable for congressional action is set forth in 2 U.S.C. § 631, with further detail in §§ 632–656. Key steps in that timetable are summarized below.[32]

First Monday in February. On or before this date, the President submits to Congress the Administration's budget request for the fiscal year to start the following October 1. The deadline under the [32]References on the process are Senate Committee on the Budget, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and the Congressional Budget Process, S. Prt. No. 99-119, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. (1985), and Library of Congress, Congressional Research Service, Manual on the Federal Budget Process, No. 87-286 GOV (March 31, 1987). Both are useful although outdated in some respects in light of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

REV_00256654

1974 Budget Act had been the first Monday after January 3. While this was changed by section 13112(a)(4) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, the conference report on the 1990 legislation stresses the expectation that the President continue to comply with the January deadline, and that the "increased flexibility be used very rarely to meet only the most pressing exigencies." H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 964, 101st Cong., 2d Sess. 1171 (1990).

February 15. The Congressional Budget Office submits to the House and Senate Budget Committees its annual report required by 2 U.S.C. § 602(f). The report contains the CBO's analysis of fiscal policy and budget priorities.

Within 6 weeks after President submits budget. Each congressional committee with legislative jurisdiction submits to the appropriate Budget Committee its views and estimates on spending and revenue levels for the following fiscal year on matters within its jurisdiction. 2 U.S.C. § 632(d), as amended by section 13112(a)(5) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, 104 Stat. 1388–608. The House and Senate Budget Committees then hold hearings and prepare their respective versions of a concurrent resolution, which is intended to be the overall budget plan against which individual appropriation bills are to be evaluated.

April 15. Congress completes action on the concurrent resolution, which includes a breakdown of estimated outlays by budget function. 2 U.S.C. § 632(a). The conference report on the concurrent resolution allocates the totals among individual committees. 2 U.S.C. § 633(a). The resolution may also include "reconciliation directives"—directives to individual committees to recommend legislative changes in revenues or spending to meet the goals of the budget plan. 2 U.S.C. § 641(a).

June 10. House Appropriations Committee completes the process of reporting out the individual appropriation bills.

June 15. Congress completes action on any reconciliation legislation stemming from the concurrent resolution.

June 30. House of Representatives completes action on annual appropriation bills.

REV_00256655

Of course, House consideration of the individual appropriation bills will have begun several months earlier. The first step is for each subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee to study appropriation requests and evaluate the performance of the agencies within its jurisdiction. Typically, each subcommittee will conduct hearings at which federal officials give testimony concerning both the costs and achievements of the various programs administered by their agencies, and provide detailed justifications for their funding requests. Eventually each subcommittee reports a single appropriation bill for consideration by the entire committee and then the full House membership.

As individual appropriation bills are passed by the House, they are sent to the Senate. As in the House, each appropriation measure is first considered in subcommittee and then reported by the full Appropriations Committee to be voted upon by the full Senate. In the event of variations in the Senate and House versions of a particular appropriation bill, a conference committee including representatives of both Houses of Congress is formed. It is the function of the conference committee to resolve all differences, but the full House and Senate (in that order) must also vote to approve the conference report.

Following either the Senate's passage of the House version of an appropriation measure, or the approval of a conference report by both bodies, the enrolled bill is then sent to the President for signature or veto. The Congressional Budget Act envisions completion of the process by October 1.

b. Points of Order

A number of requirements relevant to an understanding of appropriations law and the legislative process are found in rules of the Senate and/or House of Representatives. For example, Rule XXI(2), Rules of the House of Representatives, prohibits appropriations for objects not previously authorized by law. A similar but more limited prohibition exists in Rule XVI, Standing Rules of the Senate. Other examples are the prohibition against including general legislation in appropriation acts[33] (Senate Rule XVI, House Rule XXI), and the prohibition against consideration by a conference committee of matters not committed to it by either House (Senate Rule XXVIII, House Rule XXVIII). The applicability of Senate and House [33]Whether a given item is general legislation or merely a condition on the availability of an appropriation is frequently a difficult question.

REV_00256656

rules is exclusively within the province of the particular House and a matter on which the Comptroller General will generally not render an opinion. E.g., B-173832, August 1, 1975.

In addition, rather than expressly prohibiting a given item, legislation may provide that it shall not be in order for the Senate or House to consider a bill or resolution containing that item. An important example from the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is 2 U.S.C. § 651(a), which provides that it shall not be in order for either House to consider any bill, resolution, or amendment containing certain types of new spending authority, such as contract authority, unless that bill, resolution, or amendment also provides that the new authority is to be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent provided in appropriation acts.

The effect of these rules and of statutes like 2 U.S.C. § 651(a) is to subject the non-complying bill to a "point of order." A point of order is a procedural objection raised by a Member alleging a departure from a rule or statute governing the conduct of business. It differs from an absolute prohibition in that (a) it is always possible that no one will raise it, and (b) if raised, it may or may not be sustained. Also, some measures may be considered under special resolutions waiving points of order. If a point of order is raised and sustained, the offending provision is effectively killed, and may be revived only if it is amended to cure the non-compliance.

The potential effect of a rule or statute subjecting a provision to a point of order is limited to the pre-enactment stage. If a point of order is not raised, or raised and not sustained, the provision if enacted is no less valid. To restate, a rule or statute subjecting a given provision to a point of order has no effect or application once the legislation or appropriation has been enacted. 57 Comp. Gen. 34 (1977); 34 Comp. Gen. 278 (1954); B-173832, August 1, 1975; B-123469, April 14, 1955; B-87612, July 26, 1949.

3. Budget Execution and Control

a. In General

The body of enacted appropriation acts for a fiscal year, as amplified by legislative history and the relevant budget submissions, becomes the government's financial plan for that fiscal year. The

REV_00256657

"execution and control" phase refers generally to the period of time during which the budget authority made available by the appropriation acts remains available for obligation. An agency's task during this phase is to spend the money Congress has given it to carry out the objectives of its program legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget apportions or distributes budgeted amounts to the executive branch agencies, thereby making funds in appropriation accounts (administered by the Treasury Department) available for obligation. 31 U.S.C. §§ 1511–16. The apportionment system through which budget authority is distributed by time periods (usually quarterly) or by activities is intended to achieve an effective and orderly use of available budget authority, and to reduce the need for supplemental or deficiency appropriations. Each agency then makes allotments pursuant to the OMB apportionments or other statutory authority. 31 U.S.C. §§ 1513(d), 1514. An allotment is a delegation of authority to agency officials which allows them to incur obligations within the scope and terms of the delegation.[34] These concepts will be discussed further in Chapter 6. Further detail on the budget execution phase may also be found in OMB Circular No. A-34, Instructions on Budget Execution.

In addition, OMB exercises a leadership role in executive branch financial management. This role was strengthened, and given a statutory foundation, by the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-576 (November 15, 1990), 104 Stat. 2838. The "CFO" Act also enacted a new 31 U.S.C. Chapter 9, which establishes a Chief Financial Officer in the cabinet departments and several other executive branch agencies, to work with OMB and to develop and oversee financial management plans, programs, and activities within the agency.

b. Impoundment

While an agency's basic mission is to carry out its programs with the funds Congress has appropriated, there is also the possibility that, for a variety of reasons, the full amount appropriated by Congress will not be expended or obligated by the administration. Under the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, an impoundment is an action or inaction by an officer or employee of the United States that precludes the obligation or expenditure of budget authority [34]Note the distinction in terminology: Congress appropriates, OMB apportions, and the receiving agency allots (or allocates) within the apportionment.

REV_00256658

provided by Congress. GAO, Glossary of Terms Used in the Federal Budget Process, PAD-81-27, at 63 (1981).[35] The Act applies to "Salaries and Expenses" appropriations as well as program appropriations. 64 Comp. Gen. 370, 375-76 (1985).

There are two types of impoundment action—deferrals and rescission proposals. A deferral is a postponement of budget authority in the sense that an agency temporarily withholds or delays obligation or expenditure. The President is required to submit a special message to Congress reporting any deferral of budget authority. Deferrals are authorized only to provide for contingencies, to achieve savings made possible by changes in requirements or greater efficiency of operations, or as otherwise specifically provided by law.[36] A deferral may not be proposed for a period beyond the end of the fiscal year in which the special message reporting it is transmitted, although, for multiple-year funds, nothing prevents a new deferral message covering the same funds in the following fiscal year. 2 U.S.C. §§ 682(1), 684.[37]

A rescission involves the cancellation of budget authority previously provided by Congress (before that authority would otherwise expire), and can be accomplished only through legislation. The President must advise Congress of any proposed rescissions, again in a special message. The President is authorized to withhold budget authority which is the subject of a rescission proposal for a period of 45 days of continuous session following receipt of the proposal. Unless Congress acts to approve the proposed rescission within that time, the budget authority must be made available for obligation. 2 U.S.C. §§ 682(3), 683, 688.

[35]For a detailed discussion of impoundment before the 1974 legislation, see B-135564, July 26, 1973.

[36]These requirements are repeated in 31 U.S.C. § 1512(c), which prescribes conditions for establishing reserves through the apportionment process. The President's deferral authority under the Impoundment Control Act thus mirrors his authority to establish reserves under the Antideficiency Act. In other words, deferrals are authorized only in those situations in which reserves are authorized under the Antideficiency Act. GAO/OGC-90-4 (B-237297.3, March 6, 1990). Deferrals for policy reasons are not authorized. Id.

[37]Under the original 1974 legislation, a deferral could be overturned by the passage of an impoundment resolution by either the House or the Senate. This "legislative veto" provision was found unconstitutional in City of New Haven v. United States, 809 F.2d 900 (D.C. Cir. 1987), and the statute was subsequently amended to remove it. Congress may, of course, enact legislation disapproving a deferral and requiring that the deferred funds be made available for obligation.

REV_00256659

The Impoundment Control Act requires the Comptroller General to monitor the performance of the executive branch in reporting proposed impoundments to the Congress. A copy of each special message reporting a proposed deferral or rescission must be delivered to the Comptroller General, who then must review each such message and present his views to the Senate and House of Representatives. 2 U.S.C. § 685(b). If the Comptroller General finds that the executive branch has established a reserve or deferred budget authority and failed to transmit the required special message to the Congress, the Comptroller General so reports to the Congress. The Comptroller General also reports to the Congress on any special message transmitted by the executive branch which has incorrectly classified a deferral or a rescission. 2 U.S.C. § 686. GAO will construe a deferral as a de facto rescission if the timing of the proposed deferral is such that "funds could be expected with reasonable certainty to lapse before they could be obligated, or would have to be obligated imprudently to avoid that consequence." 54 Comp. Gen. 453, 462 (1974).

If, under the Impoundment Control Act, the executive branch is required to make budget authority available for obligation (if, for example, Congress does not pass a rescission bill) and fails to do so, the Comptroller General is authorized to bring a civil action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to require that the budget authority be made available. 2 U.S.C. § 687.

The expiration of budget authority or delays in obligating it resulting from ineffective or unwise program administration are not regarded as impoundments unless accompanied by or derived from an intention to withhold the budget authority. B-229326, August 29, 1989. Similarly, an improper obligation, although it may violate several other statutes, is generally not an impoundment. 64 Comp. Gen. 359 (1985).

There is also a distinction between deferrals, which must be reported, and "programmatic" delays, which GAO does not regard as reportable under the Impoundment Control Act. A programmatic delay is one in which operational factors unavoidably impede the obligation of budget authority, notwithstanding the agency's reasonable and good faith efforts to implement the program. GAO/OGC-91-8 (B-241514.5, May 7, 1991); GAO/OGC-91-3 (B-241514.2, February 5, 1991). Since intent is a relevant factor, the determination requires a case-by-case evaluation of the agency's justification in light of all of the surrounding circumstances. Delays resulting from the following factors may be programmatic, depending on the facts and circumstances involved: uncertainty as to the amount of budget authority that will ultimately be available for the program (B-203057, September 15, 1981; B-207374, July 20, 1982, noting that the uncertainty is particularly relevant when it "arises in the context of continuing resolution funding, where Congress has not yet spoken definitively"); time required to set up the program or to comply with statutory conditions on obligating the funds (B-96983/B-225110, September 3, 1987); compliance with congressional committee directives (B-221412, February 12, 1986); delay in receiving a contract proposal requested from contemplated sole source awardee (B-115398, February 6, 1978); historically low loan application level (B-115398, September 28, 1976); late receipt of complete loan applications (B-195437.3, February 5, 1988); delay in awarding grants pending issuance of necessary regulations (B-171630, May 10, 1976); administrative determination of allowability and accuracy of claims for grant payments (B-115398, October 16, 1975). A programmatic delay may become a reportable deferral if the programmatic basis ceases to exist.

REV_00256660

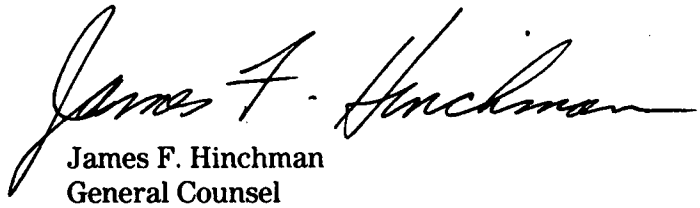
4. Audit and Review



a. Basic Responsibilities

Every federal department or agency has the initial and fundamental responsibility to assure that its application of public funds adheres to the terms of the pertinent authorization and appropriation acts, as well as any other relevant statutory provisions. This responsibility—enhanced by the enactment of the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act and the creation of an Inspector General in many agencies—includes establishing and maintaining appropriate accounting and internal controls, one of which is an internal audit program. Assuring the legality of proposed payments is also, under 31 U.S.C. § 3528, one of the basic responsibilities of agency certifying officers. The Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990 (Pub. L. No. 101-576, §§ 303, 304, 104 Stat. 2838, 2849–53), added new 31 U.S.C. § 3515 and 3521(e)–(h), which provide for the preparation and audit of financial statements for those agencies required to establish Chief Financial Officers. In addition, GAO regularly edition since it will not be completely superseded until publication of Volume IV of this second edition.

REV_00256661

We express our appreciation to the many persons in all branches of the federal government, as well as nonfederal readers, who have called or written to offer comments and suggestions. Our primary goal now, as it was in 1982, is to present a document that will be useful. To this end, we continue to welcome any comments or suggestions for improvement.

James F. Hinchman
General Counsel

July 1991

REV_00256626

audits federal programs under its various authorities previously summarized.

b. GAO Recommendations

GAO's principal function is to examine the financial, management, and program activities of federal agencies, and to evaluate the efficiency, effectiveness, and economy of agency operations. GAO's reports to the Congress contain both objective findings and recommendations for improvement. Recommendations may be addressed to the Congress itself (for changes in legislation) or to agency heads (for action which the agency is authorized to take under existing law).

Under section 236 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970, 31 U.S.C. § 720, whenever GAO issues a report which contains recommendations to the head of any federal agency, the agency must submit a written statement of the actions taken with respect to the recommendations (1) to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs and the House Committee on Government Operations not later than sixty days after the date of the report, and (2) to the Senate and House Appropriations Committees in connection with the agency's first request for appropriations submitted more than sixty days after the date of the report. As GAO pointed out in a letter to a private inquirer (B-207783, April 1, 1983), the law does not require the agency to comply with the recommendation, merely to report on the "actions taken," which can range from full compliance to zero. The theory is that, if the agency disagrees, Congress will have both positions so that it can then take whatever action it might deem appropriate.

The term "agency" for purposes of 31 U.S.C. § 720 is broadly defined to include any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States government, including wholly owned but not mixed-ownership government corporations, or the District of Columbia government. 31 U.S.C. § 720(a); B-114831-O.M., July 28, 1975.

Although formal recommendations within the scope of 31 U.S.C. § 720 are most commonly made in audit reports, they are occasionally made in Comptroller General decisions as well. See, e.g., 59 Comp. Gen. 1 (1979); 58 Comp. Gen. 350 (1979); 53 Comp. Gen. 547 (1974). Decisions may also include suggestions which are not intended to invoke the formal response requirements of 31 U.S.C. § 720. When section 720 is intended to apply, it will be explicitly cited.

REV_00256662

5. The "Afterlife"—Unexpended Balances

Continuing our "life cycle" analogy, an appropriation "dies" in a sense at the end of its period of obligational availability. There is, however, an afterlife to the extent of any unexpended balances. Unexpended balances, both obligated and unobligated, retain a limited availability for five fiscal years following expiration of the period for which the source appropriation was made. These concepts are discussed in Chapter 5.

E. The Role of the Accounting Officers: Legal Decisions

1. A Capsule History

Since the early days of the Republic, the Congress, in exercising its oversight of the public purse, has utilized administrative officials for the settlement of public accounts and the review of federal expenditures. These officials have traditionally been called the "accounting officers" of the government.[38]

a. Accounting Officers Prior to 1894

