Fees to provide training for State and local law enforcement officers at FBI National Academy; prohibition; reimbursement. Act Oct. 18, 1986, P.L. 99-500, and Act Oct. 30, 1986, P.L. 99-591, Title I, § 101(b) in part, 100 Stat. 3341-39, 3341-56 [Act Oct. 30, 1986, P.L. 99-591, is a corrected version of Act Oct. 18, 1986, P.L. 99-500.], provide: "The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration shall not establish and collect fees to provide training to State and local law enforcement officers at the FBI National Academy. Any fees collected for training of State and local law enforcement officers, which occurred at the National Academy on or after October 1, 1986, shall be reimbursed to the appropriate official or agency. In addition, the Director of the National Institute of Corrections shall not establish and collect fees to provide training to State and local officers which was not provided on a reimbursable basis prior to October 1, 1986.".

REV_00264291

Gifts to Federal Law Enforcement Training Center; use for authorized purposes, including annual award to outstanding student. Act Sept. 29, 1999, P.L. 106-58, Title I, 113 Stat. 432, provides: "The Center is authorized to accept and use gifts of property, both real and personal, and to accept services, for authorized purposes, including funding of a gift of intrinsic value which shall be awarded annually by the Director of the Center to the outstanding student who graduated from a basic training program at the Center during the previous fiscal year, which shall be funded only by gifts received through the Center's gift authority.".

Similar provisions were contained in Acts Nov. 3, 1989, P.L. 101-136, Title I, 103 Stat. 784; Nov. 5, 1990, P.L. 101-509, Title I, 104 Stat. 1390; Oct. 28, 1991, P.L. 102-141, Title I, 105 Stat. 835; Oct. 6, 1992, P.L. 102-393, Title I, 106 Stat. 1730; Oct. 28, 1993, P.L. 103-123, Title I, 107 Stat. 1227; Sept. 30, 1994, P.L. 103-329, Title I, 108 Stat. 2383; Nov. 19, 1995, P.L. 104-52, Title I, 109 Stat. 470; Sept. 30, 1996, P.L. 104-208, Div A, Title I, § 101(f) [Title I], 110 Stat. 3009-317; Oct. 10, 1997, P.L. 105-61, Title I, 111 Stat. 1275; Oct. 21, 1998, P.L. 105-277, Div A, § 101(h) [Title I], 112 Stat. 2681-483.

NOTES:

CODE OF FEDERAL REGULATIONS

Criminal justice block grants under the Department of Justice, 28 CFR Part 33.

Source: All Sources : Federal Legal - U.S. : USCS - United States Code Service; Code, Const, Rules, Conventions & Public Laws
Terms: ("director" /5 "federal bureau of investigation") and ("attorney general") (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Friday, January 12, 2001 - 3:03 PM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

Source: All Sources : Federal Legal - U.S. : USCS - United States Code Service; Code, Const, Rules, Conventions & Public Laws
Terms: ("director" /5 "federal bureau of investigation") and ("attorney general") (Edit Search)

28 USCS § 534

UNITED STATES CODE SERVICE
Copyright 2000, LEXIS Law Publishing, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc.
All rights reserved.

 CURRENT THROUGH P.L. 106-418, APPROVED 11/1/00 ***
 WITH GAPS OF 106-398, 402, 405, 408, 411, 414, 415, 417 ***

TITLE 28. JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
PART II. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
CHAPTER 33. FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

28 USCS § 534 (2000)

§ 534. Acquisition, preservation, and exchange of identification records and information; appointment of officials

(a) The Attorney General shall--
(1) acquire, collect, classify, and preserve identification, criminal identification, crime, and other records;
(2) acquire, collect, classify, and preserve any information which would assist in the identification of any deceased individual who has not been identified after the discovery of such deceased individual;
(3) acquire, collect, classify, and preserve any information which would assist in the location of any missing person (including an unemancipated person as defined by the laws of the place of residence of such person) and provide confirmation as to any entry for such a person to the parent, legal guardian, or next of kin of that person (and the Attorney General may acquire, collect, classify, and preserve such information from such parent, guardian, or next of kin); [and]
(4) exchange such records and information with, and for the official use of, authorized officials of the Federal Government, the States, cities, and penal and other institutions.

(b) The exchange of records and information authorized by subsection (a)(4) of this section is subject to cancellation if dissemination is made outside the receiving departments or related agencies.

(c) The Attorney General may appoint officials to perform the functions authorized by this section.

(d) For purposes of this section, the term "other institutions" includes--
(1) railroad police departments which perform the administration of criminal justice and have arrest powers pursuant to a State statute, which allocate a substantial part of their annual budget to the administration of criminal justice, and which meet training requirements established by law or ordinance for law enforcement officers; and
(2) police departments of private colleges or universities which perform the administration of criminal justice and have arrest powers pursuant to a State statute, which allocate a substantial part of their annual budget to the administration of criminal justice, and which meet training requirements established by law or ordinance for law enforcement officers.

(e) (1) Information from national crime information databases consisting of identification records, criminal history records, protection orders, and wanted person records may be disseminated to civil or criminal courts for use in domestic violence or stalking cases. Nothing grand jury, although abuse of attorney's dual employment status might be shown in particular cases, especially where agency uses grand jury investigation to gather information for civil administrative proceedings to which it would not otherwise have access. United States v Birdman (1979, CA3 Pa) 602 F2d 547, cert den 444 US 1032, 62 L Ed 2d 668, 100 S Ct 703 and cert den 445 US 906, 63 L Ed 2d 322, 100 S Ct 1084.

5. Right of privacy

Retention of arrest records, fingerprints and photographs is not per se violation of right of privacy, where there was no improper dissemination of records, no improper use of records, and no injury sustained as result of retention of records after charges against defendants resulted either in acquittal or dismissal or both, in federal court. United States v Rosen (1972, SD NY) 343 F Supp 804.

Even if arrest record showing acquittal never falls into "unauthorized" hands, fact remains that (1) information is valueless if its retention is based upon some theory of law enforcement assistance to police at any level, since it has been determined to be unfounded in law, (2) it cannot form basis for any legitimate law enforcement investigation, (3) use of this information by "authorized" agencies would place subject person at distinct disadvantage with other citizens, (4) use of information would of necessity be prejudiced specifically to rights of subject person as compared with rights enjoyed by all other citizens, and (5) such unfair state of affairs is devoid of fair play, violation of constitutional right of privacy as well as of presumption of innocence, and affront to sense of justice. United States v Dooley (1973, ED Pa) 364 F Supp 75.

Maintenance and dissemination of arrest records of persons never convicted of criminal charge based upon conduct for which they were arrested does not violate constitutional warranties of due process and constitutional right to privacy. Hammons v Scott (1976, DC Cal) 423 F Supp 625.

II. RELIABILITY OF RECORDS

6. Duty of federal government, generally

FBI's function of maintaining and disseminating criminal identification records and files carries with it as a corollary responsibility to discharge this function reliably and responsibly and without unnecessary harm to individuals whose rights have been invaded. Menard v Saxbe (1974) 162 App DC 284, 498 F2d 1017, 28 ALR Fed 248; Tarlton v Saxbe (1974) 165 App DC 293, 507 F2d 1116, on remand (DC Dist Col) 407 F Supp 1083.

FBI cannot avoid all responsibility for accuracy of information in its criminal files. Shadd v United States (1975, WD Pa) 389 F Supp 721, affd without op (CA3 Pa) 535 F2d 1247, cert den 429 US 887, 50 L Ed 2d 169, 97 S Ct 241.

Pending challenges to FBI criminal records need not be reflected on individual's FBI criminal record.

REV_00264302

in this subsection shall be construed to permit access to such records for any other purpose.

(2) Federal and State criminal justice agencies authorized to enter information into criminal information databases may include--

(A) arrests, convictions, and arrest warrants for stalking or domestic violence or for violations of protection orders for the protection of parties from stalking or domestic violence; and

(B) protection orders for the protection of persons from stalking or domestic violence, provided such orders are subject to periodic verification.

(3) As used in this subsection--

(A) the term "national crime information databases" means the National Crime Information Center and its incorporated criminal history databases, including the Interstate Identification Index; and

(B) the term "protection order" includes an injunction or any other order issued for the purpose of preventing violent or threatening acts or harassment against, or contact or communication with or physical proximity to, another person, including temporary and final orders issued by civil or criminal courts (other than support or child custody orders) whether obtained by filing an independent action or as a pendente lite order in another proceeding so long as any civil order was issued in response to a complaint, petition, or motion filed by or on behalf of a person seeking protection.

HISTORY:

(Sept. 6, 1966, P.L. 89-554, § 4(c), 80 Stat. 616; Oct. 12, 1982, P.L. 97-292, §§ 2, 3(a), 96 Stat. 1259.)

(As amended Nov. 18, 1988, P.L. 100-690, Title VII, Subtitle I, § 7333, 102 Stat. 4469; Sept. 13, 1994, P.L. 103-322, Title IV, Subtitle F, § 40601(a), 108 Stat. 1950.)

HISTORY; ANCILLARY LAWS AND DIRECTIVES

Prior law and revision:

Derivation	U.S. Code	Revised Statutes and Statutes at Large
.....	5 U.S.C. 300 (as applicable to acquisition etc. of identification and other records).	Aug. 31, 1964, Pub. L. 88-527, Sec. 201 (1st 105 words of 1st par. under "Federal Bureau of Investigation", as applicable to acquisition etc. of identification and other records), 78 Stat. 717.
.....	5 U.S.C. 340.	June 11, 1930, ch. 455, 46 Stat. 554.

The sections are combined and reorganized for clarity. Former section 300 of title 5 was from the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1965. Similar provisions were contained in each appropriation Act for the Department of Justice running back to 1921, which Acts are identified in a note under former section 300 of title 5, U.S.C. 1964 ed.

In subsection (a), the word "shall" is substituted for "has the duty" as a more direct expression. The function of acquiring, collecting, classifying, etc., referred to in former section 340 of title 5 was transferred to the Attorney General by 1950 Reorg., Plan No. 2, § 1, eff. May 24, 1950, 64 Stat. 1261, which is codified in section 509 of this title. Accordingly, the first 29 words and last 30 words of former section 340 are omitted as unnecessary.

In subsection (c), the authority to appoint officials for the cited purposes is implied.

REV_00264294

Explanatory notes:
The bracketed word "and" has been inserted in subsec. (a)(3) to indicate the probable intent of Congress to include such word.

Amendments:
1982. Act Oct. 12, 1982 substituted the section catchline for one which read: "Acquisition, preservation, and exchange of identification records and information; appointment of officials"; in subsec. (a), in para. (1), deleted "and" following the concluding semicolon, redesignated former para. (2) as para. (4), added paras. (2) and (3), and, in para. (4), as redesignated, substituted "exchange such records and information" for "exchange these records"; and in subsec. (b), inserted "and information", and substituted "(a)(4)" for "(a)(2)".
1988. Act Nov. 18, 1988 added subsec. (d).
1994. Act Sept. 13, 1994 added subsec. (e).

Other provisions:
Funds for exchange of identification records. Act Oct. 25, 1972, P.L. 92-544, Title II, § 201, 86 Stat. 1115, provided: "The funds provided for Salaries and Expenses, Federal Bureau of Investigation, may be used hereafter, in addition to those uses authorized thereunder, for the exchange of identification records with officials or federally chartered or insured banking institutions to promote or maintain the security of those institutions, and, if authorized by State statute and approved by the Attorney General, to officials of State and local governments for purposes of employment and licensing, any such exchange to be made only for the official use of any such official and subject to the same restriction with respect to dissemination as that provided for under the aforementioned appropriation.".
Parimutuel Licensing Simplification Act of 1988. Act Aug. 22, 1988, P.L. 100-413, 102 Stat. 1101, provides:
"Section 1. Short title.
"This Act may be cited as the 'Parimutuel Licensing Simplification Act of 1988'.
"Sec. 2. Submission by association of State regulatory officials.
"(a) In general. An association of State officials regulating parimutuel wagering, designated for the purpose of this section by the Attorney General, may submit fingerprints to the Attorney General on behalf of any applicant for State license to participate in parimutuel wagering. In response to such a submission, the Attorney General may, to the extent provided by law, exchange, for licensing and employment purposes, identification and criminal history records with the State governmental bodies to which such applicant has applied.
"(b) Definition. As used in this section, the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any territory or possession of the United States.
"Sec. 3. Effective date.
"This Act [this note] shall take effect on July 1, 1989.".
Uniform Federal Crime Reporting Act of 1988. Act Nov. 18, 1988, P.L. 100-690, Title VII, Subtitle I, § 7332, 102 Stat. 4468, effective Jan. 1, 1989 as provided by subsec. (g) of this note, provides:
"(a) Short title. This section may be cited as the 'Uniform Federal Crime Reporting Act of 1988'.
"(b) Definitions. For purposes of this section, the term 'Uniform Crime Reports' means the reports authorized under section 534 of title 28, United States Code, and administered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation which compiles nationwide criminal statistics for use in law enforcement administration, operation, and management and to assess the nature and type of crime in the United States.
"(c) Establishment of system.
(1) In general. The Attorney General shall acquire, collect, classify, and preserve national data on Federal criminal offenses as part of the Uniform Crime Reports.
"(2) Reporting by Federal agencies. All departments and agencies within the Federal government (including the Department of Defense) which routinely investigate complaints of criminal activity, shall report details about crime within their respective jurisdiction to the Attorney General in a uniform manner and on a form prescribed by the Attorney General. The reporting required by this subsection shall be limited to the reporting of those crimes comprising the Uniform Crime Reports.

REV_00264295

"(3) Distribution of data. The Attorney General shall distribute data received pursuant to paragraph (2), in the form of annual Uniform Crime Reports for the United States, to the President, Members of the Congress, State governments, and officials of localities and penal and other institutions participating in the Uniform Crime Reports program.

"(d) Role of Federal Bureau of Investigation. The Attorney General may designate the Federal Bureau of Investigation as the lead agency for purposes of performing the functions authorized by this section and may appoint or establish such advisory and oversight boards as may be necessary to assist the Bureau in ensuring uniformity, quality, and maximum use of the data collected.

"(e) Inclusion of offenses involving illegal drugs. The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is authorized to classify offenses involving illegal drugs and drug trafficking as a part I crime in the Uniform Crime Reports.

"(f) Authorization of appropriations. There are authorized to be appropriated $ 350,000 for fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section after fiscal year 1989.

"(g) Effective date. The provisions of this section shall be effective on January 1, 1989.".

Data collection and reporting. Act Nov. 18, 1988, P.L. 100-690, Title VII, Subtitle O, § 7609, 102 Stat. 4517, provides:

"(a) Family violence reporting. Under the authority of section 534 of title 28, United States Code, the Attorney General shall require, and include in uniform crime reports, data that indicate--

"(1) the age of the victim; and

"(2) the relationship of the victim to the offender, for crimes of murder, aggravated assault, simple assault, rape, sexual offenses, and offenses against children.

"(b) National crime survey. The Director of the Bureau of Justice Statistics, through the annual National Crime Survey, shall collect and publish data that more accurately measures the extent of domestic violence in America, especially the physical and sexual abuse of children and the elderly.

"(c) Authorization of appropriations. There are authorized to be appropriated in fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, and 1992, such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.".

Hate Crime Statistics Act. Act April 23, 1990, P.L. 101-275, 104 Stat. 140; Sept. 13, 1994, P.L. 103-322, Title XXXII, Subtitle I, § 320926, 108 Stat. 2131; July 3, 1996, P.L. 104-155, § 7, 110 Stat. 1394, provides:

"[Sec. 1.] (a) This Act may be cited as the 'Hate Crime Statistics Act'.

"(b)

(1) Under the authority of section 534 of title 28, United States Code, the Attorney General shall acquire data, for each calendar year, about crimes that manifest evidence of prejudice based on race, religion, disability, sexual orientation, or ethnicity, including where appropriate the crimes of murder, non-negligent manslaughter; forcible rape; aggravated assault, simple assault, intimidation; arson; and destruction, damage or vandalism of property.

"(2) The Attorney General shall establish guidelines for the collection of such data including the necessary evidence and criteria that must be present for a finding of manifest prejudice and procedures for carrying out the purposes of this section.

"(3) Nothing in this section creates a cause of action or a right to bring an action, including an action based on discrimination due to sexual orientation. As used in this section, the term 'sexual orientation' means consensual homosexuality or heterosexuality. This subsection does not limit any existing cause of action or right to bring an action, including any action under the Administrative Procedure Act or the All Writs Act [5 USCS §§ 551 et seq. or 28 USCS § 1651].

REV_00264296

"(4) Data acquired under this section shall be used only for research or statistical purposes and may not contain any information that may reveal the identity of an individual victim of a crime.

"(5) The Attorney General shall publish an annual summary of the data acquired under this section.

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section through fiscal year 2002.

"Sec. 2. (a) Congress finds that--

"(1) the American family life is the foundation of American Society,

"(2) Federal policy should encourage the well-being, financial security, and health of the American family,

"(3) schools should not de-emphasize the critical value of American family life.

"(b) Nothing in this Act shall be construed, nor shall any funds appropriated to carry out the purpose of the Act be used, to promote or encourage homosexuality.".

Fees for fingerprint identification records and name checks. Act Nov. 5, 1990, P.L. 101-515, Title II, 104 Stat. 2112; Jan. 6, 1996, P.L. 104-91, Title I, § 101(a), 110 Stat. 11; Jan. 26, 1996, P.L. 104-99, Title II, § 211, 110 Stat. 37 (enacting into law § 113 of H.R. 2076 of the 104th Congress, as passed by the House of Representatives on Dec. 6, 1995); Jan. 26, 1996, P.L. 104-99, Title II, § 211, 110 Stat. 37, provides: "For fiscal year 1991 and hereafter the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation may establish and collect fees to process fingerprint identification records and name checks for non-criminal justice, non-law enforcement employment and licensing purposes and for certain employees of private sector contractors with classified Government contracts, and notwithstanding the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 3302, credit such fees to this appropriation to be used for salaries and other expenses incurred in providing these services, and that the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation may establish such fees at a level to include an additional amount to establish a fund to remain available until expended to defray expenses for the automation of fingerprint identification and criminal justice information services and associated costs".

National Crime Information Center Project 2000. Act Nov. 29, 1990, P.L. 101-647, Title VI, Subtitle B, 104 Stat. 4823, provides:

"Sec. 611. Short title.

"This section may be cited as the 'National Law Enforcement Cooperation Act of 1990'.

"Sec. 612. Findings.

"The Congress finds that--

"(1) cooperation among Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies is critical to an effective national response to the problems of violent crime and drug trafficking in the United States;

"(2) the National Crime Information Center, which links more than 16,000 Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies, is the single most important avenue of cooperation among law enforcement agencies;

"(3) major improvements to the National Crime Information Center are needed because the current system is more than twenty years old; carries much greater volumes of enforcement information; and at this time is unable to incorporate technological advances that would significantly improve its performance; and

"(4) the Federal Bureau of Investigation, working with State and local law enforcement agencies and private organizations, has developed a promising plan, 'NCIC 2000', to make the necessary upgrades to the National Crime Information Center that should meet the needs of United States law enforcement agencies into the next century.

"Sec. 613. Authorization of appropriations.

"There are authorized to be appropriated the following sums to implement the 'NCIC 2000' project:

"(1) $ 17,000,000 for fiscal year 1991;

"(2) $ 25,000,000 for fiscal year 1992;

"(3) $ 22,000,000 for fiscal year 1993;

"(4) $ 9,000,000 for fiscal year 1994; and

"(5) such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1995.

REV_00264297

"Sec. 614. Report.

"By February 1 of each fiscal year for which funds for NCIC 2000 are requested, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall submit a report to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives that details the progress that has been made in implementing NCIC 2000 and a complete justification for the funds requested in the following fiscal year for NCIC 2000.".

Rulemaking to carry out subsec. (e). Act Sept. 13, 1994, P.L. 103-322, Title IV, Subtitle F, § 40601(b), 108 Stat. 1951, provides: "The Attorney General may make rules to carry out the subsection added to section 534 of title 28, United States Code [subsec. (e) of this section], by subsection (a), after consultation with the officials charged with managing the National Crime Information Center and the Criminal Justice Information Services Advisory Policy Board.".

Compilation of statistics relating to intimidation of government employees. Act April 24, 1996, P.L. 104-132, Title VIII, Subtitle A, § 808, 110 Stat. 1310, provides:

"(a) Findings. The Congress finds that--

"(1) threats of violence and acts of violence against Federal, State, and local government employees and their families are increasing as the result of attempts to stop public servants from performing their lawful duties;

"(2) these acts are a danger to the constitutional form of government of the United States; and

"(3) more information is needed relating to the extent and nature of the danger to these employees and their families so that actions can be taken to protect public servants at all levels of government in the performance of their duties.

"(b Statistics. The Attorney General shall collect data, for the calendar year 1990 and each succeeding calendar year thereafter, relating to crimes and incidents of threats of violence and acts of violence against Federal, State, and local government employees and their families in the performance of their lawful duties. Such data shall include--

"(1) in the case of crimes against such employees and their families, the nature of the crime; and

"(2) in the case of incidents of threats of violence and acts of violence, including verbal and implicit threats against such employees and their families, the deterrent effect on the performance of their jobs.

"(c) Guidelines. The Attorney General shall establish guidelines for the collection of the data under subsection (b), including a definition of the sufficiency of evidence of noncriminal incidents required to be reported.

"(d) Use of data.

(1) Annual publishing. The Attorney General shall publish an annual summary of the data collected under this section.

"(2) Use of data. Except with respect to the summary published under paragraph (1), data collected under this section shall be used only for research and statistical purposes.

"(e) Exemption. The Attorney General, the Secretary of State, and the United States Secret Service is not required to participate in any statistical reporting activity under this section with respect to any direct or indirect threat made against any individual for whom that official or Service is authorized to provide protection.".

Applicants for employment with nursing facilities or home health care agencies; search and exchange of records. Act Oct. 21, 1998, P.L. 105-277, Div A, § 101(b) [Title I, § 124], 112 Stat. 2681-73, provides:

"(a)

(1) A nursing facility or home health care agency may submit a request to the Attorney General to conduct a search and exchange of records described in subsection (b) regarding an applicant for employment if the employment position is involved in direct patient care.

"(2) A nursing facility or home health care agency requesting a search and exchange of records under this section shall submit to the Attorney General through the appropriate State agency or agency designated by the Attorney General a copy of an employment applicant's fingerprints, a statement signed by the applicant authorizing the nursing facility or home health care agency to request the search and exchange of records, and any other identification information not more than 7 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays under section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code) after acquiring the fingerprints, signed statement, and information.

REV_00264298

"(b) Pursuant to any submission that complies with the requirements of subsection (a), the Attorney General shall search the records of the Criminal Justice Information Services Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for any criminal history records corresponding to the fingerprints or other identification information submitted. The Attorney General shall provide any corresponding information resulting from the search to the appropriate State agency or agency designated by the Attorney General to receive such information.

"(c) Information regarding an applicant for employment in a nursing facility or home health care agency obtained pursuant to this section may be used only by the facility or agency requesting the information and only for the purpose of determining the suitability of the applicant for employment by the facility or agency in a position involved in direct patient care.

"(d) The Attorney General may charge a reasonable fee, not to exceed $ 50 per request, to any nursing facility or home health care agency requesting a search and exchange of records pursuant to this section.

"(e) Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit a report to Congress on the number of requests for searches and exchanges of records made under this section by nursing facilities and home health care agencies and the disposition of such requests.

"(f) Whoever knowingly uses any information obtained pursuant to this section for a purpose other than as authorized under subsection (c) shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both.

"(g) A nursing facility or home health care agency that, in denying employment for an applicant, reasonably relies upon information provided by the Attorney General pursuant to this section shall not be liable in any action brought by the applicant based on the employment determination resulting from the incompleteness or inaccuracy of the information.

"(h) The Attorney General may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out this section, including regulations regarding the security, confidentiality, accuracy, use, destruction, and dissemination of information, audits and recordkeeping, the imposition of fees, and any necessary modifications to the definitions contained in subsection (i).

"(i) In this section:

"(1) The term 'home health care agency' means an agency that provides home health care or personal care services on a visiting basis in a place of residence.

"(2) The term 'nursing facility' means a facility or institution (or a distinct part of an institution) that is primarily engaged in providing to residents of the facility or institution nursing care, including skilled nursing care, and related services for individuals who require medical or nursing care.

"(j) This section shall apply without fiscal year limitation.".

NOTES:

CODE OF FEDERAL REGULATIONS

Department of Justice, criminal justice information systems, 28 CFR Part 20.

RESEARCH GUIDE

Federal Procedure:

8 Fed Proc L Ed, Criminal Procedure § 22:27.

15 Fed Proc L Ed, Freedom of Information § 38:103.

Am Jur:

7 Am Jur 2d, Attorney General §§ 45, 55.

Forms:

REV_00264299

3 Am Jur Legal Forms 2d, Attorney General § 29:2.

Annotations:

Giving false information to federal police agency or agents as violation of 18 USCS § 1001, making it a criminal offense to make false statements in any matter within the jurisdiction of an agency of the United States. 1 ALR Fed 370.

Voir dire examination of prospective jurors under Rule 24(a) of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. 28 ALR Fed 26.

What action may be required of federal agency in suit by individual to have records amended, pursuant to sec. 3 of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 USCS § 552a(g)(1)(A)). 55 ALR Fed 338.

Construction and application of § 3(e)(5) of Privacy Act (5 USCS § 552 (e)(5)), providing for proper maintenance of agency records used in determinations. 79 ALR Fed 585.

Expunction of federal arrest records in absence of conviction. 97 ALR Fed 652.

Judicial expunction of criminal record of convicted adult. 11 ALR4th 956.

Invasion of privacy by use of plaintiff's name or likeness for nonadvertising purposes. 30 ALR3d 203.

Right of exonerated arrestee to have fingerprints, photographs, or other criminal identification or arrest records expunged or restricted. 46 ALR3d 900.

Validity, construction, and application of statutory provisions relating to public access to police records. 82 ALR3d 19.

Accused's right to discovery or inspection of "rap sheets" or similar police records about prosecution witnesses. 95 ALR3d 832.

Law Review Articles:

Pendo, Recognizing violence against women: gender and the Hate Crimes Statistics Act. 17 Harv Women's LJ 157, Spring, 1994.

The F.B.I.'s right to retain and disseminate arrest records of persons not convicted of a crime may be limited by the First and Fifth Amendments. 46 N Dame Law 825.

Right of police to retain arrest records. 49 NC L Rev 509.

The right of persons who have been discharged or acquitted of criminal charges to compel the return of fingerprints, photographs, and other police records. 27 Temple LQ 441.

Retention and dissemination of arrest records: judicial response. 38 U of Chicago L Rev 850.

INTERPRETIVE NOTES AND DECISIONS

I. IN GENERAL
1. Construction, generally
2. Purpose
3. Delegation of functions
4. Appointment of officials
5. Right of privacy

II. RELIABILITY OF RECORDS
6. Duty of federal government, generally
7. --Regarding state and local authorities
8. Duty to investigate
9. --Scope of duty
10. Duty to recognize information brought to government's attention
11. Disclaimer

III. RETENTION OF RECORDS
12. Disposition of matter, generally
13. Effect of acquittal
14. Effect of dismissal

REV_00264300

IV. USE OR DISSEMINATION
15. Criminal files and non-criminal files distinguished
16. Particular uses of files as proper
17. Particular uses of files as improper
18. Effect of dissemination of inaccurate information

V. ACTIONS
19. Expungement, generally
20. --Standing
21. --Scope of court's inquiry
22. --Federal-state comity
23. --Challenge of underlying arrest or conviction
24. Correction of inaccurate records
25. Injunction

I. IN GENERAL

1. Construction, generally

FBI is not prevented from disseminating accurate criminal records, or from disseminating inaccurate records after taking reasonable measures to safeguard accuracy. Tarlton v Saxbe (1974) 165 App DC 293, 507 F2d 1116, on remand (DC Dist Col) 407 F Supp 1083.

28 USCS § 534 does not contain express exemption from disclosure of documents maintained by federal government as provided by Freedom of Information Act (5 USCS § 552 (a)(4)(B)) so as to render it withholding statute under Exemption 3 of FOIA. Reporters Committee for Freedom of Press v United States Dept. of Justice (1987) 259 App DC 426, 816 F2d 730, 14 Media L R 1108, on reh 265 App DC 365, 831 F2d 1124, 14 Media L R 1908 (disagreed with United States Dept. of Agriculture v Federal Labor Relations Authority (CA8) 836 F2d 1139, 127 BNA LRRM 2360) and cert gr (US) 56 USLW 3718.

28 USCS § 534 must be narrowly interpreted to avoid constitutional issues and to avoid violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. Menard v Mitchell (1971, DC Dist Col) 328 F Supp 718, remanded on other grounds 162 App DC 284, 498 F2d 1017, 28 ALR Fed 248 and (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Utz v Cullinane, 172 App DC 67, 520 F2d 467).

Word "shall" in 28 USCS § 534 is not merely authorization, but is an imperative direction, indicating that records are to be retained despite acquittal. United States v Rosen (1972, SD NY) 343 F Supp 804.

2. Purpose

Central criminal files are kept to facilitate indexing and future reference. Menard v Saxbe (1974) 162 App DC 284, 498 F2d 1017, 28 ALR Fed 248.

File of arrest records is designed only to facilitate co-ordinated law enforcement activities between federal and local government, that is, to assist arresting agencies, courts and correctional institutions in apprehension, conviction and proper disposition of criminal offenders. Menard v Mitchell (1971, DC Dist Col) 328 F Supp 718, remanded on other grounds 162 App DC 284, 498 F2d 1017, 28 ALR Fed 248 and (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Utz v Cullinane, 172 App DC 67, 520 F2d 467).

3. Delegation of functions

Federal criminal record keeping tasks have been delegated by Attorney General under 28 USCS § 534 to director of FBI (28 CFR §§ .85, 20.1 et seq.). Hammons v Scott (1976, DC Cal) 423 F Supp 625.

4. Appointment of officials

There is no inherent conflict of interest or other impropriety in appointment under 28 USCS §§ 515, 534 of agency attorney as special attorney to assist in criminal proceedings before

REV_00264301

Service: LEXSTAT®
Citation: 28 cfr 0.132

28 CFR 0.132

LEXIS PUBLISHING'S CODE OF FEDERAL REGULATIONS
Copyright © 2000, LEXIS Publishing

 THIS SECTION IS CURRENT THROUGH THE DECEMBER 22, 2000 ISSUE OF ***
 THE FEDERAL REGISTER ***

TITLE 28 -- JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION
CHAPTER I -- DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
PART 0 -- ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
SUBPART W -- ADDITIONAL ASSIGNMENTS OF FUNCTIONS AND DESIGNATION OF OFFICIALS TO PERFORM THE DUTIES OF CERTAIN OFFICES IN CASE OF VACANCY, OR ABSENCE THEREIN OR IN CASE OF INABILITY OR DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT

28 CFR 0.132

§ 0.132 Designating officials to perform the functions and duties of certain offices in case of absence, disability or vacancy.

(a) In case of vacancy in the office of Attorney General, or of his absence or disability, the Deputy Attorney General shall, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 508(a) perform the functions and duties of and act as Attorney General. When by reason of absence, disability, or vacancy in office, neither the Attorney General nor the Deputy Attorney General is available to exercise the duties of the office of Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General shall, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 508(b), perform the functions and duties of and act as Attorney General. In the event of vacancy, absence, or disability in each of these offices, the Solicitor General shall perform the functions and duties of and act as Attorney General.

(b) Every office within the Department to which appointment is required to be made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate ("PAS office") shall have a First Assistant within the meaning of the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998. Where there is a position of Principal Deputy to the PAS office, the Principal Deputy shall be the First Assistant. Where there is no position of Principal Deputy to the PAS office, the First Assistant shall be the person whom the Attorney General designates in writing.

(c) In the event of a vacancy in the office of the head of an organizational unit that is not covered by paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section, the ranking deputy (or an equivalent official) in such unit who is available shall perform the functions and duties of and act as such head, unless the Attorney General directs otherwise. Except as otherwise provided by law, if there is no ranking deputy available, the Attorney General shall designate another official of the Department to perform the functions and duties of and act as such head.

(d) The head of an organizational unit of the Department not covered by paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section is authorized, in the case of absence from office or disability, to designate the ranking deputy (or an equivalent official) in the unit who is available to act as head. If there is no deputy available to act, any other official in such unit may be designated. Alternatively, in his discretion, the Attorney General may designate any official in the Department to act as head when a head who is not covered by paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section is absent or disabled.

HISTORY:

REV_00264303

[Order No. 755-77, 42 FR 59384, Nov. 17, 1977, as amended by Order No. 1043-84, 49 FR 4469, Feb. 7, 1984; Order No. 1097-85, 50 FR 25708, June 21, 1985; Order No. 1858-94, 59 FR 13883, Mar. 24, 1994; Order No. 2205-99, 64 FR 6526, Feb. 10, 1999]

AUTHORITY:
AUTHORITY NOTE APPLICABLE TO ENTIRE PART:
5 U.S.C. 301; 28 U.S.C. 509, 510, 515-519.

NOTES:
[EFFECTIVE DATE NOTE: 64 FR 6526, Feb. 10, 1999, revised paragraphs (b) through (d), and removed paragraph (e), effective Jan. 29, 1999.]

NOTES APPLICABLE TO ENTIRE CHAPTER:
CROSS REFERENCES: Customs Service, Department of the Treasury: See Customs Duties, 19 CFR chapter I.
Internal Revenue Service, Department of the Treasury: See Internal Revenue Service, 26 CFR chapter I.
Employees' Benefits: See title 20.
Federal Trade Commission: See Commercial Practices, 16 CFR chapter I.
Other regulations issued by the Department of Justice appear in title 4; title 8; title 21; title 45; title 48.

396 words

Service: LEXSTAT®
Citation: 28 cfr 0.132
View: Full
Date/Time: Friday, January 12, 2001 - 11:53 AM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

Service: LEXSEE®
Citation: 105 s rpt 250

1998 Committee Reports, July 5, 1998

Copyright 1998 LEXIS-NEXIS, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc. All rights reserved
Committee Reports

105th Congress, 2nd Session

Senate Report 105-250

105 S. Rpt. 250

FEDERAL VACANCIES REFORM ACT OF 1998

DATE: July 5, 1998. Ordered to be printed

SPONSOR: Mr. Thompson submitted the following together with ADDITIONAL AND MINORITY VIEWS
(To accompany S. 2176)

COMMITTEE: from the Committee on Governmental Affairs

R E P O R T

TEXT:
The Committee on Governmental Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2176) to provide a mechanism for the temporary filling of positions that are legally appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and having considered the same, reports favorably on the bill as amended and recommends that the bill as amended do pass.

I. Purpose

The purpose of S. 2176, the Federal Vacancies Reform Act, is to create a clear and exclusive process to govern the performance of duties of offices in the Executive Branch that are filled through presidential appointment by and with the consent of the Senate when a Senate confirmed official has died, resigned, or is otherwise unable to perform the functions and duties of the office.

II. Summary of S. 176

S. 2176 provides that upon the death, resignation, or inability to serve of an officer of an executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President), the first assistant to the officer becomes the acting officer, subject to the bills time limits. If the President so directs, a person who has already received Senate confirmation can be made the acting officer in lieu of the first assistant. The bill also requires that a first assistant who has not received Senate confirmation, but who is nominated to fill the office permanently, can be made the acting officer only if he has been the first assistant for at least 180 days in the year preceding the vacancy. The acting officer may serve for 150 days beginning on the date the vacancy occurs. In the event a first or second nominee is withdrawn, rejected or returned, the person may serve as the acting official until 150 days after the withdrawal, rejection, or return.

REV_00264305

history of use in the Vacancies Act. As under current law, the term "first assistant" is used to refer to the first assistant to the "officer." However, the practice under current law, which would be continued by this bill, is that the first assistant is actually the first assistant to the vacant office. Certain officers have first assistants designated by statute. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. 508(a) ("for the purpose of section 3345 of title 5 the Deputy Attorney General is the first assistant to the Attorney General.") Other departments and agencies have established first assistants by regulation. The Vacancies Act provides for the automatic performance of the functions and duties of the vacant office by the first assistant because such person is often a career official with knowledge of the office or a Senate-confirmed individual, and the Committee believes that the routine functions of the office should be allowed to continue for a limited period of time by that one person. The provision therefore emphasizes the limit on presidential power to select an acting officer without that individual having received Senate confirmation, while permitting flexibility in the performance of governmental operations since, if a first assistant exists, the President need not take any action for an acting official to serve.

If there is no first assistant, or if the President following the assumption of acting status by the first assistant, but within the time limits prescribed by section 3346 so chooses, the President (and only the President) may direct a person who has already received Senate confirmation for another position to perform the functions and duties of the office temporarily in an acting capacity, subject to the time limits of section 3346. This provision allows the President limited flexibility in appointing temporary officers, restricting the pool to persons who have already received Senate confirmation for their current position. If there is no first assistant, no one is permitted by law to become an acting officer until the President designates a Senate-confirmed individual to be the acting officer.

In either case, the acting officers service is limited to the time period specified in section 3346. This marks a repeal of the current statutory provision in both sections 3345 and 3346 that the acting officer "shall perform the duties of the office until a successor is appointed or the absence or sickness stops," language that has been a part of each Vacancies Act since 1792.

Notwithstanding a first assistant on the day of the vacancys automatic functioning as the acting officer, such first assistant who has not served as first assistant for 180 days of the 365 days prior to the vacancy may not serve as the acting officer if the President nominates that person for appointment to that position. If the President nominates the former first assistant, who served for less than 180 of the 365 days preceding the vacancy, to the permanent position, the first assistant must cease performing the functions and duties of the office. In that instance, for an acting person to continue to perform those duties, the President would be required to designate as the acting officer a person who has received Senate confirmation to another post, who can serve as the acting officer for the remainder of the time period established under section 3346 that was not consumed by the first assistant.

A first assistant who is a career person will ordinarily have served more than 180 days as first assistant at the time the vacancy arises. Such a person will be able to serve both as the acting officer and as the permanent nominee. The 180-day requirement is not confined to the 180 days immediately preceding the vacancy, as, for instance, the first assistant may have been ill for part of that period. The Presidents power to nominate is not disturbed in any way; however, if he chooses to nominate a brief-serving first assistant, that person may no longer serve as the acting officer. The President would retain his existing power to designate first assistants to those officers where he currently enjoys such power. The Committee believes that the length of service of the first assistant eligible to be both the nominee and the acting officer should be sufficiently long to prevent manipulation of first assistants to include persons highly unlikely to be career officials.

With respect to a vacancy in the office of Attorney General, 28 U.S.C. 508 will remain applicable. That section ensures that Senate confirmed Justice Department officials will be the only persons eligible to serve as Acting Attorney General.

REV_00264314

The new section 3346 limits the length of the acting officers service to 150 days, beginning on the date the vacancy occurs. The Committee believes that while the background check process takes no longer today than in 1988, when the Vacancies Act limitation was set at 120 days, the vagaries of the vetting and nomination process now make 150 days a more realistic time limit. Even if there is no first assistant, and the President declines to designate a Senate-confirmed person to be the acting person, the 150-day period begins to run. Thus, the designated person would serve for 150 days less the time that elapsed between the vacancy and the designation. If the vacancy arises while the Senate is in adjournment sine die, and thus the acting officer begins to serve during such period, the 150-day period is to begin on the date that the Senate first reconvenes. The only time this provision is relevant is when the Senate-confirmed person dies, resigns, or becomes ineligible to serve when the Senate is in adjournment sine die.

The 150 days is a maximum period, but an acting officer need not serve the full 150 days. Besides the obvious ending of service within 150 days if a nominee is confirmed in that time, the Vacancies Act also applies to the beginning of an inability of the applicable officer to serve. When that officer is again eligible to resume service, he or she may return to the office, thus ending the service of the acting officer.

The 150 days runs from the vacancy, "vacancy" referring to the death, resignation, or beginning of inability to serve of the Senate-confirmed officer. This meaning of "vacancy" applies each time it is used in the legislation. When the acting persons 150 days expires, the position again becomes vacant, but there is no "vacancy" that permits another person to serve as acting for another 150 days. Otherwise, a string of acting officials could serve for 150 days. That has never been the understanding of the functioning of the Vacancies Act, and the Committee reaffirms that there is only one vacancy that triggers the 150 days.

An acting officer may die or resign. In that event, the first assistant, if there is one, or a new presidential designee of a Senate-confirmed officer may become the acting officer, limited in service as acting officer to 150 days less the time of service of the first acting officer. No one else may serve as acting officer. Once again, that means that if there is no first assistant, and no presidential designation, no one may serve as acting officer. The prohibition on an acting officer who was first assistant for less than 180 days of the 365 days prior to the vacancy becoming the nominee for the position would still be applicable, since the original vacancy, not the subsequent departure of the acting officer, is the measuring event.

Under new section 3346(a)(2), and subject to section 3346(b), an acting officer may serve more than 150 days if a first or second nomination is submitted to the Senate, and may serve while that nomination is pending from the date the nomination is submitted. The acting officer may serve even if the nomination is submitted after the 150 days has passed although, as discussed below, the acting officer may not serve between the 151st day and the day the nomination is submitted. The Committee extends the time period for acting service so as to create an incentive for the President to submit a nomination. The submission of nominations also will lead to a reduction in the number of acting officials, a goal the Committee finds highly desirable.

The statutory language refers to "(t)he person serving as an acting officer as described under section 3345." The Committee chose this wording deliberately. That is the only person eligible to be the acting officer, whether during the 150 days or upon submission of a nomination. The same considerations apply to the bills references to "the person" in subsections (b) and (c).

If the first nomination for the office is rejected by the Senate, withdrawn, or returned to the

REV_00264315

President by the Senate, the person may continue to serve as the acting officer for no more than 150 days after the date of such rejection, withdrawal, or return. "Return" refers to Senate Rule XXXI, which provides that, "(I)f the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President, and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President." This provision allows the office to be temporarily filled by "the person" who was originally eligible to be the acting officer at the time the vacancy arose while the President is provided 150 days to submit a second nomination.

Notwithstanding the 150-day limit on service of an acting officer following the rejection, withdrawal, or return of a first nomination, "the person serving as the acting officer" may serve longer than 150 days if, in the cases of rejection or withdrawal of the first nominee, a second nomination of a different individual for the office is submitted to the Senate. If the second nomination is submitted after more than 150 days after the rejection, withdrawal or return of the first nomination, the provisions of revised section 3348 will apply until the second nomination is submitted. If the second nominee is confirmed within 150 days of the nomination, the term of the acting officer ceases. In the case of a return, the second nomination could be of the same individual first nominated. The "person serving as the acting officer" may serve for 150 days following the rejection, withdrawal, or rejection of the second nomination. However, after that 150-day period has elapsed, if no permanent nominee has been confirmed, the provisions of revised section 3348 apply.

The revised section 3347 provides that the Vacancies Reform Act applies to any office of an executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President) for which appointment is required to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The section does allow temporary appointments to be made other than through the Vacancies Reform Act in three narrowly delineated exceptions. First, where Congress provides that a statutory provision expressly provides that it supersedes the Vacancies Reform Act, the other statute will govern. But statutes enacted in the future purporting to or argued to be construed to govern the temporary filling of offices covered by this statute are not to be effective unless they expressly provide that they are superseding the Vacancies Reform Act.

Second, the bill retains existing statutes that are in effect on the date of enactment of the Vacancies Act of 1998 that expressly authorize the President, or the head of an executive department to designate an officer to perform the functions and duties of a specified office temporarily in an acting capacity, as well as statutes that expressly provide for the temporary performance of the functions and duties of an office by a particular officer or employee. (This includes statutes that provide for an automatic designation, unless the President designates another official). The Committee is aware of the existence of statutes specifically governing a vacancy in 41 specific offices, 40 of which would be retained by this bill:

1. Administrator, Drug Enforcement Administration (5 U.S.C. Reorg. Plan No. 2 of 1973) (two alternatives);

2. Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency (5 U.S.C. Appendix 1);

3. Administrator, Federal Aviation Administration (49 U.S.C. 106(I));

4. Administrator, General Services Administration (40 U.S.C. 751(c));

5. Administrator, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (5 U.S.C. Appendix 1);

6. Administrator, Small Business Administration (15 U.S.C. 633(b)(1));

REV_00264316

7. Archivist, National Archives and Records Administration (44 U.S.C. 2103(c));

8. Attorney General (28 U.S.C. 508(a));

9. Attorney General (28 U.S.C. 508(b));

10. Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff (10 U.S.C. 154(d));

11. Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff (10 U.S.C. 154(e));

12. Chief Judge, Court of Veterans Appeals (38 U.S.C. 7254(d));

13. Chief of Naval Operations (10 U.S.C. 5035(d)(2));

14. Chief of Staff of the Air Force (10 U.S.C. 8034(d)(2));

15. Chief of Staff of the Army (10 U.S.C. 3034(d)(2));

16. Commandant of the Marine Corps (10 U.S.C. 5044(d)(2));

17. Commissioner, Social Security Administration (42 U.S.C. 902(b)(4));

18. Comptroller General (31 U.S.C. 703(c));

19. Director, Office of Management and Budget (31 U.S.C. 502(f));

20. Director, U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (22 U.S.C. 2563);

21. Director, U.S. Information Agency (5 U.S.C. Appendix 1);

22. Director, U.S. International Development Cooperation Agency (5 U.S.C. Appendix 1);

23. General Counsel, Department of the Treasury (31 U.S.C. 301(f)(1));

24. General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board (29 U.S.C. 153(d));

25. President, Export-Import Bank (12 U.S.C. 635a(b));

28. Public Printer, Government Printing Office (44 U.S.C. 304);

29. Secretary of Defense (10 U.S.C. 132(b));

30. Secretary of Education (20 U.S.C. 3412(a)(1) (two alternatives);

31. Secretary of Energy (42 U.S.C. 7132(a)) (two alternatives);

32. Secretary of Health and Human Services (5 U.S.C. Appendix 1) (two alternatives);

33. Secretary of Labor (29 U.S.C. 552);

34. Secretary of Transportation (49 U.S.C. 102(c)(2));

35. Secretary of Transportation (49 U.S.C. 102(e));

36. Secretary of the Treasury (31 U.S.C. 301(c)(2));

REV_00264317

37. Secretary of Veterans Affairs (38 U.S.C. 304);

38. Special Counsel, Immigration-Related Unfair Employment Practices (8 U.S.C. 1324b(c)(1));

39. United States Attorney (28 U.S.C. 546(a)-(d)); and

40. United States Marshal (28 U.S.C. 562(a)-(b)).

A statute, 42 U.S.C. 206(a), provides that the Surgeon General shall assign one commissioned officer from the Regular Corps to act as Surgeon General in the event of disability or vacancy in that office. The language of this bill does not retain this statutory means for filling a vacancy in a specific position.

Most of these retained statutes do not place time restrictions on the length of an acting officer. The various authorizing committees may choose in the future to reexamine whether these positions should continue to be filled through the existing procedure, or whether it would be advisable to repeal those statutes in favor of the procedures contained in the Vacancies Reform Act. The Committee believes that some of these statutes may have been passed without knowledge of the Vacancies Act. In any event, even with respect to the specific positions in which temporary officers may serve under the specific statutes this bill retains, the Vacancies Act would continue to provide an alternative procedure for temporarily occupying the office.

The third exception to the applicability of the Vacancies Reform Act to all executive agency offices that are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate is the Presidents constitutional power under Article II, sec. 2, cl. 3 to make appointments during the recess of the Senate.

The bill provides that any statutory provision providing general authority to the head of an executive agency to delegate or reassign duties within that executive agency is not a statutory provision that qualifies within the exception contained in section 3347(a)(2) for existing statutes that provide for the filling of a vacancy in a specific office. This provision forecloses the argument raised by the Justice Department that sections 28 U.S.C. 509 and 510, rather than the Vacancies Act, apply to vacancies in that department. This provision also forecloses the argument that similar language of vesting and delegation contained in the organic statutes of other departments, rather than the Vacancies Act, applies to those departments.

New section 3348 provides an enforcement mechanism for the legislation. If the President does not submit a nominee for a vacant executive agency position requiring the advice and consent of the Senate within 150 days of the vacancy caused by the departure of the last Senate-confirmed officer, the functions and duties of the office can be performed only by the head of that agency until a nomination is forwarded to the Senate.

The bill defines "function or duty" of the office as those functions or duties that (1) are established by statute and are required to be performed only by the applicable officer; (2) are established by regulation and are required to be performed only by the applicable officer; (3) were established by regulation and were required to be performed only by the applicable officer at any time in the 180 days preceding the vacancy, notwithstanding any regulation issued more recently than 180 days before the vacancy occurred that limits or eliminates any function or duty required to be performed only by the applicable officer. The functions or duties of the office that can be performed only by the head of the executive agency are therefore defined as the non-delegable functions or duties of the officer as they existed at any point during the 180 days prior to the death, resignation, or inability to serve of the last Senate-confirmed person to hold the applicable office, less any such duties subsequently limited by statute, but including duties subsequently limited or repealed by regulation, and including any such duties subsequently imposed by statute or regulation. Since so many executive agency positions filled with the advice and consent of the Senate lack any meaningful statutory duties, and because internal departmental regulations such as those providing duties for specific officers can be changed at will without undergoing the notice and comment process, 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(3)(A), the Committee defined the functions and duties of a particular office to be those that existed at any point in the 180 days prior to the vacancy and those subsequently added, but not subtracted. Otherwise, agencies and departments could avoid the enforcement mechanism of making the office vacant by simply issuing regulations providing that the office has no non-delegable duties. The Committee believes that the duties as established 180 days before the vacancy is the appropriate period for freezing the duties because in many instances, the administration will know of an upcoming vacancy. The bill does not include as duties or functions of the office those duties that are limited or eliminated by statute after the date 180 days preceding the vacancy. When Congress shifts statutory duties from one agency to another, or changes the statutory underpinnings of a regulation affecting the duties of an officer, this bill does not extend the life of those affected regulations. Functions and duties of the office added by statute or regulation on or after 180 days preceding the vacancy are defined as functions and duties of the office, and thus, cannot be performed except by the head of the department or agency if the vacant office provisions apply.

REV_00264318

Subject to section 3347 and a special rule discussed below when the 150th day is one on which the Senate is not in session, if 150 days elapses from a vacancy to which this legislation applies without the President having submitted a nomination for the vacant office to the Senate, the office shall remain vacant until the President submits a nomination to the Senate. After the 151st day until the date the nomination was made, neither the acting officer nor anyone else could fill the vacant office. In addition, except in the case of the head of an executive agency, only the head of that agency himself or herself could perform any function or duty of the office as defined in the legislation. Delegable functions of the office could still be performed by other officers or employees, but the functions and duties to be performed only by the officer whose appointment is by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate could be performed solely by the head of the executive agency. For any such office located within a department, that would mean that only the head of the department could perform those functions. All the normal functions of government thus could still be performed. The legislation only limits the person who may perform them. The goal is not to punish or to obstruct, nor to inconvenience for the purpose of inconveniencing, but, rather, to encourage that a nomination be forwarded to the Senate after more than sufficient time for doing so has elapsed. Any inconvenience to the executive branch can be eliminated instantly by the Presidents unilateral decision to make a nomination, for once such a nomination is made, the acting officer can resume service, including performing the non-delegable duties of the office.

If the head of the agency position is vacant for more than 150 days without a nomination being sent to the Senate, the office is to remain vacant.

If the President does not submit a second nomination to the Senate within 150 days after the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the first nomination, the office will remain vacant, and the non-delegable functions and duties of the office can be performed only by the head of the executive agency as described above. If an office is vacant after 150 days after the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the second nomination, then the office shall remain vacant until a person is appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and only the head of the executive agency may perform any function or duty of such office until the Senate has confirmed a nominee for the office, as described above. This provision tracks other provisions in the bill that allow the acting officer to serve once a first or second nomination is made, even if more than 150 days have elapsed, but do not permit an additional opportunity for the acting officer to serve in the event of exceeding the bills time limits after disposition of the second nomination.

REV_00264319

If the 150th day following the vacancy, following disposition of a first nomination other than by confirmation, or following disposition of a second nomination other than by confirmation falls on a date the Senate is not in session, then the first day the Senate is next in session and receiving nominations shall be deemed to be the last day of such period.

To enforce section 3348s vacant office and performance of duties and functions of the office only by the agency head provisions be enforced, any function or duty of the office taken by a person who fills that vacancy despite the vacant office provision or who, not being the agency head, performs such a function duty without filling the office, shall be of no force or effect. Such actions cannot be made to have force or effect through ratification. For example, the successor in the office by virtue of his appointment by the President by and with the advice and the consent of the Senate may not ratify the actions of a person who filled the office in violation of the legislations provisions or who, not being the agency head, performed nondelegable duties of the office. A lawfully serving acting officer cannot ratify the actions of a temporary officer whose service does not comply with the Vacancies Reform Act. The agency head may not ratify an action that is of no force or effect under this legislation that was performed by another official. Nor under well-established principles of constitutional law may the President ratify actions taken by officials that the law has provided shall be performed solely by lower-level executive branch officials. The Committee expects that litigants with standing to challenge purported agency actions taken in violation of these provisions will raise noncompliance with this legislation in a judicial proceeding challenging the lawfulness of the agency action. It is concerned that the ratification approach taken by the court in Doolinwould render enforcement of the Vacancies Reform Act a nullity in many instances.

Section 3348 does not apply to the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, the General Counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority or any inspector general appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Although the Committee believes that it has retained the specific statute that governs vacancies in the office of general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, the Committee desires to make certain that the vacant office provisions do not apply to that position or its equivalent at the Federal Labor Relations Authority. These are two unusual positions that require appointment by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The positions are within multimember commissions but are not members of those commissions. Congress provided for Senate confirmation for these positions because it demands that these officials be independent of the commissioners. Specifically, it wanted to separate the official who would investigate and charge potential violations of the underlying regulatory statute from the officials who would determine whether that statute had actually been violated. If the non-delegable duties of these general counsel were somehow to be performed by the commissioners, that policy would be obliterated. Thus, section 3345 applies to all advice and consent positions, but section 3347 retains the existing statutory procedure for filling a vacancy in the general counsel of the NLRB. Section 3348 states clearly its inapplicability to the general counsel of the NLRB.

Under current law, the general counsel of the FLRA is not covered by the Vacancies Act because of the peculiarity that the position requires the advice and consent of the Senate but is not the head of an agency. Whereas the Justice Department has argued that its non-coverage under the Vacancies Act means that other provisions govern acting appointments for its offices, the Department has concluded that no statute permits an acting general counsel at the FLRA. Accordingly, in recent years, when that position has become vacant, no one has performed its duties until a permanent successor has been confirmed by the Senate. Since one of the duties of that position is to institute proceedings, this has resulted essentially in the cessation of the agencys functions. S. 2176 covers the general counsel of the FLRA under sections 3345 and 3346, permitting an acting officer to serve in case of a vacancy, but excludes the position from the enforcement mechanisms of section 3348 to preserve the independence of the position.

REV_00264320

Similarly, agency inspectors general are to be independent of the agencies to which they are assigned. Inspectors general are to investigate mismanagement in their agency, and often may be critical of the agency head. If an inspector general whose appointment was made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate were to have his functions performed by the agency head, the agency head might be delighted not to perform them vigilantly. Thus, section 3348 will not apply to this class of inspectors general.

Revised section 3349 of the bill requires the head of each executive agency to submit to the Comptroller General and to each house of Congress notification of vacancies in positions in their agencies requiring Senate confirmation, the name of any person serving in an acting capacity and the date such service began as soon as such service began, the name of any person nominated to the Senate to fill the vacancy as soon as such nomination is submitted, and the date of a rejection, withdrawal, or return of any nomination as soon as such rejection, withdrawal, or return occurs. If the Comptroller General makes a determination that an officer is serving longer than the 150-day period, including the applicable exceptions to such period in the legislation, the Comptroller General is to report such determination to the relevant committees listed in the legislation, the President, and the Office of Personnel Management. This function is informational only and does not provide the Comptroller General with any function properly to be performed only by an executive branch official. The Committee designated the recipients of the report so that appropriate action can be taken by the individuals who are informed of possible violations of the law.

New section 3349a extends the 150-day period in sections 3346 and 3348 for vacancies that exist on or that arise within 60 days after a presidential inaugural transition. In effect, the 150-day period becomes 240 days in this circumstance, running from the later of the date the vacancy arose or the transitional inauguration day. The bill defines a presidential inaugural transition as a date on which any person swears or affirms the oath of office as President, if such person was not the President on the date preceding the date of the swearing or affirming such oath of office. The time limit is extended in this circumstance because a new president will have essentially all positions in the executive branch requiring Senate confirmation to fill when he assumes office and may require additional time to nominate individuals to fill them. By the time the 240 days has run, the President would have confirmed sufficient of his own Senate-confirmed officials to designate as acting officers if he chose to exercise his power under section 3346, and that could continue to serve as the acting officer if a permanent nominee were submitted to the Senate. The provision covers vacancies in positions requiring Senate confirmation that arise in the 60 days following the presidential inauguration transition because each department keeps a Senate-confirmed person into a new administration for a short time in case vacancies in that department are not able to be filled as quickly as anticipated. The filling of those holdover offices should also be subject to the 90-day tolling of the 150-day period.

New section 3349b retains existing statutes that provide, with respect to any independent establishment headed by a single officer, that that officer can serve after the expiration of his term and until a successor is appointed or a specified period of time has elapsed. Whereas section 3347 retains those statutes that provide a means of succession for an acting person to perform the duties of a specified office, section 3349b retains statutes affecting specific independent establishments headed by a single officer that do not provide for an acting officer, but which instead permit the officer to serve until his successor is appointed or for a specified period of time. These statutes govern the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts (20 U.S.C. 954(b)(2)), the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities (20 U.S.C. 956(b)(2)), the Special Counsel of the Office of Special Counsel (5 U.S.C. 1211 (b)), and the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration (42 U.S.C. 901(a)(3)). Independent establishments headed by a single officer previously covered by the Vacancies

REV_00264321

Act continue to be so covered under this legislation.

New section 3349c provides that the Vacancies Reform Act shall not apply to any member appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to a board, commission, or similar entity that is composed of multiple members, and governs an independent establishment or Government corporation. The Committee believes that this has always been the case with the respect to the Vacancies Act and wishes to avoid any confusion that might result from the enactment of a replacement statute on this point. Thus, vacancies in these positions are not covered by this legislation. Section 3349c excludes commissioners of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission from the Vacancies Act as well, since it is an anomaly: the only multi-member independent agency that Congress has not placed in an independent establishment but in a department. Subsection (b) of section 3349c makes technical and confirming changes.

Section 3 of the legislation specifies its effective date. The legislation takes effect on the date of enactment, and shall apply to any office that becomes vacant after the date of enactment of this legislation or that is vacant on that date, although, as to the latter, its provisions shall apply as though such office first became vacant on that date. Thus, the 150-day period for those offices that are vacant on the date the legislation is enacted begins on the date the legislation is enacted, rather than the date the vacancy arose.

VII. Regulatory Impact Statement

Paragraph 11(b)(1) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate requires that each report accompanying a bill evaluate "the regulatory impact which would be incurred in carrying out this bill."

The enactment of this legislation will not have significant regulatory impact.

VIII. Cost Estimate of the Legislation U.S. Congress, Congressional Budget Office, Washington, DC, July 1, 1998. Hon. Fred D. Thompson, Chairman, Committee on Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman:The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 2176, the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is John R. Righter.

Sincerely, June E. ONeill, Director.

Enclosure.

congressional budget office cost estimate
S. 2176 Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998

S. 2176 would amend the Vacancies Act to clarify requirements relating to vacancies in and appointments to executive branch positions, including limitations on the amount of time that unconfirmed appointees can remain in office. It also would require the head of each executive branch agency to submit certain information regarding vacancies and appointments to the General Accounting Office. CBO estimates that enacting S. 2176 would have no significant impact on the federal budget.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: None.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: S. 2176 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would have no impact on state, local, or tribal governments.

REV_00264322

Estimate prepared by: John R. Righter.

Estimate approved by: Paul N. Van de Water, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

IX. Changes in Existing Law

In compliance with paragraph 12 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law with no change proposed is shown in roman):
UNITED STATES CODE TITLE 5, GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION AND EMPLOYEES

TABLE OF CONTENTS
PART III EMPLOYEES
Subpart B Employment and Retention

CHAPTER 33 EXAMINATION, SELECTION, AND PLACEMENT

Subchapter III Details

3341. Details; within Executive or military departments.

(3342. Repealed.

3343. Details; to international organizations.

3344. Details; administrative law judges.

3345. Details; to office of head of Executive agency or military department.

3346. Details; to subordinate offices.

3347. Details; Presidential authority.

3348. Details; limited in time.

3349. Details; to fill vacancies; restrictions.

Subchapter III Details, Vacancies, and Appointments

3341. Details; within Executive or military departments.

(3342. Repealed.)

3343. Details; to international organizations.

3344. Details; administrative law judges.

3345. Acting officer.

3346. Time limitation.

3347. Application.

REV_00264323

The bill applies to all vacancies in Senate-confirmed positions in executive agencies with a few express exceptions. First, those laws that expressly provide that they supersede the Vacancies Act will do so. Second, current laws (there are approximately 41) that provide for the President or the head of an executive department to designate an officer to perform the functions and duties of a specified office in an acting capacity are maintained, as are those statutes that themselves stipulate who shall serve in a specific office in an acting capacity. Statutes that generally permit agency heads to delegate or reassign duties within their agencies are specified not to constitute statutes that provide for the temporary filling of particular offices.

The bills enforcement mechanism is to make an office vacant if, 150 days after the vacancy arises, no presidential nominee has been submitted to the Senate for the office. For offices other than the heads of agencies, the functions and duties specifically to be performed by the vacant officer are to be performed only by the head of the agency. Such duties include duties established by regulation for the officer during any part of the 180 days before the vacancy occurred, notwithstanding subsequent regulations that purported to limit those duties. The sanction can be ended if the President submits a nominee after the 150-day period, whereupon the acting officer can resume service. Actions taken in violation of the vacant officer provisions are of no effect and are not permitted to be ratified by anyone else. The shifting of duties to the agency head does not apply to vacancies in the positions of general counsel to the National Labor Relations Board and Federal Labor Relations Authority or to Senate-confirmed inspectors general, given the specific goal Congress established for those positions of independence from the agency heads.

The bill also requires heads of agencies to report to the General Accounting Office on the existence of vacancies, persons serving in an acting capacity, the names of any nominees, and dates of disposition of such nominees. The Comptroller General then reports to the Congress, the President, and the Office of Personnel Management of the existence of any violations of the Vacancies Act.

The 150-day period for submitting nominations is extended for an additional 90 days for vacancies that exist when the President changes or that arise in the 60 days thereafter. And the bill maintains holdover provisions in current law that apply to single-member independent agencies, and exempts members of multi-member independent agencies altogether, as does the present Vacancies Act.

The bill applies to any office that becomes vacant after the date of enactment, as well as to offices that are vacant on the date of enactment, except that the bill shall apply to those offices as though they first became vacant on the date of enactment.

III. Need for Legislation

The need for legislation to govern the performance of the functions and duties of vacant offices ultimately derives from Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution, which, inter alia, ests the President with the authority to appoint all officers of the United States, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, but that Congress, by law, may vest the appointment of inferior officers in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. Congress has passed legislation since the Washington Administration to provide for temporary officials to perform the functions and duties of vacant positions requiring the advice and consent of the Senate. Over the years, the time of temporary service has been lengthened, but Congress has always placed time limits on such acting officials.

In recent decades, the Department of Justice has argued that its advise and consent positions are not covered by the Vacancies Act. It construes its enabling legislation, and now the enabling legislation of other departments, as exempting its compliance with the 3348. Vacant office.

REV_00264306

3349. Reporting of vacancies.

3349a. Presidential inaugural transitions.

3349b. Holdover provisions relating to certain independent establishments.

3349c. Exclusion of certain officers.
PART III EMPLOYEES
Subpart B Employment and Retention

CHAPTER 33 EXAMINATION, SELECTION, AND PLACEMENT

Subchapter III Details

Subchapter III Details, Vacancies, and Appointments 3345. Details; to office of head of Executive agency or military department

When the head of an Executive agency (other than the General Accounting Office) or military department dies, resigns, or is sick or absent, his first assistant, unless otherwise directed by the President under section 3347 of this title, shall perform the duties of the office until a successor is appointed or the absence or sickness stops.
3345. Acting officer

(a) If an officer of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office) whose appointment to office is required to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, dies, resigns, or is otherwise unable to perform the functions and duties of the office

(1) the first assistant of such officer shall perform the functions and duties of the office temporarily in an acting capacity, subject to the time limitations of section 3346; or

(2) notwithstanding paragraph (1), the President (and only the President) may direct a person who serves in an office for which appointment is required to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to perform the functions and duties of the office temporarily in an acting capacity, subject to the time limitations of section 3346.

(b) Notwithstanding section 3346(a)(2), a person may not serve as an acting officer for an office under this section, if

(1) on the date of the death, resignation, or beginning of inability to server of the applicable officer, such person serves in the position of first assistant to such officer;

(2) during the 365-day period preceding such date, such person served in the position of first assistant to such officer for less than 180 days; and

(3) the President submits a nomination of such person to the Senate for appointment to such office.

(c) With respect to the office of the Attorney General of the United States, the provisions of section 508 of title 28 shall be applicable.
3346. Details; to subordinate offices

REV_00264324

When an officer of a bureau of an Executive department or military department, whose appointment is not vested in the head of the department, dies, resigns, or is sick or absent, his first assistant, unless otherwise directed by the President under section 3347 of this title, shall perform the duties of the office until a successor is appointed or the absence or sickness stops.
3346. Time limitation

(a) The person serving as an acting officer as described under section 3345 may serve in the office

(1) for no longer than 150 days beginning on the date the vacancy occurs; or

(2) subject to subsection (b), once a first or second nomination for the office is submitted to the Senate from the date of such nomination, for the period that the nomination is pending in the Senate.

(b)(1) If the first nomination for the office is rejected by the Senate, withdrawn, or returned to the President by the Senate, the person may continue to serve as the acting officer for no more than 150 days after the date of such rejection, withdrawal, or return.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if a second nomination for the office (of a different person than first nominated in the case of a rejection or withdrawal) is submitted to the Senate after the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the first nomination, the person serving as the acting officer may continue to serve

(A) until the second nomination is confirmed; or

(B) for no more than 150 days after the second nomination is rejected, withdrawn, or returned.

(c) If a person begins serving as an acting officer during an adjournment of the Congress sine die, the 150-day period under subsection (a) shall begin on the date that the Senate first reconvenes.
3347. Details; Presidential authority

Instead of a detail under section 3345 or 3346 of this title, the President may direct the head of another Executive department or military department or another officer of an Executive department or military department, whose appointment is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to perform the duties of the office until a successor is appointed or the absence or sickness stops. This section does not apply to a vacancy in the office of Attorney General.
3347. Application.

(a) Sections 3345 and 3346 are applicable to any office of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office) for which appointment is required to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless

(1) another statutory provision expressly provides that the such provision supersedes sections 3345 and 3346;

(2) a statutory provision in effect on the date of enactment of the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998 expressly

(A) authorizes the President, a court, or the head of an Executive department, to designate an officer or employee to perform the functions and duties of a specified office temporarily in an acting capacity; or

REV_00264325

(B) designates an officer or employee to perform the functions and duties of a specified office temporarily in an acting capacity; or

(3) the President makes an appointment to fill a vacancy in such office during the recess of the Senate pursuant to clause 3 of section 2 of article II of the United States Constitution.

(b) Any statutory provision providing general authority to the head of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office) to delegate duties to, or to reassign duties among, officers or employees of such Federal agency, is not a statutory provision to which subsection (a)(2) applies.
3348. Details; limited in time

(a) A vacancy caused by death or resignation may be filled temporarily under section 3345, 3346, or 3347 of this title for not more than 120 days, except that

(1) if a first or second nomination to fill such vacancy has been submitted to the Senate, the position may be filled temporarily under section 3345, 3346, or 3347 of this title

(A) until the Senate confirms the nomination; or

(B) until 120 days after the date on which either the Senate rejects the nomination or the nomination is withdrawn; or

(2) if the vacancy occurs during an adjournment of the Congress sine die, the position may be filled temporarily until 120 days after the Congress next convenes, subject thereafter to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b) Any person filling a vacancy temporarily under section 3345, 3346, or 3347 of this title whose nomination to fill such vacancy has been submitted to the Senate may not serve after the end of the 120-day period referred to in paragraph (1)(B) or (2) of subsection (a) of this section, if the nomination of such person is rejected by the Senate or is withdrawn.
3348. Vacant office

(a) In this section

(1) the term "action" includes any agency actions as defined under section 551(13); and

(2) the term "function or duty" means any function or duty of the applicable office that

(A)(i) is established by statute; and

(ii) is required by statute to be performed by the applicable officer (and only that officer); or

(B)(i)(I) is established by regulation; and

(II) is required by such regulation to be performed by the applicable officer (and only that officer); and

(ii) includes a function or duty to which clause (I) (I) and (II) applies, and the applicable regulation is in effect at any time during the 180-day period preceding the date on which the vacancy occurs, notwithstanding any regulation that

(I) is issued on or after the date occurring 180 days before the date on which the vacancy occurs; and

REV_00264326

(II) limits any function or duty required to be performed by the applicable officer (and only that officer).

(b) Subject to section 3347 and subsection (c)

(1) if the President does not submit a first nomination to the Senate to fill a vacant office within 150 days after the date on which a vacancy occurs

(A) the office shall remain vacant until the President submits a first nomination to the Senate; and

(B) in the case of an office other than the office of the head of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office), only the head of such Executive agency may perform any function or duty of such office, until a nomination is made in accordance with subparagraph (A);

(2) if the President does not submit a second nomination to the Senate within 150 days after the date of the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the first nomination

(A) the office shall remain vacant until the President submits a second nomination to the Senate; and

(B) in the case of any office other than the office of the head of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office), only the head of such Executive agency may perform any function or duty of such officer, until a nomination is made in accordance with subparagraph (A); and

(3) if an office is vacant after 150 days after the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the second nomination

(A) the office shall remain vacant until a person is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and

(B) in the case of an office other than the office of the head of an Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office), only the head of such Executive agency may perform any function or duty of such office, until an appointment is made in accordance with subparagraph (A).

(c) If the last day of any 150-day period under subsection (b) is a day on which the Senate is not in session, the first day the Senate is next in session and receiving nominations shall be deemed to be the last day of such period.

(d)(1) Except as provided under paragraphs (1)(B), (2)(B), and (3)(B) of subsection (b), an action shall have no force or effect if such action

(A)(i) is taken by any person who fills a vacancy in violation of subsection (b); and

(ii) is the performance of a function or duty of such vacant office; or

(B)(i) is taken by a person who is not filling a vacant office; and

(ii) is the performance of a function or duty of such vacant office.

(2) An action that has no force or effect under paragraph (1) may not be ratified.

REV_00264327

(e) this section shall not apply to

(1) the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board;

(2) the General Counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority; or

(3) any Inspector General appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. 3349. Details; to fill vacancies; restrictions

A temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another under section 3345 or 3346 of this title may not be made otherwise than as provided by those sections, except to fill a vacancy occurring during a recess of the Senate.
3349. Reporting of vacancies

(a) The head of each Executive agency (including the Executive Office of the President, and other than the General Accounting Office) shall submit to the Comptroller General of the United States and to each House of Congress

(1) notification of a vacancy and the date such vacancy occurred immediately upon the occurrence of the vacancy;

(2) the name of any person serving in an acting capacity and the date such service began immediately upon the designation;

(3) the name of any person nominated to the Senate to fill the vacancy and the date such nomination is submitted immediately upon the submission of the nomination; and

(4) the date of a rejection, withdrawal, or return of any nomination immediately upon such rejection, withdrawal, or return.

(b) If the Comptroller General of the United States makes a determination that an officer is serving longer than the 150-day period including the applicable exceptions to such period under section 3346, the Comptroller General shall report such determination to

(1) the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate;

(2) the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight of the House of Representatives;

(3) the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives;

(4) the appropriate committees of jurisdiction of the Senate and House of Representatives;

(5) the President; and

(6) the Office of Personnel Management.
3349a. Presidential inaugural transitions

(a) In this section, the term "transitional inauguration day" means the date on which any person swears or affirms the oath of office as President, if such person is not the President on the date preceding the date of swearing or affirming such oath of office.

(b) With respect to any vacancy that exists during the 60-day period beginning on a transitional inauguration day, the 150-day period under section 3346 or 3348 shall be deemed to begin on the later of the date occurring

(1) 90 days after such transitional inauguration day; or

REV_00264328

(2) 90 days after the date on which the vacancy occurs.
3349b. Holdover provisions relating to certain independent establishments

With respect to any independent establishment for which a single officer is the head of the establishment, sections 3345 through 3349a shall not be construed to affect any statute that authorizes a person to continue to serve in any office

(1) after the expiration of the term for which such person is appointed; and

(2) until a successor is appointed or a specified period of time has expired.
3349c. Exclusion of certain officers

Sections 3345 through 3349b shall not apply to

(1) any member who is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to any board, commission, or similar entity that

(A) is composed of multiple members; and

(B) governs an independent establishment or Government corporation; or

(2) any commissioner of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS

The Committee on Governmental Affairs has a long list of legislative accomplishments that have enhanced the efficiency and effectiveness of the Federal government. These milestones were achieved with bipartisan support in both Democratic and Republican controlled Administrations and Congresses. The Vacancies Act should be no exception. As the Majoritys Report well explains, the Vacancies Act is in need of reform. For too long, the Executive Branchs interpretation and implementation of that law have stripped it of its original intent and, on occasion, effectively deprived the Senate of its constitutional right to partake in the appointment of a number of Federal officers. Nevertheless, although we share the Majoritys desire to amend the Vacancies Act and agree with many, if not most, of the policy choices contained in S. 2176 we write separately to emphasize a number of concerns we have about the current draft of the bill. Although these concerns were not sufficient to prevent us from voting to report the bill out of Committee, they are nonetheless serious and, we believe, need to be addressed before the bill is ready for final action on the Senate floor.

Some of our reservations about the bill are largely technical, reflecting our concern that the bill, in fact, could be misinterpreted and fail to do what the Committee intends it to do. Others are more substantive in nature and rest on our fear that the Committees understandable desire to protect the Senates constitutional prerogatives may have led it to create a situation that could prevent the Executive Branch from efficiently and effectively fulfilling its constitutional duties to execute the Congress laws. We discuss these concerns in detail below. We remain hopeful that, in the bipartisan spirit in which this legislation has thus far progressed, we can work out all of them before moving this bill further in the legislative process.

We are pleased that the Majority included us in the discussions leading up to the introduction and markup of S. 2176, and we believe that, due to those discussions, agreement was reached in four significant areas: (1) the time period of 150 days for service by an acting official absent a nomination, (2) the need for a "cure" in the case of a nomination made subsequent to the expiration of such period to allow an acting official to resume the functions and duties of the vacant office, (3) the exclusivity of the Act except in cases in which Congress makes clear it is specifying an alternative or supplemental means for filling vacancies, and (4) the necessity of an enforcement mechanism to encourage nominations to be made in a timely manner.

REV_00264329

While these four areas are addressed in the bill, we remain concerned that 3348, the enforcement mechanism, as drafted, may not operate to achieve our goals. We must be sure that the operation of this provision does not cause an unintended shutdown of the Federal agency within which the vacancy exists due to administrative paralysis and that the provision is drafted clearly so that its scope, mainly the extent of government functions and duties it would affect, is well understood. We must be clear that the non-delegable duties we intend to have performed only by the agency head in the event of a vacancy beyond the 150 days without a nomination are only those expressly vested by law or regulation exclusively in the vacant position. In this regard, we acknowledge and appreciate the Majoritys statement that "all the normal functions of government thus could still be performed." For example, where a statute or regulation specifies that an Assistant Secretary for Policy Development is responsible for overseeing policy development, the development of policy would continue, but if a non-delegable approval is necessary to implement the policy, that approval must be performed by the agency head during a vacancy.

One other concept in 3348 bears emphasis. The non-delegable duties of an agency head are not addressed in this legislation because the Committee expects that there will never be a case where a nomination for these positions is not timely submitted.

We would like to see serious consideration given to who, other than the first assistant or another Presidentially-appointed, Senate confirmed official designated by the President, as a qualifying acting official. We recognize the policy of maintaining the continuity and regularity of the vacated office by allowing a first assistant to automatically succeed to the position and the policy of allowing any individual nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate to fill any "advice and consent" position. However, we believe that more flexibility is advisable and that our ultimate goal should be to ensure that the most qualified individual available fills the position. One possible alternative would be to allow a third category of individuals to temporarily fill positions, such as a qualified individuals who have worked within the agency in which the vacancy occurs for a minimum number of days and who are of a minimum grade level.

On related point, we believe the length of service requirement for first assistants who are nominees should be reevaluated. Senator Glenn offered an amendment at the Committees June 17, 1998 markup to shorten the period required for an acting official who was a first assistant to be a nominee. As Senator Glenn noted at markup, this requirement would preclude service by a first assistant who naturally ascends to that position from within the agency, who might be a logical choice to fill the vacancy on a permanent basis. In considering shortening this requirement, we should strive to ensure the smooth flow of government activity, not penalize the individual, the agency or the taxpayers. We reiterate our preference for shortening this requirement.

We would also like to see a "safety valve" provision considered which would extend the 150-day period for a temporary appointment for an additional period of time if the President certifies that it is in the national interest to suspend or lengthen the period. Such "interests" could include reasons relating to national security, public health and safety, or financial stability. We recommend that information be gathered to determine which critical functions affect such interests.

We believe that special consideration should be given to a situation in which a new president is being inaugurated. In such a case, especially when there is a change in the political party of the new president, there is unlikely, in many cases, to be a first assistant who, according to the bills length of service requirement, would be eligible to both serve as the acting official and be the nominee. This limits a new Administration which may want to put its qualified people in acting positions and nominate them as well. The Senate should consider whether it is advisable to prohibit this type of service categorically or whether a more narrow compromise would be possible. In addition, we should ensure that the extended time period for temporary appointments at the beginning of a new Administration 1 accurately reflects the reality of the nomination process when a new President assumes office. We would not want to hamper future Administrations ability to become operational as quickly as possible.

REV_00264330

1The extended time periods provided in 3349b total 240 days as the period for temporary appointments in a new Administration. This time period is applicable to all vacancies that arise from the date of the inauguration of the new President and for the subsequent 60 days.

At markup, the Committee also discussed whether nominations could be sent up during a recess of the Senate. Specifically, we believe it is still unclear whether the bill, as written, would allow the Administration to cure a violation by making a nomination during recesses of the Senate. While it is clear that the Senate regularly authorizes itself to accept Presidential messages during its recesses, and the President is permitted to submit nominations to the Senate at any time, in practice, nominations are not sent up during recesses. We are concerned with assuring the smooth functioning of Government. One of our overriding concerns in reforming the Vacancies Act should be to ensure that we are not overburdening an agency head with the non-delegable responsibilities of other positions where such a situation can be avoided. We urge the Senate to consider remedying this situation by allowing the President to effectively notice the Senate with a letter of intent including the name of a nominee and a statement that he intends to nominate that person when the Senate reconvenes. By allowing such letter, the Senate would allow the President to exercise good faith where he wants to avoid using a recess appointment.

See 139 CR 8 (1993), 141 CR S9 (daily ed. Jan. 4, 1995), 143 CR S8 (daily ed. Jan. 7, 1997).

See Floyd M. Riddick and Alan S. Frumin, Riddicks Senate Procedure, p. 949 (Rev. Ed. 1992).

President Clinton has exercised his Constitutionally mandated recess appointment power 45 times in five years, President Bush made 78 recess appointments in four years and President Reagan made 239 in eight years.

Finally, we would hope that consideration will be given to increasing the one-day requirement of 3348(c). While we are pleased that a recess will toll the temporary appointment period, to guard against an Administrations inadvertently missing the one-day window and certain functions and duties unnecessarily being delegated to the agency head, we recommend adding two days to the requirement that the President submit a nomination the day the Senate reconvenes.

As mentioned above, there are several other issues of concern to us which we believe are of a technical nature. While they are important issues in that their resolution affects the way a new law could be interpreted, because there is agreement between Majority and Minority staffs to aim to address these issues in a Managers Amendment as the bill is considered by the full Senate, such issues will not be enumerated here. It is our hope that all of our concerns will be addressed in future discussions before S. 2176 is presented for debate on the Senate floor.

We cannot leave the topic of the process by which the President nominates federal officials without touching on the process by which the Senate confirms them. It is getting increasingly difficult to attract the best and brightest to government service, and those who serve in Presidentially-appointed, Senate confirmed positions are doing so for an average of less than two and a half years. And because the time period from vacancy through confirmation has become increasingly lengthy, we must go through this arduous process often multiple times within a single Administration. We agree that the Executive Branch too often takes too long to submit nominations to the Senate and that this delay not only intrudes upon the Senates constitutional prerogatives but also impedes the good functioning of government. At the same time, however, we would be truly remiss if we failed to acknowledge that blame in this area does not rest in the Executive Branch alone; the Senate has frequently declined to exercise its advice and consent responsibility in a timely and appropriate manner. Too often, nominations die in Committee, languish on the Executive Calendar, or simply take months or years to move through this Chamber. While the Senate remains free to reject the Presidents nominees when appropriate, it owes it to both the Executive, and more importantly, the American people, to discharge its constitutional duty to offer and not withhold its advice and, where appropriate, timely consent. We hope that in the future the Senate is willing to commit itself to act to reform its confirmation process in the same bi-partisan spirit we expect it to exhibit in enacting this legislation.

REV_00264331

John Glenn.

Carl Levin.

Joe Lieberman.

Max Cleland.

Robert Torricelli.

MINORITY VIEWS

While we associate ourselves with the concerns outlined in the Additional Views of Senator John Glenn, our serious reservations abut the bill prevents us from supporting this legislation in its present form. Revisions to the Vacancies Act must reflect the realities of the nomination and confirmation process as it have evolved over the last several years. Furthermore, it is important to recognize the implication of imposing unrealistic expectations or restrictions on the process which could force the President to expand the use of recess appointment authority.

We recognize the need to safeguard the Senates constitutional prerogative to advise and consent to nominations of executive officers, and do not oppose efforts to clarify and bolster the Vacancies Act as the executive mechanism (with limited and explicit exception) for the President to designate officials to temporarily fill vacancies in positions requiring Senate confirmation. Unfortunately, this bill goes well beyond that justifiable but limited goals.

We are concerned that this bill would impede the functioning of the Executive Branch. Concerns about the inability of Presidents to promptly submit nominees to fill positions requiring Senate confirmation has been a driving force prompting periodic reevaluation of Vacancies Act provisions throughout the last two centuries, including the present instance. Yet merely adding 30 days to the time permitted under current law for positions to be temporarily filled by an acting official is, in our opinion, wholly inadequate and impractical.

While the White House certainly bears some responsibility for the time it takes to select and advance nominees, it is a responsibility that is shared by the Senate. Given that the protracted, arduous, and unduly politicized Senate confirmation process contributes to making it increasingly more difficult to identify, recruit, and screen candidates for Federal appointments, it is imprudent to impose rigid statutory deadlines and to limit the persons eligible to serve temporarily as acting officers in vacant positions. Within substantial changes, we cannot support this bill.

REV_00264332

First, this legislation too narrowly restricts who can function in an "acting" capacity. Section 3345(a)(1) of the bill can be read to provide that, aside from another Senate-confirmed Presidential appointee designated by the President, only the "first assistant" to the particular Senate confirmed officer who dies, resigns or is other unable to perform the functions and duties of the position, can be an acting officer. Early in the Administration of a newly-inaugurated President, virtually the only person who could serve as acting officers would be the first assistants from the prior Administration, since transferring another PAS person would merely create a new vacancy elsewhere. Moreover, the Senate could prolong the tenure of those holdover officers simply by delaying or failing to confirm the Presidents nominee. No President should have to accept such a state of affairs.

Moreover, mandating that only first assistant or Senate-confirmed officials are eligible to serve as acting officers promotes no legitimate public policy. Indeed, this limitation prevents a President from naming an experienced career employee as an acting official, in favor of a person lacking broad experience who was brought into Department by the departing official. Consequently, the bill could preclude the President from naming the most qualified person to serve as an acting officer. In addition, the lack of a first assistant to a particular office that becomes vacant would leave the position vacant until such time as the President designates a previously Senate-confirmed official to temporarily fill that vacancy as an acting official. Given the tight time period of the Act, we fail to see why this provision should be so narrowly drawn. Without any justification based on its institutional interests, the Senate would do a great disservice by adopting such a restrictive measure. Therefore, we endorse Senator Glenns suggestion that serious consideration be given to establishing a third category of individuals eligible to temporarily fill vacant positions.

Second, the unalterable 150 day time limit on service by acting officers is far too rigid. Indeed, it could impair the national interest. Circumstances may arise under which the President is unable to nominate an individual for a particular office within 150 days of a vacancy. Under this bill, the office would have to remain vacant even if that vacancy would undermine national security, impede public health and safety, threaten financial stability, or interfere with law enforcement. We believe there should be a flexible "safety valve" available for exceptional situations, whereby the President could certify to the Senate that a reasonable amount of additional time is needed to designate the appropriate nominee and that it is essential for the acting officer to continue to perform these critical tasks in the interim without interruption.

Third, while it would not affect this President, experience has shown that at the beginning of a new Administration, filling positions in the government requires time far longer than that specified in this bill. At the outset of a new Administration, a President must nominate individuals to at least 320 positions in the 14 executive departments in addition to appointing hundreds of other employees who do not require confirmation. The new President cannot possibly make all required nominations within the 240 days allowed by the bill. In 1993, when the nominations process was, if anything, simpler than it is today, the new Administration was able to forward only 68% of nominations within the first 240 days, leaving 32% of positions unfilled. Unless this time period is changed, the next Administration could effectively be facing departmental shutdowns before the new President can even begin to accomplish what he was elected to do.

Finally, our concern about these time limitations and the constraints on who can be appointed is magnified many times by the enforcement mechanism the bill establishes. It is essentially a sanction of administrative immobilization. Section 3348 of the bill specifies that if the President fails to forward a nomination within the 150-day span following the occurrence of a vacancy or the withdrawal, rejection, or return of a first nomination, the office in question must remain vacant until a nomination is made. No one apart from the Vacancies Act. Specifically, the Department of Justice maintains that where a departments organic act vests the powers and functions of the department in its head and authorizes that officer to delegate such powers and functions to subordinate officials or employees as she sees fit, such authority supersedes the Vacancies Acts restrictions on temporarily filling vacant advice and consent positions, allowing for designation of acting officials for an indefinite period, even without submitting a nomination to the Senate to fill the position on a permanent basis. This interpretation of the law is wholly lacking in logic, history, or language, as evidenced by repeated opinions of the Comptroller General. Opinion B-150136, Feb. 19, 1976; 65 Op. Comp. Gen. 626, 631-33 (1986); Opinion B-220522.2, Oct. 17, 1986. By May, 1997, seven statutory offices in the Justice Department requiring presidential nomination and Senate confirmation were vacant. One vacancy had existed for twenty-one months, three were vacant for more than 120 days, and three positions were unfilled for less than 120 days. In at least four instances, positions were filled by an order of the Attorney General designating a person to act in the vacant position. For example, the Solicitor Generals position was occupied by an acting officer for more than one year without a nomination ever being submitted to the Senate.

REV_00264333

Despite attempts to do so through 1988 amendments to the Vacancies Act, described below, Congress was not successful in gaining the Justice Departments agreement that its advice and consent positions are subject to the Vacancies Act. Given the growing number of federal departments and agencies that now claim exemption from the Vacancies Act, Congress must explicitly reject the position that general organic statutes for various agencies and departments, such as 28 U.S.C. 509 and 510, trump the specific provisions of the Vacancies Act. Otherwise, the Vacancies Act will be of no practical effect, thwarting the constitutional mandate that persons serving in advice and consent positions do so through the Senates approval of such service.

the 1988 amendments

The Justice Departments aggressive claims of exemption from the Vacancies Act led Congress in 1988 to make the first significant changes in the Vacancies Act since 1868. The 1988 amendments changed the laws coverage to apply to all executive departments and agencies, overruling a 1973 court decision that had limited the applicability of the Act to executive and military departments. The length of time that an acting official was permitted to serve was extended to 120 days, rather than the previous 30, and the acting officer could serve more than 120 days if the President submitted a nominee. An additional 120 days of acting service was provided if the Senate rejected the nomination or if it was withdrawn. Through this mechanism, Congress created an incentive for the President to submit nominations in a timely manner, and allowed temporary officials to serve until the Senate completed its advice and consent function. This Committees report accompanying the Senate bill stated, "The Committee also believes that the present language, however old, makes clear that the Vacancies Act is the exclusive authority for the temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another whose appointment requires Senate confirmation. The exclusive authority of the Vacancies Act would only be overcome by specific statutory language providing some other means for filling vacancies." S. Rep. No. 100--317, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 14 (1988). In 1989, the Justice Departments Office of Legal Counsel recognized the Senates view, but continued to interpret the Vacancies Act as not precluding the Attorney Generals authority to appoint temporary officials under the Departments organic statute, characterizing the Senate report as an improper and ineffective effort to "alter the proper construction of a statute through subsequent legislative history." 13 O.L.C. 173, 175 (1989). If the Vacancies Act is to function as it is designed to uphold the Senates prerogative to advise and consent to nominations through placing a limit on presidential power to appoint temporary officials the Justice Departments interpretation of the existing statute must be ended. Legislation is needed to ensure this result, a primary reason for the Committees reporting of S. 2176.

REV_00264307

head of the agency can perform the functions and duties of the office. It is imperative that the bill unequivocally ensure that the affected functions and duties of the office are only those that are expressly deemed nondelegable by statute or regulation. Absent that clarity, whole components of federal agencies would have to stop their work. The potential bottleneck created by this provision would prevent the Executive Branch from doing its job. The Senate has tried before to enforce its policy preferences by shutting down the federal government. It was a bad idea then, and its still is now.

As we noted, the Senate bears partial responsibility for the time it takes to nominate officials from Senate confirmed positions. To further amplify, this Congress has subjected the Administrations nominees to unprecedented scrutiny, using almost any prior alleged indiscretion no matter how trivial by a nominee as an excuse to delay or prevent a vote. Senators have also interjected themselves into the Presidents nominations process to an unparalleled degree. As a result, that process the selection, recruitment, and vetting of candidates takes longer than ever before. While the Administration may well bear some responsibility for the slow pace of nominations, we find it troublesome that the Senate would so severely restrict the ability to fill vacant positions temporarily and to conduct the peoples business while at the same time impeding the nominations process and confirming nominees at a snails pace.

This President has made every effort to accommodate Senators views about particular positions and nominees. Moreover, this President has used his power to make recess appointments far less than his predecessors. President Reagan made 239 recess appointments in eight years; President Bush made 78 recess appointments in four years. President Clinton has made only 45 recess appointments in his first five years in office. If this bill passes, we anticipate that the President will have no alternative but to make more recess appointments. That will hardly vindicate the Senates advise and consent function.

We are anxious to craft a bill that fully protects the Senates advise and consent function, while affording the Executive Branch the flexibility it needs to faithfully discharge the laws. In its current form, this bill does not do that. Without changes to address the problems identified above, we cannot support it.

Richard Durbin.

Daniel K. Akaka.

SUBJECT: LEGISLATION (90%); RESIGNATIONS (78%);

LOAD-DATE: September 04, 1998

Service: LEXSEE®
Citation: 105 s rpt 250
View: Full
Date/Time: Monday, January 15, 2001 - 10:49 AM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

The Constitutional Need for Legislation

The selection of officers is not a presidential power. The President may choose whom he wishes to nominate, but the Senate has the power to advise and consent before those nominees may assume office. The Appointments Clause "is more than a matter of tiquette or protocol; it is among the significant structural safeguards of the constitutional scheme." Edmond . United States,117 S. Ct. 1573, 1579 (1997). The Appointments Clause was adopted against a historical background: "The anipulation of official appointments had long been one of the American revolutionary generations greatest grievances against executive power because he power of appointment to offices " was deemed "the most insidious and powerful weapon of eighteenth century despotism." Freytagv. Commissioner of Internal Revenue,501 U.S. 868, 883 (1991) (citations omitted).

Nonetheless, vacancies occur in such positions, and since the President lacks any inherent appointment authority for government officers, legislation authorizing some non-Senate confirmed persons to perform the functions and duties of vacant offices is necessary if the governments operations are to be performed. The presidents duty is to submit nominees for offices to the Senate, not to fill those offices himself. The Presidents power to take care that the laws shall be enforced is a duty, and not a source of power, since the President takes care that the laws be executed, and has no right to enforce the laws himself where Congress vests such responsibility in an inferior officer. See, e.g., Kendall ex rel. Stokes . United States,12 Pet. (37 U.S.) 522, 612-613 (1838); Georgev. shimaru,849 F. Supp. 68 (D.D.C. 1994). In the absence of affirmative statutory authority to fill a vacancy, the office must remain vacant. The Vacancies Act limits presidential authority to make acting appointments, while preserving the Senates power to advise and consent. Therefore, its scope must be government-wide unless Congress chooses clearly and specifically to exempt specifically identified officers from its reach when countervailing considerations apply.

Because the Justice Department maintains that it is exempt for the Vacancies Act, it has permitted positions to be held by acting officers for years without the submission to the Senate of a nominee. Its contentions are broadly applicable to virtually all other departments given the broad language of vesting and delegation contained in those departments organic statutes. By early in 1998, 64 of 320 advise and consent positions in the executive branch were held by acting officials, 43 of whom had served more than 120 days without a nominee. Acting officials served in each of the 14 Cabinet departments. If the Constitutions separation of powers is to be maintained, and officers of the government subjected to the scrutiny of the Senate for the benefit of the liberty of the people, legislation to address the deficiencies in the operation of the current Vacancies Act is necessary. The 1988 legislation unfortunately has not succeeded in encouraging presidents to submit nominees in a timely fashion, and it has not resulted in the Justice Departments agreement that is covered by the Act. Indeed, given the number of acting officials and the growing number of departments that claim not to be covered by the Vacancies Act, the Senates confirmation power is being undermined as never before.

The "Doolin" Decision

Most recently, the need for new legislation was underscored by the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Doolin Security Savings Bank, F.S.B. . Office of Thrift Supervision,139 F.3d 203 (D.C. Cir. 1998). In that case, the validity of an Office of Thrift Supervision administrative enforcement action was challenged by a bank subject to the order on the ground that the absence of a lawfully appointed director of the agency rendered the enforcement action void. The Senate-confirmed director of OTS resigned in December, 1992, and purported to delegate all his authority to OTSs Deputy Director for Washington Operations. That individual, who was neither the first assistant nor a Senate-confirmed individual, served as the acting director until October, 1996. Two days later, the President invoked the Vacancies Act to designate a Senate-confirmed official from the Department of Housing and Urban Development to serve as acting director. Within 120 days of the second acting directors appointment, the President submitted a permanent nominee to the Senate. The new acting director issued the final order against the bank in March, 1997.

REV_00264308

The bank maintained that the 120-day limitation on acting service contained in the Vacancies Act lapsed long before the second acting director was ever named. The court agreed that the Vacancies Act may be used only when there is a vacancy caused by the departure of an officer appointed in compliance with Article II, and that the departure of an appointed acting official does not trigger the Vacancies Act. The court found that merely because a person temporarily performs the functions of an office does not make that individual an "officer" for purposes of the Vacancies Act. "Otherwise, 3348s time limitation could be easily avoided by a series of temporary resignations, with each resignation triggering a new 120-day period." 139 F.3d at 208. Thus, the departure of the Senate-confirmed Director triggered the presidents authority under 3347 to designate an acting official, not the departure of the acting official. The Committee accepts this reaffirmation of the longstanding operation of the Vacancies Act.

Notwithstanding its recognition that the Presidents designation of the second acting official took place approximately four years after the vacancy in the position arose, however, the court upheld the second acting directors 1997 final order. The court agreed with the Justice Department that the 120-day time limit contained in 3348 does not begin to run until someone actually takes office pursuant to the Vacancies Act, either by detail or by presidential directive. Under that interpretation of the statute, the second acting director served lawfully at the time the order was issued against the bank. The court rejected the banks position that the 120-day period begins immediately upon the death or resignation of a constitutionally appointed officer.

According to the court, "Nothing in the Act expressly deals with the amount of time that may transpire before the President exercises his 3347 authority to designate a temporary replacement." 139 F.3d at 209. In its view, the Vacancies Act governs how long a position may be temporarily filled, but does not specify when the President must undertake the filling of the position. "The time limit is placed not on Presidential action, but on the tenure of the Presidents designee." Id The 120-day period will commence with the vacancy when the first assistant assumes the office or the President under 3347 immediately designates an acting official. But if there is no first assistant and the President does not immediately act, the vacancy has not been "filled" and the 120-day period does not run. Id.

The Committee believes that this portion of the courts opinion necessitates legislative action. Whether or not the court properly interpreted the existing law, the Committee believes that the 120-day time limit must run from the date of the vacancy caused by the death or resignation of the Senate-confirmed official, and not from the date that the President designates an acting official. A limit must be placed on the Presidents time to act to fill a position. If the purpose of the Vacancies Act is to limit the Presidents power to designate temporary officers, a position requiring Senate confirmation may not be held by a temporary appointment for as long as the President unilaterally decides. Such a scheme obliterates the constitutional requirement that the officer serve only after the Senate confirms the nominee. If there is no first assistant, the President must designate another Senate-confirmed official. By contrast, the Doolin ourt would allow the President to accept a resignation on the second day of his term, allow an acting person to assume the functions and duties of the office (in this case, an acting officer not appointed by the President), and then, so long as there is no first assistant, by unilaterally not invoking the Vacancies Act, allow that position to be filled by an "acting" official who has never received Senate confirmation for so long as the president holds office. The Committee finds this state of affairs to be unacceptable and constitutionally suspect. Nor does it believe that the vacancy has not been "filled" when an acting person has been performing the functions and duties of the office for four years.

REV_00264309

Notwithstanding the 1988 Vacancies Act amendments that provide for a tolling of the 120-day period when the President submits a nomination to the Senate to fill the vacant position, the court stated, "The Vacancies Act was never meant to give the President an "incentive" to fill vacant positions with appointees confirmed by the Senate. The function of the Act is to allow some breathing room in the constitutional system for appointing officers to vacant positions, to validate the actions of those temporarily occupying the positions." Id.at 211. The Committee believes that the reason why in 1988, for the first time, the period of acting service was extended beyond 120 days if the President submitted a nominee is that, in light of the frequent noncompliance with the Vacancies Act by presidents who allowed acting officials to serve more than 120 days, Congress wanted to encourage the President to submit a nominee within the Vacancies Act period. If an acting person served beyond 120 days, the Senate at that point would bear the responsibility for the fact that a Senate-confirmed person for that office was not in place.

The court recognized that under its interpretation of the statute, if no one is detailed or directed to fill the position, or the 120 days expires without a nomination, the position will be vacant or occupied by someone not constitutionally entitled to perform the duties of the office. But in its view, that situation will create an incentive for the President to submit a nomination, for fear that the actions of part of his administration will be declared void. The Committee believes that this part of the courts opinion also shows the need for Congressional corrective action. Under the Justice Departments interpretation of the many vesting and delegation provisions in the organic statutes of various departments, few positions would remain vacant. This fact, combined with the lack of an effective enforcement process, would give the President no reason to comply with the Vacancies Act. The court seems not to understand the fundamental purpose of the Vacancies Act, which is not to ensure the legality of the actions of acting officials, but rather to limit the power of the President to name acting officials, as well as the length of service of those officials.

If the Constitution or Congress requires that an office be held only by a person appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, then unless legislation provides to the contrary, only a person the President has nominated for that position and who has received Senate confirmation may fill the position. The President has the duty to take care that the law be faithfully executed, and that duty includes adherence to Article II. He does not have the power to execute the law himself when Congress has given statutory duties to lower-level officials in the executive branch. Nor can he name temporary officers of his unfettered choice. That is why the Vacancies Act or other statutes providing for the temporary filling of a specific position are the exclusive authority setting forth the procedures by which acting officials can serve, with the exception only of the Presidents power to make appointments during the recess of the Senate. The courts opinion overlooks this central concept. The Vacancies Act does recognize that when vacancies arise in those positions, it may be necessary, due to time constraints on the nomination and confirmation processes, for someone who has not received Senate confirmation for that particular post to serve temporarily to keep the government functioning. But the Vacancies Act requires that those acting officers be either (1) first assistants or (2) persons who have already received Senate confirmation for some other post and are selected by the President to be the acting officer.

The court did not reach the question whether the OTS Directors designation of the first acting director satisfied the Vacancies Act. For the court, any error was harmless in light of the legality of the second acting directors appointment under the Vacancies Act, and the ratification by the second acting officer of any actions taken by the first acting director. The Committee also finds that this portion of the courts position demands legislative response. First, it is constitutionally unacceptable for any acting official to serve for four years, especially an officer "appointed" not by the President, nor by a department head, but a mere agency head. The Appointments Clause limits appointing powers to hold individuals accountable for their selections. Second, if any subsequent acting official or anyone else can ratify the actions of a person who served beyond the length of time provided by the Vacancies Act, then no consequence will derive from an illegal acting designation. This result also undermines the constitutional requirement of advice and consent.

REV_00264310

In short, in light of various administrations noncompliance with the Vacancies Act and a recent court decision undermining its operation, it is imperative that Congress enact legislation to restore constitutionally mandated procedures that must be satisfied before acting officials may serve in positions that require Senate confirmation. The issue is not simply the prerogative of the Senate. Like other structural constitutional provisions, the Appointments Clause was designed to protect the liberty of the people. Although the President has the sole power to nominate, as a single officer may feel a greater sense of duty in selecting an individual for consideration to a particular post, the "the necessity of (the Senates) concurrence would have a powerful, though in general a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to preventing the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity. And, in addition to this, it would be an efficacious source of stability in the administration." Federalist LXXVI (Hamilton). Legislation is needed to restore these goals of the Founders.

IV. Legislative History of S.2176

The Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998 was introduced as S. 2176 in the Senate on June 16, 1998 by Senators Fred Thompson, Robert C. Byrd, Strom Thurmond, Trent Lott, and William Roth. Introduction of S. 2176 followed the March 16, 1998 introductions of S. 1761, the Federal Vacancies Compliance Act, by Senator Byrd and S. 1764, the Vacancies Clarification Act, by Senators Thurmond and Lott. The latter two bills sought to enforce the Vacancies Act through withholding the pay of any acting officer who exceeded the time period provided by the Vacancies Act, and S. 1764 specifically provided that the time period for acting service ran from the date of the vacancy. In addition, both bills made the Vacancies Act supersede other laws governing the temporary service of non-confirmed officials, ending the argument that statutes vesting in department heads the general authority to delegate powers to other officials provided an alternative method of empowering acting officials apart from the Vacancies Act. Both bills also created a reporting mechanism to the President, the General Accounting Office, and the Congress on the length of time that each acting official had served.

A hearing was held at the Governmental Affairs Committee on oversight of compliance with the Vacancies Act on March 18, 1998. Senator Thompson chaired the hearing, which addressed the general issues of noncompliance with the law, as well as the legislative proposals that had by then been introduced. The following witnesses provided testimony: Senator Robert C. Byrd, State of West Virginia; Joseph N. Onek, Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General, Department of Justice, accompanied by Daniel Koffsky, Special Counsel, Office of Legal Counsel, Department of Justice; Joan M. Hollenback, Associate General Counsel, General Accounting Office; Senator Strom Thurmond, State of South Carolina; Michael J. Gerhardt, Professor of Law, Case Western Reserve University; Morton Rosenberg, Specialist in American Public Law, Congressional Research Service; and Paul C. Light, Director, Public Policy Program, The Pew Charitable Trusts.

All of the witnesses but Messrs. Onek and Koffsky supported legislation that would overturn the Justice Departments arguments of exemption from the Vacancies Act and that would create an enforcement mechanism. Senator Byrd also pointed out the Senates responsibility to demand strict compliance with the Vacancies Act from the Administration. He expressed his hope that the Senate would make the Vacancies Act "so tight, so air-tight, that no department can find a crack or crevice anywhere through which to creep." He expressed his view that the Committee could draft legislation to address the problem other than S. 1761. Ms. Hollenbeck provided reasons why the Justice Departments interpretation of the Vacancies

REV_00264311

Act is contrary to the language and legislative history of both the Vacancies Act and the Justice Departments organic statute, and pointed out that Congress passage of statutes governing temporary officers in particular governmental positions shows that Congress knew how to create specific exceptions to the application of the Vacancies Act. She offered GAOs recommendation that legislation be passed to explicitly provide that the Vacancies Act can be superseded only by a statute providing an alternative means for filling a particular vacancy. GAO also recommended reporting provisions and the withholding of pay of acting officials who served in violation of the Vacancies Act. Mr. Koffsky noted that there are no statutory duties that are to be performed by assistant attorneys general.

Senator Thurmond testified to the need to rewrite, not simply amend, the Vacancies Act. He demonstrated that the 1988 amendments had not solved the problem of excessive service by acting officials. He also stressed the need to prevent the Justice Department from arguing that it is exempt from the Vacancies Act, which he would accomplish by requiring statutes exempting particular positions from the Vacancies Act to specifically cite the Vacancies Act. Prof. Gerhardt testified to the need to change some of the terms of art used in the Vacancies Act, and suggested lengthening the 120-day time period. Mr. Rosenberg testified to the errors in the Justice Departments exemption argument in light of the language of the Vacancies Act, the Departments organic statute, and its legislative history. He also spoke of the problem of transferring assistant secretaries from one position to another without their undergoing Senate reconfirmation. He recommended adding an enforcement mechanism to freeze the duties of the office as they existed on the date of the vacancy after the 120-day period has expired. Mr. Light testified that one of the problems with noncompliance with the Vacancies Act is the unnecessary proliferation of political appointees in the government at a time when total federal employment was declining.

Following the hearing, Senator Thompson considered whether to introduce his own legislative proposal. After careful consideration, he determined to address only the Vacancies Act issues involved in the Senates advise and consent powers. The Committee believes that authorizing committees may wish to consider whether statutory duties should be given to assistant secretaries and assistant attorneys general in those departments in which the only current statutory duty of such officials is to assist the secretary or the attorney general. Staff from both parties tried to resolve as many issues as possible. Staff also attempted to respond to the suggestions of the Justice Department and the White House. S. 2176 reflects these discussions. The Committee was told informally that the Justice Department recognizes that the legislation offered effectively prevents it from arguing that departments with vesting and delegation statutes are exempt from the Vacancies Act.

V. Committee Action

On June 17, 1998, the Committee held a business meeting at which S. 2176, the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998, was considered. Senator Lieberman offered an amendment to retain existing statutes that by their own terms provide a process for the filling of specific advice and consent positions, as well as the statues referenced in S. 2176 as introduced, which preserved existing statutes that allow the heads of departments to designate an acting official. That amendment was agreed to by voice vote.

Senator Glenn offered two amendments. The first amendment would have reduced the length of time that a first assistant need serve to be both the acting officer and eligible to be nominated permanently to the position from 180 of the 365 days preceding the vacancy to 30 days prior to the vacancy. The amendment failed on a roll call vote of 6 Yeas (Glenn, Levin, Lieberman, Akaka by proxy, Durbin, and Cleland) and 8 Nays (Roth by proxy, Stevens, Collins, Brownback by proxy, Domenici, Cochran, Nickles by proxy, and Thompson).

Senator Glenns second amendment would permit the acting officer to serve even after the 150-day period following the rejection, withdrawal, or return of the first nomination, once a second nomination was made. The amendment was agreed to by voice vote.

REV_00264312

Senator Levin offered an amendment to begin the time limit on the service of acting officers in vacant positions arising on or in the 60 days after a transitional inauguration day 120 days after the transitional inauguration or the arising of the vacancy, whichever is later. After Senator Levin agreed to shorten the additional period to 90 days, the amendment was agreed to by voice vote.

With no other amendments being offered, Chairman Thompson moved adoption of S. 2176 as amended. The bill was ordered favorably reported by a vote of 9 Yeas (Stevens, Collins, Domenici, Cochran, Glenn, Levin, Lieberman, Cleland, Thompson) and 1 Nay (Durbin). Senators Roth, Brownback, and Nickles voted Aye by proxy.

VI. Section-by-Section Analysis

Section 1 states the short title of the legislation the "Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998."

Section 2 strikes sections 3345 through 3349 of Title 5 and replaces the existing law with a reformed version of the Vacancies Act. The Committee believes that amending existing legislation, given the ineffectiveness of the 1988 amendments, may again fail to ensure the exclusivity of the applicability of the Vacancies Act. To ensure an effective enforcement mechanism and to overturn the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Doolin Security Savings Bank . Office of Thrift Supervision, 39 F.3d 203 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the Committee believes that replacement of the existing Vacancies Act is necessary.

Under current law, section 3345 covers heads of executive agencies, and section 3346 affects "an officer of a bureau of an Executive department or military department, whose appointment is not vested in the head of the department * * *" Section 2 creates a new section 3345, applicable to all officers of executive agencies whose appointment to office is required to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. References to the term of art "bureau" have been eliminated. The purpose of this change is to clearly make the Vacancies Act applicable to all officers of executive agencies whose appointments require Senate confirmation. The Vacancies Act would now apply to such officers in all departments, regardless of the department or agencys organic statute.

"Executive agency" is defined at 5 U.S.C. 105. Because the Department of Defense is a department within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 101, the military departments, which are located in the Department of Defense, are also covered by this Act, notwithstanding the omission of the term "military department" from current sections 3345 and 3346.

The section applies when an officer in an executive agency whose appointment is made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate dies, resigns, or is otherwise unable to perform the functions and duties of the office. The law applies when any of those factual situations arises, regardless of how the situation is characterized. For instance, the Vacancies Act would apply in situations such as Doolin, hen the first acting director of the Office of Thrift Supervision was purportedly designated by virtue of the departing confirmed directors invocation of a statute providing for his duties to be temporarily delegated in the directors "absence." Under this legislation, when an acting officer is to be designated, as opposed to automatically gaining acting status as a first assistant, only the President may designate an acting officer in a position that requires Senate confirmation.

When a vacancy arises, the bill provides an exclusive set of procedures that may be followed. If the vacant officer has a first assistant, the first assistant performs the functions and duties of the office temporarily in an acting capacity, subject to the time limitations of section 3346. The Committee does not establish a definition of "first assistant." That term has a long

REV_00264313

Source: All Sources : Federal Legal - U.S. : USCS - United States Code Service; Code, Const, Rules, Conventions & Public Laws
Terms: 28 u.s.c. 508 (Edit Search)

28 USCS § 508

UNITED STATES CODE SERVICE
Copyright 2000, LEXIS Law Publishing, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc.
All rights reserved.

 CURRENT THROUGH P.L. 106-418, APPROVED 11/1/00 ***
 WITH GAPS OF 106-398, 402, 405, 408, 411, 414, 415, 417 ***

TITLE 28. JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
PART II. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
CHAPTER 31. THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

28 USCS § 508 (2000)

§ 508. Vacancies

(a) In case of a vacancy in the office of Attorney General, or of his absence or disability, the Deputy Attorney General may exercise all the duties of that office, and for the purpose of section 3345 of title 5 [5 USCS § 3345] the Deputy Attorney General is the first assistant to the Attorney General.

(b) When by reason of absence, disability, or vacancy in office, neither the Attorney General nor the Deputy Attorney General is available to exercise the duties of the office of Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General shall act as Attorney General. The Attorney General may designate the Solicitor General and the Assistant Attorneys General, in further order of succession, to act as Attorney General.

HISTORY:
(Sept. 6, 1966, P.L. 89-554, § 4(c), 80 Stat. 612; Oct. 19, 1977, P.L. 95-139, § 2, 91 Stat. 1171.)

HISTORY; ANCILLARY LAWS AND DIRECTIVES

Prior law and revision:

Derivation	U.S. Code	Revised Statutes and Statutes at Large
.....	[Uncodified].	R.S. Sec..347 (last sentence). 1953 Reorg. Plan No. 4, Sec. 1, eff. June 20, 1953, 67 Stat. 636.

The last sentence of R.S. § 347 is cited as authority inasmuch as the function contained therein was the function transferred to the Deputy Attorney General by 1953 Reorg. Plan No. 4. The word "may" is substituted for "have the power". The words "During any period of time" are omitted as unnecessary.

Explanatory notes:
A prior § 508 (Acts June 25, 1948, ch 646, § 1, 62 Stat. 910; Mar. 2, 1955, ch 9, § 2(a), 69 Stat. 10; Oct. 11, 1962, P.L. 87-793, § 1003(a), 76 Stat. 865; Aug. 14, 1964, P.L. 88-426, Title III, § 306(a)(1), 78 Stat. 428; Oct. 6, 1964, P.L. 88-631, § 3(b), 78 Stat. 1008) was repealed by Act Sept. 6, 1966, P.L. 89-554, § 8, 80 Stat. 663. It provided for salaries of United States attorneys, assistant United States attorneys, and special attorneys. Similar provisions are contained in 28 USCS § 548.

REV_00264335

Amendments:

1977. Act Oct. 19, 1977 substituted subsec. (b) for one which read: "When, by reason of absence, disability, or vacancy in office, neither the Attorney General nor the Deputy Attorney General is available to exercise the duties of the office of Attorney General, the Assistant Attorneys General and the Solicitor General, in such order of succession as the Attorney General may from time to time prescribe, shall act as Attorney General.".

NOTES:

CODE OF FEDERAL REGULATIONS

Department of Justice, statements of policy, 28 CFR Part 50.

RESEARCH GUIDE

Am Jur:

7 Am Jur 2d, Attorney General § 44.

Annotations:

Who may apply or authorize application for order to intercept wire or oral communications under Title III of Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (18 USCS §§ 2510 et seq.). 64 ALR Fed 115.

INTERPRETIVE NOTES AND DECISIONS

Solicitor General acting as Attorney General under 28 USCS § 508(b) has all powers of office of Attorney General; hence, application for electronic surveillance authorized by Assistant Attorney General who had been designated by Solicitor General was in compliance with statute providing that Attorney General or his designate may authorize application for electronic surveillance. United States v Pellicci (1974, CA1 Mass) 504 F2d 1106, cert den 419 US 1122, 42 L Ed 2d 821, 95 S Ct 805 and (disagreed with United States v Acon (CA3 Pa) 513 F2d 513).

In criminal proceedings against defendant for importation of marijuana and methaqualone, Drug Enforcement Administration's classification of methaqualone is authorized under 28 USCS § 508 which authorizes designated sucessor to attorney general in absence of attorney general in office to transfer to Drug Enforcement Administration authority to classify controlled substances pursuant to Executive Order No. 11727. United States v Lueck (1982, CA11 Fla) 678 F2d 895, reh den (CA11 Fla) 695 F2d 566 and (disagreed with by multiple cases as stated in United States v Williams (App DC) 822 F2d 1174).

While office of Attorney General was vacant, Deputy Attorney General, in position of Acting Attorney General, had power, under 28 USCS § 508, to authorize electronic eavesdropping. United States v Curreri (1973, DC Md) 363 F Supp 430.

Assuming that authority of Deputy Attorney General to exercise duties of Attorney General ceased 30 days after he assumed position of Acting Attorney General pursuant to Vacancies Act, 5 USCS § 3348, then after 30 days, office became vacant, and provisions of 28 USCS § 508(a), which authorizes Deputy Attorney General to exercise all duties of Attorney General when there is vacancy in that office, came into play; therefore wiretap authorizations given by Deputy Attorney General after expiration of 30-day period were valid. United States v Lucido (1974, ED Mich) 373 F Supp 1142, affd (CA6 Mich) 517 F2d 1.

Solicitor General, who became acting attorney general under provisions of 28 USCS § 508 had authority to designate assistant attorneys general to authorize applications for interception of wire and oral communications; since Solicitor General did not assume office as "first assistant" under provisions of 5 USCS § 3345 and 28 USCS § 508(a), but rather as

REV_00264336

Solicitor General, he became acting attorney general pursuant to 28 USCS § 508(b) which places no time limitation on his tenure; but even assuming that Solicitor General's authority to act as attorney general ended after 30 days, and recognizing that it did terminate when new attorney general took office, authority granted by Solicitor General as acting attorney general to assistant attorneys general to authorize applications for interception of wire and oral communications remained valid until revoked by new attorney general. United States v Halmo (1974, ED Wis) 386 F Supp 593.

Source: All Sources : Federal Legal - U.S. : USCS - United States Code Service; Code, Const, Rules, Conventions & Public Laws
Terms: 28 u.s.c. 508 (Edit Search)
View: Full
Date/Time: Friday, January 12, 2001 - 11:43 AM EST

About LEXIS-NEXIS | Terms and Conditions

Copyright © 2001 LEXIS-NEXIS Group. All rights reserved.

REV_00264337

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Vacancies Reform Act

OA/NARA#: 2163/2014
9693

Box 62
Folder 2

REV_00264338

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Vesting of Iraq Assets

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 62
Folder 3

REV_00264339

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20506

OFFICE OF THE LEGAL ADVISER

FAX TRANSMITTAL COVER SHEET

DATE: 3-17-03
TO: Brett Kavanaugh	FROM: John Bellinger
PHONE NO.:	PHONE NO.: (202) 456-9111
FAX NO.: 6-5104	FAX NO.: (202) 456-9110
COMMENTS:
NUMBER OF PAGES (including cover page): 14

- Some of the concern with respect to payment from the blocked assets may relate to a feeling that certain judgments under § 1605(a)(7) actions against terrorist states in the past may have been windfalls. Quite apart from the important point that seriously deterring these states from attacks against Americans requires substantial judgments, unlike some of the earlier cases with few plaintiffs, this case has 54 plaintiffs. Thus, any aggregate judicial award will be divided among 54 injured parties. Further, after federal and state taxes of approximately 46%, and expenses of the case, the average per plaintiff recovery would be substantially reduced. In addition, this amount to the POWs and their families themselves could be further reduced by the POWs' commitment to the Court to set aside a substantial amount of any punitive damages to create a new foundation for the protection of American and Allied POWs-MIAs. Such a foundation, for example, could provide a vehicle to assist the family of the one American Gulf War prisoner not yet accounted for. Moreover, would anyone voluntarily subject themselves to the suffering and permanent injury of these POWs and their families for any amount? Would any small figure remotely compensate for the serious injury suffered by these brave Americans? Would any small figure seriously deter, or simply be regarded by rogue states as a reasonable price for torturing American service personnel? In light of these factors, damages sought in this case are certainly not excessive in regard to usual and normal tort judgments in the American court system. Most importantly, it is the function of the judiciary to determine damages in specific settings before the Court. That will be done in this case by a federal district judge, after full consideration of the evidence, rather than a jury which might be emotionally swayed by the shocking nature of the torture.

- It might be noted also that the Congress of the United States and the state legislatures would actually have more involvement, or budget, if the POW judgment is honored than if all the funds are immediately returned to Iraq, because approximately 46% of any recovery would go to state and federal taxes. However, the Congress will not participate in any determination as to expenditures concerning blocked assets simply returned to Iraq and the states will receive no part in taxes.

- Given that past § 1605(a)(7) actions have resulted, through both Congressional and Presidential actions, in substantial recoveries, there is an additional fairness problem if the American POWs are singled out to be excluded from payment of their judgment through return of all the blocked assets to Iraq. This fairness issue for later judgments was noted by United States District Judge Henry H. Kennedy, Jr. in an extraordinary letter to Congress concerning an earlier § 1605(a)(7) action. In his letter, Judge Kennedy described the failure to provide for the case before him as a "grievous injustice."

- The overall cost of the reconstruction of Iraq following a second Gulf War is uncertain. A conservative figure is $35 billion and the cost could go as high as $100 billion. (The recent Council on Foreign Relations Working Group Study "Guiding Principles for U.S. Post-Conflict Policy in Iraq" uses a range of $25 to $100 billion for the cost of post-conflict reconstruction of Iraq. Id. at 12.) Whatever the cost, clearly the $1.73 billion in Iraqi blocked assets will be insufficient for the reconstruction of Iraq. And an escrow to pay any final judgment in this case would amount to but a small fraction of any conservative overall reconstruction cost. As our nation weighs the United States' goals and interests in this setting, is our national interest in the deterrence against torture of American POWs, closure for these heroic Americans, and adherence to our own rule of law not worth at least a few percent of our national interest in a post-conflict reconstruction of Iraq?

- Even if the Executive were to return all of the blocked assets to Iraq without setting aside an escrow to pay a final judgment for the POWs, absent new legislation, the judgment would remain an obligation to be dealt with by any new government of Iraq and a failure to meet that obligation could mean substantial continuing legal difficulties for the new government. So any real effect of a decision to ignore the legal rights of the American POWs would be to make it more difficult, if not impossible, for the tortured American POWs to recover, without resolving Iraq's legal exposure.

- Some administrations have seemed to believe that American claims are unimportant in the conduct of foreign policy. To the contrary, one of the historical obligations of the President of the United States is to espouse the claims of Americans. An approach supporting this view of the importance of the Executive protecting American claims was taken by then-Principal Deputy Legal Adviser to the U.S. Department of State in testifying before Congress in 1993 when he stated "[I]f we ever get to a situation where we're in a position to negotiate with Iraq about anything . . . it would be logical for us to demand additional amounts for U.S. Claims." Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Europe and the Middle East of the House Comm. on Foreign Affairs, 103d Cong. 1-3, 14-15 (1993). We are confident that the Bush Administration will not be among those that would ignore the rights of the citizens of this great country.

As co-counsel for the POWs and their family members in this historic case, we would be willing at any time to meet with those who may be considering these issues.

John Norton Moore & Stephen A. Fennell
Co-counsel for the American POWs in Acree v. Republic of Iraq
March 14, 2003

The Honorable George W. Bush
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President:

We write to you as former public servants who have served their Nation in the national security process of this great country. We believe you have a unique opportunity for America to send a powerful message that the torture of American POWs will not be tolerated.

American POWs have been brutally tortured in war after war. While our government has tried to deal with this horror, there have been few options realistically available to us to add deterrence against it. Indeed, some of us have wrestled with precisely this challenge while in office. Now, however, thanks to the courageous action of 17 American former Gulf War POWs brutally tortured by Iraq, and 37 of their family members, we have a unique opportunity to establish an historic precedent that Nations which torture American POWs will be held accountable. Last year these brave Americans brought suit against Iraq in United States District Court and, following a non-appearance by Iraq, an entry of default was entered on September 25, 2002. Their case will go to the equivalent of a bench trial before a federal district judge on March 31 of this year. Under current law, these American POWs and their family members will be able to enforce any final judgment obtained against the substantial Iraqi blocked assets in the United States.

This would truly be one of the first serious efforts to add deterrence against the torture of American POWs. We believe that this is an historic opportunity that should not be lost. It is time now to establish the principle that we will not return blocked assets of a former enemy state absent full accountability for that state's liability in the torture of American POWs. In this case, that means that no blocked assets of Iraq should be returned to that country until provision has been made for the full payment of any court judgment.

In the event that Iraq refuses to disarm, and war and the inevitable American victory comes, some will urge you to seek legislation to return all blocked assets for the future reconstruction of Iraq, thus overturning current law permitting the POWs to enforce any judgment against the blocked Iraqi assets. We understand the importance in such circumstances of American assistance in bringing about a stable new government in Iraq rooted in the rule of law. That objective should not come, however, at the cost of failing to hold Iraq responsible for its torture of American POWs. The responsibility for torture of American POWs must be regarded by the United States, as it is set out in Article 131 of the POW Convention, as a non-absolvable responsibility of the Contracting State itself. Moreover, it would be simply unthinkable to ask the American POWs tortured by Iraq to bear the cost of the reconstruction of Iraq.

Never before has an American President had such an opportunity to strike a blow against the torture of our POWs. This is truly a unique opportunity to send a signal to all future tyrants that America values the rule of law and that we will hold nations that torture American POWs accountable.

Dick Cheney, as then-Secretary of Defense, and Mrs. Cheney, and Colin Powell, as then-Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as well as Mrs. Powell, personally welcomed these American heroes back from their brutal captivity in Iraq. A decade later, let us embrace these brave Americans in their historic effort to say "never again" to such brutal treatment of our service personnel.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS APPENDING THEIR NAMES TO THIS LETTER

Governor Bill Richardson former United States Ambassador to the United Nations

Ambassador Max M. Kampelman
Chairman Emeritus of the American Academy of Diplomacy, Georgetown University Institute for the Study of Diplomacy &
Freedom House

The Honorable Anthony Lake former Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs

The Honorable John Lehman member of the 9/11 Commission & former Secretary of the Navy

Ambassador Ronald F. Lehman former Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy & Director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency

Admiral Thomas H. Moorer, U.S.N. (Ret.)
former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

Admiral Paul A. Yost, Jr. U.S.C.G. (Ret.)
Commandant of the United States Coast Guard (1986-1990)

Davis R. Robinson
former Legal Adviser to the U.S. Department of State

Abraham D. Sofaer
former Legal Adviser to the U.S. Department of State

REV_00264364

Ambassador Richard Schifter former Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs

Ambassador Mark Palmer former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and Ambassador to Hungary

Ambassador W. Nathaniel Howell former U.S. Ambassador to the State of Kuwait

Ambassador David C. Jordan
Professor of Government and Foreign Affairs & former U.S. Ambassador to Peru

Vice Admiral James H. Doyle, Jr. U.S.N. (Ret.)
former Deputy Chief of Naval Operations

Major General John K. Singlaub U.S.A. (Ret.)
former Chief of Staff, U.S. Forces, Korea

Lieutenant General CJ Le Van U.S.A. (Ret.)
former J3, Operations Branch, Joint Chiefs of Staff

Rear Admiral Horace B. Robertson, Jr. U.S.N. (Ret.)
Professor (Emeritus) Duke University School of Law & former Judge Advocate General of the Navy

Malvina Halberstam
Professor of Law & former Counselor on International Law to the Department of State

Jerome J. Shestack
Past President of the American Bar Association

Michael P. Malloy, Ph.D.
former Special Assistant for Foreign Assets Control United States Department of the Treasury

cc: The Honorable Dick Cheney, Vice President of the United States
The Honorable Colin Powell, Secretary of State

REV_00264365

STEPTOE & JOHNSON LLP

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

PHOENIX, ARIZONA
FACSIMILE: 602.257.5299
VERIFICATION: 602.257.5287

1330 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, NW
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036-1795
FACSIMILE: 202.429.3902
VERIFICATION: 202.429.8152
MAIN NUMBER: 202.429.3000
www.steptoe.com

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
FACSIMILE 213.439.9589
VERIFICATION: 213.439.9400

LONDON, ENGLAND
STEPTOE & JOHNSON
FACSIMILE: 011.44.207.367.8001
VERIFICATION: 011.44.207.367.8000

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM
FACSIMILE: 011.322.639.4639
VERIFICATION: 011.322.639.4630

IMPORTANT: This facsimile is intended only for the use of the individual or entity to which it is addressed. It may contain information that is privileged, confidential, or otherwise protected from disclosure under applicable law. If the reader of this transmission is not the intended recipient or the employee or agent responsible for delivering the transmission to the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution, copying or use of this transmission or its contents is strictly prohibited. If you have received this transmission in error, please notify us by telephoning and return the original transmission to us at the above address.

DELIVER TO:

NAME: John Bellinger, III, Senior Associate Counsel to the President and Legal Adviser

TELECOPY PHONE NUMBER: 202-456-9110

COMPANY:

VERIFICATION NUMBER: 202-456-9111

TOTAL PAGES & COVER SHEET: 13

DATE TRANSMITTED:

S&J OPERATOR'S NAME:

TELEPHONE NUMBER: 202-429-3000

CLIENT/CASE NUMBER:

FROM:

NAME: Stephen A. Fennell and John Norton Moore

REQUEST MADE ON DATE: 3/17/03 TIME: 12:18 PM

COMPLETION REQUIRED BY DATE: 3/17/03 TIME: ASAP

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS:

John:

For your information.

-John Norton Moore

STEPTOE & JOHNSON LLP
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

1330 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20036-1795

Telephone 202.429.3000
Facsimile 202.429.3902
www.steptoe.com

Stephen A. Fennell
202.429.8062
sfennell@steptoe.com

March 14, 2003

Via FACSIMILE

The Honorable George W. Bush
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Re: Protecting American POWs

Dear Mr. President:

We write to you about a matter of considerable importance to the national security of the United States and the rule of law. For too many years, in war after war, American prisoners of war (POWs) have been brutally tortured. In the past, there have been few opportunities to add serious deterrence against this practice, which is a "grave breach" of the Third Geneva Convention. As a result of the 1996 Anti-Terrorism Amendments to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act and the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act that you recently signed into law, however, you now have an important opportunity to add deterrence against this brutal pattern of torture of American service personnel.

The 1996 Anti-Terrorism Amendments for the first time permitted suit against terrorist nations who torture American POWs. Pursuant to that law, last year 17 courageous American Gulf War POWs who were brutally tortured by Saddam Hussein, and 37 of their family members, brought suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against Saddam Hussein and the Republic of Iraq. Following repeated offers of arbitration, service of process, and the non-appearance of defendants, on September 25, 2002, the defendants were declared in default. This historic case is now on the "fast-track" in the District Court, and evidence concerning the brutal torture of these national heroes will be presented to the court on March 31, 2003. Importantly, section 201 of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act now permits these brave POWs and their family members to enforce any judgment they get directly against the blocked Iraqi assets being held in the United States.

REV_00264354

As you might imagine, no group more strongly supports the removal of Saddam Hussein from office or is more thankful for the leadership that you have been providing toward that goal. The concern we have as counsel to these POWs and their family members, however, is that some in our government may, in the aftermath of any action necessary to accomplish that goal, seek to change current law and return all of the blocked assets to Iraq despite the outstanding claims of our own American POWs. If this is done before we are able to obtain and enforce a judgment, these POWs could be left without any effective remedy.

We understand that it may sometimes be appropriate for the United States to return blocked assets of former terrorist states when we are able to obtain a change of government in those states and such return does not compromise claims before our courts or take the property of our citizens. We respectfully submit, however, that effective deterrence against the brutal torture of American POWs is a singular national security interest of the United States. And we are certain that you, as Commander-in-Chief, would regard adding such deterrence as one of your highest duties toward our brave servicemen and women. We also believe that this issue is of importance both in relation to the rule of law internationally, and in faithfully executing the current national law that enables these injured POWs to effectively hold Iraq accountable for their brutal torture. Article 131 of the Third Geneva Convention for the protection of POWs, to which both the United States and Iraq are parties, declares that "No High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself . . . in respect of [torture of POWs]." To turn assets back to Iraq without meeting the judicially-determined claims of Americans with respect to this liability of Iraq would not only say that America is not serious about deterring torture of our POWs, but it would also be in violation of our national treaty obligations. The current national law is also clear. By statute, America no longer provides immunity in our courts to terrorist states which torture our POWs, and it permits satisfaction of judgments in such cases from the blocked assets of the terrorist states.

Accordingly, we respectfully request that, in the event any blocked assets are to be returned to a new government of Iraq before the POW plaintiffs have an opportunity to enforce a final judgment against them, you set aside an escrow from those blocked funds to pay the judgment in their case. We would also hope that any such escrow would not only cover the compensatory damages awarded in any such final judgment, but that you would also honor any award of punitive damages from the court. Such an action on your part would send a powerful signal to tyrants that America will no longer tolerate the torture of our POWs and that any such outrages in the future will be accompanied by serious responsibility.

As President, you have articulated clearly the consequences of the absence of the rule of law in Iraq. And as Commander-in-Chief you understand the great importance of standing up against the torture of American POWs, which was one of those consequences. We would greatly appreciate your action in this case in support of these brave Americans and the rule of law.

Although we cannot undo Iraq's lawless action against our POWs, we can provide closure for these brave Americans and assist in their effort to say "never again" to this brutal practice.

With this letter we are also submitting to you a memorandum more fully indicating why we believe it is strongly in the interest of the United States to honor the judicially-determined legal rights of our POWs in this historic case. We would be pleased to meet with you to provide any additional information.

On March 10, 1991, Freedom One landed at Andrews Air Force Base with the seventeen POWs who are now plaintiffs in this case against Saddam Hussein and Iraq. As these returning American heroes were personally greeted by then-Secretary Cheney and Mrs. Cheney, and General and Mrs. Powell, the lead plaintiff in this case, Colonel Cliff Acree, who was so brutally tortured that his skull had fractured, nearly driving bone fragments from his nose into his brain and who was knocked unconscious so many times during his torture that he lost track of the number, said to Secretary Cheney: "Sir, one thing I never worried about was that President Bush would bring us home." President Bush did bring them home, and you, as president, now have the opportunity to give these brave Americans the closure they deserve from this terrible ordeal while giving notice to the world that it is no longer open season on American POWs.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

John Norton Moore
Oceans & International

Stephen A. Pennell
Steptoe & Johnson LLP

Co-counsel for plaintiffs in Acree v. Republic of Iraq

Enc: Memorandum: "Protecting American POWs"

cc: The Honorable Dick Cheney, Vice President of the United States
The Honorable Colin Powell, Secretary of State

MEMORANDUM

PROTECTING AMERICAN POWS

[Including a Response to Arguments for Taxpayer Priority]

A group of 54 courageous American Gulf War POWs and family members have brought an important suit against Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi Intelligence Service, and the Republic of Iraq for the brutal torture of the American POWs by Iraq during the Gulf War. The suit was brought under the 1996 Anti-Terrorism Amendments to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, which permit suit against states on the State Department terrorism list for the torture of Americans. Following repeated offers of arbitration, proper service of process through diplomatic channels, and a non-appearance by Saddam Hussein and Iraq, an entry of default was entered against the defendants on September 25, 2002. This case will go to the equivalent of a bench trial before a United States District Judge in the District of Columbia on March 31 of this year. Under § 201 of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, signed into law by President Bush last November, a final judgment in this case can be enforced against the blocked assets of Iraq in the United States.

A major objective of this suit is to add deterrence against the consistent practice of the brutal torture of American POWs in war after war. The case will contribute to such deterrence through calling public attention to the practice, providing an historic record of the torture (as did the Nuremberg trials), and signaling to would-be torturers that they will face substantial damages if they torture American POWs. The importance of this case as a human rights action cannot be overstated. It is unique in offering deterrence against this brutal recurring practice directed against American servicemen and women. This case also offers closure for a truly heroic group of Americans who have served their country with extraordinary courage and who have been severely injured. If, however, after obtaining a final judgment from a United States District Court, the POWs and their family members are unable to collect against Iraq because the blocked assets have been returned to Iraq, then the signal sent would be that America does not attach a priority to preventing the torture of its POWs. The message would also be that our government had prioritized the well-being of others over American service personnel.

An argument made by some for the return of all the blocked assets to Iraq before satisfaction of judgment in this historic case is that, in the event of a new Iraqi government following a second Gulf War, the United States would want to assist in the reconstruction of that country. In that context, it is urged, the taxpayers should take priority over the POWs and the blocked assets should be used for the reconstruction of Iraq. It is true that, following an ouster of Saddam Hussein (which the tortured POWs have far greater reason to support than virtually any other group), the United States may have a moral obligation to assist in the reconstruction of Iraq. Indeed, it is particularly important in the aftermath of any conflict with Iraq that we work seriously and effectively to promote democracy and the rule of law in that country. There is, and should be, consensus on these important goals of any United States action in the Gulf. These laudable goals, however, should not, and need not, come at the expense of deterrence against future torture of American POWs, closure for these injured POWs, and America's commitment to the rule of law at home. All of these national goals can be served by the establishment of an escrow fund to pay a final judgment in the historic POW case before any blocked assets are returned to Iraq. Some of the reasons why the arguments are wrong to ignore this historic suit and our tortured POWs, and to grant Iraq immunity through return of all its blocked assets, are as follows:

- The issue of private rights versus public purpose is not new. The framers of the United States Constitution determined that private rights should not be taken even for a public purpose when they wrote in the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation." This important provision ensures that the burden of government will be borne by the taxpayers rather than taken from individual rights. The opinion of Mr. Justice Powell in the case of Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654 (1981), indicates that this clause applies to the taking of American claims against foreign nations when such claims, like those of the POWs, are subject to the jurisdiction of our courts. Thus, Justice Powell, in concurring with the opinion, summarizes the decision of the Court: "[P]arties whose valid claims are not adjudicated or not fully paid may bring a 'taking' claim against the United States . . . . The Government must pay just compensation when it furthers the Nation's foreign policy goals by using as 'bargaining chips' claims lawfully held by a relatively few persons and subject to the jurisdiction of our courts. The extraordinary powers of the President and Congress upon which our decision rests cannot, in the circumstances of this case, displace the Just Compensation Clause of the Constitution." 453 U.S. at 691 & n.2.

- A half century ago, in the Federal Tort Claims Act, our own government determined that citizens should be able to sue their government for illegal actions. Today, Americans tortured brutally by our government would be able to bring suit under numerous provisions of American law, and we would not argue that the injured plaintiffs should bear the burden rather than the American taxpayer. Nor would we argue that a change of government or government personnel extinguishes the liability. The City of Los Angeles, and thus its taxpayers, of course remains liable for the beating of Rodney King even after the removal from office, and prosecution of, the individuals responsible.

- The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, which was intended to end ad hoc determinations by the Executive Branch with respect to immunity issues of foreign governments, today clearly provides in § 1605(a)(7), as amended, that states such as Iraq which are on the State Department terrorism list at the time they kill or torture Americans will have no immunity from suit. Congress has also most recently overwhelmingly voted into law in the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, after hearing the arguments made to the contrary, that judgments in these § 1605(a)(7) cases may be enforced against the blocked assets of the defendant states. These are important provisions of current American law intended to add deterrence against the killing and torture of Americans by these states.

- Not only do we as a nation not sanction payment for public purpose, no matter how laudable, from private rights, but it would be a special travesty to ask American POWs brutally tortured by Iraq to pay with their legal rights for the reconstruction of Iraq.

- In the face of this highly visible action against Iraq in the federal courts of the United States, which was brought to hold that nation responsible for its brutal torture of American POWs, a decision by the Executive Branch to disregard current law permitting satisfaction against the Iraqi blocked assets would signal future would-be torturers of American servicemen and women that the United States is not serious about holding nations accountable for such outrages.

- Further, not only would a taking of the legal rights of tortured American POWs in this setting undermine our efforts to add deterrence against such torture, but it would be in violation of the legal obligations of the United States under the Third Geneva Convention (The POW Convention). That Convention provides in Article 131: "No High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself or by another High Contracting Party in respect of . . . [grave breaches of this Convention – as is the torture of POWs]." It is the State of Iraq, not any particular government of Iraq, that is the High Contracting Party to this Convention. Moreover, violations of the legal obligations of a state are state responsibilities rather than simply governmental responsibilities. That is the normal international legal rule of state responsibility. Thus, article 1 of the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility provides: "Every internationally wrongful act of a State entails the international responsibility of that State." (Emphasis added.) Thus, to turn the blocked assets back to Iraq without first meeting the judicially-determined claims of Americans stemming from grave breaches of this Convention, as is torture, would effectively "absolve" Iraq of its responsibility for the torture of American POWs and would thus be in violation of our responsibilities under the Convention. Moreover, does the United States really wish to begin a pattern of absolving foreign states for the torture of American POWs? How could such an effort be in the national security interest of this great Nation?

- The American POWs in this case, and their family members, served their country with remarkable faith and courage. During the period of brutal captivity, the American people were outraged at the visible evidence of the POWs' ongoing torture. And on the POWs' return from captivity in Freedom One, they were met at Andrews Air Force Base by then-Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney and his wife Mrs. Lynne Cheney, and then-Chairman of the Joint Chiefs General Colin Powell and his wife Mrs. Alma Powell. Subsequently, in celebrations in towns all across America, the POWs and their family members were properly regarded as the national heroes they truly are. George and Barbara Bush wrote in a comment on a book written by Cynthia B. Acree, with Colonel Cliff Acree, lead plaintiffs in the POW case, describing their terrible ordeal: "[w]e are delighted to add our two voices to praise Cliff's devotion to duty and Cindy's quiet courage." The POWs and their families are a proud part of our national heritage. They have been severely injured by the torture to which they have been subjected. Surely we owe them the right simply to pursue their claim for recovery and closure through existing law. Just as an important purpose of any reconstruction effort is to promote the rule of law in Iraq, we should not disregard our own rule of law in our zeal to establish the rule of law elsewhere. The rule of law starts at home.

- The special regard our Nation has for our POWs, and for preventing the brutal torture all too often directed against them, is evidenced in passage during the Gulf War of House Concurrent Resolution 48 on January 23, 1991, by a vote of 418-0, and Senate Concurrent Resolution 5 on January 24, 1991, by a vote of 99-0. Following evidence of Iraq's torture of our Gulf War POWs, the House and Senate promptly passed these Resolutions. The House Resolution "condemns the flagrant and deliberate violations" by Iraq of the Third Geneva Convention. The Senate Resolution demands that "Iraq abide by the principles and the obligations of the Third Geneva Convention concerning the treatment of prisoners of war . . ." and condemns Iraq's failure to do so. During the Senate discussion of the Senate Resolution, it was noted that "under article 131 of the Geneva Convention Iraq cannot absolve itself from any liability concerning treatment of Allied POWs."

- The torture decried by Congress that Iraq, Saddam Hussein, and the Iraqi Intelligence Service are responsible for committing included violent and inhuman acts of both physical and psychological torture against the POWs. The types of torture used included severe beatings (with objects ranging from axe handles and rifle butts to whips and clubs), systemic starvation, systematic exposure to freezing cold and vile confines, deprivation of medical care, electric shock, mock executions, videotaping for propaganda purposes, threatened castration, threatened amputation and dismemberment, continual death threats, and withholding contact by the International Committee of the Red Cross to confirm that the POWs were alive. These tortures produced severe and continuing injuries. Twelve years have passed without an effort to hold the perpetrators of these evils accountable to the POWs.

- The law of sovereign immunity and blocked assets in the United States on which the POW lawsuit has been based, and their ability to collect under current law, are established by statute. In the face of this clear statutory structure, the Executive Branch lacks legal authority to return blocked Iraqi assets absent prior provision for satisfaction of the § 1605(a)(7) actions. While others may have a different view of this issue, it is certainly not clear in this circumstance that the Executive has the authority to return blocked assets without satisfying the legal rights of American § 1605(a)(7) claimants, absent subsequent legislation changing present law. It should be remembered that in the classic Dames & Moore case, any Executive authority to turn back blocked assets was supported by the statutory scheme in place at that time. Today, the relevant statutory scheme specifically calls for jurisdiction in United States courts, no immunity of the State of Iraq for its torture of our POWs, and satisfaction of these § 1605(a)(7) judgments from the blocked assets of Iraq in the United States. It should also be noted that the Court in Dames & Moore specifically said: "We do not decide that the President possesses plenary power to settle claims, even as against foreign governmental entities." 453 U.S. at 688. To act absent a new legislative mandate would expose the Executive Branch to litigation that potentially could set a precedent further narrowing any Presidential authority in this area. Moreover, even with new legislation authorizing the Executive to override the claims of the POWs, a Fifth Amendment takings claim would be presented pursuant to the holding of the Court in Dames & Moore. The Fifth Amendment applies to all branches of our Government.

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Vice President Richard Cheney, US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (Appendix) [1]

OA/NARA#: 1650/1518
9601

Box 62
Folder 4

REV_00264366

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

In re VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al.,	)
Petitioners.	)	No. 02-_____
	)	[Civil Action Nos. 01-1530, 02-631 (EGS)]

APPENDIX

THEODORE B. OLSON
Solicitor General

ROBERT D. McCALLUM, JR.
Assistant Attorney General

PAUL D. CLEMENT
Deputy Solicitor General

GREGORY G. KATSAS
SHANNEN W. COFFIN
Deputy Assistant Attorneys General

MARK B. STERN
MICHAEL S. RAAB
DOUGLAS HALLWARD-DRIEMEIER
ERIC D. MILLER
(202) 514-5089
Attorneys, Appellate Staff
Civil Division
U.S. Department of Justice
601 D Street, N.W., Room 9108
Washington, D.C. 20530-0001

REV_00264367

	Docket Text: ORDER setting forth briefing schedule.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 3/26/2002. (lcegs2,)
52	Filed: 03/27/2002 Entered: 04/03/2002	Summons Returned Executed
	Docket Text: RETURN OF SERVICE/AFFIDAVIT of Summons and Complaint Executed. THOMAS KUHN served on 3/1/2002, answer due 3/21/2002 (td,)
51	Filed: 04/02/2002 Entered: 04/02/2002 Terminated: 04/09/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply re [45], [48], [49] by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
59	Filed: 04/03/2002 Entered: 04/10/2002	Remark
	Docket Text: Notice of filing of transcript of status hearing for the date of 3/26/02. (td,)
66	Filed: 04/03/2002 Entered: 04/19/2002 Terminated: 04/24/2002	Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to Appear pro hac vice of non resident attorney Joanne Spalding by SIERRA CLUB. (td,)
67	Filed: 04/03/2002 Entered: 04/19/2002 Terminated: 04/24/2002	Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to Appear pro hac for non resident attorney Patrick Gallagher by SIERRA CLUB. (td,)
68	Filed: 04/03/2002 Entered: 04/19/2002 Terminated: 04/24/2002	Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for non resident attorney Alex Levinson by SIERRA CLUB. (td,)
53	Filed: 04/05/2002 Entered: 04/05/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: RESPONSE in Opposition re [48], [49], [45] filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
54	Filed: 04/05/2002 Entered: 04/05/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER consolidating Civil Action No. 01-1530 (EGS) and Civil Action No. 02-631 (EGS) and ordering all future pleadings to be filed under docket number 01-1530 (EGS).Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 4/5/2002. (lcegs2,)
55	Filed: 04/05/2002 Entered: 04/05/2002 Terminated: 05/23/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss Sierra Club case by Andrew Lundquist and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, RICHARD CHENEY, DONALD EVANS, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, ANN M.

8

REV_00264376

Is there a national "crisis"? California faces rolling summer-electricity blackouts. In New York City, officials are scrambling to add small gas-fired generators to handle peak demand. Natural-gas prices have doubled in the past year. The numbers on signs at filling stations are skyrocketing, and could hit $3 a gallon this summer in the Midwest. In a West Wing interview with NEWSWEEK, Cheney shied away from the C word. "I think the potential is there for it to adversely affect the economy," he said.

But voters are using the word. In a NEWSWEEK Poll, 71 percent of those surveyed say there is an "energy crisis" in California; 53 percent agree there now is one in the country as a whole. Given an either-or choice between "protecting the environment" and "developing new sources of energy," those polled selected energy by 52 to 41 percent, compared with a 49-44 ratio just one month ago.

There's something to be said for turning to energy-industry alums in this situation--and Cheney, who like Bush is a son of the oilfields, is not shy about saying it. "The fact of the matter is [you get] a lot of expertise with people who have been dealing with these issues for a long time," he told NEWSWEEK. In his own case, he said, his time at Halliburton, the globe-girdling oil-services company, taught him "a hell of a lot about the technology of the business," such as benign new ways to drill in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

But Americans are skeptical of industry motives--and, by extension, of Bush's ties. When asked to name who had contributed "a lot" to the current energy situation, those polled named two sets of villains: the U.S. energy companies (66 percent) and overseas energy suppliers, such as OPEC. Bush himself gets his lowest approval marks for his handling of energy and environmental issues. Democrats, naturally, are pouncing on what they see as a populist hole in Bush's armor. Late last week House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt was stumping in Chula Vista, Calif.; with transmission lines as a backdrop, he vowed to impose new federal caps on electricity rates--an idea Cheney flatly opposes.

The administration may well have raised the political risk via the process it used to draft its plan. The Bushies used a secretive, believers-only process reminiscent of another such enterprise: Hillary Rodham Clinton's effort to write a national health-care plan in 1994. Since the group comprises only government officials, White House aides say, it is entitled to keep its deliberations private. Still, industry leaders--who dumped $22.5 million into GOP coffers in the last election--enjoyed constant contact with the task force. Cheney met with a group of utility executives at the Edison Electric Institute, whose president, Tom Kuhn, was a leading Bush fund-raiser. No one has enjoyed better access than Enron CEO Ken Lay, who recently had dinner with his good friend the president.

The environmental community, meanwhile, got one mass meeting with the staff a month ago (and the promise of another this week with EPA Administrator Christine Todd Whitman). Efforts to meet with Cheney were rebuffed. Cheney himself confirmed he had not met with a single spokesman for the greens. That dynamic has only fueled suspicions among enviros about what's going on behind closed doors. "They're drumming up a fake energy crisis that doesn't exist," says Phil Clapp of the National Environmental Trust.

To be sure, the Cheney report will make many nods in the direction of conservation and renewable resources. Cheney confirmed that it will call for tax credits for both. The plan will herald and encourage the advent of less intrusive, high-tech means for finding and extracting oil and gas and for burning more coal. White House spinners have decided to divide the report into five parts--only two of which will deal with the extraction and the transmission of new sources of traditional types of fuel. The conservation measures will be high tech and optimistically can-do about using Yankee ingenuity to give Americans all the cars and appliances they want while using less electricity from state-of-the-art power plants. But there will be no paeans to the kind of pantywaist, tree-hugging self-abnegation the Bushies think President Carter sermon- ized about a generation ago. "This isn't about not bathing or turning off your lights," said a top Cheney aide. "This is about finding environmentally safe ways to make sure we have the energy we need."

REV_00264466

That's not enough, environmentalists say, given the rising threat of global warming the green community is convinced comes from burning fossil fuels. "The test of any energy plan will be what it does to limit greenhouse gases," says Fred Krupp of Environmental Defense. The Union of Concerned Scientists, concerned about global warming, says that renewables and conservation could displace 20 percent of traditional electricity demand by the year 2020--and greatly lessen the need for new power plants. Cheney thinks otherwise. In that span, he said, reliance on renewables could indeed triple--a "fairly optimistic" scenario but one that would still meet only 6 percent of total electricity needs. But that estimate does not include imposing tough new mileage standards on SUVs or mandating more efficient appliances. "Part of our task," he said, "is to focus on reality, and reality is not 'Well, gee, we'll conserve our way out, we don't have to produce any more,' or 'Wind and solar will take care of it, so we don't need fossilfuels anymore'."

Now comes the hard part: selling the plan to the public and to Congress. Some GOP strategists are sanguine about overcoming environmental concerns. "Nothing like $3-a-gallon gasoline to help make the case," said one. But it's probably not that simple. White House strategists are looking for clues on how best to hawk the package in polls done for them by the Republican National Committee. The surveys show that voters know very little about where energy supplies come from or how they now are distributed in what has become a relatively deregulated marketplace. "Voters out there think that the government guarantees cheap, abundant energy," said one worried Republican polltaker, "and that's not the way it works anymore." Other insiders worry less about the Democrats than the news media, which they regard as addicted to showing videotape of belching smokestacks. "Bush will have the bully pulpit," says GOP consultant Alex Castellanos, "but it's not an easy sell."

But sell Bush must. He'll take his show on the road next week, joined by a fleet of cabinet secretaries. They will declare that action is needed after years of Clinton-administration neglect. They will say that there are no quick fixes, and tout their market-based, supply-side, long-term answers. They may use real-world vignettes about energy shortages. (On request, the Natural Gas Supply Association provided the White House some.) But politics is lived in the short term, and Bush late last week suddenly found himself in the role of conservation advocate. He ordered federal facilities in California to turn up thermostats, and pledged that they would reduce electricity use by 10 percent. Cheney, the interview over, hurried to the Cabinet Room for the announcement. It turns out that conservation matters a great deal, at least in California, at least for now.

REV_00264467

GRAPHIC: PHOTO: Inner circle: Cheney presiding over a meeting of the Energy Task Force last week in the vice president's ceremonial office; PHOTO: The outsider: Clapp claims the Bushies may be ginning up a fake energy crisis''; GRAPHIC: (Chart) Energy Advocates in the Bush Pipeline (Graphic omitted)

LOAD-DATE: May 9, 2001

REV_00264468

ATTACHMENT 9

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

WASHINGTON

July 5, 2001

Larry Klayman, Esq.
General Counsel, Judicial Watch, Inc.
501 School Street SW, Suite 725
Washington, D.C. 20024

Dear Mr. Klayman:

This is in response to your letter dated June 25, 2001 to the Vice President. Please be advised that the National Energy Policy Development Group is not an "advisory committee" under the Federal Advisory Committee Act and is therefore not subject to FACA's terms, noting especially that it is composed entirely of full-time officers of the Federal Government. In addition, the Freedom of Information Act does not provide for disclosure of the materials you requested. See, 18 U.S. Op. Ofc. Legal Counsel 10 (1994).

Sincerely,

David S. Addington
Counsel to the Vice President

REV_00264470

ATTACHMENT 10

14 of 50 DOCUMENTS

Copyright 2001 The New York Times Company

The New York Times

June 26, 2001, Tuesday, Late Edition - Final

SECTION: Section A; Page 17; Column 1; National Desk

LENGTH: 465 words

HEADLINE: Cheney Withholds List of Those Who Spoke to Energy Panel

BYLINE: By JOSEPH KAHN

DATELINE: WASHINGTON, June 25

BODY:

Vice President Dick Cheney has declined to identify the people who met privately with his energy task force, raising tensions with Congressional investigators who have repeatedly requested the information.

The General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, sent Mr. Cheney's office a letter late last week complaining that a month had passed since it first submitted an inquiry about the workings of the task force. The letter said the vice president had a legal obligation to provide the information immediately.

Mr. Cheney's office said the letter was sent one day after it submitted 77 pages of documents to the accounting office.

"Our correspondence crossed in the mail," said Juleanna Glover Weiss, a spokeswoman for Mr. Cheney.

But Ms. Weiss said the vice president had not provided the names of people, including industry executives, who may have influenced the formation of the Bush administration's energy policy, which was released last month.

"Our counsel and the G.A.O. will continue to talk about this," Ms. Weiss said.

The energy task force Mr. Cheney headed spent several months compiling a lengthy energy strategy that contained about 150 recommendations for administrative and legislative actions to address what it termed an energy crisis.

Administration officials have said that they met with a wide variety of people concerned about energy issues, including executives of oil, natural gas, electricity, nuclear power and energy infrastructure companies. They have declined to provide a list of people who had access to the task force.

Some Democrats have asserted that leading Republican donors had special access to the task force and that the energy policy is skewed toward measures favored by major corporations. Two Democratic representatives, Henry A. Waxman of California and John D. Dingell of Michigan, asked the accounting office to report on the officials who served on the task force, what information was collected by the panel, whom they met with and how much the task force spent.

The White House provided the G.A.O. with the financial records of the task force. But administration officials have told the investigative body that they are not compelled to provide the names of outsiders who met with the task force.

The accounting office's general counsel, Anthony H. Gamboa, said in a letter to Mr. Cheney's office last week that the investigative body is entitled to more information.

The letter warned that if the White House does not provide the full range of information the G.A.O. is seeking, it may issue a "demand letter," a more formal request. Under the law, the White House would have 20 days to respond.

REV_00264472

If the dispute continues, the accounting office could bring a civil action against the administration.

http://www.nytimes.com

LOAD-DATE: June 26, 2001

REV_00264473

DAILY NEWS —online edition

DAILY NEWS express

Cheney Won't Give Up Names

EXPRESS WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON

Vice President Dick Cheney remained locked in a battle with the General Accounting Office today over the activities of a White House energy task force.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, has requested a meeting with Cheney discuss an energy task force, of which Cheney was chairman.

Cheney aide Juleanna Glover Weiss said the vice president's office had already forked over a 77-page "financial account of the task force," but has not agreed to meet the GAO request to turn over the names of the people who met with the task force."

"We're still talking to the GAO about that," Weiss said.

The White House task force headed by Cheney met with officials from the oil, natural gas, electric, and nuclear industries, among others, in developing the Bush administration's new national energy plan unveiled last month.

Reps. John Dingell (D-Mich.) and Henry Waxman (D-Calif.) asked the GAO in April to investigate the task force.

"It is past time for the American people to find out what went on in Cheney's energy task force," Dingell said yesterday. "What are they hiding?"

Original Publication Date: 6/26/01

REV_00264474

What do you think? Post your comments on our Forums.

Quick Reference Menu GO

Daily News Services

Click on any service and enjoy shopping online!

REV_00264475

	VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1)(Buchholz, David)
56	Filed: 04/08/2002 Entered: 04/08/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Motion re [34] to Dismiss filed by NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit A# (2) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit B# (3) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit C# (4) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit E# (5) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit F# (6) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit G# (7) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit H# (8) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit I# (9) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit J# (10) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit K# (11) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit L# (12) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit M# (13) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit N# (14) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit O# (15) Exhibit Amicus Exhibit P)(Crystal, Howard)
57	Filed: 04/09/2002 Entered: 04/09/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply re [51]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 4/9/2002. (lcegs2,)
58	Filed: 04/09/2002 Entered: 04/09/2002	Errata
	Docket Text: ERRATA exhibit to memorandum filed 4/8/02 document number [56] by NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL. (td,) Modified on 4/9/2002 (td,).
60	Filed: 04/12/2002 Entered: 04/12/2002	Reply to opposition to Motion
	Docket Text: REPLY to opposition to motion re [48] Motion to Dismiss filed by THOMAS KUHN. (Litt, Robert)
61	Filed: 04/12/2002 Entered: 04/12/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [49] filed by MARK RACICOT. (Horn, Richard)
62	Filed: 04/12/2002 Entered: 04/15/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [45] of motion to dismiss filed by HALEY BARBOUR. (td,)
63	Filed: 04/15/2002 Entered: 04/15/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE of Appearance by Roger M. Adelman by SIERRA CLUB (Adelman, Roger)
64	Filed: 04/16/2002 Entered: 04/16/2002 Terminated: 04/24/2002	Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: Consent MOTION for Admission of Counsel Pro Hac Vice and Proposed Order by SIERRA CLUB. (Adelman, Roger) Modified on 4/19/2002 (td,).
65	Filed: 04/16/2002 Entered: 04/16/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [55] to Dismiss filed by SIERRA CLUB. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit A# (2) Exhibit B# (3) Exhibit C)(Adelman, Roger)
--	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to Appear

REV_00264377

18 of 50 DOCUMENTS

The Associated Press

The materials in the AP file were compiled by The Associated Press. These materials may not be republished without the express written consent of The Associated Press.

June 25, 2001, Monday, BC cycle

SECTION: Business News; Washington Dateline

LENGTH: 504 words

HEADLINE: Congress demands list of participants in Cheney energy meetings

BYLINE: By SCOTT LINDLAW, Associated Press Writer

DATELINE: WASHINGTON

BODY:

Congressional investigators are intensifying pressure on the White House to identify who met privately with Vice President Dick Cheney's energy task force.

The General Accounting Office has sent Cheney's lawyer a 10-page letter asserting a legal right to the lists and advising Cheney that it may make a formal demand for the information, rather than the polite requests it has made in recent weeks.

Comptroller General David M. Walker "is prepared to issue a demand letter ... if we do not receive timely access to the information," the GAO said in a 10-page letter dated Friday from office General Counsel Anthony H. Gamboa to David S. Addington, attorney for the vice president.

The GAO is the investigative arm of Congress, and it has legal authority to federal agency records under the law. A demand letter could begin a legal battle: It would give Cheney's office 20 days to respond, either by turning over the names, or providing a reason why it is not compelled to do so, said Lynn Gibson, a lawyer for the GAO.

If Cheney declined to turn over the records, the GAO would notify Congress and Attorney General John Ashcroft, among others. The GAO would also be authorized to file a civil action in court seeking the record, Gibson said.

She knew of no previous case in which the GAO was forced to go to court to obtain agency records.

The White House team that developed the national energy plan, released last month, met with more than 130 interest groups, from environmentalists and unions, often at odds with Republicans, to major Bush supporters who got private sessions with Cheney.

Reps. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., and John Dingell, D-Mich., in April asked the GAO to provide information on who served on the task force, what information was presented to the panel, who presented it and what the task force spent.

The White House has asserted that the GAO does not have the authority to ask for names of participants. However, it agreed that the GAO is entitled to financial records of the task force, and two administration officials said the vice president's office provided 77 pages of financial documents to the GAO last week.

The GAO contends it is entitled to a wider range of records. Federal law "extends GAO's audit authority to all matters related to the use of public money, not just matters related to costs of activities," it argued in its letter to Cheney. "Over the years, GAO has conducted many reviews that involve a wide range of White House programs and activities."

REV_00264476

Juleanna Glover Weiss, a spokeswoman for Cheney, declined to comment on the GAO's assertions, other than to say, "I'm sure the GAO and the vice president's office will be talking about that."

Waxman and Dingell called on Cheney to provide the information they seek.

"The vice president should stop stonewalling and start cooperating with GAO's investigation," Waxman said Monday. "Congress is entitled to know the identity of the special interests that met with the Cheney energy task force."

LOAD-DATE: June 26, 2001

REV_00264477

ATTACHMENT 11

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

WASHINGTON

January 3, 2002

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Representative Waxman:

This is in response to your inquiry by letter of December 4, 2001 about meetings between the Vice President or the former National Energy Policy Development Group's ("Group") support staff and representatives of the Enron Corporation during the preparation of the National Energy Policy that was published on May 17, 2001. The Enron Corporation announced on December 2, 2001 that Enron and certain of its subsidiaries had filed voluntary petitions for reorganization under Chapter 11 of Title 11 of the U.S. Code in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York. Your letter stated that you viewed it as appropriate to ask whether Enron had communicated "information about its precarious financial position" in any meetings.

Enron did not communicate information about its financial position in any of the meetings with the Vice President or with the National Energy Policy Development Group's support staff. These meetings are described below.

As the Vice President mentioned in his interview on the Frontline program on May 17, 2001, the Vice President met with Mr. Kenneth L. Lay, chairman and chief executive officer of the Enron Corporation. The meeting occurred on April 17, 2001 and lasted for about a half-hour. They discussed energy policy matters, including the energy crisis in California, and did not discuss information concerning the financial position of the Enron Corporation.

The National Energy Policy Development Group, which existed from January 29, 2001 to September 30, 2001, had a support staff. As you may recall from my letter to you of May 4, 2001, individuals on the Group support staff met, prior to issuance of the National Energy Policy, with many individuals to gather information relevant to the Group's work. The Group's support staff held such meetings with a broad representation of people potentially affected by the Group's work, including individuals involved with companies or industries (e.g., in the electricity, telecommunications, coal mining, petroleum, gas, refining, bioenergy, solar energy, nuclear energy, pipeline, railroad and automobile manufacturing sectors); environmental, wildlife, and marine advocacy; State and local utility regulation and energy management; research and teaching at universities; research and analysis at policy organizations (i.e., think-tanks); energy consumers, including consumption by businesses and individuals; major labor unions; and many Members of Congress or their staffs.

REV_00264479

Included among those with whom the Group's support staff met were representatives of the Enron Corporation. The Executive Director of the support staff met on February 22 and March 7, 2001 with Enron representatives and reports that they discussed energy policy matters and did not discuss information concerning the financial position of the Enron Corporation. On April 9, 2001, Group support staff held a meeting with about two dozen representatives of various utilities, which was known to include an Enron representative and which did not involve discussion concerning the financial position of the Enron Corporation.

Two additional meetings occurred after publication of the National Energy Policy, one of which was after the termination of the Group. The Deputy Executive Director of the support staff met on August 7, 2001 with officials of an Enron German subsidiary and reports that they discussed energy policy matters and did not discuss information concerning the financial position of the Enron Corporation. An employee on the Vice President's staff, who previously was the Executive Director of the Group's support staff, met on October 10, 2001 with Enron representatives and reports that they discussed energy policy matters and did not discuss information concerning the financial position of the Enron Corporation.

To summarize, as the above information reflects, during the period that the National Energy Policy was in formulation, the Vice President had only one meeting with Mr. Lay, which was the meeting that the Vice President mentioned on television in May. During the same period, the National Energy Policy Development Group's support staff, which had meetings with a broad range of individuals involved in energy matters, had two meetings with Enron representatives, plus a meeting with utility representatives that included an Enron representative. Also described above were two staff-level meetings that occurred well after issuance of the National Energy Policy. None of these meetings included discussion of the financial position of the Enron Corporation.

I note for your information that the Vice President and Mr. Lay of Enron Corporation both served on a panel on June 24, 2001 at the American Enterprise Institute World Forum in Beaver Creek, Colorado. The panel was widely attended and addressed energy matters. There was no discussion of information concerning the financial position of Enron Corporation.

Your letter mentioned a number of Federal officials not employed by the Office of the Vice President. To the extent you wish to inquire about their official activities, I would respectfully refer you to their employing departments, agencies or offices.

The information above is provided to you as a matter of comity between the legislative and executive branches, with due regard for the constitutional separation of powers, and reserving all legal authorities and privileges that may apply. It is our hope that submission of the information will help you avoid the waste of time and taxpayer funds on unnecessary inquiries.

Sincerely,

David S. Addington

David S. Addington
Counsel to the Vice President

REV_00264480

Patrick Gallagher (CA Bar No.146105)
Alex Levinson (CA Bar No.135307)
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 977-5696
(415) 977-5793 FAX

Attorneys for Plaintiff

FILED
02 JAN 25 PM 3:07
CLERK, U.S. DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

JL

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

C 02 0462

SIERRA CLUB, a California nonprofit corporation,

Plaintiff

v.

VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, in his official capacity as Vice President of the United States and Chairman of the National Energy Policy Development Group,

The NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, an advisory committee commissioned by President George W. Bush, Jr.,

ANDREW LUNDQUIST, in his official capacity as Executive Director of the National Energy Policy Development Group, and Director of Energy Policy for Vice President Cheney and Senior Policy Advisor to the Department of Energy,

SPENCER ABRAHAM, in his official capacity as Secretary of the United States Department of Energy and member of the Case No.:

COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Violations of Federal Advisory Committee Act, 5 U.S.C. Appendix 2

REV_00264481

National Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
DONALD EVANS, in his official capacity as) Secretary of the United States Department of) Commerce and member of the National) Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
GALE NORTON, in her official capacity as) Secretary of the United States Department of) the Interior and member of the National) Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
ANN VENEMAN, in her official capacity as) Secretary of the United States Department of) Agriculture and member of the National) Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
PAUL O'NEILL, in his official capacity as) Secretary of the United States Department of) the Treasury and member of the National) Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
NORMAN MINETA, in his official capacity) as Secretary of the United States Department) of Transportation and member of the) National Energy Policy Development Group,)
)
CHRISTINE TODD WHITMAN, in her) official capacity as Administrator of the) United States Environmental Protection) Agency and member of the National Energy) Policy Development Group,)
)
Defendants)
)

///

///

///

///

INTRODUCTION

The Sierra Club brings this action to enforce the Federal Advisory Committee Act, 5 U.S.C. Appendix 2, ("FACA"), a "sunshine law" providing for public scrutiny of the manner in which the Executive Branch obtains advice from private individuals on policy matters. The Sierra Club seeks access to information under FACA concerning the activities of the National Energy Policy Development Group (better known colloquially as the "Cheney Energy Task Force"), and its related sub-groups ("Task Force Sub-Groups"). The Cheney Energy Task Force is a Presidential advisory committee, the purpose of which is to gather information, deliberate and make recommendations to the President on national energy policy.

JURISDICTION

1. This Court has jurisdiction over this action under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (action arising under the laws of the United States), 28 U.S.C. § 1361 (mandamus), 5 U.S.C. §§ 701 et seq. (Administrative Procedure Act) and 28 U.S.C. §§2201 and 2202 (Declaratory Judgment Act). Venue in this district is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because the Sierra Club is incorporated in California and maintains its headquarters and resides in this district.

INTRADISTRICT ASSIGNMENT

2. Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 3-2(c), Plaintiff states that it bases venue in this district and the San Francisco Division on the following: 1) Plaintiff is incorporated in California and maintains its headquarters and resides in San Francisco County; 2) this action seeks relief against federal officials acting in their official capacities; and 3) 28 U.S.C. §§ 1361 and 1391(e) provide for venue in the district of Plaintiff's residence, including the San Francisco Division.

PARTIES

3. Plaintiff Sierra Club is a nonprofit corporation organized under California law, with more than 700,000 members nationwide. The Sierra Club's mission is to explore, enjoy, and protect the wild places of the Earth; to practice and promote the responsible use of the Earth's resources and ecosystems; to educate and enlist humanity to protect and restore the quality of the natural and human environment; and to use all lawful means to carry out these objectives.

4. The Sierra Club's concerns encompass the nation's use of energy and the environmental and health impacts caused by the development, extraction, production and use of energy. The Sierra Club has actively participated in the public discussion regarding the Bush Administration's national energy policy. The Sierra Club has educated its members about national energy policy, participated in and organized community events, such as rallies and demonstrations; discussed energy policy with members of Congress and other government leaders, and sought to disseminate information on energy policy via the media.

5. Sierra Club members reside in, work in, and regularly visit, use, and enjoy areas that would be affected by the Bush Administration's energy policy. These areas include, among many examples, federal public lands, national forests, and coastal areas subject to oil and gas drilling and related activities; and populated areas downwind of power plants and other sources of energy-caused pollution. Moreover, Sierra Club members routinely make use of information concerning energy policy while engaging in First Amendment activities as environmentalists and Sierra Club members.

6. Defendant Richard Cheney is sued in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States and Chairman of the Cheney Energy Task Force. As the Chairman of the Cheney Energy Task Force, Vice President Cheney acted on behalf of the President in gathering information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervising the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups. He participated in meetings and deliberations, and his office contributed to the formulation of the Bush Administration's national energy policy.

7. Defendant National Energy Policy Development Group ("Cheney Energy Task Force") is a Presidential advisory committee, the purpose of which is to gather information, deliberate and make recommendations to the President on national energy policy.

8. Defendant Lundquist is sued in his official capacity as Executive Director of the Cheney Energy Task Force, Director of Energy Policy for Vice President Cheney, and Senior Policy Advisor to the U.S Department of Energy. As the Executive Director of the Cheney Energy Task Force, he participated in its meetings and deliberations, and contributed to the formulation of the Bush Administration's national energy policy.

9. Defendant Abraham is sued in his official capacity as Secretary of Energy and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Abraham participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and he and his agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

10. Defendant Evans is sued in his official capacity as Secretary of Commerce and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Evans participated in Cheney Energy

REV_00264485

	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Admission of Counsel [64], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Joanne Spalding [66], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Patrick Gallagher [67], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Alex Levinson [68], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Narayan[69]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on April 24, 2002. (GK,)
--	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Admission of Counsel [64], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Joanne Spalding [66], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Patrick Gallagher [67], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Alex Levinson [68], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Narayan[69]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on April 24, 2002. (GK,)
--	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Admission of Counsel [64], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Joanne Spalding [66], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Patrick Gallagher [67], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Alex Levinson [68], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Narayan[69]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on April 24, 2002. (GK,)
--	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Admission of Counsel [64], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Joanne Spalding [66], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Patrick Gallagher [67], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Alex Levinson [68], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Narayan[69]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on April 24, 2002. (GK,)
--	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Admission of Counsel [64], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Joanne Spalding [66], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Patrick Gallagher [67], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hac vice for Alex Levinson [68], granting Motion for Leave to Appear pro hace vice for Narayan[69]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on April 24, 2002. (GK,)

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
69	Filed: 04/24/2002 Entered: 04/24/2002 Terminated: 04/24/2002	Motion for Leave to Appear
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to Appear Consent Motion for Admission of Narayan Pro Hac Vice by SIERRA CLUB. (Adelman, Roger)
--	Filed: 04/25/2002 Entered: 04/25/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to File Excess Pages
	Docket Text: ORDER granting unopposed Motion for Leave to File Excess Pages [70] Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 4/25/2002. (lcegs2,)

REV_00264378

Task Force meetings and deliberations, and he and his agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

11. Defendant Norton is sued in her official capacity as Secretary of the Interior and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Norton participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and she and her agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

12. Defendant Veneman is sued in her official capacity as Secretary of Agriculture and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Veneman participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and she and her agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

13. Defendant O'Neill is sued in his official capacity as Secretary of the Treasury and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant O'Neill participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and he and his agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

14. Defendant Mineta is sued in his official capacity as Secretary of Transportation and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Mineta participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and he and his agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

REV_00264486

15. Defendant Whitman is sued in her official capacity as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and member of the Cheney Energy Task Force. Defendant Whitman participated in Cheney Energy Task Force meetings and deliberations, and she and her agency gathered information, advice and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups.

BACKGROUND

The Cheney Energy Task Force

16. On or about January 29, 2001, George W. Bush signed a memorandum to his Vice President, Richard Cheney, commissioning the Cheney Energy Task Force. The Presidential memorandum stated that the purpose of the Cheney Energy Task Force was to develop a national energy policy. The membership of the Cheney Energy Task Force included the defendants.

17. The Cheney Energy Task Force held its first meeting on or about January 29, 2001. The Task Force held at least eight additional meetings between February and May of 2001 and, on information and belief, continued its activities thereafter.

18. On information and belief, the defendants arranged, participated in and exercised responsibility over meetings and other activities involving groups of energy industry executives and other non-federal employees, for the purpose of obtaining advice and recommendations on the Administration's national energy policy.. These groups are what are referred to as the "Task Force Sub-Groups" in this Complaint.

REV_00264487

19. On information and belief, the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups were not composed wholly of full time officers or employees of the federal government. Energy industry executives, including multiple representatives of single energy companies, and other non-federal employees, attended meetings and participated in activities of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

20. On information and belief, the participants in the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups interacted significantly and acted collectively in expressing their viewpoints and advice on energy policy.

21. On information and belief, there was continuity in the membership of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

22. On or about May 16, 2001, the Cheney Energy Task Force submitted a report to President Bush, setting forth the Task Force's findings and recommendations for a "National Energy Policy."

23. The Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups were established or utilized by the President and the defendants for the purpose of obtaining information, advice and recommendations for the development of the "National Energy Policy." The Bush Administration has developed legislative proposals based on the "National Energy Policy." The House of Representatives has passed legislation containing many of the elements of this National Energy Policy. That legislation and related energy policy legislative proposals are still pending.

The Bush Administration's Failure to Divulge Cheney Energy Task Force Information

24. The defendants have refused to provide information to Congress, the General Accounting Office or the public (including the Sierra Club) concerning the names of non-federal employees who participated in the activities of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups, or details about the number of meetings such individuals attended, the agendas of each meeting, the purpose and scope of the meeting(s), the topics on which factual information or policy advice was sought, and whether conflicts of interest were properly addressed at each meeting.

REV_00264488

25. Throughout the spring and summer of 2001, and continuing to the present, Congressional leaders and the General Accounting Office (GAO) have sought to obtain information from the Cheney Energy Task Force and its members concerning the activities and membership of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. Representatives Henry Waxman and John Dingell, GAO Comptroller General David Walker and GAO General Counsel Anthony Gamboa have requested access to Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Group information, corresponding numerous times with Vice President Cheney, Cheney Energy Task Force Executive Director Andrew Lundquist, and Counsel to the Vice President David Addington.

26. The Vice President, Mr. Lundquist, and Mr. Addington have failed to provide the information requested by Representatives Waxman and Dingell and the GAO.

27. On or about January 16, 2002, Representative Henry Waxman issued a report detailing how the Cheney Energy Task Force's final report advocated energy policies favoring private companies whose representatives participated in the activities of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

28. The Sierra Club has corresponded with the defendants requesting information relating to activities of the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups including, but not limited to, the involvement of non-federal employees. Defendants have failed to provide this information to the Sierra Club. The Sierra Club intends to use this information to educate its members and, on behalf of its members, to participate actively in the ongoing national debate over energy policy, including but not limited to specific legislative proposals pending in Congress.

REV_00264489

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF
(Violations of FACA / Mandamus)

29. The Sierra Club incorporates by reference the allegations of the preceding paragraphs of this Complaint.

30. The Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups are advisory committees as defined under FACA.

31. The defendants have violated FACA as follows:

a. By failing to open each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to the public. (Violation of FACA § 10(a)(1).)

b. By failing to publish timely notice of each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups in the Federal Register. (Violation of FACA § 10(a)(2).)

c. By failing to allow the Sierra Club and other interested persons to attend, appear before, or file statements with the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA § 10(a)(3).)

d. By failing to make available for public inspection and copying the records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendices, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents which were made available to or prepared for or by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA § 10(b).)

REV_00264490

e. By failing to keep detailed minutes of each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups, certified as accurate, that contain a record of the persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA § 10(c).)

f. By establishing the Task Force Sub-Groups without specific authorization by statute or by the President and without a determination, published in the Federal Register, that establishing the Task Force Sub-Groups is in the public interest. (Violation of FACA § 9(a).)

g. By allowing the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to meet and take action without filing an advisory committee charter containing the information required by FACA. (Violation of FACA § 9(c).)

32. The defendants have a nondiscretionary duty to comply with the procedural requirements of FACA including but not limited to those set forth in the preceding paragraph as items (a) through (g).

33. This Court has jurisdiction to compel the defendants to perform a nondiscretionary duty pursuant to the Mandamus and Venue Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1361.

SECOND CLAIM FOR RELIEF
(Violations of FACA / Administrative Procedure Act)

34. The Sierra Club incorporates by reference the allegations of the preceding paragraphs of this Complaint.

REV_00264491

35. By violating FACA as set forth in paragraph 31, the agency defendants have acted arbitrarily and capriciously and not in accordance with law, and without observance of procedure required by law, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) and § 706(2)(D).

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

36. The Sierra Club prays for relief and judgment as follows:

A. A declaration that the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups are advisory committees under FACA and must comply with all requirements of FACA, 5 U.S.C. Appendix 2, and other applicable laws.

B. A declaration that the defendants have violated FACA in the following ways:

i. Defendants violated section 10(a)(1) of FACA by failing to open each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to the public.

ii. Defendants violated section 10(a)(2) of FACA by failing to publish timely notice of each meeting of the Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups in the Federal Register.

iii. Defendants violated section 10(a)(3) of FACA by failing to allow the Sierra Club and other interested persons to attend, appear before, or file statements with the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

iv. Defendants violated section 10(b) of FACA by failing to make available for public inspection and copying the records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendices, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents which were made available to or prepared for or by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

v. Defendants violated section 10(c) of FACA by failing to keep detailed minutes of each meeting of the Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups, certified as accurate, that contain a record of the persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

vi. Defendants violated section 9(a) of FACA by establishing the Task Force Sub-Groups without specific authorization by statute or by the President and without a determination, published in the Federal Register, that establishing the sub-groups is in the public interest.

vii. Defendants violated section 9(c) of FACA by allowing the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to meet and take action without filing an advisory committee charter containing the information required by section 9(c) of FACA.

C. A declaration that the defendants have failed to perform a nondiscretionary duty to comply with the procedural requirements of FACA including those set forth in the preceding paragraph as items (i) through (vii).

D. A declaration that each violation of FACA described above as items (i) through (vii) in paragraph B is arbitrary and capricious and not in accordance with law, and without observance of procedure required by law, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) and (D).

E. A permanent injunction prohibiting the defendants from convening, conducting or holding any activities of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups that are not in full compliance with sections 5, 9 and 10(a)-(c) of FACA.

F. A permanent injunction ordering the defendants to provide to the Sierra Club, within ten working days and at no cost to the Sierra Club, a full and complete copy of all records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendixes, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents which were made available to or prepared for or by the Cheney Energy Task Force or Task Force Sub-Groups, irrespective of whether any such document otherwise is or could be exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2), (5) or (7)-(9).

G. A permanent injunction ordering the defendants to prepare and deliver to plaintiff, within 10 working days, detailed minutes of each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups, certified as accurate, that contain a record of the persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups.

H. An award to the Sierra Club of its costs of suit.

I. An award of such other relief as this Court deems appropriate.

DATED: January 25, 2002.

Respectfully submitted,

Alex Levinson

Patrick Gallagher
Alex Levinson
Sierra Club
Attorneys of Record

REV_00264494

CERTIFICATION OF INTERESTED PARTIES OR ENTITIES

Pursuant to General Order No. 48, the undersigned certifies that as of this date, there is no such interest to report.

Dated: January 25, 2002

Alex Levinson

Patrick Gallagher
Alex Levinson
Joanne Spalding
Sierra Club
Attorneys of Record

REV_00264495

70	Filed: 04/25/2002 Entered: 04/25/2002 Terminated: 04/25/2002	Motion for Leave to File Excess Pages
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to File Excess Pages by Andrew Lundquist and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Buchholz, David)
71	Filed: 04/26/2002 Entered: 04/26/2002	Amicus Curiae Appearance
	Docket Text: (ENTERED IN ERROR)Amicus Curiae APPEARANCE entered on behalf of JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1))(Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 4/29/2002 (td,).
72	Filed: 04/26/2002 Entered: 04/26/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [34], [55] by Andrew Lundquist and filed by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Buchholz, David)
73	Filed: 04/29/2002 Entered: 04/29/2002	Reply to opposition to Motion
	Docket Text: REPLY to opposition to motion re [34] Amicus Brief filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1))(Orfanedes, Paul)
74	Filed: 04/29/2002 Entered: 04/29/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER moving hearing.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 4/29/2002. (lcegs2,)
75	Filed: 05/21/2002 Entered: 05/21/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER that there will be no oral argument by individual private defendants at May 23, 2002 hearing.Signed by Judge Emmet. G. Sullivan on 5/21/2002. (lcegs2,)
76	Filed: 05/21/2002 Entered: 05/21/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER setting forth questions to be addressed at hearing.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 5/21/2002. (lcegs2,)
77	Filed: 05/22/2002 Entered: 05/22/2002	Attorney Appearance
	Docket Text: ATTORNEY APPEARANCE. (Gallagher, Patrick)
--	Filed: 05/23/2002 Entered: 05/24/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 5/23/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan; chambers to electronically issue order (Court Reporter Gordon Slodysko.) (clv,)

11

REV_00264379

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

January 29, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT
THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY
THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR
THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE
THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE
THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION
THE SECRETARY OF ENERGY
THE DIRECTOR OF THE FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY
THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY
THE ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT AND DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF FOR POLICY
THE ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR ECONOMIC POLICY
THE ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUBJECT: National Energy Policy Development Group

One of the greatest challenges facing the private sector and Federal, State, and local governments is ensuring that energy resources are available to meet the needs of our citizens and our economy. To help address this challenge, I am asking the Vice President to lead the development of a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and government at all levels, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy for the future. Accordingly, I direct as follows:

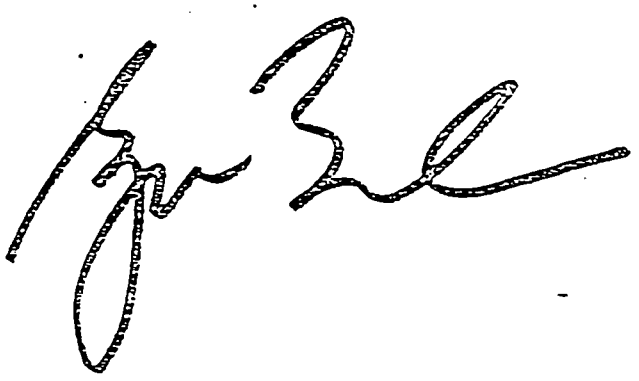
1. Establishment. There is hereby established within the Executive Office of the President an Energy Policy Development Group, consisting of the following officers of the Federal Government: the Vice President, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Transportation, Secretary of Energy, Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy, Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, and Assistant to the President for

Attachment - 117
Action to Dismiss
(PDC No. 150(R)/550)

REV_00264496

Intergovernmental Affairs. The Vice President may also invite the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to participate. The Vice President may invite the participation of the Secretary of State when the work of the Energy Policy Development Group involves international affairs and, as appropriate, other officers of the Federal Government. The Vice President shall preside at meetings of the Energy Policy Development Group, shall direct its work, and may establish subordinate working groups to assist the Energy Policy Development Group in its work.

2. Mission. The mission of the Energy Policy Development Group shall be to develop a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate Federal, State, and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy. In carrying out this mission, the Energy Policy Development Group's functions shall be to gather information, deliberate, and, as specified in this memorandum, make recommendations to the President. Its activities shall not supplant the authority and responsibility of State and local governments for handling energy production, purchase, and distribution difficulties.



3. Reports. The Energy Policy Development Group should submit reports to me as follows: (a) in the near-term, an assessment of the difficulties experienced by the private sector, and State and local governments in ensuring that local and regional energy needs are met, and (b) as soon thereafter as practicable, a report setting forth a recommended national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate State and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy for the future. The recommended national energy policy should take into consideration, among other things, (i) the growing demand for energy, locally, regionally, and nationally, in the United States and in the world, (ii) the potential for local, regional, or national disruptions in energy supplies or distribution, and (iii) the need for responsible policies to protect the environment and promote conservation, and (iv) the need for modernization of energy generation, supply, and transmission infrastructure.

4. Funding. The Department of Energy shall, to the maximum extent permitted by law and consistent with the need for funding determined by the Vice President after consultation with the Secretary of Energy, make funds appropriated to the Department of Energy available to pay the costs of personnel to support the activities of the Energy Policy Development Group. If a situation arises in which Department of Energy appropriations are not available for a category of expenses of the Energy Policy Development Group, the Vice President or his designee should submit to me a proposal for use, consistent with applicable law, of the minimum necessary portion of any appropriation available to the President to meet the unanticipated need. The Vice President may also obtain, through the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, such assistance from the National Economic Council staff as the Vice President deems necessary.

REV_00264497

5. Termination. The Energy Policy Development Group shall terminate no later than the end of fiscal year 2001.

cc: Secretary of State
Chairman, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

REV_00264498

78	Filed: 05/23/2002 Entered: 05/23/2002	Order on Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: ORDERSigned by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 5/23/2002. (lcegs2,)
78	Filed: 05/23/2002 Entered: 05/23/2002	Order on Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: ORDERSigned by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 5/23/2002. (lcegs2,)
78	Filed: 05/23/2002 Entered: 05/23/2002	Order on Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: ORDERSigned by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 5/23/2002. (lcegs2,)
79	Filed: 05/28/2002 Entered: 05/28/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE of Praecipe by SIERRA CLUB (Gallagher, Patrick)
80	Filed: 05/28/2002 Entered: 05/28/2002	Amended Complaint
	Docket Text: AMENDED COMPLAINT Second. Filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1# (2) Exhibit 2# (3) Exhibit 3# (4) Exhibit 4# (5) Exhibit 5# (6) Exhibit 6# (7) Exhibit 7# (8) Exhibit 8# (9) Exhibit 9# (10) Exhibit 10# (11) Exhibit 11)(Orfanedes, Paul)
81	Filed: 05/29/2002 Entered: 05/29/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 05/29/2002. (lcegs2,)
82	Filed: 05/29/2002 Entered: 05/29/2002 Terminated: 06/17/2002	Motion for Leave to File
	Docket Text: First MOTION for Leave to File Second Amended Complaint by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Appendix Second Amended Complaint# (2) Exhibit 1# (3) Exhibit 2# (4) Exhibit 3# (5) Exhibit 4# (6) Exhibit 5# (7) Exhibit 6# (8) Exhibit 7# (9) Exhibit 8# (10) Exhibit 9# (11) Exhibit 10# (12) Exhibit 11)(Orfanedes, Paul)
83	Filed: 05/31/2002 Entered: 05/31/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 5/31/2002. (lcegs2)
84	Filed: 06/03/2002 Entered: 06/03/2002 Terminated: 07/11/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss and Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Motion by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Buchholz, David)
87	Filed: 06/04/2002 Entered: 06/10/2002	Transcript
	Docket Text: TRANSCRIPT for dates May 23, 2002. (td,)

85	Filed: 06/07/2002 Entered: 06/07/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [84] Motion to Dismiss and Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Motion filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
86	Filed: 06/10/2002 Entered: 06/10/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE of Withdrawal of Appearance by Aaron Isherwood by SIERRA CLUB (Gallagher, Patrick)
88	Filed: 06/11/2002 Entered: 06/11/2002 Terminated: 06/17/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File Answer
	Docket Text: Unopposed MOTION for Extension of Time to File Answer to Sierra Club Complaint by Andrew Lundquist and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, RICHARD CHENEY, DONALD EVANS, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN. (Buchholz, David)
89	Filed: 06/17/2002 Entered: 06/17/2002	Order on Motion for Leave to File
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to File [82] Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 6/17/2002. (lcegs2,)
90	Filed: 06/17/2002 Entered: 06/17/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to Answer
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Extension of Time to Answer [88].Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 6/17/2002. (lcegs2,)
91	Filed: 06/17/2002 Entered: 06/17/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE OF SUBSTITUTION OF COUNSEL, by ANDREW LUNDQUIST and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III (Paisner, Jennifer)
92	Filed: 07/11/2002 Entered: 07/11/2002	Memorandum & Opinion
	Docket Text: MEMORANDUM OPINION. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 7/11/2002. (lcegs2,)
93	Filed: 07/11/2002 Entered: 07/11/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 7/11/2002. (lcegs2,)
94	Filed: 07/19/2002 Entered: 07/19/2002	Status Report
	Docket Text: STATUS REPORT - DISCOVERY PLAN by SIERRA CLUB. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit A# (2) Exhibit B)(Gallagher, Patrick)

REV_00264381

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
95	Filed: 07/25/2002 Entered: 07/25/2002	Response to Document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE (ANSWER) to [80] JUDICIAL WATCH'S SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Paisner, Jennifer) Modified on 7/25/2002 (jeb,).
96	Filed: 07/26/2002 Entered: 07/26/2002 Terminated: 07/26/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: Unopposed MOTION for Extension of Time to File Objections to Plaintiffs' Proposed Discovery Plan by Andrew Lundquist and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Paisner, Jennifer)
97	Filed: 07/26/2002 Entered: 07/26/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: ORDER granting in part Motion for Extension of Time to File [96] and setting forth deadlines. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 7/26/2002. (lcegs2,)
98	Filed: 07/29/2002 Entered: 07/29/2002	Response to Document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to [94] And Objections to Plaintiffs' Proposed Discovery Plan by Andrew Lundquist and by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Paisner, Jennifer)
99	Filed: 08/01/2002 Entered: 08/01/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER rescheduling time of Status Conference on 8/2/2002 to 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1, Judge Sullivan.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 8/1/2002. (lcegs2,)
99	Filed: 08/01/2002 Entered: 08/01/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: ORDER rescheduling time of Status Conference on 8/2/2002 to 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1, Judge Sullivan.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 8/1/2002. (lcegs2,)
100	Filed: 08/01/2002 Entered: 08/01/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE Plaintiff's Reply in Support of their Proposed Discovery Plan by JUDICAL WATCH, INC., (Orfanedes, Paul)
--	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/06/2002	Status Conference

REV_00264382

	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Status Conference held on 8/2/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Status Conference set for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)
--	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/06/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Status Conference held on 8/2/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Status Conference set for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)
101	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/02/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER approving plaintiffs' proposed discovery plan and scheduling Status Conference for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 8/2/2002. (lcegs2,)
101	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/02/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: ORDER approving plaintiffs' proposed discovery plan and scheduling Status Conference for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 8/2/2002. (lcegs2,)
102	Filed: 08/05/2002 Entered: 08/06/2002	Transcript
	Docket Text: TRANSCRIPT for dates August 2, 2002 by Court Reporter: Frank J. Rangus. (td,)
103	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN. (Millet, Thomas)
104	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from JudicialWatch/Sierra Club by CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN. (Millet, Thomas)
105	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/ Sierra Club by JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH. (Millet, Thomas)
106	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH. (Millet, Thomas)
107	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by PAUL O'NEILL. (Millet, Thomas)
108	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Millet, Thomas)

15

REV_00264383

109	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial watch/Sierra Club by ANN M. VENEMAN. (Millet, Thomas)
110	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by ANN M. VENEMAN. (Millet, Thomas)
111	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by PAUL O'NEILL. (Millet, Thomas)
112	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by PAUL O'NEILL. (Millet, Thomas)
113	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by NORMAN MINETA. (Millet, Thomas)
114	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by NORMAN MINETA. (Millet, Thomas)
115	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by DONALD EVANS. (Millet, Thomas)
116	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by DONALD EVANS. (Millet, Thomas)
117	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial watch/Sierra Club, by DONALD EVANS. (Millet, Thomas)
118	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by COLIN POWELL. (Millet, Thomas)
119	Filed: 09/03/2002 Entered: 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery

REV_00264384

	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
120	Filed: Entered: Terminated:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002 10/17/2002	Motion for Protective Order
	Docket Text: MOTION for Protective Order by RICHARD CHENEY. (Millet, Thomas)

Doc. No.	Dates		Description
121	Filed: Entered: Terminated:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002 10/17/2002	Motion for Protective Order
	Docket Text: MOTION for Protective Order Memorandum in support by RICHARD CHENEY. (Millet, Thomas)
122	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Affidavit
	Docket Text: AFFIDAVIT re [120], [121] by Karen Knutsen by RICHARD CHENEY. (Millet, Thomas)
123	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by GALE NORTON. (Millet, Thomas)
124	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,. (Millet, Thomas) Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,). Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,).
125	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,. (Millet, Thomas) Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,). Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,).
126	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by COLIN POWELL. (Millet, Thomas) Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,). Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,).
127	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club by SPENCER ABRAHAM. (Millet, Thomas) Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,). Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,).
128	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Response to Discovery
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Discovery Request from Judicial Watch/Sierra Club, by SPENCER ABRAHAM. (Millet, Thomas) Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,). Modified on 9/4/2002 (td,).
129	Filed: Entered:	09/03/2002 09/03/2002	Order

17

REV_00264385

INDEX TO APPENDIX

	Page
Docket Sheet, No. 01-1530-EGS (D.D.C.)	1
Docket Sheet, No. 02-0631-EGS (D.D.C.)	25
Complaint, No. 01-1530-EGS (D.D.C.) (with attachments)	27
Complaint, No. 02-0631-EGS (D.D.C.)	102
Presidential Memorandum of January 29, 2001 (attachment to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss)	117
July 11, 2002, Opinion	120
July 11, 2002, Order	199
August 2, 2002, Transcript of Hearing	203
August 2, 2002 Order	238
Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents	241
Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories	250
Declaration of Karen Y. Knutson	257
September 9, 2002, Order	263
October 17, 2002, Transcript of Hearing	266
October 17, 2002 Order	313
October 31, 2002, Transcript of Hearing	316
November 1, 2002 Order	364
Certificate of Service

REV_00264368

	Docket Text: ORDER. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 3, 2002. (lcegs1)
130	Filed: 09/04/2002 Entered: 09/04/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 4, 2002. (lcegs1,)
131	Filed: 09/05/2002 Entered: 09/05/2002	Answer to Interrogatories
	Docket Text: ANSWER to Interrogatories from Judicial watch/Sierra Club by JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH. (Millet, Thomas)
132	Filed: 09/06/2002 Entered: 09/06/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to any document re [120] Preliminary Response filed by SIERRA CLUB. (Gallagher, Patrick)
133	Filed: 09/06/2002 Entered: 09/06/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [120], [121] filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1# (2) Exhibit 2)(Orfanedes, Paul)
--	Filed: 09/09/2002 Entered: 09/09/2002	Set/Reset Hearings
	Docket Text: Status hearing set for September 13, 2002 cancelled. Status hearing set for 9/30/2002 at 11:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(lcegs2,)
134	Filed: 09/09/2002 Entered: 09/09/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [120], [121] for a Protective Order filed by RICHARD CHENEY. (Millet, Thomas)
135	Filed: 09/09/2002 Entered: 09/09/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 9, 2002. (lcegs1)
136	Filed: 09/10/2002 Entered: 09/10/2002 Terminated: 09/11/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Motion to Compel by SIERRA CLUB. (Gallagher, Patrick)
137	Filed: 09/11/2002 Entered: 09/11/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to any document re [136] Sierra Club Motion for Extension of time to file motions to compel filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
138	Filed: 09/11/2002 Entered: 09/11/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Extension of Time to File [136]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 11, 2002. (lcegs1)
139	Filed: 09/16/2002 Entered: 09/16/2002	Memorandum in Opposition

REV_00264386

	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [120] Supplemental Opposition filed by SIERRA CLUB. (Gallagher, Patrick)
140	Filed: Entered:	09/16/2002 09/16/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [120], [121] for protective order filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
141	Filed: Entered:	09/23/2002 09/23/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [121] Motion for Protective Order filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
142	Filed: Entered:	09/30/2002 09/30/2002	Motion to Compel
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR..... MOTION to Compel by SIERRA CLUB. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit A - K)(Gallagher, Patrick) Modified on 9/30/2002 (adc,).
143	Filed: Entered:	09/30/2002 09/30/2002	Motion to Compel
	Docket Text: MOTION to Compel CORRECTED by SIERRA CLUB. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Declaration of Sanjay Narayan in Support of Motion to Compel# (2) Exhibit Exhibits A - K to Declaration of Sanjay Narayan in Support of Motion to Compel)(Gallagher, Patrick)
144	Filed: Entered:	09/30/2002 09/30/2002	Motion to Compel
	Docket Text: MOTION to Compel And Motion for order to Show Cause by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
145	Filed: Entered:	09/30/2002 09/30/2002	Motion to Compel
	Docket Text: MOTION to Compel Motion to Shorten Time to Respond to Motion to Compel by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit)(Orfanedes, Paul)
146	Filed: Entered:	10/02/2002 10/02/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [145] Motion to Shorten Time filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
--	Filed: Entered:	10/04/2002 10/04/2002	Set/Reset Hearings
	Docket Text: Set/Reset Hearings: Omnibus Hearing set for 10/10/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1. (lcegs1)
147	Filed: Entered:	10/04/2002 10/04/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 4, 2002. (lcegs1)
148	Filed: Entered:	10/08/2002 10/08/2002	Scheduling Order
	Docket Text: SCHEDULING ORDER: Omnibus Hearing set for 10/17/2002 10:00 AM. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 8, 2002. (lcegs2)

REV_00264387

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
149	Filed: 10/11/2002 Entered: 10/11/2002 Terminated: 10/11/2002	Motion for Miscellaneous Relief
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR. . . .MOTION motion for leave to file supplemental memorandum re [144] Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Motion to Compel and for Order to Show Cause by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 10/15/2002 (td,).
150	Filed: 10/11/2002 Entered: 10/11/2002 Terminated: 10/11/2002	Motion for Miscellaneous Relief
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR. . . .MOTION for Leave to File Supplement to Motion for Order to Show Cause re [144] Motion to Compel and for Order to Show Cause by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 10/15/2002 (td,).
151	Filed: 10/11/2002 Entered: 10/11/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR. . . .NOTICE re [149] Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Compel and for Order to Show Cause by JUDICAL WATCH, INC., (Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 10/15/2002 (td,).
152	Filed: 10/15/2002 Entered: 10/15/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR. . . .NOTICE re [149] of Filing Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended-Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Compel and Motion for Order to Show Cause Why Defendants Should Not Be Held in Contempt (WITH EXHIBITS) by JUDICAL WATCH, INC., (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1# (2) Exhibit 2# (3) Exhibit 3# (4) Exhibit 4)(Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 10/18/2002 (td,).
153	Filed: 10/16/2002 Entered: 10/16/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: ENTERED IN ERROR. . . .NOTICE re [152] Praecipe with Affidavit of Larry Klayman in Support of Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended-Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel and Motion for Order to Show Cause by JUDICAL WATCH, INC., (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Affidavit of Larry Klayman)(Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 10/18/2002 (td,).
--	Filed: 10/17/2002 Entered: 10/17/2002	Omnibus Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Omnibus Hearing held on 10/17/2002 before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan Defendants shall produce non-privilege documents and privilege log by 11/5/02; Motion for reconsideration, denied; Motion for protective order, denied; Oral motion by defendants to extend time to 10/28/02 to respond to motion to compel, granted; defendants shall file a motion to stay by 12:00 noon on 10/21/02; response due 10/24/02 and reply due 10/25/02; Motion Hearing set for 10/31/2002 01:00 PM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Kay Moomey.)(bm)
--	Filed: 10/17/2002 Entered: 10/17/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Omnibus Hearing held on 10/17/2002 before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan Defendants shall produce non-privilege documents and privilege log by 11/5/02; Motion for reconsideration, denied; Motion for protective order, denied; Oral motion by defendants to extend time to 10/28/02 to respond to motion to compel, granted; defendants shall file a motion to stay by 12:00 noon on 10/21/02; response due 10/24/02 and reply due 10/25/02; Motion Hearing set for 10/31/2002 01:00 PM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Kay Moomey.)(bm)

REV_00264388

154	Filed: Entered:	10/17/2002 10/17/2002	Order on Motion for Protective Order
	Docket Text: ORDER denying Motion for Protective Order [120], denying Motion for Protective Order [121], setting briefing schedule and hearing date for motion to stay. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 17, 2002.(lcegs2)
154	Filed: Entered:	10/17/2002 10/17/2002	Order on Motion for Protective Order
	Docket Text: ORDER denying Motion for Protective Order [120], denying Motion for Protective Order [121], setting briefing schedule and hearing date for motion to stay. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 17, 2002.(lcegs2)
155	Filed: Entered:	10/18/2002 10/18/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER granting defendants' motion for extension of time to respond to plaintiffs' motions to compel. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 18, 2002. (lcegs2)
156	Filed: Entered: Terminated:	10/18/2002 10/18/2002 10/21/2002	Motion for Miscellaneous Relief
	Docket Text: MOTION Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Motion for Leave to File Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended-Supplemental Memorandum by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1 -- Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended-Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Compel and Motion for Order to Show Cause Why defendants Should Not be Held In Contempt, and for Other Relief# (2) Exhibit Praecipe Including Affidavit of Larry Klayman)(Orfanedes, Paul)
--	Filed: Entered:	10/21/2002 10/21/2002	Order on Motion for Miscellaneous Relief
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Leave to File Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Amended-Supplemental Memorandum. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 21, 2002. (lcegs2). Modified on 10/22/2002 (lcegs2).
157	Filed: Entered:	10/21/2002 10/21/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [156] Judicial Watch's Motion for Leave to File Amended-Supplemental Memorandum in Support of Motion to Compel and for Order to Show Cause filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
158	Filed: Entered: Terminated:	10/21/2002 10/21/2002 11/01/2002	Motion to Stay
	Docket Text: MOTION to Stay Pending Appeal by Andrew Lundquist and by JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, LARRY LINDSEY, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Paisner, Jennifer)

REV_00264389

159	Filed: 10/23/2002 Entered: 10/23/2002	Motion for Leave to Appeal
	Docket Text: MOTION for Leave to Appeal Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. sec. 1292(b) and for Expedited Consideration Of This Motion by Andrew Lundquist and by JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, LARRY LINDSEY, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Paisner, Jennifer)
160	Filed: 10/23/2002 Entered: 10/23/2002	Motion for Leave to Appeal
	Docket Text: Amended MOTION for Leave to Appeal Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. sec. 1292(b) and for Expedited Consideration Of This Motion by Andrew Lundquist and by JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, LARRY LINDSEY, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Paisner, Jennifer)
161	Filed: 10/24/2002 Entered: 10/24/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [158] Stay Pending Appeal filed by SIERRA CLUB. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Attachment)(Gallagher, Patrick)
162	Filed: 10/24/2002 Entered: 10/24/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [158] for stay filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
170	Filed: 10/24/2002 Entered: 10/30/2002	Transcript
	Docket Text: TRANSCRIPT for dates October 17, 2002 Court Reporter: Katherine K. Moomey, Miller Reporting. (td,)
163	Filed: 10/25/2002 Entered: 10/25/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in support of motion re [158] motion for stay filed by LARRY LINDSEY. (Millet, Thomas)
164	Filed: 10/28/2002 Entered: 10/28/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [143], [144] motion to compel filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)
165	Filed: 10/28/2002 Entered: 10/28/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE re [164] of paper filing of defendants' declarations and attachments by all defendants (Millet, Thomas)
166	Filed: 10/28/2002 Entered: 10/28/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER setting forth instructions to counsel. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on October 28, 2002. (lcegs2)
167	Filed: 10/29/2002 Entered: 10/29/2002	Response to Document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to [166] Order of October 28 by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Millet, Thomas)

REV_00264390

168	Filed: 10/30/2002 Entered: 10/30/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to any document re [158] Plaintiff Judicial Watch's Reply to Defendants' Response to Order of October 28, 2002 filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1)(Orfanedes, Paul)
169	Filed: 10/30/2002 Entered: 10/30/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to any document re [158] Order of October 28, 2002 filed by SIERRA CLUB. (Gallagher, Patrick)
--	Filed: 10/31/2002 Entered: 11/01/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 10/31/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Motion Hearing resumes 11/1/2002 11:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Bryan Wayne.) (clv,)
--	Filed: 10/31/2002 Entered: 11/01/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 10/31/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Motion Hearing resumes 11/1/2002 11:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Bryan Wayne.) (clv,)
171	Filed: 10/31/2002 Entered: 10/31/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE of Appearance by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP (Millet, Thomas)

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
--	Filed: 11/01/2002 Entered: 11/01/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing resumes 11/1/2002 at 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1. before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan() (clv,)
--	Filed: 11/01/2002 Entered: 11/01/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Ruling held on 11/1/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivani; order to be issued electronically (Court Reporter Jackie Wood, Miller.) (clv,)
172	Filed: 11/01/2002 Entered: 11/01/2002	Order on Motion to Stay
	Docket Text: ORDER denying Motion to Stay [158]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on November 1, 2002. (lcegs2)
173	Filed: 11/06/2002 Entered: 11/06/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in opposition to motion re [160] leave to appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1292(b) and for expedited consideration of this motion filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)

23

REV_00264391

PACER Service Center
Transaction Receipt
11/06/2002 15:46:21
PACER Login:	dj0009	Client Code:	nepdg
Description:	HistDocQry	Case Number:	1-01-01530-EGS
Billable Pages:	14	Cost:	0.98

21

REV_00264392

1-02-00631-EGS SIERRA CLUB v. CHENEY et al
Emmet G. Sullivan, presiding
Date filed: 04/04/2002 Date of last filing: 08/02/2002

History

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
1	Filed: 04/04/2002 Entered: 04/05/2002	Remark
	Docket Text: ORIGINAL FILE and certified copy of transfer order and docket sheet received from the Northern District of California San Francisco Division cas number 3:02-cv-00462. (td,)
4	Filed: 04/04/2002 Entered: 07/26/2002	Complaint
	Docket Text: COMPLAINT against all defendants (Filing fee $0). Filed by SIERRA CLUB. (jeb,)
2	Filed: 04/05/2002 Entered: 04/05/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER consolidating Civil Action No. 01-1530 (EGS) and Civil Action No. 02-631 (EGS) and ordering all future pleadings in these consolidated cases to be filed under No. 01-1530.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 4/5/2002. (lcegs2,)
--	Filed: 05/23/2002 Entered: 05/24/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 5/23/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan ; chambers to electronically issue order(Court Reporter Gordon Slodysko.) (clv,)
3	Filed: 07/25/2002 Entered: 07/26/2002	Response to Document
	Docket Text: ANSWER to complaint by SPENCER ABRAHAM, RICHARD CHENEY, DONALD EVANS, ANDREW LUNDQUIST, NORMAN Y. MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL H. O'NEILL, ANN VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN. (td,) Modified on 7/26/2002 (td,).
--	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/06/2002	Status Conference
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Status Conference held on 8/2/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Status Conference set for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)
--	Filed: 08/02/2002 Entered: 08/06/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Status Conference held on 8/2/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan Status Conference set for 9/13/2002 10:00 AM in Courtroom 1.(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)

25

REV_00264393

PACER Service Center
Transaction Receipt
11/06/2002 16:03:24
PACER Login:	dj0009	Client Code:	nepdg
Description:	HistDocQry	Case Number:	1-02-00631-EGS
Billable Pages:	1	Cost:	0.07

26

REV_00264394

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, SW, Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024

Plaintiff,

v.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP
Office of the Vice President
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501

and

THE HON. RICHARD B. CHENEY
Vice President of the United States of America
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501

and

PAUL O' NEILL,
Secretary of the Treasury
1500 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20220

and

GAIL NORTON,
Secretary of the Interior
1849 C Street, NW
Washington, DC 20240

and

SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

Civil Action No. 01-1530 (EGS)

27

REV_00264395

1-01-01530-EGS JUDICAL WATCH, INC., et al v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP et al
Emmet G. Sullivan, presiding
Date filed: 07/16/2001 Date of last filing: 11/06/2002

History

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
--	Filed: 07/16/2001 Entered: 07/30/2001	Summons Issued as to USA
	Docket Text: SUMMONS (3) Issued as to NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP , U.S. Attorney and U.S. Attorney General (jeb,)
1	Filed: 07/16/2001 Entered: 07/25/2001	Complaint
	Docket Text: COMPLAINT against NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP (Filing fee $150). Filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (mjk,)
2	Filed: 07/16/2001 Entered: 07/25/2001	Certificate of Disclosure - Corporate Affiliations/Financial Interests
	Docket Text: LCvR 26.1 - CERTIFICATE OF DISCLOSURE of Corporate Affiliations and Financial Interests (mjk,)
3	Filed: 08/08/2001 Entered: 08/08/2001	Order
	Docket Text: PRELIMINARY ELECTRONIC CASE FILING ORDER . Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on August 8, 2001. (GK,)
--	Filed: 08/16/2001 Entered: 08/22/2001	Set Deadlines
	Docket Text: D's Motion for Extension of Time to respond to plaintiff's Freedom of Information Act cause of action is granted. Responses due by 9/17/2001.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on August 22, 2001. (GK,)
4	Filed: 08/16/2001 Entered: 08/24/2001 Terminated: 08/24/2001	Motion for Extension of Time to File Answer
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Answer by 9/17/01 by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (jeb,)
5	Filed: 08/16/2001 Entered: 09/14/2001	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Defendant's Motion for Extension of Time to September 17, 2001; re [4]. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 13, 2001. (GK,)
7	Filed: 09/13/2001 Entered: 09/18/2001 Terminated: 09/18/2001	Motion for Extension of Time to File Answer
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Answer the complaint by 10/17/01 by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (jeb,)

REV_00264369

ANN M. VENEMAN,
Secretary of Agriculture
1400 Independence Avenue, SW
Washington, D.C. 20250,

and

DONALD EVANS,
Secretary of Commerce
14th Street and Constitution Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20230

and

NORMAN MINETA,
Secretary of Transportation
400 Seventh Street, SW
Washington, DC 20590

and

SPENCER ABRAHAM,
Secretary of Energy
Forrestal Building
1000 Independence Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20585

and

COLIN POWELL,
Secretary of State
Harry S. Truman Bldg.
2201 C Street, NW
Washington, DC 20520

and

JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH,
Director, Federal Emergency Management Agency
Federal Center Plaza
500 C Street, SW
Washington, DC 20472

and

CHRISTINE TODD WHITMAN,
Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency
1200 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20004

and

PATRICK H. WOOD, III,
Chairman, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission
888 First Street, NE
Washington, DC 20426

and

MITCHELL E. DANIELS, Jr.,
Director, Office of Management and Budget
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
17th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20503

and

JOSHUA BOLTON,
Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy
Executive Office of the President
1600 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20500

and

LARRY LINDSEY,
Assistant to the President for Economic Policy
Executive Office of the President
1600 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20500

and

REV_00264397

MARK RACICOT
c/o Republican National Committee
310 First Street, SE
Washington, DC 20003

and

HALEY BARBOUR
c/o Barbour, Griffith & Rodgers
1275 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20004

and

KENNETH LAY
Houston, Texas

and

THOMAS KUHN
c/o Edison Electric Institute
701 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20004

and

JOHN AND JANE DOE NOS. 1-99,
Certain Unknown Non-Federal Employees, and/or Members of the National Energy
Policy Development Group,

Defendants.

SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

Plaintiff, Judicial Watch, Inc., pursuant to the Court's Order of May 23, 2002, hereby files this second amended complaint for compliance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act, 5 U.S.C. App. 2 ("FACA"), the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 701 et seq. ("APA"), and the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 et seq. ("FOIA"). Plaintiff also seeks a writ of mandamus and a declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1361 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and

REV_00264398

2202, respectively. As grounds therefor, Plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc., ("JW") respectfully alleges as follows:

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

1. This court has jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (action arising under the laws of the United States), 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2) (United States as defendant), 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) (FOIA), 28 U.S.C. §1361 (mandamus), 5 U.S.C. § 701 (APA).

2. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

PARTIES

3. Plaintiff, whose principal place of business is 501 School Street, SW, Suite 725, Washington, D.C. 20024, is organized as a non-profit corporation under the laws of the District of Columbia. Plaintiff undertakes educational and other programs to promote and protect the public interest in matters of public concern. To this end, Plaintiff requested certain documents pursuant to the FACA and the FOIA and intends to disseminate the requested information and documents to its supporters and benefactors, government officials, appropriate news media, and to the American public at large. The information, access, and documents Plaintiff seeks are likely to contribute significantly to the public's understanding of the operations and activities of Defendants.

4. Defendant National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG") is an agency and entity of the United States Government. Defendant NEPDG was created by President George W. Bush and headed by Vice President Richard B. Cheney to develop a national energy plan. Defendant NEPDG has its principal place of business in Washington, DC. Defendant NEPDG has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

REV_00264399

5. Defendant Richard B. Cheney ("Cheney") is the Vice President of the United States. Defendant Cheney is the director of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

6. Defendant Paul O'Neill ("O'Neill") is Secretary of the Treasury. Defendant O'Neill is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

7. Defendant Gail Norton ("Norton") is Secretary of the Interior. Defendant Norton is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

8. Defendant Ann M. Veneman ("Veneman") is Secretary of Agriculture. Defendant Veneman is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

9. Defendant Donald Evans ("Evans") is Secretary of Commerce. Defendant Evans is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

10. Defendant Norman Mineta ("Mineta") is Secretary of Transportation. Defendant Mineta is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

11. Defendant Spencer Abraham ("Abraham") is Secretary of Energy. Defendant Abraham is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

12. Defendant Colin Powell ("Powell") is Secretary of State. Defendant Powell is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

13. Defendant Joseph M. Allbaugh ("Allbaugh") is the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Defendant Allbaugh is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

14. Christine Todd Whitman ("Whitman") is the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. Defendant Whitman is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

15. Patrick H. Wood, III, ("Wood") is the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Defendant Wood is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

16. Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr., ("Daniels") is the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. Defendant Daniels is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

17. Joshua Bolton ("Bolton") is Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy. Defendant Bolton is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

18. Larry Lindsey ("Lindsey") is Assistant to the President for Economic Policy. Defendant Lindsey is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

19. Mark Racicot currently is Chairman of the Republican National Committee, 310 First Street, S.E. , Washington, DC 20003 and has served as a lobbyist for Enron Corporation. On information and belief, Defendant Racicot is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

REV_00264401

20. Haley Barbour is a lobbyist for electric utilities at Barbour, Griffith & Rodgers, 1275 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20004. Defendant Barbour formerly served as Chairman of the Republican National Committee. On information and belief, Defendant Barbour is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

21. Kenneth Lay is the former Chairman of Enron Corporation ("Enron"), of Houston, Texas. On information and belief, Defendant Lay is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

22. Thomas Kuhn is the President of the Edison Electric Institute, 701 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20004. On information and belief, Defendant Kuhn is a member of NEPDG and has possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

23. John and Jane Does Nos. 1-99 are currently unknown, non-federal employees who are members of the NEPDG and have possession of the information and documents to which Plaintiff seeks access.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

24. On January 29, 2001, President Bush established the NEPDG, whose mission was to "develop a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate Federal, State and local government, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy." President Bush directed the NEPDG to "gather information, deliberate, and . . . make recommendations to the President."

25. On information and belief, non-federal employees, including Thomas Kuhn, Kenneth Lay, Marc Racicot, Haley Barbour, representatives of the Clean Power Group, and other private lobbyists (John and Jane Does 1-99), regularly attended and fully participated in non-public meetings of the NEPDG as if they were members of the NEPDG, and, in fact, were members of the NEPDG.

26. Specifically, non-federal employees representing special energy interests, who donated approximately $22.5 million into the Bush-Cheney 2000 presidential election campaign, have reportedly enjoyed nearly unfettered access to and close contact with the NEPDG, Vice President Cheney, and even President Bush himself. Thomas Kuhn, a leading Bush fundraiser and president of the Edison Electric Institute, reportedly met with Vice President Cheney. Kenneth Lay ("Lay"), the former CEO of the now bankrupt Enron and a friend of President Bush, had a dinner meeting with the President. See Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff, "Big Energy at the Table," Newsweek, May 14, 2001, attached hereto as Exhibit 1 at 18.

27. In March 2001, Lay reportedly also met with Defendant Cheney to discuss energy policy. See Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff, "A New Capitol Clash," Newsweek, February 11, 2002, attached as Exhibit 2. Bush administration officials subsequently admitted to five additional meetings between Enron officials and Vice President Cheney's staff in March 2001. Id. In addition to these six meetings in March 2001, a top aide to Defendant Cheney, Andrew Lundquist, met with members of the "Clean Power Group" -- a coalition of five power companies, including Enron. Id.

28. In April 2001, Lay also reportedly met with Defendant Cheney to discuss the Bush Administration's response to the California energy crisis. See David Lazarus, "Memo Details Cheney-Enron Links," San Francisco Chronicle, January 30, 2002, attached as Exhibit 3. During this meeting, Lay reportedly handed Cheney three page memorandum urging federal authorities to refrain from imposing price caps or other measures to stabilize electricity prices. Id. Recommendations from this memorandum subsequently became a part of the NEPDG's proposed energy plan. Id.

29. On May 3, 2001, former Montana Governor Marc Racicot and former Republican Party Chairman Haley Barbour, both of whom serve or have served as lobbyists for electric utilities, attended a NEPDG meeting chaired by Vice President Cheney. See Michael Weisskopf and Adam Zagorin, "Getting the Ear of Dick Cheney," Time, February 11, 2002, attached as Exhibit 4. At that time, Barbour also was involved heavily in fundrasing activities on behalf of President Bush. Id. Racicot currently is the Chairman of the Republican Party.

30. On May 4, 2001, David S. Addington, Counsel to Vice President Cheney, admitted in a letter to Reps. W.J. "Billy" Tauzin and Rep. John Dingell of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, and Reps. Dan Burton and Henry Waxman of the Committee on Government Reform, that during so-called "stakeholder meetings," staff members of NEPDG held "have met with many individuals who are not federal employees to gather information relevant" to the NEPDG's work. See May 4, 2001 Letter from David S. Addington, attached as Exhibit 5 (emphasis added). All of the NEPDG so-called "stake-holder meetings" with non-governmental parties are covered by the FACA and the FOIA.

31. Vice President Cheney has been evasive in describing the staffing and operations of the NEPDG. During a July 25, 2001 on the ABC television program "Nightline," Vice President Cheney admitted that the NEPDG met with members of private organizations and/or companies regarding energy policy, but failed to identify the names of those individuals:

[TED] KOPPEL: You've made reference to the enormous amount of experience that you bring to this job. So, I have to ask you, as someone who knows Washington as well as you do, and who knows that the one thing that drives Congress crazy, the one thing that drives the press crazy, the one thing that is always going to be trouble is secrecy.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: Well, why did you run your--your energy study, your energy meetings the way that you did? Why to this day haven't you revealed who participated in those meetings and what they had to tell you?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, that's simply not accurate, Ted. There's been this charge that it was run in secret. But it was run the same way we do everything else with respect to policy. Same way we make economic policy or education policy. It was a group of Cabinet officials and agency heads. This is the report we produced. We published thousands of them. It has not been secret. The folks that were responsible for putting it together are all listed right up here in the front. It's the Cabinet and the agency heads...

KOPPEL: What about the experts that you consulted? I mean, you--you know...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: But we didn't--I mean, there's--there was this allegation that somehow we did what the Clintons did back in '93 on health. We did not.

KOPPEL: Exactly.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: We were very sensitive to that and very careful of it. When you...

KOPPEL: Tell me where the--tell me where the difference is?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, the--it's when you bring in...

KOPPEL: What was different about what you did and what Hillary Clinton...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: ...outsiders and incorporate them in the policy-making process, that then certain requirements with respect to federal advisory committees kicks in and certain requirements have to be met. We didn't do that. We did this exactly the same way, for example, that we put together the economic policy or tax policy. And there's been this claim that it was done in secret, but it wasn't. It wasn't anymore secret than anything else we do.

9	Filed: 09/13/2001 Entered: 09/28/2001 Terminated: 10/04/2001	Motion for Extension of Time to File Answer
	Docket Text: (ENTERED IN ERROR) MOTION for Extension of Time to File Answer re [1] to the complaint until October 17, 2001 by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (mjk,) Modified on 10/4/2001 (jeb,).
6	Filed: 09/18/2001 Entered: 09/18/2001	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER denying defendant's motion to extend time to 10/17/01 to respond to the plaintiff's complaint.. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 16,2001. (jeb,)
8	Filed: 09/18/2001 Entered: 09/20/2001	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER granting defendants' Oral Motion for Reconsideration of Order Denying defendants' motion to extend time to 10/17/01 to respond to plaintiff's complaint. The Court will allow defendants to respond to plaintiff's complaint by no later than 10/17/01. Due to the unavailability of plaintiff's counsel on 9/19/01, the Court will grant leave to the plaintiff to file any objections to this extension of time by no later than 11/1/01. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on September 20, 2001. (GK,)
10	Filed: 10/17/2001 Entered: 10/18/2001 Terminated: 05/23/2002	Motion to Dismiss Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Attachments: # (1) Memorandum of Points and Authorities# (2) attachment(Memorandum of President Bush)(jeb,) Modified on 10/18/2001 (jeb,).
11	Filed: 10/31/2001 Entered: 11/05/2001 Terminated: 11/06/2001	Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: Unopposed MOTION for Extension of Time to File opposition to defendant's motion to dismiss to 11/7/01 by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (aet,)
--	Filed: 11/06/2001 Entered: 11/06/2001	Terminate Motions
	Docket Text: ORDER - Plaintiff's unopposed Motion for Extension of Time to File Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED. Plaintiff has untill November 7, 2001, to file the response to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. Defendant's Reply is due November 27, 2001. Motions [11] terminated. () (GK,)
12	Filed: 11/07/2001 Entered: 11/14/2001 Terminated: 11/14/2001	Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply
	Docket Text: Second MOTION for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply to defendant's motion to dismiss by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (td,) Modified on 3/1/2002 (td,). Modified on 3/1/2002 (jeb,).
13	Filed: 11/13/2001 Entered: 11/16/2001	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in Opposition to Motion re [10] to defendant's motion to dismiss filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit # (2) Exhibit # (3) Exhibit)(td,)

2

REV_00264370

KOPPEL: The inference that people have drawn--but, before I get to that, let me just ask you, what--what is different about what Hillary Clinton did with the health program from what you folks did with the energy policy?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: She brought in outsiders, people who were not government employees, who were not full-time...

KOPPEL: You didn't do that?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No.

KOPPEL: No outsiders?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, not as part of the deliberating pro--process.

KOPPEL: Well...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No, that's very important.

KOPPEL: ...are you finessing that just a little bit too finely?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No. No, you're mis--misreading what the statute says. There's a big difference. We meet all the time behind closed doors to make economic policy or to make education policy. Now, you may deal with outside groups. They may have points of view they want to represent. We heard from energy people. We heard from many environment people. We heard from consumer groups. I met with congressman and senators and governors. We heard from a broad variety of folks out there, but they were not in the meetings where we put together the policy and made recommendations to the president. That's the big difference.

KOPPEL: Isn't--isn't that a fine point?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That's a very important point.

KOPPEL: In other words, if we--if we have one meeting here...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: ...with a bunch of people, and because of your background and the president's background in the energy industry yourselves...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: ...the assumption is that you did consult with a lot of your pals in the--in the energy industry. If you consult with them in this room, and then you adjourn to the next room to make policy, that--that...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That's not the way it works.

KOPPEL: That satisfies the law?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That is--that is not the way it worked. In fact, we heard from a wide variety of different groups. But we did not trigger the statute that specifically provides for how you deal with advisory committees, for formally constituted advisory committee that's making policy, like the Social Security Commission, for example. There's a classic example of a group of outside people, not full-time government employees, who are meeting to deliberate and to come up with a policy recommendation. They meet in open session. The press is present. You don't do that when you sit down, for example, with the--the secretary of the treasury and the Council of Economic Advisers and director of OMB to make major budget decisions, or make...

KOPPEL: But why not just take the wind out of the sails of all your critics and say, 'Here's a list of the people we consulted'?

See Transcript of ABC News: Nightline dated July 25, 2001, at 2-4 attached as Exhibit 6 (emphasis added).

32. On January 30, 2002, the General Accounting Office ("GAO") issued a decision concerning the NEPDG in which it specifically found that NEPDG had met with "selected non-governmental parties" in its efforts to develop a proposed national energy policy. See Decision of the Comptroller General Concerning NEPDG Litigation, January 30, 2002, attached as Exhibit 7.

33. The appearance of favoritism and access shown to these energy executives stands in stark contrast to the access the Bush-Cheney administration accorded to other groups who thus far have received only a single mass meeting with lower level NEPDG staffers. See Exhibit 1.

34. Recent history has unfortunately seen several ethical lapses concerning conflicts of interest in The White House and violations of the FACA. In Association of American Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("AAPS"), the DC Circuit remanded the case to the district court for discovery on the issue of whether the working group of the President's Task Force on National Health Care Reform constituted an advisory committee under FACA, despite sworn claims by one of the heads of the Task Force put forth by the Clinton-Gore Justice Department that it did not so qualify. In ordering this discovery to proceed, the DC circuit stated:

> We simply have insufficient material in the record to determine the character of the working group and its members...[A]s we have indicated, because we differ with the district court concerning the Task Force, we believe further proceedings, including expedited discovery, are necessary before the district court can confidently decide whether the working group is a FACA committee.

AAPS, 997 F. 2d at 915-916. When discovery proceeded in the district court, plaintiffs uncovered facts which conclusively showed that the working group of the Task Force did qualify as an advisory committee under the FACA. The White House was sanctioned for, in part, failing to comply with discovery requests concerning the applicability of the FACA, and for misleading the court about who was and who was not a member of former First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton's Health Care Task Force:

> The Department of Justice has a long tradition of setting the highest standards of conduct for all lawyers, and it is a sad day when this court must conclude, as did the United States Attorney in his investigation, that the Department of Justice succumbed to pressure from White House attorneys and others to provide this court with "strained interpretations" that were "ultimately unconvincing." This court goes further than the United States Attorney, however, because this court cannot agree that the Department of Justice never relied upon the "all-employee" exemption for the working group. Having been presented the "all-employee" facts in the Magaziner declaration, the Court of Appeals specifically found that defendants had made that argument. Neither the briefs on appeal, nor any transcript of the oral argument on appeal, was before this court. Yet the Department of Justice sat back and never told this court that it was not making, and had not made, such an argument, and never corrected any of the factual inaccuracies in the Magaziner declaration. The United States Attorney reported that this was a conscious decision because attorneys in the White House refused to allow any supplemental information to be provided to the court. It seems that some government officials never learn that the cover-up can be worse than the underlying conduct. Most shocking to this court, and deeply > disappointing, is that the Department of Justice would participate in such conduct. This was not an issue of good faith word games being played with the court. The United States Attorney found that the most controversial sentence of the Magaziner declaration -- "Only federal government employees serve as members of the interdepartmental working group" -- could not be prosecuted under the perjury statute because the issue of "membership" within the working group was a fuzzy one, and no generally agreed upon "membership" criteria were ever written down. Therefore, the Magaziner declaration was actually false because of the implication of the declaration that "membership" was a meaningful concept and that one could determine who was and was not a "member" of the working group. This whole dishonest explanation was provided to this court in the Magaziner declaration on March 3, 1993, and this court holds that such dishonesty is sanctionable and was not good faith dealing with the court or plaintiffs' counsel. It was not timely corrected or supplemented, and this type of conduct is reprehensible, and the government must be held accountable for it.

AAPS, 989 F. Supp. 8, 16-17 (D.D.C. 1997). In light of this history, Plaintiff believes it is particularly in the public interest for Bush-Cheney Administration officials and the NEPDG to avoid even an appearance of a possible conflict of interest, by acknowledging the application of FACA and the FOIA to all NEPDG meetings.

35. On June 25, 2001, Plaintiff sent a letter to Vice President Cheney, pursuant to the provisions of the FOIA and the FACA, 5 U.S.C. §§ 552 and App.2, requesting copies of all minutes and final decision documents of NEPDG meetings from January 20, 2001 to that date, as well as a complete listing, including addresses, of all persons and entities that participated in NEPDG meetings, either directly or indirectly through agents and/or intermediaries. See June 25, 2001 Letter to The Hon. Richard B. Cheney, attached as Exhibit 8. Plaintiff also sought to attend all future meetings of the NEPDG pursuant to the FACA, and asked to be provided with future meeting schedules and contact information so that representatives of Plaintiff could attend these meetings. Id. Plaintiff's request was denied in its entirety on July 5, 2001. See July 5, 2001 Letter to Larry Klayman, attached as Exhibit 9.

REV_00264409

36. GAO the investigative arm of Congress, also requested that the NEPDG disclose the names of individuals who met with the NEPDG, but has thus far been stonewalled in its efforts. See Joseph Kahn, "Cheney Withholds List of Those Who Spoke to Energy Panel," The New York Times, June 26, 2001 at A17; Express Wire Services, "Cheney Won't Give Up Names," June 26, 2001; Scott Lindlaw, "Congress Demands List of Participants in Cheney Energy Meetings," AP, June 25, 2001, attached collectively as Exhibit 10. After several weeks of making requests, the GAO finally received some documents regarding Defendant NEPDG's finances, but incredibly, Defendant NEPDG has, as of May 28, 2002, failed to provide a full accounting of the individuals who met with Defendant NEPDG to the GAO, Plaintiff, or to the public.

37. Along with Plaintiff, the GAO, and various members of the media, legal commentators have advocated a broad reading of the FACA's language which on its face does appear to cover a vast number of communications between agencies and non-governmental parties. In a widely cited article on the FACA, Michael H. Cardozo reasons:

> In principle, any group of individuals, however selected or constituted, that considers governmental matters and furnishes views and conclusions to government officials or agencies, is a governmental advisory committee. The FACA however, is concerned only with "public advisory committees," that is groups containing at least some members who are not government employees. Thus a committee containing any number of officers of government is not covered by the Act unless its membership includes outsiders, representatives of the "private sector."

Michael H. Cardozo, "The Federal Advisory Committee Act In Operation (Administrative Law Review, Vol. 33, 3 (1981) (emphasis added). Mr. Cardozo further reasons:

> A key part of the definition of "advisory committee" is the expression "established or utilized." Superficially this means that the origin of the group is not material in determining whether it is an advisory committee covered by the act. It must be a "group," however, meaning more than one person, and someone must bring them together. That act, whether done formally or informally, "establishes" the group. However the Act does not expressly require the establishment to be performed by a government official or agency. Under the strict language of the Act, even a group formed by private industry becomes an advisory committee if it is "utilized" by the president or by one or more agencies of the government.

Id. at 12-13. (Emphasis added.) Categorizing the types of advisory committees, Mr. Cardozo writes: "A committee in any of the five functional categories may be assigned an 'operational' as well as an 'advisory' responsibility. Id. at 32. Examples of the types of advisory committees include those which provide: (1) policy advice; (2) technical advice; and (3) fact finding. Id. at 33, 37, 39. (Emphasis added.)

38. On information and belief, the NEPDG still is in existence. In a January 3, 2002 letter to Rep. Henry Waxman, Counsel to the Vice President David Addington conceded that an unidentified member of NEPDG's staff had met with Enron representatives on October 10, 2001 and discussed energy policy matters. See January 3, 2002 letter from Counsel to the Vice President David Addington to Rep. Henry Waxman, attached as Exhibit 11. On information and belief, other meetings between both federal and non-federal members of the allegedly defunct NEPDG have occurred and are still occurring to this day to continue discussions on formulating a national energy policy. Id. Consequently, despite the alleged termination of Defendant NEPDG on September 30, 2001, Plaintiff's FACA and FOIA requests are not moot, and Plaintiff still has a right to the documents it has requested pursuant to the FACA and FOIA.

39. At a February 12, 2002 hearing in this matter, Defendants admitted that, despite the alleged termination of NEPDG, documents generated by the NEPDG are still in the custody of Defendant Cheney and that other NEPDG records "are within all of those eight agencies pertaining to the work of their agency heads, their agency heads' work on the committee." See Transcript of February 12, 2002 Motions Hearing at 5-6. Indeed, the Court ordered that these records be preserved. Consequently, despite the alleged termination of Defendant NEPDG, documents responsive to Plaintiff's FACA and FOIA requests obviously still exist. Plaintiff's FOIA and FACA requests are not moot, and Plaintiff still has a right to the documents it has requested pursuant to the FOIA and FACA.

REV_00264411

COUNT I
(Violation of the Federal Advisory Committee Act)

40. Plaintiff incorporates by paragraphs 1-39 as if fully set forth herein.

41. The NEPDG is a federal advisory committee as defined under the FACA, 5 U.S.C. App.2, and as such is required to comply with all provisions of that law, including, but not limited to, filing a charter, allowing interested persons--such as Plaintiff--to attend and have input at meetings of the NEPDG, producing documents and other things and having open meetings in accordance with the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, publishing notice of all future meetings in the federal register, and having a board that is fairly balanced in terms of the points of view represented.

42. Plaintiff has made a request to the NEPDG that representatives of Plaintiff be allowed to attend and participate in meetings of the NEPDG, that they be given copies of certain NEPDG documents, and the NEPDG appoint at least one person with a different point of view, among other matters. See Exhibit 8.

43. Defendant NEPDG denied Plaintiff's request by letter dated July 5, 2001. See Exhibit 9.

44. The failure of Defendants to comply with the FACA has harmed Plaintiff in that Plaintiff has as one of its primary functions the monitoring and safeguarding of the public trust. The activities of the Defendants in this case have deprived Plaintiff of its right, granted by the FACA, to participate in meetings held by the NEPDG, to have advance notice of those meetings, to obtain documents generated by the NEPDG, and to have a voice in the affairs of the NEPDG. The acts of Defendants have thus frustrated Plaintiff's ability to effectively carry out its purpose of promoting and protecting justice and social welfare, including, among other things, preventing abuse and violation of the public trust by federal officers, officials, employees, agents, and/or persons acting in concert with them.

45. As an interested party and a representative of the public, Plaintiff has been and continues to be damaged by the operations of the NEPDG. Public confidence in the integrity of the Presidency and the executive branch as a whole has been and will be harmed by the appearance that the Vice President and the Bush Administration as a whole are under the influence of a select few members of major oil and other energy producing corporations, many of whom contributed heavily to the Bush-Cheney Administration in the 2000 Presidential election cycle. Members of Defendant NEPDG also gain influence or favor with the executive branch to the detriment of others who do not participate in the NEPDG.

46. Plaintiff will continue to suffer permanent and irreparable injury unless operation of the NEPDG is brought into compliance with the provisions of the FACA.

COUNT II
(Violation of the Freedom of Information Act)

47. Plaintiff incorporates paragraphs 1-46 as if fully set forth herein.

48. Plaintiff filed with Defendant on June 25, 2001 via facsimile and on June 26, 2001 via certified mail, a FOIA request (see Exhibit 8) in the form of a letter to Vice President Richard B. Cheney, requesting access to certain records under FOIA. Access was requested to "copies of all minutes and final decision documents of NEPDG meetings from January 20, 2001 to the present, as well as a listing (including addresses) of all persons and entities that participated in NEPDG meetings, either directly or indirectly through agents and/or intermediaries," among other items.

REV_00264413

49. By letter dated July 5, 2001, Defendant Cheney denied Plaintiff's request. See Exhibit 9.

50. Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(C) and 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(ii)(I), Plaintiff shall be deemed to have exhausted its administrative remedies with respect to its request to Defendant.

51. Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), Plaintiff has a right of access to the information and documents requested in its FOIA request, and Defendants have no legal basis for refusing to disclose this information and these documents to Plaintiff.

COUNT III
(Violation of the Federal Advisory Committee Act/Mandamus)

52. Plaintiff incorporates paragraphs 1-51 as if fully set forth herein.

53. The Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups are advisory committees as defined under FACA.

54. The defendants have violated FACA as follows:

a. By failing open each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to the public. (Violation of FACA §10(a)(1)).

b. By failing to publish timely notice of each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups in the Federal Register. (Violation of FACA §10(a)(2)).

c. By failing to allow Plaintiff and other interested persons to attend, appear before, or file statements with the Cheney Energy Task Force and the Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA §10(a)(3)).

d. By failing to make available for public inspection and copying the records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendices, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents which were made available to or prepared for by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA §10(b)).

REV_00264414

e. By failing to keep detailed minutes of each meeting of the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups, certified as accurate, that contain a record of the persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups. (Violation of FACA §10(c)).

f. By establishing the Task Force Sub-Groups without specific authorization by statute or by the President and without a determination published in the Federal Register, that establishing the Task Force Sub-Groups is in the public interest. (Violation of FACA §9(a)).

g. By allowing the Cheney Energy Task Force and Task Force Sub-Groups to meet and take action without filing an advisory committee charter containing the information required by FACA (Violation of FACA §9(c)).

55. The Defendants have a nondiscretionary duty to comply with the procedural requirements of FACA including but not limited to those set forth in the preceding paragraph as items (a) through (g).

56. This Court has jurisdiction to compel the Defendants to perform a nondiscretionary duty pursuant to the Mandamus and Venue Act, 28 U.S.C. §1361.

COUNT IV
(Violation of the Federal Advisory Committee Act/Administrative Procedure Act)

57. Plaintiff incorporates paragraphs 1-56 as if fully set forth herein.

--	Filed: 11/14/2001 Entered: 11/14/2001	Terminate Motions
	Docket Text: ORDER - granting Plaintiff's Second Unopposed Motion for Extention of Time to File Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss. Plaintiff's opposition is due 11/13/01; Defendant's reply is due 12/4/01. By Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 11/8/01. Motions [12] terminated. (GK,)
14	Filed: 12/03/2001 Entered: 12/03/2001	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in Support of Motion re [10] to Dismiss filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Bensing, Daniel)
15	Filed: 01/22/2002 Entered: 01/29/2002 Terminated: 02/28/2002	Motion for Hearing
	Docket Text: MOTION for Hearing by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit # (2) Exhibit)(td,)
16	Filed: 01/29/2002 Entered: 01/29/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER setting motion hearing on 02/13/02 at 11:30 a.m.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 01/29/02. (lcegs2,)
17	Filed: 01/29/2002 Entered: 01/29/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER rescheduling motions hearing for 2/12/02 at 1 pm.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 01/29/02. (lcegs2,)
18	Filed: 01/31/2002 Entered: 01/31/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER setting forth issues to be briefed in advance of motions hearing scheduled for 2/12/02 at 1 pm.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 01/31/02. (lcegs2,)
19	Filed: 02/05/2002 Entered: 02/05/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to the Court's Order of January 31, 2002 filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit May 4, 2001 Letter and Response)(Bensing, Daniel)
20	Filed: 02/08/2002 Entered: 02/08/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Court's Order of January 31, 2002 filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
21	Filed: 02/11/2002 Entered: 02/11/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to Court's Order of January 31, 2001 filed by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP. (Bensing, Daniel)
22	Filed: 02/11/2002 Entered: 02/11/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: (ENTERED IN ERROR; SUBMISSION NOT READABLE) RESPONSE to Defendant's Reply to the Court's Order of January 31, 2002 filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,.

REV_00264371

58. By violating the FACA as set forth in paragraph 54, the agency Defendants have acted arbitrarily and capriciously and not in accordance with law, and without observance of procedure required by law, in violation of 5 U.S.C. §706(2)(A) and §706(2)(D).

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff prayers for relief and judgment as follows:

1. That the Court enter a judgment declaring Defendants to be in violation of the FACA and the APA;

2. That the Court enter a writ of mandamus ordering Defendants to comply with the FACA, the FOIA, and the APA;

3. That the Court grant Plaintiff a fee waiver under the FOIA;

4. That the Court enter a permanent injunction prohibiting Defendants from convening, conducting or holding any meeting or engaging in any other activities that are not in full compliance with the FACA, the FOIA, and the APA;

5. That the Court enter a permanent injunction ordering Defendants to provide to Plaintiff, within ten working days and at no cost to Plaintiff, a full and complete copy of all records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendixes, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents which were made available to or prepared for Defendant NEPDG, irrespective of whether any such document otherwise is or could be exempt from disclosure under the FOIA;

6. That the Court enter a permanent injunction ordering Defendants to prepare and deliver to Plaintiff, within ten working days, detailed minutes of each meeting of Defendant NEPDG, certified as accurate, that contain a record of persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached, and copies of all report received, issued, or approved by Defendant NEPDG; and

7. That the Court award Plaintiff attorneys fees and its costs of suit, as well as any and all other relief the Court deems appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.

_____

Larry Klayman, Esq.
D.C. Bar No. 334581
Suite 725
501 School Street, S.W.
Washington, DC 20024
(202) 646-5172

Attorney for Plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc.

REV_00264417

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on May 28, 2002 a true and correct copy of the foregoing SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT was served by first class mail, postage prepaid, on the following:

Counsel for Plaintiff Sierra Club:

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104

Counsel for Amicus NRDC:

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Ave., NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009

Counsel for Federal Defendants:

Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
David O. Buchholz, Esq.
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044

Counsel for Defendant Thomas Kuhn:

Robert S. Litt, Esq.
ARNOLD & PORTER
555 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20004-1206

Counsel for Defendant Haley Barbour:

Paul C. Rauser, Esq.
WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY
725 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005

REV_00264418

Counsel for Defendant Mark Racicot:

Richard D. Horn, Esq.
BRACEWELL & PATTERSON, LLP
2000 K Street, NW
Suite 500
Washington, DC 20006-1872

_____
Jason Aldrich

REV_00264419

ATTACHMENT 1

LEV . - 1 OF 1 STORY

Copyright 2001 Newsweek

Newsweek

May 14, 2001, U.S. Edition

SECTION: NATIONAL AFFAIRS; Pg. 18

LENGTH: 1622 words

HEADLINE: Big Energy at the Table

BYLINE: By Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff; With Mark Hosenball, T. Trent Gegax and Rich Thomas in Washington

HIGHLIGHT:
Winning support for your agenda is easy when your allies fill out the administration's top chairs

BODY:

If you were in the oil and gas business, it was a meeting that dreams were made of. Nine days before George W. Bush was inaugurated, energy lobbyists gathered at the American Petroleum Institute's offices in downtown Washington. Their agenda: to write a wish list. One participant remembers it fondly. "The tone was, 'OK, what do you guys want? You are going to have the ear of this White House'." In came an easel and a whiteboard, and ideas flowed: looser rules for drilling on federal lands; more drilling for oil and gas in Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico; lower royalty payments for tapping offshore wells. After a while, the mood in the room grew giddy. The man from the wildcatters' association suggested going All the Way. It was time, he said, to rethink the Endangered Species Act.

That was a wish too far. But many items on that board--and other lists scribbled by other energy lobbyists in other offices around town--found their way into the recommendations that the president will unveil to the nation next week. The API list, in fact, was forwarded to George Bush's transition team, which sent it to the Interior Department. On March 20, Interior sent many of the same ideas to the Energy Task Force that Vice President Dick Cheney had convened on Jan. 29. To close the loop, key leaders from that API meeting have since been appointed to pivotal positions in Bush's administration--among them J. Steven Griles, an energy lobbyist and the new second in command at Interior, and Thomas Sansonetti, an energy lawyer recently named the top environmental cop at the Justice Department. The two, in effect, will help administer policies they helped to write.

If the Bush administration is homecoming weekend for the energy industry, Dick Cheney's task-force report is the pregame tailgate party. Not since the rise of the railroads more than a century ago has a single industry placed so many foot soldiers at the top of a new administration. While the report will recommend an array of what one White House aide advertises as "high-tech, 21st-century conservation ideas," its core will be a call to find and use new sources of fossil fuels, as well as a renewed commitment to nuclear power. What voters need to hear "loud and clear," the president declared last week, "is that we are running out of energy in America."

REV_00264421

Is there a national "crisis"? California faces rolling summer-electricity blackouts. In New York City, officials are scrambling to add small gas-fired generators to handle peak demand. Natural-gas prices have doubled in the past year. The numbers on signs at filling stations are skyrocketing, and could hit $3 a gallon this summer in the Midwest. In a West Wing interview with NEWSWEEK, Cheney shied away from the C word. "I think the potential is there for it to adversely affect the economy," he said.

But voters are using the word. In a NEWSWEEK Poll, 71 percent of those surveyed say there is an "energy crisis" in California; 53 percent agree there now is one in the country as a whole. Given an either-or choice between "protecting the environment" and "developing new sources of energy," those polled selected energy by 52 to 41 percent, compared with a 49-44 ratio just one month ago.

There's something to be said for turning to energy-industry alums in this situation--and Cheney, who like Bush is a son of the oilfields, is not shy about saying it. "The fact of the matter is [you get] a lot of expertise with people who have been dealing with these issues for a long time," he told NEWSWEEK. In his own case, he said, his time at Halliburton, the globe-girdling oil-services company, taught him "a hell of a lot about the technology of the business," such as benign new ways to drill in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

But Americans are skeptical of industry motives--and, by extension, of Bush's ties. When asked to name who had contributed "a lot" to the current energy situation, those polled named two sets of villains: the U.S. energy companies (66 percent) and overseas energy suppliers, such as OPEC. Bush himself gets his lowest approval marks for his handling of energy and environmental issues. Democrats, naturally, are pouncing on what they see as a populist hole in Bush's armor. Late last week House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt was stumping in Chula Vista, Calif.; with transmission lines as a backdrop, he vowed to impose new federal caps on electricity rates--an idea Cheney flatly opposes.

The administration may well have raised the political risk via the process it used to draft its plan. The Bushies used a secretive, believers-only process reminiscent of another such enterprise: Hillary Rodham Clinton's effort to write a national health-care plan in 1994. Since the group comprises only government officials, White House aides say, it is entitled to keep its deliberations private. Still, industry leaders--who dumped $22.5 million into GOP coffers in the last election--enjoyed constant contact with the task force. Cheney met with a group of utility executives at the Edison Electric Institute, whose president, Tom Kuhn, was a leading Bush fund-raiser. No one has enjoyed better access than Enron CEO Ken Lay, who recently had dinner with his good friend the president.

The environmental community, meanwhile, got one mass meeting with the staff a month ago (and the promise of another this week with EPA Administrator Christine Todd Whitman). Efforts to meet with Cheney were rebuffed. Cheney himself confirmed he had not met with a single spokesman for the greens. That dynamic has only fueled suspicions among enviros about what's going on behind closed doors. "They're drumming up a fake energy crisis that doesn't exist," says Phil Clapp of the National Environmental Trust.

To be sure, the Cheney report will make many nods in the direction of conservation and renewable resources. Cheney confirmed that it will call for tax credits for both. The plan will herald and encourage the advent of less intrusive, high-tech means for finding and extracting oil and gas and for burning more coal. White House spinners have decided to divide the report into five parts--only two of which will deal with the extraction and the transmission of new sources of traditional types of fuel. The conservation measures will be high tech and optimistically can-do about using Yankee ingenuity to give Americans all the cars and appliances they want while using less electricity from state-of-the-art power plants. But there will be no paeans to the kind of pantywaist, tree-hugging self-abnegation the Bushies think President Carter sermon- ized about a generation ago. "This isn't about not bathing or turning off your lights," said a top Cheney aide. "This is about finding environmentally safe ways to make sure we have the energy we need."

REV_00264422

That's not enough, environmentalists say, given the rising threat of global warming the green community is convinced comes from burning fossil fuels. "The test of any energy plan will be what it does to limit greenhouse gases," says Fred Krupp of Environmental Defense. The Union of Concerned Scientists, concerned about global warming, says that renewables and conservation could displace 20 percent of traditional electricity demand by the year 2020--and greatly lessen the need for new power plants. Cheney thinks otherwise. In that span, he said, reliance on renewables could indeed triple--a "fairly optimistic" scenario but one that would still meet only 6 percent of total electricity needs. But that estimate does not include imposing tough new mileage standards on SUVs or mandating more efficient appliances. "Part of our task," he said, "is to focus on reality, and reality is not 'Well, gee, we'll conserve our way out, we don't have to produce any more,' or 'Wind and solar will take care of it, so we don't need fossilfuels anymore'."

Now comes the hard part: selling the plan to the public and to Congress. Some GOP strategists are sanguine about overcoming environmental concerns. "Nothing like $3-a-gallon gasoline to help make the case," said one. But it's probably not that simple. White House strategists are looking for clues on how best to hawk the package in polls done for them by the Republican National Committee. The surveys show that voters know very little about where energy supplies come from or how they now are distributed in what has become a relatively deregulated marketplace. "Voters out there think that the government guarantees cheap, abundant energy," said one worried Republican polltaker, "and that's not the way it works anymore." Other insiders worry less about the Democrats than the news media, which they regard as addicted to showing videotape of belching smokestacks. "Bush will have the bully pulpit," says GOP consultant Alex Castellanos, "but it's not an easy sell."

But sell Bush must. He'll take his show on the road next week, joined by a fleet of cabinet secretaries. They will declare that action is needed after years of Clinton-administration neglect. They will say that there are no quick fixes, and tout their market-based, supply-side, long-term answers. They may use real-world vignettes about energy shortages. (On request, the Natural Gas Supply Association provided the White House some.) But politics is lived in the short term, and Bush late last week suddenly found himself in the role of conservation advocate. He ordered federal facilities in California to turn up thermostats, and pledged that they would reduce electricity use by 10 percent. Cheney, the interview over, hurried to the Cabinet Room for the announcement. It turns out that conservation matters a great deal, at least in California, at least for now.

REV_00264423

GRAPHIC: PHOTO: Inner circle: Cheney presiding over a meeting of the Energy Task Force last week in the vice president's ceremonial office; PHOTO: The outsider: Clapp claims the Bushies may be ginning up a fake energy crisis''; GRAPHIC: (Chart) Energy Advocates in the Bush Pipeline (Graphic omitted)

LOAD-DATE: May 9, 2001

REV_00264424

ATTACHMENT 2

	(Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 2/12/2002 (td,).

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
26	Filed: 02/11/2002 Entered: 02/25/2002	Reply to Document
	Docket Text: SURREPLY to [19] defendant's reply to the court's order of 1/31/02 by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (td,) Modified on 2/25/2002 (td,).
--	Filed: 02/12/2002 Entered: 02/13/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing on government's motion to dismiss held on 2/12/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan; motion hearing continued to 4/9/2002 at 1:00 PM before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan.; plaintiff's amended complaint due by 2/15/02; government submission due by 3/1/02; plaintiff's reply due by 3/15/02; government's replly due by 3/22/02;(Court Reporter Gordon Slodysko.) (clv,)
--	Filed: 02/12/2002 Entered: 02/13/2002	Set Deadlines
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing on government's motion to dismiss held on 2/12/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan; motion hearing continued to 4/9/2002 at 1:00 PM before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan.; plaintiff's amended complaint due by 2/15/02; government submission due by 3/1/02; plaintiff's reply due by 3/15/02; government's replly due by 3/22/02;(Court Reporter Gordon Slodysko.) (clv,)
--	Filed: 02/12/2002 Entered: 02/13/2002	Set Hearings
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing on government's motion to dismiss held on 2/12/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan; motion hearing continued to 4/9/2002 at 1:00 PM before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan.; plaintiff's amended complaint due by 2/15/02; government submission due by 3/1/02; plaintiff's reply due by 3/15/02; government's replly due by 3/22/02;(Court Reporter Gordon Slodysko.) (clv,)
23	Filed: 02/13/2002 Entered: 02/13/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER setting forth briefing schedule.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 02/13/2002. (lcegs2,)
24	Filed: 02/15/2002 Entered: 02/15/2002	Amended Complaint
	Docket Text: AMENDED COMPLAINT. Filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
25	Filed: 02/19/2002 Entered: 02/19/2002	Notice (Other)
	Docket Text: NOTICE of Substitution of Counsel by NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP (Buchholz, David)
--	Filed: 02/22/2002 Entered: 02/25/2002	Summons Issued as to USA
	Docket Text: SUMMONS (19) Issued as to SPENCER ABRAHAM ; JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH ; JOHN ASHCROFT ; HALEY BARBOUR ; JOSHUA BOLTON ; RICHARD CHENEY ;

4

REV_00264372

Get the right cell phone.
Get the right plan.
Shop here
msn
NEWSWEEK.MSNBC.COM

QwestDex online yellow pages
Find a Local Business

A New Capitol Clash

Enron continues to roil Washington. Next up: a constitutional showdown

By Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff
NEWSWEEK

Feb. 11 issue — For security reasons, George W. Bush and Dick Cheney are not supposed to spend much time together. But they made an exception last Tuesday afternoon for a hoary ritual of life in the capital: the briefing of the network anchors. Just hours before Bush's State of the Union address, Peter Jennings, Dan Rather, Tom Brokaw & Co. were ushered into the Old Family Dining Room in the private quarters of the White House to hear the president and his veep spin the speech.

E-MAIL THIS COMPLETE STORY

ADVERTISING ON MSNBC

RESOURCE GUIDE
- Yellow Pages
- Auctions at uBid
- Shopping
- Stock Quote
- Newsletters
- Weather

REV_00264426

ONE OF THE FIRST questions was about Enron, and Cheney's refusal to turn over logs of his energy task force's secret contacts with energy executives. "Won't this get in the way of the message of the speech?" one of the anchors asked. "Why not just give Congress the information and get it over with?" Before Cheney could answer, Bush cut in. Pounding the table, he insisted that a fundamental right of the presidency was at stake: the ability to get information and private, candid advice from anyone, any time. Bush fully backed Cheney's refusal to comply with the General Accounting Office's demand for the lists. What about the GAO's threat to file a suit? For Bush, it was a Texas Ranger moment. "Bring it on," he said.

As the trash talk between the two sides escalates—" Talk is cheap," Walker sneers at Cheney's chin-out attitude—the case has become in part a classic Washington showdown between two powerful, bullheaded men.

David Walker is getting ready to do just that. The GAO chief, who now says he will sue to get the documents, insists he wasn't looking for a showdown with Cheney. Last summer two House Democrats asked the GAO to probe whether the energy task force was unfairly influenced by industry lobbyists. Walker complied, sending the White House a sharply worded "demand letter" requesting all notes and minutes of its meetings.

SCALING BACK

A plain-spoken Republican who worked in Ronald Reagan's Labor Department and later as an Arthur Andersen executive, Walker tells NEWSWEEK he concluded that the demands were too intrusive. "Out of respect for the vice president," Walker says, he "personally" scaled back the request, asking only for a list of people who advised the task force and the topics of their conversations. But Cheney still refused. Then Enron collapsed late last year, and Walker's cause suddenly became a whole lot more interesting. "This all got Enronized," says one administration aide with a sigh. Walker, who has hired a Washington law firm to handle the case, says his investigation "isn't an Enron issue." Congress, he says, "has the right to know who from the outside is seeking to influence" White House policy. "I'm not seeking a confrontation. We just need the information."

REV_00264427

TIMELINE

The rise and fall of Enron

1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10

Feb. 12, 2002
Former Enron CEO Kenneth Lay invokes his Fifth Amendment right at a congressional hearing, drawing the scorn of a Senate panel investigating the energy firm?s collapse.
Feb. 7, 2002
Former Enron CEO Jeffrey Skilling tells a House subcommittee he did not know the company was in trouble when he unexpectedly resigned in August. Former CFO Andrew Fastow refuses to testify before the panel.
Feb. 5, 2002
The House Financial Services Committee and the Senate Commerce Committee subpoena Kenneth Lay to compel the former Enron CEO to appear before the panels.
Feb. 4, 2002
Kenneth Lay resigns from Enron's board of directors. Sen. Byron Dorgan says the Senate Commerce Committee will issue a subpoena to compel the former CEO to appear before the panel.
Feb. 3, 2002
The attorney for Kenneth Lay says the former Enron CEO will not appear at congressional hearings after several members of Congress appear on Sunday news shows accusing Lay and other Enron executives of committing crimes.

Printable version

As the trash talk between the two sides escalates—" Talk is cheap," Walker sneers at Cheney's chin-out attitude—the case has become in part a classic Washington showdown between two powerful, bullheaded men. Yet the feud frames a wider clash between two worlds: a White House with an instinct for secrecy and Washington's Axis of Inquiry—lawyers, journalists, courts and congressional investigators. That clash will only intensify in the coming days, as former Enron CEO Ken Lay heads for the Hill and the Justice Department proceeds with its criminal probe of the troubled energy company.

The White House has hung tough, but the administration made a limited tactical retreat as pressure increased to fully disclose its ties to Enron. Cheney acknowledged that he had personally discussed energy policy in a March 2001 meeting with Lay—and officials admitted that there were five other meetings between Enron representatives and Cheney's staff. In fact, there was at least one more. NEWSWEEK has learned that on March 29 of last year, Cheney's top energy aide, Andrew Lundquist, met with members of the Clean Power Group—a coalition funded by five power companies that included Enron. The group wanted the task force to replace some environmental rules with a plan that would allow industries to trade "pollution credits" among themselves. Enron stood to make hundreds of millions of dollars if the plan was adopted.

REV_00264428

'WHO CARES?'

The meeting was arranged by Brad Card, the Clean Power Group's outside lobbyist and brother of White House chief of staff Andrew Card. So why didn't the White House disclose the meeting in its list of Enron contacts? A White House aide says Lundquist "has no recollection" of being told that Enron was part of the group. (Brad Card's associate Mark Irion tells NEWSWEEK he made clear to Lundquist at the outset that Enron was a member.) Cheney spokeswoman Mary Matalin says it doesn't matter, since the proposal never made it into the energy plan. "Who cares if there were a hundred meetings?" she says. The Justice Department might. On Friday, Justice officials ordered the administration to preserve all documents related "in any way" to Enron.

Democrats, and even some Republicans, on the Hill are standing shoulder to shoulder with Walker's demands for still more disclosure. Their argument: when the White House or government agencies make policy, they are supposed to use a procedure that guarantees public access to keep officials from being secretly influenced by private—so-called ex parte—conversations.

WAR ON TERROR
Ongoing Coverage:
• National News
• International News
• Web-exclusive Archives

The White House insists that all meetings of the task force are exempt from this kind of disclosure. Why? Because Cheney—a "constitutional officer" as vice president—is exempt, and therefore, they say, so is the task force he ran. White House aides say they designed the task force to avoid the problems that Hillary Clinton's health-care group faced in 1994. To insulate the group within constitutional limits, aides say, Cheney himself chaired it, only government officials served on it and only task-force members—not the whole group—met with industry lobbyists. Critics complain that's a loophole big enough to drive an oil rig through.

Bush and Cheney are unimpressed. For years Cheney has loudly lamented the steady erosion of presidential power at the hands of Congress and the press. And Bush is the son of a CIA director and a third-generation Skull and Bones man: a kid to secrets born. The Cheney-Bush kinship has been strengthened by the war on terror, with its emphasis on sealed lips. "It's a horse race between them," says a top White House aide, "to see who can take a tougher stand."

REV_00264429

The president's political advisers aren't nearly so confident. For months GOP strategists have been urging the White House to ease up or risk looking as if it has something to hide. "If we released everything, we would look better," admits one Bush aide. But in his increasingly tense stare-down with Walker, Cheney isn't about to be the one who blinks first.

With Martha Brant and Tamara Lipper

© 2002 Newsweek, Inc.

MORE NEWSWEEK NATIONAL NEWS

STORY Where is Danielle van Dam?
STORY At Least It's a Plan
STORY Lindh's Defensive Play
STORY Periscope
STORY Scandal Solicitors

National News | International News | Business & Money | Technology & Health
Lifestyle & Family | Entertainment | Periscope | Opinion | Feedback
Archives| Subscriber Services | About Newsweek

MSNBC VIEWERS' TOP 10

Would you recommend this story to other viewers?

not at all 1 - 2 - 3 - 4 - 5 - 6 - 7 highly

BACK TO TOP

MSNBC is optimized for
• Microsoft Internet Explorer
• Windows Media Player

• MSNBC Terms, Conditions and Privacy © 2002

Cover | News | Business | Sports | Local News | Health | Technology | Living & Travel
TV News | Opinions | Weather | Comics

Information Center | Help | News Tools | Jobs | Write Us | Terms & Conditions | Privacy

MSNBC InfoCenter • Search • Help • NewsTools • Write Us

60

REV_00264430

ATTACHMENT 3

THE ENRON COLLAPSE

Memo details Cheney--Enron links

Company's suggestions resembled elements of the administration's energy policy

David Lazarus, Chronicle Staff Writer
Wednesday, January 30, 2002
©2002 San Francisco Chronicle

URL: http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/chronicle/archive/2002/01/30/MN46204.DTL

While the White House insists that details of its talks with Enron officials remain secret, a memo outlining those discussions reveals the extent to which the Houston energy giant lobbied to influence government policy.

The memo, a copy of which was obtained by The Chronicle, was handed by former Enron Chairman Ken Lay to Vice President Dick Cheney last April when the two met to discuss the administration's response to California's energy crisis.

The White House acknowledged last night that aspects of the memo resembled elements of Cheney's energy plan, but it refused to say whether the document was included in notes that Cheney now refuses to divulge to congressional investigators.

The General Accounting Office is threatening to sue the administration if it doesn't disclose details of its talks with Enron officials.

The three-page document contains eight points spelling out Enron's case for why federal authorities should refrain from imposing price caps or other measures sought by California officials to stabilize runaway electricity prices.

A number of the positions in the memo subsequently made it into Cheney's energy plan or were reflected in comments by senior administration officials.

"Events in California and in other parts of the country demonstrated that the benefits of competition have yet to be realized and have not yet reached consumers," the memo argues.

"The following actions need to be taken," it continues, outlining positions on a series of matters. Some of the topics, such as equal access to transmission grids and interconnection of power networks, are largely technical in nature.

ENRON FROWNED ON PRICE CAPS

The key point as far as California was concerned was whether soaring wholesale power prices should be limited or whether such prices were merely a reflection of normal supply-and-demand dynamics.

61

"The administration should reject any attempt to re-regulate wholesale power markets by adopting price caps or returning to archaic methods of determining the cost-base of wholesale power," the memo says.

It adds that even temporary price restrictions "will be detrimental to power markets and will discourage private investment."

The memo blames California officials for having made only "limited progress" in tackling the state's power woes. It says that if the administration were to follow all of Enron's recommendations, the measures "would mitigate this crisis."

An Enron spokesman confirmed that the memo had been given by Lay to Cheney during their one-on-one talks.

Mary Matalin, an adviser to the vice president, said Cheney's energy plan included input from many sources. "Just because some of the things (in the memo) are included in the plan doesn't mean they were from the talks" between Cheney and Lay, she said.

LIMITS CALLED 'A MISTAKE'

Still, as far as price caps go, the administration was quick to fall into lockstep with Enron's opposition to any federal regulatory moves. "We think that's a mistake," Cheney said just weeks after his meeting with Lay.

Nevertheless, federal regulators finally imposed price limits in June based on the cost of the least-efficient, and thus most expensive, generating plant. Democrats in Washington had threatened to act on their own if the regulators did not come up with a remedy for California's troubles.

Cheney also echoed Enron's position on the culpability of California's leaders in exacerbating the state's energy problems.

"When the problem became obvious last year, over a year ago, they didn't respond," he said in May.

Noting that California had experienced rolling blackouts and the bankruptcy of its biggest utility, he also said, "I don't think that's a sterling record of leadership, I would guess, on their part."

SHARED FAITH IN DEREGULATION

To be sure, Cheney, Lay and President Bush, as well as other industry players, shared a belief in deregulation well before the lights went out in California. But the memo underscores the broad kinship between Enron and the administration in drafting official policy.

Steve Maviglio, a spokesman for Gov. Gray Davis, said it came as no surprise that Enron had substantial clout in formation of the Bush administration's stance on California's difficulties.

"What the federal government did during the energy crisis was pretend that the problem didn't exist and say that the markets can solve everything, and that's the same thing Ken Lay told the governor," Maviglio said.

He added that "the administration was espousing what Enron was espousing -- that the markets should fix themselves."

Whatever else, it's extraordinary for a private company, particularly one accused by California officials of having gouged the state with wildly inflated energy prices, to have played such a prominent role in the White House's response to the crisis.

'CONSUMERS SHOULD BE OUTRAGED'

"If the administration was allowing Enron to guide its policy during the California energy crisis, consumers should be outraged," said Janee Briesemeister, senior policy analyst at Consumers Union in Austin, Texas.

"It's not unusual for a company to hand policymakers their ideas for what should be done," she added. "Things break down when policymakers refuse to admit that they used what was brought to them by industry."

Cheney's argument, as he told an interviewer Sunday, is that revealing details of his talks with Enron would undermine "the ability of the president and the vice president to solicit advice from anybody they want in confidence."

Bush echoed this sentiment a day later, saying that confidential talks are necessary to "get good, sound opinions." He reiterated that stance yesterday in a meeting with congressional leaders.

Craig McDonald, director of Texans for Public Justice, a watchdog group, called it laughable for the administration to cast its secrecy as a defense of high-minded principle.

"All they're fighting for is to keep the wraps on how much clout Enron had over Dick Cheney's energy plan," he said.

©2002 San Francisco Chronicle Page A - 1

REV_00264434

SF Gate

Search Photos
Photo Gallery
Full Story

THE ENRON COLLAPSE / Memo details Cheney--Enron links / Company's suggestions resembled elements of the administration's energy policy
This memo was given to Vice President Dick Cheney by Enron's then-CEO Ken Lay last April. It spells out Enron's case for why federal authorities should refrain from imposing price caps or other measures sought by California officials to stabilize runaway electricity prices. Image File: 270 Kbytes

National Energy Policy: Priorities

The 1992 Energy Policy Act (EPA) intended to introduce competition into the wholesale market for electric power by providing transmission access. Events in California and in other parts of the country demonstrated that the benefits of competition have yet to be realized and have not yet reached consumers. To realize the vision set forth in the EPA, the following actions need to be taken:

1. Fair Transmission Access

In Order No. 888, the FERC attempted to formulate fair terms and conditions of access to the transmission grid for all users. However, the FERC failed to extend its jurisdiction to transmission services bundled together with retail sales. Consequently, distinct rules apply to different parties for use of the same transmission asset and such rules provide vertically integrated utilities the opportunity to use their transmission assets to disadvantage independent third party generators and wholesalers.

To achieve robust competition in wholesale power markets, the FERC must actively exercise jurisdiction over all aspects of electricity transmission in interstate commerce and place all uses of the grid under the same rates, terms, and conditions. Moreover, FERC jurisdiction must extend to the terms of access applicable to transmission systems owned and operated by non-FERC jurisdictional entities including Federal Power Marketing Associations (PMAs), states and municipalities.

To improve reliability, the FERC has encouraged utilities to combine transmission facilities into large Regional Transmission Organizations (RTOs) and to assign the responsibility for operating RTOs to an independent management team. Properly structured RTOs can ease the movement of power between states and between users within a state, and will enhance reliability, commercial activities, and competition in the energy industry.

However, the FERC has refused to make RTO participation mandatory. This, coupled with the lack of non-discriminatory open access terms, has weakened the RTO initiative. Therefore, the Administration must encourage the FERC to approve only those RTOs with sufficient size and scope and with non-discriminatory terms and conditions for access and to require that all transmission owners participate in an RTO. Finally, the Administration should revise those tax provisions that prevent the transfer of assets to new, stand alone independent, for-profit transmission companies (Transcos).

2. Independent Energy Reliability Organizations

Governance of the North American Electric Reliability Council (NERC) is cumbersome and places new market entrants at a competitive disadvantage. There is a necessary role for FERC oversight of a new Independent Reliability Organization (IRO).

Legislation to establish a new IRO is required. However, the "consensus" reliability language in the proposed Murkowski bill is ineffective since it establishes an unsatisfactory procedure to resolve conflicts between the IRO and the various RTOs

REV_00264435

	MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR., ; DONALD EVANS ; THOMAS KUHN ; KENNETH LAY ; LARRY LINDSEY ; NORMAN MINETA ; NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP ; GALE NORTON ; PAUL O'NEILL ; COLIN POWELL ; MARK RACICOT ; ANN M. VENEMAN ; CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN ; PATRICK H. WOOD III , U.S. Attorney (td,)
27	Filed: 02/25/2002 Entered: 02/25/2002	Errata
	Docket Text: (ENTERED IN ERROR) ERRATA to Amended Complaint by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul) Modified on 2/25/2002 (td,).
28	Filed: 02/25/2002 Entered: 02/25/2002	Errata
	Docket Text: ERRATA to Amended Complaint by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Errata)(Orfanedes, Paul)
29	Filed: 02/26/2002 Entered: 02/26/2002 Terminated: 02/28/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File Answer
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Answer re [24] amended complaint by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Buchholz, David)
31	Filed: 02/27/2002 Entered: 03/01/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in Opposition to Motion re [29] to defendants' motion for extension of time to respond to amended complaint filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (td,) Modified on 3/1/2002 (td,).
32	Filed: 02/27/2002 Entered: 03/01/2002	Errata
	Docket Text: ERRATA corrected supplemental plaintiff's opposition to defendants' motion for extension of time to respond to amended complaint by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit # (2) Exhibit)(td,)
--	Filed: 02/28/2002 Entered: 02/28/2002	Motion Hearing
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 2/28/2002 before Judge Emmet G. Sullivan ; government submission due by 3/8/02 12:00 Noon; plaintiff response due by 3/20/02; reply due by 3/27/02; chambers to electronically issue order;(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)
30	Filed: 02/28/2002 Entered: 02/28/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to Answer
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Extension of Time to Answer, as amended by this Order. [29] Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 2/28/2002. (lcegs2,)
33	Filed: 03/07/2002 Entered: 03/07/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER inviting The Sierra Club to file amicus brief in this case.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 3/7/2002. (lcegs2,) unsatisfactory procedure to resolve conflicts between the IRO and the various RTOs established by the FERC.

5

REV_00264373

Legislation that permits the FERC to delegate authority to develop reliability standards and enforce those standards, establishes an appropriate funding mechanism, includes a limited States' savings clause and provides the IRO participants with anti-trust immunity will accomplish the shared goal of establishing an effective IRO.

3. Wholesale Market Price Caps or Cost-Based Wholesale Rates

The Administration should reject any attempt to re-regulate wholesale power markets by adopting price caps or returning to archaic methods of determining the cost-base of wholesale power. Price caps, even if imposed on a temporary basis, will be detrimental to power markets and will discourage private investment by significantly raising political risk. Similarly, a return to cost-based wholesale rates will be extremely difficult to implement and will effectively negate significant investments made by new market entrants made in reliance on the presence of deregulated wholesale power markets.

4. Interconnection Policy

Competitive generation (including Distributed Generation "DG") and wholesale power markets have been hindered by grid interconnection policies and procedures that restrict new entry. The lack of a uniform and effective interconnection policy creates uncertainty, delay and unnecessary costs in development of new generation capacity and DG technologies. To correct this problem, FERC must develop and enforce standardized, non-discriminatory interconnection procedures.

5. Federal Transmission and Generation Siting Policy

An efficient and reliable interstate wholesale market requires construction of new transmission and generation facilities. Siting and permitting problems have frustrated construction of new facilities. Consistent with rules for certification of natural gas facilities, granting condemnation rights to private parties that have obtained federal authorization to construct facilities can significantly reduce these problems. In addition, Federal Agencies and Tribunal Governments should streamline the regulatory processes to enable expedited construction and efficient operation of energy infrastructure.

6. Demand Reduction Incentives

The Administration should mandate the creation of a regional demand exchange (implemented by mandatory RTOs) that would allow large consumers to post bids for the reduction of demand. If implemented expeditiously, such a mechanism can have an immediate impact in reducing demand this summer.

7. California Power Crisis

The political leadership in California has made limited progress in solving its power crisis. All of the above items would mitigate this crisis.

8. Natural Gas Supply Outlook

There are concerns that natural gas supplies may not be adequate to meet market demand. Yet all studies indicate that remaining economically recoverable resources in North American are ample for decades to come. These supplies can be further supplemented by imported liquified natural gas. This will allow natural gas to continue to provide an increasing share of the total energy needs to the U.S.

REV_00264436

ATTACHMENT 4

Time, February 11, 2002

Copyright 2002 Time Inc.
Time

February 11, 2002; Pg. 16

HEADLINE Getting The Ear Of Dick Cheney

BYLINE Michael Weisskopf and Adam Zagorin

Dick Cheney has taken a hard line against the General Accounting Office, refusing its efforts to get information on meetings held by his energy task force. Critics suspect that Cheney is stonewalling to conceal the Administration's links with bankrupt energy giant Enron. But Cheney may be hiding more than that. Several other energy companies had opportunities to influence the Administration's energy policy, with both persuasion and money. A key task-force meeting, sources tell TIME, was held by Cheney in the White House on May 3. Among attendees were two lobbyists for electric utilities: former Montana Governor and now G.O.P. chairman Marc Racicot and former G.O.P. chairman Haley Barbour. Two weeks later, Cheney's report gave the lobbyists much of what they wanted, including a re-evaluation of a costly clean-air rule, called the new-source review, which requires new pollution controls when power plants are expanded. While he was lobbying for these energy interests, Barbour was also raising at least $ 250,000 for a May 21 G.O.P. gala honoring President Bush. The group of utilities Barbour was representing, led by Southern Co., gave $ 150,000 to the event. The night before the gala, Cheney held a glitzy reception at the vice-presidential mansion for hundreds of the fete's sponsors and longtime party donors.

Another company that had entree to the Cheney task force was Peabody Energy, a coal behemoth whose holding company and top officer have given nearly $ 200,000 to the President and his party since Bush took office, including $ 25,000 for the May gala. Sources say Peabody chairman Irl Engelhardt and other energy executives met in March with two task-force members, Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham and Bush economic adviser Larry Lindsey. Cheney's group also heard in March from officials from the nuclear-energy industry--whose trade association, the Nuclear Energy Institute, contributed $ 100,000 to the Bush event. Both coal and nuclear power got major endorsements in the task-force report.

Racicot, who stopped lobbying after taking over the G.O.P. last month, said he didn't raise funds for the Bush bash. Barbour did not return calls for comment. Cheney spokeswoman Mary Matalin denied any link between task-force access and fund raising, saying the Veep had no idea who was financing the gala.

--By Michael Weisskopf and Adam Zagorin

ATTACHMENT 5

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

May 4, 2001

The Honorable W.J. "Billy" Tauzin, Chairman
The Honorable John D. Dingell, Ranking Minority Member Committee on Energy and Commerce
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

The Honorable Dan Burton, Chairman
The Honorable Henry A. Waxman, Ranking Minority Member Committee on Government Reform
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Gentlemen:

This is in response to the letter of April 19, 2001 from the ranking minority members of your Committees to Mr. Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director of the National Energy Policy Development Group (NEPDG). The letter sought information regarding compliance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA)(5 U.S.C. Appx. 2) by the NEPDG. Please be advised that the FACA does not apply to the NEPDG, noting especially that FACA by its own terms does not apply to a group "composed wholly of full-time, or permanent part-time, officers or employees of the Federal Government."

As a matter of comity between the legislative and executive branches, with due regard for the constitutional separation of powers and the rights of Americans to petition their government, and reserving all legal authorities and privileges that may apply, we are pleased to provide the enclosed information, which will enable you to conclude independently that the establishment and activities of the NEPDG are not inconsistent with the FACA.

Sincerely,

David S. Addington
Counsel to the Vice President

Enclosure as stated

REV_00264440

RESPONSES OF ANDREW LUNDQUIST, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR FOR THE NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP TO QUESTIONS FROM THE RANKING MINORITY MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REFORM
AND THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE QUESTION (1): (1) It is our understanding that you are directing a task force charged with examining and formulating energy policy.

RESPONSE (1): The mission of the National Energy Policy Development Group established on January 29, 2001 is to develop a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate Federal, State and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy. To carry out that mission, the Group gathers information, deliberates and makes recommendations to the President. Ultimately, the Group is to report its recommended national energy policy to the President.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (1)(a): (a) Please provide a complete list of task force members and staff assigned to the task force, identifying the employer of the member or staff. In the case of federal employees, please identify the department or agency for which the member or staff works.

RESPONSE (1)(a): The National Energy Policy Development Group consists of the following officers of the Federal Government: the Vice President, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Transportation, Secretary of Energy, Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy, Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, and Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs. The Vice President may invite the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to participate. The Vice President may invite the participation of the Secretary of State when the work of the Group involves international affairs and, as appropriate, other officers of the Federal government. The Vice President has invited the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to participate. The Vice President presides at the meetings of the Group and directs its work. The Group is supported by five professionals employed by the Department of Energy and assigned for this purpose to the Office of the Vice President: an Executive Director, a Deputy Director, two Senior Professional Staff Members, and a Professional Staff Member. In addition, an individual appointed as a White House Fellow who is assigned to the Office of the Vice President provides support to the Group.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (1)(b): (b) Please identify any task force members and staff who are not full-time federal employees. In the case of any member or staff who is a part-time federal employee, identify the hours per week that person works for the federal government and when that person began working for the federal government.

REV_00264441

RESPONSE (1)(b): The National Energy Policy Development Group consists solely of officers of the Federal Government. The six individuals identified in Response (1)(a) above who provide support to the Group (hereafter "Group support staff") are all full-time Federal employees. For brief periods the employment status of two of the six individuals (from February 1 through 12, 2001 in the case of the Executive Director, and from February 7 through 12, 2001 in the case of the Deputy Director) was as consultants to the Department of Energy while the Department was processing their entrance-on-duty papers; they had no employer other than the Department of Energy during those brief periods. Please note that the Government officers who are on the National Energy Policy Development Group have assistants at their individual departments and agencies who help them with review and drafting of materials and may attend Group meetings with them. Those departments and agencies could advise on the personnel status of those assistants if it were material.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (1)(c): (c) Please identify any task force member or staff who, at the time of any task force meeting, was serving as a contractor to, or temporary full time employee of, the federal government while on leave from non-federal employment. For each member or staff identified, please include the name of that person's non-federal employer.

RESPONSE (1)(c): None of the government officers who compose the National Energy Policy Development Group, nor any of the individuals on the Group's support staff, was, at the time of any Group meeting, serving as a contractor to, or temporary full time employee of, the federal government while on leave from non-federal employment.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (2): (2) It is our understanding that the task force has conducted a series of "stakeholder meetings" on energy policy and legislation at federal facilities over the past few months.

RESPONSE (2): The National Energy Policy Development Group has not held such meetings. Individuals on the Group support staff have met with many individuals who are not Federal employees to gather information relevant to the Group's work, but such meetings do not involve deliberations or any effort to achieve consensus on advice or recommendations. These meetings by the Group's staff were simply forums to collect individual views rather than to bring a collective judgment to bear. The Group's staff held such meetings with a broad representation of people potentially affected by the Group's work, including individuals involved with companies or industries (e.g., in the electricity, telecommunications, coal mining, petroleum, gas, refining, bioenergy, solar energy, nuclear energy, pipeline, railroad and automobile manufacturing sectors); environmental, wildlife, and marine advocacy; State and local utility regulation and energy management; research and teaching at universities; research and analysis at policy organizations (i.e., think-tanks); energy consumers, including consumption by businesses and individuals; a major labor union; and about three dozen Members of Congress or their staffs.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (2)(a): (a) Please provide a list of all task force meetings held, including the date and location of each meeting.

RESPONSE (2)(a): The Vice President has convened the National Energy Policy Development Group on the following dates in the year 2001, and all such meetings have been in the White House Complex: January 29, February 9 and 16, March 12 and 19, April 3, 11, and 18, and May 2.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (2)(b): (b) Please describe in detail the purpose of these meetings. For each meeting, please explain if the meeting was conducted in order to obtain advice or recommendations about policy or proposed legislation. Please explain whether each meeting had a fixed agenda and/or a defined purpose.

RESPONSE (2)(b): The National Energy Policy Development Group, consisting only of Government officers, has met at each of its meetings for the purpose carrying out its mission to develop a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate Federal, State and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy. At those meetings, to carry out its assigned mission, the Group has reviewed relevant information, deliberated, and formulated potential recommendations. With regard to meetings with individuals involving the Group's support staff, please see Response (2).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (2)(c): (c) Please describe the outcome of each meeting. Please explain to what extent each meeting resulted in the formulation of specific proposals or recommendations. Please specify to what extent the task force incorporated or adopted any suggestions or advice received at each meeting from non-federal "stakeholders", or to what extent it modified its proposals based on input received from non-federal "stakeholders" at the meeting.

RESPONSE (2)(c): Each of the National Energy Policy Development Group's meetings to date have advanced its mission as set forth in Response (1). Each of the meetings of the Group's support staff described in Response (2) gathered, in support of the Group's mission, information relevant to the Group's work.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (2)(d): (d) For each task force meeting that has occurred to date, please provide a complete accounting of all attendees. Please include the name and employer of each attendee as well as the name of all clients represented by each person for the purpose of any particular task force meeting. Please indicate if any participants received any compensation for their involvement in a meeting or meetings.

REV_00264443

RESPONSE (2)(d): The officers of the Government constituting the National Energy Policy Development Group attended the Group's meetings. The Group's support staff attended the Group's meetings. Other employees on the staff of the Vice President attended the Group's meetings. The Government officers who constitute the National Energy Policy Development Group have assistants at their departments and agencies who attended the Group's meetings with them.

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3): (3) The Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA) defines an advisory committee as "any committee, board, commission, council, conference, panel, task force, or other similar group, or any subcommittee or other subgroup thereof . . . which is . . . established or utilized by one or more agencies, in the interest of obtaining advice or recommendations for . . . one or more agencies or officers of the Federal government . . ." The Act requires that the meetings of such advisory committees be noticed in advance, open to the general public, and on the record, except under certain limited circumstances.

RESPONSE (3): Section 3(2) of the FACA provides that the term "advisory committee" as used in the FACA excludes "any committee that is composed wholly of full-time, or permanent part-time, officers or employees of the Federal Government." The National Energy Policy Development Group is composed wholly of full-time officers of the Federal Government. Accordingly, the FACA requirements to which Committee Questions (3)(a) through (3)(f) refer do not apply. See also Response (2).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(a): (a) Was advance notice of these task force meetings provided to the general public?

RESPONSE (3)(a): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(b): (b) How many of these task force meetings took place on federal property or involved the attendance of federal personnel?

RESPONSE (3)(b): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(c): (c) Were these meetings open to the general public?

RESPONSE (3)(c): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(d): (d) If these meetings were not open to the general public, why not and under what authority?

RESPONSE (3)(d): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(e): (e) Were any transcripts or detailed minutes of these meetings kept by you or any other attendee or participant?

RESPONSE (3)(e): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (3)(f): (f) If no transcripts or minutes were kept, please explain why not and under what authority?

RESPONSE (3)(f): See Response (3).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4): (4) As stated previously, we have been informed that only certain "stakeholders" were invited to participate in these meetings.

RESPONSE (4): The National Energy Policy Development Group has not held such meetings. To support the Group in the performance of its mission, one or more of the individuals on the Group's support staff have met with many individuals who are not Federal employees to gather from them information relevant to the Group's work. The non-Federal employees from whom the Group's support staff has thus far sought information constitute a broad range of sources of information; see Response (2).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(a): (a) Was any executive branch agency or any of its personnel responsible in any way for determining who would or would not be invited to participate in these meetings?

RESPONSE (4)(a): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(b): (b) Please provide a detailed explanation of the process by which each non-federal participant in these meetings was determine to be a "stakeholder" in energy policy.

RESPONSE (4)(b): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(c): (c) Please provide a detailed explanation of the process by which the task force decided not to meet with any private citizens or groups.

RESPONSE (4)(c): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(d): (d) Was the governor of any state invited to participate in these meetings? If so, which? If not, why not?

RESPONSE (4)(d): See Response (4).

REV_00264445

36	Filed: 03/07/2002 Entered: 03/13/2002	Transcript
	Docket Text: TRANSCRIPT for dates 2/28/02 Court Reporter: Frank J. Rangus, OCR. (td,)
34	Filed: 03/08/2002 Entered: 03/08/2002 Terminated: 05/23/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss Amended Complaint by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit 1)(Buchholz, David)
35	Filed: 03/08/2002 Entered: 03/08/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER granting extension of time to file amicus brief.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 3/8/2002. (lcegs2,)
37	Filed: 03/11/2002 Entered: 03/14/2002 Terminated: 03/18/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Amicus Brief by SIERRA CLUB. (td,)
38	Filed: 03/15/2002 Entered: 03/15/2002	Response to any document
	Docket Text: RESPONSE to NRDC Motion for Extension, or, in the alternative, Motion for change of amicus briefing schedule filed by SPENCER ABRAHAM, JOSEPH M. ALLBAUGH, JOSHUA BOLTON, RICHARD CHENEY, MITCHELL E. DANIELS JR.,, DONALD EVANS, LARRY LINDSEY, NORMAN MINETA, NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, GALE NORTON, PAUL O'NEILL, COLIN POWELL, ANN M. VENEMAN, CHRISTINE T. WHITMAN, PATRICK H. WOOD III. (Buchholz, David)
39	Filed: 03/15/2002 Entered: 03/18/2002	Summons Returned Executed
	Docket Text: RETURN OF SERVICE/AFFIDAVIT of Summons and Complaint Executed. HALEY BARBOUR served on 2/27/2002, answer due 3/19/2002 (td,)
40	Filed: 03/15/2002 Entered: 03/18/2002 Terminated: 03/18/2002	Motion for Miscellaneous Relief
	Docket Text: MOTION to join Sierra Club's amicus filing on 4/2/02 by NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL. (td,)
49	Filed: 03/15/2002 Entered: 03/22/2002 Terminated: 07/11/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss this action against him by MARK RACICOT. (td,)
--	Filed: 03/18/2002 Entered: 03/18/2002	Terminate Motions
	Docket Text: Order amending briefing schedule for parties and amicus and rescheduling hearing date to May 2, 2002. Motions terminated. () (GK,)

REV_00264374

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(e): (e) Were any state public utility commissioners invited to participate in these meetings? If so, which? If not, why not?

RESPONSE (4)(e): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(f): (f) Were any representatives of organized labor invited to participate in these meetings? If so, which? If not, why not?

RESPONSE (4)(f): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(g): (g) Were any representatives of consumer advocacy groups invited to participate in these meetings? If so, which? If not, why not?

RESPONSE (4)(g): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(h): (h) Was the National Federation of Independent Businesses or any other small business representative invited to participate in these meetings? If not, why not?

RESPONSE (4)(h): See Response (4).

COMMITTEE QUESTION (4)(i): (i) Did the Department of Energy notify any Member of Congress about the task force's meetings prior to the first meeting or invite any Member or congressional staff to attend any of the "stakeholder" meetings?

RESPONSE (4)(i): To the best of my knowledge, no such notifications or invitations by the Department of Energy occurred with regard to any Group support staff meetings with non-Federal employees, nor would the Department of Energy have had a role with regard to such meetings that would have called for the Department of Energy to make such notifications or invitations.

Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director
National Energy Policy Development Group

5/4/01
Date

REV_00264446

ATTACHMENT 6

Source: All Sources > News > Transcripts
Terms: nightline vice president cheney (Edit Search)

Select for FOCUS™ or Delivery

ABC News July 25, 2001 Wednesday

Copyright 2001 Burrelle's Information Services
ABC News

SHOW: ABC News: Nightline (11:35 PM AM ET) - ABC

July 25, 2001 Wednesday

TYPE: Interview

LENGTH: 4176 words

HEADLINE: A Conversation With Dick Cheney; Cheney discusses his first six months in office

ANCHORS: TED KOPPEL

BODY:
Announcer: July 25th, 2001.

Vice President DICK CHENEY: (From file footage) That I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

TED KOPPEL, host:

It's been six months since he became vice president of the United States.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: And my doctors tell me that I'm not--not up to the task, I'd be the first one to hang it up. The idea that any member of Congress can demand from me a list of everybody I meet with--there's been this claim it was done in secret, but it wasn't. KOPPEL: I'm reminded of what one of your predecessors once famously said about the office of the vice presidency not being worth a bucket of warm spit. Only, I don't think he...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I think you cleaned it up.

KOPPEL: ...used the word spit.

Tonight, A Conversation With Dick Cheney.

Announcer: From ABC News, this is NIGHTLINE. Reporting tonight from the White House, Ted Koppel.

KOPPEL: Congressman, White House chief of staff, secretary of defense and, for the past six months, vice president of the United States. Dick Cheney is a substantive man in what over the years has sometimes been a largely ceremonial job. If anything, Vice President Cheney is occasionally given too much credit when it comes to doing the heavy lifting in this administration. That has focused an extraordinary amount of attention on his health. Is he doing too much? What would happen if he couldn't continue in the job? Tonight he will talk about his health and the public's appetite to know about it in some detail. He will also answer charges that he and other members of the Bush administration wrap the same cloak of secrecy around the creation of their energy policy that Hillary Clinton once used while formulating a new health plan. He doesn't buy the analogy. He'll explain why.

REV_00264448

Dick Cheney is the man who once rallied Republican supporters by pointing to what he said was an under-funded US military, and promising that help is on the way. Now it is the Joint Chiefs and some senior civilians at the Pentagon complaining about what's in the Bush/Cheney military budget. The vice president will talk about a major change in US military strategy. No longer will the United States have the ability to fight two simultaneous wars. All of that and more in a wide-ranging interview with Vice President Cheney, conducted earlier today at the executive office building right next to the White House.

You talk about the pros and cons. In other words, the--the--the vice presidency is said to be an enormously frustrating job because you're not the boss.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: This president has given you a lot of authority, given you a lot of power. Talk about the good and the bad.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, I--I find it to be virtually all good. I never planned to come back to government. This is my fifth tour, my third time in the White House, and I really thought I'd completed my time in government. And to have the opportunity to come back now at my stage in life, 60 years old, and get to do it one more time, sort of correct all those mistakes you made earlier in your career, is really a...(unintelligible).

KOPPEL: Making policy.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: And a chance to pol--participate in a policy-making process, he has given me a lot of responsibility. We function very much as a team, which is exactly what he said he wanted when I signed on.

KOPPEL: You've made reference to the enormous amount of experience that you bring to this job. So, I have to ask you, as someone who knows Washington as well as you do, and who knows that the one thing that drives Congress crazy, the one thing that drives the press crazy, the one thing that is always going to be trouble is secrecy.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: Well, why did you run your--your energy study, your energy meetings the way that you did? Why to this day haven't you revealed who participated in those meetings and what they had to tell you?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, that's simply not accurate, Ted. There's been this charge that it was run in secret. But it was run the same way we do everything else with respect to policy. Same way we make economic policy or education policy. It was a group of Cabinet officials and agency heads. This is the report we produced. We published thousands of them. It has not been secret. The folks that were responsible for putting it together are all listed right up here in the front. It's the Cabinet and the agency heads...

KOPPEL: What about the experts that you consulted? I mean, you--you know...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: But we didn't--I mean, there's--there was this allegation that somehow we did what the Clintons did back in '93 on health. We did not.

KOPPEL: Exactly.

75

REV_00264449

Vice Pres. CHENEY: We were very sensitive to that and very careful of it. When you...

KOPPEL: Tell me where the--tell me where the difference is?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, the--it's when you bring in...

KOPPEL: What was different about what you did and what Hillary Clinton...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: ...outsiders and incorporate them in the policy-making process, that then certain requirements with respect to federal advisory committees kicks in and certain requirements have to be met. We didn't do that. We did this exactly the same way, for example, that we put together the economic policy or tax policy. And there's been this claim that it was done in secret, but it wasn't. It wasn't anymore secret than anything else we do.

KOPPEL: The inference that people have drawn--but, before I get to that, let me just ask you, what--what is different about what Hillary Clinton did with the health program from what you folks did with the energy policy?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: She brought in outsiders, people who were not government employees, who were not full-time...

KOPPEL: You didn't do that?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No.

KOPPEL: No outsiders?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, not as part of the deliberating pro--process.

KOPPEL: Well...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No, that's very important.

KOPPEL: ...are you finessing that just a little bit too finely?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No. No, you're mis--misreading what the statute says. There's a big difference. We meet all the time behind closed doors to make economic policy or to make education policy. Now, you may deal with outside groups. They may have points of view they want to represent. We heard from energy people. We heard from many environment people. We heard from consumer groups. I met with congressman and senators and governors. We heard from a broad variety of folks out there, but they were not in the meetings where we put together the policy and made recommendations to the president. That's the big difference.

KOPPEL: Isn't--isn't that a fine point?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That's a very important point.

KOPPEL: In other words, if we--if we have one meeting here...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: ...with a bunch of people, and because of your background and the president's background in the energy industry yourselves...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

REV_00264450

KOPPEL: ...the assumption is that you did consult with a lot of your pals in the--in the energy industry. If you consult with them in this room, and then you adjourn to the next room to make policy, that--that...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That's not the way it works.

KOPPEL: That satisfies the law?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That is--that is not the way it worked. In fact, we heard from a wide variety of different groups. But we did not trigger the statute that specifically provides for how you deal with advisory committees, for formally constituted advisory committee that's making policy, like the Social Security Commission, for example. There's a classic example of a group of outside people, not full-time government employees, who are meeting to deliberate and to come up with a policy recommendation. They meet in open session. The press is present. You don't do that when you sit down, for example, with the--the secretary of the treasury and the Council of Economic Advisers and director of OMB to make major budget decisions, or make...

KOPPEL: But why not just take the wind out of the sails of all your critics and say, 'Here's a list of the people we consulted'?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, there's--there's an--there isn't anybody we met with there that would be at all surprising. But there's an important principle here, I think, Ted, and that's the fact that what we have is a request from a congressman for a list of all the people we met with, not just in terms of the energy or everybody I met with, for example, during that period of time, as well as what they talked to me about. In effect, what we're saying here, if in fact we were to respond to that request, is that any member of Congress can demand to know who I meet with, what I talk to them about on a daily basis. I would have no ability to meet with anybody in confidence.

KOPPEL: So, on a--on a matter of principle then you are not going to--you're not going to reveal that list.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I think it's going to have to be resolved in court, and I think that's perfectly appropriate. I think, in fact, this is the first time the GAO has ever issued a so-called demand letter to a president/vice president. I'm a duly elected constitutional office. The idea that any member of Congress can demand from me a list of everybody I meet with and what they say to me strikes me as--as inappropriate, and not in keeping with the Constitution...(unintelligible).

KOPPEL: You're saying--you're saying to Congressman Waxman, then, 'See you in federal court.'

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I think that's--may well be how it gets resolved, unless he decides he wants to back off. We, in fact, have responded to a lot of what they requested. We've given them financial records, how we spent money. We thinks that's an appropriate question for the GAO to ask. And, as I say, none of this is secret. These are the 105 recommendations, the product of the task force is all right here. All of that's been public. So, we've complied to a large extent. But this request that in fact we're suppose to provide him with this information with respect to people we consult with or people who come see us, as well as give him information on what was said and those meetings in the executive branch between the vice president and other individuals strikes me as--as inappropriate, and we think he's out of line in making that request.

KOPPEL: We've got to take short break. A related question on OPEC when we come back.

77

REV_00264451

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Yeah.

KOPPEL: Back with Vice President Cheney in just a moment.

Announcer: This is ABC News: NIGHTLINE, brought to you by...

(Commercial break)

KOPPEL: We are, I've just been informed, in the ceremonial office of the vice president. Thank you for having us here. Here with Vice President Dick Cheney.

We've been talking about energy policy. So I guess it's appropriate to ask you about OPEC's apparent intent to cut production by one million barrels a day in September. That's going to be problematic, isn't it? I mean, you know, just as we see the price of gasoline going down, just as it looks as though the energy crisis was not as severe, at least in the immediate sense as we may have thought, here comes OPEC and--and the president was indicating he's not happy about it.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, what the president said is that the key force is to avoid price spikes. If you get a big run-up in fuel prices, that clearly could adversely effect the American economy. That'll adversely effect the global economy. What's really in our interest as consumers, as well as in the interest as suppliers, is stability over time. When you get these sharp swings in prices everybody may say hurrah if oil goes down to $10 a barrel again, but what happens when that occurs is you drive out a lot of marginal production, which is in the US, shut it in. You lose that, become more dependent on foreign sources. Plus, you also lose the investment that would otherwise occur in non-OPEC sources overseas. And when we get these rapid run-downs in price, it really isn't in anybody's interest. It's always followed eventually by a--you know, if it hits $10, it's only a matter of months before we're back up to 30 or 35.

KOPPEL: Particularly in this community, perception of reality is often more important than objective reality itself. Perception is that you folks are a little hard on the environment. Perception is that you were--you were late to the mantra of saving energy rather than new energy production.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: I know you claim you've--you've always been an advocate of that. But, again, that's not the way you've been perceived. Your mistake? Our mistake?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, I would argue, first of all, that we've been very sensitive right along to the environment and to the need for conservation and renewables. If you look at our report, virtually all of the financial incentives, for example, that we've recommended to the Congress, involve conservation and renewables. We don't have any big financial package in there for conventional production. When we put the report together we right up front made a decision the very first meeting, we had to spend a lot of time on those issues or we wouldn't have a credible report. And we've never changed that.

Now the critics, including The New York Times, for example, editorialized against the report before they ever saw it, have made the allegation that all we care about is production and supply. And that's just not true. We have made the point repeatedly that conservation doesn't close the gap. It doesn't get us there, but it's a very important part of our overall strategy. It's one of the reasons we've gotten to where we are. As a country, we've significantly increased our energy efficiency over the years. And the charge, frankly, isn't true, but it often times it gets picked up and carried, sometimes by the press, and as well as used by our opponents as a way to attack the report.

But the report, just to give you a for instance, Ted, out of 12 recommendations the Sierra Club came up with not long ago on energy, in their own energy plan, 11 of them are in our report. So the notion that somehow we've created a report here that is anti-environment, you'd have to say, 'Well, the Sierra Club is anti-environment, too.' And it's just not true.

KOPPEL: Let's talk about military budget for a moment. And you have been criticized by one of the most conservative magazines in town, indeed the Weekly Standard.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: You probably read the--the editorial. The Weekly Standard is suggesting to the secretary of defense and his deputy, Paul Wolfowitz, they may want to step down, because what you guys, you and the president, are doing to the military budget is a far cry from that clarion cry of Dick Cheney during the campaign, "Help is on the way." They're saying, in point of fact, help is not on the way. You guys are gutting the military budget.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: They're wrong. And the man who wrote the editorial was not a supporter of ours in the campaign, anyway. There are big changes that are needed in the military. And it was mistreated, I think, for the last eight years during the Clinton administration. We're still very much saddled with the old Cold War force, and there has not been any new investment in new capabilities moving forward. What Don Rumsfeld has been asked to do, and I think he has a good start on, is putting together a military that makes sense for the 21st century. That'll mean a new strategy, a new set of assumptions about what we need to defend against, and what the threats are out there and what our priorities ought to be in terms of spending.

KOPPEL: Don Rumsfeld came to you asking for a $35 billion increase. He got 18.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I don't know a Cabinet member who wouldn't like to have more money in their budget, but he got more than 18. He got 18 in this most recent go around, but we provided a supplemental in '01 of...

KOPPEL: Of five.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: ...almost 5.6 billion, particular.

KOPPEL: But of the initial increase...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: We have provided an increase, as well, to cover inflation. And we put in extra money that the president pledged over and above the 18 during the course of the campaign for military pay. And all of that's been--been folded in. Now, we'd like to do more, but it's the biggest percentage increase in the defense budget since about 1985.

KOPPEL: If, in fact, you guys are going to be spending 50, 100, 200, who knows, maybe as high as $500 billion on the--the defense initiative, the....

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Ballistic missile defense.

KOPPEL: ...ballistic missile defense initiative, the money has got to come out of somewhere, doesn't it?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm-hmm.

KOPPEL: Where is it going to come from?

REV_00264453

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, we need to do a much better job of managing the Defense Department. It's become very, very hard to run the Defense Department these days. When I was secretary 10 years ago, the defense authorization bill was 70 pages long. Today it's 900 pages long. These are earmarks, red tape requirements that the Congress has loaded over the years onto the Defense Department, forces you to keep bases open you don't need, to operate installations at inefficient levels, 40 or 50 percent of capacity, to buy things you don't need, to buy equipment at the least efficient rate, instead of going out and buying what you need.

KOPPEL: We've got to take a short break. When we come back, I want to talk to you about the--the two war premise that has always existed...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: OK.

KOPPEL: ...over the past 40 or 50 years. Back with the vice president in just a moment.

(Commercial break)

KOPPEL: And we're back for our final segment with the vice president of the United States, Dick Cheney.

Mr. Cheney, we were talking before, very briefly, about the--the two war scenario. The premise ever since the Cold War and before has been that the United States military has got to be capable of simultaneously fighting wars in two different theaters. Do you still subscribe to that?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, the--the assumption that's out there now is one I put in when I was secretary of defense. When the Cold War ended, we went from the posture of having the forces in place to fight an all-out global conflict with the Soviet that could go nuclear. When the Soviet Union went away, we then moved to this two major theater contingency, based upon the notion, for example, of defending in the Gulf--Persian Gulf and simultaneously Korea.

KOPPEL: Korea.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I think now we can afford to change that, but that's a question that Don Rumsfeld has been asked to look at and spend a lot of time on. But I think we're today in a--in a radically different situation with respect to--to world threat situation. I think, for example, one of the things we need to focus more on today than we have in the past is this notion of homeland defense. It's hard, if you look out around the globe, to find a nation out there today that can mount a significant conventional assault against the United States or our forces. There are few places that are sensitive, obviously, but nothing like what we faced all those years of the Cold War, or even when we were dealing with Saddam Hussein in the Gulf.

KOPPEL: Let me use the last couple of minutes that we have together to bring you back to this notion of nothing drives Washington crazier than secrecy. No one can argue that the--the individual, the man, Dick Cheney, has a right to keep what's between him and his doctor private. But you're the vice president of the United States. People would like to know what medicines you're on. People would like to know what you're EKG rate is. People would like to know--there's a lot of stuff people would like to know, and you're saying, in effect, 'Yeah, you'd like to know it, but I'm not going to tell you.' Why?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, I would argue, Ted, that we have provided an enormous amount of information. I can't--when I get a head cold that's--that's news. I go to the grocery store, what I buy is in the newspapers. If I go to the restaurant, what I eat shows up in the Reliable Source column in The Washington Post.

REV_00264454

KOPPEL: That's because you're vice president of the United States.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well....

KOPPEL: We--we--we think we have a claim to your private life.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: My--that's right, and my doctors have on at least three occasions given extensive press briefings. The most recent when I went in and had a pacemaker defibrillator implanted here a few weeks ago. They stood up and answered questions for a very long time afterwards, from the most aggressive folks in the press corp, talking exactly about my case and my circumstance, my situation. I'm probably the best known heart patient in America. I think we've provided a vast amount of information.

KOPPEL: Then why not provide the rest?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, I think we've provided virtually everything? What does he want to know, my cholesterol level? It's 170.

KOPPEL: Well...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: You know, my pulse rate is perfectly normal. My blood pressure perfectly normal, 88 over 120.

KOPPEL: And what--what medications are you on?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I'm on a wide variety of traditional heart medications.

KOPPEL: Do you ever, when you're coming to work, do you ever feel, 'I'm pushing this a little hard.'

Vice Pres. CHENEY: That I'm pushing it hard?

KOPPEL: Yeah, that you're--I mean...

Vice Pres. CHENEY: No, I'm--Ted, this may be a big deal for you or for others who are watching, but I've lived with this for well over 20 years, since 1978, and I, you know, I'm used to it. I pace myself. I take care of myself. I do those things I need to do. But, I have--say we have provided a vast amount of information to people. If I ever reach a point where I can't do the job or my doctors tell me that I'm not--not up to the task, I'll be the first one to hang it up. I don't need the grief. But I am here to do a job for the president. I think I am able to do it perfectly acceptably, that there's no reason in this day and age why somebody with coronary artery disease can't live a perfectly normal life, and I think I'm proof positive of that.

KOPPEL: You look as though you've lost a little weight, have you?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: I have. I have.

KOPPEL: All right, how much weight have you lost?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Over 20 pounds.

KOPPEL: Good for you.

81

REV_00264455

41	Filed: 03/18/2002 Entered: 03/18/2002	Reply in Support
	Docket Text: REPLY in Support of Motion re [40] To Join Sierra Club's Amicus Filing on April 2, 2002 filed by NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL. (Crystal, Howard)
42	Filed: 03/18/2002 Entered: 03/18/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER extending briefing schedule and rescheduling Oral Argument to May 2, 2002. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on March 18, 2002. (GK,)
45	Filed: 03/19/2002 Entered: 03/21/2002 Terminated: 07/11/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss counts I and II of the amended complaint by HALEY BARBOUR. (td,)

Doc. No.	Dates	Description
43	Filed: 03/20/2002 Entered: 03/20/2002 Terminated: 03/21/2002	Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply
	Docket Text: MOTION for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
44	Filed: 03/21/2002 Entered: 03/21/2002	Order on Motion for Extension of Time to File Response/Reply
	Docket Text: ORDER granting Motion for Extension of Time for one day to File Response/Reply re [43] [43] Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 3/21/2002. (lcegs2,)
46	Filed: 03/21/2002 Entered: 03/21/2002	Order
	Docket Text: ORDER scheduling status hearing in light of transfer of Sierra Club v. Vice President Cheney et al.Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 03/21/2002. (lcegs2,)
47	Filed: 03/21/2002 Entered: 03/21/2002	Memorandum in Opposition
	Docket Text: Memorandum in Opposition to Motion re [34] to Dismiss filed by JUDICAL WATCH, INC.,. (Orfanedes, Paul)
48	Filed: 03/21/2002 Entered: 03/22/2002 Terminated: 07/11/2002	Motion to Dismiss
	Docket Text: MOTION to Dismiss amended complaint as to him by THOMAS KUHN. (td,)
--	Filed: 03/26/2002 Entered: 03/26/2002	Status Conference
	Docket Text: Minute Entry: Status Conference held on 3/26/2002 before Emmet G. Sullivan ; chambers to issue an order electronically(Court Reporter Frank Rangus.) (clv,)
50	Filed: 03/26/2002 Entered: 03/26/2002	Order

7

REV_00264375

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Mm.

KOPPEL: Good for you. In the area of information that some people would like to have, Senator Lieberman would like to have some information from you and he's threatening to throw out a few subpoenas. Do you got any thoughts on that?

Vice Pres. CHENEY: He's, I guess, issued subpoena threats to some federal agencies in recent days.

KOPPEL: Right.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: You know, I look at that, I think the departments and agencies have been very forthcoming. I think we're back, sort of, the witch hunt mode now in Washington. We're working hard to try to change the tone and what we see there, I think, is--it's politics, as usual.

KOPPEL: You realize, of course, the Democrats would say, 'Wait a second, witch hunt mode? You--you guys...'

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well...

KOPPEL: '...were the ones who were throwing out subpoenas last time around.'

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Well, let's--let's look at it, though. The subpoenas that, in fact, the Republicans went after, there were very serious allegation of campaign finance wrongdoing. There were serious other problems, which we won't enumerate tonight. I'm sure your show covered them adequately when they were--were hot. But there were serious questions about possibility of illicit or improper conduct that the Congress was legitimately looking at. There's no such allegation here now. There hasn't been any such allegation, and , in fact, the administration has cooperated. We've provided a great deal of information to--to the Congress and will continue to do so.

KOPPEL: Mr. Vice President, we're out of time. I thank you for your hospitality. Thank you for talking to me and hope to see you again soon.

Vice Pres. CHENEY: Thank you, Ted.

KOPPEL: I'll be back in a moment.

Announcer: To receive a daily e-mail announcement about each evening's NIGHTLINE and a preview of special broadcasts, logon to the NIGHTLINE page at abcnews.com.

(Commercial break)

KOPPEL: And that's our report for tonight. I'm Ted Koppel at the White House. For all of us here at ABC News, good night.

LOAD-DATE: July 26, 2001

ATTACHMENT 7

GAO
Accountability • Integrity • Reliability

Comptroller General
of the United States

United States General Accounting Office
Washington, DC 20548

Decision of the Comptroller General Concerning NEPDG Litigation
January 30, 2002

As you know, the United States General Accounting Office (GAO) has been engaged in an ongoing effort to obtain certain narrowly defined, factual information concerning the development of the National Energy Policy proposal from Vice President Cheney in his role as Chair of the National Energy Policy Development Group (NEPDG). Importantly, we are only seeking limited information in connection with NEPDG-related matters.

The administration used the NEPDG as a mechanism to, among other things, outreach to selected non-governmental parties and develop a proposed comprehensive energy policy. In addition, contrary to recent assertions, we are not seeking the minutes of these meetings or related notes of the Vice President's staff. This was conveyed to the White House in writing on August 17, 2001. Unfortunately, despite our numerous attempts to reach a reasoned and reasonable accommodation on this matter, to date, the information we requested has not been made available to us.

In his August 2, 2001, letter to both Houses of Congress, the Vice President raised a number of objections to providing the information we requested. Importantly, for both the Congress and GAO, the Vice President challenged GAO's fundamental statutory authority to assist the Congress in connection with its constitutional, legislative and oversight authorities. These challenges went far beyond issues relating to his constitutional position as Vice President and White House staff related matters. As noted in our prior correspondence concerning this matter, the information we are seeking is clearly within our statutory audit and access authority. Accordingly, as provided in our statutory access authority, on July 18, 2001, we issued a formal request for the records. Unfortunately, the statutory 20-day response period passed without any meaningful action by the Office of the Vice President. In accordance with the prescribed statutory process, on August 17, 2001, we reported to the Congress, the President, the Vice President, and other officials that the NEPDG had not provided the requested records. (See enclosed August 17, 2001, report.) While the NEPDG did provide some cost-related documents to GAO, most of these documents were not useful or self-explanatory. Moreover, even though the Vice President and his counsel acknowledge our authority to access cost information, they have not provided us the remaining cost information and explanations requested. Apart from information concerning the Vice President's meetings, they also have not provided us with factual information concerning who the NEPDG staff, including non-White House staff who were assigned to the NEPDG from various government departments and agencies, met with and the purpose of those meetings.

REV_00264458

We strongly disagree with the Vice President's objections to our audit and access authority. Significantly, under GAO's statutory access authority, Congress provided the President and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget a safety valve to preclude judicial enforcement of GAO's access rights. The executive branch has chosen not to use this mechanism. Furthermore, the President has not claimed executive privilege in connection with our request. As previously noted, all of our attempts to reach a reasoned and reasonable accommodation, including reducing the scope of our request, have been rebuffed, and we have now exhausted the statutory process for resolving our access requests. As a result, our only remaining recourse is either to file suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or to forego further assertion of our access rights.

GAO was preparing to go to court in September of this past year until the tragic events of September 11. As I stated last September, prudence dictated that we delay any related legal action given the immediate need for the administration and the Congress to focus on developing our Nation's initial response to our fight against international terrorism and efforts to protect our homeland.

The Congress has a right to the information we are seeking in connection with its consideration of comprehensive energy legislation and its ongoing oversight activities. Energy policy is an important economic and environmental matter with significant domestic and international implications. It affects the lives of each and every American. How it is formulated has understandably been a longstanding interest of the Congress. In addition, the recent bankruptcy of Enron has served to increase congressional interest in energy policy, in general, and NEPDG activities, in particular. This, plus the Senate's expected consideration of comprehensive energy legislation this session, reinforces the need for the information we requested concerning the development of the National Energy Policy proposal. In this regard, we recently received a request for the NEPDG information we are seeking from four Senate committee and subcommittee chairmen with jurisdiction over the matters involved. Importantly, our governing statute requires GAO to perform such committee requests.

Clearly, the formulation and oversight of energy policy and the investigation of Enron-related activities represent important institutional prerogatives of the Congress. Furthermore, a number of other important principles are involved. Failure to provide the information we are seeking serves to undercut the important principles of transparency and accountability in government. These principles are important elements of a democracy. They represent basic principles of "good government" that transcend administrations, partisan politics, and the issues of the moment. As such, they should be vigorously defended. Otherwise, it could erode public confidence in and respect for the institutions of government.

The disclosure of the activities of the NEPDG is also important for precedential reasons. Specifically, the NEPDG was financed with appropriated funds and staffed largely by government department and agency personnel assigned to it. We disagree with the White House position that the formation of energy policy by the NEPDG is beyond congressional oversight and GAO review. Were the Vice President's arguments in this case to prevail, any administration seeking to insulate its activities from oversight and public scrutiny could do so simply by assigning those activities to the Vice President or a body under the White House's direct control.

REV_00264459

In our view, failure to pursue this matter could lead to a pattern of records access denials that would significantly undercut GAO's ability to assist Congress in exercising its legislative and oversight authorities. We would have strongly preferred to avoid litigation in connection with this matter, but given the request by the four Senate committee and subcommittee chairmen, our rights to this information and the important principles and precedents involved, GAO will take the steps necessary to file suit in United States District Court in order to obtain, from the Chair of the NEPDG, the information outlined in our August 17, 2001, report. This will be the first time that GAO has filed suit to enforce our access rights against a federal official. We hope it is the last time that we will have to do so.

We have great confidence in our nation's legal system and look for a timely resolution of this important matter. If you have any questions, comments or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely yours,

[signed]

David M. Walker
Comptroller General
of the United States

cc: President of the United States
Vice President of the United States

Enclosure

REV_00264460

ATTACHMENT 8

****
 TX REPORT ***
****

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO	0614
CONNECTION TEL	9*818*12024561798
SUBADDRESS
CONNECTION ID
ST. TIME	06/25 18:57
USAGE T	02'24
PGS. SENT	7
RESULT	OK

501 School Street, SW
Washington, DC 20024
Phone: 202-646-5172
Fax 202-646-5199

Judicial Watch

Fax

To:	Vice President Cheney	From:	Larry Klayman, Esq.
Fax:	202-456-1798	Date:	June 25, 2001
Phone:		Pages:	7
Re:	Energy Policy Development Group	CC:

☐ Urgent ☐ For Review ☐ Please Comment ☐ Please Reply ☐ Please Recycle

•Comments:

U.S. Postal Service
CERTIFIED MAIL RECEIPT
(Domestic Mail Only; No Insurance Coverage Provided) Postage	$

Certified Fee
Return Receipt Fee (Endorsement Required)
Restricted Delivery Fee (Endorsement Required)
Total Postage & Fees	$ 86

DC DEPARTMENT PLAZA STA
JUN 26 2001
Postmark Here

Recipient's Name (Please Print Clearly) (to be completed by mailer)
RON RICHARD B. CHENEY
Street, Apt. No.; or PO Box No.

0600 0025 5378 1828

REV_00264462

Judicial Watch

Because no one is above the law.

June 25, 2001

BY CERTIFIED MAIL & FAX (202-456-1798)

The Honorable Richard B. Cheney
Vice President of the United States of America
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501

Re: National Energy Policy Development Group, A De Facto Federal Advisory Committee.

Dear Mr. Vice President:

Judicial Watch, Inc., (hereinafter "Judicial Watch"), is a non-profit, public interest law firm that investigates and prosecutes government abuse and corruption.

Recent press reports have detailed the operations and staffing of the National Energy Policy Development Group, (hereinafter, "NEPDG")[1]. It is clear, based on the political appointments of energy lobbyists and attorneys to senior departmental positions within the government by the Administration, official statements by Administration spokesmen, press reports concerning the activities of energy industry lobbying organizations, as well as other documentation obtained under the Freedom of Information Act (hereinafter, "FOIA"), that the NEPDG is tantamount to a federal advisory committee (hereinafter, "the Committee") as defined in the Federal Advisory Committee Act (hereinafter, "FACA"). 5 U.S.C. App. 2. As such, the NEPDG must file a charter, must allow input from interested persons, must comply with the FOIA and the Government in the Sunshine Act, must publish notice of its meetings in the Federal Register, and must have a board that is fairly balanced in terms of the points of view represented on the Committee, among other requirements of FACA. See generally 5 U.S.C. App. 2.

Our specific concerns are illustrated by the appointment of key American Petroleum

---

[1]Fineman, Howard and Isikoff, Michael; "Big Energy at the Table; Winning Support for Your Agenda Is Easy When Your Allies Fill Out the Administration's Top Chairs," Newsweek Magazine, May 14, 2001, (Attached).

501 School Street, SW • Suite 725 • Washington, DC 20024 • Tel: (202) 646-5172 • Fax: (202) 646-5199

REV_00264463

Institute, (including other energy trade organizations) lobbyists, attorneys, and leaders, such as J. Steven Griles and Thomas Sansonetti, to senior Administration posts with authority bearing directly on the energy policies they represented in a private business capacity. Given the unfortunate ethical history of recent memory concerning conflicts of interest in The White House, Judicial Watch believes it is in the public interest for the Administration to avoid even an appearance of possible conflict of interests.

Judicial Watch respectfully requests that, in light of the questionable legal and ethical practices, negative publicity, and public outrage surrounding Hillary Rodham Clinton's 1994 national health-care policy development group, you direct the NEPDG to abide by the FACA. The NEPDG's re-constitution under the provisions of the FACA will instill public trust and confidence in the operations of the Committee, and insure that national policy is formulated, discussed and acted upon in a manner consistent with the best traditions of our Constitutional Republic.

As a public interest law firm, educational foundation and member of the media, Judicial Watch encourages open, accountable government. We trust that you support the same principles, wherever practicable, in the operations of all three branches of government. Certainly, national energy policy is a matter all Americans are keenly interested in, and it is in the public interest for our public servants to engage in an open dialogue and exchange of ideas and options. One positive step towards that goal would be your acknowledgment of the NEPDG as a de facto advisory committee under the FACA , and to bring its operations into compliance with all appropriate laws and regulations.

Consistent with our assertion that the NEPDG is a Committee under the FACA, Judicial Watch respectfully requests, under the provisions of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. 552, and its regulations, copies of all minutes and final decision documents of NEPDG meetings from January 20, 2001 to the present, as well as a listing (including addresses) of all persons and entities that participated in NEPDG meetings, either directly or indirectly through agents and/or intermediaries. Thank you for your expected cooperation in responding to our request, which should be within 10 working days pursuant to the expeditious handling provisions of the FOIA (see 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(ii)(I)). Additionally, Judicial Watch seeks to attend all future meetings of the NEPDG Committee. Please furnish Judicial Watch with future meeting schedules and contact information so our representative may attend.

Thank you for your cooperation and prompt response.

Sincerely,

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.

Larry Klayman

Larry Klayman
Chairman and General Counsel

Thomas Fitton
President

88

REV_00264464

Copyright 2001 Newsweek

Newsweek

May 14, 2001, U.S. Edition

SECTION: NATIONAL AFFAIRS; Pg. 18

LENGTH: 1622 words

HEADLINE: Big Energy at the Table

BYLINE: By Howard Fineman and Michael Isikoff; With Mark Hosenball, T. Trent Gegax and Rich Thomas in Washington

HIGHLIGHT:
Winning support for your agenda is easy when your allies fill out the administration's top chairs

BODY:
If you were in the oil and gas business, it was a meeting that dreams were made of. Nine days before George W. Bush was inaugurated, energy lobbyists gathered at the American Petroleum Institute's offices in downtown Washington. Their agenda: to write a wish list. One participant remembers it fondly. "The tone was, 'OK, what do you guys want? You are going to have the ear of this White House'." In came an easel and a whiteboard, and ideas flowed: looser rules for drilling on federal lands; more drilling for oil and gas in Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico; lower royalty payments for tapping offshore wells. After a while, the mood in the room grew giddy. The man from the wildcatters' association suggested going All the Way. It was time, he said, to rethink the Endangered Species Act.

That was a wish too far. But many items on that board--and other lists scribbled by other energy lobbyists in other offices around town--found their way into the recommendations that the president will unveil to the nation next week. The API list, in fact, was forwarded to George Bush's transition team, which sent it to the Interior Department. On March 20, Interior sent many of the same ideas to the Energy Task Force that Vice President Dick Cheney had convened on Jan. 29. To close the loop, key leaders from that API meeting have since been appointed to pivotal positions in Bush's administration--among them J. Steven Griles, an energy lobbyist and the new second in command at Interior, and Thomas Sansonetti, an energy lawyer recently named the top environmental cop at the Justice Department. The two, in effect, will help administer policies they helped to write.

If the Bush administration is homecoming weekend for the energy industry, Dick Cheney's task-force report is the pregame tailgate party. Not since the rise of the railroads more than a century ago has a single industry placed so many foot soldiers at the top of a new administration. While the report will recommend an array of what one White House aide advertises as "high-tech, 21st-century conservation ideas," its core will be a call to find and use new sources of fossil fuels, as well as a renewed commitment to nuclear power. What voters need to hear "loud and clear," the president declared last week, "is that we are running out of energy in America."

REV_00264465

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Vice President Richard Cheney, US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (Appendix) [2]

OA/NARA#: 1650/1518
9601

Box 62
Folder 5

REV_00264499

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiffs Judicial Watch, Inc. and Sierra Club filed these now-consolidated lawsuits against Vice President Richard Cheney, the National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG"), various other federal officials,[1] and private individuals[2] to enforce the

[1] The federal officials named in Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint include: Secretary of the Treasury Paul O'Neill, Secretary of the Interior Gail Norton, Secretary of Agriculture Ann Veneman, Secretary of Commerce Donald Evans, Secretary of Transportation Norman Mineta, Secretary of Energy Spencer Abraham, Secretary of State Colin Powell, Director of Federal Emergency Management Joseph Allbaugh, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency Christine Todd Whitman, Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Patrick Wood, Director of the Office of Management and Budget Mitchell Daniels, Assistant to the President Joshua Bolton, and Assistant to the President Larry Lindsey. The federal officials named in Sierra Club's Complaint include: Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director of the NEPDG, Director of Energy Policy for Vice President Cheney and Senior Policy

REV_00264500

the government would add in the time allotted. Third, the Court granted defendants' motion to dismiss the APA claims against Vice President Cheney and the NEPDG. Fourth, the Court denied all other aspects of the motions to dismiss at that time. Fifth, the Court ordered that this Memorandum Opinion, explaining the Court's decision on the motions to dismiss, would be issued promptly. Finally, the Court ordered the parties to begin to develop a proposed discovery plan, which would be filed soon after this Memorandum Opinion was issued.

On May 28, 2002, Judicial Watch filed a Second Amended Complaint, incorporating the language of Sierra Club's APA and mandamus claims.[3] On June 3, 2002 the federal defendants moved to dismiss, incorporating by reference the arguments made in their motions to dismiss of March 8, 2002 and April 5, 2002. Judicial Watch filed an opposition to that motion, similarly incorporating arguments made in previous filings.

III. Other NEPDG-related Cases Before this Court

In addition to the two consolidated suits before this Court, the activities of the NEPDG are the subject of several other lawsuits and congressional inquiries. Several other FOIA cases are pending before this Court. See, e.g, Judicial Watch v.

---

[3] Count III of Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint exceeded the scope of this Court's order permitting the amendment, as it was also brought against the private defendants who do not appear in the Sierra Club lawsuit. Consequently, this Court dismissed Count III with respect to the private defendants only. See Order of May 31, 2002.

ENTIRELY, I BELIEVE, EXCEPT FOR, YOU KNOW, DOCUMENTS THAT HAVE BEEN --

THE COURT: THE DOCUMENT REQUESTS HAVE BEEN PRODUCED BY THE GOVERNMENT WHICH MAY BE RELEVANT IN THIS CASE?

MR. COFFIN: OH, ABSOLUTELY, THE DOCUMENT REQUESTS, THE FOIA REQUESTS RELATED TO THE OPERATION OF THE NEPDG.

THE COURT: SO THERE IS RELEVANT INFORMATION OUT THERE?

MR. COFFIN: YES.

THE COURT: THAT FOCUSES ON THIS INQUIRY?

MR. COFFIN: YES. AND IN THE FOIA CASES, WE'VE ALSO PUT FORWARD DECLARATIONS THAT HAVE EXPLAINED EACH AGENCY'S OPERATIONS WITHIN THE NEPDG. SO THERE IS A LOT OF INFORMATION OUT THERE, AND WHAT JUDICIAL WATCH --

THE COURT: SEPARATE AND APART FROM THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD?

MR. COFFIN: OH, YES. NO, I'M SAYING THERE'S SOMETHING FROM WHICH -- THIS IS -- I MEAN, IN MY MIND, THE PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY HERE SAYS THAT THEY SHOULD LOOK AT ALL OF THAT INFORMATION, AND IF THEY CAN COME FORWARD WITH SOME EVIDENCE THAT SOMEONE, YOU KNOW, A NON-GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIAL REGULARLY PARTICIPATED IN THE MEETINGS.

THE COURT: WELL, THAT'S ALL THEY WANT THE OPPORTUNITY TO DO. THEY'RE GOING TO TAKE THAT INFORMATION AND LOOK THROUGH IT AND CULL THROUGH IT, BUT DISCOVERY IS AN ONGOING PROCESS.

REV_00264599

THEY WANT TO LOOK AT OTHER INFORMATION THAT MAY WELL LEAD TO OTHER DISCOVERABLE INFORMATION.

MR. COFFIN: BUT THERE WAS AN ADMINISTRATIVE DECISION HERE, AND THE ADMINISTRATIVE DECISION IS BACKED UP BY AN ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD THAT WE'RE WILLING TO SUPPLEMENT WITH THAT INFORMATION AND THE INFORMATION THAT THEY HAVE HERE. IF THEY CAN'T SHOW --

THE COURT: WHY HASN'T THE GOVERNMENT ALREADY SUPPLEMENTED THAT RECORD UP TO THIS POINT? THIS CASE HAS BEEN ONGOING SINCE LAST JULY. WHY DIDN'T THEY?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, WE HAVEN'T MOVED FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN THIS CASE. THAT'S THE ONLY REASON.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. COFFIN: WE MOVED TO DISMISS --

THE COURT: WHICH WAS YOUR RIGHT TO DO.

MR. COFFIN: -- AND WE THOUGHT THE CASE WOULD BE RESOLVED ON THOSE ISSUES.

THE COURT: I'M JUST ASKING THE QUESTION. I'M NOT BEING CRITICAL.

MR. COFFIN: I THINK THAT'S THE REASON. BUT, YOU KNOW, I THINK IT'S IMPORTANT THAT YOUR HONOR UNDERSTAND THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SUPPLEMENTATION AND DISCOVERY. I MEAN, AS YOU KNOW --

THE COURT: I'M WELL AWARE OF THE DIFFERENCE.

MR. COFFIN: OKAY, AND THE CASE --

REV_00264600

THE COURT: THAT'S WHY I'M CONVINCED THAT DISCOVERY WILL GO FORWARD, BECAUSE THERE'S A NEED, THERE'S A CRYING NEED FOR DISCOVERY IN THIS CASE.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THE CASE THAT THEY CITE, AMFAC RESORTS, ACTUALLY SUPPORTS THAT.

THE COURT: SUPPORTS WHAT?

MR. COFFIN: SUPPORTS THE FACT THAT DISCOVERY IS NOT THE NORM IN APA CASES ABSENT SOME SHOWING.

THE COURT: I TOTALLY AGREE WITH YOU. IN THE TYPICAL APA CASE, IT'S NOT, BUT YOU'VE AGREED WITH THE COURT THAT THIS IS NOT THE TYPICAL APA CASE.

MR. COFFIN: WELL, THIS IS AN APA CASE, YOUR HONOR. UNLESS, UNLESS THE PLAINTIFFS OR THE COURT CAN ARTICULATE AN ACCEPTED REASON FOR VARYING THE APA REVIEW IN THIS CASE, THEN APA REVIEW HAS TO BE ON THE RECORD, AND THERE HAS BEEN NO STRONG SHOWING OF THAT BAD FAITH OR IMPROPER BEHAVIOR, AND IN A CASE LIKE THIS, DISCOVERY IS SIMPLY IMPROPER.

THE COURT: EVEN THOUGH, AS YOU RECOGNIZE, THIS IS NOT THE TYPICAL APA CASE.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, SAYING THAT THIS IS NOT THE TYPICAL APA CASE IS NOT SAYING THAT THIS IS NOT AN APA CASE. THE REASON THIS IS NOT A TYPICAL APA CASE, YOUR HONOR, IS THAT THE THRESHOLD DETERMINATION HERE IS THAT THE STATUTE THAT THE PLAINTIFFS ARE SEEKING ON THIS RELIEF HERE DOESN'T APPLY IN THE FIRST INSTANCE.

REV_00264601

THE COURT: WHAT ABOUT THE REQUEST FOR MANDAMUS RELIEF?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, WE DON'T THINK THAT CHANGES THE DETERMINATION HERE AT ALL. MANDAMUS IS AN EXTRAORDINARY REMEDY. YOUR HONOR, YOU HAVEN'T DECIDED WHETHER MANDAMUS APPLIES HERE, BECAUSE, AS YOU NOTED, THERE ARE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES THAT RELATE TO MANDAMUS.

THE COURT: WHY AREN'T THEY ENTITLED TO SOME DISCOVERY, THOUGH, IN AN EFFORT TO CONVINCE ME THAT MANDAMUS MAY APPLY IN THIS CASE?

MR. COFFIN: WE WOULD SAY THAT BECAUSE IT IS A DRASTIC REMEDY THAT'S INVOKED ONLY IN EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES, WHERE THERE'S A CLEAR AND INDISPUTABLE RIGHT, THAT UNLESS THE INFORMATION THAT'S OUT THERE, INCLUDING THE DECLARATION THAT WOULD BE PART OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD AND ALL THE FOIA INFORMATION SHOWS SOME INKLING OF A RIGHT, NO, THEY'RE NOT ENTITLED TO DISCOVERY TO SUPPLEMENT THAT.

AND, YOUR HONOR, ON THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THE INQUIRY, BECAUSE OF YOUR CONCERNS WITH AVOIDING UNNECESSARY CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS, BECAUSE OF OUR CONCERNS WITH DISRUPTING THE EFFECTIVE FUNCTIONING OF THE PRESIDENCY AND THE VICE-PRESIDENCY, WE HAVE PROPOSED THAT WE ANSWER ONE QUESTION HERE, AND THAT IS ONE OF THE THRESHOLD QUESTIONS THAT YOUR HONOR POSED IN HIS OPINION. THAT IS THE QUESTION OF MEMBERSHIP, AND OUR APA DECLARATION WOULD FOCUS ON MEMBERSHIP

REV_00264602

IN THE GROUP AND IT WOULD CONFIRM --

THE COURT: ARE YOU PREPARED TODAY TO TELL THE COURT WHO THE MEMBERS OF THE GROUP WERE?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, IT'S MY UNDERSTANDING -- WELL, I'M SORRY. WHO THEY WERE?

THE COURT: I THOUGHT YOU SAID YOU WERE PLANNING TO FILE SOME SORT OF DECLARATION TO INFORM THE PLAINTIFFS AND THE COURT WHO THE MEMBERS OF THE GROUP ARE OR WERE.

MR. COFFIN: RIGHT. YOUR HONOR, WE WILL DO THAT.

THE COURT: ARE YOU PREPARED TO TELL THE COURT TODAY WHO THOSE PEOPLE ARE?

MR. COFFIN: WELL, I CAN READ YOU THE PRESIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM --

THE COURT: NO, NO. THAT'S ALREADY A PART OF THE RECORD.

MR. COFFIN: -- THAT ESTABLISHES THE GROUP.

THE COURT: ARE THERE ANY ADDITIONAL MEMBERS?

MR. COFFIN: YES. I THINK THE DIRECTOR OF THE (PAUSE) --

THE COURT: WHO ARE THE ADDITIONAL MEMBERS?

MR. COFFIN: I'M EXPLAINING. THE DIRECTOR OF THE OMB WAS A MEMBER. THE VICE-PRESIDENT HAD THE AUTHORITY TO INVITE ANY GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS, ANY GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS TO PARTICIPATE. I BELIEVE HE EXTENDED THAT INVITATION TO THE DIRECTOR OF THE OMB, WHO WAS NOT NAMED BY THE PRESIDENT. THERE

REV_00264603

WAS ONE OTHER GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIAL. WHETHER IT WAS -- I THINK THE SECRETARY OF STATE WAS AN OPTIONAL MEMBER. HE MAY HAVE BEEN INVITED, BUT I'M NOT CERTAIN OF THAT. BUT I AM CERTAIN THAT AS FAR AS WE UNDERSTAND THE FACTS, WHICH WE WOULD BE WILLING TO EXPLAIN, THAT ONLY GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS WERE INVOLVED. SO IT IS THE MEMBERSHIP THAT WAS NAMED BY THE PRESIDENT, WITH THE INVITATION EXTENDED TO THE OMB DIRECTOR TO ALSO PARTICIPATE.

THE COURT: AND THAT'S THE COMPLETE LIST?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THAT IS CERTAINLY WHAT OUR DECLARATION WILL SHOW. THAT'S MY UNDERSTANDING, THAT THAT IS THE COMPLETE LIST.

THE COURT: SO THAT'S A COMPLETE LIST OF PARTICIPANTS?

MR. COFFIN: YES, YOUR HONOR. THOSE ARE THE, THOSE ARE ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE NEPDG, THOSE WHO WE ARE, WE WOULD SHOW IN THE DECLARATION. THAT DECLARATION CAN BE PREPARED, I THINK, FAIRLY READILY, WITHIN A FEW WEEKS, AND WE COULD PROCEED TO SUMMARY JUDGMENT, I WOULD THINK, WITHIN A MONTH.

THE COURT: WHY HASN'T THE GOVERNMENT SHARED THAT INFORMATION WITH THE PUBLIC UP TO THIS POINT?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THE GOVERNMENT HAS SHARED THAT INFORMATION. THERE WAS A LETTER TO CONGRESS, TO REPRESENTATIVE WAXMAN, FROM -- I THINK IT WAS ACTUALLY AN ISSUE IN ONE OF OUR EARLIER HEARINGS ABOUT THAT LETTER, BUT IT DID EXPLAIN THE MEMBERSHIP. SO THAT MEMBERSHIP HAS BEEN EXPLAINED.

REV_00264604

WE WOULD SIMPLY CONFIRM THAT IN A DECLARATION, YOUR HONOR.

AND SO, YOUR HONOR, THOSE ARE, THAT'S THE OUTLINE OF AN APPROACH WE WOULD TAKE, BECAUSE THIS IS AN APA CASE. IF, SAY, OVER OUR OBJECTION, YOU DECIDE YOU'LL ALLOW DISCOVERY IN A NON-APA SETTING, WE WOULD SUGGEST, RELUCTANTLY, THAT YOU LOOK TO NADER VS. BARODY FOR THE FRAMEWORK OF THAT. THAT IS, IN THAT CASE, JUDGE GESELL SAID WE'LL LIMIT YOU TO, THE INQUIRY COULD BE ANSWERED THROUGH THE FOIA REQUESTS AND THROUGH WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES. SO THAT IS OUR, THE ALTERNATIVE.

THE COURT: WHAT ABOUT NON-GOVERNMENTAL-WITNESS DEPOSITIONS?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, NON-GOVERNMENTAL-WITNESS DEPOSITIONS? IF THERE WERE SUCH DEPOSITIONS, WE WOULD CERTAINLY WISH TO BE PRESENT. WE WOULD SEEK TO PRESERVE --

THE COURT: YOU'RE ENTITLED TO NOTICE.

MR. COFFIN: -- ANY PRIVILEGE.

THE COURT: AND INVOKE THE PRIVILEGE ON BEHALF OF THE NON-GOVERNMENTAL WITNESSES?

MR. COFFIN: INVOKE THE PRIVILEGE ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES, YOUR HONOR. THE PRIVILEGE, THE PRIVILEGE OF EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS BELONGS TO THE EXECUTIVE. BUT, YOUR HONOR, AS FAR AS --

THE COURT: SO IF THOSE WITNESSES WERE DEPOSED, THE GOVERNMENT WOULD ATTEMPT TO INVOKE EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE?

MR. COFFIN: I DON'T KNOW, YOUR HONOR. I'M JUST

REV_00264605

SAYING WE WOULD PRESERVE THE RIGHT. WE WOULD RESERVE THE RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN ANY SUCH DEPOSITION.

THE COURT: NO, YOU'RE ENTITLED TO NOTICE.

MR. COFFIN: AND WE WOULD, BUT I WANT TO MAKE CLEAR, OUR OBJECTIONS ARE TO DEPOSITIONS IN TOTO. WE BELIEVE THAT THIS CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED THROUGH WRITTEN INTERROGATORIES THAT ARE SWORN, AND THAT SHOULD BE THE END OF THE STORY.

THE COURT: YOU MAY BE CORRECT. WE'RE NOT GOING TO FOCUS ON DEPOSITIONS TODAY, BUT THE COURT'S NOT GOING TO RULE OUT THE POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS BEING DEPOSED, AS WELL AS NON-GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS BEING DEPOSED, BUT I'M NOT GOING TO FOCUS ON DEPOSITIONS TODAY.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, LET ME JUST MAKE ONE MORE POINT. I WOULD SUGGEST THAT, EVEN THOUGH YOU HAVE DOUBTS ABOUT OUR PLAN, TO ALLOW IT TO GO FORWARD AND THEN HANDLE ANY OBJECTIONS AT THAT POINT.

THE COURT: I'VE ALREADY INVITED THE GOVERNMENT TO FILE OBJECTIONS. THE COURT HAS AGAIN, AND THIS IS NOT THE FIRST TIME THE GOVERNMENT WAS INVITED, THAT THE COURT HAS INVITED THE GOVERNMENT TO FRAME APPROPRIATE CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIONS. I DID THAT DURING THE BRIEFING SCHEDULE, AND THE GOVERNMENT CHOSE NOT TO DO SO, AND IN THIS CASE I SAID TO THE PLAINTIFFS, SUBMIT YOUR PROPOSED DISCOVERY --

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR --

THE COURT: JUST A MINUTE. DON'T INTERRUPT ME.

REV_00264606

I TOLD THE PLAINTIFFS TO SUBMIT A PROPOSED DISCOVERY PLAN, AND PLAINTIFFS DID SO. AND I TOLD THE GOVERNMENT, IF YOU HAVE PRECISE CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIONS, LET ME KNOW WHAT THEY ARE SO I CAN DETERMINE WHETHER OR NOT THIS PLAN IS APPROPRIATE, AND, YOU KNOW, ESSENTIALLY, YOU SAID, WELL, IT'S UNCONSTITUTIONAL, WITHOUT ELABORATING. YOU SAID, BECAUSE PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED DISCOVERY PLAN HAS NOT BEEN APPROVED BY THE COURT, THE DEFENDANTS ARE NOT SUBMITTING SPECIFIC OBJECTIONS TO PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED REQUEST. WELL, THERE AGAIN, THE GOVERNMENT CHANGES THE RULE. MY RULE WAS, IF YOU HAVE OBJECTIONS, LET ME KNOW WHAT THE OBJECTIONS ARE, AND YOU CHOSE NOT TO DO SO.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, YOU ASKED US TO OBJECT TO THE DISCOVERY PLAN, WHICH IS WHAT WE HAVE DONE. WE DID NOT CHOOSE TO OFFER WRITTEN OBJECTIONS TO THEIR WRITTEN DISCOVERY BECAUSE YOU HAVEN'T APPROVED THE DISCOVERY PLAN.

THE COURT: WELL, I'M GOING TO APPROVE IT TODAY. DISCOVERY WILL GO FORWARD. SO IF THERE ARE OBJECTIONS, YOU CAN BE PRECISE AND FILE YOUR OBJECTIONS. DISCOVERY IS GOING TO GO FORWARD.

ANYTHING FURTHER, COUNSEL?

MR. COFFIN: NO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, I'LL HEAR FROM SIERRA CLUB.

MR. BOOKBINDER: YOUR HONOR, WE'LL BE VERY BRIEF.

I THINK WE'VE HEARD ENOUGH FROM THE GOVERNMENT ON THIS

REV_00264607

ISSUE. I JUST WANT TO SAY TWO THINGS.

ONE IS --

THE COURT: APPARENTLY, YOU WOULD LIKE TO HEAR MORE, BECAUSE YOU WANT TO CONDUCT DISCOVERY.

MR. BOOKBINDER: I MEANT IN TERMS OF THEIR RESPONSE TO OUR DISCOVERY PLAN. ONE THING THAT BECAME APPARENT IS, NOW THE GOVERNMENT SEEMS TO BE CONCEDING THERE WAS A DECISION OR DETERMINATION MADE THAT FACA DIDN'T APPLY AT SOME POINT, WHICH IS INTERESTING, BECAUSE THE GOVERNMENT HAS ARGUED REPEATEDLY THAT THERE WAS NO ACTION, THERE WAS NO FINAL AGENCY ACTION, THERE WAS NO DETERMINATION MADE AT ANY POINT, BUT NOW WE HAVE AGENCY ACTION CONCEDED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

THE SECOND THING IS THAT ANY ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD WOULD CONSIST, OBVIOUSLY, OF ALL THE EVIDENCE THAT WAS, ALL THE MATERIALS, ALL THE DOCUMENTS, ALL THE NOTES, ALL THE MINUTES AS TO WHO PARTICIPATED, THE EXACT SAME STUFF THAT WE'RE SEEKING IN DISCOVERY, AND FINALLY THE GOVERNMENT STOOD HERE AND SAID, AS YOUR HONOR POINTED OUT, THERE IS ADDITIONAL WRITTEN MATERIAL THAT THEY CLAIM TO HAVE PRODUCED UNDER FOIA WHICH IS RELEVANT TO THIS ISSUE THAT THEY'RE NOT PUTTING IN THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD. SO I DON'T UNDERSTAND WHAT THEIR VERSION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD IS.

THE LAST THING, YOUR HONOR, IS, WE HAVE ALREADY ENCOUNTERED CLAIMS OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRIVILEGE IN DEFENDANTS' ANSWERS TO OUR COMPLAINT, WHICH WERE JUST FILED. I'VE NEVER

REV_00264608

Department of Energy, Civ. Action No. 01-981 (PLF); Natural Resources Defense Council v. Department of Energy, Civ. Action No. 01-2545 (PLF). The agency defendants in those FOIA cases have been ordered by this Court to produce responsive documents, and have begun to do so, thereby revealing more information about the operations of the NEPDG than was available at the outset of either of these consolidated cases.

In addition, the General Accounting Office (GAO), on behalf of Congress, filed suit in this Court challenging the White House's refusal to turn over information about NEPDG to GAO pursuant to GAO's investigatory authority. See Walker v. Cheney, Civ. Action No. 02-0340 (JDB). Information released as a result of these cases may potentially impact the statutory and constitutional issues raised by this case.

DISCUSSION

I. Standard of Review

This Court will not grant the defendants' motions to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Kowal v. MCI Communications Corp., 16 F.3d 1271, 1276 (D.C. Cir. 1994). "Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test."

REV_00264510

SEEN A SITUATION WHERE AN ANSWER TO A SPECIFIC FACTUAL ALLEGATION CONTAINS, WE REFUSE TO ANSWER ON THE GROUND OF CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS, AND I'M NOT SURE HOW PLAINTIFF SHOULD -- I'VE NEVER HEARD OF FACTS BEING CONSTITUTIONALLY PRIVILEGED.

THE COURT: I HAVE TO ASK THE GOVERNMENT WHETHER OR NOT THE GOVERNMENT HAS, INDEED, INVOKED EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE, THEN, IN ITS ANSWER.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THERE ARE POINTS IN THE COMPLAINT WHERE WE WILL, WE HAVE REFUSED TO ANSWER ON THE GROUND OF (PAUSE) --

THE COURT: EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE?

MR. COFFIN: -- ON THE GROUND THAT, YES, ON THE GROUND OF PRIVILEGE, ON THE GROUND OF CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED COMMUNICATIONS, AND, YOU KNOW, WE CAN DEAL WITH THAT IN THAT PROCESS. BUT, YES, WE HAVE.

THE COURT: THAT'S FINE. I MEAN, IF YOU WISH TO ASSERT THE PRIVILEGE, THAT SHOULD BE DONE CLEARLY. IS THAT WHAT YOU HAVE DONE IN YOUR ANSWER, THEN, ASSERTED THE EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE?

MR. COFFIN: YES, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. BOOKBINDER: THAT'S ALL, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

ALL RIGHT, ANYTHING FURTHER, COUNSEL?

REV_00264609

MR. COFFIN: NO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, I'M GOING TO TAKE A FIVE-MINUTE RECESS.

ANYTHING FURTHER, MR. KLAYMAN?

MR. KLAYMAN: NO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

(RECESS)

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, COUNSEL, I'M GOING TO APPROVE THE PROPOSED DISCOVERY PLAN THAT THE PLAINTIFFS HAVE SUBMITTED. IT REQUIRES ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES. IT REQUIRES PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

LET ME JUST SAY ONE THING. I CAN SEE WHERE ALL THIS IS LEADING TO. IT'S LEADING TO MORE BRIEFS, POTENTIALLY CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES. THAT'S FINE. THAT'S WELL. IF YOU WANT TO ASSERT PRIVILEGE, THEN YOU MAY DO SO IN THE APPROPRIATE MANNER. BUT JUST TO PICK UP ON SOMETHING THAT GOVERNMENT COUNSEL SAID AT THE PODIUM, IT MAY WELL BE THAT THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION IS THAT IT HAS PRODUCED IN OTHER LAWSUITS, PURSUANT TO OTHER REQUESTS, FOIA REQUESTS PRIMARILY, INFORMATION THAT MAY BE RELEVANT IN THIS CASE. THE GOVERNMENT CANNOT SIMPLY SAY IT'S ALREADY PRODUCED THAT INFORMATION, WHATEVER THAT INFORMATION IS, WITHOUT PROVIDING THE PLAINTIFFS AND, INDEED, THE COURT WITH SOME DETAIL, WITH SOME PARTICULARITY, SO THAT THE COURT AND THE PLAINTIFFS KNOW EXACTLY WHAT DOCUMENTS THE GOVERNMENT IS REFERRING TO. SO YOU CAN'T JUST SIMPLY SAY, WE'VE ALREADY PRODUCED THAT INFORMATION.

REV_00264610

SO I'M JUST GIVING YOU A HEADS-UP ON THAT, COUNSEL. ALTHOUGH I DON'T THINK YOU WOULD DO THAT, IT'S VERY IMPORTANT. IF IT'S THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION THAT THIS INFORMATION HAS ALREADY BEEN PRODUCED IN ANOTHER FORUM, THEN IT HAS TO SAY IN DETAILED PARTICULARITY JUST WHAT THAT FORUM IS AND WHAT THAT INFORMATION IS.

I'M GOING TO -- WELL, LET ME JUST HEAR FROM PLAINTIFFS. I'VE APPROVED YOUR PROPOSED PLAN, AND WHEN I SAY THAT, I RECOGNIZE THAT THERE MAY BE LEGITIMATE OBJECTIONS TO THE PLAN THAT RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL CONCERNS AND THAT RAISE CONCERNS OF EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE. IF SO, WE'LL ADDRESS THOSE OBJECTIONS AND CONCERNS AT THE APPROPRIATE TIME. WHEN DO YOU PLAN TO PROPOUND YOUR INTERROGATORIES AND REQUESTS FOR DOCUMENT PRODUCTION?

MR. KLAYMAN: YOUR HONOR, WE CAN DO IT TODAY.

THE COURT: THAT'S FINE. YOU CAN DO IT ANYTIME YOU WANT TO.

I'LL GIVE THE GOVERNMENT 30 DAYS FROM THE DATE THAT THE DOCUMENT REQUEST IS PROPOUNDED AND 30 DAYS FROM THE DATE ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES ARE PROPOUNDED TO FILE OBJECTIONS IN THE APPROPRIATE MANNER, AND IF THE GOVERNMENT ASSERTS PRIVILEGE WITH RESPECT TO A REQUEST FOR DOCUMENT PRODUCTION OR INTERROGATORY, THEN THE GOVERNMENT IS GOING TO HAVE TO, WITH PRECISION, TELL THE COURT AND TELL THE PARTIES JUST EXACTLY

REV_00264611

WHAT THE BASIS OF THE OBJECTION IS.

IN OTHER WORDS, IT'S NOT APPROPRIATE TO SAY EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE WITHOUT MORE. IT'S NOT APPROPRIATE TO SAY THIS REQUEST IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL, OR PURSUANT TO THE CONSTITUTION, NO RESPONSE IS REQUIRED. THAT'S NOT APPROPRIATE. I NEED TO KNOW, FOR THE THIRD OR FOURTH TIME, WHAT THE BASIS IS FOR EITHER A RESPONSE SAYING THIS IS PROTECTED BY PRIVILEGE OR THIS INTRUDES UPON SOME CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTIONS THAT SHOULD NOT BE INTRUDED ON, AND I'M NOT GOING TO SIT UP HERE AND TELL THE GOVERNMENT HOW TO RESPOND TO DISCOVERY. THERE ARE EXCELLENT ATTORNEYS AT GOVERNMENT COUNSEL TABLE. THEY KNOW EXACTLY WHAT SHOULD AND SHOULD NOT BE DONE.

MR. KLAYMAN: YOUR HONOR, IF I MAY PROPOSE A SUGGESTION HERE.

THE COURT: SURE.

MR. KLAYMAN: THE GOVERNMENT HAS ALREADY HAD A GOOD PERIOD OF TIME TO REGISTER ITS OBJECTIONS, AS THE COURT NOTED, TO OUR DISCOVERY. THAT'S WHY WE ACTUALLY GAVE THEM AN ADVANCE LOOK AT DISCOVERY, NOT JUST A PLAN, BUT WE GAVE THEM THE ACTUAL DISCOVERY. THEY HAVE NOT DONE SO. THE WAY THE CASE IS USUALLY RUN IN THIS KIND OF A CASE WHEN THERE'S A MATTER OF GREAT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE INVOLVED, WHEN THE GOVERNMENT PERCEIVES A POLITICAL DOWNSIDE TO THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AND THAT'S OBVIOUSLY THE CASE HERE OR THEY WOULDN'T BE FIGHTING THE WAY THEY ARE --

REV_00264612

THE COURT: I'M NOT GOING TO GET INTO THAT. I DON'T KNOW THAT TO BE THE CASE.

ANYWAY, GO AHEAD.

MR. KLAYMAN: AT LEAST FROM MY PERSPECTIVE, AND THERE WAS AN ADMISSION MADE THAT THEY WILL PRODUCE SOME DOCUMENTS IN OTHER CASES. WHAT'S BEFORE YOU HERE AND WHAT'S DIFFERENT ABOUT THIS CASE FROM THE OTHER CASES IS THAT WE'RE SEEKING THE DOCUMENTATION AT THE CORE OF THE ENERGY TASK FORCE RIGHT OUT OF THE WHITE HOUSE. THOSE DOCUMENT REQUESTS THAT WERE PROPOUNDED AND FOIA REQUESTS WERE PERIPHERAL. THEY WERE IN GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

SO WHAT I'M PROPOSING IS, SINCE THEY'VE ALREADY HAD SOME TIME TO MAKE OBJECTIONS, AND THEY'VE OBVIOUSLY THOUGHT ABOUT WHAT THOSE OBJECTIONS WOULD BE IN ANY EVENT, TO SET A SHORTER TIME TO MAKE THE OBJECTIONS -- TEN DAYS, PERHAPS -- SO WE'LL KNOW WHERE WE STAND, TO NOT LET 30 DAYS TICK OFF AND WE'LL LOSE ALL THAT TIME, BECAUSE THIS IS A MATTER OF GREAT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE.

THE COURT: NO, I RECOGNIZE THAT. I RECOGNIZE THAT TIME IS A FACTOR.

MR. KLAYMAN: THAT WAY, WE CAN COME IN, IF WE DISAGREE WITH THOSE OBJECTIONS, AND SAY, YOUR HONOR, CAN YOU ADJUDICATE THAT SO WE CAN HAVE TIME FOR PRODUCTION?

SECONDLY, WE WOULD LIKE A COMMITMENT FROM THE GOVERNMENT THAT THEY'RE NOT GOING TO HANG BACK TO THE END OF 30

REV_00264613

DAYS AND THEN SAY, OKAY, WE HAVE THIS PROBLEM. YOU KNOW, WE NEED ANOTHER 30 DAYS OR ANOTHER 60 DAYS. THIS IS THE WAY IT USUALLY HAPPENS IN THESE KINDS OF CASES. WE'D LIKE TO GET AN INDICATION UP FRONT OF WHAT THEIR PROBLEMS ARE, IF ANY, IN THE NEXT TEN DAYS AS THEY MAKE THEIR OBJECTIONS, SO THE COURT CAN ADDRESS THEM, BECAUSE THE PUBLIC IS WANTING TO KNOW WHAT WENT ON.

THERE WAS A STATEMENT MADE HERE THAT THE SECRETARY OF STATE WAS LIKELY A MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE, THE TASK FORCE. THE ISSUE OF HOW THE ENERGY POLICY AFFECTS EVEN OUR MIDDLE-EASTERN POLICY IS A MATTER THAT THE PUBLIC DESERVES TO KNOW ABOUT IN TERMS OF HOW THIS TASK FORCE WAS CONSTITUTED. WE WANT TO GET THE INFORMATION OUT. THAT'S OUR DESIRE. AS YOU KNOW, AT JUDICIAL WATCH, WE DON'T TAKE A POSITION ON ENERGY POLICY. THAT'S NOT OUR POLICY. WE JUST WANT TO GET THE INFORMATION OUT TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

SO I SUGGEST THAT --

THE COURT: I UNDERSTAND YOUR CONCERNS, AND TIME IS A CONCERN OF THE COURT AS WELL. I UNDERSTAND THAT. I'M GOING TO GIVE THE GOVERNMENT 30 DAYS, THOUGH. RECOGNIZING THAT THE GOVERNMENT HAS ALREADY HAD A SIGNIFICANT AMOUNT OF TIME TO CONSIDER THE PROPOSED QUESTIONS AND PROPOSED DOCUMENT REQUESTS, IT'S NOT UNREASONABLE AT ALL TO GIVE THE GOVERNMENT UNTIL THE 3RD OF SEPTEMBER TO FILE, EITHER COMPLY WITH THE REQUEST OR FILE ITS VERY DETAILED OBJECTIONS TO DOCUMENT REQUESTS AND/OR

REV_00264614

INTERROGATORIES.

AND THE REASON, ANOTHER REASON FOR GIVING THE GOVERNMENT MORE TIME THAN LESS TIME IS BECAUSE I'M NOT INCLINED TO EXTEND THAT TIME, NOW, RECOGNIZING THE GOVERNMENT HAS ALREADY HAD AN OPPORTUNITY TO CONSIDER THE REQUEST FOR A SIGNIFICANT PERIOD OF TIME. SO THE 3RD OF SEPTEMBER IS THE DATE THAT THE REQUESTS ARE DUE TO THE PLAINTIFFS' REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AS WELL AS ANY ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES.

AND WHAT I'M GOING TO DO, I DON'T KNOW WHETHER --

MR. COFFIN: EXCUSE ME, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: YES.

MR. COFFIN: THAT ASSUMES THAT JUDICIAL WATCH WILL FILE ITS REQUEST TODAY.

THE COURT: TODAY. THAT'S CORRECT.

I'M GOING TO -- DO YOU PLAN TO DO IT TODAY OR TOMORROW?

MR. KLAYMAN: JUDICIAL WATCH AND SIERRA CLUB WILL SERVE THEM TODAY.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, THAT'S FINE.

THIS CASE IS ONE OF THE ELECTRONIC-CASE FILES, ANYWAY, SO IT CAN BE DONE ELECTRONICALLY. THAT'S ONLY FAIR, TO GIVE THE GOVERNMENT UNTIL SEPTEMBER 3RD, BUT I WILL NOT EXTEND THE TIME.

NOW, I ANTICIPATE THAT THERE'S GOING TO BE A NEED FOR

REV_00264615

ADDITIONAL BRIEFS TO BE FILED. YOU KNOW, I'M NOT RULING OUT THE POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING SOMEONE TO MONITOR DISCOVERY. I HAVE A FEELING THAT THE OBJECTIONS AND THE RESPONSES TO DISCOVERY COULD TAKE AN ENORMOUS AMOUNT OF TIME OF THIS COURT TO RESOLVE. SO I'M NOT RULING OUT THE POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTING MAYBE A RETIRED JUDGE TO ASSIST THE COURT WITH MANAGING DISCOVERY. TO THE EXTENT THAT I CAN DO IT MYSELF, I'LL TRY TO DO IT MYSELF. BUT IF IT BECOMES TOO MUCH OF A DRAIN ON MY TIME -- THIS IS NOT THE ONLY CASE ON MY CALENDAR -- THEN I WILL TAKE APPROPRIATE ACTION AND APPOINT MAYBE EVEN A MAGISTRATE JUDGE OR MAYBE EVEN A RETIRED FEDERAL JUDGE TO ASSIST THE COURT WITH MONITORING DISCOVERY. BUT I'LL TRY TO DO IT MYSELF FOR THE TIME BEING.

I THINK IT'S APPROPRIATE TO SCHEDULE A STATUS HEARING, YET STILL ANOTHER STATUS HEARING NOW. I'M GOING TO GIVE THE COURT A COUPLE OF WEEKS TO -- ACTUALLY, I'M NOT GOING TO NEED MUCH TIME. I WANT TO CONSIDER THE OBJECTIONS THAT, I'M SURE, WILL BE FILED TO THE REQUESTS FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AS WELL AS TO QUESTIONS. I DO WANT TO CONSIDER THOSE SO THAT I CAN THEN DETERMINE WHAT'S AN APPROPRIATE BRIEFING SCHEDULE TO BRIEF LEGAL ISSUES THAT WILL FLOW FROM THE ANSWERS. I RECOGNIZE TIME IS A FACTOR IN THIS CASE.

HOW ABOUT FRIDAY, THE 13TH, AT TEN O'CLOCK?

MR. KLAYMAN: THE PERFECT DAY, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, AND THAT'S FOR PURPOSES OF

REV_00264616

PUTTING IN PLACE AN APPROPRIATE BRIEFING SCHEDULE. I'M SURE THAT ONE IS GOING TO BE REQUIRED IN THIS CASE.

ALL RIGHT, ANYTHING ELSE THAT WE HAVE TO FOCUS ON TODAY?

MR. BOOKBINDER: NO, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, IT'S GOOD TO SEE EVERYONE. YOU'RE NOT SMILING. EVERYONE IS FROWNING. IT'S GOOD TO SEE EVERYONE.

MR. KLAYMAN: THANK YOU, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: HAVE A NICE DAY.

(PROCEEDINGS ADJOURNED AT 10:55 A.M.)

(END OF TRANSCRIPT)

I, FRANK J. RANGUS, OFFICIAL COURT REPORTER, DO HEREBY CERTIFY THAT THE FOREGOING TRANSCRIPT IS A TRUE AND ACCURATE TRANSCRIPTION OF MY STENOGRAPHIC NOTES.

---(Original Signed)---

FRANK J. RANGUS, OCR

REV_00264617

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

On July 11, 2002 this Court granted in part and denied in part the federal defendants' motion to dismiss these consolidated cases brought by plaintiffs Judicial Watch and the Sierra Club. This Court then ordered plaintiffs to jointly propose a discovery plan, and ordered defendants to file any objections to that plan. Having considered the proposed plan and defendants' objections thereto, for the reasons given in open court today, it is hereby

ORDERED that plaintiffs' discovery plan is APPROVED; it is FURTHER ORDERED that in light of plaintiffs' representations

REV_00264618

Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974).

Furthermore, a motion to dismiss is intended to test the sufficiency of the complaint and the complaint alone.[4] See, e.g., Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974); Tele-Communications of Key West v. USA, 757 F.2d 1330, 1335 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ("a Rule 12(b)(6) disposition must be made on the face of the complaint alone"). Accordingly, at this stage in the proceedings, the Court must accept as true all of the complaints' factual allegations. See Doe v. United States Dep't of Justice, 753 F.2d 1092, 1102 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Plaintiffs are entitled to "the benefit of all inferences that can be derived from the facts alleged." Kowal, 16 F.3d at 1276.

II. Federal Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

A. Mootness

The federal defendants have moved to dismiss both complaints as moot because the NEPDG terminated pursuant to the terms of the Presidential Memorandum on September 30, 2001. Because at least two forms of relief, an injunction requiring the disclosure of records and a declaration that the government violated FACA, are available, these case are not moot. See Cummock v. Gore, 180

[4] In response to the initial Judicial Watch Complaint, the NEPDG attempted to rely on facts outside the Complaint to support its motion to dismiss, see Defs.' Br. of 2/5/2002 at 9. However, the federal defendants do not rely on materials outside the complaints in the motion filed in response to Judicial Watch's First and Second Amended Complaints, or Sierra Club's complaint and thus this Court need no longer consider the issue of whether conversion to a summary judgment motion is appropriate pursuant to Rules 12(b)(6) and 56.

REV_00264511

to the Court that the first set of interrogatories and first request for the production of documents will be served upon defendants today, defendants shall respond to these requests by no later than September 3, 2002. Defendants shall fully comply with these requests, or file detailed and precise objections to particular requests with this Court. Should they object to any of these requests, defendants shall not make general invocations of privilege with respect to categories of documents or questions, but must identify and explain their invocations of privilege with particularity; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that should defendants believe that documents or information that they have already released to plaintiffs in different fora are responsive to these discovery requests, defendants shall bear the burden of identifying with detailed precision what information or documents have been so released, and to which discovery requests they believe the information or documents to be responsive; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that in addition to filing any specific objections to discovery requests with this Court by September 3, 2002, defendants shall also file with the Court by that date their responses to plaintiffs' interrogatories and a summary of the documents that were produced; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that a status hearing shall be held on September 13, 2002 at 10:00 a.m. in Courtroom One to discuss defendants' discovery responses and the need for further briefing of constitutional issues raised by any invocations of privilege, if necessary.

REV_00264619

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
August 2, 2002

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

F.3d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Byrd v. EPA, 174 F.3d 239 (D.C. Cir. 1999). Furthermore, because Judicial Watch has alleged in its Second Amended Complaint that on information and belief the NEPDG is continuing to operate despite the termination of its mandate in the Presidential Memorandum, Judicial Watch's claims are not moot.

It is well settled that the exercise of judicial power authorized by Article III of the U.S. Constitution depends on the existence of a case or controversy. See, e.g., Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 401, 95 S. Ct. 2330 (1975). A case is moot when it "has lost its character as a present, live controversy of the kind that must exist if [the court] is to avoid advisory opinions on abstract questions of law." Schering Corp. v. Shalala, 995 F.2d 1103, 1106 (D.C. Cir. 1993). Article III is satisfied when, as here, the existence of a "partial remedy" is "sufficient to prevent [a] case from being moot." Calderon v. Moore, 518 U.S. 149, 150, 116 S. Ct. 2066 (1996).

1. Judicial Watch's Allegations of the Ongoing Existence of the NEPDG

Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint alleges that "[o]n information and belief, the NEPDG is still in existence." Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl. at ¶ 38. The Complaint then alleges that NEPDG members and staff continue to meet to discuss and formulate energy policy. Id. However unlikely, this Court can not determine at this stage of the case whether or not this allegation is true, but rather must accept it as true for purposes of deciding this motion to dismiss. Scheuer, 416 U.S. at 236. The federal defendants argue in response that "[t]here can be no question that, as a matter of law, the NEPDG no longer exists." Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/2002 at 9. This argument misses the mark. Plaintiff Judicial Watch is not arguing that the legal authority for the NEPDG continues, but that the NEPDG has continued to meet despite the termination of its legal authority. The continued existence of the NEPDG is not, as defendants contend, a question of law, but is a question of fact that is clearly in dispute.

REV_00264512

In the alternative, the federal defendants argue that even if the ongoing existence of the NEPDG is a question of fact, this Court should not accept this fact as true because it is not "well-pled." Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/2002 at 9 n.4. Defendants argue that where there is a disparity between facts alleged in a complaint, and exhibits submitted by the plaintiff in support of the complaint, the exhibit trumps the allegation. Id. (citing cases). Defendants point out that the letter attached to Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint and cited by Judicial Watch to support its allegation of an October 2001 meeting between NEPDG staff and Enron representatives actually states that the meeting occurred "after the termination of the Group." Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl. Ex. 11, at 2. Defendants are correct that this letter clearly states that this meeting occurred after the NEPDG's termination. Regardless, defendants' argument that Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint is not well-pled fails to acknowledge that the Amended Complaint does not simply allege that this one meeting occurred, but that "[o]n information and belief, other meetings between both federal and non-federal members of the allegedly defunct NEPDG have occurred and are still occurring to this day to continue discussions on forumalting a national energy policy." Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl. at ¶38. At this stage of the proceedings, prior to any discovery, this Court must accept these facts as true, no matter how vigorously defendants contest the truthfulness of these allegations.

If the NEPDG does continue to exist and meet to formulate energy policy, this Court can still award the relief requested by Judicial Watch. Therefore, because Judicial Watch has alleged the ongoing existence of this group, none of Judicial Watch's claims are moot.

2. Even if the NEPDG no Longer Exists, These Claims are Not Moot.

Unlike Judicial Watch, Sierra Club does not allege that the NEPDG continues to exist, but concedes that the NEPDG terminated on September 30, 2001. However, even if in fact the NEPDG ceased to exist on September 30, 2001, Judicial Watch and Sierra Club's requests for documents and declaratory relief are not moot.

a. Injunctive Relief

Both plaintiffs have requested that this Court order the release of documents related to the NEPDG's activities as relief for the alleged violations of FACA. Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl. at 22, ¶5,6; Sierra Club Compl. at ¶36. FACA mandates public access to some records of advisory committees:

> Subject to [the requirements of FOIA] the records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendixes, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents, which were made available to or prepared for or by each advisory committee shall be available for public inspection and copying...

5. U.S.C. App. 2 § 10(b). This provision "affirmatively obligates the Government to provide access to the identified materials." Food Chem. News v. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 980 F.2d 1468, 1472 (D.C. Cir. 1992); see also Cummock v. Gore, 180 F.3d 282, 289 (D.C. Cir. 1999). Furthermore, this public access provision applies even where there has been no specific request made, unless "the agency reasonably claims [the materials] to be exempt from disclosure pursuant to FOIA." Food Chem. News, 980 F.2d at 1469; see also Cummock, 180 F.3d. at 289. However, this provision does have a time limitation: the documents, "shall be available for public inspection and copying ... until the advisory committee ceases to exist." 5 U.S.C. App. 2 § 10(b) (emphasis added).

The federal government's statutory duty under FACA to allow the public to inspect and copy documents may be limited in time by the statute, but the ability of a court to award access to the documents as relief for previous violations of that duty is limited only by the existence of the documents. The terms of the statute create the substantive requirements to which the government must adhere - the government must make documents available only while an advisory committee exists. Here, both plaintiffs have properly alleged that the government failed to make documents available during the life of the NEPDG. Whether or not plaintiffs sued before or after the group terminated does not alter the allegation that the government failed to meet the substantive requirements of the statute during the relevant time-frame. Assuming the facts in the complaints to be true, the government violated the public access provisions of the statute. Contrary to the federal defendants' argument here, the terms of the statute limit the scope of liability, not the availability of a remedy.

REV_00264515

The Court is free to exercise its discretion to craft equitable relief addressing statutory violations. Indeed, if after discovery this Court determines that a statutory violation has occurred, the Court must provide some form of relief. See, e.g., Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Cooperative v. Ashcroft, 532 U.S. 483, 121 S. Ct. 1711 (2001). Here, one alleged violation is a failure to provide access to documents during the lifetime of the NEPDG. This Court, in its discretion, could determine at some later date that ordering defendants to provide whatever relevant documents still exist is an appropriate remedy for that violation.

REV_00264516

Thus, whether the relief is available is contingent not on the continued existence of the group, but on the continued existence of the records and information.[5] In other cases, plaintiffs' claims for documents pursuant to § 10(b) were eventually rendered moot not by the termination of the advisory group but only when the defendants released the documents. See, e.g., Byrd v. EPA, 174 F.3d 239 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Physicians Comm. for Responsible Medicine v. Glickman, 117 F.Supp.2d 1 (D.D.C. 2000); Ass'n of Am. Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 879 F. Supp. 10 (D.D.C. 1994).

The D.C. Circuit has held that a request for documents pursuant to FACA is not rendered moot by the termination of the advisory committee in question. Cummock v. Gore, 180 F.3d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1999). In Cummock, the D.C. Circuit reversed a district court opinion that in part dismissed the plaintiff's claim because her request for documents was untimely. The Court held that Cummock had an enforceable right to the documents that were denied to her during the committee's existence and remanded for the District Court to determine precisely what information

---

[5] At the hearing on February 12, 2002, when government's counsel acknowledged that relevant documents still exist, this Court ordered the government to maintain those documents for the duration of this lawsuit.

REV_00264517

Cummock was entitled. 180 F.3d at 292-93. The primary argument by the government in Cummock was that the plaintiff, as a member of the advisory committee in question, had no cause of action under FACA for access to records. The Court rejected the government's argument, holding that a member of an advisory committee has an even greater right of access than does the public under § 10(b), but in so holding discussed the parameters of the public's right. The Court explained:

> In any event, the Government does not dispute that committee members have at least the same rights under FACA as the public. Although we disagree with the Government's position that the rights of a committee member extend no further than the rights of a non-member, even taking only this limited view, the Government's concession is significant. Because there is no question under our precedent that members of the public possess enforceable rights to obtain information under FACA, see Food Chem. News, 980 F.2d at 1472, it follows a fortiori that committee members have at least these same rights. And we have also made it clear that FACA rights are enforceable even after an advisory committee has been disbanded. See, e.g., Byrd, 174 F.3d 239, 243-44 (rejecting argument that plaintiff's injury was not redressable where panel had already completed its work and been disbanded).

180 F.3d at 292 (emphasis added).

The holding of the D.C. Circuit in Cummock is clear: "Cummock clearly possesses an enforceable right to information under FACA, because any member of the public possesses such a right. Moreover, Cummock possesses an even greater right than a member of the public, because, as a Commission member, she is entitled to fully participate...." Id. at 292. In so holding, requirements of the Federal Advisory Committee Act ("FACA"), 5 U.S.C. App. 2, the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. §552, the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. §701 et seq, and the federal mandamus statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1361. While the claims raised by each plaintiff differ in relevant and important ways, there is substantial overlap between the two complaints. Both plaintiffs seek information concerning the activities of the NEPDG and its members in developing and recommending to President George W. Bush a national energy policy. Both plaintiffs allege that private individuals were given a significant role in developing this energy policy, and as a result, the confidentiality under which the NEPDG operated violated the requirements of FACA. Defendants have moved to dismiss both complaints, raising a number of jurisdictional, statutory, and constitutional objections to these suits.

This case comes before the Court on federal defendants' motions to dismiss the Judicial Watch and Sierra Club complaints, as well as three private defendants' motions to dismiss the Judicial Watch complaint. Upon consideration of these motions, the responses and replies thereto, the oral argument of counsel,

---

Advisor to the Department of Energy, Secretary Abraham, Secretary Evans, Secretary Norton, Secretary Veneman, Secretary O'Neill, Secretary Mineta, and Administrator Whitman.

[2] The private individuals named in Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint include: Mark Racicot, Haley Barbour, Kenneth Lay, Thomas Kuhn, and John and Jane Does 1-99, Certain Unknown Non-Federal Employees. Sierra Club sued no non-federal individual defendants.

the D.C. Circuit was attempting to be faithful to legislative intent. With respect to the public access provision, § 10(b), the legislative history explains:

> This provision has the effect of assuring openness in the operations of advisory committees. This provision coupled with the requirement that complete and accurate minutes of committee meetings be kept serves to prevent the surreptitious use of advisory committees to further the interests of any special interest group. Along with the provisions for balanced representation contained in Sec. 4 of the bill, this requirement of openness is a strong safeguard of the public interest.

H.R. Rep. 92-1017, reprinted in 1972 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 3491. The surreptitious use of advisory committees by special interest groups could necessarily result in a lack of knowledge about the group's activities, as exemplified by the allegations in this case. It is entirely conceivable that only after the fact would the public become aware of a group's existence and activities, and only after the fact could the public then claim its right of access to documents. In addition, mandating that a court's ability to enforce the FACA record-keeping requirement ends with the termination of the advisory committee would create an odd incentive for the government to terminate any problematic advisory group to avoid shedding light on its activities.

Defendants try to distinguish Cummock by arguing that Cummock applies only to suits by members of an advisory committee. See Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/2002 at 10. But the passage cited above clearly assumes for sake of argument that "that the rights of a committee member extend no further than the rights of a non-member," and then states that "members of the public possess enforceable rights to obtain information under FACA" and that "FACA rights are enforceable even after an advisory committee has been disbanded." 180 F.3d at 292. Furthermore, the Court held that "Cummock clearly possesses an enforceable right to information under FACA, because any member of the public possesses such a right." Id. Contrary to defendants' argument, these conclusions are not dicta, but are central to the D.C. Circuit's reasoning and holding. In order to determine what rights Cummock possessed, the Court reasoned that Cummock must have at least as many rights as the public, which include the right to documents after the committee has been disbanded.

Finally, defendants argue that Cummock cites only one case, Byrd v. EPA, 174 F.3d 239 (D.C. Cir. 1999), to support the conclusion that a claim for documents is not moot beyond the life of the committee, and therefore is limited to the scope of Byrd. Byrd held that a request for declaratory relief under FACA was not mooted by the dissolution of the advisory committee at issue. Id. at 244. Thus, defendants argue that Cummock's citation to Byrd "can only be understood to be a reference to the limited declaratory relief at issue in Byrd." Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/02 at 11 n.7. Defendants fail to recognize that the D.C. Circuit in Cummock extended the general proposition in Byrd that relief can exist beyond the life of the committee to claims for other relief. Insofar as Cummock is an extension of the holding in Byrd, it is an extension that is binding on this Court.

Defendants also argue that after the termination of an advisory committee, FOIA provides the only statutory right of access to documents. In the absence of a FACA violation, this may be an accurate statement. If the government complies with FACA, and provides documents in a reading room until the committee ceases to exist, and a citizen wants to access those documents at some time after the termination of the committee, that citizen would have to file a FOIA request to a proper agency defendant for those documents. But that scenario is not what plaintiffs have alleged here. When the government violates FACA, the question is not what other statutes could also provide a right of access, but what options are available to this Court to remedy that statutory violation.

Finally, defendants also argue that plaintiffs' claims are moot because they did not request a preliminary injunction to preserve the records at issue here. Indeed, plaintiffs could have moved for a preliminary injunction to require defendants to maintain the relevant documents. However, plaintiffs were in no way required to request such preliminary relief in order to maintain the controversy. Relief is available as long as relevant documents exist.

REV_00264521

b. Declaratory Relief

Defendants also argue that plaintiffs' request for a declaratory judgment that defendants violated FACA is moot. Defendants argue that, because all other claims for relief are moot, the claim for declaratory relief cannot survive alone, citing City of Houston v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 24 F.3d 1421, 1429 (D.C. Cir. 1994). As explained above, the claims for injunctive relief regarding the documents are not moot in this case, so this argument by defendants fails. However, even if all the other claims for relief were moot, this Court would follow the D.C. Circuit's holding in Byrd that a claim for declaratory relief is not mooted by the termination of the committee. 174 F.3d 239 (D.C. Cir. 1999).

In conclusion, Judicial Watch's claims are not moot because it has alleged the ongoing existence of the NEPDG. Regardless of the likelihood of the truth of these allegations, this Court must accept them as true for purposes of deciding these motions. In addition, Sierra Club's claims are not moot because this Court can remedy any alleged violations of FACA, the APA, and the mandamus statute with injunctive and declaratory relief.

B. FACA Claims

1. FACA Provides No Private Cause of Action

Both Judicial Watch and Sierra Club allege that the activities of the NEPDG are subject to FACA because the group was established by the President to provide advice on energy policy, and had members who were not full-time federal employees. Both Judicial Watch and Sierra Club further allege that the activities of the NEPDG violated all the procedural requirements of FACA by failing, for example, to provide public notice of meetings, public access to meetings, and public access to minutes and documents generated by the NEPDG. Sierra Club also alleges that in addition to the NEPDG, defendants established and utilized "Sub-Groups" of the NEPDG, which also had private members and which also were subject to and violated FACA's requirements.

In response to these allegations, defendants argue that Judicial Watch and Sierra Club's claims pursuant to FACA should be dismissed because there is no private right of action under FACA.[6] While both Sierra Club and amicus NRDC concede that there is no private cause of action under FACA, Judicial Watch contends that there is. However, in the event that this Court should be convinced by the government's argument with respect to FACA, at oral argument Judicial Watch requested and was granted leave to amend its complaint to include claims under the APA and federal mandamus statute.

Notwithstanding the many previous cases in which courts have implicitly recognized a private right of action pursuant to FACA,

---

[6] Defendants did not make this argument in their original motion to dismiss the Judicial Watch claims, but raised it only in response to Judicial Watch's First Amended Complaint. See Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/02.

in light of the Supreme Court's recent decision in Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 121 S. Ct. 1511 (2001), this Court has no choice but to hold that FACA creates no private right of action. Sandoval makes very clear that courts can not read into statutes a cause of action that has no basis in the statutory text. 532 U.S. at 286-87 ("Statutory intent on this latter point is determinative.... Without it, a cause of action does not exist and courts may not create one, no matter how desirable that might be as a policy matter, or how compatible with the statute.") (internal citations omitted). The Sandoval Court rejected any attempt to "revert in this case to the understanding of private causes of action that held sway 40 years ago" that would allow courts to imply a cause of action where consistent with the purpose of the statute at issue. Id. Regardless of how allowing such a private cause of action may further the purposes of FACA, nothing in the text of FACA supports a private right to sue. The statutory language may create rights and duties that have been recognized by courts in the past. See, e.g., Cummock v. Gore, 180 F.3d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1999). However, language that creates a right is insufficient to create a right to sue. The Sandoval Court made clear that the statute must provide not only a private right but also a private remedy. 532 U.S. at 286-87.

Nothing in the language of FACA evidences any intent to create such a remedy. Precedent does not require this Court to hold otherwise. It is true that several cases have been brought pursuant to FACA apparently without incorporating the FACA violation into a corresponding APA claim. See, e.g., Public Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 109 S. Ct. 2558 (1989); Cummock v. Gore, 180 F.3d 282 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Ass'n of Am. Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993). Apparently, in all of these cases, the courts assumed that FACA provided a cause of action. None of the cases addressed the issue of whether Congress created a private right to sue under FACA. This Court cannot rely on an implicit assumption, even an assumption made by the Supreme Court, when a later Supreme Court decision makes clear that the requisite statutory language is lacking here.

However, defendants overstate the amount of precedent that supports their position that a plaintiff must sue under the APA to enforce FACA. Defendants cite cases from the D.C. Circuit, Claybrook v. Slater, 111 F.3d 904, 908-09 (D.C. Cir. 1997), Animal Legal Defense Fund v. Shalala, 104 F.3d 424, 430 (D.C. Cir. 1997), Washington Legal Found. v. U.S. Sentencing Comm'n, 17 F.3d 1446, 1450 (D.C. Cir. 1994), and one case from this Court, Fertilizer Institute v. EPA, 938 F. Supp. 52, 54 (D.D.C. 1996), for the proposition that "judicial review of FACA claims is available only through the APA." Defs.' Reply of 4/26/02 at 5. Yet none of the D.C. Circuit cases cited by defendants hold this.[7]

REV_00264525

The Fertilizer Institute case does clearly hold that "[s]ince FACA contains no provision for judicial review, the availability if such review must derive from the APA." 938 F. Supp. at 54. However, one other case from this Court, cited by plaintiff Judicial Watch, holds the opposite: that FACA does create a private cause of action. Washington Legal Found. v. American Bar Ass'n Standing Comm. on the Fed. Judiciary, 648 F. Supp. 1353, 1361 (D.D.C. 1986).

Notwithstanding the relative confusion that exists within the FACA doctrine with respect to this question, the Supreme Court's standard is now clear: this Court cannot read into a statute a cause of action that Congress has not expressly created. Sandoval, 532 U.S. at 286. Consequently, Judicial [7] Claybrook v. Slater involved a challenge under FACA to the decision of an agency representative not to adjourn an advisory committee meeting. 111 F.3d at 906. The D.C. Circuit affirmed the District Court's dismissal of the action for lack of standing, reasoning that the plaintiff had no legally cognizable injury because the action at issue was committed to agency discretion. Id. In so holding, the Court stated, "the Administrative Procedure Act . . . governs judicial review of agency actions." Id. at 908. While the D.C. Circuit did analyze that FACA claim, brought against the Federal Highway Administration, under the APA, it did not hold that a FACA claim was only available under the APA. The case says nothing about whether and how FACA claims brought against entities in the government that are not agencies for APA purposes can proceed.

---

Neither Animal Legal Defense Fund v. Shalala nor Washington Legal Foundation v. U.S. Sentencing Commission address the availability of a private right of action under FACA. 104 F.3d 424; 17 F.3d 1446. The language with respect to the APA incorrectly cited by defendants here, comes from a discussion of whether the Sentencing Commission qualifies as an "agency" for purposes of FACA. FACA incorporates the definition of "agency" used in the APA; thus, with respect to what qualifies as an agency, the APA "determines FACA coverage." 104 F.3d at 430. Neither of these cases addresses whether FACA contains a private right to sue.

REV_00264526

Watch and Sierra Club's claims pursuant to FACA must be dismissed.

C. APA Claims

Plaintiffs allege that by failing to comply with FACA, the defendants have acted arbitrarily and capriciously, not in accordance with law, and without observation of procedure required by law, in violation of the APA. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) and (D) ("The reviewing court shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be - (A) arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law... (D) without observance of procedure required by law"). Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the APA because many of the defendants are not "agencies" and therefore not liable pursuant to the APA. For those defendants that are covered by the APA, defendants argue that plaintiffs have not identified the requisite "final agency action."

Plaintiffs' APA claims against two of the named defendants, Vice President Cheney and the NEPDG, were dismissed by this Court on May 23, 2002. Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient final agency action with respect to the remaining agency defendants for this Court to deny the motions to dismiss.

1. Non-Agency Defendants

REV_00264527

Judicial Watch and Sierra Club have named as defendants the following: Vice President Richard Cheney, the NEPDG, Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director of NEPDG and Director of Energy Policy for Cheney and Senior Policy Advisor to the DOE, Spencer Abraham, Secretary of DOE, Donald Evans, Secretary of Commerce, Gale Norton, Secretary of the Interior, Ann Veneman, Secretary of Agriculture, Paul O'Neill, Secretary of the Treasury, Norman Mineta, Secretary of Transportation, and Christine Todd Whitman, Administrator of the EPA. Defendants argue that the Vice President, the NEPDG, and any alleged NEPDG sub-groups are not "agencies" for purposes of the APA.

a. Vice President Cheney

Sierra Club[8] concedes that Vice President Cheney is not an agency for purposes of the APA. Sierra Club's Opp'n at 7 n.3. Thus, this Court need not resolve the question of whether the Vice President may ever be an "agency" for purposes of the APA, thereby avoiding a difficult constitutional question. See Public Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 466, 109 S. Ct. 2558 (1989) (emphasizing doctrine of constitutional avoidance); cf. Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-01 (1992) (holding [8] Judicial Watch has opposed the federal defendants' motion to dismiss its Second Amended Complaint by incorporating by reference the arguments previously made in its opposition briefs and the briefs of Sierra Club and NRDC. See Jud. Watch Opp'n of 6/7/02. Because Judicial Watch has adopted Sierra Club and NRDC's arguments with respect to the APA claims in their entirety, the concessions made by Sierra Club and NRDC with respect to these claims similarly apply to Judicial Watch.

the applicable statutory and case law, the Court grants in part and denies in part the federal defendants' motions, and grants the private defendants' motions.

BACKGROUND

I. The National Energy Policy Development Group

On January 29, 2001, President George W. Bush issued a Memorandum establishing the National Energy Policy Development Group. See Sierra Club Compl. at ¶16; Defs.' Mem. of Points & Authorities in Support of Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss filed on 3/8/2002, Attach. A ("Bush Mem."). The Presidential Memorandum mandated that the NEPDG was to be established within the Executive Office of the President and was tasked with developing a national energy plan. Id. The mission of the NEPDG was to "develop a national energy policy designed to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate Federal, State, and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy." Id. The expressly delineated functions of the NEPDG were to gather information, deliberate, and make policy recommendations to the President. Id. The President assigned the NEDPG the task of submitting reports to the President on the difficulties in ensuring the country's energy needs and setting forth a recommended national energy policy consistent with the group's that separation of powers concerns prevent the application of the APA to the President); Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1295 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (suggesting that the Vice President should not be subject to FOIA).

b. NEPDG

Because Sierra Club has conceded that the NEPDG no longer exists, any APA claim brought directly against the NEPDG must be dismissed. Even though Sierra Club's FACA claims with respect to the federal defendants are not moot, if the NEPDG no longer exists, then it can not be sued as a defendant. Thus, the Court need not resolve the question of whether the NEPDG or its alleged sub-groups were sufficiently independent to qualify as an "agency" for purposes of the APA.[9]

2. Agency Defendants and Final Agency Action

Defendants concede that the cabinet members sued by plaintiffs are agency actors, and can generally be sued pursuant to the APA for agency action. Defs.' Mot. of 4/5/02 at 12. Section 704 of the APA states that "[a]gency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review." 5 U.S.C. § 704. It is uncontested that the actions in question are not made reviewable by statute, so in order to state [9] Furthermore, Sierra Club admits that it included the NEPDG as a defendant "in order to preempt any 'shell game' tactic defendants may employ to withhold Task Force records, and for the sake of clarity." Sierra Club's Opp'n of 4/16/02 at 8 n.6.

REV_00264529

a claim under the APA, plaintiffs must identify a "final agency action." Defendants argue that the APA claims against these agency defendants must be dismissed because plaintiffs have not done so.

Plaintiffs argue that the agency heads named as defendants established and utilized the NEPDG and the NEPDG Sub-Groups and that the "agencies under the control of the named agency defendants have denied [plaintiffs] access to proceedings and records". Sierra Club's Opp'n of 4/16/02 at 9. To be specific, the particular FACA violations alleged to have been caused by defendants are:

- Failure to open each meeting to the public.
- Failure to publish timely notice of each meeting in the Federal Register
- Failure to allow public attendance or statements before the meetings
- Failure to make available for public inspection and copying the records of the NEPDG.
- Failure to keep detailed minutes of each meeting.
- Establishing Sub-Groups without Presidential authorization or notice in Federal Register.
- Failure to file an advisory committee charter.

Sierra Club Compl. at ¶ 31; Judicial Watch Sec. Amend. Compl. at ¶ 54.

The question before this Court is twofold: whether the actions or lack thereof that caused the alleged FACA violation are "agency action," and whether those actions or inactions are "final." Plaintiffs allege that the agency defendants were at least in part responsible for the decision-making processes that lead to the FACA violations. Specifically, Sierra Club alleges that the various agency defendants "participated in" the NEPDG meetings and deliberations, and "gathered information, advice, and recommendations on national energy policy and supervised the work of the [NEPDG]." Sierra Club's Compl. at ¶¶ 9 - 15. Furthermore, "defendants arranged, participated in and exercised responsibility over meetings and other activities involving [Task Force Sub-Groups]." Id. at ¶ 18. In addition, Sierra Club alleges that the "participants in [NEPDG] and the Task Force Sub-Groups interacted significantly and acted collectively in expressing their viewpoints and advice on energy policy." Id. at ¶20. Sierra Club also alleges that "[t]he [NEPDG] and the Task Force Sub-Groups were established or utilized by the President and the defendants." Id. at ¶23. Finally, "defendants have refused to provide information to Congress, the General Accounting Office, or the public (including the Sierra Club) concerning" the NEPDG. Id. at ¶24.

Plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of all inferences from the facts alleged. From the allegation that defendants caused these violations it could be possible that the group comprised of the agency defendants, the Vice President, and private individuals acted collectively to make the decisions to hold meetings that were not open to the public, to hold meetings for which minutes were not kept and were not made public, to hold meetings for which no notice was published in the Federal Register, to create draft reports and other records that were not made public, and to meet and work on policy recommendations without filing an advisory committee charter. Given the structure of the NEPDG outlined in the Presidential Memorandum, it is possible, or even likely that these decisions were not made collectively, but in fact were made by the Vice President acting as the head of the group. However, "[i]ndeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974). This Court will not grant a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) unless a plaintiff can prove no facts in support of his claim. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Kowal v. MCI Communications Corp., 16 F.3d 1271, 1276 (D.C. Cir. 1994). Here, if plaintiffs can prove that decisions were made collectively by this group, those can constitute agency action for purposes of the APA.

Furthermore, in addition to holding meetings of the NEPDG that allegedly violated FACA's access requirements, plaintiffs also allege that the agency defendants established and controlled the Task Force Sub-Groups. Plaintiffs allege that these Sub-Groups, comprised of NEPDG members and private individuals, also constituted advisory committees for purposes of FACA and also operated in violation of FACA and the APA. Specifically, Sierra Club alleges that "defendants arranged, participated in and exercised responsibility over meetings and other activities involving [Task Force Sub-Groups]." Id. at ¶18. Judicial Watch similarly alleges that defendants established the Sub-Groups. Jud. Watch. Sec. Amend. Compl. at ¶54(f). Once again, it is possible reasonably to infer from these allegations that an agency head, or a group of agency heads collectively or individually made the decision to establish and oversee particular Sub-Groups.

In response, the federal defendants argue that the decisions of the NEPDG were made by the President, who established the group, and the Vice President, who ran the group, rather than the agency participants. The assertion that no relevant decisions were made by the agency heads is a question of fact that cannot be determined without discovery. The fact that the Presidential Memorandum that established the NEPDG delegated authority to the Vice President to head the NEPDG is not conclusive with respect to how decisions were actually made. Did the Vice President set the dates and times of the meetings? Did the group collectively come to a decision to hold a meeting or conduct other activities? If these Sub-Groups did in fact exist, who made the decision to establish them? Who made the decision as to when and where the Sub-Groups would meet, and what role they would play in the policy-making process? Construing the facts in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, this Court must assume for purposes of this motion that the decisions at issue were made in part by the agency defendants.

REV_00264533

Thus, the question before this Court is whether collective decisions by such a group, including several agency heads, to hold meetings that allegedly violated the FACA requirements and to establish and control Task Force Sub-Groups, can be considered first, agency action, and second, final agency action pursuant to the APA. Defendants argue, "[i]n the context of advisory committees, the agency that charters a committee and to which a committee reports can engage in final agency action, but individual members of an advisory committee cannot." Defs.' Reply of 4/26/02 at 12. Defendants' primary justification for why the actions of the agency heads cannot be considered agency action is that these individuals acted only as participants in a policy-making group, and were not making decisions on behalf of their agencies.

According to § 10 of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 701(b)(2), "agency action" has the meaning given to it by 5 U.S.C. § 551. That definition of "'agency action' includes the whole or a part of an agency rule, order, license, sanction, relief, or the equivalent or denial thereof, or failure to act," 5 U.S.C. § 551(13). That section further defines "order" as "the whole or a part of a final disposition ... of an agency in a matter other than rule making...." 5 U.S.C. § 551(6). According to the legislative history of the APA:

REV_00264534

> The term 'agency action' brings together previously defined terms in order to simplify the language of the judicial-review provisions of section 10 and to assure the complete coverage of every form of agency power, proceeding, action, or inaction. In that respect the term includes the supporting procedures, findings, conclusions, or statements or reasons or basis for the action or inaction."

S. Doc. No. 248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., 255 (1946). As the D.C. Circuit has explained, "the Act defines agency action as 'the whole or a part of an agency rule, order, license, sanction, relief, of the equivalent or denial thereof, or failure to act.' .... Id. § 551(13). These categories are imprecise, and courts have made the threshold determination of reviewable agency action on a case-by-case basis." Industrial Safety Equipment v. EPA, 837 F.2d 1115, 1118 (D.C. Cir. 1988).

The type of actions and inaction challenged here, creating sub-groups of the Task Force, holding meetings, refusing to disclose documents, failure to comply with FACA's other procedural requirements, certainly fall within the broad category of "agency power" Congress intended to include in this definition of agency action. S. Doc. No. 248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., 255

(1946) ("to assure the complete coverage of every form of agency power, proceeding, action, or inaction."). The government can not seriously challenge the type of action taken here as not the type of action covered by this definition. Whether that action can be ascribed to an agency, and whether that action is sufficiently final, are two more difficult questions.

If indeed the decisions to hold NEPDG meetings in private and to create and operate the Sub-Groups were made collectively or in part by the agency heads, can these decisions be ascribed to the agencies? This Court can not detect any case law discussing whether an action taken by a Cabinet member in an advisory capacity should be ascribed to the agency for purposes of the APA. Here, the D.C. Circuit's discussion of the difficulty of distinguishing between the dual role of policy advisor and agency head played by Cabinet officials in the context of a FOIA suit in Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781 (D.C. Cir. 1980), is helpful.

The question before the D.C. Circuit in Ryan was whether documents within the control of the Attorney General and generated for the purpose of advising the President on judicial nominations are "agency records" for purposes of FOIA. The Circuit reversed the District Court's grant of summary judgment to defendants and ordered the court to enter summary judgment in favor of plaintiffs, holding that such documents were agency records. The D.C. Circuit held that there was no basis for "distinguishing between the Attorney General and the Department of Justice, in such a way that the former is not an 'agency' where he functions in a purely advisory capacity to the President." 617 F.2d at 786-87. The Court emphasized the dual role played by the Attorney General as advisor to the President and administrator of the Department of Justice, and stated "[t]he same dual role would be true, to a greater or lesser extent, of all other Cabinet officers." Id. at 787. The Court then held that there was no "meaningful distinction" between documents generated and kept at DOJ on the basis of the dual roles. Id.

REV_00264536

Similarly, with respect to the APA, there is no statutory basis for distinguishing between actions taken by an agency head as an advisor to the President and actions taken as the administrator of the agency. Just as rendering advice on judicial nominations was within the scope of the Attorney General's power both as an advisor and as the head of the Department of Justice, so too is rendering advice on energy policy within the scope of the dual roles of many of the Cabinet members sued here, particularly the Secretary of Energy. Id. at 787. As the D.C. Circuit explained, "[j]udicial nominations are by no means unique as an instance where normal agency functions involve some element of giving advice to the President." Id.

The D.C. Circuit held that "[o]nce a unit is found to be an agency, this determination will not vary according to its specific function in each individual case," and "[a]ny unit or official that is part of an agency and has non-advisory functions cannot be considered a non-agency in selected contexts on a case-by-case basis." Id. at 788-89. There is a compelling argument for applying this holding of Ryan to APA claims. The same difficulties attend to distinguishing between decisions made or actions taken by agency heads in a purely advisory context or as the head of the agency for purposes of the APA. The Secretary of Energy provides the strongest example of such difficulty-soliciting opinions and rendering advice on energy policy to the President is part and parcel of the Secretary's duties as the head of the DOE. It would be unrealistic to say that when involved in a group designed to create energy policy the Secretary of Energy sheds his role as the head of the DOE and acts only as an advisor to the President. Furthermore, these individuals were selected to participate in this policy-making process by virtue of their positions as the various Secretaries of administrative agencies.

REV_00264537

Moreover, in addition to the arbitrariness involved in attempting to draw a distinction between the dual roles of Cabinet members, the D.C. Circuit also rejected such line-drawing because it would undermine the purposes of FOIA. Id. at 788. So too would such line-drawing, in this case, undermine the mission. Id. The NEPDG was given a limited duration and was authorized to act only through the end of the 2001 fiscal year. Id.

Vice President Cheney was tasked with directing the group, presiding at meetings, and establishing any subordinate groups to assist the NEPDG in its work. Id. The memorandum appointed the following individuals as members of the group: Vice President Cheney, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Energy, the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy, the Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, and the Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs. Id. The memorandum also stated that the Vice President could also invite, when appropriate, the Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to participate, as well as the Secretary of State, and "other officers of the Federal Government." Id. Funding and support staff were to be provided by the Department of Energy ("DOE"), and if necessary, by the National Economic Council and other appropriations available to the President.

On May 16, 2001 the NEPDG issued a public report that recommended a set of policies in the form of administrative purposes of the APA. Given the vast number of agency actions that include an element of advice-giving, to hold that a decision made by the head of an agency while serving in an advisory role to the President is not subject to the APA would render a large number of agency actions unreviewable. This would not comport with Congress' intent to include within the scope of the APA "every form of agency power." S. Doc. No. 248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., at 255 (1946).

Thus, for the reasons articulated by the D.C. Circuit in Ryan, this Court holds that an action that otherwise would qualify for the APA's definition of "agency action" does not fall outside the coverage of the APA simply because the agency head acts in an advisory capacity to the President. The more important inquiry is whether that action is sufficiently final for APA purposes.

The Supreme Court clearly stated the definition of "final agency action" in Bennett v. Spear:

> As a general matter, two conditions must be satisfied for agency action to be "final": First, the action must mark the "consummation" of the agency's decisionmaking process, Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 113, 68 S.Ct. 431, 437, 92 L.Ed. 568 (1948)--it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature. And second, the action must be one by which "rights or obligations have been determined," or from which "legal consequences will flow," Port of Boston Marine Terminal Assn. v. Rederiaktiebolaget Transatlantic, 400 U.S. 62, 71, 91 S. Ct. 203, 209, 27 L.Ed.2d 203 (1970).

520 U.S. 154, 177-78 (1997). The decisions in question — to create and supervise Task Force Sub-Groups, to hold meetings closed to the public and without complying with the various procedural requirements of FACA — were not tentative or interlocutory. Plaintiffs are not challenging decisions made by low level agency actors that were subject to the review of their supervisors. Plaintiffs are challenging decisions allegedly made on behalf of an agency by the head of that agency. Nothing in the allegations indicates that the actions challenged were later corrected or reversed by the same or other decision-makers. As decisions allegedly made by the head of an agency, these actions marked the consummation of the decision-making process.

REV_00264539

Second, these actions determined "rights or obligations" and created "legal consequences." 520 U.S. at 178. The decisions to hold meetings without public access to the meetings or the records created indeed had a legal consequence - the denial of the public's right of access to that information. Plaintiffs and other interested groups and citizens were prevented from enforcing their right to access information that exists pursuant to FACA. Subsequent actions taken without granting access, and the failure to grant access itself, constitute final agency action.

Defendants argue that recognizing the denial of information as a final agency action confuses the APA standard with FOIA. FACA imposes no requirements on individual committee members, argues defendants, so any denial of information by individual committee members cannot violate the law. Plaintiffs, however, are not challenging an individual denial of access to a particular information request. FACA obligates the government to make open and available to the public the meetings and records of advisory committees generally, without respect to any particular request. That general failure to do so here is what plaintiffs challenge, not the particular response to their particular requests for access. Thus, any particular denial of access to Judicial Watch or Sierra Club is only relevant insofar as it reflects a general denial of public access.

Once again, the standard to be applied by this Court is not whether the factual scenario that describes final agency action is likely to have occurred here. All that is required for plaintiffs to survive defendants' motions to dismiss is for such a factual scenario to be possible. Plaintiffs have alleged sufficiently final agency action here to survive.

3. Andrew Lundquist

Defendants argue that all claims against Andrew Lunquist, sued by both Judicial Watch and Sierra Club, should be dismissed because Lundquist no longer works for the government. Such a factual determination is inappropriate at this stage of this case. Defendants may be able to establish these facts through discovery. However, this Court can not accept the unsupported factual allegations of defense counsel with respect to Mr. Lundquist's employment status.

D. Mandamus Statute

Plaintiffs have also sued defendants pursuant to the federal mandamus statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1361, arguing that this Court has the authority to remedy defendants' violation of a nondiscretionary duty created by FACA. The federal mandamus statute states: "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff." 28 U.S.C. § 1361. The parties dispute the meaning of this statute. The federal defendants argue that the mandamus statute cannot provide jurisdiction to hear claims based on a violation of another statute if that other statute does not provide a private cause of action. Plaintiffs argue that the mandamus statute provides both a cause of action and jurisdiction where another statute imposes a non-discretionary duty on a federal official and where no other relief is available.

1. Cause of Action

Defendants argue that "[t]he federal mandamus statute may provide jurisdiction for an otherwise existing cause of action, but it does not provide a plaintiff with a cause of action. . . . That means a statute that does not provide a right of action cannot be enforced through mandamus." Defs.' Reply of 4/26/02 at 6. While citing a case from this Court to support their argument, Public Citizen v. Kantor, 864 F. Supp. 208, 213 (D.D.C. 1994), defendants fail to cite controlling authority from the D.C. Circuit, Chamber of Commerce v. Reich, 74 F. 3d 1322 (D.C. Cir. 1996), that holds just the opposite.

REV_00264542

The plaintiffs in Reich challenged the authority of the President to issue an Executive Order authorizing the Secretary of Labor to disqualify federal employers who hire strike replacements from federal contracts, arguing that the Executive Order was preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). The D.C. Circuit held that while the APA did not support plaintiff's challenge to the Executive Order because plaintiffs had not identified any agency action, the Court could review legality of Order on a non-statutory basis. Id. at 1327 (citing Byse and Fiocca, Section 1361 of the Mandamus and Venue Act of 1962 and "Nonstatutory" Judicial Review of Federal Administrative Action, 81 HARV.L.REV. 308, 321 (1967)).[10] Specifically, the Court held, "[i]f a plaintiff is unable to bring his case predicated on either a specific or a general statutory review provision, he may still be able to institute a non-statutory review action." Id. While the D.C. Circuit in Reich does not identify the "non-statutory" basis of review as a writ of [10] The Byse and Fiocca law review article explains that while mandamus actions in federal court are technically statutory actions pursuant to § 1361, they are commonly referred to as non-statutory judicial review actions because of the traditional availability of the writ of mandamus as a source of nonstatutory relief. See Byse and Fiocca, 81 Harv. L. Rev. 308, 355 n. 51 (1967).

REV_00264543

mandamus or the mandamus statute, the cases it relies upon in this discussion are mandamus cases, and a later D.C. Circuit case, Washington Legal Foundation v. United States Sentencing Comm'n, confirmed that indeed Reich concerned mandamus. 89 F.3d 897, 901 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

Neither plaintiffs nor defendants cited or discussed the Reich holding in their briefs, or the issue of whether Reich overrules the Kantor decision from this Court. Defendants are correct that Kantor clearly held that the mandamus statute does not provide a source of review where judicial review is otherwise precluded. 864 F. Supp. at 213. However, regardless of the holding of this Court in Kantor, Reich overrules that decision.

At oral argument, defendants attempted to argue that the Supreme Court's holding in Sandoval, 532 U.S. at 286-87, with respect to the existence of statutory rights of action overrules Reich. However, Sandoval in no way conflicts with the holding of Reich. The Sandoval Court was concerned about the constitutionality of an Article III Court reading into a statute a cause of action that Congress had not explicitly created. Id. Here, there is no such concern because Congress itself created the mandamus statute.

Following Reich, this Court holds that the mandamus statute may provide an avenue to remedy violations of statutory duties even when the statute that creates the duty does not contain a private cause of action. Accordingly, this Court must now turn to the question of whether FACA creates such a duty.

2. Non-Discretionary Duty

When a federal official has an obligation to perform a ministerial or non-discretionary duty, a federal district court may issue a writ of mandamus under § 1361 to compel that officer to fulfill the obligation. National Wildlife Fed'n v. United States, 626 F.2d 917, 923 (D.C. Cir. 1980). However, mandamus is a "drastic remedy, to be invoked only in extraordinary situations." Consolidated Edison Co. of New York v. Ashcroft, 286 F.3d 600, 605 (D.C. Cir. 2002); In re Papandreou, 139 F.3d 247, 249 (D.C. Cir. 1998). As the Supreme Court has explained, a "ministerial duty" must be "so plainly prescribed as to be free from doubt and equivalent to a positive command.... [W]here the duty is not thus plainly prescribed, but depends on a statute or statutes the construction or application of which is not free from doubt, it is regarded as involving the character of judgment or discretion which cannot be controlled by mandamus." Wilbur v. United States, 281 U.S. 206, 218-19, 50 S. Ct. 320 (1920) (quoted in Consolidated Edison, 139 F.3d at 605).

Plaintiff identifies several non-discretionary duties imposed by FACA. However, the only duties that are relevant here are those that are not moot. See Gray v. Office of Personnel Management, 771 F.2d 1504, 1514 (D.C. Cir. 1985)(holding a mandamus claim moot where requested duty was subsequently performed). With respect to plaintiff Sierra Club, because it has conceded that the NEPDG no longer exists, several of the nondiscretionary duties imposed by FACA, such as opening meetings to the public, and providing notice of meetings in the Federal Register, can no longer be ordered by this Court.

As discussed above with respect to mootness, however, one claim for injunctive relief remains available to Sierra Club: the requirement that records related to the advisory committee's work be made public, 5 U.S.C. App. 2 §10(b). In other words, the requested relief is not rendered moot by the termination of the advisory committee or the language in the statute "until the advisory committee ceases to exist." That request for relief would only be rendered moot by the disclosure of the documents to plaintiff. See, e.g., Gray v. Office of Personnel Management, 771 F.2d 1504, 1514 (D.C. Cir. 1985)(holding a mandamus claim moot where requested duty was subsequently performed); see also Byrd v. EPA, 174 F.3d 239 (D.C. Cir. 1999)(FACA claim moot when government released documents); Physicians Comm. for Responsible Medicine v. Glickman, 117 F.Supp.2d 1 (D.D.C. 2000) (same).

The duty to make documents related to an advisory committee available to the public is non-discretionary. Section 10(b) states:

> Subject to [the FOIA], the records, reports, transcripts, minutes, appendixes, working papers, > drafts, studies, agenda or other documents which were made available to or prepared for or by each advisory committee shall be available for public inspection and copying at a single location in the offices of the advisory committee or the agency to which the advisory committee reports until the advisory committee ceases to exist.

REV_00264546

5 U.S.C. App. 2 § 10(b). The language of this section leaves no room for discretion: the records "shall be available for public inspection." Id. The Supreme Court has stated that by using "shall" in a civil forfeiture statute, "Congress could not have chosen stronger words to express its intent that forfeiture by mandatory in cases where the statute applied." United States v. Monsanto, 491 U.S. 600, 607, 109 S. Ct. 2657 (1989); see also Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 569-70, 108 S. Ct. 2541 (1988) (Congress' use of "shall" in a housing subsidy statute constitutes "mandatory language"); Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight Sys. Inc., 450 U.S. 728, 739 n.15, 101 S. Ct. 1437 (1981); Black's Law Dictionary 1233 (5th ed. 1979) ("As used in statutes . . . [shall] is generally imperative or mandatory."). The mandamus statute does allow for the possibility of invoking FOIA exemptions to protect some documents. That exception to the public disclosure rule does not, however, introduce discretion into the statutory mandate. If no FOIA exemption applies to the documents in question, the documents "shall be made available." § 10(b)

With respect to the claims made by Judicial Watch, because Judicial Watch alleges that the NEPDG continues to exist, none of the duties created by FACA are moot. In addition to the duty to make documents publically available, FACA creates several other duties, that by virtue of the use of the word shall, Congress has made nondiscretionary. See 5 U.S.C. App.2 § 10(a)(1)(meetings shall be public); § 10(a)(2)(timely notice shall be published); § 10(a)(3)(interested persons shall be permitted to attend, subject to reasonable rules and regulations); § 10(b)(records shall be made public); § 10(c)(minutes shall be kept and shall contain a record of persons present, complete description of matters discussed and conclusions reached, and the accuracy of such minutes shall be certified by chairman); § 11(a)(transcripts shall be made available at cost).

Defendants' sole argument with respect to whether the duties imposed by FACA are discretionary is that FACA imposes no duty on either the Vice President or the individual members of an advisory committee. Defs.' Mot. of 4/5/2002 at 15 ("neither the Vice President (who is not an 'agency head') nor any individual member of a FACA committee is singled out for specific duties under the statute."). Plaintiffs respond that a statute need not single out the specific official on which it imposes a duty in order for that duty to be nondiscretionary. Defendants cite no cases in support of their argument that the statute must single out the relevant individuals by name or title. This argument actions and proposed legislation. See "Reliable, Affordable, and Environmentally Sound Energy for America's Future," Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, available at www.whitehouse.gov/energy/National-Energy-Policy.pdf. That report was approved by the President as the National Energy Policy. Id. The authority for the NEPDG terminated at the end of the 2001 fiscal year, September 30, 2001. See Bush Mem. at 2.

REV_00264548

As alleged in Judicial Watch's Complaint, from the start, the NEDPG gained the attention of the national media. In particular, the public demand for information about the energy policy development process and identity of the participants in that process has been great. That attention has only intensified with the recent controversy over the highly publicized bankruptcy of the Enron Corporation and allegations of contacts between former Enron Chief Executive Officer Kenneth Lay and the NEDPG. Both plaintiffs allege that private individuals and corporations had access to the NEPDG and participated as members of the NEPDG. Sierra Club also alleges that Sub-Groups of the NEPDG were created, which also had private individual members. Both plaintiffs made requests on behalf of their members for information about the NEPDG and had those requests denied by defendants.

ignores the Supreme Court's guidance in Marbury v. Madison: "[i]t is not by the office of the person to whom the writ is directed, but the nature of thing to be done, that the propriety or impropriety of issuing a mandamus is to be determined." 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) at 170. The relevant question is whether, in light of the facts as alleged in the complaints, the duty to make records public or comply with any of the other above-listed duties, could have fallen on any of the defendants. The statute does not specify who shall be responsible for this duty. As discussed above, it is possible that the Vice President had final responsibility for all decisions with respect to the NEPDG, in which case, the duty to allow public access to the records would appear to fall on his shoulders. It is possible that the NEPDG made decisions collectively, in which case the responsibility could fall on the shoulders of all members.

What is clear from the statute is that some government official, whether it is the Vice President or the NEPDG participants or someone else, has a duty pursuant to FACA if the facts as alleged are proven. To whom that non-discretionary duty falls is a question to be explored in discovery. At this stage of the case, however, the Court need only acknowledge that FACA creates non-discretionary duties, and that, according to plaintiffs' allegations, one of the defendants sued here could have violated those duties.

3. Should This Court Exercise Its Mandamus Discretion?

Even where a duty is clear and nondiscretionary, whether or not to issue the writ of mandamus is a determination committed to the discretion of this Court. Cartier v. Sec. of State, 506 F.2d 191, 199 (D.C. Cir. 1974); National Treasury Employees Union v. Nixon, 492 F.2d 587 (D.C. Cir. 1974). While mandamus is not necessarily precluded where the official is the President or Vice President of the United States, separation of powers concerns may impact the exercise of this Court's discretion. National Treasury Employees Union v. Nixon, 492 F.2d 587 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (declining to issue writ of mandamus despite duty of President to issue pay raise out of respect for separation of powers).

At this stage of the case, it would be premature and inappropriate to determine whether the relief of mandamus will or will not issue. Certainly whether relief is available under the APA will be relevant to whether the mandamus relief requested will be necessary. It is sufficient to determine that plaintiffs have stated a claim for relief under the mandamus statute. Whether or not plaintiffs will prove that claim remains to be seen.

E. Constitutional Separation of Powers Concerns

The constitutional question suggested by this case is whether Congress can pass a law granting the public access to the deliberative process of a formally constituted group of the President's advisors when at least one of those advisors is a private individual without violating Article II. The application of FACA to this group, argue defendants, interferes with the President's constitutionally protected ability to receive confidential advice from his advisors, even when those advisors include private individuals. Resolving that constitutional question, however, is premature at this stage of the proceedings. The government would have this Court answer that question in the negative now and dismiss the case without ever providing any discovery into the nature and number of the meetings at issue, the identities of the participants, the nature of the group's interaction with the President, the role of the Vice President in the group, the nature of the alleged Sub-Groups' interaction with the NEPDG, or the proximity of the NEPDG and alleged Sub-Groups to the President. The government further argues that it would violate the Constitution for this Court to even inquire into these matters.

The doctrine of constitutional avoidance counsels against answering such an important constitutional question at the motion to dismiss stage. By declining to resolve the constitutional issue at this stage of the case, this Court does not intend to suggest any doubt about the seriousness of the constitutional challenge raised by defendants to the application of FACA and the APA here. Rather, it is out of concern for the seriousness of this issue that this Court has determined that proceeding to discovery is appropriate.

It is a fundamental principle of constitutional interpretation that a court should not pass on any constitutional questions that are not necessary to determine the outcome of the case or controversy before it. Burton v. United States, 196 U.S. 283, 295, 25 S. Ct. 243 (1905) ("It is not the habit of the court to decide questions of a constitutional nature unless absolutely necessary to a decision of the case."). The Supreme Court has consistently explained: "If there is one doctrine more deeply rooted than any other in the process of constitutional adjudication, it is that we ought not to pass on questions of constitutionality ... unless such adjudication is unavoidable." Spector Motor Service v. McLaughlin, 323 U.S. 101, 105, 65 S. Ct. 152 (1944). Furthermore, it is equally fundamental that a court should not pass on a constitutional question prematurely. "It has long been the Court's 'considered practice not to decide abstract, hypothetical or contingent questions ... or to decide any constitutional question in advance of the necessity for its decision ... or to formulate a rule of constitutional law broader than is required by the precise facts to which it is to be applied ... or to decide any constitutional question except with reference to the particular facts to which it is to be applied....'" Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 690 n. 11, 117 S. Ct. 1636 (1997) (quoting Alabama State Fed'n of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 461, 65 S. Ct. 1384 (1945)).

REV_00264552

Here, the federal defendants ask this Court to resolve a constitutional question prematurely and, in so doing, fashion a constitutional ruling broader than the precise facts underlying this case. Defendants ask this Court to hold unconstitutional the application of FACA to any facts and factual inferences permissible from the face of plaintiffs' complaints. While it may be the case that plaintiffs will be able to prove all the pled facts as true, something defendants seriously contest, it is also likely that discovery will reveal facts that narrow the issues before this Court considerably. The proof of any violation of the statutes at issue here, FACA, the APA, and the federal mandamus statute, is contingent on development of a factual record. It is entirely possible that defendants will prevail on summary judgment on statutory grounds after proving that no private individuals participated as members of the advisory committees at issue, or that plaintiffs have failed to identify final agency action, thus rendering defendants' constitutional concerns inapplicable. Furthermore, development of the factual record will better enable this Court, if ultimately faced with deciding whether it violates separation of powers to apply the APA, FACA, or the federal mandamus statute in this context, with the information necessary to properly apply the constitutional balancing test in the nuanced, fact-intensive fashion required by precedent. E.g., Morrison v. Olsen, 487 U.S. 654, 108 S. Ct. 2597 (1988); Nixon v. Administrator of General Servs., 433 U.S. 425, 443, 97 S. Ct. 2777 (1977) (Nixon II); Ass'n of Am. Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993).

Defendants' justification for this Court determining the constitutional issue at this stage of the case is two-fold: first, they argue that no factual development is required to determine the constitutional issue, and second, that any factual discovery would raise identical constitutional concerns. Defendants' first argument flies in the face of the precedent that has developed separation of powers doctrine as a fact-intensive, case-by-case analysis of the specific nature of the intrusion into the President's performance of his constitutional duties. Morrison, 487 U.S. 654; Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 443. Defendants' second argument is conclusory in nature, unsupported by precedent, and equally unpersuasive.

1. Constitutional Balancing Test Deserves Further Factual Development.

Before explaining precisely why further factual development is necessary to effectively resolve the constitutional question here, first the Court must briefly discuss the proper legal standard to apply to separation of powers conflicts. Defendants have repeatedly invoked an incorrect constitutional standard in this case, a standard that would increase Executive power at the expense of the other branches of government. Defendants have made these arguments despite previous concessions of defense counsel that their preferred standard did not reflect the governing law. The government's oscillations before this Court reflect what appears to be a problematic and unprecedented assertion, even in the face of contrary precedent, of Executive power. To borrow the words of the D.C. Circuit in Nixon v. Sirica, "[s]upport for this kind of mischief simply cannot be spun from incantation of the doctrine of separation of powers." 487 F.2d 700, 715 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

a. Constitutional Standard

The Supreme Court has affirmed time and again the importance of the allocation of governmental power by the United States Constitution into three coordinate branches. Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 117 S. Ct. 1636 (1997); Morrison, 487 U.S. 654; Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 106 S. Ct. 3181 (1986); Humphrey's Executor, 295 U.S. 602, 55 S. Ct. 869 (1935). This separation of powers was regarded by the Framers of the Constitution as "a self-executing safeguard against the encroachment or aggrandizement of one branch at the expense of the other." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 122, 96 S. Ct. 612 (1976); see also Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 383, 109 S. Ct. 647 (1989) ("[c]oncern of encroachment or aggrandizement . . . has animated our separation of powers jurisprudence."). Thus, the Supreme Court has invalidated actions by one branch of government that impermissibly usurp the power of another co-equal branch. See, e.g., Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, 514 U.S. 211, 115 S. Ct. 1447 (1995) (unconstitutional legislative assumption of judicial power); INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 103 S. Ct. 2764 (1983) (unconstitutional legislative assumption of executive power); Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 72 S.Ct. 863 (1952) (unconstitutional executive assumption of legislative power). Even when a branch of government does not assume for itself a power allocated to another, "the separation of powers doctrine requires that a branch not impair another in the performance of its constitutional duties." Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748, 757, 116 S. Ct. 1737 (1996); Commodity Futures Trading Ass'n v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 856-57, 106 S. Ct. 3245 (1986); Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 443.

If one thing is clear from these separation of powers cases, it is that the lines that divide the powers of the three branches of government are neither absolute nor "neatly drawn." Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 701. "In designing the structure of our Government and dividing and allocating the sovereign power among three coequal branches, the Framers of the Constitution sought to provide a comprehensive system, but the separate powers were not intended to operate with absolute independence." United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 707, 94 S. Ct. 3090 (1974) (Nixon I). Conflicts and overlap are necessary byproducts of the constitutional design of checks and balances among the three branches of government.

The potential application of FACA to the NEPDG may well require this Court to determine the proper boundaries between the respective spheres of the co-equal branches of government. Indeed, the Supreme Court has recognized that applying FACA to meetings among Presidential advisors " present[s] formidable constitutional difficulties." Public Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 466, 109 S. Ct. 2558 (1989); see also Ass'n of Am. Physicians and Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993)(AAPS). To be clear, defendants do not argue that the application of FACA would result in the aggrandizement of the Congressional or judicial role by usurping the powers of the Executive. Rather, the defendants contend that the application of FACA to the NEPDG encroaches on the sphere of the Executive by infringing the President's right to receive the confidential advice necessary to discharge his unique duties. In such a case, the proper test for determining whether Article II of the Constitution has been violated was first articulated by the Supreme Court in Nixon II:

> In determining whether the Act disrupts the proper balance between the coordinate branches, the proper > inquiry focuses on the extent to which it prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions. [citing Nixon I]. Only where the potential for disruption is present must we then determine whether that impact is justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of Congress.

REV_00264557

433 U.S. at 443; see also Morrison, 487 U.S. at 695 (1988); AAPS, 997 F.2d at 910. Thus, this Court would first examine whether FACA, as applied to the facts of this case, prevents the Executive Branch from accomplishing any constitutionally assigned functions. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 696 (holding that the act creating the independent counsel's office did not infringe on the President's ability to "perform his constitutionally assigned duties"); see also Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 705-06 (holding that civil lawsuit against sitting President did not constitute an impermissible intrusion by judiciary into ability of President to fulfill duties). If that question is answered affirmatively, this Court would then address whether that infringement is justified by the purposes of the congressional action. Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 443; APPS, 997 F.2d at 910.

The inconsistency in defendants' position with respect to the proper test to be applied to determine the constitutionality of an interference with Executive authority is troubling. The development of the government's constitutional arguments in this case is worth recounting. In the initial motion to dismiss the original Judicial Watch complaint, the government urged this

II. Procedural History of the Judicial Watch and Sierra Club Lawsuits

On June 25, 2001, plaintiff Judicial Watch wrote to Vice President Cheney expressing its opinion that the NEDPG was required to comply with FACA, asking to attend all future NEPDG meetings, and requesting copies of minutes and other documents under FACA and FOIA. Judicial Watch is a self-described non-profit public interest law firm the mission of which includes promoting open government. The Office of the Vice President responded by letter on July 5, 2001 denying Judicial Watch's request and informing Judicial Watch that the NEPDG was not subject to either FACA or FOIA.

On July 16, 2001, Judicial Watch filed this lawsuit. Judicial Watch initially sued only the NEDPG, alleging violations of FACA and FOIA. After receiving several extensions of time to file a responsive pleading from this Court, on October 17, 2001, defendant NEPDG moved to dismiss. Defendant NEPDG originally argued that Judicial Watch's complaint failed to state a claim under FACA because the NEPDG consisted solely of federal officials, and that it would violate Article II of the Constitution to apply FACA to this group.

On January 31, 2002, this Court issued an Order setting forth constitutional issues to be briefed in advance of a hearing on the NEPDG's motion to dismiss. That briefing was completed on February 11, 2002. On February 12, 2002, this Court held a Court to adopt a constitutional standard that has never gained the endorsement of a majority of the Supreme Court, and has recently been expressly rejected by the D.C. Circuit. Defendant argued that "[t]he Supreme Court has made clear that where, as here, the power the President is exercising is a power granted explicitly to him by the Constitution, Congress cannot interfere with that power and any statute that purports to do so is unconstitutional." Defs.' Mot. of 10/17/02 at 14. Relying on the concurrence in Public Citizen rather than the majority in Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 443, or Morrison, 487 U.S. at 696, the government argued that where "a power has been committed to a particular Branch of Government in the text of the Constitution, the balance has already been struck by the Constitution itself." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 486.

While conceding that the Nixon/Morrison balancing test applies, See Tr. 2/12/2002 at 33:17 - 34:1; 35:8 - 35:23; 36:15 - 38:7; 38:20 - 39:1; 39:9 - 40:16, the government urges this court nonetheless to apply the bright-line rule embraced by the Public Citizen concurrence. The government argued in its motions to dismiss that

> [w]hile the Court has, in other circumstances, considered the degree of intrusion into the Executive's constitutionally protected interest in light of the Congress' interest in adopting the particular legislation at issue in determining whether that legislation is valid, see Morrison, 487 U.S. at 695, that approach is unnecessary where, as here, the legislation impedes the President's ability to carry > out his express constitutional authority. Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 484-86 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

REV_00264559

Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/02 at 24 (emphasis in original). Defendants have cited no authority other than the Public Citizen concurrence that explicitly holds that any infringement of a textually-authorized constitutional duty is a per se violation of separation of powers, nor could they.[11]

The Executive Branch has long argued for a more formalistic understanding of the separation of powers doctrine than the Supreme Court and other courts have been willing to accept. See Nixon I, 418 U.S. at 706-707; Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 441-44; AAPS, 997 F.2d at 906 ("According to the government, [the Recommendation Clause] gives the President the sole discretion to decide what measures to propose to Congress, and it leaves no room for congressional interference."). In Nixon II, the Court rejected the government's argument for "three airtight departments" of government as "archaic." 433 U.S. at 441-44. The Court has instead consistently embraced the view articulated

---

[11] To be fair, with respect to the constitutional standard, the government did brief both its preferred bright-line rule derived from the Public Citizen concurrence, and the application of the Nixon/Morrison balancing test. However, the government's brief says nothing about the fact that government's counsel conceded at oral argument to this Court that the Public Citizen concurrence standard is not the controlling law. Furthermore, while the government's briefs argue these two standards in the alternative, they say nothing about which alternative this Court should apply. If anything, the government's briefs imply that this Court should apply the Public Citizen test. See Defs.' Reply of 4/26/02 at 15 ("even assuming that AAPS mandates the balancing approach rather than the Public Citizen standard (a point Plaintiffs assert and Defendants contest). . .").

REV_00264560

by Justice Jackson in Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer:

> While the Constitution diffuses power the better to secure liberty, it also contemplates that practice will integrate the dispersed powers into a workable government. It enjoins upon its branches separateness but interdependence, autonomy but reciprocity.

343 U.S. at 635 (Jackson, J., concurring). In Mistretta v. United States, the Court explained, "The Constitution "imposes upon the Branches a degree of overlapping responsibility, a duty of interdependence as well as independence the absence of which 'would preclude the establishment of a Nation capable of governing itself effectively.'" 488 U.S. 361, 381, 109 S. Ct. 647 (1989). Indeed, separation of powers principles do not mean that the branches of government "ought to have no partial agency in, or no control over the acts of each other." James Madison, The Federalist No. 47.

With this conception of the separation of powers doctrine in mind, the Supreme Court has never agreed with the position taken by the government here, that any infringement on any enumerated power in Article II is necessarily a per se violation of the Constitution. In Morrison, Justice Scalia's argument that the "executive power" described in Article II of the Constitution "does not mean some of the executive power, but all of the executive power" gained the support of no other Justice. 487 U.S. at 711 (Scalia, J., dissenting). In his lone dissent, Justice Scalia argued for a "clear constitutional prescription that the executive power belongs to the President" and against the majority's "balancing test." Id. The majority of the Court opted to apply a balancing test to determine whether Congress had "impermissibly" intruded on the executive power. Id. at 696. In Public Citizen, three other Justices argued for a bright-line rule similar to that advocated by Justice Scalia in Morrison. Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 484-86 (Kennedy, J., concurring).[12] Once again, that view did not persuade a majority of the Justices, who invoked the doctrine of constitutional avoidance to interpret FACA so as to avoid a constitutional challenge. Id. at 466. Furthermore, in AAPS, the D.C. Circuit conducted a lengthy discussion of the flaws in the government's bright-line rule argument, offered by the government in that case as well.[13] 997 F.2d at 906-11.

REV_00264561

The implications of the bright-line rule advocated by the government are stunning. Even if this Court were to consider the question of what separation of powers standard to apply without

---

[12] Justice Scalia recused from the Public Citizen case.

[13] While the D.C. Circuit's discussion of the constitutional issue raised by the application of FACA to the Health Care Task Force was arguably dicta because the Court ultimately declined to decide the constitutional issue, the Court explained that it was necessary to determine the strength of the constitutional argument raised by the government prior to applying the doctrine of constitutional avoidance. 997 F.2d at 906 ("It is, of course, necessary before considering the maxim of statutory construction to determine whether the government's constitutional argument in this case is a powerful one. In other words, are we truly faced, as the Court thought it was in Public Citizen, with a grave question of constitutional law?"). The Court rejected the government's constitutional standard but noted that the constitutional concerns raised were serious. This Court agrees with and follows the reasoning of that court, Nixon II, and Morrison.

the benefit of precedent, it would reach the conclusion that the government's position in untenable. Any action by Congress or the Judiciary that intrudes on the president's ability to recommend legislation to Congress or get advice from Cabinet members in any way would necessarily violate the Constitution. The Freedom of Information Act and other open government laws would therefore constitute an unconstitutional interference with Executive authority. Any action by a court or Congress that infringes on any other Article II power of the President, for example, the President's role as Commander in Chief of the armed forces and the national security concerns that derive from that role, would violate the Constitution. Any congressional or judicial ruling that infringes on the President's role in foreign affairs, would violate the Constitution. Clearly, this is not the law. Such a ruling would eviscerate the understanding of checks and balances between the three branches of government on which our constitutional order depends.

Finally, this is not the first case before this Judge in which the government has advocated the theory of separation of powers rejected here.[14] While the government, like any other

---

[14] In this case, and in at least one other before this Court, Stillman v. Doe, Civ. Action No. 01-1342 (EGS) (D.D.C.), the government has proceeded by mischaracterizing the existing standard and invoking the concurring opinion of three Justices of the Supreme Court in Public Citizen as controlling authority. The fact that the government has stubbornly refused to acknowledge the existing controlling law in at least two cases, does not strike this Court as a coincidence. One or two isolated mis-citations or misleading interpretations of precedent are forgivable mistakes of busy counsel, but a party, is free to argue for an extension of the law, it should be forthcoming when calling for such an extension. The fact that the government may want to advocate a new theory of Executive authority and the separation of powers is its prerogative. It cannot, however, cloak what is tantamount to an aggrandizement of Executive power with the legitimacy of precedent where none exists.

b. Application of Constitutional Standard Requires Further Facts

Thus, it is clear that once the question of whether applying FACA to the NEPDG violates Article II is properly before this Court, the constitutional inquiry will require balancing the following two considerations: first, this Court must inquire into whether the law's requirements would infringe the President's ability to perform constitutional functions, and second, the Court must determine whether that impairment is outweighed by any constitutionally authorized Congressional purposes. Nixon II, 433 U.S. at 443; Morrison, 487 U.S. at 696. It is critical to the application of this test that the Court determine the precise nature of the intrusion into Executive authority. The greater the intrusion into the Executive sphere, the greater the interest necessary to justify the intrusion.

The constitutional authority at stake here is the consistent pattern of misconstruing precedent presents a much more serious concern.

---

President's ability to receive advice that has been generated in confidence. While no clause of Article II expressly grants the President the power to acquire information or receive advice in confidence, the necessity of receiving confidential advice appears to flow from Article II. Several clauses of Article II reflect an understanding that the President will have access to information and the power to acquire it,[15] and the Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that the importance to the Presidency of receiving candid, honest, and when necessary, unpopular, advice from "high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties" is paramount. Nixon I, 418 U.S. at 705. Indeed, the words of the Nixon I Court bear repeating:

> [T]he importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion. Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decision-making process.

Id. That Court went on to explain:

---

[15] For example, Article II, Section 2, grants the President the power to "require the Opinion in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices." In addition, the State of the Union clause, requiring the President "from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union" presupposes superior or at least different access to information than the legislative branch. Art. II, Sec. 3. The Recommendations Clause, invoked by the government in this case, which empowers the President to "recommend to [Congress] such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient," similarly presupposes the ability to collect information and advice necessary to make such recommendations. Art. II, sec. 2. And as the Constitution did not presume the President to operate in a vacuum, the other powers listed in Article II, generally presuppose the President's ability to receive advice in order to exercise those powers in an informed manner.

> The expectation of a President to the confidentiality of his conversations and correspondence, like the claim of confidentiality of judicial deliberations, for example, has all the values to which we accord deference for the privacy of all citizens, and added to those values, is the necessity for protection of the public interest in candid, objective, and even blunt or harsh opinions in Presidential decisionmaking. A President and those who assist him must be free to explore alternatives the in the process of shaping policies and making decisions and to do so in a way many would be unwilling to express except privately.

Id. at 708; see also In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 736-40 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (discussing the history of the protection of executive communications and the executive privilege doctrine). As the D.C. Circuit explained in AAPS, "The Framers thus understood that secrecy was related to the executive's ability to decide and to act quickly- a quality lacking in the government established by the Articles of Confederation. If a President cannot deliberate in confidence, it is hard to imagine how he can decide and act quickly." 997 F.2d at 909.

Thus, although there is no specific privilege for protecting the confidentiality of Presidential communications or deliberations in the text of the Constitution, "[c]ertain powers and privileges flow from the nature of the enumerated powers; the protection of the confidentiality of Presidential communications has similar constitutional underpinnings." Id. (citing McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L.Ed. 579 (1819)). Equally clear, however, is that the need to maintain the confidentiality of the President's communications and deliberations is not unqualified.

REV_00264566

"The President's need for complete candor and objectivity from advisors calls for great deference from the courts. However, when the privilege depends solely on the broad, undifferentiated claim of public interest in the confidentiality of such conversations, a confrontation with other values occurs." Nixon I, 418 U.S. at 706.

The question raised by the application of FACA to the NEPDG and the alleged Sub-Groups is not whether the President's constitutionally protected ability to receive advice in confidence is undermined, but whether his advisors' ability to deliberate in confidence is constitutionally protected, and how far down the line that protection extends. Cf. In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d at 746 ("Does [executive] privilege only extend to direct communications with the President, or does it extend further to include communications that involve his chief advisers? And if the privilege does extend past the President, how far down into his circle of advisers does it extend?"). It is unclear from the facts pled in plaintiffs' complaints whether they allege that any of the deliberations involved communications with the President himself. Indeed, the only advice alleged to have directly been given to the President by the NEPDG, the final energy policy report, is a public document. See www.whitehouse.gov/energy/National-Energy-Policy.pdf.

While the Supreme Court has not reached the issue, the D.C.

Circuit has held that the constitutional protection for executive communications extends beyond those communications that occur directly with the President. See In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729 (D.C. Cir. 1997). The D.C. Circuit's warning about extending that constitutional protection too far applies here as well:

> Extending presidential privilege to the communications of presidential advisers not directly involving the President inevitably creates the risk that a broad array of materials in many areas of the executive branch will become "sequester[ed]" from public view. Wolfe, 815 F.2d at 1533. President Nixon's attempt to invoke presidential privilege to prevent release of evidence indicating that high level executive officers engaged in illegal acts is perhaps the starkest example of potential for abuse of the privilege. And openness in government has always been thought crucial to ensuring that the people remain in control of their government...The very reason that presidential communications deserve special protection, namely the President's unique powers and profound responsibilities, is simultaneously the very reason why securing as much public knowledge of presidential actions as is consistent with the needs of governing is of paramount importance.

Id. at 749. Indeed, according to James Madison,

> [a] popular Government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a Prologue to a Farce or a Tragedy; or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance: And a people who mean to be their own Governors, must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.

Letter from James Madison to W.T. Barry (Aug. 4, 1822), in 9 WRITINGS OF JAMES MADISON 103 (Gaillard Hunt, ed. 1910). The D.C. Circuit in In re Sealed Case did specifically limit its analysis to the context before it:

> Our determination of how far down into the executive hearing at which the Court discussed with government's counsel several problems with the briefs filed by the government in this case. First, although moving to dismiss the complaint, the government had attached and relied on evidence outside the Complaint to support its arguments. This Court inquired why it should not convert the government's motion to a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rules of Procedure 12 and 56 and proceed immediately to discovery. Furthermore, the Court discussed several serious deficiencies in the legal arguments raised by the government, particularly the government's failure to cite controlling adverse authority from the D.C. Circuit on the issue of mootness, despite government's counsel having also been counsel in those cases. In addition, the Court discussed what appeared to be government counsel's mischaracterization of Supreme Court precedent on the constitutional separation of powers issue. Defense counsel conceded that it had argued for the application of a constitutional standard that did not reflect controlling law without informing the Court that it was doing so. See Tr. 2/12/2002 at 33:17 - 34:1; 35:8 - 35:23; 36:15 - 38:7; 38:20 - 39:1; 39:9 - 40:16.

At that hearing, government's counsel admitted to this Court that the briefs submitted did not represent the government's best efforts, and requested further opportunity to research and brief the important issues raised by this case. Plaintiff also > branch the presidential communications privilege goes is limited to the context before us, namely where information generated by close presidential adviser is sought for use in a judicial proceeding, and we take no position on how the institutional needs of Congress and the President should be balanced.

REV_00264506

121 F.3d at 753 (D.C. Cir. 1997). However, despite the limitation on its holding, In re Sealed Case makes clear that determining how far down the line of advisors constitutional protection should extend in the context of balancing the needs of the Executive and Congress will be a fact-intensive inquiry.

Determining who participated in the deliberations of the NEPDG and the alleged Sub-Groups, whether in fact those Sub-Groups existed, and who interacted with the private individuals involved, the role played by private individuals, and the number of meetings and interactions will affect this Court's determination of the impact that revealing such activities to the public would have on the President's ability to perform his Executive functions. Furthermore, the role of the Vice President in the NEPDG is to be determined. The fact that the Vice President was tasked with leading the NEPDG does not mean that in fact he participated in all aspect of the NEPDG or the meetings of the alleged Task Force Sub-Groups. These Sub-Groups could have been much less operationally proximate to the President, and revealing their activities would arguably infringe the President's Executive authority to a much lesser degree.

Furthermore, no case has directly decided whether revealing the identity or nature of advice given by private individuals to the President or the President's advisors would "impede the President's ability to perform his constitutional duty." Morrison, 487 U.S. at 691. However, two cases have looked at the role of private individuals in advising the President and have suggested that constitutional protection would extend to such advice. See Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466; AAPS, 997 F.2d at 910. In Public Citizen the Supreme Court recognized the "formidable constitutional difficulties" that would be raised by applying FACA to the Justice Department's consultations with the committee of the American Bar Association that evaluates the qualifications of federal judicial nominees. 491 U.S. at 466. In discussing the constitutional issue raised by the application of FACA to President Clinton's Heath Care Task Force, the D.C. Circuit stated: "A statute interfering with a President's ability to seek advice directly from private citizens as a group, intermixed, or not, with government officials, therefore raises Article II concerns." AAPS, 997 F.2d at 910. After noting the constitutional concern, both courts declined to resolve the question of whether applying FACA to a group that includes governmental and private advisors prevents the President from accomplishing his constitutionally assigned functions. Thus, the question of whether granting public access to the deliberations of high level officials of government, presidential advisors, and private individuals intrudes upon the ability of the President to conduct his official duties is unresolved. The extent of the constitutional protection for those deliberations will turn in large part on the proximity of those advisors to the President. The fact that the group was established to deliver a final report to the President is not determinative.

REV_00264570

Additionally, this Court would be careful when applying the Morrison balancing test to look at those specific requirements of FACA that would have applied to the NEPDG and its alleged Sub-Groups, and determine whether applying those requirements would have infringed on the President's ability to do his job. The question here is not only whether releasing the names of the participants, or the documents generated by the group would so infringe, but rather would applying all of the FACA requirements to the NEPDG run afoul of the separation of powers. Amicus correctly points out that the imposition of the FACA requirements is less onerous than portrayed by the government. FACA has two very important exceptions to the requirement that the public have access to meetings and documents. Pursuant to various FOIA exemptions, which include deliberative process and national security concerns, documents may be withheld from the public. 5 U.S.C. App. 2 § 10(b). Furthermore, pursuant to the exceptions listed in 5 U.S.C. § 552b, the President or an agency head can close advisory committee meetings to the public. These exceptions should be considered when determining the actual impact that FACA would have on the confidentiality of advice to the President.

All of these questions are better addressed only after discovery into the activities and composition of the NEPDG and the alleged Sub-Groups. Contrary to defendants' argument, it would be inappropriate for this Court to conduct the fact-intensive inquiry demanded by separation of powers precedent by considering only the Presidential Memorandum that established the NEPDG.

2. Discovery in this Case Will Raise Fewer and Different Constitutional Concerns

Defendants' second argument against proceeding to discovery, that discovery raises identical constitutional issues as does this motion to dismiss, is both conclusory and belied by precedent. Defendants, in a footnote, state in a conclusory manner "that these constitutional arguments apply to prevent discovery in this case." Defs.' Mot. of 4/5/02 at 19 n. 17. Further, in response to an Order from this Court requiring defendants to identify with precision the constitutional concerns raised by discovery into particular factual issues, see Order of 1/31/02, defendants simply reasserted the troubling statutory and constitutional arguments that had prompted this Court's Order in the first place. Defs.' Mem. of 2/5/2002 at 1 ("it is unnecessary for the Court to address the constitutional issues [raised by discovery] for five compelling reasons"). Thus, while defendants have consistently asserted that discovery would implicate constitutional concerns, they have also consistently failed to explain or provide legal support for those conclusions.

Contrary to defendants' arguments, discovery in this case will potentially raise related, but different, constitutional questions than does the application of FACA to the NEPDG. In particular, the constitutional question raised by the application of a statute to Executive action, reflects a conflict between the Executive and Congressional branches of government, and must be balanced as such. Any potential intrusion into the President's constitutional authority that occurs because of specific requests for documents or information during the course of discovery must be analyzed as a conflict between the needs of the Executive and Judicial branches, and will involve the application of different precedent. See, e.g., In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d at 753. Furthermore, the breadth and scope of the constitutional issue raised by applying the requirements of FACA to advisory committees established by the President dwarfs the particular, specific questions that will be raised by a very tightly-reigned discovery process. Whether revealing a particular document or piece of information will impermissibly interfere with the President's constitutional authority is a much more narrow inquiry than whether the application of all the FACA procedural requirements to the deliberative process of Presidential advisors will violate the Constitution. Rather than address this broad constitutional question in a factual vacuum, this Court will address the particular questions generated by discovery requests.

REV_00264573

In conclusion, there are three primary reasons why postponing consideration of defendants' constitutional challenge is warranted here. First, after discovery, the government may prevail on summary judgment on statutory grounds without the need for this Court to address the constitutionality of applying FACA. Second, even if this Court were to attempt to apply the Nixon/Morrison balancing test, further factual development is necessary to clearly determine the extent to which applying FACA to the NEPDG and its alleged Sub-Groups will intrude on the President's constitutional authority. Third, while discovery in this case may raise some constitutional issues, those issues of executive privilege will be much more limited in scope than the broad constitutional challenge raised by the government here. All of these reasons weigh heavily in favor of considering any applicable constitutional questions after a factual record has been more fully developed, and requiring the government to raise specific constitutional objections to the discovery process as it proceeds.

F. Judicial Watch's FOIA Claim

Judicial Watch has also sued the Vice President pursuant to FOIA. On June 25, 2001, Judicial Watch wrote to the Vice President and requested certain records related to the NEPDG pursuant to FOIA. See Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl., Ex. 8. On July 5, 2001, the Counsel to the Vice President responded on behalf of the Vice President, declining the request on the grounds that FOIA does not provide for disclosure of the requested material. See Jud. Watch Sec. Amend. Compl., Ex. 9.

FOIA is only applicable to "agencies" and "agency records." See generally 5 U.S.C. §552. Entities within the Executive Office of the President whose "sole function is to advise and assist the President" are not agencies for purposes of FOIA. Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 155-56 (1980); Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1294 (D.C. Cir. 1294). Defendants persuasively argue that the Vice President and his staff are not "agencies" for purposes of FOIA. See Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d at 1294 (expressing doubt as to whether FOIA applies to Vice President); cf. Armstrong v. Bush, 924 F.2d 282, 286 n. 2 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (President and Vice President subject only to Presidential Records Act, not Federal Records Act).[16] The FOIA claim against the Vice President is therefore dismissed.

Both Judicial Watch and the federal defendants assume that Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint also states a FOIA

---

[16] Like the D.C. Circuit in Meyer, 981 F.2d at 1294 n.7, this Court does not decide whether the Vice President could ever act as the head of a agency subject to FOIA.

claim against the NEPDG. See Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss of 3/8/02 at 15; Jud. Watch Opp'n of 3/21/02 at 14-15 (arguing that further discovery is necessary before determining whether the NEPDG is an "agency" for FOIA purposes). However, Count II of the Complaint does not state that plaintiff filed a FOIA request to the NEPDG, but rather that plaintiff sent a request letter to Vice President Cheney and that counsel on behalf of Vice President Cheney responded. The request letter in question, attached as Exhibit 8 to Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint, confirms that the request for records was indeed made only to the Vice President. For this reason, there is no need for this Court to address whether the NEPDG is an "agency" for purposes of FOIA. Judicial Watch has stated a FOIA claim only against the Vice President, and that claim is dismissed.

III. Private Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

In addition to suing the Vice President, the NEPDG, and other federal officials, Judicial Watch has sued several private individuals, including Mark Racicot, Haley Barbour, Kenneth Lay, Thomas Kuhn, and John and Jane Does 1-99. These individuals are named as defendants only with respect to Count I of Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint, which alleges violations of FACA.[17] For the reasons discussed above, FACA provides no [17] The private individuals were initially named as defendants in Count III as well, but that claim against these defendants was dismissed on May 31, 2002. See Order of 5/31/02. Only federal defendants are named in Counts II and IV.

REV_00264576

private cause of action and therefore these claims are dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the federal defendants' motions to dismiss are granted in part and denied in part and the private defendants' motions to dismiss are granted. An appropriate Order accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
July 11, 2002

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883

Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

Robert S. Litt, Esq.
ARNOLD & PORTER
555 12th St NW
Washington, DC 20004-1206
Counsel for defendant Thomas Kuhn

Paul Christian Rauser, Esq.
WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY
725 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005
Counsel for defendant Haley Barbour

Richard D. Horn, Esq.
BRACEWELL & PATTERSON LLP
2000 K St NW
Suite 500
Washington, DC 20006-1872
Counsel for defendant Mark Racicot

requested the opportunity to amend its complaint to include additional defendants, in light of arguments made by the government with respect to the termination of the sole defendant NEPDG. Despite the serious inadequacies in the government's briefing to date, the Court found that it was in the interest of justice to allow the plaintiff to amend its complaint and the defendant to re-brief its motion to dismiss.

Judicial Watch filed its First Amended Complaint on February 15, 2002, naming Vice President Cheney, the NEPDG, several Cabinet members, and several private individuals as defendants. The federal defendants moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint. Defs.' Mot. of 3/8/02. For the first time, the federal defendants argued, among other things, that Judicial Watch's complaint should be dismissed because FACA affords no private cause of action. Three of the private defendants also moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint on the grounds that neither FACA or FOIA apply to private individuals.

On January 25, 2002, Sierra Club filed suit against Vice President Cheney, the NEPDG, and various agency officials pursuant to the APA, the federal mandamus statute, and FACA in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. The government moved to transfer that case to this Court. While awaiting the decision of the Northern District of California on the transfer motion, Sierra Club and Natural

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion issued this same day, it is hereby ORDERED that this Order shall supercede the Order issued by this Court on May 23, 2002; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that the federal defendants' motions to dismiss plaintiff Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint and plaintiff the Sierra Club's Complaint are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART; it is FURTHER ORDERED that the motions to dismiss filed by Mark

REV_00264579

Racicot, Haley Barbour, and Thomas Kuhn are GRANTED; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that Count I of Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint is DISMISSED with respect to all defendants; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that Count II of Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint is DISMISSED with respect to all defendants; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs' APA claims with respect to Vice President Richard Cheney and the National Energy Policy Development Group (NEPDG) are DISMISSED; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that the federal defendants' motion to dismiss Counts III and IV of Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint is DENIED with respect to the remaining defendants; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that the federal defendants' motion to dismiss the Sierra Club's First and Second Claims for Relief is DENIED with respect to the remaining defendants; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall jointly submit a proposed discovery plan by no later than 5 p.m. on Friday, July 19, 2002; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants shall file any objections to the proposed discovery plan by no later than 5 p.m. on Friday, July 26, 2002; it is

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall file a joint reply by no later than 5 p.m. on Tuesday, July 30, 2002; it is FURTHER ORDERED that a status hearing shall be held on Friday, August 2, 2002 at 9 a.m. in Courtroom One to discuss the proposed discovery plan and any objections thereto and to determine whether further briefing is necessary with respect to any claims of privilege asserted by the government.

REV_00264580

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
July 11, 2002

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN

1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

Robert S. Litt, Esq.
ARNOLD & PORTER
555 12th St NW
Washington, DC 20004-1206
Counsel for defendant Thomas Kuhn

Paul Christian Rauser, Esq.
WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY
725 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005
Counsel for defendant Haley Barbour

Richard D. Horn, .Esq.
BRACEWELL & PATTERSON LLP
2000 K St NW
Suite 500
Washington, DC 20006-1872
Counsel for defendant Mark Racicot

REV_00264582

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.	)	C.A. NO. 01-1530 (EGS)
	)
VS.	)	WASHINGTON, D.C.
	)	AUGUST 2, 2002
NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP	)	10:00 A.M.
	)

TRANSCRIPT OF STATUS HEARING

BEFORE THE HONORABLE EMMET G. SULLIVAN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

APPEARANCES:

FOR THE PLAINTIFF: LARRY KLAYMAN, ESQ.
PAUL ORFANIDES, ESQ.

FOR THE DEFENDANT: ANNE WEISMANN, ESQ.
JENNIFER PAISNER, ESQ.

COURT REPORTER: FRANK J. RANGUS, OCR
U. S. COURTHOUSE, RM. 6822
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001
(202) 371-0545

PROCEEDINGS RECORDED BY ELECTRONIC STENOGRAPHY; TRANSCRIPT PRODUCED BY COMPUTER.

(SEE NEXT PAGE)

REV_00264583

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SIERRA CLUB	)	C.A. 02-631 (EGS)
	)
VS.	)	WASHINGTON, D.C.
	)	AUGUST 2, 2002
VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, ET AL.	)	10:00 A.M.
	)

TRANSCRIPT OF STATUS HEARING

BEFORE THE HONORABLE EMMET G. SULLIVAN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

APPEARANCES:

FOR THE PLAINTIFF: ROGER M. ADELMAN, ESQ.
DAVID BOOKBINDER, ESQ.
ALEX LEVINSON, ESQ. (BY TELEPHONE)

FOR THE DEFENDANTS: ANNE WEISMANN, ESQ.
JENNIFER PAISNER, ESQ.
CRAIG BLACKWELL, ESQ.
SHANNEN W. COFFIN, ESQ.

COURT REPORTER: FRANK J. RANGUS, OCR
U. S. COURTHOUSE, RM. 6822
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001
(202) 371-0545

PROCEEDINGS RECORDED BY ELECTRONIC STENOGRAPHY; TRANSCRIPT PRODUCED BY COMPUTER.

REV_00264584

I N D E X

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL:	PAGE
MR. KLAYMAN	5
MR. COFFIN	9
MR. BOOKBINDER	25
MR. COFFIN	27
THE COURT'S RULING	28

REV_00264585

THE DEPUTY CLERK: CIVIL CASE 01-1530, JUDICIAL WATCH, INC. VS. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP.

COUNSEL, WOULD YOU PLEASE IDENTIFY YOURSELVES FOR THE RECORD.

MR. KLAYMAN: LARRY KLAYMAN, COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFF.

THE COURT: GOOD MORNING, COUNSEL.

MR. BOOKBINDER: DAVID BOOKBINDER, COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFF SIERRA CLUB.

MR. ADELMAN: ROGER ADELMAN, LOCAL COUNSEL.

MR. ORFANIDES: PAUL ORFANIDES, JUDICIAL WATCH.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, GOOD MORNING.

MR. BOOKBINDER: YOUR HONOR, ONE THING. I BELIEVE ON THE PHONE IS ALEX LEVINSON FROM THE SIERRA CLUB IN SAN FRANCISCO.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, GOOD MORNING, COUNSEL.

HE'S NOT THERE YET. ALL RIGHT, WE'LL GET HIM ON IN JUST A SECOND.

GOOD MORNING. HELLO?

ALL RIGHT, WHY DON'T YOU KEEP TRYING? WE'LL GET HIM ON SOON.

HELLO?

MR. LEVINSON: YES.

THE COURT: GOOD MORNING, COUNSEL.

MR. LEVINSON: GOOD MORNING, YOUR HONOR.

THIS IS ALEX LEVINSON.

REV_00264586

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

AND FOR THE GOVERNMENT?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, SHANNEN COFFIN, DEPUTY ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, CIVIL DIVISION.

WITH ME IS ANNE WEISMANN, JENNIFER PAISNER, AND CRAIG BLACKWELL.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, GOOD MORNING.

UNLIKE THE LAST CASE, THERE'S NO ONE SMILING IN THIS CASE.

MR. KLAYMAN: WE'RE SMILING, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: YOU'RE SMILING? ALL RIGHT, YOU'RE NOW SMILING.

MR. KLAYMAN: YES, WE'RE SMILING.

THE COURT: THAT'S GOOD.

ALL RIGHT, I'LL HEAR FROM PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL. I'VE REVIEWED YOUR PLANS. IS THERE ANYTHING IN ADDITION TO THE PROPOSED DISCOVERY PLAN THAT YOU WISH TO SAY?

MR. KLAYMAN: YES, YOUR HONOR.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. KLAYMAN: YOUR HONOR, LARRY KLAYMAN FOR PLAINTIFF JUDICIAL WATCH.

THE COURT: GOOD MORNING, COUNSEL.

MR. KLAYMAN: GOOD MORNING.

I'M JUST GOING TO HIT THE HIGHLIGHTS. I'M NOT GOING TO BELABOR THE POINTS, BECAUSE WE SET FORTH IN THE BRIEFS

REV_00264587

EXACTLY WHAT WE FEEL THE DISCOVERY PLAN SHOULD BE. BUT YOUR HONOR'S ORDER, WHICH WAS VERY WELL THOUGHT OUT AND VERY WELL REASONED, AT PAGE 52, REALLY SET FORWARD THE PARAMETERS OF DISCOVERY, WHEREIN YOU STATED, RESOLVING THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS, THE ISSUE OF SEPARATION OF POWERS, WHICH HAS BEEN RAISED BY THE DEFENDANTS IN THIS CASE, IS PREMATURE AT THIS STAGE OF THE PROCEEDINGS. THE GOVERNMENT WOULD HAVE THIS COURT ANSWER THE QUESTION IN THE NEGATIVE NOW AND SUBMIT THE CASE WITHOUT EVER PROVIDING ANY DISCOVERY INTO THE NATURE AND NUMBER OF THE MEETINGS AT ISSUE, THE IDENTITIES OF THE PARTICIPANTS, THE NATURE OF THE GROUP'S INTERACTION WITH THE PRESIDENT, THE ROLE OF THE VICE-PRESIDENT IN THE GROUP, THE NATURE OF THE ALLEGED SUBGROUP'S INTERACTION WITH THE NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, OR THE PROXIMITY OF THE, WHAT I'LL CALL THE CHENEY ENERGY TASK FORCE AND ALLEGED SUBGROUPS TO THE PRESIDENT.

YOU SET FORTH THE PARAMETERS FOR DISCOVERY ON PAGE 52, YOUR HONOR, AND YOU ADDED AT PAGE 70, IN RE SEALED CASE MAKES CLEAR THAT DETERMINING HOW FAR DOWN THE LINE THE ADVISERS' CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION SHOULD EXTEND IN THE CONTEXT OF BALANCING THE NEEDS OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH AND CONGRESS WILL BE A FACT-INTENSIVE INQUIRY. A FACT-INTENSIVE INQUIRY. DETERMINING WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE DELIBERATIONS IN THE CHENEY ENERGY TASK FORCE AND THE ALLEGED SUBGROUPS, WHETHER IN FACT THOSE SUBGROUPS EXISTED AND WHO INTERACTED WITH THE PRIVATE

REV_00264588

Resources Defense Council ("NRDC") were granted leave to file amicus briefs in the Judicial Watch case. On March 21, 2002, the Northern District of California transferred the Sierra Club case to this Court, where it was filed as a related case to the Judicial Watch case. This Court ordered the two cases consolidated under one case number and set forth an expedited briefing schedule.

On April 5, 2002, the federal defendants moved to dismiss the Sierra Club complaint, raising many of the same issues as in their motion to dismiss Judicial Watch's First Amended Complaint. Defs.' Mot. of 4/5/02. In addition, the federal defendants also argued for the dismissal of Sierra Club's claims pursuant to the APA and the federal mandamus statute. Briefing in both cases was completed on April 29, 2002.

This Court held oral argument on the federal defendants' motions to dismiss on May 23, 2002. After hearing argument from both plaintiffs, amicus NRDC, and the federal government, the Court made several rulings by Order issued that same day. First, the Court granted plaintiff Judicial Watch leave to file a second amended complaint to include claims under the APA and the federal mandamus statute that were in substance identical to Sierra Club's claims under those statutes. Second, this Court ordered that it would consider federal defendants' motion to dismiss the Sierra Club complaint and the motion to dismiss Judicial Watch's Second Amended Complaint, along with any supplemental arguments

INDIVIDUALS INVOLVED, THE ROLE PLAYED BY PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS, AND THE NUMBER OF MEETINGS AND INTERACTIONS WILL AFFECT THIS COURT'S DETERMINATION OF THE IMPACT THAT REVEALING SUCH ACTIVITIES TO THE PUBLIC WOULD HAVE ON THE PRESIDENT'S ABILITY TO PERFORM HIS EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS.

FURTHERMORE, THE ROLE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT IN THE CHENEY ENERGY TASK FORCE IS TO BE DETERMINED. THE FACT THAT THE VICE PRESIDENT WAS TASKED WITH LEADING THE CHENEY ENERGY TASK FORCE DOES NOT MEAN THAT, IN FACT, HE PARTICIPATED IN ALL ASPECTS OF THE TASK FORCE OR THE MEETINGS OF THE ALLEGED TASK FORCE SUBGROUPS.

YOUR HONOR THEN STATED AT PAGE 74, ANY POTENTIAL INTRUSION INTO THE PRESIDENT'S CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY THAT OCCURS BECAUSE A SPECIFIC REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS OR INFORMATION DURING THE COURSE OF DISCOVERY MUST BE ANALYZED AS A CONFLICT BETWEEN THE NEEDS OF THE EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL BRANCHES AND WILL INVOLVE THE APPLICATION OF DIFFERENT PRECEDENT.

SO YOUR HONOR WAS VERY, VERY PRECISE IN TERMS OF HOW YOU WANTED DISCOVERY TO PROCEED HERE, AND YOU SET FORTH THOSE PARAMETERS. THE PLAINTIFFS IN THIS CASE, JUDICIAL WATCH AND SIERRA CLUB, WERE VERY DEFERENTIAL TO YOUR HONOR'S RULING, AND WE SUGGESTED STARTING WITH DOCUMENT REQUESTS AND INTERROGATORIES WHICH WERE TAILORED EXACTLY TO YOUR ORDER. IT GOES NO FURTHER THAN YOUR ORDER.

HOWEVER, RATHER THAN OBEYING YOUR ORDER, THE

REV_00264589

DEFENDANTS WOULD WANT TO REARGUE ALL THE ISSUES HERE, AND THEY WANT TO GO DOWN THE PRIMROSE PATH OF THE AAPS DECISION, THE HEALTH-CARE TASK FORCE DECISION, WITH AFFIDAVITS, AND ACTUALLY THAT'S JUST GOING TO CREATE MORE WORK. IT'S GOING TO SLOW THINGS DOWN. IT'S INAPPROPRIATE BECAUSE, OBVIOUSLY, WE NEED THE ABILITY TO GET FREE-FLOWING INFORMATION BY WITNESSES THEMSELVES, NOT BY LAWYERS. AFFIDAVITS ARE WRITTEN BY LAWYERS. THE INTERROGATORY RESPONSES ARE WRITTEN BY LAWYERS. BUT WE JUST WANT TO START WITH THE DOCUMENTS AND THE INTERROGATORIES AND SEE WHAT THEY SHOW, AND THEN WE'LL COME BACK TO YOUR HONOR AND PROPOSE WHO, IF ANYONE, SHOULD BE DEPOSED IN THIS CASE.

CLEARLY, THE APPROACH THAT'S BEING PROPOSED BY THE DEFENDANTS, THE CHENEY ENERGY TASK FORCE, IS THE TYPE OF BUNKER MENTALITY. IT'S THE TYPE OF AN APPROACH THAT WE ARE ABOVE THE LAW. WE'RE ABOVE YOUR HONOR'S ORDER. WE DON'T HAVE TO ANSWER QUESTIONS. WE'LL PUT FORWARD WHAT WE WANT TO PUT FORWARD AND NOTHING MORE. BUT YOUR HONOR'S ALREADY RULED AND, CONSEQUENTLY, THIS HEARING IS VERY STRAIGHTFORWARD. WE HAVE NOT ASKED FOR MORE THAN YOUR HONOR ORDERED, AND, IN FACT, WE'VE TAKEN A GO-SLOW APPROACH HERE, WHICH WE THOUGHT YOUR HONOR WOULD WANT US TO DO UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

SO, FOR THAT REASON, WE'RE CONFIDENT YOUR HONOR WILL ALLOW US TO SERVE THE INTERROGATORIES AND DOCUMENT REQUESTS TO GET THIS PRELIMINARY INFORMATION WITHIN 30 DAYS. THIS IS A MATTER OF GREAT PUBLIC INTEREST. THE ENERGY TASK FORCE IS NO

REV_00264590

MORE IMMUNE FROM DISCOVERY THAN ANY OTHER CITIZEN OR ENTITY IN THIS COUNTRY, AND WE'VE ALREADY BEEN THROUGH A LOT OF BRIEFING HERE AND A LOT OF ANALYSIS. YOUR HONOR DID A VERY FINE JOB IN BREAKING DOWN WHAT THE ISSUES ARE AT THIS STAGE OF THE PROCEEDING, AND FOR YOUR HONOR TO BE ABLE TO MAKE THE RULINGS WITH REGARD TO THE VARIOUS CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENTS, AT A MINIMUM, WE NEED THIS INFORMATION.

SO THAT IS OUR PROPOSAL: DOCUMENT REQUESTS AND INTERROGATORIES THAT FALL WITHIN THE SCOPE OF YOUR ORDER. LET'S SEE WHAT THEY YIELD. WE'LL THEN COME BACK TO THE COURT AND MAKE A PROPOSAL AND WHAT, IF ANY, DEPOSITIONS ARE NECESSARY.

THANK YOU.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT, THANK YOU.

ANYONE ELSE?

MR. BOOKBINDER: YOUR HONOR, I THINK WE WOULD LIKE TO HEAR THE GOVERNMENT'S EXPLANATION FOR THEIR POSITION BEFORE SIERRA CLUB HAS ANYTHING FURTHER TO ADD.

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

I'LL HEAR FROM GOVERNMENT COUNSEL.

I GAVE THE GOVERNMENT A CHANCE TO PROVIDE THE COURT WITH PRECISE OBJECTIONS, AND THE GOVERNMENT DIDN'T TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THAT OPPORTUNITY.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, OUR OBJECTION IS GENERAL, AND LET ME EXPLAIN IT. I THINK THAT THE RESOLUTION OF THE

REV_00264591

REMAINING ISSUES IN THIS CASE HAS TO FLOW FROM YOUR OPINION, YOUR OPINION WHICH HELD SEVERAL THINGS.

FIRST, THE RESOLUTION OF THE REMAINING ISSUES HAVE TO BE A TIGHTLY-REINED PROCESS,. AND THIS CALL FOR NARROWLY-TAILORED FACTUAL RESOLUTION FLOWS FROM TWO DIFFERENT RELATED NOTIONS OF CONSTITUTIONAL AVOIDANCE. FIRST, THE ONE THAT YOUR HONOR NOTED IN THE OPINION, THE RESOLUTION OF THE REMAINING ISSUES, MAY BE FRAMED IN A WAY DESIGNED TO AVOID UNNECESSARILY DECIDING CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS PREMATURELY. I THINK WE HAD ISSUES WITH THAT AT THE TIME, BUT WE CERTAINLY ARE WILLING TO WORK WITH THAT NOTION IN A DISCOVERY PLAN AT THIS POINT AND, OR I SHOULD SAY IN OPPOSING THE DISCOVERY PLAN AT THIS POINT.

THE COURT: WELL, ESSENTIALLY, THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION IS THAT YOU DIDN'T FILE OBJECTIONS BECAUSE NO DISCOVERY IS APPROPRIATE.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, WE BELIEVE THAT THE APA FRAMES A RESOLUTION OF THIS CASE AND --

THE COURT: DID I CORRECTLY SAY WHAT THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION IS?

MR. COFFIN: I THINK AT THE BEGINNING OF OUR BRIEF WE SAY WE OBJECT GENERALLY BECAUSE THIS IS AN APA CASE, AND IN AN APA CASE, THE RESOLUTION OF THE CASE HAS TO FLOW FROM THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD.

THE COURT: THE GOVERNMENT SAYS, THIS IS THE RECORD

REV_00264592

BECAUSE WE SAY IT'S THE RECORD AND ACCEPT IT, AND YOU GET NO DISCOVERY.

MR. COFFIN: I THINK --

THE COURT: WAIT JUST A MINUTE. DON'T CUT ME OFF.

THIS IS THE RECORD BECAUSE WE SAY IT'S THE RECORD, AND NO ONE IS ENTITLED TO DISCOVERY BECAUSE THIS IS APA REVIEW. DISCOVERY IS FROWNED ON. SO, GRANT US SUMMARY JUDGMENT. I MEAN, THAT'S THE SCENARIO.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THAT IS APA REVIEW THAT YOU JUST EXPLAINED. WITH ALL DUE RESPECT, LET ME EXPLAIN THE BASIS FOR APA REVIEW IN THIS CASE.

THE COURT: SO THE GOVERNMENT WINS BECAUSE THE GOVERNMENT SAYS, THIS IS WHAT HAPPENED. WE SAY THIS IS WHAT HAPPENED, AND NO ONE CAN QUESTION WHAT HAPPENED, AND NO ONE CAN EVEN LOOK INTO WHAT HAPPENED.

MR. COFFIN: THERE WAS A DECISION MADE HERE. BOTH JUDICIAL WATCH AND SIERRA CLUB WROTE LETTERS TO THE GOVERNMENT SAYING, FOR THE FOLLOWING REASONS, WE BELIEVE FACA APPLIES. WE THINK YOU MET WITH OUTSIDERS, ETC. AND THE GOVERNMENT MADE A DECISION THAT SAID, NO, FACA DOES NOT APPLY, AND AS ARTICULATED IN A LETTER THAT MEMORIALIZED THAT DECISION FROM DAVID ADDINGTON TO JUDICIAL WATCH, THEY SAID THE REASON IT DOESN'T APPLY IS BECAUSE THERE WERE NO MEMBERS, THERE WERE NO MEMBERS WHO WERE NON-GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES.

I THINK THAT YOU HAVE TO START WITH THE ADMINISTRATIVE

REV_00264593

RECORD THAT BACKS UP THAT DECISION, AND THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD THAT BACKS UP THAT DECISION, FIRST AND FOREMOST, IS THE MEMORANDUM THAT ESTABLISHED THE COMMITTEE. LET ME EXPLAIN WHY THAT IS SO IMPORTANT, BECAUSE, AS IN ALL DECISIONS, ALL THE DISPUTES INVOLVING GOVERNMENTAL DECISIONS, THERE IS A PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY, THAT THE GOVERNMENT COMPLIED WITH THE LAW.

THE COURT: WAIT. BUT IF YOU'RE CORRECT, IT MEANS THAT NO ONE WILL EVER HAVE THE OPPORTUNITY TO GO BEHIND THE MEMORANDUM THAT CREATES THE FACA GROUP AND DETERMINE WHETHER OR NOT THERE WAS COMPLIANCE WITH THE LAW, IF YOU'RE CORRECT.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, THE PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY MEANS THIS. WE ARE VERY WILLING IN THIS CASE, THROUGH SWORN DECLARATION, TO CONFIRM THAT THE MEMORANDUM WAS FOLLOWED, THAT REGULARITY WAS THE CASE HERE. PLAINTIFFS THEN SHOULD RELEASE ALL THE INFORMATION THAT THEY HAVE PUBLICLY AVAILABLE, INCLUDING ALL THE FOIA DOCUMENTS THAT ARE OUT THERE. THEY SHOULD BE REQUIRED TO COME FORWARD WITH SOMETHING THAT REBUTS THAT PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

HERE, THERE IS ABSOLUTELY NO EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFFS HAVE PUT FORTH THAT ANYONE BUT GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS PARTICIPATED IN THE MEETINGS OF THE NEPDG, AND THAT IS BECAUSE THE PRESIDENT SAID, YOU HAVE TO COMPLY WITH MY WISHES, AND IT IS ONLY GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES THAT CAN BE, GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS, I SHOULD SAY, THAT CAN BE INVITED.

REV_00264594

THE COURT: HOW DO WE KNOW THAT EVERYONE COMPLIED WITH THE PRESIDENT'S WISHES?

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, AGAIN, THE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD WILL BACK THAT UP, AND WE ARE PREPARED TO OFFER A DECLARATION THAT CONFIRMS THAT. BUT UNLESS PLAINTIFFS ARE WILLING TO COME FORWARD WITH SOME SHRED OF EVIDENCE THAT SAYS THAT THAT IS NOT THE CASE, THEN, YES, THIS CASE SHOULD BE OVER.

I THINK, I MEAN, I THINK IN AN APA REVIEW, IT IS POSSIBLE FOR US TO SUPPLEMENT THE RECORD TO FULLY EXPLAIN OUR REASONS. I THINK CAMP V. PITTS ALLOWS THAT, AND WE ARE FULLY, WE ARE WILLING TO EXPLAIN THE RATIONALE BEHIND DAVID ADDINGTON'S LETTER TO JUDICIAL WATCH THAT SAYS FACA DOESN'T APPLY. WE'RE WILLING TO EXPLAIN THAT, IN FACT, GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS WERE THE ONLY ONES WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE MEETINGS OF THE NEPDG.

THE COURT: NORMALLY, AS A GENERAL PROPOSITION, I WOULD AGREE WITH YOU. IN APA CASES, DISCOVERY IS NORMALLY FROWNED UPON. THE REMEDY IS TO REMAND TO THE AGENCY, AND IF THERE'S A NEED TO SUPPLEMENT, THEN SOMEONE CAN PREPARE A SUPPLEMENTAL RECORD SO THAT THE COURT CAN REVIEW THAT RECORD AS OPPOSED TO EMBARKING ON DISCOVERY. BUT THIS CASE ISN'T THE TYPICAL CASE, WHERE YOU HAVE A SIGNIFICANT ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD OUT THERE. I MEAN, YOU ALLUDED TO THE MEMORANDUM THAT CREATES THE SUBGROUP, AND THAT'S IT.

MR. COFFIN: THE REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT ALSO CONFIRMS

REV_00264595

THE MEMBERSHIP. ON PAGE FIVE OF THE REPORT, IT SAYS, HERE ARE THE PEOPLE WHO SIGN OFF ON THIS REPORT, BECAUSE THEY'RE THE ONES WHO PARTICIPATED IN ITS PREPARATION. THESE ARE THE MEMBERS OF THE NEPDG DE FACTO. SO THERE IS, IN FACT, AN ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD HERE.

AND ALSO, I MEAN, IT'S THE FACTS THAT WERE RELIED UPON BY THE DECISION-MAKER IN SAYING FACA DOESN'T APPLY. NOW, THERE MAY NOT BE DOCUMENTS OUT THERE THAT BACK THAT UP, BUT THAT'S THE PURPOSE OF THE SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION HERE, TO CONFIRM IN FACT WHEN WE MADE THIS DECISION, WE DID SO BECAUSE IN FACT NO ONE HAD ATTENDED THESE MEETINGS AND PARTICIPATED IN THE MEETINGS THEMSELVES EXCEPT GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES. SO WE'RE WILLING, YOUR HONOR. I WILL FREELY ADMIT THAT THIS IS NOT YOUR STANDARD APA.

THE COURT: ABSOLUTELY. I APPRECIATE THAT CONCESSION. ABSOLUTELY.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, I DON'T THINK IT'S A CONCESSION. IT'S STILL AN APA CASE. IT'S JUST NOT --

THE COURT: WELL, WHY ARE YOU BACKPEDALING FROM YOUR ADMISSION? YOU'RE ABSOLUTELY CORRECT, AND I THINK EVERYONE IN THIS COURTROOM AGREES WITH YOU IT'S NOT THE TYPICAL APA REVIEW AT ALL.

MR. COFFIN: THAT'S BECAUSE YOU SAID --

THE COURT: DON'T BACKPEDAL FROM IT. I'M JUST APPLAUDING YOUR CONCESSION.

REV_00264596

MR. COFFIN: I'M SAYING IT'S NOT YOUR STANDARD APA REVIEW. I'M NOT SAYING IT'S NOT YOUR APA-REVIEW CASE. IT IS, AND THAT IS BECAUSE THERE WAS A CONSCIOUS DECISION MADE BY THE GOVERNMENT THAT FACA DOESN'T APPLY, BECAUSE THE PRESIDENT DIRECTED THE COMPOSITION OF THE GROUP AND THE GROUP COMPLIED WITH THAT COMPOSITION. AND WHEN JUDICIAL WATCH AND SIERRA CLUB SAID, PLEASE COMPLY. PLEASE GIVE US ACCESS. PLEASE GIVE US YOUR DOCUMENTS AND ACCESS TO THE MEETINGS, THE GOVERNMENT SAID NO, BECAUSE IN FACT THE FACTS BEFORE IT WERE THAT NO ONE HAD BEEN INVOLVED IN THE MEETINGS EXCEPT THE GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS. THAT'S THE PURPOSE OF A SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION IN THIS CASE, AND THAT'S --

THE COURT: YOU WOULD AGREE WITH ME, ALSO, THAT THE LAW IS NOT ALWAYS COMPLIED WITH. CORRECT? PEOPLE VIOLATE LAWS, UNFORTUNATELY, EVERY DAY.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, HOWEVER, THERE IS A STRONG PRESUMPTION THAT THE GOVERNMENT COMPLIED WITH THE LAW, AND THAT IS --

THE COURT: BUT THE GOVERNMENT DOESN'T ALWAYS COMPLY WITH THE LAW.

MR. COFFIN: YOUR HONOR, I WILL ADMIT THERE HAVE BEEN INSTANCES WHERE THAT IS THE CASE --

THE COURT: MANY INSTANCES.

MR. COFFIN: -- BUT THAT PRESUMPTION HAS TO FRAME THE INQUIRY HERE. IF THE GOVERNMENT IS COMING FORWARD AND SAYING

REV_00264597

IN A SWORN DECLARATION THAT IS PART OF THE, QUOTE, ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD IN THIS CASE THAT THE LAW WAS COMPLIED WITH, BECAUSE THERE WERE, I THINK WHAT'S OUT THERE RIGHT NOW, AS FAR AS I UNDERSTAND IT, THERE WERE NINE MEETINGS, AND THAT IN EACH OF THOSE NINE MEETINGS ONLY GOVERNMENTAL OFFICIALS WERE INVOLVED, THEN THAT PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY REQUIRES THE PLAINTIFFS TO COME FORWARD AND SAY, BUT THERE'S EVIDENCE OUT THERE THAT SHOWS YOU DIDN'T COMPLY. AND UNTIL WE'RE ABLE TO PUT IN A DECLARATION AND TO FILE SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND TO FRAME THESE ISSUES FOR YOU, AND UNTIL THEY CAN COME FORWARD WITH SOME EVIDENCE THAT REBUTS THAT, THEN I THINK THAT THIS CASE CAN'T BE RESOLVED PROPERLY UNDER THE APA.

THE COURT: WHAT YOU'RE SUGGESTING, THOUGH, IS THAT NO ONE CAN CONDUCT A REASONABLE INVESTIGATION, REASONABLE DISCOVERY, IN AN EFFORT TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE LAW WAS COMPLIED WITH. THAT'S ALL THEY'RE TRYING TO DO, TO SEE IF THE LAW WAS COMPLIED WITH.

MR. COFFIN: I THINK THEY HAVE A THRESHOLD BURDEN HERE --

THE COURT: ALL RIGHT.

MR. COFFIN: -- TO REBUT THE PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY, AND THAT THRESHOLD BURDEN, IF IT CAN BE REBUTTED, YOUR HONOR, IT SHOULD BE ABLE, THEY SHOULD BE ABLE TO REBUT IT THROUGH THE INFORMATION THAT IS ALREADY OUT THERE. JUDICIAL WATCH HAS MADE FOIA DEMANDS, AND THEY'VE BEEN PROCESSED

REV_00264598

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Vice President Richard Cheney, US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (Appendix) [3]

OA/NARA#: 1650/1518
9601

Box 62
Folder 6

REV_00264621

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, et al., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No.: 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD B. CHENEY, et al., Defendants.	)

PLAINTIFFS' FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs hereby request, pursuant to Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, that defendants identify and produce the documents described below at the offices of the Sierra Club, 85 Second St. 2d Fl., San Francisco, California, 94104, on 9/5/02, 2002, at 10:00 a.m. for inspection and copying.

INSTRUCTIONS

1. The documents shall be produced by category as designated in this request, and each document shall be produced in such a fashion as to indicate clearly the identity of the file in which it was located. All documents are to be produced as they are kept in the usual course of

REV_00264622

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, et al.,

Defendants.

Civil Action No.: 01-1530 (EGS)

SIERRA CLUB,

Plaintiff,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD B. CHENEY, et al.,

Defendants.

PLAINTIFFS' FIRST SET OF INTERROGATORIES

Plaintiffs Sierra Club and Judicial Watch hereby request, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 33, that defendants respond to the interrogatories below by 9/3/02 2002.

DEFINITIONS AND INSTRUCTIONS

A. "Person" means and refers to, without limitation, any individual, corporation, partnership, joint venture, limited partnership, association, trust, trustee, group, organization, government or government agency, office, bureau, department, or entity, and all divisions, subdivisions, bureaus, branches, offices or other units thereof, and includes the present and former officers, executives, partners, brokers, employees, agents and all other persons acting or gotten beyond these elections, and they'll get beyond the next elections too. And that's not our concern.

But even of the meager documents that we have so far -- some are produced through the FOIA process -- one sticks in my mind, and this is what they're scared about: a letter from the Chevron Corporation to the administration saying let's end the embargo on doing business with Libya, a state on the terrorist watch list before 9/11. There's stuff like that out there, and that's why they're running out the clock.

It's not just a question of energy policy; it's a question of national security in terms of how they're perceived to react to our national security, not anything that's classified, but to simply how this administration has allowed energy policy to conflict with its war against terrorism. That's what they're concerned about, and that is not our concern.

Our concern is to get the information out to the American people so they can make their own decision. Like Fox News says, "We report; you decide." We've never taken a position on energy policy. What I'm saying here is I believe that what we should do right now is to set November 13, which you currently have. I realize you've just now referred my request for contempt for threatening me to the U.S. Attorney's Office, but there's the other contempt issue -- and they are in contempt -- and we should have a hearing on that on November 13 for having defied at a minimum your orders of August 3.

The Court needs to put its foot down. It can't permit this kind of conduct. They think they have your number, in all due respect, because you are a gentleman and because you are trying to be as agreeable as possible, but this court has been flouted.

It's been disrespected, and it's time for the Court now to send a message to this administration that we're not going to allow court orders to be defied anymore, and we represent the people of this country, not the vested political elite that simply want to keep information away from them because it's election time.

So we ask that November 13 be a date for the hearing on the order to show cause with regard to the defiance of the Court's August 3 orders.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. KLAYMAN: Thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you, Counsel. Yes.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Good afternoon, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Good afternoon, Counsel.

MR. BOOKBINDER: I'll be very brief. I just want to address the two issues of irreparable injury and success on the appeal. Briefly, no court has ever held that simple preparation of a privilege log and turning over of nonprivileged information is irreparable injury. The defendants haven't found such a case, we haven't found such a case, no one's ever heard such a case. So as far as we can tell, there simply is no irreparable injury.

Second, on the issue of success, defendants' theory is simple participation in the discovery process is a separation of powers problem; it violates the separation of powers theory. In Clinton versus Jones, the Supreme Court was so crystal clear on this point, and I don't like to quote things because we all read them, but I'm just going to quote one sentence out of Clinton versus Jones where we're talking about documents in deposition and trial testimony of a sitting president, and the quote is:

"The fact that a federal court's exercise of its traditional Article III jurisdiction may significantly burden the time and attention of the chief executive is not sufficient to establish a violation of the constitution." Period.

That's testimony from a sitting president in a civil matter concerning issues before his presidency. That, the Supreme Court held, did not raise separation of powers concerns. Therefore, we think production of nonprivileged documents and a privilege log from the vice president and officers in the White House simply comes nowhere close to that standard. And that's all, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. What about the issue of stay and the discussion I had with Mr. Coffin? I'd be interested in what your views are. Mr. Coffin's views are that indeed the opportunity to appeal be foreclosed unless the Court granted a stay. I disagree with that, but maybe he's correct. And if you agree with his statement, then I need to rethink this whole issue of potentially denying a request for a stay and ordering a date for compliance in the future. My view is that the government would certainly have an opportunity to seek relief from the circuit and not be under any due date unless they wait until after the 23rd of November or 22nd of November.

REV_00264723

MR. BOOKBINDER: Your Honor, we agree a hundred percent. As a matter of fact, Mr. Coffin and I were working off a makeshift calendar to make sure we were going on the assumption that as the Court has been inclined to do, it has been ruling from the bench.

Mr. Coffin and I were thinking that perhaps they would make their stay motion to the Court of Appeals by tomorrow. We figured on perhaps a week for the Court of Appeals to rule on that, and then two weeks after that we'd wind up at the 22nd. I don't think there's any foreclosure of the appellate relief. We're not here to force the government into a contempt situation.

THE COURT: Nor am I. Nor am I. That's not the way the system should work at all. In fact, I'd be inclined to grant the government more time in which to comply in an effort to assist the government to seek a stay in the Court of Appeals. That's the way our government works. I'm not going to force anyone into a contempt citation.

REV_00264724

And this is not a scenario where compliance is due tomorrow and someone has to get on the elevator and speed up to the Court of Appeals and then my colleagues in that court have to stop everything they're doing. I don't want to make anyone's life miserable. I don't plan on doing that by any stretch of the imagination.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Your Honor, there are two minor scheduling things again.

THE COURT: Wait a minute. Before you say that, though, let me just say I don't intend to write any more. I've written two or three orders. I don't think I need to say anything if I'm inclined to deny the stay. I think I need to find as a matter of fact and law the standards for a stay opinion review have not been met, have not been satisfied by the plaintiffs, but I don't plan to write another lengthy opinion. I don't think a need exists. Do you think the Court needs to say anything more about its views regarding the discovery dispute?

MR. BOOKBINDER: No, Your Honor. I don't think anything more needs to be written.

THE COURT: I don't either. All right, I'm sorry. You were about to mention two scheduling issues.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Yes. In terms of scheduling, since there's so many motions and matters flying around here --

THE COURT: And also I'm in trial. I'll be starting the second week of probably, I don't know, a three-week trial. It's a multi-codefendant case. That's a factor that wasn't apparent some time ago because I didn't know that the case was going to go to trial. I thought that -- well, anyway, we're in trial and we're going to be in trial.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Is the November 13th hearing still expected to go forward on the --

THE COURT: That's a very good question, and in all candor, it should go forward. I anticipate the government concluding its case in chief in my criminal matter Tuesday at the latest, and Tuesday would be the 5th. Looking down the road, Counsel, it's difficult to predict, but I think that Monday the 12th I'll probably be instructing a jury, I think. With a little bit of luck it will be on the 8th. So the hearing scheduled on the 13th is still on my calendar. I still plan to proceed with that hearing.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Thank you, Your Honor. Currently plaintiff's replay on their motion to compel is due Monday the 4th, and we would like an extension till Thursday the 7th, and Mr. Coffin indicated he did not have --

MR. COFFIN: That's fine, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. What document is due on the fourth, Counsel?

MR. BOOKBINDER: Our reply brief on the motion to compel is due on the 4th, and we'd like to move that to the 7th.

THE COURT: That's fine with me.

MR. BOOKBINDER: And in addition, our response to the 1292(b) motion is also due the 4th, and we'd like to extend that to the 7th as well, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I have no problems with that. And for the government's reply to that? I assume the government --

MR. COFFIN: Well, we have some timing issues about the appeal that --

THE COURT: All right. I'll give you a chance. I'm sorry, maybe I should have heard -- I can invite all three of you to the podium. It's big enough and safe enough for the three of you to be up there at one time.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, there are timing issues. As you know, we're not seeking simply 1292(b), but we would also, if you were to deny that, we would go up on a couple of other theories. One of them is a Nixon 1291 appeal, and the timing of that, we have to seek -- in order to be timely, the 60-day rule applies. By our calculation, there's an order of September 9 that would be part of this appeal, and November 8 would be the deadline for doing that.

Now, I still want to try to convince you to give us a stay, so I don't want to give up this issue. But if you were to deny a stay, it's hard for me to see how you're going to grant us interlocutory appeal.

THE COURT: That's why when we had the original discussion, I think that's probably going to be moot anyway.

MR. COFFIN: I don't think it will be moot. I think you could still grant it, and I would ask that you give us full consideration of such a motion. I think practically -- I'm not sure -- I think the writing is on the wall if you were to deny a stay, however, depending upon what your standard was in denying the stay. As a practical matter, we believe that we have to file any appeal in the Court of Appeals by November 8.

THE COURT: All right. I'm not going to comment on that because that's beyond --

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I understand. I'm not --

THE COURT: You may be absolutely right. Actually, when I saw the motion for interlocutory, I thought the government was conceding there was no basis for appeal after --

MR. COFFIN: No, Your Honor. We say in the beginning of that brief we were asking you for 1292(b) certification to avoid applying the Nixon rule in the Court of Appeals and to avoid the need for a mandamus determination, so we clearly think any three of the methods is appropriate.

But as a result, and I'm not asking for your blessing on this, but as a result we believe we may have to seek an appeal by the 8th. And I still have to confer with the Solicitor General'S Office on everything else on timing, but that would mean that if you hadn't granted interlocutory appeal by then we'd be going up on other theories.

Bryan A. Wayne, RPR
Official Court Reporter

REV_00264728

THE COURT: All right.

MR. COFFIN: So the fact that he's asking for a brief on the 7th we have no objection to, but it may force our hand to seek an appeal -- well, just the timing generally. I don't think there's much time anyway, but the bottom line is we're going to have to go up I think by the 8th.

THE COURT: And again, you may be absolutely correct. I haven't given any thought to that aspect of it.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Your Honor, one other thing, and I'm not sure Mr. Coffin and I conferred on this, but it might be useful on the 13th when we're already here on the motion to compel to do the 1292(b) motion as well that day if Mr. Coffin wants to do so.

MR. COFFIN: Again, if we're already in the Court of Appeals, I think it might be mooted then. If we already filed another appeal on another theory --

THE COURT: If you have an appeal and another stay, then everything is moot, at least the motion for interlocutory --

MR. COFFIN: If we have a stay, if we have an extension.

THE COURT: I can schedule it. I agree. I have not scheduled a date. I thought that the parties had originally agreed to an accelerated briefing schedule to the interlocutory, and then the government informed the Court in one of its pleadings that that was not correct.

MR. COFFIN: Well, we had --

THE COURT: You sought expedited briefings.

MR. COFFIN: We sought it, and the plaintiffs did not agree.

THE COURT: Look, I'm willing to help the parties. I've already indicated I'm not inclined to stay; I'm not inclined to certify it. By the same token, I'm not trying to make it difficult for anyone to seek review. I mean, I can schedule a hearing before the 7th if you want me to.

MR. COFFIN: Can I suggest this, that the 13th would be okay. It may be that we have decided to withdraw our interlocutory appeal by then. I think that -- and if so, we'll notify the parties. If we go up on another theory, I don't want to foreclose --

THE COURT: No, and I'm not trying to be difficult at all.

MR. COFFIN: I'm not sure I can speak for the Solicitor General of the United States on this particular issue.

THE COURT: And I'm certainly not requiring you to do so.

MR. COFFIN: Why don't we go with the 7th for your purporting to act on behalf of them, and any of their present or former parent corporations, subsidiaries, affiliates, divisions, predecessors and successors in interest.

B. "Meeting" means and refers to any use of any mode of conveying meaning or information such as, but not limited to, speech, telephone, telegraph, e-mail, other computer-generated or transmitted information, letter, and any written or spoken language for the purpose of transferring information from one person or place to another. When applied to the Task Force or any Sub Group, the term "meeting" includes all meetings of two or more persons where Task Force or Sub Group activities were discussed.

C. "Communication" includes, without limitation, any oral, written or electronic transmission of information including, without limitation, meetings, discussions, conversations, telephone calls, memoranda, telecopies, telexes, conferences, facsimiles, seminars, messages, notes, or memoranda.

D. "Participate" means any form of presence, observation, communication, or other involvement, including without limitation by use of telephone, computer, or video-conference, and including without limitation the submission of letters, reports, memoranda, or opinions.

E. "Any" shall be understood to encompass "all."

F. The "Task Force," means and refers to the National Energy Policy Development Group, as described in President George W. Bush's memorandum dated on or about January 29, 2001.

G. The "Report" means and refers to the Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, titled "Reliable, Affordable, and Environmentally Sound Energy for America's Future," and published on or about May 16, 2001, or any draft of this report.

brief?

THE COURT: Do you want a few minutes to talk?

MR. COFFIN: No, I think we're fine. We're in general agreement that if he could file by the 7th and we would file any response by the 12th and have a hearing on the 13th.

THE COURT: It doesn't give me a lot of time to think about that. There's a holiday on the 11th. Can you get your response in sooner than the 7th, Counsel?

MR. BOOKBINDER: I can do Wednesday the 6th.

THE COURT: That's the earliest?

MR. COFFIN: And we can file by the 8th, Your Honor.

THE COURT: That's great. It's all electronic anyway. That will be great. The 8th's a Friday, and then the hearing on the 13th will be for the pending motion as well as for the government's motion for interlocutory certification.

MR. BOOKBINDER: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, can I go back to the stay versus --

THE COURT: Yeah, sure. Go ahead.

MR. COFFIN: I want to make clear that -- I mean, I understand your analysis here, Your Honor, but I think --

THE COURT: Well, tell me if it's wrong.

MR. COFFIN: I think it's incorrect. I think it's inappropriate to take into consideration the possibility of a stay in the Court of Appeals in determining whether irreparable injury is met.

THE COURT: No, no. I'm sorry. If you understood me to say that I'm denying it but the Court of Appeals will grant it, I have no view as to whether the Court of Appeals will grant it. I'm just saying you have the opportunity to ask the circuit for a stay. That's why you're not foreclosed --

MR. COFFIN: But that opportunity shouldn't be taken into account by this court in determining whether irreparable injury -- we're asking for a stay pending appeal.

THE COURT: I was concerned because you said, Judge, if you don't grant our stay, we're foreclosed from taking an appeal. That's what you said.

MR. COFFIN: No, no, no, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Then I misunderstood you then.

MR. COFFIN: I think so. We are not foreclosed from doing so, but the relief would be mooted in the absence of a stay because our argument is that compliance with this last order of the Court imposes an unconstitutional burden on the United States. I recognize this court has said that it disagrees with that, but it's also said it's a serious issue.

And if we are correct on the merits of that, in the absence of a stay, an appeal is meaningless because the Court will say you've already done exactly what it is that you say is unconstitutional, so it's mooted. So a stay is necessarily to fully effectuate our appellate's rights here.

THE COURT: And this goes back to your argument that the injury is indeed the search.

MR. COFFIN: In part. In part, certainly.

THE COURT: Well, I'm certainly not requiring you to turn over any privileged documents at all.

MR. COFFIN: No. I know you're not doing that, but the injury is submitting to discovery in the absence of a compelling showing of need by the plaintiffs. And if our argument is correct, and we believe it is, and we believe the Court of Appeals will agree with us that it's correct, if that's correct, then we can only get relief by getting a stay of your order during the entire pendency of the Court of Appeals determination.

THE COURT: I want to make the record clear. If I deny a request for a stay, it's not because this court has any view of how the circuit court is going to address that issue at all. If I deny the request, it would be because the Court is of the opinion that there's no factual and legal predicate for a stay. That would be the only reason.

I'm going to make a decision upon the issues before me and not what some other court may do. No. I thought you said earlier on: Judge, we've lost. We're foreclosed from appealing if you deny the request for a stay. I understand what you're saying.

MR. COFFIN: But that's true. It's mooted. We'd lose an effective right to an appeal.

THE COURT: You're saying the injury continues because we would nevertheless be searching our records, which we believe is unconstitutional.

MR. COFFIN: No, no, no, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Well, then I don't understand what's the injury then.

MR. COFFIN: When the 22nd comes and that's the date you've ordered us to comply, and we comply, then our appeal is meaningless.

THE COURT: Well, see, that's something new now.

MR. COFFIN: No, no, no.

THE COURT: Yes, it is, because granting your request for additional time is to give you time within which to seek relief so you don't have to comply. I thought you told me --

MR. COFFIN: No, no, Your Honor. These are alternative things. I mean, we are asking right now -- our principal request for relief here is a stay pending the duration of the appeal. That means that whatever date you set, whether it's November 5 as it currently is, which I know you're not going to do, or November 22 -- which is the date we've agreed upon with the Sierra Club, at least -- if we get to the 22nd and we go through the process and we produce the documents that are --

THE COURT: Is that an option that the government's seriously considering doing, producing the documents?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, in the absence of a stay, again, our only other option is to go into contempt.

THE COURT: Or to seek a stay from the circuit.

MR. COFFIN: In the absence of a stay. You're making a distinction again between a stay by the circuit and a stay by this court, and I don't think that in your evaluation of the merits of our stay petition you can consider whether we get a stay by the Court, because that assumes that we're entitled to a stay.

THE COURT: I guess I was trying to pin you down as to what your injury is. What you're concerned about is what happens on the 22nd if you don't have a stay from this court or the circuit.

MR. COFFIN: Absolutely.

THE COURT: Well, that's something new.

MR. COFFIN: No, no, no. That's not anything new at all. That's what I've been saying all along.

THE COURT: Well, you know what, I think we should focus on that if that materializes. In other words, if I deny a stay and the circuit denies a stay and you're faced with the 22nd for a deadline, then I think -- I mean, it would be very unwise for me to sit here and say what I'm going to do at that point.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, if you deny a stay and the Court of Appeals denies a stay, then there's been some -- and the Supreme Court, if we were to ever decide to go that far, a circuit justice, which is a possibility again -- then compliance with the order is either mandatory or we have to go into --

THE COURT: Don't we have to cross that bridge when we get to?

MR. COFFIN: No, I think you have to cross it now. I think that you have to make a determination whether compliance with your order, whether it would moot the appeal, and that is the determination --

THE COURT: All right. Well, that's where we disagree. That's where we disagree, because I've given this a lot of thought, and I said, I'm going to extend the time. Sierra Club doesn't object, Judicial Watch does, the government is attempting to comply, searching its records. I believe your pleading says there are eight lawyers at the White House searching boxes of records in an effort to determine privileged versus nonprivileged and preparing a log.

I said that's good faith compliance; I'll give the government more time. And so that no one has any anxiety about this, I'll make the 22nd or 23rd, some day in November other than Thanksgiving, I'll make it that week. And I'm still inclined, gave a lot of thought as to whether or not to grant the request for stay, and I said no. I'm not persuaded there's a factual legal predicate.

REV_00264736

That's the only reason why I would deny the request for a stay, if I'm not persuaded it's a matter of fact and law that a basis exists. Denied that. I thought about it. Now, where does that leave the government? It leaves the government -- the government can always seek a stay. In fact, you have to seek a stay first --

MR. COFFIN: But that's --

THE COURT: Wait, wait, wait. You have to seek a stay first before me before you can seek a stay in the circuit, right? You have to do that.

MR. COFFIN: And we're required to do that.

THE COURT: And if I deny it, then the safeguard, the way our system works is that you can seek another stay in the circuit. Now you're concerned about a scenario where the circuit may deny a stay and you're faced with what to do on the 22nd, but that's not before me.

MR. COFFIN: No, no. It is definitely before you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: So I should be focusing on that now?

MR. COFFIN: Absolutely. The order right now that's in front of you --

THE COURT: You know what, let me tell you something. You know I'm not going to close the door on you or any other litigant before me, and if indeed I deny the stay and the circuit denies the stay, you know this courthouse is open to whatever request you want to make prior to the 22nd. And I'll be receptive to whatever request you want to make, but we're looking down the road to something -- I mean, I think it would probably be inappropriate for me to say what I would do in the event that there's no stay of my order and whether or not the government then is under an obligation to comply with my order.

REV_00264737

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, right now your order requires us to produce by November 5.

THE COURT: All right. Forget about that. I'm going to extend it to the 22nd or the 23rd.

MR. COFFIN: The point is it doesn't matter whether it's November 5 or --

THE COURT: Oh, I think it does. It would matter if the due date was tomorrow, wouldn't it?

MR. COFFIN: Well, it would just mean --

THE COURT: Well, you know what --

MR. COFFIN: -- an emergency reason to provide a stay.

THE COURT: Well, that's exactly right. But that heightened -- no, no. Wait a minute; I gotcha now. Because if I deny the request for the stay and the due date was tomorrow and the circuit denied the request for a stay, then you're absolutely correct. You need some guidance from me as to what

REV_00264738

I need to do because you need to take some steps to protect your client. But that's not a problem. You don't have to concern yourself about that.

The Court is always open. The Court is always going to be receptive to your request for additional relief in the event that I deny the stay, which I'm going to do, and in the even if the circuit denies the stay and you believe your client is powerless, I'm not going to close the door on your request for relief.

MR. COFFIN: No, and I fully understand and appreciate that, Your Honor, but I don't think this court appreciates what the issue is here. The issue here is whether a stay pending appeal is necessary to fully effectuate our appellate rights. As soon as this stay issue is resolved, we're going to be taking up the appeal in one way another, whether through 1292(b) or 1291 or mandamus. So your chance to rule on whether there is a stay pending appeal is now, and that requires you to decide whether a stay is necessary to fully effectuate our appellate rights.

In an absence of a stay, compliance with your order is mandatory or we face contempt. That is why that issue is joined in front of you now, and that's why a stay has to be granted. You don't argue that -- you haven't disagreed with us, and I don't think the plaintiffs really have, that these are serious issues. You've said that yourself. So the only issue is whether there is irreparable injury, and there is certainty irreparable injury if an appeal goes forward and we lose our effective appellate rights in the absence of a stay.

REV_00264739

That's the argument, and that issue is in front of you right now, whether it's November 5, whether it's November 1, or whether it's November 22. And you have to decide that now, and you can't say that because we can go to the Court of Appeals that we have a remedy. Because in reality, they're going to be asking the same questions, and if you are saying we have a remedy --

THE COURT: They'll be asking the same questions I'm asking?

MR. COFFIN: Absolutely.

THE COURT: Sure. I would imagine so.

MR. COFFIN: But if you were saying we have an effective remedy in the Court of Appeals, it's because the Court of Appeals would agree with us. So I don't understand --

THE COURT: No, I'm just saying you have an opportunity to seek relief in the Court of Appeals. I didn't say it was a foregone conclusion. Again, I don't know what the circuit court's going to do. I can appreciate that the Court may have the same questions, but you're not being deprived of a potential remedy. You have the right to request a stay. That's the point I was making.

MR. COFFIN: But Your Honor, our argument isn't that

REV_00264740

H. "Sub-Group(s)" means and refers to any working groups, including without limitation the Task Force Working Group chaired by Andrew Lundquist, the working groups established by each agency, and all committees, sub-committees, teams or other sub-groups that participated in the activities of the Task Force or the preparation of the Report, including without limitation working groups, sub-committees, team, or other sub-groups within any federal agency or entity.

I. "Identify" means, with respect to an individual, state that person's full name, title, and last known business address and phone number.

J. Defendants are required to provide all information available to them at the time of their responses, regardless of whether the information is known to defendants, their representatives, agents, investigators or attorneys.

K. Pursuant to Rule 26(e) F. R. Civ. P., these interrogatories should be considered continuing, and defendants are required to update them if new information becomes available to them after their initial response.

L. If you object to responding to any interrogatory on the basis of privilege, please state the factual and legal basis for such objection.

INTERROGATORIES

1. Please state the dates, times, locations of, and identify all persons who were present at each meeting of the Task Force.

2. For each Task Force member, please provide a description of the member's role in the preparation of the Report and the activities of the Task Force;

we have an opportunity to seek a stay in the -- we're not being deprived of that. I've never argued that. We certainly have an opportunity to seek a stay in the Court of Appeals. The question is whether we'd be deprived of our underlying appeal. This is just like Judge Kessler recently in the CNSS detainee FOIA case. Once those documents are released and I know -- no, no. I understand what you're going to say.

THE COURT: That's the distinction.

MR. COFFIN: There's no distinction legally because our argument is that -- Your Honor, our argument is that once we comply with this order, we can't get effective relief from your order.

THE COURT: And I totally agree with you. If you completed your search, keeping in mind what you just said about Judge Kessler's case, if you completed your search, isolated the documents, prepared the privilege log and gave everything over, it's probably moot.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, the legal --

THE COURT: You've complied with it --

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor --

THE COURT: -- but I wouldn't do that.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, you're missing the major point that's made in these cases. In this case there certainly would be harm from releasing the documents, but I'm not talking about that. I'm talking about compliance with your order. We have argued that compliance with your order imposes an unconstitutional burden.

REV_00264741

THE COURT: Right. The serious preparation of the log.

MR. COFFIN: Yes, and once we comply with that order, we have assumed that unconstitutional burden. So it's the same exact argument that Judge Kessler accepted.

THE COURT: You're complying with the order now, so maybe the controversy is moot.

MR. COFFIN: No, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You're argument is that compliance with my order to undertake a search and preparation of a log has some impact on this --

MR. COFFIN: Yes, there is certainly some impact. No, it's not moot. We are realizing that harm right now out of deference to this court. Yes, that is absolutely correct. We are realizing a harm right now.

THE COURT: But you're complying with it.

MR. COFFIN: If you accept our argument --

THE COURT: Why is it different then from a litigant turning over privileged documents and complying with the harm? Doesn't that moot the controversy?

MR. COFFIN: It's no different. It's the exact same point. If you turn over privileged documents, you've mooted an argument about privilege; if you turn over documents where you say you don't have to comply with an order, you've mooted a dispute about the order. That's exactly our argument.

THE COURT: And you're complying with the order now by undertaking a search that you believe is unconstitutional, so why isn't this controversy moot?

MR. COFFIN: It is not moot because we still have an obligation to comply with your order and we haven't fully complied. So yes, we are being harmed right now by your order under our position. There is no question that turning the Office of the Vice President upside down imposes a burden on us, and we are realizing that burden out of deference to this court's order. Having said that, we haven't --

THE COURT: Well, it's certainly not my intent to turn anyone's office upside down when I issue my orders. Thank you, Mr. Coffin. Anything further? I just want to take a short recess. Mr. Klayman?

MR. KLAYMAN: Just a last point, Your Honor. This is why Your Honor has to just make a ruling and live by it. We went through this during the Watergate and the Nixon period. Nixon didn't want to turn anything over to Judge Sirica. He put his foot down and said I've had enough, that's it, turn it over.

THE COURT: All right. I'm going to take a 10-minute recess.

(Recess)

REV_00264743

THE COURT: All right, Counsel. I'm going to think about the issue. I'll continue the hearing until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and I'll rule on the government's request for a stay at that time. Thank you, Mr. Coffin, for the points that you've made, and I'll give it some further thought. I'm still inclined to deny it, but I want to consider the request in light of your representations this afternoon.

MR. COFFIN: Thank you.

THE COURT: All right. The parties are excused. Thank you. I'm sorry, to the attorneys on the phone, did you wish to say anything?

MR. NARAYAN: No, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. You're welcome to participate tomorrow if you wish. I recognize that's early on the West Coast, but that's the only time I can squeeze this matter in. It'll be 10 o'clock Eastern Time tomorrow. Thank you.

(Proceedings adjourned at 2:25 p.m.)

* * * * * *

CERTIFICATE

I, BRYAN A. WAYNE, Official Court Reporter, certify that the foregoing pages are a correct transcript from the record of proceedings in the above-entitled matter.

BRYAN A. WAYNE

Bryan A. Wayne, RPR
Official Court Reporter

REV_00264744

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

Pending before the Court is non-agency defendants' motion for a stay of proceedings pending appeal of this Court's October 17, 2002, September 9, 2002, and July 11, 2002 Orders authorizing limited discovery from defendants on threshold issues, and ordering defendants to produce non-privileged documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests, along with a privilege log identifying those documents for which defendants believe there is a valid basis for the assertion of a privilege. Upon careful consideration of defendants' motion, the response and reply thereto, and the relevant legal authority, and for the following reasons, it is by the Court hereby ORDERED that defendants' motion for a stay is DENIED.

REV_00264745

I. BACKGROUND

Non-agency defendants move for a stay of, inter alia, this Court's October 17, 2002 Order, which requires them, consistent with this Court's August 2, 2002 Order and July 11, 2002 Memorandum Opinion and Order, to respond to plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories and to produce by no later than November 5, 2002, non-privileged documents responsive to plaintiffs' First Request for Document Production, along with a log identifying specific documents or particularized categories of documents for which they assert that a privilege precludes production, and. Defendants seek a stay to pursue an appeal to the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, on the grounds that this Court's Orders implicate important constitutional and statutory questions that are best resolved by the Court of Appeals before litigation proceeds any further in this case.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

The following factors are to be considered when determining whether a stay pending appeal is warranted:

> (1) the likelihood that the party seeking the stay will prevail on the merits of the appeal; (2) the likelihood that the moving party will be irreparably harmed absent a stay; (3) the prospect that others will be harmed if the court grants the stay; and (4) the public interest in granting the stay. To justify the granting of a stay, a movant need not > always establish a high probability of success on the merits. Probability of success is inversely proportional to the degree of irreparable injury evidenced. A stay may be granted with either a high probability of success and some injury, or vice versa.

Cuomo v. United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 772 F.2d 972, 974 (D.C. Cir. 1985); Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm'n v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 842, 843 (D.C. Cir. 1977). It is "the movant's obligation to justify the court's exercise of such an extraordinary remedy." Cuomo, 772 F.2d at 978. This Circuit has recently reiterated that a moving party must satisfy "stringent standards required for a stay pending appeal." Summers v. Howard University, 2002 WL 31269623 (D.C. Cir., Oct. 10, 2002). Where a moving party fails to establish a substantial case on the merits, and further fails to "demonstrate that the balance of equities or the public interest strongly favors the granting of a stay," a motion for stay is properly denied. Cuomo, 772 F.2d at 972.

A. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

Recognizing that this Court has, on numerous occasions, rejected their arguments to this effect, defendants nevertheless continue to assert that court orders requiring them to respond in any fashion to plaintiffs' discovery requests creates an "unconstitutional burden" on the Executive Branch unless plaintiffs are first required to demonstrate "compelling need" for the discovery sought. Defendants have cited no authority, and indeed this Court knows of none, which supports this proposition. To the contrary, every case cited by the defendants in support of their position involved precisely the same procedure adopted by this Court in this case. Moreover, the U.S. Supreme Court has recently confirmed the continued validity of the precedent of long-standing relied upon by this Court in the Orders and Opinions contested by defendants. As recently as 1997, the nation's highest court held

REV_00264747

> In sum, "[i]t is settled law that the separation-of-powers doctrine does not bar every exercise of jurisdiction over the President of the United States." . . . the Judiciary may severely burden the Executive Branch by reviewing the legality of the President's official conduct....[emphasis added]

Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 705, 117 S.Ct. 1636, 1650 (1997). Here, as in Jones, this Court is of the opinion that defendants "err[ ] by presuming that interactions between the Judicial Branch and the Executive, even quite burdensome interactions, necessarily rise to the level of constitutionally forbidden impairment of the Executive's ability to perform its constitutionally mandated functions." See Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 702, 117 S.Ct. at 1648.

Notwithstanding this U.S. Supreme Court precedent, and the absolute dearth of authority supporting their arguments, defendants nevertheless contend that requiring them to review documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests, disclose those for which no viable claim of privilege exists, and assert any applicable privileges with respect to specific documents, impermissibly interferes with "core Article II" functions and imposes an unconstitutional burden on the Executive Branch. The Court rejects these arguments and is not persuaded by defendants' assertion that they have demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of their appeal of this Court's Orders.

REV_00264748

B. Irreparable Harm

Under this Circuit's precedent, the harms to each party are tested for "substantiality, likelihood of occurrence, and adequacy of proof." Cuomo 772 F.2d at 976, 977. The Court must consider the significance of the change from the status quo which would arise in the absence of a stay, as well as likelihood of occurrence of the claimed injury, when determining whether defendants have truly met their burden of demonstrating irreparable harm justifying imposition of a stay. See id.

The fact of the matter is that the offices of the President and Vice President currently respond to discovery requests on a regular basis, asserting executive privilege with respect to specific requests for particular items when necessary. See, e.g. Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 704, 117 S. Ct. at 1649. Plaintiffs correctly point out that, in the cases cited by the defendants, stays of court orders authorizing discovery against officers of the Executive Branch have been granted only in cases where a court ordered production of a particular document after a viable claim of privilege had been made. See e.g., Nixon v. Sirica, 487 F.2d at 721 (approving stay of District Court orders either allowing or refusing disclosure of specific documents for which President has made a particularlized claim of privilege).

Moreover, it is in fact defendants who seek to change the status quo by asking this Court to relieve them of their responsibility to respond to plaintiffs' discovery requests and assert executive privilege where appropriate. Defendants' argument that any "discovery directed at" them imposes an unconstitutional burden on them absent a showing by plaintiffs of "compelling need" represents a dramatic new argument with respect to invocation of executive privilege, and contemplates the wholesale elimination of an entire step in the established discovery processes in this context. Furthermore, defendants themselves concede that, at least in some respects, they are seeking to expand the executive privilege, not simply rely on its settled contours. See Def.'s Mot. for Stay at 8 (claiming that requiring disclosure of documents which "may not be technically privileged" would nonetheless impose unconstitutional burdens on the Executive Branch).

There is no doubt that, if defendants' premise is accepted that compliance with this Court's discovery order imposes an unconstitutional burden, defendants would suffer irreparable harm

REV_00264750

3. Please identify all Task Force staff, personnel, consultants, employees, and all other persons who participated, in any manner, in the activities of the Task Force or the preparation of the Report.

4. For each person listed in response to Interrogatory 3, above, please provide:

a) A description of the person's role in the activities of the Task Force and in preparation of the Report.

b) A list of all meetings relating to the preparation of the Report and/or the activities of the Task Force in which the person participated, including the date and time of the meeting and identity of all persons who participated at the meeting.

5. Please list all federal agencies, offices, or other entities that participated, in any manner, in Task Force activities or preparation of the Report.

6. For each agency, office, or entity listed in response to Interrogatory 5, above, please:

a) Provide a description of the agency's, office's, or entity's participation in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report;

b) Identify all persons who were involved with the agency's, office's, or entity's participation in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report;

i) For each person listed in response in Interrogatory 6(b), above, describe the person's role in of the agency's, office's, or entity's participation in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report;

ii) For each person listed in response to Interrogatory 6(b), above, please provide a list of all meetings relating to the agency's, office's, or entity's if the proceedings before this Court were not stayed to enable them to seek appellate review of such an order. However, this Court has consistently rejected, and continues to reject, in reliance upon established precedent of long-standing, defendants' central argument, namely that requiring the Vice President and members of the Executive Branch to merely review documents requested by the plaintiffs and assert executive privilege where appropriate, is unconstitutional. Defendants cannot be permitted to manufacture irreparable harm by simply stating a legal principle with no precedential support whatsoever, and then claiming irreparable harm if they believe a court order violates that principle.

Accordingly, there is insufficient likelihood of "irreparable harm" to the defendants to justify a stay. Both the Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court have approved the very "harm" defendants point to: discovery procedures in which a request for documents from a member of the Executive is made in the context of judicially supervised discovery, the document is either produced or a privilege is asserted with respect to the document, and, in the latter case, the party seeking the document must demonstrate that the public need for the document outweighs the interests underlying the privilege in order to obtain production of the document. See, e.g., Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. at 704-05; In re Executive Office of the President, 215 F.3d 20, 22, 24;

REV_00264751

Dellums v. Powell, 561 F.2d 242, 247, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1977); see also Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 439-455 (1977).

C. Public Interest

Conversely, the harm to both the plaintiffs and the public of granting the stay is substantial, likely, and adequately proven. As plaintiffs point out, Congress, Executive agencies, and the public have been debating the energy policy developed by defendants without the benefit of the information sought by plaintiffs in this case. In some instances, final actions have already been taken. As time proceeds, the value of the information sought by plaintiffs and the public declines substantially, thereby effectively denying plaintiffs the relief to which they contend they are entitled. Additionally, both Congress and the Judicial Branch have recognized the public interest in avoiding "piecemeal " litigation occasioned by stays and interlocutory appeals. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 690 (1974).

Therefore, upon balancing of relevant factors, this Court concludes that there exists no factual or legal predicate for granting defendants a stay pending appeal. Accordingly, defendants' motion for stay pending appeal is hereby DENIED; and it is

REV_00264752

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' alternative motion for an extension of time in which to respond to plaintiffs' first request for document production is GRANTED; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that defendants shall fully comply with this Court's outstanding Orders by no later than November 29, 2002.

Additionally, pursuant to the hearing held on defendant's motion for stay on October 31, 2002, and for the reasons given in open court, it is by the Court hereby

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall file their response to defendants' motion for certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) by no later than November 6, 2002 and defendants shall file their reply by no later than November 8, 2002; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' motion for certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) shall be considered at the currently scheduled November 13, 2002 hearing on all pending motions; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall file a reply in support of their motions to compel by no later than November 7, 2002.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
November 1, 2002

372

REV_00264753

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
Paul J. Orfanedes, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Roger M. Adelman, Esq.
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Suite 730
Washington, DC 20036
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

David G. Bookbinder, Esq.
408 C Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Daniel Edward Bensing, Esq.
David O. Buchholz, Esq.
Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

Robert S. Litt, Esq.
ARNOLD & PORTER
555 12th St NW
Washington, DC 20004-1206

Counsel for defendant Thomas Kuhn

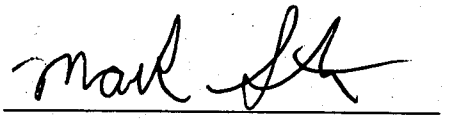
Paul Christian Rauser, Esq.
WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY
725 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005
Counsel for defendant Haley Barbour

Richard D. Horn, Esq.
BRACEWELL & PATTERSON LLP
2000 K St NW
Suite 500
Washington, DC 20006-1872
Counsel for defendant Mark Racicot

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on November 12, 2002, I am causing one copy the foregoing Appendix to be served on the following in the manner specified:

By Hand delivery:
Honorable Emmet G. Sullivan
United States District Court
for the District of Columbia
Third & Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001



Larry Klayman, Esq.
Paul Orfanedes, Esq.
Judicial Watch, Inc.
501 School Street, S.W., Suite 725
Washington, D.C. 20024

David Bookbinder, Esq.
Sierra Club
408 C Street, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20002

Roger Adelman
Law Offices of Roger Adelman
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

Howard M. Crystal
Meyer & Glitzenstein
1601 Connecticut Ave., N.W. Suite 700
Washington, D.C. 20009-1035

By Federal Express:
Patrick Gallagher
Alex Levinson
Sanjay Narayan
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, California 94104

Mark B. Stern

participation in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report, in which the person participated, including the date and time of the meeting and the identity of all persons who participated in the meeting;

7. Please list all Sub-Groups that participated, in any manner, in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report.

8. For each Sub-Group listed in response to Interrogatory 7, above, please:

a) describe the role or function of the Sub-Group in the activities of the Task Force and/or the preparation of the Report;

b) identify all persons who participated in the activities of the Sub-Group;

c) list all meetings of the Sub-Group, including the date and time of the meeting and the identity of all Persons who participated at the meeting.

9. For each Person listed in response to Interrogatory 8(b), above, please:

a) Describe the person's role in the preparation of the Report, the activities of the Task Force, and/or the activities of Sub-Group(s).

b) list all meetings relating to the preparation of the Report, the activities of the Task Force, and/or the activities of Sub-Group(s), in which the person participated, including the date and time of the meeting and the identity of all persons who participated in the meeting.

Respectfully submitted,

Patrick Gallagher (CA Bar No.146105)
Alex Levinson (CA Bar No.135307)
Sanjay Narayan (CA Bar No. 183227)
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104

(415) 977-5696
Email: pat.gallagher@sierraclub.org

David Bookbinder (DC Bar No. 455525)
Sierra Club
408 C Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002
(202) 548-4598
Email: david.bookbinder@sierraclub.org

Roger Adelman (DC Bar No. 056358)
Law Offices of Roger Adelman
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 822-0600
Email: Adelmarm@erols.com

Attorneys for plaintiff Sierra Club

Larry Klayman (DC Bar No. 334581)
Paul J. Orfanedes
Judicial Watch, Inc.
501 School Street, SW
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024

Attorneys for plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on August 2, 2002 a true and correct copy of the foregoing PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET OF INTERROGATORIES was served via hand-delivery, on the following:

Roger Adelman (DC Bar No. 056358)
Law Offices of Roger Adelman
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 730
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 822-0600

Thomas Millet
Jennifer Paisner
U.S. Department of Justice
901 E Street, N.W.
Room 952
Washington, D.C. 20530

Robert S. Litt
Arnold & Porter
555 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004-1206

Paul Christian Rauser
Williams & Connelly
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

Daniel Edward Bensing
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division
Federal Programs Branch
901 E Street, N.W.
Room 818
Washington, D.C. 20530

Richard D. Horn
Bracewell & Patterson LLP
2000 K Street, N.W.
Suite 500
Washington, D.C. 20006-1872

Howard M. Crystal
Meyer & Glitzenstein
1601 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Suite 700
Washington, D.C. 20009

Meseidy Rodriguez

REV_00264637

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., et al.,	)
Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)
NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, et al.,	)	Civil Action No. 01-15 0 (EGS)
Defendants	)
SIERRA CLUB,	)
Plaintiff	)
v.	)	Civil Action No. 02-631 (EGS)
VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD B. CHENEY, et al.,	)
Defendants.	)

DECLARATION OF KAREN Y. KNUTSON

I, Karen Y. Knutson, hereby DECLARE:

1. I am a full-time employee of the Vice President of the United States appointed pursuant to Section 106 of Title 3 of the United States Code. My title is Deputy Assistant to the Vice President for Domestic Policy. From on or about February 6, 2001 to April 2, 2002, I was a full time employee of the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) on assignment to the Office of the Vice President. Within that period, from on or about February 6, 2001 through September 30, 2001, my responsibility in the Office of the Vice President was to provide staff support to the National Energy Policy Development Group ("NEPDG"). My title when I performed that responsibility was Deputy Director of the NEPDG. The NEPDG was created by a memorandum of President of the United States George W. Bush of January 29, 2001. At the end of the last day of fiscal year 2001, on September 30, 2001, the NEPDG ceased to exist by operation of that Presidential memorandum.

REV_00264638

2. This Declaration is based on my personal knowledge and on information available to me in my official capacity.

3. Of the professional personnel in the Office of the Vice President who were responsible for providing the staff support to the NEPDG from February 2001 through September 30, 2001,1 am the only one who is currently employed by the Vice President. Andrew Lundquist was a DOE full-time employee on assignment to the Office of the Vice President with the responsibility from February 2001 through September 30, 2001 to provide staff support to the NEPDG. His title during that period was Executive Director of the NEPDG. After the termination of the NEPDG on September 30, 2001, he was a DOE assignee, and then detailee, to the Office of the Vice President through March 26, 2002. On March 26, 2002, Mr. Lundquist left Federal Government service and at all times since then he has worked in the private sector. The NEPDG ceased to exist on September 30, 2001 and Mr. Lundquist ceased at that time to be the Executive Director of the NEPDG; therefore, when Mr. Lundquist left Federal Government employment, no one replaced him in his former capacity as Executive Director of the NEPDG.

4. As directed by the President in his memorandum of January 29, 2001, the NEPDG consisted of the following officers of the Federal Government: Vice President Cheney, Secretary of the Treasury O'Neill, Secretary of the Interior Norton, Secretary of Agriculture Veneman, Secretary of Commerce Evans, Secretary of Transportation Mineta, Secretary of Energy Abraham, Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency Allbaugh, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency Whitman, Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy Joshua Bolten, Assistant to the President for Economic Policy Lawrence

REV_00264639

Lindsey, and the Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs. Additionally, in accordance with the terms of the Presidential memorandum of January 29, 2001, the Vice President invited the participation of Secretary of State Powell when the work of the NEPDG involved international affairs, and, as appropriate, the participation of Director of the Office of Management and Budget Mitchell Daniels. Finally, because the President had not appointed an individual with the title Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs, the Vice President invited, as appropriate, the participation of Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of Intergovernmental Affairs Ruben Barrales. The NEPDG consisted of these officers of the Federal Government, and no one else.

5. The above-named officers of the Federal Government, in their participation in the NEPDG, performed the functions set forth for them in the President's memorandum of January 29, 2001: to gather information, deliberate, and, as specified in the President's memorandum, to make recommendations to the President for a national energy policy. The Vice President performed the additional duties assigned to him by the President's memorandum of January 29, 2001 of presiding at the meetings of the NEPDG and directing its work. On May 16, 2001, the Vice President, on behalf of the NEPDG, submitted to the President for his consideration the recommendations known as the Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group.

6. During the period of the existence of the NEPDG, the NEPDG was supported by five professionals employed by the Department of Energy who were originally assigned to the Office of the Vice President for the purpose of providing such support: an Executive Director of the NEPDG (Andrew Lundquist); a Deputy Director of the NEPDG (me); two Senior Professional Staff Members, and a Professional Staff Member. In addition, a White House Fellow assigned to the Office of the Vice President provided support to the NEPDG. This support staff for the business, so that plaintiff can ascertain the files in which they were located, their relative order in the files, and how the files were maintained.

REV_00264640

2. This document request extends to all documents in the possession, custody, or control of defendant and its agents, including, without limitation, documents located in all offices of defendants that were involved in the activities of the National Energy Policy Development Group or preparation of the National Energy Policy Report.

3. If you object to the production of any of the requested documents on the basis of privilege, you shall submit for each document, in lieu of it, a written description that:

a. identifies the date of the document;

b. identifies the author or source of the document;

c. briefly describes the nature of the document (e.g., letter, memorandum, handwritten note etc.) and the general subject matter of the contents of the document;

d. identifies the Person to whom the document was addressed, and each Person who received a copy of it; and

e. lists any objection raised or privilege claimed and its basis.

If any portion of a document for which you claim a privilege contains non-privileged information, you must produce the document but you may redact any allegedly privileged portion.

4. Any document, notation, or marking appearing on any document, and not a part of the original, is to be considered a separate document, and any draft, preliminary form, or superseded version of any document is also to be considered a separate document.

NEPDG also had one staff assistant who provided clerical support. All of these individuals responsible for providing staff support to the NEPDG were full-time Federal employees.

7. The NEPDG met twelve times. The dates of the twelve meetings were: January 29, February 9 and 16, March 12 and 19, April 3, 11, and 18, May 2, 4 and 16, and July 13, 2001. All twelve meetings occurred in Washington, D.C. At the January 29, 2001 meeting, the President announced the formation of the NEPDG. Other meetings of the NEPDG may have been scheduled, but did not occur because they were cancelled or rescheduled.

8. Within the Office of the Vice President, personnel of the NEPDG support staff attended the NEPDG meetings as follows: the NEPDG Executive Director (Mr. Lundquist) attended all the meetings; the NEPDG Deputy Director (me) attended all the meetings, except for the meeting on January 29, 2001; the senior of the two Senior Professional Staff Members attended approximately seven or eight of the meetings, but did not attend the meetings on January 29 and February 9, 2001; the junior of the two Senior Professional Staff Members attended one of the meetings; the White House Fellow attended all of the meetings, except for the meeting on January 29, 2001; the Professional Staff Member attended the meetings of April 3, 11, and 18 and May 2, 4 and 16; and the staff assistant who provided clerical support attended all of the meetings, except the meetings on January 29, February 9, and May 4, 2001.

9. Also, the following individuals employed on the Vice President's staff attended one or more of the NEPDG meetings: Chief of Staff to the Vice President, Deputy Chief of Staff to the Vice President, Counselor to the Vice President, Assistant to the Vice President for Legislative Affairs, Assistant to the Vice President for Domestic Policy, Deputy Assistant to the Vice President for Public Affairs, Deputy Assistant to the Vice President for Legislative Affairs (Senate), and the Press Secretary to the Vice President. These individuals at the time of their attendance were and still are full-time Federal employees, except for the individual who then was

REV_00264641

Press Secretary to the Vice President, who was at the time of her attendance a full-time Federal employee but who left Federal service on January 31, 2002 and is now in the private sector.

10. For each of the twelve meetings, the Office of the Vice President strictly limited those whom it invited to officers and employees of the Federal Government. The Office of the Vice President invited the officers of the Federal Government who constituted the NEPDG, and invited each such officer to be accompanied by one employee of that officer's department, agency or office. On rare occasions, such an officer would be accompanied by more than one employee of that officer's department, agency or office. To the best of my knowledge, no one other than the officers of the Federal Government who constituted the NEPDG, the Federal employees whom they chose from their respective departments, agencies and offices to accompany them (all of whom were full-time Federal employees), and the Office of the Vice President personnel set forth above, attended any of the meetings.

11. The Presidential memorandum of January 29, 2001 establishing the NEPDG authorized the Vice President to establish subordinate working groups to assist the NEPDG in its work. The Vice President did not establish any such working groups.

12. The Executive Director of the NEPDG proposed in February 2001 the establishment of a detailed structure of targeted working groups on a series of subjects, with a subset of the departments, agencies and offices whose heads were on the NEPDG to constitute each such targeted working group, but that proposal was not implemented.

13. The Executive Director of the NEPDG also gave the label "Working Group," which sometimes was also referred to as the "Staff Working Group," to a collection of staff-level Federal employees with whom he worked in drafting the Report of the NEPDG. That staff-level group held numerous meetings regarding drafting of the Report. To the best of my knowledge, the only attendees at such meetings were full-time Federal employees of the departments, agencies, and offices whose heads constituted, with the Vice President, the NEPDG, with one exception. The exception is that one individual, Joan C. O'Callaghan, doing business under the trade name The Communications Collective, was engaged to help provide technical writing and graphic design services relating to production of the NEPDG Report and attended brief portions of meetings -- two or three, but not more than three -- of the staff-level group as it worked on preparing the NEPDG Report; she did not participate in deliberations on or development of energy policy recommendations nor provide energy policy advice or recommendations, but rather provided technical writing and graphic design services in the preparation of the NEPDG Report. I do not recall how many meetings of the staff-level group occurred or precisely which employees attended, nor did the Office of the Vice President to the best of my knowledge keep records at such meetings that reflect such information.

REV_00264642

14. It is my understanding that the plaintiffs in this lawsuit have alleged that the following individuals regularly attended and fully participated in the meetings of the NEPDG: the four individuals in the private sector who were named by Judicial Watch, Inc. as defendants in its Second Amended Complaint (see paragraph 25) in this lawsuit, other, unnamed, individuals who were private lobbyists, and other unnamed individuals who were energy industry executives. No such individuals attended or participated in any meetings of the NEPDG or the Staff Working Group.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed at Washington, D.C. on September 3, 2002.

Karen Y. Knutson

Karen Y. Knutson

REV_00264643

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

The Court hereby sua sponte

ORDERS that plaintiffs shall file any detailed responses to defendants' motion for a protective order and for reconsideration by no later than September 16, 2002; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that any motions to compel shall be filed by no later than September 16, 2002; and it is

REV_00264644

FURTHER ORDERED that any replies to the responses to defendants' motion for a protective order and for reconsideration, and any responses to motions to compel shall be filed by no later than September 23, 2002; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that any replies in support of motions to compel shall be filed by no later than September 25, 2002; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that the status hearing scheduled in this matter for September 13, 2002 is cancelled, and the hearing is rescheduled for September 30, 2002 at 11:00 a.m. in Courtroom One; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that no potentially dispositive motions shall be filed in this matter until further order of the Court.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
September 9, 2002

REV_00264645

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

REV_00264646

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.,	:
Plaintiff,	:
SIERRA CLUB,	:
NATURAL RESOURCE DEFENSE COUNCIL,	:
Amicus,	:
vs.	:	CA-01-1530
NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, et al,	:
Defendants.	:

Washington, D. C.
October 17, 2002
10:28 a.m.

Transcript of Omnibus Motions Hearing
Before the Honorable Emmet G. Sullivan
United States District Court Judge

APPEARANCES:

For the Plaintiff:	PAUL J. ORFANEDES, ESQ. LARRY KLAYMAN, ESQ. (by telephone)
For the Intervenors:	ALEX LEVINSON, ESQ. (by telephone) DAVID BOOKBINDER, ESQ. ROGER M. ADELMAN, ESQ. SANJAY NARAYAN, ESQ.
For the Defendants:	JENNIFER PAISNER, ESQ. SHANNEN W. COFFIN, ESQ. CRAIG BLACKWELL

REV_00264647

Court Reporter: KATHERINE K. MOOMEY
Miller Reporting Company
735 8th Street, S. E.
Washington, D. C. 20003
(202) 546-6666

REV_00264648

PROCEEDINGS

THE CLERK: Civil Action 01-1530, Judicial Watch, Inc., Sierra Club, Natural Resource Defense Council, versus National Energy Policy Development Group. May I have counsel identify themselves, please?

MR. BOOKBINDER: For the plaintiff Sierra Club David Bookbinder, with me are my colleagues Sanjay Narajay and Roger Adelman.

THE COURT: All right, good morning.

MR. BOOKBINDER: And on the telephone Alex Levinson.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Levinson.

MR. LEVINSON: Yes, I'm here.

THE COURT: All right. And for the government?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, Shannen Coffin.

THE COURT: All right. And your colleagues, who are they?

MR. BLACKWELL: Craig Blackwelll, Your Honor.

MS. PAISNER: Jennifer Paisner, Your Honor.

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, Larry Klayman on behalf of Judicial Watch on the line.

REV_00264649

[4]

THE COURT: All right, Mr. Klayman, good morning.

I'm not persuaded by the government's motion that I should reconsider my ruling, nor am I persuaded that I should grant the equivalent of the protective order.

Now, Mr. Coffin, I'll afford you a few minutes not much more than that though to convince me otherwise.

Now, in doing I'd like for the government as well as the plaintiffs to address this thought, and it's just a thought that I want to share with counsel, maybe the approach by the court at this point should be along the lines of the following. Maybe the court should direct the government to prepare the equivalent of a privilege log, submit it under seal for the court's consideration, along with whatever documents that the government is of the opinion are protected pursuant to whatever privilege is invoked and give the court an opportunity to determine whether the government's assertion of privilege is appropriate.

I guess that another approach would be for the court to appoint the equivalent of a Special Master, maybe a retired judge, and direct that the

REV_00264650

5. If any document required to be produced by this Request for Production has been destroyed, identify such document by:

a. author or preparer;

b. addressee and all other recipients

c. indicated or blind copies;

d. date;

e. subject matter(s);

f. number of pages;

g. attachments or appendices;

h. all persons to whom it was distributed, provided, shown or explained;

i. date of destruction;

j. manner of destruction;

k. reasons for destruction;

l. person authorizing destruction; and

m. person destroying the document.

6. If any document required to be produced by this Request for Production is withheld because it is stored electronically, identify the subject matter of the document and the place or places where the information contained in the document is maintained or stored.

7. Whenever the word "and" appears, the word shall include "or" and shall be the logical inclusive of "and/or."

8. The singular includes the plural, and the plural includes the singular.

[5]

government go through that procedure that I've just described with that Special Master affording the government's counsel an opportunity to appear before that person as appropriate and argue as appropriate in an effort to persuade the Special Master that the government's privilege, or privileges, that it has invoked are indeed permissible under the law. And then direct that Special Master to file a report with the court and I'd determine whether the privileges have been properly asserted and that there is a basis in law to support the privileges that have been asserted.

That was the approach that was followed by the court I believe, actually that was the approach that was discussed by the Circuit Court in the Gelands case. I'm not quite sure what happened when the case was remanded to the District Court.

I'm sharing those thoughts because maybe it is appropriate at this juncture for the court to carve out a middle ground since obviously the battle lines have been drawn and it appears that the government's position is clear that not only will the government produce discovery it won't respond to discovery requests and assert the privilege that everyone must assert.

REV_00264651

[6]

Now, having said that, Mr. Coffin, I'd give you a chance to address those two thoughts as well as any principal point. I've considered your motion more than once, I've considered your arguments and I'm not persuaded by them, and I'm not going to give the parties, anyone, a great deal of time this morning to make their arguments that you've already made very eloquently in writing. I've already considered the arguments but if there is something that I've overlooked, Mr. Coffin, you need to tell me what it is and also address those two thoughts that the court has shared with counsel for the parties.

MR. COFFIN: Good morning, Your Honor. Thank you for continuing the hearing from last week to accommodate my schedule. I appreciate that.

THE COURT: Sure, no problem.

MR. COFFIN: Let me address your point. I don't believe that the middle that you've suggested actually is how Gelands proceeded because before it went through that process--

THE COURT: No, no. What I said was that's what the Circuit Court discussed. I don't know what happened when the case was remanded.

MR. COFFIN: I'm talking about the actual

REV_00264652

[7]

Circuit Court decision. Before the court did that it satisfied itself that there was a need to do that, that there was sufficient evidentiary substantiation of the claims. And the court said there was a claim there--

THE COURT: Well I've already determined that discovery is appropriate.

MR. COFFIN: Well, Your Honor, we have complied with discovery to the tune of 35,000 documents.

THE COURT: You won't assert the privilege, you refuse to assert the privilege, although everyone, including the President of the United States, has to assert the privilege if that person is relying upon it.

MR. COFFIN: Well I don't--

THE COURT: The government takes the position that it's not going to assert the privilege, that it's not going to respond to court's order, that it's not going to produce anything nor will it assert the privilege because asserting the privilege is, as I understand your argument, unconstitutional.

MR. COFFIN: Let me say that--

THE COURT: I mean that's your argument.

REV_00264653

[8]

MR. COFFIN: Yes. And there is abundant support for the procedure we're requesting. In United States v Nixon itself--

THE COURT: All right. Do you have any authority, sir, that is different from the authority that you've relied upon in your written pleadings because that written authority that you relied upon in your pleadings is not persuasive at all.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, the Poindexter case discussed this very point and Judge Green said I don't have to require a formal assertion of the privilege which itself puts a burden on the executive and the executive's confidentiality, I don't have to go that far before--

THE COURT: This court isn't requiring the government to produce privilege documents.

MR. COFFIN: No, but you're requiring us to perfect the privilege.

THE COURT: I'm telling the government that if you have the privilege then assert it and telling me the reasons why you're asserting it so that I can then determine whether your assertion of the privilege is appropriate or not. Everyone has to do that. Why should these defendants, who are not Presidential defendants, be excused from doing what everyone else under the law has to do?

REV_00264654

[9]

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, the Vice President of the United States is the principal defendant in this case and I suggest to you that the concern for undue interference with the effective operation of the Executive Branch requires special treatment by this court in this context.

As the Clinton decision said that special caution is appropriate if the materials or testimony sought by the court relate to a President's official activities. There is no question that if executive privilege is implicated the President of the United States is implicated and these are documents that go to advice that was given to the President of the United States.

THE COURT: Well these defendants--let's assume a hypothetical, let's assume they're minutes of a meeting on a given day, the defendants before this court should not be put to the task of identifying that they are minutes for a meeting and that those minutes are indeed privileged and articulate the reasons why?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, one of the

REV_00264655

[10]

standards that the court suggests in establishing need is that the evidence not be available--

THE COURT: Can you just answer my question?

MR. COFFIN: I am answering your questions. That the evidence not be available through due diligence from other sources, and there are now eight to ten agencies that are involved in this case that are not asserting any sort of executive privilege and are open to discovery in this case, and have in fact complied substantially with the discovery requests that are at issue in this case. So there are other sources.

And plaintiffs haven't come to you, Your Honor, and said in any way, shape or form that we've looked at those documents and we can't prove our case through those documents and that testimony.

And so, Your Honor, yes, that is exactly the case that if there is a way of proving who was at the meetings, who was at any NEPDG meetings through other means the due deference to the executive requires this court to require that exhaustion of the plaintiffs. That is our position.

REV_00264656

[11]

THE COURT: All right. Any new authorities that you want me to take a look at?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, we've cited all of the authorities in our brief. And I call your attention to the Armstrong decision, Your Honor. Armstrong is a very important case here because that involved the same sort of standards that we're asking for this court to apply in the context of a selective prosecution claim.

The court reasoned that a showing necessary to obtain discovery against the Executive Branch should itself be a significant barrier to the litigation of insubstantial claims and it did that for two reasons. First, judicial deference to the decision of executive officers stems from a concern not to unnecessarily impair the performance of core executive functions and, second, there is a presumption of regularity that is due to the conduct of government officials.

THE COURT: Well that's what you've been arguing since January of this year that there shouldn't be any discovery in this case.

MR. COFFIN: No, Your Honor, there is a substantial difference that you're missing, 35,000 documents and responses from me to the agencies, that is a major difference in this case. It puts this case in a much different setting because plaintiffs have access to all of the information they need to prove their case and they don't have a single shred of evidence that anyone other than government officials were involved in the meetings of the NEPDG. There is not a single shred of evidence and that's the problem with their case.

REV_00264657

You can't allow discovery here because there is no substantiation of the claim even though there are tons of sources for that information.

THE COURT: And still the government's argument is again there must be a need articulated by the plaintiffs before discovery can go forward?

MR. COFFIN: That's correct, Your Honor. That's correct, that is our position.

THE COURT: Well the reason why the government sought a protective order was because of your representation that you were about to file a motion for summary judgment and you thought that there should be a protective order in place because of your plan to file a motion, which I said you can file until I resolve the discovery dispute. So, that factual predicate has been--

MR. COFFIN: But--

REV_00264658

THE COURT: Just a minute, don't interrupt me. You have a habit of interrupting me, sir. You did this last year.

MR. COFFIN: I apologize.

THE COURT: I know. I invite zealous advocacy but I will not tolerate attorneys interrupting me.

MR. COFFIN: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: All right, fair enough. I won't interrupt you.

Read that last line back.

(The statement was read back.)

THE COURT: I think that the request for a protective order was the government's desire to file a motion for summary judgment and I said no, don't file a motion for summary judgment unless or until the court resolves the discovery dispute.

MR. COFFIN: Right.

THE COURT: So that factual predicate having been removed then what is the factual predicate now for the government's assertion that it need not assert the privilege, that the plaintiffs have not established the need, is that essentially it?

MR. COFFIN: No, Your Honor, it's not. In my mind the summary judgment motion was a convenient vehicle for you to understand what the evidence--

REV_00264659

THE COURT: A convenient vehicle for the government to proceed with and I said no, we're not at the summary judgment stage and we won't be at the summary judgment stage until I resolve discovery.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, as we said in one of our reply briefs we did say that we don't think that it was a necessary vehicle, it was simply a convenient vehicle. In our last reply brief we explained to you, we summarized to you, what the evidence was that was out there and that--

THE COURT: Well if that is the vehicle then it puts the burden on the plaintiffs to demonstrate a need.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, that is exactly right.

THE COURT: All right, fine.

MR. COFFIN: That is exactly right.

THE COURT: Answer the question then, the factual predicate then is that they haven't demonstrated need.

MR. COFFIN: Oh, that's exactly right, it

REV_00264660

9. Pursuant to Rule 34(b), F. R. Civ. P., these requests are continuing in nature and defendants are required to produce all responsive materials that come into their possession, custody or control after the date of their initial response.

DEFINITIONS

A. "Document" means and refers to, without limitation, all written, typed, or otherwise preserved communications including any letter, memorandum, diary, log, test, analysis, study, projection, check, invoice, receipt, bill, purchase order, shipping order, contract, lease, agreement, work paper, calendar, envelope, paper, telephone message, tape, computer tape, computer disc, computer card, other electronic media, electronic data active files, electronic data archived files, electronic data backup files, electronic file fragments, recording, videotape, film, microfilm, microfiche, drawing, account, ledger, statement, financial data, and all other writings or communications including all non-identical copies, drafts, and preliminary sketches no matter how produced or maintained in your actual or constructive possession, custody or control or of which you have knowledge of the existence, and whether prepared, published or released by you or by any other person or entity. Without limitation, the term "document(s)" shall include any copy that differs in any respect from the original or other versions of the document, such as, but not limited to, copies containing notations, insertions, corrections, marginal notes, or emendations.

B. "Person" means and refers to, without limitation, any individual, corporation, partnership, joint venture, limited partnership, association, trust, trustee, group, organization, government or government agency, office, bureau, department, or entity, and all divisions, subdivisions, bureaus, branches, offices or other units thereof, and includes the present and former officers, executives, partners, brokers, employees, agents, and all other persons acting or was just that the vehicle for doing that was to put in the context of a summary judgment motion. We didn't think that that was necessary and Your Honor, you know although we disagree with your not allowing us to file a summary judgment motion we don't think that it is a necessary vehicle. It certainly can be done here because plaintiffs have to demonstrate need.

THE COURT: All right. Anything new?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I can move on to one of the--

THE COURT: I've considered the arguments that you've made in your brief and I'm not persuaded by them. Is there any new argument that you wish to make?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, there aren't any new arguments.

THE COURT: Thank you. I'll hear from plaintiffs counsel.

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, Larry Klayman, good morning.

As occurred at the last hearing, that was the August 2nd hearing, we were concerned that the government, in this case the Bush-Cheney administration would allow the 30 days that Your

REV_00264661

Honor ordered to produce documents or object with regard to the Cheney Energy Taskforce itself, not the peripheral agencies that are involved but the taskforce itself, that it would allow that 30 days to tick off to try to delay this proceeding because it is apparent to us that what they are trying to do is get beyond an election period. We have no interest in the elections, the court has no interest in the elections, but we want the documents for the public as soon as possible.

It's been a year and a half since this matter was filed. At the current pace of the litigation nothing will be made available probably until after 2004 and this administration may no longer be in charge of the White House at that time.

My suggestion here is, and I think that Your Honor is touching upon it is that this Bush-Cheney administration and the defendant in this case is in a contempt situation right now. They have defied your order.

THE COURT: That's not an issue before the court, counsel. The only issues that I'm going to focus on today are the motion for reconsideration and the motion for protective order. I recognize that there have been additional pleadings filed, those other matters are not before the court today.

REV_00264662

MR. KLAYMAN: Okay. Well my point if that if Your Honor can set a short timeframe I think that's important because I believe the strategy of the government, and I've seen it in other cases here, is that whatever Your Honor orders in terms of a timeframe in or about the end of that time period they will be filing a petition for a writ of mandamus with the D. C. Circuit, it will not be meritorious but what they are going to try to do is to try and slow this matter down further.

So, consequently to keep the timeframe short if they are going to use that technique, however improper, and they've used it in other cases that we've been involved with, let them use it quickly so that we can get up to the D. C. Circuit and have this thing resolved, otherwise by the time that this case is litigated this administration will be out of office.

That's basically my observation. I agree with Your Honor's approach but I think that there needs to be a short timeframe for producing the documents, for producing claims of privilege.

THE COURT: All right, thank you, counsel.

REV_00264663

MR. NARAYAN: Your Honor, I just want to address the two matters that you raised.

THE COURT: Sure, go ahead.

MR. NARAYAN: I refer to the privilege of producing a privilege log and documents under seal to the court. I certainly have no problem with producing reportedly privileged documents under seal. With regard to the privilege log and unprivileged documents we think that there is no need to place those under seal for two reasons. One reason is that at this stage I think we too are a bit concerned about delay here. What we've asked for in this case is a declaratory judgment and information and the value of those things does go down as the issues that we're investigating in this case get further and further into the past, and in particular as the administration's energy policy becomes something that is no longer--

THE COURT: So in other words you're suggestion along the lines of the court's thoughts would be for the court to essentially follow the procedures the court would follow in a FOIA case for instance, have the government produce a privileged log, which you would have access to but not necessarily the rationale behind the assertions of privilege and the court would review those documents, those evidence materials, in camera. Is that right?

REV_00264664

MR. NARAYAN: That's right, Your Honor.

And the other thing is that a privilege log would allow us to maybe structure further discovery in a way that might be useful to us.

THE COURT: Is there a requirement that the plaintiffs demonstrate a need at this point?

MR. NARAYAN: No, Your Honor, there isn't. Although the defendants have said a lot about the separation of powers and the constitution what we're talking here about is production of non privileged documents and the privilege log.

THE COURT: Which is what is required of everyone, is it not?

MR. NARAYAN: Yes, Your Honor. And those don't effect the functioning of the executive, they haven't shown any in which that could effect the functioning of the executive in any way that could possibly implicate separation of powers. And in all of the cases that they have cited and the cases that we've cited it's clear that any separation of powers the analysis focuses on functioning not the simple status of the fact that people have desks in the White House, or at one point had desks in the White House.

REV_00264665

In any event they say that we have access to other evidence, but until we know what we don't have it's very hard to say whether we can get those things from the agency or not. At a minimum here there is no intrusion on executive function in a way that would implicate separation of powers.

THE COURT: Because I'm not ordering the defendants to turn over any privileged documents whatsoever. I'm just telling them to turn over those documents that aren't privileged pursuant to the panoply of discovery rules that are in place. But for those items that the privilege attaches just tell me what the privilege is.

MR. NARAYAN: That's right, Your Honor, they haven't indicated a single specific document that the disclosure of which would effect the executive's functioning.

THE COURT: Well they haven't identified the documents.

MR. NARAYAN: Well, right, they haven't identified any specific documents at all.

THE COURT: They are essentially saying we don't have to respond to any discovery request and we don't have to assert a privilege because responding to a request for discovery is as unconstitutional as well as providing discovery, if I understand their argument correctly.

REV_00264666

[21]

MR. NARAYAN: I think that Clinton versus Jones adequately disposes of the contention that these simple steps of litigation somehow effect the executive in a way that offends separation of powers anyway.

THE COURT: If the court were to deny the request for reconsideration and deny the request for a protective order then what from the plaintiffs point of view?

MR. NARAYAN: Well then we wouldn't get any non privileged documents and we'd get a privilege log.

THE COURT: And then the next step is what, the court would have to focus on the motion to compel, or is there a need to do that?

MR. NARAYAN: The motion to compel addressed the production by the agencies and they largely center on separate issues. I don't think that there is any reason to--at this point they are proceeding on separate tracks.

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, to get back to the earlier issue. This is Mr. Klayman.

REV_00264667

THE COURT: Just a minute counsel. I want to hear from you but I want plaintiff's counsel, your co-counsel to finish. Can you hear, counsel?

MR. KLAYMAN: Yes. I thought that he was. Thank you.

MR. NARAYAN: The next step would be we intended this discovery to provide a foundation for further focus discovery based on what shows up here. So, the next step would be depending on what we see we might have follow up discovery requests. Again it's hard to say without knowing what is out there and we might also have some questions about the privileges that they are raising in their privilege log. In other words, we would proceed like any other normal civil case.

With regard to the Special Master, Your Honor, I think our only concern there is the potential there for delay again.

THE COURT: When I made reference to that procedure I wasn't by any stretch of the imagination finding as a fact, finding as a matter of law that there had to be a need demonstrated. I just focused on that procedure that was put in place, that's all. And so I guess when you're thinking this through why would there be a need to have an intermediary step when in the final analysis the court would have to make the decisions in any event. And the court is most capable of making those decisions in the first instance and why burden someone else.

REV_00264668

MR. NARAYAN: That's all that we have, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Klayman.

MR. KLAYMAN: Yes, Your Honor. What I'm suggesting to clarify the earlier position, I realize that these other motions for show cause orders for contempt are pending but what we would ask for the court today is a definitive order that they comply with Your Honor's orders of August 2nd, set a short timeframe, they are not going to comply with it in any event, they've made that clear.

THE COURT: Why is there a need for the court to issue another order? I issued one order. I mean is there a need for the court to issue another order, are you essentially saying I mean it this time? I don't think so, is there?

MR. KLAYMAN: I mean you want to go through the compel procedure. I thought that you were suggesting that he wanted an interim order to comply is that's Your Honor's approach. I feel that they are in contempt right now, I agree with you.

REV_00264669

THE COURT: Well, contempt is not an issue before the court.

MR. KLAYMAN: Well the Your Honor can decide on the motions at the appropriate time but I'm just concerned and I want to make sure that my position is stated clearly. I'm concerned that we need to know where we stand with regard to this Bush-Cheney administration, whether they are going to produce or whether they are going to claim privileges and not to allow time to tick off for them to then allow that time to expire, only to have them take what is in effect an appeal to the D.C. Circuit which will then shut this case down, you know, for six months to a year. We need to know where they stand right now and I think that we know where they stand. They do not intend to comply with your orders, they've told you that. They don't have any inclination to accept what they are at least with regard to the internal documents inside the taskforce itself and to give them, you know, a fourth bite of the apple. I agree with what your is saying that you have already ruled, it purporting to act on behalf of them, and any of their present or former parent corporations, subsidiaries, affiliates, divisions, predecessors and successors in interest.

REV_00264670

C. "Communication" means and refers to any use of any mode of conveying meaning or information such as, but not limited to, speech, telephone, telegraph, e-mail, other computer-generated or transmitted information, letter, and any written or spoken language for the purpose of transferring information from one person or place to another. The term "Communication" shall include, without limitation, any oral, written or electronic transmission of information including, without limitation, meetings, discussions, conversations, telephone calls, memoranda, telecopies, telexes, conferences, facsimiles, seminars, messages, notes, or memoranda.

D. "Any" encompasses "all."

E. "Concerning" means and includes referring to, relating to, alluding to, responding to, connected with, commented upon, in respect of, about, regarding, discussing, involving, showing describing, reflecting, and constituting.

F. The "Task Force," means and refers to the National Energy Policy Development Group, as described in President George W. Bush's memorandum dated on or about January 29, 2001.

G. The "Report" means and refers to the Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group, titled "Reliable, Affordable, and Environmentally Sound Energy for America's Future," and published on or about May 16, 2001.

H. "Sub-Group(s)" means and refers to Any working groups, including without limitation the Task Force Working Group chaired by Andrew Lundquist, the working groups established by each agency, and all committees, sub-committees, teams or other sub-groups that would not be appropriate.

So, yes, they've produced some documents and the documents that they've produced and not produced with regard to the agencies they should be ordered to produce that privilege log and justify what those privileges are. But with regard to the documents that they have just basically refused to produce or refuse to even claim privilege that issue in my view is beyond giving them a fourth bite of the apple and they should be ordered to produce them immediately. Quite apart whether you hold them in contempt they should be ordered to produce them tomorrow.

THE COURT: So in response the to question that I asked counsel what should be the next step for the court to take, assuming that the court denies the request for reconsideration and denies the motion for protective order?

MR. KLAYMAN: The next step should be with regard to the documents inside the taskforce. If they are not prepared to make a commitment today that those documents are going to be produced forthwith Your Honor would have to take appropriate measures to enforce the powers of the court quickly without allowing time to expire here. Their entire strategy is delay, that's why it is, and that's why they are willing to thumb their nose in the face of the court. It's the same strategy used by prior administrations going all of the way back in modern times to Nixon.

REV_00264671

And with regard to the documents from the agency where they have produced some documents albeit the same documents they produced in Judge Friedman's case and Judge Kessler's case they should have to produce forthwith a privilege log along with the proper justifications for claims of privilege. But it's too late for the documents inside the taskforce, they are already in defiance of Your Honor's orders, they have waived any objections, they can't raise objections now, it's too late.

THE COURT: Let me ask you this. I have not focused on those other two cases that are before different judges in this court, Judge Friedman and Judge Kessler, at what stage are those cases proceeding now?

MR. KLAYMAN: They are proceeding as a matter of course. I mean in effect those cases have now been merged into Your Honor's case because the Bush-Cheney administration--

REV_00264672

THE COURT: I wouldn't go that far.

MR. KLAYMAN: Well effectively, not technically. What they are claiming is that they have reproduced all of the documents in those other cases in the context of this case and there are motions pending in these other cases.

THE COURT: All right, let me ask you this then. In those other cases, and they are not related cases, in those other cases then the government has taken the position that it will not assert privilege but that further intrusion then is indeed unconstitutional, is that the stage those other cases are in?

MR. KLAYMAN: No. You see those are the agencies, these are FOIA cases, Freedom of Information cases. They are taking the position that we've produced everything that we have to produce save for those documents that we can withhold under claim of privilege. But those documents in the other cases don't get into the so called belly of the beast which is the Cheney Energy Taskforce itself centered inside the White House.

THE COURT: For those cases that the government has asserted a privilege, for those documents that the government has asserted a privilege in those other cases has the government submitted those documents for in camera inspection to my colleagues?

REV_00264673

MR. KLAYMAN: Not as yet. Various motions are pending in those cases including motions for contempt in those other cases as well. The point that I'm trying to make is you, Your Honor, have a highbred of that case and something unique here which is our seeking documents directly out of the Cheney Energy Taskforce, not the agencies that are on the periphery but right out of the taskforce.

THE COURT: I understand. I was just asking just because I was curious.

MR. KLAYMAN: And that is why when Mr. Coffin makes the argument that we have everything that we need at best that is extremely disingenuous because we don't have the core documents about what went on inside the taskforce itself. Consequently their not having objected on September 3rd, or raised any claims of privilege, they've waived any objections or claims of privilege and they have to, no pun unintended, cough up the documents immediately. They are way beyond anything else at this point, any kind of argument.

REV_00264674

THE COURT: All right. It that it?

MR. KLAYMAN: That's it. Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Coffin.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, as far as waiver goes the executive privilege--the Supreme Court has made clear that the waiver of executive privilege is not likely inferred and we have in fact reserved our intent to claim that if necessary in this case. And we, of course, do intent to comply with any orders, final orders, of this court subject to appropriate appellate review.

THE COURT: Sure, sure.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I mean--

THE COURT: Let's just be candid. If the court denies the request for reconsideration, denies the motion for protective order then what is next on this court's agenda, on this court's calendar?

MR. COFFIN: On this court's calendar you would have in front of you agency motions to compel. What the United States would is something that we would have to consider.

THE COURT: All right, that's fine. I just wanted to know. I think that the court should then focus on the motion to compel and there was a reason why I didn't have all of those remaining motions compel, contempt, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera on the court's calendar for today. All right, thank you.

REV_00264675

Anything further?

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, Mr. Klayman again.

THE COURT: Wait a minute, Mr. Coffin is at the podium, let me hear him.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, if you rule today we will have some housekeeping matters.

THE COURT: Let's get the housekeeping matters. Let's assume that I rule today, what are the housekeeping matters?

MR. COFFIN: There are several matters, one minor dealing with the motion to compel.

THE COURT: Well that's not really before me.

MR. COFFIN: No, it's not before the court. Our response is due on Monday and we would ask for a week extra which shouldn't effect your November 13th hearing on that motion.

THE COURT: I don't think that I'd have any problems with that but I'll hear from plaintiffs as well.

REV_00264676

MR. COFFIN: The issue of Andrew Lundquist as a defendant in this case is wholly separate from all of these other issues. It's a question of whether he is now a federal government employee. We've produced an affidavit that says he isn't and I'm sure--

THE COURT: And that has not been controverted, has it?

MR. COFFIN: It hasn't been controverted. We want to move to dismiss him from the case. You've told us not to file summary judgment pleadings. I'd at least like to--

THE COURT: Well that's a motion to dismiss though.

MR. COFFIN: And as you said before there is a factual issue of whether he's--

THE COURT: Have you spoken with your opponents about that?

MR. COFFIN: I haven't, I just knew that you had a summary judgment bar in place and so that is an issue.

THE COURT: Maybe that's an issue that we can resolve.

MR. COFFIN: And, Your Honor, the big issue is, you know, if you go the way you were saying we would ask orally today for a stay pending appeal.

REV_00264677

THE COURT: All right.

MR. COFFIN: I'll discuss that if you rule.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Klayman.

MR. KLAYMAN: Yes, Your Honor. There you have it, finally we have gotten a straight response and that's why this whole procedure up until now has simply been an exercise in delay, and that's why, Your Honor, I would urge you to issue an order that they produce the documents of the taskforce forthwith. Thank you.

THE COURT: All right, thank you, counsel. What about Mr. Lundquist, Mr. Klayman?

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, I will certainly take that under advisement. I believe that he is a legitimate defendant. We have thought this through, so has the Sierra Club, but there is no motion pending.

THE COURT: Well sometimes issues can get resolved by agreement of counsel.

MR. KLAYMAN: Well, we'll take a look at it. Right now I'm in trial in Seattle and so as soon as I get back I'll contact Mr. Coffin.

REV_00264678

THE COURT: Let me hear from Mr. Coffin and then I'll give you a chance counsel. I'm sorry, you wanted to respond.

MR. COFFIN: I'm not sure what take a look at it means.

THE COURT: Why don't I do this, why don't I just direct counsel to meet and confer? You don't have to do it face to face.

MR. COFFIN: That's fine, we'll do that.

THE COURT: Just meet and confer about that issue, Mr. Klayman.

MR. KLAYMAN: Certainly, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You can talk over the phone about that.

Yes, counsel.

MR. NARAYAN: Just a few things, Your Honor. One is that if the court does proceed as it has indicated that it is going to I think that we'd like to know when the privilege log and privilege documents are going to be produce, and we would suggest a fairly short timeframe.

THE COURT: Well the government has indicated that it doesn't intend to comply with the court's order and would seek a stay of the court's order to consider its appellate options. Why shouldn't I--these matters are very important, why shouldn't the court grant a stay and give the government a chance to consider whether it wishes to file a notice of appeal?

REV_00264679

MR. NARAYAN: Well, Your Honor, there is a circuit case right on point as to whether an appeal is appropriate here and the answer is that it isn't in In Re Executive Office of the President, which is 215 F 3rd 20. The Circuit Court specifically held that it doesn't have jurisdiction over an appeal of this nature where there is no claim of privilege and no threat that privileged documents are going to be produced as a result of the court's ruling.

THE COURT: Right, but that's not really an issue that I asked the parties to brief at all. I just wanted to ask the question anyway.

MR. NARAYAN: I guess again we are concerned about delay here and that's why we're asking for some sort of a timeframe as to how this is going to proceed.

THE COURT: All right. I'm going to take about a five or ten minute recess.

(Recess.)

REV_00264680

participated in the activities of the Task Force or the preparation of the Report, including without limitation working groups, sub-committees, team, or other sub-groups within any federal agency or entity.

REQUESTS FOR PRODUCTION

1. All documents identifying or referring to any staff, personnel, contractors, consultants or employees of the Task Force.

2. All documents establishing or referring to any Sub-Group.

3. All documents identifying or referring to any staff, personnel, contractors, consultants or employees of any Sub-Group.

4. All documents identifying or referring to any other persons participating in the preparation of the Report or in the activities of the Task Force or any Sub-Group.

5. All documents concerning any communication relating to the activities of the Task Force, the activities of any Sub-Groups, or the preparation of the Report, between any person (excluding full-time federal employees) and

(a) the Task Force;

(b) any member of the Task Force;

(c) any staff or personnel of the Task Force;

(d) any Sub-Groups.

(e) any members of any Sub-Groups

(f) any staff or personnel of any Sub-Groups.

6. All documents concerning any communication relating to the activities of the Task Force, the activities of Sub-Groups, or the preparation of the Report between any person (excluding full-time federal employees) and

THE COURT: The government's arguments are not new to the court, there has been nothing new to the court to persuade the court that its ruling in August is erroneous, therefore the court will deny the motion for reconsideration and deny the request for a protective order.

And again I reiterate all I'm requiring the government to do is to produce the non privileged documents and for those documents that the government believes the privilege attaches to assert the privilege and provide an appropriate privilege log just like everyone else has to do.

Under the circumstances I think that it would be appropriate for the court to direct the government to produce the non privileged information again by no later than two weeks from today, that's the 31st, and also to provide an appropriate privilege log by that date.

The government has indicated that it would like a period of time in which to seek a stay of the court's ruling and I think that given an indication of how the government plans to proceed then I think that it is appropriate for the government to file a written motion for a stay and a shorter period of time. Since this is probably not just a new consideration of the government I don't think that requiring the government to file its motion for stay by say noon on Monday the 21st is unreasonable. And then I'll give the plaintiffs essentially three days, the 24th noon, that's eastern time, to file a response and any reply by the government should be filed by the 25th of October by noon. I'll schedule a hearing on the government's request for a stay on the 29th of October. Even though I'll be in trial I'll--I'll deal with that. The 29th of October at 10:00 for a hearing on the government's motion for a stay.

REV_00264681

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, Mr. Klayman.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. KLAYMAN: I may be out of town that day. Is it possible to do it on the 30th or the 31st?

THE COURT: Well I've given the government until the 31st to comply with my order. I could do it the 30th I assume. You can participate by phone if you want.

MR. KLAYMAN: I may actually be in transit. If it is possible, if not I'll live with it.

THE COURT: No, no. I mean I'm going to be in trial so let me just see what else I have.

REV_00264682

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor.

THE COURT: Just a second. Is that a bad day for you?

MR. COFFIN: No, I'm concerned about the two days.

THE COURT: How much time do you need?

MR. COFFIN: Well it's the two days before the hearing and compliance.

THE COURT: I mean this is something that the government has been considering, isn't it?

MR. COFFIN: The briefing is not a problem, it's the two days at the tail end. If you were to deny our motion to stay we would have two days to go to the Court of Appeals and get an emergency stay if necessary.

THE COURT: I wouldn't make anyone speed up to the Court of Appeals. Believe me if I deny it I'll do something that is going to accommodate not only the attorneys before me but also my colleagues in the circuit.

MR. COFFIN: Well given the schedule does it make sense then to set a 31st date for compliance with the order, that's my question, since either way--

REV_00264683

THE COURT: Well I can shorten the period of time. I want to give you more time to file a motion for a stay. I mean you can file it tomorrow, can't you? Do you have a copy with you today?

MR. COFFIN: No, I don't. I mean in part it depends on what you do so we don't have written papers ready right now.

THE COURT: All right.

I mean what is fair? No one is going to have to run up to the Court of Appeals, I'm not going to do it to you, I'm not going to do it to my colleagues in the circuit. What were you suggesting? You said the 31st might--what are you suggesting, maybe another day or two, say the 5th for production of documents.

MR. COFFIN: Well that would give us enough time to--it would still be an emergency but we'd have more time to go to the Court of Appeals if necessary.

THE COURT: All right. That's fine. I can give the government until the 5th of November.

MR. COFFIN: Let me explain. Given our position in this litigation we have not done a document review of the Office of Vice President.

REV_00264684

THE COURT: Well how do you know that privilege attaches then?

MR. COFFIN: Well we've done an initial review.

THE COURT: Wait a minute, wait a minute. That's a startling revelation, Mr. Coffin. You've not done--

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor--

THE COURT: No, counsel.

MR. COFFIN: I'm trying to finish my sentence.

THE COURT: Will you let me finish my sentence, sir?

MR. COFFIN: I well.

THE COURT: You're a gifted lawyer as are the other lawyers but please don't interrupt me.

That is a startling revelation, that the government has not made a document review.

MR. COFFIN: Oh, no, no. I overstated my case.

THE COURT: Overstated. You're telling me that you haven't looked, how do you know--

MR. COFFIN: We haven't completed a document review of the Office of the Vice President. We certainly have done enough to satisfy ourselves that the reasons for our argument attached.

REV_00264685

THE COURT: The government is making these arguments in good faith?

MR. COFFIN: Oh, absolutely, Your Honor.

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, the language of my opponent speaks for itself.

THE COURT: Wait a minute, one at a time.

MR. KLAYMAN: It's Mr. Klayman, I mean he made a plain statement, obviously he's backing off because it is bad press, but he made the statement that he made.

THE COURT: I'm not going to lose control. Go ahead Mr. Coffin. Mr. Klayman, you'll get your chance.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, we haven't completed the document review. We are aware that there are a number--

THE COURT: That's completely different from what you said originally.

MR. COFFIN: You're right, you're right, I'm sorry, I misspoke.

THE COURT: But you--

MR. COFFIN: I misspoke, Your Honor.

THE COURT: How could you misspeak about something as important as that?

REV_00264686

MR. COFFIN: By opening my mouth, it happens, Your Honor.

THE COURT: But counsel you're an officer of the court and I listen very carefully.

MR. COFFIN: We have not completed our document review and I'm concerned that two weeks may not be enough time, but having said that, Your Honor, the fact is we are going to--

THE COURT: I think at the very least the government had an obligation to at least complete the document review. Certainly you've had more than enough time. This case has been pending.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, may I speak, please?

Our point, Your Honor, has been that compliance with the order of the court imposes a burden on the Office of the Vice President. That is a real burden. If we had completed and done everything that Your Honor has asked us to do today that burden would be gone, but it would have been realized. So, the necessary part of our argument dealing with burden is that we're not going to ask our clients to complete that review. I mean that's the logical following from our argument. I know that you've rejected it, Your Honor, but that is what we have been arguing.

REV_00264687

THE COURT: Why is the court learning for the first time that the government has even completed a document review?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, we have argued to you that the burden of doing a document production is an unconstitutional burden.

THE COURT: That's completely different. Document production as opposed to document review, to review the documents to see whether or not privilege attaches or not. I'm differentiating there--

MR. COFFIN: I understand.

THE COURT: --between document review and document production.

MR. COFFIN: I understand.

THE COURT: You haven't done a document review.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, that perhaps is where I misspoke but we have done--

THE COURT: You say perhaps?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, please.

THE COURT: He's trying to find out whether you've completed--

REV_00264688

MR. COFFIN: We have done a review.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. COFFIN: We have done a review, we haven't completed it, we haven't done everything necessary for a production. That's my point and I apologize for misspeaking, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You said it in your papers though. I understand your arguing your papers, document production would be unnecessary. You never said that even completing a review would be onerous, you never said that.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, that's part of the production. But we have--

THE COURT: Don't parties have to review documents before they can determine whether or not privilege even attaches?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, we have done that, we are satisfied with that.

THE COURT: All right. Now, what's onerous now, you only have two weeks to comply?

MR. COFFIN: No, Your Honor. I mean if after you issue a ruling on the stay, you're willing to revisit the date to give us time for a Court of Appeals ruling.

THE COURT: I'm going to be fair to the government. I'm going to be fair to anyone who appears before me. I'm not going to require anyone to get on the elevator and run up to the fifth floor. I'm not going to do that.

REV_00264689

MR. COFFIN: Okay, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I'll treat you fairly just like I would with anyone else.

Any response to counsel's statements? Mr. Klayman.

MR. KLAYMAN: It's just that the statement of Mr. Coffin speaks for itself, it's a demonstration of the bad faith in this case.

THE COURT: All right. I gave the government until Monday to file its motion for a stay and that's by noon, and the plaintiffs until the 24th I believe I said. There is some flexibility, Mr. Coffin, not a lot but there is some flexibility. You've suggested the 5th of November for the date to comply with the court's order, is that correct, and a hearing in the preceding week to address the issue of a stay. Mr. Klayman, you said that you would be out of town the 30th. The 29th is fine or actually we can do it the 31st. If you want to do it the 31st that's fine with me.

REV_00264690

(a) the Department of Energy, or any employee or agent of the Department of Energy;

(b) the Department of Commerce, or any employee or agent of the Department of Commerce;

(c) the Department of Agriculture, or any employee or agent of the Department of Agriculture;

(d) the Department of Interior, or any employee or agent of the Department of Interior;

(e) the Department of Treasury, or any employee or agent of the Department of Treasury;

(f) the Department of Transportation, or any employee or agent of the Department of Transportation;

(g) the Environmental Protection Agency, or any employee or agent of the Environmental Protection Agency.

7. All documents concerning activities of the Task Force after September 30, 2001.

8. All documents concerning matters discussed in the January 3, 2002 letter from David Addington, counsel to the Vice President, to Henry Waxman, including but not limited to the October 10, 2001 meeting between a Task Force staff member and representatives of Enron Corporation.

Respectfully submitted,

Patrick Gallagher (CA Bar No.146105)
Alex Levinson (CA Bar No.135307)
Sanjay Narayan (CA Bar No. 183227)
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 977-5696
Email: pat.gallagher@sierraclub.org

David Bookbinder (DC Bar No. 455525)

MR. KLAYMAN: That's fine, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right at--let me make sure that I don't have any motions hearings.

MR. KLAYMAN: I believe I have something at 10:00 a.m. so if we could do it in the afternoon.

THE COURT: I don't really have any problems with that, we'll do it at 1:00 in this courtroom, it will be a hearing on the government's motion for a stay.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I won't be here.

THE COURT: Well I'll accommodate you too now.

MR. COFFIN: I've got another major hearing on the 31st.

THE COURT: I mean you're the government's attorney, you've been arguing these. If you want the hearing on the 30th I'll give you a hearing on the 30th.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I'm sorry. I'm arguing a case in front of Judge Bates that is of major significance.

THE COURT: It's more important than this case?

MR. COFFIN: No, sir. That's on the 31st and to prepare for that I can't see doing two hearings in two days. I would prefer actually--

REV_00264691

THE COURT: All right. I was more than willing to accommodate you.

MR. COFFIN: I appreciate that.

THE COURT: So the government will be well represented on the 31st and that will be at 1:00.

Anything further, counsel? I'll issue an appropriate written order that essentially just memorializes my ruling on the denial of the request for a stay.

MR. KLAYMAN: No, Your Honor, thank you. Larry Klayman.

THE COURT: And the denial of a request for a protective order. I may not get that order issued today.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I need a seven day extension on the motion to compel, our motion to compel response is due on Monday and we would ask for a seven day extension.

THE COURT: Any problems with that anyone?

MR. KLAYMAN: I didn't hear it, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Mr. Coffin asked for a seven day extension on his motion to compel and there are no objections by your co-counsel. I assume you have no objections having made requests for extension of time yourself.

REV_00264692

MR. COFFIN: No.

THE COURT: All right.

Mr. Coffin, I'd just ask that you submit to my chambers an appropriate order. You can e-mail it to chambers.

Anything further?

MR. NARAYAN: No, Your Honor, thank you.

THE COURT: Thank you very much. No one has to stand, thank you.

(Proceedings concluded at 11:20 a.m.)

REV_00264693

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Plaintiff, v. NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP, Defendant.	Civ. Action. 01-1530 (EGS)
SIERRA CLUB, Plaintiff, v. VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD CHENEY, et al. Defendants,	Civ. Action 02-631 (EGS)

ORDER

Pursuant to the motions hearing held in this matter on October 17, 2002, and for the reasons given in open Court and outlined in this Court's July 11, 2002 Memorandum Opinion, it is by the Court hereby

ORDERED that defendants' motion for reconsideration of the Court's August 2, 2002 order is hereby DENIED; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' motion for a protective order is hereby DENIED; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that the defendants who have not already done so shall produce non-privileged documents and a privilege log in compliance with this Court's August 2, 2002 Order by no later than November 5, 2002; and it is

313

FURTHER ORDERED that the defendants shall file any motion requesting a stay of proceedings pending appeal by no later than October 21, 2002 at 12:00 p.m.; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs shall respond in writing to the defendants' motion to stay by no later than October 24, 2002 at 12:00 p.m.; and it is

FURTHER ORDERED that defendants shall submit a reply to plaintiffs' response by no later than October 25, 2002 at 12:00 p.m.; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that a hearing will be held on defendants' motion requesting a stay pending appeal on October 31, 2002 at 1:00 p.m. in Courtroom One.

Signed: EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
October 17, 2002

REV_00264695

Notice to:

Larry Klayman, Esq.
JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
501 School Street, S.W.
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024
Counsel for plaintiff Judicial Watch

Patrick Gallagher, Esq.
Alex Levinson, Esq.
Sierra Club
85 Second Street
San Francisco, CA 94104
Counsel for plaintiff Sierra Club

Daniel Edward Bensing, Esq.
David O. Buchholz, Esq.
Anne L. Weismann, Esq.
Thomas Millet, Esq.
Jennifer Paisner, Esq.
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, DC 20044
Counsel for federal defendants

Howard M. Crystal, Esq.
MEYER & GLITZENSTEIN
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Suite 700
Washington, DC 20009
Counsel for amicus NRDC

Robert S. Litt, Esq.
ARNOLD & PORTER
555 12th St NW
Washington, DC 20004-1206
Counsel for defendant Thomas Kuhn

Paul Christian Rauser, Esq.
WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY
725 12th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20005
Counsel for defendant Haley Barbour

Richard D. Horn, Esq.
BRACEWELL & PATTERSON LLP
2000 K St NW
Suite 500
Washington, DC 20006-1872
Counsel for defendant Mark Racicot

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY DEVELOPMENT GROUP,

Defendant.

Case No. 01-CV-1530

Washington, D.C.
October 31, 2002
1:20 p.m.

TRANSCRIPT OF MOTIONS HEARING
BEFORE THE HONORABLE EMMET G. SULLIVAN
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

APPEARANCES:

For Plaintiff Judicial Watch: LARRY KLAYMAN, ESQ.

For Plaintiff Sierra Club: DAVID BOOKBINDER, ESQ.
ROGER ADELMAN, ESQ.
* SANJAY NARAYAN, ESQ.
* ALEX LEVINSON, ESQ.

For the Defendant: SHANNEN W. COFFIN, ESQ.
CRAIG BLACKWELL, ESQ.
THOMAS MILLET, ESQ.

* Appearing by telephone.

Court Reporter: BRYAN A. WAYNE, RPR
Official Court Reporter
U.S. Courthouse, Room 4808-B
Washington, D.C. 20001
202-216-0313

Proceedings reported by machine shorthand, transcript produced by computer-aided transcription.

Bryan A. Wayne, RPR
Official Court Reporter

COPY316

PROCEEDINGS

THE DEPUTY CLERK: Civil Action 01-1530, Judicial Watch versus National Energy Policy Development Group. Will counsel please stand and identify yourselves.

MR. KLAYMAN: Larry Klayman for Judicial Watch.

THE COURT: Mr. Klayman.

MR. BOOKBINDER: David Bookbinder for Sierra Club.

MR. ADELMAN: Roger Adelman, local counsel for the Sierra Club.

MR. COFFIN: Shannen Coffin for the United States with Craig Blackwell and Tom Millet.

THE COURT: Good afternoon, Counsel. I just need to get a clarification first from the government. On the one hand, the government has filed a motion for a stay of the Court's orders pending appeal, and alternatively, if I understand your submissions correctly, the government has also requested additional time within which to complete its document search in preparation of a privilege log. I always thought it was the government's intent to not comply with the Court's orders, so I need some clarification.

MR. COFFIN: They're alternative relief. If you were to give us the stay, Your Honor, I don't think we need to address the due date because the issue would be joined in the Court of Appeals. If you don't give us the stay, we would then go to the Court of Appeals to seek a stay. Having said that, if we weren't to get a stay from this court, we would simply want some more time from the November 5 deadline in the absence of a stay to complete the review.

THE COURT: That's where I'm confused, because I never thought it was the government's intent to comply with the Court's order. I guess I don't understand your request for additional time within which to complete your review of documents and then to prepare and file your privilege log if you don't intend to comply with the Court's order. I just don't understand that.

MR. COFFIN: I don't think that's -- let me say this. There's always the option to go into contempt. We haven't made a decision that we're going to go into contempt, so we'd like to be able to try to comply with the order if we don't have a stay from this court or --

THE COURT: All right. I just wanted a clarification. So if I deny the request for a stay, the government is asking for additional time to complete its review of documents in preparation of its privilege log ostensibly in an effort to comply with the Court's order, is that correct?

MR. COFFIN: In absence of the stay, yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: So in the absence of a stay, the government intends to comply with our orders then, is that correct?

MR. COFFIN: If we don't get a Court of Appeals stay,

I don't know what choice we have except for contempt.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. COFFIN: I suppose that's an option, but we certainly haven't made a decision that we're not going to comply with your orders, Your Honor.

THE COURT: But you haven't complied with the orders, though, up to this point.

MR. COFFIN: Well, Your Honor, we've had a protective order motion in, and our reading of the civil rules of procedure is that that stays the obligation to respond to discovery. So it's simply we haven't complied yet because of the protective order motion. Now that you have ruled, we would seek appeal of that ruling, but if we're unsuccessful --

THE COURT: I haven't ordered the government to release any privileged documents at all. I haven't done that at all. All I said was comply with the order; if there are privileged documents, tell me what the documents are without prejudicing yourself.

You can tell me what the documents are in an appropriate privilege log, and I'll determine whether privilege is properly asserted or not. It's not as if I've ordered the government to turn over all the documents that the government contends are privileged. Indeed, the government told me last year it hadn't even completed its review of all the documents. That process is now in place though, is that correct, review of the

Sierra Club
408 C Street, NE
Washington, DC 20002
(202) 548-4598
Email: david.bookbinder@sierraclub.org

Roger Adelman (DC Bar No. 056358)
Law Offices of Roger Adelman
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 822-0600
Email: Adelmarm@erols.com

Attorneys for Plaintiff

Larry Klayman (DC Bar No. 334581)
Paul J. Orfanedes
Judicial Watch, Inc.
501 School Street, SW
Suite 725
Washington, DC 20024

Attorneys for plaintiff Judicial Watch, Inc.

documents?

MR. COFFIN: Yes, sir, Your Honor. Can I step back to what happened at the last hearing? Because I just want to say that it was not clear from what I said, and I want to make clear that we certainly did enough to satisfy ourselves of the merits of our constitutional arguments. The boxes that we've had set aside have been set aside for quite some time.

I do apologize to the Court for the confusion. But we had done enough to satisfy ourselves of the merits of that argument, but we certainly hadn't done the privilege log and the Bates numbers and all the stuff that goes with a document production.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. COFFIN: But let me --

THE COURT: If I'm inclined to grant the government additional time to complete its review of the documents, how much time do you need?

MR. COFFIN: Well, Mr. Bookbinder and I have been speaking about that. I haven't spoken to Mr. Klayman this morning.

THE COURT: I'll hear from both of those gentlemen. My reading of their responses -- I understand from their responses to my order was that Sierra Club has no objection to a reasonable period of time. Judicial Watch does have an objection.

REV_00264701

MR. COFFIN: That's right. And what I've spoken to Sierra Club about, and at least we've come to an agreement, is that I believe three weeks from tomorrow would be the date?

MR. BOOKBINDER: The 23rd. I don't know where that fits.

THE COURT: What is today, the 31st?

MR. COFFIN: Today is the 31st, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Three weeks from tomorrow to complete your review and to do what?

MR. BOOKBINDER: Excuse me, Your Honor. The 22nd is a Friday. My apologies.

MR. COFFIN: Sorry. The 22nd. That makes sense.

THE COURT: The 22nd.

MR. COFFIN: This is what we would foresee going on here. We would be moving towards complying with your order, but we would also be seeing, if you were to deny the stay, we would be seeking to get a stay in the Court of Appeals. And that's sort of the --

THE COURT: All right, I understand. I think I understand what you're saying. All right. So if I deny your request for a stay, then you will proceed -- you're making representations you'll proceed with your documents search in an effort to comply with the Court's order, nevertheless availing yourself of your right to seek your stay in the Court of Appeals.

MR. COFFIN: That's correct.

THE COURT: And this is all separate and apart from the motion filed by the government for interlocutory appeal, which putting that aside for the time being, it's probably going to be moot. Let's assume I deny the request for a stay, which I probably will do, but I'll also -- and I want to hear from other counsel as well -- I'll probably grant your request for additional time. I'll probably do that based on your representations that you're reviewing in an effort to prepare a privilege log.

And by the same token, you're seeking a stay in the Court of Appeals, so you'll have some time. Even if I were to deny the motion for interlocutory appeal next week, you certainly have time between now and the compliance date to seek whatever you want to seek from the circuit. And our courts of appeal have said on many, many occasions, the prospect of proceeding with contempt in cases like this should be avoided, and I certainly have no intent to proceed along those lines.

So that's probably going to be a moot issue, interlocutory appeal probably, assuming I deny the request for a stay, which I will probably do. I'll give you the time to comply with my order, and then you're free to seek whatever relief you want from the circuit then, correct?

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, I'm hoping I have a chance to convince you to grant our stay, but if you were to deny the stay --

THE COURT: Well, go ahead. I'll give you a few minutes. I've read your pleadings; I'm obviously very familiar with your pleadings, but if there's some principal point or points you wish to make in an effort to persuade me to grant your request for a stay, be my guest.

MR. COFFIN: Okay. Well, let's talk for a minute about the seriousness of the issue. I think that the legal issues involved in this case, I recognize that Your Honor has disagreed with us on these, but I don't think you've ever said that they're frivolous legal issues. As a matter of fact, at the last hearing you called these important legal issues.

THE COURT: It's an important case.

MR. COFFIN: I agree, and I think as a result, the issues that we present and we intend to appeal are certainly important and serious issues. So I think that we do meet the first part of the stay standard, so the question then becomes about harm.

THE COURT: Now, that's an issue I want you to focus on, irreparable harm. It's not as if I've abused my authority and said to the government, turn over those documents, I don't care if they're privileged or not, turn them over right now and I'm not going to stay my order. You could make a very compelling argument for irreparable harm under those circumstances.

All I've said, though, consistent with precedent of law standing is to produce the nonprivileged documents, and indeed if there are privileged documents, prepare and file your privilege log. Indeed, I've said prepare and file it under seal for my eyes only or for the eyes only for a magistrate judge. But I wouldn't delegate; I would do it myself so that an independent determination can be made as to whether or not privilege can be properly invoked.

So I've not told the government to turn over privileged documents without any protection whatsoever, which would indeed be irreparable harm. The harm as I understand your argument to be, though, is the intrusion by the Court of requiring the government to even assert its privilege and to prepare a privilege log. That's an intrusion that I believe the government is of the opinion is unconstitutional.

MR. COFFIN: In the absence of a showing of compelling need.

THE COURT: And that's the irreparable harm then.

MR. COFFIN: Well, the irreparable harm would be if you accept our argument, which I know you haven't, but if you accept our argument that there is a constitutional harm in the absence of a showing of need to require us to submit to discovery under these circumstances, if we go up on appeal and don't have a stay, we've lost. I mean, we've lost our argument. We don't have an argument. You've effectively mooted our argument because we'll have to comply with your order.

THE COURT: So then you're conceding then that you have no direct right to appeal then.

MR. COFFIN: Oh, no.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. We have some static coming from the telephone. Let's just see what's going on. Hello? Someone dialed in. Hello, Counsel.

MR. NARAYAN: Yes, I hear you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Let's just get your names. How are you today?

MR. NARAYAN: Just fine, thank you. This is Sanjay Narayan and Alex Levinson with the Sierra Club.

THE COURT: All right. Good afternoon, Counsel.

MR. COFFIN: Your Honor, your question was whether I was conceding that we didn't have a right to appeal. No, not at all, but if we appeal in the absence of a stay, then we're going to have to comply with your order because it's a discovery order.

THE COURT: If I don't grant you a stay and I extend the time for compliance of my order to November 22 or 23, you certainly have time within which to request a stay from the circuit down here.

MR. COFFIN: Well, yes, we do.

THE COURT: Then you haven't lost your argument then, have you?

MR. COFFIN: In that sense no, but why would this court require the Court of Appeals to make that determination when it's teed up for you to make? I'm not quite sure -- I mean, it's the same argument we'd be making to the Court of Appeals.

THE COURT: Exactly, and often times --

MR. COFFIN: If the Court of Appeals would grant the stay, then that means that this court should grant the stay. And the only way we --

THE COURT: I guess the point I'm making, Counsel, I'm not foreclosing the Court of Appeals from granting you whatever relief the Court of Appeals wants to grant you; I'm just saying our rules require that you make the request for a stay in this court in the first instance, and there's times when district judges for reasons, various reasons, maybe a district court's view as a matter of law that the basis for a stay has not been persuasive, deny the request for a stay, which doesn't preclude a litigant from seeking relief in the circuit court.

And you certainly aren't laboring under any significant time constraints, because my order for compliance would be the 23rd or 22nd or whatever date is agreeable to the parties. You could in your leisure seek a stay from the circuit. So you're not without your remedy, don't you agree?

REV_00264707

MR. COFFIN: I have to disagree in the sense that the issue -- we would certainly have time to go to the Court of Appeals, but I don't think that's the issue. The issue that is before this court is whether denying a stay would effectively harm us.

THE COURT: Nothing's going to happen to you and your clients. This is not a scenario -- I mean, I could envision a scenario that you're complaining of that doesn't exist, and that would be that the due date is tomorrow and the judge says I'm not extending this date and the government has to comply by tomorrow and I'm denying your request for a stay. Then you're off to the circuit court, right?

MR. COFFIN: Yes.

THE COURT: All right. That's not the scenario that I'm talking about. I may be well inclined -- in fact, I am inclined to grant you a stay based on your good faith representations that you want to continue with your search and that you want to prepare a privilege log. That's fine.

MR. COFFIN: You mean an extension, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Yes, an extension, I'm sorry. Thank you for correcting me. I'm inclined to grant your request for extension of time and then deny the request for a stay because I don't believe the standards for a stay are persuasive as a matter of fact or law, and that doesn't foreclose you from seeking your remedy in the circuit court unless I disagree with you.

And then you say, Judge, then we're without a remedy then because then we have to comply with the order. You don't immediately have to turn over anything. You have three weeks within which to seek expedited consideration -- well, you're a lawyer. I shouldn't tell you what those remedies are; you know what those remedies are.

MR. COFFIN: But Your Honor, the question here is not whether -- it's not whether we could get a stay from the Court of Appeals. That would mean you would never have to grant a stay in any case.

THE COURT: Oh, no. We're not arbitrary, no. I mean I look at the -- I mean, I measure each request for a stay against precedent, Holiday Tours test is indeed the fountainhead case for determining whether or not a basis exists for a stay; similar, if not identical to the standards for extraordinary legal relief in the forms of TROs and preliminary injunctions, and there are times when I will deny a stay and the Court of Appeals will grant a stay.

That's the way the process works. It may well be that I could deny a stay in this case and the Court of Appeals will grant it, but nothing onerous is going to happen to your client between now and the Court of Appeals --

MR. COFFIN: Let's just assume that the 22nd was the deadline here. I find it hard to believe that the Court of Appeals would issue us final relief so that a stay would have to be granted by the Court of Appeals or by this court prior to the 22nd. So the question is really whether -- the question before this court in the legal analysis is whether we need a stay to secure effective appeal, and we do, because there's no way before the 22nd that we're going to get our relief so that we'd have to by the 22nd comply with the order.

THE COURT: It's conceivable that the Court of Appeals may differ from this court's view about the need for a stay. If the Court of Appeals is of the opinion that a stay is appropriate, then certainly the Court of Appeals will -- well, I can't speak for the Court of Appeals. It's very conceivable that the Court of Appeals would grant a stay before the compliance date.

MR. COFFIN: We believe that it will, because we think that we meet the standard for a stay here. With all due respect, I think there's -- I think that there's a sense of abdication about that part of the standard here, because this court has to determine whether or not there's injury to the government. There would be an injury to our argument in the absence of a stay if we had to comply with the order of this court pending an appeal.

THE COURT: All right. And the injury is the search process and the preparation of the log or turning over the documents?

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on August 2, 2002 a true and correct copy of the foregoing PLAINTIFF'S FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS was served via hand-delivery, on the following:

Roger Adelman (DC Bar No. 056358)
Law Offices of Roger Adelman
1100 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 730
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 822-0600

Daniel Edward Bensing
U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Division
Federal Programs Branch
901 E Street, N.W.
Room 818
Washington, D.C. 20530

Thomas Millet
Jennifer Paisner
U.S. Department of Justice
901 E Street, N.W.
Room 952
Washington, D.C. 20530

Richard D. Horn
Bracewell & Patterson LLP
2000 K Street, N.W.
Suite 500
Washington, D.C. 20006-1872

Robert S. Litt
Arnold & Porter
555 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004-1206

Howard M. Crystal
Meyer & Glitzenstein
1601 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Suite 700
Washington, D.C. 20009

Paul Christian Rauser
Williams & Connelly
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

Meseidy Rodriguez

REV_00264630

MR. COFFIN: It's the entire process. It's both.

THE COURT: So that's the government's position, it's being injured then?

MR. COFFIN: We believe we are, but we're doing so out of good faith in order to comply.

THE COURT: And I appreciate that. I appreciate that. I think that's how the three branches of government should coexist. You disagree with the order you're complying with, and I appreciate that. And I think it's appropriate that the order is being complied with, and I'm most inclined to grant you additional time within which to continue to comply with the order.

I understand what you're saying. I disagree with you as to whether or not as a matter of fact and law there is injury, a constitutional injury or an injury of the magnitude that you speak of. I would agree with you completely if I were to abuse my authority and say I don't care if these documents are privileged, turn them over, and if you don't, let the chips fall where they may. But I would never do that. I would never knowingly abuse my authority.

MR. COFFIN: But that's a matter of degree, Your Honor. It's not a matter of us showing irreparable harm. I mean --

THE COURT: No, I understand your argument.

MR. COFFIN: Okay. Well, there's an important point

REV_00264711

I wanted to make about --

THE COURT: I thought that was the most important point.

MR. COFFIN: Well, there's harm to the plaintiffs as well.

THE COURT: All right. And the public interest. Don't forget that, now.

MR. COFFIN: The important point is that their argument is delay, that there's been a lot of delay and there's going to be more delay if you give a stay. Let me suggest, however, and this may require a little bit of explication, that there's not really a delay if in fact an appeal goes forward and we lose the appeal and then we have to comply with this court's order. Because if we do get to the point where we assert privilege in a privilege log, that's going to require a showing of need.

I think the only difference that this court has had with the U.S.'s position has been a matter of timing, and I understand you believe that to be a very serious difference. But there's no question that if we assert privilege, the presumption of the privilege arises and the plaintiffs will then have to show need, which means they have to show in part under the Dellen standard and under the Emory Seal case standard that the lack of availability of these documents from other sources, which means that the other discovery in this case has to go forward and will be going forward.

So I don't really think that there's going to be -- those resources have to be exhausted by plaintiffs before you can even get to the privilege issue. So I really don't think that they're really -- I mean, they can talk about theoretical delay here, but in practical terms, I don't think there's going to be much of a delay. So Your Honor, that's our position.

THE COURT: Let me hear from you with respect to the motion that's not before the Court, and that's the motion for the request for certification for interlocutory appeal purposes. Your motion's been filed. My recollection is responses have not been filed. I didn't put in place a briefing schedule. I should put that in place.

MR. COFFIN: I think their responses are due on Monday under the current schedule, but my colleague is going to want some more time. We've talked about it.

THE COURT: All right. Then I'll hear from plaintiffs in that regard, and I'll give you a chance to be heard again. Mr. Klayman?

MR. KLAYMAN: Your Honor, I think it's important because I'm going to ask Your Honor to set some times here, if Your Honor will grant my request, is to understand the context of this case. We sometimes lose sight of that. As lawyers before this court, we try to remain civil. We certainly have tried. My co-counsel and Your Honor's handled this in a very admirable and gentlemanly way.

REV_00264713

THE COURT: Everyone's been a gentleman before the Court. Everyone's been a gentleman and a lady before the Court. I invite zealous advocacy, so everyone's been most civil.

MR. KLAYMAN: Unfortunately, we have to look at the facts of what's gone on at this point in time. We're now well over a year into the case. The government has known all along, and when I say the government, this administration has known all along what it was going to do. They're big boys; we've seen it in many other cases.

They've known that they were going to try to take this appeal, if Your Honor grants it, in an interlocutory matter by certification, or they'll try a writ of mandamus. They'll take this issue to the appellate court, it will sit there for six to eight months at a minimum, it will come back, nothing will happen in the interim. If indeed we win, and we're confident we will win, then we'll just be starting out in the first round of discovery, which is simply finding out what the constitutionality was of this task force.

Once we complete that and Your Honor makes a ruling, they'll try to delay as long as possible. They'll try to take that up on appeal. When Your Honor rules that we should proceed beyond that point, if Your Honor does rule that, we'll be well beyond this administration, a tried and tested technique which is used in many different cases. We've seen it in all of our different cases. That's why it's important to understand where we are.

Number one, Your Honor, they're already in a contempt situation. Your Honor issued orders of August 3 which required them to produce documents or object, and they defied that. We're in a contempt situation because it's now quite clear that they didn't even review documents. In fact, we're in a contempt/bad faith situation because they didn't even start their review, it's apparent from their affidavits and their pleadings, until after the last hearing. They have not been in good faith with this court.

And last but not least, Your Honor, and I don't say this lightly, we have filed a supplementary motion for contempt for an order to show cause. I have been personally threatened through intermediaries. I'm prepared to provide the names of the people who provided that information; one a high-level informant who works with a government enforcement agency; another, someone well respected in town; statements made to the columnist, Robert Novak: What are we going to do about this Larry Klayman?

THE COURT: That's a collateral matter. I really don't want to get sidetracked on a collateral matter, but you know --

MR. KLAYMAN: Well, Your Honor --

THE COURT: Let me say one thing. It's important to you. You've made serious allegations, they're important to you, they're serious to you, and because of the severity of the allegations, I should probably refer those matters to the U.S. Attorney's Office, Roscoe Howard's office, and let him sort it out.

MR. KLAYMAN: Well, I think you should do both, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I have enough on my plate.

MR. KLAYMAN: The problem is, that is the Justice Department. You can pretty much figure out what the results are going to be.

THE COURT: He's an outstanding prosecutor, though.

MR. KLAYMAN: I would ask that you do both, and I would ask -- and what those allegations are, as you may remember, is not just what are we going to do about Larry Klayman, and that was a Justice Department official to Robert Novak --

THE COURT: You're in fear of your safety, are you?

MR. KLAYMAN: I could be. I could be.

THE COURT: I'd just as soon refer that whole matter, Mr. Klayman, to the attention of the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia for whatever consideration his office wishes to give it. And that would not be the first time that I've referred serious matters that litigants before me take very seriously. And because they take them very seriously, so do I.

But I don't have the resources of the prosecutor's office. I don't have investigators. I have two overworked law clerks, brilliant as they are. I just don't have the resources to get involved in investigating something of that magnitude as Mr. Howard does. I'd keep it here for the record, but I'd want to give them first opportunity to --

MR. KLAYMAN: Well, we recommended that Your Honor do both, so we'd welcome a referral, recognizing that that is the Justice Department, and 99.9 percent of the time -- and I'm a former Justice Department prosecutor, proud to have been one at a different time --

THE COURT: Is that right?

MR. KLAYMAN: I am. I was with the Antitrust Division. I did civil and criminal. But the reality is, is that you know what happens when the Justice Department investigates itself. It's what happens when any entity investigates itself.

THE COURT: Well, if I thought that it would be a useless effort, I wouldn't do it. I have the highest regard for Mr. Howard.

MR. KLAYMAN: If you supervise it, Your Honor, I'll take your word for it.

THE COURT: Well, see again, there's a fine line between my job and the executive branch's job, and I would never attempt to supervise or oversee a criminal prosecution. I'd be happy to write a letter, and I will do so today, referring -- and I'll attach copies of your motions -- referring those matters to the attention of the U.S. Attorney's Office for whatever consideration that office wishes to give. If I get a letter back from Mr. Howard in 90 days saying, Judge, we don't plan on taking any action, then I'll take whatever further action is necessary.

MR. KLAYMAN: We're prepared to give you hard evidence.

THE COURT: All right. Save it for Mr. Howard.

MR. KLAYMAN: Let's see how they react.

THE COURT: That's fine. I think it's only fair to do so because I just don't have the resources.

MR. KLAYMAN: We had gone through this before with Judge Lamberth where he in fact supervised the Independent Counsel and the Justice Department with regard to Filegate matters and Chinagate matters, and he was calling them in for briefing sessions. In fact, we have a status conference in a week or so which will relate to some of those matters.

THE COURT: Maybe I should refer this matter to Judge Lamberth then.

MR. KLAYMAN: That would be fine.

THE COURT: Do you think he would agree to --

REV_00264718

MR. KLAYMAN: I think you're both a lot alike. I respect and admire both of you.

THE COURT: Thank you very much. I have the highest regard for my colleague, but he's got enough on his plate as well.

MR. KLAYMAN: But it is a serious matter.

THE COURT: It is. You've made serious allegations. I don't take any allegations lightly, especially that an officer of the Court makes. I'm just being candid with you, Counsel. I just don't have the resources to delve into issues of that magnitude. Mr. Howard has an army of lawyers over there, and it's an outstanding U.S. Attorney's Office. And if I make the referral for whatever consideration, I'm sure they will not take lightly your allegations. I can't promise what the end result will be, but they're not going to take lightly a referral.

MR. KLAYMAN: As Your Honor says, let's see what happens, and we can take it up after, I would ask, 60 to 90 days.

THE COURT: Well, I'm not going to tell Mr. Howard -- I'm not going to tie his hands for 60 to 90 days. He's a professional. He'll treat it in a professional manner. Let me ask you something.

MR. KLAYMAN: The point I'm making --

THE COURT: Let me ask you something, though. I want to get back to request for a stay. I know you oppose their pleadings. I know you oppose it. I'm inclined to grant the request for additional time because the government is, in my view, in good faith complying with my order.

They're reviewing the documents, they're preparing a privilege log, and I think it would be an abuse of my authority to say to the government under those circumstances, no, I'm not going to give you a date. That would not be the correct decision to make. So I'm inclined to do that.

Do you agree or disagree, though, with Mr. Coffin when he says if I give the government additional time within which to ostensibly comply but nevertheless deny the request for a stay that indeed their appellate possibilities are foreclosed? Do you agree with that?

MR. KLAYMAN: No, I don't agree with it. They don't have any appellate possibilities. This is a discovery issue, and there's none to begin with, and all they're trying to do is run out the clock. And as I've said, Your Honor, we've seen it before. I can assure you if you were to order them to produce internal documentation as to when they made the decision to pursue this strategy, you would find out --

THE COURT: I'm not going to do that.

MR. KLAYMAN: -- you would find out that it was well over six months to a year ago that they knew exactly what they were going to do. They've succeeded. They've won. They've

REV_00264720

Victims Claims Process

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2172/2083
9702

Box 62
Folder 7

REV_00264757

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Victims Compensation - Armitage Letter

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 62
Folder 8

REV_00264758

Victims of Terrorism Compensation

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2182/2093
9802

Box 62
Folder 9

REV_00264759

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	New Bills Search
Prev Hit	Back	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Help
	Doc Contents

Bill 3 of 50

GPO's PDF version of this bill	References to this bill in the Congressional Record	Link to the Bill Summary & Status file.	Full Display - 12,341 bytes.[Help]

Embassy Employee Compensation Act (Introduced in the House)

HR 3375 IH

107th CONGRESS

1st Session

H. R. 3375

To provide compensation for the United States citizens who were victims of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998, on the same basis as compensation is provided to victims of the terrorist -related aircraft crashes on September 11, 2001.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

November 29, 2001

Mr. BLUNT (for himself, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. WOLF, Mr. OBEY, Mr. ISAKSON, Mr. WYNN, Mr. BOYD, Ms. MCKINNEY, Mr. FRANK, Ms. WATERS, Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA, Mr. WATT of North Carolina, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi, Mr. OWENS, and Mr. PAYNE) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To provide compensation for the United States citizens who were victims of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998, on the same basis as compensation is provided to victims of the terrorist -related aircraft crashes on September 11, 2001.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Embassy Employee Compensation Act'.

REV_00264761

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions apply:

(1) CLAIMANT- The term `claimant' means an individual filing a claim for compensation under section 5(a)(1).

(2) COLLATERAL SOURCE- The term `collateral source' means all collateral sources, including life insurance, pension funds, death benefit programs, and payments by Federal, State, or local governments related to the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998.

(3) ECONOMIC LOSS- The term `economic loss' means any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law.

(4) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL- The term `eligible individual' means an individual determined to be eligible for compensation under section 5(c).

(5) NONECONOMIC LOSSES- The term `noneconomic losses' means losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and all other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature.

(6) SPECIAL MASTER- The term `Special Master' means the Special Master appointed under section 404(a) of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 (title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107-42; 115 Stat. XX)).

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to provide compensation to any individual (or relatives of a deceased individual) who was physically injured or killed as a result of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Attorney General, acting through the Special Master, shall--

(1) administer the compensation program established under this Act;

(2) promulgate all procedural and substantive rules for the administration of this Act; and

(3) employ and supervise hearing officers and other administrative personnel to perform the duties of the Special Master under this Act.

REV_00264762

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS- There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the administrative and support costs for the Special Master in carrying out this Act.

SEC. 5. DETERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR COMPENSATION.

(a) FILING OF CLAIM-

(1) IN GENERAL- A claimant may file a claim for compensation under this Act with the Special Master. The claim shall be on the form developed under paragraph (2) and shall state the factual basis for eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation sought.

(2) CLAIM FORM-

(A) IN GENERAL- The Special Master shall develop a claim form that claimants shall use when submitting claims under paragraph (1). The Special Master shall ensure that such form can be filed electronically, if determined to be practicable.

(B) CONTENTS- The form developed under subparagraph (A) shall request--

(i) information from the claimant concerning the physical harm that the claimant suffered, or in the case of a claim filed on behalf of a decedent information confirming the decedent's death, as a result of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998;

(ii) information from the claimant concerning any possible economic and noneconomic losses that the claimant suffered as a result of such bombings; and

(iii) information regarding collateral sources of compensation the claimant has received or is entitled to receive as a result of such bombings.

(3) LIMITATION- No claim may be filed under paragraph (1) after the date that is 2 years after the date on which regulations are promulgated under section 7.

(b) REVIEW AND DETERMINATION-

(1) REVIEW- The Special Master shall review a claim submitted under subsection (a) and determine--

(A) whether the claimant is an eligible individual under subsection (c);

(B) with respect to a claimant determined to be an eligible individual--

(i) the extent of the harm to the claimant, including any economic and noneconomic losses; and

REV_00264763

(ii) the amount of compensation to which the claimant is entitled based on the harm to the claimant, the facts of the claim, and the individual circumstances of the claimant.

(2) NEGLIGENCE- With respect to a claimant, the Special Master shall not consider negligence or any other theory of liability.

(3) DETERMINATION- Not later than 120 days after that date on which a claim is filed under subsection (a), the Special Master shall complete a review, make a determination, and provide written notice to the claimant, with respect to the matters that were the subject of the claim under review. Such a determination shall be final and not subject to judicial review.

(4) RIGHTS OF CLAIMANT- A claimant in a review under paragraph (1) shall have--

(A) the right to be represented by an attorney;

(B) the right to present evidence, including the presentation of witnesses and documents; and

(C) any other due process rights determined appropriate by the Special Master.

(5) NO PUNITIVE DAMAGES- The Special Master may not include amounts for punitive damages in any compensation paid under a claim under this Act.

(6) COLLATERAL COMPENSATION- The Special Master shall reduce the amount of compensation determined under paragraph (1)(B)(ii) by the amount of the collateral source compensation the claimant has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998.

(c) ELIGIBILITY-

(1) IN GENERAL- A claimant shall be determined to be an eligible individual for purposes of this subsection if the Special Master determines that such claimant--

(A) is an individual described in paragraph (2); and

(B) meets the requirements of paragraph (3).

(2) INDIVIDUALS- A claimant is an individual described in this paragraph if the claimant is--

(A) a citizen of the United States who--

(i) was present at the United States Embassy in Nairobi, Kenya, or the United States Embassy in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, at the time, or in the immediate aftermath, of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998; and

REV_00264764

(ii) suffered physical harm or death as a result of such a bombing; or

(B) in the case of a decedent who is an individual described in subparagraph (A), the personal representative of the decedent who files a claim on behalf of the decedent.

(3) REQUIREMENTS-

(A) SINGLE CLAIM- Not more than one claim may be submitted under this Act by an individual or on behalf of a deceased individual.

(B) LIMITATION ON CIVIL ACTION-

(i) IN GENERAL- Upon the submission of a claim under this Act, the claimant waives the right to file a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any Federal or State court for damages sustained as a result of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998. The preceding sentence does not apply to a civil action to recover collateral source obligations.

(ii) PENDING ACTIONS- In the case of an individual who is a party to a civil action described in clause (i), such individual may not submit a claim under this Act unless such individual withdraws from such action by the date that is 90 days after the date on which regulations are promulgated under section 7.

SEC. 6. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Not later than 20 days after the date on which a determination is made by the Special Master regarding the amount of compensation due a claimant under this Act, the Special Master shall authorize payment to such claimant of the amount determined with respect to the claimant.

(b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY- This Act constitutes budget authority in advance of appropriations Acts and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to provide for the payment of amounts for compensation under this Act.

(c) ADDITIONAL FUNDING-

(1) IN GENERAL- The Attorney General is authorized to accept such amounts as may be contributed by individuals, business concerns, or other entities to carry out this Act, under such terms and conditions as the Attorney General may impose.

(2) USE OF SEPARATE ACCOUNT- In making payments under this section, amounts contained in any account containing funds provided under paragraph (1) shall be used prior to using appropriated amounts.

SEC. 7. REGULATIONS.

REV_00264765

Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General, in consultation with the Special Master, shall promulgate regulations to carry out this Act, including regulations with respect to--

(1) forms to be used in submitting claims under this Act;

(2) the information to be included in such forms;

(3) procedures for hearing and the presentation of evidence;

(4) procedures to assist an individual in filing and pursuing claims under this Act; and

(5) other matters determined appropriate by the Attorney General.

SEC. 8. RIGHT OF SUBROGATION.

The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any claim paid by the United States under this Act.

THIS SEARCH	THIS DOCUMENT	GO TO
Next Hit	Forward	New Bills Search
Prev Hit	Back	HomePage
Hit List	Best Sections	Help
	Doc Contents

REV_00264766

S 2134 IS

107th CONGRESS

2d Session

S. 2134

To allow American victims of state sponsored terrorism to receive compensation from blocked assets of those states.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

April 16, 2002

Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. NICKLES, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. WARNER, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. CRAIG) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To allow American victims of state sponsored terrorism to receive compensation from blocked assets of those states.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Terrorism Victim's Access to Compensation Act of 2002'.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that:

(1) The war against international terrorism must be fought and won on multiple fronts.

(2) The state sponsors of international terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities) are ultimately responsible for the damages, pain, and suffering inflicted upon Americans who are victimized by terrorist acts. It is the state sponsors, not the American taxpayer, who must be compelled to pay those costs.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury lawfully controls billions of dollars in blocked assets of several governments which the President and the Department of State have determined to be state sponsors of international terrorism and responsible for multiple terrorist attacks on United States citizens abroad.

REV_00264767

(4) There have been multiple Federal lawsuits brought since 1996 by American victims of state sponsored terrorism abroad and final judgments and financial awards in some of those cases have been paid appropriately by using some of the blocked assets of state sponsors of terrorism. Additional cases are still pending.

(5) Paying victims of state sponsored terrorism from the blocked assets of state sponsors of acts of terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities) will punish those entities, deter future acts of terrorism, and provide a powerful incentive for any foreign government to stop sponsoring terrorist attacks on Americans.

(6) There must be a level playing field for all American victims of state sponsored terrorism who are pursuing redress in the Federal courts and compensation from the blocked assets of state sponsors of terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities).

SEC. 3. SENSE OF THE SENATE.

Considering the policy set forth in this Act, the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, and in the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000, it is the sense of Congress that it should be the policy of the United States--

(1) to use the blocked assets of state sponsors of acts of terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities) that are under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay court-ordered judgments and awards made to United States nationals harmed by such acts; and

(2) to provide equal access to all United States victims of state sponsored terrorism who have secured judgments and awards in Federal courts against state sponsors of terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities) and that those judgments and awards be paid by state sponsors of terrorism (including their agencies and instrumentalities) from any of their blocked assets controlled by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS FROM BLOCKED ASSETS OF TERRORISTS, TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS, AND STATE SPONSORS OF TERRORISM.

(a) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in subsection (b), in every case in which a person has obtained a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim for compensatory damages for an act of terrorism, or a claim for compensatory damages brought pursuant to section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the blocked assets of any terrorist party, or any agency or instrumentality of a terrorist party, shall be available for satisfaction of the judgment.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subject to paragraph (2), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of subsection (a) in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment or satisfaction in aid of execution of judgment, or execution of judgment, against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

REV_00264768

(2) EXCEPTION- A waiver under this subsection shall not apply to--

(A) property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that has been used for any nondiplomatic purpose (including use as rental property), and the proceeds of such use; or

(B) any asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that is sold or otherwise transferred for value to a third party, and the proceeds of such sale or transfer.

(c) DEFINITIONS- In this Act:

(1) BLOCKED ASSETS- The term `blocked assets' means assets seized or blocked by the United States in accordance with law.

(2) PROPERTY AND ASSETS SUBJECT TO VIENNA CONVENTIONS- The terms `property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' and `asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' mean any property or asset, respectively, the attachment in aid of execution or execution of which may, for the limited purpose of satisfying a judgment under subsection (a), breach an obligation of the United States under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, as the case may be.

(3) TERRORIST PARTY- The term `terrorist party' means a terrorist, a terrorist organization, or a foreign state designated as a state sponsor of terrorism under section 6 (j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)) or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371) (including any agency or instrumentality of that state).

END

REV_00264769

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Victims Rights Amendment
[Folder 1]

Box 62
Folder 10

OA/NARA#: 21631 2071
9693

REV_00264770

Victims Rights Amendment [Folder 2]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2182/2093
9802

Box 62
Folder 11

REV_00264771

Code of Criminal Procedure

CHAPTER 56. RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS

Art. 56.01. Definitions
Art. 56.02. Crime victims' rights
Art. 56.03. Victim impact statement
Art. 56.04. Victim assistance coordinator; crime victim liaison
Art. 56.05. Reports Required
Art. 56.06. Costs of medical examination
Art. 56.07. Notification
Art. 56.08. Notification of rights by attorney representing the state
Art. 56.09. Victim's right to privacy
Art. 56.10. Victim's discovery attendance
Art. 56.11. Notification to Victim of Release or Escape of Defendant
Art. 56.12. Notification of escape
Art. 56.31. Short Title
Art. 56.311. Legislative Findings and Intent
Art. 56.32. Definitions
Art. 56.33. Administration; Rules
Art. 56.34. Compensation
Art. 56.35. Types of Assistance
Art. 56.36. Application
Art. 56.37. Time for Filing
Art. 56.38. Review; Verification
Art. 56.385. Review of Health Care Services
Art. 56.39. Mental or Physical Examination; Autopsy
Art. 56.40. Hearings
Art. 56.41. Approval of Claim
Art. 56.42. Limits on Compensation
Art. 56.43. Attorney Fees
Art. 56.44. Payments
Art. 56.45. Denial or Reduction of Award
Art. 56.46. Reporting of Crime
Art. 56.47. Reconsideration
Art. 56.48. Judicial Review
Art. 56.49. Exemption; Assignability
Art. 56.50. Emergency Award
Art. 56.51. Subrogation
Art. 56.52. Notice of Private Action
Art. 56.53. Annual Report
Art. 56.54. Funds
Art. 56.541. Appropriation of Excess Money for Other Crime Victim Assistance
Art. 56.55. Court Costs
Art. 56.56. Deposit and Remittance of Court Costs
Art. 56.57. Deposit by Comptroller; Audit
Art. 56.58. Adjustment of Awards and Payments
Art. 56.59. Attorney General Supervision of Collection of Costs; Failure to Comply
Art. 56.60. Public Notice
Art. 56.61. Compensation for Certain Criminally Injurious Conduct Prohibited
Art. 56.62. Public Letter of Reprimand
Art. 56.63. Civil Penalty
Art. 56.64. Administrative Penalty

REV_00264772

CHAPTER 56. RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS

SUBCHAPTER A. CRIME VICTIMS' RIGHTS

Art. 56.01. Definitions

In this chapter:

(1) "Close relative of a deceased victim" means a person who was the spouse of a deceased victim at the time of the victim's death or who is a parent or adult brother, sister, or child of the deceased victim.

(2) "Guardian of a victim" means a person who is the legal guardian of the victim, whether or not the legal relationship between the guardian and victim exists because of the age of the victim or the physical or mental incompetency of the victim.

(3) "Victim" means a person who is the victim of sexual assault, kidnapping, or aggravated robbery or who has suffered bodily injury or death as a result of the criminal conduct of another.

Added by Acts 1985, 69th Leg., ch. 588, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1985.

Art. 56.02. Crime victims' rights

(a) A victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim is entitled to the following rights within the criminal justice system:

(1) the right to receive from law enforcement agencies adequate protection from harm and threats of harm arising from cooperation with prosecution efforts;

(2) the right to have the magistrate take the safety of the victim or his family into consideration as an element in fixing the amount of bail for the accused;

(3) the right, if requested, to be informed of relevant court proceedings and to be informed if those court proceedings have been canceled or rescheduled prior to the event;

(4) the right to be informed, when requested, by a peace officer concerning the defendant's right to bail and the procedures in criminal investigations and by the district attorney's office concerning the general procedures in the criminal justice system, including general procedures in guilty plea negotiations and arrangements, restitution, and the appeals and parole process;

(5) the right to provide pertinent information to a probation department conducting a presentencing investigation concerning the impact of the offense on the victim and his family by testimony, written statement, or any other manner prior to any sentencing of the offender;

(6) the right to receive information regarding compensation to victims of crime as provided by Subchapter B, Chapter 56, including information related to the costs that may be compensated under that Act and the amount of compensation, eligibility for compensation, and procedures for application for compensation under that Act, the payment for a medical examination under Article 56.06 of this

REV_00264773

Art. 56.311. Legislative Findings and Intent

The legislature recognizes that many innocent individuals suffer personal injury or death as a result of criminal acts. Crime victims and persons who intervene to prevent criminal acts often suffer disabilities, incur financial burdens, or become dependent on public assistance. The legislature finds that there is a need for the compensation of victims of crime and those who suffer personal injury or death in the prevention of crime or in the apprehension of criminals. It is the legislature's intent that the compensation of innocent victims of violent crime encourage greater public cooperation in the successful apprehension and prosecution of criminals.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.32. Definitions

(a) In this subchapter:

(1) "Child" means an individual younger than 18 years of age who:

(A) is not married; or

(B) has not had the disabilities of minority removed for general purposes under Chapter 31, Family Code.

(2) "Claimant" means, except as provided by Subsection (b), any of the following individuals who is entitled to file or has filed a claim for compensation under this subchapter:

(A) an authorized individual acting on behalf of a victim;

(B) an individual who legally assumes the obligation or who voluntarily pays medical or burial expenses of a victim incurred as a result of the criminally injurious conduct of another;

(C) a dependent of a victim who died as a result of criminally injurious conduct;

(D) an immediate family member or household member of a victim Who requires psychiatric care or counseling as a result of the criminally injurious conduct; or

(E) an authorized individual acting on behalf of an individual who is described by Subdivision (C) or (D) and who is a child.

(3) "Collateral source" means any of the following sources of benefits or advantages for pecuniary loss that a claimant or victim has received or that is readily available to the claimant or victim from:

(A) the offender under an order of restitution to the claimant or victim imposed by a court as a condition of community supervision;

(B) the United States, a federal agency, a state or any of its political subdivisions, or an instrumentality of two or more states, unless the law providing for the benefits or advantages makes them in excess of or secondary to benefits under this subchapter;

REV_00264782

(C) social security, Medicare, or Medicaid;

(D) another state's or another country's crime victims' compensation program;

(E) workers' compensation;

(F) an employer's wage continuation program, not including vacation and sick leave benefits;

(G) proceeds of an insurance contract payable to or on behalf of the claimant or victim for loss that the claimant or victim sustained because of the criminally injurious conduct;

(H) a contract or self-funded program providing hospital and other health care services or benefits; or

(I) proceeds awarded to the claimant or victim as a result of third-party litigation.

(4) "Criminally injurious conduct" means conduct that:

(A) occurs or is attempted;

(B) poses a substantial threat of personal injury or death;

(C) is punishable by fine, imprisonment, or death, or would be punishable by fine, imprisonment, or death if the person engaging in the conduct possessed capacity to commit the conduct; and

(D) does not arise out of the ownership, maintenance, or use of a motor vehicle, aircraft, or water vehicle, unless the conduct is intended to cause personal injury or death or the conduct is in violation of Section 550.021, Transportation Code, or one or more of the following sections of the Penal Code:

(i) Section 19.04 (manslaughter);

(ii) Section 19.05 (criminally negligent homicide);

(iii) Section 22.02 (aggravated assault);

(iv) Section 49.04 (driving while intoxicated);

(v) Section 49.05 (flying while intoxicated);

(vi) Section 49.06 (boating while intoxicated);

(vii) Section 49.07 (intoxication assault); or

(viii) Section 49.08 (intoxication manslaughter).

(5) "Dependent" means:

(A) a surviving spouse;

REV_00264783

(B) a person who is a dependent, within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code, of a victim; and

(C) a posthumous child of a deceased victim.

(6) "Household member" means an individual who resided in the same permanent household as the victim at the time that the criminally injurious conduct occurred and who is related by consanguinity or affinity to the victim.

(7) "Immediate family member" means an individual who is related to a victim within the second degree by affinity or consanguinity.

(8) "Intervenor" means an individual who goes to the aid of another and is killed or injured in the good faith effort to prevent criminally injurious conduct, to apprehend a person reasonably suspected of having engaged in criminally injurious conduct, or to aid a peace officer.

(9) "Pecuniary loss" means the amount of expense reasonably and necessarily incurred as a result of personal injury or death for:

(A) medical, hospital, nursing, or psychiatric care or counseling, or physical therapy;

(B) actual loss of past earnings and anticipated loss of future earnings and necessary travel expenses because of:

(i) a disability resulting from the personal injury;

(ii) the receipt of medically indicated services related to the disability resulting from the personal injury; or

(iii) participation in or attendance at investigative, prosecutorial, or judicial processes related to the criminally injurious conduct and participation in or attendance at any postconviction or postadjudication proceeding relating to criminally injurious conduct;

(C) care of a child or dependent;

(D) funeral and burial expenses;

(E) loss of support to a dependent, consistent with Article 56.41(b)(5);

(F) reasonable and necessary costs of cleaning the crime scene;

(G) reasonable replacement costs for clothing, bedding, or property of the victim seized as evidence or rendered unusable as a result of the criminal investigation; and

(H) reasonable and necessary costs, as provided by Article 56.42(d), incurred by a victim of domestic violence for relocation and housing rental assistance payments.

(10) "Personal injury" means physical or mental harm.

REV_00264784

(11) "Victim" means, except as provided by Subsection (c):

(A) an individual who:

(i) suffers personal injury or death as a result of criminally injurious conduct or as a result of actions taken by the individual as an intervenor, if the conduct or actions occurred in this state; and

(ii) is a resident of this state, another state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or a possession or territory of the United States;

(B) an individual who:

(i) suffers personal injury or death as a result of criminally injurious conduct or as a result of actions taken by the individual as an intervenor, if the conduct or actions occurred in a state or country that does not have a crime victims' compensation program that meets the requirements of Section 1403(b), Crime Victims Compensation Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. Section 10602(b));

(ii) is a resident of this state; and

(iii) would be entitled to compensation under this subchapter if the criminally injurious conduct or actions had occurred in this state; or

(C) an individual who:

(i) suffers personal injury or death as a result of criminally injurious conduct caused by an act of international terrorism as defined by 18 U.S.C. Section 2331 committed outside of the United States; and

(ii) is a resident of this state.

(b) In this subchapter "claimant" does not include a service provider.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, §§ 3, 4, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (a)(4) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 14.27, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (a)(8) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 9.55, eff. Sept. 1, 1995. Amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997; Subsec. (a)(9) amended by Acts 1999, 76th Leg., ch. 1470, § 1, eff. June 19, 1999.

Art. 56.33. Administration; Rules

(a) The attorney general shall adopt rules consistent with this subchapter governing its administration, including rules relating to the method of filing claims and the proof of entitlement to compensation and the review of health care services subject to compensation under this chapter. Subchapters A and B, Chapter 2001, Government Code, except Sections 2001.004(3) and 2001.005, apply to the attorney general.

(b) The attorney general may delegate a power, duty, or responsibility given to the attorney general under this subchapter to a person in the attorney general's office.

REV_00264785

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.34. Compensation

(a) The attorney general shall award compensation for pecuniary loss arising from criminally injurious conduct if the attorney general is satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that the requirements of this subchapter are met.

(b) The attorney general, shall establish whether, as a direct result of criminally injurious conduct, a claimant or victim suffered personal injury or death that resulted in a pecuniary loss for which the claimant or victim is not compensated from a collateral source.

(c) The attorney general shall award compensation for health care services according to the medical fee guidelines prescribed by Subtitle A, Title 5, Labor Code.

(d) The attorney general, a claimant, or a victim is not liable for health care service charges in excess of the medical fee guidelines. A health care provider shall accept compensation from the attorney general as payment in full for the charges unless an investigation of the charges by the attorney general determines that there is a reasonable health care justification for the deviation from the guidelines.

(e) A claimant or victim is not liable for the balance of service charges left as a result of an adjustment of payment for the charges under Article 56.58.

(f) The compensation to victims of crime fund and the compensation to victims of crime auxiliary fund are the payers of last resort.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.35. Types of Assistance

If the attorney general approves an application for compensation under Article 56.41, the attorney general shall determine what type of state assistance will best aid the claimant or victim. The attorney general may do one or more of the following:

(1) authorize cash payment or payments to or on behalf of a claimant or victim for pecuniary loss;

(2) refer a claimant or victim to a state agency for vocational or other rehabilitative services; or

(3) provide counseling services for a claimant or victim or contract with a private entity to provide counseling services.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

REV_00264786

Art. 56.36. Application

(a) An applicant for compensation under this subchapter must apply in writing on a form prescribed by the attorney general.

(b) An application must be verified and must contain:

(1) the date on which the criminally injurious conduct occurred;

(2) a description of the nature and circumstances of the criminally injurious conduct;

(3) a complete financial statement, including:

(A) the cost of medical care or burial expenses and the loss of wages or support the claimant or victim has incurred or will incur; and

(B) the extent to which the claimant or victim has been indemnified for those expenses from a collateral source;

(4) if appropriate, a statement indicating the extent of a disability resulting from the injury incurred;

(5) an authorization permitting the attorney general to verify the contents of the application; and

(6) other information the attorney general requires.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.37. Time for Filing

(a) Except as otherwise provided by this article, a claimant or victim must file an application not later than three years from the date of the criminally injurious conduct.

(b) The attorney general may extend the time for filing for good cause shown by the claimant or victim.

(c) If the victim is a child, the application must be filed within three years from the date the claimant or victim is made aware of the crime but not after the child is 21 years of age.

(d) If a claimant or victim presents medically documented evidence of a physical or mental incapacity that was incurred by the claimant or victim as a result of the criminally injurious conduct and that reasonably prevented the claimant or victim from filing the application within the limitations period under Subsection (a), the period of the incapacity is not included.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 10, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts

REV_00264787

1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.38. Review; Verification

(a) The attorney general shall appoint a clerk to review each application for compensation under Article 56.36 to ensure the application is complete. If an application is not complete, the clerk shall return it to the claimant or victim and give a brief statement showing the additional information required. Not later than the 30th day after receiving a returned application, a claimant or victim may:

(1) supply the additional information; or

(2) appeal the action to the attorney general, who shall review the application to determine whether it is complete.

(b) The attorney general may investigate an application.

(c) Incident to the attorney general's review, verification, and hearing duties under this subchapter, the attorney general may:

(1) subpoena witnesses and administer oaths to determine whether and the extent to which a claimant or victim qualifies for an award; and

(2) order a claimant or victim to submit to a mental or physical examination by a physician or psychologist or order an autopsy of a deceased victim as provided by Article 56.39, if the mental, physical, or emotional condition of a claimant or victim is material to a claim.

(d) On request by the attorney general and not later than the 14th business day after the date of the request, a law enforcement agency shall release to the attorney general all reports, including witness statements and criminal history record information, for the purpose of allowing the attorney general to determine whether a claimant or victim qualifies for an award and the extent of the qualification.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.385. Review of Health Care Services

(a) The attorney general may review the actual or proposed health care services for which a claimant or victim seeks compensation in an application filed under Article 56.36.

(b) The attorney general may not compensate a claimant or victim for health care services that the attorney general determines are not medically necessary.

(c) The attorney general, a claimant, or a victim is not liable for a charge that is not medically necessary.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.39. Mental or Physical Examination; Autopsy

REV_00264788

(a) An order for a mental or physical examination or an autopsy as provided by Article 56.38(c)(3) may be made for good cause shown on notice to the individual to be examined and to all persons who have appeared.

(b) An order shall:

(1) specify the time, place, manner, conditions, and scope of the examination or autopsy;

(2) specify the person by whom the examination or autopsy is to be made; and

(3) require the person making the examination or autopsy to file with the attorney general a detailed written report of the examination or autopsy.

(c) A report shall set out the findings of the person making the examination or autopsy, including:

(1) the results of any tests made; and

(2) diagnoses, prognoses, and other conclusions and reports of earlier examinations of the same conditions.

(d) On request of the individual examined, the attorney general shall furnish the individual with a copy of the report. If the victim is deceased, the attorney general on request shall furnish the claimant with a copy of the report.

(e) A physician or psychologist making an examination or autopsy under this article shall be compensated from funds appropriated for the administration of this subchapter.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.40. Hearings

(a) The attorney general shall determine whether a hearing on an application for compensation under this subchapter is necessary.

(b) If the attorney general determines that a hearing is not necessary, the attorney general may approve the application in accordance with the provisions of Article 56.41.

(c) If the attorney general determines that a hearing is necessary or if the claimant or victim requests a hearing, the attorney general shall consider the application at a hearing at a time and place of the attorney general's choosing. The attorney general shall notify all interested persons not less than 10 days before the date of the hearing.

(d) At the hearing the attorney general shall:

(1) review the application for assistance and the report prepared under Article 56.39 and any other evidence obtained as a result of the attorney general's investigation; and

REV_00264789

(2) receive other evidence that the attorney general finds necessary or desirable to evaluate the application properly.

(e) The attorney general may appoint hearing officers to conduct hearings or prehearing conferences under this subchapter.

(f) A hearing or prehearing conference is open to the public unless in a particular case the hearing officer or attorney general determines that the hearing or prehearing conference or a part of it should be held in private because a criminal suspect has not been apprehended or because it is in the interest of the claimant or victim.

(g) The attorney general may suspend the proceedings pending disposition of a criminal prosecution that has been commenced or is imminent, but may make an emergency award under Article 56.50.

(h) Subchapters C through H, Chapter 2001, Government Code, do not apply to the attorney general or the attorney general's orders and decisions.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.41. Approval of Claim

(a) The attorney general shall approve an application for compensation under this subchapter if the attorney general finds by a preponderance of the evidence that grounds for compensation under this subchapter exist.

(b) The attorney general shall deny an application for compensation under this subchapter if:

(1) the criminally injurious conduct is not reported as provided by Article 56.46;

(2) the application is not made in the manner provided by Articles 56.36 and 56.37;

(3) the claimant or victim knowingly and willingly participated in the criminally injurious conduct;

(4) the claimant or victim is the offender or an accomplice of the offender;

(5) an award of compensation to the claimant or victim would benefit the offender or an accomplice of the offender;

(6) the claimant or victim was incarcerated in a penal institution, as defined by Section 1.07, Penal Code, at the time the offense was committed; or

(7) the claimant or victim knowingly or intentionally submits false or forged information to the attorney general.

(c) Except as provided by rules adopted by the attorney general to prevent the unjust enrichment of an offender, the attorney general may not deny an award otherwise payable to a claimant or victim because the claimant or victim:

REV_00264790

(1) is an immediate family member of the offender; or

(2) resides in the same household as the offender.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (b) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 14.28, eff. Sept. 1, 1995. Amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.42. Limits on Compensation

(a) Except as otherwise provided by this article, awards payable to a victim and all other claimants sustaining pecuniary loss because of injury or death of that victim may not exceed $50,000 in the aggregate.

(b) In addition to an award payable under Subsection (a), the attorney general may award an additional $50,000 for extraordinary pecuniary losses, if the personal injury to a victim is catastrophic and results in a total and permanent disability to the victim, for lost wages and reasonable and necessary costs of:

(1) making a home or automobile accessible;

(2) obtaining job training and vocational rehabilitation;

(3) training in the use of special appliances; and

(4) receiving home health care.

(c) The attorney general may by rule establish limitations on any other pecuniary loss compensated for under this subchapter.

(d) A victim who is a victim of domestic violence may receive a onetime-only assistance payment in an amount not to exceed:

(1) $2,000 to be used for relocation expenses, including expenses for rental deposit, utility connections, expenses relating to the moving of belongings, motor vehicle mileage expenses, and for out-of-state moves, transportation, lodging, and meals; and

(2) $1,800 to be used for housing rental expenses.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997; Subsec. (d) added by Acts 1999, 76th Leg., ch. 1470, § 2, eff. June 19, 1999.

Art. 56.43. Attorney Fees

REV_00264791

code for a victim of a sexual assault, and when requested, to referral to available social service agencies that may offer additional assistance;

(7) the right to be informed, upon request, of parole procedures, to participate in the parole process, to be notified, if requested, of parole proceedings concerning a defendant in the victim's case, to provide to the Board of Pardons and Paroles for inclusion in the defendant's file information to be considered by the board prior to the parole of any defendant convicted of any crime subject to this Act, and to be notified, if requested, of the defendant's release;

(8) the right to be provided with a waiting area, separate or secure from other witnesses, including the offender and relatives of the offender, before testifying in any proceeding concerning the offender; if a separate waiting area is not available, other safeguards should be taken to minimize the victim's contact with the offender and the offender's relatives and witnesses, before and during court proceedings;

(9) the right to prompt return of any property of the victim that is held by a law enforcement agency or the attorney for the state as evidence when the property is no longer required for that purpose;

(10) the right to have the attorney for the state notify the employer of the victim, if requested, of the necessity of the victim's cooperation and testimony in a proceeding that may necessitate the absence of the victim from work for good cause; and

(11) the right to counseling, on request, regarding acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) and human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection and testing for acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection, antibodies to HIV, or infection with any other probable causative agent of AIDS, if the offense is an offense under Section 21.11(a)(1), 22.011, or 22.021, Penal Code.

(b) A victim is entitled to the right to be present at all public court proceedings related to the offense, subject to the approval of the judge in the case.

(c) The office of the attorney representing the state, and the sheriff, police, and other law enforcement agencies shall ensure to the extent practicable that a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim is afforded the rights granted by Subsection (a) of this article and, on request, an explanation of those rights.

(d) A judge, attorney for the state, peace officer, or law enforcement agency is not liable for a failure or inability to provide a right enumerated in this article. The failure or inability of any person to provide a right or service enumerated in this article may not be used by a defendant in a criminal case as a ground for appeal, a ground to set aside the conviction or sentence, or a ground in a habeas corpus petition. A victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim does not have standing to participate as a party in a criminal proceeding or to contest the disposition of any charge.

Added by Acts 1985, 69th Leg., ch. 588, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1985. Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1987, 70th Leg., ch. 433, § 1, eff. Aug. 31, 1987; Subsecs. (a), (c) amended by Acts 1987, 70th Leg., ch. 929, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1987; Subsec. (c) amended by Acts 1989, 71st Leg., ch. 996, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1989; Subsecs. (a), (d) amended by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 3, eff. Sept. 1, 1991; Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 811, § 3, eff. Sept. 1, 1993; Subsec. (a)(6) amended by Acts

REV_00264774

(a) As part of an order, the attorney general shall determine and award reasonable attorney's fees, commensurate with legal services rendered, to be paid by the state to the attorney representing the claimant or victim. Attorney fees shall not exceed 25 percent of the amount the attorney assisted the claimant or victim in obtaining. Where there is no dispute of the attorney general's determination of the amount of the award due to the claimant or victim and where no hearing is held, the attorney fee shall be the lesser of either 25 percent of the amount the attorney assisted the claimant or victim in obtaining or $300.

(b) Attorney fees may be denied on a finding that the claim or appeal is frivolous.

(c) An award of attorney fees is in addition to an award of compensation.

(d) An attorney may not contract for or receive an amount larger than that allowed under this article.

(e) Attorney fees may not be paid to an attorney of a claimant or victim unless an award is made to the claimant or victim.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 9, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.44. Payments

(a) The attorney general may provide for the payment of an award in a lump sum or in installments. The attorney general shall provide that the part of an award equal to the amount of pecuniary loss accrued to the date of the award be paid in a lump sum. Except as provided in Subsection (b), the attorney general shall pay the part of an award for allowable expense that accrues after the award is made in installments.

(b) At the request of the claimant or victim, the attorney general may provide that an award for future pecuniary loss be paid in a lump sum if the attorney general finds that:

(1) paying the award in a lump sum will promote the interests of the claimant or victim; or

(2) the present value of all future pecuniary loss does not exceed $1,000.

(c) The attorney general may not provide for an award for future pecuniary loss payable in installments for a period for which the attorney general cannot reasonably determine the future pecuniary loss.

(d) The attorney general may make payments only to an individual who is a claimant or a victim or to a provider on the individual's behalf.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

REV_00264792

Art. 56.45. Denial or Reduction of Award

The attorney general may deny or reduce an award otherwise payable:

(1) if the claimant or victim has not substantially cooperated with an appropriate law enforcement agency;

(2) if the claimant or victim bears a share of the responsibility for the act or omission giving rise to the claim because of the claimant's or victim's behavior;

(3) to the extent that pecuniary loss is recouped from a collateral source; or

(4) if the claimant or victim was engaging in an activity that at the time of the criminally injurious conduct was prohibited by law or a rule made under law.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.46. Reporting of Crime

(a) Except as otherwise provided by this article, a claimant or victim may not file an application unless the victim reports the criminally injurious conduct to the appropriate state or local public safety or law enforcement agency within a reasonable period of time, but not so late as to interfere with or hamper the investigation and prosecution of the crime after the criminally injurious conduct is committed.

(b) The attorney general may extend the time for reporting the criminally injurious conduct if the attorney general determines that the extension is justified by extraordinary circumstances.

(c) Subsection (a) does not apply if the victim is a child.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.47. Reconsideration

(a) The attorney general, on the attorney general's own motion or on request of a claimant or victim, may reconsider:

(1) a decision to make or deny an award; or

(2) the amount of an award.

(b) At least annually, the attorney general shall reconsider each award being paid in installments.

(c) An order on reconsideration may require a refund of an award if:

REV_00264793

(1) the award was obtained by fraud or mistake; or

(2) newly discovered evidence shows the claimant or victim to be ineligible for the award under Article 56.41 or 56.45.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 6, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (c) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.85(b). Amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.48. Judicial Review

(a) Not later than the 40th day after the attorney general renders a final decision, a claimant or victim may file with the attorney general a notice of dissatisfaction with the decision. Not later than the 40th day after the claimant or victim gives notice, the claimant or victim shall bring suit in the district court having jurisdiction in the county in which:

(1) the injury or death occurred;

(2) the victim resided at the time the injury or death occurred; or

(3) if the victim resided out of state at the time of the injury or death, in the county where the injury or death occurred or in a district court of Travis County.

(b) While judicial review of a decision by the attorney general is pending, the attorney general:

(1) shall suspend payments to the claimant or victim; and

(2) may not reconsider the award.

(c) The court shall determine the issues by trial de novo. The burden of proof is on the party who filed the notice of dissatisfaction.

(d) A court may award not more than 25 percent of the total recovery by the claimant or victim for attorney fees in the event of review.

(e) In computing a period under this article, if the last day is a legal holiday or Sunday, the last day is not counted, and the time is extended to include the next business day.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.49. Exemption; Assignability

(a) An award is not subject to execution, attachment, garnishment, or other process, except that an award is not exempt from a claim of a creditor to the extent that the creditor provided products, services, or accommodations, the costs of which are included in the award.

REV_00264794

(b) An assignment or agreement to assign a right to benefits for loss accruing in the future is unenforceable except:

(1) an assignment of a right to benefits for loss of earnings is enforceable to secure payment of alimony, maintenance, or child support; and

(2) an assignment of a right to benefits is enforceable to the extent that the benefits are for the cost of products, services, or accommodations:

(A) made necessary by the injury or death on which the claim is based; and

(B) provided or to be provided by the assignee.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.50. Emergency Award

(a) The attorney general may make an emergency award if, before acting on an application for compensation under this subchapter, it appears likely that:

(1) a final award will be made; and

(2) the claimant or victim will suffer undue hardship if immediate economic relief is not obtained.

(b) An emergency award may not exceed $1,500.

(c) The amount of an emergency award shall be:

(1) deducted from the final award; or

(2) repaid by and recoverable from the claimant or victim to the extent the emergency award exceeds the final award.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.51. Subrogation

If compensation is awarded under this subchapter, the state is subrogated to all the claimant's or victim's rights to receive or recover benefits for pecuniary loss to the extent compensation is awarded from a collateral source.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.52. Notice of Private Action

REV_00264795

(a) Before a claimant or victim may bring an action to recover damages related to criminally injurious conduct for which compensation under this subchapter is claimed or awarded, the claimant or victim must give the attorney general written notice of the proposed action. After receiving the notice, the attorney general shall promptly:

(1) join in the action as a party plaintiff to recover benefits awarded;

(2) require the claimant or victim to bring the action in the claimant's or victim's name as a trustee on behalf of the state to recover benefits awarded; or

(3) reserve the attorney general's rights and do neither in the proposed action.

(b) If the claimant or victim brings the action as trustee and recovers compensation awarded by the attorney general, the claimant or victim may deduct from the benefits recovered on behalf of the state the reasonable expenses of the suit, including attorney fees, expended in pursuing the recovery for the state. The claimant or victim must justify this deduction in writing to the attorney general on a form provided by the attorney general.

(c) A claimant or victim shall not settle or resolve any such action without written authorization to do so from the attorney general. No third party or agents, insurers, or attorneys for third parties shall participate in the settlement or resolution of such an action if they actually know, or should know, that the claimant or victim has received moneys from the fund and is subject to the subrogation provisions of this article. Any attempt by such third party, or agents, insurers, or attorneys of third parties to settle an action is void and shall result in no release from liability to the fund for any rights subrogated pursuant to this article. All such agents, insurers, and attorneys are personally liable to the fund for any moneys paid to a claimant or victim in violation of this subsection, up to the full amount of the fund's right to reimbursement. A claimant, victim, third party, or any agents, attorneys, or insurers of third parties who knowingly or intentionally fail to comply with the requirements of this chapter commits a Class B misdemeanor.

(d) A person adjudged guilty of a Class B misdemeanor shall be punished by:

(1) a fine not to exceed $500;

(2) confinement in jail for a term not to exceed 180 days; or

(3) both such fine and imprisonment.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 11, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.53. Annual Report

Annually, the attorney general shall report to the governor and the legislature on the attorney general's activities, including a statistical summary of claims and awards made and denied. The reporting period is the state fiscal year. The attorney general shall file the report not later than the 100th day after the end of the fiscal year.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.54. Funds

(a) The compensation to victims of crime fund and the compensation to victims of crime auxiliary fund are in the state treasury.

Text of subsec. (b) as amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1042, § 2

(b) Except as provided by Article 56.541, the compensation to victims of crime fund may be used only by the attorney general for the payment of compensation to claimants or victims under this subchapter and other expenses in administering this subchapter.

Text of subsec. (b) as amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1

(b) Except as provided by Subsections (h) and (i), the compensation to victims of crime fund may be used by the attorney general only for the payment of compensation to claimants or victims under this subchapter, the operation of the Crime Victims' Institute created by Chapter 412, Government Code, and other expenses in administering this subchapter.

(c) Except as provided by Subsections (h) and (i), the compensation to victims of crime auxiliary fund may be used by the attorney general only for the payment of compensation to claimants or victims under this subchapter.

(d) The attorney general may not make compensation payments in excess of the amount of money available from the combined funds.

(e) General revenues may not be used for payments under this subchapter.

(f) The office of the attorney general is authorized to accept gifts, grants, and donations to be credited to the compensation to victims of crime fund and compensation to victims of crime auxiliary fund and shall file annually with the governor and the presiding officer of each house of the legislature a complete and detailed written report accounting for all gifts, grants, and donations received and disbursed, used, or maintained by the office for the attorney general that are credited to these funds.

(g) Money in the compensation to victims of crime fund or in the compensation to victims of crime auxiliary fund may be used only as provided by this subchapter and is not available for any other purpose. Section 403.095, Government Code, does not apply to the fund.

(h) An amount of money deposited to the credit of the compensation to victims of crime fund not to exceed one-quarter of the amount disbursed from that fund in the form of compensation payments during a fiscal year shall be carried forward into the next succeeding fiscal year and applied toward the amount listed in the next succeeding fiscal year's method of financing.

(i) If the sums available in the compensation to victims of crime fund are sufficient in a fiscal year to make all compensation payments, the attorney general may retain any portion of the fund that was deposited during the fiscal year that was in excess of compensation payments made during that fiscal year as an emergency reserve for the next fiscal year. Such emergency reserve may not exceed $10,000,000. The emergency reserve fund may be used only to make compensation awards in claims and for providing emergency relief and assistance, including crisis intervention, emergency housing, travel, food, or expenses and technical assistance expenses incurred in the implementation of this subsection in incidents resulting from an act of mass violence or from an act of international terrorism as defined by 18 U.S.C. Section 2331, occurring in the state or for Texas residents injured or killed in an act of terrorism outside of the United States.

REV_00264797

(j) The legislature may appropriate money in the compensation to victims of crime fund to administer the associate judge program under Subchapter C, Chapter 201, Family Code.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 1, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (b) amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1042, § 2, eff. Sept. 1, 1997; Subsec. (h) added by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1042, § 1, eff. June 19, 1997. Amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1434, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1997; Subsec. (j) added by Acts 1999, 76th Leg., ch. 1302, § 13, eff. Sept. 1, 1999.

Art. 56.541. Appropriation of Excess Money for Other Crime Victim Assistance

(a) Not later than December 15 of each even-numbered year, the attorney general, after consulting with the comptroller, shall prepare forecasts and certify estimates of:

(1) the amount of money that the attorney general anticipates will be received from deposits made to the credit of the compensation to victims of crime fund during the next state fiscal biennium, other than deposits of:

(A) gifts, grants, and donations; and

(B) money received from the United States;

(2) the amount of money from the fund that the attorney general anticipates will be obligated during the next state fiscal biennium to comply with this chapter; and

(3) the amount of money in the fund that the attorney general anticipates will remain unexpended at the end of the current state fiscal year and that is available for appropriation in the next state fiscal biennium.

(b) At the time the attorney general certifies the estimates made under Subsection (a), the attorney general shall also certify for the next state fiscal biennium the amount of excess money in the compensation to victims of crime fund for purposes of Subsection (c), calculated by multiplying the amount estimated under Subsection (a)(2) by 120 percent, and subtracting that product from the sum of the amounts estimated under Subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3).

(c) For a state fiscal biennium, the legislature may appropriate from the compensation to victims of crime fund the amount of excess money in the fund certified for the biennium under Subsection (b) to state agencies that deliver or fund victim-related services or assistance.

REV_00264798

(d) The attorney general and the comptroller shall cooperate in determining the proper allocation of the various sources of revenue deposited to the credit of the compensation to victims of crime fund for purposes of this article.

(e) The attorney general may use money appropriated from the compensation to victims of crime fund for grants or contracts supporting victim-related services or assistance, including support for private Texas nonprofit corporations that provide victim-related civil legal services directly to victims, immediate family members of victims, or claimants. A grant supporting victim-related services or assistance is governed by Chapter 783, Government Code.

(f) The attorney general shall adopt rules necessary to carry out this article.

Added by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1042, § 3, eff. Sept. 1, 1997. Subsec. (e) amended by Acts 1999, 76th Leg., ch. 1077, § 1, eff. Aug. 30, 1999.

Art. 56.55. Court Costs

(a) A person shall pay:

(1) $45 as a court cost on conviction of a felony;

(2) $35 as a court cost on conviction of a violation of a municipal ordinance punishable by a fine of more than $200 or on conviction of a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment or by a fine of more than $500; or

(3) $15 as a court cost on conviction of a violation of a municipal ordinance punishable by a fine of not more than $200 or on conviction of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $500, other than a conviction of a misdemeanor offense or a violation of a municipal ordinance relating to pedestrians and the parking of motor vehicles.

(b) The court shall assess and make a reasonable effort to collect the cost due under this article whether any other court cost is assessed or collected.

(c) In this article, a person is considered to have been convicted if:

(1) a sentence is imposed;

(2) the defendant receives probation or deferred adjudication; or

(3) the court defers final disposition of the case.

(d) Court costs under this article are collected in the same manner as other fines or costs.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 5, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.56. Deposit and Remittance of Court Costs

REV_00264799

(a) The officer collecting the costs in a municipal court case shall keep separate records of the funds collected as costs under Article 56.55 and shall deposit the funds in the municipal treasury. The officer collecting the costs in a justice, county, or district court case shall keep separate records of the funds collected as costs under Article 56.55 and shall deposit the funds in the county treasury.

(b) The custodian of a municipal or county treasury shall:

(1) keep records of the amount of funds on deposit collected under Article 56.55; and

(2) send to the comptroller before the last day of the first month following each calendar quarter the funds collected during the preceding quarter.

(c) A municipality or county may retain 10 percent of the funds collected under Article 56.55 as a collection fee if the custodian of the treasury:

(1) keeps records of the amount of funds on deposit collected under Article 56.55; and

(2) sends to the comptroller the funds within the period prescribed by Subsection (b)(2).

(d) If no funds due as costs under Article 56.55 are collected by a custodian of a municipal or county treasury in a quarter, the custodian shall file the report required for the quarter in the regular manner and must state that no funds were collected.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.57. Deposit by Comptroller; Audit

(a) The comptroller shall deposit the funds received under Article 56.56 and all other moneys credited to the fund by any other provision of law in the compensation to victims of crime fund.

(b) Funds collected are subject to audit by the comptroller. Funds spent are subject to audit by the state auditor.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 805, § 2, eff. Aug. 30, 1993; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.58. Adjustment of Awards and Payments

(a) The attorney general shall establish a policy to adjust awards and payments so that the total amount of awards granted in each calendar year does not exceed the amount of money credited to the fund during that year.

(b) If the attorney general establishes a policy to adjust awards under Subsection (a), the attorney general, the claimant, or the victim is not liable for the amount of charges incurred in excess of the adjusted amount for the service on which the adjusted payment is determined.

REV_00264800

(c) A service provider who accepts a payment that has been adjusted by a policy established under Subsection (a) agrees to accept the adjusted payment as payment in full for the service and is barred from legal action against the claimant or victim for collection.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.59. Attorney General Supervision of Collection of Costs; Failure to Comply

(a) If the attorney general has reason to believe that a court has not been assessing costs due under Article 56.55 or has not been making a reasonable effort to collect those costs, the attorney general shall send a warning letter to the court or the governing body of the governmental unit in which the court is located.

(b) Within 60 days after receipt of a warning letter, the court or governing body shall respond in writing to the attorney general, specifically referring to the charges in the warning letter.

(c) If the court or governing body does not respond or if the attorney general considers the response inadequate, the attorney general may request the comptroller to audit the records of:

(1) the court;

(2) the officer charged with collecting the costs; or

(3) the treasury of the governmental unit in which the court is located.

(d) The comptroller shall give the attorney general the results of the audit.

(e) If, using the results of the audit and other evidence available, the attorney general finds that a court is not assessing costs due under Article 56.55 or is not making a reasonable effort to collect those costs, the attorney general may:

(1) refuse to award compensation under this subchapter to residents of the jurisdiction served by the court; or

(2) notify the State Commission on Judicial Conduct of the findings.

(f) The failure, refusal, or neglect of a judicial officer to comply with a requirement of Article 56.55:

(1) constitutes official misconduct; and

(2) is grounds for removal from office.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.60. Public Notice

REV_00264801

1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.95(108), eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.03. Victim impact statement

(a) The Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse, with the participation of the Texas Adult Probation Commission and the Board of Pardons and Paroles, shall develop a form to be used by law enforcement agencies, prosecutors, and other participants in the criminal justice system to record the impact of an offense on a victim of the offense, guardian of a victim, or a close relative of a deceased victim and to provide the agencies, prosecutors, and participants with information needed to contact the victim, guardian, or relative if needed at any stage of a prosecution of a person charged with the offense. The Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse, with the participation of the Texas Adult Probation Commission and the Board of Pardons and Paroles, shall also develop a victims' information booklet that provides a general explanation of the criminal justice system to victims of an offense, guardians of victims, and relatives of deceased victims.

(b) The victim impact statement must be in a form designed to inform a victim, guardian of a victim, or a close relative of a deceased victim with a clear statement of rights provided by Article 56.02 of this code and to collect the following information:

(1) the name of the victim of the offense or, if the victim has a legal guardian or is deceased, the name of a guardian or close relative of the victim;

(2) the address and telephone number of the victim, guardian, or relative through which the victim, guardian of a victim, or a close relative of a deceased victim, may be contacted;

(3) a statement of economic loss suffered by the victim, guardian, or relative as a result of the offense;

(4) a statement of any physical or psychological injury suffered by the victim, guardian, or relative as a result of the offense, as described by the victim, guardian, relative, or by a physician or counselor;

(5) a statement of any psychological services requested as a result of the offense;

(6) a statement of any change in the victim's, guardian's, or relative's personal welfare or familial relationship as a result of the offense;

(7) a statement as to whether or not the victim, guardian, or relative wishes to be notified in the future of any parole hearing for the defendant and an explanation as to the procedures by which the victim, guardian, or relative may obtain information concerning the release of the defendant from the Texas Department of Corrections; and

(8) any other information, other than facts related to the commission of the offense, related to the impact of the offense on the victim, guardian, or relative.

(c) The victim assistance coordinator, designated in Article 56.04(a) of this code, shall send to a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim a victim impact statement, a victims' information booklet, and an application for compensation under Subchapter B, Chapter 56, along with an offer to assist in completing those forms on request. The victim assistance coordinator,

REV_00264775

(a) A hospital licensed under the laws of this state shall display prominently in its emergency room posters giving notification of the existence and general provisions of this subchapter. The attorney general shall set standards for the location of the display and shall provide posters, application forms, and general information regarding this subchapter to each hospital and physician licensed to practice in this state.

(b) Each local law enforcement agency shall inform a claimant or victim of criminally injurious conduct of the provisions of this subchapter and make application forms available. The attorney general shall provide application forms and all other documents that local law enforcement agencies may require to comply with this article. The attorney general shall set standards to be followed by local law enforcement agencies for this purpose and may require them to file with the attorney general a description of the procedures adopted by each agency to comply.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.61. Compensation for Certain Criminally Injurious Conduct Prohibited

The attorney general may not award compensation for economic loss arising from criminally injurious conduct that occurred before January 1, 1980.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.62. Public Letter of Reprimand

(a) The attorney general may issue a letter of reprimand against an individual if the attorney general finds that the person has filed or has caused to be filed under this subchapter an application for benefits or claim for pecuniary loss that contains a statement or representation that the person knows to be false.

(b) The attorney general must give the person notice of the proposed action before issuing the letter.

(c) A person may challenge the denial of compensation and the issuance of a letter of reprimand in a contested case hearing under Chapter 2001, Government Code (Administrative Procedure Act).

(d) A letter of reprimand issued under this article is public information.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.63. Civil Penalty

(a) A person is subject to a civil penalty of not less than $2,500 or more than $25,000 for each application for compensation that:

(1) is filed under this subchapter by the person or is filed under this subchapter as a result of conduct of the person; and

REV_00264802

(2) contains a material statement or representation that the person knows to be false.

(b) The attorney general shall institute and conduct the suit to collect the civil penalty authorized by this article on behalf of the state.

(c) A civil penalty recovered under this article shall be deposited to the credit of the compensation to victims of crime fund.

(d) The civil penalty authorized by this article is in addition to any other civil, administrative, or criminal penalty provided by law.

(e) In addition to the civil penalty authorized by this article, the attorney general may recover expenses incurred by the attorney general in the investigation, institution, and prosecution of the suit, including investigative costs, witness fees, attorney's fees, and deposition expenses.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.64. Administrative Penalty

(a) A person who presents to the attorney general under this subchapter, or engages in conduct that results in the presentation to the attorney general under this subchapter of, an application for compensation under this subchapter that contains a statement or representation the person knows to be false is liable to the attorney general for:

(1) the amount paid in reliance on the application and interest on that amount determined at the rate provided by law for legal judgments and accruing from the date on which the payment was made;

(2) payment of an administrative penalty not to exceed twice the amount paid because of the false application for benefits or claim for pecuniary loss; and

(3) payment of an administrative penalty of not more than $10,000 for each item or service for which payment was claimed.

(b) In determining the amount of the penalty to be assessed under Subsection (a)(3), the attorney general shall consider:

(1) the seriousness of the violation;

(2) whether the person has previously submitted a false application for benefits or a claim for pecuniary loss; and

(3) the amount necessary to deter the person from submitting future false applications for benefits or claims for pecuniary loss.

(c) If the attorney general determines that a violation has occurred, the attorney general may issue a report that states the facts on which the determination is made and the attorney general's recommendation on the imposition of a penalty, including a recommendation on the amount of the penalty.

REV_00264803

(d) The attorney general shall give written notice of the report to the person. Notice under this subsection may be given by certified mail and must:

(1) include a brief summary of the alleged violation;

(2) include a statement of the amount of the recommended penalty; and

(3) inform the person of the right to a hearing on:

(A) the occurrence of the violation;

(B) the amount of the penalty; or

(C) both the occurrence of the violation and the amount of the penalty.

(e) Not later than the 20th day after the date the person receives the notice, the person, in writing, may:

(1) accept the attorney general's determination and recommended penalty; or

(2) request in writing a hearing on:

(A) the occurrence of the violation;

(B) the amount of the penalty; or

(C) both the occurrence of the violation and the amount of the penalty.

(f) If the person accepts the determination and recommended penalty of the attorney general, the attorney general by order shall approve the determination and impose the recommended penalty.

(g) If the person requests a hearing as provided by Subsection (e) or fails to respond to the notice in a timely manner, the attorney general shall set a contested case hearing under Chapter 2001, Government Code (Administrative Procedure Act), and notify the person of the hearing. The administrative law judge shall make findings of facts and conclusions of law and promptly issue to the attorney general a proposal for a decision regarding the occurrence of the violation and the amount of a proposed penalty. Based on the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and proposal for a decision, the attorney general by order may:

(1) find that a violation has occurred and impose a penalty; or

(2) find that a violation has not occurred.

(h) Notice of the attorney general's order given to the person under Chapter 2001, Government Code, must include a statement of the right of the person to judicial review of the order.

(i) Not later than the 30th day after the date that the attorney general's order is final under Section 2001.144, Government Code, the person shall:

REV_00264804

(1) pay the amount of the penalty;

(2) pay the amount of the penalty and file a petition for judicial review contesting:

(A) the occurrence of the violation;

(B) the amount of the penalty; or

(C) the occurrence of the violation and the amount of the penalty; or

(3) without paying the amount of the penalty, file a petition for judicial review contesting:

(A) the occurrence of the violation;

(B) the amount of the penalty; or

(C) the occurrence of the violation and the amount of the penalty.

(j) Within the 30–day period, a person who acts under Subsection (i)(3) may:

(1) stay enforcement of the penalty by:

(A) paying the amount of the penalty to the court for placement in an escrow account; or

(B) giving to the court a supersedeas bond that is approved by the court for the amount of the penalty and that is effective until all judicial review of the attorney general's order is final; or

(2) request the court to stay enforcement of the penalty by:

(A) filing with the court a sworn affidavit of the person stating that the person is financially unable to pay the amount of the penalty or to give the supersedeas bond; and

(B) delivering a copy of the affidavit to the attorney general by certified mail.

(k) On receipt by the attorney general of a copy of an affidavit under Subsection (j)(2), the attorney general may file with the court, not later than the fifth day after the date the copy is received, a contest to the affidavit. The court shall hold a hearing on the facts alleged in the affidavit as soon as practicable and shall stay the enforcement of the penalty on finding that the alleged facts are true. A person who files an affidavit under Subsection (j)(2) has the burden of proving that the person is financially unable to pay the amount of the penalty or to give a supersedeas bond.

(l) If the person does not pay the amount of the penalty and the enforcement of the penalty is not stayed, the attorney general may file suit for collection of the amount of the penalty.

(m) Judicial review of the order of the attorney general:

(1) is instituted by filing a petition as provided by Section 2001.176, Government Code; and

REV_00264805

(2) is governed by the substantial evidence rule.

(n) If the court upholds the finding that a violation occurred, the court may order the person to pay the full or reduced amount of the penalty. If the court does not uphold the finding, the court shall order that no penalty is owed.

(o) If the person paid the amount of the penalty and if that amount is reduced or is not upheld by the court, the court shall order that the appropriate amount plus accrued interest be remitted to the person. The rate of the interest is the rate charged on loans to depository institutions by the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and the interest shall be paid for the period beginning on the date the penalty was paid and ending on the date the penalty is remitted. If the person gave a supersedeas bond and if the amount of the penalty is not upheld by the court, the court shall order the release of the bond. If the person gave a supersedeas bond and if the amount of the penalty is reduced, the court shall order the release of the bond after the person pays the amount.

(p) A penalty collected under this article shall be sent to the comptroller and deposited to the credit of the compensation to victims of crime fund.

(q) All proceedings under this article are subject to Chapter 2001, Government Code.

(r) In addition to the administrative penalty authorized by this article, the attorney general may recover all expenses incurred by the attorney general in the investigation, institution, and prosecution of the suit, including investigative costs, witness fees, attorney's fees, and deposition expenses.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

REV_00264806

on request, shall explain the possible use and consideration of the victim impact statement at sentencing and future parole hearing of the offender.

(d) If a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim states on the victim impact statement that he wishes to be notified of parole proceedings, the victim, guardian, or relative is responsible for notifying the Board of Pardons and Paroles of any change of address.

(e) Prior to the imposition of a sentence by the court in a criminal case, the court, if it has received a victim impact statement, shall consider the information provided in the statement. Before sentencing the defendant, the court shall permit the defendant or his counsel a reasonable time to read the statement, comment on the statement, and, with the approval of the court, introduce testimony or other information alleging a factual inaccuracy in the statement. If the court sentences the defendant to a term of probation, the court shall forward any victim's impact statement received in the case to the probation department supervising the defendant, along with the papers in the case.

(f) The court may not inspect a victim impact statement until after a finding of guilt or until deferred adjudication is ordered and the contents of the statement may not be disclosed to any person unless:

(1) the defendant pleads guilty or nolo contendere or is convicted of the offense; or

(2) the defendant in writing authorizes the court to inspect the statement.

(g) A victim impact statement is subject to discovery under Article 39.14 of this code before the testimony of the victim is taken only if the court determines that the statement contains exculpatory material.

(h) Not later than December 1 of each odd-numbered year, the Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse, with the participation of the Texas Adult Probation Commission and the Board of Pardons and Paroles, shall update the victim impact statement form and any other information provided by the commission to victims, guardians of victims, and relatives of deceased victims, if necessary, to reflect changes in law relating to criminal justice and the rights of victims and guardians and relatives of victims.

(i) In addition to the information described by Subsections (b)(1)–(8), the victim impact statement must be in a form designed to collect information on whether, if the victim is a child, there is an existing court order granting to the defendant possession of or access to the victim. If information collected under this subsection indicates the defendant is granted access or possession under court order and the defendant is subsequently confined by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice as a result of the commission of the offense, the victim services office of the department shall contact the court issuing the order before the defendant is released from the department on parole or mandatory supervision.

Added by Acts 1985, 69th Leg., ch. 588, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1985. Subsecs. (a), (c) amended by Acts 1987, 70th Leg., ch. 929, § 2, eff. Sept. 1, 1987; Subsec. (e) amended by Acts 1987, 70th Leg., ch. 433, § 2, eff. Aug. 31, 1987; Subsec. (h) added by Acts 1987, 70th Leg., ch. 929, § 3, eff. Sept. 1, 1987; Subsec. (c) amended by Acts 1989, 71st Leg., ch. 996, § 2, eff. Sept. 1, 1989; amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.95(108), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (i) added by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 670, § 5, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

REV_00264776

Art. 56.04. Victim assistance coordinator; crime victim liaison

(a) The district attorney, criminal district attorney, or county attorney who prosecutes criminal cases shall designate a person to serve as victim assistance coordinator in that jurisdiction.

(b) The duty of the victim assistance coordinator is to ensure that a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim is afforded the rights granted victims, guardians, and relatives by Article 56.02 of this code. The victim assistance coordinator shall work closely with appropriate law enforcement agencies, prosecuting attorneys, the Board of Pardons and Paroles, and the judiciary in carrying out that duty.

(c) Each local law enforcement agency shall designate one person to serve as the agency's crime victim liaison. Each agency shall consult with the victim assistance coordinator in the office of the attorney representing the state to determine the most effective manner in which the crime victim liaison can perform the duties imposed on the crime victim liaison under this article.

(d) The duty of the crime victim liaison is to ensure that a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim is afforded the rights granted victims, guardians, or close relatives of deceased victims by Subdivisions (4), (6), and (9) of Article 56.02(a) of this code.

(e) The victim assistance coordinator shall send a copy of a victim impact statement to the court sentencing the defendant. If the court sentences the defendant to imprisonment in the Texas Department of Corrections, it shall attach the copy of the victim impact statement to the commitment papers.

Added by Acts 1985, 69th Leg., ch. 588, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1985. Amended by Acts 1989, 71st Leg., ch. 996, § 3, eff. Sept. 1, 1989; Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 4, eff. Sept. 1, 1991.

Art. 56.05. Reports Required

(a) The Board of Pardons and Paroles, the Texas Adult Probation Commission, and the Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse, designated as the planning body for the purposes of this article, shall develop a survey plan to maintain statistics on the numbers and types of persons to whom state and local agencies provide victim impact statements during each year.

(b) At intervals specified in the plan, the planning body may require any state or local agency to submit, in a form prescribed for the reporting of the information, statistical data on the numbers and types of persons to whom the agency provides victim impact statements and any other information required by the planning body. The form must be designed to protect the privacy of persons afforded rights under this chapter and to determine whether the selected agency or office is making a good faith effort to protect the rights of the persons served.

(c) The Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse shall develop crime victim assistance standards and distribute those standards to law enforcement officers and attorneys representing the state to aid those officers and prosecutors in performing duties imposed by this chapter.

Added by Acts 1985, 69th Leg., ch. 588, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1985. Subsec. (c) added by Acts 1989, 71st

REV_00264777

Leg., ch. 996, § 4, eff. Sept. 1, 1989.

Art. 56.06. Costs of medical examination

(a) A law enforcement agency that requests a medical examination of a victim of an alleged sexual assault for use in the investigation or prosecution of the offense shall pay all costs of the examination. A law enforcement agency or prosecuting attorney's office may pay all costs related to the testimony of a licensed health care professional in a criminal proceeding regarding the results of the medical examination or manner in which it was performed.

(b) This article does not require a law enforcement agency to pay any costs of treatment for injuries.

Added by Acts 1989, 71st Leg., ch. 2, § 5.05(a), eff. Aug. 28, 1989. Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 75, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1991.

Art. 56.07. Notification

At the initial contact or at the earliest possible time after the initial contact between the victim of a reported crime and the law enforcement agency having the responsibility for investigating that crime, that agency shall provide the victim a written notice containing:

(1) information about the availability of emergency and medical services, if applicable;

(2) notice that the victim has the right to receive information regarding compensation to victims of crime as provided by Subchapter B, Chapter 56, including information about:

(A) the costs that may be compensated under that Act and the amount of compensation, eligibility for compensation, and procedures for application for compensation under that Act;

(B) the payment for a medical examination for a victim of a sexual assault under Article 56.06 of this code; and

(C) referral to available social service agencies that may offer additional assistance;

(3) the name, address, and phone number of the law enforcement agency's victim assistance liaison;

(4) the address, phone number, and name of the crime victim assistance coordinator of the office of the attorney representing the state;

(5) the following statement:

"You may call the law enforcement agency's telephone number for the status of the case and information about victims' rights"; and

(6) the rights of crime victims under Article 56.02 of this code.

Added by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 5, eff. Sept. 1, 1991. Subd. (2) amended by Acts 1995,

REV_00264778

74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.95(108), eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

Art. 56.08. Notification of rights by attorney representing the state

(a) Not later than the 10th day after the date that an indictment or information is returned against a defendant for an offense, the attorney representing the state shall give to each victim of the offense a written notice containing:

(1) a brief general statement of each procedural stage in the processing of a criminal case, including bail, plea bargaining, parole restitution, and appeal;

(2) notification of the rights and procedures under this chapter;

(3) suggested steps the victim may take if the victim is subjected to threats or intimidation;

(4) notification of the right to receive information regarding compensation to victims of crime as provided by Subchapter B of this chapter, including information about:

(A) the costs that may be compensated under Subchapter B of this chapter, eligibility for compensation, and procedures for application for compensation under Subchapter B of this chapter;

(B) the payment for a medical examination for a victim of a sexual assault under Article 56.06 of this code; and

(C) referral to available social service agencies that may offer additional assistance;

(5) the name, address, and phone number of the local victim assistance coordinator;

(6) the case number and assigned court for the case;

(7) the right to file a victim impact statement with the office of the attorney representing the state and the pardons and paroles division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice; and

(8) notification of the right of a victim, guardian of a victim, or close relative of a deceased victim, as defined by Section 508.117, Government Code, to appear in person before a member of the Board of Pardons and Paroles as provided by Section 508.153, Government Code.

(b) If requested by the victim, the attorney representing the state, as far as reasonably practical, shall give to the victim notice of any scheduled court proceedings, changes in that schedule, the filing of a request for continuance of a trial setting, and any plea agreements to be presented to the court.

(c) A victim who receives a notice under Subsection (a) of this article and who chooses to receive other notice under law about the same case must keep the following persons informed of the victim's current address and phone number:

(1) the attorney representing the state; and

(2) the pardons and paroles division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice if after sentencing the defendant is confined in the institutional division.

REV_00264779

(d) An attorney representing the state who receives information concerning a victim's current address and phone number shall immediately provide that information to the community supervision and corrections department supervising the defendant, if the defendant is placed on community supervision.

Added by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 5, eff. Sept. 1, 1991. Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 253, § 2, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (a)(4) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.95(108), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (d) added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 252, § 2, eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 165, § 12.04, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.09. Victim's right to privacy

As far as reasonably practical, the address of the victim may not be a part of the court file except as necessary to identify the place of the crime. The phone number of the victim may not be a part of the court file.

Added by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 5, eff. Sept. 1, 1991.

Art. 56.10. Victim's discovery attendance

Unless absolutely necessary, victims or witnesses who are not incarcerated may not be required to attend depositions in a correctional facility.

Added by Acts 1991, 72nd Leg., ch. 202, § 5, eff. Sept. 1, 1991.

Art. 56.11. Notification to Victim of Release or Escape of Defendant

(a) The Texas Department of Criminal Justice or the sheriff, whichever has custody of the defendant in the case of a felony, or the sheriff in the case of a misdemeanor, shall notify the victim of the offense whenever a person convicted of an offense described by Subsection (c):

(1) completes the person's sentence and is released; or

(2) escapes from a correctional facility.

(b) If the Texas Department of Criminal Justice is required by Subsection (a) to give notice to the victim of an offense, the department shall also give notice to local law enforcement officials in the county in which the victim resides.

(c) This article applies to a person convicted of an offense involving family violence, stalking, or violation of a protective order or magistrate's order.

(d) It is the responsibility of a victim desiring notification of the offender's release to provide the Texas Department of Criminal Justice or the sheriff, as appropriate, with the address and telephone number of the victim or other person through whom the victim may be contacted and to notify the department or the sheriff of any change of address or telephone number of the victim or other person. Information obtained and maintained by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice or a sheriff under this subsection is privileged and confidential.

REV_00264780

(e) The Texas Department of Criminal Justice or the sheriff, as appropriate, shall make a reasonable attempt to give the notice required by Subsection (a):

(1) not later than the 30th day before the person completes the sentence and is released; or

(2) immediately if the person escapes from the correctional facility.

(f) An attempt by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice or the sheriff to give notice to the victim at the victim's last known address, as shown on the records of the department or agency, constitutes a reasonable attempt to give notice under this article.

(g) In this article:

(1) "Correctional facility" has the meaning assigned by Section 1.07, Penal Code.

(2) "Family violence" has the meaning assigned by Section 71.01, Family Code.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 10, § 6, eff. March 19, 1993. Subsec. (a) amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 657, § 6, eff. June 14, 1995; amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 1, § 8, eff. Jan. 28, 1997. Amended by Acts 1997, 75th Leg., ch. 670, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1997.

Art. 56.12. Notification of escape

(a) The Texas Department of Criminal Justice shall immediately make a reasonable attempt to notify the victim of an offense, the victim's guardian, or the victim's close relative, if the victim is deceased, whenever the offender escapes from a facility operated by the institutional division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice, if the victim, victim's guardian, or victim's close relative has notified the institutional division as provided by Subsection (b) of this article. An attempt by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice to give notice to the victim, the guardian of the victim, or a close relative of a deceased victim at the victim's, the guardian of the victim's, or a close relative of a deceased victim's last known telephone number or address as shown on the records of the department constitutes a reasonable attempt to give notice under this subsection.

(b) It is the responsibility of the victim, guardian, or close relative desiring notification of an offender's escape to notify the Texas Department of Criminal Justice of the desire for notification and any change of address.

Added by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 251, § 1, eff. May 29, 1995.

SUBCHAPTER B. CRIME VICTIMS' COMPENSATION

Art. 56.31. Short Title

This subchapter may be cited as the Crime Victims' Compensation Act.

Added by Acts 1993, 73rd Leg., ch. 268, § 6, eff. Sept. 1, 1993. Amended by Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 76, § 5.84(a), eff. Sept. 1, 1995; Acts 1995, 74th Leg., ch. 779, § 1, eff. Sept. 1, 1995.

REV_00264781

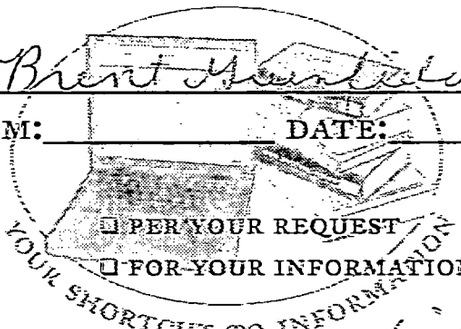
Victims Rights Amendment [Folder 3]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 2182/2093
9802



Box 62
Folder 12

REV_00264807

Executive Office of the President Law Library

EISENHOWER EXECUTIVE OFFICE BUILDING

ROOM 528 5-3397

TO: Brent Hartsell

ROOM: DATE:

MESSAGE: Bills pending + recently enacted law on victims' rights, as opposed to Constitutional amend. JB

FROM:

REV_00264808

CQ.com On Congress Jump to a publication GLOBAL SEARCH Word Bill Number HOME NEWS BILLS COMMITTEES MEMBERS SEARCH MYCQ

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3090

Sponsor:
Thomas, B. (R-CA)
Introduced:
Oct. 11, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to provide tax incentives for economic recovery.
Brief Title:
Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Michael W. Stevens and David Clarke, CQ Staff

As signed into law by the president on March 9, 2002.

Synopsis

HR3090 -- PL 107-147 extends unemployment benefits and allows businesses to take larger deductions on equipment purchases.

Highlights

The new law authorizes $8 billion in fiscal 2002 for a 13-week extension of unemployment benefits for workers who exhaust their normal 26 weeks of benefits. It also permits additional extensions in states with unemployment rates greater than 4 percent.

The measure allows businesses to deduct 30 percent of the cost of equipment purchases made from Sept. 11, 2001, through Sept. 10, 2004. It is estimated that this will cost $77.8 billion over five years.

The legislation also allows businesses to deduct losses in 2001 and 2002 to offset profits in the previous five years, at an estimated cost of $5.6 billion over five years.

The law establishes tax breaks and tax-exempt bonds for businesses in New York's "Liberty Zone," an area around the World Trade Center site, at an estimated cost of $5.6 billion over 10 years.

The measure extends 14 expiring tax credits, including a two-year extension for the electric vehicle credit and for businesses that hire former welfare recipients. It

REV_00264809

Related Bills

Sen. Jon Corzine, D-N.J., introduced a companion measure (S1812).

Outlook

Supporters say the hope the legislation can be the basis for a bipartisan plan to ensure that the ≤terrorism≥ ≤victims≥ are not deprived of the benefits that Congress wanted to grant them.

The Bush administration has not yet taken a position on the legislation.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3627

Sponsor:
Graham, L. (R-SC)
Introduced:
Jan. 24, 2002
Official Title:
A bill to protect the United States and its allies by imposing sanctions on countries and entities that aid and abet individuals or entities engaged in terrorist activity or fail to cooperate in the war against terrorism, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
No Safe Harbor Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

As introduced on Jan. 24, 2002.

Synopsis

HR3627 would permit sanctions on nations and entities that aid or harbor terrorists or otherwise fail to cooperate with the United States in its war on terrorism.

Highlights

The bill would allow the president to impose sanctions on any country or entity that he determined was:

-- failing to support U.S. counterterrorism investigations and failing to assist the

REV_00264818

United States or any of its allies in intelligence-gathering;

-- harboring terrorist suspects to protect them from prosecution by the United States or U.S. allies and failing to extradite terrorist suspects to the United States or to any of its allies; and

-- allowing individuals or entities to raise money for terrorism or recruit terrorists.

Among sanctions the president would be allowed to impose would be:

-- an economic embargo (including blocking the country's property or property interests in the United States, barring transactions in which any national of the country had an interest and barring trade with the country);

-- a ban on travel to and from the country; and

-- denial of entry into the United States as an immigrant or non-immigrant (except in the case of refugees) by any citizen or habitual resident of the country.

The president could sanction an entity by blocking all of its property and property interests in the United States or controlled by a U.S. citizen or by business interests that are subject to U.S. laws.

The president also would be allowed to vest and liquidate as much of the blocked property as he deemed necessary to "adequately compensate" terrorism ≤victims≥ or their families.

If he certified to Congress that doing so would be in the national interest, the president also could waive the sanctions against a particular country.

Finally, the legislation would assert that Congress finds "harboring, supporting or providing aid or protection to individuals or entities" involved in ≤terrorism≥ against the United States, U.S. citizens abroad or U.S. allies to be an act of "aggression" against the United States. The language would apply the same assertion to any nation or entity that failed to help the United States or U.S. allies in catching and punishing terrorists.

Background

HR3627 was introduced less than a week before President Bush used his 2002 State of the Union address to issue blunt new warnings to nations that sponsor terrorism or harbor terrorists.

After disclosing that American forces in Afghanistan had found diagrams of U.S. nuclear power plants and that "tens of thousands of trained terrorists are still at large," Bush told Congress that if some nations where terrorists are hiding or thriving "do not act, America will." He also fingered Iran, Iraq and North Korea by name, saying they made up "an axis of evil" that was attempting to develop nuclear, biological and chemical weapons.

REV_00264819

Since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States, the Bush administration has demanded that regimes around the world cooperate with its war on terrorism. In a Sept. 20, 2001, address to a joint session of Congress, Bush declared that all nations must make a decision: "Either you are with us, or you are with the terrorists."

Related Bills

The anti-terrorism law that Bush signed on Oct. 26, 2001, (HR3162 -- PL 107-56) makes it illegal for people in the United States to harbor an individual they know or should have known had engaged in or was about to engage in terrorist crimes.

Outlook

The bill would appear to have the potential for widespread support in both chambers, but another piece of legislation introduced by HR3627 sponsor Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., may point to a slight hurdle.

HJRES75, which the House passed on Dec. 20, 2001, would call on the president and the United Nations to "insist" on monitoring weapons development in Iraq. While it initially stated that Iraq's refusal to allow inspectors constituted "an act of aggression against the United States and its allies," the House International Relations Committee leadership softened the language to address concerns that such wording would give the president implicit authority to expand the war on terrorism to Iraq.

Some lawmakers argue that the president might need another congressional resolution authorizing force before expanding the war to Iraq or elsewhere. A joint resolution (SJRES23 -- PL 107-40) authorizing military force in response to Sept. 11 tied congressional support specifically to those events and made no mention of Iraq.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR2884

Sponsor:
Thomas, B. (R-CA)
Introduced:
Sept. 13, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax relief for victims of the terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001.
Brief Title:
Victims of Terrorism Tax Relief Act of 2001

REV_00264820

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By David Clarke, CQ Staff

As signed into law by the president on Jan. 23, 2002.

Synopsis

HR2884 -- PL 107-134 provides tax relief to families of terrorist victims.

Highlights

Tax relief provisions apply to victims of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States; the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing; and anthrax-related deaths between Sept. 11, 2001, and January 2002.

The legislation exempts from federal income tax any money earned during the year of the victim's death, as well as the preceding year.

Victim's families are assured a minimum benefit of at least $10,000.

The measure exempts $3 million of a victim's estate from state tax and $8.5 from federal tax.

Terrorist related payments made by the government, the victims' companies to families and charities will be tax-exempt, as will any other ≤terrorism≥-related death benefits.

None of a ≤victim≥'s forgiven debt can be taxed.

The exemption amount for disability trusts will increase to $3,000.

A state court must approve any structured settlement payments stemming from wounding, illness or death as a result of the terrorist attacks. Any agreement not approved by a court could be subject to a 40 percent excise tax.

The legislation allows companies to set up private foundations to assist victims' families.

The measure allow the IRS to extend tax-related and pension-related deadlines for people affected by the terrorist attacks.

For three years after enactment, the new law increases the amount of an individual's tax information the IRS is allowed to share with law enforcement officials investigating terrorist attacks.

Background

HR2884 was introduced and passed unanimously by the House two days after the Sept. 11 attacks, in which hijackers flew commercial airliners into the World Trade

REV_00264821

Center towers and the Pentagon. A fourth hijacked jetliner crashed in western Pennsylvania.

"We cannot lift the heavy burden of their loss from their shoulders. We cannot bring back their loved ones," said Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas, R-Calif. "But we can and will relieve the immediate financial pressures imposed by tax obligations."

Sens. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., and Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., advocated including a refund of payroll taxes and a broader tax break package for New York that would include provisions for businesses and residents. The Senate's version of fiscal 2002 defense spending legislation (HR3338) would provide $9.5 billion for relief to New York. Part of this package would include residential aid programs the New York senators have endorsed, such as $500 million in community bloc grants.

Advocates of the payroll tax refund have said it is needed to help the families of low-income workers killed in the attacks, but a spokeswoman for the Ways and Means Committee said the refund was left out because it could adversely affect the Social Security trust fund.

Related Bills

HR2882 would expedite the payment of benefits to public safety officers catastrophically injured -- and the families of those killed -- in the Sept. 11 attacks.

S1423, S1433 and S1440 all contain provisions similar to what was passed by the House and Senate.

The House included HR2884 in its last economic stimulus bill of 2001 (HR3529), which the chamber passed on Dec. 20, but added a minimum benefit of $10,000 in place of a payroll tax refund.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3338

Sponsor:
Lewis, Jerry (R-CA)
Introduced:
Nov. 19, 2001
Official Title:
An original bill making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes.

REV_00264822

Brief Title:
Department of Defense and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations for Recovery from and Response to Terrorist Attacks on the United States Act, 2002

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

As signed into law by the president on Jan. 10, 2002.

Synopsis

HR3338 -- PL 107-117 appropriates $317.4 billion in fiscal 2002 discretionary spending for the Defense Department and its programs. It also allocates $20 billion in funding previously appropriated by the emergency supplemental measure (HR2888 -- PL 107-38) that Congress enacted in response to the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States.

Highlights

In terms of overall Defense spending, the new law provides $19 billion more than in fiscal 2001 (including fiscal 2001 emergency supplemental funding) for the Defense Department, which is $1.9 billion less than President Bush's amended fiscal 2002 budget request.

Overall, the Defense portion provides $105 billion for operations and maintenance, $82.1 billion for military personnel (plus another $18.4 billion for defense-related health programs), $60.8 billion for weapons procurement and $48.9 billion for research and development.

The measure appropriates $881 million for a new Defense Department account devoted to counterterrorism activities and other unconventional threats. This includes the full request of $403 million -- a reduction of $40 million from fiscal 2001 -- for the Defense Department's Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, designed to safeguard and destroy nuclear stockpiles in Russia. The legislation also provides a reportedly large but classified percentage increase in funding for intelligence programs, including more money to upgrade human intelligence programs, enhance signals intelligence capabilities, accelerate the development of mapping and other reconnaissance systems and improve overall intelligence analytical capabilities.

It provides $7.8 billion for the Bush administration's highly controversial ballistic missile defense program and other related programs, about $500 million less than the president requested but $2.5 billion more than in fiscal 2001. The House version of the bill would have provided roughly the same amount for missile defense, while the Senate would have provided $7 billion, plus an additional $1.3 billion to be allocated either for missile defense or counterterrorism programs.

Much of the cut comes from restructuring the Space Based Infrared System (SBIRS)-Low program, designed to track missiles via satellite but which has drawn criticism because of program delays and cost overruns. The House and Senate agreed to compromise on about $250 million for space-based technology programs, and funding for the troubled SBIRS-Low and other programs would be drawn from that fund.

REV_00264823

The measure also includes a $20 billion deal that would let the Air Force lease a fleet of Boeing 767 air tankers for 10 years to replace aging KC-130 planes.

Personnel.

The agreement's $82.1 billion for military personnel is $6.2 billion more than in fiscal 2001 and $251 million more than the president requested.

This includes full funding for the administration's proposed military pay raise, which guarantees all personnel an increase of 4.6 percent to 10 percent. The total also includes a provision designed to reduce out-of-pocket housing costs for service personnel to about 11.3 percent, and another that allows some mid-level personnel to transfer to spouses or children a portion of their Montgomery GI Bill education benefits.

In addition to the $82.1 billion, the measure slightly exceeds Bush's $18.3 billion request for the Defense Health Program, providing a more-than-50 percent increase from fiscal 2001, including a new "TRICARE for Life" program for eligible military retirees age 65 or older.

Operations and maintenance.

The legislation provides $105 billion, $1.7 billion less than requested but $8.2 billion more than in fiscal 2001, for operations and maintenance -- which includes training, supply and equipment maintenance, Defense Department administrative functions, some environmental restoration, humanitarian assistance and other programs. Much of the overall increase will be used for spare parts, real property maintenance and depot maintenance, as well as flying and other training hours.

The total includes the president's request for a 3.6 percent pay increase for Defense Department civilian employees and a $537 million requested increase for force protection measures aimed at protecting U.S. forces, assets and facilities.

Procurement.

The report's $60.8 billion for weapons procurement includes:

-- the full request of $3 billion for 48 F/A-18 E/F fighter aircraft (the Navy's upgrade of the current F/A-18 C/D aircraft, the primary strike aircraft of both the Navy and the Marine Corps);

-- the full request of $3 billion for DDG-51 Arleigh Burke-class guided-missile destroyer procurement, plus $125 million in advanced funding for the ship;

-- $2.8 billion, roughly equal to Bush's request, to purchase a total of 15 C-17 cargo planes;

REV_00264824

-- the full request of $2.6 billion for 13 low-rate initial production F-22 aircraft;

-- the full request of $1.6 billion for procurement of the fourth boat in the Virginia class of attack submarines, which will replace retiring Los Angeles-class submarines and constitute the bulk of the attack submarine force in the future;

-- $1 billion for procurement of 11 V-22 Osprey tilt-rotor aircraft (one less than requested), including nine MV-22 Ospreys for the Marine Corps and two CV-22 Ospreys for the Special Operations Forces. (The measure also caps the annual production rate at 11 aircraft until the V-22 has completed its program restructuring and has returned to flight status.);

-- $729 million in unrequested funds for various National Guard and Reserves procurement accounts, including funding for eight U-60 Blackhawk helicopters and two C-130J transports to be used solely for domestic firefighting in the West;

-- full funding for key Army transformation programs, including $663 million for procurement and $102 million for research and development of the Interim Armored Vehicle;

-- $450 million, $324 million more than requested, for the conversion of four Trident ballistic missile submarines to "Tactical Trident" cruise missile platforms;

-- the full request of $371 million for one ADC(X) (also called "T-AKE") cargo and ammunition resupply ship;

-- the full request of $273 million for procurement of one JSTARS long-range, air-to-ground surveillance system aircraft, which is designed to locate, classify and track ground targets in all weather conditions. (The measure also provides $49 million for advance procurement in fiscal 2003.);

-- the full request of $267 million for the eighth LHD-8 amphibious assault ship, which carries helicopters, AV-8B Harrier attack aircraft and amphibious assault and landing craft; and

-- an increase of $250 million from fiscal 2001 for Unmanned Aerial Vehicles (UAVs or "drones"), which can provide firsthand reconnaissance of opposition forces without placing lives at risk and are being used extensively in Afghanistan. (The funding includes additional funding for Predator UAVs requested by the president, as well as unrequested funds for acquisition of the follow-on Predator B variant.).

Also, because of a perceived lack of programmatic and fiscal discipline in the Navy's shipbuilding programs, as well as concerns that the Navy's use of alternative financing mechanisms such as advanced appropriations serve to artificially increase shipbuilding rates, the measure bars the Defense Department from budgeting for shipbuilding programs on the basis of advanced appropriations.

Research and development.

The new law's $48.9 billion for research and development includes:

REV_00264825

-- the full request of about $1.5 billion for the Joint Strike Fighter, including $767 million for Navy JSF development and $780 million for Air Force JSF development;

-- the full request of $881.6 million for development of the F-22;

-- $219 million, $64 million more than Bush requested, for continued research and development of the B-2 bomber; and

-- the full request of $36 million for research and development of the CVN-77, the Navy's next nuclear aircraft carrier, which will serve as a transition ship from the Nimitz class of nuclear carriers to the next-generation CV(X) aircraft carrier. The measure also appropriates the president's request of $139 million for advance procurement of CVN (X) and $314 million for research and development funds for the CVN (X).

Supplemental spending.

In terms of the $20 billion in supplemental funding, the allocation provides $8.3 billion for homeland defense; $8.2 billion to help New York City and parts of Pennsylvania and Virginia that were directly affected by the Sept. 11 attacks; and $3.5 billion in additional defense spending. The $20 billion also includes $50 million in reconstruction aid for Afghanistan.

The $8.3 billion for homeland defense is roughly $2.8 billion more than the president's request and the House level, but slightly less than the Senate-passed measure. It includes:

-- $2.5 billion in additional funding for improving federal, state and local bioterrorism response and preparedness activities, including money to acquire 300 million doses of smallpox vaccine;

-- $745 million for the FBI;

-- $549 million for the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

-- $500 million for the Postal Service;

-- $400 million for the Customs Service;

-- $309 million for Federal Aviation Administration facilities and equipment, including $109 million for explosive detection systems, $100 million for cockpit door and transponder modifications and $65 million to hire additional sky marshals;

-- $256 million to enhance the security of legislative branch facilities and employees;

-- $226 million for nuclear non-proliferation activities, including $120 million to secure nuclear materials at sites in Russia and the former Soviet states and $15 million for a program to find civilian jobs for Russian nuclear scientists;

REV_00264826

-- $210 million for emergency planning assistance for the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) firefighter grants program; and

-- $209 million for Coast Guard operating expenses and anti-terrorism activities.

The $8.2 billion to help New York City and other areas directly impacted by the Sept. 11 attacks is $1.1 billion more than the House bill and the president's request but $1.3 billion less than the Senate level. When combined with $3 billion in previously released funds, total funding for New York and the other areas will be approximately $11.2 billion. The funding in HR3338 includes:

-- $4.4 billion for disaster relief through FEMA;

-- $2 billion in unrequested funds for Community Development Block Grants for economic recovery assistance;

-- $300 million in additional transportation assistance and security enhancements, including funds for Amtrak, subways and ferries; and

-- $229 million for state and local law enforcement.

The $3.5 billion in defense funding is $3.8 billion less than the House bill and the president's request but $1.5 billion more than the Senate level. It is designed to:

-- increase the military's worldwide posture;

-- enhance situational awareness;

-- repair and upgrade the Pentagon;

-- conduct offensive counterterrorism operations;

-- provide enhanced force protection and improve command and control; and

-- enhance initial crisis response.

The measure also provides authority for agencies to reimburse the National Guard for duties it has undertaken since Sept. 11.

Other provisions.

The measure provides the president's request of $1.3 billion for the Defense Environmental Restoration Account, which is intended to rectify contamination caused by past actions, ensure present compliance and prepare a more environmentally sensitive military establishment for the future. Funding for environmental restoration also is included elsewhere in the measure, as well as in the fiscal 2002 military construction (HR2904 -- PL 107-64) and energy and water (HR2311 -- PL 107-66) spending laws.

The legislation includes several provisions designed to reduce Pentagon extends for five years a tax break for financial services companies with overseas income. It is estimated that the cost of these extensions will be $11.2 billion over five years.

REV_00264827

Background

In late 2001, most economists believed that an already sagging economy had been pushed into a recession by the economic impacts of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the United States. Hundreds of thousands of jobs were lost, with the airline industry alone sustaining more than 100,000 job cuts. Further economic losses were felt by the tourism and hospitality industries, and the financial sector was devastated by the destruction of the World Trade Center. In light of those losses, and in the context of an economy already hurting from a year of stock market contraction and anemic growth, pressure grew for a large-scale federal intervention in the economy.

On Oct. 5, 2001, President Bush proposed a $75 billion economic stimulus package comprising income tax rate cuts, tax rebates for low-income works, business tax cuts and abolition of the corporate alternative minimum tax (AMT). Many of those proposals were drafted into the House bill, only at a higher cost than proposed by the president.

However, Democrats and Republicans had significant disagreements about the size, scope and shape of an economic stimulus package. While Republicans sought additional tax cuts and acceleration of the 2001 tax cut (HR1836 -- PL 107-16), Democrats emphasized the expansion of unemployment benefits and infrastructure security spending.

The House initially passed HR3090 by a two-vote margin on a near party-line vote Oct. 24, 2001, after three hours of contentious debate in which Republicans accused Democrats of reviving "class warfare."

The House version was a $99.5 billion economic stimulus plan that contained tax-cutting provisions and spending increases but was weighted more heavily toward tax cuts. It would have lowered federal revenue by $99.5 billion in fiscal 2002 and $159.4 billion over 10 years.

When House Republicans advanced their bill, Senate Democrats decided to do the same, with little input from Republicans. At a contentious markup of the language written by Finance Chairman Max Baucus, D-Mont., Republicans criticized this decision, saying it went against the committee's "bipartisan tradition." They pointed to the tax cut compromise reached earlier in the year by then-Chairman Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, and Baucus as an example of how the stimulus negotiations should have been handled.

The Senate Finance Committee substituted into HR3090 the text from a draft Democratic bill. As subsequently approved by the committee, the language would have offered a $67 billion economic stimulus plan that would have included about $36 billion in tax cuts and rebates, $26 billion in benefits and more than $5 billion in farm aid.

REV_00264810

administrative and overhead costs, such as reducing Pentagon headquarters staff by 15 percent and reducing the use of outside contractors.

It provides $841 million for the drug interdiction activities, $22 million more than the president requested but $26 million less than in fiscal 2001.

Also, to address House concerns about the Army's ability to meet deadlines for its transformation to 21st century technologies, the measure establishes an Army venture capital fund to make equity investments in nascent companies developing technologies important to the Army that also have commercial applications. The fund will be modeled on the CIA's In-Q-Tel corporation that performs a similar function for the intelligence agency.

The report also provides spending authority for the Navy to pay all claims arising out of the collision between the submarine USS Greenville and the Japanese training ship Ehime Maru.

Background

The defense spending measure is usually one of the first of the 13 appropriations bills to be cleared by Congress, generally with strong bipartisan support. The exceptions often have come in years when the White House has changed occupants and the new president has proposed big changes in budgetary and monetary policy.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld wanted to add more than $35 billion to the $310.5 billion the Clinton administration had projected for the Pentagon budget in fiscal 2002, and the Bush White House approved only about half that. As a result, Rumsfeld's effort to "transform" U.S. defense strategy and make the forces more agile and more lethal -- a major undertaking that met with resistance from several corners -- stalled for months, with senior military officers saying they simply lacked the money to prepare for the future while protecting the nation in the present. The length of Rumsfeld's strategic review pushed back the authorization and appropriations processes and was the reason the Pentagon had to amend its initial budget request.

Moreover, in August, Democrats argued that, because of Bush's tax cut package (HR1836 -- PL 107-16) and an uncertain economic forecast, the increases in defense spending that Bush was seeking would have to come at the expense of the Social Security and Medicare trust funds or other popular social programs.

The Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks created a climate of urgency that more or less erased that view. Few lawmakers continued to call for reductions in defense spending, and the two parties quickly reached compromises on funding for controversial programs such as missile defense.

The House Appropriations Committee unanimously approved the $317.5 billion core of the bill at a markup on Oct. 24, 2001, but the legislation remained unfinished as members were told they would reconvene to tack on an additional $20 billion in funding mainly for New York's recovery effort, military operations and homeland defense. That funding represents half of the $40 billion emergency appropriations package enacted after Sept. 11 (HR2888 -- PL 107-38). The other half of that supplemental is being spent at the administration's discretion.

REV_00264828

New York Republicans on the committee held up the bill's consideration for weeks while they lobbied for more of the $20 billion to go toward New York's recovery effort.

When Bush threatened to veto any bill that added more than $20 billion in extra funding, they eventually settled on a deal giving New York $7.8 billion of the $20 billion. That figure is more than New York originally was slated to get as its share of the first half of the emergency money, but in exchange its total out of the full $40 billion dropped to $11.4 billion, or less than 60 percent of what the administration initially had promised.

David R. Obey, Wis., the committee's ranking Democrat, pushed unsuccessfully for his own $7.2 billion in additional homeland defense spending. The House Rules Committee effectively blocked Obey from offering his amendment on the floor by refusing to protect it from a point of order.

The Senate committee added an extra $15 billion in homeland defense spending as an amendment after it had approved the bill unanimously. The amendment was adopted by voice vote, with Republicans dissenting.

But when procedural votes on the Senate floor made clear that Republicans had the might to block the $15 billion emergency spending add-on, the Democrats settled for shifting billions from military operations into bioterrorism preparedness, homeland defense and New York's reconstruction in the bill's allocation of $20 billion. Some of the key parts of the Senate committee's add-on for homeland defense, authored by Senate Appropriations Chairman Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., survived in the portion devoted to ≤terrorism≥ preparedness.

The key issue holding up the bill in conference, however, was the tanker lease provision. Opponents said it would be more cost-effective to buy the tankers and that the deal was a bailout for Boeing Co. However, provision's sponsor, Senate Appropriations ranking Republican Ted Stevens, Alaska, won the blessing of key appropriators in the House. A Senate amendment that would have let the president divert the money for the lease deal to other programs if they were deemed vital to national security was stripped out of the conference report.

Conferees dropped a controversial provision that would have prevented U.S. cooperation with a proposed International Criminal Court. The court would handle war crimes and other human ≤rights≥ violations, but U.S military leaders and many lawmakers worry that it would expose U.S. troops to politically motivated accusations and trials. Reflecting widespread conservative opposition to the court, the Senate adopted an amendment offered by Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that would have restricted U.S. participation in U.N. peacekeeping operations if U.S troops were not exempted from prosecution by the court. It also would have barred U.S military aid to countries unless they signed agreements to shield U.S. troops from being handed over to the court.

REV_00264829

Although the House had approved a similar amendment as part of a State Department authorization bill (HR1646), appropriators chose to drop the language from the final bill. They did, however, include language preventing Pentagon funds from being used to support the court.

Related Bills

The conference report to HR3338 is consistent with an overall defense budget authority of about $343 billion, including the defense bill, the fiscal 2002 military construction spending law (HR2904 -- PL 107-64) and the Energy Department nuclear weapons activities funded by the fiscal 2002 energy and water appropriations law (HR2311 -- PL 107-66). The defense portion of the bill tracks closely with the fiscal 2002 defense authorization law (S1438 -- PL 107-107).

Attorney General John Ashcroft has said he would sign a letter promising to help New Yorkers win more money through the ≤victims≥ compensation fund created by the airline bailout law (HR2926 -- PL 107-42).

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

S1729

Sponsor:
Kennedy, E. (D-MA)
Introduced:
Nov. 27, 2001
Official Title:
An original bill to provide assistance with respect to the mental health needs of individuals affected by the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001.
Brief Title:
Post ≤Terrorism≥ Mental Health Improvement Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Karin M. Caifa, CQ Staff

As passed by the Senate on Dec. 12, 2001.

Synopsis

S1729 would increase mental health assistance to individuals affected by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States.

Highlights

REV_00264830

The bill would authorize additional funding to state and local governments for the training of mental health professionals in the treatment of those who are ≤victims≥ of such disasters.

The legislation would implement a grant program for areas directly impacted by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks to address long-term needs. State and local governments could use the money to provide treatment, including medication, for those suffering from a psychiatric illness as a result of an attack. They also could use the money for outreach programs to encourage those affected by the attacks to seek mental health care if needed. The bill would authorize such sums as necessary in fiscal 2002 through 2005.

The measure also would extend through fiscal 2005 an existing program (PL 106-505) that provides assistance for children who experience violence-related stress.

Background

Psychiatrists testifying before the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee on Sept. 26, 2001, warned that trauma resulting from Sept. 11 could lead to long-term mental illness if symptoms were left untreated. A recent study by the Pew Charitable Trusts found that 71 percent of Americans have had trouble sleeping at night, trouble concentrating or felt depressed since the attacks.

As panel chairman, bill sponsor Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., has voiced his support for S1729 and several other mental health initiatives this session.

"Access to mental health services is one of the most important civil ≤rights≥ issues facing the nation," Kennedy said. "One in five Americans will suffer some form of mental illness this year, but only a third of them will receive treatment."

Related Bills

HR3448 is a comprehensive legislative package aimed at improving the nation's ability to respond effectively and quickly to bioterrorist threats and other public health emergencies.

S1539, S1635 and HR3106 contain provisions for addressing mental health in children following terrorist attacks.

Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., and Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., authored a mental health parity provision for the fiscal 2002 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill (HR3061). The proposal would bar group health plans that provide mental health coverage from imposing tighter restrictions on that coverage than on coverage for physical ailments.

Outlook

S1729 was referred to the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which planned to consider the bill in early 2002.

REV_00264831

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3529

Sponsor:
Thomas, B. (R-CA)
Introduced:
Dec. 19, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to provide tax incentives for economic recovery and assistance to displaced workers.
Brief Title:
Economic Security and Worker Assistance Act of 2001

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By David Clarke, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect House passage on Dec. 20, 2001.

Synopsis

HR3529 is a comprehensive economic stimulus plan.

Highlights

The measure would provide tax breaks for businesses and individuals, extend expiring tax credits, extend unemployment benefits, provide a refundable tax credit for health insurance and provide assistance to families of the victims of terrorism.

Business tax provisions.

The measure would reduce the corporate alternative minimum tax (AMT), designed to prevent wealthy taxpayers from using credits and deductions to pay little or no tax, by allowing businesses to apply deductions on depreciation adjustment, net operating losses and foreign tax credits against minimum tax liability.

It would let businesses use losses over 2001 and 2002 to offset profits made during the previous five years.

The bill would allow businesses an additional 30 percent first-year deduction on the purchase of equipment bought between Sept. 10, 2001, and Sept. 11, 2004.

For 2002 and 2003, the amount small businesses could expense for the purchase of new equipment would be increased from $24,000 to $35,000. Beginning in 2004, the amount would be $25,000. The total cost of equipment eligible for expensing would be increased to $325,000 during 2002 and 2003.

Individual tax provisions.

The measure would provide a tax refund of $300 to individuals and $600 to couples who filed an income tax return but did not receive a refund under the spring 2001 tax cut law (HR1836 - PL 107-16). Individuals and couples who received a partial refund from the tax cut bill would get the difference between what they were awarded and the $300 or $600.

The 27 percent tax rate, which applies to income in the $27,050 to $65,550 range for single taxpayers, would be reduced to 25 percent effective Jan. 1, 2002. Under existing law, this rate cut is not scheduled until 2006. In order to offset any increased AMT for an individual's tax liability caused by the acceleration of the rate reduction, the measure would temporarily increase the amount of income exempt from AMT. In 2002 and 2003, the exemption would be increased by $1,600 for individuals and $3,200 for couples. In 2004, the amounts would be increased by $850 for individuals and $1,700 for couples.

Health and unemployment.

The measure would provide a 60 percent refundable tax credit to workers laid off between March 15, 2001, and December 2003 to pay for health insurance for up to 12 months. The same workers would have the ≤right≥ to no-pre-existing-condition insurance if they were covered by their employer the previous year.

The bill would authorize $4 billion in block grants to states for health care and re-employment assistance, and an additional $4.6 billion in direct funding over two years for health care.

The measure would extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks to workers who lost their jobs after March 15, 2001. In addition, it would transfer close to $9 billion in federal unemployment funds to the states over two years.

Terror ≤victim≥ tax relief.

The tax relief provisions would apply to the families of ≤victims≥ of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States; anthrax attacks that occurred between Sept. 11, 2001, and Jan. 1, 2002; and the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing.

The measure would:

-- exempt ≤victims≥ from income tax liability for the year of death and the previous year, with a minimum of $10,000 per ≤victim≥;

-- exempt $3 million of a ≤victim≥'s estate from state tax and $8.5 million from federal tax;

REV_00264833

-- exempt income resulting from forgiveness of debt in 2001;

-- exempt payments made by the government, charities and the ≤victims≥' companies to families, along with any other ≤terrorism≥-related death benefits; and

-- allow the IRS to postpone any tax- or pension-related deadlines for ≤victim≥'s families.

The bill would require a state court to approve any structured settlement payments stemming from wounding, illness or death from the terrorist attacks. Any agreement that was not approved by a court could be subject to a 40 percent excise tax.

Aid for New York.

HR3529 would authorize $15 billion in tax-exempt bonds over three years for financing commercial, residential rental and public utility property in lower Manhattan's "Liberty Zone."

The measure would extend from two to five years the amount of time to reinvest insurance proceeds without paying taxes on the gains as long as a substantial amount of that money was invested in New York.

A 30 percent depreciation deduction for businesses would be extended through 2006, and through 2009 for residential and non-residential properties.

The value of property small businesses could expense would be increased from $35,000 to $75,000.

Tax and program extensions.

The measure would extend for two years:

-- the Work Opportunity tax credit;

-- the Welfare-to-Work tax credit;

-- the deduction for clean fuel vehicles and refueling property;

-- the credit for the production of electricity from wind, biomass or poultry-waste facilities; and

-- the treatment of non-refundable personal credits under the AMT.

The measure would extend by one year the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program's supplemental grants program and the TANF contingency fund.

Background

The Joint Committee on Taxation (JCT) estimates that HR3529 would cost $89.8

REV_00264834

billion in fiscal 2002, $214.2 billion over five years and $156.8 billion over 10 years. The panel estimates that the bill's business tax provisions would cost $46.1 billion in fiscal 2002, $96.9 billion over five years and $41.3 billion over 10 years. It estimates that the individual tax provisions contained in the bill would cost $27.3 billion in fiscal 2002 and $73.7 billion over 10 years.

Most economists believe that an already sagging economy was pushed into a recession by the economic impacts of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States. Hundreds of thousands of jobs were lost, with the airline industry alone sustaining more than 100,000 job cuts. Further economic losses were felt by the tourism and hospitality industries, and the financial sector was devastated by the destruction of the World Trade Center. In light of those losses, and in the context of an economy already hurting from a year of stock market contraction and anemic growth, pressure grew for a large-scale federal intervention in the economy.

On Oct. 5, 2001, President Bush proposed a $75 billion economic stimulus package comprising income tax rate cuts, tax rebates for low-income works, business tax cuts and abolition of the corporate AMT. Many of those proposals were drafted into a House bill (HR3090), only at a higher cost than proposed by the president.

However, Democrats and Republicans had significant disagreements about the size, scope and shape of an economic stimulus package. While Republicans sought additional tax cuts and acceleration of the previous tax cut, Democrats emphasized the expansion of unemployment benefits and infrastructure security spending.

On Oct. 24, 2001, the House passed HR3090 by a two-vote margin on a near party-line vote after three hours of contentious debate in which Republicans accused Democrats of reviving "class warfare." Earlier, the chamber rejected a $110 billion Democratic alternative.

When House Republicans advanced their bill, Senate Democrats decided to do the same, with little input from Republicans. At a contentious markup of the language written by Finance Chairman Max Baucus, D-Mont., Republicans criticized this decision, saying it went against the committee's "bipartisan tradition."

Democrats cited House Republicans' decision to leave early-October negotiations between the two chambers as the first shot in the partisan battle.

Along with complaints about too much spending, committee Republicans criticized agricultural subsidies in the bill, such as $25 million for a sugar beet disaster program, as special-interest provisions with little stimulative effect.

When the Democrats brought their bill to the Senate floor, Republicans used a procedural tactic that required supporters to muster 60 votes, nine more than the Democrats could manage. That effectively halted the bill until further negotiations could take place.

What ensued was more than a month of negotiations and finger pointing as House Republicans and Senate Democrats attempted to keep their priorities in play and blame the other side if discussions bore no legislation.

REV_00264835

Along the way, Republicans criticized Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, S.D., following news reports that he told fellow Democrats a bill would not be brought to the floor if it did not have the approval of two-thirds of their caucus. Democrats were quick to criticize House Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas when he left town for a weekend with scheduled negotiations, claiming he wanted to attend a fundraiser while his aides insisted he was leaving to rest after a draining week of negotiations that led to the passage of fast-track trade authority legislation (HR3005).

With negotiations barely crawling forward, the White House became involved on Dec. 11, offering a $93 billion plan after meeting with members of the Senate Centrist Coalition. The president's plan attempted to placate Democrats by offering a tax credit to cover 50 percent of unemployed workers' health insurance over two years and extending unemployment insurance by 13 weeks in all states.

But Democrats balked at the acceleration of the 27 percent tax rate, the lack of funding for health care and AMT provisions they said looked like a repeal of the tax. Democrats wanted direct funding for unemployed workers that would cover 75 percent of COBRA, the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (PL 99-272), continuation health coverage premiums and Medicaid assistance for people ineligible for the program.

As 2001 drew to a close without agreement, House Republicans attempted to pressure Daschle by saying they would bring to the floor a bill (HR3529) similar to the president's plan. Daschle did not blink, even as the House passed the bill on Dec. 20, 2001.

While the White House and Republicans said they had more than 50 votes for the bill in the Senate -- Democrats John B. Breaux, La., Ben Nelson, Neb., and Zell Miller, Ga. had pledged their support -- the GOP did not have the 60 votes needed to waive a budget point of order. In response to Republican cries that he was using a parliamentary maneuver to kill the bill, Daschle said the stimulus package would have to live up to the same point of order Senate Republicans used to defeat the Democrats' plan.

Despite the concessions contained within HR3529, including removal of the corporate AMT refund, Daschle said the bill still was too generous to business interests, would cost too much and fell short on health care.

Daschle said he felt that stimulus negotiations were so difficult in comparison to other legislation considered after the Sept. 11 attacks because economic policy is the major issue that divides the parties. "There is a philosophical divide that evidences itself in these debates constantly, and this no different," he said.

Congress cleared a separate bill covering victims' tax relief (HR2884) after the stimulus talks ended.

Related Bills

HR3090 is a $99.5 billion economic stimulus plan that contains tax-cutting provisions and spending increases but is weighted more heavily toward tax cuts. It would lower federal revenue by $99.5 billion in fiscal 2002 and $159.4 billion over 10 years. The measure would repeal the corporate AMT and refund money collected from the tax.

REV_00264836

The Senate Finance Committee substituted its own $67 billion stimulus plan into HR3090. That would include about $36 billion in tax cuts and rebates, $26 billion in benefits and more than $5 billion in farm aid.

Outlook

Daschle would not say that plans for an economic stimulus plan were dead, preferring to use the word "dormant." When Congress returns in 2002, debate about at least some of the provisions contained in the different plans or discussed during negotiations could be revived.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3413

Sponsor:
Kennedy, P. (D-RI)
Introduced:
Dec. 5, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish a program of grants to states and political subdivisions of states for the provision of mental health services in response to public health emergencies, including disasters resulting from ≤terrorism≥, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
Extended Disaster Mental Health Services Act of 2001

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Karin M. Caifa, CQ Staff

As introduced on Dec. 5, 2001.

Synopsis

HR3413 would authorize a grant program to help states respond to mental health needs resulting from public health emergencies or terrorist attacks.

Highlights

REV_00264837

Grassley said that some Democrats were unhappy about the earlier compromise and were seeking "payback." He also suggested that Democrats advanced their plan so they would only have to negotiate with Republicans once -- in conference.

Democrats cited House Republicans' decision to leave early-October negotiations between the two chambers as the first shot in the partisan battle.

Along with complaints of too much spending, committee Republicans criticized agricultural subsidies in the bill, such as $25 million for a sugar beet disaster program, as special-interest provisions with little stimulative effect.

When the Democrats brought their bill to the Senate floor, Republicans used a procedural tactic that required supporters to muster 60 votes, nine more than the Democrats could manage. That effectively halted the bill until further negotiations could take place.

Signs of economic recovery in early 2002 drained support for a comprehensive stimulus package. However, with the normal 26-week period of unemployment benefits set to expire for workers who lost their jobs around Sept. 11, 2001, pressure remained to extend those benefits.

On Feb. 14, 2002, the Senate amended the House-passed measure to include just the unemployment benefits extension. The House then amended the Senate version to include some corporate tax breaks as well as the extension of unemployment benefits and voted overwhelmingly to send the measure back to the Senate. House Republicans left out provisions, such as a repeal of the corporate AMT, that previously had grounded the legislation in the Senate.

Related Bills

HR3529 would provide tax breaks for businesses and individuals, extend expiring tax credits, extend unemployment benefits, provide a refundable tax credit for health insurance and provide assistance to families of the <victims> of <terrorism>. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the bill would cost $89.8 billion in fiscal 2002, $214.2 billion over five years and $156.8 billion over 10 years

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3633

Sponsor:
Traficant (D-OH)
Introduced:
Jan. 24, 2002

REV_00264811

The legislation would authorize necessary funding for fiscal 2002 through 2006 for grants to states for mental health services in response to public health emergencies. The grants could be used for:

-- crisis counseling;

-- outreach and screening programs to identify those at risk of developing mental health disorders;

-- extended mental health services (beyond immediate crisis counseling) for those with diagnosed mental health disorders resulting from or exacerbated by the emergency; and

-- outreach services to inform communities of the availability of crisis counseling and extended services.

In order to receive a grant, a state would have to demonstrate that it had implemented a statewide response plan for mental health services following an emergency. HR3413 would authorize $25 million annually for fiscal 2002 through 2006 for grants to implement these plans if states did not already have them. Statewide plans would have to include:

-- detailed descriptions of how to care for special populations, such as the elderly, children and people with existing mental health disorders;

-- an effort to coordinate with education, public safety and media officials; and

-- the designation of a state official who would administer the plan.

The bill also would authorize $2 million annually for fiscal 2002 through 2006 for a national mental health crisis response technical assistance center. The center, to be established within the Department of Health and Human Services, would:

-- provide technical expertise on planning, preparedness and response evaluation activities;

-- develop policy guidelines on mental health concerns related to crisis incidents;

-- develop and conduct training events and conferences on mental health needs of disaster ≤victims≥ and witnesses;

-- serve as the principal clearinghouse for the collection and dissemination of information concerning the mental health aspects of public health emergencies; and

-- provide onsite technical expertise during and following public health emergencies.

The bill would authorize additional funding to state and local governments for the training of mental health professionals in the treatment of disaster victims.

REV_00264838

Background

Psychiatrists testifying before the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee on Sept. 26, 2001, warned that trauma resulting from the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States could lead to long-term mental illness if symptoms were left untreated. A recent study by the Pew Charitable Trusts found that 71 percent of Americans have had trouble sleeping at night, trouble concentrating or felt depressed since the attacks.

Related Bills

HR3448 is a comprehensive legislative package aimed at improving the nation's ability to respond effectively and quickly to bioterrorist threats and other public health emergencies.

S1729 would increase mental health assistance to individuals affected by the Sept. 11 attacks.

S1539, S1635 and HR3106 contain provisions for addressing mental health in children following terrorist attacks.

Sens. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., and Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., authored a mental health parity provision for the fiscal 2002 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill (HR3061). The proposal would bar group health plans that provide mental health coverage from imposing tighter restrictions on that coverage than on coverage for physical ailments.

Outlook

HR3413 was referred to the House Energy and Commerce Committee. It is doubtful that the panel will take up the measure before the end of 2001.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HConRes280

Sponsor:
Hyde (R-IL)
Introduced:
Dec. 4, 2001
Official Title:
A concurrent resolution expressing solidarity with Israel in the fight against terrorism.

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

As adopted by the House on Dec. 5, 2001.

Synopsis

HCONRES280 would condemn the suicide bomb attacks in Israel over the weekend of Dec. 1-2, 2001, and call on the president to take "any and all necessary" steps to ensure that the Palestinian Authority (PA) cracks down on terrorism.

Highlights

The resolution would formally condemn the attacks, express "outrage" at the "ongoing Palestinian terrorist campaign" and express solidarity between the United States and Israel.

It would insist that the PA take steps to end terrorism and demand that the authority take immediate action to:

-- destroy the infrastructure of Palestinian terrorist groups;

-- arrest those terrorists who Israel has said should be incarcerated; and

-- either prosecute those terrorists, give convicts "the stiffest possible punishment" and make them serve their full sentences, or hand over all arrested terrorists to Israel.

The resolution would urge the president to take all necessary steps, including suspending all relations with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and the PA, to ensure that the PA complied.

It also would urge the president to insist that all nations that harbor or support Palestinian terrorism end such support and prosecute all terrorists within their borders.

Finally, the resolution would commend President Bush for his conduct in the international fight against terrorism and his "forthright response" to the suicide attacks in Israel.

Background

The string of three suicide bombings, believed to be the deadliest 24 hours of terrorism in Israel's history, left 26 Israelis dead and dozens wounded. Two of the blasts took place at a pedestrian mall in Jerusalem's nightlife district; the other was on a crowded bus in Haifa. Several of the ≤victims≥ were teenagers.

It is believed that the attacks, for which the extremist group Hamas took responsibility, were primarily retaliation for the Israeli assassination in November 2001 of a top Hamas commander, Mahmoud Abu Hanoud.

REV_00264840

President Bush and other U.S. officials strongly condemned the attacks, with the administration's new Middle East envoy, retired Gen. Anthony C. Zinni, calling them "the deepest evil one can imagine." The sharp reaction caps months of U.S. exasperation with Arafat's failure to deliver on repeated pledges to restrain Palestinian violence. The administration also reportedly was unimpressed by the low- to mid-level arrests that the PA made the day after the first wave of suicide bombings.

Arafat's officials have made some key arrests since the attacks, but he argues that Israel's retaliatory attacks in Palestinian territories, as well as the Israeli military presence in the territories, have undercut his efforts.

Pro-Israel lawmakers have likened Israel's ongoing fight against <terrorism> to the U.S.-led efforts to root out terrorism worldwide. In light of the early December attacks, some are openly comparing the PA to the Taliban and many others are questioning whether Arafat is capable of being an effective leader and peacemaker.

Related Bills

The Senate adopted a companion measure (SCONRES88) the same day the House adopted HCONRES280.

Outlook

Concurrent resolutions require adoption by both houses of Congress but are not sent to the president for his signature and therefore lack the force of law. Since both chambers adopted identical language, no further action is necessary.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR2926

Sponsor:
Young, D. (R-AK)
Introduced:
Sept. 21, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to preserve the continued viability of the United States air transportation system.
Brief Title:
Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

REV_00264841

By Joseph J. Schatz, CQ Staff

As signed into law by the president on Sept. 22, 2001.

Synopsis

HR2926 -- PL 107-42 provides $15 billion in emergency financial assistance to commercial airlines and limits their liability for damages stemming from the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States.

Highlights

The legislation provides $5 billion in direct payments to compensate airlines for losses stemming from the Sept. 11 attacks. Companies must document those losses and will be allotted payments based upon their percentage of the overall available passenger seats in the industry.

The measure provides $10 billion in loan guarantees and other credit instruments to airlines. It also creates a four-member commission to oversee the dispersal of guarantees and credit instruments. Carriers that receive any of these credit instruments must enter into a contract requiring them not to raise executive salaries from their 2000 levels for two years. Retiring executives also may not receive severance packages worth more than twice their salary in 2000.

In order to ensure continuation of air service to small communities, the law allows the Transportation secretary to require airlines receiving financial assistance to maintain some level of service to all previous destinations.

The legislation allows the federal government to share in any profits of the airlines through warrants under the loan provision.

The measure limits airlines' liability for damage caused by any terrorist acts for 180 days following enactment by invoking the War Risk Insurance program, which limits airline liability on international flights during wartime, and modifying it to apply to domestic flights and acts of ≤terrorism≥.

The government will be liable for damages of more than $100 million and will reimburse airlines for increased insurance costs.

The law limits the liability of American Airlines and United Airlines in connection with the Sept. 11 attack. Two planes from each carrier were hijacked that morning. Terrorists flew two jetliners into the World Trade Center in New York and one into the Pentagon just outside Washington. The fourth hijacked jet crashed in Pennsylvania.

The legislation allows ≤victims≥ -- or the families of those killed -- two options for seeking compensation. They may:

-- apply for tax-free relief from a federal victims' compensation fund created by the law and administered by the Justice Department; or

REV_00264842

-- file a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

The measure extends until Nov. 15, 2001, the deadline for airlines to make excise tax deposits to the U.S. government.

Finally, the legislation affirms that $3 billion from a post-attack emergency spending law (HR2888 -- PL 107-38) must be spent on airline safety and security measures.

Background

After several days of negotiation, House and Senate leaders and Bush administration officials reached a deal on language that would give the airline industry a "bailout package" in the wake of the terrorist attacks.

The legislation incorporated elements of a White House proposal that called for $5 billion in direct payments, $3 billion to offset the costs of new security requirements and the liability provisions. The administration opposed the addition of loan guarantees, which were included in the final text.

Some lawmakers wanted to see worker protections incorporated into the bill, but such provisions are not in the final language.

After the Sept. 11 attacks, Transportation Secretary Norman Y. Mineta grounded all flights in the United States. Commercial flights did not resume for two days and, at the time the president signed HR2926 -- PL 107-42 into law, Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport remained closed because of security concerns.

A week after the attacks, commercial flights still were not operating at full capacity, and several airlines had announced layoffs totaling more than 80,000. In the aftermath of the attacks, public unease about aviation security dealt a blow to the industry, in which companies already were struggling.

Related Bills

The Senate passed an identical bill (S1450) on Sept. 21, 2001.

HR2891 would provide $2.5 billion if direct payments and $12.5 billion in loan guarantees. Rep. Lloyd Doggett, D-Texas, blocked a unanimous consent request to pass the bill on Sept. 15, 2001.

HR2895 and S1447 would put the federal government in control of airport security personnel.

Additional legislation that would require increased airline and airport security was expected.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

REV_00264843

CQ BILLWATCH

S1450

Sponsor:
Daschle (D-SD)
Introduced:
Sept. 21, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to preserve the continued viability of the United States air transportation system.
Brief Title:
Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Joseph J. Schatz, CQ Staff

As passed by the Senate on Sept. 21, 2001.

Synopsis

S1450 would provide $15 billion in emergency financial assistance to commercial airlines and limit their liability for damages stemming from the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States.

Highlights

The bill would provide $5 billion in direct payments to compensate airlines for losses stemming from the Sept. 11 attacks. Companies would be required to document these losses and would be allotted payments based upon their percentage of the overall available passenger seats in the industry.

The bill would provide $10 billion in loan guarantees and other credit instruments to airlines. It would create a four-member commission to oversee the dispersal of guarantees and credit instruments. Carriers that received any of these credit instruments would have to enter into a contract requiring them not to raise executive salaries from their 2000 levels for two years. Retiring executives would not be permitted to receive severance packages worth more than twice their salary in 2000.

In order to ensure continuation of air service to small communities, the bill would allow the Transportation secretary to require airlines receiving financial assistance to maintain some level of service to all previous destinations.

S1450 would allow the federal government to share in any profits of the airlines through warrants under the loan provision.

REV_00264844

The bill would limit airlines' liability for damage caused by any terrorist acts for 180 days following enactment by invoking the War Risk Insurance program, which limits airline liability on international flights during wartime, and modifying it to apply to domestic flights and acts of ≤terrorism≥.

The government would be liable for damages above $100 million and would reimburse airlines for increased insurance costs.

S1450 would limit the liability of American Airlines and United Airlines in connection with the Sept. 11 attack. Two planes from each carrier were hijacked that morning. Terrorists flew two jetliners into the World Trade Center in New York and one into the Pentagon just outside Washington. The fourth hijacked jet crashed in Pennsylvania.

The legislation would allow ≤victims≥ -- or the families of those killed -- two options for seeking compensation. They could:

-- apply for tax-free relief from a federal victims' compensation fund that would be created by the bill and administered by the Justice Department; or

-- file a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

The bill would extend until Nov. 15, 2001, the deadline for airlines to make excise tax deposits to the U.S. government.

Finally, the bill would affirm that $3 billion from a post-attack emergency spending law (HR2888 -- PL 107-38) would be spent on airline safety and security measures.

Background

After several days of negotiation, House and Senate leaders and Bush administration officials reached a deal on language that would give the airline industry a "bailout package" in the wake of the terrorist attacks.

The bill incorporates elements of a White House proposal that called for $5 billion in direct payments, $3 billion to offset the costs of new security requirements and the liability provisions. The administration opposed the addition of loan guarantees, which were included in the final bill.

Some lawmakers wanted to see worker protections incorporated into the bill, but such provisions are not in the final language.

After the Sept. 11 attacks, Transportation Secretary Norman Y. Mineta grounded all flights in the United States. Commercial flights did not resume for two days and, at the time S1450 was introduced, Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport remained closed because of security concerns.

A week after the attacks, commercial flights still were not operating at full capacity, and several airlines had announced layoffs totaling more than 80,000. In the aftermath of the attacks, public unease about aviation security dealt a blow to the industry, in which companies already were struggling.

REV_00264845

Related Bills

The House passed an identical bill (HR2926) on Sept. 21, 2001.

HR2891 would provide $2.5 billion if direct payments and $12.5 billion in loan guarantees. Rep. Lloyd Doggett, D-Texas, blocked a unanimous consent request to pass the bill on Sept. 15, 2001.

HR2895 and S1447 would put the federal government in control of airport security personnel.

Additional legislation that would require increased airline and airport security was expected.

Outlook

The same day it passed S1450, the Senate agreed by voice vote to deem the identical HR2926 passed upon receipt from the House.

President Bush signed HR2926 -- PL 107-42 on Sept. 22, 2001.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR2888

Sponsor:
Young, C.W. (R-FL)
Introduced:
Sept. 14, 2001
Official Title:
A bill making emergency supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year 2001 for additional disaster assistance, for anti-≤terrorism≥ initiatives, and for assistance in the recovery from the tragedy that occurred on September 11, 2001, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
2001 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Recovery From and Response to Terrorist Attacks on the United States

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Rich Daly, CQ Staff

REV_00264846

As signed into law by the president on Sept. 18, 2001.

Synopsis

HR2888 -- PL 107-38 provides emergency funding to respond to the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States, in which hijackers flew commercial airliners into the twin towers of the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. A fourth hijacked jetliner crashed in western Pennsylvania.

Highlights

The legislation appropriates $40 billion to a new executive branch emergency response account. The money will be used to respond to the terrorist attacks, provide assistance to ≤victims≥ and fund recovery assistance.

The measure supplies money to:

-- improve federal, state and local preparedness to mitigate and responde to the attacks;

-- counter, investigate or prosecute domestic or international terrorists;

-- provide increased transportation security;

-- repair public facilities and transportation systems damaged by the attacks; and

-- support national security.

The bill makes $10 billion available immediately to President Bush to deal with needs arising from the attacks. It requires the president to consult with the chairman and ranking minority members of the House and Senate Appropriations committees before allocating the money.

Another $10 billion will become available 15 days after the president submits a budget request describing how the money will be spent. This procedure is consistent with the congressional notification process used for the allocation of funds for past emergencies.

The remaining $20 billion can be spent only when allocated in subsequent appropriations legislation in response to the terrorist acts.

HR2888 specifies that at least $20 billion of the total $40 billion allocation "shall be for domestic humanitarian assistance and disaster recovery activities in response to the terrorist acts of Sept. 11, 2001."

The bill stipulates that if further funding is required, the president must to submit detailed requests to Congress. It also mandates that the Office of Management and Budget provide quarterly reports to the Appropriations committees on the use of all funds, beginning no later than Jan. 2, 2002.

REV_00264847

Official Title:
A bill to provide compensation for the United States citizens or legal permanent residents who were victims of the bombing of the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma on April 19, 1995, on the same basis as compensation is provided to victims of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on September 11, 2001.
Brief Title:
Oklahoma City Victims Compensation Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Joi C. Ridley, CQ Staff

As introduced on Jan. 24, 2002.

Synopsis

HR3633 would authorize compensation for victims of the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City on the same basis as for victims of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States.

Highlights

The bill would authorize compensation for:

-- citizens present at the Murrah building at the time or in the immediate aftermath, or within a two block radius, of the bombing; and

-- physical, economic and non-economic losses suffered as a result of the bombing.

The amount of compensation would be based upon the extent of harm as deemed by a special master appointed under the September 11th ≤Victim≥ Compensation Fund of 2001 (HR2888 -- PL 107-38).

Compensation would be administered through the attorney general, and claimants would have to their waive ≤right≥ to sue, except in relation to collateral or punitive damages.

Background

HR3633 sponsor James A. Traficant Jr., D-Ohio, contends that Federal Protective Service (FPS) officials were knowingly in non-compliance with minimum staff requirements under PL 100-440. Traficant says they "failed to provide adequate protection [for] possible liabilities."

Those so-called liabilities included the apparent car bomb outside of the Murrah building that killed 168 people and injured 500 others. Timothy McVeigh was convicted of the bombing and executed by lethal injection on June 12, 2001.

"The sad reality is that since Oklahoma City, the terrorist threat to federal buildings -- foreign and domestic -- has increased dramatically. ≤Right≥ now, we are

REV_00264812

The measure designates the entire $40 billion "emergency" spending pursuant to 1985's so-called Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law (PL 99-177), exempting the funds from spending caps in the fiscal 2002 budget resolution (HCONRES83).

Background

The new law gives the president tremendous flexibility in allocating immediate assistance to emergency response agencies as well as federal law enforcement officials tracking down the terrorists and their accomplices.

The legislation does not specify how the money will be divided among its various priorities. But beyond the 50 percent mandate for humanitarian assistance, Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz said he expected "a significant piece" of the emergency funding to be used "to bring our armed forces to the highest state of readiness" in preparation for any retaliatory actions.

Congressional negotiations centered around the concerns of some lawmakers that Congress should retain the constitutional power of the purse and oversee how the funds would be spent. Members of Congress from New York, Virginia and Pennsylvania -- where the hijacked planes came down -- insisted that the spending resolution provide money for the recovery of, and assistance to, their states. Lawmakers said they expect to appropriate additional money later this year or next to fund recovery operations fully.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S. D., said the measure expanded beyond the initially planned $20 billion after New York Gov. George Pataki, R, New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, R, and the New York congressional delegation appealed to Bush for the funds.

Related Bills

The Senate passed a companion bill (S1426) and stipulated that an identical HR2888 would be deemed passed when it was received from the House.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

SJRes22

Sponsor:
Daschle (D-SD)
Introduced:
Sept. 12, 2001
Official Title:
A joint resolution expressing the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives regarding the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

REV_00264848

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Rich Daly, CQ Staff

As signed into law by the president on Sept. 18, 2001.

Synopsis

SJRES22 -- PL 107-39 expresses the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives condemning the airborne terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center.

Highlights

The measure condemns the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, in which commercial airliners were hijacked and flown into the Pentagon and the twin towers of the World Trade Center. It also condemns the terrorist hijacking and downing of a fourth commercial airliner on the same day.

It offers condolences to victims and their families, friends and loved ones and commends rescue workers and government officials who responded to the attacks.

The resolution deems the terrorist actions attacks not only on the people of the United States but also on the symbols and structures of the U.S. economy and military. It declares that the United States is entitled to respond to the attacks under international law.

It also thanks foreigners who expressed solidarity with the United States following the attacks and asks them to stand with the United States in the "war on international ≤terrorism≥."

The measure declares a commitment to devote increased resources to eradicate ≤terrorism≥.

The language supports the president and urges him, in consultation with Congress, to pursue and punish the terrorists and "their sponsors."

Finally, the measure declares Sept. 12, 2001, a "national day of unity and mourning."

Background

SJRES22 was sent directly to the Senate floor a day after the terrorist attacks. Out of respect for the ≤victims≥, it was the only measure considered by the chamber that day.

Related Bills

REV_00264849

The House considered a companion measure (HJRES61) the same day, ultimately passing it unanimously shortly after midnight. The House also agreed by unanimous consent that upon passage of HJRES61 and receipt of SJRES22, the chamber would be considered to have passed the Senate resolution.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All <Rights> Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HJRes61

Sponsor:
Armey (R-TX)
Introduced:
Sept. 12, 2001
Official Title:
A joint resolution expressing the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives regarding the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Rich Daly, CQ Staff

As passed by the House on Sept. 13, 2001.

Synopsis

HJRES61 would condemn the airborne terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center.

Highlights

The measure would condemn the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, in which commercial airliners were hijacked and flown into the Pentagon and the twin towers of the World Trade Center. It also would condemn the terrorist hijacking and downing of a fourth commercial airliner on the same day.

It would offer condolences to victims and their families, friends and loved ones and commend rescue workers and government officials who responded to the attacks.

The resolution would deem the terrorist actions attacks not only on the people of the United States but also on the symbols and structures of the U.S. economy and military. It would declare that the United States was entitled to respond to the attacks under international law.

REV_00264850

It also would thank foreigners who have expressed solidarity with the United States following the attacks and ask them to stand with the United States in the "war on international ≤terrorism≥."

The measure also declares a commitment to devote increased resources to eradicate ≤terrorism≥.

The language would support the president and urge him, in consultation with Congress, pursue and punish the terrorists and "their sponsors."

Finally, the measure declares Sept. 12, 2001, a "national day of unity and mourning."

Background

HJRES61 was sent directly to the House floor a day after the terrorist attacks, though it didn't come to a vote until shortly after midnight. Out of respect for the ≤victims≥, it was the only measure considered by the chamber that day.

Related Bills

The Senate introduced and passed a companion measure (SJRES22) on Sept. 12, 2001.

Outlook

The House passed HJRES61 on a 408-0 vote. It also agreed by unanimous consent that, upon receipt of the companion measure, the chamber would be considered to have cleared the Senate resolution.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

S180

Sponsor:
Frist (R-TN)
Introduced:
Jan. 25, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to facilitate famine relief efforts and a comprehensive solution to the war in Sudan.
Brief Title:
Sudan Peace Act

REV_00264851

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect Senate passage on July 19, 2001.

Synopsis

S180 aims to put increased pressure on the National Islamic Front (NIF) government in Sudan to end ≤terrorism≥, slave raids and human ≤rights≥ violations. It would condemn the civil war in Sudan, direct the administration to facilitate peace talks and urge relief efforts to circumvent the Sudanese government should it try to veto aid to rebel-held areas in southern Sudan.

Highlights

The legislation would formally condemn human rights violations in Sudan, including slavery and the NIF's denial of food aid to civilians.

It would require the president to report to Congress on: the state of human rights and violence in Sudan; the extent of U.S. financing of Sudanese oil operations; and the status of humanitarian relief efforts, particularly whether they are being hampered or manipulated by the NIF or any other of the warring parties.

Also, the bill would authorize State Department personnel to support ongoing peace process negotiations between the NIF and Sudanese opposition forces -- including the planning and implementation of any peace settlement -- as well as other U.S. diplomatic efforts supporting peace in Sudan.

It would urge the U.S. representative to the United Nations to exert pressure on the body to facilitate an end to the war in Sudan. It also would urge the United Nations to investigate allegations of slavery in Sudan and to condemn aerial bombings of civilians every time they occur in Sudan.

The bill also would express the sense of Congress that the president should seek to increase humanitarian aid by renegotiating the Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) agreement to remove Sudan's ability to refuse or veto aid. OLS, established in 1989 and overseen by the United Nations, assists internally displaced people and other civilians affected by the civil war.

In addition, the bill would call on the president to continue to use aid organizations outside OLS to deliver humanitarian aid, and direct the president to develop a contingency plan for U.S. delivery of aid if the NIF prohibits relief flights. The president would have three months to submit a "detailed report" to Congress describing the progress made toward using non-OLS organizations to distribute relief.

As amended by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the bill would authorize the U.S. Agency for International Development to support programs to provide humanitarian assistance to areas considered too dangerous for normal relief missions and order a study of the impact of not delivering aid to such areas.

REV_00264852

Background

For nearly two decades, the NIF and rebel groups have been fighting for control of Sudan in a conflict that has seen slave raids in the south and attacks on native peoples in the north. The north is predominantly Muslim, and the south is populated mostly by Christians and Sudanese who practice folk religions.

This civil war has resulted in severe famine, widespread dislocation and the deaths of at least 2 million Sudanese.

Secretary of State Colin L. Powell told members of the House International Relations Committee on March 7, 2001, that he would review U.S. policy toward Sudan, saying, "There is perhaps no greater tragedy on the face of the earth today."

Related Bills

S180's companion, HR931, is an earlier version of HR2052, which the House passed June 13, 2001. However, HR2052 differs significantly from S180. It includes proposals that would require strict disclosure rules for businesses operating in Sudan and bar businesses that operate in oil and gas exploration in Sudan from trading securities on U.S. capital markets. It also would direct the U.S. ambassador-at-large for war crimes to investigate allegations of slavery, civilian bombardment and other alleged war crimes in Sudan.

Other Sudan-related legislation introduced during the 107th Congress includes:

-- HCONRES82, concerning the human rights situation there;

-- HR894, which would provide compensation to ≤victims≥ of the U.S. bombing of a pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum, Sudan, on Aug. 20, 1998; and

-- S171, which would repeal certain restrictions on trade with Sudan, as well as with Cuba, Iran, Libya and North Korea.

Outlook

Sudan legislation fell by the wayside during the 106th Congress because there was not enough time to resolve differences between House and Senate versions.

Just as in the current Congress, the House version would have tightened sanctions against Sudan, while the Senate bill would have focused instead on diplomatic relations. In the last Congress, the sanctions language was added to a Senate bill by the House International Relations Committee. This time, the committee included the disclosure language in its own bill, and the House added the restrictions on companies who deal in Sudanese gas or oil.

A coalition of Congressional Black Caucus members and religious conservatives pushing for Sudan legislation grew to include House Majority Leader Dick Armey,

REV_00264853

R-Texas, thus helping HR2052 pass the House overwhelmingly.

The Bush administration appears to prefer the Senate version. Though it generally supports the House legislation, it has expressed reservations about the disclosure provision. The administration released a statement the day the House passed HR2052 that said the provision would have the potential "to damage U.S. and international capital markets and to undermine the independence and prerogative of the Securities and Exchange Commission to determine the nature and definition of information that is material to the investor."

S180 sponsor Bill Frist, R-Tenn., has said he is optimistic about a House-Senate conference.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR2052

Sponsor:
Tancredo (R-CO)
Introduced:
June 5, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to facilitate famine relief efforts and a comprehensive solution to the war in Sudan.
Brief Title:
Sudan Peace Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect House passage on June 13, 2001.

Synopsis

HR2052 would seek to end the civil war in Sudan and put increased pressure on the National Islamic Front (NIF) government there to end ≤terrorism≥, slave raids and human ≤rights≥ violations.

Highlights

The legislation would condemn human rights violations in Sudan, including slavery and the NIF's denial of food aid to civilians.

REV_00264854

It also would urge the Bush administration to use $10 million in previously appropriated funds (PL 106-429) for non-military aid to Sudan and direct the State Department to focus resources on negotiating a Sudanese peace agreement.

In addition, it would direct the U.S. representative to the United Nations to:

-- seek to end the veto power of the Sudanese government over relief programs to Sudanese civilians;

-- investigate allegations of slavery in Sudan; and

-- sponsor condemnations of Sudan each time it conducts aerial bombardments of civilian populations.

The legislation would block any business that operates in Sudan from trading securities in any U.S. capital market unless the business had filed forms with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) to disclose:

-- the nature of its activity in Sudan;

-- the identity of all Sudanese agencies with which business was conducted;

-- any link between business activity and human rights violations; and

-- whether the proceeds from capital market transactions would be reinvested in Sudanese commercial activity.

It also would require the SEC to make those reports public, a requirement is aimed primarily at alerting Americans to the nature of business dealings in Sudan by companies in which they hold stock.

As amended by the House, the bill also would prohibit any foreign company from raising capital or listing its securities in U.S. markets as long as the company was engaged in oil and gas development in Sudan.

The measure would require the State Department and the president to report to Congress on: the state of human rights and violence in Sudan; the level of Sudan's income from oil exploration; the extent of U.S. financing of Sudanese oil operations; the level of aerial bombardment of civilians; and the status of humanitarian relief efforts (particularly whether they were being hampered or manipulated by the NIF or any other of the warring parties).

In addition, the bill would call on the president to continue to use aid organizations outside the U.N.-affiliated Operation Lifeline Sudan (the actions of which require Sudanese government approval) to deliver humanitarian aid. It also would direct the president to develop a contingency plan for U.S. delivery of aid in case the NIF prohibited relief flights. The president would have to submit a "detailed report" to Congress describing the progress made toward using non-OLS organizations to distribute relief.

REV_00264855

Background

For nearly two decades, the NIF and rebel groups have been fighting for control of Sudan in a conflict that has seen slave raids in the south and attacks on native peoples in the north. The north is predominantly Muslim, and the south is populated mostly by Christians and Sudanese who practice folk religions.

This civil war has resulted in severe famine, widespread dislocation and the deaths of at least 2 million Sudanese.

Secretary of State Colin L. Powell told members of the House International Relations Committee on March 7, 2001, that he would review U.S. policy toward Sudan, saying, "There is perhaps no greater tragedy on the face of the earth today."

Related Bills

HR931 is an earlier version of HR2052. Rep. Tom Tancredo, R-Colo, who sponsored both pieces of legislation, wanted to make changes to the earlier bill after the International Relations Africa Subcommittee approved it, but he opted instead to introduce a new bill before the full committee markup. The newer measure includes some subtle changes in language designed to avoid jurisdictional squabbles with the Appropriations and Financial Services committees.

Other Sudan-related legislation introduced during the 107th Congress includes:

-- S180, companion legislation to HR931, introduced by Sen. Bill Frist, R-Tenn., then-chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on African Affairs.

-- HCONRES82, concerning the human rights situation there;

-- HR894, which would provide for compensation to ≤victims≥ of the U.S. bombing of a pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum, Sudan, on Aug. 20, 1998; and

-- S171, which would repeal certain restrictions on trade with Sudan, as well as with Cuba, Iran, Libya and North Korea.

Outlook

Sudan legislation fell by the wayside during the 106th Congress because there was not enough time to resolve differences between House and Senate versions. The House version would have tightened sanctions against Sudan, while the Senate bill would have focused instead on diplomatic relations.

The sanctions language in the last Congress was added to a Senate bill by the House International Relations Committee, which did not attempt to add such language to HR2052.

A coalition of Congressional Black Caucus members and religious conservatives pushing for Sudan legislation grew to include House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, thus helping it pass the House overwhelmingly.

REV_00264856

Though the Bush administration generally favors the legislation, it has expressed reservations about the disclosure provision. The administration released a statement the day the House passed HR2052 that said the provision would have the potential "to damage U.S. and international capital markets and to undermine the and prerogative of the Securities and Exchange Commission to determine the nature and definition of information that is material to the investor."

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR931

Sponsor:
Tancredo (R-CO)
Introduced:
March 7, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to facilitate famine relief efforts and a comprehensive solution to the war in Sudan.
Brief Title:
Sudan Peace Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect subcommittee approval on May 16, 2001.

Synopsis

HR931 aims to put increased pressure on the National Islamic Front (NIF) government in Sudan to end ≤terrorism≥, slave raids and human ≤rights≥ violations.

Highlights

The legislation would condemn human rights violations in Sudan, including slavery and the NIF's denial of food aid to civilians.

It would require the president to report to Congress on the state of human rights and violence in Sudan; the extent of U.S. financing of Sudanese oil operations; and the status of humanitarian relief efforts, particularly whether they were being hampered or manipulated by the NIF or any other of the warring parties.

Also, the bill would authorize the secretary of State to use department personnel to still unprepared to deal with this threat," Traficant said.

REV_00264857

Related Bills

Traficant introduced HR307, a bill to overhaul the FPS by designating more qualified police officers to federal buildings to guard against ≤terrorism≥. Ironically, five days before the Sept. 11 attacks, the bill had a hearing before the House Transportation and Infrastructure Subcommittee on Economic Development, Public Buildings and Emergency Management.

Outlook

HR3633 was referred to the House Judiciary Committee.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR622

Sponsor:
DeMint (R-SC)
Introduced:
Feb. 14, 2001
Official Title:
A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to expand the adoption credit, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
Economic Security and Worker Assistance Act of 2002

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Joseph J. Schatz and David Clarke, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect House passage on Feb. 14, 2002.

Synopsis

HR622, which as introduced would have expanded the adoption tax credit, was changed in the Senate to offer a temporary extension of unemployment insurance and then altered by the House into a comprehensive economic stimulus plan.

Highlights

The second House version of HR622 contains a variety of tax provisions, including breaks for corporations and individuals; credits to help the unemployed afford health support ongoing peace negotiations between the NIF and Sudanese opposition forces -- including the planning and implementation of any peace settlement -- as well as other U.S. diplomatic efforts supporting peace in Sudan.

REV_00264813

The bill would express the sense of Congress that the president should seek to increase humanitarian aid by renegotiating the Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) agreement to remove Sudan's ability to refuse or veto aid. OLS, established in 1989 and overseen by the United Nations, assists internally displaced people and other civilians affected by the civil war. The bill also would encourage the United Nations to play a role in the peace process.

In addition, the bill would call on the president to continue to use aid organizations outside OLS to deliver humanitarian aid, and direct the president to develop a contingency plan for U.S. delivery of aid in case the NIF prohibited relief flights. The president would have three months to submit a "detailed report" to Congress describing the progress made toward using non-OLS organizations to distribute relief.

As amended by the House International Relations Subcommittee on Africa, the legislation also would:

-- authorize the use of $10 million in previously appropriated funds (PL 106-429) for non-military aid to Sudan;

-- allow Sudanese government actions, such as slavery and attacks on civilian populations, to be defined as genocide; and

-- require full disclosure of activities by any business operating in Sudan.

Background

For nearly two decades, the NIF and rebel groups have been fighting for control of Sudan in a conflict that has seen slave raids in the south and attacks on native peoples in the north. The north is predominantly Muslim and the south is populated mostly by Christians and Sudanese who practice folk religions.

This civil war has resulted in severe famine, widespread dislocation and the deaths of at least 2 million Sudanese.

Related Bills

Other Sudan-related legislation introduced during the 107th Congress includes:

-- HCONRES82, concerning the human rights situation there;

-- HR894, which would provide for compensation to <victims> of the U.S. bombing of a pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum, Sudan, on Aug. 20, 1998; and

-- S171, which would repeal certain restrictions on trade with Sudan, as well as with Cuba, Iran, Libya and North Korea.

REV_00264858

Outlook

No further action is expected on HR931.

Sponsor Tom Tancredo, R-Colo., who wanted to make technical changes to the bill, introduced another version (HR2052) the day before a June 6, 2001, full International Relations Committee markup in lieu of offering a substitute amendment. The full committee approved the new version.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All Rights Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

SConRes23

Sponsor:
Feinstein (D-CA)
Introduced:
March 13, 2001
Official Title:
A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress with respect to the involvement of the government in Libya in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
Justice for the Victims of Pan Am 103 Resolution of 2001

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

SCONRES23 would call for continued sanctions against Libya until that nation admits responsibility for the 1989 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

The resolution would express the sense of Congress that:

-- the international community should condemn, "in the strongest possible terms," the Libyan government and Colonel Muammar Qadhafi for "support of international terrorism," including the bombing;

-- the Libyan government should immediately account for its involvement in the bombing, accept responsibility for the actions of Libyan officials, provide compensation to the victims' families and demonstrate a "full renunciation" of support for international terrorism; and

-- the president should instruct the U.S. Permanent Representative to the United

REV_00264859

Nations to support maintaining U.N. sanctions against Libya, or reimposing sanctions that are currently suspended, until all conditions laid out or referred to in the applicable Security Council resolutions are met.

The resolution comes in the wake of a Scottish court's Feb. 5, 2001, conviction of Abdel Basset Ali Megrahi for his involvement in the bombing, which killed 270 people, including 189 Americans. The court also conclusively tied the planning and execution of the bombing to Libya and Libyan intelligence. U.N. resolutions have ordered Libya to pay compensation to the ≤victims≥' families upon the rendering of a guilty verdict and officially end support for international ≤terrorism≥ in order for multilateral sanctions to be lifted.

The resolution would recommend making it U.S. policy to oppose removal of U.N. sanctions, including sanctions on all forms of assistance as well as trade and travel restrictions, until:

-- Libya has met the conditions laid out above and complied with the applicable U.N.Security Council resolutions;

-- the president has certified to Congress that Libya no longer supports international ≤terrorism≥, including an explanation of what steps Libya has taken to resolve any outstanding ≤terrorism≥-related claims by Americans against the Libyan government; and

-- the Libyan government is not producing, procuring or delivering weapons of mass destruction in contravention of U.S. law.

Sponsor Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., has introduced similar legislation (S244).

CQ BillWatch Insight:

SCONRES23 was referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Concurrent resolutions require adoption by both houses of Congress but are not sent to the president for his signature and therefore lack the force of law.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

S244

Sponsor:
Feinstein (D-CA)
Introduced:
Feb. 1, 2001

REV_00264860

Official Title:
A bill to provide for United States policy toward Libya.
Brief Title:
Justice for the Victims of Pan Am 103 Act of 2001

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Jeremy Torobin, CQ Staff

S244 would make it U.S. policy to oppose lifting U.N. and U.S. sanctions against Libya until the Libyan government accepted responsibility for the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

It would prohibit any U.S. assistance to the Libyan government until the president certified that Libya had:

-- admitted its role in the bombing;

-- issued an apology;

-- paid compensation to the ≤victims≥' families; and

-- taken steps to end its support of international ≤terrorism≥.

In addition, the legislation would express the sense of the Senate that the Libya should be condemned for the bombing, and its support of other international ≤terrorism≥, "in the strongest possible terms."

The bill also would express the sense of Congress that the president, the secretary of State and other U.S. officials should encourage other countries and the United Nations to maintain sanctions against Libya until it fulfilled the aforementioned requirements.

CQ BillWatch Insight:

S244 was referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The legislation comes in the wake of a Scottish court's Feb. 5, 2001, conviction of Abdel Basset Ali Megrahi for his involvement in the bombing, which killed 270 people, including 189 Americans. The court also conclusively tied the planning and execution of the bombing to Libya and Libyan intelligence.

The legislation notes that U.N. resolutions have ordered Libya to pay compensation to the ≤victims≥' families upon the rendering of a guilty verdict and officially end support for international ≤terrorism≥ in order for multilateral sanctions to be lifted.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2001 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

REV_00264861

Congressional Quarterly Inc. • Trusted Source Since 1945
Copyright 1983-2002 • All Rights Reserved

REV_00264862

insurance; and incentives for revitalization in New York.

Business tax provisions.

The measure would reduce the corporate alternative minimum tax (AMT), designed to prevent wealthy taxpayers from using credits and deductions to pay little or no tax, by allowing businesses to apply deductions on depreciation adjustment, net operating losses and foreign tax credits against minimum tax liability.

It would let businesses use losses over 2001 and 2002 to offset profits made during the previous five years.

The bill would allow businesses an additional 30 percent first-year deduction on the purchase of equipment bought between Sept. 11, 2001, and Sept. 10, 2004.

For 2002 and 2003, the amount small businesses could expense for the purchase of new equipment would be increased from $24,000 to $40,000. Beginning in 2004, the amount would be $25,000. The total cost of equipment eligible for expensing would be increased to $325,000 during 2002 and 2003.

Individual tax provisions.

The measure would provide a tax refund of $300 to individuals and $600 to couples who filed an income tax return but did not receive a refund under the spring 2001 tax cut law (HR1836 -- PL 107-16). Individuals and couples who received a partial refund from the tax cut bill would get the difference between what they were awarded and the $300 or $600.

The 27 percent tax rate, which applies to income in the $27,050 to $65,550 range for single taxpayers, would be reduced to 25 percent effective Jan. 1, 2002. Under existing law, this rate cut is not scheduled until 2006. In order to offset any increased AMT for an individual's tax liability caused by the acceleration of the rate reduction, the measure would temporarily increase the amount of income exempt from AMT. In 2002 and 2003, the exemption would be increased by $1,600 for individuals and $3,200 for couples. In 2004, the amounts would be increased by $850 for individuals and $1,700 for couples.

Health and unemployment.

The measure would provide a 60 percent refundable tax credit to workers laid off between March 15, 2001, and December 2003 to pay for health insurance for up to 12 months. The same workers would have the right to no-pre-existing-condition insurance if they were covered by their employer the previous year.

The bill would authorize $3.9 billion in block grants to states for health care and re-employment assistance, and an additional $4.6 billion in direct funding over two years for health care.

The House-passed bill would retain Senate language that would extend unemployment insurance for 13 weeks to individuals who filed for the benefit after

REV_00264814

March, 14, 2001, and have exhausted their regular benefits. It also would offer an additional 13 weeks of insurance in states with an insured unemployment rate of 4 percent. Under existing law, this extension is available if the rate is 5 percent or greater. The measure would appropriate funds for the extensions through 2002.

Aid for New York.

The House-passed language includes tax breaks over five years to encourage reinvestment in New York City, including:

-- the Work Opportunity Credit, which would be extended through 2003 to businesses that employed workers in the area around the World Trade Center or to businesses that relocated from the area after Sept. 11, 2001, but remained in the city;

-- a 30 percent depreciation deduction for businesses would be extended through 2006, and through 2009 for residential and non-residential properties;

-- an increase of an additional $35,000, to $70,000, in the amount that small businesses could deduct for the purchase of property;

-- $8 billion in tax-exempt bonds that would be issued over the next two years for the reconstruction of areas damaged by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks; and

-- an extension from two to five years in the amount of time to reinvest insurance proceeds without paying taxes on the gains as long as a substantial amount of that money was invested in New York.

Tax and program extensions.

The measure would extend:

-- the Work Opportunity tax credit for two years;

-- the Welfare-to-Work tax credit for two years;

-- a credit for the production of electricity from wind, biomass or poultry-waste facilities for two years;

-- Archer Medical Savings Accounts for one year; and

-- a provision that allows domestic companies to not pay taxes on financing income received from abroad for five years.

Background

As originally passed by the House in May 2001, HR622 would have expanded the adoption tax credit, which is given for expenses incurred during the adoption process, including fees, court costs and travel expenses. That language was included in the spring 2001 tax-cut law.

REV_00264815

In January 2002, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, S.D., decided to use HR622 as the vehicle for a slimmed down economic stimulus package. Daschle's stimulus language included a 13-week extension of unemployment benefits, a $300 check to those who did not receive rebates from the spring 2001 tax-cut law, tax breaks for businesses that bought equipment in 2002 and $5 billion in Medicaid money for states.

But Senate Republicans and Democrats were unable to reach a compromise amid differences about the Medicaid funding, and improving economic news began to call into question the need for a stimulus package. Daschle conceded defeat in his stimulus bid on Feb. 5, and moved to pass the extension of unemployment insurance with Republican support.

Rather than simply pass the unemployment extension, House Republicans attached many of the provisions from their previous economic stimulus plan (HR3529) and sent it back to the Senate.

Related Bills

HR3529 is a House-passed stimulus proposal that would provide tax breaks for businesses and individuals, extend expiring tax credits, extend unemployment benefits, provide a refundable tax credit for health insurance and provide assistance to families of the ≤victims≥ of ≤terrorism≥.

The House-passed version of HR3090 is a $99.5 billion economic stimulus plan that contains tax-cutting provisions and spending increases but is weighted more heavily toward tax cuts. It would lower federal revenue by $99.5 billion in fiscal 2002 and $159.4 billion over 10 years.

The Senate Finance Committee substituted text from a draft Democratic bill, which was subsequently approved by the committee, that would offer a $67 billion economic stimulus plan that would include about $36 billion in tax cuts and rebates, $26 billion in benefits and more than $5 billion in farm aid.

Outlook

The Senate is not expected to pass HR622 as amended by the House.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Thomas, Calif., said it was possible that the House would send the Senate even more economic stimulus bills.

Source: CQ BillWatch Service
Providing summary and analysis of pending federal legislation.
©2002 Congressional Quarterly Inc. All ≤Rights≥ Reserved.

CQ BILLWATCH

HR3614

REV_00264816

Sponsor:
Holt (D-NJ)
Introduced:
Jan. 23, 2002
Official Title:
A bill to repeal the provision of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 that requires the reduction of a claimant's compensation by the amount of any collateral source compensation payments the claimant is entitled to receive, and for other purposes.
Brief Title:
September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Fairness Act

CQ BillWatch Brief:

By Rich Daly, CQ Staff

As introduced on Jan. 23, 2002.

Synopsis

HR3614 would negate a proposed rule for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund that would reduce payments by the amount of any life insurance, workers' compensation or other relief the claimant had received.

Highlights

The bill would amend the airline bailout law (HR2926 -- PL 107-42) that created the compensation fund to drop a mandate that the special master in charge of distributing the payments reduce awards based upon other compensation the ≤victims≥ or their families had received. Instead, the legislation would let the special master decide whether to reduce the awards.

Background

The fund was created to compensate and assist ≤victims≥ and their families who agreed to forgo lawsuits against the airlines or others. Fund administrators would calculate awards based upon family size and the ≤victim≥'s age and earnings. Special Master Kenneth Feinberg has said an average payment would be $1.65 million but subject to the deductions.

However, critics of the plan say that deducting for insurance payments, in particular, would penalize families that had engaged in prudent financial planning.

Final details of the program were expected to be announced in February 2002.

Members of the New Jersey and New York congressional delegations have been pushing for the exclusion of other benefits from compensation calculations because many ≤victims≥ of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center lived in those states.

REV_00264817

ON BEST BEHAVIOR

The Clinton Administration and Ethics in Government

Gregory S. Walden

Foreword by Suzanne Garment

Hudson Institute

REV_00264863

Counsel's Office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

Walter Lee v. US District Court, District of Columbia

OA/NARA#: 1822/1740
9230

Box 63
Folder 2

REV_00264864

fine only — —

No need

Document Originally Attached to Following Page

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED:

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: Walter Lee

SUBJECT: Walter Lee vs. US District Court, D.C.

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	C D	COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A		C
	Brett	A

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

COMMENTS: _____

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

Mr. Walter Lee

PRA 6

Clerk of the Court
United States District Court, D.C.
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

20 Apr 01

Re: Walter Lee v. U.S. District Court, D.C.

I would really appreciate it if the Court would issue an order either accepting this pleading or denying it as soon as possible. I believe it is extremely important to determine whether or not a Federal Judge can defend his ruling and use of judicial discretion against an unlearned disabled indigent, proceeding pro se, and without benefit of legal counsel in an open full and fair hearing in a competent Court of Law.

And once it is determined, that this Federal Judge can not defend his ruling and use of judicial discretion, in a competent Court of Law, against this unlearned disabled indigent proceeding pro se, and without benefit of legal counsel, the question must be asked:

"Is this the sort of Federal Judge who should have the power to use his judicial discretion up to and including, the taking of life and ordering the death of anyone?"

Someone is going to have to explain to me in plain English why this Roberts guy is still sitting on a Federal Bench in a Federal Court of Law, because I maintain that he is incompetent and judicially unfit, to sit on any Court at any Level, and should be Impeached, Disbarred and Prosecuted for Aiding and Abetting the Facilitation of Criminal Acts being committed by officers of the court in the District of Columbia.

Is the climate of the United States Judicial System set up where Federal and State judges and lawyers feel that free to be able to not only commit these criminal acts in a court of law, but to conspire with and aid and abet these criminal and civil violations against an unlearned disabled indigent proceeding pro se? My God!, you people are worst than the Roman Soldiers Herod ordered to Kill small infant children!

And before you gloss over that last statement, I want you to think of the type of person, that you would have to be, to go out and mercilessly kill small infant children! You people need to look into the mirror, and see what it is you have become!

Well anyway, just let me know what the Court plans to do with this pleading, because I'm sure Richard W. Roberts, who in my opinion is a glorified Civil Rights attorney, (and a bad one at that), should want to defend his ruling and use of judicial discretion in this petition. However, if he can not, then he should be fired!

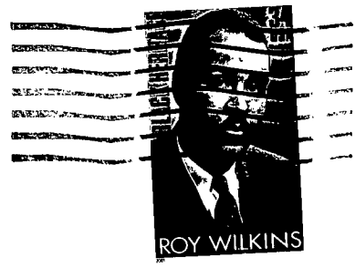
You people are scandalous! All of this CRAP, in order to deny me the rights you know that I was and still am entitled too. But you know what, the United States is in a World Economy now, therefore, even the Beast now has reigns upon him, that can pull him this way and that, taking him where he does not want to go!

In closing, I just thought that it was amusing that you could not find a Federal Judge to sign your recent communication (smile). In all seriousness though, you need to watch more closely what you affix your signature upon. I say that because no one is going to be there to save you but me, if I have to knock on your door, to find out exactly what you knew, and when you knew it, and based upon that knowledge, determine, whether or not you had an obligation to support the U.S. Constitution and thereby inform the Court that there could be reason to believe that the criminal acts as stated in Lee v. Mertz, were indeed committed.

If it is determined that based upon the documents that have been submitted on the record and your years of legal experience and level of competency, as well as the laws governing the duties and responsibilities of the administration of the Office of the Clerk of Court, you should have been aware that such a possibility existed, and therefore should have informed the Court and did not, then you have a problem.

Because you are the gatekeeper to this Court, and your primary responsibility after Obeying your Oath of Office to support the United States Constitution, I will bet is that you protect and ensure the integrity of the Court.

Please do not mistake me for anyone other than who I am, and for the record, I'm just a United States Citizen trying to settle a complaint, the best way that he knows how.



You Know Who I Am!

Office of the President
Office of the Vice President
Office of the Secretary of State
Office of the Secretary of Defense
United States Senate Leader
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
United States Attorney General
Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigations
Director of the National Security Agency
Director of the Central Intelligence Agency
Governor of the State of Virginia
Governor of the State of Maryland
Governor of the State of Minnesota
Personal File

Mr. Walter Lee

PRA 6

RICHMOND VA
PM
21 APR
2001

The White House
Ofc. of the White House Counsel
1600 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington, D.C. 20500

20500X0003

REV_00264869

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 7/17/01

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: Walter Lee

SUBJECT: Lee v. US Supreme Court

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	DISPOSITION C D	DISPOSITION COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	7/17/01		C
	Brad	A

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

ACTION COMMENTS:

COMMENTS: No Action. FYI only.

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

REV_00264870

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

WALTER LEE

PRA 6

Plaintiff

v. Civil Action No._____

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT
1 1st STREET., N.E.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20543

PETITION FOR A FULL, FAIR AND OPEN HEARING

1st Argument:

On 10 Oct 00, the United States Supreme Court docketed a petition for a writ of certiorari, Lee v. District of Columbia as No. 00-6477.

In the petition the Plaintiff submitted 14 statements to the United States Supreme Court that were issued by officers of the court representing the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in a civil complaint that are material and relevant to the disposition of the complaint (CA-2817) as being Perjured Testimony.

The Plaintiff maintained in his petition that officers of the court representing the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals had committed no less than (13) Counts of Perjury, (2) Counts of Fabricating Evidence and (13) Counts of Obstructing Justice (High Crimes) in order to deny the Plaintiff disability benefits.

Pursuant to Rule 15.2 of the United States Supreme Court, Counsel is admonished that they have an obligation to the Court to point out in the brief in opposition, and not later, any perceived misstatement made in the petition by the Plaintiff.

The District of Columbia nor the District of Columbia Court of Appeals submitted a brief in opposition challenging any of the High Crimes (Impeachable Offenses) stated in the petition. Therefore, the United States Supreme Court has no choice but to rule on the petition consistent with the fact that criminal acts had been committed by officers of the court representing the District of Columbia against a United States Citizen in order to deny this United States Citizen the entitled rights to the disability benefits that the governing laws demand and require.

On 11 Dec 00, the United States Supreme Court violated my Civil Rights under Article IV and the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution when my petition was dismissed, and also on 20 Feb 01, when my petition for a rehearing was dismissed.

Therefore, on 11 Dec 00 the United States Supreme Court knowingly aided and abetted in the facilitation and accomplishment of numerous High Crimes (Impeachable Offenses) in violation of Article III, Article VI and their Oath of Office (not all-inclusive)

Once these High Crimes had been committed by the United States Supreme Court on 11 Dec 00, they no longer had any Constitutional and or Legal Authority to sit in judgment and or rule on any case or controversy that was brought before them.

Therefore, the United States Supreme Court had no Constitutional and or Legal Authority to sit in judgment and rule on Bush v. Gore on 12 Dec 00, and therefore, that ruling must be vacated so that the Constitution and the adherence thereof; remains the Supreme Laws of the Land, and not the individual discretion of flawed men and women.

2nd Argument:

The United States Constitution is the Supreme Laws of the Land, and every Federal and State Law adopted must adhere and be agreeable to the Constitution and not vice-versa. Article II is clear in that the person having the greatest number of votes shall be President of the United States. PERIOD!

Florida Law provides that the legislature picks a slate of electorates that are consistent with the person who received the majority of the popular votes in the State. The Florida Supreme Court was right in interpreting Florida State Law that was pursuant too, and agreeable too Article II of the United States Constitution.

Consistent with Article II, in order to ascertain the person who had the most popular votes in Florida, the Florida State Supreme Court ruled that a hand count of the disputed ballots in Broward, Miami-Dade, West Palm Beach and Volusia Counties should be commenced.

There is no federal or state deadline made by Man that usurps the power and authority of the United States Constitution. The Constitution is a living and breathing document which is amended from time to time to protect the citizenry of this country from tyranny, from the abuse of power.

The overriding Constitutional requirement under Article II, is that the person elected to become the President of the United States must be the same person who received the most number of votes. The only way to determine who had the most number of votes is to count them, which is what the Florida Supreme Court ruled.

On 12 Dec 00 the United States Supreme Court abused their judicial power and authority in office by usurping Article II, of the United States Constitution.

This gross and vile conduct of the United States Supreme Court was committed for the express intent and purpose of making George Bush the President of the United States of America. This violation of Article II, denied MY CIVIL RIGHTS under the 14th Amendment (as well as every other American) to enjoy a duly elected President.

By stopping the lawful counting of disputed votes in the state of Florida, the United States Supreme Court illegally and unlawfully dismissed every vote taken in the Presidential Election of the State of Florida.

When a controversy arises in a Federal or State Law, where the United States Constitution is at issue, at all times the Constitution must prevail. There is no deadline made by man that can usurp the fact that under Article II, the President of the United States must be the same person who received the most popular votes.

Therefore, I Walter Lee state that the United States Supreme Court based upon their multiple criminal and civil violations of the law did not have legal standing to sit in judgment and rule in Bush v. Gore. Furthermore, the United States Supreme Court denied the Plaintiff, and the American People the entitled Constitutional Right to know that the current President of the United States (George Bush) is the same person who received the majority of the popular votes.

Mr. Bush may have very well received the most popular votes in the State of Florida, but as a United States Citizen and resident of the State of Virginia, I, Walter Lee maintain that I have a Constitutional Right to know for sure! The only way to know for sure is to vacate the United States Supreme Court ruling in Bush v. Gore, and resume the hand counting of disputed ballots that the Florida Supreme Court properly ruled should be counted in accordance with the United States Constitution.

Wherefore, the Plaintiff demands a full, fair and open hearing where the United States Supreme Court can defend the criminal allegations that they should be Impeached, Disbarred, and Prosecuted for knowingly aiding and abetting the facilitation of High Crimes in order to deny a United States Citizen his 14th Amendment Civil Rights to equal protection of the laws in Walter Lee v. District of Columbia.

Wherefore, the Plaintiff demands a full, fair and open hearing where the United States Supreme Court can defend their violation of their Oath of Office, Article II, Article III, Article IV, Article VI and the Plaintiffs 14th Amendment Rights of the United States Constitution, in their ruling in Bush v. Gore.

When it is determined that the United States Supreme Court had no legal standing to rule in Bush v. Gore, the Plaintiff demands an immediate recount, and in the event that former Vice President Al Gore proves to be the victor, then the date upon which these determinations are made, should be consistent with the dates as if the Presidential Election had taken place upon that date. If George Bush comes out the victor, then all is well, but the integrity of the process will have been upheld.

I hereby certify that this document was mailed to the U.S. District Court, D.C. @ 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001 on 11 Jul 01.

Copies To:
Secretary General of the United Nations
President of the United States
United States Senate Leader
Chairman of the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee
Speaker of the House
United States Attorney General

Business Week, Ebony, Essence, Forbes, Fortune, Money, Newsweek, Oxford Press, Richmond Times Dispatch, The National Inquirer, The New Republic, Thunder's Mouth Press/Nations Books, Time, U.S. News & World Reports Washington Post, Yahoo.

~JUST THOUGHTS~

The Plaintiff is an unlearned United States Citizen who happens to be a disabled indigent proceeding in a civil complaint without benefit of competent legal counsel. Therefore, the Plaintiff invites legal advice and or counsel to take over this complaint to ensure that the Civil Rights of the Plaintiff and the American People are upheld, and that the Plaintiff is duly compensated for the heinous crimes committed against him.

****

I have asked these people time and time again to leave me alone, but they will not, so they must like hearing me talk, so I will continue submitting petitions until such time that my grievances have been addressed in accordance with my Civil Right to receive a full, fair and impartial hearing on the merits of my complaint.

****

I have a fondness for movies, sports and the arts and I have some great movie concepts that I would like to share with someone who would not steal my ideas, but that requires an attorney, and I am without means. So I offer three concepts with the principal actors in each, but I have more. Concept 1: Tom Cruise, Jennifer Lopez, Sean "Puffy" Combs and Jason Cerbone. (Action) Concept 2: Alec Baldwin, Mimi Rogers, Tyra Banks and introducing Christopher Walken as "Mr. Charlie." (This is a good one!) Concept 3: Danny Glover, Ossie Davis, Ruby Dee, Burt Reynolds, Don Cheadle, Vanessa Williams, Joan Cusack, Robert Downey Jr., Joan Chen & Bill Duke (ensemble)

****

I do not like bullies, or people who abuse their power because they can, and often against those who are less fortunate than they. I especially do not like people who do so in a condescending manner, presuming that they are more intelligent than others. These people have worked my last nerves and I am tired of dealing with them, so I must remove them from office so that they can do no more harm.

REV_00264874

Mr. Walter Lee

PRA 6

The White House
Ofc. of the White House Counsel
1600 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington, D.C. 20500

20500-0003

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Walters, Art Case

Subject Files

OA/NARA#: 1822/1740
9630

Box 63
Folder 3

REV_00264876

THE WHITE HOUSE
CORRESPONDENCE TRACKING WORKSHEET

DATE RECEIVED: 5/23/01

NAME OF CORRESPONDENT: Art Walters

SUBJECT: Affidavit

ROUTE TO: OFFICE/AGENCY	(STAFF NAME)	ACTION CODE	ACTION DATE M/D/YR	DISPOSITION TYPE RESP	DISPOSITION C D	DISPOSITION COMPLETED M/D/YR
	CUGONZ	A	5/23/01		C
	Brett	A

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

ACTION COMMENTS: _____

COMMENTS: _____

ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENTS: MEDIA:

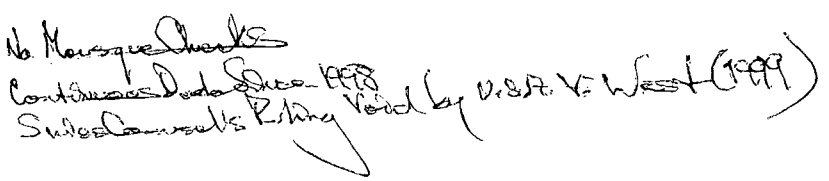
In the Congress of the United States of America

Re: art walters, PRA 6 nmi, no split social security number

AFFIDAVIT

1. THE FOLLOWING FACTS ARE TRUE AND CORRECT AND CANNOT BE CHANGED OR SO ORDERED WITHOUT VIOLATION OF THE FIRST ANF THIRTEENTH AMENDMENTS; TO INCLUDE BY CONGRESSIONAL, JUDICAL, MILITARY OR EXECUTIVE AUTYHORITY! THIS INCLUDES PROVISIONS OF THE WARTIME POWERS ACT WHICH PERMITS A DECREE ONLY IN A CIRCUMSTANCE ESSENTIAL TO OPERATIONS TTO INCLUDE GOOD ORDER AND DISCIPLINE OF THE SRMED FORCES (EXCEPTION IS A FADISH RELIGON WITHOUT SPECIAL PROVISION OF LAW)!

2. THE SAME IS TRUE OF MY ESSENTIAL DATA;



NAME: ART WALTERS, PRA 6 AS REQUESTED OF CONGRESS!
FORMER NAME: ARTHUR TERRY WALTERS, PRA 6 ; ANO
NO SHARE OR SPLIT OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER OR IDENTITY IS AUTHORIZED (NO CONSENT)

RELIGON: INAPPLICABLE *

3. THE VOLATION OF THE ABOVE FACTS TO INCLUDE NATIONAL MILITARY COMMAND CNETER FINGERPRINT DATA BEING SWITCHED IS FORWARDED TO YOUR OFFICES FOR RECOMMENDATION OF IMPEACHMENT!

ART WALTERS
PRA 6
Col (Ret.)

* Bush v. U.S.A. (1998/2001)

REV_00264878

UPS NEXT DAY AIR®

LETTE

CONTROL NUMBER
2002-H515-0006

UPS (1-800-742-5877) or visit our Web site at www.ups.com

CAN 'T READ

V000087

Place Labels in This Space

Options: 1 UPS Tracking Label
2 UPS Air Shipping D
3 UPS W

UPS Next Day Air Saver
Shipping Document

UPS DRIVER
- RECORD 6-DIGIT UPS SHIPPER NUMBER FROM BOX 1.
- IF BOX 1 IS BLANK OR THE NUMBER IS MORE THAN 6 DIGITS, RECORD THE NUMBER FROM BOX 2.

SHIPMENT FROM
UPS SHIPPER NO. 1 2
REFERENCE NUMBER
TELEPHONE

DELIV
TELEPHONE

WEIGHT AND ZONE	WEIGHT	DIMENSIONAL WEIGHT	ZONE

NO INF.

☐ SATURDAY PICKUP

Saver

☐ BILL RECEIVER

UPS Next Day Air Saver 1
EXTREMELY URGENT

A307 090 479 4
TRACKING NUMBER

Next Day Air Saver

SAVED

196
197

SHIP TO: OFFICE OF THE COUNCIL
C/O THE WHITE HOUSE 202 456 7921
725 17TH ST NW
WASHINGTON DC 20006

05/15/2001 13:01 2002-H515-0006

DC 201 9-90

ted Parcel Service, Louisville, KY

s currently in the human resources department in Oakland, California. He is a member of the global UPS Athlete

Preservation Copy

REV_00264879

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

War Powers Issues

Box 63
Folder 4

OA/NARA#: 21632074
9693

REV_00264880

The Heritage Foundation

Heritage Lecture No. 529

The Heritage Foundation Lectures and Seminars

FIXING THE WAR POWERS ACT

Expansion of remarks (at a Heritage Foundation symposium on May 22, 1995 by Ronald D. Rotunda) by Albert E. Jenner Professor of Law, University of Illinois College of Law.

In 1973, Congress enacted the War Powers Resolution over President Nixon's veto.1 Supporters viewed the law2 as an effort to prevent another Vietnam, while opponents saw it as an unconstitutional effort to restrict the Commander in Chief while not achieving its well-intentioned goals.3 The law is now more than 21 years old. Like a young child growing up, it has reached its majority. Since then, liberals, conservatives, Republicans, and Democrats have all attacked the law. Former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell (D-ME), for example, has complained that the law simply "has not worked." It "potentially undermines our ability to effectively defend our national interests" and "unduly restricts the authority granted by the Constitution to the President as Commander-in-Chief."4 Former President Ford agrees, calling the law both "unconstitutional" and "impractical."5 Presidents of both parties have been accused of ignoring it.6 With a pedigree like that, now is a good time to reevaluate the resolution.

Applicability of the War Powers Resolution The coverage of the War Powers Resolution is broad, encompassing essentially every situation involving combat troops. Like most laws, it is written in the style of the Internal Revenue Code or the Treaty of Westphalia. Its intricate prose states that, unless there has been a declaration of war, the law applies to every case where the President introduces "United States Armed Forces into hostilities, or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances, and to the continued use of such forces in hostilities or in such situations."7 In other words, the law applies to virtually everything.

Declarations of War. The exception for declarations of war means, in effect, that there are no exceptions, because no major power has declared war since World War II. Of course, the intervening years have witnessed major undeclared wars (the Korean War, the Vietnam War, and the Gulf War are obvious examples), as well as relatively minor ones (e.g., Panama, Grenada, Somalia, Haiti, Bosnia).

While our Constitution provides that only Congress can "declare war," the framers of our Constitution specifically rejected a proposal that would give to Congress the power to "make" war.8 Instead, the framers made the President the Commander in Chief, and the decision to seek a declaration of war became a political question for Congress to resolve. A declaration is an escalation of the war effort; in only a few circumstances has Congress taken that symbolic step. It is too late in our history to argue that there can be no war unless the war is officially "declared." Since our Declaration of Independence, our 100-1012, Sept. 20, 1988), at 223.

REV_00264881

77. U.S. Const., Art. I, 8, cl. 1. See also Art. I, 8, cl. 12, which authorizes Congress to raise and support armies, "but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years."

HERITAGE EXTRA! Heritage.org SUPPORT

Who We Are | Membership | Library | Key Issues | Events | Email Lists
Bookstore | News & Views | On The Hill | Internships | Job Bank | Policy Review
Policy Experts | Speaker's Bureau | Heritage Live! | Chats | Links | Search

REV_00264890

country has been in about 200 armed conflicts, while we have declared war only seven times. Not even the Civil War, the bloodiest in our history, was a declared war.9

Situations that Develop into Hostilities. The War Powers Resolution also applies to "the continued use of such forces in hostilities or in such situations." Thus, if U.S. troops are already stationed in an area where there are no imminent hostilities, but then we are attacked, we have a situation where there is the "continued use of such forces in hostilities or in such situations."

In short, the War Powers Resolution applies to everything that involves hostilities or that develops into hostilities. In our uncertain world, that covers a great deal.

When the President Can Use Combat Troops Short of a Declaration of War

Three major parts of the War Powers Resolution merit specific emphasis. First, there is section 1541(c), entitled "Presidential Executive Power as Commander In Chief; Limitation." It states that the President's constitutional power to introduce U.S. combat troops is limited to only three circumstances: "(1) a declaration of war, (2) specific statutory authorization, or (3) a national emergency created by attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions, or its armed forces."10

This section provides that the President is not allowed to send U.S. troops into combat unless Congress specifically gives advance approval; the only exception is if the President is responding to a national emergency created by an attack on U.S. territory or on U.S. armed forces.11 Even then, the President must report to Congress immediately and then "terminate any use" of the troops within 60 days unless Congress specifically approves of further action.12

Our history demonstrates that there are many other situations where Presidents have the constitutional authority to act. For example, the President may use the military to rescue U.S. citizens abroad, to rescue foreign nationals when that directly facilitates the rescue of our citizens abroad, to protect U.S. embassies abroad, to implement a cease-fire involving the United States, or to carry out the security commitments in a treaty.13 The War Powers Resolution, oddly enough, does not even include the right of the President to deter an imminent attack on the United States. Section 1541(c) only covers the situation where there has been an actual attack! Professor John Hart Ely admits that "it truly is impossible to predict and specify all the possible situations in which the president will need to act to protect the nation's security before he has time to obtain congressional authorization."14

Over the years Presidents have justified military action without the specific consent of Congress, relying on various theories not found in the War Powers Act.15 President Roosevelt sent troops to Iceland and Greenland in 1940, although federal legislation appeared to forbid it.16 President Johnson initially justified sending Marines to the Dominican Republic to protect U.S. citizens; later Johnson relied on the Rio Treaty. President Clinton involved the military in Haiti without seeking congressional approval.

After the enactment of the War Powers Resolution, Presidents have simply ignored the strict limits of this section, as illustrated by incidents such as the Mayaguez rescue and the invasion of Grenada. Moreover, the American people (particularly our citizens abroad) would not want a President to follow this section: To do that would assure unfriendly governments and terrorists that American embassy personnel, tourists, and other American nationals abroad are all fair game, unprotected by the world's only superpower. This section should simply be repealed.17

The Reporting Obligation

REV_00264882

Various sections of the law impose specific reporting obligations on the President. In general, the "President in every possible instance shall consult with Congress before" introducing troops into imminent hostilities and shall also consult with Congress regularly after the introduction of combat troops.18 The President must also submit a detailed written report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate within 48 hours after the introduction of combat troops.19

In a democracy, it is essential that the President consult with Congress and the American people and report what he is doing. If the American people are being asked to send their sons and daughters into combat, the President should honestly explain why. Granted, there will be some circumstances when it may be more difficult to report to particular congressional leaders. President Ford, in referring to the evacuation of Danang in April 1975, illustrated the problem:

> Congress was in a congressional Easter recess. Not one member of the key bipartisan leaders of Congress was in Washington. [H]ere is where we found the leaders of Congress. Two were in Mexico. Three were in Greece. One was in the Middle East. One was in Europe, and two were in the People's Republic of China. The rest were found in 12 widely scattered States of the Union.20

On the other hand, the law does not demand the impossible. The requirement of prior consultation only applies if it is "possible" to do so.21 The requirement of subsequent consultation is similar. The law only obligates the President to consult "regularly with Congress" while our armed forces are in combat situations.22 After he introduces troops, he must submit, within 48 hours, a written report to the House Speaker and the Senate President Pro Tempore explaining why he introduced the military, what authorized him to do so, and what is his estimate of the scope and duration of hostilities.23

This basic principle is a sound one. The President has the responsibility, in any democracy, to justify his actions to the American people in a candid way. Many of the explanations of our Vietnam policy were not candid, as Robert S. McNamara's recent memoirs acknowledged.24

Automatic Withdrawal of U.S. Troops and the Legislative Veto

Section 1544(b) of the War Powers Resolution requires that "the President shall terminate any use of United States Armed Forces" at the end of the 60-day period unless Congress has either declared war or enacted a law specifically authorizing the use of this force.25 In short, if Congress does nothing, within 60 days (or sometimes 90 days), the President must withdraw the troops. As one supporter of the War Powers Resolution explains this provision, "the president's authority to act in emergencies simply runs out in 60 days if Congress does nothing."26

Presidents and Congress have responded to this section by simply ignoring it. (Congress, for example, did not think that the 60-day clock should start running during the naval war against Iran in 1987-1988.27) Yet, its existence remains important. The inelegantly phrased language appears to give the President carte blanche authority for two months without any serious oversight.28 It also allows the executive and legislative branches to blame each other for failure of will, for exercise of judgement. It obscures blame and muddies responsibility. It is better for people to know where the responsibility lies. Then we will know whom to blame, and to whom we should give kudos.

If section 1544(b) were repealed, that would not prevent Congress from making known its view. On the contrary, Congress has always had the power to pass a concurrent resolution indicating its position on a matter. A concurrent resolution is not a law, and thus not subject to presidential veto. While this resolution does not legally bind the President, that does not make it irrelevant. If the President decided to ignore such a resolution, the people would know exactly whom to blame (or to praise) for the involvement of American combat troops. And Congress would make its will known by doing something, rather than by doing nothing. Everyone in Congress would have to stand up and be counted.

REV_00264883

Section 1544(c) goes beyond the prior section and creates what is known as a legislative veto. It provides that, notwithstanding the previous section, if both houses of Congress, by concurrent resolution, direct that the troops should be removed, the President must do so. This resolution, unlike a normal law, is not subject to presidential veto. Congress has always had the power to impose its will on the President by using its spending power to enact a law to limit presidential action, but a spending law would be subject to presidential veto. Section 1544(c) declares that it is not subject to veto but (unlike a normal concurrent resolution) must be treated the same as a statute.

Section 1544(c) is known as a legislative veto because it gives Congress the right to veto presidential action. As such, scholars have concluded that it is unconstitutional ever since INS v. Chadha,29 a 1983 case that invalidated all legislative vetoes.30 While Professor John Hart Ely argues that section 1544(c) is constitutional,31 even Professor Laurence Tribe admits that this section is unconstitutional.32 The only question is whether the existence of this unconstitutional section infects the entire resolution, as some commentators have suggested.33

The Peace Powers Act of 1995

The constitutional and policy problems with the War Powers Resolution, and its apparent irrelevance to military hostilities since its enactment, have caused commentators to call for its repeal. That does not mean, however, that it should be replaced with a vacuum. People do want to avoid another Vietnam; they do want to have Congress involved; and they do want to control foreign adventurism by a President too quick to spill American blood.

Senator Dole (R-KS) and several other Senators have introduced S. 5, the Peace Powers Act of 1995. This bill continues the basic reporting requirements of the War Powers Resolution. It mandates that the President "in every possible instance shall consult with Congress before introducing" American forces into imminent involvement in hostilities.34 The proposed law also requires that the President submit a written report to the House Speaker and Senate President Pro Tempore within 48 hours after introducing or substantially increasing armed forces into a hostile situation. This written report must explain why the introduction of armed forces is necessary, what is the legislative and constitutional authority, and what is the estimated scope and duration of involvement. The President must also supply periodic reports and respond to additional requests for information.35 H.R. 1111, which is a bill that Congressman Dornan (R-CA) and others have introduced in the House, imposes similar reporting obligations on the President.36

Both bills avoid the unconstitutional legislative veto; both avoid trying to create a definitive list of circumstances where the President can use the armed forces. (Recall that Professor Ely warned that it "truly is impossible to predict and specify all the possible situations in which the president will need to act to protect the nation's security before he has time to obtain congressional authorization."37) Both avoid the situation where Congress imposes its will by doing nothing, by failing to take action.

And both avoid the problem of appearing to delegate to our court system important questions of national policy. As Dr. Morton H. Halperin has noted, one of the major problems with the War Powers Resolution is that it has led to legal line drawing by the executive branch: "What you don't need is a legal opinion from your lawyers that you have not yet crossed some line drafted in a statute about how imminent the hostilities are."38

REV_00264884

The proposed Peace Powers Act also deals with an issue that Congress never really thought about in 1973: placing United States armed forces under foreign command. The United States has joined United Nations peacekeeping activities in the past, but it is only in recent times that the President has chosen to place U.S. troops under foreign command. The concern of many people is that foreign commanders may be more willing and ready to spend American blood than to spend the blood of their own countrymen. Just as many people are more generous when spending other people's money, so also we might expect that foreign military commanders, if given a choice of sending their own troops or American troops in harm's way, will prefer to spill American blood.

Consequently, Section 5 of the proposed Peace Powers Act provides that the President may not subordinate any element of the U.S. armed forces to any foreign national unless Congress enacts a law authorizing the subordination, or unless the President makes various findings and reports to various congressional committees. Sections 7 and 8 provide for prior congressional notification of proposed U.N. peacekeeping activities and require the President to identify the source of funding for these peacekeeping operations. These sections rely on Congress's spending power, which historically has been very broad.39

These sections do not put the President in any straitjacket, but are designed to assure candid consultation with Congress and the American people in matters involving foreign hostilities. In a democracy the people deserve no less. No overzealous President should involve the United States in unnecessary hostilities while avoiding congressional scrutiny. The War Powers Resolution has not worked; let us try something better: the proposed Peace Powers Act.

Endnotes

1. 87 Statutes at Large 555 (1973), codified at 50 U.S.C.A. 1541-48.

2. Although called a "resolution" because, at the time, that term was thought to be more "weighty and distinguished," it is real law, like any other statute. It was enacted by both houses of Congress, vetoed by President Nixon, and then passed over President Nixon's veto. See John Hart Ely, War and Responsibility: Constitutional Lessons of Vietnam and Its Aftermath 115 (1993).

3. Had the War Powers Resolution been in effect at the time of the Vietnam War, it probably would have made no difference, because President Johnson would have complied with it. In 1964, Congress (by a vote of 504 to 2) passed the Southeast Asian Resolution, authorizing the Vietnam War. In 1966, when we had more than 200,000 combat troops in Vietnam, when we all knew that the United States was involved in more than a minor police action, the Senate (92 to 5) voted to table an amendment to repeal the Southeast Asian Resolution. Moore, The War Powers Resolution Is of Doubtful Constitutionality, 70 A.B.A.J. 10, 12 (March 1984).

4. 134 Congressional Record, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (No. 71, May 19, 1988), at p. S6177.

5. Statement of President Gerald Ford, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing 100-1012, Sept. 15, 1988), at 161.

6. When the President does issue a report, he routinely states that he is "conforming" to the resolution, rather than "complying" with it.

REV_00264885

7. 50 U.S.C.A. 1541(a) (emphasis added).

8. Max Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 313, 318-19 (rev. ed., 1937).

9. R. Rotunda & J. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.9, at 528, & Appendix following 6.10, at 532-42 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992).

10. 50 U.S.C.A. 1541(c).

11. John Hart Ely agrees that this is what the section means. Ely, supra, at p. 229. Any other interpretation leads to peculiar results, as Ely explains. Id. at 229-30.

12. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543; 1544(b).

13. Hearings on War Powers before the Subcommittee on International Security and Scientific Affairs of the House Committee on International Relations, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., 90-91 (1975), testimony of Monroe Leigh, Legal Adviser to the State Department.

14. Ely, supra, at 118 (footnote omitted).

15. See 1 Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.10 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992), which discusses various examples, including those discussed here.

16. Professor John Hart Ely, while flirting with an effort to make this section enforceable in the courts, and conceding that his "instincts" would make this section "operational," ultimately admits that it should be repealed. Ely, supra, at 118-19.

17. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.

18. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543(a)(2). The written report must explain why the President introduced troops, the constitutional and legislative authority relied on, and the estimated scope and duration of the hostilities. 1543(3)(A),(B), & (C).

19. Statement of President Gerald Ford, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing 100-1012, Sept. 15, 1988), at 161.

20. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.

21. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.

22. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543(a)(3); see also 1543(b), (c) (dealing with periodic reporting).

23. E.g., George Melloan, "McNamara's War? You've Got To Be Kidding," The Wall Street Journal, April 17, 1995, at A13, col. 3-6 (midwest ed.).

24. The strictness of this law is illustrated by its narrow exceptions. It allows the President to extend the time period by an additional 30 days in certain circumstances and allows Congress to enact a statute to extend the 60-day period. The law also does not apply if Congress "is physically unable to meet," but only if it cannot meet for a specific reason: "as a result of an armed attack upon the United States." 1544(b)(3). The President cannot avoid the time limit by refusing to submit a report, because this section also covers the case where a report is "required to be submitted," even if not submitted.

REV_00264886

25. Tipson, The War Powers Resolution Is Constitutional and Enforceable, 70 A.B.A.J. 10, 14 (March 1984). President Nixon complained that this provision allowed Congress, "by doing nothing and sitting still," to make foreign policy and restrict the President. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 300 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984) (footnote omitted), quoting Robert J. Sickels, The Presidency 128 (1980).

26. Ely, Suppose Congress Wanted a War Powers Act That Worked, 88 Colum. L. Rev. 1379, 1381-83 (1988). Congress knew exactly what was going on; during this time period, on July 3, 1988, an American missile accidentally downed a civilian Iranian airplane which entered what the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff called "a war zone." None of this was secret. Earlier, Iran planted mines that damaged a U.S. frigate, and an Iranian missile boat fired a missile at a U.S. cruiser. The Iranian missile missed its target, and U.S. missiles and bombs then destroyed the Iranian boat.

27. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 300 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984).

28. 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983).

29. E.g., 1 Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.13, at 551 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992).

30. Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 119.

31. Laurence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 218 n. 25 (Foundation Press, 2d ed., 1988), referring specifically to 1544(c).

32. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 301 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984): Chadha "clearly lays the ground for a serious constitutional challenge to the entire resolution" (emphasis added). Professor Ely expresses concern that Chadha "provides an excuse to condemn the entire Resolution as 'unconstitutional.'" Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 119 (emphasis added). The resolution, however, contains a severability clause, 1548. On the other hand, one can argue that 1544(c) is central to large parts of the resolution -- Ely calls it part of a "package" that includes 1544(b) (emphasis in original) -- and that may be why some commentators suggest that this provision infects and invalidates the entire resolution.

33. S. 5, at 3.

34. S. 5, at 4.

35. H.R. 1111 (Mar. 2, 1995), a bill to clarify the war powers of Congress and the President in the post-Cold War period.

REV_00264887

36. Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 118 (footnote omitted).

37. Statement of Morton H. Halperin, ACLU, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing 100-1012, Sept. 20, 1988), at 223.

38. U.S. Const., Art. I, 8, cl. 1. See also Art. I, 8, cl. 12, which authorizes Congress to raise and support armies, "but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years."
39. 87 Statutes at Large 555 (1973), codified at 50 U.S.C.A. 1541-48.
40. Although called a "resolution" because, at the time, that term was thought to be more "weighty and distinguished," it is real law, like any other statute. It was enacted by both houses of Congress, vetoed by President Nixon, and then passed over President Nixon's veto. See John Hart Ely, War and Responsibility: Constitutional Lessons of Vietnam and Its Aftermath 115 (1993).
41. Had the War Powers Resolution been in effect at the time of the Vietnam War, it probably would have made no difference, because President Johnson would have complied with it. In 1964, Congress (by a vote of 504 to 2) passed the Southeast Asian Resolution, authorizing the Vietnam War. In 1966, when we had more than 200,000 combat troops in Vietnam, when we all knew that the United States was involved in more than a minor police action, the Senate (92 to 5) voted to table an amendment to repeal the Southeast Asian Resolution. Moore, The War Powers Resolution Is of Doubtful Constitutionality, 70 A.B.A.J. 10, 12 (March 1984).
42. 134 Congressional Record, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (No. 71, May 19, 1988), at p. S6177.
43. Statement of President Gerald Ford, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing 100-1012, Sept. 15, 1988), at 161.
44. When the President does issue a report, he routinely states that he is "conforming" to the resolution, rather than "complying" with it.
45. 50 U.S.C.A. 1541(a) (emphasis added).
46. 2 Max Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 313, 318-19 (rev. ed., 1937).
47. 1 R. Rotunda & J. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.9, at 528, & Appendix following 6.10, at 532-42 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992).
48. 50 U.S.C.A. 1541(c).
49. John Hart Ely agrees that this is what the section means. Ely, supra, at p. 229. Any other interpretation leads to peculiar results, as Ely explains. Id. at 229-30.
50. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543; 1544(b).
51. Hearings on War Powers before the Subcommittee on International Security and Scientific Affairs of the House Committee on International Relations, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., 90-91 (1975), testimony of Monroe Leigh, Legal Adviser to the State Department.
52. Ely, supra, at 118 (footnote omitted).
53. See 1 Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.10 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992), which discusses various examples, including those discussed here.
54. Louis Henkin, Foreign Affairs and the Constitution 106 (1972).
55. Professor John Hart Ely, while flirting with an effort to make this section enforceable in the courts, and conceding that his "instincts" would make this section "operational," ultimately admits that it should be repealed. Ely, supra, at 118-19.
56. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.
57. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543(a)(2). The written report must explain why the President introduced troops, the constitutional and legislative authority relied on, and the estimated scope and duration of the hostilities. 1543(3)(A),(B), & (C).
58. Statement of President Gerald Ford, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing 100-1012, Sept. 15, 1988), at 161.

REV_00264888

59. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.
60. 50 U.S.C.A. 1542.
61. 50 U.S.C.A. 1543(a)(3); see also 1543(b), (c) (dealing with periodic reporting).
62. E.g., George Melloan, "McNamara's War? You've Got To Be Kidding," The Wall Street Journal, April 17, 1995, at A13, col. 3-6 (midwest ed.).
63. The strictness of this law is illustrated by its narrow exceptions. It allows the President to extend the time period by an additional 30 days in certain circumstances and allows Congress to enact a statute to extend the 60-day period. The law also does not apply if Congress "is physically unable to meet," but only if it cannot meet for a specific reason: "as a result of an armed attack upon the United States." 1544(b)(3). The President cannot avoid the time limit by refusing to submit a report, because this section also covers the case where a report is "required to be submitted," even if not submitted.
64. Tipson, The War Powers Resolution Is Constitutional and Enforceable, 70 A.B.A.J. 10, 14 (March 1984). President Nixon complained that this provision allowed Congress, "by doing nothing and sitting still," to make foreign policy and restrict the President. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 300 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984) (footnote omitted), quoting Robert J. Sickels, The Presidency 128 (1980).
65. Ely, Suppose Congress Wanted a War Powers Act That Worked, 88 Colum. L. Rev. 1379, 1381-83 (1988). Congress knew exactly what was going on; during this time period, on July 3, 1988, an American missile accidentally downed a civilian Iranian airplane which entered what the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff called "a war zone." None of this was secret. Earlier, Iran planted mines that damaged a U.S. frigate, and an Iranian missile boat fired a missile at a U.S. cruiser. The Iranian missile missed its target, and U.S. missiles and bombs then destroyed the Iranian boat.
66. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 300 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984).
67. 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983).
68. E.g., 1 Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law: Substance and Procedure 6.13, at 551 (West Pub. Co., 2d ed., 1992).
69. Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 119.
70. Laurence H. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 218 n. 25 (Foundation Press, 2d ed., 1988), referring specifically to 1544(c).
71. Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers, 1787-1984, at p. 301 (5th rev. ed., by Randall W. Bland, Theodore T. Hindson, & Jack W. Peltason, 1984): Chadha "clearly lays the ground for a serious constitutional challenge to the entire resolution" (emphasis added). Professor Ely expresses concern that Chadha "provides an excuse to condemn the entire Resolution as 'unconstitutional.'" Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 119 (emphasis added). The resolution, however, contains a severability clause, 1548. On the other hand, one can argue that 1544(c) is central to large parts of the resolution -- Ely calls it part of a "package" that includes 1544(b) (emphasis in original) -- and that may be why some commentators suggest that this provision infects and invalidates the entire resolution.
72. S. 5, at 3.
73. S. 5, at 4.
74. H.R. 1111 (Mar. 2, 1995), a bill to clarify the war powers of Congress and the President in the post-Cold War period.
75. Ely, War and Responsibility, supra, at 118 (footnote omitted).
76. Statement of Morton H. Halperin, ACLU, Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on War Powers of the Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Hearing

REV_00264889

Counsel's office, White House
Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject Files

[Weekly Report]

OA/NARA#: 2165/2076
9695

Box 63
Folder 5

REV_00264891

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

Binder - [West Case Law Reporters][1]

OA/NARA #: 1651/1519
9602

Box 63
Folder 6

REV_00264892

[redacted] 1

295 US 555
↳ retroactive - vested interests

FN1. Last Term this Court affirmed, by an equally divided vote, a judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit that held § 27A(b) constitutional. Morgan Stanley & Co. v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 511 U.S. 658, 114 S.Ct. 1827, 128 L.Ed.2d 654 (1994) (per curiam). That ruling of course lacks precedential weight. Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hardison, 432 U.S. 63, 73, n. 8, 97 S.Ct. 2264, 2271, n. 8, 53 L.Ed.2d 113 (1977).

II

[1][2] Respondents bravely contend that § 27A(b) does not require federal courts to reopen final judgments, arguing first that the reference to "the laws applicable in the jurisdiction ... as such laws existed on June 19, 1991" (the day before Lampf was decided) may reasonably be construed to refer precisely to the limitations period provided in Lampf itself, in which case petitioners' action was time barred even under 216 § 27A. [FN2] It is true that "[a] judicial construction of a statute is an authoritative statement of what the statute meant before as well as after the decision of the case giving rise to that construction." Rivers v. Roadway Express, Inc., 511 U.S. 298, 312-313, 114 S.Ct. 1510, 1519, 128 L.Ed.2d 274 (1994); see also id., at 313, n. 12, 114 S.Ct., at 1519, n. 12. But respondents' argument confuses the question of what the law in fact was on June 19, 1991, with the distinct question of what § 27A *1452 means by its reference to what the law was. We think it entirely clear that it does not mean the law enunciated in Lampf, for two independent reasons. First, Lampf provides a uniform, national statute of limitations (instead of using the applicable state limitations period, as lower federal courts had previously done. See Lampf, 501 U.S., at 354, and n. 1, 111 S.Ct., at 2777, and n. 1). If the statute referred to that law, its reference to the "laws applicable in the jurisdiction " (emphasis added) would be quite inexplicable. Second, if the statute refers to the law enunciated in Lampf, it is utterly without effect, a result to be avoided if possible. American Nat. Red Cross v. S.G., 505 U.S. 247, 263-264, 112 S.Ct. 2465, 2474-2475, 120 L.Ed.2d 201 (1992); see 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutory Construction § 46.06 (Sands rev. 4th ed. 1984). It would say, in subsection (a), that the limitations period is what the Supreme Court has held to be the limitations period; and in subsection (b), that suits dismissed as untimely under Lampf which were timely under Lampf (a null set) shall be reinstated. To avoid a constitutional question by holding that Congress enacted, and the President approved, a blank sheet of paper would indeed constitute "disingenuous evasion." George Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, 289 U.S. 373, 379, 53 S.Ct. 620, 622, 77 L.Ed. 1265 (1933).

FN2. Since respondents' reading of the statute would avoid a constitutional question of undoubted gravity, we think it prudent to entertain the argument even though respondents did not make it in the Sixth Circuit. Of course the Sixth Circuit did decide (against respondents) the point to which the argument was directed. See 1 F.3d 1487, 1490 (1993) ("The statute's language is plain and unambiguous.... [It] commands the Federal courts to reinstate cases which those courts have dismissed").

217 As an alternative reason why § 27A(b) does not require the reopening of final judgments, respondents suggest that the subsection applies only to cases still pending in the federal courts when § 27A was enacted. This has only half the defect of the first argument, for it makes only half of § 27A purposeless--§ 27A(b). There is no need to "reinstate" actions that are still pending; § 27A(a) (the new statute of limitations) could and would be applied by the courts of appeals. On respondents' reading, the only consequence of § 27A(b) would be the negligible one of permitting the plaintiff in the pending appeal from a statute-of-limitations dismissal to return immediately to the district court, instead of waiting for the court of appeals' reversal. To enable § 27A(b) to achieve such an insignificant consequence, one must disregard the language of the provision, which refers generally to suits "dismissed as time barred." It is perhaps arguable that this does not include suits that are not yet finally dismissed, i.e., suits still pending on appeal; but there is no basis for the contention that it includes only those. In short, there is no reasonable construction on which § 27A(b) does not require federal courts to reopen final judgments in suits dismissed with prejudice by virtue of Lampf.

III

[3] Respondents submit that § 27A(b) violates both the separation of powers and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. [FN3] Because the latter submission, if correct, might dictate a similar result federal law, since the complaint does not allege and the District Court did not find that North Carolina law would provide any remedy against it as a joint tortfeasor. On the Court's theory of the case, then, it need not decide whether jurisdiction could be obtained over Duke Power under § 1331. Ante, at 2630 n. 16. That is a particularly felicitous conclusion from the Court's point of view, since the complaint does not allege that each member of the plaintiff class has a claim in excess of $10,000. against Duke Power, which is a prerequisite to jurisdiction under § 1331. Zahn v. International Paper Co., 414 U.S. 291, 94 S.Ct. 505, 38 L.Ed.2d 511 (1973).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Despite the Court's assurances, it is conceivable that the practical effect of today's decision could be an erosion of the well-pleaded complaint doctrine. Had the plaintiffs in Mottley joined as defendants a federal agency having as ephemeral a relation to the statute challenged there as does the Commission to the statute involved here, the District Court, according to today's decision, would have had jurisdiction to consider the constitutionality of the statute, even though its judgment would not have been binding against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Innumerable federal statutes and regulations affect the daily decisions of private parties, who would undoubtedly appreciate the sort of advisory opinion rendered today on the validity of those provisions. This Court should not encourage the hope that such opinions may be obtained by suing an appropriate federal agency under a claim which verges on the frivolous.

99 2644 Appellees do not contend that the Price-Anderson Act itself grants to them personal rights which may be vindicated in a federal proceeding. Since the only property rights they assert arise under North Carolina law, the District Court had no jurisdiction to consider whether the setting up of an Act of Congress as a defense against those rights would deny them due process of law under the Fifth Amendment.

Indeed, the Court does not even contend that there is an independent statutory source of jurisdiction over Duke. Ante, at 2630 n. 16. It suggests instead that the complaint states a claim against the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, not as a joint tortfeasor under North Carolina law, but as the administrator of an unconstitutional federal statute. The Court's theory is that the complaint alleges the existence of an implied right of action under the Fifth Amendment to obtain relief against arbitrary federal statutes. It can hardly be said that this theory of the case emerges with crystal clarity from either the complaint or the brief of the appellees.

More importantly, there is no allegation in this complaint that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has taken or will take any unconstitutional action at all. The complaint alleges only that the Commission granted construction permits to 100 Duke, and that it will enter into an agreement "to indemnify Duke for any nuclear incident exceeding the amount of $125,000,000 subject to a maximum liability of $560,000,000." App. 31, ¶ 13. Neither of these actions is alleged to be unconstitutional. The gist of the complaint is the asserted unconstitutionality of 42 U.S.C. § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V), which limits Duke's liability. But this limitation of liability is separate and apart from the indemnity agreement which the Commission is authorized to execute under 42 U.S.C. § 2210(d) (1970 ed., Supp. V). The Commission has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the limitation of liability; whatever administration of that statute there is to be is left in the hands of the District Court. 42 U.S.C. § 2210(o) (1970 ed. and supp. v). the dIstrict Court, of course, is not a party to this suit. [FN3]

FN3. Appellees' challenge to the construction permits was rejected in Carolina Environmental Study Group v. United States, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 416, 510 F.2d 796 (1975). It is true, as the Court remarks, ante, at 2635 n. 26, that "absent the execution of such [indemnity] agreements between the NRC and the licensees, the liability-limitation provisions of the Act, to which appellees object, would simply not come into play." That logical connection, however, does not amount to an allegation that the Commission's execution of an indemnity agreement is itself unconstitutional. The only federal action challenged by this complaint is a hypothetical district court's hypothetical invocation of the statute in the event of a hypothetical nuclear accident. In that entire string of hypothetical events, no action of the Commission is alleged to be unconstitutional.

It simply cannot be said that these allegations make out an actual controversy against the Commission. While the Commission may be quite interested in the constitutionality of the statute, that is hardly sufficient to establish a justiciable controversy. Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346, 361-362, 31 S.Ct. 250, 255-256, 55 L.Ed. 246 (1911). While appellees may have been damaged by Duke's decision to construct these plants, there is no "challenged action of the defendant" Commission to which their damage "fairly can be traced." Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare 101 Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1925, 48 L.Ed.2d 450 (1976). If Duke decided to proceed with construction despite a declaration of the statute's unconstitutionality, there would be nothing that the Commission could do to aid appellees. Where the prospect of effective relief against a defendant depends on the actions of a third party, no justiciable controversy exists against that defendant. Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 505, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2208, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975). In short, appellees' only conceivable controversy is with Duke, over whom the District Court had no jurisdiction.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2645 II

As appellees themselves describe the second aspect of their complaint, "the central issue is whether in the circumstances of this case, the complete destruction of appellees' property by a nuclear accident, occurring at one of Duke's plants, would be a 'taking' by the United States, as that term is defined in the Fifth Amendment." Brief for Appellees 62. This statement makes clear that appellees' claim arises not under the Price-Anderson Act but under the Fifth Amendment itself. Jurisdiction under § 1337 extends only to actions vindicating rights created by an Act of Congress. Compare Switchmen v. National Mediation Board, 320 U.S. 297, 300, 64 S.Ct. 95, 96, 88 L.Ed. 61 (1943), with General Committee v. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co., 320 U.S. 323, 337, 64 S.Ct. 146, 152, 88 L.Ed. 76 (1943). Since it cannot be maintained that the Price-Anderson Act created appellees' asserted right to be free from takings for public use without just compensation, it follows that District Court jurisdiction may not be predicated upon § 1337.

The District Court does have jurisdiction to consider claims of taking under the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2) (1976 ed.), where the amount in controversy does not exceed $10,000. [FN4] "But the Act has long been construed as authorizing *102 only actions for money judgments and not suits for equitable relief against the United States." Richardson v. Morris, 409 U.S. 464, 465, 93 S.Ct. 629, 631, 34 L.Ed.2d 647 (1973). It is incontrovertibly established that neither the Court of Claims nor the district courts have jurisdiction under the Tucker Act to issue the sort of declaratory relief granted here. Compare ibid., with United States v. King, 395 U.S. 1, 89 S.Ct. 1501, 23 L.Ed.2d 52 (1969). Thus, the record does not establish any jurisdictional basis upon which the District Court could grant declaratory relief on appellees' taking claim.

FN4. The Court concludes, ante, at 2629-2630 n. 15, although appellees do not so contend, that their taking claim is cognizable under 28 U.S.C. § 1331(a) (1976 ed.), which grants jurisdiction to the district courts where the suit "arises under the Constitution." The Court cites only the Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 95 S.Ct. 335, 42 L.Ed.2d 320 (1974), in support of its conclusion that this claim may be maintained under § 1331. It is, of course, well established that "when questions of jurisdiction have been passed on in prior decisions sub silentio, this Court has never considered itself bound when a subsequent case finally brings the jurisdictional issue before us." Hagans v. Lavine, 415 U.S. 528, 535 n. 5, 94 S.Ct. 1372, 1378, 39 L.Ed.2d 577 (1974). In the Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases this Court's opinion did not even cite the statutory basis for jurisdiction, much less consider its validity. To conclude that § 1331 embraces a "taking" claim makes the Tucker Act largely superfluous, cf. United States v. Testan, 424 U.S. 392, 404, 96 S.Ct. 948, 956, 47 L.Ed.2d 114 (1976), and will permit the district courts to consider claims of over $10,000 which previously could only be litigated in the Court of Claims. Richardson v. Morris, 409 U.S. 464, 93 S.Ct. 629, 34 L.Ed.2d 647 (1973). Such a significant expansion of the jurisdiction of the district courts should not be accomplished without the benefit of arguments and briefing.

There being no basis for District Court jurisdiction over either of appellees' claims, its judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded with instructions to dismiss the complaint for want of jurisdiction.

Mr. Justice STEVENS, concurring in the judgment.

The string of contingencies that supposedly holds this litigation together is too delicate for me. We are told that but for the Price-Anderson Act there would be no financing of nuclear power plants, no development of those plants by private parties, and hence no present injury to persons such as appellees;

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

we are then asked to remedy an alleged due process violation 103 that may possibly occur at some uncertain time in the future, and may possibly injure the appellees in a way that has no significant connection with any present injury. It is remarkable that such a series of speculations is considered sufficient either to make this litigation ripe for decision or to establish appellees' standing; [FN*] it is even more remarkable *2646 that this occurs in a case in which, as Mr. JUSTICE REHNQUIST demonstrates, there is no federal jurisdiction in the first place.

> FN* With respect to whether appellees' claim of present injury is sufficient to establish standing, it should be noted that some sort of financing is essential to almost all projects, public or private. Statutes that facilitate and may be essential to the financing abound--from tax statutes to statutes prohibiting fraudulent securities transactions. One would not assume, however, that mere neighbors have standing to litigate the legality of a utility's financing. Cf. Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723, 95 S.Ct. 1917, 44 L.Ed.2d 539.

The Court's opinion will serve the national interest in removing doubts concerning the constitutionality of the Price-Anderson Act. I cannot, therefore, criticize the statesmanship of the Court's decision to provide the country with an advisory opinion on an important subject. Nevertheless, my view of the proper function of this Court, or of any other federal court, in the structure of our Government is more limited. We are not statesmen; we are judges. When it is necessary to resolve a constitutional issue in the adjudication of an actual case or controversy, it is our duty to do so. But whenever we are persuaded by reasons of expediency to engage in the business of giving legal advice, we chip away a part of the foundation of our independence and our strength.

I join Mr. Justice REHNQUIST'S opinion concurring in the judgment.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[redacted]

Supreme Court of the United States

W. J. USERY, Jr., Secretary of the United States Department of Labor, et al., Appellants,
v.
TURNER ELKHORN MINING COMPANY et al.
TURNER ELKHORN MINING COMPANY et al., Appellants,
v.
W. J. USERY, Jr., Secretary of the United States Department of Labor, et al.

Nos. 74-1302, 74-1316.

Argued Dec. 2, 1975.
Decided July 1, 1976.

Action was brought by coal mine operators attacking constitutionality of black lung benefit provisions of Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. The Three- Judge District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, 385 F.Supp. 424, found amended Act constitutional on its face except in regard to two provisions concerning determination of miner's total disability due to pneumoconiosis, and appeals were taken. The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Marshall, held that due process clause poses no bar to requiring coal mine operator to provide compensation for former miner's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines even if former miner terminated his employment in the industry before the Act was passed; that Congress did not act arbitrarily in selecting ten and 15-year figures as reference points for presumptions of disability due to pneumoconiosis; and that challenged provisions of Act were constitutionally sound.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and vacated and remanded in part.

Mr. Chief Justice Burger concurred in the judgment.

Mr. Justice Powell filed concurring opinion.

Mr. Justice Stewart filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part in which Mr. Justice Rehnquist joined.

West Headnotes

[1] Courts ⚖96(3)
106k96(3) Most Cited Cases

Supreme Court's summary affirmance in prior case did not foreclose district court's determination of unconstitutionality regarding issues which were not before Supreme Court on prior appeal.

[2] Courts ⚖90(1)
106k90(1) Most Cited Cases

Although several questions presented had been raised and decided in prior case which had been disposed of by summary affirmance, Supreme Court, having heard oral argument and entertained full briefing on such issues together with other questions raised, would proceed to treat them more fully.

[3] Constitutional Law ⚖48(1)
92k48(1) Most Cited Cases

Legislative acts adjusting burdens and benefits of economic life come to Supreme Court with presumption of constitutionality, and burden is on one complaining of due process violation to establish that legislature has acted in arbitrary and irrational way.

[4] Constitutional Law ⚖81
92k81 Most Cited Cases

Legislation readjusting rights and burdens is not unlawful solely because it upsets otherwise settled expectations, even though effect of legislation is to impose new duties or liability based on past acts.

[5] Labor Relations ⚖13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

Justification for retrospective imposition of liability on coal mine operators for pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in coal mines of miners who terminated their work in the industry before Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, as amended by Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, was enacted had to take into account possibility that operators may not have known of danger of their employees' contracting pneumoconiosis, and that even if they did know of danger their conduct may have been taken in reliance upon current state of the law, which imposed no liability on them for disabling pneumoconiosis. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 422 as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 932.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[6] Labor Relations ⚖13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

Imposition of liability on coal mine operators under Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, which Act as amended requires operator to provide compensation for former employee's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines even if former employee terminated his employment in mines before Act was passed, for disabilities bred in the past was justified as rational measure to spread costs of employees' disability to those who profited from the fruits of their labor, the operators and coal consumers. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 422 as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 932.

[7] Constitutional Law ⚖70.3(9.1)
92k70.3(9.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k70.3(9))

Whether broader cost-spreading scheme than Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, which as amended requires coal mine operator to provide compensation for former employee's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines even if former employee terminated his employment before Act was passed, would have been wiser or more practical under the circumstances was not a question of constitutional dimension. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 422 as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 932.

[8] Constitutional Law ⚖301(4)
92k301(4) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k301)

Due process clause poses no bar to requiring coal mine operator to provide compensation for former employee's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines, even if former employee terminated his employment in the industry before statute requiring such compensation was passed. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 422 as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 932; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

[9] Constitutional Law ⚖70.3(9.1)
92k70.3(9.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k70.3(9))

[9] Labor Relations ⚖8
232Ak8 Most Cited Cases

Whether impairment of health of coal miner and fact that he had been rendered unable to perform kind of work to which he adapted himself merits compensation is public policy matter left primarily to determination of legislature, and such factors are not so insignificant as not to be rightful basis for compensation, and thus statutory definition providing that coal miner is totally disabled if pneumoconiosis prevents him from engaging in gainful employment requiring skills and abilities comparable to his employment in mines was not unconstitutionally arbitrary and irrational on theory that it provided compensation for former miners who might well be employable in other lines of work. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 402(f), as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 902(f).

[10] Labor Relations ⚖8
232Ak8 Most Cited Cases

[10] Labor Relations ⚖13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

Effect of statutory "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability establishing entitlement where coal miner is clinically diagnosable as extremely ill with pneumoconiosis arising out of coal mine employment is permissible, and thus such provision, being part of statute regulating purely economic matters, was not rendered invalid by Congress' choice of statutory language on theory that Congress accomplished result in impermissible manner by defining eligibility in terms of "total disability" and directing "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability upon factual showing that did not necessarily satisfy statutory definition of total disability. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 411(c)(3) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 921(c)(3).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264997

[11] Labor Relations ⚿13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

Benefits authorized under statutory provision that clinical evidence of miner's complicated pneumoconiosis gives rise to irrebuttable presumption that he was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis at time of his death and that his death was due to pneumoconiosis were intended not simply as compensation for damages due to miner's death, but as deferred compensation for injury suffered during miner's lifetime as result of illness itself, and thus such benefits presented no problem in connection with retrospective application of provision to employees who terminated their employment before statute authorizing benefits was passed. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 411(c)(3) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 921(c)(3).

[12] Labor Relations ⚿8
232Ak8 Most Cited Cases

[12] Labor Relations ⚿13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

In view of agreement that pneumoconiosis is caused by breathing coal dust and medical evidence indicating noticeable incidence of pneumoconiosis in cases of miners with ten years' mine employment, it was not "purely arbitrary" for Congress to select ten-year figure as point of reference for statutory rebuttable presumptions that coal miner with ten years' employment in mines is presumed to have contracted pneumoconiosis from employment and that death of coal miner with ten years' employment is presumed to have been due to pneumoconiosis; nor were such ten-year presumptions arbitrary because they failed to account for varying degrees of exposure. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 411(c)(1, 2) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 921(c)(1, 2); Federal Rules of Evidence, rule 301, 28 U.S.C.A.

[13] Labor Relations ⚿8
232Ak8 Most Cited Cases

[13] Labor Relations ⚿13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

In light of medical testimony to effect that 15-year point marks beginning of linear increase in prevalence of disease with years spent underground, 15 years' durational basis of statutory presumption that coal miner employed for 15 years in underground mines who is able to marshal evidence demonstrating totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment is rebuttably presumed totally disabled by pneumoconiosis was not arbitrary. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 411(c)(4) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 921(c)(4).

[14] Constitutional Law ⚿55
92k55 Most Cited Cases

Congress has plenary authority over promulgation of evidentiary rules for federal courts.

[15] Labor Relations ⚿8
232Ak8 Most Cited Cases

[15] Labor Relations ⚿13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

In view of significant evidence presented to Congress demonstrating that X-ray testing which fails to disclose pneumoconiosis cannot be depended upon as trustworthy indicator of absence of disease, Congress' resolution of doubts in favor of disabled miner through enactment of provision that no claim for black lung benefits shall be denied solely on basis of chest X-ray did not render enactment arbitrary under standards of rationality appropriate to legislation in question. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 413(b) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 923(b).

[16] Constitutional Law ⚿55
92k55 Most Cited Cases

When it comes to evidentiary rules in matters not within specialized judicial competence or completely commonplace, it is primarily for Congress to amass the stuff of actual experience and cull conclusions from it.

[17] Labor Relations ⚿13
232Ak13 Most Cited Cases

[17] Workers' Compensation ⚿1388
413k1388 Most Cited Cases

Limitation on rebuttal evidence contained in statutory section, which provides that miner employed for 15 years in underground mine who is able to demonstrate totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment is rebuttably presumed totally disabled by pneumoconiosis and his death rebuttably presumed due to pneumoconiosis, and which applies only to "the Secretary," applies only to the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and is inapplicable to coal mine operators, and thus evidence with which coal miner operator may rebut such presumption is not restricted. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, § 411(c)(4) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. § 921(c)(4).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[18] Federal Courts ⇐479
170Bk479 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 30k170(1))

Where coal mine operators' amended complaint never challenged statutory or constitutional validity of regulations promulgated by Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare authorizing limitations on rebuttal evidence in determination of coal mine operator's liability for black lung benefits, and in absence of any mention of regulations in opinion and judgment of district court or in briefs and oral arguments of the parties, Supreme Court found it inappropriate to consider regulations' statutory or constitutional validity. Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, §§ 411(b), 422(h) as amended 30 U.S.C.A. §§ 921(b), 932(h).

2885 Syllabus [FN]

FN* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

1 Title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, as amended by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, provides benefits to coal miners suffering from "black lung disease" (pneumoconiosis), and to survivors of miners who have died from, or while totally disabled by, the disease. Financial responsibility for payment of the benefits is divided into three parts: (1) Under Part B of Title IV claims filed between December 30, 1969 (enactment date), and June 30, 1973, are adjudicated by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW), and paid by the United *2886 States; (2) under s 415 of Part B claims filed during the transition period between the Federal Government benefit provision under Part B, Supra, and the state plan or operator benefit provision under Part C, Infra (July 1 to December 31, 1973), are adjudicated by the Secretary of Labor and paid by the United States. Federal payments to these claimants terminate on December 31, 1973, and the claimant's coal mine employer assumes responsibility to make continuing payments as if Part C and 2 s 422 had applied (see (3), infra); and (3) under Part C, claims filed after December 31, 1973, are to be processed under an approved state workmen's compensation law and, absent such an approved plan, claims are to be filed with and adjudicated by the Secretary of Labor, d paid by the mine operators s 422. Under that provision an operator, who is entitled to a hearing in connection with these claims, is liable for benefits with respect to death or total disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in a mine for which the operator is responsible, the operator's liability covering the period from January 1, 1974, to December 30, 1981. Payments for benefits under Part C are to the same category of persons (a miner or certain survivors) and in the same amounts as under Part B. A miner is "totally disabled" and thus entitled to compensation "when pneumoconiosis prevents him from engaging in gainful employment requiring the skills and abilities comparable to those of any employment in a mine or mines in which he previously engaged with some regularity and over a substantial period of time," s 402(f). The Act prescribes several "presumptions" for use in determining compensable disability: Under s 411(c)(3) a miner shown by X-ray or other clinical evidence to be afflicted with complicated pneumoconiosis (the disease's incurable and final stage) is "irrebuttably presumed" to be totally disabled due to the disease; if such a miner has died, it is irrebuttably presumed that he was totally disabled by the disease at the time of death, and that his death was due thereto. There are three rebuttable presumptions (none of which may, under s 413(b), be defeated solely by a chest X-ray): (1) if a miner with 10 or more years' mine employment contracts pneumoconiosis, it is presumed that the disease arose out of such employment, s 411(c)(1); (2) if he died from a respiratory disease it is presumed that death was due to pneumoconiosis, s 411(c)(2); (3) if a miner, or the survivor of a miner, with 15 or more years' underground coal mine employment is able, despite the absence of clinical evidence of complicated pneumoconiosis, to demonstrate a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment, it is presumed that the total disability is attributable to the disease, that the miner was totally disabled thereby when he died, and that death was due to the disease, s 411(c)(4), and the final sentence of that provision specifies that "(t)he Secretary may rebut (this latter) presumption only by establishing that (A) such miner does not, or did not, have pneumoconiosis, or that (B) his respiratory or pulmonary impairment *3 did not arise out of, or in connection with, employment in a coal mine." A number of operators brought this suit claiming that the Act is unconstitutional under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment insofar as it requires benefit payments with respect to miners who left mine employment before the Act's effective date; that the statutory definitions, presumptions, and limitations on rebuttal evidence unconstitutionally impair the operator's ability to defend against benefit claims; and that certain regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor regarding the apportionment of liability for benefits among operators are inconsistent with the Act and unconstitutional. The District Court upheld each challenged provision as constitutional, with two exceptions: (1) It held s 411(c)(3) unconstitutional as an unreasonable and arbitrary legislative finding of total disability "in terms other than those provided by the Act as standards for total disability." (2) Reading the evidence limitation on rebuttal in s 411(c)(4) to apply to an operator's defense in a s 415 transition-period case, the court held the limitation 2887 arbitrary and unreasonable in not permitting a rebuttal showing that the case of pneumoconiosis afflicting the miner was not disabling. And, taking the provision to mean that an operator may defend against liability only on the ground that pneumoconiosis did not arise out of employment in any coal mine (rather than in a coal mine for which the operator was responsible) the District Court found the provision an arbitrary and unreasonable limitation on rebuttal evidence relevant and proper under s 422(c). The court enjoined the Secretary of Labor from seeking to apply the two provisions thus found unconstitutional. Held:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1. This Court's summary affirmance in National Independent Coal Operators Assn. v. Brennan, 419 U.S. 955, 95 S.Ct. 216, 42 L.Ed.2d 172, did not foreclose the District Court's rulings regarding ss 411(c)(3) and (4), which were not before the Court on that appeal. Pp. 2891-2892.

2. The challenged provisions do not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Pp. 2891-2903.

(a) The Clause does not bar requiring an operator to provide compensation for a former employee's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines, even if the former employee terminated his employment in its mines before the Act was passed. Retrospective application of the Act in this manner can be justified as serving to spread costs in a rational manner by allocating to the operator an actual cost of its business, whose avoidance might be thought to have enlarged *4 the operator's profits. .Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 758, 79 L.Ed. 1468, distinguished. Pp. 2891-2894, 2896-2898.

(b) Though the operators contend that the s 402(f) definition of total disability is arbitrary because former miners who might be employable in other lines of work are compensated, a miner disabled under s 402(f)'s standards has suffered health impairment, and has been rendered unable to perform the work to which he has adapted himself, factors which afford a rational basis for compensation. P. 2895.

(c) The effect of s 411(c)(3)'s "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability to establish entitlement where a miner is clinically diagnosable as extremely ill with pneumoconiosis arising out of coal mine employment is clearly permissible, and the provision, being part of a statute regulating purely economic matters, is not rendered invalid by Congress' choice of statutory language. Pp. 2895-2897.

(d) The presumptions in ss 411(c)(1) and (2) are valid because there is a "rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed," Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U.S. 35, 43, 31 S.Ct. 136, 138, 55 L.Ed. 78. In view of the medical evidence before Congress indicating the noticeable incidence of pneumoconiosis in cases of miners with 10 years' mine employment, it was not "purely arbitrary" for Congress to select the 10-year figure as a reference point for the presumptions; not are the 10-year presumptions arbitrary because they fail to account for varying degrees of exposure. Pp. 2898-2899.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(e) The 15-year durational basis of the presumption in s 411(c)(4) is likewise unassailable, particularly in light of medical testimony in the Senate Hearings on the 1969 Act. Pp. 2899, 2900.

(f) Congress had evidence showing doubts about the reliability of negative X- ray evidence as indicating the absence of the disease. That through its adoption of s 413(b) Congress ultimately resolved those doubts in the disabled miner's favor does not render that provision arbitrary. Pp. 2900-2901.

(g) The District Court improperly invalidated the limitation on evidence contained in s 411(c)(4) because the limitation is inapplicable to operators and applies only to the Secretary of HEW. Thus the Act does not restrict the evidence with which an operator may rebut the s 411(c)(4) presumption. Pp. 2901-2903.

385 F.Supp. 424, affirmed in part; reversed in part; vacated and remanded in part.

2888 *5 R. RMcMahan, Chicago, Ill., for Turner Elkhorn Mining Co. et al.

Lawrence G. Wallace, Washington, D.C., for John T. Dunlop et al.

Mr. Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

Twenty-two coal mine operators (Operators) brought this suit to test the constitutionality of certain aspects of Title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, 83 Stat. 792, as amended by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, 86 Stat. 150, 30 U.S.C. s 901 Et seq. (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). The Operators, potentially liable under the amended Act to compensate certain miners, former miners, and their survivors for death or total disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in coal mines, sought declaratory and injunctive relief against the Secretary of Labor and the *6 Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, who are responsible for the administration of the Act and the promulgation of regulations under the Act.

On cross-motions for summary judgment, a three-judge District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, convened pursuant to 28 U.S.C. ss 2282 and 2284, found the amended Act constitutional on its face, except in regard to two provisions concerning the determination of a miner's total disability due to pneumoconiosis. The court enjoined the Secretary of Labor from further application of those two provisions. 385 F.Supp. 424 (1974). After granting a stay of the three-judge court's order, 421 U.S. 944, 95 S.Ct. 1673, 44 L.Ed.2d 99 (1975), we noted probable jurisdiction of the cross-appeals. 421 U.S. 1010, 95 S.Ct. 2413, 44 L.Ed.2d 678 (1975). We conclude that the amended Act, as interpreted, is constitutionally sound against the Operators' challenges.

I

Coal workers' pneumoconiosis black lung disease affects a high percentage of American coal miners with severe, and frequently crippling, chronic respiratory impairment. [FN1] The disease is caused by long-term inhalation of coal dust. [FN2] Coal workers' pneumoconiosis (hereafter *7 pneumoconiosis) is generally dgnosed on the basis of X-ray opacities indicating nodular lesions on the lungs of a patient with a long history of coal dust exposure. As the Surgeon General has stated, however, post-mortem examination data have indicated a greater prevalence of the disease than X-ray diagnosis reveals.

FN1. The House and Senate Reports on the 1969 Act placed the number of afflicted active and retired miners at 100,000. S.Rep.No.91-411, p. 6 (1969), and H.R.Rep.No.91-563, p. 17 (1969), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin.News 1969, p. 2503. The Senate Report, Supra, at 7, specified that, on the basis of X-ray examination, the disease rate was 10% For then-active coal miners, and 20% For inactive coal miners. Other estimates have run significantly higher. See E. g., Hearings on S. 355, before the Subcommittee on Labor of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 2, p. 641 (1969).

FN2. Coal workers' pneumoconiosis is a distinct clinical entity, and is not the only type of pneumoconiosis. The remarks of the Surgeon General, reproduced in H.R.Rep.No.91-563, Supra, at 15, indicate that the pathological condition of pneumoconiosis may also be caused by inhalation of other dusty materials, such as cotton fibers or silica.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

in a challenge to state legislation underthe Fourteenth Amendment, the former is the narrower ground for adjudication of the constitutional questions in the case, and we therefore consider it first. Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 347, 56 S.Ct. 466, 483, 80 L.Ed. 688 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). We conclude that in § 27A(b) Congress has exceeded its authority by requiring the federal courts to exercise 218 "[t]he judicial Power of the United States," U.S. Const., Art. III, § 1, in a manner repugnant to the text, structure, and traditions of Article III.

FN3. "No person shall be ... deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." U.S. Const., Amdt. 5.

Our decisions to date have identified two types of legislation that require federal courts to exercise the judicial power in a manner that Article III forbids. The first appears in United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 20 L.Ed. 519 (1872), where we refused to give effect to a statute that was said "[to] prescribe rules of decision to the Judicial Department of the government in cases pending before it." Id., 13 Wall., at 146. Whatever the precise scope of Klein, however, later decisions have made clear that its prohibition does not take hold when Congress "amend[s] applicable law." Robertson v. Seattle Audubon Soc., 503 U.S. 429, 441, 112 S.Ct. 1407, 1414, 118 L.Ed.2d 73 (1992). *1453 Section 27A(b) indisputably does set out substantive legal standards for the Judiciary to apply, and in that sense changes the law (even if solely retroactively). The second type of unconstitutional restriction upon the exercise of judicial power identified by past cases is exemplified by Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409 (1792), which stands for the principle that Congress cannot vest review of the decisions of Article III courts in officials of the Executive Branch. See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 68 S.Ct. 431, 92 L.Ed. 568 (1948). Yet under any application of § 27A(b) only courts are involved; no officials of other departments sit in direct review of their decisions. Section 27A(b) therefore offends neither of these previously established prohibitions.

[4] We think, however, that § 27A(b) offends a postulate of Article III just as deeply rooted in our law as those we have mentioned. Article III establishes a "judicial department" with the "province and duty ... to say what the law is" in particular cases and controversies. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177, 2 L.Ed. 60 (1803). The record of history shows that the Framers crafted this charter of the judicial department with an expressed understanding that it gives the Federal Judiciary the power, not merely to rule on cases, but to decide 219 them, subject to review only by superior courts in the Article III hierarchy--with an understanding, in short, that "a judgment conclusively resolves the case" because "a 'judicial Power' is one to render dispositive judgments." Easterbrook, Presidential Review, 40 Case W.Res.L.Rev. 905, 926 (1990). By retroactively commanding the federal courts to reopen final judgments, Congress has violated this fundamental principle.

A

The Framers of our Constitution lived among the ruins of a system of intermingled legislative and judicial powers, which had been prevalent in the colonies long before the Revolution, and which after the Revolution had produced factional strife and partisan oppression. In the 17th and 18th centuries colonial assemblies and legislatures functioned as courts of equity of last resort, hearing original actions or providing appellate review of judicial judgments. G. Wood, The Creation of the American Republic 1776-1787, pp. 154-155 (1969). Often, however, they chose to correct the judicial process through special bills or other enacted legislation. It was common for such legislation not to prescribe a resolution of the dispute, but rather simply to set aside the judgment and order a new trial or appeal. M. Clarke, Parliamentary Privilege in the American Colonies 49-51 (1943). See, e.g., Judicial Action by the Provincial Legislature of Massachusetts, 15 Harv.L.Rev. 208 (1902) (collecting documents from 1708-1709); 5 Laws of New Hampshire, Including Public and Private Acts, Resolves, Votes, Etc., 1784-1792 (Metcalf ed. 1916). Thus, as described in our discussion of Hayburn's Case, supra, at 6-7, such legislation bears not on the problem of interbranch review but on the problem of finality of judicial judgments.

The vigorous, indeed often radical, populism of the revolutionary legislatures and assemblies increased the frequency of legislative correction of judgments. Wood, supra, at 155-156, 407-408. See also INS v.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264903

According to the Surgeon General, pneumoconiosis is customarily classified as "simple" or "complicated." [FN3] Simple pneumoconiosis, ordinarily identified by X-ray opacities of a limited extent, is generally regarded by physicians as seldom productive of significant respiratory impairment. Complicated pneumoconiosis, generally far more serious, involves progressive massive fibrosis as a complex reaction to dust and other factors (which may include tuberculosis or other infection), and usually [FN4] produces significant 2889 pulmonary impairment and marked respiratory disability. This disability limits the victim's physical capabilities, may induce death by cardiac failure, and may contribute to other causes of death. [FN5]

FN3. S.Rep.No.91-411, Supra, at 7-8; H.R.Rep.No.91-563, Supra, at 15-16.

FN4. There was evidence before Congress that the complicated stage of the disease is sometimes exhibited with "mild pulmonary function changes and little or no disability." Hearings on S. 355, Supra, N. 1, at 858.

FN5. Ibid.

Removing the miner from the source of coal dust has so far proved the only effective means of preventing the contraction of pneumoconiosis, and once contracted the disease is irreversible in both its simple and complicated stages. No therapy has been developed. Finally, because the disease is progressive, [FN6] at least in its complicated *8 stage, its mptoms may become apparent only after a miner has left the coal mines.

FN6. Ibid.

In order to curb the incidence of pneumoconiosis, Congress provided in Title II of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, s 201 Et seq., 30 U.S.C. s 841 Et seq., for limits on the amount of dust to be permitted in the ambient air of coal mines. Additionally, in view of the then-established prevalence of irreversible pneumoconiosis among miners, and the insufficiency of state compensation programs, Congress passed Title IV of the 1969 Act, s 401 Et seq., 30 U.S.C. s 901 Et seq., to provide benefits to afflicted miners and their survivors. These benefit provisions were subsequently broadened by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972. 30 U.S.C. s 901 Et seq. (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

As amended, the Act divides the financial responsibility for payment of benefits into three parts. Under Part B of Title IV, ss 411-414, 30 U.S.C. ss 921-924 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV), claims filed between December 30, 1969, the date of enactment, and June 30, 1973, are adjudicated by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and paid by the United States. [FN7]

FN7. As of December 31, 1974, 556,200 claims had been filed under Part B of the law. As of that date, with all but 400 cases decided, 509,900 individuals had established eligibility as black lung beneficiaries under the Act. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Fifth Annual Report to Congress on the Administration of Part B of Title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, p. 3 (1975).

Under Part C of Title IV, ss 421-431, 30 U.S.C. ss 931-941 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV), claims filed after December 31, 1973, are to be processed under an applicable state workmen's compensation law approved by the Secretary of Labor under the standards set forth in s 421, 30 U.S.C. s 931 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). In *9 the absence of such an approved state program, and to date no state program has been approved, claims are to be filed with and adjudicated by the Secretary of Labor, and paid by the mine operators. s 422, 30 U.S.C. s 932 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). Under s 422 an operator who is entitled to a hearing in connection with these claims is liable for Part C benefits with respect to death or total disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in a mine for which the operator is responsible. The operator's liability for Part C benefits covers the period from January 1, 1974, to December 30, 1981. Payments of benefits under Part C are to the same categories of persons a miner or certain survivors and in the same amounts, as under Part B. ss 422(c), (d); see s 412(a), 30 U.S.C. s 922(a) (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). [FN8]

FN8. The individual claimant is entitled to benefits at a rate equal to 50% Of the minimum monthly payment to which a totally disabled federal employee in Grade GS-2 is entitled. s 412(a)(1), 30 U.S.C. s 922(a)(1). At current rates, the individual claimant's entitlement is $196.80 per month, or $2,361.60 per year. 40 Fed.Reg. 56886-56887 (1975); see 20 CFR s 410.510 (1975). These basic benefits are increased if the claimant has dependents; the maximum increase of 100% Is available if the claimant has three or more dependents. s 412(a)(4), 30 U.S.C. s 922(a)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). See also 30 U.S.C. ss 922(a)(3), (5) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). Thus, the maximum in benefits to which a claimant could be entitled is $393.60 per month, or $4,723.20 per year. Benefits under Part C are reduced to account for certain alternative income. s 422(g), 30 U.S.C. s 932(g). In addition to these monthly benefits, the operators are responsible for claimants' medical expenses. See s 422(a), 30 U.S.C. s 932(a) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), incorporating 33 U.S.C. s 907 (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2890 Claims filed during the transition period between the Federal Government benefit provision under Part B, and state plan or operator benefit provision under Part C that is, July 1 to December 31, 1973 are adjudicated *10 under s 415 of Part B, 30 U.S.C. s 925 (1970 ed., Supp. IV), by the Secretary of Labor. The United States is responsible for payment of these claims until December 31, 1973. Responsible operators, having been notified a claim and entitled to participate in a hearing thereon, are thereafter liable for benefits as if the claim had been filed pursuant to Part C and s 422 had been applicable to the operator.

The Act provides that a miner shall be considered "totally disabled," and consequently entitled to compensation, "when pneumoconiosis prevents him from engaging in gainful employment requiring the skills and abilities comparable to those of any employment in a mine or mines in which he previously engaged with some regularity and over a substantial period of time." s 402(f), 30 U.S.C. s 902(f) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). [FN9] The Act also prescribes several "presumptions" for use in determining compensable disability. [FN10] Under s 411(c)(3), a miner *11 shown by X-ray or other clinical evidence to be afflicted with complicated pneumoconiosis is "irrebuttably presumed" to be totally disabled due to pneumoconiosis; if he has died, it is irrebuttably presumed that he was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis at the time of his death, and that his death was due to pneumoconiosis. 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(3) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). In any event, the presumption operates conclusively to establish entitlement to benefits.

FN9. Section 402(f), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 902(f) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides in full:

"The term 'total disability' has the meaning given it by regulations of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, except that such regulations shall provide that a miner shall be considered totally disabled when pneumoconiosis prevents him from engaging in gainful employment requiring the skills and abilities comparable to those of any employment in a mine or mines in which he previously engaged with some regularity and over a substantial period of time. Such regulations shall not provide more restrictive criteria than those applicable under section 423(d) of Title 42."

The Act defines "pneumoconiosis" as "a chronic dust disease of the lung arising out of employment in a coal mine." s 402(b), 30 U.S.C. s 902(b) (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

FN10. These presumptions are applicable directly to Part B adjudications by the Secretary of HEW, and indirectly to transition-period and Part C adjudications by the Secretary of Labor by operation of ss 422(h) and 411(b), 30 U.S.C. ss 932(h), 921(b) (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). See S.Rep.No.92-743, p. 21 (1972), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2305. See also ss 422(f)(2), 430, 30 U.S.C. ss 932(f)(2), 940 (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

The other presumptions are each explicitly rebuttable by an operator seeking to avoid liability. There are three such presumptions. First, if a miner with 10 or more years' employment in the mines contracts pneumoconiosis, it is rebuttably presumed that the disease arose out of such employment. s 411(c) (1), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(1) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). Second, if a miner with 10 or more years' employment in the mines died from a "respirable disease", it is rebuttably presumed that his death was due to pneumoconiosis. s 411(c)(2), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(2) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). Finally, if a miner, or the survivor of a miner, with 15 or more years' employment in underground coal mines is able, despite the absence of clinical evidence of complicated pneumoconiosis, to demonstrate a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment, the Act rebuttably presumes that the total disability is due to pneumoconiosis, that the miner was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis when he died, and that the miner's death was due to pneumoconiosis. s 411(c)(4), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). [FN11] Section 411(c)(4) specifically provides: "The Secretary *12 may rebut (this latter) presumption only by establishing that (A) such miner does not, or did not, have pneumoconiosis, or that (B) his respiratory or pulmonary 2891 impairment did not arise out of, or in connection with, employment in a coal mine." Moreover, under s 413(b), 30 U.S.C. s 923(b) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), none of these three rebuttable presumptions may be defeated solely on the basis of a chest X-ray. [FN12]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN11. The use of this presumption in Part C adjudications is limited in some regards not significant in this case. See ss 422(f)(2), 430, 30 U.S.C. ss 932(f)(2), 940 (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

FN12. Section 413(b), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 923(b) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides in pertinent part: "(N)o claim for benefits Under this part shall be denied solely on the basis of the results of a chest roentgenogram." (Emphasis added.) Section 413(b) is found in Part B of Title IV. Section 430, as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 940 (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides, however, that "(t)he amendments made by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972 to part B . . . shall, to the extent appropriate, also apply (with limitations not relevant here) to . . . part (C)." The legislative history, moreover, makes clear that the s 413(b) limitation on use of X-ray evidence, enacted as s 4(f) of the 1972 Act, was intended to apply to Part C claims as well as Part B claims, see H.R.Conf.Rep.No.92- 1048, p. 9 (1972), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2338, and the Operators so concede. Brief for Operators 21.

II

In initiating this suit against the defendant Secretaries (hereafter Federal Parties), the Operators contended that the amended Act is unconstitutional insofar as it requires the payment of benefits with respect to miners who left employment in the industry before the effective date of the Act; that the Act's definitions, presumptions, and limitations on rebuttal evidence unconstitutionally impair the operators' ability to defend against benefit claims; and that certain regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor regarding the apportionment of liability for benefits among operators, and the provision of medical benefits, are inconsistent with the Act and constitutionally defective.

*13 The three-judge District Court held that all issues as to the validity of the challenged regulations were within the jurisdiction of a single district judge, and the court entered an order so remanding them. 385 F.Supp., at 426. The District Court upheld each challenged statutory provision as constitutional, with two exceptions. First, the District Court held that s 411(c)(3)'s irrebuttable presumption is unconstitutional as an unreasonable and arbitrary legislative finding of total disability "in terms other than those provided by the Act as standards for total disability." 385 F.Supp., at 430. Second, reading the limitation on evidence in rebuttal to s 411(c)(4)'s presumption of total disability due to pneumoconiosis to apply to an operator's defense in a s 415 transition-period case, the District Court found that limitation unconstitutional in two respects. It held the limitation arbitrary and unreasonable in not permitting a rebuttal showing that the case of pneumoconiosis afflicting the miner was not disabling. 385 F.Supp., at 430. And taking the provision to mean that an operator may defend against liability only on the ground that the pneumoconiosis did not arise out of employment in Any coal mine, rather than on the ground that it did not arise out of employment in a coal mine for which the operator was responsible, the District Court found the provision an unreasonable and arbitrary limitation on rebuttal evidence relevant and proper under s 422(c), 30 U.S.C. s 932(c). 385 F.Supp., at 430-431. The District Court accordingly entered an order declaring unconstitutional, and enjoining the Secretary of Labor from seeking to apply, s 411(c)(3)'s irrebuttable presumption and s 411(c)(4)'s limitation on rebuttable evidence.

The Operators' appeal, No. 74-1316, reasserts the constitutional challenges rejected by the District Court. *14 The appeal of the Federal Parties, No. 74-1302, seeks reversal of the declaration and injunction respecting the constitutionality of ss 411(c)(3) and (4). Neither side here questions the District Court's decision not to address the issues raised with respect to the Secretary of Labor's regulations. As we have already noted, we uphold the statute against all the constitutional contentions properly presented here. Because we read the limitation on rebuttal evidence in s 411(c)(4) as inapplicable to the Operators, however, we vacate that portion of the District Court's order which invalidates that limitation.

2892 III

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[1][2] The Federal Parties direct our attention initially to National Independent Coal Operators Assn. v. Brennan, 372 F.Supp. 16 (DC), summarily aff'd, 419 U.S. 955, 95 S.Ct. 216, 42 L.Ed.2d 172 (1974), which raised a number of issues identical to those presented here. Our summary affirmance in that case did not foreclose the District Court's determination of unconstitutionality regarding ss 411(c)(3) and (4), those issues not having been before us on the appeal. Several questions presented here most notably those of retroactivity and preclusion of sole reliance on X-ray testimony evidence were raised and decided in National Independent Coal Operators Assn. v. Brennan, but having heard oral argument and entertained full briefing on these issues together with the other questions raised in the case, we proceed to treat them here more fully. Cf. Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 670-671, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 1359, 39 L.Ed.2d 62 (1974).

IV

The Operators contend that the amended Act violates the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause by requiring them to compensate former employees who terminated their work in the industry before the Act was passed, 15 and the survivors of such employees. [FN13] The Operators accept the liability imposed upon them to compensate employees working in coal mines now and in the future who are disabled by pneumoconiosis; and they recognize Congress' power to create a program for compensation of disabled inactive coal miners. But the Operators complain that to impose liability upon them for former employees' disabilities is impermissibly to charge them with an unexpected liability for past, completed acts that were legally proper and, at least in part, unknown to be dangerous at the time.

> FN13. For simplicity of discussion, we will generally refer to claims as though presented by the miner himself, although they may in fact be maintained upon death by a survivor. Neither the District Court nor the parties have distinguished miners'claims from survivors' claims under the constitutional attacks raised in this case.

[3] It is by now well established that legislative Acts adjusting the burdens and benefits of economic life come to the Court with a presumption of constitutionality, and that the burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way. See, E. g., Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 83 S.Ct. 1028, 10 L.Ed.2d 93 (1963); Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 487-488, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955). And this Court long ago upheld against due process attack the competence of Congress to allocate the interlocking economic rights and duties of employers and employees upon workmen's compensation principles analogous to those enacted here, regardless of contravening arrangements between employer and employee. New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 37 S.Ct. 247, 61 L.Ed. 667 (1917); see also Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U.S. 603, 32 S.Ct. 589, 56 L.Ed. 911 (1912).

[4] To be sure, insofar as the Act requires compensation for disabilities bred during employment terminated 16 before the date of enactment, the Act has some retrospective effect although, as we have noted, the Act imposed no liability on operators until 1974. [FN14] And it may be that the liability imposed by the Act for disabilities suffered *2893 by former employees was not anticipated at the time of actual employment. [FN15] But our cases are clear that legislation readjusting rights and burdens is not unlawful solely because it upsets otherwise settled expectations. See Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U.S. 100, 67 S.Ct. 1140, 91 L.Ed. 1368 (1947); Carpenter v. Wabash R. Co., 309 U.S. 23, 60 S.Ct. 416, 84 L.Ed. 558 (1940); Norman v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 294 U.S. 240, 55 S.Ct. 407, 79 L.Ed. 885 (1935); Home Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 54 S.Ct. 231, 78 L.Ed. 413 (1934); Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467, 31 S.Ct. 265, 55 L.Ed. 297 (1911). This is true even though the effect of the legislation is to impose a new duty or liability based on past acts. See Lichter v. United States, 334 U.S. 742, 68 S.Ct. 1294, 92 L.Ed. 1694 (1948); Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 59 S.Ct. 121, 83 L.Ed. 87 (1938); Funkhouser v. Preston Co., 290 U.S. 163, 54 S.Ct. 134, 78 L.Ed. 243 (1933).

> FN14. The Federal Parties suggest that since a claim for benefits under Part C must be filed within three years of the discovery of total disability due to pneumoconiosis (or the date of death), s 422(f)(1), 30 U.S.C. s 932(f)(1) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), the operators will not ordinarily be liable for any disabilities maturing before enactment of their responsibility. See also s 422(f)(2), 30 U.S.C. s 932(f)(2) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). This does not hold true, however, for nonunderground operators, since Part C liability did not apply to them until 1972. See Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, s 3, 86 Stat. 153, amending ss 401, 402(b)(d), 411(c)(1), (2), 422(a), (h), 423(a), 30 U.S.C. ss 901, 902(b), (d), 921(c)(1), (2), 932(a), (h), 933(a) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). In any event, we think the point unnecessary to our conclusion.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN15. The Operators have not contended, however, that the Act is constitutionally defective insofar as it requires them to provide compensation for Present employees whose disabilities may stem from exposure that was terminated before enactment of the Act.

[5] It does not follow, however, that what Congress can legislate prospectively it can legislate retrospectively. 17 The retrospective aspects of legislation, as well as the prospective aspects, must meet the test of due process, and the justifications for the latter may not suffice for the former. Thus, in this case the justification for the retrospective imposition of liability must take into account the possibilities that the Operators may not have known of the danger of their employees' contracting pneumoconiosis, and that even if they did know of the danger their conduct may have been taken in reliance upon the current state of the law, which imposed no liability on them for disabling pneumoconiosis. [FN16] While the Operators have clearly been aware of the danger of pneumoconiosis for at least 20 years, [FN17] and while they have not specifically pressed the contention that they would have taken steps to reduce or eliminate the incidence of pneumoconiosis had the law imposed liability upon them, we would nevertheless hesitate to approve the retrospective imposition of liability on any theory of deterrence, cf. United States v. Peltier, 422 U.S. 531, 542, 95 S.Ct. 2313, 2320, 45 L.Ed.2d 374 (1975), 18 or blameworthiness, cf. Ibid.; DeVeau v. Braisted, 363 U.S. 144, 160, 80 S.Ct. 1146, 1154, 4 L.Ed.2d 1109 (1960).

FN16. Whether or not a person who could have anticipated the potential liability attaching to his chosen course of conduct would have avoided the liability by altering his conduct has been significant in at least one line of cases in this Court. In Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 59 S.Ct. 121, 83 L.Ed. 87 (1938), the Court upheld against a due process attack a state statute enacted in 1935 taxing 1933 dividend income that the 1933 taxing statute had explicitly exempted. Adopting the view that a stockholder would have continued to receive corporate dividends even if he knew that the dividends would subsequently be taxed, the Court distinguished prior cases invalidating the retroactive taxation of gifts on the ground that the donor might have refrained from making the gift had he anticipated the tax. Id., at 147-148, 59 S.Ct., at 126. But see Carpenter v. Wabash R. Co., 309 U.S. 23, 60 S.Ct. 416, 84 L.Ed. 558 (1940); Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467, 31 S.Ct. 265, 55 L.Ed. 297 (1911).

FN17. Coal miner's pneumoconiosis was recognized in Great Britain as early as 1943. It was not generally recognized in the United States as an entity distinct from silicosis until the 1950's. S.Rep.No.91-411, p. 8 (1969).

[6] We find, however, that the imposition of liability for the effects of disabilities bred in the past is justified as a rational measure to spread the costs of the employees' disabilities to those who have profited from the fruits of their labor the operators and the coal consumers. The Operators do not challenge Congress' power to impose the burden of past mine working conditions on the industry. They do claim, however, that the Act spreads costs in an arbitrary and irrational manner by basing liability upon past employment relationships, rather than taxing all coal mine operators presently in business. The Operators note that a coal mine operator whose work *2894 force has declined may be faced with a total liability that is disproportionate to the number of miners currently employed. And they argue that the liability scheme gives an unfair competitive advantage to new entrants into the industry, who are not saddled with the burden of compensation for inactive miners' disabilities. In essence the Operators contend that competitive forces will prevent them from effectively passing on to the consumer the costs of compensation for inactive miners' disabilities, and will unfairly leave the burden on the early operators alone.

[7] Of course, as we have already indicated, a substantial portion of the burden for disabilities stemming from the period prior to enactment is borne by the Federal Government. But even taking the Operators' argument at face value, it is for Congress to choose between imposing the burden of inactive miners' disabilities on all operators, including new entrants and farsighted early operators who might have taken steps to minimize black lung dangers, or to impose that liability solely on those early operators whose profits may have been increased at the expense of their employees' health. We are unwilling to assess the *19 wisdom of Congress' chosen scheme by examining the degree to which the "cost-savings" enjoyed by operators in the pre-enactment period produced "excess" profits, or the degree to which the retrospective liability imposed on the early operators can now be passed on to the consumer. It is enough to say that the Act approaches the problem of cost spreading rationally; whether a broader cost-spreading scheme would have been wiser or more practical under the circumstances is not a question of constitutional dimension. See, e. g., Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S., at 730-732, 83 S.Ct., at 1031; Williamson v. Lee Optic Co., 348 U.S., at 488, 75 S.Ct., at 464.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The Operators ultimately rest their due process argument on Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 758, 79 L.Ed. 1468 (1935), in which the Court found the Railroad Retirement Act of 1934 to be unconstitutional. Among the provisions specifically invalidated as arbitrary was a provision for employer-financed pensions for former employees who, though not in the employ of the railroads at the time of enactment, had been so employed within the year. Assuming that the portion of Alton invalidating this provision retains vitality, [FN18] we find it distinguishable from this case. The point of the black lung benefit provisions is not simply to increase or supplement a former employee's salary to meet his generalized need for funds. Rather, the purpose of the Act is to satisfy a specific need created by the dangerous conditions under which the former employee labored to allocate to the mine operator an actual, measurable cost of his business.

FN18. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, joined by Justices Brandeis, Stone, and Cardozo, dissented from the Court's invalidating the Railroad Retirement Act altogether, but agreed with the Court that the provision for allowances to former employees was arbitrary. 295 U.S., at 374, 389, 55 S.Ct., at 773, 779.

[8] In sum, the Due Process Clause poses no bar to requiring an operator to provide compensation for a *20 former employee's death or disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in its mines, event if the former employee terminated his employment in the industry before the Act was passed.

V

We turn next to a consideration of the Operators' challenge to the "presumptions" and evidentiary rules governing adjudications of compensable disability under the Act.

A

The Act prescribes two alternative methods for showing "total disability," which is a prerequisite to compensation. First, a miner is "totally disabled" under the definition contained in s 402(f), if pneumoconiosis, simple or complicated,

2895 "prevents him from engaging in gainful employment requiring the skills and abilities comparable to those of any employment in a mine or mines in which he previously engaged with some regularity and over a substantial period of time." [FN19]

FN19. For the full text of s 402(f) see n. 9, Supra.

Second, if a miner can show by clinical evidence (ordinarily X-ray evidence) that he is afflicted with complicated pneumoconiosis, the incurable and final stage of the disease, then the miner is deemed to be totally disabled under s 411(c)(3). [FN20] Thus, Congress has mandated that *21 the final stage of the disease is ways compensable if its existence can be shown by positive clinical evidence, and that any stage of the disease is compensable when physically disabling under the terms of s 402(f). The Operators maintain that both of these standards are constitutionally untenable.

FN20. Section 411(c)(3), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(3) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides:
"(I)f a miner is suffering or suffered from a chronic dust disease of the lung which (A) when diagnosed by chest roentgenogram, yields one or more large opacities (greater than one centimeter in diameter) and would be classified in category A, B, or C in the International Classification of Radiographs of the Pneumoconioses by the International Labor Organization, (B) when diagnosed by biopsy or autopsy, yields massive lesions in the lung, or (C) when diagnosis is made by other means, would be a condition which could reasonably be expected to yield results described in clause (A) or (B) if diagnosis had been made in the manner prescribed in clause (A) or (B), then there shall be an irrebuttable presumption that he is totally disabled due to pneumoconiosis or that his death was due to pneumoconiosis or that at the time of his death he was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis, as the case may be."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(1)

[9] The Operators contend that the definition of "total disability" set up in s 402(f) is unconstitutionally arbitrary and irrational, because it provides for the compensation of former miners who might well be employable in other lines of work, and who therefore are not truly disabled by their mining- generated afflictions. We think it patent that this attack on s 402(f) must fail. A miner disabled under s 402(f) standards has suffered in at least two ways: His health is impaired, and he has been rendered unable to perform the kind of work to which he has adapted himself. Whether these interferences merit compensation is a public policy matter left primarily to the determination of the legislature. Cf. Geduldig v. Aiello, 417 U.S. 484, 94 S.Ct. 2485, 41 L.Ed.2d 256 (1974). We cannot say that they are so insignificant as not to be a rational basis for compensation. Indeed, we long ago upheld against similar attack a workmen's compensation scheme providing benefits for injuries not depriving the employee of his ability to work. See New York Central R. Co. v. Bianc, 250 U.S. 596, 40 S.Ct. 44, 63 L.Ed. 1161 (1919); cf. Urie v. Thompson, 337 U.S. 163, 181-187, 69 S.Ct. 1018, 1030-1033, 93 L.Ed. 1282 (1949).

*22 (2)

[10] The District Court, relying on such cases as Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 31 L.Ed.2d 551 (1972), and Vlandis v. Kline, 412 U.S. 441, 93 S.Ct. 2230, 37 L.Ed.2d 63 (1973), invalidated s 411(c)(3) ' s "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability due to pneumoconiosis based on clinical evidence of complicated pneumoconiosis. The presumption, the court explained,

"forecloses all fact finding as to the effect of that disease upon a particular coal miner . . . . To the extent that such presumption purports to making a finding of total disability in terms other than those provided by (s 402(f)) as standards for total disability, it is unreasonable and arbitrary. As written, section (411(c)(3)) is violative of due process in precluding the opportunity to present evidence as to the effect of a chronic dust disease upon an individual in determining whether or not he is disabled." 385 F.Supp., at 429-430.

We think the District Court erred in equating this case with those in the mold of Stanley and Vlandis.

2896 As an operational matter, the effect of s 411(c)(3)'s "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability is simply to establish entitlement in the case of a miner who is clinically diagnosable as extremely ill with pneumoconiosis arising out of coal mine employment. [FN21] Indeed, the *23 legislative history discloses that it was precisely this advanced and progressive stage of the disease that Congress sought most certainly to compensate. [FN22] Were the Act phrased simply and directly to provide that operators were bound to provide benefits for all miners clinically demonstrating their affliction with complicated pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in the mines, we think it clear that there could be no due process objection to it. For, as we have already observed, destruction of earning capacity is not the sole legitimate basis for compulsory compensation of employees by their employers. New York Central R. Co. v. Bianc, supra. We cannot say that it would be irrational for Congress to conclude that impairment of health alone warrants compensation. Since Congress can clearly draft a statute to accomplish precisely what it has accomplished through s 411(c)(3)'s presumption of disability, the argument is essentially that Congress has accomplished its result in an impermissible manner by defining eligibility in terms of "total disability" and erecting an "irrebuttable presumption" of total disability upon a factual showing that does not necessarily satisfy the statutory definition of total disability. But in a statute such as this, regulating *24 purely economic matters, we do not think that Congress' choice of statutory language can invalidate the enactment when its operation and effect are clearly permissible. Cf. Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749, 767-785, 95 S.Ct. 2457, 2467-2476, 45 L.Ed.2d 522 (1975); McDonald v. Board of Election, 394 U.S. 802, 809, 89 S.Ct. 1404, 1408, 22 L.Ed.2d 739 (1969); United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 154, 58 S.Ct. 778, 784, 82 L.Ed. 1234.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN21. Although the premise of s 411(c)(3), that the miner have a "chronic dust disease of the lung," does not explicitly provide that the disease must be one arising out of employment in a coal mine, it is clear under s 422(a), and hence under s 415(a)(5) as well, that an operator can be liable only for pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in a coal mine. Section 422(a), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 932(a) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides that Part C liability "(shall) be applicable to each operator of a coal mine . . . with respect to death or total disability due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in such mine."

FN22. The original House and Senate bills that gave rise to the Conference bill enacted as Title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 each provided for compensation only for complicated pneumoconiosis. H.R. 13950, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., ss 112(b)(1), (7)(B), as it passed the House, 115 Cong.Rec. 32061 (1969), contained the diagnostic criteria presently embodied in s 411(c)(3), and deemed complicated pneumoconiosis to be "totally disabling" and compensable. S. 2917, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., ss 501-504, as amended on the floor, 115 Cong.Rec. 27632 (1969), and passed, Id., at 28243, established a program of interim benefits for total disability due to complicated pneumoconiosis, and directed the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to develop standards for determining total disability due to complicated pneumoconiosis.

(3)

[11] In addition to creating an irrebuttable presumption of total disability, s 411(c)(3) provides that clinical evidence of a miner's complicated pneumoconiosis gives rise to an irrebuttable presumption that he was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis at the time of his death, and that his death was due to pneumoconiosis. The effect of these presumptions, in particular the presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis, is to grant benefits to the survivors of any miner who during his lifetime had complicated pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in the mines, regardless of whether the miner's death was caused by pneumoconiosis. The Operators raise no separate challenge to these presumptions, and we would have no occasion to comment separately on them were it not for the Operators' general complaint against the application of the Act to employees who terminated their employment before the Act was 2897 passed. To the extent that the presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis is viewed as requiring compensation for damages resulting from death unrelated to the operator's conduct, its application to employees who terminated their employment before the Act was passed would present difficulties not encountered in our prior discussion of retroactivity. The justification we found for the retrospective application of the Act is that it serves to spread costs in a rational manner by allocating to the operator an actual cost of his *25 business, the avoidance of which might be thought to have enlarged the operator's profits. The damage resulting from a miner's death that is due to causes other than the operator's conduct can hardly be termed a "cost" of the operator's business.

We think it clear, however, that the benefits authorized by s 411(c)(3)'s presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis were intended not simply as compensation for damages due to the miner's Death, but as deferred compensation for injury suffered during the miner's lifetime as a result of his illness itself. Thus, the Senate Report accompanying the 1972 amendments makes clear Congress' purpose to award benefits not only to widows whose husbands "(gave) their lives," but also to widows whose husbands "gave their health . . . in the service of the nation's critical coal needs." [FN23]

FN23. S.Rep.No.92-743, p. 8 (1972), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2312.

In the case of a miner who died with, but not from, pneumoconiosis Before the Act was passed, the benefits serve as deferred compensation for the suffering endured by his dependents by virtue of his illness. And in the case of a miner who died with, but not from, pneumoconiosis After the Act was passed, the benefits serve an additional purpose: The miner's knowledge that his dependent survivors would receive benefits serves to compensate him for the suffering he endures. In short, s 411(c)(3)'s presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis authorizes compensation for injury attributable to the operator's business, and viewed as such it poses no retroactivity problems distinct from those considered in our prior discussion.

It might be suggested that the payment of benefits to defendant survivors is irrational as a scheme of compensation for injury suffered as a result of a miner's disability. But we cannot say that the scheme is wholly *26 unreasonable in providing benefits for those who were most likely to have shared the miner's suffering. Nor can we say that the scheme is arbitrary simply because it spreads the payment of benefits over a period of time. [FN24]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN24. Under the present scheme, the payment of monthly benefits is not without limit. Section 422(e), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 932(e) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), quite clearly provides that "(n)o payment of benefits shall be required under this section . . . (2) for any period prior to January 1, 1974; or (3) for any period after twelve years after December 30, 1969." This time limitation, applicable in Part C cases by its terms, is also applicable to transition-period cases by virtue of s 415(a)(5), 30 U.S.C. s 925(a)(5) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). Thus, the operator is liable for monthly payments only for a period of eight years. The total amount payable to a single dependent survivor during this period under current rates, is approximately $18,900. The maximum amount for which the operator would be liable, if the miner had four or more dependent survivors, is approximately $37,800. See n. 8, Supra.

We might face a more difficult problem in applying s 411(c)(3)'s presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis on a retrospective basis if the presumption authorized benefits to the survivors of a miner who did not die from pneumoconiosis, and who during his life was completely unaware of and unaffected by his illness; or, in the case of a miner who died before the Act was passed, if the presumption authorized benefits to the survivors of a miner who did not die from pneumoconiosis, who nevertheless was aware of and affected by his illness, but whose dependents were completely unaware of and unaffected by his illness. But the Operators in their facial attack on the Act have not suggested that a miner whose condition was serious enough to activate the 2898 s 411(c)(3) presumptions might not have been affected in any way by his condition, or that the family of such a miner might not have noticed it. Under the *27 circumstances, we decline to engage in speculation as to whether such cases may arise. [FN25]

FN25. Our analysis of the retrospective application of the s 411(c)(3) presumption of death due to pneumoconiosis is, of course, fully applicable to the retrospective application of any other provisions that might be construed to authorize benefits in the case of miners who die with, but not from, totally disabling pneumoconiosis. See ss 422(a), (c), 412(a)(2), (3), (5), 411(a), 30 U.S.C. ss 932(a), (c), 922(a)(2), (3), (5), 921(a) (1970 ed. and Supp. IV).

B

[12] Turningour attention to the statutory regulations of proof of s 402(f) disability, we focus initially on the Operators' challenge to the presumptions contained in ss 411(c)(1) and (2). Section 411(c)(1) provides that a coal miner with 10 years' employment in the mines who suffers from pneumoconiosis will be presumed to have contracted the disease from his employment. [FN26] Section 411(c)(2) provides that if a coal miner with 10 years' employment in the mines dies from a respiratory disease, his death will be presumed to have been due to pneumoconiosis. [FN27] Each presumption is explicitly rebuttable, and the effect of each is simply to shift the burden of going forward with evidence from the claimant to the operator. See Fed.Rule Evid. 301.

FN26. Section 411(c)(1), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(1) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides in full: "(I)f a miner who is suffering or suffered from pneumoconiosis was employed for ten years or more in one or more coal mines there shall be a rebuttable presumption that his pneumoconiosis arose out of such employment."

FN27. Section 411(c)(2), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(2) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides in full: "(I)f a deceased miner was employed for ten years or more in one or more coal mines and died from a respirable disease there shall be a rebuttable presumption that his death was due to pneumoconiosis."

*28 We he consistently tested presumptions arising in civil statutes such as this, involving matters of economic regulation, against the standard articulated in Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U.S. 35, 43, 31 S.Ct. 136, 138, 55 L.Ed. 78 (1910) :

"That a legislative presumption of one fact from evidence of another may not constitute a denial of due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law, it is only essential that there shall be some rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, and that the inference of one fact from proof of another shall not be so unreasonable as to be a purely arbitrary mandate."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

See Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Ford, 287 U.S. 502, 53 S.Ct. 249, 77 L.Ed. 457 (1933); Bandini Petroleum Co. v. Superior Court, 284 U.S. 8, 19, 52 S.Ct. 103, 107, 76 L.Ed. 136 (1931). See also Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6, 29-53, 89 S.Ct. 1532, 1544-1557, 23 L.Ed.2d 57 (1969); Tot v. United States, 319 U.S. 463, 467-468, 63 S.Ct. 1241, 1244, 87 L.Ed. 1519 (1943). Moreover, as we have recognized:

> "The process of making the determination of rationality is, by its nature, highly empirical, and in matters not within specialized judicial competence or completely commonplace, significant weight should be accorded the capacity of Congress to amass the stuff of actual experience and cull conclusions from it." United States v. Gainey, 380 U.S. 63, 67, 85 S.Ct. 754, 757, 13 L.Ed.2d 658 (1965).

Judged by these standards, the presumptions contained in ss411(c)(1) and (2) are constitutionally valid. The Operators focus their attack on the rationality of the presumptions' bases in duration of employment. But it is agreed here that pneumoconiosis is caused by breathing coal dust, and that the likelihood of a miner's developing the disease rests upon both the concentration of dust to which he was exposed and the duration of his exposure. Against this scientific background, it was not 29 beyond Congress' authority to refer to exposure factors in establishing a presumption that throws the burden of going forward on the *2899 operators. And in view of the medical evidence before Congress indicating the noticeable incidence of pneumoconiosis in cases of miners with 10 years' employment in the mines, [FN28] we cannot say that it was "purely arbitrary" for Congress to select the 10-year figure as a point of reference for these presumptions. No greater mathematical precision is required. . Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U.S. 61, 78, 31 S.Ct. 337, 340, 55 L.Ed. 369 (1911).

> FN28. See, E. g., Hearings on S. 355, Supra, n. 1, at 699 (testimony of Dr. Werner A. Laqueur).

The Operators insist, however, that the 10-year presumptions are arbitrary, because they fail to account for varying degrees of exposure, some of which would pose lesser dangers than others. We reject this contention. In providing for a shifting of the burden of going forward to the operators, Congress was no more constrained to require a preliminary showing of the degree of dust concentration to which a miner was exposed, a historical fact difficult for the miner to prove, than it was to require a preliminary showing with respect to all other factors that might bear on the danger of infection. It is worth repeating that mine employment for 10 years does not serve by itself to activate any presumption of pneumoconiosis; it simply serves along with proof of pneumoconiosis under s 411(c)(1) to presumptively establish the cause of pneumoconiosis, and along with proof of death from a respiratory disease under s 411(c)(2) to presumptively establish that death was due to pneumoconiosis. In its "rough accommodations," Metropolis Theatre Co. v. Chicago, 228 U.S. 61, 69, 33 S.Ct. 441, 443, 57 L.Ed. 730 (1913), Congress was surely entitled to select duration of employment, 30 to the exclusion of the degree of dust exposure and other relevant factors, as signaling the point at which the operator must come forward with evidence of the cause of pneumoconiosis or death, as the case may be. We certainly cannot say that the presumptions, by excluding other relevant factors, operate in a "purely arbitrary" manner. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, supra, 219 U.S., at 43, 31 S.Ct., at 138 .

[13] The Operators press the same due process attack upon the durational basis of the rebuttable presumption in s 411(c)(4), which provides, Inter alia, that a miner employed for 15 years in underground mines, who is able to marshal evidence demonstrating a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment, shall be rebuttably presumed to be totally disabled by pneumoconiosis. [FN29] Particularly 31 in light of the Surgeon General's testimony at the Senate hearings on the 1969 Act to the effect that the 15-year point marks the beginning of linear increase in the prevalence of the disease with years spent underground, [FN30] we think it clear that the durational basis of this presumption is equally unassailable.

> FN29. Section 411(c)(4), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides in full:
> "(I)f a miner was employed for fifteen years or more in one or more underground coal mines, and if there is a chest roentgenogram submitted in connection with such miner's, his widow's, his child's, his parent's, his brother's, his sister's, or his dependent's claim under this subchapter and it

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 961, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2789, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 220 1983) (Powell, J., concurring). "The period 1780-1787 ... was a period of 'constitutional reaction' " to these developments, "which ... leaped suddenly to its climax in the Philadelphia Convention." E. Corwin, The Doctrine of Judicial Review 37 (1914). Voices from many quarters, official as well as private, decried the increasing legislative interference with the private-law judgments of the courts. In 1786, the Vermont Council of Censors issued an "Address of the Council of Censors to the Freemen of the State of Vermont" to fulfill the council's duty, under the State Constitution of 1784, to report to the people " 'whether the legislative and executive branches of government have assumed to themselves, or exercised, other or greater powers than they are entitled to by the Constitution.' " Vermont State Papers 1779-1786, pp. 531, 533 (Slade ed. 1823). A principal method of usurpation identified by the censors was "[t]he instances ... of *1454 judgments being vacated by legislative acts." Id., at 540. The council delivered an opinion

> "that the General Assembly, in all the instances where they have vacated judgments, recovered in due course of law, (except where the particular circumstances of the case evidently made it necessary to grant a new trial) have exercised a power not delegated, or intended to be delegated, to them, by the Constitution.... It supercedes the necessity of any other law than the pleasure of the Assembly, and of any other court than themselves: for it is an imposition on the suitor, to give him the trouble of obtaining, after several expensive trials, a final judgment agreeably to the known established laws of the land; if the Legislature, by a sovereign act, can interfere, reverse the judgment, and decree in such manner, as they, unfettered by rules, shall think proper." Ibid.

So too, the famous report of the Pennsylvania Council of Censors in 1784 detailed the abuses of legislative interference with the courts at the behest of private interests and 221 factions. As the General Assembly had (they wrote) made a custom of "extending their deliberations to the cases of individuals," the people had "been taught to consider an application to the legislature, as a shorter and more certain mode of obtaining relief from hardships and losses, than the usual process of law." The censors noted that because "favour and partiality have, from the nature of public bodies of men, predominated in the distribution of this relief ... [t]hese dangerous procedures have been too often recurred to, since the revolution." Report of the Committee of the Council of Censors 6 (Bailey ed. 1784).

This sense of a sharp necessity to separate the legislative from the judicial power, prompted by the crescendo of legislative interference with private judgments of the courts, triumphed among the Framers of the new Federal Constitution. See Corwin, The Progress of Constitutional Theory Between the Declaration of Independence and the Meeting of the Philadelphia Convention, 30 Am.Hist.Rev. 511, 514-517 (1925). The Convention made the critical decision to establish a judicial department independent of the Legislative Branch by providing that "the judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Before and during the debates on ratification, Madison, Jefferson, and Hamilton each wrote of the factional disorders and disarray that the system of legislative equity had produced in the years before the framing; and each thought that the separation of the legislative from the judicial power in the new Constitution would cure them. Madison's Federalist No. 48, the famous description of the process by which "[t]he legislative department is every where extending the sphere of its activity, and drawing all power into its impetuous vortex," referred to the report of the Pennsylvania Council of Censors to show that in that State "cases belonging to the judiciary department [had been] frequently drawn within legislative cognizance and determination." The Federalist 222 No. 48, pp. 333, 337 (J. Cooke ed. 1961). Madison relied as well on Jefferson's Notes on the State of Virginia, which mentioned, as one example of the dangerous concentration of governmental powers into the hands of the legislature, that "the Legislature ... in many instances decided rights which should have been left to judiciary controversy." Id., at 336 (emphasis deleted). [FN4]

> FN4. Read in the abstract these public pronouncements might be taken, as the Solicitor General does take them, see Brief for United States 28-30, to disapprove only the practice of having the legislature itself sit as a court of original or appellate jurisdiction. But against the backdrop of history, that reading is untenable. Many, perhaps a plurality, of the instances of legislative equity in is interpreted as negative with respect to the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection, and if other evidence demonstrates the existence of a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment, then there shall be a rebuttable presumption that such miner is totally disabled due to pneumoconiosis, that his death was due to pneumoconiosis, or that at the time of his death he was totally disabled by pneumoconiosis. In the case of a living miner, a wife's affidavit may not be used by itself to establish the presumption. The Secretary shall not apply all or a portion of the requirement of this paragraph that the miner work in an underground mine where he determines that conditions of a miner's employment in a coal mine other than an underground mine were substantially similar to conditions in an underground mine. The Secretary may rebut such presumption only by establishing that (A) such miner does not, or did not, have pneumoconiosis, or that (B) his respiratory or pulmonary impairment did not arise out of, or in connection with, employment in a coal mine."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN30. See S.Rep.No.92-743, p. 13 (1972).

C

[14] The Operators also challenge s 413(b) of the Act, which provides that "no 2900 claim for benefits . . . shall be denied solely on the basis of the results of a chest roentgenogram (X-ray)." [FN31] Congress, of course, has plenary authority over the promulgation of evidentiary rules for the federal courts. See, E. g., Hawkins v. United States, 358 U.S. 74, 78, 79 S.Ct. 136, 138, 3 L.Ed.2d 125 (1958); Tot v. United States, 319 U.S., at 467, 63 S.Ct., at 1244; cf. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., supra, 220 U.S., at 81, 31 S.Ct., at 341. The Operators contend, however, that s 413(b) denies them due process because X-ray evidence is frequently the sole evidence they can marshal to rebut a claim of pneumoconiosis. [FN32] We conclude that, given Congress' reasoned reservations regarding the reliability of negative X-ray evidence, it was entitled to preclude exclusive reliance on such evidence.

FN31. See n. 12, Supra.

FN32. The Operators frame their argument by saying that the effect of s 413(b) is to render the rebuttable presumptions of s 411(c) effectively irrebuttable. But this dressing adds nothing. Once it is determined that the limitation on X-ray evidence is permissible generally, it is irrelevant that the burden of going forward with some rebuttal evidence is thrown upon the operator by a permissible presumption rather than by the claimant's affirmative factual showing.

[15] Congress was presented with significant evidence demonstrating that X- ray testing that fails to disclose pneumoconiosis cannot be depended upon as a trustworthy *32 indicator of the absence of the disease. [FN33] In particular, the findings of the Surgeon General and others indicated that although X-ray evidence was generally the most important diagnostic tool in identifying the presence or absence of pneumoconiosis, when considered alone it was not a wholly reliable indicator of the Absence of the disease; that autopsy frequently disclosed pneumoconiosis where X-ray evidence had disclosed none; [FN34] and that pneumoconiosis may be masked from X-ray detection by other disease. [FN35]

FN33. Our attention has not been directed to any authoritative indications that X-ray evidence of the Presence of pneumoconiosis is untrustworthy.

FN34. Evidence was produced at the Senate hearings showing that in one study "approximately 25 percent of a random sample of some 200 coal miners whose medical records based upon X-ray findings showed no coal- worker's pneumoconiosis were found on post mortem examination to have the disease." S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 12, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2316.

FN35. Id., at 9-16; H.R.Rep.No.92-460, pp. 8-10 (1971).

Taking these indications of the unreliability of negative X-ray diagnosis at face value, Congress was faced with the problem of determining which side should bear the burden of the unreliability. On the one hand, preclusion of any reliance on negative X-ray evidence would risk the success of some nonmeritorious claims; on the other hand, reliance on uncorroborated negative X-ray evidence would risk the denial of benefits in a significant number of meritorious cases. Congress addressed the problem by adopting a rule which, while preserving some of the utility, avoided the worst dangers of X-ray evidence. Section 413(b) does not make negative X-ray evidence inadmissible, or ineligible to be considered as ultimately persuasive evidence when taken together with other factors for example, a low level of coal dust concentration in the operator's mine, a relatively short duration *33 of exposure to coal dust, or the likelihood that the miner is disabled by some other cause. [FN36] The prohibition is only against sole reliance upon negative X-ray evidence in rejecting a claim.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN36. Section 413(b) directs additionally that "(i)n determining the validity of claims under this part, all relevant evidence shall be considered, including, where relevant, medical tests such as blood gas studies, X-ray examination, electrocardiogram, pulmonary function studies, or physical performance tests, and any medical history, evidence submitted by the claimant's physician, or his wife's affidavits, and in the case of a deceased miner, other appropriate affidavits of persons with knowledge of the miner's physical condition, and other supportive materials." 30 U.S.C. s 923(b) (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

2901 [16] The Operators attack the limitation on the use of negative X- ray evidence by suggesting that Congress' conclusion as to the unreliability of negative X-ray evidence is constitutionally unsupportable. Relying on other evidence submitted to Congress in 1972, [FN37] the Operators contend that the consensus of medical judgment on the question is that good quality X-ray evidence does reliably indicate the presence or absence of pneumoconiosis. In essence, the Operators seek a judicial reconsideration of the judgment of Congress on this issue. But the reliability of negative X-ray evidence was debated forcefully on both sides before the Congress, and the Operators here suggest nothing new to add to the debate; they are simply dissatisfied with Congress' conclusion. As we have recognized in the past, however, when it comes to evidentiary rules in matters "not within specialized judicial competence or completely commonplace," it is primarily for Congress "to amass the stuff of actual experience *34 and cull conclusions from it." United States v. Gainey, 380 U.S., at 67, 85 S.Ct., at 757. It is sufficient that the evidence before Congress showed doubts about the reliability of negative X-ray evidence. That Congress ultimately determined "to resolve doubts in favor of the disabled miner" [FN38] does not render the enactment arbitrary under the standard of rationality appropriate to this legislation.

FN37. This evidence was brought to the hearings by the Social Security Administration, whose rules the s 413(b) limitation was designed to overrule, and was credited by the minority of the House Committee on Education and Labor. H.R.Rep.No.92-460, Supra, at 22, 29-30.

FN38. S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 11, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2315.

D

[17] Finally, the Operators challenge the limitation on rebuttal evidence contained in s 411(c)(4). That section, as we have indicated, provides that a miner employed for 15 years in underground mines who is able to demonstrate a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment shall be rebuttably presumed to be totally disabled by pneumoconiosis, and his death shall be rebuttably presumed to be due to pneumoconiosis. The final sentence of s 411(c)(4) provides that

"(t)he Secretary may rebut (the presumption provided herein) only by establishing that (A) such miner does not, or did not, have pneumoconiosis, or that (B) his respiratory or pulmonary impairment did not arise out of, or in connection with, employment in a coal mine."

The effect of this limitation on rebuttal evidence is, Inter alia, to grant benefits to any miner with 15 years' employment in the mines, if he is totally disabled by some respiratory or pulmonary impairment arising in connection with his employment, and has a case of pneumoconiosis. The Operators contend that this limitation erects an impermissible irrebuttable presumption, because it establishes liability even though it might be medically demonstrable in an individual case that the miner's *35 pneumoconiosis was mild and did not cause the disability that the disability was wholly a product of other disease, such as tuberculosis or emphysema. Disability due to these diseases, as the Operators note, is not otherwise compensable under the Act.

The District Court, concluding that the quoted limitation on rebuttal evidence applied against an operator in a s 415 transition-period case, and recognizing that pneumoconiosis is not inherently disabling in the s 402(f) sense, judged this limitation unconstitutional on the ground that it deprived an operator of a factual defense that the miner is not "totally disabled" due to pneumoconiosis under s

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

402(f). Additionally, reading the second part of the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal to preclude an operator's defense that the disease did not arise out of employment in the particular mines for which it was responsible, the District Court found this aspect of s 411(c)(4) unconstitutional as well.

2902 The Federal Parties urge on their cross-appeal that these constitutional judgments are erroneous. We need not inquire into the constitutional questions raised by the District Court, however, because we think it clear as a matter of statutory construction that the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal evidence is inapplicable to operators. By the language of s 411(c)(4), the limitation applies only to "the Secretary" and not to an operator seeking to avoid liability under s 415 or s 422. And this plain language is fortified by the legislative history. The Senate Report on s 411(c)(4) specifically states that the limitation on rebuttal applies to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, but nowhere suggests that it binds an operator. [FN39]

FN39. Id., at 12. Similarly, the Conference Report refers to the limitation only as running against "the Secretary." S.Conf.Rep.No.92-780, p. 8 (1972); H.R.Conf.Rep.No.92-1048, p. 8 (1972).

*36 While apparently recognizing that the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal evidence could not apply against an operator in a Part C determination, the District Court believed that the limitation bound an operator in the determination of a claim filed during the s 415 transition period, "(s)ince under section (415) the operator is bound by the Secretary's finding of liability under Part B." 385 F.Supp., at 430. In so concluding, the District Court was in error. First, it would appear, again from the plain language of the statute, that the reference to "the Secretary" in s 411(c)(4) does not refer to the Secretary of Labor. On the contrary, s 402(c), 30 U.S.C. s 902(c), quite plainly defines "Secretary" when used in Part B, including s 411, as meaning the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, not the Secretary of Labor. The Senate Report referred to above confirms this conclusion. Even assuming, however, that the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal by "the Secretary" may be taken to bind theSecretary of Labor insofar as he was required to Pay benefits for which the United States was liable during the transition period, s 415(a)(1), we have found nothing in the statute or in its legislative history to suggest that an operator is similarly bound because the Secretary of Labor is also to Adjudicate the operator's liability. s 415(a)(5). Indeed, such a reading would render a mine operator bound by the rebuttal limitation in s 415 transition-period cases, although not so bound in cases filed thereafter under Part C. And that result would be contrary to the language of s 415(a)(5), which prescribes that an operator "shall be bound by the determination of the Secretary of Labor (on a s 415 transition-period claim) as if the claim had been filed pursuant to part C."

In short, we conclude that the Act does not itself limit the evidence with which an operator may rebut the *37 s 411(c)(4) presumption. Accordingly, we vacate the order of the District Court declaring the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal evidence unconstitutional and enjoining the Secretary of Labor from limiting evidence in rebuttal to the s 411(c)(4) presumption. Cf. Van Lare v. Hurley, 421 U.S. 338, 344, 95 S.Ct. 1741, 1746, 44 L.Ed.2d 208 (1975); United States v. Munsingwear, Inc., 340 U.S. 36, 71 S.Ct. 104, 95 L.Ed. 36 (1950).

[18] We are aware that regulations promulgated in 1972 by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under his s 411(b) authorization, 20 CFR ss 410.414, 410.454 (1975), applicable to Part C determinations under s 422(h), and expressly adopted in 1973 by the Secretary of Labor, 20 CFR pt. 718 (1975), authorize limitations on rebuttal evidence similar to those contained in s 411(c) (4), and appear to apply in determinations of an operator's liability. But the Operators' amended complaint never challenged the statutory or constitutional validity of these regulations. [FN40] Particularly 2903 in the absence of any mention of the regulations in the opinion and judgment of the District Court, or in the briefs and oral arguments of the parties, we find it inappropriate to consider their statutory or constitutional validity at this stage. [FN41]

FN40. It follows from our discussion of the s 411(c)(4) limitation on rebuttal that these regulations cannot stand as authoritative administrative interpretations of the statute itself. But the role of regulations is not merely interpretative; they may instead be designedly creative in a substantive sense, if so authorized. See E. g., Mourning v. Family Publications

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Service Inc., 411 U.S. 356, 93 S.Ct. 1652, 36 L.Ed.2d 318 (1973). If the regulations promulgated here are to be upheld, it must be in this latter sense.

FN41. We see no reason to remand the case to the three-judge District Court for the purpose of determining whether the Operators should be granted leave to amend their complaint to include a statutory and constitutional challenge to the regulations. The three-judge court remanded to a single judge all questions regarding the validity of regulations challenged in the Operators' complaint, and that portion of the case is pending before a single judge. Any motion for leave to amend the complaint to include a challenge to any additional regulations can be addressed to that single judge.

*38 VI

In sum, the challenged provisions, as construed, are constitutionally sound against the Operators' facial attack. The judgment of the District Court as appealed from in No. 74-1316 is affirmed. The judgment of the District Court as appealed from in No. 74-1302 is reversed, except insofar as it declares unconstitutional, and enjoins the operation of, the limitation on rebuttal evidence contained in s 411(c)(4) of the Act. In this latter respect, the judgment in No. 74-1302 is vacated, and the case remanded with directions to dismiss.

It is so ordered.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE concurs in the judgment.

Mr. Justice STEVENS took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

Mr. Justice POWELL, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment in part.

Appellants in No. 74-1316, the Operators, challenge as unconstitutional the retroactive obligations imposed on them by the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 (Act), 83 Stat. 792, as amended by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, 86 Stat. 150, 30 U.S.C. s 901 Et seq. (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). The Court rejects their contention in Part IV of its opinion. I concur in the judgment as to Part IV, and concur in other portions of the opinion not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

I

Coal miner's pneumoconiosis was not recognized in the United States until the 1950's, and there was no federal *39 legislation providing benefits to its victims until the enactment of this statute in 1969. In Title IV of the Act, Congress significantly redefined the respective rights and obligations of miners and their employers in regard to this disease by establishing a benefits scheme to compensate victims of pneumoconiosis. [FN1] Under Title VI miners who filed claims before July 1, 1973, are to collect benefits from the Federal Government, ss 411-414, 30 U.S.C. ss 921-924 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). [FN2] Miners filing claims after June 30, 1973, are to collect benefits until 1981, see Ante, at 2897 n. 24, from their individual employers. ss 415, 421-431, 30 U.S.C. ss 925, 931-941 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV). [FN3] Under the statute, the class of claimants to which individual employers are liable 2904 includes both (i) miners employed at the time of or after enactment and (ii) miners no longer employed in the industry at the time of enactment (former miners).

FN1. Title II of the Act prescribes the maintenance of less hazardous mine conditions in the future. s 201 Et seq., 30 U.S.C. s 841 Et seq.

FN2. As does the Court, I simplify by not distinguishing between claims byemployees and claims by their survivors. See Ante, at 2892 n. 13.

FN3. Claims filed between July 1, 1973, and December 31, 1973, were to be paid by the Federal Government until December 31, 1973, after which they become the responsibility of individual mining concerns. s 415, 30 U.S.C. s 925 (1970 ed., Supp. IV). Liability on the part of individual mining concerns arises only if the claimant does not have recourse to an applicable state workmen's compensation program approved by the Secretary of Labor ss 421-422, 30 U.S.C. ss 931-932 (1970 ed. and Supp. IV), but no such state programs have been approved. See Ante, at 2889.

The unprecedented feature of the Act is that miners may be eligible to receive benefits from a particular coal-mining concern even if the miner was no longer employed in the industry at the time of enactment. The *40 Department of Labor already has made initial determinations of liability against one of the Operators and in favor of claimants whose employment terminated decades ago. [FN4]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN4. Favorable initial determinations have been made for claimants who left mine work in 1923, 1927, 1931, 1932, 1937, 1943, 1946, and 1948. Brief for Operators 30 n. 1. These determinations rebut the federal parties' suggestion that in combination the initial period of federal liability and the statute of limitations specified in s 422(f)(1), 30 U.S.C. s 932(f)(1) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), will prevent employer liability to miners who left the industry before passage of the Act. See Ante, at 2892, n. 14.

II

The Operators do not challenge their liability to miners employed at the time of or after enactment, a liability which accords with familiar principles of workmen's compensation. [FN5] They contend, however, that a statutory liability to former miners has been imposed in violation of the Fifth Amendment guarantee against arbitrary, irrational, or discriminatory legislation, see, E. g., Richardson v. Belcher, 404 U.S. 78, 81, 92 S.Ct. 254, 257, 30 L.Ed.2d 231 (1971), as there 41 is no rational justification for imposing liability to former miners upon individual mine owners.

FN5. Congress apparently recognized that the employers burdened by retroactive liability were not blameworthy. Senator Javits, who played a significant role in the development of individual-employer liability, see Brief for Operators 34, thought that the "blame" for past neglect must be shared by "all of us," including "the industry, the medical profession, and the Government particularly the Public Health Service." House Committee on Education and Labor, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., Legislative History/Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act 338 (Committee Print 1970), 115 Cong.Rec. 27627 (1969) (floor remarks). The retroactive nature of the liability makes deterrence an insufficient justification. In their prospective application, it is rational for Title IV and other workmen's compensation schemes to disadvantage competitively employers who take less effective precautions to protect their employees. But only prospective liability creates an incentive for occupational safety measures.

The Court recognizes that its evaluation of the rationality of the employers' challenged liability must take into account the retroactive nature of the liability:

"The retrospective aspects of legislation, as well as the prospective aspects, must meet the test of due process, and the justifications for the latter may not suffice for the former. Thus, in this case the justification for the retrospective imposition of liability must take into account the possibilities that the Operators may not have known of the danger of their employees' contracting pneumoconiosis, and that even if they did know of the danger their conduct may have been taken in reliance upon the current state of the law. . . ." Ante, at 2893.

The Court then acknowledges that the Act would not be justified "on any theory of deterrence . . . or blameworthiness." Ante, at 2893. It nonetheless sustains the provision for retroactive liability, reasoning as follows:

"We find . . . that the imposition of liability for the effects of disabilities bred in the past is justified as a rational measure to spread the costs of the employees' disabilities to those who have profited from the fruits of their labor the operators and the coal consumers." Ante, at 2893.

"We are unwilling to assess the wisdom of Congress' chosen scheme by examining the degree to which the 'cost-savings' enjoyed by operators in the pre-enactment period produced 'excess' profits, or the degree to which the retrospective liability imposed on the early operators can now *2905 be passed on to the consumer. It is enough to say that the Act approaches the problem of cost-spreading rationally. . . ." Ante, at 2894.

42 In my view whether the retroactive liability is constitutional is a considerably closer question than the Court's treatment suggests. The rationality of retrospective liability as a cost-spreading device is highly questionable.

If coal-mining concerns actually enjoyed "excess" profits in the preenactment period by virtue of their nonliability for pneumoconiosis, and if such profits could be quantified in some discernible way, Congress rationally could impose retrospective liability for the benefit of the miners concerned. But, in this context, the term "excess profits" must mean profits over and above those that operators would have made in years and decades past if they had set aside from current operations funds sufficient to provide compensation, although under no obligation to do so. It is unlikely that such profits existed. The coal industry is highly competitive and prices normally are determined by market forces. One therefore would expect that, had a compensation increment been added to operating costs, the operators over the long term simply would have passed most of it on to consumers, thereby leaving their profitability relatively unaffected. In short, the talk of "excess profits" in any realistic sense is wholly speculative.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Nor can I accept without serious question the Court's view that the costs now imposed by the Act may be passed onto consumers. Firms burdened with retroactive payments must meet that expense from current production and current sales in a market where prices must be competitive with the prices of firms not so burdened. One ordinarily would expect that if burdened firms are to meet both competitive prices and their retroactive obligations, their profits necessarily will be less than those of their competitors. Thus, the burdened firms in all likelihood will have to bear the costs of the *43 retroactive liability rather than pass those costs on to consumers. And they must bear such costs quite without regard to whether "excess profits" may have been made in some earlier years. [FN6]

FN6. It is, of course, impossible to spread the cost to "coal consumers" who "profited from the fruits of (former employees') labor." Ante, at 2893. A coal-mining concern cannot retroactively increase its prices to the former customers who benefited from the pre-1969 labors of former miners. The only consumers, therefore, who could bear these burdens are those who purchase coal currently. But in a free market such customers cannot be expected to pay a reparation add-on for coal produced by disadvantaged coal companies when the same product is readily obtainable from others at a lower price.

In some industries conditions might be such that the cost of retroactively imposed benefits could be spread to consumers. It seems most unlikely, however, that the coal industry is such an industry. A notable fact about coal mining is that the industry currently employs only about 150,000 persons, whereas in 1939 it employed nearly 450,000. Brief for Operators 24. The reduced scale of employment in the coal industry, combined with the liability to former miners and their survivors, means that retroactive obligations almost certainly will be disproportionate to the scale of current operations. [FN7] Moreover, it is unlikely that liability to former miners will be distributed randomly across the industry, as it is dictated by historical patterns that may be wholly unrelated to the present contours of the industry. Two examples are illustrative: (i) Some coal-mining concerns have been in the mining business for decades, while some competitors have commenced operation more recently. The exposure of the former group to claims of employees long separated from active employment is likely to be significantly *44 greater than that of their competitors. (ii) Some companies engaged in coal mining in years past on a much 2906 larger scale and with many more employees than currently. This is not an unusual situation in a "depleting asset" industry, where smaller companies often lack the resources with which to continue the acquisition and development of new properties. Stronger competitors, on the other hand, may have operated on a constant or an increasingly large scale. [FN8] In each case the competitively disadvantaged companies may be unable to spread a substantial portion of their costs to consumers. In view of these considerations it is unrealistic to think that the Act will spread costs to "the operators and the coal consumers," Ante, at 2893, and thus I question the Court's conclusion that the Act is rational in imposing retroactive liability.

FN7. Indeed, the number of former miners and survivors whom an individual employer is obliged to compensate could be larger than the employer's present work force.

FN8. In addition, the incidence of liability to former miners may be skewed artificially by the regulation imposing liability upon the company which last employed the claimant without regard to previous employment with other companies. 20 CFR s 725.311 (1975). The validity of this regulation remains to be considered. See Ante, at 2891-2892.

III

Despite the foregoing, I must concur in the judgment on the record before us. Congress had broad discretion in formulating a statute to deal with the serious problem of pneumoconiosis affecting former miners. E. g., Richardson v. Belcher, 404 U.S. 78, 92 S.Ct. 254, 30 L.Ed.2d 231 (1971); cf. Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 75 S.Ct. 461, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955). Nor does the Constitution require that legislation on economic matters be compatible with sound economics or even with normal fairness. As a result, economic and remedial social enactments carry a strong presumption of constitutionality, E. g., United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 148, 58 S.Ct. 778, 781, 82 L.Ed. 1234 (1938), and the operators had the heavy burden of showing the Act to be unconstitutional.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*45 The constitutionality of the retrospective liability in question here ultimately turns on the sophisticated questions of economic fact suggested above, and these facts are likely to vary widely among the Operators. [FN9] In this case, however, decided on the cross-motions for summary judgment, the Operators have failed to make any factual showings that support their sweeping assertions of irrationality. Although I find these assertions strongly suggestive that Congress has acted irrationally in pursuing a legitimate end, I am not satisfied that they are sufficient in the absence of appropriate factual support to override the presumption of constitutionality. Accordingly, I agree that the federal parties were entitled to summary judgment on this record.

FN9. I would not foreclose the possibility that a particular coal- mining concern, in a proper case, may be able to show that the impact of the Act on Its operations is irrational. Cf. Ante, at 2897.

Mr. Justice STEWART, with whom Mr. Justice REHNQUIST joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

While in all other respects joining the opinion and judgment of the Court, I cannot accept the Court's conclusion, Ante, at 2902-2903, that the limitation on rebuttal evidence in s 411(c)(4), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), is inapplicable to "transition" determinations under s 415 insofar as those determinations bind operators. Section 415(a)(5) as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 925(a)(5) (1970 ed., Supp. IV), provides that an "operator . . . shall be bound by the determination of the Secretary of Labor (on a transition) claim as if the claim had been filed pursuant to part C of this subchapter and section 932 of this title had been applicable to such operator." As the Court correctly observes, the critical question is thus whether the s 411(c)(4) limitation *46 would apply "if the claim had been filed pursuant to part C . . . and section 932 . . . ."

The Court reads the "plain language" of s 411(c)(4), and in particular the reference to "the Secretary (of Health, Education, and Welfare)," to mean that "the limitation applies only to 'the Secretary' and not to an 2907 operator seeking to avoid liability under s 415 (30 U.S.C. s 925) or s 422 (30 U.S.C. s 932)." Ante, at 2902. This reading, the Court concludes, is "fortified by the legislative history" and in particular by the "Senate Report on s 411(c) (4) (which) specifically states that the limitation on rebuttal applies to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, but nowhere suggests that it binds an operator." Ibid.

The Court's analysis omits any consideration of the effect of s 430, as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 940 (1970 ed., Supp. IV), which provides as follows:

"The amendments made by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972 to part B of this subchapter shall, to the extent appropriate, also apply to (Part C): Provided, That for the purpose of determining the applicability of the presumption established by section 921(c)(4) of this title to claims filed under this part, no period of employment after June 30, 1971, shall be considered in determining whether a miner was employed at least fifteen years in one or more underground mines."

Since the limitation on rebuttal evidence in s 411(c)(4) was created by the "amendments made by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972," it would seem to follow that the limitation applies to Part C determinations. This inference is reinforced by the Senate Report, which stated:

"New section 430 requires that amendments to *47 part B be applied, wherever appropriate, to part C. . . .

"Questions were raised during the Committee deliberations over whether the amendments to part B would automatically be applicable, where appropriate, to part C.

"Although it would appear clear that the same standards are to govern, the Committee concluded that it would be best to so specify.

"It is contemplated by the Committee that the applicable portions of following sections of part B, as amended, would apply to part C: section 411, section 412 (except the last sentence of subsection (b) thereof), section 413, and section 414." S.Rep.No.92-743, p. 21 (1972), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2325.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

See also Id., at 33.

The only play in the tight linkage of Part C to the amendments to Part B is that afforded by the proviso in s 430 and by the phrase "to the extent appropriate" which appears in that section. The proviso does not remove the rebuttal limitation, but it does alter s 411(c)(4)'s allocation of the burden of proof in another crucial respect: It limits the period of employment which may be considered for purposes of determining the applicability of the presumption. The presence of the proviso is relevant in two respects. First, it underscores the basic applicability to Part C determinations of the s 411(c)(4) rebuttal presumption. Second, it demonstrates that Congress knew how to place a significant limitation on the applicability of that presumption when it chose to do so.

The care and precision which Congress used in drafting this qualifying language bears on the propriety of reading the phrase "to the extent appropriate" as obliquely qualifying the applicability of the rebuttal limitation to 48 Part C determinations. That limitation is part and parcel of an elaborate reallocation of the burden of proving disability resulting from pneumoconiosis. Under prior Social Security procedure "if an X-ray (did) not show totally sabling pneumoconiosis, no further processing of a claim (was) allowed. Thus, any further evidence of disability (was) not allowed if the X- ray show(ed) negative." S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 11, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2315. This heavy reliance on X-ray evidence had unfortunate consequences for coal miners because of the inability of X-ray examinations to detect pneumoconiosis in some instances. Congress responded to this particular problem by > "prohibiting denial of a claim solely on the basis of an X-ray, by providing a presumption of pneumoconiosis for miners with respiratory or pulmonary disability *2908 where they have worked 15 years or more in a coal mine, and by requiring the Social Security Administration to use tests other than the X- ray to establish the basis for a judgment that a miner is or is not totally disabled due to pneumoconiosis." Ibid.

The 15-year rebuttable presumption embodied in s 411(c)(4) was perhaps the most significant feature of Congress' response. Based in part on testimony of the Surgeon General that "(f)or work periods greater than 15 years underground, there was a linear increase in the prevalence of the disease with years spent underground," S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 13, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2317, the presumption embodied a congressional decision to "giv(e) the benefit of the doubt," Id., at 11, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2315, to a specific class of claimants totally disabled by respiratory or pulmonary impairments who could not prove by X-ray evidence that the impairment resulted from pneumoconiosis. The presumption was rebuttable only if the respondent could show either that "(A) such miner does not, or did not, have pneumoconiosis, or that (B) his respiratory or pulmonary impairment did not arise out of, 49 or in connection with, employment in a coal mine." s 411(c) (4), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV).

It is difficult to believe that Congress would have used the phrase "to the extent appropriate" in s 430 to withdraw the protection of the rebuttal limitation under Part C while retaining the rebuttable presumption of which it is an integral part. Such an interpretation is inconsistent with the care Congress displayed in drafting the s 430 proviso. Moreover, it leads necessarily to other improbable results. The Court's approach, for instance, necessarily implies that Congress extended the benefit of the s 411(c)(4) presumption to "surface, as well as underground, miners (in specified circumstances)," S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 2, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1972, p. 2306, with the intention that the protection would lapse as soon as Part C came into play. The relevant sentence in s 411(c)(4) states that "(t) he Secretary (of Health, Education, and Welfare) shall not apply all or a portion of the requirement of this paragraph that the miner work in an underground mine where he determines that conditions of a miner's employment in a coal mine other than an underground mine were substantially similar to conditions in an underground mine." (Emphasis added.) If the operative principle is that provisions in s 411(c)(4) which bind "the Secretary (of Health, Education, and Welfare)" are automatically "inappropriate" for Part C proceedings, then surface miners would be stripped of the benefits of s 411(c)(4) as soon as the legislative scheme enters its transitional stage.

Moreover, the Court's reading of the statute is anomalous in terms of the overall structure of Part C. The primary goal of Congress in framing Part C was to transfer adjudicatory responsibilities over coal miners' pneumoconiosis claims to state workmen's compensation tribunals, but only if the state compensation law was *50 found by the Secretary of Labor to provide "standards for determining death or total disability due to pneumoconiosis . . . substantially equivalent to . . . those standards established under part B of this subchapter . . . ." s 421(b)(2)(C), as set forth in 30 U.S.C. s 931(b)(2)(C) (1970 ed., Supp.). One of the Part B standards is the rebuttal limitation in s 411(c)(4). Thus, the Secretary of Labor would not be empowered to approve a state law which did not contain a "substantially equivalent" evidentiary limitation.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The delegation of adjudicatory responsibility to the Secretary of Labor under Part C was a backstop measure, intended to provide a forum for presentation of claims during any period after January 1, 1974, when a state workmen's compensation law was not included on the Secretary of Labor's list of state laws with provisions "substantially equivalent" to those in Part B. s 421(a), 30 U.S.C. s 931(a) (1970 ed., Supp. IV). See S.Rep.No.92-743, Supra, at 19-21. 2909 Since the very reason for withholding approval of a state law and providing an alternative federal forum is lack of "substantial equivalence" between the state-law provisions and the "standards established under part B," including the rebuttal limitation in s 411(c)(4), it would be anomalous if the substitute federal forum could employ evidentiary rules which deviate substantially from those in Part B.

The statutory language and legislative history simply will not yield such an unlikely result. The phrase "to the extent appropriate" in s 430, 30 U.S.C. s 940 (1970 ed., Supp. IV), plainly refers to language in Part B which has no relevance to Part C, notably the language that specifies that "the Secretary (of Health, Education, and Welfare)" is to have certain adjudicative responsibilities. These are the references that are not "appropriate" under Part C, because Part C transfers adjudicative responsibilities to the States or, in the alternative, *51 to the Secretary of Labor. The obvious purpose of the phrase "to the extent appropriate" is to accommodate minor linguistic variations resulting from this transfer of responsibility. Thus, the interaction of the phrase "to the extent appropriate" and the reference to "the Secretary" in the rebuttal limitation of s 411(c)(4) does not render the entire limitation "inappropriate" to Part C proceedings; it merely renders the reference to "the Secretary" inappropriate under Part C.

It is significant that the Court's interpretation of s 411(c)(4)'s rebuttal limitation is not urged or even suggested by any party to this suit. The Federal Parties' position is that the District Court erred by reading s 411(c) (4) to foreclose a showing that would refute total disability. That position is clearly correct. The s 411(c)(4) presumption comes into play only after the claimant establishes total disability. See s 411(c)(4), 30 U.S.C. s 921(c)(4) (1970 ed., Supp. IV) ("and if other evidence demonstrates the existence of a totally disabling respiratory or pulmonary impairment, then there shall be a rebuttable presumption . . ."). In addition, the District Court ruled that s 411(c)(4) places upon a specific coal mine owner the burden of proving that the respiratory or pulmonary disease did not arise out of coal mine employment. The Federal Parties urge that this construction is erroneous, because it overlooks the fact that under s 422(c), 30 U.S.C. s 932(c), a specific operator can also defeat liability by showing that the disability did not arise, even in part, out of employment in his mine during the period when he operated it. Again, the Federal Parties are clearly correct. If the operator makes the s 422(c) showing, then the s 411(c)(4) presumption and the rebuttal limitation is irrelevant. Accordingly, I would reverse the District Court's ruling that the s 411(c)(4) rebuttal limitation violates the Constitution.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[redacted]

> the period before the framing simply involved duly enacted laws that nullified judgments so that new trials or judicial rulings on the merits could take place. See supra, at 1453.

If the need for separation of legislative from judicial power was plain, the principal effect to be accomplished by that separation was even plainer. As Hamilton wrote in his exegesis of Article III, § 1 , in The Federalist No. 81:

> 1455 "It is not true ... that the parliament of Great Britain, or the legislatures of the particular states, can rectify the exceptionable decisions of their respective courts, in any other sense than might be done by a future legislature of the United States. The theory neither of the British, nor the state constitutions, authorises the revisal of a judicial sentence, by a legislative act.... A legislature without exceeding its province cannot reverse a determination once made, in a particular case; though it may prescribe a new rule for future cases." The Federalist No. 81, p. 545 (J. Cooke ed. 1961).

The essential balance created by this allocation of authority was a simple one. The Legislature would be possessed of power to "prescrib[e] the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated," but the power of "[t]he interpretation of the laws" would be "the proper and peculiar province of the courts." The Federalist No. 78, pp. 523, 525. *223 See also Corwin, The Doctrine of Judicial Review, at 42. The Judiciary would be, "from the nature of its functions, ... the [department] least dangerous to the political rights of the constitution," not because its acts were subject to legislative correction, but because the binding effect of its acts was limited to particular cases and controversies. Thus, "though individual oppression may now and then proceed from the courts of justice, the general liberty of the people can never be endangered from that quarter: ... so long as the judiciary remains truly distinct from both the legislative and executive." Id., No. 78, at 522.

Judicial decisions in the period immediately after ratification of the Constitution confirm the understanding that it forbade interference with the final judgments of courts. In Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L.Ed. 648 (1798), the Legislature of Connecticut had enacted a statute that set aside the final judgment of a state court in a civil case. Although the issue before this Court was the construction of the Ex Post Facto Clause, Art. I, § 10, Justice Iredell (a leading Federalist who had guided the Constitution to ratification in North Carolina) noted that > "the Legislature of [Connecticut] has been in the uniform, uninterrupted, habit of exercising a general superintending power over its courts of law, by granting new trials. It may, indeed, appear strange to some of us, that in any form, there should exist a power to grant, with respect to suits depending or adjudged, new rights of trial, new privileges of proceeding, not previously recognized and regulated by positive institutions.... The power ... is judicial in its nature; and whenever it is exercised, as in the present instance, it is an exercise of judicial, not of legislative, authority." Id., 3 Dall., at 398.

The state courts of the era showed a similar understanding of the separation of powers, in decisions that drew little distinction between the federal and state constitutions. To *224 choose one representative example from a multitude: In Bates v. Kimball, 2 Chipman 77 (Vt.1824), a special Act of the Vermont Legislature authorized a party to appeal from the judgment of a court even though, under the general law, the time for appeal had expired. The court, noting that the unappealed judgment had become final, set itself the question "Have the Legislature power to vacate or annul an existing judgment between party and party?" Id., at 83. The answer was emphatic: "The necessity of a distinct and separate existence of the three great departments of government ... had been proclaimed and enforced by ... Blackstone, Jefferson and Madison," and had been "sanctioned by the people of the United States, by being adopted in terms more or less explicit, into all their written constitutions." Id., at 84. The power to annul a final judgment, the court held (citing Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall., at 410), was "an assumption of Judicial power," and therefore forbidden. Bates v. Kimball, supra, at 90. For other examples, see Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N.H. 199 (1818) (legislature may not vacate a final judgment and grant a new trial); Lewis v. Webb, 3 Greenleaf 299 (Me.1825) (same); T. Cooley, Constitutional Limitations 95-96 (1868) (collecting cases); J. Sutherland, Statutory 1456 Construction 18- 19 (J. Lewis ed. 1904) (same).

By the middle of the 19th century, the constitutional equilibrium created by the separation of the legislative power to make general law from the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Supreme Court of the United States

The GLIDDEN COMPANY, etc., Petitioner,
v.
Olga ZDANOK et al.
Benny LURK, Petitioner,
v.
UNITED STATES.

Nos. 242 and 481.

Argued Feb. 21 and 26, 1962.
Decided June 25, 1962.

Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals, 288 F.2d 99, which reversed the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, 185 F.Supp. 441, in a diversity action for breach of seniority provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, together with certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia which at 111 U.S.App.D.C. 238, 296 F.2d 360 affirmed a conviction of a defendant in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Harlan, held that the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are courts created under judiciary article of the Constitution, and their judges, including retired judges, are and have been constitutionally protected in tenure and compensation, and therefore designation of judges of such courts to sit as a Court of Appeals judge and as a United States District Court judge was valid and judgments of Court of Appeals and District Court were not vitiated by respective participation of such judges.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice Douglas and Mr. Justice Black dissented.

See also 28 F.R.D. 346.

West Headnotes

[1] Federal Courts ⚖455.1
170Bk455.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk455, 106k383(1))

Certiorari would be granted in cases challenging validity of designation of a judge of the Court of Claims and a retired judge of Court of Customs and Patent Appeals to perform judicial duties in a Court of Appeals and a federal district court, limited to question of whether judgment in either of two cases wherein such designation occurred was vitiated by participation of such judges. 28 U.S.C.A. § 293(a).

[2] Constitutional Law ⚖58
92k58 Most Cited Cases

Apart from article of Constitution pertaining to vesting of the judicial power, neither tenure nor salary of federal officers is constitutionally protected from impairment by Congress. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 1.

[3] Statutes ⚖149
361k149 Most Cited Cases

Statutory declaration that judges of two federal courts should serve during good behavior and with undiminished salary was ineffective to bind any subsequent Congress unless such judges were invested at appointment with protections of article of Constitution pertaining to vesting of federal judicial powers. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 1.

[4] Judges ⚖6
227k6 Most Cited Cases

If there is a judicial office to be filled and one acting under color of authority fills that office and discharges its duties, his actions are those of an officer de facto, and binding upon the public.

[5] Judgment ⚖494
228k494 Most Cited Cases

Although a United States attorney may be permitted on behalf of the public to upset an order issued upon defective judicial authority, a private litigant ordinarily may not, but such rule does not obtain when alleged defect of authority operates also as a limitation on appellate jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court.

[6] Federal Courts ⚖461
170Bk461 Most Cited Cases

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(Formerly 30k170(2))

[6] Federal Courts ⚖479
170Bk479 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 30k563)

[6] Federal Courts ⚖613
170Bk613 Most Cited Cases

Supreme Court would treat alleged defect in authority in filling a judicial office as jurisdictional and consider it on review even though not raised at earliest practicable opportunity, where challenge was based upon nonfrivolous constitutional grounds.

[7] Federal Courts ⚖461
170Bk461 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 30k185(1))

[7] Federal Courts ⚖622
170Bk622 Most Cited Cases

Whether diversity of citizenship exists may be questioned on direct review for the first time in the United States Supreme Court.

[8] Judges ⚖12
227k12 Most Cited Cases

Litigants could challenge constitutional authority of certain federal judges to sit as a federal district court judge, and a Court of Appeals judge, in the Supreme Court, even if such judges acted under color of authority and filled the offices and discharged duties thereof, and litigants were not bound by de facto doctrine from questioning validity of the designations for the first time on appeal, where defect of authority related to basic constitutional protections designed in part for benefit of litigants. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3, § 1.

[9] Federal Courts ⚖6
170Bk6 Most Cited Cases

Authority for the federal government to decide questions of state law exists only by virtue of the diversity clause in Article 3 of the Constitution. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[10] Judges ⚖7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

Question of whether a judge of the Court of Claims enjoyed constitutional independence was presented where such judge by designation sat as a Court of Appeals judge in a case in the Court of Appeals involving determination of a question of state law presented for its decision solely by reason of diverse citizenship of the litigants. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3, § 1.

[11] Judges ⚖7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

[11] Judges ⚖22(1)
227k22(1) Most Cited Cases

Act of September 14, 1922, authorizing assignment of Court of Customs and Patent Appeals judges to serve on courts of the District of Columbia could not be viewed ex proprio vigore as conferring constitutionally protected tenure and compensation status on judges subsequently appointed to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3, § 1.

[12] Judges ⚖7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

[12] Judges ⚖22(1)
227k22(1) Most Cited Cases

Judges designated for service on article III courts by the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court who are not previously endowed with constitutional security of tenure and compensation, gain nothing in regard to such security by the designation. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 291-296.

[13] Judges ⚖7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

[13] Judges ⚖22(1)
227k22(1) Most Cited Cases

Constitutional quality of tenure and compensation extended to a judge appointed to the Court of Claims, and to a judge appointed to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals at time of their confirmation, was dependent upon constitutional status of courts to which they were primarily appointed, and was not affected by fact they were designated for service on courts enjoying constitutional tenure and compensation protections.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 291-296.

[14] Statutes ⚿220
361k220 Most Cited Cases

Subsequent legislation which declares intent of an earlier law is not conclusive in determining what the previous Congress meant, but the later law is entitled to weight when it comes to problem of construction, and especially is that so when Congress has been stimulated by judicial decisions to investigate historical materials involved and has drawn from them a contrary conclusion.

[15] Courts ⚿90(3)
106k90(3) Most Cited Cases

Considered practice of the Supreme Court is not to apply stare decisis as rigidly in constitutional as in nonconstitutional cases.

[16] Federal Courts ⚿1.1
170Bk1.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk1)

Power given Congress in the Constitution to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, relates to inferior courts provided for in section of the Constitution vesting federal judicial power. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 9; art. 3, § 1.

[17] Federal Courts ⚿1021
170Bk1021 Most Cited Cases

In territories of the United States, cases and controversies falling within article of the Constitution pertaining to vesting of federal judicial power may be heard and decided in courts constituted without regard to tenure and compensation limitations of that article, that is, having judges of limited tenure and entertaining business beyond range of conventional cases and controversies. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[18] Federal Courts ⚿491
170Bk491 Most Cited Cases

Territorial courts of the United States are subjected to the appellate jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court in view of their exercise of a federal-question jurisdiction commensurate with that of regular federal courts.

[19] Federal Courts ⚿1.1
170Bk1.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk1)

Article of the Constitution vesting judicial power of the United States authorizes, but does not obligate, Congress to create inferior federal courts. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 1.

[20] Federal Courts ⚿1.1
170Bk1.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk1)

Whether a tribunal is to be recognized as one created under article of the Constitution pertaining to vesting of judicial power of the United States depends upon whether its establishing legislation complies with limitations of that article, that is, whether its business is federal business there specified and the judges and judgments are allowed the independence there expressly or impliedly made requisite. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[21] Federal Courts ⚿1072
170Bk1072 Most Cited Cases

All cases within grant of jurisdiction to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act arise either immediately or potentially under federal law within meaning of article of the Constitution pertaining to vesting of judicial power of the United States. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 2; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1491.

[22] Constitutional Law ⚿56
92k56 Most Cited Cases

Congress is authorized, consistently with article of the Constitution vesting judicial power, to impose a limitation upon remedial powers of a federal court, limiting it to awarding damages, and not specific relief. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[23] Federal Courts ⚿1.1
170Bk1.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk1)

Congress is not compelled to vest entire jurisdiction provided for in article of the Constitution vesting judicial power upon inferior courts of its creation. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[24] Federal Courts ⚿263
170Bk263 Most Cited Cases

Only in the sense that the United States is not amenable to suit of an individual without its consent is vesting of judicial power article's extension of judicial competence over controversies to which United States is a party ineffective to confer jurisdiction over suits to which it is a defendant, and once consent is given, there remains no barrier to justiciability. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[25] United States ⚿131
393k131 Most Cited Cases

Statutes giving litigants an election to sue the United States as principal in the Court of Claims, or to pursue their claims in any other court, including federal district courts, and providing for transfer between the Court of Claims and any federal district court when a suit within one court's exclusive jurisdiction is brought mistakenly in another, are evidences of congressional understanding that suits against the United States are justiciable in courts created under article of the Constitution vesting judicial power, and may not be lightly disregarded. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1406(c), 1500, 1506; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[26] Federal Courts ⚿492
170Bk492 Most Cited Cases

Congress, by giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims by special act to award recovery for breach of a moral obligation, or to waive benefit of res judicata, has enlisted aid of judicial power whose exercise is amenable to appellate review in the Supreme Court.

[27] United States ⚿125(8)
393k125(8) Most Cited Cases

When Congress transmutes a moral obligation into a legal one by specially consenting to suit, it authorizes the tribunal that hears the case to perform a judicial function.

[28] Customs Duties ⚿85(2)
114k85(2) Most Cited Cases

[28] Federal Courts ⚿1071
170Bk1071 Most Cited Cases

[28] Patents ⚿113(1)
291k113(1) Most Cited Cases

Presence of the United States as a party defendant to suits maintained in the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals does not debar those courts from exercising judicial power provided for in article of the Constitution vesting judicial power, even though such courts might be judicially impotent to enforce certain of their decrees against the government. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[29] Jury ⚿12(1.2)
230k12(1.2) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 230k12(2))

Suits against the government require legislative waiver of immunity, and are not "suits at common law," within the Seventh Amendment, and Congress was not, therefore, required to provide jury trials for plaintiffs suing in the Court of Claims. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[30] Judges ⚿7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

[30] Judges ⚿22(1)
227k22(1) Most Cited Cases

Absence of provision for a jury trial of counterclaims by the government in action before the Court of Claims did not prevent such courts from being considered courts within tenure and compensation protection of the judiciary article of the Constitution. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3.

[31] Federal Courts ⚿1071
170Bk1071 Most Cited Cases

Matters referred by Congress to Court of Claims, and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are submitted to them in a form consonant with limitation of judicial power to cases or controversies, imposed by article of the Constitution vesting the judicial power, even though their jurisdiction is specialized. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[32] District of Columbia ⚿3
132k3 Most Cited Cases

Restraints of federalism are removed from powers

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

exercisable by Congress within theDistrict of Columbia.

[33] Federal Courts ⚿1032
170Bk1032 Most Cited Cases

Limitations implicit in the case or controversy provision of article of the Constitution vesting judicial power has no application in the District of Columbia, and national courts in the District can perform any of the local functions elsewhere performed by state courts. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[34] Federal Courts ⚿12.1
170Bk12.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk12)

Restriction of federal judicial power to case or controversy expresses Framers' anxiety against undue intrusion upon general jurisdiction of state courts, and desire of the Framers to safeguard independence of the judicial from other government branches by so confining its cases, and in such respect, constitutional restriction remains applicable at least to courts invested with jurisdiction solely over matters of national import. U.S.C.A. Const. art. 3.

[35] Customs Duties ⚿85(.5)
114k85(.5) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 114k85)

[35] Federal Courts ⚿1071
170Bk1071 Most Cited Cases

[35] Patents ⚿113(1)
291k113(1) Most Cited Cases

Status of Court of Claims and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals as a court established under article of the Constitution vesting judicial power would not be permitted to turn upon fact a minuscule portion of their purported functions did not involve cases or controversies within article 3 of the Constitution. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3.

[36] Customs Duties ⚿85(.5)
114k85(.5) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 114k85)

[36] Federal Courts ⚿1071
170Bk1071 Most Cited Cases

[36] Judges ⚿7
227k7 Most Cited Cases

[36] Judges ⚿22(1)
227k22(1) Most Cited Cases

[36] Judges ⚿29
227k29 Most Cited Cases

[36] Patents ⚿113(1)
291k113(1) Most Cited Cases

The Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are courts created under judiciary article of the Constitution, and their judges, including retired judges, are and have been constitutionally protected in tenure and compensation, and therefore designation of judges of such courts to sit as a Court of Appeals judge and as a United States District Court judge was valid and judgments of Court of Appeals and District Court were not vitiated by respective participation of such judges. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3; 28 U.S.C.A. § 293(a).

*1462 *530 Chester Bordeau, New York City, for petitioner. Morris Shapiro, New York City, for respondents. Solicitor General Archibald Cox for United States, as intervener. Francis M. Shea, New York City, for United States Court of Claims, *1463 as amicus curiae, by special leave of Court.

531 Eugene Gressman, Washington, D.C., for petitioner. Solicitor General Archibald Cox for respondent. Roger Robb, Washington, D.C., for United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, as amicus curiae, by special leave of Court.

Mr. Justice HARLAN announced the judgment of the Court and an opinion joined by Mr. Justice BRENNAN and Mr. Justice STEWART.

In Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 49 S.Ct. 411, 73 L.Ed. 789, and Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 53 S.Ct. 751, 77 L.Ed. 1372, this Court held that the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals and the United States Court of Claims were neither confined in jurisdiction nor protected in independency by Article III of the Constitution, but that both had been created by virtue of other, substantive, powers possessed by Congress under Article I. The Congress has since pronounced its disagreement by providing as to each that 'such court is hereby declared to be a court established under article III of the Constitution of the United *532 States.' [FN1] The petitioners in these cases invite us to reaffirm the authority of our earlier decisions, and thus hold for naught these congressional pronouncements, at least as sought to be applied to judges appointed prior to their enactment.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN1. Act of July 28, 1953, s 1, 67 Stat. 226, added to 28 U.S.C. s 171, 28 U.S.C.A. s 171 (Court of Claims); Act of August 25, 1958, s 1, 72 Stat. 848, added to 28 U.S.C. s 211, 28 U.S.C.A. s 211 (Court of Customs and Patent Appeals). See also Act of July 14, 1956, s 1, 70 Stat. 532, added to 28 U.S.C. s 251, 28 U.S.C.A. s 251 (Customs Court).

[1] No. 242 is a suit brought by individual employees in a New York state court to recover damages for breach of a collective bargaining agreement, and removed to the Federal District Court for the Southern District of New York by the defendant employer on the ground of diversity of citizenship. The employees' right to recover was sustained by a divided panel of the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge J. Warren Madden, then an active judge of the Court of Claims sitting by designation of the Chief Justice of the United States under 28 U.S.C. s 293(a), 28 U.S.C.A. s 293(a). [FN2] No. 481 is a criminal prosecution instituted in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and resulting in a conviction for armed robbery. The trial was presided over by Judge Joseph R. Jackson, a retired judge of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals sitting by similar designation. [FN3] The petitioner's application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeals *533 in forma pauperis, respecting the validity of this designation and alleged trial error, was upheld by this Court last Term, 366 U.S. 712, 81 S.Ct. 1229, 6 L.Ed.2d 845; we are now asked to review the Court of Appeals' affirmance of his conviction. Because of the significance of the 'designation' issue for the federal judicial system, we granted certiorari in the two cases, 368 U.S. 814, 815, 82 S.Ct. 56, 110, 7 L.Ed.2d 22, 23, limited to the question whether the judgment in either was vitiated by the respective participation of the judges named. [FN4]

FN2. 'The Chief Justice of the United States may designate and assign temporarily any judge of the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals * * * to perform judicial duties in any circuit, either in a court of appeals or district court, upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the chief judge or circuit justice of the circuit wherein the need arises.'

FN3. 28 U.S.C. s 294(d), 28 U.S.C.A. s 294(d) authorizes assignment of a retired judge from either court to 'perform such judicial duties as he is willing and able to undertake' in any circuit.

FN4. The petition in No. 481 sought certiorari only as to that issue.

1464 The claim advanced by the petitioners, that they were denied the protection of judges with tenure and compensation guaranteed by Article III, has nothing to do with the manner in which either of these judges conducted himself in these proceedings. No contention is made that either Judge Madden or Judge Jackson displayed a lack of appropriate judicial independence, or that either sought by his rulings to curry favor with Congress or the Executive. Both indeed enjoy statutory assurance of tenure and compensation, [FN5] and were it not for the explicit provisions of Article III we should be quite unable to say that either judge's participation even colorably denied the petitioners independent judicial hearings.

FN5. 10 Stat. 612 (1855), as amended, 28 U.S.C. s 173, 28 U.S.C.A. s 173 (Court of Claims); 46 Stat. 590, 762 (1930), as amended, 28 U.S.C. s 213, 28 U.S.C.A. s 213 (Court of Customs and Patent Appeals). Judge Madden was appointed in 1941, Brief for Petitioner in No. 242, pp. 7--8, and retired in 1961, 290 F.2d xvi; Judge Jackson was appointed in 1937, Brief for Petitioner in No. 481, pp. 9--10, and retired in 1952, 193 F.2d xv.

[2][3] Article III, s 1, however, is explicit and gives the petitioners a basis for complaint without requiring them to point to particular instances of mistreatment in the record. It provides:

'The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior *534 Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265027

during their Continuance in Office.' [FN6]

FN6. The bearing of s 2 of Art. III on petitioners' claims is discussed later. Infra, 370 U.S., pp. 562--583, 82 S.Ct., pp. 1479-- 1490.

Apart from this provision, it is settled that neither the tenure nor salary of federal officers is constitutionally protected from impairment by Congress. Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U.S. 99, 107--108, 10 S.Ct. 431, 433, 434, 33 L.Ed. 825; cf. Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 416--418, 13 L.Ed. 472. The statutory declaration, therefore, that the judges of these two courts should serve during good behavior and with undiminished salary, see note 5, supra, was ineffective to bind any subsequent Congress unless those judges were invested at appointment with the protections of Article III. United States v. Fisher, 109 U.S. 143, 145, 3 S.Ct. 154, 155, 27 L.Ed. 885; see McAllister v. United States, 141 U.S. 174, 186, 11 S.Ct. 949, 953, 35 L.Ed. 693. And the petitioners naturally point to the Bakelite and Williams cases, supra, as establishing that no such constitutional protection was in fact conferred.

The distinction referred to in those cases between 'constitutional' and 'legislative' courts has been productive of much confusion and controversy. Because of the highly theoretical nature of the problem in its present context, [FN7] we would be well advised to decide these cases on narrower grounds if any are fairly available. But for reasons that follow, we find ourselves unable to do so.

FN7. The abstractness of the present controversy is graphically demonstrated by the disparity in volume between records and briefs. The records in both cases amount to but 66 pages of motions, opinions, and the like, with no relevant transcripts of proceedings, while the bries extend to 533 pages exclusive of appendices.

535 I.

No challenge to the authority of the judges was filed in the course of the proceedings before them in either case. The Solicitor General, who submitted briefs and arguments for the United States, has seized upon this circumstance to suggest that the petitioners should be precluded by the so-called de facto doctrine from *1465 questioning the validity of these designations for the first time on appeal.

[4][5] Whatever may be the rule when a judge's authority is challenged at the earliest practicable moment as it was in United States v. American-Foreign S.S. Corp., 363 U.S. 685, 80 S.Ct. 1336, 4 L.Ed.2d 1491, in other circumstances involving judicial authority this Court has described it as well settled 'that where there is an office to be filled and one, acting under color of authority, fills the office and discharges its duties, his actions are those of an officer de facto, and binding upon the public.' McDowell v. United States, 159 U.S. 596, 602, 16 S.Ct. 111, 113, 40 L.Ed. 271. The rule is founded upon an obviously sound policy of preventing litigants from abiding the outcome of a lawsuit and then overturning it if adverse upon a technicality of which they were previously aware. Although a United States Attorney may be permitted on behalf of the public to upset an order issued upon defective authority, Frad v. Kelly, 302 U.S. 312, 58 S.Ct. 188, 82 L.Ed. 282, a private litigant ordinarily may not. Ball v. United States, 140 U.S. 118, 128--129, 11 S.Ct. 761, 764, 765, 35 L.Ed. 377.

[6] The rule does not obtain, of course, when the alleged defect of authority operates also as a limitation on this Court's appellate jurisdiction. Ayrshire Collieries Corp. v. United States, 331 U.S. 132, 67 S.Ct. 1168, 91 L.Ed. 1391 (three-judge court); United States v. Emholt, 105 U.S. 414, 26 L.Ed. 1077 (certificate of divided opinion). In other circumstances as well, when the statute claimed to restrict authority is not merely technical 536 but embodies a strong policy concerning the proper administration of judicial business, this Court has treated the alleged defect as 'jurisdictional' and agreed to consider it on direct review even though not raised at the earliest practicable opportunity. E.g., American Construction Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K.W.R. Co., 148 U.S. 372, 387--388, 13 S.Ct. 758, 764, 765, 37 L.Ed. 486.

A fortiori is this so when the challenge is based upon nonfrivolous constitutional grounds. In McDowell v. United States itself, supra, at 598--599, 16 S.Ct. at 111, 112, the Court, while holding that any defect in statutory authorization for a particular intracircuit assignment was immunized from examination by the de facto doctrine, specifically passed upon and upheld the constitutional authority of Congress to provide for such an assignment. And in Lamar v. United States,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

241 U.S. 103, 117--118, 36 S.Ct. 535, 539, 540, 60 L.Ed. 912, the claim that an intercircuit assignment violated the criminal venue restrictions of the Sixth Amendment and usurped the presidential appointing power under Art. II, s 2, was heard here and determined upon its merits, despite thefact that it had not been raised in the District Court or in the Court of Appeals or even in this Court until the filing of a supplemental brief upon a second request for review.

[7][8] The alleged defect of authority here relates to basic constitutional protections designed in part for the benefit of litigants. See O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 532--534, 53 S.Ct. 740, 743, 744, 77 L.Ed. 1356. It should be examinable at least on direct review, where its consideration encounters none of the objections associated with the principle of res judicata, that there be an end to litigation. At the most is weighed in opposition the disruption to sound appellate process entailed by entertaining objections not raised below, and that is plainly insufficient to overcome the strong interest of the federal judiciary in maintaining the constitutional plan of separation of powers. So this Court has concluded 537 on an analogous balance struck to protect against intruding federal jurisdiction into the area constitutionally reserved to the States: Whether diversity of citizenship exists may be questioned on direct review for the first time in this Court. Mansfield, *1466 C. & L.M.R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 382, 4 S.Ct. 510, 511, 28 L.Ed. 462; City of Gainesville v. Brown-Crummer Investment Co., 277 U.S. 54, 59, 48 S.Ct. 454, 455, 72 L.Ed. 781. We hold that it is similarly open to these petitioners to challenge the constitutional authority of the judges below.

II.

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia found it unnecessary to reach the question whether Judge Jackson enjoyed constitutional security of tenure and compensation. It held that even if he did not, Congress might authorize his assignment to courts in the District of Columbia, by virtue of its power 'To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever' over the District. Art. I, s 8, cl. 17. The Solicitor General, in support of that ruling, argues here that because the criminal charge against petitioner Lurk was violation of a local statute, D.C. Code, 1961, s 22--2901, rather than of one national in application, its trial did not require the assignment of an Article III judge.

[9][10] The question thus raised is itself of constitutional dimension, and one which we need not reach if an Article III judge was in fact assigned. In the companion case, No. 242, the necessity for such a judge is uncontested. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sat to determine a question of state contract law presented for its decision solely by reason of the diverse citizenship of the litigants. [FN8] Authority for the Federal Government to 538 decide questions of state law exists only by virtue of the Diversity Clause in Article III. Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.,Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188; see Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 284, 15 L.Ed. 372. For this reason, the question whether Judge Madden enjoyed constitutional independence is inescapably presented. Since decision of that question involves considerations bearing directly upon the constitutional status of Judge Jackson, we deem it appropriate to dispose of both cases of the same grounds, without at present intimating any view as to the correctness of the holding below by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

FN8. Under our limited writ of certiorari, 368 U.S. 814, 82 S.Ct. 56, 7 L.Ed.2d 22, we have no occasion to consider whether federal law was more appropriately the measure of the employer's obligation. Cf Teamsters Local 174, etc., v. Lucas Flour Co., 369 U.S. 95, 82 S.Ct. 571, 7 L.Ed.2d 593.

III.

The next question is whether the character of the judges who sat in these cases may be determined without reference to the character of the courts to which they were originally appointed. If it were plain that these judges were invested upon confirmation with Article III tenure and compensation, it would be unnecessary for present purposes to consider the constitutional status of the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

[11] No such course, however, appears to be open. The statutes under which Judge Madden and Judge Jackson were appointed speak of service only on those courts. 28 U.S.C. ss 171, 211, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 171, 211. They were not, as were the judges selected for the late Commerce Court, appointed as 'additional circuit judges,' Act of June 18, 1910, c. 309, 36 Stat. 539, 540, whose tenure might be constitutionally secured regardless of the fortunes of their courts. See 50 Cong.Rec. 5409--5418 (1913); Donegan v. Dyson, 269 U.S. 49, 46 S.Ct. 55, 70 L.Ed. 159; Frankfurter and Landis, The Business of the Supreme Court (1927), 168--173. It is true that at the time of Judge Jackson's appointment there was in force a statute authorizing assignment of Court of Customs and Patent Appeals judges to serve on the courts of the 539 District of Columbia. Act of September 14, 1922, c. 306, s 5, *1467 42 Stat. 837, 839. At that time, however, before the O'Donoghue decision, there seems to have been a consensus that the courts of the District were not confined or protected by Article III; as late as 1930, this Court regarded it as 'recognized that the courts of the District of Columbia are not created under the judiciary article of the Constitution but are legislative courts * * *.' Federal Radio Comm'n v. General Electric Co., 281 U.S. 464, 468, 50 S.Ct. 389, 390, 74 L.Ed. 969; and see Katz, Federal Legislative Courts, 43 Harv.L.Rev. 894, 899--903 (1930). The 1922 Act cannot therefore be viewed ex proprio vigore as conferring Article III status on judges subsequently appointed to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. [FN9]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265029

FN9. The debates and reports in Congress display no awareness of the problem. See H.R.Rep.No.1152, 67th Cong., 2d Sess. (1922); 62 Cong.Rec. 190--191, 207--209 (1921).

[12][13] A more novel suggestion is that the assignment statute itself, 28 U.S.C. ss 291--296, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 291--296, authorized the Chief Justice to appoint inferior Article III judges in the course of designating them for service on Article III courts. [FN10] See Shartel, Federal Judges--Appointment, Supervision, and Removal--Some Possibilities under the Constitution, 28 Mich.L.Rev. 485 (1930); cf. Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 397--398, 25 L.Ed. 717; Rice v. Ames, 180 U.S. 371, 378, 21 S.Ct. 406, 409, 45 L.Ed. 577. But we need not consider the constitutional questions involved in this suggestion, for the statute does not readily lend itself 540 to such a construction. If nothing else, the authority given the Chief Justice in 28 U.S.C. s 295, 28 U.S.C.A. s 295, to revoke assignments previously made is wholly inconsistent with a reading of the statute as empowering him to appoint inferior Article III judges. Judges assigned by the Chief Justice who are not previously endowed with constitutional security of tenure and compensation thus can gain nothing by the designation. [FN11]

FN10. Article II, s 2, cl. 2 of the Constitution provides that the President '* * * shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all others Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.'

FN11. Compare the statute creating the Emergency Court of Appeals, to consist of three or more judges 'designated by the Chief Justice of the United States from judges of the United States district courts and circuit courts of appeals.' Act of January 30, 1942, c. 26, s 204(c), 56 Stat. 23, 32, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, s 924(c).

It is significant that Congress did not enact the present broad assignment statute until after it had declared the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals to be constitutional courts. Act of August 25, 1958, 72 Stat. 848. A major purpose of these declarations was to eliminate uncertainty whether regular Article III judges might be assigned to assist in the business of those courts when disability or disqualification made it difficult for them to obtain a quorum. [FN12] Those doubts, suggested by dicta in Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 460, 49 S.Ct. 411, 416, 73 L.Ed. 789, would be expanded rather than allayed were we to hold that *1468 the judges of the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals enjoy the protections of Article III while leaving at large the status of those courts. For these various reasons, the constitutional quality of tenure and compensation extended 541 Judges Madden and Jackson at the time of their confirmation must be deemed to have depended upon the constitutional status of the courts to which they were primarily appointed.

FN12. Hearings on H.R. 1070 before Subcommittee No. 2 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, pp. 6--7, 24 (Unpublished, May 19, 1953; on file with the Clerk of the Committee) (testimony of Judge Howell of the Court of Claims); H.R.Rep.No.695, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 2, 5--6 (1953); U.S.Code Cong. and Admin.News 1953, p. 2006; S.Rep.No.275, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1953); H.R.Rep.No.2349, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958); S.Rep.No.2309, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. (1958), U.S.Code Cong. and Admin.News 1958, p. 3909; 104 Cong.Rec. 16095 (1958) (remarks of Representative Keating).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

IV.

[14] In determining the constitutional character of the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, as we are thus led to do, we may not disregard Congress' declaration that they were created under Article III. Of course, Congress may not by fiat overturn the constitutional decisions of this Court, but the legislative history of the 1953 and 1958 declarations makes plain that it was far from attempting any such thing. Typical is a statement in the 1958 House Report that the purpose of the legislation was to 'declare which of the powers Congress was intending to exercise when the court was created.' H.R.Rep.No.2349, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1958); accord, H.R.Rep.No.695, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 3, 5, 7 (1953); and see S.Rep.No.275, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1953), substituted for S.Rep.No.261, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1953); 99 Cong.Rec.8943, 8944 (1953) (remarks of Senator Gore).

'Subsequent legislation which declares the intent of an earlier law,' this Court has noted, 'is not, of course, conclusive in determining what the previous Congress meant. But the later law is entitled to weight when it comes to the problem of construction.' Federal Housing Administration v. Darlington, Inc., 358 U.S. 84, 90, 79 S.Ct. 141, 145, 3 L.Ed.2d 132; accord, New York, P. & N.R. Co. v. Peninsula Exchange, 240 U.S. 34, 39, 36 S.Ct. 230, 232, 60 L.Ed. 511. Especially is this so when the Congress has been stimulated by decisions of this Court to investigate the historical materials involved and has drawn from them a contrary conclusion. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 235--237, 61 S.Ct. 463, 467, 468, 85 L.Ed. 788. As examination of the House and Senate Reports makes evident, that is what occurred 542 here. E.g., S.Rep.No.2309, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. 2--3 (1958); H.R.Rep.No. 695, 83d Cong., 1st Sess. 3--5 (1953).

At the time when Bakelite and Williams were decided, the Court did not have the benefit of this congressional understanding. The Williams case, for example, arose under the Legislative Appropriation Act of June 30, 1932, c. 314, s 107(a)(5), 47 Stat. 382, 402, which reduced the salary of all judges 'except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office.' Mr. Justice Sutherland, who wrote the Court's opinions in both Williams and O'Donoghue, was plainly disadvantaged by the absence of congressional intimation as to which judges of which courts were to be deemed exempted. See O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 529, 53 S.Ct.740, 742.

In the Bakelite case, to be sure, Mr. Justice Van Devanter said of an argument drawn from tenuous evidence of congressional understanding that it 'mistakenly assumes that whether a court is of one class or the other depends on the intention of Congress, whereas the true test lies in the power under which the court was created and in the jurisdiction conferred.' 279 U.S., at 459, 49 S.Ct. at 416. Yet he would hardly have denied that explicit evidence of legislative intendment concerning the factors he thought controlling may be relevant and indeed highly persuasive. In any event, the Bakelite dictum did not embarrass the Court in deciding O'Donoghue, where it looked searchingly at 'congressional practice' to determine what classification that body 'recognizes.' 289 U.S., at 548--550, 53 S.Ct. at 749, 750. We think the forthright statement of understanding *1469 embraced in the 1953 and 1958 declarations may be taken as similarly persuasive evidence for the problem now before us.

To give due weight to these congressional declarations is not of course to compromise the authority or responsibility 543 of this Court as the ultimate expositor of the Constitution. The Bakelite and Williams decisions have long been considered of questionable soundness. See, e.g., Brown, The Rent in Our Judicial Armor, 10 G.W.L.Rev. 127 (1941); Hart and Wechsler, The Federal Courts and the Federal System (1953), 348--351; 1 Moore, Federal Practice (2d ed. 1961), 71 n. 21. They stand uneasily next to O'Donoghue, much of whose reasoning in sustaining the Article III status of the District of Columbia superior courts seems judicial power to apply that law in particular cases was so well understood and accepted that it could survive even Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 15 L.Ed. 691 (1857). In his First Inaugural Address, President Lincoln explained why the political branches could not, and need not, interfere with even that infamous judgment:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> "I do not forget the position assumed by some, that constitutional questions are to be decided by the Supreme Court; nor do I deny that such decisions must be binding in any case, upon the parties to a suit, as to the object of that suit.... And while it is obviously possible that 225 such decision may be erroneous in any given case, still the evil effect following it, being limited to that particular case, with the chance that it may be over-ruled, and never become a precedent for other cases, can better be borne than could the evils of a different practice." 4 R. Basler, The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 268 (1953) (First Inaugural Address 1861).

And the great constitutional scholar Thomas Cooley addressed precisely the question before us in his 1868 treatise:

> "If the legislature cannot thus indirectly control the action of the courts, by requiring of them a construction of the law according to its own views, it is very plain it cannot do so directly, by setting aside their judgments, compelling them to grant new trials, ordering the discharge of offenders, or directing what particular steps shall be taken in the progress of a judicial inquiry." Cooley, supra, at 94-95.

B

[5] Section 27A(b) effects a clear violation of the separation-of-powers principle we have just discussed. It is, of course, retroactive legislation, that is, legislation that prescribes what the law was at an earlier time, when the act whose effect is controlled by the legislation occurred--in this case, the filing of the initial Rule 10b-5 action in the District Court. When retroactive legislation requires its own application in a case already finally adjudicated, it does no more and no less than "reverse a determination once made, in a particular case." The Federalist No. 81, at 545. Our decisions stemming from Hayburn's Case--although their precise holdings are not strictly applicable here, see supra, at 1452-1453--have uniformly provided fair warning that such an act exceeds the powers of Congress. See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc., 333 U.S., at 113, 68 S.Ct., at 437 ("Judgments within the powers vested in courts by the Judiciary Article 226 of the Constitution may not lawfully be revised, overturned or refused faith and credit by another Department of Government"); United States v. O'Grady, 22 Wall. 641, 647-648, 22 L.Ed. 772 (1875) ("Judicial jurisdiction implies the power to hear and determine a cause, and ... Congress cannot subject the judgments of the Supreme Court to the re-examination and revision of any other tribunal"); Gordon v. United States, 117 U.S.Appx. 697, 700-704 (1864) (opinion of Taney, C.J.) (judgments of Article III courts are "final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties"); Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall., at 411 (opinion of Wilson and Blair, JJ., and Peters, D.J.) ("[R]evision and control" of Article III judgments is "radically inconsistent with the independence of that judicial power which is vested in the courts"); id., at 413 (opinion of Iredell, J., and Sitgreaves, D.J.) ("[N]o decision of any court of the United States can, under any circumstances, ... be liable to a revision, or even suspension, by the [l]egislature itself, in whom no judicial power of any kind appears to be vested"). See also Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 18 How. 421, 431, 15 L.Ed. 435 (1856) ("[I]t is urged, that the act of congress cannot have the effect and operation to annul the judgment of the court already rendered, or the rights determined thereby.... This, as a general proposition, is certainly not to be denied, especially as it respects adjudication upon the private rights of parties. When they have passed into judgment the right becomes absolute, and it is the duty of the court to enforce it"). Today those clear *1457 statements must either be honored, or else proved false.

[6][7] It is true, as petitioners contend, that Congress can always revise the judgments of Article III courts in one sense: When a new law makes clear that it is retroactive, an appellate court must apply that law in reviewing judgments still on appeal that were rendered before the law was enacted, and must alter the outcome accordingly. See United States v. Schooner Peggy, 1 Cranch 103, 2 L.Ed. 49 (1801); Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 273-280, 114 S.Ct. 1483, 1501-1505, 128 L.Ed.2d 229 (1994). Since that is 227 so, petitioners argue, federal courts must apply the "new" law created by § 27A(b) in finally adjudicated applicable to the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. In Pope v. United States, 323 U.S. 1, 13--14, 65 S.Ct. 16, 23, 89 L.Ed. 3, where the Solicitor General argued at length against the continued vitality of Bakelite and Williams, their authority was regarded as an open question.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264906

[15] Furthermore, apart from this Court's considered practice not to apply stare decisis as rigidly in constitutional as in nonconstitutional cases, e.g., United States v. South Buffalo R. Co., 333 U.S. 771, 774--775, 68 S.Ct. 868, 870, 92 L.Ed. 1077; see Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U.S. 393, 405--408, 52 S.Ct. 443, 446--448, 76 L.Ed. 815 and n. 1--3 (Brandeis, J., dissenting), there is the fact that Congress has acted on its understanding and has provided for assignment of judges who have made decisions that are now said to be impeachable. In these circumstances, the practical consideration underlying the doctrine of stare decisis--protection of generated expectations--actually militates in favor of reexamining the decisions. We are well-advised, therefore, to regard the questions decided in those cases as entirely open to reconsideration.

V.

[16] The Constitution nowhere makes reference to 'legislative courts.' The power given Congress in Art. I, s 8, cl. 9, 'To constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court,' plainly relates to the 'inferior Courts' provided for in Art. III, s 1; it has never been relied on for establishment of any other tribunals.

544 The concept of a legislative court derives from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in American Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 7 L.Ed. 242, dealing with courts established in a territory. A cargo of cotton salvaged from a wreck off the coast of Florida had been purchased by Canter at a judicial sale ordered by a court at Key West invested by the territorial legislature with jurisdiction over cases of salvage. The insurers, to whom the property in the cargo had been abandoned by the owners, brought a libel for restitution, claiming in part that the prior decree was void because not rendered in a court created by Congress, as required for the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction under Article III. Chief Justice Marshall for the Court swept this objection aside by noting that the Superior Courts of Florida, which had been created by Congress, were staffed with judges appointed for only four years, and concluded that Article III did not apply in the territories:

> 'These Courts, then, are not constitutional Courts, in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the general government, can be deposited. They are incapable of receiving it. They are legislative Courts, created in virtue of the general right of sovereignty which exists in the government, or in virtue of that clause which enables Congress to make all needful rules and regulations, respecting the territory belonging to the United States.' 1 Pet., at 546.

[17][18] By these arresting observations the Chief Justice certainly did not *1470 mean to imply that the case heard by the Key West court was not one of admiralty jurisdiction otherwise properly justiciable in a Federal District Court sitting in one of the States. Elsewhere in the opinion he distinctly referred to the provisions of Article III to show that it was such a case. 1 Pet., at 545. All the Chief Justice meant, and what the case has ever after been 545 taken to establish, is that in the territories cases and controversies falling within the enumeration of Article III may be heard and decided in courts constituted without regard to the limitations of that article; [FN13] courts, that is, having judges of limited tenure and entertaining business beyond the range of conventional cases and controversies.

> FN13. Far from being 'incapable of receiving' federal-question jurisdiction, the territorial courts have long exercised a jurisdiction commensurate in this regard with that of the regular federal courts and have been subjected to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court precisely because they do so. Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 235, 243, 13 L.Ed. 119; Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. 434, 447, 20 L.Ed. 659; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 154, 25 L.Ed. 244; United States v. Coe, 155 U.S. 76, 86, 15 S.Ct. 16, 19, 39 L.Ed. 76; Balzac v. Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298, 312--312, 42 S.Ct. 343, 348, 66 L.Ed. 627; International Longshoremen's & etc., Union v. Juneau Spruce Corp., 342 U.S. 237, 240-- 241, 72 S.Ct. 235, 237, 238, 96 L.Ed. 275; cf. Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 304, 338, 4 L.Ed. 97; see Pope v. United States, 323 U.S. 1, 13--14, 65 S.Ct. 16, 23, 89 L.Ed. 3.

The reasons for this are not difficult to appreciate

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

so long as the character of the early territories and some of the practical problems arising from their administration are kept in mind. The entire governmental responsibility in a territory where there was no state government to assume the burden of local regulation devolved upon the National Government. This meant that courts had to be established and staffed with sufficient judges to handle the general jurisdiction that elsewhere would have been exercised in large part by the courts of a State. [FN14] But when the territories began entering into statehood, as they soon did, the authority of the territorial courts over matters of state concern ceased; and in a time when the size of the federal judiciary was still relatively small, that left the National Government with a significant 546 number of territorial judges on its hands and no place to put them. When Florida was admitted as a State, for example, Congress replaced three territorial courts of general jurisdiction comprising five judges with one Federal District Court and one judge. [FN15]

FN14. Under Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 584, 16 L.Ed. 226, for example, the federal courts in the States were incompetent to render divorces; but in the territories, where the legislative power of the United States of necessity extended to all such local matters, the territorial courts took cognizance of them. Simms v. Simms, 175 U.S. 162, 167--168, 20 S.Ct. 58, 60, 44 L.Ed. 115; De la Rama v. De la Rama, 201 U.S. 303, 26 S.Ct. 485, 50 L.Ed. 765.

FN15. Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 235, 240, 244, 13 L.Ed. 119. For statutory techniques since developed to avoid the interregnal problems involved in that case, see Metlakatla Indian Community etc., v. Egan, 363 U.S. 555, 557--559, 80 S.Ct. 1321, 1322, 1323, 4 L.Ed.2d 1397; 1 Moore, Federal Practice (2d ed. 1961), 32--34.

At the same time as the absence of a federal structure in the territories produced problems not foreseen by the Framers of Article III, the realities of territorial government typically made it less urgent that judges there enjoy the independence from Congress and the President envisioned by that article. For the territories were not ruled immediately from Washington; in a day of poor roads and slow mails, it was unthinkable that they should be. Rather, Congress left municipal law to be developed largely by the territorial legislatures, within the framework of organic acts and subject to a retained power of *1471 veto. [FN16] The scope of self-government exercised under these delegations was nearly as broad as that enjoyed by the States, and the freedom of the territories to dispense with protections deemed inherent in a separation of governmental powers was as fully recognized. [FN17]

FN16. See Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. 434, 441--445, 20 L.Ed. 659; Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. 648, 655--656, 21 L.Ed. 966.

FN17. Compare Clinton v. Englebrecht, supra, 13 Wall., at 446, 447, with Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U.S. 71, 83--84, 23 S.Ct. 28, 32, 47 L.Ed. 79.

Against this historical background, it is hardly surprising that Chief Justice Marshall decided as he did. It would have been doctrinaire in the extreme to deny the right of Congress to invest judges of its creation with authority to dispose of the judicial business of the territories. It would have been at least as dogmatic, having recognized the right, to fasten on those judges a guarantee 547 of tenure that Congress could not put to use and that the exigencies of the territories did not require. Marshall chose neither course; conscious as ever of his responsibility to see the Constitution work, he recognized a greater flexibility in Congress to deal with problems arising outside the normal context of a federal system.

The same confluence of practical considerations that dictated the result in Canter has governed the decision in later cases sanctioning the creation of other courts with judges of limited tenure. In United States v. Coe, 155 U.S. 76, 85--86, 15 S.Ct. 16, 19, 39 L.Ed. 76, for example, the Court sustained the authority of the Court of Private Land Claims to adjudicate claims under treaties to land in the territories, but left it expressly open whether such a course might be followed within the States. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Citizenship Court was similarly created to determine questions of tribal membership relevant to property claims within Indian territory under the exclusive control of the National Government. See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U.S. 445, 19 S.Ct. 722, 43 L.Ed. 1041; Ex parte Joins, 191 U.S. 93, 24 S.Ct. 27, 48 L.Ed. 110; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U.S. 415, 27 S.Ct. 363, 51 L.Ed. 547. Upon like considerations, Article III has been viewed as inapplicable to courts created in unincorporated territories outside the mainland, Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 266--267, 21 S.Ct. 770, 778, 779, 45 L.Ed. 1088; Balzac v. Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298, 312--313, 42 S.Ct. 343, 348, 66 L.Ed. 627; cf. Dorr v. United States, 195 U.S. 138, 145, 149, 24 S.Ct. 808, 811, 813, 49 L.Ed. 128, and to the consular courts established by concessions from foreign countries, In re Ross, 140 U.S. 453, 464--465, 480, 11 S.Ct. 897, 900, 905, 35 L.Ed. 581. [FN18]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN18. See generally, as to each of these courts, 1 Moore, Federal Practice (2d ed. 1961), 40--44, 47--50.

The touchstone of decision in all these cases has been the need to exercise the jurisdiction then and there and for a transitory period. Whether constitutional limitations on the exercise of judicial power have been held inapplicable has depended on the particular local setting, 548 the practical necessities, and the possible alternatives. When the peculiar reasons justifying investiture of judges with limited tenure have not been present, the Canter holding has not been deemed controlling. O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 536--539, 53 S.Ct. 740, 745, 746.

Since the conditions obtaining in one territory have been assumed to exist in each, this Court has in the past entertained a presumption that even those territorial judges who have been extended statutory assurances of life tenure and undiminished compensation have been so favored as a matter of legislative grace and not of constitutional compulsion. McAllister v. United States, 141 U.S. 174, *1472 186, 11 S.Ct. 949, 953, 35 L.Ed. 693. [FN19] By a parity of reasoning, however, the presumption should be reversed when Congress creates courts the continuing exercise of whose jurisdiction is unembarrassed by such practical difficulties. See Mookini v. United States, 303 U.S. 201, 205, 58 S.Ct. 543, 545, 82 L.Ed. 748. As the Bakelite and Williams opinions recognize, the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals were created to carry into effect powers enjoyed by the National Government over subject matter--roughly, payment of debts and collection of customs revenue-- and not over localities. What those opinions fail to deal with is whether that distinction deprives American Insurance Co. v. Canter of controlling force.

FN19. We do not now decide, of course, whether the same conditions still obtain in each of the present-day territories or whether, even if they do, Congress might not choose to establish an Article III court in one or more of them.

The Bakelite opinion did not inquire whether there might be such a distinction. After sketching the history of the territorial and consular courts, it continued at once:

'Legislative courts also may be created as special tribunals to examine and determine various matters, 549 arising between the government and others, which from their nature do not require judicial determination and yet are susceptible of it.' 279 U.S., at 451, 49 S.Ct. at 413.

Since in the Court's view the jurisdiction conferred on both the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals included 'nothing which inherently or necessarily requires judicial determination,' [FN20] both could have been and were created as legislative courts.

FN20. Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 453, 458, 49 S.Ct. 411, 414, 416, 73 L.Ed. 789; accord, Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 579, 53 S.Ct. 751, 759, 77 L.Ed. 1372.

We need not pause to assess the Court's characterization of the jurisdiction conferred on those courts, beyond indicating certain reservations about its accuracy. [FN21] Nor need we now explore the extent to which Congress may commit the execution of even 'inherently' judicial business to tribunals other than Article III courts. We may and do assume, for present purposes, that none of the jurisdiction vested in our two courts is of that sort, so that all of it might be committed for final determination to non-Article III tribunals, be they denominated legislative courts or administrative agencies.

FN21. Williams itself recognized that the jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Claims by the Tucker Act, now 28 U.S.C. s 1491, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1491, to award just compensation for a governmental taking, empowered that court to decide what had previously been described as a judicial and not a legislative question. 289 U.S., at 581, 53 S.Ct. at 760; see, e.g., Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 327, 13 S.Ct. 622, 626, 37 L.Ed. 463. As for

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Bakelite, its reliance, 279 U.S., at 458 n. 26, 49 S.Ct. at 416, on Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 236, 11 L.Ed. 576, for the proposition that disputes over customs duties may be adjudged summarily without recourse to judicial proceedings, appears to have overlooked the care with which that decision specifically declined to rule whether all right of action might be taken away from a protestant, even going so far as to suggest several judicial remedies that might have been available. See 3 How., at 250.

But because Congress may employ such tribunals assuredly does not mean that it must. This is the crucial 550 non sequitur of the Bakelite and Williams opinions. Each assumed that because Congress might have assigned specified jurisdiction to an administrative agency, it must be deemed to have done so even though it assigned that jurisdiction to a tribunal having every appearance of a court and composed of judges enjoying statutory assurances of life tenure and undiminished compensation. In so doing, each appears to have misunderstood the trust 1473 of the celebrated observation by Mr. Justice Curtis, that ' * * there are matters, involving public rights, which may be presented in such form that the judicial power is capable of acting on them, and which are susceptible of judicial determination, but which congress may or may not bring within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, as it may deem proper.' Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 284, 15 L.Ed. 372.

This passage, cited in both the Bakelite and Williams opinions, [FN22] plainly did not mean that the matters referred to could not be entrusted to Article III courts. Quite the contrary, the explicit predicate to Justice Curtis' argument was that such courts could exercise judicial power over such cases. For the very statute whose authorization of summary distress proceedings was sustained in the Murray case, also authorized the distrainee to bring suit to arrest the levy against the United States in a Federal District Court. And as to this, the author of the opinion stated, just before his more trenchant remark quoted above:

FN22. 279 U.S., at 451 note 8, 49 S.Ct. at 413; 289 U.S., at 579, 53 S.Ct. at 759.

'The United States consents that this fact of indebtedness may be drawn in question by a suit against them. Though they might have withheld 551 their consent, we think that, by granting it, nothing which may not be a subject of judicial cognizance is brought before the court.' [FN23]

FN23. 18 How., at 284.

Thus Murray's Lessee, far from furnishing authority against the proposition that the Court of Claims is a constitutional court, actually supports it.

[19] To deny that Congress may create tribunals under Article III for the sole purpose of adjudicating matters that it might have reserved for legislative or executive decision would be to deprive it of the very choice that Mr. Justice Curtis insisted it enjoys. Of course possession of the choice, assuming it is coextensive with the range of matters confided to the courts, [FN24] subjects those courts to the continuous possibility that their entire jurisdiction may be withdrawn. See Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 580--581, 53 S.Ct. 751, 760, 77 L.Ed. 1372. But the threat thus facing their independence is not in kind or effect different from that sustained by all inferior federal courts. The great constitutional compromise that resulted in agreement upon Art. III, s 1, authorized but did not obligate Congress to create inferior federal courts. 1 Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention (1911), 118, 124--125; The Federalist, No. 81 (Wright ed. 1961), at 509 (Hamilton). Once created, they passed almost a century without exercising any very significant jurisdiction. Warren, New Light on the History of the Federal Judiciary Act of 1789, 37 Harv.L.Rev. 49, 65--70 (1923); Frankfurter, Distribution of Judicial Power Between United States and State Courts, 13 Cornell L.Q. 499 (1928). Throughout this period and beyond it up to today, they remained constantly subject to jurisdictional curtailment. Turner v. Bank of North America, 4 Dall. 8, 10 note, 1 L.Ed. 718 (Chase, J.); 552 Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 236, 245, 11 L.Ed. 576; Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. 441, 449, 12 L.Ed. 1147; Kline v. Burke Construction Co., 260 U.S. 226, 233-234, 43 S.Ct. 79, 82, 67 L.Ed. 226. Even if it should be conceded that the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals is any more likely to be supplanted, we do not think the factor of constitutional significance. [FN25]

FN24. But see note 21, supra.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN25. See generally Hart and Wechsler, The Federal Courts and the Federal System (1953), 312--340, and more specifically, 370 U.S., pp. 567--568, 82 S.Ct., pp. 1481--1482, infra.

1474 [20] What has been said should suffice to demonstrate that whether a tribunal is to be recognized as one created under Article III depends basically upon whether its establishing legislation complies with the limitations of that article; whether, in other words, its business is the federal business there specified and its judges and judgments are allowed the independence there expressly or impliedly made requisite. To ascertain whether the courts now under inquiry can meet those tests, we must turn to examine their history, the development of their functions, and their present characteristics.

VI.

A. Court of Claims.--The Court of Claims was created by the Act of February 24, 1855, c. 122, 10 Stat. 612, primarily to relieve the pressure on Congress caused by the volume of private bills. As an innovation the court was at first regarded as an experiment, and some of its creators were reluctant to give it all the attributes of a court by making its judgments final; instead it was authorized to hear claims and report its findings of fact and opinions to Congress, together with drafts of bills designed to carry its recommendations into effect. s 7, 10 Stat. 613; see Cong.Globe, 33d Cong., 2d Sess. 70--72 (1854) (remarks of Senators Brodhead and Hunter). From the outset, however, a majority of the court's proponents insisted that its judges be given life tenure as a means of assuring independence *553 of judgment, and their proposal won acceptance in the Act. s 1, 10 Stat. 612; see Cong. Globe, 33d Cong., 2d Sess. 71, 108--109 (Senator Hunter); 72 (Senator Clayton); 106 (Senator Brodhead); 110 (Senator Pratt); 114, 902 (the votes). Indeed there are substantial indications in the debates that Congress thought it was establishing a court under Article III. Cong.Globe, 33d Cong., 2d Sess. 108--109 (Senator Hunter); 110--111 (Senator Pratt); 111 (Senator Clayton); 113 (Senators Stuart and Douglas).

By the end of 1861, however, it was apparent that the limited powres conferred on the court were insufficient to relieve Congress form the laborious necessity of examining the merits of private bills. In his State of the Union message that year, President Lincoln recommended that the legislative design to provide for the independent adjudication of claims against the United States be brought to fruition by making the judgments of the Court of Claims final. The pertinent text of his address is as follows, Cong.Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess., Appendix, p. 2:

'It is as much the duty of Government to render prompt justice against itself, in favor of citizens, as it is to administer the same between private individuals. The investigation and adjudication of claims, in their nature belong to the judicial department * * *. It was intended by the organization of the Court of Claims mainly to remove this branch of business from the Halls of Congress; but while the court has proved to be an effective and valuable means of investigation, it in great degree fails to effect the object of its creation, for want of power to make its judgments final.'

By the Act of March 3, 1863, c. 92, s 5, 12 Stat. 765, 766, Congress adopted the President's recommendation and made the court's judgments final, with appeal to the *554 Supreme Court provided in certain cases. The significance of this nearly contemporaneous enactment for the light it sheds on the aims of the 1855 Congress is apparent.

There was one further impediment. Section 14 of the 1863 Act, 12 Stat. 768, provided that 'no money shall be paid out of the treasury for any claim passed upon by the court of claims till after an appropriation therefor shall be estimated 1475 for by the Secretary of the Treasury.' In Gordon v. United States, 2 Wall. 561, 17 L.Ed. 921, this Court refused to review a judgment of the Court of Claims because it construed that section as giving the Secretary a revisory authority over the court inconsistent with its exercise of judicial power. Congress promptly repealed the offensive section, Act of March 17, 1866, c. 19, s 1, 14 Stat. 9, once again exhibiting its purpose to liberate the Court of Claims from itself and the Executive. Thereafter, the Supreme Court promulgated rules governing appeals from the court, 3 Wall. vii-- viii, and took jurisdiction under them for the first time in De Groot v. United States, 5 Wall. 419, 18 L.Ed. 700.

The early appeals entertained by the Court furnish striking evidence of its understanding that the Court of Claims had been vested with judicial power. In De Groot the court had been given jurisdiction by special bill only after the passage of two private bills had failed to produce agreement by administrative officials upon adeqquate recompense. This Court was thus presented with a vivid illustration of the ways in which the same matter might be submitted for resolution to a legislative committee, to an executive officer, or to a court, Murray's Lessee, supra, and nevertheless accepted appellate jurisdiction over what was, necessarily, an exercise of the judicial power which alone it may review. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 174-- 175, 2 L.Ed. 60.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265036

After the repeal of s 14, the Court was quick to protect the Court of Claims' judgments from executive revision. *555 In United States v. O'Grady, 22 Wall. 641, 22 L.Ed. 772, a judgment had been diminished by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount equal to a tax assertedly due, although the United States had not pleaded a set-off as it was entitled by the 1863 Act to do. [FN26] The Court of Claims and this Court on appeal held the deduction unwarranted in law, with the following pertinent closing observation:

FN26. s 3, 12 Stat. 765, now 28 U.S.C. s 1503, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1503. See also 18 Stat. 481 (1875), as amended, 31 U.S.C. s 227, 31 U.S.C.A. s 227, requiring the Comptroller General to bring suit against a nonconsenting judgment creditor if that official believes a debt not previously asserted as a set-off is due the United States.

'Should it be suggested that the judgment in question was rendered in the Court of Claims, the answer to the suggestion is that the judgment of the Court of Claims, from which no appeal it taken, is just as conclusive under existing laws as the judgment of the Supreme Court, until it is set aside on a motion for a new trial.' [FN27]

FN27. 22 Wall., at 648.

Like views abound in the early reports. In United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 98 U.S. 569, 603, 25 L.Ed. 143, for example, referring to Article III, the Court said:

'Congress has, under this authority, created the district courts, the circuit courts, and the Court of Claims, and vested each of them with a defined portion of the judicial power found in the Constitution.'

Such remained the view of the Court as late as Miles v. Graham, 268 U.S. 501, 45 S.Ct. 601, 69 L.Ed. 1067, decided in 1925. There it was held, on the authority of Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 40 S.Ct. 550, 64 L.Ed. 887, that the salary of a Court of Claims judge appointed even after enactment of the taxing statute in question was not subject to such diminution. Although the case was afterwards overruled on this point, O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277, 283, 59 S.Ct. 838, 840, 83 L.Ed. 1289, what is of continuing interest is the *556 Court's reliance in Miles upon Evans v. Gore, where Mr. Justice Van Devanter for the Court devoted six full pages to recitation of the 1476 importance of the guarantees of tenure and salary contained in Article III. [FN28] How it was possible to say in Bakelite, 279 U.S., at 455, 49 S.Ct. at 415, that the Court in Miles, decided only five years after Evans and with copious quotation from it, was unaware of the crucial question whether Article III extended its protection to a judge of the Court of Claims, is very difficult to understand.

FN28. Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 248--254, 40 S.Ct. 550, 551, 553.

In actuality, the Court's pre-Bakelite view of the Court of Claims in supported by the evidence of increasing confidence placed in that tribunal by Congress. The Tucker Act, s 1, 24 Stat. 505 (1887), now 28 U.S.C. s 1491, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1491 , greatly expanded the jurisdiction of the court by authorizing it to adjudicate

'All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable * * *.'

[21] All of the cases within this grant of jurisdiction arise either immediately or potentially under federal law within the meaning of Art. III, s 2. Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 818--819, 823--825, 6 L.Ed. 204; see Clearfield Trust Co. v. United States, 318 U.S. 363, 63 S.Ct. 573, 87 L.Ed. 838; Federal Crop Insurance Corp. v.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 68 S.Ct. 1, 92 L.Ed. 10; Mishkin, The Federal 'Question' in the District Courts, 53 Col.L.Rev. 157, 184--196. The cases heard by the Court have *557 been as intricate and far-ranging as any coming within the federal-question jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. s 1331, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1331, of the District Courts. E.g., Causby v. United States, 60 F.Supp. 751, 104 St.Cl. 342, remanded for further findings, 328 U.S. 256, 66 S.Ct. 1062, 90 L.Ed. 1206 (eminent domain); Lovett v. United States, 66 F.Supp. 142, 104 Ct.Cl. 557, aff'd, 328 U.S. 303, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 90 L.Ed. 1252 (bill of attainder); Shapiro v. United States, 69 F.Supp. 205, 107 Ct.Cl. 650 (military due process). In none of these cases, nor in others, could it well be suggested that the Court of Claims had adjudged the issues, no matter how important to the Government, otherwise than dispassionately.

[22] Indeed there is reason to believe that the Court of Claims has been constituted as it is precisely to the end that there may be a tribunal specially qualified to hold the Government to strict legal accounting. From the beginning it has been given jurisdiction only to award damages, not specific relief. United States v. Alire, 6 Wall. 573, 18 L.Ed. 947; United States v. Jones, 131 U.S. 1, 9 S.Ct. 669, 33 L.Ed. 90; see Schwartz and Jacoby, Government Litigation (tentative ed. 1960), 123--126. No question can be raised of Congress' freedom, consistently with Article III, to impose such limitation upon the remedial powers of a federal court. Lauf v. E. G. Shinner & Co., 303 U.S. 323, 330, 58 S.Ct. 578, 581, 82 L.Ed. 872 (Norris- LaGuardia Act). But far from serving as a restriction, this limitation has allowed the Court of Claims a greater freedom than is enjoyed by other federal courts to inquire into the legality of governmental action. See Larson v. Domestic & Foreign Commerce Corp., 337 U.S. 682, 703--704, 69 S.Ct. 1457, 1468, 93 L.Ed. 1628; Malone v. Bowdoin, 369 U.S. 643, 82 S.Ct. 980, 8 L.Ed.2d 168; Brenner, Judicial Review by Money Judgment in the Court of Claims, 21 Fed.B.J. 179 (1961).

'If there are such things as political axioms,' said Alexander Hamilton, 'the propriety of the judicial power of a government 1477 being coextensive with its legislative, may be ranked among the number.' The Federalist, 558 No. 80 (Wright ed. 1961), at 500. His sentiments were not ignored by the Framers of Article III. The Randolph plan, which formed the basis of that article, called for establishment of a national judiciary coextensive in authority with the executive and legislative branches. IV Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention (rev. ed. 1937), 47--48. For, as Hamilton observed, a chief defect of the Confederation had been ' * * the want of a judiciary power. Laws are a dead letter without courts to expound and define their true meaning and operation.' The Federalist, No. 22 (Wright ed. 1961), at 197. But because of the barrier of sovereign immunity, the laws controlling governmental rights and obligations could not for years obtain a fully definitive exposition. The creation of the Court of Claims can be viewed as a fulfillment of the design of Article III.

B. The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.--The Court of Customs Appeals, as it was first known, was established by s 29 of the Customs Administrative Act of 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, as added by s 28 of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of August 5, 1909, c. 6, 36 Stat. 11, 105, to review by appeal final decisions of the Board of General Appraisers (now Customs Court) respecting the classification and rate of duty applicable to imported merchandise. The Act was silent about the tenure of the judges, as had been the Judiciary Act of 1789, c. 20, ss 3, 4, 1 Stat. 73--75, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 133, 457 , 141, 41. The salary, first set at $10,000, was afterwards lowered to the $7,000 then being paid to circuit judges, Act of February 25, 1910, c. 62, s 1, 36 Stat. 202, 214, but before the first nominations had been received or confirmed, see 45 Cong.Rec. 2959, 4003 (1910); and, although it has since been increased, it has never been diminished. [FN29] After the Bakelite case had 559 been decided, Congress expressly conferred tenure during good behavior upon the court's judges, in the Tariff Act of 1930, s 646, 46 Stat. 590, 762. [FN] Representative Chindblom, in supporting the measure, stated that 'when this court was established it was believed to be a constitutional court (so) that it was not necessary to fix the term.' 71 Cong.Rec. 2043 (1929).

FN29. Under the Legislative Appropriation Act of June 30, 1932, c. 314, 47 Stat. 382--the statute under which the Williams and O'Donoghue cases arose--the judges of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals accepted a reduction in salary from $12,500 to $10,000. That court had not, however, been specified for reduction by Congress; the action of the judges was understandable coming as it did after Bakelite had been decided; and under s 109 of the Act, 47 Stat. 403, the Treasury was authorized to accept reductions in payment voluntarily tendered by judges whose salary was constitutionally exempt from diminution.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN* Now 28 U.S.C.A. ss 213, 371, 372.

The debates in the Senate at the time of the court's creation bear out this observation. See 44 Cong.Rec. 4185--4225 (1909). For under the Customs Administrative Act of 1890, c. 407, s 15, 26 Stat. 131, 138, review of decisions of the Board of General Appraisers had been vested in the Circuit Courts, undoubted Article III courts; it was this jurisdiction that was proposed to be transferred to the new court. [FN30] The debates accordingly concerned themselves with whether there was a need for a specialized court in the federal judicial system to deal with customs matters.

FN30. 36 Stat. 106. Provision was made for the transfer of pending cases and of appeals from final decisions in and of the Circuit Courts and Courts of Appeals. 36 Stat. 106, 107. The very first case heard by the Court of Customs Appeals was an appeal from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York in Hansen v. United States, 1 Ct.Cust.App. 1; it also took jurisdiction of a case transferred from the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 1 Ct.Cust.App. 362.

As was said some 35 years age, 'an important phase of the history of the federal judiciary deals with the movement 1478 for the establishment of tribunals whose business was to be limited to litigation arising from a restricted *560 field of legislative control.' Frankfurter and Landis, The Business of the Supreme Court (1927), 147. In certain areas of federal judicial business there has been a felt need to obtain, first, the special competence in complex, technical and important matters that comes from narrowly focused inquiry; second, the speedy resolution of controversies available on a docket unencumbered by other matters; and, third, the certainty and definition that come from nationwide uniformity of decision. See generally id., at 146--186. Needs such as these provoked formation of the Commerce Court and the Emergency Court of Appeals. They also prompted establishment of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals and its investiture with jurisdiction over customs, tariff, and patent and trademark litigation. 28 U.S.C. ss 1541--1543, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1541 --1543.

The parallelism with the Commerce Court is especially striking. That court was created to exercise the jurisdiction previously held by the Circuit Courts to review orders of the Interstate commerce Commission. Mann-Elkins Act of June 18, 1910, c. 309, 36 Stat. 539. It was needed, so its sponsors believed, to afford uniform, expert, and expeditious judicial review. See President Taft's message to Congress, 45 Cong.Rec. 379 (1910), in the course of which he stated:

'Reasons precisely analogous to those which induced the Congress to create the court of customs appeals by the provisions in the tariff act of August 5, 1909, may be urged in support of the creation of the commerce court.'

When disfavor with the court caused its abolition three years later, Act of October 22, 1913, c. 32, 38 Stat. 208, 219, it was decided in Congress after extensive debate that the judges then serving on it were protected in tenure by Article III, and they were thereafter assigned to sit on *561 other constitutional courts. See, e.g., 48 Cong.Rec. 7994 (1912) (remarks of Senator Sutherland); and see Donegan v. Dyson, 269 U.S. 49, 46 S.Ct. 55, 70 L.Ed. 159.

The Emergency Court of Appeals was similarly created, by the Act of January 30, 1942, c. 26, 56 Stat. 23, to exercise exclusive equity jurisdiction to determine the validity of regulations, price schedules, and orders issued by the wartime Office of Price Administration. [FN31] Its Article III status was recognized inLockerty v. Phillips, 319 U.S. 182, 187--188, 63 S.Ct. 1019, 1022, 87 L.Ed. 1339 .

FN31. Its functions were continued under the Defense Production Act of 1950, c. 932, s 408, 64 Stat. 798, 808, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, s 2108, to determine the validity of price and wage stabilization orders issued under that Act. On April 18, 1962, after denial of certiorari in the last case on its docket, Rosenzweig v. Boutin, 369 U.S. 818, 82 S.Ct. 830, the court terminated its existence. 299 F.2d 1--21.

Of course the judges of those courts were appointed as judges of inferior federal courts generally, or drawn from among those previously appointed as such. See page 538 of 370 U.S., page 1466 of 82 S.Ct. and note 11, supra. But by 1942 at least, when the latter court was created, Congress was well aware of the doubt created by the Bakelite and Williams decisions whether Article III judges could sit on non-Article III tribunals. Its action in authorizing judges of the District Courts and Courts of Appeals to sit on the Emergency Court thus reflects its understanding that that court was being created under Article III.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265039

[23] Such an understanding parallels that of previous Congresses since the adoption of the Constitution. Congress has never been compelled to vest the entire jurisdiction provided for in Article III upon inferior courts of its creation; until 1875 it conferred very little of it indeed. See 370 U.S., pp. 551--552, 82 S.Ct., pp. 1473--1474, supra. The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals therefore fits harmoniously into the federal judicial system authorized by Article III.

*1479 *562 VII.

Article III, s 2 provides in part:
'The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority; * * *--to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party * * *.'

The cases heard by the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals all arise under federal law, as we have seen; they are also cases in which the United States is a party. But in Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 572--578, 53 S.Ct. 751, 757, 759, 77 L.Ed. 1372, far from making of that circumstance a further proof that the Court of Claims exercises the judicial power contemplated by Article III, this Court held that it did not because that article, so it was said, does not make justiciable controversies to which the United States is a party defendant.

The Court's opinion dwelt in part upon the omission of the word 'all' before 'Controversies' in the clause referred to. To derive controlling significance from this semantic circumstance seems hardly to be faithful to John Marshall's admonition that 'it is a constitution we are expounding.' McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 407, 4 L.Ed. 579. But it would be needlessly literal to suppose that the Court rested its holding on this point. Rather it deemed controlling the rule, 'well settled and understood' at the time of the Constitutional Convention, that 'the sovereign power is immune from suit.' 289 U.S., at 573, 53 S.Ct. at 757. Accordingly it becomes necessary to reconsider whether that principle has the effect claimed of rendering suits against the United States nonjusticiable in a court created under Article III.

563 At least one touchstone of justiciability to which this Court has frequently had reference is whether the action sought to be maintained is of a sort 'recognized at the time of the Constitution to be traditionally within the power of courts in the English and American judicial systems.' United Steelworkers v. United States, 361 U.S. 39, 44, 60, 80 S.Ct. 1, 4, 185, 4 L.Ed.2d 12 (FRANKFURTER, J., concurring). There can be little doubt that that test is met here. Suits against the English sovereign by petition of liberate, monstrans de droit, and other forms of action designed to gain redress against unlawful action of the Crown had been developed over several centuries and were wellestablished before the Revolution. See 9 Holdsworth, History of English Law, 7--45 (1926). Similar provisions for judicial remedies against themselves were made by the American States immediately after the Revolution. E.g., 9 Laws of Va. 536, 540 (1778) (Hening 1821); see Higginbotham's Executrix v. Commonwealth, 25 Gratt. 627, 637--638 (Va.1874). This history was known by Congress when it established the Court of Claims, see Cong. Globe, 33d Cong., 2d Sess. 73 (1854) (remarks of Senator Pettit), and undoubtedly was familiar to the Framers of the Constitution, most of them lawyers.

[24] Hamilton's view, quoted in the Williams case, 289 U.S., at 576, 53 S.Ct. at 758, are not to the contrary. To be sure, Hamilton argued that 'the contracts between a nation and individuals are only binding on the conscience of the sovereign, and have no pretension to a compulsive force. They confer no right of action independent of the sovereign will.' The Federalist, No. 81 (Wright ed. 1961), at 511. But that is because there was no surrender of sovereign immunity in the plan of the convention; [FN32] so 564 that, for suits against the United States, it remained '*1480 inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent.' Ibid. (Emphasis in original.) In this sense, and only in this sense, is Article III's extension of judicial competence over controversies to which the United States is a party ineffective to confer jurisdiction over suits to which it is a defendant. For 'behind the words of the constitutional provisions are postulates which limit and control.' Principality of Monaco v. Mississippi, 292 U.S. 313, 322, 54 S.Ct. 745, 748, 78 L.Ed. 1282. But once the consent is given, the postulate is satisfied, and there remains no barrier to justiciability. Cf. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 383--385, 5 L.Ed. 257.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN32. As there was, for example, in suits between States and by the United States against a State. Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 720, 9 L.Ed. 1233; United States v. Texas, 143 U.S. 621, 639--646, 12 S.Ct. 488, 491--493, 36 L.Ed. 285.

So the Court had given itself to understand before Williams was decided. In United States v. Louisiana, 123 U.S. 32, 35, 8 S.Ct. 17, 18, 31 L.Ed. 69, it held maintainable under Article III a suit brought in the Court of Claims by a State against the United States with Congress' consent. And in Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U.S. 373, 384, 22 S.Ct. 650, 654, 46 L.Ed. 954, which reaffirmed that ruling, the Court said:

'This is a controversy to which the United States may be regarded as a party. It is one, therefore to which the judicial power of the United States extends. It is, of course, under that clause, a matter of indifference whether the United States is a party plaintiff or defendant.'

Further in the same opinion, 185 U.S., at 386, 22 S.Ct. at 655, the Court significantly remarked:

'While the United States as a government may not be sued without its consent, yet with its consent it may be sued, and the judicial power of the United States extends to such a controversy. Indeed, the whole jurisdiction of the Court of Claims rests upon this proposition.'

565 To deny that proposition now would be to call into question a large measure of the jurisdiction exercised by the United States District Courts. Under the Federal Tort Claims Act, s 410(a), 60 Stat. 842, 843--844 (1946), as amended, 28 U.S.C. s 1346(b), 28 U.S.C.A. s 1346(b), those courts have been emplowered to determine the tort liability of the United States in suits brought by individual plaintiffs. In so doing, they exercise functions akin to those of the Court of Claims, as is evidenced by the statutory authorization of appeals to that court from their judgments, with the consent of the appellee. s 412(a) (2), 60 Stat. 844--845 (1946), as amended, 28 U.S.C. s 1504, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1504.

In truth the District Courts have long been vested with substantial portions of the identical jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Claims. The Tucker Act, s 2, 24 Stat. 505 (1887), as amended, 28 U.S.C. s 1346(a)(2), 28 U.S.C.A. s 1346(a)(2), gives them concurrent jurisdiction over the suits it authorizes, when the amount in controversy is less than $10,000. Under that Act a District Court sits 'as a court of claims,' United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, 591, 61 S.Ct. 767, 771, 85 L.Ed. 1058, and affords the same rights and privileges to suitors against the United States. Bates Manufacturing Co. v. United States, 303 U.S. 567, 571, 58 S.Ct. 694, 696, 82 L.Ed. 1020. See generally Schwartz and Jacoby, Government Litigation (tentative ed. 1960), 109--111.

There have been and are further statutory indications that Congress regards the two courts interchangeably. In 1921, Mr. Justice Brandeis compiled a list of 17 statutes passed during World War I, permitting suit against the United States for the value of propertyseized for use in the war effort, and authorizing them to be instituted in either the Court of Claims or one of the District Courts. United States v. Pfitsch, 256 U.S. 547, 553 note 1, 41 S.Ct. 569, 571, 65 L.Ed. 1084. Today, 28 U.S.C. s 1500, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1500 gives litigants an election to sue the United States as principal in the Court of Claims or to 566 pursue their claims against its agents in *1481 any other court, including the District Courts. See National Cored Forgings Co. v. United States, 132 F.Supp. 454, 132 Ct.Cl. 11. In addition, by the Act of September 13, 1960, ss 1, 2(a), 74 Stat. 912, Congress added ss 1406(c) and 1506 to Title 28 of the United States Code, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1406(c), 1506, providing for transfer between the Court of Claims and any District Court when a suit within one court's exclusive jurisdiction is brought mistakenly in another.

[25] These evidences of congressional understanding that suits against the United States are justiciable in courts created under Article III may cases as well; for the line that separates lower court judgments that are pending on appeal (or may still be appealed), from lower-court judgments that are final, is determined by statute, see, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a) (30-day time limit for appeal to federal court of appeals), and so cannot possibly be a constitutional line. But a distinction between judgments from which all appeals have been forgone or completed, and judgments that remain on appeal (or subject to being appealed), is implicit in what Article III creates: not a batch of unconnected courts, but a judicial department composed of "inferior Courts" and "one supreme Court." Within that hierarchy, the decision of an inferior court is not (unless the time for appeal has expired) the final word of the department as a whole. It is the obligation of the last court in the hierarchy that rules on the case to give effect to Congress's latest enactment, even when that has the effect of overturning the judgment of an inferior court, since each court, at every level, must "decide according to existing laws." Schooner Peggy, supra, 1 Cranch, at 109. Having achieved finality, however, a judicial decision becomes the last word of the judicial department with regard to a particular case or controversy, and Congress may not declare by retroactive legislation that the law applicable to that very case was something other than what the courts said it was. Finality of a legal judgment is determined by statute, just as entitlement to a government benefit is a statutory creation; but that no more deprives the former of its constitutional significance for separation-of-powers analysis than it deprives the latter of its significance for due process purposes. See, e.g., Cleveland Bd. of Ed. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 105 S.Ct. 1487, 84 L.Ed.2d 494 (1985); Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 96 S.Ct. 2532, 49 L.Ed.2d 451 (1976).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[8] To be sure, § 27A(b) reopens (or directs the reopening of) final judgments in a whole class of cases rather than in a particular suit. We do not see how that makes any difference. 228 The separation-of-powers violation here, if there is any, consists of depriving judicial judgments of the conclusive effect that they had when they were announced, not of acting in a manner--viz., with particular rather than general effect--that is unusual (though, we must note, not impossible) for a legislature. To be sure, a general statute such as this one may reduce the perception that legislative interference with judicial judgments was prompted by individual favoritism; but it is legislative interference with judicial judgments nonetheless. Not favoritism, nor even corruption, but power is the object of the separation-of- powers prohibition. The prohibition is violated when an individual final judgment is legislatively rescinded for even the very best of reasons, such as the legislature's genuine conviction (supported by all the law professors in the land) that the judgment was wrong; and it is violated 40 times over when 40 final judgments are legislatively dissolved.

[9] It is irrelevant as well that the final judgments reopened by § 27A(b) rested on the bar of a statute of limitations. The rules of finality, both statutory and judge made, treat a dismissal on statute-of-limitations grounds the same way they treat a dismissal for failure to state a claim, for failure to prove substantive liability, or for failure to prosecute: as a judgment on the merits. See, e.g., Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 41(b); United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U.S. 85, 87-88, 37 S.Ct. 68, 69-69, 61 L.Ed. 161 (1916). Petitioners suggest, directly or by implication, two reasons why a merits judgment based on this particular ground may be uniquely subject *1458 to congressional nullification. First, there is the fact that the length and indeed even the very existence of a statute of limitations upon a federal cause of action is entirely subject to congressional control. But virtually all of the reasons why a final judgment on the merits is rendered on a federal claim are subject to congressional control. Congress can eliminate, for example, a particular element of a cause of action that plaintiffs have found it difficult to establish; or an evidentiary rule that has often 229 excluded essential testimony; or a rule of offsetting wrong (such as contributory negligence) that has often prevented recovery. To distinguish statutes of limitations on the ground that they are mere creatures of Congress is to distinguish them not at all. The second supposedly distinguishing characteristic of a statute of limitations is that it can be extended, without violating the Due Process Clause, after the cause of the action arose and even after the statute itself has expired. See, e.g., Chase Securities Corp. v. Donaldson, 325 U.S. 304, 65 S.Ct. 1137, 89 L.Ed. 1628 (1945). But that also does not set statutes of limitations apart. To mention only one other broad category of judgment-producing legal rule: Rules of pleading and proof can similarly be altered after the cause of action not be lightly disregarded. Nevertheless it is probably true that Congress devotes a more lively attention to the work performed by the Court of Claims, and that it has been more prone to modify the jurisdiction assigned to that court. It remains to consider whether that circumstance suffices to render nonjudicial the decision of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

First. Throughout its history the Court of Claims has frequently been given jurisdiction by special act to award recovery for breach of what would have been, on the part of an individual, at most a moral obligation. E.g., 45 Stat. 602 (1928), as amended, 25 U.S.C. ss 651--657, 25 U.S.C.A. ss 651-- 657; Indians of California v. United States, 98 Ct.Cl. 583, 599. Congress has waived the benefit of res judicata, Cherokee Nation v. United States, 270 U.S. 476, 486, 46 S.Ct. 428, 432, 70 L.Ed. 694, and of defenses based on the passage of time, United States v. Alcea Band of Tillamooks, 329 U.S. 40, 45--46, 67 S.Ct. 167, 169, 170, 91 L.Ed. 29; United States v. Central Eureka Mining Co., 357 U.S. 155, 78 S.Ct. 1097, 2 L.Ed.2d 1228.

[26] In doing so, as this Court has uniformly held, Congress has enlisted the aid of judicial power whose exercise is amenable to appellate review here. United States v. Alcea Band of Tillamooks, supra; see Colgate v. United States, 280 U.S. 43, 47--48, 50 S.Ct. 22, 23, 74 L.Ed. 157. Indeed the Court has held 567 that Congress may for reasons adequate to itself confer bounties upon persons and, by consenting to suit, convert their moral claim into a legal one enforceable by litigation in an undoubted constitutional court. United States v. Realty Co., 163 U.S. 427, 16 S.Ct. 1120, 41 L.Ed. 215.

[27] The issue was settled beyond peradventure in Pope v. United States, 323 U.S. 1, 65 S.Ct. 16, 89 L.Ed. 3. There the Court held that for Congress to direct the Court of Claims to entertain a claim theretofore barred for any legal reason from recovery--as, for instance, by the statute of limitations, or because the contract had been drafted to exclude such claims--was to invoke the use of judicial power, notwithstanding that the task might involve no more than computation of the sum due. Consent judgments, the Court recalled, are nonetheless judicial judgments. See 323 U.S., at 12, 65 S.Ct. at 22, and cases cited. After this decision it cannot be doubted that when Congress transmutes a moral obligation into a legal one by specially consenting to suit, it authorizes the tribunal that hears the case to perform a judicial function.

Second. Congress has on occasion withdrawn jurisdiction from the Court of Claims to proceed with the disposition of cases pending therein, and has been upheld in so doing by this this Court. E.g., District of Columbia v. Eslin, 183 U.S. 62, 22 S.Ct. 17, 46 L.Ed. 85. But that is not incompatible with the possession of Article III judicial power by the tribunal affected. Congress has consistently with that article withdrawn the jurisdiction of this Court to proceed with a case then sub judice, Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L.Ed. 264; its power can be no less when dealing with an inferior federal court, In re Hall, 167 U.S. 38, 42, 17 S.Ct. 723, 724, 42 L.Ed. 69. For as Hamilton assured those of his contemporaries who were concerned about the reach of *1482 power that might be vested in a federal judiciary, 'it ought to be recollected that the national legislature will have ample authority to make 568 such exceptions, and to prescribe such regulations as will be calculated to obviate or remove (any) * * * inconveniences.' The Federalist, No. 80 (Wright ed. 1961), at 505.

The authority is not, of course, unlimited. In 1870, Congress purported to withdraw jurisdiction from the Court of Claims and from this Court on appeal over cases seeking indemnification for property captured during the Civil War, so far as eligibility therefor might be predicated upon an amnesty awarded by the President, as both courts had previously held that it might. Despite Ex parte McCardle, supra, the Court refused to apply the statute to a case in which the claimant had already been adjudged entitled to recover by the Court of Claims, calling it an unconstitutional attempt to invade the judicial province by prescribing a rule of decision in a pending case. United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 20 L.Ed. 519. Surely no such concern would have been manifested if it had not been thought that the Court of Claims was invested with judicial power. [FN33]

> FN33. Pocono Pines Assembly Hotels Co. v. United States, 73 Ct.Cl. 447, leave to file petition for writ of mandamus or prohibition denied, 285 U.S. 526, 52 S.Ct. 392, 76 L.Ed. 923, in which the Congress 'remanded' a final and unappealed decision against the United States to the Court of Claims for new findings, does not detract from the authority of Klein. Without examining anything else, it is enough to note that the considerations governing a grant or denial of a petition for mandamus are, like those controlling the issuance of a writ of certiorari, so discretionary with the Court as to deprive a denial of precedential effect on this score. Compare Sup.Ct. Rule 30 with Rule 19(1), (2), 28 U.S.C.A., and cf. Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 488, 491--492, 73 S.Ct. 397, 431, 438, 439, 97 L.Ed. 469 (opinion of FRANKFURTER, J.).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

VIII.

[28] A more substantial question relating to the justiciability of money claims against the United States arises from the impotence of a court to enforce its judgments. It was Chief Justice Taney's opinion, in Gordon v. United 569 States, afterwards published at 117 U.S. 697, 702, that the dependence of the Court of Claims upon an appropriation by Congress to carry its awards into effect negatived the possession of judicial power:

'The award of execution is a part, and an essential part of every judgment passed by a court exercising judicial power.'

But Taney's opinion was not the opinion of the Court. It was a memorandum of his views prepared before his death and circulated among, but not adopted by, his brethren. The opinion of the Court, correctly reported for the first time in United States v. Jones, 119 U.S. 477, 478, 7 S.Ct. 283, 284, 30 L.Ed. 440, makes clear that its refusal to entertain the Gordon appeal rested solely on the revisory authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury before the repeal of s 14. See also United States v. Alire, 6 Wall. 573, 576, 18 L.Ed. 947; United States v. O'Grady, 22 Wall. 641, 647, 22 L.Ed. 772; Langford v. United States, 101 U.S. 341, 344--345, 25 L.Ed. 1010--in each of which the limitation of the Gordon decision to the difficulties caused by s 14 clearly appears.

Nevertheless the problem remains and should be considered. Its scope has, However, been reduced by the Act of July 27, 1956, s 1302, 70 Stat. 678, 694, 31 U.S.C. s 724a, 31 U.S.C.A. s 724a, a general appropriation act which eliminates the need for subsequent separate appropriations to pay judgments below $100,000. A judgment creditor of this order simply files in the General Accounting Office a certificate of the judgment signed by the clerk and the chief judge of the Court of Claims, and is paid. 28 U.S.C. s 2517(a), 28 U.S.C.A. s 2517(a). For judgments of this dimension, therefore, there need *1483 be no concern about the issuance of execution.

For claims in excess of $100,000, 28 U.S.C. s 2518, 28 U.S.C.A. s 2518 directs the Secretary of the Treasury to certify them to Congress once review in this Court has been foregone or sought and found unavailing. This, then, is the domain 570 of our problem, for Art. I, s 9, cl. 7, vests exclusive responsibility for appropriations in Congress, [FN34] and the Court early held that no execution may issue directed to the Secretary of the Treasury until such an appropriation has been made. Reeside v. Walker, 11 How. 272, 291, 13 L.Ed. 693.

FN34. 'No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law * * *.'

The problem was recognized in the Congress that created the Court of Claims, where it was pointed out that if ability to enforce judgments were made a criterion of judicial power, no tribunal created under Article III would be able to assume jurisdiction of money claims against the United States. Cong.Globe, 33d Cong., 2d Sess. 113 (1854) (remarks of Senator Stuart). The subsequent vesting of such jurisdiction in the District Courts, 370 U.S., pp. 565--566, 82 S.Ct. pp. 1480--1481, supra, of course bears witness that at least the Congress has not thought such a criterion imperative.

Ever since Congress first accorded finality to judgments of the Court of Claims, it has sought to avoid interfering with their collection. Section 7 of the Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. 765, 766, provided for the payment of final judgments out of general appropriations. In 1877, Congress shifted for a time to appropriating lump sums for judgments certified to it by the Secretary of the Treasury, not in order to question the judgments but to avoid the possibility that a large judgment might exhaust the prior appropriation. Act of March 3, 1877, c. 105, 19 Stat. 344, 347; see 6 Cong.Rec. 585--588 (1877). A study concluded in 1933 found only 15 instances in 70 years when Congress had refused to pay a judgment. Note, 46 Harv.L.Rev. 677, 685--686 n. 63. This historical record, surely more favorable to prevailing parties than that obtaining in private litigation, may well make us doubt whether the capacity to enforce a judgment is always indispensable for the exercise of judicial power.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*571 The Court did not think so in La Abra Silver Mining Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 423, 461--462, 20 S.Ct. 168, 181--182, 44 L.Ed. 223, where the issue was the justiciability under Article III of a declaratory judgment action brought by the United States in the Court of Claims to determine its liability for payment of an award procured by the defendant from an international arbitral commission assertedly through fraud. See also Nashville, C. & St. L.R. Co. v. Wallace, 288 U.S. 249, 263, 53 S.Ct. 345, 348, 77 L.Ed. 730. Nor has it thought so when faced with the exactly analogous problem presented by suits for money between States in the original jurisdiction. That jurisdiction has been upheld, for example, in South Dakota v. North Carolina, 192 U.S. 286, 318--321, 24 S.Ct. 269, 275--277, 48 L.Ed. 448, notwithstanding the Court's recognition of judicial impotence to compel a levy of taxes or otherwise by process to enforce its award. See especially the opinions of Chief Justice Fuller and Chief Justice White at the beginning and inconclusive end of the extended litigation between Virginia and West Virginia, 206 U.S. 290, 319, 27 S.Ct. 732, 741, 51 L.Ed. 1068 (1907) and 246 U.S. 565, 38 S.Ct. 400, 59 L.Ed. 1272 (1918), in which the Court asserted jurisdiction to award damages for breach of contract despite persistent and never-surmounted challenges to its power to enforce a decree. [FN35] If this Court may rely on the good faith of state governments or other public bodies to respond to its judgments, there seems to be no sound reason why the Court of Claims may not rely 1484 on the good faith of the United States. We conclude that the presence of the United States as a party defendant to suits maintained in the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals does not debar those courts from exercising the judicial power provided for in Article III.

FN35. See also the intervening opinions and dispositions: 209 U.S. 514, 28 S.Ct. 614, 52 L.Ed. 914; 220 U.S. 1, 36, 31 S.Ct. 330, 336, 55 L.Ed. 353; 222 U.S. 17, 19--20, 32 S.Ct. 4, 5--6, 56 L.Ed. 71; 231 U.S. 89, 34 S.Ct. 29, 58 L.Ed. 135 ; 234 U.S. 117, 34 S.Ct. 889, 58 L.Ed. 1243; 238 U.S. 202, 35 S.Ct. 795, 59 L.Ed. 1272; 241 U.S. 531, 36 S.Ct. 719, 60 L.Ed. 1147.

*572 IX.

All of the business that comes before the two courts is susceptible of disposition in a judicial manner. What remains to be determined is the extent to which it is in fact disposed of in that manner.

[29][30] A preliminary consideration that need not detain us long is the absence of provision for jury trial of counterclaims by the Government in actions before the Court of Claims. Despite dictum to the contrary in United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, 587, 61 S.Ct. 767, 770, 85 L.Ed. 1058, the legitimacy of that nonjury mode of trial does not depend upon the supposed 'legislative' character of the court. It derives instead, as indeed was also noted in Sherwood, ibid., from the fact that suits against the Government, requiring as they do a legislative waiver of immunity, are not 'suits at common law' within the meaning of the Seventh Amendment. McElrath v. United States, 102 U.S. 426, 439--440, 26 L.Ed. 189. The Congress was not, therefore, required to provide jury trials for plaintiffs suing in the Court of Claims; the reasonableness of its later decision to obviate the need for multiple litigation precludes a finding that its imposition of amenability to nonjury set-offs was an unconstitutional condition. Cf. Minneapolis & St. L.R. Co. v. Bombolis, 241 U.S. 211, 36 S.Ct. 595, 60 L.Ed. 961; see 74 Harv.L.Rev. 414, 415 (1960). [FN36]

FN36. The provision in 28 U.S.C. s 2503, 28 U.S.C.A. s 2503, for Commissioners to take evidence and make preliminary rulings is conformable in all respects with the practice of masters in chancery. For the judicial quality of the proceedings, see the Revised Rules of the Court of Claims, effective December 2, 1957, 140 Ct.Cl. II, 28 U.S.C. App., p. 5237, as amended, id. (Supp. III), p. 863, 28 U.S.C.A.

[31] The principal question raised by the parties under this head of the argument is whether the matters referred by Congress to the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are submitted to them in a form consonant with the limitation of judicial power to 'cases or *573 controversies' imposed by Article III. We may consider first the bulk of jurisdiction exercised by the two courts, reserving for separate treatment in the next section of this opinion two areas which may reasonably be regarded as presenting special difficulty.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

'Whether a proceeding which results in a grant is a judicial one,' said Mr. Justice Brandeis for a unanimous Court, 'does not depend upon the nature of the thing granted, but upon the nature of the proceeding which Congress has provided for securing the grant. The United States may create rights in individuals against itself and provide only an administrative remedy. * * * It may provide a legal remedy, but make resort to the courts available only after all administrative remedies have been exhausted. * * * It may give to the individual the option of either an administrative or a legal remedy. * * * Or it may provide only a (legal) remedy. (See 370 U.S., pp. 549--552, 82 S.Ct. pp. 1472--1474, supra.) Whenever the law provides a remedy enforceable in the courts according to the regular course of legal procedure, and that remedy is pursued, there arises a case within the meaning of the Constitution, whether the subject of the litigation be property or status.' Tutun v. United States, 270 U.S. 568, 576--577, 46 S.Ct. 425, 426--427, 70 L.Ed. 738. (Citations omitted.)

1485 It is unquestioned that the Tucker Act cases assigned to the Court of Claims, 28 U.S.C. s 1491, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1491, advance to judgment 'according to the regular course of legal procedure.' Under this grant of jurisdiction the court hears tax cases, cases calling into question the statutory authority for a regulation, controversies over the existence or extent of a contractual obligation, and the like. See generally Schwartz and Jacoby, Government Litigation (tentative ed. 1960), 131--223. Such cases, which account for as much as 95% of the court's work, [FN37] form the staple *574 judicial fare of the regular federal courts. There can be no doubt that, to the 'expert feel of lawyers,' United Steelworkers v. United States, 361 U.S. 39, 44, 60, 80 S.Ct. 1, 4, 185, 4 L.Ed.2d 12 (Frankfurter, J., concurring), they constitute cases or controversies.

FN37. In 1950, Tucker Act cases constituted 2,350 of the 2,472 proceedings conducted by the court. Wilkinson, The United States Court of Claims, 36 A.B.A.J. 89, 159 (1950). The percentage may well have been augmented since that time by the extension of Tucker Act jurisdiction to Indian claims accruing after August 13, 1946. 28 U.S.C. s 1505, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1505, added by 63 Stat. 102 (1949).

The balance of the court's jurisdiction to render final judgments may likewise be assimilated to the traditional business of courts generally. Thus the court has been empowered to render accountings, [FN38] to decide if debts [FN39] or penalties [FN40] are due the United States, and to determine the liability of the United States for patent or copyright infringement [FN41] and for other specially designated torts. [FN42] In addition, it has been given jurisdiction to review, on issues of law including the existence of substantial evidence, decisions of the Indian Claims Commission. [FN43] Each of these cases, like those under the Tucker Act, is contested, is concrete, and admits of a decree of a sufficiently conclusive character. See Aetan Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240-- 241, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463--464, 81 L.Ed. 617.

FN38. 28 U.S.C. s 1494, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1494 (contractor or their sureties); 28 U.S.C. ss 1496, 2512, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1496, 2512 (disbursing officers).

FN39. R.S. s 5261 (1878), as amended, 45 U.S.C. s 87, 45 U.S.C.A. s 87 (governmentaided railroads).

FN40. 28 U.S.C. s 1499, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1499 (violations of the Eight-Hour Law, 37 Stat. 137 (1912), as amended, 40 U.S.C. s 324, 40 U.S.C.A. s 324).

FN41. 28 U.S.C. (Supp. III) s 1498, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1498.

FN42. 28 U.S.C. ss 1495, 2513, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1495, 2513 (wrongful imprisonment); 28 U.S.C. s 1497, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1497 (trespass to oyster beds).

FN43. 60 Stat. 1049, 1054 (1946), 25 U.S.C. s 70s, 25 U.S.C.A. s 70s.

The same may undoubtedly be said of the customs jurisdiction vested in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals by 28 U.S.C. s 1541, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1541. [FN44] Contests over classification *575 and valuation of imported merchandise have long been maintainable in inferior federal courts. Under R.S. s 3011 (1878), suits after protest against the collector were authorized in the circuit courts. E.g., Greely's

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Administrator v. Burgess, 18 How. 413, 15 L.Ed. 455; Iasigi v. The Collector, 1 Wall. 375, 17 L.Ed. 686. When the Customs Administrative Act of 1890 was passed, c. 407, 26 Stat. 131, repealing that section and creating a Board of General Appraisers to review determinations of the collector, a further right of review was provided in the Circuit Courts. See 1486 De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 1, 175, 21 S.Ct. 743, 744, 45 L.Ed. 1041. This Court took unquestioned appellate jurisdiction from those courts on numerous occasions. E.g., United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 12 S.Ct. 507, 36 L.Ed. 321; Hoeninghaus v. United States, 172 U.S. 622, 19 S.Ct. 305, 43 L.Ed. 576. It has continued to accept review by certiorari from the Court of Customs Appeals since the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts was transferred to it in 1909. E.g., Five Per Cent. Discount Cases, 243 U.S. 97, 37 S.Ct. 346, 61 L.Ed. 617; Barr v. United States, 324 U.S. 83, 65 S.Ct. 522, 89 L.Ed. 765. That the customs litigation authorized by s 1541 conforms to conventional notions of case or controversy seems no longer open to doubt.

FN44. 42 Stat. 15 (1921), as amended, 19 U.S.C. s 169, 19 U.S.C.A. s 169, makes 28 U.S.C. s 1541, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1541 applicable as well to the antidumping statute. See also 46 Stat. 735 (1930), as amended, 19 U.S.C. s 1516(b), (c), 19 U.S.C.A. s 1516(b, c), permitting classification or valuation cases to be initiated by protest from a competing domestic manufacturer, after which the importer's consignee may be made a party to suit in the Customs Court, with appeal to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

Doubt has been expressed, however, about the jurisdiction conferred by 28 U.S.C. s 1542, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1542 and 60 Stat. 435 (1946), as amended, 15 U.S.C. s 1071, 15 U.S.C.A. s 1071, to review application and interference proceedings in the Patent Office relative to patents and trademarks. Parties to those proceedings are given an election to bring a civil action to contest the Patent Office decision in a District Court under 35 U.S.C. ss 145, 146, 35 U.S.C.A. ss 145, 146, or to seek review in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals under 35 U.S.C. s 141, 35 U.S.C.A. s 141. If the latter choice is made, the Court confines its review to the evidence adduced before the Patent *576 Office and to the questions of law preserved by the parties; its decision 'shall be entered of record in the Patent Office and govern the further proceedings in the case.' 35 U.S.C. s 144, 35 U.S.C.A. s 144. The codification 'omitted as superfluous' the last sentence in the existing statute: 'But no opinion or decision of the court in any such case shall preclude any person interested from the right to contest the validity of such patent in any court wherein the same may be called in question.' Act of July 8, 1870, c. 230, s 50, 16 Stat. 198, 205; see Reviser's Note to 35 U.S.C. s 144, 35 U.S.C.A. s 144.

The latter provision was evidently instrumental in prompting a decision of this Court, at a time when review of Patent Office determinations was vested in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, that the ruling called for by the statute was not of a judicial character. Postum Cereal Co. v. California Fig Nut Co., 272 U.S. 693, 699, 47 S.Ct. 284, 286, 71 L.Ed. 478. That is the most that the Postum holding can be taken to stand for, as United States ex rel. Bernardin v. Duell, 172 U.S. 576, 588--589, 19 S.Ct. 286, 290, 43 L.Ed. 559, had upheld the judicial nature of the review in all other respects. [FN45] And the continuing vitality of the decision even to this extent has been seriously weakened if not extinguished by the subsequent holding in Hoover Co. v. Coe, 325 U.S. 79, 88, 65 S.Ct. 955, 959, 89 L.Ed. 1488, sustaining the justiciability of the alternative remedy by civil action even though the Court deemed 'the effect of adjudication in equity the same as that of decision on appeal.' See Kurland and Wolfson, Supreme Court Review of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals: Patent Office and Tariff Commission Cases, 18 G.W.L.Rev. 192, 194--198 (1950).

FN45. Curiously, Duell was not cited in Postum, while the cases that were--Frasch v. Moore, 211 U.S. 1, 29 S.Ct. 6, 53 L.Ed. 65; Atkins & Co. v. Moore, 212 U.S. 285, 29 S.Ct. 390, 53 L.Ed. 515; Baldwin Co. v. Howard Co., 256 U.S. 35, 41 S.Ct. 405, 65 L.Ed. 816--had, as the Court recognized, held only that the statutory scheme of review did not produce a 'final judgment' as required by the statute then governing appeals to the Court.

*577 At the time when Postum was decided, the proceeding in equity against the Patent Office was cumulative rather than alternative with the review by appeal, and it seems likely that it was this feature of the statute which caused the Court to characterize the judgment of the Court of Appeals as 'a mere administrative decision.' 272 U.S., at 698, 1487

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

47 S.Ct., at 285. Thereafter Congress made the remedies alternative, Act of March 2, 1927, c. 273, s 11, 44 Stat. 1335, 1336, and it was this amended jurisdiction that it later transferred to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, renaming the court in the process. Act of March 2, 1929, c. 488, 45 Stat. 1475.

It may still be true that Congress has given to the equity proceeding a greater preclusive effect than that accorded to decisions of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. [FN46] Even so, that circumstance alone is insufficient to make those decisions nonjudicial. Tutun v. United States, 270 U.S. 568, 46 S.Ct. 425, 70 L.Ed. 738, decided by the same Court as Postum and not there questioned, is controlling authority. For the Court there held that a naturalization proceeding in a Federal District Court was a 'case' within the meaning of Article III, even though the Government was empowered by statute [FN47] to bring a later bill in equity for cancellation of the certificate.

FN46. See Stern and Gressman, Supreme Court Practice (1950), 44--46. But see Hobart Mfg. Co. v. Landers, Frary & Clark, 26 F.Supp. 198, 202, aff'd per curiam, 2 Cir., 107 F.2d 1016; Battery Patents Corp. v. Chicago Cycle Supply Co., 7 Cir., 111 F.2d 861, 863; Reviser's Note, 35 U.S.C. s 144, 35 U.S.C.A. s 144.

FN47. Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, c. 3592, s 15, 34 Stat. 596, 601.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, the author of the Tutun opinion, had also prepared the Court's opinion in United States v. Ness, 245 U.S. 319, 38 S.Ct. 118, 62 L.Ed. 321, which upheld the Government's right to seek denaturalization even upon grounds known to and 578 asserted unsuccessfully by it in the naturalization court. [FN48] Proceedings in that court, the opinion explained, were relatively summary, with no right of appeal, whereas the denaturalization suit was plenary enough to permit full presentation of all objections and was accompanied with appeal as of right. 245 U.S., at 326, 38 S.Ct., at 121. These differences made it reasonable for Congress to allow the Government another chance to contest the applicant's eligibility.

FN48. For later developments, see Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U.S. 118, 123--125, 63 S.Ct. 1333, 1335--1337, 87 L.Ed. 1796; Knauer v. United States, 328 U.S. 654, 671--673, 66 S.Ct. 1304, 1313--1314, 90 L.Ed. 1500; Chaunt v. United States, 364 U.S. 350, 81 S.Ct. 147, 5 L.Ed.2d 120.

The decision in Tutun, coming after Ness, draws the patent and trademark jurisdiction now exercised by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals fully within the category of cases or controversies. So much was recognized in Tutun itself, 270 U.S., at 578, 46 S.Ct., at 427, where Mr. Justice Brandeis observed:

'If a certificate is procured when the prescribed qualifications have no existence in fact, it may be cancelled by suit. 'It is in this respect,' as stated in Johannessen v. United States, 32 S.Ct. 613, 615, 225 U.S. 227, 238 (56 L.Ed. 1066) 'closely analogous to a public grant of land (Rev.Stat. s 2289 et seq. * * , or of the exclusive right to make, use and vend a new and useful invention (Rev.Stat., s 4883, et seq. * * .'' (Emphasis added.)

Like naturalization proceedings in a District Court, appeals from Patent Office decisions under 35 U.S.C. s 144, 35 U.S.C.A. s 144 are relatively summary--since the record is limited to the evidence allowed by that office-- and are not themselves subject to direct review by appeal as of right. [FN49] It 579 was as reasonable for Congress, therefore, to bind only the *1488 Patent Office on appeals and to give private parties whether or not participants in such appeals a further opportunity to contest the matter on plenary records developed in litigation elsewhere. This practice but furnishes a further illustration of the specialized jurisdiction of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, akin to that of the Commerce Court, in passing upon the consistency with law of expert administrative judgments without undertaking to conclude private parties in nonadministrative litigation. We conclude that the Postum decision must be taken to be limited to the statutory scheme in existence before the transfer of patent and trademark litigation to that court.

FN49. We intimate no opinion whether 28 U.S.C. s 1256, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1256 was intended by Congress to make patent and trademark cases reviewable by certiorari in this Court. See Kurland and Wolfson, Supreme Court Review of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, 18 G.W.L.Rev. 192, 194--198 (1950).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

X.

We turn finally to the more difficult questions raised by the jurisdiction vested in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals by 28 U.S.C. s 1543, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1543 to review Tariff Commission findings of unfair practices in import trade, and the congressional reference jurisdiction given the Court of Claims by 28 U.S.C. ss 1492 and 2509, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1492, 1509. The judicial quality of the former was called into question though not resolved in Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 460--461, 49 S.Ct. 411, 416--417, 73 L.Ed. 789, [FN50] while that of the latter must be taken to have been adversely decided, so far as susceptibility to Supreme Court review is concerned, by In re Sanborn, 148 U.S. 222, 13 S.Ct. 577, 37 L.Ed. 429. [FN51]

FN50. Section 316(c) of the Tariff Act of 1922, c. 356, 42 Stat. 858, 943, involved in Bakelite, was reenacted in virtually identical terms by s 337(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, 46 Stat. 590, 703, as amended, 19 U.S.C. s 1337(c), 19 U.S.C.A. s 1337(c).

FN51. Sanborn involved the departmental reference jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, since repealed by 67 Stat. 226 (1953); but the functions performed by the court in that case were not in substance different from those it still performs on request by Congress.

*580 At the outset we are not with a suggestion by the Solicitor General that even if the decisions called for by these heads of jurisdiction are nonjudicial, their compatibility with the status of an Article III court has been settled by O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 545--548, 53 S.Ct. 740, 748--749, 77 L.Ed. 1356. It is true that O'Donoghue upheld the authority of Congress to invest the federal courts for the District of Columbia with certain administrative responsibilities--such as that of revising the rates of public utilities [FN52]--but only such as were related to the government of the District. See Pitts v. Peak, 60 App.D.C. 195, 197, 50 F.2d 485, 487, cited and relied upon in O'Donoghue, 289 U.S., at 547--548, 53 S.Ct., at 749. [FN53] To extend that holding 1489 to the wholly nationwide jurisdiction of courts whose seat is in the District of Columbia would be to ignore the special importance attached in the O'Donoghue opinion to the need there for an independent national judiciary.

FN52. See Keller v. Potomac Electric Power Co., 261 U.S. 428, 43 S.Ct. 445, 67 L.Ed. 731.

FN53. Federal Radio Comm'n v. General Electric Co., 281 U.S. 464, 50 S.Ct. 389, 74 L.Ed. 969, which sustained the authority of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to render an 'administrative' decision respecting the issuance of a radio broadcasting license to a station in Schenectady, New York, was decided at a time when the courts of the District were regarded wholly as legislative courts. Id., at 468, 50 S.Ct., at 390.
It is significant that all of the jurisdiction at issue in the Keller, Postum, and General Electric cases has long since been transformed into judicial business. The change with respect to review of Patent Office decisions took place, as we have seen, 370 U.S., p. 577, 82 S.Ct., p. 1487, supra, before the transfer of that jurisdiction to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Review of the Public Utilities Commission was restricted to questions of law upon the evidence before the Commission, in the Act of August 27, 1935, s 2, 49 Stat. 882, D.C.Code, 1961, s 43--705. See Public Utilities Comm'n v. Pollak, 343 U.S. 451, 458, 72 S.Ct. 813, 818, 96 L.Ed. 1068. And the Act of July 1, 1930, c. 788, 46 Stat. 844, likewise made review of the Radio Commission judicial, as was recognized in Federal Radio Comm'n v. Nelson Bros., etc., Co., 289 U.S. 266, 274--278, 53 S.Ct 627, 632--633, 77 L.Ed. 1166.

*581 [32][33] The restraints of federalism are, of course, removed from the powers exercisable by Congress within the District. For, as the Court early stated, in Kendall v. United States ex rel. Stokes, 12 Pet. 524, 619, 9 L.Ed. 1181:

'There is in this district, no division of powers between the general and state governments. Congress has the entire control over the district for every purpose of government; and it is reasonable to suppose, that in organizing a judicial department here, all judicial power necessary for the purposes of government would be vested in the courts of justice.'

Thus those limitations implicit in the rubric 'case or controversy' that spring from the Framers' anxiety not to intrude unduly upon the general jurisdiction of state courts, see Madison's Notes of the Debates, in II Farrand, Records of the Federal Convention (1911), 45--46, need have no application in the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265048

District. The national courts here may, consistently with those limitations, perform any of the local functions elsewhere performed by state courts. [FN54]

FN54. The D.C.Code, 1961, Tit. 11, c. 5, establishes a special term of the United States District Court as a probate court, whereas the other Federal District Courts have been debarred from exercising such a jurisdiction as one traditionally within the domain of the States. Byers v. McAuley, 149 U.S. 608, 619, 13 S.Ct. 906, 910, 37 L.Ed. 867. Similarly, the divorce proceedings maintainable under the general jurisdictional grant, D.C.Code, s 11--306; see Bottomley v. Bottomley, 104 U.S.App.D.C. 311, 262 F.2d 23, are beyond the ken of the federal courts in the States. Ohio ex rel. Popovici v. Agler, 280 U.S. 379, 383, 50 S.Ct. 154, 155, 74 L.Ed. 489.
The appointing authority given judges of the District Court to select members of the Board of Education and of the Commission on Mental Health, D.C.Code, ss 31--101, 21--308, is probably traceable to Art. II, s 2 of the Constitution. See note 10, supra; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 397--398, 25 L.Ed. 717.

[34] But those are not the only limitations embodied in Article III's restriction of judicial power to cases or controversies. 582 The restriction expresses as well the Framers' desire to safeguard the independence of the judicial from the other branches by confining its activities to 'cases of a Judiciary nature,' see II Farrand, op. cit., supra, at 430, and in this respect it remains fully applicable at least to courts invested with jurisdiction solely over matters of national import. Our question is whether the independence of either the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals has been so compromised by its investiture with the particular heads of jurisdiction described above as to destroy its eligibility for recognition as an Article III court.

The jurisdictional statutes in issue, s 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and 28 U.S.C. ss 1492, 2509, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 1492, 2509, appear to subject the decisions called for from those courts to an extrajudicial revisory authority incompatible with the limitations upon judicial power this Court has drawn from Article III. See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc., v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 113--114, 68 S.Ct. 431, 437--438, 92 L.Ed. 568; Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409, 1 L.Ed. 436. Whether they actually do so is not, however, entirely free from difficulty, and cannot in our view appropriately be decided in a vacuum, apart from the setting of particular cases in which we may gauge the operation of the statutes. For disposition of the present cases, we think it is sufficient simply to note the doubt attending the validity of the jurisdiction, *1490 and to proceed on the assumption that it cannot be entertained by an Article III court.

[35] It does not follow, however, from the invalidity, actual or potential, of these heads of jurisdiction, that either the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals must relinquish entitlement to recognition as an Article III court. They are not tribunals, as are for example the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Trade Commission, a substantial and integral part of whose business is nonjudicial.

583 The overwhelming majority of the Court of Claims' business is composed of cases and controversies. See 370 U.S., pp. 573--574, 82 S.Ct., pp. 1484, 1485, supra. In the past year, it heard only 10 reference cases, Annual Report of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (1961), 318; and its recent annual average has not exceeded that figure, Pavenstedt, The United States Court of Claims as a Forum for Tax Cases, 15 Tax L.Rev. 1, 6 n. 23 (1959). The tariff jurisdiction of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals is of even less significant dimensions. In the past fiscal year, that court disposed of 41 customs cases and 112 patent or trademark cases, but heard no appeals from the Tariff Commission. Annual Report of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (1961), 318. Indeed we are advised that in all the years since 1922, when the predecessor to s 337 of the Tariff Act was first enacted, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals has entertained only six such cases. [FN55] Certainly the status of a District Court or Court of Appeals would not be altered by a mere congressional attempt to invest it with such insignificant nonjudicial business; it would be equally perverse to make the status of these courts turn upon so minuscule a portion of their purported functions.

FN55. Brief on behalf of the chief judge and the associate judges of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals as amici curiae, p. 10.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The Congress that enacted the assignment statute with its accompanying declarations was apprised of the possibility that a re-examination of the Bakelite and Williams decisions might lead to disallowance of some of these courts' jurisdiction. See 99 Cong.Rec. 8944 (1953) (remarks of Senator Gore); 104 Cong.Rec. 17549 (1958) (remarks of Senator Talmadge.) Nevertheless it chose to pass the statute. We think with it that, if necessary, the particular offensive jurisdiction, and not the courts, would fall.

584 CONCLUSIONS.

Since the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are courts created under Article III, their judges--including retired judges, Booth v. United States, 291 U.S. 339, 350--351, 54 S.Ct. 379, 380--381, 78 L.Ed. 836--are and have been constitutionally protected in tenure and compensation. Our conclusion, it should be noted, is not an ex post facto resurrection of a banished independence. The judges of these two courts have never accepted the dependent status thrust at them by the Bakelite and Williams decisions. See, e.g., Judge Madden writing for the Court of Claims in Pope v. United States, 53 F.Supp. 570, 100 Ct.Cl. 375, rev'd, 323 U.S. 1, 65 S.Ct. 16, 89 L.Ed. 3. The factors set out at length in this opinion, which were not considered in the Bakelite and Williams opinions, make plain that the differing conclusion we now reach does no more than confer legal recognition upon an independence long exercised in fact.

[36] That recognition suffices to dispose of the present cases. For it can hardly be contended that the specialized functions of these judges deprive them of capacity, as a matter of due process of law, to sit in judgment upon the staple business of the District Courts and Courts of Appeals. Whether they should *1491 be given such assignments may be and has been a proper subject for congressional debate, e.g., 62 Cong.Rec. 190--191, 207--209 (1921), but once legislatively resolved it can scarcely rise to the dignity of a constitutional question. To be sure, a judge of specialized experience may at first need to devote extra time and energy to familiarize himself with criminal, labor relations, or other cases beyond his accustomed ken. But to elevate this temporary disadvantage into a constitutional disability would be tantamount to suggesting that the President may never appoint to the bench a lawyer whose life's practice may have been devoted to patent, tax, antitrust, or any other specialized 585 field of law in which many eminently well- qualified lawyers are wont to engage. The proposition will not, of course, survive its statement.

The judgments of the Courts of Appeals are affirmed.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER took no part in the decision of this case.

Mr. Justice WHITE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Mr. Justice CLARK, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins, concurring in the result.

I cannot agree to the unnecessary overruling of Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 49 S.Ct. 411, 73 L.Ed. 789 (1929), and Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 53 S.Ct. 751, 77 L.Ed. 1372 (1933). Both were unanimous opinions by most distinguished Courts, [FN1] headed in the Bakelite case by Chief Justice Taft and in Williams by Chief Justice Hughes.

> FN1. Bakelite: Taft, Holmes, Van Devanter, McReynolds, Brandeis, Sutherland, Butler, Sanford and Stone, Williams: Hughes, Van Devanter, McReynolds, Brandeis, Sutherland, Butler, Stone, Roberts and Cardozo.

Long before Glidden v. Zdanok was filed, the Congress had declared the Court of Claims 'to be a court established under article III of the Constitution of the United States.' Act of July 28, 1953, s 1, 67 Stat. 226, 28 U.S.C.A. s 171. Not that this ipse dixit made the Court of Claims an Article III court, for it must be examined in light of the congressional power exercised and the jurisdiction enjoyed, together with the characteristics of its judges. But the 1953 Act did definitely establish the intent of the Congress, which prior to that time was not clear in light of the Williams holding 20 years earlier that it was not an Article III court.

586 It is my belief that prior to 1953 the Court of Claims had all of the characteristics of an Article III court--jurisdiction over justiciable matters, issuance of final judgments, judges appointed by the President with consent of the Senate--save as to the congressional reference matters. It was the fact that a substantial portion of its jurisdiction consisted of congressional references that compelled the decision in Williams that it was not an Article III court and therefore the salaries of its judges could be reduced. [FN2] Since that time the Article III 1492 jurisdiction of the Court of Claims has been enlarged by including original jurisdiction under several Acts, e.g., suits against the United States for damages for unjust conviction, Act of May 24, 1938, ss 1--4, 52 Stat. 438, 28 U.S.C. s 1495, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1495, and appellate jurisdiction over tort suits against the United States tried in the District Courts, Act of Aug. 2, 1946, s 412(a)(2), 60 Stat. 844, 28 U.S.C. s 1504, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1504, and over suits before the Indian Claims Commission, Act of May 24, 1949, s 89(a), 63 Stat. 102, 28 U.S.C. s 1505, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1505. In addition, the former jurisdiction over questions referred by the Executive branch was withdrawn in 1953. Act of July 28, 1953, s 8, 67 Stat. 226. The result is that practically all of the court's jurisdiction *587 is now comprised of Article III cases. And I read the 1953 Act as unequivocally expressing Congress' intent that this court--the jurisdiction of which was then almost entirely over Article III cases--should be an Article III court, thereby irrevocably establishing life tenure and irreducible salaries for its judges.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> FN2. "From the outset Congress has required it (the Court of Claims) to give merely advisory decisions on many matters. Under the act creating it all of its decisions were to be of that nature. Afterwards some were to have effect as binding judgments, but others were still to be merely advisory. This is true at the present time." Williams v. United States, supra, 289 U.S. at 569, 53 S.Ct. at 756 (quoting from Ex parte Bakelite).
>
> 'Further reflection tends only to confirm the views expressed in the Bakelite opinion * * * and we feel bound to reaffirm and apply them. And, giving these views due effect here, we see no escape from the conclusion that, if the Court of Customs Appeals is a legislative court, so also is the Court of Claims.' Williams, at 571, 53 S.Ct. at 757. The Bakelite decision was posited squarely on the legislative reference function. See Ex parte Bakelite, supra, 279 U.S. 454--458, 49 S.Ct. 414--416.

It is true that Congress still makes legislative references to the court, averaging some 10 a year. The acceptance of jurisdiction of either executive or legislative references calling for advisory opinions has never been honored by Article III courts. Indeed, this Court since 1793 has consistently refused so to act. Correspondence of the Justices, 3 Johnston, Correspondence and Public Papers of John Jay (1891), 486--489. Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346, 31 S.Ct. 250, 55 L.Ed. 246 (1911). I do not construe the legislative history of the 1953 Act to be so clear as to require the Court of Claims to carry on this function, which appears to be minuscule. On the contrary, the congressional mandate clearly and definitely declared the court 'to be a court established under article III.' I would carry out that mandate. In my view the Court of Claims, if and when such a reference occurs, should with due deference advise the Congress, as this Court advised the President 169 years ago, that it cannot render advisory opinions.

Likewise I find that the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals has been an Article III court since 1958. It was created by the Congress in 1909 to exercise exclusive appellate jurisdiction over customs cases. Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of Aug. 5, 1909, 36 Stat. 11, 105--108. At that time these cases were reviewed by Circuit Courts of Appeals--clearly of Article III status-- 36 Stat. 106, and they have since been considered on certiorari by this Court without suggestion that they were not 'cases' in the Article III sense. E.g., The Five Per Cent. Discount *588 Cases, 243 U.S. 97, 37 S.Ct. 346, 61 L.Ed. 617 (1917). [FN3] The Congress enlarged the jurisdiction of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals in 1922 to include appeals on questions of law from Tariff Commission findings in proceedings relating to unfair practices in the import trade. Tariff Act of 1922, 42 Stat. 943, 944. In 1929 this Court in Bakelite, supra, which involved a tariff matter, found these references to be of an advisory nature and on this basis declared the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals to be a legislative rather than an Article III court. The Bakelite decision indicates that this Court was of the impression that the tariff jurisdiction of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals would be significant. However, since that time that court has handled but four such references--and only one in the 1493 last 27 years. At about the same time that the Bakelite opinion came down, Congress transferred the appellate jurisdiction in patent and trademark cases from the Court of Appeals of the District of arises, Landgraf v. USI Film Products, supra, 511 U.S., at 275, and n. 29, 114 S.Ct. at 1502, and n. 29, and even, if the statute clearly so requires, after they have been applied in a case but before final judgment has been entered. Petitioners' principle would therefore lead to the conclusion that final judgments rendered on the basis of a stringent (or, alternatively, liberal) rule of pleading or proof may be set aside for retrial under a new liberal (or, alternatively, stringent) rule of pleading or proof. This alone provides massive scope for undoing final judgments and would substantially subvert the doctrine of separation of powers.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The central theme of the dissent is a variant on these arguments. The dissent maintains that Lampf "announced" a new statute of limitations, post, at 1466, in an act of "judicial ... lawmaking," post, at 1467, that "changed the law," post, at 1468. That statement, even if relevant, would be wrong. The point decided in Lampf had never before been addressed by this Court, and was therefore an open question, no matter what the lower courts had held at the time. But the more important point is that Lampf as such is irrelevant to this case. The dissent itself perceives that "[w]e would have the same issue to decide had Congress enacted the Lampf rule," and that the Lampf rule's genesis in judicial lawmaking rather than, shall we say, legislative lawmaking, "should not 230 affect the separation-of-powers analysis." Post, at 1467. Just so. The issue here is not the validity or even the source of the legal rule that produced the Article III judgments, but rather the immunity from legislative abrogation of those judgments themselves. The separation-of-powers question before us has nothing to do with Lampf, and the dissent's attack on Lampf has nothing to do with the question before us.

C

Apart from the statute we review today, we know of no instance in which Congress has attempted to set aside the final judgment of an Article III court by retroactive legislation. That prolonged reticence would be amazing if such interference were not understood to be constitutionally proscribed. The closest analogue that the Government has been able to put forward is the statute at issue in United States v. Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. 371, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 65 L.Ed.2d 844 (1980). That law required the Court of Claims " '[n]otwithstanding any other provision of law ... [to] review on the merits, without regard to the defense of res judicata or collateral estoppel,' " a Sioux claim for just compensation from the United States--even though the Court of Claims had previously heard and rejected that very claim. We considered and rejected separation-of-powers objections to the statute based upon Hayburn's Case and United States v. Klein. See 448 U.S., at 391-392, 100 S.Ct., at 2728-2729. The basis for our rejection was a line of precedent (starting with Cherokee Nation v. United States, 270 U.S. 476, 46 S.Ct. 428, 70 L.Ed. 694 (1926)) that stood, we said, for the proposition that "Congress has the power to waive the res judicata effect of a prior judgment *1459 entered in the Government's favor on a claim against the United States." Sioux Nation, 448 U.S., at 397, 100 S.Ct., at 2731. And our holding was as narrow as the precedent on which we had relied: "In sum, ... Congress' mere waiver of the res judicata effect of a prior judicial decision rejecting the validity of a legal claim against the United States does 231 not violate the doctrine of separation of powers." Id., at 407, 100 S.Ct., at 2737. [FN5]

> FN5. The dissent quotes a passage from the opinion saying that Congress " 'only was providing a forum so that a new judicial review of the Black Hills claim could take place.' " Post, at 1471 (quoting 448 U.S., at 407, 100 S.Ct., at 2736). That is quite consistent with the res judicata holding. Any party who waives the defense of res judicata provides a forum for a new judicial review.

The SolicitorGeneral suggests that even if Sioux Nation is read in accord with its holding, it nonetheless establishes that Congress may require Article III courts to reopen their final judgments, since "if res judicata were compelled by Article III to safeguard the structural independence of the courts, the doctrine would not be subject to waiver by any party litigant." Brief for United States 27 (citing Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 850-851, 106 S.Ct. 3245, 3256-3257, 92 L.Ed.2d 675 (1986)). But the proposition that legal defenses based upon doctrines central to the courts' structural independence can never be waived simply does not accord with our cases. Certainly one such doctrine consists of the "judicial Power" to disregard an unconstitutional statute, see Marbury, 1 Cranch, at 177; yet none would suggest that a litigant may never waive the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Columbia to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Act of March 2, 1929, ss 1, 2, 45 Stat. 1475. Thus, contrary to the apparent assumption in Bakelite, the business of that court now consists exclusively of Article III cases--with tariff references practically nonexistent (one in the last 27 years). In view of this evolution of its jurisdiction, I believe the court became an Article III court upon the clear manifestation of congressional intent that it be such. Act of Aug. 25, 1958, s 1, 72 Stat. 848, 28 U.S.C.A. s 211.

FN3. That its original jurisdiction was in 'cases' in the Article III, s 2, sense cannot be questioned. See In re Frischer & Co., 16 Ct.Cust.App. 191, 198 (1928); Osborn v. Bank of U.S., 9 Wheat. 738, 819, 6 L.Ed. 204 (1824); Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 487, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 1137, 38 L.Ed. 1047 (1894); Tutun v. United States, 270 U.S. 568, 576--577, 46 S.Ct. 425, 426--427, 70 L.Ed. 738 (1926).

As I have indicated, supra, the handling of the tariff references--numbering only 6 in 40 years--is not an Article III court function. The Congress has declared 589 the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals to be an Article III court. It should, therefore, if and when such a case arose, with due deference refuse to exercise such jurisdiction. [FN4]

FN4. The validity of Judge Jackson's participation, as the Government points out, might also be sustained under the Act of September 14, 1922, c. 306, s 5, 42 Stat. 837, 839, which provided for the assignment of judges of the Court of Customs Appeals to the courts of the District of Columbia. This Act was on the books when Judge Jackson took his seat on the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals as well as when the Lurk case was tried.

I see nothing in the argument that the 1953 and 1958 Acts so changed the character of these courts as to require new presidential appointments. Congress was merely renouncing its power to terminate the functions or reduce the tenure or salary of the judges of the courts. Much more drastic changes have been made without reappointment. [FN5] And there is no significance to the fact that Judge Jackson, who presided over the Lurk trial, was not in active status in 1958 when Congress declared his court to be an Article III court. He remained in office as a judge of that court even though retired, cf. Booth v. United States, 291 U.S. 339, 54 S.Ct. 379, 78 L.Ed. 836 (1934), and his judgeship was controlled by any act concerning the jurisdiction of that court or the status of its judges.

FN5. Nor does my holding carry any implication that judgments entered prior to the date of these Acts in which judges of these courts participated might be collaterally attacked. Ex parte Ward, 173 U.S. 452, 19 S.Ct. 459, 43 L.Ed. 765 (1899).

I would affirm.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS with whom Mr. Justice BLACK concurs, dissenting.

The decision in these cases has nothing to do with the character, ability, or qualification of the individuals who sat on assignment on the Court of Appeals in No. 242 and 590 on the District Court [FN1] in No. 481. The problem is an impersonal one, concerning the differences between an Article I court and an Article III court. *1494 My Brother HARLAN calls it a problem of a 'highly theoretical nature.' Far from being 'theoretical' it is intensely practical, for it deals with powers of judges over the life and liberty of defendants in criminal cases and over vast property interests in complicated trials customarily involving the right to trial by jury.

FN1. The District Court of the District of Columbia, like the 'inferior courts' established by Congress under Art. III, s 1, of the Constitution, is an Article III court (O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740, 77 L.Ed. 1356), even though it possesses powers that Article III courts could not exercise. Congress, acting under its plenary power granted by Art. I, s 8, to legislate for the District of Columbia, has from time to time vested in the courts of the District administrative and even legislative powers. See, e.g., Keller v. Potomac Electric Co., 261 U.S. 428, 440--443, 43 S.Ct. 445, 447--448, 67 L.Ed. 731 (review of rate making); Postum Cereal Co. v. California Fig Nut Co., 272 U.S. 693, 698--701, 47 S.Ct. 284, 285--286, 71 L.Ed. 478 (patent and trademark appeals); Federal Radio Comm. v. General Electric Co., 281 U.S. 464, 467--468, 50 S.Ct. 389, 390, 74 L.Ed. 969 (review of radio station licensing; cf. Federal Radio Comm. v. Nelson Bros. Bond & Mortgage Co., 289 U.S. 266, 274--278, 53 S.Ct. 627, 631--633, 77 L.Ed. 1166). Congress has also authorized District Court judges to appoint members of the Board of Education. D.C.Code, s 31--101.
In O'Donoghue v. United States, supra, 289 U.S.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

at 545, 53 S.Ct. at 748, the Court said:
'The fact that Congress, under another and plenary grant of power, has conferred upon these courts jurisdiction over nonfederal causes of action, or over quasi judicial or administrative matters, does not affect the question. In dealing with the District, Congress possesses the powers which belong to it in respect of territory within a state, and also the powers of a state.'
The eighteenth-century courts in this country performed many administrative functions. See Pound, Organization of Courts (1940), pp. 88--89. The propriety of the union of legislative and judicial powers in a state court was assumed in Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U.S. 210, 29 S.Ct. 67, 53 L.Ed. 150.

Prior to today's decision the distinction between the two courts had been clear and unmistakable. By Art. I, s 8, Congress is given a wide range of powers, including 591 the power 'to pay the Debts' of the United States and the power to 'lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises.' By Art. I, s 8, Congress is also given the power 'To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers.' Pursuant to the latter--the Necessary and Proper Clause--the Court of Claims was created 'to pay the Debts'; [FN2] and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals was created in furtherance of the collection of duties. My Brother HARLAN shows that the Court of Customs Appeals traces back to the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of August 5, 1909, which should be proof enough that it is an administrative court, performing essentially an executive task. [FN3]

FN2. 'Legislative courts also may be created as special tribunals to examine and determine various matters, arising between the government and others, which from their nature do not require judicial determination and yet are susceptible of it. The mode of determining matters of this class is completely within congressional control. Congress may reserve to itself the power to decide, may delegate that power to executive officers, or may commit it to judicial tribunals.
'Conspicuous among such matters are claims against the United States. These may arise in many ways and may be for money, lands, or other things. They all admit of legislative or executive determination, and yet from their nature are susceptible of determination by courts; but no court can have cognizance of them except as Congress makes specific provision therefor. Nor do claimants have any right to sue on them unless Congress consents; and Congress may attach to its consent such conditions as it deems proper, even to requiring that the suits be brought in a legislative court specially created to consider them.
The Court of Claims is such a court. It was created, and has been maintained, as a special tribunal to examine and determine claims for money against the United States. This is a function which belongs primarily to Congress as an incident of its power to pay the debts of the United States. But the function is one which Congress has a discretion either to exercise directly or to delegate to other agencies.' Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 451--452, 49 S.Ct. 411, 413, 73 L.Ed. 789.

FN3. 'The Court of Customs Appeals was created by Congress in virtue of its power to lay and collect duties on imports and to adopt any appropriate means of carrying that power into execution. The full province of the court under the act creating it is that of determining matters arising between the government and others in the executive administration and application of the customs laws. These matters are brought before it by appeals from decisions of the Customs Court, formerly called the Board of General Appraisers. The appeals include nothing which inherently or necessarily requires judicial determination, but only matters the determination of which may be, and at times has been, committed exclusively to executive officers. True, the provisions of the customs laws requiring duties to be paid and turned into the treasury promptly, without awaiting disposal of protests against rulings of appraisers and collectors, operate in many instances to convert the protests into applications to refund part or all of the money paid; but this does not make the matters involved in the protests any the less susceptible of determination by executive officers. In fact, their final determination has been at times confided to the Secretary of the Treasury, with no recourse to judicial proceedings.' Ex parte Bakelite Corp., supra, note 2, at 458, 49 S.Ct. at 416.

*1495 *592 In Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 53 S.Ct. 751, 77 L.Ed. 1372, the Court in a unanimous decision written by Mr. Justice Sutherland held that the Court of Claims, though exercising judicial power, was an Article I court. And in Ex parte Bakelite Corp., 279 U.S. 438, 49 S.Ct. 411, 73 L.Ed. 789, the Court in a unanimous opinion written by Mr. Justice Van Devanter held the Court of Customs Appeals to be an Article I court. Taft was Chief Justice when Ex parte Bakelite was decided. Hughes was Chief Justice when Williams v. United States was decided. I mention the two regimes that filed the unanimous opinions in those cases to indicate the vintage of the authority which decided them. Their decisions, of course, do not bind us, for they dealt with matters of constitutional interpretation which are always open. Yet no new history has been unearthed to show that the Taft and the Hughes Courts were wrong on the technical, but vitally important, question now presented.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Mr. Justice Van Devanter in Ex parte Bakelite marked the line between the Court of Claims and the Court of *593 Customs and Patent Appeals on the one hand and the District Courts and Courts of Appeals on the other:

'Those established under the specific power given in section 2 of article 3 are called constitutional courts. They share in the exercise of the judicial power defined in that section, can be invested with no other jurisdiction, and have judges who hold office during good behavior, with no power in Congress to provide otherwise. On the other hand, those created by Congress in the exertion of other powers are called legislative courts. Their functions always are directed to the execution of one or more of such powers and are prescribed by Congress independently of section 2 of article 3; and their judges hold for such term as Congress prescribes, whether it be a fixed period of years or during good behavior.' Id., at 449, 49 S.Ct. at 412.

My Brother HARLAN emphasizes that both Judge Madden of the Court of Claims and Judge Jackson of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals 'enjoy statutory assurance of tenure and compensation'; and so they do. But that statement reveals one basic difference between an Article III judge and an Article I judge. The latter's tenure is statutory and statutory only; Article I contains no guarantee that the judges of Article I courts have life appointments. Nor does it provide that their salaries may not be reduced during their term of office. On the other hand, the tenure of an Article III judge is during 'good behaviour'; moreover, Article III provides that its judges shall have a compensation that 'shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.' See O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277, 59 S.Ct. 838, 83 L.Ed. 1289. To repeat, there is not a word in Article I giving its courts such protection in tenure or in salary. A constitutional amendment would be necessary to supply Article I judges with the guarantees *594 of tenure and salary that Article III gives its judges. The majority attempts to evade this problem by looking to so-called 'Congressional intent' to find the creation of an Article III court. Congress, however, has always understood 1496 that it was only establishing Article I courts when it created the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. The tenure it affixed to the judges of those tribunals was of necessity statutory only, as no mandate or requirement of Article I was involved.

The importance of these provisions to the independence of the judiciary needs no argument. Hamilton stated the entire case in The Federalist No. 79 (Lodge ed. 1908), pp. 491--493:

'Next to permanency in office, nothing can contribute more to the independence of the judges than a fixed provision for their support. The remark made in relation to the President is equally applicable here. In the general course of human nature, a power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will. And we can never hope to see realized in practice, the complete separation of the judicial from the legislative power, in any system which leaves the former dependent for pecuniary resources on the occasional grants of the latter. The enlightened friends to good government in every State, have seen cause to lament the want of precise and explicit precautions in the State constitutions on this head. Some of these indeed have declared that permanent salaries should be established for the judges; but the experiment has in some instances shown that such expressions are not sufficiently definite to preclude legislative evasions. Something still more positive and unequivocal has been evinced to be requisite. The plan of the convention accordingly has provided that the judges of *595 the United States 'shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.'

'This, all circumstances considered, is the most eligible provision that could have been devised. It will readily be understood that the fluctuations in the value of money and in the state of society rendered a fixed rate of compensation in the Constitution inadmissible. What might be extravagant to- day, might in half a century become penurious and inadequate. It was therefore necessary to leave it to the discretion of the legislature to vary its provisions in conformity to the variations in circumstances, yet under such restrictions as to put it out of the power of that body to change the condition of the individual for the worse. A man may then be sure of the ground upon which he stands, and can never be deterred from his duty by the apprehension of being placed in a less eligible situation. The clause which has been quoted combines both advantages. The salaries of judicial officers may from time to time be altered, as occasion shall require, yet so as never to lessen the allowance with which any particular judge comes into office, in respect to him. * * *

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

'This provision for the support of the judges bears every mark of prudence and efficacy; and it may be safely affirmed that, together with the permanent tenure of their offices, it affords a better prospect of their independence than is discoverable in the constitutions of any of the States in regard to their own judges.

'The precautions for their responsibility are comprised in the article respecting impeachments. They are liable to be impeached for malconduct by the House of Representatives, and tried by the Senate; and, if convicted, may be dismissed from office, and 596 disqualified for holding any other. This is the only provision on the point which is consistent with the necessary independence of the judicial character, and is the only one which we find in our own *1497 Constitution in respect to our own judges.'

We should say here what was said in United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11, 17, 76 S.Ct. 1, 5, 100 L.Ed. 8:

'* * * the Constitution does not provide life tenure for those performing judicial functions in military trials. They are appointed by military commanders and may be removed at will. Nor does the Constitution protect their salaries as it does judicial salaries. Strides have been made toward making courts-martial less subject to the will of the executive department which appoints, supervises and ultimately controls them. But from the very nature of things, courts have more independence in passing on the life and liberty of people than do military tribunals.'

Tenure that is guaranteed by the Constitution is a badge of a judge of an Article III court. The argument that mere statutory tenure is sufficient for judges of Article III courts was authoritatively answered in Ex parte Bakelite Corp., supra, 279 U.S. at 459--460, 49 S.Ct. at 416:

'* * * the argument is fallacious. It mistakenly assumes that whether a court is of one class or the other depends on the intention of Congress, whereas the true test lies in the power under which the court was created and in the jurisdiction conferred. Nor has there been any settled practice on the part of Congress which gives special significance to the absence or presence of a provision respecting the tenure of judges. This may be illustrated by two citations. The same Congress that created the Court of Customs Appeals made provision for five additional circuit judges, and declared that they should 597 hold their offices during good behavior; and yet the status of the judges was the same as it would have been had that declaration been omitted. In creating courts for some of the territories, Congress failed to include a provision fixing the tenure of the judges; but the courts became legislative courts just as if such a provision had been included.' (Italics added.)

Congress could make members of the Interstate Commerce Commission lifetime appointees. Yet I suppose no one would go so far as to say that a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission could be assigned to sit on the District Court or on the Court of Appeals. But if any agency member is disqualified, why is a member of another Article I tribunal, viz., the Court of Claims or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, qualified? No distinction can be drawn based on the functions performed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and those performed by the other two legislative tribunals. In each case some adjudicatory functions are performed. [FN4] Though the judicial functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission are as distinct as those of the Court of Claims, they nevertheless derive from Article I; and they are functions that Congress can exercise directly or delegate to an agency. Williams v. United States, supra, 289 U.S. pp. 567--571, 53 S.Ct. at 755--756. To make the present decision turn on whether the Court of Claims and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals perform 'judicial' functions is to adopt a false standard. The manner in which the majority reasons exposes the fallacy.

FN4. The Interstate Commerce Commission has long entered reparation orders directing carriers to pay shippers specified sums of money plus interest for excessive and unreasonable rates. See Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U.S. 434, 35 S.Ct. 337, 59 L.Ed. 659; II Sharfman, The Interstate Commerce Commission (1931), pp. 387--388.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1498 The majority says that once the United States consents to be sued all problems of 'justiciability' are satisfied; and *598 that Congress has broad powers to convert 'moral' obligations into 'legal' ones enforceable by 'constitutional' courts. The truth is, I think, that the dimensions of Article III can be altered only by the amending process, not by legislation. Congress can create as respects certain claims a limited 'justiciability.' But if 'justiciability' in the 'constitutional' sense is involved, then there must be trial by jury assuming, as my Brother HARLAN does, that the claim is for recovery for torts or some other compensable injury. To repeat, it does not advance analysis by calling the function a 'judicial' one (see Pope v. United States, 323 U.S. 1, 12, 65 S.Ct. 16, 22, 89 L.Ed. 3), for both Article I courts and Article III courts perform functions of that character. The crucial question on this phase of the problems is the manner in which that judicial power is to be exercised.

As Mr. Justice Brandeis made clear in Tutun v. United States, 270 U.S. 568, 576--577, 46 S.Ct. 425, 426, 70 L.Ed. 738, an administrative remedy may be 'judicial.' The question here is different; it is whether the procedures utilized by the tribunal must comport with those set forth in the Bill of Rights and in the body of the Constitution. Yet who would maintain that in an administrative action for damages a jury trial was necessary?

Judges of the Article III courts work by standards and procedures which are either specified in the Bill of Rights or supplied by well-known historic precedents. Article III courts are law courts, equity courts, and admiralty courts [FN5]--all specifically named in Article III. They sit *599 to determine 'cases' or 'controversies.' But Article I courts have no such restrictions. They need not be confined to 'cases' or 'controversies' but can dispense legislative largesse. See United States v. Alcea Band of Tillamooks, 329 U.S. 40, 67 S.Ct. 167, 91 L.Ed. 29; 341 U.S. 48, 71 S.Ct. 552, 95 L.Ed. 738. Their decisions may affect vital interests; yet like legislative bodies, zoning commissions, and other administrative bodies they need not observe the same standards of due process required in trials of Article III 'cases' or 'controversies.' See Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Board of Equalization of Colorado, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S.Ct. 141, 60 L.Ed. 372. That is what Chief Justice Marshall meant when he said in American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 545--546, 7 L.Ed. 242 that an Article I court (in that case a territorial court) could make its adjudications without regard to the limitations of Article III. On the other hand, as the Court in O'Donoghue v. United States, supra, 289 U.S. at 546, 53 S.Ct. at 748, 77 L.Ed. 1356, observed, Article III courts could not be endowed with the administrative and legislative powers (or with the power to render advisory opinions) which Article I tribunals or agencies exercise.

FN5. As respects admiralty, Chief Justice Marshall said in American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 545, 7 L.Ed. 242:
'If we have recourse to that pure fountain from which all the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts is derived, we find language employed which cannot well be misunderstood. The Constitution declares, that 'the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, or other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.'
'The Constitution certainly contemplates these as three distinct classes of cases * * *.'

In other words, the question, apart from the constitutional guarantee of tenure and the provision against diminution of salary, concerns the functions of the particular tribunal. Article III 1499 courts have prescribed for them constitutional standards some of which are in the Bill of Rights, while some (as for example those concerning bills of attainder and ex post facto laws) are in the body of the Constitution itself. Article I courts, on the other hand, are agencies of the legislative or executive branch. Thus while Article III courts of law must sit with a jury in suits where the value in controversy exceeds $20, the Court of Claims--an Article I court--is not so confined by the Seventh Amendment. The claims which *600 it hears are claims with respect to which the Government has agreed to be sued. As the Court said in McElrath v. United States, 102 U.S. 426, 440, 26 L.Ed. 189, since the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is permissive only, Congress can prescribe the rules and the procedures to be followed in pursuing claims against the Government. Likewise, the Court of Customs Appeals hears appeals that 'include nothing which inherently or necessarily requires judicial determination, but only matters the determination of which may be, and at times has been, committed exclusively to executive officers.' Ex parte Bakelite Corp., supra, 279 U.S. at 458, 49 S.Ct. at 416.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The judicial functions exercised by Article III courts cannot be performed by Congress nor delegated to agencies under its supervision and control. [FN6] The bill of *601 attainder is banned by Art. I, s 9. If there is to be punishment, courts (in the constitutional sense) must administer it. As we stated in United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303, 317, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 1079, 90 L.Ed. 1252:

> 'Those who wrote our Constitution well knew the danger inherent in special legislative acts which take away the life, liberty, or property of particular named persons, because 1500 the legislature thinks them guilty of conduct which deserves punishment. They intended to safeguard the people of this country from punishment without trial by duly constituted courts.'

Moreover, when an Article III court of law acts, there is a precise procedure that must be followed:

> 'An accused in court must be tried by an impartial jury, has a right to be represented by counsel, he must be clearly informed of the charge against him, the law which he is charged with violating must have been passed before he committed the act charged, he must be confronted by the witnesses against him, he must not be compelled to incriminate himself, he cannot twice be put in jeopardy for the same offense, and even after conviction no cruel and unusual punishment can be inflicted upon him.' Id., 317--318, 66 S.Ct. at 1080.

*602 On the civil side there is not only the right to trial by jury in suits at common law where the value in controversy exceeds $20 but there is also the mandate of the Seventh Amendment directing that 'no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.'

Neither of these limitations is germane to litigation in the Court of Claims or in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Those courts, moreover, exercise no criminal jurisdiction, no admiralty jurisdiction, no equity jurisdiction.

As noted, the advisory opinion is beyond the capacity of Article III courts to render. Muskrat v.

FN6. The limitations on Article III courts that distinguish them from Article I courts were stated by Chief Justice Vinson in National Mut. Insurance Co. v. Tidewater Transfer Co., 337 U.S. 582, 629--630, 69 S.Ct. 1173, 1201, 93 L.Ed. 1556, in words that have, I think, general acceptance, though on the precise issue he wrote in dissent:
'In Keller v. Potomac Electric Power Co., 1923, 261 U.S. 428, 43 S.Ct. 445, 67 L.Ed. 731, where this Court had before it an Act under which the courts of the District of Columbia were given revisory power over rates set by the Public Utilities Commission of the District, the appellee sought to sustain the appellate jurisdiction given this Court by the Act on the basis that 'Although Art. III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of the federal courts, this limitation is subject to the power of Congress to enlarge the jurisdiction, where such enlargement may reasonably be required to enable Congress to exercise the express powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.' 261 U.S. at page 435, 43 S.Ct. 445, 67 L.Ed. 731. There, as here, the power relied upon was that given Congress to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, and to make all laws necessary and proper to carry such powers into effect. But this Court clearly and unequivocally rejected the contention that Congress could thus extend the jurisdiction of constitutional courts, citing the note to Hayburn's Case, 1792, 2 Dall. 409, 410, 1 L.Ed. 436; United States v. Ferreira, 1851, 13 How. 40, note 52, 14 L.Ed. 42 and Gordon v. United States, 1864, 117 U.S. 697. These and other decisions of this Court clearly condition the power of a constitutional court to take cognizance of any cause upon the existence of a suit instituted according to the regular course of judicial procedure, Marbury v. Madison, 1803, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L.Ed. 60, the power to pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision, Muskrat v. United States, 1910, 219 U.S. 346, 31 S.Ct. 250, 55 L.Ed. 246; Gordon v. United States, supra, the absence of revisory or appellate power in any other branch of Government, Hayburn's Case, supra; United States v. Ferreira, supra, and the absence of administrative or legislative issues or controversies, Keller v. Potomac Electric Power Co., supra; Postum Cereal Co. v. California Fig Nut Co., 1927, 272 U.S. 693, 47 S.Ct. 284, 71 L.Ed. 478.'

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

United States, 219 U.S. 346, 31 S.Ct. 250, 55 L.Ed. 246. Yet it is part and parcel of the function of legislative tribunals. [FN7]

FN7. See 28 U.S.C. s 1492, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1492, giving the Court of Claims power 'to report to either House of Congress on any bill referred to the court by such House.' And see 28 U.S.C. ss 2509, 2510, 28 U.S.C.A. ss 2509, 2510. 28 U.S.C. s 1542, 28 U.S.C.A. s 1542, gave the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals a kind of administrative review over certain decisions of the patent office. And see note 2, supra.

Thus I cannot say, as some do, that the distinction between the two kinds of courts is a 'matter of language.' [FN8] The majority over and again emphasizes the declaration by Congress that each of the courts in question is an Article III court. It seems that the majority tries to gain momentum for its decision from those congressional declarations. This Court, however, is the expositor of the meaning of the Constitution, as Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, held; and a congressional enactment in the field of Article III is entitled to no greater weight than in other areas. The declarations by Congress that these legislative tribunals are Article III 603 courts [FN9] would be determinative only if Congress had the power to modify or alter the concepts that radiate throughout Article III and throughout those provisions of the Bill of Rights that specify how the judicial power granted by Article III shall be exercised.

FN8. See H.R.Rep.No.2348, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3, U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative Service, 1956, p. 3122.

FN9. See Act of July 28, 1953, 67 Stat. 226, 28 U.S.C.A. s 171 (Court of Claims); Act of July 14, 1956, 70 Stat. 532, 28 U.S.C.A. s 251 (Customs Court); Act of August 25, 1958, 72 Stat. 848, 28 U.S.C.A. s 211 (Court of Customs and Patent Appeals).

An appointment is made by the President and confirmed by the Senate in light of the duties of the particular office. Men eminently qualified to sit on Article I tribunals or agencies are not picked or confirmed in light of their qualifications *1501 to preside at jury trials or to process on appeal the myriad of constitutional and procedural problems involved in Article III 'cases' or 'controversies.' A President who sent a name to the Senate for the Interstate Commerce Commission or Federal Trade Commission might never dream of entrusting the nominee with the powers of an Article III judge. The tasks are so different, the responsibilities and the qualifications so diverse that it is difficult for one who knows the federal system to see how in the world of practical affairs these offices are interchangeable.

In the Senate debate on the Court of Customs Appeals, Senator Cummins stated that the judges who were to man it were to become tariff 'experts' whose judicial business would be 'confined to the matter of the duties on imports.' 44 Cong.Rec. 4185. Senator McCumber, who spoke for the Committee, emphasized the technical nature of the work of those judges and the unique specialization of their work.

'The law governing the development of the human intellect is such that constant study of a particular question necessarily broadens and expands and intensifies and deepens the mind on that particular subject. 604 Any man who has gone over even the cotton schedule will understand how delicate questions will arise; how complex those questions must necessarily be, and how necessary it will be to have judges who will possess technical knowledge upon that subject; and a technical knowledge can only be obtained by a constant daily study of those questions. For that second reason it was thought best to have a court whose whole attention, whose whole life work, should be given to that particular subject.' Id., at 4199.

Could there be any doubt that the late John J. Parker, rejected by the Senate for this Court, would have been confirmed for one of these Article I courts?

It is said that Congress could separate law and equity and create federal judges who, though Article III judges, sit entirely on the equity side. If Congress can do that, it is said that Congress can divide up all judicial power as it chooses and by making tenure permanent allow judges to be assigned from an Article I to an Article III court. The fact that Article III judicial power may be so divided as to produce judges with no experience in the trial of jury cases or in the review of them on appeal is no excuse for allowing legislative judges to be imported into the important fields that Article III preserves and that are partly safeguarded by the Bill of Rights and partly represented by ancient admiralty practice [FN10] and equity procedures. Federal judges named to Article III courts are picked in light of the functions entrusted to them. No one knows whether a President would have appointed to an Article III court a man he named to an Article I court.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN10. See The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 575, 22 L.Ed. 654; The Osceola, 189 U.S. 158, 23 S.Ct. 483, 47 L.Ed. 760.

My view is that we subtly undermine the constitutional system when we treat federal judges as fungible. If members of the Court of Claims and of the Court of Customs 605 and Patent Appeals can sit on life-and-death cases in Article III courts, so can a member of any administrative agency who has a statutory tenure that future judges sitting on this Court by some mysterious manner may change to constitutional tenure. With all deference, this seems to me to be a light-hearted treatment of Article III functions. [FN11] Men of highest quality chosen as Article I judges might never pass muster for Article III courts when tested by their record of tolerance for minorities *1502 *606 and for their respect of the Bill of Rights-- neither of which is as crucial to the performance of the duties of those who sit in Article I courts as it is to the duties of Article III judges.

FN11. The Court does great mischief in today's opinions. The opinion of my Brother HARLAN stirs a host of problems that need not be opened. What is done will, I fear, plague us for years.
First, that opinion cites with approval Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L.Ed. 264, in which Congress withdrew jurisdiction of this Court to review a habeas corpus case that was sub judice, and then apparently draws a distinction between that case and United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 20 L.Ed. 519, where such withdrawal was not permitted in a property claim. There is a serious question whether the McCardle case could command a majority view today. Certainly the distinction between liberty and property (which emanates from this portion of my Brother HARLAN'S opinion) has no vitality even in terms of the Due Process Clause.
Second, Postum Cereal Co. v. California Fig Nut Co., 272 U.S. 693, 47 S.Ct. 284, 71 L.Ed. 478, is apparently overruled. Why this is done is not apparent. That case ruled on the question whether a ruling on a Patent Office determination was 'judicial.' Whether it was or not is immaterial because, as already noted, Article I courts, like Article III courts, exercise 'judicial' power. The only relevant question here is whether a court that need not follow Article III procedures is nonetheless an Article III court.
Third, it is implied that Congress could vest the lower federal courts with the power to render advisory opinions. The character of the District Court in the District of Columbia has been differentiated from the other District Courts by O'Donoghue v. United States, supra, in that the former is, in part, an agency of Congress to perform Article I powers. How Congress could transform regular Article III courts into Article I courts is a mystery. Certainly we should not decide such an important issue so casually and so unnecessarily.

In sum, Judges who do not perform Article III functions, who do not enjoy constitutional tenure and whose salaries are not constitutionally protected against diminution during their term of office cannot be Article III judges.

Judges who perform 'judicial' functions on Article I courts do not adjudicate 'cases' or 'controversies' in the sense of Article III. They are not bound by the requirements of the Seventh Amendment concerning trial by jury.

Judges who sit on Article I courts are chosen for administrative or allied skills, not for their qualifications to sit in cases involving the vast interests of life, liberty, or property for whose protection the Bill of Rights and the other guarantees in the main body of the Constitution, including the ban on bills of attainder and ex post facto laws, were designed. Judges who might be confirmed for an Article I court might never pass muster for the onerous and life-or-death duties of Article III judges.

For these reasons I would reverse the judgments below.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

defense that a statute is unconstitutional. See, e.g., G.D. Searle & Co. v. Cohn, 455 U.S. 404, 414, 102 S.Ct. 1137, 1144, 71 L.Ed.2d 250 (1982). What may follow from our holding that the judicial power unalterably includes the power to render final judgments is not that waivers of res judicata are always impermissible, but rather that, as many Federal Courts of Appeals have held, waivers of res judicata need not always be accepted--that trial courts may in appropriate cases raise the res judicata bar on their own motion. See, e.g., Coleman v. Ramada Hotel Operating Co., 933 F.2d 470, 475 (CA7 1991); In re Medomak Canning, 922 F.2d 895, 904 (CA1 1990); Holloway Constr. Co. v. United States Dept. of Labor, 891 F.2d 1211, 1212 (CA6 1989). Waiver subject to the control of the 232 courts themselves would obviously raise no issue of separation of powers, and would be precisely in accord with the language of the decision that the Solicitor General relies upon. We held in Schor that, although a litigant had consented to bring a state-law counterclaim before an Article I tribunal, 478 U.S., at 849, 106 S.Ct., at 3255, we would nonetheless choose to consider his Article III challenge, because "when these Article III limitations are at issue, notions of consent and waiver cannot be dispositive," id., at 851, 106 S.Ct., at 3257 (emphasis added). See also Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U.S. 868, 878-879, 111 S.Ct. 2631, 2638-2639, 115 L.Ed.2d 764 (1991) (finding a "rare cas[e] in which we should exercise our discretion" to hear a waived claim based on the Appointments Clause, Art. II, § 2, cl. 2). [FN6]

> FN6. The statute at issue in United States v. SiouxNation, 448 U.S. 371, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 65 L.Ed.2d 844 (1980), seemingly prohibited courts from raising the res judicata defense sua sponte. See id., at 432-433, 100 S.Ct., at 2749-2750 (REHNQUIST, J., dissenting). The Court did not address that point; as far as appears it saw no reason to raise the defense on its own. Of course the unexplained silences of our decisions lack precedential weight. See, e.g., Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 630-631, 113 S.Ct. 1710, 1717-1718, 123 L.Ed.2d 353 (1993).

Petitioners also rely on a miscellany of decisions upholding legislation that altered rights fixed by the final judgments of non-Article III courts, see, e.g., Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet. 222, 238, 8 L.Ed. 665 (1833); Freeborn v. Smith, 2 Wall. 160, 17 L.Ed. 922 (1865), or administrative agencies, Paramino Lumber Co. v. Marshall, 309 U.S. 370, 60 S.Ct. 600, 84 L.Ed. 814 (1940), or that altered the prospective effect of injunctions entered by Article III courts, Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 18 How., at 421. These cases distinguish themselves; nothing in our holding today calls them into question. Petitioners rely on general statements from some *1460 of these cases that legislative annulment of final judgments is not an exercise of judicial power. But even if it were our practice to decide cases by weight of prior dicta, we would find the many dicta that reject congressional 233 power to revise the judgments of Article III courts to be the more instructive authority. See supra, at 1456-1457. [FN7]

> FN7. The dissent tries to turn the dicta of the territorial-court cases, Sampeyreac and Freeborn, into holdings. It says of Sampeyreac that "the relevant judicial power that the [challenged] statute arguably supplanted was this Court's Article III appellate jurisdiction." Post, at 1470. Even if it were true that the judicial power under discussion was that of this Court (which is doubtful), the point could still not possibly constitute a holding, since there was no "supplanted power" at issue in the case. One of the principal grounds of decision was that the finality of the territorial court's decree had not been retroactively abrogated. The decree had been entered under a previous statute which provided that a decree "shall be final and conclusive between the parties." Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet., at 239, 8 L.Ed. 665 (emphasis in original). The asserted basis for reopening was fraud, in that Sampeyreac did not actually exist. We reasoned that "as Sampeyreac was a fictitious person, he was no party to the decree, and the act [under which the decree had allegedly become final] in strictness does not apply to the case." Ibid.
>
> The dissent likewise says of Freeborn that "the 'judicial power' to which the opinion referred was this Court's Article III appellate jurisdiction." Post, at 1470. Once again, even if it was, the point remains dictum. No final judgment was at issue in Freeborn. The challenged statute reached only " 'cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the supreme court of the United States,' " see post, at 1470, n. 7 (quoting 13 Stat. 441) (emphasis added). As we have explained, see supra, at 1456-1457, Congress may require (insofar as separation-of-powers limitations are concerned) that new statutes be applied in cases not yet final but still pending on appeal.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Finally, petitioners liken § 27A(b) to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b), which authorizes courts to relieve parties from a final judgment for grounds such as excusable neglect, newly discovered evidence, fraud, or "any other reason justifying relief...." We see little resemblance. Rule 60(b), which authorizes discretionary judicial revision of judgments in the listed situations and in other " 'extraordinary circumstances,' " Liljeberg v. Health Services Acquisition Corp., 486 U.S. 847, 864, 108 S.Ct. 2194, 2204, 100 L.Ed.2d 855 (1988), does not impose any legislative mandate to reopen upon the courts, but merely reflects and 234 confirms the courts' own inherent and discretionary power, "firmly established in English practice long before the foundation of our Republic," to set aside a judgment whose enforcement would work inequity. Hazel-Atlas Glass Co. v. Hartford-Empire Co., 322 U.S. 238, 244, 64 S.Ct. 997, 1000, 88 L.Ed. 1250 (1944). Thus, Rule 60(b), and the tradition that it embodies, would be relevant refutation of a claim that reopening a final judgment is always a denial of property without due process; but they are irrelevant to the claim that legislative instruction to reopen impinges upon the independent constitutional authority of the courts.

The dissent promises to provide "[a] few contemporary examples" of statutes retroactively requiring final judgments to be reopened, "to demonstrate that [such statutes] are ordinary products of the exercise of legislative power." Post, at 1471. That promise is not kept. The relevant retroactivity, of course, consists not of the requirement that there be set aside a judgment that has been rendered prior to its being setting aside--for example, a statute passed today which says that all default judgments rendered in the future may be reopened within 90 days after their entry. In that sense, all requirements to reopen are "retroactive," and the designation is superfluous. Nothing we say today precludes a law such as that. The finality that a court can pronounce is no more than what the law in existence at the time of judgment will permit it to pronounce. If the law then applicable says that the judgment may be reopened for certain reasons, that limitation is built into the judgment itself, and its finality is so conditioned. The present case, however, involves a judgment that Congress subjected to a reopening requirement which did not exist when the judgment was pronounced. The dissent provides not a single clear prior instance of such congressional action.

The dissent cites, first, Rule 60(b), which it describes as a "familiar remedial measure." Ibid. As we have just discussed, Rule 60(b) *1461 does not provide a new remedy at all, but 235 is simply the recitation of pre-existing judicial power. The same is true of another of the dissent's examples, 28 U.S.C. § 2255, which provides federal prisoners a statutory motion to vacate a federal sentence. This procedure " 'restates, clarifies and simplifies the procedure in the nature of the ancient writ of error coram nobis.' " United States v. Hayman, 342 U.S. 205, 218, 72 S.Ct. 263, 271, 96 L.Ed. 232 (1952) (quoting the 1948 Reviser's Note to § 2255). It is meaningless to speak of these statutes as applying "retroactively," since they simply codified judicial practice that pre-existed. Next, the dissent cites the provision of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1178, 50 U.S.C.App. § 520(4), which authorizes courts, upon application, to reopen judgments against members of the Armed Forces entered while they were on active duty. It could not be clearer, however, that this provision was not retroactive. It says: "If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service ... such judgment may ... be opened...." (Emphasis added.)

The dissent also cites, post, at 1472, a provision of the Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1986, 82 Stat. 901, 20 U.S.C. § 1415(e)(4)(B) (1988 ed. and Supp. V), which provided for the award of attorney's fees under the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975, 89 Stat. 773, 20 U.S.C. § 1411 et seq. (1988 ed. and Supp. V). This changed the law regarding attorney's fees under the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, after our decision in Smith v. Robinson, 468 U.S. 992, 104 S.Ct. 3457, 82 L.Ed.2d 746 (1984), found such fees to be unavailable. The provision of the Statutes at Large adopting this amendment to the United States Code specified, in effect, that it would apply not only to proceedings brought after its enactment, but also to proceedings pending at the time of, or brought after, the decision in Smith. See 100 Stat. 798. The amendment says nothing about reopening final judgments, and the retroactivity provision may well mean nothing 236 more than that it applies not merely to new suits commenced after the date of its enactment, but also to previously filed (but not yet terminated) suits of the specified sort. This interpretation would be consistent with the only case the dissent cites, which involved a court-entered consent decree not yet fully executed. Counsel v. Dow, 849 F.2d 731, 734, 738-739 (CA2 1988). Alternatively, the statute can perhaps be understood to create a new cause of action for attorney's fees attributable to already concluded litigation. That would create no separation-of-powers problem, and would be consistent with this Court's view that "[a]ttorney's fee determinations ... are 'collateral to the main cause of action' and 'uniquely separable from the cause of action to be proved at trial.' " Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S., at 277, 114 S.Ct., at 1503 (quoting White v. New Hampshire Dept. of Employment Security, 455 U.S. 445, 451-452, 102 S.Ct. 1162, 1166-1167, 71 L.Ed.2d 325 (1982)). [FN8]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN8. Even the dissent's scouring the 50 States for support has proved unproductive. It cites statutes from five States, post, at 1472, nn. 13- 14. Four of those statutes involve a virtually identical provision, which permits the state-chartered entity that takes over an insolvent insurance company to apply to have any of the insurer's default judgments set aside. See Del.Code Ann., Tit. 18, § 4418 (1989); Fla.Stat. § 631.734 (1984); N.Y.Ins. Law § 7717 (McKinney Supp.1995); 40 Pa.Cons.Stat. § 991.1716 (Supp.1994). It is not at all clear, indeed it seems to us unlikely, that these statutes applied retroactively, to judgments that were final before enactment of the scheme that created the state-chartered entity. The last statute involves a discretionary procedure for allowing appeal by pro se litigants, Va.Code Ann. § 8.01-428(C) (Supp.1994). It is obvious that the provision did not apply retroactively, to judgments rendered before the procedures were established.

The dissent's perception that retroactive reopening provisions are to be found all about us is perhaps attributable to its inversion of the statutory presumption regarding retroactivity. Thus, it asserts that Rule 60(b) must be retroactive, since "[n]ot a single word in its text suggests that it does not apply to judgments entered prior to its effective date." 237 Post, at 1471-1472. This reverses the traditional rule, confirmed only last Term, that statutes do not apply retroactively unless Congress expressly states that *1462 they do. See Landgraf, supra, 511 U.S., at 277-280, 114 S.Ct., at 1502-1504. The dissent adds that "the traditional construction of remedial measures ... support[s] construing [Rule 60(b)] to apply to past as well as future judgments." Post, at 1472. But reliance on the vaguely remedial purpose of a statute to defeat the presumption against retroactivity was rejected in the companion cases of Landgraf, see 511 U.S., at 284-286, and n. 37, 114 S.Ct., at 1507-1508, and n. 37 and Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 U.S., at 309-313, 114 S.Ct., at 1517-1520. Cf. Landgraf, supra, 511 U.S., at 297, 114 S.Ct., at 1488-1489 (Blackmun, J., dissenting) ("This presumption [against retroactive legislation] need not be applied to remedial legislation...") (citing Sampeyreac, 7 Pet., at 238).

The dissent sets forth a number of hypothetical horribles flowing from our assertedly "rigid holding"--for example, the inability to set aside a civil judgment that has become final during a period when a natural disaster prevented the timely filing of a certiorari petition. Post, at 1474. That is horrible not because of our holding, but because the underlying statute itself enacts a "rigid" jurisdictional bar to entertaining untimely civil petitions. Congress could undoubtedly enact prospective legislation permitting, or indeed requiring, this Court to make equitable exceptions to an otherwise applicable rule of finality, just as district courts do pursuant to Rule 60(b). It is no indication whatever of the invalidity of the constitutional rule which we announce, that it produces unhappy consequences when a legislature lacks foresight, and acts belatedly to remedy a deficiency in the law. That is a routine result of constitutional rules. See, e.g., Collins v. Youngblood, 497 U.S. 37, 110 S.Ct. 2715, 111 L.Ed.2d 30 (1990) (Ex Post Facto Clause precludes post-offense statutory extension of a criminal sentence); United States Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 97 S.Ct. 1505, 52 L.Ed.2d 92 (1977) (Contract Clause prevents retroactive alteration of contract with state bondholders); Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295 U.S. 555, 589-238 590, 601-602, 55 S.Ct. 854, 863-864, 868-869, 79 L.Ed. 1593 (1935) (Takings Clause invalidates a bankruptcy law that abrogates a vested property interest). See also United States v. Security Industrial Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 78, 103 S.Ct. 407, 412, 74 L.Ed.2d 235 (1982).

Finally, we may respond to the suggestion of the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264911

UNITED STATES CODE ANNOTATED
TITLE 42. THE PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE
CHAPTER 23--DEVELOPMENT AND CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY
DIVISION A--ATOMIC ENERGY
SUBCHAPTER XIII--GENERAL AUTHORITY OF COMMISSION

Copr. © West Group 2001. No claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

Current through P.L. 107-11, approved 5-28-01

§ 2212. Contractor liability for injury or loss of property arising out of atomic weapons testing programs

(a) Short title

This section may be cited as the "Atomic Testing Liability Act".

(b) Federal remedies applicable; exclusiveness of remedies

(1) Remedy

The remedy against the United States provided by sections 1346(b) and 2672 of Title 28, by the Act of March 9, 1920 (46 U.S.C.App. 741-752), or by the Act of March 3, 1925 (46 U.S.C.App. 781-790), as appropriate, for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death shall apply to any civil action for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States.

(2) Exclusivity

The remedies referred to in paragraph (1) shall be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding for the purpose of determining civil liability arising from any act or omission of the contractor without regard to when the act or omission occurred. The employees of a contractor referred to in paragraph (1) shall be considered to be employees of the Federal Government, as provided in section 2671 of Title 28, for the purposes of any such civil action or proceeding; and the civil action or proceeding shall proceed in the same manner as any action against the United States filed pursuant to section 1346(b) of such title and shall be subject to the limitations and exceptions applicable to those actions.

(c) Procedure

A contractor against whom a civil action or proceeding described in subsection (b) of this section is brought shall promptly deliver all processes served upon that contractor to the Attorney General of the United States. Upon certification by the Attorney General that the suit against the contractor is within the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, a civil action or proceeding commenced in a State court shall be removed without bond at any time before trial by the Attorney General to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending and the proceedings shall be deemed a tort action brought against the United States under the provisions of section 1346(b), 2401(b), or 2402, or sections 2671 through 2680 of Title 28. For purposes of removal, the certification by the Attorney General under this subsection establishes contractor status conclusively.

(d) Actions covered

The provisions of this section shall apply to any action, within the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, which is pending on November 5, 1990, or commenced on or after November 5, 1990. Notwithstanding section concurrence that this case should be decided more narrowly. The concurrence is willing to acknowledge only that "sometimes Congress lacks the power under Article I to reopen an otherwise closed court judgment," post, at 1463. In the present context, what it considers critical is that § 27A(b) is "exclusively retroactive" and "appli[es] to a limited number of individuals." Ibid. If Congress had only "provid[ed] some of the assurances against 'singling out' that ordinary legislative activity normally provides--say, prospectivity and general applicability--we might have a different case." Post, at 1465.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

This seems to us wrong in both fact and law. In point of fact, § 27A(b) does not "single out" any defendant for adverse treatment (or any plaintiff for favorable treatment). Rather, it identifies a class of actions (those filed pre-Lampf, timely under applicable state law, but dismissed as time barred post-Lampf) which embraces many plaintiffs and defendants, the precise number and identities of whom we even now do not know. The concurrence's contention that the number of covered defendants "is too small (compared with the number of similar, uncovered firms) to distinguish meaningfully the law before us from a similar law aimed at a single closed case," post, at 1465 (emphasis added), renders the concept of "singling out" meaningless.

More importantly, however, the concurrence's point seems to us wrong in law. To be sure, the class of actions identified by § 27A(b) could have been more expansive (e.g., all actions that were or could have been filed pre-Lampf) and the provision could have been written to have prospective as well as retroactive effect (e.g., "all post-Lampf dismissed actions, plus all future actions under Rule 10b-5, shall be timely if brought within 30 years of the injury"). But it escapes us 239 how this could in any way cause the statute to be any less an infringement upon the judicial power. The nub of that infringement consists not of the Legislature's *1463 acting in a particularized and hence (according to the concurrence) nonlegislative fashion; [FN9] but rather of the Legislature's nullifying prior, authoritative judicial action. It makes no difference whatever to that separation-of-powers violation that it is in gross rather than particularized (e.g., "we hereby set aside all hitherto entered judicial orders"), or that it is not accompanied by an "almost" violation of the Bill of Attainder Clause, or an "almost" violation of any other constitutional provision.

> FN9. The premise that there is something wrong with particularized legislative action is of course questionable. While legislatures usually act through laws of general applicability, that is by no means their only legitimate mode of action. Private bills in Congress are still common, and were even more so in the days before establishment of the Claims Court. Even laws that impose a duty or liability upon a single individual or firm are not on that account invalid--or else we would not have the extensive jurisprudence that we do concerning the Bill of Attainder Clause, including cases which say that it requires not merely "singling out" but also punishment, see, e.g., United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303, 315- 318, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 1078-1080, 90 L.Ed. 1252 (1946), and a case which says that Congress may legislate "a legitimate class of one," Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 472, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 2805, 53 L.Ed.2d 867 (1977).

Ultimately, the concurrence agrees with our judgment only "[b]ecause the law before us embodies risks of the very sort that our Constitution's 'separation of powers' prohibition seeks to avoid." Post, at 1466. But the doctrine of separation of powers is a structural safeguard rather than a remedy to be applied only when specific harm, or risk of specific harm, can be identified. In its major features (of which the conclusiveness of judicial judgments is assuredly one) it is a prophylactic device, establishing high walls and clear distinctions because low walls and vague distinctions will not be judicially defensible in the heat of interbranch conflict. It is interesting that the concurrence quotes twice, and cites without quotation a third time, the opinion of Justice Powell in 240 INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S., at 959, 103 S.Ct. at 2788. But Justice Powell wrote only for himself in that case. He alone expressed dismay that "[t]he Court's decision ... apparently will invalidate every use of the legislative veto," and opined that "[t]he breadth of this holding gives one pause." Ibid. It did not give pause to the six-Justice majority, which put an end to the long-simmering interbranch dispute that would otherwise have been indefinitely prolonged. We think legislated invalidation of judicial judgments deserves the same categorical treatment accorded by Chadha to congressional invalidation of executive action. The delphic alternative suggested by the concurrence (the setting aside of judgments is all right so long as Congress does not "impermissibly tr[y] to apply, as well as make, the law," post, at 1463-1464) simply prolongs doubt and multiplies confrontation. Separation of powers, a distinctively American political doctrine, profits from the advice authored by a distinctively American poet: Good fences make good neighbors.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

* * *

We know of no previous instance in which Congress has enacted retroactive legislation requiring an Article III court to set aside a final judgment, and for good reason. The Constitution's separation of legislative and judicial powers denies it the authority to do so. Section 27A(b) is unconstitutional to the extent that it requires federal courts to reopen final judgments entered before its enactment. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Justice BREYER, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the majority that § 27A(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa-1 (1988 ed., Supp. V) (hereinafter § 27A(b)) is unconstitutional. In my view, the separation of powers inherent in our Constitution means that at least sometimes Congress lacks the power under Article 241 I to reopen an otherwise closed court judgment. And the statutory provision here at issue, § 27A(b), violates a basic "separation- of-powers" principle--one intended to protect individual liberty. Three features of this law--its exclusively retroactive effect, its application to a limited number of individuals, and its reopening of closed judgments--taken together, show that Congress here impermissibly tried to apply, as well as make, *1464 the law. Hence, § 27A(b) falls outside the scope of Article I. But, it is far less clear, and unnecessary for the purposes of this case to decide, that separation of powers "is violated" whenever an "individual final judgment is legislatively rescinded" or that it is "violated 40 times over when 40 final judgments are legislatively dissolved." See ante, at 1457. I therefore write separately.

The majority provides strong historical evidence that Congress lacks the power simply to reopen, and to revise, final judgments in individual cases. See ante, at 1453-1454. The Framers would have hesitated to lodge in the Legislature both that kind of power and the power to enact general laws, as part of their effort to avoid the "despotic government" that accompanies the "accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands." The Federalist No. 47, p. 241 (J. Gideon ed. 1831) (J. Madison); id., No. 48, at 249 (quoting T. Jefferson, Notes on the State of Virginia). For one thing, the authoritative application of a general law to a particular case by an independent judge, rather than by the legislature itself, provides an assurance that even an unfair law at least will be applied evenhandedly according to its terms. See, e.g., 1 Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws 174 (T. Nugent transl. 1886) (describing one objective of the "separation of powers" as preventing "the same monarch or senate," having "enact[ed] tyrannical laws" from "execut[ing] them in a tyrannical manner"); W. Gwyn, The Meaning of the Separation of Powers 42-43, 104-106 (1965) (discussing historically relevant sources that explain one purpose of separation of powers as helping to assure an "impartial rule of 242 law"). For another thing, as Justice Powell has pointed out, the Constitution's "separation-of-powers" principles reflect, in part, the Framers' "concern that a legislature should not be able unilaterally to impose a substantial deprivation on one person." INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 962, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2789, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983) (opinion concurring in judgment). The Framers "expressed" this principle, both in "specific provisions, such as the Bill of Attainder Clause," and in the Constitution's "general allocation of power." Ibid.; see United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 442, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 1711, 14 L.Ed.2d 484 (1965) (Bill of Attainder Clause intended to implement the separation of powers, acting as "a general safeguard against legislative exercise of the judicial function"); Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87, 136, 3 L.Ed. 162 (1810) (Marshall, C.J.) ("It is the peculiar province of the legislature to prescribe general rules for the government of society; the application of those rules to individuals in society would seem to be the duty of other departments"); cf. Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 535-536, 4 S.Ct. 111, 120-121, 28 L.Ed. 232 (1884).

Despite these two important "separation-of-powers" concerns, sometimes Congress can enact legislation that focuses upon a small group, or even a single individual. See, e.g., Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 468-484, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 2802-2813, 53 L.Ed.2d 867 (1977); Selective Service System v. Minnesota Public Interest Research Group, 468 U.S. 841, 846-856, 104 S.Ct. 3348, 3351-3357, 82 L.Ed.2d 632 (1984); Brown, supra, 381 U.S., at 453-456, 85 S.Ct., at 1717-1719. Congress also sometimes passes private legislation. See Chadha, supra, 462 U.S., at 966, n. 9, 103 S.Ct., at 2792, n. 9 (Powell, J., concurring in judgment) ("When Congress grants particular individuals relief or benefits under its spending power, the danger of oppressive action that the separation of powers was designed to avoid is not implicated"). And, sometimes Congress can enact legislation that, as a practical matter, radically changes the effect of an individual,previously entered court decree. See Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 18 How. 421, 15 L.Ed. 435 (1856). Statutes that apply prospectively and (in part because of that prospectivity) to an open-ended class of persons, however, are more than simply 243 an effort to apply, person by person, a previously enacted law, or to single out for oppressive treatment one, or a handful, of particular individuals. Thus, it seems to me, if Congress enacted legislation that reopened an otherwise closed judgment but in a way that mitigated some of the here relevant "separation-of-powers" concerns, by *1465 also providing some of the assurances against "singling out" that ordinary legislative activity normally provides--say, prospectivity and general applicability--we might have a different case. Cf. Brown, supra, 381 U.S., at 461, 85 S.Ct., at 1721 ("Congress must accomplish [its desired] results by rules of general applicability. It cannot specify the people upon whom the sanction it prescribes is to be levied"). Because such legislation, in light of those mitigating circumstances, might well present a different constitutional question, I do not subscribe to the Court's more absolute statement.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The statute before us, however, has no such mitigating features. It reopens previously closed judgments. It is entirely retroactive, applying only to those Rule 10b-5 actions actually filed, on or before (but on which final judgments were entered after) June 19, 1991. See 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b) and 17 CFR 240.10b-5 (1994). It lacks generality, for it applies only to a few individual instances. See Hearings on H.R. 3185 before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance of the House of Representatives Committee on Energy and Commerce, 102d Cong., 1st Sess., 3-4 (1991) (listing, by case name, only 15 cases that had been dismissed on the basis of Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 115 L.Ed.2d 321 (1991)). And, it is underinclusive, for it excludes from its coverage others who, relying upon pre-Lampf limitations law, may have failed to bring timely securities fraud actions against any other of the Nation's hundreds of thousands of businesses. I concede that its coverage extends beyond a single individual to many potential plaintiffs in these class actions. But because the legislation disfavors not plaintiffs but defendants, I should think 244 that the latter number is the more relevant. And, that number is too small (compared with the number of similar, uncovered firms) to distinguish meaningfully the law before us from a similar law aimed at a single closed case. Nor does the existence of § 27A(a), which applies to Rule 10b-5 actions pending at the time of the legislation, change this conclusion. That provision seems aimed at too few additional individuals to mitigate the low level of generality of § 27A(b). See Hearings on H.R. 3185, supra, at 5-6 (listing 17 cases in which dismissal motions based on Lampf were pending).

The upshot is that, viewed in light of the relevant, liberty-protecting objectives of the "separation of powers," this case falls directly within the scope of language in this Court's cases suggesting a restriction on Congress' power to reopen closed court judgments. See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 113, 68 S.Ct. 431, 437, 92 L.Ed. 568 (1948) ("Judgments within the powers vested in courts by the Judiciary Article of the Constitution may not lawfully be revised [or] overturned ... by another Department of Government"); Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., supra, 18 How., at 431 ("[I]f the remedy in this case had been an action at law, and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for damages, the right to these would have passed beyond the reach of the power of congress"); Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409, 413 (1792) (letter from Justice Iredell and District Judge Sitgreaves to President Washington) ("[N]o decision of any court of the United States can, under any circumstances, in our opinion, agreeable to the Constitution, be liable to a revision, or even suspension, by the Legislature itself").

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

At the same time, because the law before us both reopens final judgments and lacks the liberty-protecting assurances that prospectivity and greater generality would have provided, we need not, and we should not, go further--to make of the reopening itself, an absolute, always determinative distinction, a "prophylactic device," or a foundation for the building of a new "high wal[l]" between the branches. 245 Ante, at 1463. Indeed, the unnecessary building of such walls is, in itself, dangerous, because the Constitution blends, as well as separates, powers in its effort to create a government that will work for, as well as protect the liberties of, its citizens. See The Federalist No. 48 (J. Madison). That doctrine does not "divide the branches into watertight compartments," nor "establish and divide fields of black and white." Springer v. Philippine Islands, 277 U.S. 189, 209, 211, 48 S.Ct. 480, 484, 485, 72 L.Ed. 845 (1928) (Holmes, J., dissenting); *1466 see also Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635, 72 S.Ct. 863, 870, 96 L.Ed. 1153 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring) (referring to the need for "workable government"); id., at 596-597, 72 S.Ct., at 890-891 (Frankfurter, J., concurring); Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 381, 109 S.Ct. 647, 659, 102 L.Ed.2d 714 (1989) (the doctrine does not create a "hermetic division among the Branches" but "a carefully crafted system of checked and balanced power within each Branch"). And, important separation-of-powers decisions of this Court have sometimes turned, not upon absolute distinctions, but upon degree. See, e.g., Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 48-54, 52 S.Ct. 285, 291-294, 76 L.Ed. 598 (1932); A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 551-555, 55 S.Ct. 837, 852-854, 79 L.Ed. 1570 (1935) (Cardozo, J., concurring). As the majority invokes the advice of an American poet, one might consider aswell that poet's caution, for he not only notes that "Something there is that doesn't love a wall," but also writes, "Before I built a wall I'd ask to know/ What I was walling in or walling out." R. Frost, Mending Wall, The New Oxford Book of American Verse 395-396 (R. Ellmann ed. 1976).

Finally, I note that the cases the dissent cites are distinguishable from the one before us. Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet. 222, 8 L.Ed. 665 (1833), considered a law similar to § 27A(b) (it reopened a set of closed judgments in fraud cases), but the Court did not reach the here relevant issue. Rather, the Court rested its conclusion upon the fact that Sampeyreac was not "a real person," while conceding that, were he real, the case "might present a different question." Id., 7 Pet., at 238-239. Freeborn v. Smith, 2 Wall. 160, 17 L.Ed. 922 (1865), which involved 246 an Article I court, upheld a law that applied to all cases pending on appeal (in the Supreme Court) from the territory of Nevada, irrespective of the causes of action at issue or which party was seeking review. See id., 2 Wall., at 162. That law had generality, a characteristic that helps to avoid the problem of legislatively singling out a few individuals for adverse treatment. See Chadha, 462 U.S., at 966, 103 S.Ct., at 2791 (Powell, J., concurring in judgment). Neither did United States v. Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. 371, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 65 L.Ed.2d 844 (1980), involve legislation that adversely treated a few individuals. Rather, it permitted the reopening of a case against the United States. See id., at 391, 100 S.Ct., at 2728.

Because the law before us embodies risks of the very sort that our Constitution's "separation-of-powers" prohibition seeks to avoid, and because I can find no offsetting legislative safeguards that normally offer assurances that minimize those risks, I agree with the Court's conclusion and I join its judgment.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice GINSBURG joins, dissenting.

On December 19, 1991, Congress enacted § 27A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa-1 (1988 ed., Supp. V) (hereinafter 1991 amendment), to remedy a flaw in the limitations rule this Court announced on June 20, 1991, in Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 115 L.Ed.2d 321 (1991). In Lampf the Court replaced the array of state statutes of limitations that had governed shareholder actions under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b), and Rule 10b-5, 17 CFR 240.10b-5 (1994) (hereinafter 10b-5 actions), with a uniform federal limitations rule. Congress found only one flaw in the Court's new rule: its failure to exempt pending cases from its operation. Accordingly, without altering the prospective effect of the Lampf rule, the 1991 amendment remedied its flaw by providing that pre-Lampf law should determine the limitations period applicable to all cases that had 247 been pending on June 20, 1991--both those that remained pending on December 19, 1991, when § 27A was enacted, and those that courts dismissed between June 20 and December 19, 1991. Today the Court holds that the 1991 amendment violates the Constitution's separation of powers because, by encompassing the dismissed claims, it requires courts to reopen final judgments in private civil actions.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Section 27A is a statutory amendment to a rule of law announced by this Court. The *1467 fact that the new rule announced in Lampf was a product of judicial, rather than congressional, lawmaking should not affect the separation-of-powers analysis. We would have the same issue to decide had Congress enacted the Lampf rule but, as a result of inadvertence or perhaps a scrivener's error, failed to exempt pending cases, as is customary when limitations periods are shortened. [FN1] In my opinion, if Congress had retroactively restored rights its own legislation had inadvertently or unfairly impaired, the remedial amendment's failure to exclude dismissed cases from the benefited class would not make it invalid. The Court today faces a materially identical situation and, in my view, reaches the wrong result.

> FN1. Our decisions prior to Lampf consistently held that retroactive application of new, shortened limitations periods would violate "fundamental notions of justified reliance and due process." Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 371, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 2786, 115 L.Ed.2d 321 (1991) (O'CONNOR, J., dissenting); see, e.g., Chevron Oil Co. v. Huson, 404 U.S. 97, 92 S.Ct. 349, 30 L.Ed.2d 296 (1971) ; Saint Francis College v. Al-Khazraji, 481 U.S. 604, 107 S.Ct. 2022, 95 L.Ed.2d 582 (1987).

Throughout our history, Congress has passed laws that allow courts to reopen final judgments. Such laws characteristically apply to judgments entered before as well as after their enactment. When they apply retroactively, they may raise serious due process questions, [FN2] but the Court 248 has never invalidated such a law on separation-of-powers grounds until today. Indeed, only last Term we recognized Congress' ample power to enact a law that "in effect 'restored' rights that [a party] reasonably and in good faith thought he possessed before the surprising announcement" of a Supreme Court decision. Rivers v. Roadway Express, Inc., 511 U.S. 298, 310, 114 S.Ct. 1510, 1518, 128 L.Ed.2d 274 (1994) (discussing Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L.Ed. 668 (1870)). We conditioned our unambiguous restatement of the proposition that "Congress had the power to enact legislation that had the practical effect of restoring the statusquo retroactively," 511 U.S., at 310, 114 S.Ct., at 1518, only on Congress' clear expression of its intent to do so.

> FN2. Because the Court finds a separation-of-powers violation, it does not reach respondents' alternative theory that § 27A(b) denied them due process under the Fifth Amendment, a theory the Court of Appeals did not identify as an alternative ground for its holding. In my judgment, the statute easily survives a due process challenge. Section 27A(b) is rationally related to a legitimate public purpose. Cf., e.g., Concrete Pipe & Products of Cal., Inc. v. Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern Cal., 508 U.S. 602, 636-641, 113 S.Ct. 2264, 2286-2289, 124 L.Ed.2d 539 (1993). Given the existence of statutes and rules, such as Rule 60(b), that allow courts to reopen apparently "final" judgments in various circumstances, see infra, at 1471-1472, respondents cannot assert an inviolable "vested right" in the District Court's post-Lampf dismissal of petitioners' claims. In addition, § 27A(b) did not upset any "settled expectations" of respondents. Cf. Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 266, 114 S.Ct. 1483, 1497, 128 L.Ed.2d 229. (1994). In Landgraf, we concluded that Congress did not intend § 102 of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. § 1981a (1988 ed., Supp. V), to apply retroactively because retroactive application would have placed a new legal burden on past conduct. 511 U.S., at 280-286, 114 S.Ct., at 1505- 1508. Before 1991 no one could have relied either on the yet-to-be- announced rule in Lampf or on the Court's unpredictable decision to apply that rule retroactively. All of the reliance interests that ordinarily support a presumption against retroactivity militate in favor of allowing retroactive application of § 27A.

A large class of investors reasonably and in good faith thought they possessed rights of action before the surprising announcement of the Lampf rule on June 20, 1991. When it enacted the 1991 amendment, Congress clearly expressed its intent to restore the rights Lampf had denied the aggrieved class. Section 27A comported fully with Rivers and with other precedents in which we consistently have recognized Congress' power to enact remedial statutes that set aside classes of final judgments. The only remarkable feature of 249 this enactment is the fact that it remedied a defect in a new judge-made rule rather than in a statute.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264916

The familiar history the Court invokes, involving colonial legislatures' ad hoc decisions of individual cases, " 'unfettered by rules,' " ante, at 1454 (quoting Vermont State Papers 1779-1786, p. 540 (Slade ed. 1823)), provides no support for its holding. On the contrary, history and precedent demonstrate that Congress may enact laws that establish *1468 both substantive rules and procedures for reopening final judgments. When it enacted the 1991 amendment to the Lampf rule, Congress did not encroach on the judicial power. It decided neither the merits of any 10b-5 claim nor even whether any such claim should proceed to decision on the merits. It did provide that the rule governing the timeliness of 10b-5 actions pending on June 19, 1991, should be the pre-Lampf statute of limitations, and it also established a procedure for Article III courts to apply in determining whether any dismissed case should be reinstated. Congress' decision to extend that rule and procedure to 10b-5 actions dismissed during the brief period between this Court's law- changing decision in Lampf and Congress' remedial action is not a sufficient reason to hold the statute unconstitutional.

I

Respondents conducted a public offering of common stock in 1983. Petitioners, suing on behalf of themselves and other purchasers of the stock, filed a 10b-5 action in 1987 in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, alleging violations of substantive federal rules that had been in place since 1934. Respondents moved to dismiss the complaint as untimely because petitioners had filed it more than three years after the events in dispute. At that time, settled law in Kentucky and elsewhere in the United States directed federal courts to determine statutes of limitations applicable to 10b-5 actions by reference to 250 state law. [FN3] The relevant Kentucky statute provided a 3-year limitations period, [FN4] which petitioners contended ran from the time the alleged fraud was or should have been discovered. A Magistrate agreed with petitioners and recommended denial of respondents' motion to dismiss, but by 1991 the District Court had not yet ruled on that issue. The factual question whether petitioners should have discovered respondents' alleged 10b-5 violations more than three years before they filed suit remained open for decision by an Article III judge on June 20, 1991.

FN3. "Federal judges have 'borrowed' state statutes of limitations because they were directed to do so by the Congress of the United States under the Rules of Decision Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1652." Lampf, 501 U.S., at 367, n. 2, 111 S.Ct., at 2784, n. 2 (STEVENS, J., dissenting) (citations omitted); see, e.g., Stull v. Bayard, 561 F.2d 429, 431-432 (CA2 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1035, 98 S.Ct. 769, 54 L.Ed.2d 783 (1978); Roberts v. Magnetic Metals Co., 611 F.2d 450, 456 (CA3 1979); Robuck v. Dean Witter & Co., 649 F.2d 641, 644 (CA9 1980) (borrowing state statutes of limitations for 10b-5 actions).

FN4. See Ky.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 292.480(3) (Michie 1988).

On that day, this Court's decision in Lampf changed the law. The Court concluded that every 10b-5 action is time barred unless brought within three years of the alleged violation and one year of its discovery. Moreover, it applied that novel rule to pending cases. As Justice O'CONNOR pointed out in her dissent, the Court held the plaintiffs' suit "time barred under a limitations period that did not exist before," a holding that "depart[ed] drastically from our established practice and inflict[ed] an injustice on the [plaintiffs]." Lampf, 501 U.S., at 369, 111 S.Ct., at 2785. [FN5] The inequitable consequences of Lampf reached beyond the parties to that case, 251 injuring a large class of litigants that includes petitioners. Without resolving the factual issue that would have determined the timeliness of petitioners' complaint before Lampf, the District Court dismissed the instant action as untimely under the new limitations period dictated by this Court. Because Lampf had deprived them of any non-frivolous basis for an appeal, petitioners acquiesced in the dismissal, which therefore became final on September 12, 1991.

FN5. The Lampf opinion drew two other dissents. Justice KENNEDY, joined by Justice O'CONNOR, would have adopted a different substantive limitations rule. See 501 U.S., at 374,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264917

111 S.Ct., at 2788. Justice SOUTER and I would have adhered to "four decades of ... settled law" and maintained the existing regime until Congress enacted a new federal statute of limitations. Id., at 366-367, 111 S.Ct., at 2784 (STEVENS, J., dissenting). No one dissented from the proposition that a uniform federal limitations period would be wise policy.

1469 Congress responded to Lampf by passing § 27A, which became effective on December 19, 1991. The statute changed the substantive limitations law, restoring the pre-Lampf limitations rule for two categories of 10b-5 actions that had been pending on June 19, 1991. Subsection (a) of § 27A applies to cases that were still pending on December 19, 1991. The Courts of Appeals have uniformly upheld the constitutionality of that subsection, [FN6] and its validity is not challenged in this case. Subsection (b) applies to actions, like the instant case, that (1) were dismissed after June 19, 1991, and (2) would have been timely under the pre- Lampf regime. This subsection authorized the district courts to reinstate dismissed cases if the plaintiff so moved within 60 days after the effective date of § 27A. The amendment was not self-executing: Unless the plaintiff both filed a timely motion for reinstatement and then satisfied the court that the complaint had been timely filed under applicable pre-Lampf law, the dismissal would remain in effect.

FN6. See Cooperativa de Ahorro y Credito Aguada v. Kidder, Peabody & Co., 993 F.2d 269 (CA1), cert. pending, No. 93-564; Axel Johnson Inc. v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 6 F.3d 78 (CA2 1993); Cooke v. Manufactured Homes, Inc., 998 F.2d 1256 (CA4 1993); Berning v. A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc., 990 F.2d 272 (CA7 1993); Gray v. First Winthrop Corp., 989 F.2d 1564 (CA9 1993); Anixter v. Home-Stake Production Co., 977 F.2d 1533 (CA10 1992), cert. denied sub nom. Dennler v. Trippet, 507 U.S. 1029, 113 S.Ct. 1841, 123 L.Ed.2d 467 (1993); Henderson v. Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., 971 F.2d 1567 (CA11 1992), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 828, 114 S.Ct. 95, 126 L.Ed.2d 62 (1993).

In this case petitioners made the required showing, but the District Court refused to reinstate their case. Instead, *252 it held § 27A(b) unconstitutional. 789 F.Supp. 231 (ED Ky.1992). The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, contrary to an earlier decision of the Fifth Circuit, affirmed. 1 F.3d 1487 (1993).

II

Aside from § 27A(b), the Court claims to "know of no instance in which Congress has attempted to set aside the final judgment of an Article III court by retroactive legislation." Ante, at 1458. In fact, Congress has done so on several occasions. Section 27A(b) is part of a remedial statute. As early as 1833, we recognized that a remedial statute authorizing the reopening of a final judgment after the time for appeal has expired is "entirely unexceptionable" even though it operates retroactively. "It has been repeatedly decided in this court, that the retrospective operation of such a law forms no objection to it. Almost every law, providing a new remedy, affects and operates upon causes of action existing at the time the law is passed." Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet. 222, 239, 8 L.Ed. 665 (1833). We have upheld remedial statutes that carried no greater cause for separation-of-powers concerns than does § 27A(b); others have provoked no challenges. In contrast, the colonial directives on which the majority relies were nothing like remedial statutes.

The remedial 1830 law we construed in Sampeyreac strongly resembled § 27A(b): It authorized a class of litigants to reopen claims, brought under an 1824 statute, that courts had already finally adjudicated. The 1824 statute authorized proceedings to establish title to certain lands in the State of Missouri and the territory of Arkansas. It provided for an appeal to this Court within one year after the entry of the judgment or decree, "and should no appeal be taken, the judgment or decree of the district court shall in like manner be final and conclusive." 7 Pet., at 238. In 1827 the Arkansas Territorial Court entered a decree in favor of one Sampeyreac, over the objection of the United States that the nominal plaintiff was a fictitious person. Because no appeal *253 was taken from that decree, it became final in 1828. In 1830 Congress passed a special statute authorizing the Arkansas court to reopen any decree entered under the 1824 statute if, prior to July 1, 1831, the United States filed a bill of review alleging that the decree had been based on forged evidence of title. The United States filed such a bill and obtained a reversal of the 1827 decree from the Arkansas court.

The successors in interest of the fictitious Mr.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264918

Sampeyreac argued in this Court that 1470 the Arkansas court should not have entertained the Government's bill of review because the 1830 statute "was the exercise of a judicial power, and it is no answer to this objection, that the execution of its provisions is given to a court. The legislature of the union cannot use such a power." Id., at 229. We categorically rejected that argument: "The law of 1830 is in no respect the exercise of judicial powers." Id., at 239. Of course, as the majority notes, ante, at 1459, the particular decree at stake in Sampeyreac had issued not from an Article III court but from a territorial court. However, our opinion contains no suggestion that Congress' power to authorize the reopening of judgments entered by the Arkansas court was any broader than its power to authorize the reopening of judgments entered under the same statute by the United States District Court in Missouri. Moreover, the relevant judicial power that the 1830 statute arguably supplanted was this Court's Article III appellate jurisdiction-- which, prior to the 1830 enactment, provided the only avenue for review of the trial courts' judgments.

Similarly, in Freeborn v. Smith, 2 Wall. 160, 17 L.Ed. 922 (1865), the Court rejected a challenge to an Act of Congress that removed an accidental impediment to the exercise of our appellate jurisdiction. When Congress admitted Nevada into the Union as a State in March 1864, ch. 36, 13 Stat. 30, it neglected to provide for the disposition of pending appeals from final judgments previously entered by the Supreme Court of *254 the Nevada Territory. Accordingly, the Freeborn defendants in error moved to dismiss a writ of error to the territorial court on the ground that we had no power to decide the case. At the suggestion of plaintiffs in error, the Court deferred ruling on the motion until after February 27, 1865, when Congress passed a special statute that authorized the Court to decide this and similar cases. [FN7] Defendants in error renewed their motion, arguing that Congress could not reopen judgments that were already final and unreviewable because Congress was not competent to exercise judicial power.

> FN7. The Act provided, in part:
> "That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the supreme court of the United States, upon any record from the supreme court of the Territory of Nevada, may be heard and determined by the supreme court of the United States, and the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the supreme court of the United States to the district court of the United States for the district of Nevada, or to the supreme court of the State of Nevada, as the nature of said appeal or writ of error may require, and each of these courts shall be the successor of the supreme court of Nevada Territory as to all such cases, with full power to hear and determine the same, and to award mesne or final process thereon.... Provided, That said appeals shall be prosecuted and said writs of errors sued out at any time before the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-six." Ch. 64, § 8, 13 Stat. 441.

Defendants in error argued that, "[i]f it be possible for a right to attach itself to a judgment, it has done so here, and there could not be a plainer case of an attempt to destroy it by legislative action." 2 Wall., at 165. The Court, however, noted that the omission in the 1864 statute had left the case "in a very anomalous situation," id., at 174, and that passage of the later statute "was absolutely necessary to remove an impediment in the way of any legal proceeding in the case." Id., at 175. It concluded that such "acts are of a remedial character, and are peculiar subjects of legislation. They are not liable to the imputation of being assumptions of judicial power." Ibid. As in Sampeyreac, although Freeborn involved *255 the review of a judgment entered by a territorial court, the "judicial power" to which the opinion referred was this Court's Article III appellate jurisdiction. If Congress may enact a law authorizing this Court to reopen decisions that we previously lacked power to review, Congress must have the power to let district courts reopen their own judgments.

Also apposite is United States v. Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. 371, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 65 L.Ed.2d 844 (1980), which involved the Sioux Nation's longstanding claim that the Government had in 1877 improperly abrogated the treaty by which the Sioux had held title to the Black Hills. The Sioux first brought their claim under a special 1920 jurisdictional statute. The Court of Claims dismissed the suit in 1942, holding that the 1920 Act did not 1471 give the court jurisdiction to consider the adequacy of the compensation the Government had paid in 1877. Congress passed a new jurisdictional statute in 1946, and in 1950 the Sioux brought a new action. In 1975 the Court of Claims, although acknowledging the merit of the Sioux's claim, held that the res judicata effect of the 1942 dismissal barred the suit.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

In response, Congress passed a statute in 1978 that authorized the Court of Claims to take new evidence and instructed it to considerthe Sioux's claims on the merits, disregarding res judicata. The Sioux finally prevailed. We held that the 1978 Act did not violate the separation of powers. 448 U.S., at 407, 100 S.Ct., at 2736.

The Court correctly notes, see ante, at 1459, and n. 5, that our opinion in Sioux Nation prominently discussed precedents establishing Congress' power to waive the res judicata effect of judgments against the United States. We never suggested, however, that those precedents sufficed to overcome the separation-of-powers objections raised against the 1978 Act. Instead, we made extensive comments about the propriety of Congress' action that were as necessary to our holding then as they are salient to the Court's analysis today. In passing the 1978 Act, we held, Congress

256 "only was providing a forum so that a new judicial review of the Black Hills claim could take place. This review was to be based on the facts found by the Court of Claims after reviewing all the evidence, and an application of generally controlling legal principles to those facts. For these reasons, Congress was not reviewing the merits of the Court of Claims' decisions, and did not interfere with the finality of its judgments. "Moreover, Congress in no way attempted to prescribe the outcome of the Court of Claims' new review of the merits." 448 U.S., at 407, 100 S.Ct., at 2737.

Congress observed the same boundaries in enacting § 27A(b).

Our opinions in Sampeyreac, Freeborn, and Sioux Nation correctly characterize statutes that specify new grounds for the reopening of final judgments as remedial. Moreover, these precedents correctly identify the unremarkable nature of the legislative power to enact remedial statutes. "[A]cts ... of a remedial character ... are the peculiar subjects of legislation. They are not liable to the imputation of being assumptions of judicial power." Freeborn, 2 Wall., at 175. A few contemporary examples of such statutes will suffice to demonstrate that they are ordinary products of the exercise of legislative power.

The most familiar remedial measure that provides for reopening of final judgments is Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That Rule both codified common-law grounds for relieving a party from a final judgment and added an encompassing reference to "any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment." [FN8] *1472 Not a 257 single word in its text suggests that it does not apply to judgments entered prior to its effective date. On the contrary, the purpose of the Rule, its plain language, and the traditional construction of remedial measures all support construing it to apply to past as well as future judgments. Indeed, because the Rule explicitly abolished the common-law writs it replaced, an unintended gap in the law would have resulted if it did not apply retroactively. [FN9]

FN8. The full text of Rule60(b) provides:

"On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or a party's legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding for the following reasons: (1) mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; (2) newly discovered evidence which by due diligence could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial under Rule 59(b); (3) fraud (whether heretofore denominated intrinsic or extrinsic), misrepresentation, or other misconduct of an adverse party; (4) the judgment is void; (5) the judgment has been satisfied, released, or discharged, or a prior judgment upon which it is based has been reversed or otherwise vacated, or it is no longer equitable that the judgment should have prospective application; or (6) any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment. The motion shall be made within a reasonable time, and for reasons (1), (2), and (3) not more than one year after the judgment, order, or proceeding was entered or taken. A motion under this subdivision (b) does not affect the finality of a judgment or suspend its operation. This rule does not limit the power of a court to entertain an independent action to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or proceeding, or to grant relief to a defendant not actually personally notified as provided in Title 28, U.S.C. § 1655, or to set aside a judgment for fraud upon the court. Writs of coram nobis, coram vobis, audita querela, and bills of review and bills in the nature of a bill of review, are abolished, and the procedure for obtaining any relief from a judgment shall be by motion as prescribed in these rules or by an independent action."

This Court adopted the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and submitted them to Congress as the Rules Enabling Act required. They became effective after Congress adjourned without altering them. See generally 308 U.S. 647 (letter of transmittal to Congress, Jan. 3, 1938).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN9. In its criticism of this analysis of Rule 60(b), the majority overstates our holdings on retroactivity in Landgraf, 511 U.S., at 280, 114 S.Ct., at 1505, and Rivers v. Roadway Express, Inc., 511 U.S. 298, 114 S.Ct. 1510, 128 L.Ed.2d 274 (1994). Our opinion in Landgraf nowhere says "that statutes do not apply retroactively unless Congress expressly states that they do." Ante, at 1461-1462. To the contrary, it says that, "[w]hen ... the statute contains no such express command, the court must determine whether the new statute would have retroactive effect," an inquiry that requires "clear congressional intent favoring such a result." Landgraf, 511 U.S., at 280, 114 S.Ct., at 1505 (emphasis added); see also id., at 273-275, 114 S.Ct., at 1501-1502; Rivers, 511 U.S., at 304-309, 114 S.Ct. at 1515-1517. In the case of Rule 60(b), the factors I have identified, taken together, support a finding ofclear congressional intent. Moreover, neither Landgraf nor Rivers "rejected" consideration of a statute's remedial purpose in analyzing Congress' intent to apply the statute retroactively. Compare ante, at 1462, with Landgraf, 511 U.S., at 281-286 and n. 37, 114 S.Ct., at 1505- 1508, and n. 37, and Rivers, 511 U.S., at 304-311, 114 S.Ct., at 1515- 1518.

258 Other examples of remedial statutes that resemble § 27A include the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C.App. § 520(4), which authorizes members of the Armed Forces to reopen judgments entered while they were on active duty; the Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1986, 20 U.S.C. § 1415(e)(4)(B) (1988 ed. and Supp. V), which provided for recovery of attorney's fees under the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975, 20 U.S.C. § 1411 et seq. (1988 ed. and Supp. V); [FN10] and the federal habeas corpus statute, 28 U.S.C. § 2255, which authorizes federal courts to reopen judgments of conviction. The habeas statute, similarly to Rule 60(b), replaced a common-law writ, see App. to H.R.Rep. No. 308, 80th Cong., 2d Sess., A180 (1947), and thus necessarily applied retroactively. [FN11] State statutes that authorize the reopening of various types of default judgments [FN12] and judgments that became final before a party received 259 notice of their entry, [FN13] as well as provisions for motions to reopen based on newly discovered evidence, [FN14] further demonstrate the widespread acceptance of remedial statutes that allow courts to set aside final judgments. As in the case of Rule 60(b), logic dictates that these statutes be construed to apply retroactively to judgments that were final at the time of their enactments. All of these remedial statutes announced generally applicable rules of law *1473 as well as establishing procedures for reopening final judgments. [FN15]

FN10. When it enacted the Handicapped Children's Protection Act, Congress overruled our contrary decision in Smith v. Robinson, 468 U.S. 992, 104 S.Ct. 3457, 82 L.Ed.2d 746 (1984), by applying the Act retroactively to any action either pending on or brought after July 4, 1984, the day before we announced Smith. See 100 Stat. 798. Accordingly, a court has applied the Act retroactively to a case in which the parties had entered into a consent decree prior to its enactment. See Counsel v. Dow, 849 F.2d 731, 738-739 (CA2 1988).The Court's attempts to explain away the retroactivity provision, ante, at 1461-1462, simply do not comport with the plain language of the Act.

FN11. The Government also calls our attention to 28 U.S.C. § 1655, a statute that requires courts to reopen final in rem judgments upon entries of appearance by defendants who were not personally served. See Brief for United States 24-25, and n. 17. While that statute had only prospective effect, the Court offers no reason why Congress could not pass a similar statute that would apply retroactively to judgments entered under pre-existing procedures.

FN12. See, e.g., Del.Code Ann., Tit. 18, § 4418 (1989); Fla.Stat. § 631.734 (1984); N.Y.Ins. Law § 7717 (McKinney Supp.1995); 40 Pa.Cons.Stat. § 991.1716 (Supp.1994).

FN13. For example, a Virginia statute provides that, when a pro se litigant fails to receive notice of the trial court's entry of an order, even after the time to appeal has expired, the trial judge may within 60 days vacate the order and grant the party leave to appeal. Va.Code Ann. § 8.01-428(C) (Supp.1994).

FN14. See Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 410-411, and nn. 8-11, 113 S.Ct. 853, 865-866, and nn. 8-11, 122 L.Ed.2d 203 (1993) (citing state statutes).

FN15. The Court offers no explanation of why the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264921

2401(b) of Title 28, if a civil action or proceeding to which this section applies is pending on November 5, 1990, and is dismissed because the plaintiff in such action or proceeding did not file an administrative claim as required by section 2672 of that title, the plaintiff in that action or proceeding shall have 30 days from the date of the dismissal or two years from the date upon which the claim accrued, whichever is later, to file an administrative claim, and any claim or subsequent civil action or proceeding shall thereafter be subject to the provisions of section 2401(b) of Title 28.

(e) "Contractor" defined

For purposes of this section, the term "contractor" includes a contractor or cost reimbursement subcontractor of any tier participating in the conduct of the United States atomic weapons testing program for the Department of Energy (or its predecessor agencies, including the Manhattan Engineer District, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the Energy Research and Development Administration). Such term also includes facilities which conduct or have conducted research concerning health effects of ionizing radiation in connection with the testing under contract with the Department of Energy (or any of its predecessor agencies).

CREDIT(S)

1995 Main Volume

(Pub.L. 101-510, Div. C, Title XXXI, § 3141, Nov. 5, 1990, 104 Stat. 1837.)

<General Materials (GM) - References, Annotations, or Tables>

HISTORICAL AND STATUTORY NOTES

Revision Notes and Legislative Reports

1990 Acts. House Report No. 101-665, House Conference Report No. 101- 923, and Statement by President, see 1990 U.S. Code Cong. and Adm. News, p. 2931.

References in Text

Act of March 9, 1920, referred to in subsec. (b)(1), is a reference to the Suits in Admiralty Act, Act Mar. 9, 1920, c. 95, 41 Stat. 525, as amended, which is classified generally to chapter 20 (section 741 et seq.) of the Appendix to Title 46, Shipping. For complete classification of this Act to the Code, see Short Title note set out under section 741 of the Appendix to Title 46 and Tables.

Act of March 3, 1925, referred to in subsec. (b)(1), is a reference to the Public Vessels Act, Act Mar. 3, 1925, c. 428, 43 Stat. 1112, which is classified generally to chapter 22 (section 781 et seq.) of the Appendix to Title 46, Shipping. For complete classification of this Act to the Code, see Short Title note set out under section 781 of the Appendix to Title 46 and Tables.

Codifications

Section was enacted as part of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991, and not as part of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, which comprises subchapters I to XVII of this chapter.

Prior Provisions

A prior section 2212, Pub.L. 98-525, Title XVI, § 1631, Oct. 19, 1984, 98 Stat. 2646, relating to similar subject matter, was repealed by Pub.L. 101- 426, § 13, as added Pub.L. 101-510, Div. C, Title XXXI, § 3140, Nov. 5, 1990, 104 Stat. 1837.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> Constitution should be construed to interpose an absolute bar against these statutes' retroactive application. Under the Court's reasoning, for example, an amendment that broadened the coverage of Rule 60(b) could not apply to any inequitable judgments entered prior to the amendment. The Court's rationale for this formalistic restriction remains elusive.

In contrast, in the examples of colonial legislatures' review of trial courts' judgments on which today's holding rests, the legislatures issued directives in individual cases without purporting either to set forth or to apply any legal standard. Cf. ante, at 1453-1456; see, e.g., INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 961-962, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2789-2790, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983) (Powell, J., concurring in judgment). The principal compendium on which the Court relies, ante, at 1453, accurately describes these legislative directives:

> "In these records, which are of the first quarter of the 18th century, the provincial legislature will often be found acting in a judicial capacity, sometimes trying causes in equity, sometimes granting equity powers to some court of the common law for a particular temporary purpose, and constantly granting appeals, new trials, and other relief from judgments, on equitable 260 grounds." Judicial Action by the Provincial Legislature of Massachusetts, 15 Harv.L.Rev. 208, n. 1 (1902).

The Framers' disapproval of such a system of ad hoc legislative review of individual trial court judgments has no bearing on remedial measures such as Rule 60(b) or the 1991 amendment at issue today. The history on which the Court relies provides no support for its holding.

III

The lack of precedent for the Court's holding is not, of course, a sufficient reason to reject it. Correct application of separation-of-powers principles, however, confirms that the Court has reached the wrong result. As our most recent major pronouncement on the separation of powers noted, "we have never held that the Constitution requires that the three branches of Government 'operate with absolute independence.' " Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 693-694, 108 S.Ct. 2597, 2620, 101 L.Ed.2d 569 (1988) (quoting United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 707, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039 (1974)). Rather, our jurisprudence reflects "Madison's flexible approach to separation of powers." Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 380, 109 S.Ct. 647, 659, 102 L.Ed.2d 714 (1989). In accepting Madison's conception rather than any "hermetic division among the Branches," id., at 381, 109 S.Ct., at 660, "we have upheld statutory provisions that to some degree commingle the functions of the Branches, but that pose no danger of either aggrandizement or encroachment," id., at 382, 109 S.Ct., at 660. Today's holding does not comport with these ideals.

Section 27A shares several important characteristics with the remedial statutes discussed above. It does not decide the merits of any issue in any litigation but merely removes an impediment to judicial decision on the merits. The impediment it removes would have produced inequity because the statute's beneficiaries did not cause the impediment. It requires a party invoking its benefits to file a motion within a specified time and to convince a court that the statute entitles the party to relief. Most important, § 27A(b) specifies 261 both a substantive rule to govern the reopening of a class of judgments--the pre-Lampf limitations rule--and a procedure for the courts to apply in determining whether a particular motion to reopen should be granted. These characteristics are quintessentially legislative. They reflect Congress' fealty to the separation of powers and its intention to avoid the sort of ad hoc excesses the Court rightly criticizes in colonial legislative practice. In my judgment, all of these elements distinguish § 27A from "judicial" action and confirm its constitutionality. A sensible analysis would at least consider them in the balance.

Instead, the Court myopically disposes of § 27A(b) by holding that Congress has no power to "requir[e] an Article III court to set aside a final judgment." Ante, at 1463. That holding must mean one of two things. *1474 It could mean that Congress may not impose a mandatory duty on a court to set aside a judgment even if the court makes a particular finding, such as a finding of fraud or mistake, that Congress has not made. Such a rule, however, could not be correct. Although Rule 60(b), for example, merely authorizes federal courts to set aside judgments after making appropriate findings, Acts of Congress characteristically set standards that judges are obligated to enforce. Accordingly, Congress surely could add to Rule 60(b) certain instances in which courts must grant relief from final judgments if they make particular findings--for example, a finding that a member of the jury accepted a bribe from the prevailing party. The Court, therefore, must mean to hold that Congress may not unconditionally require an Article III court to set aside a final judgment. That rule is both unwise and beside the point of this case.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264922

A simple hypothetical example will illustrate the practical failings of the Court's new rule. Suppose Congress, instead of endorsing the new limitations rule fashioned by the Court in Lampf, had decided to return to the pre- Lampf regime (or perhaps to enact a longer uniform statute). Subsection 262 a) of § 27A would simply have provided that the law in effect prior to June 19, 1991, would govern the timeliness of all 10b-5 actions. In that event, subsection (b) would still have been necessary to remedy the injustice caused by this Court's failure to exempt pending cases from its new rule. In my judgment, the statutory correction of the inequitable flaw in Lampf would be appropriate remedial legislation whether or not Congress had endorsed that decision's substantive limitations rule. The Court, unfortunately, appears equally consistent: Even though the class of dismissed 10b-5 plaintiffs in my hypothetical would have been subject to the same substantive rule as all other 10b-5 plaintiffs, the Court's reasoning would still reject subsection (b) as an impermissible exercise of "judicial" power.

The majority's rigid holding unnecessarily hinders the Government from addressing difficult issues that inevitably arise in a complex society. This Court, for example, lacks power to enlarge the time for filing petitions for certiorari in a civil case after 90 days from the entry of final judgment, no matter how strong the equities. See 28 U.S.C. § 2101(c). If an Act of God, such as a flood or an earthquake, sufficiently disrupted communications in a particular area to preclude filing for several days, the majority's reasoning would appear to bar Congress from addressing the resulting inequity. If Congress passed remedial legislation that retroactively granted movants from the disaster area extra time to file petitions or motions for extensions of time to file, today's holding presumably would compel us to strike down the legislation as an attack on the finality of judgments. Such a ruling, like today's holding, would gravely undermine federal courts' traditional power "to set aside a judgment whose enforcement would work inequity." Ante, at 1460. [FN16]

FN16. The Court also appears to bar retroactive application of changes in the criminal law. Its reasoning suggests that, for example, should Congress one day choose to abolish the federal death penalty, the new statute could not constitutionally save a death row inmate from execution if his conviction had become final before the statute was passed.

263 Even if the rule the Court announces today were sound, it would not control the case before us. In order to obtain the benefit of § 27A, petitioners had to file a timely motion and persuade the District Court they had timely filed their complaint under pre-Lampf law. In the judgment of the District Court, petitioners satisfied those conditions. Congress reasonably could have assumed, indeed must have expected, that some movants under § 27A(b) would fail to do so. The presence of an important condition that the District Court must find a movant to have satisfied before it may reopen a judgment distinguishes § 27A from the unconditional congressional directives the Court appears to forbid.

Moreover, unlike the colonial legislative commands on which the Court bases its holding, § 27A directed action not in "a civil case," ante, at 1455 (discussing Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L.Ed. 648 (1798)), but in a *1475 large category of civil cases. [FN17] The Court declares that a legislative direction to reopen a class of 40 cases is 40 times as bad as a direction to reopen a single final judgment because "power is the object of the separation-of-powers prohibition." See ante, at 1457. This self-evident observation might be salient if § 27A(b) unconditionally commanded courts to reopen judgments even absent findings that the complaints were timely under pre-Lampf law. But Congress did not decide--and could not know how any court would decide--the timeliness issue in any particular 264 case in the affected category. Congress, therefore, had no way to identify which particular plaintiffs would benefit from § 27A. It merely enacted a law that applied a substantive rule to a class of litigants, specified a procedure for invoking the rule, and left particular outcomes to individualized judicial determinations--a classic exercise of legislative power.

FN17. At the time Congress was considering the bill that became § 27A, a House Subcommittee reported that Lampf had resulted in the dismissal of 15 cases, involving thousands of plaintiffs in every State (of whom over 32,000 had been identified) and claims totaling over $692.25 million. In addition, motions to dismiss based on Lampf were then pending in 17 cases involving thousands of plaintiffs in every State and claims totaling over $4.578 billion. Hearing on H.R. 3185, before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, 102d Cong., 1st Sess., 1-4 (1991).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

"All we seek," affirmed a sponsor of § 27A, "is to give the victims [of securities fraud] a fair day in court." [FN18] A statute, such as § 27A, that removes an unanticipated and unjust impediment to adjudication of a large class of claims on their merits poses no danger of "aggrandizement or encroachment." Mistretta, 488 U.S., at 382, 109 S.Ct. at 660. [FN19] This is particularly true for § 27A in light of Congress' historic primacy over statutes of limitations. [FN20] The statute contains several checks against the danger of congressional overreaching. The Court in Lampf undertook a legislative function. Essentially, it supplied a statute of limitations for 10b-5 actions. 265 The Court, however, failed to adopt the transition rules that ordinarily attend alterations shortening the time to sue. Congress, in § 27A, has supplied those rules. The statute reflects the ability of two coequal branches to cooperate in providing for the impartial application of legal rules to particular disputes. The Court's mistrust of such cooperation ill serves the separation of powers. [FN21]

FN18. 137 Cong.Rec. S18624 (Nov. 27, 1991) (statement of Sen. Bryan).

FN19. Today's decision creates a new irony of judicial legislation. A challenge to the constitutionality of § 27A(a) could not turn on the sanctity of final judgments. Section 27A(a) benefits litigants who had filed appeals that Lampf rendered frivolous; petitioners and other law-abiding litigants whose claims Lampf rendered untimely had acquiesced in the dismissal of their actions. By striking down § 27A(b) on a ground that would leave § 27A(a) intact, the Court indulges litigants who protracted proceedings but shuts the courthouse door to litigants who proceeded with diligence and respect for the Lampf judgment.

FN20. "Statutes of limitation find their justification in necessity and convenience rather than in logic. They represent expedients, rather than principles.... They are by definition arbitrary, and their operation does not discriminate between the just and the unjust claim, or the voidable and unavoidable delay. They have come into the law not through the judicial process but through legislation. They represent a public policy about the privilege to litigate.... [T]he history of pleas of limitation shows them to be good only by legislative grace and to be subject to a relatively large degree of legislative control." Chase Securities Corp. v. Donaldson, 325 U.S. 304, 314, 65 S.Ct. 1137, 1142, 89 L.Ed. 1628 (1945) (Jackson, J.) (footnote and citation omitted).

FN21. Although I agree with Justice BREYER's general approach to the separation-of-powers issue, I believe he gives insufficient weight to two important features of § 27A. First, he fails to recognize that the statute restored a pre-existing rule of law in order to remedy the manifest injustice produced by the Court's retroactive application of Lampf. The only " 'substantial deprivation' " Congress imposed on defendants was that properly filed lawsuits proceed to decisions on the merits. Cf. ante, at 1464 (BREYER, J., concurring in judgment) (quoting INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 962, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2789, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983) (Powell, J., concurring in judgment)). Second, he understates the class of defendants burdened by § 27A: He finds the statute underinclusive because it provided no remedy for potential plaintiffs who may have failed to file timely actions in reliance on pre-Lampf limitations law, but he denies the importance of § 27A(a), which provided a remedy for plaintiffs who appealed dismissals after Lampf. See ante, at 1464-1465 (BREYER, J., concurring in judgment). The coverage of § 27A is coextensive with the retroactive application of the general rule announced in Lampf. If Congress had enacted a statute providing that the Lampf rule should apply to all cases filed after the statute's effective date and that the pre-Lampf rule should apply to all cases filed before that date, Justice BREYER could not reasonably condemn the statute as special legislation. The only difference between such a statute and § 27A is that § 27A covered all cases pending on the date of Lampf--June 20, 1991--rather than on the effective date of the statute--December 19, 1991. In my opinion, § 27A has sufficient generality to avoid the characteristics of a bill of attainder.

*1476 IV

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264924

The Court has drawn the wrong lesson from the Framers' disapproval of colonial legislatures' appellate review of judicial decisions. The Framers rejected that practice, not out of a mechanistic solicitude for "final judgments," but because they believed the impartial application of rules of law, rather *266 than the will of the majority, must govern the disposition of individual cases and controversies. Any legislative interference in the adjudication of the merits of a particular case carries the risk that political power will supplant evenhanded justice, whether the interference occurs before or after the entry of final judgment. Cf. United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 20 L.Ed. 519 (1872); Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409 (1792). Section 27A(b) neither commands the reinstatement of any particular case nor directs any result on the merits. Congress recently granted a special benefit to a single litigant in a pending civil rights case, but the Court saw no need even to grant certiorari to review that disturbing legislative favor. [FN22] In an ironic counterpoint, the Court today places a higher priority on protecting the Republic from the restoration to a large class of litigants of the opportunity to have Article III courts resolve the merits of their claims.

FN22. See Atonio v. Wards Cove Packing Co., 513 U.S. 809, 115 S.Ct. 57, 130 L.Ed.2d 16 (1994); see also Landgraf, 511 U.S., at 258, 114 S.Ct., at 1493 ("The parties agree that § 402(b) [of the Civil Rights Act of 1991] was intended to exempt a single disparate impact lawsuit against the Wards Cove Packing Company").

"We must remember that the machinery of government would not work if it were not allowed a little play in its joints." Bain Peanut Co. of Tex. v. Pinson, 282 U.S. 499, 501, 51 S.Ct. 228, 229, 75 L.Ed. 482 (1931) (Holmes, J.). The three branches must cooperate in order to govern. We should regard favorably, rather than with suspicious hostility, legislation that enables the judiciary to overcome impediments to the performance of its mission of administering justice impartially, even when, as here, this Court has created the impediment. [FN23] Rigid rules often make good law, but judgments in areas such as the review of potential conflicts among the three coequal branches of the *267 Federal Government partake of art as well as science. That is why we have so often reiterated the insight of Justice Jackson:

FN23. Of course, neither the majority nor I would alter its analysis had Congress, rather than the Court, enacted the Lampf rule without any exemption for pending cases, then later tried to remedy such unfairness by enacting § 27A. Thus, the Court's attribution of § 27A to "the legislature's genuine conviction (supported by all the law professors in the land) that [Lampf] was wrong," ante, at 1457, is quite beside the point.

"The actual art of governing under our Constitution does not and cannot conform to judicial definitions of the power of any of its branches based on isolated clauses or even single Articles torn from context. While the Constitution diffuses power the better to secure liberty, it also contemplates that practice will integrate the dispersed powers into a workable government. It enjoins upon its branches separateness but interdependence, autonomy but reciprocity." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635, 72 S.Ct. 863, 870, 96 L.Ed. 1153 (1952) (concurring opinion).

We have the authority to hold that Congress has usurped a judicial prerogative, but even if this case were doubtful I would heed Justice Iredell's admonition in Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall., at 399, that "the Court will never resort to that authority, but in a clear and urgent case." An appropriate regard for the interdependence of Congress and the judiciary amply supports the conclusion that § 27A(b) reflects constructive legislative cooperation 1477 rather than a usurpation of judicial prerogatives.

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264925

3

Supreme Court of the United States

CONCRETE PIPE AND PRODUCTS OF CALIFORNIA, INC., Petitioner
v.
CONSTRUCTION LABORERS PENSION TRUST FOR SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

No. 91-904.

Argued Dec. 1, 1992.
Decided June 14, 1993.

Employer filed action to set aside or modify arbitrator's decision as to employer's withdrawal liability to multiemployer pension plan under the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act (MPPAA). The United States District Court for the Central District of California granted plan's motion to confirm award, and employer appealed. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 936 F.2d 576, affirmed. The Supreme Court of the United States granted certiorari. The Supreme Court, Justice Souter, held that: (1) presumptions in the MPPAA favoring multiemployer plans did not violate due process rights of the employer by denying access to an impartial decision maker, and (2) MPPAA provisions did not violate the employer's Fifth Amendment rights as applied to employer's withdrawal liability.

Affirmed.

Justice O'Connor filed a concurring opinion.

Justice Scalia did not join Part III-B-1-b of the opinion of the Court.

Justice Thomas filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

West Headnotes

[1] Constitutional Law ⚖251.5
92k251.5 Most Cited Cases

Due process requires a neutral and detached judge in the first instance, and the command is no different when a legislature delegates adjudicative functions to a private party. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[2] Constitutional Law ⚖255(1)
92k255(1) Most Cited Cases

[2] Constitutional Law ⚖278(1)
92k278(1) Most Cited Cases

Before one may be deprived of a protected interest, whether in a criminal or civil setting, one is entitled as matter of due process of law to an adjudicator who is not in situation which would offer possible temptation to the average man as judge, which might lead him not to hold balance nice, clear and true. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[3] Constitutional Law ⚖251.5
92k251.5 Most Cited Cases

Even appeal and trial de novo will not cure the failure to provide a neutral and detached adjudicator required as a matter of due process. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[4] Constitutional Law ⚖251.5
92k251.5 Most Cited Cases

Requirement that justice must satisfy the appearance of justice, even to the point of requiring trial by judges who have no actual bias and would do their best to weigh the scales of justice equally between contending parties, applies where private party is given statutory authority to adjudicate a dispute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[5] Constitutional Law ⚖318(1)
92k318(1) Most Cited Cases

Where an initial determination is made by a party acting in an enforcement capacity, due process may be satisfied by providing for a neutral adjudicator to conduct de novo review of all factual and legal issues. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[6] Constitutional Law ⚖275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[6] Pensions ⚖103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Multiemployer pension plan trustees act only in an enforcement capacity, not in an adjudicatory capacity, and thus alleged bias or appearance of bias in trustees' initial determination of an employer's withdrawal liability did not alone violate due process right to impartial adjudicator; first adjudication was proceeding that occurred before arbitrator, not trustees' initial determination of withdrawal liability. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 4219(b)(1, 2), 4221(a)(1), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1399(b)(1, 2), 1401(a)(1).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[7] Pensions ⚿86
296k86 Most Cited Cases

Under the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, presumption favoring determination made by plan sponsor shifts burden of proof or persuasion to employer. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 4221(a)(3)(A), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1401(a)(3)(A).

[8] Evidence ⚿94
157k94 Most Cited Cases

Burden of showing something by a "preponderance of the evidence" simply requires trier of fact to believe that the existence of fact is more probable than its nonexistence before he may find in favor of party who has burden to persuade judge of fact's existence.

[9] Federal Courts ⚿853
170Bk853 Most Cited Cases

A finding is "clearly erroneous," when although there is evidence to support it, reviewing body on the entire evidence is left with the firm and definite conviction that a mistake has been committed.

[10] Federal Courts ⚿847
170Bk847 Most Cited Cases

[10] Federal Courts ⚿848
170Bk848 Most Cited Cases

A showing of "unreasonableness" would require even greater certainty of error on the part of a reviewing body than the "clearly erroneous" standard would require.

[11] Evidence ⚿598(1)
157k598(1) Most Cited Cases

A "preponderance of the evidence" standard is customarily used to prescribe one possible burden or standard of proof before a trier of fact in the first instance; before such burden can be satisfied, fact finder must evaluate the raw evidence, finding it to be sufficiently reliable and sufficiently probative to demonstrate the truth of the asserted proposition with requisite degree of certainty.

[12] Federal Courts ⚿847
170Bk847 Most Cited Cases

[12] Federal Courts ⚿848
170Bk848 Most Cited Cases

[12] Federal Courts ⚿850.1
170Bk850.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk850)

The terms "clearly erroneous" and "unreasonable" are customarily used to describe, not a degree of certainty that some fact has been proven in the first instance, but a degree of certainty that a fact finder in the first instance made a mistake in concluding that a fact has been proven under the applicable standard of proof, and thus are "standards of review" normally applied by reviewing courts to determinations of fact made at trial by courts that have made those determinations in an adjudicatory capacity. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 52(a), 28 U.S.C.A.

[13] Federal Courts ⚿853
170Bk853 Most Cited Cases

Review under the "clearly erroneous" standard is significantly deferential, requiring a "clear and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed."

[14] Federal Courts ⚿847
170Bk847 Most Cited Cases

[14] Federal Courts ⚿848
170Bk848 Most Cited Cases

Application of a "reasonableness" standard of review is more deferential than a "clearly erroneous" standard, requiring reviewer to sustain finding of fact unless it is so unlikely that no reasonable person would find it to be true, to whatever required degree of proof.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[15] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

When unresolved dispute as to employer's withdrawal liability under Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act is referred to arbitration, arbitrator is reviewing body, as is clear from his obligation absent contrary showing to deem certain determinations by plan sponsor correct, but is also a reviewing body invested with further powers of a fact finder, as is clear from his power to take evidence in course of his review and from presumption of correctness that district court is bound to give his findings of fact. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 4221(b)(3), (c), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1401(b)(3), (c).

[16] Evidence ⚿90
157k90 Most Cited Cases

Although where the burden of proof lies on a given issue is rarely without consequence, and frequently may be dispositive to the outcome of the litigation or application, the locus of the burden of persuasion is normally not an issue of federal constitutional moment outside the criminal law area.

[17] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Under the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, it is entirely sensible to burden party which is more likely to have information relevant to the facts about its withdrawal from the plan with the obligation to demonstrate that facts treated by the plan as amounting to a withdrawal did not occur as alleged. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001- 4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

[18] Constitutional Law ⚿48(4.1)
92k48(4.1) Most Cited Cases

[18] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Where statutory language was ambiguous and legislative history contained very little relevant to issue of degree of certainty on part of arbitrator required for employer to overcome sponsor's factual conclusions as to employer's withdrawal liability under Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, statute would be construed so as to avoid serious doubt as to its constitutionality. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14 .

[19] Constitutional Law ⚿275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[19] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Under the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, employer had burden of persuasion in a dispute over a sponsor's factual determination as to the employer's withdrawal liability; because that burden did not foreclose any factual issue from independent consideration by the arbitrator, there was no constitutional infirmity in it. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14 .

[20] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Determining the date of an employer's "complete withdrawal" from a multiemployer pension plan is a mixed question of fact and law. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461.

[21] Constitutional Law ⚿275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[21] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Where dispute as to employer's withdrawal liability under Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act was referred to arbitration, arbitrator's determination of date of withdrawal did not involve misapplication of statutory presumption and did not deprive employer of right to procedural due process; because plan's letter to employer contained no statement of facts justifying trustees' demand and because parties entered into factual stipulation in district court prior to commencing arbitration, there were virtually no contested factual determination as to which arbitrator might have deferred. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14 .

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[22] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Multiemployer pension plan actuary's selection of assumptions and methods to calculate withdrawal liability under the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act were not vulnerable to suggestions of bias or its appearance; actuaries were trained professionals subject to regulatory standard, and technical nature of actuary's assumptions and methods and necessity for applying same assumptions and methods in more than one context limited any opportunity actuary might otherwise have to act unfairly toward withdrawing employer. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 302(c)(3), 3041, 3042, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1082(c)(3), 1241, 1242; 26 U.S.C.A. § 7701(a)(35).

[23] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

Legislative history of ERISA provision suggested that actuarial assumptions in regard to withdrawal liability had to be independently determined by an actuary, and that it was inappropriate for employer to substitute his judgment for that of qualified actuary with respect to those assumptions. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 302, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1082.

[24] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases

In action in which employer challenged reasonableness of assumptions and methodology chosen by multiemployer pension plan actuary to calculate withdrawal liability, employer's burden of proof to show by preponderance of evidence that actuarial assumptions and methods were in the aggregate unreasonable was a burden to show that the combination of methods and assumptions used would not have been acceptable to a reasonable actuary. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 4221(a)(3)(A, B), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1401(a)(3)(A, B).

[25] Constitutional Law ⚿275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[25] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Under Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, requiring employer challenging methods and assumptions used by actuary in calculating employer's withdrawal liability to show that combination of methods and assumptions employed in calculation would not have been acceptable to reasonable actuary, did not violate due process. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 4221(a)(3)(A, B), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1401(a)(3)(A, B); U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

[26] Pensions ⚿24.1
296k24.1 Most Cited Cases

Multiemployer pension plan has features of insurance scheme in which employers spread risk that their employees will meet plan's vesting requirements and obtain entitlement to benefits.

[27] Constitutional Law ⚿275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[27] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, as applied to an employer which withdrew from a multiemployer pension plan, did not violate employer's substantive due process rights as the imposition of withdrawal liability was rationally related to terms of the employer's participation in plan; employer had voluntarily decided to enter plan after trustee decisions affecting calculation of withdrawal liability had been made and thus could have assessed any implications for plan's future liability at that time and could have assessed implications for future liability of identity of plan trustees before it decided to enter plan whose trustees included representatives of contractors' associations of which employer was not member. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Const.Amends. 5, 14.

[28] Eminent Domain ⚿2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

[28] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Application of Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act, a regulatory statute that was otherwise within Congress' powers, could not be defeated by private contractual provisions such as those protecting an employer from liability beyond what was specified in its collective bargaining and trust agreement, and thus application was not an unconstitutional taking. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[29] Eminent Domain ⚿2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

[29] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Application of Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act to employer's withdrawal liability did not deprive employer of its property without just compensation; government did not physically invade or permanently appropriate employer's assets for its own use, so as to warrant application of analysis as to whether portion of property taken was taken in its entirety. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[30] Eminent Domain ⚿2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

[30] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Application of Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act to employer's withdrawal liability did not take employer's property without just compensation on theory that property was taken for sole purpose of protecting Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC), a government body, from being forced to honor its pension insurance; any benefit to PBGC deriving from solvency of pension trust fund was merely incidental to primary congressional objective of protecting covered employees and beneficiaries of pension trusts. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[31] Constitutional Law ⚿23
92k23 Most Cited Cases

[31] Eminent Domain ⚿2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

Mere diminution in value of property, however serious, is insufficient to demonstrate a taking for purposes of the Fifth Amendment, and thus fact that employer had to pay out estimated 46% of shareholder equity to satisfy its withdrawal liability obligation to multiemployer pension plan was insufficient to show that an unconstitutional taking had occurred. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2 et seq., 4001-4402, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001 et seq., 1301-1461; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[32] Eminent Domain ⚿2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

[32] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases

Application of Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act to employer's withdrawal liability did not amount to a "taking" based on degree of interference with employer's reasonable investment backed expectations; at time employer began contributions to plan, pension plans had long been subject to federal regulation, plan was subject to ERISA, withdrawing employer faced contingent liability up to 30% of its net worth, and it had no reasonable basis to expect that legislative ceiling on contingent liability would never be lifted. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 4062(b), 4064, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1362(b), 1364; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

*2268 Syllabus [FN*]

FN* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

AMERICAN LAW REPORTS

Tort liability for nonmedical radiological harm. 73 ALR4th 582.

LIBRARY REFERENCES

American Digest System

Claims against the United States; statutory provisions, see United States 94.

Claims against United States founded on contracts, see United States 95.

Encyclopedias

Claims against the United States; statutory provisions in general, see C.J.S. United States § 137.

Claims against United States founded on contract in general, see C.J.S. United States § 138.

6 Am Jur 2d, Atomic Energy §§ 48, 53.

NOTES OF DECISIONS

Constitutionality 1
Substitution of United States party 2

1. Constitutionality

Former provisions of this section providing that action against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractor for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing program did not constitute taking under Fifth Amendment as applied to pending actions. In re Consolidated U.S. Atmospheric Testing Litigation, C.A.9 (Cal.) 1987, 820 F.2d 982, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1076, 485 U.S. 905, 99 L.Ed.2d 235.

By enacting former provisions of this section substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs and making the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346, 2671-2680, the sole remedies for those injuries, thereby retroactively abolishing widow's cause of action in tort for death of her husband from radiation, Congress abridged no vested rights of widow, as rights in tort do not vest until there is a final, unreviewable judgment. Hammond v. U.S., C.A.1 (Mass.) 1986, 786 F.2d 8.

2. Substitution of United States party

Former provisions of this section, providing that action against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractors for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing programs, required claims to be pursued in action solely against United States. Contractors were to be dismissed from such suits. In re Consolidated U.S. Atmospheric Testing Litigation, N.D.Cal.1985, 616 F.Supp. 759, affirmed 820 F.2d 982, certiorari denied 108 S.Ct. 1076, 485 U.S. 905, 99 L.Ed.2d 235.

42 U.S.C.A. § 2212

42 USCA § 2212

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

The Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA) amended the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) to provide that in certain circumstances an employer withdrawing from a multiemployer plan incurs as "withdrawal liability" a share of the plan's unfunded vested benefits, 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381, 1391. Withdrawal liability is assessed by means of a notification by the "plan sponsor" and a demand for payment. § 1399(b). An unresolved dispute is referred to arbitration, where (1) the sponsor's factual determinations are "presumed correct" unless a contesting party "shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination was unreasonable *2269 or clearly erroneous," § 1401(a)(3)(A); and (2) the sponsor's actuary's calculation of a plan's unfunded vested benefits is presumed correct unless a contesting party "shows by a preponderance of the evidence" that, inter alia, "the actuarial assumptions and methods" used in a calculation "were, in the aggregate, unreasonable," § 1401(a)(3)(B). Petitioner Concrete Pipe and Products of California, Inc., is an employer charged with withdrawal liability by the trustees of respondent, a multiemployer pension plan (Plan). After losing in arbitration, Concrete Pipe filed an action to set aside or modify the arbitrator's decision and raised a constitutional challenge to the MPPAA, but the District Court granted the Plan's motion to confirm the award. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held:

1. The MPPAA does not unconstitutionally deny Concrete Pipe an impartial adjudicator by placing the determination of withdrawal liability in the plan sponsor, here the trustees, subject to § 1401's presumptions. Pp. 2276- 2286.

(a) Even assuming that the possibility of trustee bias toward imposing the greatest possible withdrawal liability would suffice to bar the trustees from serving as adjudicators of Concrete Pipe's withdrawal liability because of their fiduciary obligations to beneficiaries of the Plan, the Due Process Clause is not violated here because the first adjudication in this case was the arbitration proceeding, not the trustees' initial liability determination. The trustees' statutory notification 603 and demand obligations are undertaken in an enforcement capacity. Pp. 2276-2278.

(b) Nor did the arbitrator's adjudication deny Concrete Pipe its right to procedural due process. While the § 1401(a)(3)(A) presumption shifts the burden of persuasion to the employer, the statute is incoherent with respect to the degree of certainty required to overturn a plan sponsor's factual determination. In light of the assumed bias, deference to a plan sponsor's determination would raise a substantial due process question. The uncertainty raised by this incoherent statute is resolved by applying the canon requiring that an ambiguous statute be construed to avoid serious constitutional problems unless such construction is plainly contrary to Congress's intent. Thus, the presumption is construed to place the burden on the employer to disprove an alleged fact by a preponderance permitting independent review by the arbitrator of the trustees' factual determinations. The approach taken by the arbitrator and courts below in this case is not inconsistent with this Court's interpretation of the first presumption. Pp. 2278-2284.

(c) The § 1401(a)(3)(B) presumption also raises no procedural due process issue. The assumptions and methods used in calculating withdrawal liability are selected in the first instance not by the trustees, but by the plan actuary, § 1393(c), who is a trained professional subject to regulatory standards. The technical nature of the assumptions and methods, and the necessity for applying the same ones in several contexts, limit an actuary's opportunity to act unfairly toward a withdrawing employer. Moreover, since § 1401(a)(3)(B) speaks not about the reasonableness of the trustees' conclusions of historical fact, but about the aggregate reasonableness of the actuary's assumptions and methods in calculating the dollar liability figure, an employer's burden to overcome the presumption is simply to show that an apparently unbiased professional, whose obligations tend to moderate any claimed inclination to come down hard on withdrawing employers, has based a calculation on a combination of methods and assumptions that falls outside the range of reasonable actuarial practice. Pp. 2284-2286.

2. The MPPAA, as applied, does not deny substantive due process in violation of the Fifth Amendment. The imposition of withdrawal liability is clearly rational here because Concrete Pipe's liability is based on 2270 a proportion of its contributions during its participation in the Plan. Pp. 2286-2289.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

3. The MPPAA, as applied, did not take Concrete Pipe's property without just compensation. The application of a regulatory statute that is otherwise within Congress's powers may not be defeated by private contractual provisions, such as those protecting Concrete Pipe from liability beyond what was specified in its collective-bargaining and trust *604 agreements. See Connolly v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 475 U.S. 211, 223-224, 106 S.Ct. 1018, 1025, 89 L.Ed.2d 166. Examining Concrete Pipe's relationship with the Plan in light of the three factors the Court has said have particular significance for takings claims confirms this. First, the Government did not physically invade or permanently appropriate Concrete Pipe's assets for its own use. Second, Concrete Pipe has failed to show that having to pay out an estimated 46% of shareholder equity is an economic impact out of proportion to its experience with the Plan, since diminution in a property's value, however serious, is insufficient to demonstrate a taking. See, e.g., Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 384, 47 S.Ct. 114, 117, 71 L.Ed. 303. Third, the conditions on its contractual promises did not give Concrete Pipe a reasonable expectation that it would not be faced with liability for promised benefits. At the time it began making payments to the Plan, pension plans had long been subject to federal regulation. Indeed, withdrawing employers already faced contingent liability under ERISA, and Concrete Pipe's reliance on ERISA's original limitation of contingent withdrawal liability to 30% of net worth is misplaced, there being no reasonable basis to expect that the legislative ceiling would never be lifted, see Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 16, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 2893, 49 L.Ed.2d 752. Pp. 2289- 2292.

936 F.2d 576 (CA9 1991), affirmed.

SOUTER, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, which was unanimous except insofar as O'CONNOR, J., did not join the statement to which n. 28 is attached, SCALIA, J., did not join Part III-B-1-b, and THOMAS, J., did not join Part III-B-1. O'CONNOR, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. ----. THOMAS, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, post, p. ----.

Dennis R. Murphy, Sacramento, CA, for petitioner.

John S. Miller, Jr., Los Angeles, CA, for respondent.

Carol Connor Flowe, Washington, DC, for Pension Ben. Guar. Corp. as amicus curiae by special leave of the Court.

*605 Justice SOUTER delivered the opinion of the Court. [FN1]

> FN1. Justice SCALIA does not join Part III-B-1-b of this opinion.

Respondent Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern California (Plan) is a multiemployer pension trust fund established under a Trust Agreement executed in 1962. Petitioner Concrete Pipe and Products of California, Inc. (Concrete Pipe), is an employer and former contributor to the Plan that withdrew from it and was assessed "withdrawal liability" under provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), 29 U.S.C. §§ 1301-1461 (1988 ed. and Supp. III), added by the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA), Pub.L. 96-364, 94 Stat. 1208. Concrete Pipe contends that the MPPAA's assessment and arbitration provisions worked to deny it procedural due process. And, although we have upheld the MPPAA against constitutional challenge under the substantive component of the Due Process Clause and the Takings Clause, Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 104 S.Ct. 2709, 81 L.Ed.2d 601 (1984); Connolly v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 475 U.S. 211, 106 S.Ct. 1018, 89 L.Ed.2d 166 (1986), Concrete Pipe contends that, as applied to it, the MPPAA violates these provisions as well. 2271 We see merit in none of Concrete Pipe's contentions.

I

A pension plan like the one in issue, to which more than one employer contributes, is characteristically maintained to fulfill the terms of collective-bargaining agreements. The contributions made by employers participating in such a multiemployer plan are pooled in a general fund available to pay any benefit obligation of the plan. To receive benefits, an *606 employee participating in such a plan need not work for one employer for any particular continuous period. Because service credit is portable, employees of an employer participating in the plan may receive such credit for any work done for any participating employer. An employee obtains a vested right to secure benefits upon retirement after accruing a certain length of service for participating employers; benefits vest under the Plan in this case when an employee accumulates 10 essentially continuous years of credit. See Brief for Petitioner 28.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264933

Multiemployer plans like the one before us have features that are beneficial in industries where > "there [is] little if any likelihood that individual employers would or could establish single-employer plans for their employees ...[,] where there are hundreds and perhaps thousands of small employers, with countless numbers of employers going in and out of business each year, [and where] the nexus of employment has focused on the relationship of the workers to the union to which they belong, and/or the industry in which they are employed, rather than to any particular employer." Multiemployer Pension Plan Termination Insurance Program: Hearings before the Subcommittee on Oversight of the House Committee on Ways and Means, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., 50 (1979) (statement of Robert A. Georgine, Chairman, National Coordinating Committee for Multiemployer Plans).

Multiemployer plans provide the participating employers with such labor market benefits as the opportunity to offer a pension program (a significant part of the covered employees' compensation package) with cost and risk-sharing mechanisms advantageous to the employer. The plans, in consequence, help ensure that each participating employer will have access to a trained labor force whose members are able to move from one employer and one job to another without *607 losing service credit toward pension benefits. See 29 CFR § 2530.210(c)(1) (1991); accord, Washington Star Co. v. International Typographical Union Negotiated Pension Plan, 582 F.Supp. 301, 304 (DC1983).

Since the enactment of ERISA in 1974, the Plan has been subject to the provisions of the statute as a "defined benefit plan." Such a plan is one that does not qualify as an " 'individual account plan' or 'defined contribution plan,' " which provide, among other things, for an individual account for each covered employee and for benefits based solely upon the amount contributed to the covered employee's account. See 29 U.S.C. §§ 1002(35), 1002(34), 1002(7). Concrete Pipe has not challenged the determination that the Plan falls within the statutory definition of defined benefit plan, and no issue as to that is before the Court.

A

We have canvassed the history of ERISA and the MPPAA before. See Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation v. R.A. Gray & Co., supra; Connolly v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, supra. ERISA was designed "to ensure that employees and their beneficiaries would not be deprived of anticipated retirement benefits by the termination of pension plans before sufficient funds have been accumulated in [them].... Congress wanted to guarantee that if a worker has been promised a defined pension benefit upon retirement--and if he has fulfilled whatever conditions are required to obtain a vested benefit--he will actually receive it." Id., 475 U.S., at 214, 106 S.Ct., at 1020 (citations 2272 and internal quotation marks omitted). As enacted in 1974, ERISA created the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC) to administer and enforce a pension plan termination insurance program, to which contributors to both single-member and multiemployer plans were required to pay insurance premiums. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1302(a), 1306 (1988 ed. and Supp. III). Under the terms of the statute as originally enacted, the guarantee of basic *608 benefits by multiemployer plans that terminated was not to be mandatory until 1978, and for terminations prior to that time, any guarantee of benefits upon plan termination was discretionary with PBGC. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381(c)(2)-(4) (1976 ed.). If PBGC did choose to extend a guarantee when a multiemployer plan terminated with insufficient assets to pay promised benefits, an employer that had contributed to the plan in the five preceding years was liable to PBGC for the shortfall in proportion to its share of contributions during that 5-year period, up to 30 percent of the employer's net worth. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1362(b), 1364 (1976 ed.). "In other words, any employer withdrawing from a multiemployer plan was subject to a contingent liability that was dependent upon the plan's termination in the next five years and the PBGC's decision to exercise its discretion and pay guaranteed benefits." Gray, 467 U.S., at 721, 104 S.Ct. at 2713.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264934

"As the date for mandatory coverage of multiemployer plans approached, Congress became concerned that a significant number of plans were experiencing extreme financial hardship." Ibid. Indeed, the possibility of liability upon termination of a plan created an incentive for employers to withdraw from weak multiemployer plans. Connolly, 475 U.S., at 215, 106 S.Ct. at 1021. The consequent risk to the insurance system was unacceptable to Congress, which in 1978 postponed the mandatory guarantee pending preparation by the PBGC of a report "analyzing the problems of multiemployer plans and recommending possible solutions." Ibid. PBGC issued that report on July 1, 1978. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, Multiemployer Study Required by P.L. 95-214 (1978). "To alleviate the problem of employer withdrawals, the PBGC suggested new rules under which a withdrawing employer would be required to pay whatever share of the plan's unfunded liabilities was attributable to that employer's participation." Connolly, 475 U.S., at 216, 106 S.Ct. at 1021 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

609 Congress ultimately agreed, see id., at 217, 106 S.Ct. at 1022, and passed the MPPAA, which was signed into law by the President on September 26, 1980. Under certain provisions of the MPPAA (which when enacted had an effective date of April 29, 1980, 29 U.S.C. § 1461(e)(2)(A) (1976 ed., Supp. V)), if an employer withdraws from a multiemployer plan, it incurs "withdrawal liability" in the form of "a fixed and certain debt to the pension plan." Gray, supra, 467 U.S., at 725, 104 S.Ct. at 2715. An employer's withdrawal liability is its "proportionate share of the plan's 'unfunded vested benefits,' " that is, "the difference between the present value of vested benefits" (benefits that are currently being paid to retirees and that will be paid in the future to covered employees who have already completed some specified period of service, 29 U.S.C. § 1053) "and the current value of the plan's assets. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381, 1391." Gray, supra, 467 U.S., at 725, 104 S.Ct. at 2715. [FN2]

FN2. In various places the statute uses the terms "participant" and "beneficiary," and these terms are defined at 29 U.S.C. §§ 1002(7), 1002(8). For simplicity, we will use the term "covered employee" to refer depending on context both to those earning service credits and to those entitled to benefits.

B

The MPPAA provides the procedure for calculating and assessing withdrawal liability. *2273 The plan's actuary, who is subject to regulatory and professional standards, 29 U.S.C. §§ 1241, 1242; 26 U.S.C. § 7701(a)(35), must determine the present value of the plan's liability for vested benefits. [FN3] In the absence of regulations promulgated by the PBGC, the actuary must employ "actuarial assumptions and methods which, in the aggregate, are reasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations) and which, in combination, offer the actuary's best estimate of anticipated experience under the plan." 29 U.S.C. 610 § 1393(a)(1). [FN4] The assumptions must cover such matters as mortality of covered employees, likelihood of benefits vesting, and, importantly, future interest rates. After settling the present value of vested benefits, the actuary calculates the unfunded portion by deducting the value of the plan's assets. § 1393(c).

FN3. Even if no employer withdraws, ERISA requires an assessment of the plan's liability at least annually. See 29 U.S.C. § 1082(c)(9) (1988 ed., Supp. III).

FN4. While the PBGC is also authorized to promulgate regulations governing such assumptions under 29 U.S.C. § 1393(a), it has not done so. See Brief for Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. as Amicus Curiae 7, n. 7.

In order to determine a particular employer's withdrawal liability, the unfunded vested liability is allocated under one of several methods provided by law. § 1391. In this case, the Plan used the presumptive method of § 1391(b), which bases withdrawal liability on the proportion of total employer contributions to the plan made by the withdrawing employer during certain 5- year periods. See §§ 1391(b)(2)(E)(ii), (b)(3)(B), (b)(4)(D)(ii). In essence, the withdrawal liability imposes on the withdrawing employer a share of the unfunded vested liability proportional to the employer's share of contributions to the plan during the years of its participation.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Withdrawal liability is assessed in a notification by the "plan sponsor" (here the trustees, see § 1301(a)(10)(A)) and a demand for payment. § 1399(b). The statute requires notification and demand to be made "[a]s soon as practicable after an employer's complete or partial withdrawal." § 1399(b)(1). A "complete withdrawal"

"occurs when an employer--

"(1) Permanently ceases to have an obligation to contribute under the plan, or

"(2) permanently ceases all covered operations under the plan." § 1383(a). [FN5]

FN5. There is an exception to this definition that applies to the building and construction industry, see § 1383(b), but neither party argues that it pertains in this case.

611 "[T]he date of a complete withdrawal is the date of the cessation of the obligation to contribute or the cessation of covered operations." § 1383(e).

The statute provides that if an employer objects after notice and demand for withdrawal liability, and the parties cannot resolve the dispute, § 1399(b)(2), it shall be referred to arbitration. See § 1401(a)(1). Two presumptions may attend the arbitration. First, "any determination made by a plan sponsor under [29 U.S.C. §§ 1381-1399 and 1405 (1988 ed. and Supp. III)] is presumed correct unless the party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination was unreasonable or clearly erroneous." 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(A). Second, the sponsor's calculation of a plan's unfunded vested benefits.

"is presumed correct unless a party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of evidence that--

"(i) the actuarial assumptions and methods used in the determination were, in the aggregate, unreasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations), or

"(ii) the plan's actuary made a significant error in applying the actuarial assumptions or methods." § 1401(a)(3)(B).

*2274 The statute provides for judicial review of the arbitrator's decision by an action in the district court to enforce, vacate, or modify the award. See § 1401(b)(2). In any such action "there shall be a presumption, rebuttable only by a clear preponderance of the evidence, that the findings of fact made by the arbitrator were correct." § 1401(c)

.

II

The parties to the Trust Agreement creating the Plan in 1962 are the Southern California District Council of Laborers (Laborers) and three associations of contractors, the 612 Building Industry of California, Inc., the Engineering Contractors Association, and the Southern California Contractors Association, Inc. App. 75, ¶ 6 (stipulation of facts filed in the District Court). Under § 302(c)(5)(B) of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947 (LMRA), 29 U.S.C. § 186(c)(5)(B), when a union participates in management of a plan permitted by the LMRA, the plan must be administered jointly by representatives of labor and management. Accordingly, half of the Plan's trustees are selected by the Laborers, and half by these contractors' associations. Concrete Pipe has never been a member of any of the contractors' associations that are parties to the Trust Agreement.

In 1976, Concrete Pipe, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of Concrete Pipe and Products Co., Inc., purchased certain assets of another company, Cen-Vi-Ro, including a concrete pipe manufacturing plant near Shafter, California, which Concrete Pipe continued to operate much as Cen-Vi-Ro had done. Cen-Vi- Ro had collective-bargaining agreements with several unions including the Laborers, and Concrete Pipe abided by the agreement with the latter by contributing to the Plan at a specified rate for each hour worked by a covered employee. [FN6] In 1978, Concrete Pipe negotiated a new 3-year contract with the Laborers that called for continuing contributions to be made to the Plan based on hours worked by covered employees in the collective-bargaining unit. [FN7] The collective-bargaining agreement specified that it would remain in effect until June 30, 1981, and thereafter from year to year unless either Concrete Pipe or the Laborers gave notice of a desire to renegotiate or terminate it. " 'Such written notice [was to] be given at least sixty (60) 613 days prior to June 30 ... [and if] no agreement [was] reached by June 30 ... the Employer or the [Laborers might] thereafter give written notice to the other that on a specified date [at least] fifteen (15) days [thereafter] the Agreement [should] be considered terminated.' " App. 76.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264936

FN6. The average rate for covered employees at which Concrete Pipe contributed to the Plan in 1977 was $1.14 per hour, and Concrete Pipe's contributions for 1977 totaled $29,337.71.

FN7. The collective-bargaining agreement provided for contributions for each laborer at a rate of $1.20 per hour. In 1978 Concrete Pipe's total contribution to the Plan was $49,913.04, and in 1979 it was $20,826.60.

In August 1979, Concrete Pipe stopped production at the Shafter facility. Although the details do not matter here, by October 1979, work by employees covered by the agreement with the Laborers had virtually ceased, and Concrete Pipe eventually stopped making contributions to the Plan. In the spring of 1981, Concrete Pipe and the Laborers each sent the other a timely notice of a desire to renegotiate the collective-bargaining agreement. Concrete Pipe subsequently bargained to an impasse and, on November 30, 1981, sent the Laborers a letter withdrawing recognition of that union as an employee representative, and giving notice of intent to terminate the 1978 collective- bargaining agreement. At about the same time, however, in November 1981, Concrete Pipe reopened the Shafter plant to produce 7,000 tons of concrete pipe needed to fill two orders for which it had successfully bid. It hired employees in classifications covered by 2275 its prior agreement with the Laborers, but did not contribute to the Plan for their work.

In January 1982, the Plan notified Concrete Pipe of withdrawal liability claimed to amount to $268,168.81. See id., at 89-94. Although the demand letter did not specify the date on which the Plan contended that "complete withdrawal" from it had taken place, it referred to the failure of Concrete Pipe to make contributions to the Plan since February 1981, and stated that "[w]e are further advised that you have not signed a renewal of a collective bargaining agreement obligating you to continue contributions to the Plan on behalf of the Construction laborers currently in your employ." Id., at 90.

The Plan filed suit seeking the assessed withdrawal liability. Concrete Pipe countersued to bar collection, contending *614 that "complete withdrawal" had occurred when operations at the Shafter plant ceased in August 1979, a date prior to the effective date of the MPPAA, and challenging the MPPAA on constitutional grounds. These cases were consolidated in the United States District Court for the Central District of California, which sua sponte ordered the parties to arbitrate the issue of whether withdrawal occurred prior to the effective date of the MPPAA. [FN8]

FN8. The District Court concluded that the effective date of the withdrawal liability provisions of the MPPAA was September 26, 1980, in reliance on the Ninth Circuit's decision in Shelter Framing Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 705 F.2d 1502 (1983), which held the retroactivity provision of the MPPAA unconstitutional. App. 198. The decision in Shelter Framing was reversed by this Court in Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 104 S.Ct. 2709, 81 L.Ed.2d 601 (1984). Subsequent to this Court's decision in Gray, Congress amended the effective date of the MPAA's withdrawal liability provisions. See 29 U.S.C. § 1461(e)(2)(A).

The arbitration took place in two phases. In the first, the arbitrator determined that Concrete Pipe had not withdrawn from the Plan prior to the effective date of the MPPAA. App. 216. In the second phase, explicitly applying the presumption of 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(B), the arbitrator found that Concrete Pipe had failed to meet its burden of showing the actuarial assumptions and methods to be unreasonable in the aggregate. App. 400. For reasons not at issue here, the arbitrator did rule partially in Concrete Pipe's favor, and reduced the withdrawal liability from $268,168.61 to $190,465.57.

Concrete Pipe then filed a third action in the District Court, to set aside or modify the arbitrator's decision, and again raised its constitutional challenge. Id., at 406. The District Court treated Concrete Pipe's subsequent motion for summary judgment as a petition to vacate the arbitrator's award, which it denied, and granted a motion by the Plan to confirm the award. Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern California v. Cen-Vi-Ro Concrete Pipe *615 and Products,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264937

CV-82-5184-HLH (CD Cal., July 5, 1989), App. 416-425. [FN9] On Concrete Pipe's appeal, the judgment of the District Court was affirmed. Board of Trustees of Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern California v. Concrete Pipe and Products of California, Inc., 936 F.2d 576 (CA9 1991), App. 431-432, judgt. order reported at 935 F.3d 576. We granted certiorari limited to two questions presented, which are set out in the margin. 504 U.S. 940, 112 S.Ct. 2273, 119 L.Ed.2d 200 (1992). [FN10]

FN9. In its motion to confirm the award, the Plan also asked that it be modified. The District Court treated this as a motion to vacate the arbitration award and denied it as well. See App. 416. The Plan did not appeal.

FN10. Our grant of certiorari was limited to the questions: "Do the presumptions in 29 U.S.C. § 1401 favoring multiemployer plans like Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern California ... violate the due process rights of Concrete Pipe and Products by denying access to an impartial decisionmaker?" and "Do the provisions of the Multi-Employer Pension Plan Amendments Act ... violate the Fifth Amendment rights of Concrete Pipe and Products, as applied, by retroactively imposing withdrawal liability on an employer who never had employees vested in the pension plan and whose collective bargaining agreements specifically limited liability to contributions made?" Pet. for Cert. i.

*2276 III

Concrete Pipe challenges the assessment of withdrawal liability on several grounds, the first being that by placing determination of withdrawal liability in the trustees, subject to the presumptions provided by § 1401, the MPPAA is unconstitutional because it denies Concrete Pipe an impartial adjudicator. This is not the first time this legal question has been before the Court. See Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation v. Yahn & McDonnell, Inc., 481 U.S. 735, 107 S.Ct. 2171, 95 L.Ed.2d 692 (1987), aff'g by an equally divided Court United Retail & Wholesale Employees Teamsters Union Local No. 115 Pension Plan v. Yahn & McDonnell, Inc., 787 F.2d 128 (CA3 1986)

.

616 A

1

Concrete Pipe and its amici point to several potential sources of trustee bias toward imposing the greatest possible withdrawal liability. The one they emphasize most strongly has roots in the fact that "all of the trustees, including those selected by employers, are fiduciaries of the fund, 29 U.S.C. § 1002(21)([A]), and thus owe an exclusive duty to the fund." Id., at 139 (emphasis omitted). As we said in another case discussing employee benefit pension plans permitted under LMRA:

"Under principles of equity, a trustee bears an unwavering duty of complete loyalty to the beneficiary of the trust, to the exclusion of the interests of all other parties. To deter the trustee from all temptation and to prevent any possible injury to the beneficiary, the rule against a trustee dividing his loyalties must be enforced with 'uncompromising rigidity.'

. . . . .

"In sum, the duty of the management-appointed trustee of an employee benefit fund under § 302(c)(5) is directly antithetical to that of an agent of the appointing party.... ERISA essentially codified the strict fiduciary standards that a § 302(c)(5) trustee must meet. [Title 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1)] requires a trustee to 'discharge his duties ... solely in the interest of the participants [i.e., covered employees] and beneficiaries.' " NLRB v. Amax Coal Co., 453 U.S. 322, 329-332, 101 S.Ct. 2789, 2794-2795, 69 L.Ed.2d 672 (1981) (citations and footnote omitted).

The resulting tug away from the interest of the employer is fueled by the threat of personal liability for any breach of the trustees' fiduciary responsibilities, obligations, or duties, 29 U.S.C. § 1109, which may be enforced by civil actions brought by the Secretary of Labor or any covered employee or beneficiary of the plan, § 1132(a)(2).

617 The trustees could act in a biased fashion for several reasons. The most obvious would be in attempting to maximize assets available for the beneficiaries of the trust by making findings to enhance withdrawal liability. The next would not be so selfless, for if existing underfunding was the consequence of prior decisions of the trustees, those decisions could, if not offset, leave the trustees open to personal liability. See Brief for American Trucking Associations, Inc., as Amicus Curiae 9. A risk of bias may also inhere in the mere fact that, fiduciary obligations aside, the trustees are appointed by the unions and by employers. Union trustees may be thought to have incentives, unrelated to the question of withdrawal, to impose greater rather than lesser withdrawal liability. Employer trustees may be responsive to concerns of those employers who continue to contribute, whose future burdens may be reduced by high withdrawal liability, and whose competitive position may be enhanced to boot. See Brief for Midwest Motor Express, Inc., et al. as Amici Curiae 8, citing Note, Trading Fairness for Efficiency: Constitutionality of the Dispute Resolution Procedures of the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980, 71 Geo.L.J. 161, 168 (1982).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

2277 [1][2][3] As against these supposed threats to the trustees' neutrality, due process requires a "neutral and detached judge in the first instance," Ward v. Village of Monroeville, 409 U.S. 57, 61-62, 93 S.Ct. 80, 84, 34 L.Ed.2d 267 (1972), and the command is no different when a legislature delegates adjudicative functions to a private party, see Schweiker v. McClure, 456 U.S. 188, 195, 102 S.Ct. 1665, 1669, 72 L.Ed.2d 1 (1982). "That officers acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity are disqualified by their interest in the controversy to be decided is, of course, the general rule." Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 522, 47 S.Ct. 437, 441, 71 L.Ed. 749 (1927). Before one may be deprived of a protected interest, whether in a criminal or civil setting, see Marshall v. Jerrico, Inc., 446 U.S. 238, 242, and n. 2, 100 S.Ct. 1610, 1613, and n. 2, 64 L.Ed.2d 182 (1980), one is entitled as a matter of due process of law to an adjudicator who is not in a situation " 'which would offer a possible *618 temptation to the average man as a judge ... which might lead him not to hold the balance nice, clear and true....' " Ward, supra, 409 U.S. at 60, 93 S.Ct. at 81 (quoting Tumey, supra, 273 U.S., at 532, 47 S.Ct., at 444). Even appeal and a trial de novo will not cure a failure to provide a neutral and detached adjudicator. 409 U.S., at 61, 93 S.Ct. at 83.

[4] "[J]ustice," indeed, "must satisfy the appearance of justice, and this stringent rule may sometimes bar trial [even] by judges who have no actual bias and who would do their very best to weigh the scales of justice equally between contending parties." Marshall v. Jerrico, Inc., supra, 446 U.S., at 243, 100 S.Ct., at 1613 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). This, too, is no less true where a private party is given statutory authority to adjudicate a dispute, and we will assume that the possibility of bias, if only that stemming from the trustees' statutory role and fiduciary obligation, would suffice to bar the trustees from serving as adjudicators of Concrete Pipe's withdrawal liability.

2

[5] The assumption does not win the case for Concrete Pipe, however, for a further strand of governing law has to be applied. Not all determinations affecting liability are adjudicative, and the " 'rigid requirements' ... designed for officials performing judicial or quasi-judicial functions, are not applicable to those acting in a prosecutorial or plaintiff-like capacity." 446 U.S., at 248, 100 S.Ct., at 1616. Where an initial determination is made by a party acting in an enforcement capacity, due process may be satisfied by providing for a neutral adjudicator to "conduct a de novo review of all factual and legal issues." Cf. id., at 245, 100 S.Ct., at 1614; see also id., at 247-248, and n. 9, 100 S.Ct., at 1615 and n. 9; cf. Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S. 35, 58, 95 S.Ct. 1456, 1470, 43 L.Ed.2d 712 (1975) ("Clearly, if the initial view of the facts based on the evidence derived from nonadversarial processes as a practical or legal matter foreclosed fair and effective consideration at a subsequent adversary hearing leading to ultimate decision, a substantial due process question would be raised").

[6] *619 The distinction between adjudication and enforcement disposes of the claim that the assumed bias or appearance of bias in the trustees' initial determination of withdrawal liability alone violates the Due Process Clause, much as it did the similar claim in Marshall v. Jerrico. Although we were faced there with a federal agency administrator who determined violations of a child labor law and assessed penalties under the statute, we concluded that the administrator could not be held to the high standards required of those "whose duty it is to make the final decision and whose impartiality serves as the ultimate guarantee of a fair and meaningful proceeding in our constitutional regime." 446 U.S., at 250, 100 S.Ct. at 1617. Of the administrator there we said, "He is not a judge. He performs no judicial or quasi-judicial functions. He hears no witnesses and rules on no disputed factual or legal questions. The function of assessing a violation 2278 is akin to that of a prosecutor or civil plaintiff." Id., at 247, 100 S.Ct., at 1615.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264939

This analysis applies with equal force to the trustees, who, we find, act only in an enforcement capacity. The statute requires the plan sponsor, here the trustees, to notify the employer of the amount of withdrawal liability and to demand payment, 29 U.S.C. § 1399(b)(1), actions that bear the hallmarks of an assessment, not an adjudication. The trustees are not required to hold a hearing, to examine witnesses, or to adjudicate the disputes of contending parties on matters of fact or law. [FN11] In Marshall, we observed that an employer "except[ing] to a penalty ... is entitled to a de novo hearing before an administrative law judge," 446 U.S., at 247, 100 S.Ct., at 1615, and we concluded that this latter proceeding was the *620 "initial adjudication," id., at 247, n. 9, 100 S.Ct., at 1615, n. 9. Likewise here, we conclude that the first adjudication is the proceeding that occurs before the arbitrator, not the trustees' initial determination of liability. [FN12]

FN11. While the employer "may ask the plan sponsor to review any specific matter relating to the determination of the employer's liability and the schedule of payments," 29 U.S.C. § 1399(b)(2) , and while the plan sponsor must then respond, ibid., this hardly amounts to "adjudication." The statute does not require the employer to exhaust the avenue of making a request of the plan sponsor prior to initiating arbitration proceedings. See § 1401(a)(1).

FN12. "[W]e need not say with precision what limits there may be on a financial or personal interest of one who performs a prosecutorial function," Marshall, 446 U.S., at 250, 100 S.Ct., at 1617 (footnote omitted), as that issue is not within the scope of the questions on which we granted certiorari in this case.

B

This does not end our inquiry, however, for Concrete Pipe goes on to argue that the statutory presumptions preserve the trustees' bias by limiting the arbitrator's autonomy to determine withdrawal liability, and thereby work to deny the employer a fair adjudication.

1

Under the first provision at issue here, "any determination made by the plan sponsor under [29 U.S.C. §§ 1381-1399 and 1405] is presumed correct unless the party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination was unreasonable or clearly erroneous." 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(A). Concrete Pipe argues that this presumption denied it an impartial adjudicator on the issue of its withdrawal date, thus raising a constitutional question on which the Courts of Appeals have divided. [FN13]

FN13. The Courts of Appeals for the First, Second, Fourth, Ninth, and District of Columbia Circuits have found the provision at issue constitutional, while the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has struck it down. Compare Keith Fulton & Sons, Inc. v. New England Teamsters and Trucking Indus. Pension Fund, Inc., 762 F.2d 1137, 1140-1143 (CA1 1985) (en banc); Board of Trustees of Western Conference of Teamsters Pension Trust Fund v. Thompson Bldg. Materials, Inc., 749 F.2d 1396, 1403- 1404 (CA9 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1054, 105 S.Ct. 2116, 85 L.Ed.2d 481 (1985); Washington Star Co. v. International Typographical Union Negotiated Pension Plan, 235 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 10, 729 F.2d 1502, 1511 (1984); Textile Workers Pension Fund v. Standard Dye & Finishing Co., 725 F.2d 843, 855 (CA2), cert. denied sub nom. Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co. v. Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers, 467 U.S. 1259, 104 S.Ct. 3554, 82 L.Ed.2d 856 (1984); and Republic Indus., Inc. v. Teamsters Joint Council No. 83 of Virginia Pension Fund, 718 F.2d 628, 639-641 (CA4 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1259, 104 S.Ct. 3553, 82 L.Ed.2d 855 (1984), with United Retail & Wholesale Employees Teamsters Union Local No. 115 Pension Plan v. Yahn & McDonnell, Inc., 787 F.2d 128, 138-142 (CA3 1986), aff'd by an equally divided Court sub nom. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation v. Yahn & McDonnell, Inc., 481 U.S. 735, 107 S.Ct. 2171, 95 L.Ed.2d 692 (1987).

*621 The parties apparently agree that this presumption applies only to factual determinations, see Reply Brief for Petitioner 17; Brief for Respondent 24 (deferring to brief for the PBGC as amicus curiae); Brief for Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation as Amicus Curiae 10, and n. 11, and this position is consistent with a PBGC regulation requiring the arbitrator "[i]n reaching his 2279 decision [to] follow applicable law, as embodied in statutes, regulations, court decisions, interpretations of the agencies charged with the enforcement of the Act, and other pertinent authorities," 29 CFR § 2641.4(a)(1) (1992). We will assume for purposes of this case that the regulation reflects a sound reading of the statute. [FN14]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264940

> FN14. There is no utility in attempting to construe § 1401(a)(3)(A) finely to apply the "unreasonable" standard to certain determinations possible under § § 1381-1399 and 1405, and the "clearly erroneous" formulation to others. These distinctions are not relevant in light of the relationship in this context of both of these terms to the statutory phrase requiring a showing "by a preponderance," which we explain below.

a

[7] It is clear that the presumption favoring determinations of the plan sponsor shifts a burden of proof or persuasion to the employer. The hard question is what the employer must show under the statute to rebut the plan sponsor's factual determinations, that is, how and to what degree of probability the employer must persuade the arbitrator that the sponsor was wrong. The question is hard because the statutory text refers to three different concepts in identifying this burden: "preponderance," "clearly erroneous," and "unreasonable."

[8][9][10] 622 The burden of showing something by a "preponderance of the evidence," the most common standard in the civil law, "simply requires the trier of fact 'to believe that the existence of a fact is more probable than its nonexistence before [he] may find in favor of the party who has the burden to persuade the [judge] of the fact's existence.' " In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 371-372, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 1076, 25 L.Ed.2d 368 (1970) (Harlan, J., concurring) (brackets in original) (citation omitted). "A finding is 'clearly erroneous' when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing [body] on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 525, 542, 92 L.Ed. 746 (1948). A showing of "unreasonableness" would require even greater certainty of error on the part of a reviewing body. See, e.g., Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2512, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986).

[11] In creating the presumption at issue, these terms are combined in a very strange way. As our descriptions indicate, the first, "preponderance," is customarily used to prescribe one possible burden or standard of proof before a trier of fact in the first instance, as when the proponent of a proposition loses unless he proves a contested proposition by a preponderance of the evidence. The term thus belongs in the same category with "clear and convincing" and "beyond a reasonable doubt," which are also used to prescribe standards of proof (but when greater degrees of certainty are thought necessary). Before any such burden can be satisfied in the first instance, the factfinder must evaluate the raw evidence, finding it to be sufficiently reliable and sufficiently probative to demonstrate the truth of the asserted proposition with the requisite degree of certainty.

[12] The second and third terms differ from the first in an important way. They are customarily used to describe, not a degree of certainty that some fact has been proven in the first instance, but a degree of certainty that a factfinder in the first instance made a mistake in concluding that a fact 623 had been proven under the applicable standard of proof. They are, in other words, standards of review, and they are normally applied by reviewing courts to determinations of fact made at trial by courts that have made those determinations in an adjudicatory capacity (unlike the trustees here). See, e.g., Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 52(a). As the terms readily indicate, a reviewing body characteristically examines prior findings in such a way as to give the original factfinder's conclusions of fact some degree of deference. This makes sense because in many circumstances the costs of providing for duplicative *2280 proceedings are thought to outweigh the benefits (the second would render the first ultimately useless), and because, in the usual case, the factfinder is in a better position to make judgments about the reliability of some forms of evidence than a reviewing body acting solely on the basis of a written record of that evidence. Evaluation of the credibility of a live witness is the most obvious example.

[13][14] Thus, review under the "clearly erroneous" standard is significantly deferential, requiring a "definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." And application of a reasonableness standard is even more deferential than that, requiring the reviewer to sustain a finding of fact unless it is so unlikely that no reasonable person would find it to be true, to whatever the required degree of proof.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264941

[redacted]

[15] The strangeness in the statutory language creating the first presumption arises from the combination of terms from the first category (burdens of proof) with those from the second (standards of review). It is true, of course, that this apparent confusion of categories may have resulted from the hybrid nature of the arbitrator's proceeding in which it is supposed to be applied. The arbitrator here does not function simply as a reviewing body in the classic sense, for he is not only obliged to enquire into the soundness of the sponsor's determinations when they are challenged, but may receive new evidence in the course of his review and adopt his own conclusions of fact. He may conduct proceedings in the 624 same manner and with the same powers as an arbitrator may do under Title 9 of the United State Code, see 29 U.S.C. § 1401(b)(3), being authorized, for example, to hear (indeed to subpoena) witnesses and to take evidence. See 9 U.S.C. § 7; 29 U.S.C. § 1401(b)(3) (making specific reference to subpoena power). He is, then, a reviewing body (as is clear from his obligation, absent a contrary showing, to deem certain determinations by the plan sponsor correct), but a reviewing body invested with the further powers of a finder of fact (as is clear from his power to take evidence in the course of his review and from the presumption of correctness that a district court is bound to give his "findings of fact," § 1401(c)). The arbitrator may thus provide a dual sort of trial and review, ultimately empowered to draw his own conclusions, and it would make sense to describe his different functions respectively by the language of trial and the language of review.

It does not, however, make sense to use the language of trial and the language of review as the statute does, for the statute does not refer to different arbitrator's functions in language appropriate to each; it refers, rather, to one single conclusion that must be drawn about a determination previously made by a plan sponsor. By its terms the statute purports to provide a standard for reviewing the sponsor's findings, and it defines the nature of the conclusion the arbitrator must draw by using a combination of terms that are categorically ill-matched. They are also inconsistent with each other on any reading. As used here, as distinct from its more usual context, the statutory phrase authorizing the arbitrator to reject a factual conclusion upon proof by a "preponderance" implies review of the sponsor's determination on the basis of the record, supplemented by any new evidence, for simple error. If this statutory phrase were given effect, and the arbitrator concluded from a review of the record and of new evidence that a finding of fact was more probably wrong than not, it would be rejected, and a different 625 finding might be substituted. On the other hand, requiring a showing that the sponsor's determination was "clearly erroneous" or "unreasonable" would grant the plan sponsor's factual findings a great deal of deference. But to say in this context that one must demonstrate that something is more probably clearly erroneous than not or more probably than not unreasonable is meaningless. One might as intelligibly say, in a trial court, that a criminal prosecutor is bound to prove each *2281 element probably true beyond a reasonable doubt. The statute is thus incoherent with respect to the degree of probability of error required of the employer to overcome a factual conclusion made by the plan sponsor. [FN15]

FN15. Justice THOMAS reads the statute not to be about the standard of review of the plan sponsor's findings of fact at all. On his reading, "clearly erroneous" is not a term of art, but an attempt at independent literal description. Under his reading, if the arbitrator concludes a factual determination of a plan sponsor is probably wrong, it will nonetheless be permitted to stand, unless the error is "obvious, plain, gross, significant, or manifest." See post, at 2295 (citation omitted). Justice THOMAS does not adequately explain what purpose would be served by a statute that let some erroneous (and presumably material) factual determinations stand even when they were "clearly erroneous" in the legal sense or "unreasonable," merely because of the degree to which they happened to deviate from the true facts, even when the latter are supported by overwhelming evidence. He does refer to a possible congressional desire to avoid disputes over "insignificant errors," post, at 2296, but under his reading a factual error could be significant, in the sense that it was both material and undeniably incorrect, and yet still stand because it was not that far different from the truth. Justice THOMAS cites the presumption of innocence for the proposition that the presumption at issue here does not imply a standard of review. See post, at 2295. But just because some presumptions do not imply standards of review does not mean that this one does not. Here, by its terms, the statutory presumption says that factual findings of the plan sponsor will stand unless some showing is made, necessarily implying a standard of review of those findings.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264942

[16][17] The proper response to this incomprehensibility is obviously important in deciding this case. If it permitted an employer to rebut the plan sponsor's factual conclusions by a 626 preponderance, merely placing a burden of persuasion on the employer, and permitting adjudication of the facts by the arbitrator without affording deference to the plan sponsor's determinations, the provision would be constitutionally unremarkable. For although we have observed that "[w]here the burden of proof lies on a given issue is, of course, rarely without consequence and frequently may be dispositive to the outcome of the litigation or application, ... [o]utside the criminal law area, where special concerns attend, the locus of the burden of persuasion is normally not an issue of federal constitutional moment." Lavine v. Milne, 424 U.S. 577, 585, 96 S.Ct. 1010, 1016, 47 L.Ed.2d 249 (1976) (footnote omitted). Concrete Pipe points to no special interest that would distinguish this from the normal case. It is indeed entirely sensible to burden the party more likely to have information relevant to the facts about its withdrawal from the Plan with the obligation to demonstrate that facts treated by the Plan as amounting to a withdrawal did not occur as alleged. Such was the rule at common law. W. Bailey, Onus Probandi 1 (1886) (citing Powell on Evidence 167-171) ("In every case the onus probandi lies on the party who wishes to support his case by a particular fact which lies more peculiarly within his knowledge, or of which he is supposed to be cognizant").

On the other hand, if the employer were required to show the trustees' findings to be either "unreasonable or clearly erroneous," there would be a substantial question of procedural fairness under the Due Process Clause. In essence, the arbitrator provided for by the statute would be required to accept the plan sponsor's findings, even if they were probably incorrect, absent a showing at least sufficient to instill a definite or firm conviction that a mistake had been made. Cf. Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S., at 58, 95 S.Ct., at 1470. In light of our assumption of possible bias, the employer would seem to be deprived thereby of the impartial adjudication in the first instance to which it is entitled under the Due Process Clause. See supra, at 2276- 2277.

627 b

Having found the statutory language itself incoherent, we turn, as we would in the usual case of textual ambiguity, to the legislative *2282 purpose as revealed by the history of the statute, for such light as it may shed. [FN16] Unsurprisingly, we have found no direct discussion in the legislative history of the degree of certainty on the part of the arbitrator required for the employer to overcome the sponsor's factual conclusions. The Report of the House Committee on Education and Labor on the bill that became the MPPAA describes the presumption as applying to "a determination of withdrawal liability by a plan," and lumps it together with the statutory presumption, discussed below, that applies to the choice of actuarial assumptions and methods. See H.R.Rep. No. 96-869, pt. 1, p. 86 (1980); 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(B). [FN17] The Report states that FN16. The textual incomprehensibility concerns a very narrow matter, and we find nothing in the structure of the statutory scheme that provides elucidation.

FN17. The presumption at issue here was included in a new § 4221 added by the MPPAA to ERISA. In the text of the version of the bill to which the House Report refers the presumption was contained in § 4203, and the provision began: "For purposes of this part, a determination made with respect to a plan under section 4201 [relating to employer withdrawals] is presumed correct unless the party contesting the determination shows...." See H.R.Rep. No. 96-869, pt. 1, p. 17 (1980), 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. p. 2918. As enacted, this text was replaced with "For purposes of any proceeding under this section, any determination made by a plan sponsor under sections 4201 through 4219 and section 4225 is presumed correct unless the party contesting the determination shows...." Pub.L. 93-406, title IV, § 4221, as added, Pub.L. 96-364, title I § 104(2), Sept. 26, 1980, 94 Stat. 1239, 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(A). The text of what was called § 4201 differs somewhat from the text of the sections to which the enacted bill refers, which are now codified at 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381-1399 and 1405. Our concern with legislative history here goes only to the question of what degree of certainty of error Congress intended to require in this situation. While the change in referent that took place might have some implications for this question, we do not think anything relevant in the legislative history turns on the different scope of the earlier version of the bill.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264943

628 "[t]hese rules are necessary in order to ensure the enforceability of employer liability. In the absence of these presumptions, employers could effectively nullify their obligation by refusing to pay and forcing the plan sponsor to prove every element involved in making an actuarial determination. The committee believes it is extremely important that a withdrawn employer begin making the annual payments even though the period of years for which payments must continue will be based on the actual liability allocated to the employer." H.R.Rep. 96-869, pt. 1, supra, at 86, 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2954.

The only other comment that we have found in the legislative history occurs in a Report prepared by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which first purports to speak about both statutory presumptions, but directs its brief discussion to problems unique to "technical actuarial matters." See S. 1076: The Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980: Summary and Analysis of Consideration, 96th Cong., 2d Sess., 20-21 (Comm.Print 1980) (hereinafter Committee Print); see also infra, at 2286, and n. 20.

The legislative history thus sheds little light on the odd language chosen to describe the employer's burden. All it tells us is that the provision's purpose is to prevent the employer from "forcing the plan sponsor to prove every element involved in making an actuarial determination." Since this purpose would be served simply by placing the burden of proof as to historical fact on the employer, however light or heavy that burden may be, the legislative history does nothing to make sense of the drafter's failure to choose among the standards included in the text.

c

[18] The only way out of the muddle is by a different rule of construction. It is a hoary one that, in a case of statutory ambiguity, "where an otherwise acceptable construction of 629 a statute would raise serious constitutional *2283 problems, the Court will construe the statute to avoid such problems unless such construction is plainly contrary to the intent of Congress." Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Building & Construction Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575, 108 S.Ct. 1392, 1397, 99 L.Ed.2d 645 (1988). "Federal statutes are to be so construed as to avoid serious doubt of their constitutionality. 'When the validity of an act of Congress is drawn in question, and even if a serious doubt of constitutionality is raised, it is a cardinal principle that this Court will first ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided.' Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 [52 S.Ct. 285, 296, 76 L.Ed. 598 (1932)]." Machinists v. Street, 367 U.S. 740, 749-750, 81 S.Ct. 1784, 1790, 6 L.Ed.2d 1141 (1961). Cf. Parsons v. Bedford, 28 U.S. (3 Pet.) 433, 448-449, 7 L.Ed. 732 (1830) (Story, J.) (a construction that would render a statute unconstitutional should be avoided); Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 64, 118, 2 L.Ed. 208 (1804) (Marshall, C.J.).

[19] Although we are faced here not with ambiguity within the usual degree, but with incoherence, we have a common obligation in each situation to resolve the uncertainty in favor of definite meaning, and the canon for resolving ambiguity applies with equal force when terminology renders a statute incoherent. In applying that canon here, we must give effect to the one conclusion clearly supported by the statutory language, that Congress intended to shift the burden of persuasion to the employer in a dispute over a sponsor's factual determination. This objective can be realized without raising serious constitutional concerns simply by construing the presumption to place the burden on the employer to disprove a challenged factual determination by a preponderance. In so construing the statute we make no pretense to have read the congressional mind to perfection. We would not, indeed, even have this problem if an argument could not obviously be made that Congress intended greater deference than the preponderance standard extends. But one could hardly call the intent clear after wondering why the preponderance 630 standard was also included. In these circumstances it is enough that the choice to attain coherence by obviating constitutional problems is not "plainly contrary to the intent of Congress." DeBartolo, supra, 485 U.S., at 575, 108 S.Ct., at 1397.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264944

Because the statute as we construe it does not foreclose any factual issue from independent consideration by the arbitrator (the presumption is, again, assumed by all to be inapplicable to issues of law), there is no constitutional infirmity in it. For the same reason, that an employer may avail itself of independent review by the concededly neutral arbitrator, we find no derivative constitutional defect infecting the further presumption that a district court must afford to an arbitrator's findings of fact. See 29 U.S.C. § 1401(c).

d

[20] Before applying the presumption to this case, one must recognize that in spite of Concrete Pipe's contention to the contrary, determining the date of "complete withdrawal" presents not a mere question of fact on which the arbitrator was required in the first instance to apply the § 1401(a)(3)(A) presumption, but a mixed question of fact and law. The relevant facts are about the closure of the Shafter plant (such as the intent of Concrete Pipe with respect to the plant, its expression of that intent, its activities while the plant was not operating, and the circumstances of the plant's reopening), while the question whether these facts amount to a "complete withdrawal" is one of law.

[21] As to the truly factual issues, the arbitrator's decision fails to reveal the force with which factual conclusions by the trustees here were presumed correct, and in such a case we would ordinarily reverse the judgment below for consideration of the extent to which the arbitrator's application of the presumption 2284 was contrary to the construction we adopt today. But two reasons (urged upon us by neither party) persuade us not to take this course: the Plan's letter to Concrete Pipe contains no statement of facts justifying the trustees' *631 demand, and the parties entered into a factual stipulation in the District Court prior to commencing the arbitration. Because of these two circumstances, there were virtually no contested factual determinations to which the arbitrator might have deferred. And, on the one question of fact that may have been disputed, the arbitrator found, apparently in the first instance, that Concrete Pipe's intent in closing the Shafter plant had been to cease operations permanently. App. 213-214. [FN18]

FN18. Despite this favorable finding, Concrete Pipe still lost, of course. The arbitrator treated subjective intent as irrelevant. See App. 213-215. While the District Court and the Court of Appeals, which relied on the District Court's reasoning, did not go so far, see id., at 419-420, any factual deference in their decisions would be to the arbitrator's finding, itself untainted by the force of any presumption. See 29 U.S.C. § 1401(c); Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 52(a).

While we express no opinion on whether the facts in this case constitute a "complete withdrawal" within the meaning of the statute, a question not before us today, the approach taken by the arbitrator and the courts below is not inconsistent with our interpretation of the first presumption. The determination of the date of withdrawal by the arbitrator did not involve a misapplication of the statutory presumption, and it did not deprive Concrete Pipe of its right to procedural due process.

2

The second presumption at issue attends the calculation of the amount of withdrawal liability. The statute provides that in the absence of more particular PBGC regulations, the plan is required to use "actuarial assumptions and methods which, in the aggregate, are reasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations) and which, in combination, offer the actuary's best estimate of anticipated experience under the plan." 29 U.S.C. § 1393(a)(1). The presumption in question arises under § 1401(a)(3)(B), which provides that

*632 "the determination of a plan's unfunded vested benefits for a plan year, [is] presumed correct unless a party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of evidence that--

"(i) the actuarial assumptions and methods used in the determination were, in the aggregate, unreasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations), or

"(ii) the plan's actuary made a significant error in applying the actuarial assumptions or methods."

Concrete Pipe's concern is with the presumptive force of the actuarial assumptions and methods covered by subsection (i).

[22] While this provision is like its counterpart

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264945

creating the presumption as to factual determinations in placing the burden of proof on the employer, the issues implicated in applying it to the actuary's work are not the same. As the text plainly indicates, the assumptions and methods used in calculating withdrawal liability are selected in the first instance not by the trustees, but by the plan actuary. For a variety of reasons, this actuary is not, like the trustees, vulnerable to suggestions of bias or its appearance. Although plan sponsors employ them, actuaries are trained professionals subject to regulatory standards. See 29 U.S.C. §§ 1241, 1242 ; 26 U.S.C. § 7701(a)(35). The technical nature of an actuary's assumptions and methods, and the necessity for applying the same assumptions and methods in more than one context, as a practical matter limit the opportunity an actuary might otherwise have to act unfairly toward the withdrawing employer. The statutory requirement (of "actuarial assumptions and methods--which, in the aggregate, are reasonable ...") is not unique to the withdrawal liability context, for the statute 2285 employs identical language in 29 U.S.C. § 1082(c)(3) to describe the actuarial assumptions and methods to be used in determining whether a plan has satisfied the minimum funding requirements contained in the statute. The use of the same language to describe the actuarialassumptions *633 and methods to be used in these different contexts tends to check the actuary's discretion in each of them.

> "Using different assumptions [for different purposes] could very well be attacked as presumptively unreasonable both in arbitration and on judicial review.
>
> "[This] view that the trustees are required to act in a reasonably consistent manner greatly limits their discretion, because the use of assumptions overly favorable to the fund in one context will tend to have offsetting unfavorable consequences in other contexts. For example, the use of assumptions (such as low interest rates) that would tend to increase the fund's unfunded vested liability for withdrawal liability purposes would also make it more difficult for the plan to meet the minimum funding requirements of § 1082." United Retail & Wholesale Employees Teamsters Union Local No. 115 Pension Plan v. Yahn & McDonnell, Inc., 787 F.2d, at 146-147 (Seitz, J., dissenting in part).

[23] This point is not significantly blunted by the fact that the assumptions used by the Plan in its other calculations may be "supplemented by several actuarial assumptions unique to withdrawal liability." Brief for Respondent 26. Concrete Pipe has not shown that any method or assumption unique to the calculation of withdrawal liability is so manipulable as to create a significant opportunity for bias to operate, and arguably the most important assumption (in fact, the only actuarial assumption or method that Concrete Pipe attacks in terms, see Reply Brief for Petitioner 18-20) is the critical interest rate assumption that must be used for other purposes as well. [FN19]

> FN19. It may be that the trustees could, in theory, replace the actuary's assumptions with their own, but that would involve a different case from this, and while we are aware of at least one case in which a plan sponsor exercised decisive influence over an actuary whose initial assumptions it disliked, see Huber v. Casablanca Industries, Inc., 916 F.2d 85, 93 (CA3 1990), we know of none in which a plan sponsor was found to have replaced an actuary's actuarial methods or assumptions with different ones of its own. Although we express no view on the question whether a plan sponsor must adopt the assumptions used by the actuary, we note that the legislative history of § 1082, which was enacted as part of ERISA in 1974, suggests that the acturarial assumptions must be "independently determined by an actuary," and that it is "inappropriate for an employer to substitute his judgment ... for that of a qualified actuary" with respect to these assumptions. S.Rep. No. 93-383, p. 70 (1973); see also H.R.Rep. No. 93-807, p. 95 (1974), 1974 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4639, 4954, 4761.

*634 The second major difference attending the two presumptions lies in the sense of reasonableness that must be disproven by an employer attacking the actuary's methods and assumptions, as against the reasonableness of the trustees' determinations of historical fact. Following the usual presumption of statutory interpretation, that the same term carries the same meaning whenever it appears in the same Act, see Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 433, 52 S.Ct. 607, 608, 76 L.Ed. 1204 (1932), we might expect "reasonable" in § 1401(a)(3)(B) to function here just as it did in § 1401(a)(3)(A), to denote a certain range of probability that a factual determination is correct. For several reasons, however, we think it clear that this second presumption of reasonableness functions quite differently.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[24] First, of course, the statute does not speak in terms of disproving the reasonableness of the calculation of the employer's share of the unfunded liability, which would be the finding of future fact most obviously analogous to the findings of historical fact to which the § 1401(a)(3)(A) presumption applies. Section 1401(a)(3)(B) speaks instead of the aggregate reasonableness of the assumptions 2286 and methods employed by the actuary in calculating the dollar liability figure. Because a "method" is not "accurate" or probably "true" within some range, "reasonable" must be understood here to refer to some different kind of judgment, one that it would make sense to apply to a review of methodology as *635 well as of assumptions. Since the methodology is a subject of technical judgment within a recognized professional discipline, it would make sense to judge the reasonableness of a method by reference to what the actuarial profession considers to be within the scope of professional acceptability in making an unfunded liability calculation. Accordingly, an employer's burden to overcome the presumption in question (by proof by a preponderance that the actuarial assumptions and methods were in the aggregate unreasonable) is simply a burden to show that the combination of methods and assumptions employed in the calculation would not have been acceptable to a reasonable actuary. In practical terms it is a burden to show something about standard actuarial practice, not about the accuracy of a predictive calculation, even though consonance with professional standards in making the calculation might justify confidence that its results are sound.

[25] As thus understood, the presumption in question supports no due process objection. The employer merely has a burden to show that an apparently unbiased professional, whose obligations tend to moderate any claimed inclination to come down hard on withdrawing employers, has based a calculation on a combination of methods and assumptions that falls outside the range of reasonable actuarial practice. To be sure, the burden may not be so "mere" when one considers that actuarial practice has been described as more in the nature of an "actuarial art" than a science, Keith Fulton & Sons v. New England Teamsters, 762 F.2d 1137, 1143 (CA1 1985) (en banc) (internal quotation marks omitted), and that the employer's burden covers "technical actuarial matters with respect to which there are often several equally 'correct' approaches," Committee Print 20-21. [FN20] But since imprecisioninheres *636 in the choice of actuarial methods and assumptions, the resulting difficulty is simply in the nature of the beast. Because it must fall on whichever party bears the burden of persuasion on such an issue, at least where the interests at stake are no more substantial than Concrete Pipe's are here, its allocation to one party or another does not raise an issue of due process. See supra, at 2281.

> FN20. Indeed, our view of the problem of imprecision in reviewing actuarial methods and assumptions seems to have been the very reason for including the presumption in the statute. The Senate Committee Report states that "[t]he [Senate] Committee [on Labor and Human Resources] includes the presumption to reduce the likelihood of dispute and delay over technical actuarial matters with respect to which there are often several equally 'correct' approaches. Without such a presumption, a plan would be helpless to resist dilatory tactics by a withdrawing employer--tactics that could, and could be intended to, result in prohibitive collection costs to the plan." Committee Print 20-21.

IV

Concrete Pipe argues next that, as applied, the MPPAA violates substantive due process and takes Concrete Pipe's property without just compensation, both in violation of the Fifth Amendment. As to these issues, our decisions in Gray and Connolly provide the principal guidance.

A

In Gray we upheld the MPPAA against substantive due process challenge. Unlike the employer in Gray, Concrete Pipe here has no complaint that the MPPAA has been retroactively applied by predicating liability on a withdrawal decision made before passage of the statute. To be sure, since there would be no withdrawal liability without prewithdrawal contributions to the Plan, some of which were made before the statutory enactment, some of the conduct upon which Concrete Pipe's liability rests ante2287 dates the statute. But this fact presents a far weaker premise for claiming a substantive due process violation even than the Gray employer raised, and rejection of Concrete Pipe's contention is compelled by our decisions not only in Gray, but in Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co.,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264947

428 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976), upon which the Gray Court relied.

*637 " 'It is by now well established that legislative Acts adjusting the burdens and benefits of economic life come to the Court with a presumption of constitutionality, and that the burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way. See, e.g., Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726 [83 S.Ct. 1028, 10 L.Ed.2d 93] (1963); Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 487-488 [75 S.Ct. 461, 464, 99 L.Ed. 563] (1955).

. . . . .

" '[I]t may be that the liability imposed by the Act ... was not anticipated at the time of actual employment. But our cases are clear that legislation readjusting rights and burdens is not unlawful solely because it upsets otherwise settled expectations. See Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U.S. 100 [67 S.Ct. 1140, 91 L.Ed. 1368] (1947); Carpenter v. Wabash R. Co., 309 U.S. 23 [60 S.Ct. 416, 84 L.Ed. 558] (1940); Norman v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 294 U.S. 240 [55 S.Ct. 407, 79 L.Ed. 885] (1935); Home Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398 [54 S.Ct. 231, 78 L.Ed. 413] (1934); Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467 [31 S.Ct. 265, 55 L.Ed. 297] (1911). This is true even though the effect of the legislation is to impose a new duty or liability based on past acts. See Lichter v. United States, 334 U.S. 742 [68 S.Ct. 1294, 92 L.Ed. 1694] (1948); Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134 [59 S.Ct. 121, 83 L.Ed. 87] (1938); Funkhouser v. Preston Co., 290 U.S. 163 [54 S.Ct. 134, 78 L.Ed. 243] (1933).' " Gray, 467 U.S., at 729-730, 104 S.Ct., at 2718, quoting Turner Elkhorn, supra, 428 U.S., at 15-16, 96 S.Ct., at 2892 (footnotes omitted).

To avoid this reasoning, Concrete Pipe relies not merely on a claim of retroactivity, but on one of irrationality. Since the company contributed to the plan for only 3 1/2 years, it argues, none of its employees had earned vested benefits through employment by Concrete Pipe at the time of its withdrawal. See Brief for Petitioner 28. Concrete Pipe argues that, consequently, no rational relationship exists between its payment of past contributions and the imposition of liability for a share of the unfunded vested benefits.

But this argument simply ignores the nature of multiemployer plans, which, as we have said above, operate by *638 pooling contributions and liabilities. An employer's contributions are not solely for the benefit of its employees or employees who have worked for it alone. Thus, Concrete Pipe's presupposition that none of its employees had vested benefits at the time of its withdrawal may be wrong. An employee whose benefits had vested before coming to work for Concrete Pipe may have earned additional vested benefits by the subsequent covered service. Another may have had sufficient prior service credit to obtain vesting of benefits during employment at Concrete Pipe. A third may have attained vesting while working for other employers but based in part on service credits earned at Concrete Pipe.

But even if Concrete Pipe is correct and none of its employees had earned enough service credits for entitlement to vested benefits by the time of Concrete Pipe's withdrawal, as a Concrete Pipe employee each had earned service credits that could be built upon in future employment with any other participating employer. In determining whether the imposition of withdrawal liability is rational, then, the relevant question is not whether a withdrawing employer's employees have vested benefits, but whether an employer has contributed to the plan's probable liability by providing employees with service credits. When the withdrawing employer's 2288 liability to the plan is based on the proportion of the plan's contributions (and coincident service credits) provided by the employer during the employer's participation in the plan, the imposition of withdrawal liability is clearly rational.

[26][27] It is true that, depending on the future employment of Concrete Pipe's former employees, the withdrawal liability assessed against Concrete Pipe may amount to more (or less) than the share of the Plan's liability strictly attributable to employment of covered workers at Concrete Pipe. But this possibility was exactly what Concrete Pipe accepted when it joined the Plan. A multiemployer plan has features of an insurance scheme in which employers spread the risk that their employees will meet the plan's vesting requirements *639 and obtain an entitlement to benefits. A rational employer hopes that its employees will vest at a rate above the average for all employees of contributing employers, and that, in this way, it will pay less than it would have by creating a single-employer plan. But the rational employer also appreciates the foreseeable risk that circumstances may produce the opposite result. [FN21] Since the MPPAA spreads the unfunded vested liability among employers in approximately the same manner that the cost would have been spread if all of the employers participating at the time of withdrawal had seen the venture through, the withdrawal liability is consistent with the risks assumed on joining a plan (however inconsistent that liability may be with the employer's hopes). In any event, under the deferential standard of review applied in substantive due process challenges to economic legislation there is no need for mathematical precision in the fit between justification and means. See Turner Elkhorn, 428 U.S., at 19, 96 S.Ct., at 2894.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264948

FN21. An employer's calculation whether to join a plan will include these factors as well as a determination of the other benefits it can hope to receive from its participation in the plan. See supra, at 2271.

Concrete Pipe's substantive due process claim is not enhanced by its argument that the MPPAA imposes obligations upon it contrary to limitations on liability variously contained in the 1962 Trust Agreement, [FN22] in a collective-640 bargaining agreement between the Laborers and multiemployer associations (the "1977-1980 Laborer's Craft Master Labor Agreement") [FN23] and in an appendix to the "Southern California Master Labor Agreements in 1977-1980." [FN24] Even assuming that *2289 all these provisions apply to Concrete Pipe, [FN25] its argument runs against the holding in Gray that federal economic legislation, which is not subject to constraintscoextensive 641 with those imposed upon the States by the Contract Clause of Art. I, § 10, of the Federal Constitution, Gray, 467 U.S., at 733, 104 S.Ct., at 2719; United States Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 17, n. 13, 97 S.Ct. 1505, 1515, n. 13, 52 L.Ed.2d 92 (1977), is subject to due process review only for rationality, which, as we have said, is satisfied in theapplication of the MPPAA to Concrete Pipe.

FN22. The 1962 Trust Agreement states:
" 'Section 4.07. Neither the Association or (sic) any officer, agent, employee or (sic) committee member of the Associations shall be liable to make Contributions to the Fund or with respect to the Pension Plan, except to the extent that he or it may be an Individual Employer required to make Contributions to the Fund with respect to his or its own individual or joint venture operations, or to the extent he may incur liability as a Trustee as hereinafter provided. The liability of any Individual Employer to the Fund, or with respect to the Pension Plan, shall be limited to the payments required by the Collective Bargaining Agreements with respect to his or its individual or joint venture operations, and in no event shall he or it be liable or responsible for any portion of the Contributions due from other Individual Employers with respect to the operations of such Individual Employers. The Individual Employers shall not be required to make any further payments or Contributions to the cost of operation of the Fund or of the Pension Plan, except as may be hereafter provided in the Collective Bargaining Agreements.
" 'Section 4.08. Neither the Associations, any Individual Employer, the Union, any Local Union, nor any Employee shall be liable or responsible for any debts, liabilities or obligations of the Fund or the Trustees.' " App. 80-81, ¶ 32.

FN23. Article X, § E(4) of the 1977-1980 Laborers' Craft Master Labor Agreement provides:
" 'The parties recognize and agree that the Pension Trust and Plan was created, negotiated, and is intended to continue to be if permitted by Law under ERISA, a defined contribution plan and trust and that the individual Contractors' liability with regard to the pension has been and remains limited exclusively to payment of the contributions specified from time to time in collective bargaining agreements.' " Id., at 82, ¶ 34.

FN24. Appendix K to the Southern California Master Labor Agreements in 1977-1980 states:
" 'IMPORTANT.

PENSION BENEFITS ARE NOT AND HAVE NEVER BEEN GUARANTEED. THEY ARE PAYABLE ONLY TO THE EXTENT THAT THE FUND HAS ASSETS TO PAY BENEFITS. NEITHER YOUR EMPLOYER NOR YOUR UNION HAS ASSUMED ANY LIABILITY, DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY, TO PROVIDE MONTHLY PENSION BENEFITS. YOUR EMPLOYERS'S SOLE OBLIGATION IS TO MAKE THE CONTRIBUTIONS CALLED FOR IN ITS COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT. THE PENSION PLAN HAS ALSO BEEN CONSIDERED BY THE EMPLOYERS, THE UNION AND THE TRUSTEES TO BE A DEFINED CONTRIBUTION PLAN.' " Id., at 81-82, ¶ 33.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN25. The Plan contends that the record does not reflect that the appendix mentioned in the text was incorporated by reference into Concrete Pipe's own collective-bargaining agreement. See Brief for Respondent 10, n. 7.

Nor does the possibility that trustee decisions made "before [Concrete Pipe] entered [the Plan]" may have led to the unfunded liability alter the constitutional calculus. See Brief for Petitioner 31. Concrete Pipe's decision to enter the Plan after any such decisions were made was voluntary, and Concrete Pipe could at that time have assessed any implications for the Plan's future liability. Similarly, Concrete Pipe cannot rely on any argument based on the fact that, because it was not a member of any of the contractors' associations represented among the Plan's trustees, it had no control over decisions of the trustees after it entered the Plan that may have increased the unfunded liability. Again, Concrete Pipe could have assessed the implications for future liability of the identity of the trustees of the Plan before it decided to enter. [FN26] The imposition of withdrawal liability here is rationally related to the terms of Concrete Pipe's participation in the Plan it joined and that suffices for substantive due process scrutiny of this economic legislation.

FN26. Even if Concrete Pipe were represented, its representative, like all the trustees, would be bound to act consistently with the fiduciary duty owed by trustees to covered employees and beneficiaries of the plan. See 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1).

B

[28] Given that Concrete Pipe's due process arguments are unavailing, "it would be surprising indeed to discover" the challenged statute nonetheless violating the Takings Clause. Connolly, 475 U.S., at 223, 106 S.Ct., at 1025. Nor is there any violation. Following the analysis in Connolly, we begin with the contractual provisions relied upon from the Trust Agreement and 642 the collective-bargaining agreements, which we find no more helpful to Concrete Pipe than those adduced in the facial challenge brought in Connolly, as described in that opinion:

"By the express terms of the Trust Agreement and the Plan, the employer's sole obligation to the Pension Trust is to pay the contributions required by the collective-bargaining agreement. The Trust Agreement clearly states that the employer's obligation for pension benefits to the employee is ended when the employer pays the appropriate contribution to the Pension Trust. This is true even though the contributions agreed upon are insufficient to pay the benefits under the Plan." Id., at 218, 106 S.Ct., at 1022 (citations and footnotes omitted).

Indeed, one provision of the Trust Agreement on which Concrete Pipe primarily relies is substantially identical to the one at issue in Connolly. Compare n. 22, supra, with Connolly, supra, at 218, n. 2, 106 S.Ct., at 1022, n. 2.

We said in Connolly that

*2290 "[a]ppellants' claim of an illegal taking gains nothing from the fact that the employer in the present litigation was protected by the terms of its contract from any liability beyond the specified contributions to which it had agreed. 'Contracts, however express, cannot fetter the constitutional authority of Congress. Contracts may create rights of property, but when contracts deal with a subject matter which lies within the control of Congress, they have a congenital infirmity. Parties cannot remove their transactions from the reach of dominant constitutional power by making contracts about them.'

"Ifthe regulatory statute is otherwise within the powers of Congress, therefore, its application may not be defeated by private contractual provisions." 475 U.S., at 223-224, 106 S.Ct., at 1025 (citations omitted).

643 Nothing has changed since these words were first written. [FN27]

FN27. To the extent that Concrete Pipe's argument could be characterized as a challenge to the determination that, notwithstanding the contractual language, it is a "defined benefits plan" under the statute, this is a question on which Concrete Pipe did not seek review. See supra, at 2271.

Following Connolly, the next step in our analysis is to subject the operative facts, including the facts of the contractual relationship, to the standards derived from our prior Takings Clause cases. See id., at 224- 225, 106 S.Ct., at 1026. They have identified three factors with particular significance for assessing the results of the required "ad hoc, factual inquir [y] into the circumstances of each particular case." Id., at 224, 106 S.Ct., at 1026. The first is the nature of the governmental action. Again, our analysis in Connolly applies with equal force to the facts before us today.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> "[T]he Government does not physically invade or permanently appropriate any of the employer's assets for its own use. Instead, the Act safeguards the participants in multiemployer pension plans by requiring a withdrawing employer to fund its share of the plan obligations incurred during its association with the plan. This interference with the property rights of an employer arises from a public program that adjusts the benefits and burdens of economic life to promote the common good and, under our cases, does not constitute a taking requiring Government compensation." Id., at 225, 106 S.Ct., at 1026.

[29] We reject Concrete Pipe's contention that the appropriate analytical framework is the one employed in our cases dealing with permanent physical occupation or destruction of economically beneficial use of real property. See Lucas v. South Carolina Coastal Council, 505 U.S. 1003, 1015, 112 S.Ct. 2886, 2890-2892, 120 L.Ed.2d 798 (1992). While Concrete Pipe tries to shoehorn its claim into this analysis by asserting that "[t]he property of [Concrete Pipe] which is taken, is taken in its entirety," Brief for Petitioner 644 37, we rejected this analysis years ago in Penn Central Transp. Co. v. New York City, 438 U.S. 104, 130-131, 98 S.Ct. 2646, 2662, 57 L.Ed.2d 631 (1978), where we held that a claimant's parcel of property could not first be divided into what was taken and what was left for the purpose of demonstrating the taking of the former to be complete and hence compensable. To the extent that any portion of property is taken, that portion is always taken in its entirety; the relevant question, however, is whether the property taken is all, or only a portion of, the parcel in question. Accord, Keystone Bituminous Coal Assn. v. DeBenedictis, 480 U.S. 470, 497, 107 S.Ct. 1232, 1248, 94 L.Ed.2d 472 (1987) ("[O]ur test for regulatory taking requires us to compare the value that has been taken from the property with the value that remains in the property, [and] one of the critical questions is determining how to define the unit of property 'whose value is to furnish the denominator of the fraction' ") (citation omitted).

*2291 [30] There is no more merit in Concrete Pipe's contention that its property is impermissibly taken "for the sole purpose of protecting the PBGC [a government body] from being forced to honor its pension insurance." Brief for Petitioner 38; see also Brief for Midwest Motor Express, Inc., et al. as Amici Curiae 12. That the solvency of a pension trust fund may ultimately redound to the benefit of the PBGC, which was set up in part to guarantee benefits in the event of plan failure, is merely incidental to the primary congressional objective of protecting covered employees and beneficiaries of pension trusts like the Plan. "[H]ere, the United States has taken nothing for its own use, and only has nullified a contractual provision limiting liability by imposing an additional obligation that is otherwise within the power of Congress to impose." Connolly, supra, 475 U.S., at 224, 106 S.Ct. at 1025-1026.

Nor is Concrete Pipe's argument about the character of the governmental action strengthened by the fact that Concrete Pipe lacked control over investment and benefit decisions that may have increased the size of the unfunded vested liability. The response to the same argument raised 645 under the substantive Due Process Clause is appropriate here: although Concrete Pipe is not itself a member of any of the management associations that are represented among the trustees of the fund, Concrete Pipe voluntarily chose to participate in the Plan, notwithstanding this fact. See supra, at 2289, and n. 26.

[31] As to the second factor bearing on the taking determination, the severity of the economic impact of the Plan, Concrete Pipe has not shown its withdrawal liability here to be "out of proportion to its experience with the plan," 475 U.S., at 226, 106 S.Ct., at 1026, notwithstanding the claim that it will be required to pay out 46% of shareholder equity. As a threshold matter, the Plan contests this figure, arguing that Concrete Pipe, a wholly owned subsidiary of Concrete Pipe & Products Co., Inc., was simply "formed to facilitate the purchase ... of certain assets of Cen-Vi-Ro," Brief for Respondent 2, and that the relevant issue turns on the diminution of net worth of the parent company, not Concrete Pipe. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 29. But this dispute need not be resolved, for even assuming that Concrete Pipe has used the appropriate measure in determining the portion of net worth required to be paid out, our cases have long established that mere diminution in the value of property, however serious, is insufficient to demonstrate a taking.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Supreme Court of the United States

Ed PLAUT, et ux., et al., Petitioners,
v.
SPENDTHRIFT FARM, INC., et al.

No. 93-1121.

Argued Nov. 30, 1994.
Decided April 18, 1995.

Securities fraud plaintiffs moved to reinstate their time-barred Securities Exchange Act § 10(b) claims. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Joseph M. Hood, J., 789 F.Supp. 231, denied motion. Plaintiffs appealed. The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, 1 F.3d 1487, affirmed. Certiorari was granted. The United States Supreme Court, Justice Scalia, held that Securities Exchange Act section § 27A(b), providing that any § 10b suit started before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Supreme Court decided Lampf case establishing uniform limitations period for federal securities fraud actions) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated upon motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, violated constitutional separation of powers principles by instructing federal courts to reopen final judgments.

Affirmed.

Justice Breyer concurred in judgment and filed opinion.

Justice Stevens dissented and filed opinion, in which Justice Ginsburg joined.

West Headnotes

[1] Statutes ⚿174
361k174 Most Cited Cases

Judicial construction of statute is an authoritative statement of what statute meant before as well as after decision of case giving rise to construction.

[2] Securities Regulation ⚿2.30
349Bk2.30 Most Cited Cases

There is no reasonable construction of Securities Exchange Act § 27A(b), providing that any § 10(b) suit started before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Lampf decision establishing uniform limitations period for securities fraud cases) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated upon motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, that would not require federal courts to reopen final judgments. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 27A(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § § 78j(b), 78aa-1(b).

[3] Constitutional Law ⚿47
92k47 Most Cited Cases

Supreme Court will first consider narrowest of alternate grounds submitted for claim that congressional statute is unconstitutional.

[4] Federal Courts ⚿4
170Bk4 Most Cited Cases

Article III of Constitution gives federal judiciary power, not merely to rule on cases, but to decide them, subject to review only by superior courts, with understanding that judgment conclusively resolves case. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

[5] Constitutional Law ⚿57
92k57 Most Cited Cases

[5] Securities Regulation ⚿2.10
349Bk2.10 Most Cited Cases

Securities Exchange Act § 27A(b), providing that any § 10(b) suit started before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Lampf decision establishing uniform limitations period for federal securities fraud cases) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated upon motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, violated constitutional separation of powers principles by instructing federal courts to reopen final judgments. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.; Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 27A(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78j(b), 78aa-1(b).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264898

See, e.g., Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 384, 47 S.Ct. 114, 117, 71 L.Ed. 303 (1926) (approximately 75% diminution in value); Hadacheck v. Sebastian, 239 U.S. 394, 405, 36 S.Ct. 143, 143, 60 L.Ed. 348 (1915) (92.5% diminution).

[32] The final factor is the degree of interference with Concrete Pipe's "reasonable investment-backed expectations." 475 U.S., at 226, 106 S.Ct., at 1027. Again, Connolly controls. At the time Concrete Pipe purchased Cen-Vi-Ro and began its contributions to the Plan, pension plans had long been subject to federal regulation, and " '[t]hose who do business in the regulated field cannot object if the legislative scheme is buttressed by subsequent amendments to achieve the legislative end.' FHA v. The Darlington, Inc., 358 U.S. 84, 91, 79 S.Ct. 141, 146, 3 L.Ed.2d 132 (1958). See 646 also Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S., at 15-16, 96 S.Ct., at 2892 and cases cited therein." Id., 475 U.S., at 227, 106 S.Ct., at 1027. Indeed, at that time the Plan was already subject to ERISA, and a withdrawing employer faced contingent liability up to 30% of its net worth. See 29 U.S.C. § 1364 (1976 ed.); see also 29 U.S.C. § 1362(b) (1976 ed.); Connolly, supra, at 226-227, 106 S.Ct., at 1027; Gray, 467 U.S., at 721, 104 S.Ct., at 2713. Thus while Concrete Pipe argues that requiring it to pay a share of promised benefits "ignores express and bargained-for conditions on [its contractual] promises," Connolly, 475 U.S., at 235, 106 S.Ct., at 1031 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring), it could have had no reasonable expectation that it would not be faced with liability *2292 for promised benefits. Id., at 227, 106 S.Ct., at 1027 (opinion of the Court). Because "legislation readjusting rights and burdens is not unlawful solely because it upsets otherwise settled expectations ... even though the effect of the legislation is to impose a new duty or liability based on past acts," Turner Elkhorn, 428 U.S., at 16, 96 S.Ct., at 2983, Concrete Pipe's reliance on ERISA's original limitation of contingent liability to 30% of net worth is misplaced, [FN28] there being no reasonable basis to expect that the legislative ceiling would never be lifted. [FN29]

FN28. See Brief for Petitioner 36-37 ("The ERISA contingent liabilities were substantially different in scope from the liabilities of MPPAA so that [Concrete Pipe] had no reasonable notice that 46% of its net worth would be seized").

Justice O'CONNOR does not join the statement to which this footnote is attached.

FN29. Nor do the contractual provisions on which Concrete Pipe would rely provide the support it seeks. Indeed, one such provision, Article X, § E(4) of the 1977-1980 Laborers' Craft Master Labor Agreement, provides that liability will be limited to contributions specific in collective-bargaining agreements "if permitted by law under ERISA." App. 82, ¶ 34.

"The employe[r] in the present litigation voluntarily negotiated and maintained a pension plan which was determined to be within the strictures of ERISA." Connolly, supra, 475 U.S., at 227, 106 S.Ct., at 1027. In light of the relationship between Concrete Pipe and the Plan, we find no basis to conclude that Concrete Pipe is 647 being forced to bear a burden "which, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by the public as a whole." Armstrong v. United States, 364 U.S. 40, 49, 80 S.Ct. 1563, 1569, 4 L.Ed.2d 1554 (1960).

V

Having concluded that the statutory presumptions work no deprivation of procedural due process, and that the statute, as applied to Concrete Pipe, violates no substantive constraint of the Fifth Amendment, we affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

It is so ordered.

Justice O'CONNOR, concurring.

I join all of the Court's opinion, except for the statement that petitioner cannot "rel[y] on ERISA's original limitation of contingent liability to 30% of net worth." Ante, at 2292. The Court's reasoning is generally consistent with my own views about retroactive withdrawal liability, which I explained in Connolly v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 475 U.S. 211, 228-236, 106 S.Ct. 1018, 1027-1032, 89 L.Ed.2d 166 (1986) (concurring opinion), and which I need not restate at length here. In essence, my position is that the "imposition of this type of retroactive liability on employers, to be constitutional, must rest on some basis in the employer's conduct that would make it rational to treat the employees' expectations of benefits under the plan as the employer's responsibility." Id., at 229, 106 S.Ct., at 1027.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The Court does not hold otherwise. Rather, it reasons that, although "the withdrawal liability assessed against Concrete Pipe may amount to more ... than the share of the Plan's liability strictly attributable to employment of covered workers at Concrete Pipe," this possibility "was exactly what Concrete Pipe accepted when it joined the Plan." Ante, at 2288. I agree that a withdrawing employer can be held responsible for its statutory "share" of unfunded vested benefits if the employer should have anticipated the prospect of withdrawal liability when it joined the plan. In such a 648 case, the "basis in the employer's conduct that would make it rational to treat the employees' expectations of benefits under the plan as the employer's responsibility" would be the very act of joining the plan.

I am not sure that petitioner did in fact "accept" the prospect of withdrawal liability when it joined the Construction Laborers *2293 Pension Trust (Plan) in 1976. As of that date, Congress had not yet promulgated the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA); the kind of "withdrawal liability" imposed on petitioner did not yet exist. Although the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) was in effect, and did create a contingent liability for the employer that withdrew from a multiemployer defined benefit plan, such liability was limited to 30% of the employer's net worth. See 29 U.S.C. §§ 1364, 1362(b)(2) (1976 ed.). Petitioner's withdrawal liability under the MPPAA amounts to 46% of its net worth. See ante, at 2291. In addition, the Plan apparently is a hybrid "Taft-Hartley" plan, which provides for fixed employee benefits and fixed employer contributions. It remains an open question whether hybrid Taft- Hartley plans are indeed "defined benefit" rather than "defined contribution" plans, and therefore subject to withdrawal liability. See Connolly, supra, at 230, 232-235, 106 S.Ct., at 1028-1029, 1029-1035 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring). We do not decide that question today. See ante, at 2271, 2290, n. 27.

But petitioner has not argued that its withdrawal liability, even if otherwise permissible, cannot exceed the 30% cap that was in effect in 1976. Nor has petitioner claimed that the Plan is a defined contribution plan. In short, petitioner has failed to adduce the two features of this case that might have demonstrated why it did not "accept" the prospect of full withdrawal liability when it joined the Plan. I therefore agree with the Court's result as well as most of its reasoning.

I cannot, however, agree that petitioner is precluded from "rely[ing] on ERISA's original limitation of contingent liability to 30% of net worth." Ante, at 2292. The Court seizes 649 upon a passing reference in petitioner's brief, see ante, at 2292, n. 28, to justify issuing this unnecessary statement about a difficult issue that the parties essentially have ignored. I would not decide without adversary briefing and argument whether ERISA's 30% cap might prevent retroactive withdrawal liability above 30% of the employer's net worth for an employer that joined a multiemployer plan after the passage of ERISA but before the passage of the MPPAA. I also note that the Court's opinion should not be read to imply that employers may be subjected to retroactive withdrawal liability simply because "pension plans [have] long been subject to federal regulation." Ante, at 2291. Surely the employer that joined a multiemployer plan before ERISA had been promulgated--before Congress had made employers liable for unfunded benefits--might have a strong constitutional challenge to retroactive withdrawal liability. The issue is not presented here--again, petitioner joined the Plan after the passage of ERISA--and the Court does not address it. It remains to be resolved in a future case.

Justice THOMAS, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join all of the Court's opinion except Part III-B-1--the portion of the opinion in which the Court grapples with the trustee presumption in 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a)(3)(A). The Court finds the presumption "incoherent with respect to the degree of probability of error required of the employer to overcome a factual conclusion made by the plan sponsor." Ante, at 2281. And because, in the Court's view, "there would be a substantial question of procedural fairness under the Due Process Clause" if employers had to show that sponsors' findings were unreasonable or clearly erroneous, ante, at 2281, the Court proceeds to interpret the statute as if it required an unconstrained evidentiary hearing into "any factual issue" concerning the employer's withdrawal liability, ante, at 2283.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*650 Until today, § 1401(a)(3)(A) provided:

"For purposes of any [arbitration] proceeding under this section, any determination made by a plan sponsor under sections 2294 1381 through 1399 of this title and section 1405 of this title is presumed correct unless the party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination was unreasonable or clearly erroneous." (Emphasis added.)

Now the statute provides, in effect, that "any factual determination made by a plan sponsor shall be rejected by the arbitrator if the party contesting the determination shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination was erroneous." There is no meaningful presumption of correctness and no examination for reasonableness or clear error. I decline to participate in this redrafting of a federal law.

As I see it, there are three missteps in the analysis. First, the Court believes the statutory text is "incomprehensib[le]," ante, at 2281, because it refers to three different, and mutually inconsistent, "degree[s] of certainty," ante, at 2279, or of "probability," ante, at 2281. This is incorrect--in large part because the Court overlooks the grammatical structure of the statute. Section 1401(a)(3)(A) sets up no parallelism between the phrase "by a preponderance of the evidence," which establishes the standard of proof for the arbitration proceeding, and the critical terms "unreasonable" and "clearly erroneous." "[B]y a preponderance of the evidence" (emphasis added) is an adverbial phrase that modifies the "show[ing]" required of the employer. "Unreasonable" and "clearly erroneous," on the other hand, are predicate adjectives used to describe what it is the employer must show.

The incoherence identified by the Court follows from the assumption that Congress has "confus[ed]" burdens of proof with standards of review. Ante, at 2280. The Court believes that the terms "clearly erroneous" and "unreasonable" must signify standards of review. Ante, at 2279-2280. Standards of proof and standards of review are entirely unrelated *651 concepts (as the Court intimates, see ante, at 2279-2281). The Court's reading leads to the conclusion that § 1401(a)(3)(A) is "meaningless," ante, at 2280, because the statute (as so interpreted) "defines the nature of the conclusion the arbitrator must draw by using a combination of terms that are categorically ill-matched," ante, at 2280. [FN*]

FN* Regrettably, the Court compounds and further muddles the textual difficulty by suggesting that in some sense, "preponderance of the evidence," "unreasonable," and "clearly erroneous" are comparable--that they all refer to relative "degree[s] of certainty." Ante, at 2279. There is, in fact, no basis for comparing any particular standard of proof with any particular standard of review. An appellate tribunal could be required to determine whether it was "clearly erroneous" to find a disputed fact "by a preponderance of the evidence," or it could ask whether any "reasonable" factfinder could have found "probable cause" to believe, or "clear and convincing evidence" supporting, the fact in question. See, e.g., Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2512, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986) ("If the defendant in a ... civil case moves for summary judgment or for a directed verdict ..., [the inquiry is] whether reasonable jurors could find by a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict") (emphasis added); Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318-319, 99 S.Ct. 2781, 2788-2789, 61 L.Ed.2d 560 (1979) ("[T]he critical inquiry on review of the sufficiency of the evidence to support a criminal conviction ... is whether [a] rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt") (emphasis added). Any combination of evidentiary and review standards is possible.

The Court's preoccupation with standards of review is understandable, at least with respect to "clearly erroneous," a term with an established legal usage. See Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573-575, 105 S.Ct. 1504, 1511- 1512, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985); Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 52(a). But such a reading is not compelled. As used in this statutory provision, "unreasonable" and "clearly erroneous" cannot signify standards applicable to the review of prior findings, since the arbitrator himself is undeniably a factfinder, not an appellate tribunal. See § 1401(c) (establishing a presumption of correctness for "the findings of fact made by the arbitrator"). That the arbitrator is to undertake his examination "by a preponderance of the evidence" explicitly establishes his role as factfinder; 2295 appellate review *652 does not occur "by" a taking of "evidence." The Court sees the arbitrator as a "hybrid," who acts as both a trier of fact and a reviewer of facts found. Ante, at 2279-2280. But the presumption of correctness that applies to the plan sponsor's determinations does not make the arbitrator a "reviewing body," ante, at 2280, any more than the presumption of innocence in a criminal trial renders the jury a reviewer, rather than a trier, of fact.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264954

The way out of the conundrum is apparent. The terms "unreasonable" and "clearly erroneous" must refer to what are, in effect, elements of the employer's claim in the arbitration proceeding. To prevail in its action before the arbitrator, in other words, the employer must show by a preponderance of the evidence, first, that the plan sponsor has made a determination under one of the relevant provisions and, second, that that determination was either unreasonable or clearly erroneous. This construction requires us to put aside the technical definition of "clearly erroneous" and focus on the literal meaning of the phrase. "Clear" error can simply mean an obvious, plain, gross, significant, or manifest error or miscalculation. See Black's Law Dictionary 250 (6th ed. 1990). That may not be the most natural reading (for a court, that is) of this legal term of art, but if we do not drop the assumption that "clearly erroneous" must be a reference to the Bessemer City standard of review, we cannot avoid the incoherence that has trapped the majority. The term "unreasonable," of course, is even more readily construed to refer to something other than a standard of review, since it can hardly be thought to have a sharply defined meaning that is limited to the context of appellate review. There is, for example, nothing unusual about requiring a party to show as an element of a substantive claim that something--an interstate carrier's filed rate, for example, see Reiter v. Cooper, 507 U.S. 258, 113 S.Ct. 1213, 122 L.Ed.2d 604 (1993)--is "unreasonable." Section 1401(a)(3)(A) is thus susceptible of a reading that gives it a coherent meaning.

653 This interpretation also conforms neatly with the very similar language and structure of the actuarial presumption in § 1401(a)(3)(B), which the Court today finds unproblematic. See ante, at 2284-2286. That presumption provides that the actuary's determination of unfunded vested benefits will be presumed correct unless the employer shows "by a preponderance of the evidence" that the actuarial assumptions and methods were "unreasonable" or that the actuary made a "significant error." The Court offers no persuasive explanation as to why this presumption does not suffer from the same incoherence. In addition, my reading of the term "clearly erroneous" in § 1401(a)(3)(A) renders it virtually indistinguishable from the term "significant error" in § 1401(a)(3)(B).

The second false step in the Court's analysis is the use of the rule of construction applied in Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Building & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575, 108 S.Ct. 1392, 1397- 1398, 99 L.Ed.2d 645 (1988). Ante, at 2282-2283. This rule, which requires a court to adopt a reasonable alternative interpretation of a statute when necessary to avoid serious constitutional problems, does not provide authority to construe the statute in a way that "is plainly contrary to the intent of Congress." DeBartolo, supra, at 575, 108 S.Ct., at 1397. The rule "cannot be stretched beyond the point at which [the alternative] construction remains 'fairly possible.' " Public Citizen v. Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 481, 109 S.Ct. 2558, 2580, 105 L.Ed.2d 377 (1989) (KENNEDY, J., concurring in judgment) (emphasis in original) (quoting Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62, 52 S.Ct. 285, 296, 76 L.Ed. 598 (1932)). "And it should not be given too broad a scope lest a whole new range of Government action be proscribed by interpretive shadows cast by constitutional provisions that might or might not invalidate it." Public Citizen, supra, 491 U.S., at 481, 109 *2296 S.Ct., at 2580. Here it is plain, in my view, that Congress intended to shield the plan sponsor's factual determinations behind a presumption of correctness and intended that withdrawing employers would have to show something more than simple error. The 654 Court's construction is plainly contrary to this intent and is not "fairly possible" under the terms of the statute. Rather than a reasonable alternative reading, therefore, the interpretation adopted by the Court today is effectively a declaration that the statute as written is unconstitutional.

Which leads to my final, and perhaps most fundamental, disagreement with the Court. Before a court can appropriately invoke the Crowell/ DeBartolo rule of construction, it must have a significantly higher degree of confidence that the statutory provision would be unconstitutional should the problematic interpretation be adopted. The potential due process problem troubling the Court is the supposed lack of a neutral or "impartial" arbitration hearing. Ante, at 2281. This potential is based on an "assumption" about a "risk" or "possibility" of trustee bias, ante, at 2276, 2277--bias that, if it existed, might be "preserve[d]" during the arbitration proceeding by the presumption of correctness. Ante, at 2278. Petitioner has not established that the trustees were biased in fact. And whatever structural bias may flow from the trustees' fiduciary obligations or from the fact that the trustees are appointed by interested parties, see ante, at 2276-2277, will likely be nullified by the elaborately detailed criteria that channel and cabin their exercise of discretion. See 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381 -1399 (1988 ed. and Supp. III). Such bias may be checked, in particular, by the requirement of consistency that governs the trustees' choice of a method for calculating liability. See Keith Fulton & Sons, Inc. v. New England Teamsters & Trucking Industry Pension Fund, Inc., 762 F.2d 1137, 1142 (CA1 1985) (en banc). And the very fiduciary duty the trustees owe to the fund should simultaneously prevent them from imposing excessive withdrawal liability that will discourage other employers from joining the fund in the future. Id., at 1142-1143. The Court does not consider these countervailing forces.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

But even if there is a real risk that structural bias may distort the trustees' factual determinations, I am inclined 655 to believe that the arbitration proceeding--presumption and all--provides adequate process for the employer. Cf. Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 334-335, 96 S.Ct. 893, 902-903, 47 L.Ed.2d 18 (1976) (adequacy of specific procedures involves consideration of private and public interests and risk of erroneous deprivation). This conclusion rests principally on the nature of the particular statutory determinations to which the presumption applies (those described in §§ 1381-1399 and 1405). Many of these determinations, such as the mathematical computations the trustees must perform under §§ 1386, 1388, and 1391, involve little or no discretion. As a result, the employer will have correspondingly little difficulty proving the existence of any significant error made by the trustees (either inadvertently or because of bias). The same can be said of withdrawal-date determinations under §§ 1381 and 1383, especially where all the information relevant to the determination is better known to the employer than to the trustees.

To me, the public interest is plain on the face of the statute: Congress did not want withdrawing employers to avoid their obligations by engaging in a lengthy arbitration over relatively insignificant errors. At the same time, the employer's interest in correcting miscalculations that are significant is adequately protected by the opportunity for arbitration afforded by § 1401.

For these reasons, I concur only in the Court's judgment that the application of § 1401(a)(3)(A) "did not deprive Concrete Pipe of its right to procedural due process." Ante, at 2283-2284.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[redacted] 4

Supreme Court of the United States

PENSION BENEFIT GUARANTY CORPORATION
v.
R.A. GRAY & COMPANY.
OREGON-WASHINGTON CARPENTERS-EMPLOYERS PENSION TRUST FUND
v.
R.A. GRAY & COMPANY.

Nos. 83-245, 83-291.

Argued April 16, 1984.
Decided June 18, 1984.

The United States District Court for the District of Oregon, 549 F.Supp. 531, held that the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act was constitutional. The Court of Appeals, 705 F.2d 1502, reversed, and probable jurisdiction was noted, 104 S.Ct. 271. The Supreme Court, Justice Brennan, held that in view of congressional purpose in utilizing retroactive application of the statutes, i.e., to prevent employers from taking advantage of lengthy legislative process and withdrawing while Congress debated revisions, application of the withdrawal liability provisions to employers withdrawing from pension plans during the five-month period prior to the statute's enactment did not violate due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, such purpose being a rational legislative purpose.

Judgment of Court of Appeals reversed, and cases remanded.

West Headnotes

[1] Pensions ⚿66.1
296k66.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 296k66, 255k78.1(1), 255k78.1(9))

Among principal purposes of Employee Retirement Income Security Act was to insure that employees and their beneficiaries would not be deprived of anticipated retirement benefits by termination of pension plans before sufficient funds have been accumulated in the plans, so as to guarantee that worker who has been promised defined pension benefit upon retirement and has fulfilled whatever conditions are required to obtain vested benefit will actually receive it. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2-4082, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001-1381.

[2] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 232Ak131.1)

In legislating to protect pension plans from adverse consequences when individual employers terminate their participation in, or withdraw from, multiemployer plans, Congress provided retroactive effective date for withdrawal liability so as to prevent employers from avoiding adverse consequences of withdrawal liability by withdrawing from plans while such liability was being considered by Congress, and effective date was later advanced from February 27, 1979 to April 29, 1980 because, while legislation was being considered, such original purpose of retroactive effective date had been achieved. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 4001-4082, 4062(b)(2), 4082(a, b), (c)(1-4), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1301-1381, 1362(b)(2), 1381(a, b), (c)(1-4).

[3] Labor Relations ⚿436
232Ak436 Most Cited Cases

By accepting certain findings of pension plan, employer waived right to arbitration. Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, § 4221(a), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. § 1401(a).

[4] Constitutional Law ⚿48(4.1)
92k48(4.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k48(4))

Legislative acts adjusting burdens and benefits of economic life come to court with presumption of constitutionality, and burden is on one complaining of due process violation to establish that legislature acted in arbitrary and irrational way, and the strong deference accorded legislation in field of national economic policy is no less applicable when the legislation is applied retroactively. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2-4082, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001-1381; Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, §§ 2 et seq., 402 et seq., as amended, 30 U.S.C.A. §§ 801 et seq., 901 et seq.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[5] Constitutional Law ⚿253(4)
92k253(4) Most Cited Cases

Although retroactive aspects of legislation, as well as prospective aspects, must meet test of due process, and justifications for the latter may not suffice for the former, such burden is met simply by showing that retroactive application of the legislation is itself justified by rational legislative purpose. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 6, 14; Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2-4082, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001-1381.

[6] Constitutional Law ⚿275(5)
92k275(5) Most Cited Cases

[6] Pensions ⚿23
296k23 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 232Ak83.1, 232Ak83)

In view of congressional purpose in utilizing retroactive application of the statutes, i.e., to prevent employers from taking advantage of lengthy legislative process and withdrawing while Congress debated revisions, application of withdrawal liability provisions of the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 to employers withdrawing from pension plans during five-month period prior to the statute's enactment did not violate due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, such purpose being a rational legislative purpose. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2-4082, 4001(a)(3), 4203(b), 4211, 4219(b)(2), 4402(e), as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001-1381, 1301(a)(3), 1383(b), 1391, 1399(b)(2), 1461(e); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1252.

[7] Constitutional Law ⚿253(4)
92k253(4) Most Cited Cases

Enactment of retroactive statutes confined to short and limited periods required by practicalities of producing national legislation is customary congressional practice, which courts are loathe to reject when conducting limited judicial review accorded economic legislation under the Fifth Amendment's due process clause. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[8] Constitutional Law ⚿113
92k113 Most Cited Cases

Contract clause does not apply, either by its own terms or by convincing historical evidence, to actions of the national government. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 10, cl. 1.

[9] Constitutional Law ⚿252.5
92k252.5 Most Cited Cases

Principles embodied in the Fifth Amendment's due process clause have not been held coextensive with prohibitions existing against state impairments of preexisting contracts, and the standards imposed on economic legislation by the due process clauses are less searching. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 10, cl. 1; Amends. 5, 14.

[10] Constitutional Law ⚿253(4)
92k253(4) Most Cited Cases

Although retrospective civil legislation may offend due process if it is particularly harsh and oppressive, such standard does not differ from prohibition against arbitrary and irrational legislation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

[11] Pensions ⚿103
296k103 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 232Ak131.6)

Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 merely requires withdrawing employer to compensate pension plan for benefits that have already vested with employees at time of employer's withdrawal. Employment Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, §§ 2-4082, as amended, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 1001-1381.

Syllabus [FNa1]

FNa1. The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), enacted in 1974, created a pension plan termination insurance program whereby the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), a wholly owned Government corporation, collects insurance premiums from covered private retirement pension plans and provides benefits to participants if their plan terminates with insufficient assets to support its guaranteed benefits. For multiemployer pension plans, the PBGC's payment of guaranteed benefits was not to become mandatory until January 1, 1978. During the intervening period, the PBGC had discretionary authority to pay benefits upon the termination of such plans. If the PBGC exercised its discretion to pay such benefits, employers who had contributed to the plan during the five years preceding its termination were liable to PBGC in amounts proportional to their share of the plan's contributions during that period. As the mandatory coverage date approached, Congress became concerned that a significant number of multiemployer pension plans were experiencing extreme financial hardship that would result in termination of numerous plans, forcing the PBGC to assume obligations in excess of its capacity. Ultimately, after deferring the mandatory coverage until August 1, 1980, and extensively debating the issue of withdrawal liability in 1979 and 1980, Congress enacted the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA), requiring an employer withdrawing from a multiemployer 2712 pension plan to pay a fixed and certain debt to the plan amounting to the employer's proportionate share of the plan's "unfunded vested benefits." These withdrawal liability provisions were made to take effect approximately five months before the statute was enacted into law. When appellee building and construction firm, within this 5- month period, withdrew from a multiemployer pension plan that it had been contributing to under collective-bargaining agreements with a labor union, the pension plan notified appellee that it had incurred a withdrawal liability and demanded *718 payment. Appellee then filed suit in Federal District Court, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the pension plan and the PBGC and claiming, inter alia, that the retroactive application of the MPPAA violated the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The District Court rejected this claim and granted summary judgment in favor of the pension plan and the PBGC. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that retroactive application of withdrawal liability violated the Due Process Clause because employers had reasonably relied on the contingent withdrawal liability provisions included in ERISA prior to passage of the MPPAA and because the equities generally favored appellee over the pension plan.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Held: Application of the withdrawal liability provisions of the MPPAA during the 5-month period prior to the statute's enactment does not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Pp. 2717-2720.

(a) The burden of showing that retroactive legislation complies with due process is met by showing that retroactive application of the legislation is justified by a rational legislative purpose. Here, it was rational for Congress toconclude that the MPPAA's purposes could be more fully effectuated if its withdrawal liability provisions were applied retroactively. One of the primary problems that Congress identified under ERISA was that the statute encouraged employer withdrawals from multiemployer pension plans, and Congress was properly concerned that employers would have an even greater incentive to withdraw if they knew that legislation to impose more burdensome liability on withdrawing employers was being considered. Congress therefore utilized retroactive application of the statute to prevent employers from taking advantage of the lengthy legislative process and withdrawing while Congress debated necessary revisions in the statute. Pp. 2717-2719.

(b) It is doubtful that retroactive application of the MPPAA would be invalid under the Due Process Clause even if it was suddenly enacted without any period of deliberate consideration. But even assuming that advance notice of retroactive legislation is constitutionally compelled, employers had ample notice of the withdrawal liability imposed by the MPPAA. Not only did ERISA impose contingent liability, but the various legislative proposals debated by Congress before the MPPAA was enacted uniformly included retroactive effective dates. P. 2719.

(c) The principles embodied in the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause have never been held coextensive with prohibitions existing against state impairments of pre-existing contracts. Rather, the limitations imposed on States by the Contract Clause have been contrasted with the less searching standards imposed on economic legislation by the Due Process Clauses. Pp. 2719- 2720.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

719 (d) Unlike the statute invalidated in Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 758, 79 L.Ed. 1468, which required employers to finance pensions for former employees who had already been fully compensated while employed, the MPPAA merely requires a withdrawing employer to compensate a pension plan for benefits that have already vested with the employees at the time of the employer's withdrawal. P. 2720.

705 F.2d 1502, reversed and remanded.

Baruch A. Fellner argued the cause for appellants in both cases. With him on the briefs for appellant in No. 83-245 were Henry Rose, Mitchell L. Strickler, J. Stephen Caflisch, Peter H. Gould, David F. Power, Nathan Lewin, and Seth P. Waxman. William B. Crow, James N. Westwood, William H. Walters, and David S. Paull filed briefs for appellant in No. 83-291.

2713 Thomas M. Triplett argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee. < < dagger > > > > >

< <dagger> > Gerald M. Feder filed a brief for the National Coordinating Committee for Multiemployer Plans as amicus curiae urging reversal.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for G & R Roofing Co. by Michael E. Merrill, Stephen J. Schultz, and Mark T. Bennett; for the National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors by Harold T. Half-penny; for the National Association of Manufacturers by Chester W. Nosal, John R. Keys, Jr., Jan S. Amundson, and Quentin Riegel; for the National-American Wholesale Grocers' Association by William H. Borghesani, Jr., and Peter A. Susser; for the National Steel Service Center, Inc., by Ralph T. DeStefano and Richard R. Riese; for Republic Industries, Inc., by Philip B. Kurland, Christopher G. Walsh, Jr., Lester M. Bridgeman, and Louis T. Urbanczyk; for Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co. by William L. Dorr; and for Transport Motor Express, Inc., et al. by Harris Weinstein.

Jack L. Whitacre and Stephen A. Bokat filed a brief for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States as amicus curiae.

2713 Justice BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question presented by these cases is whether application of the withdrawal liability provisions of the Multiemployer 720 Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 to employers withdrawing from pension plans during a 5-month period prior to the statute's enactment violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. We hold that it does not.

I

A

[1] In 1974, after careful study of private retirement pension plans, Congress enacted the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), 88 Stat. 829, 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq. Among the principal purposes of this "comprehensive and reticulated statute" was to ensure that employees and their beneficiaries would not be deprived of anticipated retirement benefits by the termination of pension plans before sufficient funds have been accumulated in the plans. Nachman Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 446 U.S. 359, 361-362, 374-375, 100 S.Ct. 1723, 1726, 1732-1733, 64 L.Ed.2d 354 (1980). See Alessi v. Raybestos-Manhattan, Inc., 451 U.S. 504, 510-511, 101 S.Ct. 1895, 1899-1900, 68 L.Ed.2d 402 (1981). Congress wanted to guarantee that "if a worker has been promised a defined pension benefit upon retirement--and if he has fulfilled whatever conditions are required to obtain a vested benefit--he actually will receive it." Nachman, supra, 446 U.S., at 375, 100 S.Ct., at 1733; Alessi, supra, 451 U.S., at 510, 101 S.Ct., at 1899.

Toward this end, Title IV of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq., created a plan termination insurance program, administered by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), a wholly owned Government corporation within the Department of Labor, § 1302. The PBGC collects insurance premiums from covered pension plans and provides benefits to participants in those plans if their plan terminates with insufficient assets to support its guaranteed benefits. See §§ 1322, 1361. For pension plans maintained by single employers, the PBGC's obligation to pay benefits took effect immediately upon enactment of ERISA in 1974. §§ 1381(a)-(b). For multiemployer pension plans, however, the payment of guaranteed benefits by the PBGC was

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264961

[6] Constitutional Law ⚿57
92k57 Most Cited Cases

[6] Securities Regulation ⚿2.10
349Bk2.10 Most Cited Cases

Securities Exchange Act § 27A(b), providing that any § 10(b) suit started before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Lampf decision establishing uniform limitations period for federal securities fraud cases) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated on motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, violated constitutional separation of powers principles by instructing federal courts to reopen final judgments, even though it was Congress that established what constituted finality of judgments. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.; Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 27A(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § § 78j(b), 78aa-1(b).

[7] Constitutional Law ⚿52
92k52 Most Cited Cases

[7] Constitutional Law ⚿186
92k186 Most Cited Cases

Having achieved finality, judicial decision becomes last word of judicial department with regard to particular case or controversy, and Congress may not declare by retroactive legislation that law applicable to that very case was something other than what court said it was. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

[8] Constitutional Law ⚿57
92k57 Most Cited Cases

[8] Securities Regulation ⚿2.10
349Bk2.10 Most Cited Cases

Securities Exchange Act § 27A(b), providing that any § 10(b) suit commenced before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Lampf decision establishing uniform limitations period for federal securities fraud actions) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated upon motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, violated constitutional separation of powers principles by instructing federal courts to reopen final judgments even though it was claimed that reopening of whole class of cases was involved rather than particular suit, reducing perception that legislative interference with judicial judgments was prompted by individual favoritism. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.; Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 27A(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78j(b), 78aa-1(b).

[9] Constitutional Law ⚿57
92k57 Most Cited Cases

[9] Securities Regulation ⚿2.10
349Bk2.10 Most Cited Cases

Securities Exchange Act § 27A(b), providing that any § 10(b) suit commenced before and dismissed as time barred after June 19, 1991 (day before Lampf decision establishing uniform limitations period for federal securities fraud actions) which would have been timely under laws existing on that date was to be reinstated upon motion made not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991, violated constitutional separation of powers principles by instructing federal courts to reopen final judgments even though final judgments in question rested upon statutes of limitations, existence and length of which were entirely within congressional control. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.; Securities Exchange Act of 1934, §§ 10(b), 27A(b), as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 78j(b), 78aa-1(b).

*1449 Syllabus [FN*]

FN* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

211 In a 1987 civil action, petitioners alleged that in 1983 and 1984 respondents committed fraud and deceit in the sale of stock in violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Rule 10b-5 of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The District Court dismissed the action with prejudice following this Court's decision in Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbert son, 501 U.S. 350, 364, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 2782, 115 L.Ed.2d 321, which required that suits such as petitioners' be commenced within one year after the discovery of the facts constituting the violation and within three years after such violation. After the judgment became final, Congress enacted § 27A(b) of the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

not to become mandatory until January 1, 1978. § 1381(c)(1).

*721 During the intervening period, the PBGC had discretionary authority to pay benefits upon the termination of multiemployer pension plans. §§ 1381(c)(2)-(4). If the PBGC exercised its discretion to pay such benefits, employers who had contributed to the plan during the five years preceding its termination were liable to the PBGC in amounts proportional to their share of the plan's contributions during that period. § 1364. In other words, any employer withdrawing from a multiemployer plan was subject to a contingent liability that was dependent upon the plan's termination in the next five years and the PBGC's decision to exercise its discretion and pay guaranteed benefits. In addition, any individual employer's liability was not to exceed 30% of the employer's net worth. § 1362(b)(2).

As the date for mandatory coverage of multiemployer pension plans approached, Congress became concerned that a significant number of plans were experiencing extreme financial hardship. This, in turn, could have resulted in the termination of numerous plans, forcing the PBGC to assume obligations in excess of its capacity. To avoid this potential collapse of the plan termination insurance program, Congress deferred mandatory insurance coverage for multiemployer plans for 18 months--until July 1, 1979--extending the PGBC's discretionary authority to insure plans terminating during the interim. Pub.L. 95-214, 91 2714 Stat. 1501. [FN1] The PBGC was also directed to prepare a comprehensive report analyzing the problems faced by multiemployer plans and recommending appropriate legislative action. See S.Rep. No. 95-570, pp. 1-4 (1977), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1977, p. 4128; H.R.Rep. No. 95-706, p. 1 *722 (1977). In this way, Congress created "time to legislate, if necessary, before the mandatory coverage comes into effect." 123 Cong.Rec. 36800 (1977) (statement of Sen. Williams); id., at 36800- 36802.

FN1. The effective date for mandatory insurance coverage of multiemployer plans was subsequently deferred to May 1, 1980, Pub.L. 96- 24, 93 Stat. 70, to July 1, 1980, Pub.L. 96-239, 94 Stat. 341, and finally to August 1, 1980, Pub.L. 96-293, 94 Stat. 610. On each occasion, Congress was providing more time for thorough consideration of the complex issues posed by the termination of multiemployer pension plans. Ultimately, mandatory insurance coverage was superseded by the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980, Pub.L. 96-364, 94 Stat. 1208.

The PBGC issued its report on July 1, 1978. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, Multiemployer Study Required by P.L. 95-214 (1978). Among its principal findings was that ERISA did not adequately protect plans from the adverse consequences that resulted when individual employers terminate their participation in, or withdraw from, multiemployer plans. As the report summarized:

"The basic problem with the withdrawal rules is that they are designed primarily to protect PBGC. They do not provide an efficient mechanism for reducing the burden of withdrawal on the plan and remaining employers. They may even encourage withdrawals in some instances (e.g., where termination may be imminent). Changes in the withdrawal rules should be considered:

"(1) to provide relief to plans without increasing the burden on the insurance system,

"(2) to provide a disincentive to voluntary employer withdrawals,

"(3) to reduce or remove disincentives to plan entry, and

"(4) to work with, instead of against, the termination liability provisions." Id., at 96-97. [FN2]

FN2. Congressional testimony by the Executive Director of the PBGC further explained the problems caused by employers withdrawing from multiemployer plans:

"A key problem of ongoing multiemployer plans, especially in declining industries, is the problem of employer withdrawal. Employer withdrawals reduce a plan's contribution base. This pushes the contribution rate for remaining employers to higher and higher levels in order to fund past service liabilities, including liabilities generated by employers no longer participating in the plan, so-called inherited liabilities. The rising costs may encourage--or force--further withdrawals, thereby increasing the inherited liabilities to be funded by an ever-decreasing contribution base. This vicious downward spiral may continue until it is no longer reasonable or possible for the pension plan to continue." Pension Plan Termination Insurance Issues: Hearings before the Subcommittee on Oversight of the House Committee on Ways and Means, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess., 22 (1978) (statement of Matthew M. Lind).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264962

[2] *723 To alleviate the problem of employer withdrawals, the PBGC suggested new rules under which a withdrawing employer would be required to pay whatever share of the plan's unfunded vested liabilities was attributable to that employer's participation. Id., at 97-114. [FN3] These tentative proposals were included in policy recommendations submitted to Congress on February 27, 1979, and were incorporated in proposed legislation that the Executive 2715 Branch formally sent to Congress three months later, S.1076, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. (1979). Most significantly for present purposes, the bill included an effective date for withdrawal liability of February 27, 1979--the date on which the PBGC had initially submitted its recommendations to Congress. Id., § 108. This date was chosen to prevent employers from avoiding the adverse consequences of withdrawal liability by withdrawing from plans while such liability was being considered by Congress. As one Senator noted, the retroactive effective date was designed "to prevent ... the withdrawal of these opportunistic employers without imposition of liability" and was to *724 serve "as a deterrent to hasty employer withdrawal." 126 Cong.Rec. 20234 (1980) (remarks of Sen. Matsunaga).

FN3. Again, the PBGC's Executive Director provided a more elaborate explanation:
"To deal with this problem, our report considers an approach under which an employer withdrawing from a multiemployer plan would be required to complete funding its fair share of the plan's unfunded liabilities. In other words, the plan would have a claim against the employer for the inherited liabilities which would otherwise fall upon the remaining employers as a result of the withdrawal....
"We think that such withdrawal liability would, first of all, discourage voluntary withdrawals and curtail the current incentives to flee the plan. Where such withdrawals nonetheless occur, we think that withdrawal liability would cushion the financial impact on the plan." Id., at 23 (statement of Matthew M. Lind).

Congress debated the issue of withdrawal liability for the remainder of 1979 and much of 1980. By April 1980, two Committees in the House and one in the Senate had approved substantially similar versions of the bill, each containing the February 27, 1979, effective date for withdrawal liability. The Senate Finance Committee had not yet completed its work on the bill, however, and sought more time for consideration of the legislation. See supra, at 3, and n. 1. At the same time, the Senate advanced the effective date for imposing withdrawal liability to April 29, 1980. As Senator Javits later explained:

"The committees decided in part to move up the date from February 27, 1979, the date contained in earlier versions of the bill, because the original purpose of a retroactive effective date--namely, to avoid encouragement of employer withdrawals while the bill was being considered--has been achieved. It should also be noted that the April 29 effective date is the product of strong political pressures by certain withdrawing employers who were caught by the earlier date. I realize that permitting these employers to avoid liability only increases the burdens of those employers remaining with the plans in question, but it appears necessary to accept the April 29 date in order to enact the bill before the August 1 deadline for action." 126 Cong.Rec. 20179 (1980) (statement of Sen. Javits).

See also id., at 9236-9237 (statement of Sen. Bentsen).

The House unanimously passed its version of the bill, including the February 27, 1979, effective date, in May 1980. Id., at 12233. The Senate version, adopting an effective date of April 29, 1980, was endorsed by a vote of 85-1. Id., at 20247. The Conference Committee accepted the Senate's effective date, and the legislation was signed into law by *725 the President on September 26, 1980. Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA or Act), Pub.L. 96-364, 94 Stat. 1208. As enacted, the Act requires that an employer withdrawing from a multiemployer pension plan pay a fixed and certain debt to the pension plan. This withdrawal liability is the employer's proportionate share of the plan's "unfunded vested benefits," calculated as the difference between the present value of vested benefits and the current value of the plan's assets. 29 U.S.C. §§ 1381, 1391. Pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1461(e), these withdrawal liability provisions took effect on April 29, 1980, approximately five months before the statute was enacted into law.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264963

B

Appellee R.A. Gray & Co. (Gray) is a building and construction firm doing business in Oregon. Under a series of collective-bargaining agreements with the Oregon State Council of Carpenters (Council), Gray contributed to the Oregon- Washington Carpenters-Employers Pension Trust Fund (Pension Plan), a multiemployer pension plan under 29 U.S.C. § 1301(a)(3). During February 1980, Gray advised the Council that it would be terminating their collective-bargaining agreement when it expired on June 1, 1980. Gray continued to engage in the building and construction industry, however, and therefore was deemed to have completely 2716 withdrawn from the Pension Plan pursuant to § 1383(b).

[3] The Pension Plan subsequently notified Gray that, by completely withdrawing from the plan on June 1, 1980, it had incurred a withdrawal liability of $201,359. The notice set forth a schedule of quarterly payments and demanded payment in accordance with that schedule. After some preliminary correspondence between Gray and the plan's trustees, the Pension Plan informed Gray that it was delinquent in its payments. Gray thereafter filed suit in the United States District Court for the District of Oregon, seeking *726 declaratory and injunctive relief against the Pension Plan and the PBGC. [FN4]

FN4. Gray also moved for a preliminary injunction to restrain the Pension Plan from taking any further steps to collect the withdrawal liability it assessed. The District Court denied that motion. App. 50-57. At the same time, Gray requested that the Pension Plan review its determination of withdrawal liability. See 29 U.S.C. § 1399(b)(2). In response, the Pension Plan issued a "Decision on Review," concluding that it had "accurately determined: (1) the method for allocating the unfunded vested benefits to Gray, (2) the amount of the Plan's unfunded vested benefits, (3) the schedule of payments offered to Gray, and (4) the date of Gray's complete withdrawal." 549 F.Supp. 531, 534 (Ore.1982). Although Gray could have initiated arbitration with the Pension Plan on these issues, 29 U.S.C. § 1401(a), it accepted these findings and waived its right to arbitration, 549 F.Supp., at 534.

Gray's complaint raised several constitutional claims, including a challenge to the retroactive application of the MPPAA under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. [FN5] In particular, Gray noted that its June 1, 1980, withdrawal from the Pension Plan occurred during the 5-month period preceding enactment of the MPPAA, and therefore was directly affected by the retroactivity provision included in the Act. Moreover, Gray contended, retroactive application of withdrawal liability could not be sustained under the Due Process Clause because it was arbitrary and irrational, and because it impaired the collective-bargaining agreements that Gray had signed with the Council.

FN5. Gray also contended, inter alia, that the different treatment afforded employers participating in multiemployer pension plans as opposed to employers participating in single-employer pension plans violates the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment, that retroactive application of the MPPAA violates the Ex Post Facto Clause included in Art. I, § 9, of the Constitution, and that the Act's arbitration provisions violated Gray's rights to procedural due process and trial by jury. The District Court rejected the first two claims, see 549 F.Supp., at 538-539, and refused to reach the last claim because Gray had waived its right to arbitration, id., at 539; n. 4, supra. These issues were not reached by the Court of Appeals, Shelter Framing Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 705 F.2d 1502, 1515 (CA9 1983), and are not now pressed before this Court.

*727 The District Court rejected Gray's due process claim, and granted summary judgment in favor of the Pension Plan and the PBGC. 549 F.Supp. 531 (1982). Specifically, the court analyzed the constitutionality of retroactively imposing withdrawal liability on employers by applying a four-part test established by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Nachman Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 592 F.2d 947 (1979), aff'd on statutory grounds, 446 U.S. 359, 100 S.Ct. 1723, 64 L.Ed.2d 354 (1980). As that test requires, the court examined (1) the reliance interest of the affected parties, (2) whether the interest impaired is in an area previously subjected to regulatory control, (3) the equities of imposing the legislative burdens, and (4) the statutory provisions that limit and moderate the impact of the burdens imposed. [FN6] 2717 Under these criteria, the court concluded that Gray had not satisfied the heavy burden faced by parties attempting to demonstrate that Congress has acted arbitrarily and irrationally when enacting socioeconomic legislation.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264964

FN6. The court in Nachman developed this four-part test for reviewing the constitutionality of retroactive legislation under the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause primarily by relying upon this Court's decisions in Allied Structural Steel Co. v. Spannaus, 438 U.S. 234, 98 S.Ct. 2716, 57 L.Ed.2d 727 (1978), and Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 758, 79 L.Ed. 1468 (1935). For reasons explained below, however, we do not believe that these cases control judicial review of retroactive federal legislation affecting economic benefits and burdens. See infra, at 2719-2720. We therefore reject the constitutional underpinnings of the analysis employed by the Court of Appeals in Nachman, although we have no occasion to consider whether the factors mentioned by that court might in some circumstances be relevant in determining whether retroactive legislation is rational. Cf. Nachman Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 446 U.S. 359, 367-368, and n. 12, 100 S.Ct. 1723, 1729-1730, and n. 12, 64 L.Ed.2d 354 (1980) (explicitly limiting our review to the statutory question presented).

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed, although it too believed that the four-factor Nachman test was the appropriate standard to use when analyzing the constitutionality of retroactive legislation enacted by Congress. Shelter Framing Corp. v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., *728 705 F.2d 1502 (1983). In particular, the court concluded that retroactive application of withdrawal liability violated the Due Process Clause because employers had reasonably relied on the contingent withdrawal liability provisions included in ERISA prior to passage of the MPPAA, id., at 1511- 1512, and because the equities in this action generally favored Gray over the Pension Plan, id., at 1512-1514.

Both the Pension Plan and the PBGC invoked the appellate jurisdiction of this Court under 28 U.S.C. § 1252. We noted probable jurisdiction, 464 U.S. 912, 104 S.Ct. 271, 78 L.Ed.2d 253 (1983), [FN7] and now reverse.

FN7. At least three Courts of Appeals, as well as numerous District Courts, have concluded that retroactive application of the MPPAA's withdrawal liability provisions satisfies constitutional standards. See, e.g., Textile Workers Pension Fund v. Standard Dye & Finishing Co., 725 F.2d 843 (CA2 1984); Peick v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 724 F.2d 1247 (CA7 1983), cert. pending, 465 U.S. 1098, 104 S.Ct. 1588, 80 L.Ed.2d 121; Republic Industries, Inc. v. Teamsters Joint Council, 718 F.2d 628 (CA4 1983), cert. pending, No. 83-541.
The prospective application of the MPPAA's withdrawal liability provisions has also been the subject of extensive nationwide litigation. All of the Courts of Appeals addressing the various constitutional challenges raised in those cases, however, have upheld the statute. See, e.g., The Washington Star Co. v. International Typographical Union Negotiated Pension Plan, 235 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 729 F.2d 1502 (1984); Peick v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., supra; Republic Industries, Inc. v. Teamsters Joint Council, supra. Because these issues were not addressed by the Court of Appeals, cf. n. 5, supra, and are not actively pursued by the parties before this Court, we assume for purposes of our decision in these cases that the prospective effects of the Act satisfy constitutional standards.

II

[4] The starting point for analysis is our decision in Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976). In Turner Elkhorn, we considered a constitutional challenge to the retroactive effects of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 as amended by the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972. Under Title IV of that Act, coal mine operators were required to compensate former employees disabled pneumoconiosis *729 even though those employees had terminated their work in the industry before the statute was enacted. We nonetheless had little difficulty in upholding the statute against constitutional attack under the Due Process Clause. As we initially noted:

"It is by now well established that legislative Acts adjusting the burdens and benefits of economic life come to the Court with a presumption of constitutionality, and that the burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way. See, e.g., Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 83 S.Ct. 1028, 10 L.Ed.2d 93 (1963); Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 487-488, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955)." 428 U.S., at 15, 96 S.Ct., at 2892.

We further explained that the strong deference accorded legislation in the field of national economic policy is no less applicable when that legislation is applied retroactively. Provided that the retroactive application of a statute is supported by a legitimate legislative purpose furthered by rational 2718 means, judgments about the wisdom of such legislation remain within the exclusive province of the legislative and executive branches:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264965

"[I]nsofar as the Act requires compensation for disabilities bred during employment terminated before the date of enactment, the Act has some retrospective effect--although, as we have noted, the Act imposed no liability on operators until [after its enactment]. And it may be that the liability imposed by the Act for disabilities suffered by former employees was not anticipated at the time of actual employment. But our cases areclear that legislation readjusting rights and burdens is not unlawful solely because it upsets otherwise settled expectations. See Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U.S. 100, 67 S.Ct. 1140, 91 L.Ed. 1368 (1947); Carpenter v. Wabash R. Co., 309 U.S. 23, 60 S.Ct. 416, 84 L.Ed. 558 (1940); Norman v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 294 U.S. 240, 55 S.Ct. 407, 79 L.Ed. 885 (1935); Home Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 54 S.Ct. 231, 78 L.Ed. 413 (1934); Louisville *730 & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467, 31 S.Ct. 265, 55 L.Ed. 297 (1911). This is true even though the effect of the legislation is to impose a new duty or liability based on past acts. See Lichter v. United States, 334 U.S. 742, 68 S.Ct. 1294, 92 L.Ed. 1694 (1948); Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 59 S.Ct. 121, 83 L.Ed. 87 (1938); Funkhouser v. Preston Co., 290 U.S. 163, 54 S.Ct. 134, 78 L.Ed. 243 (1933)." Id., at 15-16, 96 S.Ct., at 2892-2893 (footnotes omitted).

[5] To be sure, we went on to recognize that retroactive legislation does have to meet a burden not faced by legislation that has only future effects. "It does not follow ... that what Congress can legislate prospectively it can legislate retrospectively. The retroactive aspects of legislation, as well as the prospective aspects, must meet the test of due process, and the justifications for the latter may not suffice for the former." Id., at 16- 17, 96 S.Ct., at 2892-2893. But that burden is met simply by showing that the retroactive application of the legislation is itself justified by a rational legislative purpose.

For example, in Turner Elkhorn we found that "the imposition of liability for the effects of disabilities bred in the past is justified as a rational measure to spread the costs of the employees' disabilities to those who have profited from the fruits of their labor--the operators and the coal consumers." Id., at 18, 96 S.Ct., at 2893. Similarly, in these cases, a rational legislative purpose supporting the retroactive application of the MPPAA's withdrawal liability provisions is easily identified. Indeed, Congress was quite explicit when explaining the reason for the statute's retroactivity.

[6][7] In particular, we believe it was eminently rational for Congress to conclude that the purposes of the MPPAA could be more fully effectuated if its withdrawal liability provisions were applied retroactively. One of the primary problems Congress identified under ERISA was that the statute encouraged employer withdrawals from multiemployer plans. And Congress was properly concerned that employers would have an even greater incentive to withdraw if they knew that legislation to impose more burdensome liability on withdrawing *731 employers was being considered. See 126 Cong.Rec. 20179 (1980) (statement of Sen. Javits); id., at 20244 (remarks of Sen. Matsunaga). See also supra, at 2715. Withdrawals occurring during the legislative process not only would have required that remaining employers increase their contributions to existing pension plans, butalso could have ultimately affected the stability of the plans themselves. Congress therefore utilized retroactive application of the statute to prevent employers from taking advantage of a lengthy legislative process and withdrawing while Congress debated necessary revisions in the statute. Indeed, as the amendments progressed through the legislative process, Congress advanced the effective date chosen so that it would encompass only that retroactive time period 2719 that Congress believed would be necessary to accomplish its purposes. As we recently noted when upholding the retroactive application of an income tax statute in United States v. Darusmont, 449 U.S. 292, 296-297, 101 S.Ct. 549, 551-552, 66 L.Ed.2d 513 (1981) (per curiam), the enactment of retroactive statutes "confined to short and limited periods required by the practicalities of producing national legislation ... is a customary congressional practice." We are loathe to reject such a common practice when conducting the limited judicial review accorded economic legislation under the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

III

Gray and its supporting amici offer several reasons for subjecting the retroactive application of the MPPAA to some form of heightened judicial scrutiny. We are not persuaded, however, by any of their arguments.

First, Gray contends that retroactive legislation does not satisfy due process requirements unless persons affected by the legislation had "notice" of changing legal circumstances and "an opportunity to conform their conduct to the requirements of [the] new legislation." Brief for Appellee 20. We have doubts, however, that retroactive application of the *732 MPPAA would be invalid under the Due Process Clause for lack of notice even if it was suddenly enacted by Congress without any period of deliberate consideration, as often occurs with floor amendments or "riders" added at the last minute to pending legislation. But even assuming that advance notice of legislative action with retrospective effects is constitutionally compelled, cf. Darusmont, supra, at 299, 101 S.Ct., at 553 (similarly assuming that notice is a relevant consideration), we believe that employers had ample notice of the withdrawal liability imposed by the MPPAA. Not only did ERISA itself impose contingent liability on withdrawing employers, but the various legislative proposals debated by Congress before enactment of the MPPAA uniformly included retroactive effective dates among their provisions. See supra, at 2714-2715. [FN8]

FN8. See, e.g., Textile Workers Pension Fund v. Standard Dye & Finishing Co., 725 F.2d, at 852 ("Notice was everywhere.... [Employers] withdrew from their funds not only when pervasive regulation, including withdrawal liability under ERISA, existed in the pension field, but also when the advent of the MPPAA was imminent"); Peick v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 724 F.2d, at 1269 ("[T]he intent of Congress to provide for the retrospective imposition of liability was quite clear from the very beginning of the legislative process.... [E]mployers who withdrew during [[[[the retrospective] period cannot argue that they are now being required to pay wholly unanticipated liabilities" (footnote omitted).

[8][9][10] Second, it is suggested that we apply constitutional principles that have been developed under the Contract Clause, Art. I, § 10, cl. 1 ("No State shall ... pass any ... Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts ..."), when reviewing this federal legislation. [FN9] See, e.g., Energy Resources *733 Group, Inc. v. Kansas Power & Light Co., 459 U.S. 400, 103 S.Ct. 697, 74 L.Ed.2d 569 (1983); Allied Structural Steel Co. v. Spannaus, 438 U.S. 234, 98 S.Ct. 2716, 57 L.Ed.2d 727 (1978). We have never held, however, that the principles embodied in the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause are coextensive with prohibitions existing against state impairments of pre-existing contracts. See, e.g., Philadelphia, B. & W.R. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U.S. 603, 2720 32 S.Ct. 589, 56 L.Ed. 911 (1912). Indeed, to the extent that recent decisions of the Court have addressed the issue, we have contrasted the limitations imposed on States by the Contract Clause with the less searching standards imposed on economic legislation by the Due Process Clauses. See United States Trust Co. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 17, n. 13, 97 S.Ct. 1505, 1515, n. 13, 52 L.Ed.2d 92 (1977). And, although we have noted that retrospective civil legislation may offend due process if it is "particularly 'harsh and oppressive,' " ibid. (quoting Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 147, 59 S.Ct. 121, 125, 83 L.Ed. 87 (1938), and citing Turner Elkhorn, 428 U.S., at 14-20, 96 S.Ct., at 2891-2894), that standard does not differ from the prohibition against arbitrary and irrational legislation that we clearly enunciated in Turner Elkhorn.

FN9. It could not justifiably be claimed that the Contract Clause applies, either by its own terms or by convincing historical evidence, to actions of the National Government. Indeed, records from the debates at the Constitutional Convention leave no doubt that the Framers explicitly refused to subject federal legislation impairing private contracts to the literal requirements of the Contract Clause:
"MR. GERRY entered into observations inculcating the importance of public faith, and the propriety of the restraint put on the states from impairing the obligation of contracts; alleging that Congress ought to be laid under the like prohibitions. He made a motion to that effect. He was not seconded." 5 J. Elliott, Debates on the Federal Constitution 546 (2 ed. 1876). See 2 M. Ferrand, Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, p. 619 (1911).

[11] Finally, Gray urges that we resuscitate the Court's 1935 decision in Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 758, 79 L.Ed. 1468, which invalidated provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1934 that required employers to finance pensions for former railroad employees. Assuming, as we did in Turner Elkhorn, supra, 428 U.S., at 19, 96 S.Ct., at 2894, that this aspect of Alton "retains vitality" despite the changes in judicial review of economic legislation that have occurred in the ensuing years, we again find it distinguishable from the present litigation. Unlike the statute in Alton, which created pensions for employees who had been fully compensated while working for 734 the railroads, the MPPAA merely requires a withdrawing employer to compensate a pension plan for benefits that have already vested with the employees at the time of the employer's withdrawal.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264967

IV

We conclude that Congress' decision to apply the withdrawal liability provisions of the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act to employers withdrawing from pension plans during the 5-month period preceding enactment of the Act is supported by a rational legislative purpose, and therefore withstands attack under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[redacted]

Supreme Court of the United States

DUKE POWER COMPANY, Appellant,
v.
CAROLINA ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY GROUP, INC., et al.
UNITED STATES NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION et al., Appellants,
v.
CAROLINA ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY GROUP, INC., et al.

Nos. 77-262, 77-375.

Argued March 20, 1978.
Decided June 26, 1978.

Direct appeal was taken from a decision of the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, 431 F.Supp. 203, declaring that the Price-Anderson Act, which imposed a $560 million limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants, was constitutionally invalid. The Supreme Court, Mr. Chief Justice Burger, held that: (1) citizens living near the site of proposed nuclear power plants had standing to maintain the declaratory judgment action; (2) the constitutional challenges to the Act were ripe for adjudication; (3) the Act did not violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, and (4) the Act did not violate the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Stewart filed an opinion concurring in result.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist filed an opinion concurring in judgment, with whom Mr. Justice Stevens joined.

Mr. Justice Stevens filed an opinion concurring in the judgment.

West Headnotes

[1] Federal Courts ⚿242.1
170Bk242.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk242)

For purposes of determining whether general federal question jurisdiction exists, it is not necessary to decide whether alleged cause of action against federal agency based directly on Constitution is in fact cause of action on which plaintiffs could actually recover; instead, test is whether cause of action alleged is so patently without merit as to justify court's dismissal for want of jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1331(a).

[2] Federal Courts ⚿243
170Bk243 Most Cited Cases

District court had jurisdiction over complaint seeking declaration of constitutional invalidity of statute limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants under general federal question jurisdictional statute rather than under statute granting jurisdiction over cases arising under acts regulating commerce or protecting against restraints and monopolies, where complaint, fairly read, raised two basic challenges to act, both of which were derived from Fifth Amendment; whether direct cause of action against Nuclear Regulatory Commission under Constitution was one generally to be recognized need not be decided since claimed cause of action to vindicate plaintiffs' constitutional rights was sufficiently substantial and colorable to sustain jurisdiction. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 1 et seq. as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2011 et seq.; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1331(a), 1337; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

[3] Federal Civil Procedure ⚿103.2
170Ak103.2 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Ak103)

Essence of standing inquiry is whether parties seeking to invoke court's jurisdiction have alleged such personal stake in outcome of controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens presentation of issues upon which court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions; "personal stake" requires not only distinct and palpable injury to plaintiff, but also fairly traceable causal connection between claimed injury and challenged conduct.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[4] Federal Courts ⚿478
170Bk478 Most Cited Cases

In action brought against Nuclear Regulatory Commission challenging constitutional validity of statute imposing $560 million limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants, district court's finding that several of immediate adverse effects of construction of plants, including environmental and aesthetic consequences of thermal pollution of two lakes in vicinity of disputed plants and emission of nonnatural radiation into environment, were adequate to satisfy "injury in fact" standard required as predicate for standing was not clearly erroneous. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[5] Federal Courts ⚿478
170Bk478 Most Cited Cases

In action brought against Nuclear Regulatory Commission by citizens groups and individuals living near sites of proposed nuclear power plants, seeking declaration of constitutional invalidity of statute limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants, district court's finding of "substantial likelihood" that neither of disputed nuclear plants would be completed or operated absent challenged statute, and that relief requested would redress injury claimed, so as to satisfy constitutional standing requirement, was not clearly erroneous. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[6] Federal Civil Procedure ⚿103.3
170Ak103.3 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Ak103)

Outside context of taxpayer suits, litigant need not demonstrate more than injury in fact and substantial likelihood that judicial relief requested will prevent or redress claimed injury to satisfy "case and controversy" standing requirement; where party champions his own rights, and where injury alleged is concrete and particularized one which will be prevented or redressed by relief requested, basic practical and prudential concerns underlying standing doctrine are generally satisfied when constitutional requisites are met. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 1 et seq.

[7] Constitutional Law ⚿42.3(2)
92k42.3(2) Most Cited Cases

Citizens groups and individuals who lived within close proximity to planned nuclear power plants had standing to maintain action against public utility and Nuclear Regulatory Commission seeking declaration of constitutional invalidity of statute limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants where immediate adverse effects of construction of plants, including environmental and aesthetic consequences of thermal pollution of two lakes in vicinity of plants, was adequate to satisfy "injury in fact" standard and where there was substantial likelihood that plants would be neither completed nor operated absent challenged statute. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 1 et seq. as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2011 et seq.

[8] Federal Courts ⚿13.25
170Bk13.25 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 170Bk13)

Constitutional challenges to statute imposing $560 million limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants were ripe for adjudication where all parties would be adversely affected by decision to defer definitive resolution of constitutional validity vel non of act, and where alleged injury could be redressed by relief requested. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 et seq. as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210 et seq.

[9] Constitutional Law ⚿48(4.1)
92k48(4.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k48(4))

Statute imposing limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants was classic example of economic regulation, and came to court with presumption of constitutionality; burden was on parties complaining that statute violated due process to establish that legislature acted in arbitrary or irrational way. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[10] Constitutional Law ⚿299.1
92k299.1 Most Cited Cases

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264971

1934 Act, which provides for reinstatement on motion of any action commenced pre-Lampf but dismissed thereafter as time barred, if the action would have been timely filed under applicable pre-Lampf state law. Although finding that the statute's terms required that petitioners' ensuing § 27A(b) motion be granted, the District Court denied the motion on the ground that § 27A(b) is unconstitutional. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: Section 27A(b) contravenes the Constitution's separation of powers to the extent that it requires federal courts to reopen final judgments entered before its enactment. Pp. 1451-1463.

(a) Despite respondents' arguments to the contrary, there is no reasonable construction on which § 27A(b) does not require federal courts to reopen final judgments in suits dismissed with prejudice by virtue of Lampf. Pp. 1451- 1452.

(b) Article III establishes a "judicial department" with the "province and duty ... to say what the law is" in particular cases and controversies. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177, 2 L.Ed. 60. The Framers crafted this charter with an expressed understanding that it gives the Federal Judiciary the power, not merely to rule on cases, but to decide them conclusively, subject to review only by superior courts in the Article III hierarchy. Thus, the Constitution forbids the Legislature to interfere with courts' final judgments. Pp. 1453-1456.

(c) Section 27A(b) effects a clear violation of the foregoing principle by retroactively commanding the federal courts to reopen final judgments. This Court's decisions have uniformly provided fair warning that retroactive legislation such as § 27A(b) exceeds congressional powers. 212 See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 113, 68 S.Ct. 431, 437, 92 L.Ed. 568. Petitioners are correct that when a new law makes clear that it is retroactive, an appellate court must apply it in reviewing judgments still on appeal, and must alter the outcome accordingly. However, once a judgment has achieved finality in the highest court in the hierarchy, the decision becomes the last word of the judicial department with regard to the particular case or controversy, *1450 and Congress may not declare by retroactive legislation that the law applicable to that case was in fact something other than it was. It is irrelevant that § 27A(b) reopens (or directs the reopening of) final judgments in a whole class of cases rather than in a particular suit, and that the final judgments so reopened rested on the bar of a statute of limitations rather than on some other ground. Pp. 1456-1458.

(d) Apart from § 27A(b), the Court knows of no instance in which Congress has attempted to set aside the final judgment of an Article III court by retroactive legislation. Fed.Rule Civ.Proc. 60(b), 20 U.S.C. § 1415(e)(4), 28 U.S.C. § 2255, 50 U.S.C.App. § 520(4), and, e.g., the statutes at issue in United States v. Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. 371, 391-392, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 2728-2729, 65 L.Ed.2d 844, Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet. 222, 238, 8 L.Ed. 665, Paramino Lumber Co. v. Marshall, 309 U.S. 370, 60 S.Ct. 600, 84 L.Ed. 814, and Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 18 How. 421, 15 L.Ed. 435, distinguished. Congress's prolonged reticence would be amazing if such interference were not understood to be constitutionally proscribed by the Constitution's separation of powers. The Court rejects the suggestion that § 27A(b) might be constitutional if it exhibited prospectivity or a greater degree of general applicability. Pp. 1458-1463.

1 F.3d 1487 (CA6 1993), affirmed.

SCALIA, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and O'CONNOR, KENNEDY, SOUTER, and THOMAS, JJ., joined. BREYER, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 1463. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which GINSBURG, J., joined, post, p. 1466.

William W. Allen, Lexington, KY (argued), for petitioners. Michael R. Dreeben, Washington, DC (argued), for federal respondent.

213 Theodore B. Olson (argued), Washington, DC, for private respondents.

For U.S. Supreme Court Briefs See:

1994 WL 387806 (Pet.Supp.Brief)

1994 WL 389771 (Pet.Brief)

1994 WL 496344 (Resp.Brief)

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(Formerly 92k299(1), 92k299)

[10] Electricity ⚿1
145k1 Most Cited Cases

[10] United States ⚿53(6.1)
393k53(6.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 393k53(6))

Price-Anderson Act statutory limit on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants bears rational relationship to Congress' concern for stimulating involvement of private enterprise in production of electric energy through use of atomic power and thus the Act does not violate the due process clause. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

[11] Constitutional Law ⚿299.1
92k299.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k299(1), 92k299)

[11] Electricity ⚿1
145k1 Most Cited Cases

[11] United States ⚿53(6.1)
393k53(6.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 393k53(6))

Assuming arguendo that $560 million fund provided by Price-Anderson Act limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants would not insure full recovery in all conceivable circumstances, it does not follow that liability limitation is therefore irrational and violative of due process in view of extremely remote possibility of accident in which liability would exceed statutory limit, and of Congress' commitment to "take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequence of" a disaster of such proportions. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[12] United States ⚿53(6.1)
393k53(6.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 393k53(6))

District court's finding that statute limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants encouraged irresponsibility in matters of safety and environmental protection could not withstand careful scrutiny, since nothing in liability limitation provision undermined or altered rigor and integrity of process involved in review of applications for license to construct or operate nuclear power plant, and since in event of nuclear accident utility itself would probably suffer largest damages. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[13] Constitutional Law ⚿92
92k92 Most Cited Cases

Person has no property right or vested interest in any rule of common law; Constitution does not forbid creation of new rights or abolition of old ones recognized by common law to attain permissible legislative objective, despite fact that otherwise settled expectations may be upset thereby.

[14] Constitutional Law ⚿92
92k92 Most Cited Cases

Parties who lived within close proximity to planned nuclear power plants, and who sought declaration of constitutional invalidity of statutory limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants did not, prior to enactment of such statute, have any right cognizable under due process clause to be free of nuclear power or to take advantage of state of uncertainty which inhibited private development of nuclear power; parties' only relevant right prior to enactment of statute was to utilize their existing common-law and state law remedies to vindicate any particular harm visited on them from whatever resources. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

[15] United States ⚿53(6.1)
393k53(6.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 393k53(6))

Statute limiting liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants to $560 million provides fair and reasonable substitute for state tort law remedies it replaces, in view of uncertainty of recovery of damages of such magnitude from utility or component manufacturer whose resources might well be exhausted at early stage, and in view of congressional assurance of $560 million fund for recovery accompanied by statutory commitment to "take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of" a nuclear accident; statutorily mandated waiver of defenses establishes right of injured parties to compensation without proof of fault and eliminates burden of delay and uncertainty which would follow from need to litigate question of liability after accident. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170 as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[16] Constitutional Law ⚷243.1
92k243.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k243(1))

[16] Electricity ⚷13
145k13 Most Cited Cases

[16] United States ⚷53(6.1)
393k53(6.1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 393k53(6))

General rationality of Price-Anderson Act imposing limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants, particularly with reference to important congressional purpose of encouraging private participation and exploitation of nuclear energy, is ample justification for difference in treatment between those injured in nuclear accidents and those whose injuries are derived from other causes; liability limitation does not violate equal protection. Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170(b, e) as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210(b, e); U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

[17] Eminent Domain ⚷266
148k266 Most Cited Cases

Statute imposing limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants does not withdraw Tucker Act remedy for any "taking" which would result from such accident. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1491; Atomic Energy Act of 1954, § 170(b, e) as amended 42 U.S.C.A. § 2210(b, e); U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

2623 Syllabus [FN*]

FN* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

59 The Price-Anderson Act (Act), having the dual purpose of protecting the public and encouraging the development of the nuclear energy industry, imposes a $560 million limitation on liability for nuclear accidents resulting from the operation of federally licensed private nuclear power plants, requires those indemnified by the $560 million fund established under the Act to waive all legal defenses in the event of a substantial nuclear accident, and further provides that in the event of a nuclear accident involving damages in excess of the amount of aggregate liability Congress "will take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of a disaster of such magnitude." Appellant Duke Power Co. (Duke), an investor-owned public utility which is constructing nuclear power plants in North and South Carolina, and appellant Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), were sued by appellees (an environmental organization, a labor union, and a number of individuals who live near the plants in question) who sought a declaration that the Act is unconstitutional. After finding, inter alia, that the "immediate" adverse effects upon appellees resulting from the operation of the plants included thermal pollution of lakes in the vicinity, and emission of non-natural radiation into appellees' environment, and also that there was a "substantial likelihood" that Duke would not be able to complete construction and maintain operation of the plants "but for" the protection provided by the Act, the District Court held that appellees had standing to challenge the Act's constitutionality and that their claim could be properly adjudicated. The court then went on to hold that the Act violated the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment because the amount of recovery is not rationally related to the potential losses, the Act tends to encourage irresponsibility in matters of safety and environmental protection, and there is no quid pro quo for the liability limitation; and, the Act also offended the equal 60 protection component of the Fifth Amendment by forcing the victims of nuclear incidents to bear the burden of injury, whereas society as a whole benefits from the existence and development of nuclear power. Held:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1. The District Court had jurisdiction over appellees' complaint against the NRC under 28 U.S.C. § 1331(a) (1976 ed.) rather than § 1337, the jurisdictional base pleaded. The complaint, fairly read, raised two basic challenges to the Act, both of which are derived from the Fifth Amendment. Appellees' cause of action against the NRC directly under the Constitution is sufficiently substantial to sustain jurisdiction; the further question of whether such a cause of 2624 action is to be generally recognized need not be decided on this record. Pp. 2628-2630.

2. Appellees have standing to challenge the Act's constitutionality. That several of the "immediate" adverse effects of construction of the plants were found to harm appellees is sufficient to satisfy the "injury in fact" prong of the constitutional requirement for standing. And the finding as to the "but for" causal connection between the Act and the construction of the plants satisfies the second prong of the constitutional test for standing, that the exercise of the court's remedial powers would redress the claimed injuries. Pp. 2630-2635.

3. The constitutional challenges to the Act are ripe for adjudication, since all parties would be adversely affected by a decision to defer definitive resolution of the constitutional validity vel non of the Act. To the extent that "issues of ripeness involve, at least in part, the existence of a live 'Case or Controversy.' " Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 138, 95 S.Ct. 335, 355, 42 L.Ed.2d 320 (1974) , the fact that appellees will sustain immediate injury from the operation of the disputed power plants and that such injury would be redressed by the relief requested satisfies this requirement. P. 2635.

4. The Act does not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Pp. 2635-2641.

(a) The record supports the need for the imposition of a statutory limit on liability to encourage private industry participation and hence bears a rational relationship to Congress' concern for stimulating private industry's involvement in the production of nuclear electric energy. P. 2636.

(b) Assuming, arguendo, that the $560 million fund would not insure full recovery in all conceivable circumstances, it does not follow that the liability limitation is therefore irrational and violative of due process. When appraised in light of the extremely remote possibility of an accident in which liability would exceed the statutory limit and Congress' commitment to "take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate *61 to protect the public from the consequences of" a disaster of such proportions, the congressional decision to fix a $560 million ceiling is within permissible limits and not violative of due process. Pp. 2636-2638.

(c) The District Court's finding that the Act tends to encourage irresponsibility in matters of safety and environmental protection cannot withstand careful scrutiny, since nothing in the liability-limitation provision undermines or alters the rigor and integrity of the process involved in the review of applications for a license to construct or operate a nuclear power plant, and since, in the event of a nuclear accident the utility itself would probably suffer the largest damage. P. 2638.

(d) The Act provides a reasonably just substitute for the common-law or state tort law remedies it replaces, and nothing more is required by the Due Process Clause. The congressional assurance of a $560 million fund for recovery, accompanied by the statutory commitment to "take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of" a nuclear accident, is a fair and reasonable substitute for the uncertain recovery of damages of this magnitude from a utility or component manufacturer whose resources might well be exhausted at an early stage. And, at the minimum, the statutorily mandated waiver of defenses establishes at the threshold the right of injured parties to compensation without proof of fault and eliminates the burden of delay and uncertainty that would follow from the need to litigate the question of liability after an accident. Pp. 2638-2641.

(e) There is no equal protection violation, since the general rationality of the Act's liability limitation, particularly with reference to the congressional purpose of encouraging private participation in the exploitation of nuclear energy, is ample justification for the difference in treatment between those injured in nuclear accidents 2625 and those whose injuries are derived from other causes. P. 2641.

5. The Act does not withdraw the Tucker Act

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

remedy, 28 U.S.C.A § 1491, and thus appellees' challenge under the Just Compensation Clause must fail. The further question of whether a taking claim could be established under the Fifth Amendment is a matter appropriately left for another day. P. 2641 n. 39.

431 F.Supp. 203, reversed and remanded.

*62 Steve C. Griffith, Jr., Charlotte, N. C., for appellant in No. 77- 262.

Sol. Gen. Wade H. McCree, Jr., Washington, D. C., for appellants in No. 77- 375.

William B. Schultz, Washington, D. C., for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

These appeals present the question of whether Congress may, consistent with the Constitution, impose a limitation on *63 liability for nuclear accidents resulting from the operation of private nuclear power plants licensed by the Federal Government.

I
A

When Congress passed the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, it contemplated that the development of nuclear power would be a Government monopoly. See Act of Aug. 1, 1946, ch. 724, 60 Stat. 755. Within a decade, however, Congress concluded that the national interest would be best served if the Government encouraged the private sector to become involved in the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes under a program of federal regulation and licensing. See H.R.Rep. No. 2181, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., 1-11 (1954). The Atomic Energy Act of 1954, Act of Aug. 30, 1954, ch. 1073, 68 Stat. 919, as amended, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2281 (1970 ed. and Supp V), implemented this policy decision, providing for licensing of private construction, ownership, and operation of commercial nuclear power reactors for energy production under strict supervision by the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). [FN1] See Power Reactor Development Co. v. Electrical Workers, 367 U.S. 396, 81 S.Ct. 1529, 6 L.Ed.2d 924 (1961), rev'g and remanding, 108 U.S.App.D.C. 97, 280 F.2d 645 (1960).

FN1. Under the terms of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974, 42 U.S.C. § 5801 et seq. (1970 ed., Supp. V), the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) has now replaced the AEC as the licensing and regulatory authority.

Private industry responded to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 with the development of an experimental power plant constructed under the auspices of a consortium of interested companies. It soon became apparent that profits from the private exploitation of atomic energy were uncertain and the accompanying risks substantial. See Green, Nuclear Power: *64 Risk, Liability, and Indemnity, 71 Mich.L.Rev. 479-481 (1973) (Green). Although the AEC offered incentives to encourage investment, there remained in the path of the private nuclear power industry various problems--the risk of potentially vast liability in the event of a nuclear accident of a sizable magnitude being the major obstacle. Notwithstanding comprehensive testing and study, the uniqueness of this form of energy production made it impossible totally to rule out the risk of a major nuclear accident resulting in extensive damage. Private industry and the AEC were confident that such a disaster would not occur, but the very uniqueness of nuclear power meant that the possibility remained, and the potential liability dwarfed the ability of the industry and private insurance companies to absorb the risk. See Hearings before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on Government Indemnity for Private Licensees and AEC Contractors Against Reactor Hazards, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., 122-124 (1956). Thus, while repeatedly stressing that the risk of a 2626 major nuclear accident was extremely remote, spokesmen for the private sector informed Congress that they would be forced to withdraw from the field if their liability were not limited by appropriate legislation. Id., at 9, 109-110, 115, 120, 136-137, 148, 181, 195, and 240.

Congress responded in 1957 by passing the Price-Anderson Act, 71 Stat. 576, 42 U.S.C. § 2210 (1970 ed. and Supp. V). The Act had the dual purpose of "protect[ing] the public and . . . encourag[ing] the development of the atomic energy industry." 42 U.S.C. § 2012(i). In its original form, the Act limited the aggregate liability for a single nuclear incident [FN2] to $500 million plus the amount of liability insurance *65 available on the private market--some $60 million in 1957. The nuclear industry was required to purchase the maximum available amount of privately underwritten public liability insurance, and the Act provided that if damages from a nuclear disaster exceeded the amount of that private insurance coverage, the Federal Government would indemnify the licensee and other "persons indemnified" [FN3] in an amount not to exceed $500 million. Thus, the actual ceiling on liability was the amount of private insurance coverage plus the Government's indemnification obligation which totaled $560 million.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN2. A "nuclear incident" is defined as "any occurrence . . . within the United States causing, within or outside the United States, bodily injury, sickness, disease, or death, or loss of or damage to property, or loss of use of property, arising out of or resulting from the radioactive, toxic, explosive, or other hazardous properties of source, special nuclear, or by-product material . . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 2014(q).

FN3. "The term 'person indemnified' means (1) with respect to a nuclear incident occurring within the United States . . . the person with whom an indemnity agreement is executed and any other person who may be liable for public liability . . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 2014(t).

Since its enactment, the Act has been twice amended, the first occasion being on the eve of its expiration in 1966. [FN4] These amendments extended the basic liability-limitation provisions for another 10 years, and added a provision which had the effect of requiring those indemnified under the Act to waive all legal defenses in the event of a substantial nuclear accident. [FN5] This provision was based on a congressional concern that state tort law dealing with liability for nuclear incidents was generally unsettled and that some way of insuring a common standard of responsibility for all jurisdictions--strict liability--was needed. A waiver of defenses was thought to be the preferable approach since it entailed less *66 interference with state tort law than would the enactment of a federal statute prescribing strict liability. [FN6] See S.Rep. No. 1605, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 6-10 (1966); U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.Code 1966, p. 3201.

FN4. By the terms of the Act as originally passed, it was only applicable to licenses issued between August 30, 1954, and August 1, 1967. § 4, 71 Stat. 576, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2210(c).

FN5. The waiver provision is incorporated in the indemnity agreement. The defenses of negligence, contributory negligence, charitable or governmental immunity and assumption of risk all are waived in the event of an extraordinary nuclear occurrence, as are, to a limited degree, defenses based on certain short state statutes of limitations. 80 Stat. 891, 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(1). See also 10 C.F.R. §§ 140.81 to 140.85, 140.91 to 140.92 (1977).

FN6. The Act was also amended in 1966 to provide for the transfer of all claims arising out of a nuclear incident to a single federal district court. 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2). If the court finds that liability may exceed the liability limitation of the Act, immediate payments to injured parties are limited to 15% of the liability limitation until the court approves a plan of distribution to insure equitable treatment of all parties. § 2210(o) (1970 ed. and Supp. V).

In 1975, Congress again extended the Act's coverage until 1987, and continued the $560 million limitation on liability. However a new provision was added requiring, in the event of a nuclear incident, each of the 60 or more reactor owners to contribute between $2 and $5 million toward the cost 2627 of compensating victims. [FN7] 42 U.S.C. § 2210(b) (1970 ed., Supp. V). Since the liability ceiling remained at the same level, the effect of the "deferred premium" provision was to reduce the Federal Government's contribution to the liability pool. [FN8] In its amendments to the Act in 1975, Congress also explicitly provided that "in the event of a nuclear incident involving damages in excess of [the] amount of aggregate liability, the Congress will thoroughly review the particular incident and will take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of a *67 disaster of such magnitude . .. ." 42 U.S.C. § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V).

FN7. The NRC, which was empowered by the 1975 amendments to choose a figure in the $2-$5 million range, has set the assessment at $5 million. 42 Fed.Reg. 46 (1977).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN8. As the number of reactors increases, the $5 million deferred premium in itself will yield a fund exceeding the present liability ceiling. For example, it is predicted that by 1985 there will be a maximum of 138 reactors operating, see Executive Office of the President, The National Energy Plan 71 (1977), which would produce $690 million in addition to whatever insurance is available from the private insurance market. Under the Act, the liability ceiling automatically increases to a level equal to the amount of primary and secondary (deferred premium) insurance coverage when the amount of such coverage exceeds the $560 million figure. 42 U.S.C. § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V).

Under the Price-Anderson Act as it presently stands, liability in the event of a nuclear incident causing damages of $560 million or more would be spread as follows: $315 million would be paid from contributions by the licensees of the 63 private operating nuclear power plants; $140 million would come from private insurance (the maximum now available); the remainder of $105 million would be borne by the Federal Government. [FN9]

FN9. Appellees' expert witness on insurance testified in the District Court that homeowners were unable to purchase insurance against nuclear catastrophes because "the nuclear industry has essentially absorbed the entire capacity of the private insurance markets in their need for property and liability insurance." App. 293-294.

B

Appellant in No. 77-262, Duke Power Co., is an investor-owned public utility which is constructing one nuclear power plant in North Carolina and one in South Carolina. Duke Power, along with the NRC, was sued by appellees, two organizations--Carolina Environmental Study Group and the Catawba Central Labor Union--and 40 individuals who live within close proximity to the planned facilities. The action was commenced in 1973, and sought, among other relief, a declaration that the Price-Anderson Act is unconstitutional. [FN10]

FN10. The complaint also sought review of the AEC's decision to grant a construction permit for one of the plants. During the pendency of this action, however, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit decided that the AEC had properly issued the permits. Carolina Environmental Study Group v. United States, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 416, 510 F.2d 796 (1975). Accordingly, the District Court dismissed all counts of the complaint except those relating to the Price-Anderson Act's constitutionality.

After the parties had engaged in extensive discovery, the District Court held an evidentiary hearing on the questions of whether the issues were ripe for adjudication and whether 68 appellees had standing to challenge the constitutionality of the Act. That court determined that appellees had standing and that their claim could properly be adjudicated. The District Court went on to hold that the Price-Anderson Act was unconstitutional in two respects: (a) it violated the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment because it allowed injuries to occur without assuring adequate compensation to the victims; (b) the Act offended the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment by forcing the victims of nuclear incidents to bear the burden of injury, whereas society as a whole benefits from the existence and development of nuclear power.

*2628 We noted probable jurisdiction [FN11] in these appeals, 434 U.S. 937, 98 S.Ct. 426, 54 L.Ed.2d 297 (1977), and we now reverse.

FN11. Our jurisdiction was invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1252 (1976 ed.), which provides for a direct appeal to this Court from any decision invalidating an Act of Congress in any suit to which the United States, its agencies, officers, or employees are parties.

II

As a threshold matter, we must address the question of whether the District Court had subject-matter jurisdiction over appellees' claims, despite the fact that none of the parties raised this issue and the District Court did not consider it. See Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wetzel, 424 U.S. 737, 740, 96 S.Ct. 1202, 1204, 47 L.Ed.2d 435 (1976). Appellees' complaint alleges jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1337 (1976 ed.), which provides for original jurisdiction in the district courts over "any civil action or proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies." Our reading of the pleadings, [FN12] however, indicates that 69 appellees' claims do not "arise under" the Price-Anderson Act as that statutory language has been interpreted in prior decisions.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

See Peyton v. Railway Express Agency, 316 U.S. 350, 353, 62 S.Ct. 1171, 1172, 86 L.Ed. 1525 (1942).

FN12. The complaint provides in relevant part: "19. Since the Price-Anderson Act provides victims of a nuclear disaster no benefit while at the same time limiting their right to recover for their losses to approximately 2 1/2 % of such losses, the operation of the $500 million limitation would, in the event of a nuclear disaster, deprive the persons injured by such a disaster of property rights without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." App. 32.

Specifically, as we read the complaint, appellees are making two basic challenges to the Act--both of which find their moorings in the Fifth Amendment. First, appellees contend that the Due Process Clause protects them against arbitrary governmental action adversely affecting their property rights and that the Price-Anderson Act--which both creates the source of the underlying injury and limits the recovery therefor--constitutes such arbitrary action. And second, they are contending that in the event of a nuclear accident their property would be "taken" without any assurance of just compensation. The Price-Anderson Act is the instrument of the taking since on this record, without it, there would be no power plants and no possibility of an accident. Implicit in the complaint is also the assumption that there exists a cause of action directly under the Constitution to vindicate appellees' federal rights through a suit against the NRC, the executive agency charged with enforcement and administration of the allegedly unconstitutional statute. [FN13] Appellees' right to relief 70 thus depends not on the interpretation or construction of the Price-Anderson Act itself, but instead "upon the construction or application of the Constitution," Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., 255 U.S. 180, 199, 41 S.Ct. 243, 245, 65 L.Ed. 577 (1921). Hence, if there exists jurisdiction to hear appellees' claims at all, it must be derived from 28 U.S.C. § 1331(a) (1976 ed.), the general federal-*2629 question statute, rather than from § 1337--the jurisdictional base pleaded. [FN14]

FN13. Mr. Justice REHNQUIST would read the complaint, insofar as it alleges a denial of due process, as stating a claim only against Duke Power under North Carolina law. Under such a construction of the complaint, the question of the constitutionality of the Price-Anderson Act would emerge only in anticipation of a defense to appellees' state-law claims and thus would not support federal jurisdiction under the "well-pleaded" complaint rule regardless of the jurisdictional statute relied upon. See Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U.S. 149, 29 S.Ct. 42, 53 L.Ed. 126 (1908). We conclude that the complaint is more fairly read as stating a claim against the NRC directly under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. See n. 12, supra. On this view, the "well-pleaded" complaint rule poses no bar to the assertion of jurisdiction. Appellees' claim under the Due Process Clause is an essential ingredient of a well-pleaded complaint asserting a right under the Constitution and is not simply a claim made in anticipation of a defense to be raised in an action having its origin in state law. See also n. 26, infra.

FN14. Previously § 1331(a) required a minimum amount in controversy in all suits, but a 1976 amendment eliminated the jurisdictional amount requirement in actions "brought against the United States, any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof in his official capacity." Pub.L. 94-574, § 2, 90 Stat. 2721. Thus this action, at least as against the NRC, would seem clearly permitted by § 1331(a) without specification of an amount in controversy. See Andrus v. Charlestone Stone Products Co., 436 U.S. 604, 608 n.6, 98 S.Ct. 2002, 2005 n.6, 56 L.Ed.2d 570 (1978). Appellees' failure to assert § 1331(a) as a basis for jurisdiction in their complaint is not fatal since the facts alleged are sufficient to support such jurisdiction. See 436 U.S., at 608 n.6, 98 S.Ct., at 2005 n.6.

[1][2] For purposes of determining whether jurisdiction exists under § 1331(a) to resolve appellees' claims, it is not necessary to decide whether appellees' alleged cause of action against the NRC based directly on the Constitution is in fact a cause of action "on which [appellees] could actually recover." Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 66 S.Ct. 773, 776, 90 L.Ed. 939 (1946). Instead, the test is whether " 'the cause of action alleged is so patently without merit as to justify . . . the court's dismissal for want of jurisdiction.' " Hagans v. Lavine, 415 U.S. 528, 542-543, 94 S.Ct. 1372, 1382, 39 L.Ed.2d 577 (1974) quoting Bell v. Hood, supra, at 683, 66 S.Ct., at 776. (Emphasis added.) See also Oneida Indian Nation v. County of Oneida, 414 U.S. 661, 666, 94 S.Ct. 772, 778,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

39 L.Ed.2d 73 (1974) (test is whether right claimed is "so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of this *71 Court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy"). In light of prior decisions, for example, Bivens v. Six Unknown Fed. Narcotics Agents, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619 (1971) and Hagans v. Lavine, supra, as well as the general admonition that "where federally protected rights have been invaded . . . courts will be alert to adjust their remedies so as to grant the necessary relief," Bell v. Hood, supra, 327 U.S., at 684, 66 S.Ct., at 777, we conclude that appellees' allegations are sufficient to sustain jurisdiction under § 1331(a). [FN15]

FN15. Mr. Justice REHNQUIST suggests that appellees' "taking" claim will not support jurisdiction under § 1331(a), but instead that such a claim can be adjudicated only in the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491 (1976 ed.). We disagree. Appellees are not seeking compensation for a taking, a claim properly brought in the Court of Claims, but are now requesting a declaratory judgment that since the Price-Anderson Act does not provide advance assurance of adequate compensation in the event of a taking, it is unconstitutional. As such, appellees' claim tracks quite closely that of the petitioners in the Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 95 S.Ct. 335, 42 L.Ed.2d 320 (1974), which were brought under § 1331 as well as the Declaratory Judgment Act. See App. in Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, O.T.1974, Nos. 74-165, 74-166, 74-167, 74-168, p. 161, 95 S.Ct. at p. 367. While the Declaratory Judgment Act does not expand our jurisdiction, it expands the scope of available remedies. Here it allows individuals threatened with a taking to seek a declaration of the constitutionality of the disputed governmental action before potentially uncompensable damages are sustained.

The further question of whether appellees' cause of action under the Constitution is one generally to be recognized need not be decided here. The question does not directly implicate our jurisdiction, see Bell v. Hood, supra, was not raised in the court below, was not briefed, and was not addressed during oral argument. As we noted last Term in a similar context, questions of this sort should not be resolved on such an inadequate record; leaving them unresolved is no bar to full consideration of the merits. See Mt. Healthy City Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 U.S. 274, 278-279, 97 S.Ct. 568, 571-572, 50 L.Ed.2d 471 (1977). It is enough for present purposes that the claimed cause of action to vindicate appellees' *72 constitutional rights is sufficiently substantial and colorable to sustain jurisdiction under § 1331(a). [FN16]

FN16. We need not resolve the question of whether Duke Power is a proper party since jurisdiction over appellees' claims against the NRC is established, and Duke's presence or absence makes no material difference to either our consideration of the merits of the controversy or our authority to award the requested relief.

*2630 III

The District Judge held four days of hearings on the questions of standing and ripeness; his factual findings form the basis for our analysis of these issues.

A

[3] The essence of the standing inquiry is whether the parties seeking to invoke the court's jurisdiction have "alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions." Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct. 691, 703, 7 L.Ed.2d 663 (1962). As refined by subsequent reformulation, this requirement of a "personal stake" has come to be understood to require not only a "distinct and palpable injury," to the plaintiff, Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2206, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975), but also a "fairly traceable" causal connection between the claimed injury and the challenged conduct. Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 261, 97 S.Ct. 555, 561, 50 L.Ed.2d 450 (1977). See also Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41-42, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1925-1926, 48 L.Ed.2d 450 (1976); Linda R. S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 617, 93 S.Ct. 1146, 1148, 35 L.Ed.2d 536 (1973). Application of these constitutional standards to the factual findings of the District Court persuades us that the Art. III requisites for standing are satisfied by appellees.

We turn first to consider the kinds of injuries the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

District Court found theappellees suffered. It discerned two categories of effects which resulted from the operation of nuclear 73 power plants in potentially dangerous proximity to appellees' living and working environment. The immediate effects included: (a) the production of small quantities of non-natural radiation which would invade the air and water; (b) a "sharp increase" in the temperature of two lakes presently used for recreational purposes resulting from the use of the lake waters to produce steam and to cool the reactor; (c) interference with the normal use of the waters of the Catawba River; (d) threatened reduction in property values of land neighboring the power plants; (e) "objectively reasonable" present fear and apprehension regarding the "effect of the increased radioactivity in air, land and water upon [appellees] and their property, and the genetic effects upon their descendants"; and (f) the continual threat of "an accident resulting in uncontrolled release of large or even small quantities of radioactive material" with no assurance of adequate compensation for the resultant damage. 431 F.Supp. 203, 209. Into a second category of potential effects were placed the damages "which may result from a CORE MELT OR OTHER MAJOR ACCIDENT IN THE OPERATION OF A REACTOR . . . ." Id., at 209. [FN17]

FN17. For a detailed explanation of the nature and consequences of a core melt, see 431 F.Supp., at 206-207.

[4] For purposes of the present inquiry, we need not determine whether all the putative injuries identified by the District Court, particularly those based on the possibility of a nuclear accident and the present apprehension generated by this future uncertainty, are sufficiently concrete to satisfy constitutional requirements. Compare O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 94 S.Ct. 669, 38 L.Ed.2d 674 (1974), with United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669, 93 S.Ct. 2405, 37 L.Ed.2d 254 (1973). See also Conservation Society of Southern Vermont v. AEC, Civ. Action No. 19-72 (DC Apr. 17, 1975). It is enough that several of the "immediate" adverse effects were found to harm appellees. Certainly the environmental and aesthetic consequences of the thermal pollution of the two lakes in the vicinity of the disputed power plants is the type 74 of harmful effect which has been deemed adequate in prior cases to satisfy the "injury in fact" standard. See United States v. SCRAP, supra. Cf. Sierra Club v. Morton, *2631 405 U.S. 727, 734, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1365, 31 L.Ed.2d 636 (1972). [FN18] And the emission of non- natural radiation into appellees' environment would also seem a direct and present injury, given our generalized concern about exposure to radiation and the apprehension flowing from the uncertainty about the health and genetic consequences of even small emissions like those concededly emitted by nuclear power plants. [FN19]

FN18. "We do not question that this type of harm may amount to an 'injury in fact' sufficient to lay the basis for standing . . . . Aesthetic and environmental well-being, like economic well-being, are important ingredients of the quality of life in our society . . . ." Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S., at 734, 92 S.Ct., at 1366.

FN19. It is argued that the District Court's findings on the question of injury in fact upon which we rely are clearly erroneous and should not be accepted as a predicate for standing. "A finding is 'clearly erroneous' when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 525, 542, 92 L.Ed. 746 (1948). Application of this standard to the factual findings of the District Court does not persuade us that they should not be accepted.

The more difficult step in the standing inquiry is establishing that these injuries "fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant," Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., supra, 426 U.S., at 41, 96 S.Ct., at 1926, or put otherwise, that the exercise of the Court's remedial powers would redress the claimed injuries. 426 U.S., at 43, 96 S.Ct., at 1926. The District Court discerned a "but for" causal connection between the Price- Anderson Act, which appellees challenged as unconstitutional, "and the construction of the nuclear plants which the [appellees] view as a threat to them." 431 F.Supp., at 219. Particularizing that causal link to the facts of the instant case, the District Court concluded that "there is a substantial likelihood that Duke would not be able to complete the construction and maintain the operation of the McGuire and Catawba Nuclear Plants 75 but for the protection provided by the Price-Anderson Act." Id., at 220.

These findings, which, if accepted, would likely satisfy the second prong of the constitutional test for standing as elaborated in Simon, [FN20] are challenged on two grounds. First, it is argued that the evidence presented at the hearing, contrary to the conclusion reached by the District Court, indicated that the McGuire and Catawba nuclear plants would be completed and operated without the Price-Anderson Act's limitation on liability. And second, it is contended that the Price-Anderson Act is not, in some essential sense, the "but for" cause of the disputed nuclear power plants and resultant adverse effects since if the Act had not been passed Congress may well have chosen to pursue the nuclear program as a Government monopoly as it had from 1946 until 1954. We reject both of these arguments.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> FN20. Our recent cases have required no more than a showing that there is a "substantial likelihood" that the relief requested will redress the injury claimed to satisfy the second prong of the constitutional standing requirement. See Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 262, 97 S.Ct. 555, 561, 50 L.Ed.2d 450 (1977), quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 38, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1924, 48 L.Ed.2d 450 (1976) ("MHDC has shown an injury to itself that is 'likely to be redressed by a favorable decision' "). See also Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 504, 506-507, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2207, 2209-2210, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975).

The District Court's finding of a "substantial likelihood" that the McGuire and Catawba nuclear plants would be neither completed nor operated absent the Price-Anderson Act rested in major part on the testimony of corporate officials before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy (JCAE) in 1956-1957 when the Price- Anderson Act was first considered and again in 1975 when a second renewal was discussed. During the 1956-1957 hearings, industry spokesmen for the utilities and the producers of the various component parts of the power plants expressed a categorical unwillingness to participate in the development of nuclear 2632 power absent guarantees of a limitation on their liability. 431 F.Supp., at 215. See also *76 Green, 486, 490-491. [FN21] By 1975, the tenor of the testimony had changed only slightly. While large utilities and producers were somewhat more equivocal about whether a failure to renew Price-Anderson would entail their leaving the industry, the smaller producers of component parts and architects and engineers--all of whom are essential to the building of the reactors and generating plants--considered renewal of the Act as the critical variable in determining their continued involvement with nuclear power. 431 F.Supp., at 216-217. Duke Power itself, in its letter to the Committee urging extension of the Act, cited recent experiences with suppliers and contractors who were requiring the inclusion of cancellation clauses in their contracts to take effect if the liability-limitation provisions were eliminated. Id., at 217. And the Report of the JCAE, in discussing the need for renewal of the Act, stated:

> FN21. Nor was the situation different in 1965-1966, when the first 10-year renewal of Price-Anderson was considered. See H.R.Rep.No.883, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 9 (1965). See generally Green 493.

> "Nuclear power plants now in the planning and design phases would not receive construction permits until about 1977-1978. Thus there is uncertainty as to whether these plants would receive protection in the form of Government indemnity. Reactor manufacturers and architect-engineers are already requiring escape clauses in their contracts to permit cancellation in the event some form of protection from unlimited potential liability is not provided. Action is required soon to prevent disruption in utility plans for nuclear power." H.R.Rep.No.94-648, p. 7 (1975).

[5] Nor was the testimony at the hearing in this case, evaluation of which is the primary responsibility of the trial judge, at odds with the impression drawn from the legislative history. The testimony of Executive Vice President Lee of Duke Power *77 simply echoed the views presented by Duke and others to Congress in 1975, that is, although some of the utilities themselves might be confident enough with respect to safety factors to proceed with nuclear power absent a liability limitation, the suppliers of critical parts and the utility shareholders could reasonably be expected to take a more cautious view. [FN22] Appellees presented expert testimony essentially to the same effect. Considering the documentary evidence and the testimony in the record, we cannot say we are left with "the definite and firm conviction that" the finding by the trial court of a substantial likelihood that the McGuire and Catawba nuclear power plants would be neither completed nor operated absent the Price-Anderson Act is clearly erroneous; and,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1994 WL 596801 (Reply.Brief)

For Transcript of Oral Argument See:

1994 WL 714637 (U.S.Oral.Arg.)

Justice SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question presented in this case is whether § 27A(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, to the extent that it requires federal courts to reopen final judgments in private civil actions under § 10(b) of the Act, contravenes the Constitution's separation of powers or the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

I

In 1987, petitioners brought a civil action against respondents in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky. The complaint alleged that in 1983 and 1984 respondents had committed fraud and deceit in the sale of stock in violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Rule 10b-5 of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The case was mired in pretrial proceedings in the District Court until June 20, 1991, when we decided Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 115 L.Ed.2d 321. Lampf held that "[l]itigation instituted pursuant to § 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 ... must be commenced within one year after the discovery of the facts constituting the violation and within three years after such violation." Id., at 214 364, 111 S.Ct., at 2782. We applied that holding to the plaintiff-respondents in Lampf itself, found their suit untimely, and reinstated a summary judgment previously entered in favor of the defendant-petitioners. Ibid. On the same day we decided James B. Beam Distilling Co. v. Georgia, 501 U.S. 529, 111 S.Ct. 2439, 115 L.Ed.2d 481 (1991), in which a majority of the Court held, albeit in different opinions, that a new rule of federal law that is applied to the parties in the case announcing the rule must be applied as well to all cases pending on direct review. See Harper v. Virginia Dept. of Taxation, 509 U.S. 86, 92, 113 S.Ct. 2510, 2514-2515, 125 L.Ed.2d 74 (1993). The joint effect of Lampf and Beam was to mandate application of the 1-year/3-year limitations period to petitioners' suit. *1451 The District Court, finding that petitioners' claims were untimely under the Lampf rule, dismissed their action with prejudice on August 13, 1991. Petitioners filed no appeal; the judgment accordingly became final 30 days later. See 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a) (1988 ed., Supp. V); Griffith v. Kentucky, 479 U.S. 314, 321, n. 6, 107 S.Ct. 708, 712, n. 6, 93 L.Ed.2d 649 (1987).

On December 19, 1991, the President signed the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991, 105 Stat. 2236. Section 476 of the Act-- a section that had nothing to do with FDIC improvements--became § 27A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and was later codified as 15 U.S.C. § 78aa- 1 (1988 ed., Supp. V). It provides:

"(a) Effect on pending causes of action

"The limitation period for any private civil action implied under section 78j(b) of this title [§ 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934] that was commenced on or before June 19, 1991, shall be the limitation period provided by the laws applicable in the jurisdiction, including principles of retroactivity, as such laws existed on June 19, 1991.

"(b) Effect on dismissed causes of action

"Any private civil action implied under section 78j(b) of this title that was commenced on or before June 19, 1991--

215 "(1) which was dismissed as time barred subsequent to June 19, 1991, and

"(2) which would have been timely filed under the limitation period provided by the laws applicable in the jurisdiction, including principles of retroactivity, as such laws existed on June 19, 1991,

"shall be reinstated on motion by the plaintiff not later than 60 days after December 19, 1991."

On February 11, 1992, petitioners returned to the District Court and filed a motion to reinstate the action previously dismissed with prejudice. The District Court found that the conditions set out in §§ 27A(b)(1) and (2) were met, so that petitioners' motion was required to be granted by the terms of the statute. It nonetheless denied the motion, agreeing with respondents that § 27A(b) is unconstitutional. Memorandum Opinion and Order, Civ. Action No. 87-438 (ED Ky., Apr. 13, 1992). The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed. 1 F.3d 1487 (1993). We granted certiorari. 511 U.S. 1141, 114 S.Ct. 2161, 128 L.Ed.2d 885 (1994). [FN1] hence, we are bound to accept it. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 526, 541 (1948).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> FN22. "From what I know about nuclear power, it would be my recommendation that Duke proceed even in the absence of Price-Anderson. However, from the point of view of how others perceive nuclear power, there is some question about whether it would be a practical undertaking in the absence of the Act. . . . I have already been advised by several firms that the existence of Price-Anderson is required for them to be a supplier to our nuclear program . . .. If Price-Anderson did not exist, I would therefore have to evaluate the extent to which its absence caused disappearance of suppliers from the marketplace in arriving at my recommendation." App. 368-369.

The second attack on the District Court's finding of a causal link warrants only brief attention. Essentially the argument is, as we understand it, that Price-Anderson is not a "but for" cause of the injuries appellees claim, since if Price-Anderson had not been passed, the Government would have undertaken development of nuclear power on its own and the same injuries would likely have accrued to appellees from such Government-operated plants as from privately operated ones. Whatever the ultimate accuracy of this speculation, it is not responsive to the simple proposition that private power companies now do in fact 2633 operate the nuclear-powered generating plants injuringappellees, *78 and that their participation would not have occurred but for the enactment and implementation of the Price-Anderson Act. Nothing in our prior cases requires a party seeking to invoke federal jurisdiction to negate the kind of speculative and hypothetical possibilities suggested in order to demonstrate the likely effectiveness of judicial relief.

B

It is further contended that in addition to proof of injury and of a causal link between such injury and the challenged conduct, appellees must demonstrate a connection between the injuries they claim and the constitutional rights being asserted. This nexus requirement is said to find its origin in Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed.2d 947 (1968), where the general question of taxpayer standing was considered:

> "The nexus demanded of federal taxpayers has two aspects to it. First, the taxpayer must establish a logical link between that status and the type of legislative enactment attacked. . . . Secondly, the taxpayer must establish a nexus between that status and the precise nature of the constitutional infringement alleged." Id., at 102, 88 S.Ct., at 1954.

See also United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 174-175, 94 S.Ct. 2940, 2945-2946, 41 L.Ed.2d 678 (1974). Since the environmental and health injuries claimed by appellees are not directly related to the constitutional attack on the Price-Anderson Act, such injuries, the argument continues, cannot supply a predicate for standing. [FN23] We decline to accept this argument.

> FN23. The only injury that would possess the required subject-matter nexus to the due process challenge is the injury that would result from a nuclear accident causing damages in excess of the liability limitation provisions of the Price-Anderson Act.

[6] The major difficulty with the argument is that it implicitly assumes that the nexus requirement formulated in the context of taxpayer suits has general applicability in suits of all other types brought in the federal courts. No cases have been cited *79 outside the context of taxpayer suits where we have demanded this type of subject-matter nexus between the right asserted and the injury alleged, and we are aware of none. [FN24] Instead, in Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 225, 94 S.Ct. 2925, 2934, 41 L.Ed.2d 706 n. 15 (1974), we explicitly rejected such a broad compass for the Flast nexus requirement:

> FN24. In Linda R. S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 93 S.Ct. 1146, 35 L.Ed.2d 536 (1973), a nontaxpayer suit, reference was made to Flast ' s nexus requirement in the course of denying appellant's standing to challenge the nonenforcement of Texas' desertion and nonsupport statute. Upon careful reading, however, it is clear that standing was denied not because of the absence of a subject-matter nexus between the injury asserted and the constitutional claim, but instead because of the unlikelihood that the relief requested would redress appellant's claimed injury. Id., at 618, 93 S.Ct., at 1149. This case thus provides no qualitative support for the broader application of Flast 's principles which appellants appear to advocate. Cf. Scott, Standing in the Supreme Court--A Functional Analysis, 86 Harv.L.Rev. 645, 660-662 (1973).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00264982

"Looking 'to the substantive issues' which Flast stated to be both 'appropriate and necessary' in relation to taxpayer standing was for the express purpose of determining 'whether there is a logical nexus between the [taxpayer] status asserted and the claim sought to be adjudicated.' 392 U.S. at 102 [88 S.Ct. 1942]. This step is not appropriate on a claim of citizen standing since the Flast nexus test is not applicable where the taxing and spending power is not challenged. . . ."

We continue to be of the same view and cannot accept the contention that, outside the context of taxpayers' suits, a litigant must demonstrate something more than injury in fact and a substantial likelihood that the judicial relief requested will prevent or redress the claimed injury to satisfy the *2634 "case or controversy" requirement of Art. III. [FN25]

FN25. Both at the time of its formulation, see Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S., at 120, 130-131, 88 S.Ct., at 1962, 1968-1969 (Harlan J., dissenting), and more recently, see United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 181, 196 n. 18, 94 S.Ct. 2940, 2948, 2956, 41 L.Ed.2d 678 (1974). (POWELL, J., concurring), there have been questions as to whether the nexus requirement, even in the context of taxpayers' suits, is constitutionally mandated or is instead simply a prudential limitation.

80 Our prior cases have, however, acknowledged "other limits on the class of persons who may invoke the courts' decisional and remedial powers," Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S., at 499, 95 S.Ct., at 2205, which derive from general prudential concerns "about the proper--and properly limited--role of the courts in a democratic society." Id., at 498, 95 S.Ct., at 2205. See also Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, supra, 418 U.S., at 221-227, 94 S.Ct., at 2932-2935. Thus, we have declined to grant standing where the harm asserted amounts only to a generalized grievance shared by a large number of citizens in a substantially equal measure. See United States v. Richardson, supra. We have also narrowly limited the circumstances in which one party will be given standing to assert the legal rights of another. "[E]ven when the plaintiff has alleged injury sufficient to meet the 'case or controversy' requirement, this Court has held that the plaintiff generally must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties." Warth v. Seldin, supra, at 499, 95 S.Ct., at 2205. See also United States v. Raines, 362 U.S. 17, 80 S.Ct. 519, 4 L.Ed.2d 524 (1960). This limitation on third-party standing arguably suggests a connection between the claimed injury and the right asserted bearing some resemblance to the nexus requirement now urged upon us.

There are good and sufficient reasons for this prudential limitation on standing when rights of third parties are implicated--the avoidance of the adjudication of rights which those not before the Court may not wish to assert, and the assurance that the most effective advocate of the rights at issue is present to champion them. See Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 113-114, 96 S.Ct. 2868, 2873-2874, 49 L.Ed.2d 826 (1976). We do not, however, find these reasons a satisfactory predicate for applying this limitation or a similar nexus requirement to all cases as a matter of course. Where a party champions his own rights, and where the injury alleged is a concrete and particularized one which will be 81 prevented or redressed by the relief requested, the basic practical and prudential concerns underlying the standing doctrine are generally satisfied when the constitutional requisites are met. See, e. g., Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 97 S.Ct. 555, 50 L.Ed.2d 450 (1977).

[7] We conclude that appellees have standing to challenge the constitutionality of the Price-Anderson Act. [FN26]

FN26. Mr. Justice REHNQUIST undertakes to sever the action of the NRC in executing indemnity agreements under the Act from the Act's alleged constitutional infirmities--particularly the liability limitation provisions. Careful examination of the statutory mechanism indicates that such a separation simply cannot be sustained. The execution of the indemnification agreements by the NRC triggers the statutory ceiling on liability which, in terms, applies only to "persons indemnified." See 42 U.S.C. § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V). Thus, absent the execution of such agreements between the NRC and the licensees, the liability-limitation provisions of the Act, to which appellees object, would simply not come into play.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> This fact, coupled with the District Court's finding that "but for" the liability-limitation provisions there is a substantial likelihood that the contemplated plants would not be built or operated, is sufficient to establish the justiciability of appellees' claim against the Commission. See Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S., at 44-46, 96 S.Ct., at 1927-1928.

C

The question of the ripeness of the constitutional challenges raised by appellees need not long detain us. To the extent that "issues of ripeness involve, at least in part, the existence of a live 'Case or Controversy,' " 2635 Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S., at 138, 95 S.Ct., at 356, our conclusion that appellees will sustain immediate injury from the operation of the disputed power plants and that such injury would be redressed by the relief requested would appear to satisfy this requirement.

[8] The prudential considerations embodied in the ripeness doctrine also argue strongly for a prompt resolution of the claims presented. Although it is true that no nuclear accident has yet occurred and that such an occurrence would eliminate much of the existing scientific uncertainty surrounding this 82 subject, it would not, in our view, significantly advance our ability to deal with the legal issues presented nor aid us in their resolution. However, delayed resolution of these issues would foreclose any relief from the present injury suffered by appellees--relief that would be forthcoming if they were to prevail in their various challenges to the Act. Similarly, delayed resolution would frustrate one of the key purposes of the Price-Anderson Act--the elimination of doubts concerning the scope of private liability in the event of major nuclear accident. In short, all parties would be adversely affected by a decision to defer definitive resolution of the constitutional validity vel non of the Price-Anderson Act. Since we are persuaded that "we will be in no better position later than we are now" to decide this question, id., at 143- 145, 95 S.Ct., at 359, we hold that it is presently ripe for adjudication.

IV

The District Court held that the Price-Anderson Act contravened the Due Process Clause because "[t]he amount of recovery is not rationally related to the potential losses"; because "[t]he Act tends to encourage irresponsibility in matters of safety and environmental protection . . ."; and finally because "[t]here is no quid pro quo " for the liability limitations. 431 F.Supp., at 222-223. An equal protection violation was also found because the Act "places the cost of [nuclear power] on an arbitrarily chosen segment of society, those injured by nuclear catastrophe." Id., at 225. Application of the relevant constitutional principles forces the conclusion that these holdings of the District Court cannot be sustained.

A

Our due process analysis properly begins with a discussion of the appropriate standard of review. Appellants, portraying the liability-limitation provision as a legislative balancing of economic interests, urge that the Price-Anderson Act be 83 accorded the traditional presumption of constitutionality generally accorded economic regulations and that it be upheld absent proof of arbitrariness or irrationality on the part of Congress. See Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 731-732, 83 S.Ct. 1028, 1031-1032, 10 L.Ed.2d 93 (1963); Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 2892, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976). Appellees, however, urge a more elevated standard of review on the ground that the interests jeopardized by the Price- Anderson Act "are far more important than those in the economic due process and business-oriented cases" where the traditional rationality standard has been invoked. Brief for Appellees 36. An intermediate standard like that applied in cases such as Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397 (1976) (equal protection challenge to statute requiring that males be older than females in order to purchase beer) or United States Trust Co. of New York v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 97 S.Ct. 1505, 52 L.Ed.2d 92 (1977) (Contract Clause challenge to repeal of statutory covenant providing security for bondholders) is thus recommended for our use here.

[9] As we read the Act and its legislative history, it is clear that Congress' purpose was to remove the economic impediments in order to stimulate the private development of electric energy by nuclear power while simultaneously providing the public compensation in the event of a catastrophic nuclear incident. See, e. g., S.Rep. No. 296, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., 15 (1957); 2636 U.S.Code, Cong. & Admin.Code 1957, p. 1803. The liability-limitation provision thus emerges as a classic example of an economic regulation--a legislative effort to structure and accommodate "the burdens and benefits of economic life." Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., supra, 428 U.S., at 15, 96 S.Ct., at 2892. "It is by now well established that [such] legislative Acts . . . come to the Court with a presumption of constitutionality, and that the burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way." Ibid. That the accommodation struck may haveprofound and far-reaching consequences, contrary to appellees' suggestion, provides all the *84 more reason for this Court to defer to the congressional judgment unless it is demonstrably arbitrary or irrational. [FN27]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN27. Appellees, in apparent reliance on our recent decision in National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L.Ed.2d 245 (1976), argue that because the Price-Anderson Act encroaches on substantial state government interests, an augmented standard of review under the Due Process Clause is warranted. Nothing in National League of Cities or in our prior due process cases provides any support for this claim.

B

[10] When examined in light of this standard of review, the Price-Anderson Act, in our view, passes constitutional muster. The record before us fully supports the need for the imposition of a statutory limit on liability to encourage private industry participation and hence bears a rational relationship to Congress' concern for stimulating the involvement of private enterprise in the production of electric energy through the use of atomic power; nor do we understand appellees or the District Court to be of a different view. Rather their challenge is to the alleged arbitrariness of the particular figure of $560 million, which is the statutory ceiling on liability. The District Court aptly summarized its position:

"The amount of recovery is not rationally related to the potential losses. Abundant evidence in the record shows that although major catastrophe in any particular place is not certain and may not be extremely likely, nevertheless, in the territory where these plants are located, damage to life and property for this and future generations could well be many, many times the limit which the law places on liability." 431 F.Supp., at 222.

[11] Assuming, arguendo, that the $560 million fund would not insure full recovery in all conceivable circumstances [FN28]--and *85 the hard truth is that no one can ever know--it does not by any means follow that the liability limitation is therefore irrational and violative of due process. The legislative history clearly indicates that the $560 million figure was not arrived at on the supposition that it alone would necessarily be sufficient to guarantee full compensation in the event of a nuclear incident. Instead, it was conceived of as a "starting point" or a working hypothesis. [FN29] The reasonableness 2637 of the statute's assumed ceiling on liability was predicated on two corollary considerations--expert appraisals of the exceedingly small risk of a nuclear incident involving claims in excess of $560 million, and the recognition that in the event of such an incident, Congress would likely enact extraordinary relief provisions to provide additional relief, in accord with prior practice.

FN28. As the various studies considered by the District Court indicate, there is considerable uncertainty as to the amount of damages which would result from a catastrophic nuclear accident. See 431 F.Supp., at 210-214. The Reactor Safety Study published by the NRC in 1975 suggested that there was a 1 in 20,000 chance (per reactor year) of an accident causing property damage approaching $100 million and having only minor health effects. By contrast, when the odds were reduced to the range of 1 in 1 billion (per reactor year), the level of damages approached $14 billion; and 3,300 early fatalities and 45,000 early illnesses were predicted. NRC, Reactor Safety Study, An Assessment of Accident Risks in U. S. Commercial Nuclear Power Plants 83-85 (Wash.-1400, Oct. 1975). For a thorough criticism of the Reactor Safety Study, see EPA, Reactor Safety Study (Wash.-1400): A Review of the Final Report (June 1976).

FN29. "What we were thinking about was the magnitude of protection and we set up an arbitrary figure because it seemed to be practical at that time and because we didn't think an accident would happen . . . but yet we recognize that it could happen. We wanted to have a base to work from." Hearings before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on Possible Modification or Extension of the Price-Anderson Insurance And Indemnity Act of 1957 In Order for Proper Planning of Nuclear Power Plants to Continue Without Delay, 93d Cong., 2d Sess., 68 (1974) (remarks of Rep. Holifield) (emphasis added).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

"[T]his limitation does not, as a practical matter, detract from the public protection afforded by this legislation. In the first place, the likelihood of an accident occurring 86 which would result in claims exceeding the sum of the financial protection required and the governmental indemnity is exceedingly remote, albeit theoretically possible. Perhaps more important, in the event of a national disaster of this magnitude, it is obvious that Congress would have to review the problem and take appropriate action. The history of other natural or man-made disasters, such as the Texas City incident, bears this out. The limitation of liability serves primarily as a device for facilitating further congressional review of such a situation, rather than as an ultimate bar to further relief of the public." H.R.Rep. No. 883, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 6-7 (1965).

See also S.Rep. No. 296, supra, at 21; H.R.Rep. No. 94-648, pp. 12, 15 (1975).

Given our conclusion that, in general, limiting liability is an acceptable method for Congress to utilize in encouraging the private development of electric energy by atomic power, candor requires acknowledgment that whatever ceiling figure is selected will, of necessity, be arbitrary in the sense that any choice of a figure based on imponderables like those at issue here can always be so characterized. This is not, however, the kind of arbitrariness which flaws otherwise constitutional action. When appraised in terms of both the extremely remote possibility of an accident where liability would exceed the limitation [FN30] and Congress' now statutory commitment to "take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of" any such disaster, 42 U.S.C § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V), [FN31] we hold the 87 congressional decision to fix a $560 million ceiling at this stage in the private development and production of electric energy by nuclear power, to be within permissible limits and not violate of due process.

FN30. Congress' conclusion that "the probabilities of a nuclear incident are much lower and the likely consequences much less severe than has been thought previously," was a key factor in the decision not to increase the $560 million liability ceiling in 1975. S.Rep. No. 94-454, p. 12 (1975), U.S.Code, Cong. & Admin.News 1975, pp. 2251, 2262.

FN31. In the past Congress has provided emergency assistance for victims of catastrophic accidents even in the absence of a prior statutory commitment to do so. For example in 1955, Congress passed the Texas City Explosion Relief Act, 69 Stat. 707, to provide relief for victims of the explosion of ammonium nitrate fertilizer in 1947. Congress took this action despite the decision in Dalehite v. United States, 346 U.S. 15, 73 S.Ct. 956, 97 L.Ed. 1427 (1953), holding the United States free from any liability under the Federal Tort Claims Act for the damages incurred and injuries suffered. More recently Congress enacted legislation to provide relief for victims of the flood resulting from the collapse of the Teton Dam in Idaho. Pub.L. 94-400, 90 Stat. 1211. Under the Act, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to provide full compensation for any deaths, personal injuries, or property damage caused by the failure of the dam. Ibid.
The Price-Anderson Act is, of course, a significant improvement on these prior relief efforts because it provides an advance guarantee of recovery up to $560 million plus an express commitment by Congress to take whatever further steps are necessary to aid the victims of a nuclear incident.

[12] This District Court's further conclusion that the Price-Anderson Act "tends to encourage irresponsibility . . . on the part of builders and owners" of the nuclear power plants, 431 F.Supp., at 222, simply cannot withstand careful scrutiny. We recently outlined the multitude of detailed *2638 steps involved in the review of any application for a license to construct or to operate a nuclear power plant, Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. NRDC, 435 U.S. 519, 526-527, and n.5, 98 S.Ct. 1197, 1203-1204, and n.5, 55 L.Ed.2d 460 (1978); nothing in the liability limitation provision undermines or alters in any respect the rigor and integrity of that process. Moreover, in the event of a nuclear accident the utility itself would suffer perhaps the largest damages. While obviously not to be compared with the loss of human life and injury to health, the risk of financial loss and possible bankruptcy to the utility is in itself no small incentive to avoid the kind of irresponsible and cavalier conduct implicitly attributed to licensees by the District Court.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[13][14] The remaining due process objection to the liability- limitation provision is that it fails to provide those injured by a 88 nuclear accident with a satisfactory quid pro quo for the common-law rights of recovery which the Act abrogates. Initially, it is not at all clear that the Due Process Clause in fact requires that a legislatively enacted compensation scheme either duplicate the recovery at common law or provide a reasonable substitute remedy. [FN32] However, we need not resolve this question here since the Price-Anderson Act does, in our view, provide a reasonably just substitute for the common-law or state tort law remedies it replaces. Cf. New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 37 S.Ct. 247, 61 L.Ed. 667 (1917); Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 52 S.Ct. 285, 76 L.Ed. 598 (1932). [FN33]

FN32. Our cases have clearly established that "[a] person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law." Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U.S. 1, 50, 32 S.Ct. 169, 175, 56 L.Ed. 327 (1912), quoting Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 134, 24 L.Ed. 77 (1877). The "Constitution does not forbid the creation of new rights, or the abolition of old ones recognized by the common law, to attain a permissible legislative object," Silver v. Silver, 280 U.S. 117, 122, 50 S.Ct. 57, 58, 74 L.Ed. 221 (1929), despite the fact that "otherwise settled expectations" may be upset thereby. Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 16, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 2892, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976). See also Arizona Employers' Liability Cases, 250 U.S. 400, 419-422, 39 S.Ct. 553, 555-556, 63 L.Ed. 1058 (1919). Indeed, statutes limiting liability are relatively commonplace and have consistently been enforced by the courts. See, e. g., Silver v. Silver, supra (automobile guest statute); Providence & New York S.S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., 109 U.S. 578, 3 S.Ct. 379, 27 L.Ed. 1038 (1883) (limitation of vessel owner's liability); Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America v. Pan American Airways, 58 F.Supp. 338 (SDNY 1944) (Warsaw Convention limitation on recovery for injuries suffered during international air travel). Cf. Thomason v. Sanchez, 539 F.2d 955 (C.A.3 1976) (Federal Driver's Act).

FN33. We reject at the outset appellees' contention that the Price- Anderson Act differs from other statutes limiting liability because the Act itself is the "but for" cause of the tort for which liability is limited. Put otherwise, the argument is that no quid pro quo can be provided by the Act since without it there would be no nuclear power plants and no possibility of accidents or injuries. As we understand the argument, it proceeds from the premise that prior to the enactment of the Price-Anderson Act, appellees had some right, cognizable under the Due Process Clause, to be free of nuclear power or to take advantage of the state of uncertainty which inhibited the private development of nuclear power. This premise we cannot accept. Appellees' only relevant right prior to the enactment of the Price-Anderson Act was to utilize their existing common-law and state-law remedies to vindicate any particular harm visited on them from whatever sources. After the Act was passed, that right at least with regard to nuclear accidents was replaced by the compensation mechanism of the statute, and it is only the terms of that substitution which are pertinent to the quid pro quo inquiry which appellees insist the Due Process Clause requires.

89 The legislative history of the liability-limitation provisions and the accompanying compensation mechanism reflects Congress' determination that reliance on state tort law remedies and state-court procedures was an unsatisfactory approach to assuring public compensation for nuclear accidents, while at the same time providing the necessary incentives for private development of nuclear-produced energy. The remarks of Chairman Anders of the NRC before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy during the 1975 hearings on the need for renewal of the Price-Anderson Act are illustrative of this concern and of the expectation that *2639 the Act would provide a more efficient and certain vehicle for assuring compensation in the unlikely event of a nuclear incident:

> "The primary defect of this alternative [nonrenewal of the Act], however, is its failure to afford the public either a secure source of funds or a firm basis for legal liability with respect to new plants. While in theory no legal limit would be placed on liability, as a practical matter the public would be less assured of obtaining compensation than under Price-Anderson. Establishing liability would depend in each case on state tort law and procedures, and these might or might not provide for no-fault liability, let alone the multiple other protections now embodied in Price-Anderson. The present assurance of prompt and equitable compensation under a pre-structured and nationally applicable protective system would give way to uncertainties, variations and potentially lengthy delays in recovery. It should be emphasized, moreover, that it is collecting a judgment, not filing a *90 lawsuit, that counts. Even if defenses are waived under state law, a defendant with theoretically "unlimited" liability may be unable to pay a judgment once obtained. When the defendant's assets are exhausted by earlier judgments, subsequent claimants would be left with uncollectable awards. The prospect of inequitable distribution would produce a race to the courthouse door in contrast to the present system of assured orderly and equitable compensation." Hearings on H.R. 8631 before Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., 69 (1975).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Appellees, like the District Court, differ with this appraisal on several grounds. They argue, inter alia, that recovery under the Act would not be greater than without it, that the waiver of defenses required by the Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n) (1970 ed., Supp. V), is an idle gesture since those involved in the development of nuclear energy would likely be held strictly liable under common-law principles; [FN34] that the claim-administration procedure under the Act delays rather than expedites individual recovery; and finally that recovery of even limited compensation is uncertain since the liability ceiling does not vary with the number of persons injured or amount of property damaged. The extension of short state statutes of limitations and the provision of omnibus [FN35] coverage do not save the Act, in their view, since such provisions could equally well be included in a fairer plan which would assure greater compensation.

FN34. See Rylands v. Fletcher, L.R. 3 E. & I. App. (H.L.1868). See generally W. Prosser, Law of Torts § 79, p. 516 (4th ed. 1971); Cavers, Improving Financial Protection of the Public Against the Hazards of Nuclear Power, 77 Harv.L.Rev. 644, 649 (1964).

FN35. See n. 3, supra.

[15] We disagree. We view the congressional assurance of a $560 million fund for recovery, accompanied by an express statutory commitment, to "take whatever action is deemed necessary *91 and appropriate to protect the public from the consequences of" a nuclear accident, 42 U.S.C. § 2210(e) (1970 ed., Supp. V), to be a fair and reasonable substitute for the uncertain recovery of damages of this magnitude from a utility or component manufacturer, whose resources might well be exhausted at an early stage. The record in this case raises serious questions about the ability of a utility or component manufacturer to satisfy a judgment approaching $560 million--the amount guaranteed under the Price-Anderson Act. [FN36] Nor are we persuaded that the 2640 mandatory waiver of defenses required by the Act is of no benefit to potential claimants. Since there has never been, to our knowledge, a case arising out of a nuclear incident like those covered by the Price-Anderson Act, any discussion of the standard of liability that state courts will apply is necessarily speculative. At the minimum, the statutorily mandated waiver of defenses establishes at the threshold the right of injured parties to compensation without proof of fault and eliminates the burden of delay and uncertainty which would follow from the need to litigate the question of liability after an accident. Further, even if strict liability were routinely applied, the common-law doctrine is subject to exceptions for acts of God or of third parties [FN37]--two of the very factors which appellees emphasized in the District Court in *92 the course of arguing that the risks of a nuclear accident are greater than generally admitted. All of these considerations belie the suggestion that the Act leaves the potential victims of a nuclear disaster in a more disadvantageous position than they would be in if left to their common-law remedies--not known in modern times for either their speed or economy.

FN36. The expert testimony before the District Court indicated that Duke Power, one of the largest utilities in the country, could not be expected to accumulate more than $200 million for damages claims without reaching the point of insolvency. App. 393-397. This amount, even when coupled with the amount of available private insurance, would be less than the $560 million provided by the Act. Moreover, if the liability were of sufficient magnitude to force the utility or component manufacturer into bankruptcy or reorganization, recovery would likely be further reduced and delayed. See Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Issues of Financial Protection in Nuclear Activities in Selected Materials on Atomic Energy Indemnity and Insurance Legislation, 93d Cong., 2d Sess., 110 (Comm. Print 1974).

FN37. See Prosser, supra, n.34, at 520-521.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Appellees' remaining objections can be briefly treated. The claim- administration procedures under the Act provide that in the event of an accident with potential liability exceeding the $560 million ceiling, no more than 15% of the limit can be distributed pending court approval of a plan of distribution taking into account the need to assure compensation for "possible latent injury claims which may not be discovered until a later time." 42 U.S.C. § 2210(o)(3) (1970 ed., supp. v). althoUgh somE DELAY MIGht follow from compliance with this statutory procedure, we doubt that it would approach that resulting from routine litigation of the large number of claims caused by a catastrophic accident. [FN38] Moreover, the statutory scheme insures the equitable distribution of benefits to all who suffer injury--both immediate and latent; under the common-law route, the proverbial race to the courthouse would instead determine who had "first crack" at the diminishing resources of the tortfeasor, and fairness could well be sacrificed in the process. The remaining contention that recovery is uncertain because of the aggregate rather than individualized nature of the liability ceiling is but a thinly disguised version of the contention that the $560 million figure is inadequate, which we have already rejected.

> FN38. The Act explicitly provides for "payments to, or for the aid of, claimants for the purpose of providing immediate assistance following a nuclear incident." 42 U.S.C. § 2210(m). Unlike the normal tort recovery situation, these emergency payments are made prior to the determination of injury and the setting of damages, and are not conditioned on the execution of any release by the victim. Ibid.

In the course of adjudicating a similar challenge to the 93 Workmen's Compensation Act in New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S., at 201, 37 S.Ct., at 252, the Court observed that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was not violated simply because an injured party would not be able to recover as much under the Act as before its enactment. "[H]e is entitled to moderate compensation in all cases of injury, and has a certain and speedy remedy without the difficulty and expense of establishing negligence or proving the amount of the damages." The logic of New York Central would seem to apply with renewed force in the context of this challenge to the Price-Anderson Act. The Price-Anderson Act not only provides a reasonable, prompt, and equitable mechanism for compensating victims of a catastrophic nuclear incident, it also guarantees a level of net compensation generally exceeding that recoverable in private litigation. Moreover, the Act contains an explicit congressional commitment to take further action to aid victims of a nuclear accident in the event that the $560 million ceiling on liability is exceeded. This panoply of remedies and guarantees is at *2641 the least a reasonably just substitute for the common-law rights replaced by the Price-Anderson Act. Nothing more is required by the Due Process Clause.

[16][17] Although the District Court also found the Price-Anderson Act to contravene the "equal protection provision that is included within the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment," 431 F.Supp., at 224-225, appellees have not relied on this ground since the equal protection arguments largely track and duplicate those made in support of the due process claim. In any event, we conclude that there is no equal protection violation. The general rationality of the Price-Anderson Act liability limitations--particularly with reference to the important congressional purpose of encouraging private participation in the exploitation of nuclear energy--is ample justification for the difference in treatment between those injured in nuclear accidents and those whose injuries are derived from other 94 causes. Speculation regarding other arrangements that might be used to spread the risk of liability in ways different from the Price-Anderson Act is, of course, not pertinent to the equal protection analysis. See Mourning v. Family Publications Service, Inc., 411 U.S. 356, 378, 93 S.Ct. 1652, 1665, 36 L.Ed.2d 318 (1973). [FN39]

> FN39. Appellees also contend that the Price-Anderson Act effects an unconstitutional "taking" because in the event of a catastrophic nuclear accident their property would be destroyed without any assurance of just compensation. We find it unnecessary to resolve the claim that such an accident would constitute a "taking" as that term has been construed in our precedents since on our reading the Price-Anderson Act does not withdraw the existing Tucker Act remedy, 28 U.S.C. § 1491 (1976 ed.). See Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S., at 125-136, 95 S.Ct., at 349-354. Appellees concede that if the Tucker Act remedy would be available in the event of a nuclear disaster, then their constitutional challenge to the Price-Anderson Act under the Just Compensation

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Clause must fail. Brief for Appellees 71 n. 56. The further question of whether a taking claim could be established under the Fifth Amendment is a matter appropriately left for another day.

Accordingly, the decision of the District Court is reversed, and the cases are remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Mr. Justice STEWART, concurring in the result.

With some difficulty, I can accept the proposition that federal subject- matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1976 ed.) exists here, at least with respect to the suit against the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the agency responsible for the administration of the Price-Anderson Act. The claim under federal law is to be found in the allegation that the Act, if enforced, will deprive the appellees of certain property rights, in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. One of those property rights, and perhaps the sole cognizable one, is a state-created right to recover full compensation for tort injuries. The Act impinges on that right by limiting recovery in major accidents.

95 But there never has been such an accident, and it is sheer speculation that one will ever occur. For this reason I think there is no present justiciable controversy, and that the appellees were without standing to initiate this litigation.

On the issue of standing, the Court relies on the "present" injuries of increased water temperatures and low-level radiation emissions. Even assuming that but for the Act the plant would not exist and therefore neither would its effects on the environment, I cannot believe that it follows that the appellees have standing to attack the constitutionality of the Act. Apart from a "but for" connection in the loosest sense of that concept, there is no relationship at all between the injury alleged for standing purposes and the injury alleged for federal subject-matter jurisdiction.

Surely a plaintiff does not have standing simply because his challenge, if successful, will remove the injury relied on for standing purposes only because it will put the *2642 defendant out of existence. Surely there must be some direct relationship between the plaintiff's federal claim and the injury relied on for standing. Cf. Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 261, 97 S.Ct. 555, 561, 50 L.Ed.2d 450; United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669, 687-690, 93 S.Ct. 2405, 2415-2417, 37 L.Ed.2d 254; Linda R. S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 617-618, 93 S.Ct. 1146, 1148-1149, 35 L.Ed.2d 536. An interest in the local water temperature does not, in short, give these appellees standing to bring a suit under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1976 ed.) to challenge the constitutionality of a law limiting liability in an unrelated and as-yet-to-occur major nuclear accident.

For these reasons, I would remand these cases to the District Court with instructions to dismiss the complaint.

Mr. Justice REHNQUIST, with whom Mr. Justice STEVENS joins, concurring in the judgment.

I can understand the Court's willingness to reach the merits of this case and thereby remove the doubt which has been cast over this important federal statute. In so doing, however, it ignores established limitations on district court jurisdiction 96 as carefully defined in our statutes and cases. Because I believe the preservation of these limitations is in the long run more important to this Court's jurisprudence than the resolution of any particular case or controversy, however important, I too would reverse the judgment of the District Court, but would do so with instructions to dismiss the complaint for want of jurisdiction. Cf. Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co., 341 U.S. 246, 249-250, 71 S.Ct. 692, 694-695, 95 L.Ed. 912 (1951).

Giving the conclusory allegations of appellees' complaint the most liberal possible reading, they purport to establish only two grounds for the declaratory relief requested. First, they contend that the Price-Anderson Act deprives them of their property without due process of law in that it irrationally limits the tort recovery otherwise available in the North Carolina courts. [FN1] Second, they contend that the Act works an unconstitutional taking of their property for public use without just compensation. They purport to base District Court jurisdiction upon 28 U.S.C. §

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1337 (1976 ed.) which covers "any civil action or proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies."

FN1. Appellees have explicitly abandoned their claim based upon the so-called equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment "since in this case any equal protection arguments would be largely duplicative of appellees' due process arguments." Brief for Appellees, 21 n. 26.

I

It is apparent that appellees' first asserted basis for relief does not state a claim "arising under" the Price-Anderson Act. Their complaint alleges that the operation of the two power plants will cause immediate injury to property within their vicinity. App. 32, ¶ 21. The District Court explicitly found that these injuries "give rise to an immediate right of action for redress. Under the law of North Carolina a right of action arises as soon as a wrongful act has created 'any injury, however 97 slight,' to the plaintiff." 431 F.Supp. 203, 221 (W.D.N.C.1977) (citations omitted). This right of action provided by state, not federal, law is the property of which the appellees contend the Act deprives them without due process. Thus, the constitutionality of the Act becomes relevant only if the appellant Duke Power Co. were to invoke the Act as a defense to appellees' suit for recovery under their North Carolina right of action.

It has long been established that the mere anticipation of a possible federal defense to a state cause of action is not sufficient to invoke the federal- question jurisdiction of the district courts. In Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U.S. 149, 29 S.Ct. 42, 53 L.Ed. 126 (1908), the plaintiffs sought to compel the specific performance *2643 of a contract by which the railroad had granted them free passes for life. Although their contract was not predicated upon federal law, the plaintiffs contended that federal-question jurisdiction was established by the presence of an Act of Congress forbidding railroads to issue free passes. This Court held that the District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider whether the Act was inapplicable or unconstitutional:

"It is the settled interpretation of these words ['arising under'], as used in this statute, conferring jurisdiction, that a suit arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States only when the plaintiff's statement of his own cause of action shows that it is based upon those laws or that Constitution. It is not enough that the plaintiff alleges some anticipated defense to his cause of action, and asserts that the defense is invalidated by some provision of the Constitution of the United States. Although such allegations show that very likely, in the course of the litigation, a question under the Constitution would arise, they do not show that the suit, that is, the plaintiff's original cause of action, arises under the Constitution." Id., at 152, 29 S.Ct., at 43.

98 Just as the underlying claim in Mottley arose under Kentucky contract law, the underlying claim in this case arises under North Carolina tort law. This Court has construed the "arising under" language of 28 U.S.C. § 1337 (1976 ed.) just as it has the similar language of 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1976 ed.). Peyton v. Railway Express Agency, Inc., 316 U.S. 350, 353, 62 S.Ct. 1171, 1172, 86 L.Ed. 1525 (1942).

Nor does the fact that appellees seek only declaratory relief under the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201 (1976 ed.), support a different result. This Court has held that the well-pleaded complaint rule applied in Mottley is fully applicable in cases seeking only declaratory relief, because the Declaratory Judgment Act merely expands the remedies available in the district courts without expanding their jurisdiction. "It would turn into the federal courts a vast current of litigation indubitably arising under State law, in the sense that the right to be vindicated was State-created, if a suit for a declaration of rights could be brought into the federal courts merely because an anticipated defense derived from federal law." Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667, 673, 70 S.Ct. 876, 880, 94 L.Ed. 1194 (1950). See also Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Texaco Inc., 415 U.S. 125, 94 S.Ct. 1002, 39 L.Ed.2d 209 (1974); C. Wright, A. Miller, & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3566, pp. 437-438 (1975). [FN2]

FN2. The Court asserts that its decision today does not undermine the well-pleaded complaint doctrine because of its conclusion "that the complaint is more fairly read as stating a claim against the NRC directly under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment." Ante, at 2629 n. 13. The supposed claim against the Commission arises only under

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Binder - [West Case Law Reporters] [2]

Counsel's Office, White House

Kavanaugh, Brett

Subject File

OA/NARA #: 1651/1519
9602

Box 63
Folder 7

REV_00265060

Supreme Court of the United States.

GIBBES
v.
ZIMMERMAN et al.

No. 117.

Argued Nov. 17, 1933.
Decided Dec. 4, 1933.

Proceedings by Simpson J. Zimmerman, individually and as conservator of the Central Union Bank of South Carolina, and others, for a writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to Hunter A. Gibbes, representing himself and all other depositors of the Central Union Bank of South Carolina, and another. From a judgment of the Supreme Court of South Carolina (171 S.C. 209, 172 S.E. 130) granting the writ of prohibition, the respondent named appeals.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes

[1] Federal Courts ⚿502
170Bk502 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 106k391(4))

Where contract clause in Federal Constitution was not relied on in proceeding in state court, question thereunder was not presented for review on appeal to United States Supreme Court. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1257, 2103, 2106; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 10.

[2] Constitutional Law ⚿307
92k307 Most Cited Cases

Person has no property right, in constitutional sense, in any particular form of remedy; only guaranty, under due process clause, being preservation of substantial right to redress by some effective procedure. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

[3] Constitutional Law ⚿308
92k308 Most Cited Cases

[3] Banks and Banking ⚿63
52k63 Most Cited Cases

Statute suspending existing statutes applicable to liquidation of state banks, and regulations thereunder authorizing governor to appoint conservator, held not invalid as depriving depositor of property without due process, especially in view of later statute authorizing liquidation by conservator. Act S.C. March 9, 1933, 38 St. at Large S.C. p. 1174; Act S.C. May 16, 1933, 38 St. at Large S.C. p. 489; Code S.C. 1932, §§ 7843, 7844, 7848, § 7852 (repealed 1936) §§ 7854, 7855 (See Code 1942, §§ 7871, 7872), § 7868 (repealed 1935); U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 14.

[4] Federal Courts ⚿511.1
170Bk511.1 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 30k843(2), 106k380)

Where Governor appointed conservator for state bank and conservator accepted special trust deposits and permitted such depositors to withdraw same, question whether, in conducting such restricted business, overhead expenses exceeded net income andjeopardized creditors, held moot, where Governor subsequently directed liquidation of bank. Act S.C. March 9, 1933 (38 St. at Large S.C. p. 1174); Act S.C. May 16, 1933 (38 St. at Large S.C. p. 489).

*140 *326 Appeal from the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina.

327 Mr. D. W. Robinson, of Columbia, S.C., for appellant.

328 Mr. Irvine F. Belser, of Columbia, S.C., for appellees.

Mr. Justice ROBERTS delivered the opinion of the Court.

[1] This appeal brings here for review an order of the Supreme Court of South Carolina prohibiting the further prosecution of a bill in equity seeking the appointment of a receiver for the Central Union Bank. An Act of the General Assembly approved March 9, 1933 (38 St. at Large S.C. p. 1174), was held to forbid the maintenance of the proceeding. The appellant, who was plaintiff in the suit asserts that the act impairs the obligation of contract in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

forty-two plaintiffs in this appeal missed Pennsylvania's two year limitations date, and filed suit in Mississippi in order to fall within that state's six year statute of limitations. These plaintiffs now challenge the retroactive application of the choice of law provision of the Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988, Pub.L. No. 100-408, 102 Stat. 1066. Retroactive application of the choice of law provision would require application of Pennsylvania's statute of limitations to all actions arising from the Three Mile Island accident and would bar plaintiffs' claims filed in Mississippi. Plaintiffs argue retroactive application of the choice of law provision violates federal constitutional guarantees of due process. Alternatively they argue that even if the Pennsylvania statute of limitations applies, Pennsylvania law provides for a grace period in which to file their claims. Because retroactive application of the choice of law provision was a rational exercise of Congress' legislative power, we hold it does not violate due process. Additionally, we hold Pennsylvania law does not provide for a grace period under the circumstances of this case.

The same plaintiffs also challenge summary judgment rendered against them in actions they filed in Pennsylvania state court after the two year limitation date. They assert the statute of limitations should have been tolled under Pennsylvania law. Because plaintiffs have failed to raise a material issue of fact, we will affirm summary judgment.

I. Facts and Procedural History

On March 28, 1979, the Three Mile Island nuclear power facility located near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania released radiation into the atmosphere. As a result, thousands of area residents and businesses filed suit 1110 against the owners and operators of the facility, alleging various injuries. [FN1] In 1985, each of the forty-two plaintiffs involved in this appeal filed suit in Pennsylvania state court, Mississippi state court, and Mississippi federal court to recover for personal injuries allegedly suffered in the incident. The Mississippi actions were filed within that state's six year statute of limitations for personal injury actions.

FN1. Over two thousand plaintiffs' claims for personal injuries have been consolidated in the present litigation. See In re TMI, 67 F.3d 1103, 1105 (3d Cir.1995), cert. denied sub nom. General Public Util. Corp. v. Dodson, 516 U.S. 1154, 116 S.Ct. 1034, 134 L.Ed.2d 111 (1996). Some plaintiffs filed duplicative claims in both Pennsylvania and Mississippi.

In 1981, defendants settled non-personal injury claims brought by individuals, businesses, and non-profit organizations within a twenty-file mile radius of the Three Mile Island facility. See Stibitz v. General Pub. Util. Corp., 746 F.2d 993, 995 n. 1 (3d Cir.1984) (citing In Re Three Mile Island Litig., No. 79-0432 (M.D.Pa. Sept. 9, 1981)), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1214, 105 S.Ct. 1187, 84 L.Ed.2d 334 (1985). In addition, hundreds of claims involving allegations of personal injury were settled in 1985.

We have already resolved other issues raised on appeal by the plaintiffs. See In re TMI, 67 F.3d 1103 (duty of care); In re TMI, 67 F.3d 1119 (3d Cir.1995) (punitive damages), cert. denied sub nom. Metropolitan Edison Co. v. Dodson, 517 U.S. 1163, 116 S.Ct. 1560, 134 L.Ed.2d 660 (1996).

In September 1986, defendants moved for summary judgment in plaintiffs' Pennsylvania state court actions contending each claim related to health problems diagnosed more than two years before plaintiffs commenced their suits. The Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County, Pennsylvania entered summary judgment for defendants, finding plaintiffs' claims barred by Pennsylvania's two year statute of limitations. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consolidated II, No. 426 S (1985) (Dauphin Co. February 20, 1987); In re TMI Litig. Cases Consolidated II, No. 426 S (1985) (Dauphin Co. July 6, 1987). The Pennsylvania Superior Court affirmed. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consolidated II, 383 Pa.Super. 672, 550 A.2d 255 (1988).

Subsequently, Congress enacted the Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988, Pub.L. No. 100-408, 102 Stat. 1066, which created a federal cause of action--the "public liability action"--for injuries resulting from nuclear incidents, 42 U.S.C. § 2014 (hh) (1988), [FN2] and provided for jurisdiction over and the consolidation of such actions in the federal district court in the district where the accident occurred, 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2). [FN3] Defendants removed the Pennsylvania and Mississippi state cases to federal court in the Middle District of Pennsylvania pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2). At the time of removal of the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265160

Pennsylvania state cases, the time to 1111 appeal the grant of summary judgment to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court had not yet expired. The Mississippi federal actions were transferred to the Middle District of Pennsylvania pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a).

FN2. The definition of "public liability action" appears at 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh):

(hh) The term 'public liability action', as used in [section 2210 of this title], means any suit asserting public liability. A public liability action shall be deemed to be an action arising under [section 2210 of this title], and the substantive rules for decision in such action shall be derived from the law of the State in which the nuclear incident occurs, unless such law is inconsistent with the provisions of such section.

42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh); see also Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988, Pub.L. 100-408, § 11(b), 102 Stat. 1066, 1076.

FN3. The Price-Anderson Act, Pub.L. No. 85-256, 71 Stat. 576 (1957) (codified as amended in scattered sections of 42 U.S.C.), did not originally grant the federal courts jurisdiction over all claims arising out of nuclear accidents. The Price-Anderson Amendments Act expanded federal jurisdiction to reach all "public liability actions." After amendment by the Price Anderson Amendments Act, the jurisdiction, removal, and consolidation provision of the Price-Anderson Act provided:

With respect to any public liability action arising out of or resulting from a nuclear incident, the United States district court in the district where the nuclear incident takes place ... shall have original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of any party or the amount in controversy. Upon motion of the defendant or of the Commission, or the Secretary, as appropriate any such action pending in any State court (including any such action pending on August 20, 1988) or United States district court shall be removed or transferred to the United States district court having venue under this subsection ... 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2) (1988); see also Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988, Pub.L. 100-408, § 11(a), 102 Stat. 1066, 1076.

In In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d 832 (3d Cir.1991), cert. denied sub nom. Gumby v. General Pub. Utils. Corp., 503 U.S. 906, 112 S.Ct. 1262, 117 L.Ed.2d 491 (1992), we upheld the constitutionality of the retroactive application of this provision to cases arising from the Three Mile Island accident.

After consolidation of the cases in the Middle District of Pennsylvania, defendants filed a motion for summary judgment with respect to the Mississippi state and federal court actions on the grounds that plaintiffs' claims were untimely under the Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988. Section 11(b) of the Amendments Act, the choice of law provision (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh) (1988)), provides that "the substantive rules of decision in [any public liability action] shall be derived from the law of the State in which the nuclear incident involved occurs." Section 20(b) of the Amendments Act, the effective date provision (codified as a note to 42 U.S.C. § 2014), provides that "the amendments made by Section 11" of the Amendments Act "shall apply to nuclear incidents occurring before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act." 42 U.S.C. § 2014 note (emphasis added). The district court held that § 20(b), read in conjunction with § 11(b), compels retroactive application of Pennsylvania's two year statute of limitations to the causes of action brought by the plaintiffs, mandating the dismissal of the Mississippi state and federal cases as time barred. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452, slip. op. at 2-6 (M.D.Pa. Aug. 16, 1993). Plaintiffs do not dispute this reading of the AmendmentsAct on appeal.

Plaintiffs asserted before the district court that retroactive application of the choice of law provision would violate constitutional guarantees of due process. They also argued that Pennsylvania law, incorporated as federal law by the Amendments Act, would provide a grace period in which to file their claims. The district court rejected both arguments, id. at 15-20, and plaintiffs now appeal the district court's grant of summary judgment.

The district court also adopted the prior judgment rendered by the Court of Common Pleas against plaintiffs in the Pennsylvania state cases. Id. at 23. Plaintiffs sought reconsideration of the grant of summary judgment, arguing that under the intervening holding of the Pennsylvania Superior Court in Marinari v. Asbestos Corp., 417 Pa.Super. 440, 612 A.2d 1021 (1992), their claims arising from "second injuries" should not have been dismissed. [FN4] Upon reconsideration, the district court ordered plaintiffs to specify which plaintiffs had "second injuries" subject to the Marinari rule. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452, slip. op. at 13 (M. D. Pa. June 1, 1994). On July 12, 1994, the parties entered into a stipulation that Marinari did not relate to the "initial injury" claims which were the subject of defendants' motion for summary judgment and that any "second injury" claims would be treated in a separate class action. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452 (M.D.Pa. July 14, 1994). The district court then entered summary judgment against plaintiffs on the "initial injury" claims and dismissed them as time barred. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452 (M.D.Pa. July 22, 1994). Plaintiffs appeal this order, arguing the statute of limitations had not expired on "initial injury" claims.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> FN4. When the Court of Common Pleas granted summary judgment, Pennsylvania was a "one-disease" state. This meant the statute of limitations for any claim arising out of exposure to a toxic substance began to run when the plaintiff knew or should have known of his "initial injury" resulting from exposure. See Cathcart v. Keene Indus. Insulation, 324 Pa.Super. 123, 471 A.2d 493 (1984) (in banc). Subsequently, Pennsylvania became a "two disease" state. Under this rule, the statute of limitations on a claim for a separate and distinct "second injury" related to a prior toxic exposure would not begin to run until the second injury manifested itself. See Marinari v. Asbestos Corp., 417 Pa.Super. 440, 612 A.2d 1021 (1992).

[1] The district court had jurisdiction over these "public liability actions" under 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2), and we exercise jurisdiction over the district court's final orders under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Our review of the district court's grant of summary judgment is plenary. See F.D.I.C. v. Bathgate, 27 F.3d 850, 860 (3d Cir.1994).

II. Statutory Construction

[2] The district court held the language of § 20(b) is unambiguous and "by its very 1112 terms clearly requires the retroactive application of all of the provisions of § 11, including the choice of law provision." Inre TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452, slip. op. at 3 (M.D.Pa. Aug. 16, 1993). Although plaintiffs have not challenged the district court's reading of the Amendments Act on appeal, we exercise plenary review of the district court's construction of the Act. Moody v. Sec. Pac. Business Credit, Inc., 971 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.1992).

[3][4][5][6][7] Section 20(b) unambiguously calls for the retroactive application of the choice of law provision in § 11(b). The choice of law provision in turn provides that "the substantive rules for decision" shall be derived from Pennsylvania law. Since the statute of limitations is a substantive rule of decision, Menichini v. Grant, 995 F.2d 1224, 1228 n. 2 (3d Cir.1993); 42 Pa. Cons.Stat. Ann. § 5524 (1981), we believe the Pennsylvania statute of limitations applies retroactively to plaintiffs' causes of action filed in Mississippi. [FN5] Congress could have exempted statutes of limitations from retroactive application, but it did not. Accordingly, plaintiffs' Mississippi causes of action are time-barred, unless some constraint imposed by the Constitution or state law prevents this result. [FN6]

> FN5. Statutes of limitations are treated as substantive rules of decision for purposes of the doctrine of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 (1938). As the dissent points out, the intent of Erie was to ensure that "the outcome of the litigation in federal court should be substantially the same, so far as legal rules determine the outcome of a litigation, as it would be if tried in a State court." Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 L.Ed. 2079 (1945).
>
> We believe the Erie rationale is instructive in interpreting Congress' command that "the substantive rules for decision in [any public liability action] shall be derived from the law of the State in which the nuclear incident occurs." 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh); see also Price-Anderson Amendments Act of 1988, Pub.L. 100-408, § 11(b), 102 Stat. 1066, 1076. Although the legislative history is silent on the issue, we believe the clear language of this provision indicates an intent to ensure that the outcome of any public liability action arising from a single nuclear incident should be substantially the same as it would be if tried in the state where the incident occurred. The goal of achieving substantially the same outcome in all public liability actions, regardless of where filed, necessitates treatment of statutes of limitations as "substantive rules for decision." We do not believe Pennsylvania law can answer whether Congress intended the term "substantive rules for decision" to include statutes of limitations.
>
> Of course, because Pennsylvania courts do not sit in diversity, they will never have the occasion to decide whether to apply the Pennsylvania orthe Mississippi statute of limitations to an action filed in Mississippi. But Pennsylvania courts generally

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

"apply[ ] Pennsylvania's statute of limitations not only to wholly domestic causes of action but also to causes of action arising in other jurisdictions (unless, pursuant to Pennsylvania's borrowing statute, a Pennsylvania court is directed to apply a shorter limitation statute of another jurisdiction.)" AAMCO Transmissions, Inc. v. Harris, 759 F.Supp. 1141, 1143-44 (E.D.Pa.1991) (footnotes omitted).

FN6. Section 20(b) provides that "the amendments made by Section 11" "shall apply to nuclear incidents occurring before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act." The dissent contends that the words "shall apply" may be interpreted in two ways: as requiring the application of Pennsylvania law from the date of filing of pending suits, or from August 20, 1988 forward. The dissent asserts the former interpretation necessitates imposition of a "historical fiction," while the latter merely "attaches new legal consequences to events completed before [ ] enactment [of the Amendments Act]." Dissent at 1118-19.

But we do not create a historical fiction that plaintiffs filed suit on any date other than that on which they actually filed. We simply attach new legal consequences to the fact that the filing date was not within two years of the Three Mile Island accident. In sum, we apply Pennsylvania's statute of limitations retroactively, as the clear language of § 20(b) and § 11(b) demands. The dissent, on the other hand, attaches no legal consequences to the application of Pennsylvania's statute of limitations. In fact, the dissent does not apply the Pennsylvania statute of limitations retroactively at all, but only prospectively to suits brought after the enactment of the Amendments Act. It refuses to apply the statute of limitations retroactively, despite the clear language that Pennsylvania law "shall apply," and even though it acknowledges that rulings made prior to the passage of the Amendments Act on the basis of substantive law which no longer applies should be modified to conform to the new governing law of the case. Dissent at 1119.

We believe the unambiguous language of § 20(b) and § 11(b) calls for the retroactive application of all of Pennsylvania law, including the statute of limitations. It is difficult to conceive of a clearer formulation than the "shall apply" language in § 20(b). In fact, in Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, ----, 114 S.Ct. 1483, 1494, 128 L.Ed.2d 229 (1994), the Supreme Court considered virtually identical language to have "a determinate meaning" mandating retroactive application of legislation. See id. (language such as "the new provision 'shall apply to all proceedings pending on or commenced after the date of enactment' " mandates retroactive application). The dissent invokes the often stated presumption against retroactive legislation. Dissent at 1118-19. But if Congress has "expressly prescribed" a statute should apply retroactively, "there is no need to resort to judicial default rules." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at ----, 114 S.Ct. at 1505. The dissent also asserts that its interpretation accords with Congressional intent. Yet it has not offered any evidence that Congress intended to except statutes of limitations from retroactive application.

Finally, we note that plaintiffs have not argued that § 20(b) is ambiguous or that it exempts statutes of limitations from retroactive application.

*1113 III. Due Process

The district court held the choice of law provision of the Price-Anderson Amendments Act requires application of Pennsylvania law, including the Pennsylvania statute of limitations, to the Mississippi state and federal cases. Plaintiffs argue the retroactive application of Pennsylvania's statute of limitations to bar properly filed and already pending causes of action violates federal constitutional due process. Well-established precedent indicates that it does not.

A.

[8][9][10] Under the United States Constitution, legislation affecting a pending tort claim is not subject to "heightened scrutiny" due process review because a pending tort claim does not constitute a vested right. See Hammond v. United States, 786 F.2d 8, 12 (1st Cir.1986) (plaintiff does not have a vested right in a tort cause of action until there is a final, unreviewable judgement); see also Arbour v. Jenkins, 903 F.2d 416, 420 (6th Cir.1990) (retroactivity of a statute does not make it unconstitutional as a legal claim affords no enforceable property right until reduced to final judgement); Sowell v. American Cyanamid Co., 888 F.2d 802, 805 (11th Cir.1989) (same). Other courts of appeals that have recently addressed the constitutionality of retroactive legislation that either abolishes or substantially affects a plaintiff's pending tort cause of action have reviewed such legislation on a "rational basis" standard. See, e.g., In re Consolidated U.S. Atmospheric Testing Litig., 820 F.2d 982, 990-91 (9th Cir.1987) (plaintiff challenging retroactivity bears the burden of showing that the legislature acted in arbitrary, irrational way), cert. denied sub nom. Konizeski v. Livermore Labs, 485 U.S. 905, 108 S.Ct. 1076, 99 L.Ed.2d 235 (1988); see also Hammond, 786 F.2d at 13. In In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d 832 (3d Cir.1991), cert. denied sub nom. Gumby v. General Pub. Utils. Corp., 503 U.S. 906, 112 S.Ct. 1262, 117 L.Ed.2d 491 (1992), we held that due process requires only that "the retroactive application of a statute is supported by a legitimate legislative purpose furthered by rational means." Id. at 860 (quoting Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 729, 104 S.Ct. 2709, 2717-18, 81 L.Ed.2d 601 (1984)). Accordingly, in order to show that retroactive application of the choice of law provision of the Amendments Act violates due process guarantees, plaintiffs bear the burden of showing that retroactive application was "irrational in purpose and effect." Id. at 861. This they cannot do.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

B.

Congress adopted the Amendments Act "to effect uniformity, equity, and efficiency in the disposition of public liabilityclaims" arising from nuclear accidents. H.R.Rep. No. 104, 100th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 3, at 18 (1987). We believe retroactive application of the Amendments Act's choice of law provision furthers each of these goals.

First, retroactive application of the Amendments Act's choice of law provision uniformly applies Pennsylvania law to all plaintiffs. Second, retroactive application advances equity by applying the same law to all similarly situated plaintiffs and eliminating inconsistent results. While retroactive application of the choice of law provision requires dismissal of these plaintiffs' claims which were filed in compliance with Mississippi's six year statute of limitations, this result is not inequitable. These actions were time-barred in Pennsylvania when they were brought, and plaintiffs resorted to a distant forum in order to avoid Pennsylvania's statute of limitations. Application of the law of the state in which the accident occurred, the 1114 plaintiffs live, and where the plaintiffs were allegedly injured is not inequitable.

Finally, retroactive application of the choice of law provision promotes efficiency by allowing the constitutional exercise of federal jurisdiction over, and the consolidation of, these "public liability actions." Prior to the Amendments Act, the Price-Anderson Act provided for federal jurisdiction over only a limited class of cases--those arising from an "extraordinary nuclear occurrence." Kiick v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 784 F.2d 490, 493 (3d Cir.1986); Stibitz v. Gen. Pub. Utils. Corp., 746 F.2d 993, 997 (3d Cir.1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1214, 105 S.Ct. 1187, 84 L.Ed.2d 334 (1985). Because the Nuclear Regulatory Commission did not designate the Three Mile Island accident an "extraordinary nuclear occurrence," the federal courts lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear Three Mile Island cases filed in jurisdictions across the country. This situation resulted in "duplicative determinations of similar issues in multiple jurisdictions." S.Rep. No. 218, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. 13 (1987), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1476, 1488.

[11] Congress sought to remedy the procedural problems plaguing the Three Mile Island cases by retroactively providing for federal jurisdiction over them and allowing their consolidation. But in creating federal jurisdiction, Congress was constrained by the constitutional principle that it cannot confer subject matter jurisdiction on federal courts where there is no underlying federal statute creating a federal question. See Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat) 738, 6 L.Ed. 204 (1824); Verlinden B.V. v. Central Bank of Nigeria, 461 U.S. 480, 103 S.Ct. 1962, 76 L.Ed.2d 81 (1983); see also In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d at 849 ("a case cannot be said to arise under a federal statute where there is nothing more than a jurisdictional grant."). Congress was clearly aware of this constitutional constraint. [FN7] It did not, therefore, simply grant federal courts subject matter jurisdiction over all cases arising from nuclear accidents. Instead it created substantive federal law governing nuclear accidents in the choice of law provision of the Amendments Act by providing "the substantive rules of decision in [any public liability action] shall be derived from the law of the State in which the nuclear incident involved occurs." 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh). In the absence of the retroactive application of the choice of law provision to the Three Mile Island cases, Congress' retroactive creation of federal jurisdiction over them in the Amendments Act would be 1115 nothing more than an unconstitutional grant of jurisdiction without any underlying substantive federal legislation creating a federal question. In re TMI

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d at 854-55; O'Conner v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 13 F.3d 1090, 1096-1101 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1222, 114 S.Ct. 2711, 129 L.Ed.2d 838 (1994). [FN8] Accordingly, there is little doubt that the retroactive application of the choice of law provision has furthered the efficient and uniform processing of claims arising from the Three Mile Island accident by allowing those claims to be brought and to be consolidated in federal court.

FN7. In its report, the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works stated the choice of law provision was essential to creating federal jurisdiction over public liability actions: [In order to] avoid the inefficiencies resulting from duplicative determinations of similar issues in multiple jurisdictions that may occur in the absence of consolidation ... the bill provides the federal district court in which the nuclear incident occurred with subject matter jurisdiction over claims arising from the nuclear incident. [The choice of law provision provides that] [a]ny suit asserting public liability shall be deemed to be an action arising under the Price-Anderson Act, and the substantive law of decision shall be derived from the law of the State in which the incident occurred, in order to satisfy the Article III requirement that federal courts have jurisdiction over cases arising under the Constitution or the laws of the United States.
S. Rep. No. 218, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. 13 (1987), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1476, 1488 (emphasis added).
The House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs came to the same conclusion. Reporting on H.R. 1414, the House version of the Amendments Act, it explained:
The Committee recognizes, of course, that Article III of the Constitution limits the type of cases that federal courts created under the Article may hear. For this reason, H.R. 1414 expressly states that any suit asserting public liability shall be deemed to be an action arising under the Price-Anderson Act, thereby making suits asserting public liability "Cases ... arising under ... the laws of the United States" within the meaning of Article III. Rather than designing a new body of substantive law to govern such cases, however, the bill provides [in the choice of law provision] that the substantive rules for decision in such actions shall be derived from the law of the state in which the nuclear incident involved occurs, unless such law is inconsistent with the Price- Anderson Act. The Committee believes that conferring on the Federal courts jurisdiction over claims arising out of all nuclear incidents in this manner is within the constitutional authority of Congress and notes that Congress has used this approach in the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act.
H.R.Rep. No. 104, 100th Cong., 1st Sess., Pt. 1, at 18 (1987).

FN8. Congress explicitly stated that the jurisdiction and consolidation provision of the Amendments Act should apply retroactively to pending causes of action. See 42 U.S.C. § 2210(n)(2) (Amendment Act's consolidation and removal provision shall apply to all public liability actions, "including any such action pending on August 20, 1988"). Congress understood that the jurisdiction and consolidation provision could not pass constitutional muster without the choice of law provision. Accordingly, we believe Congress intended the choice of law provision also to apply retroactively. Moreover, even if retroactive application of the choice of law provision is not constitutionally essential, Congress at least had to create a federal cause of action for cases arising out of nuclear incidents before the district court could exercise jurisdiction. It did this in § 11(b) of the Amendments Act--the section in which the choice of law provision is contained--by defining a "public liability action." If § 11(b) does not apply retroactively, we do not have jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' claims because there was no federal cause of action under the Price- Anderson Act prior to its passage. Stibitz v. General Pub. Utils. Corp., 746 F.2d at 996.

Because retroactive application of the choice of law provision to pending causes of action advances Congress' goals of uniformity, equity and efficiency in the disposition of claims arising from nuclear accidents, it is not arbitrary and irrational. Plaintiffs have not demonstrated retroactive application violates constitutional due process. Cf. O'Conner v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 13 F.3d at 1102 (retroactive application of Amendments Act not arbitrary and irrational); In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d at 860-61 (same).

IV. Grace Period under Pennsylvania Law

[12] Plaintiffs also argue retroactive application of the Amendments Act's choice of law provision does not require dismissal of the Mississippi actions. They assert the choice of law provision incorporates all Pennsylvania law as federal law, including a century-old line of Pennsylvania cases that holds due process requires a grace period when the legislature retroactively curtails a statute of limitations. See

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Kay v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 65 Pa. 269 (1870); Byers v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 18 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 187 (Allegheny Co. 1896); Philadelphia B. & W.R. Co. v. Quaker City Flour Mills Co., 282 Pa. 362, 127 A. 845 (1925); Ferki v. Frantz's Transfer Co., 152 Pa.Super. 267, 31 A.2d 586 (1943); Wilson v. Central Penn Indus., Inc., 306 Pa.Super. 146, 452 A.2d 257 (1982). The district court declined to follow this line of cases, doubting its vitality in light of intervening developments in property law relating to vested rights, and refusing to read broad due process rights into the Pennsylvania Constitution on such a weak precedential basis. [FN9] In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452, slip. op. at 17-19 (M.D.Pa. Aug. 16, 1993). Even if the grace period doctrine retains force under the Pennsylvania Constitution, we do not believe the Pennsylvania Supreme Court would apply it under the facts of this case.

> FN9. Most of the cited cases base their imposition of a grace period on the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution or on cases construing the Fourteenth Amendment. See, e.g., Quaker City Flour, 127 A. at 846-47; Ferki, 31 A.2d at 587-88; Wilson, 452 A.2d at 260. These cases treat an accrued tort cause of action as a "vested right" under the United States Constitution, see Jenkins v. Hospital of Med. College, 535 Pa. 252, 634 A.2d 1099, 1104-05 (1993), and are contrary to current federal constitutional precedent that finds no vested right in a tort cause of action before final judgment, see, e.g., Arbour, 903 F.2d at 420; Hammond, 786 F.2d at 12. They also conflict with current case law that finds no Fourteenth or Fifth Amendment due process violation in rational, retroactive legislation not affecting vested rights. See, e.g., In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d at 860-61 ; Sowell, 888 F.2d at 805; In re Consolidated U.S. Atmospheric Testing Litig., 820 F.2d at 990-91.

[13] None of the Pennsylvania grace period cases addresses a situation in which 1116 Pennsylvania plaintiffs failed to sue within the time period allotted by the Pennsylvania statute of limitations and brought suit in another state's courts to avoid Pennsylvania's time bar. We believe the Pennsylvania borrowing statute, 42 Pa. Cons.Stat. Ann. § 5521 (1981), accurately reflects current state policy against "forum shopping" by applying to claims arising in another state either the other state's statute of limitations or the Pennsylvania statute of limitations, whichever is shorter. "Pennsylvania's borrowing statute unequivocally [evinces] the legislative intent to prevent a plaintiff who sues in Pennsylvania from obtaining greater rights than those available in the state where the cause of action arose." Gwaltney v. Stone, 387 Pa.Super. 492, 564 A.2d 498, 503 (1989). We believe Pennsylvania courts would not look favorably on plaintiffs here who missed Pennsylvania's statute of limitations, although Pennsylvania is the state where the accident occurred, and brought suit in Mississippi. Even if the Pennsylvania Supreme Court would require a grace period when the Pennsylvania legislature retroactively shortens a statute of limitations, we do not believe they would require a grace period in this case.

V. The Discovery Rule and Fraudulent Concealment

Plaintiffs in the Pennsylvania state cases appeal the district court's grant of summary judgment on their "initial injury" claims. [FN10] First, plaintiffs argue the statute of limitations was tolled under the "discovery rule" until they knew or should have known their injuries were caused by the Three Mile Island accident. Plaintiffs assert there are material issues of fact as to whether they knew or should have known the cause of their injuries. Second, plaintiffs argue the statute of limitations was tolled because defendants fraudulently concealed information about the Three Mile Island accident.

> FN10. The district court originally adopted in its entirety the prior judgment rendered by the Dauphin County Court of Common Pleas against plaintiffs in the Pennsylvania state cases. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452, slip. op. at 23 (M.D.Pa. Aug. 16, 1993). Upon reconsideration, the court limited the state court's holding to "initial injury" claims. It then entered summary judgment against plaintiffs on the "initial injury" claims and dismissed them as time barred. In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, No. 88-1452 (M.D.Pa. July 22, 1994).

A. The Discovery Rule

[14] The discovery rule tolls the running of a statute of limitations until "the plaintiff knows, or reasonably should know: (1) that he has been injured, and (2) that his injury has been caused by another party's conduct." Cathcart v. Keene

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Industrial Insulation, 324 Pa.Super. 123, 471 A.2d 493, 500 (1984) (in banc); see also Hayward v. Medical Ctr. of Beaver County, 530 Pa. 320, 608 A.2d 1040, 1043 (1992). Every plaintiff has a duty to exercise "reasonable diligence" in ascertaining the existence of an injury and its cause. Stauffer v. Ebersole, 385 Pa.Super. 306, 560 A.2d 816, 817, app. denied, 524 Pa. 622, 571 A.2d 384 (1989).

[15][16][17][18] In their brief, plaintiffs assert that several plaintiffs filed their actions within two years of diagnosis of a specific injury, and thereby complied with the discovery rule. Under Pennsylvania law, plaintiffs bear the burden of proving they filed their claims within the applicable statute of limitations. See Osei-Afriyie v. Medical College of Pennsylvania, 937 F.2d 876, 884 (3d Cir.) (citing cases), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 979, 112 S.Ct. 581, 116 L.Ed.2d 606 (1991). Where, as here, the non- moving party bears the burden of proof at trial, summary judgment is appropriate if non-movants fail to "make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to [their] case." Nebraska v. Wyoming, 507 U.S. 584, 590, 113 S.Ct. 1689, 1694, 123 L.Ed.2d 317 (1993) . In responding to a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must "go beyond the pleadings and by her own affidavits, or by the depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2553, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986) (internal quotations omitted). Beyond mere assertions, plaintiffs have not directed us to any evidence in the record that raises a material issue of fact as to whether any plaintiff filed suit within two years of discovery 1117 of an "initial injury." Accordingly, we believe summary judgment was appropriate.

Plaintiffs also argue that "because the [discovery rule] involves questions of what a reasonable person should have known, a classic jury question is invariably presented, thereby precluding the use of the summary judgment procedure." Brief of the Appellants at 35-36. But the Court of Common Pleas held, and the record confirms, that the plaintiffs knew of the Three Mile Island accident, [FN11] and knew or should have known that exposure to radiation could cause adverse health affects. In such circumstances, the discovery rule does not toll the running of the statute of limitations.

FN11. Although plaintiffs did not file suit until almost six years after the Three Mile Island accident, they were able to answer in detail defendants' interrogatories on how they came to know of the accident, and where they were during the course of the accident. Some plaintiffs even left the geographic area in response to the accident.

Plaintiffs also assert summary judgment was improper because factual questions remain as to whether they used reasonable diligence to discover the cause of their injuries. The Court of Common Pleas held:

> The responses to interrogatories ... reveal plaintiffs knew of their specific injury more than two years prior to the time they filed their complaint. Thus, at that time they possessed the requisite knowledge to set the statutory clock running. Under the law of Pennsylvania they were under a duty to use all reasonable diligence to investigate the operative facts of their cause of action.... Given the notoriety of the accident and the plethora of investigative reports available to plaintiffs, it is clear that they had the "means of discovery" available to them.

In re TMI Litig. Cases Consolidated II, No. 426 S (1985), slip op. at 8-9 (Dauphin Co. February 20, 1987). Plaintiffs have not directed us to any evidence in the record that leads us to doubt these conclusions. Accordingly, we believe the district court properly granted summary judgment with respect to "initial injury" claims.

B. Fraudulent Concealment

[19][20] Plaintiffs also argue the statute of limitations was tolled because defendants fraudulently concealed information relating to the Three Mile Island accident. See Molineux v. Reed, 516 Pa. 398, 532 A.2d 792, 794 (1987) ("Where through fraud or concealment, the defendant causes the plaintiff to relax his vigilance or deviate from his right of inquiry, the defendant is estopped from invoking the bar of the statute of limitations.") (internal quotations omitted). In order to establish fraudulent concealment by a defendant, a plaintiff must prove "an affirmative or independent act of concealment that would divert or mislead the plaintiff from discovering the injury" or its cause. Bohus v. Beloff, 950 F.2d 919, 925 (3d Cir.1991). But plaintiffs have not directed us to any evidence that defendants sought to conceal the cause of their injuries. While plaintiffs have referred to statements by defendants' employees downplaying the seriousness of the accident immediately after it occurred, such statements do not create an issue of material fact with respect to fraudulent concealment.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

In response to plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment argument, the Court of Common pleas found:

> The contention simply cannot prevail. Here, defendants did not "conceal" the fact that radiation escaped from the TMI facility. Defendants did nothing to induce plaintiffs not to file timely claims. In fact, the notice of the 1981 class action settlement, which was disseminated to all households within twenty-five miles of the reactor and widely publicized, put all persons on notice that if they believed they had a claim for personal injury, they should start their own lawsuit. This is not the type of conduct which could give rise to a claim of estoppel.
>
> Moreover, given the vast amount of information available to plaintiffs concerning the nature and extent of the accident, it is not rationally possible to ascertain any basis from which plaintiffs could claim that defendants are estopped from asserting the limitations defense. Defendants engaged in no affirmative action which could 1118 have caused these plaintiffs to deviate from their right of inquiry.

In re TMI Litig. Cases Consolidated II, No. 426 S (1985), slip op. at 10 (Dauphin Co. February 20, 1987).

We agree that defendants' statements could not have caused plaintiffs to deviate from their right of inquiry into the source of their injuries. The record reflects that voluminous information about the Three Mile Island accident was in the public domain. [FN12] Moreover, many other plaintiffs obtained sufficient information to file suit within the statute of limitations. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs' have not raised a genuine issue of material fact with respect to fraudulent concealment. Summary judgment was proper.

> FN12. The Three Mile Island accident was the subject of extensive investigation and exhaustive reports long before plaintiffs were diagnosed with their illnesses or brought suit. See Pennsylvania v. General Pub. Util. Corp., 710 F.2d 117, 118 n. 1 (3d Cir.1983).

VI. Conclusion

The choice of law provision of the Price Anderson Amendments Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2014(hh), mandates the retroactive application of Pennsylvania's two year statute of limitations to the plaintiffs claims filed in Mississippi state and federal court. Retroactive application comports with constitutional requirements of due process, and, in the circumstances of this case, Pennsylvania law does not provide for a grace period in which plaintiffs may file their claims. No issue of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment based on the statute of limitations in the Pennsylvania state cases. For the foregoing reasons, we will affirm the judgment of the district court.

SAROKIN, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

I dissent primarily because I cannot conclude that Congress intended the Amendments Act to extinguish pending suits that were timely instituted in accordance with then-applicable statutes of limitations simply because they would not have satisfied the statute of limitations of the forum in which the underlying nuclear accident occurred. Nor can I conclude that Congress intended that certain pending claims survive while other identical ones cease to exist as a result of limitations periods that did not apply on the day those claims were filed. Certainly such a result is inconsistent with Congress's intent to promote " 'equitable and uniform treatment of victims.' " TMI II, 940 F.2d at 861 (quoting H.R.Rep. No. 104, 100th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 1, at 18, 29 (1987)).

I agree with the majority that the jurisdictional provision, the choice- of-law provision, and the definition of "public liability action" contained in section 11 apply retroactively to lawsuits that were pending when the Amendments Act was passed. Because the majority's understanding of that retroactive application sweeps too broadly, however, I respectfully dissent.

It is well established that "[a] law is retrospective if it 'changes the legal consequences of acts completed before its effective date.' " Miller v. Florida, 482 U.S. 423, 430, 107 S.Ct. 2446, 2451, 96 L.Ed.2d 351 (1987)(quoting Weaver v. Graham, 450 U.S. 24, 31, 101 S.Ct. 960, 965, 67 L.Ed.2d 17 (1981)).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Thus, retroactive legislation includes " 'all statutes, which, though operating only from their passage, affect vested rights and past transactions.' " Id. (quoting Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, 22 F.Cas. 756, 767 (No. 13,156)(CCDNH 1814))(emphasis added). In the words of Justice Story,

> "every statute, which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past, must be deemed retrospective...."

Id. (citation omitted). Nevertheless, "deciding when a statute operates 'retroactively' is not always a simple or mechanical task." Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, ----, 114 S.Ct. 1483, 1498, 128 L.Ed.2d 229 (1994). Ultimately, whether a particular application is retroactive "depends upon what one considers to be the determinative event by which retroactivity or prospectivity is to be calculated." Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. Bonjorno, 494 U.S. 827, 857 n. 3, 1119 110 S.Ct. 1570, 1588 n. 3, 108 L.Ed.2d 842 (1990)(Scalia, J., concurring).

In this case, Congress expressly stated that the Amendments Act "shall apply to nuclear incidents occurring before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act." 42 U.S.C. § 2014 (emphasis added). I agree with the majority that the term "nuclear incidents" includes pending actions arising from such incidents. What is unclear from the statute is how exactly the "shall apply" language should be interpreted in the context of pending actions.

The statute itself offers no guidance on this point. As a theoretical matter, however, retroactivity can be understood in one of two ways. First, it can be understood as the majority apparently construes it: as a rewriting of history. Under this theory, section 20 reaches into the past to transform pending lawsuits as of their inception, undoing and rewriting all subsequent proceedings and applying new law as though it had existed from the date of filing. This theory engenders a historical fiction pursuant to which plaintiffs' suits were public liability actions when they were filed in 1985, governed by Pennsylvania substantive law and subject to original federal jurisdiction, although the Amendments Act did not take effect until three years later.

Alternatively, the Amendments Act can be seen as retroactive in the more limited sense that it "attaches new legal consequences to events completed before its enactment." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at ----, 114 S.Ct. at 1499. This theory would mean simply that all pending actions asserting public liability were transformed on August 20, 1988 into public liability actions, and that the federal courts acquired original jurisdiction over those actions as of, but not prior to, that date.

Either interpretation of retroactivity is acceptable as a theoretical matter. It is our task to determine which is the correct one under the circumstances of this case.

I conclude that the latter interpretation of retroactivity under section 20 is the correct one, for several reasons. First and foremost, applying the Amendments Act to pending cases from August 20, 1988 forward accomplishes the goals that Congress intended the retroactivity provision to accomplish by defining the pending Three Mile Island cases as public liability actions and providing for their removal to federal court and litigation under federal substantive law.

Second, where, as here, the statute is ambiguous as to the appropriate scope of retroactivity, I believe that the well-established presumption against statutory retroactivity requires interpreting that scope narrowly. In this case, the statute neither states explicitly that the substantive law of the state in which the incident occurred applies "retroactively" to pending actions nor offers any guidance as to how the language "shall apply" should be interpreted in the context of a pending action. It is ambiguous as to whether section 11 applies to pending actions as of August 20, 1988, or whether, as the majority concludes, it applies to such actions as of their inception. In the absence of explicit Congressional instruction, I believe that the principles underlying the anti-retroactivity presumption make the former interpretation far more appropriate than the sweeping approach to retroactivity enunciated by the majority. [FN1]

> FN1. This is not to suggest that the presumption against retroactive legislation governs this case; on the contrary, I am in agreement with the majority that Congress intended the Amendments Act to

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

We cannot consider this contention since in his pleading the appellant relied solely on the provisions of the state Constitution (art. 1, s 8) with respect to the obligation of contracts, and made no reference to section 10, of article 1 of the Federal Constitution; and the Supreme Court, in disposing of the case, did not mention or discuss that section. Rev. St. s 709, U.S.C. tit. 28, s 344 (28 USCA s 344) Chicago & Northwestern Ry. v. Chicago, 164 U.S. 454, 457, 17 S.Ct. 129, 41 L.Ed. 511; Levy v. Superior Court, 167 U.S. 175, 177, 17 S.Ct. 769, 42 L.Ed. 126; Miller v. Cornwall Railroad Co., 168 U.S. 131, 134, 18 S.Ct. 34, 42 L.Ed. 409; Bowe v. Scott, 233 U.S. 658, 665, 34 S.Ct. 769, 58 L.Ed. 1141.

The statute was also assailed below and is challenged here as depriving the appellant of the due process guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. A brief statement of the facts is requisite to an understanding of appellant's argument. Prior to March 9, 1933, the statutory provision as to state banks was, in summary, this: A state official, known as a bank examiner, had general supervision of the operation of these institutions. If a bank became embarrassed or insolvent he might, upon an order of a court, take possession of the assets and business for a period of thirty days, during which time *141 no suits 329 could be brought against the bank. He might restore the bank to the management of its officers, or, if liquidation were required, apply to a court for the appointment of himself or another as receiver. The affairs of the bank were then to be liquidated by the receiver under the suppervision of the court. Stockholders were liable to creditors other than depositors only to the extent of any unpaid balance on their shares; but to depositors, in an amount equal to the face value of their shares. It was the duty of the receiver to demand and collect for the benefit of creditors and depositors the amount due from stockholders, and, if necessary, to sue the stockholders individually and collectively therefor. [FN1]

FN1 Civil Code of South Carolina (1932) ss 7843, 7844, 7848, 7852, 7854, 7855, 7868.

Shortly after the declaration of a banking holiday by the President on March 4, 1933, the Governor of South Carolina issued a proclamation temporarily closing the banks in that state. The General Assembly passed, and on March 9 the Governor approved, an act suspending for eighteen months legislation then applicable to the conduct and liquidation of banks, vesting in the Governor plenary power over state banks, empowering him to extend the time for payment of deposits as the condition of each institution might require; to direct the creation of special trust accounts for receipt of deposits, which should be held separate from other assets and be subject to withdrawal on demand; to determine whether the overhead expenses of any bank exceed its net income, and, if so, to compel it to reduce the expenses or to order immediate liquidation, as might best serve the depositors' interests; and to make all necessary rules and regulations to carry out the intent of the act. The examiner was prohibited from taking possession of any bank unless authorized so to do by the Governor, and all persons were forbidden, while the Governor remained in control of the banks, to institute any action 330 against a bank, except by the Governor's consent. The Governor was authorized to appoint a board of bank control, with whom he might advise and consult, and to whom he might delegate powers under the act. Pursuant to this legislation the Governor appointed a board of bank control and promulgated regulations which provided, inter alia, that upon advice of the board he might, where necessary, appoint a conservator for any bank to conserve its assets for the benefit of depositors and creditors, who should posses himself of all books, records, and assets, and take all necessary action to preserve the property, 'pending further disposition of its business as provided by law.' The regulations provided: 'Such conservator * * * shall have all the rights, powers and privileges now possessed by or hereafter given Receivers of insolvent state banks. * * * During the time that such conservator * * * shall remain in possession of such bank, the rights of all parties with respect thereto shall, subject to the other provisions of this order, be the same as if a receiver had been appointed therefor.' Further regulations dealing with the reopening of solvent banks and reorganization of banks were promulgated, but these are irrelevant to the present case.

The appellee Zimmerman was appointed conservator of the Central Union Bank and entered upon his duties. The appellant, on behalf of himself and other depositors, filed a bill in the common pleas court averring the bank's insolvency, charging that the Act of March 9 is invalid so far as it purports to prevent appellant and other depositors > apply retroactively. See Majority Op. at 1112-13 n.6. The principles underlying the anti-retroactivity presumption are relevant, however, insofar as they evince a cautious and conservative approach to retroactivity that is fundamental to our legal system. Where, as here, there is a question as to the intended scope of retroactivity, I believe that the principles underlying the anti- retroactivity presumption urge us to interpret that scope narrowly.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Third, this interpretation eliminates the strained historical fiction on which the majority opinion, by necessity, must be based, thereby providing a more rational analytic framework for effectuating Congress's intent and leading to a more equitable result. For the most part, the practical effect of the retroactivity provision is the same under either interpretation; in either case, rulings made prior to the passage of the Amendments Act on the basis of substantive law which no longer applies can be modified to 1120 conform to the new governing law of the case. Causes of action recognized in the filing state but not in the forum state can be dismissed. Rules of evidence, burdens of proof, and jury instructions all can be adjusted to accommodate the law of the forum. Under the majority's interpretation, these adjustments would be made by adopting a fiction that Pennsylvania law applied from the beginning and then relitigating the entire case accordingly. Under my interpretation, these adjustments can be made simply by applying Pennsylvania law after August 20, 1988 to motions, new or renewed, brought by the parties. In other words, after August 20, 1988, a party can move to dismiss a claim that no longer has any legal basis, renew a summary judgment motion that failed previously but might now succeed, or seek reconsideration of prior evidentiary rulings that do not stand up under the new governing law. Thus, while the two interpretations require different procedures for implementation, the ultimate effect on the parties is, for the most part, the same in both cases.

In the statute of limitations context, however, the difference in theory between the two interpretations translates into a crucial difference in outcome. The historical fiction on which the majority's theory is premised forces the majority to conclude that plaintiffs' action, although filed within the Mississippi statute of limitations, is now barred by the Pennsylvania statute of limitations--an inequity which I believe contravenes Congress's intent and which my theory avoids. Statutes of limitations are uniquely concerned with a specific point in time: the date on which the complaint was filed. While a defendant can raise the statute of limitations as a defense at any time during the course of a lawsuit, the relevant question for the court is always whether, at the time the case was filed, the applicable statute of limitations was satisfied. Because the majority reasons that section 20 requires extending Pennsylvania law back in time to the inception of plaintiffs' action, it concludes that Pennsylvania's statute of limitations applied--and was violated--at the time the suit was filed. However, at the time it was filed, plaintiffs' lawsuit was not a public liability action. As a result, I conclude that it was governed at the time it was filed by Mississippi, not Pennsylvania, law. Although the substantive law of Pennsylvania governs plaintiffs' case from August 20, 1988 forward, the statute of limitations was satisfied or violated back in 1985, when Mississippi law applied. At that time, under the applicable law, I conclude that it was satisfied.

Finally, the interpretation I endorse conforms with the "settled policy" of federal courts to "avoid an interpretation of a federal statute that engenders constitutional issues if a reasonable alternative interpretation poses no constitutional question," Gomez v. United States, 490 U.S. 858, 864, 109 S.Ct. 2237, 2241, 104 L.Ed.2d 923 (1989), by eliminating the constitutional questions of due process raised by the majority's interpretation. If the Amendments Act applies to pending actions from August 20, 1988 forward, then there is no issue as to whether the Act violates the due process rights of plaintiffs to pending lawsuits, because the Pennsylvania statute of limitations does not apply to deprive plaintiffs of their cause of action.

As a result, I conclude that the retroactivity provision of the Amendments Act does not rewrite history as applied to pending actions, but rather operates by changing the ground rules midway through the game, altering the legal status and governing law of pending actions from the time of its enactment forward.

The majority proffers that it agrees with this interpretation, and denies that its interpretation of section 20 engenders a rewriting of history. [FN2]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Nevertheless, while conceding 1121 that the definition of public liability action, the choice-of-law provision, and the original jurisdiction provision apply to pending cases from August 20, 1988 forward, the majority concludes that plaintiffs' lawsuit was filed in violation of Pennsylvania's two-year statute of limitations. Both positions cannot be correct. In effect, the Amendments Act drew a bright line down the middle of this lawsuit on August 20, 1988, dividing the case into two distinct parts. Prior to August 20, 1988, the suit was generic and Mississippi law governed; since that date, it has been a public liability action and Pennsylvania law governs. I think it logically inconsistent to hold, as the majority does, that plaintiffs' suit was not a public liability action when it was filed, and yet conclude that it was required at the time it was filed to satisfy the Pennsylvania statute of limitations--a statute that only applies to this action in its public liability incarnation. [FN3] Either plaintiffs' lawsuit was a public liability action when it was filed, subject to federal jurisdiction and Pennsylvania's statute of limitations, or it was not.

FN2. The majority's understanding of the term "historical fiction" is different from what I intend. In denying that its interpretation of the Amendments Act engenders a historical fiction, the majority states that it "do[es] not create a historical fiction that plaintiffs filed suit on any day other than that on which they actually filed." This rebuttal is wide of the mark. My point is simply this: (1) When plaintiffs filed their suit, it was not a public liability action--indeed, that cause of action did not yet exist; (2) When plaintiffs filed their suit, it was not governed by Pennsylvania law; (3) When plaintiffs' filed their suit, it satisfied the applicable statute of limitations; (4) On August 20, 1988, plaintiffs' suit was transformed into a public liability action, governed by Pennsylvania substantive law and subject to federal jurisdiction; (5) In order to conclude that plaintiffs' suit was filed in violation of the Pennsylvania statute of limitations, the majority must first conclude that the Pennsylvania statute of limitations applied to plaintiffs' suit at the relevant time: the day on which it was filed. Because Pennsylvania law applies only to public liability actions, however, the majority's holding in this case cannot be sustained without the historical fiction that plaintiffs' suit was a public liability action on the day it was filed.

FN3. As explained infra, I question whether Congress intended the phrase "substantive rules of decision" to include statutes of limitations in the first place. Because I think that the majority's argument fails even if the Amendments Act encompasses statutes of limitations, however, I will assume for now that the Pennsylvania statute of limitations is substantive law in this context.

Therefore, in my view it is the majority, and not I, who seeks to treat the statute of limitations differently from all other "substantive rules for decision" of Pennsylvania law. While concluding that Pennsylvania substantive law operates on plaintiffs' lawsuit from August 20, 1988 forward, the majority carves out an exception for the statute of limitations, allowing it to reach back in time--crossing the imaginary line drawn by the Amendments Act--to operate on the suit on the day it was filed. This treatment of the statute of limitations clashes directly with the majority's overarching theory of the case. Statutes of limitations, as discussed above, can only be violated (or satisfied) at one specific point in time--the day on which the suit was filed-- notwithstanding that such violations can be called to the attention of the court at any point during the pendency of a lawsuit. Under the majority's own interpretation of section 20, this case was not a public liability action when it was filed, and Pennsylvania law did not apply. As a result, the majority's treatment of the statute of limitations cannot be reconciled with its interpretation of the meaning and effect of the Amendments Act.

The majority seeks to justify this illogical result in terms of congressional intent. It is not at all clear, however, that Congress intended the choice- of-law provision of the Amendments Act to encompass statutes of limitations. While it is well established that statutes of limitations are characterized as substantive law for purposes of the doctrine of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 (1938), see Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 L.Ed. 2079 (1945), this does not mean that they are considered substantive in other contexts. Indeed, in holding that statutes of limitations are substantive for purposes of the Erie doctrine, such that federal courts sitting in diversity must apply state statutes of limitations, the Supreme Court confined its analysis narrowly to the context of Erie:

> It is therefore immaterial whether statutes of limitation are characterized either as 'substantive' or 'procedural' in State court opinions in any use of those terms unrelated to the specific issue before us. Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins was not an endeavor to formulate scientific legal terminology. It expressed a policy that touches vitally the proper distribution of judicial power between State and federal courts. In essence, the intent of that decision was to ensure that, *in all cases where a federal court is exercising jurisdiction solely because 1122 of the diversity of citizenship of the parties, the outcome of the litigation in federal court should be substantially the same, so far as legal rules determine the outcome of a litigation, as it would be if tried in a State court.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 326 U.S. at 109, 65 S.Ct. at 1470 (emphasis added).

In this case, the majority opinion's conclusion that "the statute of limitations is a substantive rule of decision," Majority Opinion, at 1112, is based entirely on cases holding that statutes of limitations are substantive rather than procedural for purposes of Erie. The characterization of statutes of limitations as substantive for Erie purposes, however, was not based on an assessment of their procedural or substantive nature in the abstract but rather on their impact on the federalism concerns that Erie 's rough procedural/substantive distinction was intended to address. See Guaranty Trust Co., 326 U.S. at 109, 65 S.Ct. at 1470.

In this case, by contrast, there is no federalism concern at issue and no balance of power between federal and state courts to be maintained. The cause of action is federal, and the only question is whether Congress intended the term "substantive rules for decision" to include statutes of limitation. The legislative history of the Amendments Act is silent on this point; indeed, there is nothing to indicate that Congress even considered the status of statutes of limitations under that Act, much less intended to include them as substantive rules of decision. Moreover, a review of Pennsylvania case law makes clear that the courts of Pennsylvania "generally treat statutes of limitations as 'procedural.' " AAMCO Transmissions, Inc. v. Harris, 759 F.Supp. 1141, 1143-44 (E.D.Pa.1991) (footnotes omitted); Boyle v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 310 Pa.Super. 10, 456 A.2d 156, 162 (1983); Altoona Area Sch. Dist. v. Campbell, 152 Pa.Cmwlth. 131, 618 A.2d 1129, 1134 (1992). This strikes me as a strong indication that the courts of Pennsylvania would not consider the phrase "substantive rules for decision" to include Pennsylvania's statutes of limitations. [FN4] For these reasons, I do not think that congressional intent with respect to statutes of limitations is clear enough to sustain the majority's logically inconsistent conclusion that plaintiffs' suit is time-barred. [FN5] See Majority Op., at 1112 ("Congress could have exempted statutes of limitations from retroactive application, but it did not.").

FN4. The majority cites AAMCO Transmissions, Inc. v. Harris, 759 F.Supp. 1141, 1143-44 (E.D.Pa.1991), for the proposition that Pennsylvania courts generally apply Pennsylvania's statute of limitations to causes of action that arose in other jurisdictions as well as to causes of action that arose in Pennsylvania. Majority Op., at 1112 n.5. This may well be true, but it is irrelevant to the issue at hand, for two reasons. First, Pennsylvania law regarding the statute of limitations has no bearing on the question before us: whether section 20--a federal statute--requires us to apply Pennsylvania's statute of limitations retroactively to bar the underlying actions. This is purely a question of federal law, and neither the courts nor the statutes of Pennsylvania can provide the answer. Second, even if Pennsylvania law were relevant to the issue at hand, the language quoted by the majority is inapposite. The quoted language describes the way in which Pennsylvania courts treat cases which are filed in Pennsylvania in the first instance but which are based on events that took place ("arose") outside the jurisdiction--not cases such as this one which were filed in other jurisdictions and later transferred to Pennsylvania. It tells us nothing about the way Pennsylvania courts would treat a unique and highly unusual case such as this one, and provides no basis for inference.

FN5. Contrary to the majority's assertion, it is not true that "achieving substantially the same outcome in all public liability actions, regardless of where filed, necessitates treatment of statutes of limitations as 'substantive rules for decision.' " Majority Op., at 1112 n.5. Significantly, a finding that Congress did not intend the term "substantive rules for decision" to include statutes of limitations would not mean that there is no statute of limitations on public liability actions. Rather, in the absence of an express command from Congress, federal courts "ordinarily do not assume that Congress intended that there be no time limit > on such actions at all; rather, our task is to 'borrow' the most suitable statute or other rule of timeliness from some other source." DelCostello v. Teamsters, 462 U.S. 151, 158, 103 S.Ct. 2281, 2287, 76 L.Ed.2d 476 (1983). If there is no indication in the legislative history as to what statute of limitations Congress intended the courts to apply to a given type of action, the "fallback rule of thumb" is to "apply the most closely analogous statute of limitations under state law." Id. at 158 & n. 12, 103 S.Ct. at 2287 & n. 12. If the relevant state statute of limitations is an "unsatisfactory vehicle[ ] for the enforcement of federal law," however, courts may borrow timeliness rules from federal law--"either express limitations periods from related federal statutes, or such alternatives as laches." Id. at 161, 162, 103 S.Ct. at 2289. Thus, there are two possible outcomes if Congress did not intend for "substantive rules of decision" to include statutes of limitations and thus did not expressly provide for a statute of limitations for public liability actions: (1) the courts would apply state statutes of limitations anyway (although they would not fall under the rubric of section 20); or (2) the courts would apply a uniform statute of limitations to public liability actions drawn from federal law. In either event, all public liability actions arising from a single occurrence would be subject to the same statute of limitations, with the exception of cases already pending when the Amendments Act was passed.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

1123 Nor is there any evidence in the legislative history or elsewhere that Congress intended the sweeping retroactivity that the majority endorses. On the contrary, the legislative history indicates that the Amendments Act was based on the lessons of claims resulting from the TMI accident:

> The experience with claims following the TMI accident demonstrates the advantages of the ability to consolidate claims after the nuclear incident. Attorneys representing both plaintiffs and defendants in the TMI litigation testified ... that the ability to consolidate claims in federal court would greatly benefit the process for determining compensation for claimants.... The availability of the provisions for consolidation of claims in the event of any nuclear incident ... would avoid the inefficiencies resulting from duplicative determinations of similar issues in multiple jurisdictions that may occur in the absence of consolidation.

S.Rep. No. 218, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 13, reprinted in 1988 U.S. Cong. & Admin. News 1476, 1488; In re TMI Litig. Cases Consol. II, 940 F.2d 832, 853 n. 18 (3d Cir.1991)(stating that Congress' decision to enact the Amendments Act was based on the lessons of litigation resulting from the TMI accident). This indicates to me that Congress contemplated providing a mechanism for consolidating TMI cases to facilitate their continued litigation. This forward-looking approach evidenced by the legislative history is wholly inconsistent with a congressional desire to extinguish those suits on technical grounds.

Because I conclude that retroactive application of the choice-of-law provision means simply that Pennsylvania substantive law applies to and governs the instant litigation from August 20, 1988 forward, I respectfully dissent from the majority's far-reaching and overly broad interpretation of section 20 and from its conclusion that Pennsylvania's two-year statute of limitations reaches back in time to bar plaintiffs' suit. Accordingly, I would reverse.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[redacted]

United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

Philip H. EDDINGS, as Personal Representative of the Estate of Scott Philip Eddings, Deceased, on Behalf of Philip H. EDDINGS, and Virginia Rae Randt, individually, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
VOLKSWAGENWERK, A.G., a/k/a Volkswagen Aktiengesellschaft, a foreign corporation, et al., Defendants-Appellees.
Patricia Ann GRIFFIN, By and Through her next friend and natural father, Larry D. GRIFFIN, and Larry D. Griffin, individually, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
FORD MOTOR COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.
Albert V. VERHINE, Jr., a minor, By A. Brennis VERHINE, his legal Guardian; and A. Brennis Verhine, and Glenda L. Verhine, his natural parents, Individually, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
VOLKSWAGENWERK, A.G., a foreign corporation and Volkswagen of America, Inc., a foreign corporation, Defendants-Appellees.
Dana C. LAMB, a minor, By and Through his mother and next friend, Jeanne F. DONALDSON, Jeanne F. Donaldson, individually, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
VOLKSWAGENWERK AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT, a German Corporation, Volkswagen of America, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, Defendants-Appellees.

Nos. 86-3068, 86-3103, 86-3138 and 86-5258.

Jan. 22, 1988.

Actions were brought against automobile manufacturers for injuries suffered more than 12 years after date of delivery of automobiles to original purchasers, and defendants moved for summary judgment. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida, No. PCA 83-4127-WEA, 635 F.Supp. 45, Winston E. Arnow, J., entered summary judgment for defendants, as did the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida, Nos. TCA 85-7244-09 and 84-7120-WS, William Stafford, Chief Judge, and the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, 631 F.Supp. 1144, Stanley Marcus, J., and plaintiffs appealed. On consolidated diversity actions, the Court of Appeals, Tjoflat, Circuit Judge, held that plaintiffs did not have vested property rights in causes of action that accrued based on Florida Supreme Court decision holding 12-year statute of repose unconstitutional, such that application of statute of repose after Florida Supreme Court receded from its position and held that statute of repose was constitutional would deprive plaintiffs of vested property right in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes

[1] Constitutional Law ⚿308
92k308 Most Cited Cases

[1] Limitation of Actions ⚿4(2)
241k4(2) Most Cited Cases

Florida's statute of repose which barred actions for products liability brought more than 12 years after date of delivery of completed product to original purchaser did not violate Fourteenth Amendment due process clause; recognizing overruling of Battilla v. Allis Chalmers Mfg. Co., 392 So.2d 874 (Fla.). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; West's F.S.A. § 95.031(2).

[2] Constitutional Law ⚿308
92k308 Most Cited Cases

[2] Limitation of Actions ⚿31
241k31 Most Cited Cases

Plaintiffs who brought actions against automobile manufacturers for injuries suffered more than 12 years after date of initial purchase of automobiles did not have vested property rights in causes of action that accrued based on Florida Supreme Court decision holding Florida statute of repose which barred actions for products liability brought more than 12 years after date of delivery of completed product to its original purchaser unconstitutional, such that application of statute of repose after Florida Supreme Court receded from its position and held that statute of repose was constitutional would deprive plaintiffs of vested property right in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; West's F.S.A. § 95.031(2).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[3] Constitutional Law ⚖249(3)
92k249(3) Most Cited Cases

[3] Limitation of Actions ⚖4(2)
241k4(2) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 241k412)

Florida statute of repose which barred actions for products liability brought more than 12 years after date of delivery of completed product to its original purchaser did not violate Fourteenth Amendment equal protection clause on theory that the statute of repose, combined with four-year statute of limitations, created two classes of injured persons with different legal rights--one class including persons who were injured less than eight years after delivery of product to original purchaser, who had full four years afforded by statute of limitations to bring actions, and another class including persons who were injured more than eight years, but less than 12 years, after product was delivered to original purchaser, who therefore had less than full four years afforded by statute of limitations to file suit--with no rational basis for the disparate treatment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; West's F.S.A. § 95.031(2).

1370 Karen E. Roselli, Kevin A. Malone, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for plaintiffs-appellants in 86-3068.

Cathy Jackson Lerman, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for amicus curiae Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers.

J. Richard Caldwell, Jr., Sharon Lee Stedman, Orlando, Fla., for defendants- appellees in 86-3068.

Edward T. O'Donnell, Mershon, Sawyer, Johnston, Dunwody & Cole, Miami, Fla., for amicus curiae Motor Vehicle & Product Liability.

1371 Robert K. High, Jr., E.C. Deeno Kitchen, Brian S. Duffy, Robert M. Ervin, Jr., Tallahassee, Fla., Allen W. Lindsay, Jr., Milton, Fla., for plaintiffs-appellants in 86-3103.

Patrick J. Farrell, Jr., Patricia Guilday, Tallahassee, Fla., John M. Thomas, Office of the General Counsel,Ford Motor Co., Dearborn, Mich., for defendant- appellee in 86-3103.

John Stephen Derr, Field, Granger, Santry & Mitchell, Tallahassee, Fla., Michael Hoenig, Herzfeld & Rubin, New York City, for plaintiffs-appellants in 86-3138.

Sharon Lee Stedman, Rumberger, Kirk, Caldwell, Cabaniss & Burke, Orlando, Fla., for defendants-appellees in 86-3138.

Charles R. Stack, High, Stack, Lazenby & Palahach, Coral Gables, Fla., for plaintiffs-appellants.

Wendy F. Lumish, Rumberger, Wechsler & Kirk, Miami, Fla., Sharon Lee Stedman, Miami, Fla., for defendants-appellees in 86-5258.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

Before TJOFLAT and HILL, Circuit Judges, and LYNNE [FN*], Senior District Judge.

FN* Honorable Seybourn H. Lynne, Senior U.S. District Judge for the Northern District of Alabama, sitting by designation.

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

These four consolidated diversity actions present two issues involving Florida's products liability statute of repose. The first issue concerns the effect of a decision by the Florida Supreme Court in which the court reversed a prior decision holding that the statute of repose was invalid as applied. We must decide whether application of the supreme court's later decision in the cases before us deprives the appellants of a vested property right, in violation of the fourteenth amendment's due process clause. The second issue involves the question of whether Florida's statute of repose creates two classes of persons with different legal rights, in violation of the fourteenth amendment's equal protection clause. In each of the four cases, the district court granted the appellee's motion for summary judgment. 635 F.Supp. 45, 631 F.Supp. 1144. We affirm.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

I.

A.

In 1974, the Florida legislature enacted a twelve-year products liability statute of repose. [FN1] That statute terminated manufacturer liability with respect to suits brought more than twelve years after delivery of the product to its first purchaser. In other words, the Florida legislature determined that independent of whether the applicable statute of limitations had run, an injury caused by a product that had been delivered to its original purchaser more than twelve years prior to the filing of the plaintiff's lawsuit would give rise to no cause of action against the manufacturer or designer. [FN2]

FN1. The statute of repose, Fla.Stat. § 95.031(2) (1982), provided as follows:

Actions for products liability ... must be begun within the period prescribed in this chapter ... but in any event within 12 years after the date of delivery of the completed product to its original purchaser ... regardless of the date the defect in the product ... was or should have been discovered.

In 1986, the Florida legislature amended section 95.031(2) so as to repeal the statute of repose in products liability actions. See Fla.Stat. § 95.031(2) (Supp.1987). The Florida Supreme Court has held that this repeal has no effect on cases arising prior to the date of the amendment. See Melendez v. Dreis & Krump Mfg. Co., 515 So.2d 735, 737 (Fla.1987).

FN2. A statute of repose is to be distinguished from a statute of limitations. The district court in one of the cases before us thoughtfully explained the difference between a statute of repose and a statute of limitations:

While in the most general sense statutes of repose and statutes of time limitation are similar in that they prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought, we think there are critical analytical distinctions between the two and we do not use the terms interchangeably here. A statute of repose terminates the right to bring an action after the lapse of a specified period. The right to bring the action is foreclosed when the event giving rise to the cause of action does not transpire within this interval. A statute of limitations delineates the time a party has to initiate an action once the injury has occurred; it does not begin to run until the wrong has been or should have been discovered. Simply stated, a statute of repose is triggered once the product is delivered to its first purchaser. If an injury results from the product after the authorized period has elapsed the victim is without recourse to the manufacturer of the product. A statute of repose "... does not bar a cause of action; its effect, rather, is to prevent what might otherwise be a cause of action, from ever arising." Rosenberg v. Tower of North Bergen, 61 N.J. 190, 293 A.2d 662, 667 (1972). Thus under the Florida statute of repose an injury caused by a product which has reached its original purchaser more than twelve years prior forms no basis for recovery because the statute prevents the accrual of a right of action. "The injured party literally has no cause of action. The harm that has been done is damnum absque injuria--a wrong for which the law affords no redress." Id. The effect of the statute of repose may be to bar the cause of action before it has accrued.

These product liability statutes of repose are designed and intended to encourage diligence in the prosecution of claims, eliminate the potential of abuse from a state claim, and ultimately foster certainty and finality in liability.

Lamb v. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft, 631 F.Supp. 1144, 1147 (S.D.Fla.1986).

1372 In December 1980, in Battilla v. Allis Chalmers Mfg. Co., 392 So.2d 874 (Fla.1980) (per curiam), the Florida Supreme Court held that the twelve-year statute of repose, as it applied to a plaintiff whose injury occurred more than twelve years after delivery of the product to its first purchaser, worked a denial of access to courts in violation of the Florida Constitution. [FN3] In August 1985, the Florida Supreme Court, in Pullum v. Cincinnati, Inc., 476 So.2d 657, 659 (Fla.1985), overruled Battilla and held that the statute of repose is "not unconstitutionally violative of [the right of access] of the Florida Constitution." Although the supreme court did not state in Pullum whether the rule announced in that case would apply to cases involving injuries occurring after the Battilla decision but before the Pullum decision, it has since held that Pullum does apply to such cases. See Pait v. Ford Motor Co., 515 So.2d 1278, 1279 (Fla.1987); Melendez v. Dreis & Krump Mfg. Co., 515 So.2d 735, 737 (Fla.1987).

FN3. Article I, section 21 of the Florida Constitution provides as follows:

§ 21 Access to courts

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> The courts shall be open to every person for redress of any injury, and justice shall be administered without sale, denial or delay.

B.

Each of the present lawsuits arose out of an accident occurring in Florida and involving an automobile that had been delivered to the original purchaser more than twelve years before the accident. [FN4] In three of the cases, the accident occurred after the supreme court's decision in Battilla; in the fourth case, the accident occurred before Battilla was decided. All of the accidents occurred before the supreme court reversed itself in Pullum. In each case, someone injured in the accident, or a representative of his estate, filed suit in the district court against the manufacturer of *1373 the automobile, invoking jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (1982). [FN5] In three of the cases, suit was filed after the supreme court decided Battilla but before it decided Pullum. In the fourth case, suit was filed eleven days after the supreme court decided Pullum.

> FN4. The chronology of relevant dates for each of the four cases is summarized below:
> Eddings v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., No. 86-3068
> 1967--Car delivered to original purchaser
> 1979--Statute of repose expires
> 1980--Battilla decided
> 1982--Accident occurs
> 1983--Suit filed
> 1985--Pullum decided
> Lamb v. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft, No. 86-5258
> 1967 (Nov. 13)--Car delivered to original purchaser 1979 (Nov. 13)--Statute of repose expires
> 1979 (Nov. 21)--Accident occurs
> 1980--Battilla decided
> 1982--Suit Filed
> 1985--Pullum decided
> Verhine v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., No. 86-3138
> 1969 (July)--Car delivered to original purchaser
> 1980--Battilla decided
> 1981 (July)--Statute of repose expires
> 1981 (Aug.)--Accident occurs
> 1984--Suit filed
> 1985--Pullum decided
> Griffin v. Ford Motor Co., No. 86-3103
> 1971--Car delivered to original purchaser
> 1980--Battilla decided
> 1983--Statute of repose expires
> 1985 (Jan.)--Accident occurs
> 1985 (Aug.)--Pullum decided > 1985 (Sept.)--Suit filed
>
> FN5. Section 1332 provides as follows: (a) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $10,000, exclusive of interests and costs, and is between-- > (1) citizens of different states;
> ....

In each of the four cases, the defendant manufacturer moved the court for summary judgment, contending that because the twelve-year statute of repose had run its course, the plaintiff had no cause of action. In each case, the district court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The plaintiffs have appealed to this court.

II.

The district court correctly interpreted Florida law in holding that the decision in Pullum controls these cases and leaves appellants with no cause of action rooted in products liability. [FN6] Appellants argue, however, that application of the statute of repose to their suits would, as a matter of federal law, deprive them of a vested property right in violation of the fourteenth amendment's due process clause.

> FN6. At the time the district court decided these cases, the Florida Supreme Court had not expressly decided whether Pullum would apply so as to bar a cause of action arising from an injury occurring after the Battilla decision but before the Pullum decision. The supreme court has, however, since ruled that Pullum is to have such application. See Pait v. Ford Motor Co., 515 So.2d 1278, 1279 (Fla.1987); Melendez v. Dreis & Krump Mfg. Co., 515 So.2d 735, 737 (Fla.1987).
> In their briefs, appellants have in various degrees relied on Chevron Oil v. Huson, 404 U.S. 97, 92 S.Ct. 349, 30 L.Ed.2d 296 (1971). Chevron involved the retroactive application of a federal court decision regarding a matter of federal statutory law and is not applicable to our analysis in this case.

[1] We note preliminarily that appellants' facial attack on the constitutionality of the Florida statute

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

of repose is without merit. The United States Supreme Court, in cases raising the constitutionality of similar statutes, has found no violation of the fourteenth amendment. See, e.g., Woodward v. Burnham City Hosp., 449 U.S. 807, 101 S.Ct. 54, 66 L.Ed.2d 11 (1980), dismissing appeal from Anderson v. Wagner, 79 Ill.2d 295, 37 Ill.Dec. 558, 402 N.E.2d 560 (1979) (no due process violation from legislative action "establishing the four-year outer limit within which to file a complaint for medical malpractice") (appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question; see 49 U.S.L.W. 3065 for summary of questions presented on appeal); Ellerbe v. Otis Elevator Co., 459 U.S. 802, 103 S.Ct. 24, 74 L.Ed.2d 39 (1982), dismissing appeal from 618 S.W.2d 870 (Tex.Civ.App.1981) (due process of law not denied plaintiff by virtue of statute prohibiting suits against licensed engineers or architects for damages arising out of unsafe condition of real property that was improved more than ten years earlier) (appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question; see 51 U.S.L.W. 3146 for summary of questions presented on appeal). [FN7]

> FN7. Summary disposition by the Supreme Court of an appeal for want of a substantial federal question is a disposition on the merits of the case:
> As Mr. Justice Brennan once observed, "[v]otes to affirm summarily, and to dismiss for want of a substantial federal question, it hardly needs comment, are votes on the merits of a case ...," Ohio ex rel. Eaton v. Price, 360 U.S. 246, 247, 79 S.Ct. 978, 979, 3 L.Ed.2d 1200 (1959); cf. R. Stern & E. Gressman, Supreme Court Practice, 197 (4th ed. 1969) ("The Court is, however, deciding a case on the merits, when it dismisses for want of a substantial question...."); C. Wright, Law of Federal Courts 495 (2d ed. 1970) ("Summary disposition of an appeal, however, either by affirmance or by dismissal for want of a substantial federal question, is a disposition on the merits.").
> Hicks v. Miranda, 422 U.S. 332, 344, 95 S.Ct. 2281, 2289, 45 L.Ed.2d 223 (1975).

[2] Appellants argue in the alternative that the statute of repose is unconstitutional as applied. Their argument, reduced to its essentials, is as follows. They begin with the premise that a products liability cause of action accrues at the time the injury occurs. Appellants' injuries occurred 1374 after the Florida Supreme Court decided Battilla but before it decided Pullum. Since their injuries therefore occurred at a time when Florida decisional law held that application of the statute of repose to cases such as theirs would violate the Florida Constitution, appellants reason that nothing in Florida law prevented the accrual of their causes of action at that time. Appellants argue that an accrued cause of action is a vested property right, and that application of the statute of repose now would deprive them of that right in violation of the due process clause. [FN8]

> FN8. In one of the cases, Lamb v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., No. 86- 5258, the accident occurred before Battilla was decided. The appellant in Lamb therefore cannot make this particular argument.

We reject appellants' arguments that the Pullum decision should be analyzed as if it were a legislative reenactment of a repealed statute. Battilla did not invalidate the statute of repose; during the interim between the Battilla and the Pullum decisions, the statute continued to bar causes of action in cases factually distinguishable from Battilla. Appellants therefore cannot assert that the statute was repealed at the time their injuries occurred. Although at that time the supreme court had held that application of the statute to cases such as theirs violated the Florida Constitution, the supreme court was free to change its interpretation, and appellants had no vested right in the former interpretation. See New York Cent. R.R. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 198, 37 S.Ct. 247, 250, 61 L.Ed. 667 (1917) ("No person has a vested interest in any rule of law, entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit."); see also Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. 59, 88 n. 32, 98 S.Ct. 2620, 2638 n. 32, 57 L.Ed.2d 595 (1978) ("Our cases have clearly established that '[a] person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law.' "); Ducharme v. Merrill-Nat'l Laboratories, 574 F.2d 1307, 1309 (5th Cir.) ("[A] plaintiff has no vested right in any tort claim for damages under state law."), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1002, 99 S.Ct. 612, 58 L.Ed.2d 677 (1978). [FN9]

> FN9. Even if each appellant did possess an accrued cause of action, it would be questionable whether an accrued cause of action necessarily translates into a vested property right protected under the due process clause. See Hammond v. United States, 786 F.2d 8, 12 (1st Cir.1986) (reviewing Supreme Court precedent and concluding that "rights in tort from prosecuting the suit, and praying the appointment of a receiver who should proceed to enforce the stockholders' statutory liability to depositors. The defendants named were the conservator, the Governor, and the state treasurer, who was also a member of the board of bank control. The court issued a temporary injunction and a rule on the defendants to show cause.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*331 At this juncture the defendants in the common pleas court prayed a writ of prohibition from the state Supreme Court, addressed to the appellant and to the judge of the common pleas court, to stay the equity proceeding. The judge made return submitting himself to such order as the Supreme Court should enter. The appellant filed a demurrer and motion to dismiss, and a return denying the validity of the Act of March 9 and the regulations, and asserting that his right to proceed for the collection of stockholders' liability was a vested property right, to be enforced through a receiver, of which he could not lawfully be deprived; that the conservator was engaged in receiving and paying trust cash deposits, and the expense of conducting this branch of the business would deplete assets available for payment of depositors. The writ of prohibition was granted.

Subsequent to the judgment of the state Supreme Court certain official action occurred of which we may take judicial notice. On May 16, 1933, there was approved an Act of the General Assembly (38 St. at Large S.C. p. 489), empowering the Governor, whenever he should determine, after advising with the board of bank control, that any bank for which a conservator had been or hereafter might be appointed, was insolvent, or in imminent danger of insolvency, and liquidation was therefore required to protect depositors and creditors, to order liquidation, which should be accomplished by the conservator, who was to have all the powers and be under all the duties of a receiver, and might 142 apply to a court for instructions on question arising in liquidation. All appointments of conservators theretofore made were ratified and confirmed. On June 22 the Governor issued an order finding the Central Union Bank insolvent, or in imminent danger of insolvency, reciting that he had consulted with the board of bank control and had found that the overhead expense of the bank exceeded its net income, and directing its liquidation.

*332 [2][3] The appellant says the Act of March 9 arbitrarily deprives him of a remedy for the enforcement of stockholders' liability, which remedy was his property, and was taken from him without due process. But although a vested cause of action is property and is protected from arbitrary interference (Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U.S. 124, 132, 1 S.Ct. 102, 27 L.Ed. 104), the appellant has no property, in the constitutional sense, in any particular form of remedy; all that he is guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment is the preservation of his substantial right to redress by some effective procedure. Iowa Central Ry. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U.S. 389, 393, 16 S.Ct. 344, 40 L.Ed. 467; Backus v. Fort St. Union Depot Co., 169 U.S. 557, 571, 18 S.Ct. 445, 42 L.Ed. 42 S.Ct. 214, 66 L.Ed. 258 U.S. 142, 147, 42 S.Ct. 214, 66 L.Ed. 514; Hardware Dealers Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Glidden Co., 284 U.S. 151, 158, 52 S.Ct. 69, 76 L.Ed. 214.

Under the Act of March 9, and the regulations, the conservator was endowed with all the functions of a receiver, one of which is the enforcement on behalf of depositors of stockholders' excess liability. If under that act and the regulations power was lacking the defect was cured by the Act of May 16. Nothing is shown to indicate that the conservator will prosecute the claim against the stockholders in a manner different from that to be pursued under the old law by a receiver or that the state courts will refuse him process to that end. The Act of March 9, the regulations, and the Act of May 16, do not purport, and, so far as we can perceive, do not operate, to deny the depositors participation in the distribution of assets, or in the benefit of the stockholders' excess liability. It is not alleged that the proceedings of the conservator will impose upon creditors of the bank greater burden or expense than would have been the case if a receiver were functioning. The substantive rights existing under the old law are preserved. In no proper sense can it be said that any property of the appellant has been taken, injured or destroyed.

*333 [4] The appellant, however, insists that after the conservator took possession, he accepted special trust deposits which were segregated and against which the depositors were allowed to draw, and in conducting this restricted business the overhead expenses of the institution exceeded its net income. So long as this condition existed, he says his position as a creditor was being jeopardized for the fund to do not vest until there is a final, unreviewable judgment").

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

We note that the Florida Supreme Court has decided that application of the statute of repose to persons in the appellants' position does not impair any vested rights cognizable under state law. See Brackenridge v. Ametek, Inc., 517 So.2d 667, 12 Fla. Law Weekly 589, 590 (Fla.1987).

Appellants also apparently contend that their property rights are implicated because they relied on the Battilla decision when they filed their lawsuits. Underlying this argument is the notion that persons subject themselves to tortious conduct in reliance on a particular state of tort law. The timing of appellants' accidents, however, was of course purely fortuitous. We therefore conclude that appellants' due process challenge must fail.

III.

[3] Appellants in two of the cases before us argue that Florida's statute of repose violates the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment. [FN10] Appellants contend that the operation of the twelve-year statute of repose, Fla.Stat. § 95.031(2) (1982), together with the four-year statute of limitations, Fla.Stat. § 95.11(3)(e) (1982), creates two classes of injured persons with different legal rights. The first class includes those persons who are injured less than eight years after delivery of the product to its first purchaser and who therefore have the full four years afforded by the statute of limitations to bring their actions. The second class includes those persons who are injured more than eight years but less than twelve years after the product is delivered to its first purchaser. Owing to the operation of the twelve-year statute of repose, persons in the second class have 1375 less than the full four years afforded those in the first class to file suit. Appellants argue that the statute of repose violates the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment because there is no rational basis for this disparate treatment.

FN10. Appellants in one of the two cases, Verhine v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., No. 86-3138, concede in their reply brief that their case does not present an equal protection challenge.

The Florida Supreme Court rejected this equal protection argument in Pullum, 476 So.2d at 660. The plaintiff in Pullum appealed that decision to the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for want of a substantial federal question. Pullum v. Cincinnati, Inc., 475 U.S. 1114, 106 S.Ct. 1626, 90 L.Ed.2d 174 (1986) (see 54 U.S.L.W. 3654 for summary of questions presented on appeal). The Court therefore disposed of Pullum on the merits, rejecting the equal protection arguments raised in that case. [FN11] We are bound by the Supreme Court's disposition of Pullum and accordingly reject appellants' contention that Florida's statute of repose violates the fourteenth amendment's equal protection clause.

FN11. See supra note 7.

IV.

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's grant of summary judgment in each of these four consolidated cases is

AFFIRMED.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

20

United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

In re CONSOLIDATED UNITED STATES ATMOSPHERIC TESTING LITIGATION, Christina KONIZESKI, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
LIVERMORE LABS, et al., Defendants-Appellees.
Alice P. BROUDY, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant-Appellee.

Nos. 85-2842, 86-5553.

Argued and Submitted Feb. 13, 1987.
Decided June 22, 1987.

Actions were brought against United States and federal contractors, asserting claims arising out of alleged exposure to nuclear radiation resulting from bombing of Hiroshima and atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons. Government moved to be substituted for contractors as sole defendant and for summary judgment. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California, William W Schwarzer, J., 616 F.Supp. 759, granted motions, and appeal was taken. In a similar action brought by widow of former serviceman, the United States District Court for the Central District of California, Laughlin E. Waters, J., granted summary judgment for Government, and appeal was taken. Upon consolidation of appeals, the Court of Appeals, J. Blaine Anderson, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) statute providing that actions against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractors for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing programs was constitutional, and (2) claims were barred by discretionary function exception to Tort Claims Act.

Judgments affirmed.

West Headnotes

[1] Eminent Domain ⚖2(1)
148k2(1) Most Cited Cases

Two-step analysis is used to determine whether "taking" has occurred: first, is subject matter "property" within meaning of Fifth Amendment; second, if so, has there been taking of that property. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[2] Eminent Domain ⚖2(1.1)
148k2(1.1) Most Cited Cases

Statute providing that action against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractor for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing program did not constitute taking under Fifth Amendment as applied to pending actions. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631(b), 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212(b); U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[3] Constitutional Law ⚖305(1)
92k305(1) Most Cited Cases

Congress must comply with due process when abolishing or substantially modifying common-law cause of action. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[4] Constitutional Law ⚖253(4)
92k253(4) Most Cited Cases

Rational basis, and not strict scrutiny standard of due process review, applied to constitutional challenge to retroactive application of federal statute substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to Government for radiation injuries arising out of any United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making Federal Tort Claims Act sole remedy for those injuries; Congress acted within its powers under war powers and commerce clauses of the Constitution, and there was no fundamental right or suspect classification involved. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631(b), 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212(b); U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

[5] Constitutional Law ⚖309(1)
92k309(1) Most Cited Cases

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Federal statute substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making Federal Tort Claims Act sole remedy for those injuries, was not wholly arbitrary and irrational in purpose, and thus did not violate due process; it was reasonably related to legitimate congressional purpose. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631(b), 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212(b).

[6] Constitutional Law ⚷57
92k57 Most Cited Cases

Statute providing that action against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractor for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing programs, as applied to pending actions, did not violate Article III under principle prohibiting congressional attempts to alter rule of decision in pending cases in favor of Government, where statute did not withdraw jurisdiction from federal courts, did not deprive party of benefit of judgment, and did not mandate outcome of particular case. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631(b), 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212(b).

[7] Jury ⚷12(1.2)
230k12(1.2) Most Cited Cases

There is no right to jury trial against sovereign under Seventh Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[8] United States ⚷125(7)
393k125(7) Most Cited Cases

When United States abolishes cause of action and then sets up separate administrative remedy against itself, Seventh Amendment does not require that it must also provide jury trial. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[9] Jury ⚷31.2(1)
230k31.2(1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 230k31(3))

Statute providing that action against United States under Tort Claims Act is exclusive remedy for claims against contractors for radiation injuries resulting from atomic weapons testing programs did not constitute unconstitutional deprivation of right to jury trial. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212(b); U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[10] United States ⚷78(12)
393k78(12) Most Cited Cases

Discretionary function exception to Tort Claims Act barred claims for injuries caused by exposure to radiation from nuclear weapons based on allegations of negligent failure to take adequate safety precautions at test sites. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2680(a).

[11] United States ⚷78(12)
393k78(12) Most Cited Cases

Discretionary function exception to Tort Claims Act barred claims against Government for failing to warn participants in atomic weapons testing programs of dangers to which they would be exposed and for failing to monitor participants for health problems resulting from radiation exposure. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2680(a).

[12] United States ⚷127(2)
393k127(2) Most Cited Cases

Medical malpractice claim against Government by widow of former serviceman who had been ordered to participate in military exercises near two atmospheric nuclear test sites, was barred for failure to state sufficient claim to appropriate federal agency, where widow's administrative claim was filed with Department of Energy, but Department of Defense, which controlled medical facility where her husband received treatment, received no notice. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2675(a).

983 Alan W. Sparer, San Francisco, Cal., and Ronald G. Bakal, Beverly Hills, Cal., for plaintiffs-appellants.

Marc Johnston, Washington, D.C., for defendants-appellees.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern and Central Districts of California.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Before ANDERSON, ALARCON and HALL, Circuit Judges.

J. BLAINE ANDERSON, Circuit Judge:

These consolidated appeals arise out of judgments entered by the United States District Court for the Northern District of 984 California, [FN1] in actions for personal injury and wrongful death brought by or on behalf of military and civilian participants in the United States atmospheric nuclear weapons testing program. Appellees are the United States Government and private contractors who participated in the nuclear weapons testing program.

> FN1. Consolidated with these appeals is Broudy v. United States, No. 86-5553, a case from the Central District of California. The issues unique to Broudy will be dealt with in a separate section.

In the district court, the government moved pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2212, to be substituted for the contractors as defendants in these actions. The contractors joined in that motion. The government then moved to dismiss or for summary judgment in all actions based on various exceptions to its liability under the Federal Tort Claims Act (the "FTCA"), 28 U.S.C. § 2680.

The district court granted the motion to substitute the government as defendant in place of the contractors, specifically finding 42 U.S.C. § 2212 to be constitutional. It then granted the government's motion for summary judgment pursuant to the FTCA under the discretionary function exception, 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a), the foreign country exception, 28 U.S.C. § 2680(k), the combatant activities exception, 28 U.S.C. § 2680(j), and the Feres doctrine, Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153, 95 L.Ed. 152 (1950). We affirm.

The district court, The Honorable William W. Schwarzer presiding, in its Memorandum Opinion and Order, published as In re Consolidated U.S. Atmospheric Testing Litigation, 616 F.Supp. 759 (N.D.Cal.1985), accurately summarized the facts, analyzed the contentions of the parties, and properly applied the law to this case. The opinion is well reasoned, and we adopt, with appropriate deletions and additions, the following portions of it as the opinion of this court. [FN2]

> FN2. Brackets together, in this manner [ ], without enclosing material are used to indicate deletions from the opinion of the district court; brackets enclosing materials are, unless otherwise indicated, used to denote insertions or additions by this court. Footnotes in the district court opinion have been renumbered sequentially. Where appropriate, we have added and adopted portions of First Circuit's opinion in Hammond v. United States, 786 F.2d 8 (1st Cir.1986). Hammond examined 42 U.S.C. § 2212 and held that substituting the United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, was constitutional.

I. FACTS

"The atmospheric nuclear weapons tests giving rise to these actions took place between the closing days of World War II and the adoption of the Partial Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in 1963. Even before these tests, the United States Government had enlisted the scientific resources of industrial firms and universities in the program to develop an atomic bomb. The Manhattan Project, which ultimately produced the bomb detonated over Hiroshima, was an unprecedented joint effort by the government, universities and industry.

"Immediately following the end of World War II, the military services proposed a series of tests to determine the effects of atomic weapons. On orders of the President, a joint military task force was established to conduct the first of these tests, Operation Crossroads, at Bikini Atoll. The task force, commanded by an admiral, comprised 42,000 military and civilian personnel and numerous ships and aircraft.

"In 1946, Congress adopted the Atomic Energy Act, (the 'AEA'), establishing a national policy for the development and control of nuclear weapons. Under the AEA, authority was transferred from the military to the Atomic Energy Commission, (the 'AEC'), which was to operate a 'program of federally conducted research and development' with the 'paramount objective of assuring the common defense and security'. AEA, P.L. No. 585, ch. 724, 60 Stat. 755, §§ 1(a), (b)(3) (current version at 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq.). To this end the AEC was authorized to conduct experiments, undertake research, and develop the military applications of atomic energy either in its own facilities or pursuant to arrangements with public or private institutions. 985 Id. at § 4(c)(2). All right, title and interest in fissionable material was vested in it. Id. at §§ 4(b), 5(a)(2). The production of atomic bombs and bomb parts was authorized, but 'only to the extent that the express consent and direction of the President of the United States has been obtained....' Id. at § 6(a)(2). In addition, Congressional oversight of the AEC's activities was established by creation of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. Id. at § 15(a). The AEA thus established a program of pervasive '[g]overnmental control of the production, ownership, and use of fissionable material', including the development and testing of nuclear weapons. Id. at § 1(b)(4).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

"When the AEC took over the nuclear weapons program from the military, it acquired a complex of plants, laboratories and other facilities staffed by some 2,000 military personnel, 4,000 civilian government employees and 38,000 employees of contractors. The integral role of contractors, which started in the Manhattan Project, continued under the AEC. The University of California, Sandia Corporation and Reynolds Electrical and Engineering Co., Inc., were among those contractors.

"Escalating international tensions, marked by the Berlin blockade in 1948, the confrontation with the Soviet Union over Czechoslovakia, Greece and Iran, the detonation by the Soviet Union of an atomic device in 1949, and the Korean War led the government to assign the highest priority to the development and production of nuclear weapons. Weapons tests were an essential part of that effort.

"These tests were regarded as critical to national security. Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy and the Chairman of the AEC made public statements stressing the vital importance of tests to the development of modern weapons needed to assure national security in the face of the threat posed by the Soviet Union. Indeed, atmospheric nuclear weapons testing was a major issue in United States-Soviet relations during this period. Beginning in 1955, testing was a topic in the disarmament negotiations. In 1958, a moratorium on tests was agreed on and was observed until the Soviet Union resumed atmospheric testing in 1961. The United States followed suit to counteract qualitative improvements in Soviet weapons. In 1963, atmospheric nuclear tests were finally banned by the Partial Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

"From 1947 through 1963, the AEC in conjunction with the Department of Defense conducted 21 test series, some of which are the subject of these actions. These tests had a number of objectives, including developing weapons, planning their tactical and strategic use, determining how targets could be given protection, assessing the vulnerability of troops to the effects of detonations, and improving radiological safety. A particular objective of the tests was to determine the effects of nuclear explosions on the equipment, clothing, weapons and fighting capability of military personnel. The tests were coordinated with studies conducted at laboratories operated by contractors.

"Every phase of the preparation and implementation of each nuclear weapons test series was closely controlled and supervised by government officials. Initially, proposals for tests had to be approved at various levels by the responsible divisions of the AEC and the Department of Defense. Before any test took place, a detailed Operation Plan had to be reviewed and approved by the AEC, by the National Security Council, and finally by the President.

"Tests at the Pacific Proving Ground were under the control of a joint task force commander, appointed by the AEC and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. At the Nevada Test Site, tests were under the control of a Test Manager designated by the AEC. Tests were conducted in conformity with the approved Operation Plan, which incorporated radiation exposure limits established by the AEC applicable to both military and civilian personnel. Various military and civilian committees and medical and scientific experts took part in making the decisions which were incorporated into the Operation Plan. Designated units in each test organization 986 were assigned responsibility for radiological safety.

"Nuclear weapons testing was known to be an inherently dangerous activity. Aside from the recognized radiation hazards, the risks included the dangers associated with any explosive devices, the effects of unpredictable meteorological conditions, and the risks of injury inherent in any large-scale military operation.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

"The need to balance risks against test objectives was particularly acute in tests involving troop maneuvers. These tests were intended to expose troops to battlefield conditions to test psychological reactions and protective measures. The location and movement of those troops was a subject of controversy between the AEC and military commanders. It was recognized that the desire of the military to expose troops to realistic combat conditions could interfere with the AEC's weapons testing objectives. The arrangements ultimately incorporated in the Operation Plans represented an accommodation of these divergent requirements by the AEC and military officials. In later tests, involving large scale military maneuvers under battlefield conditions, these considerations led to delegation of responsibility for radiological and physical safety of troops to the military commanders.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Motions to Substitute--42 U.S.C. § 2212

1. The Provisions and Effect of § 2212

"In October 1984, Congress adopted § 1631 of the Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, (the 'Act'), codified at 42 U.S.C. § 2212. It provides that an action against the United States shall be the exclusive remedy for injuries 'due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States', § 2212(a)(1), and requires any action against these contractors to be maintained solely against the United States pursuant to the FTCA. The Act applies to alleged acts or omissions of contractors 'without regard to when the act or omission occurred.' § 2212(a)(2).

> The Act provides, in pertinent part, that: A contractor against whom a civil action or proceeding described in subsection (a) ... is brought shall promptly deliver all processes served upon that contractor to the Attorney General of the United States. Upon certification by the Attorney General that the suit against the contractor is within the provisions of subsection (a) ..., a civil action or proceeding commenced in a State court shall be removed without bond at any time before trial by the Attorney General to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending and the proceedings shall be deemed a tort action brought against the United States.... For purposes of removal, the certification by the Attorney General under this sub-section establishes contractor status conclusively.
> 42 U.S.C. § 2212(b) (emphasis added).

"A 'contractor' is defined as a 'contractor or cost reimbursement subcontractor of any tier participating in the conduct of the United States atomic weapons testing program....' § 2212(d). Authority to certify pursuant to § 2212(b) that the action against the contractor 'is based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States' rests with the Attorney General. § 2212(a)(1).

"In its statement supporting the Act, the Department of Justice explained the unique situation at which it is aimed:

> [The Act] would clarify the status of certain contractors operating government-owned facilities relating to atomic energy national defense activities in litigation arising from those activities. Many actions recently have been brought against these contractors who have invaluably assisted the Government of the United States in carrying out its nuclear weapons testing program. The actions allege exposure to radiation and consequent987 injury or death as a result of the United States atomic weapons testing.
> The provisions of the Federal Tort Claims Act determine the rights of individuals and corporate litigants to seek monetary recovery from the United States for alleged torts. Typically, the United States cannot be sued for and is not liable for the acts of independent contractors providing goods or services to the United States. However, contractors who operate nuclear weapons testing facilities for the Department of Energy or its predecessor agencies and who, as a result, have participated in the atomic weapons testing program are unique. They are not typical contract suppliers of commercially provided goods or services to the government. These contractors were and are utilized by the United States as instruments of national policy to assist in an entirely governmental task--nuclear weapons research, development and testing. Further, the government reimburses these contractors for any liability arising out of their assistance in the weapons program, including the costs of litigation. The use of the contractors to implement national policy and perform a uniquely governmental function cannot be disputed. Therefore, it should be perfectly clear that, for the purposes of civil litigation arising from atomic weapons testing, the proper party defendant is the government. Only the government sets policy, makes decisions, and controls activities and circumstances regarding atomic weapons testing.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

H.R.Rep. No. 124, Part I, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 34-35 (1983).

"The report of the Senate Committee on Armed Services elaborates the Act's underlying rationale:

Each nuclear test that has been made since 1946 has been made under the statutory direction of Congress. Each nuclear test has been approved, before the fact, by the President of the United States. Each nuclear test has been under the direct supervision of government officials. Each nuclear test has been participated in by hundreds, and in some cases thousands, of government officials and military and civilian personnel.

The committee recognizes, as has the Congress, that the military applications of atomic energy could not proceed either technically or economically without the participation of organizations that possess both scientific management skills and a high degree of scientific and technical expertise. Several such organizations were placed under contract almost at the inception of the nuclear weapons program in 1942 and have performed in an outstanding manner in the national interest for more than three decades. These organizations have provided scientific, engineering and technical support for nuclear tests carried out by the government and for the government in the exercise of a governmental function, i.e., providing for the national defense. These organizations did not order the tests to be performed; they did not set the times or places for the tests; nor did they direct military or civilian government personnel to participate in them.

S.Rep. No. 500, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 376 (1984).

"The Senate Report described the effect of the legislation as follows:

[The Act] would cause all litigation involving the atomic weapons testing program, including suits now filed against contractors, to be maintained against the United States under the substantive and procedural requirements of the FTCA.

Id. at 375. By its terms, however, the Act is specifically limited to claims for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States.

42 U.S.C. § 2212(a)(1).

"The instant actions [ ] qualify under the Act. The Attorney General [ ] made the statutory certification. The [appellees'] motions to substitute the United States as the sole defendant in these actions must be 988 granted unless § 2212 is found to be invalid."

[Appellants raise several issues concerning the constitutionality of 42 U.S.C. § 2212: (1) whether § 2212 constitutes a taking without just compensation in violation of the fifth amendment; (2) whether § 2212 violates the procedural and substantive due process requirements of the fifth and fourteenth amendments; (3) whether § 2212 violates the principle of separation of powers; and (4) whether § 2212 deprives appellants of their right to a jury trial as guaranteed by the seventh amendment.]

2. Constitutionality of § 2212

a. Fifth Amendment--Taking

"The effect of § 2212 is to substitute the remedy against the government under the FTCA for any cause of action against the contractors arising under state law. In adopting this legislation, Congress broke no new ground. In a number of other acts, Congress substituted the FTCA remedy against the government for remedies available against private parties, and these acts have been uniformly upheld. See Ducharme v. Merill-National [sic] Laboratories, 574 F.2d 1307 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1002, 99 S.Ct. 612, 58 L.Ed.2d 677 (1978) (Swine Flu Act); Carr v. United States, 422 F.2d 1007 (4th Cir.1970) (Federal Drivers Act). See also 42 U.S.C. § 233 (Public Health Service medical personnel); 38 U.S.C. § 4116 (Veterans Administration medical personnel); 22 U.S.C. §

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

817(a) (State Department medical personnel); 10 U.S.C. § 1089(a) (Armed Forces medical personnel).

"[Appellants] contend that the Act [ ] results in a compensable taking. In a classic example of understatement, the Supreme Court has said that '[t]he question of what constitutes a "taking" for purposes of the Fifth Amendment has proved to be a problem of considerable difficulty.' Penn Central Transportation Co. v. New York City, 438 U.S. 104, 123, 98 S.Ct. 2646, 2658, 57 L.Ed.2d 631 (1978)."

[1] [A two-step analysis is used to determine whether a "taking" has occurred. First, is the subject matter (i.e., a pending cause of action) "property" within the meaning of the fifth amendment? Second, if so, has there been a taking of that property?]

"A cause of action has been described as a 'species of property protected by the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause.' Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 428, 102 S.Ct. 1148, 1154, 71 L.Ed.2d 265 (1982) (quoting Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 313, 70 S.Ct. 652, 656, 94 L.Ed. 865 (1950)). See also In re Aircrash in Bali, Indonesia on April 22, 1974, 684 F.2d 1301, 1312 (9th Cir.1982) (dictum). [FN3] [ ] It is helpful at the outset to recognize that ' "[a] claim of deprivation of property without due process of law cannot be blended as one and the same with the claim that property has been taken for public use without just compensation." ' Kizas v. Webster, 707 F.2d 524, 539 (D.C.Cir.1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1042, 104 S.Ct. 709, 79 L.Ed.2d 173 (1984) (quoting J. Sackman, Nichols' The Law of Eminent Domain § 4.3 at 187 rev. 3d ed. cum. supp. 1982) (emphasis in original). [ ]"

> FN3. In Bali, the court of appeals in dictum postulated that wrongful death claims are property within the meaning of the just compensation clause. The court, however, reserved the question whether the Warsaw Convention, limiting the amount recoverable in a wrongful death action, constituted a compensable taking.

[In Ducharme v. Merrill-National Laboratories, 574 F.2d 1307 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1002, 99 S.Ct. 612, 58 L.Ed.2d 677 (1978), the Fifth Circuit examined the constitutionality of the Swine Flu Act, 42 U.S.C. § 247. Like § 2212, this statute provides for the substitution of the United States as the sole defendant. That court found it well settled that "a plaintiff has no vested right in any tort claim for damages under state law." Id. at 1309 (citing Keller v. Dravo Corporation, 441 F.2d 1239 (5th Cir.1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1017, 92 S.Ct. 679, 30 L.Ed.2d 665 (1972)). See also Carr v. United States, 989 422 F.2d 1007 (4th Cir.1970). Furthermore, in Hammond, the First Circuit found:

> "No person has a vested interest in any rule of law entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit." New York Central R.R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 198, 37 S.Ct. 247, 250, 61 L.Ed. 667 (1917); Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. 59, 88 n. 32, 98 S.Ct. 2620, 2638 n. 32, 57 L.Ed.2d 595 (1978); Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U.S. 1, 50, 32 S.Ct. 169, 175, 56 L.Ed. 327 (1912); Ducharme v. Merrill-National Laboratories, 574 F.2d 1307, 1309 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1002, 99 S.Ct. 612, 58 L.Ed.2d 677 (1978). This is true after suit has been filed and continues to be true until a final unreviewable judgment is obtained.
> Hammond, 786 F.2d at 12.]

"While a cause of action is considered to be a species of property, as heretofore discussed, those words do not translate into a cognizable taking claim. See In re Aircrash in Bali, Indonesia on April 22, 1974, 684 F.2d 1301, 1312 (9th Cir.1982) . Whether such a claim exists is subject to an 'essentially ad hoc, factual inquir[y].' Penn Central, 438 U.S. at 124, 98 S.Ct. at 2659. Both the nature of the property right and of the governmental invasion must be considered [to determine whether a taking has occurred.]

"Unlike contract claims, the tort claims asserted here lack 'investment-backed expectations.' " Penn Central, 438 at 124, 98 S.Ct. at 2659. Cf. Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571, 579, 54 S.Ct. 840, 843, 78 L.Ed. 1434 (1934). Not only are they contingent by their nature, but they also arise in a field in which the law remains to be developed. See, e.g., Molsbergen v. United States, 757 F.2d 1016, 1020-25 (9th Cir.1985).

[2] "The governmental action, moreover, does not abrogate the claims but subjects them to the tort claims procedure which the plaintiffs could reasonably expect might be applied. This is true, notwithstanding the naming of contractors as defendants, because the claims arose out of activities conducted by the government and the contractors were named [by appellants] for the obvious purpose of escaping the well-known limits on the government's waiver of sovereign immunity. For these reasons, the Court concludes that [appellants] do not have a taking claim."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265188

b. Fifth Amendment--Due Process

(i) Procedural Due Process

[As indicated above, a cause of action has been recognized as a species of property protected by the fifth amendment's due process clause.]

"To say that a cause of action is a species of protected property, however, is not to answer the question of what process is due. A cause of action is property of a substantially different nature than real or personal property or vested intangible rights. It is inchoate and affords no definite or enforceable property right until reduced to final judgment. Cf. Armstrong v. United States, 364 U.S. 40, 80 S.Ct. 1563, 4 L.Ed.2d 1554 (1960) (state law materialman's lien entitling supplier to resort to specific property to satisfy claims is a property right compensable under fifth amendment); Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571, 579, 54 S.Ct. 840, 843, 78 L.Ed. 1434 (1934) (contract rights are property rights compensable under fifth amendment).

"A cause of action does not afford the holder the traditional bundle of rights associated with the ownership of property. Cf. United States v. Security Industrial Bank, 459 U.S. 70, 75-76, 103 S.Ct. 407, 410-11, 74 L.Ed.2d 235 (1982). Instead, it represents a right to assert a claim for compensation or some other form of judicial relief. Its value is contingent on successful prosecution to judgment. Thus, to the extent it is entitled to due process protection, that protection focuses on assuring access to fair procedures for its prosecution. The notion of due process relevant to causes of action is that 'deprivation ... by adjudication be preceded by notice and opportunity for hearing appropriate to the nature of the case.' Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 990 339 U.S. 306, 313, 70 S.Ct. 652, 656, 94 L.Ed. 865 (1950)." [On notice of hearing, appellants were given the opportunity to present their claims before the district court. The requirements of procedural due process were thereby satisfied. The plaintiffs' claims were simply unavailing under the procedure pursued by them. Procedural due process, however, does not guarantee that a party will prevail. Logan, 455 U.S. at 432, 102 S.Ct. at 1155-56. To the extent that § 2212 may have abrogated appellants' causes of action by substituting the parties and remedies, this court's analysis will focus on substantive due process.]

(ii) Substantive Due Process

[We adopt the Hammond court's cogent due process analysis of § 2212 with the following deletions and additions:

[3] "[ ] Congress must comply with due process when abolishing or substantially modifying a common law cause of action. In that sense the right to sue is a 'species of property.' Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 428, 102 S.Ct. 1148, 1154, 71 L.Ed.2d 265 (1982); see Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 82-94, 98 S.Ct. at 2635-41. But, an act of Congress comes to us clothed with a presumption of constitutionality, and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that it violates due process. Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 2892, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976); McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 425- 26, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1104-05, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961).

[4] "Because Congress has acted within its powers under the war powers and commerce clauses of the Constitution and there is no fundamental right or suspect classification involved here, we find that the rational basis standard of due process review applies.

[5] "In applying the rational basis test to this case we follow the guidance of the Supreme Court in Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 728-34, 104 S.Ct. 2709, 2717-20, 81 L.Ed.2d 601 (1984); Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 82-94, 98 S.Ct. at 2635-41; and Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. at 15-20, 96 which he must look for payment was being depleted. But he has not averred that the conservator's activities will deplete the bank's resources to such extent that depositors cannot be paid in full; and whatever injury might have been inflicted by a continuation of the business has now been abated for the future by the Governor's order of June 22 directing liquidation. No present advantage could accrue to the appellant from the ousting of the conservator and the appointment of a receiver, who could only liquidate by the methods obligatory on the conservator. In this aspect the case is now moot.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The judgment is affirmed.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

S.Ct. at 2892-94. We find that [appellants have] not met [their] burden of showing that § 2212 is wholly arbitrary and irrational in purpose and effect, i.e., not reasonably related to a legitimate congressional purpose. See United States R.R. Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. 166, 174-77, 101 S.Ct. 453, 459-60, 66 L.Ed.2d 368 (1980); Vance v. Bradley, 440 U.S. 93, 97-98, 99 S.Ct. 939, 942-43, 59 L.Ed.2d [sic] (1979).

"The reasons asserted by the United States for Congress' enactment of § 2212 are neither arbitrary nor irrational, and can be stated simply. The United States has operated a nuclear weapons testing program for over 40 years. It initiates, designs and authorizes all nuclear tests under the program but has found it necessary to obtain the assistance of various private entities including universities and private companies for many aspects of the testing. From the late 1940's to the early 1960's a series of above-ground tests of atomic weapons were conducted with military personnel, civilian government employees and private employees of government contractors taking part. [ ] There is no dispute that these tests were designed and supervised by government officials and were individually authorized by the President. A significant number of those present at the above-ground tests have instituted suits against the government contractors involved in them for injuries caused by radiation exposure. The contractors are generally not threatened with financial liability by these suits since most of their contracts with the government included a clause making the United States indemnitor for all tort liability, including costs of litigation, arising from their participation in the testing programs. S.Rep. No. 500, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 374-76 (1984). Congress has nevertheless perceived these lawsuits to constitute a threat to the continued participation of the private contractors in the nuclear weapons program because the contractors fear the bad publicity generated by the suits. The contractors testified before 991 Congress that the lawsuits have led the public to blame them for the formulation, implementation and execution of the atomic weapons testing policy of the United States. H.R.Rep. No. 124, Part 4, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 2-3 (1983). They also testified that the lawsuits result in a diversion of human and financial resources away from research and testing activities and into litigation and, therefore, seriously disrupt their participation in the program. See Litigation Relating to Atomic Testing, 1983: Hearings on H.R. 2797 before the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 46-49 (1983). [Appellants assert] that the mere public embarrassment of the private contractors is not a rational or legitimate reason for relieving them of liability. We disagree. Even if we question the extent and effect of this public embarrassment it is not for us to reevaluate it. It is a plausible reason for Congress' action. United States R.R. Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. at 179, 101 S.Ct. at 461.

"Nor has Congress chosen a wholly arbitrary or irrational means to its legitimate end. [Appellants] claim[ ] that Congress created only an illusory substitute remedy in § 2212, that [ ] probably will not [ ] compensate [ ] [them] because under the terms of § 2212(a)(2) the 'limitations and exceptions' applicable to the remedies provided by § 2212 are preserved. [ ]"]

"[Appellants] argue, however, that the Act must be viewed not simply as a substitution of remedies, but rather as an abrogation of existing claims. By substituting the FTCA remedy, the claims become subject to dispositive defenses available to the government, including the Feres doctrine and the discretionary function exception."

["Nevertheless, although Congress could have relieved the independent contractors of their burden of defending suits for radiation injuries and still provided those injured by radiation a more generous substitute compensation scheme, we cannot say that Congress' choice of means was without any rational basis. The atomic weapons testing program has been an important, some say vital, government function from its inception. Independent contractors were used only to aid the government to carry out its program. When the program began Congress could have mandated that all tort claims arising from it be litigated through the FTCA. Under the statute as originally enacted, [appellants] had the right to sue contractors without restriction, but it was the government who paid the judgment under its indemnitor agreement with the contractor. [Appellants] had the best of both possible worlds, a right to sue free of any FTCA limitations with the government guaranteeing payment of the judgment. It was neither arbitrary nor irrational for Congress to change the law so as to place putative [appellants] in the same position as any other party suing the United States in tort. See Hearings, supra, at 46-48; S.Rep. No. 500, supra, at 377. Moreover, there may be government compensation available to many of those injured by radiation, including [appellants] here, under veterans benefits legislation, 38 U.S.C. §§ 301- 363, §§ 401-423, or the FECA." Hammond, 786 F.2d at 14.]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[Finally, appellants argue that § 2212 cannot be applied to them retroactively. However, "[t]he retroactive application of a federal statute ... is not forbidden under the constitution so long as due process requirements are met." Matter of Reynolds, 726 F.2d 1420, 1422 (9th Cir.1984) (citing C.D. Sands, Statutes and Statutory Construction, § 41-03 (4th ed. 1973)) (footnote omitted). As a general rule, a judge should apply the law in effect on the date of a decision. Matter of Reynolds, 726 F.2d at 1422; United States v. The Schooner Peggy, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 103, 110, 2 L.Ed. 49 (1801). To comport with the requirements of due process, the retroactive application of a statute must be supported by a legitimate legislative purpose furthered by a rational means. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 467 U.S. at 729, 104 S.Ct. at 2717-18. "[T]he burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way." Id. (quoting Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 992U.S. at 15, 96 S.Ct. at 2892). As we discussed above, appellants have not met this burden].

c. Separation of Powers Doctrine

[6] "Congressional attempts to alter the rule of decision in pending cases in favor of the government have been condemned as a violation of Article III. See United States v. Klein, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 128, 146-47, 20 L.Ed. 519 (1871); United States v. Sioux Nation of Indians, 448 U.S. 371, 404, 100 S.Ct. 2716, 2735, 65 L.Ed.2d 844 (1980). The instant cases, however, do not fall within that prohibition. Section 2212 does not withdraw jurisdiction from the federal courts, does not deprive a party of the benefit of a judgment, and does not mandate the outcome of particular cases. It substitutes remedies but it leaves the application of the rules of law, including any defenses, for judicial determination. See Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 685, 101 S.Ct. 2972, 2989, 69 L.Ed.2d 918 (1981).

> [T]he better reading of Klein is quite narrow and construes the case as holding only that Congress violates the separation of powers when it presumes to dictate 'how the Court should decide an issue of fact (under threat of loss of jurisdiction)' and purports to 'bind the Court to decide a case in accordance with a rule of law independently unconstitutional on other grounds.'

United States v. Brainer, 691 F.2d 691, 695 (4th Cir.1982) (quoting P. Bator, D. Shapiro, P. Mishkin & H. Wechsler, Hart & Wechsler's The Federal Courts and the Federal System 316 n. 4 (2d ed. 1973)). Since the Act neither directs the court to make a certain finding of fact nor requires them to apply an unconstitutional law, the separation of powers doctrine is not offended. See also Battaglia [v. General Motors Corporation], 169 F.2d [254, 262 (2d Cir.1948)]."

d. Seventh Amendment--Right to Jury

[7][8][9] [Appellants argue that they were unconstitutionally deprived of their right to trial by jury because § 2212 makes an FTCA action against the United States the exclusive remedy for damages. [FN4] The court in Hammond held:

> FN4. The FTCA specifically provides that in tort actions against the United States, trials shall be to the court without a jury. 28 U.S.C. § 2402.

> There is no right to a jury trial against the sovereign under the seventh amendment, Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 572, 82 S.Ct. 1459, 1484, 8 L.Ed.2d 671 (1962). If the United States can abolish the right to a cause of action altogether it can also abolish the right to a jury trial that is part of it. When the United States abolishes a cause of action and then sets up a separate administrative remedy against itself, as it has [with § 2212], the seventh amendment does not require that it must also provide a jury trial.

Hammond, 786 F.2d at 15. We agree and find that appellants were not unconstitutionally deprived of their right to a jury trial.]

"Section 2212 is therefore a valid exercise of Congressional power. The United States must be substituted as the defendant in place of the contractors, and the contractors dismissed from these actions."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

B. Motion for Summary Judgment

"Under § 2212, these actions must be treated as having been brought against the United States under the FTCA. The FTCA is a limited waiver of sovereign immunity subject to certain statutory and judicial exceptions. The government [ ] moved [and the district court granted, a motion] for summary judgment on the ground that each [appellant's] claims are barred by one or more of those exceptions.

[1]. The Discretionary Function Exception

"The FTCA excludes any claim 'based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal 993 agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused.' 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a). The government raises the discretionary function exception as a defense to all claims raised by all [appellants].

[a]. Claims arising out of acts or omissions in connection with the detonation of nuclear weapons.

[10] "[Appellants'] first category of claims is based on injuries caused by their exposure to radiation from nuclear weapons. They may be summed up as resting on alleged negligent failures to take adequate safety precautions at the test sites.

"[Appellants] acknowledge that the decision to conduct the tests is covered by the discretionary function. They contend, however, that the Court must examine each challenged act or omission to determine whether, in the light of the policies underlying the exception, it is of the type that Congress intended to protect. According to [appellants], many of those acts involved only the exercise of what they refer to as 'scientific or professional judgment' in implementing an overall decision to conduct the atomic weapons testing program and hence are not covered by § 2680(a). See e.g., Driscoll v. United States, 525 F.2d 136 (9th Cir.1975). In addition, they argue that the government can be held liable for failing to enforce its own safety requirements.

"The fountainhead of jurisprudence relating to the discretionary function exception is Dalehite v. United States, 346 U.S. 15, 73 S.Ct. 956, 97 L.Ed. 1427 (1953). The continuing vitality of that decision was recently affirmed in United States v. S.A. Empresa de Viacao Aerea Rio Grandense ('Varig'), 467 U.S. 797, 104 S.Ct. 2755, 81 L.Ed.2d 660 (1984). Dalehite involved claims for damages against the United States arising out of a disastrous explosion of ammonium nitrate fertilizer, which had been produced and distributed under the direction of the United States for export to areas occupied by the Allied Armed Forces after World War II. Numerous acts of the government were charged as negligent: the cabinet-level decision to institute the fertilizer export program, the failure to experiment with the fertilizer to determine the possibility of explosion, the drafting of the basic plan of manufacture, and the failure properly to police the storage and loading of the fertilizer.

"The Supreme Court concluded that these allegedly negligent acts were governmental duties protected by the discretionary function exception and held the actions barred by § 2680(a). Describing the discretion protected by § 2680(a) as 'the discretion of the executive or the administrator to act according to one's judgment of the best course,' 346 U.S. at 34, 73 S.Ct. at 967, the Supreme Court stated:

> It is unnecessary to define, apart from this case, precisely where discretion ends. It is enough to hold, as we do, that the 'discretionary function or duty' that cannot form a basis for suit under the Tort Claims Act includes more than the initiation of programs and activities. It also includes determinations made by executives or administrators in establishing plans, specifications or schedules of operations. Where there is room for policy judgment and decision there is discretion. It necessarily follows that acts of subordinates in carrying out the operations of government in accordance with official directions cannot be actionable.

Id. at 35-36, 73 S.Ct. at 967-68 (footnotes omitted). In the course of its opinion, the Supreme Court analyzed the legislative history of the FTCA. It noted that 'congressional thought was centered on granting relief for the run-of-the-mine accidents, as distinguished from injury from performing discretionary governmental functions,' id. at 28, n. 19, 73 S.Ct. at 964, n. 19, and concluded that in § 2680 'Congress exercised care to protect the Government from claims, however negligently caused, that affected the governmental functions.'

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Id. at 32, 73 S.Ct. at 966. [footnote omitted].

"Dalehite is squarely on point. The argument made by plaintiffs in that case, and rejected by the Supreme Court, was essentially 994 the same as that made here, i.e., that the charges were directed not at > 'any Cabinet decision ... [but] only to the mistakes of judgment and the careless oversight of Government employees who were carrying out a program of manufacturing and shipping fertilizer and who failed to concern themselves as a reasonable man should with the safety of others.'

Id. at 35, 73 S.Ct. at 967 (quoting petitioners' arguments).

"The specific acts of negligence charged were the temperature at which the fertilizer was bagged, the coating and bagging materials used, and the labelling of the bags. Id. at 39, 46-57, 73 S.Ct. at 969, 973-79. The Supreme Court found all of these acts covered by the discretionary function exception because they were 'performed under the direction of a plan developed at a high level under a direct delegation of planmaking authority from the apex of the Executive Department.' Id. at 40, 73 S.Ct. at 970.

"The case presented by [Appellants] is congruent with Dalehite. [Appellants] chose to focus their arguments on the conduct of Operation Crossroads. [FN5] There, too, a detailed and extensive Operation Plan was adopted on orders from the highest levels of the Executive Department. [FN6] An integral part of that Plan was an extensive Safety Plan which, according to [appellants] at first lacked but later contained a plan for decontamination. [FN7] TheSafety Plan described anticipated radiation hazards, established exposure limits, and assigned responsibility for protecting personnel against exposure to unknown hazards. [FN8]

FN5. Plaintiffs' Op.Br. at 3. That operation, according to plaintiffs, epitomizes the nuclear weapons testing program at its worst: "In hindsight Operation Crossroads was an extraordinary fiasco, America's first nuclear disaster. The Joint Task Force took a radiation bath without adequate resources to deal with the decontamination problems that ensued." Id. at 76.

FN6. Government Exhibits E-7.10-7.15. Operation Plans for subsequent tests may be found at Government Exhibits E-8 (Operation Buster-Jangle), E-9 (Operation Castle), E-10 (Operation Redwing), E-11 (Operation Hardtack), E-12 (Operation Ivy), and E-13 (Operation Dominic I).

FN7. Government Exhibits E-7.3 to E-7.7. Extensive Safety Plans were a part of the Operation Plan for each test. See, e.g., Operation Plan for Operation Castle, Government Exhibit E-9, at N-I to N-III-2.

FN8. Plaintiffs' Statement of Facts, at 11-16.

"[Appellants'] contention is that the government's scientists who prepared the plan 'failed to appreciate or prepare for the magnitude of the hazards that would result.' Plaintiffs' Statement of Facts at 16. They argue that 'AEC and military officials were responsible for developing safety plans to carry out Presidential and cabinet and agency-level directives to conduct the planned detonations without unduly jeopardizing the safety of the participants; for ensuring that all participants except those performing unusual or high priority missions such as cloud sampling were not subjected to radiation doses exceeding the exposure limits established by the plan; and for following other safety guidelines established in the plan, such as decontamination measures and use of protective clothing and gear..... There is substantial evidence that their negligent failure to carry out these operational tasks resulted in the overexposure of many hundreds or thousands of test participants, including the safety monitors themselves.' Plaintiffs' Op.Br. at 30.

"The nuclear weapons tests on which these actions are founded were carried out pursuant to specific legislative authority in the 1946 Atomic Energy Act, and its successor, the 1954 Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et. seq., and presidential order. [FN9] They were conducted for the purpose of developing and testing weapons and discovering their effects, an inherently dangerous undertaking. The Safety Plan developed for each test series was designed to minimize exposure to radiation consistent with the purposes of the tests. The Plan provided that '[r]adiological safety of all military and civilian personnel is a command 995 responsibility.' [FN10] While the Plan established radiation exposure limits, it was subject to the authority of the officer in charge of any particular test, who could permit exposure in excess of the established level if the exigencies of the situation required. Thus the Plans specified that compliance with exposure limits was conditioned upon operational requirements:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> FN9. See Government Exhibits E-14 to E-26.4.
>
> FN10. Government Exhibit I-4, at 1. See also Government Exhibits J- 5, at 3; I-1, at 3; E-11, at K-1; J-3 at 1.

> Due to the special nature of field tests it is considered that a policy of strict adherence to the radiological standards prescribed for routine work is not realistic. The regulations set forth herein have been designed as a reasonable and safe compromise considering conservation of personnel exposures, the international import of the test and the cost aspects of operational delays chargeable to excessive radiological precautions. In all cases other than emergencies or tactical situations, the ultimate criteria will be limited by the MPEs [maximum permissible exposure] for personnel. Special instances may arise ... in which operations will be carried out without regard to the MPEs and MPLs [maximum permissible level] prescribed herein. For such emergency or tactical operations the criteria prescribed below for tactical situations will be used as a guide. [FN11]
>
> FN11. Joint Task Force Seven, Command Task Group 7.3, Operation Plan, December 7, 1953, Government Exhibit J-21, at G-I-1. See generally references cited in Government Memo, in Support of Summary Judgment (Discretionary Function) [ ].

"The Safety Plan incorporated into the Operation Plan contemplated that judgments and decisions concerning exposure to radiological hazards and the degree of protection to be afforded would be made in the light of the objectives and the needs of the test program. Safety decisions, therefore, were a part of the policy decisions made in the conduct of the weapons tests, [ ] and they fall squarely within the articulation in Dalehite that > [w]here there is room for policy judgment and decision there is discretion.

346 U.S. at 36, 73 S.Ct. at 968. That those judgments and decisions may have been made by scientists or other operational personnel does not affect the application of the discretionary function exception. As stated by the Court in Varig, 'it is the nature of the conduct, rather than the status of the actor, that governs whether the discretionary function exception applies....' [467 U.S. at 813], 104 S.Ct. at 2765. [FN12]

> FN12. The pre-Varig criterion of looking at whether the decision was made at the planning level or operational level is no longer valid in view of the Supreme Court's statement in Varig. See also Begay v. United States, 768 F.2d 1059, 1062-63 n. 2 (9th Cir.1985).

"In these actions, the decisions concerning safety were in the first instance made by those charged with the preparation of the Operation Plan and its components. The responsibility for carrying out the Safety Plan was assigned to the officials in charge of the tests who had discretion to adopt and modify the Plan as necessary to achieve the objectives of the test. A court would be ill-equipped to evaluate the judgments concerning safety made by those officials based on the exigencies of the moment. Any attempt to do so would, moreover, require a comprehensive reexamination of the conduct of the tests and the decisions made during their course which would itself defeat the purpose of the exception. The consequences of such a reexamination would be to hamper the government in its future conduct of weapons tests and similar operations affecting the national security. [FN13]

> FN13. The appropriateness of deciding issues of governmental immunity on summary judgment to avoid unnecessary inquiries disruptive of effective government was stressed by the Supreme Court in Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 816-17, 102 S.Ct. 2727, 73 L.Ed.2d 396 (1982).

[Finally, the appellants argue that the discretionary function exception does not bar their challenge to the government's alleged negligent failure to supervise the contractor's compliance with the safety procedures and guidelines established by 996 the Safety Plan. Appellants rely heavily on Gardner v. United States, 780 F.2d 835 (9th Cir.1986) for the proposition that, under California law, there is a "nondelegable duty to ensure adequate safety precautions were taken by an independent contractor" where the work to be performed involves special dangers. Garnder, 780 F.2d at 837 (citing Rooney v. United States, 634 F.2d 1238 (9th Cir.1980)). Furthermore, the United States can be liable under the FTCA for breaching this non-delegable duty. Gardner, 780 F.2d at 837. This case is clearly distinguishable. The discretionary function exception was not raised nor discussed. Furthermore,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> It is irrelevant to the discretion issue whether the AEC or its employees were negligent in failing to adequately protect the public. See Cisco v. United States, 768 F.2d 788, 789 (7th Cir.1985); General Public Utilities Corp. v. United States, 745 F.2d 239, 243, 245 (3d Cir.1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1228, 105 S.Ct. 1227, 84 L.Ed.2d 365 (1985). [ ] When the conduct at issue involves the exercise of discretion by a government agency or employee, § 2680(a) preserves governmental immunity 'whether or not the discretion involved be abused.' "

Allen v. United States, 816 F.2d 1417 (10th Cir.1987) (footnotes omitted). See also Cunningham v. United States, 786 F.2d 1445 (9th Cir.1986) (negligent failure to inspect falls within discretionary function exception--"When an agency determines the extent to which it will supervise the safety procedures of private individuals, it is exercising discretionary regulatory authority of the most basic kind." (quoting Varig, 467 U.S. at 819-20, 104 S.Ct. at 2767)).

Furthermore, the Act is specifically limited to claims "for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States." 42 U.S.C. § 2212(a)(1) (emphasis added). Section 2212 is not designed to cover the negligence of the government itself.]

"Accordingly, [Appellants'] claims based on failures to take adequate safety precautions at tests must be dismissed. [footnote omitted].

[b]. Claims Based on the Government's Failure to Issue Warnings Prior to 1977.

[11] "[Appellants'] second category of claims is based on the breach of the government's alleged duty to warn [appellants] of the dangers to which they had been exposed or to monitor test participants for health problems resulting from radiation exposure. [This court] has postulated that California courts would impose a duty on the government to warn test participants of the dangers to which they have been exposed. See Molsbergen v. United States, 757 F.2d 1016, 1020-25 (9th Cir.1985). Such a duty would exist when a test participant could show that (1) the government has information relating to a serious risk to the life, safety or health of a participant; (2) the conduct of the government gave rise to the risk; (3) the burden resulting from imposition of a duty to warn is not onerous; and (4) there is reason to believe that a warning would have some practical effect. Id. For purposes of this ruling, it is assumed that the government failed to provide [appellants] with any warning of the health risks of exposure to radiation until 1977.

"The government's motion is not directed at whether it had a duty to warn. Rather, the government argues that in these cases the government's failure to warn involved the failure to perform a discretionary function and that the claims are therefore barred.

"Assuming the government had a duty to warn, the threshold question in determining whether the discretionary function applies is what, if any, warning measures it was obliged to undertake on behalf of test participants prior to 1977. This is not a case of failing to warn river users of a hidden obstruction beneath the surface, Lindgren v. United States, 665 F.2d 978 (9th Cir.1982); or park users of the risk of flash floods, Ducey v. United States, 713 997 F.2d 504 (9th Cir.1983); or a treating physician of his patient's dangerous propensities, Jablonski v. United States, 712 F.2d 391 (9th Cir.1983). The kind of 'warning' that these cases involve is best illustrated by the program the government did undertake beginning in 1977 on the strength of findings by the Centers for Disease Control of a leukemia cluster among test participants. At that time the Defense Nuclear Agency established the Nuclear Test Personnel Review ("NTPR") program. It began to assemble and publish voluminous materials concerning radiation exposure during tests and to calculate levels of exposure of personnel. Beginning in 1979, test participants whose records indicated significant radiation exposure were notified and provided with medical examinations. The notification and examination program was gradually expanded to include personnel who had received lower doses. It was also extended to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare which began to conduct studies and a public information program. [FN14]

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN14. See the discussion and references cited at Government Memo, in Support of Summary Judgment (Discretionary Function) [ ]; Government Reply Memo [ ].

"The decision to embark on this program entailed a commitment of substantial resources, including the assignment of a large number of employees and the expenditure of large sums of money. The initial cost of the NTPR alone was $6,000,000 per year. The program required difficult judgments balancing the magnitude of the risk from radiation exposure--of which there was only fragmentary knowledge--against the risks and burdens of a public program. Those risks included the potential consequences of creating public anxiety and the health hazards inherent in the medical responses to the warning. [FN15]

FN15. See E. Robin, Matters of Life & Death: Risks v. Benefits of Medical Care (1984), which discusses the health hazards inhering in any widespread campaign to warn against and detect disease. Diagnostic tests, by reason of the intrusive procedures used, false positive indications, and sometimes unwarranted psychological effects, produce their own adverse consequences which must be taken into account. The experience under the government's 1976 Swine Flu Program illustrates the hazards of a hasty reaction to a health program, the dimensions and seriousness of which are not yet known at the time. Although the probability of an epidemic was never established, the public was strongly urged to submit to immunization with little advice respecting its attendant hazards. R. Neustadt, Swine Flu Affair: Decision-Making on a Slippery Disease 86-97 (1978); Gray, "Complexities of Informed Consent," 437 Annals Am. Academy Pol. & Soc. Sci, 37, 44 (May, 1978); Centers for Disease Control, Public Attitudes Toward the Swine Flu Immunization Program and Medical Coverage of Events 2-7 (1981). The government's experience with the swine flu program highlights the policy and cost/benefit tradeoffs involved in large-scale public responses to perceived health problems.

"Thus any decision whether to issue warnings to thousands of test participants of possibly life-threatening dangers and to provide them with appropriate examinations and counseling calls for the exercise of judgment and discretion at high levels of government. The difficulty of such decisions is illustrated simply by the problem of how to phrase such a warning where the degree of exposure of any particular participant and the consequent risk is not known. [FN16] A decision must also take into account sensitive questions concerning its impact on on-going and future tests and on the military and civilian participants. [FN17]

FN16. Not the least of the problems the government would face is that once having undertaken to issue a "warning", it may come under an obligation to exercise due care toward members of the public relying on it. See Indian Towing Co. v. United States, 350 U.S. 61, 69, 76 S.Ct. 122, 126, 100 L.Ed. 48 (1955) (not decided under the discretionary function exception).

FN17. Studying the psychological reactions of troops to nuclear weapons during field tests was a specific goal of many of the tests. See, e.g., Characteristics of Troops with Varying Levels of Information about Atomic Effects, Government Exhibit D-67; Memorandum for the AEC Chairman, July 16, 1951, Government Exhibit K-14. To carry out such studies and achieve test objectives, the government needed complete control over information supplied to the troops. Troops were to be indoctrinated on how to conduct themselves on the nuclear battlefield. As one officer explained, the goal was to teach soldiers to respect radioactivity, not to fear it. Capt. Frank Winant, Command Problems of Atomic Defensive Warfare, Sept. 1947, Government Exhibit J-13.

998 "In no sense can such a decision be equated with decisions to warn of submerged obstructions to navigation or flash floods. [FN18] Courts cannot be considered qualified to evaluate such a decision and any attempt to do so is likely to interfere with important governmental activities. Formulating and issuing warnings requires the government 'to establish priorities for the accomplishment of its policy objectives by balancing the objectives sought to be obtained against such practical considerations as staffing and funding.' Varig, [467 U.S. at 820], 104 S.Ct. at 2768. The conclusion is inescapable that every aspect of a warning program is a matter that falls within the discretionary function exception as defined in Dalehite and Varig:

FN18. See, Begay v. United States, 768 F.2d 1059 (9th Cir.1985); First Nat'l Bank in Albuquerque v. United States, 552 F.2d 370, 374-77 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 835, 98 S.Ct. 122, 54 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977) (decision by Department of Agriculture whether label on fungicide complied with statutory requirement that it contain a warning "necessary and if complied with adequate to prevent injury" fell within discretionary function exception).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Where there is policy judgment and decision there is discretion.

346 U.S. at 36, 73 S.Ct. at 968. The decisions of [this court], discussed in the immediately preceding section, compel the same result.

"[Appellants] argue that the discretionary function exception cannot apply in the absence of a 'conscious decision.' [FN19] The statute is not so limited; it exempts '[a]ny claim based upon ... the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function ...' 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a). The language is directed at the nature of the conduct, and does not require an analysis of the decision-making process. Cf. General Public Utilities Corp. v. United States, 745 F.2d 239, 245 (3d Cir.1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1228, 105 S.Ct. 1227, 84 L.Ed.2d 365 (1985) (the exemption is based on the nature of the conduct, 'not whether there is an option to choose'). When enacting § 2680, 'Congress exercised care to protect the Government from claims, however negligently caused, that affected the governmental functions.' Dalehite, 346 U.S. at 32, 73 S.Ct. at 966 (emphasis added).

FN19. See Allen v. United States, 588 F.Supp. 247, 337-40 (D.Utah 1984).

[The district court's decision in Allen was overturned by the Tenth Circuit in Allen v. United States, 816 F.2d 1417 (10th Cir.1987). In that opinion, the Tenth Circuit specifically rejected the District oof Utah District Court's "deliberate choice" or "conscious decision" analysis which was heavily relied upon by the appellants in this case. The Tenth Circuit held:

It is also irrelevant whether the alleged failure to warn was a matter of "deliberate choice," or a mere oversight. See Allen, 588 F.Supp. at 337-38. We agree with the treatment of this distinction in Myslakowski v. United States, 806 F.2d 94 (6th Cir.1986), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 107 S.Ct. 1608, 94 L.Ed.2d 793 (1987):

"The critical error in the trial court's analysis is in its conclusion that because the evidence does not show that the departmental policymakers evaluated the pros and cons of requiring that a warning be given concerning the rollover propensity of the jeep and then made a discretionary decision not to give such warnings, it therefore follows that no discretionary decision, of the kind contemplated by § 2680(a), was made....

Stated otherwise, even the negligent failure of a discretionary government policymaker to consider all relevant aspects of a subject matter under consideration does not vitiate the discretionary character of the decision that is made.

Indeed, it is, in part, to provide immunity against liability for the consequences of negligent failure to consider the relevant, even critical, matters in discretionary decisionmaking that the statutory exception exists. If it were otherwise, a judgment-based policy determination made at the highest levels, to which all would concede that the statutory exception applies (the decision to sell surplus jeeps), would result in no immunity if the decision could be shown to have been made without consideration of important, relevant factors, or was a decision negligently reached. If that reasoning were sound, the discretionary function exception would be inapplicable in every case in which a negligent 'failure to consider' a relevant risk could be proved."

Id. at 97-98. Accord In re Consolidated United States Atmospheric Testing Litigation, 616 F.Supp. 759, 776-77 (N.D.Cal.), appeal docketed, No. 85-2842 (9th Cir.1985).

Allen, 816 F.2d at 1422 n. 5.]

"If the decision to issue or not to issue a 'warning' is within the discretionary function exception, then logically the failure to consider whether to issue one necessarily 999 falls within the exception as well. Any other interpretation of the statute would create insurmountable problems in its administration: What would constitute a 'decision'? Would a decision to defer decision be a 'decision'? Would the government be subject to liability for failing to act where operational employees conducting the relevant research consider the evidence as yet insufficient for making a decision? As the Supreme Court said in Varig, one must look to 'the nature of the conduct' to determine whether the exception applies. In this case, the relevant conduct is the issuance of 'warnings,' not the decision-making process or the failure to make a conscious, explicit decision.

"Accordingly, plaintiffs' claims based on the failure to issue warnings must also be dismissed." [FN20]

FN20. Because we dismiss all appellants' claims under the discretionary function exception, we do not reach the Feres doctrine, foreign country exception or the combatant activities exception.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265197

C. Broudy Appeal

Appellant Alice Broudy, decedent's wife, appeals from the United States District for the Central District of California's granting of the government's motion for summary judgment. In granting that motion, the Honorable Judge Laughlin E. Waters adopted the reasoning of the decision in In re Consolidated United States Atmospheric Testing Litigation, 616 F.Supp. 759 (D.C.Cal.1985) ("Konizeski appeal") and held, inter alia, that the discretionary function exception barred Broudy's post-discharge failure to warn and her medical malpractice claims. We affirm.

Major Broudy served as an officer in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1944 to 1960. In 1957, Major Broudy was ordered to participate in military exercises near two atmospheric tests conducted in Nevada.

Major Broudy was honorably discharged in 1960. He received medical care for various health problems at the Marine Corps medical facility at El Toro. He was never informed of nor warned about the dangers associated with his exposure to radiation. In 1976, he was diagnosed as having lymphosarcoma, a form of cancer that has been related to radiation exposure. He died from that disease in 1977.

Broudy, by stipulation, joined in all arguments and precedent advanced by the appellants in the Konizeski appeal on the issue of the government's post- discharge failure to warn and the applicability of the discretionary function. For the same reasons and policy considerations stated above in the Konizeski appeal, we find that the government's post-discharge failure to warn Major Broudy of any harm arising from his exposure to radiation is barred by the discretionary function exception to the FTCA.

[12] Broudy has attempted to distinguish her husband's case from the Konizeski appellants by asserting a medical malpractice claim. Specifically, she contends the medical personnel at the El Toro Medical Facility committed medical malpractice when they failed to warn Major Broudy of the dangers of radiation exposure when he went to the facility for post-discharge treatment. The district court held that this medical malpractice claim was barred for failure to state a sufficient claim to the appropriate federal agency. We agree.

28 U.S.C. § 2675(a) provides that as a prerequisite to maintaining a suit under the FTCA, a plaintiff must first present the claim to the appropriate federal agency. By enacting the notice requirement, Congress sought to ensure that plaintiffs "would promptly inform the relevant agency of the accident so that it may investigate the claim and respond either by settlement or by defense." Broudy v. United States, 722 F.2d 566, 568 (9th Cir.1983) (quoting Adams v. United States, 615 F.2d 284, 289 (5th Cir.1980)). The purpose of this notice requirement is to give the relevant agency an opportunity to commence an investigation into the claim. See Broudy, 722 F.2d at 568. Broudy's administrative claim was filed with the Department of Energy ("DOE"). The Department of Defense ("DOD") controls the medical facility at El Toro. The DOD received no notice of Broudy's claim. As a consequence, the 1000 DOD was unable to initiate an investigation into her claims. We agree with the district court that Broudy's medical malpractice claim is barred because she failed to file the claim with the DOD which was the appropriate federal agency.

The judgments are AFFIRMED.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

21

10

United States Court of Appeals,
First Circuit.

Mary E. HAMMOND, Individually and Mary E. Hammond as She Is the Executrix of the Estate of Charles E. Hammond, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Defendant, Appellee.

No. 85-1339.

Argued Oct. 11, 1985.
Decided March 12, 1986.

Widow brought suit against private contractor for radiation death of her husband, a civilian employee of Department of Defense and observer at several atomic weapons tests. Private contractor moved to dismiss for failure to file an administrative claim under the Federal Tort Claims Act, which was granted by the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, A. David Mazzone, J. On appeal, the Court of Appeals, Bownes, Circuit Judge, held that federal statute substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making the Federal Tort Claims Act the sole remedy for those injuries was rationally related to legitimate Congressional purpose, and thus did not violate due process.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes

[1] Constitutional Law ⚖105
92k105 Most Cited Cases

By enacting statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212, substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs and making the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346, 2671-2680, the sole remedies for those injuries, thereby retroactively abolishing widow's cause of action in tort for death of her husband from radiation, Congress abridged no vested rights of widow, as rights in tort do not vest until there is a final, unreviewable judgment. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212.

[2] Constitutional Law ⚖305(1)
92k305(1) Most Cited Cases

Congress must comply with due process when abolishing or substantially modifying a common-law cause of action. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

[3] Constitutional Law ⚖305(1)
92k305(1) Most Cited Cases

Rational basis, and not strict scrutiny standard of due process review applied to constitutional challenge to retroactive application of federal statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212, substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346, 2671-2680, the sole remedy for those injuries, as Congress had thereby acted within its powers under the war powers and commerce clauses of the Constitution, and there was no fundamental right or suspect classification involved. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212; U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

[4] Constitutional Law ⚖305(1)
92k305(1) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 94k305(1) Continuance)

Federal statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212, substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346, 2671- 2680 , the sole remedy for those injuries, was not wholly arbitrary and irrational in purpose, and thus did not violate due process, as it was reasonably related to a legitimate Congressional purpose. Department of

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212.

[5] Federal Courts ⚿1139
170Bk1139 Most Cited Cases

Where widow claimed several million dollars in compensation resulting from her husband's death by radiation, Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction to consider widow's "taking" claim; rather, proper forum for such claim was the court of claims. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(a)(2), 1491.

[6] Jury ⚿12(1.2)
230k12(1.2) Most Cited Cases

There is no right to a jury trial against the sovereign under the Seventh Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[7] United States ⚿125(7)
393k125(7) Most Cited Cases

When United States abolishes cause of action and then sets up a separate administrative remedy against itself, Seventh Amendment does not require that it must also provide jury trial. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 7.

[8] Constitutional Law ⚿186
92k186 Most Cited Cases

Prohibition against ex post facto laws only applies to criminal or penal statutes. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 1, § 9, cl. 3.

[9] Constitutional Law ⚿82.5
92k82.5 Most Cited Cases

[9] United States ⚿78(2)
393k78(2) Most Cited Cases

Federal statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212, substituting United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the Government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and making the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346, 2671- 2680 , the sole remedy for those injuries was not punitive so as constitute a bill of attainder. Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985, § 1631, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2212.

9 Marc S. Alpert, P.C., Boston, Mass., for plaintiff, appellant.

Leon B. Taranto, Atty., Torts Branch, Civ. Div., U.S. Dept. of Justice, with whom Jeffrey Axelrad, Director, Torts Branch, Paul F. Figley, Asst. Director, Torts Branch, Richard K. Willard, Acting Asst. Atty. Gen., Washington, D.C., and William F. Weld, U.S. Atty., Boston, Mass., were on brief for defendant, appellee.

Before BOWNES and TORRUELLA, Circuit Judges, and HILL, [FN*] Senior District Judge.

FN* Of the Central District of California, sitting by designation.

BOWNES, Circuit Judge.

This is a constitutional challenge to the retroactive application of a federal statute, 42 U.S.C. § 2212, that substitutes the United States as defendant in all suits against private contractors to the government for radiation injuries arising from any of the United States atomic weapons testing programs, and makes the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(b), 2671-80, the sole remedy for those injuries.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Mary Hammond, individually and as executrix of the estate of her deceased husband Charles Hammond, formerly a civilian employee of the Department of Defense and observer at several atomic weapons tests, originally filed suit in 1978 in Massachusetts Superior Court for Middlesex County against defendants to be named later. Plaintiff filed an amended complaint on June 2, 1984, naming E G & G Company as defendant. The amended complaint alleged wrongful death, pain and suffering of the decedent, and loss of consortium, all due to cancer caused by the 10 negligent conduct of E G & G in failing to design the tests adequately to protect the deceased from radiation exposure. The complaint did not set out specific facts but generally alleged failure to warn, failure to provide proper protective clothing or equipment, general negligence, willful, wanton or reckless conduct, breach of warranty and fraud or deceit. There were three counts, the first and third in negligence, and the second under the Massachusetts wrongful death statute, Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 229. E G & G removed the case to federal court.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265201

During the pendency of the action § 2212 was enacted. It provides, inter alia:

§ 2212. Contractor liability for injury or loss of property arising out of atomic weapons testing programs

(a) Federal remedies applicable; exclusiveness of remedies; Federal employee status; procedure, limitations, and exceptions applicable

(1) The remedy against the United States provided by sections 1346(b) and 2672 of Title 28, or by the Act of March 9, 1920 (46 U.S.C. 741-752 and 781-790), as appropriate, for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death shall apply to any civil action for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States.

(2) The remedies referred to in paragraph (1) shall be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding for the purpose of determining civil liability arising from any act or omission of the contractor without regard to when the act or omission occurred. The employees of a contractor referred to in paragraph (1) shall be considered to be employees of the Federal Government, as provided in section 2671 of Title 28, for the purposes of any such civil action or proceeding; and the civil action or proceeding shall proceed in the same manner as any action against the United States filed pursuant to section 1346(b) of such Title and shall be subject to the limitations and exceptions applicable to those actions.

Pursuant to § 2212(b) [FN1] E G & G was first certified by the Attorney General as an atomic weapons testing contractor on January 10, 1985, and then on January 23 the motion of the United States to substitute itself as defendant was granted. Defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to file an administrative claim under the FTCA was granted without prejudice on March 11. The district court considered plaintiff's challenge to the constitutionality of § 2212 and rejected it. It denied plaintiff's motion to vacate its order of dismissal. Plaintiff then took this appeal.

FN1. Section 2212(b) provides:

(b) Delivery of process to Attorney General; removal of cases from State courts; certification of contractor status

A contractor against whom a civil action or proceeding described in subsection (a) of this section is brought shall promptly deliver all processes served upon that contractor to the Attorney General of the United States. Upon certification by the Attorney General that the suit against the contractor is within the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, a civil action or proceeding commenced in a State court shall be removed without bond at any time before trial by the Attorney General to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending and the proceedings shall be deemed a tort action brought against the United States under the provisions of section 1346(b), 2401(b), or 2402, or sections 2671 through 2680 of Title 28. For purposes of removal, the certification by the Attorney General under this subsection establishes contractor status conclusively.

Plaintiff contends that § 2212 is unconstitutional on several alternative grounds: under the fifth amendment because the act destroyed vested rights in her pending state-law cause of action without due process of law, because it is an uncompensated "taking" of property, because it is the application of "unexpected" law without procedural due process of law, or because it violates equal protection; under the seventh amendment because the act denies plaintiff her right to a jury trial; under the ninth amendment because the act violates unenumerated rights reserved to the people; 11 under the tenth amendment because the act is beyond the power of Congress and infringes on powers reserved to the states; under the general constitutional right of access to the courts; under the article 1 prohibitions against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder and laws impairing contracts. We find that § 2212 does not violate the Constitution, and affirm.

II. FIFTH AMENDMENT DUE PROCESS CHALLENGE

Plaintiff contends that § 2212 deprives her of a vested cause of action against E G & G without due process of law. She asserts that the filing of a suit

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

REV_00265202

on an accrued common-law or state statutory cause of action gives her a vested property right in that action, and that Congress cannot retroactively abolish that cause of action and legislate the dismissal of plaintiff's suit without violating due process. Plaintiff relies principally on Coombes v. Getz, 285 U.S. 434, 52 S.Ct. 435, 76 L.Ed. 866 (1932), and Ettor v. Tacoma, 228 U.S. 148, 33 S.Ct. 428, 57 L.Ed. 773 (1913). Plaintiff also contends that since Congress has denied plaintiff her right of access to the courts § 2212 must be subject to strict scrutiny review or an intermediate level of review to determine if Congress has justified its action. Finally, plaintiff claims that even under the least exacting standard of rational basis review the act cannot pass constitutional muster.

A. Abolition of Vested Rights

The Supreme Court has found in certain cases that vested rights created by statute cannot be abridged by a subsequent statute that effectively takes away accrued causes of action to enforce those rights. The principal cases striking down retroactive abridgment involved statutes that created rights "vesting" in: a corporate charter, Coombes v. Getz, 285 U.S. at 439-48, 52 S.Ct. at 435-38; real property, Ettor v. Tacoma, 228 U.S. at 155-58, 33 S.Ct. at 430-31; and a quasi-contract, Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U.S. (2 Wall.) 450, 456-58, 17 L.Ed. 805 (1864). Cf. Richmond Screw Anchor Co. v. United States, 275 U.S. 331, 48 S.Ct. 194, 72 L.Ed. 303 (1928) (rights in a patent); Forbes Pioneer Boat Line v. Board of Comm'rs, 258 U.S. 338, 339- 40, 42 S.Ct. 325, 325-26, 66 L.Ed. 647 (1922) (rights to a fixed sum of money); Ochoa v. Hernandez, 230 U.S. 139, 161-64, 33 S.Ct. 1033, 1041-42, 57 L.Ed. 1427 (1913) (rights in real property). In these cases, because the rights had "vested" in real property, a contract, or in a fixed sum, they were said to stand independent of the statute that created them and could not be abridged by the subsequent statute. Coombes, 285 U.S. at 442, 52 S.Ct. at 436; Ettor, 228 U.S. at 156, 33 S.Ct. at 430; Joliffe, 69 U.S. at 458. In none of these cases was any right to a tort cause of action, or a right deriving from a tort, held to be "vested." The Supreme Court in Ettor, 228 U.S. at 157-58, 33 S.Ct. at 431, heavily relied on by the plaintiffs, expressly distinguished the action for an injury to property involved in that case from one in tort. Cf. Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 3 S.Ct. 211, 27 L.Ed. 936 (1883) (a state that limits a city's tax collecting power to such an extent that the city cannot pay a tort judgment against it does not violate the judgment holder's fourteenth amendment rights).

The present case involves common-law and state statutory tort rights that are nothing like the vested rights of the Coombes, Ettor, and Joliffe cases relied on by the plaintiff. Moreover, these are old cases and their rationales are not easy to reconcile or apply. In fact, their vitality may now be in doubt because more recent cases have upheld retroactive application of statutes that abridge economic and real property rights created under a prior statute without always carefully distinguishing the older cases. See, e.g., Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 144, 146-51, 59 S.Ct. 121, 125-27, 83 L.Ed. 87 (1938); Graham & Foster v. Goodcell, 282 U.S. 409, 426-32, 51 S.Ct. 186, 192-95, 75 L.Ed. 415 (1931); United States v. Heinszen & Co., 206 U.S. 370, 386-91, 27 S.Ct. 742, 746-58, 51 L.Ed. 1098 (1907); Moss v. Hawaiian Dredging Co., 187 F.2d 442, 444-47 (9th Cir.1951); 12 Battaglia v. General Motors Corp., 169 F.2d 254, 257-62 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 335 U.S. 887, 69 S.Ct. 236, 93 L.Ed. 425 (1948); Woods v. Schmid, 164 F.2d 981, 982-83 (5th Cir.1947); United States v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 435 F.Supp. 1009, 1029-31 (D.Alaska 1977), aff'd, 612 F.2d 1132 (9th Cir.1980); Asselta v. 149 Madison Avenue Corp., 79 F.Supp. 413, 415-16 (S.D.N.Y.1948); Hospital Data Center of S.C., Inc. v. United States, 634 F.2d 541, 544-45, 225 Ct.Cl. 158 (1980); but cf. United States Trust Co. of New York v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 17-28, 97 S.Ct. 1505, 1515-20, 52 L.Ed.2d 92 (1977) (applying an intermediate standard of review to strike down under the contracts clause a repeal of a statutory covenant that provided security for bondholders).

[1] The question whether the rights asserted in plaintiff's state-law causes of action are "vested" cannot be answered by looking to see whether suit had already been filed and how far it had proceeded when Congress enacted § 2212. "No person has a vested interest in any rule of law entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit." New York Central R.R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 198, 37 S.Ct. 247, 250, 61 L.Ed. 667 (1917); Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. 59, 88 n. 32, 98 S.Ct. 2620, 2638 n.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

32, 57 L.Ed.2d 595 (1978); Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U.S. 1, 50, 32 S.Ct. 169, 175, 56 L.Ed. 327 (1912); Ducharme v. Merrill-National Laboratories, 574 F.2d 1307, 1309 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1002, 99 S.Ct. 612, 58 L.Ed.2d 677 (1978). This is true after suit has been filed and continues to be true until a final, unreviewable judgment is obtained. Chief Justice Marshall first announced the principle in The Schooner Peggy, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 103, 110, 2 L.Ed. 49 (1801). The Supreme Court held in that case that a court must apply the law in force at the time of its decision, even if it is hearing the case on appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to a prior law. For a more recent and stringent application of this rule, see 149 Madison Avenue Corp. v. Asselta, 331 U.S. 795, 67 S.Ct. 1726, 91 L.Ed. 1822 (1947), modifying 331 U.S. 199, 67 S.Ct. 1178, 91 L.Ed. 1432 (1947). [FN2]

> FN2. In 149 Madison Avenue Corp. v. Asselta, 331 U.S. 795, 67 S.Ct. 1726, 91 L.Ed. 1822 (1947), modifying 331 U.S. 199, 67 S.Ct. 1178, 91 L.Ed. 1432 (1947), the Supreme Court had affirmed a judgment for overtime pay due plaintiffs under the Fair Labor Standards Act. After their affirmance, but before the time for a motion for rehearing had run, Congress passed the Portal-to-Portal Act to give employers good-faith defenses against back overtime pay actions under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The defendants, on a timely motion for rehearing, asked the Court to reconsider its affirmance in light of the changed law. The Supreme Court remanded to the district court for reconsideration under the new law and judgment was vacated below. The defendants prevailed after a new trial. Asselta v. 149 Madison Avenue Corp., 79 F.Supp. 413, 415-16 (S.D.N.Y.1948) (upholding constitutionality of the application of new law to this case), 90 F.Supp. 422 (S.D.N.Y.1950) (judgment for defendants).

Because rights in tort do not vest until there is a final, unreviewable judgment, Congress abridged no vested rights of the plaintiff by enacting § 2212 and retroactively abolishing her cause of action in tort.

B. Applicable Standard of Review

[2] Plaintiff is correct that Congress must comply with due process when abolishing or substantially modifying a common law cause of action. In that sense the right to sue is a "species of property." Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 428, 102 S.Ct. 1148, 1154, 71 L.Ed.2d 265 (1982); see Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 82- 94, 98 S.Ct. at 2635-41. But, an act of Congress comes to us clothed with a presumption of constitutionality, and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that it violates due process. Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15, 96 S.Ct. 2882, 2892, 49 L.Ed.2d 752 (1976); McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 425-26, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1104-05, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961).

[3] This is not the first time Congress has substituted the government as defendant 13 in a certain category of tort suits and relegated plaintiffs to an FTCA remedy. Statutory schemes similar to § 2212 have been enacted in the Federal Drivers Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2679(b)-(e) (substitution in any tort claim against a federal employee who was operating a motor vehicle within the scope of his employment at the time of an incident giving rise to personal injuries), and in the Swine Flu Act, 42 U.S.C. § 247b(k)- (1) (1976) (repealed 1978) (substitution in any tort claim against a private manufacturer of the swine flu vaccine for injuries arising from the vaccine). These two acts have withstood constitutional challenges, and the rational basis test has been the standard of due process analysis applied by the courts. See, e.g., DiPippa v. United States, 687 F.2d 14, 19 (3d Cir.1982) (Swine Flu Act); Ducharme v. Merrill-National Laboratories, 574 F.2d at 1310-11 (Swine Flu Act); Carr v. United States, 422 F.2d 1007, 1010-12 (4th Cir.1970) (Federal Drivers Act).

Plaintiff claims § 2212 must be specially scrutinized because she has been denied her fundamental right of access to the courts. But this case does not involve someone burdening or blocking plaintiff's right of access to the courts to seek enforcement of the law as in the cases plaintiff cites. See, e.g., California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 92 S.Ct. 609, 30 L.Ed.2d 642 (1972); Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113 (1971); McKay v. Hammock, 730 F.2d 1367 (10th Cir.1984); Ryland v. Shapiro, 708 F.2d 967 (5th Cir.1983); Harris v. Pate, 440 F.2d 315 (7th Cir.1971). This is a matter of Congress altering her prior rights and remedies. There is no fundamental right to particular state- law tort claims.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Because Congress has acted within its powers under the war powers and commerce clauses of the Constitution and there is no fundamental right or suspect classification involved here, we find that the rational basis standard of due process review applies.

C. Rational Basis Review

[4] In applying the rational basis test to this case we follow the guidance of the Supreme Court in Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 728 - 34, 104 S.Ct. 2709, 2717-20, 81 L.Ed.2d 601 (1984); Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 82- 94, 98 S.Ct. at 2635-41; and Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. at 15-20, 96 S.Ct. at 2892-94. We find that plaintiff has not met her burden of showing that § 2212 is wholly arbitrary and irrational in purpose and effect, i.e., not reasonably related to a legitimate congressional purpose. See United States R.R. Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. 166, 174-77, 101 S.Ct. 453, 459-60, 66 L.Ed.2d 368 (1980); Vance v. Bradley, 440 U.S. 93, 97-98, 99 S.Ct. 939, 942-43, 59 L.Ed.2d (1979).

The reasons asserted by the United States for Congress' enactment of § 2212 are neither arbitrary nor irrational, and can be stated simply. The United States has operated a nuclear weapons testing program for over 40 years. It initiates, designs and authorizes all nuclear tests under the program but has found it necessary to obtain the assistance of various private entities including universities and private companies for many aspects of the testing. From the late 1940's to the early 1960's a series of above-ground tests of atomic weapons were conducted with military personnel, civilian government employees and private employees of government contractors taking part. Plaintiff's deceased husband was an observer at several of the tests. There is no dispute that these tests were designed and supervised by government officials and were individually authorized by the President. A significant number of those present at the above-ground tests have instituted suits against the government contractors involved in them for injuries caused by radiation exposure. The contractors are generally not threatened with financial liability by these suits since most of their contracts with the government included a clause making the United States indemnitor for all tort liability, 14 including costs of litigation, arising from their participation in the testing programs. S.Rep. No. 500, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 374-76 (1984). Congress has nevertheless perceived these lawsuits to constitute a threat to the continued participation of the private contractors in the nuclear weapons program because the contractors fear the bad publicity generated by the suits. The contractors testified before Congress that the lawsuits have led the public to blame them for the formulation, implementation and execution of the atomic weapons testing policy of the United States. H.R.Rep. No. 124, Part 4, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 2-3 (1983). They also testified that the lawsuits result in a diversion of human and financial resources away from research and testing activities and into litigation and, therefore, seriously disrupt their participation in the program. See Litigation Relating to Atomic Testing, 1983: Hearings on H.R. 2797 before the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 46-49 (1983). Plaintiff asserts that the mere public embarrassment of the private contractors is not a rational or legitimate reason for relieving them of liability. We disagree. Even if we question the extent and effect of this publicembarrassment it is not for us to reevaluate it. It is a plausible reason for Congress' action. United States R.R. Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. at 179, 101 S.Ct. at 461.

Nor has Congress chosen a wholly arbitrary or irrational means to its legitimate end. Plaintiff claims that Congress created only an illusory substitute remedy in § 2212, that she probably will not be compensated for her husband's death because under the terms of § 2212(a)(2) the "limitations and exceptions" applicable to the remedies provided by § 2212 are preserved. For purposes of this opinion we will assume, without deciding, that these "limitations and exceptions" include the "discretionary function" exception, 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a), the Feres doctrine, Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153, 95 L.Ed. 152 (1950), and the exclusivity provisions of the Federal Employees Compensation Act, 5 U.S.C. § 8816(c), and that they will bar many putative plaintiffs from any relief under the FTCA for radiation injuries. See DiPippa v. United States, 687 F.2d at 16-19; Noga v. United States, 411 F.2d 943, 945 (9th Cir.) , cert. denied, 396 U.S. 841, 90 S.Ct. 104, 24 L.Ed.2d 92 (1969); Thol v. United States, 218 F.2d

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

12, 13 (9th Cir.1954); In re Consolidated United States Atmospheric Testing Litigation, 616 F.Supp. 759, 771-80 (N.D.Cal.1985); but see Wallace v. United States, 669 F.2d 947, 950-54 (4th Cir.1982). Nevertheless, although Congress could have relieved the independent contractors of their burden of defending suits for radiation injuries and still provided those injured by radiation a more generous substitute compensation scheme, we cannot say that Congress' choice of means was without any rational basis. The atomic weapons testing program has been an important, some say vital, government function from its inception. Independent contractors were used only to aid the government to carry out its program. When the program began Congress could have mandated that all tort claims arising from it be litigated through the FTCA. Under the statute as originally enacted, plaintiffs had the right to sue contractors without restriction, but it was the government who paid the judgment under its indemnitor agreement with the contractor. Plaintiffs had the best of both possible worlds, a right to sue free of any FTCA limitations with the government guaranteeing payment of the judgment. It was neither arbitrary nor irrational for Congress to change the law so as to place putative plaintiffs in the same position as any other party suing the United States in tort. See Hearings, supra, at 46-48; S.Rep. No. 500, supra, at 377. Moreover, there may be government compensation available to many of those injured by radiation, including the plaintiff here, under veterans benefits legislation, 38 U.S.C. §§ 301-363, §§ 401-423, or the FECA.

15 III. REMAINING CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

Plaintiff's other constitutional challenges can be dealt with summarily.

[5] (1) Fifth Amendment Taking. We have already found that plaintiff had no vested property right in her tort cause of action, so it is very unlikely there could be a "taking" here. But, in any event, we have no jurisdiction to consider a taking claim where the amount in controversy exceeds $10,000. Plaintiff claims several million dollars in compensation. The proper forum for such a claim is the Court of Claims. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(a)(2), 1491. See, Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 71 n. 15, 101-02 & n. 4, 98 S.Ct. at 2629 n. 15, 2644-45 & n. 4 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); In re Aircrash in Bali, Indonesia, on April 22, 1974, 684 F.2d 1301, 1312 (9th Cir.1982) .

(2) Unexpected Law. There is nothing "unexpected" about a validly enacted congressional statute even if the plaintiff was surprised by its enactment. Plaintiff alleges nothing unfair about the legislative procedure by which § 2212 was enacted.

(3) Equal Protection. Plaintiff claims that radiation victims of government atomic tests are a suspect class and that, therefore, strict scrutiny must be our standard of review under an equal protection analysis. Alternatively, she claims we must apply at least an intermediate test to this classification. We disagree. These radiation victims were injured because of the work they did. They do not fall within any of the suspect classifications based on race, gender, alienage or illegitimacy recognized by the Supreme Court as requiring a standard of review more exacting than the rational basis test. See J. Nowak, R. Rotunda & J. Young, Constitutional Law 524-25 (1978). We find no violation of equal protection for the same reasons we found no violation of due process.

[6][7] (4) Seventh Amendment. There is no right to a jury trial against the sovereign under the seventh amendment. Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 572, 82 S.Ct. 1459, 1484, 8 L.Ed.2d 671 (1962). If the United States can abolish the right to a cause of action altogether it can also abolish the right to a jury trial that is part of it. When the United States abolishes a cause of action and then sets up a separate administrative remedy against itself, as it has here, the seventh amendment does not require that it must also provide a jury trial. This has been the holding of those courts that considered seventh amendment challenges to the Federal Drivers Act and Swine Flu Act. See Jones v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc., 583 F.2d 1070, 1070-71 (8th Cir.1978); Ducharme v. Merrill-National Laboratories, 574 F.2d at 1311; Sparks v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc., 433 F.Supp. 411, 418 (W.Okl.1977); Nistendirk v. McGee, 225 F.Supp. 881, 882 (W.D.Mo.1963).

(5) Ninth Amendment. Plaintiff asserts that certain rights are preserved in the ninth amendment for the people. She has not, however, specified which of those rights has been violated.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(6) Tenth Amendment. Plaintiff relies on National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L.Ed.2d 245 (1976), to support her argument that Congress invaded rights reserved to the states when it abolished state-law causes of action by the enactment of § 2212. Usery was overruled in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. ----, ----, 105 S.Ct. 1005, 1021, 83 L.Ed.2d 1016 (1985). Moreover, Usery was a case involving Congress' commerce clause powers. We do not think that the tenth amendment limits Congress' war powers under the facts of this case. Cf. Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. at 84 n. 27, 98 S.Ct. at 2636 n. 27.

(7) Right of Access. As stated in our consideration of the standard of review applicable in plaintiff's due process challenge, plaintiff's right of access to the courts has not been abridged. Furthermore, since plaintiff has not alleged that she has been denied access to the administrative remedies contemplated under § 2212 she cannot 16 claim her right to petition for redress of grievances has been eliminated.

[8][9] (8) Ex Post Facto Laws, Bills of Attainder, the Contracts Clause. The prohibition against ex post facto laws only applies to criminal or penal statutes. Galvan v. Press, 347 U.S. 522, 531 & n. 4, 74 S.Ct. 737, 742 & n. 4, 98 L.Ed. 911 (1954). Section 2212 is not punitive so it does not constitute a bill of attainder. See Selective Service System v. Minnesota Public Interest Research Group, 468 U.S. 841, ----, 104 S.Ct. 3348, 3351-56, 82 L.Ed.2d 632 (1984). We decline plaintiff's invitation to apply the contracts clause to the federal government.

Affirmed.

END OF DOCUMENT

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

22

United States Court of Appeals,
Third Circuit.

Jacqueline and Salvadore A. DiPIPPA, Appellants,
v.
UNITED STATES of America, Appellee.

No. 82-3000.

Argued July 8, 1982.
Decided Aug. 24, 1982.

Federal employee and her husband appealed from order of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, Richard P. Conaboy, J., dismissing their action against United States for injuries federal employee sustained from swine flu vaccination. The Court of Appeals, Seitz, Chief Judge, held that: (1) substantial question existed as to whether Federal Employees Compensation Act provided exclusive remedy for employee who contracted Guillain-Barre Syndrome after voluntarily receiving swine flu vaccination; (2) providing that federal employees pursue action under Federal Employees Compensation Act rather than Swine Flu Act was not denial of equal protection; and (3) to avoid statute of limitations problem district court should have stayed employee's swine flu claim until Secretary of Labor resolved question of Federal Employees Compensation Act coverage.

Vacated and remanded with directions.

West Headnotes

[1] Workers' Compensation ⚿2085
413k2085 Most Cited Cases

Where Federal Employees Compensation Act applies, its remedy is exclusive and bars all other claims for compensation against government. 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

[2] Workers' Compensation ⚿2085
413k2085 Most Cited Cases

Where three Federal Employees Compensation Act program memoranda indicated Labor Department's intent to provide Federal Employees Compensation Act coverage for adverse reactions to swine flu innoculations administered by federal employees on federal premises, substantial question of Federal Employees Compensation Act coverage existed, which would preclude any other remedy for injury sustained by federal employee who contracted Guillain-Barre Syndrome after voluntarily receiving swine flu vaccination given on federal premises during normal working hours. 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

[3] Workers' Compensation ⚿1095
413k1095 Most Cited Cases

Secretary of Labor's decisions regarding coverage under Federal Employees Compensation Act are absolutely immune from judicial review, whether particular determination is grounded in logic or precedent. 5 U.S.C.A §§ 8101 et seq., 8128(b).

[4] Workers' Compensation ⚿2085
413k2085 Most Cited Cases

In Swine Flu Act, Congress sought to substitute itself as defendant in all potential swine flu claims, made itself amenable to suit under Federal Tort Claims Act, and made Swine Flu Act exclusive remedy for all swine flu claims except where alternate and exclusive method of compensation existed under prior law; therefore, if employee who contracted Guillain-Barre Syndrome after voluntarily receiving swine flu vaccination on federal premises during normal working hours was covered under Federal Employees Compensation Act, Federal Employees Compensation Act would bar any swine flu claim against Government. Public Health Service Act, § 2(k)(1)(B),(k)(3),(k)(5)(C), 42 U.S.C.(1976 Ed.) § 247b(k)(1)(B),(k)(3),(k)(5)(C); 5 U.S.C.A. §§ 8116(c), 8131, 8131(a).

[5] Constitutional Law ⚿251.3
92k251.3 Most Cited Cases

Statutory classification in area of social and economic welfare will not violate due process if it is reasonable and bears some rational relationship to legitimate congressional goal. U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 5.

[6] Constitutional Law ⚿299.2
92k299.2 Most Cited Cases

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Supreme Court of the United States.

COMBES
v.
GETZ.

No. 528.

Argued March 21, 1932.
Decided April 11, 1932.

Mr. Justice CARDOZO, Mr. Justice BRANDEIS, and Mr. Justice STONE, dissenting.

On Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

Suit by Peirce Coombes against Milton E. Getz. Judgment for defendant and appeal therefrom dismissed by the State Supreme Court (1 P.(2d) 992), and plaintiff brings certiorari.

Reversed.

West Headnotes

[1] Constitutional Law ⚿168
92k168 Most Cited Cases

[1] Constitutional Law ⚿253(4)
92k253(4) Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 92k307)

[1] Corporations ⚿326
101k326 Most Cited Cases

[1] Corporations ⚿346
101k346 Most Cited Cases

Repeal of constitutional provision making corporate directors responsible for officer's defalcations held not to affect right of creditor in respect to claim theretofore arising. Const. art. 12, §§ 1, 3; and U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 10, and Amend. 14.

[2] Federal Courts ⚿505
170Bk505 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 106k366(1), 106k394(3))

Decision of state Supreme Court construing and applying its own Constitution and laws generally is binding on federal courts.

[3] Federal Courts ⚿505
170Bk505 Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 106k365(3), 106k394(9))

Decision of Supreme Court of state construing and applying Constitution and laws is not binding on federal court where contract clause of Federal Constitution is involved.

[4] Constitutional Law ⚿154(2)
92k154(2) Most Cited Cases

[4] Corporations ⚿38
101k38 Most Cited Cases

[4] Constitutional Law ⚿93(1)
92k93(1) Most Cited Cases

Obligations of contract may not be impaired by state in exercise of authority under reserved powers with respect to corporate charters. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 10, and Amend. 14.

*435 *435 Messrs. Joseph L. Lewinson and W. H. Douglass, both of Los Angeles, Cal., Nat Schmulowitz, J. C. McKinstry, Joseph Haber, Jr., and Charles L. Firebaugh, all of San Francisco, Cal., for petitioner.

437 Mr. Alfred Sutro, of San Francisco, Cal., for respondent.

439 Mr. Justice SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a suit brought in a California superior court by petitioner, on behalf of himself and other creditors, to recover from respondent, a director in Getz Bros. & Company, a California corporation, the amount of an indebtedness upon an open account for goods sold to the corporation by petitioner's assignor. The basis of the liability sought to be enforced is found in the following provision of section 3, art. 12, of the California Constitution of 1879: 'The directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to 440 the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(Formerly 92k299(2))

[6] Workers' Compensation ⚿19
413k19 Most Cited Cases

Congress could have reasonably concluded that federal employees asserting swine flu claim already had sufficient remedy under Federal Employees Compensation Act and needed no supplements; thus, denying federal worker's right to pursue claim under Swine Flu Act was not denial of equal protection. Public Health Service Act, § 2(j-l), 42 U.S.C.(1976 Ed.) § 247b(j-l); 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.; U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 5.

[7] Action ⚿69(7)
13k69(7) Most Cited Cases

Although there was substantial question of Federal Employees Compensation Act coverage for federal employee who contracted Guillain-Barre Syndrome after receiving swine flu vaccination, where language of Swine Flu Act required dismissal of action against United States only where "availability" of exclusive remedy precluded claim under Federal Tort Claims Act, to avoid statute of limitations problem, district court should have stayed federal employee's Swine Flu Act claim until Secretary of Labor resolved question of employee's coverage under Federal Employees Compensation Act. Public Health Services Act, § 2(k)(5)(C), 42 U.S.C.(1976 Ed.) § 247b(k)(5)(C); 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

15 Anthony J. Ciotola, Hazleton, Pa., Clifford J. Shoemaker, (argued), Washington, D. C., for appellants.

David C. Shipman, Asst. U. S. Atty., Harrisburg, Pa., Leonard Schaitman, John F. Cordes (argued), U. S. Dept. of Justice, Civ. Div., Washington, D. C., for appellee.

Before SEITZ, Chief Judge, SLOVITER, Circuit Judge, and McCUNE, District Judge.[FN*]

FN* Honorable Barron P. McCune, United States District Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania, sitting by designation.

OPINION OF THE COURT

SEITZ, Chief Judge.

The DiPippas appeal from the district court's order dismissing their action against the United States for injuries Jacqueline DiPippa sustained from a swine flu vaccination. This court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. s 1291 (1976).

I.

In November 1976, while a federal employee, Jacqueline DiPippa voluntarily received a swine flu vaccination. The shot was given on federal premises during normal working hours. A month later, Jacqueline DiPippa developed symptoms diagnosed as Guillain-Barre Syndrome. In 1978, she and her husband filed a notice of administrative claim under the Swine Flu Act for injuries sustained from the vaccination. The Government denied the claim on the ground that the DiPippas' exclusive remedy was one for compensation pursuant to the Federal Employees Compensation Act (FECA), 5 U.S.C. s 8101 et seq. This action followed.

The DiPippas filed their complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia under the Swine Flu Act of 1976, 42 U.S.C. s 247b(j)- (l) (amended 1978). The case was consolidated with other swine flu cases for pretrial proceedings in In re Swine Flu Immunization Products Liability Litigation, 446 F.Supp. 244 (J.P.M.D.L.1978), and then was transferred to the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Because the district court found there was a substantial question that FECA might be the DiPippas' exclusive remedy,[FN1] it dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction.

FN1. Mr. DiPippa seeks damages for loss of consortium arising from his wife's injuries. Because it found there was a substantial likelihood that Mrs. DiPippa's injuries are compensable under FECA, and because FECA coverage bars a spouse's suit for loss of consortium, Underwood v. United States, 207 F.2d 862 (10th Cir. 1953); Levine v. United States, 478 F.Supp. 1389 (D.Mass.1979), the district court also dismissed Mr. DiPippa's claim against the Government. Mr. DiPippa's claim to relief is dependent on his wife's. Thus we need conduct no independent analysis of his claim.

16 II.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

DiPippa argues that she may pursue her swine flu claim against the Government for two reasons: (1) there is no substantial question of FECA coverage and therefore she need not pursue a FECA remedy; and (2) even if there were FECA coverage, it would not bar her claim against the Government for the acts and omissions of the program participants. [FN2] DiPippa further argues that the district court's interpretation of the Swine Flu Act denies her equal protection under the law and, in light of our doctrine that statutes should be interpreted in a constitutionally valid manner, should be rejected.

> FN2. The Swine Flu Act defines program participants in s 247b(k)(2)(B): "the term 'program participants' ... means the manufacturer or distributor of the swine flu vaccine ..., the public or private agency or organization that provided an inoculation under the swine flu program ..., and the medical and other health personnel who provided or assisted in providing an inoculation under the swine flu program ...."

A.

(1) The Swine Flu Act provides that a claim for any injury sustained from the swine flu program shall bebrought directly against the United States under the procedures established by the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA), 28 U.S.C. s 2671 et seq. The Swine Flu Act makes this remedy exclusive, 42 U.S.C. s 247b(k)(3), except where a remedy under any other law provides claimant's exclusive remedy, 42 U.S.C. s 247b(k)(5)(C). Where FECA applies, its remedy is exclusive and bars all other claims for compensation against the Government. Thus, we must first determine whether FECA is DiPippa's exclusive remedy.

Only the Secretary of Labor or his designee may determine the scope of FECA coverage. 5 U.S.C. s 8128(b). In deference to such authority, this court has held that where a "substantial question" of FECA coverage exists, federal district courts will not entertain claims under the FTCA. Joyce v. United States, 474 F.2d 215, 219 (3rd Cir. 1973); Somma v. United States, 283 F.2d 149, 151 (3rd Cir. 1960).

A substantial question of FECA coverage exists unless it is "certain that (the Secretary of Labor) would find no coverage." Concordia v. United States Postal Service, 581 F.2d 439, 442-43 (5th Cir. 1978). Thus, we first consider whether DiPippa's claim presents a substantial question of FECA coverage under that standard.

(2) DiPippa voluntarily received the swine flu inoculation while she was a federal employee, on federal premises, during normal working hours. Three FECA Program Memoranda indicate the Labor Department's intent to provide FECA coverage for adverse reactions to inoculations administered by federal employers on federal premises. FECA Program Memorandum No. 42 (March 3, 1966) states that "(d) eleterious effects such as ... reaction to agency-sponsored innoculation (sic) ... will be compensable" under FECA. FECA Program Memorandum No. 186 (December 23, 1974) supplements the 1966 memorandum and states that FECA covers "any deleterious result of medical services furnished by the employing agency for non-work related illnesses or injuries." In 1976, the Labor Department published a third memorandum stating that adverse reactions to swine flu inoculations "given to Federal employees by Federal facilities are compensable under (FECA)." FECA Bulletin No. 26-76 (October 27, 1976). We believe that these bulletins raise a substantial question of FECA coverage.

(3) DiPippa correctly points out that the first two memoranda indicate only that agency-sponsored medical services provided 17 under 5 U.S.C. s 7901 (1976) qualify for FECA coverage, and that she received her swine flu shot under a nationally sponsored program pursuant to 42 U.S.C. s 247b(j)-(l). She argues that the third memorandum conflicts with recent federal court decisions and prior policies of the Secretary. See Wallace v. United States, 669 F.2d 947, 954 (4th Cir. 1982). While this may be true, it does not mean that there is not a substantial question of FECA coverage. The Secretary of Labor's decisions regarding coverage are absolutely immune from judicial review, 5 U.S.C. s 8128(b), whether or not a particular determination is grounded in logic or precedent. Cf. Gill v. United States, 641 F.2d 195 (5th Cir. 1981) (employee may not seek review of Secretary's determination of coverage on the ground of bad motive). Should the Secretary rule that FECA covers DiPippa's injury, his determination would be conclusive. We think the presence of FECA Bulletin 26-76 raises a substantial possibility that he would so rule.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

We agree with the district court that DiPippa's claim presents a substantial question of FECA coverage. We are not persuaded to the contrary by the analysis in Wallace.

B.

The second issue we address is whether FECA coverage would bar DiPippa's swine flu claim against the United States for the acts and omissions of the program participants. To resolve this issue, we must look to the language of both statutes.

(4) In the Swine Flu Act, Congress sought to implement a national vaccination program in response to the perceived threat of a national flu epidemic. In doing so, it strove both to immunize manufacturers from any liability for injuries allegedly sustained from the vaccination program and to provide just compensation for any such injury. 122 Cong.Rec. 26,813 (remarks of Cong. Rogers). To achieve these two goals, the United States substituted itself as defendant in all potential swine flu claims, s 247b(k)(1)(B), made itself amenable to suit under the FTCA, id., and made this the exclusive remedy for all swine flu claims, s 247b(k)(3), except where an alternate and exclusive method of compensating the injury existed under prior law, s 247b(k)(5)(C). Thus, we must look to FECA to determine whether or not DiPippa can maintain an action against the Government for the acts and omissions of the program participants.

Where FECA applies, it unambiguously precludes "all other liability of the United States" either "under a workmen's compensation statute or under a Federal tort liability statute." 5 U.S.C. s 8116(c). On the other hand, FECA allows claims for compensable injuries only against "a person other than the United States." 5 U.S.C. s 8131(a). DiPippa's suit is not against a third party, but directly against the United States, as the plain language of the Swine Flu Act expressly requires. See 42 U.S.C. s 247b(k)(1)(B). FECA coverage therefore seems to bar DiPippa's swine flu claim against the Government.

DiPippa argues, however, that because section 8131 allows suits against third parties, section 8116(c) does not bar her claim against the Government for the acts and omissions of the program participants. Her theory is that section 8116(c) does not apply, because, although the Government is the named defendant, the action is against third parties. DiPippa's argument not only ignores the plain language of the statute, but it misinterprets the purpose behind section 8131. Sections 8131 and 8132 make it clear that the claimant should not be compensated twice for the same injury at the Government's expense. Congress intended those sections to provide a means of reimbursement to the Government where the claimant recovers twice for the same injury. The sections allow the claimant to pursue a third party, at the claimant's expense, so long as the successful claimant reimburses the Government for any FECA benefits the claimant receives. Congress designed these sections to limit the Government's costs under FECA, not to subject it to multiple claims for the same injury, as DiPippa's statutory interpretation would do.

> 18 Plainly, by these two sections (8131 and 8132) Congress deals with the liability of persons "other than the United States " to employees entitled to compensation under the act, not for the purpose of increasing that compensation, but for the purpose of reimbursing the Government for payments made and of indemnifying it against other amounts payable in the future. The sections emphasize the disposition to treat the compensation provided for as adequate for the injuries received, and they negative any intention on the part of the Government to make further payments.

Dahn v. Davis, 258 U.S. 421, 430, 42 S.Ct. 320, 321, 66 L.Ed. 696 (1922) (emphasis in original).

Despite the clear statutory language, DiPippa argues that Congress did not intend for FECA to bar a tort claim based on the acts and omissions of the program participants. She relies on both Hunt v. United States, 636 F.2d 580 (D.C.Cir.1980), and Wallace v. United States, 669 F.2d 947 (4th Cir. 1982), to support her statutory interpretation. Hunt is distinguishable, and we find ourselves in disagreement with the statutory interpretation in Wallace.

In Hunt, plaintiffs received a swine flu vaccination while on active military duty and filed suit under the FTCA against the United States. The court held that the doctrine of Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153, 95 L.Ed. 152 (1950), which holds that remedies granted under the veterans' laws often bar relief under the FTCA, did not bar plaintiffs' swine flu claims. The fact that compensation under the relevant veterans' laws was not expressly exclusive was the determinative factor in Hunt. The court reasoned that the Swine Flu Act's subordination clause, section 247b(k)(5)(C), "does not itself bar an action under the Swine Flu Act; another remedy must preclude it." 636 F.2d at 595. In Hunt, the veterans' laws provided the other remedy, and, " '(u)nlike the usual workman's compensation statute, ... there is nothing in ... the veterans' laws which provides for exclusiveness of remedy.' " Id. at 585 (quoting Brooks v. United States, 337 U.S. 49, 53, 69 S.Ct. 918, 920, 93 L.Ed. 1200 (1949)). In this case, FECA provides the other remedy, and it is expressly exclusive.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

In Wallace, the Fourth Circuit held that FECA "does not bar (plaintiff's) claim against the United States as the substitute defendant for other program participants." 669 F.2d at 954. The court reasoned that "FECA is an exclusive remedy only for potential claims against the United States as employer for work-related injury," and that the Act "cannot preclude claims against the United States as substitute defendant for acts or omissions of private third parties." Id. at 945-55. We disagree.

We find strong support for our analysis in cases holding that FECA bars claims based on the negligence of federal drivers under the Federal Drivers Act, 28 U.S.C. s 2679 (1976). The Federal Drivers Act provided the "pattern" after which Congress fashioned the "unusual, though not unique manner" by which the Government assumed liability for the acts of program participants in the swine flu program. See 122 Cong.Rec. 26,816 (remarks of Cong. Rogers). Application of that Act therefore provides a useful analogy. Congress intended the Federal Drivers Act to relieve federal drivers of the burden of expensive personal liability insurance. See S.Rep.No. 736, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 1961, reprinted in 1961 U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 2784, 2785. To achieve that purpose, Congress, in language remarkably similar to that of the Swine Flu Act, substituted the United States as the exclusive defendant in all claims against federal employees operating motor vehicles in the performance of duty.

The compensation system set up under FECA bars an action under the Federal Drivers Act, even though federal employees would have had a common law action against the negligent driver prior to the Act. See, e.g., Van Houten v. Ralls, 411 F.2d 940, 943 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 962, 90 S.Ct. 436, 24 L.Ed.2d 426 (1969); Noga v. United States, 411 F.2d 943, 944 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 841, 90 S.Ct. 104, 24 L.Ed.2d 92 (1969). In 19 Noga, plaintiff sought to avoid this result by "characteriz(ing) the United States as a technical defendant substituted in place of the negligent federal driver," and arguing that FECA's exclusivity clause therefore did not apply. 411 F.2d at 945. This is precisely DiPippa's argument. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit rejected Noga's argument.

> We do not believe plaintiff's proposed solution is permissible under the exclusivity provision of the FECA. The statutory language (of section 8116(c)) is not ambiguous. It states that the United States is not liable under the FECA and the Federal Tort Claims Act, but only under the FECA. This provision was not tampered with in the Federal Drivers Act.

Id. We find DiPippa's argument similarly unacceptable. The statutory language is clear: the Swine Flu Act did not negate the exclusivity language of FECA. On the contrary, it provided for it in section 247b(k)(5)(C). The legislative history explaining that clause makes this eminently clear.

> This provision gives priority to the handling of claims for which a remedy from the United States (as compared to some other source) is already available, using that remedy rather than the remedy provided by (this) legislation.

122 Cong.Rec. 26,815 (remarks of Cong. Rogers).

